Tax in Hawick in 1785. He is probably the merchant William whose housekeeper Betty Nichol died in Hawick in 1787. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–94. In 1787–91 he paid tax for having a female servant and was probably the merchant recorded on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. From 1791 he acted as Hawick's first bank agent, for the Bank of Scotland. His main premises were at the Tower Knowe, where the Office Bar is now located, and his warehouses were in Silver Street, where his family had owned property for generations. He also owned buildings on the High Street and in Wilton Parish. Additionally he owned land at Dovemount, Silverbuthall and Galalaw. He was known to be generous in local affairs, e.g. in helping fund the addition to Old Wilton Church. It has also been suggested that Silver Street got its name because he stayed there. He also had a wine cellar under the road by Drumlanrig Bridge. He is probably the William of Galalaw listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (many years after his death). He remained unmarried all his life, and his will lists his nearest relatives as: his niece Margaret Aitchison and her children Robert (surgeon), John (also surgeon), Agnes and Mary Douglas; his nephews Robert (or the Royal Navy) and Andrew (saddler) Aitchison; and his second cousins Thomas Oliver (of the Navy), William Oliver (surgeon in Middleton), James Oliver (baker), William Oliver (location unknown), Robert Oliver (tailor, possibly 'Clinty') and Walter Wilson (wright). When he died, it is said that everyone was surprised to find that his estate did not appear to meet his debts, even although the sale of his property raised over £19,000 (with £5,000 coming from goods, furniture and stock, without including property); suspicion fell upon his young assistant 'Franky' Ballantyne, and there was even a poem published about how his ghost haunted Ballantyne, called 'The Twa Frien's or the Ghost of Coffe-Ha'. In his will he is described being 'of Galalaw' (suggesting he was living there, rather than at Silverbuthall in his later years). His will was witnessed by his 'servants' James Miller and Walter Scott (who are probably the men of those names who were later grocers in Hawick). The trustees named in his will were Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, James Grieve in Branhholme Park, James Grieve in Branhholme Braes and Thomas Usher. His home at Silverbuthall was sold to James Scott, retired teacher of Yarrow. His nieces Agnes and Catherine married Bailie Walter Purdom and 'Haunless Wat', respectively.

His death is recorded in Hawick, where it was stated that his father was also William – 'Wi' banker Cash, a daintie carl, Wha was owre guid for sic a warl' [RDW]. William (18th C.) Cornet in 1768, listed as being at the Kirkwynd. He may be the son of shoemaker Robert born in 1738. He may be the son of shoemaker Robert who gave a discharge in 1768 for his father's bonds with people in Selkirk (his father being deceased by then). William (18th C.) married Ann Sinton in 1761, the marriage recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. William of Dinlabyre (1738–1830) son of John, he became Sheriff of Roxburghshire. It is said that he needed to live closer to the court in Jedburgh, and hence swapped some of his Liddesdale lands for ones in Rulewater. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1773 he sold Harts-garth and Langhaugh to William Sharp. At the same time he bought the lands of Weens from William Sharp and built the new house there in 1775. He also bought Nether Bonchester from Thomas Scott in 1779. In 1777 he had a 'decreet arbitral' between Henry Elliot of Harwood and George Rutherford. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780 and Selkirkshire in 1788. He sold Over and Nether Larriston and Blackhope to Col. William Elliot in 1786; it was said that in fact his wife made the sale when he was absent and he 'expressed much surprise and no little displeasure at what had taken place'. Nevertheless he added the sale of Larriston Rig (or Haggiehaugh) to Elliot in 1790. He was apparently a good friend of the Hobkirk schoolmaster William Armstrong. In 1788 he was listed among the voters in Roxburghshire (and a supporter of the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch). In the county valuation of 1788 he was recorded as owner of Weens and Nether Bonchester, valued at £380, as well as Dinlabyre, Greena and Blackhope (although he had probably sold them by then) in Castleton Parish, valued at £1020. He subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He paid tax in Hobkirk Parish for having 3 male servants in the period 1778–92 and 2 in 1793, as well as for 1 female servant in 1785–87, 4 in 1788 and 1 in 1789–91. He was taxed for having 3–5 carriage horses in Hobkirk Parish (being recorded as 'of Dinlabyre at Weens') in 1785–92. He is probably the William listed paying tax at Wolfelee in the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. He was 'of Dinlabyre at Larriston' on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls for Castleton Parish. In 1794 he was taxed for 2 male servants at 'Laurstoun' in Castleton Parish and in 1797 was at Liddel Bank with 3 servants, 4 work horses and 4 carriage horses. He was also taxed for having a carriage in the period 1785–95, being ‘of Dinlabyre’ until the year 1791/2, when he was ‘of Weens’, and then being at ‘Lawston’ in 1794/5 and Liddel Bank 1797/8. He was at Dawston in 1797 when taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. He made a report on the state of the roads in Castleton Parish for the Duke of Buccleuch in 1793. He was also said to have been responsible for most of the road improvements in Rulewater and Liddesdale in his time, including building Bonchester Bridge and laying out the new route to Newcastle via the that bridge. In 1793 he sold Weens (and Nether Bonchester) to Robert Nutter Campbell of Kailzie and bought Liddel Bank, where he lived for a while. He is listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 10 horses. In his capacity as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, he served on the Lieutenancy Committee, during meetings to discuss the ballot for the Militia in at least the period 1797–1801. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 (and also in 1819, when he may have already deceased). He was owner of Dinlabyre and Greena according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He is probably the William who was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He is also the William, ‘esq. of Dinlabyre’ listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In his later years he was fond of writing doggerel verses, e.g. about his sheriff-substitute Robert Shortreed. He was said to have ‘spent a good estate foolishly, and died a poor man’. He married Jane, daughter of John Rutherford of Edgerston and Ellenor Elliot of Minto. Their children included: William (b.1781), eldest, who inherited Edgerston and took the name William Oliver Rutherford; Archibald, became a surgeon-apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1799, but later joined the East India Company; Samuel, farmer at Whitehill; John, married Margaret, daughter of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, and succeeded to Overton Bush; Eleanor, eldest daughter, married Edinburgh surgeon James Russell; Violet, married David Richardson of the East India Company and drowned with her husband on the way to India; Elizabeth, married Dr. Henry Young; Jean, married Maj. Malcolm of the Royal Marines; and Agnes, who married Archibald Little of London (on the same day as her sister Jean). The deaths of his sons John and William are both recorded in 1782. William (18th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. His children were baptised at Blinkbonny and Castleton Mains. He married Jean Nichol. Their children included: George (b.1771), who probably died young; Jean (b.1774); and George (1781–1837), who emigrated to America, and whose son became a well-known plough manufacturer. William (18th C.) farmer in Over Cassock and then Howpasley. He is recorded in 1769 in correspondence with John Scott in ‘Hopesrigg’. In 1772 he was at Howpasley when his son Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish. He was probably the William who married Janet Scott in 1771 and who also had a son William (b.1776). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Westerhouses in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax in the same year. Probably the same William was recorded as tenant in Westerhouses in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799; John was also listed as a tenant. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. William (18th/19th C.) mole-catcher at Strange in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. His name was crossed out from the list for the Militia ballot, suggesting that he was decided to be ineligible. He was probably related to earlier Oliveres of Strange. William (d.1808) from Hawick, he was a baker in London. He returned to Hawick in his later years and lived at Kirkwyndfoot. He coincidentally died within a couple of months of ‘Auld Cash’, who was probably a distant cousin. It is possible he was the William born in Hawick in 1738, son of Robert and Bessie Blackhall. He is probably the baker William whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1809, with his address given as ‘Hawick, Northumberland’ (probably in error). William (1760–1818) surgeon in Middleton. He is mentioned in the 1808 will of William, ‘Auld Cash’ as his second cousin. It seems likely that he was actually son of one of the full cousins of ‘Auld Cash’. He could be the William born to Robert of Burnflat in 1757, but seems more likely to be the William son of shoemaker Robert born in 1760. He married Mary Hodgson in 1796 in Gainford, Durham and died in Middleton in 1816, aged 56. His children were Robert Hodgson, George (also a surgeon), William, Ralph and Jean. William (18th/19th C.) resident of ‘Hobkirkmanse’. His son William is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. William (b.c.1770) son of shoemaker John and brother of tailor Robert. He was mentioned in the 1808 will of William, 'Auld Cash', as a second cousin; however, although he was left a small share of the estate, it was stated that it was not known if he was alive or dead, or whether he had any issue. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Minto Kames according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. William 'Little Cash' (1772/3–1840) merchant in Hawick. He may also have been an innkeeper. It is unclear how he was related to 'Auld Cash' (who died unmarried), but could have been a nephew, or may not have been directly related at all (with the nickname given humourously perhaps). He was recorded as a merchant at his daughter's baptism in 1797. It is possible he was the William 'Junr. Mercht.' who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797. He was 'Junior Merchant' on the 1799 list for the Militia ballot in Hawick. In 1796 he married Catherine, daughter of draper George Turnbull and Betty Wilson; she died in 1809. Their children included: Betty or Bess (1797–1848), who died in Eyemouth; Robert (1798/9–1825); and George 'Pies', baker in Hawick. Witnesses in 1797 were Thomas and Andrew Oliver, who were probably relatives. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, along with his wife Margaret (who died at the age of 72), a daughter who died in infancy, and his son Robert. He could be the William of Hawick who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is described as 'little cash' in 1806 when the death of his daughter Margaret is recorded. William (b.1785) son of Robert and Helen Scott, he was born in Hawick Parish. He was hind at Langraw in Hobkirk Parish and some of his family emigrated to the U.S. In 1841 he was agricultural labourer at Scaur Nook and in 1851 was farm steward at Langraw Scaur (the same place). His wife was Helen and she was already dead by 1851. Their children included: Henry (b.1806), who married Isabella Renwick; and Mary (b.1814); Margaret (b.c.1819), who married James Smail, farm steward at Timpendean; Agnes (or Nancy, b.c.1822), who married Oliver Lough; Andrew (b.c.1825); and Violet (b.c.1830). He could be the William, married to Helen Mason, who had children William (b.1815), Thomas (b.1817) and Agnes (b.1820) baptised in Cavers Parish. Later in life his sons William and Andrew, and son-in-law Oliver Lough, convinced him to accompany them to America. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Southdean Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull. Their daughter Jean (1812/3–55) married butcher John Wallace. William (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Rutherford in Wilton Parish in 1813. William (18th/19th C.) mason at Bellshields, probably in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. William 'Will o the Bents' (b.1800/1) son of 'Tammy Clarilee'. In 1841 he was recorded as a mason at Bents near Chesters and in 1851 was a 'Stone-Dyke-Builder' there. His wife was Mary and their children included: Isobel, who married Peter Smith of the Rule valley Smiths; Thomas (b.c.1833); Elizabeth (b.c.1835); James (b.c.1837); Helen (b.c.1840); and George (b.c.1842). He emigrated to Australia along with his daughter and son-in-law, perhaps around the early 1850s. He had 'Poems' published in 1824. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Govenlock and their children included: John (b.1823); Beatrice (b.1824); William (b.1827); Walter (b.1828); Mary (b.1830); and Janet (b.1832). Since there is no trace of the family in the 1841 census, he is probably the William who emigrated to Galt, Ontario, buying a farm in Beverley in about 1834 (family history says that he came from Innerleithen, but perhaps that was incorrect or just a temporary stay). He may also have had a son Robert. William of Langraw (1804–78) eldest son of Andrew of Langraw in the Rule valley. His mother Jane Scott was a cousin of Sir Walter Scott. He was born in Huddersfield, but moved to Langraw as an infant, being educated in Jedburgh and Edinburgh University. After graduating, he worked in the office of the Hawick Town Clerk (John Oliver) for a while. It is said that he inherited a musical ear from his mother (Jean Scott, cousin of the writer Sir Walter) and to have a delicate constitution and retiring nature. He made a collection of Border tunes, working them out on a miniature violin as he travelled around the country (many coming from a shepherd called Hutton at Peel in Liddesdale). Some of this collection found its way into Wood's 'Songs of Scotland', and the materials were deposited in the Antiquarian Museum in Newcastle. In 1837 he travelled to America, returning over a year later. He became a great authority on local geology, history and folklore. Friend of Sir Walter Elliot, he acted as factor to Wolfelee from 1855, when Sir Walter succeeded to the estate. He was also a keen hunter with the rifle, and took an active part in parish affairs. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He passed on the local tradition that the cheviot sheep breed owed its origin to the 'Thirteen Drifty Days'. In 1861 he is recorded at Langraw as landed proprietor and farmer of 150 acres, employing 5 labourers. He wrote 'Eight Months in Illinois' (1843), but was reticent to publish his poetic works, although the poems 'The Lost Fairy', 'Angel Stairs', 'The Tushielaw Thorn' and 'The Capon Tree' were all published anonymously. Tancred reports his story of meeting a 'spunky' (i.e. 'will-o'-the-wisp') and also how he gave some information regarding the Sclaterford. He was involved with the Hawick Archæological Society. Late in life he married Mary Jane Mills from Ponteland in Northumberland. When his health began to fail he sold Langraw and moved into Edinburgh with his family of 2 sons and 2 daughters (including William A. and Dora M.). He is buried in the Grange Cemetery there. William (b.c.1790) farmer at North Berryfell in 1841. His wife was Helen and their children included: Helen (b.c.1820); Mary (b.c.1823); Francis (b.c.1825); and George (b.c.1830). He could be the William who married Helen Kedie in Wilton Parish in 1814, whose daughter Francis was born in 1815. William (b.1803) hind to the Laird of Langraw. He lived in one of the cottages at Langraw Scaur. His children included: Henry (b.1806), who was Steward at West Fodderlee; William, who went to America; Andrew, also went to America; Agnes, who married Oliver Lough; Mary (b.1814); Violet, who married John Dalgleish from Swan-shiel and went to Australia; Margaret, married James Smail, Steward at Timpendean. He emigrated to America along with his sons William and Andrew and his daughter Agnes and son-in-law Oliver Lough. William (b.1811/2) born in Yetholm Parish, he was a tailor in Denholm and was Treasurer of the Denholm Horticultural Society. He married Margaret Bell and their children included Jane, Janet, Thomas, William, Adam and Andrew. William (b.1812/3) from Jedburgh, he was shepherd at 'Harwoodsyekefoot' in 1851. His wife was Mary (from Hawick Parish) and their children included James, Robert, Jane and Janet. His widow was still living in the same place in 1861. William (b.1814) son of Town Clerk John, brother of lawyers George and James. He was recorded on the 1841 census as a woollen manufacturer along with his brother Thomas. The pair are probably the William and Thomas recorded as proprietors of Dean Mill in Pigot's 1837 directory, manufacturing both woollens and hosiery. In about 1836 the firm of John Oliver & Sons, along with William Wilson & Sons, purchased Weensland Corn Mill, and erected the new Weensland Mill. He was tenant farmer at Hallrule and later at Barnes (where he is recorded in the 1860s). In 1847 John Halliday published 'Verses to William Oliver, Esq., Hallrule House' about his friendship. In 1857 his wife gave 6 silver coins and a Roman coin to the Museum collection. In 1861 he was farmer of 750 acres at Barnes, employing 5 people. He married Margaret Phillips. Their children were John and Henrietta. William (b.1816/7) joiner at Cauldmill. His wife was Janet, and their children included Barbara, William, Helen, Betsy and Agnes. In 1851 his mother Helen, from Ashkirk Parish, was living with him. William 'Blind Wull' (1818-71) noted local fiddler, born at Tandlaw, son of Adam and Agnes Anderson. He lost his sight to a game cock at the age of 5, and also lost his father early. He learned the violin from Johnnie Oliver, and played regularly at weddings and social functions. Tales were also told of his prowess as an angler and poacher and as a maker of nets. On one occasion he was caught poaching, but gave his captors the slip, escaping to Edinburgh, where he worked for a while. He also ran a dance class at the Fleece Inn ballroom. In 1841 he is recorded as an itinerant musician, residing at Damside with his mother Agnes and sisters May and Agnes, in 1851 he was a visitor on the Fore Row (with Mary Grieve, his sister) and in 1861 was 'Musician; Blind' at 11 Fore Raw. He firstly married Agnes Henderson in 1845 and shortly before his death secondly married Catherine Ballantyne. He died at 11 Fore Raw. He is sometimes regarded as the last of Hawick's blind celebrities. William Elliot (b.1819) born in Robertson Parish, son of James, farmer at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He emigrated to Australia, settling at Nanango Station (which covered 195 square miles) in Queensland in about 1842. In fact he probably named the area Nanango, after the aboriginal word for the nearby waterhole. Fellow Borderer John Borthwick settled at the adjacent Tarong, and together the district became known as South Burnett. He probably stayed in Australia for less than a decade, but returned to Scotland. In 1851 he was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot living with his brother James, and listed as 'Lately from Australia'. He later lived on Mull. He married Christina C. Campbell and their children were Mary Salmons, Helen Elliot, Donald C., Jane B. and William. William (19th C.) listed as a High Street baker in Slater's 1852 directory. William 'Will' (b.1827) son of Castle-ton shepherd George, he was brother of David and Barton. He was farm steward at Gatehousecote and later at Hyndlee farm. He was listed as farm steward at Langraw Scaur in 1851 and Gatehousecote Cottages in 1861. He married Margaret Rutherford in 1853 in Hobkirk Parish and their children included: Margaret J. (b.c.1853); James (b.1855); Janet (1856–1923), who married James Crosbie and emigrated to New Zealand; Euphemia (b.1861) and George (b.1864). He died in Hawick, aged 88. William (b.1828/9) smith at Bedrule. He was married to Margaret and their children included Walter, Thomas and William. William Moffat (1846–91) eldest surviving son of James and Dorothea Moffat. He succeeded as tenant of Howpasley on the death of his father. He was one of the original members of the Border Rifles and having held the rank of sergeant for 10 years, was permitted to formally retain that rank when the troop disbanded. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1873. He was also President of the Teviotdale Farmers' Club in the 1880s. After retiring he moved to Langraw House. Later he and his sister (probably Jane, both unmarried) stayed at Whitriggs House. William (1869–1919) son of James and Jane Rutherford. He was a solicitor and lived at Woodburgh near Cauldmill. He died in a freak accident, falling out of the door of the express train from London, near Nuneaton. He married Jessie, daughter of Luke Greenwood, but the couple had no children (formerly spelled 'Olifer', e.g. the usual spelling given for the 1717 Cornet, and 'Olipher', as well as 'Olever', 'Olifer', 'Oliferd', 'Olipher', 'Oliuer', 'Oliuere', 'Olivere', 'Ollifar', 'Ollipher', 'Olliver', 'Olyver', 'Olyfard', 'Olypheid', 'Olypher', 'Olyver', etc.; 'Oliphant' may have broken away as a separate name in early times).

Oliver Castle (o-lee-vur-kaw-sul) n. former castle near Tweedsmuir in Peeblesshire, which gave its name to the surrounding barony. The name of the castle has no connection with the Oliver family of the Jedforest area, although it may be related to the name 'Olifurd' and has been suggested to come from a corruption of 'Holy ford'. The lands were owned by the Frasers since Norman times, passing to the Hays by marriage in the early 14th century. The Hays of Yester also came to be owners of the lands of Todrig in Ashkirk Parish and, somewhat confusingly, these lands were annexed to the Barony of Oliver Castle, probably in the early 16th century, with the Hays holding the superiority.

Oliver-Rutherford

Oliver Crescent (o-lee-vur-kre-sin') n. street built on the most easterly portion of the lands originally granted by Douglas, built in 1875 and named after James Oliver. The area was at one time known as 'Lawrie's Denn'. St. John's Church was once here, converted to Arthur Armstrong's Department Store in 1962. The corner with Croft Road used to have John Millar's grocery shop. The composer Francis George Scott was born at No. 6. J.P. Alison designed the tenements at Nos. 20 and 22 in 1898.

Oliver Park (o-lee-vur-pawrk) n. council housing scheme developed off Weensland Road in 1922, the first of its kind in the town. It was named after Andrew Rutherford Oliver of Thornwood.

Oliver Place (o-lee-vur-plis) n. opposite side of the street from Bridge Street and Bourtree Place and off Oliver Crescent, the first part being a continuation of the High Street. In fact 83 and 85 High Street may have originally have been built as 1 and 2 Oliver Place. It was built around 1875–8 and named after James Oliver, who funded the construction. This area marked the eastern limit of the town lands granted in the Charter. No. 3 has a particularly ornate design, with the carved stone head above the entrance perhaps being the likeness of James Oliver, and his monogram being on 2 of the dormers, which also feature animal forms. Nos. 3, 4, 12 and 13 are grade C listed.

Oliver-Rutherford (o-lee-vur-ru-thur-furd) n. Archibald John of Dinlabyre (b.1821) 2nd surviving son of William Oliver of Edgerston and Dinlabyre. He joined the 93rd Highlanders, transferred to the 70th Regiment and retired as a Major. He succeeded to his father's lands of Dinlabyre. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He was succeeded by his son Archibald Rawlinson. Archibald Rawlinson (b.1866) succeeded his father to Dinlabyre. He was a mariner, who was retired by 1897. In that year he married Ellen Scott Elliot, daughter Walter Elliot, farmer at Hermitage. William see William Oliver Rutherford. William Alexander of Edgerston (1818–88) eldest surviving son of William Oliver of Dinlabyre and Agnes Chatto, he was born at Knowesouth. His father had inherited Edgerston from his grandmother and took the addition of Rutherford to his surname. He served for a few years in the local (Dumfries) Militia, reaching the rank of Major 1846–59. He was a keen hunter, starting his own pack of harriers in 1845, but giving up after an accident meant he could not mount a horse. He served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He did not succeed his father to Edgerston until 1879, when he was 61. In 1862 he married his cousin Margaret Jane, daughter of Edward Young (whose father married a sister of William Oliver Rutherford, Sheriff of Roxburghshire) and Elizabeth, who was daughter of J. Browne Roberts; Elizabeth's sisters Katherine Jane and Margaret Amelia married brothers Thomas Macmillan-Scott of Wauchope and Charles Scott of Langlee. His children were: William Edward (b.1863), who succeeded; Archibald Aymer (b.1867); and Neta Isabella. He secondly married Mary Anne, daughter of W.H. Brakespear from Oxfordshire. They had 2 children: Malcolm; and Agnes. William Edward of Edgerston (1863–1931) eldest son of William Alexander. He also served in the Militia for several years. He succeeded his father to Edgerston in 1888, but sold the estate in 1915 (to Frederick Scott Oliver, who was not related) and emigrated to Kenya. In 1891 he married Nancy, youngest daughter of Gideon Pott of Dod. At the same time Mr. Pott's eldest daughter was also married in the same church (to Isaac Bayley).

the Olivers (thu-o-lee-vurz) n. local family, for centuries concentrated in a triangle formed by Hawick, Jedburgh and the Carter Bar. Tradition asserts that they were once connected closely with the Frasers, or alternatively that they were descended from a West Country family or came from Spain (there is no evidence for the reality of any of these stories however). The early history is also confused by the existence of the surname Oliphant in Scotland. It is unclear exactly when the surname appeared in the Borders. There were Olivers in Berwick in the late 13th century. Robert Oliver was Provost of Jedburgh in 1424 and Thomas Oliver was recorded at Swinnie in 1436. In 1493 a number of Olivers were separately fined for non-appearance to answer crimes at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh; they may be among the ancestors of local modern-day Olivers. There follows many records of the family in the Jedforest and Southdean areas in the 16th century. A farm called 'the Strynds' (probably meaning 'the Springs', near Abbotrule) was the residence of a prominent branch of the family in the late 15th century. In 1502 they were accused of being part of many different raids around the Borders and 4 of them (probably from 2 generations) were sentenced to be hung at Jedburgh for failure to answer for their 'diverse reiffis, hereschippis, slauchtaris, and stouthis'. The clan sometimes fought on the English side, e.g. during Ancrum Moor, when they switched allegiance to the Scots mid-battle; a letter of assurance to the English King in 1544 is valuable as a list of 24 of the most prominent Olivers at that time. Many of the clan were executed following the pacification of the Borders after the 1603 Union. Nevertheless, they continued to farm throughout the upper Rule valley and Southdean, 36 male tenants of that name being recorded in the Jedforest in 1669. In Hawick there were shoemakers of this name from early times, perhaps going back as far as 'Hab o Hawick' in the early 16th century. There have been at least 13 Cornets called Oliver – 'For the Olivers stout, of Jed-forest, Lang counted him their stay, But now, he bow'd upon his staff, And his auld thin locks were gray' [JTe].

o'm (ōm) contr. of him – 'Aich losh! ye blush, preserve's d'ye think shame o'm?' [JoHa], 'Wheesht, wumman – that's aboot a' she can get oot o'm ...' [DH].

Oman (ō-min) n. George (b.1838/9–94) born in Wick, he trained as a photographer in Edinburgh, and came to Hawick in 1867 following his marriage. In 1868 he started to work with photographer William Scott. Their business, Scott & Oman, took over William Beattie's photography business at 4 Mill Port (although Beattie had previously been at 11 Back Row). From 1875 he also ran a tobaconist's shop at 3 High Street. However, he left Hawick soon afterwards and is listed on the 1881 and 1891 censuses as a photographer on Caledonian Crescent in Edinburgh. He married Mary Ann Rutherford, who had been a domestic servant in Rose Street, Edinburgh. Their children were: Agnes McMorran (b.c.1868), who died of burns, aged 2½; Isabella (b.c.1871), born in Hawick; Jemima (b.c.1873), also born in Hawick; Mary Ann (b.c.1875), also born in Hawick; Nathaniel (b.1877), who died in infancy; Margaret Miller (b.1879); Hannah Turner (b.1881); Georgina Francis (b.1884); Kate Andrewina Gibson (b.1887).

Oor Ain Auld Toon (oor-ān-awld-toon) n. song written by Thomas Caldwell, with music by Adam Grant. It was first sung at the 1903 Colour Bussing by John Bell, and dedicated to all Hawick Callants in exile. Because of this, as well as the evocative words and rousing chorus, it is almost always sung at the Overseas Night.

oor ain yins (oor-ān-yinz) n. close members of one’s family – ‘Oor ain yins is sometimes used to distinguish one’s immediate family or one’s immediate household from those of one’s kindred less nearly related’ [ECS].

Oor Bonnie Border Toon (oor-bo-nee-bōr-dur-toon) n. song written by Robert Hunter with music by Francis George Scott. Scott was responding to a request of the Hawick News for a tune to fit the words that it published in 1897. However, it was not published until 1902, and first sung at the Colour Bussing of that year by James Sutherland. It was then not sung again at the Colour Bussing until after WWII, although it is now much more popular. Some people have noticed a resemblance of the tune to ‘The Maple Leaf Forever’, but any similarity is only passing. Certainly Scott’s music is original, and indeed the accompaniment is fairly challenging for the pianist. For the 1957 song book Scott agreed to drop the original 4-bar interlude between the verses and a coda at the end (but would allow no other changes). The introduction is now played between each verse, although the Saxhorn Band version still includes the original interlude.

oo’re (oor) contr. we’re, we are – ‘oo’re off then’, ‘Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum’ [T], ‘An’ show oo’re rale Hawick Callants tae the end o’ oor days’ [JEDM], ‘Oo’re gaan ti heh a pickl rain, A unk’ [ECS], ‘How typical o the great place oo’re privileged ti come frae that oors is the only toon to hev sic a memorial’ [IWL].

Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum (oor-aw-gawn-ti-de-num) n. children’s song, often sung while bouncing a child on the knees, with the knees being opened to let the child fall on the last word – ‘Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum, ti Denum, ti Denum, oo’re aa gaun ti Denum, on Sandy Fussy’s cairt’ [T]. The tune is the same as ‘Keel Row’ (also known as ‘The cat’s got the measles’). Some children in Denholm used to sing ‘Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum schuil in Jimmy Welch’s bus’ (with the addition of ‘The wheel came off, the axle broke, oh what an awfi joke!’) so there may once have been several variants. The song is mentioned in ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’ and so was well known at least as long ago as 1914 – ‘So ti the tuine o: ‘Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum!’ oot A suitt towrt the Auld Jail, thonder’ [ECS] (see also Sandy Fussy’s Cairt).

oorit (oo-ree’, -ri’) pp., adj., arch. tired, wearied, miserabe – ‘Aa yow yins that’s ooreet ... an yirns ti sid doon in ov a hyimmlly bit away threh aa the strowe an the catter-battereem – ee sood gang an stop at Ancrum!’ [ECS].

oorit-lookin (oo-ree’-loo-kin) adj., arch. tired-looking, appearing worn or sick (also ‘oorit-like’).

Oor Lady Land (oor-lā-dee-lawnd) n. Our Lady Land, name of a piece of land in the former Hassendean Parish, referred to in a charter of about 1537. The Mains of ‘Capitrig’ was bounded by the Grinding Burn on the East and this place on the west. The land may have been associated with Hassendean Kirk or otherwise dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It may have been the same as the lands later called ‘Over Hassendean’. This was sold to Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch by Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1738; the disposition of 1739 to John, Duke of Roxburghe refers to it as ‘three acres of land called the Ladylands of Hassendeanbank’. This is the ‘Hassendean Lady Lands, now belonging to the Dukes of Buccleuch and Roxburghe’, which had once been part of the Barony of Cavers, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

oors (oors) pron. ours – ‘The land here is oors forever, We’ll defend it aye in their name’ [??] ‘... Unite to mak’ oors a better auld toon’ [TC], ‘... oo hev ti take eet ti thaim, speakin their language so they sing aboot oors!’ [IHS].

Opens (ō-pinz) n. place name in Hobkirk Parish, formerly known as ‘Wopens’ and before that ‘Hopends’. The cottage of that name was formerly on the Stonedg estate, near the bottom of Hawthornside Brae, close to Weens. James Deans lived there in about the 1840s and 50s, and it is where local historian Walter Deans was born. Robert Grierson, ploughman, lived there in 1861 (also called ‘The Opens’).

the Operatives (thu-o-pe-ra-tivz) n. one of a number of races at the Common Riding in the 19th century, perhaps the predecessors of the Tradesmen’s Handicap. It is probably the same as the ‘Trades’ Purse’ recorded being run on the Friday in at least the years 1834 and 1835. In 1836 there were ‘Operatives Trades’ Purse’ races run at the Moor on the Friday morning, at the Haugh on the Friday evening and on the Saturday. In 1840 there were ‘Operative Trades’ Purse’ races at the Moor and then the Haugh on the Friday and also on Saturday. The ‘Operatives’ 3 Sovereigns’ race was run in 1843, with the ‘Operatives’ Purse’, ‘Operatives’ Trades Purse’, ‘Operatives’ Plate’ and ‘Operatives’ Sweepstakes’ in the 1850s. In 1861 there was the ‘Operatives’ Plate’ on the Saturday (this is ‘operative’ in the sense of ‘workman’; see the Tradesmen’s).

orbelang (or-bee-lawng) adv., arch. ere long, before long – ‘Ee needna rack eersul aboot eet; ee’ll sei it’ll be aa better orbelang’ [ECS].

Orchard (u-or-churd) n. Orchard farm and mansion house, situated at the end of the Braid Road, just outside Hawick. The mansion is Georgian, dating from around 1800. It contains a sunken entrance and stepped entrance porch and the interior has much of the original plasterwork, although there were extensive alterations in the 19th century. The old stables bear an armorial panel with the symbols of the Scotts and the Douglasses. Nearby ‘Old Orchard’ are restored early 19th century cottages. The earliest reference to the modern name of these lands is when ‘John Scot in Orchart, elder and younger’ witnessed a document for the nearby lands of Crook in 1529/30. In 1541 it was burned by the English along with Ormiston, with the cattle taken and 3 men killed. The land was also known as ‘Gyislandis’ in 1511 and ‘Gayslands’ in 1675, so it must have once belonged to someone called Guy, perhaps Guy of Denholm. The land was part of the ‘Cocklaw’ estate, held by the Gledstains of that ilk through the 16th and 17th centuries. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls there were 8 households listed there. John Smith and James Gledstains were living there in 1715, Adam Henderson in 1717, Robert Black and Walter Scott in 1720, William Black in 1723–33. Walter Scott (perhaps the same one) was herd there in 1728, Walter Taylor and James Cairns were there in 1733–44 and William Kinnaird and Walter Scott and James Laidlaw in 1737. It is said that in about 1734 it passed to a Mr. Dickson, but that seems to be an error. In fact it went to Archibald Crombie, Sheriff Depute of Roxburghshire, who was a relative of the Gledstains of some sort. In 1744 he sold it to Robert Howison, Bailie in Hawick, and on his death it passed to his grandson, William Dickson. Robert Cairns was there in 1749–57 and William Leithead in 1749. William Paterson was there in 1777, Robert Biggar in 1782, George Cairns in 1786, James Scott was labourer there in 1789, Andrew Pringle was there in 1796 and Thomas Blyth and Robert Nichol were servants there in 1799 and Robert Nichol in 1801. After William Dickson’s death in 1788 it was probably inherited by his uncle, Robert Scott; he was recorded there in 1811, when it was valued at £310. Sometime after Scott died in 1813 it was purchased by the Douglasses of Cavers. John Elliot of Borthwickbrae was living there in 1792. In 1797 the farmers there were Andrew Pringle, plus George and Walter Stavert, with the owner Robert Scott living at Orchard Cottage. Robert Glendinning was a servant at Orchard Cottage in 1799. In the 1860s it was owned by Douglas of Cavers, and occupied by manufacturer Walter Wilson. By the late 19th century it was possessed by William Scott, with the last connection with the Douglasses of Cavers severed in about 1925 (also sometimes

Orchard Road

‘the Orchard’; once spelled and pronounced ‘Worchart’ and variants, and still ‘Orchyard’ in the mid-19th century; the name changed from ‘Gy-landis’, i.e. ‘the lands belonging to Guy’, possibly of Denum, to its present name in the 17th century; it is ‘Orchart’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Orchyard’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Orchard Road (or-churd-rōd) n. name sometimes used for the back road from the Miller’s Knowes passing Orchard farm, a popular walking spot – ‘... There’s peace along the Orchard way, An’ doon in Denholm’s bower’ [WFC].

Orchard Street (or-churd-stree) n. short street off Orchard Terrace, named in 1899, previously being part of Glebe Place (from 1888) and then of Glebe View (from 1892).

Orchard Terrace (or-churd-te-ris) n. street at the back of the Terraces, opened as a public road around 1895, although the first house (No. 2) was erected in 1882. There are many villa-type residences on the higher side. The name derives from its proximity to the road to Orchard.

orchart (or-chur’, -churt) n. an orchard (also worchart).

ordain (or-dān) v., arch. to appoint to an office, nominate for duty – ‘[They did] ordeine John Hardie ... and John Tudhope ... two ordinary sworne burleymen’ [BR1688].

ordainit (or-dān-ee’, -i’) pp., arch. ordained, nominated, appointed – ‘... and thrfoir the bailies, with the consent of the council, ordainit her to lie 48 hours in the stockes’ [BR1638], ‘... it was ordainit at the command of the General and company that three baggage horses were to go to the armie out of the town’ [BR1644].

orderit (or-de-ree’, -ri’) pp., poet. ordered – ‘... he orderet it til be gien hir’ [HSR], ‘For he spak’, an’ it was dune; he oorderet, an’ it stude sicer’ [HSR].

orderly (or-der-lee) adv., arch. duly, properly, according to normal procedure – ‘... which day was orderlie kept by virtue of a proclamation emitted by ye General Assembly’ [PR1722].

ordinance (or-di-nins) n., arch. a prescribed religious observance, attendance at church – ‘John Armstrong and John Crozier subsequently appeared to answer a charge of ‘travelling upon the Lord’s day, and absenting themselves from ordinances’ [JaT].

ordinar (or-di-nur) adj., arch. ordinary – ‘... are altogether frustrated and disappointed of the ordinar free and gratuitous contributions of their Christian and charitable neighbours ...’ [BT1699], ‘... was not proclaimed at the kirke

of Hawick which is not only knowne to be his ordinar residence ...’ [BR1712], ‘... an’ then for the Law – his ordinar’ hunting grund’ [BCM1881], ‘Yeh gowsty nicht (wui a wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wundihs) a turbleent woare as the ordnar dang doon the firrst Peinelheuch Monument’ [ECS], adv. ordinarily (often with ‘for’) – ‘At length a doubt wi’ some prevail’d, The ordinar’ ready payment fail’d’ [RDW], ‘The auld folk for ordinar’ gude to bed by ten, but on this nicht there was a coe like to calve ...’ [BCM1880] (also written ‘ordnar’).

ordinary (or-di-nu-ree) adj., arch. custom, usual practice, particularly in the phrase ‘for ordinary’, meaning habitually, according to custom – ‘... the Magistrates and Inhabitants of Hawick rode the marches of the Common yearly for ordinary on the last Friday of May, old stile’ [C&L1767].

Ord (ōrd) n. Alexander (15th C.) resident of Minto, whose surname is recorded as ‘Urde’. In 1493 Walter and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole were able to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including the theft of 2 cows and 13 sheep from him. He was probably related to Maragret, who is recorded in Minto in 1502. John (18th/19th C.) plasterer in Hawick, listed on Teviot Crescent in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Margaret (15th/16th C.) tenant at Minto Craigend, recorded in 1502, when David Scott (called ‘Lady’) in Stirkshaws had remission for leading a raid on the farms there. She had 2 cows stolen from her farm. Her surname is recorded as ‘Urd’. Thomas (1783/4–1859) son of Selby, minister of Longformacus, he was known as ‘Ord the Equestrian or ‘Ord the Circusman’. His early history is obscure. Although destined for the ministry himself, he instead became a showman. He was a popular performer at local Common Ridings and fairs in the early-to-mid-1800s, putting on open-air performances in the Haugh, for example. His speciality was tricks involving horses, including jumping over up to 16 of them, and riding half a dozen at once. He used to ride standing on a bare-backed steed and impersonate characters, financed by the sale of lottery tickets for prizes. He also set up his own theatres, where a mixture of theatrical and equestrian entertainments were staged. He was said to have performed until about the age of 80 and is buried in Biggar old churchyard. An article about him appears in the Border Magazine in 1901.

Ord the Equestrian (ōrd-thu-ee-kwe-stree-in) n. see Thomas Ord).

Orderin the Curds an Cream (or-de-rin-thu-kurdz-an-kreem) n. another name for the Thursday night Chase, when the Cornet formally orders curds and cream from a neighbouring farm (now St. Leonard's) for the Friday morning of Common Riding week. This takes place on the Thursday preceding Common Riding week and is the first official ride of the ceremonies. It has happened since at least the 1840s, but only became officially part of the Common Riding ceremonies (i.e. under the ægis of the Ceremonial Committee) in 1888. Jed Murray performed the official ordering duties for almost 30 years, often with an original poem. The evening begins at 6 p.m. when the drums and fifes lead the Cornet and supporters around the Tower Knowe and up the Loan, finishing at the site of the Auld Brig. The riders proceed up to the Nipknowes, with the married men going first, headed by the Acting Father. This evening also has the first 'Hut', with the Cornet and Acting Father both giving speeches, and the Acting Father being presented with his badge. After the publican has agreed to supply the curds and cream the Hut winds up and there is the singing of all 14 verses of 'Teribus' at the farmhouse.

the Ordnance Airms (thu-ord-nins-ārmz) n. former hostelry at 12 (and perhaps also later 31) High Street. It was also popularly known as 'the Cannon Inn'. For a long time the landlord was James Kennedy, a local veteran of Waterloo (and so presumably he named it); this was in the first half of the 19th century. The Harrow Inn was adjacent, both buildings being demolished to make way for the Royal Bank about 1857.

the Ordnance Survey (thu-ord-nins-sur-vā) n. national mapping agency, which grew out of efforts to map Scotland in the 18th century. The first 25 inch maps of Hawick were published in 1863, with the survey being carried out in 1858. The 'name book' from this survey carries additional useful information about place names, including descriptions, spelling variations and the local authorities who were consulted.

oringer (o-rin-jur) n., arch. an orange, orange tree – 'Oringers and limons [costing £/16/0. the 2 dozen in February 1681, and the former in May £1/10/0. a dozen] [HAST1905].

Orm (ōrm) n. (12th C.) son of Eilaf. He was named after Orm, son of Ketel, husband of Gunnilda, his father's aunt. He was probably the man who gave his name to Ormiston at the confluence of the Kale and Teviot. In about 1145 he witnessed the charter of David I to Melrose Abbey. Sometime before 1152 he was witness to a charter concerning a gift of the church of Molle to Kelso Abbey. In the 1150s he witnessed a transaction between Robert Avenel and Melrose Abbey. In about 1155 he and his son John (of Hownam) witnessed a charter granting the church of Old Roxburgh to the Diocese of Glasgow. In about 1158 he witnessed a gift of Sawtry (in Huntingdonshire) to Warden Abbey by King Malcolm. In 1159/60 he witnessed a confirmation of the rights of Kelso Abbey by King Malcolm. Sometime before 1165 he granted land in 'the other Crailing' to Jedburgh Abbey. He also probably possessed the lands of Hownam, which were later owned by his son. He was succeeded by his son John, who was Sheriff of Roxburgh. His great-grandson William was the first to be styled 'of Ormiston'.

Ormiston (or-mee-stin) n. farm and former estate about 2 miles east of Hawick, in the Parish of Cavers. This was the site of Cocklaw Castle, where the 'Siege of Cocklaw' took place in 1403. However, the name occurs separately from 'Cocklaw' even as early as the 16th century, and so it is unclear if the names were precisely synonymous. In 1541 it was burned by the English along with Orchard, with the cattle taken and 3 men killed. John Scott in Ormiston is recorded in 1589 and Adam Scott in 1592. There were other Scotts there in the 17th century. It was owned by the Gledstains of that ilk in 1643. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls there were 8 separate householders listed there, while 'Bailyea Scott ormiston' paid tax on 2 hearths in Hawick. James Rutherford was tenant there in the early 18th century. John Leithead was there in 1702, Thomas Miller in 1709, James Scott, James Simpson and Adam Huntly in at least 1715–23, John Leithead in 1716, Thomas Scott in 1718, William Turnbull in 1720, James Stoddart in 1726–27, Thomas Reid in 1726–37, Robert Henderson and John Tait in 1727, Robert Elliot in 1727–29, William Laidlaw in 1727–37, Walter Hogg and John Main in 1728, Thomas Hobkirk in 1730, George Scott in 1733, Walter Reid in 1735–42, James Shiel in 1737–41 and James Douglas and Adam Hart in 1737. The ruins of the tower were obliterated by the present farmhouse, which was built around 1747 by carpet manufacturer Walter Elliot. William Lundie was a tailor there in 1753. James Rathie was there in 1781, James Hutton in 1784 and William Allan in 1788–90. The Elliots lived here in the 18th century, but Thomas Curre 'of Ormstone' inherited it through marriage to Helen Elliot. Curre was owner in 1788, when it was valued at £675 15s 4d. He is recorded as farmer there in 1797 and in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811. William Allan lived there in 1788 and Andrew Smail was a servant there in 1797. The Wilson family owned it in the 19th century. Hawick's first Provost, George Wilson was born there, as well as Victoria Cross awardee John Daykins. James Black was miller there in 1841. William Gray and Andrew Black were farmers in the 1860s. Charles Wilson is recorded in the house in 1868. 'Mrs. Margaret F. McDonald or Muir' was listed as owner in about 1874. Until about 1830 the main route from Hawick to the Newcastle area used to pass here on the way to Birneyknowe. In 1878 an old jug (now in the Museum) was found in a garden there, containing some 15th century silver coins. A 3-legged bronze cauldron, possibly 14th century, was also found there and is in the Museum (formerly spelled and pronounced 'Wormston' and variants; the origin is probably 'Orm's farm', from the Old Scandinavian personal name Ormr, but may have been transplanted from another place of the same name; the name first occurs as 'Ormistoun' in 1509/10, 'Ormistoun' in 1535, 'Ormeestoun' in 1592, 'Ormston' in 1680, 'Ormeestowne' in 1683, 'Ormstone' in 1694, 'Ormistown' in 1702, 1708, 1726 and 1737 and 'Ormstone' in 1761; it is 'Ormrstoun' on Blaeu's 1654 map; note there are several other places in Scotland of the same name, e.g. the place on Kale Water, in Berwickshire and in East Lothian).

Ormiston (or-mee-stin) n. farm and house in Eckford Parish, on the north bank of the Teviot, opposite where the Kale joins. The lands were probably those of 'Creling villae Orme filii Gilasp' mentioned in the c.1147 charter to Jedburgh Abbey. The lairdship was held by Orm's descendants, who took 'Ormiston' as their designation and held the lands, which became a barony, until the late 16th century when James, 'Black Ormiston', was executed. It then passed to the Kers of Cessford and then the Earls of Roxburghe. In 1654 it was sold by William, Earl of Roxburghe to John Scott of Langshaw, who sold it in 1658 to Kerr of Chatto. Some time before 1678 it was purchased from Kerr of Chatto by Elliot of Wells. In 1718 it was acquired by William Elliot of Wells and was still held by an Elliot in 1788. It then passed to William Mein and later the Marquess of Lothian. A tower and village here were burned by Hertford's men in 1545 (the origin is probably 'Orm's farm', from the Old Norse personal name 'Ormr' and the Old English 'tun'; the name first appears as 'Hormiston' in the early 13th century and it is 'Ormistoun' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Ormiston (or-mee-stin) n. Adam (b.1738) son of Robert and Helen Leyden. He was probably the Adam who witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1776. He was recorded at Drinkstone in a baptism of 1780. He was probably the Adam, farmer at Drinkstone, recorded in 1787–97 on the Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses, and on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. He is probably the Adam listed in 1788 as former owner of part of Weensland, valued at £41, and at that time belonging to William Dickson of Orchard. He is probably the 'Mr Ormiston' at Drinkstone whose servant James Black was recorded on the Militia ballot in 1801. In 1766 he firstly married Agnes Turnbull, but she died shortly afterwards. In 1767 he secondly married Esther Douglas. Their children were: Robert (b.1769), tenant farmer at Drinkstone; Isabel (b.1770); Helen (b.1770), twin of Isabel, who died young; Janet (b.1773), William (b.1774) and George (b.1776), who all died in infancy; William (again, 1778–1859), a farm servant, who died unmarried; and Adam (b.1780), who also died young. He appears to have thirdly married Nelly Scott in 1787 and fourthly Isabel Scott in 1796. With his 4th wife he had 5 further children, including George (b.1799) and Janet (1803–76). It is possible that his widow was the Isabella who was listed as 'Ind.' in the 1841 census, and living at Greensidehall Cottage, aged about 55. The 1780 baptism was carried out by Rev. Williamson (meaning that he was a member of the East Bank Kirk), with witnesses James Ekron and William Robertson. Adam (1820–65) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Drinkstone, and Helen Hall. He worked as an agricultural labourer and then as a mason's labourer. In 1843 he married Elizabeth Storrie (1823–84) and they had sons: Robert (1846–1919), who married Isabella Clyde; and Thomas (b.1850/1). He secondly married Betsy Douglas and they had a daughter, Betsy (b.1859). He was living with his mother and other extended family members in 1851 and was at 3 Round Close in 1861. He ended his life by hanging himself. Adam (1827–96) eldest son of George and Anne Lockie and grandson of Adam, tenant in Drinkstone. In 1861 he was miller and farmer at Rutherford Mill in Maxton Parish. In 1853 he married Margaret Henderson (1828–1915). They had 5 daughters (including Betsy and Anne) and 3 sons, George, Adam and

William. Sir Alan (d.c.1289) probably descendant (and perhaps son) of William. He witnessed many charters in about the 1270s and 80s. For example he witnessed a resignation of lands to Melrose Abbey by Richard of Rule for lands in Hownam, where he is 'Alano de Hormiston'. He held lands in Pencaitland in East Lothian, mentioned in the 1260s and 70s. His wife was Alice, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It is unclear who succeeded him, but there were several others of the same name at a similar time, e.g. Henry and John, who also swore fealty in 1296. It seems likely he was a direct ancestor of most of today's Ormistons. Andrew of that Ilk (d.1495) eldest son of George. He gained the Barony of Ormiston in 1464, as well as the lands of 'Symonstoun' and 'Grymslaw'. He was a member of the panel of 1464/5 ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Cavers, where he is 'Andrew Ormestoune of that ilk'. Also in 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was witness to a sasine of the Cranstons for Denholm Mains in 1465/6, where he is described as 'of Ormistoun'. He also witnessed several other charters in the 1460s to 1480s. In 1472 he resigned his lands of Ormiston so that they could be granted to his son Robert. In 1476 an action was brought against him and several others by John, Lord Somerville, relating to the lands of Blacklaw in Linton Parish, with the inquest including Ainslies, Kerrs, Douglasses, Pringles, Mathers, Gorlays, Turnbolls and Dalgleishes. In 1481 his brother Nicholas had a charter for lands in the Barony of Broxfield. In 1483/4 he was mentioned in a law-suit involving Thomas Oliphant and William of Abernethy, 2nd Lord Saltoun. In 1485/6 he witnessed a charter for Robert Ramsay of Cockpen. In 1486 he is recorded as a crown tenant in 'Hairtherne' in Yarrow. In 1490 he had to pay Thomas Stewart of Minto for the rental of Sunlaws. In 1492 he is mentioned as a creditor in the will of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch. He is probably the Laird of Ormiston fined for non-presence at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. He was mentioned again in a decree relating to Sunlaws in 1494. He married Joneta de Cranston and had children: Robert, who succeeded; George, who served as a gunner, and was tutor to his nephew George; and Margaret, who married John Falow of that Ilk. Andrew (b.1731) eldest son of Robert, grandson of Andrew, blacksmith at Bonjedward, and direct descendant of James of that Ilk, 'Black Ormiston'. He married Jean Turnbull in Kelso in 1760. Their children, all but the first born in Hobkirk Parish, included: John (b.1769), who lived in Hobkirk; and 3 Williams (b.1763, 1773, 1775). Andrew (18th/19th C.) tenant at Hobkirk Manse lands, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He is probably the Andrew who married Marion Oliver in Hobkirk in 1768. His son William was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. Andrew (1747–1837) miller at Timbersidemill, he later moved to Sillerbuthall and Lockieshedge. He was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk in Hawick. Andrew (b.c.1780) coachman at Synton according to the 1801 Militia ballot for Ashkirk Parish. Andrew (c.1794–1853) born in Cavers Parish, he was one of the last Hawick Town Herds. In 1841 he was at 'Hawick Muir House' and at 'Herd's House' in 1851; these may have been names for St. Leonard's. He married Sarah Wilson in Wilton Parish in 1816. Their children included Janet, Sarah, Agnes and Adam. Andrew (1820–96) youngest son of John and Elizabeth Oliver. In 1861 he was a labourer living at Bedrule Lodge. In 1848 he married Mary Hymers (perhaps Aimers). They had 2 daughters and 4 sons, including: John (d.1919), who died at Inveresk; Edward (d.1890), who moved to West Derby; Andrew; George (b.1860), who lived at Bedrule. Archibald (1746–1805) born in Wilton Parish, eldest son of John and Isobel Scott. He became a gardener and later moved to Melrose. He is probably the Archibald listed as owner of 'Howlands Inclosure' in 1788, and still recorded that way in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (when he was already deceased), with the same lands later being owned by Mrs. Elizabeth Graham and Mrs. Agnes Bowie. In Hawick in 1774 he married Betty Scott, who was from Goldielands. Their children included: John (b.1776); Betty (b.1778); John (again, b.1781), Sergeant in the Royal Marines; Walter (b.c.1785); Betty (again, b.1787); Archibald (b.1793), emigrated to America. Archibald (b.1793) youngest son of Archibald and Betty Scott. He was born in Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Hart from Eckford Parish, and they had one child, Archibald, who was a shoemaker. He emigrated to America, and it is unclear what happened to him. Archibald (b.1813–94) born in Melrose Parish, only son of Archibald and Isabel Hart. He was a shoemaker in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot's directory in 1837 and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was on the south side of Main Street. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Turnbull in Lilliesleaf in 1836, and she died in 1882. Their children included: Agnes (b.1837); William (b.1838); John (b.1840), who married Mary Baptie; Isabella (b.1842); Robert (b.1846); Helen (b.1851); James Russell (b.1854); Archibald (b.1856); and Mary (b.1858). He died in Ancrum. Archibald (19th/20th C.) poet who published in the Border Magazine in 1897 and 1898. His 'Sweet Borderland' was dedicated to the Boston Border Club and was illustrated with a photograph of Ancrum Bridge, suggesting that he may be the same as the Archibald who died in 1894. Archibald (1861–1931) eldest son of John and Mary Baptie, he was born in Denholm. He became a violin teacher in Edinburgh. He married Annie Elizabeth Weir (b.1856) and they had a daughter Isabel Mary Weir (d.1900), who died aged 2. They are buried in Morningside Cemetery. David (b.1776) son of John and Betty Laidlaw, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a draper on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. 'David & Son' was listed as a Howegate draper in 1837, as well as a manufacturer of hosiery and tailor; the same firm was still listed on the Howegate in 1852. In 1841 he was at about No. 21 Howegate. He married Joan (or 'Johanna') Halliburton, who died in 1854. Their children were: an unnamed child (d.1808); John (b.1809), draper in Hawick; Elizabeth (b.1816); Joan (b.1820); and another child who died in infancy. George of that Ilk (15th C.) son of James. In 1439 he was a witness to the retour of Douglas of Bonjedward and in 1437 he was on an inquest along with his father for the Kers of Altonburn. He purchased lands at Makerstoun in 1451 and was granted his father's Barony of Ormiston in 1452. His recorded sons were: Andrew, who succeeded; James; Nicholas; and Bartholomew. George (15th/16th C.) younger son of Andrew of that Ilk and brother of Robert. He appears to have been in charge of the estate of Ormiston in 1497 when there was a legal case about ejecting tenants from Ormiston Mill. He served as tutor to his brother's son George, who would succeed to Ormiston. He served as one of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell's bailies appointed for giving Walter Scott of Braxholme the lands of Grahamslaw in 1500. Both he and his nephew George appeared on the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. He appears as a 'gunner' on H.M.S. Margaret in 1513 (the year of Flodden) and received payments as a gunner until 1544. In 1546 he was recorded receiving a pension. It is unclear if he had any family. George of that Ilk

(d.c.1542) son of Robert and Elizabeth Rutherford. His uncle George served as his tutor. He inherited Ormiston and Samieston in 1509, presumably meaning that he reached majority then. He was a member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. He obtained lands in Maxton Parish in 1510. In 1530 he was among Border Lairds who gave security for their behaviour. He and his son George were involved with the lands of Fairnington, through a deal with Partick Hepburn of Bolton in 1538. He was at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542, where he was captured and died soon afterwards. He married Elizabeth Rutherford, who was related to his mother, also Elizabeth Rutherford. As a result his son and heir James had to go through a process of legitimisation in 1515. His children included: Sir James, 'the Black Laird', who succeeded; George, who served as a quartermaster in the Scottish Court; and Andrew (d.1574), who was a Colonel of the Scots army in Holland and was killed in a duel. George (17th C.) probably younger son of Walter and grandson of James 'the Black Laird'. He may have been referred to as 'in Heidschaw'. He witnessed events in Jedburgh Parish in 1644 and 1648 and a baptism in Ashkirk in 1650. In 1637 in Ashkirk Parish he married 'Jonet Tennent'. They had 3 known children: a daughter (b.1639); Robert, tenant at Boonraw; and George, who married Isobel Brown. The family also lived in Robertson Parish. George (17th C.) son of John, tenant in Ormiston Mains (although it is unclear if this is the one near Hawick). He is listed in 1684 for being a Covenanter fugitive. George (17th C.) younger son of George and Janet Tennant. His brother Robert was tenant in Boonraw. He was recorded living at Boonraw in 1688. He married 'Issobell Broune' in 1686 and their children (baptised in Robertson Parish, but actually the old Hassendean Parish) included: Bessie (b.1686); and twins Margaret and Janet (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Robert (probably his brother) and Robert Storie. He is probably the George who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms for Robert Storie in Robertson Parish in 1684, for George Hill in 1687 and for Dand Gray and Isobel Ormiston (perhaps their sister) in 1688. George (1748–1815) born in Wilton Parish, son of Robert, tenant at Boonraw, with his mother being Bessie Scott. He became a miller in the parish of Stow. In 1774 in Hawick he married Agnes Fairbairn, but they had no children and she died in 1816. In 1779 in Stow he married

Margaret Boyd and they had 4 sons and 6 daughters, including James (b.1794), who was a carter in Stow and then moved to Dalkeith. George (d.1815) baker in Hawick. He could be the local man who contributed £2 2s to the subscription to support the war with France around 1799. Probably the same George was recorded as owner of a horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. It is possible he was the same as George who was miller in Stow, if he moved back to Hawick and became a baker. George (b.1799) youngest son of Adam, who was tenant in Drinkstone, his mother being Isabel Scott. In 1826 he married Anne Lockie in Robertson Parish. Their children (all baptised in Wilton) were: Adam (1827–96), a miller and farmer; William (b.1828), who died young; Margaret (1830–92), who married Alexander Logan; and Robert (1832–74), farm manager. Both he and his wife were probably deceased by 1841, when the 3 surviving children were living at Groundistone, with mole-catcher Robert Taylor and his wife. George (1801–74) eldest son of John and Elizabeth Oliver. He was born in Bedrule Parish (although the census claims Southdean or Chesters), and lived for a while in the Parish. He became a farm steward. In 1851 he was a labourer living at Dykesmuir in Cavers and in 1861 he was steward at Hallburn farm in Morebattle Parish. In 1823 he married Jessie King. Their children included: John (b.1825); Margaret (1827–78), who married Andrew McDougal; Elizabeth (b.1829); Agnes (1831–92), who married Robert Robertson; James (b.1833); Janet or Jessie (1835–1908), who married Andrew Fox; Isabella (b.1837), died in infancy; William (b.1839), also died in infancy; George (b.1841), also died young; and Robert. Their children were baptised in the Jedburgh Free Kirk. He died in Melrose. George (1847–1910) son of hedger Robert. He was born near Bonchester and moved to Rothbury, Northumberland, where he was blacksmith at Elsdon. He married Isabella Jackson and their children included Robert and Elizabeth H. It was said that he could remember well the cutting of the first sod for the extension of the railway line from Hawick to Carlisle. George ‘Dod’ (20th C.) son of Walter and Mary Begbie. He was a butcher in Hawick. He was the first post-war Acting Father in 1946. He married Catherine Whetlace and had children Helen, Mary, Walter and Kay. Hugh (b.1773) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Boonraw, and Jean Buckham. He was born in Wilton Parish. Like his 2 brothers, he emigrated to America, eventually settling in Canada.

He married Sarah Carter in England. Hugh (1816–79) 4th son of James and Mary Walker. He was born at Drinkstone. At about 2 years old he went with his family to ‘Scotch Settlement’ in New York state. After working on the family farm near Ox Bow, he became a blacksmith. He fought in the Civil War, participating in several battles in 1864 and 1865. He married Mamie Barnes and they had 9 children. James of that Ilk (15th C.) probably succeeded Robert de Ormiston. He was likely to be descended from the first Orm. He may be the James who took part in the demolition of Jedburgh Castle in 1409. He was on an assize in 1425 for Bemersyde and an inquest for Caverton in 1429/30, when he was James ‘of Ormystoun’. In 1432 he was witness to a confirming charter involving Andrew Rule, Lord of Primside and Andrew Ker of Altonburn. Along with his son George he was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn in 1446/7. He was described as ‘Bailie in that part’ in a document of 1448 where Stephen Scott of Castlelaw gained the ‘Burrellands’ in Eckford Parish; this is the first noted instance of the name ‘Ormiston of that Ilk’. In 1452 he resigned his lands to be created into the Barony of Ormiston and re-granted to his son George. James of that Ilk ‘the Black Laird’ (c.1522–73) son of George and grandson of Robert. He was referred to as ‘Black Ormiston’ on account of his dark complexion and to distinguish him from his contemporary, John Cockburn of Ormiston (in East Lothian). He held the Barony of Ormiston on Kale Water, as well as Govansland in Maxton. In 1547, after the Battle of Pinkie, he was among men who swore allegiance to the King of England, but renounced this in 1549. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford that Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained had helped the English in raiding and burning his farms in the lower Borthwick valley. He was on an assize in 1550 for lands granted to William Rutherford of Langnewton. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; he signed with his hand led by the notary and the pledge for him was his brother Andrew. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1554 he was surety for Rutherfords not to molest Walter Ker of Cessford; this was the first mention of what became a feud between him and the Kers. Also in 1554 he was on the inquest for Walter Scott of Branhholme succeeding as heir to his grandfather. He is listed in 1557 as part of the group of 200 local Scotts and others who rode to the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston, as part of some feud. In 1559 he acted as a Bailie to Lord Bothwell. In 1560 he was involved in communications between Scotland, England and France, on behalf of the Regent, Earl of Arran. Also in 1560 he and John Rutherford of the Knowe were warder for a disturbance during the court held at Jedburgh. In 1561 he was accused of resetting some English cattle. In 1561 he and Scott of Headshaw communicated a letter assurance between Scotts and Kers. Also in 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft; and he later incurred a penalty for failing to deliver thieves to the Privy Council. In 1562 he was ordered to vacate the Earl of Bothwell's lands at Ancrum. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he is recorded among the supporters of Scott of Buccleuch in the contract between the Scotts and the Kerrs. The same contract also mentions a 'perticulare deidlie feid' with Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, for which James Langlands of that Ilk and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee acted as his special 'umpires'; this was over the lands of Nether Ancrum and the murder of a servant of Cessford's. Also in 1564 he was among 35 local men who were ordered to assist the Warden of the West Marches, who was Ker of Cessford. He and his uncle Robert of Old Melrose entered into an obligation with the Spottiswoods in 1565. Until 1567 he served as Bailie of the lands of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk for the Earl of Bothwell. In 1567 he was one of the men (along with his uncle 'Hob' Ormiston) accused of treason for helping James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell and was said to be involved in the murder of Darnley. He was knighted in 1567, around the time that Bothwell married Mary, Queen of Scots. However, later that year he was among supporters of Bothwell who were declared fugitives. He was ordered to vacate Ormiston and Nether Ancrum, as well as his wife's lands of Herdminstoun. He was said to be in a group of Liddesdale thieves who raided Alnwick and was present at the Battle of Langside. In 1568 he and his uncle Robert were said to be hiding with Elliot of Whithaugh in Liddesdale. In 1569 he gave refuge to the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland after they fled to Liddesdale following an unsuccessful rebellion in the north of England;

he was said to have been met by Martin Elliot of Braidlie in Liddesdale and forced to stop shielding the English rebels. In 1571/2 he was listed as having been declared as a rebel, along with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre. He seems to have been hiding out for the next 3 years and was finally captured by Sir John Carmichael at Halkwood, when the Earl of Morton was holding a Justice Court at Jedburgh. He was executed for treason in Edinburgh in 1573, and afterwards the Barony of Ormiston passed to the Kers of Cessford. He is recorded as 'Blak Ormestoune' in 1573 when 2 of his former servants were hanged for stealing livestock and burning Andrew Kerr's corn. His first wife may have been the eldest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade. His second wife was Margaret, widow of John Sinclair of 'Hirdmestoun' (or Herdmanston). His son and heir was Walter, who married 'Geizel' (probably Grizel) Rutherford and Janet Turnbull. He also had a son, Andrew, with his 1st wife, and had no further children with his 2nd wife. Some of his descendants were tenants at Boonraw. He is already dead by 1576 when Andrew Commendator of Jedburgh was tried for associating with him after he was denounced as a rebel. James (1684–1746) son of Robert and Margaret Hill, and brother of John. He was born in Roberton Parish and his family were tenants at Boonraw. He was tenant farmer in Easter Burnfoot, Stirches and Boonraw. In 1721 he was living at Borthaugh and in 1724 at Boonraw. He is probably the James who in 1733 witnessed a baptism for Robert (probably his brother), also resident at Boonraw. He married Barbara (or 'Baby') Scott in Wilton in 1713; she was from Tandlaw. Their children were: Jean (b.1714), who died unmarried, aged 21; Robert (b.1716), who moved to Yorkshire; John (b.1717); James (b.1719), who married Jean Dunlop and stayed in Wilton; George (b.1721); John (again, b.1724), also moved to Yorkshire; Walter (b.1727); and Samuel (b.1731), also went to Yorkshire. The witnesses in 1721 were John Scott and William Graham, in 1724 were John Huntly and Gideon Turnbull and in 1727 were John (probably his brother) and Robert Scott. Along with Robert he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Boonraw in 1729. James (1719–54) 3rd son of James and Barbara Scott. He was born in Wilton, where he lived and died. In 1742 he married Jean Dunlop, the marriage being recorded in Ashkirk and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: Jean (b.1743); Barbara (b.1746); Robert

(b.1748); Barbara (again, b.1750); and Walter (b.1752). The witnesses in 1748 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. In 1732 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Netherhall. James (18th C.) married Janet Reid in Wilton Parish in 1799. ddyoungest child of Robert and Jean Buckham. He lived James (1775–1840) youngest child of Robert and Jean Buckham. He lived for a while at the Rink, later at Drinkstone and then at Galashiels. He married Mary Walker in 1800. The family moved to America in 1819, settling in Rossie, New York. He and his wife were among the first members of the Presbyterian Church at Ox Bow. Their children were: Mary (1802–47), who married William Markwick; Robert (1803–54), farmer in Wilna; James (1805–65), lived in Gouverneur; Adam (1807–88), pioneer in Wilna; William (1809–72), blacksmith and soldier in the Civil War, who died at Carthage; George (b.1814), who died in infancy; Hugh (1816–79), blacksmith; Jennett (1819–55), who married Thomas MacRobie; George (1821–96), died at Ox Bow; and Thomas (1823–90), who went to California. James (b.1778) elder son of Walter and Betty Irwin, he was born in Wilton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 as son of Walter on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish’. He was also listed at Boonraw (along with William) on the 1801 Militia ballot. He farmed at Boonraw. In 1799 he married Janet Reid. Their children included: Walter (b.1800); Robert (b.1803), who was a mason in Bedrule and later a builder in Dalkeith; Janet (1805–76), who married John Fox; William (b.1807), who married Jessie Burton; and Betty (b.1810). He emigrated to the U.S.A. with his eldest son Walter and his daughters. Janet (b.1802/3) recorded in 1861 as a ‘Land Proprietor’ at Dykeneuk Cottage. She was unmarried. She could be the daughter of James and Janet Reid. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem Ormstoune’ in 1482 when he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. John (17th C.) tenant in Ormiston Mains (although it is unclear if this is the one near Hawick). He is recorded in 1684 when his son George was among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. John (1682–1729) farmer at Boonraw, son of Robert and Margaret Hill. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for James in Boonraw (his brother) in

1727. In 1712 in Wilton Parish he married Margaret Aitkin, who died in 1726. Their children included: Robert (b.1715), also tenant in Boonraw; John (b.1717); John (again, b.1719), who lived at Wester Howlands and Damside; James (b.1722); (b.1724); Margaret (b.1726); and another daughter. John (1719–75) 3rd son of John, tenant in Boonraw and Margaret Aitkin. He was described as being of Wester Howlands and Damside. He first married ‘Jean Edaem’ and they had a son John (b.1742), who died in infancy. In 1745 he secondly married Isobel Scott, who was from Ewes. Their children included: Archibald (b.1746), a gardener, who moved to Melrose; John (b.1748), tailor in Hawick; Walter (b.1750); Jean (b.1754); Walter (b.1756); and Margaret (b.1761). The witnesses in 1742 were Walter Scott and Robert Wilson and in 1748 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. John (b.1748) 2nd surviving son of John and Isobel Scott. He was born in Wilton Parish and became a tailor in Hawick. In 1767 he married Betty Laidlaw, from Cavers Parish, the marriage being proclaimed in Hawick. Their children were: Catherine (b.1774); David (b.1776), who was a tailor and merchant; and Betty (b.1779). John (1754–89) born in Wilton Parish, 2nd son of Robert, tenant in Boonraw, and Bessie Scott. In 1777 in Edinburgh he married Helen Russell and they had a son, Robert. He worked as a wright in Stow and died in Hawick. John (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). It is possible he was the same as the son of Robert, who was a wright in Stow or the wright in Cauldmill. John (b.1769) son of Andrew, he was born and lived in Hobkirk Parish. He had sons: Andrew (b.1797), who emigrated; and James (b.1798), who was a farmer in Surrey. John (b.c.1770) eldest son of George and Margaret Yule or Laing. He was descended from the Gattonside branch and hence from William of Westerhouses. He lived in Bedrule. In 1841 he was a labourer at Billerwell Lodge, and in 1851 his widow and one of his daughters (Isabel, stated to be ‘Pauper (Imbecile)’) were still there. He married Elizabeth Oliver, who died in Bedrule in 1860, aged 81. Their children included: George (1801–74); Isabel (1805–1870); Margaret (1811–85), who married John Brunton; Elizabeth (1812–91), who married Thomas Cranston; Robert (1815–99); and Andrew (1820–96), labourer in Bedrule. John (18th/19th C.) labourer in Upper Dykeraw in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (18th/19th C.) possible name for a labourer at Hobkirkstile in Hobkirk

Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799 (the name is hard to read). He could be the John, son of Andrew, who was baptised in Hobkirk in 1769. He may also be the John whose children Andrew (b.1797) and James (b.1798) were baptised in Hobkirk. He could be the John, aged about 70, who was living (with several other Ormiston) at Billerwell Lodge in 1841. John (b.1781) eldest surviving son of gardener Archibald. He was born in Wilton Parish. He became a Sergeant in the Royal Marines, serving in the 75th Foot Regiment and being discharged at age 30. He was served heir to his father in 1813. John (b.1809) eldest son of tailor David and Joanna Haliburton. He was a draper in Hawick, taking over the business from his father at 21 Howegate. He is recorded there in 1851. His wife was Janet from Newington. John (b.1836/7) born in Cavers Parish. He was Station Master at Belses. He is recorded there in 1861, with his aunt, Agnes Ormiston. John (b.1840) son of Archibald, shoemaker in Lilliesleaf. He married Mary Baptie in Cavers Parish. In 1861 he was listed as a shoemaker, living with his mother-in-law and family at Spittal-on-Rule. He later moved to Ancrum. They had children: Archibald (b.1861), music teacher in Edinburgh; Robert Baptie (b.1863); John (b.1865); Agnes (b.1870); Mary Thomasina (b.1872); and Thomas (b.1874). Robert of that Ilk (d.bef. 1505) elder son of Andrew and Janet Cranstoun. He succeeded to the estate according to a grant made by his father in 1471/2. He married Elizabeth Rutherford and had 3 sons: George, who succeeded; William of Westerhouses; and Robert of Old Melrose. His widow secondly married Alexander Haitlie of Muirdean. Robert of Old Melrose (d.c.1570) 3rd son of Robert of that Ilk and Elizabeth Rutherford. He served as a quartermaster for James V. He was described as 'of New Hall' in 1551 when he served as surety for his nephew James ('Black Ormiston') with Walter Scott of Sinton. He is said to have shown a 2-headed calf to the Queen Mother, Mary of Guise. In 1564 he resigned Old Melrose to his son John, reserving liferent for himself. He also held lands at Saughtonhall and Blainslie. In 1567 he was convicted of complicity in the murder of Darnley, although it was unclear that he was really involved. He died soon afterwards and was succeeded by John. Robert (d.1719) tenant farmer at Boonraw, son of George and great-grandson of 'the Black Laird'. He married Marion (or Margaret) Hill in about 1681. Their children (baptised in Robertson Parish, when it contained Hasseadan) included: John (b.1682), who was tenant in Boonraw after him; James (b.1684), who married Barbara Scott; and Helen (b.1687). Additionally their son Robert was baptised in Wilton in 1696. The witnesses in 1684 were Robert Storie and William Hill (who may have been his wife's father). The witnesses in 1696 were William and John Lamb. He is probably the Robert who (along with Robert Storie) witnessed a baptism for George (likely his brother) in 1688. Additionally, he is probably the Robert who (along with George) witnessed a baptism for Robert Storie in Robertson Parish in 1684, one for William Pott in 1687 and another for Dand Gray and Isobel Ormiston (perhaps their sister) in 1688. In 1696 he witnessed a baptism (along with Robert Storie) for William Nichol in Boonraw. In 1706 he paid for the use of the Wilton mortcloth (meaning that a family member died). Robert (1696–1740) 3rd son of Robert and Marion Hill. He was a farmer in Wilton Parish (although it is unclear where exactly), living at Boonraw in 1733. In 1732 he married Helen (or Ellen) Leyden and she died in 1743. Their children included: Helen (b.1733); John (b.1736), who died young; and Adam (b.1738). The witnesses in 1733 and 1738 were James (who was probably his brother) and John Lamb. He may be the Robert who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Boonraw in 1729. Robert (1714–76) son of John and Margaret Aitkin. He also farmed at Boonraw. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, resident of Boonraw and in 1764 (with Walter) for a different John Scott in Boonraw, as well as for William Lockie. In 1744 he married Bessie Scott, who died in 1757. Their children were: James (b.1746); George (b.1748), who lived in Edinburgh and died a bachelor, with his estate divided among his siblings; Elizabeth (b.1752), probably died young; John (b.1754); Anne (b.1756); and Elizabeth (b.1760). He appears (unless this is another Robert) to have secondly married Jean Buckham and had children: Janet (b.1765), who married Walter Scott and emigrated to America; Robert (b.1767), who emigrated to America; Elizabeth (b.1770), who married a Hobkirk and emigrated to Rossie, New York; Hugh (b.1773); and James (b.1775). The witnesses in 1746 were George and James Scott (perhaps related to his wife) and in 1770 were Archibald Elliot and Adam Ormiston (perhaps his brother). In 1770 he witnessed a baptism in Wilton for Robert Cowan and another for James Turnbull. He may be the Robert still recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Boonraw; Walter was listed after him and so presumably his brother or son. Robert (b.1716) eldest son of James and Barbara Scott. He was born in Ashkirk Parish. He moved to Yorkshire, where he married and had a son, whose surname was written 'Ormston'. Robert (b.1767) son of Robert and Jean Buckham, he was born in Wilton Parish. He lived at Mount Hooly, near Abbotsford and had children baptised in Minto and Jedburgh parishes. In 1793 he married Isabella Bell from Ancrum. Their children included: Margaret (b.1794); Jean (b.1796); Robert (b.1807); Thomas (b.1814); and Hugh (b.1814). At the age of about 50 he moved with his family to America, settling in the 'Scotch Settlement' in St. Lawrence County, New York. Robert (1769–bef. 1841) eldest son of Adam and Esther Douglas. He was tenant farmer at Drinkstone, probably taking over from his father. In 1817 he was part of a law-suit brought by John Allan over a bill that his father had been caution for in 1802. In 1819 he married Helen Hall in Wilton Parish. They had 4 sons: William (b.1818), a warehouseman; Adam (1820–65); Robert (b.1821); and Thomas (b.1823). In 1841 his widow was living at Dovemount along with their 4 sons and in 1851 on Wilton Place with Adam and Thomas. Robert (1803–91) born in Wilton Parish, son of James and Janet Reid. He was a mason at Bedrule Manse Cottage in 1841. He had moved to Edinburgh by 1851 and later became a builder in Dalkeith. He married Janet Forsythe from Coldingham. and their children were: Ebenezer Forsyth (1828–1926); Margaret (1830–1911); James (b.1832); unnamed child (b.c.1834); Robert (1837–1909); George (1838–77); Elizabeth (1841–58); Jessie (1843–1916); John (1848–1916); and Andrew (1850–1911). His children were born in Coldingham, Wilton, Bedrule and Hobkirk. Robert (1815–99) 2nd son of John and Elizabeth Oliver. He was probably born in Southdean. He became a hedger in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Billerwell Lodge. His married Elspeth or Euphemia Wood (1823–90). Their children included: Ann (1843–1924), who married William Wylie; John (1845–1911), who died at Hawick; George (1847–1910), who moved to Rothbury, Northumberland and was blacksmith at Elsdon; James (1849–98); Elizabeth (b.1851), who married Andrew Weddell; William Andrew (b.1853), who died young; Janet Wood or Jessie (1855–1933); Thomas Shiel (1858–1931), who married Janet Weatherston and moved to Coldstream; Robert (1860–84), who married Betty H. Davidson and Isabella Dalglish; and Helen Wood (1864–1934), who died in Hawick. Robert (b.1818/9) coal clerk at Under Damside in 1841. He was living with his wife Margaret (who was from Lilliesleaf), daughter Ann J. and cousin David Scott (from Traquair). Robert (1832–74) 3rd son of George and Anne Lockie. He was born at Drinkstone, where his family were tenants. In 1861 he is listed as groom at graden in Linton Parish and was later a farm manager. In 1860 he married Margaret Wood (1834–1903) and they had 4 sons: George (1861–1938), who emigrated to Vancouver; William (1863–1904), who married Margaret Pringle; Adam (b.1865), who worked for the South African Post Office in Transvaal; and John (1866–1948), who married Marion Laing Frazer and worked for the Buccleuch Estates. Samuel (b.1731) youngest son of James and Barbara Scott, he was born in Wilton Parish. Along with his brothers Robert and John, he moved to Yorkshire. In 1755 at Great Ayton he married Elizabeth Hoof. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters. The family name became spelled Ormston. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of James 'the Black Laird', with his mother probably being a Scott. His father was his tutor in 1564 when he was sued by the former tenants in Ancrum Mill. In 1603 he and his wife had a charter of the Templelands of Grahamslaw. He was still alive in 1628 and living then at Grahamslaw in Eckfor Parish. He married Grizel, daughter of John Rutherford, 'Cock o Hunthill', and secondly married Janet Turnbull. His children included: William, who mortgaged the Templelands and had at least 4 sons; Andrew, who is recorded in Jedburgh in the mid-17th century, with 4 sons; George, who married Janet Tennant and was ancestor of the tenants at Boonraw; and Robert, who was apprenticed in Edinburgh in 1628. Walter (1752–1818) son of James and Jean Dunlop. He farmed in Wilton Parish. He was listed as farmer at Boonraw in 1797, along with Robert, and also Walter Scott. Also in 1797 he was recorded as tenant in Boonraw when his son James was listed in the Lieutenancy Book. He married Betty Irvine (or Irwin) in Wilton Parish in 1776. Their children included: James (b.1778); and William (b.1779), who emigrated to the U.S.A. Walter (b.1783/4) 4th son (and 2nd surviving) of Archibald, gardener in Wilton and then Melrose, his mother being Betty Scott from Goldielands. In about 1804 he founded the firm of Ormiston and Renwick, seedsmen in Melrose. In 1814 he married

Agnes Brown, who died in 1846. They had 3 sons and a daughter, with the eldest son, Archibald (b.1815) carrying on the seed business. A grandson, Charles Walter, died in Melrose, bequeathing money to found the Ormiston Institute and a public park. William (13th C.) younger son of William of Hownam and Landles and brother of John of Landles. He was great-grandson of the first Orm, after whom Ormiston on Kale Water was named. In about 1240 he witnessed a gift of the Church of Dalmeny from Roger de Moubray to Jedburgh Abbey and another undated charter for the same Roger de Moubray. He served as a juror in 1245. He was probably under the command of Patrick, 5th Earl of Dunbar, and was listed under his name in the pledge made around 1244. He was probably succeeded by Alan. William (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Makerstoun in 1502. Along with Thomas McDougall, in the same place, he was absent from 2 indictments given at Jedburgh, although the crimes are not recorded. William (16th C.) 2nd son of Robert of that Ilk and Elizabeth Rutherford. He was the first of the Ormistons of Westhouses near Melrose, and the Gattonside branch of the family. He was brother of Robert of Old Melrose and uncle of James of that Ilk, 'Black Ormiston'. He appears in many records from 1539 and is sometimes referred to as 'William with the heid'. He was implicated in the machinations following the murder of Darnley and banishment of the Earl of Bothwell, but was ultimately pardoned. William Douglas of Bonjedward was security for him in 1569. He married Katherine Nesbit and their sons Robert and James had to be legitimised because of the parents were related. William (17th C.) recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls in Lilliesleaf. He paid tax on £104 for his part of Cringles. William (1779–1864) son of Walter and Betty Irwin and great-grandson of Robert. His elder brother James farmed at Boonraw. He is recorded at Boonraw on the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia. He married Jane Graham in 1801 and emigrated to America a year later, settling near Bovina, Delaware County, New York. He had 2 sons and 5 daughters. William (1778–1859) son of Adam and and Esther Douglas, he was baptised in Wilton in 1778. He is probably the William recorded at Tandlaw on the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was described as son of 'Mr Ormston' at Drinkstone. He worked as a farm servant and died unmarried. He is probably the William living at Dykeneuk in 1841 and 1851. William (b.c.1770s) recorded at Tandlaw on the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. He could be the son of Adam and Esther Douglas baptised in Wilton in 1778. William (18th/19th C.) son of Andrew from Hobkirk. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. William (b.1807) 3rd son of James and Janet Reid. He may have been born in Southdean Parish. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1835, being then at Lawrie's Den, and gardener at Hawick in 1840. In the 1841 census he was at Harwood as an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was listed as a gardener at West Nisbet farm in Crailing Parish. He married Jessie Burton. Their children included: John (b.1834); Walter (b.c.1836); Elizabeth (b.c.1838); Helen (b.c.1840); George Henry (b.1842); Isabella (b.1843); James (b.1845); Mary; and Jessie. His children were born in Wilton, Hawick, Hobkirk, Southdean, Ancrum and Crailing Parishes. William (1818–64) eldest son of Robert, farmer at Drinkstone, and Helen Hall. He worked as a warehouseman. He married Jane Watson (from Annan), and they appear to have had no children. They are listed and on Walter's Wynd in 1851 and Melgund Place in 1861 (formerly written 'Ormeston', 'Ormestoun', 'Ormistone', 'Ormistoun', 'Ormistoune', 'Ormestone', and variants).

Ormiston Lochend see Lochend

Ormiston Lodge (or-mee-stin-loj) n. small building located at the crossroads just to the south of Ormiston House. Nichol Todd was there in the early 1900s.

Ormiston Mains (or-mee-stin-mānz) n. former name for a farm to the east of Ormiston, on the old Hawick to Newcastle road, now called Sunnyside. John Ormiston was there in 1684. John Ferguson was there in at least 1779–88. The farmer there in 1797 was Robert Murray and William Veitch was a servant there in 1799 (it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map and is 'Ormstown-mains' in 1797).

Ormiston Parkheid (or-mee-stin-pawrk-heed) n. former farm a little to the north-west of the main Ormiston farm. Francis Aitkin was there in 1779. There were Turnbells there in the 1850s and Walter Scott was farmer in 1861. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and still appears on modern maps.

orpie-leaf (or-pee-leef) n., arch. orpine, live-forever, a flowering plant of the genus Sedum, having fleshy leaves and often growing on old walls (also wurpie).

orpit (or-pee', -pi') pp., poet. discontented, peevish – ‘‘What ails the orpit doytterd stycke’, The kerlyn loudly said’ [JTe].

Orr (ōr, or) n. Dr. James (1844–1913) born in Glasgow, son of engineer Robert and Montgomery Hunter. He became an apprentice bookbinder before training for the ministry, earning an M.A. from Glasgow University in 1870 and a B.D. in 1872. He was a probationer in Irvine before becoming minister of East Bank Church in 1874. Known as a Liberal, he campaigned for reducing liquor licences. In 1879 he helped draft the United Presbyterian declaration statement against total endorsement of Calvinism. He obtained a Doctorate of Divinity (by examination) from Glasgow in 1885. He was particularly outspoken in opposition to the Common Riding in the 1880s and 1890s. He was Chairman of Hawick School Board. In 1891 he was then elected Chair of Church History in the United Presbyterian College, Edinburgh and later Chair of Systematic Theology and Apologetics in the United Free College, Glasgow. He lectured in America in 1895 and 1897. He was a joint convenor of the United Presbyterian union (with the Free Church) committee in 1896. In 1874 he married Hannah Fraser, daughter of James Gibb. He published many theological works, including ‘The Christian View of God and the World’ (1893), ‘The Ritschlian Theology and Evangelical Faith’ (1897), ‘Neglected Factors in the Study of the Early Progress of Christianity’ (1899), ‘The Progress of Dogma’ (1901), ‘The Problem of the Old Testament’ (1905) and ‘Revelation and Inspiration’ (1910). In his last years he was general editor of the ‘International Standard Bible Encyclopædia’ (1915). He was a regular contributor to the London Quarterly Review and other magazines, and helped edit several magazines of the United Church. He died in Glasgow and is buried in Cathcart cemetery there. James (19th C.) became postmaster in Hawick in 1879. He married Euphemia Hamilton. His adopted daughter Ethel married Robert Richardson. John (b.c.1795) agricultural labourer in Ashkirk Parish. In 1861 he was at Ashkirk Cottage with his wife Mary, grand-daughter Mary and sister-in-law Margaret Welch. Thomas (b.1827/8) from Airdrie, he was farmer at West Riddell. He was there in 1861, farming 230 acres and employing 2 people. He was still there in 1868. His wife was Mary.

Orrock (o-ruk, o-reek) n. Rev. Alexander (1652–1711) first minister of Hawick Parish after the Revolution of 1688, serving from 1691 until his death. He was the son of Alexander of Fife, and Elizabeth, sister of Sir John Wemyss of Bogie. He studied at St. Salvator’s College and St. Andrews University, where he graduated in 1668. How and where he spent the next 19 years is unknown, but he was licensed by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1687. In 1688, while he was minister in Dundee, he was removed for some statements (perhaps misinterpreted) he had made about the King, and imprisoned for a while. During that time he was known as a staunch opponent of Episcopacy, and along with his friend Alexander Hamilton of Kinkel, was imprisoned on more than one occasion. He was called to St. Andrews after the Revolution, in 1690, but rejected by the Synod there and so came to Hawick the following year. He was a member of the Assembly in 1692. In 1694 he was also called to Peebles, but after much discussion this was overruled by the Assembly. He also declined calls to Kelso (in 1701/2) and Muthill. In 1705, along with 2 local colleagues (Robert Cunningham of Wilton and Robert Bell of Cavers), he protested Acts passed by certain Synods, but not being a member of the Assembly they were removed, causing a major scene, with a reconciliation only affected after the King’s advisors intervened. He is said to have been both rigid in discipline and extensive in charity. An example of his strict discipline occurred when he made the Town Magistrates wait until they had asked pardon of the Kirk Session on their uncovered knees, for some preceived offence against decency. He called a meeting of the Parish heritors in 1710 to stent themselves to pay the salary of the schoolmaster, this being essentially the founding of the Grammar school. The ‘Orrock Bequest’ was signed by him shortly before his death in 1711. He left 9,000 merks for the school (paying the salary for the schoolmaster and to teach poor children for free), as well as 1600 merks for the needy poor, and his extensive library for the parishioners. Some of the volumes from this library were deposited with the National Library of Scotland in 1980. From his funds, the Orrock Bursary was competed for by local schoolchildren every 3 years until well into the 20th century. As a result of this benevolence the area around the Grammar School was named after him. He died unmarried. A memorial tablet was erected outside the church after his death, with a marble copy in the vestibule of the Old Parish Church (which incorrectly says he was a minister for 22 years and gives the date of his death 8 days late); it bears the likeness of his head, which is a very rare example of statuary from this period of Hawick's history. The heritors of the Parish gave money for his tombstone to be replaced in 1766. He also gave 4 inscribed silver communion cups to the Church in the 1790s and a silver baptismal basin made from melting down his silver spoons after his death, all of which are inscribed 'Ecclesiae Havicensi' and the relevant date. In addition, a commemorative tablet was placed at the High School in 1932 by the Callants' Club. His only published work is 'Address to the General Assembly, 1705, against the Tyrannical Imposition of the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale'. Hector Heatley (d.1862) 2nd son of Edinburgh surgeon-dentist James, he trained as an architect. He designed the Leyden Monument, which was built in Denholm in 1861. His only other known structures are railway stations at Lartington, Appleby East and Kirkby East. He married Janet Reid and they had 1 son and 1 daughter. He died at the age of 31, before being able to establish himself. Henry (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick, presumably a relative of Rev. Alexander, perhaps his nephew (since he was said to have died unmarried). He was recorded in 1694 owing 8 pounds for his Burgess fee. He witnessed baptisms for Walter Wilson in 1695, for Walter Scott in Goldielands in and for Andrew Wilson in Branhholme in 1696, for William Swan and for John Aitkin in 1698, for smith James Scott, for weaver John Jolly, for Walter Wilson, younger in Castlehill, for tailor Alexander Hislop, for Walter Riddell in Allanhaugh Mill and for Walter Purdom in 1700, for James Laidlaw in Branhholme Town in 1702 (along with tailor Alexander Hislop), for merchant Walter Weens in 1704, for shoemaker George Oliver, carrier Robert Scott (in Branhholme), tailor James Cowan in 1705, for gardener James Dunn in 1707, for Alexander Ogilvie in 1708, for tailor Walter Riddell in 1709, for herd John Turnbull and weaver Alexander Hislop in 1710, for Thomas Anderson in Branhholme Town and for carrier Walter Deans in 1713, for shoemaker Walter Scott in 1714, for gardener Walter Paterson in 1715, for William Hislop in 1716, tailor Thomas Wilkie in 1723, for Town Officer John Stewart in 1725, for several people in 1726, and for Alexander Purdom and flesher Robert Wilson in 1728. In 1728 he witnessed a baptism for George Scott and Janet Orrock, who was surely a relative; he was there recorded as 'Eld:', presumably meaning he was a Kirk Elder. He seems to have served as a kind of general-purpose witness for baptisms. He was recorded as a tailor in 1702 and 1709. He was 'servitor to our late minister' recorded in the Kirk Session records of 1711. He was also Treasurer for Hawick Parish Session in the 1720s and was made an Elder of the Kirk in 1723. In 1725 he witnessed baptisms for maltman John Moss and for Thomas Wilkie. In 1727 he was recorded as one of the 'tacksmen' s of the weigh-house, which was on the ground floor of the Tolbooth. He married Helen Scott in Hawick in 1706 and their children included Henry (b.1707); and Janet (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were Bailies Walter Elliot and Robert Ruecastle. Janet nee Ogilvie (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick, mentioned in a court case of 1815, when Henry Stockwell (servant to a Hawick butcher) was found not guilty of assaulting her 'with intent to ravish'. Her name is given as 'Janet Ogilvie, or Orrock'. She was probably daughter of George Ogilvie and Margaret Learmond, born in Hawick in 1780. She married Adam and had a daughter Jean in Kelso in 1811 (also sometimes spelled 'Orrok').

n. deed signed by Alexander Orrock in April 1711 and registered in Edinburgh in June after his death. As part of his will he thus gave bonds for the benefit of the schoolmaster, which essentially allowed for the continuing prosperity of the newly founded Grammar School. The 9,000 merks sum came initially from: Gideon Scott of Falnash (for Buccleuch), 5,000; Adam Elliot, younger of Arkleton and William Elliot together, 2,000; Walter Scott of Woll and Sir William Scott of Harden together, 1,000; and Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk, 1,000. Conditions of the Bequest included: that the principal was never to be touched; that there was an obligation to teach for free poor children who 'have a genius for learning'; and that the Scotts of Buccleuch were to formally have control over the appointment of the schoolmaster. It was witnessed by Robert Scott, minister of Robertson and Robert Cunninghame, minister of Wilton. The Bequest was administered by appointed trustees for the next century and a half. They contributed to the rebuilding of St. Mary's Kirk in 1763. The bequest was transferred to the School Board and turned into a bursary fund in 1886. It was then transferred to the County in 1908, but still used for Hawick High School bursaries. A separate part of the bequest was the use of his library of ancient theological books for each subsequent minister; this collection remained in a cupboard in the vestry until transferred to the National Library of Scotland in 1980.

Orrock Halls (o-ruk-halz) n. name adopted for Orrock Church after it closed in 1951. It became associated with St. Mary's Church. It was used for church events (including discos) long after the church itself closed. It was partly converted for business use by Murray Brothers in 1990, and has also housed a cafe at basement level. It is a grade C listed building.

Orrock Hoose (o-ruk-hoos) n. house on the left of Stirches Road, formerly a church manse??.

Orrock Kirk (o-ruk-kirk, o-reek-kirk) n. church built in Orrock Place in 1874 as the new premises for the 'Green Kirk' First Secession Church congregation. It was built right down to the riverside, which is unusual in Hawick. The masons were the local firm of George Tait. The site had formerly held a public wash-house. The church united with St. Mary's in 1951. The building became renamed 'Orrock Halls' after the church closed, and continued to be used for church functions. From around 1990 it was been used as a knitwear factory showroom and adjacent tea-room. More recently it housed Wellness Borders and Martinshouse Equestrian. It is a category C listed building.

Orrock Kirk Mutual Improvement Society (o-ruk-kirk-mew-choo-ul-im-proov-min'-su-sI-i'-ee) n. former organisation associated with Orrock Church, operating around 1900.

Orrock Place (o-ruk-plis, o-reek-plis) n. street between the Sandbed and the Albert Bridge, known by that name since the end of the 17th century, after Rev. Alexander Orrock. It was the site of the old Grammar School, a carpet factory and later the Orrock Church. The street is essentially the western part of the Sandbed and was named around 1840. Originally the name was used for the western side, which was separated from the other side of the Sandbed by the central block of houses (later removed). The name 'Teviot Brig Road' was also used. This general area was a detached portion of Wilton Parish until moved by the Boundary Commission in 1890. A gap site was built up by the council in 1960 between the Ewe and Lamb and the old Grammar School. There was a public weighing machine there in the 19th century.

Orrock Place Kirk (o-ruk-plis-kirk) n. another name for Orrock Kirk.

Osbert (oz-bur') n. (d.1174) Prior of Jedburgh who became the first Abbot when it was rased to an Abbey in 1147. He was Abbot when he witnessed the renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s and the confirmation afterwards.

Osborne (oz-börn) n. Rev. James (d.1711) educated at Glasgow University, he is sometimes said to have been an ousted minister of Cavers Parish who held secret sermons during the Covenanting days. However, he was actually a private chaplain to the Douglas family, working as tutor to the children of Sir William Douglas. He was said to have given conventicles locally in the 1670s. Douglas was summoned in 1676 to answer the charge of illegally having a chaplain without a licence from the Bishop, and both men were 'put to the horn as outlaws'. He survived until the Revolution and was ordained as minister at Kilmarnock in 1688. In 1697 he was appointed minister at Greyfriars in Aberdeen and also Professor of Divinity at Marischal College. It was said that he returned to Cavers several times to preach. His children included: William, also a minister; James; and Alexander.

Osburn (oz-burn) n. John (18th C.) baker in Hawick. In 1755 he married Isabel Turnbull. Their children included: John (b.1757); Elizabeth (b.1759); Christian (b.1760); Martha (b.1762); Elizabeth (again, b.1764); Joanna (b.1766); Martha (again, b.1771); and John (again, b.1772). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole conregation, in 1764 were Bailies Turnbull 'older and younger', in 1766 were Bailie Turnbull Senior and Bailie Turnbull Junior, in 1771 were Bailie Turnbull of [probably Fenwick] and another Bailie and in 1772 were Bailie Turnbull of Fenwick and James Turnbull. In 1762 and 1766 he himself witnessed baptisms for wright Walter Scott (this is presumably a variant of Osborne).

Osna (oz-na) n. poetic name for the Oxnam Witter – 'Sweet Osn'a stream, by thin-leav'd Ossian (o-shee-in) n. legendary bard who lived in either Scotland or Ireland around the 3rd century, supposedly blind and the son of Fingal '... Who sing the strains That Ossian sung, Your courage ne'er was tame, You will fight for Scotland's glory, you will die to shield her fame' [JoHa], – 'Give me the hills where Ossian lies And Coila's Minstrel sang' [HSR].

ostler (ost-lur) n., arch. an innkeeper – 'Summoned Isobel Cranston, the ostler, for selling aill after sunset ...' [Ash1642].

Oswald (oz-wald) n. (604–642) King of Bernicia from about 635, when he defeated Cadwalla, until he was killed at the battle of Maserfrith. He was son of Æthelfrith of Bernicia and Acha of Deira and would have been Hawick's King. He was the first Bernician ruler to accept Christianity and is also known as 'St. Oswald'. The Hawick area probably made the main conversion to Christianity during his reign. St. Cuthbert's Church contains a statue of the Saint holding the head of Oswald in his left hand. His head is supposed to have been buried along with St. Cuthbert at Lindisfarne for safety, and thereafter it became a symbol of the Saint.

Otterburn (o'-ur-burn) n. village in Redesdale, where the Otter Burn meets the River Rede, site of the 1388 Battle of Otterburn, the details of which were recorded in a 14th century Latin poem and later romanticised in a ballad. A group of Scots (specifically James Douglas, the Earl of Moray and the Earl of Buchan) met at Southdean Kirk to plan an unofficial invasion of England. They taunted Percy at Newcastle, taking his standard, but on the way back were surprised by the English force at Otterburn. They fought in the moonlight, the Scots winning, Douglas being mortally wounded. But because he hid his condition from his men it is said that 'a dead man won the field'. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, were killed on both sides. The Scots also captured Henry Percy ('Hotspur') and Sir Ralph Percy. The Scots version is told in ‘the Ballad of Otterburn’ (sometimes called ‘The Lammas tide’) and the English version in ‘Chevy Chase’. The ruins of Southdean Church were dedicated as a memorial to the Battle in 1910. The battle site itself is marked by a monument in a small wooded area off the main road. Some relics, said to be from the battle, were long preserved at Cavers House. Tradition says that the Douglas banner was carried by a Stavert – ‘The deed was done at the Otterbourne About the breaking of the day; Earl Douglas was buried at the braken bush, And the Percy led captive away’ [T], ‘In vain! – his standard’s sink! – his squadrons yield; – His bowmen fly: – a dead man gains the field’ [JL].

Otterhole Sike (o’-ur-hōl-sīk) n. stream in the upper Borthwick valley, to the north-east of Craik village. It flows southwards to join the Dirthope Burn, which then flows into the Borthwick Water. On the west side are the remains of an ancient earthwork, about 64 m by 43 m, formed by an earthen bank with an outer ditch. It has been mutilated by forestry trenches.

otterhoond (o’-ur-hoond) n. otterhound, a large hound with a shaggy coat, bred for otter hunting in the early 19th century. The practice was justified to protect fishing, and involved men following the hounds on foot and horseback. The most famous local proponent of the sport was Hawick’s Dr. John Grant, who lived at the top of Walter’s Wynd. The Border Magazine of 1904 describes a particular hunt which he led in 1863, in which his dogs tracked an otter from Burnfoot down the Teviot as far as Spittal-on-Rule, where it was killed. The practice achieved its height of popularity in the early 20th century, and was declared illegal in the 1970s, when otters became protected.

Outerside (ow-, oo-tur-sīd) n. farmstead in the Borthwick valley, roughly opposite Philhope, and reached by a track on the right-hand side of the road after Hoscote. These may be the lands of ‘Ughtredshaghe’ which were granted by Margaret, mother of Henry Lovel, to Jedburgh Abbey at its foundation around 1140 (as confirmed in about 1170). It was probably the ‘Ochturhyud’ recorded as granted to Marion Comyn, widow of John de Langlands in 1363. The lands of ‘Uchterseatmylne’ are listed among those granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400; this suggests that there was once a mill there. These were probably the lands of ‘Jacobo de Wchtersyde’ who witnessed a sasine at Milsington in 1453. The lands were owned by Walter Scott of Synton in the early 16th century and Sir Walter of Howpasley in the later 16th century. A bond of 1569, signed in Hawick, lists all of the tenants there, namely ‘Thomas Broun, Jokke Howatsone, Hobbe Broun, Dand Hunter, Alexander Armstrong, Will Pairman, Cristie Pairman, Hob Jaksoun, Watt Litill, Jok Hall, Watt Runseman, Jak Reid, Jokke Scot, Eling Dun, Will Greif, Thome Greif, Johe Gledstanis, George Stevinsone, Pait Stevinsone, Pait Reid, Johnne Gledonyng, Alexander Mylne, Will Turnbull’. Walter Scott of Synton redeemed 500 merks on these lands with William Elliot of Falnash in 1605. George Scott of Synton inherited the lands from his father Walter Scott of Synton in 1610. ‘Rowie’ Scott ‘in Vttersyde’ is recorded in 1616. Liferent was granted to Margaret Maxwell when she married William Elliot, younger of Falnash, in 1635. Margaret Haswell (perhaps the same Margaret), liferenter there, was one of the main landowners in Wilton Parish in 1643, her lands being valued at £360. There were 15 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Nichol, Janet Clerk, Francis Nichol, William Pott, Margaret Nichol, Margaret ‘Randie’, Rebecca Hislop, John Renwick, Walter Scott, Bessie Hislop, William Scott, Margaret Hislop, Mungo Dalgleish and Isobel Armstrong. Gavin Elliot of Outersiderig paid land tax in Wilton Parish on lands valued at £360. Gideon Scott of Outerside witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1687. In 1689 Gideon of Outerside gained other lands, and became known thereafter as Gideon of Falnash. 10 separate households were listed there in 1694. It was part of Wilton Parish before Roberton was formed in 1689/90. The lands were leased by James Scott of Shielswood in 1692. In 1701 the Laird's seats in Roberton Kirk are recorded being the 3 feet to the east of the little door. James Dalgleish was recorded there in 1710, William Armstrong and Robert Scott in 1711, Robert Nichol in 1712, Thomas Helm in 1713, John Murray in 1715–17, James Grieve in 1718, John Scott and James Scott in 1720 and Adam Dalgleish in 1725–27. Adam Pott (probably the same as Adam of Hoscote) was recorded as Laird there among Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1761. James Nichol was there in 1762–65 and James Dalgleish in 1763–66. It belonged to George Stavert (incorrectly transcribed 'Stewart' in one record) in the valuation of Roberton Parish of 1788, when it is listed as 'Outerside, or Outersiderig, formerly in Wilton', with a value of £360. John Henderson was living there in 1788 and James Thomson in 1793. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, 'Outerside, or Outerside-rig' had the same value and was owned by Adam Stavert of Hoscote. Farm labourer Alexander Armstrong and his family were there in 1841. By about 1874 it was listed as owned by Archibald Stavert. Outerside Rig is the hill above, reaching 264m and containing a fort and cairn (formerly spelled 'Utterside' etc., it is probably 'Ughtredshaghe' or 'Ughtredesxaghe' in c.1140 and 1170, 'Ochturhyud' in 1363, 'Uchterseatmylne' in c.1400, 'Wchtersyde' in 1453, 'Vttersyde' in 1616, 'outersyde rige' in 1678, 'Uttersyde' in 1688, 'Outersyde' in 1692 and 1694, 'utterside' in 1710, 'utterside' in 1712, 'Outersiderige' in 1718, 'Outersyd' in 1733, 'Outerside' in 1761 and 'Utterside' in 1762 and 1788; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as 'Utersyde', on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Outersyde'; based on the earliest spellings the origin seems likely to be 'Uchtred's haugh').

Outerside (oo-tur-sīd) n. James (15th C.) witness in 1453 to a sasine exchanging the lands of Milsington with those of Wester Heap, between the Langlands and Scott families. He is recorded as 'Jacobo de Wchtersyde', and it seems likely his lands were those of Outerside, just up the Borthwick from Milsington.

Outerside Rig (ow-tur-sīd-rig) n. elongated hill above Outerside, reaching a height of 264m and containing a fort. The name was also formerly used for the farm at Outerside. The hill contains the remains of a hill-fort at the east of the ridge, possibly dating from the early Iron Age.

Much obliterated by cultivation, it consists of inner and outer ramparts and a ditch. In the inside may be signs of a hut circle, while just outside is a possible enclosure (spelled 'Uttersydrigg' and variants in early documents; it is 'Outersidrige' in 1528/9, 'Outarsyderige' in 1610, 'Uttersiderigg' in 1643 and 'Outersiderige' in 1718).

Outersideshiel (ow-tur-sīd-sheel) n. former steading high above Outerside. On Ainslie's 1773 map it is marked on the south side of the Hoscote Burn near Girnwood Linn. David Scott was there in 1737. Thomas Glendinning was there in 1763–66, James Glendinning in 1775, Thomas Broad in 1781 and Thomas Glendinning in 1797 (it is 'Utterside shiel' in 1763 and 'Uttersideshiel' in 1775, 1780 and 1797).

the Outlaw Murray (thu-ow'-law-mu-ri, -oo'-) n. fanciful story about a leader of the Murays in Ettrick Forest, popularised in the ballad of the same name, and having some basis in historical fact. Murray refused to pay homage to the King, but eventually gave in after being appointed Sheriff of Ettrick Forest. This probably referred to John Murray of Falahill (nephew of the Rector of Hawick), in the latter part of the 15th century.

outred (ow'-red) v, arch. to clear a debt, settle obligations, discharge, disentangle, pp. disentangled, extricated – 'Aw canna conceive hoo they aw got tae bed Unless the confushion was somehow outredd' [BM1900].

ouwn (own) v., arch. to own, confess, admit – '...for A'll ouwn A was dry again ...' [ECS] (cf. own).

oux (owks) n., poet. an ox – 'Thus thaye changet thair glorie intil the lykeniss o' ane oux that eets gerse' [HSR].

Ovens (o-vinz) n. James (17th C.) recorded as 'James Owen in Birk hill' in 1684 when, along with many others, he was declared a rebel for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He may be an ancestor of the Hawick blacksmith. James (b.1818) from Selkirk, son of Thomas and Isabella Murdock. He was a blacksmith in Hawick in the 1800s, with an appropriate name. He lived at the Round Close in 1841, the Backdamgate in 1851 and 3 Silver Street in 1861. In 1840 he married Helen Pow, a daughter of William, blacksmith at Borthaugh Woodfoot. Their children included: Mary (b.c.1841); Elizabeth (b.c.1844); Helen (b.c.1847); John (b.1855), also a blacksmith; William Pow (b.1858) and James (b.1861). He was an elder with the Relief Kirk. John (b.1855) son of James and Helen Pow. He was a blacksmith in Hawick, like his father. He was at 5 Howegate in 1881, 3 Buccleuch Street in 1891 and 11 Sandbed in 1901. He married Helen Wright, from Lockerbie, and they had a daughter Jane A. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records.

Thomas (b.1813/4) from Prestonpans, he was a gardener and forester living at Woll (probably the stables) in 1851. His wife was Catherine and their children included Janet, James, Thomas, John, Robert, Andrew and another son.

Ovenshank (o-vin-shawŋk) n. small farm in Liddesdale, just north of the Liddel, to the west of the site of Liddel Castle. It is probably the place recorded as 'Vnsthank' in the 1541 rental roll, listed between 'Coklaik' and 'Powis'; it was vacant at that time. Robert Nichol was there in 1821. James Wilson lived there in 1841, with his son Andrew there in 1861 and there were also 3 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census (it is marked on Stobie's c.1770 map; it has been suggested that the name has a similar origin to 'Unthank').

Overchester (ō-vur-ches-tur) n. lands that were tenanted by Turnbells in 1516 when several members of that family were identified as being there when they had remission for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. It appears that Mark Turnbull was the main tenant, along with his brother Archibald, and son Mark younger, as well as Richard, David, William, John, Andrew, Andrew's son Thomas, and Ninian. It is unclear where this place was, perhaps part of Chesters in Southdean.

overgave (ō-vur-gāv) pp., arch. gave up, relinquished – 'Compeared the haill Council, and voluntarily of their awin free will renuncit and overgave their quarterings of the soldiers to the town's use ...' [BR1644].

Overhaa (ō-vur-haw) n. Overhall, farm just behind Wilton Dean. The name dates back to at least the 16th century. In 1569 the superiority of the lands (along with Wilton Green and Wiltonburn) was inherited by Grizel Borthwick from her father Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1586 the lands are among those given in 'liferent' to Margaret Ker as part of the marriage contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1601 they were inherited by Walter Cairncross from his uncle Walter, brother of Robert of Colmslie. The farm was among the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. There were 10 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Scott, William Scott, Margaret Turnbull, Marion Martin, Margaret Langlands, Isobel Swan, Janet Scott, Walter Scott, Adam Scott and Marion Henderson. James and Adam Scott each leased half the farm in 1690 and 1692 and were recorded as householders there in around 1694. In at least the period 1694–98 the farm was leased half by Walter Scott, 'Chief', and half by Adam Scott. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; it extended to 120 acres and was bounded by Langlands, the River Teviot, Borthaugh and Brieryhill. The farmhouse is shown near the foot of the Wilton Burn on the western side. William Scott was a servant there in 1723. Adam Easton was there in 1723–25, Robert Ballantyne in 1724, James Scoot in 1732 and John Clerk in 1752. Andrew and Thomas Easton were farmers there in 1797, with 2 work horses each. John Symington was a servant there in 1799. Joiner Adam Riddell lived there around 1840. Adam Easton was farmer in 1841 and in 1851, when the farm covered 62 acres. A doll's house, originating here in about 1880, is in the Museum. A hill there was used as a track for motor-cycle events in the first half of the 20th century (also referred to as 'Everhaa'; it is written 'Vuerhall' in 1569, 'Ovirhall' in 1586 and 'Over hahall' in 1690; it is marked on Gordon's c. 1650 map as 'Ovirhall' and Blaeu's 1654 map as 'O. Hall').

Overhaa Crescent (ō-vur-haw-kre-sin) n. cul-de-sac in Wilton Dean, built in 1971 and named after the nearby farm.

Overhaa Road (ō-vur-haw-rōd) n. main road west through Wilton Dean, named after the nearby farm. New housing was built there in 1970. The wooded hill above this road contains an oval earthwork, about 90 m by 50 m, consisting of a single rampart. Its situation does not appear very defensive, so it has not been classified as a fort. The interior and parts of the rampart have been destroyed by quarrying. There are also remains of a probable homestead on a shelf below the summit. This measures 33 m by 27 m, with no internal features and an entrance in the north-east.

overly (ō-vur-lee) adv., arch. by chance – ‘I happened overly to say that I had seen him there’ [JAHM].

Over Newhaa see Ower Newhaa

overplus (ō-vur-plus) n., adj., arch. surplus, excess – ‘Substraction is to draw a small sume from a great. The overplus or quhat remains just underneath you set’ [HAST1917].

Overraw (ō-vur-raw) n. former name for the farm of Upper Raw on Hermitage Water.

the Overseas Night (thū-ō-vur-seez-nī) n. properly called the Civic Reception for Returned Teries, an evening of entertainment for exiled Teries, taking place in the Town Hall on the Wednesday of Common Riding week. It was inaugurated in 1936. It is an event reserved for distant visitors and their guests. The Cornet, Cornet’s Lass, Acting Mother and Acting Father greet the visitors and the Honorary Provost gives a speech summarising the highlights of the year for the Town. There then follows a schedule of songs and recitations. The names of the ‘Exiles’ are read and each of them stand to be recognised. The Maids of Honour serve refreshments and the evening ends with ‘Teribus’ and ‘Cornet’s Up’ (also sometimes called ‘the Exile’s Night’).

Over Tofts (ō-vur-tofts) n. name used for Upper Tofts in the 18th and 19th centuries.

Overton (ō-vur-tin) n. late 16th century ruined tower near Camptown, about 5 miles south of Jedburgh, burnt by Hertford’s men in 1545. There were Elliots there in the 18th century. John Rutherford of Edgerston owned the lands in the late 18th century. The farm of ‘Overton Bush’ is recorded since at least the late 18th century and is still marked on the Ordnance Survey maps (the origin of the name is probably simply ‘the upper farm’ in Old English and first occurs in the late 16th century).

Ovid (ō-vid) n. Adam (11th/12th C.) priest of the Diocese of Glasgow. He was brother of Laurence of Thornton, who was Archdeacon of St. Andrews, and his name occurs as a witness in St. Andrews documents from about 1203. His surname may be derived from his taste in reading. He was ‘Master’, meaning he held a Masters degree. He was recorded as the parson of Hobkirk in 1220. His name is also given as ‘Ada Onidius’.

o’w (ow) contr. of us – ‘the baith o’w’, ‘that’ll be the end o’w’ (note sometimes pronounced as the two syllable u-oo or o-oo, but other times shortened to ow).

owcht (owcht) pres. part., arch. owns – ‘Whae’s owcht this’ [GW] (cf. awe, aucht and ocht).

Owen (ō-in) n. James (17th C.) resident of Birkhill in Southdean. He is listed in 1684 among many Covenanter fugitives.

ower (ow-ur) prep. over – ‘juist gaun ower the brig an turn left’, ‘pass eet ower here’, ‘A’m gaun ower ti Selkirk’, ‘And they flew oure sea, and the flew oure land, Oure mountain, holt, and town ...’ [JTe], ‘The case is common a’ the world owre ...’ [JoHa], ‘For lo, the wuntir is bye, the rains ar ower an’ gane’ [HSR], ‘... letna thame hae powir ower me ...’ [HSR], ‘For, a’ the daily labours owre, ilk care is laid aside ...’ [JJ], ‘Rowlin owre an owre’ [ECS], ‘There’s peace owre the Kirkstile wa’ [JEDM], ‘Ower mountains, ower muirland, ower green grassy fell, Are borne the sweet notes o’ the eight o’clock bell’ [JJ], ‘He watches owre them by the day, And through the lang dark nicht ...’ [WL], used to describe a journey to a nearby valley – ‘ower ti Selkirk’, also used where other prepositions would be used in English, by, on – ‘A spoke ti um ower the phone’, ‘hei was hut ower the heid wi a plank’, from, out of – ‘... against these who were publickly read over from ye pulpit’ [PR1715], adv., adj. too, over, over much – ‘it’s ower cauld ti gaun oot’, ‘ee’ve got ower muckle on yer plate’, ‘hei’s faaen ower’, ‘... thou anaintest my heэд wi’ oolie; my cupp rins ower’ [HSR], ‘Tell’d owre ti ’im (= repeat it to him)’ [GW], ‘Rowin’ owre an’ owre’ [GW], ‘He fell back owre (= over on his back’ [GW], ‘... poring ower oor programmes wi oor specs liftit, guzzling ice-cream afore it’s ower derk tae sei’ [JuH], n., arch. an excess or extreme – ‘A’ owres is ill [= are evil]’ [JAHM] (also spelled ‘owre’ and occasionally ‘uwr’).

oweraa (ow-ur-aw) adj., adv. overall.

owerance (ow-ur-ins) n., arch. mastery, control – ‘Thou mædist him til hae owerance ower the warks o’ thy han’s ...’ [HSR], ‘... howe lang sall the wicket glorie in the owerance?’ [HSR], ‘Juidin [Gideon] hes landed eis-sel in a guid job; hei hes the owrance o the hyill wareroom’ [ECS], ‘It’s a gey guid yin, hir (her) ti heh the owrance on the gie-in oot o the pokes at oor swa-ree’ [ECS], ‘... Wad tak the owerance o’ aa, And fin’ nae tawse for their pains’ [WL] (also written ‘owrance’).

Ower Ancrum (ow-ur-awng-krum) n. Over Ancrum, name of the former settlement on the north side of the Ale Water. It is distinguished from Nether Ancrum, on the south side, which became the modern village of Ancrum. The ‘Over’ part was burned around the time of the battle of Ancrum Moor, which took place nearby, and never really recovered (it is ‘Over Ankrum’ in 1548/9; it is ‘O: Ancrum’ on Pont’s map of c.1590 and is still recorded as ‘Upper Ancrum’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Ower Bonchester (ow-ur-bon-ches-tur) n. Over Bonchester, former farm near Bonchester, also referred to as ‘Upper Bonchester’. In 1569 it was one of a set of lands acquired by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and in 1587 still part of the Lordship of Jedburgh when Alexander Lord Home inherited the superiority. In 1588 it is listed as being ‘with woods’. It is possible that it corresponds to the remains of the farmstead on the north-west side of Bonchester Hill, near the head of Rob’s Cleuch, some of the stones from which are built into nearby dykes (it is ‘over Bunchester’ in 1569 and ‘Over Bunchester’ in 1588).

Ower Boonraw (ow-ur-boon-raw) n. Over Boonraw, former name for a farmstead near the main Boonraw. It may correspond to the location of West Boonraw, which lies a little uphill from East Boonraw. Robert Storie was there in 1688.

ower-by (ow-ur-bI) adv., prep., arch. over the way, across to, towards, along – ‘Dauvit had dwalt i’ the Mid Raw And plied wi’ his cairrier cairt Jinglin’ raig’lar ilk a week Owre-bye the Copshaw airt’ [DH].

Ower Closs (ow-ur-klōs) n. part of the former farm of Closs. ‘Overcloss alias Milburnholme’ was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755 (it is ‘Ouercloss’ in the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

owercome (ow-ur-kum) v., poet. to overcome, overwhelm – ‘Turn awa thyne eyne frae me, for thaye hae owercum me’ [HSR], ‘...whan my hairt is owercum leed me til the rok that is heicher nor I’ [HSR].

owercome (ow-ur-kum) n., poet. a sudden attack, refrain of a song – ‘...And syne the sough o’ sadness she can share: But in her hert’s the owrecome o’ a sang’ [WL].

owercomin (ow-ur-ku-min) n., poet. a crossing, the refrain of a song, repetition – ‘But whan ye praey, usena vain ower-comein’s, as the heathin do’ [HSR].

owercuissen (ow-ur-ki-sin) pp., adj., arch. overcast – ‘...een as the flaam o the waathergleam skails afore’d the cluds threh an owrecuissen lift’ [ECS].

Ower Dykeraw (ow-ur-dik-raw) n. Over Dykeraw, former name for part of the farm of Dykeraw in Southdean Parish. Gilbert Oliver was tenant there in 1541, paying 25s yearly. James Oliver was tenant in 1694. In 1799 James and John Oliver were tenants and John Ormiston a labourer at ‘Upper Dykeraw’ (it is ‘Ovir Dykraw in 1541 and ‘over dykra’ in 1694).

owerfleet (ow-ur-flee) v., arch., poet. overflow – ‘Letna the waterflude owerfleete me, naether let the deep swallie me up ...’ [HSR].

owerflet (ow-ur-flee) pp., poet. overflowed – ‘...but the se owerflet thair enimies’ [HSR].

ower fornent (ow-ur-for-nen) prep., arch. over against, facing – ‘Gang intill the clauchan owerforment yow, an’ strauchtwaye ye sall fin’ ane ass tiet, an’ ane cowl wi’ her’ [HSR].

Ower Foulwud (ow-ur-fowl-wud) n. Over Foulwood, former lands in Liddesdale, located somewhere along Foulwood Sike, while Nether Foulwood was near where it meets the Liddel Water, south of Mangerton. It is recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Foulwod superior’ and valued at 10 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 ‘Ouerfoulwod’ was leased to Alexander Armstrong (probably son of ‘Ill Will’) and still valued at 10 shillings.

owergane (ow-ur-gān) pp., arch. elapsed, passed, especially in the phrase ‘there’s nae time owergane’ – ‘...it was nae teime owergane or oo war birlin owre the Trow Burn leike five ell o wund’ [ECS], overrun – ‘Belgium’s owergane wi the Germans’ [GW].

owergang (ow-ur-gang) v., arch. to overwhelm, overflow, oppress, exceed – ‘O ne’er let pride sae far o’ergang, to set yer mind a-langing ...’ [JoHa], ‘...Oh goodness! let it ne’er o’ergang, Ayont repenting’ [RDW], ‘...I am cum intil deep waters, whare the fludes ower-gang me’ [HSR].

owerhang (ow-ur-hawng) v., arch. to overhang – ‘As springs that gutter doon the hills, Atween owerhangin’ fern and heather, To join their life wi’ other rills, And wimple on as yin thegither’ [JEDM] (also owerhing).

Ower Hallrule (ow-ur-haw-rool) n. Over Hallrule, former name for part of the farm of Hallrule, also called Outer Hallrule, in distinction to Inner Hallrule. It may also have been another name for Toon-o-Rule. In 1779 ‘Over-Hallrule’ was valued at £832 12s 5d. On the 1811 Land Tax Rolls ‘part of Town-o’-Rule, or Over or Outer Halrule’ is described.

Ower Harwud (ow-ur-har-wud) n. Over Harwood, former name for lands at Harwood on Teviot. It is unclear if the name referred to the whole of the later estate of Harwood, or just part of it. It was among the lands exchanged in 1446 with Lanarkshire lands between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch; one quarter of the lands were included in this swap, with the owner of the other 3 quarters being unknown. In 1462 it was given as part of security for a loan, along with Dryden and Commonsides, by Stephen Scott of Muirhouse to Robert Muir of Rowallan. The loan was fully paid by Robert Scott of ‘Dogehauch’ in 1477. It is listed among the lands held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, along with ‘Nether Harwood’ (it is ‘Ouerharwode’ in 1446, ‘Vuer Harwod’ in 1462, ‘Vuer Herwod’ in 1508/9, ‘Vuir Harewod’ and ‘Uvire-Harwod’ in 1511, ‘Ovir Harwod’ and ‘Ouir Harwod’ in 1572, ‘Owir Harwoid’ in 1594 and just ‘Over Harwood’ in 1615).

Ower Hassendean (ow-ur-haw-sin-deen) n. Over Hassendean, former farm in Hassendean, also once called ‘Hassendean Lady Lands’. It is among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. Robert Scott owned the lands in 1574. Adam Turnbull, ‘Reid Adie’ was tenant there in 1576, when there was a promise that he would abstain from theft. 6 acres of land here were inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. In 1692 Adam Scott had a new feu agreement with the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands there, east and west syde thereof with the milne and maynes of the same’. In 1738 it consisted of 6 acres when it was purchased by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch, from Archibald Douglas of Cavers (see also Oor Lady Land; it is ‘Over-hessington’ in 1545, ‘Over Hassindane’ in 1574, ‘Ovir Hassindane’ in 1576 and transcribed ‘Overbassenden’).

owerheard (ow-ur-herd) pp. overheard – ‘...forever owre-heard at their scandalous crack by Auld Dunbar ahint the hedge ...’ [DH].

owerheid (ow-ur-heed) adv., arch. at an average rate per head, in total – ‘...nyne new calfit ky, with thair followaris, price of the pece ourheid, five pundis’ [SB1574], ‘Item twa hors price of the pece ourheid 10 merkis summa 20 merkis Item foure oxin price of the pece ourheid £8’ [SPB1579], ‘Item, the number of tuo hundreth nolt, younger and elder, pryce of the piece therof ourheid tuentie merkes, summa’ [SB1633].

owerheid (ow-ur-heed) adj., arch. overhead – ‘For aa that the sun, hoisin itsel i the lift owerheed ...’ [ECS].

Ower Heuchhouse (ow-ur-hewch-hoos) n. Over Heuchhouse, former name for part of the lands of Heuchhouse in Liddesdale. It was one of the farms possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632, when recorded as ‘Overheuchehous’.

owerhing (ow-ur-hing) v., arch. to overhang – ‘A rock hangs nodding o’er its chrystal spring, And flow’rs, Narcissus-like, its waves o’erhing’ [CPM] (owerhang).

Ower Holm (ow-ur-hōm) n. name for former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Avirholme’. It was valued at 40 shillings and tenanted by Andrew and Lancelot Forester. From its position in the list it must have been in the southernmost part of Liddesdale, and possibly associated with Millholm, Demainholm, and ‘the Holm’.

the Ower Kirk (thu-ow-ur-kirk) n. former church in the Ewes valley, near the farm of Unthank, and distinguished from the ‘Nether Kirk of the Ewes’ further down the valley. It was dedicated to St. Mark and originally attached to Melrose Abbey. It appears to have been older than the Nether Kirk, dating back to at least the reign of Alexander III. It is probably the ‘St Martin [sic] in Ewysdale’ referred to when Edward II appointed priests in southern Scotland in 1319; the presentation to the vacant church was to John ‘de Ponteburgh’. Patronage was long held by the Earl of Home, although there were no priests recorded there in the 16th century. The rights of the church are still listed in 1663 among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was abandoned at the Reformation and merged with the Nether Kirk, although the graveyard continued in use long afterward. The church bell (made in 1654 by John Monteith of Edinburgh) has also continued to be used, hung from the cleft in a nearby tree. Foundations of the church can be seen in the old churchyard. The churchyard contains an 18th century burial enclosure for the Aitchisons, and several other gravestones of a similar epoch, including an ornately carved grave slab for William Hutton and Jean Scott. An early chapel also stood near Ewes Doors, and this may also have been referred to as the ‘Ower Kirk o Ewes’ (it is ‘over kirk of Ewiss’ in 1663; it is marked ‘O. Kirk of Euss’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Ower Kirkhope (ow-ur-kir-kup) n. Over Kirkhope, site of older church in the Ettrick valley, abandoned in favour of the new site probably in the mid-15th century. An early Christian grave marker was found near the ruins of the chapel.

owerlaid (ow-ur-lād) pp. overlayed – ‘...his waist is als bricht iviry owerlayde wi’ saphires’ [HSR], ‘Færfuniss an’ trimmlin’ ar cum apon me, an’ horrar heth ower-layde me’ [HSR], v., arch. pastured unlawfully – ‘...the great inconvenience that follows by Burgesses who live not in the town, their putting horse, nolt and sheep to the Common whereby it is overlaid ...’ [BR1720].

owerlins (ow-ur-linz) adv., arch. over – ‘Ane wi’ his nibbie cleeks a lass, An’ makes her o’erlins tum’le’ [JoHa].

owerloup (ow-ur-lowp) n., arch. an occasional trespass of cattle, the right of occasional grazing of one’s cattle on a neighbour’s land – ‘...did not disturb the Hawick horses, as they allowed start and oerloup’ [C&L] (see also start an o’er loup).

owerly (ow-ur-lee) adv., arch. overly.

ower muckle (ow-ur-mu-kul) n. over much, too much – ‘Its far owre muckle ... haud him wi’ a wag-at-the-wa’ to begin wi’’ [WNK], ‘That’s owre muckle’ [GW].

Ower Newhaa (ow-ur-new-haw) n. Over Newhall, former name for what became Burnhead. It was used in the late 15th century as a Lairdship by a branch of the Scotts that became Scott of Burnhead, and was part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. Nether Newhall was essentially Burnfoot. ‘Over et Nather Newhalls’ are still referred to when the lands were inherited in 1585 and similarly in 1667 (it is ‘Vuer Newhall’ in 1484 and ‘Ouir Newhall’ in 1532).

overnight (ow-ur-nī) adv. overnight – ‘...but Robert hed lost interest in her overnight, maybe she didni look as appealin when hei was sober in the cauld light o day ...’ [IWL].

the Ower Raw (thu-ō-vur-raw) n. former farm in the Hermitage valley, lying above Netherraw and also known as ‘Upper Raw’. It is ‘Ouirraw’ on the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale, valued at 31 shillings and with William and Andrew Simpson as tenants (it is marked ‘O. Ra’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

owerqualled (ow-ur-kwawld) adj., arch. over-run (with vermin, etc.), covered with dirt, filthy – ‘Ouerquall’d wi’ dirt, excessively dirty, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

Ower Soothfield (ow-ur-sooth-feeld) n. Over Southfield, the upper farm at Southfield, lying further up Chester Knowe than Nether Southfield. It lay just beyond the old boundaries of the Common. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, consisting of 157 acres, bounded by Hawick Common, Nether Southfield and Newbigging. It has had a long ruined farmhouse, and is marked ‘site of’ on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777. This land was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch for a long time and was once part of the Barony of Whitchesters. Simon Scott was tenant there in 1581, and other residents there were ‘Watt Scot’ and ‘Syme Scott’. In 1627 it is described paying ‘in stok and teynd 15 bolls; estimat in stok to 8, in parsonage 2 bolls, vicarage 3 lbs’. It was leased jointly to father and son called Robert Scott, with the other half to John Goodfellow in at least the period 1690–96. John Goodfellow and Robert Scott were there in 1694, with William Dalglish listed there among ‘the poor’. Gilbert Elliot rented the farm in 1698. Robert Tudhope was shepherd there in 1709. John Goodfellow and his son William were tenants in about 1713, William Martin in 1720 and William Hislop and William Turnbull in 1725. William Oliver was tailor there in at least 1722–38. It is probably the ‘Upper’ Southfield where James Douglas is recorded as farmer in 1797 (it is ‘Oversouthfeild’ in 1581, ‘Oversouthfeild’ in 1690 and ‘over southfeild’ in 1694).

owertaen (ow-ur-tān) pp. overtaken – ‘...Till he’s o’ertane by Johnie Armstrong, Hand for hand on Canonbie Lee. Fala, &c.’ [CPM], ‘I hae pursuet my faes an’ owertaen thame ...’ [HSR].

pack-ewe (pawk-yoo) n., arch. a female sheep that a shepherd grazes as part of his ‘packs’.

Packhooses (pawk-hoo-seez) n. Packhouses, former farmstead between Burnhead and Apple-treehall, near the modern Burnhead Cottages. It is marked on the 1861 Ordnance Survey map as ‘Parkhouses’ to the east of the Boonraw Burn, and hence appears to have been separate from Burnhead Cottages (also known as ‘Peatiehooses’), which were between the road and burn. Thomas Liddell was living there in 1751 and James Black in the 1770s and 1780s. Tailors Thomas Miller and William Turnbull lived there in 1841, and there were 9 other households (it is ‘Park houses’ in 1751 and ‘Parkhouses’ in 1841 and 1851; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Packies (thu-paw-keez) n. nickname in use around the early 19th century.

Paddington Sike (paw-din’-in-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on the south-western slopes of Arnton Fell and running roughly south-west to join the Hermitage Water opposite Netherraw Cottages. Near this confluence is an earthwork enclosing an area of over 200 m² and containing some wall foundations; it is of unknown age, but could be the tower-house of ‘Puddingburn’

paddi-red (paw-di-, -du-red) n., arch. frog-spawn – ‘[we] hunteet for paddeh-redd in the ditches’ [HAST1958] (E.C. Smith spells it ‘paddih-redd’).

paddi-spit (paw-di, -du-spi’) n., arch. a foamy aggregation on some plants, cuckoo spit (actually a protective covering secreted by the nymphs of some insect species).

paddi-stuil (paw-di, -du-stil) n., arch. a toadstool, particularly ‘Agaricus’ (also ‘paddi-stail’; E.C. Smith writes it ‘paddih-stuil’).

the Paddlin Pool (thu-pawd-lin-pool) n. shallow pool for children’s play in the summer. In Hawick this referred to either the one where the former Bandstand was located in the centre of the park, in the late 1960s to early 1970s, or the one built at the southern end of the Spetch in the early 1970s, neither of which lasted very many years.

the Paddock (thu-paw-duk) n. fenced area at the Moor where the horses are gathered and paraded before each race. There are existing paddock tickets dating back to at least 1877. In 1889 it was extended and had iron railings erected, and the offices for the Stewards and other officials was built in 1894. Turnstiles were rented in 1910 from Melrose R.F.C., and 4 new turnstiles purchased in 1911. A well was discovered there in 1915 and the Paddock was extended in 1923. The main buildings were gutted by fire in 1957 and renovated afterwards. For much of the 20th century there was a separate charge for gaining entry to the Paddock. Within the Paddock the Cornet displays the Flag from the Committee Room roof during his time at the Mair.

the Paddock Slack (thu-paw-duk-slawk) n. hill-pass on the B709 road linking the Yarrow and Quair valleys, reaching a height of 357 m (1,170 ft).

Paddy Barrat (paw-dee-baw-ri’) n. Hawick resident of the mid-1900s. This may have been labourer Patrick Barret (b.c.1799), who came to Hawick from Ireland and lived on the Back Row (in 1851) and on the Mill Path (in 1861) – ‘Poodge and Peedlum gang doon the toon, Sly Tammy and Kittlin’ Soup gang up; There’s Paddy Barratt and Jamie Broon, And there’s Dick Newall and Johnny Whup’ [HI].

paddy-whack (paw-dee-whawk) n., arch. a stroke, blow, whacking (noted by E.C. Smith; derived from an expression for an Irishman).

paep see pape

paewae (pā-wā) adj., arch. white-faced, sickly, n. a weakling, especially a complaining one – ‘Puir thing! ee ir a pauwe-wauwe; ee’r aa egg-shells’ [ECS] (there are spelling variants; cf. pauw-wauw).

the Pageant (thu-paw-jin) n. Hawick Quater-Centenary Historical Pageant, held at the Volunteer Park on the evenings of Tuesday June 2nd and Wednesday June 3rd 1914. Provost Melrose was Chairman of the organising Committee, and J.E.D. Murray was Pageant-Master, writing and orchestrating much of the Pageant itself. Tom Ker, J.G. Winning and Mrs. Winning helped with some of the writing, and the music was provided by Adam Grant. The song ‘Invocation’ was written to close the ceremony, which also gave us ‘The Wail of Flodden’. The content consisted of 9 episodes and a final procession: Prelude; The Romans and the Druids; Visit of Sir William Wallace to Langlands; Old Hawick of 1513; The Wail of Flodden; Callants leave for Hornshole; Return from Hornshole; Hab o’ Hawick; and Mary Queen of Scots en route to Hermitage. The procession involved most of the historical characters and also the ‘Queen of the Borderland’.

Pagton Burn (pawg-tin-burn) n. stream that runs in a westerly direction to join the Slitrig Water between New Mill and Wudfit Brig. To the south of the stream is an enclosure, measuring about 40 m by 30 m, with an entrance on the north-east side, and the interior being heart-shaped. Its age and purpose are not known.

paidle (pā-dul) n. a paddle, hoe, long-handled tool of various sorts – ‘The lad that howes the Lum-Back neeps Richt cheerily he plies his paidle’ [DH], ‘Hardie came oot wi’ a shairny paidle, Knocked the Cornet off his saidle’ [T], ‘...tied a piece of cord to a paidle shank and gave chase’ [RM], v. to use a hoe or paddle – ‘...until a circle six feet in diameter was ‘paidled’ quite bare round the place where they lay’ [RB].

paidle (pā-dul) n. a dabble in water, wade – ‘oor gaun for a paidle up the witter’, v. to paddle, dabble about in water – ‘the bairns er in paidlin in the pool’, ‘The gleesome bairns gang oot to look For nests along the hedge; They paidle barefit in the burn Beside the yellow sedge’ [FL].

painsioner (pān-shi-nur) n. a pensioner – ‘...tellin’ jokes ti, usually weemin painshiners’ [MB], ‘...The pair auld painshuners are ready to faint’ [JRE], ‘...a’ the Pesco workers, an painshioners, hed got a spaishial gift ...’ [BW1978], arch. a dependant, hireling, someone given lands or otherwise retained for their military service (different spellings exist).

Painsioners o Buccleuch (pān-shi-nurz-ō-bu-kloo) n. list of ‘four-and-twenty gentlemen’ who were kept at the call of Scott of Buccleuch, according to Sir Walter Scott of Satchells. roughly. Each of these men received ‘rooms’ (i.e. small estates) for their service, some in earlier times, although the list probably relates to roughly the period 1580–1620. Some details may be incorrect, and some of the men are not otherwise recorded, but since they would have been known by Satchells’ father, then it is almost a first-hand account. The list is: Walter Scott of Northhouse; Robert Scott of Allahaugh; David Scott of Stobicote; David Scott of Raesknow; Robert Scott of Glack; William Scott in Hawick, called ‘William in the Mott’; John Scott of Monk’s Tower; Robert Scott of Easter Groundistone; James Scott of Alton Croft; Thomas Scott in Wester Groundistone; John Scott in Drinkstone; William Scott in Lees, ‘alias Wilma’, called ‘of Catslac-know’; Robert Scott in paintit (pān-tee', -ti') pp. painted – 'What! Luck, here too! thou paintit twa-faced randy, Squirting thy humbug i' my vera lug?' [JoHa].

paip see pape

pair (pār, per) adj. poor, pitiable – 'puir wee lamb', 'Syne rich and puir maun seek the Muir' [RH], 'I may be auld, I may be puir ...' [DH], 'You puir wee thing! To think that high abune us a' You sit your lane ...' [WFC], 'Clubs an pubs for puir chieles That need the noise and bustle' [WL] (also written puir, q.v., although this is no longer the local pronunciation).

the pair (thu-pār, -per) n. poor people. The Parish was responsible for its own poor people, but attitudes varied about providing assistance for beggars from elsewhere. The destitute tended to be naturally cared for during times of plenty, but struggled through leaner periods. Charges for hiring the 'mort-cloth' were used to help the poor, as well as fines imposed on transgressors in the Parish. An Act of the Justices of the Peace of Roxburghshire of 1725 required the poor to be listed, and those able to beg were issued with a special badge (which had to be returned when the needful period was deemed to be over). In the 18th century it was the custom in Hawick for the destitute to go begging on Saturdays. An 'account of the poor's account' is mentioned in the Town Treasurer's book for 1746. The first mention of 'the poor's stent' on the inhabitants of Hawick was in 1749 (perhaps amounting to 1/4 of the total, the rest presumably raised by the Kirk Session). A list of the poor was drawn up in 1771. In 1784 it was resolved not to levy the poor rate according to means, but just according to rental values. This arrangement lasted for 60 years, with these burghal fees latterly corresponding to 1/3 of the assessment for the whole Parish. In 1789 the assessment was 11 pence for each pound of rental value, increasing to 1s. 6d. in 1798, 2s. 4d. in 1801 (a year of famine) and then 21 d. by 1814. Before about 1790 (perhaps around 1770) all the poor of Hawick Parish were buried in the same coffin, which had a false bottom. The Hawick Parochial Board was set up to administer support for the poor in 1845. The Combination Poorhouse pairadise (pā-ru-dīs) n., arch. paradise – '...bit that i thir days juist gae keeks inti a yirthly pairideise' [ECS].

pairer (pā-rur) adj. poorer – 'oo're the pairer for eet'.

pairest (pā-rist) adj. poorest – 'hei was the pairest o the pair'.

the Pairhouse (thu-pār-hoos) n. the Combination Poorhouse, which became Drumlanrig Hospital. The old name was still used long after it had ceased to be a poor-house. Governors include: William Drysdale (1850s); John Smeaton (1860s); Adam Grierson (1870s and 80s); James Scott (late 19th C.); Richard Telford (until 1892); and James Fleming Boyd (early 20th C.).

pairish (pā-reesh) n. a parish. Parishes were originally developed as part of the feudal system, with nobles and knights who received grants of land in the 10th and 11th centuries setting up churches and tithing themselves and their tenants to support a minister. The boundaries were thus determined by the extent of these collective lands, explaining why they often had detached portions. The parish churches were deprived of much of their income during the age of the great monasteries. Parish boundaries were altered over the centuries, often in response to population changes, but they typically retain some vestige of their origins – 'Rob Tinlin whae was the toon's officer an the pairish beadle' [HEx1965], '...Hawick hed lost naething be allowin the pairish o' Wultin teh provide a Cornet for the first time!' [BW1974], 'Weel, the pairish yird's my kind Thegither, gey plain –' [DH] (cf. the older parishin).

Pairish (pā-reesh) n. James (18th C.) gardener at Knowe in Minto Parish, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull.

the Pairish (thu-pā-reesh) n., arch. euphemism for the Poorhouse – '...it meant Jethart Jail for themselves and 'the parish' for their dependents' [JTU].

the Pairish (thu-pā-reesh) n. popular name for Hawick Old Parish Church (when it wasn't 'old').

the Pairish Coouncil (thu-pā-reesh-koon-sul) n. former organisation dealing with health and social matters. It replaced the Parochial Board in 1894, and was in turn replaced by County Council responsibilities around 1929. Their meetings took place on the third floor of the Town Hall and they had offices at 12 Allars Crescent.

Pairish Halls (pā-reesh-halz) n. the Halls of the Old Parish Church, on the corner of Buccleuch Street and Buccleuch Place. Built in 1885, the land was previously used as a garden. It is a grade C listed building.

the Pairish Kirk (thu-pā-reesh-kirk) n. another name for the Auld Pairish Kirk or formerly for St. Mary's – ‘The Parish Church of Hawick stands on a considerable eminence ... but alas! the fabric, with the old spire attached to it, is more like a farmer's granary or barn, with a huge steam chimney stuck upon it, then a temple of devotion ...’ [RW], ‘... Pairish Kirk is hooses now Folk irni the same somehow’ [IWL].

pairk (pārk) n. a park, enclosed field – ‘... telld the coorse o bonnie Teviot, wumplin bye paster an pairk an bussy dean’ [ECS], ‘Yince upon a lang time ago, when wast end pairk was flatter ...’ [MB] (see park and cf. perk).

the Pairk (thu-pārk) n. popular name for Wilton Lodge Park – ‘... but for sic a monument as th' committe hae decided on, aw'm thinkin' th' Pairk was bei th' place for it’ [BW].

Pairky-Aathing's (pār-kee-aw-thingz) n. shop, which was also known as ‘J. Lynch’, or ‘Miss Lynch's’, at 19 High Street, near the Round Close. It closed in 1989.

pairliment (pār-li-min') n. parliament.

pairls (pā-rulz) n., arch. paralysis, palsy (also paralsie and perils).

pairlt (pā-rul') adj., arch. affected by palsy, paralysed, having uncontrolled tremors – ‘Ther chafts war ditherin an bevverin leike as thay war pairlt’ [ECS] (also written ‘pairl't’; cf. perlt).

pairly (pār-lee) adj. poorly, not well – ‘she's been awfi pairly, ee ken’, adv. in poverty, wretchedly, poet. feebly, softly – ‘Young Branhholm turn'd him, and oft looked back, And aye he passed from tree to tree; Young Branhholm peeped, and puirly spake, O sic a death is no for me!’ [JL].

Pairman (pār-mun) n. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was surely related to Christie, who was also listed. Christopher ‘Christie’ (16th C.) tenant in Outersiderig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as ‘Cristie’ right after Will.

pairpul (pār-pul) n., arch. a thin wooden partition, especially to divide the back shop from the front – ‘... his maxim with every opponent being, after the fashion of the archer, his namesake, to ‘nail him to de pairpil’ [JW] (also written ‘pairple’; cf. perpall).

the Pair Roll (thu-pār-rōl) n. list of people in a parish who are eligible for poor relief. The first mention of ‘the poor's stent’ on the inhabitants of Hawick was in 1749. In 1772 the assessment for the poor amounted to £224 – ‘The said Willaim Paterson ... depones he ... has been on the Poor Roll for several years past and gets a weekly supply of tuppence’ [BR1767] (see also the pair).

Pair's Hooses (pārz-hoo-sees) n. Poor's Houses, former cottages in Ewesdale, near to the Kirk and to Brieryshaw. They seem to be the same houses listed as ‘Kirkstyle’ on the 1841 and 1861 censuses. They are listed on the 1851 census, with 5 households living there.

pairt (pār') n. a part – ‘what pairt o ‘nut’ did ee no understand?’, ‘The rowmes that follows are for ye most pairt far distant fra the kirk, some 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 mylles, the most pairt has either no corne, or very litill ...’ [PR1627], ‘... the possessors of the lands of Flex hath hitherto reaped the greatest pairt of the profit of the said peice of ground’ [BR1692], ‘... As pairtin frae oor ain ane ‘neath the auld aik tree’ [JoHa], ‘Behald, thou desyrist trouth in the inwaird pairts ...’ [HSR], ‘... sall gang intil the lower pairts o’ the yirth’ [HSR], ‘In the fore pairt of June, when the heather's in bloom, They wad like to be back in their ain Border toon’ [WR], ‘In things o’ domestic she aye takes her pairt’ [WAP], ‘... Though townsfolk play their mony pairts An’ sune grow auld’ [WFC], ‘... And then oo hed races And even the Minister took pairt’ [AY], ‘... In loyal herts oor lad o’ pairts Will lang be honoured yet’ [WL], a parting in hair – ‘Nor can I thole their snack-bar wit, Their bowlers and their brilliantine: Owre slow am I to bear a pairt’ [DH], v. to part – ‘they were mairrit fower year ago, bit they’ve pairtit already’, ‘An’ they crucifiet him, an’ pairtet his garments ...’ [HSR], ‘O Jeanie, wherefore did we pairt, Or why ha’e we grown auld?’ [JT], ‘Except when yer hint end pairteed company wi the card-board an’ ee ended up wi a green backside an’ landeed in a cows pat at the fit o’ the hill’ [We] (see also pairtit).

pairtly (pār'-lee) adv. partly – ‘His impish mischief pairtly done, Wi’ gloomy grudge he maun relent ...’ [WP].

pairtner (pār'-nur) n. a partner – ‘where’s the pairtner for this sock?’, ‘Aye it’d still be ‘ee’re man’, bit nowadays they yaise the word ‘pairtner’ [DaS].

pairtnership (pār'-nur-ship) n. a partnership – ‘hei feenished up wi a pairtnership in the firm’, ‘In pairtnership thae thretty years We’ve stuid by ane anither’ [AO].

pairt-oot (pār'-oo') v., arch. to share out (noted by E.C. Smith).

pairt-taker (pār'-tā-kur) n., arch. a partaker, supporter, taker of sides – ‘...the said Walter Scot, knycht, and his freyndis, seruandis, and pairt takaris ...’ [SB1527], ‘...accompanied by his mother Tibbie Donaldson, Turnbull was immediately surrounded by a company of ‘pairt-takers’ of one with whom he had formerly been at feud’ [WaD].

pairty (pār'-ee) n. a party, social gathering – ‘daein Mick Jagger was aye his pairty-piece’, ‘The Queen’s gaun ti haud a pairty And the wife and yow’s tae gaun’ [AY], ‘Cos it’s his pairty ana. An no just his. The hale building’s pairty. The hale toon’s pairty. Aabody’s pairty’ [JuH], political group – ‘... she was a main cog in the Tory Pairty machine’ [IWL], ‘A’ve seen politicians come and gaun frae aw pairties ...’ [IHS], a group of people on a trip – ‘His enjoyment was tempered somewhat be the fact that Mrs. Fair and Miss Lookup were among the walkin pairty’ [IWL], a person – ‘...sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings ... by the skaithe to the pairtie lesed’ [BR1640].

Paisley (pāz-lee) n. Agnes (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. Alexander (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may have been related to William, who is also listed. He is mentioned in 1532 when the tenement to the east of his on the north side of the High Street was sold by William Walker to John Morlaw; this tenement bordered on the Slit-rig, and hence was at the Tower Knowe. Andrew (b.c.1780) servant at Alton according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801 in Wilton Parish. Charles (1794–1838) wright of Hawick, listed at Roadhead in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a Trustee of the Relief Kirk. He was probably the joiner in Wilton, who married Helen Michie; his widow Helen was living at Wilton Roadhead in 1841, along with children William, Jessie, Robert, Charles, John and James. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) wife of John Scott, ‘Wyndheid’. In 1712, when she was a widow, she was rebuked by the Kirk Session for harassing her neighbours, and threatened with imprisonment if her behaviour continued. Francis (18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott and Ann ‘Doeg’ in 1758 and another for Robert Rutherford in 1767. In 1772 he and wright Robert (who was surely related) witnessed a baptism for George Balmer. He is probably the Francis whose wife Jean Purcel died in Hawick in 1787. He may also be the Francis who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1759. Francis (b.1790/1) joiner and cabinet-maker of the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was at about 23 High Street, on the Crown Close in 1851 and at 16 High Street (probably the same address) in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Isabella, John, Francis, Margaret, Thomas and Alexander. Hector (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The Tour of Hauick’. He may be the Hector, married to Isobel Turnbull, who had an unnamed son baptised in Hawick in 1687. He is probably the Hector who witnessed a baptism for Robert Fowler in 1652. Helen (17th C.) probably the daughter of John and Helen Eilson born in Hawick in 1650. In 1687 she had a sasine for the lower part of a house in the west end of Hawick. Her husband was Robert Turnbull, who was a weaver. Helen nee Michie (b.c.1790) widow of a joiner in Wilton. She married Charles in Wilton in 1818. In 1841 she is listed as running the joiners business at Roadhead (i.e. Langlands Road). Her children included Joan (b.1821), William (b.1823), Janet or Jessie (b.1825), Robert (b.1826), Charles (b.1830), John (b.1832) and James (b.1833). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Agnes Deans. Their children included William (b.1638). He may be the James who in 1640 witnessed a baptism for Agnes Paisley and Walter Oliver (suggesting then that Agnes was his sister) and another for Robert Gillespie and Marion Stoddart. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Janet Scott. Their children included: Alexander (b.1644); and John (b.1646). James (18th/19th C.) joiner and cabinet-maker on Damside, recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was probably related to Francis, who was a joiner on the High Street at the same time. Janet (b.c.1790) listed as a schoolmistress on the 1841 census. She was living on the Round Close with Agnes, probably her daughter, a milliner. By 1851 she was listed as a woollen seamer, still on the Round Close. It is possible she was the Janet who in 1808, 1810 and 1812 witnessed baptisms for Andrew Turnbull and Margaret Hislop (probably in one of the secession churches). John (16th C.) resident of Hawick. He was listed in 1579 among those owed money by James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. The item records that '£30 quhairof thair is alsmekill of barkit [i.e. tanned] ledder unwrocht as extendis to £15'. This suggests he was a tanner or leather associated with leather. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Janet Routledge. Their children included: Bessie (b.1642); John (b.1644); Robert (b.1646); Walter (b.1647); and Janet (b.1650). He is probably the John recorded in 1665 when Bessie Douglas was accused of insulting the Bailie and saying that his yard 'was not truelie marched'. Patrick (17th C.) listed at Mervinslaw among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when he was imprisoned in the Hawick Tolbooth 'for abusing of the market and keeping of the honest men from selling of their shoes'. He was presumably a shoemaker and may be the same man as the cordiner who cotributed to the Hawick bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was recorded as a cordiner among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Robert, resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is probably the Robert listed among people (presumably living near St. Mary's) who were disturbed at night by a group who were involved in drunken revelry. They asked for him to bring out the cripple who lodged at his house, pretending to be 'fairie spiritts'. He married Grizel Johnston and their children included: Anna (b.1700); and Robert (b.1703). The witnesses in 1700 were weaver Robert Turnbull and 'officer' James Lethem. Robert (18th C.) wright of Hawick. In 1734 he was tasked with rebuilding the Bailies' seat in the balcony of St. Mary's after it had been removed on the orders of the Chamberlain of Buccleuch. Perhaps the same wright Robert along with wright James (who was surely related) witnessed a baptism for George Balmer. Thomas

(18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for George Balmer in 1776. He is probably the Thomas of Hawick recorded in a bill of 1803 in the Walter Mason Collection. Thomas (19th C.) joiner in the Hawick area. In 1863 he presented some coins to the Museum. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His married Agnes Renwick and children included: Agnes (b.1670); John (b.1672); Margaret (b.1675); Walter (b.1679); and James (b.1682). He was probably miller at Weensland Mill who along with his son Walter witnessed a baptism in 1705. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptisms in 1680 (along with Dand Gray) for Alexander Muir, in 1685 for William Taylor and in 1704 for James Thomson in Weensland. He and his son are probably the 2 Walters in Weensland who witnessed a baptism for weaver Walter White in 1710. It seems likely he is also the Walter who (along with John Muir) witnessed the baptism in Robertson Parish of a 'bastard child' of Adam Scott of Burnfoot in 1686. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in 1684 and who witnessed (along with James Gray) a baptism for William Scott in Weensland in 1696. Walter (d.1712) tenant in Weensland Mill, probably son of Walter. He was recorded as 'younger at Weensland milne' in 1704. He and his father Walter were the 'milners at Weensland milne' who witnessed a baptism for Walter Armstrong in Weensland in 1705. He and his father are probably the 2 Walters in Weensland who witnessed a baptism for weaver Walter White in 1710. He was 'milner' in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Walter White. He married Jean Swan (who was also from Hawick Parish) in 1703 and their children included: Agnes (b.1704); Walter (b.1705); Jean (b.1707); Francis (b.1710); and Elizabeth (b.1712). The baptism of his last child was labelled 'posthum:', indicating that he was dead before then. The witnesses in 1704 were weavers William and John Swan and in 1712 were 'servitors' Walter Dalgleish and John Scott. Walter (b.c.1700) from Langholm, he lived in Castleton Parish. In 1722 he married Margaret Davison Dalgleish. Their children (born mainly in Langholm) included: Robert (b.1731); John (b.1733); Christian (b.1736); Christian (again, b.1737); Elizabeth Alexandra (b.1741), who married John Grieve; and Euphan (b.1744). Walter (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife Margaret Scott died in Hawick in 1795. He could be the Walter married to 'Janet' Scott whose daughter Jean was baptised in Hawick in 1735. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1729 for Thomas Huntly. Walter (b.1825/6) ironmonger on the High Street. In 1861 he was living at No. 21, employing 1 man and 2 boys. He had the house at 43 High Street rebuilt (formerly occupied by 'Robbie the Cow'). A 'stone pig' from his company is in the Museum, labelled 'W. Paisley & Son, Ironmongers, Hawick'. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Jane Josephine and Mary Elizabeth (who married Robert Elliot, famer in Hermitage). Wilhelmina (19th C.) listed as librarian of the Hawick Trades' Library in Slater's 1852 directory. William (16th C.) owner of quarter of a particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. William (d.c.1689) cordiner and Burgess of Hawick. He was recorded as Procurator-Fiscal of the Regality Court (i.e. public prosecutor for the Burgh) in 1668 and 1669. He is probably the William who witnessed baptisms for William Thomson and Agnes Cook in 1680 and for Robert Turnbull in 1683. He is probably the William recorded in 1683 when flesher John Briggs was fined of insulting him and Michael Turnbull, 'calling of them two drunken elders'. He was probably the William mentioned in the Burgh Records in 1686 when 2 new marchers of the boundaries within the town were appointed. He was stated to have been a former marcher, along with John Hardie and William Purdom. He was probably the shoemaker of Hawick whose will is recorded in 1689. William (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. William (b.c.1795) from Innerleithen. He was a dyer who lived on the Fore Raw in 1841 and 1851. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. His wife was Isabella and their children included James, Joan, John, Helen and Charles. William (b.1822/3) son of Charles. He was listed as a joiner at Roadhead in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living at Roadhead with his mother Helen and siblings Charles, John, James and Isabella. (also formerly written 'Paislaw', 'Pasla', 'Paslau', 'Paslaw', 'Paslay', 'Pasley', 'Payslay', 'Paysley', etc.).

Paisley's (pāz-leez) n. ironmonger's shop opposite the Town Hall in the mid-20th century – 'Oo went ti Paisley's for oor tools, Jess McVeetie's for rock bools, Lynch's hed a' kinds o' toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies ...' [IWL].

pait (pāt) pp., arch. paid – '...to be pait to me be the saide Androu Kere or his facturis or subtenandis at twa termes of the yere ...' [SB1470], '...and mak the saidis Jhon and Niniane to be fullie content and pait thairof ...' [SB1500], '...to be pait to them in case the horse come nocht back again, or be lost' [BR1644].

paittern (pā'-urn) n., arch. a pattern – '...when the paittern it made wad bei the ineeshail o oor man-teh-bei' [BW1961].

Paiterson (pi'-, pā'-, paw'-ur-sin) n. (Pater-son) Adam (16th C.) holder of 2½ particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Rev. Adam McCaul (19th/20th C.) licentiate at Saughtree Kirk from 1903. He retired to Edinburgh in 1910. Alexander (17th C.) tenant farmer at Castlehill and 'Holme' in 1671, leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Rev. Alexander (19th C.) from Glasgow, he graduated M.A. from the University there in 1869. He was nephew of Rev. Dr. Pater-son of Kirkwall. He was ordained as minister of Lilliesleaf Burgher Kirk in 1875 and remained until 1896. His time saw a new church opened in 1891. He left for Edinburgh for family reasons, residing at Portobello. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Fulton in Bedrule Parish. In 1623 he was accused of stealing an ox and a cow from a woman in Newton, Glendale (Northumberland). He was recorded as 'Andro Patersonne in Foul-toune' and found not guilty by the court at Jedburgh. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married 'Jennet Leaden' in Ashkirk Parish in 1722. Andrew (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1786, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as a communicant at Borthwickshiels in 1650. He was there along with Helen 'Haire' (probably Hair, his wife), as well as Margaret (listed right after him and his wife), William and Robert, who were probably also related. One possibility is that he was son of Robert and brother of William and Margaret. The family appear to have moved from the Borthwick Water to Hawick at about this time, since he had 2 children with Helen Hair, baptised in Hawick Parish: Margaret (b.1652); and Robert (b.1654). He also had another child with Helen Allan, Walter (b.1656), with the witnesses suggesting the mother was the same woman as Helen Hair. The witnesses in 1652 were Robert Scott and James Allan, in 1654 were Robert and William (surely close relatives and perhaps the men who were also recorded at Borthwickshiels in 1650) and in 1656 were Robert (again) and Adam Govenlock; William married Agnes Allan, and so it is possible that 2 brothers married 2 sisters. Archibald (17th/18th C.) road-maker in Hawick. He was probably related to Walter of Burnflat and other local Patersons, but was distinct from a contemporary Archibald who was tenant at the Flex. Based on the names of his children, it seems likely that he was a younger son of William and Agnes Allan. He was likely to be 'Paterson the cassey-layer' from the Council Records in 1704. He is a 'cassar in Hawick' in 1707 in an agreement to 'lay the Cassa in Selkirk' in 1707. In 1708 he was paid in Selkirk 'for setting the town's part of the causey between Robert Scott of Scott's Bank and Elisabeth Eilott relict of deceased John Turnbull'. He is recorded as a 'Casier' in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for James Hobkirk, who had the same job at Burnflat. In 1709 he was 'Casier' when he witnessed (along with John Gledstains of Whitlaw) a baptism for William Henderson in the Flex, suggesting that he lived in that area. He was 'casaer' in 1714 when he witnessed a baptism for Henry (tenant in Hawick) and in 1715 when he witnessed a baptism for gardener Walter. He was recorded being 'in Flexs' in 1714 and was 'Casier in whitla' in 1716. He could be the Archibald who (along with William Stoddart, also a cassayer at the Flex) witnessed a baptism for William Cathrae in 1728. He is recorded as a 'casier' when he married Helen Paterson, also from Hawick, in 1706; she may have been sister of the other Archibald, making the 2 men brothers-in-law. Their children included: William (b.1707); Francis (b.1710); Isobel (b.1712); Agnes (b.1714); John (b.1716); and Helen (b.1723). The witnesses in 1707 were Walter Paterson of Burnflat and James Hobkirk (also from Burnflat), in 1710 were the other Archibald along with Walter (but it is not clear which one), in 1712 were James Hobkirk (again) and Walter of Burnflat, in 1714 were Walter of Burnflat and another Walter, in 1716 were John Gledstains of Whitlaw and the other Archibald, and in 1723 were 'casaer' John (who was surely related) and Beadle John Scott. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in the Flex, perhaps son of Francis. Note that he is distinct from Archibald (the cassayer), who also lived near the Flex and was having children with Helen Paterson (perhaps his sister, hence the 2 men may have been brothers-in-law) in the period 1707–23. In 1710 he witnessed a baptism for the other Archibald and another for Andrew Gray in Whitlaw, in 1712 he witnessed another baptism for

Andrew Gray in Whitlaw (along with William Shiel, who was also at the Flex) and in 1716 (along with John Gledstains of Whitlaw) he witnessed a baptism for the other Archibald again. In 1722 he witnessed a baptism for John Davidson (perhaps related to his first wife) in the Flex. In 1728 he was recorded as tenant in Fenwick, but was back at Flex in 1729; assuming this was not an error, then he must have moved between farms. In 1714 he married Bessie Davidson and they were described as 'both in Flexs'; there is no evidence of any children from this first marriage. He was recorded as a 'widow, tenant in Flexs' in 1716 when he married Mary, daughter of James Rutherford, tenant in Ormiston. Their children included: Francis (b.1717); James (b.1719); John (b.1720); Isobell (b.1722); Robert (b.1725), who may have moved to Crailing Parish; and Mary (b.1728). Helen (b.1729), with the mother's name given as 'Isabel' Rutherford, was probably also his child. Based on the forenames, he may have been a son of Francis (also tenant in the Flex) and Isabel Renwick. The witnesses in 1717 were John Gledstains of Whitlaw and his brother William Gledstains, in 1719 were John Gledstains of Whitlaw and miller Robert Elliot, in 1720 were John Gledstains of Whitlaw and James Johnston in Whitlaw, in 1722 were Adam Brown 'head-house' and Walter Scott (servant to the Minister), in 1725 were James Johnston and James Leithead, in 1728 were William Grieve and Walter Scott and 1729 were Adam Brown and John Telfer. Given the family forenames, it seems likely that he was ancestor of the 'Pawkie' Patersons. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Jean Shiel. Their son William was baptised in 1731. It is unclear how he was connected to other Patersons. Archibald (18th C.) married Betty Irvine in Wilton Parish in 1735. Their son Thomas was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1738. Archibald (d.bef. 1801) married Janet Scott in Hawick in 1767. His wife was also from Hawick Parish. He is probably the son of William and Isobel Sliman who was baptised in Hawick in 1743. His wife died in 1801, by which time he was already deceased; the death record appears to say 'Jenny Rattles', presumably her nickname. Archibald (d.1799) recorded in the death register in Hawick as 'Auld Archie Patterson Uncle to William Patterson'. He could be the son of gardener Walter who was baptised in Hawick in 1715; in this case his nephew William was probably a son of William and Isobel Sliman. He may also be the Archibald whose wife's mother was buried in Hawick in 1771. Archibald 'Pawkie' (d.1815) Hawick man who farmed at Silverbuthall and lived at West Port. He was father of Robert 'Pawkie Paiterson' (of the song), and was probably the son of James 'Ilka Thursdi' and Helen Ruecastle, who was baptised in 1744. In 1781 he was recorded as a merchant; however, it seems likely he was the 'cadger' of that name who was Cornet in 1771. He is probably the carrier from Hawick who in Selkirk in 1790 complained about non-payment of a bill by John Dunlop. He is probably the Hawick resident who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791 and who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1775 he married Isabel Turnbull, who was from Abbotrule (the marriage being recorded in both parishes); she may have been daughter of miller Robert Turnbull and died in 1816. Their children included: Helen (1775–1855), who married Tom Harkness; Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1777); James (b.1780), also nicknamed 'Pawkie'; Robert (1781–1851), immortalised in the song; and Jane (c.1785–1839), who married M. Cabourne and secondly George Milligan. He was said to have had 2 daughters who were involved with French prisoners of war (so there may have been another in addition to Jane). Ex-Bailie Walter Ruecastle (his uncle) was witness to the 1775 and 1777 baptisms, while Walter Henderson in 1775 and merchant James Dickson were witnesses in 1777. In 1777 he was a witness (along with Walter Ruecastle) for a baptism for James Dickson. The witnesses in 1780 were ex-Bailie Walter Ruecastle and merchant George Turnbull (possibly his wife's brother), while in 1781 they were ex-Bailie Walter Ruecastle and William Turnbull (probably a relative of his wife). His death is recorded in Hawick as 'West Port Called Pauky'. Archibald Hamilton (1748–1813) born in Crailing Parish, he was likely to have been son of Robert and Isabel Armstrong. A family legend says that his people originally came from the Scottish Borders, which fits with his parents both being from Hawick. He moved to England sometime in the 1770s and in 1779 married Ann Parker from Burton in Lonsdale. A bond of £200 was put up by William Hill of Kendal for the marriage. At that time he was living at Park House near Hornby in Melling Parish. Their children included James (b.1781), Jenny (b.1782), Thomas (b.1785), Anne (b.1787), Agnes (b.1790), Archibald (b.1793), John (b.1796), Peggy (b.1798), Allan (b.1801) and William (b.1804). The forenames match closely with those of the Patersons from the Flex area. He died in Caton, Lancaster. Archibald (b.1783) stockingmaker of Kirkton Parish, son of Robert. He was recorded at Horselee in 1841 and Southfieldgate in 1851. He married Agnes Hall and their children included: Agnes (b.1833); George (b.1835); and James (b.c.1838). Agnes and George were baptised in Robertson Parish. Archibald (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Scott and their daughters Betty and Janet were baptised in 1825. Archibald (1800–1840) eldest son of James 'Pawkie'. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Agnes Donaldson in 1834; after his death she secondly married George Robson, and she died in 1887. Their children were: James (b.1835); George Renwick (b.1837); and William Oliver (b.1839). Christopher (1815/6–79) son of carrier James. He was a carter, like his father. In 1841 he was listed as a carrier at the West Port (corresponding to about 9 Loan), living adjacent to his parents. In 1851 he was at about 20 Howegate and in 1861 at 9 Loan again. He married Agnes Chalmers and secondly married Helen Oliver. His children included: Margaret (b.1839); James (b.1842); John (b.c.1847); Robert (b.c.1850); Betsy (b.c.1853); Archibald (b.c.1855); and Christopher (b.c.1858). He died at Weensland Cottages. David (b.c.1800) from Sanquhar, he was a flesher on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He was living at about No. 47 in 1841 and at No. 37 in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Mary and their children included John, David, Elizabeth and James. David 'Davie' (19th/20th C.) captain of the Hawick team that won the 1895–96 Scottish championship. He played at quarter (wing) and also represented Scotland. David 'Davie' (1953/4–) amateur boxing champion and long-time local Councillor. He won the Scottish Flyweight title in 1972. Edward (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He married Christian, daughter of John and Jane Douglas. Their children included: Jean (b.1821); and Joseph (b.1822), who died in infancy. He is probably the 'E. Paterson', merchant of Castleton, who subscribed to 2 copies of William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Elizabeth (1785–1879) daughter of William of Baltimore, and possibly grand-daughter of Robert ('Old Mortality'), she married Jerome Bonaparte (1784–1860). By a strange coincidence, one of the last works of Sir Walter Scott (who immortalised 'Old Mortality') was a monumental biography of Jerome's brother Napoleon. However, despite this story, it seems more likely that his father was originally from Donegal, Ireland, and hence any connection with 'Old Mortality' seems unlikely. Francis (17th/18th C.) tenant in the Flex. He may have been a younger son of Archibald and Helen Allan, but there is no record of a baptism for him. In 1705 (along with William Henderson) he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin, tenant in the Flex. In 1707 he witnessed a baptism for William Henderson, younger in the Flex, and in 1708 he witnessed baptisms for Thomas Boyd, gardener at the Flex (along with Francis Henderson, who was also in the Flex) and for William Henderson, 'younger in Flex'. Also in 1708 he was 'in flexs' when he (along with Walter of Burnflat and Archibald, 'Casier') witnessed a baptism for James Hobkirk, who was 'casier coater' for Walter of Burnflat. His wife was Isobell Renwick and their children included: Isobell (b.1685), probably the Isobell who married Adam Brown 'Young Headhouse' in 1719; Janet (b.1687); Margaret (b.1691); and Anna (b.1695). Walter in Burnflat witnessed one of the baptisms and was probably his father or brother. Archibald, also recorded as tenant in the Flex, may have been another child (based on the names of Archibald's children). Additionally, he may have been father of Helen, who married a different Archibald (the cassayer). Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1758 he hired the Hawick mortcloth. It is unclear how he was related to other Patersons. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In both 1762 and 1766 he witnessed baptisms for wright Walter Scott. He could be the George who married Isobel Tudhope and whose children included: Henry (b.1759); George (b.1761); Robert (b.1763); and John (b.1767). George (b.1794/5) from Fogo in Berwickshire, he was farmer at Greenbank. In the 1841 census his wife (recorded being born in Nova Scotia) and children were there, but he was visiting Borthwickbrae House at the time. He was at Greenbank in 1851 as farmer of 600 acres, employing 3 people. His children included: Eliza (b.c.1828); George (b.c.1830); and John (b.c.1840). George (1801-73) native of Stichill, near Kelso, son of John and Isabel Tait. He was a shoemaker to trade. He learned to play the fife in the Berwickshire Militia and played in the Drums and Fifes at 46 Common Ridings. He is recorded as a shoemaker journeyman at the Sandbed in 1841, a shoemaker on the Mid Row in 1851 and at 3 Back Row in 1861. He married Margaret Scott and they had children: Isabel (b.c.1830); John (b.c.1833); Jane (or Jeanie, b.1834); Margaret

(b.1837); George (b.1839); Andrew (b.1841); Barbara (b.1841); Eliza (b.c.1848); and Thomas (b.c.1849). George (b.c.1815) baker of 53 (or perhaps 55) High Street, son of baker William. He was listed as a baker and confectioner of the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He married both Elizabeth and Isabella, daughters of grocer Thomas Liddell. His daughter Margaret Davidson carried on the baker's business until she married Andrew Graham (tweed traveller). Her cousin Thomas L. Brydon then took over, later succeeded by Thomas Scott. Helen (b.1775) daughter of Archibald and sister of Robert 'Pawkie'. She married labourer Tam Harkness. It is unclear if she was 'Nellie Harkness' or if that was her daughter. Henry (17th/18th C.) carrier in the Hawick area. He was recorded as servant to the Laird of Falnash in 1700. He was probably related to Walter, who was a gardener for Gideon Scott of Falnash. He was listed as a carrier in Hawick in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom, in 1702 when his son John was baptised, in 1707 when his daughter was baptised and he witnessed a baptism for fellow-carrier William Aitken, younger, in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Rodger, and in a 1709 baptism for his own child. In 1711 and 1713 he was recorded as a carrier when he witnessed baptisms for Walter of Burnflat, who was probably also a relative. In 1714 and 1716 he was recorded as 'tenant in Hawick'. In 1700 he married Bessie Scott and their children included: John (b.1702); John (again, b.1704); Agnes (b.1707); George (b.1709); Henry (b.1711); Mary (b.1716); George (again, b.1718); and Robert (b.1722). Walter (b.1714), with mother's name give as 'Helen Scott' was probably also their child. The witnesses in 1707 were carrier William Aitken, younger, and John Scott 'Souldier', younger, in 1709 were cooper John Turnbull and gardener William Scott, in 1711 were carrier William Aitken, younger, and cooper Walter Scott, in 1714 were Walter of Burnflat and Archibald 'Casaer', in 1716 were Bailie William Laing and mason John Napier, and in 1722 were Robert Scott of Burnhead and Walter Scott of Cockerheugh. He may have been related to William, whose father was gardener and shepherd for Scott of Falnash around the second decade of the 18th century. Henry (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was in Girnwood in 1742. He married Agnes 'Ballainy' in Robertson in 1740. His children included: Mary (b.1742); Jean (b.1745); Walter (b.1748); and

Henry (b.1751). Henry (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Alison Oliver and their children included: Janet (b.1787); Alison (b.1788); George (b.1790); Adam (b.1792); Henry (b.1797); and Robert (b.1799). He could be the weaver in Hawick whose child's death is recorded in 1799. He seems likely to be the father of Bailie John (b.1802/3), in which case he was a 'country weaver', who owned a house at 72 High Street. Henry (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Robertson Parish in 1799. Henry (b.c.1810) agricultural labourer at Pin in Castleton Parish. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835–41 and was also Precentor in Castleton Kirk from at least 1841. His wife was Mary and their children included Robert, Christian, Mary, John and Henry. Henry 'Harry o Burnheid' (d.1850s) a barnman to trade, he used to spend time sitting near a well at Burnhead, popularly named 'Harry's Well'. Known as an odd character who used to collect bits of cord and liked to read difficult passages from the bible. A water-colour portrait of him by Adam Brown is in the Museum. It is possible he was the Henry who married Margaret Hobkirk (from Robertson) in 1799. Henry (1820/1–87) son of John, he was an auctioneer in Hawick. His premises were at 61 High Street. An attendee of the East Bank Kirk, he was apparently the only one to continue standing during prayers and sit during singing, long after the practice was reversed. He married Ann Armstrong, and their children were: John, ironmonger; Alexander, bookmaker; and Robert, also bookmaker. He is buried in the Wellogate. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Runciman and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1636. It is unclear how he was related to other Patersons. James (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. James (17th/18th C.) miller in Hawick. He was recorded as 'miller' in a baptismal record of 1689 and as 'under miller' in Hawick in 1694 when he still had to pay part of his Burgess money. He witnessed baptisms in 1701 for Adam Scott and Janet Paterson (probably his daughter or sister) and in 1702 for flesher John Tudhope. He was 'milner' in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for miller Robert Deans. Probably the same James 'milner' witnessed a baptism for fellow miller Robert Deans in Hawick in 1705. In 1707 he witnessed a baptism for fellow miller Walter Riddell. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for weaver James Beattie in 1707. In 1708 he and Walter

Riddell were 'undermillers' when they witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott wright at Millport and was 'undermiller in Hawick' in 1709 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell (also undermiller in Hawick). He may be the James, brother of Margaret, who in 1702 acted as witness to the baptism of his niece, born posthumously to Gideon Gardner. He married Margaret Wright and their children included: Isobel (b.1687); Margaret (b.1689); and Isobel (again, b.1702). The witnesses in 1689 were Bailie James Scott and John Scott. James 'Duke' (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Manuel in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (d.1782) resident of Hawick Parish. His death record is labelled 'ilka Thursday', which was presumably his nickname (suggesting he may have been a carrier, and hence related to the later carrier of the same name). It is possible he was the James, son of Archibald, born in Hawick in 1719. He may be the James, married to Helen Ruecastle (probably the same as Helen Paterson in some baptismal records), who was probably daughter of Bailie John Ruecastle. Their children included: Archibald (b.1744), probably 'Pawkie'; John (b.1747); Mary (b.1757); Christian (b.1759); William (b.1761), possibly the resident of Silverbuthall; and James (b.1766). The witnesses in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle (probably his father-in-law) and William Scoon, servant to Rev. William Somerville; fellow carrier John Tudhope had a child baptised on the same day. He is probably also the James who witnessed a baptism for baker Walter Ruecastle in 1758. James (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Isobel Ross (probably in 1756) and their children included: Marion (b.1759); Betty (b.1761); Henry (b.1767); and Janet (b.1769). James (d.1778) carpet weaver who died in Hawick. He may be the James who married Ann Scott in 1774, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Southdean Parishes. Alternatively he may be the James who married Ann Coats, with children Andrew (b.1772) and Janet (b.1775) baptised in Hawick. James 'Pawkie' (1780–1858) son of Archibald and Isabella Turnbull. He was brother of Robert, the subject of the song. In his younger days he was an agricultural servant, being at Adderstonelee in 1799 (when he got married). In 1801 he was 'Workman' when listed (right before Robert, probably his brother) on the ballot for the Militia. Later he was a carrier and small-scale farmer in Hawick. He is listed as 'Pauky' in the 1808 and 1810 death records of his infant sons, both called William. In 1837 he was running a cart service to Dumfries, Annan and Langholm every Monday. He may also be the grocer on the Loan listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 9 Loan with his wife and young joiner John Ingles (who was probably his grandson), with his son Christopher living at the same address. In 1851 he was listed on the Loan as farmer of 9 acres. In 1799 in Kirkton Parish he married Margaret (1777–1855), daughter of Archibald Tait and sister of carrier William Tait. Their children were: Archibald (1799–1840); Isabella (1800/1–52), who married John Ingles; Jean (1802/3–63), who married Thomas Sanderson in Melrose; William (d.1808) and William (again, d.1810), who died in infancy; James (b.1809/10); Robert (b.1811/2); and Christopher (b.1814/5). He died at 11 Loan. James (b.c.1780) hind at Pinnacle according to the ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish in 1801. James (b.c.1785) shepherd at Cawfaulds in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1840, with his address changed from Alton to 'Calf-folds'. He married Violet Thomson in 1832 and their children included Margaret and Elizabeth. He may be the widower living at Easter Lilliesleaf in 1851. James (b.c.1790) farmer at Terrona in the Ewes valley. His wife was Margaret and their children included Agnes, James, William, John and Alexander. He seems likely to have been related to the earlier James in Ewes. James (1805/6–54) son of William. He was a farm labourer who lived at Raesknowe. He married Mary Glendinning and their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1836. He was at Raesknowe in 1851, with his son and his mother and was still there in 1851 when described as a widower. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Hall and their son John was baptised in 1842. James (b.1820/1) from Ewes, he was farmer at Chapelhill in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farming 950 acres and employing 7 people. He also had a governess and 5 domestic servants. His wife was Jessie and their children included Violet, George, John T., James, William and Margaret B. James (19th C.) cattle salesman in Hawick. He had a villa erected for him on Wilton Hill in about 1880. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1640 he was accused by the Kirk Session of setting up 'stouks' of corn on the Sabbath. He is probably the John whose children, baptised in Ashkirk, included Thomas (b.1633) and Mungo (b.1636). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Dunlop, with their daughter Janet baptised in 1650. Probably the same John was later married to Helen Morrison, with further children (baptised in Ashkirk): Thomas (b.1656); John (b.1660); and Frances (b.1662). The witnesses in 1656 were Walter and William Dunlop. His wife's name was recorded as 'Issbell' in 1660. John (d.c.1683) tenant in Parkhill when his will was recorded in 1683. It is unclear if this was the local Parkhill or another one in the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh and Selkirk. John (1632–1708) youngest son of John, Bishop of Ross, he studied in Aberdeen and St. Andrews and then taught at St. Leonard's College. He succeeded his father at Ellon in 1660, then became minister at the Tron Kirk and later the High Kirk, before becoming Bishop of Galloway in 1674, and then Bishop of Edinburgh in 1679. In 1687 he was appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow, as successor to Alexander Cairncross. He was thus the last Archbishop of Glasgow, with Bishops being continued later by the Episcopalian and Roman Catholic Churches. He was disliked by many for his hard line on religious intolerance. At the Revolution he sided with James II and was deprived when Episcopacy was abolished in 1691. Afterwards he spent several years in England, but returned to Edinburgh by 1702 and petitioned for allowances to be made for relief of poor clergymen (including apparently himself). He died in Edinburgh and was buried at Holyrood. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Marion Craw, Their unnamed son was baptised in 1673. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In 1709 he married Margaret Goodfellow in Kirkton Parish. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1723 as a 'casaer' when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Archibald, who was also a road-layer. He was surely a relative of Archibald, perhaps his brother. John (18th C.) tenant in Langhope in 1785 when his servant was involved in a legal case in Selkirk. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Junior Sinton Northmains' in 1797 on the list of men of Ashkirk Parish balloted to serve in the Militia. His name appears again in 1798 and in early 1799 he paid £10 to avoid serving. His payment of the penalty was confirmed on the amended list of 1799. John (b.c.1800) shoemaker who lived on the Kirkwynd in 1841. His wife was Isabel and their children included Walter and William. The death of his infant son is recorded in 1822. Bailie John (1802/3–1873) born where the Store was later located, son of a country weaver, he started in that trade himself, then became a warper with William Watson's. Based on the names of his children, his father was probably Henry and his mother Alison Oliver. He was apparently the first man in Hawick to warp tartans and shawls, and the first to send pieces of woven cloth to London in about 1830. He became a foreman with Watson's. In 1848 he was appointed as one of the trustees of the firm, following the death of William Lindsay Watson in 1849. He acted as manager until Watson's sons Robert F. and Thomas L. were old enough to take over in 1864; during this time the firm's workforce increased dramatically. He was also responsible for bringing an old bell from Gala to act as the factory bell at Dangerfield Mills. He was on the Town Council and was a Magistrate during the 1850s. Additionally in the 1850s he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Hawick District. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as manager of W. Watson & Sons. He had the honour of presenting the harp to Henry Scott Riddell on behalf of the Town in 1859 and also chaired the dinner in the Tower Hotel at the centenary Burns night. He was heavily involved in the restructuring of Hawick's Town Council in 1861. He was also an Elder in the East Bank Kirk for many years. He owned the building at 72 High Street, where he lived and was recorded there on the 1841, 1851 and 1861 censuses. Probably his father was the Paterson shown at about 72 High Street on Wood's 1824 map. He lived on the same part of High Street for all except the last few years of his life. In 1866 he went into manufacturing for himself, moving to Galashiels, based at Rosebank Mill. He married Mary Telfer, who died in 1861, aged 60. Their children included: Mary (b.1826); Henry (b.1827); Alison Hoy (b.1831), who married Andrew Turnbull; Robert Telfer (b.1833); John (b.1835); Agnes (b.1837); Adam (b.1838); and Jemima (b.1843). He died in Galashiels and his buried in the Heritors' Area of Wellogate Cemetery. A photograph of him exists. John (b.1820s) son of manufacturer John. He had an ironmonger's shop at 60 High Street (which was later Sharp the tobacconist), and lived at 57 High Street. In 1863 he donated to the Museum the cast of a bronze spear-head he made himself. He married Mary Telfer, who died in 1862. Their children were: Agnes, who died age 23; Robert, moved to Melbourne; John, shopkeeper; and Henry, auctioneer. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. John (19th/20th C.) son of auctioneer Henry. He had an ironmonger's shop at 21 High Street, taking over from a Mr. Buckham. He married Alison Waldie. It is possible that his family's premises were those labelled 'Paterson' at 25 (not 21) High Street on Wood's 1824 map. John (19th/20th C.) resident of Edinburgh. James Sinton, in his Hawick-related bibliography of 1908, thanks him for the use of 'some of the rarer volumes in his library, which contains one of the finest collections of Hawick-printed books extant'. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (20th C.) actuary with the Hawick Savings Bank, he also acted as Treasurer for St. George's Kirk from 1935. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Blackleemouth according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Margaret 'Peggy' (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer's shop at 178 Weensland Road in the mid-1900s. Michael (16th/17th C.) said to have owned the lands at 'Haggishaa' in the distant past (as recounted by Robert Wilson). If real, he was presumably an ancestor of Robert 'Old Mortality'. He is said to have been a generous host and a great benefactor of St. Mary's Kirk. On one occasion he apparently entertained those associated with Hawick Kirk, serving a 3-foot diameter haggis, the pin of which was used as a spoke to mend Hawick Mill and the skin used for the Town drum. This is connected with the name 'Haggishaa', and there is probably no truth to the story other than the family connection with the land there. It is suggested that a version of the story was told to Robert Burns by his friend Gavin Turnbull (whose family was from Hawick), inspiring the lines 'Your pin wad help to mend a mill In time o' need'. Mungo (17th C.) married Manie Inglis in Ashkirk Parish in 1631. Mungo (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. Raey (1944/5-) born in Hawick and educated in Denholm, he has been a lifelong farm-worker. He spent 25 years at Newton farm and then worked at Deanfoot farm. In 2020 he was noted for having brought in his 60th harvest. Robert (15th/16th C.) resident of 'langcluch' recorded in 1502. This may have been the farm of similar name on the Allan Water. Along with John Winthrobe and James 'aronyk', he had 60 sheep stolen by Patrick Scott in Harwoodhill. His surname was written 'patonesone'. Robert (17th C.) married Margaret Robson in Ashkirk Parish in 1643. Robert (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1651 for John Stewart. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism in 1656 for

Archibald, who was surely a close relative. Also in 1656 he and William (probably another relative) witnessed a baptism for George Heatley and Janet Allan. He is probably the Robert who, along with the same William, witnessed a baptism in 1654 for Archibald and Helen 'Haire'. It seems likely that he, William and Archibald are the men recorded as 'communicants' at Borthwickshiels in 1650; one possibility is that he was father of Archibald and William, with his wife perhaps being the Malie Thomson recorded after him in 1650. Robert (d.1682/3) resident of Hawick Parish. He had a child Marion with Margaret Elliot in 1683, with witnesses William Purdom and William Elliot. The baptism is marked both 'for:' and 'posthumous', presumably meaning that the child was conceived illegitimately and that he was deceased before the baptism. One possibility is that he was the son of Archibald baptised in Hawick in 1654 and brother of Walter who later had children with Margaret Elliot (although whether the same woman is unknown). Robert (17th C.) tenant in Birkhill when the will of his wife Margaret Turnbull was recorded in 1685. It is unclear if this was the Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on another one. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'indweller in Falahill at Reaperlaw' in 1689 when he had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk. He presumably lived at Raperlaw. It is possible he is the Robert whose widow Isobel Wright had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1792 (dealt with by Stephen Turnbull in Minto Cleuch). Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Clerk and their son William was baptised in 1691. The witnesses were James Neil and John Robson. Robert (17th C.) resident at Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert 'Old Mortality' (1715/6–1801) born at Burnflat, son of Walter and Margaret Scott (also known as Helen). Note that there are other claims that he was born at Closeburn; however, his family were from Hawick and he was certainly christened and grew up there. The year of his birth is uncertain, although the record of his baptis record is clear (and there was also a brother of the same name born in 1713, who presumably died in infancy). The baptismal witnesses were Walter Scott (Beadle in Hawick, who may have been related to his mother) and gardener Walter (who may have been cousin or other relative of his father). He moved to Dumfriesshire at age 13, where he was apprenticed as a stone-mason, joining his brother Francis at Corncockle Quarry, near Templand. In

1743 or 1744 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Gray, gardener to Sir John Jardine; she was cook-maid to the owner of the quarry, Sir Thomas Kirkpatrick. He then leased a quarry at Gatelawbrig from the Duke of Queensberry, and become a stone-mason and quarrier. His house was plundered by retreating Jacobites in 1745, and he was taken prisoner. Already a pronounced Cameronian, he became obsessed with placing tombstones over the graves of Covenanter martyrs, and was thus given his nickname. He often travelled for work and in 1758 he left his wife and children for the next 10 years, although when his son Walter went off to find him in 1759, he joined his father as a stone-cutter. Walter was the 2nd son, and his own eldest son, Nathaniel (hence grandson of 'Old Mortality'), was minister at Galashiels. His other children were John (who became a sailor and emigrated to America), Robert junior, Margaret and Janet. He returned to his family at Gatelawbrig in 1768, and they moved to Balmaclellan in Kirkcudbright. His wife worked there as a teacher to support the family, while he travelled the country on his pony, erecting and cleaning stones. She died in 1785 (aged 59), and a plaque in Balmaclellan marks where they lived. He met Walter Scott in 1793 in a graveyard in north-east Scotland. This meeting was fictionalised in the opening chapter of Scott's 'The Tale of Old Mortality' (1816), and helped inspire the novel. He died on the high road near Lockerbie, collapsing next to his pony at Bankend in Caerlaverock, and not recovering. The precise date of his death and place of his burial are uncertain. A memorial tombstone was erected by Scott's publisher in 1869 at Bankend of Caerlaverock Churchyard. There are 3 copies of a statue of him by John Currie (two of which also include his pony), which are in Balmaclellan, at Dumfries Observatory Museum and at Newton Stewart Museum. There is another statue of him in Laurel Hill Cemetery in Philadelphia. A plaque marked his birthplace in Hawick, erected in 1897, but the dilapidated cottage at 'Hagishaa' was demolished following a fire in 1991 (the plaques are now in storage). In addition the Museum holds a pair of his spectacles. Paterson Gardens was named after him in 2006. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was at Town o' Rule in 1739. His children probably included Agnes (b.1739), Isobel (b.1744), James (b.1748), Mary (b.1753), Thomas (b.1756) and Robert (b.1760). Robert (18th C.) married Jean Turnbull in Ashkirk Parish in 1742. His forename is recorded as 'Roben'. Robert (b.1725) son of Archibald and Mary Rutherford. He was born in Hawick, but moved to Crailing Parish. He married Isabel Armstrong, who was probably from Jedburgh. Their children included: Jean (b.1743); Margaret (b.1744); Agnes (b.1746); Archibald Hamilton (b.1748), who probably moved to England; and Robert John (b.1752). Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1760 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Robert Miller. It is unclear how he was related to other Patersons. Robert (18th C.) cooper in Hawick Parish. In 1760 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, with Walter Scott from Newbigging as the other witness. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Fairbairn in Hawick in 1775 and their children included: Walter (b.1776); Robert (b.1777); William (b.1779); George (b.1780); Archibald (b.1783); Robert (again, b.1788); and James (b.1791), who appears to have died in 1820 (the record inserted at the bottom of the 1791 Kirkton baptismal page). George and Archibald were baptised in Kirkton Parish and the rest in Hawick. Note that according to the baptismal records there were 7 sons and no daughters. Robert 'Pawkie' (1781–1858) local man, immortalised in the words of the humorous song by 'Soapy' Ballantyne. His father Archibald had farmed land at 'Sillerbithaa' (and was also 'Pawky'), with his mother being Isabel Turnbull. He lived at 9 Loan and his descendants farmed fields near there. He had 4 sisters: Nellie, who married Tam Harkness, and whose daughter Hannah married Charles Gray Laidlaw; Jane, who had a child to a prisoner called Cabourne, this daughter marrying toy merchant and grocer David S. Park, and secondly married George Milligan and was the mother of Provost Milligan; and another who married a French prisoner of war, who is traditionally said to have been a Bonaparte (although this is hardly credible), returning to France where he obtained a divorce and remarried. He is probably the 'Workman' in Hawick on the ballot (right after James, probably his brother) for the Militia in Hawick in 1801. Probably the same Robert, described as a 'farmer or carter, then and now or lately residing in the West Port', was one of the Tory supporters who was stripped almost naked and beaten up by the Radical mob near the Tower Knowe at the 1837 election. He was cut in the thigh, but escaped into the house of some Turnbells on Silver Street, and was found hiding under the bed. It was said that his unpopularity arose from his having switched his political allegiance. On his way down to the inquiry in London, he is supposed to have said on the ship 'there's naethin but a fir deal atween us an eternity', and asked the Captain to sail close to the edge – 'He's been away this month an' mair, At Lon'on Town, a witness there, Wi' Tully, Paterson, and Kennedy, An scores of ithers that are ready ...' [RDW]. He was recorded on the 1841 and 1851 censuses at about 9 Loan and farmed 16 acres. He was unmarried in 1851, but in 1855 married Helen Leithead (b.c.1825) in Hawick and they had children John (b.1853) and Archibald (b.1855). In 1861 his widow and 2 sons were still living at 9 Loan. He was buried in Wilton Kirkyard. Robert (b.1781/2) born in Wilton Parish, he was a soldier and agricultural labourer. It is possible he was the Robert listed as a servant at Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. In 1841 he was an Army Pensioner at Wauchope and in 1851 was listed as both Chelsea Pensioner and labourer. He married Mary Turnbull in Hobkirk Parish in 1821. His widow was still living at Wauchope Cottages in 1861. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was listed in 1835 as a gardener living at Roadside. Robert (19th C.) described being 'in Broadlee' in Castleton Parish in 1832 when he was charged with 'the sin of fornication' with Helen Thomson. Robert (b.1823/4) born in Wilton Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. He was living at Hassendeanbank in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Elizabeth, Christina, James and John. Robert Telfer 'Moose' (1866–1907) son of Henry and Ann Armstrong. He was a 'turf commission agent' (i.e. bookie) who moved to Leeds. His nickname came from a discoloured patch on his cheek. He was a member of St. Cuthbert's choir while in Hawick, and was a well known singer at Colour Bussings and other events. He was the first singer of the songs 'Up wi' the Banner', 'Hawick' and 'I Like Auld Hawick the Best'. He was the first singer of 'Up wi' the Banner' at the Colour Bussing of 1887, when it was sung to the tune of 'Hail to the Chief', and he also debuted the new tune at the 1888 Colour Bussing. He is buried in the Wellogate. Rev. Stuart Maxwell 'Max' (1937–2015) born in Mansfield, Nottinghamshire, he was educated at Kelham College and Lichfield Theological College and was ordained in 1960. He was with churches in Derbyshire before coming to Hawick as Priest-in-Charge of St. Cuthbert's in 1992. He was Rector from 1995. He also spent some time working for the Guardian and Observer newspapers. His wife was Margaret. He retired to Inverurie. Thomas (15th C.) listed as 'Thomas Patonsoun' among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. Probably the same 'Thome Patonson' is listed among many Rutherfords and others who had their fines compounded in 1501 by Walter Ker of Cessford and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included Isobel (b.1634), William (b.1639) and Thomas (b.1642). He may be the Thomas who married 'Issobell Duntone' in Ashkirk in 1631. Thomas (17th C.) married Bessie Veitch in Ashkirk Parish in 1645. Thomas (17th C.) married Isobel Nichol in Ashkirk Parish in 1652. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Legerwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1706. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Kedie, possibly in 1720 (although the bride's name is not given) and their children included: Janet (b.1723); William (b.1726); and Agnes (b.1731). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Gibson in 1772 and their children included: Janet (b.1773); Mary (b.1775); and Margaret (b.1778). Thomas (b.c.1770s) resident of Synton North Mains according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Rev. Thomas W. (19th/20th C.) minister at Robertson Free Kirk ('the Snoot Kirk') 1889–1900. Walter of Burnflat (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1689 when his daughter was baptised in Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Elliot and the witnesses were Patricke Briggs and James Elliot (perhaps related to his wife). He was presumably either father of Walter (and hence grandfather of 'Old Mortality') or the father of 'Old Mortality' and he had an earlier marriage. He could be the Walter in Burnflat who witnessed a baptism for Francis in 1687. He may have been the son of Archibald born in Hawick in 1656 and perhaps brother of Robert. Note that Robert had a posthumous daughter with a Margaret Elliot in 1683; it is unclear if this was the same woman, but it is possible that Robert was his brother and he married his brother's former partner. Walter (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. It is unclear who his parents were, but perhaps he was son of William and Agnes Allan. He was gardener for Gideon Scott of Falnash for 18 years, living at Fenwick and also farming Fenwick, Alton Croft and part of Goldielands. In 1704 he was recorded as 'Gardner in fennick' and in 1707 as 'gardener in Fennick'. In 1714 he (and Walter of Burnflat) witnessed a baptism for roadlayer Archibald. In 1715 he was 'gardner to Mr Robert Cunningham our Minister'. In 1716 he witnessed the baptism of Robert 'Old Mortality', son of Walter of Burnflat (who may thus have been his cousin or other relative). In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for an Anderson who was a weaver in Burnflat. His children (perhaps from a first marriage) included William (b.1694/5), who married Isobel Sliman in 1727. He married Helen Marshall and their children included: Walter (b.1701), who married Isabell Glendinning in 1726; Gideon (b.1704), presumably named after his employer; John (b.1707); and Archibald (b.1715). The witnesses in 1704 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw, in 1707 were Gideon Scott of Falnash (again) and Bailie James Deans and in 1715 were Archibald 'casaer in Flexs' and Henry Orrock. Note that he was having children in Hawick Parish at the same time as Walter of Burnflat (to whom he was probably related, perhaps as a cousin), making it easy to confuse them. Walter of Burnflat (17th/18th C.) father of Robert, 'Old Mortality'. He acquired Burnflat from his own father in 1688. He is recorded being 'of Burnflat' in baptismal records of 1700, 1706, 1707, 1708 and 1711. In 1707 he witnessed a baptism for 'Casier' Archibald, who was probably a relative; he is probably the Walter who witnessed another baptism for the same man in 1710 and in 1714 (along with another Walter). His lands in the Parish of Hawick were valued at £40 Scots in 1710. He was recorded as a heritor of Hawick Parish in 1711. In 1713 he made a request to the Bailies and Council that the boundary between his land at Burnflat and the Common be marked out; it is stated that there were 'seventeen march stones set along the march'. He married Margaret (also sometimes known as Helen) Scott and they had at least 8 children, with perhaps only Bessie, Francis and Robert surviving to adulthood. Their children included: Bessie (b.c.1698), who married John Ruecastle; Helen (b.1700); John (b.1703); Francis (b.1706); Walter (b.1708); John (again, b.1711); Robert 'Old Mortality' (b.1713); and Robert (again, b.1716). There is no baptismal record for Bessie, but in her 1719 marriage record her father is clearly Walter of Burnflat. He could be the Walter of Burnflat whose son Walter was baptised in 1695, with witnesses John and Thomas Waugh. The baptismal witnesses in 1700 were John Elliot in Nether Southfield and William Henderson in Flex, in 1706 were William Henderon in Flex and Bailie George Martin, in 1711 were carrier Henry (probably a relative) and merchant John Graham, in 1713 were John Scott ('souldier', possibly related to his wife) and Henry Paterson, and in 1716 were Walter Scott 'beddel in Hawick' (possibly related to his wife) and gardener Walter Paterson (perhaps a cousin or similar relative). He is probably the Walter 'of Burnflat' who witnessed a baptism in 1725 (for William Stoddart), along with 'Robert Paterson there' (who may have been a brother, since his son Robert would have been too young to be a witness). He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for the other Walter in Hawick in 1728. Either he or a son Walter is the former Laird of Burnflat mentioned in evidence given in 1767 regarding the former use of the Common; he held 'a quarter of land in Hawick' and kept more than 100 sheep, supported by pasturing them on the Common. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included Marion (b.1703). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, son of gardener Walter. In 1726 he married Isobel Glendinning and their children included Walter (b.1728). The witnesses in 1728 were Bailie Purdom and Walter (probably of Burnflat). He could be the Walter, son of Walter, baptised in Hawick in 1695. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Telford and their children included Margaret (b.1732) and William (b.1732). He could be the deceased Walter whose son William died in Hawick in 1782. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1735). Walter (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His wife was Janet Brown and their unnamed son was baptised in 1747. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1780. He married Nelly Laidlaw and their children included Janet (b.1780), with his wife acting as sponsor for the baptism in Robertson; this suggests that his wife was from Robertson, but he was not. Walter (18th C.) married Jane 'Bamer' in Ashkirk Parish in 1776. Walter (18th/19th C.) slater at Turn in Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Walter (b.1817/8) born in Kirkton Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 10 acres at 'Hankimshaugh', which was another name for Hummelknowehaugh. He married Mary Amos and their children included Mary, William, Walter, Isabella, Ann and John.

William (16th C.) recorded as being 'in Cruik' when he witnessed a Melrose Abbey charter relating to the lands of Crook in 1569. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet 'Faire' and their children included: Margaret (b.1636); Robert (b.1639); and Marion (b.1641). The witnesses in 1639 were James and David Scott. William (17th C.) recorded in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Allan and their children included: Robert (b.1656); and Bessie (b.1673). In 1656 he and Robert (surely a close relative) witnessed a baptism for George Heatley and Janet Allan (who may have been his sister-in-law). Probably along with the same Robert he witnessed a baptism in 1654 for Archibald and Helen Heatley. It seems likely that he, William and Archibald are all recorded as 'communicants' at Borthwickshiels in 1650. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Ruecastle and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1671. He could be the same man as the miller in Hawick. He could also be the William whose daughter Janet married Adam Ruecastle. William (17th C.) referred to as 'in Hawick' in 1681 when he rented Hawick Mill from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was Hawick's miller for at least 1682-87. He could be the William who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694 and the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the William recorded in 1692 when 'in a process of marching' it was decided by the Town Council that he 'may have the better and mair free passage with packs of wool, and leading out of his mucke' [BR1692]. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Hamilton in Hawick in 1673 and another for John Scott in 1699. He may be the William, heritor in Hawick, who was listed in 1680 among local men convicted for being Covenanters (although not appearing in court), the accusations including attacking 'the Tower and Castle of Hawick'. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Janet 'Heutsone' and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1687. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1693. William (17th C.) listed at Highchesters in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1705. William (b.1694/5) son of Walter, he was a gardener and Burgess of Hawick. His father was gardener to Gideon Scott of Falnash for 18 years, living at Fenwick, and also acting as shepherd for the farms of Fenwick and half of Goldielands and Alton Croft. He gave evidence in the court case regarding the Common in 1767, having himself acted as cattle herd for Scott of Falnash's animals for 10 years; he was at that time described as married and on the Poor Roll of Hawick. In 1727 in Hawick he married Isobel, daughter of John Sliman. Their children included: Walter (b.1728); John (b.1739); and Archibald (b.1743). He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Scott in 1763. The witnesses in 1728 were John Turnbull and shoemaker John Scott and in 1743 were saddler Francis Ruecastle and merchant John Cavers. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Chisholme in 1731 when his son William was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk. He married Helen Donaldson and their son Andrew was baptised in 1748. William (18th C.) said by James Wilson to have been nephew of Robert 'Old Mortality' and to have sold the family property of Burnflat in 1753. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Hogg and their children included: William (b.1769); and Janet (b.1771). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1777 he was living at Orchard. His children included Adam (b.1767) and Agnes (b.1777). William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1781. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Silverbuthall. His son William died in 1829. He was probably related to Archibald, who farmed at Silverbuthall (possibly his brother, and hence the William, son of James, born in 1761). William (1769/70–1837) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Helen Armstrong in Hawick in 1798; she died in Hawick in 1856, aged 85. In 1841 and 1851 his widow was living with their son James at Raesknowe. His children included James (1805/6–54) and Margaret (1803/4–18). He died at Branxholme Braes and is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (1799/1800–1875), who is noticed on the reverse of the same gravestone, was probably also his son. William (b.c.1770s) wright at Sandyhaugh according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Probably the same William was listed as a joiner at Firknow on the 1801 Militia ballot for Ashkirk Parish. William (b.c.1780) baker in Hawick and Bailie in the 1820s and 30s. He was recorded as a baker on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. His shop was on the High Street, around No. 62, and he was also a tenant farmer of Winnington Rig. He was one of the 18 founders of the Relief (Al-lars) Kirk in Hawick, and one of the first elders. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He presided at the 1832 Reform Bill celebrations and made the often quoted statement 'It was huz and Mainchester that carried the Reform Bill' [T]. He was listed as a High Street baker on Pigot's 1837 directory and was there on the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He married Agnes Rutherford and their children included: Robert (b.1803); William (b.1804); Walter (b.1806); Helen (b.1808); Isabella (b.1811); Agnes (b.1813); George (b.1815), also a baker; Susan (b.1817); and John (b.1821). An unnamed child of his died in 1811. William (1799/1800–1875) labourer living at Newmill Damfoot. He was probably son of William and Helen Armstrong. He married Ann Elliot, who died in 1855, aged 56. Their children included: Elizabeth; John (b.1830); Adam; and Simon. He and his wife are buried in Borthwick Waas. William (b.1804/5) farm steward at Stouslie. In 1835 he was listed as a labourer at Leaheads, with the entry changed to be farm servant at Stouslie in 1840, and he was farm steward at Stouslie by 1841. He married Isabella Deans and their children included: Isabella (b.1827), baptised in Kirkton; Agnes (b.1830), baptised in Wilton, who married Daniel Fisher; and Margaret (b.1840), also baptised in Wilton. William (19th C.) member of Hawick Free Kirk. He married Elizabeth Howison and their son William was baptised in 1836. Rev. William (1846–1932) born in Glasgow, he was educated at Glasgow University and Glasgow Evangelical Union Hall. He became evangelical preacher at Hindpool Road, Barrow-in-Furness 1874–78. He was then at Adelphi Chapel, Hackney Road, Middlesex. In 1888 he moved to Newcastleton Congregational Church, where he remained for about 2 years. He was then at Forfar. Rev. William (1840–1906) from Torthorwald in Dumfriesshire, he was educated at the University of Edinburgh. He became licentiate at Saughtree Kirk 1866–70. He was the first person to minister to the congregation there. He is recorded residing at Ovenshank in 1868. He was minister at Ancrum and Longnewton 1870–1906. He married Susan Crow Noble and their children were William, Margaret Crow, Dr. Norman and James (formerly spelled 'Pater-sone', 'Pateronne', 'Patersoun', 'Patterson', 'Petersoun', etc., as well as sometimes 'Patonsone').

Paiterson-Broon (pi'-ur-sin-broon, paw'-ur-sin-brown) n. (Paterson-Brown) Dr. June, C.B.E., nee Garden (1932–2009) born and bred in Edinburgh, her father was Wing Cmdr. Thomas Garden. She studied medicine at Edinburgh University, graduating in 1955. In 1957 she married Peter and the couple moved to Hawick. She worked as a medical officer in the Hawick Family Planning and Well Woman Clinics and did much to promote family planning in the Borders, at a time when the topic was an extremely sensitive one. She was long involved with the Girl Guide movement, becoming Hawick District Commissioner, Roxburghshire County Commissioner, Scottish Chief Commissioner and finally Chief Commissioner for the U.K. and Commonwealth. In 1989 she was given the highest award in Guiding, the Silver Fish, in recognition of her 30 years of service. She also chaired or served on many committees involving children, youth and education. She was made Lord-Lieutenant of Roxburgh, Ettrick and Lauderdale in 1988, the first woman appointed to such a position in Scotland. She was named as the Tweeddale Press Group's 'Man of the Year' in the 1980s and in 1991 was awarded the C.B.E. Dr. Peter N. (??–) from Edinburgh, his father was Consulting Surgeon at the Royal Infirmary. He was educated at Edinburgh University, graduating in 1955. He moved to Hawick in 1957 as a G.P., arriving in the midst of a flu epidemic. He continued in practice in Hawick until he retired in 1991. He became Medical Officer for the Roxburgh Branch of the Red Cross, Director of the Children's Hospice, Vice-President of R.E.A.C.T., and Honorary Medical Advisor of the Red Cross in Scotland. His first aid booklet 'A Matter of Life or Death' (1975, 1980) sold hundreds of thousands of copies.

Paiterson Gairdens (pi'-ur-sin-gār-dinz) n. Paterson Gardens, a street built at Burnflat near the Vertish Hill. The houses were erected in 2006 and named after 'Old Mortality' whose dilapidated birthplace was demolished to make room for the new buildings. Some stones from the old building were built into the pillars at the entrance to the new housing area and plaques describing the connection to Old Mortality were unveiled there in 2016.

Paiterson's Haa (pi'-ur-sinz-haw) n. Paterson's Hall, former farmstead in the Borthwick valley. It is marked on the south bank of the Borthwick Water, north of Eilrig.

paitrick (pāt-rik) n., arch. a partridge – 'Ye maukins a' may take yer rest, Ye paitreiks needna

pake (pāk) n., arch. a disreputable person, especially a woman, usually with a qualifying adjective – 'A cow is called an 'auld pake'; a niggardly woman, a 'hard pake' [JoJ].

Palace Waas (paw-lis-wawz) n. popular name for an area in Ashkirk Glebe, about 250 yards south of Ashkirk Kirk, now within the golf course. This was the site of ruins, which were still visible in the late 18th century and may have been the ancient palace of the Bishops of Glasgow. Alexander Scott 'called of Paliss' is recorded in Selkirk documents in the period 1532–35; he was son of David Scott, Vicar of Ashkirk, who may have previously held these lands. Robert Scott 'of Paleis' was deceased in 1579 when his widow Isabel Donald's inventory was recorded. Walter Scott was there in 1580. An agreement was witnessed for the Scotts of Blindhaugh there in 1581. 'Johnne Scott of the Palice', servitor of George Scott of Synton is recorded in 1587, suggesting the place name (but presumably no longer the palace) still existed at that time. There is now no evidence of any structure in this location. A mediæval ewer was found here in about 1840 when the glebe lands were being ploughed (it is 'Paleis Wallis' in 1580 in the Walter Mason Collection).

the Palais (thu-paw-lā) n. popular name for the 'Palais de Danse', part of the Odeon theatre complex, off the arcade. It was a popular dance venue in the 1940s and 50s – 'Ee'd Stan Reid's and the Palais anaw ...' [AY].

Palais de Danse (paw-lā-di-dawns) n. official name of the Palais.

pale (pāl) n., arch. a pall, mortcloth – 'The minister acquainted the elders that he had received a pale from Mr Elliot, merchant in London ...' [1720], '... my promise of sending you a velvat pale for the benefite of the poor of Hawick paroch' [PR1720] (also spelled 'pail').

palin (pā-lin) n. a fence post, fence – 'hei aye tore the bottoms o his breeks climmin the palins', 'a lot o the ern palins were pulled doon ti help the War effort', 'Signed an account for paling sawn by Robert Smith for Billerwell and Town O' Rule' [RG], 'Compared wi' a nibbie, a walkin'-stick's nea better than a palin'-stob' [DH].

palley (paw-lee) adj., arch. weak, emaciated, delicate – 'A palley bairn' [GW], feeble, weak because of injury – 'A palley hand' [GW], applied to a merchant dealing with weakling lambs, n., arch.

a weak or inferior lamb (also written ‘pallie’ and ‘paulie’).

palley-walley (paw-lee-waw-lee) adj., arch. delicate, sickly in appearance, in feeble health (in [HNe1954]).

palliest (paw-lee-ist) adj., arch. weakest, feeblest, most listless – ‘The caller air ud seek roses back ti the chafts o the palliest peenge’ [ECS].

pallion (paw-lee-in) n., poet. a pavillion, military tent – ‘With other clans I canna tell; Because our warning was not wide, this our folk has tane the Fell, And planted pallions there to bide’ [CPM].

pally wi (paw-lee-wi) adj. friendly with, chummy – ‘... hei was pally wi Jock the Dog it the Schuil’ [IWL].

palmer (pawm-ur) n., poet. a tramp, shabbily-dressed person – ‘A palmer up the path pursued, His step was slow and weary ...’ [JTe].

palm on (pawm-ōn) v., arch. to impose upon, foist on – ‘Howt! Thay’ve duist paamd a lot o ruibbish on ti ee’ [ECS], ‘Thay didna want er, bit she paamd hersul on ti thum’ [ECS].

Palmer (paw-mur) n. John (17th/18th C.) servant at Branhholme. In 1719 in Hawick he married Helen Cavers. Their daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick in 1720. Walter (16th C.) listed among people that were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branhholme, when he died in 1552. He is recorded as ‘Waltero Palmer in Hawik’ and he was owed the large sum of 7 pounds and 6 pence. William (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who were debtors to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He owed 2 bolls of oats and was probably from the Ashkirk area. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Catherine (or Janet) Douglas and their children included: Margaret (b.1649); and John (b.1651). William (17th C.) resident of the Hassendean area. He witnessed a baptism for George Scott in Easter Groundistone in 1688. He married Janet Aitchison in Robertson Parish in 1688. He is probably the William ‘Balmer’ whose wife had the same name and whose daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Ashkirk in 1689. In 1694 he was ‘pamer’ when his son William was baptised in Ashkirk, with witnesses Andrew Fletcher and Thomas Wallace. He had a further child, Janet (b.1697), also baptised in Ashkirk. William (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1707 as Town Herd when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were smith Thomas Oliver and weaver Mungo Swan.

Palmer-Douglas (paw-mur-dug-lis) n. Archibald (1880–1947) elder son of Mary and Edward. He was the heir of Cavers, but pre-deceased his mother. He unveiled the Deanbrae War Memorial in 1920. During his time the Cavers estate was reduced by about half, with farms at Denholm and Spittal being sold off. He lived at Lidgard. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1920 he married Mary Kuehn. His children were: James Malcolm (1922–2013), who succeeded; Angela Mary (b.1924); and John Aidan (b.1929). In 1947 his wife and children gifted 2 silver communion plates to Cavers Kirk in his meomory. Capt. Edward, J.P., D.L. (1836–1933) originally from Sussex, he was youngest son of Rev. George Palmer of Sullington in Sussex. He served with the Rifle Brigade. In 1879 he married Mary Malcolm who became heiress of Cavers and so he changed his surname. He devoted efforts to improving the Cavers estate, which had been neglected for several generations. This included partly rebuilding the mansion house. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1883, formed the Jedforest Hounds in 1884 and was involved with the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He served as Master of the Jedforest Hounds until 1885. He rode in the 1891 Common Riding. He also gave the small piece of ground for the Hornshole Monument. He served as J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as being Deputy Lieutenant and a County Councillor. He had a son, Archibald (b.1880) who pre-deceased his mother and another son, Malcolm (b.1882). James Malcolm (1922–2013) son of Archibald and grandson of Mary and Edward, the first Palmer-Douglasses. When he inherited the Cavers estate it consisted of about 5,000 acres. Not a good estate manager, the family moved into Midgard and removed the roof from Cavers House to save tax in the 1950s. The family then moved to the Eskdalemuir area. He sold off the last 90 acres of the Cavers estate in 1975. He then moved to Caithness, but later took up the cause to preserve Cavers Kirk. He had 3 wives, having children Helen and Nigel to his first wife, Dorothy Margaret Campbell. He also had children Stephen and Frances to his second wife, Dorothy Smith. He was buried in the family lair at Cavers Old Kirk. Mary Douglas nee Malcom (1858/9–1949) daughter of Mary Douglas and William Elphinstone Malcolm of Burnfoot in Eskdale. She succeeded as Laird of Cavers when her uncle James died without male issue in 1878. In 1879 she married Capt. Edward Palmer from Sussex and they adopted the double-barrelled name. The Cavers Lairdship was inherited by James Malcolm, who was son of her son Archibald. She had another son Malcolm, who died aged 19 in 1902. She had liferent of properties that had been owned by her father, after his death in 1907. Many documents relating to her financial and legal matters are in the archives of the National Library of Scotland. Stephen son of James, he still lives locally, and helped organise the first Hawick Chess Congress in 1992 (also written 'Palmer Douglas').

pan-loaf (pawn-lōf) adj. having a posh accent, so called because 'pan loafs' were traditionally more expensive than 'plain loafs' – 'Is ei gaun ti dae the speech in Hawick or wull ei be pan-loaf?', '... memories of a local businesswoman ... whose expertise at switching on and off a 'pan loaf' accent was truly unsurpassed' [HPa2020].

pant (pawn', pant) n., arch. a well, trough, public fountain (the ornamental well in Selkirk Market Place is still called the 'Pant Well').

Panter (pawn-tur) n. George (15th/16th C.) appears to have been appointed Rector of Minto in 1512. He was probably related to Alexander Panter, Vicar of Carstairs at about the same time.

Panton (pawn-tin) n. Patrick (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1742 he was 'Officer of Excise' and in 1745 was recorded as 'Officer'. He witnessed a baptism for mason David Laing in 1742. He married Agnes Chatto and their children included: Agnes (b.1737); Patrick (b.1740); Thomas (b.1742); George (b.1743); twins George and Anne (b.1745); and Agnes (b.1747). The witnesses in 1742 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and present Bailie Robert Boyd and in 1745 Robert Howison was witness to the baptism.

the Pant Well (thū-pawn'-wel) n., arch. former water supply at the baker's shop (No. 25) corner of the south side of the Howegate, by the old entrance to St. Mary's Church. It was constructed by piping spring water from further outside Town (perhaps the Sclider Springs), at the instigation of the Council in 1783. It was a free-stone construction with a covering. It is probably the 'West Pant-Well of Hawick' mentioned in a court case of 1829 ('pant' suggests a roof or covering, as in the later 'Pant Well' of Selkirk's Market Square).

pap (pawp) n., imp. female breast, sometimes used for a roughly conical hill – 'Those petted playthings of an empty mind, Those paps whence flows the milk of primping scorn' [JoHa].

papa (paw-pu) n. grandfather – 'A bet ma papa's aulder is yours', 'ma ded's ded's ma papa, an so's ma mam's ded'.

pape (pāp) n., arch. a pip, dried fruit stone, particularly from a cherry, formerly used in children's games – '...the dyed yins was worth mair is the ordinary papes' [BA], 'One game, much in favour in autumn with sporting blades, was races with 'papes' [HAST1908], 'As in the boyish days when he [J.E.D. Murray] carved the monogram of the hero of the occasion on the 'dyed papes' (cherry stones) ...' [HAD], 'Black shoogir-waeter, a paep a sook' [ECS], pl. a game formerly played by boys using dried cherry stones (also written 'paip' and 'paep').

Pape (pāp) n., arch. Pope – '...the said yeir, month, day, hour, and place that is, Indiction and Pape before specifyt' [JW1558] (obviously more common in Hawick before the Reformation, as in this 1558 sasine; the last such Pope was Paul IV, 1555–59).

pape-a-go (pā-pu-gō) n., arch. a summer and autumn children's game in which cherry stones were used as tokens in paying for turns at various funfair-type games – 'oo're playin pape-a-go', 'An' the fee for a keek Was, of course, pape-a-go' [??], 'Pape a Go, as I remember it, was a seasonal amusement like tops or bools ... The standard unit was one pip (pronounced 'pape') ... and the customary chant of all stall-holders and promoters of side-shows was 'A pape a go! A pape a go! Every time you do it, a pape and another go!' [Scotsman, 1955].

the paper train (thū-pā-pur-trān) n. popular name for the express train from Edinburgh Waverley, carrying the evening sports editions of the Saturday newspapers (the 'pink' and 'green' papers). It typically left at 5.54 p.m. and reached Hawick around 7.20 p.m. – 'At easter time oor eggs oo'd dye Oo heard the paper train gaun bye ...' [IWL].

pap-o-the-hass (pawp-ō-thu-haws) n., arch. the uvula – '...an ma paap-o-the-hass is yookin ti let oot some richt, guid, braid Haaick' [ECS], erroneously applied to the Adam's apple, a natural feature suggestive of a nipple, particularly in

papper (paw-pur) n. epithet for a frame in a textile factory used to make fashioned ladies underwear, also called a gore.

pappin (paw-pin) n., arch. pap, pulpy mash, paste used by weavers for dressings their webs.

paraphrases (paw-ru-frā-zeez) n., pl., arch. collection of metrical versions of passages from the Bible adopted in 1781, intended to be sung, and usually printed at the end of the Scottish Bible – 'A still stronger dislike was felt in some districts of the country to the introduction of the paraphrases in public worship' [RJR].

paralsie (pā-rulz) n., poet. paralysis, palsy – '...an' thae that had the paralsie, an' he haelet them' [HSR], 'An' sayin', Lord, my servant lieth at hame sick o' the paralsie, grievouslie tormented' [HSR] (also pairls and perils).

Paris (paw-ris) n. Lawrence (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Tudhope in 1757. Perhaps the same Lawrence in 1775 had an account with the Burgh of Selkirk for lighting and cleaning lamps; there are men of the same name recorded in Selkirk having children with Jean Angus in the period 1778–81 and with Janet Riddell 1768–74. He is probably the 'Laurence', husband of 'Peggy Cheap', whose son of the same name died in Hawick in 1811.

parishin (paw-ri-shin) n., arch. a parish, body of parishioners – 'Ane tryell and valuatioune maid of the lands within the parochine of Hawik ...' [PR1627], '...ye have payid for burning of the witches our parochin thinkis our high sett and in respect ye have payid the same' [SPB1629], '...and then to come down before the parochine and ask for her forgiveness for that slander' [Ash1635], 'The whilk day being appointed for the admission of Mr Henry Elliot to the function of the ministrie, at the parochin kirke of Bedroule ...' [Bed1640], 'The upper end of the parishine of Hassendean' [BR1658], 'The particular valuatiounes of the particular rowmes of ye said parochine' [BR] (there are many spelling variants, e.g. 'parochin'; cf. the older paroche and the more recent pairish).

Paris press (paw-ris-pres) n. a machine in the knitwear industry used to steam-blast and vacuum-dry garments on an adjustable metal body, replacing the use of the 'boardin-hoose' – 'A work on the Paris press', 'How interesting, do you commute weekly?'.

Park (pawrk) n. local name occasionally used for Branxholme Park, e.g. in baptismal records of 1695, 1708 and 1712.

Park

Park (pawrk) n. former tower on the east bank of the Hermitage Water, somewhere near Redheugh in Liddesdale, once a stronghold of the Elliots. The precise location is uncertain, but a recent claim (apparently through dowsing!) puts it just opposite Redheugh farm. It is probably the ‘Parkis de Castelton’ listed in the Liddesdale rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 4 merks. ‘Sym Elliott of the Park’ is recorded in 1586. It was later distinguished from the more important lands of ‘Copshaw Park’ through the designation ‘Little Park’; it thus appears in the 1694 Hearth Tax records, with William Scott as tenant. The farm stead was combined with the farm of Powisholm on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; there it is shown as an enclosed piece of land and house near the Hermitage Water, a bit to the south-east of Redheugh (it is marked on Gordon’s map c. 1650, as ‘Parck’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Little Park’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it must be related to a former hunting or agricultural enclosure; note that it is easily confused with the other ‘Park’ further south, close to the modern Newcastleton; see also Little Park).

Park (pawrk) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, close to the modern Newcastleton, also known as ‘Copshaw Park’. It is easily confused with lands of the same name, also called ‘Castleton Park’, which lay to the north, on the Hermitage Water. The original location has probably been obliterated by Newcastleton village, but on modern maps Park Hill, reaching a height of 258 m lies to the west of the village. In the rental roll of 1541 it is valued at 13 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Simon Elliot. ‘Ryche Elliott of the Park’ was recorded in 1548. ‘Jock o the Park’, also known as ‘Little Jock Elliot’, subject of a Border ballad, was said to be the man who wounded the Earl of Bothwell in 1566, causing Mary Queen of Scots to take her famous ride to Hermitage Castle. His tower may have stood where Newcastleton railway station was built. ‘Rowie’ or ‘Robin’ of the Park is recorded in 1578 and 1581. ‘Sym Elliott of the Park’, ‘James Rowe in the Park’ and ‘Archibald Elliott of the Park’ are further recorded in 1581. Airchie, ‘Scot’s Hob’s Jock’ and ‘Rowie’s John’ of the Park are listed in 1584. ‘Young Archie of the Park’ occurs in 1599, James Scott possessed ‘Parke callit Copshaholme’ in 1632 and ‘Rollie, called Park’ is recorded in the 1660s. Walter Scott was tenant there in 1694, and John Scoon also had his blacksmith’s there at that time. This is probably the Park where John Elliot was recorded as farmer in 1786–92

Park

– ‘Ma kinsmen are true, an’ brawlie, At glint o’ an enemie, Round Park’s auld Turrets they rally, An’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T] (also called ‘the Park’, it is ‘Park’ in 1541 and ‘Parke’ in 1583; it is recorded on Stobie’s 1770 map; see also Copshaw and Copshaw Park).

Park (pawrk) n. former name for lands near the confluence of the Meikledale Burn with the Ewes Water about 5 miles south of MossPaul, later called ‘Park o Buss’ or ‘Buss’ and now the farm of ‘Bush’. David Armstrong had a charter for these lands in 1535 after they were resigned by Robert, Lord Maxwell. Along with Wrae it was described as a 20-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619 and by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It is listed as ‘the landis of Park alias Bliss’ (probably a transcription error) and later ‘Park alias Buse’ among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663.

Park (pawrk, pārk) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at ‘Oulvcleugh head’ in 1737 and Wolfcleuchhead in 1741. He is probably related to William, who was at Wolfcleuchhead later. He is probably the Andrew who married Janet Scott in Robertson in 1736. His children included: Helen (b.1737); James (b.1738); Janet (b.1740); Ann (b.1741); and John (b.1745). Andrew (b.1815) son of shepherd William, he was born in Inverness-shire, one of 13 children, and grew up in the Hawick area. In 1851 he was a ‘Wool Carder’, living at ‘Upper Lynnwood’ (probably Lynnwood Cottages). He was also said to have worked as a foreman in a large woollen mill, was a great reader, naturalist and inventor. In 1857 he presented to the Museum some buckles worn by Mungo Park on his first journey to Africa (suggesting he was a relative). The Archaeological Society also purchased from him a stuffed golden eagle. He became a factory superintendent in Hawick before emigrating to Andes, Delaware County, New York in 1857 with his wife and eight of their children. In 1849 he married Sophia Milligan (1819–79) and they had 11 children, 9 born in Hawick: George (b.1839); William R. (b.1841); Jane (b.1843), who married Charles Mallock; Rev. Thomas (b.1845), minister at Allegheny City, Pennsylvania; Janet (b.1847), who married Charles Wheeler; David Henry (b.1850); Andrew (1852–1910); Isabella (b.1854), who married Dr. Stroud of Ontario; Sophia Ann (b.1856), who married J.R. Gordon; Ellen (b.1859), who married James Page; and Margaret Ann (b.1866), who married R. Darr. Angus (20th C.) from Singdean. He was a Sergeant in the Scots Guards and was held as a prisoner of war in 1944. David (18th C.) tenant farmer at East Buccleuch until about 1800. He could be the tenant in 'Dum Fedlain' who in 1793 was in dispute with William Pringle, formerly shepherd at 'Dum Fedlain at Howpasley' regarding the loss of 10 sheep. It is unclear what 'Dum Fedlain' may refer to. David Scott (b.1806/7) brother of Andrew and son of shepherd William and Janet Main from Inverness. He was born at Abertarff, near Inverness, but grew up in Hawick. The family were probably related to Mungo the explorer. He was a grocer and spirit dealer, as well as draper and toy merchant at 19 High Street. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a grocer, flint glass dealer, toy dealer and draper on the High Street. He was one of the first deacons at Hawick Free Kirk from 1844. His wife Isabella was a daughter of a French prisoner of war called Cabourne, and a sister of 'Pawkie' Paterson; she died in 1866. His children included: Helen (b.1831), who married Walter Scott; William (1833-97), who was unmarried and a draper's assistant; Janet Georgina (1835-1905), who married Thomas Morton; John Scott Douglas (1837-1906) also a draper; Jane Maria Paterson Blake (1839-1904), who died in Hawick; Isabella (b.1842), probably died young; David Scott (1844-1924), who died in Devon; Agnes Isabella Jardine (b.1848), who married Draper John Forbes; and Robert Andrew Scott (1851-1903), who died in Sunderland. David Henry (1850-1910) born in Hawick, son of Andrew and Sophia Milligan (sister of Robert Milligan). The family emigrated to America in 1857, where he ran a farm implements business with his brother and then moved into real estate, finally becoming a prominent citizen in the community of Carroll in Iowa. He helped build the town there, and was instrumental in erecting the town's Masonic temple. He married Edith C. Vette and had 3 daughters. Hercules (16th/17th C.) one of a number of men fined in 1609 for harassing and threatening Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He is referred to as 'alias callit Will the Bastart', and some of his accomplices included Armstrongs of Kinmont. James (b.1813/4) from Morebattle, he was a shoemaker in Denholm. His business was on Main Street. He married Margaret Turnbull, from Bowden Parish. Their children included Agnes, Thomas (b.1845), James (b.1850) and Mary (b.1852). James (20th C.) resident of Singdean. He served as Treasurer of the Hobkirk Parish Picnic. In 1932 he was presented with a silver salver on the occasion of his marriage. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Hermitage according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He was a shepherd at Hermitage on the 1801 ballot. John E. (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was Cornet in 1825. Also in 1825 he was listed as a grocer on the subscription list for Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. John (19th/20th C.) worker at Pesco's and rugby player with Hawick R.F.C. He played as a forward for the Greens in 1904/5 and was Club President 1935-38. Joseph (b.1808/9) born at Clintmains in Berwickshire, he was a shoemaker in Lilliesleaf. In 1851 he was on the south side of Main Street and employed 2 men. He was listed in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Thomas, Walter, Robert, James, Adam, David, Elizabeth and John. Margaret (18th/19th C.) local woman who wrote verses on the birth of an heir to Douglas of Cavers, which also gives a summary of the events around Hornshole and the Common Riding. This was published in Bet Young's collection of poetry in 1823, who was presumably a friend of hers; she was referred to as 'Mrs. Park', so presumably 'Park' was her married (rather than maiden) name. Mary (18th/19th C.) recorded along with Thomas Brydon as owner of 2 horses at Hoscoteshiel on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Mungo (1771-1806) famous African explorer, born at Foulshiels, near Selkirk, the 7th of 13 children of a tenant farmer, also Mungo. At one time he tried to set up as a medical practitioner in Hawick, but apparently found it more taxing than darkest Africa. He apprenticed to a surgeon in Selkirk, then went to Africa in 1795, returning after 2½ years. He then married a daughter of his former employer, Dr. Anderson and set up in practice in Peebles. But the life of a country doctor was not for him and he set off for Africa again in 1805, when he drowned at Boussa on an ill-fated expedition to find the source of the the Niger. There is a statue of him in Selkirk, and the ruins of his cottage still exist. An ornament from the grate out of the house where he was born is in the Museum. And buckles worn by him on his first African journey were donated to the Museum in 1857. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1728 he was at Craikhope. His sons Andrew and Archibald were baptised in 1728. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Pinnacle recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was listed as tenant there on the 1801 Militia ballot. Thomas (19th C.) farmer at Little Cote, Cavers Parish. He was one of the Tory supporters victimised at the 'Tully's Mill' election riot of 1837. Thomas (b.1845) son of Andrew, he was born in Hawick, moved to America at age 13 and worked on a farm, before becoming a minister at Walton, New York. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1728, 'M...' in 1732 and Redfordgreen in 1734. His children included: William (b.1728); Agnes (b.1730); Margaret (b.1732); and Janet (b.1734). Walter (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1725, Craik in 1726 and Wolfcleuchhead in 1734 and 1737. His children included: an unnamed child (b.1725); Margaret (b.1726); Mary (b.1734); Elizabeth (b.1735); an unnamed child (b.1737); and Jean (b.1739). William (d.1809) resident of Wolfcleuchhead. He is probably related to Andrew, who was at Wolfcleuchhead earlier. He was recorded there in 1763, 1764, 1765 and 1767. He married Ann Harkness in Robertson in 1762 and their children included Isobel (b.1763), Helen (b.1764), Isobel (again, b.1766), William (b.1767), John (b.1769), Helen (b.1764), Janet (b.1771), John (b.1773), Mary (b.1775) and James (b.1779). In 1763 and 1767 he is recorded as 'younger', suggesting he was son of another William. His wife is probably the 'Isobel' Harkness whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1781. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Rae in 1790. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish, where he was 'from olfcleuch head'. William (c.1780–1844) shepherd, born in Inverness, he came to Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1798 he married Janet Main. Their children included: John (b.c.1801); James (b.c.1803); David Scott (b.c.1805), merchant in Hawick; Andrew (b.1806), who must have died young; Thomas (b.1808); Robert (b.1811); Andrew (b.1815), who married Sophia Milligan and emigrated to the U.S.; William (b.c.1820); Jane or Janet (b.c.1826); and several other daughters. Most of the family returned to the Highlands, but David and Andrew remained. William (b.1788) born at Crooks in Westerkirk Parish, son of William, who was killed in Grenada. He worked from an early age as a cow-herd, later becoming 'minister's man' to Rev. Dr. Brown of Eskdalemuir. He later rented the farm of Holmains in Dalton Parish, and spent more time contributing poetry to newspapers. He became editor of the Dumfries and Galloway Standard, but died shortly afterwards. He published 'The Vale of the Esk and Other Poems' (1833). William (19th C.) hairdresser who was one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee in 1887. He was also a Bailie, and acted as judge for the Cornet's Races. He was first appointed to the Race Committee in 1879 and later became its Chairman. His father was toy merchant David S. William (1833–97) son of David S. and Isabella Cabourne. He was a draper who succeeded Anthony Dodds as Registrar for Hawick in the 1880s. His office was at 19 High Street. William (b.c.1837) son of James and Ann and brother of frame-worker Thomas. He is listed as 'Disability: Imbecil' at 26 Loan in the 1861 census, and is probably the 'Wullie Pairk' mentioned in 'Hawick Immortals'. William (19th/20th C.) bank manager. He married Agnes, daughter of farmer James Henderson. William (1909–82) O.B.E., son of John, who was a director at Peter Scott's. He was educated at Hawick High School, before going to university and then joining the staff of the National Library of Scotland. He eventually became Keeper of Manuscripts there. He remained a keen Common Riding supporter, being a member of the Mosstroopers' Club as well as serving as President of the Callants' Club in 1956. In 1954 he wrote the book 'The First Fifty Years of the Hawick Callants' Club, A Short History'. He married May, 2nd daughter of Robert Wilson from Braemar Knitwear. He was once described as 'the amiably eccentric William Park, who for all his broad literary cultivation and scholarly insight was the least productive of curators'.

Park

Park (pwrk) n. nickname for a former riever. He is recorded in 1502 as 'vocatis park', but his actual name is not given. He was among the men who Adam Scott of Tushielaw had remission for resetting for stealing sheep from farms in Peebleshire.

park (pawrk) n. a field, agricultural enclosure, 'inby' land on a hill farm, a hunting enclosure – 'If Simon wishes to use the wester part or hill for a sheep park he must enclose the same with a stone fence and the park thereafter not to be ploughed' [SPB1773], 'The parks are ribbed wi' meltin' snaw And the hills are derk wi' rain' [DH] (see also pairk and perk; the word is used in one of these older meanings in several local place the Park (thu-pawrk) n. Wilton Lodge Park, consisting of 107 acres (43 hectares) around the banks of the Teviot at the southern end of Hawick. The house and estate were caslled Langlands until 1790. The grounds contain walks, the Museum, the Walled Gardens, sports fields, and recreational facilities. The land was purchased for £14,000 by the Town Council in 1889, and was fortunately left as a park, to be enjoyed by generations of Teries. A map of the estate was drawn up in 1890. Several structures in the Park, including the gate lodge and war memorials are grade C listed buildings. A major regeneration project in 2015–18 (paid for by the Heritage Lottery Fund) saw a new bandstand erected, the Laurie and Henderson Shelters renovated, the Walled Gardens renewed, a new gallery in the Museum opened, an additional footbridge and new cafe constructed, the playground modernised, the fountain restored and the gates replaced – ‘A love ti walk be Teviotside And sei its ripplin witters glide Doon throwe the Park at eventide In Hawick ma Border hame’ [IWL].

Park Brig (pawrk-brig) n. Park Bridge, also known as South Bridge, on the Riddell estate. It is a category B listed structure, constructed in the late 18th century.

Park Cottage (pawrk-ko'-eej) n. former name for a cottage in Wilton, probably on Langlands Road near the foot of Rosalee Brae. The Davidson family were there in 1841.

Parkdaill (pawrk-dāl) n. area of private housing between the main road and the Teviot, just south of Hawick, named in 1923 for its proximity to Wilton Lodge Park. It was once the site of one of the main fords across the Teviot, connecting to a lane (still preserved) which went up the hill to join the main road near Longbaulk. On a wooded knoll opposite Parkdaill is the site of a 14th century longhouse and byre which were excavated in 1965.

the Park Dyke (thu-pawrk-dik) n. former name for a small stream or ditch forming part of the boundary of Templehall and Brewlands, described in a document of 1567 (written ‘the parkdyik’ in 1567 and ‘the park dike’ in 1604).

Parker (pawr-kur) n. Jane (19th C.) one of the 4 operators of the first power looms to arrive in Hawick, at Dicksons & Laings in 1830. It is possible she is the woman of the same name, working as a ‘Woollen Warper’ and living on the Back Raw in 1841; she was aged about 25 at that time, meaning she would have been very young when she first learned how to use the powerloom. Roger (19th C.) gamekeeper at Stobs Castle about 1875, when he ‘winged’ a buzzard on the estate. He was also gamekeeper on the Branhholme estate. He married Margaret Beatson in Hawick in 1863. Their children included: Margaret (b.1867), who married James Aitkin Henderson; Mary (b.1869); and Elizabeth (b.1872).

Park Grove (pawrk-grōv) n. road of private houses near Wilton Dean, built in the 1990s on part of the former allotments.

Parkheid (pawrk-heed) n. local name used for Synton Parkhead, as marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map. Note that there are several other places of the same name.

Parkheid (pawrk-heed) n. area at the top of the Borthwickbrae estate, now marked by Parkhead Plantation. It was ‘Borthbrae parkhead’ in 1757 when Robert Hutton was living there. Andrew Davidson was there in 1763 and Walter Scott in 1767 (it is ‘Park Heads’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; see also Borthwickbrae Parkheid).

Parkheid (pawrk-heed) n. name used locally for Ormiston Parkhead.

Parkheid (pawrk-heed) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Winnington. It was among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. The name was still recorded in the late 17th century.

Parkheid (pawrk-heed) n. former farmstead to the south of Todrig, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map.

Parkheid (pawrk-heed) n. cottage near Teviothead, located a little to the west of the Henry Scott Riddell monument. It is nicknamed ‘Cuddy’s Waas’ (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Parkheid Burn (pawrk-heed-burn) n. stream in Ashkirk Parish, running past Synton parkhead and meeting the Ale Water near Synton Mill.

Parkhill (pawrk-, perk-hil) n. farm between Chisholme and the Snoot. It is reached either via Chisholme House or by a grassy track leading up from near the Snoot Kirk. It was valued in 1627, paying ‘100 lb., vicarage 20 lb.’, listed along with Chisholme and Lairhope. It was valued at £200 in 1643, when owned by Walter Chisholme. There were 16 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely James Chisholme, Margaret Scott, Walter Chisholme, Thomas Dodds, Marion Scott, Janet ‘Birrone’, Patrick Murray, Margaret Harper, Margaret Murray, Bessie Wilson 'Ed.', Bessie Wilson 'Younger', Robert Chisholme, Jean Chisholme, William Chisholme, Steven Rule and Janet Shiel. James Noble was living there in 1687. Along with much of neighbouring area it was transferred from Hawick Parish to Robertson in 1689/90. Around this time it was separately East and West Parkhill. The lands were held by the Chisholmes from at least the early 15th century until the 19th; presumably younger sons of the Laird of Chisholme were at one time given the lands, followed by their descendants. In 1649 Robert Chisholme in Chisholme Mill inherited the eastern lands from his father William, who is described as 'portioner of Parkhill'. John Hume and John Allan were recorded there in 1711, Walter Hume in 1713, John Nichol and Robert Cosser in 1717, Adam Hobkirk in 1721, Walter Turnbull in 1721–34, Robert Scott in 1723, John Watson in 1725, John Turnbull in 1725–28, John Gowans and John Nichol in 1727, Robert Govenlock in 1734–42 and James Laidlaw in 1736. John Miller was here in 1741, Walter Turnbull, John Turnbull and Walter Miller were living there in 1743. John Kidd and George White were there in 1753, William Scott in 1762, George White in 1763–67, William Scott in 1764–75 and William Riddell in 1766. Robert Elliot and Robert Scott were at 'Parkhill wester' in 1774. Walter Thomson was there in 1780–85, James Rodger in 1782–84, Thomas Elliot in 1784, James Miller in 1785, Robert Riddell in 1786 and Thomas Thomson and John Anderson in 1787. William Scott (who died about 1820) was also tenant there. The hill there reaches 233 m, with Wester Park Hill (actually to the south-east) reaching 303 m (it is on a parish map of 1650, and is marked 'Parckhill' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Parkhills' on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Park Hill (pawrk-hil) n. hill to the west of Newcastle, reaching a height of 258 m, and connecting with Bedda Hill to the north. The area is rich in archaeological evidence, with 4 groups of buildings within enclosures on the eastern side, an enclosure near the summit and boundary banks all around. However, some of this has been obliterated by the golf course landscaping.

Parkhillhaugh (pawrk-hil-hawf) n. flat land around the Borthwick north of Parkhill farm. William Gledstains was living there with his family in the 1820s. John Elliot and his family were living there in 1841 and 1851. The Snoot Kirk was built there in the 1840s.

the Parkhill Loft (thu-pawrk-hil-loft) n. former loft in the old St. Mary's Kirk, erected by Chisholme of Parkhill when that estate was within Hawick Parish, i.e. before 1689. It is possible that this became known by a different name after Robertson Parish was created. This gallery was replaced in the new church, built around 1763.

Parkhooses see Packhooses

the Park Kirk (thu-pawrk-kirk) n. name used formerly for the church in Newcastle, that had been the Free Kirk. The name distinguished it from the other Church of Scotland establishments in the village, called 'the South Church' and 'Castleton Church'.

Park o Buss (pawrk-ō-bus) n. former name for Park in Ewesdale.

Park-quarter (pawrk-kwar-tur) n. former name for lands in Belses. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew and when inherited by John, nephew of Sir Thomas in 1684. It is listed separately from Peel-quarter, as well as Millrig-quarter and Myre-quarter.

Parks League Cricket (pawrks-leeg-kri-ki) n. amateur cricketing league played in the summer at Wilton Lodge Park from about the early 1950s. There were matches between teams from various factories and trades.

Park Street (pawrk-stree) n. street in the Terraces, between Loch Park Road and Twirlees Road, built around 1879 by Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Company and named in 1880 after Loch Park. Hope's grocer's shop was at the bottom of the street in the mid-1900s.

Park Terrace (pawrk-te-ris) n. street in the Terraces, being the continuation of Dakers Place. It was built by Hawick Working Men's Building Society and named in 1884 after Loch Park.

Parkview (pawrk-vew) n. Victorian villa on Buccleuch Road, built in 1844 as the new Manse for the Parish Kirk. It can be seen in the 1847 painting 'Hawick From Wilton Lodge'. Recently it has been renamed 'Dunira'.

Park View (pawrk-vew) n. street built on the site of the old allotments between the Park and the Dean in the 1990s??.

Parlane (pawr-lān) n. Rev. James (1806/7–1880) from Helensburgh, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1851. He was minister of the West U.P. ('Green') Church from 1857, having been translated from Greyfriars in Glasgow. He was ordained as colleague and successor to Andrew Rodgie and took over following his predecessors death in 1860. He remained as minister in Hawick until 1869, when he moved to Burntisland.

parlique (par-li-kyoo) n., arch. the peroration at the end of a discourse, the discourse itself (noted by J. Jamieson).

parochie (pa-rōsh) n., arch. a parish – ‘...executouris or assignais in the parroche kirk of Hawic ...’ [SB1470], ‘...a child begoten in fornication Within ye paroch of Askirk by Walter Scott brother German to the Laird of Whiteslade ...’ [PR1716].

the Parochial Board (thu-pu-rō-kee-ul-bōrd) n. Hawick Parochial Board was in charge of affairs relating to the Poor Laws, welfare for the sick, aged and disabled, and maintenance of hospitals and cemeteries. It ran soup kitchens as well as the poor-house. Parochial Boards were set up in towns in 1845 following the Poor Law Amendment (Scotland) Act, and were partly replaced by Parish Councils in 1894.

parritch (paw-rich, -reech) n., arch. porridge – ‘He’ll gie’e a dose, aye, waur to take than parritch ...’ [JoHa], ‘...An’ roar, o’er parritch an’ bare spuddies, guid weather’s dead’ [JoHa], ‘I canna thole extravagance even in parritch makin’, that I canna’ [JEDM] (now more often porritch).

parrock (paw-rok) n., arch. a paddock, enclosed field, an enclosure used for trying to get a ewe to take another’s lamb, v. to enclose, confine, particularly said of a ewe and lamb (from Middle English).

parrockit (paw-ro-kee’, -ki’) adj., pp., arch. enclosed, confined, especially said of a ewe placed with a lamb – ‘...parrackeet in ov a ceetie, mang reekin lums an chowkin smuists’ [ECS].

parsonage (par-so-neej-tīnd) n., arch. a major tithe, originally payable to the parson (rather than local vicar), also referred to as the ‘parsonage teind’. In the 14th and 15th centuries it would have been common for ‘alien rectors’ to take this major part of the ‘benefice’ as a special favour, while the actual ecclesiastical and pastoral duties were carried out by someone receiving only the ‘vicarage teind’ – ‘Item, the Flex, estimate to 100 merks in stok, parsonage 2 bolls, vicarage 5 lbs.’ [PR1627].

Parson’s Hole (pawr-sinz-hōl) n. area to the east of Ashkirk village, where the track to Synton Mains crosses the Tathyhole Sike. It is said that a minister was once thrown into a pit here by the congregation.

partaker (pawr-tā-kur) n., arch. a supporter, someone who takes one’s side ‘...Robert Scot off Alanehaucht, Williame Scott in Alanehaucht, now duelland in Hawik, Syme Scot in Oversouthfeild, Watt Scot thair, Syme Scott thair, Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok, thair haill kin, freindis, assisters, and partakers ...’ [SB1581].

particate (par-ti-ki) n., arch. a parcel of land, specifically a lot in a burgh. The area was typically equal to 1/4 acre or a Scots rood, corresponding to 13,690 square feet. However, in a town the lands were sometimes divided into lots that were around 20 feet across at the main street and extended back considerably; this was approximately the case in Hawick. According to the 1537 charter, there were about 130 particates, split among many owners. The holders of these lands in Hawick had to annually give 5 pennies to the Baron, in 2 installments at Whitsunday and Martinmas, for each particate. It was traditionally said that the owners had to perform this duty in person until the Baron grew tired of being bothered and so at some point relieved them of the need to make future payments. The Land Tax Rolls of 1663 list ‘The Particats of Hawick’ being valued at £97 16s 8d (and just £97 in 1678). It was stated (in a legal opinion regarding tenure in Hawick) that there were approximately 124 particates in 1667. The ‘particate men’ were explicitly excused from attending the Baron’s Michaelmas Head Court in 1670 because of the bad state of the crops. In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish it is recorded that apart from the major landowners, the Proprietors of Particiates in Hawick’ had land valued at £97. At the time of the Division of the Common, there were approximately 170 proprietors of particates in the Town. Parts of the ‘Particot Lands of Hawick’ are still referred to in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls – ‘To Robert Scott of Howpasley, Six particates of land; to Robert Scott of Allanaugh, three particates ...’ [RW1537], ‘Each tenant is named in the charter, with the number of particates which he was possessed of ...’ [AJ] (the word corresponds to the Latin ‘particata’, related to ‘pertica’, meaning a measuring rod, a ‘perch’, or the area of land measured with it; the word

particate man (par-ti-ki'-mawn) n., arch. an owner of a particate – ‘The said Pew was allocated to Robert Deanes, particat man of the lands of Hawick’ [PR1715], ‘If the particate men, mentioned in the Charter, had a right of property in the Common, and, as the suspenders allege, the whole property, it would have been most unjust to have authorised a lease of any part of it, without allowing them at least a share in the rents’ [JW].

particuler (par-ti-ku-lur) adj. particular – ‘Awken the wee bit acknowledgeement was meant for mei in particuler caise ...’ [BW1978] (note that the 3rd syllable has a u sound, rather than the English yoo).

Pasche (pawsh) n., arch. Easter, Passion. This was one of the 3 times a year that the head courts would meet around the 16th century, specifically the 2nd Tuesday after Easter (recorded in the Circuit Court of 1622).

Pasley see Paisley

pasneip (pas-neep) n., arch. parsnip – ‘The spelling is, in most cases phonetic, and shows that the local pronunciation has been then, as now, distinctive, ... hearbs, turneep seed, persell seid, cress seid, pasneys seed, ...’ [DMW] (spelling variants exist).

Pass (pas) n. William (18th C.) groom at Minto House in 1788, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. His surname may be a transcription error for something else.

Passchendaele (pa-shen-dāl) n. ridge near Ypres in Belgium, scene of an atrocious battle ordered by Douglas Haig in the Autumn of 1917. Perhaps as many as 250,000 Allied men were lost, including around 70 locals, who have no known graves. The ‘Passchendaele Negatives’ is a set of 3 silhouettes in steel set up near the War Memorial in 2019 – ‘On the road to Passchendaele On the road to Passchendaele Where the brave will live forever On the road to Passchendaele’ [AIB].

Passelow (pas-lō) n. Abbot (16th C.) commander of a group of soldiers, armed with ‘hagbuts’, which were quartered in Hawick in 1549, while Buccleuch had horsemen garrisoned at Peebles and Selkirk. This is mentioned in a letter of Sir Thomas Holcroft to Somerset (also spelled ‘Passelew’, ‘Pashley’, etc.; it is uncertain who this was, and what effect the garrisoned troops had on the Town).

passenger (paw-sin-jur) n., arch. a passer-by, wayfarer – ‘Robt. Hod, passenger, was fyned,

pass fri (paws-fri) v., arch. to set aside, dispense with, renounce, give up – ‘Upon which report the Session resolved to pass from their summonds and intended process against her’ [PR1724], ‘Walter Turnbull, English Schoolmaster in Hawick, was sworn and admitted heritable burgess of this Burgh in common form, and his composition past from, for his service in the place’ [BR1737].

passin bell (paw-sin-bel) n., arch. tolling of church bells formerly carried out during the passing of a funeral procession to the grave. In Hawick this was done at St. Mary’s, usually by the town bellman. Burgesses and some others had the right to request this service for a certain fee. In 1694 it was stipulated that only those who had contributed to the cost of the new bell were entitled to use it for funerals. In 1717 the cost was 2 shillings for non-Burgesses in Hawick and 6 shillings for those who lived outside the Burgh.

passit (paw-see’, -si’) pp., arch. passed – ‘An’ they that passet bye misca’t him, geckin’ their heæds’ [HSR], ‘For in thy wræth a’ our dayes ar passet awa ...’ [HSR].

the Pastoral Society of Selkirkshire

(thu-pas-tu-rul-su-si-i’-ee-ov-sel- kirk-shIr) n. agricultural organisation, founded in 1819 by Lord Napier to promote the improvement of livestock in the county. After 1906 it became the Yarrow and Ettrick Pastoral Society. A list of members survives from 1819.

pastur (paw-stur) n., arch. pasture – ‘Thaye drap apon the pasters o’ the wuldirniss ...’ [HSR], ‘Bonnie Teviot, wumplin bye paster an pairk’ [ECS], ‘Ther’s a moppie gaen skiddlin owre that paster the now, duist’ [ECS] (also written ‘paster’).

pasturage (pas-tew-rij) n. right to graze cattle, particularly on someone else’s land or on common land.

pat (paw’, pawt) pp., arch. past tense of put, sometimes meaning made, sent, etc. – ‘... aganis the said Robert Elliot ...’, denuncit him rebell, and pat him to the horne’ [SB1624], ‘It was him who pat me mad’ [HSR], ‘... he pat thame til ane perpetuall reproch’ [HSR], ‘... hey juist paat up a moniment fer better an brawer be what the auld yin was’ [ECS] (also written ‘paat’; see also pit, the alternative last tense putt and the past participle putten).

pat (paw’, pawt) n., poet. a pot – ‘Afore your pats can feel the thoorns, he sall tak’ thame awa ...’ [HSR], ‘Moab is my wasch-pat ...’ [HSR], ‘She ran up to the pat an’ tried to coup it, While ever anon she raired an’ she roupit’ [BM1901].

Pate (pā’, pāt) n., arch. short form for either Peter or Patrick – ‘Robin an’ Colin’s come, an’ Piper Pate, An’ Bell an’ a’s in aunty’s o’er the gate’ [CPM].

patent (pā-tin’) adj., arch. wide, unobstructed, particularly in the phrase ‘the most patent door’, meaning the main door where proclamations were read – ‘The Beddall, with ane audible voice, called thrice att the most patent kirk door and desired yt anie who had aniething to object ...’ [PR1715].

Paterson see Paiterson

Pate’s Plum (pāts-plum) n. another name for the Plum – ‘And so at last they landed her In the far-famed Pate’s Plum, And the folk o’ Hawick were made aware By the tuck o’ Tufty’s drum’ [JCG].

path see peth

Path Head School (path-hed-skool) n. former school in the town of MacGregor, on the Trans-Canada Highway, just west of Winnipeg, Manitoba. The school was named after the ‘Pethheid’ in Wilton, which was the birthplace of Robert Lamb, the farmer from Hawick who gave the land for the school. The school ran from 1892 until 1965 and a memorial cairn was erected on the site in 1987.

Pathheid see Pethheid

Pathheid (pawth-heed) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish, a little to the north of the modern Newcastleton. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, just south of Blackburnfoot. Thomas Mathieson was there in the early 1800s.

Pathheid (pawth-heed) n. former farmstead in Ewesdale, near Sorbie. John Graham and family were there in 1841.

patience (pā-shins) n., pl. patience, treated as a plural – ‘Hei has mony patience’ [GW], ‘Owre few patience’ [GW].

Paton (pā-in) n. Charles (1752/3–1818) teacher of a school in Callander, he was licensed to preach by Deer Presbytery in 1779. The following year he became preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ and stayed until about 1785 (when James Sanson took over). He became minister at Ettrick in 1791 and remained there until he died (of a stroke). His native tongue was Gaelic, and it is said that he was never a very popular preacher, since he still had to translate his thoughts into English. Maj. James of Crailing (b.1831) son of John, his mother being an Elliot. He was educated in Edinburgh and rode on the last journey of the coach ‘Chevy Chase’ back to the Borders.

He joined the Kings Own regiment in 1850 and retired from the army in 1871, having been decorated for service in the Crimean War and India. Back home he was a Major in the Border Rifle volunteers and later commander. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He succeeded his father to the Crailing estate in 1889. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, served on the county council and was also Deputy Lieutenant. In 1863 he married the eldest daughter of J.C. Lamb of Ryton and his eldest son was John. Maj. John William Joseph, M.B.E. (1924–2020) born in Hawick to Archibald and Isabella Graham, he was one of 7 children, growing up in Drumlanrig Square. The family moved to Glasgow when he was still a child and he lied about his age to join the army in 1940. He had a distinguished career in the military, extending over 30 years, starting as one of the first members of the Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers. He took part in the D-Day landings and was on a ship bound for the far east when the war ended. Afterwards he worked briefly in Selkirk, but then re-enlisted, serving in several places overseas. He became a Sergeant-Major at the age of 26, was commissioned in 1963, became a Captain in 1964 and retired in 1975 with the rank of Major. After retiring he worked as a volunteer at Fyvie Castle in Aberdeenshire. In 2009 he received the M.B.E. for services to heritage in Scotland. Walter (b.1817/8) from Crailing, he was a baker at 23 High Street. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Ann and they had a daughter Beatrix. He was probably deceased by 1861, when his wife and children were living with his wife’s cousin Jane Grieve at the Crown Inn. Walter (19th C.) innkeeper at 78 High Street in 1875.

Patonhaugh (pā-in-hawch) n. former farm in Southdean Parish, just over on the south side of the Jed Water to the south of Edgerston Rig (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Patrick (pa-reek) n. Alexander Bonthorn (1858/9–1937) manager at tweed manufacturers Robert Noble & Co. He married Margaret, daughter of commission agent James Hunter, and she died in 1933, aged 75. Their children were Alexander (minister), James (of New York), and Lieut. John Bonthorn (of the K.O.S.B., killed at Gallipoli). His wife was one of those from Hawick who travelled to visit Gallipoli in 1926. Alexander (1887/8–1941) eldest son of Alexander Bonthorn. He was educated at Durham University and spent almost 20 years as Chaplain to H.M.

Forces in India. He was then Episcopalian minister at Newton Ferrers, Plymouth, where he died.

Patrick Cunningham's Lands (pa'-reek-ku-ning-humz-lawndz) n. former name for lands within Hawick Parish. They were formerly held by the Parish Minister, but must have been given heritably, since they were later held by his descendants. The lands may have originally been given to Rev. Robert Cunningham by Scott of Buccleuch, and then passed to his son Patrick (1636–c.1706), who was a Burgess of Hawick, becoming minister at Kirkton; he was often referred to as 'Mr.', a designation which was also applied to the lands. Rev. Robert Cunningham (c.1668–1722) was probably a son of Patrick, and held the positions of minister in Wilton and then in Hawick. Another Patrick, recorded onwng some of the same lands in Hawick, may have been his son. It was stated in 1767 that part of the lands were then partly in the hands of Bailie Turnbull. They were still referred to as 'Mr. Patrick Cunningham's Lands in Hawick' in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when several parts were valued at more than £75, including one piece called 'Allers Garden' (which was presumably near Allars Bank). The lands may not have been contiguous pieces, and at least some of them lay within the East Mains of Hawick. Based on who owned some of the lands later, it included part of what was developed as Buccleuch Street.

Patrick of Albania (pa'-reek-ov-awl-bā-nee-a) n. Parson of Kirkton, recorded as witness to Hawick's first known sasine in 1453. 'Albania' may be Albany perhaps. A 'Patrick McNawany, parson of Kirktoun' was witness to a charter of Archibald Earl Douglas in 1438; it is possible this was the same man, although there are other Kirktons in Scotland.

the Patriotic Memorial (thu-pā'-ree-o'-eek-mu-mō-ree-ul) n. another name for the Boer War Memorial.

the Patriots (thu-pā'-ree-its) n. name used by a group of townspeople, led by Walter Freeman, who objected to the way that the Common was managed by the Council and Bailies, and in particular the agreement made to give away one third of the land. The supporters of Freeman were 205 in number, mostly Burgesses without property. They organised themselves to oppose all actions regarding the Common in the late 1770s, including letting a small part (to clear the Town's legal debts); they appointed their own Town Herd, to pasture all of the Common, including the part recently let. At an organisational meeting Freeman declared himself to be Chief Magistrate, whereupon he was imprisoned. The group also threatened the Bailies and Councillors, as well as the party who came to actually divide the Common in 1777. In 1778 they took the Council and Bailies to court, claiming they had failed to properly manage affairs on behalf of the Burgesses, leading to the Division of the Common. They particularly complained about how the Bailies were elected and about the actions of the present Bailies, who, they claimed, managed the business of the Town for their own ends. The Council led a counter action, and it was ultimately found in 1781 that they had the right to let the Common. The decision of the Court of Session also fixed the number of members of the Council at 31.

patten (paw'-in, pa-ten) n., arch. a wooden clog worn to raise the feet out of mud, particularly a wooden sole with an iron frame, which tied on to a shoe – 'The ladies had in wet weather to walk with pattens, there being neither cabs nor carriages ...' [RM]. The Museum has a pair from around 1800, which belonged to Mrs. Johnstone Reid of Wilton Lodge.

patter (paw'-ur) n. words used in an attempt to impress, sell something etc., repartee, badinage – 'deh gie's yer patter', 'I was giving my patter in front of the lion's cage, and ...' [RB].

patter-merchant (paw'-ur-mer-chin') n. a person who speaks rapidly and at length in an attempt to impress others – 'that Baron Munchausen's a right patter-merchant'.

Patterson see Paiterson

Pattison (pa-tee-sin) n. George Handayside (1806–85) son of William Pattison and Agnes Handayside, he was born at Wooler and educated in Edinburgh, where he trained as a lawyer. He was a Conservative in politics. In 1849 he argued in favour of continuing the Jethart Baa at the High Court in Edinburgh. In 1868 he took over from William Oliver Rutherford as Sheriff of Roxburghshire. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1869. Joseph (b.1779/80) from Carlisle, he was inn-keeper of the Cross Keys in Newcastleton (on South Hermitage Street), recorded in 1841 and 1852. His wife was Helen and they had a daughter Jane. Robert (b.1812/3) ploughman at Sorbietrees in the 1860s. His wife was Janet and their children included Helen, Scott, Andrew, Margaret and Robert. William (1729/30–1803) resident of Castleton. He married Margaret Little, who died in 1788, aged 51. Their children included: James (1758/9–1834), engineer, who died in Bolton; Mary (1779/80–98); William (1780/1–1868); and one who died in infancy. They are buried at Ettleton. William (1780/1–1868) resident of Castleton, son of William. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was listed as a labourer in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835. His wife was Margaret Cowan, who died at Newcastleton in 1848, aged 65. Their son John died at Redheugh in 1903, aged 81. He died at Oxnam Row and is buried at Ettleton (this may just be a variant of Paiterson).

pawkie (paw-kee) adj., arch. having a down-to-earth humorous outlook, roguish, waggish, wily, sly, crafty, resourceful, shrewd, knowing – 'In vain – her blink an' smirkin' smile, Her pawkie joke, and sleekie wile' [JoHa], 'A' the warpings, an' wurblings, an' queer pawkie trade, That slides on the way o' a man wi' a maid' [JoHa], 'Many a pawky trick he played upon the men of the law by field and river' [RM], 'Syne wi' cootlin' and coaxin', sae pauky and slee ...' [JT], 'Willie was shy, and Willie was pawky, Willie was tall, and Willie was gawky' [WFC] (also spelled 'pawky' and 'pauky').

Pawkie Paiterson (paw-kee-pā-tur-sin, pi'-ur-sin) n. song with words generally attributed to John Ballantyne (although it has also been suggested that it was written by Dr. John Douglas). He basically adapted a traditional Northumberland song, 'Robin Spraggon's Old Grey Mare', into Hawick dialect and with local characters. The original words related to the district of Felton in Northumberland, and in 1888 were said to have been written more than a century before. The antiquity of the tune is unknown, but it has much in common with Border (or Northumbrian) pipe music; although the words of the song clearly derive from 'Robin Spraggon's Old Grey Mare', the tune bears little resemblance (and similarly for its antecedent 'Hey! boys, up go we!' published in 1646). This makes the Hawick song quite unique compared with its Northumbrian inspiration. It was recorded being sung at the first ceremonial Colour Bussing of 1887 (by William Wilson), but is certainly much older. The characters mentioned in the song place it around the 1830s or 1840s. The words were not formally written down until long after it had become a favourite, and so there are versions that differ in minor details. An early version appears in Frank Hogg's Transactions article in 1873, somewhat different words for some verses appear in the Border Magazine in 1896 and another version is in the collection 'Vagabond Songs' (1904); these differences suggest that the song was often song extemporaneously. The tune is one of those played by the Drums and Fifes during the Common Riding and is one of the few Hawick songs in compound time. The song has been a staple of Colour Bussings since the end of the 19th century.

Pawkie Paiterson (paw-kee-pi'-ur-sin) n. general nickname for male members of local Paiterson families. The name probably predates the song. There was certainly a real 'Pawkie Paiterson', Robert Paterson, who lived in the late 18th and early 19th centuries about whom the words of the song were written. His descendants lived near the foot of the Loan and farmed at the Loan-head. It is unclear whether Nellie Harkness was his sister or his niece. However, Hawick parish records show that Robert's father Archibald and his brother James, were both also called 'Pawkie'. It may be that earlier generations also had this same nickname. Another thing that is unclear is which shade of meaning of 'pawkie' was attributed to an early member of this family.

pawn (pawn) n., arch. a pledge, sum deposited with the kirk session as a guarantee that a marriage would be forthcoming and without scandal – '...what was termed 'laying down the pawns', that is, the making of a small consignment in guarantee that the marriage would be solemnized' [JJV], '...the pawn ...remain in the clerk's hands for the space of three quarters of a year after the marriage' [PR1711], 'The pands consigned before Mr. Alexander Orok's death, which were not forfeited for immoralitie, were restoted' [PR1711]; in Hawick in the 18th century the fee was usually 14 shillings and the marriage was to take place within 40 days, with the money being held for $\frac{3}{4}$ year, v., arch. to pledge a sum to guarantee marriage and propriety – 'His consignment money panded in Mr. Orrok's time ...twentie shilling Scots piece pawnded by Jo. p-Celtic (pee-kel-tik) n. ancient language spoken throughout Britain before Anglo-Saxon took over. It is distinguished from 'q-Celtic', which includes Scots Gaelic, which was never spoken in the Borders. There were probably 4 main dialects, Cornish, Welsh, Cumbric and Pictish, with Cumbric (also sometimes called Northumbrian) being the version spoken around Hawick and in the whole kingdom of Bernicia. Several local place names have probable p-Celtic roots, including names containing 'pen' or 'caer'. Many river names may also be from this era, if not even earlier. There is a possibility that the Hawick slogan 'Teribus' comes from a Cumbric phrase.

peacefi (pees-fi) adj. peaceful – 'A peacefu' an contented mind – The greatest gift that puir mankind ...' [WP].

the Peace Medal (thu-pees-me-dul) n. medalion presented by the Burgh to all Hawick school children in January 1920. It was bronze, with a peace sign on one side, the Burgh arms on the other and with a tri-colour ribbon attached.

Their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Margaret (b.1869); Jessie (b.1871); and Jane (b.1874). James (18th/19th C.) hatter in London. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had a local connection of some sort. Probably the same hatter was a boarder living at 9 Cross Wynd in 1861, aged 56. James (19th C.) married Arabella Jane

Thompson in Hawick. Their children included Martha (b.1866), baptised in Hobkirk; and John William (b.1868), baptised in Hawick. James T. local businessman who was Callants' Club President. It is partly thanks to him that the script for Jed Murray's 'The Gutterbludes' survived. John (16th C.) servant of the Laird of Cowdenknowes. He was one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was said to have been on Edinburgh High Street with Robert Kirkton and Lance Ainslie, when they stabbed the wounded Scott several times and took his cloak and bonnets. His name is written 'Johanne Pekok'. John (b.1801/2) weaver from England. In 1841 he was living on Underdamside in Wilton, with his wife Nancy and children Thomas, Walter and William. In 1851 he was still on Underdamside with his 3 sons, as well as his niece Jane McLaughlan, mother-in-law Betty Thomline and brother-in-law William Thomline. He was still living at Underdamside in 1861, with his son Walter and 3 boarders. He is probably the 'Bill Peacock' listed among men who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson, who went to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. Joseph (18th/19th C.) painter in Hawick. He was listed as a painter on the 1799 list for the Militia ballot and still on the 1801 list. He was a member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. He is listed as a painter on the Cross Wynd in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He married Jane (or Jean) Miller in Hawick in 1798; she was also from Hawick, daughter of James Miller and Christian Wintrobe, and died in 1815. Their children included: William (b.1799); Christian (b.1801); Joseph (b.1803); James (b.1805); Alexander (b.1806); Walter (b.1808); Margaret (b.1809); Thomas (b.1812); and Jane (b.1815). The baptisms were entered into the Hawick Parish records together, suggesting the family attended one of the secession churches. The witnesses in 1799, 1801, 1805, 1806 and 1808 were writer Thomas Miller (his wife's brother) and merchant James Elliot. The 1803 baptism was before the 'Congregation at Paisley'. Peter Labour politician, educated at Hawick High School. He was a Councillor in the Highlands from 1982, has been M.S.P. for Highlands and Islands since 1999 and is Deputy Minister for Finance and Public Services. Robert (19th/20th C.) partner in the Peacock & Kennedy garage business. His wife was Margaret and they had 4 children, including William T. Thomas (b.1832/3) from Wilton, son of John, he was a handloom weaver. In 1861 he was living on Wellington Place. He married Isabella Tait in 1859 and their children included: Mary (b.1857); Agnes (b.1859); Ann Aitkin (b.1861); Rachel (b.1863); John Tait (b.1866); John Tait (again, b.1867); Margaret (b.1870); and David Tait (b.1872). Walter (19th C.) married Helen Edgar. Their children, born in Hawick, included: Agnes (b.1860). William (15th C.) tenant in Buccleuch, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. He was allowed to 'componer' for the crime of stealing 60 sheep from Glensax, with his surety being Adam Scott in Annelshope. William (18th C.) groom at Riddell in 1794 and 1797, when he was working for Sir John Riddell. William (b.1836/7) from Wilton, son of John, he was a woollen weaver. In 1861 he was living at No. 53 Loan with his wife Betsey and son John. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: John (b.1859); Jane (b.1861); Agnes (b.1864); and Margaret (b.1866); Thomas (b.1868); Walter Thomline (b.1870); and Nelly Scott (b.1872). William Thomline (1903–2004) son of Robert, he was born in Wellogate Place and educated at St. Mary's Primary and the Buccleuch School. He joined the family garage business, Peacock & Kennedy and worked there until the age of 82 (apart from a period at Rosyth in WWII). A wireless enthusiast, he introduced a radio department to the firm. He collected examples of the Hawick tongue with Ian Landles. He was also a trustee of the T.S.B. He served as Archæological Society President, and was also a committee member for decades. He contributed articles on 'Early Stockingmakers and their Industry' and 'A Notable Hawick Character, Hi-i-obby', as well as giving talks on old Hawick and early motoring in the area. He was a member of the Callants' Club for over 40 years, and regularly produced the acrostic for the main dinner guest. He contributed poetry to local newspapers and was a founder member of the Hawick Toastmasters' Club. He loved fishing and bird-watching, and was a long-time member of the Old Parish Kirk. He moved into Deanfield at the age of 98 and enjoyed celebrating his centenary. William 'Bill' (??) local railway enthusiast who wrote 'Waverley route reflections' (1983) and edited 'Border country railways' (1983), 'Border railways remembered' (1984), 'Border railways portfolio' (1985) and 'Main line to Hawick' (1986).

Peden (pee-din) n. Rev. Alexander (1626–86) born in Ayrshire, he became an outlawed Covenanter, preaching in secret for 10 years before being captured, imprisoned on the Bass Rock for 4 years, then sentenced to banishment. In 1678 he was sentenced to be sold as a slave in the plantations of Virginia; when they arrived at Gravesend all the men (including several locals) were released when their intended jailor could not be found; there were several local men on the same ship. He made it back to Scotland, but still being a fugitive, he lived for a while in Ireland, before returning to Scotland in his final year. Many geographical features are named after him, e.g. ‘Peden’s View’ near Langholm. There are ‘Peden’s Pulpits’ all over the Scottish moorland, including on Ruberslaw. In addition Denholm Dean once had a ‘Peden’s Thorn’ and a ‘Peden’s Vale’, there was another thorn tree associated with Peden at Earlside (close to Cogsmill) and there is a ‘Peden’s Cleuch’ south of Southdean and an old outhouse there was called ‘Peden’s Barn’. Additionally he is meant to have preached at ‘Peden’s Haugh’ near Langside. On the slopes of Ruberslaw during a conventicle he is supposed to have said ‘O Lord, lap the skirts of thy cloak ower puir auld Sandy’, bringing down a mist that allowed escape from the dragoons – ‘That Peden preached often here It has been heard of far and near, And some can yet point out the stone Which he did lay his bible on’ [JaSt], ‘Still on her hillsides round the guarded word Cower noble Peden’s persecuted band: E’en yet, discerning eyes by Melrose see, Becowled, a faithful brother, sombre stand’ [WL]. George (1913–64) son of Walter A. He was a butcher in Hawick. He was a regular singer of his father’s song, ‘The Lassie That Works In the Mill’. He was Acting Father to Chuck Whullans in 1948. George Mitchell (1944/5–) son of George and Ella. He was educated at Hawick High School and worked for Barrie Knitwear, later becoming Chairman of Bannatynes and Chairman of the Scottish Cashmere Association. He was Cornet in 1967, and celebrated his Jubilee year in 2017, along with his Acting Father and Mother, Chuck and Nan Whullans (probably the first time this has been achieved). His daughter Laura-Jayne was Cornet’s Lass in 2009. John ‘Jock’ (1913–84) son of Walter A. His recorded rendition of his father’s song ‘The Lassie That Works In the Mill’ saved it for posterity. Thomas (19th C.) President of the Hawick Co-operative Society in the 1870s. Thomas (19th C.) from Hawick, he was a missionary within Britain, being stationed in Cardiff. His son Michael was a member of the Hawick Home Mission. Walter Armstrong (1863–1954) born in Galashiels, but from a Hawick family, he worked as a butcher in Hawick. He was a keen horseman and cyclist. He was a member of Lodge St. James 424 and Buccleuch Bowling Club, as well as an elder of East Bank Church. He wrote ‘The Lassie That Works In the Mill’ and would sing it regularly. Exactly when it was written, and whether it was influenced by any other songs, remains unknown. He had sons

George and Jock, both of whom also sang his song at local events.

Peden's Barn (pee-dinz-bawrn) n. former name for a barn in Southdean Parish. It is said that the Covenanter Alexander Peden came there in disguise, asking about work, and being set to threshing in the barn, only for the farmer to discover the same man preaching at a nearby conventicle on the Sunday.

Peden's Haugh (pee-dinz-hawch) n. putative name for an area near Langside in the upper Slit-rig valley, where Alexander Peden is said to have preached several times.

Peden's Pulpit (pee-dinz-pool-pi') n. natural rocky chasm near the summit of Ruberslaw, used for clandestine seivices of the Covenanters, possibly including Peden. It is said that you can still see where he laid his bible, and a large flat boulder there was used as the communion table. It is a narrow cleft in the rocks, on the south-west side of the summit. A carved hollow in a nearby rock, of unknown original purpose, is said to have been used by the Covenanters for baptisms – '...Plewed rigs an planteens ... an Peden's Poo-pit buin maist' [ECS], 'Look back on majestic Ruberslaw The ghost o' covenantin' men Lookin' doon frae Peden's Pulpit That's high above the fen' [AY].

Peden's Stane (pee-dinz-stān) n. large stone in an area of moorland between the Hermitage Water and Roan Fell, near the head of one of the streams that makes up Ralton Burn. It is on land belonging to Foulshiels farm. The rock is about 2½ feet high and inscribed with 'For Auld Lang Syne AD 1824' to commemorate a place where it is said that Alexander Peden preached.

Peden's Vale (pee-dinz-vāl) n. former name for a deep glen in Denholm Dean Burn, said to be flower-clad in summer. It is about 400 yards below the ruined cottage. It was used for secret Covenanters' sermons, and according to tradition (and J.A.H. Murray) Peden himself once hid there.

the Pedlar's Field (thu-ped-lurz-feeld) n. cornfield situated where Ladylaw Place was built in the 1840s (in the middle of the north side of what is now Princes Street). The entrance gate was called 'the Pether's Yett'.

Peebles (pee-bulz) n. town built in the Tweed valley on the Eddleston Water. It is one of Scotland's royal and ancient burghs, becoming a Royal Burgh in 1367. It was formerly the county town of Peeblesshire, and headquarters for Tweeddale District Council. There has been a bridge across the Tweed there since at least 1470. The town was destroyed by Hertford's men in 1545 and again in 1547. It once had a defensive wall around the old town, on the right bank of the Eddleston. It was a major centre for brewing and wool production, but now focuses on tourism. St. Mungo's Well there is supposed to be connected with a 6th century visit. Peebles Castle, built by David I, was long a royal residence, but a ruin by the end of the 17th century, and nothing of it now remains. However, the visible ruins of the Cross Kirk include part of a 13th century friary; this was the burial place of the chiefs of the Scotts until the end of the 15th century. Peebles Hotel Hydro, built 1878–81, and rebuilt 1905–07 after a fire, is a dominating feature. The Mercat Cross contains part of the 17th century original. The Town House dates from 1753, and Chambers' Institution, built mainly in 1859, has long served as a cultural centre. Peebles Beltane Week at the end of June (focussed on the Saturday closest to Midsummer) was begun in 1897, reinstating the Riding of the Marches and linking it with the ancient Beltane Fair. It includes a ceremony at Neidpath Castle (with ceremonial Wardens of the Cross Kirk and of Neidpath Castle) and the dancing of the Cornet's Reel in the High Street. The Cornet and Beltane Queen use accoutrements dating from the 1920s Population (1991) 7,056 (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh for 'temporary huts').

Peebles (pee-bulz) n. James of that Ilk (15th C.) recorded as 'Jacobum de Paiblis' in 1437 when he was one of 2 'procurators' for Alexander of Weens when he resigned his lands of Weens (probably Weensland) into the hands of the Baron of Hawick.

Peedlum (peed-lum) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the late 19th century – 'Poodge and Peedlum gang doon the toon, Sly Tammy and Kittlin' Soup gang up; There's Paddy Barratt and Jamie Broon, And there's Dick Newall and Johnny Whup' [HI].

peel (peel) n. a pill – 'er ee on peels then?' (sometimes spelled 'piel').

peel (peel) n. a keep, small fortified tower, particularly one constructed near the Scotland/England Border around the 16th century – 'Invidious rust corrodes the bloody steel; Dark and dismantled lies each ancient peel' [JL], 'The ruined Tower and Border peel, Beneath the moon's cold rays Seem once again astir with life As in the bygone days' [JCG], 'He gathered his band round Elliot's peel, At darkest hour of night,

When those within were scarce prepared For hard and bloody fight' [BM1909] (from Old French; also written 'pele'; the word is used in several place names, e.g. Peel, Peelbrae, Peel Burn, Peel Fell and Peel Knowe).

peel (peel) v., poet. to skin, injure the skin – 'He'll fight the field though heads are peeled' [MG] (see also peelin their wands).

Peel (peel) n. popular name for Peel Hospital. The house there is a Scottish baronial mansion built in 1909 for a Leith seed merchant, designed by John Kinross. The house was used as staff accommodation during the time the estate was a hospital. There are several other places around the Borders with the same (or similar) names, including a former seat of the Elliots in upper Liddesdale. Essentially the same lands were called 'Hairtherne' in 1533 when first acquired by Walter Scott of Branxholme and it is 'Peill and Hatherne' in 1718 when surveyed along with other Buccleuch properties.

Peel (peel) n. former tower on the Peel Burn in the upper Liddel valley, close to the Border, just to the west of Peel Fell. It was once a site of some importance, being next to the Wheel Causeway, formerly the only toad in the neighbourhood. It is now marked only as 'Peel House' on the Ordnance Survey maps, but also gave its name to the stream and nearby hill. Also referred to as Baxtonlees, the lands were owned by several branches of the Elliot family in the 17th and 18th centuries. 'Peil' was listed among the lands in upper Liddesdale that were once held by Jedburgh Abbey. In 1659 it was sold by Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs to William Elliot of Binks and Swinside. John Elliot was there according to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls. The tenant there in 1694 was Francis Beat-tie. In 1710 it was passed to John Elliot's only son John, but since he failed to survive his father it then passed 1/5 each to John's daughters Elizabeth, Christian, Jean and Margaret, and the last 1/5th to his 3 grandchildren! In the 1730s they all sold it to Henry Elliot, a cousin, son of Henry of Harwood. Henry Elliot paid tax on 10 windows there in 1748. His son Henry sold it again later in the 18th century. Thomas Scott bought it from Lord Douglas in 1807. It later passed to William Scott-Elliott and then his brother John Scott-Elliott. In the 19th century there was a shepherd there called Hutton (probably Robert), from whom William Oliver of Langraw collected many Border ballads. John Riddell was farmer there in 1868 (it was 'Peall' in 1694, 'Pill' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and also 'Pill' in the 1748 Window Tax Roll).

peel-an-eat (peel-an-ee') n., arch. a potato boiled in its jacket – 'When supper comes, instead of better meat, He feeds on potatoes, peel and eat' [JR], adj. said of potatoes boiled in their jackets – '... That never mair wull I eat sae mony Hard 'taties, 'peel an' eat' [AO], also applied to a delicate or sickly person (noted by E.C. Smith).

Peel-an-Eat (peel-an-ee') n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

Peelbrae (peel-brā) n. former farm, presumably lying below Peelbraehope and near to the 'Peel Brae', which is south-east of Priestthaugh, and on the slopes of 'Muckle Knowe'. The remains of a peel tower there explains the name. Before 1498 the lands were owned by the Elliots of Redheugh and referred to as 'Tillielee' or 'Tilloly'. They were probably owned (or leased) by Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill in the mid-16th century. Robert Elliot of Redheugh served as cautioner for the residents of the lands there in 1574. There were Wigholms there in the early 17th century. It formed part of the extensive Buccleuch lands of Ringwoodfield in a 1660 document, where it is also said to be called 'Tillieleehope'. William Scott, John Dalgleish and John Telfer were listed there in 1694. The farm was joined to that of Priestthaugh in 1707 and was rented from the Buccleuch Estates by Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill in 1741. The farm was surveyed in 1718 and a plan exists. At that time it consisted of 175 acres and was bounded by Dodburn, Priestthaugh and Brough. William Elliot was recorded there in 1727 (it is 'Peilbra' and 'Peilbray' in 1574, 'Peilbrae' in 1612 and 1660, 'Pealbrea' in 1694 and 1727 and 'Peillbrae' in 1741; the element 'peil' could refer to a ditch, namely the Catrail).

Peel Brae (peel-brā) n. slope on the west side of Muckle Knowe, lying on the east side of the Priestthaugh Burn. The name is surely related to the former lands of Peelbrae, and perhaps to the pele-house, which is to the north-east. There is a cairn there.

Peelbraehope (peel-brā-hōp) n. former farmstead up in the hills east of Priestthaugh, in the headwaters of the Penchrise Burn. There is now nothing left of the house, but a cairn marks the spot, with a plaque commemorating its long inhabitation by the Elliots, and stating that it was once an important meeting point on the drove road from Teviotdale to Liddesdale. Thomas Nichol was tenant in 'Pealbraehophead' in 1694. There was a dispute between Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs and Ann, Duches of Buccleuch, resulting in the boundary with Penchrise being fixed in 1718. This is described in the survey of Buccleuch estates carried out in that year, when it consisted of 965 acres and was bounded by Priesthaugh and Dod on the west and lands owned by Elliott of Stobs to the south, east and north. Sir Gilbert leased the lands from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. The Nichol family were there in the 19th century and J. Armstrong was recorded there in 1868. In the late 19th century it was home of a family of Elliots, with 22 children born to 2 mothers; about 200 descendants recently gathered in New Zealand. The farmstead was evacuated in 1943 when it became part of the firing range for Stobs Camp. The Tinlee Stone is just to the south and a section of the Catrail (the part nearest to Hawick) passes to the north – ‘The soft breeze blawn owre Peelbraehope Seems murmurin ‘Amen!’’ [WL] (also written ‘Peelbrae Hope’, it is ‘Peilbraehope’ in 1718).

Peel Burn (peel-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, running roughly east, past the ruins of Mervinslaw Tower, to meet the Jed Water. There is an area of rig lines to the south.

Peel Fell (peel-fel) n. hill on the Border, south-east of Singdean, reaching a height of 602 m, the highest peak for many miles around.

Peel Hospital (peel-hos-pi’-ul) n. hospital near Galashiels, serving the Borders for several decades, and being the main hospital for the Hawick area from after WWII to the 1980s. The estate was requisitioned from Lord Craigmyle in 1939 to provide a hospital for military casualties. It was extended through the construction of several Nissen huts and became a civilian hospital after the War, with further extensions in 1949, 1957, 1963 and 1969. Always inadequate, and awkward to get to, eventually it closed in 1988 and a new hospital (the B.G.H.) was constructed at Huntlyburn.

peelie-wallie (pee-lee-waw-lee) adj. sickly, pale – ‘hei looks gei peelie-wallie the day, div ee no hink?’, lacking in strength, lacklustre – ‘that was a peelie-wallie performance on the pitch the day’ (also written ‘peely-wally’).

Peel Knowe (peel-now) n. hill on Hawthornside farm, indicating the existence of a former peel tower near there, once a seat of the Turnbulls. It is said that stones from the tower were used to construct the farmhouse at Hawthornside. There was also a shepherd’s cottage on the hill there.

Peel-quarter (peel-kaw’-ur) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Belses. They are transcribed as ‘Peile-quarter’ in 1616 when inherited by Andrew Scott of Aikwood from his father Robert. It was still listed as a property of the Kers of Cavers Carre in 1678, when it is ‘Peil Quarter’ and in 1684 when it is ‘Peill-quarter’.

Peel Wud (peel-wud) n. plantation around Penchrise Peel house, west of Shankend farm.

Peel Wud (peel-wud) n. plantation on the opposite side of the Teviot from Newmill. It was probably named after Allanhaugh Tower.

peirs (peerz) n., pl. pears, once grown in the area, particularly in Jedburgh, probably a remnant of the orchards of the Abbey. The oldest varieties that were grown included the Longueville, the Bon Chretien, the Ludd, the Bergamot, the Pound Pear, the Red Honey, the White Warden, the Gray Warden and the Grey Good-wife. Other varieties grown were the Gray Auchan, the Red Auchan, the Worry Carl, the Buchanan, the Drummond, the Golden Knop, the Lamias and the Pitfirran. Jedburgh had 40 acres of orchards at one point, and the trade spread to neighbouring villages and towns. The peak in production and fame was probably around the early 19th century, but by the 20th century the trade collapsed.

peise (pīs) n., arch. the pea, pease – '... and no person, young or old, be found gathering or pulling of their neighbour's peise ...' [BR1695], adj. relating to the pea – 'Item, that no person burn any peise sheaves or inbring into house, barnyards, or sets any sort of corne or grain ...' [BR1696] (see also pease).

pen (pen) n., arch. a hill, particularly a pointed conical one – 'He lorded it wide o'er the Pen o' Skelfhill' [HSR] (from the early Cumbric word, being the p-Celtic version of 'ben'; it occurs in place names, e.g. Penchrise Pen and Ettrick Pen, as well as sometimes Skelfhill Pen, the lost placename Penangushope and probably also in Penielheugh).

Penango see Pennango

Penangushope (pen-awng-gis-hōp) n. narrow valley through which the Mossypaul Burn flows, a surviving variant of the lost area name Pen-nango. The lands (along with Cauldcleuch) were granted by William, 1st Earl of Douglas, to the monks of Melrose Abbey about 1358, for masses to be said for Sir William Douglas of Lothian, and confirmed in 1381. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers in an English document c.1380. Sir Alexander de Penangushope was witness to a charter of the lands of Lag, Dumfries in the period 1405–12. The lands of 'Penangushop' were included in some leased by Walter Scott of Branxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500, lying within the extensive Lairdship of Ringwoodfield. Robert Elliot ('Young Robin') probably held the lands in the mid-16th century. Robert Elliot of Redheugh rented them from Melrose Abbey around 1557; at that time they were valued at £5. They are still recorded as part of Ringwoodfield in 1621, 1634, 1653, 1660 and 1661, although confusingly referred to as ‘also called Skelshill (presumably ‘Skelhill’ is meant)’ in 1660. It was recorded as still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1663. The name ‘Pennango’ may not have occurred after the end of the 17th century. The valley was also known as ‘Glen Penango’ according to the Ordnance Survey Name Book (it is ‘penangushop’ and ‘penangushope’ in about 1358, ‘Penangoshope’ in c.1380, ‘Penangushoup’ in 1557, ‘Pennangushoip’ in 1564, ‘Penangushope’ in 1574, ‘Pennanginshope’ in 1621, ‘Pennangus’ in 1634, ‘Pennangwshop’ in 1653, ‘Pannangoishope’ in 1663 and ‘Pannangushop’ in 1693; it is marked as ‘Panangus hoap’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Penangushope (pen-awng-gis-hōp) n. Sir Alexander (14th/15th C.) witness to a charter of the lands of Lag, Dumfries in the period 1405–12. William (14th C.) collector of contributions of the constabulary of Edinburgh according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1360 and 1369. His name is written ‘de Penangishop’. He may be related to the William ‘de Penango’ recorded in 1332 (this surname surely comes from the region in southern Roxburghshire; see also Pennango).

pencell (pen-sul) n., arch. a small flag, pennon, alternative spelling of ‘pensil’. This is the first recorded word for the Flag in the Burgh Records of 17th May 1703 – ‘The said day the Common rydeing was ordained to be upon Fryday, the twenty eight of May, iIM, vijC. and thrie yeares, James Scott, called Laird, was voted to cary the pencell’ [BR1703], ‘... the person or persons that was statut and ordained to carry the towne pencill or Colour the day befor being Fryday, the last of May ...’ [BR1706], ‘... and George Deanes, merchand, was the first that caried the new pencell, standard or colour ...’ [BR1707] (also spelled ‘pencill’, etc.).

Penchrise (pen-krīs) n. farm south of Hawick, reached from there by a rough track. Traditionally the lands are said to have held an ancient chapel, although there is no evidence to support this (and it probably comes from a confusion over the name). The name is also used for the prominent hill ‘Penchrise Pen’, which is nearby. It was part of the lands resigned by Thomas de Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas in 1368. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers in an English document c.1380. In 1464/5 Thomas Turnbull of Penchrise was witness to a local sasine.

These were probably the lands tenanted by William Douglas ‘in Pencress’ who was appointed as a Sheriff of Roxburghshire in order to give sasine to Adam Hepburn for the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1508. It is listed among the lands within the Barony of Cavers in 1511. James Douglas of Cavers and his wife Elizabeth Murray had a charter for the lands in 1512, and there is another Douglas of Cavers deed in 1525. In 1574 it was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty ‘for the cryme of thift in tyme bigane’; this included ‘Mirk Hob’ Elliot. Robert Elliot, ‘Mirk Hob’ was also recorded as tenant in 1576. Peter Elliot was there in 1586/7. Robert Henderson was there in 1618. William Elliot was there in 1680. It was ‘Penchryst’ owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and also when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. It was included in the lands of the Eliotts of Stobs according to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls. John Thomson was there in 1684 when his son John was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. It appears to have been among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott from his father in 1692. William Elliot was tenant there in 1694. The lands were acquired by Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot in the early 18th century and after a dispute with the Buccleuch estates the boundary with Peelbraehope was fixed in 1718. James Reid was there in 1709, John Elliot in 1714 and 1728–30, Robert Clerk in 1729 and John Mitchellhill in 1734. Gideon Scott was farmer there in at least 1785–97. John Armstrong, Henry Elliot and Thomas Grieve were servants there in 1799 and Thomas Douglas, William Amos and John Thomson in 1801. In 1841 Alexander Burnet, Henry Scott and their families were living there. A. Linton was recorded there in a directory of 1868. The area around the farm was used for military training between the world wars, with a rifle firing range just to the north-west of the farm buildings – ‘... But the auld gudewife of Penchrise Cam’ in wi’ a shouder o’ mutton’ [ES] (a rare local survival of the old Brythonic or p-Celtic ‘pen’, the name may be ‘pen crys’, meaning ‘the hill with the girdle’, perhaps referring to the Iron Age fortifications, although this origin of ‘chrise’ is not at all certain; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Pencress’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Pencrest’; it is ‘penercrys’ in 1368, ‘Pencriz’ in c.1380, ‘Pencryse’ in 1464/5, ‘Pentrise’ and ‘Penchrise’ in 1511,

Penchrise Burn (pen-kris-burn) n. stream rising near the Pike and running to the east of Penchrise Pen to join the Slitrig. There is an earth and stone banked enclosure and other banks on a sloping shelf above the Burn, on the eastern side, near Burnt Craig Wood; this could be related to military operations at Stobs Camp. To the west, on the eastern slopes of Penchrise Pen are the remains of a settlement. Further south, also on the west side of the stream are the remains of a homestead, about 25 m in diameter, with a probably hut platform inside, with an entrance on the west and probable old trackway leading to it. Graptolites have been found in the rocks here.

Penchrise Peel (pen-kris-peel) n. small farm steading on the opposite side of the Slitrig from Shankend. A Scots baronial type house was built there to J.P. Alison’s design in 1908. The wood around the farm is called Peel Wood.

Penchrise Pen (pen-kris-pen) n. hill near Penchrise farm, reaching a height of 439 m (1,439 ft). It contains a triangulation pillar and former military observation post (which blew over in a storm in the 1970s), as well as the remains of several earthworks and the ramparts of a hill-fort. Like several other major peaks in the area, the hill is formed from igneous rocks. The bare cone of rock at the summit is enclosed within 3 ramparts, with entrances to the north-west and north-east. Within the roughly 105 m by 80 m enclosure are banks and possible hut circles. There is a roughly triangular annex immediately to the west, containing 3 hut circles and another enclosure to the north-east. On the eastern slopes is another earthwork, probably a settlement, measuring about 50 m by 40 m; it has been partly erased by cultivation, as well as quarrying and has a sheepfold partly on top. On the southern slopes of the hill lie the remains of a settlement, about 50 m by 45 m, as well as a small homestead. The Catrail also crosses to the south of the Pen. The conical shape of the hill makes it easily recognisable over a wide area of the Borders. The training grounds for Stobs Camp stretched all the way to here at one point, with WWI practice trenches being dug on the north-west slopes – ‘Is yon the star, o’er Penchryst Pen, That rises slowly to her ken,

And, spreading broad its wavering light, Shakes its loose tresses on the night?’ [SWS], ‘... And o’er high hill, and hollow glen, Round Liddle-head, and Penchrise-pen’ [AD], ‘Like a breeze upon the High Street singing down from Penchrise Pen, They waft our weariest worries clean beyond the haunts of men’ [JYH], ‘I’ve felt on top o’ Penchrise The warm sun beekin down’ [WL] (a curious double use of the ancient p-Celtic root ‘pen’; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Pen hill’ and is ‘Penchrest pen’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the spelling varies, e.g. it is ‘Penchrestpen’ in 1839).

pend (pend) n. a vaulted or arched passageway, especially one leading from a street to a courtyard, an arched walkway – ‘oo bade in a pend off the Howegate’, ‘oo’ve got a lot o pends bit nane o thum er actually caaed that officially’ [IWL], ‘A’m shair ilka corner and gairden and pend ...’ [??], ‘... A toff cam in wi’ bulging pack And dumped it in the pend’ [WL], ‘... oo’ve quite a lot o pends in Hawick, really’ [ME], an arched roof, the arch of a bridge – ‘... the bonnie Teviot, dooce an purpose-leike ... gleidin neth the pends [ECS] (from Latin; see also pendit, pendit hoose and penned).

pendicle (pen-di-kul) n., arch. a subsidiary piece of land – ‘...land of Norcroft, with the pairtis, pendiclis, and pertinentis of the samyn ...’ [SB1603].

pendit (pen-dee’, -di’) adj., arch. vaulted, arched – ‘... Aneath the pendit arches O’ the auld Mid Raw’ [JT] (see pend).

pendit hoose (pen-dee’-hoos) n., arch. a 2-storey house with a vaulted lower floor. In former times ‘pended buildings’ were the common mode of defensive construction, with the upper floors being reached using a ladder via a hole in the ceiling of the arch below. This construction was partly for protection and partly so the animals could be housed on the bottom floor. The walls were originally several feet thick. Outside stairs projecting into the street were added to most of them in the 17th and 18th centuries. The back of 51 High Street is the last example of such a fortified house in Hawick, with No. 53 being the last one on the front of the street (rebuilt at the end of the 19th century). There were formerly a great number in Hawick, situated all along the High Street and Howegate, but most were replaced during the 18th and 19th centuries.

Pendreigh (pen-dree) n. Mr. (19th C.) poulterer in Hawick. In 1878 he surprisingly presented himself as an alternative Council candidate to Robert Fraser Watson for Wilton Ward. At the ward meeting he received the same number of votes as Councillor Watson, but was later encouraged to step aside; Watson was elected unopposed and became Provost a few years later. He may be the Robert C. who married Agnes Dryden and whose son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1869.

pen-fauld (pen-fawld) n., arch. the yard near a farmer's house used for holding his cattle (noted by J. Jamieson).

Penicuik (pe-nee-kook) n. town between Peebles and Edinburgh. It has a 'Hunter and Lass' celebration in late May, which began in 1936 and is modelled on the traditional Border Common Ridings. Population about 18,000.

Peniel Heugh (pī-nul-hew) n. officially called the Waterloo Monument, it is a striking local landmark, being the tallest man-made feature in the Borders. It is perched on 237 m (791 ft) Peniel Heugh Hill, north of Jedburgh, which also hosts an ancient British fort. It was built for the Marquess of Lothian to celebrate Wellington's victory. It is a circular tower, 48 m (150 ft) high, which can be reached via a side road near Monteviot House, although there is currently no public access to the interior. The first architect was William Burn, but the original construction collapsed in 1816 when it was about 3/4 completed (this is sometimes ascribed to a small earthquake). The new design was by Archibald Elliot (also responsible for Jethart Castle Jail) and was completed 1817–24. It was popularly known as 'Wellington's Pillar' around the time it was built. A wooden gallery at the top was added in 1867 to mark Queen Victoria's visit to the Borders. The trees planted around the hill were reputedly supposed to represent the armies at Waterloo, but there is unfortunately no truth to this. There is also a triangulation pillar on the summit of the hill. There is a booklet by Garret O'Brien – 'Duist a hip-step-an-a-lowp, an A cam on o an-ther kenspeckle landmerk – Peinelheuch' [ECS] (the origin of the name is possibly the Old Welsh 'pen' and Old English 'hyll hoh', meaning tautologically 'hill hill height'; the biblical 'Peniel', pronounced entirely differently, may have influenced the spelling that appears on Stobie's 1770 map; it is 'the hill callit Paynyelheucht or Downalddisknow' in 1581, which may suggest that the first element was never 'pen'; the name appears as 'Painchelhill' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Penielheugh see Peniel Heugh

Penman (pen-mun) n. Dr. (19th C.) doctor in Hawick. He was surgeon to the Mechanics' Friendly Society. His practice was taken over by Dr. Lorraine in about 1889. George (1921–2000) writer for the Hawick News, contributing the 'Rambler' column as well as covering sport. He worked in Pesco's, finishing as Sales Director, played for Hawick both at rugby and cricket, was President of Hawick R.F.C. 1975–77, and was also Callants' Club President and Chairman of the Community Council. John (d.c.1688) tenant in Winnington Rig in 1688 when his will was recorded. There was a notary in the Jedburgh area noted in 1631 (who also had a son called John), who might possibly be the same man. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1704); and Henry (b.1706). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a workman in Whitchesters in 1708 and a carrier in 1712. He married Agnes Aitken and his children included: Isobel (b.1708); James (b.1710); and Thomas (b.1712). The witnesses in 1708 were James Gray in Whitlaw and Francis Henderson in Flex and in 1712 were Robert Thomson and John Dryden. Rev. William (c.1602–68) educated at Edinburgh, he became minister of Morebattle in 1634. He signed the National Covenant, probably in Hawick, in 1638. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Andrew Sturgeon of Torrorrie.

Penmanshaa (pen-munz-haw) n. Penmanshall, former farmstead roughly between Harden and Borthwickshiels, lying on the Penmanshaa Burn. Michael Anderson lived at 'penmans-hall' in 1773 and 1775. William Black was there in 1793 (the origin of the name is unknown, but could relate to an early resident called Penman).

Penmanshaa Burn (pen-munz-haw-burn) n. stream rising north of Borthwickshiels and running into Harden Burn. The farm of Penmanshaa was located there in the 18th century.

Pennango (pen-awng-gō) n. former name for lands around Mossypaul, surviving as 'Penangushope' for the valley through which the Mossypaul Burn flows. The name is included in a description of the boundaries of Ringwood when it was granted to Melrose Abbey in the 1160s. The land was gifted to the monks of Melrose by William Earl of Douglas in the 14th century. The name also appears as an occasional surname, e.g. in 1552 'Sym Pennango' was paid by the Court to deliver letters to the Laird of Buccleuch, and in the 1577 Edinburgh Burgess roll ‘Andro Penango’ became a Burgess by right of being servant to the Lord Provost (also spelled ‘Penango’ etc. and cf. Penangushope; another example of the ancient p-Celtic root ‘pen’, this perhaps meaning ‘marshy hill’ or ‘uninhabited hill’; the name is mentioned around 1200, and a small valley ‘Penangushope’ occurs in many 14th–17th century documents; it was stated as being pronounced by shepherds as ‘Glinpineagle’ or ‘Glenpenanga’ in notes for the Ordnance Survey in the 1850s; it has recently been fancifully connected with ‘Agned’, the site of a purported battle involving King Arthur, but there is no evidence for this).

Pennango (pen-awng-gō) n. David ‘Davie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having led about 10 Scotsmen on a raid on ‘Brome’ in Gilsland, where the wife of Andrew Routledge was killed. Gyrie (d.bef. 1536) recorded in an account of events in Scotland in 1536. There was ‘ane singular fechtig betuix the Johnstounis on the ane pairt, twa Moffettis and Gyrie Panago on the vther pairt’ in the presence of James V; this was perhaps a late case of judicial ordeal by battle. He was killed, along with a Moffat and a Johnstone. It is unclear if ‘Gyrie’ is short for something. Hugh (16th/17th C.) recorded in about 1600 in documents relating to a feud between the Earl of Cassilis and the Laird of Bargany. His name is recorded as ‘Hew Pennandgow’. Hugh (17th C.) witnessed a bond by Lord Mauchline in 1655. His name is written ‘Hughe Pennango’. In an inventory for John Muir of Park in Ayrshire (dated 1685, but probably referring to about 1652) he was ‘Hugh Pennango in Broadlay’. Perhaps the same Hugh was recorded in a case involving the Duchess of Lauderdale in 1685. James (16th C.) recorded in 1532 when he had the gift of all the goods of James Symontoun in ‘Lekclyok’. James (17th C.) son of Robert, who was tenant in Cockburnspath. In 1674 he became an apprentice, to saddler Robert Childers in Edinburgh. He may be one of the last of this surname on record. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘fermourer’ in Cockburnspath in 1674 when his son James became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was presumably tenant of the mill at Cockburnspath. Simon (16th C.) servant of the Earl of Angus and vassal of the Barony of Douglas. He was servant to the Earl of Angus when he defended Tantallon Castle when it was besieged by James V in 1528. In 1531 he was a member of the royal household and in 1533 received the gift of the ward and marriage of John Carmichael. He was given livery from the King in 1535 and had a gift of the non-entries of part of the lands of ‘Auchincors and Corsyncon’ in Ayrshire in 1535/6. In 1537 he was in ward and his goods were pointed by royal officers, so he had clearly fallen out of favour. In 1538 he was sent from Edinburgh Castle to Tantallon, and in 1540 was back in Edinburgh Castle. He returned to favour with the King later in 1540 and was granted lands in the Barony of Douglas. He may also be the ‘Symiune Pennango’ who was recorded as Captain of Coldingham in 1543. William (14th C.) recorded in 1332 as licenciante in arts and illegitimate son of a married man. He was given dispensation to be ordained and to hold a benefice; however, it is unclear if that happened. William (16th C.) tenant in Easter Whitfield. He witnessed as precept by the Commendator of Coldingham in 1557. He may be the same William who was granted the lands of Middle Blantgart (in the Barony of Douglas) in 1539, and was surely related to Simon, who held these lands earlier (this surname is surely related to the place in Roxburghshire and was prevalent in Ayrshire, although now extinct; see also Penangushope).

the Pennant (thu-pe-nin) n. another name for the Flag – ‘Nor will their prowess be forgot While Pennant is on high, For Callants still are ready yet To serve it well – or die’ [WFC].

penned (pend) pp., adj., poet. arched, vaulted – ‘It surely has been penn’d in night, For there’s moon madness i’ the clatter’ [JoHa] (see also pend).

pennies each (pe-nee-eech) interj., arch. call of a hawker for items that cost one penny each – ‘Where actually ‘a penny each’ was meant, vendors at Hawick Common-Riding games were to be heard calling: ‘Programmes for the games, pennies each!’ [ECS].

pennil (pe-nil) n., arch. a pennon – ‘...carried the same along the haill common, and through the haill town, deriding, mocking, Scoffing and laughing at the old pennil and bearers and carriers thereof’ [BR1706], ‘The new pennel, standard or colour ...’ [BR1707] (also written ‘pennel’; an alternative to pensil).

Pennington (pe-nin-tin) n. Jean nee Beattie (1936–2022) only surviving daughter of Rev. J. Donald Beattie, she was born in Wilton Manse. She was educated at an Edinburgh boarding school and became a teacher at Prestonpans and at George Watson’s in Edinburgh. She was present with her father at the National Service in St. Giles Cathedral for the accession of Queen Elizabeth I in 1553. In 1962 she married Peter and they had 2 children.

the Pennon (thu-pe-nin) n. a term used to refer to the Flag – ‘We’ll lift our spears of service, where’er our feet may roam, To the Vision of the Pennon on the dear old hills of home’ [JYH], ‘... Took their cherished pennon from them, Put them to ignoble rout’ [TK], ‘The Cornets, God bless them, all Gentlemen, true, They still guard the Pennon and new life imbue’ [WFC].

the Pennon Way (thu-pe-nin-wā) n. public footpath stretching 270 miles from Kirk Yetholm in the Borders to Edale in the Peak District (or the other way round). Although called after the Pennines, it also traverses about half of the Cheviots. It is regarded as one of the most challenging long-distance walks in Britain. The closest part to Hawick is the stretch (on the wrong side of the Border) between Windy Gyle and Byrness.

penny-bridal (pe-nee-brī-dul) n., arch. a wedding ceremony in which the guests contribute a small amount of money towards the entertainment, with any surplus going to the bride and groom – ‘John Hart being cited to compear before the session for making a pennybryddall at his daughter Christian’s marriage ...’ [BR1703].

Pennycook (pe-nee-kook) n. Alexander (b.c.1835) son of John and Jane, who were from Lanark. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was responsible for the murder of William Ainslie in Free Church Lane, with young William Moore also involved. Peter (b.c.1810) farmer at Highchesters Mill in 1841. He was living there with his siblings Barbara and Robert. He was probably from Dundee and in 1851 was living in Peebles with his sister Barbara, who had married Selkirk innkeeper Walter Brydon. Peter (b.1832) born at Rawflat. He farmed at Newhall in Bowden Parish. He is probably the Peter of Bewlie who served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In the 1860s he resided at Hallrule house. In about 1874 he is recorded being ‘of Bewlie Hill’ when he was owner of lands in Bewlie that had formerly been owned by William Riddell of Camieston. He also held lands in Bowden Parish, including Midlem Mill. In 1855 he married Robina, daughter of Henry Elliot, farmer at Greenriver (i.e. Hobsburn). They had one daughter, Agnes Ellen, who married James Lindsay, son of George Oliver, solicitor in Hawick. William, J.P. (19th/20th C.) one of the main people involved with the time capsule inserted into the Horse Monument in 1914 and uncovered in 2003. He was probably the same W.M. who was in the first pair to win the Pow Cup in 1905. He lived at 10 Beaconsfield Terrace.

the penny end (thu-pe-nee-end) n. popular name for primary 1 at some schools, or the part of the school where they were taught (such as Buccleuch School and Wilton School, where the first three years were separated).

Pennymuir (pe-nee-mewr) n. site of Roman marching camps on Dere Street, just a few miles from the Border, near the head of the Kale Water, about 15 miles east of Hawick. Dere Street can be followed from there to Whitton Edge (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh ‘pen y muir’, meaning ‘the hill of the wall’; the name occurs at least as early as 1637, and is often written ‘Pennymoor’).

penny-stane (pe-nee-stān) n., arch. a game, similar to quoits, played with a flat, round ‘penny-stone’ – ‘[One profanes the Lord’s day by] gameing at the bob and penny stane’ [HAST1904] (recorded about 1695).

Pen Sike (pen-sik) n. small stream that rises between Penchrise Pen and White Hill, running to the south to join the Penchrise Burn. At its head there in a linear earthwork crossing White Hill, which is probably an agricultural boundary. There are also the remains of a settlement in its headwaters, on the south-west slope of Penchrise Pen. It appears that it corresponds to the stream formerly known as Langcleuch.

Pen Sike (pen-sik) n. small stream that rises just to the north of Skelfhill Pen and runs in an easterly direction to join the Skelfhill Burn.

pensil (pen-sil) n., arch. a pennon, banner, standard, especially used for the flag carried in the Hawick Common Riding in the 1700s – ‘The person elected cornet having declined to carry the pennil [sic], or colour, caused ane great disturbance, confusion, and mutiny amongst the otherwise civil inhabitants’ [BR], ‘See their pensil floating o’er them! See them drive the kye before them’ [RSC]’ (from Old French, diminutive of ‘penon’).

Penstemon Alice Hindley (pen-sti-min-aw-lis-hind-lee) n. large-leaved, perennial variety of penstemon, introduced by Forbes’ Nurseries in 1931, and one of the oldest hybrids in cultivation today. It is a popular plant and was given the Royal Horticultural Society Award of Garden Merit.

pent (pent) v., poet. to paint – ‘The picture-pentin man’s despair ...’ [JBS] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation).

Pentecost (pen-tu-kost) n. festival celebrating the descent of the Holy Spirit after the Ascension, seven weeks after Easter. It was formerly used as one of the days for paying rents and legal fees, and was later referred to as Whitsunday.

the Pentecostal (thu-pen-tu-kos-tul) n. popular name for a Pentecostal congregation (whose members seek to be filled with the Holy Spirit, like the Apostles at Pentecost). They originally met in a Mission Hall on Beaconsfield Terrace before WWI, and in a wooden hut at the bottom of Laidlaw Terrace in the mid-20th century. It was also referred to as ‘the Apostolic’, and held big meetings for children during the War years. The site was where the Evergreen Hall was later built.

penter (pen-tur) n., poet. a painter – ‘Ay, penter lad, thraw to the wund ...’ [JBS] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation).

Penton (pen-tōn) n. station on the Waverley Line just south of the Border. The nearby ‘Penton Linns’ are a picturesque series of waterfalls on the Liddel Water (which marks the Border here), and is also an area of special geological interest. The bridge there was built in 1812, with one of the contractors drowning when removing the wooden supports from the arch – ‘Go with me to Penton Grove, bonnie lassie O, Through its mazie walks we’ll rove, bonnie lassie O, Where the Liddel waters rin, With their wild resounding din, As they flow out o’er the Linn, bonnie lassie O’ [DA].

penult (pen-ult) adj., arch. penultimate, last but one – ‘...writin at Hawik the penult day of Januar’ [RBA1561].

Penwen (pen-win) n. Robert (15th C.) received the Rectory of ‘Sowdon’, i.e. Southdean Parish in 1424, having been given Holy Trinity in Berwick upon Tweed, but obtaining Southdean ‘by collation’ first. He is recorded as Rector in 1443 when he was assigned the canonry and prebend of ‘Capyt alias Balderen’ in Dunkeld. He also held the perpetual vicarage of Closeburn and some tithes from Morton. He was further recorded in as Rector in 1444 when he witnessed a charter for the Kers of Altonburn. He could be the same Robert ‘Pennwen’, Clerk of the Diocese of Glasgow, who, in 1447, was granted a canonry of Glasgow, which was the gift of Thomas ‘Perawen’ (presumably a close relative); however, this was blocked when he was found to be the illegitimate son of a priest, a fact that was dismissed by the new Pope in 1461. This Robert at that time already held the perpetual vicarage of Calder. In 1455 he was master ‘Roberto pendven’ Rector of ‘sowdon’ as adjudicator for a dispute over teinds in Morebattle; ‘Master Thomas Pendven’, Rector of ‘Kerkmachquho’ (probably Kirkmahoe) was mentioned in the same document and hence possibly his brother (and ‘John Pendwen’, Vicar of Sprouston recorded in 1475 was surely another relative). He was Robert ‘Rendven’ when recorded as still Rector of ‘Sowdon’ in 1455 (also spelled ‘Pendven’, ‘Penven’ and variants).

peppercurns (pe-pur-kurnz) n., arch. a small device for grinding pepper – ‘Peppercurns. A simple machine for grinding pepper, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

peppoch (pe-poch) n., arch. a collection of cherry stones – ‘Peppoch, The store of cherry-stones from which the castles of peeps are supplied; called also Feedow, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also ‘paipoch’).

per (per) n. a pair – ‘...wui a face aa coal-coom, an a perr o reed-ribbon een glintin leike slaes’ [ECS], ‘Dunion ...is buirdly billie ti Ruberslaw, an there the perr stand, shooder ti shooder’ [ECS], ‘...and in this class is the common usage perr o horse (= pair of horses)’ [ECS], ‘When the Royal per arrived Aw ge’id a wee bit wave teh the Duikie’ [BW1978], ‘...the biggest per o feet in the band is size 11½ ...’ [CT], ‘...the per’s honeymoon destination wasni near si exotic’ [IWL], ‘...An a per o’ glaury breeks’ [RM], ‘And afore lang, the per o them were tirlin away ...’ [DH] (sometimes written ‘perr’; see also the pair).

perceeze (per-seez) adj., arch. precise (in [HNe1954]; also percise).

Percehay (pers-hā) n. Walter (d.1289) described as ‘Walter Pershay’ in a charter of around 1283–85. This involved inspection of the earlier charter of 1260 in which Tarvit was granted by William Avenel (to whom John of Wilton was feudator) to Thomas Wallace. He was the son and heir of Joanna of Wilton, who was probably the heiress of Sir John de Wilton. According to Scottish accounts, he had a role in the murder of the young Earl Duncan of Fife, and was executed by Andrew of Moray of Petty. The Percehay family were from the area of Ryton in North Yorkshire, and after his death is only heard of in Yorkshire. However, in family histories his parents are given as Robert de Percehay and Joan de Vesey. That this is the same name as the Baroness of Wilton recorded in the early years of the 14th century is surely not a coincidence. Perhaps Joan de Wilton was the same woman as Joan de Vesey (if she married twice), or perhaps there were 2 generations here. English records suggest Walter died in 1346, married Agnes and was succeeded by William; but that seems likely to be a son or even grandson, given the dates.

percise (per-sīs) adj., arch. precise – ‘...He’d look percise, and smile and play as suited best: But Death has laid him in the clay, – Well may he rest’ [CPM] (perceeze).

Percy (per-see) n. Henry (1300–52) 2nd Baron Percy, son of Henry de Percy, the 1st Baron Percy of Alnwick. In 1327 he was created Lord Warden General of the English Marches. From 1334 he was joint Warden with Ralph, 4th Lord Neville. That year he was given lands by Edward III which had formerly belonged to Douglas. This included the town and castle of Jedburgh, Jedforest and Hassendean; this may have led to the rivalry between Percy and Douglas generations later. These lands were recovered by Sir William Douglas about 1338, but he was given a warrant in 1341/2 to be paid by the Exchequer for keeping Berwick and Jedburgh Castles, the towns of Jedburgh, Bonjedward and Hassendean, as well as Jedforest. The lands were retaken by the English in 1346 and his Jedburgh lands were confirmed to him in 1352. He married Idonia Clifford, daughter of Robert de Clifford, Earl of Surrey, who had been the previous Warden. He was succeeded by his son Henry, 3rd Lord of Alnwick. Henry (1320–68) 3rd Baron Percy, eldest son of Henry the 2nd Lord. He served as Lord Warden General of the English Marches from 1352. In 1354 he, along with Ralph Neville, was appointed as a commissioner to deal with Elizabeth, widow of Sir William Douglas, former Keeper of Hermitage. In 1356 he had the town and forest of Jedburgh conferred on him by Edward III, the grant included the town of Hassendean. He served as English Sheriff of Roxburghshire 1355–57. He married Mary Plantagenet, and was succeeded by his son Henry. Henry (1342–1408) 4th Baron Percy and 1st Earl of Northumberland, son of Henry, the 3rd Lord of Alnwick. Like his father and grandfather he served as Lord Warden General of the English Marches, from about 1366/7, serving until at least 1375. He fought in the Hundred Years War and was Warden of the Marches. Richard II granted him the constabulary of Jedburgh, towns of Bonjedward and Hassendean and Jedforest, as well as other lands, confirming an arrangement to his grandfather. The entire territory of Teviotdale was bestowed upon him in 1403. He had been a supporter of Henry of Lancaster (later Henry IV), but revolted against him in 1403. These machinations included the siege of Cocklaw Tower (Ormiston) along with his son ‘Hotspur’ and their men in May of that year. After Hotspur’s death and his own capture at Shrewsbury he continued plotting against the English King, leading an attack from the North, which led to his death at Bramham Moor. He forfeited his lands, with Jedforest passing to John of Lancaster. He married Margaret, daughter of Ralph, Lord Neville of Raby. Sir Henry ‘Hotspur’ (1364–1403) son of Henry, 1st Earl of Northumberland. The Percys were a powerful family based at Alnwick, who laid claim to the throne of England in the early 15th century. He was English Warden of the West and East Marches along with his father, and then solely from 1384. His nickname is said to have been given to him by the Scots as a tribute to his readiness to attack. He was captured by the Scots at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, but later ransomed. In 1403 he besieged Cocklaw Tower, which has been identified with Ormiston. Henry IV refused to give help, and this was the excuse for the Percy’s to launch their direct attack on the English throne, leading to the death of Hotspur at the Battle of Shrewsbury. He features in Shakespeare’s ‘Henry IV’. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Edmund Mortimer, 3rd Earl of March. They had 2 children: Henry, who became Earl of Northumberland; and Elizabeth, who married John, Lord Clifford, and secondly Ralph Neville. – ‘Sir Harry Percy came to the walls The Scottish host for to see, Sayd, ‘An thou hast brent Northumberland, Full sore it rueth me’ [T]. Henry (1421–61) 3rd Earl of Northumberland, son of the 2nd Earl, who was Constable of England and Warden of the East March. He was first cousin of Edward IV. He was made Lord Warden General of the Marches in 1439. He was killed leading the Lancastrian side at the Battle of Towton. He married Eleanor, daughter of Lord Poynings and was succeeded by his son Henry. Henry (1449–89) 4th Earl of Northumberland, son of the 3rd Earl. He was one of the few Percy’s to take the Yorkist side in the Wars of the Roses. John Neville was given the Northumberland title for a while, and it was only restored in 1473. He was later suspected of treason in the death of Richard III. In 1470 he was made Warden of the English Middle and East Marches, this being renewed in 1485. He was killed by rioters protesting high taxation. He married Maud Herbert, daughter of the Earl of Pembroke and was succeeded by his son Henry. Henry Algonon (1478–1527) 5th Earl of Northumberland. He was Warden of the East Marches from 1503, but apparently preferred the life of the court to that of Border warfare. He was in France during Flodden, although his two brothers fought there. In 1522 he was made a member of the Council of the North, and served as Lord Warden General of the Marches 1523–25. He married Catherine Spencer and was succeeded by yet another Henry. Henry Algernon (1502–37) 6th Earl of Northumberland, son of Henry Algernon and Catherine Spencer. He was a suitor of Anne Boleyn in their youth, but sat on the jury that convicted her of adultery in 1536. He served as Warden of the English East and Middle Marches 1527–37. In 1533 he led a force through the Borders that burned Branxholme, as well as Whitcheesters, 'Whitcheesterholme', Whitlaw and Newbigging, among other places. He was apparently quite profligate and eventually had to sell much of the family estates. He was forced to marry an older woman, Mary Talbot, who left him no direct heirs. Henry (1532–85) 8th Earl of Northumberland, brother of the 7th Earl. He was also engaged for many years in Border warfare. After being imprisoned for the third time he was found shot in the Tower of London. Thomas Earl of Worcester (c.1344–1403) younger brother of Henry, 1st Earl of Northumberland. He fought with distinction in France. He was Warden of Roxburgh Castle in 1377. He was granted Jedburgh town, castle and forest by his brother, Earl of Northumberland in 1397; this included the lands of Hassendean and Bonjedward and followed an earlier grant by Edward III to Henry Percy. He assisted his nephew Henry 'Hotspur' in the rebellion against Henry IV and was beheaded after the Battle of Shrewsbury. Sir Thomas (c.1504–37) 2nd son of Henry, 5th Earl and brother of the 6th Earl. In 1536 he was made Warden of the English Middle March, possibly along with his father. He was executed for his role in the 'Pilgrimage of Grace' (a Catholic uprising in the North of England). He married Eleanor Harbottle and their son Thomas was the 7th Earl of Northumberland. Thomas (1528–72) 7th Earl of Northumberland, nephew of the 6th Earl, he was Lord of Alnwick Castle. In 1557 he was appointed Warden of the English East and Middle Marches, and engaged in Scottish expeditions for many years, resigning in 1560. He was involved in a rising of Northern England in support of Mary Queen of Scots, and had to hide out in Liddesdale in 1569. He was said to have been betrayed by Hector Graham of Harlaw (a Border outlaw), captured by Martin Elliot's men and handed over to the Regent Moray, spending the night in Hawick on their way north. He was sold back to Elizabeth I, handed over to Hunsdon at Berwick and later beheaded at York. He married Anne, daughter of Henry Somerset, 2nd Earl of Worcester. She was said to have been robbed by Liddesdale men while passing through the area to visit her husband in Scotland; a ring found at 'Blakeburn' (at least 2 centuries ago) was suggested to have been hers. She later went into exile in Europe, but maintained contact with other English Catholic exiles.

Percy's Gauntlets (per-seez-gawnt-litz) n. trophy long held at Cavers House, captured from Percy Hotspur a few days before the battle of Otterburn. These are small gloves, richly embroidered with pearls and silver, and bearing a lion device. Clearly too small for Percy himself, they must have been a lady's favour, presented to him before going to battle, and Percy's desire to recover them may have contributed to the severity of the battle. These relics were previously sometimes referred to as 'Percy's Pennon', under the mistaken belief that this was a banner, rather than gauntlets.

Pesco’s (pes-kōz) n. Peter Scott’s, founded in 1878, with their main factory on Buccleuch Street, originally the partnership Adamson & Scott, between Peter Scott and his uncle Peter Adamson. The company started in part of Peter Laidlaw’s old factory at Wilton Grove, was based in the Tabernacle from 1881–93, and moved to Buccleuch Street in 1893, acquiring the former premises of the Commercial Bank. Scott split from Adamson in 1884, when the firm’s title was changed to Peter Scott & Co. The now familiar factory on Buccleuch Street was built in stages and largely completed by 1913, with the classical-style block to the west added in 1923 (designed by J.P. Alison). Behind the front section there are several other buildings, including knitting sheds and a boiler house. The factory retains its octagonal chimney (the only one in the Borders with its original top cornice). There was also another mill on Wilton Path (adjacent to the entrance to the ‘hunder steps’, specialising in sports coats) and one on Commercial Road (specialising in hosiery, opened in 1916) in the early 20th century. They were the first firm to guarantee against shrinkage of underwear at the turn of the 20th century. The Hawick factory was devoted to production for the troops during WWI, and supplied the ill-fated Shackleton expedition of 1914. In 1914 it was described as the biggest firm of its kind in Scotland, employing 800 people. Later it moved from hosiery into knitwear and sportswear. The Commercial Road buildings were used as a billet in 1939 and in 1945 the canteen was opened in the main factory. The Wilton Path factory closed in 1954. A nursery for employees ran until 1958. 16–18 Howegate was sold in 1956. A factory was built in Kelso in 1961 and another at Chirnside in 1974 (sold in 1981). The Queen and Prince Philip visit during the company’s centenary year in 1978. The ‘Peter Scott’ signature is the main company logo, along with the deer image. The official trademark was ‘Pesco’ from 1931 until relatively recently, and that has always been the popular name in Hawick. The firm went into arbitration in 2010, but was temporarily saved by English firm Gloverall. In 2016 the factory ceased production for good and part was demolished in 2020. The ‘Pesco Quotation Book’ (1916) was sold to raise money for the war effort, and after WWI ‘A Souvenir of Peace’ was published. The company has given several notable gifts to the town, including an early motor ambulance and fire-fighting equipment.

the Pesh (thu-pesh) n. headmaster at the High School – ‘Mr. Low was the Pesh it that time’ (derived from the nickname ‘le Pêche’ of Rector Waters, so-called because of his complexion; see also Rectors).

pet (pe’) n. a huff, fit of pique, bout of petulance, particularly in the phrase ‘ti take the pet’ – ‘hei taen the pet when hei wusni picked first’, ‘she’s in the pet the day’.

Peter Scott’s (pee’-ur-skots) n. Peter Scott & Co., better known as Pesco’s, which was its official trademark until relatively recently.

peth (peth) n., arch. a path, a steep road – ‘...an’ whatsaeveir passes throwe the peths o’ the seis’ [HSR], ‘Haud up my gaeings in thy peths, that my fitsteps sklydena’ [HSR] (the usual local meaning has no implication of being a narrow footpath, as in the English word).

the Peth (thu-peth) n. Wilton Path, the road leading up the hill, continuing on from Albert Road as part of the old road to Edinburgh. It was also known as ‘Roughheugh Path’ until the late 19th century. It was once very built-up, with a row of houses at the top known as the ‘Pathheid’, and a factory block next to the entrance to the ‘hunder steps’. In the mid-20th century it contained a chip shop, the Store bakers, a wine shop and ‘Foosty Broom’s’. Houses, shops and a knitwear factory were demolished in 1972/73, leaving essentially no houses on the street itself. The Manse for St. George’s Church is at the top on the left.

pether (pe-thur) n., arch. a pedlar, packman, travelling merchant – ‘Assoilzies George Makwetie fra the claim persewit be John Scott, pethar, for a half dozen of butes, mae or fewer, al-legit taken awa fra his crame in Hawick’ [BR1655], ‘The Muse cry’d, ‘Jamie, mind the pether, That bears the pack ...’ [JR], ‘There’s pethers and potters, and gingerbread stan’s, Peep-shows, puff-and-darts, and great caravans ...’ [DA] (also written ‘pethar’ and ‘pethir’; cf. pedder).

the Pether (thu-pe-thur) n. nickname for anyone who worked as a packman or pedlar, particularly in the 18th century, e.g. William Scott from Deanburnhaugh.

Pether Hill (pe-thur-hil) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the 19th century, presumably a pedlar called Hill – ‘Wullie the Paidle, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI].

the Pether’s Yett (thu-pe-thurz-ye’) n. former name for a gate which gave entry to ‘the Pedlar’s Field’, a field in which corn grew in the summer, being the first of the open fields on the land north of what is now Princes Street, where Ladylaw Place was built in the 1840s (from ‘the Peddlar’s Gate’).

Pethheid (peth-heed) n. Pathhead, a former name for the area at the top of Wilton Path. Spinner Thomas Ferguson and stocking weaver William Scott were living there in 1799. The name was particularly used for the row of houses that stood on the north side of what became Princes Street (near where the Balmoral Bar is located), as marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map. This block of houses is already marked on the 1810 sketch of Wilton. In 1841 the name appears also to have been used to the houses to the west, on Langlands Road. Note that the place gave its name to ‘Path Head School’, near Winnipeg, Manitoba (also sometimes ‘Pathheid’).

pet-loll (pet-lol) n., arch. a pet, darling – ‘Pet-loll, Mammy’s doll!’ [GW].

pett (pet, pe’) n., arch. a sheepskin with the wool removed (noted by J. Jamieson; see also pellet).

petted lip (pe’-eed-, pe’-ee’-, pe-teed-lip) n. a bottom lip stuck out in a sulk, particularly by a child – ‘she putt on a right petted lip when she heard she couldni gaun’, ‘deh trip ower yer petted lip’, ‘ee could hing monkeys off that petted lip’ (cf. pettit).

Pettie (pe-tee) n. Rev. Robert Douglas He was ordained as minister of Saughtree Kirk in 1927, but stayed for only a year before moving to Creish.

pettie-point (pe-tee-poin’) n., arch. a type of stitch, perhaps similar to what was used in tapestry work – ‘Pettie-point, A particular sort of sewing stitch, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

Pettigrew (pe’-ee-groo) n. John, M.B.E. (b.1882) born in Wellington Street, he became Joint Managing Director of Peter Scott’s. He was a member of the Angling Club and the Masons, and also wrote some works on the woollen trade. He married Esther Scott (b.1874), who was niece of Walter Scott, co-founder of Lyle & Scott’s. Robert (15th C.) bequeathed a sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘domino Roberto Petigrew’, suggesting he was associated with a church. It is unclear if he was local, like most people in the will.

pettit (pe’-ee’, pe-tee’) adj. petulant, peevish (also written ‘petteet’; noted by E.C. Smith; see also petted lip).

petit-taes (pe-tee’-t=az) n., pl., arch. the feet of pigs (noted by J. Jamieson).

peuchle (pew-chul) v., arch. to work ineffectively – ‘That peuchlin’ body never wuns off the bit’ [GW], to cough feebly, splutter wheezily (in [HNe1954]), n., arch. a short cough (also written ‘peughle’).

peuther (pew-thur) v., arch. to canvass for votes – ‘...that whosoever has a mind to set up for the Magistracy, and peuther for it, shall be put in the Bailies’ Leet without any objection’ [BR1756], ‘...it for ever should be a stated rule, that no man should thereafter pewther for the Magistracy’ [BR1763] (also written ‘pewther’ and ‘pouther’; see also powder).

pewder (pew-dur) n., adj., arch. pewter – ‘The puder plate qch contained ye water for baptizeing of Children was bartered for a Chappin stoup’ [PR1711] (also written ‘puder’, etc.).

pewl (pewl, pūl) v., arch. to work feebly, struggle faintly – ‘...To haul again the inept implements That mauled the body of exhausted earth For yet another puling puny harvest’ [DH], ‘Little I thought when we brought thee here A puling babe in its swaddling gear ...’ [WHO], to stifle a cough, to drizzle – ‘It’s pewlin’ an’ rainin’ [GW], to fall feebly or softly in small lumps (said of snow) – ‘Pewil, Pewl, Peughle on, Used to denote the falling of snow in small particles, without continuation, during a severe frost, Teviotd.’ [JoJ], ‘Snaws join the squal, wi’ pu’lin’, pirlin’, An’ drifts, as ’round knowe-en’s a-whirlin’ [JoHa], ‘It’s pewlin’ on’ [GW], n., arch. a thin curl of smoke, wisp – ‘A pewl o reek fuffelt abuin the gleed, an swurlt an yilleet away in a pirlin braith o wund’ [ECS] (also written ‘pule’; cf. peuchle).

Phantasy (fawn-tu-see) n. dog boarding kennels and associated property situated just after Hawthornside on the way to Bonchester.

Phaup (fawp) n. former steading on the Phaup Burn above Castleweary, east of the A7. The Read Roads pass near here and the Mossypaul ride-out route usually comes near here also. It was included in a description of Cavers Barony in an English document c.1380, with ‘Estre and Westree’ listed, suggesting it was once split into 2 farms. It was listed along with Linhope and Frostylee as a 20-shilling land among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663; ; these were united with lands in Wilton and others into 'the tenement of Blackgraine'. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when that superiority was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. In 1718 it was surveyed along with other Buccleuch proerpties, at that point covering 654 acres and bounded by Skelfhill, Linhope, Binks, Southdeanrig and Northhouse. John Renwick was living there in 1749. William Grieve was shepherd there in at least 1797–1801, with Thomas Grieve also living there in 1797. The place name has many spellings and can also be confused with an area of the same name near the head of the Ettrick. This could be the 'Fallhope' which was owned by the Glendinnings of that ilk from at least 1325. One of these 2 places probably gave rise to the somewhat rare surname Phaup, with 'Adam de Fawhope' being recorded as a juror in 1304, 'Archibald Fawup' being Chaplain at Linlithgow in the early 16th century and several people of the name recorded in the Melrose area in the 17th century (spelled 'Phawhope', 'Fawhope' and other variants; the origin might be from the Old English 'fah hop', meaning 'variegated valley'; it occurs at least as early as 'Fawehope' in c.1380, is 'Fawhop' in 1604, 'Falhope' in 1653 and 1660, 'Fawhope' in 1661, 'Fahope' in 1663, 'Phallhope' in 1687 and 1698, 'Phaip' in 1694 and 'Faup' in 1749; it is 'Faehope' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey maps; there are other places of similar name elsewhere, e.g. at the head of the Kale).

Phaup (fawp) n. area near the head of the Ettrick Water, also written 'Phawhope'. Nether and Over Phaup are separate farmsteads, the latter being a 'bothy' on the Southern Upland Way. Earlier the lands were split into Easter and Wester 'Fawlishope'. These were the lands of Sir John Turnbull 'of Falshope', whose daughter married George Scott of Synton about the early 15th century. Sir Thomas Turnbull held lands here in the latter part of the 15th century. They were Crown lands, assigned to John, son of Thomas Turnbull in 1483–87, then George Home of Aytton in 1488 and his son John in 1490, and then with John's consent assigned to John Turnbull. In 1494/5 the farm is mentioned as a place that was pillaged for sheep and in turn the residents there were charged with rieving. In 1501 they were half let to Ralph Ker and the other half to the wife of Sir Thomas Turnbull and Ralph Ker still held half the lease in 1502. James Gray was resident there in 1502 when he had remission for stealing livestock. This is probably where William and George Scott are recorded in 1526. In 1541 half the lands were occupied by Andrew Ker of Greenhead and the other half by William Stewart. Will Scott of Midgehope paid rental for these lands to Melrose Abbey in 1557 and Robert Scott of Tushielaw in about 1620. John Wilson was in the Wester part in 1580. Alexander Stewart from there was in Ediburgh Tolbooth in 1617. It is said that the farm was without a tenant or any stock for 20 years after the terrible winter storm of 1674. Francis Scott 'of ffauhope' paid the land tax in Selkirkshire in 1678. James Scott 'of Phaupe' is recorded in records of Melrose in 1682. Will Laidlaw 'of Phawhope' gave the version of 'Auld Maitland' published in Sir Walter Scott's 'Minstrelsy'. The Ballantynes were Lairds in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It is easily confused with the farm between Castleweary and Mossypaul of the same name, as well as Fauldshope further down the Ettrick near Aikwood (spelled 'Phawhope' and variants; 'Fauhopschele et Fauhopgranys' are recorded in 1456; it is 'Faulishop' in 1468, 'Fawlishope' in 1471, 'Faulishop' in 1478 and 1488, 'Fawlishoip' in 1487, 'Faulishop' in 1490, 'Fawlishop' in 1494, 'Faulishop' and 'Fawlishop' in 1501, 'fawlishope' in 1502, 'Fawlishope' in 1526, 'Faldishope' in 1541, 'Fawlishop' in 1589 and 'Fauhoip' in 1620; 'Faup' is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Phaup (fawp) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'Adam de Fauhope' when he was on a jury in 1304 to decide on the privileges of Robert the Bruce (when he was still just Earl of Carrick). The jurors were all from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire and hence it seems likely his lands were one of the local places of that name. Andrew (17th C.) notary in Melrose. He is recorded in many documents relating to the Regality of Melrose in the 1650s and 60s. His name presumably derives from the lands in Roxburghshire or Selkirkshire. Andrew (17th C.) listed among the 'Cottars in Hassanden' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name was written 'Faup'. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her name is written 'Faup'. She could be the 'Bessie Phaup', married to William Wright, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Robertson

Phaup Burn

Parish in 1685. Elizabeth (b.1815/6) from Gordon in Berwickshire, she was a toll-keeper in Hawick. In 1851 she was a widow, living at West-Toll Bar (on Buccleuch Road), with her children James, Isabel T. and William T., her nephew James Brown and her cousin Adam Bell. Thomas (15th/16th C.) resident of Bedrule. In 1502 Robert Shiel had remission for stealing 8 sheep from him. William (d.c.1688) tenant in 'Langtoun' (probably Lanton). His will is recorded in 1688 and that of his wife Margaret Mather in 1686 (also written 'Fawhope' and 'Phawp').

Phaup Burn (fawp-burn) n. stream that joins the Frostlie Burn, roughly from the east, near Castleweary. The farmstead of Phaup is along its banks (marked 'Faupp B.' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Phawhope see Phaup

pheasant (fee-zin') n. a pheasant – '...There isna a walk mair plesant Now oor on the Whitehaugh Road And in front o' ee a pheasant' [AY], 'The feel o mushrooms; broilin a gumpit troot; Pheesane ploys in black wuds, wi gameys near' [DH].

Phenzhopehaugh (fee-nup-hawf, -hawch) n. isolated farmstead situated about 2 km up the Rankle Burn from the farms of Buccleuch. This was probably the site of the original manor for the Barony of Rankilburn. Phenzhopehaugh Burn meets the Rankle Burn from the west there, and above to the south-west is Phenzhopehaugh Hill, which reaches 382 m. There is a motte on an area of level ground to the north of the confluence; it is about 40 m by 25 m and about 2.5 m high, surrounded by a ditch, which has a causeway across it on the south-west side. This may have been the first residence of the Scotts of Rankilburn (with Sir Richard Scott of Rankilburn, who swore fealty to Edward II in 1296, probably holding these lands), before they moved their headquarters to Buccleuch. About 60 m south of the motte is a large circular enclosure, probably much more recent in age (it is not marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map; the stream is 'Finhopelake' on Ainslie's 1773 map and incorrectly a lake is labelled 'Findhopelake' near there on Mitchell's 1851 map).

the Philadelphia Stakes (thu-fi-lu-del-fee-a-stäks) n. race run as part of the Cornet's Races on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the later 19th century. The prize-money was presumably raised by exiles from the Philadelphia area.

Philhope (fi-lup) n. farm along the Borthwick valley, and the name for the area around it, particularly the flat region by the river, which has long been a popular picnic spot. In 1530 Christian

Philhope

Inglis, with the consent of her husband Thomas, sold part of the lands to William Brydon, Vicar of Auld Roxburgh for £16. John Hope and John Hall were recorded as the King's shepherd's here and in Broadlee, being paid for grain in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540. William Davidson and Patrick Nichole were recorded there (probably as tenants) in 1579. There were Elliots there from at least the 16th century, Martin Elliot of Braidlie gaining lands from John Turnbull in 1579 and having a charter of 1591, at which time it lay within the Barony of Hawick and was annexed to Selkirkshire. This was afterwards to go to his son Simon and was ratified by Act of Parliament in 1592. In the early 1600s Simon's only child Grizel inherited and married John, son of Robert Elliot of Falnash. The lands were listed (along with Eilrig) as a 'pendicle' of Broadlee among lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands were estimated to pay '200 merks, vicarage 20 lb.' in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. In 1631 John Turnbull of Howden was served as heir to his father Mark's lands there. However, the main farm was in the hands of the Crown for 37 years, until granted to Robert Elliot of Falnash in 1628; Robert's son John would marry the heiress, Grizell Elliot. It remained with the Elliots through most of the 17th century. Adam Elliot of Philhope was made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1643. There were 12 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Archibald Elliot, Maly Nichol, Helen Elliot, Maly Elliot, Elizabeth Hislop, Maly Scott, Janet 'Cheislye', Grisel Pearson, John Hamilton, William Glen, Robert Scott and William Baptie. It was owned by William Elliot of Philhope in 1678 when valued at £216. William and Robert Chisholme (of Stirches) purchased it in 1684. In 1694 tax was paid on 6 hearths for 'Phillipp & milne'. Thos also listed there were William Elliot (probably the Laird), John Renwick, Robert Chisholme, Robert Riddell and Adam 'Junct'. Robert Veitch was living there in at least 1715–17 and Walter Haliburton in 1721. William Pringle was living there in 1737, Thomas Graham in 1762 and John Cavers in 1774. The teinds were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 when owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, and the stock was valued at £400, with the land tax paid by William Chisholme of Chisholme. In the 1788 county valuation (and still in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued along with Broadlee at £216. It became part of the Buccleuch estates around the early 19th century and in the latter part of the 19th century was purchased by Richardson-Dickson. The farmer recorded there on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls was Robert Nichol. James Turnbull was tenant in at least 1799–1812. George Scott and Robert Nichol were also there in 1812. In 1811 William Chisholme paid the land tax on £400 there, while the teinds were valued at £60 in 1802 and held by the Duke of Buccleuch. George Nichol was farmer there in 1841. John Nichol was there in the 1860s. It was part of Hawick Parish until Robertson was formed in 1689/90, and in earlier times was part of Selkirkshire. An area roughly opposite Meadshaw was the site of a skirmish in December 1653, between (Scottish) Royalist forces and (English) Commonwealth forces. About 80–100 men under Sir Arthur Forbes, and with Maj. Irvine as second-in-command, had captured Andrew Kerr of Sunlaws and Chatto. Coming down from the north, they stopped at Borthwickbrae, and intended to head over towards Eskdalemuir. An English force, part of Twisleton's Regiment under Capt. Hart, were in pursuit. The Scots were easy to follow in the snow and made a stand at Philhope, where 4 Royalists were slain and 16 taken prisoner, with only 1 Englishman slain and 17 wounded. The prisoner Kerr was freed, but wounded through the thigh by an English trooper. The English concentrated on rounding up the horses, allowing most of the Scots to escape, including Forbes. This was probably the last battle to take place near Hawick. There are remains of some enclosures near the farm, age uncertain (also formerly spelled 'Philip' and variants; it is 'Philhop' in 1530, 'Filop' in 1540, 'Phillop' in 1592, 'Phillip' in 1627 and 1631, 'Fillip' in 1643, 'Phillip' in 1646, 'Phillop' in 1649, 'Phillip' in 1651, 'Philip' in 1678 and 1686, 'Philop' in 1715 and 1717 and 'Philip' in 1785, 1788 and 1797; it is 'Phillope' on a parish map of 1650, 'Phillippe' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Philop' on Stobie's 1770 map; the origin is possibly Old English 'ful hop', meaning 'the dirty valley').

Philhope Brig (fi-lup-brig) n. bridge across the Borthwick near Philhope farm, leading to the former farm of Outerside. This site has often in recent times been chosen for Common Riding Ride-outs. The haugh there has been a favourite place for Hawick folk to come for picnics. The area was popularized in the Scocha song 'Dusty Road frae Philhope Brig ti Hame', released in 2017 with an accompanying video.

Philhope Burn (fi-lup-burn) n. stream that joins the Borthwick from the south-east near Philhope farm.

Philhope Loch (fi-lup-loch) n. man-made loch in the headwaters of the Philhope Burn. On the Roughhope Burn (rather than the Philhope Burn), the name was attached to it much later. It was constructed in 1844 following a drought which brought Hawick's woollen mills to a standstill. The work was arranged by the 3 main manufacturers at the time, William Wilson & Sons, William Watson & Sons and Dicksons & Laings. Construction was completed by 1846 on the earthwork dam here (about 100 yards in length), as well as at the nearby Broadlee Loch (which was much smaller). It is said that the sluice gate used to be opened in order to raise to Borthwick and then the Teviot, to help with the water-powered mills in Hawick. There was a suggestion around 1880 of using the Loch as a water supply for Hawick, but the decision was taken to develop the Allan Water works instead. Eventually the reservoir ceased to be used for its original purpose, and for a while it was used for fishing. When the embankment began to leak in about 1970 it was drained and abandoned.

Philhope Mill (fi-lup-mil) n. former farmstead near Philhope, presumably by the side of the Borthwick. It was part of Hawick Parish until 1690. Walter Miller was there in 1709 (also written 'Philip Mill', it is 'Philop milne' in 1709; it is shown on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Philhopeshiel (fi-lup-sheel) n. former steading on the Philhopeshiel Burn, about half-way between Eilrig and Lairhope. John Laidlaw and William Pringle were there in 1726, John Welch in 1727, James Armstrong in 1732–35, Thomas Graham in 1743, John Jackson in 1763, Robert Scott in 1765, John Graham in 1774, William Nichol in 1781 and Adam Pringle and Andrew Geddes in 1789. It was still marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but has now disappeared, although there is still an adjacent sheepfold (it is 'Philop-sheil' in 1726 and 1732, 'Philopsheils' in 1727 and 'Philipshiel' in 1774).

Philhopeshiel Burn (fi-lup-sheel-burn) n. stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Rashy Hill, and runs in a roughly northerly direction to join the Eildrig Burn and hence the Borthwick Water.

Philip see Philhope

Philip (fi-lip) n. Andrew (1782–1822) son of William and Mary Scott. He was a mason, like his father. He was listed as a mason on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He owned property on Slitrig Crescent, around No. 5, marked on Wood's 1824 map. His surname was listed as 'Phillips' in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He is probably the Andrew 'Philips' who married Henrietta Nichol, and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included: Isabel (b.1810); Mary (b.1811); William (b.1812); George (b.1815); William (again, b.1816); and Margaret (b.1817). He died in Hawick. George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Walker and their children included: William (b.1746); Elizabeth (b.1748); Janet (b.1750); Jane (b.1753); John (b.1755); Isabel (b.1759); and Robert (b.1760). Perhaps the same George was previously married to Janet Lockie and had a son Patrick baptised in Ashkirk in 1744. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Bonjedward. He was recorded in 1502 when George Douglas, Master of Angus, failed to present him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Robert (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He was probably the son of George, baptised in Ashkirk in 1760. In 1784 he (along with William) witnessed a baptism for labourer William Scott and Betty (perhaps his sister). Walter (d.c.1799) mason, son of William. He was recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among men on the list balloted in 1797 but absent, with the annotation 'Dead', and his name crossed out. William (d.bef. 1822) mason in Hawick. He was probably son of George and Janet Walker, born in Ashkirk. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). In 1784 he (along with mason Robert) witnessed a baptism for labourer William Scott and Betty (perhaps his sister). In 1786 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Smail and Jane (who was probably his sister). He married Mary Scott, who was probably daughter of 'Black Andrew'. They had children: Alice (b.1770); George (b.1772); Walter (b.1776), listed among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797; Janet (b.1779); Andrew (b.1781); Christian (b.1782); Andrew (again, b.1782), also a mason; William (b.1785); Peter (b.1792); and Peter (again, b.1793). The witnesses in 1772 were merchants Andrew and Walter Scott (probably related to his wife), in 1777 were merchant Andrew Scott and Andrew Turnbull and in 1792 were Dr. William Scott and plasterer William Sibbald. His unnamed child died in 1798 (also written 'Phillip' and 'Philips').

Philiphaugh (fi-lip-hawf, -hawch) n. river-side plain just west of Selkirk, now the location for the town's rugby and cricket fields. It was the site of the Battle of 1645 which ended the Earl of Montrose's attempts to secure political control of Scotland, thereby ensuring the defeat of Charles I's cause. Montrose's men were surprised under cover of fog by the superior Covenant forces under David Leslie, to which the locals were sympathetic at the time; troops from Teviotdale must surely have fought in Leslie's army. Montrose fled, but most of his troops and the 300 accompanying women and children were massacred by Covenanting zealots. At the site of Montrose's encampment there is a monument in memory of the Covenanters who fought in the battle. Lands there were granted to William Turnbull in 1313 and there were still Turnbells on part of the land until the early 17th century. However, the Murrays held the western part from the 15th century. It was valued at almost £4000 in 1678. A Jacobean mansion stood here, remodelled in the 1870s and demolished to make way for a 1964 house. The estate left the hands of the Murrays in 1889, when it was sold to William Strang Steel. The Covenanters' Monument is a stone pyramid on the grounds. A song about the battle was recorded by Scocha in 2004 – 'On Philiphaugh the fray began, At Harehead wood it ended; The Scots out o'er the Graemes they ran; Sae merrily they bended' [T] (it is 'Fulhopehalche' in 1317, 'Philophauche' and 'Phillophauch' in 1504, 'Philophauche' in 1509 and 'Phillophauch' in 1558; the origin of the name is probably the same as for Philhope).

Philip's Jok (fi-lipz-jok) n. nickname of Johnnie Scott in the 16th century (written 'Philpis' in the court documents).

Philogar (fi-lō-gur) n. hill and former lands in the Hownam Parish. The lands were connected with the Douglasses of Cavers in the 16th and 17th centuries.

Phipps (fips) n. Maj.-Gen. Jeremy (1942–2021), C.B., army officer, who was with the Special Air Service during the 1980 siege of the Iranian Embassy in London. He was given command of the Queen's Own Hussars, then the 11th Armoured Brigade in 1986, was Director of Special Forces in 1989 and served as Senior British Loan Services Officer in Oman from 1993 before retiring in 1997. After retirement he was head of security at the Jockey Club. He settled in Rulewater in 2010 and became a member of Hobkirk Community Council, acting as Chair for 2 years. He was particularly involved in commemoration of war memorial days in Hobkirk.

phiz (fiz) n., poet. a face – ‘Pops oot a snoot like some much-made-o’ tabby, Cries ‘Order, order’, wi’ a phiz sae grave?’ [JoHa], ‘Red anger mounted on her phiz, She proves hersel’ a ranter’ [JoHa].

photae see photi

photi (fō’-i) n. photograph – ‘Derek Lunn taen the photis’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘photae’ and ‘photih’).

physeecian (fi-zee-shin) n., arch. a physician.

piani (pee-an-i) n. a piano – ‘...wi Adam Grant and Adie Ingles playin a piani duet ‘Auld Hawick My Dreams’ in the backgrund’ [IWL], ‘...n’ casually, while swingin back on his pianae stu-ill remarked ‘Aye son, A should dae, A wrote eet!’ [IHS] (also spelled ‘pianih’ and ‘pianae’).

pibroch (pee-broch) n., poet. traditional theme and variations played on the bagpipes – ‘When Boreas cauld, blew his pibroch fu’ bauld, And snaw showers fu’ thickly flew pirlin’ [JoHa], ‘The battle march borne from afar is a summons, The pibroch a plaint to the lost days awa’ [WL].

pick (pik) v., arch. to peck, ‘to pick at a thing’ means to understand it – ‘Ti pick up a thing is to apprehend it, to notice or understand it’ [ECS], n., arch. a peck, e.g. from a bird, a fit of spleen, offence, grudge, disliking – ‘She took a pick at ’im’ [GW] (see also take a pick at).

pick (pik) n., poet. pitch, bitumen – ‘Tho’ dark the night as pick and tar, I’ll lead ye o’er yon hills fu’ hie; And bring ye a’ in safety back, If you’ll be true, and follow me. Fala, &c.’ [CPM].

pick at (pik-aw’) v., arch. to understand something, form a dislike of someone or something – ‘Ti taik a pick at a person (or thing) = to form a dislike, to take resentment at’ [ECS].

pickeet see pickit

picker (pi-kur) n. occupation in the knitwear industry, someone who picks out ‘bobbles’ and foreign matter in garments (usually with tweezers), this being often carried out by older women. Formerly the word was used for someone whose job was to cut loose threads from the web.

the Pickin (thu-pi-kin) n. official selection of the new Cornet, taking place on the Wednesday night after the first Tuesday in May (since Town Council meetings always used to be on Tuesdays).

The ceremony used to take place on the Tuesday night immediately after the Council meeting to elect the Cornet, but at some point was shifted to the following night. The Provost’s Council, with recommendation of the two previous standard bearers, choose a young man to be the new Cornet. The Burgh Officer (the 2 modern halberdiers taking it in turns), accompanied by the Drums and Fifes, carries the official letter to the Cornet-Elect’s house, setting off at 7 p.m. When the band walk north they play ‘Dumbarton Drums’ and when they turn to the south they play ‘Rumblin Brig’, then they play ‘Teribus’ as the letter is handed over. In the house are gathered the Cornet’s family and friends. The new Cornet goes outside to greet the crowd and there is a strive. The Halberdier is then given the acknowledgement and rewarded with a new shilling. The Officer and band return to the Town Hall, where ‘Teribus’ is again played as the reply is handed in. There is meanwhile a procession on foot by the Cornet’s party through the older parts of town, specifically visiting the site of the Toll farthest from the Cornet’s house, and ending at the Town Hall, with a short sing-song. After the Procession there is the congratulatory Smoker and the Lasses Association dinner (when the new Lass and Acting Mother are presented with their badges). Formerly the parade would have stopped at the houses of the Minister, the Senior Bailie and several inns. The new Cornet’s Tie is only revealed in a shop window after the Pickin. The practice of the Drums and Fifes escorting the Burgh Officer on Picking Night stopped for many years, but was revived in 1887.

the Pick Inn (thu-pik-in) n. former hostelry at the Mid Row in the mid-19th century.

Pickin Night (pi-kin-nī’) n. name used to refer to the night of the Pickin, being the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in May.

pickin-stick (pi-kin-stik) n., arch. in knitting machines the part that knocks the shuttle to insert the weft threads – ‘The pickin-stick gangs whuppin on, The shuttle scuds throwe a’ [WL].

pick it (pik-i’) v., arch. to comprehend something, try to understand.

pickit (pi-kee’, -ki’) pp. picked – ‘she was pickit ti gie the Cornet his praisent’, ‘In 1854 yet anither Geordie Broon was pickeet for Cornet ...’ [BW1979].

pickit (pi-kee’, -ki’) pp., adj., arch. still-born – A pickit cauf’ [GW].

pickle (pi-kul) n. a small amount, bit, portion – ‘juist gie’s a wee pickle’, ‘it’s a pickle ower hot’,

‘A made a faisable mael oot o pei-soop (a pickle grand thing, ‘at war they!’) [ECS], arch. a grain of wheat, barley or oats, adj. a few, small amount of – ‘there’s a pickle ingins left in the cupboard’, ‘Then oot a pickle woo’ Tam draws, And preens’t unto his bonnet’ [JoHa], ‘...An’ weel to the rock an’ the wee pickle tow, May blessings aye light on the spinning o’t’ [JoHa], ‘...the spinning wheel, adorned with blue ribbon, and with a ‘pickle tow’ on the rock or distaff ...’ [JAHM], ‘Sae ilka bodie’s pickel gear Was lodg’d wi’ him without a fear’ [RDW], ‘The Ushers o’ Courthill, They’re a’ sae kind to me, Whiles they send me taties And whiles a pickle tea’ [RM], ‘...a pickle blewe reek threh the hoose-lums o Denum draiggelt in a swutherin clud’ [ECS], ‘Oo’re gaan ti heh a pickl rain, A unk’ [ECS], ‘...Or ocht to girn aboot But a pickle rain!’ [DH], ‘A scrimped and saved for years, Till a hed a pickle money, Ti buy ma Duke Street hame, That always was si bright and sunny’ [IWL] (sometimes used ironically to mean a large amount or a lot; also written ‘pickel’).

pickle (pi-kul) v., arch. to nibble, particularly used in the phrase ‘ti pickle oot o yin’s ain pock nuik’ or ‘ti pickle in yin’s ain pock nuik’, meaning to depend on one’s own resources.

pickelt (pi-kul, -kult) adj. pickled – ‘A made a faiasable mael oot o pie-soop, ...caald flesh, picklt ingans, an nae skrimp o laif’ [ECS] (also written ‘picklt’).

pick-maw (pik-maw) n., arch. the black-headed gull, Larus ridibundus – ‘...ti gar yin that’s duist a peike at eis meat turn that ei can heck leike a pick-maw’ [ECS] (also ‘pick-sea-maw’ and variants; cf. maw; the name survives in ‘the Picmaw Moss’).

Pick Maw Hill (pik-maw-hil) n. former name for a field in Lilliesleaf Parish, probably to the south of the village. It is described (in the ‘New’ Statistical Account of Scotland) in about 1834 as an area formerly frequented by gulls, whose eggs ‘were then much sought after by the villagers’.

the Pickmaw Moss see the Picmaw Moss the Picmaw Moss (thu-pik-maw-mos) n. boggy area near Kirkton Hill, formerly known as Buckstruther, and being essentially the same as the area now also called Adderstonelee Moss (also spelled ‘Pickmaw’).

pictur see pictur

the Picts (thu-pikts) n., pl. people of northern Scotland, of uncertain origin, who remained unconquered by the Romans. The chronicler Gildas says that in the 5th century they penetrated southwards as far as Hadrian’s wall. If so, they may have had some influence on the Hawick area, and may have spoken a Brythonic (‘p-Celtic’) language, in common with early Teries. However, there is no evidence to support connections that were once believed to exist with the Borthwick Mains stone, the Catrail and the Mote. In 685 the Bernician (including the Hawick area) King Egfrith was defeated at ‘Nech tansmere’ in Fife when attacking into Pictland. Exactly who the Picts were is unclear, but by about 900 they had disappeared as a separate people and become part of the ‘Scots’. It was said by Boece that they made a liquor from heather flowers, the process being lost with them. Leyden tells of a version of this story popular in Teviotdale, with the last Pictish warrior refusing to divulge the secret – ‘... And frequent wake the wild inspired lay, On Teviot’s hills, beneath the Pictish sway’ [JL] (probably from the Latin for ‘painted’).

the Picts-work Ditch see the Pict’s Work Dyke

the Pict’s Work Dyke (thu-pikts-wurk-dik)

n. an older popular name for the Catrail. It is also specifically used to refer to a section of linear earthwork stretching between Linglie (near Selkirk) to Mosilee (near Galashiels), first mentioned as early as 1723, but probably not directly connected to the Catrail (also ‘the Picts-work Ditch’ and similar).

pictur (pik-tur) n. a picture – ‘go’an hing that pictur up for is’, ‘...That picter’s deed, and this is leevin’ [JBS], ‘A maircht eend ti the ‘Gazette’ Office, an bocht a wheen picter-postcairds’ [ECS], ‘...bye auld Hornshole, – a picter o gray an green ...’ [ECS], v. to picture – ‘...Ma mind picters scenes galore’ [AY], ‘...O’ giff they could feel like us, When we pictur’d the getherin’ froons ...’ [WL], ‘...in an effort tae picter tae theirel’s the toon in the hollow o’ the hills’ [BW1939] (also spelled ‘pictur’).

picturs (pik-turz) n., pl. pictures. There are no images of Hawick from before about 1800. ‘Hawick from Wilton Lodge, 1800’ is probably the first picture, a water-colour by an unknown artist.

the picturs (thu-pik-turz) n. the pictures, cinema – ‘oo aye went ti the picturs on Seturdi mornins’, ‘Skinny Malinky long legs, umbrella feet, Went to the picturs and couldni finnd a seat’,

the Pictur Theatre (thu-pik-thee-ā-tur) n. full name for the former cinema on Croft Road, more popularly known as the Wee Thea.

piddle (p-dul) v., arch. to walk with quick short steps (noted by J. Jamieson).

pie (pI) n. a pie, almost exclusively referring to a meat pie, often with minced mutton – ‘Ee got pies and tei at the muckle tent And eer chin was fair rinnin wi’ grease’ [AY].

piece (pees) n. a sandwich, often plural, and usually referring to something eaten as part of a packed lunch – ‘mind an bring pieces for yer denner’, ‘Mother, gie’s a peece, ir ee?’ [ECS], ‘How we used to set off in the morning with a ‘piece’ in our pocket’ [BM1905], ‘Ma, if ma tei’s no ready, Goan gie is a jeely piece’ [AY], ‘Noo busy wi’ a jelly piece, The schule forgot, he stole oot-bye ...’ [WFC], ‘A herbour for auld muillins O’ lang-forgotten pieces ...’ [DH].

piecer (pee-sur) n., arch. someone (often a child) formerly employed in the spinning industry to gather and reattach broken threads or specifically to join the ‘cardings’ by feeding them onto the ‘creeping cloth’ of the ‘slubbing’ frame. They usually joined the ‘rovings’ at the back of the ‘billy frame’, and the required repeated action would often make their fingers bleed. More recently the term meant someone who made their pay by piece work rather than by the hour – ‘... unconscious of his identity, he remarked to the foreman: ‘That’s the kind of piecer to keep’ [JHH], ‘... as her son Rob and I were piecers together’ [JTU].

piecin machine (pee-sin-mu-sheen) n. a machine that replaced the work of ‘piecers’ and the ‘slubbing billy’, joining together the pieces coming off the carding machines. It was introduced in Hawick by Melrose’s about 1844, and probably invented by James Melrose.

Piehill (pI-hil) n. former name for a farm, perhaps in Cavers Parish. John Douglas, tenant in Cavers, but called ‘of Piehill’ is recorded in a ‘letter of reduction’ of 1630, brought by William Bennet. Alexander Chisholme of Piehill is referred to in a ‘respite’ for the slaughter of Lord Maxwell in 1593 (but this could have been an error for ‘Parkhill’).

piel see peel (pill)

Pie Oliver (pI-o-lee-vur) n. nickname for members of a particular branch of the Oliver family. This could be the same as the ‘Pies Oliver’ recorded in the ‘Hawick Immortals’ poem – ‘Wullie the Paidle, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI].

piet see pyet

the Pietsnest (thu-piits-, pI-its-nest) n. former shepherd’s cottage on Hyndlee farm. William Turnbull lived there in the early-to-mid 19th century (referring to the magpie, ‘piet’ or pyet).

pig (pig) n., arch. an earthenware vessel, a hot water bottle – ‘For aa A pat a warm pig i the bed, it was midnicht or A cam a-heat’ [ECS], ‘... their honey run into ‘pigs’ bought for the purpose, and covered with leather’ [AOC].

piggie-bank (pi-gee-bawngk) n. an earthenware vessel in which coins are saved – ‘The boy admitted entering a house in Beaconsfield Terrace in March and stealing 13s from a piggie-bank’ [HEX1965] (cf. pig).

Pigot’s (pi-gits) n. J. Pigot & Co., publishing company that produced useful directories in the early 19th century. The 1826/7 ‘New Commercial Directory of Scotland’ (compiled about a year earlier) and 1837 ‘National Commercial Directory of Scotland’ are particularly useful for tracking down people, businesses etc. in Hawick and neighbouring areas before the censuses began. These directories were continued by Slater’s Royal National Commercial Directory, which came out with local content in 1852, 1860, 1878, 1882 and 1893.

pike (pik) n., arch. a pick, spike, prong – ‘... Till a reid hette pyke the master gatte, And gave his loone a prodde’ [JTe] (also written ‘pyke’).

pike (pik) n., arch. a peaked stack of hay, erected temporarily in a field, a haystack, a sharp pointed hill v., arch. to make a haystack (from Mediæval English; essentially the same word is used locally in the names of some peaked hills).

pike see pyke

the Pike (thu-pik) n. hill about 10 km due south of Hawick, between Penchrise and the Maidens. It reaches 463 m. The Catrail crosses near the summit. Alexander Gordon refers to it as ‘Carriage Hill’ (the same name is used for a feature on the western side of Pike Fell in the Slitrig valley and for a hill on the south side of the Tima valley).

the Pike (thu-pik) n. hill that is essentially the western side of Pike Fell in the Slitrig valley (note the confusion with the hill a couple of miles to the west).

Pike Fell (pik-fel) n. hill on the eastern side of the upper Slitrig valley, near Shankend. It reaches a height of 400 m and has a triangulation pillar. Its south-eastern spur is called simply ‘The Pike’.

Pike Fell (pīk-fel) n. hill on the border of Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, at the head of the Routing Burn, and hence effectively the start of the Hermitage valley. It reaches a height of 499 m.

Pike Hill (pīk-hiel) n. hill between the upper Borthwick and Teviot valleys, east of Howpasley Hope, reaching a height of 419 m.

Pikensteed (pī-kin-steed) n. possible name for former lands in Liddesdale, transcribed as ‘Pik-nesteid’ on the 1541 rental roll, when it was valued at 14 shillings, and with no tenant. The location is uncertain. It is possible that it is the same as ‘Piperstede’ recorded in c.1376.

piker (pī-kur) n., arch. a person who makes haystacks.

Pike Sike (p=īk-sīk) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Thorlieshope Height and running roughly north-west to the Thorlieshope Burn.

Pikethaw Hill (pīk-thaw-hil) n. high hill on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, just to the south of the pass at Ewes Doors. It reaches a height of 564 m and has a substantial cairn on its summit. It is essentially where the Lymiecleeuch Burn rises. It has been suggested that a volcanic dyke stretches from here to Skelfhill Pen (also written ‘Pikethowe’, it appears as ‘Pikethon’ in a Transactions article of 1875).

pikit see pykit

pillae see pilli

the pillar (thu-pi-lur) n., arch. raised platform in a church on which penitents had to appear at prescribed times, equivalent in function to the repentance stool. In St. Mary’s this was probably located along the same wall as the pulpit, surrounded by a rail and reached by a small ladder. The one in Wilton also required a ladder – ‘...they had to appear on a small raised platform, sometimes termed ‘the pillar’, and at other times ‘the stool of repentance’, which occupied a conspicuous place in the church’ [JJV].

Pilmuir (pil-mur) n. farm near Wulliestruther and Hawick Moor, also known as the Muir Farm. It is part of the Common feued to the farmer, being set up as a 250 acre farm and leased to John Wilson in 1787, with rent going to the Common Good. Part of the farm was used for Common Riding races before 1854. George Hart was farm steward there in 1861 and James Stein recorded as farmer there in 1868. ‘Mrs. Reid, with Betsy the Cow, Pilmuir’ was painted by J.E.D. Murray in 1889. The riding of the marches at Pilmuir resumed as part of the Thursday morning events from 1900, with the entire Common being encircled in the ride. It was also the location of the partaking of Curds and Cream (and hence ‘the Hut’) at the Chases in the years 1882 and 1901–11. A piece of worked flint found there is in the Museum (the origin is possibly from Old Welsh for ‘bog or pond’ plus ‘muir’ or Old English ‘peel’ for a stockade, thus meaning an enclosed moor).

Pilmuir Rig (pil-mur-rig) n. hill above Pilmuir farm, also used as the name of the small farm to the south of the main farm of Pilmuir. This farm was first let to Thomas Scott in 1778, after the Division of the Common. The name is also applied to the surrounding part of Hawick Common. On maps it specifically applies to the high ground to the south-east of Pilmuir farm. The area was used for the morning race meetings of the Common Riding from 1822–53 – ‘...And round Pilmuir-rig we’ll canter, Down the Bailie-hill we’ll scamper’ [AB], ‘Pilmuir Rig and Everha’, Scawmill and Stirches Mains; Drinkstone, Tandlaw and Boonraw Wi’ a’ their burns and lanes’ [WL].

the Pilmuir Stakes (thu-pil-mur-stāks) n. race during the Common Riding, at one time for the Cornet’s Father and his supporters. It was started at least as early as the 1880s.

Pilmuir Sike (pil-mur-sīk) n. former ditch near the Flex, lying on the boundary of the old Common. It is not clear exactly where it was, even based on the 1767 description of the Common, and the map drawn up by J.P. Alison. James Wilson describes it as lying ‘at the head of Flex inclosures’ (also written ‘Syke’).

Pilstown (pils-town) n. said to have been the commander of some English persecuting regiment that passed through Hawick in 1716; however, it is unclear who he was. The Council charged the Burgesses to help transport their baggage to Lauder, and townspeople were also meant to provide billets for the soldiers. Some citizens of Hawick refused to provide for the men or to help carry their baggage, being then fined or imprisoned – ‘A party is fined for disobeying the bailies anent the quartering and billets given for the said Pilstown’s Regiment last week’ [JW], ‘Or wi’ the serfs o’ Pilstown rin, For Hawick has had mae Habs than ane’ [AD].

Pimpo Anderson (pim-pō-an-dur-sin) n. nickname in the mid-to-late 20th century.

pin (pin) n., arch. amount of linen that will go through a mangle at one time – ‘The mangle-wife chairged a penny for three pins' [GW], a quantity of thread – 'To find what 'rule' is wanted to beam any warp, multiply the porters on the yard by 40, and divide by the number of threads in the pin' [BCM1881] (also peen).

pin (pin) n., poet. mood, frame of mind, particularly in the phrase 'a merry pin' – 'And he took her round the scraggy necke, Alle in a merry pinne ...' [JTe].

Pin (pin) n. former farmstead close to the Border in southern Castleton Parish, to the east of Kershopefoot. Labourer Henry Paterson was there in the 1830s. Robert Beattie was shepherd there in 1851 and William Tait was there in 1868 (also written 'Pinn'; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

pinch (pinch) n., poet. an iron bar with a pointed end, a crowbar – 'With vengeance keen, and heavy oath, To burst the door they try'd; And gavelock, pinch, and sledge hammer, With might and main they plied' [JTe].

pind (pind) v., arch. to impound – 'If in my yard again I find them, By Mahomet, I swear I'll pind them; Or catch them in a net or girn, Till I find out the boost or birn' [JR].

pindin (pin-din) n., arch. constipation.

pindit (pin-dee', -i') pp., adj., arch. constipated.

pine (pīn) n., arch. a disease of sheep or cows – 'The sheep for miles roond are a' deid i' the pine, The horses an' kye, too, are a' gaun to the divilry' [JoHa] (now known to be due to mineral deficiency).

the Pines (thu-pīnz) n. house in Ashkirk village. The original Hawick to Selkirk road used to go right past here.

Pines Burn (pīnz-burn) n. small stream that rises on Pike Fell and runs roughly to the north-east to become part of the Harwood Burn.

pingle (ping-ul) n., arch. a small pan – '... twa-three eggs ... Were boiling in the pingle' [HSR].

pingle (ping-ul) v., arch. to toil, struggle, work in a trifling way or work industriously and with difficulty – '... many an industrious housewife was able, by hard 'pingling' to augment a husband's scanty wage' [JTU], 'Ti pingle = to labour with assiduity (cf. Wilson's 'Tales') ; to strive; work hard (cf. Ransay's). Often applied to the toiling of a seamstress, pinglin an sheww-in' [ECS], applied specifically to snow whirling about, as if struggling to reach the ground, to tingle – 'Far better had I em'd an' miss'd. I only hurt my pinglin' fist ...' [WP].

Pinglehole (ping-ul-hōl) n. former farm just south of Saughtree off the B6357 by the Liddel Water, now being just a couple of cottages. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it extended to 339 acres, bounded by Saughtree, Burnmouth, Riccarton and 'Leys'. It also shared a small strip of common land with Saughtree and the farmhouse was in roughly the location of the modern cottages. William Elliot was there in 1694. Pinglehole Sike joins the Liddel Water near there. Robert Armstrong was shepherd there in 1797. There were Hislops and Grieves there in 1841 (shown on Pont's 1609 map as a tower-house, 'Pingillholls', on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Pingilholls', on de Wit's c. 1680 map as 'Pingilhols' and is 'Pingleholes' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is probably the place marked 'Hole' on Stobie's 1770 map; it was 'Pinglehoills' in 1662, 'Pingellholls' in 1694 and appears to be 'Pringlehole' in 1797; the origin may be either 'enclosure in the hollow' or 'valley of toil').

Pinglehole Sike (ping-ul-hōl-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Shiel Knowe and running roughly southwards to join the Liddel Water downstream from Saughtree.

pinglin about (ping-lin) adj., arch. swirling about (of snow), but not quite lying on the ground (see pingle).

Pinker Cleuch (piŋg-kur-klooch) n. small stream that passes the farm of Sunnyside and joins the Kirkton Burn (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Pinkerton (piŋg-kur-tin) n. John (19th C.) married Margaret Hardie in Hawick in 1841.

pinkie (ping-kee) n. little finger – 'A staved ma pinkie on that hannle', any small thing (from Dutch; also spelled 'pinky').

Pinkie (ping-kee) n. battle site by the Esk near Musselburgh, also called Pinkie Cleugh. Here in 1547 the Scots under Hamilton Earl of Arran, were defeated by the English under Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset (who had been the Earl of Hertford). Somerset had come to seize the infant Mary, who was instead spirited away to France. The huge losses of the Scots led to this day being known as 'Black Sunday'. It was the last engagement of the two national armies. Many local men must have been involved, and the dead included George Home, Laird of Wolfelee. Walter Scott of Braxholme and Buccleuch led part of the Scots force, while the Kers switched sides and supported the English (it is written as ‘Pynkyne Feild’ in 1547/8).

Pinkie Burn (ping-kee-burn) n. stream that runs past Falside farm and joins the Jed Water.

pinky see pinkie

Pinnacle (pi-nu-kul) n. farm on the south bank of the Ale Water, just east of Belses, in Ancrum Parish. It is part of a charter, along with Broomlands, given by Robert Scott of Howpasley to Hector Turnbull in 1550. Nichol Haliburton was there in 1581. In 1620 it is ‘the fourt pairt of the landis and lordschip of Belscheis callit the Pendicle’. It was owned by the Kers of Cavers Carre in the 17th century. In 1643 these lands in Ancrum Parish are recorded as ‘Morrishall, his lands in Belses called Pinnacle’, valued at £766 13s 4d; however, it is unclear what ‘Morrishall’ refers to. It was owned by George Wauchope in 1678 and valued at £500. A small part seemed to have also been included among the lands of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton in 1678, valued at £42. It was part of the Lordship of Belses held by Henry Douglas of Friarshaw in the latter part of the 17th century. In 1788 part of it was listed among the properties of William Scott of Burnhead and valued at £42, while the main part was valued at £500 and owned by William Sibbald. John Park was there in 1797 and Samuel Redpath in 1798. The men recorded in the 1799 Lieutenancy Book were Thomas Park, Robert Marshall and Robert Brown and in 1801 were tenant Thomas Park and hind James Paterson. Roderick McKenzie was there in 1852 and William Thomas in 1868. There is a square-shaped dovecote there (it is ‘Pennycle’ in 1581, ‘Pinnakill’ in 1608, ‘Pendicle’ in 1621, ‘Pinackle’ and ‘Peickhill’ in 1678, ‘Penickle’ in 1684 and ‘Penickhill’ in 1788; this is probably the ‘Pendicle’ on Pont’s 1590s manuscript and ‘Pendickill’ marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Pinnacle (pi-nu-kul) n. former name for lands near Clarilaw, to the north of Hawick. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describe it as ‘Pennick-hill or Pinnacle’, partly owned (along with Wester Clarilaw) by the trustees of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, with the other part owned by William Scott of Burnhead. It may be the same place as Pinnacle near Belses.

pinner (pi-nur) n., arch. a woman’s close-fitting cap with 2 long flaps – ‘[A person is convicted of stealing] ane laced pinner from the spouse of Richard Myles, pirriwigg maker’ [BR1697].

pinshers (pin-shurz) n., pl., arch. pinchers.

pipe (pīp) adj. relating to the bagpipes – ‘that was guid pipe music’, ‘hei was in the pipe band’.

pipe (pīp) n., arch. an acorn.

pipe-an-dottle (pīp-an-dō-tul) n., arch. a large ripe acorn still on its stalk – ‘But for borrowed beauty oot o’ a bottle – I wadna gie ye a pipey dottle!’ [WL] (also written ‘pipey dottle’ etc.).

pipe-an-kivver (pīp-an-ki-vur) n., arch. an acorn still in its case, a variant of pipe-an-dottle.

Pipe Hill (pīp-hil) n. hill above Pipewellheugh, the steep banking off Buccleuch Road on the way out of Hawick.

Pipeloch (pīp-loch) n. fanciful name for the source of the Pipewell spring – ‘It minds me of those youthful days When we went hand in hand, To sport upon the Pipeloch braes, A blythe-some little band’ [VW], ‘And a’ my heart’s thirst slocken in the Pipeloch clear and cool’ [JYH].

piper (pī-pur) n. a person who plays the pipes, usually meaning the bagpipes, although possibly other instruments such as the Northumbrian pipes can be meant – ‘Lament him, ilka piper chiel, Wha makes auld Scotia’s bagpipe squeel’ [JoHa] (see also pipers and Toon Piper).

Piper Burn (pī-pur-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising in Harden Moss and flowing roughly westwards to join the Liddel approximately opposite Powisholm farm. this is probably the ‘Poperburn’ where wright John Turnbull and labourer Andrew Turnbull were recorded living in 1801.

piper-faced (pī-pur-fāsd) adj., arch. pale-faced (from the former belief that playing pipes was harmful for the lungs).

pipers (pī-purz) n., pl. people who play the pipes. In 1627, 2 ‘pypers’, John Tait and John Laing, were among the ‘idle and masterless’ men listed by the Bailies of Hawick as being fit for military service. In 1632 the Lord of Buccleuch made a payment ‘to three English pypers at Branxholm’. In 1672 the Bailies requested that the Baron of Regality only use the Town’s own drummer and piper to ‘set the fair’. William Turnbull was elected as Town Piper in 1674 ‘and directed at even and morn and other solemn occasions, to go through the town with the drum’. James Turnbull (d.1686) was piper to Abbotrulie Parish. The 'town's officer, piper, and drummer' were each allowed money for new coats in 1702, suggesting that at this time the piper was a separate position. William Turnbull was recorded as a piper in Hawick in 1702 and 1706. In 1704 it is recorded that funds were needed for 'pypers shoes'. In 1747 (because of the debt over Teviot Brig) the Council ordain that the Town would not give an allowance to the piper, but 'what people shall give him out of their own pockets' (see also Toon Piper).

Piper's Knowe (pī-purz-now) n. north-eastern spur of Greenbank Hill in the Borthwick valley.

Pipersteed (pī-pur-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Piperstede' in a rental roll of c.1376, and valued at 4 shillings. It was part of the area known as 'Ludne', which made up part of the western side of the Liddel valley, so it was probably situated somewhere to the north-west of the present-day Newcastleton (it is possibly the same as 'Piknesteid' recorded in 1541).

the pipes (thū-pīps) n. the bagpipes or Border pipes. In Hawick it seems that the traditional instrument was the bagpipes in the 18th century, with the Town Piper being hired until about the turn of the 19th century, when he was effectively replaced with fifiers. However, it is uncertain if there were fifiers earlier than this, and it is also unclear when the town started to have a piper – 'she yaised ti play jist the chanter, bit now she's moved on ti the pipes' (see also Toon Piper).

pipe-stapple (pīp-staw-pul) n., arch. a clay pipe stem, pipe shank – 'I'll go to such a place, though it should rain auld wives and pipe-stapples' [JoJ], 'We got dirty blethers at the Killin'-hoose and blew them up wi' pipe-stapples for fitbas' [HAST1958], hence any small thing (also pipe-stopple and 'pipe-stopplit' or 'peip-stopplet'; J. Jamieson notes that 'stapclick' was a synonym in Roxburghshire, see stapple).

pipe-stopple legs (pīp-sto-pul-legz) n., pl., arch. extremely thin legs on a person or animal.

the Pipe Well (thū-pīp-wel) n. spring at Pipewellheugh, fitted with an iron pipe and trough, which supplied water for travellers along the New Road.

Pipewellheugh (pī-pul-, pīp-wel-hew, hewch) n. steep wooded bank on the other side of the main road from Langlands Bridge, in the middle of which a stream supplied the Pipe Well. The name has also been used to describe the area around the well. Before the main highway was directed that way in 1815, it presumably just had a smaller-scale track. A dry-stone wall was built along the New Road there in the late 19th century, using stones from the Mid Row. The wall was entirely rebuilt in the mid-1990s. A strong garlic smell in the area is due to the abundance of Ramsons Allium ursinum, i.e. wild garlic. There were also lands in Jedburgh called by the same name in the 17th century. From a verse written around the time of the disputed 1809 Common Riding it seems clear that a senior member of the Town Council lived near here at that time – 'Trace the source of all your troubles Where the Pipe'lheugh fountain bubbles; There a groggy club are lolling, While the Sabbath bells are tolling' [JH]. 'It is exceedingly abundant in woods and shady banks such as Pipe-well-heugh' [JAHM].

pipit (pī-pee', -pi') pp., poet. piped – 'We hae pipet untill yow, an' ye haena dancet: we hae murnet untill yow, an' ye haena lamentet' [HSR].

Pipleheugh (pī-pul-hew, -hewch) n. shortened form of Pipewellheugh, also being a name used in the 19th century to refer to a piece of land west of Balcary, and somewhat distant from Pipewellheugh. More confusingly its name was later changed to Pipewellhaugh, and now corresponds roughly to Langheugh Road.

Pipleheughfit (pī-pul-hew-fi') n. name used for the foot of the Pipewellheugh area. It is referred to in a boundary dispute of the 1780s, between Elliot of Langlands and Scott of Buccleuch.

the Pipleheugh Well (thū-pī-pul-hew-wel) n. iron trough on the south side of Buccleuch Road near Langlands Bridge. Once a source of drinking water for horses or cattle entering the town from the south. A series of land slips in the 1980s resulted in the demise of the spring which fed the trough. The supporting wall along the roadside was rebuilt in the 1990s.

Pippleheugh (pi-pul-hew) n. sometimes version of Pipewellheugh, referring to the well.

Pirie (pee-ree) n. Miss ran a seminary in Backdamgate for reading, writing and sewing, in the early 19th century, recorded in Pigot's 1825 directory. William (15th/16th C.) witness to a 1508 sasine for the Erskines lands at Synton. He may have been local like several of the other witnesses.

pirl (pi-rul) n., arch. a curl, twist, curliness of textures etc., quality of well spun wool – 'A guid pirl' [GW], poet. an eddy, swirl of air or water – 'A pirl of wynd through the key hole came, And it blew from his loofe awaye' [JTe], v., arch.

to curl, twirl, twist, twine a fishing line etc., to swirl snow etc. – ‘Snaws join the squal, wi’ pu’lin’, pirlin’, An’ drifts, as ’round knowe-en’s a-whirlin’ [JoHa], ‘When Boreas cauld, blew his pibroch fu’ bauld, And snaw showers fu’ thickly flew pirlin’ [JoHa], ‘A pewl o reek fuffelt abuin the gleed, an swurld an yilleet away in a pirlin braith o wund’ [ECS] (also purl).

pirn (pirn) n. a reel, bobbin, especially a spool for holding the weft yarn in the shuttle – ‘A braid-heided pirn, waighted doon at yin end’ [??] (in the 1841 census some people in Hawick have ‘Woolen Pirnwinder’ as occupation).

pirnie (pir-nee) n., arch. a night-cap, usually as worn by a man – ‘Pirnie, A woollen night-cap; generally applied to those manufactured at Kilmarnock, Roxb.’ [JoJ], ‘... He pu’d on his pirnie, and turn’d himsel’ round’ [JoHa], ‘... if hei wad bring his pirnie hei wad never ken but hei was in his bed’ [JT], ‘Kilmarnock pirnies on their heids, Knee breeks and ootsteek shoon’ [JT], ‘... keekin’ oot o’ the loft window at Colterscleuch wi’ his pirnie on ...’ [DH].

Pirnie (pir-nee) n. Alexander ‘Alex’ (1825–79) local stone-mason. He was born in Edinburgh, son of stone mason Alexander and Agnes. Apprentice to his father in Kikliston, he then moved back to Edinburgh, where he worked for the architects firm Peddie & Kinnear in Edinburgh, and for James Harkness, builders in Hawick in 1859. His workmanship can be seen at 4 Tower Knowe in the ornamental cornices on what was the Commercial Bank and at the former Royal Bank of Scotland at 12 High Street. He also carved the bust of Burns that is at the Burns Club, as well as a head of Garibaldi and the lions on the Monteat Mausoleum. By 1861 he is living in Wilton, where he appears to have stayed for the rest of his life. He died intestate, and was then described as a ‘stone-hewer’. He married Isabella Dawson, and had at least 2 children, Janet and Alex. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery.

pirr (pir) n., arch. a state of anger – ‘He’s in a gey pirr’ [GW], v., arch. to be angry.

Pirrie (pi-ree) n. Alexander ‘Alex’ (19th/20th C.) manufacturer of ginger beer in Hawick. He apparently gave rise to the term ‘stane pirrie’, meaning hare-brained.

the Piv (thu-piv) n. the Pavilion, also known as the Pavilion Picture and Variety Theatre, a spacious picture house on the High Street. It was built in 1913, with an Art Deco styled frontage, at 74 and 76 High Street, the land purchased from Francis Kyle and George Tait, respectively. It originally had theatrical performances as well as films, and could seat 1400 people. It was possibly the most glamorously decorated of Hawick’s theatres, having pink satin curtains, with zig-zag coloured bands along the bottom and pink lighting. The last film shown was ‘the Millionairess’, and it was demolished in 1964 to make way for a shopping complex, now occupied by Boots. Some of the seats were rescued for use by the Hawick Film and Video Group – ‘The Piv, the Kings, oor ain Wee Thea The shops aw open till eight ...’ [AY].

the Plant Mercat (thu-plawn’-mer-ki) n. former market in Hawick where plants were sold. It is recorded in 1675, showing that Hawick was known for buying plants long before Dickson’s nursery was established. A man from Kelso was fined for accusing a man from Eskdalemuir of stealing 3000 plants from him there, ‘which he could not make out, and which were found to have been bought from other planters’. It was probably part of one of the regular markets held in Hawick.

plash (plawsh) n., poet. a splash – ‘Wi’ plash and spurt and peaceful purl’ [JEDM], adv., arch. with a splash – ‘When gloamin’ comes doon wi’ its shadows dark, ...An’ yetts play jaig, and dubs play plash’ [JoHa], ‘...But I missed my fit in a craigie slit, And fell ower the lugs wi’ a plash’ [WaD], v., arch. to splash, squelch – ‘...Some gi’e themsel’s a hantla fash, The warldly race, Thro’ thick an’ thin unwearied plash, To see thy face’ [JR], ‘The gowans white as they – Waes me! where are they a’ to-day, And a’ creation plashin’ [HSR].

Plashetts (plaw-shits) n. village north of Hexham, based around the Plashetts Colliery, and having a station depot on the Border Counties railway line. It is now submerged under Kielder Reservoir. ‘Plashetts’ is also the popular name for the type of coal coming from the Plashetts Colliery, which was locally much favoured in the 19th century – ‘Man, I got my porridge made wi’ Plashetts coal this morning, an’ they were gude’ [WiS], ‘Jock’s to the Plashetts gane for coals, An’ Crummie’s i’ the shiel’ [WiSp].

playgrunds (plā-grundz) n., pl. playgrounds. In the Hawick area these have been at the following locations: Bowden Road; Burnfoot School; Denholm Loaning; Hislop Gardens; Leaburn Drive; Little Haugh; Mayfield; the Miller's Knowes; Myreslawgreen/Green Terrace; Sleepy Valley/Burnhead Road; Volunteer Park; Waverley Walk; Wellington Court; and Wilson Drive.

the Playin Fields (thū-plā-in-feeldz) n. name sometimes given to the part of the Park on the south side of the river, off Buccleuch Road, used for playing various sports. Roughly the same area has also been known as Corseflat and the Gardener's Haughs. It was at one time a nursery, then known as Wester Nurseries, and then was allotments. A petition of 1859 asked the Duke of Buccleuch to keep this trip of land for recreational use. It was gifted to the town in 1931 by later Duke, after he had passed through Hawick during the Vertish Hill children's procession. It was hence also known as 'the Buccleuch Playing Fields', is about 5 acres, and effectively forms an addition to the Park. An all-weather sports ground was built there in 2005, adjacent to the Volunteer pitch, and also referred to as Volunteer Park.

the Playlaw (thū-plā-law) n. name for the area around the Mid Raw (now Drumlanrig Square), in use in the 16th–18th centuries – 'Bailie Graham and Thomas Bridges [were ordered to collect] westward from the bridge to the foot of the play la' [PR1717] (origin possibly a form of 'plea-law' indicating a judicial use in the past; also spelled 'Plalaw', 'Play-la' and other variants).

pledge (plej) n., arch. a person standing as security for another, a hostage – '... Philpe Twrnbull, as plegis and souerte for Stewyn Twrnbull, his brother ...' [SB1500] (arbitrarily plural in older local documents).

the pledges (thū-ple-jeez) n., arch. a game popular with youths up until the latter part of the 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson). It involved 2 teams of roughly 12–20 a-side, and was played on open ground with a line drawn and with coats, hats etc. acting as the 'pledges', placed 20 or 30 yards from the line. The object of the game was to capture the ‘pledges’ of the opposing team without being caught. Captures occurred through either being touched in ‘enemy territory’ or dragged over the line. Such players then became ‘prisoners’ who could be freed by being touched by a member of their own team. The game often started with a mock taunt such as ‘Set your foot on Scotch ground, ye English, if ye dare!’. The teams often formed themselves into 2 lines, with the stronger boys in front and the faster ones behind. Wilson’s description sounds astonishingly like rugby, which would only be played in Hawick from 1872 – ‘...to enjoy on the Haugh ... a game at ‘the pledges’, which sport was greatly in vogue among youths in those days ...’ [RM].

pleasant (plee-zin’, plee-zint) adj., arch. pleasant – ‘... the pleesent herp wi’ the psaltrie’ [HSR], ‘... for it is pleesint, an’ prayse is bonnie’ [HSR], ‘... thochts o sic bonnie bits ti pit bye an huirrd in eis posie o pleezant mairmeries’ [ECS], ‘Stinty Knowe then the Cala Burn There isna a walk mair pleasant ...’ [AY], ‘Some pech wi beagles owre the leys, And think it pleasant ...’ [DH].

The designation might arise from the practice of measuring a deep body of water with a plumb-line' [JoJ], 'Now especially in place-names, as 'Jack's Plum', 'Pate's Plum'' [GW] (also written 'plumb'; the origin is the Latin 'plumbum', for the lead weight used to test the depth of water).

the Plum (thū-plum) n. area of deep water at the very confluence of the Teviot and the Slitrig, also known as 'Pate's' or 'Pete's Plum', after Paterson's joinery yard near there – 'Our bills were paid and our anchor weigh'd As we sail'd from the fam'd Pate's Plum, And the distant thunder roll'd afar Like the beat of a muffled drum' [WE], 'Ah dear auld Hawick, though forced tae roam, Far frae thy silvery Teviot's sides, Far frae the sicht o' Slitrig's foam As swiftly tae the Plum it glides' [HI] (plum or 'plumb' is used throughout Scotland in place names to denote a deep pool, often one considered to be dangerous; 'Jack's Plum' is a pool in the Teviot near Kelso).

plumet (plum-i) n., poet. a pommel, knob on the hilt of a sword – 'Dickie cou'd na win to him wi' the blade o' the sword, But feld 'im wi' the plumet under the eie. Fala, &c.' [CPM].

Plummer (plu-mur) n. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as Chamberlain to the Earl of Roxburghe in Selkirk records around 1660. Andrew of Middlestead (17th/18th C.) farmer in Selkirskshire. In 1678 he paid the land tax on part of Lindean in Selkirk Parish, as well as lands in Midlem (in Bowden Parish) and had a discharge for annual rents in Selkirk (with another in 1780). Also in 1678 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, in 1685 for Selkirkshire and in 1690 for Selkirkshire along with William, probably a son. In 1711 he was one of the founders of the 'Honest Country Club'. His son Gavin became a Burgess of Edinburgh, and his grandson Andrew became one of the first Professors of Medicine at Edinburgh University in 1726, while a later Andrew of Middlestead was another enthusiast of the Border ballad whose death allowed Sir Walter Scott to become Sheriff-depute of Selkirkshire. He was succeeded by his son William, who married Jane, daughter of William Ker of Sunderland Hall. Dr. Andrew of Sunderland Hall (1697–1756) son of Gavin, he was born in Edinburgh. He married his cousin Marjorie, who was daughter of William of Middlestead and Jean, daughter of William Ker of Sunderland Hall. He studied in Edinburgh and Leyden, graduating M.D. in 1722 and becoming one of the founders of the medical school at Edinburgh University. He was Professor of Chemistry 1726–55. He was known for his thesis called 'de Phthisi Pulmonalia Cattarrhe erta', as well as for 'Plummer's pills', a preparation of calomel, antimony sulphide and guaiacum, which was widely used to treat syphilis. He inherited Sunderland Hall through his mother. He was recorded in a discharge with the Town Treasurer of Selkirk in 1743 and others with the Burgh in 1746 and 1747. Andrew of Middlestead (1748–99) Sheriff of Selkirkshire, preceding Sir Walter Scott in this office. He was also known as an antiquarian. He owned Sunderland and Sunderlandhall as well as Middlestead. He paid the land tax in Selkirk Parish in 1785. In 1788 he is listed among the voters of Selkirkshire. He had 4 horses according to the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Jane, sister of Gavin Elliot of Midlem. Their children were: William, who succeeded; Gavin, a merchant in Edinburgh; and Margaret, who married Andrew Waugh and whose grand-daughter married Charles Scott of Woll. He appears to have also married Mary, daughter of Pringle of Torwoodlee, and she died in 1839. Gavin (17th/18th C.) son of Andrew of Middlestead. He was a merchant in Edinburgh, also serving as Treasurer to the Town Council there. Perhaps the same Gavin had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1709. Along with Adam Scott of Burnfoot he sold the lands of Burnfoot to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712. He married Elizabeth Clerk. Their son Andrew was elected one of the first Professors of Medicine in Edinburgh in 1726. William of Middlestead and Sunderland Hall (17th/18th C.) son of Andrew. He married Jean, daughter of William Ker of Sunderland Hall. Their children included: William (b.1701); Gavin (b.1703); Marjorie (b.1707), who married Dr. Andrew Plummer, her cousin; Andrew (b.1708); and Gilbert (b.1709). He had a discharge with Selkirk over rent in 1744 (also written 'Plumber').

plump (plump) n., arch. a fall, particularly in the phrase 'thunder plump', meaning the sudden down-pour of a thunder storm – 'It could be the odd thunner plump Will lowse a pickle water' [WL], '... Whiles wi' a touch o' temper efter a thunner-plump' [DH] (see thunner).

plunk (plungk) v. synonymous with plank, but also used as the past tense – 'did ee plunk eet over there?' (cf. the more common plank).

poach (pōch) v., poet. to poke with a stick – 'We'll poach the fire, an' ha'e a crack aside the chumla lug' [JJ].

poachin (pō-chin) n. the act of taking fish or game illegally. This has a long history locally. 'Kinly Stick' (George Hunter) and 'Heather Jock' (John Mitchell) were well-known local poachers in the mid-19th century. A large gang of poachers operated in the Borthwick valley in the early 19th century, with a reputation for even roasting whole sheep on their days-long forays; the local lairds and authorities formed a 'posse' which rounded up 20 of these men in 1832. The appointment of a constable in Hawick in about 1832 led to a domination of the practice. Views on the legality of taking salmon from local rivers have historically differed between various segments of the population. Skills with the 'cleek' and 'geg' have been carefully passed on for generations in some families.

pock (pok) n., arch., poet. a sack, poke, bag, wallet – '... She then the cat loos'd frae the pock, An' Johny was contented' [JR], 'And straight they went to the tything pocke, 'Twas heapit to the heade ...' [JTe], 'Although the pock 'twas ta'en Pocohoparke (po-kō-hō-pawrk) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, precise location uncertain. It is listed in 1632, as one of the possessions of Will Armstrong, along with Leahaugh and Whitehaugh (this is possibly a transcription error).

poddult (po-dul') adj., arch. chubby, particularly said of a child or poultry (also spelled 'pod-dled', 'poddlit', etc.; noted by J. Jamieson).

podler (pōd-lur) n., arch. the young of the coal-fish, Gadus virens – 'Gumpin' podlers' [GW].

The Poetical Museum (thu-pō-e'-ee-kul-mew-zee-um) n. book published in Hawick in 1784 by George Caw, with full title 'The Poetical Museum, Containing Songs and Poems on almost every subject, Mostly from Periodical Publications'. It was the first significant publication from Hawick. It contains a miscellany of pieces, including the first appearance in print of some of the Border ballads ('Dick o the Cow', 'Jock o the Side' and 'Hobbie Noble'), as well as other ballads that had already appeared elsewhere ('Child Maurice', 'Adam o' Gordon', 'The Battle of Red-swire', 'Johnie Armstrang', 'Hardyknute' and 'The Wee Wee Man'). There is a piece of verse from Thomas Telford, and a few poems that appear to be genuinely of local production, such as 'The Braes of Branhholm' and 'Lines on the Death of Robert Scott, Esq., of Whitslade'. There are also many anonymous poems that may be by local writers. However, most of the selections are pastoral verse, such as by Ramsay, and other well known writers of the day included Fergusson, Smollet and Thomson. Several variants appear to have been published, including some substituting the poem 'Modern Chastity' for 'Acrostic by a young girl in Hawick'. The subscription list is also interesting, since out of 158 names listed (including 9 women), most are from Hawick and district, and so it gives insight into the supporters of literature and local traditions in the 1780s.

poind (poind, pind) v. to impound, seize, distraint, explicitly a term in Scots Law relating to the seizure of a debtor's property for sale – 'Mr Patrick Cunningham is fined for reproachful language against the bailies, in saying that in spite of them, and they were hanged, they should not poind him upon their decreet ...' [BR1676], '... onlawed in ane deforcement of yr. officer when he come to poynd for his fyne ...' [BR1693], '... otherwise the cattle so found will be poinded for trespass toties quoties' [BR1777] (also spelled 'poynd').

Poinderhaugh (poin-dur-hawch) n. former name for lands in Bedrule. In 1801 it was part of the estates (valued at £3) bought by William Elliot of Wells.

points (points) n., pl., arch. lace or cord, typically of yarn or silk, used for tying together items of clothing – '... twenty-four ells of white cloth, half a gross of silken points, half a pound of sewing ...' [RBA1537].

poist (poist) v., arch. to eat gluttonously – 'To Poist, Poost, To cram the stomach with more food than nature requires, Teviotd.' [JoJ] (also poost and puist).

poke (pōk) n. a bag, particularly a small paper one – 'wud ee like ti share ma poke o chips?', 'He has tyde them to the puir catte's tayle ... In a poke he putte her syne' [WiSp], 'Now ee must hev luitten't faa, nih! haigglin thae poaks an that nibbie an umbrellih an thing' [ECS], 'Pokes for the sweeties, sticks, tatties an' paper, An' she's quick oan her feet, for sic a stoot cratur' [IJ], 'A poke o' buns at the Vertish Hill And the laddies flying their kites ...' [AY] (sometimes written 'poak'; from Old French; cf. pock).

the Police Act (thu-po-lees-awkt) n. usually referring to the Police and Improvement Act of 1861, which revised Hawick's Town Council, did away with the Burgesses, and altered the boundaries of Hawick to include Wilton. It is also sometimes known as the Burgh Improvement Act and was published in 1861 as 'A Bill for altering and amending the Constitution of the Burgh of Hawick'. This was a Special Act brought to Parliament, following the general Police of Towns (Scotland) Act of 1850 and an 1857 Act of Parliament ordering all remaining Burgh and County areas in Scotland to establish proper police forces, as well as elected councils responsible for paving, lighting, cleansing, etc. The Police force itself was set up following a separate Act of 1846. The bounds of the Town for the purposes of policing were stated in about 1850 to be within 1000 yards of the Cross (see also the polis).

the Police Court (thu-po-lees-kōr) n. former term for the Magistrate's court held in Hawick – 'It is the Police Court To which I say ye should resort. There go and mark each separate case, There go and watch the Bailie's face ...' [JCG] (also Bailie Court).

the Police Station (thu-po-lees-stā-shin) n. the station was originally situated in the old Town House, with the Burgh police force occupying a space below the Council Chambers. It later moved to the Cross Wynd, and was then into the new Town Hall building. This had 4 cells and an exercise yard. The separate station for the county police force was once on the Mill Path, built (or perhaps renovated) in the 1890s to designs by J.P. Alison. A new Station was built in 1964 at Wilton Hill as a large, unremarkable, flat-roofed block. The Roxburgh, Berwick and Selkirkshire force being amalgamated into the Lothian and Borders Police in 1976. The Police Station in Denholm was formerly located on the south side of Eastgate, and there was also once a station at 'the Coppers' outside Robertson (see also the polis).

the Policeman's Brae (thu-po-lees-munz-brā) n. old name still sometimes used for the Cross Wynd, from the Police Station that was there until about 1964.

policy (po-lee-see) n. an improvement or development of a town, park of an estate, ornamental ground – 'Bye the policies o Ancrum Hoose ...' [ECS], 'Sent for by Col. Vassall desiring me to find out if possible who did the damage to Polacy Dyke' [RG].

the polis (thu-po-lees, pō-lees) n. police, referring to the police force, or one or more policemen or policewomen – 'if ee deh stop that racket A'll get the polis on ee', 'At the Polis Coort on Monday They will stand before the bar ...' [WE], 'The Polis brings his previous bell. He's now like any rock ...' [WP], '... They never cared a resh for bailies, polis, or kirk-bell' [DH]. A properly organised force took a long time to organise, with each Burgh left to make its own arrangements. In 1805 the Privy Council recommended that Roxburghshire should have a force of 39 men, but the county force was not established until much later. The Town Council resolved to improve the system of policing in 1806 (probably meaning that they employed a constable for the first time). In the early 19th century the Hawick Burgh force consisted only of the Sheriff Officer (or constable), plus the 2 Burgh Officers, and this for a population of about 7,000. A proper town force was established in 1846. A constable's baton from the 19th century is in the Museum. There were also rural police stations, the one in Newcastleton being at 15 Douglas Square (see also the Police Station).

the Polis Hoose (thu-po-lees-hoos) n. house attached to the Town Hall, used as the residence of the local chief of police. When the new station was opened on Wilton Hill, the house (as well as the cells, etc.) ceased to be used by the police. John Auchinleck lived there for several years until 1964 and then Ian Inglis 1964–67. The last occupant of the house was Bill Allan in his capacity as Burgh Officer. In about 1990 the house became vacant and the space became part of the Council offices.

politeecian (po-li-tee-shin) n. a politician – 'O' a'budy he hez suspeecians, Parteec'larly the politeecians' [IJ].

poll (pōl) v., arch., poet. to cut hair, clip, trim – 'My care, as he polls in my scanty crap, The shuds o' white that scudder owre my lap!' [WL], n., arch. a hair-cut.

poll (pōl) v. to steal, especially to obtain apples or other fruits from a tree belonging to someone else – 'let's gaun polin for yer neebur's aipples', 'oo aye went polin up Rosalee Brae', 'Whae raigularly taen on the Bankie Rangers frae Langlands Bank at a' kinds o sportin contests frae cockerossie ti pollin aipples' [IWL] (also written 'pole'; presumably related to the word for hair-cut and related to 'pollard', and nothing to do with the use of a pole).

Pollach (po-lach) n. former lands in Liddesdale, on the opposite side of the river from Mangerton. In a c.1376 rental roll ‘Pollok’ is valued at 2 shillings. In 1541 it is recorded as ‘Pollok’, valued at 5 shillings and leased to Christopher Armstrong (possibly of Langholm). ‘Pollok’ was listed among Liddesdale lands possessed by Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in 1632. It is not marked on older maps, but Pollach Plantation appears on the modern Ordnance Survey map.

Pollock (po-lok) n. Rev. John minister of Minto Parish 1936–56. During his time the old Manse became uninhabitable and he rented Dean-syde for many years. Robert F. (??–??) Pont (pont) n. Timothy (c.1560–c.1614) son of a Fife minister, the exact years of his birth and death are unknown. He was given church lands by his father, and was appointed minister of Dunnet in Caithness. However, his fame is as an early Scottish cartographer, his manuscript maps of the 1590s being used as the basis of the atlas of Scotland published by Joan Blaeu (of Amsterdam) in 1654. Only a fraction of the original maps survive, amounting to 77 maps on 38 separate sheets. His manuscript map, usually referred to as ‘Pont 35(2)’, shows Hawick, along with part of the Teviot, Ale and Rule valleys. This is drawn (upside-down) on the bottom of a sheet depicting Nithsdale and surrounding area.

Porteous (pōr-shis) n. Agnes (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her forename is written ‘Agneus’. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1643 being in Rule.

His lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £10. Andrew (17th/18th C.) shoemaker listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the Andrew listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was reported to the Session in 1725 when he required assistance ‘in regard of his numerous years and want of sight’. It was said that his elder son George was in a good financial position to support him, while his other son was not. His wife was Helen Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1680), baptised in Robertson Parish; Thomas (b.1684); George (b.1688), who married Janet Harkness; and probably Marion (b.1693). His sons Thomas and George were probably the Hawick carriers of the early 18th century. Shoemaker Robert seems likely to have been another son. The witnesses in 1680 were George and William Scott (who were probably related to his wife), in 1684 and 1688 were Thomas Bridges and Michael Turnbull. He witnessed a baptism in 1689 for James Lethem. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick, probably related to the earlier shoemaker of the same name. In 1724 he married Helen Simpson, who was also from Hawick. Andrew (d.1794) flesher in Hawick. In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for tobacconist William Sadler. Probably the same man is recorded with surname ‘Pertos’ in 1751 when he paid the Hawick Town Council for renting the ‘leach [probably ‘low’] prison’ (perhaps for the purposes of selling meat, but this is unclear). He died in Hawick Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) butcher in Hawick. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he was listed as owner of part of Weensland, which had been purchased from Robert Scott. David (16th/17th C.) listed in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. His was listed among Turnbolls of Rulewater and was probably also from there. Francis (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. George (d.c.1684) tenant in Abbotrule. His will is recorded in 1684. George (b.1688) youngest son of shoemaker Andrew and Helen Scott, he was a carrier in Hawick. He was probably brother of Thomas, who was a carrier in Hawick at the same time. In 1722 he witnessed a baptism for the deceased shoemaker Robert, who was probably his brother or other close relative. In 1716 he married Janet, daughter of William Harkness, tenant in Borthaugh. Their children included: Mary

(b.1720); Andrew (b.1721); Ann (b.1727); Bessie (b.1725); and James (b.1732). The 1720 baptism was witnessed by the 2 merchants Robert Robson, the 1725 baptism by Andrew and William Ogilvie and the 1727 one by Bailie Martin and Francis Ruecastle. George (1836–91) born in Greenlaw, he was a hatter and manufacturer of Waverley Mills. He was a member of the Archæological Society from 1869. He had the house Viewforth built for him in 1878. He married Sarah Matilda Ward Dowdy (1844–1922) and their children included: William Roland (b.1868); George (b.1870); and Robert Williamson (b.1881). George Shields (1870–1961) son of a hatter and manufacturer. His hatter's and hosier's shop was at 57 High Street. He was an early prominent member of the Hawick Cycling Club. He married Annie Rachel Humphries. He died in Dunoon. Isobel (17th/18th C.) wife of William Taylor. She was recorded in the Hawick Session records of 1721 being rebuked for her drunken behaviour in the Kirk. James (d.c.1681) tenant in 'Minto-hill' when his will was recorded in 1681. Perhaps the same James was owner of a piece of land in Lanton, according to the 1678 valuation roll. James (17th C.) tenant in Abbotrule according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1758 he married Margaret Brown (who is also referred to as being 'Or Scott', suggesting she was married earlier). Their children included: Margaret (b.1759); George (b.1760); and Janet (b.1762). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were shoemaker George Gardner and Church Officer Alexander Bunyan. He may be the James recorded in 1800 (along with his brother John) when his aunt Agnes Scott died. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as 'Portuis'. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1656 his son Robert with Margaret Scott was baptised. The child was born illegitimately and the witnesses were Adam Scott and Walter Robson. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. Perhaps the same John was recorded in Lanton in 1663. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth 'Shiftie' and their children included John (b.1731), with witnesses John Turnbull and John Scott. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as 'laurencii portews'. He was among the men who Adam Scott of Tushielaw had remission for resetting for stealing sheep from farms in Peebleshire. Lawrence (18th C.) overseer of the Turnpike roads in Hawick, he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1767. Margaret (d.c.1687) tenant in Ruecastle when her will was recorded in 1687. Patrick of Hawkshaw (d.bef. 1738) eldest son of John and Mary Ramsay, and descendant of the riever of the same name. In 1678 he became a Burgess of Peebles. He contributed £1100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He held a bond with Henry and William Elliot of Harwood in 1696, and raised an action against them for non-payment in the following year. In 1681 he married Mary, daughter of William Scott of Headshaw. She became an heiress on the death of her brother John, and so he gained lands of the Headshaw family in 1691 (making her husband confusingly 'of Headshaw' as well as Hawkshaw). He was involved in several 'wadsets' and in 1707 transferred all his remaining lands to his daughter Henrietta and her husband Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. He had another daughter Elizabeth, who married Alexander Williamson of Chapelhill. He died without a male heir. Robert (d.1722) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for merchant Michael Scott in 1712. In 1715 he was fined 'for swearing by the name of God extrajudicially in ane lawful fenced court, when not required thereto'. He could be the Robert who married Anna Porteous in Hawick in 1705, with child Isobel (b.1706). Probably the same Robert secondly married Esther Turnbull in 1708, and had children: Anna (b.1709); Isobel (b.1711); Helen (b.1713); James (b.1716); Janet (b.1718), who married weaver Charles Scott; Esther (b.1720); and Robert (b.1722). In the 1722 baptismal record he is 'now deceased'. The witnesses in 1709 were Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland and merchant John Graham, in 1711 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and baker William Hodge, in 1713 were weaver Robert Turnbull and Bailie Robert Hardie, in 1720 were William Cunningham (son of the minister) and Walter Scott (servant of the minister), and in 1722 were carrier George and Beadle Walter Scott. Robert Williamson (1881–1976) born in Wilton, son of manufacturer George. He was a missionary in China before WWII, along with his wife, Bessie Lucille Huntamer. She later wrote the book 'Uncle: The Story of Robert W. Porteous' about their time in China. He died in Olympia, Washington, U.S.A. Roland (17th C.) resident at Sorbietrees in Castleton Parish according to the 1694

Hearth Tax records. Samuel (b.c.1780) servant at Tower in Cavers Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Thomas (17th C.) Edinburgh ‘writer’ who leased the lands of Minto Craigend in 1686. Thomas (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He was recorded in 1718 being rebuked for having a horse race with John Turnbull on the Common Haugh on a Sunday. He could have been the Thomas, son of Andrew and Helen Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1684. He married Agnes Gibson in Hawick in 1714. Their children included: Andrew (b.1717); Robert (b.1720); George (b.1722); Thomas (b.1724); Agnes (b.1725). The witnesses in 1720 were merchants William Tudhope and William Oliver and in 1722 were Robert (who was surely related) and maltman John Moss. He may have been brother of carrier George, who lived in Hawick at the same time. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Borthuikbra’ in 1573 when he was presented for trial in Edinburgh by ‘Wat Scott in Hartwoodmyres’, son of William Scott of Tushielaw. He was probably tenant of Borthwickbrae. William (d.c.1682) tenant in ‘Stennilodge, Abbotroul’ when his will was recorded in 1682. He was presumably farmer at Stonedge (formerly spelled ‘Partis’, ‘Porteus’, ‘Portice’, ‘Portous’, ‘Portows’, ‘Portuis’, ‘Portus’, ‘Portwise’ and variants).

Porteous Croft (pōr-shis-kroft) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1580 the 6 acres in the town of Lilliesleaf that were leased for £24 a year by John Donaldson from William Middlemas are referred to as ‘Portus Croft Heid’. In 1643 the lands was rated at £78. In 1788 they were part of the lands owned by Edgar Hunter of Linthill. In 1811 they were among lands owned by William Riddell of Camieston, later passing to William Currie of Linthill.

Porteous’ Well (pōr-shi-seez-wel) n. former public water supply above the Mid Row, also known as ‘Michie’s Well’.

porter (pōr’-ur) n., arch. a part of the weave, consisting of 20 spaces through which the warp threads are passed, the number of these per unit length determining the density of the weave – ‘In order to find the number of slips to warp any length of web, multiply the number of porters in width by the ells in length, and divide by 72’ [BCM1881].

porter (pōr’-ur) n., arch. someone in charge of a gate, particularly applied in former times to the resident of Ewes Doors, perhaps a soubriquet for the keeper of a changehouse at the pass there, with Ninian the Porter recorded as tenant of Ewes Doors in 1567 – ‘Item, to the porter of Ewisdyer for the rest of a price of ane horse, xijℓ x s.’ [SB1574].

Porter (pōr’-ur) n. Alexander (19th C.) Superintendent of Police and Chief Constable in Hawick from about 1863. He was later Chief Constable for the county, based in Jedburgh.

Porterfield (pōr’-ur-feeld) n. John (d.1604) briefly served as Archbishop of Glasgow during troubled times. Son of John, 1st Laird of Duchal, he was minister of Dumbarton, then Kilmarnock and Ardrossan. He was nominated somewhat mysteriously in 1571, after the position was forfeited by James Beaton. He was the first post-Reformation appointee, who was Archbishop in name only. However, a commission immediately investigated his appropriateness and it is unclear that he was ever consecrated. He later served as minister at several parishes, settling in Ayr in 1580.

Portheid (pōr’-heed) n. name for former lands on the Stobs estate. It is listed in 1657, between Winningtonhall and Horselee, although the location is unknown.

the Ports (thu-pōrts) n. gates to Hawick, which could be closed to defend the Town. Hawick once consisted of basically a single street (the High Street, continued by Silver Street and the Howegate) and no bridge access across the Teviot. There were 4 roads leading out of town in different directions, with gates that would be locked at night. These were the North Port (on Walters Wynd, which led to the river ford), East Port (roughly opposite Baker Street), South Port (at the Cross Wynd), and West Port (at the foot of the Loan). Plaques to mark their former positions were placed by the Callants’ Club in 1964. As well as these major ports, there were also at least 3 minor gates, located at the Mill Port, the Round Close and the Howegate/Silver Street junction. It is unclear when these ports were first constructed, but possibly shortly after Hawick became a Burgh in the 15th century. The ports were removed following the Turnpike Road Act of 1750, which allowed for the improvement of roads using income from tolls.

Porty (pōr’-ee) n., arch. short form for Portobello, once a popular seaside resort for Hawick folk to visit by train, with its promenade pier, artificial wave pool and other attractions – ‘Aw wis juist a lad at Wulton skuil Juist a wee bit fella When ma mother broke the news ‘Oor gaun tae Portabella’ [AY].

postcaird (pōst-kārd) n. a postcard – ‘A maircht eend ti the ‘Gazette’ Office, an bocht a when picter-postcairds’ [ECS], ‘A expeckeet a letter, bit aa hei wrait iz was a bare post-caird’ [ECS], ‘Whae reads a’ the cotton-gress postcairds there, Sae fer frae the haunts o’ men?’ [DH].

Postie’s Pool (pōs-teez-pool) n. popular name for a pool in the Ale Water to the west of Lilliesleaf village, near the sports field. The name is said to refer to a local postman who drowned here.

postmaister (pōs-mās-tur) n. postmaster, someone in charge of a post office. In 1747 Andrew Turnbull is recorded as ‘Town Post’, although it is unclear what responsibilities he had.

Hawick’s first actual postmaster was John Elliot, a tanner, who gave his services freely in 1767. He was followed by Mr. Turnbull, the schoolmaster, appointed by the Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, but he was found unsuitable. Then Elliot was re-appointed against his will! He stated that he was often away from home as one excuse, but was told that he was the only suitable person and so the public would just have to wait if he was away. James Inglis (schoolmaster and later Town Clerk) was postmaster in 1772, and at some later point the office was taken by Miss Inglis (probably James’ sister), who must have been one of the country’s first post-mistresses. Robert Armstrong took over in 1809 and held the position till his death in 1852. The position was then held by Francis Deans, George Deans, James Orr, H. Little and James M. Sampson, taking us up to the early 20th century – ‘But ... whae’s postmaister on Post Office Knowe, Sae fer frae the haunts o’ men?’ [DH].

the Post Office (thu-pōst-o-fees) n. Hawick General Post Office was for a century on North Bridge Street, at the corner of Croft Road. It was built in 1892 on ground that had been J.E.D. Murray’s studio, and allotments before that. The architect was J.P. Alison, and the foundation stone was ceremoniously laid by Mrs. Oliver (her husband having owned the land). A 2-storey addition was also designed by Alison in 1904. It was much altered over the years, with the sorting office moving to St. George’s Lane in 1972 and the Post Office vacating the premises entirely in 1993. The building later contained ‘Stampers’ bar and an Indian restaurant, and then the Con Club. Meanwhile the main Post Office moved to Safeway, which itself closed in 2004, leaving the Sandbed branch as the main one in the town. The earliest mention of local mail is from about 1760 when letters would come once a month from Jedburgh and be laid out in an open stall for collection. In 1766 the Council records show them paying a man explicitly to take a letter to Edinburgh. The origin of the organised mail service lies with Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, who (in 1767) started an experimental post thrice a week to and from Berwick and Edinburgh, with John Elliot the first part-time postmaster (note that Walter Scott of Harden had also pushed for twice weekly service from Edinburgh to Peebles, Selkirk and Hawick in the 1750s). A post office was established shortly afterwards through the efforts of the Duke of Buccleuch's Chamberlain Robert Scott. James Inglis was recorded as post-master in 1772 when he and Bailie Hardie were paid by the Council 'for post letters, &c'; postage from Edinburgh at that time appears to have been 2d. Before the establishment of a post office the letters were exposed at a stall on market days, or on the flat tombstones of the kirk-yard after Sunday services. The route from London was to Edinburgh via Coldstream, and then via Dunbar and Berwick, and then by pony to Kelso and on to Hawick. there was a theft of mail bags near Kelso in 1800. Miss Inglis (Joanna) was postmistress until 1809, when Robert Armstrong took over. The first mail-coach (on the Carlisle-Hawick-Edinburgh route) started in 1807, so that not all mail had to come from Berwick and Kelso. The situation changed utterly with the coming of the penny post in 1840. The location marked on Wood's 1824 map was the corner of Silver Street and the Howegate. The Post Office moved from the foot of the Howegate to the High Street in about 1860 and then to North Bridge Street in 1892. By the late 19th century there were also receiving stations on Wilton Path and Dovemount. Several sub-post offices later existed throughout the town, including at 7 Sandbed, Dovemount Place, Wilton Dean Burnfoot, the top of Trinity Steps and at Safeway (closed 2004). Now only the Burnfoot and Sandbed branches survive – 'But they've ta'en oor Post Office away, That hez been there for mony a day, They didni care what Hawick folk felt, Doon the river oo've been sellt' [IWL].

Post Office Knowe (pōst-o-fees-now) n. hill on the Border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, just to the north of Craik Cross Hill. The name is mysterious – 'Whae named yon hill-top 'Post Office Knowe', Fer frae the haunts o' men, Ootbye Craik Cross abune Borthwick-heid? I'd fairly like tae ken' [DH].

the Postrel (thu-pos-trul) n. name sometimes given to the doggerel verse 'A True History of the Right Honourable name of Scot', written by Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells and first published in 1688.

post-seek (pōst-seek) a., arch. bedridden – 'Post-sick, Expl. 'bedrid', Roxb. Often used; but whether the meaning be the same with that of the phrase, Postit with sickness, is doubtful' [JoJ].

pot barley (po'-bawr-lee) n., arch. barley that has been milled to remove the husks, for use in soups etc. – '...sending him to Sandy Neil's for washing soda and pot barley' [JTU].

Potburn (po'-burn) n. former farm adjacent to the Southern Upland Way, between Ettrick Pen and Pot Law. It was purchaed by James Pott, W.S., in 1831. He was son of Gideon Pott of Dod. Walter Dalgleish from there published his 'Poems and Songs' in Hawick in 1891 (also written 'Pottburn').

potch (poch) v., arch. to trample soft ground into mud – '...when the Magistrates and other persons at the Common-Riding potched the ground he had plowed' [C&L1767].

pot-hole (po'-hōl) n., arch. a deep hole or pool in a river.

pot-shakins (po'-shā-kinz) n. pot scrapings, the last to come out, last of a litter – 'The pot-shakins o a big West End familly Jock came efter his threi brothers and six sisters' [IWL].

the Pot Sike (thu-po'-sik) n. small stream in the upper part of the farm of Milsington. It flows roughly southwards to join the Dean Burn. There is a local tradition that there may be buried treasure there, and hence a suggestion that this may have been where the bronze Roman leg was found in 1820 (also written 'Pot Syke'; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Pott (po', pot) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Dickson and their children included Bessie (b.1645). Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included John (b.1669). Probably the same Adam, with wife Janet Riddell, was father of Janet (b.1679). Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded in Kirkton Parish where he was married in 1714 (with no wife's name given). Probably the same Adam married Helen 'Kinarie' in Kirkton Parish in 1717. His children baptised there included Adam (b.1717). It seems that he was separate from his contemporary who farmed at Wolfelee and Shankend. Adam of Hoscote (1690/1–1770) probably eldest son of George. He was tenant farmer at Wolfelee around 1715, moving to Shankend, where he was recorded in 1725 and 1727. He purchased the lands of Hoscote from the Homes in about 1723, starting his family's association with that estate. He was recorded at Shankend in 1729. He seems likely to be the Adam of 'Outterside' listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761 and was 'of Hoscatt' listed along with his son George among the Commissioners of Selkirkshire. He married Betty Elliot (1686/7–1752). His children included: George (1712–70), who succeeded; a daughter (1716/7–1774) who is only marked on the gravestone as 'Mrs. Elliot'; Elizabeth (d.1783), who married Thomas Stavert, tenant at Coliforthill; William (b.1725); Jean (or Janet, 1727–77), who married Walter Grieve, farmer at Airstwood, and whose son John Grieve co-inherited Hoscote with George Stavert; William (again, 1729–75), baptised in Cavers; and Janet (1730/1–57). The marriages of his daughters Elizabeth and Jean were at the same time in 1744 in Robertson Parish. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Learmonth in Robertson Parish in 1754 (and recorded as 'Helen Learmond' in Kirkton Parish). Their children included James (b.1765) and Adam (b.1768). He is probably also the father of John (b.1757), baptised in Robertson Parish. He may be the Adam who witnessed a baptism for John Pott and Margaret Shiel in Wilton in 1747. Alexander of Borthwickshiels (d.1796), probably related to the Potts of Todrig, he was a surgeon in the West Indies. In 1788 he and Robert (possibly his son) are recorded as owners of Borthwickshiels, valued at £600. They were also recorded in 1788 as owners of land valued at £156, which had earlier been owned by William Scott of Galalaw (and was presumably Galalaw itself). His connection with Galalaw suggests that he was related to George of Todrig (possibly his father), who had married Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw earlier in the 18th century. He is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for Robertson Parish in 1789–92. Although he died one year earlier, he is still recorded as owner of 2 farm horses and 2 carriage or saddle horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid tax for having 3 non-working dogs at Borthwickshiels in 1797. He was still listed as owner of Borthwickshiels on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (with George of Todrig listed as owner later in the 19th century). His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1796, when he was recorded as a bachelor of Robertson, Selkirkshire. Alexander 'Sandy' (1793/4–1859) younger son of Gideon of Dod, born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Burnfoot in the Ewes valley. He was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He was at Burnfoot in 1841 and in 1851 was farmer of 2600 acres, employing 10 people. In 1823 he married Appalina Hogarth (who was born in 1796 in Channelkirk). Their children included: Mary; Elizabeth; Apalina Christina Hogarth, who married Robert Laidlaw Turnbull, one of the Turnbells of Merrylaw; and probably Gideon (d.1913), who emigrated to Queensland. Andrew (17th

C.) weaver living at 'Todscloughsyde' in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (1759/60–1844) son of Robert and Margaret. He was a resident of Castleton Parish and is probably the shepherd at Tweedenhead recorded on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He married Betty Armstrong (1758/9–1820) and they had a son Robert (1801–75). The family are buried in Castleton. Arthur David Ripley (1862–1901) eldest son of Gen. David of Todrig and Borthwickshiels. He served with the K.O.S.B., being appointed Lieutenant in 1886 and Captain in 1894. He volunteered for active service along with his battalion in 1900 and was Staff Officer to the Commandant of Schweizer Reneke. He died of an abscess of the liver and is buried at Kimberley, South Africa. A memorial stone was erected in Robertson Cemetery. Gen. David of Todrig (1812–81) son of George and Katherine Reid and younger brother of George. He served in India during a rebellion in 1833 and during the Sutlej campaign, where he commanded the 47th Bengal Native Infantry. He received commendation for his command in Pegu Burnah in 1854 and for commanding the 47th Regiment during the rebellion in China in 1858–59. He became a General in 1877 and was awarded the Companion of the Bath. He owned the lands of Whitslade and Borthwickshiels, among other local holdings. He married Mary Anne, daughter of Col. Ripley, and she died in 1870. Their children were: Capt. Arthur David Ripley, who died in the Boer War in 1901; Emily Louisa, who married Capt. Sydenham J. Lambert; Anne Sophia, who married Lieut. Reginald C. Hadrow; Lucy Ada; Eliza Davidson; and Constantine (d.1875). In 1876 he secondly married Anna Frances, daughter of A. Boyle from Dublin, and she died in 1878. They had a son, Henry Percy, as well as daughters. He himself died at Borthwickshiels. Edward Helme (1880–1968) son of Col. William of Knowesouth, he achieved the rank of Lt. Col. He married Louise Medora Hermione Vanneck and had a daughter, Hermione. George (1650/1–1720) perhaps the oldest local Pott with known connections to the Todrig and Hoscote family. He has one of the earliest tombstones in Borthwick Waas, which appears to say that he was 'of Whilhill brae' (probably Whitehillbrae on the Dod Burn). He is said to have married an Elliot and had 14 children, probably including: Adam (1690/1–1770) of Hoscote; possibly John of Caerlenrig (1692/3–1772), but this could have been his nephew; Robert (c.1696–1771); George of Todrig (1699/1700–81); and James of Dod (1701/2–65). He was therefore the progenitor of the Potts of Caerlenrig, Dod, Hoscote and Todrig. He is surely the same man as the tenant in Whitehillbrae and Newton, whose children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Mungo (b.1708); John (b.1708); Janet (b.1710); and Thomas (b.1712). The name of his wife is not recorded. George of Todrig (1699/1700–81) son of George who died in 1720. He is recorded in 1762 when Christian, widow of Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, was involved with him in a court case to recover money owed to her husband. He was listed along with his son George among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw about 1754 (although possibly the George and Elizabeth Scott who were married in Robertson Parish in 1738); she died in 1755, aged 42. He purchased the lands of Caerlenrig from Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig and secondly married Robert's daughter Margaret (however, this could be confusion with other Potts). Altogether he had 2 daughters and 6 sons. His eldest son George (1739/40–81) succeeded to Todrig, while his son John (by his first marriage) succeeded to Caerlenrig (but again this could be confusion with other family branches). It is also possible that Alexander of Borthwickshiels was another son. He is probably the George of Todrig recorded as liferenter of lands in Headshaw in about 1788 (although deceased by then). George of Hoscote (1712–c.80) son of Adam of Hoscote. He inherited the Hoscote estate on the death of his father (perhaps in 1770). He was a witness to the will of Robert Grieve in Deanburnhaugh. He was 'younger of Hoscatt' among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He died unmarried, probably around 1780, and bequeathed the estate to his nephews George Stavert (son of his sister Elizabeth) and John Grieve (son of his sister Jean). In 1783 there was a sasine in favour of his sisters, the only surviving children of Adam: Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Stavert in Coliforthill; and Jean, wife of Walter Grieve in Airswood. George (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included Adam (b.1743), Betty (b.1750) and George (b.1775). He is probably related to George of Whitehillbrae, who had children baptised in Kirkton 30 years earlier. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1765); John (b.1766); Jane (b.1767); Mary (b.1768); and Betty (b.1770). He may be the same man as the George whose children were baptised in Kirkton Parish at about the same time. George (18th C.) married Betty Stavert in Robertson Parish in 1766. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Agnes Tait in 1782. George of Todrig (1739/40–81) son of George and Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw. He was listed as 'younger of Todrige' among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He was still 'younger' in 1779 when Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto gave him liferent of much of Headshaw; this was part of Elliot's plan to stack the Roxburghshire voters' roll with his supporters. He is recorded paying the land tax on Todrig in 1785 and 1802 (even although he may have been deceased by then). He was also recorded as owner of the lands in Firth in 1788. Note that he is easily confused with his contemporary George of 'Rig' (meaning Caerlenrig). In 1778 he married Barbara, daughter of Walter Turnbull of Firth and Dorothea Chisholme; she later married Thomas Knox, was mother of the poet William Knox and died in 1821, aged 68. Their children (baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish) were: George (b.1779), who probably died young; George (b.1780), who succeeded; and Barbara (b.1782), who married Charles Erskine of Shielfield. The family gravestone at Borthwick Waas states that he died in 1781, just a month or so after his father; he was certainly deceased in 1806 when his daughter Barbara got married. The Mary who married William Aitchison (who later owned Brieryhill) may also have been his daughter. He may have been the same as the heir of Borthwickshiels who was killed by a fall from his horse near Howdenburn. George of Caerlenrig (1722/3–1815) son of John of Caerlenrig and Mary Scott. He is probably the 'Pott of Ridge' (no forename given) listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was George 'of Ridge' when listed along with John (probably his father) witnessing a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Falnash in 1764. He owned the farm of Caerlenrig in 1788, valued at £366. He is recorded being 'of Ridge' on the 1785–86 Horse Tax Rolls for Cavers Parish, listed along with his son in 1787 and then alone again in 1788–92. He is 'George Pott Esqr. Rigg' on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also 'Esqr. Rig' in 1797 when he was taxed for having a dog. He may be the George 'of Clanduchrig' (perhaps intended to be Caerlenrig) listed in 1788 among the voters of Roxburghshire associated with Sir Francis Eliott of Stobs. He is probably the 'Mr' George who in 1800 witnessed a baptism for Thomas Glendinning, shepherd at Blackcleugh. He was listed as owner of Caerlenrig in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Note that he is easy to confuse with his contemporary George of Todrig. According to the family gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery he married three times: firstly Isabella Currie (1753/4–72), who had the same name as his step-mother, and hence was a niece of his step-mother; secondly Jane Little (1736/7–1775); and thirdly Margaret Elliot (1737/8–1821). He was listed as ‘in Colindrikrig’ when his wife and another family member were buried in Hawick in 1772. He was succeeded in Caerlenrig by his son John (1765/6–1830) and also had a son Robert who died in childhood. He appears to have lived to the age of 92. George (18th/19th C.) married Agnes White in Hawick in 1796. They were described as both being of Hawick Parish. He could be the George ‘twedycleuch’ whose son’s death was recorded in Hawick in 1800. George of Todrig and Borthwickshiels (1780–1862) son of George and Barbara Turnbull. He was Convenor of Selkirkshire, as well as Justice of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant in that county. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. He was an officer in the local (Dumfries) Militia, serving as Ensign from 1798, Lieutenant from 1799, Captain from 1802 and Major 1809–11. He was probably the George of Todrig (separately listed from George of ‘Rig’) among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1811 he was listed as owner of land at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish, as well as Brieryhill in Wilton Parish. He was listed as owner of Borthwickshiels in about 1874 (after he was deceased). A carved panel on a farm building at Todrig probably relates to him; it has the initials ‘G P’ at the top, a lozenge in the centre, and the inscription ‘REBUILT 1833’ at the bottom. He was listed with another George (probably of Caerlenrig) his father, even as Commissioners of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1819. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1851 he was ‘Landed Proprietor’ at Borthwickshiels. In 1807 he married Katherine, daughter of David Reid, commissioner of customs she died in 1833. Their children were: Jane Stephen (1808–88); Barbara (b.1810), who married James Erskine of Shielfield, probably her cousin; Eliza Davidson (1815–64); George (b.1811), Major in the Bengal Army; David (b.1812), General in the Bengal Army; and Stephen (b.1813), with the Bengal Engineers. His adult daughters Jane, Barbara and Eliza were living at Borthwickshiels

House in 1841. He died at Borthwickshiels and is buried in Robertson Cemetery. George of Dod (1790–1862) born at Penchrise, son of Gideon and Elizabeth Pott. He was the 3rd Pott Laird of Dod. He was educated at Jedburgh, Yarrow and Edinburgh University (probably the George recorded in medicine there in 1809). He was Lieutenant in the Roxburghshire Militia from about 1811 and became a Captain of the Roxburgh yeomanry cavalry in 1817. He went through a protracted legal battle with Sir William Francis Eliott of Stobs (also junior captain in his regiment) over the deal their fathers had made over the lease of Penchrise. He eventually lost the case in the House of Lords. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. About 1828 he rented Crawhill farm (now Bucklands) and lived there until he bought Knowesouth (from William Oliver Rutherford) in 1838. He was listed as resident of Crawhill in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was ‘Proprietor’ at Knowesouth and in 1851 was ‘Landed Proprietor, Justice of the Peace’ at Knowesouth, farming 112 acres and employing 5 labourers. He also ran the farm of Ruecastle. About 1854 he sold the farm of Riskenhope (by St. Mary’s Loch) to John Scott, W.S. From cousins at Skelfhill he obtained an old copper pot, 19 1/2 inches deep, said by tradition to be the cauldron in which Lord Soulis was boiled at the Nine Stane Rig! He gifted this relic to the Duke of Buccleuch. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1813. He often told the story about meeting an old man, James Bunyan, herding his cow, and on asking him who was the worst farmer in the county was told ‘Weel, sir I think it is just yersel’. Along with Mr. Selby (factor to the Earl of Minto) he had the idea to build a bridge and roads to connect Has-sendean station with Denholm (this being later implemented). In 1823 he married Jean (or Jane), daughter of William Elliot, architect; she died in Edinburgh in 1864, aged 64. Their children were: Jane (b.c.1825); Elizabeth (b.c.1826); Esther (b.1829); Thomasina (b.1830), who married lawyer James Oliver; Gideon (1823/4–1905), who farmed at Knowesouth; William (b.1833), officer in the 89th Regiment; Janet (d.1912); and Ann. He died at Knowesouth and the family are commemorated at Borthwick Waas. George, J.P. of Todrig and Borthwickshiels (1811–77) son of George and Katherine Reid, and brother of Gen. David. He served with the Bengal Army, reaching at least the rank of Major (and was listed as Colonel on his memorial stone). He was recorded as ‘George Pott, Esq. of Borthwickshiels’ among landowners in Robertson Parish in 1841. He gave the land for the new Kirk at Robertson in 1862. In 1840 he married Julia, youngest daughter of Rev. Robert-Sparke Hutchings and she died in 1872. Their children included: George (1843–46); Constantine; George (again, 1847–54); Katherine (1850–55); and Robert Constantine (1851–75), his only surviving son, who was a Lieutenant in the 76th Regiment. He is buried at Robertson, along with other members of his family. George (18th/9th C.) name of 2 men listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. One was at Wilton Lodge and the other at Crawhill. Neither of them are listed by 1840. George (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1852 he married Jane Bell. George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1855 he married Isabella Foster. George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabella Murray and their children included George (b.1859), Jane (b.1866), William (b.1867), William (again, b.1868) and James (b.1870). George (1842–98) younger son of James of Potburn and Jane Brown, and brother of George. He was born in Edinburgh. He succeeded his brother to the lands of Potburn and for some years lived at Lintalee. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1870. He moved to 55 Albany Street Edinburgh, and died. He married and had a family, probably being succeeded by James Gideon. George (19th/20th C.) brother of James Gideon. He succeeded to Potburn, but lived in New Zealand. Gideon of Dod (1757–1812) son of James and Jean Scott. He was a successful tenant sheep-farmer at Penchrise, apparently being let the farm by Sir William Eliott of Stobs at a reduced rate because he had lent some money towards the building of Stobs Castle. He was brother of Isabella (who married Thomas Usher of Courthill). A document of 1784 shows him clearing the debts of William Elliot (son of Capt. Robert) before he succeeded to Harwood. He also bought the farm of Riskenhope (formerly part of Rodono) from Hay of Duns Castle. He was granted a 77 year lease of Penchrise and Langside in 1794 (this being challenged when the son of the granter brought a court case against his son George). He is probably the Pott of Penchrise who subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He is recorded at Penchrise on the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls and in 1797, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He paid the land tax at Dod in 1811. In 1783 he married Elizabeth Pott of Todrig, and she died at 'Warebank' (probably Weirbank in Melrose) in 1840, aged 84. Their children (at least 4 of whom were baptised in Cavers Parish) included: James (1784–85), eldest son; Elizabeth ('Betty', 1785–1855), eldest daughter, who died at 'Warebank'; Jean (1787–88); George (b.1790), who farmed Penchrise; James (again, b.1792), who became a lawyer; Alexander, who farmed at Burnfoot on Ewes; another daughter; and Thomasina ('Tomy', 1797–1866), youngest daughter, who also died at Warebank. He is buried along with other family members at Borthwick Waas. Gideon of Dod and Knowesouth (1823/4–1905) eldest son of George and Jane Elliot, born at Penchrise. He was educated at Canonbie, the Grange School in Sunderland and Edinburgh University. He acquired parts of Ruecastle from Thomas Rutherford and William Oliver Rutherford of Edgerston. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1847. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He also acted as collector of county rates in 1848 and for several years afterwards (still being so recorded in 1866). He turned down an offer to be agent of the British Linen Company in Jedburgh. Along with Edward Heron Maxwell he implemented the building of a bridge and road (by public subscription) to connect Hassendean station with Denholm. He also arranged a collection to give a gift to the Duke of Buccleuch for appreciation of locally keeping fox hounds at his own expense (this being 2 candelabra). He entered the new volunteer cavalry as a private and later became a Lieutenant. He was an expert shot, winning the officers' challenge cup of the Border battalion outright after 3 victories in a row, and placing well in several national competitions. He was a successful sheep-farmer and took pupils at Knowesouth for agricultural training. He was recorded at Knowesouth in a directory of 1868 and paid the land tax there in 1874. He was said in 1903 to be in possession of the watch found by a Penchrise shepherd in 1815, which was perhaps dropped by Mary Queen of Scots. His sister Thomasina married James Oliver, lawyer of Mayfield House. He married Janet Hunter (also known as Janet Lean Hunter Hunter, 1826/7–1912), from Crawford, Lanarkshire, who died in Jedburgh. Their children included: Gideon (1862–1904), an engineer, who predeceased him, dying in Glasgow; Grace Murray (b.1863); William (b.1865), the only surviving son; and Agnes ('Nancy', b.1871). In 1891 his younger daughter Agnes married William Edward Oliver-Rutherford, and at the same time his elder daughter Grace Jane married Isaac Fenton Bayley (of Halls, Dunbar). Henry Percy (19th/20th C.) son of Gen. David of Todrig. He served in the military, being with the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers and in 1904 became a Lieutenant with the 5th Light Infantry, advancing to Captain in 1908 and temporary Major in 1915. His daughter Ruth Barbara (1910–61) married Ernest Keatting and is buried in Robertson Cemetery. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as owner of Caverton when he was fined for failing to appear at the Justice-aire. He later presented Nicholas Brown to give suit for his lands in Caverton. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, living at Cauldmill in 1709. His children included Walter (b.1696), Marion (b.1705), Jane (b.1707) and Margaret (b.1709). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their son John was baptised in 1716. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Borthaugh in 1721. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Andrew (b.1721), with witnesses George Bell and William Turnbull. Probably the same James, also at Borthaugh, married to 'Agnes' Scott was father of Agnes (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were 'G.B.' and William Turnbull. James (18th C.) farmer who, along with 2 brothers, rented much of Harwood from William Elliot about 1730. He may have been the son of William born in Cavers Parish in 1702 or could have been the same man as James of Dod. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Skelfhill in 1738 and 1748. His children probably included: Margaret (b.1738), Thomas (b.1741), Elizabeth (b.1744) and Mary (b.1748). It is possible he is the same as James of Dod. James of Dod (1701/2–65) farmer at Penchrise and Langside. He was one of 14 children and possibly youngest son of George (who died in 1720). He married Jean, daughter of Gideon Scott of Woll, and she died in 1767, aged 48. Their children included: Elizabeth; Isabell, who married Thomas Usher of Courthill; George (b.1744), their eldest son, who died aged 4; Elizabeth (1756/7–83), 3rd daughter; and Gideon (1757–1802), 2nd son, who succeeded to Dod and farmed at Penchrise. He may be the James who had unnamed sons baptised in Cavers Parish in 1744, 1750 and 1757. He died at Penchrise and was buried at Borthwick Waas. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Borthaugh in 1751. He is probably related to the James who was at Borthaugh a generation earlier. In 1744 he married Bessie Palmer, the marriage proclaimed in Robertson and Wilton Parishes. Their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included James (b.1746), William (b.1748) and Isabel (b.1751). Probably the same James was father of Ann (b.1755), who was baptised in Robertson (and may be the Ann who married shoemaker George Shiel). The witnesses in 1751 were Robert Smith and James Scott. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Scott in that parish in 1753 and their daughter Betty was baptised in Hawick in 1762. Perhaps the same James is recorded marrying another Agnes Scott in 1767 (that marriage also being recorded in Hawick). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Scott and their children included Betty (b.1762). It is possible he is the same man as James of Dod. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Nichol and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1761. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Paterson and their children included: Janet (b.1761); Agnes (b.1761), who married Robert Young; and James (b.1764). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Agnes Scott from Ashkirk Parish. James of Potburn (1792–1852) from the Penchrise family, son of Gideon and Elizabeth Pott, he was born in Cavers Parish. He trained as a lawyer, becoming W.S. in 1818. He was one of the trustees for the late Adam Stavert of Hoscote in 1828, along with one of the Georges. He bought the lands of Potburn, Selkirkshire in 1831. He may be the James recorded in a letter of 1836 preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1838 he was listed as a writer in Edinburgh when he witnessed a document in Hawick (relating to the Dicksons) and a letter from the same year is preserved in the Walter Mason collection. He married Jane, 2nd daughter of Peter Brown of Rawflat in 1839. His children included James Gideon and George. His firm could be the 'Messrs. Pott & Macmillan' recorded in documents of 1814 in the Walter Mason Collection. James (b.1839/40) son of Martin. He married Agnes Lamb in 1860 and their children (baptised in Hawick or Wilton) included Mary (b.1860), Martin (b.1863), Walter (b.1865), Jane (b.1867), Martin (again, b.1867), Margaret (b.1869), and William (b.1874). In 1861 he was living with his father at Upper Hope Park. James Gideon of

Potburn (1840–65) eldest son of James of Potburn and brother of George. He was born in Edinburgh. In 1859 he obtained a commission as Cornet in the 11th Hussars. He was described as a ‘delicate, handsome-looking man’, but of poor health. He had to retire from the army and died at the age of 25. His brother George succeeded to Potburn. James Gideon (d.1915) from the local family, probably son of George of Potburn. He died in Salonika on active service with the Lothian and Borders Light Horse. His brother George succeeded. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Wilson and their children included William (b.1639). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Huggan and their children included Bessie (b.1646). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Johnston and their children included William (b.1655). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son William was baptised in 1674. Perhaps the same John was father of Agnes (b.1692). John (17th C.) resident of Bowanhill on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident of ‘Dodburne in Kirkton Parioch’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Poott’. Perhaps the same John in Winningtonrig had a child John baptised in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Miller in 1712. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott and his children included Margaret (b.1713) and Isobell (b.1716). John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Marion (b.1726); and James (b.1728). John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included George (b.1724), Robert (b.1725) and Margaret (b.1726). He may be the John who got married in Kirkton Parish in 1721 (wife’s name not given). John (1692/3–1772) succeeded to the lands of Caerlenrig from his father George (however, it is also possible he was a nephew of George). He and George ‘of Ridge’ (probably his son) witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Falnash in 1764. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls ‘in Rigg’ in 1789–91 (even although deceased by then). He married Mary Scott, who died in 1730, aged 34. He secondly married Isabella Currie, and she died in 1763, aged 50. His children included: Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1721/2–43), his oldest daughter; and George (1722/3–1815), who succeeded to Caerlenrig. He could be the John whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included Marion (b.1758) and Margaret (b.1759). It is also possible that he is the same man as John from Kirkton Parish, whose son George was baptised in 1724. He is buried at Borthwick Waas along with several family members. John (18th C.) recorded as ‘Workman’, probably in the Teviothead area. He married Margaret (or Marion) Crow in 1730, both of them being from Cavers Parish. Their son James was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1738, with Walter Scott at Commonsideside one of the witnesses. He could be the John in Colterscleuch whose daughter Mary (b.1732) was baptised in Cavers Parish. John (b.1734), also baptised in Cavers, was probably his son. John (18th C.) tailor who lived in Wilton Parish. He was living at Langlands in 1744, 1747 and 1751. He married Margaret Shiel in 1739 and their children included: James (b.1740); Robert (b.1741); Janet (b.1744); Ann (b.1747); and Isabel (b.1751). The witnesses in 1744 were James Dryden and Walter Scott, in 1747 were Walter Scott and Adam Shiel (who was probably related to his wife) and in 1751 were Robert and Walter Scott. His wife’s death is recorded in Hawick in 1787. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret ‘Batety’ and their children included Helen (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were merchant John Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. He is probably also the carrier whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1745, with witnesses shoemakers John and Thomas Scott. John (18th C.) married in Kirkton Parish in 1754, with no wife’s name recorded. John (18th C.) schoolmaster at Caerlenrig 1762–63. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Clerk in 1760 and their children included John (b.1761), Betty (b.1766), Betty (again, b.1773) and William (b.1776). The witnesses in 1766 were merchants John Hardie and Adam Leyden and in 1776 were the whole congregation. Note that at about the same time John Clerk was married to Margaret Pott, and so the couples may have been related. John (18th C.) married Janet Ogilvie in Castleton Parish in 1769. John (18th C.) mason from Hawick, who carried out much of the repair work after the 1767 flood, rebuilding the small arch of the Auld Brig and the wall of the Manse. He died a few years later, following an accident that occurred on the completion of the Hornshole Bridge. He was maternal grandfather of Alexander and Robert Michie, and hence probably father of Betty, who married Alexander Michie in Hawick Parish in 1797. His son John died in Hawick in 1778. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk

Parish. His son John was baptised in 1754. John (18th C.) erected possibly the first stocking-shop in Hawick, in the back of the house adjoining Oliver Place (sold to the Olivers around 1875 and demolished). His father owned the property and the house at the front, bearing the date 1769. He is probably the John whose wife Peggy Turnbull died in 1795, the couple being married (declared in Wilton and Hawick Parishes) in 1786. He is probably also the stockingmaker in Hawick who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mabel Nichol and their children included Robert (b.1792), Mabel (b.1794), James (b.1796), John (b.1798), Betty (b.1800) and Jean (b.1802). John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Robson. Their children included Helen (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796) and Elliot (b.1811). John of Rig (1765/6–1830) son of George and Isabella Currie, he held the lands of Caerlenrig. He is probably the '& Son of Rigg' recorded along with George on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the 'Mr Pott, junior, Carlenrig' on the subscription list for John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He is recorded being from 'Rigg' in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791 regarding a lost almanac. He is probably the John 'Potts', 'Esq. Carlenrigg' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He became a member of the Wisp Club in about 1827. He married Christian Aitchison, who died at Mackside in 1842, aged 82. He is buried along with his father, grandfather and other family members in Borthwick Waas. There are documents relating to his family, covering the period 1743–1845, in the Borders Archive. Martin (18th C.) groom at Stirches in 1778, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. He was surely related to Robert, who was a stable-boy at the nearby Burnhead. He is probably the Martin who married Betty Gray and whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included Martin (b.1779). Martin (b.c.1770s) servant at Borthaugh according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. Probably the same Martin was servant at Adderstoneshiel on the 1801 Militia ballot in Kirkton Parish. Perhaps the same Martin married Margaret Scott and their daughter Marion was baptised in Wilton in 1804. He is probably the son of Martin and Betty Gray born in Wilton in 1779. Martin (b.1803) son of Martin, he was born in Wilton Parish, where he worked as a wool spinner. He was living at Malt Steep when listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. He was living at the Malt Steep in Wilton on the 1841 census and on Wilton Kirkstyle in 1851. In 1861 he was a widower at Upper Hope Park. He married Mary Little, who was from Langholm. Their children included: Mary (b.1828); William (b.1830); Martin (b.1832), who became power loom manager of the Cumledge Mill; Ann (b.1834), who married Alexander Baillie, and was grandmother of Isabella Baillie; Margaret (b.1837); James (b.1839); David; and Alexander. Martin (b.1832) son of Martin and Mary Little, he was born in Hawick. In 1858 he married Martha Oliver and moved to Duns, where he was power loom manager of the Cumledge Mill. They had 8 children: Margaret (b.1859), born in Wilton; Mary (b.1861), baptised in Hawick; Agnes Wilson (b.1874), baptised in Wilton; and 5 others. Martin (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Simpson in 1864. Robert (d.c.1684) tenant in Langhaugh whose will is recorded in 1684. It is unclear which 'Langhaugh' this was, although probably in Roxburghshire. Robert (1705/6–81) tenant in Hudshouse. In 1758 he had his children Helen and Jean, with Helen Murray baptised in Hawick; the record is labelled as fornication. He died at Turn and is buried in Borthwick Waas (with no other family members listed). He is surely the Robert 'Potts' who is listed as joint possessor (with William Elliot) of the famr of Turn in 1779. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Cavers in Kirkton Parish in 1755. Their children, baptised in Castleton Parish, included Andrew (b.1762), William (b.1765) and Walter (b.1765). John (b.1756), baptised in Castleton Parish, may also have been his son. It is possible he was the Robert who owned Demainholm (along with Matthew Little) according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Betty Scott, and their children included Jane (b.1760) and John (b.1761). Robert (18th C.) house and stable boy at Burnhead in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Scott. He could be the Robert who married Margaret 'Robison' in Hawick Parish in 1787. Capt. Robert of Galalaw (d.1803) recorded in Robertson Parish on the Land Tax Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1802. Probably the same Robert is recorded in 1788 along with Alexander, as joint owner of land valued at £156, which was presumably Galalaw, as well as Borthwickshiels, valued at £600. He was also recorded as owner of Galalaw on the county valuation and on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although already deceased by then). It seems likely that he was son of Alexander of Borthwickshiels and grandson of George of Todrig. He died at Borthwickshiels. Robert (d.1816) recorded as 'old Tailor and Packman Midraw' when his death was registered in Hawick. He could be the pedlar Robert who was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. Robert (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was recorded as a carter among male heads of households in the Parish in 1835–41. He was an agricultural labourer and carter on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, living on North Hermitage Street. He was listed as a farmer in 1861. He married Mary Armstrong (b.1811), who was from Canonbie. Their children included: Betty (b.1832); Margaret (b.1833), who married David Oliver; Andrew (b.1836); John (b.1838); Christopher (b.1840); Jane (b.1842); William (b.1845); Walter (b.1847), who moved to Glasgow; James (b.1849); Euphemia (b.1852); and Robert (b.1855). The couple were rebuked for 'antenuptial Fornication' in 1832. The 1841 record says 'to America and dead', but that must be an error. Col. Stephen (1813–85) son of George. He served with the Royal Bengal Engineers and retired in 1862 with the honorary rank of Major General. There is a pink granite memorial to him in Robertson Cemetery. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Howpasley. Along with William Telfer (also in Howpasley) and several other men from the upper Borthwick, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the 'Test' and promised not to frequent conventicles. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included William (b.1699) and Margaret (b.1708). Thomas (1723–1829) son of William, he was farmer at Toffholm in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses, and on the Dog Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 dogs. He married in 1763, but his wife's name is unrecorded. He was probably father of Mary, who married Adam Robson, and perhaps John who married Betty Robson. He probably also had a son Thomas who was 'Mr. T. jun.' in 1821. Thomas (b.c.1779) inn-keeper of the Buccleuch Arms in Newcastleton, recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. He is listed as a carter among heads of households in Newcastleton in 1835–37 and then as an innkeeper. He was surely related to Robert, who was a carter at about the same time. Probably the same Thomas was recorded as 'Junr.' at Toffholm on the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and was a shepherd at Toffholm, with surname recorded as

'Potts' on the Militia ballot in 1801. In 1841 he was a publican at about 48 North Hermitage Street, with his wife Betty and children Helen and Betty. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Hogg and their children included: Helen (b.1806); Anne (b.1808); Helen (again, b.1808); Thomas (b.1810); William (b.1812); Robert (b.1814); and Betty (b.1821). He could be the 'Mr. T. jun. Toffholm' listed in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821; he was presumably son of the older Thomas. Thomas (19th C.) married Anne Scott in Cavers Parish in 1828. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Young and their children included James (b.1799). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included Helen (b.1655). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married 'Issobell Heutsone' in 1685 and their children included John (b.1687). The witnesses were Robert Scott and Robert Ormiston (probably farmer at Boonraw). William (18th C.) resident of Todshawhill. His children included John (b.1702). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers and Hawick Parishes. He was living at Langside in 1702 and at Slaidhills in 1704. He married Janet Buckham in 1699 and their children included James (b.1702) and Anna (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were John Foster and William Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Isabel Brydon in 1709. He was recorded being in Skelfhill in 1709. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was herd at Lymiecleuch in 1727 and probably the same William was at Shankend in 1738. Possibly the same William was father of Thomas (b.1724), John (b.1727), George (b.1738), John (again, b.1740) and Margaret (b.1743). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Janet Hislop in 1734. William (18th C.) tenant at Hoscote, recorded in a court case of 1754 with John Armstrong, tenant of Fingland, Dumfriesshire. William (b.c.1780) servant at Burnmouth according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. William (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabella Mather and their children included: Janet (b.1825); Jane (b.1827); and an unnamed son (b.1829). William (19th C.) married Ann Henderson in Wilton Parish in 1842. His children included Agnes (b.1842), baptised in Ashkirk Parish. William (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Currie in 1859 and their children included

Margaret (b.1858) and Mary (b.1863). William (b.1834) 2nd son of George of Dod. He was an officer in the 89th Regiment. He married a daughter of Thomas Helme of Surrey. Col. William (20th C.) probably son of Gideon. He served with the 27th Inniskilling Fusiliers. He lived at Knowesouth. His son was Lt.-Col. Edward Helme (formerly sometimes 'Pot'; see also Potts, with which it was sometimes synonymous).

potted meat (po'-eed-mee', -ee'-) n. dish made from boiled meat and bones, which sets into a jelly when cooled – 'We aa killed pigs aboot that time an made the potted meat. An you got the potted meat potted heid' [TH] (also spelled 'pottit' etc.).

Potterlampert (po-tur-lam-pōr') n. name of a former tower, recorded on Sandison's c.1590 map, roughly near where the Hermitage Water joins the Liddel. It was recorded in a rental list in the charters of the Douglasses of Morton in about 1376, being worth 34 shillings. It could be the 'Porter-landes' among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. It was listed in 1632 among the Liddesdale lands of Sandy Armstrong. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1694. In the 1718 Buccleuch survey it is shown as a farm of 550 acres, bounded by Nether Harden, lands of the Laird of Whithaugh and Hillhouse. It also shared a common of 37 acres with the farm of Hillhouse and another of 24 acres with the Laird of Whithaugh's tenant. It could potentially be the same place as Puddinburn, or else was merely a smaller house nearby. A small stream on the east side of the Liddel Water, between Castleton and Whithaugh is called Pouterlampert Sike and a farmstead is marked there on the 1862–3 Ordnance Survey map. A section of bike trail in the area has also been named 'Pouter Lampert' (it is 'Pouterlampert' in about 1376, 'Powterlapmpert' in 1583, 'Porterlampet' in 1632, 'Polterlampert' in 1694 and 'Porterlempet' and 'Porterlampit' in 1718; the origin could be Celtic 'polter' meaning an upland stream, 'lann' meaning open land and 'pert', meaning 'bush').

pottinger (po-ting-ur) n., arch. a porringer, large bowl-shaped utensil, usually for soups etc., an apothecary, druggist – 'Given to the Pottingar, 12s' [PR].

pottit meat see potted meat

Pott Loch (po'-loch) n. body of water marked on Blaeu's 1654 map to the south of Clearburn Loch, and perhaps confused with what is now called Kingside Loch. 'Pot Loch', which is little more than a pond, sits to the west of Shaws Upper Loch, between the Ale and Ettrick valleys.

Potts (pots) n. Adam (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Nichol and their children included Elliot (b.1872). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lillieleaf. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1732. Andrew Petrie (b.1822) born in Eckford Parish, son of William Hunter and grandson of Thomas. He was a stationer in Edinburgh. George (1793–1851) born in Oxnam Parish, son of Thomas and Andrea Petrie. He was a 'writer' (i.e. lawyer) when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Several letters to him from the 1820s are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He is also recorded as a 'writer' on Buccleuch Street in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and also writer in Hawick in the 1828 Edinburgh Almanack. He lived on Buccleuch Street, and was also listed there on Pigot's 1837 directory. He served as solicitor with the Sheriff Court in Hawick, being sometimes described as Procutator Fiscal. He is listed as a joint proprietor on the 1833 electoral roll of Hawick, acquiring a house in Hawick from Robert Heckford of Kelso; Thomas (writer in Edinburgh) and Andrew Petrie (stationer in Edinburgh) are also mentioned, possibly his brother and brother-in-law. In Pigot's 1837 directory he is listed as agent for Scottish Union insurance. He was recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1838 (relating to the Dicksons), with James Pott, W.S. also a witness (even although he was presumably not related). In 1851 he is a solicitor of the Roxburghshire Sheriff Court, living on Buccleuch Street. In Slater's 1852 directory (published just after his death) the firm of Potts & Carmichael is listed as writers and notaries on Buccleuch Street; he must have briefly been in partnership with the much younger James Carmichael. He married Janet Anderson in 1837, and she died in 1898, aged 84. Their children included: George, who died in infancy; and Andrew (1838–95), who took over the farm of his uncle John Henderson at Lewenshope, in the Yarrow valley, and married Jessie Mitchell. There is an obelisk to his memory in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. James (1737/8–1817) Sheriff Clerk for Roxburghshire. He is so recorded in 1780 and in 1799 was recorded as Clerk to the Lieutenancy of Roxburghshire. He may have been son of Thomas. He lived in Jedburgh. He paid tax on a male servant in Jedburgh from 1778 through the 1780s. In 1785–91 he was a writer in Jedburgh when he paid tax for having a female servant. He was writer in Jedburgh in 1785–89 and Sheriff Clerk from 1790 when he paid the Horse Tax. He may have been the James recorded in Kelso in 1786. In 1813 he paid the land tax in Jedburgh. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Betty Campbell and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1817. John (19th C.) from England, he was a resident of Castleton Parish for a while. In 1832 he acknowledged that he fathered a child with Janet Ogilvie, from Greens. Thomas (18th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire. He is probably the Thomas who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1751. He is probably the Thomas, writer living in Kelso, who taxed for having male and female servants and horses in the period 1785–94 (and Jedburgh in 1788). He is probably the Thomas, married to Agnes Hogarth, whose son James was born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1795 (with the baptism in Makerstoun). He may also have had a daughter Mary who married Thomas Ainslie and brother of Hawick lawyer George. Thomas (18th/19th C.) member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. He may be the Thomas, resident of Hawick, who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He may also be the Thomas from Lurgiesleuch who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Nancy (b.1824), Thomas (b.1829), Andrina Petrie (b.1831) and Isabel (b.1834). He was probably son of Thomas And Andrea Petrie. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott in 1837; she was daughter of Robert Scott and Agnes Scott, born in Wilton in 1818. Their children include William (b.1838), Robert (b.1840), George (b.1843) and Agnes (b.1845). He was living at Newhouses in 1841 and his widow was there in 1851 and 1861. William (18th C.) labourer at 'Taylor Gate' in Castleton Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia, with the annotation suggesting he paid to avoid service; his name appears again in 1798 and in early 1799 he paid £10 to avoid service. William Hunter (b.1784) born in Oxnam Parish, son of Thomas. He was probably brother of George, solicitor in Hawick. He lived in Ashkirk Parish, where several of his children were baptised. In 1841 he was a farm worker living at Newhouses in Wilton Parish, and in 1851 he was farmer of 100 acres at Cawfaulds, near Horsleyhill. He married Isabella Mather and their children included: Andrew Petrie (b.1822), baptised in Eckford; Thomas; Janet (b.1825); Jane (b.1827); an unnamed son (b.1829); James (b.c.1830); David (b.1833); and Walter (b.1836). William (b.1817/8) originally from Jedburgh, he was farmer at Groundistone. He was listed as steward at Groundistone among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1851 he was farmer at Groundistone. His wife was Ann and their children included Agnes, William, John, Isabella, Janet and George. William (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His wife was Isabella Hermiston and their children included Isabella (b.1863), Thomas (b.1865), George Hamilton (b.1866), William (b.1870) and John Webster (b.1872) (see also Pott, with which it was sometimes synonymous).

Son of Gavin and Rebecca, he came from Yarrow, where his brother Robert had made an early bicycle. He was a Trustee of the Relief Kirk. He was recorded at ‘Borthaugh Smithy’ in 1841, this being another name for Branhholme Woodfoot. He married Mary Crozier in 1803 in Yarrow and their children were all christened at Wilton, including: Christian (b.1804), who married James Tennant; Gavin (b.1806), who became Teviothead blacksmith; Eauphan (b.1808), who married John Davidson; Jean (b.1810), married Robert Jack; Rebecca (b.1812), married William Minto; William (b.1815), who carried on as Branhholme Woodfoot blacksmith; Helen (b.1819), married James Ovens, blacksmith in Hawick; and Mary (b.1822), who married William Murray. William (b.1815) master blacksmith at Woodfoot, son of William. In 1842 he married Elizabeth (b.1818), daughter of shepherd David Scott. Their children were: William (b.1844); David Scott (b.1846); Jane (or Jeanie, b.1849), who married watchmaker David Gaylor; and Mary (b.1857). Later members of the family continued as blacksmiths in the Borthwick valley, acting as surgeon, dentist, etc., and even running an occasional bus service to Hawick. William (b.c.1828) son of Gavin by his first wife Mary Scott. After his mother's death he was raised by his grandmother at Branhholme Woodfoot. He served an apprenticeship with his father at Teviothead, then worked for Alexander Smith (a vet at Appletreehall), before becoming blacksmith at Blacklee, Rulewater for over 40 years. He married Mary, daughter of James Cranston and grand-daughter of millwright Gideon Scott. Their children were James (vet, who emigrated to Canada), Mary (who married William Beverley, butler at Wolfelee and Governor of the Jedburgh Poor House), William (married and lived at Causewayfoot), Thomas (who became a blacksmith and married E. Winchester) and Robert (rural postman who married Anne Sinclair).

prejudge (pre-juj) v., arch. to harm, work to the prejudice of – ‘... and appoints Baylyea Burne ... to goe up upon Saturday first about eleven o’clock and sight that the marches of the said dyke are not prejudged’ [BR1675].

prejudice (pre-joo-dis) n., arch. detriment, disadvantage – ‘...taking into their consideration the great prejudice sustained by the Kirk Session in supporting of Strangers and Incomers ...’ [BR1736].

prelim (pree-lim) n. a preliminary examination, particularly those taken in December or January as a practice for a High School Certificate examination – ‘hei failed his Maths prelim, bit still got a B in the exam’.

premises (pre-mi-seez) n., pl., arch. matters previously stated, foregoing items – ‘... And gyff it happynis [ane] of the saidis parteis to brek or failze in the premisses, or any punt of thame ...’ [SB1519], ‘...quhilkis premises the said Adam Gowanlock desirit to be insert in the common toun-buik of Hawick’ [BR1641], ‘And in testimonie of our adherence thairto, and to the haill premisses above written, wee, both the said Francis Gladstaines of Whitlaw, the two forsaid Baylyeas of the said Brugh of Havicke ...’ [BR1692], ‘And the offenders, for preventing anie disturbance in ye church and not observing the premises, are to pay in £20 Scots to ye Box ...’ [PR1715].

premonition (pre-mo-ni-shin) n., arch. prior notice, particularly legal notification of a fixed period during which an obligation is to be carried out – ‘... Thomas Hardie, merchand, to carie the said Colour the forsaid day, and had formerly called and caused thair officers to give him tymous advertisement upon eight dayes preceiding premonition and advertisement for that effect ...’ [BR1706].

Prendergast (pren-dur-gawst) n. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when George Douglas, Master of Angus, failed to enter him in the court in Jedburgh. A little later his case was suspended. George (16th C.) tenant in Hallrule. He is recorded in 1581 as ‘Prandergaist’ when he was among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. Probably the same George ‘Plendergaist’ was witness to the 1607 sasine for John Scott gaining the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. Janet (17th C.) ‘cottage’ at Hallrule who was listed among the poor in Hobkirk Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (16th C.) owner of half a particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. His name is recorded as ‘Plendirgaist’. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. John (17th C.) shepherd at Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His surname is written ‘Plendergaist’. Ralph (17th C.) cottage at Abbotrule according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written ‘Ralf Plendergaist’ and he was taxed ‘for abatereull for himself and cottage’. He is probably the ‘Ralph Prendergaist’ who was the last tacksman at Ruletownhead Mill. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in the Hawick Parish Records receiving a collection after his house near Stobs burned down in 1703. Mary ‘Plenderghast’, wife of Robert Stevenson in Hawick Shiel (recorded in 1702) was probably related to him. Perhaps the same Robert ‘Plenderghast’ (possibly ‘in Stob’, but hard to read) married Bessie Hislop and had a daughter Elizabeth baptised in 1710; the witnesses were Robert Thomson in Newmill and Walter Wilson in Castlehill. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was described as a herd in Essenside in 1698. He married Janet Clerk and their children included Bessie (b.1698) and Christian (b.1698). Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Tudhope in Cavers Parish in 1714. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Storie in Bedrule Parish in 1703. William (d.1333) Englishman who fought against the Scots in the later years in the 13th century and was in charge of Jedburgh Castle when the Scots tried to retake it after Bannockburn. He had a pardon from the English King in 1314/5 for all offences laid, for his ‘gallant service in the garrison of Jeddeworth castle, and holding the same against the Scots’. However, he surrendered Jedburgh Castle to the Scots in about 1317, switched allegiance and was killed at the Battle of Halidon Hill fighting against the English. He held lands at Cornhill-on-Tweed in Norham (Northumberland). These latter lands descended to his wife Isabella and son William, but were forfeited because of his surrender of Jedburgh Castle and passed for a time to William de Denum (also written 'Plendergaist', 'Plendergast', 'Prendirgaist' and variants).

prent (pren', prent) v., poet., arch. to print – 'I hid behind a slab o' granite, Wi' God kens a' what prentit on it' [WP], n., arch. a print, a printed piece of cloth, n., pl., arch. old pieces or patterns of printed cloth.

prentice (pren-tis, pren'-is) n., arch. an apprentice in a trade, the period of training typically being 6 years, although for some trades somewhat shorter or longer periods were the norm – '... the Grammar School Colour shall ride next the Town Standard, the English School Colour next, and the 'Prentice Colour last ...' [BR1747], '... and that the said prentice shall be bound prentice for four yeirs tyme and space ...' [BR], '... that he would not allow boyes and prentices to resort to his house for gameing att ye Cards' [PR1724], 'I'm gaun to be married to-morrow, But no to the 'prentice lad' [JoHa], 'He cam' to be the 'prentice callant, (He'd got some schoolin' an' had talent)' [RDW] (see also apprenteece).

preparit (pree-pā-ree', =ri') pp., poet. prepared – '... but it sall be gien til them for wham it is prepairet o' my Faether' [HSR].

presbyter (prez-bi-tur) n., arch. an elder in the early Episcopalian Church or later in the Presbyterian Church, a minister or elder who sits on the Presbytery.

the Presbyterian Kirk (thu-prez-bi-tee-ree-in-kirk) n. the established Church of Scotland, which is governed by local bodies of elders and not by bishops, and has a doctrine based on Calvinism. Its popularity rose through the mid-16th century, and it was effectively introduced by Parliament as the established church of Scotland in 1560.

presbytery (prez-bi-tu-ree) n. a body formed of ministers and one elder representative of each church, which governs an area within the Presbyterian Church – 'Falnash and Walter Elliot attended the brethren of ye Presbyterie convened at Jedbro in order to see whereunto the call to Mr. Cunningham would tend ...' [PR1712] (from Ancient Greek).

presents (pre-zints') v., arch. present, particularly in the legal phrase 'thir presents', meaning 'the present document' – 'I Thomas Henderson, smyth in Flex, grants me be thir presents ...' [BR1701], 'We by thir presents binds and oblesse us and our successors in the office of baylyearie and toune counsell of the said brughe of Hawicke ...' [HAST1902].

present bailies (pre-zin'-bā-leez) n., pl., arch. phrase occurring often in the Town's records, meaning the sitting Bailies, as opposed to any 'late bailies'.

preses (pre-zeez) n., arch. a chairman, person presiding over a meeting, spokesperson – 'He has also filled the position of preses of the congregation' [JE].

Presfen (pres-fin) n. William (b.c.1305) probably born in Middleton, Northumberland. He was English Constable of Jedburgh Castle 1334–5. In 1335 his men were involved in an ambush of the Scots under Sir William Douglas, in which Douglas' brother James was killed and John Randolph, Earl Moray taken prisoner. An inquisition held in 1335/6 at Roxburgh looked into the expenses he had incurred while Constable of Jedburgh Castle (also written 'Pressen').

press (pres) n. a cupboard, usually a large walk-in one – 'hev a look in the kitchen press', '... then going to the press, she brought out an apple and gave it to the minister, saying 'Take that, my man, for the whisky's a' dune'' [RM], 'A lookeet aabits for't, bit A fand eet i the hinder-end. The press was the deed o'd' [ECS], '... The auld oil lamp aside the press The flickerin wick smokeet the gless' [IWL], '... ee didni hev wardrobes or presses in thaim days, ee'd ti putt everythin, aa yur claes an yur buit polishes an aa that, it was aa under the bed' [BA].

press (pres) v., arch. to attack, beset, compel, take forcibly – '... personating themselves to be officers, they forced John Tomsone to ryse naked out of his bed, threatening to press him and take him away with them' [BR1706].

presser (pre-sur) n. a term in the hosiery trade for part of a machine which closes the barbs of the needles so that the loops of yarn can pass over them.

Presto's (pres-tōz) n. supermarket built on the site of the former Mactaggart's skinworks at the corner of Albert Road and Victoria Road in 1977.

Preston

It was the first large supermarket to be opened in Hawick, was a part of the Allied Suppliers business and was converted to a Safeway in the late 1980s – ‘Thrope time incomers came, Like Fazal Din and Gusto, And then ow’re at the Haugh, There came a bit ca’d Presto’ [IWL].

Preston (pres-tin) n. Rev. David (b.1875) born at Caldercruix in Lanarkshire, son of George and Janet Shanks. He graduated from Glasgow University and was licensed by Hamilton Presbytery in 1899. He became assistant minister at Greyfriars, Dumfries and then was ordained at Ewes in 1901. In 1903 he married Ella Margaret, daughter of James McKillop from Stirlingshire. Their children included: Douglas George (b.1904); Jessie Eleanor Doris (b.1907); and Kathleen Angus (b.1910). Dr. ?? (16th C.) listed as ‘Doctour Prestoun’, when he was the forst man listed as witnes to the final ‘laterwill’ of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. This was witnessed in Hawick, so he may have been a local man. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Violet Laidlaw and their children included Margaret (b.1795). John (15th C.) Parson in Hawick in 1481, ‘John Prestoun of Hawyc ... bachelor in decrees and perpetual vicar of Dunlop’. Nothing else seems to be known about him. John (b.1814/5) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was farmer at Wester Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farming 198 acres and employing 5 labourers. He was a widower by then, living with his mother Ann and son Robert. Rev. Thomas minister at Denholm, Minto and Bedrule 1989–1992. Rev. William (17th C.) possible minister at Hassendean in 1638 when the National Covenant was signed in Hawick. The name was apparently hard to transcribe, and the minister at that time was Alexander Forrest, so this may be an error.

pretensic (pree-ten-seeek) adj., poet. pretentious – ‘Aye, there ye’ll find ane o’ yer clan, A social, decent, honest man, Wha, void o’ a’ pretensic plan ...’ [JoHa], ‘Pretensic fowk gaed primpin’ by, Snirkin’ at sic a din ...’ [DH].

Pretoria Day (pre-tō-ree-a-dā) n. commemoration of the taking of Pretoria from the Boers on 5th June 1900. That day coincided with the Tuesday of the Common Riding, and there was a huge parade in the evening in Hawick.

Price (prīs) n. William M. (19th/20th C.) resident of Minto. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk.

Priestcroon

– ‘A’ things is twae prices or dooble dear in thae times’ [GW], ‘The kye brought mony prices at the fair’ [JL] (see also monie prices).

pricker (pri-kur) n., arch., poet. a fast rider, one who spurs on a horse – ‘Jock Ridley ance gaily rode doon To lift my ain horse frae the lea – A riever o’ Tynedale renoun, A Ker-handed pricker was he’ [T], ‘The hunters scoured again the field, The red pricker did stay, And for to kill the poor auld man, His weapons did assay’ [JTe].

prickie an jockie (pri-kee-in-jo-kee) n., arch. a children’s game played with pins, described as ‘similar to Odds or Evens, Teviotd. Prickie denotes the point, and Jockie the head of the pin’ (noted by J. Jamieson).

Prickinghaugh (pri-kin-hawch) n. former fortified house in Liddesdale, on the opposite side of the Liddel from Larriston. It may have once been home of Martin Elliot of Braidlie, and is mentioned in a version of the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer o’ the Fair Dodheid’. Martin Elliot (probably grandson of Martin of Braidlie) was recorded there in 1590. William Elliot from there was recorded in 1618. In 1632 it was listed among the possessions of Hab Henderson. It was among the farms occupied by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47. A later name used for it was ‘Breaken Tower’. It was said to have been demolished in 1792 to provide building material for a wall (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, on Sandison’s c.1590 map as ‘Pickeringhaw’, on Mercator’s 1595 map as ‘Packing haug’ and on Coronelli’s 1689 map as ‘Prikinghaus’; it is ‘Prickenhauch’ in 1613, ‘Prikenhauch’ in 1618, ‘Prickinhauche’ in 1632 and ‘Prinkinghauch’ in 1655).

pridefi (prīd-fi) adj., arch. proud, prideful – ‘...That pridefu’ priest o’ oft pedantic prose’ [JoHa], ‘...But dinna be pridefu’, but gratefu’ To ken ye’ve been keepit frae wrang’ [FL], ‘...whan A’m seek-staaed o the ... preidfi bluis-teren that a body offen hes ti thole’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘pridefu’).

priest (preest) n., arch. an urge to defecate without effect – ‘A great priest, a strong but ineffectual inclination to go to stool, a tenesmus, Roxb.; in other counties a ‘prais’ [JoJ].

Priestcroon (preest-croon) n. Priestcrown, former name for Greenbraehead. The origin of the name is obscure, although James Wilson has suggested a link with the chapel dedicated to St.

Priesthaugh

Cuthbert in the Slitrig valley – ‘... While Greenbraehead (in older times Priestcrown) To meet Crowbyres send the signal down’ [WNK] (e.g. on Stobie’s 1770 map and the 1897 Ordnance Survey map).

Priesthaugh (prees-tuf) n. farm in the upper Allan valley, at the southernmost point of the loop in the road from Southfield through to Northhouse. There was once a school here, and a ford was long an alternative to the bridge across the Allan Water nearby. This was the location for the charter signed by James V giving Armstrong’s lands to Maxwell after the hanging of Johnnie Armstrong at Caerlenrig (although it is possible this was another place of the same name, the proximity to Caerlenrig and the King’s recorded itinerary makes this likely). The lands here were formerly part of the Lairdship of Ringwoodfield and in 1501 Robert Elliot of Redheugh inherited them from his grandfather, with Melrose Abbey holding the superiority. ‘Gret Johnnie Elliot’ was there in about 1510. Robert Elliot of Redheugh rented the lands from Melrose Abbey around 1557; at that time it was valued at £5. In 1569 it was part of the lands of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill, with the tenant then being ‘Jokke Elliot’. In 1574 the tenants ‘Law’s Jock’ Elliot, Alexander ‘Mill’ Elliot and ‘Law’s Tom’ Elliot were among men who Robert Elliot of Redheugh had been ordered by the Privy Council to remove from his lands. Simon Wilson is recorded there in 1623. It was recorded as still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. Thomas Lauder, as well as shepherds James Grieve and William Grieve were recorded there in 1694. John Wilson was shepherd there in 1716. Gideon Scott was there in at least 1753–57 and William Grieve in 1761. It is described in the 1718 survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 1864 acres and was bounded by Peilbrae, Dod, Peelbraehope, Braidlie, Langside and Skelfhill. Robert Hall was living there in 1724 and John Scott and John Nichol in 1726–28. Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill leased it from the Buccleuch Estates in 1741. Gideon Scott was farmer there in the latter part of the 18th century. Walter Scott was farmer there in 1785–97 and there were Scotts there in 1821 and around 1860. There were also Hardies in the mid-19th century. About 15 acres of corn there was silted up in the flood of 1846. A spring that lay to the south was once supposed to have healing powers (according to a Presbytery record of 1614). There has been a suggestion that there was once a chapel here (marked in a field to the north of the farm on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map), but there is no evidence for this. Between the farmhouse and Priesthaugh Cottages is an earthwork, on the east side of the burn, measuring about 70 m by 45 m, but washed away on the western side. A cache of gold coins was found on the farm in the late 1700s, later in the possession of Mr. Elliot of Redheugh, and a few years before that a box containing about 120 silver coins were found on the farm. The stuffed 2-headed lamb in the Museum was from here. In nearby remote glens there are several plantations, called Scar Plantation, Pyat Sike Plantation, Brae Plantation, Garden Plantation, Heather Wood and Craw Wood. There have been Ride-outs to this farm – ‘... Until I turn’d at Priesthaugh Scrogg, And shot their horses in the bog’ [SWS] (the origin is likely to be simply the Old English ‘preost halh’, meaning ‘the priest’s haugh’, although there is no obvious connection with church lands; the name first appears in 1500 as ‘Prysthauch’, is ‘Preistishauch’e in 1530, ‘Priestishauch’ in 1533, ‘Preisthauch’ in 1557, 1564, 1569, 1621, 1623, 1660, 1663 and 1693, ‘Preistishauche’ in 1634, ‘Preisthaugh’ in 1661 and ‘Preisthaugh’ in 1694; it is ‘Preesthauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map as well as de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland).

Priesthaugh (prees-tuf) n. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill who is listed in a bond of 1569 signed in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘Arche Preisthauch’, and ‘Jok’ is also listed. The tenant of Priesthaugh (‘Jokke Elliot’) is separately listed, but presumably the surname derived from that farm in earlier generations. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) listed as a tenant of the lands of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill in 1569, along with Archibald, who was surely a close relative. His name is given as ‘Jok Preisthauch’.

Priesthaugh Burn (prees-tuf-burn) n. stream that meets the Skelfhill Burn near Priesthaugh farm, to form the Allan Water. The boggy region at the head of the burn is the Queen’s Mire.

Priesthaugh Cottages (prees-tuf-ko’-ee-jeez) n. cottages just south of Priesthaugh farm.

Priesthaugh-hill (prees-tuf-hil) n. steading where the Cauld Cleuch meets the main part of the Priesthaugh Burn, far to the south of Priesthaugh farm. It appears to be in a different position from Priesthaughshiel, which is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map further up the burn; however, this may just be an inaccuracy in the map. It is listed in the Ordnance Survey Name Book c.1858, with one of the authorities being William Armstrong, who was shepherd there at that time.

Priesthaughshiel (prees-tuf-sheel) n. former stading in the upper part of the Priesthaugh Burn, possibly the same as Priesthaugh-hill. Henry Noble was living there in 1781. Shepherd William Scott died here in the ‘Gonial Blast’ of 1794. Shepherd Adam Scott and his family were there in at least 1820–29. Andrew Rodger and his extensive family was there in 1841 (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Priesthaugh Swire (prees-tuf-swIr) n. flat land at the head of the Priesthaugh Burn, probably similar to the Queen’s Mire – ‘Ride by the gate at Priesthaughswire, And warn the Cur-rors o’ the Lee; As ye cum down the Hermitage Slack, Warn doughty Willie o’ Gorrinberry’ [T], ‘On Penchryst glows a bale of fire, And three are kindling on Priesthaughswire ...’ [SWS].

Priesthaugh Well (prees-tuf-wel) n. spring near Priesthaugh farm. It probably lay to the south of the present farmhouse, but its exact position cannot now be ascertained because the 2 springs on the western side of Gray Coat have been piped to provide water to Priesthaugh farm and Priesthaugh Cottages. It was said that this well possessed healing properties and a 1614 record of Jedburgh Presbytery said that people went there for relief ‘by charm of priest and miracle’. The name is surely connected with the ridge to the south of Priesthaugh, which is called ‘Holywell Rig’.

Priesthill (preest-hil) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish, to the east of Newcastleton and further up the Whithaugh Burn from Whithaugh. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map near the feature labelled ‘Priesthill Know’ on modern maps. James Riddell was there in 1777.

Priest Hill (preest-hil) n. hill in Liddesdale, north-east of Newcastleton, on the southern side of the valley. It reaches a height of 205 m and is topped with a triangulation pillar. On the north-east slopes is an ancient earthwork consisting of an enclosure about 240 ft by 170 ft, with a double bank and significant ditch. It is similar to the structure on nearby Kirk Hill.

Priesthill Burn (preest-hil-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale that rises on the northern slopes of Stell Knowe, running roughly westwards to become part of Whithaugh Burn.

Priesthill Knowe (preest-hil-burn) n. small hill in Liddesdale, just to the east of Little Whithaugh, to the east of Newcastleton.

Prieston (prees-tin) n. farm just north of Middel in Bowden Parish, the land having once been the property of Kelso Abbey. Andrew Douglas was there in 1628. In 1678 the South part was owned by William Douglas and the North part by Robert Kerr. It later became property of the Scotts of Harden, sold in about 1912 (the origin of the name is the Old English ‘preost tun’, meaning ‘priest’s farm’; it first occurs as ‘Prestowne’ in 1567 and ‘Prestoune’ in 1586).

Priestrig (preest-rig) n. farmstead between Stouslie and Stintyknowe. This land was apparently set aside for the use of the minister of Wilton after Wilton Common was divided in 1764. John Scott was living there in 1790. The farmstead was also sometimes known as Wilton Common (e.g. in the 1861 census). Thomas Scott was farmer there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. The outlying parish school situated at Stouslie was also sometimes known as ‘Priestrig Schuil’ – ‘There’s Lockie o’ the Stinty Knowes, There’s Nicol o’ Dick-neuk, And Bryson o’ the Priestrig, And Hall into the Heap’ [DJG] (sometimes spelled ‘Priestrigg’ or ‘Priest Rigg’; the ‘rig’ presumably refers to a strip of ploughland).

the Priest’s Grave (thu-preests-grāv) n. popular name for an extremely old gravestone in Cavers Auld Kirkyard. It was peculiar for being arranged in a direction perpendicular to the others, had a flat top, and contained the date (believed to be spurious) 1517 in the bottom corner. It lay near the east gate, but it is unclear whether it still survives. Several stories were attached to it (as recounted by Sir James Murray), e.g. a connection with the Knights Templar, or someone who wanted to be first out of the churchyard at the resurrection.

prieve (preev) n., arch. to prove, make a trial of – ‘Dinna prieve your prattiks on me’ [JoJ].

prig (prig) v., poet. to haggle, bargain – ‘... the landlord had the assurance to charge two-pence for my bed, and I could not prig him a half-penny down’ [JR], ‘An’ efter priggung doon its price, A bargain forthwith made; Bestrode its back, an’ homeward bound Wi’ conscious pride he rade’ [FL]. prignickitie (prig-ni-ki-tee) adj., arch. fastidious (noted by J. Jamieson).

primp (primp) v. to act haughtily or conceitedly – ‘Pretensic fowk gaed primpin’ by, Snirkin’ at sic a din ...’ [DH], ‘Hech, sirs! The denty fowk! Primpin by, pair by pair, Kirkgaun ...’ [DH], n., arch. a haughty or conceited woman.

primp-ma-dye (primp-mu-dI) n., arch. a haughty and affected woman (in [HNe1954]).

Primrose (prim-rōz) n. Gilbert (c.1535–1616) prominent Scottish surgeon. He was Serjeant-Surgeon to King James VI and was Deacon of the Incorporation of Surgeons and Barbers of Edinburgh. His brass mortar (engraved ‘GILBERT PRIMROS CHIRURGIEN 1569’) was found in a field near Hawick and held by the Hawick Museum until presented to Lord Rosebury (a direct descendent) in about 1899. The original is in the National Museum of Scotland, with a replica at Surgeon’s Hall. Rev. James B. minister at Kirkton 1951–1955 and Robertson 1955–60. He ran a missionary in India for over 30 years.

Primrose Cottages (prim-rōz-ko’-ee-jeez) n. two isolated cottages, formerly for railway workers, to the west of the Waverley Line shortly after Stobs. The plantation just to the north is Primrose Wood.

Primside (prim-sīd) n. farm between Morebattle and Yetholm, in Morebattle Parish. There is an adjacent loch (also called Yetholm Loch) and hill of the same name. The lands are also known as ‘Primsidloch’. They were owned by a branch of the Rule family until passed to the Kers around 1430, with the final charter of 1439 granting Andrew Ker of Altonburn the 4 parts resigned by the co-heiresses of the late Andrew Rule. Ralph Ker of ‘Prymsydloche’ was involved with an indenture for lands in the Barony of Synton in 1510. Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch purchased the Mains of Spittal-on-Rule from Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1563. It was among farms burned by the English in 1542 (the origin is probably from the p-Celtic ‘pren wynn’, meaning ‘white wood’ and the Old English ‘set’ for house; it is first recorded as ‘Prenwensete’ around 1200; it is ‘Promset’ in 1391, ‘Promside’ in 1429/30, ‘Prymside’ in 1526, ‘Primsidlouch’ in 1552, ‘Prymsydloucht’ in 1532, ‘Primsydloucht’ in 1560 and ‘Prymsydloch’ in 1564/5).

primsie (prim-zee) adj., poet. precise, diminutive of prim – ‘...Wi’ dimpl’t rosy cheek, sae primsie, yet sae free’ [WFC].

Prince (prins) n. nickname for James Oliver in 1502 and 1510.

Prince Charles (prins-chaw-rulz) n. (1948–) eldest son of Queen Elizabeth, he is Prince of Wales. He visited Hawick in 2019.

Prince Leopold (prins-lee-u-pōld) n. of the Belgians (1790–1865), full name His Royal Highness Leopold George Frederick, Prince of Saxe-Coburg. He visited Britain in 1815 and the following year married Charlotte, daughter of George IV, was created Duke of Kendal and made a General in the British Army. He became King of Belgium in 1831, and also was made an Honorary Burgess as he passed through Hawick in 1819, his carriage being pulled through town by several Teries, and Bet Young composing a commemorative poem – ‘His Royal Highness landed here On the seventeenth of September; Our flags displayed, the bells did ring, As thousands will remember’ [BY].

prince’s feathers (prin-seez-fe-th-urz) n., pl., arch. the common self-heal, Prunella vulgaris.

the Prince’s Knowe (thū-prin-seez-now) n. former name for a rising piece of ground near Bonchester Hill, where Prince Charlie is said to have encamped when his force marched through the area.

Princess Anne (prin-ses-awn) n. (1950–) the Princess Royal, as President of the British Knitting and Clothing Export Council she has visited Hawick several times. She was at Glebe Mills in 1988. In 1993 she officially opened the major modernisations carried out at the High School.

Princess Christian (prin-ses-kris-tyin) n. (1846–1923) Helena, third daughter of Queen Victoria, who married Prince Christian of Schleswig Holstein Sonderburg Augustenburg in 1866. She came to Hawick to open the Hummelknowes Bridge in 1869.

Princess Christian’s Brig (prin-ses-kris-tyinz-brig) n. name once used for the Hummelknowes Bridge over the Slitrig.

Princes Street (prin-ses-stree’, -seez-) n. main street through Wilton. Originally it referred only to the row of houses on the south side of the eastern end, which was built in 1871. The street was significantly altered and renumbered in the early 1970s, with the incorporation of Wilton Place, Albion Place, Ladylaw Place and part of Wilton Crescent – ‘Somebody telt Wullie there wuz a big Hogmanay pairty in the gairdins at Princes St.’ [JCo] (named after members of the Royal family).

the Principals (thū-prin-si-pulz) n. the main participants during the Common Riding, usually referring to the Cornet and Right- and Left-Hand Men, with sometimes also the Acting Father included. The first known photograph of the Principals was taken in 1857. The stabling of their horses was first undertaken by the Council in 1929. More recently stables have been provided at the top of the Mill Path. Latterly the term has been used to include the main female principals.

Pringle (pring-ul) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Mary Hislop and their unnamed son was baptised in Robertson in 1780. He was at Howpasley in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Perhaps the same Adam secondly married Margaret Henderson in Robertson in 1789 and was recorded at Philhopesiel in that year. This couple's children included William (b.1789), John (b.1792), Andrew (b.1793), Jeany (b.1795), Elizabeth (b.1797), Robert (b.1799), Margaret (b.1801) and Isabel (b.1805). He could be the Adam, son of William, baptised in Robertson in 1759. Adam (1799–1886) son of Robert and Janet Burnet. He was a shepherd at Howpasley and in the Ettrick valley. He was recorded at Old Howpasley in 1841 and 1851 and was at Over Dalglish in 1861. In 1827 in Robertson he married Janet (1805–65), daughter of Adam Scott and Elizabeth Nichol. Their children included: Janet B. (b.1828/9); Elizabeth (b.1830, or 'Betty'), who married John Nicholson; Robert (b.1833); Adam Scott (b.1834); Margaret (b.1836); William (b.1838); Helen (b.1840); John (b.1843); Thomas (b.1844); and Gideon Scott (1846–1922), shepherd. He died at Over Dalglish. Adam (1818–84) toll-keeper at the Townfoot Toll-bar in Newcastleton in 1861. In 1851 he was a shepherd at Shankfoot, and he also worked as a labourer. In 1844 he married Mary, daughter of Newcastleton joiner John Cavers. Adam (19th C.) married Jane Little in Wilton Parish in 1847. Alexander 'Sandy' (15th C.) son of Robert of Smailholm. He served as a squire of the Douglasses, along with his brother George, e.g. the pair witnessed a charter for Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1433/4 and in 1451 had a passport for safe conduct to accompany the Earl in England. Along with George he was on an asize for lands in Bemersyde in 1425. In 1456 he was on the panel made by George Douglas, Earl of Angus, which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn, who had been accused of assisting the English. He may be the Alexander 'Pringill' who witnessed a document between Henry Wardlaw and the Kers of Cessford in 1468. Alexander of Torsonce (d.bef. 1530) early member of the family from the lands near Stow. In 1526 he was 'Alexander Hoppringill, in Torsonse' when he was cited for involvement in the 'Battle of Skirmish Field' and the death of Ker of Cessford. His sons John, James, George and Adam and his 'sister-son' James are also mentioned, along with George Chisholme of that Ilk and 8 others, who were probably all on the side of Sir Walter Scott of

Buccleuch. It seems that he was not convicted of any wrongdoing. He could be the Alexander 'Hoppringill' who served as attorney for the Homes of Wedderburn in sasines of 1506 and 1510. Alexander of Whytbank (1632/3–89) only lawful son of James of Whytbank. He was served heir to his father in 1667. He and his wife were supporters of the Covenant. He was a Commissioner for raising money for Cromwell in Scotland in 1655 and became a J.P. for the counties of Edinburgh and Selkirk. In 1662 he was still 'younger' when he was fined £3,000 and given a pardon by the King. In 1683 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He married Anna, daughter of James of Torwoodlee, and she died in 1680. He secondly married Anne, sister of James Murray of Philiphaugh; after his death she married Robert Rutherford of Bowland. He had no children, and succession went to John, grandson of his uncle George of Balmungo. Alexander of Whytbank (1701–73) only son of John. In 1744 he was granted the teinds of lands in Stow (including Hoppringle) following the abolition of Episcopacy. However, he was forced to sell Yair. In 1759 he inherited lands in Hillslap from Janet Cairncross. In 1761 he was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. In 1739 he married Susanna, daughter of Sir John Rutherford of that Ilk and Edgerston. His children were: John, who succeeded; Alexander, who succeeded his brother; Patrick, surgeon with the East India Company; William, who was in the navy; Elizabeth, Eleanor, Susanna and Cairncross-Mary, who all died unmarried; Christian, who married Robert Pasley; Joanna, who married Alexander Hay; and Charlotte, who married Thomas Payne. Alexander of Whytbank and Yair (1747–1827) born at Yair, 2nd son of Alexander and Susanna Rutherford of Edgerston. He entered the service of the East India Company in 1766, but retired before 1790, having succeeded his brother John and making his fortune. He paid the land tax for Whytbank and other lands in 1785. He bought back the Yair estate from the Duke of Buccleuch and built a new mansion there. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He was taxed for owning a carriage and horses in the 1780s and 90s, for having dogs in 1797, and for having a female servant in 1788, 2 in 1789, 1 in 1790 and 3 in 1791, as well as a male servant in 1788, 2 in 1790, 3 in 1791–94 and 4 in 1797. He was Captain of the Selkirkshire Yeomanry Cavalry (volunteers) for several years until they were disbanded in 1802 and was also

Vice-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He was apparently visiting the Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire (Lord Napier) at Wilton Lodge on the day of the False Alarm, the 2 riding off together to Selkirk after the butler coolly announced 'My lord, supper is on the table, and the beacon's blazing'. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1802 he was recorded paying tax at 'Whitebank, Bashawmill and Thornhole', as well as Yair and Mill. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire from at least 1802. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1812 he became Chamberlain of Ettrick Forest. He was suspected of being involved in getting the Galashiels men to switch sides at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He and his son Alexander were listed as Commissioners of Selkirkshire in 1819. He was recorded at Yair in 1825 in relation to a ballot for men to serve in the militia. He was listed as proprietor of Yair in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was recorded in letters of 1826 requesting records for the Selkirkshire Yeomanry. In 1789 he married Mary, daughter of Sir Alexander Dick of Prestonfield. Their children were: Alexander (b.1791), who succeeded and was a friend of Sir Walter Scott; John Alexander (b.1792), lawyer with the Bengal Civil Service, whose poetic contributions were printed privately as 'Remains of John Alexander Pringle, Esq.' (1841); William Alexander (b.1793), also with the Bengal Civil Service; Mary Agnes (b.1794), unmarried; Susanna (b.1795), who married R.S. Moncrieff, younger of Fossaway; Jane (b.1797), unmarried; Elizabeth (b.1798), who married C.M. Christie of Durie; and Charlotte (b.1799); Margaret Janet (b.1801), who married barrister William Elmsley; Robert Keith (b.1802), with the East India Company; and David (b.1806), also with the Bengal Civil Service, who later purchased Wilton Lodge. He and his sons were well known to Sir Walter Scott, and are referred to in the introduction to Canto II of 'Marmion'. Alexander 'Sandy' of Whytbank (1791–1857), J.P., eldest son of Alexander of Whytbank. He was present at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was Vice-Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and also Lord of the Treasury for Scotland. He was probably also Captain of the Selkirkshire Yeomanry, like his father before him (with letters related to this in the Walter Mason Collection). He was a Conservative in politics. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1830–32 and 1835–46, being defeated by Pringle of Clifton in 1832. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1835. He attended the 1839 banquet held at Branhholme to honour the Duke of Buccleuch. He was a friend of Sir Water Scott, accompanying him and Scott of Gala to the field of Waterloo not long after the battle. He married his cousin, Agnes Joanna, 2nd daughter of Sir William Dick of Prestonfield. He had one son, Alexander (b.1837), who succeeded to Whytbank and Yair. Rev. Alexander David (1828–1908) only son of David of Wilton Lodge. He was minister at Blakeney, Gloucestershire. He married Mary Louisa, daughter of Rev. Charles Mackenzie. Their children were: Charles David; Henry Arthur; John Archibald; Fanny Christina; Henrietta Louisa; Isabella Margaret; Amy Cecilia; and Katherine Helen. Alexander of Whytbank (1837–1898) only son of Alexander. In 1870 he married his cousin Mary-Arbutnot, daughter of Robert Keith Pringle. He had no children, and the estates of Whytbank and Yair went to his widow's brother William, who sold Yair. Alexander 'Sandy' (1876–1962) Burns Club Treasurer for 37 years. He also held all other offices at the club and the Pringle Hall was named in his honour. Andrew 'Dand' of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.1585/6) son of John, he was 8th Laird of Smailholm. In 1566 he had a grant of the lands of Galashiels and Mossielee. He signed the General Band against thieves in 1571. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branhholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. In 1575 he was the first of the Hoppringles listed to appear to answer the feud with the Elliots. In 1581 he and his wife entered William Ker, minister of Lindean, in a tenement in Galashiels. In 1582 he was on a list of 37 Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. And in 1583/4 he was 'Andro Hoppringle of Gallowscheillis' when summoned to appear before the Council with other Border Lairds. He married Mariota (or Marion), daughter of John, 5th Lord Borthwick. His children included: Sir James, who succeeded; Robert of Howlatstown; and Isabella, who married George Pringle of Blindlee. There is a life-size effigy of him over his tomb at Melrose Abbey. After his death his widow married Robert Pringle, tutor of Blindlee and thirdly married John Home. Rev. Andrew (1616/7–89) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1635, he was 'on the exercise' (i.e. assistant) at Kirkcaldy in 1639, became Chaplain to the Earl of Angus, and may also have been an assistant in the Presbytery of Selkirk. He became minister at Kirkton in 1646. There was some dispute with the parishioners though, since the heritors had to be ordered to pay him his teinds soon afterwards. Then in 1649 he was presented to Castleton, being admitted there the following year. In 1662 he witnessed the testament of William Elliot of Harwood. He was one of the few conformist local ministers who were not ousted in the early 1660s, in other words he accepted Episcopacy. He was recorded in a bond in 1673. He married Janet Scott in 1648. Their children included Jean, who married John Buchanan of that Ilk, and Elizabeth, who married Colin Campbell of Carwhin. Andrew of Clifton (17th/18th C.) also described as 'in Haining'. He was the 2nd son of Mark of Clifton and succeeded his brother Mark in 1685. He was apprenticed to a merchant in Edinburgh in 1642. In 1685 he was involved in a court case involving his niece Janet, who had apparently been promised to a Lieutenant in the King's Guard, but instead had eloped with her 13-year-old cousin Andrew Pringle and married over the Border. He was also imprisoned in 1685 for the marriage of his son in England, but got off with a fine. In 1689 he was appointed a Commissioner for ordering the Militia and was a Commissioner of Supply 1689–1704. He invested in the Darien Scheme. In 1699 he purchased the remains of Linton from Henry Ker and his son Andrew. In 1701 he purchased from Andrew Riddell the lands of Haining, for his 2nd son, John. In 1711 he was one of the founder members of the 'Honest Country Club' along with John of Haining, who was probably his son. He may be the Andrew who was Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Ettrick Forest parishes 1715–17. In 1685 he married Violet, daughter of John Rutherford of Edgerston and sister of Thomas Rutherford of Wells. Their children included: Robert, who succeeded; John of Haining; Mark of Crichton, who was British Consul in Spain; Barbara, who married James Nasmyth of Dawyck; Jean, who married Thomas Douglas of Cavers; Margaret (d.1749), who died unmarried; and Christian (d.1753), who also died unmarried. Andrew Lord Alemoor (d.1776) eldest son of John of the Haining. He let his brother John succeed to the Haining. He became an advocate in 1740, 10 years later becoming Sheriff of Wigtonshire and then Selkirkshire. He became Senator of the College of Justice, Solicitor-General for Scotland and Judge of the Court of Session. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He was raised to the bench as Lord Alemoor, since he had acquired that property. His lands in Roxburghshire were valued at £466 18s 4d. He was said by Dr. Somerville to be the most admired speaker at the Scottish Bar in the middle of the 18th century. He married his cousin Violante, daughter of Mark Pringle, British Consul in Spain; however, she died in 1753, leaving no children. He died at his home of Hawkhill near Edinburgh. His lands went to his brother John of Haining. A marble bust of him is in the Court of Session in Edinburgh. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard in Cavers Parish. He was recorded there in 1796 when one of his children was baptised. He was also recorded there as owner of 5 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Additionally he was taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He may have married Alexander Gow. His children included: Anthony (b.1796); Margaret Ann (b.1798); James Hall (b.1801); Cicely (b.1803); and Isabella (b.1805). Andrew (b.c.1780s) ploughman at Easter Parkhill, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish in 1812. Angelique Lucille (1846–1920) born in Hawick, daughter of Thomas Kedie and Lucille Kennedy. At age 17 she went to India as a hostess to her uncle, who was governor of Calcutta. She also apparently crossed the Sahara desert by camel. She was a nurse at St. Thomas's, London, starting in 1868, moving to the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary in 1872 (where she became Matron) and returning to St. Thomas's in 1887 as Matron. However, she resigned in 1890, when she converted to Catholicism. Afterwards she travelled the world advising on nursing issue. She was the founder of the Training School for Nurses at the Royal Infirmary, and sometimes credited with establishing the modern method of hospital nursing. She was a personal friend and devotee of Florence Nightingale, who called her 'Pearl' and 'Little Sister'. Her letters are in the British Museum. There is a memorial brass tablet in the chapel of the Royal Infirmary. Ann (18th/19th C.) grocer and draper on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. She could be the same shopkeeper listed at West Port on the 1841 census, probably married to Robert and with daughter Margaret. Archibald of Whytbank (17th/18th C.) became a Burgess of Hawick in 1724, presumably this being Honorary. This may be an error for Alexander. David of Smailholm and Pilmuir (d.1480) son of Robert, he succeeded his brother Robert in the 1470s. However, he is recorded as being of Smailholm or of Pilmuir several times through the 1440s, 50s and 60s. Along with his brothers George and Alexander he accompanied William, Earl of Douglas to the Papal Jubilee in Rome in 1450 and in 1451 had a passport for safe conduct to accompany the Earl in England. In 1457 he attached his seal to an indenture by George, Earl of Angus, appointing Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest, since Ker did not have a seal of his own. He served as Ranger of the Ward of Tweed in the 1460s. In 1463 he was on the panel of retour for Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, as heir to his father. In 1464/5 he was one of the witnesses to the sasine granting Kirkton Mains and the Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1468 he had a charter for the lands of Pilmuir. In 1471 he was a witness at Borthwickshiels of the infetment of Walter, son and heir of Andrew Ker of Cessford. In 1474 he was summoned to Edinburgh by the King, probably relating to keeping peace on the Border. In 1479 he gave his seal to an obligation involving the Kers of Cessford. He may be the David 'junior' who in 1478 had his fine remitted for killing deer at his wedding. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Dishington of Ardross. In their old house in Galashiels there was said to be this inscription – 'Elspeth Dishington Builided me. In syn lye not: The things thou canst not get, Desyre not'. His children included: James, who succeeded; Adam of St. John's Chapel; and Thomas of Wrangholm (recorded as a witness in about the 1490s). David of Tinnis (d.1512) natural son of James of Smailholm, and brother of David of Smailholm, being sometimes called 'senior' in distinction. He was tenant of the lands of Tinnis or Tynnes in the Yarrow valley. He was Ranger of the Ward and later made Receiver of the whole Forest. He was witness in 1484/5 to a sasine for lands at Mangerton to Walter Scott of Branhholme; James Pringle was also a witness, along with several other local men. He leased the lands of Torwoodlee and Toftness in 1486, along with his wife Mariota. He may be the David who is recorded along with William on a document relating to Ruecastle in 1491. He may be the same 'David Hoppringill in Tynnes' who was one of the 'Sheriffs of Roxburgh in that part' in a charter of 1494 for lands in Hassendean and the same 'in le Tynnes' who was one of 4 men who held lands in Boonraw, which passed to Robert Scott of Stirches in 1504/5. In 1494/5 he served as surety for men called Mark from Tinnis. He was also recorded in 1494/5 as Coroner for Tweeddale at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk; he was fined for not producing Archibald Ormiston. He was recorded several times around 1500 in the Exchequer Rolls in regard to lands in Yarrow and as ranger of the Ward of Tweed. In 1501 he was recorded entering William Tait in Edinburgh for a set of crimes. In 1502 he leased the lands of Galashiels, Blindlee and Mossielee. Also in 1502 he was fined at the Justice-aire for failing to enter Richard Davidson in Primside and additionally was surety for David in Ern Cleuch and Roger in Trinlyknow. He also served as surety at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1505. In 1508 'Dauid Hoppringill in Tenneis' was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale, and is probably the same David who witnessed the associated sasine. He was re-assigned Tinnis in 1509. In 1509 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Ale Moor, witnessed charters for Colville of Ochiltree and was mentioned in a charter for William, son of James of Smailholm. And in 1510 David 'of Tynnes' is recorded having 5 horses stolen from him by Thomas Dalglish in Braidhaugh. He also had oxen stolen from him at 'Bochill' (possibly 'Bowhill'). In 1512 he gave his consent to a charter for lands in Ettrick Forest being granted to the Commendator of Kelso. He may have married Mariota Murray of Philiphaugh. David of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.c.1535) eldest son of James and brother of William of Torwoodlee. He was sometimes called 'junior', to distinguish him from David of Tinnis. In 1507–10 he leased the crown lands of Galashiels, Mossielee and Blindlee. In 1510 he had a charter for lands in Ettrick Forest as well as for rentals in Lauderdale. Also in 1510 he was among Pringles and others convicted of cutting down part of Ettrick Forest. He lost brothers, a son and a brother-in-law at Flodden. In 1519 he was among the large group of Borderers who rode against the Earl of Arran and in 1526 in the group that tried to free the boy King from the Douglasses near Melrose (at Pringle's Bridge). He signed a bond in 1525 to support the Earl of Angus as Warden of the Marches. Also in 1525 he was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill, along with James and George. He is recorded in documents in the 'Selkirk Protocol Books' in 1527, mentioning John as his heir. In 1532 he resigned his lands of Caverhill into the hands of their superior. He is probably the David who witnessed a document for Melrose Abbey in 1534. Through marriage he gained Woodhouse in Peeblesshire and Whytbank and Redhead in Selkirkshire. He was married twice, his first wife being Marion and his second Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas

Lundie. His children were: David, who died at Flodden; John, who succeeded; James of Woodhouse and Whytbank; William; Agnes; Christian, who married John Rutherford of Hunthill; Janet, who married George Brown of Coalston; and Margaret. In 1529 he appointed his wife, Margaret, and first-born son with her, James, as executors, with his moveable goods to go to his 4 daughters. In 1541 his widow Margaret Clunie and son James claimed tenancy of Reidhead farm in Tweeddale. David of Smailholm (d.1513) eldest son of David of Galashiels and Smailholm. His brothers included John of Galashiels and James of Whytbank. He was killed at Flodden. David (d.bef. 1623) eldest son of Sir James of Galashiels. He married Margaret, daughter of 'Auld Wat' Scott of Harden, while she was still a minor. He died shortly afterwards (and before his father), with his widow having a marriage contract with Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun in 1623. David (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme. He was probably a factor or chamberlain or held some similar position. David of Torquhan (19th C.) owner of lands on Gala Water that had traditionally belonged to the Pringles. He was tenant farmer at Hyndlee for about 17 years in the later 1800s. One of his children was Col. Hall-Grant (b.1876). Maj. David of Carriber (1790–1876) eldest son of John of Carriber and Mary Walker. He was born at Cranston, Midlothian. He served with the 7th Regiment of Bengal Native Infantry and retired with the rank of Major in 1835. He was probably the Maj. Potts who was at Hawick in 1837 for the election (at which there was so much trouble from the crowd). He had one brother who died in India, and another who was Robert, farmer at Bairnkine, Southdean. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1830. He left Carriber to his nephew, John. David (1806–89) of Wilton Lodge, which he inherited through marrying James Anderson's daughter, Mary. He was son of Alexander of Whytbank and Mary Dick, and younger brother of Alexander of Yair. He was born at Yair, youngest of 11 children, and educated in Selkirk and then in England, at Durham Grammar School and Haileyburgh College. He trained as a lawyer and in 1824 started service with the East India Company, surviving the fire on his ship 'The Kent', on which about 100 people perished. He worked as a magistrate in several locations. Returning to Britain for 3 years in 1839, he stayed at Friarshaugh near Melrose. He was then judge at Purneah and left India for the last time in 1851 with a pension and the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in the Bengal Infantry. He settled in Hawick after marrying the heiress of Wilton Lodge estate. He was responsible for the extensive remodelling of Wilton Lodge in 1859, including the monogrammed letters 'DMP' and biblical quotations; he was quite religious, being filled, it is said, with 'the love of country, the love of letters, the love of God'. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was recorded at Wilton Lodge in a directory of 1868. A keen horseman, he can be seen on horseback at the stables of Wilton Lodge in a photo, probably in the 1880s. He became known locally as a philanthropist. He was Chairman or Governor of at least three Hawick savings banks, including Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Co., Ltd. (1864–89), Hawick Savings Bank (1865–89) and Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, Ltd. (1876–89). He was also Chairman of Wilton Parochial Board and of Hawick Combination Poorhouse. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, as well as being on the county Prison Board. He was a Vice-President of the local division of the Evangelical Alliance. After his death the Town purchased Wilton Lodge from his trustees, and the present house is much as it was when he lived there. In 1827 he married Frances, daughter of Alexander Tod of Alderston, and she died in 1856 at Pau. In 1858 he secondly married Mary, heiress of James Anderson of Wilton Lodge. His children were: Rev. Alexander David; Amy Elizabeth, who married Rev. H.C. Ripley; and Frances Jane, who married James Christie and secondly Theobald von Fischer. His boot jack is in the Museum. David (b.1839) younger son of James Hall and Jane Hogarth. He farmed at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish. His wife was Jane and their children included: Hall G.; Frances E. and Dorothy M. Douglas see John Douglas Francis (18th C.) Sheriff-Depute for Roxburghshire. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. George (d.c.1459) son of Robert of Pilmuir and Smailholm. In 1427 he was part of the inquest for William being served heir to his father Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in the Barony of Hawick; there he is 'Jeorgeum de Hoppryngile'. Along with his brother Alexander he was a squire for the Earl of Douglas. He is recorded as 'George Hoppryngile', attorney to Archibald, Earl of Douglas (or possibly Alexander Murray, since the transcription is ambiguous) in 1428/9. The document was the 'instrument of sasine' for the Barony of Hawick being served to William, son of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1429/30 he is probably the George 'Hoppryngile' who was on the 'retour' panel for the lands of Caverton. He witnessed (along with his brother Alexander) a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. In 1437 he was one of 2 'procurators' for Alexander of Weens when he resigned his lands of Weens into the hands of the Baron of Hawick. He witnessed a document for Oswald Abernethy, made before the Earl of Douglas in 1446/7, relating to the lands of Teindside and Harwood. His name appears several times in connection with the Douglasses through to the 1450s, e.g. in 1451 he had a passport for safe conduct to accompany the Earl in England. He was the first Master Ranger of the Ward of Tweed. He is probably the George of 'Hoppringill' who was on the panel in 1456 that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of the charge of helping the English to burn lands around Jedburgh. Either he or an earlier George was 'scutiferus' in a document for Melrose Abbey in 1415. George (15th C.) witness to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick given to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1484 at the Mote. His name is recorded as 'Georgio de Pryn-gyle'. It is unclear which branch of the family he belonged to. Possibly the same 'Georgio Pringyll' witnessed another document for the Douglasses of Drumlanrig in 1501, relating to the lands of Lairs. George of Torwoodlee (1505–68) son of William, the first Laird, who was killed at Flodden. In 1526 he was among the large number of Borderers pardoned for their march (along with the Homes and Walter Scott of Branhholme) against the Earl of Arran. In 1534 he brought a case against a woman in Selkirk for theft. In 1535 he was involved in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk and in 1540 had a dispute over sheep on his lands. In 1541 he was tenant of Caddonlee in Tweed, as well as claiming Torwoodlee. He is probably the 'George Hoppringle' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Also in 1547 he witnessed a document with other Pringles (in the Selkirk Protocol Books). In 1548 he was 'found surety' for the crime of helping 'our ancient enemies of England'. He was implicated in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in Edinburgh in 1552, accused of providing 2 horses to aid the escape of the Laird of Cessford. He was himself murdered by Elliots and others, perhaps led by Martin Elliot of Braidlie. In 1564 he was 'Guidman of Torwoddie' when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He is recorded in 1607 as 'George Hoppringill of Torwoddie' at the trial for his murder. The action was brought by his grandsons George, James and David, against John Elliot of Copshaw; it is unclear why there was such a lengthy delay, but in 1570 a 'day of law' to decide the matter ended in a fight with many injuries and the Privy Council summoned representatives of the Pringles and Elliots in 1575 to settle the feud. The other men named, 'Martin's Hob' and 'the Laird's Jock', were presumably already dead by the time of the 1607 trial. The claim was that he was killed in a raid on Torwoodlee by about 300 men 'of the haill Clannis of the Airmestrangis, Ellotes, Batiesones, Grahames and remanent Clannis', who grabbed him out of his bed and took him to 'Skaldeneise' where they killed him, after ransacking his estate. He married Margaret Crichton of Cranston Riddell and had 10 children, including William, who succeeded. George of Torwoodlee (d.1637) 4th Laird, son of William. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. In 1607 he and his brothers James and David brought an action against John Elliot of Copshaw and others for the murder of his grandfather. He inherited a quarter of the lands of Clifton in 1610. He was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. He was an M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1617 and 1621 and became Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1624. He is recorded in records of the Regality of Melrose in the 1620s. He married Margaret, daughter of James Pringle of Whytbank and secondly married Elizabeth Richardson of Smeaton. He was succeeded by his son James, who was also M.P. George of Torwoodlee (d.1689) 6th Laird, son of James. In 1654 he had sasine of lands in Lilliesleaf. He was an active supporter of the Jacobite cause and resister of Episcopalianism. In 1662 he was fined and pardoned by the King. He was a friend of the Covenanting minister John Livingstone. He owned lands in Maxton Parish in 1678. He helped the Earl of Argyll escape from Scotland in 1681; the Earl was accompanied from Edinburgh to Torwoodlee by Rev. John Scott, minister of Hawick. He then lived in concealment and in 1684 fled to Holland to escape capture (along with Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth), whereupon his 16 year old son was imprisoned and threatened with torture unless he divulged who had given the warning to him. He was involved in a disastrous uprising in 1685, but again managed to flee. His estates were then confiscated, but they were restored at the Revolution. He was made M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1689, but died a few months later (probably before receiving full reward for his efforts in the previous decade). In 1654 he married Janet Brodie of Lethen and she died in 1690. His children were: James, who succeeded; Janet; Anna, who married Alexander Don of Rutherford; Sophia, who married her cousin James Pringle of Greenknowe; and Jean. George Turnbull (b.1810) youngest son of Robert and Ann Buckham. He was a gardener (and perhaps butler with a local family), but later became a licensed grocer at 12 Back Row (later Francis Henderson's). In the 1834 electoral roll he was listed along with his brothers Robert and James, as joint proprietors in a house. He was listed as a grocer on the Back Row in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Janet Wallace, from St. Boswells. Their children (baptised in Minto Parish) included: Robert (b.1836); Hannah Dickson (b.1837); Annabella Buckham (b.1839); Euphemia (b.1841); and George (b.1843). One of his daughters carried on his business, until she married Thomas Charters, after which the business was taken over by John Hendeson. George (b.1829/30) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1851 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ekron. George (1843/4–81) son of Hawick merchant George Turnbull. He was apprenticed to a Selkirk engineer and in 1866 left to work for an oil merchant's in Bradford. Later setting up business with a Mr. Cunningham, he settled in Manchester in 1874. However, he died after contracting diphtheria from one of his children, at the age of 37. He wrote some poetry and was a friend of J.C. Goodfellow, who wrote a verse on his death. His wife was Lydia Mary, who died in Middlesborough in 1930, aged 85. He was buried in the Wellogate. Gideon (1846–1922) son of Adam and Janet Scott, he was born in Robertson Parish. He was a shepherd. In 1827 he married Agnes, daughter of William Walker in Rowantree Toll Bar. Their children included William Walker (1871–1947). He lived in Galloway and died at Pinwherry, Ayrshire. James (d.1495) eldest son of David of Pilmuir and Smailholm. Like his father he acted as Ranger of the Ward of Tweed. He held this office from at least 1447, with the lease of 'Redehede' and Blindlee as his fee. He was on the panel in 1484 where James Douglas was served heir to his father in the Barony of Hawick. He was also the first listed witness to a sasine of 1484/5 relating to Walter

Scott of Branhholme and the lands of Mangerton. In 1488 he had a 19 year lease from the King for the lands of Blindlee, Galashiels and Mosslee. In 1493 George Turnbull of Bedrule, David Waugh from Bedrule and weaver William White had remission for stealing cattle from his farm at Pilmuir. He is probably the James of Smailholm who acted as surety for Patrick Gledstains in Hummelknowes in 1494/5. David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick had remission for stealing from his farm of Pilmuir in 1494/5. He married Elisabeth (also known as Isobel), daughter of Patrick Murray of Philiphaugh. His children were: David, who succeeded; William, 1st Laird of Torwoodlee, who died at Flodden; Alexander, 1st laird of Trinlyknowe, who also died at Flodden; John, 1st Laird of Blindlee, also died at Flodden; Isabella, who married David Home of Wedderburn, who died at Flodden; and an illegitimate son, David of 'Tynnes' (or Tinnis). James of Tinnis (d.1546) son of Alexander of that Ilk. He was probably the James who was among the men pardoned in 1527 for their role in the Battle of Skirmish Field. He is probably also the James who witnessed an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme in 1528. He may be the James who held a tenement in Selkirk according to a document in 1528. In 1529 King James V granted him (and his wife, Sibilla Carmichael) the lands of 'Tynnis' and in 1529/30 Gilbert Chisholme granted sasine to him and his wife. He witnessed a document for David of Galashiels and Smailholm in 1529 (and was there stated to be his brother). In 1530 he was recorded as a witness in Selkirk to proceedings taken against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk. He was probably the James who in 1532 acted as an arbitrator for Isabel Murray in a dispute with her son Walter Scott in Headshaw. In 1535 his 'first born son' James gave notice of ejection of his father's tenants from Buckholm. In 1541 he was recorded holding the lands of 'Tynnes' in feu, as well as being tenant in 'Dricheuchschele' in Ettrick. He was captured at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542, and not released for 3 years. He was mentioned in 1542 in reference to tenants in a dispute with Alexander of Craighleith. In 1546 he was part of the bond of peace signed between the Scotts, Turnbolls, Cranstons, Kers, etc. He married Sibella Carnichael. He was succeeded by his son James, and also had a daughter, Margaret. David 'second son of James Hoppringill' recorded in 1543 could also be his son. James of Woodhouse and Whytbank (d.1563) son of David and Margaret. Lundie. He succeeded to Whytbank in 1510, and the family's Peeblesshire estates on the death of his father. He is said to have accompanied James V to Solway Moss in 1542 and was taken prisoner, but this may have been a different James (of Buckham). In 1547 he witnessed a document with other Pringles (in the Selkirk Protocol Books). He married Margaret Ker of Linton; she later married Sir David Home of Wedderburn, died in 1580 and was buried at Melrose Abbey. Their children were: Robert, who predeceased him; James, who succeeded to Whytbank; George, tenant of Netherton; Alexander; William; John; David, possibly the 'pothecar' who witnessed a discharge in 1580; Marion, who married George of Blindlee and secondly married William Home of Bassendean. James of Torsonce and that Ilk (16th C.) probably son of Thomas. In 1581/2 he and his wife Elizabeth Edmondson had sasine for an annual rent in 'Bowschank'. He is probably the 'Hoppringill of Torsonce' listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. He is probably the James of that Ilk who served as surety for James of Smailholm in 1597. James of Whytbank (d.c.1625) son of James and Margaret Kerr. He was a strong Royalist supporter, as a result of which he lost his Peeblesshire estates. In 1571/2 he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branhholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. He could also be the 'James Hoppringill' listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter, being owed 'for his fie'. In 1575 he was ordered to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He was one of the Border Lairds summoned in 1583/4 to give assurances for keeping peace on the Border and in 1591 was one of the Lairds who had to promise to serve the Wardens and pursue the Earl of Bothwell. In 1599 he was cautioner for a bond for some Homes not to harm each other. He was on the 1601 jury following the Kerr and Turnbull feud in Jedburgh. Both he and his son James signed another bond among Border Lairds in 1602, to keep the peace. He married Marion, daughter of Andrew Murray of Blackbarony and secondly Juliane, daughter of Sir David Home of Wedderburn. His children included: James, who predeceased him (c.1616), but whose son James succeeded; Robert, who was probably the 'Robert Hoppringle, son to the gudeman of Quhytebank' who was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth for being part of the 'Royal High School Riot' of 1595; and Margaret, who married John Pringle of that Ilk. His son James succeeded to his lands of 'Reidheid' in 1607. James (d.c.1616) son of James of Whytbank. In 1596 he was cautioner for John Home of Cowdenknowes. He and his father signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He predeceased his father and his son James succeeded to Whytbank. Sir James of Galashiels (d.1635) son of James, who was the only son of Andrew Hoppringle of Smailholm and Galashiels (although some accounts have only one James). During his minority his 'tutors' were Walter Riddell of that Ilk (and later his son Andrew), Robert Pringle of Langshaw and John Pringle of Buckholm. He was James of Smailholm in 1597 when James of that Ilk served as his surety. He was imprisoned following firing of pistols in a feud with George of Blindlee in 1598 and in that year Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk were cautioners for him not to carry hagbuts, while he was cautioner for Alexander Horsburgh not to harm a Burgess of Edinburgh. Galashiels was created as a free burgh of barony for him in 1599. In 1603 he was a surety for Thomas Ker of Cavers. He became a Commissioner for Peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He had a charter of 'Sellarhauche' from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1621 and 1630 and became Sheriff-Principal in 1622. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft. He may have married a daughter of Ker of Linton (possibly Jean, daughter of George). His children were: David, who married Margaret, daughter of Walter Scott of Harden, and died before him; James, who married Jean, daughter of Sir John Scott of Scotstarvet; John, last of Smailholm, who died without issue; George, Sheriff-Depute of Selkirkshire, who also died before his father; Jean, who became heir and married Hugh Scott of Deuchar, son of 'Auld Wat', and who thereby became the first Scott of Gala; Isobel, who married Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; and 2 other daughters who married ministers. It is said that he lived in an expensive manner and was forced to sell off some of his lands, leaving the rest encumbered by debt. James of Whytbank (1593/4–1667) son of James and Christian, daughter of William Lundin of that Ilk. He succeeded his grandfather in 1622, his father having already died. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1628–33 and was a Commissioner of Defence for the county in 1643 and Commissioner of War in 1648. He was appointed a Commissioner of Supply in 1661 and a Justice of the peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He was known as a great loyalist and was fined by Parliament in 1646. He added Yair to the family estates and also became the male representative of the Pringles of Galashiels and Smailholm (on the extinction of the male line of Pringle of Gala). He married Sophia Schoneir, who was a maid of honour to Anne of Denmark. His only son was Alexander, and he also had an illegitimate son, William. James of Torwoodlee (1596–1657) son of George. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1641 and 1645 and was appointed Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1646. In 1654 he was served heir to his father's lands of Corslie within Ettrick Forest and 'Cockslandis' in the village of Lilliesleaf. In 1620 he married Jean, daughter of Sir Richard Cockburn of Clerkington. In 1628 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir Lewis Craig of Riccarton. His son George was also an M.P. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the 'Cottars' on the Hearth Tax roll there. He could be the James who witnessed baptisms in 1689 for John Veitch and in 1691 for Robert Veitch and for James Scott. In 1694, along with William Brown, he witnessed a baptism for William Tait. James of Torwoodlee (1665–1735) son of George. He was imprisoned in 1684 and threatened with torture if he did not tell them who helped his father flee to Holland. In 1689 after the Revolution he was made an officer in the cavalry corps of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. His father died in 1689, in 1690 all of the family estates were restored to him and in 1694 he was served heir to his father. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1693–1702. He contributed the large sum of £1300 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1714 he was appointed Captain of a company of cavalry raised to organise defence against the forces of 'the Pretender'. In 1690 he married Isabel, eldest daughter of Sir John Hall of Dunglas. His children were: George, who succeeded, but died unmarried; John, who died at sea; James of Bowland, who was a principal Clerk of Session, and whose son James succeeded his uncle; Katherine, who married Sir Robert Pringle of Stichill; Janet; Sophia, who married Adam Fairmont of Greenhill; Marion, who married John S. Ker of Littledean; Isabel; Margaret; and Ann. Sir James of Stichill (1726–1809) son of Sir Robert and Katherine Pringle. He was 'junior' when listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was M.P. for Berwickshire 1761–79 and succeeded as Baronet in 1779. In 1780 he was added to the voters' roll for Roxburghshire. He was Commander of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. He was listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788, but it was said that 'it is likely he will be averse to vote, as he will not like the oath'. He was taxed for owning carriages and horses, and for having several male and female servants in the 1780s and 1790s. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in 1797. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Norman MacLeod of that Ilk. His children included: Mary, who married George Baillie of Jerviswood; Robert, who married his cousin and pre-deceased his father; Eliza, who married Archibald Todd of Drygrange; Sir John, who also married a cousin, and succeeded to Stichill; and Sir Norman, who succeeded his brother. James of Bowland and Torwoodlee (1758/9–1840) only son of James and grandson of James of Torwoodlee, who was M.P. for Selkirkshire. He was educated in Cambridge and Leyden, and studied for the bar, but never practised. He succeeded to his uncle's lands of Torwoodlee, sold his father's lands of Bowland and also acquired Buckholm and Williamlaw from other Pringles. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as being 'rich' and probably siding with Rutherford of Edgerston in the election. He owned Buckham, Williamlaw and Ladhopenmuir. He was also listed as a voter in Selkirkshire and brother-in-law of the Sheriff of Selkirkshire, Andrew Plummer. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire from at least 1802 and was Captain of the Selkirkshire Yeomanry during the False Alarm of 1804. He was additionally listed along with his son (James junior) as Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1819. He paid tax for having male and female servants in the period 1785–97, for owning a carriage in the period 1785–98 and for horses and dogs in 1797. He raised the Selkirkshire Corps of Border Yeomanry in 1797 and was their Captain at the time of the False Alarm in 1804. He was also present at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was Convener of Selkirkshire for more than 50 years and was proposed as Vice-Lieutenant of the county in 1827. He was active in promoting the early woollen manufacturers in Galashiels. In 1782 he married Elizabeth, daughter and co-heiress of Charles Tod of Drygrange. Their children were: James, Vice-Admiral and successor;

Charles, who died young; George, who married Ann Stewart; Alexander, who was lost in a wreck; and Frances, only daughter, who died in Edinburgh. James of Torwoodlee (1783–1859) son of James. He joined the Navy in 1797 and retired as a Rear-Admiral in 1846. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He became Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1820 and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He succeeded his father in 1840 and also succeeded to his brother's lands of Trinlyknowe. He was succeeded by his son Commander James Thomas. His other children were: Capt. Charles; George; Elizabeth Mason; Frances; Mary; and Jane. James (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Howpasley, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1822 he married Ann Murray, who was from Roberton. Their children included: Walter (b.1834); and John (b.1835). James (b.1796) son of Robert and Ann Buckham. He was cousin to the founder of Robert Pringle & Sons, and had a brother who was also Robert. He was a stockingmaker and warehouseman in Hawick. In 1841 the family were living at 'Greenwind foot', in 1851 at 12 O'Connell Street (probably the modern No. 4) and in 1861 at 7 O'Connell Street. He married Beatrix Scott, who was from Deanburnhaugh, daughter of old Peggy Anderson; she was said to be 'great for simples (herbs)'. Their children included: Margaret, who must have died young; Helen (b.1836); Elizabeth Miller (b.1838), who married mill furnisher George Scott; Robert (b.1839); Isabella (b.1841); Thomas (b.1843); John (b.1845); and Margaret (again, b.1848). James Hall (1801–74) born in Hawick Parish. He was tenant farmer at Hyndlee, recorded in the 1860s. He was also recorded as farmer at Cleithaugh in 1868. He married Jane Mary Hogarth (1803–50). Their children were: George Hogarth (1830–72), a surgeon in Sydney, Australia, who died at sea; Andrew; David, who farmed at Cleithaugh; Mary Miller; Margaret Preston; and Elizabeth Jane. James (1832–99) frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was a 'Marino Framework Knitter' living at 8 Howegate. He married Elizabeth Trotter (1838–1918) and their children included: Robert (b.1861); William (b.1863); James (b.1865); Mary Landles (b.1867); George (b.1869); Elizabeth (1875–1961); Frank (b.1877); and Thomas (b.1880). James Thomas of Torwoodlee (1832–1902) son of Vice-Adm. James. He retired from the Royal Navy with the rank of Commander. He was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and J.P. for Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire. He also founded Torwoodlee Golf Club. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1862 he married Annie-Parminster, only daughter of Col. James Lewis Black, who was wounded at Waterloo. He was succeeded by James-Lewis. James butcher at 56 High Street, continuing the business started by his great-grandfather in 1902. He has received multiple Scottish Craft Butcher awards and other prizes for his speciality sausages, black puddings and Scotch pies. Janet (b.c.1790) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street. She was at about No. 39 on the 1841 census, living with her sons Thomas and Robert. She is probably Janet Kedie, who married John, proprietor of a public house on the Sandbed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Janet (b.c.1800) grocer on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. She was located at about 7 High Street in 1841. She could be the Janet who was an unmarried seamstress at about 25 High Street in 1851. J.B. see John Balfour Jean (18th/19th C.) member of the local family, perhaps a daughter of the Robert recorded in the family bible. Before 1798 she owned the bottom part of 8 Fore Row (now 22 Drumlanrig Square). John of that Ilk and Torsonce (d.c.1555) son of Alexander of that Ilk. He may be the 'Jok a Pringill' accused by the English in 1543 of leading raids, along with the Laird of Mow. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, including Goldielands and elsewhere. His children included: Thomas, who succeeded; Michael; James 'in the Bow'; Archibald of Torquhan; Elizabeth, Prioress of Coldstream; and Margaret, who married Clement Mauchan of Pilton, Cramond. John of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.c.1566) son of David. He succeeded his father about 1535, his older brother David having died at Flodden. He may be the John 'in Reidheid' (essentially the same as Whytbank) who was one of the large number of Borderers listed along with Walter Scott of Branxholme for rising up against the Earl of Arran, for which they had remission in 1526; his brother Robert was also listed, along with 7 other Pringles. In 1541 he was recorded occupying the lands of 'Galloschelis'. The rentals from his farms in Lauder are listed in 1542 and he was involved in a dispute involving the teinds in Lauder in 1545. In 1547 he witnessed a document with other Pringles (in the Selkirk Protocol Books). He was among the men accused in 1549 of helping the Kers and English attack the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme; the other Pringles on the list were John of Torsance and Robert of Overcleuch. He is probably the 'Guidman of Galloschelis' listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir James Gordon of Stichell and Lochinvar; after his death she remarried to John Hoppringle of Wrangholm. His children were: Andrew, who succeeded; David of Bardarroch; James; Isabella, who married William Gordon of Crauchlaw; Margaret, who married Andrew Rutherford of Hundalee; and other daughters who married Andrew Haliburton of Muirhouse law, a Borthwick and an Inglis. John of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.1650) 3rd son of Sir James. He was the last in the male line of the Pringles of Smailholm, being served heir to a portion of his father's lands in 1641 (with Gala passing to his brother-in-law Hugh Scott, and the Lauderdale lands having been sold). In 1643 he was recorded as owner of 'Smailholm-craigs'. In 1645 the lands of Smailholm were granted to Sir William Scott of Harden, these lands having been in Pringle hands since at least 1459. In 1645 he was probably the John 'sometime of Smailholme' who was part of an armed gang of about 100 men who attacked farms and harassed tenants in the Parish of Stow, belonging to Robert of Blindlee and John Haliburton, younger of Muirhouse law. After his death the representative of that family became James Pringle of Whytbank. John (17th C.) eldest son of Robert of Stichill. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. Their children included: Sir Robert, who succeeded his grandfather to Stichill; Walter of Graycrook; Katherine; Francis of Rowiston; John; James; William; and Elizabeth. It is possible he was father of Jean, who married Thomas Scott of Todrig. John (d.1679) from Castleton Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on 'the Crown of London' when it shipwrecked off Deerness in the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge and subsequent imprisonment under harsh conditions. Sir John of Stichill (1662–1721) son of Sir Robert. He contributed £500 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1688 he married Magdalen, daughter of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. Their children included: Gilbert, in the Dragoons; Walter, who was an advocate and Sheriff of Roxburghshire;

Margaret, who married Sir James Hall of Dunglass; Katherine, who married William Hamilton of Bangour; Sir Robert, who succeeded; and Sir John, who succeeded his brother, and was President of the Royal Society. His wife died in 1739 and is buried at Stichill. John of Whytbank (1678–1702) son of John, minister of Fogo, and grandson of George of Balmungo. In 1689 (while still a minor) he succeeded Alexander of Whytbank, who was his father's cousin; he was further served as heir in 1695. He was appointed a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1698. In 1699 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, and she died in 1770, aged 89, outliving him by 68 years. Their children were: Alexander, who succeeded; Margaret, who died young; and Joanna, who died unmarried. He died at Yair, aged just 24. John of Haining (1673/4–1754) 2nd son of Andrew of Clifton and Violet Rutherford. He became an advocate in 1698 and purchased the Haining in 1702. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire, i.e. an M.P. in the last Scottish Parliament. He then served that county as M.P. until 1729. However, he was unpopular within Selkirk itself because of his support of the Duke of Douglas' rights within that burgh. In 1711 he was one of the founding members of the 'Honest Country Club'. He was a Keeper of the Signet for Scotland in 1711. He became Lord of Session in 1729, taking the title Lord Haining. He married Ann, eldest daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh. He had 3 sons and 3 daughters: Andrew, who became Lord Alemoor; John, who inherited the Haining; Robert, who became a doctor; Anne, who married Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee; and Helen (d.1808) and Violet (d.1821), who died unmarried. John (17th/18th C.) wright who became a Hawick Burgess in 1704. He was described as 'in the Haugh of the Galawater' and was stated in the marriage record as being from Stow Parish. In 1710 he witnessed a baptism for mason John Napier. He was probably the same wright who was selected by the minister and heritors in 1713 to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse in Hawick. And also the John who was one of the men who valued Andrew Rodger's house for the Kirk Session in the early 1700s. He witnessed baptisms for Jasper Richardson in 1713, for weaver John Stevenson in 1719 and for shoemaker Adam Kersel in 1723. In 1716 he was 'wright in Hawick'. In 1721 his servant

Robert Robison married Isobel Rae in Braxholmtown. Also in 1721 he was witness for baptisms for weaver Robert Wight and 'Tenent in Hawick' David Wilson. Either he or his son was paid in 1732 for fixing the hands of St. Mary's clock. In 1704 he married Janet Thomson, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Margaret (b.1707), who married tobacconist James Scott; Janet (b.1709), who must have died young; John (1709), gardener; William (b.1711); Walter (b.1714); Janet (b.1716); George (b.1718); Janet (again, 1721); Mary, who married William Scott of Langholm; Betty, 2nd wife of baker John Kedic; and Jean. The witnesses in 1707 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot, in 1709 were wright Walter Hardie and carrier David Minto, in 1711 were James Scott 'Doctor' and shoemaker John Scott, and in 1716 were merchant Francis Elliot and carrier David Minto. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1732); and Jean (b.1730). In 1733 he was at Howcleuch. John (b.1709) son of wright John and Janet Thomson. He became a Burgess in 1733, when he was described as 'gardener in Borthwick, now in Hawick'. He was witness to a baptism in 1746, along with Thomas Kedic. He may be the gardener John whose daughter Betty was the 2nd wife of baker John Kedic. He may also be the John who in 1737 witnessed baptisms in Wilton Parish for Andrew Stewart and for Walter Grieve, both residents of Midshiels. John (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Francis (b.1751); Margaret (b.1754); Janet (b.1759); William (b.1761); Mary (b.1763); George (b.1766); and James (b.1768). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and Adam Dryden. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1762 he married Margaret Laidlaw from Hawick Parish. He may be the John whose son William was baptised in Hawick in 1765. John (18th C.) resident at Howpasley when his children were baptised in Robertson Parish in 1761 and 1763. Probably the same John was resident at Gair in 1775 when another child was baptised. He was probably father of John (b.1761), Mary (b.1763), Margaret (b.1769), Agnes (b.1775) and an unnamed daughter (b.1778). John of Crichton (d.1782) eldest son of Mark of Crichton. He was forced to part with his lands, this being suggested to be the inspiration for the line 'I've seen the smiling of Fortune beguiling' in his sister-in-law's song 'Flowers of the Forest'. In 1752 he married Anne, eldest daughter of Robert Rutherford of

Fairnilee and was succeeded by Mark, who was of Fairnilee, Haining and Clifton. John of Haining and Clifton (d.1792) 2nd son of John of Haining. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1765-84. He was a merchant in Madeira and having made a fortune there, and Haining being in financial difficulties, he purchased the estate on the death of his father in 1754 (instead of his brother Lord Alemoor). He also succeeded to Clifton in 1780 on the death of his cousin Robert Pringle. He was listed among the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He was also listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. Sometime before 1779 he had feu-rights to lands in Bewlie and in the Barony of Harden from Walter Scott of Harden. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was taxed for having 2 or 3 male servants from 1778, increasing to 5 or 6 in 1787-92, and 3 or 4 female servants in 1785-91. He paid the land tax at Easter Alemoor in 1785. He was also taxed for owning a carriage and up to 6 horses in the period 1785-92. He was listed as owner of North Synton (including Birkwood) in 1788 (and still recorded this way in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £600. He also owned Clifton and other lands in Morebattle Parish and most of the lands in Linton Parish. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his grand-nephew Mark. He also provided for his reputed natural son John, who was a lawyer with the East India Company. John of Whytbank (1744-90) eldest son of Alexander. He is said to have been a Lieutenant in the 36th Regiment of Foot and served on the staff of Gen. Murray in Canada, where he died. Actually he was a Lieutenant in the 84th Regiment, serving under Gen. Haldimand as Governor of Canada. He served through until the termination of the American War in 1783. He was succeeded by his brother Alexander around 1790. John (c.1770-c.1810) local fiddler and composer of music. James Wilson (writing in 1858) suggests that he was grandson and pupil of John Howison, while W.N. Kennedy (writing in 1863) says he was half-brother of Howison. He became a more accomplished violin player than his older relative, whose abilities were famed throughout the Border. He is probably the John 'Musician' in Hawick who was selected by ballot in 1797 and 1798 to serve on the local Militia, but was declared unfit to serve later in 1798; in 1799 he was listed being 'Musician in Edinburgh' among men balloted in 1797 who were absent from Hawick. He was selected by Lord Minto to lead his band when he was Governor General of India (which must have been in the period 1807–14), and died in Calcutta, probably unmarried. He also collected and published some local reels, strathspeys and jigs in the early 1800s, some of which he wrote himself. These are collected in 2 volumes, and include parts suitable for violin with piano accompaniment. Those published in 1801 are dedicated to ‘Miss Elliot’ (presumably of Minto) and the second volume (probably 1802) dedicated to Lady Scott of Ancrum and available from his lodgings at 16 Rose Street, Edinburgh. He probably lived in the capital as a dancing master. Tunes attributed to him include ‘Lady Ann Hope’, ‘The Miller of Drone’ and ‘Miss Walker’s Strathspey’. There are well over 100 tunes in these 2 volumes, including ones with locally relevant titles, such as ‘Fertish Hill’, ‘Hawick Lasses, a Reel’, ‘Hawick, a Strathspey’, ‘Ruberslaw’, ‘Minto House’, several named after members of the Minto Elliots or local Scotts, ‘The Ettrick Shepherd’, ‘Betty Howison’s Favourite’, ‘Teviot Banks’, ‘Wilton Lodge, a Strathspey’ and the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby’. John (d.1805) tailor in Hawick. He was son of Thomas, who was a carter. He could be the John, son of Thomas and Betty Douglas born in Hawick in 1773. He was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. John of Carriber (d.1836) from Midlothian. About 1810 he arranged the tenancy of Bairnkine farm in Southdean parish. When he died the lease of the farm passed to his younger son Robert Baillie. He married Mary Walker, and their children were: Maj. David; Robert Baillie; another son, who died in India; Mary, who married Lieut. David Sheriff; Isabella, who married Dr. James Richmond, brother of the minister of Southdean; and 3 daughters who never married, Agnes, Janet and Ellen. John of Haining and Clifton (d.1831) succeeded his father Mark in 1812, when still a minor. He was served heir to the Baronies of Haining and Clifton in 1813 and in 1822 was heir to his remote cousins Andrew, Lord Alemoor and John of Haining. He was M.P. for the Selkirk Burghs in 1819–20. He had the mansion at the Haining renovated into an Italian style, and allowed the people of Selkirk to use the grounds of the estate. He died unmarried and was buried in Morebattle. He died after being thrown from his carriage after a fishing trip on Headshaw Loch with his brother Robert. John (b.1778) son of Walter and half-brother of Robert. He was the first member of the family known to be involved with the hosiery trade, being apprenticed to William Beck in 1794. He was recorded as a stocking-maker on the 1801 list for the Militia ballot in Hawick. He later became a merchant. He was recorded as a hosier in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He may be the same John recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as proprietor of a public house in the Sandbed. He may also be the grocer and spirit dealer listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may also be the meal dealer also listed on the High Street in 1837. He firstly married an Oliver and secondly Janet (d.1843), daughter of Thomas Kedie, baker. They had 6 children, including: Elizabeth (b.1820); Thomas Kedie (b.1822); Walter Oliver (b.1824); and Robert (b.1827). He is probably the John, married to Mary Oliver, whose son Walter Oliver was born in Hawick in 1813. He is also probably the hosier John whose twin’s deaths are recorded in Hawick in 1816. John (b.c.1780) labourer in Lilliesleaf according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (1795/6–1843) shepherd at Milsington. In 1841 he was living at Milsingtonshiel. He married Sarah Johnstone and their children (mostly baptised in Ettrick Parish) included William (b.c.1825); James (who died in 1841, aged 14); Francis (b.1829); Adam (b.1831); Margaret (b.1833); Jean (b.1835); John (b.1837); and Mary. His wife died at Broadlee in 1866, aged 74. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. John Balfour (1815–85) Dumfries man who travelled around painting portraits, signing them ‘J.B. Pringle’. He probably married Grace Ballantrae in Edinburgh in 1846. His wife was Grace Haswell when their son John Haswell (b.1848) and daughter Julia Mary (b.1853) were born in Hawick. He was the painter of ‘Hawick from Wilton Lodge 1850’, now in the Museum, painted from around the Violet Woods. He also painted a view of the Auld Brig from near the foot of the Mill Port in 1847, as well as a view of Hawick and Wilton from the Mote in about the same year. He later gained some fame as a painter of maritime portraits. John (b.1825/6) grocer at about 6 Doncaster Street in Newcastle-on-Tyne in the 1860s. He is listed as a shepherd there in 1861. His wife was Grace and their children included daughter Eliot and son Robert. John Douglas (1877–1939) born in Hawick, son of manufacturer Walter Pringle and Mary Douglas. He joined the family firm at an early age, becoming a partner in 1897 (along with his half-brother Robert). He retired from Pringle’s in 1918 (or 1919), moving to the south of England for his health. He married Muriel Martin in 1907 and their children were Elizabeth Douglas (who married Dr. F.Y.

Henderson of London and John Martin Douglas (who married Celia Carroll and became a successful journalist). John Martin Douglas (1912–99) son of John Douglas and Muriel Martin, he was born in Hawick. He graduated from Lincoln College, Oxford in 1934 and started a career in journalism. He was sub-editor of the Guardian, served in WWII with the K.O.S.B., was Director of Foreign Affairs at the Times (1948–52), then became editor of the Sydney Morning Herald (1952–57), Deputy Editor of the Observer (1957–62), Editor of the Canberra Times (1964–65) and editor of the Sydney Morning Herald again (1965–70). He wrote the controversial best-selling book ‘Australian Accent’ (1958), as well as ‘Australian Painting Today’ (1963) and ‘On Second Thoughts’ (1971). He married Celia Carroll in 1936 and she died in 1997. Margaret Graham ‘Peggy’ nee Irvine (1908–2008) born in Carlisle and raised near Langholm. She married master butcher Robert and they had 4 children: Gladys; Margaret; Jean; and Robert. Long connected with the Hawick Common Riding, she was Acting-Mother in 1947, and had a son and grandson who were Cornet. She lived to see her telegram from the Queen and had 27 great-grandchildren. Margaret Violet see Margaret Violet Douglas. Mark of Clifton (d.1644) said to have been a servitor of Robert, Earl of Roxburgh. He surely came from one of the local branches of Pringles, but it is not known which one. In 1619 he purchased part of Clifton, which had been previously held by the Pringles of Torwoodlee and in 1623 he had confirmed to him lands in Easter Clifton from the Pringles of Hownam. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. William Bennet of Ancrum. Through his wife he became connected with the families of Elliott of Stobs and Douglas of Cavers. Their children included: Robert, who succeeded; Andrew, a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh, who later succeeded his nephew; and Janet, who married Thomas Scott of Todrig. Mark of Clifton (d. 1685) only son of Robert of Clifton. He succeeded his father in 1683, but died unmarried only a couple of years later. His tutors included his uncle Andrew and Walter Scott, younger of Todrig. He was succeeded by his uncle Andrew. Mark of Crichton (d.1761) youngest son of Andrew of Clifton and brother of Robert of Clifton and John of Haining. In 1707 he attended a dinner in Selkirk with other local landowners and got into a dispute (perhaps over the Union) with Walter, eldest son of William Scott of Raeburn. They fought a duel with swords and Scott was killed, the location being afterwards known as Raeburn’s Meadow. He then fled abroad, becoming a merchant in Spain and later British Consul there. In 1737 he purchased Crichton, returned to Britain in 1758 and lived in London. He firstly married Miss Strachan of Thornton and secondly married Veronica Rennie. He was succeeded by his son John and had a daughter Violante, who married her cousin Andrew Pringle, Lord Alemoor. Mark of Fairnilee and Clifton (1753/4–1812) son of John of Crichton and Anne, eldest daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee. He was trained for the bar and became an Advocate in 1777, but did not practice long. He was appointed deputy Judge Advocate and Clerk of the Courts Martial of Scotland. He paid the Land Tax for Fairnilee and Rink in 1785. He succeeded to Fairnilee in 1786 on the death of his maternal grandfather and Haining and Clifton on the death of his grand-uncle John in 1792. He started building a new mansion at the Haining in 1794. He paid the carriage and horse taxes for Haining in the years 1794 and 1797, and the dog tax in 1797, as well as being taxed for 4–6 male servants in Selkirk Parish 1793–97. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1786–1802. He was also listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788. He was appointed Chamberlain of Ettrick Forest for life. In 1802 he paid the land tax on Easter Alemoor, as well as Haining, Hartwoodburn and Howden. He was ‘of Clifton’ when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 (when already deceased). He was ‘of Haining’ when writing about the poor laws in Selkirk in 1806. In 1795 he married Anne Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Chalmers. His children included: John, who succeeded to Haining and was M.P. for the Selkirk Burghs; the last Pringle of Haining; Robert of Fairnilee, M.P. for Selkirkshire, who was the last Pringle of Haining; and Margaret Violet, who married Archibald Douglas of Adderstone. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1812 and he died at Bath. Mistress (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She may be the widow of some local Pringle. Paul Henry (1922–84) born in Hawick of Presbyterian parents, he approached Father Gordon Gray just before WWII, and was accepted into the Roman Catholic church while a prisoner of war in Italy. He returned to Hawick after the War, worked on the railways and entered Nunraw as a monk in 1954. Robert of Hoppringle (13th C.) earliest known ancestor of this family. He is recorded as a witness to a Soutra charter in the reign of Alexander III, probably around 1270. His name was written 'de Hoppryngil'. Another man, 'Elys de Obrinkel' signed the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and could easily have been his son. Robert of Whitsun and Pilmuir (d.1424) one of the earliest local Pringles. He acted as armour-bearr for James, Earl of Douglas at Otterburn in 1388. He then served the next 2 Earls of Douglas and was killed at the Battle of Verneuil in France. In 1408 he had a charter of Pilmuir in Lauderdale. About the same time he was also probably granted the lands of Smailholm and had a tower built there at Sandyknowe. About 1413 he witnessed a charter for the Homes of Wedderburn and another for Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1414. He is probably the 'Robt of hoppingyill' who witnessed an indenture for Melrose Abbey in 1418. He may be the Robert 'de Pringil' who witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. His children included: Robert, who succeeded; George, Squire of Douglas; Alexander, also Squire of Douglas; and David, who succeeded his brother Robert. Robert of Smailholm and Pilmuir (d.bef. 1480) son of Robert. He is probably responsible for the bridge across the Teviot near Melrose (described by Sir Walter Scott in 'The Monastery') with the inscription 'I, Robert Pringill of Pilmore steed, Gave a hundred nobles of goud sae reid, To big my brigg upon the Tweed'. He appears to have succeeded his brother George as Master Ranger of the Ward of Tweed from about 1460, and was succeeded in that post by William Douglas de Cluny of Traquair in 1470. In 1459 he had a sasine for the lands of 'Wrangham' and Smailholm. He witnessed an instrument in 1474 (for the Homes of Wedderburn), but was succeeded by his brother David shortly afterwards. He married Elspeth, daughter of Sir William Dishington of Ardross; she was responsible for building Old Gala House in 1457. Robert (16th/17th C.) Bailie to the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1622 Simon Armstrong, called of Tweeden, appeared at the Justiciary Court as caution for him. It is unclear what his crimes were or how he was related to other Pringles. Robert of Stichill (b.c.1581–1649) descendant of William of Whitton and son of George of Craigeleith. He was 2nd son of George of Newhall and was progenitor of the Stichill branch and Laird of Bartingbush. He trained as a lawyer, becoming Writer to the Signet. He acquire Stichell in 1628. He was Commissioner of War for Roxburghshire and Berwickshire. He also served as Clerk to Gideon Murray of Elibank and Chamberlain to the Earl of Buccleuch (for the Debateable Land in the 1630s). A letter exists from him to Earl Walter Scott, describing the flight and capture of several Armstrongs. He was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1638, serving as effectively one of the Roxburghshire M.Ps. until 1641. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He could have been the servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank who had a bond in 1619 with Thomas Turnbull 'in Rowllspittle'. He purchased Stichill in 1628, and also bought Dinlabyre, Larriston and Howden in Liddesdale in 1632, as well as Templehall in Berwickshire. He was recorded as possessor of the lands of Larriston, Howden and Stripshielden in the early 17th century. His lands in Castleton Parish (probably part of Dinlabyre) were valued at £60 in 1643 (but the same lands were owned by Scott of Buccleuch by 1678). He was also recorded as owner of lands in Stichill Parsish in 1643. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1644 and 1646 and was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire, still in 1649. He married Katherine Hamilton, who came from the Silverton family. Their children included: John, who married Margaret, illegitimate daughter of the 1st Earl of Buccleuch, but predeceased his father; Walter of Greenknowe; an unnamed daughter, who married a Ker of Graden; Anna, who married Sir James Home of Eccles; and Christina, who married Hugh Wallace of Craigie. He was succeeded by John's son Sir Robert. Robert of Clifton (d.1683) son of Mark. He was served heir to his father in 1644. He was on the Commission of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. He was originally designated as 'of Easter Clifton'. He increased his lands in Clifton in 1656, 1663 and 1679 and received a royal charter for the whole of Clifton in 1681. In 1662 he was on a commission to try 8 witches in Bowden Parish and was also on a commission appointed to apprehend thieves on the Border. He served as a J.P. in Roxburghshire from 1663. In 1674 he acquired part of Linton from Henry Ker. In 1676 he was on the commission regarding the division of Selkirk Common. In 1678 he paid £1642 on land tax in Linton Parish. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Walter Murray of Livingston and sister of Patrick, Lord Elibank. Their children included: Mark, who succeeded; Janet, who married her cousin Andrew Pringle; and Margaret (d.1683).

In his testament he appointed tutors and advisors to his son, namely his brother Andrew, nephew Walter Scott, 'fear of Todrig', Sir William Bennet of Grubet, Thomas Scott of Todrig and Thomas' son William. Sir Robert of Stichill (17th C.) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Robert in 1651. He is listed owing money to the deceased Countess of Buccleuch in 1661. He was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663 and as one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1681, thus serving as M.P. for the county. He was also on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1683. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Hope, Lord Craighall. They had 19 children, including: Sir John, 2nd Baronet; Sir Walter, Lord Newhall; Robert Pringle, Secretary-at-War; and Thomas, W.S., Clerk of the Privy Council and Deputy-Keeper of the Signet, father of Lord Edgefield. Robert (17th C.) resident of 'Crackuooll' in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He may be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk in 1691 for William Scott and Agnes Scott and for James Rutherord. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in Caverton in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Sanderson, tenant in Falnash. Probably the same Robert paid the hearth tax on 4 hearths at Caverton Mill in the 1690s. Robert of Clifton (d.1754) eldest son of Andrew of Clifton and brother of John of Haining. In 1723 he and his brother John had sasine of an annual rent of £1000 for lands in the Barony of Cavers. He firstly married his cousin, Janet Pringle, and their children were: Robert, his only son and heir; Elizabeth, who married Robert, 4th son of William Elliot of Harwood; Margaret (d.1771), who died unmarried in Jedburgh; and Barbara (d.1780), who died unmarried in Edinburgh. At about the age of 50 he secondly married Margaret, eldest daughter of George Rutherford of Fairnington; this was apparently done to the surprise of his children. Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Baldy and their children included Betty (b.1737). Robert (18th C.) possibly half-brother of Thomas. He is also recorded in the ancient Hawick family bible. He may be the Robert who married Janet Porteous, and whose children born in Hawick included Thomas (b.1743), Helen (b.1746) and Ann (b.1756). He could be the dyer in Hawick who witnessed a baptism for gardener Alexander Bunyan in 1743, along with his servant (showing that he was a man of means) George Campbell. Robert (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1742 for mason David Laing, and in 1745 for carrier Walter Scott (with Scott reciprocating on the same day). He married Margaret Wilson and their children included John (b.1745) and John (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were shoemaker Thomas Scott and Beadle John Telfer. Robert of Clifton (d.1778) only son of Robert of Clifton to whom he was served as heir in 1755. In 1760 he made an entail of his lands to his heirs, failing which the sons of his uncle Lord Haining, then the heirs of Mark of Crichton and his eldest sister, Mrs. Elliot of Harwood. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his cousin John Pringle, 2nd son of Lord Haining. Robert (d.1793) served as Captain of the Royal Engineers and Lieutenant Colonel in the Army. In 1788 he was listed under 'Votes of John Pringle of Clifton' among the voters of Roxburghshire (suggesting that he was given freehold of some land in order to vote in the county). He supervised the construction of new defences around St. John's, Newfoundland in the 1770s and instigated the Newfoundland Volunteers in about 1778 and the Newfoundland Regiment in 1780. He returned to Europe in 1783 and was chief engineer at Gibraltar 1785–88. He was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in 1792 and died in Grenada. He married Miss Balneavis. His will is in the National Archives. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Thomson and their children included John (b.1778). In 1778 he is described as a Superintendent of Excise and the witnesses were Robert Pringle (perhaps his father) and writer William Wilson. He could be the 'Mr. Pringle' who was schoolmaster at the east-end of the Kirkyard and also master of excise in Hawick. His son John could have been the musician of that name from Hawick. It is possible that his wife was the same Helen Thomson who married John 'Howieson' in Hawick in 1759. Robert (1750/1–1820) possibly son of Robert (recorded in the family bible). He was a nursery gardener in Hawick, probably with Dickson's. He may be the Robert recorded in Allars in 1799 when carrier Robert Stewart was his servant. He married Ann Buckham (1771–1820) and their children were: William (b.1794), framesmith; James (b.1796), stockingmaker; Jean (or Jane, b.1799), married Francis Bell; Robert (b.1801), framework knitter, who married Elizabeth Foyer; and

George Turnbull (b.1810), gardener and then licensed grocer at 12 Back Row. In the 1834 electoral roll his sons George T., Robert and James were listed as joint proprietors of the house he had left them. This is marked 'Ro. Pringle' on Wood's 1824 map. Robert (1765–1835) son of William and Jean Robson. He was a shepherd at Bellendean in 1788 and was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as shepherd at Wolfcleuchhead. In Robertson in 1788 he married Janet (b.1765–1804), daughter of Thomas Burnet; she died at Wolfcleuchhead. Their children included: William (b.1788); Margaret (b.1790); James (b.1793); John (b.1795); Jane (b.1797); Adam (1799–1886), who was a shepherd at Over Dalglish; and an unnamed son (b.1801). He died at Milsington. Robert (b.1775) son of carrier Thomas, he is recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. The annotation 'Subst.' seems to suggest that he did not serve; his name appears again in 1798, but with Robert Waugh, labourer in Hawick, serving as his substitute. In 1799 he was listed among men balloted in 1797 for whom substitutes had been found. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Helen Lunn and their children included John (b.1803), Elizabeth (b.1805) and James (b.1807). Robert (d.bef. 1809) resident of Hawick. He was already deceased in 1809 when the death of his son Thomas is recorded. His nickname appears to be 'old Washman', but it is unclear what this meant. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Buckham and their children included: Thomas (b.1803); and James (b.1805). He could be the John whose stockingmaker son James is recorded dying in 1824. Robert of Clifton and Haining (d.1842) younger son of Mark. He served in the 7th Hussars. He succeeded his brother John to the Clifton and Haining titles in 1831 after John died in a carriage accident when returning from Headshaw Loch. He resided at the Haining (in Selkirk), where he died 11 years later, and was the last Pringle of Clifton. His lands included North Synton in Ashkirk Parish. He was also listed among the landowners in Robertson Parish in 1841. In 1826 he was recorded complaining about a poacher. He was a Liberal in politics and reputedly well-liked in the local community. He defeated Alexander Pringle of Whytbank in the Selkirkshire election of 1832, by 9 votes. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1832–34 and was defeated again by Pringle of Whytbank in the 1835 election. He died unmarried and was the last male Pringle of Haining. His distant cousin Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood succeeded to the Clifton estates, while Haining passed to his sister Margaret Violet, who had married Archibald Douglas of Adderstone and Midshiels. Robert (1795–1859) founder of the manufacturers, born in Hawick, son of Walter. He joined Dicksons & Laings in 1810 as an apprentice stockingmaker. He entered into a partnership with John Waldie and Peter Wilson in 1815, which later separated, his part eventually becoming Pringle's of Scotland. The firm was based at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent 1815–19. In 1819 he carried on the business on his own in new premises on the Cross Wynd, where the company remained for about 50 years. It was listed as a manufacturer of hosiery there in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. It was known as Robert Pringle & Son for many years, later becoming Pringle of Scotland and being run by the family until his grandson Robert retired in 1940. He was said to be a man of strong individuality and great energy in developing his business. He was on the old Town Council, as well as being a Police Commissioner and on the Parochial Board. He was a member of Hawick Kirk Session and was a Liberal in politics. He was living at 61 High Street in 1841 and had moved to Bridge Street by 1851, when he is listed as employer of 82 men and 8 women. In 1823 he married Charlotte Paterson, and she died in 1873, aged 69. They had 11 children including Walter, who carried on the business. Their other children were: Charlotte (b.1824), who became Mrs. Dykes; Walter (b.1826); Ann (b.1827), who married Peter Williamson; William (b.1829), who became a grocer; Catherine Elizabeth 'Kate' (b.1831), who married Mr. Hoy; Beatrice (b.1833), who became Mrs. Peters; Margaret ('Etta', b.1834), who married Dr. Robert Munro; Robert (b.1836), who became a doctor; Jessie (b.1839); Henry Turnbull (b.1840); Ann; and Esther Scott (b.1844). A portrait exists of him with his wife. He died at 18 Buccleuch Street and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (b.1801) son of Robert and Ann Buckham. He was a frameworkeer in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and by 1861 was listed at No. 13. He married Elizabeth Foyer and their children included: Anne, who married a Gad and then a Kerr; Elizabeth; James; Robert; and George. Robert Bailie (1806–78) son of John and Mary Walker, he was born at Cranston, Midlothian. He was farmer at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish. His brother was Maj.

David of Carriber. In 1838 he married Margaret, youngest daughter of Peter Brown of Rawflat; she died in 1886. Their children included: Margaret; John, farmer at Nisbet, who succeeded to his uncle's lands at Carriber; Robert Brown; David; Mary; and Elizabeth. He is buried in Southdean kirkyard. Robert (1837–1903) son of manufacturer Robert, he became a doctor. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (19th/20th C.) cashier with William Watson & Sons. He received money from the will of Robert Fraser Watson in 1904. Robert (1862–1953) grandson of manufacturer Robert and son of Walter. In 1878 he became an apprentice in the firm his grandfather had founded. He had the villa Woodnorton (originally Craigmure) built for him in Sunnyhill. By 1885 he was a partner, and after the death of his father in 1895. He refocussed the family knitwear business on retail as well as wholesale and ran it until he retired in 1940. In 1887 he married Edith Villiers Price (1866–1944), daughter of Joseph, a successful railway engineer (although also said to have been a soap and candlemaker from Clapham Common), and younger sister of Mrs. Patrick Anderson Laing of Balcary. Their children were: Francis Mary Edith, who married James Chrystal Muir, son of a Glasgow minister; Walter Gerald, who died in WWI. In memory of his only son he incorporated the firm as Robert Pringle & Son Ltd. in 1922. In his old age he moved to live with his grand-daughter Geraldine Simpson at Fetteresso Castle near Stonehaven. Robert butcher in Hawick, son of Robert, who was Acting Father in 1947. He was Cornet in 1965, with his Lass being Catherine Peden (later Johnson). He married Anna Dickey (whose brother Norman was Cornet in 1961) and their son Robert was Cornet in 1994. He was Acting Father in 1989 and Jubilee Cornet in 2015. Robert 'Robbie' son of Robert, he was Cornet in 1994 (with his father being Cornet in 1965). He married his Lass, Lorna Szzoneberg. His Picking Night unusually took place at Cavers. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he had a horse and 4 cows stolen from him at Smailholm by the Olivers of Strange. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Pringles associated with Smailholm. Thomas of Torsonce and that Ilk (d.1566) son of John of Hoppringle. In 1564/5 he was named (along with David Spottiswood of that Ilk) as one of the cautioners of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford in his feud with James Ormiston of that Ilk. He was succeeded by James. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded as factor to the Crumhaugh estate in 1716. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1716 when his servant John Henderson had a child baptised in Kirkton Parish. It is unclear who he was or where he lived. He could be the Thomas in Cavers who witnessed a baptism for 'Wester' James Grieve in Commonsides in 1705. Thomas (b.1720s) perhaps the earliest known Pringle of the knitwear family, he was grandfather of Robert and father of Walter, merchant in Hawick. It is unclear who his own parents were. He lived in the Sandbed area and was possibly a merchant. He was the owner of the family bible that was washed away in the great flood of 1767, but recovered near Kelso. He is believed to have died in a snowstorm. He may have had a half-brother Robert. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for gardener John Turnbull in 1766. His son Walter was born in 1748. Adm. Thomas (d.1804) of the Royal Navy. Son of Walter, who was a prosperous West Indian plantation owner, and grandson of Thomas, W.S. of the Stichill branch. He served during the American War of Independence, as well as in the Napoleonic Wars. He purchased the lands of Weens in 1796 from Robert Nutter Campbell and they were sold by his trustees (to Thomas Cleghorn) after his death. He was listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax in 1797 and was listed on the Carriage Tax Rolls at Weens in 1797/8. He also paid tax there in 1797 for having 4 male servants, when he was 'Colonel Pringle'. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. His son John, a tailor, died in 1805. He may be the Thomas who married Betty Douglas in 1767, and whose children included: Robert (b.1770); James (b.1771); John (b.1773); Robert (again, b.1775), listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1797; Walter (b.1777); Janet (b.1779); and Thomas (b.1781). The witnesses in 1779 were the whole congregation. He is probably the 'Newcastle carrier' who was already deceased when his son Robert died in 1809. He may be the Thomas who is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick as owner of 3 work horses. Thomas (b.c.1790) dyer in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1841 he was listed as a 'Dyer J. Wool' on Dovemount. His wife was Beatrix and their children included Beatrix, William, Thomas, Peter and Janet. Thomas (1789–1834) poet and abolitionist, known as 'the father of South African poetry'. Son of Teviotdale farmer William, he was born in Linton Parish about 4 miles south of Kelso, with his mother being Beatrice Scott from Langholm. He was crippled in infancy and suffered from lameness all his life and he lost his mother at the age of 6. He was educated at Edinburgh University, where his great friend was Robert Story, son of the schoolmaster at Yetholm. He published his first poetry collection in 1817, with poems such as 'The Scenes of Teviotdale' popular locally. He was also the first editor of the 'Edinburgh Monthly Magazine', which would become Blackwood's Magazine. He also edited 'The Liberal Star' and 'Constable's Monthly Magazine' and worked at Register House. He befriended Sir Walter Scott, who helped him secure free passage in a resettlement programme to South Africa. In 1820 he emigrated to Grahamstown, moving to Cape Town, where he founded a school and a newspaper, but was forced to leave in 1826 because of his fight against slavery and his promotion of free speech. He wrote a description of the state of slavery in the Cape and published it in Britain in the New Monthly Magazine. Back in Britain he became Secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society, working for the Committee for his last 7 years. He encouraged former slave Mary Prince to write her autobiography, and also was advocate and protector of several other people of African origin. He also assisted in arrangements for the celebration of the emancipation of slaves from the British Colonies in 1834, a few months before his death. His sister Jessie married Hawick man William Ainslie, and he visited family in Hawick several times, after one occasion writing the poem 'The Emigrant's Farewell'. The Museum has (or at least had) an original letter of his and Robert Murray read a paper about him to the Archaeological Society in the 1860s. He published 'African Sketches' and books of verse, such as 'Ephemerides'. He died from tuberculosis at the age of 45. He was buried in Burnhill Fields, but in 1970 his remains were re-interred in South Africa. Thomas Kedie (b.1822) son of merchant John and Ann Kedie. He was listed as a grocer on Market Place in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1844 he married Lucille Kennedy, sister of William Norman Kennedy and half-sister of bookseller J.D. Kennedy. Their children were: Angelique Lucille (b.1846), who became a nurse; Janet Kedie (b.1848); Elizabeth Hamer (b.1850); John Douglas (b.1852); James Robert (b.1854); Douglas; Jessie, who married James Lindsay; Maggie; and Robert. Walter (17th/18th C.) proprietor of the Roughheugh Waulk Mill in the early 1700s. In 1713 the Bailies heard a case of assault brought against his servitor John Kerr. He is referred to in the Hawick Session records of 1723 as 'Walker, Roughheugh', when he was employer of William Hood, and paid his fine for adultery. Given the name, occupation and location, it is not inconceivable that he was an ancestor of the manufacturing Pringles. He is probably the Walter, who married Helen 'Ourd', and whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included: Elspeth (b.1714); William (b.1715); Margaret (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); and Henry (b.1720). Walter (b.1748) son of Thomas and father of manufacturer Robert. He was a merchant in the Sandbed. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He is probably the tailor who was one of the witnesses to a baptism for Thomas Miller in 1781. He is probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms for merchant John Renwick in 1797 and 1799. In 1773 he married Betty Heiton (or Hutton), who came from an old Darnick family. Their wedding proclamation is recorded in Melrose, with Andrew Riddell as cautioner. They had 7 children, including: Betty (b.1775); Robert (b.1776), who must have died young; John (b.1778), a merchant; Robert (1780–82); James (b.1783); Thomas (b.1785); and Walter (b.1787). In 1793 he secondly married Anny Scott (related to the Brieryyards Scotts) and had at least 5 more children: Beatrice (b.1794), who died in infancy; Robert (b.1795), who founded Pringle of Scotland; Jennie or Janet (1797–1858); Andrew (b.1799); and James. Walter (1826–1895) eldest son of Robert. He began as an apprentice in his father's Cross Wynd factory in 1842, and when he was finished in 1846, the firm was renamed 'Robert Pringle & Son'. He eventually ran the family hosiery business, further developing it after the death of his father, the founder. In the 1850s he developed the 'intarsia' of producing Argyle-style sock patterns. In 1868 he moved the main premises to Walter's Wynd. He was a Town Councillor for many years and also served as a Magistrate. In politics he was a staunch Liberal. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He gifted communion silverware to the Parish Church. In 1860 he married Mary Sutton and she died in 1870, aged 35. They had 3 children: John Clement, who died in infancy; Robert, who succeeded to the family business; and Mary Charlotte (b.1864), who married William Charles Johnston. He later married Mary, daughter of Dr. John Douglas, and she died in 1915, aged 72. The children by his second marriage were: Jane Aitchison, who married T.J. Finlay; Catherine Ann ('Cathy'), who married George Crosfield Glenny; and John Douglas, who married Marie Anne Martin, and became a partner in the family firm. He lived at Langlands in Sunnyhill, which he had built for him, starting a trend for other manufacturers to build villas nearby. In about 1874 he was recorded owning part of the 'particate lands' of Hawick, which had earlier been owned by William Scott 'at Flex'. He is said to not have been of very strong constitution. Along with several other members of the family, he is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery.

Walter Gerald (1893–1917) only son of Robert Pringle, the last member of the family to run the famous knitwear company. He was home-schooled by a tutor and started his apprenticeship in 1910, being groomed to eventually take over the firm when war broke out. In his youth he was a member of the Boy Scouts. Before WWI he was Captain of the Hawick Motor Cycling Club (riding with Jimmie Guthrie, his cousin Joe Laing and others). He enlisted into the Lothian and Border Horse in 1915 and served as a motorcycle dispatch rider. After returning to Britain to obtain his commission, he became 2nd Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B. and was killed at Passchendaele. There is a plaque to his memory in Wilton Church, with a representation of him by sculptor Newbury Abbot Trent. William (15th C.) probably son of David. He was Constable of Cessford Castle and appointed the 1st Range of the Ward of Tweed. He could have been the 'Wil Pringil' who was on the 1464/5 panel for ruling on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was Constable of Cessford Castle when he witnessed a sasine for Cessford in 1467. He is probably the William who witnessed a document between Henry Wardlaw and the Kers of Cessford in 1468 and another for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk in 1468. It seems likely he is the William mentioned in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville in 1476. He is probably the William who was a bailie appointed by Alexander, Lord Home, to infest Andrew Ker in the lands of Crailing and Hownam in 1484. He may be the William who was recorded along with David on a document relating to Ruecastle in 1491. Also in 1491 he was 'Wil. Hoppringle de Cesfurd' when he had a charter for lands in Peeblesshire. He was probably succeeded by his son Andrew. William (d.1513) younger son of James of Smailholm. His mother was Isabella Muray of Falahill. He had a tack for Caddonlee in 1488 and another along with his son George for Torwoodlee in 1509. In 1509 he also held one quarter of Clifton. He was a witness to the sasine of Queen Margaret of England for lands in Ettrick Forest in 1503. He had sons: George, who succeeded; and David, whose son George was a tutor of Torwoodlee in 1581. He was killed at Flodden. William 'Will' (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme and Buccleuch. It is unclear where he was from, although he is listed along with men from the Jedburgh area and Berwickshire. His name is recorded as 'Ville Hoppringill'. William of Torwoodlee (d.1581) son of George. In 1571 he subscribed to the General Band to rise against Kerr of Ferniehirst and the thieves of Liddesdale and Eskdale. In 1575 he was directed to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He married Agnes (or Alison), daughter of James Heriot of Trabrown in 1571 and was succeeded by his son George. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1720 he married Mary Hutchison, the marriage being proclaimed in Robertson, but taking place at Eskdalemuir. He is probably the William who was at Howpasley in 1721 and 1723, Philhopeshiel in 1726 and Philhope in 1732 and 1737. His children included: Jean (b.1721); Helen (b.1723); Margaret (b.1726); an unnamed child (b.1728); William (b.1730); an unnamed son (b.1732); John (b.1734); and Janet (b.1737). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1761, 1765 and 1767. He may have been brother to John, who was also living at Howpasley. He is probably the William who married Jean Robson in Robertson in 1758. His children probably included Adam (b.1759), William (b.1761), Robert (b.1765) and John (b.1767). He could be the William 'in Shaws formerly herd of Dum Fedlain in Howpasley' who was accused by David Park in 1793 of 'losing ten sheep without explanation'; it is unclear what 'Dum Fedlain' may refer to. William (d.1811) tenant farmer at Hislop. He had 2 sons by his first marriage, Adam and Robert. His second wife was Elizabeth Wilson, this perhaps being the marriage with 'B. Wilson' (probably Betty) taking place in Robertson in 1789. After his death, there was a court case involving a pre-nuptial contract, the argument hinging on whether it was legal for her to have had her hand led to sign something when she could neither write her name nor read the contents. William (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Bedrule and Fulton. He was listed as tenant at Bedrule in the 1797 Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. He is recorded at Bedrule in 1797, when he owned 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was tenant in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was presumably the 'Mr Pringle' whose 2 servants and 'Barnman' were listed on the 1801 Militia ballot. He opened a quarry on his farm at Bedrule, and started a limeworks, from which he also supplied some neighbouring farms. He was tenant at Bedrule and Fulton until 1826, being succeeded by Mr. Haliburton and then shortly afterwards by Robert Brodie. He could be the William, married to Hannah, whose son Robert was baptised in 1801 in Byrness. William (b.1790/1) born in Robertson Parish, he was an agricultural labourer at Phaup in Cavers Parish in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was listed as shepherd at Phaup. His wife was Jean (from Dumfriesshire) and their children included Janet, Adam, David, Andrew, James and Margaret. William (b.1791/2) shepherd at Woolhope in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was shepherd at 'Stinchelburnfoot'. He married Janet Crozier and their children included Isabella, William, James and Adam. William (b.c.1793) frame-smith of the Back Row, listed there in 1841. His son was Alexander. He is listed along with labourer Robert as a joint-tenant in the 1837 electoral roll. Another household on the Back Row in 1841, consisting of Robert, William (also a frame-smith) and James, could be his father, son and grandson. William (b.1805/6) originally from Lilliesleaf, he was farmer at Newstead in Wilton Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 20 acres, employing 1 girl. In 1836 he married Janet, daughter of Thomas Cranston and Agnes Smail. Their children included Jessie. William (b.c.1810) mason at Billingburn near Chesters in the 1841 census. In 1851 he was still living in his father's house on Bridge Stree. His wife was Mary and their children included Robert, George, Margaret and Jane. William (b.1829) son of Robert and Charlotte Paterson. He set up a grocery business in Hawick. William Elliot (b.1833) son of William and Janet Crozier, he was born in Castleton Parish. His father was shepherd at Woolhope. He was a shepherd, being listed at Toftsholm in 1861. He married Christina

Douglas Elliot (daughter of James Elliot and Helen Douglas), and she is listed as 'Christopher' on one census transcript. Their children were: William (b.1858), who moved to the Durham area; James Elliot (b.1859), also moved to Durham; Walter Douglas Elliot (b.1864), who died young; and Helen Douglas (b.1869), who married Thomas Hall and lived in Northumberland (formerly spelled 'Pringil', 'Pringile', 'Pringill', 'Pringyl', 'Pringyle', 'Pringyll', 'Pryngil', 'Pryngill' and variants, and synonymously as 'Hoppringle', 'Hoppringill', etc. in earlier centuries).

the Pringle Bible (thu-pring-ul-bī-bul) n. old family bible of the local Pringle family. It was apparently found on the banks of the Tweed near Kelso following the Hawick flood of 1767! The book was later returned to the family. It bears the inscription: 'Who ought this book if ye would knowe I will show you by letters 2, the first is T, a letter bright, the 2 is P in all men's sight, and if you chance should to read amiss look underneath and there it is – Thomas Pringle'.

the Pringle Hall (thu-pring-ul-hal) n. extension added to the Burns Club in 1963, named after Alexander Pringle, club treasurer for 37 years.

Pringle-Pattison (pring-ul-paw'-ee-sin) n. Andrew Seth (1856–1931) son of Smith Kinmont Seth and Margaret Little. He was educated at Edinburgh University and in Germany. In 1880 he was appointed assistant to the Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in Edinburgh and became Balfour Professor of Philosophy himself in 1883. He moved to Cardiff before returning to Scotland in 1887 to be Professor of Logic, Rhetoric and Metaphysics at St. Andrews University, then was Professor of Logic and Metaphysics at Edinburgh University 1891–1919. In 1898 he changed his surname in order to inherit the titles of Pringle of Haining from Margaret Violet Pringle, wife of Archibald Douglas of Adderstone, to whom he was distantly related. He married Eva, daughter of Albrecht Stropp; they had 2 daughters and 3 sons. He died at the Haining and is buried in Morningside Cemetery.

Pringle's (pring-ulz) n. Pringle of Scotland, founded as a hosiery firm by Robert Pringle in 1815, in partnership with John Waldie and Peter Wilson, at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent. Pringle went on his own from 1819, moving to the Cross Wynd (opposite Allars Kirk) and manufacturing underwear from 1827, with the introduction of the 'broad frame'. The name was changed to 'Robert Pringle & Son', when Walter completed his apprenticeship in 1846. The 'Intarsia' method of producing Argyle-patterned socks was introduced in the 1850s. The firm purchased John Nixon & Sons mill on Walter's Wynd in 1868 (or 1869), renaming it 'Rodono'. Robert Pringle (grandson of the founder) was made a partner in 1885. The company then started to focus on retail as well as wholesale. The firm first made spun silk underwear (and in colour) in 1892, and introduced seamless gore for ladies underwear in 1895. About 1905 it became one of the first firms to introduce knitted outerwear. Douglas Pringle joined his brother Robert as a partner in 1897, and J. Boyd Sime became another partner in 1906. The knitted coat department was started in 1910. Herbert Benyon Johnstone joined in 1919. In 1922 it became incorporated as a private company, Robert Pringle & Son Ltd. Pure silk stockings ('Prinseta') were started in 1927. Sime resigned in 1929, with John Turnbull becoming Managing Director. 'Rodono splash-proof' silk stockings and 'Slimfit' underwear were being made from 1931. Arthur Oddy and Wullie Mactaggart became joint Directors in 1932 and became Managing Directors following Turnbull's resignation a year later. In 1933 cashmere was added, and designer Otto Weisz joined in 1934, becoming a Director in 1937. He was responsible for the name 'twinset' and for making the style the company's own from the mid-1940s. A.G. Chaston was also made a Director in 1934 and George Mitchell in 1937. The lion rampant first appeared on garment labels in 1934. In 1940 the ladies' blouse department started in Hawick, 'Pringle Johnston Imports' was formed to handle the U.S. market, and Robert Pringle retired that same year. The firm manufactured utility outerwear for the forces in WWII, and stopped making underwear in 1965. A 5 year lease was taken on Weensland Mill in 1946 and the Kelso factory opened, with the Berwick factory following 2 years later. The blouse department closed in 1950, but the Burnfoot factory opened and Rodono Mill was extended 3 times in the 1950s. Automatic rob transfer was introduced in 1955, with intarsia and men's outerwear starting about the same time. It received the Royal Warrant from the Queen Mother in 1948, was appointed to the Queen in 1956 and received the Queen's Award to Industry for Export Achievement in 1965 (further awards followed in 1970, 1979 and 1983). The name was changed to 'Pringle of Scotland Ltd.' in 1958 and became a public company in 1960. The underwear department finally closed in 1961. The company purchased Glebe Mills in 1962 and started making men's knitwear there a year later. They sponsored a professional golf tournament in 1964 and signed a deal with golfer Nick Faldo in 1981 (ending in 2001), with the Faldo Collection of leisurewear launched in 1989. The company was acquired by Dawson International in 1967 for £5.8 million. There were further extensions to Rodono and Glebe Mills in 1968 and new factories were opened in Earlstoun, Cumbernauld and Livingston. In 1970 Alan Smith of Dawson succeeded Wullie Mactaggart as Chairman. Rodono was closed in 1976 and demolished in 1980/1, but a new factory was opened in Arbroath in 1985. Princess Anne visited Glebe Mills in 1988 and a Gold Award for Outstanding Export Achievement was awarded in 1993. However, the stores were converted into franchises in 1995, and the workforce was substantially reduced 1997–98. It was and purchased by the Fang Brothers in 2000, with Kim Winsor as the new C.E.O., and the Diffusion line being introduced. Princess Anne opened a flagship shop on Bond Street in 2002. Women's fashions were shown in London in 2002 and mens's fashions in Milan in 2003. Teries meanwhile complained that the company had lost its focus. Glebe Mills continued to operate until 2008 and the company retain an office and shop on Victoria Road. Records relating to the firm, covering the period 1922–76 are listed on the National Register of Archives and a book 'Pringle of Scotland and the Hawick Knitwear Story' (2006) was written by Hugh Barty-King – 'Hei's a Pringle-ite since hei left schill an plenty o support hei'll get frae the mill' [GM].

Pringle's Temperance Hotel (pring-ulz-tem-prins-hō-tel) n. one of the last temperance hotels in Hawick, situated on Union Street in the early 20th century. This may be the same as the house on the corner at 32 North Bridge Street, later Gladstone's factory.

Pringle Street (pring-ul-stree) n. lost street name, originally given to the west part of Wellington Road, built around 1877 and named after David Pringle, but discarded in 1892.

prinkel (pring-kul) v., arch., poet. to prick, tingle, have goosebumps – '... An' mony bats flew silent roon' My prinklin' heid' [WP], n., arch. a tingling sensation, prickles (usually plural).

prinkelt (pring-kul', -kult) pp., arch., poet.
prickled, tingled – ‘My love was ardent aye an’

prinkly (pring-ku-lee) adj., arch. prickly, tingly
– ‘A prickly feeling’ [GW].

Printer’s Close (prin’-urz-klōs) n. close off Silver Street, near the foot of the Howegate. It is unclear who the printer was.

the Printer’s Well (thu-prin’-urz-wel) n. former public water supply at the corner of the Howegate and Silver Street. It was originally on the opposite side of the street beside John Waldy’s House, and hence also sometimes known as ‘Waldy’s Well’. It was part of the town’s water supply, and tended to be used when the wells further up went dry (also written as ‘Printers’).

printit (prin’-ee) pp. printed (note the double glottal stop).

prising (prI-zin) n., arch. an appraisal, assigning of a value – ‘... that passit upon the prising of the saidis landis’ [SB1500].

prisoners o war (pri-zi-nurz-ō-wawr) n., pl.
prisoners of various wars have been a common sight in and around Hawick. During the Napoleonic wars, 1812–14, about 120 French, German and Polish officers were sent to Hawick and allowed to move about freely with certain restrictions (the privates were largely kept in Penicuik, and there were also officers in Selkirk and Jedburgh). It was said that the influx of prisoners made the Town considerably richer in this period. William Nixon acted as paymaster or commissary for them and their headquarters was at Slitrig Bank, but they were boarded in private houses throughout Hawick. There was also a base across the river on Slitrig Crescent, in what was once the Red Cross building. Several officers stayed in the old house at 44 High Street, as seen in a painting of the time. 15 of them became members of Lodge 111. They were allowed to walk within 1 mile of the Tower Knowe in any direction, and met every morning at the Spetch for roll call. Some of them (including M. Prefort) painted local landscapes, which still exist, and some created other items that are now in the Museum, such as a carved ivory guillotine, a carved snuff-box and a home-made pair of men’s body stays. In late 1813 Francois Senebien wrote (in French) to the Duke of Buccleuch, asking for help in being freed on compassionate and health grounds. In any case, all of these prisoners were released in June 1814 after the allied troops took

Paris, with the men boarding ship at Leith. It is said that the presence of all the well-dressed French officers changed the sense of fashion in the Town. There is a farewell letter of thanks to James Elliot of Goldielands, from Lieut. G. de Tallard, thanking the Elliot family for their hospitality.
One of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson’s sisters married a prisoner (traditionally said to be a Bonaparte!), while another sister (Jane) had a child to one, named Cabourne. Additionally, Ann Ekron lived with an ensign called Adam (or perhaps Auguste) Bellom, having a daughter Adelina, while Lieut.
Frederick Diener had a son Frederick William Diener with Hawick woman Willhelmina Paisley. In 1816 the deaths of ‘Nelly Jardine and Frenchmans Bastard Child’ are recorded in Hawick. A century later there were as many as 6,000 German prisoners of war based at Stobs in WWI, living in 200 wooden huts below Winnington Rig farm.
They were mainly civilian detainees in the first few months of the War, and it became purely a military camp at the end. Prisoners included the crews of the battleships ‘Gneisenau’, ‘Leipzig’, ‘Torpedo’ and ‘Blücher’. Conditions in the camp seem to have been among the best in Britain.
Prisoners worked on local farms and built a sewage works for the Camp. The last prisoners were released in early 1919. The Museum has a model ship and a ship in a bottle from this period, and also copies of the newspaper produced by the Germans, ‘Stobsiad’. 45 prisoners were buried in the Camp cemetery, with their remains transferred to Cannock Chase Cemetery in 1962. During WWII there were a small number of Polish and German prisoners located at Stobs. There were about 30 prisoners there towards the end of the War, staying until January 1947, although with minimum security in the last months. German and Italian prisoners were also located in Nissen huts where the Police Station and Katharine Elliot Centre were later built.

probationer (prō-bā-shi-nur) n. a student minister, usually between being licensed and being ordained – ‘... before these witnesses Mr Thomas Hume probationer and James Robson Taylor in ye paroch of Robertoun’ [PR1713].

the Probus Club (thu-prō-bis-klub) n. local club for retired professional businessmen, which meets every second Thursday morning for a talk and refreshments. Local clubs are connected with the international Probus organisation (founded 1966), but run autonomously, while being supported by the local Rotary club. The Hawick Club was formed in 1976.

the Procession (thu-pro-se-shin) n. any of the parades associated with the Common Riding, particularly the parade of bands, officials and horses along the High Street on the Friday morning. At the end of the 19th century the route was from the Tower to the Sandbed, then up Wilton Path, Princes Street, Bridge Street, Union Street, then a pause while the Cornet and followers went to the Bogliebarns, after which it proceeded along the High Street and up the Howegate and Loan to the Chase. The Procession is preceded by the walk from the Town Hall after the Cornet has picked up the Flag, with the other Principals, Provost, Bailies and guests walking in procession to the Tower for the singing of the Auld Sang. The Procession includes cars (carriages in former times) containing Councillors and Committee Members, plus the Cornet and mounted supporters and the bands. The modern event starts at 8.45 a.m., with the Halberdiers leading the Provost's motorcade, with the Lasses' car in the rear. Then comes the Drums and Fifes leading the Cornet and Principals (who emerge from the Tower pend), with the mounted supporters falling in behind, in the order of ex-Cornets, then ex-Acting Fathers, then visiting principals, then the rest. The route goes via the Sandbed, up Wilton Path, along Princes Street to Dovemount, then back along Bridge Street. At the Horse the Saxhorn Band join, and lead the Procession up the Loan.

the Proclamation (thu-pro-kla-mā-shin) n. the official announcement made on the Thursday by the Burgh Officer charging the Burgesses to ride the marches. Once this would have been made at the Mercat Cross, and later from the 'Oyes door' in the old Town House, but now it is done from the Town Hall Balcony immediately after the Colour Bussing. The Saxhorn Band provide the fanfare for the Big Fower and the Halberdier appearing outside the Town Hall, this being the first time the townsfolk have seen the bussed Flag. The text of the announcement is: 'These are to give advertisements to all burgesses within the Burgh and Town of Hawick, and burgesses outwith the same, that the Provost, Bailies and Council are to ride the marches of the Commonty of Hawick upon Friday the ... day of June instant as hath ever been usual. Therefore warning all the said burgesses to attend that day in their best apparel to the end aforesaid'. The text is essentially unchanged since being recorded in 1733. Afterwards the Cornet waves the Flag and it is left on display. The Lasses and Maids of Honour then usually appear from the balconies and the bands and halberdiers lead the Cornet and his followers in the Cornet's Walk. A second Proclamation is made at the Mill Path on the Friday afternoon, stating that the marches have been duly ridden: 'For as much as the Provost, Bailies and Council of the burgh of Hawick, with the burgesses of the said burgh, have this day ridden the marches of the Commonty of Hawick, as has been in use yearly since time immemorial, without interruption or molestation of any sort; therefore, if any nobleman, gentleman, or others, having lands lying contiguous or adjacent to the said Commonty, shall find themselves leized or prejudiced in any sort by this day's marching, they are hereby required to state their objections thereto to the Provost, Bailies and Council of the said burgh within forty days from this date otherwise they shall be held to have acquiesced in the said marching'. The Proclamations were properly incorporated into the Common Riding ceremonies in 1900. In the early 2000s they were replaced with versions using the Hawick vernacular. Before the Division of the Common a proclamation was made at the Mercat Cross on Common Riding Friday, stating which parts of the Common were to be used for cutting turf etc. in the coming year.

Proctor (prok-tur) n. Rev. James (1826–60) probably born at Dalkeith. He started as an apprentice tailor, then switched to carpentry. He also became a strong advocate for Teetotalism, joining the British League of Junior Abstainers. He attended Edinburgh University and became a missionary under Rev. William Reid of Edinburgh. His health prevented him from completing the arduous course with the United Presbyterians, so he entered the Congregational Church. He was inducted to Hawick Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk in 1857, but resigned the following year due to ill-health (and perhaps partly because of disputes among the congregation about remaining out of the Congregational Union, with which he had been involved). He became minister at Hamilton Congregational Church, but again his health cut this appointment short. He married Janet Chisholm and they had 1 child, but she died giving birth to a second. He wrote 'A Crack about the Drink; or, a Poetical Dialogue between a Total Abstinence and a Moderate Drinker' (1949). He also wrote poetry and hymns.

procurator fiscal (pro-kew-rā’-ur-fis-kul) n. in Scottish law a public officer, appointed by the Lord Advocate, who prosecutes in petty criminal cases and also conducts investigations into sudden or suspicious deaths. provost (pro-vist) n. Scottish version of mayor, being chief magistrate, chairman of the town council and civic head (from Old English).

the Provost (thu-pro-vist) n. Hawick’s first Provost was George Wilson in 1861 after the council was reconstituted following the Police and Improvement Act of that year. The normal term of office is 3 years. After Reorganisation in 1975, it was decided to continue to appoint a local Councillor to perform the ceremonial role. The title used was Ex-Provost, while the old Provost (Atkinson) continued, then the new incumbent was named Honorary Provost. The duties of the current Honorary Provost include chairing the Provost’s Council, acting as civic head during the Common Riding, selecting the Common Riding Chief Guest and representing Hawick as civic head at Common Ridings and similar ceremonies in neighbouring towns. The following is the full list: George Wilson 1861–68; George Hardie Fraser 1868–71; John Nichol 1871–74; Edward Wilson 1874–75; Robert Ewen 1875–78; Robert Fraser Watson 1878–87; Robert Milligan 1887–90; the Provost's Breakfast (thu-pro-vists-brek-fist) n. ceremonial breakfast taking place traditionally in the Town Hall on the Friday morning of the Common Riding, and including the Magistrates, Councillors and other invited guests. The event was inaugurated by Provost Watson in 1885 at his home at Wilton Bank, and held in the Council Chambers from 1888. Unlike most other events, speeches are prohibited. The Cornet and his guests breakfast separately, formerly in the Tower Inn.

the Provost's Chain (thu-pro-vists-chān) n. chain of office of the Hawick Provost, first worn by Provost Melrose in 1906 along with the ceremonial robe. It was purchased through public subscription, initiated by the Callants' Club. The design is in the 'renaissance' style, in 15 carat gold, weighing about 30 ounces. It consists of 30 parts linked together, 14 of which are shields for the names of Provosts, 8 are thistles with the motto 'Nemo me impune lacesset' and the last 8 are circular wreaths of oak leaves bearing an ornamental 'H' and mural coronets with the sword and scales of justice. The monogram of the Provost forms the back link of the collar, while the badge of the Callants' Club in enamel forms the front link. The badge that hangs from the chain measures 4½ by 3 inches and is an enamel version of the Burgh Arms. The design and manufacture were by Brock & Son, goldsmiths of Edinburgh. The Chain was in regular use until 1974, when it disappeared during the Common Riding Ball. Worth an estimated £7,000 at the time, its disappearance was a great mystery. The Callants' Club presented a replacement chain in 1979. However, the original was sent anonymously to the Provost in 2002.

the Provost's Council (thu-pro-vists-koon-sul) n. Hawick Honorary Provost's Council, a group consisting of a number of local councillors with sepecific duties during the Common Riding. This body officially invite a young man to be Cornet each year, and its main objective is to fulfil Hawick's civic functions and ceremonies. It was formerly a sub-committee of the Town Council, but after Reorganisation became an honorary body, consisting of the regional (8 members) and community councillors (4 members) from the Hawick wards, who elect the Honorary Provost and 4 Honorary Bailies from among themselves.

the Provost's Lamp (thu-pro-vists-lawmp) n. an ornamental lamp which used to be mounted outside the Provost's house during his term of office, and at one time would be alight as a sign that he was at home. The first Provost who had the lamp was Robert Fraser Watson in 1882. Since Reorganisation it has been kept inside the Town Hall. Flags were also flown outside the Provost's house since at least 1888.

the Provost's Room (thu-pro-vists-room) n. an upstairs chamber in the Town Hall, formerly used by the Provost and containing a complete set of photographs of Hawick's Provosts.

the Provost's Tent (thu-pro-vists-ten) n. refreshment tent in the centre of the racecourse at the Mair, where the Provost and councillors entertain their guests, a tradition started by Provost Renwick in the 1920s.

Prowett (prow-i) n. William (b.c.1790) from England, he was a framesmith in Hawick. He who was involved in 1830 with an improvement whereby old frames could be made wider for producing shirts and undergarments rather than just hosiery. He was listed as a framesmith on O'Connell Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living on O'Connell Street (labelled 'Prowat's backhouse') with his wife Mary and children Mary, John and Ann. By 1851 his wife was a widow, listed as a lodging house keeper. William (b.1821/2) born in Traqueer, Kirkcudbright, he was son of William and continued his father's framesmith business. In 1851 he was at 2 O'Connell Street (perhaps the modern No. 11). His wife was Sarah Anne and their children included Mary Jane, William Henry and John Dodd.

prowsie (prow-see) adj., arch. particular in dress or in work (also 'prossie'; noted by J. Jamieson).

the Pru (thu-proo) n. popular short form for the Prudential Life Assurance Company, in Hawick referring to the building by the 'coffin end' at the prieve (prīv) v., arch. to prove.

the P.S.A. (thu-pee-es-ā) n. organisation formed locally in 1910 to provide activities for the male youth of Hawick. The idea started in the Midlands of England in 1875, to provide non-denominational Sunday afternoon meetings to encourage young men away from public houses, the ‘Pleasant Sunday Afternoon’ brotherhood. A P.S.A. club started in Hawick in the 1890s, but that floundered and it was more firmly established in 1910. This was partly instigated by Hawick’s Rev. William Ainslie, making inquiries about the Birmingham-based movement. Originally the Hawick club had a connection with the Congregational Kirk, but soon became an autonomous organisation. The club organised indoor games and other activities for young men. In particular it has a ‘semi-junior’ rugby team, for 16 to 18 year olds, founded in 1919 by D. Paterson, D. Stavert and Bailie A.J. Hislop. This makes them the oldest semi-junior rugby team in Scotland. The male voice choir was formed in 1932, with first conductor being William Elliot and first accompanist Robert Little. The clubrooms were on Teviot Crescent, providing indoor games facilities for boys from the age of 12. It was run by volunteers, basically providing a boys ‘youth club’, before local authorities thought about such things. The clubrooms had 7 billiard tables, carpet bowls and table tennis. The club also had a cricket team, a drama group and an orchestra at one time, and held an annual New Year’s bowling tournament. When the clubrooms closed in 1961 the building was acquired by Barrie’s knitwear and later demolished to make way for a supermarket. The rugby team and choir survive to this day (the choir being the only remaining P.S.A. choir in Britain). They were the first local junior rugby team to have their own pitch, acquiring some waste ground at Burnfoot in 1958, and building facilities there in 1960. The team is nicknamed ‘the Peekees’, and plays in navy blue shirts with a gold hoop and navy socks with gold tops. Highlights include winning the Scottish Youth Championship in 1986/87 and again in 2003/04. In 2016 the rugby team effectively merged with the Wanderers, with the teams training together and swapping roles as ‘A’ and ‘B’ teams in alternating years. Minute books and team photographs exist from 1919, and a booklet ‘Memories of a

the P.S.A. Choir (thu-pee-es-ā-kwIr) n. male-voice choir associated with the ‘Pleasant Sunday Afternoon’ club. The choir was set up in 1932. The first conductor was William Elliot and the first accompanist was Robert Little (both men being organists in the Congregational Kirk). Later conductors included Bert Hutchison, Albert Budge, Eric Whitehead, W.R. Smith, Jeff Panes, John Leishman, Basil Deane, Ian Seeley, Susan Booth, Isaac MacRae and Ann Witherington. Accompanists have included Robert Little, Adam Ingles, A. Whitelaw, Agnes Young, Peggy Hunter, Nan Ellis, Brian Bonsor, Betty Scott, George Duthie and Linden Warburton. The choir has performed over the years with the Hawick Drama Club, Hawick Orchestral Society and the Saxhorn Band. During the war they performed concerts to raise money for the Red Cross. They have sung with many special guests, including Dame Isobel Baillie. They hold an annual dinner in November.

pu (poo) v., arch. to pull – ‘...The pith o’ ideas pu’d a hauf-crack’t brain frae’ [JoHa], ‘The guidman he pu’d doon the gun frae her staund ...’ [JoHa], ‘But O, should some wild goat the daisy pu’ ...’ [WiSp], ‘Pu’ me, we wull rin efter thee ...’ [HSR], ‘Or how wult thou say til thy brother, Let me pu’ out the motte out o’ thine ee’ [HSR], ‘When flowers o’ life ye fain wad pu’ ...’ [WP], ‘And pu’ed the sprigs o’ heather bloom Frae aff her braes sae green’ [JSE], n., arch. a pull (sometimes written ‘pu’); pul is more common locally).

public hoose (pub-leek-hoos) n. a pub – ‘Even the Colour-Bussin’ was held in a public-hoose!’ [BW1939].

publick (pub-leek) adv., arch. openly, publicly – ‘Robt. Tynline, weiver, fyned tenn pund, Scotts, for publick, in face of the whole incorporation of weivers ...’ [BR1697].

pubs (pups) n., pl. public houses, establishments where alcoholic beverages are served. Hawick has had (at least) its fair share of these over the years, and they have formed a central part of the social and political life of the town. In earlier times there were many licensed establishments in some back room, known only by the name of the proprietor. In the year 1838/9 the number of licenses granted to inn-keepers, grocers and others in Hawick Parish was 53, with the vast majority undoubtedly in the Town itself. An incomplete list, including some popular names as well as official names, but excluding hotels and private clubs, is: the Albion Bar; the Athole Bar; the Balmoral; Barclay's; the Black Bull; Blondette's; the Blue Anchor; the Blue Bell; Bogart's; the Bridge Bar; the Britannia Airms; the British Public Hoose; the Buck Inn; the Bull & Butcher; Burnfit Roadhoose; the Burns Inn; Callaghan's; the Cannon Inn; Clinty's; the Coach an Horses; the Commercial Inn; the Cross Keys; Dalton's; Diesel's; the Douglas Airms; the Drop Inn; the Drumlanrig Bar; the Ewe an Lamb; the Exchange; the Ex-Pat; the Fiddle Inn; the Fleece Inn; Frankie's; Gentie's; the Glencairn Bar; the Golden Fleece; the Grapes; the Gretel; the Half-Moon Hotel; the Hare an Hoonds; the Harrow Inn; the High Level; Holland Hoose; the Imperial; the Inn Place; the Irish Harp; Jock Reid's; the Kazba, the King's Heid; the Mansfield Bar; the Mayfield Bar; the Melgund; the Monkeys; the Nag's Heid; the No. 10; the Oak Trei; the Office; the Ordnance Airms; the Pick Inn; the Plough Inn; the Punch Bowl; the Queen's Heid; the Railway Hotel; Robbie's; the Royal; the Royal Oak; the Salmon Inn; Scrumz; the Somewhere Else; the Stag's Heid; Stampers; the Station; St. Leonard's Vaults; the Swan Inn; the Teribus Airms; Thorterdykes; the Trinity Bar; the Trough Inn; the Union Inn; the Waverley; the West End Bar; the White Hart; the White Swan; the Wulton Bar – 'The pubs are bad – but clubs are worse, the people all did cry, Suppress the clubs, they're worse than pubs, they sell drink on the sly' [JCG].

puddin (pu-din, pu-dn, poo-din) n. sausage meat pudding, e.g. 'white puddin' – 'They'll hae oor puddens oot by turns, We'll get oor paiks! A' owre-the-heid o' Rabbie Burns, Yon king o' raiks!' [DH], 'For puddins black and white, Which were a sheer delight, Even the nuns came up fri St. Margaret's Home' [IWL].

Puddinburn (pu-din-burn) n. Puddingburn, a former tower and settlement off the Hermitage Water in Castleton Parish, perhaps close to the modern Paddington Sike. It could be the earthwork near the confluence of Paddington Sike with the Hermitage Water. It may be the 'Pantodene' listed on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, valued at 8 shillings and with tenant William Elliot. An English letter of 1584 mentions 'the Armstronges of Tinnes alias Puddyborne'; this makes it clear that at that time the Armstrongs of Tinnis and of Puddingburn were one and the same; this may suggest that Puddingburn was close to (or another name for) the Tinnis Burn, and not near Paddington Sike at all, or else simply that the Armstrongs of Tinnis also had a seat at Puddingburn. 'Sim of Puddinge burne' is mentioned in an English letter of 1600. It is probably the place transcribed as 'Podotoun' among the possessions of Francis Beattie in 1632. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch the former farmstead was combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads. This was once a stronghold of the Armstrongs and mentioned in the ballad 'Dick o the Cow'. A note in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784) records that the farm was then on the lands of Reidmoss (even though that lies far to the south), with the old farmhouse converted into a sheepfold – 'Then Dickie's come on for Pudding-burn, Fala, &c. E'en as fast as he might drie. – Now Dickie's come on for Puddingburn, Where there were thirty Armstrongs and three. Fala, &c.' [CPM]. The poem also contains a reference to a habit of the Armstrongs that you would get no dinner if you failed to come when first summoned – 'Then it was the use of Puddingburn, Fala, &c. And the house of Mangerton, all haill, These that came na at the first ca' They got nae mair meat t' the neist meal' [CPM] (labelled 'Paddowdemi' on Blaeu's 1654 map, it is possible it is the 'Potterlampport' on Sandison's c.1590 map and it is 'Paddiden' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; see also Paddington Sike).

puddle (pu-dul) v., arch. to muddle along, mess about, work ones feet up and down – '...How still the puddlin' feetie lie, the buffy hands at rest!' [JT].

pud-dow (pud-dow) n., arch. a pigeon – 'Pud-dow, A pigeon, Teviotd.; probably used as a fondling term, like Pud by itself' [JoJ].

puff (puf) n. breath – 'A'm oot o puff', 'A deh wa'i gliff the puff oot ee' (note the different shade of meaning to standard English).

puff-an-darts (puf-in-dawrtz) n., arch. once popular game in which darts were propelled at a target by blowing through a small tube – 'There's pethers and potters, and gingerbread stan's, Peep-shows, puff-and-darts, and great caravans ...' [DA].

puffed (pufd) adj. out of breath, exhausted – 'A'm fair puffed', 'A'm awfi puffed efter comin up they stair'.

Puffin Billy (pu-fin-bi-lee) n. nickname given to the first locomotive that was brought to Liddesdale in advance of the opening of the railway. It was said to be as big as a traction engine and with a 6-foot high chimney. It was an enormous struggle to bring it from Carlisle by road, with many mishaps along the way, including the death of the man in charge of the operation, Bill Smith, when it fell on top of him. It was brought to a location near Saughtree School where it was used as a sawmill for the railway works, and then taken by means of a temporary rail line from near the junction of the Caldron Burn and the Liddel to join the Border Counties Railway, where it was used in the construction project.

puir (pūr) adj., arch. poor – ‘...An’ that my muse, puir rutic dame, Is little better’ [JoHa], ‘A puir man’s pride serves nae other purpose than to keep him puir’ [JTe], ‘Beith leuch an’ heich, riche an’ puir thegither’ [HSR], ‘It’s for that puir dumb beist I murn, It’s end is near, ye see’ [WiSp], ‘So ye’d mebbe be better to remate The remains o’ puir Robbie Dye’ [DH], ‘The report thinks that was gey puir’ [BW1974], n. the poor – ‘He sall spare the puir an’ needie ...’ [HSR], ‘For the oynt-mint micht hae been sauld for meikle, an’ gien til the puir’ [HSR] (now the pronunciation is more like pair, even if the spelling remains ‘puir’).

puir packs (pūr-pawks) n., arch. pitiful money – ‘The phrase ‘puir packs’ I have often heard in common talk in Scotland: it’s the English ‘sorry pelf’ [JAHM] (see pack).

puirtith (pār-tith, poor-tith) n., arch. poverty – ‘...Wi’ labour worn, wi’ poortith nippit, She scarce can hobble’ [JR], ‘...And still be mine, though abject puirtith still Dark shroud my mind, and fettering curb my will’ [JoHa], ‘Yet though, wi’ mony a foolish prank, I’ve brought mysel’ to puirtith’s brink ...’ [JoHa], ‘Though puirteth an’ sadness may fa’ to our share ...’ [JJ], ‘Buirldy men, and ance respected, In poortith could noo stand neglected’ [RF], ‘I might hae had ae cow or mae, And a weel stored pantrie, Instead of Poortith, cauld and blae, The curse o’ barley-bree’ [DA], ‘She’s wrestled wi’ poortith, she’s foughten wi’ care ...’ [JT] (also spelled ‘poortith’).

puist (pūst) v., arch. to eat gluttonously – ‘Puistin’ an’ eatin’ [GW], to gorge with food – ‘...for A puistee an leined masel weel’ [ECS], ‘He was puistin’ his-sel’ [GW], n. someone who eats gluttonously (also poist and poost and puistit).

puistit (pūst-ee', -i') pp., arch. stuffed full, gorged – ‘Nane o eer mim-mowed peikeen got that Jethart toozy table threh mei; for A puistee an leined masel weel’ [ECS] (see puist).

puisty (pūst-ee) adj., arch. well-fed, corpulent.

pul (pul) n. a pull – ‘gie’d a guid pul’, v. to pull – ‘gei’d a guid pul mun’, ‘Puhll oot ma granny’s blanket kist ...’ [IJ] (sometimes spelled ‘puhll’ and variants to emphasize the spelling; pow was the older version; pu is more common elsewhere in Scotland).

pule see pewl

pule see puil

pullet (pu-let) n., poet. a young fowl – ‘...As boil’d and roasted, partridge, powt, and pullet’ [JR].

pulley (poo-lee) n. a horizontal frame for drying clothes, attached to the ceiling, usually in a kitchen, which lowered and raised by means of a pulley.

the Pullman (thu-pool-min, -pul-) n. technically a luxurious coach on a train, but used to refer to the Edinburgh to London train, particularly the last train back to Hawick, just before midnight, from further north up the Waverley Line – ‘Ee’d twae shillin’ trips tae the city And came back on the pullman train’ [AY], ‘And there was aye a thrill when the nicht Pullman cam birlin roond the bend ...’ [DH].

the Pump Track (thu-pump-trawk) n. track built in 2020 on the location of the former tennis courts in Wilton Lodge Park, for use by BMX and mountain bikes, as well as skateboards. It was laid out by Velosolutions, being a 300 m layout with rotational symmetry, along with a 100 m beginner track.

pun (pun) n., poet. a pound (of weight or money) – ‘Wee Jean o’ the Coate gae a pun’, A penny, a plack, and a bodle’ [ES].

the Punch Bowl (thu-punch-bōl) n. inn situated at the rear of 27 High Street in the mid-19th century.

Punch Bowl Close (punch-bōl-klōs) n. 19th century popular name for the passageway at 27 High Street, which led to the Punch Bowl Inn. The name continued to be used long after the inn had closed.

punct (pungkt) n., arch. a point, item – ‘... And to the obseruing, keiping and fulfilling of al and sindry the punctis and artikillis abune vrittine ...’ [SB1519].

punctually (pungk-tew-a-lee) adv., arch. strictly, to the point, with full attention – ‘... were most sharplie rebuked for breach of Sabbath, and both promised to keep ye Sabbath most punctually in time coming’ [PR1724].

pund (pund) n. a pound weight (not now used for the monetary unit) – ‘This morning it was the butchers, For half a pund o’ mince ...’ [AY], ‘Sic days are gane, Alas, lang since – We dice wi daith

For a pund o mince ...’ [DH], note that the singular form is often used for the plural – ‘hei weighs toonty pund mair is hei did last year’, ‘Sir, you’ll receive my twa pund ten, Wi’ what you call expenses, Sometimes misfortune humbles men, And brings them to their senses’ [JR], ‘Which sair’d his house o’ meal an’ groats, An’ farm’d it a’ for sax pund Scots’ [JR].

pund (pund) n., arch. a pound in money (usually Scots money in older texts) – ‘...ane hundretht pundis at the compleitting of the said mariagis ...’ [SB1519], ‘...sal pay 5 pundis for the blud, and 5 pundis for the bludwyte ...’ [BR1640], ‘...and taking furth thereof nine or ten pundis money, quhilk she declared she had given for wairs to sindries ...’ [BR1641], ‘I’ll gi’ thee fifteen puns for the good horse, Fala, &c. Weil tel’d on thy cloak lap shall be ...’ [CPM], ‘... To mak’ that crown a pund, my Jamie gade to sea, And the crown and the pund were baith for me’ [CPM], ‘At last she took heart, and did stoutly declare – I’ll hae five puns and ten at Copshawholm Fair’ [DA] (the plural was usually spelled ‘pundis’ in the oldest documents).

punk (pungk) n., arch. a sound made by plucking a fiddle string – ‘...He’d gi’ a punk, and look sae queer, Without a joke, You’d swore he spoke words plain and clear, At ilka stroke’ [CPM].

puppy (pu-pee) n., arch. a poppy.

Purcell (pur-sel) n. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in 1643 being in Rule. Her lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £15. James (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1707 for weaver James Jolly, in 1708 for Andrew Richardson and Isobel Purcel (who was probably related to him), in 1711 and 1718 for weaver David Reid, and in 1715 for weaver Jasper Richardson. He could be the James born in 1678 to John and Cathering Scott. He was on the short-list for candidates to be Cornet in 1712 and was Cornet in 1713. In 1713 he was described as a wright who was one of the tradesmen chosen by the minister and heritors of Hawick to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Riddell in 1720. He may have witnessed a baptism for William Rodger in 1731. In 1747 he witnessed a baptism for George Richardson (probably his nephew). He may be the same James who was born in 1678 to John and Catherine Scott. He gave a house to James Richardson, son of his nephew George, who gave evidence regarding the Common in 1767. John (17th C.) wright in Hawick. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as a wright among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the John, married to Catherine Scott, whose children born in Hawick included John (b.1670), Elspeth (b.1672) and James (b.1678). He witnessed baptisms for Thomas Stavert in 1684 and for weaver Andrew Dodds in 1689. Patrick recorded in 1567, along with Hector Turnbull 'in Turnbull' (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as other Turnbells and Olivers from the same place. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. His name is given as 'Part Pursell' (spelled 'Pursel', 'Pursell' and 'Pursil').

Purdie

Purdie (pur-dee) n. Richard (1805–70) originally from England, he was baker in Hawick who was an elder in the Relief Kirk. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Pathhead and working as a weaver. But by 1851 he was a baker at No. 3 Loan. He was listed as a baker on the Loan in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of weaver Walter Scott, and sister of William Scott, who became a successful businessman in New York. They appear to have had no surviving children. William (18th C.) resident at Todshaw. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included James (b.1763), Walter (b.1765) and Mary (b.1767).

Purdum (pur-dum) n. Alexander (d.c.1788) son of Bailie Walter. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He married Meiron (or Marion) Scott of Boghall in 1725; her father was Richard Scott. Their children included: Christian (b.1726); Walter (b.1728); Richard (b.1731), probably the merchant in Hawick; John (b.1734); Margaret; and William (b.1741). The witnesses in 1728 were Henry Orrock and Dand Gray and in 1741 were 'late Bailie' Walter (his father) and merchant William Oliver. Alexander (b.1770s) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the son of shoemaker William who was born in 1771. He is probably the Alexander, son of William, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 and who was elected Cornet in 1797. He was listed as a shoemaker in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He is recorded as Bailie in 1824. He was recorded as a shoemaker on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Probably the same man was the shoemaker who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably the 'A.

Purdum

Purdum' who owned property at about 48 High Street (and next to Robert's property at 46) on Wood's 1824 map. On of his children was buried in 1829. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Charlotte Smith and their children included Helen Elizabeth (b.1825) and William (b.1827). Alexander (19th C.) son of joiner Richard, he married Margaret (or Marion) Hunter in Hawick in 1850 and they emigrated to Canada. Their sons Thomas and Alexander established a legal firm of Purdom & Purdom in London, Ontario, and they had 2 other sons, Richard (b.1850) and John. Archibald (1762/3–1849) mason in Newcastleton. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is also listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories (as 'Purdon', which must be an error). He was recorded as a head of household in Newcastleton in 1835. In the 1841 census he was living in the village with his children Isobel (or Isobel, 1804/5–83) and Gideon. He married Margaret Miller, who died in 1820, aged 44. His son Gideon erected a memorial to him and his wife in Ettleton Cemetery. Arthur (1819/20–63) son of Robert, labourer in Castleton. He was a Sergeant in the 9th Lancers, serving in the Punjab and through the Indian Mutiny. He retired in the position of Quartermaster-sergeant. In 1861 he was living with his parents at Longhaugh Cottage and listed as a Chelsea Pensioner. Charles McLaren, J.P. (1864–1928) son of Thomas. He became a joint agent of the National Bank of Scotland. Crystal (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Cristale Purdoun' along with 'John Purdoun' in a 'respite' of 1516 to William Elliot of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots, together with a large number of other men bound to them. David (15th C.) landowner in the Liddesdale area, who held the lands of 'Dalman', 'Bluntwood' and 'the Crouke'. In 1476 these lands were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He may have been ancestor of the local Purdoms. Findlay (1867–1913) son of Town Clerk Thomas. He was a farmer at Tushielaw and at Borthaugh. He was one of the founding members of the Teviotdale Harriers in 1889. He died in Vancouver and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. George (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with Jamie, as well as 2 Waughs. He may have been related to the Hawick Purdoms. Henry Leman 'Harry' (b.1879) son of Town Clerk Robert. He attended classes at St. Andrews University in 1896/7. He became a traveller with William Watson & Sons. He served with the K.O.S.B. during WWI. James 'Jamie' (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbe-hirst, along with George, as well as 2 Waughs. His name was given as 'Jamy Purdome'. He may have been related to the Hawick Purdoms. James (17th C.) proprietor of Milsington recorded in the 1650 list of 'communicants' of the Borthwick valley. He may have been married to Margaret Nichol and had sons Robert (b.1640) and James (b.1643). The baptism in 1640 was witnessed by Robert Scoon and Adam Laidlaw. In 1652 there is an account with the Buccleuch papers of the losses and damages he had sustained 'by the English army since Martinmas 1650'; this was probably Cromwell's army. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'John Purdoun' in a 'respite' in the Register of the Privy Seal given to Robert of Lar-ristons and a large number of his kin and asso-ciates. 'Cristale Purdoun' is also listed. John (17th C.) recorded as an appraiser for a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving livestock eating someone's grain. He may well have been the father or grandfather of the schoolmaster. John (1642/3-c.1725) schoolmaster in Hawick in the latter part of the 17th century and early 18th. He took over in 1669, following Mr. Chisholme, who briefly held the position after Walter Mar-tin; he was thus perhaps the third of Hawick's Parish Schoolmasters. He remained in the posi-tion for 54 years and finally retired in 1723 at the age of 80. For most of this time he taught in St. Mary's Kirk itself, with the graveyard as the school playground. He also served as reader in the kirk, as well as Session Clerk (writing the en-tries in the parish records in a beautiful hand for decades, ending at about the time of his death). He was already referred to as 'Mr' in 1673, 1675, 1676 and 1680 when he witnessed baptisms for James Newbie, John Elliot of Brugh, William Moscrop and William Laing. He was apparently in-jured during the siege of Drumlanrig Tower by the Covenanting army in 1679. He witnessed a bap-tism for George Young and Janet Purdom (per-haps his sister) in 1680. He was 'Mr John Pur-dom' in 1682 when he witnessed a couple of bap-tisms (one along with Walter) and in 1685 when he witnessed a baptism for mason David Ruther-ford and in 1689 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Hardie. Also in 1689 he and Walter witnessed a baptism for Thomas (who was therefore presumably a close relative). In 1694 he was listed as 'Mr John Purdim' on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He wit-nessed a baptism for weaver John Jolly in 1700. It is possible that he had an influence (in the pro-Covenanter direction) on the young Robert Pater-son ('Old Mortality'). For about the last 12 years he taught in the Parish School at the same time as the Grammar School existed, although he had a diminished salary, and complained that he was 'deprived both of learning humanity (i.e. Latin) and of ye ordinary salarie (having no salarie al-locat to him for his reading the Scriptures upon the Lord's day, forenoon and afternoon, and being clerk to ye session)'. A further complaint was that even apart from the Grammar School, there were others teaching privately in the Town; this came to a head in 1713, when he had the Session pro-claim that no one else 'should in ye future teach farther than ye Psalm-Book'. There were regular entries in the Session Records of small payments to him for teaching poor children. In 1719 he wit-nessed a baptism for carrier Simon Mark. In 1722 he was given 40 merks by the Council for renting a school-house for 4 years 'when he had not the liberty to teach in the kirk'. In 1722 he witnessed a baptism for John Simpson and in 1723 another for surgeon Walter Scott. He is probably the per-son referred to as 'Jo Purdom' in the 1723 Ses-sion records. In 1724 he was allowed £6 Scots for the rent of a house for the rest of his life (which proved not to be very long); the entry's tone sug-gests that he was still serving as Session Clerk at that time. It may be that the last entry in the 1711-25 book marks the end of his time; certainly the entries in 1726 are in a different hand. He is likely the John (recorded in the baptismal regis-ter as 'Mr', suggesting a position of importance in the Town) who married Margaret Scott and had children: Walter (b.1678); Janet (b.1680); Mar-garet (b.1680), who probably died young; James (b.1683); Margaret (again, b.1685), who mar-ried tailor Thomas Wilkie in 1720; and Elizabeth (b.1687), who may have married merchant Will-iam Chisholm. The 1680 baptism was witnessed by Walter (probably the Bailie), suggesting he was a brother or other close relative and the 1685 baptism by Bailie William Laing and 'Mr' Wal-ter Gledstains (presumably the Town Clerk). He appears to have married a second time, with chil-dren (to 'Mr' John, making it clear this was him) including Walter (b.1700), Marion (b.1705) and Anna (b.1709), with no mother named. The wit-nesses in 1700 were 'late Bailie' William Laing and James Falsyde and in 1709 were Town Clerk Walter Gledstains and Walter Elliot, Bailie De-pute of the Regality of Hawick. John (18th C.)

resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Little and their children included John (b.1760). John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Beattie and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1777. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Braidlie according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) hosier at Wilton Damside along with William (possibly his brother). He was listed as manufacturer at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 (but not listed in 1840). The manufacturing business lasted until about 1837. He was listed along with William as a joint proprietor on the 1837 electoral roll. He may be the John who was married to Joan (or Jean) Douglas and had children Elizabeth, Euphemia, William, John, Agnes, Mary and Joan in the period 1816–32; Joan lived with her children at Damside in 1841. John (b.1821/2) son of John and Joan Douglas. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on Wilton Path, helped by his mother and his sister Euphemia. He was listed as a grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. He is listed on Wilton Path in 1851 and 1861, probably near the south end of the east side. In 1857 he donated to the Museum the skull of an ancient ox, found in Wullie-struther Moss. John (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Nichols and they had an unnamed child baptised in 1843. John (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Jessie Elliot and they had an unnamed child baptised in 1845. John Ritchie, O.B.E., J.P. (1862–1935) 4th son of Thomas, he was Depute Town Clerk in 1888, joint Town Clerk with his brother Robert from 1912, and then on his own 1924–36. He was honorary recruiting officer in WWI, Secretary of the War Memorial Committee, as well a Chairman of the War Pensions Committee, for which service he received the O.B.E. in 1920. He was also Honorary Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. In his younger days he was a keen member of the Volunteers and interested in sports, particularly golf and hiking. He married Annie Hume Turnbull (1865–1916), daughter of dyer Alexander Turnbull and Janet Armstrong Hume. Their only son was Capt. Thomas Laurence. Margaret (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1684 when her unnamed child was baptised. No father's name was given, and it is unclear if this was an error or the father was deceased or the child born illegitimately. The witnesses were William (probably a close relative) and George Young. Richard (b.1731) tailor and merchant in Hawick, son of Alexander and Marion

Scott. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James Chisholme. In 1779 he and Walter witnessed a baptism for William (who may have been a relative). He married Jane Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1761); Alexander (b.1762); Marion (b.1764); John (b.1766); Margaret (b.1767); an unnamed child (b.1768); Marion (again, b.1772); Thomas (b.1773); Marion (again, b.1774); and Richard (b.1775). The witnesses in 1761 were the whole congregation, in 1762 were John Scott (presumably related to his wife, perhaps his father-in-law) and Thomas Wilkie, in 1764 were John Scott (again) and William (probably his brother), in 1766 were John Scott and Walter (probably another relative), in 1772 were James Scott (perhaps related to his wife) and Alexander (probably his father) and in 1773 were John Scott (again) and Thomas Wilkie (again). He was deceased in 1805 when the deaths of his daughters Marion and Agnes are recorded. Richard (1776–1841) joiner of Kirkstile. He was son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver. In 1801 he was a wright on the ballot list for the Militia. He was listed on Silver Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 his address was given as 'Kirk Sytlefoot'. His wife was Isobella Elliot (c.1790–1845). His children were: Richard, joiner and lay preacher; John, shoemaker; Alexander, who emigrated to Canada; Jane; and Agnes. One of his children was buried in Hawick in 1829. Richard (1817/8–77) joiner on Kirkstyle, like his father. He was also known as a lay preacher. He was listed as a joiner on Silver Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He was an early member of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, who gave many teetotalism speeches around the area. He played an active part in the local Good Templar movement in the mid-19th century. He was one of the first Deacons in the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk from 1848, was one of the first Trustees and the 2nd Secretary and 2nd Treasurer, and was the leading elder in the 1860s. He married Margaret Elliot in 1848 and their children included: Isabella (b.1849/50), who married George Wintrup; Richard; Elizabeth (b.1853/4); and Mary (b.1855/6). Some of his correspondence and diaries are in the Borders Archive. Robert (d.c.1686) tenant at 'Cartarburnfoot' when his will was recorded in 1686. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Grieve and their children were: Margaret (b.1670); and Janet (b.1674). Bailie Robert (1777–1862) son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver, he was a farmer and resident at 46 High Street. He appears on the 1797 Lieutenancy Book as son of Bailie Walter, in 1798 he is recorded having paid £10 to avoid serving, but in 1799 was balloted again, providing mason Thomas Scott as a substitute. He was Cornet in 1803, and later became a Magistrate. His father and paternal grandfather had both been Bailie Walter, inn-keepers in Hawick and 'Hilliesland Lairds', keeping cows in fields up past the Wellogate and selling milk in the town (and a pond beyond Hilliesland was popularly called 'Purdom's Pond' until fairly recent times). When Cornet, he was said to have been thrown from his horse near Hagishaa and taken into a house there to recover. As a result the route out to the Moor was changed to go along the now familiar Nipknowes road. He was the last of the family to hold the orchards and lands near the foot of what became Croft Road. He is shown on Wood's 1824 map as owner of fields and trees around Mart Street and North Bridge Street, as well as the property at 46 High Street. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is listed as a High Street farmer in Slater's 1852 directory. By 1851 he was listed as a retired farmer. In 1817 in Hobkirk Parish he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Smith and Mary Scott ('the Flower of Rankleburn'). Their children included: Walter, farmer; Thomas, Town Clerk; Mary, who married Robert Scott, farmer of Kinninghall and later Falnash; Agnes; Alexander; Robert; and several children who did not long survive. A daughter of his died in Hawick in 1840. A portrait of him exists. At the time of his death was the oldest living Cornet, Burgess and Magistrate. Robert (1792–1861) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He was at Bygate in 1841 and Longhaugh in 1851 and 1861. He married Agnes (1792–1880), daughter of William Beattie; she died at Hillside, Hawick. Their children included: Robert, who died in infancy; John (b.1817); Arthur (1818/9–63), who was Quartermaster-sergeant in the 9th Lancers; Laidlaw; William (1821/2–99), who died at St. Leonard's Cottage; Isabella (1823/4–36); Robert (again, b.1831); Agnes (b.1834), who married William Laidlaw; and perhaps a second Isabella. The family are mostly buried in Ettleton Kirk-yard. Robert (1846–1924) eldest son of Thomas, he attended Wilton School and went on to become a local solicitor and banker. He was Depute Town Clerk in 1868 and served as Town Clerk 1886–1924. He turned down the chance of carrying the Flag at the Nipknowes in 1891, stating that he felt the official connection between the Town Clerk and the Common Riding had ceased about 50 years earlier. He gave a speech at the first public Colour-Bussing concert of 1894, thus being a predecessor of the Chief Guest. He was instrumental in founding the Golf Club in 1877, placing the notice asking for interested parties to meet in his office. He was the first Secretary and Treasurer of the club and also became Club Captain. In addition he was Secretary of the School of Art and of the Cottage Hospital. He was the main trustee for the estate of James Farrar Blenkhorn. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. In 1873 he married Helen Emma 'Nellie' Leman, daughter of a doctor in Ballarat, Victoria (and she died in 1924). Their children were: Thomas (b.c.1874), who moved to New Zealand; Henry Leman (b.1879), who was a traveller with William Watson & Sons; Robert Leman (1884/5–1917), also known as 'Robin', who died in WWI; Angus, who worked as a tea planter; Emma Mabel, who married Capt. Walter Francis Cochrane, Gala manufacturer, was mother of the epepidemiologist Archibald ('Archie') Leman Cochrane, and secondly married John Locke, Royal Navy engineer; and Elizabeth Neish, who married Rear-Adm. G. Pirie Thomson. He lived at Westwood, which was built for him about 1880. His portrait hangs in the Town Hall. Robert Leman 'Robin' (1883/4–1917) son of Robert. He served in WWI with the 11th Battalion Royal Scots and was killed at Kemmel Hill. He is buried at Faubourg d'Amiens Cemetery, Arras. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Thome Purdoun in Brumesheilbrig'. He was listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc. who were declared as fugitives for non-appearance at a court in Peebles in 1605. Thomas (17th C.) 'litster' who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He was probably the Thomas listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. In 1695 he witnessed a baptism for William Hodge. He married Margaret Bell and their son Walter was born in 1689, with another John (with no mother given) born in 1693. The witnesses in 1689 were Walter and schoolmaster John (who were both surely related). Thomas (1820–86) 2nd son of Robert, he was an accountant and agent for the National Bank of Scotland, and head of a legal business. He was a Councillor from 1854. He served as the last Junior Magistrate of Hawick in 1861 on the old 'eternal' council, and was heavily involved in putting the 'Police Act' into operation. He was elected to the new council for South High Street

Ward that same year and became Senior Magistrate. He was then Town Clerk from 1862 (succeeding from James Wilson) until his death in 1886. He was an Assessor for the county of Roxburghshire. He also acted as secretary for the Border Union Railway committee in their contest with the Caledonian Company for the Hawick to Carlisle line. He was known as a powerful public speaker and was also an occasional lay preacher. He served as one of the first Deacons and first Trustees of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational Kirk, from 1848. In 1845 he married Elizabeth Wilson Neish (daughter of a Dundee manufacturer), and she died in 1859, aged 38. Their children included: Robert, of Westwood, who succeeded as Town Clerk; Hannah (or Anna) Maria, who died in 1887; William Neish, who died aged 23; Thomas Edie; and Mary Smith (d.1932), who married Algernon Fielden Ramsden of Worksop. He secondly married Hannah (1827–98), daughter of Peter Findlay and brother of John Ritchie Findlay, proprietor of the Scotsman newspaper. Their children were: John Ritchie, also Town Clerk; Charles McLaren, banker; Walter Alexander, electrical engineer of Australia, who married his cousin Mary Smith Purdom; Edward, who died young; Findlay, farmer of Borthaugh, who died in Vancouver; Elizabeth Findlay, who married Dr. George Wade of Melrose and moved to Tasmania; and Arthur Muirhouse, who died in infancy. He died at Croydon and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall, painted by Frank Watson Wood. Thomas Edie (1853–1942) 3rd son of Town Clerk Thomas. He became a doctor and died in Croydon. His children were Robert Ramsden, Ethel Mary, Lillian Frances, William Percy, Elizabeth Winnifred, Arthur, Constance Hannah, Harold Neish, Elsie, Reginald, Gwendoline Mary and Irene Margaret. Capt. Thomas Laurence (1892–1927) only son of Town Clerk John Ritchie. He was a squadron leader in the Royal Air Force during WWI and was awarded the Military Cross for having ‘shown the most exceptional gallantry and daring in engaging enemy aircraft’. His only daughter Dorothy Hume married Percival Charles Edward Wilkinson of the Royal Scots Fusiliers. Walter (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Marr. Their children included: John (b.1648); William (b.1651); and Thomas (b.1654). He may be the Walter who was elected to the Council in 1648. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptism in 1654 for Robert Turnbull and for John Scott. He could also be the Walter who was one of Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). Bailie Walter (d.bef. 1708) recorded as Magistrate in 1668, 1674 and probably later. He was described as a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Earl of Queensberry in 1672. In 1674 he was Bailie when William Hall drew his sword at him and threatened to shoot him. Also in 1674 someone was fined for disobedience to the Magistrates for not giving him his horse to ride to Jedburgh to deal with the Town’s affairs. He was probably the ‘Baylyea Purdome’ (and likely an ex-Bailie at that point) recorded in 1675 among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He was ‘late baylyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/94. In 1694 he is listed as ‘Bailyea Purdim’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’. He had lands at the eastern end of the town boundaries. This land had formerly belonged to the Laird of Horsleyhill and was on the eastern boundary of what became Dickson’s nursery-ground (i.e. just west of Oliver Place). He could have been the Walter who was married to Christian Tait and had children: Margaret (b.1671); Walter (b.1673); William (b.1674); Robert (b.1676); Bessie (b.1677); Jane (b.1679); and William (b.1681). The witnesses in 1676 were Robert Scott and Alexander Hislop. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Hardie in 1676. He is probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms for John Blake and Andrew Jardine in 1673 and William Taylor and William Swan in 1680. He could also be the Walter who witnessed the baptism of one of schoolmaster John’s children in 1687 (suggesting they were brothers perhaps), another couple in 1682 (one along with John) and one in 1688 (for merchant John Scott). Bailie Walter R. (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, he was an inn-keeper in Hawick and also held the orchards and lands at the eastern end of Town. He may have been the Walter born to Walter and Christian Tait in 1673. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism in 1704 for Robert Tinlin and Christian Purdom (perhaps his sister). In 1708 he was fined for causing a disturbance in St. Mary’s by insisting on sitting in his father’s former seat, although the Council had resolved that the right to sit there was held by the current Bailies; along with Robert Scott (son of another deceased Bailie) he spent 24 hours in the jail. He is probably the Walter whose servant James Dickson was married in 1713. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw, herd in Commonsideside and was probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms in 1720 for weaver Walter Douglas and for candlemaker John Scott, in 1722 for Simon Miller in Hawick Shiel and for Walter Scott in Acreknowe, and for Walter Scott of Burnfoot in 1723. He was probably the Bailie Purdom who witnessed baptisms in 1725 for Thomas Hardie, in 1726 for merchant William Chisholme and Elizabeth Purdom (surely related to him) and in 1728 for Walter Paterson. He was also a Bailie himself, mentioned in the period 1722 to 1737. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptism for Adam Kersel and for Adam Scott in 1731. In 1715 he was given custody of one of the keys to the Charter Chest (and so was presumably on the Council). In 1717 he was already an elder, recorded as one of the people to collect money from the East part of the Town. In 1718 he was one of those appointed to resolve the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham, and also in that year was appointed to try to collect money for a new Kirk clock. In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray, tenant in Weensland. In 1722 he was a senior elder involved in appointing the new minister. And in 1722 he was elected as Session Treasurer. In 1727 he was a witness to the baptism of a child of William Ekron and in 1728 witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Scott. He may be the Mr. Purdom of Hawick who married Margaret, 4th daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. His children included: Walter, who probably died unmarried; and Alexander, who married Meiron Scott of Boghall in 1725. He may also have been the Walter listed as a 'Dragoon' in 1700 when his daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick, with witnesses carrier Henry Paterson, Henry Orrock and flesher Robert Smith. James (b.1719), born in Hawick with no mother's name given may also be his child. In 1728 he was 'late Bailie' and husband of Janet Scott, when their daughter Jean was baptised; the witnesses were William Oliver and Alexander '...' (possibly Purdom, i.e. his son). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet McVittie and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1704. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isobel Scott in 1716 and their son William was born in 1724. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Elliot and their children included Walter (b.1724). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1722 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott. Their children included Jean (b.1728). Bailie Walter (1728–1807) eldest son of Alexander. He was a Bailie several times in the period 1780–1800. In 1764, along with Robert Oliver (probably his father-in-law), he was witness for a baptism for Walter Wilson and Catherine Oliver (his sister-in-law). He is probably the carrier of that name who witnessed a baptism for Richard Scott in 1757, with the other witness being Walter Scott of Boghall (related to his mother), and another for Richard (his brother) in 1766. In 1779 he and Richard witnessed a baptism for William (their brother). He is probably the 'Baillie Purdom' recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, listed right after shoemaker William. He may be the Walter listed among local men who contributed generously to the war effort (with France) around 1799. In 1763 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Oliver and Bessie Blackhall; she was sister of 'Haunless Wat's wife, and niece of 'Auld Cash' (this probably being the father of the more familiar 'Auld Cash'). Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1763); Marion (b.1765); Alexander (b.1767); Robert (b.1770), who died young; Richard (b.1773), joiner; Elizabeth (or 'Betty', again, b.1774), who married Andrew Oliver; Robert (b.1777), farmer, Cornet and Magistrate; and Walter (b.1779), tobacconist. The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation and in 1774 were merchant Walter Wison and William He may be the Walter whose daughter Mary died in Hawick in 1782. Walter (18th C.) known as 'The Muckle Laird'. In the baptismal record of 1765 he is 'Senior'. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptisms for miller John Scott in 1776 and 1778. In 1758 he married Robina (or 'Rabini') Scott, who was related to the local family of millers, probably the daughter of miller James Scott born in 1735. Their children included: Janet (b.1759); Walter (b.1760); James (b.1761); Thomas (b.1763); James (again, b.1765); Robert (b.1765, twin of James); Margaret (b.1767); Jane (b.1769); and Elizabeth (b.1771). The witnesses to the 1759 and 1760 baptisms were miller James Scott (probably his wife's father) and merchant Thomas Wilkie (whose wife was a Purdom). The witnesses in 1765 were merchant Thomas Wilkie and wright James Scott. It is possible that he was the son of Walter and Janet Elliot born in Hawick in 1724. Walter (b.1776) son to shoemaker William. He was recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men in the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and he was still on the list in 1801. Walter (b.1779) younger son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver. He was a tobacconist at 1 High Street and also became a Bailie himself. He was a tabocconist on the ballot list for the Militia in 1801. He is listed as a tobacconist on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and Slater's 1852 directory. He was at the Mill Port (i.e. 1 High Street) in 1837 in the account of the riots at the election of 1837, when it is said that he tried to help Thomas Scott, farmer at Little Cote. He was living at 46 High Street in 1841 (with his brother Robert's family). He died unmarried. Walter (b.1818) eldest son of Robert. He was a farmer at Easter Wooden, Eckford. In 1844 he married Agnes, daughter of Walter John Grieve; she died in 1847. In 1850 he secondly married Isabella Turnbull (b.1830) from Jedburgh. Their children were: Robert (b.1852), spectacle-maker of Sutton Coldfield; James; Agnes; Mary Smith, who married her cousin Walter Alexander; Walter; and Elizabeth Turnbull (b.1860). One of his daughters became Mrs. Dunn. Walter (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston. He was one of the first Trustees of St. George's Kirk. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Jean Stewart and their children included: Janet (b.1653); and John (b.1655). He is probably the William who witnessed baptisms for William Ruecastle in 1671, for Robert Paterson and for Bailie William Scott in 1683, and for Margaret (perhaps his daughter) in 1684. He could be the William who was charged in 1685 with 'breach of waird and severall abuses committ aggt. the baylyeas'. He might also be the William mentioned in the Burgh Records in 1686 when 2 new marchers of the boundaries within the town were appointed; he was stated to have been a former marcher, along with John Hardie and William Paisley. He witnessed a baptism for Alexander Young and Marion Stewart (probably a relative of his wife) in 1682; the other witness was George Young (married to Janet Purdom, who may thus have been his son-in-law), and probably another for Andrew Cook. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism for John Stewart (perhaps related to his wife) and another for a Mr. Reid. In 1684 he witnessed baptisms for Thomas Stavert and John Tinlin. William (1741–1818) son of Alexander and Marion Scott. He was a shoemaker recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the William who in 1778 witnessed a baptism for George Deans, junior. In 1767 he married Elizabeth (or 'Betty', 1746–1818), daughter of Alexander Donald (or Donaldson). Their children included: Agnes (b.1769); Alexander (b.1771); James (b.1774); Walter (b.1776), probably the son of the shoemaker listed among those on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797; Marion (b.1779); and Betty (b.1782). The witnesses in 1779 were Walter and Richard (probably his brothers). He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for merchant Richard (probably his brother) in 1764. William (18th/19th C.) hosier at Wilton Damside, along with John. Their business lasted until about 1837, when it was listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He could be the elector called Purdom who was said to have died in consequence of the injuries he received when attacked at the 1835 election in Hawick. William (1821/2–99) son of Robert, who was a labourer in Castleton Parish. He married Kitty Elliot (1819–99) and they had a daughter, Mary Murray. He, his wife and daughter Mary all died at St. Leonard's Cottage and are marked on a gravestone in Ettleton Kirkyard (formerly spelled 'Purdem', 'Purdholm', 'Purdholme', 'Purdim', 'Purdome', 'Purdum' and other variants).

purtati (pur-ta'-i) n., arch. potato – 'The spelling is, in most cases phonetic, and shows that the local pronunciation has been then, as now, distinctive, ... pees, beens, smal beens, lintseed, cabitch plants, purtates ...' (an early pronunciation, cf. tatti).

Purves (pur-vis) n. James (1798/9–1878) cabinet-maker of Hawick, born in Dalkeith. He was listed as a joiner on the Mid Row in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Janet Cunningham, who died in 1875, aged 79. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and in 1851 at about No. 1 Loan (which could be the same location). His children included Eliza (who married William Elliot), Margaret, Jemima, James and Marion. Johnstone (19th C.) shopkeeper on the Front Row, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. Ralph (16th C.) recorded as witness to the bond of assurance for the Turnbells in 1595. He is referred to as 'Rauff Purces in Minto'. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Helen married William, son of carrier John Gledstains. William (16th C.) apothecary mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574. It is unclear if he was local or from Edinburgh. William 'Blinnd Wullie' (1752–1832) son of John and Margaret, he was born in Newcastle and was blind from birth. He became known as an itinerant singer and fiddler, his favourite song being 'Buy Broom Busoms', which he claimed to have written (but probably just adapted). His characteristic cry of thanks was 'God blish the king – God blish the King; never sheed him – never sheed him; poor shoul – poor shoul!' Although based in Newcastle he travelled widely, and was a regular visitor at the Fleece Inn in Hawick. He presented the landlord there, George Hunter, with a snuff box 'in deep appreciation of his friendship'.

William 'Billy' (1784–1853) from Auchendinny in Midlothian, he grew up in Newcastle and was once the most famous clown and showman in the Borders. He regularly toured around the south of Scotland and north of England, putting on all kinds of shows, including conjouring, ventriloquism, freak-shows, small circuses and plays. He acted, sang local ballads, played the bagpipes, danced and told jokes. In Hawick he stayed at the Fleece Inn, where he performed in the ballroom for 3 nights and moved into the larger Town Hall for another 3 nights; the landlord of the Fleece Inn, George Hunter, waived his bill, and Purves purchased a silver-mounted snuff-box for him. On another occasion he performed in a theatre in Hawick where Albert Mills was later built. He was buried in Hartlepool. Dr. William Brown (1799–1852) from Edinburgh, he married Margaret (1798–1855), daughter of John Laidlaw, who was from Weens. He contracted a disease related to his work, which killed both him and his wife. Their children were: John, who died young; Alexander, W.S., who was a lawyer in Edinburgh and purchased an estate in Peeblesshire; and Dr. William Laidlaw (1842–1917), who was an ear surgeon and golfing pioneer. After his death, his 2 sons were raised by their maiden aunts Jane and Euphemia Laidlaw. William (1814/5–1902) born in Melrose, he was a whip-maker on the High Street. He was listed among heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1835, when he was at Damside; by 1840 he was listed living in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and in Slater's 1852 directory. He was recorded on the High Street in 1841 (perhaps near No. 5), and around 12–14 in 1851, when he was employing 4 men. In 1861 he was at 1 High Street, listed as a whipmaker, grocer and fruiterer. He was described as 'of a simple, happy disposition naturally'. He is said to have given up most of his activities to pursue a spiritual calling, including singing religious songs. He married Christian Douglas, who died in 1875, aged 62. Their children included Isabella Scott, who married James Gowans and an unnamed son who died in 1840. Sir William, C.B.E., D.S.O. (1931–) son of a tenant farmer, he was born in Kelso, but from 1932–42 the family lived in Bedrule, where his mother was a teacher. He worked as a banker, working largely in the far east, becoming Chairman and C.E.O. of The Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation. On returning to the U.K. he was involved in overseeing the transition of Hong Kong to Chinese control. He was on the committee of the Scottish Rugby Union, became a Trustee of the National Museums of Scotland and was Vice President of the National Trust for Scotland. He (also 'Purvis').

Purvinen (pur-vi-nin) n. former name for lands in southern Liddesdale, perhaps where Heugh Head is marked on modern maps, on the south side of the Tinnis Burn. In the rental roll of 1541 it is 'Purvenen', when leased, along with Whisgills and 'Vtnomound', to Bartholomew and Ninian Armstrong. In 1634 the 40-shilling lands of 'Purviven' were inherited by Margaret from her father Archibald Douglas of Greena. In 1642 John of Gervald (2nd son of Sir William of Cavers) was granted lands of Burnmouth, 'Greina' (Greena) and 'Purvinen' in Liddesdale 'in fee', with his father having the 'liferent'. John Forester of Stane-garthside inherited the lands of 'Greina, Purviven and Burnemouth' from his uncle Nicholas in 1693 (it is 'Peruieen' on Blaeu's c.1654 map; the origin or meaning of the name are obscure).

pusin (pu-zin) v. to poison – 'it's no gaun ti pusin ee', 'Thair pusen is like the pusen o' ane serpint ...' [HSR], 'Weel, Aw could gie ee puzzened fangs leike serpents ...' [BW1961], n. poison – '...hei sent a packet o' puzzen teh Mary whae mixed eet wi' her faither's denner!' [BW] (also spelled 'pusen', 'pussin', 'puzzen', etc.; cf. the older py-sen).

pusint (pu-zin') pp., arch. poisoned – 'yon Socrates didni dei o auld age, hei pusint eissel', unwholesome in appearance, sickly looking, dingy (of badly washed clothing) – 'Often this term is used in connection with ill-washed linen' [ECS] (also written 'puzzen't', 'puzzent', etc.).

Puslinch Lake (poos-linch-lāk) n. lake near the township of Puslinch, between Cambridge and Guelph in Ontario, Canada. It was the location for the first Guelph/Galt area celebration of Hawick Common Riding. This was organised by Thomas Scott (Cornet in 1887, after his return to Hawick) and other exiles in the area in 1883. William Armstrong, tweed Merchant from Bridge Street was the first Cornet, with Thomas Scott the first general secretary. The event became an annual one, but it is unclear how long it lasted.

puss (poos) n., arch. a hare – '...a 'bit harmless maukin.' Before they took any particular notice of her, however, puss had 'hirpled thrice withershins' round house ...' [EM1820], '...the poacher said, holding up poor puss, 'I'll jist tak' it down the manse, doctor, you'll get hare soup the day'' [BP].

pyated (pI-i'-eed) adj., arch. piebald, parti-coloured.

Pyat Knowe (pI-i'-now) n. hill to the south-east of Dod, with the Pyatknowe Sike rising on it. There was formerly a farmstead here, where John Henderson was living in 1787 and Archibald Henderson in 1801. A shelf on the north side contains the remains of a fairly well-defined settlement, about 75 m by 45 m. The interior contains 2 courts, as well as 2 circular depressions, although these are probably quarry pits. There is also a second probable settlement nearer to the summit, this being oval in shape, about 65 m by 40 m, with an entrance at the west side. The Catrail crosses to the south of the hill, connecting to Barry Sike (it is 'Pyetknow' in 1787).

Pyatknowe Sike (pI-i'-now-sik) n. small stream that joins the Dod Burn near the Pyat Sike Plantation, south-east of the farmstead of Dod. There are several linear earthworks in the area, crossing part of White Hill to the north-east. Although it has been suggested that some of these may be connected with the Catrail, or with the nearby fort and settlement, there is no evidence for these claims. The fort lies to the north of where the Sike meets the Dod Burn. It measures about 60 m by 45 m and is almost entirely covered by a later settlement. To the south of the Sike, on Pyat Knowe are the remains of 2 more settlements.

the Pyat's Nest (thu-pI-its-nest) n. former name for Pyat Knowe, the hill south-west of Penchrise Pen, crossed by the Catrail, and containing the remains of a settlement (it is 'the Pyot's Nest' in 1880).

Quakers (kwā-kurz) n. religious group, more properly known as the Society of Friends, which reached its peak of membership in the late 17th century. It was influencial in Britain in the 18th and 19th centuries through the adherence of many manufacturing families. In Hawick interest began when William Wilson visited a meeting in Glasgow in August 1797, leading to his membership in 1802, followed by many in the Wilson and

Watson families. There were also significant visits by prominent Friends, such as prison reformer Elizabeth Fry, with at least 20 Public Meetings being held in Hawick. The group met in William Wilson’s house from 1802 until a Meeting house was built on Buccleuch Street from 1821, with the first Meeting there in 1823. This was a plain building (a sketch of which exists), set back from the street, to the west of the Roman Catholic Chapel. Its location is shown on Wood’s 1824 map, and it is listed among places of worship in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1839 the meeting house was described as being attended by only 2 families. The building ceased to be used for this purpose in 1844, after which it was used as a temporary hospital for the 1849 cholera epidemic and as James Murray’s ‘Hawick Academy’. It was demolished in 1866. In an ecclesiastical survey of Scotland in 1815 there were only 5 meeting places in the country, Glasgow, Hawick, Edinburgh, Aberdeen and Kinnmuck – ‘...Frae a man that is nae Quaker’ [AB].

Quaker’s Close (kwā-kurz-klōs) n. mid-19th century popular name for the close at 13 High Street, once the residence of manufacturer William Wilson, who was a Quaker. Also known as Wilson’s Close, it was a private passageway that extended much of the way down to the river.

eral persons in ye toun to educat children further than ye sd book ...’ [PR1713], ‘William Glad-stones came and quarrelled him for the badness of the shoes’ [BR] (this form omits the usual English ‘with’).

Quarrelhaa (kwa-rul-haw) n. name for 2 former cottages on the edge of the Harwood-on-Teviot lands, near the stream separating the farm from Chapelhill. They had already disappeared by the mid-19th century, although tailor John Elliot and family is still recorded there in 1841 and 1851. It is said that they were built to check on encroachments of livestock between the farms, and hence the name (although there is also a dis-used quarry nearby).

Quarry (kwa-ree) n. Andrew (18th C.) from Bowden Parish, in 1787 he married Agnes Hood, who was from Hawick Parish. They had at least 3 children in Bowden.

Quarry Rig (kwa-ree-rig) n. ridge just to the south of the upper part of the Ale Water, being the north-east spur of Deep Slack. A linear earth-work here extended for about 400m, joining the head of the Hoscode Burn with the Ale Water. Although suggested (by Lynn) to be part of the Catrail, it is probably of more recent and less significant origin. It has now been obliterated by forestry.

quarry-skeelie (kwa-ree-skee-lee) n., arch. a slate-pencil composed of a piece of soft stone of the sort found in quarries.

quarter (kwar'-ur) n., arch. fourth part of a unit of volume or weight – 'For five quarters of cheese £3, 16s.' [BR1638], 'Th' breid in Glesca bein' reduced a ha'penny th' quarter laif' [HEX1921], fourth part of land, perhaps referring locally to a quarter of a 'particate' – '...one Walter Paterson, laird of Burnflat, and tenent of a quarter land in Hawick ...' [C&L1767].

quarter days (kwar'-ur-dāz) n. four days formerly regarded as ending a quarter of the year. This was when rents and other payments became due. In Scotland they were traditionally Candlemas, Whitsunday, Lammas and Martinmas.

quarter-maister (kwar'-ur-mās-tur) n. a quarter-master, an official in an incorporated trade, responsible for collecting dues and looking after business affairs. In Hawick this was specifically the name given to the 2 representatives of the 5 (later 7) incorporated trades. They were added to the Town Council in 1739 and remained on it until the council was reorganised in 1861. In 1749 the Council decreed that they should be elected annually before Michaelmas. In 1781 it was formalised that they should be elected on the day before (i.e. Thursday) the election of the Bailies in October. They were also known as 'deacons of trade' or just 'deacons' – 'The quarter-masters of the weaver trade complain upon two of their craft, that, ... appealed against a fine, for disobedience to the trade, of four groats to the bailies, and eight pence to the quarter-masters ...' [JW1676], 'Complaines John

Swan and Robert Tinline the two quartermasters of the trade of weivers within the toune for themselves and in name and behalf of the corporation thereof' [PR1716].

Quartersides (kwar'-ur-sīdz) n. former name for a small piece of land in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1788 it was valued at £50, along with Ryecheester, when owned by Edgar Hunter of Linthill. It was recorded in the county valuation of 1788 being owned by Charles Riddell of Muselee and in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 having been purchased by Sir John Buchanan Riddell.

Queen (kween) n. Manasses (b.c.1790) from Ireland, he was a blacksmith in Hawick. He lived on the Round Close in 1841 and had moved to Wilton Kirkstyle by 1851. Living on Langlands Bank in 1861, he was a former framesmith. His wife was Mary, and their children included John, Ann, George, Christian, William, James and Alexander.

the Queen (thu-kween) n. nickname for one of 2 people (the other being ‘the King’) who lived on Sunnyside in Denholm in the late 19th century.

Queen Caroline (kween-kaw-ru-lin) n. Caroline Amelia of Brunswick-Wolfenbützel, wife of King George IV. The marriage was not happy, and their relationships were a great scandal of the time, the couple being separated for 25 years. In 1820, with the death of George III, she was effectively put on trial, claiming her right to be Queen, against the wishes of the new King. There was great commotion in Hawick, as elsewhere, with the Liberals supporting the Queen and the Tories favouring the King. A message of support was sent by the town to the Queen, which was apparently the first she had received. Supporters illuminated their windows the night the trial result was announced, and some non-supporters had their windows smashed.

Queen Mary see Mary Queen o Scots

Queen Mary’s Burn (kween-mā-reez-burn) n. stream joining the Hermitage Water west of the Castle, presumably named by an association with Mary Queen of Scots visit to Hermitage.

Queen Mary’s Well (kween-mā-reez-wel) n. spring on Hawthronside farm, where it is traditionally claimed that Mary Queen of Scots stopped to drink on her ride between Jedburgh and Hermitage Castle. The location is the second field from the farmhouse on the right-hand side of the road when going from Hawick to Bonchester. The field was also known as ‘Queen Mary’s Field’. The spring was widely used in the mid-19th century, and still existed in the early part of the 20th century, although the effects of drainage had moved its location somewhat (also known as ‘Mary’s Well’).

Queen o’ Fairies’ Hole (kween-ō-fā-reez-hōl) n. natural hole in the hillside in Liddesdale, on the south-west of Hunter’s Hill, to the east of Castleton.

The Queen o’ the Auld Scottish Border (thu-kween-ō-thu-awld-sko’-eesh-bōr-dur) n. song with words and music by Ian Seeley, written in 1995 and dedicated to Ian Landles. It was first performed by Elliot Goldie at the 1514 dinner of 1995 and included on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Michael Aitken. It is the 3rd of the 5 Hawick songs written by Seeley, and probably the one that has been performed the most.

the Queen's Heid (thu-kweenz-heed) n. the Queen's Head, a pub at the corner of the High Street and the Cross Wynd, address 32 High Street. The original building exists on a photograph from 1868. The building was rebuilt in 1886, when the proprietor was Robert Young and a projecting bowed corner was added later. It can also be seen in a photograph of 1903. Rugby trophies won by the Wanderers are on display here. The Labour Party used to meet in the upstairs rooms, and this is where Hawick Royal Albert were formed in 1946. The building is listed grade B.

the Queen's Mire (thu-kweenz-mīr) n. boggy area between the Priestthaugh and Braidlie Burns, so called because of Mary Queen of Scots 40 mile ride via there from Jedburgh to Hermitage to visit Bothwell. For many generations afterwards people could point out the spot where her horse was said to have become stuck. She is also supposed to have lost her pocket watch on the ride, this being found here about 250 years later by a shepherd (but also said to have been found by a shepherd at Penchrise in 1817). Based on Blaeu's map of 1654 (itself based on decades earlier manuscripts) it may have formerly been called 'Mosspatrick'.

queer (kweer) adj., arch. entertaining, amusing, humorous – '...They get some queer story frae Eppy M'Gee' [JT], very great, considerable, particularly in the phrase 'queer lot' – 'There must bei a queer lot o' money in th' world yet – notwithstanding short time an' bad trade' [HEx1921].

queer (kweer) n., arch. choir, the part of a church east of the nave, particularly referring to part of a pre-Reformation building. The gallery in St. Mary's had this name, this being the area with bench seating, some of which was rented annually to the highest bidder – 'Accompt of the money requisite for helping and pointing the kirk and queer of Hawick' [PR1713], '...had possessed the place near to John Elliot's seat in the queer ...' [PR1715], 'For avoiding confusion, the communicants are to go out att the Queer door' [PR1718] (also spelled 'queir', 'quire', etc.;

Quin (kwin) n. Roger (1850–1925) Border poet and wanderer, described as ‘the homeless poet’. His grandfather was described as a travelling tinker from Ireland, who married an aunt of Esther Faa-Blyths, Queen of the Gypsies. It is said that as a boy he was allowed to hold the skull of Robert Burns when he was reintroduced along with his eldest son. He wrote ‘Borderland and Other Poems’ (1910, 1933) and ‘Midnight in Yarrow and Other Poems’ (1918). A plaque near Galashiels reads ‘Here Roger Quin author of the Borderland gazed on Scotland’s Eden’, and there is a street in that town named after him.

Quinn (kwin) n. Edward ‘Eddie’ (1898–1982) well-known local accordion player, born in Berwickshire, he worked as a farm labourer at Carterhaugh for much of his life and retired to Eckford. He made two 78 r.p.m. recordings, released in 1929 and 1930. ‘Quinn’s Band’ was popular at dance venues throughout the Borders in the 1930s and 1940s.

the Quins (thu-kwinz, -kwunz) n. Hawick Harlequins, a ‘junior’ rugby team, playing in the Borders District League. Their clubrooms are at 6 Baker Street and their matches are played at Wilton Lodge Park. Their strip consists of a black, blue and gold hooped shirt and black socks. The name originally derived from the motley collection of shirts that they wore. They were the first local rugby team to play in Wales, in 1950.

the Quintinshill Rail Disaster

One of their highlight was playing in the Scottish Bowl final at Murrayfield in 2002. The unofficial club theme song is ‘The Mighty Quin(s)’. ‘The first 50 years: Hawick Harlequins R.F.C.’ was written by G.W. Fraser.

the Quintinshill Rail Disaster (thu-kwin'-inz-hil-rāl-dee-zaw-stur) n. tragedy of May 1915 on the Caledonian line, just north of Gretna Green. A packed troop train ran into a stationary local train, and an express ran into the wreckage. A total of 227 people were killed, making it Britain’s worst ever rail disaster. At least 3 men with a Hawick connection died.

the Quoitin Club (thu-kwoi'-in-klub) n. the Buccleuch Quoiting Club, a sporting organisation, with the game consisting of metal hoops or horseshoes being thrown at a metal stake. It was popular in the late 19th century, with pitches on Buccleuch Street, adjacent to the Buccleuch Bowling Club green. The club fell apart around WWII through lack of support, and the pitches were converted into the Henderson Garden. There was also another Club in the Mansfield area for a while, and in addition the game was played in Denholm.

the Quoitin Haugh (thu-kwoi'-in-hawf) n. popular name for the grassy banks of the Teviot between the Teviot Bridge and old suspension bridge in Denholm. Quoits were played here during the latter part of the 19th century until WWI. The field was also used for other sporting events, and also for church services in the summer. At the Denholm Ride-out the horses are usually held there.

quoits (kwoits) n., pl. game in which curved iron projectile are thrown at a stake in the ground in order to try to encircle it, also known as ‘horseshoes’. The game was popular in Hawick from the late 19th century until the 1930s, with a pitch on Buccleuch Street. There was also an area in Denholm used for the same purpose and a field next to Robertson Kirk used in the early 20th century.

quot (kwot) n., arch. the portion of a dead person’s estate payable for confirmation of the testament – ‘To be deuidit in thrie pairtis the deidis pairt is, iiijc lxxvℓ iiijjs. Quharof the quot is, xxiiij ℓ vs.’ [SB1574].

the Rabble Meetin (thu-raw-bul-mee-tin) n. name used to refer to the public meeting of 1887 which elected the new Common Riding Ceremonial Committee.

the Race Ball (rās-bal) n. former name for the Ball, used until the 1880s, with the earlier name being the ‘Cornet’s Dance’.

Committee responsible for organising the Common Riding race meetings, formed probably in the early 19th century, and originally having more influence than the Ceremonial Committee (which was only formally established in 1887). In 1865 they took over from the Cornet the task of collecting race funds, which in 1883 was replaced by an entrance charge for the Muir. The Provost usually served as the President, with the Secretary also being Clerk of the Course. In 1908 it became a sub-committee of the main Common Riding Committee.

the Race Course (th̥u-rās-kōrs) n. popular name for the horse-racing track at St. Leonard's Park.Race Course Park (rās-kōrs-pawrk) n. name for a field to the north of St. Leonard's Park race-course, between the enclosures known as 'Bailie's Hill' and 'Nipknowes Field'.the Racerigg (th̥u-rās-rig) n. former name, used in the 18th century, for part of the Common. The precise location is unknown, but it may have been where races were once held near Pilmuir Rig. It was stated in 1767 that it marked the southern end of the region of the Common where the Town Herd would typically use for the Hawick livestock (also written 'Racerig').the Races (th̥u-rā-seez) n. a race meeting has long been associated with the Common Riding, now being an intrinsic part of the Friday and Saturday festivities. The first explicit record of the races is in 1723, but they were probably happening much earlier. There were prizes from early times, some provided by the Town, e.g. in 1723 a 'saddle exposed to be run for in May last' is described, in 1725 the Council gave £2 'for this year's plate' and in 1727 'the cup for the race' is recorded. Early races may have been held at the Deidhaugh, but the first known location was at the Vertish, ending in 1819. For the next two years they were on a field behind the Vertish Hill, then moved to Pilmuir Rig in 1822 and remained there until 1853. These were the Friday morning races, which had no accompanying family entertainments. In the early 19th century they started at 11 a.m., with the crowds returning to Hawick for dinner (early in those days), before the afternoon races at the Haugh, which started at 5 p.m. They took place, along with the afternoon races and games, on the Common Haugh itself in 1854. The afternoon's events at the Haugh started with a 3-lap race by the Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men. Sports and other amusements also used to continue on the Haugh on the Saturday. Both the Upper and Under Haughs were used, with movable fences between them. In 1854 the Haugh was used for the last time (in the afternoon only), and the new race-course at St. Leonard's used for the first time (in the morning only). From 1855 all the races have been held at St. Leonard's, with Saturday races started in 1868. In 1856 there was a steeplechase for the first time. There were also foot races held at the Moor until 1863. In the latter part of the 19th century the Saturday was considered to be 'ladies day' (after the Ascot tradition), with the women of the town dressing up in their finery. Until 1865 most of the funds for the races and the games were collected by the Cornet and the Right-Hand man. Thereafter official collectors were appointed, with admission to the Moor introduced in 1883, and racecards first issued in 1889. The Races were last held under Jockey Club rules in 1876, and with the disbanding of the British Racing Club in 1895, the Races were then held under local rules. The Races were first filmed in 1900.

rack (rawk) n., arch. a stretch, a shallow wide ford, especially where the person crossing has to take a slanting course – 'They led him thro' the Liddel-rack, And also thro' the Carlisle sands' [T], 'Rack. Rackesse (ra-kes) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Adame Rakkis in Thorlieshope' in 1611 when he was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. He may have been related to the Armstrongs nicknamed 'Rakkes' (and spelling variants) at about the same time. George 'Geordie of the Hillhouse' (17th C.) thief from Liddesdale who is recorded in the 17th century. In about 1645 he, along with Lancie Armstrong of Catheigh and others, stole about 80 cows and oxen from England, and on the way back to Liddesdale returned the few animals belonging to a poor English minister, after he agreed to take snuff with them. It is unclear if his surname is a mis-transcription of a more familiar name.

Robert ‘Hobbie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1633 as ‘Hobby Rackes’. His shepherd Archie Armstrong ‘called Hollas, who duelltt in the Mearburnheid’ was captured for having a stolen cow in his possession (it is unclear if this corresponds to a more familiar surname).

rackit (raw-kee’, -ki’) pp., adj., arch. wrenched, sprained, twisted – ‘Or ease their bosoms rackit sair, Wi’ disappointment ill to bear’ [RDW], ‘A’ve gaen an rackeet masul wui raxin owre fer owre’ [ECS].

rad (rawd) adj., arch. afraid, apprehensive – ‘I’se raad he’ll toorfel’ (said at Newcastleton, c.1860) [GW], ‘... E’en let him pop, I’m little rad I founder, Though excommunication grace the ban’ [JoHa], ‘In lith an’ limb we’re soon’ an’ hale, Sae troth we’re little ra’d o’ smoorin’ [JoHa] (also written ‘raad’).

Rad (rawd) n., arch. popular term for a Radical in the early-to-mid 19th century – ‘One of the ‘Rads’ told the writer that once a tail came off in his hands ...’ [RM].

Radcliffe (rawd-klif) n. Sir Cuthbert of Dilston (d.1545) son of Sir Edward. He was Sheriff of Cumberland, like his father. He also served as Deputy Warden of the English Middle Marches 1540–3 and Captain of Berwick 1544–5. He was captured by the Scots at the Battle of Haddon Rig in 1542. He was described as ‘a wise man well learned and well minded to justice but no adventurer to the field’. He married Margaret, daughter of Lord Clifford and was succeeded by his son Sir George. James (b.c.1770s) spinner in Hawick according to the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. It is possible that the same James married Violet Nichol in Langholm in 1797. Sir John (c.1480–1527) from Crosthwaite in Cumbria. He was an English commander of part of the force that raided the Borders under Lord Dacre in 1513. His detachment of 500 men burned ‘the town of Dyker’, which was probably Dykeraw in Southdean Parish, explicitly ‘thei layed corne and straw to the dore and burnit it both rofe and flore and so smoked them out’. They then burned Southdean and Lustruther towns, taking prisoners and goods. Thomas 3rd Earl of Sussex (c.1525–1583) also Viscount Fitzwalter and Lord of Egremont and Burnell. He was Lord Deputy of Ireland and became Lord Chamberlain under Elizabeth. His mother was Elizabeth Howard, sister of the Surrey who fought at Flodden. He was President of the ‘Council in the North’ 1568–72, suppressing a revolt of northern English earls. He then led part of the English force that invaded across the Border in 1570, along with Lord Hunsdon. They were responsible for the razing of many towns and buildings, including Hawick on April 18th and Branhholme the following day, this requiring gunpowder. Apparently (according to Stowe’s Chronicle) the Hawick people unthatched their houses, burned it in the streets and fled, leaving nothing for the English army. There is a tradition (recounted by Robert Wilson) that the townspeople attacked enemy patrols into the night, but there is no evidence to support this. His force also destroyed the Kerr strongholds of Ferniehirst and Crailing, while simultaneously Scrope’s men laid waste to the Scottish West March. As many as 300 villages and about 50 towers were destroyed (formerly ‘Ratcliff’).

rade (rād) pp., arch. rode – ‘They rade the proper place about: But the laid he was the wiser man, For he had left nae gear without’ [CPM], ‘An’ efter priggig doon its price, A bargain forthwith made; Bestrode its back, an’ homeward bound Wi’ conscious pride he rade’ [FL], ‘... an mosstrooper an reever rade bye ti foray an fecht an reipin raid’ [ECS], ‘We rade a’ nicht i’ the dark, And swam the Eden in flude ...’ [TK], ‘The day they rade the mairches The wather was its best ...’ [WL] (also written ‘raed’ and ‘raid’; the past participle is ‘ridden’ as in English).

radeness (rād-nis) n., poet. fear, fright – ‘An’ he saith untill them, Why are ye fu’ o’ radniss, O ye o’ little faith?’ [HSR].

radge (raj) n. a crazy or irrational person, adj. crazy, wild, mad, furious, randy (probably from Romany).

radgy (ra-jee) adj. randy, sexually aroused, lewd.

radio (rā-dee-ō) n. a new-fangled invention whereby sounds carried by modulated electromagnetic waves can be transmitted over a wide area and received in people’s homes. It arrived properly in Hawick in the 1930s, and Reid's Relay helped Teries improve their reception. The 1934 Colour Bussing was broadcast by the BBC, and selected items from the 1937 Common Riding were also recorded and broadcast later. Local radio programming arrived in the 1980s.

Radio Borders (rā-dee-ō-bōr-durz) n. local independent radio station, operating out of Tweedbank, set up in 1989.

Radio Roxburgh (rā-dee-ō-roks-bu-ru) n. set up in 1985 to serve Hawick Cottage Hospital, it ran until 1989.

Radio Tweed (rād-ee-ō-tweed) n. part of BBC radio Scotland, with a small amount of local programming at certain times of day. It began operating in 1983.

radness (rawd-nis) n., arch. fear, apprehension – 'An' he saith untill them, Why are ye fu' o' radniss, O ye o' little faith?' [HSR].

Radolphus (raw-dol-fis) n. (11th/12th C.) first Abbot of the abbey in Selkirk, established about 1113. He resigned in 1117 and returned to Tiron in France. (13th C.) Rector of Hawick church who witnessed a charter of Laurence Avenel in the period 1260–68 (may be spelled 'Rodolphus' or written 'Radulph'; the modern version is 'Ralph').

rae (rā) n., poet. a roe deer – 'My beloefet is like ane rae or ane yung hart ...' [HSR], 'Billhope braes for bucks and raes, And Carit-rigs for swine, And Tarras for the guid bull-trout, If it be ta'en in time' [T].

Rae (rā) n. Agnes (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her surname is recorded as 'Ree'. Agnes (d.1795) recorded as a midwife in the Hawick register of deaths. She could also be the person recorded when 'Agness Rea's Mother' died in 1781. Andrew (16th C.) rented part of Standhill to John Turnbull of Knowe in 1659. This name is possibly an error for 'Ker'. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Rigg (i.e. Caerlenrig) in 1730 when his son William was baptised. Andrew (18th C.) recorded as 'Servitor to Harwood' when his daughter Jean was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738. Other children baptised there who might be his included 'Nanse' (b.1741), Thomas (b.1744) and Helen (b.1746). Andrew (18th/19th C.) carter at Turnpikeside in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. In the 1799 list he was recorded as tenant in Turnpikeside and in 1801 as 'Husbandman'. He may be the Andrew who married Isabel Curle in Southdean in 1803 and had children including James (b.1805), John (b.1810), Mary (b.1813), William (b.1821) and Andrew (b.1826). James (b.1802), baptised in Southdean, with no mother's name given, may also have been his child. Colin (19th C.) married Sarah Little in Hawick in 1851. Davie (1972/3–) professional sprinter. He moved to Hawick at about the age of 8 and became involved with the Teviotdale Harriers, but switched to sprinting, becoming part of the Billie Edgar school and later training with Alan Scott. He won the British Youth Sprint Championships in 1989 and 1990 and in 1999 won the British 90 m, 100 m, 110 m and 200 m championships. He also won 3 Hawick Games sprints. He took up coaching in 2008. Douglas (19th C.) married Mina Lamb in 1844, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Robertson Parishes. Douglas (19th C.) married Isabella Waldie in Wilton in 1850. George (18th/19th C.) servant at Hallrule. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Ferguson and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: John (b.1805); Alexander (b.1807); Martha (b.1809); Betty (b.1811); William (b.1814); Helen (b.1819); and Margaret (b.1821). He could be the weaver George in Hawick who was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and as a labourer in 1801. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Christian Turnbull and their children included: Janet (b.1819); Anne (b.1822); and Thomas (b.1824). Gilbert (18th/19th C.) carter at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Rev. Hector (c.1683–1639) received his degree from Edinburgh University in 1603 and became minister at Nisbet in 1608. He was translated to Hownam in 1609 and signed the National Covenant in 1638, probably in Hawick. Hugh (14th C.) cleric connected with Cavers Parish in 1387 (and written 'Raa'). In 1389 Henry Wardlaw was given the vicarage of Cavers, void after he obtained the church of Stractaven. He was also referred to as subdean of Glasgow. James (15th/16th C.) witness to a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Braxholme, signed in Edinburgh in 1500. His name was recorded as 'Jacobus Raa'. Probably the same 'Jacobus ra' was recorded in 1502 when he was presented by the Lord of Buccleuch at the Justiceaire in Jedburgh as his 'suitor' for the lands of Eckford. James (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Braxholme, when he died in 1552.

He is listed as 'Jacobus Ra eius seruo', presumably meaning he was a servant of William. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Bessie (b.1716); Maddie (b.1719); James (b.1721); and Helen (b.1725). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1764); Isabel (b.1766); and James (b.1777), baptised in Jedburgh Parish. He could be the James, son of Walter and Margaret Gardener, baptised in Hawick in 1743. It is also possible that his children (with no mother's name given): Robert (b.1768), baptised in Cavers; Elizabeth (b.1769), baptised in Bedrule; John (b.1771), baptised in Bedrule; Jean (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1772), baptised in Cavers; Walter (b.1774), baptised in Bedrule; and Jean (again, b.1779), baptised in Cavers. The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Scott (probably a relative of his wife) and Walter Rae (perhaps his father). James (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Redheugh. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He could be the James, son of William and Rachel Scott who was born in Hawick in 1764. His son William (a stockingmaker) died in 1838. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Crozier in 1790 and their children included: Janet (b.1790); Rachel (b.1795); Margaret (b.1797); John (b.1800); and William (b.1802). The witnesses in 1790 were shoemaker Robert Oliver, junior, and William Park. He could be the James who (along with Robert Oliver) in 1791 witnessed a baptism for Walter Elder. James (b.1777/8) born in Maxton Parish, he was a labourer in Cavers Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Westside with his wife Betty Henry and children Margaret (b.1834/5) and Agnes (b.1837/8). In 1847 the Kirk Session agreed to give him and his wife 4 shillings per week on the condition that they gave up their right to their house (which had belonged to his father-in-law). James (19th C.) married Beatrix Stewart in Hawick in 1846. James (19th C.) married Isabella White in Hawick in 1852. James (20th C.) plumber in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1923. This year is often referred to as the 'Plumber's Year' because of the torrential rain, which blew away the shelter at St. Leonard's. Janet 'Jenny Saut Haa' (d.1758) elderly wife of the owner of the Salt Hall, who cut her throat in the eastern attic of the Salt Hall in 1758 (or perhaps 68), causing uproar when she was buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. With the minister away, the authorities allowed the burial there, against some popular feeling. On the following morning the coffin fell upon her husband when he opened the Saut Haa door. the coffin was reburied, but appeared again the next day. It was then temporarily buried at the most northerly point of Wilton Common, until the minister returned and insisted on burial back in the churchyard. Her final burial place was in the area reserved for unchristened babies in the churchyard. There are similarities with the story of Tibbie Tamson in Selkirk. Jean (1731/2-1838) resident of Deloraine, who reached the age of 106. During 'the forty-five' she helped at Branxholme to hide cattle and household goods from the Highlanders. She was a great-great-grandmother, and there were 5 generations alive at once. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret and their son Walter was baptised in 1654. John (19th C.) married Janet Hadden in Hawick in 1706. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1708 he was described as 'creepie in ye toun' in a baptismal record. He was also described in 1723 as 'creepie in this toun' when money was given for a coffin for his child. He married Helen 'Furgrie' in 1708 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1708); Helen (b.1711); and Jean (b.1714). The witnesses in 1708 were Bailie George Martin and James Falsyde and in 1714 were 'customer' Andrew Scott and 'officer' Alexander Young. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Lymiecleuch in 1731 when his son Thomas was baptised. John (18th C.) married Margaret Anderson in Cavers in 1729. John (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1730. John (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Minto in 1733. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Appletreehall in 1744. He married Helen Cook and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1744, with witnesses James Dryden and James Scott (and his name appearing to be written 'Real'). On the same day he witnessed a baptism for James Blaikie in Appletreehall. John (18th C.) married Violet Scott in Hawick in 1760. John (18th C.) married Agnes Oliver in Bedrule in 1771. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Scott in 1769, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their daughter Beatrix was baptised in Hawick in 1773. John (18th

C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was in Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1780. His children included Anna (b.1776) and William (b.1780). He was surely related to Thomas, who lived in the same place. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Murray and their children included: James (b.1780); John (b.1783); and Nelly (b.1785). John 'Jock' (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. A story is told of Rev. Charters of Wilton finding him up his fruit tree – 'What are you doing there, John?' 'Naething ava', sir'. 'Strange man, John, all that trouble for nothing' [BP]. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (b.c.1780) carter in Hawick. He was listed as a carrier in Hawick on the 1799 list for the Militia ballot and again in 1801. He was at about 6 Kirkwynd in 1841. Walter, a shoemaker who lived next door, was probably his brother. His wife was Margaret and their children included: William; James, shoemaker who married Isabella White; Douglas; John; Walter, who married Ann Samuel; and Isabell, who married Thomas Borthwick. It is possible that he is the son of Thomas and Mary Scott baptised in Hawick in 1779. John (b.1781/2) cotton handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row with Jemima (either his daughter or granddaughter). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret 'Cummin' in 1805 and their son John was baptised in 1806. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Dalglish in 1807 and their children included: Thomas (b.1807); and Andrew (b.1809). John (18th/19th C.) listed as a poulterer on the Sandbed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Probably the same John is a 'salt and egg dealer' at the Kirkgate in 1837. John (b.1801/2) stocking weaver in Hawick. He was living at about 29 High Street in 1841 and 42 or 44 High Street in 1851. He married Isabella Turnbull and their children included: Elizabeth and Jane (b.1840); and Isabella (b.1842). John (b.1803/4) born in Cavers Parish, he was a stocking needle maker in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and on the Howegate in Slater's 1852 directory. Probably the same John was one of 5 men tried for rioting and assault at the 1837 election in Hawick; he was found guilty and 'put to the horn'. He was also recorded in Hawick Jail in 1849 and 1850. He lived on the Kirkwynd in 1841, with his wife Catherine, on the Mid Raw in 1851 and was boarding on O'Connell Street in 1861. His wife Catherine (b.1799) was daughter of Arthur

Balbirnie, writer of 'The Auld Sang'. He had a daughter who died in 1838. John (19th C.) married Mary Wood in Wilton in 1828. John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Miller in Wilton in 1832. John (b.1805/6) carpenter and cabinet-maker in Hawick, born in Wilton Parish. He was on the Crescent in 1841, in the Village in 1851 and on Drumlanrig Place in 1861. He married Elizabeth Miller in Wilton in 1832 and their children included Thomas (b.1832/3), John (b.1834/5), William N. (b.1843/4), Mary N. (b.1845/6) and Walter. John (b.1815/6) originally from Aberdeen, he was a woollen cloth finisher in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at '6 House, Weendland'. His wife was Isabella (from Hawick) and they had a son Hugh. He also had step-children Margaret and David Wilson. John (19th C.) listed in Slaters' 1852 directory as an earthenware dealer on the High Street. There is a separate listing for a High Street greengrocer of the same name. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (19th C.) married Isabella Kennedy in Hawick in 1839. John (b.1825/6) wool spinner in Hawick, born in Wilton. In 1861 he was living at 11 Back Row, 'Second Back House'. He married Elizabeth Ann Ekron in 1847 and their children included: John (b.c.1847); Margaret (b.c.1848); John (b.1850), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk; and Jemima (b.1853), also baptised in Hawick Free Kirk; Mary (b.1856); Helen (b.1858); James (b.1860); and Janet (b.1865). John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Welsh in Hawick in 1845. John (19th C.) married Helen Gentle in 1847, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. John (1897/8–1975) born in Hawick, he was a plumber. He was Cornet in 1923 and later lived at Towerburn. His year was known as one of the wettest ever, with jokes made about his occupation. He married his Cornet's Lass Isabella 'Bella' Neish Elder (who died in 1989, aged 87). John 'Jock' (20th C.) pipe major of the Scout Band in the years 1960–62. He once had the honour of being Solo Piper at the Edinburgh Tattoo. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Mr. ?? (18th C.) owner of a large tract of land stretching between where Havelock Street and Dovecote Street now are. The land was ultimately divided, part becoming Dovemount, and being the site of the well that supplied much of Wilton for more than a century. Robert (17th C.) married Bessie Gray in Robertson in 1679. Robert (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Loan, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Kirkton according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Eastcote according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Robert (b.c.1790) gardener at Dovemount. He was listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was also there on the 1841 census. His wife was Mary and their children included James, John and Isabella. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Wilson and their children included: Andrew (b.1636); and Thomas (b.1639). Thomas (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Slaidhills. His son Alexander was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1707. He could be the Thomas whose daughter Margaret married James, son of Walter Scott in Hawick in 1717. Thomas (18th C.) resident at Milsingtonshiel in the 1760s and 1770s when his children were baptised in Robertson Parish. He is probably the Thomas at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1774 when his son Thomas was baptised. It seems likely that these were all his children (baptised in Robertson Parish, with no mother's name given): John (b.1762); Margaret (b.1763); James (b.1765); Betty (b.1767); Jean (b.1771); and Thomas (b.1774). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1780 for James Knox. He married Janet Murray in 1774, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Thomas (b.1775) and James (b.1779). Thomas (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Mary Scott in 1775 and their children included: Andrew (b.1778); and John (b.1779). The witnesses in 1778 were Joseph Goven and Mungo Armstrong. Thomas (18th C.) recorded in Denholm in 1772, 1775 and 1778. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Jean (b.1772); Janet (b.1773); Agnes (b.1775); and Gilbert (b.1778). Thomas (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785, when his name is recorded as 'Rhea'. He also paid in 1787 and 1791. He was a carter in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who married Janet Gledstains in Hawick in 1799. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for William Aitchison in Hawick Parish in 1797. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Scott in 1792. Thomas (18th/19th C.) weaver in Damside in Wilton. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Probably the same Thomas was weaver at Roughhough according to the ballot in 1799. He was confusingly recorded separately at Roughhough in 1799 among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish'. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was a weaver at Damside. Perhaps the same Thomas married Christian Murray in 1801 and had children, baptised in Wilton, including: Thomas (b.1803); John (b.1805); Christian and Janet (b.1812); James (b.1814); Douglas and Walter (b.1820). Thoms (b.c.1770s) labourer at Birkwoodfoot according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) charged with sheep-stealing from Phaup in 1818. He was caught because of selling the skins in Hawick and jailed in Jedburgh. He was probably hanged. Thomas (19th C.) married Agnes Henry in Cavers in 1831. Thomas Ian (1926–89) educated partly at Hawick High School, he studied history at St. Andrews University and eventually became keeper of manuscripts at the National Library of Scotland. He wrote 'The Administration of the Scottish Frontier 1513–1603' (1966), 'Scotland at the time of Shakespeare' (1965), edited 'The union of 1707 its impact on Scotland' (1974), co-edited 'The Burgh Court book of Selkirk, 1503–45' (1960). He also wrote several other articles, including some for the Transactions and was a member of the Archæological Society. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Harvey and their children included: Robert (b.1689). Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Margaret Gardner and their children included James (b.1740), William (b.1741), James (again, b.1743), an unnamed child (b.1745), George (b.1758) and Agnes (b.1762). The 1743 baptism was witnessed by shoemaker John Scott and merchant William Riddell, and the 1758 one by shoemaker George Gardner and William Veitch. Walter (18th C.) resident in Hawick. He was fined and imprisoned in Dumfries in 1760 for attacking Leonard Fleming, an excise officer. When his sentence was done he was to be set on the pillory at Dumfries with a label on his breast reading 'I stand here for having been guilty of committing a most atrocious battery upon the person of an excise-officer when in the exercise of his duty'. He could be the same man as the Hawick tailor. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Whitfield in 1772. He married Ann Walker in Ashkirk in 1770 and their children included: Gilbert (b.1770), baptised in Ashkirk; William (b.1773), baptised in Wilton; James (b.1775), baptised in Selkirk; Adam (b.1777), baptised in Selkirk; Anne (b.1780), baptised in Selkirk; John (b.1786), baptised in Yarrow; and Jane (b.1789), baptised in Yarrow. The witnesses in 1772 were Walter Scott and James Robson. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott at Whitfield in Wilton Parish in 1772. Walter (b.c.1785) shoemaker on the Kirk Wynd. In 1841 he is recorded at about No. 6 and in 1851 is on Slitrig Crescent. His wife was Mary and children included Thomas, Robert, Andrew and Margaret. He was surely related to John, the carter who lived next door, perhaps his brother. Walter town street sweeper, who came 2nd in the 2004 Citizen of the Year vote and joint 3rd in 2005. William (d.1367) Precen-tor of the Diocese of Glasgow, he was elected as Bishop of Glasgow in 1338, following the death of John Wishart. He was consecrated in 1339 and remained Bishop until his death. He thus had authority over Teviotdale. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he had a cow belonging to him stolen from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. His name is given as 'Willelmo raix'; how-ever, it is possible he is the same man recorded as William 'rany' in 1493. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mar-garet Stoddart and their children included John (b.1648) William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the 'Cottars' on the Hearth Tax roll there. Will-iam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott in 1703, who was also from Hawick. William (17th/18th C.) married Jean Gowanlock in Kirkton in 1707. William (17th/18th C.) carrier of Hawick Parish. He mar-ried Agnes Hasswell in 1707 and their children included: James (b.1707); Marion (b.1708); Will-iam (b.1711); John (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); Walter (b.1716); William (b.1719); and Isobel (b.1722). The witnesses in 1711 were Fran-cis Gledstains and smith John Scott and in 1713 were merchants Robert Robson and Will-iam Craig. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Mary was bap-tised in 1713, with no mother's name given. William (18th C.) married Bessy Gledstains in Minto in 1738. Their children probably (although with no mother's name recorded) included: Is-abel (b.1739); James (b.1742); William (b.1743); James (again, b.1746); Betty (b.1748); and John (b.1750). William (18th C.) resident of Lil-liesleaf Parish. His daughter Anna was baptised in 1739. William (18th C.) resident of Ha-wick Parish. He married Rachel Scott in 1756 and their children included Jane (b.1757), Mar-ion (b.1759), James (b.1764), Agnes (b.1768) and William (b.1770). William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His daughter Betty was bap-tised in 1786. William (b.c.1770s) spinner in Ha-wick. He is listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. William (b.c.1780) rsident of Dryden in Hawick Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. William (19th C.) married Mary Ann Dryden in Wilton Parish in 1826. Their chil-dren born in Roxburghshire were: Jean (b.1831); Janet (b.1832); and John (b.1834). In 1835 they emigrated to the Montreal area, following the Dryden family a year earlier. They then moved to North Dumfries Township, near Galt in Ontario. 7 other children were born in Canada. William (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Mitchellhill and their son William was bap-tised in 1822. William (19th C.) married Eliza-beth Little in Robertson in 1832. William (19th C.) married Margaret Nichol in Cavers in 1836. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in South-dean in 1837. William (b.1808/9) from Saline in Fife, he was a master gardener in Wilton. In 1861 he was living in Upper Damside with his wife He-len, who was from Kelso. William (b.1812/3) painter on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 48 High Street, with his wife Mary. They had a daughter Isabella S. The death of his aunt Agnes Rae is recorded in Hawick in 1838. He may be the William who married Mary Filmer in Wilton in 1840. William (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was shepherd at Rue-castle in 1851 and at Bairnkine in 1861. His wife was Helen (from Oxnam) and their children included Isabella, Jane, George, Walter, John, Mary and Alexander. William (b.1816/7) fuller in Hawick. He was a widower living on Dickson Street in 1861. Raeburnfit (rā-burn-fi) n. site of a small Ro-man fort in Dumfries & Galloway, where the Rae Burn joins the White Esk, a few miles north of Eskdalemuir. It marks the end of the Roman road from the upper Borthwick valley via Craik Cross. There may have been an extension of this road over Groundstone Height to Harelaw and towards Newstead.

Raegill Bogs (rā-gil-bogz) n., pl. marshy area to the south of Hermitage Castle, just by Toftsholm Sike. There is an example of a ‘burnt mound’ there, as well as the remains of 4 shieling-huts and an area of enclosed rig.

Rae-knowe (rā-now) n. rising ground on which the farmhouse of Nether Bonchester stood, near the present-day Bonchester farmhouse.

Raesknowe (rās-now) n. farm on the Allan Water, behind Newmill, on the opposite (east) side of the Allan Water from Allanhaugh tower. It was a home of the Scotts in the 16th century, and afterwards a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, and being contained within the Lordship of Whitchesters. In 1579 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh sold the annual rent of the land for £100 from Walter Scott of Todrig. In a 1627 valuation it is described as paying ‘presentlie in stok and teynd 26 bolls; estimat in stok to 14, and 3 in parsonage, 4 lbs. in vicarage’. David Scott of Raesknowe, related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, is listed as one of the ‘pensioners of Buccleuch’ by Scott of Satchells. It is shown in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 231 acres, bounded by Whitchesters, Newbigging, the Allan Water and the Teviot, and with Reasknowe Mill being a separate farm at its south end. The former small tower there was already in ruins by 1663. In the period 1690–96 the farm was jointly leased by Walter Bell, John Armstrong, Walter Riddell and David Graham. In 1698 it was leased by John Armstrong, Walter Riddell and David Graham. In 1694 the householders listed there were Walter Bell, David Graham, John Armstrong and George Wilson (shepherd). Robert Gledstains was a tailor there in at least 1700–19. John Armstrong was still there in 1706. Robert Graham was there in 1708. John Graham was tenant there in about 1710 and William Reid in 1719. In the 18th century the area was a small thriving hamlet, which had a schoolmaster appointed in 1723 to teach the poor children of the neighbourhood. William Anderson was there in 1742. Archibald Douglas was farmer there in 1797 and George Heatley was living there in 1801. A bronze jug was dug up there around 1835, having 3 feet, a handle and a spout, probably mediæval (also called ‘Raes-knowes’; it is ‘Raisknowis’ in an undated 16th century document, ‘Reahousknow’ in 1579 and 1582, ‘Raisknow’ in 1627, ‘Raesknow’ in 1640, ‘Raeknow’ in 1641, ‘Raeknowes’ in 1690, ‘Raeknow’ in 1692, ‘Reasknow’ in 1694, ‘Raes Knoll’ in 1704, ‘Raes-knowes’ in 1717, ‘Raesknows’ in 1718, ‘Roseknow’ in 1797 and ‘Raes Knowe’ in 1841; it is marked ‘Reesknow’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but incorrectly placed in the middle of Hawick Moor; the name may related to roe deer).

Raesknowe Mill (rās-now-mil) n. former corn mill on the Allan Water, north of the farm of Raesknowe, an alternative name for Allanhaugh Mill. It is shown in 1718 as a separate farm to Raesknowe, consisting of 14 acres on the haugh opposite to where the Rumpy Sike meets the Allan, with the mill itself at the east side, near where the foot of the North Burn. The mill lade appears on the map, starting near Lochburnfoot and running along the east side of the Allan, to join again after the mill (it is Raesknows milne in 1718).

Raeson Park (rā-sin-pawrk) n. street off the right of Stirches Road, built in 1928 and named after builders John Rae & Son, Victoria Road.

Raff (rawf) n. Rev. Eric Maitland Kirk (1892–1927) son of William Watson of Melbourne and Victoria Black, and grandson of William of Woodlee, Forres. He was educated in Melbourne, graduating in 1915 and being ordained there the following year. He was then at Efate Island, New Hebrides Mission until 1923 and came to Scotland the following year, becoming assistant at St. Michael’s, Dumfries and then was appointed to Rosyth. He became minister at St. Mary’s in March 1926, but died at Bournemouth only a year later. He married Ruth, daughter of John Baird.

raffle (raw-ful) n., arch. a lottery, in the 19th century specifically an event organised to raise money for people in ill-health or who were emigrating etc., prizes being won by dice throws.

ragabuss (raw-ga-bash) n., arch. a ragamuffin, good-for-nothing – ‘He was nothing but a liar and a reprobate, and a Jacobite villain and knave, and ... a ragabast [sic]’ [Ash1712], adj. very poor, destitute – ‘Rag-a-buss, A designation given to those who are very poor, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also written ‘rag-a-buss’, ‘ragabash’, etc.).

Ragabuss (raw-ga-bus) n. nickname of an itinerant around the early years of the 19th century. He engaged Wull Slush in a steeplechase on foot at the Common Riding one year (when held at the Vertish), the race degenerating into a fight.

Ragarth (ra-garth) n. former lands in Liddesdale, located on the Kershope burn and attached to the estates of Mangerton. They are recorded as being worth 7 shillings and 6 pence in a rental list c.1376 in the charters of the Douglasses of Morton. In 1541 ‘Ragarth, Sorbe, Sorbetrees’ was part of the property of the Laird of Meriantoun, valued at 10 merks, and separately ‘half of Regarthe’ was also listed, with a value of 5 merks. It is ‘Raegirth’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, on the north side of the Kershope Burn, east of Kershope (it is possible it is related to Raegill Knowes, close to Kershope Bridge).

Ragarthshaw (ra-garth-shaw) n. former farm in Liddesdale, in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ according to a c.1376 rental roll, with a value of 6 shillings. It was presumably near the main farm of Ragarth (recorded as ‘Ragarthschaw’).

raggit (raw-gi, -gee) adj. ragged – ‘I doot the sight nae pleasure can thee gi’e: My raggit breeks, bedaub’d wi’ dirt an’ soil’ [JoHa], ‘O! raggit poverty! o’ rascals chief, How many waes thou brings to mortal man!’ [JoHa], ‘A raggit cout a race has won, And sae might little Jock’ [JT].

the Raggit Schuil (thu-raw-gi’-skil, -gee’-skil) n. former name for Drumlanrig School applied by those from elsewhere in the town. The name was also used for the Mission School of Allars Kirk, which was on Allars Crescent in the 1870s, with Mr. Robert Grieve sometimes acting as teacher.

the Ragman Rolls (thu-rawg-min-rōlz) n., pl. list of names of those Scots swearing allegiance to Edward I of England. The smaller roll was signed at Norham in 1291, and the larger one at Berwick in 1296, after Edward was victorious at the Battle of Dunbar. There were more than 1,500 names of Scottish landowners, clergymen and Burgesses, making this a valuable historical record. The attachment of seals also gives a unique insight into the heraldry of the time. The communities of Jedburgh and Roxburgh were among burghs that paid homage. The roll includes the following local men, (a sub-set of those described as ‘of Roxburgh County’ unless otherwise stated): Adam, Parson of Fouldone or Souldone (probably ‘Soudon’); Emme de Almere (Alemoor in Selkirkshire); Rogier de Almere (Alemoor in Selkirkshire); Alisaundre de Bailliol (or ‘Bailiol’ or ‘Bailiol’ of Cavers); William de Bradeleye (possibly Braidlie on Hermitage); Thomas de Chartres; William de Chartres; John de Chesolm (from Berwickshire); Richard de Chesehelm; John Comyn de Badenach (senior and junior, Barons of Bedrule); Johan de Conevethe (Parson of Ancrum); James de Crak (in Selkirkshire, possibly Craik); Simon de Cresseuelle (possibly Cresswell in Hassendean Parish); Robert de Dene (Parson of Wilton); Gwy de Denum (Denholm); Randulf de Derum (possibly an error for ‘Denum’); Philip de Dryden; Johan de Ethereston (possible Adderstone); William de Fausyde (possibly in Southdean Parish); Richard de Flex; Herbert de Gledestan (of Lanarkshire, direct ancestor of the local family); Adam de Gourlay; Robert Grundi de Neuton (who possibly gave his name to Groundistone); Aleyn Gurnay (possibly ‘Gourlay’); Johan de Harden; Robert de Hawyk (or ‘Hauewyk’); Adam de Hep (probably ‘Heap’, but perhaps ‘Hepburn’); Alisaundre de Hirdemaneston (probably ‘Hermiston’ near Lilliesleaf); Adam de Hodolm (of Dumfriesshire, probably holder of Kirk Borthwick); Wautier de Holcote (Hoscote perhaps?); Henry de Hommes (possibly Whames on Borthwick Water); Robert de Huntelegh (presumably Huntly); Johan de Lillesclif (Lilliesleaf); Johan de Lillesclyue (in Peeblesshire, possibly the same man); Agneys Louel (‘qe fu la femme Henry’, i.e. widow of Henry Lovel); Morice Louel (Parson of Little Cavers); Thomas de Rillewod (possibly ‘Rulewood’); Robert fiz Rauf (Parson of the Church of St. Cuthbert of Ewesdale); William de Rotherford (Parson of ‘Lillesclyue’, i.e. Lilliesleaf); Adam de Roule; Aleyn de Roule (Parson of Roule); Thomas de Roule; William de Rouley (possibly an error for ‘Rule’); William de Rucastel; Adam de Rukelton (probably Riccalton, but also could be Riccarton); Adam de Rykeldon (probably the same man); Sir Hugo Rydel (probably related to the Riddells of that ilk); Richard Le Scot de Murthoxton (later of Rankleburn); William Scot; Sire Johan de Seint Michel; Johan de Seint Michel (separately); Sire Wautier de Sherwynclawe (possibly Mervinslaw); Sir Nicholas de Soules; Thomas de Soules; John de Stonesleghe (probably Stonedge); Marie de Synton; Ingram de Toftes (possibly near Kirkton); Robert de Toftes; William de Toftes; Robert Waugh (or ‘Walgh’ or ‘Walugh’) de Hep (probably Heap); Richard de Witton (Parson of Hawick); and possibly others who are harder to identify with the Hawick area (the origin of the name may be from the ribbons attached to some of the seals).

raid (rād) n., arch. a foray on horseback, mounted attack – ‘Now Liddesdale has ridden a raid, But I wat they had better staid at hame ...’ [CPM], ‘But yet for a his cracking crouse, Herew’d the raid of the Red-Swire’ [CPM] (note that this word was revived by Sir Walter Scott and became standard English for a sudden attack in general).

the Raid o the Redeswire (thu-rād-ō-thu-reed-swīr, reedz-wIr) n. sometimes referred to as the last battle between Scotland and England, taking place near the Carter Bar in 1575. The event was apparently an accidental skirmish, taking place at a Warden Court, held at the Carter Fell, when hostilities suddenly broke out between the two sides. Sir John Carmichael led the Scots who beat Sir John Forster's men, with the timely arrival of the Jedburgh contingent with their cry 'Jethart's here', turning the battle. The Hawick men there were led by Little Gladstain 'good at need', with the 'Laird's Wat' of Goldielands also present, along with many Elliots, Armstrongs, etc. Sir John Heron, one of the English leaders, was slain, and the Warden taken prisoner. It is said that 5 Scotsmen and 6 Englishmen were killed. The battle site, near the Carter Bar, is commemorated by the Redeswire Stone and is the destination for the most arduous ride as part of the Jethart Callant's festival. It is recorded months later that proclamations were posted at the Mercat Cross of Hawick and other towns, instructing anyone who had taken goods from the Englishmen during the skirmish to return them and prohibiting anyone from raiding into England or to threaten the peace. A romanticised version of the tale is told in a ballad of the same name. This exists in part of the 'Bannatyne Manuscript'. It was first printed as 'The Ballad of the Reid-Squair' in Ramsay's 'Ever Green' (1724), and appears with the same verses, but slightly altered words, in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784) and later in Scott's 'Minstrelsy'. The manuscript appears to have been written about the late 17th century, but almost certainly was transcribed from a version passed through oral tradition. It contains a much larger number of names than most ballads (although some of them are somewhat garbled), and hence must have been written by someone in remembrance of the events of 1575 – 'Then Tividale came to wi' speed, The Sheriffe brought the Douglas down, Wi' Cranstane, Gledstain, good at need, Baith Rewle Water and Hawick town' [T] (there are many spelling variants, the manuscript of the ballad reading 'Rid Square').

raif (rāf) n., poet. plunder, booty – 'Where wi' herry and spulzie, wi' raif and wi' stouth, We stammached our hunger and quenched our drouth' [JTe] (cf. rieve).

Ralph’s Acre (rawlfs-ā-kur) n. lands adjacent to Trinitylands, mentioned in the rental returns for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. This could be the same place referred to as ‘Blaikie’s Acre’ in the 16th century.

Ralphtree Grain (rawlf-tree-grān) n. small stream in Liddesdale which rises on Tinnis Hill and flows into Todhunter Grain and then the Tinnis Burn. An old sheepfold shows that shepherds worked in even as remote a place.

Ralston (rawl-stin) n. John (19th C.) resident of Riccarton Station in 1868.

Ralton (rawl-tin) n. former lands in Liddesdale, to the south-west of Redheugh. Modern maps show the farm of Raltonside on the Ralton Burn. George Armstrong was recorded there in 1502 and Ingram Armstrong in 1535, along with Robert and Archibald Armstrong. In 1541 the lands were valued at 3 pounds and 7 shillings, with tenants Robert, Ninian and Thomas Armstrong. Ingram Armstrong there is recorded in a 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire and related areas, along with John alias Ralton. This is probably the 'Rouraltonholme' possessed by John Scott in 1632 and also the 'Ratounholme' listed among the lands of Kerr of Ancrum on the same document. Rig lines have been seen to the north-west of Raltonside, and there is also an old boundary bank there (it is 'raltoun' in 1502, 'Railtoun' in 1535, 'Raltoun' in 1541 and 'Raltoun' and 'Reltoun' in 1585).

Ralton Burn (rawl-tin-burn) n. stream that rises near Roan Fell and Millstone Edge, on the border of Roxburgshire with Dumfriesshire and gathers several other streams before passing Raltonside farm, joining the Ryedale Burn and running into the Liddel Water between Sandholm and Newcastleton. The area has the remains of several farmsteads, as well as boundary banks, enclosures, huts and sheep-folds. Near the head of the westernmost feeder stream are a couple of shepherd's cairns (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

ram (rawm) v., arch. to push, thrust, shove, act precipitously and with violence – '...the skirls an the dirls, the raameen an the raackeen an the cammelleen, the daads an the dunts an the skraucheen an the skreeveen' [ECS] (also written 'raam').

Ramage (raw-meej) n. Andrew (b.c.1780) flesher in Hawick according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Probably the same Andrew married Isabella Dickson and had children Betty (b.1806) and James (b.1808), baptised in East Bank Kirk. William (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Telfer and their son Adam was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1853.

rambaskious (rawm-baws-kee-is) adj., arch. rough, unpolished (noted by J. Jamieson; also rambaskish).

rambaskish (rawm-baws-kish) adj., arch. rough, unpolished (noted by J. Jamieson; also rambaskious).

Rambler (rawm-blur) n. pseudonym for George Penman, Hawick News columnist, writing nostalgic pieces about Hawick and district, in the 1970s and 80s. There had been a much earlier column with similar content, around the early 1900s.

the Rambler's (thu-rawm-blurz) n. popular name for a former pended house situated where the O'Connell Street opening now is.

rambusk (ram-busk) adj., arch. robust, vigorous (also 'rambaskious' and 'rambaskish' in Teviotdale; J. Jamieson notes this also in Ettrick Forest).

rame (rām) v., arch. to complain, harp, repeat, request monotonously – 'A'm fair hertseek o that; ee've raimd on't aa nicht' [ECS], 'Yince an' she begins, she raims on for a guid everlestin' [GW], to talk nonsense, rave – 'And, Willie, never rake frae hame, Wi' cronies dear, to rant and rhame' [JoHa], n. a tedious repetition of the same sound (also written 'raim' and 'rhame').

rammleguishon (raw-mul-gu-shin) n., arch. a sturdy, rattling fellow (noted by J. Jamieson).

rampaj (rawm-pawj) v., arch. to rampage, rage furiously – '...tho their chafts war ditherin an beverrin leike as they war pairlt, wui the awfih deedelleen an joaggleen o that rampaajin laarrie' [ECS].

the Rampart (thu-rawm-pur') n. area around St. Mary's Churchyard and Old Manse Lane, distinguished by the high wall there. This features as the location for the third scene in 'The Gutterbludes' – '...Nannie, an auld freend, will be roond the Ramparts at the chap o' six, he has guid news tae tell you ...' [JEDM] (also 'The Ramparts' and 'Rampart Place').

Rampsligill see Ramsiegill

Rampy Sike (rawm-pee-sī) n. small stream that runs roughly north-east to joint the Allan Water near Allanhaugh Bank. There is a small, roughly oval-shaped enclosure there, of indistinct enough form that it is hard to guess its age. On the haugh opposite where the sike joins the Allan Water was formerly the site of Raesknowe Mill.

ram-race (ram-rās) n., arch. a short burst of speed, like a ram uses in charging, a headlong rush – 'He took a ram-race and smashed open the door' [HAST1868], an impetuous progression, anything done at unreasonable speed – 'Howt! Thay sang that chorus fer owre quick. Thay made a perfect raam-race o'd' [ECS], 'It was a Day's Dander A wantet, an no a raam-race duist' [ECS], 'The band [=choir] made a perfec' ram-race o' the chorus' [GW].

Ramsay (rawm-zee) n. Sir Alexander of Dalhousie (d.c.1342). He fought at Borough Muir, was involved with the capture of Leuchars castle and relieved the siege of Dunbar Castle. He harassed the English in the Borders, often with a relatively small force, and was made Warden of the East March in 1340. He was known as a paragon of chivalry, being a champion on the jousting field. At Easter 1342 he captured Roxburgh Castle from the English and was rewarded by David II with the Keepership of Roxburgh Castle, and the Sherifdom of Teviotdale that usually went along with it. Sir William Douglas, who was already Sheriff of Teviotdale, was outraged at this and had Ramsay captured while holding court at St. Mary's Kirk in Hawick a few months later (there is some uncertainty about whether it was 20th or 21st June). Several of his followers were slain and he himself was wounded and imprisoned in the dungeons of Hermitage Castle, where he starved to death. He is said to have survived for 17 days by eating grain that fell through from the granary above. In the 1790s a local mason apparently broke into Hermitage vaults, finding human bones, as well as a bridle, saddle and sword; it was said that these were the remains of Ramsay. The bit that was found was presented by Sir Walter Scott to the Earl of Dalhousie, Ramsay's direct descendant. Ramsay Road in Hawick was named after him in 1933. Allan see James Dalgleish. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bedrule. His wife Margaret Scott died in 1723, aged 65, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Rev. Andrew Mitchell (1809–69) from Tollcross in Glasgow, he became the 4th minister of the Relief (Allars) Church in 1833. He was the first President of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, leading to some dispute over the use of Allars Kirk for meetings. He also allowed his church to be used for Revival meetings, against the wishes of many in his congregation. In Pigot's 1837 directory he is listed on the Crescent. In 1841 he was living on Buccleuch Street. He resigned in 1846, and left Hawick, with a large crowd seeing him off at the Tower Knowe. He moved to Australia to become Minister of Collins Street Church in Melbourne. In about 1850, along with 3 others, he formed the United Presbyterian Church of Victoria. He married Isabella Milne and their son Robert was a politician and lawyer in Australia. An early photograph of him exists. Sir George of Dalhousie (d.c.1629) son of James of Cockpen, he was 2nd Lord Ramsay of Melrose. He gained the lands and title in 1618 from his relative John, Viscount Haddington and Lord Ramsay of Barns. He is recorded in 1613 collecting the vicarage teinds from Thomas of Turnbull of Knowe. This suggests that he already had patronage of Hassendean Kirk at that time. He became Earl of Holderness and sold the lands of Melrose to Sir Thomas Hamilton. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir George Douglas, and was succeeded by his son William, who became Earl of Dalhousie. George (19th C.) member of Robertson Free Kirk. He married Ann Pate and their children included Janet (b.1848), James (b.1850) and Elizabeth (b.1852). James (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1806 when his marriage to Barbara Morton announced in Melrose Parish. John (c.1580–1618) Viscount of Haddington, Earl of Holderness. He was son Robert of Wyliecleuch. In 1609 he was granted the lands and income from Melrose Abbey, becoming Lord Melrose. This included the Kirks of Cavers and Hassendean. The grant was at least partly because of the help he had given the King in the Gowrie Conspiracy of 1600. In 1618 he resigned his lands and titles in favour of his relative Sir George of Dalhousie. John (18th C.) Hawick resident who was among the many men listed as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (18th C.) surveyor of coals, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1755. He was probably not from Hawick, but it is unclear where he was from or what his connection with Hawick was. In 1757 there is a record of 5 shillings 'Spent with Mr Ramsay the coalman (coal-viewer)', this being related to 'the petition for the coals' that the Town Clerk had sent. It is unclear exactly what this was about, but he is also recorded being paid 10 shillings and 5 pence in the same year. John M. (b.1885) uncle of Jessie MacDonald, he grew up in Denholm, served in WWI, was a postman for the Stobs area and lived at Orchard Terrace in later life. He wrote an account of Denholm in the years around 1900 for the Transactions. Robert (1842–82) son of Rev. Andrew Mitchell, who was minister of Allars Kirk. He was born in Hawick, but the family emigrated to Australia when he was about 5 (one of his siblings dying on the voyage). He studied law at Melbourne University, became a solicitor and became involved in politics as secretary for a committee trying to abolish state funding of religion. He served as a member of the legislative assembly of Victoria from 1870, being heavily involved in education and the separation of church and state. He was also partially responsible for the police actions that led to the capture of the Ned Kelly gang. He married Isabella Catherine, daughter of Robert Urquhart. They had 2 sons and 2 daughters. He was buried in Melbourne general cemetery. William (d.c.1695) tenant in Bedrule Mill. He married Margaret Turnbull. In 1695 he and his wife left 500 merks for the poor of the Barony of Bedrule, with the family of Cavers Carre as trustees. He is probably the William recorded in Bedrule Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William 'Wull Slush' (d.c.1830) known as a vagrant and drunkard. Although not born in Hawick, he travelled around upper Teviotdale for the period roughly 1790–1830. He was said to have been from either Carluke in Clydesdale or brought up at Heriot's Hospital in Edinburgh. Not known for his beauty, he was described as being 'as unprepossessing in his looks as it is possible to conceive, and his raiment was in classic keeping with his countenance'. He claimed to have a sister who was far uglier than himself. He had a squint, with one eyelid almost covering his eye, and a lower lip that drooped noticeably. He also lost the use of his legs through frostbite, and afterwards went about on a donkey. A story is told of how he once stood in for the driver of the cart between Edinburgh and Hawick, but was so drunk from stopping at every inn that by the time he reached Dovemount he mistook the gable of Wilton Kirk for another possible watering hole. He spent much of his time in the Black Bull, or sleeping it off in Hawick Mill. One year, when the Common Riding races were at the Vertish, he came across another beggar, called Ragabuss, and the pair race for tuppence in a steeplechase on foot, which degenerated into a fight. He once insulted Blind Wullie Craw (as recounted by William Norman Kennedy), who immediately threw off the lines 'O! Hush, hush, Wull Slush, Wull Slush, The Ostler o' Black Bull, As lazy a loon as what's i' the toon, And his head's like a weel picked skull'. There is an Adam Brown portrait of him in the Museum, and an article by William Norman Kennedy in the first Archæological Society Transactions. William (b.1802/3) born in Sprouston Parish. In 1851 he was a proprietor of 94 acres at Calaburn in Wilton Parish. His wife was Isabella and their children included Elizabeth (who married brickmaker William Taylor) and Christian. William (b.1851) born at Armadale, West Lothian, he was the last preacher at the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, which closed in the 1920s. He also served as an elder in the United Free Church there. He was 'colporteur' for the Religious Tract Society as well as School Attendance Officer. He married Christian Wilson in 1872. Their children were Peter (who married Helen Stoddart in Hawick), Christina, George Wilson, James, Jane, John, William and Jessie (who married Thomas Ramage in Hawick).

Ramsaycleuch (rawm-zee-klooch) n. farmstead above Merrylaw, reached by the side road from Teviothead, and lying just north of Rashiegrain and the source of the Teviot. The areas of Ramsaygrain West and Ramsaygrain East lie to either side. In the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick the lands were listed among those held by the Baron 'in property'. The lands were included in the list of property of the Baron of Hawick (Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig) in 1572 and 1594. Douglas of Drumlanrig has a 'horning' in 1607 against William Scott of Gledstains to remove from these and other lands, followed by a further action in 1610 for Scott and James Gledstains of that ilk owing him taxes. Robert Grieve was tenant in 1609. 6 cattle were stolen from the Laird of Falnash there in 1621. Half of the lands there were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. John Bell was recorded 'in Ramsiecleughburn' in 1678. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. James Anderson was tenant in at least 1699–1720 and William Anderson in 1704. By 1707 it was valued along with Hislop at £549 4s. The lands were owned by Michael Anderson of Tushielaw and Hislop in the early 18th century. Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw was owner in 1788. John Armstrong is recorded as farmer at 'Ramseycleughburn' in 1797 and Alexander Armstrong in 1801. William Riddell (brother of Henry Scott Riddell) was tenant there in the mid-19th century. In 1811 the lands of 'Ramsaycleuchburn' were valued along with Hislop at £549 4s, when owned by the Andersons of Tushielaw. This area was part of the western extremity of Hawick Parish until Teviothead was formed in 1850. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined building at Ramsaycleuchburn (the origin of the name is possibly Old English ‘hramsa cloh’, meaning ‘the ravine of the wild garlic’, although the terran does not seem very suitable; it is easily confused with Ramseycleuch in the Ettrick valley; it appears in 1511 as ‘Ramsy Clewis’ and ‘Ramsy-clewis’, ‘Ramsiclewis’ in 1514, ‘Ramsay Clewis’ in 1572, ‘Ramsay Clewis’ in 1594, ‘Ramsay clewch’ and ‘Ramseclouch’ in 1609, ‘Ramseclewis’ in 1610, ‘Ramsayclewchis’ in 1615, ‘Ramseclouch’ and ‘Ramsayclewis’ in 1621, ‘Ramsaycleuche’ in 1674, ‘Ramesclouch’ in 1675, ‘Ramseclouch’ in 1695, ‘Ramsaichthghburn’ in 1704, ‘Ramsaycleughburn’ in 1714, ‘Ramsa cleuch (burn)’ in 1716 and ‘Ram-sacleuchburn’ in 1720; it is marked ‘Rapshy-cleuch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Ramsay Road (rawm-zee-rōd) n. street behind Moat Park, built in 1933 and extended in 1969. The housing overlooking the ‘Scer’ is sometimes known as the ‘Haggis Haa’ scheme. Named after Sir Alexander Ramsay – ‘For had-dock, plaice and cod, They came fri Ramsay Road . . .’ [IWL] (since it is beside the old highway where he made his last fateful journey).

Ramseycleuch (rawm-zee-klooch) n. farmstead in the Ettrick valley, near the village of Ettrick. It was formerly owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane. John Scott of Thirlestane had a ‘tack’ from Melrose Abbey for these lands in 1535 and Robert Scott of ‘Schastaine’ in 1557. Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter in about 1620, and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. A ‘pendicle’ called ‘Tima-hauchis’ is also mentioned at that time. Adam Bellenden was there in 1728, Adam Scott in the 1780s and George Grieve in the 1860s (it probably has the same origin as Ramsaycleuch, with which it is easily confused; it is ‘Ramseclewis’ in 1535, ‘Ramseclouch’ in 1557, ‘Ramseclouch’ in 1564, ‘Ramsaycleuch’ in 1568, ‘Ramseclewis’ in 1573, ‘Ramsiecleuch’ in 1577, ‘Ramiscleuch’ in about 1622 and ‘Ramsieclewis’ in 1641; ‘Rampshy-cleuch’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Ramsiegill (rawm-zee-gil) n. former lands in Liddesdale, once a seat of a branch of the Elliots. The precise location is uncertain, but it was in the hills somewhere to the west of Riccarton. It is listed as ‘Rampysgill’ in about 1376 on a rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section called ‘Ermyldoune’, and with a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence. ‘William Elwald in Ramsigill’ is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1510 and on a rental roll of 1541. ‘Hobbe Elwald of Ramsiegill’ is among men the King ordered to be apprehended in 1532. Robert in Ramsiegill and ‘Old’ Robert of Ramsiegill are both also recorded in 1541. In 1541 the farm was leased by John Elliot and valued at 6 shillings and 8 pence. ‘Gavin o Ramsiegill’ was one of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick by the Regent Moray in 1567. ‘Gavin’s Jock’ from there was recorded in 1574 and 1582/3. ‘Ill Rob of Ramsigill’ was convicted for theft in 1580/1. Jock Elliot of Ramsiegill is listed in 1583 as one of the Elliots of Burnhead. Hob and Rowie Elliot ‘of Ramsegill’ signed a bond for the behaviour of all the Elliots of Ramsiegill in 1584, along with Airchie of the Hill and Will’s Hob. And a number of Elliots from there were named in a bond of 1587. Hob and Gavin separately accused the English of raids on their lands there in the 1580s. The man who hanged himself when imprisoned in Hawick steeple in 1612 may also have been from this family branch (it is marked ‘Rampsligill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map in the hills to the east of Roughley Burn, between ‘Er-nitlon’ and ‘Lires’; it is ‘Ramsigill’ in 1510, ‘Ram-misgill’ in 1541, ‘Rampsegyll’ and ‘Ramsy-gell’ in 1563, ‘Ramsy-gill’ in 1569, ‘Ramsigill’ in 1580/1, ‘Rampsygill’ in 1581 and ‘Ramsigill’ in 1583; the origin may be similar to that of ‘Ramsaycleuch’, i.e. related to the Old English for ‘wild garlic’; there is also a ‘Ramsgill’ in North Yorkshire).

ramstam (rawm-stawm) adj., arch., poet. haphazard, rash, heedless, uncere-monious – ‘Hei’d little need be hen-herteet that hed ti beer the ram-stam onfaa . . .’ [ECS], ‘My strength was renewed, but the haugh was plewed, And I made but a ram-stam rin . . .’ [WaD], ‘He wasna blate, he was rale ram-stam, He’d swallowed a wee thing mair than a dram’ [WL], n., poet. haphazardness, chaos – ‘And roun and roun the world may spin Wi’ its ram-stam and steer . . .’ [WL].

ramstougar (rawm-stoo-gar) adj., arch. rough (in various senses), coarse (of cloth), characterising a particularly masculine woman, vulgar, heedless, harebrained, rowdy, quarrelsome (all of these meanings noted by J. Jamieson).

rand (rawnd) n., arch. a narrow strip, a streak of a different colour in cloth, a streak of discoloration in anything imperfectly cleaned or dried (noted by J. Jamieson; see also randit).

randan (rawn-dan) n., arch. spree, particularly in the phrase ‘on the randan’, meaning being involved in a wild celebration (noted by E.C. Smith).

randit (ran-dee', -di') adj., arch. streaked, striped, dyed a variegated colour – ‘Randit, ill-wuishen claes’ [GW], ‘Randit tweeds, bread, butter’ [GW], ‘Ma froak hesna dyed weel at aa; it’s awfullies randeet’ [ECS], ‘That wumman’s claes ir no haaf seindeet; they’re hinging oot i the gairdeen aa randeet’ [ECS] (see rand).

Randolph (ran-dolf) n. (d.c.1185) son of Dunegal (of Stranith, or Nithsdale), and brother of Duvenald (or Donald), Duncan and Gillespie (or Gillepatric), he was Lord of Stranith or Nithsdale. He married Bethoc, who was probably connected with the Barony of Bedrule, and he may have gained lands there through marrying her. His wife may have been a daughter of Fergus, Earl of Galloway and Princess Joan of England. However, both their histories seem sometimes mixed up with others. Not long after the founding of Jedburgh Abbey (perhaps around 1150) the couple granted a carrucate of land (60 acres) in Ruecastle to Jedburgh Abbey, confirmed later by William the Lion. He also granted lands in Dumfries to Kelso Abbey and is recorded in transactions related to other lands in Dumfriesshire. His name appears as witness to several charters in the early 1160s. His son and heir was Thomas and he may also have had a daughter (perhaps Fiona) who married Reginald, Lord of the Isles. His immediate descendants took the surname ‘Randolph’ and were ancestors of the Earls of Moray or Murray.

Randolph (ran-dolf) n. Thomas (d.1262) son or perhaps grandson of Randolph, whose name is sometimes given as his surname. He was a Clerk in the court of Alexander II. He held the Barony of Nithsdale, but also had lands in Norfolk and Lincoln. He probably had a connection with Roxburghshire and perhaps Bedrule, like his parents before him. He also appears to have served as Sheriff of Dumfriesshire. His name appears in several charters in the 1220s to 40s. His wife was Juliana, but nothing else is known about her. Their children included: Sir Thomas, who succeeded; and Sir Nicholas, who was taken prisoner at Dunbar in 1296 and probably died in the Tower of London. Both he and his wife were buried on the same day at Melrose Abbey. Sir Thomas (d.bef. 1306) son of Thomas and descendant of Randolph, Lord of Stranith. The family held lands in Bedrule, although there is no record of a direct connection in his time. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh, recorded as such when witness to a document for Kelso Abbey in 1266 and served until at least 1269. He was Chamberlain of Scotland in about 1269–78. He was present at the Convention of Brigham in 1289/90 and when John Balliol paid homage to Edward I in 1292 and in 1294 he accompanied the English King to France. He married Isabel, who was probably half-sister of King Robert the Bruce. His son Sir Thomas became 1st Earl of Moray and signed the Declaration of Arbroath. He also had a daughter Isabel, who married William Murray, ancestors of the Earls of Annandale.

randy (rawn-dee) adj., arch., poet. wild, disorderly, disreputable, aggressively rude – ‘...strictly discharging all her Majesty’s leidges within ye shyre to resett Gipsies, Vagabonds, Randie beggars, and idle persons ...’ [PR1711], ‘Now randie Tibbie takes the road, Wi’ a’ her neebour wretches’ [JoHa], ‘Cam’ ye straight along the toon, Or doon the randy raw? Ha’e ye seen a truant loon Playin’ at the ba’ [JT], ‘The inn was thrang wi’ singin, The randy clash rang high ...’ [WL], n., arch. a scolding woman, a mischievous girl – ‘... That, faith, the randie’s grown sae rude, Sae careless, fearless, haughty, proud ...’ [JoHa], ‘What! Luck, here too! thou paintit twa-faced randy, Squirting thy humbug i’ my vera lug?’ [JoHa] (also written ‘randie’).

rang (rang) pp., poet. reigned – ‘But whan he heard that Archelaus rang in Judea in the room o’ his faether ...’ [HSR].

range (rānj) v., arch. to search, probe, rummage – ‘A’ll mebbies finnd eet if A range the kist’ [ECS], ‘Weel, A ranged the haaf o the toon, or A turnt staaed’ [ECS], ‘A’ve ranged a’ the drawers, an’ canna find it’ [GW], to agitate water, especially to scare fish from hiding places, to poke the ashes from between the bars of a grate so that the air can circulate – ‘Taik the poker an range the bars o the feier’ [ECS].

Rankilburn (rawng-kul-burn) n. older spelling for the valley of the Rankle Burn, also known as Buccleuch. The precise boundaries of the lands are not known, but certainly larger than the lands later known as Buccleuch. This was once a separate parish, which was merged with Yarrow in 1621, but then disjoined from Yarrow and annexed to Ettrick in 1650. It appears that in 1236 the lands belonged to Nigel de Heris, the King’s forester. The land probably passed to the Scotts some time shortly after 1249, perhaps as part of the appointment as Keeper of Ettrick Forest. Sir Richard Scott was the first known Laird of Rankilburn in the late 13th century. The first residence was probably on the motte at Phenzhopehaugh, later moving to 'Buccleuch Castle'. There was also a chapel on the Rankle Burn, the cemetery of which was the final resting place for many early generations of the Scotts of Buccleuch. When the lands were inherited in 1492 they were said to be then waste, but normally valued at £20. They were still listed separately from Buccleuch in the family lands inherited in 1517 and 1553/4 and the lands were included in the main Barony of Branhholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. – 'Of Ettrick's-hue he took a view, Than to the left hand did turn, Where he did see that Forrest hie, Which then was called Rankelburn' [CWS], 'Past the tiny torrent whose waters churn Where the first Buccleuch had kneeled; Past the crystal cascades of Rankleburn, And the winding way with its every turn Fresh visions of charm revealed' [TK] (it is 'Rankilburne' in 1415, 1463, 1484 and about 1580, 'Rankylburne' in 1415 and 1491/2, 'Rankilburn' in 1491/2, 'Rankilburn' and 'Rankylburne' in 1517 and 'Rankilburne' in 1528, 1537, 1574 and 1634; it is marked 'Rankilburn' and 'Bourn of Rankilburn' on Blaeu's 1654 maps and mis-transcribed as 'Kankisburn' on Moll's 1745 map).

Rankilburn Chaipel (rawng-kul-burn-chā-pul) n. former chapel near the old seat of the Scotts of Rankilburn. It was also known as 'Buccleuch Kirk'. The chapel was situated at the confluence of the Rankle Burn and the Kirk Burn, about 5 miles up from the Ettrick, with Kirk Hill and Priest Sike to the east. When it was established is unclear, but possibly around the 12th century when the motte was built at Rankilburn (later called Phenzhopehaugh); it was certainly already in existence by 1415, since in that year the tithes for Bellendean were transferred to it (when the Scotts of Rankilburn swapped Bellendean for the lands of Glenkerry with the monks of Melrose Abbey). It is marked 'Rankilburn K.' on Blaeu's 1654 map, and 'Ruins of Buccleugh Kirk' on Ainslie's 1773 map; today there is a semi-circular sheepfold enclosing much of the site, which has been planted with coniferous trees. The turf-covered footings of the former chapel can still just be made out, these being modest in size, about 10 m by 5 m, to the south-west of the D-shaped sheepfold (or perhaps shelter for cattle drovers). The wall at the east end has been robbed (probably to help construct the small rectangular shed in the corner of the sheepfold), and there is an earthen bank between these remains and the Kirk Burn. Together with another low bank inside the sheepfold, these may be former boundaries for the kirkyard. A survey in 2011 found no evidence of further enclosures that had been suggested in earlier descriptions (including a different location for the church in the north-east corner of the sheepfold report in 1962). Scott of Satchells says that 9 Laids of Buccleuch were buried there, perhaps starting after David and ending with the permanent move to Branhholme. There is a tradition that the last Scott burial was within 3 yards of the east door of the church. It is stated that the chapel was already ruined by 1566. There was a legend of a blue marble font (in which generations of Scotts had been baptised) being buried among the ruins, but no such relic has been found. Satchells says that around 1585 a young Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Robert Scott of Thirlestane found ancient tombstones buried there, bearing the arms of Buccleuch, along with some other sculpted stones. In 1801 the site was visited by a party including Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd, but they found nothing of any significance. William Scott (from Burnmouth) stated in 1821 that 'frequently human bones are washed away by the encroaching of the stream'. An open-air Cameronian communion service was held near here in 1844, attended by hundreds of people. The Ordnance Survey name book in 1858 states that 'the marks where houses seem to have stood are still visible on the Burn Side', but if there was once a hamlet there, there is no apparent evidence today. There was an excavation around 1877, but little was discovered. The rector in 1453 was James Spottiswood, and the reader in 1491/2 was John Scott. David Scott of Buccleuch left money for the church when he died in 1491/2. Following the ruin of their nearby manor, the Scotts abandoned the area for their new seat at Branhholme, and the church probably fell into disuse at that time. In 1537 Simon Shortreed, Vicar of Ashkirk invested Simon Scott in the benefices of Rector 'by touching the kirk door, the font, the altar, the chalice, the books and ornaments' of the kirk there. In 1574 John Scott, minister of Ashkirk had oversight there. After the Reformation the parish was united with Yarrow and then Ettrick and was not considered large enough to require a reader (it was 'ecclesiae de Rankilburn' in 1453 and 'Rankilburn' in a Church of Scotland document of 1586).

Rankilburn Pairish (rawng-kul-burn-pā-reesh) n. former small parish, sometimes referred to as Buccleuch, consisting of the land between the Rankle Burn and the Tima Water. Its establishment is unclear, but it certainly existed before 1415. In the early 17th century it was united with Yarrow, but in 1650 it was annexed instead to Ettrick. At that point it consisted essentially of the lands of Deephope, Mount Common, Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Annelshope, East Buccleuch, West Buccleuch, Tushielaw, Cacrabank and Crosslee.

Rankin (rawng-kin) n. James (19th C.) police offer at Forkins in the 1860s. Rev. Lisa-Jane minister of Wilton. —bf Robert (19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. ‘Robert Rankin & Co.’ was listed at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. William (19th/20th C.) blacksmith at Bedrule in the early 1900s.

rankit (rawng-kee, -ki) pp., adj. ranked, lined, set in rows – ‘But tho’ I get my hurdies whankit, An’ wi’ the hare-brain’d core be rankit ...’ [JR], ‘The yoke-a-tulie rankit up, And doon the Loan like fire’ [JT], ‘Door an dochty, framin the view, war rankeet Naeter’s Wardens o the Mairches’ [ECS].

the Rankle Burn (thu-rawng-kul-burn) n. stream that rises and flows roughly north to meet the Ettrick at Cacrabank, near Tushielaw. The valley of the Rankle Burn is synonymous with the Buccleuch area, and was the original family seat of the Scotts of Rankilburn or Buccleuch. There is a ballad called ‘The Maid of the Rankle Burn’ (it is marked ‘Bourn of Rankilburn’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, ‘Ranckill B.’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map and ‘Rankle Burn’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; see also Rankilburn).

rannel-trei (ra-nul-tri) n., arch. a beam, or branch-stripped tree, forming the roof-tree of a house – ‘And oure the auld man’s rigging back She laid her rannel-tree shanke’ [JTe], ‘... An’ bringe the cruke, an’ eke the lynkis Doon frae the rannel trie’ [WiSp].

ranshackle (ran-shaw-kul) v., poet. to ransack, search thoroughly – ‘I’ll ranshekel the hale house till I find it’ [JoJ] ‘And whan they cam to the fair Dodhead, Right hastily they clam the peel; They loosed the kye out, ane and a’, And ranshacked the house right weel’ [T] (also written ‘ranshekel’; cf. ramshaickle).

rantie (rawn-tee) adj., poet. frolicsome, boisterous – ‘We’ve rowthie baith o’ brose an’ kail, Whilk mak’s us chuffie, sleek, and rantie’ [JoHa].

Ranks Meadowhole (rangks-me-di-hōl) n. former name for a pool which would sometimes form in the meadow to the South of ‘the Birns’ of Chapelhill.

rap (rawp) v., arch. to fall rapidly (said of tears) – ‘... Our tears come rapping down in spates, Since thou art gone’ [CPM].

rap (rawp) v. to knock on a door (more common than ‘knock’; cf. chap; noted by E.C. Smith; see also rappit).

rape (rāp) adv., poet. quickly, rapidly – ‘Then rude and rape a bairnie scream’d’ [JR].

Raper (rā-pur) n. Robert (d.c.1814) from Minto in Roxburghshire, recorded when his will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1815. Given that the name is otherwise unknown, this may be a transcription error, but otherwise he may have been a servant of Lord Minto.

Raperlaw (rā-pur-law) n. farm roughly between Minto and Lilliesleaf villages. The lands there were a possession of Jedburgh Abbey from its founding in the 12th century until the Reformation. Humphrey of Raperlaw is recorded as a witness in about 1201. Reginald of Durham, in his collection of miracles of St. Cuthbert, recounts a tale of a woman from here, crippled from birth, who was cured after spending the night at Cuthbert’s chapel on the Slitrig (probably at Cogsmill). Matthew Lamb was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5, as well as George and James Davidson. George Davidson had 2 horses and 14 sheep stolen from him there before 1502. In 1564 George Turnbull’s quarter was leased to William Gray and William Redford, Henry [...]son’s quarter together with John Middlemas’ half to Andrew Gray, George Gray and Thomas Allan. The ‘lands and toun of Rapperlaw’ were part of the lands sold to Adam French in 1567 and still part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Hob Turnbull was there in 1579. James Turnbull was ‘called of Rapirlaw’ in 1619. The lands there were inherited by William Middlemas of Chapel from his father, also William, in 1622; it appears that at that time it was part of the Barony of Raperlaw. The farm was feued by Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning to Turnbells and Davidsons in 1632. William Wood was tenant there in 1634. In the 1643 county valuation, the owners of lands recorded there were James Middlemas of Raperlaw (valued at £416), Walter Turnbull (valued at £100 10s), Adam Turnbull (valued at £104), Andrew Davidson (valued at £65), William Turnbull (valued at £104) and David Davidson (valued at £195). Lands there (or perhaps the superiority) were owned by the Kers of Cavers Carre in the later 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Walter Scott of Alton owned lands there valued at £416 in 1678, as well as James Middlemas (£134 18s 6d), Ralph Davidson of Greenhouse (£104), Andrew Davidson (£65), Robert Elliot in 'Wyliespeel' (£104) and John Douglas (£195). Some of these parts were later known as Greenhouse and Catshawhill. Thomas Turnbull was a tenant there in 1684 when he was declared as a fugitive for being a Covenanter, along with George Young, a servant to George Gray, who was also a tenant there. Robert Paterson was there in 1689. James Runciman was blacksmith there in 1694, with other householders at that time being William Chisholme, Walter Middlemas, James Middlemas, John Gray, John Riddell, John Robson and James Scott (and John Turnbull among the 'deficients'). It may have been sold by the Scotts of Alton to the Horsburghs of that ilk about 1710. 'Scott of Alton's Lands in Raperlaw' are referred to in 1788 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £416 and listed under Lord Minto. William Thomson was tenant there in at least 1799–1801 and George Hope was servant in 1801, while Robert Smail and Robert Wight were servants as 'Reperlaw Tounhead' (the origin is probably Old English 'rapera hlaw', meaning 'rope-maker's hill'; it first appears as 'Raperlau' in about 1150, then 'Raperslau' or 'Rapeslaw' in about the 1170s, 'Raperell' and 'Rapereslaw' in about 1200, and has its modern spelling from 1315; it is transcribed as 'Raparlau' in 1502, 'Ryperlawe' in 1548/9, 'Rapirlaw' in 1619, 'Raperlaw' in 1622, 'Reaperhall' and 'Reperlaw' in 1670, 'reper law' and 'Reaperlaw' in 1678, 1684 and 1689, 'Repertslaw' in 1684, 'Roperlaw' in 1797 and 'Repperlaw' in 1799; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Reperlaw').

Raperlaw (rā-pur-law) n. Humphrey (12th/13th C.) listed in the period 1200–02 as witness to the grant of lands near Maxton to Melrose Abbey. His name is listed as 'Umfr' de Raperell'. Also in about 1200 he was granted lands at Coldingham, when he is listed 'Vnfrido de Rapereslaw'.

rappit (ra-pee', -pi') pp. rapped, knocked struck – 'I rappit lang, then rappit strang, But answer I gat nane' [WaD] (see rap).

rap up (rawp-up) v., arch. to rouse by knocking, knock up – 'But Wull pled for them to rap up Geordie Oliver, of the Wester Toll Bar ...' [RM].

ra-ra-rae (r-ra-rā) n., arch. gout weed, Ægopodium Podagraria, a tall plant with tiny white flowers, formerly used by children in Hawick to adorn themselves with on the eve of the Hiring Fair, marching and chanting 'Ra-ra-rae, the nicht afore the Fair! The drum's i' the Walligate, the pipes' i' the air. Silk an saiteen, Goold an' naiteen; Tig! – for the morn's the Fair Day!' [GW].

rase (rāz) pp. did rise, rose – 'hei rase in time ti hear the Drums an Fifes stertin', 'He raise, and rax'd him whar he stude And bade him match him wi his marrows ...' [CPM], 'Then up they raise, with ghastrous look, And to their steedis they flew ...' [JTe], 'An' the sunne rase bricht thatte mornynge ...' [WiSp], 'Wi' that he raise, (the clock struck twelve,) And rax'd a box frae aff the shelve' [RDW], 'I ræse up til opin til my beloe-fet ...' [HSR], '... the muckle Cairter – booksome an blew-leike wui the ferness o'd – raise fer owre on ma left' [ECS], 'For a' the craws rase up at yince In a cawin' cloud o' joy' [DH], 'Twa had rase high in the warld's een, But ane was pur: They cracked o' wisdom whaur they sat Sae couthie there' [WL] (also written 'raise'; this is the past tense of ryse, while the past participle is 'risen', as in English).

rash (rawsh) v., arch. to rush, act with great haste – 'To rashe through a darg', to perform a day's work hastily' [JL], to pour, lash (also written 'rashe'; see also rashit).

rash (rawsh) adj., arch. active, vigorous, agile, in good health – 'He's a rasch carl o' his years' [JoJ], '... a muckle big, bang fallih, braid-shoodert, rash an stuffy' [ECS] (also written 'rasch').

rash (rawsh) n., arch. rush, marsh plant – 'No rashes wild on thee are seen, Or aught that would defile thee' [DA], '... which was thatched with rashes against the winter's storms' [BM1907], used in the phrase 'the rash buss keeps the cow', meaning a time of peace from marauders – 'Syne warded them, whilk made the rest keep order, Than might the rash buss keep kye on the Border' [T].

rashie (raw-shee) adj., arch. full of rushes (also written 'rashy'; it occurs in place names, e.g. Rashiegrain and Rashy Hill).

Rashiegrain (raw-shee-grān) n. farmstead near the head of the Teviot, beyond Merrylaw. The lands there formed part of the estate of the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. In a Hawick

Rashie Grain

Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed along with Wormsleuch and Commonbrae, valued jointly 'in stok 120 lb., in teynd 20 lb'. It could be the 'Rashlie' listed among lands around Teviothead that were part of the Barony of Cavers in 1687 and 1698. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. John Scott was there in 1702. By 1707 it was valued along with Commonbrae at £261 19s 4d. Andrew Anderson was Laird in 1708 when he served as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire. George Dickson was herd there in 1725. Thomas Little was tenant there in 1740. An unspecified matter of discipline occurring there came to the Hawick Session's notice in 1752. William Anderson was owner in 1761. The farm was purchased in 1771 by Bailie Thomas Turnbull, along with other neighbouring properties. In 1788 it was owned by William Turnbull of Rashiegrain. Robert Armstrong was there in 1799 and John Elliot and William Hall in 1801. In 1811 it was still valued (with Commonbrae) at about £262. The Hope family were living there in 1841. A receipt relating to the poor rates from there in 1875 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. 'Rashiegrain Height' is an area south of there, by Pikethaw Hill, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway – 'The waters o' the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill But ootbye Rashiegrain Fresh sprung frae Teviotstane They're clear as crystal rill' [WL] (spelled 'Rashygrain' etc. in older records, it is 'Raschegrane' in 1627, 'Raschiegren' in 1674, 'Raschegrain' in 1675, transcribed 'Rasheglen' in 1695 and 'Rashlie' in 1698, and 'Rashigrane' in 1708; 'rashie' means covered in rushes and 'grain' is an old Scots word for a branch of a stream).

Rashie Grain (raw-shee-grān) n. small stream in Craik Forest, rising between Craik Cross Hill and Craik Moor and joining Northope Burn.

Rashie Park (raw-shee-pawrk) n. former name for a field somewhere between Stobs and Cogsmill (mentioned in Robert Grieve's diary in 1863).

Rathie (raw-thee) n. George (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Betty Riddell and their children included: Adam (b.1768); James (b.1771); Robert (b.1773); and Betty (b.1776). William (b.1759), Agnes (b.1761) and Walter (b.1765), with no mother's name given, are probably also his children. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Betty (b.1796); and Andrew (b.1800). James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Mathieson and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1661, with witnesses Andrew Henderson and Robert (who was surely a relative). James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Isobel Oliver and their children included: Isobel (b.1770); and Margaret (b.1772). Janet (b.1767), with no mother's name given, was probably also his daughter. James (d.bef. 1811) farmer in lands to the east of Hawick. He was living at Ormiston in 1781 and was farmer at Kaimend, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded as tenant at 'Combend' in 1801 and also in 1811 when his brother Robert died. In 1801 his sons William and James were both listed on the Militia ballot in Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Hermiston and their children included: William (b.1777); and James (b.1781). It seems likely he was a son of William from Lilliesleaf Parish. James (1781–1863) son of James. He was listed at Kaimend on the ballot for the Militia in 1801, along with his brother William. He was later a farm labourer at Honeyburn and also lived at Hummelknowes. In 1808 in Cavers he married Helen, daughter of shepherd Walter Baptie and Hanna Hogg. Their children included: James (b.1808); Walter (b.1811); Hannah (b.1813), who married Alexander Waldie; William (b.1815), who married Mary Moscrop in Kelso; Robert (b.1817), who was a stable-keeper in Kelso; and Isabella (b.1823), who married William Mill in Hawick. He died in Kelso. James (1808–87) son of James. His children were born at Hassendeanburn, then Wilton, and finally Victoria (Australia). He married Barbara Andison in 1843 in Denholm. Their children were: Esther (b.1844), who married James Douglas Turnbull; Helen (b.1847), who married Henry Campbell from Ayrshire; Hannah Wilhelmina (b.1849); Adam James (b.1856); and Bella (b.1859). He died in Australia. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Janet Winthroppe and their children included: Janet (b.1771); William (b.1773); George (b.1779); and George (again, b.1784). He could be the Robert, son of William, born in Lilliesleaf in 1740. Robert (d.1811) brother of James, farmer at Kaimend. He could be the same as the Robert of Lilliesleaf Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1738); Robert (b.1740); an unnamed son (b.1742); and Agnes (b.1746). William (1777–1851) elder son of James. He was a farmer, born in Cavers Parish, who moved to the Jedburgh area. He was a labourer at 'Cambend' (i.e. Kaimend) in Cavers Parish listed in 1797 among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; in 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish'. He was listed at Kaimend on the ballot for the Militia in 1801, along with his brother James. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Wilson, baker in Hawick. Their children were: James (b.1803), who lived near Duns; Walter (b.1805), tenant farmer at Thickside; Margaret (b.1807), who married Thomas Waddell; Isabella (b.1811); Janet (b.1814); and William (b.1816), a shepherd near Duns. He died at Thickside, Jedburgh. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Wilton Manse according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had some local connection. William (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Kerr and their daughter Janet Elizabeth was baptised in 1849 (also written 'Rathy').

rationin (raw-shi-nin) n. a system for sharing out limited supplies of food and other goods, especially during war-time. This happened during and after both World Wars, with queueing becoming a part of everyday life in Hawick.

rattan (raw-tin) n., arch. a rat – 'They've crush'd an' spoilt her brand new cap, Her bonnet's a bamboozl'd, As flat as ony rattan trap, An' a' her ringlets toozld' [JoHa], '...and he was as completely trapped as a ratten could be' [BCM1881] (also spelled 'ratten', etc.).

rattan's rest (raw-tin-rest) n., arch. complete restlessness, bustle, state of constant movement, wakefulness caused by continual disturbance – 'It's duist ratten's rest i this hoose, onyway, wui yeh mael efter another; A'm aye makin meat an answerin the door' [ECS], 'Oo'll get ratten's rest this nicht; they're haudin Jock's foy up the stair abuin oo – hei's gaun away ti Australleeih i Setterday' [ECS] (also written 'ratten's rest').

rattit (ra-tee) pp., arch. scratched – 'Ma skuil sklate's aa raateet wui this skartin skeelie' [ECS] (see rat).

rattle (raw-tul) n., poet. a sharp blow, thump – 'Sune Tammie sprang frae aff his seat, An' wan at him a rattle' [JoHa].

Rattlin Roarin Willie (raw'-lin-rō-rin-wi-lee) n. song popularised by Burns, which is supposedly local, being about events that happened to William Henderson of Priestthaugh in 1627. Willie, a local ballad-maker and brawler, slew 'Robert Rule' somewhere near Allanhaugh. Burns heavily edited it and added a third stanza in praise of his friend William Dunbar, which has disguised its origin. But Sir Walter Scott added 4 further verses about Willie's capture by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and 'young Falnash' (probably Archibald Elliot). The Presbytery records show that William Elliot was wanted for the murder of William Henderson in 1627, surely the basis for the song. The tune also has various versions, existing as the air of the song, as well as for both the pipes and the fiddle. Whether the origin was with Willie himself or someone else is unknown. Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee published a study of the song in 1886 – ‘Rob Roole he handled rude And Willie left Newmill’s banks Red-wat wi’ Robin’s blude’ [T].

rauchle (raw-kul) adj., poet. bold, impetuous – ‘Auld Britain’s sons are yet fu’ yauld ... He’ll find her yet the same in war – A raucle, ready-haundit kimmer’ [JoHa], ‘Rauchle gulls daily re-anoint Enthroned King Edward ...’ [DH] (also written ‘raucle’).

raucht (rowcht) pp., arch. reached, extended, seized, stretched – ‘He girt his broadsword to his side – That friend of proven worth; He raucht his hagbut from the wall, – Preparing to go forth’ [JTe], ‘Than saith he til the man, Rax furth thine han’. An’ he raucht it furth ...’ [HSR], ‘An’ he raucht furth his han’ toward his discipels, an’ said, Behald, my mither an’ my brithren’ [HSR] (also written ‘raught’; past tense of rax or reach).

Raufson (rowf-son) n. John (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Anrton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. ‘Terra Johannis Raufson’ is listed there with a value of 16 shillings.

rave (rāv) pp., arch. tore, rived – ‘... and for having fallen upon the said Bailie and rugged and rave the hair off his head’ [BR1694], ‘... How the jockies in their fury Rave an’ ruggit’ [RH] (also written ‘raive’; this is the past tense of rive, which can also be ‘rived’; cf. the past participles reen and ‘riven’ as in English).

Ravenburn (rā-vin-burn) n. former shepherd’s cottage on the farm of Hyndlee, situated to the east of the Note o’ the Gate, now deep within Wauchope Forest. It appears to be ‘Reavinburne’ in 1694, when there was a hearth listed there, among the farms of the Laird of Harwood. The shepherd there in the mid-1800s was Walter Cavers. The stream there is the Raven or ‘Reaven’ Burn, which forms part of the headwaters of the Jed.

Ravenswud Junction (rā-vinz-wud-jungk-shin) n. Ravenswood Junction, a junction of the Waverley Line with the Berwickshire Railway, between Newtown St. Boswells and Melrose, near the Leaderfoot Viaduct. The line connected Hawick with Greenlaw, Duns and Chirnside and ran from 1856 until part was washed away in a flood in 1948. The name came from the nearby house, built in the 1820s on the estate formerly known as Old Melrose.

raw (raw) n. a row – ‘A cood wale oot Rule Waeter’s coorse feine, – merkeet wui raws on raws o treis’ [ECS], ‘Fowr in a raw = four abreast’ [ECS], ‘A raw o treis; a raw o krames; a raw o hooses’ [ECS], ‘They gaed twae in a raw’ (= two abreast) [GW], ‘Aw’ll gie ye a’ twa or threi raws Aw wrote tae send oot tae oor laddies in Canada’ [JEDM], ‘In that Kirk-yard, in mony a raw, Hae mouldered hearts without a flaw ...’ [AD], ‘Auld names, lost days forgotten, peered oot fri raw be raw’ [??], ‘A-weel – the piper waits to blaw, Ye wait there, smirkin’, raw on raw ...’ [DH], ‘The sun’s scowderin’ sair, sair On the laigh raws’ [WL], ‘At poverty Row (adv. phr.) = on the verge of destitution’ [ECS].

Raw (raw) n. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jake Rawe Martyn Crossers servaunte’ in 1544, when he was among a large number of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. It is possible that the Martin Crozier was the one who resided at Earlside, but it is possible another Martin is meant. Thomas (19th C.) merchant and commission agent in Hawick. His estate was sequestered in 1885. He was a member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880.

Raw see Netherraw

Rawflat (raw-fla) n. farm between Old Belses and Bloomfield in the southern part of Ancrum Parish. In 1502 Bartholomew Turnbull was tenant and Thomas Turnbull in 1540. It was recorded being in the Barony of Primside in 1579 when Walter Turnbull yielded some of the crops and income from his half of the lands in order to repay a debt to Allan Deans from Hawick. Walter Turnbull was Laird there when ordered to vacate the lands in 1581. However, later in 1581 he was murdered by a band of other Turnbells, and then his wife ‘and hir puir bairnes’ were harassed by Turnbells firing their weapons at the farm. ‘Jaquie Laidlaw’ was a tenant in 1601 and Walter Turnbull was ‘younger of Raflat’ in 1603. It is also recorded in a criminal case relating to 1612, when it was owned by the Davidsons and farmed by William Rutherford. The lands were sold by Walter Turnbull to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1623, and at that point were still in the Barony of Belses. Some time after that they were included in Ancrum Parish. It was inherited by Robert Bennet from his father Ragwell in 1670. It was owned by the Kers of Cavers Carre in the later 17th century. John Wilkie, younger, was there in 1685. They were given to Rev. Joseph Leck of Yetholm in 1739 and passed from John Edmund Elliot to the Marquess of Lothian in 1872. In 1788 the lands were valued at £500 and owned by 'Miss Ainslie'. It may once have been referred to as 'Milton' (it is 'Rowflat' in 1502, 'Rawflat' in 1538, 'Raflat' in 1603, 'Raflatt' in 1612 and 1632, 'Raeflat' in 1617 and transcribed 'Reuflat' in 1678 and 'Ranflat' in 1684; this is probably the fortified house marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Raflett', although a little too far south).

Rawlings (raw-lins) n. Edward (18th/19th C.) footman at Riddell in 1797, when he was working for Sir John Riddell.

reach (reech) v., arch. to bring out or down after reaching (the past participle is raucht).

reach ti (reech) v., arch. to stretch oneself, reach for something at the table.

reader (ree-dur) n. a lay preacher who assists the Minister in Church. In earlier centuries the term referred to someone appointed to read the scriptures instead of the ordained priest or minister. In many post-Reformation churches there was a minister in charge of several parishes and a separate reader for each parish, often having been Catholic priests, and allowed to continue to preach, but barred from administering the sacraments; uch appointments stopped following an Act of the General Assembly of 1581. The office of reader was officially abolished after the adoption of the Westminster Directory in 1645, but nevertheless continued in practice. The term later came to be used to refer to the Precentor. In Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries the Reader (who was usually the schoolmaster and Session Clerk) would read the scripture aloud for the congregation for up to an hour before the regular

readiest (ree-dee-ist) n., arch. most ready for use, most immediately available as currency – ‘...agree that an new colour, standard, or pencell, should be bought ...and to that effect to uplift and take the readiest burgess money’ [BR1707].

the Read Roads (thu-reed-rōdz) n. name sometimes given to the former road passing from upper Teviotdale into Ewesdale. The road is mentioned in a travel account of 1629. It was the principal road from Carlisle to Hawick before about 1765 when the turnpike was opened. All traffic would have been on foot or horseback. Many miles of the old hollowed out tracks can be seen on the hillsides around Linhope and MossPaul. A good stretch is visible looking back from Linhope as the track stretches over part of Lightning Hill towards Phaup, close to the route that the MossPaul Ride-out usually takes. There is also a suggestion that it may have partly followed the course of a road built by the Romans, connecting the Lower Esk with Teviotdale, via Eweslees, Ewes Doors and Caerlenrig. Another (or related) road has been traced over the pass from Ewes Doors, via Haggis Side and Corbie Shank.

ream (reem) v., arch., poet. to froth, overflow, cream, form cream – ‘A reamin’ horn the board to grace’ [JR], ‘...And fill wi furthy glee A reamin’ cup, That I may drink A blythe New Year to thee’ [JT].

the Rechabite Tent (thu-re-ka-bi’-ten’) n. group preaching abstinence from alcoholic drinks, founded in Salford in 1835, and also acting as a Friendly Society. The Hawick branch (or ‘tent’) was active in the latter part of the 19th century (and they didn’t really have a tent!). It formed possibly after the abstinence orator J.B. Gough visited the town for the second time in 1854. It fell into obeyance for a time, but was revived and continued into the 20th century.

recognicion (re-kog-ni-shin) n., arch. repossession of feudal lands, resumption of lands by a superior as a result of the default of a vassal – ‘...of the quhilkis sovmez of fourty lib. and xiiij merkis for the said recognicioun ...’ [SB1510/1].

recognosce (re-kog-nōs) v., arch. to resume possession (of feudal lands), repossess – ‘...Commosyde, Harwode and Drydane, quhilkis landis war recognist in the Kingis handis ...’ [SB1510/1].

rector (rek-tur) n. a cleric in charge of a parish, a high-school Headmaster.

the Rector (th-rek-tur) n. Headmaster of Hawick High School, see the Pesh.

Rectors (rek-turz) n., pl. Headmasters of Hawick High School. The term was also used in its clerical in Hawick before the Reformation, and also for the incumbent of St. Cuthbert’s Episcopalian Church. The educational term is synonymous with (but perhaps more respectful than) ‘The Pesh’. In Hawick the title was first used in the Grammar School, and then in the ‘United Schools’ when it merged with the Parish School, and thereafter in the Buccleuch School and High School. A full list is: James Innes 1710–18; Robert Chisholme 1718–21; James Anderson 1722–46; William Dyce 1746–73; George Lamb 1773–88; Thomas Barrie 1788–98; James Kirk 1798–1818; James Murray 1818–53; Anthony Dodds 1853–90; William Pitcairn 1890–95; James Brand 1895–1906; William Lyndsay Thompson 1908–1919; A.M. Rectory Court (rek-tu-ree-kōr’) n. private development off Slitrig Crescent, adjacent to St. Cuthbert’s Church. It was built in 1997 in the front of the grounds of the new Rectory, being part of the garden of the old Rectory.

Red (red) n. John (17th/18th C.) resident of the Raesknowe area who was described in the 1723 Hawick Session records as ‘a well aged man, capable to teach at ye said toun’. He could be the John who was born in Hawick Parish in 1670 to John and Margaret Beattie. He could have been a ‘Reid’.

Redbridge Viaduct (red-brij-vI-a-dukt) n. railway bridge across the Tweed near Galashiels, being 278 feet long.

redd (red) v. (most commonly with ‘up’) to clean up, tidy up, – ‘When the lint was all swingled, the barn was cleared and ‘red up’ ...’ [JAHM], ‘A aye get redd up afore oo hev folk ower’, ‘... An’ haste ye, fy and haste ye, lass, An’ hae the mess redd up’ [WFC], (with ‘out’) to clean out, sort – ‘Aha, aul’ lass! joost bide an tak’ it hooly, I am no’ sure but I can rede it oot ...’ [JoHa], ‘A hed ti redd oot the attic the day’, ‘... an, wui ma wame fowe, ma thochts redd thersels the better oot’ [ECS], ‘...taking time to ‘redd-oot’ his exact relationship to Jamie’ [DH], to set in order, quell – ‘Up raise the laird to red the cumber, Which wadna be for a his boast ...’ [CPM], ‘I tried my best to redd the row, – Up to my feet I sprang ...’ [JT], to disentangle, unravel – ‘...wui a toozy, taaty heed that wad be richt an ruggy ti redd’ [ECS], to comb – ‘Then still again these locks he’d ted; But nought did Mary care Though they again should never redd’ [HSR] (see also rede; the past tense can be either ‘redd’, ‘redded’ or ‘reddit’; probably from Mediæval Dutch or Low German).

redd (red) n., arch. a rut in a riverbed made by salmon for spawning, a spawning – ‘He crawled away hame and he crept into bed, And he dreamed he was geggin’ a fish off the redd’ [UB].

Reddadenn (re-da-den) n. former place name, possibly a fortified house, located on the Roughley Burn, not far from the Ninestane Rig. It could be the ‘Roddiss’ recorded on the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. It corresponds to the modern Reddington, although it is unclear where the house might have been (marked ‘Reddadenn’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, and ‘Reddadenn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

reddiest (re-dee-ist) adj., arch. most prepared, most immediate, most to hand – ‘...and mak penny of his rediast gudis, to the awaile of the said sown of thua hunder merkis ...’ [SB1500] (said of goods, crops, etc.; there are spelling variants).

reddit (re-dee, -di) pp., arch. sorted out, arranged, tidied (the past tense can also be redd, as well as the past participle).

reddment (red-min) n., arch. a tidying up, settlement of affairs – ‘The scodge was makin’ a reddment’ [GW] (also noted by E.C. Smith).

redd oot see redd

rede (reed) v., arch., poet. to advise, explain, interpret – ‘dots Wha up to the oxters in wisdom can wade, Can ye rede me the way o’ a man wi’ a maid?’ [JoHa], to rid – ‘Delifer the puir an’ needie: rede thame owt o’ the maig o’ the wicket’ [HSR], ‘...rede me, an’ delifer me owt o’ grit waters, frae the han’ o’ fremet childer’ [HSR], (with ‘out’) to sort – ‘... We can rede oot the way o’ a man wi’ a wife’ [JoHa].

the Rede (thu-reed) n. River Rede in Northumberland, rising near the Carter Bar and Catcleuch Reservoir and running through what was the English Middle March – ‘The ruthless raider reined his steed On the crown of the March: behind him the Rede Wound glittering down through the autumn flowers And was lost in the smoke of the smouldering towers’ [WHO], ‘They rode for a day and they rode for two, In heath and bracken, by scaur and burn, Till they won to the vale that Rede runs through With many a silver twist and turn’ [WHO].

Redesdale (reedz-dāl) n. valley of the River Rede, just over the Border from the Carter Bar – ‘The outlaws come frae Liddesdale, They herry Redesdale far and near; The rich man’s gelding it maun gang, They canna pass the puir man’s mear’ [LHTB], ‘The pitying angels bend the while, And smiling, bless these sons of men; And only equall’d is their smile, By hers, the lass o’ Reedsdale Glen’ [JTe].

Redeswire (reed-swIr) n. marshy area at the head of the Rede, being formerly a pass through the Cheviots, near to the Carter Bar – ‘And when they reach’d the Redswire high, Soft beam’d the rising sun; Bit formless shadows seem’d to fly Along the muir-land dun’ [JL], ‘All the magical names were on my map – Eildon, Carterhaugh, Caerlenrig, Reidswire ...’ [DH] (see the Raid o the Redswire and Reid Swire).

Redford (red-furd) n. former name for an area near the modern Redfordgreen. It was owned by the Crown from at least 1456, mentioned many times in the Exchequer Rolls from at least 1448, and consisting of 3 steadings. In 1459 they were let to David Scott. In 1480 they were granted to the Laird of Cranston. In 1486 the 3 steadings were leased again to Sir David Scott of Buccleuch, ‘without grassum on account of their waste condition’. It was leased by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. In 1499 it was occupied by Robert Scott in 1499, when let to Patrick Home (the King’s Comptroller), on the refusal of Robert Scott. It was still Crown property in 1502 and in 1510 the 3 steadings of ‘Hyndhop, Dricleuchschell, et Redefurdegrene’ were feued to Alexander, Lord Home (it is ‘Redefurde’ in 1459 and 1480, ‘Redfurde’ and ‘Reidfurd’ in 1490, ‘Reidefurde’ in 1492, ‘Redefurd’ in 1499 and ‘Redefurde’ in 1502).

Redford (red-furd) n. Alan (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1465/6 for Denholm Mains. Andrew (18th/19th C.) father of Andrew, farmer at Hermiston. He was probably the Andrew recorded in 1788 as owner of part of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were valued at £57 10s 4d and earlier owned by James (probably his father). He is probably the resident of Lilliesleaf listed in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. In 1799 he was ‘Portr.’ (presumably ‘portioner’) in Lilliesleaf when his son Andrew was on the ballot for the Militia. He married Isabel Stewart and their children included: James (b.1768); Andrew (b.1778). He may be the Andrew whose son James was baptised in 1763. Andrew (b.1778) farmer at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was son of Andrew and Isabel Stuart. His is son of ‘Portr.’ Andrew at Lilliesleaf on the 1799 Militia ballot and ‘Junr. Port.(probably ‘portioner’) at Lilliesleaf on the 1801 Militia ballot. He was tenant farmer for John G. Stewart of Hermiston. He is probably the Andrew who is recorded owning part of Davidson’s lands of Greenhouse in 1811, with his heirs being listed in 1874. He was at Hermiston in 1841 and in 1851 was farming 450 acres at Hermiston, employing 8 labourers. His wife was Isobella Scott and their children included: Andrew (b.1805), who probably died young; John (b.1806/7); James (b.1809), farmer; Charles (b.1813), also died young; Andrew (again, b.1815); George (b.1817); Charles (again, b.1822); Jessie (b.1826/7), who married Walter Govenlock; Margaret; and Elizabeth. Andrew (b.1795) tailor in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on the north side of Main Street. In the 1851 census he and his wife were recorded at the Maxwellheugh Tollbar House. He married Janet Grieve and their children included: James

(b.1830), also a tailor; and William (b.c.1832), a draper. His widow was in Kelso in 1861, visiting her sister Jane Weatherstone. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Francis (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. In 1690 in Ashkirk Parish he witnessed baptisms for William Scott and for John Murray and Margaret Redford. He is probably the Francis who married Bessie 'Allion' in 1699 and whose son William (b.1699) was baptised in Ashkirk Parish. He may also be the Francis who earlier married Isobel Chisholme in 1688 and whose children included Jean (b.1689), baptised in Ashkirk, with witnesses William Scott and John (surely a relative). George (b.1817) cattle dealer in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and Isabella Scott. He was living on the north side of Main Street in 1861 and was unmarried. James (16th C.) recorded being in Hassendeanburn in 1579 when he and his daughter Margaret sold a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf to John. The price was 20 merks, a cow and a stone of wool. John was surely a relative, but the relationship is not recorded in the transaction (which took place in Selkirk). He may be the Redford recorded as witness to a sasine for William Middlemas in Lilliesleaf in 1580/1. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1637) and Bessie (b.1638). His name is listed as 'Reidfurd' and 'Readfurt'. James (17th C.) married Bessie Paterson in Ashkirk Parish in 1645. Perhaps Margaret (b.1646) was his daughter. James (17th C.) married Margaret Dodds in Robertson Parish in 1686. His wife was from Bedrule Parish. Their son William was born in 1688. In 1686 (along with William) he witnessed a baptism for John Hope in Robertson Parish. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is written 'Reedfoord'. It is possible he is the same as James, tenant in Headshaw. James (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with his name written 'Ridfoord'. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Headshaw in 1703. He married Catherine Minto and their children included: John (b.1703), baptised in Ashkirk. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son James was baptised in 1743. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Walker and their children included Margaret (b.1760). James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married

Janet Stewart and their children included Patrick (b.1759). James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Jean Waugh and their son James was baptised in 1765. James (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as former owner of part of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were valued at £57 10s 4d and later owned by Andrew (probably his son). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son William was baptised in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf and Wilton Parishes. In 1841 the family were living on Damhead and he was an agricultural labourer. They emigrated to Canada in 1842. He married Margaret Wilson in 1820 and most of their children were baptised in Lilliesleaf: James (b.1821), who became a Canadian M.P.; Andrew (b.1824); Mary (b.1826); Elspeth (b.1830); and William (b.1833). He is probably the James, married to Margaret Neil, whose daughter Isobel was baptised in 1818. He may be the servant if that name who was recorded at Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. James (b.1809) farmer in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and probably a descendant of the earlier James. In 1851 he was living on Main Street, farming 100 acres and employing 4 people and was still there in 1861. His wife was Isabella, daughter of Rev. William Lauder of Earlston. Their children were Helen (b.1853) and Andrew (b.1855). James (1821–1908) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, son of James and Margaret Wilson. In the 1841 census he was living in Wilton Damhead and working as a 'Writer's Cl.', presumably in the office of one of the Hawick lawyers of the time. He emigrated to Canada along with his parents and siblings in 1842. In 1851 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander Gouray. He worked as a teacher, lumber merchant, manufacturer, land speculator and banker. He was involved in local affairs in Perth, Stratford and Downie and became M.P. for North Perth 1867–72. He moved to Austin, Texas in 1876, where he died. James (b.1830) tailor in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew. He took over the business from his father, on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Janet Haldane from Ancrum. Their children included Helen (b.1852), Janet (or Jessie, b.1854), Andrew (b.1856), Elizabeth (b.1860), Euphemia (b.1862), James (b.1864), William (b.1866), Jane (b.1869) and John (b.1871). Janet (16th C.) recorded on the list of tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (16th C.) rented an acre of land called 'Coit acre' and another rig of land from William Middlemas, farmer at Friarshaw in 1563 for 11 years. He may be the John who in 1579 purchased half a husbandland in Lilliesleaf from James (who was probably related) in Hassendeanburn. He is probably the John in Lilliesleaf whose daughter Janet had a marriage contract in 1582 with John, son of Thomas Smail, also in Lilliesleaf; he promised to pay £60 as part of the arrangement. He could be the same John who was granted a half husbandland of land in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. John (17th C.) married 'Heilling Jonkesone' in Ashkirk Parish in 1634. His wife's name may have been Helen Jenkins or Johnson. John (17th/18th C.) elder of Ashkirk Parish, written up in the 1718 Presbytery records for a dispute with Adam Scott (tenant of Woll). He accused Scott of insulting remarks directed to the elders, while he himself was accused of drunkenness and disparging remarks made towards Scott. In 1724 he was sent to the synod with money 'for helping to Build Meeting Houses at Babingtoun and Brandon In England'. He is recording collecting money for the Parish in 1727. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Francis in 1689. Presumably the same John married Agnes Veitch in 1693 and had children: Francis (b.1699); Margaret (b.1701); Isobel (b.1704); John (b.1706); James (b.1708); and an unnamed son (b.1714). John (18th C.) tenant in Synton Mill. In 1755 he had a bond with the officials of Selkirk, with the discharge being in 1760. He had further discharges with Selkirk in 1761 and 1765. He may be the resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Mary Scott and whose children included: Francis (b.1739); Janet (b.1744); Agnes (b.1748); and Margaret (b.1751). Patrick (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Mark in 1655 and their children included Janet (b.1656), Thomas (b.1658) and Isabel (b.1661). The witnesses in 1656 were Thomas Maben and James Wallace and in 1661 were Adam Ogilvie and James Miller. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Walker and their children included Bessie (b.1654). Robert (d.bef. 1494) recorded in a case at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Nicholas and John, sons of Matthew Turnbull in Hassendean, had remission for his murder. It is not recorded where he was from. William (15th C.) witness to a sasine given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, in 1483, relating to lands in Hassendean. William 'Will' (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with William Gray. This was specifically the quarter belonging to George Turnbull. William (16th/17th C.) witness in 1607 to a sasine whereby John Scott gained possession of the lands of Hobbsburn and Weens. His surname is recorded as 'Reidfurd'. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Wester Lilliesleaf. He gave evidence at the 1628 trial for witchcraft of Isobel Howison, stating that in the previous year, he had a sick cow and his mother sent for Howison, who cured the cow with a charm, but Howison herself fell ill. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel 'How' 'Houie' or 'Hoy' in 1652. Their children included James (b.1657) and John (b.1661). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Dunlop and their children included Robert (b.1661). William (d.c.1688) tenant in Hassendeanbank when his will was recorded in 1688. His name is written as 'Reidfoord'. He could be the William 'Reedfoord' recorded as a witness to baptisms in Robertson in 1680 (although crossed out) and 1681. In 1686 (along with James) he witnessed a baptism for John Hope in Robertson Parish. William (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He probably lived near Hassendean Mains. He could be the same as the tenant of Hassendeanbank. William (17th C.) married Bessie 'Vogan' in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included Bessie (b.1688). He may be the William who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1689. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was at Essenside in 1702 and was tenant in Easter Essenside in 1709 and 1717. He married Helen Gray and their children included: James (b.1702); Elizabeth and Margaret (b.1707); Helen (b.1709); John (b.1713); Magdalen (b.1714); and Elizabeth (again, b.1717). It seems likely he and his wife were related to Margaret Redford and Robert Gray, respectively, who had children a little later in Ashkirk Parish. He may be the William who, along with John, collected money for Ashkirk Parish in 1727. William (b.1699) resident of Ashkirk Parish, son of Francis. He married Janet Tait in 1726. Possibly the same William is recorded in 1724 as a collector of money for the Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of the lands valued at £10 that had much earlier belonged to Alexander Hood. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 it is recorded that William Riddell of Camieston owned 'William Redford's Lands in Lilliesleaf, formerly Hood's Lands', which had been acquired by Edgar Hunter. William (b.1831/2) son of tailor Andrew and brother of James. He worked as a woollen and linen draper in Lilliesleaf. In 1861 he was on the north side of Main Street. He married Helen Robson and their children included Andrew and Jane (also written 'Readfurt', 'Reedfoord', 'Redfoord', 'Reidfoord', 'Reidford', 'Reidforde', 'Reidfuird', 'Reidfurd', 'Reidfurde', 'Ridfoord', 'Riedford', 'Rudfoord', etc.).

Redfordgreen (red-furd-green) n. area off the B711 between Alemoor and Buccleuch. The farms of East and West Redfordgreen are here, and it was also once the site of a country school. The farms formerly belonged to the Parish of Yetholm. The area was once owned by the Crown and split into the 3 steadings of Redford, feued by Alexander, Lord Home in 1510. In 1541 it was 'occupyit be the kingis gudis', paying rental of £15 13s 4d. In 1621 it was valued at £15 13s 4d. It was inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade from his brother Sir Walter in 1655. The superiority was still held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. Robert Laidlaw was there in at least 1711–24, John Anderson and Robert Inglis in 1723 and Walter Park in 1734. Adam Scott was tenant at East Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiel in 1716. The teinds were valued at £28 13s 4d in 1785 and 1802. It was valued, along with Drycleuchshiel at £169 6s 8d in 1785 when held by James Lauder of Carolside and in 1802 when held by Capt. Verner. Henry Thomas Rutherford was owner in the early 19th century and David Scott was tenant at about that time. The term 'the forty thieves of Redfordgreen' was used around the 1830s to refer to 'faggot' (i.e. artificial) voters after it was purchased by the Buccleuch estates – 'By Borthwick Wa's and Redfordgreen and on to wild Buccleuch ...' [WHO], 'Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikiminn, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lilliesleaf, Or the merriment of Redfordgreen' [WL] (it is 'Redefurdegrene' in 1510, 'Reidfurdgrene' in 1541, 'Reidfurdgrene' in 1621, 'Reidfurdgrein' in 1633, 'Readfurd-grein' in 1655, 'Redfurgreen' in 1693, 'Reidfordgreen' in 1711, 'Riedfourdgreen' in 1723 and 'Reidfourdgreen' in 1724; it is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map; see also Redford).

Redfordgreen Schuil (red-furd-green-skil) n. former country school on the moors at Redfordgreen. The building was in Selkirkshire, but also served some of the remote parts of Robertson Parish. The school operated from 1885–1955. A grassy mound is still visible in the field, and a small cairn was placed there in recent years. A book 'Redfordgreen School, 1885–1955' (1995) was written by Kathleen W. Stewart. The Borders Archive holds the school admission book for 1885–1935 and log books for 1885–1955.

Redheugh see Reidheugh

redin (ree-din) pp. redone – 'it's nae guid, it'll jist heh'i be redin'.

Redpath (red-, reed-path) n. village between St. Boswells and Earlston, still having its planned form around a single south-facing main street.

Redpath (red-, reed-path, -peth) n. Adam (1776–1823) hedger at Weens estate. He started there in 1805. He had a sister Margaret. He married Jane Cook, who died in 1841, aged 67 (who was said to be insane in later life). Their children included: William (b.c.1804), forester at Weens; John (b.c.1805), who lived for a while at Bonchester Bridgend; Betty (b.1809), spend most of her life as a servant at Weens; George (b.1811); Helen (b.1813), married Robert Smith and lived at the Scenty, Blacklee and Denholm; Adam (b.1817), who died in infancy; and Margaret, a housemaid at Weens, who married a Yorkshireman and moved to Aldborough. He died at Scenty Hall. After his early death his 2 sons William and John together took over his job for a while, with William eventually taking over himself. Many of the family are buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Adam (b.1838) son of William and Mary Smith. He worked for a while as a servant at Weens. Later he was in Noble's factory in Hawick. Anne, R.S.A., O.B.E. (1895–1965) born in Galashiels, 2nd daughter of Thomas Brown, a textile designer, and Agnes Milne. Her family moved to Hawick when she was 6 years old, after her father was offered the job of head of design at Glebe Mills. She attended Hawick High School in the period 1901–13 and then studied at the Edinburgh College of Art (concurrently with teacher training at Moray House). Graduating in 1918, she won a scholarship to visit Europe. She returned to France in 1920 with her husband (an architect who worked with the Imperial War Graves Commission), and they lived there until 1934. Her first exhibition was in 1921, and she also decorated family furniture with flowers and birds, which would later feature in her still life paintings. In 1934 her husband's millionaire employer lost his fortune and the family returned to Britain, she and her sons to Hawick and her husband to a job in London. She lived at 52 Orchard Terrace and on Beaconsfield Terrace. She was also President of Hawick Art

Club. In this period she painted many landscapes around Hawick, and exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy. She became best known for her vividly colourful still lifes, replete with familiar household objects, often in disconcerting combinations, with 'The Indian Rug' and 'Still Life with Orange Chair' perhaps best exemplifying her unique style. She soon became one of Scotland's best known artists. She was President of the Scottish Society of Women Artists 1944–47 and in 1952 was the first female painter to be elected to the Royal Scottish Academy. Further trips to the continent inspired a change in style and she produced distinctive Mediterranean landscapes. She became an O.B.E. in 1955 and was also granted an honorary degree from Edinburgh University. In public she was known for her extravagant hats and designer clothes. Her self-portraits are in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery and the Glasgow Art Gallery and Museum. She later moved to Edinburgh. She suffered several heart attacks in later life, but continued to develop her artistic output, her last phase focusing on paintings of church interiors in Lisbon and Venice. In 1929 she married James Beattie Michie at Teviothead Kirk. She died following a fall at her home, 7 London Street, Edinburgh and was cremated. Books on her include 'Anne Redpath 1895–1965, her life and work' (1996) by Patrick Bourne, 'Anne Redpath' (1974) by George Bruce and 'Anne Redpath, 1895–1965' (1996) by Philip Long. David (b.1814/5) from Eccles, he was farm steward at Galalaw in 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included Mary, Janet, George and Robert. James (18th C.) gardener at Stobs. His surname is recorded as 'Rippeth' in the baptismal records for his children in Cavers Parish. His children included: James (b.1725); Helen (b.1727); Janet (b.1729); and an unnamed child (b.1734). James Laidlaw (1912–2004), O.B.E., born at 9 Park Street, he became a captain of the local knitwear industry. He left school at 14 for an apprenticeship in the warehouse of Barrie & Kersel's and would eventually become Managing Director of essentially the same company. He played for Hawick R.F.C., as well as Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club, and was an accomplished sprinter. He moved to the London sales office in 1938, then joined the R.A.F., serving for 3 years in India, where he was awarded the Burma Star. After the War he rejoined his old company, working as a traveller, particularly in Scandinavia. He became President of the Hawick Knitwear Manufacturers' Association in 1956 and in 1967 became Managing Director of Barrie Knitwear Ltd.

He was a founder member (and later Chairman) of the Scottish Knitwear Council. In 1978 he was awarded the Queen's Silver Jubilee Medal for services to the textile industry and he retired in 1979, when he received the O.B.E. He served as President of the Callants' Club in 1981 and for 1981–97 he was Chairman of the Abbeyfield (Hawick) Society. John (b.c.1805) son of Adam and younger brother of William. He worked as a labourer in the Bonchester Bridge area, living for a while at Bridgend. He was one of the first Trustees of Hawick Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from about 1848. Margaret (b.c.1785) sister of hedger Adam. In 1841 she was living at Sclenty Hall and listed as 'Independent'. Also there were Jane (perhaps her mother) and the younger Elizabeth and Margaret. Neil (d.1988) from Hawick, he served in the Gordon Highlanders during WWI and was one of the last surviving holders of the 14–15 Star. He later became a strong pacifist and leading member of the local Labour Party. However, during WWII he served as a Lieutenant in the Home Guard. He worked as a foreman at Braemar. An enthusiastic supporter of athletics, he became Secretary of the Scottish Games Association. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Robert (19th C.) land steward of Bonchester Bridge who was an elder in the Hawick Relief Kirk. Samuel (18th/19th C.) servant in Pinnacle, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797 and 1798, when he was balloted. Later in 1798 he is listed among those who 'did not answers to their Names when called' and by 1799 he is listed as a deserter (with John Oliver, joiner in Ancrum, balloted in his place). Thomas Kinmont 'Kim' (1925–2018) born in Aberdeen, son of William, he was nephew of artist Anne. He was educated at Hawick High School and partly raised by his aunt Anne, particularly after the death of his mother when he was 14. He graduated from Edinburgh College of Art in 1948. He served with the Royal Corps of Signals in WWII and trained as a teacher at Moray House. He was a secondary school art teacher for 35 years, starting in Galashiels. Several exhibitions were held of his art, which was strongly influenced by his aunt. His work can be viewed in several galleries, including the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. He was a member of the New Scottish Group and the Scottish Society of Artists. He married 3 times and had sons Tom and Adam. William (18th C.) married Agnes Hobkirk in Bedrule Parish in 1771.

William (18th/19th C.) married Mary Smith in Hobkirk Parish in 1831. William (c.1805–86) born in Earlston, son of hedger Adam, he was forester at Weens. When his father died young in 1823, he and his brother John took over the job on one man's wages, but after a couple of years he took over entirely. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed as a hedger at Weens, and in 1861 was a forrester there. He continued to work for the Cleghorns and Tancreds of Weens for his whole working life. He was made an Elder of the Kirk in 1838. He was said to have a dour temper and not to be liked by everyone. He spent some time in an asylum, later living with his daughter Mary in Denholm. He married Mary Smith, who died in 1869, aged 57; her brother was William Smith who married Mary Laidlaw from Weensmoor. Their children included: Ann (b.1833), who worked for a while as laundry maid at Weens, later living in Denholm, died unmarried; Jane (1835–74); Adam (b.1838), servant at Weens and worked for Noble's in Hawick; Mary, in service at Weens, married Mr. Dodds; Thomas, gardener at Blennerhasset, Aspatia; and Elizabeth (b.1846), moved to Yorkshire. He died in Denholm at the age of 82 and is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (??–??) High School mathematics teacher of the mid-20th century, nicknamed 'Ghandi'.

the Reel (thu-reel) n. another name for the Bull Reel, particularly as danced by the Cornet, Principals and ex-Cornets shortly before midnight during the Ball. It is not danced by the other participants, who just watch the proceedings. It is started with the Cornet presenting his sash for his Lass to wear, and the men putting on white gloves. The Principles start the Reel, with the ex-Cornets joining in order of their year of office. The dance is also repeated in front of the Tower on the return from the Moat after dawn, but this time only by the Cornet and the Right- and Left-Hand Men. It is also danced in front of the Tower after the Handing-Back on the Saturday. Before 1855, when there were Races held at the Haugh, the Cornet and his followers would dance the Reel at the Haugh after the Dinner on the Friday, and this was repeated after the Dinner was resurrected in 1886. They would dance in the middle of the gymnastic track and this would signal the start of the Games. The Reel was first danced at the Ball (by the ex-Cornets) only in 1891. The origin of the Reel is uncertain.

reevick (ree-vik) n., arch. a flimsy piece of material, especially muslin cheese-cloth – 'As thin as a reevick' [GW].

reeze (reez) v., arch. to break wind, flatulate – 'To Reeze behind, To let wind go, Roxb. Whence the phrase, a reezing horse for one that is healthy' [JoJ].

reezie (ree-zee) adj., poet. dizzy, giddy, light-headed, capricious – 'Lang about Ettrick may ye toddle, And clew a poet's reezy noddle' [JR].

reffet (re-fe') pp., poet. rieved, plundered, ravished – 'Thou hest reffet awa my hairt ...' [HSR].

the Reformation (thu-re-for-mā-shin) n. name usually given to a movement of religious reform that swept across Europe in the late 16th century, leading to the Church of Rome being replaced with the Protestant Church. One of the major reasons was a perceived abuse of clerical power, but mixed up with power struggles among the nobility. Lutheran doctrines from the continent led to early martyrs, with Archbishop David Beaton consequently killed by rebels in 1545. John Knox, with his Calvinist ideals became leader from 1555, and the Church was completely reformed by an Act of 1560, although not fully established as 'the true and only Kirk of Christ within this realm' until 1567. St. Mary's, like other churches, must then have been transformed into a much plainer and more severe church, suitable for Presbyterian worship. After the Reformation there was a shortage of suitable ministers, so there was an arrangement whereby several parishes were combined under one minister, assisted by a number of readers (most of whom had been pre-Reformation Roman Catholic priests). It is thus hard to distinguish who acted as preacher for the local parishes at the end of the 16th century. The use of the terms 'pastor', 'reader' and 'vicar' in that period, as well as 'minister', add to the ambiguities.

the Reform Bill (thu-ree-fōrm-bil) n. parliamentary bill introduced by Prime Minister Earl Grey in April 1831, being possibly the first voluntary scheme of government reform. After much political wrangling it finally passed in June 1832 and became the Reform Act. In 1812 the entire county of Roxburghshire had only 143 voters (up from 105 in 1788), of which a mere 2 or 3 were in Hawick. Hawick people were much involved in the political discussion, with several pro-Reform resolutions being made at public meetings, some of which were passed on to Parliament or the King. A holiday was declared when news reached Hawick of the Bill's initial passing by the Commons in 1831. Trades and societies paraded the streets and bonfires were lit at the Tower Knowe and the Cross. Parliament was then dissolved and new elections called the day after the Hawick May Fair, when a contingent of about 1,000 Hawick men marched to Jedburgh. Defeat of the Bill in the House of Lords led to near revolution around Britain, including in Hawick. Final passage of the Bill was cause for perhaps the largest celebratory parade Hawick has known, in August 1832, organised by a special Reform Committee. The day started with 10 drummers and fifers parading through the town at 6 a.m. and 9 a.m. Bells were rung, the Flag was displayed from the Town Hall, and the flags of the trades and societies hung along the High Street. The crowd was estimated at 10–12,000, and the parade itself, starting at 1 p.m., consisted of over 1200 people in 16 separate sections, accompanied by 3 bands. This included the local landed (Whig) gentry, the Cornet, Magistrates and Council, Tradesmen's guilds and Freemasons. The parade ended at the Sandbed, where the participants were met by smartly-dressed women and girls bearing flowers. 1,146 people then dined in the open air on the Upper Haugh, catered by 8 of the Town's hotels. The Chief Magistrate was in the Chair, and other guests included Capt. George Elliot, Sir William F. Elliot, James Elliot of Wolfelee and George Cleghorn of Weens. There were also speeches by Robert Wilson and Rev. James Henderson. There was then a further march back to the Tower Knowe, and celebrations continued in various inns. As a result of the Bill the County had 1316 voters, and Hawick itself had 300 voters added to its electoral roll. However, a Commons Select Committee investigated abuses of the Bill through ‘fictitious voters’ being added, specifically joint proprietors of property arranged between Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. At the election of 1835 there was a procession of voters and supporters from Hobkirk, Kirkton and Cavers marching into Hawick, accompanied by bands and banners. When it became clear that Lord Scott (the Tory candidate) was going to win, the crowds became quite unruly and the Riot Act was read, with a troop of the Scots Greys being called. The Reform Act of 1868 gave the vote to all male householders, and at that time the Hawick Burghs constituency was formed – ‘Huz and Mainchester carried the Reform Bill’ [T].

the Reform Committee (thu-ree-fōrm-kumi’-ee) n. body in the late 1820s and early 1830s composed of townsmen campaigning in support of the Reform Bill.

reft (reft) pp., poet. torn, rent, pulled assunder – ‘The blasts o’ the winter, sae bitter and keen, Had reft the sward o’ the brightest green’ [JT], ‘...I sadly mourn for my ain true love That was reft away frae me’ [JCG].

refugee (re-few-jee) n. a young person sent to a rural area from a city to protect them from air raids etc., particularly during World War II, also sometimes referred to as an ‘evacuee’. In Hawick they were usually children from the Edinburgh area. There were also Belgian refugees at Silverbuthall during WWI; they arrived about 1915, and most of them returned to Belgium in 1919.

regaird (ree-gārd) v., n. regard – ‘...and on-lawed, conforme to the acts of the towne, in regaird of thair own confessions ...’ [BR1679], ‘No sermon, in regaird Mr Douglass who was appointed by ye Persbyterie was labouring under a fever’ [PR1712], ‘...who was most sharplie rebuked in regaird both that he is a magistrate in this toun and one of ye number of ye Elders’ [PR1716], ‘...næther carist thou for ony man: for thou regairdistna the person o’ men’ [HSR], ‘Daurin the whummlin flude withoot regaird For ocht, bar rinnin fish, this side o Hell’ [DH], ‘Wi sma regaird For Hawick toon

And even less For Maggie Broon ...’ [DH], ‘...an’ was enlightened on the poseetion as regards the Common-Ridin’ ...’ [BW1939].

Regal Bailie (ree-gul-bā-lee) n. also called a Bailie of Regality, title sometimes used for the representative of the Lord whose lands included a burgh, with certain administrative and legal powers in that burgh, including collection of rents, taxes at fairs, etc. The Douglasses of Drumlanrig appointed a local man to hold this position up until they relinquished the Barony in about 1670. In Hawick this was for a long time the Chamberlain of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The office was held by the Duchess of Buccleuch until she failed to take the test legislated by Parliament for Charles II. So in 1686 the office was granted to Walter Scott of Alton. Hawick’s Regal Bailie remained a powerful local figure until the abolishing of regalities by Heritable Jurisdictions (Scotland) Act of 1747 – ‘Gedeon Scott of Falmash, regal bailie to the Duchess of Buccleuch ...’ [BR1699] (see also Bailie o Regality and Baron Depute).

regality (ree-ga-li’-ee) n. an administrative and legal area, typically larger than a barony, and usually given by the Crown. The jurisdiction of a regality superceded that of the Sheriff of the County. The Lord of the Regality had a distinct court, with its own clerk and officers, overseen by a Bailie of Regality. There were formerly 7 such jurisdictions in Roxburghshire, namely Glasgow (the former lands of that Bishopric), Hawick, Jedburgh, Kelso, Liddesdale, Melrose and Sprouston. Hawick was formerly referred to as a Regality, presumably because it was administered as the equivalent of a Royal Burgh, even although it is unclear whether it was created as such by the Crown. The first such mention appears to be in 1358 (although since this is along with Sprouston, and it may be that only Sprouston was a regality at that time, with Hawick being just a ‘free barony’) is unclear if they were both distinct regalities). Hawick was reerected into a free barony and regality in 1686, since it has fallen to the Crown after the death of the Duke of Monmouth; this new charter granted the barony and regality to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. It ceased to be a regality when heritable jurisdictions were abolished by Parliament in 1747, with the Duke of Buccleuch being compensated £400 as a result – ‘Annent the egregious and insolent abuse committ by Walter Rowcastell upon William Scott, regall baylyea of the regality of Hawicke ...’ [BR1693].

of Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, where it is also listed as ‘Riggs’. At that time it extended to 84 acres, was bounded by Castlehill, How Meadow and Branhholme Muir and contained no farmhouse. It probably corresponded to the place marked ‘Waes’ just below Chapelhill on Blaeu’s 1654 map (the origin of the name is uncertain, but perhaps just ‘rigs’).

Reginald (re-ji-nuld) n. of Durham or Coldingham (d.c.1190) mediæval hagiographer, who gave one of the first mentions of Hawick in his account of the miracles of St. Cuthbert, written in the 1160s and 1170s. Reginald’s work is partly a recounting of stories told by Aelfric (or Aelred) of Rievaulx, a monk from Durham who travelled around the 1040s; but other parts of Reginald’s book are contemporary (he was certainly alive in the 1150s), and hence the date of the local tales is hard to pin down. In fact the last 6 chapters cover stories relevant to Teviotdale, the chapel in the Slitrig, Dolphinus (Rector of Cavers), etc. The story with the most specific Hawick connection concerns Seigiva and Rosfritha, said to be from Hawick (and thus, probably the first known residents) who witness the mysterious appearance of a candle at a chapel dedicated to St. Cuthbert in the Slitrig valley (identified with a site at Cogsmill). He also wrote histories of St. Godric (with whom he spent time personally), St. Oswald (King of Northumbria), and possibly St. Ebba.

Reginald (re-ji-nuld) n. of Cavers (13th C.) recorded in 1259 as witness to an agreement between Sir Hugh Abernethy and Sir William Douglas, signed in Edinburgh. His name is given as ‘Reginald Cauers’. It is unclear whether he was from Cavers or was perhaps a cleric associated with Cavers Kirk.

region (ree-jin) n. one of nine units into which Scottish local government was split following Reorganisation in 1974. Each region was divided into separate ‘districts’, Hawick being in the Borders Region until further reorganisation in 1995.

Regional Council (ree-ji-nul-koon-sul) n. the higher level of local council between May 1975 and April 1996, Hawick’s council being that of the Borders Region with headquarters in Newtown St. Boswells. Regional councils were responsible for education, social services, roads and transport. Both District and Regional Councils were replaced by unitary authorities in 1996, Hawick lying within the jurisdiction of the Scottish Borders Council.

the Registrar’s (thu-re-jee-strawrz) n. Registrar’s office, where civil weddings took place.

From 1974–97 it was located at 12 High Street, which is now a grade B listed building. Latterly the office has been within the Town Hall. The first Registrar in Hawick was schoolmaster Anthony Dodds 1854–87, following the Registration Act of 1854. James Shiel was appointed as the first Registrar of Wilton about the same time. Both of these men would operate out of their own homes, on Allars Crescent and Laing Terrace, respectively.

registrat (re-jis-trat) pp., arch. registered – ‘...and consentis that thir presentis be insert and registrat in the bukis of Counsale ...’ [SB1599], ‘...be insert and registrat in the Books of Council and Session ...’ [BR1672].

regrat (ree-grat) n., arch. regret – ‘...so farre sympathisez with yow ...as to afford yow, att least, some regrate’ [SB1670].

regrait (ree-grāt) v., arch. to regret – ‘Be-ing acertenit be my seruand of the slauchter of zour frind, quhilk I regrait from my verry hart ...’ [SB1584].

regratin (ree-gra-tin) n., arch. the act of reselling, buying a commodity in order to profit from reselling it – ‘Various persons are fined ‘for breach of the proclamation of His Majesty’s Privy Council, against regrating of victuals and fore-stallers’ [JW1699].

regretit (ree-gre-ee’, gre-ti’) pp., arch. regretted – ‘But oo’ve never regretit oor jauntie that day – It was graund, man, an’ noo as aw close, aw man say ...’ [BM1900].

reid (reed) adj. red – ‘hei hed a right reid nose on um’, ‘The sun was reid as a furnace mouthe, As he sank on the Ettricke hyll; And gloamyne gatherit from the easte, The dowye world to fill’ [JTe], ‘For in the han’ o’ the Lord ther is ane cup, an’ the wine is reid ...’ [HSR], ‘The reid hairst moon climbs steep and slow a far September sky ...’ [JYH], ‘...till the brae-face was traisselt an the gress ran reed wui bluid’ [ECS], ‘Hei girmed at the reid, an’ grat at the blue ...’ [DH], ‘Frae reid to creamy-white ... Daft berries for daft days ...’ [DH], ‘The reid rose dwines and her petals lie ...’ [WL], ‘...To catch a glimpse yont the grey reek O’ the distant ruifs o’ reid’ [WL] (also spelled ‘reed’).

Reid (reed) n. Agnes ‘Nanny’ (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Stirches in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Gilbert Chisholme. Rev. Alan minister of the combined Parish of Newcastleton and Canonbie from 1989. In 2008 he moved to Kinross. Rev. Alexander (d.1640s) became minister of Ashkirk in 1619. He donated

£11 merks towards the building of Glasgow University Library in 1636. His is probably the name transcribed 'M. Reid, Ashkirk' (probably 'Mr.' is meant) on the 'Confessions' of Faith, signed in Hawick in 1638. Robert Cuthbertson signed beside him as Reader, suggesting he had an assistant at that time. He married Janet Shaw and their children included John and William (who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648). He was present during the admission of Harry Elliot as minister of Bedrule in 1640. He witnessed a baptism for Rev. Robert Cunningham of Hawick in 1640 (who also married a Shaw, and so possibly their wives were related). He died sometime between 1645 and 1649. He married Janet Shaw and their children included John and William (who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648). Andrew (17th C.) listed as undermiller at Borthaugh among the 'deficient' on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hassendean Knowe, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the lawyer who paid the horse tax in Jedburgh in the 1780s. He could be the 'Mr. Reid' whose servant John Armstrong was recorded at Knowetownhead in 1797. David (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Helen Blyth and their children included: Jean (b.1708); John (b.1711); Janet (b.1713); Helen (b.1715); and Bessie (b.1718). The witnesses in 1708 were weavers John Stevenson and John Richardson, in 1711 were Andrew Jardine ('older') and wright James Purcell, in 1713 were Robert Turnbull and Robert Rodger, and in 1718 were wright James Purcell and weaver Michael Jolly. He is probably the David 'Red' who witnessed a baptism for Walter White in 1728. David (b.c.1780) slater working with Robert Smith according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hawick. Derek Robert Headteacher of Burnfoot New Community School, appointed in 1996. He was awarded a C.B.E. in 2002 for services to education and was Hawick Citizen of the Year in 2006. Rev. Edward Thomas Scott (1871–1938) Rector of St. Cuthbert's Kirk 1903–1910. He came from a well-known Glasgow family, with 3 of his brothers being Deputy Lieutenants of that city. He had previously been assistant at St. Paul's and then St. Mary's Cathedral, both in Edinburgh. For most of his incumbency in Hawick he was assisted by Rev. A.L. Ross. His time as Rector was marked by acclaimed Evensong services, which attracted people from other local churches. There were several improvements to the church during his time, including chairs to replace the pews, and his gift of an oak chancel screen. He also became Chaplain to Episcopalians at Stobs Camp. He left to become Rector of St. Bride's in Glasgow, later becoming Dean and Bishop of that Diocese and later Bishop of St. Andrews. Esther (d.1888) worked at Wester Nurseries from the age of 8, but then took over as servant to Peter Wilson's family from Jean Renwick about 1830. The pair completed a continuous service of 106 years. She can be seen in a portrait with the family. George (b.c.1780) servant to John Donaldson at Swanshiel according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. George (19th C.) married Mary Linton in Wilton in 1840. George (d.1923) local businessman. He was Secretary of the Hawick Baptist Kirk for 10 years and Sunday School Superintendent for 6 years. Gordon (1943–) born in Hawick, educated at Hawick and Gala, then at Edinburgh and Oxford Universities, continuing to train as an Episcopalian minister. He became Curate of St. Salvador's Church in Edinburgh in 1967, then served as Chaplain of Salisbury Theological College and Rector of St. Michael's & All Saints Church, Edinburgh from 1972. He also served as a member of Lothian Regional Council and Convenor of Lothian & Borders Police Board. He was Provost of Inverness Cathedral 1984–87 and joined the Diocese of Gibraltar in Europe (the Church of England Diocese that covers continental Europe) in 1988. He lived in Gibraltar and Milan, and looked after chaplaincies all over Italy and Malta. He then became Rector of St. Clement's in Philadelphia. Helen (d.1800) Hawick resident whose death is recorded. She is listed as 'Called Helen and the Cudy', presumably meaning that she had a donkey. J. (19th C.) listed in Slater's 1852 directory as an 'eating house keeper' on the Cross Wynd. James (17th C.) resident at Horselee in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident at Penchrise. His son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. James (18th C.) tenant at the Flex in 1743. He married Janet Reid and their children included: Andrew (b.1743); and Janet (b.1749). The witnesses in 1743 were William Scott, also tenant in the Flex, and James Hume in Whitlaw. Probably the same James was recorded at Lochburnfoot in 1745 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish, and at Braidhaugh when his daughter Helen (b.1747) was also baptised in Cavers. John, who was also at Lochburnfoot in 1745, was probably his brother. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Orr and their children included: James (b.1778); William (b.1784); Elliot (a daughter, b.1787); and Euphan (b.1792). The 1787 baptism was 'before the Congregation'. He was living at Dovemount in 1787. James (18th/19th C.) labourer at Newton in Wilton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. He may be the son of James baptised in Wilton in 1778. Rev. James (18th/19th C.) tutor at Minto House according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. This meant that he was aged between 19 and 29 at that time. Perhaps he was the same 'Mr. Reid' whose servant at Knowtownhead was listed on the Militia ballot in 1797. It is unclear where he might have been a minister after his position at Minto. James (b.c.1780) labourer at Whitropefoot according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. James (b.c.1790) miller at Newmill on Slitrig. He was there in 1841. During the 1846 flood he lost a whole field of turnips, which were said to be the best in the Slitrig valley, as well as half a field of potatoes. He married Margaret Haddon, and their children (baptised in Ashkirk Parish) included: Agnes (or Nancy, b.1819); William (b.c.1820); John (b.1823); George White (b.1825); Walter (b.1829); Elizabeth (b.c.1831); Margaret (b.c.1833); James (b.c.1836); and Gilbert (b.c.1840). He is probably the James, son of William in Acreknowe, baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1788. James S. (19th/20th C.) farmer at Penchrise. His brother John farmed at Barnes, which he took over after his brother's death. He won several sheep prizes around the 1910s. Jessie Crawford describes him as 'dour as ditchwater and as hard as nails'. John (16th C.) presented as Rector of Ashkirk in 1552. Nothing else appears to be known about him. John 'Jock' (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as 'Jak Reid' and he was probably related to 'Pait', who was also listed. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, with his name recorded as 'Rid'. He married Isobel Mathieson and their son James was baptised in 1656. The witnesses were Thomas (surely a relative) and James Scott. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret 'Betie' and their son John was baptised in

1670. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen 'Lazen' and their son Walter was baptised in 1686. John (17th C.) resident of Adderstonelee on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname was written 'Rid'. John (17th C.) resident at Hawthornside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths and was surely related to Thomas, who was also listed there. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Borthwickshiels in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is listed under the farms of the Earl of Tarras in Hassendean Parish. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Chisholme. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: thomas (b.1701); Helen (b.1703); John (b.1704); James (b.1706); and Thomas (again, b.1706). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Grieve and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1710. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their son Thomas was baptised in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Raesknowe. He married Isobel Beatie (or 'Betie'), who was a schoolmistress. In 1721 the Hawick Session requested that he produce a testimonial from his previous parish, since his wife had asked for money for teaching poor children. In 1723 he was described as 'a well aged man, capable to teach at ye said toun', when the session agreed to encourage him to teach the poor children in Raesknowe. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1742 he was at 'Harden ...' when his son Charles was baptised. He is probably the John who married Margaret Donaldson in Robertson in 1740. Margaret (b.1741), baptised in Robertson, was likely also his child. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick and then Cavers Parishes. In 1745 he was living at Lochburnfoot, where James was also living, perhaps his brother. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included: John (b.1735); John (again, b.1739); Helen (b.1740); Margaret (b.1745); John (again, b.1747); and Janet (b.1750). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included John (b.1756). John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1761 he married Janet Anderson, from Hawick Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Berryfell in 1776 when his son Robert was baptised. John (18th/19th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1797, when he was working for George Douglas. His name was written 'Read'. Probably the same John was 'Chaise Driver Cavers' when listed in 1797 among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish'. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'New Appletreehall', recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 4 horses. He could be the John Reid, who was bankrupt by 1817 when there was a court case over an 1802 bill he had with John Allan, involving Adam Ormiston, and John and Thomas (his brother-in-law) Ainslie. John (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Thomline and their son George was baptised in 1839. Rev. John (19th C.) minister recorded at Castleton in Slater's 1852 directory. It is unclear which church he may have been minister of, but it is possible he was one of the supply ministers for the Congregational Kirk. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Barnes near Stobs. He remained a bachelor. He was a good friend of Dr. Barrie and Finlay Purdom, and was said to be fond of a bottle. When in Hawick he stabled his horse at the Tower Hotel; one day he ignored the advice of the hostlers to take a carriage home and mounted his horse while quite drunk, which subsequently reared and he died in the pend. After his death the farm was taken over by his brother James S. John (19th/20th C.) butcher on the High Street. His brother James died in the South African War in 1901. Katherine (18th C.) housemaid at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Kentigern (16th C.) recorded as priest at Hassendean Kirk in 1539. He may have been the actual minister there at that time, with Sir John Duncan and Sir George Scott squabbling over the main benefice. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Peter 'Pate' (16th C.) tenant in Outersiderig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as 'Pait Reid' and probably related to 'Jak', who was also listed. R. (18th/19th C.) mason in Wilton. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. R.E. (19th/20th C.) President of the Toronto Hawick Common Riding in at least 1926 and 1927. He was presumably originally from the Hawick area. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Langholm, he was rebuked by the Castleton Kirk Session in 1709 for having an irregular marriage. Robert (1734/5–1822) labourer at Boghall. His death is recorded in Hawick. Robert (b.c.1770s) recorded as house servant and groom at Stirches in 1788, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. He was recorded as a servant at Heap on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and explicitly a servant to 'Mr

Hall' at Heap on the 1801 Militia ballot. Perhaps the same Robert was a servant at Silverbuthall, who married Christian Anderson and had children John (b.1810) and Richard (b.1812) baptised in Wilton Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) served as overseer for collecting marl from Groundistone and Blackcleuch for the Buccleuch estates, in the period 1799–1807. He may be the same Robert recorded as farmer at Chesters (Southdean) in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Janet Rae in Wilton in 1799. Robert 'Rob' (b.1791) son of William and Jean, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a stockingmaker who lived at Roadhead and was known as 'General Reid' of Roadhead. He led the Hawick contingent to the Carterhaugh Baa game of 1815, gaining his nickname there. The death of his dog Flora inspired one of the few surviving poems of James Hogg; apparently he had the family bible bound in the dog's hide after she died. He is listed as a stocking-maker at Roadhead among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He is recorded at Roadhead in 1841, 1851 (by which time he was a widower) and 1861 (when he is listed as 'Wool Frame Work Knitter'). He married Esther Cairns in Wilton in 1818. Their children included William, George, Thomas, Alexander and Jane. He is probably the stockingmaker whose child's death is recorded in 1838. Stan (20th C.) organiser of dances in the Drill Hall, popular on Saturday nights in the 1930s – 'Ee got intae Stan Reid's for a tanner And a pass oot on the back o' eer hand' [AY]. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. The will of his wife Margaret Turnbull is recorded in 1682. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as resident at Hawthornside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is surely related to John, who was also listed there, as well as Thomas, who was at Hawthornside a few decades later. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson and Hawick Parishes. In 1733 he was recorded at 'Eal...' (either Eilrig or Alemoor). In 1746 he was at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). He married Agnes Borthwick in Robertson in 1733 and their children included: Mary (b.1733), baptised in Robertson; Janet (b.1738), baptised in Hawick; and James (b.1746), also baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1746 were Francis and Thomas Elliot at Harwood. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Ormiston in 1726, 1727, 1729 and 1737. He is probably the Thomas who married Jane Elliot in Cavers in 1725. His children, baptised in Cavers, included: Bessie (b.1726); Jane (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); James (b.1731); Bessie (b.1733); Janet (b.1734); and Thomas (b.1737). He is surely related to Walter, who was at Ormiston at the same time. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was herd at Hawthornside in 1739. His children included James (b.1739) and Elspeth (b.1744). Thomas (18th C.) along with Thomas Blyth he rented Appletreehall, Knowetownhead and part of Clarilaw from Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1763. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Scott (in Lees) in 1764 and several other baptisms in Wilton Parish in 1769 and 1770 (suggesting that he may have been an Elder in the Kirk). Thomas (18th C.) married Mary Black in Hobkirk in 1766. Thomas (19th C.) tenant of St. Leonards farm in the late 19th century, when the ordering of the Curds and Cream became a more formal event. It was probably his wife who was painted with Betsy the cow by J.E.D. Murray in 1889 – ‘And hearken ye, hearken ye, friend Tam Reid, Speakin’ loud’s a wee thing risky; Some like when here, A drap o’ good cheer, So dinna forget the whisky!’ [JEDM]. Walter (18th C.) resident of Ormiston, where he is recorded in 1735, 1737 and 1742. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Thomas (b.1731); John (b.1735); Agnes (b.1737); Isabel (b.1739); and Agnes (again, b.1742). He is surely related to Thomas, who was at Ormiston at the same time. Walter (d.bef. 1808) roadman in Hawick. He was already deceased when his daughter Margaret died in 1808. Walter (b.c.1805) mason in Wilton, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at Kirkstyle (probably the north side of Princes Street, near Dickson Street). He married Elizabeth Ballantyne and their children included John, Walter B., Elizabeth, Robert and Robert Ann. In 1851 his widow was ‘proprietor of houses’ at the same address. Walter (19th C.) farmer at Acreknowe. He was there in 1841, with 4 female servants in his household. His widow was still at Acreknowe in 1851. He married Margaret Aitkin and their children (baptised in Kirkton Parish) included: Elizabeth Frances (b.1824); William (b.1825); Gilbert Aitkin (b.1827); Walter (b.1833); Margaret (b.1836); James (b.1838); and Elizabeth Frances (b.1842). William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Wille Redde servaunte to John Crosser’, among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. Many of the relevant Croziers were connected with the Slitrig valley at that time. It is possible his name was ‘Reddy’ or some other variant. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hummelknowes. In 1709 he married Isobel Leyden, the marriage being recorded in Cavers Parish. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Hislop, servant in Allanhaugh Mill. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for William Helm in 1731. He married Helen Armstrong and their children included: William (b.1713); Janet (b.1715); Bessie (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1721). The witnesses in 1719 were Beadle John Scott and William Hislop. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Whitthope in 1757, 1763 and 1773 and 1775. His children, baptised in Robertson, included Margaret (b.1755), Isobel (b.1757), Agnes (b.1759), John (b.1761), Robert (b.1763), Thomas (b.1773) and an unnamed daughter (b.1775). He may be the William, married to Jean Scott, whose son Gilbert was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1769. William (18th C.) recorded at Acreknowe in 1788 when his son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish and in 1790 when his son Walter was baptised. William, baptised in Kirkton in 1794 was probably also his child. He is probably the William who married ‘Angus’ Cavers in Kirkton in 1787. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Dodburn, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797, when he owned 2 horses. He also paid the dog tax at Dodburn in 1797. William ‘Wull’ (c.1769–1846) sexton and Beadle at Wilton for about 50 years and great-grandfather of James Turnbull. In 1835 he was Church Officer at Dovemount, and in 1840 and 1841 was at Roadside. In the 1841 census he was listed at Gibsnose, with his wife Jane. He was one of the people chosen in 1842 to point out the old marches of Wilton. One of his responsibilities was ringing the church bell, and he is said to have complained about how infrequently he got to ring the bell, just before his own funeral. He was known as a great wit, and was unkindly rumoured to be in league with grave-robbers – ‘Wull Reid, hei lifts th’ deid; Collins does the same; Jimmie Riddle is a sweep And resurrection man’ [T]. He married Jean (or Jane) Reid their children included: Robert (b.1791); Jean (b.1793); Janet (b.1795), who married their neighbour Thomas Dryden; Thomas (b.1800); William (b.1804); and John (b.1806). William (b.1794/5) farmer at Winningtonrig. He was there in 1841 and 1851 with his son William; in 1851 he was farmer of 600 acres and employer of 7 people. William (b.1803/4) mason in Wilton. He was listed at Damside in 1840, with the address changed to Roadside, where he was in 1841. In 1851 he was a journeyman mason on Wilton Kirkstyle. His wife was Mary and their children included Helen, William, John, Jane and Walter. Rev. William (b.1823/4) from Forfar, he was a ‘pro-bationer’ of the Free Church in Newcastleton in 1851. Since that church was only established in 1850, he was probably the first person to minister to the new congregation. He is recorded giving a temperance talk in Newcastleton in 1852, and in a directory of that year is incorrectly listed as ‘John’. William (b.1825/6) son of Walter, he took over as farmer at Acreknowe. In 1851 he was farmer of 1200 acres at Acreknowe, and employing 6 farm labourers. William J.S. (19th/20th C.) wrote the article ‘Drumlanrig and the Charter’ for the 1938 Transactions (formerly written ‘Red’, ‘Reed’, ‘Rid’, etc.).

Reid Acre Brae (reed-ā-kur-brā) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

reid-avised (reed-a-vIzd) adj., arch. red-faced, embarrassed aspect (cf. black-avised).

the Reid Book (thu-reed-book) n. name sometimes given to the handbook-sized set of words for the most popular Hawick songs, published in 1957 along with ‘The Hawick Songs – A Complete Collection’. Carried around and dog-eared over 3 decades it was replaced by the ‘Blue Book’ in 1978 and then the ‘Green Book’ in 2001.

reid-cap (reed-kawp) n., arch. a cruel, mischievous spirit with long teeth, said to inhabit old towers – ‘Redcap is a popular appellation of that class of spirits which haunts old castles. Every ruined tower in the south of Scotland is supposed to have an inhabitant of this species’ [JL], ‘Now, Red-cap he was there, And he was there indeed; And grimly he grinn’d and glower’d Wi’ the red cowl on his head’ [T] (cf. Robin Reidcap).

Reidcleuch Edge (reed-klooch-ej) n. Redcleuch Edge, small hill about 2 km north of Craik village, reaching a height of 392 m. A stream to the east of there is the Red Cleuch, which runs into Shiel Sike, while a stream to the south is Red Sike.

reid-coat (reed-kō) n., arch. the scarlet ladybird. Local children used to pick it up and throw it in the air singing ‘reed-coat, reed-coat, fly away, An’ make the morn a sunny day!’ [GW].

reid-hand (reed-hawnd) adj., arch. a legal term from the 15th and 16th centuries, meaning caught in the act of a crime, used throughout Scotland. This led to the present use of the phrase ‘caught red-handed’, which was adapted

reid-keel (reed-keel) n., arch. ruddle, red pigment – ‘Ruddle is ‘reid keel’, plumbago is ‘black keel’ [JAHM].

Reidheugh (reed-, red-hewch) n. Redheugh, ancient seat of the Elliot family, between Hermitage and Newcastleton. Scott of Satchells suggests that the Elliots received Redheugh from Robert the Bruce in about 1320. The name first occurs in a rental roll of Liddesdale in about 1376 (worth 15 shillings, ‘per forincecum seruicium reddendo x s’). An Elliot of Redheugh is referred to around 1400. There is also a story, apparently from a manuscript of the Blackadder family, of an Elliot of Redheugh called ‘Chieftan of the South’, who was killed in battle along with his 3 sons, but had a daughter Mary who married Cuthbert Blackadder of that ilk and had a son who was alive in 1447. However, the first definitive record of this being the family seat is when ‘Robert elwald of ye Redheuch’ is mentioned in 1476. A precept for the lands is recorded in 1489, although the date of the original charter is unknown. Robert, the 17th chief lived mainly at the new Larriston house, so Redheugh became less prominent. That Robert failed to have a male heir and the lands went to his daughter Margaret, who married a son of Eliott of Stobs, whose descendants were the Elliots of Larriston. Thomas Armstrong is recorded as possessor of the lands in 1632. The farm itself was valued at £96 11s in 1678, when disjoined from the former estate of Elliot of Larriston. Robert of Larriston went bankrupt and sold the lands to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688, but they were repurchased by William Elliot (descendant of the Falnash branch) in about 1730 for his 2nd son, Robert. Around this time the present house and barn were built, with the north and east sides of the farmhouse perhaps incorporating earlier walls. The farm was still valued at £96 11s in the 1788 county valuation and 1811 Land Tax Rolls. George Oliver and Francis Armstrong were servants there in 1799 and Walter Armstrong in 1801. The farm suffered greatly in the flood of 1846. Robert’s grandson Robert died in 1915 and in 1918 his sister Anna Mary sold the farm to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. Thomas Scott sold it to Sir Gilbert Eliott, 10th Baronet of Stobs in 1946. The farm has been modernised, with a small loch created by damming the Rede Burn. A clan museum is also situated there. The precise location of the original tower is uncertain, with locals pointing out one site in the 19th century (recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858) to the south near the railway viaduct, another just to the east of there, where there are some foundations and a third to the west of the farmhouse, where there is an enclosure where a plaque has been placed marking this as the 'Site of Redheugh Tower' (although there is no real evidence for this). On the opposite side of the Hermitage Water there is another site claimed to be home of 'Jock of the Park'. And north-west of the farmhouse there is an area of rig lines and field systems (also spelled 'Redheuch' and sometimes erroneously 'Redhaugh'; the origin of the name is probably just 'red height', i.e. the height above the Rede Burn; it is 'Redehugh' about 1376 and is recorded regularly from at least 1476; it was 'Redehuch' in 1489, 'redheuch' in 1502, 'Redheucht' in 1508, 'Redeheuche' in 1510 and 1515/6, 'Reidheuch' in 1526, 'the Redhwyh' in 1546, 'the Reidhewcht' in 1547 and 1548, 'Reidheuch' in 1550, 'Reidhuche' in 1557, 'Reideuch' in 1561, 'Riedheucht' in 1563, 'Ridhewcht' in the 1570s, 'Reidhewch' in 1573, 'Reidheuch' in 1574 and 1591, 'Ridhewcht' in about 1580, 'Reidhewch' and 'Readhewghe' in 1584, 'Reidheuch' in 1581, 1583/4 and 1584/5, 'Reidhewch' in 1602, 'Reidheuche' in 1607, 'Reidcleuch' in 1608, 'Reidhewch' in 1613, 'Reidheuch' in 1619, 'Ridheuche' in 1624, 'Reidheuche' in 1632 and 'Reedheugh' in 1694; it appears on Gordon's c. 1650 map as 'Reedheuch', on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Ridheuch' and is 'Redheugh' by the time of Stobie's 1770 map).

the Reid Lion (thu-reed-II-in) n. the Red Lion Inn, at the Sandbed in the early 19th century, with proprietor Robert Scott. It is unclear where this was, with the possibility that it was an alternative name for one of the other Sandbed pubs. The phrase was also a nickname in use for someone in Hawick in the early 19th century.

Reidmoss (reed-mos) n. Redmoss, farmstead in Liddesdale, just north of Whisgills, on the Tinnis Burn. It was at one time part of the farm of Flatt. It is probably the 'Redemoss' listed in about 1376 (in the charters of Douglas of Morton) as a 12-shilling land. In 1541 it was leased to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn) and valued at 30 pence. Other lands of the same name are also listed in 1541 as being vacant. It is stated (in a note in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784) that the former farm of Puddingburn was on its lands. Thomas Wilson possessed these lands, along with Over and Nether Whisgills, in 1632. It is described in 1718 in a survey carried out for Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, when along with Over Whisgills, Tinnis, Bankhead and Side it consisted of 2390 acres. William Anderson died there in 1781. Thomas Telfer was shepherd there in 1797, Adam Telfer in at least 1799–1801 and John Armstrong in 1801. There were Turnbulls there in the mid-19th century and Adam Scott was farmer in 1868. David Anderson wrote a song about the old tree his grandfather had planted there. There are remains of other buildings on the Tinnis Burn to the north-west, as well as old rig lines and boundary banks in the area (it is 'Reidmoss' and 'Reidmoos' in 1541 and 'Ridmos' in 1632; it marked 'Redmoss' on Stobie's 1770 map).

reid-ribbon (reed-ri-bin) adj., arch. bloodshot (of the eyes), having heavily inflamed eye-lids – 'Reed-ribbon-eeen = bloodshot eyes, especially when the lids are inflamed' [ECS].

the Reid Rose (thu-reed-rōz) n. the Red Rose, Hawick's first Chinese restaurant, on Baker Street in the 1960s and 70s.

Reid Rowan (reed-row-in) n. burly riever mentioned in 'The Ballad of Kinmont Willie'. Whether he represents a real person is unclear – 'Then Red Rowan has hente him up, The starkest man in Teviotdale – 'Abide, abide now, Red Rowan, Till of my Lord Scroope I take farewell'', [T], 'But ere they had won where the wandering moon Lit Essenside Loch with her diamond shoon Red Rowan was galloping free on the heath With his neck outstretched and the bit in his teeth' [WHO].

Reidscar Sike (reed-skawr-sīk) n. Redscar Sike, small stream in upper Liddisdale, rising on Lamb Hill and flowing into Cliffhope Burn.

Reid's Close (reedz-klōs) n. former passageway on the High Street, probably at No. 77. It is recorded on the 1861 census.

reidshank (reed-shawngk) n., poet. a highlander – '... An' that's as true as I'm a Scot, A redshank, Norland haggis eater' [JoHa].

the Reidskins (thu-reed-skinz) n. nickname of the Y.M. Rugby Club.

Reidsmuir Plantin (reedz-mewr-plawn'-in) n. Redsmuir Plantation, small wood between Tythehouse and Harwood, on the south side of the Harwood Burn.

Reid's Relay (reedz-ree-lā) n. radio and television cable company, which helped provide Teries with decent signals in the middle of the 20th century. This included some council houses that were refused permission to erect aerials in the 1960s. In the 1930s the firm of George Reid Radio received the BBC signal on a 75 ft aerial, off Croft Road, behind their North Bridge Street premises, and relayed the signal around town by means of cables. The sets to receive the signals required no electrical power, and gave much better reception than a radio set. When TV arrived in the 1950s Reid's installed a TV receiving mast above the Wellogate, and most Hawick households rented their sets and cable connections from Reid's, although another local firm (Lawrence's) competed. The end for the company came with the erection of new masts at Ashkirk, and the booster on the Miller's Knowes.

Reid Swire (reed-swIr) n. former name for the hill on the Border, essentially synonymous with the Carter Bar. This is where the River Rede rises, and was the location of the fray of 1575 – ‘On July seventh, the truth to say, At the Red-Swire the tryst was set: Our Wardens they affix'd the day, And as they promis'd, sae they met’ [CPM] (see also Redeswire).

reid-wud (reed-wud) adj., arch. excessively angry, insane – ‘The copper-nosed Kers, the towzy Turnbulls, and the red-wudd Ridderfords’ [ES], ‘...His wee ambitious heart maist like to burst Wi’ red-wud rage ...’ [JoHa], ‘Here am I sit-tin’ doon to write, Red-wud wi’ spleen, pang fu’ o’ spite’ [JoHa], working at top speed – ‘Ee’re aither reed-wud or stane-tired’ [GW] (from Old English).

reik (reek) v., arch. to fit out, rig – ‘...and de-bursed be the town of Hawick in reiking out of the soldiers, in maintenance and arms ...’ [BR1644], to get ready for marriage – ‘A’ reekin’ ready for a wife an’ kirk. O, for a parish, what he would bestow on’t’ [JoHa], ‘She was grand reekit oot for the kirk’ [GW] (also written ‘reek’).

Reinle (rīn-ul) n. Dr. Karl E.T. (b.c.1865) from Lucerne, Switzerland, he graduated from Basel University. He came to Hawick in 1894 and was organist at the Old Parish Church until 1901, when Adam Colledge took over. He was also a private music teacher of piano and voice. He was a close friend of Adam Grant, Dr. Barrie and J.E.D. Murray. He was still in Hawick in 1905, but what happened to him after that is unclear.

the Relief Chaipel (thu-ree-leef-chā-pul) n. the Relief Chapel, an early name for Allars Kirk. It was called the Relief Kirk from 1844.

the Relief Kirk (thu-ree-leef-kirk) n. another name for Allars Kirk. The Relief movement, the third Secession from the Church of Scotland, was founded by Thomas Gillespie of Carnock in 1752, with patronage being the main cause of dissent. The cause was boosted by Thomas Boston joining with a large congregation from Jedburgh in 1757. A branch of the Relief Kirk was founded in Hawick in 1810, largely because of the lack of space in the exisiting town churches. It met for a few months in a tent on the Common Haugh, then in the Tabernacle and the Town Hall, before the new church was built on the Cross Wynd in 1811. The Church Officers originally me in a room in the Fleece Inn (which was run by one of the founders). The church was original referred to as the Relief Chapel, changed to Relief Church in 1844. It merged with the Secession Church to form the United Presbyterian Church in 1847 and with the Free Church in 1900. Allars Kirk in Hawick closed in 1948.

Rennaldburn (re-uld-burn) n. former lands to the east of Eskdalemuir. It was once a seat of a branch of the Scotts. The later farmhouse there is said to have been the first house built by Thomas Telford when he was an apprentice – ‘Warn Davington, and Rennelburn, with Tandhill bold and free, To meet me in full armour, the morn at Woodhouselee' [WSB] (spelled variously 'Renaldburn', 'Renalburn', etc.; there are lands with a similar name in Jedburgh Parish).

Rennie (re-nee) n. John (19th C.) member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880 and Treasurer of the Chapel Building Fund. He was still Treasurer in the 1890s. William (15th C.) mentioned at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. His name is recorded as 'Willelmo rany'. An ox was stolen from him, from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. He could be the same man recorded as 1494/5 as 'raix' for what seems like the same crime.

Rennilson (re-nil-sin) n. Richard (b.1803/4) born in Bedrule Parish. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, either as Liddesdale carrier or candlemaker (the other surely being his father). In 1851 he was a 'Pensioner' on the Back Row. In 1851 he was 'Chelsea Pensioner; Blind' and a lodger on O'Connel Street. In 1826 he married Isobel Annison. His wife was Isabel, and his children included Margaret, Isabel, Richard, Barbara, Elspeth and William. Richard (b.1763/4) listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. 2 men of the same name were recorded, one a Liddesdale carrier, the other a candlemaker; they were surely father and son. In 1841 he was a pauper living with blacksmith William Bowie on the Mid Row (also 'Ronaldson' and variants).

the Renny Watson Trophy (thu-re-nee-wat-sin-trō-fee) n. trophy competed for annually at Hawick Golf Club, named after Sir William Renny Watson.

Renouf (re-noof) n. Frederick Manse (b.1849/50–1915) born in the Channel Islands, he came to Hawick to be a servant at Wilton Lodge in the household of David Pringle. He was later proprietor of the Washington Hotel. He had a dispute with his brethren in the Hawick Home Mission, over his involvement in the liquor trade. However, he was President of the organisation in 1904. His last address was given as Royal Bank House, Hawick. He married Agnes Hanining or Robison in Newington, Midlothian, and she died in Hawick in 1911.

renommit (re-nō-mi) pp., poet. renowned, famous – 'Ance a man was renommet akordin' as he had liftet up æxes apon the thick tries' [HSR], 'An' sleyet renommet kings: for his mercie induurs forevir' [HSR].

rental (ren-tul) n., arch. a register of rents due by tenants – Rentall of the Dutches of Buccleuchs [SB1591].

Renton (ren'-in) n. William (b.1865) second youngest of a family of 10, son of ploughman William and Janet Purves. In 1926 he wrote a memoir of his early life, which contains some interesting snippets of local flavour. The family moved around the Borders, living at Kinninghall near Hawick for a year, and he finally settled in Galashiels.

renunce (ree-nuns) v., arch. to renounce, resign, repudiate – '... and the said James of Murray sall discharge, renunce, and gif oure all apprising of the landis of Kirkurde ...' [SB1527].

renuncit (ree-nun-see', -si') pp., arch. renounced, repudiated – 'Compeared the hail Council, and voluntarily of their awin free will renuncit and overgave their quarterings of the soldiers to the town's use ...' [BR1644].

Renwick (re-neek) n. Alexander (1780–1800) son of shoemaker Robert. His death is recorded in Hawick. Alexander (18th/19th C.) draper and stocking manufacturer on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Alexander (19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Esther Douglas and their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: Elizabeth (b.1844), Helen (b.1847), Agnes (b.1849), Isabella (b.1851) and Janet (b.1853). Allan (19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of the early 1800s, operating on the High Street. Andrew (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (18th C.) married Janet Rae in Hobkirk in 1756. Benjamin 'Benjie' (b.1800) son of James, he was born at Appotside. He was a mole-catched in Hobkirk Parish and apparently very popular in the district. He helped with shooting parties, and was also said to be a poacher. Charles (b.c.1802) son of Francis and Mary Jerdon and probably grandson of Francis and Margaret Rae. He may have been related to the Renwicks of Blackleemouth. He lived in Hobkirk Parish and married Margaret Hislop. Their children were Mary (who married Alexander Davie), Isabella (married Adam Rutherford) and Robert (married Isabella Scott). David (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Lees in 1725 and Appletreehall in 1732. He is probably the Renwick who witnessed a baptism for William Telfer, resident of Borthaugh, in 1729. He married Jean Turnbull in 1719 and their children included: John (b.1720); Helen (b.1723); Thomas (b.1725); Adam (b.1728); Thomas (again, b.1729); and David (b.1732). The witnesses in 1725 were Adam Scott and John Renwick and in 1732 were John Scott and John Dryden. Francis (18th C.) married Margaret Rae in Hobkirk in 1732. Francis (18th/19th C.) farmer at Nether Bonchester, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He could be the Francis whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1778. George (17th/18th C.) Hawick man who kept an inn (or 'ane change'). In 1702 he was fined for selling ale Henry Hardie on Sunday. He was probably the George, resident of the west-side of Hawick, who is recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the same man as the flesher who is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the George, married to Margaret Wright, whose children included: Robert (b.1670); Margaret (b.1674); Janet (b.1676); and Isobel (b.1678). He may be the George who witnessed a baptism for Robert Wright in 1671. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living on the Sandbed in 1697 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Renwick (who was probably related) and James Shortreed. George (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. He may have been descended from the earlier George. He was probably the flesher who was among the young men fined for their part in the disturbances of the Common Riding of 1706. He was on the short-list for candidates for Cornet in 1710 and 1712 and was elected in 1712. Along with flesher Robert, he witnessed baptisms in 1712 for shoemaker Robert Hardie, in 1720 for fellow flesher John Little, in 1721 for William Wright and Christian Renwick (perhaps his sister), and in 1722 for weaver George Wight. He also witnessed baptisms in 1714 for smith Thomas Huntly, in 1718 and 1721 for John Ekron, flesher Robert, and in 1723 for workman Andrew Leithead. He married Janet Purdom (also from Hawick) in Hawick in 1714 and their children included John (b.1715), Margaret (b.1716), Michael (b.1718), Helen (b.1719), George (b.1720), Margaret (again, b.1721) and Janet (b.1723). The witnesses in 1716 were John Watson (Clerk of the Regality) and merchant John Little and in 1718 were John Gardner and 'maltman' John Hardie. George (18th C.) weaver in Denholm, recorded in 1726 and 1731. His children included: Helen (b.1719); Margaret (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); Janet (again, b.1726); Adam (b.1728); and Margaret (again, b.1731). George (1747/8–1854) resident of Branholtmtown. He is recorded there in 1841, with his wife and daughter Elizabeth. His wife was Agnes Ewart (1867/8–1843). He is buried at Teviothead. Gideon (18th C.) butcher in Hawick. He is probably the Gideon, son of William and Margaret Boyd, who married Katherine Miller in 1771, and whose children included: Jane (b.1771); an unnamed child (b.1772); Janet (b.1775); William (b.1778); Gideon (b.1781); and Catherine (b.c.1785), who married William Richardson and emigrated to Canada. In 1784, along with shoemaker William, he witnessed a baptism for James Mossman and Janet Renwick (who may have been his sister). His daughter Janet married John Gibson, and was murdered by him in 1813. Gilbert (15th C.) listed as 'Gilbert Ranwyk' in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme. His progeny were bequeathed 20 shillings. He could be the Gilbert listed as a rebel in 1502, along with Thomas Grahamslaw and Thomas Scott, rebels involved in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. Humphrey (15th C.) recorded as 'Wmfrac de Ranwyk' in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Robert is listed after him, so presumably his son or brother. Most of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where their lands were. Isabella (b.1826/7) from Inveresk, she was a milliner and dressmaker in Hawick. She was listed on Buccleuch Street in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 she was at about 7 Buccleuch Street with her younger sister Elizabeth. James (16th/17th C.) tenant in Galalaw in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Jackson and their children included: John (b.1674). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret White and their children included: Walter (b.1681); an unnamed child (b.1683); and another unnamed child (b.1685). The witnesses in 1685 were Charles and Robert Scott. James (17th/18th C.) under-miller at Newmill. He married Isobel Johnstone and their children, baptised in Hawick included: Christian (b.1704); and John (b.1707). The witnesses in 1707 were Robert Thomson and his son Gideon Thomson. James (1700/1–89) tenant farmer in Mangerton. He married Elizabeth Bell, who died in 1786, aged 88. Their daughter Betty (1742/3–1829) married teacher Robert Dickson.

James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Knox and their son Walter was baptised in 1744. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their son Robert was baptised in 1786. James (18th C.) Town Drummer, recorded in Selkirk in 1758. James (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He married Mary Renwick and their children included: Robert (b.1790); and James (b.1792). The witnesses in 1790 were weaver Robert Renwick and James Mossman. James (18th/19th C.) mole-catcher who lived at Howashiels. His children William (b.1789) and Janet (b.1792) both died young, but he moved to Appotside where another William (b.1794) and Janet (b.1796, mother of tailor James Grieve) were born, as well as Benjamin (b.1800, also a mole-catcher). He is probably the James living at Midburn in 1790 when his son George was baptised. James (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick in the early 1800s. James (19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Milly Gray and their son Ralph (b.1824) was baptised in East Bank Kirk. James (b.c.1825) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area. In 1851 he was living at Todshawhaugh. He married Helen Broad (daughter of Jean, from Robertson) and their children included Jean (b.1851). James (19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Jane Edgar and their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: Janet (b.1850); and James (b.1853). James (1843–1910) born in Robertson, son of William and Jane Nichol. He was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He conducted business in Dumfries for a while, returning to Hawick in 1888 to found James Renwick & Co., Ltd, hosiery manufacturers of Commercial Road. He may also have had Mansfield Mills built (or extended) on Mansfield Road. He was associated with the temperance movement and East Bank Church. In 1869 he married Jeanie Laing (1843–1927), who was grand-daughter of James Hogg, writer of ‘Teribus’. He had 4 surviving sons, 2 of whom (James and Robert Hogg) continued in the hosiery business. His 7 sons were: William (1870–c.82); Adam (1872–c.84); James (b.1874), who died in infancy; James (b.1875), who followed him into hosiery manufacturing; Robert Hogg (1877–1949), also a hosiery manufacturer; George; and William (b.1833). He died at Wilton Hill. James (b.1875) son of James and Jane Laing. He was a great-great-grandson of James Hogg, writer of ‘Teribus’. He was educated in Dumfries and at Teviot Grove, then worked in the family hosiery firm, becoming a partner. He represented Teviot

Ward on the Town Council for 22 years from 1906, was elected Magistrate and was Provost 1922–28. His Provostship saw the High Street paved with setts, completion of the expansion of the sewage works, and the building of Moat Crescent and Renwick Terrace, the latter being named after him. He was also Chairman of the committee that built the first council houses at Oliver Park. A keen Common Riding supporter, his son James junior was Cornet while he was Provost, and he started the tradition of the Provost’s Tent. He opened ‘the Hut’ in the year that his son was Cornet. He was Chairman of the Unionist Association for many years, as well as a Callants’ Club President and was an elder of the East Bank Church. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was on the committee that formed Hawick’s first Scout troop on 1909 and was one of the first 2 scoutmasters in Hawick. He can be seen in a film clip of Baden-Powell’s visit to Hawick in 1910. He married Miss Lefevre of Canterbury in 1902. They lived at Fernbank on Wilton Hill. James (20th C.) son of Provost James. He worked for the family knitwear business and moved to London to represent the firm there. His son Geoffrey was a Lieutenant in the Royal Engineers, who was murdered by a fellow soldier while serving in Germany. James ‘Jim’ (1953–) Hawick rugby player, at Centre, a born West-Ender and electricity linesman by trade. Educated at Drumlanrig and the High School, He originally had success at swimming, competing in the Scottish under-14 championship. After leaving school he played rugby for the P.S.A. and the Harlequins. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. at age 18, going on to win 7 top-flight titles. He first appeared for Scotland at the age of 19, and eventually gained 52 caps. He was also represented the British Lions and Barbarians. He retired from rugby in 1984, following a knee injury. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2018. His children are Scott, Andy, David, Lindsey, Neil, Stuart and Alex. Janet (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Ormiston in 1785, when she was working for Thomas Currer. Jean (d.c.1834) servant with Peter Wilson’s family for 52 years, staying until her mistress died. She is seen in a portrait with the family in about 1830, along with her successor Esther Reid. John (17th C.) recorded in 1650 as ‘John Renneck’ when he was tenant of Todshawhill along with ‘Pail’ Murray. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Kedie in 1650 and their children included Agnes (b.1650). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk

Parish. His children included William (b.1651). The witnesses were William Govenlock and John Wilson. John (1645/6–96) buried in Teviothead cemetery. His is one of the earliest legible stones. The reverse of the stone records another John. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Culbertson and their children included Robert (b.1670), Bessie (b.1672), Helen (b.1674) and Margaret (b.1677). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hislop and their children included James (b.1674), John (b.1681) and Helen (b.1684). In 1684 the witnesses were Robert (probably a relative) and William Davidson. Elspeth (b.1676) and James (b.1679) may also be his children. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Euphan Hastie and their children included David (b.1689), Agnes (b.1691), John (b.1693), Janet (b.1694) and Gilbert (b.1697). The witnesses in 1691 were William (probably a relative) and John Brown and in 1694 were James ...and William Perhaps the same John was resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms in 1690 for Robert Wilson and for William (likely a relative). John (17th C.) resident of the Hassendean area of Robertson Parish. He was living at Horsleyhill in 1688. He married Janet Little and their children included: John (b.1681); Bessie (b.1685); and Margaret (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were John Noble and Robert Turnbull. David (b.1684), baptised in Robertson, may also be his child. Probably the same John was listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at 'Chisholme and Widburne' in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Both 'John Renick elder and younger' are listed, and jointly paid tax on 2 hearths. John (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Philhope, among those 'not Listed yet payd yr'. John (d.1715) smith in Robertson. He is buried in the cemetery there. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included Jean (b.1703). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: John (b.1706); and Thomas (b.1708). John (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. In 1706 he is recorded being 'a workman sometimes in Chisholm', suggesting he may be the same man as the younger John recorded in Wilton in 1694. He married

Jean 'Lazon' and their children included Margaret (b.1706). The witnesses in 1706 were John Armstrong in Raesknowe and Bailie George Martin. Margaret (b.1712), baptised in Robertson Parish, could also be his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1720 he married Bessie Miller, who was also from Robertson. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1730); William (b.1736); and John (b.1739). Robert (b.1727), baptised in Kirkton, could also be his child. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hardie and their children included Henry (b.1729). John (18th C.) one of the earliest known of the Hobkirk Renwicks. His children included Robert (b.1726). He could be the John in Mackside whose wife Bessie Miller is recorded dying in Hobkirk Parish in 1760. Other children baptised in Hobkirk who could be his included John (b.1728), Margaret (b.1735), Francis (b.1736), Robert (b.1740) and Helen (b.1740). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Binks in 1730 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who could be his, include William (b.1736) and John (b.1739). John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1745). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Phaup in 1749. He married Helen Laurie and their children included Christian (b.1749), James (b.1751), Margaret (b.1754) and Jane (b.1757). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Henderson and their children included Jean (b.1760), Jean (again, b.1762), Helen (b.1764), Thomas (b.1766), James (b.1769) and Jean (b.1771). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1762 he married Isobel Elliot from Robertson Parish in 1762. Their children included: Michael (b.1763); Betty (b.1765); and Agnes (b.1775). John (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He paid the cart tax in 1797. He married Euphan Matthewson in Ashkirk Parish in 1795. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Thomas (b.1797); James (b.1799); Alexander Walter (b.1802); Janet Elizabeth (b.1805); and Ann Scott (b.1812). The witnesses in 1797 and 1799 were Bailie Andrew Scott and Walter Pringle. John (b.1816) son of Matthew, he was a dyker in Hobkirk Parish. He married Janet Hall, sister of James Grieve's widow. He had a daughter and emigrated to Canada, along with his brother George. John Elliot 'Elliot' (1936–2006) son of Jock and Maimie, he was educated in

Hawick and apprenticed as a printer with the Hawick Express. He was one of the founders of Buccleuch Printers. He was long associated with the Salvation Army, being bandmaster there for 37 years. He also played in the Saxhorn Band and in the band of the Royal Tank Corps during his National Service. He was also a member of the Rotary Club, achieving a 'Paul Harris Fellowship', the highest honour given to Rotarians. He married Margaret in 1956 and they had a daughter, Linda. Joseph (b.c.1807) fuller in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, being a fuller at Damside in 1835, and a cloth dresser at Dovemount in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a daughter, also Elizabeth. Margaret (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Hassendeanbank. Margaret D. (b.1828/9) daughter of William and Janet. She was born in Jedburgh and lived in Minto. There she ran a school around the 1860s, separate from the Parish school, and probably for girls. Martin (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas Turnbull to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary's Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as 'Martino Ranwik'. Matthew (18th/19th C.) lived at Bonchester and Drythropple. He married secondly Helen Robson. They had twins John and Mary and also a son George, both sons becoming dykers. Michael (18th C.) recorded in Hartwoodmyres in 1772. In that year he was witness to a baptism in Selkirk for John Sword and Margaret Renwick in Selkirk. Michael (18th C.) another early Renwick of Hobkirk. He lived at Kirknowe and later at Howahill and Unthank. His children included John (b.1753), Margaret (b.1757) and Robert (b.1771). He was probably related to Andrew, who live at Howahill and then Stonedge, and had children Helen and Thomas. Miss ?? (19th C.) daughter of Thomas. She took over the post office at Bonchester Bridge, probably in the 1860s. The letter carrier appointed was James Watson. Due to some irregularity with the deliveries they were both relieved of their positions. Moses (1771–1851) son of Robert. He was a thatcher by trade. He was a servant at Forkins according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He married Violet Temple and they had a dozen children: Robert, shepherd at Dryhope; James, emigrated to America; John, who married Janet Henderson and emigrated later in life; Jessie, married blacksmith Robert Scott; Betty, married Lanton blacksmith Thomas Anderson; Helen (or Nelly), married Andrew Kerr, Jedburgh mason; Mary, married Robert Flick; Violet, married William Redshaw from Kalewater; Isabel, Margaret and Cecily, all of whom emigrated; and Charlotte, who married Robert Rutherford. Oliver (d.2008) grew up on the Cavers estate. He was childhood friend and business partner of Jack Fraser. The pair took part in the 1982 and 1992 rallies of Austin 7 enthusiasts from John o' Groats to Land's End. He married Margaret and had children Kathleen, James and Marjorie, and step-son Mark. Richard (c.1769–1839) son of Robert. He became a thatcher like his brother Moses. He was Precentor at Hobkirk Kirk. He married Janet Parker from Northumberland, and they lived at Mosshouses. Their children were: Robert, who died in Rulewater aged 73; George, who lived in Edinburgh; Thomas, who married Margaret Telfer; Mabel, who married Robert Henderson and emigrated to Canada; and Betty, who married John Baptie and later in life lived in Denholm. He is probably the labourer Richard, living at Forkins, who was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797 and 1798; however, later in 1798 he was declared unfit to serve and excused, with John Scott, servant at Hallrule, balloted in his place. Richard (1850–1915) born at Town-o-Rule, only son of Thomas and grandson of Richard. He was a foreman surfaceman on the railway. He lived at Hassendean and in Denholm, and was heavily involved in the Kirk there. He married Margaret Turnbull, also from Rulewater, and she died in 1922, aged 71. Their children were William, gardener at Holyrood; Richard, who worked for the North British Railway; Thomas, also worked for the railway; John, a joiner in Winnipeg, Canada; James, in the Hawick Post Office; Robert, an engineer; Peter, who worked in Denholm; George; Lizzie; Jessie, who married John Phillips; and Maggie. He was killed while on duty near Hassendean Station during a snowstorm, and there is a memorial stone to his memory in Denholm cemetery. Robert (15th C.) recorded as 'Roberto de Ranwyk' in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Humphrey 'de Ranwyk' is also listed before him, so presumably his father or brother. Most of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where their lands were. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet (with no surname recorded) and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1677. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Janet Brown in Robertson Parish in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Adam Brown 'Headhouse'. In 1712 he and George (also a flesher) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Hardie. Along with George he also witnessed baptisms in 1720 for fellow flesher John Little, in 1721 for William Wright and Christian Renwick (who was surely related to him), and in 1722 for weaver George Wight. He could be the Robert, son of George, born in Hawick in 1670. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children, baptised in Hawick, included George (b.1700) and William (b.1702). The witnesses in 1700 were glover John Scott, merchant William Scott and cooper John Turnbull. Robert (18th C.) tenant farmer at 'Hill', which must have been somewhere in Rulewater. His wife 'Marjory Sorry' (1701/2-62) was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at the Sandbed in at least the period 1724-36. He may be the Robert who in 1723 witnessed a baptism for James Beattie, innkeeper in the Sandbed. He married Elizabeth (or 'Lizabeth') Little, probably in Wilton in 1718 (with no wife's name given). Their children included: Robert (b.1720); Margaret (b.1721); Janet (b.1724); William (b.1726); Elizabeth (b.1728); Mary (b.1730); Robert (again, b.1733); and Thomas (b.1736). The witnesses in 1724 were George and William Renwick (who were surely related), in 1728 were William Wright and John Simpson, in 1730 were John and James Gardner, in 1733 were James Gardner and William Wright and in 1736 were John and James Gardner again. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Craikhope in 1753 and 1757. His children included: Helen (b.1753); and Margaret (b.1757). Robert (b.1740) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John, claimed to be a descendant of James, one of the last Covenanter martyrs. He lived in a cottage at Blackleemouth in Hobkirk Parish. He may have married Janet Parker. His sons were Richard and Moses and he also had at least 1 daughter. Robert (18th C.) travelling merchant of Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1789 when his daughter Mary married James Rannie. The same Robert was probably married to Elizabeth Roger, and their children were: Elizabeth (b.1760); Margaret (b.1761); Mary (b.1768); Margaret (again, b.1770); Jane (b.1772); and Agnes (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were shoemaker William and another Robert (both of whom were probably related to him) and in 1774 were Robert and William Roger (surely related to his wife). His wife was probably the 'Lizzie' Roger who died in Hawick in 1808, with her husband Robert Renwick described as 'Pigman' (or maybe 'Pegman'). He witnessed a baptism for weaver William Rodger (perhaps his brother-in-law) in 1764. He may also have been the merchant Robert who married Elizabeth Scott and had children Helen (b.1777) and Robert (b.1781). The witnesses in 1781 were merchant William Brown and shoemaker William Renwick. He may also be the weaver recorded in 1781 when his son Robert died in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. In 1784 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Johnston. He married Agnes (also recorded as Janet) Bunyan and their children included Elizabeth (b.1773); William (b.1774); Ann (b.1779); Alexander (b.1780); and Janet (b.1784). The death of his son Alexander was recorded in 1800. Robert (18th C.) recorded at Lairhope in 1786. He married Janet Scott and their son Robert was baptised in 1786, with witnesses 'Congregation of the Chapel' (probably meaning those who attended the chapel at Caerlenrig). Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1790 and 1792 he witnessed baptisms for James Renwick and Mary Renwick (one of whom he was surely related to). He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Hawick in 1793. Robert (18th C.) listed as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792, when they were leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Robert (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Weens in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Probably the same Robert was recorded in the 1801 Militia ballot as son-in-law to Robert Barrie at Langraw. His is probably the Robert whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included Margaret (b.1802), Robert Barrie (b.1804), George (b.1806), Robert Barrie (again, b.1808), Janet (b.1810) and John (b.1812). Robert (d.1809) Hawick resident who was father of David, John and Thomas, according to his death record. He is probably the Thomas who married Janet Laurie in Ashkirk in 1761 and had children: David (b.1762); Thomas (b.1765); John (b.1767); John (again, b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); and Thomas (again, b.1774). Robert (d.bef. 1790) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Tudhope in Hawick Parish in 1766 and she died in 1790. Their children included William (b.1767) and Helen (b.1771). He may be the same man as one of the other Roberts. Robert (19th C.) born in West Linton, he worked at Hawick Mill. He was there in 1841 and 1851, when his uncle John Oliver was the miller. He wrote a letter about the flood of 1846, which survives as a useful eyewitness account. Robert (b.1839) born at Town-o-Rule, son of Charles and Margaret Hislop. He married Isabella Scott and their children included Robert. Robert (b.c.1865) son of Robert and Isabella Scott. He lived at Langraw Scaur in Hobkirk Parish and was tenant at Weens Nursery. Robert Hogg (1877–1949) son of James and Jane Laing, born on Allars Crescent. He was brother of Provost Renwick and a great-great-grandson of James Hogg, author of ‘Teribus’. He was educated in Dumfries and then Hawick. He worked with Aitken the drapers and then joined his father’s hosiery firm, later becoming Director. He was keen on golf, gardening and music. He was organist at St. Andrew’s Kirk for more than 25 years (until an injury to his hands prevented him from playing). He was instrumental in organising the Border Music Festival, being President, Chairman and Secretary, and reviving it after WWII. He was President of the Callants’ Club, President of the Rotary Club, a member of Lodge 111 and member of the Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers’ Association. He was a Special Constable during both World Wars. In 1919 he married Mary Lillico Tully, daughter of tailor William Lillico Tully. Their children were: Doris (b.1920); Sheila (b.1921); Robert Stanley (b.1924), who continued in the family firm; and William Cecil (b.1926), who farmed at Wester Essenside. He lived at Wellogate Bank. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant of Simon Armstrong of Calfeild. He is listed as ‘Thom Rannik his man’ in a 1601 list of Armstrongs and others who were said by the English to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. Thomas (18th C.) tailor at Ashkirk Mill. He married Janet Laurie and their children included David (b.1762), Thomas (b.1765), John (b.1767), John (again, b.1769), Elizabeth (b.1771) and Thomas (b.1774). Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason at Kirkknowe in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Janet Rae in 1799. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Goodfellow in Cavers Parish in 1799. Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason at Menslaws. He was recorded at ‘House at Guide post’ on the Militia ballot for Bedrule Parish in 1801. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He could be the Thomas listed as ‘Ind.’ at Bedrule Mill in 1841. He is probably the Thomas whose children Francis (b.1802) and Jessie (b.1804) were baptised in Bedrule Parish. Thomas (b.c.1775) tailor on the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was recorded at about 8 Sandbed, with his wife Mary (who was a midwife) and son William. His son Thomas died in 1808. Thomas (18th/19th C.) labourer recorded in Barnhills in 1799. Thomas (1817/8–1906) one of the Forkins Renwicks, he was son of Richard. In 1861 he was a labourer living at Birneyknowe. He is recorded in charge of the post office at Bonchester Bridge in the early 1860s. He married Margaret Telfer, daughter of a Teviothead shepherd. His daughter took over the post office at Bonchester Bridge and his son Richard worked for the railway. He died at the age of 88 and is recorded on the family headstone in Denholm cemetery. He is probably the ‘deaf man named Thomas Renwick’ who was among the last residents of the old hamlet of Unthank. Walter (17th C.) resident of Minto Craighend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Walter (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Lethem in Southdean Parish according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Martin and their children included John (b.1671). The baptismal witnesses were Robert (surely a relative) and Adam Martin (probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He witnessed baptisms in 1689 (along with William Donald) for William Allan and in 1691 for John (probably a relative). Probably the same William married Janet Scott, and their children, baptised in Ashkirk, included Isobel (b.1690), Agnes (b.1693) and David (b.1696). The witnesses in 1690 were Robert Scott and John Renwick (probably related to his wife and him). William (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Boyd. Their children included: Walter (b.1735); Janet (b.1737); Robert (b.1740); William (b.1742); and Gideon (b.1744), probably the butcher. The witnesses in 1742 were merchant John Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1740 (along with fellow flesher Thomas Waugh) for cooper William Richardson. He may also be the shoemaker William who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for another Robert in 1772 and the shoemaker William who witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert in 1781.

William (18th C.) married Margaret Cessford in Hobkirk in 1733. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1749 he married Margaret Miller, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included Janet (b.1760) and Jane (b.1768). William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1781 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert (who was probably a relative). In 1784, along with flesher Gideon (probably his brother) he witnessed a baptism for James Mossman and Janet (possibly his sister). William (18th/19th C.) gamekeeper at Greenriver in 1797, when he was working for James Chisholme. William (18th/19th C.) butcher recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'; he was there described as '(Butcher) Shoemaker', presumably meaning that he was formerly a butcher and now a shoemaker. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Betty Ferguson, who was also from Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) mason in Bonchester according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. William (b.1808/9) from Jedburgh, he was a mason in Minto. His wife was Janet and their daughter Margaret D. was a teacher (formerly spelled 'Ranick', 'Renick', 'Rennick', 'Rennicke', etc.).

Renwick's (re-neeks) n. hosiery manufacturers of James Renwick & Co. Their main premises were on the west side of Commercial Road from 1914, this being built in 1888 for William Galloway & Sons. They later moved to a factory near the top of Mansfield Road, called Mansfield Mills, which closed in 1992. This later became Jaeger, and was more recently converted into flats. A book of knitting patterns from the 1920s was saved by Gerry Graham, featured in the 'Antiques Roadshow' in 2020.

Renwick Terrace (re-neek-te-ris) n. street off Rosebank Road at the top of the Loan, built in 1928 and named after Provost James Renwick.

Reorganisation (ree-or-gi-I-zā-shin) n. name usually given to the major shake-up of local government in 1974, following the Local Government (Scotland) Act of 1973. This abolished town and county councils, replacing them with 'districts' and 'regions'. It was sometimes jokingly referred to as 'Disorganisation'. This system in turn was overhauled in 1995/6 in favour of a single-tier

repentance (re-pen'-ins) n., arch. the act of penitence, public atonement for transgressions before a congregation. For centuries, until into the 1800s public atonement was a major part of community life in Hawick. Infringements liable to this punishment included adultery, 'irregular' marriages and other crimes. In the early 1700s the penitent would stand at the Kirk door in sackcloth for an hour before the third bell was rung, then after the congregation and minister had entered, they would be led into the Kirk to the 'stool of repentance' or 'pillar', standing bare-headed through the sermon and thereafter berated publicly. Sometimes the Session required this process to be repeated for many Sundays in a row. These practices ended in about 1800 – '...and was ordered to appear hereafter on the usual place of repentance in sackcloth two other days ...' [PR1715].

the Restoration (thu-res-to-rā-shin) n. popular name for the period in Scottish history when Charles II was restored onto the British throne after the defeat of the Cromwells. This marked the revival of the Scottish Parliament, but also an escalation of persecution of the Covenanters in the 'Killing Times'. The term applies both to the event of 1660 itself, as well as to the entire period between then and the 'Glorious Revolution' of 1688.

resurrectionist (re-zu-rek-shin-ist) n., arch. a grave-robber or body-snatcher, particularly in the early 19th century. There was a scare throughout Scotland in the 1820s, following the celebrated cases of Burke and Hare and others. Two Berwickshire doctors were arrested in 1820. In Hawick an association of householders was formed for watching the cemeteries. Small houses were built at the entrances of both Hawick and Wilton churchyards, with 3 men on watch each night, patrolling every 15 minutes. No graves in the town were desecrated, although there were plenty of rumours and practical jokes.

the Return (thu-ree-turn) n. ‘the Return from Hornshole’, a statue unveiled at the south end of the High Street in 2014, as part of the ‘Big Return’ celebrations. It was sculpted by Ruaraig McIver of Beltane Studios, taking 18 months to complete, using about a ton of bronze and was paid for by the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee. It consists of a group of 5 figures: a youth carrying the Flag; an elderly woman and man; and 2 children. The seniors were modelled on Hawick’s Helen Ford and Jimmy McEwan, the youth on the rider of Beattie’s Horse monument, and the children on children in Peebles.

Return from Hornshole see Return to Hawick

Return from Hornshole (ree-turn-from-hōrnz-hōl) n. song written by Alan Brydon. It was first performed at the 1514 Club’s ‘Hawick Sings’ concert in 2011 by his daughter Cheryl. Ian Seeley provided a piano accompaniment, which is somewhat complicated and even he describes as ‘a specialist, or art, song’.

Return to Hawick (ree-turn-too-hlk) n. painting by Tom Scott, full title ‘Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514’, completed in 1898. It is also sometimes referred to as ‘Return from Hornshole’. The painting was commissioned by the Town and 260 high quality lithographic copies were made, along with other copies later. The original is in the Museum, held by the Hawick Common Good Fund. It was formally presented at the 1898 Colour Bussing by Thomas Shaw M.P. People from Bowden acted as models, with Mr. Cockburn of Kippilaw carrying the flag. Other identified people are Harry Putillo as the old man with the pack, Madge Dalgleish as the fair-haired girl beside the youth, ‘Pa’ Hume as the bearded man and Bettie Jamieson as the pretty maid in the rear.

the Revolution (thu-re-vo-loo-shin) n. religious and political change in Britain in 1688 and 1689, leading to the removal of James II, a Catholic, and his replacement by William I (of Orange) and his wife Mary II, both Protestants. It is sometimes known as ‘the Glorious Revolution’ or ‘the Bloodless Revolution’. It also led to the throwing out of the episcopalian system and the setting up of the Reformed, Established, Presbyterian Church of Scotland in 1690. As a result of these changes there was a dearth of Presbyterian ministers, which left Hawick Parish vacant for about 2 years, while Wilton, Cavers and Hobkirk were vacant for 5 years. Formerly Episcopalian ministers who refused to ‘pray for William and Mary’ were denied their livings. In the 33 parishes in the Presbyteries of Jedburgh, Selkirk and Kelso, only 3 ministers (at Kirkton, Abbotrule and Ancrum) obeyed the order, the others being ejected. This included John Langlands of Wilton, Thomas Somerville of Cavers and John Liddle of Hobkirk. The Scottish Episcopalian Church took a long time to re-establish itself. These events also affected Scottish history for the next several decades, with Stuart sympathisers, Jacobites, staging uprisings in the Highlands.

rewaird (ree-wārd) n., arch. a reward – ‘... an’ in keepin’ o’ thame ther is grit rewaird’ [HSR], ‘... Trewlie ther is an rewaird for the rich-teous’ [HSR], v. to reward – ‘... happie wull he be that rewairds ye as ye hae serfet us’ [HSR], ‘The Lord rewairdet me akordin’ til my richteousniss ...’ [HSR].

Rhymer’s Croft (rī-murz-kroft) n. former lands in Ashkirk. It was part of the estate of Archibald Cochrane of Ashkirk in the early 1800s. It is unclear exactly where it was situated.

Rhymer’s Glen (rī-murz-glen) n. supposedly the place where Thomas the Rhymer was transported to the land of the fairies for 7 years, being a small burn that flows towards the Tweed south of Melrose – ‘The Huntly burn sings low and sweet, The Rhymer’s glen is green, And on its bank this night I’ll meet My winsome Fairy Queen’ [JT].

rial (rI-ul) n., poet. a member of a royal family or the nobility – ‘Mak’ thair riolyse like Oreb, an’ like Zeeb ...’ [HSR], ‘Til bin’ thair kings wi’ cheens, an’ thair riolyse wi’ fettirs o’ ern’ [HSR].

rib (rib) n. a raised ridge in knitted fabric. Formerly these were knitted on separate machine from the main items, and the workers were paid higher wages than those working the standard frames.

ribbin (ri-bin) n. ribbing, a set of raised ridges in knitwear, common on cuffs and other specific parts of a garment, often described as ‘1/1’, ‘2/2’, etc., depending on the stitches used.

rib dragger see dragger

ribe (rīb) n., arch. a colewort with a tall stem, a cabbage plant that has failed to grow a useful head – ‘Ribe, Rybe, A colewort that frows tall with little or no leaf. Cabbages, that do not stock properly, are also called ribes, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

rib tops (rib-tops) n., pl., arch. ribbed part at the top of a sock or other item of hosiery (noted by E.C. Smith).

Riccalton (ri-kul-tin) n. farm high up on the Oxnam Water. This is probably the place referred to in a charter to the Riddells of that ilk in the mid-12th century. 2 men from here (Adam ‘de Rukelton’ and Adam ‘de Rykeldon’, possibly the same name twice) signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and Gilbert ‘de Rikelton’ is recorded in the early 14th century. The farm belonged to Lord Jedburgh in the 17th century and the Marquis of Lothian in the 18th century (not to be confused with ‘Riccarton’, although the origin of the name may be similar, here probably being ‘Ricela’s hill’ from the Old English personal name plus ‘tun’ for

Riccaltoun see Riccarton

Riccarton (ri-kar'-in, -kar-tin) n. town around the station on the Waverley Line, about half way to Newcastleton, being a junction with the line linking to Hexham. Before the railway it had no settlement, but it developed into a small village with as many as 120 residents. The main housing consisted of 2 terraces of housing and 4 semi-detached cottages. It had its own school and a branch of the Hawick Co-op. The farm of the same name is about 1½ miles down the Riccarton Burn on the main road, and has the remains of the old peel tower located further up the burn. The tower measures about 13 m by 9 m, now partly covered with a sheepfold, and with 2 rectangular platforms to the north, which were probably other buildings. A stone disc, probably found near here, is in Hawick Museum. The present farm was formerly marked as ‘Nether Riccartoun’, with ‘Over Riccartoun’ at the ruined tower (but still about a mile from the railway village). The lands here are recorded as being worth 7 shillings in a rental list of about 1376 among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. In 1541 they were valued at 40 shillings and tenanted by Elliots and Croziers. Will Crozier was there in 1590. Adam Beattie was tenant in 1694. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, covering 852 acres, bounded by Pinglehole, the Liddel Water, Taylorcleuchhead, Roughlee and Laws. The farmhouse at that time is shown fairly close the modern farm buildings. James Wardlaw was there in 1748 and Ninian Elliot in 1778. The Grieves of Bransholme Park farmed there in the late 18th century and in 1800 it was leased to surgeon Charles Maxwell (son-in-law of Jardine of Thorlieshope). After that Jardines were the tenants. Walter Jackson was there in 1821 and Charles Jardine in at least the 1850s and 60s. There were 5 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census. The Riccarton-Hexham line closed in 1956, and the village was abandoned after the Waverley Line closed in 1969. Very little remains to suggest the former size of the community. Synonymous with ‘the middle of nowhere’, no road served the area until 1963 when a forest track was opened. A book ‘Riccarton Junction: memories of my life in this railway village’ was written by Kit Milligan in 1994. Graptolites and other fossils have been found in the rocks of the area – ‘Now Riccarton, to some folk, is juist a godless plot o rilway lines, a limbo for locomotives, clappit doon without regaird for the comfort o man nor beast on the top o a bare hill’ [DH] (there are other Riccartons near Kilmarnock, Linlithgow and Hamilton and a Riccaltoun in Oxnam Parish; the name probably derives from Old English ‘Richard’s farm’, with perhaps a Scandinavian influence on the personal name; it first appears in 1296 as ‘Ricardeston’, is ‘Ricarden’ around 1376, ‘Ricardtoun’ in 1541, ‘Rikkirtoun’ in 1611 ‘Rickerton’ in 1694, 1797 and 1821, and ‘Rickertown’ in 1778; Blaeu’s 1654 atlas shows ‘N. Riccarton’ and ‘O. Riccarton’, the latter probably being the location of the peel tower, while ‘Rickerton’ and ‘Rickertone’ appears on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, and ‘Rickertown’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Riccarton (ri-kar'-in, -kar-tin, -kal-) n. Rev. John (d.1800) only son of Robert. He was licensed by the Presbyterian Classis in Northumberland in 1749 and ordained in 1755 as minister of South Shields. He was then Chaplain at the ‘chapel-of-ease’ in Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) from some time in 1764 or perhaps early 1765. He was presented as minister of Hobkirk in mid-1765 and became minister there at the end of that year. He farmed the lands of Unthank for some time. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hobkirk Parish in 1785–87. In 1799 there are documents relating to the value of the teinds for the lands of Harwood, suggesting a dispute between him and Sir William Elliott of Stobs on the one hand, and William Elliot of Harwood on the other. In 1780 he married Helen Irvine (or Irving, who died in 1827) and their children were: Janet, who died aged 23; Robert; Ann; William; Patrick; John, who was also a minister; James Thomas, who died aged 22; and Adam Alexander (d.1826), the last surviving son, who died in Jamaica. He wrote an account of Hobkirk Parish for ‘Sinclair’s Statistical Account’ and edited and published the works of his father in 1771–72. Rev. Robert (1691–1769) minister of Hobkirk for 44 years. Born at Earlsbaugh in Jedburgh Parish, when his mother was said to be 50. His surname is also sometimes written ‘Riccaltoun’. He spent his early years at Venchen near Yetholm and was said to be able to read the bible before he was 5, and was later educated at Jedburgh Grammar School and Edinburgh University. However, he never attended Divinity Hall, having to return to run the farm after his father’s death. Nevertheless, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Kelso in 1717, called to Merton in 1718, but instead became assistant at Bowden. He was ordained at Hobkirk in 1725 and remained there until his death. He was described as 'a man of uncommon penetration and good taste' who was 'an original, independent, and acute reasoner'. He is 'Mr. Robt. Rickeltoun the mance' who paid the window tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He had a discharge from the Burgh of Selkirk in 1752. He had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1759. He was an early friend of poet James Thomson, and his own poem 'A Winter's Day' (first published in 1726) inspired Thomson's famous 'Seasons'. He wrote 'A Sober Enquiry Into the Grounds of the Present Differences in the Church of Scotland' (1723), which related to the contemporary 'Marrow controversy'. Other publications on theological topics include 'The Politick Disputant' (1722), 'Letters to a Friend' in the 'Edinburgh Christian Instructor', 'An Enquiry into the Spirit and Tendency of on Theron and Aspasio ...' (published anonymously, 1762), 'Dissertation on the Conduct of the Sanhedrim, and Advice offered by Gamaliel' (1769) and his collected works, which were published in 3 volumes in 1771/2. He married Ann (or Anne), daughter of Henry Scott, farmer at Palacehill, and she died in 1764. Their children included: Jean (b.1726), Robert (b.1727), who must have died young; Margaret (b.1731), who married William Armstrong, schoolmaster in Hobkirk (and was mother of Hawick's postmaster Robert Armstrong and Maj.-Gen. Adam Armstrong); John, who succeeded as minister of the Parish; Anne; Helen, who married James Murray, minister of Hallstone in Northumberland; and Elizabeth, who married Samuel Irvine, schoolmaster in Wilton. Some biographical notes on him were written by Rev. Thomas Somerville of Jedburgh. He was described as having 'a large fund of originality rather than a highly cultivated understanding'. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as being 'of Rykylton' in 1454 when he attached his seal to a bond for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He is also the last listed member of the 'retour of service' to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibale Douglas in 1464/5; his name is given there as 'Thomas of Riklintonne'. He was also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5, where he is 'Riklyntone of that ilk' (also written 'Riccartoun', 'Riccarton', 'Rickletoun' and variants).

Riccarton Burn (ri-kar'-in-klooch) n. stream that rises near Riccarton Junction and flows southwards to join the Liddel Water near Riccarton farm.

Riccarton Mill

Riccarton Cleuch (ri-kar'-in-klooch) n. former name for lands near Riccarton. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale they are valued at 40 shillings, with Croziers as tenants. 'Richardton-cleucht' was the nickname of Andrew ('Dandy') Crozier, who was one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 and taken to Edinburgh tolbooth. In 1586 it was referred to as a 'fourtie schilling land' when partly occupied by Simon Elliot and released to the Elliots by Francis, Earl of Bothwell (it is 'Ricardtoun Cleuche' in 1541 and 'Ricartoun Cleucht' in 1586).

Riccarton Cottages (ri-kar'-in-ko'-ee-jeez) n. cottages near the farm of Riccarton in Liddesdale. They are situated on the east side of the B6357. Road contractor Adam Moor and his family lived there in 1861.

Riccartonfit (ri-kar'-in-fi) n. Riccartonfoot, former farm in the Riccarton area. In 1624 Adam Usher and his son Will were convicted of stealing sheep from there, among other crimes; the tenants were Archie Henderson and John Robison. It was among the farms occupied by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1670 (it is 'Rickartoun-foote' in 1655 and 'Rickartonefoot in 1670).

Riccarton Hope (ri-kar'-in-hōp) n. small stream that runs roughly eastwards to the south of Bell Hill to join the Riccarton Burn.

Riccarton Junction (ri-kar'-in-jungk-shin) n. station on the Waverley Line (Border Union Railway) at the junction with the Hexham line (Border Counties Railway), also known as Riccarton, although that name had formerly applied to the peel tower and farm more than a mile further down the Riccarton Burn. The station building (now demolished) included the Cooperative store and village pub. As well as the station there were also 2 signal-boxes (also demolished), an engine shed, turntable and several nearby footbridges, as well as major culverts along the line. It was opened in 1862 as simply 'Riccarton Station', with the 'Junction' being added by the North British Railway in 1905. It closed in 1969. Only the remains of the platforms and footings of the stationmaster's house survive.

Riccartonlee (ri-kar'-in-lee) n. former name for lands near Riccarton, recorded in 1541 as 'Ricardtounlie', with a value of 5 shillings, and at that time vacant.

Riccarton Mill (ri-kar'-in-mil) n. farmstead on the Liddel Water, to the east of the B6357 near Riccarton Farm. There was presumably once a corn mill there. James Armstrong was tenant there in 1797 and his son James was listed there on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories (incorrectly as 'Bickerton Mill'). Another James Armstrong was there in 1852. It was said that at least one person had drowned in the mill lade. It was a public house up until around the 1870s. It is the spot to which Dandy Dinmont directs Harry Bertram in Sir Walter Scott's 'Guy Mannering' – 'But ye can come ower the night as far as Riccarton, where there is a public; or if ye like to stop at Jockey Grieve's at the Heuch' [SWS] (it is 'Rickertownmill' on Stobie's 1770 map and 'Rickarton Mill' in 1821).

Riccarton Schuil (ri-kar'-in-skil) n. former school in Riccarton Junction. It closed in 1963, the same year as the Beeching Report. The remaining children travelled by train to Newcastleton or Hawick. The school and schoolmaster's house survive at the south-east corner of the village. The Borders Archive has registers and log books for 1878–1962.

Riccarton Sike (ri-kar'-in-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, south of Saughtree. It rises on Yarrow Knowe and runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water. Note that it is on the south side of the valley, while Riccarton itself is on the north.

Riccarton Toll (ri-kar'-in-tol) n. former toll house on the B6357 near Riccarton Farm. Mason John Turnbull was living there in 1801. Christian Armstrong was toll-keeper there in 1851. It is marked 'Riccarton Bar' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The building was severely damaged in the great storm on 1846. The house still exists.

rice (rīs) n., arch. a branch, stick – 'He travelled with two long sticks – 'rices' they were called' [RM], twigs collectively, brushwood – 'The calculation of the stake and rice stands thus: Rice at 1s. per cart, 3d. per rood; stakes, eight to the rood, 6d. ...' [RJE], '... a cart filled with the small branches of the ash-tree, with the leaves on, – 'ash rice', as he described the material to me' [RB] (also spelled 'rise' or 'ryce', and sometimes plural).

Richard see Richard Hassendean

Richard (ri-churd) n. Dean of Eskdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, listed as a witness 1195/6. He is the only named person who held this office. However, his surname is unknown.

Richard (ri-churd) n. recorded as Vicar of Ashkirk and chaplain to the Bishop of Glasgow in 1258 when he witnessed a charter. He is recorded as 'Ricardo vicario de ecclesia de Askirke'.

Richard (ri-churd) n. recorded as Parson of 'Sowdone' (i.e. Southdean) in 1526/7. At that time he witnessed a document relating to Walter Scott of Branxholme, recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books. No surname is given.

Richard III (ri-churd-thu-third) n. Richard Plantagenet (1452–85) he was the 4th surviving son of Richard, 3rd Duke of York and Cecily Neville. He had a withered arm and crooked spine, hence his nickname 'Crookback'. He was Duke of Gloucester and King of England 1483–85, his role in the 'Princes in the Tower' incident being a matter of debate. From 1470–83 he was Warden of the English West March, and in 1482 led an invasion into Scotland that took Berwick and Edinburgh. He was the last King of the House of York, and well known as the subject of a Shakespeare play.

Richardson (ri-churd-sin) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was recorded as an innkeeper in 1718. He married Isobel Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1699 and their children included: Christian (b.1709); James (b.1711); Adam (b.1716); and Adam (again, b.1718). The witnesses in 1709 were Bailie George Martin and flesher James Halliday, in 1716 were the same witnesses as for other baptisms that day, and in 1718 were John Gardner in the Sandbed and flesher Robert Renwick 'there' (suggesting they all lived at the Sandbed). Adam (18th C.) recorded in the Town Treasurer's book in 1775 for the 'libel' against him 'for going by the Court with the bailies, before and after the court, 2s. – of which he paid 16d.'; it is unclear which court this was or what the trial was about. The same amount is also recorded in 1756 for the same purpose. He could be the merchant Adam who married Elizabeth Scott in Hawick in 1755 and whose children included Elizabeth (b.1756), Joan (b.1759) and Isobel (b.1761). The witnesses in 1759 were William and Walter Scott. Adam (18th/19th C.) draper at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Allan (1942–) member of the Hawick Cycling Club. He won a national title and became the first member of the Hawick club to compete for Scotland on both the road and the track. Andrew (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the Andrew who in 1703 and 1713 witnessed baptisms for weaver Jasper, who was surely related; the other witness in 1703 was weaver Thomas, who was surely also related. He married Isobel Purcell and their children included: George (b.1703);

Bessie (b.1706); Catharine (b.1708); and James (b.1711). The witnesses in 1706 were Michael Briggs and Jasper Richardson (surely a relative) and in 1708 were wright James Purcell (probably related to his wife), and weavers Jasper and John (who were surely related to him). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His got married in 1722 (with no wife's name recorded). Andrew (c.1790–1869) born in Roxburghshire, son of farmer James and Isabel Scott. He served with the Dumfries Militia, and was at Edinburgh Castle in 1814 when he married Margaret Pollock. He was later a stockingmaker, needlemaker and woollen frame-work knitter in Hawick. He may be the Andrew who was listed among people who recovered from cholera in 1832. He was living on Green Wynd in 1841. His children included: James (1816–74), who married Janet Kyle; Andrew (b.1824), married Mary Paterson; John (1826–95), china merchant, married Harriot Miller; David (b.1830); Alexander (1833–72), married Christina Burns; Isabella (b.1835); Margaret (b.1837); and George (b.1841). Andrew (1799–1876) said to be from Edinburgh. He was painter of 'Hawick' from about 1835, which was engraved as the frontispiece to Wilson's 'Annals of Hawick' (by J. Bower). It is a view from Easter Martin's Hill, to the north of Crumhaugh Hill farmhouse and is also known as 'Hawick from Crumhaughhill'. It was presented to the Museum by W.E. Wilson. Probably the same Andrew was also active in the England and in the New York area, painting landscapes and coastal views, such as 'View from Froster Hill, Gloucestershire', 'The Bergen Homestead' and 'View near Bridgeport, Connecticut'. Andrew (19th C.) foreman at Robert Ewen's hosiery factory on the Mill Path, recorded in 1866. Ann (18th C.) recorded in 1758 when she hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth. Bruce Cornet in 2000, hence sometimes referred to as the Millennium Cornet. He also marked the boundaries again the following year, when the full-scale Common Riding was cancelled because of foot and mouth. Catherine nee Scott (1777–1853) daughter of Capt. James, descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. She went to India to stay with her uncle Lord Harris, and there married her cousin Capt. Gilbert Richardson of the East India Company Marine. She returned to Scotland after the death of her husband and lived at Forge, near Canonbie. She was locally known as a writer, and was a friend of the Carlyles. She wrote 'Adonia: A Desultory Story' (1801) and

'Poems' (1828). Frazer (19th C.) acted as Halberdier in the latter part of the 19th century, for many years along with Thomas Cook. There is an early photograph of him with his halberd. In 1875 it is reported that he appeared in the 'much disputed new suit!' (also spelled 'Fraser'). Gavin Gala man who wrote 'For King and Country and the Scottish Borderers' (1987), an account of the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. at Gallipoli, and 'After Gallipoli' (1992), an account of their activities in the rest of WWI. He has been a regular speaker at the Archæological Society. George 'the Blue Laird' (b.1705/6) of the West End. He is probably the George, Burgess and 'Indweller in Hawick' who gave evidence at the court case in 1767 regarding the former use of the Common. He was at that time stated to be a widower and staying in part of a house rent free from his son James, given by his uncle James Purcell. He lived in Hawick all his life, except when he was in service as a boy and 'has been at the Common-Riding of Hawick every year since he could ride a horse'. His daughter Christian died in 1803, by which time he was already deceased. James, who was also called 'the Blue Laird' was perhaps his son. He may be the George, son of Andrew, born in Hawick in 1703. He could be the carrier (also recorded as a 'workman') George who married Betty Shiel and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Helen (b.1734); John (b.1741); James (b.1743); and James (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1741 were late Bailie Walter Graham and servant John Nichol and in 1747 were mason Andrew Napier and wright James Purcell (his uncle). George (b.c.1785) recorded as 'independent' on the 1841 census. His land behind the Back Row is marked on Wood's 1824 map. He was perhaps son of James and grandson of George (both of whom were called 'the Blue Laird'). George (1793–1871) son of William and Margaret Laing, he was born in Minto or Yarrow Parish. He may be the ploughman at Borthwickshiels recorded on the 1812 Militia ballot in Robertson Parish. He is recorded as an agricultural labourer at Wester Parkhill in 1841 and 1851, and in 1861 he was at Deanburnhaugh with his son-in-law. Minto Parish and lived at Hummelknowe Mill when young and later at Parkhill. He married Elizabeth Haliburton, who died at Wester Parkhill in 1824, aged 30. Their children, baptised in Robertson, included: Margaret (1816–1894), who married roadman William Robson and died at 13 Dakers Place; William (1818–1825); Helen (1820–42); Henry (b.1821); and John (b.1823). In 1825 (recorded in Wilton and Robertson Parishes) he secondly married Elizabeth Henry, who died at Wester Parkhill in 1846, aged 64. He died at Deanburnhaugh and was buried at Borthwick Waas Cemetery. George (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had some local connection.

Henry (b.1801) son of James, who was Cornet in 1777, and Jane Scott, from the Milsington Scotts. He was a farmer, living at 37 Loan, recorded as farmer of 15 acres in 1861. He rented several fields from the Duke of Buccleuch. He married Beatrix (or Beatrice) Miller, and their children included: William, who emigrated to Australia in the 1850s; Margaret; Henry (b.1830), who also emigrated to Australia; Robert, who also went to Australia; James (b.1836/7), who was Cornet in 1862; and Walter. James (17th C.) farmer at Branhholme Town. He is recorded holding part of the lease there in 1675 and 1677; in 1677 he was renting along with his mother (whose name is not given). He is surely related to the John senior and John younger, who were tenants in 1671 (perhaps his father and brother). He could be the James, married to Catherine Turnbull (or Rule) whose daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1671. James (17th C.) resident at Howcleuch in Robertson Parish. He is recorded there in 1683 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He was 'weadua', i.e. widower, so his wife must have died in childbirth. The witnesses were James and Robert Nichol. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Bessie Margaret was baptised in 1695. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1696. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1712 he was on the shortlist of candidates for Cornet. He was 'tenent' in 1717. He is listed as 'Tenent' in 1725 when he (along with mason Andrew Turnbull, whose wife was also an Aitken) witnessed a baptism for John Hardie and Isobel Aitken. He is probably the James who married Bessie, daughter of William Aitkin in 1715 and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish include: Bessie (b.1716); Agnes (b.1717); Mary (b.1719); Isobel (b.1721), who probably married merchant James Ekron; Helen (b.1723); Patrick (b.1726); William (b.1728); and Elizabeth (b.1731). The witnesses in 1717 were merchants William Gardner and James Aitkin. His daughter is probably the Isobel who married merchant James Ekron. He is probably the carrier James who witnessed a baptism for cooper Alexander Weens in 1713 and recorded as 'tenent' when he witnessed another baptism for Alexander Weens in 1721. James 'the Blue Laird' (d.1824) probably son of George, who also had the same nickname. He was probably a minor landowner, like the 'Hilliesland Lairds'. He is probably the James, son of George, who received a house (with a yard behind it) from George's uncle James Purcell. This is probably the land belonging to George marked behind the Back Row on Wood's 1824 map, adjacent to George Richardson's land (who may have been his son). He married Elizabeth ('Lizzy') Nimmo (or 'Nimo') and she died in 1782. Their children included Helen (b.1768). He may be the James whose son George died in 1776 and whose unnamed child died in 1795. James (b.c.1753) son of William, manufacturer at Whisky Houses. He had a brother John and sister Elizabeth, who married William Wilson. He was Cornet in 1777 and known as 'Auld Jamie' in later life. He waved the Flag over the new bridge when it was opened in his year as Cornet. Along with William (either his father or brother), he ran the firm of wool merchants and manufacturers based at 'Whusky Hooses'. The firm manufactured carpets for a while, and also dealt in salt, tar and whisky; it went into bankruptcy around 1812-21. A letter from him to a Selkirk merchant in 1795 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1796 he witnessed a baptism for merchant George Gray, and could also be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Young. He was listed as a merchant in Hawick in 1791-97 when he paid the Horse Tax. In 1796 he was recorded as 'Wool Stapler' (i.e. trader in wool). He contributed, with William, to the subscription to support the war with France around 1799. He first married a Brydon, but they had no issue. Secondly, in Robertson Parish in 1790, he married Jane (b.1762), daughter of William Scott, tenant of Milsington. Their children (baptised in Hawick) were: William (b.1791); John; Walter (b.1792), stockingmaker; Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1794), who probably died young; James (b.1796), of Salthall; Isabella, who married baker Walter Wilson; Henry (b.1801), farmer on the Loan; Thomas (b.1806), carrier and coal agent; and James' (again, b.1808). The witnesses in 1792 were William and Walter Richardson (probably his father and brother) and in 1796 were William (presumably his father) and hosiery William Wilson. He could be the James of Walter's Wynd whose wife died in 1822, aged 59. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hassendeanbank. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James (b.1767) farmer in Hawick, son of John and Isobel Scott. He married Isabella Scott in Hawick in 1787 and she died in 1818. Their children included Andrew (b.c.1791), who was also a farmer. James (b.c.1780) carrier in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He could be the son of carrier John baptised in Hawick in 1781. James (b.c.1780) servant at Dykes in Cavers Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children (with no mother's name given), included: John (b.1796); and Isabella (b.1800). James 'Lang Jaymie' or 'Jaymie o Sauthaa' (b.1796) presumably a tall individual, who lived with his family at Salt Hall. He was son of James, Cornet in 1777, and a nephew of Elizabeth Richardson, who married manufacturer William Wilson (although there was a second James, baptised in 1808 to the same parents, making his birth year uncertain). He worked as a warehouseman in a wool factory. He is recorded at Salt Hall in the censuses of 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Helen Ballantyne, sister of 'Wat the Drummer'. Their children included: James; Jane; Margaret; Isabella (b.1830/1), who married John Edgar; Helen (b.1833/4); Walter (b.1835/6); John (b.1837/8); William (b.1841/2); Thomas (b.1843/4); and Elizabeth (b.1845/6). James (b.1800/1-32) from Hawick, brother of spinner John. He served with the 78 Regiment, the Ross-shire Buffs from the age of 17. He died in Colombo, Sri Lanka. James (b.1802/3) from Ireland, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at Wilton Dean with his wife Sarah and son James. James (b.1805/6) frameworker, originally from Ireland. He was living in the Mid Row in 1851, with his daughter Catherine, housekeeper Jane Bell, niece Margaret Giddons and a lodger. James (b.1808/9) from Smailholm, he was a shuttlemaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Slitrig Crescent and employing 2 men. In Slater's 1852 directory he is described as a cooper and shuttle-maker on the 'Front row', as well as being listed as a 'turner'. His wife was Isabella (from England) and their children included Betsy, Peter, Thomas, Isabella, Helen, David and Margaret. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Ann Chaldwick. Their son William was baptised in 1823. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Janet Aitkin. Their son William was baptised in 1832. James (18th C.) married Christian Baptie in Wilton in 1833.

James (b.1809/10) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row, in 1851 on Under Damside and in 1861 on Ladylaw Place. His wife was Mary Ann (from Leith) and their children included: John (b.1831/2); William (b.1833/4); Esther (b.1838/9); and Gordon (or Jordan, b.1840/1); Isabella (b.1842/3); James F. (b.1848/9); and Mary (b.1853/4). James (b.1813/4) grocer and tea-dealer at 73 High Street in 1851. He was listed as a grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Janet Kyle and their children included: Andrew (b.1845); James Kyle (b.1847); George (b.1850); Margaret Pollock (b.1852); Francis Kyle (b.1854); Janet (b.1856/7); and William (b.1859/60). James (b.1823/4) son of Walter, he was born in Hawick. He was a frameworker. In 1847 he was in Hawick Jail. He married Margaret Scott and they had a daughter Isabella (b.1856/7). In 1861 he was a widower living at 7 O'Connell Street with his daughter, father, brother Thomas and a domestic servant. James (b.1834/5) son of carter Thomas, he was a railway labourer in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at the back house of 16 Howegate. His wife was Jessie from Jedburgh and their children included Thomas (b.1859/60). James (b.1834/5) frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 3 Tannage Close. His wife was Isabella and their children included Joan (b.1857/8). James (b.1836/7) son of farmer Henry, he was a stone mason, and also farmed fields up the Loan, succeeding his father. He was Cornet in 1862. He can be seen in what is the second earliest known Common Riding photograph, standing with a group of his supporters, with a top hat and full beard. He had daughters Wilhelmina B. and Beatrice Miller. James (b.1847/8) son of James and Margaret Fairgrieve. In 1883 he married Sarah, daughter of Henry Shaw. James (b.1851) son of Walter and Mary Murray. He worked as a wool-sorter and served as Beadle for Hawick Parish Church. He had a son Robert, who married Ethel, adopted daughter of postmaster James Orr. James M. 'Jimmy the Printer' (d.2001) founder of Richardson & Son printer's business in Dovemount Place. He coined the phrase 'a day oot o Hawick's a fortnight wasted'. Jamie son of Murray and grandson of Jimmy. He was Cornet in 2009. Janet (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She probably ran an inn or shop of some kind. Jasper (17th/18th C.) weaver of Hawick. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine. In 1703, 1706 and 1708 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew (surely a relative); in 1703 the other witness was Thomas (also a weaver). In 1709 he and John (surely also a relative) witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine. In 1706 he married Margaret Briggs (probably from the weaving family) and their children included: Bessie (b.1707); Thomas (b.1709); Michael (b.1710); George (b.1713); Frederick (b.1713); and John (b.1715). The witnesses in 1709 were Michael Briggs and merchant Francis Elliot, in 1713 were Andrew (surely a relative) and John Pringle, and in 1715 were James Scott 'Doctor' and wright James Purcell. John (16th C.) saddler mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574, when he was still owed money from the Laird of Buccleuch. It is unclear if he was local or from Edinburgh. John (17th C.) 'maltman' who was listed as a Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch in the period 1628–33, responsible for part of the rents of Branxholme and Wilton. In the last testament of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 he is 'John Ritchiesone, maltman to my Lord Bukcleuche' and owed the Earl some rental money. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rosie Graham and their children included James (b.1636) and Helen (b.1644). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet 'Bowston' and their children included Hugh (b.1644) and Janet (b.1646). John (17th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) who served as Town Clerk in 1638, and probably for a few years before. He is recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1637. He is recorded as 'John Ritchartsonne, clark' in one of the first entries in the earliest existing Town Book in 1638. He is also there listed as a notary, along with Gilbert Watt, on the short-list for next Town Clerk (with Watt being selected). He was listed as 'notar publick' at the signing of the 'Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union' (Covenant) in 1638. He was 'notar' when elected to the Council in 1648. He could be the same as 'John Ritchisone, officiar and clerk in the defunctes baroune courtes' who was owed his yearly fee in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. John (17th C.) listed as 'John Ritchiesone elder' in 1671, when, along with his son John, he leased part of the farm of Branxholme Town. It seems likely that James, who was farming at Branxholme Town in 1675 and 1677, was another son. It is possible he was the John, married to Helen Routledge, whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Rosie (b.1649), Janet (b.1651) and Bessie

(b.1654). He is probably the John who in 1673 witnessed (along with Patrick Scoon) a baptism for James Martin (who could have been his son-in-law). John (17th C.) son of John, he was listed as 'younger' in 1671 when he was tenant of part of Branxholme Town. He is probably the John who was married to Bessie Hope, and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Bessie (b.1670) and John (b.1673). The Hopes were also tenants at Branxholme Town. John (17th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Robertson in 1686. John (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Oliver in Cavers Parish in 1703. He could be the John whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1706); and Robert and Margaret (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) married Mary Bell in Bedrule Parish in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1708 for Andrew (who was surely related to him) and for weaver David Reid and in 1709 for merchant Walter Bryson. He is probably the John who along with Jasper (surely a relative) witnessed a baptism for weavers Andrew Jardine in 1709. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in a marriage in Kirkton in 1712, with the bride's name not recorded. John (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1721. Their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1722. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1723 he and Agnes Waddel had a son John baptised in Hawick. They were labelled 'Fornicators' and the witnesses were glover James Waddel (surely related to Agnes) and Beadle John Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His son William was baptised in 1737. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish whose marriage (to an unknown woman) was recorded in 1746. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Isobel Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in 1761. Their children included: William (b.1762), who must have died young; Margaret (b.1764); James (b.1767); an unnamed child (b.1769); William (again, b.1772); and James (b.1781). The witnesses in 1764 were James Scott and James Glendinning and in 1772 were David Laing and James Glendinning. He may be the John who in 1761 witnessed a baptism for Charles Rutherford and Janet Richardson (perhaps his sister). He may also be the John who witnessed a baptism for wright James Glendinning in Hawick in 1766. His wife died in Hawick in 1790. John (18th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Isabel was baptised in 1790. John (b.1756) son of William of the Whisky Houses mill. His brother James was Cornet in 1777 and his sister Elizabeth married manufacturer William Wilson. He is described in Wilson's history as 'John Richardson, father of John the elder'. He may be the Hawick resident John recorded as owner of a horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son James was baptised in 1781. John (18th/19th C.) married Jean Armstrong in Wilton in 1804. John (1788/9–1874) spinner in Hawick. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on the Back Row and in 1861 was 'Formerly Wool Slubber' at 10 Back Row. He married Esther Robson, who died in 1830, aged 44. Their children included: James (b.1808), baptised in East Bank Kirk; William (1808/9–71), tailor and clothier, who died at Blackburn, Lancashire; Isabella (1814/5–54), who died at Doon in Canada; Andrew (b.c.1815); John (b.1817), who died in infancy; John (again, 1819/20–88); Esther (b.c.1826); Agnes (1825/6–1906); and Robert (1828–77). His family are buried at St. Mary's. John (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Jessie Rodger and their daughter Margaret was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1828. It is possible that his wife was the Jessie 'Kedzie' who married a man of the same name in 1824, the marriage recorded in East Bank Kirk and Wilton Parish. John (1799–1869) son of Walter, manufacturer at Whisky Houses. His mother was Christian Gledstains, daughter of the Town Clerk. In 1841 he was a warehouseman living on Slitrig Crescent. He was a hosiery worker who was living at Ladylaw Cottage in Wilton in 1851. By 1861 he was at Wellington Street. He married Helen Anderson (who died in 1871, aged 70); their marriage may be the one with 'Isobel' Anderson recorded in Lilliesleaf in 1822. Their children included: Walter (b.1824), hosiery warehouseman; James (b.1825); William (b.1827), hosiery manager; John (b.1829), who probably died young; George Wilson (b.1830), wool merchant; Elizabeth (b.1833); and Archibald (b.1837). He was cousin of James, who lived at the nearby Salt Hall at the same time. John (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Barbara Scott and their son Adam was baptised in 1840. John (b.1805/6) from England, he was a framework knitter in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Fore Raw and in 1861 was a widower at 9 O'Connell Street. His wife was Helen and their children included Barbara (b.1851/2). He also had step-children Janet and Isabella Aitken. John (19th C.) inn-keeper of the Crown Inn on Douglas Square in Newcastleton. He was listed as proprietor in 1852, but must have been absent for the 1851 census, when his wife was inn-keeper. He married Elizabeth, from Bewcastle. Their children included Margaret, Diana, Jane, John and Helen. John (1819/20–88) son of John and Esther Robson, he was a mill manager of William Laidlaw & Sons. He lived at Dickson Street. In 1851 he was a power-loom weaver living at 4 Weensland Road and in 1861 he was living in Weensland and working as a 'Machine Manager Woollen Mill'. He married Elizabeth Henderson in 1842, who died in 1907, aged 84. Their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: John (b.1844), who died at Parramatta, Australia; Janet (b.1846); Esther (b.1847); Elizabeth (b.1850); Thomas Henderson (b.1853); Catherine (b.1855/6); and Isabella, James and Robert W., who all died young. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John (1826–95) son of Andrew and Margaret Pollock. He was a china merchant in Hawick. He had a house built on the Kirkwynd in about 1879. His shop, 'Richardson's China Warehouse' was at No. 8 Kirkwynd and can be seen in a photograph of about 1900 (with his wife standing outside). In 1851 he was a woollen slubber living on the Loan and in 1861 was at 12 Back Row. In 1857 he was recorded as 'Manager of a Wool Factory' and living at 12 Loan. In 1848 he married Harriet (1827–1910) daughter of Robert Miller. They had at least 12 children, including: Andrew (1850–57); Catherine (b.1852); Robert (b.1854); Elizabeth (b.1858/9); Andrew (again, b.1860); Harriet (b.1862); Margaret (b.1862); Margaret (again, b.1865); and Joan (b.1867). Some were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. John (19th C.) married Janet Inglis in 1842, the marriage recorded in Hawick and Anrum Parishes. John (19th C.) married Helen Montgomery in Hawick in 1850. John (b.1839) son of carter Thomas and grandson of James, wool merchant. He worked as a spinner, and then farmed at Newmill-on-Slitrig. He married Betsy, sister of James Elliot of Flex. His sons James and John farmed at Hummelknowes. Bailie John, J.P. (d.1918) heavily involved in religious and temperance matters in Hawick. He married Janet, daughter of George Barclay. Their children were George (who died in infancy), James (headmaster of Preston Street School in Edinburgh), Janet (who married James Edgar) and Mary. John (1859–1892) son of Robert, was a manufacturer in Hawick. He took over from his father as partner in Noble & Richardson in 1877, then became partner in Messrs. Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. in Galashiels in 1880, originally operating at Abbots Mill in Galashiels and opening Eastfield Mills in Hawick in 1883. His partner John Farrar Blenkhorn was married to his sister, while their first manager was his cousin George Hunter. He was also Lieutenant in the local Border Rifles (volunteers). He married Lizzie Maxwell (daughter of the proprietor of the Maxwell Hotel in Gala), and none of their children survived to adulthood. The family lived at 19 Buccleuch Street (Welch's). Suffering from ill health, he travelled to warmer climates (Australia, New Zealand and South Africa) for his last 4 years, dying of influenza at Berbeton, Transvaal. Margaret (18th/19th C.) dressmaker at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Mark (1966/7-) brought up in Hawick, he attended Burnfoot, Trinity and the High School. He was an apprentice butcher at Miller's, then worked as a nursing assistant at Dingleton Hospital, later moving into property development. In 2016 he co-founded Group S.R.S., which provides home care and support services throughout Scotland. Murray local printer of Dovemount Place. He was one of the founders of the Border Horse Racing Association in 1972 and a keen 'flapping' rider and organiser. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1580 as 'guid broder' (i.e. brother-in-law) of Hector Turnbull in Belses. The pair, along with Hector's son Dand, were accused by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, of murdering her husband John Hamilton. They were denounced as rebels. Presumably he was married to a sister of Hector Turnbull, tenant in Belses. In 1586/7 he is 'Pait Richesoun', brother-in-law to 'Ekkie in Belses', when listed among Border criminals who were given one more chance to find sureties. Bailie Patrick (d.bef. 1707) Hawick Magistrate recorded in 1694 and 1703. He owned a tenement to the south of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed. He was 'present baylyea' on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell (although it is unclear if this was 1693 or 1694). In 1694 it is recorded that he settled his account 'for all that he has paid for the town's use, for great bell, little bell, steeple, and tolbuith, and all other things, being £38 : 19 : 6 Scots'. He is probably the 'Patrick Ritchisone' who is listed 'eist the water' among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. In 1696 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott. In 1699 he and Robert Hardie petitioned for Hawick to be relieved from the 'freedom of trade' tax. He witnessed baptisms for weaver David Miller in 1700, for Bailie George Martin in 1702, for flesher John Tudhope in 1702, for workman Robert Henderson in 1703, for Burgh Officer Alexander Scott, for merchant William Dickson, for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for 'Walter Scott herd' in 1704 and for Bailie George Martin and for Anthony Haig in 1706. He also witnessed several baptisms in 1705, and could be the Patrick who witnessed a baptism in 1687. His wife was Bessie Turnbull and their children included: James (b.1686); John (b.1688), who became a printer's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1706; and Elizabeth (b.1692), who married tailor Robert Chisholme in 1716. He is referred to as deceased in 1707 when expenses incurred earlier, during his Bailieship, were discussed by the Council. Richard (16th C.) recorded as 'master Richart Richartsoun' in 1530 when he witnessed the marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott and Janet Ker. His name appears just before the Vicar of Hawick. Richard (b.1809/10) from Kelso, he was a butcher in Lilliesleaf, listed on Pigot's 1837 directory. He is recorded in 1851 and 1861 on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Jane and their children included William, Isabella, Mary and George. Robert (16th C.) recorded as Dean of Annandale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1548. He received some of the benefices of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale from 1552. However, this overlapped with John Hepburn, so it is unclear who was really in the office. He resigned in 1565. He was also referred to as Dean of Teviotdale in 1552. Robert (17th C.) leased one fifth of the farm of Branhholme Town in 1690, with Thomas Briggs as cautioner. He was listed at Branhholme Town among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (1828-1877) son of John and Esther Robson (whose memorial stone can still be seen at St. Mary's). He became a clerk with Andrew Oliver, auctioneer's, and was also assistant to Robert Armstrong in the Post Office. He then became head cashier with a firm in London (Scott, Bell & Co.), moved to Liverpool for a few years (working for Leech, Harrison Forwood), and was then sent abroad for business. In 1870, after about a year in India, he returned to Hawick because of failing health. He then went into partnership with Robert Noble, forming Richardson, Noble and Co., at Stonefield Mills, moving to Glebe Mills in 1873. The partnership was suggested by his brother-in-law John Hunter; they met for the second time in Hunter's house, trying to conclude their business agreement quickly because both had another engagement that night, only to discover that they were both being admitted as members of Masonic Lodge 111. However, he died after only a few years in business in Hawick. He married Margaret, daughter of William Lawrie and half sister of William Fredrick Diener. He secondly married Jessica, daughter of Andrew Irvine of the Savings Bank. His children were: Minnie, who married John Farrar Blenkhorn; John, partner in Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co.; Ettie Isabella; William Fredrick; and Margaret Lawrie. The family were living at Wilton Hill when he died at only 48. He is buried in the Wellogate. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1703 he (along with Jasper, also a weaver) witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew. The 3 men were presumably all related. Thomas (b.1806) younger son of James, who was Cornet in 1777. He was a carrier and coal agent in Hawick. He was listed as a 'Carrier's Porter' on the Mid Raw in the 1841 census. He may be the grocer on the Howegate listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was a carter at 14 Howegate in 1861. He later stayed at Fiddle Inn (7 Loan). He married Agnes Park and their children included: James (b.1834); William (b.1836); John (b.1839), farmer at Newmill-on-Slitrig; and Agnes (b.1842), who became Mrs. Oliver of the Railway Hotel in Jedburgh, and later Mrs. Lamb of the Waverley Hotel in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. It is possible he was the same man as the manufacturer, who would only have been about 18 when the book was published. He may be the Walter recorded in 1797 when his employee Thomas Clerk was listed among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Walter (1766-c.1808) son of William and Isabel Henderson. He was also manufacturer at Whisky Houses. He is probably the Walter recorded in Hawick as owner of 2 horses in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and the manufacturer who paid the horse tax in the same year. Also in 1797 his servant Thomas Collier was among the men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1801 his employee John Leyden. In 1794 he married Christian, daughter of Town Clerk John Gladstains, and she died in 1816. Their children included: Ann (b.1794); Isabel (b.1796); William (b.1797), who went to London and became a merchant in Glasgow; John (1799-1869); James (b.1801), a hatter in Liverpool; and Elizabeth (b.1802). The witnesses in 1794 were William (his father) and Walter Laidlaw. After his death, in 1815, the mill was sold to Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co. Walter (1824-88) son of John, he was a hosiery warehouseman. He lived at Waverley Cottages. In 1847 he firstly married Mary Murray, and their children were: John (b.1848), father of James of the Salvation Army; James (b.1851), wool-sorter and Beadle at Hawick Parish Church; Mary (b.1855); Walter (b.1857); and Walter (b.1859). He secondly married Janet, daughter of Robert Henderson, dairyman. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Alton in 1709 when his daughter Agnes was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Howcleuch in 1734 when his daughter Agnes was baptised. William (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1738); and Betty (b.1741). The witnesses in 1741 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and merchant John Cavers. William (18th C.) cooper in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Anderson and their children included George (b.1738) and William (b.1740). Adam (b.1736) was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1740 were fleshers William Renwick and Thomas Waugh. William (18th C.) wool merchant and manufacturer at Whisky Houses, said to be Hawick's first woollen manufacturer. His brother James was his partner, as well as being Cornet. He was recorded as a carrier in 1761. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for smith Robert Young in 1762. In 1787 he was granted land and a waterfall at the top of Slitrig Crescent by the Duke of Buccleuch. He then had the Whisky House Mill built for him in 1788 for the manufacture of cloth. This factory represented one of the important early steps in Hawick's tweed industry. He made a kind of blue cloth, and travelled to Leeds to learn the techniques for finishing his cloth. He later manufactured 'duffle' for women's petticoats, as well as carpets. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785-97. He witnessed a baptism for his son Walter in 1794. He is probably the William listed as 'Merchant' on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with 5 work horses and 1 saddle horse, as well as on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He witnessed a baptism for his son James in 1796 (when recorded as 'Wool Stapler' (i.e. a trader in wool). He may be the member of Hawick Curling Club listed in 1812. He is sometimes confused with his son Walter. In 1752 he married Isabel Henderson (from the farming family at 53 High Street, probably daughter of Robert), and she died in 1778. Their children were: James (b.c.1753), who was Cornet in 1777; John (b.1756); Peter Patrick (b.1759), who had no issue; Elizabeth (b.1761), who probably died young; Walter (b.1766), who took over as manufacturer at Whisky Houses; Betty (1772–1815), the eldest surviving daughter, who married manufacturer William Wilson; Robert (1776–1781); and William (d.1808), merchant in Hawick. The witnesses in 1761 were carrier James Scott and blacksmith Robert Young (who had also married a Henderson), in 1766 were James Henderson (probably his brother-in-law) and Robert Young (again) and in 1772 were John Aitkin and Robert Chisholme. William (d.1808) Hawick merchant, son of manufacturer William. He married Isabella (1771–1807), daughter of James Dickson of Alton. Their son William inherited Alton after the death of his uncle Andrew Dickson, and took the additional name of Dickson. He may be the Richardson whose property is marked around 51 and 55 High Street. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Whitehope in 1808. He married Margaret Laing and their children included: Robert (b.1804); Elizabeth (b.1808); and James (b.1811). William (1774/5–1840) resident of Hummelknowe Mill. In Minto Parish in 1793 he married Margaret Laing and she died in 1831, aged 65. In 1833 he emigrated to Canada, where died. A commemorative stone was erected in Borthwick Waas Cemetery by their son Robert of Oxford County, Canada West. Their children included: George (b.1793); John (b.1795); Alexander (b.1797); Robert (b.1804); Elizabeth (b.1808); and James (b.1811). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hill Place Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had some local connection. William (1797–1877) son of Walter and Christian Gledstains, he was born in Hawick. He is said to have gone to London, but became a merchant in Glasgow, variously listed in the census reports as a 'Drysalter', 'General Merchant', 'Wine Merchant' and 'Iron Merchant'. He may be the 'William Richardson, Jun.' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Eliza Muirhead in 1823 and had children Walter, George, Jane, William and Christina Gladstone. William (b.c.1805) from the Morebattle area, he was a joiner in Hawick. He was living on the Round Close in 1841 and at 4 Backdamgate by 1851. He was listed as a joiner and a wheelwright on the Crescent in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861

he was listed as a joiner and cartwright, employing 2 men. His wife was Margaret from Kelso. In 1846 all of the wood from his yard at the foot of the Crescent was carried away in the flood. Their children included Euphemia, James (also a joiner), Elizabeth, Margaret and Euphemia (again). William (1827–90) Son of John. He was hosiery manager at Walter Wilson & Sons on Allars Crescent. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Ebenezer Robison (whip and thong maker), and she died in 1905, aged 79. They had a son, John (who died in South Africa) and a daughter, Elizabeth (who died in infancy). His grave in Wellogate Cemetery is marked with an obelisk (formerly spelled 'Richardson', 'Richardsonne', 'Richartson', 'Richartsonne', 'Richartson', 'Richiesone', 'Richison', 'Ritchardson', 'Ritchartsonne', 'Ritchieson' and 'Ritchiesone').

William see William Richardson Dickson.

Richardtoncleucht (ri-churd-tin-kloocht) n. nickname of Andrew ('Dandy') Crozier, one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 and taken to Edinburgh tolbooth. His name presumably came from Riccarton Cleuch in Liddesdale, or perhaps Richard's Cleuch near Overton Bush in the Jed valley (see Riccarton Cleuch).

Richie (ri-chee) n. Hendry Sanforth (19th C.) brother-in-law of William Lindsay Watson, for whom he was appointed as a trustee in 1849. He was a manufacturer and perhaps a Quaker, from Deanfield (probably in Perthshire, not in Hawick). He married Margaret, daughter of William.

Richmond (rich-mind) n. James (1834–1923) son of Rev. John, he was born in Southdean. He studied at St. Andrews University 1849–51. In 1851 he emigrated to Australia, becoming a leading sheep breeder in New South Wales. He died in Kincairney, Perthshire. Rev. John (1784–1854) son of Rev. Dr. James of Irvine. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1804, was licensed by Irvine Presbytery in 1809 and was ordained as minister of Southdean in 1810 (being presented by Archibald, Lord Douglas, for whose family he had been tutor). In 1847 he retired to St. Andrews because of poor health and died in Edinburgh. He married Catherine Mitchell (who died in 1887, aged 89) in 1825. Their children were: Isabella Georgine; Margaret Cunningham; James, who became a sheep-farmer near Dunblane and in Australia; John, died young; George Mitchell, army Lieutenant in India, killed in action near Peshawar; and Catherine, died an infant. He published ‘Ode to the Memory of Thomson, in the Temple of the Muses at Dryburgh Abbey’ (1818), ‘A Sermon on Regular Attendance on Divine Worship, in Connexion with the Spirit of the Times’ (1820). He also wrote a description of Southdean Parish for the New Statistical Account in 1834 and he left many poems in manuscript form. Sir Thomas (d.1317) English leader from Yorkshire. He took part in the siege of Carlaverock Castle in 1300. In 1317 he led a part of the English force under the Earl of Arundel, which totalled perhaps 10,000 men. Sir James Douglas organised an ambush near Lintalee, with escape was prevented by twisting together the branches of young birch trees. He himself was killed, it is said by Douglas. William (b.1828/9) from Mauchline in Ayrshire. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Sandbed, along with Thomas Masterton. The pair are listed in the 1851 census and as ‘Richmond & Masterton’ in Slater’s 1852 directory (also written ‘Richmont’).

riddance (ri-dins) n., arch. intervention in a quarrel – ‘... but when he heard ane crying murther he straight way went up to make riddance and to allay tumult’ [PR1716].

Riddell (ri-dul) n. hamlet about 8 miles north of Hawick, between Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, on the Ale Water, off the B6400. The surrounding area is the old estate of Riddell, formerly a barony, which is now well wooded, and contains the ruins of the main mansion (incorporating the older peel tower) as well as a more modern tower, built nearby on the site of a mediæval motte and bailey. It was the home of the Riddells of Riddell from probably the reign of David I (the mid-12th century, when it was referred to as ‘Wester-Lilliesleaf’) until they were effectively ruined following the death of Sir John in 1819, and it was sold to the Sprots in 1823. The short version of the story of the loss of the family home is that in the late 18th century Sir John changed the course of the river in order to improve the view, and became bankrupt in the process. In the early 13th century part of the ‘demesne’ lands were stated to be below ‘Harekamb’. The farm was burned in a raid by Turnbulls in about 1502, in which perhaps 480 sheep were stolen, along with 2 cows and goods, and a horse killed. The Laird of Riddell was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. The main lands were referred to as ‘Riddell Mains’ in 1643 and valued at £910, part of an estate of £1654. In 1675 there was a garrison of soldiers there, to watch out for local gatherings of Covenanters. By 1678 the estate’s value was £1765. Tax was paid on 11 hearths on the estate in 1694, with John Winthroppe, William Archibald and Alexander Kennedy being recorded there. Robert Arres was recorded as tenant there in 1789. Residents in 1799 included gardener Robert Scott, ploughman Henry ‘Carudas’, servants Adam Scott, Andrew Walker, Thomas Gowans, hind William Wilson, ploughman Gilbert Gray and smith William Irvine. Carter John Smith and servant John Laidlaw were there in 1801. Riddell House was an extensive mansion, destroyed by fire in 1943, although the remains can still be seen. It was one of the places where dragoons were posted in about 1676, so that they could scour the local countryside for people attending illegal field conventicles. There are 2 lodge houses for the estate, called ‘East Lodge’ and ‘West Lodge’. The estate also contains stables, a deer larder, two 18th century bridges and other old buildings. There was formerly a chapel on the estate. The mausoleum of the Sprot family lies within woodlands on the estate. The current farmhouse was built by Mark Sprot in 1826 as an estate office and extended in 1898; it contains a Sprot armorial panel, as well as some stones in the garden from the earlier mansion. A ridge about 700 m east of the present farm contains a roughly oval fort (about 100 m by 50 m in size) with double ditches. Another fort, about 400 m northwest of the old house, above Riddellbank Wood, was revealed in aerial photography. A stone cist was unearthed near Willowbog Plantation on the estate around 1920 and reconstructed in the kitchen garden, although it has now disappeared. Court rolls for the barony court for 1698–1712 are in the National Archives – ‘... To ancient Riddel’s fair domain, Where Aill, from mountains freed, Down from lakes did raving come; Each wave was creased with tawny foam, Like the mane of a chestnut steed’ [SWS] (the origin is probably Old English ‘rydde dæl’, meaning ‘valley cleared of trees’, the name being transplanted by the ‘de Rydale’ family, who held extensive lands in England; it is ‘Redoll’ in 1435, ‘Redale’ in 1436/7, ‘Reddail’ in 1479/80 and ‘Riddale’ in 1502 and 1534; it appears on Frederik de Wit’s map of c. 1680 and is labelled ‘Riddell or W. Lilsly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Riddell (ri-dul) n. (see also Riddle) Adam (13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Ridal’ in an English document of 1279 involving an inquest into lands in Ireland. Adam (16th C.) brother of John of that Ilk. He was part of an inquest into ownership of the lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533 (in which his nephew George also took part). Adam (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Robertson Burnfoot in 1781. He married Isobel Learmonth in Robertson in 1774. His children included Jane (b.1776) and Nelly (b.1781). Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Cairns and their children included: Mary (b.1805); George (b.1809); Agnes (b.1811); Nelly (b.1813); and Margaret (b.1816). Adam (b.1782) born in Kirkton Parish, son of George, he was a joiner at Overhall Cottages in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was listed there at Overhall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Isabella and their children included George, Robert, Janet, Georgina and Jessy, as well as an adopted daughter Isabella Aitchison. Agnes (17th C.) widow of Hawick merchant James Brydon, who is listed on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. She is also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She may have been a shopkeeper of some sort on the High Street. Her children with James Brydon included John (b.1670), Robert (b.1676), John (again, b.1683), Elspeth (b.1684) and James (b.1688). Agnes (d.bef. 1741) daughter of Henry and brother of William, portioner in Bewlie. She inherited the lands of Bewlie from her brother in 1695, specifically the 5-pound land of Bewlie and half of one of the cottage-lands in Lilliesleaf. She is described as 'portioner' of Bewley' in 1699. She married John Nisbet, W.S. of Nisbetfield and their daughter Agnes married Walter Scott of Whitfield (later Harden). In 1723 her heir is recorded as her cousin, Francis Riddell, brewer in Prestonpans. Christian and Jean Riddell (and their husbands) are recorded as her heirs in 1741. Agnes (b.1810/1) wife of Lilliesleaf joiner William. She was listed as a midwife in the 1851 census. She was a widow living at about 61 High Street, with her children Janet, Rachel and James. She may be the dressmaker of the same name listed on the Howegate in Slater's 1852 directory. Alan (13th C.) recorded in about 1240 as witness to a charter for lands of Prendergust, among the documents of Coldingham Priory. He witnessed another gift of land in Coldingham in the period 1248–60. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Alexander (17th C.) miller at Newmill (on Teviot) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Alexander who witnessed baptisms for John Dryden in 1675 and 1683. He may be the Alexander, married to Isobel Little, whose daughter Christian was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1672. Alexander (17th/18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1698 as 'Mr' when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry. Alexander (b.c.1780) servant at Longnewton Mill on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish. Andrew (16th C.) witness to a sasine in 1559 for land in Wilton. This was attached to a sasine with Robert Riddell mentioned, so it is likely he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. Possibly the same man is described as 'Andrew Riddill of that ilk' when he witnessed a sasine for lands in Rule Water in 1568. Perhaps the same Andrew was brother to Walter of that Ilk in 1579 when he was loaned £50 to Walter Scott of Todrig, receiving the annual rent of the lands in the form of meal and malt. His brother Robert was also mentioned about the same time. Probably the same Andrew, brother of Walter of that Ilk witnessed a transaction for Walter Scott of Todrig in 1581/2. Andrew (16th C.) servant to Robert, son of James Langlands of that Ilk. He was recorded in 1581 as witness to the sasine for half the Barony of Wilton being transferred from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert. Andrew of that Ilk (1549/50–1632) son of Walter, with his mother probably being Agnes Ramsay. He was heir apparent Andrew of Walter in 1581 when he received sasine (in the name of his sister Janet) for the lands of Wester Horsburgh in Peeblesshire from Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk; William in Lilliesleaf was one of the witnesses. In 1581 he witnessed a bond of caution for Elliots, when he was listed as son and heir of Walter of that Ilk. In the 1580s he was a 'tutor' for the young James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm, to whom he was related through his paternal grandmother. In 1590 he was 'apparent of that Ilk' when he served as cautioner for Andrew Ker of Newhall. In 1590/1 he was recorded as a curator for James Pringle of Smailholm. He was served heir to his father in 1592 and obtained a charter in 1595/6 from the Commendator of Glasgow, as heir to his father Walter (making it unclear if Walter was still alive at that time). In 1592 Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk (who was married to his sister Janet) served as his cautioner in a bond of loyal behaviour. He served as cautioner for Pringles in 1598. He was the first to acquire the Haining estate from the Scotts (perhaps about 1627). He is recorded in a bond of 1600 for lands in Lilliesleaf and also in 1600 was on the 'retour' for the Kers of Cessford. In 1602 he signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1610 he was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace for Roxburghshire and was also named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire. In 1610 he was recorded along with other Riddells, swearing not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshaw) and other Scotts. His cautioner was James, merchant in Edinburgh, who was probably a relative. He himself acted as cautioner for his son John in the same case. In 1611 he was commended by King James VI for his industry as convenor of the Justices of Roxburghshire. In 1617 he was appointed to a 3-man panel to try some Elliots for sheep stealing. He was at the Convention of the Estates in 1617. In 1618 the Douglasses of Friarshaw complained about verbal and physical attacks by him and his associated Andrew of Lilliesleaf and Simon of Lilliesleaf Mill; in particular they claimed that he threatened the life of George Douglas of Friarshaw at Lilliesleaf Kirk. In about 1620 he had a charter for half the lands of 'Cringillis' from the Commendator of Melrose, and another charter for Allanshaws, 'Woplaw' and the west part of 'Langlie' from James Cairncross of Colmeslie. In 1620 he acted as bailie for Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch, in a charter he granted to Sir Walter Scott of Goldielands; at the same time his daughter Jean was contracted in marriage to Walter, son of Sir Walter of Goldielands. He was probably the Laird of Riddell who represented Roxburghshire in the convention of 1617 and in Parliament in 1621. He also sat as one of the Lords of Secret Council in 1622 (and probably other years). In 1623 a man was found guilty of stealing 4 cows and an ox from his lands, and sheep from his lands of Whitton. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft; for the case of one of them, Isobel 'Howetsone', several letters exist from him to officials in Selkirk. Also in 1628 he is listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire, his son John also being listed there as 'fiar'. Also in 1628 he wrote to the Bailies of Selkirk about casting divot's on their common. He purchased half a husbandland in Lilliesleaf from William, son of Martin Elliot and Agnes Lorraine (as confirmed in a service to Walter of that Ilk in 1702). He was 'of Haining' in documents from the early 1600s relating to transactions with Andrew Scott of Wemyss. He was referred to as Baron of Riddell, and apparently refused to accept a baronetcy. He may be the Andrew of that Ilk recorded in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk over casting divots, in an undated document. He married a Pringle of Galashiels, who was either his first or second cousin. He was succeeded by his son Sir John (for whom there is a marriage contract in 1600 with the daughter of Sir John Murray of Eddleston). He later married Violet, daughter of William Douglas of Pumpherston. His other children were: William of Muselee, who started that branch of the family in the Borthwick valley; James of Maybole (possible ancestor of Rev. Henry Scott Riddell); Walter (or perhaps Robert) of Hartside; Andrew of Haining, who inherited that estate; Margaret, who married Robert Rutherford of Edgerston and/or Archibald Porteous, minister of Oxnam and was recorded in a deed of corroboration in 1673; Isabel, who married Robert Kerr, brother of Thomas of Cavers Carre; and Jean (1600–60), who remained unmarried, and is buried at Jedburgh Abbey. Other daughters may have married Walter Scott of Goldielands (although this may be an error for the marriage contract between his daughter Jean and Scott of Goldielands, which perhaps was never fulfilled) and John Baillie (ancestor of the Baillies of Mellerstain). In 1642 his widow Violet Douglas complained to the Privy Council about an attack on her tenants at Hartside. He is buried in the family aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard (where until fairly recently the inscription was quite legible), alongside his 2nd wife Violet. Andrew of Lilliesleaf (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 along with Andrew of that Ilk and Simon of Lilliesleaf Mill when there were complaints made against them by the Douglasses of Friarshaw. It was specifically claimed that they put their sheep on a field of wheat belonging to the Douglasses and also that he and Simon removed the ploughs from some of the Douglas' farmers. It seems likely that he was a close relative of the Laird of Riddell. Andrew of Haining (1605/6–41) son of Andrew of that Ilk and his 2nd wife Violet Douglas. He is recorded as Andrew of Haining (along with David of Haining) in 1634 in a document preserved in Selkirk. He was served heir to his father in 1636. He was said to be a 'favourite son' of his father. Along with his father and mother, he has one of the earliest legible panels in the Riddell aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard. The initials 'I.S.' accompany his, probably those of his wife, who was Jean Stewart of Traquair (after his death his widow married Sir William Douglas of Kelhead). He was probably the 'Andro Riddell' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1638 he was appointed Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He was appointed Commissioner to Parliament (i.e. M.P.) for Selkirkshire (or 'the forest') 1639–41. He married Agnes of Fawside and their children included: John of Haining, who succeeded; Violet, who was the 3rd wife of Sir Robert Dalzell of Glenae; and Walter, recorded in a deed in 1673. He is buried in the Riddell Aisle at Lilliesleaf, with the inscription 'whose life was short and good'. Andrew (17th C.) described as 'now indweller in Over Quilton' in 1652 when he married Elizabeth ('Bessie'), daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was probably related to the Riddells of Riddell and Whitton. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls when he paid for the 'fewary of Lilslie' in Lilliesleaf Parish. Probably the same Andrew was portioner of Lilliesleaf in 1678 when he served as tutor to John, son of the deceased William Gray in Lilliesleaf; in 1683 and 1684 he is described as uncle to this same John Gray (perhaps meaning that his wife was a Gray) in other discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk, and then had the discharge in his own right (presumably meaning he had inherited the lands). It is unclear how he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. He may be the Andrew who died in 1701 and whose headstone is in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. Andrew (17th C.) son of Walter, who was brother of John of Haining. He was recorded in a deed of 1673. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1670); and Robert (b.1671). Andrew (17th C.) listed as being 'in Little-Cavers' among men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He is listed right after John, to whom he was presumably related. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Walter Miller in 1690 and another (along with John) in 1691 for Walter Murray (also in Dryden). He and John witnessed another baptism for Daniel Kedic in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Bessie Dodds and had children in Ashkirk, including: Marion (b.1687); John (b.1690); Thomas (b.1693); and Andrew (b.1699). The witnesses in 1690 were John (probably a relative) and Thomas Kedic (who was also at Dryden). Andrew (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert and Walter were also listed there and so surely related. Andrew (d.c.1698) recorded being 'of Newhous' in 1698 in a list of wills registered with the Commissariat of Peebles. This was probably the Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He could be the Andrew, who was resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew of Haining (17th/18th C.) son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1696, this including 2 cottage-lands at Lilliesleaf Mill as well as the Haining and other lands in Selkirkshire. In 1701 he (or perhaps his sister Madgalene) sold Haining to Andrew Pringle of Clifton. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Goldielands. In 1702 he was recorded as 'Sub-tenant in Goldilands' when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin, tenant in Alton Croft. He also witnessed baptisms in 1703 for William Wilson in Fenwick, in 1704 for Robert Stoddart (tenant in the Flex) and for John Rutherford, in 1705 for Walter Wilson, for William Douglas of Bonjedward and for James Stevenson in Harwood, in 1706 for William Scott in Branhholme and for Robert Rutherford, in 1707 for weaver John Briggs, in 1708 for William Gledstains, for weaver Robert Turnbull, younger and for Dand Gray in Whitlaw, in 1709 for James Scott, tenant in Nether Southfield, in 1712 for Walter Scott in Goldielands and for Walter Glendinning (along with Walter Scott in Goldielands), in 1713 for John Elliot, tenant in Goldielands and in 1716 and 1718 for William Elliot, tenant in Crumhaugh, and in 1718 for weaver William Crozier. He was also recorded at Goldielands when he witnessed baptisms for Robert Henderson in 1706, blacksmith George Scott in 1707, Walter Scot in Crumhaugh, Thomas Turnbull (herd in Southfield) in 1708 and William Scott (tenant in Whitchesters), for Robert Tudhope (herd in Over Southfield) in 1709 and for John Scott 'Wyndhead' and merchant William Black in 1711. Given all these records, he must have been a Kirk Elder or similar. He could be the Andrew who is recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711 and in 1718. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1738. He married Marion Watson and their children included: William (b.1735); James (b.1737); Anne (b.1738); Agnes (b.1740); Helen (b.1743); and Andrew (b.1745). The witnesses in 1738 were William Ogilvie in Hoscode and John Scott 'late Bailie' and in 1743 were ex-Bailie John Scott and writer Thomas Winthrope. Andrew (18th C.) signatory of the document signed by 56 people at Raperlaw in 1732, protesting against acts of the General Assembly and being connected with the Secession. He was probably a resident of Lilliesleaf. Some children who could be his are Magdalene (b.1738), George (b.1741), Janet (b.1744), Andrew (b.1748), Magdalene (b.1754), Robert (b.1756), George (b.1760) and Janet (b.1766). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Jean Telfer and their son Walter was baptised in 1770. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Thomas (b.1771); and Margaret (b.1772). Andrew (18th/19th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf. His son George was baptised in 1789. Other children who may be his include Andrew (b.1784), Andrew (b.1785), James (b.1787), Jean (b.1794) and Magdalene (b.1799). Probably the same Andrew is recorded in Lilliesleaf in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. An account of his to Thomas Inglis from 1794-96 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. Andrew (b.1796/7) from Selkirk, he was farmer at North Synton. He is recorded there in 1851 farming 450 acres, employing 10 labourers and in 1861, as farmer of 400 acres, employing 9 men. He was still recorded there in a directory of 1868. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Agnes, John (who took over the farm), Jane, George and Janet. Rev. Archibald (1635-1708) 3rd son of Sir Walter, 2nd Baronet of Riddell, and brother of

Sir John, 3rd Baronet. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1656 and followed Covenanter principles. He became minister at Kippen near Stirling in about 1670. However, these were turbulent times and he came to be persecuted as a preacher of field conventicles. Orders for his arrest were issued in 1674 and he fled from Kippen, but preached secretly in various places. In 1678 he was one of 5 ministers who preached for 3 days in a field at East Nisbet for over 3000 people. He was said to have taken part in conventicles locally and like his brother William, he was eventually imprisoned for his Covenanting principles. He was outlawed in 1679, after the confrontation at Bothwell Bridge. In 1680 he was captured by Col. Henry Ker of Graden, a prominent Jacobite and his brother James Ker; this was while returning from Moffat Well with Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was imprisoned in Jedburgh, after his watch, sword and money were taken from him. He was then taken to Edinburgh Tolbooth, and examined 3 separate times, although nothing could be found to connect him with the Battle of Bothwell Brig. Nevertheless, he refused to take the oath, and so after 9 months was moved to the Bass Rock, spending 3 years there. In 1681 he was allowed to visit his dying mother at Riddell House and was only finally released on condition of sailing to the plantations in America, his wife dying on the disastrous journey on the 'Henry & Francis'. He served as minister at Woodbridge in New Jersey (for fellow Scots) for about 3 years, returning to Scotland after the Revolution. However, the ship he was on, bound for Scotland, was seized by the French, and he was held prisoner (along with his 6 year old son) in deplorable conditions in a French dungeon for 2½ years before being exchanged for 2 Catholic priests. He was minister of Wemyss from 1691, Kirkcaldy from 1697 and Trinity College (Edinburgh) from 1702. His first wife was Helen, daughter of Rev. Henry Aitkenhead of North Berwick and his 2nd wife was Jean Ker. His children included: Capt. Walter (d.1738), who retook his ship 'the Phoebe' from the French, acquired the Barony of Granton and was probably the son who was captive in France with his father; Dr. John (d.1740), an Edinburgh physician; Janet, who married James, son of Sir James Dundas; and Sarah, who married Rev. John Currie of Oldhamstocks. His sister Alison, married Gabriel Semple, who was another well known field preacher. He was buried at Old Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Nichol and their children included James (b.1684). Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Borthaugh. His daughter Isobel was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1704, with witnesses Walter Scott in Drinkstone and William Henderson. He is probably either the Archibald who married Katherine Kirkwood in Wilton in 1702 or the Archibald who married Agnes Scott in Wilton in 1703. He was probably related to William, who was recorded at Borthaugh in 1707. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Branhholme Town, who moved to Robertson Parish. In 1723 James Crow (perhaps his former employer) pleaded with Hawick Session to provide support for him, since he 'hath none to help him in his distressed condition and indigence save his son of 17 years who is servant in Shielswood'. He is probably the same Archibald listed as resident of Castleside (near Branhholme) on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Lamb. Their daughter Beatrix was baptised in 1703. Robert (b.1706) was probably also his child. Sir Auskittel of Riddell (d.c.1180) 2nd Laird. He was probably son of Gospatric of Brawby and brother of Walter and Robert. However, other accounts suggest he was son of Philip and brother of Gervase, Walter and Ralph. A bull of Pope Adrian IV in 1156 records him as brother and heir to Walter of Riddell in the lands of 'Wituness, Liliscrive, Braechebe, et cetera' (Whitton in Hownam Parish, Lilliesleaf and Brawby in Yorkshire). A papal bull from the next Pope also confirmed these lands, and refers to his son and heir as Walter. Hence he was also either brother or nephew of Gervase. In 1159 he witnessed a charter of confirmation granted to the monks of Kelso by Malcolm IV. There was also an agreement between him and Uchtred, priest of Lilliesleaf, confirmed by Pope Alexander III in about 1160. In about 1208 Robert of Barnoldby confirmed his grant of Whitton (in Hownam Parish) to Melrose Abbey; these lands were granted for his soul, as well as those of Patrick and his son Walter. He married either Ascernia de Stonegrave or Elean, daughter of Robert de Morville (or perhaps both). His name is written 'Asktil', 'Anskettill', 'Anskittill', 'Ansketin', 'Ocitel', etc., and this forename does not appear to have used again in the family. The next generation appears to be confused, with different charters stating that Patrick and William were both sons. It seems likely that his children included Walter, William, Patrick, Eda and Maud. Another son may have been

Ralph, but this is less clear. He may also have had a daughter Adeliza, who married 'Henricus de Haga', one of the early Haigs of Bemersyde. Borthwick (b.1800/1) 2nd son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott, he was born in Teviotdale. He was farmer at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish. He was a player of the bagpipes, and known as 'Riddell the Piper'. He was said to be the best player of the small pipes in the Borders. He played at the wedding of a son of the Duke of Buccleuch and when a daughter of the Earl of Minto married Lord John Russell. There is a record of him being at a celebration (for the return of a Teri from America) in the Fleece Inn in the late 1840s at which he sang 'Clean pease strae'. He published at least one poem and there is a tune called 'Borthwick Riddell's Hornpipe'. He was at Dryden in 1841 and in 1851 he was farming 60 arable acres and 300 acres of hill land. He was already a widower by 1851. Maj. Charles of Muselie (1759–1849) eldest surviving son of Patrick and Margaret Balfour. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is probably the 'Charles Riddle in Sinton a Batchelor' who was taxed for having a female servant in 1786 and 'Charles Riddal in Sinton' taxed for both male and female servants in 1787–93; he thus must have lived at Synton for a while. He was also at Synton on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of Muselee in 1788 (when it was in Robertson Parish, valued at £100), as well as part of Bewlie (valued at £330), lands that had formerly been owned by the feuars of Lilliesleaf (valued at £106 13s 4d), Ryechester and Quartersides (purchased from Hunter of Linthill, valued at £50) and teinds in Lilliesleaf (valued at £95 1s 2d). He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788, and was then described as being 'Once in Buccleugh's Fencibles. A brother a Writer. Moderate estate. A batchelor'. In 1793 he received some lands in Dryburgh from Henry Erskine of Sheffield. He was Major in the local militia 1799–1809. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in 1797 and 1798 and was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811 and was listed as owner of Muselee on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Sometime before 1813 he sold some lands in Lilliesleaf Parish (including Ryechester Quartersides) to Sir John Buchanan Riddell of that Ilk, but still held onto the main lands of Bewlie there. He served as Chamberlain to the

Duke of Buccleuch, dealing with rents in Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Peblesshire and Eskdale, in the period 1808–36; he was then replaced by William Ogilvie. During some of that period he lived at Branxholme, and was present at the banquet held in the Duke of Buccleuch's honour in 1839. He was a member of the Forest Club. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1823 and in 1825 subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. In 1830 he chaired the meeting of the freeholders of Roxburghshire at which Henry Francis Scott, younger of Harden was re-elected as M.P. He was listed among the landowners in Robertson Parish in 1841. He lived to be about 90 (although there is some uncertainty over his birth date) and died unmarried. Muselee was inherited by his niece. Gen. Charles James Buchanan (1817–1903) 3rd son of Sir John Buchanan, he was baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was educated at Eton and in private schools, then in 1832 entered the Royal Military Academy in Woolwich. He joined the Royal Artillery, serving in Quebec and Jamaica before being invalided home. He grew interested in terrestrial magnetism and meteorology and became Director of an observatory in Toronto (from 1840), then Assistant Superintendent of the Ordnance Magnetic Observatory at the Royal Military Repository in Woolwich (from about 1842). He was elected as a Fellow of the Royal Society and published 'Magnetical Instructions for the Use of Portable Instruments Adapted for Magnetical Surveys and Portable Observatories' (1844). He then served as Deputy Quartermaster-General in the Crimean War and served during the Indian Rebellion of 1857/8 and commanded the siege artillery during the capture of Lucknow. He achieved the rank of Major-General, was mentioned 3 times in dispatches and was appointed C.B. He married Mary, daughter of Field-Marshal Sir Hew Dalrymple Ross and they had a daughter. He died at Chudleigh, Devonshire and is buried there. A portrait of him was painted in 1877 by an unknown artist. David (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Clerklands. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of Greatlaws and 'Clerklandes'. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (16th/17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1628 she gave evidence regarding the trial of Isobel Howison for witchcraft. She stated that she fetched Howison to see the child of Andrew Riddell, but she 'wold not come bot bade looke weill to the bairne and thairafter the bairne dyed schortlie'. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (16th/17th C.) married to George Robson, from the Lilliesleaf area. She is probably distinct from the other Bessie in Lilliesleaf, since both of them gave separate evidence in the 1628 trial for witchcraft of Isobel Howison. She said that when Howison had been giving a charm to the son of William Middlemas, she then came into her house looking for her child, ‘and att that tyme the bairne tooke suddenlie seeknes after this Issobell Howetsone reproved hir for saying scho had done some evill to hir bairne and within halfe a year hir bairne tooke seeknes and dyed’.

Francis (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was living at Crook in 1737. He married Martha Oliver in Kirkton Parish in 1733 and their children included: Agnes (b.1734), baptised in Kirkton; William (b.1737), baptised in Cavers; Helen (b.1741), also baptised in Cavers; and Margaret (b.1744), baptised in Hawick. He could be the son of William baptised in Hawick in 1710. Francis ‘Frank’ (b.1724) born in Hawick, and said to be descended from the Riddells of that Ilk. He worked as a gardener. The details of his family were recorded in a bible belonging to the Fairgrieve family in Bridgeton, Maine. In 1746 he married Annie Neal. Their children included: John (b.1758), who was a gardener and sexton; and Walter (b.1760), who moved to Carlisle. He may be the same man as Francis in Ashkirk Parish. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is recorded at Whitslade in 1753 when his son William was baptised in Robertson Parish. Probably the same Francis married Janet Miller and had children, baptised in Ashkirk, including Helen (b.1755). Walter (b.1749), Janet (b.1751) and William (b.1753), baptised in Robertson, were probably also his children. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) had a charter giving a pasture in Primside to Kelso Abbey during the reign of William I, probably between 1185 and 1204. He also witnessed a charter to Melrose Abbey by Anselm de Mow in the period 1170–90. He was probably related to other Riddells, and appears to have been from Roxburghshire. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Geoffreys, although a direct connection with the Lilliesleaf branch seems likely. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) probably descended from Hugh, Lord of Blaye in England, with his mother also being an English Riddell. He appears to have united the lands of Wittering and Cranston. Through his wife Hawissa, daughter of William Peverel, he gained further lands in Essex. He was succeeded by another Geoffrey (or Galfridus). Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) referred to as ‘Gaufred de Riddell’, he was a younger son of Sir Patrick. He received some of his father’s lands during the reign of Alexander II. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) from Berwickshire. Some time before 1233 he was witness to a document for Coldingham Priory. In about 1232 the Priory of Durham granted the marriage of his heir and custody of the lands of Flemington (in Lanarshire) to Sir William of Bondington. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Geoffrey (13th C.) son and heir of John, with his mother being ‘Hauwysia’, according to a plea of 1235, relating to lands in Buckinghamshire. His wife was ‘Mabilia’ who has sasine of the lands of ‘Belyn’ and ‘Olerun’. He may be the same as one of the other Geoffreys. Geoffrey (d.1261) head of the main line of Riddells in England, son of Geoffrey. He held the Lordships of Wittering and Blaye, as well as Cranston in Scotland. He is recorded in connection to the peace settlements between England and France. He is recorded in a document at Dunwich in 1258. He was succeeded by his son Geoffrey. Geoffrey (d.c.1288) eldest son of Galfridus and head of the main English family branch. He is mentioned with reference to the conflicts between England and France, and probably still had connections with Scotland. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Norfolk and Suffolk in 1262. His sons probably included Geoffrey, Sir Hugh and Sir Nicholas. Geoffrey (d.1319) eldest son of Galfridus, whom he succeeded in 1288 to the Barony of Blaye in England. He also possessed Wittering, as well as Cranston in Scotland, and probably other lands. He is listed as ‘Galfridus Ridel’ in a 1297 mandate to restore lands to Scotsmen who had sworn fealty to King Edward. He had a daughter, Alicia, but the family estates went to his brother Sir Hugh. Geoffrey of Riddell (d.c.1325) possibly son of Sir William and brother of William, whom he succeeded as 8th of that Ilk, although these generations are uncertain. He was also known as ‘Galfridus’, a family name that connects him with his Norman ancestors. He was probably succeeded by his son Sir William, while Sir Robert and Richard may also have been his sons. He may have had a daughter who married John Ainslie of Dolphinston. He may be the same ‘Geoffry Ridel’ recorded in 1297 when his lands in both England and Scotland were restored by Edward I because he was in that King’s service abroad; in 1298 the same man was recorded as valet of Simon Fraser, when they were both with Edward in Flanders.

He made gifts to Kelso and Melrose Abbeys during the reign of Alexander III. Sir Geoffrey (d.1346) son of Sir Hugh, head of the main English line. He was Baron of Montclare and Lord of Wittering and Cranston. He acquired Wittering from his father in 1316, following an earlier charter of 1292 and restoration of the forfeited manor in 1298. He fought against Robert the Bruce, and lost his Scottish possessions afterwards. He was succeeded by his son, Sir Hugh, who petitioned to have his Scottish lands returned, but this was unsuccessful. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1514 receiving the Clerkship of Lilliesleaf Kirk from the Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding the deceased Thomas Riddell. Note that the Clerk at that time was like the assistant priest. He was listed as a scholar and was no doubt a younger son of the Laird of Riddell. In 1522 he was succeeded by John, son of John Riddell of that Ilk. George of that Ilk (16th C.) son of John, he was succeeded by Walter, who was either his son or his nephew. It may be that he was acting as Laird during the dotage of his father, but this is unclear. He could be the George who witnessed a document for the dispute between Scotts and Veitches over Synton in 1531. He was part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533 when he was heir apparent to his father. In 1535 he was son and heir of John of that Ilk when he presented a precept of sasine for lands in Purveshill; his wife was there stated to be Elizabeth Ker. He may have been the George who was 'Bailie in that part', along with William, according to a document of 1535 relating to Harden (into which family at least one of his aunts had married). It is possible he pre-deceased his father, but in any case the next in succession was Walter (but it is unclear if he was his son or other male relative). George (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. George (16th C.) recorded in 1579 being in 'wester Eschiside' (presumably Essenside) when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. This was for the sale of a piece of land in Lilliesleaf by James Redford in Hassendeanburn. George (16th C.) recorded being 'in Riddale in Lillisle' in 1580 in a marriage contract for his daughter Isabel. She was to marry George Rutherford in Bewlie, with the agreement that if no heirs were produced and George died first, then she was to have half of his possessions and get the 'toquhergud' back (consisting of 3 draught oxen, 3 cows with calves, 20 sheep and 20 merks). The witnesses were his son John, Robert in Clerklands, John in Lilliesleaf Mill and James Henderson in Lilliesleaf. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Janet Phaup in 1679 and their son William was baptised in 1681. The witnesses were James Shiel and James Sanderson. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for William Todshaw in 1686. George (d.c.1688) tenant in Lustruther when his will was recorded in 1688. George (18th C.) recorded at Newton in Kirkton Parish in 1786 and 1787. His children included: Margaret (b.1786); and Peggy (b.1787). He was surely related to John, who was farmer there at the same time. George (d.bef. 1809) resident of Howahill. His son Robert (a wright) died in Hawick parish in 1809. He may be the George who married Margaret Hobkirk in Hobkirk Parish in 1769. George William nee Hutton (1807–71) son of George Hutton of Carlton-on-Trent and Frances Mitford. He was a banker of Newmarket-on-Trent and Magsistrate for Notts, Carlton-on-Trent. In 1835 he married Mary, who was heiress of Muselee, being daughter of Walter and niece of Maj. Charles. He assumed the additional surname of 'Riddell' in order to inherit the lands through his wife. These lands included Whitfield in Wilton Parish. After Mary died, he secondly married Hannah-Elizabeth, widow of J.O. Lambert, and thirdly married Janetta-Gonville Bromhead, Baroness. He was succeeded by his son, also George William, and had another son, Edward Mitford. The surname in these couple of generations is often hyphenated as 'Hutton-Riddell'. Capt. George William Hutton (1836–1915) son of George William Hutton, who had married Mary Riddell, the niece and heiress of Charles of Muselee. He thus inherited the Muselee lands and may later have lived there. He was educated at Rugby and was a Captain in the 16th Lancers. He sold the Dryburgh estate, as well as Bewlie and Bewlie Moor. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In about 1874 he is listed as owner of Todshaw and Muselee in Robertson Parish, as well as Whitfield in Wilton Parish. In 1877 he married Evelyn Mary Craven, daughter of the Earl of Craven. Their children included Capt. George Hutton and William Hutton, who was an artist. His name is sometimes hyphenated 'Hutton-Riddell'. Gervase (11th/12th C.) one of the earliest Scottish family members, likely moving north along with other supporters of King David I. His name was recorded as 'Gervasius' or 'Geraisus'. He was probably son of Philip, and surely from the Norman 'de Rydale' family who held lands in England. He witnessed a charter of David I in 1116. He was made High Sheriff of Roxburgh about the same time, the earliest known in that office. He is recorded as Sheriff in a charter of 1138/9 and witnessed several other charters for King David in the early 1140s. He may have married Christian de Soulis, who was a donor to Jedburgh Abbey, giving a third part of the village of 'Hernwingslawe' (possibly Mervinslaw). He and his brother Radulf (or Ralph) gave the church of Abbotrule to Jedburgh Abbey (although it is also suggested that this was Abbotsley in Huntingdonshire). A son Hugh is said to have been the progenitor of the Riddells of Cranston Riddell (although the origin of that branch is a matter of debate). His son (or possibly brother) Walter was granted a charter of the lands of Lilliesleaf. He may have had other children, including 'Jordanus' and Adeliza (who married Henry 'de Haga', 3rd Laird of Bemersyde). He died at Jedburgh Abbey, probably following the custom in those days of the rich and secular bestowing gifts on ecclesiastical institutions in return for atonement. It is also suggested that he may have been unrelated to Walter 'de Riddale', and was instead ancestor of the Riddells of Cranston Riddell, who did not use the 'de' prefix in their name. Henry of Wittering (15th C.) esquire recorded in a quitclaim of lands in Leicestershire. Henry 'Harry' (d.bef. 1670) eldest son of Walter. He was 'portioner' of Bewlie from 1663. He witnessed a contract for lands in Hobkirk Parish along (for Lorraine of Appotside) with his father in 1654 and others in 1656 and 1659. He also witnessed the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood in 1662. The Archbishop of Glasgow ratified his lands at Bewlie in 1665 and in the same year there was an agreement between his tenants James Wright, Walter and George Davidson with the tenant of John Riddell of Muselee over boundaries between them. He was deceased by 1670 when his son and heir William infested his widow in the five-pound land of Bewlie. He married Janet, daughter of William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1562. His children were William, Marion and Agnes (whose 'tutor' was Walter Riddell, younger of Riccalton). In 1686 Agnes married John Nisbet, lawyer in Edinburgh; she was later heir to her brother William. Rev. Henry Scott (1789–1862) son of Henry, merchant in Glasgow. He was a contemporary of the author of 'Scotland Yet' and so sometimes confused with him.

He originally trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to James Thomson and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1811. He resigned his Commission in 1825 and retrained as a minister, being licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1829, ordained at Longformacus in 1830 and translated to Duns in 1843. In 1818 he married Agnes, daughter of Archibald Gilchrist of Edinburgh. In 1831 he secondly married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of John Home of Stirkoke in Caithness. Rev. Henry Scott (1798–1870) minister and songwriter. He was born at Sorbie in Ewesdale (and there is some confusion over the year of his birth), his parents Robert Riddell and Agnes Scott, being from Teviotdale. His father was a shepherd, who moved from Sorbie to Langshawburn in Eskdalemuir (when he was a child), later moving to Capplefoot (Hoddam Parish) then Deloraine in Selkirkshire. He had brothers who later lived at Dryden, near Selkirk, and Brookside in East Lothian (this elder brother moving to Ramsaycleuchburn). He was educated in short stints at Davington, Robertson and Newmill and heard James Hogg, the 'Ettrick Shepherd' singing in his house when he was a child. He was said to have an amazing memory, allowing him to recall songs and ballads after hearing them just once. At about age 15 he became shepherd at Deloraine and while there started to scribble in a diary. He wrote some satires on people who had offended him and although he kept them under his hat, they blew away and some were read by the very subjects of the pieces, causing him to be reprimanded by his employer. After 2 or 3 years he moved to Todrig, where he got to know William Knox. After his father died, when he was 18, he resolved to study for the ministry, and so attended Biggar School and later Edinburgh University (and St. Andrews for a year), eventually being licensed by Biggar Presbytery in 1830. It was at Biggar that he became to be known as a poet, publishing 'The Crook and the Plaid', and several articles for 'The Clydesdale Magazine'. Before finishing with university he published 'The Songs of the Ark', which represents his longest poetic work on a single theme. He moved to live with his brother at Ramsaycleuchburn (near Teviothead) in 1831. After the local minister died, he was appointed as preacher at Caerlenrig Chapel of Ease (i.e. Teviothead Church) in 1832 (or perhaps 1833). He stayed at the Flex in his early years, walking 9 miles to church, and writing several songs there, including 'The Hames of Our Ain Folk'. The Duke of Buccleuch later built him a cottage at Teviothead, where he remained for the rest of his life (and where he died). He was listed at Caerlenrig in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1839 he helped with the description of Cavers Parish, written by Rev. Strachan for the New Statistical Account. In 1841 he suffered what would later be called a nervous breakdown, and spent more than 3 years in the Crichton Royal Institution at Dumfries (he was missing for the 1841 census). He then returned to Teviothead, but continue to be affected by depression, he did not resume his full ministerial duties, with other preachers taking over some of his duties until the first minister of the newly created Teviothead Parish was appointed in 1850. In 1844 he published a doctrinal volume, and in 1847 he published a volume of collected verse, as well as an extensive essay on the Ettrick Shepherd (with a later article for the Hawick Archæological Transactions). Many of his poems, written at Teviothead, were first published in the Hawick Advertiser. In later years he became involved with the Border Counties Association, became interested in local archæological excavations and wrote about Cavers Parish for the Sinclair's 'Statistical Account of Scotland'. He took part in several events in Hawick, including the Burns Centenary, laying the foundation stone of the Old Parish Church, giving lectures, and awarding the prizes for the Auld Brig poetry competition. He was also Bard for the St. John's Masonic Lodge of Hawick, and his masonic brethren visit Teviothead annually to remember him. He was presented with a harp (inspired by the lines of 'Scotland Yet') by Bailie Paterson in 1859 (and this is now in the Museum). William Scott also presented Mrs. Riddell with an oil painting of her husband (perhaps the portrait by John A. Horsburgh, which is in the Museum). Another portrait (by Lancelot Watson in 1889) hangs in the Museum, which also has his home-made compass and caliper set, as well as his shepherd's crook. He was still recorded at Teviothead Cottage in a directory of 1868. His attempts at biblical translation into Lowland Scots (printed privately for Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte) were an early philological influence on James Murray. The volumes comprise the Gospel of Matthew, the Psalms and the Song of Solomon; they seem far from being pure samples of local speech, but are nevertheless invaluable since they come from decades before most published examples of the Hawick area dialect. He was writer of the words for 'Scotland Yet', probably Scotland's most popular song of the latter half of the 19th century, and considered by many as the national anthem of its day (and recorded by Scocha in 2004). His publications include 'Stanzas on the Death of Lord Byron' (1825), 'Songs of the Ark; with other poems' (1832), 'The Christian Politician; or the Right Way of Thinking' (1844), 'Poems, Songs and Miscellaneous Pieces' (1847), 'St. Matthew translated into Lowland Scotch' (1856), 'Book of Psalms in Lowland Scotch' (1857), 'The Song of Solomon in Lowland Scotch' (1858), 'The Poetical Works of Henry Scott Riddell' (2 volumes, 1871) and 'Scotland Yet and Other Verses' (1898). His translations of biblical passages into 'Lowland Scotch' are interesting for the wealth of dialect words that they contain; however, with little precedent to build on, the translations are a strange mixture of genuine Borders vernacular, words taken from earlier Scots works and oddly spelled English. His verses 'Woman', 'Hail Scotland – Doughty Auld Scotland', 'Walk the Wuds wi' me, Mary', 'Will ye Gang to the Greenwood wi' me?' and 'The Green Forest Dell' were published in 'Living Bards of the Border' (1859); this was the most from any one contributor. In all, he composed over 200 songs, with manuscripts unpublished at his death including 'Malcolm of Wharden', 'Melvina of Eller' and 'The Dutiful Daughter', this last being a play in 5 acts. In addition he published an article on 'Store-Farming in the South of Scotland' and another on 'Foot-rot in Sheep'. In 1833 he married Eliza (1796–1875), daughter of William Clark, merchant in Biggar. Their children were: Walter Francis Montagu Douglas (1834–77), obviously named after his patron, who worked for the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank; William Brown Clark (1836–56), who was a poet of some promise, but died at the age of 20; and Robert H. (c.1840–87), who was a sheep-farmer in Australia; His own death came fairly suddenly, his last letter being an apology for being unable to attend the meeting of the Border Counties Association held in Hawick 2 days before he died. He was described as 'striking, tall in stature, a large head adorned with long weird locks flowing down over broad shoulders, impressed even the most casual passer-by'; but he was also 'shy and modest in bearing and conversation'. A photographic portrait of him exists and a bust is in Lodge 111. A 50 ft (13 m) high conical memorial cairn on the slopes of Dryden Fell above Teviothead is visible from the A7, erected in 1874, repaired in 1926 and renovated in 1999. Centenary celebration were held in Hawick and at Sorbie in 1898, and a plaque was placed there by the Callants' Club in 1928. He died at

Dryden Cottage, which also has a commemorative plaque, placed there in 1898 by Lodge 111 – ‘...Her own loved Teviot, ripple, onwards clear. She prayed with zeal – the listening gods gave ear, And sent a hand to set her hill-harp free. Who was the minstrel? Riddell, it was thee’ [JoHa], ‘Henry Riddell is a name Puir auld Hawick might fairly claim, ‘Scotland Yet’, a nation’s pride Was inspired by scenes that bide ‘Mang the hills o’ Teviotside, Rich auld Hawick’ [TK], ‘A sigh on every breeze is borne, That whispers through the vale, The wimpling waters seem to mourn the Bard of Teviotdale’ [JT]. Henry Philip Archibald (1819–89) 4th son of Sir John Buchanan. He was born posthumously, like his father. He worked with the Indian Service, rising to the rank of General and served as Post Office Director for India. He was awarded the Star of India. Hugh (12th/13th C.) possibly the 2nd son of Sir Auskitel and brother of Walter. He is recorded as ‘Hug Ridel’ during the reign of William I, when he was witness to a document for the Diocese of Glasgow, regarding lands in Ashkirk Parish. He was ‘Hugone Ridel’ when he witnessed another charter of William I and one for the church of ‘inchethor’. He was probably the Hugh who was one of the hostages for the ransom of King William, after he was captured at Alnwick in 1174. He donated the church of Cranston to Kelso Abbey in about 1190, and is stated by some accounts to be the progenitor of the Riddells of Cranston-Riddell. Probably the same ‘Hugone ridal’ witnessed an earlier charter in the reign of King Malcolm and one from about 1151 for the Church of Brinkburne. Hugh of Wittering (d.bef. 1233) owner of lands in Northamptonshire. He is recorded receiving sasine of ‘Witeringa’ in 1188. His widow Sibilla was involved in land claims in 1233 and 1254. His son and heir was probably Richard, who was recorded being ‘in the power of the King of Scotland’ in 1233. He could be the ‘Hugh Ridel’ who witnessed a document (around 1206–14) for Earl David (later King of Scotland), regarding lands gifted to a church in London. Hugh (13th C.) recorded in 1236 when William Avenel made a claim against him for fees from lands in ‘Midel-tun’. It is unclear where this was, or how he was related to other Riddells. Sir Hugh (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls of 1296, where he is listed as ‘Dominus Hugo Rydel, miles’. He is probably the 2nd son of Geoffrey, who succeeded to the estates of the main branch of the English Riddells on the death of his brother, also Geoffrey. He also held the lands of Cranston in Scotland.

It appears that for staying too long in Scotland, King Edward II took away his lands of Wittering and gave them to his son Geoffrey. However, he had other lands in Northumberland, obtained from his kinsman Sir William. He is probably the ‘Master Hugh de Rydale’ who is recorded in a Northumberland document of 1270. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Huwe Rydel’ in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. From Edinburgh, his entry is separate from ‘Dominus Hugo’. But he could be the same man as the entry for ‘Hughe Rydel, tenant le Roi, du Comte de Edeneburgh’. His seal consists of ‘a pile in base and a chief’ with the name ‘S’HVGONIS RYDEL’. Sir Hugh (13th/14th C.) holder of the manor of ‘Wytering’ (i.e. Wittering) in Northamptonshire. He granted it to his son and heir Geoffrey in 1296, but was dispossessed in 1296 as a supporter of John Baliol, when he was ‘in Scotland’. He is probably the ‘Hugh de Rydal’ when he was involved in a raid on a house in Berwick in 1296. He was involved with the wars in Scotland, being in Dunbar in 1300/1 and also in Galloway and at Falkirk. In 1305 he petitioned Edward I for the return of his lands of Wittering, which his son Geoffrey had destroyed, and while ‘his Scottish lands are in the enemy’s hand’. Probably the same ‘Sir Hugh Ridel’ was recorded in 1310/1 when his wife Mary Comyn asked for support for her and her family at Berwick. In 1315 he was ‘Rydel, sometime lord of Wytering’ when his grant to his son was confirmed by Edward II. He granted Wittering to his son Geoffrey in 1316. He may be the same as one of the Hughs who signed the Ragman Rolls. He was probably the Hugh son of Richard recorded at Newcastle in a plea for lands in Cumberland in 1269. He may have been grandson of the Hugh, whose widow Sibilla was recorded in document relating to ‘Wyterine’ in Northamptonshire in 1233 and 1254. He may be the Sir Hugh who died in 1318, a pensioner of the house of Wenlock. Hugh (14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1329, where he is ‘Hugoni de Ridell’ and ‘Hugoni Ridale’. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Sir Hugh (d.1363) son of Geoffrey, from whom he inherited the family lands of Montclare, Wittering and others in Northamptonshire. In 1335 he petitioned to recover the Scottish lands of Cranston lost by his father. He died without issue, whereupon his lands were inherited by Sir Nicholas, whose grandfather Sir Nicholas was his grandfather’s brother. After that the representative of this main family line was Sir John, who did briefly recover

Cranston, but must have sold or list it shortly afterwards. At this point the senior branch of the family in Scotland became the Riddells of that Ilk, based in Lilliesleaf. Hugh (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1534 as 'sir Hugh Riddaill'. He was presumably a cleric of some sort. Isobel (17th C.) daughter of James, portioner of Lilliesleaf and wife of Adam Haig in Belses. In 1656 she was served heir to her father in his 16-shilling land within Lilliealeaf. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. James of that Ilk (d.c.1510) probably grandson of Quentin or perhaps Mungo, or perhaps son of Mungo and grandson of Quentin. He also had a brother, Thomas. His ancestry can be traced back to 'Geraius de Rydale', who married Christiana de Soulis in the early 12th century; but from this point on the genealogy is much more secure. He was one of the first of the family to be referred to as 'of that Ilk', although the lands near Lilliesleaf were in the family for many previous generations. In 1471 he inherited the lands of 'Quhittounis' (i.e. 'Whitton' near Morebattle) and 'Westerlillisclef' (i.e. Wester Lilliesleaf). He is probably the 'James Riddale' who was witness to a Cranston sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6 and the 'James Riddale' who witnessed the 'retour' for the Kers and the lands of Borthwickshiels in 1471. In 1477/8 he made an arrangement with John Waugh, over the lands of 'Unerquhitone', clearing debts with William Pringle; James kept Under Whitton, while John received lease of a 'husbandland' of land in 'Esterleleselef'. In 1478/9 Margaret Murray resigned her lands of 'Unirquhitone' to him. And in 1478 he is referred to as 'of that Ilk' when he leased 'Plewolande' in 'Ovirquytoun' to John Davidson in return for borrowing money. He also witnessed a charter to David, son of David Scott of Buccleuch for lands in Selkirk in 1478. In 1479 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Cessford. In 1483 he is recorded as 'Riddale of Quhittowne' when witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains. An instrument of resignation of 1485 is recorded for the lands of 'Unerquhittone' with the Davidsons. He also witnessed a sasine in 1487 for the lands of Boonraw. In 1489, along with Walter Ker of Cessford, he had a decree against him for not paying the teinds to Lilliesleaf Kirk. He was recorded as Laird of Riddell and Whitton in 1493 and in that same year was the Laird fined for non-presence at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with Gilbert 'Hoigson' acting as his suitor. In 1494 he was 'Jacobum Riddale de Quhittoun' on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He may have married Margaret, daughter of Sir James Lindsay. His children were: John, who succeeded; Margaret (d.1585), who married Walter Scott of Synton or perhaps Walter of Harden; and Christian, who also appears to have married Walter Scott of Harden. It also seems that there was a slightly earlier marriage between a widow of Riddell (said to have been a Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably Elizabeth) and a Scott of Harden; these marriages between Riddells and Scotts of Harden could be conflated. James (16th C.) younger son of John of that Ilk. A document in the Selkirk Protocol Books records how in 1545 he gave 30 shillings of land and half the houses of 'le ester place' (perhaps Easter Lilliesleaf) in liferent to his wife Janet Ker. The witnesses included George Ker of Gateshaw (probably related to his wife) and Walter (heir apparent to John of that Ilk). James (16th C.) recorded in Clerklands in 1563 when his son Robert witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. This was for William Davidson and made by Walter of that Ilk, who was probably a relative. James (16th C.) tenant in Maxton. In 1580 it is recorded that he had borrowed money from John in Newton Mill, but was unable to repay it, so with the consent of his wife Janet Ormiston and son Patrick, he gave sasine of half of St. Boswell's Mill to John. The instrument was signed at Riddell, before Robert, brother to Walter of that Ilk, and so it seems likely they were all related. On the same day in 1580 he also delivered £40 in redemption money to Robert, brother of Walter of that Ilk. The sasine was witnessed before David in St. Boswell's and William in Maxton. James of Maybole (17th C.) 3rd son of Andrew of that Ilk. It is unclear if his lands were at Maybole in Dumfriesshire or somewhere else. It has been suggested that he might have been ancestor of Robert, father of Rev. Henry Scott Riddell. James (d.bef. 1656) portioner of Lilliesleaf. In 1656 his daughter and heir Isobel, wife of Adam Haig in Belses, inherited his 16-shilling land within Lilliealeaf. James (17th C.) probably son of Walter, portioner of Bewlie, who resided at Appotside in the Rule valley. He was witness to discharges of Hobkirk teinds in 1659 and in 1660, when he was described as 'of Harrit' (presumably 'Harwood'). In another document he signed as 'son lawfull to Elispethe Haistie in Harwood'. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick who married Janet Miller. Their children included Margaret (b.1646) and Bessie (b.1648). In 1648 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas. James (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. James (17th C.) shepherd at 'Bosathill' (i.e. Bowset Hill) in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was 'deficient' in paying the tax, and his entry reads 'to England'. James (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1694 his widow Bessie Scott was leasing a third of the farm of Wiltonburn; she may have been closely related to Robert Scott and John Scott, who were also farmers at Wiltonburn in 1694. In 1734 there is a record of the funeral of Bessie, who may have been his daughter (or wife). James (17th C.) recorded near Larriston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths, since he was recorded having a kiln. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn when he got married in 1718 (with no wife's name listed). Perhaps the same James, married to Bessie Scott had children Bessie (b.1726) and Margaret (b.1728) were baptised in Wilton. James (18th C.) wright at Branhholme Park. He was there according to a Robertson baptism in 1737. In 1740 he was at 'Park' when he witnessed a Hawick baptism for William Brown and Helen Riddell (who may have been related to him). His children included Walter (b.1737), baptised in Robertson. His unnamed child was baptised in Hawick in 1740, with witnesses herd James Armstrong and John Brown. It is possible that he was the James who married Isobel Dryden in Robertson in 1732. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Deanburnhaugh in 1727 and 1729 and Borthwickbrae in 1734. In 1726 he married Isobel Williamson, who was from Stow. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, probably included some of (with the rest likely being children of the wright at Branhholme Park): Thomas (b.1727); William (b.1729); Robert (b.1731); Helen (b.1733); Nelie (b.1734), although this baptismal entry appears to be crossed out; Margaret (b.1734); James (b.1735). James (18th C.) recorded at Menslaws in 1746 when his son William was baptised in Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Laidlaw. The witnesses were mason Andrew Wilson and merchant Francis Gledstains. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Elliot and was at Priesthill in 1777 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Col. James (d.1804) son of Sir Walter. He served in the army in Holland. He was entered onto the Roxburghshire voters' roll in 1780, when listed as a Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1788 he was listed with the same rank and 'In the service of Holland' among the voters of Roxburghshire associated with Sir John Scott of Ancrum (suggesting that he was given freehold of some land in order to vote in the county). He was later factor of the Riddell estates. He could be the James who is recorded owning half of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1788. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Tinlin and their children included: Helen (b.1762); Walter (b.1764); John (b.1766); John (again, b.1771); and Margaret (b.1779). He could be the same James as the farmer at Leaheads. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Liddesdale. It is said that the family lived on the banks of the Liddel for many generations, and were related to the other Roxburghshire branches. His children were: James (b.1781), who emigrated to Canada; Henry; William; and Thomas. If the birthdate of the elder son is confused, then he could be the James who married Janet Elliot and whose children James (b.1791) and Henry (b.1794) are recorded in Castleton. Sir James Buchanan (1765–84) 8th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his brother Sir Walter. He was a Lieutenant in the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards, but drowned while swimming in the River Brunswick at age 19 after being Baronet for only a few months. He was succeeded by his brother Sir John Buchanan. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Leaheads in Wilton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. His servant William Tait was recorded on the 1801 Militia ballot. James (b.1781) son of Liddesdale shepherd James. If his birth date was really 1791, then he could be the son of James and Janet Elliot recorded in Castleton Parish. He joined the army and lived in Berwickshire. He married Isabella, daughter of George Hogg (and army officer) and Margaret Van Buren (from Hackensack, New Jersey). He was living at Ednam in 1835 when he emigrated to Canada with his family. His children included: James Van Buren, who died young; George Hogg, who also died young; and Dr. Alexander Dow (b.1824), who became a doctor in Compton, Quebec. James Scott (1780/1–1835) resident of Castleton Parish. He died at Larriston Rigg and was buried in Castleton. His children Isabella (1809/10–37) and John (d.1837) died of smallpox on board the Cornubria on the coast of New Brunswick. James (19th C.) married Isabel Lillico in Hobkirk Parish in 1826. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Rae and their children included: John (b.1817); James (b.1819); William (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); and Margaret (b.1831). James (b.1807/8–bef. 61) born in Castleton, he was an agricultural labourer at Lochburnfoot in 1851. He married Jane (or Jean, b.1809), daughter of Castleton shepherd James Elliot. Their children included: Janet (b.1831); Eliza (1833–81), who married Andrew Stark; Christian (b.1835); William (b.1839); Mary (b.1842); James (b.1845), who married Jessie Scott; and Jane (b.1855). His wife was a widow living at Calaburn in 1861. James (19th C.) married Agnes Scoon in 1849, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. James (b.1836) son of John Lamb and Agnes Riddell, he was born at Timpendean. He was a grocer, butcher and farmer in the Morebattle area and later moved to Newcastleton. In 1867 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Cavers, carter in Newcastleton. Their children were Adam, Violet Turnbull, Agnes Isabella, Elizabeth Jane, Margaret and Robina Cavers. James (b.1839/40) son of John and Lillias McAllister. He was a frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Wallace and Helen Waugh. James (b.1845) son of James and Jean Elliot, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish. He was a ploughman in Lilliesleaf and later a carter in Edinburgh. In Cavers Parish in 1866 he married Jessie (1844–99), daughter of James Scott and Agnes Bell. Their children were Agnes Giles (b.1867), James (b.1869), Jane (b.1871), Robert (b.1874), Janet (b.1874), Elizabeth (b.1880) and William (b.1886). Janet (17th C.) listed as resident at Wiltonburn among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Jean (1600–60) daughter of Andrew of that ilk. She died unmarried and was buried in Jedburgh Abbey, with the inscription ‘Here lies a religious and virtuous gentlewoman, Jean Riddell, daughter of Sir Andrew Riddell of that ilk, ...’. Jean (b.c.1655) eldest daughter of Walter of Minto. She married Sir Robert Laurie, 1st Baronet of Maxwellton. They had 3 sons and 4 daughters, one of whom, Annie, was famed for her beauty. William Douglas of Fingland composed the verses ‘Annie Laurie’ in her honour in about 1700 (but failed to woo her, since she married Alexander Ferguson of Craigdarroch). Jean ‘Jeannie Ma Lord’ (18th/19th C.) married name of Jean Oliver. John (d.bef. 1235) recorded in a plea of 1235, relating to lands in Buckinghamshire, involving his wife’s dower lands in ‘Hadeccote’. His wife was ‘Hauwysia’ and his son and heir was Geoffrey. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem de Ridel’ in the assize roll of Northumberland in 1256. This was regarding a piece of land in Denton on the Tyne, which had also belonged to his father John. ‘Ela, uxor Johannis de Rydale’ is also recorded separately, and so either his wife or wife of another John. In the same records ‘Walterus de Chendal’ is accused of striking his servant, who was also called ‘Johannem de Ridal’. About the same time there was also a court case involving his mother ‘Hawysia de Newenham’ and her lands in ‘Rodewood’. John of Ayton (13th C.) recorded as witness to several charters involving the lands of Renton and Ayton in Berwickshire in about 1280. It is unclear how he was related to other early Riddells. John (d.c.1328) Scotsman who forfeited lands in ‘Graystok’ in Cumberland according to a document of 1358. It was stated that ‘his heirs dwell in Scotland, and at the time of his death were adherents of the Scots, and still are’. John (15th C.) resident of lands in Lauder, recorded in 2 charters of 1501. John of that ilk (d.c.1545) son of James. In 1502 he was ‘junior of that ilk’ when listed along with Douglasses and others from the Jedburgh area as people guilty of (and with remission for) attacking Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. In 1503 he had sasine for the lands of Whitton and Wester Lilliesleaf. In 1507/8 he was a witness to the document for Scott of Whitchester relating to the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He may be the ‘Larde of Riddale’ who was on an assize in 1508/9 for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. He was a witness in 1529 to the indenture to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. He may also be the John who in 1529/30 witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton by Robert Elliot ‘alias Flaskvod’. In 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. He was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 as one of 2 arbiters for Walter Scott in Headshaw’s dispute with Isabel Murray. He granted part of the land at Lilliesleaf to Patrick Earl Bothwell in 1534. Also in 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. In 1535 he was witness to a charter of George, Lord Hume, confirming the lands of Harden to William Scott of Harden, and was also witness to Simon Scott of Fenwick resigning Nether Harden to William Scott of Harden in 1540. In 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam Scott. He may be the Riddell of that Ilk who married Elizabeth Ker of Fairnilee (who later married William Scott of Harden and Todrig). He was possibly succeeded by his son George or his grandson Walter, but these generations are unclear. Documents of 1533 and 1535 list George as his heir apparent, while in 1545 (according to the Selkirk Protocol Book) his heir was then Walter (who must have been either his younger son, or son of George, and hence his grandson). His younger son James (who married Janet Ker) is also recorded in 1545. In 1551 the lands of Bewlie went to William, brother of his heir Walter; it is unclear whether he was already deceased at this time. Other possible children included John and William. In 1579 at Riddell his son Walter witnessed a transaction between Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter Scott of Todrig, with his son Robert also a witness; the same day another son of his, Andrew, made an arrangement with Walter Scott of Todrig, with Andrew's wife Margaret Ker, and her mother Elizabeth Ker, also mentioned. John (16th C.) son of John of that Ilk. In 1522 he succeeded George Riddell (probably his uncle or other near relative) as Clerk of Lilliesleaf Parish, as confirmed by James Beaton, Archbishop of Glasgow. This means he was acting as assistant Priest, or at least held a small benefice for this position. John (16th C.) recorded in 1580 being formerly in Ashkirk Mill when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) tenant in Newton Mill. In 1580 it is recorded James in Maxton had borrowed money from him, but was unable to repay it, so with the consent of his wife and son, James gave him sasine of half of St. Boswell's Mill. The instrument was signed at Riddell, before Robert, brother to Walter of that Ilk, and so it seems likely they were all related. He was in Newton when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He may be the John in Dryburgh Mill recorded in Selkirk in 1581. In 1581 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Elizabeth and Thomas Cochrane, who was also in Newton. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recorded in Lilliesleaf Mill in 1580 when he witnessed a marriage contract between Isabel, daughter of George in Lilliesleaf and George Rutherford in Bewlie. John (16th C.) son of George in Lilliesleaf. In 1580 he witnessed the marriage contract for his sister Isabel. Sir John 1st Baronet of Riddell (d.1636) eldest son of Andrew of that Ilk. In 1602 his father resigned lands in Lilliesleaf to him and his wife. In 1611 he was cautioner for Robert Davidson in 'Fallawis' and for Andrew Turnbull of Stanedge. In 1610 he and his father had a bond not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshaw) and other Scotts. In 1616 he had an inhibition from the Lords of Council regarding lands in Hownam. In 1617 he and his father were appointed to a 3-man panel to try some Elliots for sheep stealing. He was still 'apparent of that Ilk' in 1619 when he complained about a dispute in Morebattle Kirk. He was a juror at the 1623 Commissioners' Court when he was still 'appeirand of yat ilk', and was voted as 'chancellor' of the assize. He was probably the 'Riddell, appeirand of that Ilk' who was appointed as a new Commissioner for the Middle Shires in 1618. In 1623-24 he was involved in a court case over teinds for the lands of Over Whitton. In 1624 he was foreman of a jury in Edinburgh for a Liddesdale cattle-stealing case. In 1628 he was 'apparent of that Ilk' when charged to be part of a local Commission to hold courts. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1628, with his lands erected into a barony and regality of New Riddell (comprising 16,000 acres on the Island of Anticosti in the Gulf of St. Lawrence). Also in 1628 he was one of the major landowners of Roxburghshire who convened to elect M.Ps., his name recorded as 'Jhone Riddell fear of that Ilk', his father still being the Laird of Riddell. These proceedings were quite protracted, and he even refused to serve when selected. In 1600 he married Agnes, daughter of Sir John Murray of Eddleston and Blackbarony; the husbands of her sisters included the Earl of Ancrum, Patrick Murray of Phgiliphaugh and Sir Patrick Scott of Thirlestane. Their children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Capt. John, an officer in the army in Holland; Sir William, who became Governor of Desborough or Doesburgh in Holland; Thomas; and Ann, who married Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre. He secondly married Jane, daughter of Sir James Anstruther, widow of James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose Abbey; they had one daughter, who married David Barclay of Colernie. One of his daughters may have married John Scott of Gorrenberry. John of Muselee (17th C.) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s, also holding the lands of Bewlie. He was son of William and Bessie Ainslie and grandson of Andrew of that Ilk, and was served heir to his father in 1653. He was recorded paying £100 in land tax in Hawick Parish in 1663;

he may also be the John who paid tax on £52 in Lilliesleaf Parish for part of Cringles. In 1665 his tenant John Dodds made an agreement with the tenants of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) over the boundaries between them. He had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1653 and 1662. He was also recorded in 4 deeds in 1663. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Selkirkshire for raising money for the King. Also in 1678 he paid the land tax on Muselee in Hawick Parish and on part of Bewlie (formerly owned by the Turnbells) in Lilliesleaf Parish. He appears to have married Elizabeth Haliburton in 1639 and only a few years later married Grezil, daughter of Rev. P. Schew. His children included William (who probably died young) and Patrick (who succeeded). He also had 3 daughters. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Donaldson and their children included Janet (b.1679). John (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He is listed along with Andrew, to whom he was presumably related. In 1691 he and Andrew witnessed a baptism for Walter Murray, who also lived at Dryden. He and Andrew witnessed another baptism for Daniel Kedie in 1694. In 1698 he is recorded as 'Elder in Dryden'. He married Janet Matheson and their children included Jean (b.1698). John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw Mill in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among the 'deficient who can not be found out'. He may be the same John in Headshaw Mill who was also listed among 'ye poor'. He may be the John who (along with James Kennedy, who lived at Ashkirk Mill) witnessed a baptism for William Donald in 1690. John (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir John 3rd Baronet of Riddell (d.1700) son of Sir Walter. He was sometimes referred to as 'Bluebeard' because he had 4 wives. He was served heir to his father (and grandfather Sir John) in 1669, including several lands in Lilliesleaf Parish and elsewhere. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Morebattle and Hownam Parishes, as well as tax on land valued at £1765 in Lilliesleaf Parish (having sold Riddell Mill, but purchased lands from the feuars of Lilliesleaf). In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He was apparently a zealous Covenanter, being imprisoned (in the Tolbooth of Haddington) for his principles, and probably also for supporting his brother, Rev. Archibald. In 1684 he was fined the most of any Roxburghshire heritor, the huge sum of £52,000. However, he received a remission from the King in 1687. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He was also appointed as an additional Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. an M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1690 and served until his death. He married Agnes, daughter of Gideon Scott of Highchester and Harden in 1659. She received lands in Whitton 'in liferent' from his father in 1659. She must not have survived long, since in 1661 he secondly married Helen, daughter of Sir Alexander Morrison of Preston Grange; they had a son and a daughter together. He thirdly Margaret Swinton of that Ilk, with whom he had another son and daughter. And lastly the widow of Watt of Rosehill, formerly Miss Hepburn (this only about a year before his death). His children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Christian, who married Henry, eldest son of Sir Patrick Nisbet of Dean; William (d.1700), who died without children; and Margaret. He may also have had a daughter Helen, who married Robert Kerr of Cavers Carre, and another son, Alexander. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) listed as cottar at Mervinslaw among the 'deficient' on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) listed 'eist the water' among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for wright Francis Gledstains in 1682, and another for Walter Lorraine and Bessie Riddell (who was probably related to him). He may be the John who in 1683 witnessed as baptism for James Brydon and Agnes Riddell. He could be the John who married Anna Agnes Dickson, and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1679), Robert (b.1681), Helen (b.1684) and Walter (b.1686). John of Haining (d.bef. 1696) son of Andrew of Haining and grandson of the first Riddell (of Riddell) to hold the Haining estate. He was served heir to his father in 1643. He was recorded in the county valuation in 1643, his part of Bewlie being valued at £390. In 1659 there was a dispute with Selkirk over 'whether corn and wood cut on the Common was for the use of English soldiers'. In 1660 there was a complaint about a servant of his taking divots from Selkirk Common. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. He was appointed Justice of the Peace in 1663 and Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Selkirkshire in 1665. He is probably the Laird of Haining recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, along with his mother, when they paid tax on £390 in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was Sheriff Principal and also Provost of Selkirk. In 1667 he was involved in a dispute over rights on Selkirk Common and there was a 'bond of inhibition' with the Burgh. In 1671 he made an agreement for setting up a stud of horses for the King's use. He was recorded in deeds in 1673 (with his brother Walter also mentioned). He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1678, 1685 and 1690. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. In late 1684 he was 'playing at the curling' with William Scott, younger of Harden and others, when William escaped from the soldiers who had been sent to apprehend him. His grand-daughter Magdalene married David Erskine of Dun and sold the estate to the Pringles. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, who was served as his heir in 1696. John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was taxed for three hearths, since he was 'wt tuo kilns'. This suggests he was a miller or some other kind of tradesman. He was probably related to Walter, who was at Whithope Mill in at least 1714–29. John of Muselee (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Patrick and Maria Elliot. He is recorded in a document of 1710 involving an exchange of the lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish with John Nisbet. In 1707 he and John Nisbet were assigned a new loft in Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1715 and 1716 he witnessed baptisms for Alexander Scott of Synton. In 1706 in Ashkirk Parish he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Walter Riddell from Lilliesleaf, who was tenant farmer at North Synton. Their children were: Patrick (b.1707), who succeeded; Walter (b.1709); Andrew; William (b.1713), who moved to Berwick, where he became a successful merchant; Barbara (b.1715); John (b.1717); Alexander (b.1719), baptised at North Synton; James (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); Thomas (b.1724), who was also a merchant in Berwick; and an unnamed daughter. He is probably the John 'of Mewslie' recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. John (17th/18th C.) farmer at Minto Mill, probably related to the local Lairds. He is recorded in 1710 when his son Patrick became a barber's apprentice in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Salenside in 1710 when his son James was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1710. Perhaps the same James was at Borthaugh in 1712 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Robertson Parish. Anna (b.1701), baptised in Robertson, may also have been his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthwickhaugh in 1703 when someone was ordered by the session to marry his daughter Margaret. He could be the tenant in Mabonlaw who witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains in 1709. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a servant in Commonsides in 1708. He married Janet Young and their children included: Robert (b.1708); an unnamed child (b.1719); Walter (b.1722); Janet (b.1726). The witnesses in 1708 were James Grieve and Walter Purdom in Commonsides. John (17th/18th C.) recorded living in Branhholme Town in 1713. He married Janet Turnbull and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1713, with witnesses Robert Thomson and Henry Orrock. John (17th/18th C.) miller, probably at Newmill. In 1724 he was witness to a Hawick Parish baptism there. He may be the John who married Mary Scott and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1724) and Walter (b.1726). The witnesses in 1726 were William and Robert Thomson (perhaps the tenants at Newmill). John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1731 and Harden in 1733 and 1736. His children included Agnes (b.1731), Henry (b.1733) and Margaret (b.1736). John (18th C.) tenant in Whithope Mill. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1765. He was surely related to Walter, who was there in the 1710s and Walter who was there in the 1770s. John (d.bef. 1747) eldest son of Sir Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He was an advocate and said to be highly accomplished. He died before his father, so that his younger brother (also Sir Walter) succeeded to Riddell. He is probably the John, younger of Riddell, who in 1727 was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. Sir John (d.1768) 6th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding from his father Walter, his elder brother Walter having died first. He was a merchant in Curacao, returning on his father Walter's death. He was 'of that Ilk junior' in 1761 when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire. In 1762 he married Jane Buchanan, daughter and heiress of James Buchanan from Sundon, Bedfordshire; he granted her a bond of provision for lands in Riddell in 1768, and she died in 1798. In 1772 he succeeded to the Buchanan estates on the death of his wife's brother. He died at Hamstead in Middlesex, after being Baronet for only about 3 years, leaving a young family. His children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Sir James Buchanan, who succeeded his brother; and

Sir John Buchanan, born posthumously, who also succeeded to Riddell. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1768. After his death his wife, referred to as Dame Jane Riddell, still held rights over part of the estate. She must have been the Lady Riddell who was recorded in 1794 paying the tax for having 4 male servants at Riddell. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His wife was Jean Scott and their children included: Mary (b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); Janet (b.1755); William (b.1757); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1745 were mason David Laing and merchant George Scott. It is possible he is also the John, married to Jean Scott, whose son John was baptised in Ashkirk in 1744. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Winthrope and their children included John (b.1771), Mary (b.1774), George (b.1776), Margaret (b.1780) and William (b.1783). John (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Stoddart in Wilton Parish in 1770 and she died in 1782. Their children included Helen (b.1772) and Margaret (b.1774). John (18th C.) farmer at Newton in Kirkton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–89. His daughter Maragret was born in 1786 and son John in 1787. John (18th C.) resident in Catslack in 1794 when he was recorded in Selkirk in a dispute over non-payment of a bill. John (b.1758) son of Frank, he was born in Hawick. He was a gardener and also sexton (but it is not clear for which church). In 1780 he married Peggy Parris and they had 12 children: Ann (b.1784), who died young; Isabella (b.1786), who also died young; Janet (b.1788), who married Michael Dryden; Francis (b.1792), who married Euphemia Scott, drove a mail coach for about 19 years, and died in Northumberland; Isabella (b.1795), died young; James (b.1797), who married Janet Rae and worked as a coachman; Adam (b.1798), who married Martha Leatherhead and moved to Edinburgh; John (b.1801), who was killed in a threshing mill at the age of 19; Jean (b.1804), who married John Watson from Selkirk; Katherine (b.1806), who married weaver John Fairgreaves and emigrated to Bridgeton, Maine; John (again, b.1809), who worked as a coachman and married Barbara Hall; Mary (b.1810), who died young. He may be the John recorded in Hawick in 1791 in a letter preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. John (18th C.) recorded at Fastcastle in 1791 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Jean

(b.1793), Agnes (b.1795), Margaret (b.1797) and Anne (b.1800). Sir John Buchanan (1768–1819) 9th Baronet of Riddell, youngest son of John the 6th Baronet, being born posthumously. He succeeded from his 2 elder brothers. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of the Riddell estate, as well as Cringles and Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish and Whitton in Hownam Parish. He was said to be a man of elegant, but stiff manners, and who was a benefactor of the working classes. He was known as a keen agriculturalist with ambitious ideas, some of which led to the ruin rather than improvement of the Riddell estate. More than 300 acres of trees were planted during his time as Laird, 3 gate lodges were built and 2 new approaches to the estate. Both he and Lady Riddell (presumably his mother) were listed in the Carriage Tax Roll of 1792/3 and 1797/8 and paid tax for male servants and horses in 1794 and 1797. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of no fewer than 39 farm horses, as well as 5 carriage or saddle horses (with Lady Riddell listed separately in 1794, with 4 carriage horses). He also paid tax for having 9 non-working dogs at Riddell in 1797. Also in 1797 he was in trouble following an allegation from a soldier who had robbed him that Riddell had made ‘a beastly suggestion’ to him. He served on the Militia committee for Roxburghshire in at least 1797–1801. He purchased Wheatfield House, Hepple, from the Duke of Portland in 1804. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He tried to seek support from the Duke of Buccleuch to stand as an M.P. in Roxburghshire or Selkirkshire. He was eventually elected M.P. for Linlithgow Burghs 1812–19. However, he was not a very regular attendee in Parliament and never took part in debates. In about 1803 he raised 64 volunteers in the Parishes of Lilliesleaf and Bowden; he was later Colonel of the 2nd Regiment of Roxburghshire local militia, based at Kelso. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He still owned the lands of Over Whitton and others in Hownam Parish according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811; he also owned the lands of Bank, Riddell Mains, Clerklands, Greatlaws, Cringles, Hoglairburn and parts of other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was a major heritor of Ashkirk Parish, as recorded in a complaint of 1814 about payment for work done on the Manse. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. Sir Walter Scott stated that he ‘bored everybody to death’. In 1805 he married Frances, daughter of

Charles Marsham, Earl of Romney, and she died in 1868, aged 90. Their children (baptised in Lilliesleaf) were: Frances Jane (b.1806), born in Edinburgh; Harriet (b.1807), born at Riddell House; Emily (1808–81), who married John Adams; Walter Buchanan (1810–92), who succeeded; Jane (b.1812); Rev. John Charles Buchanan (1814–79), Rector of Harrietsham in Kent, whose son John Walter succeeded later; Charlotte Mary (1816–69); Gen. Charles James (1817–1903), who served with the Royal Artillery; and Henry Philip Archibald (1819–89), who was born posthumously, like his father, worked with the Indian Service, and was awarded the Star of India. John (1766–1840) 5th surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He was an original member of the Jedforest Club and was involved with the founding of the Border Union Agricultural Society. He farmed at Timpendean, later moved to Grahamslaw and then became collector of taxes. He was probably the John who was listed as a member of the Yeomanry Cavalry at Timpendean on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Jedburgh Parish. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811; he was listed as 'J. Riddell, Esq. Timpendean. He died unmarried in Jedburgh. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Commonsides. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Junior, Journeyman Mason' in Lilliesleaf in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (b.c.1770s) servant at 'Longtoun' according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. John (c.1780–1851) son of Walter, who was shepherd at Wauchope. He may be the servant at Wauchope recorded on the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He spent 37 years as shepherd at Clarilaw (in Bowden Parish) and then rented the farm of Berryhall next to Abbotsford. In 1841 he was at Clarilaw with his wife and daughter Betty. His wife was Margaret Turnbull (1777–1862) from Hawick, and they must have married when he was quite young (although not in 1791, as sometimes suggested). Their children included: Walter (1800–81), who married Margaret Baxter, and was a farm labourer in Bowden and later at Philiphaugh; Margaret (1802–94), who married stone mason Walter Ballantyne of St. Boswells; James (1804–1902), shepherd at Girrick, near Kelso; Robert (1807–67), who married Elizabeth Dickson and emigrated to

Canada; William (1809–c.77), shepherd at Muselee, who emigrated to Australia; John (1812–76), who married Margaret Grieve and died at Faldonside; Elizabeth (b.1814), who died at about the age of 30; Jane (b.1817), who married Andrew Scott and died in Hawick; and Turnbull (c.1823–91), who married Helen Clarkson. Many members of the family are buried at Bowden. John (1785–1862) son of Henry of Little Govan and Anne Glassford, he was descended from the Riddells of that Ilk. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, where he specialised in peerage cases and was known as an antiquarian and genealogist. He died unmarried in Edinburgh. John (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Whillans in Cavers Parish in 1789. John (b.1790/1) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Eastfield in Bowden Parish. In 1851 he was farming 180 acres and employing 2 labourers. His wife was Agnes and their children included Archibald, Isabella, John and Thomas. John (d.1843) joiner in Lilliesleaf, eldest son of William. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betsy') Turnbull. His children included: William (b.1816), who was also a joiner; Jean (b.1819); and Mary, who had a baby the same day that her father died. John Carre (1809–79) 3rd son of Thomas of Camieston. He was born at Linthill. He was educated in Edinburgh and in 1839 emigrated to Australia with his cousin Thomas Ferrier Hamilton. The land that the pair purchased (between Melbourne and Bendigo) was called Riddells Creek. He became a member of the Victoria Legislative Council and then the Victorian Legislative Assembly. Rev. John Charles Buchanan (b.1814) 2nd son of Sir John Buchanan, 9th Baronet. He was educated at Eton and Cambridge and was a Fellow of All Souls' College. He became Rector of Harrietsham in Kent and was Honorary Canon of Canterbury. He was heir presumptive to the Barony, since his elder brother Walter Buchanan had no children. He had 8 children of his own, and his son John Walter succeeded. John (b.1832/3) son of Andrew. He took over as tenant farmer at North Synton. He is recorded there in the 1860s, and was also a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. John (19th C.) farmer at Peel in Liddesdale in 1868. John (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Mains, in Cavers Parish, in the 1860s. Sir John Walter Buchanan (1849–1924) 11th Baronet of Riddell, son of Rev. John Charles, he succeeded his uncle, Sir Walter to the Baronetcy of Nova Scotia. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became a barrister. He served as High Sheriff of

Northumberland. In 1874 he married Sarah Isabel, youngest daughter of Robert Wharton. He was succeeded by his son Capt. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan, who married Rachel Beatrice Lyttelton. Sir John Charles Buchanan (1934–2010) 13th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father when only 5 months old. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, being 2nd Lieutenant in the King's Royal Rifle Corps and then qualifying as a chartered accountant. He served as Private Secretary to the Prince of Wales 1985–90 and Lord Lieutenant of Northumberland 2000–09. He was also on many other boards and committees and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts. In 1969 he married Sarah, daughter of Baron Richardson of Duntisbourne and they had 3 sons, including Walter John Buchanan, who succeeded. Sir Jordan (12th C.) probably a son of Sir Auskittel. Although he appears to be directly descended from the Riddells of Riddell, it is unclear how he was related to other Riddells in the north of England. He was most likely named after Jordannus de Fleming, who could have been his uncle. He witnessed a grant to Jedburgh Abbey in about 1160, and another grant of lands in Berwickshire and Roxburghshire to Walter, son of Alan the Steward in 1161/2. He witnessed a confirmation of donations to Dunfermline Abbey in about 1166 and another charter of lands in the Lothians and Fife at about the same time. He was also witness in 1173/4 for lands in Angus. Probably the same man was Sheriff in Northumberland, with estates at Tilmouth in Durham. His wife's name is not recorded, but he was succeeded by his son Walter. Margaret (d.c.1631) sister of William of Greatlaws. She married Andrew Duncanson, minister at St. Boswell's. In 1630 she was served heir to her brother's lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish, but died soon afterwards. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. She was probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded in connection with money Sir Gilbert Eliott gave to the Hawick Kirk Session for keeping her in Wilton, suggesting she was supposed to be resident in Hawick Parish. Another record refers to her as 'being mad'. Mary (17th/18th C.) also known as Margaret, she married John Scoon, who farmed at Branxholme Town. In 1705 she was renting part of Branxholme Town, with her cautioner being Walter (probably her brother or other close relative). She was still renting part in 1708 and is recorded along with her son (whose name is not given), leasing part of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1711 and 1712. By 1714 she was renting part of the farm with Robert Scoon, making it clear that this was her son. The pair were in arrears until at least 1718 and in 1719 she was replaced as tenant by Walter Scoon. Mary (1809–52) only daughter of Walter, who was 3rd son of Patrick of Muselee. Her mother was a daughter of Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. In 1835 she married George William Hutton, who was a banker at Newark (son of George Hutton of Chorlton-on-Trent and Frances Mitford of Mitford Castle). Their son was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell, who succeeded to the Muselee estates on the death of her uncle Charles in about 1849. They had another son, Edward Mitford Hutton Riddell. Matthew (13th C.) recorded as 'Matheo Rydel' when he witnessed a document relating to lands in Ayton. This was sometime in the period 1247–60. A Matthew from the previous century was Abbot of Peterburgh. Michael (14th C.) witness to a charter of Adam de Roule for the lands of Altonburn in about 1354. He is recorded as 'Michael de Rydale', and was probably part of the Riddles of that ilk. Perhaps the same Michael 'Ridel' was a juror in Roxburgh for an English inquisition in 1335/6 regarding expenses at Jedburgh Castle. Mungo (d.1471) recorded as 'Mungo de Redale' in 1436/7, when Richard 'de Lylliscleue' resigned the lands of Lilliesleaf to him as his superior. In 1435 he is 'Mungo de Redoll' when he gained lands in the Regality of Sprouston from 'Marioun Wedale', widow of John; he held his court at 'Westirlellyscleff' (i.e. 'Wester Lilliesleaf'). He may have been succeeded by his grandson (or son) James. However, his relationship with the nearly contemporary Quentin is unclear. One possibility is that he was Quentin's son (and therefore James' father), and that they were both referred to as 'of Riddell' for several years; another possibility is that they were brothers, and shared the lands of Riddell and Whitton in some way. If he was James' father, then he also had a son called Thomas, who was James' brother. Mungo (16th C.) described as 'Sir Mungo Riddele, chaplain' when he was witness to a document in 1556 relating to the lands of Nether Harden. Given that all the other witnesses were fairly local it is reasonable to assume he was attached to one of the nearby churches, say Wilton or Ashkirk. His name occurs after that of Walter of that ilk, who may therefore have been his father or brother. Mungo (16th C.) recorded in Lessuden in 1581/2 when he witnessed 2 transactions in Selkirk. Perhaps the same Mungo was recorded in the same year in a marriage contract for his sister Marion with his step-sister Janet Kyle. Sir Patrick of Riddell (12th/13th C.) 4th Laird, son of Ausketill (although some sources suggest he was son of Walter). He made donations to Melrose Abbey, including lands at Lilliesleaf and Whitton. In 1208/9 he confirmed the granting of lands at Whitton to Melrose Abbey, which had originally been granted by Auskittel (probably his father). In 1454 James II confirmed his grant of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey, his name being given as 'Patricius de Ridale' and the land being 'ywituna'. He married Christiana de Vesce (or 'Vesey') of Alnwick, one of whose relatives (possibly her father) married Margaret, an illegitimate daughter of William the Lion. He was succeeded by his son Walter. It is sometimes claimed that another son was William, who married Matilda Corbet, but he actually seems to have been a brother. Another son may have been Gaufred. His seal bore a lion 'passant', not on a shield, and the words 'SIGILLUM PATRICII DE RIDALA'. Patrick of Riddell (15th C.) recorded in 1438 when he was on the 'retour of inquest' for Ker of Altonburn. It is unclear how he might be related to other Riddells of that ilk, particularly Mungo and Quentin, who were Lairds at about the same time. Patrick (d.bef. 1581) recorded as already deceased in 1581 when George Haliburton in Dryburgh entered his son William into his lands in Merton. It seems likely he was related to the Riddells of that ilk. Patrick of Muselee (d.1698) son of John of Muselee and Grizel Schew, he was probably the 3rd Riddell of Muselee. He was the 2nd son, but succeeded to Muselee and Bewlie, since his older brother William had died first. He leased Robertson from Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1682 for 9 years. He was on the Commission of Supply for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the 'muslie Elder' who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1681 in Robertson Parish he married Maria (or Mary) Elliot; she was from Beechwood, daughter of Thomas of Bewlie and Margaret Scott of Chamberlain Newton, and hence related to the Elliots of Borthwickbrae. Their children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Helen (b.1682); John (b.1683); Margaret (b.1684); Thomas (b.1685); and Elizabeth (b.1686). The witnesses in 1682 were Thomas and William Elliot (perhaps his father-in-law and brother-in-law) and in 1686 were William Elliot and Robert Scott. He was succeeded by his son John, while his grandson William was ancestor of the Riddells of Berwick. In 1697 a child of his was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery, and he himself was buried there in 1698. His name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708, although he was deceased by then and so his son John is probably meant. Patrick of Muselee (1707–72) son of John of Muselee. He was probably the Patrick 'of Newslie' listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is probably the Patrick who paid the window tax on Headshaw in 1748 and on 'Adzhall' in Ashkirk Parish in 1753. In 1752 in Ashkirk Parish he married Margaret, daughter of Charles Balfour of Broadmeadows. Their children included: John (b.1754), who died young; Charles (b.1756), also died young; Walter (1758–1809), who was a lawyer; William (b.1759); Charles (b.1759), who succeeded; Thomas (1761–1849), with the East India Company; John (1766–1840), who farmed at Timpendean; and one daughter. It is unclear if he was born in 1707 or 1709. Peter (13th C.) recorded as valet of Sir Henry de Pinkeny in a 1298 roll of war horses used on Edward I's expedition into Scotland. He is recorded as 'Peter de Ridale'. Possibly the same 'Petrus de Rydale' is recorded along with his brothers Thomas and Robert in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. Philip (11th/12th C.) possibly ancestor of the local Riddells. He was probably son of Galfridus (otherwise known as Geoffrey), who accompanied William the Conqueror, gaining large English estates. He was probably brother of Hugh, who gained extensive lands in Northamptonshire, as well as Cranston in Midlothian. It is likely he was father of Gervasius, who received lands in Roxburghshire from David I. Other sons were probably Walter, Auskittel and Ralph. Philip (13th C.) Burgess of Berwick. He witnessed a charter for Soutra Hospital, which is undated, but probably shortly before 1270. He was recorded as a merchant in Berwick in 1276 and burgess there in 1277, 1281 and 1283. He was Mayor of Berwick in 1291, as recorded in one of the Ragman Rolls. It is unclear whether he was the family chief at the time, but he is referred to as 'Philippo de Redale'. He was also recorded in a Newcastle court case in 1292, and in 1293 had a letter of safe passage for trading into England. Probably the same man donated all his lands in Berwick, Chirnside, Wederburn and Whitsome in Scotland, as well as his lands in England, to the hospital of 'Domus Dei' in Berwick. He is recorded as burgess of Berwick again in 1300 in confirmation of a grant to the hospital there. He was also on a jury in Berwick in 1302 and may be the 'Philippum de Rydale' on the 1276 assize roll of Northumberland. He was mentioned in a petition in about 1334 from the House of God in Berwick, stating that he had formerly purchased land in Scotland and England to support them. Quentin of Riddell (15th C.) first of the family to be designated 'of that Ilk'. His name is also written 'Quintin', and this was a new forename for the Riddell family. He may have been son of Sir William, but this is unclear; most family histories leave room for at least one other generation around this time. In 1418 he was 'quintino de redale' when witnessing a document for Melrose Abbey. He was in possession of Riddell in 1421 when an inquisition was held. He was also recorded as 'Quintin Liddale of that ilk' as part of panel to decide on Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5. Also in 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was succeeded by his son, whose name is unknown, and then by his grandson James. His relationship with Mungo is unclear (and confusing, since he appears to be almost contemporary). He probably had a daughter who married John Scott of Synton. Ralph (12th C.) witness to several documents in about the last couple of decades of the 12th century, particularly lands in Lilliesleaf and Whitton involving Melrose Abbey. The earliest of these is probably the settlement between the Abbey and Uhtred of Grubet in 1181–86 and the latest was a confirmation of lands resigned to Patrick of Riddell, which was after 1214. His name is usually recorded as 'de Ridale' or variants, and in a 1454 confirmation of the 12th century grant of Whitton to Melrose Abbey he is listed as 'Radulfo de Ridale'. He was also witness to a charter between Ranulph de Soulis and Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1100s. Probably the same Ralph was the perambulator of lands on the Kale Water granted by Uhtred of Grubet to Melrose Abbey in the period 1181–86. He appears to have been brother of Gervase, and hence a son of Philip. Richard of Wittering (13th C.) owner of lands in Northampton, who was surely closely related to the Border Riddells. He was recorded in a record of Henry III in 1241/2. It seems likely that his father was Hugh, whose widow Sibilla was recorded in a document relating to 'Wyterine' in Northamptonshire in 1254. His son Hugh was recorded at Newcastle in a plea for lands in Cumberland in 1269. Richard (14th C.) possibly a younger son of Geoffrey of Riddell, and hence brother of Sir William and Sir Robert. However, precisely how he was related to earlier and later Riddells of that Ilk is unknown. There is no record of a wife or family. He witnessed 2 charters to Ker of Altonburn in 1357/8 and 1358. Note that an earlier Richard was recorded about the 1230s, associated with Preston in East Lothian. Robert (13th C.) witness in about 1250, along with William, for a charter of Lempitlaw to Soutra Hospital. His name is recorded as 'Roberto Redale'. Also in 1254/5 he was recorded in a charter for the lands of Mow and in about the 1250s witnessed a gift of lands in Berwick. Probably the same Robert was recorded in Cumberland in 1271/2. Perhaps the same Robert was witness in 1279–86 to a grant of lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey by William de Soulis. The phrase 'Curia de Sprowyston' comes after his name, although it is unclear if he was the 'curate' of Sprouston, or some unnamed person. He was probably brother or son of William. Sir Robert of Riddell (14th C.) probably related to the nearly contemporary Richard of Riddell, but the succession in these generations is very uncertain. It is possible that he was a younger son of Geoffrey, succeeding after his brother Sir William. However, it may be that he was never Laird himself. He witnessed a charter of lands in Mow granted to Kelso Abbey. He also acted as a cautioner of the Laird of Mowe who was a hostage in England. Robert (16th C.) brother of Walter of that Ilk, in 1559 he was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden. He was Bailie of the Barony of Wilton. He may also be the Robert who received part of his father's lands at Minto. It is possible he was the 'Berte' who witnessed a transaction between Thomas Gray and Thomas Smail regarding a tenement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. Also in 1563 he is recorded as brother of Walter of that Ilk when he witnessed a transaction for finding a wife for William Davidson. He may have been son of Walter and Mariotta Pringle (although these generations are not clear). Perhaps the same Robert, brother to Walter of that Ilk was witness in 1579 to a transaction between Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter Scott of Todrig; he was also witness to another transaction involving his brother Andrew, with their mother Elizabeth Ker also mentioned. In 1579/80 he was recorded as brother to Walter of that Ilk when he was involved in a transaction for land in Lilliesleaf. In 1580 he was at Riddell to witness an agreement between James in Maxton and John in Newton Mill. Robert (16th C.) son of James in Clerklands. In 1563 he witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf, for William Davidson, made by Walter of that ilk. He was probably the Robert in Clerklands who in 1580 witnessed a marriage contract between Isabel, daughter of George in Lilliesleaf and George Rutherford in Bewlie. Robert (17th C.) recorded at the Fanns in Ashkirk Parish in 1661. He married Janet Bell and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1661, with witnesses James Bell (probably related to his wife) and William (probably his won relative). Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in Newbigging when his will was recorded. It is unclear which Newbigging this was. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Armstrong (probably tenant in Raesknowe) in Hawick Parish in 1676, with James Davidson (probably also Newbigging) as the other witness. He may be the Robert who (along with William) witnessed a baptism for Walter in Hawick in 1684, and another for William Bell and Marion Riddell. Robert (17th C.) married Janet Sanderson in Robertson Parish in 1683. Robert (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew and Walter were also listed there and so surely related. He could be the Robert who married Janet Sanderson and whose children included: Janet (b.1684); and Robert (b.1686). Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Philhope, among those 'not Listed yet payd yr'. Robert (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Story in 1705. The marriage was proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded at Newmill in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for William Thomson (servant to Gideon Scott of Falnash) and at Allanhaugh Mill in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Tudhope in Raesknowe. It is possible that the same Robert was miller at Falnash in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism for James Stewart, smith at Falnash. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1716, 1718 and 1722. He is probably the Robert who married Bessie Sinton in Robertson in 1707. His children probably included Christian (b.1708), John (b.1709), Isobel (b.1716), Agnes (b.1718), Walter (b.1720)

Robert (b.1722) and James (b.1724). Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Hislop in 1717, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Kirkton Parishes. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He was recorded living at the Sandbed in 1718 and 1736. He married Margaret Oliver in 1718, the marriage being recorded in Hawick (and perhaps also Wilton, but with no wife's name given). Their children included: Andrew (b.1719); Bettie (b.1720); Margaret (b.1723); Robert (b.1733); and John (b.1736). The witnesses in 1719 were Robert Scott 'Crawship' and John Turnbull 'cuper older', in 1720 were James Purcell and Robert Roger, and in 1736 were William Riddell (surely a relative) and Thomas 'Gillas'. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at East Burnfoot in 1721 and 1729. He married Isobel Riddell (probably in 1718, although no wife's name is recorded) and their children included: Helen (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); John (b.1723); Walter (b.1729); and George and William (b.1732). The witnesses in 1721 were another Robert Riddell and Alexander Moore, and in 1729 were George Stewart and James Scott. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for George Stewart in Groundistone and in 1732 one for Walter Riddell. He was probably related to Walter, who was at East Burnfoot at the same time. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Lang in Minto Parish in 1731. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish recorded 'at Park' in 1744. He married Bessy Lawson and their children included: Jean (b.1733); John (b.1735); William (b.1737); Bessy (b.1744); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1733 were John Telfer and James Beattie and in 1744 were shoemakers John and Thomas Scott. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Whitehaugh Mill. He took out a one year lease on Highchesters Mill in 1743. He may be related to the Robert who was later at Todshawhillshiel. Rev. Robert (c.1710–60) 6th and youngest son of Sir Walter, the 4th Baronet of Riddell and Mary Watt of Rosehill. He was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1732, was presented to Lilliesleaf by Robert, Duke of Roxburghe in 1737 and ordained that year. He remained as minister there until his death. In 1748 he paid the window tax for 'the mance' in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is said that he was sometimes interrupted in his sermons by his father, who was very fastidious about points of scripture, saying 'Robert, that won't do'. In 1755 he married a distant cousin of the Granton Riddells, Esther, daughter of Dr. John Riddell (and she died in 1803).

They had no children. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Miller and their children included Janet (b.1758). Probably the same Robert was herd at Fanns in 1762 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. Robert (18th C.) married Jean Stevenson in Hobkirk Parish in 1767. Robert (d.bef. 1781) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Jean Arthur is recorded in 1781. Robert (18th C.) married Jane Thomson in Hawick in 1775. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1786 and Todshawhillshiel in 1788 and 1790. His children included William (b.1786), John (b.1788) and James (b.1790). He could be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1773 and 1776 for Thomas Rutherford from Branhholme. Robert (18th C.) resident of Kirknowe in 1790 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. His other children probably included William (b.1789), John (b.1792), William (again, b.1794), John (again, b.1796), Adam (b.1798), William (again, b.1798), Betty (b.1800), George (b.1802), Janet (b.1804), an unnamed son (b.1806), Betty (again, b.1807) and Margaret (b.1809). Robert (18th C.) married Mary Gledstains in Hawick in 1793. Robert (d.1809) wright, son of George, who lived at Howahill. He is probably related to the Robert in Hobkirk Kirknowe recorded about the same time. He have been the Robert, son of George born in Hobkirk Parish in 1771. He married Mary Gledstains in Hawick in 1793. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish, as well as the death of his son James in 1808 and his wife Mary Gledstains in 1810. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Mill according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He may have been son of Walter, who was tenant at Southdean Mill at about the same time. He was 'Husbandman' at Southdean Mill on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded in South Turnpikesside in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Jean Turnbull in Southdean in 1803. They had unnamed children baptised in 1804, 1805, 1806 and 1814. Robert (18th/19th C.) servant in Chesterhill in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) said to have been a native of Teviotdale, he was father of Rev. Henry Scott. He was described as 'a man of strong though uneducated mind'. He was shepherd for a long time at Langshawburn, where he was visited by Walter Scott, Pulteney Malcolm and James Hogg. He was shepherd at Sorbie (in Ewesdale) when his famous son was born. While there it is said that he planted some saplings on a hillside above Wrae, saying that he wished to live long enough for his coffin to be made from the wood of the mature trees. He then moved to Capplefoot, on the Water of Milk. While there he hired a teacher to instruct his children. Later he returned to the Ettrick to work for Scott of Deloraine, who he had been with in his younger days. He married Agnes Scott, who was also from Teviotdale. They had 6 sons and a daughter: William; Borthwick (b.1794), who farmed at Dryden, Ashkirk, and was renowned as a piper; Henry Scott (1798–1870), minister at Teviothead and song-writer; Robert (1800–67), who emigrated to America and died in Rockton, Canada; Alexander Hay, who farmed in Cumberland; Walter (d.1834), who died unmarried; and Mary, who married a Jones. Robert (1800–67) born in Teviotdale, he was 4th son of shepherd Robert and brother of Rev. Henry Scott. He farmed in Cumberland for a while and then emigrated to America. He married Margaret Johnston in 1819, the marriage being recorded in Robertson Parish. They had 10 children, including Nancy, Euphemia, Benjamin, Thomas, Robert, Ann and Walter. He died in Rockton, Ontario. Robert (19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Helen White and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1826. Robert (b.1839/40) son of farm labourer Walter, and descended from Hobkirk shepherds. He apprenticed as a blacksmith with Thomas Kedzie in Selkirk, but also worked in Hawick. He then worked in Edinburgh, Stirling and Glasgow before emigrating to America in 1864. He spent time in Michigan, Canada and Minnesota, returned to Scotland and then went back to Canada in 1870. In 1872 he started his own wrought-iron fencing business in Chatham, Ontario. He married a Miss Tocher and had 5 children. Simon of Lilliesleaf Mill (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 along with Andrew of that Ilk and Andrew of Lilliesleaf when there were complaints made against them by the Douglasses of Friarshaw. His name appears as 'Sym Riddell of Lilliesleaf Mylne'. It was specifically claimed that the Riddells put their sheep on a field of wheat belonging to the Douglasses and also that he and Andrew of Lilliesleaf removed the ploughs from some of the Douglas' farmers. It seems likely that he was a close relative of the Laird of Riddell. Rev. Simon (1677–1743) probably descended from a branch of the Riddells of that Ilk. He graduated from Edinburgh

University in 1695, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1699 and ordained at Tynron Church in 1701. In 1715 he marched to Stirling with some of his parishioners in defence of the King and the Protestant cause and in 1740 he was one of the 15 ministers who dissented against the resolution to depose the 8 Seceeding ministers. He married Annie Riddell, who was heiress of the lands of Newhouse near Lilliesleaf. Their only son Walter married Annie Riddell, heiress of Glenriddell. Steven (16th C.) recorded in the Register of the Privy Council in 1569. He was listed along with James Langlands as heralds in Roxburghshire, 'Ane of the Wardane Officiaris to be maid Messinger'. It seems likely he was from the Riddells of that Ilk. Thomas (12th/13th C.) recorded as brother of Geoffrey in the period 1165–1204. He witnessed his brother's charter for 2 oxgangs of lands in Primside. Thomas (14th C.) Burgess of Berwick, recorded as 'junior' in 1365. He was a prisoner in the 'Marshalsea' in 1370. He was involved with a debtor's lands of Sunlaws in Roxburghshire, acquiring these lands along with Little Newton (on Eden) by 1379. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as being 'de Rydell' in the 1330s when he was witness to a charter relating to the town of Roxburgh and preserved in the chartulary of Dryburgh. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Riddells. He could be the Thomas who forfeited the lands of 'Fynlawys' in the Barony of Oxnam, which were granted to William Stewart of Jedward during the reign of Robert II. Thomas (14th C.) recorded in c.1380 as the possessor of the lands of 'Little Neuton next Roxburgh'. His surname is written 'Ridelle'. He may have been the same man as Thomas 'de Rydell'. Thomas (15th/16th C.) brother of James of that Ilk. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 he had remission for being with the Duke of Albany during the time of revolt, as well as for stealing sheep. His surety was his brother, the Laird of Riddell. Thomas (d.c.1514) listed as deceased in 1514, when he was succeeded in the position of Clerk of Lilliesleaf by George Riddell. He was probably a member of the family of Riddell of that Ilk, holding the benefice of assistant priest in the Parish. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of William in Lilliesleaf. In 1592 he was signatory to a caution by Thomer Ker of Cavers Carre for the good behaviour and loyalty to the King of James Scott of Whithope. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Scott and their son Robert was baptised in 1681. Probably the same Thomas had a son Alexander baptised in Hawick in 1695, with no mother's name recorded, and witnesses James and John Turnbull. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Chisholme in 1710. His children included: Isobel (b.1705); and twins Robert and Alexander (b.1710). Thomas (17th/18th C.) sometime tenant in Bewlie. In 1716 he had a tack (jointly with George Cumming) for lands in Bewlie from John Nisbet of Nisbetfield; after a year he was to assume the lease fully for another 8 years. This was specifically for 'a dwelling house, barn and stack yard and half a cottage in the town of Bewlie, half the said Mr. John's lands in Bewlie, half the meadow and half the muir of Lillisleaf with the teinds'. In 1721 the last 3 years were cancelled. Thomas (1696–1750) 3rd son of Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. The lands of Camieston near Newtown St. Boswells were acquired for him and he became the first Riddell Laird there. It is possible that he was the 'Mr. Riddell of Camiestoun' who purchased the Kirkland of Bewlie from the Duke of Roxburghe. He may be the Thomas who paid the window tax at 'Ferningtoun' in Roxburgh Parish in 1748. In 1740 he married Margaret, youngest daughter of daughter of Rev. William Hunter, minister of Lilliesleaf. His children were: Walter (b.1742), who died young; Margaret (1744–71), who died unmarried; Eleanor (1745–1815), also unmarried; William (b.1746), who succeeded to Camieston and married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; Thomas (1748–56); and Robert (1750–93), who served with the East India Company and perished on the 'Duchess of Athole', being in temporary command when fire broke out, and refusing to abandon his ship. Capt. Thomas (18th C.) son of Walter of that Ilk. He was with the Honorable East India Company, being Captain of the Adm. Pocock 1762–71. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1818). Thomas (1761–1802) 4th surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He joined the East India Company, rose to the rank of Major and died in India. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Jane Govenlock, who was from Hawick Parish. Thomas (b.c.1770s) resident of Byreholm according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same Thomas was a 'Driver' at 'Wheathaugh' on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Perhaps the same Thomas married Janet Brydon and had a son Adam (b.1794), baptised in Castleton Parish.

Thomas of Camieston (1777–1826) eldest son of William of Camieston. He qualified as Writer to the Signet in 1805, but never followed this profession. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his father) when still younger of Camieston. In 1805 he married Jane, daughter of William Ferrier, and she died in 1833. Their children were: Gen. William (1805–75); Walter of Cavers Carre (1807–74); John Carre (1809–80), who emigrated to Australia, where he was a member of the Parliament of Victoria; Capt. Thomas (1810–54) of the Bengal Infantry; Lillias Wallace (b.1812), married Ross Watt and emigrated to Victoria; Robert (1813–39), who died in India; Elizabeth Carre (1816–44), who died unmarried; Georgina Vereker (b.1818), who married Malcolm McNeil Rind; and Jane Ann (d.1859), who married Elijah Imprey. Thomas (d.1843) 2nd son of Lilliesleaf joiner William. He was a thatcher. He married Rachel Stirling and their children included William (b.1803), who was a joiner. Thomas (1815–62) born in Lilliesleaf, son of Isabella, with the father's name unknown. He emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Lawrence, Massachusetts, working in the mills. He married Sarah S. Henderson and their children were James, Walter and David. He drowned after falling overboard from a steamer between Fall River and New York. Thomas (b.1818/9) stocking-maker in Denholm. In 1861 he was listed on Main Street. In the 1860s he is in a trade directory as a stocking-maker, suggesting he ran his own business. He married Janet Dow and their children included Thomas, John, Robert S., James and George. Thomas (19th C.) married Isabella Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1848. Walter (d.1150s) described as 'de Riddale, of Whitunes' when he received a charter of half of 'Eshetho' (i.e. 'Eschetho', probably the same as Lintobank) and 'Lillisclive' (Lilliesleaf) from David I sometime in the period 1124–53. This is recorded in a 'transumpt' of 1506 (i.e. a legal copy of the frail document was made in Jedburgh at that time). He may thus have been the first Baron of Riddell and Whitton. He was probably a close relative of Gervase, who witnessed some charters along with him; he may have been brother of Gervase (or perhaps his son), and hence a son of Philip. He is further recorded as 'Waltero de ridalis' and similar in several surviving charters he witnessed in the reign of David for St. Andrews Priory and other religious houses. A bull from Pope Adrain IV in 1156 confirms his brother and heir Auskittel in several lands. This suggests he died without any sons. However, he is known to have married Ethride de Percy, sister of the Lord of Oxenham. Walter of Riddell (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Auskittel. A Bull of Pope Alexander III (sometime before 1181) confirms him in the lands of 'Lillescleve', half of 'Langetun', 'Witun' and 'Brahebi' (Brawby in Yorkshire), which his father and forebears held of the church of Hexham. He married Guynoldu, daughter of the Earl Gospatric. They had at least 2 sons: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; and Ralph, said to have been progenitor of the Northumberland branch of Riddells. Walter (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Jordan, perhaps the first generation of the Riddells of the Newcastle area. He succeeded his father in the lands of Tilmouth in Durham and the Lordship of Whickham. He was Sheriff of Northumberland and was succeeded by Sir William. Walter of Riddell (13th C.) 5th Laird, son of Sir Patrick and Margaret de Vesci (or 'Vesey'). He confirmed his father's donations to Melrose Abbey, and gave other benefactions to both Melrose and Kelso. The gift to Melrose Abbey was part of Lilliesleaf and made some time before 1253; this charter also mentions land he had previously granted to Alexander, brother of Henry of Ashkirk. He married a daughter of Hugh de Gifford. He had 2 sons, Sir William (who succeeded) and Patrick. His seal bore an eagle with wings elevated, not on a shield, and the words 'SIG[ILL. WA]LTERI DE RI[DA]LE'. Walter (16th C.) younger of Riddell, son of John. He died before his father, and the title was inherited by his son Walter. However, these generations are confused, and it is also possible that his brother George inherited, or was at least the effective Laird during the minority of his son Walter. His wife's name is said to have been Jane. If he was father of Walter of that Ilk who was recorded in transactions in Selkirk in 1579, then he also had sons Andrew and Robert. Walter of that Ilk (d.c.1580) probably son of Walter, he succeeded to the Lairdship from his grandfather John. George, who also appears to have been acting as Laird before him, was either his father or uncle. He may be the 'laid of Ryddell' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. He was witness to a charter dealing with the lands of Nether Harden in 1556 and is also mentioned in 1559 when his brother Robert was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden (although it is possible this is 1550). In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft.

In 1563 he was 'wadset' lands at 'Hungrie Hills' and near the Kirk of Lilliesleaf by William Middlemas. Also in 1563 he offered 2 potential wives to William Davidson, who held lands of his in ward and relief; witnesses included his brother Robert, as well as Robert, son of James in Clerklands. He is probably the 'Lard of Riddell' listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. He served as surety for the Elliots in 1573. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Pringles in their feud with the Elliots. He was on an assize in 1577. He is probably the Walter of that Ilk whose brothers Andrew and Robert are recorded in transactions in Selkirk in 1579. In 1543 he married Mariotta (or Marion), daughter of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. He was probably succeeded by another Walter, and also had sons Robert and William (who witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, by which time his son was Laird). His seal bore a chevron between 3 ears of rye and the words 'S' VALTERI RIDDEL', while his wife's had 3 shells on a 'bend sinister' and the words 'S' MARION HOPPRINGIL'. Walter of that Ilk (d.bef. 1592) son of Walter. He is probably the Walter who in 1581 witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. Also in 1581 his heir apparent Andrew received sasine (in the name of his daughter Janet, Andrew's sister) for the lands of Wester Horsburgh in Peeblesshire from Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk. He was listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1586 he was instructed to enter in court James Davidson in Whitton. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council and in 1590 was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. John Ramsay of Dalhousie was cautioner for him in 1590. Note that these generations of Walters seem confused in some family histories. He married Agnes, daughter of George Ramsay of Dalhousie, and was succeeded by his son Andrew. He probably also had 2 daughters, one of whom married Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre and Nether Howden. His wife may have been the Lady Riddell whose conduct was singled out when the Presbyterians complained to the King about continuing supporters of Catholicism. He and his son Andrew were 'tutors' for the young James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. His son Andrew and brother William both witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, while he was Laird. In 1595/6 (suggesting he was alive then, but perhaps just confirming an earlier grant) there is a charter for the Barony of Lilliesleaf in which he is granted thr 3½ husbandlands of Lilliesleaf, called 'West-Maynis alias Dunstane or Myris' and 6 husbandlands and 2 cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf, with Lilliesleaf Mill; his son Andrew and brother William are also listed. Walter (d.bef. 1642) referred to in 1600 as 'fiar of that Ilk', along with his wife Agnes, when they received the lands of Bewlie. He may have been a son of the Laird of Riddell, or else descended from the earlier Riddells who had farmed at Bewlie. He is probably the Walter referred to in 1642 when his son William gave Bewlie to his brother Walter. Walter (16th/17th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area. He was mentioned in the 1628 witchcraft trial of Isobel Howison. It was stated that Sandy 'Hines' wife said that Howison had given medicine to his wife and received nothing for it. Walter of Woodhouse (16th/17th C.) appeared at the Privy Council in 1616 to represent William Allan and himself in a complaint against the Douglasses of Friarshaw. He was probably also the Walter of 'Ridhouse' (assuming this was a transcription error) who, along with the Laird of Riddell, had had their tenants oppressed by the Douglasses. He was also a member of the assize at the Commissioners' Court in 1623 and was voted as Chancellor of the panel. It is unclear where 'Wodhouse' was and he may be the same as one of the other Walters. Sir Walter 2nd Baronet of Riddell (d.c.1669) son of Sir John. He was knighted by Charles I during his father's lifetime. In 1632 there is a discharge to him from Violet Douglas, widow of Andrew of that Ilk and their 1st and 2nd sons Andrew of Haining and Robert of Hartside. He was served heir to his father in 1636; this included Lintobank, Boosmill, Easter Clerklands, Greatlaws and West Lilliesleaf (called 'Murieknow'), as well as Over and Nether Whitton. He was one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1628-1633, and he also represented Roxburghshire 1646-47 and 1650. In 1640 he had a contract with Walter Scott of 'Burnside' (perhaps Burnfoot) concerning Chapel and other lands in Lilliesleaf. He was a supporter of the Covenant. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In 1643 his estate of Riddell (consisting of Mains of Riddell, Bank, Clerklands, Riddell Mill and Lilliesleaf Mill), valued at £1654; he was also owner of part of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish (valued at £273), as well as of Whitton in Morebattle Parish (valued at £1600). In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1654 he probably the 'W. Riddell' among local men who signed an attestation about the 'carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch'; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £6,600 (the second largest amount in Roxburghshire). He is recorded in a charter of 1659 involving his daughter-in-law Agnes Scott and lands in Whitton. He paid tax for his rentals in Hownam (£3382) and Lilliesleaf (£1629) in about 1663. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of William Rigg of Aithernie in Fife, said to be a very pious woman and aunt of Katherine Rigg, 'the Good Lady Cavers'; this may have been in 1630. Their children were: Sir John, who succeeded; William of Friarshaw, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell; Archibald, Covenanting preacher, who married an Aitkenhead and was progenitor of the Riddells of Granton; Thomas, who may have married Agnes Scott and died childless; Andrew; Agnes, who married James Scott, brother of Sir William of Harden in 1659; Sarah, who married Patrick Hepburn of Smeaton in 1656; and Alison, who married Rev. Gabriel Semple of Jedburgh (once a preacher of field conventicles). Note there are conflicting accounts of his children, particularly the daughters. His son Sir John was served as his heir in 1669. His wife's will is recorded at the Commissarriot of Peebles in 1682. Walter of Belses (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when his son William became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. He must have been related to the Riddells of Riddell and of Minto. He may have been the same Walter who was given the lands of Belses by his brother William (son of Walter) in 1642; if so he was described as 'in Longhauche'. He was also possibly the 'portioner of Bewlie' who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. He may be the same Walter as the 'portioner of Lilliesleaf' who in 1643 held '20 soums' valued at £60 and 4 acres at £26. He was also involved in a 'wadset' over lands at Fernieles and Templehall (in the Rule valley) with William Earl of Lothian in 1649; Sir Walter of that ilk is also mentioned. and so was clearly distinct. He extended the loan to the Earl in 1652, when he was described as 'now indweller in Appotsyde'. In the 1652 marriage contract of Margaret Riddell and Robert Elliot, he is described as uncle of Margaret and brother of William, deceased portioner of Bewlie. He also witnessed a contract of 'wadset' for the Lorraines of Appotside in 1654, also signed by his eldest son 'Harie' (i.e. Henry), as well as further contracts in 1656. He was mentioned in discharges of 1655 for uplifting the teinds of Harwood and Tythehouse and in further discharges of 1657 and 1658; he acted as 'baillie in that part' for Elliot of Harwood and was tenant at Appotside. In 1656 he witnessed the ratification of William Elliot of Harwood in his Rulewater lands and another sasine relating to Harwood was witnessed by his sons Henry and Walter. His sons William and Henry witnessed separate documents 1659, and all 3 sons witnessed a document relating to Appotside in 1656. He is probably also the Walter who rented land from John Turnbull of Firth in 1645. He may be the Walter recorded as portioner in 1678 when he owned lands in Bewlie and also for the 'heritors' of Raperlaw, amounting to £273, as well as Lilliesleaf Mill (valued at £407 15s); however, that seems more likely to be the next generation. Walter (17th C.) son of Walter, portioner of Bewlie, and younger brother of William. He is recorded as 'in Langhauche' and 'baillie in that part to the said Williame Elliot' when he was witness in 1637 for Elliot of the Binks purchasing Harwood. The Langhaugh may have been the one in Liddesdale or in Hobkirk (probably the latter). In one of the 1637 documents he is transcribed as 'Liddell'. He also witnessed other agreements relating to vicarage teinds of Hobkirk Parish in 1638 and 1648, and a discharge to him and others for the teinds in 1649. In 1642 he was 'in Longhauche' when his brother disposed to him his five-pounf land in Bewlie and half a cotland in the Barony of Lilliesleaf. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Murray. Their son Robert was baptised in 1650. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Chisholm. Their son Robert was baptised in 1656, with witnesses Robert and Andrew Chisholme (who were surely related to his wife). Walter of Minto (c.1620–c.84) writer (i.e. solicitor) in Edinburgh. He was probably 2nd son of son of William of Newhouse and grandson of William of Muselee (although these generations are confused). He purchased part of the Minto estate from John Turnbull of Minto in 1676 (confirmed in 1681). He leased the lands of ‘Kaimes and the Hills’ to William Mather of Lanton in 1683. Also in 1683 has a disposition for Minto to his son-in-law Thomas Rutherford. There was a dispute among his children over the inheritance, but eventually Minto passed to Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1687 and not long afterwards sold to the Elliots. He married Catharine Nisbet in 1652 in Edinburgh, and secondly married Isabel Riddell. His children were: James (d.1687), who died young; Jean, who married Robert Laurie in Edinburgh, and was the mother of the Annie Laurie who inspired the song; Susanna, who married Thomas, brother of John Rutherford of Edgerston; Catharine, who probably died young; Grizel (b.bef. 1687), who was to have succeeded if she married a Riddell; John, who may also have died young; Elizabeth, who married James Dallas in Edinburgh; and Agnes. His daughters cleared all their interests in Minto in the 1690s. Walter (d.bef. 1673) son of Andrew of Haining and brother of John of Haining. He married Christian Hunter, who is recorded along with their son Andrew in a deed of 1673. Walter (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1686 he married Margaret Ker in Wilton. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Gray and Alison Riddell (probably a relative) in 1688. Walter (17th C.) eldest son of John ‘in Beirhope’. He is probably the Walter, ‘portioner of Beulie’ who witnessed the testament of William Elliot of Harwood in 1662. He was ‘portioner’ of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, with land valued at £273. He (or a descendant) received part of the lands of Bewlie in 1687. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scoon and their children included: Robert (b.1674); an unnamed child (b.1677); another unnamed child (b.1679); Bessie (b.1681); and Helen (b.1684). The witnesses in 1684 were Robert and William, who were surely related to him. Walter of Newhouse (b.1645/6). In 1689 he was named among the officers of the local Militia, charged with defending the kingdom. Along with William Turnbull of Sharplaw he was taken prisoner by a group of Covenanter soldiers while travelling between Lilliesleaf and Hassendean and brought to Lilliesleaf Moor; there they were released, but immediately taken prisoner at gunpoint by Thomas Turnbull of Standhill and others, who took their horses and held him until the preaching was over. He gave evidence in the trial of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1681. He is probably the Walter of Newhouse who married Christian Stoddart in Edinburgh in 1684. In 1693 his uncle John Reid granted him a tenement in Selkirk. He was ‘Walter ridell of Neuhaus’ in 1694 when he paid tax on 4 hearths in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is unclear if he is the same man as Walter (b.c.1620) of Newhouse who appears to have died in the 1680s. His daughter may have been Annie, who married Rev. Simon. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Hartshaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Walter ‘Dusty Fit’ (d.bef. 1723) miller of Allanhaugh Mill in the years around 1700. He may have been related to the later tenant at Southdean Mill. He was listed at Allanhaugh Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; he was taxed for 3 hearths because he was ‘wt tuo kilns’, suggesting that he was the miller there at that time. Probably the same Walter rented part of the farm of Raesknowe from the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1690–98. He was at Allanhaugh Mill in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin in Alton Croft. He may be the Walter who acted as cautioner for Margaret in 1705, when she leased part of Branhholme Town farm. He is probably the miller at Allanhaugh Mill called ‘Dustyfit’ who was there around 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1708 he and James Paterson were ‘undermillers’ when they witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott wright at Millport. He is probably the ‘undermiller in Hawick’ when his daughter Bessie was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Walter Elliot, ‘tacksman of ye mill’ and James Paterson, ‘undermiller in ye sd town’. In 1711 he was still undermiller in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Aitkin, other undermiller at Hawick (with miller Walter Elliot as the other witness). His children included Anna (b.1700), with baptismal witnesses Henry Orrock and William Riddell (who was surely related). Bessie who married another Walter Miller (at Philhope Mill) in 1709 was his daughter. He was recorded as deceased and ‘sometimes in Allan-haugh mill’ when his daughter Mary married William Helm in 1723. William, who was tenant at Allanhaugh Mill and became a Burgess in 1729, was probably his son. Margaret, who married John Scoon, may have been a daughter of his (since his name appears as a witness to one of their children's baptisms). It is possible that 2 different generations of miller are compounded here. Walter (17th C.) resident at Has-sendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Margaret, who was also listed there. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Graham and their daughter Anna was baptised in 1700. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Wright and their son Walter was baptised in 1709. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller at Philhope Mill, as recorded in 1709. He married Bessie Riddell, daughter to Walter, miller at Allanhaugh Mill in Hawick in 1709. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Allanhaugh Mill in 1725. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller in Hawick. He married Margaret Ker and their children included: Isobel (b.1707); Bessie (b.1709); and Robert (b.1713). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailie Walter Elliot and miller James Paterson. He may be related to other millers of the same surname. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Murray and their daughter Alison was baptised in 1711. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Helen Paterson in Ashkirk Parish in 1716. Walter of Newhouse (d.1742) apprenticed to John Wilkie, he became Writer to the Signet in 1742. He married Jean Pringle. It is unclear how he was related to the other Riddells of Newhouse. Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the same Walter listed 'eist the water' among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. Perhaps the same Walter witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Young in 1728. He married Marion Liddell and their children included James (b.1687), Jean (b.1699), William (b.1702) and Helen (b.1703). The witnesses in both 1699 and 1702 were baker John Whillans and merchant John Forman and in 1709 were baker John Whillans and Henry Orrock. Probably the same tailor Walter secondly married Margaret Riddell in Hawick in 1704. Walter of Friarshaw (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Walter (17th/18th C.) from the Lilliesleaf branch of the family. He was tenant farmer at North Synton. In 1706 his eldest daughter Margaret married John of Muselee. Sir Walter of that Ilk (d.1747) 4th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father Sir John in 1700. In 1695 he would have been the 'younger' of Riddell who was appointed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also 'younger of that Ilk' in 1695 when he contributed £400 to the Darien Scheme. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and is listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1700 he was recorded in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose. In 1706 he gave a bond of 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest; this presumably means he was a heritor of Hawick Parish. In 1727-28 he was involved with the Scotts of Davington in a land dispute. In 1692 he married Margaret, daughter of John Watt of Rosehill; she was a daughter of his step-mother. His children were: John, an advocate who pre-deceased him; Sir Walter, who did succeed; Thomas of Camieston, whose son William married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; William, who moved to Bermuda; Robert, minister of Lilliesleaf; Ann (or perhaps Jane or Elenor), who married John Carre of Cavers; Sarah, who married John Forest; and Christian, who died young. He is said to have been very pious and somewhat eccentric, for example on occasion interrupting his son Robert's sermons, saying 'Robert, that won't do!', and he refused to stop people coming onto his land, saying 'The Earth is the Lord's!' James may have been another son, who moved to Ireland, was knighted, and wrote his name 'Riddall'. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Whithope Mill in at least the period 1714-29. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Helen (b.1714); Marion (b.1717); Anna (b.1722); Walter (b.1725); and Walter (again, b.1729). He is easy to confuse with another Walter, who lived at Mabonlaw at the same time; he is probably the one who married Helen Scott in Robertson in 1712. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Mabonlaw. His daughter Marion was baptised at the end of 1717 in Robertson Parish; this was 9 months after another Marion was baptised, daughter of Walter in Whithope Mill (so it is fairly clear that this was a different man). He could be the Walter recorded at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, along with Robert and Andrew. Other children, baptised in Robertson Parish, who may have been his, included: Margaret (b.1712); Walter (b.1720); and Walter (again, b.1725). He is probably the Walter who married Margaret Simpson in Robertson in 1709. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthaugh in 1723 and 1724. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for

William Lorraine in Borthaugh. In 1719 he married Mary Storie. Their children included: Robert and William (b.1720); twins Gideon and Andrew (b.1723); Walter (b.1724); Isobel (b.1727); Margaret (b.1729); and Robert (again, b.1731). The witnesses in 1723 were George Bell and Tom (or similar) Turnbull, in 1724 were Walter and John Scott and in 1729 were James Scott and Robert Cowan. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at East Burnfoot in 1725, Galalaw in 1732 and Hornshole in 1737. He is probably the William who in 1735 witnessed a baptism for William Lamb, resident of Wester Burnfoot. He married Margaret (or Marion) Waugh in 1724 and their children included Robert (b.1725), Janet (b.1727), James (b.1730), Bessie (b.1732) and Margaret (b.1737). The 1737 baptism was separately recorded with 'Margaret Riddell' as the mother, with witnesses Robert Scott and John Sinton. The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott and in 1732 were Robert Riddell (probably a relative) and Adam Wright. He was probably related to Robert, who was at East Burnfoot at the same time. The funeral of Janet in Burnfoot Mill was recorded in 1750 and may have been his daughter. Sir Walter of that Ilk (1695–1765) 5th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his father Sir Walter, since his elder brother John had died first. He became a Burgess and Guildbrother of Edinburgh in 1713 and was later a merchant at Eyemouth, probably dealing in fish and spirits. He was recorded as a merchant in Eyemouth in 1727 when listed (along with his brother John) among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He paid the window tax for Riddell House in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jane, daughter of John Turnbull of Houndwood near Eyemouth, the marriage being an elopement. His sons were: Walter, his eldest, who pre-deceased him by about 10 years; Sir John, who succeeded; James, who served in the Army, being a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Dutch service; Thomas of Besborough, who served in the Navy, and was father of Gen. Henry James Riddell, Commander of the forces in Scotland; and Andrew. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Alton in 1738. In 1737 he married Agnes Wilson and their children included: John (b.1738); and Janet (b.1740). The witnesses in 1738 were Andrew ... and John Kersel. Walter of Newhouse and Glenriddell (d.1788) son of Rev. Simon. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in

1761. He married Annie, daughter and heiress of Robert Riddell of Glenriddell, a very distant cousin. He thereby became Laird of Glenriddell in Dumfriesshire. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He may be the Riddell of Newhouse who sold lands in Lilliesleaf Parish to Rev. William Campbell. His children were: Robert, who succeeded, was a great friend of Robert Burns, married Miss Kennedy, and died without children; Walter, who succeeded after his brother and married Maria Woodley, daughter of the Governor of St. Kitts, Leeward Islands; Sophia; and Alexander. Walter (18th C.) resident at Whithope Mill in 1767 and 1774 when his children were baptised in Robertson Parish. His children included Walter (b.1767) and Jean (b.1774). He is surely related to the earlier Walter and John in Whithope Mill. Walter of Friar's Glen (1758–1809) 3rd surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He worked as a lawyer in Jedburgh. He married Christian, eldest daughter of Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. Their children were: Patrick, who died unmarried; and Mary (b.1809), who married George Hutton, and whose son Capt. Hutton Riddell inherited Muselee. He died the same year as his second child. Walter (b.1760) 2nd son of Frank, he was born in Hawick. He married Janet Hamilton and moved to Carlisle. Their children were: James (b.1784), who had 3 daughters, including Jennie, who married John Hislop; Frank (b.1786), who was a store clerk in Leith and died unmarried; Willie (b.1789), who settled in Carlisle; Isabella (b.1791); Margaret (b.1793); and Walter, who was born in Hawick, was training for the ministry, but died young. Sir Walter Buchanan (c.1764–84) 7th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his father Sir John, who died when he was quite young. Said to be of delicate health, he died just about when he reached majority. He was succeeded by his brother Sir James. His tutors, who dealt with rentals of his properties etc., were James Riddell and Archibald Buchanan. Walter (18th C.) recorded as 'of Muselee' in a marriage bond of 1769 for his daughter Agnes with John, son of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He may have been a younger son of John of Muselee. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Commonsides in 1785 and 1788. He married Betty Glendinning and their children included: Janet (b.1775); John (b.1778); Betty (b.1780); Rachel (b.1783); Janet (again, b.1785); Mary (b.1788); and James (b.1791). The witnesses in 1785 and 1788 were the whole congregation and in 1791 were Archibald Elliot from Bowanhill and John (probably a close relative). Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Wauchope for about 50 years. He was shepherd there according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. His son John was shepherd at Clarilaw. He could be the Walter of Hobkirk Parish whose children (with no mother's name given) included: Robert (b.1779); Elizabeth (b.1781); Jean (b.1783); John (b.1784); William (b.1788); and James (b.1796). Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as journeyman wright in Lilliesleaf on the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. A note says 'Peace officer', suggesting perhaps that he might not need to serve on account of already working as an officer in the parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) tenant at Southdean Mill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He may have been father of Robert, who was recorded at Southdean Mill in 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had some local connection. Walter (b.c.1785) 3rd son of William, he was a joiner in Lilliesleaf like his father. He was recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living with Elizabeth, probably his daughter. His sons included: William, who married Margaret Lambert and emigrated to Philadelphia; and Walter, who also emigrated to the U.S.A. Walter (1798–1863) son of Hawick shoemaker William and Jean Goodfellow. He worked as a spinner in Wilton. In 1835 he was listed at Dovemount amount heads of households in Wilton Kirk, and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as living in Hawick. On the 1841 census he was on O'Connell Street and in 1851 was on Ladylaw Place. His wife was Mary and their children included William, Andrew, Thomas, Jean, Janet and John. Walter (1800–81) eldest son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He was a farm labourer near Hawick and then at Philiphaugh. In 1841 he was living at Eastfield in Bowden, in 1851 at Philiphaugh Cottages and in 1861 at Old Broadmeadows. He married Margaret Baxter and their children included John, Mary, James, Margaret, Robert and Elizabeth. Walter (19th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was a member of Allars Kirk in about the 1830s. Walter see Walter Riddell Carre. Sir Walter Buchanan (1810–92) eldest son of Sir John Buchanan, who died when he was young. He was born at Riddell

House, and educated at Eton and Oxford. Although he became the 10th Baronet in 1819, the family sold the Riddell estate in 1823. However, he did succeed to the smaller estate of Hepple in Northumberland. He was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1834. He was Magistrate and Chief Steward in Northumberland and Judge in North Staffordshire, as well as serving as an M.P. He gave a lot of help to Rev. G.T. Ridlon, in his compilation of a family history, published in 1884. He married Alicia Ann, youngest daughter of William Ripley in 1850, but they had no children. He was succeeded by his nephew Sir John Walter Buchanan, son of Rev. John Charles. Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott (1834–77) eldest son of Henry Scott, minister of Teviothead. He worked with the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank. He married Agnes, daughter of David Arnot, minister of St. Giles. He was obviously named after his father's patron. He died in Edinburgh. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan (1879–1934) son of John Walter Buchanan, he was 12th Baronet of Riddell. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became Principal of Hertford College there. He was also Chairman of the University Grants Committee. In 1919 he married Rachel, daughter of Charles Lyttelton, 8th Viscount Cobham. They had 8 children, and he was succeeded by Sir John, who was an infant at the time. Sir Walter John Buchanan (1974–) 14th Baronet of Riddell, son of Sir John Charles Buchanan. He has been Managing Director of the companies Cluff Geothermal Limited and Lilliesleaf Limited. His son Finlay John (b.2001) is heir apparent. William (12th C.) witness to documents for 'Morgrundus' Count of Mar, relating to St. Andrews Priory, where he is 'Willelmo de ridal'. This was probably around the 1170s. He may be the younger son of Galfridus/Geoffrey who was Lord of Farringdon in Northamptonshire and Primside and Glengarnock in Scotland, who served in the court of William I and died in 1214. William (12th/13th C.) son of Ausketill and brother of Patrick. In some genealogies he is stated to be a son of Patrick, but this appears to be incorrect. He married Matilda Corbet, to whom he granted several pieces of land in dowry. He received part of the lands of Whitton, although he had no heirs, so all these lands reverted to the head of the family later. His wife is recorded yielding up lands to her Lord, Patrick of Riddell in the early 1200s; her son seems to have been Alexander Seton, and so presumably she secondly married a Seton. He may be the same as the son of Ansketill (recorded as Walter) who had a papal letter of protection in about 1170. This mentions that the same family still held lands at Brawby in Yorkshire. Sir William of Riddell (12th/13th C.) 6th Laird, son of Walter and grandson of Patrick. He is said to have been knighted at a young age by Alexander II. He married Isabella, daughter of William, Parson of Hownam. In the early years of the 13th century his wife Isabella gave a piece of land in Whitton to Melrose Abbey. This charter mentions several family members, proving 4 successive descents. However, the heir of Sir William is uncertain, as are the next few generations. He may have been succeeded by another William. He is probably the 'domino Willelmo de Redale' who witnessed a charter of lands in Lempitlaw to Soutra around 1250; 'domino Roberto Redale' was also listed, so presumably his son or brother. William (13th C.) listed among the jurors at Corbridge in Northumberland in 1256 as 'Willelmus de Ridal'. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He could be the same as the 'Willelmo Redale' who witnessed a charter for the lands of Lempitlaw in about 1250. Sir William (13th C.) listed in the period 1279–86 when he was witness to a grant of lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey by William de Soulis. He also witnessed the previous grant of the same lands by John de Vescy and its confirmation. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. William (13th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as 'William de Rydale', a Burgess of Inverkeithing. There are 3 other entries for men of the same surname, all called Hugh. Sir William (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1301 when there was an arrangement to swap him (as an English supporter of Edward I) for 2 Scottish prisoners. In 1305 there was a warrant of Edward I to pay him for assisting Robert Hastings at Roxburgh Castle. And in 1306 there was a letter asking for his protection (as well as others) from the Chancellor of England, since he was helping keep down Edward's enemies in Scotland. He may be the same man as Sir William of Tillmouth and Twizel (son of Walter), who was appointed Sheriff of Northumberland in 1314 and was one of the custodians of Norham Castle; his children included William (who succeeded) and Hugh. William (d.1328) son of Sir William of Tillmouth, who held lands in the Durham area. He was Constable of Norham Castle and High Sheriff of Northumberland, and played a role in the managing of the Marches for King Edward II. Part of his lands was held by his brother Hugh, whose descendants were later Sheriffs and Mayors of Newcastle. His lands were eventually inherited by his 3 daughters, Isabel, Constantine and Joan. This branch of family usually spelled their name 'Ridell'. William (13th/14th C.) possibly son of William and hence 7th Riddell of that Ilk. However, this period in the genealogy is difficult to follow, and there may well be additional generations, since some accounts suggest impossibly long lifespans. He probably died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Geoffrey. William (14th C.) Keeper of Barnard Castle. In 1330 he was allocated money for the rents of lands in County Durham in the period 1319–23. Sir William (14th C.) possibly eldest son of Geoffrey and brother of Sir Robert and Richard. However, these generations are quite confused. He may have been knighted by David II and died in the reign of Robert II. He was probably father of Quentin or Mungo (or both). William (15th C.) recorded as 'Wil. Ridile' in 1498/9 when he witnessed a charter in Edinburgh. Perhaps the same 'Willelmi Riddale' had an escheat in Lanark recorded in 1501. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as a witness in Selkirk for a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. William (16th C.) described in a sasine of 1535 (relating to Harden) as 'Bailie in that part' along with George. He was probably a son of the Laird of Riddell (although which one is unclear). William (16th C.) probably a younger son of John of that Ilk. He is described in a document of 1551 receiving the lands of Bewlie from John of that Ilk and his heir Walter, who was his brother. He may be the brother of the Laird of Riddell who witnessed a transaction in Lilliesleaf Kirk in 1564. William of Bewlie (16th C.) brother of Walter of that Ilk, and probably son of the previous Walter. However, it seems hard to separate different Williams and Walters around this time. He may be the William who warranted the lands in Lillieleaf that William Middlemas leased to John Donaldson in 1580. He witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581. He was 'in Lyllisle' in 1581 when he witnessed a sasine for Andrew, heir apparent of Walter of that Ilk (in the name of his sister Janet) for the lands of Wester Horsburgh in Peeblesshire from Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk. He may be the same William 'in Lillslie' who was involved in an action with William Middlemas in 1589. He could be the William 'in Lilleslie' whose son Thomas was signatory in 1592 to a caution for James Scott of Whithope, signed at Cavers Carre. In 1595/6 he was brother of Walter of that

Ilk when he had confirmed to him the '5 pound lands of Bewlie and the half cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf'. William (16th C.) probably the name of William 'Rydlie' who was accused in 1590 of rieving crimes along with Martin's Airchie Elliot and Hob of Bowholm Elliot. He may also be the 'William Rydlie of Hawcuppe' accused of rieving in 1590, along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse, Nixons, Shiels and others; it is unclear where 'Hawcuppe' may have been. William (d.c.1630) recorded being granted the lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as son of the deceased George and his lands were '6 husbandlands'. He may have been son of George of that Ilk who is recorded several decades earlier. His sister Margaret, wife of Rev. Andrew Duncanson, was served heir to his lands in 1630. William (16th/17th C.) miller at Todrig Mill. In 1617 there was a complaint by Mary Scott, Lady Bonnington, that he was responsible for the death of her only son. He was said to have been encouraged regularly by Walter Scott of Harden to harass her family; this was presumably part of a family feud connected with the death of Walter Scott's son Walter. In fact Mary Scott claimed that he was with the Scotts of Harden, fishing on the Ettrick on the lands of Scott of Bonnington, when the younger Walter was killed in a fracas. He was later part of a group of Scotts of Harden and their supporters who drove her off the land of Newhouse. William of Muselee (16th/17th C.) probably son of Andrew of that Ilk, with his mother being a Pringle. He received the lands of Newhouse (in Lilliesleaf) as his inheritance. He also had a charter of Muselee in 1618. He married Bessie Ainslie. Their sons may have been John of Muselee and William of Newhouse (although these generations are confused). Helen, a direct descendant, married William Crawford, minister of Wilton, in 1716. William (d.bef. 1652) son of Walter. He is probably the William 'portioner of Bewlie' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he gave his five-pound land of Bewlie and half a cotland to his brother Walter in Langhaugh. He married Helen Scott. In 1652 there is a marriage contract of his eldest daughter Margaret with Robert, 2nd son of Simon Elliot of the Binks. William of Newhouse (17th C.) probably younger son of William of Muselee. His 2nd son was Walter, who purchased the Minto estate. William of Bewlie (d.c.1695) son and heir of Henry. He was confirmed in the lands of Bewlie in 1669 and in 1670 gave part of the lands to his mother, Janet Scott. His sister Agnes succeeded to his lands in 1695 and married John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. He is probably the resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir William (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John, 1st Baronet of Riddell and brother of Walter, 2nd Baronet. He was knighted by Charles I and served in the army in the Netherlands, being appointed Governor of 'Desborough' (probably Doesburgh). He married Wendelina de Bercham (or perhaps Buchan) in 1654. He had sons Walter and William, who moved to New Jersey, and other sons, Richard and John Frederick. His daughter Anne Catherine married Nicholas, son of Francis Bowyer and became heiress to her brother John Frederick (in 1677) and sister Margaret. William of Friarshaw (d.c.1693) 2nd son of Sir Walter, 2nd Baronet of Riddell. He acquired the lands of Friarshaw in Dumfriesshire and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell. He was an advocate, perhaps being the William, writer in Edinburgh, who was deputed by others to subscribe to the Darien Scheme in 1696. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope. Their son Walter was the first of the Riddells of Glenriddell (formerly Gilmerston) in Dumfriesshire. Walter was served as his heir in 1693. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Wilton and Hawick Parishes. He married Bessie Telfer and their children included: Thomas (b.1694) and William (b.1697), baptised in Wilton; and John (b.1706), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1697 were William Scott and John Turnbull and in 1706 were John Scott 'whitegates' and John Scott 'younger Soger'. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of George. He may have been the William, son of George and Janet Phaup who was baptised in Robertson in 1681. He was living at Appletreehall in 1722. He witnessed a baptism for John Thomson (in Drinkstone) in 1722. He married Isobel Morrison in 1707 and their children included: Janet (b.1716); William (b.1717); John (b.1720); and Mary (b.1722). The witnesses in 1722 were John Thomson and John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) living at Borthaugh in 1707 according to the Robertson Parish records. His wife Isobel had acted as midwife for the wife of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Walter (b.1700), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were smith Robert Miller and Thomas Scott in Brieryhill. William (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1713 and 1719 he witnessed baptisms for gardener

James Dunn and in 1723 another for James Stot, miller in Weensland. He married Agnes Nichol in 1704. Their children included: Margaret (b.1705); John (b.1708); Agnes (b.1717); William (b.1719); and Helen (b.1721). The witnesses in 1708 were gardeners James Dunn and James Falsyde and in 1712 were gardener James Dunn and weaver James Sanderson. Walter (b.1700), John (b.1706), Francis (b.1710), Janet (b.1712), Andrew (b.1713), Janet (b.1715), Robert (b.1715) and Janet (b.1717), baptised in Hawick Parish, could also be his children (although there may be 2 families here). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Armstrong in 1704. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1714 he married Margaret, daughter of David Minto and their children included: David (b.1714); Margaret (b.1719); and an unnamed son (b.1721). William (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'fornicator' in 1725 when his son James with Euphan Telfer was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were another William (perhaps a cousin or other relative) and John Graham. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker of Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Greenshiels in 1714 (along with shoemaker John Scott) and another in 1717 for weaver Robert Wight. In 1717 he was abused in the street by 'Jafra the Piper'. He married Magdalene Deans and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1738); Henry (b.1739); and Isobel (b.1741). The witnesses in 1738 were shoemaker Robert Minto and Kirk Officer John Telfer. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He was probably son or brother of Walter, 'Dustfit'. In 1729 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick and referred to as 'late in Allanhaughmilne'. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1700. He is one of 2 Williams in Allanhaugh who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for John Scott, millwright in Allanhaugh Mill. William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1743 for tailor Walter Rae and another in 1745 for wright James Roger. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland' (1752); this was along with Charles Tudhope, who also witnessed the same baptism in 1745. He may be the shoemaker in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1761 for William Gledstains and Katherine Riddell (perhaps a relative). It is possible he was the William who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull and the William who witnessed a baptism for James Brown (also a shoemaker) in 1780. William (18th C.) married

Elizabeth Thomson in Minto in 1734. William (18th C.) resident of Woodfoot in Wilton Parish. He married Helen (or 'Nelly') Elliot and their children included Mary (b.1756) and James (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were Patrick Scott and George Hart. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1766 when his son John was baptised. He may be the William who married Mary Thomson in Robertson in 1753. His children were probably Robert (b.1753) and John (b.1766). He may be the William who in 1771 witnessed a baptism for Thomas Elliot in Newmill. He could be the William from 'Newmills' recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. William (d.1788) described in 'Dodsley's Annual Register' as dying at Selkirk at the incredible age of 116. He was said to have been a smuggler in his early life, and a great lover of brandy. He was also meant to have been a heavy drinker, who went through binges lasting several days. He married 3 times, the last being when he was 95. It is unclear how he was related to other local Riddells. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Anne Affleck and their children included Margaret (b.1769), John (b.1772), Barbara (b.1775) and Anne (b.1780). William (18th C.) 4th son of Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He emigrated to the West Indies, settling in Bermuda, where he was a merchant. He married Dinah Darrel and their children included John, Margaret, Robert, William, Sarah and Elizabeth. One of his descendants wrote a medical thesis. It is thought that this branch died out after only another couple of generations. William, W.S. of Camieston (1746–1829) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded since his older brother had died young. He was educated in Edinburgh and trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Thomas Cockburn and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1770. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was listed in 1788 as owner of 5 acres in 'Annay' in Melrose and Camieston in Lessuden Parish, as well as £390 of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. He may be the William of George Square, Edinburgh, recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. He served as a Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in at least 1798. He acquired the farm of Union Hall (also known as Linthill) in Lilliesleaf Parish, from his mother's family, the Hunters; however, in 1822 he sold it to William Currie, along with lands in Chapel, 'Mr. Scott's Acres in Lilliesleaf' and Porteous Croft' (according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). He also sold parts of Bewlie, which were later owned by Thomas A. Riddell Carre. He was listed among the voters in Roxburghshire in 1788 and was further listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1776 he married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of John Kerr of Cavers Carre. Their children were: Thomas (1778–1826), who succeeded; John (1779–1814), who served with the East India Company and died on the way home; Jane (1781–1849), who died unmarried; Adm. Robert (1782–1860), a decorated naval officer, who succeeded to the estate of Cavers Carre and took the additional surname ‘Carre’; Elizabeth (1785–1846), also unmarried; and Margaret (1787–1843), also died unmarried.

William (18th C.) wright of Hawick, recorded in 1792 when his daughter Helen married Robert Boa in Edinburgh. He could be the same as the William described as a deceased labourer of Hawick in 1794 when his daughter Isobel married David Simpson in Edinburgh. William (18th C.) joiner in Lilliesleaf. He was said to be a descendant of the Riddells of Riddell. He married Margaret Hervey and their children were: John, who was a joiner; Thomas, a thatcher; Walter, who married Batsy Young; Mary, who married Glasgow merchant Thomas Cochran; and Margaret, who married tailor James Walker. William (d.1800) recorded in the Hawick register of deaths. He was listed as father of Martha and Mary, so the rest of his family were presumably deceased by then. William (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Rutherford in Cavers Parish in 1789.

William (18th/19th C.) resident at Hermitage, born in Roxburghshire, and said to be a direct descendant of the Riddells of that Ilk. He married Catherine Brydon and they had 9 children: William (b.1801), who married Jessie Watson and emigrated to Canada; John; James; Thomas, who emigrated to Ontario, Canada and married twice; Janet; Willhelmina; Mary, also moved to Canada; Anne, emigrated to Canada and married Hugh Smith; married Robert Craig and emigrated to Canada. William (b.c.1770s) resident of Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Probably the same William was a ‘Driver’ in Newcastleton on the 1801 Militia ballot. William (d.1827) shoemaker of Hawick, perhaps related to the earlier William. He married Jean Goodfellow in 1796, and she died in 1838. Their children included wool-spinner Walter (1798–1863). William (b.c.1780) ploughman at Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (1789–1867) eldest son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott. He was a shepherd at Bellendean, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. He was also shepherd at Bellendean at the time of the Carterhaugh Baa (1815), when he played for the Yarrow side, being known as one of the best runners in the district; he would have hailed a ball had he not been pursued by a farmer on horseback. He and Henry Scott farmed together at Ramsaycleuch. He married Elizabeth Milne (1799/1800–53) in 1831. His wife is recorded at Ramsaycleuchburn in 1841 with 5 children. He was still recorded in a directory of 1868 as farmer at Ramsaycleuchburn. Their children (all of who were born at Ramsaycleuchburn except the first) included: Margaret (b.1831); Robert Borthwick (1833–62), who died unmarried; William Milne (1835–1913), who farmed at Ramsaycleuchburn after his father and died at Bucklands Cottage; James Scott (b.1837), who moved to Cumberland; Jessie (b.1839), who married William Easton; Agnes Scott (b.1842), who married Thomas Irving of Langholm, and secondly married James Lunn, also from Langholm; and Eliza (1844–52). Most of the family are buried at Teviothead. William (18th/19th C.) tenant at Harwood, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. William (18th/19th C.) sheriff officer in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households for the first (and perhaps only) time in 1838. Maj.-Gen. William of Camieston (1805–75) eldest son of Thomas of Camieston and descendant of the 4th Baronet of Riddell. His brother was Walter of Cavers Carre. He entered the East India Company’s military service in 1823, joining the 2nd Battalion of the 30th Native Infantry, rising through the ranks until achieving command of the regiment. He commanded the 30th Regiment of European Infantry during the Indian Mutiny, and was involved in many other important campaigns. He received several medals and retired from service in 1861, returning to live at Camieston. Afterwards he played an active role in the activities of the 3rd Roxburghshire Rifle Colunteer Corps. He was also Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. His father Thomas had married a sister of Col. Edgar Hunter of Linthill; after Col. Hunter’s death his father succeeded to the estate of Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish, but it was sold before he succeeded. He married Margaret, daughter of Capt. John Wilkie, and she died in 1905, aged 85. They had 9 children, and he was succeeded by his only surviving son, William. He was buried at Bowden. William (1801–83) son of William and Catherine Brydon, he was born at Hermitage. He married Jessie, daughter of John and Euphemia Watson, from Oxnam Parish. He emigrated to Canada in 1831 and was a farmer in Beverley, Ontario. His children were William, John, Euphemia and James. William (b.1803) son of Thomas and Rachel Stirling. He was a joiner in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on the north side of Main Street. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a wright. He married Agnes Deans in 1832 and their children included: Thomas, a carpenter who emigrated to America; James, also a carpenter; Janet; Walter, a baker; and Rachel. He was deceased by 1851, when his wife and 3 children were living in Hawick. William (b.1816) carpenter in Lilliesleaf, son of John and Elizabeth Turnbull and grandson of joiner William. In 1841 he was a journeyman, living with Elizabeth, who was probably his mother. In 1851 he is listed on the south side of Main Street. He married Esther Thomson in 1843 and their children were: Jane (b.1844), who married James Hogg; John (b.1846); Betsy (b.1849); Andrew (b.1852); George (b.1854); Walter (b.1856); and Ellen (b.1858). William Brown Clark (1835–56) youngest son of Henry Scott, minister of Teviothead. He was born at the Flex. He attended John Watson's Institution in Edinburgh, and then went to the University there. He was described as a student and poet of some promise, but died at the age of 20. His poem 'The Lament to Wallace' appeared in some collections of Scottish verse (formerly spelled 'Reddail', 'Reddall', 'Reddale', 'Reddell', 'Reiddall', 'Ridale', 'Riddaile', 'Riddaill', 'Riddall', 'Ridale', 'Riddele', 'Ridel', 'Ridelle', 'Rydal', 'Rydale', 'Ryddell', 'Rydel', 'Rydell', 'Ryedale', etc.).

Riddell-Buchanan (ri-dul-bew-ka-nin) n. compound surname adopted by some generations of the Riddells of that Ilk, after they inherited Buchanan estates through marriage in 1772. Its use was abandoned by more recent generations, who reverted to the use of 'Riddell', with 'Buchanan' as an additional middle name (see Riddell).

Riddell Carre (ri-dul-ker, -kar) n. Adm. Robert (1782–1860) 3rd son of William Riddell of Camieston and Elizabeth Kerr, daughter of John of Cavers Carre. He was a Captain in the Royal Navy, entering in 1796 and being present at several battles, including Copenhagen and Algiers. He eventually had the rank of Admiral. He succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate following the death of his uncle Alexander in 1817, and his mother in 1828. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his nephew Walter. Thomas Alexander (1831–1905) son of Walter. He succeeded to Cavers Carre on the death of his father in 1874. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 he was listed as owner of lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was Colonel in the 4th Battalion Royal Scots Fusiliers and served with the East India Company. He was also a Captain in the Ayrshire and Wigtonshire Militia. He was a Justice of the Peace, was on the county council for Lilliesleaf and was Chairman of Bowden Parish Council. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1865 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Alfred T. Fellows from near Nottingham; her brother was the archaeologist Sir Charles Fellows. He was succeeded by his son Ralph Gervase, and also had daughters Elizabeth Olive Geva and Grizel Geva. Walter (1807–74) 2nd son of Thomas Riddell of Camieston, and descended from the Riddells of that Ilk. He was born in Edinburgh and educated there. He worked as a merchant at East India House in London for 20 years. In 1848 he retired to Hertfordshire and in 1860 he succeeded to the estate of Cavers Carre after the death of his uncle Robert. He then took the additional surname 'Carre'. He moved back to Scotland in 1869. He was a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He devoted much of his time to researching the families and characters of the Borders. He contributed to local newspapers, as well as 'Notes and Queries', and was in demand as a popular lecturer. A collection of his writings was published after his death, 'Border Memories; or, Sketches of Prominent Men and Women of the Border' (1876), edited by James Tait of the Kelso Chronicle. In 1830 he married Elizabeth Riddell MacLauchlan, only surviving child of Lieut.-Col. Lauchlan MacLauchlan. He secondly married Mary Falconer, daughter of William Currie of Linthill. His son Capt. Thomas Alexander succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate. He was buried at Bowden.

Riddell Chaipel (ri-dul-chā-pul) n. former chapel said to have stood on the lands of Wester Lilliesleaf, later called Riddell. The location was supposed to be near the old ash tree not far from the gate leading from the Easter Lodge to the mansion house, a little south of the site of the old tower. The field in which the ruins were located was known as 'Chapel Park'. There is a report of 2 stone coffins being unearthed from the foundations around 1850, one containing a pot with ashes and pieces of armour, and the other containing bones of gigantic size.

Riddell Hoose (ri-dul-hoos) n. former mansion house on the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish. It replaced an earlier house, which in turn replaced the castle, which probably dates to Norman times. The original tower-house was probably constructed around the 14th century, enlarged in the 16th century and again in the 17th, making a long southerly front of 2 storeys. A third Storey was added in the 18th century, along with a north-west wing, with a north-east wing added in the 19th century. Tax was paid on 47 windows there in 1748. It was largely destroyed by fire in 1943, although it exists in photographs and drawings. The estate office, built in 1826, is now the main house of the estate, with lintels marking its construction and renovation in 1898 and the arms of the Sprots built into a gable (see also Riddell Toor).

Riddell Mains (ri-dul-mānz) n. former name for the main lands in Lilliesleaf Parish held by the Riddells of that Ilk. In 1643 it was valued at £910, being the bulk of the property of the Laird at that time. It was still listed in the same way in 1788, when owned by Sir John Riddell. It was probably equivalent to what was later just called 'Riddell'.

Riddell Mill (ri-dul-mil) n. former corn mill on the Riddell estate, on the opposite side of the main farm. The mill was water powered and fed by a small lade that is now covered. The mill building survives, although all fittings have been removed and it is now in use as a barn. Situated in a bend in the Ale Water, at the foot of Dunstane Height, it was formerly also known as Dunstane Mill. In 1643 the 'Town Mill and Mill thereof' was valued at £247, among the properties of the Riddells of that Ilk. However, it was sold before 1678, with value of £167. Thomas Lawrie was there in 1785. It was recorded as 'Lands of Townmill, and mill thereof' as part of the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788. John Haldane was miller there in 1841, James Haldane in the 1850s and Alexander Lauder in the 1860s. The name was also used for a water-powered saw-mill, built on the Riddell estate in the early 19th century.

the Riddells (thu-ri-dulz) n. family of Riddell of that Ilk, who gained lands at Riddell, in Lilliesleaf parish around the middle of the 12th century and were granted a baronetcy in 1628. About 1823 the estate was sold to the Sprots.

Riddell Toor

For several centuries the family were buried at Lilliesleaf. The family has a Norman origin and received the lands of Rydedale in Yorkshire, being given the designation 'de Ridel' for several generations. Tradition (encouraged by Sir Walter Scott) told of stone coffins at Riddell bearing the dates 797 and 937. However, there is no reason to believe that the family's origins can be traced back quite so far. The early history of the family is confused by the contemporary use of the same name by different men, with early Christian names including William, Geoffrey (or Galfridus) and Hugh. The history is further complicated by the family's habit of calling their lands after themselves (rather than the other way around), and it seems clear that the Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish was not the original family home. The name occurs in England at the time of William the Conqueror, when lands were granted in Northumbria, following the Battle of Hastings. Another branch of the family appears to have remained on the continent, settling in Italy in the 11th century. Meanwhile the English family moved to Scotland along with David I, Gervase being the first Scotsman. The lands they were granted near Lilliesleaf appear to have been named after their former designation. The arms of Riddell of that Ilk shows 3 ears of corn (or rye) and a red chevron. The family motto is 'I hope to share' and the crest shows a greyhound. Some papers from the Riddells of Riddell are held in the Northumberland Archives (formerly spelled 'Ridel', etc., and interchangeable with 'Riddle').

Riddells Creek (ri-dulz-kreek) n. small town in the state of Victoria, Australia, located between the cities of Melbourne and Bendigo. It was named by John Carre Riddell, who was born near Lilliesleaf.

Riddellshiel (ri-dul-sheel) n. farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, just to the north of Clerklands. The woods to the north are called Riddellshiel Plantation, and a small lake to the west is Riddellshiel Moss.

Riddellsteed (ri-dul-steed) n. Riddelstead, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Riddale Steid' on the 1541 rental roll. It is there said to be hereditary property of the Laird of Glendinning, held of the Lord of Liddesdale.

Riddell Toor (ri-dul-toor, -tow-ur) n. former peel tower on the Riddell estate. The name is also used for the more modern tower built nearby, referred to as the General's Toor. The first fortified house on these lands was probably built shortly after the Riddell family acquired the lands in the 12th century. But the existing structure is probably from the 14th century, and was only revealed after the mansion burned down in 1943. The surviving walls are in the south-west corner. There is also evidence of 16th century stonework. The tower was probably converted into a mansion house in the 17th century, making a long southern front of 2 storeys, with a 3rd floor added in the 18th century, along with further wings in the 18th and 19th centuries. The ruins are now among mature woodland to the north-east of the main farmhouse.

ridder (ri-dur) n., arch. someone who acts to separate combatants – ‘...and that he was the Ridder who went from his house to make peace betwixt the said Wm. Olifer and Thomas Hugan’ [PR1716].

Riddington (ri-din-tin) n. Anthony (1911–98) from Countesthorpe, Leicestershire. He was a professional cricketer, who played for Hawick & Wilton in the 1930s.

Riddle (ri-dul) n. (see also Riddell) George John (1830–1920) son of John and Isabella Richardson. He was a tailor and clothier and cousin of John, also a tailor in Hawick. His sister Helen married John Graham of ‘Graham’s Hotel’. He married Margaret, daughter of William Clark and Jane Murray, and she died in 1921, aged 91; she was a cousin of the father of Sir James A.H. Murray. The couple celebrated their golden wedding in 1900, when they had 5 sons, 2 daughters and 19 grandchildren, and they lived to see their 70th wedding anniversary. Their children were: John, fishmonger, who married Helen Elliot; William, joiner in Birkenhead, who married Jean Roberts; Andrew C., engineer on the Aberdeen steamships, who emigrated to Australia and married Georgina Johnstone; James, stockingmaker, who married Mary Elliot; Thomas, a tailor, who married Margaret Dalgleish; George, Co-op store manager in Newcastle-ton; Jane, who married hosiery manager Robert Hamilton; Robert, bank clerk in South Africa; Anne, hosiery worker; George J., Secretary of the Universities Club, Edinburgh, who married Lily Mackenzie; Isabel, ‘Bella’; William, chemist, who married Hilda Evans; Elliot, with the Bank of Nova Scotia in Toronto; Jean, who married accountant Percy Howard of Langholm; and Alexander Westwater, a chemist. Helen

‘Ellen’ (b.c.1813) born in Hawick, daughter of tailor Walter. She was proprietor of a grocer’s shop at 24 High Street, who also kept boarders. She started by selling 2d mutton pies at weekends, the business being carried on by her niece (of the same name) as a confectioner’s, and later by other family members. It was popularly known as ‘Ellen Riddle’s’ for about a century. She is recorded as a High Street grocer on the 1851 census, living with her brothers Francis and Walter, and nieces Helen and Isabella. Probably the same Helen is recorded in Slater’s 1852 directory as an earthenware and glass dealer on the High Street, as well as a grocer. In 1861 she was recorded as a ‘wool framework trimmer’ at 24 High Street, living with her niece Ellen and 3 boarders. Helen (b.1845/6–1914) daughter of tailor John and Margaret Armstrong. She was niece of the earlier Helen, from whom she took over the grocer’s and pie shop at 24 High Street. Already in 1851 she was living with her aunt Helen (and uncles Francis and Walter), as well as her younger sister Isabella, at 24 High Street (a few houses along from her parents and siblings). She was still living with her aunt in 1861 and in 1871 she was ‘Pie-Baker’ and head of household, living with her sister Mary Ann and brother Frank. James Haining describes her in the 1930s as maker of ‘celebrated pies still remembered’. In the latter part of the 19th century the back of the shop was also used as a meeting place for debating societies and other groups. J. (18th/19th C.) clogger in Castle-ton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (18th/19th C.) chaise-driver in Hawick. The death of his infant daughter is recorded in 1822. John (b.1800) born in Selkirk, probably son of William and Agnes Hutton. It is said that the family came from Carterhaugh in Yarrow. He was a tailor in Hawick at 12 Howegate. He is listed as a tailor on the Mid Row in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the Howegate in 1837. He is also listed as a Howegate tailor in Slater’s 1852 directory, with his son John listed as a tailor on the High Street. He was still on the Howegate on the 1861 census, and was listed as a tailor and grocer. He married Isabella Richardson. Their children included: John (b.1819), also a tailor; William (b.1821); James (b.1822); Isabella (b.1824), who married wool merchant James Melrose; Thomas (b.1826); Agnes (b.1828); George John (b.1830); Helen (b.1831); and Catherine (b.1839), who married wool-spinner Walter Scott. John (b.1811/2)

born in Cavers Parish, he was a tailor on Walter's Wynd in the 1851 census. He was thus one of 3 contemporary Hawick tailor's with the same name! His wife was Ellen and their children included Isabella and John. John (b.1819) son of Howegate tailor John, he was a tailor on the High Street. He is listed in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 28 High Street, a master tailor employing 3 men; in 1861 he was listed as a tailor and clothier at 24 High Street. He married Margaret (perhaps also called 'Mary') Armstrong in 1843; she was sister of ironmonger John Armstrong and died in 1888, aged 66. Their children included: Helen (b.c.1846), who grew up with her aunt Helen and took over the pie-making business; Isabella (b.c.1848); Walter (b.c.1850); Mary Ann (b.c.1853), who married William C. Simpson and continued pie-making; Francis (b.1855); Margaret (1857–96), who married joiner George Gall; Lancelot Armstrong (b.1859); Agnes (b.1862); and John Armstrong (b.1865). John (b.c.1820) shoemaker at 8 Howegate. His wife was Maria, and their children included: Thomas; Frederick; and Cecilia. He could be the John who donated a model of Hermitage Castle to the Museum in 1863. John Turnbull (19th C.) Hawick character of the mid-1800s, nicknamed 'Tip-madaisy'. Mary Ann (1852/3–1931) daughter of tailor John. She married William C. Simpson. She continued the confectionary side of the business run by her sister and aunt (both called Ellen Riddle) at 24 High Street. Walter (1789–1849) son of William, he was born in Selkirk. He became a tailor of Hawick and was a trustee of the Relief Kirk. He is listed as a tailor on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may have been related to John, who was also a Hawick tailor at about the same time. In 1841 he is listed at about 23 High Street. He married Isobel Kedzie, whose family came from Slaidhills, and she died in 1838, aged 51. Their children were: Helen, who was a grocer (of pie fame); William (b.1822/3), a tailor, who emigrated to London, Ontario; Francis, joiner; Walter, blacksmith; and Isabel. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Tait and their children included: John (b.1728); and John (again, b.1730). The witnesses in 1728 appear to be John Scott and John Paterson. William (b.1822/3) son of tailor Walter. He married Wilson Stuart in Hawick in 1846. He emigrated to Canada, and settled in London, Ontario. William (19th/20th C.) joiner, with business where the Burgh yard was later located. He was a Councillor and J.P.

and was for a long time Session Clerk and elder of Allars Kirk. He was probably descended from tailor Walter.

ride (rīd) v., arch. to fix boundaries, especially by perambulation, pp., arch. be ridden – 'The said day the Baylyeas and Counsell appoynted the Commone to ryd upon Fryday nixt, the first day of June ...' [BR1705], '...did appoynt and ordaine the Common to ryd upon Fryday come eight dayes, being the twenty-sixth of May instant and current' [BR1710] (also written 'ryd' and 'ryde', the word was used to describe the circuit of the itinerant High Court of the Judiciary in the 15th century, and was used in the context of boundary marking in Selkirk in the early 16th century; from Middle English; note the confusion with the word 'ride' meaning to go on horseback, which may have been confounded with this word in references to the 'common riding'; note that the past participle use transposes the usual object into a subject, cf. belang).

ride (rīd) v., arch. to ford a river on horseback, be fordable – 'But when the land-sergeant the water saw, It winna ride my lads, quo' he ...' [CPM].

ride oot see Ride-oot

Ride-oot (rīd-oo') n. Ride-out, an organised visit to one of a number of local villages or farms on Tuesdays and Saturdays in the weeks between the Picking of the Cornet and the start of the Common Riding. They are essentially practices for the big weekend, and are not part of the official Common Riding, being organised by the Cornet. The first Ride-out seems to have been held in 1891 (with Andrew Haddon as Cornet and J.E.D. Murray as Right-Hand Man) and was an outing to Lilliesleaf by 5 consecutive Cornets, followed 2 weeks later by another ride-out via Branhholme, Northhouse, Skelfhill and Priesthaugh to St. Leonard's. The first Ride-out to Mossypaul was in 1901, James Sutherland's year. The Tuesday Ride-outs were originally held so that shopworkers and others could attend on half-day closing, with the mill-workers being able to attend on Saturdays. Women have been officially allowed on most Ride-outs since 1997. They extend over either 5 or 6 weeks, depending on when the Picking is. The venues are chosen each year by the Cornet (with advice from the Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father). The first Ride-out has been to Bonchester since about the last war. The premier event is the ride to Mossypaul, which is 2 weeks before the Common Riding. After the last Saturday Ride-out, the Principals stop off at Hornshole. There are sometimes special one-off rides because of the place of residence of the new Cornet. Locations have included Bonchester, Cavers, Cogsmill, Denholm, Ettrickbridge, Harden House, Hermitage, Lilliesleaf, Mossypaul, Newmill, Phillhope Bridge, Robertson, Skelfhill, Southfield, Teindside, Teviotdale Lodge, Teviothead, West Buccleuch and Wolfelee. Each ride-out starts with a muster in Allars Crescent, leaving from Backdamgate. The Right-Hand Man acts as front marshal and the Left-Hand Man as back marshal. There are usually lots of cars packed with picnics which go to meet the riders at the appointed location. There is usually a sing-song in the village hall or similar, and before leaving the ‘Big Fower’ sing 5 verses of ‘Teribus’ while mounted. On returning to town, the Principals dismount at the Backdamgate and usually carry children on their shoulders round to the steps of the Tower where there is a strive and more song singing. A junior ride-out (for primary school pupils) was started in 2010 – ‘oo yaise the sorta ‘no the ful shillin’ kinda general English ... ‘twae horses short o a rideoot’, that wud be a Hawick yin’ [IWL] (the usual plural is ‘Rideoots’, although ‘Rides-oot’ might be more correct English).

ride the fair (rīd-thu-fār) v., arhc. to open a fair by riding in procession. Magistrates from Jedburgh rode the market at the Winter Fair in the early 18th century and had to be rescued from the crowd by the Hawick Magistrates! Similarly the Commissioners of the Duke of Buccleuch tried to ride the fair one year and had to be rescued from the Bailies, with some resulting injuries – ‘[The Burgh Magistrates proceeded to] ryde the fair’ [BR1672] (also ridin the fair; note that this meaning of ‘ride’ always referred to being on horseback, unlike in common riding).

ridin (rī-din) n. the Riding of the Marches, or Common Riding, the annual marking of a town’s boundaries, traditionally on horse-back – ‘The said day, Allane Deanes, travellour, being accusit for not being at the ryding and merching of the Commoun ...’ [BR1645] (note that the original meaning may have had nothing to do with horses, see ride).

the Ridin o the Mairches (thu-rī-din-ō-thu-mār-cheez) n. the central part of Hawick Common Riding, performed by the Cornet and his followers on the Friday of Common Riding week. The riders mount at St. Leonard’s (after the Chase) and proceed to the furthest point of the Common, via Wulliestruther and Acreknowe

(the Cornet passes along the Hawick side, the others free to choose), for the ceremonial ‘Cutting of the Sod’. The cavalcade proceeds to the Moor for the Races, then rides via Crumhaughhill to Myrselawgreen. The Principals next perform the Dipping of the Flag at the Coble Pool. Afterwards the whole party goes to the Millpath for the proclamation that the marches have been ridden and the Song-singing. Before the Division of the Common in 1777 the entire Common boundary would be marched, and many marker turfs or stones positioned, as well as neighbouring sheep and cattle driven off. Sometimes this would be done on foot over the few days before the ceremonial riding. The ceremony is believed to have taken place since at least the 16th century, but could be even older. The Council used to appoint 12 Burleymen to assist the Bailies in riding the marches, the appointment being a courtesy one after the Division, and the last appointments being made in 1854. Footmen as well as horsemen are recorded as part of the procession in 1725. The practice of riding armed with pistols was officially discontinued in 1784. In the years 1900–04 and 1921 it was switched to the Thursday morning and in 1910–13 it was moved to the Saturday. J.E.D. Murray carried it on himself during WWI and Chap Landles led the unofficial rides during WWII, while in 2001 there was an organised walk round the marches in November (see also the Common Ridin).

ridin the mairches (rī-din-thu-mār-cheez) n. ceremonial marking of the boundaries of a town Common. Scottish towns with this tradition include, Annan, Dalkeith, Lanark, Linlithgow, Rutherglen (discontinued in the 19th century) and Sanquhar, as well as the towns of the Borders.

Ridley (rid-lee) n. John (b.1794/5) civil engineer from England. He was living at Thorlieshope in 1861, but probably only there temporarily for hunting. His wife was Mary. Nicholas ‘Nick’ (1929–1993) Baron of Liddesdale, born in Northumberland, he was educated at Eton and Oxford University. He became an M.P. in 1959, held several appointments under Edward Heath and then became a great supporter of Margaret Thatcher. He was Minister of State at the Foreign & Commonwealth Office (in the years before the Falklands War), Financial Secretary to the Treasury, Secretary of State for Transport (authoring the Ridley Report on how the Conservatives would deal with the Unions), Secretary of State for the Environment (where he popularised the phrase 'NIMBY', but reduced public funding for environmental protection) and Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (which he was forced to resign after likening Helmut Kohl to Adolf Hitler). He was also responsible for introducing the 'Poll Tax'. In 1992 he was created a life peer, choosing the title 'Baron Ridley of Liddesdale', despite objections from Scottish politicians. His puppet image on 'Spitting Image' always had a cigarette in its mouth, and he died of lung cancer shortly after being elevated to the Lords.

rieve (reev) v., arch. to plunder, rob, raid, rustle – 'God send the land deliverance Frae every reaving, riding Scot: We'll sune hae neither cow nor ewe, We'll sune hae neither staig nor stot' [LHTB], '... On their rieving raids through the glens and glades' [TK] (also written 'reive' and sometimes 'reave'; cf. reave and raif).

Rieve (reev) n. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Meadshawshiel in 1794. He married Mary Balmer in Robertson in 1789 and their children included: Agnes (b.1791); Margaret (b.1794); Joan (b.1801); and James (b.1805). John (18th C.) workman in Hawick. His wife was Margaret Douglas and their son John was baptised in 1743. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1735 when his daughter Mary was baptised. He is probably the John who married Margaret Dalgleish in Robertson in 1734. John (18th C.) tenant in Howcleuch. He married Esther Glendinning in Hawick in 1761; she died in 1807, aged 66, and is buried in Borthwick Waas. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Margaret (b.1763); Betty (b.1765); James (b.1772); and Esther (b.1779). Witnesses in 1765 and 1772 were the whole congregation. Additional children who might have been his (baptised in Southdean and Robertson) included: John (b.1767); and Nelly (b.1777). He may be the John who in 1767 witnessed a baptism for herd John Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Craik in 1742. He is probably the William who married Bessie Murray in Robertson in 1736. His children included: Helen (b.1740); and Andrew (b.1742) (also written 'Reive' and 'Reve').

riever (ree-vur) n. a plunderer, robber, marauder, freebooter – 'They deem you the children of rievvers, Unkempt, as of old, and rude; Still bound to vie with friend or foe, In keen and narrow feud' [FH], 'Whan thou sawist ane reyfar, than thou becamist airt an' pairt wi' him

... ' [HSR], 'On lone hill-sides and by fast rushing rills, Reivers and warriors now at peace are sleeping ... ' [TK], '... an mosstrooper an reever rade bye ti foray an fecht an reipin raid' [ECS], '... The nag of the reiver was well nigh spent, With a dragging hoof and his nose to the bent' [WHO], 'And when reivers rode and mosstroopers trod To victory or defeat On their reiving raids through the glens and glades Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet' [TK], 'A haunted land, where stalks the spectral form Of buckled reiver, driving stolen kine' [WL], 'Oo're born o rievvers, Oo're no receivers, Oo gie the orders, Oo er the Borders' [DoS], 'A'm a drunkard, a Reiver, I cannot defend A user o' women, a killer o' men' [DoA] (also written 'reiver' and 'reaver').

rievit (ree-vee', -vi') pp., poet. robbed – 'The gangs o' the wicket hae reifet me; but I haena forgotten thy law' [HSR].

rife (rif) adj., arch. plentiful, abundant – 'The hearts o' twa – a man an' wife – Wha through a lang, lang weddit life, Conjointly faced the varying strife O' changing fate, An' died, at length, their love as rife, As when they met' [JoHa] (this meaning rare in standard English).

riff see ruif

Riffy (ri-fee) n. John (18th C.) apparent name of a witness in Hawick in 1725, for the baptism of a child of George Dickson, herd in Rashiegrain. It is possible that what is meant is 'Rieve' or something else.

the Rifle Club (thu-rī-ful-klub) n. Hawick Miniature Rifle Club was in existence in the early 20th century, patron Lord Roberts.

the Rifle Volunteers (thu-rī-ful-vo-lin-teerz) n. an alternative title for Hawick Volunteers, also known as the Border Rifles, they eventually became the Territorial Force of the K.O.S.B.

rift (rift) n., v. belch – 'Behald thaye rift owt wi' thaie mooth; swords ar in thair lipps ... ' [HSR], 'An what A'd ti haud-sae, A Wasna boass, – if the truth be telld, A was riftin-fowe!' [ECS], '... wui the weeks o eis mooth aa froe, an riftin gas till eis een grat' [ECS].

rig (rig) n., arch. a ridge, space between furrows of a field, section in a field – 'Thou waterist the riggs o't abundentlie; thou settelist the furs thero' ... ' [HSR], 'Coma awa' Kristy, Keep up yer rig' [GWe], 'Across the rig wi' lightnin' speed The glintin' sickles flew' [JT], a ridge of high ground, long narrow hill, surviving in several place names, e.g. Caerlenrig, Eildrig, Ninestane Rig, Outsideside Rig, Pilmuir Rig, Southdean Rig, Wauchope Rig, Woll Rig, etc.

Rig (rig) n. name formerly used locally to refer to Caerlenrig, Woll Rig and Winningtonrig (also written 'Rige' and 'Rigg').

the Rig (thu-rig) n. former shepherd's cottage at Southdean Rig in Southdean Parish. Robert Thomson was shepherd there in the mid-1800s.

rig an fur (rig-an-fur) n., arch. the ridge and furrow of a ploughed field – 'Folding, plowing, and sowing round the inner Grayhill to near the Craigiewell, where the rigg and fur still appears' [HAST1916], the ribbing pattern of knitted stockings, corresponding to 'purl and plain' – 'Her lang lantren chafts left a howe roun' her mou', Her rig-an'-fur cheeks had a leathery hue' [BM1901], 'Clinty ... attired in sleeved waistcoat, knee breeches, blue-grey rig and fur stockings, and red night-cap' [RM] (noted by E.C. Smith).

Rigby (rig-bee) n. Hugh J. (19th/20th C.) worked as postman in Denholm. He also had a small photography business on the Poplars for a while. He married Jessie, daughter of Bedrule schoolmaster William MacNeill.

Rigend (rig-end) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish. John Cavers was there in 1771. It is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when James Nichol was farmer. It was probably near Coldhouse (it is 'Rigg End' in 1771).

Rigfit (rig-fi) n. Riggfoot, farm in Ewesdale, on the Meikledale Burn to the west of Meikledale. William Graham was there in 1821. Henry Anderson was shepherd there in 1841 and 1851 (also written 'Riggfoot').

Rigg see Rig

Rigg (rig) n. James (17th C.) distant cousin of the Riggs of Atherne. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. His lands of Carberry are near Musselburgh. It is unclear what his local connection was. Katherine see Lady Katherine Douglas.

riggin (ri-gin) n. the ridge of a roof or the roof itself, also applied to roofing material or rafters – '... except for the screws and riggings of houses within the Burgh belonging to Burgesses' [BR], '... puss had 'hirpled thrice withershins' round house, and then suddenly made a spring to the riggin ...' [EM1820], 'May poortith lean, wi' viage mean, Ne'er come within thy biggin; I hope that ye will never see It rest upon your riggin'' [DA], 'An on A snodged ma leifih-lane, till the riggins an ruiffs o Denum ... cam in sicht' [ECS], 'And then, I trow, we're proud to see Upon the riggin's resting ...' [TCh], '... And Back-Brae craws on the riggin'' [DH], arch. the spine, back-bone – 'And oure the auld man's rigging back She laid her rannel-tree shanke' [JTe], 'And she lap sae yald, and spanged sae hich, Her rigging banes did rattle' [JTe], 'She had neirly flung the sportsmen a', An' howffed i' the howdie's biggin', Hadna' the maister's heavy kent Fawn whack upon her riggin' [WiSp], the crest of a road or other figurative uses – '... to help and mend the channels and caussays from their respective foordoor upon each syd of the street to the tope rigging of the cassay ...' [BR1715].

riggin-stane (ri-gin-stān) n., pl. ridge stone of a roof – 'Mending the sclate roof and pointing the rigging-stone and scuies of the said Kirk' [1735/HAST1926].

riggit (ri-gee', -gi') adj., arch. standing out in ridges, protruding – 'There, find ye that, my harden't, hornie loof, An' riggit ribs, where snurk'lt skin is fatit To lanely hing ...' [JoHa] (see rig).

riggit (ri-gee', -gi') pp., arch. rigged, fitted out with clothes – 'An' soon gat riggit right an' clean: A trigger lad was nae where seen' [RDW].

Right-Haund Man (rī'-hawnd-mawn) n. Right-Hand Man during the Common Riding, being the previous year's Cornet. He gives recommendations for the next Cornet, and provides assistance to the new Cornet. He rides with the Cornet during many of the ceremonial events, wearing the same green coat etc. He acts as front marshal during the Ride-outs. Occasionally someone has served twice as Right-Hand Man, such as William Stoddart in 1875, and W. Lockie Thorburn after WWII. Mr. Lunn stood in as Left-Hand man in 1875, even although he had not previously been Cornet, and Robert Anderson stood in as Right-Hand Man in 1897, the year before he was Cornet! It is unclear at what point the positions of Right- and Left-Hand Man became

rigbody (rig-bo-dee) n., arch. the band over the saddle of a working horse used for supporting the shafts (cf. rigwuddy).

rigwuddy (rig-wu-dee) n., arch. a strap suspended over a carthorse’s saddle for holding the shafts (there are spelling variants; also rigbody).

Riley (rī-lee) n. George (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Martha (b.c.1780) grocer and lodging keeper, recorded at about 25 Howegate in 1841. She had a son, William, who was a shoemaker. She was probably the widow of George (also written ‘Rilley’).

Rillmount (ril-mown) n. villa built on West Stewart Place for Thomas Cathrae in about 1879.

rime (rīm) n., poet. hoar-frost, frosty mist – ‘... As the clear could licht o’ the mune Played glint on the beads o’ rime’ [WL].

Linkin’ owre the derkened yird In caller whurly-whas and rins’ [DH].

ring (ring) n., arch. a smart blow – ‘A ring i’ the lug’ [GW], v. to strike the head or ears, causing them to ring.

ring (ring) v., poet. to reign, exercise rule – ‘God rings ower the heathin: God sits upon the throne o’ his haliness’ [HSR].

the ring (thu-ring) n., arch. a ring dance, traditional dance in a circular formation – ‘This dance is still retained among the Scottish highlanders, who frequently dance the Ring in the open fields, when they visit the south of Scotland as reapers, during the Autumnal months’ [JL].

Ringan (ring-un) n. pet form of the Christian name ‘Ninian’ (also written ‘Ringand’ and ‘Ringane’).

Ringan Red (ring-un-red) n. fictional character in John Leyden’s ‘Lord Soulis’, who is the champion of the Lord of Hermitage – ‘Syne he’s ca’d on him Ringan Red; A sturdy kemp was he, From friend or foe in border field Who never a foor would flee’ [JL] (also ‘Red Ringan’).

ring an wheel (ring-an-wheel) n., arch. a military manoeuvre for resisting cavalry – ‘And charging past, with rapid stride, They formed the ring-and-wheel, And cheered with lusty Border pride From out their fort of steel’ [JI].

the Ring i the Haugh (thu-ring-i-thu-hawch) n. former popular name for the area at the Common Haugh where men used to gather to play ‘pitch and toss’ during the 19th century –

ringle-eied (rinng-ul-īd) adj., arch. having a wall eye, with an eye squinting outwards – ‘Ringle-eied = having an eye asquint, so as to display much white’ [ECS].

Ringlees Knowe (rinng-leez-now) n. area on the eastern slopes of Berryfell Hill, between the Slitrig and Rule valleys, just north of Fernieles Sike. There are the remains of a small settlement here, about 50 m by 35 m, partly destroyed by quarrying. To the south is a 0.8 m-high stone, which has been set up, probably as a marker.

ring-tails (ring-tālz) n., pl., arch. arrears in rent, odd pieces of business left when a firm is wound up, left-overs, remnants – ‘Ring-tails, Small remnants of an thing; as, in relation to drink, it is said, ‘Tak aff your ring-tails, and brew again’, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

Ringwood (ring-wood) n. parish and market town in Hampshire, with the same name as lands to the south of Hawick. Ringwood is recorded as early as the 10th century, with a grant by King Edgar to the Church of Abingdon. Just before the Norman Conquest it was held by Tostig, who was Earl of Northumbria, and brother of King Harold. Given Tostig’s connection to Northumbria, and the fact that he held extensive lands elsewhere, there is a possibility that the Teviotdale Ringwood was named after the English one by either him or some other common landowner. The origin of the name is suggested to be ‘rima wuda’, meaning ‘border wood’.

Ringwood (ring-wood) n. hunting dog owned by Dr. Grant of Hawick in the mid-19th century. He was a sire of ‘Bugle’, costing 30 shillings, arrived late one night and by morning had bitten essentially everyone in the household. It took some time to train in obedience, joining the hunt at 13 months and was the biggest hound in the doctor’s otter-hunting pack. He produced several black-and-white puppies with ‘Rally’. The dog is described in H.H. Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865). Another dog of the same name was owned by Ballantyne of the Shaws, which won first prize at Bellingham Show and hunted for its 10th season in 1864.

Ringwud (rinng-wud) n. another name for Ringwudfield.

Ringwud (rinng-wud) n. Oswulf (12th C.) son of Uchtred, he was listed as a witness to the grant of King David to Melrose Abbey in about 1145. He granted the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the reign of King Malcolm. This was probably sometime between 1153 and 1165. The grant was with the consent of his son, also Uchtred, and also Uchtred’s son Uchtred, with a confirmation in the period 1165–68. It is unclear to what family these men belonged or why they previously held these Teviothead lands; however, the family names are similar to relatives of Gospatric, Earl of Northumbria and also of Dunbar; a later Gospatrick also witnessed the confirming charter in about 1166. He was mentioned in a charter of the 1360s confirming Ringwoodfield to Melrose Abbey, with his name there being ‘Osulfo de Rengwude’. Uchtred (11th/12th C.) father of Oswulf. He probably owned the lands of Ringwoodfield, as well as lands elsewhere. It is possible that he was the first baron of those lands. Uchtred (12th C.) son of Oswulf. He gave permission for his father granting the lands of Ringwoofield to Melrose Abbey.

Ringwudfield (ring-wud-feeld) n. Ringwoodfield, area on the southern side of the upper Teviot valley, formerly in Cavers Parish. It was long a property of Melrose Abbey, described as lying upon the ‘Alwent (Allan) and Teviot’ and given to the monks by Oswulf during the reign of Malcolm IV (mid-12th century). The boundaries of the lands are briefly described, but most of the names are now unfamiliar – ‘Blachapol’, ‘Bollinesburn’, ‘Crumbirche’, ‘Pennango’, ‘Brunemore’ and ‘Blackaburne’. The grant was remade by Philip de Valognes, Chamberlain of Scotland just a few years later. It was confirmed by Uchtred, son of Oswulf (and his son Uchtred) in about 1160. In about 1358 the specific lands of Penangushope and Caldcleuch, within this barony, were granted to Melrose Abbey by William, Earl of Douglas. There were further confirmations in the reigns of Alexander II and David II. It is recorded as ‘Ringwood’ in 1360 when Sir William, Earl of Douglas, charged Sir William of Gledstains, his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers, to defend the Abbot and Convent of Melrose as lords of the lands there. The Abbey presumably held the lands throughout the 15th century, and David Scott of Braxholme and his son Robert were made bailies in 1484. In a document of 1500 it is referred to as ‘the lordship of Ryngwodfield’. It contained (at least) the lands and steadings of ‘Ryngwodchat, Stobycot, the Burghe, Pryschauch, Cauldcluch, Standholm, Penangushop, Sowdinryg and the Bowenhyll’ (now mostly familiar places), which were leased by Walter Scott of Branxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500. His son, Sir Walter, was appointed Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, including Ringwoodfield, in 1519 and reappointed in 1524. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 there is a note about the Comptroller's expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick and Rodono); it seems likely that this was because Scott of Buccleuch had temporarily forfeited the lands to the Crown. In 1540 the 'fermes' were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £52 6d; in addition the King's shepherds were paid for various amounts of grain in the lands of 'Northous, Stobbe-Tait, et Cokburn', 'lie Burgh' and 'Vestcotrig et Southcotrig et Bolburg' (with transcription errors). The 'lands of Ringwoodfield and the office of bailiery of Melroseland' are recorded in the Scott retour of 1553/4; the lands were then valued at £52 Scots. In 1558 the Prior of Melrose complained about Walter Scott of Branxholme possessing the lands 'in Ryngwodfeld' and the bailiary of other lands of the Abbey. In about 1564 the lands were valued at £3 6s 8d, and included Brugh, Stobcote, Ringwoodhaugh, Bowanhill, Grange, Priesthaugh, Penangushope, 'Woisterrie' [probably Westcoterig], Northhouse, Southdeanrig and Cauldcleuch; Sir Walter Scott inherited them from his grandfather at this time. Sir Walter Scott (the 'Bold Buccleuch') inherited the lands from his father in 1574. In 1621 Walter, Earl of Buccleuch resigned the lands to Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Melrose, when it is listed as Cauldcleuch, Northhouse, 'Crawshope', Stobicote, Brugh, Soothdeanrig, 'Coilburn', Westcoterig, 'Rowanhill' [probably Bowanhill], Priesthaugh and Penangushope'. In 1660 the lands are recorded being put in 'wadset' to pay the fine imposed by Cromwell on Scott of Buccleuch; it was still technically in the Lordship of Melrose and consisted of Cauldcleuch, Priesthaugh, Northhouse, 'Coliburne', Stobicote, Doecluch, Soothdeanrig, Brugh, Fairnyside, Peelbrae, Penangushope, Langcleuchside, Phaup, Linhope and Frostylee. In the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch it appears to no longer be a Lordship, but it heads a list of farms that were mostly formerly contained within it and now referred to as lying within the Lordship of Melrose, namely 'Ringwoodfeild, Caldcluch, Northous, Thirlestane, Braidhauch, Crowishoipe, Stobit-coat-burgh, Suddinrig, Coatburne, Westcotrig, Bowanhill, Preisthauch, and Pannangoishope'; essentially the same list occurs in the 1653 service of heirs for Mary Scott of Buccleuch. It is recorded again in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693 (transcribed 'Kingwoodfield'); it is then within the Lordship of Melrose. The name does not occur after the 17th century, but is crudely the same as 'Teviotdalehead', as used by the Buccleuch estates. It seems likely that if there was a tower house it was on the land of 'Ryngwodchat', which may be an error for 'Ringwoodhaugh'. This possibly corresponded with the modern Broadhaugh, a name that only appears from the end of the 16th century. The lands may also have been connected with the Scotts of Allanhaugh. It has been suggested that the associated Grange of the monks of Melrose lay somewhere between Bowan Hill and Priesthaugh. Note that local historian Walter Deans seems to have mistaken 'Ringwoode fell' for the farms of Berryfell, and 'Ringwood Hatt' for a field there called the Hates (the name of the area survives in the nearby Ringwood Hill; it is 'ringwude' in the 1160s, 'Ringwde' in about 1170, 'Ryngwodfelde' in c.1358, 'Rengwude' and 'Rengwodfeld' in c.1360s, 'Ringwodfeld' in 1484, 'Ryngwodfeild' in 1500, 'Ringwodfeld' in 1519, 'Ryngwodfeild' and 'Ringwodfeild' in 1524, 'Rigwodfeld' in 1538, 'Ringwodfeild' and 'Rinvodfeild' in 1553/4, 'Ringwodfeild' in 1557, 'Ringvodfeild' in 1564, 'Ringwodfeld' in 1574, 'Ringwodfeild' in 1634 and 'Ringwodfeild' in 1660 and 1663; note that there is a town and parish of Ringwood in Hampshire, which is presumably unconnected).

Ringwudhaugh (ring-wud-hawch) n. Ringwoodhaugh, probable name for a steading near Ringwood Hill, recorded as 'Ryngwodchat' in 1500. In 1557 it was 'Ringwodhat' when Adam Scott of Allanhaugh paid rental for it to Melrose Abbey; it was valued at £5 at that time. In a rental roll of about 1564 it is 'Ringwoodhauch'. It may correspond to the modern farm of Broadhaugh.

Ringwud Hill (ring-wud-hil) n. Ringwood Hill, hill which lies directly south of Newmill and above Broadhaugh farm, reaching a height of 247 m. Its name is surely connected with the ancient lands of 'Ringwood' or 'Ringwoodfield' in upper Teviotdale, once owned by Melrose Abbey.

rin-im-ower (rin-im-ow-ur) n., arch. a children's game resembling 'King's Covenanter', involving trying to capture opponents as they cross a street, with the captive replacing the captor (noted by J. Jamieson; elsewhere called 'Willie Wastle', 'Tom Tiddler's Ground', etc.).

Rink Ferm (ringk-ferm) n. Rink farm, near the confluence of the Tweed and the Ettrick. It is the site of a pre-historic settlement, sometimes called ‘Rink Camp’. This was also where the Hawick Farmers’ Club instigated an annual sheep market in October 1779, which became one of the biggest in the South of Scotland. The land here belonged to the Laird of Edgerston.

Rinkie Robson (ring-kee-rob-sin) n. nickname for some members of the local Robson family.

Rinkvale Cottages (ringk-vāl-ko’-ee-jeez) n. group of houses between Wellogate Place and Dalkeith Place in the Terraces, built by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company. It was named in 1889 from the fact that curling was once played on the neighbouring pond at Loch Park.

rinnal (ri-nal) n., poet. a runnle, stream – ‘Grit rinnals o’ water rin down mine eyne ...’ [HSR].

rinner (ri-nur) n. a runner – ‘hei was a keen rinner when hei was young’, ‘when hei saw the polis comin, hei din a rinner’, ‘Rinners are swarmin’ like bees in a hive ...’ [JoHa], arch., poet. a streamlet – ‘On the other side of the runner of the bog along the march’ [C&L], ‘His eyne ar als the eyne o’ dows bie the rinner o’ waters ...’ [HSR], ‘Ther is ane rivir whase rinner sall mak’ gladsume the citie o’ God ...’ [HSR].

the rinnin o the braes (thu-ri-nin-ō-thu-brāz) n., arch. former tradition in Denholm (and possibly elsewhere) in which a short race was held on a wedding day for the guests, with prizes given to the winners.

rinnin track (ri-nin-trawk) n. a running track – ‘At the last A’m on the rinnin track ...’ [IWL].

rin oot (rin-oo) v., arch. to overrun with a plough, plough into adjoining land – ‘... William Wilson, tenant in Hawick Shiels, had run out with his plough too far in the said Common ...’ [BR1717].

rin-the-country (rin-thu-kun-tree) n., arch. a fugitive, someone who has fled the country because of misdeeds (noted by J. Jamieson).

ripe see rype

ripley (rip-lee) adv., arch. maturely, with consideration – ‘... and beande thairwitht riple awisit come in agan befor me, and deliuerit that the saidis landis of Quhithop ...’ [SB1500].

ripplin-kaim (rip-lin-kām) n., arch. a comb formerly used for separating flax seeds from the stalk – ‘This was done by means of a ‘rippling comb’ – a piece of board generally about 3 feet long, fixed to the ground, in which a number of iron teeth were thickly and perpendicularly fastened; through these the lint was drawn by handfuls till the seed was all separated’ [JAHM].

riptur (rip-tur) v., n., arch. rupture – ‘Ne’er in oor days, nor in ony’s before, Was seen siccan ripture o’ riot and revelry’ [JoHa] (also written ‘ripture’).

Rispylaw (ris-pee-law) n. former fortified house and farm on the Hermitage Water, roughly where the modern Braidlie farm is located, and near to an old drove road. The hill just above Braidlie is ‘Rispy-Law’. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is described as ‘A farm than no man doth know ye mrches of’ (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Rispylaw’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Rispylaw’ and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Rispylaw’; probably from ‘rispie’, meaning ‘long, coarse grass’).

rit (ri) v., arch. to mark ground with a spade as a guide to ploughing or cutting turf, to cut turfs with a spade.

Ritchie (ri-chee) n. Rev. John (1669/90–1744) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1697, he was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1701 and became minister of Minto Parish in 1703. He remained as minister until his death, although he had 2 separate assistants in the 1740s. He was one of the men appointed to examine Hawick’s new candidate for Schoolmaster in 1718, and preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. He married Barbara Ainslie (daughter of Rev. James and cousin of Rev. Walter), who died in 1715, aged 45. His sister Elizabeth married Andrew Ogilvie (Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch) in Minto in 1714 (also written ‘Richie’).

ritther (ri-thur) adv. rather – ‘where wud ee ritther gaun yer holidays, Spittal or Whitley Bay?’, ‘what’s gaun on, or ritther, what’s no gaun on?’, ‘There’s naewhere A wad ritther be ...’ [IWL], other – ‘ritther is Hawick, where wud ee like ti bide?’ (cf. the locally less common raither).

Ritson (rit-sin) n. Chris Cornet in 2013. In September of his year, he carried the Borderers (Flodden quincentenary) Flag as it toured Border towns. William (1811–95) born in County Durham to a Methodist family, he became a railway contractor and was one of the main men behind the construction of the Border Union Railway. He is particularly remembered for being in charge of the construction of the Shankend Viaduct and Whitrope Tunnel. He lived at Woodley Field near Hexham.

rive (rīv) v., arch. to tear, tug firmly, pull asunder – 'Agnes Scott is convicted of ... thrusting her hand in his mouth and ryveing out of his cheiks' [BR1695], '...and ryveing of the locke of the tolbuith doore, and ryveing up the dailis of the loft of the sd. tolbuith ...' [BR1706], '... Then frightful shrieks the welkin rive – As I, with rapture, wake alive' [JL], '...in kase they tramp them under their feet, an' turn agane an' raive you' [HSR], 'The gurlie wind wi' ragin' thuds Was like to rive my claes in tatters' [JT], '... Mirk memories rive and smert' [WL], '... As callants and candidates rive divots frae opposite banks And daub them dourly at yin another ...!' [DH], n. a tear, rent – '...for that whilk is putten in til fill it up takith frae the garmint, an' the rive is made waur' [HSR] (formerly spelled 'ryve' and sometimes 'reive'; the past tense can be 'rived' or rave, while the past participle forms are reen and 'riven').

Riversdale Mills (ri-vurz-dāl-milz) n. 19th century hosiery factory on Mansfield Square, between Eastfield Mills and the railway. It was constructed around 1888 for William Kedie & Co., which was then essentially an offshoot of Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. It was sold to Innes, Chambers & Co. around 1909. It was later the main site for Lockie's, and more recently Monk Cotton (also sometimes erroneously referred to as 'Riverside Mills', perhaps because of similarly named mills in Selkirk and Jedburgh).

Riverside (ri-vur-sīd) n. street in Denholm, off the Minto Road, also called 'Riverside Drive', with construction beginning in the 1930s and being completed after WWII. The land here was originally the North Crofts, given by Douglas of Cavers in 1862 for allotments.

Riverside Caravan Park (ri-vur-sīd-ka-ru-vawn-pawrk, -ku-ra-) n. caravan park between Hawick and Denholm, adjacent to Hornshole, established in the 1960s and much expanded in recent years. There is a footbridge accross the Teviot near there (note the older pronunciation of 'caravan' with accent on the 2nd syllable).

Riverside Drive (ri-vur-sīd-drīv) n. street in Denholm, on the west side of the village, between Sunnyside and the river.

Riverside Mills see Riversdale Mills

Riverside Tweeds (ri-vur-sīd-milz) n. Riverside Tweeds (Hawick) Ltd., a small textiles company, which ran 1968–80, with records in the National Archive.

River Teviot see the Teviot

rizzar (ri-zar) n., arch. the red currant, Ribes rubrum (also 'reid rizzar', with 'white rizzar' being the white currant).

rizzer (ri-zu) v., arch. to dry in the sun or in front of a fire (also written 'rizzar').

rizzert (ri-zurt) pp., adj., arch. dried in the sun, parched – '...whan the bruizzin, frizzlin heat turns frush things tewd an rizzert' [ECS], so drawn together as to be split (said of burnt skin).

Roach Villa (rōch-vi-la) n. former name for a large house in Hawick. Robert Greenwood, commission agent, lived there in the early part of the 20th century.

road (rōd) n. way, direction, course – 'ee're in the road mun', 'git oot o ma road, for God's sake', '... For deil a ane's coming their road – They a' rin thegither to Limey' [JoHa], '... rather than be forced tae mairry the Miser she wad take lag bail and find her road to Canada' [JEDM], '... the daft berries That ripen the wrang road roond in colour frae ocht else' [DH], '... the trains huff and puff a' the road up to Riccarton thrae Copshaw Holm' [DH], 'It wasni till half road throwe the first hymn ...' [IWL].

road (rōd) v., arch. to run along in front of the gun-dogs and hunters instead of taking flight, to follow game running in this way (noted by J. Jamieson).

road-end (rōd-end) n., arch. place where a smaller road meets a main road, neighbourhood, locality, vicinity of one's home – '... an aamaist the whole road-end cam oot-ther-oot ti waal an glowr at the unordnar munsie' [ECS], 'There was Jock, wui Robbie an Yid, an kens whae forby, stannin at the road-end' [ECS] (synonymous with gate end).

Road End (rōd-end) n. former placename near Newcastleton, possible the same as Steeleroad-end. William Elliot was recorded there in a directory of 1868.

Roadheid (rōd-heed) n. Roadhead, road leading up from the Cauld, previously known as 'Blaikie's Brae'. The name was formerly applied to the top of that road, e.g. to the houses at Norwood that are above Roadhead, and on some old maps (e.g. the 1859 and 1890 Ordnance Survey maps) is marked at Langlands Road. Hence there is some confusion about whether the name applies to the whole of that road, or just the top part. It was adopted as a street name around 1890. There was once a draw well (possibly Hawick's only one) situated there. The road is shown in a photograph dating from about 1885. William Dalgleish is recorded there in 1791 (the name derives from being at the head of what was previously described as ‘the kirk road from Wilton to Langlands’).

Roadheid Brae (rōd-heed-brā) n. Roadhead Brae, another name for Roadheid.

Roadheid Cottage (rōd-heed-ko’-eej) n. former small cottage at Roadhead, which bore the date 1765 on a door lintel and survived until at least the late 19th century.

the Roadhoose (thū-rōd-hoos) n. popular name for one of a number of pubs, in recent times referring to Burnfoot Roadhouse or to Thorterdykes.

road-injin (rōd-in-jin) n., arch. a steam engine used on the road, ancient form of lorry – ‘A duist hyit jaargin things, an that menseless road-injin fair garrd mei girrl!’ [ECS].

Roadside (rōd-sīd) n. place name used in Wilton in the 19th century, apparently referring to part of the modern Princes Street, perhaps corresponding to Ladylaw Road. It may at some times have been used as an alternative name for Roadhead; however, in the 1790s both names were used at the same time and hence they were different. Walter Scott and William Nichol were recorded there in 1791 and Hector Blaikie in 1797 and 1801.

the Road Trustees (thū-rōd-trus-teez) n., pl. body set up following the Turnpike Acts of the late 18th century. They were responsible for raising money through tolls and spending it to improve roads, bridges etc. (as well as to pay off any subscribers). This led to a huge improvement in the quality of local roads. The also contributed to the construction of many new local bridges from the 1770s onwards.

Roan (rōn) n. farm to the west of the confluence of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters, on the Ryedale Burn. There was formerly a tower here, possibly on a mound in front of the modern farmhouse. The tower still existed in the early 18th century, although there is now no sign of it. Simon Armstrong, younger of Whithaugh was there in 1592/3 and ‘Sym Armstrong of the Rone’ is recorded in 1601. James Scott of Bowhill is recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, paying tax for 3 hearths. William Mitchelson, Patrick Nichol and James Turnbull were also recorded there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 2695 acres, bounded by the Liddel Water, Blackburn, Tarras and Foulshiels. It was at that time the farm was combined with Woolock and the main farmhouse was in the same place as the modern one. John Laing paid tax on 25 windows there in 1748. James Grieve was farmer here in at least 1788–97, Robert Elliot was shepherd in 1797 and James Muir was a servant in 1799 and 1801. Thomas Thomson was there in 1821. A different Robert Elliot was farmer there in the first half of the 19th century and James Douglas was tenant in the 1860s. It could be the ‘Ran...’ recorded in that area on a rental roll of c.1376 – ‘The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o’ The Roan Scartit in wi’ a pencil’ [DH] (also ‘the Roan’, it is ‘the Rone’ in 1592/3; marked ‘Renn’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and is on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Roan Fell (rōn-fel) n. high ground near the head of the Hermitage Water, between Millstone Edge and Hartsgarth Fell. It lies on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire and reaches a height of 568 m – ‘See! they have gained the Roanfell’s heathery crest, Not in a line, but hound to hound abreast’ [HNo] (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie’s 1770 map).

roar (rōr) v. to cry loudly, bawl – ‘hei wasni juist greetin when they got bate, hei was roarin’, ‘But she ...roared and grat, an’ grap ma airms’ [HAST1868], ‘What’s she roarin and greetin at?’ [ECS], ‘When they sortit the muddle oot at last, The lassies grat and roared ...’ [DH].

the roarin game (thū-rō-rin-gām) n. soubriquet for curling, played on various ponds around Hawick from the earliest years of the 19th century and dying out in the early 20th.

roast (rōst) n., poet. a roost, particularly in the phrase ‘rule the roast’ – ‘...as this House of Representatives must evidently continue to ‘rule the roast’ [RW].

roast (rōst) n., arch. rust – ‘Layna up for yoursels thesauers upon yirth, whare maethe an’ ruost deth corrup’ [HSR], v., arch. to rust.

roastit (rōs-tee’, rōs-ti’) pp., adj. roasted, uncomfortably hot – ‘A’m roastit in this muckle jersey’.

roasty (rōs-tee) adj., arch. rusty.

Rob (rob) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Robert.

Robb (rōb, rob) n. William Cuthbert (20th C.) High School English teacher (nicknamed ‘Pongo Robb’), author of several educational books in the 1930s to 50s. He also wrote the 'Touchstone' column in the Hawick Express, years??.

Robber's Law (ro-burz-law) n. occasional version of Rubserlaw – 'And well this night may Robber's Law Take off his hat and loudly crawl; I see him now his head high raise, Just like Mount Ætna in a blaze' [MP].

Robbie Barrell (ro-bee-baw-rul) n. nickname for Robert Scott, one of the many of the same name in the mid-1800s.

Robbie Dye (ro-bee-dI) n. nickname for a supporter of Hawick Rugby Football Club – 'And though players come and players go, Wi my last braith I'll prophesy – They may fade away, when they've had their day, But there'll aye be a Robbie Dye!' [DH] (the name is recorded at least as early as the 1950s, and based on some early supporter, although popularised in the mythic poem by Davod Hill).

Robbie Dye (ro-bee-dI) n. poem by David Hill, first published in the Hawick Express in 1957 under the pseudonym 'HAB'. It is included on 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry' (2006), recited by Bert Armstrong.

the Robbie Dyes (thu-ro-bee-dIz) n. nickname for Hawick R.F.C., derived from the popular name of an early fanatical supporter of the Club.

Robbie Hunter's Well (ro-bee-hun'-urz-wel) n. popular name for a former public pump well, situated against the side of a house at the foot of the Back Raw.

Robbie's (ro-beez) n. modern bar and diner at 8 High Street, run by Robbie Watt. In 2004 it became the Tower Inn.

Robbie Scare a Hair (ro-bee-skār-a-hār) n. nickname for auctioneer Robert Scott (presumably because of his lack of hair).

Robbie Scott (ro-bee-sko) n. name occurring in a version of a song by Jock Gray, probably from the early 19th century – 'And the laddie he's but young, And the laddie he's but young, And Robbie Scott ca's up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum' [DJG] (note that in another version the name is 'Rob Rodger', so this may be simply an error).

Robbie Speedy (ro-bee-spee-dee) n. former nickname – 'Dan Narry and Kit i' the Bar, The Cud and Coulter and Five O'clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scour, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock' [HI] (also written 'Speedie'; possibly related to the Spalding family, cf. Chair-lie Speedy).

Robert

Robbie the Cow (ro-bee-thu-kow) n. nickname for Robert Scott in the mid-19th century – 'Here's Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here's baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o' the gate, While Dunnerum danders ower the knowe' [HI].

Robert (ro-bur) n. name of 3 Kings of Scotland. Robert I (1274–1329) known as 'Robert the Bruce', he was great-grandson of David I, he was King of Scotland 1306–1329. He refused to meet the English on even ground, and achieved immortal fame for leading the 1314 defeat of the English at Bannockburn, which made Scotland a sovereign nation. He granted part of Branksburn to Walter Comyn and the rest to Henry Baliol in 1307, and split the Barony of Wilton between Gilbert Maxwell and Henry Wardlaw at about the same time. He also granted part of Kirkborthwick to William Barbour, and moved it from Roxburghshire to Selkirkshire. He visited Jedburgh at least once late in his life, granting a charter there in 1329. His heart was supposedly returned from the Crusades by Sir James Douglas and reputedly buried under the chancel's east window at Melrose Abbey. Bruce Court is named after him – '...Repeats the tales of old heroic times, While Bruce and Wallace consecrate the rhymes' [JL].

Robert II (1316–90) called 'the Steward', he was the only son of Walter, the 5th High Steward of Scotland and Marjorie daughter of Robert I. He played a strong role in the government of Scotland under his younger uncle David II, being Regent along with John Randolph, 3rd Earl of Moray. He was one of the Scots leaders at Halidon Hill, and escaped from the Battle of Neville's Cross. Imprisoned for rebellion against David, he eventually succeeded to the throne in 1371 after David's death. Confusion over the legality of his marriage with Elizabeth Mure later led to disputes among his descendants. Robert III (c.1340–1406) King from 1390. He was the son of Robert II by his mistress Elizabeth Mure, later legitimised by marriage. He was disabled by being kicked by a horse. Born John, he changed his name on assuming the throne. The kingdom was effectively ruled by his brother Robert, Earl of Fife and later Duke of Albany. He married Annabella Drummond. His son David, Duke of Rothesay became lieutenant of the kingdom, but died mysteriously at Falkland Palace in 1402. He was succeeded by his only surviving son, James I.

Robert (ro-bur) n. (10th/11th C.) carpenter of Hassendean, who witnessed a charter in about the 1220s. He is recorded as 'Roberto carpentario'.

Robert

Robert (ro-bur') n. (12th C.) son of Guy, he witnessed a document as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1147. This was confirmation of a gift to Coldingham Priory that Gospatrick, brother of Dolphin, had given to Edrom and Nisbet; his name is given as 'Roberto filio Widonis'. The same Robert also witnessed other documents relating to lands in Scotland, the last being in about 1170. This included renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the period 1165–68 and a papal document referring to his gift to Newbattle Abbey in the 1160s. It is unclear if he was part of some well known family.

Robert (ro-bur') n. (13th C.) recorded as Parson of Ewesdale in about 1245. He was witness to a charter where William of Conisbrough granted his lands of 'Rig' (probably in Dumfriesshire) to his daughter Alicia and John Fraser. He seems likely to be related to the later Robert who was also Parson at Ewes.

Robert (ro-bur') n. (13th C.) listed on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as 'Robert fiz Rauf persone del Eglise de Seint Cuthbert de Ewytesdale'. He was thus presumably son of Ralph and served as Parson of the Nether Kirk of Ewes.

Robert Hill (ro-bur'-hil) n. hill shown being near the source of the Slitrig and Rule Waters on Gordon's map c. 1650, between the 'Maidens papes Hills' and 'Wriggs Hill' (probably Wigg Knowe). It is unclear which hill this would be, since there is no similar modern name of any significant nearby hills. Perhaps Wyndburgh Hill (the highest in the area) is meant, or its southern ridge, being composed of Outer Knowe Head, Crow Knowe and Kiln Knowe, suggesting a connection with 'Robert's Linn' below. This is probably the 'Robertis hill' mentioned in the 1562 document describing disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule; this was adjacent to the lands of Windburgh Hope. It may be the 'Roberthill' that was among lands sold in 1607 by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. It is also probably the place mentioned by Scott of Satchells in relationship to the Scotts of Thirlestane – 'John's son, Robert, was a warden in his time, The fight of Robert's hill he did gain; He for his king and country did maintain the truth; He married Scot, daughter to the laird of Buccleugh' [CWS].

from Langlands to Scott. He was probably either a Langlands or a Scott himself.

Roberton (ro-bur'-in) n. village about 6 miles west of Hawick along the Borthwick, centre for the surrounding parish. As a place name it has existed since at least the 14th century. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott in the 14th century (as recorded in 1410), and it is possible they were named after him. Sir William Gledstains acquired the lands in the last years of the 14th century and the Gledstains of that ilk retained the lands through the 15th century. John Scott of 'Weltoun' and 'Valis' acquired the lands in 1502 and later in the 16th century there was a celebrated faster called John Scott who came from the area (and possibly the same family). James Scott, last of Roberton sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1627. There were 9 'communicants' recorded living there in 1650, namely John Hume, Margaret Walker, Patrick Hume, Robert Hume, Walter Telfer, Margaret Wilson, Malie Brown and Bessie Scott. The Parish was formed in 1689 out of parts of the surrounding parishes and after much dispute. In 1694 there were 7 hearths recorded there. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. Robert Scott was recorded as a resident in 1743. The teinds of Roberton, Howcleuch and Hoscote were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 and 1802 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, while Adam Scott of Galalaw (in 1785) and Robert Pott of Galalaw (in 1802) paid the Land Tax of £100. The present church, built in 1863/4, replaces a 17th century building, which stood behind the present Manse. This church was built in a time of religious and political upheaval in Scotland, before the new parish of Roberton was created. The church is built on what appears to be a former settlement, which may have been the 'Robert's Town' from which the village takes its name. The farm there was part of the detached section of Hassendean Parish until 1690. The present village contains the Forman Hall, designed by J.P. Alison about 1922, and used for community events, as well as a stone pillar War Memorial. The police station there closed in 1931, but the small primary school remains. 'Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Roberton' was written by Kathleen W. Stewart in 1991 and 'Roberton: the making of a parish' by George O. Wood in 1992 – 'Tell Ashkirk, and Satchells, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse' [WSB]

Roberton

(the name first appears in a charter of Robert III, probably in the late 1390s, it is 'Robertistoun' in 1430 and is usually spelled 'Robertoun' or 'Robertoune' until the late 17th century, with Scott of Satchell's writing 'Robert-toun' in 1688, 'Robertoun' in 1710 and 'Robertown' still recorded in 1743; it is marked 'Roberston' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Robertoun' on Adair's c. 1688 map, as well as Gordon's manuscript map c.1650, where it is wrongly placed to the east of Hawick; the origin is simply 'Robert's farm', possibly referring to Robert Scott, mentioned in 1410 as a former owner).

Roberton (ro-bur'-in) n. Alexander (b.1779/80) from Linton, he was a cooper in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835, being at Howdenburn in 1835, and Appletreehall in 1840. He was at Appletreehall on the 1841 census, with his surname given as 'Roberton'. In 1851 he was a former cooper living at Craigrig in Roxburgh Parish with his son-in-law John Forsythe. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Jamie local character of unknown age whose portrait is in the Museum.

Roberton Burnfit (ro-bur'-in-burn-fi) n. former farm just near Roberton, which was part of Hassendean Parish until 1689. It was mentioned in the 1694 Hearth Tax recods. It was distinct from Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, a mile or so up the valley. John Gowans was there in 1720, John Taylor in at least 1725–26. William Lawson and John Gowans were there in 1743, Thomas Govenlock in 1752, Walter Scott in 1763–65, David Scott in 1767–74, Adam Robson in 1775 and Adam Riddell in 1781 (it is 'Robertown burnfoot' in 1772).

Roberton Cleuch (ro-bur'-in-klooch) n. name given to the deep wooded part of the Glen Burn, just to the north of the B711 through the village.

Roberton Cleuchfit (ro-bur'-in-klooch-fi) n. former piece of land near Roberton. It is possibly the same as 'Roberton Burnfit' or could be the land on which the house known as 'Cleuchfoot' was built. It is described (perhaps in the 17th century) as a 'pendicle of Robertoun', once owned by Walter Scott of Woll and then by Alexander Scott of Galalaw.

Roberton Free Kirk (ro-bur'-in-free-kirk) n. original official name for the Snoot Kirk.

Roberton Glebefit (ro-bur'-in-gleeb-fi) n. name for houses in Roberton at the foot of the Glebe road. Margaret Laidlaw was a grocer there in 1841, and Thomas Murray and family were also living there.

Roberton Kirk

Roberton Kirk (ro-bur'-in-kirk) n. church in Roberton village. The present church dates from 1863/4, designed in Gothic style by David Rhind. It is a rectangular building with small buttresses and a porch, with the bell hung over the gable. It has 2 memorial stained-glass windows and a war memorial in the grounds. The earlier church stood at the top of Manse Brae, where the cemetery is still located (and was marked there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). It was built in 1658/9 following complaints by Borthwick residents of the lack of a nearby church, which led to decades of dispute with Hassendean. A stone dated 1659 is built into the cemetery wall. It is recorded being repaired in 1721 and rethatched in 1738 and 1769, but the thatch replaced with slates in 1770. Flagstones were first laid on the church floor about 1789. The old graveyard is part of the modern one, and is the burial place of Chisholmes of Chisholme, Lockharts of Cleghorn and Potts of Todrig and Borthwickshiels. This replaced the earlier cemetery at Borthwick Waas, while the church replaced Kirk Borthwick, which formerly stood opposite that cemetery. The church bell has an inscription reading 'For the Tolbuith of Melros – 1649' and the initials of John, Earl of Haddington. It may have been brought from Hassendean (along with the new roof) in 1690, and may also have spent some time in the river near Hornshole (according to tradition). The oldest surviving communion token is small and made of lead, bearing the inscription 'R.K.' and the date 1705. The history of the earlier church, the formation of the Parish of Roberton in 1690, and the suppression of the Parish of Hassendean is complicated, and mixed up with national (as well as local) politics. In the early years the glebe and manse were far from ideal; a new glebe was arranged in 1721. The Manse was repaired in 1827 and it is stated in 1834 that the glebe consisted of 16 acres, and crossed the county boundary, so that the Minister could vote in both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. An ornate piece of stonework (a scroll capital), unearthed in an adjacent field in 1963 (and now in the Museum), may come from Hassendean Kirk. Note that a separate Free Kirk congregation was set up after the Disruption of 1843, this being known as 'the Snoot Kirk' and used until 1927, with the congregation merging with that of the main church in 1930. Roberton church was linked with Teviothead 1966–72, then linked with St. Margaret's and Wilton South 1972–83. It became formally united with St. George's West in 1984, which was renamed Teviot Parish in 1996 A roll of the ministry is: John Colt, from c.1663; Thomas Shields 1689–c.93; John Ferguson 1696–99; Robert Scott 1700–1727; Henry Erskine 1728–73; James Erskine 1774–86; James Hay 1786–1825; William Berry Shaw, assistant 1801–12; Alexander Nivison 1826–44; Charles Kinnear Greenhill 1845–86; Mercer Hall 1887–1927; Æneas E. McInness 1894–1929; Cyrus M. Mortimer 1930–54; James B. Primrose 1955–60; Samuel Weir 1960–65; Robert McConnell 1966–83; Neil R. Combe 1984–.

Roberton Moss (ro-bur'-in-mos) n. boggy area to north of Roberton village. The filter works for Alemoor were built there.

Roberton Pairish (ro-bur'-in-pā-reesh) n. parish around Roberton village and the Borthwick valley, created in 1689 from parts of the neighbouring parishes, including Hawick, Wilton and disjoint parts of Hassendean, including the area immediately around the village itself. Todshaw and neighbouring farms came from Hawick Parish, with Milsington, Girnwood and other farms coming from Hassendean, and Harden, Highchesters formerly being in Wilton. This followed about 3 decades of dispute, with Roberton Kirk being built in 1659, during confusion over the secession of Scott of Buccleuch (who owned much of Hassendean), but then material from the new Kirk being removed to repair Hassendean, following a decision in favour of Hassendean in 1666. The Revolution of 1688/9 and the restoration of Presbyterianism saw a successful petition to create Roberton as a Parish. The moving of the old church roof from Hassendean to Roberton in 1690 incited violence from the parishioners of the suppressed parish of Hassendean. The Parish was about 13 miles long and 5 miles wide, bounded by Ettrick, Yarrow, Ashkirk, Selkirk, Wilton, Hawick, Cavers and Eskdalemuir. The Parish long had part (about half) within Selkirkshire, but it was moved entirely into Roxburghshire in 1891. Parish registers go back to 1680, but the early ones are fairly incomplete, and the first part is really for Hassendean. An early Parish records is of £38 being stolen from the poor box in the unoccupied Manse in 1700. The first meeting to assess the Parish poor was in 1740. The records have significant gaps in the 1740s, 1750s and 1760s. Note that there is a separate parish of the same name in Lanarkshire, which sometimes causes confusion.

Roberton Place (ro-bur'-in-plis) n. private housing built in 1970 at the top of the West End, off Longbaulk Road, and named after the village of Roberton.

Roberton Schuil (ro-bur'-in-skil) n. school in Roberton village. It was noted at the General Assembly in 1724 that all parishes in the Presbytery had schools except for Roberton and Ettrick. The first record of a teacher being appointed was in 1765, and a new schoolhouse was built in 1790. In 1834 it was reported that 'one-third of the parish is so situated that the children cannot attend', since they are 'at a distance of five and eight miles'. This situation was probably the reason for the establishment of small schools at Howpasley and Redfordgreen. A new schoolhouse was finished in about 1835. In 1836 it is recorded that there were 60 pupils in attendance. The present school building was erected in 1875 and long served as the local primary school, with several attempts to close it, and closure finally coming in 2010. The Borders Archive has School Board minutes for 1873–1919. The schoolmaster's house in the 1830s contained 5 rooms, including kitchen. Robert Miller was schoolmaster in at least the period 1798–1807 and probably until 1822. Andrew Hogg was master there in the 1820s, until about the mid-1830s, and Thomas Anderson from 1833 until the 1860s.

Robert Paiterson Place (ro-bur'-pi'-ur-sin-plis) n. Robert Paterson Place, housing development at Burnflat, built in 2006 and named after the inspiration for Sir Walter Scott's 'Old Mortality', who was born there.

Roberts (ro-burts) n. Rev. John minister of Southdean Kirk 1951–65. His time as minister included the period when Southdean first became linked with Edgerston.

Robert's Hill see Robert Hill

Robert's Linn (ro-burts-lin) n. waterfalls off the Slitrig, where the Newcastleton road crosses a deep ravine. This area is famous for jasper, which was used to make the first Burgh Seal for example, and also for fossils. Further up the stream can be seen signs of the former lime-workings that gave their name to the Limekilnedge. The Catrail ends near here, leading to speculation that the falls had some special significance for our early ancestors. The area is also sometimes known as 'the Linns'. The high bridge there was rebuilt in 1903 using girders salvaged from the Tay Bridge disaster. A story circulated that it was bombed by a Zeppelin during WWI, but this was unsubstantiated. The bridge collapsed and was rebuilt as an embankment in 1982. There was once a farmstead in the area, where Robert Elliot and family were living in 1794 – 'Ca'in his pownies throwe fair and foul By the clints o' Robert's Linn ...' [DH] (also written 'Robertslinn'; the stream there may be the one marked 'The Ryillyn B.' on Blaeu's 1654 map, suggesting either an error or a different origin for the name; it is 'Robertslin' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Robertson (ro-burt-sin) n. Alastair S., M.B.E., elder son of Nichol. He served as an apprentice designer with Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co., then worked with Munrospun in Galashiels, before joining Walker, Caledon, tweed manufacturers of Belfast, where he became Managing Director. He was a keen rugby player for Hawick junior teams, and also in Northern Ireland and served in the Royal Navy during WWII. He married Mairi Charlton from Ireland. Alexander (b.1779/80) from Linton, he was a cooper in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835, being at Howdenburn in 1835, and Appletreehall in 1840. He was at Appletreehall on the 1841 census, with his surname given as 'Robertson'. In 1851 he was a former cooper living at Craigrig in Roxburgh Parish with his son-in-law John Forsythe. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jeany Blaikie and their children included Thomas (b.1807). Alexander (b.1795/6) born at Makerstoun, he was blacksmith at Minto. He was recorded there in the electoral roll of 1837 and was still there in 1851. He married Isabella Blyth and their children included: Jane Tait (b.1831); Thomas (b.1833); Margaret (b.1834); Alexander (b.1836); and James (b.1840). Alexander (b.1801/2) from Pencaitland, he was gamekeeper at Commonsides in 1851 and 1861. He was living at Commonsides Cottage since at least 1841. In 1834 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Govenlock, innkeeper at Mossypaul. Their children included: James (1835–1918), lawyer in Edinburgh; Robert (b.1837); Alexander (b.1838); John (b.1840); Margaret (b.1845); and William (b.1847). Alexander (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Gledstains and their children included Janet (b.1852). Andrew (d.bef. 1808) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Jackson, who died in 1808. Their children included: Andrew (b.1763); Barbara (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Elizabeth (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Andrew (again, b.1773) Andrew (18th/19th C.) labourer at Appletreehall. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Walter was also listed as a labourer there and was surely related. In 1799

he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish'. Derek (1965–) born in Hawick, grandson of Wullie 'the Voo'. He is an ambulance paramedic, working in Hawick but living in Newcastleton. He wrote The Men Who Marched Away – Liddesdale and the Great War (1992) and 'All These Fine Fellows: Hawick and District and the Great War 1914–1918' (1999). Rev. Edward Macallan (b.1928) educated at Aberdeen and Oxford Universities, he became an Episcopalian minister. He was at Bristol and Swindon before coming to Hawick, where he was Rector at St. Cuthbert's Kirk 1960–69. He left to take up a Scholarship at Queen's College, Birmingham, moving to Alloa, where he worked as a teacher, before taking charge of Bathgate 1978–82, moving to Strathtay in 1982, Auchterarder in 1990 and retiring in 1993. Eric 'Pinner' (??–) son of Wullie 'the Voo'. He has been Captain of Hawick Golf Club and British one-armed golf champion (having lost an arm in an accident at Hawick Station). He is father of Margaret and Dawn. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Deanbrae in 1722 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Cavers Parish. James (1835–1918) born in Teviothead, son of Alexander. He was baptised at Mossypaul and educated at Teviothead Parish School and then in Melrose. He studied law at Edinburgh University, became a member of the General Council there in 1861, was a law agent from 1871 and served as Clerk of the Royal College of Surgeons for 50 years. He was a member of the Edinburgh Border Counties' Association, attending their first dinner and being Treasurer 1875–89. He was at school with the sons of Henry Scott Riddell and liked to recall being at the inauguration ceremony for the Ettrick Shepherd's statue at St. Mary's Loch in 1860. He married Margaret Nicolson (1853–1927). He died at his home at George Square, Edinburgh. Jessie (19th C.) from Kelso, she came to Hawick to assist in the shop of George Turnbull the draper at 14 High Street. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife Janet Riddle died in 1810. John (b.1813/4) from Edinburgh, he was a cabinet-maker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at about 30 High Street with his wife Elizabeth (from Kirkton) and children Agnes Hall and William. John 'Jackie', 'the Voo' (1921–2019) son of John Proctor, he was known locally as a singer and Common-Riding stalwart. His brother Wullie also had the same nickname (which was not there in the previous generation). He was brought up in Drumlanrig Square and attended

Drumlanrig School. He was an apprentice slater, served in the R.A.F. during WWII and in the 1950s opened an electrical shop near where he grew up. A great Common Riding supporter, he followed on horseback until he was 86. He may have been the last person to remember meeting J.E.D. Murray. He was Acting Father in 1968 to Elliot Hutton. He was member of the Common Riding Committee from 1966, was President of the Mosstroopers' Club in 1973 and Callants' Club President in 1986. He became known as the most knowledgeable person about details of the Common Riding. The avenue at the Nipknowes that the followers take was informally named after him. He married Margaret Hibbert and their children were: Jim, who was Cornet in 1977; John, who was Honorary Provost in 2002; and Margaret, who became a teacher. He had the rare honour of becoming Jubilee Acting Father in 2018. John (??-) son of Jackie. He was a local Councillor and became Honorary Provost in 2002. Nichol (20th C.) apprenticed to Forbes Nursery, he served in WWI with the 1/4th KOSB. He was wounded on that fateful day of 12th July 1915 and invalided home. One of the last local survivors of the Gallipoli campaign, he wrote about his experiences afterwards. Peter H. (19th/20th C.) grocer who was Cornet in 1899, with his uncle James A. Henderson as his Acting Father. He was Cornet the year of the earliest film clips of the Common Riding, this being a hot and sunny weekend. He was also a member of the Teviotdale Harriers. He served as Acting Father to Francis A. Henderson in 1922. Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Flight in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. Robert (1830-97) son of the shepherd at Branxholme, he was assistant teacher in a school run on Episcopal principles, taught by Rev. Campbell in Hawick High Street around 1850. He went to South Africa as a missionary, being transferred to Zululand (once a separate country) in 1860, where he founded the first mission of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. This was at Kwa Magwaza, the mission being later destroyed in the civil disturbances. He lived and worked with the Zulu people for many years, gaining the native name 'Unzimela'. He also (anonymously) compiled and published 'Zulu Izaga, that is proverbs, or out-of-the-way sayings of the Zulus; collected, translated, and interpreted, by a Zulu missionary' in Durban in 1880. Around 1891 he moved to Tahlwati where he founded a mission using his wagon, and where a church was later built in his memory. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1702. He married Jean Turnbull in Cavers 1700. His children probably included: Thomas (b.1700); Ann (b.1702); Margaret (b.1704); and Alexander (b.1718). Walter (18th/19th C.) labourer at Appletreehall. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Andrew was also listed as a labourer there and was surely related. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish'. William (17th C.) servant of Robert Grierson from Clarilaw. In 1684 he was listed among local men listed as being fugitives because of attending field conventicles. It is unclear whether this is the Clarilaw near Hassendean or the one in Bowden Parish. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Ann (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); Archibald (b.1720); Thomas (b.1722); William (b.1724); and Hugh (b.1725). Perhaps the same William married Margaret Taylor in Cavers Parish in 1726. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Binks in 1755. Perhaps the same William was a wright in Cavers in 1757. He married Jane Beattie and their children included: William (b.1755); Elizabeth (b.1757); William (again, b.1758); and John (b.1763). William (1720-97) from Dunfermline, he was brought to Hawick by local interests in 1752 to start carpet manufacturing and was entered as a Burgess in 1756. In 1769 he formed a partnership with others, renewing the partnership ten years later. The Hawick Carpet Company lasted until 1806. In 1763 he was rewarded with £40 from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures for mechanical inventions (a new kind of 'throw mills' and a machine for teasing wool) improving carpet manufacturing. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in Hawick in 1765. In 1770 he was the first feuar, from the Langlands Estate, of the lands of Roughheugh, where Rosalee Brae now is; he is still listed as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £10 18s 6d) in 1788 and still recorded that way on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (even although he was deceased by then). In a description of Hawick's trade in about 1777 it is stated that his company had 14 looms weaving carpets. He purchased part of the lands of Silverbuthall from James Scott. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Christopher Atkinson in 1777. He may be the William who witnessed a baptisms in Wilton for Adam Ormiston (at Drinkstone) in 1780, performed by Rev. Williamson (of the East Bank Kirk). In 1789 and 1790 he paid tax in Hawick for having a female servant. He is listed as a carpet manufacturer on the 1787–90 and 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the ‘Mr Robertson’ who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1795 and probably the manufacturer William who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797. He was a trustee of the East Bank Meeting House, and at one point complained about the meagre allowance allowed for boarding visiting preachers. He appears to have had a son, also William, with whom he is probably sometimes confounded. He may be the weaver William (some of the birth entries being written ‘Robson’) married to Jane (or ‘Jean’) French, whose children included Isabel (b.1756), William (b.1760), John (b.1761) and Ann (b.1763); Jean French died in Hawick in 1782. William (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1750. William (18th C.) quarter-master of the Scots Greys, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776. William (18th/19th C.) son of William, the instigator of carpet manufacturing in Hawick. He may be the William, son of William and Jean French born in Hawick in 1760. It is possible that he was the ‘W. Robertson, carpet manufacturer’ recorded as Cornet in 1778. He is ‘Mr William Robertson, jun. Hawick’ in 1784 when he subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’. In 1789 he married Janet, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. Their children included: Mary (b.1790); Jane (b.1794); and William (b.1795). He may also have been the William whose son John died in Hawick in 1797. He is probably the deceased William ‘Robison’, ‘Carpetweaver’, whose son William’s death is recorded in Hawick in 1806. Perhaps a relative was the William in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (19th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1837 he was listed as leaving from the Grapes on alternate Tuesdays, bound for Glasgow, and on alternate Thursdays for Langholm, as well as going to Selkirk every other Tuesday and Thursday. William (b.c.1810) from Eccles, he was farm overseer at Northhouse. He was an agricultural labourer at Mowhaugh in Morebattle Parish in 1841, at Northhousehaugh in 1851 and a smith at Sourhope Farm Steward’s House back in Morebattle Parish in 1861. His wife was Jessie (from Kelso) and their children included Isabel (b.1830/1), Anne (b.1832/3), Mary (b.1837/8),

Robin Reidcap

Joanna (b.1838/9) and William (b.1845). William ‘Willie’ (b.1845) son of William, who was farm steward at Northhouse when he was born. Rev. Henry Scott Riddell was minister at Teviothead when he was growing up there. He finished his schooling at Stichel and Nenthorn, then became an apprentice with Rutherford, publishers in Kelso, shifting to Redpath & Co., hardware merchants and eventually becoming a partner. He later started his own business in Glasgow, specialising in flies and fishing equipment. He became well known as an angler, being association with several related organisations. He was also President of the Glasgow Border Counties Association. He married and had 3 sons and 1 daughter. Rev. William (20th C.) minister of Kirkton from 1931 until about 1940. William G. (??–??) ‘Bill’ or ‘Wullie’, High school teacher and columnist for the Hawick News, writing the ‘G.R.’ column as well as covering rugby. He was also heavily involved with the Common Riding, being Secretary of the Committee in the 1950s. William S. ‘Willie’ (1904/05–91) owner of W.S. Robertson (Outfitters) Ltd. at 13–15 High Street from the 1930s until his retirement in 1973. He was an enthusiastic viola player with the local opera and retired to Dunbar. William ‘Wullie’, ‘the Voo’ (1912–2000) well known Westender, brother of Jackie. The origin of his nickname is unknown, and it was also later applied to his brother. As a boy he witnessed the terrible charabanc disaster at the Vertish in 1919. He was a dispatch rider for the R.A.F. during WWII and later worked with the Gas Board. He was known for performing the ‘Canoe Song’ from ‘Sanders of the River’. He also scratched ‘Voo’ into many trees up the Westend, several marked after his death with small brass plaques. His wife’s name was Cathy and his son was ‘Billy Voo’. Rev. W.M. (19th/20th C.) minister of Hawick Baptist Kirk 1916–19. He was said to a fervent evangelical preacher, who sometimes packed the Theatre or the Town Hall. He served in France with the Soldiers’ Christian Association for several months in 1918. He left Hawick for Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool. He may be the minister of the same name who was at Mount Pleasant in Vancouver from 1927.

He trained as a photographer with Russell & Sons of London. At various times he was based at Burnlington House on North Bridge Street, as well as at East Bank House and on the Exchange Arcade.

Robison (ro-bee-sin) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Marion Cowan in Robertson in 1729 and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1731. Andrew (19th C.) grocer, tea, wine and spirit merchant at 23 High Street in the 1850s and 60s. He was listed as a High Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. Ebenezer (b.1795) whip and thong maker, son of Elizabeth. He was listed in Wilton on Pigot’s 1837 directory and at Wilton Path in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living on Wilton Damside and on Wilton Path in 1851 and 1861 (although these are probably the same address). He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Elizabeth Park from Lilliesleaf in 1821. Their children included: Ebenezer; Andrew; Elizabeth, who married William Richardson; twins Barbara and Margaret; Mary; Agnes; and Janet. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Chisholme and their children included Agnes (b.1687) and Margaret (b.1691), with witnesses Andrew Fletcher and Thomas Wallace. George (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same John was previously married to a Paisley and had a daughter Anna baptised in 1691. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Paisley and their children included Jean (b.1689) and Anna (b.1691). James (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Janet (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John

(16th/17th C.) tenant at Riccartonfoot in 1623 along with Archie Henderson when they had 2 sheep stolen by Adie and Will Usher. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1694); James (b.1696); and Beatrice (b.1699). In 1694 the witnesses were James Grieve and Andrew Scott. Probably the same John witnessed a baptism for Robert Paterson in 1691. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant at Byreholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant at Braidlie in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (18th C.) married Bess Nichol in Robertson in 1727. Their children included: Janet (b.1729), baptised in Robertson; and James (b.1733), baptised in Ashkirk. Matthew (17th C.) resident of Liddesdale who was mentioned in about 1645. According to the Buccleuch records ‘One Matthew Robison and his brother had just returned from an excursion into the Debateable Land after some cattle of their own, and had a sleuth-hound with them’. The hound was sent off to search out some thieves who had been challenged ‘at Catheugh and Cringleford, until they came to Carshop, from whence they stole three-score sheep’. Ralph (18th/19th C.) overseer for George Douglas of Cavers. He was ‘Mr Ralph Robieson in Cavers’ when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1794. George (b.1791) was also his son. In 1806 he was residing at Berwick when he was found guilty of theft, fraud and breach of trust. Robert (17th/18th C.) wright in Branholtown. In 1722 he is recorded refusing to pay a penalty and so being summoned to appear before the Session. He is probably the Robert ‘servant to John Pringle wright in Hawick’, who married Isobel Rae from Branholtown in 1721. Their son Thomas was baptised in 1722, with witnesses merchant James Aitkin (whose wife was Helen ‘Robson’) and merchant James Beattie. Robert (b.1832/3) powerloom tuner in Hawick, originally from Stirling. In 1861 he was living at 12 Sandbed. His wife was Betsy (from Branholtme Bridge) and their children included James (b.1859/60). Thomas (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Robisoune’ in 1631 on a list of tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Yethouse in Castleton Parish. He was recorded as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 he was rebuked before the congregation for ‘Sabbath-breaking’ and in 1697 he was chastised for ‘travelling with a load on the Lord’s day'. William (b.c.1795) plasterer in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on O'Connell Street with Mary, probably his wife (also spelled 'Robisone'; it was probably once interchangeable with Robson).

Rob o the Bent (rob-ō-thu-ben) n. nickname for one of the Hawick men called Robert Scott.

Rob's Cleuch (robz-klooch) n. small stream in the Rule valley, which rises on the north-west side of Bonchester Hill. On the south side is evidence of a former settlement, largely obliterated by cultivation, but still observable as a roughly circular hollow. Near the head of the cleuch are the remains of a farmstead, which Walter Deans suggested may be the original site of Bonchester farm (also written 'Rob's Cleugh').

Robsland (robz-lind) n. alternative name for Brighoose.

Robson (rob-sin) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Esther was baptised in 1730. Adam (1720–1805) son of Adam and Jean Beattie. He was a farm worker who lived at Boghall in Castleton Parish. He married Helen Hume and their children included: Janet (b.1761), who married John Elliot; Jean (b.1763); Adam (1765–c.1844), who married Mary Pott and emigrated with his family to settle in Lanark County, Ontario; Mary (b.1767), who married a different John Elliot; and Helen (b.1775). Adam (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He could be the Adam who married Janet Murray in Hawick in 1778. His unnamed son died in 1787. Adam (18th C.) gardener and 'Chaise Driver' for Adam Scott of Galalaw in 1785 and 1786. This was in Robertson Parish, so he was probably working at Borthwickshiels. Adam (1765–1885) born in Castleton Parish, son of Adam and Helen Hume, who lived at Boghall in Castleton Parish. He worked for a while as a shepherd for his brother-in-law John Elliot (2 of his sisters had married John Elliot!). He married Mary, probably daughter of Thomas Pott. They had 11 children, with 6 emigrating with them to Canada in 1817, and settling in Lanark County, Ontario. Their sons John and James had already travelled to Canada a year or so earlier. Their children included Adam (b.1790), Mary (b.1791), Isabell (b.1793), Thomas (b.1795), John (b.1797), Mary (again, b.1799), Janet (b.1801), Margaret (b.1804), Peter (b.1806), Jean (b.1808) and Robert (b.1813). He died in Drummond, Quebec. Adam (b.c.1770s) recorded as 'Hostler Cross Keys Inn' in Hawick on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He could be the son of James and Betty Cook who was baptised in Hawick in 1779. Adam (b.1786/7) born in Castleton Parish, he was a carter. He was listed among heads of households in Newcastleton in 1835–41. He was also listed as a carter in Newcastleton in 1861, when he was living at about 17 South Hermitage Street. He married Jess (or Jessie) Temple and their children included John (b.1827), Jean (b.1830), Robert (b.1832), Alexander (b.1834), James (b.1836), Barton (b.1840) and Elizabeth (or 'Bessy, b.1843). He may be the Adam of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Adam (b.c.1795) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was at Bowknowe in 1841. His wife was Jean and their children included Helen, Janet, James and George. Adam (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Jess and their son John was baptised in 1827. Adam (1861–aft. 1901) youngest son of William and Margaret Douglas, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a solicitor in Galashiels. His wife was Phillis and they had a daughter Margaret Douglas. Adam (19th/20th C.) joiner of the firm A. & J. Robson. His brother was John, partner in the firm, and their sister Mary married Robert Edgar (cousin of the Hawick Express editor). He married Janet Laidlaw Wilson, who died in 1940, aged 87. Adam (1928/9–2007) born and educated in Hawick, and then at Edinburgh College of Art, where he played rugby. He then switched to the Linden, before becoming a famous wing forward for Hawick R.F.C. from 1952 to 1961. He also gained 22 Scottish caps and went on to be President of the Scottish Rugby Union. He was also President of the Scottish Schools Rugby Union. He was Art Master at Dollar Academy for 32 years, also widely exhibiting his paintings, with one prominent in the Health Centre, and his tribute to Tom Scott (1997) on display in Drumlanrig's Tower. He was Callants' Club President in

2002. He married Netta Renwick and their children were Shona and Judith. He wrote 3 books, one being a history of the Edinburgh Borders rugby club. Robson Court is named after him. Alexander (18th C.) labourer in Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Mary (b.1788); Jean (b.1790); and James (b.1793). Alexander 'Alec' (b.1846) 2nd son of blacksmith Thomas. He was a stone mason, known as a great athlete and authority on coins. In 1873 in Wilton he married Helen Brodie (b.1852) and their children included Mary Gowenlock Newton (b.1874). He died in Australia. Allan Watt (d.1981) son of William S., he was born and brought up in Hawick. His studies at the Art College in Edinburgh were interrupted by War Service, but he continued after the War to train in art and teaching. From 1949 he was Head of the Art Department at Perth High School. He developed a strong interest in nature and botany in particular. He joined the Perthshire Society of Natural Science in 1954 and for many years was Chairman of the Botanical Section. He was also an area recorder for the Botanical Society of the British Isles and helped preserve many valuable plants in and around Perthshire. He illustrated his father's books: 'The Story of Hawick', with about 17 pen and ink sketches; and 'Hawick Place Names', with 'Auld Hawick, A Series of Pictorial Reconstructions', showing how the town may have looked in the 9th, 12th, 15th and 18th centuries, as well as a detailed view of Hawick at the time of the 1537 Charter. His original 'scraperboard' images of 'Auld Hawick' are in the Museum collection. He married Jessie and had a son Alan. Andrew (17th C.) listed along with James Small in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Together they paid tax on £390 for the lands of the Laird of Haining (probably John Pringle). Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their son John was baptised in 1635. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Jackson and their daughter Barbara was baptised in 1765. Andrew (b.c.1770s) baker in Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Probably the same Andrew was listed as a labourer on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may be the Andrew who married Mary Moffat and whose son James was baptised in Castleton in 1798. Andrew (b.c.1780) resident of Branhholme Town according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. Walter was also there at the same time and so perhaps a brother. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Jean Elliot and their children included Gavin (b.1806) and Betty (b.1808). Andrew (19th C.) coal merchant in Hawick in the late 1800s. Andrew (c.1889–1949) born in Hawick, he was an engineering apprentice with his father, who was a foreman with James Melrose & Sons. He then worked for a steel manufacturing firm in Middlesborough before studying engineering at Edinburgh University. He spent 12 years as Principal of West Hartlepool Technical College and in 1933 became Principal of Handsworth Technical College in Birmingham. He was an active member of the Institution of Production Engineers. He returned regularly for Hawick Common Riding and spent many holidays in Rulewater. He was married twice and had a daughter. Charles of Samieston (1770–1830) son of James, who was tenant of Belford and Chatto. He was one of the founding members of the Jedforest Club. He was a Captain in the 2nd Regiment of Roxburghshire militia. He also served as Collector of Supply for the county and was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He married Martha, eldest daughter of Maj. John Rutherford of Mossburnford. A small portrait was painted of him around 1800. Rev. Charles (b.1861) from Hawick, son of James and Jessie Inglis. His family attended the East Bank Kirk. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1885 and was ordained as minister of Clune Park Port-Glasgow in 1889. In 1893 he moved to Pollok Street Church in Glasgow and in 1899 to Inverness Antiburgher church. Cuthbert (17th C.) recorded as tenant of 'Oldsteson' in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear where this farm is. He is recorded along with William, who was presumably his son or brother. James was also there, as well as David Hall. Euan (1954–) born in Corbridge, Northumberland, he has been M.S.P. for Roxburgh & Berwickshire from 1999, and has also been Scottish Liberal Democrat Chief Whip. Francis (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Flatt and 'Schortbus' in southern Liddesdale in 1632. Gavin (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He could be the Gavin born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1781 to Robert and Elizabeth Grieve. George (16th C.) recorded in 1538 along with John, plus Walter Veitch, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott, when Andrew Lough forced them off his lands at Synton. George (b.c.1780) servant at Hyndlee according to the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Southdean Parish. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Denholm. He was one of the founders of the Denholm Subscription Library in 1805. George (18th/19th C.) grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. He could be the 'Cadger' listed on Main Street in the 1841 census. George (b.c.1808) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Kirkwynd and described as 'Frame Work Knitter – Woollen & Chelsea Pensioner'. He married Agnes Donaldson, who had previously been married to the oldest son of James 'Pawkie' Paiterson. George (b.1831/2) quarry worker in Denholm. He lived in an old house by the school gates. When that was demolished he lived in the White Swan. His wife Matilda came from Cupar in Fife and they had a son, James. George 'the Prince' (19th C.) resident of the Canongate in Denholm. He worked on the railway. Henry 'Harry' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'in Beirhoip', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He presumably lived at Beirhope near Hownam. Isabella 'Bella' (19th/20th C.) resident of a house on the Kirkwynd, near where the Drums and Fifes start on the Thursday night of the Common Riding. She would regularly come out to offer a tray of rum and milks to the band. Her son Dod was a founder member of the 1514 Club. James (16th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1595/6 his son William was granted lands in the village. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant of 'Oldsteson' in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed after Cuthbert and William, and so probably closely related. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Jane (b.1670); and James (b.1678). James (17th/18th C.) listed at Highchesters in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Probably the same James was in Highchesters in 1711 when his son James was baptised in Roberton. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Roberton Parish. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Scott in Drydenburn, but was 'in ye paroch of Robertoun'. He could be the same as the James who lived at Highchesters. James (17th/18th C.) from Hawick Parish. In 1702 he was recorded being 'nou in Flanders' when his son James was baptised in Hawick; the child was 'begotten in fornica[tio]n' with Margaret Scott and Margaret's brother Robert made 'faith for the education of the child'. The witnesses were gardener James Falsyde and glover John Hart. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: James (b.1737); Adam (b.1738); Thomas (b.1740); and William (b.1743). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Calaburn in 1748. He married Margaret Easton and their children included: Robert (b.1746); Mary (b.1748); Marion (b.1750); Margaret (b.1752); John (b.1754); and Jean (b.1757). The witnesses in 1748 were John and Robert Scott. James (b.1710/1) son of a shepherd. He moved to Newbigging near Hawick when his father became shepherd in 1726, staying 6 years, then being shepherd for 2 years at Raesknowe and 2 years at Acreknowe and Winnington Rig. In 1767 he gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common; he was described as married at that time and living at Templehall. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, perhaps at Wiltonburn. He married Isabel Pringle in Roberton Parish in 1761. Their children included: John (b.1761); Agnes (b.1768); and Jean (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Easton and Thomas Hoy. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Rae at Whitfield in 1773. He may be the James who paid for the use of the Wilton mortcloth in 1794. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Cook and their son Adam was baptised in 1779. James (d.1781) recorded as servant of 'Mr. Dickson' when he died in Hawick. This was presumably the minister of Bedrule, who had died in 1787. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwick Burnfoot in 1780. His children included James (b.1776), Thomas (b.1778) and Charles (b.1780). James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was recorded at Dykeraw in 1778. He married Janet Watson and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1778. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Linthill. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James (b.c.1780) barber on the High Street in Hawick, probably at No. 32 on the 1841 census. James (b.1788/9) from Elsdon in Northumberland, he owned the farm of Waterside near Letham. In 1851 he was living there with his wife Janet and daughter Matilda. He married Janet Lachlan (from Dalkeith) and their children included: William (b.1808), 1st son; Robert (b.1810), 2nd son; and Mary (b.1812). James (18th/19th C.) recorded at 'Newroad' in 1826 when the death of his wife is recorded in Hawick. James (b.c.1800) originally from Yarrow, son of Robert. In 1841 he was a farm worker living at Branhholme and he was shepherd at Branhholme 'Gate' (probably the Lodge) in 1851. He married Isabella Oliver in Ancrum, and their children included: Robert (b.1830); Elizabeth ('Betty', b.1832); Joan (b.1835); Williamina (b.1838), who probably died young; and Jeany. James (19th C.) second official singer of Hogg's 'Teribus' at the Common Riding. He could be the same James who is recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory as a cart and plough wright on Buccleuch Street, or the James living on Green Wynd on the 1841 census, or even the blacksmith, father of the composer William Inglis. James (b.1816) blacksmith in Wilton, he was son of Hawick blacksmith Thomas and Elizabeth Bookless. He was on Wilton Place in 1851 and Dickson Street in 1861. He married Jessie Inglis in 1841 and their children included: Margaret; Thomas; Eliza; William Inglis (b.1853), who became a professor of music; James Alexander (b.1855); Jessie (b.1857); and Charles (b.1861), who became a minister. James (19th C.) grocer in Cavers or Minto Parish, recorded in 1852. James (b.1852/3) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was known as an authority on local antiquities, particularly arrow-heads. He was also noted as a prize-winner at flower shows. He married Janet Oliver, from Denholm, and she died in 1932, aged 80. Their eldest daughter was Mary. They are buried in Denholm. James (b.1855) youngest son of William 'Billy Buttons' and related to the Denholm blacksmiths. He had brothers John (Hawick Town Councillor) and William and a sister Beatrice. Like his father and brothers, he started off as a stocking-maker. He later became a teacher and private tutor. He was an expert on local history and wrote extensively about the Scottish Borders, producing several books including 'Border Sketches' (1891), 'Churches and churchyards of Teviotdale' (1893) and 'Border Battles and Battlefields' (1897). He also wrote 'Teviotside legends & stories' (1895) under the pseudonym Bernard Ainsworth. He died in Hawick. James Scott (1921–2010) born in Hawick, son of William Scott. He attended Hawick High School and then studied medicine at Edinburgh University. He won a Rockefeller Foundation Studentship to continue his studies in New York, and survived his ship being torpedoed on the way. Back in Edinburgh he graduated M.D. in 1945, then served as Captain in the R.A.M.C., worked in Edinburgh and then went to Harvard University, where he carried out renal research. He married Mary MacDonald, who was a pathologist. In Britain he set up the Acute Renal Failure Service and was significantly involved in the first kidney transplants. He also advised on dialysis treatment protocols for avoiding infection. After brief appointments at Harvard and in Australia, he became Professor of Medicine at Edinburgh University in 1977, as well as President of the Renal Association. At Edinburgh he also revised the undergraduate medical curriculum and was editor-in-chief for an influential medical text book. He was a member of Edinburgh's New Club. John (16th C.) recorded in 1538 along with George, plus Walter Veitch, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott, when Andrew Lough forced them off his lands at Synton. John 'Jock the Laird' (16th C.) recorded in 1581/2 when his lands in Langnewton were mentioned in a marriage contract involving George Brig and John Melrose. His nickname is recorded as 'Jok the Larde'. William is also mentioned, and surely a relative. John 'the Pudge' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (17th C.) cook to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl's inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son James was baptised in 1646. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was a Paisley and their daughter Anna was baptised in 1691. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1694); James (b.1696); and Beatrix (b.1699). John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1710 and was elected Cornet in 1711. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for glover John Scott. He could be the John, son of Robert and Helen, born in Hawick in 1689 or the John, son of William and Helen Muir born in 1685. In 1707 he witnessed a baptism for merchant James Simpson. He is probably the John who married Isobel Huntly and whose daughter Anne was baptised in Hawick in 1718. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Nichol and their children included: James (b.1733); and Helen (b.1735). John (1773–1834) 2nd son of James of Samieston. He was tenant farmer at Belford. He was a founding member of the Jedforest Club and served with the western troop of Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. He married Esther, younger daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel. Their elder son was Dr. James Robson-Scott of Ashtrees and their younger son was Thomas Robson-Scott of Newton. He died at Belford. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Essen-side according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. John (b.c.1780) labourer at Wester Barnhills according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish. John (b.1780s) son of a blacksmith in Denholm, probably Thomas. His brother Thomas was also a blacksmith there. He was an apprentice stocking-maker in Denholm, but was apparently noticed on the Green by Lord Minto, who suggested he joined the Royal Navy. He rose through the ranks, but was demoted when he allowed a deserter to escape. He spent some time at Portsmouth, where he got married to Mary Buchanan and had a son, William. He then spent 6 years serving in India, took part in the capture of Algiers in 1812 and was on the ship that took Napoleon to St. Helens. He returned to Denholm with his wife and son, 'Billy Buttons'. John (b.1803/4) born in St. Boswells, he was innkeeper at the Plough Inn in Lilliesleaf, recorded in 1837. He was listed as a joiner in 1841 and innkeeper in 1851. In Slater's 1852 directory he was innkeeper at the Cross Keys. He was said to be perhaps the only voter in the village of Lilliesleaf who was a Tory. He married Jessie Cockburn in 1832 and their children included William (b.1833) and Helen (b.1835). In 1861 his wife was running the inn, and so he was presumably deceased (or travelling). John (1826–99) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie. His father and brother Thomas were blacksmiths at Teviothead and elsewhere. He was blacksmith at several places, but lastly (and for the longest period) in Denholm. He was originally based on Main Street, but in 1864 moved to the Quarry Road, where he built a new smiddy, house and stable. At the age of 17 he married Mary Newton, from Gordon in Berwickshire, and she died in 1883, aged 60. He had many sons with her (8 of whom survived), including: George, who died young; Thomas (b.1844/5), blacksmith at 46 High Street; Alexander (b.1846, 'Alec'), who died in Australia; John (b.1848/9), also a blacksmith, died in Penicuik; Robert (b.1851), mason in Hawick; Robert Newton, monumental sculptor; James (b.1853/4); William Hardie (1856–1927), who died in Canada; George (b.1858); and Mark Newton (b.1861), who became a minister. The average height of his sons was 6ft 1½in. He also remarried and had more children. John (b.1845/6) born at Wilton Dean, he was eldest son of William, and grandson of John, who was in the Navy. His brothers were William, Precentor at Bedrule, and James, local historian. He worked as a stocking-maker and stone hewer. He was Precentor in the Denholm Free Kirk for 13 years. He moved to Hawick, where he was a Town Councillor for Slitrig Ward and was heavily involved in religious and temperance movements in the town. He was associated with West Port Church, Hawick Home Mission, the Sabbath School Union, the Poorhouse Committee and the Parish Council. He married Janet Oliver from Cavers. John (b.c.1850) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was also a blacksmith and known as an athlete. He died in the prime of life in Penicuik. Mark (b.1803/4) son of John, he was born in Crailing Parish. In 1851 he was a 'Wood Forester' living at Ashkirk Cottage with his children Margaret (housekeeper there), Thomas and Janet, father John and lodger. Mark Newton (1861–1939) youngest son of John, who was blacksmith at Denholm, and Mary Newton. He was born and attended school in Denholm, then moved to Hawick at 16. He was a teacher there for over 8 years. He wrote poetry and also produced an article on 'Lower Rulewater and its Associations' for the Archæological Society. From 1886 he resolved to do 'home' missionary work and was stationed at Fisherrow, Musselburgh. Afterwards he was Presbyterian Minister in County Durham and Congregational Minister at Sanquhar and Cumnock. He was a member of Allars Kirk in Hawick in the early 1900s. As well as publishing many poems in the local press, he also contributed some articles on Border life and scenes. He privately published 'Some Denholm Families'. His first wife and child died about 2 years after he was married. Like his brothers, he was tall, being about 6 feet 3 inches. Mary nee Waugh (b.1864) daughter of Andrew Waugh and Agnes Purdom. She was assistant nurse at Weens for several years. She married Will Robson and their children included John, Agnes Purdom and Janet Oliver. Dr. Michael J.H. (1933–2017) Hawick Museum curator and contributor to the Archæological Society Transactions. He was also a founding member of the Borders Family History Society. He retired to the Isle of Lewis. He wrote several short books, including: 'Tibbie Shiel' (1986); 'Ride with the moonlight: the Mosstroopers of the Border' (1987); 'Sheep of the Borders' (1988); 'No road this way after dark: George Harkness's reminiscences of Liddesdale' (1989); 'Break with the past: changed days on two Border sheep farms (Langburnshiels and Riccarton) with The record book of the Riccarton Mill Club' (1991); 'Surnames and clansmen: Border family history in earlier days' (1998); 'Dykes, ditches and disputers: a history of boundary and field enclosures in the Borders' (2004); and others relating to the Highalnds and Islands. He was involved in the founding of the Turnbull Clan Association, was the clan newsletter's first editor and was working on a history of the Turnbells when he died. Miss S. singer at Colour Bussings and other functions in the early 20th century. Mungo (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. Patrick (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. He was also on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick in 1437. Peter (b.1801/2) from England, he was a shepherd at Boghall and then Hermitage Bridgend. He was also an elder at Castleton Kirk. He was listed as male head of his family at Boghall in 1835–41. His wife was Agnes, from Heiton. Their children included Peter, John, James, Agnes and Helen. Robert 'Rob' (16th C.) called 'Fwll Mowth' in a bond of 1562, where William Oliver in Lustruther and Gavin Oliver in West Houses have to present him to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Robert (17th/18th C.) carter and merchant in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was a Burgess of Hawick. Probably the same Robert was a merchant in 1699 when he witnessed a baptism for smith James Scott. He witnessed a baptism for fellow carrier James Wilson in 1701 (where he is recorded both as a carter and as a merchant). He is probably the merchant Robert who witnessed baptisms for smith James Scott in 1704, for piper William Turnbull in 1706, for workman Robert Gledstains in 1708, for carrier James Wilson in 1712 and for carrier William Rae in 1713. John Scott was his servant in 1711 (when he witnessed a baptism for him) and Thomas Huntly (who gave evidence relating to the use of the Common in 1767) was his servant in 1715. He is probably the Robert listed as a merchant who witnessed baptisms in 1718 for tailor Robert Chisholme, in 1719 for Andrew Waugh, tenant in Hawick, and in 1720 for carrier James Henderson and for smith Thomas Huntly. He and another Robert (presumably his son) were the 2 merchants who witnessed a baptism for carrier George Porteous in 1720. He is probably the Robert, married to Helen Robson, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Marion or Margaret (b.1686); Walter

(b.1687); John (b.1689); Isobel (b.1691); and Helen (b.1693). The witnesses in 1689 were Robert Douglas and Robert Wilson. Robert (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, probably son of Robert. In 1720 the pair of Roberts witnessed a baptism for carrier George Porteous. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for tailor Robert Chisholme and in 1722 another for John Laidlaw in Hawick Shiel. Robert Newton (b.1851) born in Eccles, he was 4th son of Denholm blacksmith John. He trained as a stone-hewer at Denholm Hill Quarry and became a monumental sculptor in Hawick. He was an active member of Allars Kirk and the Archæological Society, being particularly involved in cleaning up and preserving the remains of Southdean Kirk. He carved the WWI alabaster and bronze WWI memorial tablet for Allars Kirk. He also worked on the Johnnie Armstrong memorial at Teviothead. He married Janet Oliver, from Appletreehall. In later life he had a long, flowing beard (it is said, to protect him from stone dust), making him look patriarchal. Simon 'Syme' (16th/17th C.) recorded as tenant in Lethem along with John Oliver in 1623. 2 men were acquitted of stealing sheep from them. Thomas (16th C.) leased 'ane quarter and halff quarter of Todrik' (i.e. Todrig) from Thomas Scott in 1538. described as 'in Langnewton' in a 1612 document Thomas (16th/17th C.) described as 'in Langnewton' in a 1612 document listing people convicted of charging too much interest on loans. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (or the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Isobel Turnbull in 1682 and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); Dand (b.1686); and Bessie (b.1689). The witnesses in 1684 were William Turnbull (probably related to his wife) and John Noble. In 1682 he witnessed a baptism for William Collin in Horsleyhill, in 1683 others for William Turnbull and for Adam Craig and in 1687 for Walter Runciman. He also witnessed a baptism in 1686 for John Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and Margaret Dodds. Thomas (17th/18th C.) described as occasional tenant in Bewlie in 1716 when he leased lands in Bewlie from John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. Thomas 'Tam o the Yett' (18th C.) former resident of Liddesdale, said to be an ancestor of the blacksmiths of Denholm. A story is told of how a Liddesdale minister examining children asked who the strongest man was, and was given his name as the reply. He may have been a descendant of Thomas 'Robison', farmer at Yethouse.

Thomas (d.1805) son of Thomas, he was probably farmer at Calaburn. He witnessed a baptism for Richard Young (perhaps his brother-in-law) in 1774. He married Isobel Young in Hawick Parish in 1764. Their children included: Margaret (b.1765); Isobel (b.1767); James (b.1770); William (b.1771); William (again, b.1772); Alexander (b.1776). He died at Calaburn, with his wife following a few days later. Thomas (18th C.) married Janet Anderson in Ewes Parish in 1783. Their children, baptised in Langholm, included Christian (b.1788), Mary (b.1790), James (b.1792), Thomas (b.1799) and William (b.1801). Thomas (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. His shop was in a thatched cottage at the foot of the Loaning. He was probably father of the later blacksmith of the same name, as well as John, who was in the Navy. Thomas (b.c.1790) master blacksmith at Denholm, probably the same man named on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His brother John was in the Navy. In 1815, he married Isabella ('Bell') Hardie, from Dargues in Redewater. They had 6 daughters and 4 sons: Thomas (b.1816), blacksmith at Teviothead and in Hawick; James, possibly blacksmith in Middlesburgh; Ann (b.1818); William (b.1824), also a blacksmith in Denholm; John (b.1826), blacksmith in several places, but longest at Denholm; Mary; Isabella, who married William Easton from Yetholm; Betty; Catherine; and Helen, the youngest. He may be the smith of that name who was listed as a member of Al-lars Kirk in 1829. He could be the same Thomas who donated a stone ball, found in Denholm, to the Museum in 1863. Thomas (1777/8–1844) Hawick blacksmith, listed on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1837 he was on the High Street and is recorded at about 9 Brougham Place on the 1841 census. He married Elizabeth Bookless, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included: Helen (b.1809); Mary (b.1811); Elizabeth (1814–28), who probably died young; Isobel; James (b.1816); and William. He is buried at St. Mary's. He was probably related to the other Robson blacksmiths. He may be the 'Tam Robson' who supervised the roasting of an ox at the Tower Knowe for the celebration of the coming of age of Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch in 1827. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Hardie in Cavers Parish in 1815. Thomas (19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He could be the 'Woollen Slubber' living on the Howegate in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children Thomas and Walter. Thomas 'Tam' (19th C.) carrier of the mail between Langholm and Hawick. He was a keen fisherman (described in John Hyslop's 'Echoes from the Border Hills'), and it was said that if the trout were biting then the letters to Hawick would be late! Thomas (b.c.1815) from outside Roxburghshire, he was an excise officer living on the Howegate in 1841. The other residents were probably wife Jane, mother Barbara, sister Jane and daughter Isabella. Thomas (1816–81) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie. He was blacksmith at Teviothead and then at 54 High Street. He is listed as a High Street blacksmith in Slater's 1852 directory. He later moved to 5 Teviot Road and became a retailer. He married Catherine Waugh, from Southdean Parish, who died in 1906, aged 88. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.c.1843), who married William Wilson, Hawick rag and waste merchant; Thomas (b.1839), who died young; Robert (b.1840), who died aged 15; another Thomas (who also died young, like his following 4 siblings); William; Catherine; Robert; John; and Isabella (b.1850, died aged 26). Thomas (1819–94) born at Cap-puck, he later farmed at Menslaws. He was recorded at Menslaws in a directory of 1868. He married Eliza Wilson Cockburn (who died in 1906) and their children were Agnes Cockburn (who died young), Catherine Home (who died in 1958), Janetta (who died in 1969) and Thomas Cockburn (who died in 1931). They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (b.1817/8) carrier, son of carter Richard. He lived in Jedburgh and is recorded in 1852 operating a weekly service to Hawick, leaving from the Horse Market. In the 1860s he was operating a twice weekly service between Hawick and Jedburgh. Thomas (c.1845–c.1925) eldest son of John, blacksmith at Denholm. He carried on a blacksmith's business at 46 High Street. Later he worked at Weensland Mills. He had some musical talent and was Precentor at East bank Kirk. He was also a noted angler and authority on local natural history. He died in Hawick at more than 80 years old. Thomas Cockburn (1869–1931) born at Menslaws, son of Thomas and Eliza Cockburn. He was Manager of the National Bank of Scotland in London and is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (19th/20th C.) of Weensland, responsible for stuffing a large fraction of the Museum's bird collection. He could be the same as the Thomas (d.c.1925) who worked at Weensland Mills. Walter (15th C.) described as 'in Harden' in 1493 when he was accused at a Jedburgh court of conspiring with Archibald Armstrong (who was already 'at the horn') in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. Walter Ker served as surety for him. It is unclear if this is Harden on Borthwick Water or another one. Walter (17th C.) described as a merchant in a Magistrates Court case of 1642 when Andrew Deans was ordered to pay debts and expenses to him. Perhaps the same Walter witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1656 for John Porteous. He could be the Walter, married to Marion Henderson, whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Isobel (b.1648), John (b.1650), Robert (b.1652) and William (b.1654). Walter (b.c.1780) resident of Branhholme Town according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Andrew was also there at the same time and so perhaps a brother. He may be the Walter who married Betty Mitchellhill and had children baptised in Cavers Parish, including: Andrew (b.1809); and Helen (b.1811). Walter (19th C.) shepherd at Cleughhead in Castleton Parish. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. He may be the Walter, married to Margaret Turnbull, whose children, baptised in Castleton Parish, included Isabel (b.1833), Helen (b.1835), Janet (b.1836), Peter (b.1838), John (b.1841), Margaret Murray (b.1843) and Walter (b.1845). Walter (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Richardson and their children included Margaret (b.1842), Anne (b.1847), Walter (b.1850) and George (b.1853). Walter 'Wattie' (20th C.) fiddle player from Denholm. He often played along with Tom Hughes in the 1970s. William (16th C.) probably in Hawick in 1561 when he made an agreement with David Todrig over lands in Selkirk. He is recorded as 'William Robesone in Hauyk'. William (16th C.) tenant in Langnewton. In 1581 there was a marriage contract for his first-born son William and Elizabeth. He gave to the couple 'half a cotland with onsets, tofts and crofts' in Langnewton, with the liferent reserved for him and his wife Katherine King. Probably the same William is recorded in 1581/2 when his lands in Langnewton were mentioned in a marriage contract involving George Brig and John Melrose; 'Jock the Laird' is also mentioned, and probably a relative. In 1590 he was listed among tenants in Langnewton who complained about attacks by the Kers of Newhall; James was also listed and presumably related. In about 1590 he may be the 'Williame Mader of Langtoun' listed among landed men of the Borders. William (16th C.) eldest son of William in Langnewton. In 1581 he was contracted to be married to Elizabeth Brydon, daughter of the deceased John John Brydon in Rutherford and Margaret Ker. William (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as 'son of James there'. William (16th C.) charged with the murder of William Hall 'of Wollie' (probably Wolfelee). He was recorded being 'in Rochthewchmylne' (probably Roughheugh Mill) and James Langlands of that ilk acted as surety for him, and so he was probably a local man. Langlands had to pay 20 merks to Hall's only daughter when Robson failed to appear. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Robison and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1669. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen 'Mure' and their son John was baptised in 1685. William (17th C.) married Agnes Riddell in Robertson in 1684. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane French and their children included Jane (b.1756) and William (b.1760). William (18th C.) married Isabel Turnbull in Cavers in 1782. William (18th C.) married Mary Rutherford in Bedrule in 1793. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gowanbrae in Wilton Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Longburnshiels in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He could be the William whose children Elizabeth (b.1800) and William (b.1801) were baptised in Hobkirk. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Mary Oliver and their children included: Peter (b.1808); and an unnamed child (b.1811). Perhaps the same William was recorded as a servant at 'Lowgate' in Southdean Parish on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (18th/19th C.) from Falstone in North Tyne, he lived at Waterside in Southdean Parish. In 1809 he married Barbara Baptie, who was from Bucham. Their children (baptised in Byrness) included: Isabel (b.1809); and Janet (b.1811). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Cowan and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included twins Jean and Isabel (1819). William (18th/19th C.) married Mary Linton in Southdean in 1817. William (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Ritson and their son Thomas was baptised in 1824. William (19th C.) married Janet Fairgrieve in Wilton in 1826. William (19th C.) married Ann Purdom in Hawick in 1837. William Hutchison 'Billy Buttons' (b.1811/2) son of John of the Navy and grandson of the Denholm blacksmith. He was born in England, while his father was stationed there. His nickname came from the coat, festooned with military buttons, which his mother made for him when he was a child. He lived up the Doctor's Pend in Denholm and later had the house called Rosebank built. In part of that house he ran a small stocking-maker's with his 3 sons. He later moved to Westgate Hall and finally to Hawick. He would carry his wares throughout the Borders and into England, where he was known as 'Stocking Wullie'. In Wilton in 1845 he married Janet Cairns, from Hawick Muir. Their children were: John (b.c.1846), who was a stocking-maker and hewer and married Janet Oliver; William (b.c.1850), also a stocking-maker; Beatrix (b.c.1853), who married Bailie Kennedy; and James (b.1855), stocking-maker, teacher and local historian. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott and their son James was baptised in 1841. William (19th C.) married Ann Scott in Hobkirk in 1843. Their children, baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish, included: George (b.1843); Thomas (b.1846); and Betsy Scott (b.1854). William (19th C.) married Janet Cairns in 1845, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. William (19th C.) married Mary Haig in 1845, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. William (19th C.) married Euphemia Hogg in Wilton in 1846. William (b.1813/4) farm labourer in the Teviothead area. In 1841 he was living at Commonsides Lynn, moved to Hayknowe and by 1861 was farm steward at Broadhaugh. He firstly married Ann, and secondly Margaret Wylie. His children included John, Walter, Archibald, Elizabeth, Margaret, Mary, William, James and Andrew (1859–1930), who emigrated to Illinois. William (1814–81) born at Falstone in Northumberland, he was a shepherd in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was shepherd at Woolhope. In 1844 he married Margaret (1819–97), daughter of Newcastle joiner John Douglas. Their children were: William (b.1844); Elizabeth (b.1846); John (b.1848), Robert (b.1849); Janet (b.1850) and John (b.1852), who all died young; Robert (1853–1930); James (1856–89), law clerk in Edinburgh; Hector (1857–1901), ironmonger in Wigtown and Stirling; Walter (1859–1932), bank clerk in Lanarkshire; and Adam (b.1861), solicitor in Galashiels. William (b.1824) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie, he was also blacksmith in Denholm, on Main Street. He married Agnes Miller (sister of John Miller) in Cavers Parish in 1854. Their children included: Robert (b.1849); Thomas (b.1852); James (b.1854); William (b.1856); John Hardie (b.1859); George (b.1862); Isabella (b.1866); and Agnes (b.1868). William (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Helen 'Bucham' and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1850. William Cairns 'Billy' (b.1849/50) 2nd son of William, 'Billy Buttons', and grandson of sailor John. He was born in Kirkton Parish. He had brothers John, who was a Councillor in Hawick, and James, who wrote local history books. He worked as a stocking-maker. He was Precentor at the Old Chapel in Denholm and at Bedrule Kirk. In 1872 he married Helen, daughter of William MacNeil, teacher at Bedrule. His son John was born in Eccles in 1882, and he had a grandson, also Billy, who was a teacher in Cumnock. He lived to about 80, settling in Leitholm and becoming a noted antiquary. William Inglis (1853–1891) son of blacksmith James. He composed music for 'Up wi' the Banner' and 'Hawick Among the Hills'. Born in Hawick he apprenticed as a blacksmith, and later worked as a frame-smith, but his career eventually turned to music. By 1881 he was advertising himself as an instructor for the 'Tonic Sol-fa College' at 1 Laing Terrace. He also led St. Mary's choir. In 1882 he won a Curwen Scholarship of the Tonic Sol-fa College in London. There he became a member of the London Musical Composition Club, graduated from the Tonic Sol-fa College and was appointed by the U.P. Church as a music teacher. In 1883 he became leader of psalmody at Queen Anne Street U.P. Church in Dunfermline, and later taught in Glasgow and Govan. For his last 7 years he was choirmaster at Free St. George's Church in Glasgow. He was appointed as Professor of School of Music for Scotland at the Glasgow Athenæum (later the Royal Scottish Academy of Music). He adopted his mother's maiden name as a middle name, presumably to distinguish himself from other Williams. He married Nancy Scott and their son, William Scott wrote 2 books on Hawick in the mid-20th century. He died in Cambuslang and is buried in Wilton Cemetery. William Hardie (1856–1927) younger son of Denholm blacksmith John. He emigrated to Canada in 1881. He was known as an expert on Canadian fossils, with his collection given to the Ottawa Museum. He died in British Columbia. William (19th C.) Hawick cyclist, who lived at Havelock Street. He can be seen in a photograph of 1899 with his trophies.

He may be the same as the engineer and sawmill owner. William (19th C.) engineer of Hawick, and member of Allars Kirk. He may be the William whose sawmill is listed on Havelock Street in a 1900 directory. William B. (b.c.1900) one of the survivors of the Gallipoli Campaign, who visited the region in a group of Hawick veterans in 1965. He was just 15 when he enlisted. William Scott (19th/20th C.) son of William Inglis and Nancy Scott. He worked as an advertising manager. He wrote 'Hawick Place Names' (1947) and 'The Story of Hawick' (1937, revised 1945 and 1947). He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He married Elizabeth Hannah Watt and their son James Scott was Professor of Medicine at Edinburgh University (formerly spelled 'Robesone', 'Robesonn', 'Robsone', 'Robsonne' etc.; see also Robison and Robertson, which were formerly not distinguished).

Robson's (rob-sinz) n. former sawmill on Weensland Road. Its traction engine can be seen in a photograph of 1913. This is probably the same company whose sawmill was on Havelock Street in 1900.

Robson-Scott (rob-sin-sko) n. Dr. James of Ashtrees (1814–83) eldest son of John Robson (son of James of Samieston) and Esther Scott (daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel). Educated in medicine, he joined the East India Company and went to Madras about 1836, later being appointed surgeon with the 4th Madras Infantry, and retired in 1858. On his return to Britain he took the additional surname of Scott, having inherited the lands of Ashtrees from his uncle John Scott of Riccalton. He lived at Belford, Morebattle, where he had been born. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He joined the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club, becoming President. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He served as a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for the county. He was listed as owner of Ashtrees in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He married Marianne, daughter of James Grant of Correemony, Inverness-shire. His children were: Maj. James S., who succeeded to Ashtrees; and 2 daughters, one of whom married John Corse Scott of Synton. He died following an illness contracted while visiting his brother at Newton, and is buried in Hownam kirkyard. John Alexander of Newton and Menslaws (1858–1940) eldest son of Thomas. He was educated at Fettes College and Edinburgh University. He travelled extensively, and had a collection of stuffed birds, which he shot himself. He also bred horses, including 'Gold', who won the Ascot Gold Cup in 1890. In 1887 he married Margaret Suter, 2nd daughter of William Lang, and she died in 1940. Their children included: Theresa Dorothy (1888–1967); and Marjorie (1891–1967); and Thomas Selby (1894–1914), who was killed in WWI. His children are recorded as followers of the Jedforest Hunt. His sister-in-law Florence Lang married his brother Thomas of Lethem. Marjorie (1891–1967) daughter of John. On the death of her father she took over running the farm of Newton (where she lived with her sister Dorothy) and also the family stud. When she died Newton was inherited by her cousin John Lang. She is buried in Bedrule Kirkyard. Thomas of Newton, Bedrule (1815–93) 2nd son of John Robson and Esther Scott and brother of Dr. James. He inherited Newton from his uncle Thomas Scott, taking the additional Scott surname. He leased the farm at Lethem (which had long been in the Scott family), as well as several other sheep farms, and was an authority on sheep-farming. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He found a hammer of felsite on his farm in the mid-19th century. In 1861 he was farming 8500 acres at Lethem and employing 28 people. He was recorded at both Lethem and Newton in a directory of 1868. He was listed as owner of the lands of Newton on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. In 1857 he married Mary Anne Leslie, daughter of Rev. T. Wight of Oxnam (who was born in Midlem and educated in Lilliesealf), and she died in 1897. Their children were: John Alexander of Newton; Esther Anne; Thomas William of Lethem; Sarah; Charles George; and Liliass. The family have an enclosure in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas William 'Tom' (b.1866) younger son of Thomas of Newton. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy. He was Whip of the Jedforest Hunt 1894–97 and Master of Hunt 1903–32. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1898. He lived at Lethem and also at Lanton Tower, which he purchased. He farmed at Lethem, Southdean and Peel. In 1892 he married Florence Jane, daughter of William Lang, who was a cousin of Andrew Lang's; his sister-in-law Margaret married his brother John of Newton. He secondly married Violet Cunningham. His children included John (killed following illness in WWI), Tom, Esther and William Douglas. His children Esther, John and Tom were all followers of the Jedforest Hunt when young. There is a signed portrait of him in the Horse & Hounds Inn at Bonchester. Thomas Selby (1894–1914) son of John, he attended Rugby School and was killed in WWI. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Scots and was recorded missing at Wytschaete, Flanders. There is a memorial plaque to him inside Bedrule Kirk. William Douglas (1901–81) youngest son of Tom, born in Southdean Parish, he became Professor of German at Birkbeck College and Honorary Director of the Institute of Germanic Studies at the University of London 1968–73. He wrote several works on Goethe and translated Sigmund Freud into English, his wife Elaine helping him in some of this work.

Robsteed (rob-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Robsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlan-dis, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

Rob the Clocker (rob-thu-klo-kur) n. nickname of Robert Wulson of the mid-1800s.

Rob the Heckler (rob-thu-hek-lur) n. resident of Denholm in the 19th century. A story is recounted (in the Border Counties’ Magazine) of his youthful love for his native village. His father sent him to start service somewhere near Lilliesleaf, and when he got to Hassendean he looked back and said ‘O ma bonny Denholm! aw’ll never sey ye mair!’ His father left him at his new place of employment, but was suprised to find him already back in Denholm when he returned home. His nickname presumably comes from the former manufacturing of lint.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lārd) n. nickname for Robert Scott, descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane, who farmed at Binks.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lārd) n. nickname for Robert Scott, a man of gypsy descent who was said (in an account by Mr. Simson) to be ‘keeper for the counties of Peebles, Selkirk and Roxburgh’ about the time of the war with France. It is unclear what position he may have held and how he may have been related to other Scotts.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lārd) n. nickname used locally in the 19th century. This may be the same man as Robert Scott, farmer at Binks – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird’ [HI]

(note that one version of the poem has ‘Jock the Laird’).

Rob the Naig (rob-thu-nāg) n. nickname of Robert Tinlin.

Rob wi the Dog (rob-wi-thu-dōg) n. nickname of Robert Oliver.

Rob Young (rōb-yung) n. blacksmith Robert Young, mentioned in the song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’ – ‘Auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’s there, Biddy the Hawker’s sellin’ preens; Wat Inglis is at his tricks yince mair, And there’s baith Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI].

Rothead (roch-heed) n. John Thomas (1814–78) Edinburgh-born architect, who trained with David Bryce before established his own practice in Glasgow. Here he designed many of the grandest buildings of the latter part of the 19th century, e.g. St. John’s Free Church. In Hawick he was responsible for designing the Corn Exchange, St. Andrew’s Free Church and several mansions, including Silverbuthall House, Hillhead House, Langlands Park, Heronhill, Mansfield and Thornwood. He was also responsible for the design for the Wallace Monument in Stirling.

rock (rok) n., arch. distaff in spinning, the staff holding the unspun flax or wool – ‘But she lootit doon and her rock tuik a lowe, An’ that was a bad beginnin’ o’t’ [T], ‘... by striking her with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there ...’ [BR1693] ‘... And thus she sung, and twined her rock, When at the door a feeble knock’ [JTe], ‘... Yet aye I’ll mind her rock an reel, Her stories, an’ her spinnin’-wheel’ [JJ] (from Old Danish).

the Rock (thu-rok) n. feature indicated on Wood’s plan of 1824, marking the northern end of the Little Haugh. It was situated somewhere between the current Little Haugh and the Drill Hall area, on the land once occupied by Teviot Crescent Mills, and was presumably a rock of some sort.

rock bool (rok-bool) n., arch. a hard boiled confection. Miss Lamb’s, from Needle Street, were famous in the early 19th century – ‘Bet Revel’s ‘rock bools’ were the best sweets he ever tasted’ [JTU], ‘The ‘bit’ of old Needle Street will appeal to all lovers of ‘rock bools’ [V&M], ‘Rock bools – Hawick’s distinctive sweetmeat’ [ECS], ‘Ee’d better heide thae rock-bools, or the bairns’ll kinsh thum’ [ECS] (see also Hawick Balls).

rockety-rowe (ro-ki-ee-row) n., arch. an amusement among children involving a rocking motion, also known as ‘wey the butter, wey the cheese' – 'And the old bairns' game of 'rockety-rowe', when two would stand back-to-back with their arms linked and by stooping alternately, raise each other from the ground, chanting: 'Wei butter, wei cheese, Wei a pund o' cannle-grease, Yowe up, mei doon, This is the way to London toon'' [DH] , a rolling gait – 'Thom sailor has a rockety-rowe o' a walk' [GW], a vehicle with a rocking motion, v. to rock, sway, adj. rocky, rickety, wobbly.

rocklay (rok-lā) n., poet. a kind of short cloak with a long cape, a mantle – '...vielence kivers thame as ane rocklay' [HSR], '...an' let thame kiver thamesel's wi' thair ain confuushon as wi' ane rocklay' [HSR].

Rocksteid (rok-steed) n. former lands in 1632, listed among the possessions of Francis Beattie in Liddesdale. It is recorded as 'Twa steids Over and Neather, with the pertinents' thairof called Roksteid', along with 'Neirland' (probably Netherraw) and 'Podotoun' (probably Paddington).

Rockvale (rok-vāl) n. name for group of houses on Liddesdale Road (previously Lynnwood Road), being Nos. 1–6. The first house (No. 4) was built sometime before 1857 and took the name in the 1880s, the others being built in 1926. They were originally reached from the main road via a foot bridge over the mill lade. They were demolished in the 1980s (the origin is presumably from the rocky protuberance, now a disused quarry, overlooking the valley).

Rockview (rok-vew) n. house in Denholm, off Minto Road, which was a blacksmith's in the early 20th century.

roddin (ro-din) n., poet. a track, path – '...gae they wayes furth bie the fit-roddins o' the flok' [HSR].

Rodds (rodz) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as 'Roddis'. At that time the tenants were John and James Elliot and the lands were valued at one merk. It is unclear where this is, but it was listed between Ramsiegill and Roughley, so it is possibly the same place as 'Reddadenn'.

Rodes (rōdz) n. former farm near Southdean, although the precise location and name are uncertain. John Oliver was tenant there in 1669 and John Storie in 1694 (it was 'Roods' and 'rods' in 1694).

Rodger (ro-jur) n. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull in Clarilaw. It is possible he is the Andrew, married to Bessie Turnbull, whose children, baptised in Robertson (but probably Hassendean), included Isobel (b.1683) and Margaret (b.1686). The witnesses in 1683 were Thomas Henderson and John Armstrong. He is probably the Andrew who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 and witnessed another for John Turnbull in 1688. Andrew (18th C.) farmer on the Cavers estate who, before about 1737, made early winnowing machines or corn fanners, inspired by descriptions of a Dutch model (perhaps communicated to him by Douglas of Cavers). These may have been the first mechanical means of separating grain from the chaff in the whole of Britain. Another version tells how in 1733 he found a machine discarded in Leith by James Meikle (brought back from Holland) and made one of his own 4 years later, supplying them for £3 each by 1740, having given up his farm. He thereafter sold them in the area, although there were religious objections that they were supplanting the Lord's creations (i.e. the corn should be 'fammed by God's wind on the hills'); for some time in Hawick, when anything went wrong it was blamed on 'the deil or Andrew Rodger' and the machine was called the 'deil's wind'. In 1723 he obtained a property in the Sandbed from his uncle James Rodger, which had previously belonged to Langlands. On either this property or elsewhere at the Sandbed he established a shop. His descendants traded in fanning machines there for about the next 100 years. Some dispute with the Hawick Parish Session (which is unclear) resulted in him giving up the title for another Sandbed property about 1724 (perhaps part of the same property) where the Grammar School would then be built. Andrew Turnbull and John Pringle were charged with valuing his house for the Kirk Session. A portrait of him exists (he is also referred to as 'Rogers' and sometimes called 'William'). He was recorded living at Cavers itself in 1723 when one of his children was baptised. He was said to have lived at Cavers Mains or Little Cote. He is probably the Andrew, whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Marion (b.1711), William (b.1713), James (b.1715), Margaret (b.1717), Betty (b.1720), Robert (b.1723), an unnamed child (b.1725), Hugh (b.1727) and Ann (b.1729). He was at Eastcote in 1727 when his son was baptised. Andrew (d.1819) flesher in Hawick, who had sons Robert and John. He is probably the Andrew, married to Betty Grieve, whose children included: Jean (b.1769); an unnamed child (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); William (b.1773); and Robert John (b.1775). The first child was baptised in Wilton Parish and the rest in Hawick. The witnesses in 1771 were the whole congregation. He is probably the Andrew whose uncle Andrew Scott died in Hawick in 1778.

Andrew (b.1785) son of John and Catherine Cairns, he was born at Whitmuir Hall. In 1816 he married Margaret Smail in Selkirk. Their children included: John (b.1822), born at Hyndlee in Southdean; and Jessie (b.c.1831), born in Southdean. It seems likely that Andrew (b.c.1829), born in Southdean Parish, was also his son. Andrew (b.1801/2) born in Traquair Parish, he was a shepherd at Sundhope and also toll-keeper at Fiddleton around the 1860s. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Priestthaughshiel. In 1851 he was at Sundhope and in 1861 he was listed as shepherd at Fiddleton, with his son James as the toll-keeper, and his daughter Joan also there. His wife was Violet Rae and their first 6 children were baptised in Yarrow Parish, then 4 in Ewes Parish and the rest in Castleton and Cavers. They included Margaret (b.1824), James (b.1826), William (b.1828), Andrew (b.1829), Violet (b.1830), John (b.1832), Walter (b.1834), Elliot (b.1835), Isabella (b.1837), Robert (also known as Rutherford, b.1839), Isaac (b.1842), Adam (b.1844), Euphemia (b.1846) and Joan (b.1847). Andrew (b.1816/7) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. In 1841 he was a handloom weaver living on the Back Raw, in 1851 was a stockingmaker on Burn Road in the Dean and in 1861 was a frame-worker living on Dean Road. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betsy') Scott in Wilton in 1839 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1840); Helen; Robert; Isabella; Gideon; Mary; John; and James. Andrew (b.c.1825) flesher on the Howegate. He may have been related to the earlier flesher of the same name. In 1841 he was listed along with his siblings Walter, Nancy, Helen and Elizabeth. He was at about 23–25 Howegate in 1851, along with his sister Helen. He was listed in Slater's 1852 directory (as 'Rodgers') on the Howegate. Andrew (b.c.1829) born in Southdean Parish. In 1851 he was a farm labourer at Greenhead Cottages, Selkirk and in 1851 was a shepherd at Sunderland farm. His wife was Margaret from Ashkirk and their children included Philadelphia (b.c.1850), Margaret and Mary. Andrew (b.c.1830) born in Kirkhope Parish, he was a game watcher. In 1851 he was living with his in-laws at Netheraw in Castleton

Parish. He married Frances Rodger and their children included Andrew and Matthew. Andrew (b.c.1835) born in Edinburgh, son of Andrew from Earlston. He was a frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on Havelock Street. His wife was Euphemia (from Langholm) and their children included Andrew. James (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the the James who (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 in Robertson Parish (but actually the Hassendean part). James (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Dryden in Kirkton Parish in 1721. Perhaps the same James was recorded in Cavers in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. It is possible he was the James who in 1723 sold his property in the Sandbed to his nephew Andrew. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at 'Utter Parkhill' in 1782 and Parkhill in 1784. His children included: James (b.1779); Jane (b.1782); and Helen (b.1784). James (b.1826/7) son of Andrew, he was born in Selkirk Parish. In 1861 he was recorded as toll-keeper at Fiddleton, living there with his father as well as his sister Joan. James (19th C.) married Jessie Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1853. James (19th C.) flesher in Hawick. He went bankrupt in 1873, with the Commissioners for his estate being John Nichol and Walter Forsyth. Maj. James (1864/5–1930) worked in the woollen industry. He married Bella, only child of A.K. Innes. He was probably son of John and Margaret MacRaw. Janet (d.1787) servant of Dr. William Scott, who lived at Brieryhill. She died in Hawick. John (b.c.1750) resident of Whitmuir Hall when his 2 sons were baptised in Selkirk Parish. In 1778 he married Catherine (1752–1816), daughter of James Cairns; she was born at Dodhead and died at Oakwood Mill. Their children included: Andrew (b.1785), who lived in Southdean Parish; and John (b.1787). John (1787–1869) son of John, he was born at Whitmuir Hall. He was a labourer at Howpasley on the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. In 1809 he married Margaret (or 'Peggy') Brunton at the East Bank Kirk in Hawick. Most of their 10 children were born at Howpasley and baptised at the East Bank Kirk: Christina (b.1810); Henry (b.1813); Nelly (b.1814); Helen (b.1817); Mary (b.c.1820); John (b.1822); Peter (b.1824); Elizabeth ('Betty', b.1826); Dickson (b.c.1828); and James (b.c.1830). He emigrated to Canada and died in Blenheim Township, Ontario. John (18th/19th C.) butcher recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. Robert, also a butcher, was listed with him, suggesting they were brothers. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'. He was still listed in 1801, but now as a carrier. Probably the same John was a butcher of the Back Row, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was listed on the Howegate. Matthew 'Mat' (d.1968) joiner in Deanburnhaugh. He took over from Adam Elliot. Peter (b.c.1780) stocking-maker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded as a weaver in Whitchesters in 1704. In 1704 he also witnessed a baptism for John Glendinning in Whitchesters. He gave evidence in 1710 relating to a fight in St. Mary's between 2 other weavers. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid. He married Janet Glendinning in 1701 and their children included: William (b.1704), Janet (b.1706) and Robert (b.1708). The witnesses in 1704 were William Bell in Whitchesters and James Grieve in Commonsideside and in 1708 were gardener William Scott and carrier Henry Paterson. Robert 'Duke' (19th C.) possibly the same Robert recorded as butcher at the Back Row in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He took over as town drummer from Caleb Rutherford, about 1830 – 'Rob Rodger, he ca's up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum' [RM]. He may be the butcher, recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; John was listed along with him, suggesting they may have been brothers. In 1799 he was a butcher among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and was still listed in 1801 (again along with John). Walter (b.c.1820) flesher on the Howegate. He was living at about No. 17 in 1841, along with his siblings Nacny, Andrew, Helen and Elizabeth. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dryden and their children included: Robert (b.1670); William (b.1672); Bessie (b.1674); and John (b.1684). William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (but probably the part that was Hassendean). He married Margaret Scott and their children included James (b.1684) and Elizabeth (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were James and Andrew, who were surely related to him. The 1687 witnesses were 2 William Turnbells. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull and Margaret Scott. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen 'Murie' and their children born in Hawick Parish included: Bessie (b.1687); and an unnamed son (b.1688). William (17th C.) 'pedder' (i.e. pedlar) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He may be the William married to Helen 'Murie' or the one married to Janet Dryden. William (17th C.) shepherd at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) listed in 1724 and 1727 among those collecting money for Ashkirk Parish. This suggests he was probably a Kirk elder. He is probably the William who married Margaret, daughter of William Scott, in Wilton Parish in 1711. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: William (b.1717); and Bettie (b.1719). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wester Parkhill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the William whose wife Mary Stavert died in 1795. William (d.1805) described as 'weaver and shopkeeper to Mr. Oliver'. It is unclear which Oliver this was. Perhaps the same weaver married Helen Scott in 1763 and had children: Margaret (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1768); and William (b.1770). The witnesses in 1764 were Walter Scott and Robert Renwick (who married Elizabeth, perhaps his sister). William (d.1837) wright of Hawick, probably a descendant of Andrew. His employee, wright John Scott, was listed among Hawick men balloted for the Militia in 1797. It is possible he is the 'Roger' whose premises near the top of Walter's Wynd are shown on Wood's 1824 map (also written 'Rodgar'; see also Roger).

Rodgers (ro-jurz) n. Catherine (19th C.) milliner and dressmaker on the Kirk Wynd in Slater's 1852 directory. Mary (18th/19th C.) dressmaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories.

Rodgie (ro-jee) n. Rev. Andrew (1777–1861) from Abernethy, son of Thomas and Margaret Wright. He was minister of the Green (or West End) Church for 53 years, ordained in 1807, following the death of Rev. Dr. Young. He may have been in Hawick since late the previous year, having also been called to Jedburgh. He was well known for receiving the Cornet and his supporters every year at Myreslaw Green, sending his servant round with the bottle, giving them 'A guid, cauld cauker, Frae a man that was nae Quaker', in a verse that may have been added to Balbirnie's 'Auld Song'. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was listed at Myreslawgreen in Pigot's 1837 directory. Often referred to as ‘Rodgie o the Green’, he was known for insisting on strict observance of the Sabbath (which included no fiddling, secular singing, cooking or walking). In 1856 he was presented with a purse containing 90 sovereigns on the occasion of his jubilee. He married Isabella Summers in Hawick in 1825 and they appear to have had 4 children: Isabella (b.1826); Margaret (b.1828), still living in Hawick in 1861; Thomas (b.1831), who died young; and Mary (b.1837), also died young. A portrait of him exists. His mother-in-law died in Hawick in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in the cholera outbreak). His wife is recorded in about 1874 (along with Janet Brown, perhaps a relative) as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. William (1836/7–73) said to be from Hawick, he may have been related to Rev. Andrew. He worked as a banker in Bombay. In 1863 in Hawick he married Mary Elisabeth, daughter of Dr. Walter Graham. He is recorded being present at the famous otter hunt organised at Hawick in 1863. He died of dysentery in Jerusalem on his way back from Bombay. A cross was erected in the cemetery at Jerusalem in his memory (also written ‘Rogie’).

Rodman (rod-mun) n. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he had remission for crimes. He was listed as being from Rulewater and his crimes included theft of sheep and cattle from 4 separate farms. His surety was Thomas Rutherford, brother of the Laird of Hundalee. He was separately listed in 1494/5 when he had remission for stealing sheep from 2 other farms, with his surety being Thomas Rutherford in the Grange of Abbotrule. This surname seems to be otherwise unknown in the area.

Rodono (ro-dō-nō) n. house on the western bank of St. Mary’s Loch. The estate was an ancient barony dating to at least 1236, and was long held by the monks of Melrose. There was a nearby chapel (at Chapelhope, at the head of the Loch o the Lowes). In 1442 it was listed among lands whose fees were held by Melrose Abbey. In 1484 it was contained in a list of lands to which the monks appointed David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert as Bailies, with Sir Walter Scott appointed to the same office in 1519. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 there is a note about the Comptroller’s expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick and Ringwoodfield) and in 1540 the ‘fermes’ were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £82 12s 8d. In 1557 Robert Scott of Bowhill paid rental to Melrose Abbey for lands here, namely ‘Langbank’, ‘Quhithoup’, ‘Litillhoup’ and ‘Mekillehoup’. The lands were valued at £25 in about 1564. In 1566 Queen Mary and her husband Darnley held a council here, when they mentioned the scarcity of deer seen on the royal hunting trip and emphasised the penalties for others shooting the animals. When it was bought by John Scott of Teviotbank in the mid-19th century he revived the old name. The mansion was built in 1866 for this John Scott (also called ‘of Rodono’), but he died before it was completed. It was then owned by Thomas and William Turnbull of Fenwick and sold in 1890. The Earl of Wemyss rented it out as a hunting lodge. For a while it was leased by Robert Pringle, of Pringle of Scotland, who used the name for his factory in Hawick, as well as for the unshrinkable process Pringles applied to underwear. It later became a hotel, known for wild society functions, with stories of a Model-T Ford being driven out onto a frozen St. Mary’s in 1934 to later sink, and also said to be where Mandy Rice-Davies of the Profumo affair is alleged to have hidden out in the 1960s. It was sold by Lady Elizabeth Benson in 1994 and renovated in about 2000 – ‘Near him stand Bourhope and Corsecleuch hills, And beyond, the Capper Law, Rodono (with tiny glistening rills That a spate to mountain torrent fills), And behind, the Pauper Law’ [TK] (the name probably comes from the old Scots for the rowan tree; it was ‘Rodanoch’ in 1235/6, ‘rodono’ in 1442, ‘Rodonow’ in 1484, ‘Rowdonov’ in 1519, ‘Rodonoland’ in 1524, ‘Rodonoland’ in 1525 and 1553/4, ‘Rodonald’ in 1538, ‘Rowdonald’ in 1540, ‘Rowdono’ in 1557, ‘Rodonaldland’ in 1574 and ‘Roddono’ in 1670).

Rodono (ro-, ri-dō-nō) n. Rodono Mills, part of the Pringle’s knitwear operation on Teviot Road. The original buildings of Walter’s Wynd were built for John Nixon & Sons in 1869 and renamed ‘Rodono’ by Pringle’s (after the hunting lodge at St. Mary’s Loch, which Robert Pringle leased). There was a fire there in 1939, destroying the offices and much of the company archives. The buildings were developed to their final massive (and architecturally unremarkable) size through extensions in 1952, 1955, 1958 and 1968. However, it was closed in 1976 due to costs, with all the machinery being moved to Glebe Mills and administration to Victoria Mill. The building was demolished in 1980/1. The rubble was used to fill part of Weensland dam and raise the ground level opposite the sewerage works. The land was used for the new Health Centre in 1989. The name was also adopted as a trade name for the shrink-resistant process applied by Pringles to underwear from 1899.

Roger (ro-jur) n. Parson of Rule. He may be the earliest known priest of Hobkirk Parish. Sometime in the period 1165–78 he witnessed a charter for Richard Comyn, relating to Holyrood Abbey and land in West Lothian. His name is given as ‘Roger’ and he was ‘persona’ of Rule. In 1214 possibly the same Roger, Parson of Rule, witnessed a charter for William Comyn, who granted a stone of wax annually to the church of St. Cuthbert in Durham.

Roger (ro-jur) n. griever of Hassendean who witnessed a charter around the 1220s for the family ‘of Hassendean’. His name is given as ‘Roger’. It is possible that his ancestors became Grieves.

Roger (ro-jur) n. Douglas (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1781, 1785, 1787 and 1789 he witnessed baptisms for wright William and in 1793 he (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for the same William, who was surely related (probably his cousin). He married Elizabeth Harkness and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1806. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Thomas Thomson. In 1724 he married Janet, daughter of merchant James Simpson. Their children included: Janet (b.1725); Margaret (b.1727); and John (b.1729, although the name is hard to read). The witnesses in 1725 were merchant William Oliver and carrier John Simpson and in 1729 were ‘Mr’ (probably Andrew) Haliburton and the Laird of Harwood. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1741 he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Haig and in 1745 another for weaver Andrew Jardine. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for James Stoddart. He may also be the James who in 1774 witnessed a baptism for James Easton from Braxholme. He married Janet Dickson. Their son Andrew was born in 1745, with the witnesses being merchants Charles Tudhope and William Riddell. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for carrier John Simpson. He married Jean Haig and their children included: Mary (b.1745); and Jean (b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were shoemaker Thomas Scott and weaver Robert Douglas. John

(17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Craw and their son John was baptised in 1674. Robert (16th/17th C.) of Burnfoot Mill. He is mentioned in the 1612 complaint of the Baron of Hawick to the Privy Council, regarding taxation in Hawick and the imprisoning of the Baron’s officer, Alexander ‘Wischart’ in St. Mary’s steeple. The Magistrates were let off this latter charge, since Wischart was guilty of striking Roger, presumably at the market while trying to collect customs. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Riddell in 1720. He married Helen Duncan and their children included Janet (b.1701) and John (b.1703). The witnesses in 1701 were weaver John Swan and Robert Langlands. Robert (d.1808) wheelwright in Hawick, son of Andrew. His father could have been Andrew ‘Rodger’, manufacturer of agricultural implements from the early part of the 18th century. He is probably the Robert who married either Elizabeth Wallace or Margaret Davidson or Betty Grieve. He is probably the Robert, who, along with Douglas, witnessed a baptism for wright William in 1793; he may have been brother of Douglas and cousin of William. His death is recorded in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) married Elizabeth Wallace in Hawick in 1768. Their children included Ann (b.1770). Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Davidson in Hawick in 1772. Their children included William (b.1773). Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Betty Grieve. Their son Robert was baptised in 1775. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Joan Stewart. Their son James was baptised in 1810. Robert (19th C.) married Marianne Welsh in Wilton Parish in 1845. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. William (d.1482) court musician of James III. He was knighted and appointed to the Privy Council. The King gave him the estate of Traquair in 1469. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. In 1478 he disposed of Traquair for only 70 merks to James Stewart, Earl of Buchan, uncle to the King. However, a few years later, when the King was on an expedition against the English, he was one of the royal favourites who were captured by a group including the Earl of Buchan, and hanged at Lauder bridge. William (15th C.) leased the lands of Winterburgh in 1488, along with Robert Scott, with Sir David Scott as pledge. The lease continued in 1490 and 1492. Probably the same William was bequeathed 30 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme in 1491/2. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Wilzem Roger' in 1500 when he was one of the witnesses for a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope. Probably the same man was witness in 1501 to a notorial instrument relating to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst for their lands of Feu-rule in the Barony of Cavers. William (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Scott in 1747. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1730); Isabel (b.1731); Isabel (again, b.1732); William (b.1739); Robert (b.1741); Andrew (b.1745); and Janet (again, b.1746). The witnesses in 1731 were James Purcell and Thomas Scott, in 1739 were merchant John Cavers and Bailie Robert Boyd, and in 1745 were merchants Francis and John Ruecastle. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1763 he married Helen Scott, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Margaret (b.1764), Elizabeth (b.1768) and William (b.1770). William (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for John Laing. He married Marjory, daughter of Alexander Donald (or Donaldson) in 1776 and their children included: Agnes (b.1778); Margaret (b.1780); Mary (b.1781); Janet (b.1785); Ann (b.1787); Willelmina (b.1789); and Marjory (b.1793). The witnesses in 1781, 1785, 1787 and 1789 were Bailie Walter Hardie and Douglas (who was surely related) and in 1793 were wrights Robert and Douglas Roger (perhaps his cousins). He is mentioned as a wright in Hawick in a Selkirk court case of 1809. He may have been son of James. William (18th/19th C.) describer of a version of how Hawick men accounted for themselves at Flodden, as recounted in Wilson's 'Annals of Hawick' (1850). He may be the same William who married Marjory Donaldson (sister of Agnes, Isabella, Elizabeth and Jane), and had 7 children, including Janet, who was the 2nd wife of manufacturer Alexander Laing. He may also be the William who is shown as owner of property on Slitrig Crescent on Wood's 1824 map (see also Rodger; formerly sometimes 'Rocher').

rogerowse (ro-gu-ows) adj., arch. given to freedom of speech, outspoken (noted by J. Jamieson).

Rogers (ro-jurz) n. Ann (b.c.1790) milliner at 26 High Street, along with Mina. They are recorded on the 1841 census. Rev. Douglas Malcolm (1916–95) born in Leeds, he was trained at Yorkshire United Independent College and became minister of Providence Chapel, Cleckheaton in 1948. Thereafter he served as minister in Halifax and Sunderland, before becoming minister at Hawick Congregational Kirk 1969–71. After Hawick he was minister at Girlington, Yorkshire. He married Edith Doreen Speck.

Rogerson (ro-jur-sin) n. John (19th C.) married Agnes Kerr in Robertson in 1830. John local teacher who co-wrote 'Jimme Guthrie, Hawick's Racing Legend' with journalist Gordon Small in 1997. Thomas (19th C.) general agent in Dundee. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825, suggesting that he had a local connection. In 1827 in Langholm he married Janet Elizabeth Renwick. In 1839 he was in Dundee jail, fighting his creditors.

Rogie see Rodgie

rogues-money (rōgz-mu-nee) n. a tax raised on counties for the expense of arresting and imprisoning criminals. The local use and administration of these funds appears to have been a matter of some debate – 'Paid Mr Weir, to carry his expenses to Jedburgh for the rogue-money relating to the brig' [BR1740].

the Rogues' Cairt (thu-rōgz-kār) n. spring-cart that used to be sent round to the neighbouring parishes for transporting prisoners to Jedburgh Jail. This started around the 1840s.

the Rogues' Hole (thu-rōgz-hōl) n. occasional name used for the Town prison (e.g. in 1782), being under the former Town House (also called the Thiefs' Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Roll-aboot (rōl-u-boo) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – 'Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie lilt a sang Tae Shauchles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot' [HI].

the Roll o Honour (thu-rōl-ō-o-nur) n. record of local men who fell in the 2 World Wars, held in the Museum. The original was executed by Graham Johnston, W.R. Lawson and William Wallace MacGregor. It consists of 8 pages of illuminated vellum in a stand of oak, containing the names of 693 who were killed in WWI. The names are arranged alphabetically by Regiment. James Haig executed a similar design for the WWII roll.

the Roll o the Clans (thu-rōl-ō-thu-klawnz) n. list of prominent and landed men in the Borders and Highlands in the records of the Privy Council for 1590, with an abbreviated version in the records of the Scottish Parliament for 1587. Its full title is 'The Roll of the Clannis that hes Capitanis, Cheiffis, Chiftenis, quhomeon they depend, oftymis aganis the willis of thair Landislordis, alsweill on the Bordouris as Hielandis, and of sum special personis of branches of the saidis Clannis'. Like other records of the time, it shows that Border families were considered to be clans as much as their Highland cousins. It also forms an invaluable record of local lairds at the time, listing about 100 Lairdships in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire, naming many men explicitly. The 1587 document lists those in the Middle March as: [Francis Stewart] Earl of Bothwell; [Sir Andrew Kerr] Laird of Ferniehirst; [Archibald Douglas] Earl of Angus; [Sir Walter Scott] Laird of Buccleuch; [Sir William Douglas] Sheriff of Teviotdale; [Walter Turnbull] Laird of Bedrule; [Hector Turnbull] Laird of Wauchope; [William Maxwell] Lord Herries; [Walter Scott] Laird of Howpasley; George Turnbull of Hallrule; [Walter Ker] Laird of Littledean; [Sir James Douglas] Laird of Drumlanrig; and [Walter Chisholme] Laird of Chisholme. The document of about 1590 is headed 'Landit Men' and contains more names in each area, as well as covering the whole of Scotland. In the 'Roxburgh and Selkirk' section there are 101 men on the list, some named explicitly and some with just the Lairdship given. Locally the list includes the Lairds of Aikwood, Alemoor, Allanhaugh, Barnhills, Bedrule, Belses, Bewlie, Billerwell, Bonjedward, Braidlie, Buccleuch, Burnfoot, Cavers, Chamberlain Newton, Chisholme, Dryhope, Falnash, Glack, Gledstains, Goldielands, Haining, Hallrule, Harden, Harts-garth, Hartwoodmyres, Harwood, Hassendean, Headshaw, Horsleyhill, Howpasley, Huntly, Langlands, Mangerton, Minto, Newton, North Synton, Reidheugh, Riddell, Robertson, Stirches, Stobs, Synton, Thirlestane, Timpendean, Tofts, Toor, Tushielaw, Wauchope, Whithaugh and Whitriggs.

Romanno (rō-maw-nō) n. Matthew (15th C.) notary responsible for the sasine for the Cousinlands, sold by Margaret Cousin to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1447. The 'precept' was witnessed in Hawick, and the sasine itself signed at Branxholme. He was described as a presbyter of Glasgow diocese, and so was probably a local church official. He wrote his name as 'Matheus de Romanox'. He also wrote the sasine for Simon of Routledge selling the Birkwood and Burnflat to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1448.

Romanno Bridge (rō-maw-nō-brij) n. village in Peeblesshire, in the northern part of the Scottish Borders, south of West Linton. The 'bridge' is over the Lynne Water. The Romannos of that Ilk came from here. John Scott in Whitehaugh had remission in 1502 for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. The lands were owned by the Murrays from 1513 until 1676. In 1677 it was the site of a fight between 2 gypsy families, the Faas and the Shaws (it is 'Rommanos' in 1502 and 'Ralmanno' in 1526).

the Romans (thū-rō-munz) n., pl. empire builders based in Italy, who conquered England, and made in-roads into Scotland. They occupied parts of Britain from the middle of the 1st century to the beginning of the 5th. Agricola's conquest of the North started in 78 C.E., as part of which he built the forts at Raeburnfoot and Newsteads, driving a wedge between the Selgovae and Novantae tribes. Although there was no major Roman settlement in the immediate neighbourhood of Hawick, there are many signs of nearby Roman habitation, including at Ruberslaw, Craik Cross and Aikwood. There is a Roman road running from Raeburnfoot to the Borthwick valley via Craik Cross, although it is unclear where it continued on the near side of Craik. However, in 1948 the remains of a stone-built culvert (used to divert the stream under the road) was discovered on the left bank of the Borthwick after flooding, midway between Craik and Northhope Haugh; this has subsequently washed away. There has been a suggestion of a continuation of this road up the Borthwick valley and then via Blawearie to Hangingshaw Hill, then between Woo Law and Groundistone Height, proceeding to Harelaw, and connecting to Newstead. There is another possible Roman road connecting Eskdale with Teviotdale, running via Ewes Doors to Caerlenrig. Several Roman altar stones were reused in the building of Jedburgh Abbey. Trimontium near Melrose was an important fort in the 1st and 2nd centuries. Hadrian's Wall is about 40 miles to the south, and Dere Street only about 12 miles to the east. At Teviothead a Roman coin (of Vespasian) was found in 1856, and more recently a denarius of Augustus was found near Fulton Tower. A bronze swastika brooch from the late 2nd century was found at Denholmhill around 1930. Nearer to Hawick, 2 temporary Roman camps were revealed by aerial photography in the 1960s, these lying near Cavers Mains and Eastcote farms. The Romans pulled out of the Borders by 369 C.E., which was effectively the start of the Dark Ages, and the period of Roman occupation was quickly forgotten. However, there have been several local finds of artefacts. The leg of a large bronze statue was found at Milsington in 1820, along with the bronze base of another statue (suggested to be loot from a site in England, and described in 1887/8). A bronze horde was unearthed on Ruberslaw in 1863 (2nd century, now in the Museum), as well as a 'first brass' of Vespasian found nearby, 2 bronze coins uncovered on Hallrule farm, and a couple of dressed stones from near the summit. More recently a Roman coin was found in a garden at Maclagan Drive, and a Romano-British carved stone at Appletreehall. And in 2011 a horde of 228 coins from the time of Vespasian to Commodus were found on Synton Hill – 'Lords of the earth, the Roman legions wheel Their glittering files, and stamp with gory heel, Bathe the keen javelin's edge in purple dew; While Death smiles dimly o'er the faulchion blue' [JL].

Romish (rō-mish) adj. relating to the Church of Rome, usually used disparagingly by Protestants – '...att this time we are threatened with an invasion from Spain, the greatest enemies in ye Romish church and bloody Irish combined' [PR1719].

rone (rōn) n. a gutter on a roof for carrying away rainwater – 'yer rone's ful o leafs, an witter's poorin ower the side', '... Wi sparras cheepin gleg on the rones, the cocks crawin, And the blackies whusslin owre a' the braes and gairdens!' [DH] (also spelled 'rhone'; the origin of the word is uncertain).

rood (rood) n., arch. an old unit of land area, equal to one quarter of a Scots acre – '... and ye factor could not gett workmen to undertake such a fence under tenpence a rood' [GT], 'On Allen water, about ninety roods of new dyke were run away ...' [BM1897].

roods (roodz) n., pl., arch. the grounds associated with a burgh – 'John Ainslie, a burgess of Hawick, but residing at Allers, beyond the burgh roods, petitions the council ...' [JW1783].

room (room) n., arch. space, place, especially in the phrase 'in room of' – '... and also have turned out most part of ye Protestant magistrats and put in Papists in their room' [PR1718], 'But whan he heard that Archelaus rang in Judea in the room o' his faether ...' [HSR].

the room (thū-room) n., arch. the parlour or sitting-room, the better room in a house (noted by E.C. Smith).

roon (roon) adv., prep. round – 'To sum up the matter – there's nane roon' about ...' [JoHa], '...frae my mortall faes wha ar roon about me' [HSR], 'Thaye cam' daylie roun' about me like water; thaye cam' roun' an' roun' thegither' [HSR], 'This life is but a shiftin' scene The world gaes circlin' roon' [JT], 'Where are pleasures bright and gay In a care forgettin' roon' [TK], 'We'll follow oor Cornet, follow oor Cornet, follow oor Cornet roon' [DJ], 'As roon it ran wi stertan een, A waesome squeal the craiter gien' [DH], 'A' roon' about stude the muckle black birds ...' [DH], '... That huddle roun' Winnington Rig' [WL] (also spelled 'roun'; cf. roond).

roond (roond) adj. round – 'it's a roond circle if ever A saw yin', n. a round – 'the next roond's on yow', adv. round, around – 'A came roond ti your bit, bit ee wereni in', '... An' bids thy followers roond thy banner rally' [JoHa], '... To be a laddie racing roond The auld Mid Raw' [JT], 'When Spring cam' roond, it was my dread ...' [IJ], 'Aw'd like tae tell o' the beauties aw've seen That's aw roond dear auld Hawick' [AY], 'Still each year as June comes roond, Ee'll finnd mei early doon the Toon' [ABo], v. to round – 'can ee roond that off ti the nearest shillin?', 'He rounded on me shairply 'Aye, but Bosells Fair was waur!' [WL], prep. round, around – '... The burn that roond it rins' [JEDM] (sometimes written 'roond').

roondabout (roon-du-boo) n. roundabout, merry-go-round, traffic circle – 'the roondabout was his doonfaa on his driving test', '... hei'd hev ti wait at yon roondabout at Galalaw ...' [IWL], adj. roundabout, indirect – 'she hed sic a roondabout way o pittin things, A never kent what she was on about'.

roondabout (roon-du-boo) n., pl. a circular earthwork – 'There are a great many roundabouts in the parish, commonly called Picts Works' [RAB].

Roondabouts (roon-du-boots) n. Roundabouts, former name for a house in Chesters in Southdean Parish. It is listed on the census for 1841 and 1861 and on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. It may be the place also known as Turnpikehead.

the Roond Close (thū-roond-klōs) n. probably the oldest of the High Street closes, at No. 17, named after the rounded archway for which it was once notable. It also once held one of the minor gates giving access to the town. Staples for the iron gate were visible until about 1840. The building to the east bears a triangular stone with the inscription ‘J.S.M.D. Feare Gode. 1600’, taken from the front of the house when it was rebuilt in 1871; this pended house probably partly defended the close. It was also known as the Wide Close in the early 1800s, and around this time contained a public house (called the Royal Oak or Blue Bell). In the mid-19th century it contained Brunton’s contractors and joiners. Many of the houses were demolished in the 1930s, followed by the lower cobbled area, including the I.O.G.T. hall and further buildings after the War, to make way for the Rodono Mill factory. Steps were built to retain the right of way, and Rodono itself was demolished in 1980, and the Health Centre built in its place.

Roond Croft (roond-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land near Hawick, referred to by James Wilson in 1850 and J.J. Vernon in 1900. The location is uncertain, but perhaps close to the Common, or possibly related to an earlier form of the Roond Close.

roonders (roon-durz) n. rounders, a children’s bat and ball game – ‘Hei taught oo rugby, cricket, roonders, Country dancin, softba’, gym And A dinni mind tellin ee A was gliffed stiff for him’ [IWL].

Roondhaugh (roond-hawch) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish, owned by the Scotts of Woll in 1609 when it is ‘Roundhauch’ and part of the lands purchased by the Cochranes in 1795.

the Roond Room (thu-roond-room) n. room within the Tower Hotel formerly used for functions, e.g. the reception on Picking Night in the late 19th century.

Roond Sike (roond-sik) n. Round Sike, small stream in the headwaters of the Thorlieshope Burn in upper Liddesdale (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Roond Table (thu-roond-tā-bul) n. Hawick Round Table, part of an international organisation with charitable and social aims, which began in 1927. The local branch is No. 532, part of area 39, and has met for many years in the Buccleuch Hotel, typically twice a month. It is allied with the Rotary Club, which is restricted to men over the age of 45.

roose (rooz) v. to annoy, anger, provoke, rouse, become agitated, grow angry – ‘hei wadni half’d been roosed if hei’d fund oot’, ‘hei got awfi roosed if ee caaed eet a festival’, ‘... A Hawick man makes a cannie friend but roose him if ye daur’ [T], ‘But his eye was set on Lucky Skrae, And aye he roosed her mettle ...’ [JTe], ‘We roosed the valiant deeds o’ ‘Huz’, At Otterburn and Flodden’ [VW], ‘Hei’ll rooze at yince if ee cry names till um’ [ECS], ‘It was rale roosin’ [GW], n., arch. an extreme state of anger – ‘She was in a fine roose’ [GW] (also written ‘rouse’).

roosed (roozd) adj. annoyed, angry, roused, enraged, maddened – ‘she was fair roosed’ – ‘... An’ try an’ looked roosed a’ day!’ [RM], ‘She was gey roos’d at ’im’ [GW], ‘... Ma wad be roused, oo didni care As oo went doon oor close and up oor stair’ [IWL] (also written ‘roused’).

roost (roost) n., arch. rust, v., arch. to rust.

roostit (roos-tee’, -ti’) pp., arch. rusted – ‘... Roostit horseshoon, an queer wheel-rings O’ tumble cars, The swords o’ ancient knights an’ kings, Lost i’ their wars’ [JoHa].

roosty (roos-tee) adj., arch. rusty – ‘But a splice or twae here An a roosty nail there’ [??].

rooth (rooth) n., arch. rowth, an abundance, plenty – ‘... thou hest gien my feet routh o’ roome’ [HSR], ‘... And routh o’ joys, the hearts to cheer, O’ lads and lassies braw’ [JT], ‘... twae wi nae official Lass, But wi a routh o lasses welcome to bob and scammle Alang wi the lave ...’ [DH] (also spelled ‘routh’; cf. ruith and rowth).

Ropelawshiel (rōp-lu-sheel) n. cottage in Craik Forest, recorded from at least the early 18th century. It is located where the Ropelaw Sike joins the Rankle Burn, and within the boundaries of the former farm is the source of the Rankle Burn. It was used for several years as a cottage by Chay Blyth and is now a holiday home (the origin of the name may be from roplaw, a young fox; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Roper (rō-pur) n. Moses (c.1815–91) born to an African American mother and a slave-owning father, he grew up as a slave, being tortured after many attempts to escape. Finally escaping successfully, he made it to New York and later sailed for Britain, where he settled in London, learned to read and write and published a narrative of his life’s story. He gave many lectures around Britain, starting in 1836. He spoke at the Green Kirk in Hawick in March 1846. William (19th

C.) Hawick man who emigrated to Highlandville, Massachusetts. He returned for the Common Ridings of 1887 and 1888, and sang a Hawick song (to the tune of ‘Bonnie Dundee’) at the 1888 Dinner. He is probably the son of Joseph recorded aged 7 on the Mid Raw in 1841. He may be the William listed among Hawick men who met with Robert Ewen in Guelph on his Canadian tour of 1878; he is recorded singing ‘Teribus’ along with fellow Teri George Murray.

Rope Sike (rōp-sīk) n. stream that rises between Windburgh Hill and Brown’s Hill and flows roughly to the south to meet the Floss Burn near Langburnshiels.

roplaw (rop-lu) n., arch. a young fox (said to be only a Teviotdale word, noted by J. Jamieson; it is possibly the origin for ‘Ropelawshiel’).

ropple (ro-pul) v., arch. to run or grow up rapidly (of vegetation) – ‘Ropped up, grown up with rapidity, large, but not strong in appearance, Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

ropple (ro-pul) v., arch. to pull the edges of something together in sewing, frequently in the phrases ‘ropple up’ or ‘ropple thegither’ – ‘Ropple, To draw the edges of a hole coarsely together; as of a stocking, instead of darning it, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (cf. thropple).

Rosalee (rō-za-lee) n. house built in the mid-19th century on the slopes above Langlands Road near Ladylaw. It was the home of the Rev. John Thomson and his family – ‘Sae ilka true Teri three cheers let us gie, For the Mr. and Mrs. o’ fair Rosalee’ [VW] (sometimes written ‘Rosalea’).

Roscins (ros-kinz) n. Thomas (13th C.) granted the lands of ‘Bethrull’ in Roxburghshire in 1357 by William, Earl of Douglas. This seems likely to be the same as Bedrule. However, there is no other record of a surname like ‘Roscins’ connected with this area.

Rose (rōz) n. Arthur (1634–1704) son of the minister of Birse, his name is also written ‘Ross’. He graduated from Marischal College in 1652 and became minister of Kinearny in 1656. He then became minister of Old Deer, then Rector of Marischal College, minister of St. Mungo’s, Bishop of Argyll and Bishop of Galloway. In 1679 he succeeded Andrew Burnet as Archbishop of Glasgow. And in 1684, after Burnet’s death, he succeeded him as Archbishop of St. Andrews and Primate of Scotland. After Parliament abolished episcopalianism in 1689 he continued to preach secretly as an Episcopalian and died in the Canon-gate. He is buried at Restalrig.

Rosebank (rōz-bawngk) n. name given in 1865 to the houses built at Thorterdrykes in the years 1861–64 on part of the old Tryst ground, and also on the land known as Haggishaa. The houses were built by Thomas Reid, mason and farmer at St. Leonard’s. The name may derive from thickets of wild roses previously growing there.

Rosebank (rōz-bawngk) n. house in Denholm. It was built for William Robson, who was a stocking manufacturer in the village. It was later home of John W. Turnbull, clothier.

Rosebank Road (rōz-bawngk-rōd) n. name given in the early 20th century to the road between the Loan and Burnflat Brae, after the houses called Rosebank, which already stood there. The north side was built up in 1927 and the south in 1929. The street is where the riders divide for the Chases, married men to the front and single men to the rear.

Rosecroft (rōz-kroft) n. house on the Dean Road just outside Denholm, which was formerly called Rosebank. It once housed a stocking-shop.

Rosedale (rōz-dāl) n. Turgis (d.bef. 1131) referred to in a charter of about 1125. He was Lord of Liddel, holding lands in what would later be called Liddesdale, and was probably a descendant of the earlier Baron, Turgis Brundis. He founded the house of Augustinian canons of Liddel (an offshoot of Jedburgh Abbey) in a place that came to be known as Canonbie. He gave the religious house of Liddel (as well as the church of ‘Kirchandlers’, i.e. Kirkandrews) to Jedburgh Abbey when it was founded in about 1138. He was succeeded by his son William. William (12th C.) son of Turgis, who was Lord of Liddel, he was a baron from Yorkshire. He is recorded as being ‘de Rossedale’ in a grant of about 1160 in which he gave his lands of Kershope to the hospital of St. Peter in York. The grant is confirmed in a copy made in the early 14th century, which describes the boundaries of the lands, giving some interesting historical details. The grant is confirmed by Malcolm IV, and there are referred to as ‘Greshoppa’ (but surely the same place). In the 1150s he founded the Cistercian priory usually called Rosedale Middleton. Along with his wife he also granted lands of ‘Greshoppa’ in Yorkshire to the same religious house, as confirmed by King Malcolm. He may be the 'Guido' who, with the consent of his son Radulf, gave 42 acres (where the Esk and Liddel join) to Jedburgh Abbey, along with free fishing from the ditch of Liddel to the church of Liddel. His wife was Godehild and he had a son, Turgis, who is the last known member of the family.

Rosemary's Baby (rōz-mā-reez-bā-bee) n. horror novel by Ira Levin, published in 1967 and made into a movie in 1968. The novel contains a sentence about the mail that Rosemary notices outside a neighbour's apartment: 'They got air mail letters from a surprising variety of places: Hawick, Scotland; Langeac, France; Vitória, Brazil; Cessnock, Australia'. It is unclear why Levin chose to include Hawick in this list.

Rosenberg (rō-zen-berg) n. one time pseudonym of Adam Grant. Sometimes also 'M. Rosenberg', it was used by him in for example, 1898 and 1900, for attribution as composer for 'Hawick' and 'I Like Auld Hawick the Best'. Presumably Grant believed that a Germanic name added musical gravitas. The name continued to appear up until about WWI, even although Grant was using his own name on other publications from the early years of the 20th century. It is probably a coincidence that Mrs. Roseburgh, who lived near Galashiels, signed her poetry 'M. Roseburgh' in the mid-to-late 19th century (or else the name is a coincidence).

Rosenberger (rō-zen-bur-gur) n. Frederica 'Mrs. R.' (20th C.) from Budapest in Hungary, she left because of Nazi persecution. She worked with Walter Marcus in Vienna and followed him to London in 1939. She became manageress of the Marcus factory in Hawick, which was set up in 1940. Her husband failed to secure a work permit for Britain and her 2 children, Vera and Bob were sent over using church groups and the Red Cross. She was known as a strict disciplinarian, but a brilliant dressmaker. The family lived in the West End. She moved to London after retiring, but regularly returned to visit Hawick. Robert 'Bob' son of Mrs. Frederica, the Hungarian manageress at Marcus's dress-making factory. He was taught at the High School and Edinburgh University, becoming a Professor of Bacteriology.

Rosevale Street (rōz-vāl-stree') n. short street between Mansfield Road and Mansfield Square, named in 1888, either for thickets of wild roses that grew there or just invented. The housing here was built by Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. to provide convenient housing for workers at Eastfield Mills.

Rosfritha (rōz-fri-tha) n. one of two women worshippers (the other being Sægifa) at the Chapel of St. Cuthbert (identified with a site near Cogsmill) mentioned by a contemporary historian as coming from 'Hawich'. This was written around the 1170s, and referred to an earlier time, possibly much earlier. Hence the pair are (assuming they existed) the first named residents of Hawick. The story was that they went to the old chapel on the feast day of the saint, to join others in celebration, after the previous fast day. However, in the evening their candle went out, and after some remonstrance, they prayed to Cuthbert, at which a new lighted candle appeared. Sir James Murray called his 4th daughter 'Rosfrith', inspired by this story (also transcribed as 'Rosfrith').

rosity (ro-zi'-ee) adj., arch. of the nature of resin or 'rosit' – '... the space within and around these was built up with whins and rositty faggots' [JAHM].

Ross (ros) n. Rev. Alexander L. (19th/20th C.) assistant minister of St. Cuthbert's 1904–09. He was on the committee that formed Hawick's first Scout troop in 1909. His time as Curate in Hawick ended when he became Rector at Rosyth. Andrew (19th/20th C.) of Edinburgh, the 'Ross Herald', i.e. one of the officers of the Court of the Lord Lyon. Around 1903 he was charged by the Town Council with researching into the historical basis for the Hawick Flag. His report endorsed the views of Craig & Laing and others, resulting in the square blue and red flag being replaced with a more accurate duplicate of the 1707 flag – 'a pennon, azure, a saltire or'. Rev. Donald G. (d.c.1940) assistant minister at St. George's Kirk from 1911, taking over as senior minister on the death of Rev. Johnman in 1923, and remaining until 1935. He came to Hawick from Pollok Street Church in Glasgow. Although he was formerly the assistant, due to the declining health of the senior minister, he in fact took on most of the ministerial duties. He 'kirked' the Cornet in 1912 and 1914, and oversaw the construction of the new church 1913–16. He was the first minister of the church to reside at the new Manse at Broomieknowe. He was apparently a great elocutionist and gave very powerful sermons. He celebrated his silver wedding anniversary in 1925, but his wife (Williamina Martin) died in 1934. Due to declining health he resigned in late 1935 and retired to Edinburgh. There is a memorial window to him in the church and another to his wife. Hugh (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Rae in 1793, but her death is recorded in 1795. J. Ian (1941/2–) from Hawick, he grew up at Hassendeanburn and worked in a grocer's shop in Hawick while at school. After school he was an apprentice compositor at the Hawick News. He later worked as a proofreader in several places, including Kenya and Zambia. He came back to Hawick in 1986. Sgt. James (18th/19th C.) professional soldier with the Royal North British Fusiliers. He was brought to Hawick in 1798 to work with the new Hawick Military Association of volunteers. James (19th C.) precentor at Hawick Free Kirk, coming from Free St. David's in Edinburgh in 1856 and serving until 1879. Rev. John Wallace (1886–1974) born at Turakina, New Zealand, son of Rev. John, he studied at the University of Wellington and was ordained in 1913. He became Chaplain-Captain in the New Zealand Expeditionary Force. Apparently unpopular with the men on a troop ship sailing to Suez, the captain threatened to throw him overboard! He served as Chaplain with the 5th Royal Scots at Gallipoli. He returned to New Zealand in 1919, but later attended classes at New College, Edinburgh and was inducted minister at Burnmouth, Berwickshire in 1922. He became minister of Denholm Kirk from the time of the reunion (1929, when it became part of the Church of Scotland) until 1953. In 1957 he moved to London to live with his daughter. He married Ruth Marjorie McGlashan in 1922. He died at Lewisham, London. Margaret 'callit Nuris' (17th C.) local woman who was attacked by Bailie James Burn in April 1641, having her forehead cut in the process. Burn accused her of being a witch, for being responsible for the death of a child and for bewitching his wife. He was fined and put in the stocks,

the Rotary Club (thū-rō'-u-ree-klub) n. international social and charitable organisation of businessmen and professionals, began in the U.S.A. in 1905, typically restricted to men in their 40s or above. Hawick is in District 1020, and the local club regularly met in the Buccleuch Hotel. The club planted 25 hawthorn trees in the Park in 1977 for the Queen's Silver Jubilee.

Rotherstone (ru-thur-stōn) n. William (14th C.) stated in an English document of c.1380 to have been owner of the lands of 'les Welles' in the Barony of Cavers. His surname is written 'Rothrestone', but since this name is otherwise unknown, it seems possible it is a mistranscription.

Rotten Moss (ro'-in-mos) n. area to the west of Whitfield and east of Pischah Hill.

Rottenraw (ro'-in-raw) n. former name for land near Hundalee, once a home of the Rutherfords. In 1638 it was given by John Rutherford of Rottenrow to Robert Scott ('in Burnfutt near Tiviot') who was marrying his daughter Anne (spelled 'Rattinraw' etc.).

Rotten Sike (ro'-in-sik) n. stream in southern Liddesdale, rising near the boundary with Dumfriesshire and running north-east past the farm of Whisgills to join Tinnis Burn.

Rotten Sike (ro'-in-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Stell Knowe and joining the Tweeden Burn north of Tweedenhead farm.

rouch (rowch) adj., arch. rough – '...ane peck of insufficient humillcorn meill, out of which there was dight ane choppin dish full of rouch seids' [BR1675], 'Ay whow, bairns, it's a rouch nicht. How the wund's souchin' i' the chumla heid!' [JAHM], '... And it's dreich, gey dreich on this rouch hill heid Whaur the cauld air gars ane nither' [WL] (also spelled 'dreech').

Rouchchesters (row-ch-ches-turz) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. The precise location is unknown, but it was listed between Strange and Southdean Mill in a rental roll of 1541. The tenants was Patrick Oliver and the lands were valued at 12s 6d (it is 'Rouchchesteris' in 1541).

Rouchhirst (row-ch-hurst) n. former farmstead on the Jed Water, just to the south of Auld Jedburgh. In 1541 the tenant was John Laidlaw and the lands were valued at 12s 6d. The tenants there in 1669 were Thomas, Martin, Lyle and Thomas (junior) Laidlaw and in 1694 were Thomas and John Laidlaw. This may be the ‘Roughchestre’ which was burned by the English in 1544 (it is ‘Ruchhirst’ in 1669; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Rucchhirst’).

Rouchhope (row-chup) n. former place name in Hobkirk Parish, near to Hyndlee. These were the lands of ‘Rughope’ granted to William of Wauchope in the early 14th century. As part of Jedforest, the farm passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands, which had been in waste for the previous 20 years. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s yearly. The lands were owned by the Turnbells in the mid-16th century. The lands were purchased by William and Robert Chisholme (of Stirches) in 1684. Thomas Telfer was there in 1799. The ridge to the west of the Note o’ the Gate road just south of Wigg is still ‘Rough-hope Rig’ on the Ordnance Survey map (it is ‘Rouchope’ in 1538 and 1541, ‘Ruchhoip’ in 1539 and ‘Roughope’ in 1799; Pont’s sketch c.1590 and Blaeu’s 1654 map appears to label either Wigg Burn or Hyndlee Burn as ‘Rucchoop B.’ and ‘Rucchhoope B.’ and somewhere even higher up is labelled ‘Ruchswyre’).

Rouch-heuch see Roughheugh roudes (row-dis) n., arch. a strong masculine woman, an old, ill-natured woman – ‘O never vex ane roudes auld, Although she rax your faithe, For, late and air, revenge she’ll seek, When least you dread the skaith’ [JTe], adj. applied to an old woman with masculine characteristics – ‘A gey roudes boody’ [GW].

rough (ruch) adj., arch. bounteous, well-supplied, especially with plain fare – ‘A rough table (gh in rough is guttural) = a well-laden table, bering a variety of dishes; a table ‘groaning under the weight of good things’ [ECS].

Roughcleuch Rig (ruf-klewch-rig) n. ridge to the east of Linhope farm, lying between Lightning Hill and Wether Law.

Rough Gill (ruf-, rowch-gil) n. small stream in western Liddesdale, rising on Cooms Fell and running roughly south-eastwards to eventually join the Black Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Rough Grain (ruf-, rowch-grān) n. small stream in upper Liddisdale, rising on Mid Hill and flowing into Cliffhope Burn. It is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on the large scale 1899 Ordnance Survey map.

Rough Grain (ruf-, rowch-grān) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises on Hartsgarth Fell and runs roughly to the north-west to join Chapel Grain and then the Twislehope Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

rough-heid (ruf-, rowch-heed) n., arch. a turf or divot, especially a piece of peat cut from the surface and with the grass still attached – ‘These are to give notice to all Burgesses within the Burgh of Hawick that they are discharged from casting dry land soads of any part of the Comonty or roughheads (except roughheads in the Mosses), and from casting turfs or diviots on the Common ...’ [BR1816], ‘An’ divots an’ roughheads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK].

Roughheugh (ruf-hew, rowch-hewch) n. former name referring to the area in Wilton between Howlands and Easter Howlands, and from Ladylaw to Lockieshedge, lying ‘contiguous to the Kirk road from Langlands to Wilton’, and bounded on the south by Wilton dam. So it extended roughly from Wilton Path to Old Wilton Churchyard, on both sides of Princes Street. The name was also used for the corn mill there, and the later hosiery mill. The name dates at least to the mid-17th century and is preserved in a house on Greensidehall Road. In 1650 there are 14 ‘communicants’ recorded on a map of local parishes, when it is ‘rouch-heuche’; they are Robert Cavers, Bessie Laing, Isobel Hardie, Walter Shortreed, Janet ‘Symontonn’, John Redford, Thomas Clerk, Mary Armstrong, John Clerk, Isobel ‘Howatson’, Robert Riddell, Margaret Shortreed, Janet Ellioe and Janet Redford. John Miller was recorded there in 1724 and George Wallace in 1737. The 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common talks about the Common Haugh lying ‘between Dangerfield and the reugh heugh land as described by hillocks’. The lands were part of the estate of Langlands of that Ilk, until sold off in parts around 1780: the Waulk Mill to John and William Thomline; the Corn Mill to Robert Scott; and other parts to James Knox, Hector Blaikie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Robertson. John Clerk was living there in 1780. In 1788 (and repeated in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) the lands are listed as consisting of the Waulk Mill and Corn Mill and 7 other parts, owned by John Thomline (plus William by 1811), Robert Scott, James Knox, Hector Blaikie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Robertson; together they were valued at around £140. The Laird of Langlands held some enclosures in the area, which were sold off to Rev. John Thomson in the mid-19th century. By the early 20th century the name was no longer in use (the origin is presumably from the roughness of the land around the steep bank).

Roughheugh Haugh (ruf-hew-hawf, rowch-hewch-hawch) n. former name for part of the Under Haugh – ‘There’s teuch sauchs growin’ i’ the Reuch Heuch Hauch’ [JAHM] (this also inspired the Hugh MacDiarmid poem ‘The Sauchs in the Reuch Heuch Hauch’).

Roughheugh Mill (ruf-hew-mil, rowch-hewch-mil) n. former corn mill, near the south end of Commercial Road. It was formerly a possession of the Baron of Wilton, specifically Langlands of that ilk. It was recorded in an agreement involving Langlands in 1581. It is shown in a crude sketch of 1810, with the miller’s cottage alongside (and a water wheel, with the adjacent waulk mill also having a water wheel). It is labelled ‘Rough Heugh Mill’ on Wood’s 1824 map. The building that held the water wheel was once on the Burgh boundary with Wilton; in the early 1700s the flag used to be unfurled and given 3 cheers there after the visit to the Coble Pool on Common Riding Friday. William Cavers was miller there in 1694, with Simon Wright the under-miller, and Thomas Rutherford also listed there. William Scott was there in 1709. Alexander Scott (probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester) was tenant in the mid-18th century and then his son Robert Scott was tenants after him. Robert is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1811 it was valued at £26 9s. It was still an active mill in the 1820s, when Pigot’s directory lists the millers as Walter Chisholm and David Fiddes. Thomas Goodfellow and David Fiddes were millers there in 1837 and 1841, with John Fiddes there in 1851. Soon after it (or a building on an adjacent site) became a waulk mill, carried on by John Wilson after William Wilson & Sons was dissolved in 1851. Langlands Mill was constructed on the site in about 1860. John Wilson was listed as owner of the land there in about 1874 (also spelled ‘Rouch-heuch’, etc.; it is ‘Reuchouchtmiln’ in 1581, ‘Roughheughmiln’ in

Roughheugh Peth (ruf-hew-peth) n. Roughheugh Path, an old name for Wilton Path or the Peth. It is so marked on Wood’s 1824 map.

Rough-hope (ruf-hōp, rowch-up) n. former farm in the upper Borthwick valley, lying on the Rough-hope Burn, to the south of Eildrig. These are the lands of ‘Reuhop or Philop’ sold by John Turnbull to Martin Elliot in 1579. James Oliver was there in 1785 and James Lunn and family in 1796 (it is ‘Roughshope’ in 1795).

Rough-hope Burn (ruf-hōp-burn) n. stream that rises on Philhope Fell, running roughly north-west to join the Eildrig Burn, and hence the Borthwick Water. There are some old field boundaries about half-way up the stream. The stream fed the reservoir, later known as Philhope Loch, which was used to boost the level of the Borthwick Water and the Teviot.

Rough-hope Rig (rowch-up-rig) n. ridge just to the west of the B6357, shortly before coming to the Note o’ the Gate pass. There is a picnic spot near there. On the ridge is a linear earthwork, about 400 m long, running from the Wigg burn north-east to the main road.

Rough Joke (rowch-jōk) n. nickname for John Oliver in the late 1700s.

Rough Knowe (rowch-, ruf-now) n. hill between the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, to the east of Ladhope. It reaches a height of 481 m and contains a block that acts as a triangulation point.

Roughlaw Sike (rowch-law-sīk) n. small stream in Hobkirk Parish. It is mentioned in a charter of 1606, defining the west side of the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. It is unclear where this is exactly, but perhaps the small tributary of the Hallrule Burn that runs past Heathfield cottage (it is ‘Rowchelawsyke’ in 1606).

Roughlee (ruf-lee, rowch-lee) n. farm in the upper Jed valley, between Falside and Edgerston. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester Roughlee. Simon Young from there had remission for pludering neighbouring farms in 1493, John Young for similar crimes in 1494/5 and Simon again in 1502. The lands of ‘Wester Rouchleis’ were valued at 20 shillings in 1538, with ‘Mydrouchleis’ at 30 shillings and ‘Rowchlenwke’ at 40 shillings. The 20 shilling land of ‘Rouchleis vocatarum Westir Rouchleis’ is recorded in 1539, as well as the 30 shilling land of Midroughlee and the 40 shilling land of Roughleeneuk. William Douglas was allowed the ‘fermes’ from there for 1538 and in 1539 claimed £10 pertaining to his inheritance. ‘Lyonell Ollyver’ is recorded there in 1544. Michael and John Young was there in 1571/2. David Laidlaw was there in 1588. Robert Douglas of Brieryyards was infetted in the lands in 1588 and was served heir to his father John in 1606. The cottage there was once part of Falside farm. This is probably the ‘Ruchlie’ recorded in 1669 when the tenants were Robert and John Storie and Adam Bell. Robert Laidlaw and Andrew Oliver were tenants there in 1694. The ancient settlement on the eastern slope of the hill to the east of the current farmstead may be the former Easter Roughlee; it consists of a roughly oval enclosure, with 2 possible hut sites inside, but has been largely destroyed by forestry plantation. A little to the west is Roughlee Strip, where there are 2 enclosures visible in aerial photographs. To the north there was a plantation bank, now covered with forest. Further south, on a shelf overlooking the Jed Water, are the remains of another farmstead – ‘And her eye was fixt on the Klesly brae ’Till the red sun glinted fair; – On the Roughlee height, where now in sight, A knight did onward bear’ [JTe], (also written ‘Roughlea’, it is ‘rouchlie’ in 1493, ‘rouchlee’ in 1494/5, ‘rouchle’ in 1502, ‘Rouchleyis’ in 1538, ‘Rowghleis’ in 1544, ‘Rowchleis’ in 1571/2 and ‘Roughlie’ in 1694; ‘Eister Rowchlie et Wester Rouchlie’ are recorded in 1606; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Ruchchly’).

Roughleeneuk (rowch-lee-newk) n. former farm in the upper Jed valley, to the east of Roughlee. It was valued at 40 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. It was burned by an English raiding party in 1544. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards from his father John in 1606. Ninian, John and Lyle Young were tenants of ‘Rouchneuck’ in 1669 and Andrew Young was tenant in 1694. Andrew Ker ‘of ‘Roughlienook’ was recorded as deceased in 1731. George Davidson was farmer there in at least 1790–91. James Davidson (‘Dandie Dinmont’) lived there in the late 1700s and William Scott was farmer there in at least 1794–97. George Scott was farmer there in at least 1797–1801, Charles was also tenant in 1799 and Walter Scott was a shepherd in 1801. The farmstead was still marked on maps in 1863, and is still visible in aerial photographs, with a plantation bank 150 m to the south (it is ‘Rowchlenwke’ in 1538, ‘Rouchlenewke’ in 1539, ‘Rowle Newke’ in 1544, ‘Rowchlienwik’ in 1606, ‘Roughlinouck’ and ‘ruchlinuck’ in 1694 and ‘Roughlawnook’ and ‘Roughleenook’ in 1797; probably the place marked ‘Nuik’ on

Roughleeneuk Hill (rowch-lee-newk-hil) n. Roughleenook Hill, hill in Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 241 m, in a bend of the Jed Water to the east of Roughlee. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map showed a farmstead there, comprising 5 buildings and an enclosure, the outlines still visible in aerial photographs.

Roughley (ruf-lee) n. farmstead to the east of Hermitage, off the Roughley Burn. The tenants of the Englishman John Thirlwall were given protection by Edward III in 1365, suggesting that these lands were formerly among those held by Comyn. In 1541 the tenants were Ninian and John Elliot. Anthony Elliot was tenant there in 1622. It was owned by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1632. John Armstrong was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 160 acres, bounded by Laws, Riccarton, Taylorscheuch, Shaws, Millburnholm and Stichelhill. The farmhouse is shown in the same position as the modern one and another house was marked, perhaps around Dean’s Cleuch. Henry Haliburton was there in 1778. The farmer in 1794–97 was Robert Turnbull. James Turnbull was a servant there in 1799 and Ninian Scott was a shepherd in 1801. John Little was shepherd in 1835. There was once a large burial cairn there, which was dismantled, the cist found inside being acquired by Sir Walter Scott – ‘When three long years were come and gone, Two shepherds sat on Roughly hill; And ay they sigh’d, and made their moan, O’er present times that look’d so ill’ [ES] (the name probably comes from the Old English ‘ruh leah’, meaning ‘uncultivated clearing’; it appears as ‘Routhlie’ in 1541, ‘Rouchlie’ in 1622, ‘Ruchlie’ in 1632, ‘Roughlaw’ in 1694, ‘Roughlie’ in 1778 and ‘Rouglee’ in 1797; it is ‘Ruchly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Roughlee’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Roughly’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Roughley Burn (ruf-lee-burn) n. major stream in upper Liddesdale, rising in the hills to the east of Whitrope and running south, fed by many smaller ‘sikes’ and ‘gills’ to join the Hermitage Water at Shaws.

Roughley Glen (ruf-lee-glen) n. former name for part of the Roughley Burn.

rough runch (rowch-runch) n., arch. wild radish, Raphanus raphanistrum.

Roughside Hill (ruf-sīd-hil) n. hill just to the south-west of Synton Mossend. It reaches to more than 270 m.

Rough Slack (rowch-slawk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Birny Fell and running south to join Ralton Burn.

the Rough Wooin (thu-ruf-woo-in) n. soubriquet for the rampage of English armies in 1544 and 1545 throughout the Scottish Border country. This was an attempt to force the Scots to allow the wedding of King Henry VIII's young son Edward to the infant Mary Queen of Scots. Among other places, the abbeys of Dryburgh, Jedburgh and Melrose were left in ruins, and in Hawick Drumlanrig's Tower was about all that survived the conflagration. The attacks were led by the Earl of Hertford, Sir Ralph Evers and others. In the Autumn of 1544 Edinburgh was burnt and looted, along with 192 towers and villages in the Borders, with around 400 Borderers being killed. The devastation was even worse in 1545, when Teviotdale was laid waste, including Cavers, Minto, Denholm, Hassendean and Brieryyards among other villages.

rouk (rowk) n., arch., poet. mist, fog, smog, drizzle, vapours – 'He gars the rouks ascen' frae the en's o the yirth ...' [HSR], 'Fire an' hail; snaw an' rouk; stormie wund fu'fillin' his wurd' [HSR], '... where yin canna sei bye yin's neb for skomfeeshin rowks an drowes' [ECS], 'Whan the smuiky rowk fyles a'thing' [GW], '...to repay us for a' the derk and weet, the glaur and rouk, o wunter' [DH], '... Herd them cannily, stot and stirk, Frae Tweedside braes in the rowk and mirk' [WL] (also written 'rowk').

rountree (rown-tree) n., poet. rowan, the mountain ash – 'A rountree bus' oot o'er the tap o't, A glassy pule to kep the lap o't [JBS], 'And tho' rowntree was tied to the coo's horns an' tail, Her udder gaed eild ower the milk-maiden's pail' [BM1901] (also written 'rowntree'; cf. raun-trei).

roup (rowp, roop) n., arch. an auction – 'his goods an effects wull be selt be public roup', '...and after ye roup, the money then gotten should be given in' [PR1722], 'Received roup of the seats in the kirk for 1755 ... 0 10 6' [BR1755], '... While high-bred dame – bereft o' hope – Is doomed to stand a public roup – The highest bidder gets her' [JR], 'A sale o' furniter, a roup O' spuds at Black's Hotel. I'll tell ye a' about it if Somebody brings my bell' [WP], v. to sell by auction. Up until the early 19th century 'Roups' in Hawick were announced after Sunday services at the Wester kirkstyle by the town bellman, standing on the 'loupin-on stane'. By the mid-19th century this practice had been replaced by a printed notice attached to the church door – '... that anie person who hath received charitie out of ye Box when they die, their household plenishing should be roup'd ...' [PR1722], v., arch. to cry hoarsely (from Old Norse; also spelled 'rowp').

roupit (row-pee', -pi') adj., pp., arch. hoarse – 'A rowpit cough' [GW] (also written 'rowpit'; cf. crowpit).

roupit (row-pee', -pi') pp., arch. cried hoarsely – 'She ran up to the pat an' tried to coup it, While ever anon she raired an' she roupit' [BM1901].

Routin Burn (row'-in-burn) n. Routing Burn, stream that rises on Roan Fell on the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, and flows into Hartsgarth Burn. Along the stream lie 2 shepherd's bothies, 2 sheep-folds, 6 shieling huts, a pen and a 'knocking stone'.

Routin Burn (row'-in-burn) n. Routing Burn, small stream in the headwaters of the Twislehope Burn. It rises near Pike Fell on the border with Dumfriesshire, only a couple of miles west of the other stream of the same name.

Routledge (row'-, rowt-, roo'-lij) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in the 1580s as 'Jamie's Adam Rootledge'. He was one of a group of Englishmen complained of by Thomas Armstrong of Tinnisburn for stealing livestock from him. He could be the 'Addame Rutledge of the Neteclughe' listed among Routledges of the English Border in 1583. Andrew (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1650, for Alexander Turnbull and Isabel Scott. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. His name appears as 'Routlage' right after John, who was presumably related. Cuthbert (15th C.) recorded along with John in 1473 as a deputy of the Constable of Bewcastle. How he was related to the Hawick members of the family is not known, but these appear to be the first recorded members of the family near Bewcastle (possibly the eponymous home). Around 1478 they were let the lands and castle of Bewcastle by Richard, Duke of Gloucester, with instructions that they maintain the Border there. During a land dispute of 1538 an old witness in Bewcastle stated that '...60 years bipast when Liddisdale men came into England and were sworn to King Richard at Carlisle' that 'let all the lands of Bewcastle to Cuthb and John Routlege, Robt Elwald, and Gerard Nyxon, and before that' ... 'as well the said castle as all the lands belonging to the same of long time lay waste'. David (15th/16th C.) from Liddesdale. He was witness to Adam Hepburn being served as heir to his father Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1508. He is recorded as 'Dauid Routlech, sergeando', suggesting he was a local official of the area. Probably the same David was also witness to William Douglas of Drumlanrig selling Broadlee in 1512/3. He may be the same man as the Bailie for Douglas of Cavers. David (15th/ 16th C.) bailiff and later factor for James Douglas of Cavers. Possibly the same David 'Rucclarch' or 'Rutlethe' held 8 particates of land in Hawick according to the 1537 Charter; these were on the south side of the public street, and represent one of the largest amounts of any single owner. He may be the David 'Routlesche' who in 1512 he was directed to be one of James Douglas of Cavers Bailies to give sasine of Denholm to William Cranston. He may be the same David who was listed on a pardon by James V in 1526, along with a great many Scotts, Kerrs, Pringles, Turnbolls and Elliots, as well as John, Archibald and Simon 'Routlage'. Probably the same David was listed among tenants and other associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers in a court case of 1541. Probably the same David was witness to a sasine for Douglas of Cavers in 1550 (for the lands of Colifort). Isobel (16th C.) widow on the English side, recorded in 1581. Her house was apparently raided by 30 Elliots, who stole 4 oxen, 6 cows, her only horse and all her possessions. James (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and Simon son of Simon (hence his brother), were also called and failed to appear. Probably the same James was also called in the Justice-aire held in 1494/5. James

(16th C.) holder of half of the lands of Crook. In an instrument of resignation of 1529/30 (not a century earlier as apparently written), William 'Routlech', son of the deceased John resigned all rights to these lands, the 'kyndness' of which was held of this James. He was surely related to John and William, as well as to other nearly contemporary local Routledges. He may be the 'Jacobi Routlich' who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland for 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. He could be the James ('on trows') who, along with John (in the same place), served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance. James of Todhills (16th C.) from Cumbria. In 1540 the Laird of Ferniehirst and his tenants complained about a raid he led into Rulewater, where 'Thome Oliver' and 'Will Kowman' were slain at Abbotrule. John (15th C.) recorded in 1471, along with David Armstrong and Archibald Armstrong, when they gave pledges for Walter to appear at court in Selkirk. He was probably related to Walter in some way. John (15th C.) recorded in 1473, along with Cuthbert as deputies to the Constable of Bewcastle. John (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was called by the Sheriff, William of Douglas, but failed to appear. At the same time Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon were also called. He could be the John 'in trows' who, along with James (in the same place), served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance; he seems to be distinct from John, son of Simon in the Trows, who is recorded separately in 1502 (and may have been his nephew or similar). John (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined as a result. John 'Black John' (15th/16th C.) Englishman who along with John Dalgleish and others was brought with his accomplices to burn Branhholme some time prior to 1510. In that year Dalgleish was convicted of this and other crimes and sentenced to hanging if he could not find sureties. He is recorded as 'Black John Rouclesche' (which in Pitcairn's 'Criminal Trials' is suggested to be 'Roughcliffe, or Rowecliff', but seems clearly to be a transcription error for 'Routlesche') and was a 'traitor of Levin'. He was probably related to the Simon and Matthew who burned the Scott's seat at Buccleuch about 20 years earlier. John (d.bef. 1530)

'kyndlie' tenant of half of the land of Crook in Cavers Parish. He may have been son of Simon in the Trows. He was succeeded in this tenancy by his son William, who resigned his rights to his superior (Douglas of Cavers) in 1529/30. They had the 'kyndness from James, who must surely have been a relative; his surname is recorded as 'Routlech'. Probably the same John 'rouclisch' failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon, were also called and failed to appear, and were surely related. Probably the same John is recorded as son of Simon (who was 'in le trowis') in 1494/5 when he failed to appear again, with Douglas of Cavers being fined; his father Simon, as well as James and Simon (perhaps his brothers) were also called at the same Justice-aire. He may be the 'Johannis Rutlich' who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. In 1502 he is recorded as son of Simon in the Trows 'nunc in le cruk' (i.e. now in the Crook) when he was surety for himself at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, and was fined for not appearing. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Archibald is listed after him and so probably related. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) son of Mungo, an Englishman. He was entered as a prisoner to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1562, by Archibald Elliot of Falnash and his son. John (16th C.) listed in 1585 as 'Jjonn Rowclege' among a list of men under their superior Lord Maxwell who had respite for all their crimes. He is listed along with Armstrongs from around Eskdale. John (16th/17th C.) servant to John Elliot of Copshaw, recorded in 1605. John (b.c.1780) born in England, he was a grocer and spirit merchant of the High Street recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was living at about No. 50 with his wife Margaret in 1841. His widow Margaret was still living there in 1851. He may be the same John who was one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left, along with Rev. Wallace, in 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. His wife was Peggy, daughter of stockingmaker William Beck; she secondly married M. Thompson. They had no children. John (19th C.) farmer at Greenholm in Liddesdale in 1868. Mals (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. It is unclear if her first name was short for something more familiar. Margaret (b.1786/7) married John, who was a grocer and spirit merchant. By 1851 she was a widow living on the High Street. She was listed as a grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. Martin (16th C.) Procurator of the Scottish Nation in the University of Orleans from 1537. He described himself as being of the Clan Scott and was the last of his family to sign his name 'de', in his case 'de Rotheluge'. Matthew (15th/16th C.) son of Simon, who was tenant at the Trows. In 1494 there was a decree against them to repay the value of the livestock and goods they had taken or destroyed from the house and farm at Buccleuch. In 1494/5 he was recorded as son of Simon at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, when he was surety for himself and was fined for not appearing. He may be the 'Mathei Routlich' who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with James, John and Simon (with his name appearing first), as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. He was recorded again at the Justice-aire in Hawick, as son of Simon in the Trows, when he was once more surety for himself and fined for non-appearance. Matthew (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Hawick who is listed in the sasine of the Barony of Hawick for William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511/2. His name is recorded as 'Matheo Rouchligis'. He may be the same Matthew, son of Simon, who was charged with pludering and burning Buccleuch in 1494. Nichol (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Nicholl Routleche' along with a number of Nixons and others of Liddesdale who has remission from their crimes from the Privy Council in 1516. Richard (19th C.) farmer at Gorenberry. His only surviving son Jack was a Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B. who was killed in 1917. Robert (16th/17th C.) resident of Thorlieshope who appeared before the Commissioners' Court in 1623. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in the 1650s. Whether he was a descendant of the earlier Routledges is unknown. He married Isobel Huntly and their children included Bessie, James (b.1657) and Michael. Simon (15th C.) Burgess of Hawick who was listed among the witnesses to the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; he is there recorded as 'Simone Rowtleg'. In a charter of 1433 he is referred to as 'Simon of Routluge burgess of Hawik' when William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Hawick feued the lands of 'Byrkwode called the oxgang' (near the present day Duke's Wood) and the lands of Burnflat to him. He is also mentioned in a deed of 1447 as a Burgess, when he conveyed part of the land of the Branhholme estate to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The land was known as 'Cusingland' and was the dowry of his wife Margaret (or 'Mergrete') Cousin (or 'Cusyne'). In 1447 he also feued Birkwood (incorrectly transcribed in one record as 'Birdwood') to Sir Walter, and is again referred to as a Burgess of Hawick, and as a Bailie in the 1448 sasine. In 1453 he was one of the 2 Bailies who witnessed the first known sasine for a 'tenement' in Hawick. In 1455 he is one of the Burgesses of Hawick listed on the notarised document attesting that John of St. Michael had inherited his father's lands of Whitchester; he is there referred to as 'burgensis ac sergendus' of the Barony of Hawick, this second title presumably equivalent to Bailie or Baron's Bailie. He is mentioned again in 1456, this probably referring to him witnessing an earlier retour for Whitchesters; there he is 'Symon de Routluge de Hawik'. He is one of the earliest recorded people with this surname, and also the earliest known Burgess of Hawick. He may be closely related to the Simon Simon (15th C.) witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas in 1464/5. He is recorded as 'Simone de Routlagh' and one of the 'scutiferis' (i.e. 'esquires'). Since the sasine was made at Cavers, he was surely a nearby landowner, but it is unclear whether he is the same as the earlier Burgess and Bailie of Hawick or the later Simon from Trows. It may be the same man who was 'Simone Routelych' when he witnessed the sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. Simon (15th C.) possibly related to the earlier Simon. He is recorded in 1484 on the panel of inquest for James Douglas as heir to his father Sir William of Drumlanrig in the Barony of Hawick. He may also be the 'Symone Rowclugh' recorded in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. He is probably the Simon 'rouclisch' who William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, was called to enter at the Justice-air in Jedburgh in 1493, and not appearing, Douglas was fined (similarly John, James son of Simon, and Simon son of Simon, were all failed to be entered, and were surely closely related to him, Simon and James probably being his sons). He may be the same Simon 'in the trowis' who was subject was charged with plundering Buccleuch in 1494 along with his son Matthew (with their sureties the Douglasses). He is recorded as 'Symonis rouchlisch in le trowis' at the Justice-air in Jedburgh in 1494/5 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his sons John and Simon also failed to appear at the same Justice-air, as well as James (probably also his son). Simon (15th C.) recorded as 'Symon routlage i the trowis' (and probably not 'prowis' as stated by William Fraser) in 1494 when Walter Scott, grandson of Sir David of Buccleuch, obtained a decree from the Lords of Council against him for the theft and plunder ('spuilzeit') of the manor and farm of Buccleuch. His son Matthew is also mentioned. Presumably this happened before David Scott died 2 or 3 years earlier. They stole 5 horses, 40 cows, 40 sheep, 2 oxen, large quantities of food etc., including 80 stones of cheese and butter, and ruined the manor, leaving 'nocht on bed or baulks'. Given the similarity of the names (Simon and Matthew), it seems likely this family was closely related to that of the Hawick Burgesses, possibly the same. Their residence appears to have been the Trows (and not 'Prows', known to be connected with the Bewcastle branch of the family), since Douglas of Hornshole acted as surety for the 1494 decree. He may be the 'Symonis Routlich' who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, James and Simon and many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. His son Matthew is recorded in 1494/5 and 1502. His son John, 'now in le cruk' (although it is unclear whether this refers to the father or the son) is recorded in 1502, when he was fined for failing to appear in court. Additionally, he is 'in le trows' in 1502 when John and James in Trows served as surety for him at the Justice-air in Jedburgh and were fined for his non-appearance. It seems likely that Simon in Trows and Simon in Crook were the same person. Simon (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-air in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and James son of Simon (hence his brother), were also called and failed to appear. In 1494/5 he failed to appear again (as well as his father Simon and James and John, who were probably his brothers). Simon (16th C.) tenant in Crook in 1592. He is recorded as a witness to the instrument of sasine in which Martin Douglas inherited Crook from his father. He was surely related to John, who was associated with Crook about 60 years earlier, and probably also a descendant of Simon, tenant in the Trows. It is possible he is the same man as Simon in the Trows. Thomas (16th C.) subject of a bond for him to be entered as a prisoner in 1561/2. The bond was between several Elliots (Archibald of Falnash, Archie's son Gavin, John of Copshaw and Elder Will) Sir John Kerr and Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, the Elliots promising to deliver him to 'the irn yettis of the Fairnehirst', and was signed at Hawick. A few months later Elliot of Falnash in another bond entered John, 'son to Mungo Routlache, Englishman' as a prisoner, so this seems likely to have been a relative. The same man (or a son perhaps) could have been recorded in 1581; in a raid by the Elliots of Liddesdale, a Thomas of 'Todholes' (i.e. Todhills in Cumbria) was taken prisoner and his horses and oxen stolen. This same Thomas of Todhills complained in 1582 of having livestock and goods stolen by 'Kinmont Jock, Eckie of Strubholm and Jock Armstrong of Calfhill'. The same Thomas of Todhills was injured in another raid by the Armstrongs of Mangerton, Whitehaugh etc., in 1583; several other Routledges were targeted, including George of 'Greinhilesh' and Anthony of 'Nutticleugh', with Alan being killed and William, John and another Thomas being injured 'in peril of death whereof one hath his legge cut of'. Walter (15th) recorded in 1471 when John, as well as David Armstrong and Archibald Armstrong gave pledges that he would appear at court in Selkirk. Walter (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in the 1640s and 50s. He may have been related to the contemporary Robert, and possibly was a descendant of the earlier local Routledges. He married Isobel Ruecastle. Their children included 2 Michaels, Janet, Isobel and Margaret (there are many older spellings, including 'Routledge', 'Rouchligis', 'Rouclesche', 'Rouclisch', 'Routelych', 'Routhlethe', 'Routlage', 'Routlagh', 'Routlaige', 'Routlach', 'Routlache', 'Routlech', 'Routleche', 'Routlege', 'Routlesche', 'Routlich', 'Routlooch', 'Routluge', 'Rowclugh', 'Rowtleg', 'Rowtlugh', 'Rutledge' and 'Rutlethe').

the Routledges (thu-rowt-li-jeezj) n. prominent family in the Debateable land, near Bewcastle, which spread to much of the Borders. The only remnant of the early seats of the family is the name of the Routledge Burn, a couple of miles east of Kershopefoot. Nearby is the hamlet of Routledgeburn, Routledge Burn Bridge and Routledge Rigg. The earliest known member of the family is 'Simon de Routledge', a Burgess and Bailie of Hawick, recorded in several documents of the 1440s and 1450s. Simon and his son Matthew lived at the Trows, and were charged in 1494 with plundering the manor and lands of Buccleuch. There is a record of a payment made from the Treasurer of Scotland to 'men of Levin callit Rowtleyche' in 1491. Another early member of the family is John 'Routlech', who was already deceased in 1529/30 when his son William resigned his 'kyndlie' tenancy of half of the lands of Crook in Cavers Parish, which they held of James (surely another relative). There were other people with this surname, probably closely related to the earlier Simon, holding prominent positions in Hawick over the next century. David held 8 'particates' of land in Hawick's 1537 Charter, probably the largest of any single landowner). Sir Christopher Dacre, with a band of 500 men, set upon them in 1528, and although he failed to dislodge them from the lands of Tarras, the family appear to have dispersed afterwards. There were later Routledges in Hawick, e.g. the families of Robert and Walter in the 1640s and 50s, but whether directly related to the earlier Burgesses is unknown.

rovin (rō-vin) n., arch. a roving, a set of lightly twisted fibres in the process of being spun, also called a 'slub' or 'slubbing' – 'The rovings were pieced together by boys on a leather rubber at the back of the Billies ...' [JGW].

row (row) n. a telling off, chastisement, rebuke – 'yer mother'll gie ee a row for daein that', '... a can duist sei ma fither now, pointin it his watch, n' gei'n is a row for gaun oan ower long' [IHS].

When aff the saucer rows his cup An' soaks his Sunday breeks' [WFC], to trundle, convey forward – 'Rowe thy waye upon the Lord; trust alsua in him; an' he sall bring it aboot' [HSR] (also spelled 'rowe'; once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong; see also row inti and row up; E.C. Smith notes that 'ti rowl is more commonly used for to roll').

row (row) n., arch. a bread roll, small, round breakfast loaf – 'There's naething A leike better for ma brekfist as a new rowe' [ECS], 'A gowpeen-fih berries or a penny gray rowe' [ECS], 'Where are yon rowes that garred the hert rejoice? What wairpit Breid Board said they had to go?' [DH].

rowan (row-in, row-an) n. a slender tree with white flowers and red berries, the mountain ash, formerly believed to ward off evil – '... or even the rowan tree, or mountain ash, used against the charms of witchcraft' [EM1820], 'In Keeldar's plume the holly green, And rowan leaves, nod on' [JL], 'Where the rowan and the weeping birk perfume th evening air, Where the primrose and the cowslip mix, their beauties blooming fair' [JoHa], 'But the kind auld miller isna there wi' shooders strang and wide, He sleeps aneath a rowan tree upon yon green hill side' [VW], 'The munelicht glintin' on een sae fair, The lips like rowans, the gowden hair' [WL] (once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong; cf. rountree and raun-trei; Scandanavian origin).

Rowan (row-in) n. James 'Jim' (1943–2008). He grew up in Slitrig Crescent, served an apprenticeship at Woodcock's, and served with the 4th Royal Tank Regiment. He ran the Hawick Motorcycle Centre, worked as an engineer with Pringle's and later opened The Photo Shop on the High Street. He often contributed letters to the local press. He married Irene Gentleman. He moved to the Leicester area to be near his son Mark and died there.

Rowanhill (row-in-hil) n. former lands in the upper Teviotdale, listed as part of the extensive Lairdship of Ringwoodfield in 1621 and in 1693. It seems likely this is a scribe's or transcriber's error for Bowanhill. However, it is not impossible that it could be associated with Rowantree hill, although this is probably on the wrong side of the Teviot valley or Rowantree Knowe on the right side (it is 'Rowandhill' in 1693).

Rowantrehill (row-in-trī-hil) n. Rowantree-hill, probable name for a farm in Jedforest. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 2 steadings and valued at 44 shillings. In 1541 John, Marion and Adam were tenants of part of the lands paying 22s, John and Robert Oliver were tenants in another part paying 11s and Robert 'the Sheriff' Oliver was tenants in the last part paying 11s (it is 'Rowntrehill' in 1538 and 1539 and 'Rownetrehil' and 'Rontrehil' in 1541).

Rowantrei Sike (row-in-trī-sik) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream that rises on Rowantree Knowe and flows roughly northwards to join the Dod Burn.

Rowantrei Sike (row-in-trī-sik) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Stell Know and flowing westwards to become part of Ashy Butn and then Whithaugh Burn.

Rowantrei Sike (row-in-trī-sik) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream in Liddesdale rising on Hazelyside Hill and flowing roughly north east to join the Black Burn.

row a nievefi (row-a-neev-fi) v., arch. to turn round every cut of corn (during harvest) so all the stalks can be intermingled in order that many can be held in one hand before laying in the band (see row).

Rowbank (rō-bawngk) n. house on Drumlanrig Square that has the back on the Square and the front overlooking the mill behind.

Rowcastle see Ruecastle

row-chow-the-bacca-wheel (row-chow-thu-ba-ki-wheel) n., arch. a children's game in which a chain of children surround a large child, called the 'pin', then sway around until everyone falls in a heap (noted by J. Jamieson, who states that it is derived from 'imitation of the process of a tobacconist in winding up his roll round a pin').

rowen (row-in) n., arch. fish roe or spawn, a single egg of fish roe.

rowener (row-in-ur) n., arch. a fish capable of spawning, specifically applied to salmon – 'She's a guid rowener' [GW].

Rowie (ro-wee) n. diminutive form of 'Roland'.

Rowie o Huttikill (ro-wee-ō-hu-tee-kil) n. nickname for Roland Scott.

rowk see rouk

rowky see rouky

rowl (rowl, row-ul) v., arch. to roll – '... an, dicht as A nicht, dreeps rowld doon owre brow, haffets an chowks, forbye' [ECS], '... an a gledge doon inti the Rule as it ran rowlin ti link in wui Teiot' [ECS], n. a roll – 'Nocht for yon rowel o whurly-whas – But still the singing clear and shair ...' [DH] (also written 'rowel'; cf. row; E.C. Smith notes that compared with 'row' the verb 'ti rowl is more commonly used for to roll').

rowly-powly (row-lee-pow-lee) adj., arch. roly-poly, n., arch. a fairground game in which a pole is thrown at a set of pins.

the Rowly-Powly Loft (thu-row-lee-pow-lee-loft) n. popular name for the old 'High Loft' in St. Mary's Kirk, before it was rebuilt in the 1760s. It is recorded that in 1755 3s. 2d. was received from Adam Kersel for this loft (presumably for his right to sit there).

rowme (rowm) n., arch. a holding of land, especially a bounded area used for crops or grazing, a farm – 'Item, he levis to Willie of Allane-hauch, the Kirkland, his awne rowme' [SB1574], '... [Hoscote] ane rowme of Wat Scott of Harde-nis' [1580 record], 'The Larde of Gledstanes for hymselfe and his rowmes, the Larde of Harret for hymselfe and his rowmes ...' [CBP1584], '... under the higheste paine of our lives or els att leaste the banishment of our rowme for ever ...' [CBP1597], 'The paroche is 8 mylles in lenth, so there are some rowmes 8 mylles or thairby from the kirk ...' [PR1627] 'Item, whatsomever person that mindes to big ane house, he sall haif half gewill of his nichbour's rowmes ...' [SB1640], 'The particular valuatiounes of the particular rowmes of ye said parochine' [BR] (also written 'roum', 'room', etc.).

rowt (rowt, row') v., arch. to bellow, roar, low loudly (of cattle) – 'He's fitter far to rair an' rowte, Among his father's Highland nowte' [RDW], 'The road was thrang wui droves o nowt rowtin an mehlin an blehhin' [ECS], '... To hear her rowte baith aft and loud' [RF], n., poet. a shout, uproar – 'Take my advice, though but a brute: Leave off ilk drucken, rantin' rout' [JoHa] (also spelled 'rout' and 'rowte').

rowth (rowth) n. plenty, abundance – 'Quoth she, about their healths we'll chase; And rowth o' gear, and meikle grace ...' [CPM], 'Let uppish queens hae rowth o' braws, An' humble minds hae routh o' fa's' [JoHa], 'In his dayes sall the rich-teous flourish, an' routh o' peece, sae lang as the muun induurs' [HSR], 'For whasaeveir heth, til him sall be gien, an' he sall hae mair routh' [HSR], 'Hed nae routh o bawbees tae pit the time by ...' [JEDM], 'A worthy Burgess o' the Borough, Wi' rowth o' wealth to banish sorrow' [RDW], 'In the happy days o' auld langsyne what rowth o' fun was then, Whiles gumpin' trooties i' the burn, or nesting i' the glen' [VW], 'Ay! thon's the keind o bit! wui rowth o simmer sheine' [ECS], 'A rowth o' modest wayside flooers Spreeds owre the track aboon' [WL], adj., poet. abundant, plentiful – 'Thou, O God, didist sen' ane routh rain ...' [HSR], 'The Lord is mercifu' an' gracious, slaw til angir an' routh in mercie' [HSR] (also written 'routh'; cf. rooth and ruith).

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. small village that is all that remains of an important historic site. It was created a Royal Burgh in the early 12th century, with its castle used as a royal residence, and was one of the four Royal Burghs in the 13th century, being then probably the fourth most populous town in Scotland. It was a walled town with 3 churches, schools and at one time the Royal Mint. James II was famously killed here in 1460, and after the Scots captured it they had it demolished. The village went into decline after that, but there was still a Franciscan convent there in the early 1500s. The area was devastated by Hertford's men in 1545. The village itself is built on the site of the overflow of the old town, and was thatched until the 1950s. The graveyard contains the burial vault of the Kers of Chatto as well as the grave of Andrew Gemmels (the original for Sir Walter Scott's 'Edie Ochiltree'). A nearby railway viaduct was constructed from 1847, but 9 men lost their lives when part of it collapsed in 1849. A short history was written by Brian Wain in 1983 — 'For soon, where scenes of seeter beauty smile Around the mounds of Roxburgh's ruin'd pile, No more the mistress of each lovely field, Her name, her honours Teviot soon must yield' [JL], 'Where you slip sullenly under the shadows Skirting the feet of old Roxburgh's tower: Where you take, lowver-like, close to your bosom, Kale, and the music of coppice and bower' [WL] (the origin of the name is probably Old English 'Hroc burh', meaning 'the fortified dwelling belonging to Hroc'; the name is recorded from the early 12th century, in the earliest records being 'Rokesburgh' and variants; it occurs on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Rosburgh'; an example of 'Hroc' occurs in the Domesday book for Suffolk and in compound form in other parts of England).

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. small town in Central Otago on the South Island of New Zealand. It lies on the Teviot River (now called the Clutha), and was also once called Teviot itself, with Ettrick and Mount Bengier nearby. It was named by some of the early settlers and was an important centre during the local gold rush of 1862. Streets in the town include one named after Hawick, as well as Abbotsford, Ancrum, Berwick, Branxholm, Cheviot, Edinburgh, Ednam, Hermitage, Jedburgh, Kelso, Liddle, Melrose, Scotland and Tweed.

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. John (d.1196) Canon of Glasgow, who witnessed several charters from the 1160s. It is possible he was the Master John associated with either Lessuden or Longnewton. He was appointed Treasurer of Glasgow Diocese in 1195/6, but only held the appointment for a few months before dying at Melrose Abbey. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. William (d.1813) farmer at Ruecastle, recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1794 and 1797. He was recorded as owner of 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. He is probably the William who married Annie Rutherford in Ancrum in 1783; she was daughter of an agricultural implement maker. Their children probably included: James (b.1793), Jean (b.1795) and Andrew (b.1797), baptised in Bedrule; and possibly Annie (b.1784), James (b.1787), Thomas (b.1788) and John (b.1791). One of his children was Janet (b.1799), who reached the age of 100 in 1799 (living at Kipilaw Mains), as described in the Border Magazine for that year. He was said to have died after attending to the sick bed of his master, the Laird of Knowesouth. After his death the family moved to Dolphinstone farm, but abandoned it after a few years. Thereafter his wife and some children moved to Galashiels. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stichelhill. He is listed as male head of household there 1835–41. He emigrated to America in 1842.

Roxburgh Castle (roks-bu-ru-kaw-sul) n. former fortified structure, also called Marchmount, built above the confluence of the Teviot and the Tweed. It passed back and forth between Scotland and England several times, with the English holding it about as often as the Scots. Alexander II was married in the Castle in 1239. A large number of Scottish charters and other records were removed there on the orders of Edward I in 1292, before subsequently disappearing forever. Robert the Bruce's sister Mary was hung there in a cage from 1306–10 on orders of Edward I. Sir James Douglas recaptured it in 1313, but the English held it from 1334 until 1460. A bridge connecting the area with Kelso was destroyed in 1398 and its successor destroyed by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1411. During the 1460 siege James II died when one of his cannons exploded; a yew tree in the grounds of Floors Castle marks the spot. Queen Mary of Gueldres dismantled it, but it was rebuilt by the English in 1547. When the Scots regained it for the last time they razed it themselves, around 1550 – ‘Roxburgh! how fallen, since first in Gothic pride Thy frowning battlements the war defied, Call’d the bold chief to grace thy blazon’d halls, And bade the rivers gird thy solid walls!’ [JL].

Roxburghe Drive (roks-bu-ru-drīv) n. one of the bigger roads through Stirches, being the continuation of Hazelwood Road. It was built in 1976 and named after the 9th Duke of Roxburghe, George Victor Robert John Innes-Ker, who was Convenor of Roxburgh District Council (often erroneously written ‘Roxburgh’).

Roxburghshire (roks-bu-ru-shir, roks-bu-ru-shIr) n. former county which included Hawick, Jedburgh and Kelso. It was the southernmost county of Scotland and was bounded by Berwickshire, Dumfriesshire, Selkirkshire and the English Border. It contained what was formerly Teviotdale and part of Liddesdale and was divided into over 30 parishes. Jedburgh was the county town, although there was a proposal around 1891 to change this to Hawick. The area was 669 square miles, although changes to the boundaries means this number does not apply to all times. The county is full of archaeological remains, including Bronze Age burial cairns, British forts, Roman camps and roads, vestiges of settlements and peel towers. The county is named after the formerly important town and Castle of Roxburgh.

Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry (roks-bu-ru-shir-jen’-ul-min-in-yō-min-ree-kaw-vul-ree) n. local volunteer regiment that existed 1797–1828, also known as the Roxburghshire Yeomanry or the Roxburghshire Light Dragoons Yeomanry Cavalry. Hawick was the main rallying point for the upper troop. In 1798 the Burgh gave them £25 to purchase drums and fifes. The western Captain-commandant was William Elliot of Harwood, while William Elliot (later Elliot-Lockhart) of Borthwickbrae served as Colonel. Their uniforms consisted of scarlet jackets laced with white cord, blue collars and cuffs, black leather helmets with a bearskin crest and a red and white heckle feather, white breeches and black boots.

Roxburgh Viaduct

the Roxburghshire Militia (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-mi-lish-a) n. volunteer regiments of the early 19th century, formed in 1809 after the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers had been disbanded. The 1st Regiment was headquartered at Jedburgh, and contained many local men, while the 2nd Regiment was based at Kelso. The 1st Regiment had Gilbert Elliot (later Earl of Minto) as Lieut.-Col., with James Elliot (younger of Wolfelee) as Major and the first Captain was Walter Scott of Wauchope. They were disbanded in 1828 (note that several different names were used for these units).

Roxburghshire Nursin Association (roks-bu-ru-shir-nur-sin-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. nursing association formed in 1900 to provide for nursing needs in local country areas. Fees were paid to join the association and only members could benefit from its services. It operated until the National Health Service was set up in 1948.

the Roxburghshire Word-Book (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-wurd-book) n. the most useful resource for words that are peculiar to various parts of the county, written by George Watson and published in 1923. Words that are local to the Hawick area are denoted ‘[W]’, for Western Roxburghshire. As well as the word list itself, the introductory sections compile a huge amount of information about pronunciation and other facets of Roxburghshire vernacular. The book was compiled by Watson from the help of many communicants (most of whose names are unknown) from various parts of Roxburghshire, this following articles and lists of words that he published in the local press to encourage people to help him. Earlier books of poetry are much used to provide examples, and phrases from Elliot Cowan Smith are often included (sometimes without attribution). Watson was from Jedburgh and worked for the Oxford University dictionary project, effectively following in the footsteps of James Murray.

Roxburgh Viaduct (roks-bu-ru-vI-a-dukt) n. disused railway viaduct across the Teviot, by the village of Roxburgh. Built in 1847, it has an interesting iron footbridge built into it at the level of the river bank.

Roxburgh Volunteers (roks-bu-ru-vo-lun-teez) n. name given to several distinct (but inter-related) volunteer military units. The Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry was first set up in 1794 and disbanded in 1802, to be re-formed as the Roxburghshire Corps of Genetlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry, lasting until 1828. The Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers was formed in 1803 during the perceived threat of French invasion. It was initiated by Walter Scott of Wauchope, who became their captain, received regimental colours from Miss Elliot of Minto and were consecrated by Rev. Arkle, minister of Hawick. The age limits were 17 to 55 and a large number joined in 1803, including 25 from Wilton. They were mobilised during the False Alarm of 1804. The unit disbanded in 1809, but was essentially replaced by the Roxburghshire Militia the same year. Another volunteer unit, called the 1st Roxburgh and Selkirk Volunteer Rifle Corps was set up in 1859, with Hawick units, the 4th and 5th being set up in 1860 and 1861. The 4th absorbed the Denholm Company in 1863 and the 5th was disbanded in 1867. The 4th Roxburgh Corps became D and E Companies of the 1st Roxburgh and Selkirk (The Border) Rifle Volunteer Corps in 1880. They become part of the K.O.S.B. from 1887, with K Company formed in Hawick in 1892, and the whole set of Companies renamed the 4th Battalion, the K.O.S.B. in 1908 – ‘On the mountains of Cheviot now present to our eyes, The deeds if our ancestors we fondly recognise; Their spirit we will cherish, it will vanish all your fears, For it glows in the hearts of the Roxburgh Volunteers [T].’

Roxbury (roks-bu-ree) n. suburb of Boston, Massachusetts, which was apparently named for the many rocks there (although a connection with our county is not impossible). The town of West Roxbury (annexed to Boston in 1874) was the site of the Boston area Common Ridings of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This was organised by Hawick exiles under the auspices of the Scottish Border Club. It consisted of sports (races, baseball throwing etc.) and other events on Common Riding Saturday, with the location Caledonian Grove, West Roxbury. There is a photograph of the 1886 celebration. Ex-Cornet Walter Irvine attended in 1888. There are American Cornets recorded from 1877 until at least 1926.

the Royal (thu-roi-ul) n. pub at 22 Howegate in the latter 19th and early 20th centuries. It was also known as ‘the Royal Bar’. The proprietor for many years was John Barclay.

the Royal Bank (thu-roi-ul-bawngk) n. the Royal Bank of Scotland erected an impressive building at 12 High Street in 1857/8, designed by Peddie & Kinnear, constructed by James Harkness, with ornamental work by Alex Pirnie. On the top corners of the building can be seen the monogram ‘P K’ and the year ‘1857’. It is a Category B listed building. The location had previously contained 2 adjacent hostelries, the Ordnance Arms and the Harrow Inn. The first agent was James Carmichael, solicitor, and later Haddon & Turnbull took over. The building was turned into the Registry Office and now is education service offices. Meanwhile the Royal Bank had another office at 4 Tower Knowe. After it merged with the Commercial group in 1969 it obtained its current branch at 31 High Street (built as the National Bank about 1870). It stretches over 31, 33 and 35 High Street, and is a grade C listed building.

royal burgh (roi-ul-bu-ru) n. a town granted its charter by the Crown rather than the local landowner. There were 65 royal burghs in Scotland. Nearby ones include Jedburgh, Selkirk, Roxburgh and Peebles.

the Royal George (thu-roi-ul-jōrj) n. former popular name for the ‘Whusky Hooses Mill’ which stood opposite St. Cuthbert’s Church, also known as ‘the George’. It was presumably named after the famous Royal Navy vessel of the same name, which was the largest warship in the world when it was launched in 1756. The ship fought in the Seven Years War and became infamous when it sank in 1782 during routine maintenance with the loss of more than 800 lives.

Royal Highlanders (roi-ul-hI-lin-durz) n. three officers of the 42nd Royal Highland Regiment, Lt.-Col. William Dickson, Capt. Archibald Campbell and Capt. McQuarrie, were made Honorary Burgesses in 1802. This was when they passed through Hawick on their way back from Egypt after having ‘immortalised themselves in defeating the French Invincibles’.

the Royal Mail (thu-roi-ul-māl) n. name of a stagecoach operating out of Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1837 it was listed leaving for Edinburgh from the Tower Inn every day at 9.30 a.m., going via Selkirk and Galashiels, and leaving for London at 12.30 p.m., via Langholm and Carlisle. The other coach operating at the same time was ‘the Standard’.

Royal Nurseries see Buccleuch Nurseries
the Royal Oak (thu-roi-ul-ōk) n. former hostelry near the top of the Round Close in the 19th century, also known for a while as the Blue Bell Inn. It can be seen in a sketch by T.H. Laidlaw. James Elliot, proprietor, was considered to have provided the finest spread of the local innkeepers at the Reform Bill open air dinner of 1832. Elliot was listed as vintner on the Round Close in Pigot's 1837 directory. It could have been where Mary Hunter was publican on the Round Close in 1841. Also the name of a separate local pub on Wilton Path at roughly the same time, and another small licensed house on the north side of Buccleuch Street in the mid-19th century (the name is shared with hundreds of other pubs in Britain and refers to the tree in which Charles II hid from Cromwell's army).

rubbers (ru-burz) n., arch. scrapie, a disease of sheep, marked by constant scratching (cf. scratchie).

rubbin-oot-indie (ru-bin-oo'-in-dee) n., arch. an India-rubber, eraser.

Ruberslaw (roo-burz-law) n. hill about 4 miles due east of Hawick, lying on the boundary of Cavers and Hobkirk parishes. It reaches a height of 424 m (1392 ft), and is the most prominent landmark in Roxburghshire. It was long considered to be an extinct volcano, but the reality is that the geology is much more complex (although the rocks are predominantly basaltic, the shape probably came from erosion). It is topped by an Iron Age fort, and was also used as a Roman signal station. The fortifications on the hill-top were first described by A.O. Curle in 1905. There was an extensive stone citadel on top (about 72 m by 32 m), defended by a wall, with an entrance on the north-east side. There is also an annex on the south side, including the plateau below the summit. These were probably rebuilt from the stones of the Roman signal station, as a Dark Age 'nuclear' fortification. with Roman stone. A less well-defined outer wall is probably part of an earlier Iron Age structure. A cairn on the east side was removed in the late 19th century. The summit also has a modern triangulation pillar. A horde of bronze vessels was unearthed there in 1863 (including a jug handle, decorated with grotesque figures of 2 dwarfs and a bird) and are in the Museum, as well as 2 stones with diamond-shaped carvings. Several flints found there are in the Hawick Museum. Other flints and an arrowhead are in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland, as well as an unfinished stone axe. The hill was used for Covenanters' meetings of the mid-17th century, at Peden's Pulpit (a rocky cleft at the south-west side of the summit) and elsewhere on its slopes. In a wood near the head of the Hawk Burn is a 'burnt mound'. Pine trees on the north side are said to be remnants of the ancient Caledonian forest. Part of the slopes were used as Common land in Denholm and in the 18th century each feuar's allotment was marked out with stones. A song, 'The Hunting of Ruberslaw', about a fox hunt there, was written down by Bailie T.S. Smail of Jedburgh, as recited by 2 old men in about 1900 – 'Oft have I wandered in my vernal years Where Ruberslaw his misty summit rears' [JL], 'Dark Ruberslaw, – that lifts his head sublime, Rugged and hoary with the wrecks of time! On his broad misty front the giant wears The horrid furrows of ten thousand years' [JL], 'Did you see the shadow's speeding On the slopes of Ruberslaw?' [RSC], '...Waiting helpless the beak and claw Of the carrion birds of Ruberslaw!' [WHO], '...where Ruberslaw's summit stands oot and looks doon on the wild lovely Border and Denholm's wee toon' [GM], 'Rest on the heights an' look ayont Where Ruberslaw shows green, An' a' the countryside displayed Aroon' the Border Queen' [WFC], 'When Rubers Law has on his cap, The Dunion on her hood, A' the auld wives on Teviotside Are sure ti hae a flood' [T], 'If you can see Ruberslaw it's going to rain and if you can't see Ruberslaw it's already raining' [IWL] (sometimes written 'Rubers Law'; it is marked 'Rub-burlaw hill' on Pont's manuscript map of the 1590s, and on a manuscript map of Gordon in c.1650, but is absent from Blaeu's 1654 map; the origin of the name is unknown; it should not be confused with 'Rubislaw' near Aberdeen).

the Ruberslaw Hoard (thu-roo-burz-law-hōrd) n. hoard of bronze objects discovered on the eastern slopes of Ruberslaw in 1863. The objects were donated to Hawick Museum by Sir Walter Elliot of Woflee, later being studied by staff at the National Museums of Scotland and then being displayed at the Trimontium Trust's Museum. The pieces are: 2 'paterae' (sauce-pans), one decorated with a 'thyrsus' (staff surmounted by vegetation); a patera base; parts of a jug, including an elaborate handle; a shallow dish; a bowl about 1-foot in diameter; and fragments of 2 scabbard mounts. They are believed to date from the 2nd century.

Ruberslaw Hoose (roo-burz-law-hoos) n. house in Crieff near Perth. It was built in the late 18th century, being a branch of the Commercial Bank from 1811, and then was a home of Sir William Elliott of Stobs from at least 1878, when his first wife died there. It is unclear who named the house (but the connection to the Elliots of Stobs seems unlikely to be a coincidence).

Ruberslaw Pairish (roo-burz-law-pā-reesh) n. combined parish consisting of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule, set up in 2003, and extended to include Hobkirk and Southdean in 2004.

Ruberslaw Road (roo-burz-law-rōd) n. street in the south-eastern part of Denholm, built on the site of a former livestock market. The private housing development there dates from the 1970s.

rubiator (roo-bee-ā-tur) n., arch. a bully, a violent, swearing person – ‘He comes out on me roaring like a rubiator’ [JoJ], ‘Hei cam in leike a roobeeater (a violent bully), an cowpeet the taibl yownt owre’ [ECS] (there are spelling variants).

Rubstic (rub-stik) n. race-horse, trained locally by John Leadbetter. It won the Grand National in 1979, being the first Scottish horse to do so.

ruck (ruk) n., arch. a rick, stack of hay – ‘O! as we ran about the rucks o’ hay! I hinna seen sinesyne a blyther day’ [CPM], ‘lang Johne turnbull in quhitrig – IIII oxin II ky a hors a ruk of corne’ [CoJ1503].

the Rude Day (thu-rood-dā) n. mediæval festival of the Exultation of the Cross, celebrated on 14th September (3rd May in England), supposedly the date of the discovery of the ‘true cross’. It was important locally before the Reformation and is recorded in the mid-16th century as a day sometimes chosen for signing documents etc. It was the occasion of a Fair in Jedburgh, the day in 1601 being marked by a skirmish, when a group of about 30 Turnbells from the Minto area came to town seeking Thomas Ker (brother of the Probost). At the end of the fight Ker and his servant were dead, along with 2 of the Turnbells, and several men were left seriously wounded (still referred to in the 1622 Circuit Court records; also spelled ‘Rood’).

Rudd (rud) n. Charles Clifford (b.1811/2) from Yorskshire, he was Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh Police in 1851. He was living at about 3 Tower Knowe. He was also listed as Superintendent in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth, and they had a son Thomas Frederick. By 1861 he was a widower working as Police Constable in Jedburgh.

Ruecastle (roo-, row-kaw-sul) n. hamlet a mile or so north-east of the Dunion, formerly in the Barony of Bedrule. A piece of land there was granted by Lady Bethoc and her husband Rudolph to the monks of Jedburgh when that abbey was founded (as confirmed in several later charters). There is a suggestion that an area of elevated land to the east of the farm may have been the site of a tower. There is also a tradition that the local courts of justice were held there until moved to Jedburgh. William ‘de Rucastel’ is recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. The Fletcher family held part of the lands from before 1464 until they sold them to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1558/9. In 1491 there was a ‘procuratory of resignation’ by Thomas Dickson of Ormiston, to resign (presumably a different part of) these lands into the hands of the Abbot of Jedburgh; they appear to have been gained by John Rutherford of Hundalee. John Turnbull was recorded there in 1493. John Turnbull is recorded there in 1502. The village there was burned by an English party led by Philip Dacre in 1513, including 2 towers, burned by Sir Thomas Wharton’s men in 1543 and burned again by Hertford’s men in 1545. In 1569 it was among the lands purchased by Adam French from the Abbot of Jedburgh. The lands were recorded as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1619. It was among lands granted to Thomas Ker of Cavers-Carre in 1623. Lands there were held by Lord Jedburgh in 1629. Thomas Hamilton (1st Earl of Haddington) owned lands there, which he feued in 1632. In 1643 the lands there were valued at a total of £459, owned by Thomas Rutherford, Andre Turnbull, Laird Storie, Alexander Miller, George Fletcher and the Earl of Traquair. In 1665 Thomas, son of John Rutherford was served heir to his father’s 7-pound-10-shilling lands there, with ‘lie Maynes de Harden et forresta de Rowcastle’ as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle. In 1788 the main part was owned by John Rutherford of Knowesouth and valued at £396 13s 10d (with teinds of £70 6s), part owned by Thomas Rutherford valued at £41 3s 10d, a small part owned by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters (that had been acquired by Bennet of Chesters) valued at £37 2s 4d and another part owned by Thomas Storie valued at £18. William Roxburgh was there 1794–97 and in 1797 William Young was also farmer there, plus George Black also lived there. The residents in 1799 included hind John Mitchel, servant George Black, labourer James Carr and servant William Young. The farm was part of the estate of Knowesouth, until sold by the heirs of Capt. Rutherford to George Pott of Dod. Part of the lands were acquired by Bennet of Chesters before 1811 and combined with his estate, with the rest being owned by Rutherford of Knowesouth; together the parts were valued at about £510. Gideon Pott acquired further parts from William Oliver Rutherford and from Thomas Storie. The area may be the origin of the similar surname. A cist was found a few hundred yards to the south, containing an urn that was said in 1949 to be preserved in Monteviot House. A stone axe found nearby is in the National Museum of Antiquities. In a field about 500m to the north are the possible remains of a settlement. A former resident, perhaps fictional, is mentioned in the ballad ‘The Grey Peel’ (as recited by ‘Matthew Gotterson’) – ‘An’ gallopin’ up comes Ruecastle Hew, On his Bewcastle naig o’ the guid steel grey. An’ Fernihirst grim, but ever heart true, Whase ready Kerr hand redds mony a fray’ [T] (the name probably derives from Old English ‘ruh’ and Anglo-Saxon ‘ceaster’, meaning ‘rough fort’, suggesting an early fortification of some sort there; it is written ‘Reucastel’, ‘Reucastle’, ‘Rewcastle’, ‘Rowcastel’, ‘Rowcastle’, ‘Rochcastell’, ‘Rouchcastell’, ‘Rowcastell’, ‘Rowcastell’, ‘Rowcastill’, and variants; it is first recorded as ‘Rughechestre’ in about 1140 and is ‘Rucastle’ in the 13th century; it is ‘Roucastell’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and the modern spelling appears on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Ruecastle (roo-, row-kaw-sul) n. Adam (d.1705) recorded as ‘merchant of Hawick’ when he was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1692. He may be related to the Adam who was born to William and Marion Scott in Hawick in 1650 and may be the Adam whose children included: an unnamed child (b.1690); Mary (b.1692); and James (b.1693). He was listed as a merchant among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Adam who is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Scott. According to his will, he married Janet, daughter of William Paterson in 1686. He was a merchant in Hawick, but at some point moved to Edinburgh, where he died. Elizabeth nee Kelly (18th C.) wife of Bailie Walter, whom she married in the early 1750s. She was apparently the first Hawick citizen to travel out to America and return safely! She was at that time 72 years old and visiting her son John, who was a Captain in the Revolutionary Army. Francis (17th/18th C.) saddler in Hawick, he was probably closely related to Robert. He could have been the Francis born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1678. He is probably the Francis who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms for merchant David Young in 1705, for shoemaker Walter Leyden (along with Bailie Robert) in 1717, for merchant William Dickson in 1718 and for candlemaker John Scott in 1720. In 1723 he was entered as a new elder of Hawick Kirk and was a candidate for Session Treasurer in 1725. He witnessed baptisms in 1725 for workman William Henderson, for Town Officer John Stewart and for merchant John Clerk (along with Bailie Robert), in 1726 for flesher Robert Wilson and probably (the record is hard to read) along with Robert, for wigmaker Francis Miles, in 1727 for carrier George Porteous, in 1728 for Walter Elliot and for Robert Hewison (both along with the Bailie), and in 1730 for ‘junior surgeon’ Walter Scott. He is also mentioned in reference to the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1738. He may be the Francis, saddler in Hawick, who witnessed the notorial instrument of 1734 in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He witnessed a further baptism for gardener William Paterson in 1743, in which he was also listed as a saddler. He is recorded as a merchant in 1745 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver William Roger, along with merchant John. He is probably also the saddler Francis who witnessed a baptism for Gideon in 1745; Gideon thus seems likely to have been closely related. In 1747 he was recorded as a saddler who (along with carrier John) witnessed a baptism for wright Henry Haliburton. He may have been the Francis who died around 1750 and gave his estate to Francis, young son of Bailie Gideon (perhaps therefore his brother). George (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He may be the George who was married to Isobel ‘Merlay’ and had a son Hector in Hawick in 1636. George (17th C.) married to Janet Gilbertson, they had daughter Janet in Hawick in 1653. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1648. Bailie Gideon (b.1713) son of Robert, he was a Magistrate in Hawick roughly in the 1730s and in 1740. He may have been the Gideon who was Cornet in 1730. He was probably the (ex-)Bailie Ruecastle involved with overseeing work to rebuild the Bailies' seat in St. Mary's in 1734 and building a new Parish School in 1739. He was 'present Baillie' in 1741 and in 1743 when he witnessed baptisms for writer James Weir and Burgh Officer Francis Turnbull, and also 'late Bailie' in 1745 when he witnessed another baptism for James Weir, and also when his own child's baptism was recorded. He appears to have died shortly before 1751, when the Hawick Session agreed to act as trustees for his minor son Francis, who had been left the estate of another Francis (perhaps his brother). He married Jean Watson (Clerk to the Regality) baptised in 1710. Their children included: Robert (b.1731); John (b.1733); Francis (b.1734); Thomas (b.1735); John (again, b.1738); Anne (b.1740); Francis (again, b.1741); Anne (again, b.1743); Jean (b.1745); and Gideon (b.1747). The witnesses in 1741 were writer Thomas Watson (surely related to his wife) and merchant Charles Tudhope, in 1743 were wright Walter Scott and writer James Weir, and in 1745 were former Bailie John Scott and saddler Francis (who was surely closely related to him). He may be the 'Bailie Gideon' who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758 (although he appears to have been deceased before then). Gideon (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick when he paid the Horse Tax in 1790-92. He also paid the dog tax in Hawick in 1797. He contributed £1 to the subscription to support the war with France around 1799. He is probably the son of Gideon, born in 1747. Hector (17th C.) married to Isobel Minto, their children Grizel and Francis were baptised in Hawick in 1645. Hector (17th C.) Hawick resident. He married Marion Brown and their children included Bessie (b.1687) and Hector (b.1688). An unnamed child (b.1690) and Andrew (b.1692), with no mother's name recorded, were probably also his children. He may have been son or grandson of George. He is probably the 'Hector Reucastell younger' listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 (suggesting that his father may have also been Hector). John (16th C.) recorded in Hawick's 1537 charter as 'Rowcastell'. He owned a 'particate' of land on the north side of the High Street. He may have been the ancestor of the later Ruecastles of the Town. John (17th C.) one of a list of 16 'idle and masterless men' suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council in 1627 as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he is among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (b.1657) son of Robert and Janet Tweedie, born in Hawick. Probably the same John became a cooper's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1674. He may be related to the later Bailie John. John (17th/18th C.) described as 'servitor' to carrier Walter Ruecastle in 1716, when he and William Douglas had complaints made against them for sitting in seats in St. Mary's that were reserved for the incorporated trades. The 2 of them even broke open the door to the balcony when it was locked by Robert Jolly. He was presumably the same John who was involved in a scuffle with Robert Jolly in 1716 in the Wester Loft of St. Mary's during the Sunday service, when 'Jollie did thrust him hard by his feet upon his belly'. Bailie John (17th/18th C.) Chief Magistrate of Hawick around the 1710s, recorded as such during the swearing of the oath of allegiance to King George by the Council and Burgesses in 1714. It is unclear how he is related to the other Ruecastles (but based on his marriage record he was 'nephew to Walter Ruecastle att ye Kirkstyle of Hawick'); it is possible he was son of Adam, who died in 1706 (which would explain why his uncle rather than father is mentioned in the marriage record). He is probably the merchant John who in 1719 married Bessie (or Betsy), daughter of Walter Paterson of Burnflat, and had children: Margaret (b.1721), who probably married Walter Henderson; Bessie (b.1727); Walter (b.1729), baker and magistrate; John (b.1731); Jean (b.1735); Isobel (b.1739); Bessie (again, b.1740); Beatrix (b.1742), who probably married clothier and dyer Thomas Turnbull; and Janet (b.1744). The witnesses in 1742 were Francis Gledstains and Robert Boyd (both 'present Bailies'). Given the birth years it seems likely he is also the John whose children recorded with Bessie Scott (perhaps an error, or indicating his wife had previously been married) were: Anna (b.1723); and Helen (b.1725), who may have married James Paterson, 'Ilka Thursdi'. The witnesses in 1725 were Walter (perhaps his uncle) and John Scott (possibly related to his wife). In 1729 he was listed as a carrier, and the witnesses were John Miller and John Telfer. He is probably the merchant John who witnessed baptisms for workman Gilbert Oliver in 1741, for flesher George Deans, merchant Robert Scott, flesher Walter Sheen, gardener Robert Balmer and flesher William Renwick in 1742, for carrier John Pott and Schoolmaster Walter Turnbull in 1743, and for Alexander Bunyan and John Kedie in 1745. In 1744 he witnessed baptisms for carriers John Tudhope and James Paterson (who married Helen, probably his daughter), as well as for weaver John Gray and for shoemaker Thomas Scott. In 1745 he also witnessed a baptism for weaver William Roger, along with fellow merchant Francis. He could be the carrier who witnessed a baptism for William Leithead in 1741 and another for wright Henry Haliburton in 1747. John (18th C.) elder of Hawick Session, recorded in 1751. He was in care of a horse belonging to the Session, with instructions to sell it, and also appointed as a trustee for the affairs of the deceased Bailie Francis Ruecastle. Since he was not referred to as a late Bailie, then he may not have been the same as the earlier Bailie John. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for baker Walter in 1758. John (1755/6–1808) son of Walter. He went to America, serving in the U.S. Army during the American War of Independence, becoming a Captain. He married Phoebe Thomas of Elizabeth Town, New Jersey. When his mother went out to visit him she was apparently the first Teri to take a trip out to America and return safely. Mrs. ?? (17th/18th C.) Hawick innkeeper of the early 1700s. She is recorded several times in the Parish Records in connection with payment for drinks associated with Kirk Session events, such as funerals and the 'roup' of seats in the gallery. She may have been related to the John who was Bailie. Robert (17th C.) described as 'viatore', i.e. 'traveller' when he was witness to a 1622 sasine for land in Hawick owned by Allan Deans. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with making a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott and had son James in Hawick in 1636. Robert (17th C.) married to Janet Gledstains and had daughter Isobel in Hawick in 1646. Robert (17th C.) selected as one of 2 people in Hawick to collect the 'stent' on the west side of the water in 1649. Probably the same Robert was ordered in 1655 to pay Walter Stavert money borrowed when he when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh and for a leg of mutton. He is described as a traveller in 1655 when someone was ordered to pay him for carrying wool to Edinburgh, 'for horsing of him from Edinburgh to Hawick' and 'for ane dry killit fische'. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Scott. Their children included 'Dones' (b.1644), George (b.1648), Janet (b.1648), Bessie, an unnamed child (b.1653) and Walter (b.1655). Robert (17th C.) married to Janet 'Twiddie', their son John was baptised in Hawick in 1657. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Isobel Scott. Their children included William (b.1654) and Robert (b.1656). The witnesses in 1654 were Thomas Scott and John Scott (perhaps related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Margaret Wintrop. Their children included Robert (b.1670) and Margaret (b.1674). Robert (17th C.) married to Agnes Mow, their son William was born in Hawick in 1673. Robert (d.c.1688) tailor in Hawick. His will was recorded in the Commissariat of Peebles in 1688. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. He could be the Robert recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He served as Magistrate between about 1690 and 1710, certainly recorded in 1697, 1707 and again around 1709. He may have been the Robert, son of Robert and Margaret Wintrop, who was born in Hawick in 1670 (although there are other Roberts recorded being born in 1648 and 1656). He may be the Robert recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun' and probably from the west side. It is possible that he was the Robert, who, along with Walter, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He is probably the Robert who in 1696 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Scott. He is probably the Robert who (along with Francis) witnessed a baptism for merchant David Young in 1705. He was Bailie in 1707 when along with the other Bailie, Robert Brown, he was fined by the Council for 'the publicke undenyable and unaccountable abuse . . . att the rydeing of the Commonone', with the pair 'strikeing att others' horses with thair whips and staves'; the nature of the incident is not described, but it seems likely it was related to the near riots that happened at the previous year's Common Riding over carrying the Flag. He witnessed baptisms for Thomas Gledstains, John Scott 'Whitegates' and tailor William Donald (along with Bailie Robert Brown) in 1707, for Walter Gledstains (junior of Hilliesland) in 1708, for Walter Gledstains, 'Walter Alison', for Henry Orrock and for merchant William Dickson in 1709, for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1711, for Bailie James Burn in 1712 and for Bailie George Martin, John Aitkin in Allanhaugh Mill and Bailie James Scott in 1714. He was 'late bailie' in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto. He witnessed further baptisms for weaver Robert Turnbull in 1716, for shoemaker Walter Leyden (along with saddler Francis) in 1717, for smith William Whillans in 1720, in 1722 for Walter Scott in Acreknowe, in 1723 for shoemaker Walter 'Lithen', in 1725 for merchant John Clerk (along with Francis again), and in 1728 for Walter Elliot and for Robert Hewison. In 1710 he was stated to be one of the Councillors given a key to the Charter Chest. He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. In 1715 he was given custody of 'the charter little chest', with 2 other ex-Bailies holding the keys. He was probably the Bailie Ruecastle charged in 1717 with collecting money from the area between the Cross to the bridge. And in 1718, when he was a Magistrate, there was a serious dispute with ex-Bailie Graham, who accused him (apparently at a Council meeting) of being a thief and worse; the exact nature of the argument is not recorded, but it was resolved after the Minister intervened. He witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1721. Another dispute of 1722 led to him having all the elders publicly questioned about whether they had 'heard him speak opprobriously and disparageinglie of Mr Robert Cunningham our minister'. He continued as Magistrate in the 1720s and was also Parish Treasurer in the 1720s. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Moss in 1725. He may be Bailie and the Robert who witnessed baptisms for merchant David Johnston in 1729 and 1731; he also witnessed a baptism for Andrew Young in 1729. He married Anna Elliot and their children included: Mary (b.1700); Anna (b.1704); Beatrix (b.1705); William (b.1709); and Gideon (b.1713). The witnesses in 1700 were Walter Graham and George Martin, in 1704 were Bailies Patrick Richardson and George Martin, in 1705 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Baillie Walter Elliot (who may have been related to his wife) and in 1709 Bailies Walter Elliot, James Burn and Walter Graham. He may be the Robert whose daughter Jean married Robert Ogilvie in 1720. These other children baptised in Hawick Parish (with no mother's name given) were probably also his: Anna (b.1702); Anna (again, b.1707); William (b.1709); and Mary (b.1711). It is also possible he was father of Bailie John, who was probably born in the 1690s. Simon (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott, their children included William (b.1635) and an unnamed son (b.1641). Walter (17th C.) recorded in 1693 when he was fined for insulting and assaulting the Bailie of Regality, William Scott. It seems that Scott was in the 'houss' (i.e. probably pub) of William Elliot, sorting out some financial business between him (Walter) and John Hardie, when he came in, calling the Bailie 'ane fals judge', and when there was an attempt to remove him he 'instantly, insolentlie, and most violentlie fell upon the sd. baylyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head'. As well as being fined, he was ordered to go to the stocks. The financial dealings also involved his father, who was presumably alive at the time. He could be the same man as the carter. Walter (17th/18th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He is probably the Walter listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was recorded as a carrier of Hawick when he married Abigail Lamb in Edinburgh in 1694. He could be the Walter who was born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1674 (although there are other possibilities). He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for cook James Wright in 1712. In 1713 he was a 'carier' when he witnessed baptisms for 'drummer' Thomas Boyd (who was also gardener at the Flex) and for weaver John Bridges (who lived at the Easter Kirkstyle). In 1716 his 'servitor' John 'Roucastle' was one of the people who the weavers complained were using their assigned seats in St. Mary's; this John could have been a close relative. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Richard Miles in 1705. It is possible that he was the Walter, who, along with Robert, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He is probably the Walter 'att ye Kirkstyle of Hawick' whose nephew John married Bessie Paterson in 1719; he was presumably thus brother of John's father, possibly Robert. Bailie Walter (1729-c.1795) son of John and Bessie Paterson. He was a baker of Hawick who was a Magistrate during the dispute over the Division of the Common, and served through the 1750s and 1760s. He witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Henderson and Margaret Ruecastle (probably his sister) in 1757, for clockmaker Walter Freeman in 1758 and for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1759. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull (probably his brother-in-law) in 1768. He was witness for baptisms for Archibald Paterson in 1775, 1777, 1780 and 1781 and for James Dickson in 1777. He married Elizabeth Kelly (or 'Bettie Kellie') and had 13 children, including: Robert (b.1756); James (b.1758); Walter (b.1759); Charles and William (twins, b.1761); Barbara (b.1762), who married Robert Howieson; Walter (again, b.1766); Elizabeth (b.1768); Christian, who married Andrew Haddon (from Selkirk); and John, who was a Captain during the American Revolutionary War. The baptismal entry for the twins reads 'Gemini'. The 1758 baptism was witnessed by John (probably his father or brother) and James Paterson (perhaps his uncle), the 1759 and 1766 ones by John (again) and Walter Henderson. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'de Rucastel' when he swore allegiance to Edward I of England in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. His seal was oval, showing a figure with a branch in the right hand, a scroll in the left, and a kneeling figure on the left, with the name 'S'WILL'I D'RUCASTELE'. He is also recorded receiving a pension from King Robert the Bruce in the early 1300s. Whether he had a direct connection with the Hawick family of 3 centuries later is unknown. William (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. He is also mentioned in a Magistrates court case of 1642 when Thomas Oliver is accused of using irreverent language towards him, particularly calling him 'man-sworn'. He is probably the William who was elected to the Council in 1648. He is probably the William who was Bailie in the 1650s. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in 1652. He is probably also the William recorded as one of the owners of West Mains in 1663. He could be the William who was married to Marion Scott and had several children in Hawick, including William (b.1639), Margaret (b.1643), Marion (b.1643), Walter (b.1646), Robert (b.1648), Adam (b.1650) and James (b.1652). The witnesses in 1648 were Robert Deans and James Scott (who may have been related to his wife). William (b.1650) born in Hawick, he married Janet (or 'Jenet') Richardson in 1674. Their children included Marion (b.1669), Janet (b.1671), Walter (b.1674), Isobel (b.1675), William (b.1677) and Francis (b.1678). The witnesses in 1671 were Robert Dickson and William Purdom. He may be the writer who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Scott in 1707. William (b.1761) son of Walter and Elizabeth Kelly and twin of Charles. He is probably the William from Hawick recorded in a legal matter in Selkirk in 1791 (also spelled 'Reucastell', 'Rewcastel', 'Rewcastell', 'Rewcastle', 'Roucastell', 'Roucastle', 'Rowcastell', 'Rowcastill', 'Rowcastle', 'Rucaslle', 'Rucastle' and other variants in earlier documents).

Ruecastle Burn (roo-kaw-sul-burn) n. stream that rises on the western side of the Dunion and flows in a roughly north-western direction, passing the hamlet of Ruecastle to join the Knowesouth Burn and eventually the Teviot. At Worm Rigg there are remains of ancient earthworks. Near Knowesouth is Ladies' Well.

Ruecastle Moor (roo-kaw-sul-moor) n. former name for the moor near Ruecastle. It was 'Rowcastell Mure' in 1616 when Douglasses from Friarshaw were accused of threatening Gilbert Watt to meet them in combat there. In about 1795 it is recorded that the minister of Bedrule had the right to cast 2 'darg of turf annually' here.

the Ruecastles (thu-roo-kaw-sulz) n. family that was prominent in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries, but then entirely disappeared. The surname surely derives from the area of Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. William 'de Rucastel' is listed in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and had a pension from Robert the Bruce. The eponymous lands were in other hands by the mid-15th century, but there are no instances of the name until 'Rawcastill' appears as a landowner on Hawick's 1537 Charter. Then Thomas, Margaret, Agnes and Nicholas Ruecastle were married in Hexham in 1581, 1586, 1590 and 1596, respectively. The Hawick branch is recorded continuously from the 1630s, and furnished many Magistrates, Councillors and Elders. They were probably all from a single local male ancestor. It seems likely that the Northumbrian branch was also related, however some of the occurrences further afield may have an entirely different origin. There is a vast range of spellings in early records of the name. Modern variants include 'Rowcastle', 'Rewcassell' and 'Reucastle'.

Bank purchased the land in 1862 and rebuilt on it. It was built around 1690, and was a 3-storey construction. The Ruecastle family, which provided several Hawick Bailies, had lived there for 3 generations. It can be seen in an 1860 photograph, showing the shops of W. Douglas, saddler, J. Kemp, cooper and Wm. Rutherford on the ground floor. It was demolished in 1861.

ruefi (roo-fi) adj., poet. rueful – ‘He sees that sae will be the case, An’ wi’ a lang-drawn ruefu’ face’ [RDW], ‘... an’ saufes sic as be o’ ane rewfu’ speerit’ [HSR], ‘... I wull be rewfu’ for my sin’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

ruet (roo-ee’, -i’) pp., poet. rued, repented – ‘He answiret an’ said, I wullna: but efterwaird he ruet, an’ gaed’ [HSR].

ruffie (ru-fee) n., arch. a knitted neck ruff – ‘That hyimm-made ruffie o yoors looks nane sae unheelint’ [ECS].

ruffin (ruf-in) n., arch. an encore, ovation – ‘Ruff um in! Gie (or gae) um a ruff-in!’ [ECS] (also written ‘ruff-in’).

the Rufus Trophy (thu-roo-fis-trō-fee) n. trophy competed for at the Common Riding race meeting. It was first raced for in 1934, replacing the Medway Cup, which had been won outright (after 3 victories) by ex-Cornet Ian Mactaggart on Rufus. The first winner was the same rider on his horse Rufus! It was won outright and replaced by the Horneshole Stakes in 1950.

Rufy (roo-fee) n. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Johannem ruffy’ at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Alexander Weens of that ilk failed to produce him to answer to the murders of John and James Jackson. He was declared as a fugitive and his goods escheated to the King. Patrick (15th/16th C.) tenant in Rutherford. He was recorded as a fugitive in 1502, this being for the murder of John and James Jackson. William Douglas of Cavers dealt with his escheated goods. He was presumably related to Thomas who was also put to the horn for the same crime. Thomas (15th C.) member of the ‘retour of inquest’ in 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. He must have been a prominent Roxburghshire Laird of the time. However, it is unknown where exactly he was from or whether his surname was a variant of something else. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Adam, brother of William Douglas of Cavers, failed to rug (rug) v., arch. to tug, pull roughly, plunder, spoil – ‘When frae temptation bolted snug, Wi’ commentators at his lug, Which he from shelves in thraves did rug ...’ [JR], n., arch. a pull, tug, a bite of grass (of a farm animal), feed – ‘... unless when he brought them on to the several ground to give them a rugg for a part of the day’ [C&L1767] (noted by E.C. Smith; see also ruggit).

rug an rive (rug-in-riv) v., arch. to tug, tear, pull at with great force or persistence – ‘... fell upon the sd. baylyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head ...’ [BR], ‘Swearin’ an’ tearin’, they rug an’ they rive, Wha to be foremost wi’ Meggie M’Givelry’ [JoHa], ‘... And boulevards o’ blankets ruggin’ and rivin’’ [DH].

rugby (rug-bee) n. a religion practised by many people in Hawick, with its main church at the foot of Mansfield Road. It was first introduced only in 1872, so for hundreds of years before that Teries must have had little to cheer about! The game was introduced locally when the Cricket Club decided to purchase a ball for the younger players to exercise with in the winter months. The club itself was formed in December 1873, with Robert Michie as Captain. The first organised game was against Langholm in 1874. George Wilson was a mainstay of the early committee, which was reorganised in 1885. At that time ‘Hawick’ (playing at the Volunteer) and ‘Hawick and Wilton’ (playing at the cricket field) were formed separately. They played matches against each other and the St. Cuthbert’s team for a few years, but by 1892 only ‘Hawick Football Club’ survived. Although the official game started only in the late 19th century, the local tradition of ‘Baa’ games goes back probably several centuries, and there is a description of a game (‘the pledges’) played by youths in the 18th century, which bears some striking similarities, although without the ball (often ‘the rugby’).

ruggit (ru-gi’, -gee’) pp., arch. tugged, pulled roughly – ‘... saying that he maliciously and un-reverently rackt and ruggit her from her said seat’ [Ash1639], ‘How the jockies in their fury Rave an’ ruggit’ [RH] (see rug).

Ruickbie (rik-, rook-bee) n. James ‘Jamie’ or ‘Reubie’ (c.1757–1829) born in Innerleithen, he lived much of his life in and around Hawick. The identity of his parents is unknown, but either his father or uncle was an earlier James of whom a story is told of how he used to go to the Pirn plantation to preach loudly to himself, with the Laird there overhearing him one day and saying ‘Man, Jamie, ... ye should mind that the Lord’s no deaf’. He was a miller to trade, being the assistant at Nisbet Mill and then working at Newmill. After this he became a toll-keeper, at Haremooss (for a year), then Colterscleuch (for 12 years), then at Langholm and finally at the West-End toll-bar in Hawick. Entirely self-taught, he wrote a good deal of poetry, and also played the fiddle. He settled in Hawick as landlord of the Harrow Inn (at 12 High Street), where he enjoyed the friendship of other more distinguished writers. He belonged to the Burgher (East End) congregation in Hawick and started a Sunday School at Newmill. He was also listed as a volunteer in 1803. He would recount a tale of a girl from Innerleithen who was carried away by the fairies and later turned up in Flora Wood after prayers offered by 7 ministers; he claims to have known this girl personally when she was an old lady and he was a boy. He was one of the earliest local poets to publish his work, some of it in dialect. An 8-page pamphlet of his, ‘An Elegy on the death of Whisky’ was printed in Hawick by Robert Armstrong in 1801. His 3 published collections are ‘Way-side Cottager, consisting of pieces in prose and verse’ (1807, while he was still at Colterscleuch), ‘Poems, chiefly in the Scottish dialect’ (1815, while he was at the Harrow Inn), and ‘Poems’ (1826). This last volume contained tributes from some of his contemporaries. A few of his poems were quite popular locally, particularly ‘The Bottomless Pit, or the Lawyer Outwitted’ and ‘The Vulture and Raven or the Dinner Arrested’. He also wrote some lines about his contemporary, James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’). He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. His prose pieces include attacks on cruelty to animals and on the slave trade, complaints about drunkenness and a tribute to peace. He described himself as ‘diminutive, thin-visaged, sallow-complexioned’ and ‘clothed in a ragged great coat, a snuffy-breasted doublet, and a sea-green cap’ with a cheek bone ‘best adapted to whet razors on!’ He married Margaret Govenlock in 1787 and their daughter Margaret married Robert Govenlock of Moss Paul Hotel. The first Mrs. Ruickbie may have died in 1797. He probably later married Jean (or Jane) Wilson, who died in 1836 and their children included Alexander. There seems to be uncertainty about whether he died in 1828 or 1829. He is buried at St. Mary’s, although the grave appears to have been unmarked. A portrait of him exists, painted when he was about 50, and the Museum has at least one of his original manuscripts. Robert Murray wrote an account of his life in 1864 – ‘Farewell, then, Old Bard! I have learned by the fate That goodness and genius conjoined cannot save From neglect the possessor, but often await On him scorn and contempt, til shut out by the grave’ [WiSp] (also written ‘Rucbie’ and variants; it is uncertain how his name would have been pronounced by his contemporaries, rū-bee also being possible).

ruif (rif) n. a roof – ‘what were ee daein up on yon ruif?’, ‘as long as ee bide under ma ruif, ee’ll dae is a say’, ‘... on ti bowkin lums an platchin cloats an ruiffs an waas baith suitteet an ratcht ...’ [ECS], ‘The sklatter cam ti sort the ruif’ [ECS], ‘... ruif-trei (rif-trī) n., arch. main beam of a roof, hence figuratively referring to a home.

ruind (rūnd, rind) v., arch. to cough hoarsely, make a disagreeable crunching noise, n. a hoarse cough – ‘A ruind o’ a cough’ [GW] (noted by E.C. Smith; also roond).

ruinds (rūndz, rindz) n., pl., arch. strips of cloth, the selva of a web of cloth – ‘Ruinds = short strips and odds and ends of cloth, often sewn into rugs and mats; properly the selva of tweed cut down’ [ECS].

ruindy (rūn-dee) adj., arch. hoarse – ‘A ruindy cough’ [GW].

Ruins Moss (roo-inz-mos) n. former name for the area of ‘moss’ just to the south of the road to the Branxholme Lochs, about half-way between Chapelhill and Branxholme Easter Loch (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

ruise (rūz) v., arch. to praise, extol – ‘I mind when he ca’ed me his Nannie, An’ ruis’d sae my bonnie black ee' [JoHa], 'Never huivvin ti ruize Jethart high' [ECS], 'Huz Teries ruize high oor bonnie toon' [ECS], n., arch. conceit, high opinion – 'Hei hes a guid ruise o' his-sel' [GW], 'Monie a creestin bit wui a guid ruice o itsel ...' [ECS] (from Mediaeval English; also written 'ruice' and 'ruize'; cf. raise).

ruit (ri', rū') n. a root – 'A tripped ower a muckle trei ruit', 'if ee stand there ony langer, ee'll take ruit', 'It's no' because the gowans braw are bonnie 'roond its ruit, For we hae seen them bloom as braw in mony a ither bit' [JoHa], 'I'd lived on nought but ruit an' weed, Acorns an' nuts an' ither seed' [WP], 'I've lived in it a good while now, and I doot I've ta'en ruit!' [DH], '...clearin' the soil away, till ye can sei if the ruit hes the richt bend' [DH], 'A'thing is buddin' flooer, ruit and hedgeraw ...' [WL], '...The rits theresel were a fit long So it didnae tell a lie' [AY], 'The amount o yirth stickin teh the ruit o the runt was coon-teet tae' [BW1961], arch. the lowest classes, root of society – 'A'm a rael Wast-ender, born i the verrih ruit' [ECS] (also spelled 'rit').

ruize see ruise

Rule (rool) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) recorded as 'Adam Reuel of Stawelle' in 1225. He was brother and heir of Richard and resigned the lands of Balmerino in Fife in favour of Queen Ermen-garde (widow of William the Lion and mother of Alexander II). In the period 1211–33 he witnessed charters for St. Andrews Priory, where he is 'ade de Rule clericis'. Adam 'de Roule' (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, along with 'Allyn', parson of the church of 'Roule' in Roxburghshire. Thomas of Rule was another signatory, so perhaps related. He gained lands at Molle (south of Morebattle) through marriage. About 1300 he granted some of these lands to the monks of Kelso Abbey, with witnesses including both Hugh and William 'de Roule'. In 1317 he granted his 'manor of Roule' to Adam de Yetholm, the charter made in Nottingham. Probably the same Adam 'de Rule' was recorded (along with William) in a charter of Sprouston in 1320/1, and also witnessed a charter for lands in Lessuden at about the same time. He married Johanna, daughter and heiress of Sir Henry of Halyburton, and widow of Ralph Wyschard. Adam (14th C.) granted his lands of Altonburn to John 'of Coupland' in about 1354, with his name given as 'Adam de Roule'. 3 years later these lands passed to John Ker (who thus became the first Ker of Altonburn); witnesses to this deed included William of Gledstones and William 'de Roule'. He may have been the same as Adam of Yetholm, son of Alan of Rule. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Adam Roull in Abbotroul' in the Curcuit Court of 1622 when Walter Kerr of Linton was found guilty of stealing 6 sheep from his land at Cosserhill. Alan (13th C.) recorded in charters of the early 1200s, during the reign of Alexander II. He witnessed a charter for the nuns of Coldstream and also for a gift of half of the lands of 'Eschirche' (Ashkirk) to the Bishopric of Glasgow. In the period 1195–1205 he witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes, with other Roxburghshire men also listed. He appears to have at this time been an English subject. He also witnessed an agreement between Henry of Ashkirk and Henry's brother Alexander some time before 1249. Alan 'of Roule' (13th/14th C.) possibly the same man as the parson of the church at Rule who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1296 his wife Alicia was forced to give up her dower lands in 'Dovanby' in England; this was part of a long list of followers of John Baliol who were thus ordered by Edward I. In 1317 he granted his 'manor of Roule with Neyfs and their sequels' to Adam of Yetham. This may have been his son Adam of Rule, who granted the lands of Altonburn (near Yetholm) to the Kers. Alison (15th/16th C.) wife of Sir William Ogilvie of Strathearn, who was Lord High Treasurer of Scotland. In 1507 they were granted the Barony of Strathearn, it is said because she was the first to inform the King of the birth of a son by his wife Margaret Tudor. She was also named along with her husband in several other charters in the period 1508–13. She appears to have been a member of the court and friend of the Queen. She died before her husband, and they had only one child, John. It is unclear how she was related to other Rules. Andrew of Primside (d.bef. 1439) owner of significant lands in the Regality of Sprouston and the Barony of Plenderleith. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules, but it seems likely he was a descendant of Alan of Rule. He borrowed £100 from Andrew Ker of 'Aldtonburne' (Attonburn, near Yetholm, which had been acquired from the Rules in the previous century) in 1430 (or perhaps 1413) and let lands in Primside to him in the meantime, the money to be repaid at St. Mary's in Hawick. In 1430 he sold 'ten husbandlands of the Maynis' in Primside to Andrew Ker, with the permission of his son George, this being confirmed in 1432 by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He resigned his lands to George, his son and heir, in 1432. George had married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn and Cessford. However, George must have died before him, and he had no other surviving sons, because his 4 daughters (Marjorie, Isabella, Janet and Ellen) became co-heiresses of his lands of Hownam, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, and each got one quarter of Primside. In 1439 Andrew Ker was granted $\frac{3}{5}$ of the land outright, from his daughters Marion, Janet and Ellen (with the consent of their husbands); it is unclear what became of the other $\frac{2}{5}$. In 1443 the Mains of Hownam, and lands of Plenderleith and Hyndhope, which had belonged to the 4 co-heiresses, passed to Andrew Ker. Andrew 'Dan', (d.1918) 3rd son of Robert and Jane, grandson of John, Inspector of Poor, and nephew of Private Harry. He was born in Hawick and joined the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. He was awarded the Military Medal, General Service Medal and Victory Medal and was killed in action near the end of WWI. His name is recorded on the Vis-en-Artois Memorial. Bernard (14th C.) recorded as 'de Roule' in 1364 when he resigned his lands of 'Fouceroul' (now 'Folla Rule') in Aberdeenshire. Brian (15th/16th C.) listed as 'Fiftelar', i.e. probably a fife player, at the Scottish court in 1506. His name is recorded as 'Bryane Roule'. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) cot-tar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Ellen (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Janet. In 1439 she is 'Elena Roule of Prymside' when she appointed her husband Thomas Young, along with Stephen Scot, Thomas Gledstains and others, as procurators when she resigned her part of Primside into the hands of the superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas. The sisters' lands of Primside were granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, and other charters transferring their lands to the Kers followed in 1443 and 1454/5. George (d.bef. 1440) son of Andrew of Primside. His father resigned his lands of Primside to him in 1432. He married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn (and Cessford). Ker gained the lands of Primside from Andrew Rule's daughters in 1439/40, suggesting that both father and son were deceased by then. George (15th C.) recorded as witness to charter by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470–78. John 'Roule' was also a witness, suggesting they were related. He is probably the same man as George of Edmondsfield.

Rule

Rule

Perhaps the same George was Bailie in that part for David Ranton of Billy (in Haddingtonshire) in 1478, with his brothers Patrick and John as witnesses. George 'of Edmondsfield' (15th C.) recorded in 1489–90 when he was involved in a court case with Archibald, Earl of Angus, relating to the lands of Bonkle. He was probably related to Andrew of Primside. He was appointed by the 5th Earl of Angus as Bailie of the Barony of Bonkle, but later ejected from this office. There was an inquest for his son George inheriting Edmondsfield in 1505. George (16th C.) minstrel appointed by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. Perhaps the same George witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1539. George (16th C.) witness to a document of the Riddells of that Ilk in 1551. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Elizabeth Nichol, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: John (b.1799); Margaret (b.1801); Walter (b.1803), carter in Hawick; Thomas (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1810), who married Alexander Pringle Scott; George (b.1815); Jane (b.1818); and Isabel (b.1821). George (b.1815) son of George and Elizabeth Nichol. He was partner in Rule & Leyden, dyers of Teviot Road. The business later amalgamated with British Cotton & Wool Dyers, Ltd. He was a dyer journeyman on the Crescent in 1841. He married Margaret Pringle in 1837 and their children included: George (b.1837); Margaret (b.1838); John (b.1841); Elizabeth (1843–1913); buried in Wellogate cemetery; Jane (b.1845); Frederick (b.1849); Adam (b.1851); Helen (b.1853); and Isabella (b.1855). Their daughter Elizabeth died in 1913 aged 70 and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. He is probably the son of George and Elizabeth Nichol born in Hawick in 1815. Harry (1875/6–1917) son of John, Inspector of Poor in Hawick. He served with the Army Service Corps, HQ 52nd Lowland Division. He married Elizabeth Linton, and their children were John, Jim and Janet. He died at sea when the S.S. Ivernia was torpedoed and sunk off the coast of Greece. His name is recorded on the Mikra Memorial. Henry (12th/13th C.) recorded as 'de Reuel' in the period 1188 when he was witness to several benefactions of William the Lion to the monastery of Arbroath. He was granted the lands of 'Cultrach', which included Balmerino, in Fife. He was present at a court in Kinghorn in 1204. He must have been directly related to Richard (possibly his son) who is also recorded as witness in a similar period. He may have married Margaret, daughter of Orm of Abernethy. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as 'Hugo Rouel' in 1260 when he was listed as a master of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'Hugonis de Roule' in 1320/1 when his seal was attached to a charter of Sprouston. Adam and William are also mentioned in the charter, and so they were surely all related. Humphrey (16th C.) recorded as 'Umphra Rewll' in a long remission for any past crimes for men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell. Given the others with whom he is listed, he probably lived near Langholm. Isabella (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Marjorie, Janet and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1443 and 1454/5. She was not named as a co-heiress in 1439, suggesting she was deceased by then. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Jacobo Rowle' in 1526 when he was a witness for a document for Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh. He was 'James Rowill' in another in 1530, and also for others in 1531. He may be the 'Jacobo Roull' when he witnessed a sasine for the baronies of Lugton and Langnewton in 1522. James (16th C.) recorded as 'Roull' when he was a tenant of Kelso Abbey in 1567. James (17th/18th C.) herd in Whitslade. In 1698 in Ashkirk Parish he married Janet, daughter of James Jackson, cottar in Dimpleknowe. Their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1699. Janet (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Ellen. Their are documents transferring their lands to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. Her name is given as 'Jonet of Roule'. John (14th C.) recorded as witness to a 'quitclaim by Robert de Colleuyll' to Roger of Alton, regarding revenue of lands for Kelso Abbey, in 1328. His name appears as 'Johne de Roule'. He could be the John whose son William was recorded in 1369. John (15th C.) recorded as a priest in the King's household in 1468. He was also recorded as a Prebyter in the Exchequer Rolls of 1468. Probably the same John (along with George) was witness to charters by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470-78, and was Steward of Alexander, Duke of Albany in 1479. He may be the same 'John Laird of Rule' listed among a set of Scottish ecclesiastics appointed as ambassadors for appeasing the truce on the Border. And in 1476 there is a summons for 'John of Roule' and others for stealing horses from Sir John of Swinton; there is a confirmation of this in 1477. He may also be the 'John Roule' who witnessed a document relating to Home of Crailing in 1479. John (16th C.) witness in 1523/4 to a charter of his sister Margaret for lands in Linlithgowshire. Another witness was James Ramsay, Prebendary of Corstorphine. This establishes a connection with Corstorphine, where the poet 'Gentill Roull of Corstorphine' had his praises sung by William Dunbar a generation earlier. Perhaps the same John was witness to a document of Kirkintilloch Church in 1523. Sir John (16th C.) Prior of Pittenweem before 1526. He was an ally of Cardinal Beaton. He had at least 4 sons, John, James, William and Ninian. John (16th C.) tenant of Newtown in Roxburghire, recorded in 1531. John (16th C.) signatory of the band of Dumfries in 1570. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Elspeth Nichol and their children included: Agnes (b.1671), an unnamed son (b.1671) and Stephen (b.1675), all baptised in Hawick Parish; and Bessie (b.1684) and John (b.1686), baptised in Robertson Parish. The witnesses in 1686 were James Turnbull and James Veitch. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Todshaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who was shepherd at Mervinslaw in 1709. Alexander, son of a shepherd at Mervinslaw (with the father's name blank) was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1706. John (17th C.) listed at Chesters among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlside in 1742 when his daughter Janet was baptised. His children included: John (b.1731); James (b.1739); and Janet (b.1742). John (18th C.) wright in Nether Bonchester. His son John was baptised in 1788. John (19th C.) Inspector of Poor, Collector of Poor Rates and Clerk to the Burial Ground for Hawick Parish towards the end of the 1800s. He wrote the poem 'Song by a Callant Abroad'. He was also President of the Hawick Co-op in 1868, and probably wrote the history published in 1889. It seems likely that the same John Rule was also editor and part owner of the Hawick Express in the late 19th century and who was recorded as 'Editor' at 72 High Street in 1875. His children included Harry (killed at sea in 1917) and Robert. Margaret (b.1801/2) grocer on the Backdamgate. In the 1851 census she was living with her sister Isabella, and was unmarried. She was listed as a shopkeeper on 'Back

Rule

Damgate' in Slater's 1852 directory. Marjory (15th C.) daughter of Andrew (possibly the oldest). She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Primside, Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Isabella, Janet and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. Martin (16th C.) recorded as 'Roule' when he was owner of a tenement in the 'Walkargait' in Jedburgh in 1574. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as Provost of the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas of Dalkeith in 1499. He was also Provost of Dalkeith in 1478 when he witnessed a declaration by his brother George, Bailie for David Ranton of Billy. Another brother, John, was also witness. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as serving in the King's spicery in 1499 and 1500. He was paid his fee according to the Exchequer Rolls, with his surname written 'Roule'. Probably the same 'Pait Roule' was recorded in 1497 when money was sent from the King's Treasury to him, lying sick in Ayr. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of owners of crofts and rigs in Selkirk in about 1529. His name appears as 'Pait of Roull'. James and 'Philes' were also listed. Richard (12th/13th C.) probably son of Henry and Margaret Abernethy. He is recorded being present at the court of King William at Alyth in 1180, where his name is 'Reuel'. He witnessed an Athole charter in the late 1190s. In 1205 he was witness to a charter of William the Lion at Forfar. He also witnessed several gifts of the King to the monastery of Arbroath in the period 1188–1214. Henry, who is a witness at about the same time may have been his son or other close relative. Perhaps the same Richard is recorded in charters during the reign of Alexander II, i.e. 1214–49. This was at the same time as Alan and Thomas of Rule. Adam, brother and heir of Richard, is recorded in 1225. Richard (13th C.) recorded in connection with the lands of Bunkle, Berwickshire, in 1247. Richard (13th C.) witness to a renewal of lands in Mow granted to Melrose Abbey by Richard of Heiton in the period 1269–89; he is listed as 'Ricardo de Rule'. In the period 1270–90 he confirmed a grant of a 20-shilling land in Hownam to Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Roull' when he had remission for wheat 'fermes' in 1496 for the lands of 'Osanisden'. Robert (13th C.) recorded as 'de Ryhull' in about 1240 when along with his wife Christiana, he held half of the lands of North Middleton in Northumberland. Robert (14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1391 as 'a rebel and traitor' when his lands of 'Promset in Tevydalle' (Primside) were forfeited to Thomas 'Sparrowe, late prisoner with the Scots'. Robert (15th C.) Chaplain of the church of St. Nicholas in Aberdeen in 1444. He is recorded as Chaplain there in 1468. Robert (15th C.) recorded in a Berwickshire inquest in 1464. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Rewcastle. In 1502 in Jedburgh he was surety for Andrew Storie, who was also a resident of Rewcastle, when they were fined for non-appearance. Robert (17th C.) Border minstrel who was supposedly slain by William Henderson of Priestthaugh near Allanhaugh in 1627, as immortalised in the ballad 'Rattlin Roarin Willie'. It is possible he was connected with George, who is recorded as a minstrel hired by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in charters between 1214 and 1249. For example he was witness to Petronella, daughter of Adam Herring of Minto, when she granted land in the Borthwick to Melrose Abbey. He may be the same Thomas of Rule recorded on a jury in Northumberland in 1231 and as a witness of a grant to the canons of Kirkham in Northumberland in 1256. Thomas (13th C.) paid homage to Edward I by signing the Ragman Rolls of 1296. Another signatory was Adam of Rule, as well as William 'de Rouley'. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as Rector of Cambuslang (Lanarkshire) in 1329. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as 'Rouk' (possibly just a transcription error) during the reign of David II, 1329–71. He resigned his lands of Butland or Butelend in the Sheriffdom of Edinburgh to James Douglas of Strathbok. He may also have resigned his lands of 'Little-Rulwod'. Possibly the same Thomas 'of Roulwode' forfeited certain lands in the Barony of Cavers in 1335/6. Perhaps the same Thomas witnessed the grant of the Forest of Ettrick to John Ker in 1358 and was juror at Roxburgh in 1361. And he may be the Thomas who was on an English jury in 1367 deciding which lands had been taken from English subjects by Scotsmen. Thomas (14th C.) witness to a court case in Dundee in 1348. He is recorded as 'Ruwell'. Thomas (14th C.) recorded in 1367/8 among deceased men whose lands may have been taken from them because of their support of the English King. Thomas (14th/15th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Aberdeen in 1390, and as a Bailie in the period 1406–35. He was Provost of Aberdeen in 1417. In 1424 he was still recorded as 'of Rowle' when witness to a charter in Aberdeenshire. Thomas (15th C.) eminent ecclesiastic, contemporary with the Provost of Aberdeen of the same name. In 1429 he became a Canon of Glasgow Diocese. In the period 1426–32 he was annually the ambassador to England, designated Chaplain to the King of Scots. In 1429 he was also one of the sub-commissioners appointed to settle conditions for keeping order on the Border. In 1438 he was recorded as Chancellor of Glasgow Diocese. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in a Northumberland record of 1523. Thomas (16th C.) listed among tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Thomas (18th C.) resident in Town-o-Rule in 1788 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Burnfoot in Wilton. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation ‘Subst.’ suggests that someone substituted for him. His name appears again in 1798, with John Goldie, cabinet-maker in Edinburgh, acting as his substitute. The fact that he was ‘Serving by Subst.’ was confirmed on the amended list of 1799. Waldeve (12th C.) witness to a charter of Ranulph de Soulis to Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1100s, recorded as ‘Waldevo de Rula’. His name is also translated as ‘Waltheof’. Walter (14th C.) Precentor of Glasgow Diocese mentioned in the period 1321–33. For example he witnessed the document of 1329 where the Bishop of Glasgow confirmed the founding of a chantry at Roxburgh Church by Roger of Alton. He was surely directly related to other early ‘de Rules’. Walter (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roull’ in 1387 when he was granted a Canonry of Glasgow by Pope Clement VII. He already held a position at the church of Tarbolton. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish son of William, painter in Jedburgh. In 1798 he was listed as substitute for John Claperton in the ballot for the Militia. However, in 1801 was declared as a deserter. Walter (b.1803) carter in Hawick, son of George. In 1861 he was living at 2 Al-lars Crescent with his mother Elizabeth, brother John and sister Elizabeth (widow of Alexander Pringle Scott). William (13th/14th C.) witness to a grant by Adam ‘de Roule’ of lands of Molle to Kelso Abbey about 1300. Another witness was Hugh ‘de Roule’, hence all 3 are likely to have been closely related. He may also be the William ‘de Rouley’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1302 ‘William de Rue’ was King’s Clerk to Edward I at Roxburgh. About 1304 he is mentioned in a charter of donation granted by Robert ‘Wischart’, Bishop of Glasgow. This refers to land

‘of Bromilaw’ bordering his lands. He is probably the William ‘de Rule’ who is recorded (along with Adam) in a charter of Sprouston in 1320/1. It has been suggested by some that he may be the same as the William who became the first Turnbull. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roule’ in 1357/8 when he was witness for the lands of Altonburn passing to John Ker, with William of Gledstones, James of Lorraine and Alexander of Flex being other witnesses. The lands had passed from Adam of Rule in 1354, so this may have been a relative. He also witnessed a further charter of related lands in 1358, passing from William of ‘Blakdene’. In 1361 he was on a panel of inquest in Roxburgh, relating to Makerstoun. In 1369 he was ‘Willelmi de Rowe’, son of John, when he resigned lands in ‘Hunedoun’ to Melrose Abbey. William (15th C.) recorded as witness to charters in Edinburgh in 1465 and 1471. William (b.c.1805) born in Westerkirk, he was a shoemaker living at 5 Round Close in 1841, 1851 and 1861 and still there in 1875. By 1861 he was employing 2 men. His wife was Margaret from Langholm. Their children included Alexander, Hendry, William, John, twins Thomas and Walter, and Mary (spelled ‘Reule’, ‘Reull’, ‘Roul’, ‘Roule’, ‘Roull’, ‘Roulle’, ‘Ruile’, ‘Rowle’, etc. in early records).

the Rule (thu-rool, -rowl) n. popular name for Rule Witter – ‘Between ezlar banks, that frightful scowl, Fring’d with gray hazel, roars the mining Roull . . .’ [JL], ‘On these sweet scenes I love to ponder, And each fair spot in memory see; So dear must be, where’er I wander, The valley of the Rule to me’ [FMC], ‘. . . As he crossed the Rule, girth deep at the ford, A rider rose dark from the haugh and roared With a voice that shivered the still night air And startled the wild fowl, ‘Who goes there?’’ [WHO].

Rule Hervey (rool-her-vee) n. earliest known name for the lands of Abbotrule Parish, first recorded in about 1165 in a charter to Jedburgh Abbey by William the Lion. These lands were granted to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey in exchange for a ‘ten pound’ land in ‘Hardinghestorn’ (Northamptonshire). The name was changed sometime after the parish was granted to Jedburgh Abbey. The origin of the earlier name is unknown, but presumably distinguished it from ‘Rule Bethoc’, i.e. Bedrule (it occurs as ‘Rulam Herevei’ in about 1165).

Rulehaugh (rool-hawch) n. area of flat land near the mouth of the Rule Water, possibly lower down in former times before the course of the rivers altered. In 1279 Alexander III confirmed a grant by John Comyn of Bedrule of the lands of 'Rulehalch' to the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1395 there was a duel there when Sir William Inglis (then of Branhholme) was challenged by Thomas Struthers (an Englishman), with Archibald Douglas and Sir Henry Percy as judges. Struthers was killed in single combat. It is possible this was the same as the Deadhaugh, where Turnbells supplicated to James IV in 1510. About 80 sheep from here were swept away during the flood of 1846 (it is 'Rulehalch' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Rules (thu-roolz) n. once important family whose name was connected with the area of Rulewater. Adam and Thomas 'de Roule' from Roxburghshire signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. They held the lands of Altonburn, Primside, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, all of which were disposed of by 4 co-heiresses around 1440. There were also Rules in Aberdeenshire from early times. It is unclear what fraction of the world's Rules are descended from this local family.

Rule's Land (roolz-lawnd) n. former name for lands in Ruecastle in the Parish of Bedrule. They were feued by Rev. Joseph Tennant of Bedrule from Thomas Hamilton in 1632 (called 'Roullis land').

Rule-Spittal see Spittal-on-Rule

Ruletoon (rool-tin, -toon) n. Ruletown, former name for farms and lands in Hobkirk Parish, at Town-o-Rule. Both Ruletownhead and Ruletownfoot were recorded in the 17th century. In 1694 James Grieve paid tax for 4 hearths there 'for himself & cottars', with William Turnbull also a cottar there.

Ruletoonfit (rool-tin-fi', -toon-) n. Ruletownfoot, former farmstead that was once part of the Abbotrule estate. Its precise location is unclear, but presumably associated with Ruletownhead. It may be the place transcribed as 'Reidetoun fute' where Thomas Turnbull was in 1615. Adam Turnbull and Beatrix Lorraine were there in 1643, each with lands valued at £10. On the 1694 Hearth Tax records, John Lorraine was listed there, with Andrew Mathew and William Blaikie as cottars. Separately Thomas Turnbull and Thomas Scott are listed as tenants there in the Hearth Tax rolls, with James Oliver, James Wilkie and James Turnbull being cottars there, and Adam Sharp 'deficient' in not paying the tax

Ruletoonheid (rool-tin-heed, -toon-) n. Ruletownhead, former farm in Hobkirk Parish, once part of the Abbotrule estate. Adam and Walter Turnbull were tenants there in 1643, when it was valued at £140. It had the same value in 1678. It later became part of the Parish of Hobkirk. In the late 17th century part of it was owned by Helen Turnbull, along with West Fodderlee. In earlier times the farm seems to have been incorporated into West Fodderlee, the Grange and Bowatsyde. In 1788 it was owned by the trustees of George Dickson and valued at £96 11s. George Elliot was there in 1794 and John Walker in 1797, with James Dalgleish being shepherd in the same year. Robert Rutherford was a servant there in 1801. In 1811 it was listed (in 2 parts, split between Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes) along with 'Bossithill' and Burnkinford, among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, having a combined value of about £224 and previously being owned by George Dickson and George Elliot. By about 1874 it was owned by David Henderson, including a part formerly belonging to Walter Turnbull (valued at £96 11s). The tenant was Tom Brown in the mid-to-late 19th century, then passing to the Douglas family. Tom Douglas was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £300. It seems there was once also a corn mill here (also formerly written 'Ruletonhead' and 'Rule-town-head', it was 'Roull tounhead' and 'Roultonhead' in 1678).

Ruletoonheid Mill (rool-tin-heed-mil) n. former corn mill at Ruletownhead. The last miller there was Ralph Prendergast.

Rulewater and its People (rool-wa-tur-and-its-pee-pul) n. book written by George Tancred of Weens, published in 1907. It contains a truly extraordinary number of anecdotes from the general area of the Rule valley, as Tancred systematically described the histories of all the major families of Hobkirk Parish, in addition to much of Bedrule and Southdean. Importantly, the book does not just focus on the histories of the 'gentry', but includes all social strata. A facsimile edition was published by Borders Regional Library in 1992.

Rule Witter (rool-wi'-ur) n. the Rule Water, a tributary of the Teviot, joining it from the south near Spittal-on-Rule. It is formed by the Wauchope, Harwood and Catlee Burns. The region gave rise to a surname, with the first recorded 'Roules' being in the mid-12th century.

Rulewitter Court

A history of the parishes along the Rule valley was written by George Tancred in 1907 and republished in 1992 – ‘Then Tividale came to wi’ spied; The Sheriffe brought the Douglas down, Wi’ Cranstane, Gladstain, good at need, Baith Rewle water, and Hawick town’ [T], ‘All Rule Water, east and west, Bowed to the spell of Turnbull’s name, And among the proud of the Borders best There was none so proud as the Wauchope dame’ [WHO], ‘He’s lang since left Roull’s smilin’ scene, An’ fairy nuiks o’ prattlin’ Jed, An’ Oxnam’s pines an’ banks sae green, An’ wimplin’ Kale’s soft dreamy bed’ [WP] (also sometimes one word ‘Rulewater/Rulewitter’; formerly spelled ‘Roull’, ‘Rowll’, etc.; it is ‘Ruiale’ in about 1406, ‘Watter of Rowle’ in 1530 and ‘Reullwater’ is recorded in the 17th century; the origin may be the old Celtic for ‘steep slope’).

Rulewitter Court (rool-wi’-ur-kōr) n. Rulewater Court, a street planned for Stirches and appearing on Burrow’s street map of Hawick, although never built.

Rulewitter Floor Show (rool-wi’-ur-floor-shō) n. also called the Hobkirk Flower show, this is an annual event. It was started in the mid-19th century by John Halliday and Sandy and James Mathieson.

Rulewitter Rifle Club (rool-wi’-ur-rī-ful-klub) n. Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club, established following a meeting of 1905, called by Mr. Carr-Ellison of Greenriver. Mr. Waldie of Braidhaugh gave a piece of land on his farm for a rifle range. The original membership was 30, with office-bearers being Sir Robert Usher of Wells, George Tancred of Weens, Major E.H.M. Elliot of Wolfelee. It is the last item to be described in Tancred’s book on Rulewater, but it is unclear if the club lasted very long.

Rulewud (rool-wud) n. Rulewood, former farm in the Rule valley, probably once owned by the Rule family. ‘Thomas de Rillewod’, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, may have been owner of these lands. Thomas ‘of Roulwode’ is recorded resigning some lands in the Barony of Cavers in 1335/6. It was later home to a local branch of the Gourlay family. Henry Gourlay granted the lands to his son John in 1380, confirmed in 1390. In 1387 John was served heir to his father Archibald. John Gourlay of Rulewood is recorded in the 1490s and several times until 1509 when William Lord Herries of Terregles granted these lands to him. He was deceased by 1521 when his son John was granted lands at Kirkton, and this John was served heir to the lands in 1525. This John also appears in 1533, when he was on an inquest along with William Turnbull ‘in Roulwod’. The lands were listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers in 1509/10. William Turnbull was tenant in 1516. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. ‘Roulwodesyde’ is recorded in the Baronial dispute of 1562, and is described as being the east part of the lands of Hallrule; the ‘Woulroidisflat’ mentioned there may be related, assuming an error. William Turnbull ‘of the Tour of Roulwode’ is recorded in 1622. It was included in the lands inherited by James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh from his father in 1634. The ‘40 shilling land of Roulwoode parva alias tower’ was passed from John, Lord Cranstoun to his nephew William in 1636. It later became part of the estate of Wells and was described in 1738 as ‘all and haill the land of ‘Roulwood’, otherwise Huntlyhill’ (it was ‘Roulwod’ in 1497/8 and 1509/10, ‘Roullwoide’ in 1508, ‘Rowlewod’ in 1526, ‘Rowlewood’ in 1545 and ‘Roulwode’ in 1622; see also Little Rulewud).

Rulewud (rool-wud) n. (Rulewood) Thomas (13th/14th C.) signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His name is recorded as ‘Thomas de Rillewod’, but it seems likely that ‘Rulewood’ is meant. His name is listed separately from Thomas de Rule, but close in the list to that of Adam of Rule; however, it is unclear whether they were related. Perhaps the same Thomas is mentioned in an English record of 1335/6, in relation to his forfeited tenements of land in the Barony of Cavers. There his name is ‘de Roulwode’ and ‘de Roulewode’.

rum an milk (rum-in-milk) n. traditional Common Riding drink. The Drums and Fifes are given this as a reward after marching round the former tolls on the Friday morning. The origin and history are unclear, but it is said that one of the members of the Drums and Fifes was given (or asked for) milk with his rum to settle his stomach, since he was not feeling well; the drink caught on with the rest of the band, and then with Common Riding supporters in general. There is a reference in reports of the Common Riding of 1890 to ‘a liberal supply of fresh milk and other customary refreshments’ for the Thursday morning ‘Hut’. The traditional rum has for many years been ‘Skipper Rum’. Bella Robson would regularly come out of her house on the Kirkwynd to offer a tray to the band in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

rumberella (rum-bur-e-la) n., arch. an umbrella – ‘Gies the siller, an’ ye’se get yer rumberella’ [WNK]. Note the umbrellas were not used locally until the late 18th century; the first one seen in the Yarrow valley, for example, was in 1779 (perhaps in a joking sense).

Rumblin’ Brig (rum-blin-, rum-lin-brig) n. one of the most familiar tunes played by the Drums and Fifes (along with ‘Dumbarton Drums’ and ‘Teribus’). The tune appears to be peculiar to Hawick, although there are other tunes known elsewhere that have a similar name. The tune is played on Picking Night on the march to the Cornet’s house if the route takes the band to the south. It was combined with ‘Dumbarton Drums’ in the Scocha song ‘Bottles at Dawn’.

rumgumption (rum-gump-shin) n. common sense, gumption – ‘she hedni enough rumgumption ti bide away fri um’, ‘Rumgumption, Rum-milgumption, Rumble-gumption, ... the remark commonly made as regard to one who is viewed as having more sound than sense, ‘He has a gude deal o’ the rumble, but little o’ the gumption’, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also rummlegumption).

Rummie Riddell (ru-mee-ri-dul) n. nickname for a local innkeeper around 1800, presumably someone called Riddell – ‘When Hawick bonnie brig ye cross, An’ up the muirlan’ striddle, Ye canna lang be at a loss, Ca’ in to Rummie Riddell’ [JR] (note this is printed ‘R—e R—l’ in the published version, although it is not hard to fill in the blanks).

rummle (ru-mul) v. to move or search through something clumsily, to rummage – ‘she was rummlin throwe her drawers looking for the scissors’, ‘Burns gush it oot, as red they’re rumlin’, Aiks creak it, crash it, as they’re tumlin’ [JoHa], ‘He rummled ’lang the riverside, Ne’er saw the grey trout scuttling by ...’ [WFC], to rumble – ‘ee’re juist openin yer mooth an lettin yer belly rummle’, ‘Auld Time revolves his rum’lin wheel; There’s a younger race at han’ ...’ [AO], ‘... maist deaved an daivert an donnert wui the rummellin dunner o an eend-on bizz’ [ECS], ‘The Laird’s lauch rummled wi’ muckle glee, But the leddy glowered wi’ an angry ee’ [WL], n. a clumsy search or movement, a rumble – ‘oo heard the rumml o thunner’, ‘Did ee ever hear the rumml o a yoke-a-tuillie doon the Loan skly?’ [ECS], ‘The rummel when ee went throwe a tunnel Ee’d been warned when the train gien a whistle’ [AY], a fidget, one who moves constantly or clumsily – ‘ee’re an awfi rummle, can ee no sit still?’ (also spelled ‘rummel’).

rummlegumption (ru-mul-gum-shin) n., arch. gumption, common sense, disturbance, commotion – ‘I can cure all sorts of diseases, from the howt, rowt, and the gout, to the rumblegumptions of the big toe’ [RM] (also rumgumption).

rump (rump) v., arch. to pull up violently by the roots – ‘Rump oot thae weeds’ [GW] (noted by E.C. Smith).

Rumpie Laidlaw (rum-pee-lād-law) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the late 19th century, presumably for a member of the Laidlaw family – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird’ [HI] (‘Rumpie’ may refer to having one’s hair cut very short).

runagate (ru-nu-gā) n., arch. a renegade, deserter, vagabond – ‘... for injuring of the said Gilbert Watt, in calling of him ane twa facet thief, and ane runnigat beggar fra toune to toune’ [BR1645].

runch (runch) n., arch. a wrench, a spanner, v. to wrench.

runch (runch) n., arch. wild radish, Raphanus raphanistrum, or wild mustard, Sinapis arvensis; the first of these was also ‘yellowunch’ and the second ‘roughunch’ – ‘The Runches, comprising both the Field Mustard and the Joint-podded Charlock, the garlic-tasted Jack-by-the-hedge, and several others come under this category’ [JAHM], ‘I noticed some ‘runch’ (Sinapis arvensis) as a turnip weed here’ [BNC1889].

Runciman (run-see-mun) n. James (17th C.) smith in Raperlaw recorded at on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths there.

His name is written 'Runciaman'. He is probably the James who owned a 'quarter of land' in Nether Ancrum, valued at £13 6s 8d, listed as a former owner in 1788. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as witness to a document for the Routledges of Crook, witnessed in 1529/30 at Cavers Kirk. He must have been a local landowner, tenant or church official. He is an early example of this surname, which is recorded as 'Runseman'. He may have been related to the earlier Patrick. Patrick (15th C.) listed among the 24 Roxburghshire men, mostly associated of William Douglas of Cavers, who had remission in 1488/9 for supporting James III. His surname is recorded as 'Runsyman'. Walter 'Wat' (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as 'Watt Runseman'. Walter (18th C.) recorded as 'Runchiman' in 1686 when he married Janet 'Reedford' in Robertson Parish. Their son Thomas was born in 1687, with witnesses Thomas Robson and Thomas Hardie. Helen (who married John Douglas in Robertson in 1687) and Bessie (who married Thomas Hardie in the same year) were probably his sisters. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Wat (formerly 'Runchiman', 'Runciaman', 'Runseman', 'Runsyman', etc.).

rung (rung) n., arch. a staff, strong stick, cudgel, wheel-spoke – '...much more primitive ... than the sword ... such as ... 'ane rung' [BR], '... by striking her with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there ...' [BR1693], 'We'll smash them, as did oor forbears, Wi' hazel rungs and blackthorn cudgels' [JoHa], 'I took my rung that I had flung Ayont the auld jambstane ...' [WaD], a branch – 'Whenever ye're sent to the country your lane, Come na back like a rung that is sneddit' [JTe].

rung-wheel (rung-wheel) n., arch. the spoked wheel driven by the cog-wheel in a corn mill – 'As there are two wheels in a corn-mill, which work into one another, the one which has cogs drives the other, and is called the cog-wheel, the other, from its having spokes or rungs, is called the rung-wheel, Roxb.' [JoJ].

runkle (rung-kul) n., arch. a wrinkle, crease – 'The description of feeding hungry schoolboys, by 'taking the runksles oot o' their wame', amused him greatly' [JW], v., arch. to wrinkle – 'O the bane o' St Giles, The bane o' St Giles, runt (run) n., poet. the withered stem of a cabbaga or kail plant – 'Poor Habby's kail gat mony a nibble, De'il haet was left but runts an' stibble' [JR], also used figuratively – 'E'en let the runt [Poverty], and a' her train, Gae stamp and rage' [JoHa].

Rushy Hope (ru-shee-hōp) n. small stream that rises on Wether Law and Millstone Edge, forming part of the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn.

ruskie (rus-kee) n., arch. a basket for carrying seed corn, a large straw bonnet worn by countrywomen – 'Ruskie, A coarse straw-hat worn by peasant-girls and others, for defending their faces from the sun, Roxb., Mearns; synon. Bon-grace' [JoJ].

Russell (ru-sul) n. Alexander (1808/9–bef. 1851) from Ancrum, he was a gardener in Wilton. In 1851 he is listed as a gardener on Upper Damside, employing 2 men. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Alexander, Robert and Jane. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living on Wellington Street. Rev. David (1783/4–1868) from Tollcross, he was a schoolteacher, and then was ordained at Colinsburgh Relief Church in Fife in 1811. He moved to Hawick in late 1812 to become the first minister of the new Relief (later Allars) Kirk. His son was the engineer, naval architect and mathematician John Scott Russell. In Hawick he remarried and had more children, and introduced one of the earliest Sunday Schools. Following ongoing dispute over his stipend he resigned in 1819 and later moved to Errol near Perth. He was unable to carry on his duties following some kind of 'mental ailment' in 1847. He seemed able to carry on in about 1849, but the same affliction returned by 1854, and he was 'dead to the world' for many years before his death. A photograph of him exists. Ellie (d.2004) Hawick dressmaker. She worked for dressmakers W. & O. Marcus. It is said that Walter Marcus referred to her as 'Alice', since there were already too many Ellas working in the factory! After Marcus' closed in 1964, she set up her own business at Loch Park, operating as 'Alison Russell', this running for about 20 years. In 1986 she married Heinz Melchert, whom she had met in his early days in Hawick, having settled after being a German prisoner of war. Frances, Countess Russell, see Frances Elliot. Francis (1814–95) son of Dr. James (Professor of Clinical Surgery at Edinburgh University) and Eleanor Oliver (daughter of William Oliver of Dinlabyre). He trained as a lawyer, was called to the bar in 1836 and in 1860 became Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire, serving until 1885. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and lived at Jedbank until retiring back to Edinburgh. He married twice. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Fulton. In 1502 Matthew and Martin Oliver in Strange were allowed to compeone for stealing 4 lambs and an ox from him. George (1903/4–67) born in Hawick, he was educated at Wilton and was an apprentice gardener at Wood's Nursery. He worked as a gardener at Langlee. During WWII he served as a constable with the Hawick Police. After the War he worked for Lyle & Scott's. He was an enthusiastic member of Lodge 111 and was also made an honorary life member of Lodge 424. He ran with the Teviendale Harriers and was also a keen motorist in later years. He was a member of the Archæological Society and interested in the history of Hawick. He married Elizabeth ('Lizzie'), daughter of Francis Scott and sister of local historian Dick Scott. They had one child, Isabella ('Isla') who was a police officer in Liverpool. The family lived at 8 Oliver Crescent. He died after collapsing of a heart attack at his niece's wedding in Hawick. Isabella Edmondson 'Isla' (1934–2021) only surviving child of gardener George, who served in the Hawick Police during WWII. Her mother was Lizzie Scott, sister of local historian Dick Scott. The family lived at 5 Trevelyan Terrace and then 8 Oliver Crescent and she was educated at the Buccleuch School and Hawick High. After school she worked for Marcus, dressmakers on Commercial Road, along with her cousin Ella Russell. At the age of 20 she responded to a recruitment campaign by Liverpool City Police and left Hawick to begin an entirely new career. She joined at a time when female police officers were rare, but she managed to thrive in this male-dominated environment, her height and calm demeanour probably being strong assets. She was one of the first women in the country to be posted into a traffic department and rose through the ranks of what became the Merseyside Police, becoming one of the first women acting as Sergeant and later Inspector in charge of a largely male department. She eventually reached the rank of Chief Inspector, first in the Traffic Department and then the Warrant Department, this probably being the highest rank achieved by a woman in any force in Britain at that time. After 30 years of tireless service, she took early retirement in 1985. She was involved with the Soroptimists voluntary organisation, which works internationally to ensure that the voices of women and girls are heard. Along with her doubles partner, Marie Lupton, Isla took part in table-tennis tournaments, winning the national competition for police officers on several occasions. In Liverpool, Isla called her house 'Haaick', and it also became home to her mother after the untimely death of her father in 1967. She later moved to Tarleton (near Preston) and then back to her native Hawick in 2014. Always retaining close ties with Hawick, she was a member of the Archaeological Society for more than 50 years. Rev. James (b.1808) son of Robert and Agnes Turnbull, who was from Hawick. He attended school at Yarrow, under the instruction of James Scott. He was minister at Yarrow and wrote 'Reminiscences of Yarrow' (1886), which contains anecdotes about many local people of the late 18th and early 19th centuries. He had a cousin, Robert Laidlaw from Philiphaugh. He married Janet Margaret Shand. His children included Robert and John Harvey Shand (1861–84). James 'Jimmy' (1867–1956) son of artist John Bucknell. His mother died of smallpox in Edinburgh and the family moved to Fochabers, Morayshire. His great delights were fishing and poaching. He learned painting in his father's studio. He moved to Glasgow, painting commissions of fish and countryside scenes. In 1918 he and his wife moved to Bonchester Bridge, where they lived above the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. Later they moved to Weens Cottages ('the Sclenty') and lastly lived in Denholm. In Rulewater he acted as telegraph boy until he was about 80. He continued to paint almost up until his death. His paintings were signed 'J.B. Russell', distinguishing them from those of his father. From a Catholic family, he married Protestant Annie Hendry, keeping the marriage secret for years. They had children: Peggy (b.1900); Hendry Smith (1906–88); and William Hendry (1915–41), also known as Dovish, who died in Greece in WWII. He painted the caricature of the 'Rulewater Foothunters' in the Horse and Hounds. His painting of Wilton Lodge gatehouse is in the Museum, as well as another of a bridge. James 'Jimmy' (d.1939) from Peebles, he was a motor engineer, graduating from Heriot-Watt. He worked with Croall Bryson in Hawick and was a great friend of Jimmy Guthrie, who was godfather to one of his children. He built a model car for his daughter and reconstructed a crashed biplane, which he flew on trips to Europe. He married Edith, daughter of Hawick poet Tom Ker. Their children were: Margaret; and Jocelyn (or 'Jocey'). He lost money in the Wall Street Crash and moved to Leeds, where he was buried. James Lyon 'Jimmy' (1935–) son of Hendry Smith and Isabella Lyon, and grandson of the artist James, he is a social scientist born in Wilton. He lived in Denholm and Rulewater until 1960, later splitting his time between Rulewater and Ireland. He graduated M.A. from St. Andrews and Ph.D. from Strathclyde and worked at the University of Ulster, specialising in issues related to children. He carried out survey research for several government agencies and other organisations, particularly in Northern Ireland. After retirement he carried out personalised funerals for people without church connections in the Edinburgh area. He wrote the words and music for the song 'The Burn 'at Rins Throu' Binsters'. He also wrote an article on 'The Rulewater Foothunters' for the Scots Magazine in 1987. In 1960 he married Heather Begg and had children Fiona Jane, Roisin Anne and Kevin. John (16th C.) farmer at Over Billerwell. His barn is mentioned in 1562 as part of the dispute over lands in the Barony of feu-Rule. John (18th C.) married Isabel Lillico in Kirkton in 1748. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Heap in 1772. In 1760 in Ashkirk Parish he married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') daughter of George Thorburn; she was sister of Jean Thorburn, who married John Anderson, farmer at Newton. Their children included: Helen (b.1761); Elizabeth (b.1764); John (b.1766); Thomas (b.1768); George (b.1771); Betty (b.1772); and possibly Isabella. The witnesses in 1772 were James Dryden and James Scott. Lord John (1792–1878) M.P. from 1813, he was a supporter of extending the franchise and granting religious equality, being one of the drafters of the Reform Bill. He served as Home Secretary, Secretary for War and the Colonies, and Leader of the House of Commons, before becoming Prime Minister in 1846–52 and again briefly in 1865–66. He was also made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick during a stay at Minto House in 1840. In 1841 he married the 2nd Earl of Minto's daughter, Lady Francis Anna Maria. John Scott (1808–82) born in Parkhead, son of Rev. David, his mother (a Scott) dying at an early age. His father became minister of the Hawick Relief Kirk in 1812, where he remarried, and remained until 1819; thus the family must have spent more than 6 years in Hawick. The young John went on to become a naval engineer and architect. He is remembered as the discoverer of the 'solitary wave', the full significance of which was not explained and generalised until the 1960s; it gave rise to the mathematical concept of the 'soliton', which has diverse applications, such as in optics. Rev. Robert (1766–1847) born in Fife, one of a family of 11, he attended Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities. He taught at a school briefly and was a private tutor for the Napiers at Merchiston Hall, near Falkirk. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Linlithgow in 1788 and ordained as minister of Ettrick in early 1790. He was a regular visitor at Wilton Lodge, which his patron Lord Napier purchased; the room he used there was known as 'the prophet's chamber'. He moved to Yarrow in 1791, succeeding Dr. Cramond and remained there until he died. In 1805 he became Chaplain to the Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly and obtained a D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1811. Rev. Campbell of Lilliesleaf referred to him (somewhat facetiously) as 'the beauty of holiness'. He married Agnes Turnbull, who was from Hawick; she died in 1843. His son James succeeded him as minister of Yarrow and wrote 'Reminiscences of Yarrow' (1886). He also had another son Walter and a daughter who predeceased him. He was rarely ill, never spending a whole day in bed in his life, and not requiring a doctor until 3 days before his death. When he died he was 'father of the Synod'. Robert (19th C.) tinsmith at 4 Bourtree Bank. He married Janet, daughter of jailor Michael Anderson. Their children were James A. (a plumber), Robert (an ironmonger) and George (a plumber, who emigrated to America). Rev. Thomas (1830/31–80) from Bucklyvie, son of John, who was the minister there. He became the 6th minister of Allars Kirk in 1857. He was recorded in 1861 as 'Minister of Crosswynd United Presbyterian Church', living with his wife Anne W. and children Euphemia M., John W. and William J., along with 2 servants. He moved to Albion Chapel, London in 1863, then to Forest Hill, Sydenham in 1870, although he was only there 2 years. In 1872 he ceased to be recognised as a minister of the U.P.

Church. Rev. William Cuthberstson (1839–90) born in Coupar, Angus, son of schoolmaster John. He was educated in Edinburgh New College 1864–68, where he trained for the Free Church ministry. He was based at Lauder before being ordained as 3rd minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1872. In 1878 he married Janet Calvert, daughter of George Scott (who was visiting her aunt and uncle in Lauder), postmaster at Mimico, Canada. They had 2 children: William Cuthbertson (1880–1941), born in Hobkirk, who trained as an engineer, joined the K.O.S.B. and died in Lasswade; and Janet (b.1881), born in Hobkirk. He came down with Bright's disease and moved to Musselburgh for a change, but died after a few months there. Rev. Winning (19th/20th C.) appointed as assistant to Rev. David Hislop at Hawick Evangelical Union Kirk in 1894. Soon afterwards the church united with the Congregational Union. It is unclear exactly how long he remained in Hawick (formerly 'Russel').

The Rustic Bard (thu-rus-tik-bawrd) n. pseudonym sometimes used by John Halliday. He is best known for writing the words 'Bonnie Teviotdale'. His early poetic efforts are collected in 'The rustic bard, or, A voice from the people: being miscellaneous poems and songs' (1847), published when he was living at Longbault. The book contains 351 pages and no fewer than 97 poems; ; however, it does not include 'Bonnie Teviotdale'. The dedication is 'to the working classes of Scotland', with Halliday writing that he wanted to avoid the fashion of being sycophantic to a wealthy patron. In the preface he complains about those who criticised him for publishing his verses, singling out someone who was 'a schoolmaster, likewise a poet', presumably James Telfer. Included are: a long introductory poem 'The Vision'; a vicious polemic 'My Real Thoughts', in which he attacks his critics in colourful phrases; a poem in praise of Henry Scott Riddell; verses about the historical curiosities collection of Andrew Jameson; a short poem thanking William Oliver of Hallrule for support; a poem to the recently married 'W—m B—k' (perhaps William Black); a long 'Address to Fortune'; an address to his empty purse, dedicated to W.J. Oliver (probably Walter James, tenant farmer at Soutfield); 'Davie's Dead' (whose subject appears to be a piper); a poem about the severe storms of 1845; a long one about a hiring fair; one against sectarianism; one about the bonfire lit for the health of James [actually Robert] Elliot of Harwood; verses to be read at the annual celebration for the Ancient Order of Foresters; an 'Epitaph on Mr J—s G—e [perhaps James Grieve]; a poem about a dance at Raesknowe; many poems related to beauty and love; a short toast; and several songs about Teviotdale.

Ruth (rooth) n. Henry (15th C.) resident of Longnewton, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He had remission for the slaughter of Thomas Gibson, with his surety being George Rutherford of Longnewton.

Rutheid (ru'-heed) n. Ruthead, pass at the head of Ruthead Sike, which flows into Lairhope Burn to the west of Lairhope in the upper Teviot valley. The pass here reaches a height of 352 m, and was formerly on the old road from Lairhope to Howpasley, linking the upper Teviot and Borthwick valleys.

Rutherford (ru-thur-furd) n. village and former station on the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway. There was formerly a hospital here, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, for the protection of travellers. It was referred to at least as early as c.1380, but was destroyed in 1545. There are also ruins of the old British fort called Ringley Hall. The area was a small parish in ancient times, later absorbed into Maxton. The land is intimately connected with the Rutherfords of that Ilk. It passed to the Stuarts of Traquair in the early 17th century, then the Scotts of Thirlestane and later to the Don and Antrobus families (also written 'Rothurford', 'Rutherford' and many variants; the origin of the name is probably Old English for 'cattle ford' and it first appears in about 1165; an alternative is the Flemish for a 'knight's river crossing'; less likely, but more romantic, are tales involving King Ruthur fording a river, and related stories; there is a more recent Rutherford in Linton Parish, Peeblesshire).

Rutherford (ru-thur-furd, -ford) n. Adam of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1501 in relation to lands of 'Glenisland' in Roxburghshire for which he had a sasine. His name is given in the Exchequer Rolls as 'Afe Rutherford de eisdem', but it is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords of that Ilk. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of George of Longnewton. In 1498 he was listed (along with his brother Gilbert, a cousin George and his 'brother's son' David) among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. He was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him, Thomas Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. In 1510 he had letters of rehabilitation for his crimes after spending months in Edinburgh Castle. Adam (15th/16th C.) farmer of the lands of 'Hirdmanstoune', probably the same as 'Hermiston' in Lillieasleaf Parish. In 1502 David Scott, called 'Lady', 'in Stirkschawis', had a remission for leading the 'Robsonis, Doddis, and Charlis, Englishmen' in a raid on his lands. This included stealing 5 horses and burning corn and houses there. He may be the Adam whose son James was killed at the Kirk of Hawick around 1502. Adam (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh who was appointed one of the temporary Sheriffs of Roxburgh in 1545 in order to officiate over the inheritance of James, son of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Bonchesterside. In 1684 he was among those proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. Adam of Kidheugh (16th/17th C.) grandson of William and Kidheugh and probably son of Robert. In 1621 and his son John had a charter of Nether Crailing. In 1656 he gave a charter of lands in Bedrule to Thomas Rutherford of Whitehouse in Nisbet. He married Isobel, daughter of Ragwell Bennet of Chesters. Andrew of Kidheugh was probably his son. Adam (18th C.) married Jean Scott in Wilton Parish in 1748. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Riddell in Wilton Parish in 1750. Adam (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Shortreed in Southdean Parish in 1820. Adam (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Isabella Darling and their children included Adam (b.1837). Alexander (18th C.) recorded in 1732 being paid for cloth for the Burgh Officers and drummers clothes. He may have been a local tailor. Alexander (b.1820) youngest son of Bonchester joiner James and Isabella Thomson. He followed his father into the joinery business. However, he became paralysed in the middle of his life, had to be maintained by Hobkirk Parish and died in Hawick Poorhouse. His brother William (who had emigrated to Australia) sent money back to cover the expenses for his maintenance. Alexander (19th C.) married Clementina Cameron in Ashkirk Parish in 1848. Alexander (b.1830/1) tailor in Hawick. He was living on Mather's Close in 1861, along with his brother Andrew. He married Anne Jane 'Seright' (from Ireland) in Hawick in 1852. Their children included Alexander (b.1855/6), Mary Jane (b.1857/8); and Jemima (b.1859/60). Alison (1712–94) daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee, Selkirkshire. In 1731 she married Patrick Cockburn of Ormiston, and thereafter was referred to as Mrs. Cockburn. She was a leading society figure in Edinburgh, and wrote a version of 'The Flowers of the Forest'. Andrew of Hunthill (c.1430–c.82) son of John. He had a charter for Nether Wornatston in Peeblesshire in 1452. He is probably the 'Andro of Rutherford' who was on the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English. In 1479 he had a sasine for Makerstoun and Grubet. He married Janet Rutherford of that Ilk. Their children included: John, who succeeded; Thomas of the Grange; and Andrew of Swin-side, who died at Flodden, and whose daughter Margaret married her cousin (once removed) Sir Nicholas of Hundalee. There may be confusion between Andrew of Hunthill and Andrew of Hundalee. Andrew of Chatto and Hunthill (d.1529) son of George of Hunthill. He was the 3rd husband of Helen Rutherford, heiress of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston. From her he inherited several lands, including the 'half merk land of Bethiroull' (i.e. Bedrule), which they sold to Andrew Ker of Ferniehirst. He may be the Andrew who had sasine for the lands of Swin-side in 1506. In 1529 he had a charter for Capehope and other lands, along with his wife Helen. He died without issue and his brother John succeeded to Hunthill in late 1529. Andrew 'Dand' of Grange (16th C.) tenant in the Grange, in Abbotrule Parish. He may have been related to the slightly later George of the Grange. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant of half the lands of Hyndlee in Jedforest; his name appears there as 'Andree Ruthirfurde in Grange'. In 1581/2 his daughter Joanna received sasine of half of the lands of Todrig 'in full settlement of her terce, conjunct fee or liferent' from Walter Scott of Todrig; William of Abbotrule was a witness and hence probably related. He could be the 'David' of the Grange recorded in about 1590 among landed men of the Borders. Andrew of Hundalee (c.1530–96) son of Sir Nicholas. His older brother George died a rebel. He was 'youngar of Hundoley' in 1567 when ordered to remain in ward in Edinburgh; at the same time he and Robert Fraser of Overton were sureties for entering a servant of Fraser's. He was also surety for Dand Davidson of Birnyrig. Along with his father and many other prominent Borderers, he signed a bond in 1571/2 to act against thieves. He was 'youngar of Hundoley' in 1572/3 when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Richard of Edgerston as his surety (and apparently vice versa); he himself was surety for George of the Grange, as well as 'Jock of the Knowe' He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1574 he and several other Rutherfords had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He signed an agreement with other Rutherfords and Turnbells in about 1578 (perhaps earlier), annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1586 he was instructed to enter in court David Middlemas 'in Grubethauch'. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1592 the cautioner for him and his son Nicholas was James Douglas, Comendator of Melrose, that they would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle of Smailholm in 1561. Their children included: John; Nicholas, who succeeded; and Andrew. However, it is stated in some family histories that he had no sons, and was succeeded by his brother Nicholas. It is also (or alternatively) claimed that he married Christian, daughter of Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun and they had no issue, so Hundalee was eventually inherited by his sister Marie, who married Sir James Kerr of Crailing, who became Lord Jedburgh. Andrew 'Dandie' (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Brown and their children included Thomas and Jean (b.1644). Perhaps the same Andrew is recorded in 1652 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Brown. Andrew of Townhead (d.1674) stabbed James Douglas (brother of Sir William of Cavers) while on their way to Jedburgh after dining together at Swan-side. He subsequently tried to flee abroad, but was caught at Tynemouth when trying to escape to sea and returned to Edinburgh for trial. He tried to pin the blame on Robert Scott of Horsleyhill, who was one of the witnesses. He was found guilty and beheaded at Edinburgh Cross. He must have been related to other Rutherfords of Townhead and of the Hall. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick Town Clerk from 1670 until about 1673. Nothing else seems to be known about him. He was notary for the document drawn up (probably in 1672) for the Commission by the Town Council to discuss an equal division of the Common with the Earl of Queensberry. He was also listed as notary when he witnessed a baptism for John Chalmers in Hawick in 1673. A man of the same name is recorded as schoolmaster in Ancrum in 1643 (but there is no obvious connection). Andrew (d.1664) 5th and youngest son of William of Wrightsland and Quarryholes, with his 3rd wife Isabel Stewart of Traquair. His father was eldest son of William, a ship's captain in Leith, who was grandson of Archibald Rutherford, Canon of Jedburgh and descended from the Laird of Hunthill. He had a successful military career in the French service, where he became a Lieutenant General. He had 4 brothers, one of whom was a treasurer to the King of Spain. Coming to England after the restoration of Charles II, he was recommended by the King of France. He was created the 1st Lord Rutherford in 1661 and served as Governor of Dunkirk. In 1663 he was created the 1st and only Earl of Teviot. In that year there was an inventory made of his possessions (amounting to almost £200,000 Scots, as well as a will and 2 other deeds. He was mentioned several times in the diaries of Samuel Pepys. He died in Tangiers after being sent there to be Governor by Charles II. Having no issue, he had named Sir Thomas of Hunthill as his heir. Andrew of Edgerston (1646/7–1718) 2nd son of John. He succeeded to Edgerston in 1686, his elder brother John having already died. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths at his house at Edgerston. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He is probably the Laird of Edgerston who appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He died unmarried and the estates were inherited by his younger brother Thomas. He contributed a legacy to 'poor lame soldiers' and another to the University of Edinburgh. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded 'in Rule' in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner in Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. Andrew (17th C.) listed at Swinnie among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th C.) married Margaret Herbertson in Bedrule Parish in 1738. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Andrew married Mary Davidson and had children Mary (b.1776) and William (b.1778). Andrew (18th/19th C.) portioner in Lilliesleaf. His son Andrew junior was on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as son of Andrew, portioner in Lilliesleaf in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included James Hall (b.1816). Perhaps the same Andrew in Hobkirk married both Mary Brown in 1810 and Marion Hatcher in 1814. Andrew (b.c.1815) labourer at Orchard in 1841. He was living there with George and Isobel, who were probably his younger siblings. Andrew (19th C.) married Isabella Latimer in Hawick Parish in 1839. Andrew (19th C.) farmer at Barnhills in the 1860s. Ann (18th C.) chambermaid at Midshiels in 1791, when she was working for Archibald Douglas. Archibald (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrule had remission for several crimes, including his slaughter. Perhaps the same Archibald is also mentioned when John Davidson in Minto was allowed to 'compane' for stealing 10 ewes from him. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Rutherfords. Archibald (d.1685) 4th son of John of Hunthill. He was 'younger' in a deed of 1663. In 1670 he succeeded his brother Thomas in the lands and barony of Scraesburgh, otherwise known as Hunthill, as well as Newlands and Linton in Peeblesshire. He was recorded as owner of Hunthill, Scraesburgh and Groundhousenook in 1678, valued at £1200. In 1680 he succeeded his brother Thomas as the 3rd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament as a peer. He died abroad, without issue, and was succeeded by his brother Robert. He was the basis for the Master of Ravenswood in Sir Walter Scott's 'Bride of Lammermuir', the bride being based on his betrothed, Janet Dalrymple. His testament was registered with the Commissariat of Peebles in 1691. Archibald (18th/19th C.) married Mary Webb in Cavers Parish in 1809. Bertie (17th C.) recording being 'of the Wood' in 1643 when his lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £20. It is unclear where this was. Caleb (1765–c.1831) son of Robert and Mary Simpson. He was apprenticed as a shoemaker, but gave up the trade to become Burgh Officer. He worked as the town crier and drummer as well as sheriff's officer. He would also call public auctions etc. in the time before there were newspapers in Hawick. He roused the town with his drum during the False Alarm of 1804. He also acted as crier of races and games at the Common Riding, and was one of the Halberdiers. In addition he was annually the toastmaster at the King's Ranting, and was paid extra for singing. He was well known as a trickster and wag, and for avoiding steady work at all costs. He used to repeat things like the Burgess Roll, adding amusing comments of his own. Due to such idiosyncrasies, he frequently came to grief for breach of Bailie's orders. His wife was referred to as 'Jean Caleb', and with her and 'the Noted Beattie' they used to perform shows around the south of Scotland and northern England. One incident is related of him claiming to exhibit 'a horse's head where it's tail should have been' at Kelso Fair. After being dismissed for being drunk one Common Riding he is supposed to have said 'There's ye're drum; ye'll carrie't hame for me. Ye'll sune get another drummer, but ye'll never get another Caleb.' He is surely the 'Calib Rutherford, shoemaker' on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784 (even although he would have been quite young at the time). He lived to a ripe old age, and his drum is in the Museum. He appears in a cameo role in 'The Gutterbludes' – 'Rob Rodger, he ca's up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum' [RM], '... Or Caleb rise to beat the drum, And I cry out 'They come, they come!'' [AD]. Charles (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for wright James Glendinning in 1766. He married Janet Richardson in 1760 and their children included John (b.1761), William (b.1763), Margaret (b.1766) and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1761 were shoemaker Thomas Burnet and John Richardson (probably related to his wife). His son Charles died in Hawick in 1782. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Crailing Parish. In 1788 in Cavers Parish he married Betty Little. Charles Faa Blyth (1824/5–1902) son of Esther Faa Blyth, who was the last Queen of the Gypsies. Born at Kirk yetholm, he spent 58 years of his life in England, but returned in 1898 to claim the gypsy crown. This was said to be to 'boost the tourist trade', the coronation being a pageanti attended by thousands. He was visited in his palace by the Hawick Archaeological Society field trip in 1901. He died less than a year later, while sitting in his chair. Charles Dickson (1825/6–95) son of Robert and Jane Crawford. In 1841 he was an apprentice grocer living on the Sandbed. On the 1861 he was visiting his brother Walter at Mabonlaw. He went to Edinburgh as a young man and is said to have broken his leg when he kicked out at a rat, but hit something solid instead; he was attended to in his recovery by Christina Smart who he subsequently married. The couple had 6 children. He worked as a commercial traveller and lived at 21 Montague Street in Edinburgh, dying on Chalmers Street. Christina (1702–82) daughter of Thomas of Knowesouth. She may have inherited the family estate from her father, but this is unclear, since her brother John was also Laird. She married Gilbert Ainslie in Bedrule in 1724. Their eldest son was Thomas. David (17th C.) recorded ‘in Gramis’ in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. The lands were valued at £10, but it is unclear where this was (although ‘Grange’ is possible if this was an error). David (17th C.) mason listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is listed as a resident of the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the David who married Marion Douglas and whose children included: Margaret (b.1682); John (b.1685); Adam (b.1688); and Marion (b.1688). The witnesses in 1685 were John Scott in Ormiston and ‘Mr’ John Purdom. David (19th/20th C.) started sheep sales in Selkirk. In 1883 he and James Scott acquired Loch Park when Andrew Oliver & Son moved to Weensland Road. They continued sales there until the early 1900s. Elizabeth see Elizabeth Scott. Euphan (17th C.) servant of Francis Scott, former minister of Hassendean. She is recorded in 1693 when Robert Scott was fined in Hawick for striking her ‘with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there’. Francis (1770s–bef. 1841) watchmaker of the High Street. He was recorded as a clock-maker in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia and still on the list in 1801. He was one of the first members of the Curling Club. He is recorded as a watch and clockmaker on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Alison Henderson in 1794 and their children were: Francis Elliot; Agnes (b.1796); and William, who carried on the jewellery business. An unnamed child of his died in 1811. His wife was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. Francis ‘Frank’ (b.c.1795) textile worker in Hawick. He was a woollen stocking dresser in 1841 and a wool hosiery warehouseman in 1861. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living on the Round Close. His wife was Jessie and their children included Thomas, Jessie and Jean. Francis (b.1830/1) railway labourer from England. In 1861 he was living at Dawston Burn Huts with his wife Mary, children John and Alice J., and 6 other labourers. Francis E. ‘Frank’ (b.1843/4) son of clock-maker William. He served as clock-keeper in Hawick from 1869. Sir George of Chatto (c.1380–c.1428) probably son of Robert of Rutherford and nephew of James of that Ilk. He was squire of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. He was probably a survivor of the Battle of Verneuil in 1424. He married Janet Rutherford, possibly of Edgerston; she was related to the Lorraines who held the lands of Hummelknowes near Hawick and in 1428/9 was described as his ‘wyfe quhylem’ (probably former wife). He is probably the ‘Georgio de Rutherford’ as witness to a charter for Home of Wedderburn about 1413 and witness to a charter for Michael Ramsay at Lochmaben in 1414. He had a charter of confirmation for Chatto in 1429, but appears to have died shortly afterwards. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Other children were: Adam, Prior of the Anchorites in Ancrum; George of Langnewton; Walter of Redheugh; Katherine, who married William Cockburn of Henderland; and Helen, who married Sir Thomas Borthwick of Colylaw and Bourhouse. George of Ettles Cleuch (15th C.) son of Robert of Chatto. He was a member of the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492, when he is listed as ‘Georgium Ruthirfurde de Edilisluch’. 1495 there was a ‘retour or inquest’ at Jedburgh, finding that he was heir to his father in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, ‘Eddillisluch’ and Hangingshaw, as well as the west half of Scraesburgh and the lands of Hunthill. He also had a sasine for the same lands. George of Hunthill (d.c.1496) son of Robert and Margaret Glendinning. He could not have been Laird for very long. His wife’s name may have been Mariotta. He was succeeded by his son William. George of Longnewton (d.c.1499) 3rd son of George of Chatto. He was witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains in 1483 and left his seal on a document relating to Synton in 1494. In 1493 he was surety for Henry Rauch in Longnewton (who had remission for the murder of Thomas Gibbinson), as well as for Patrick and Arthur Crawford in Longnewton Mill. He was Sheriff of Selkirk in 1494 when Alexander, Lord Erskine succeeded to his father’s lands of Synton and hereditary Sheriffship of Selkirkshire. In 1494/5 he was surety for Henry Ruth in Longnewton. Also in 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was allowed to compone for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows and 100 sheep from him at ‘Camys’, as well as 40 sheep from him at Sandystanes. In 1497 he gave a charter ‘from his place of Sandystanys’ to his grandson Walter. In the same year he was mentioned in an inquest relating to the boundaries of Melrose Abbey lands. He married Catherine Lyle. His sons Adam and Gilbert were recorded in 1498. He may already have been dead when the 'Dominus de langnewtoun' (no forename given) was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. A case at the 1502 Justice-aire at Jedburgh related how 120 of his sheep had been stolen from 'Sandystanis' by the Laird of Minto and 'resett' by Adam Scott 'in Hawchesteris' (probably Highchesters). Another case in 1502 involved Peter Turnbull in Bonchester, who was in a group who burned 120 bolls of barley and 60 bolls of wheat belonging to him, as well as stealing 25 oxen, 44 cows and 60 sheep from him, and burning 11 horses, and other goods of his at Barnhills. Peter Turnbull was also involved in burning 26 bolls of barley and 40 bolls of oats at 'Sandystanis', with the help of John Turnbull of Minto and others. One more case in 1502 recorded how Adam Grahamslaw had stolen 41 sheep and 8 threaves of barley from him. In 1510 his son Adam had letters of rehabilitation for his crimes after spending months in Edinburgh Castle. George of Hunthill (15th/16th C.) son of William. In 1500 there was a dispensation from the Archbishop of Glasgow, allowing him to marry Elizabeth Turnbull, although they were related in the third and fourth degrees of consanguinity. In 1507 there was a 'retour of inquest', finding that he was heir of his father William of Hunthill, in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, Ettles Cleuch and Hangingshaw. In 1508 he was on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1510 he confirmed a charter of Scraesburgh for Ninian Glendinning. In 1516 he, along with Thomas of that Ilk and John of Hundalee had a bond of manrent with Alexander, Lord Home. In 1520/1 he had a charter for a 4 merkland in Scraesburgh. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded, and married Helen, daughter of Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk; John 'Cock' of Hunthill, who married Christine Pringle and succeeded his brother Andrew; William, who married Christian Armstrong; and Archibald, who was Canon of Jedburgh and married a Douglas of Bonjedward. George of Hundalee (c.1470–c.1545) son of John, whom he succeeded. He was 'junior Laird of Hundalee' in 1502 when serving as surety for Lawrence in 'quhitmeir'. He was a Bailie for Sir William Colville of Ochiltree in 1504. In 1508 he was part (along with his father) of the panel of retour for Adam Hepburn. He was one of the major Border Barons who signed a bond in 1525 to help the Earl of Angus, the Warden. In 1526 he was listed among the many Borderers in a remission for attacking the Earl of Arran; his sons Nicholas and Andrew were also listed. He had a charter for Hundalee in 1528. In 1538 he was charged with assisting 'George Ruthirfurd, called Cokburne, John Ruthirfurde, called Jock of ye Green, and other rebels at the Kingis horn', In 1539 he had a charter for Ashtrees. In 1542 he resigned his lands into the hands of James V, in favour of his son Nicholas; this included Hundalee, Ashtrees, Grubet, Kirk Yetholm, Town Yetholm, Cherrytrees, Makerstoun, Ruecastle and Lanton. In 1544 he signed a bond to serve Henry VIII during the 'Rough Wooing', but in the following year the English burned Hundalee anyway. He was succeeded by Sir Nicholas, his son. He also had a daughter who married Adam Grahamslaw of Newton. George 'Cockbank' (16th C.) said to be a 'great riever, thief and manslayer'. He was on a 1540 list of Scottish rebels 'reset' within England who the Wardens wanted captured. He is there 'Geo. Rutherford called Cok Bankes' and listed along with his brother 'Hobbe' and a son with unknown first name, as well as other Rutherfords. He is probably the 'George Ruthirfurde, called Cokburne' listed along with John 'called Jock of ye Green' and other rebels who Ker of Cessford, Douglas of Cavers, Rutherford of Hundalee and Ker of Dolphinstone were accused of assisting in 1538. About the same time he was captured and held in Carlisle Castle with his son Thomas and Tom Bell, probably so they could be exchanged for the Englishman Dr. Hillyard. In 1540 James V refused to exchange him for the churchman, but offered to swap him for any English lawbreaker; his fate is not recorded. He was probably related to 'Robin' and 'Gawen', who are also listed in 1540. He is probably the George recorded along with Thomas Turnbull in 1541, when they were accused of having been on a raid into England with 100 other Scotsmen in which John Routledge and Robert Noble were killed. George of Longnewton (16th C.) listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers. He is also recorded in 1560 on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was son of William, who was murdered earlier by Robert Ker of Newhall. He signed the bond 'at the pen led by the notar', suggesting that he could not write himself. He was a juror on a retour in 1600. He may be the same man as George of Fairnington. George of the Grange (16th C.) signed a bond with John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557, along with Thomas Turnbull of Hartshaugh, Adam Turnbull of Woollee and Adam Turnbull of Billerwell. He was also part of the bond in same year among Turnbolls, Elliots and others to bring in William Nixon ('Clement's Will'). In 1560 he signed the bond ('at the pen led by the notar') to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1569 he was 'George Ruthirfurd in the Grange' when a set of Homes, Rutherfords and Kers were caution for him to remain in ward in Forfar. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown, allowed with several other Borderers, with Andrew, younger of Hundalee, as surety. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators appointed for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. George of Fairnington (16th C.) probably son of William of Longnewton. He is listed as 'George Ruthirfurde of Pharnyngtoun' when he witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and the Kers, signed in Melrose. In 1580/1 he witnessed a list of the feuars of Newton (near Melrose), made at Selkirk. In about 1590 he was listed among landed men of the Borders. Also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1601 he was among a group of Rutherfords who were accused of firing weapons towards the Youngs at a horserace. In 1602 he signed a bond of peace among Border lairds (with his hand 'at the pen'). He was probably ancestor of the later George of Fairnington. He may have married Margaret Cranston and had 5 sons. George (16th C.) recorded in Bewlie in 1580 when he had a marriage contract with Isabel, daughter of George Riddell in Lilliesleaf. The contract included conditions that if he died before there were offspring, then his wife was to inherit half of his possessions and get her dowry back. George of the Grange (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as 'younger in Abbotreull' when he had a bond with Walter Turnbull of Bedrule. This was on behalf of William Shiel of Fodderlee. He could be the George 'of Rule' whose 'Airs' were recorded as owning land in Abbotrule Parish in 1643, valued at £20. He is probably related to 'Dand' of the Grange, who is recorded in 1581/2. George of Fairnington (16th/17th C.) probably son or grandson of the earlier George of Fairnington. He was signatory of the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. His name was written 'G. Rutherford of fairningtoun'. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of teinds in Roxburgh Parish. He was closely related to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. Either he or an earlier George signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He is probably the George 'of Fairnitoun' who acted as bailie for a sasine for the Haliburtons at Friarshaw in 1606. He was fined in 1611 for the non-appearance of several other Rutherfords. He may be the George of Langnewton whose younger sons were Thomas, Adam and Patrick, from whom sprang the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. The owner of lands in Cavers later in the 17th century sometimes transcribed as 'Lady Farnington' is probably in fact Lady 'Symington', and unrelated to him. George (d.1651) said to be brother of John in East Nisbet. After the Union he received lands on Rede Water through marriage. He apparently had 21 sons, most of whom served the King during the Civil War. He died in the Battle of Worcester, along with 14 of his sons. George of Fairnington (17th/18th C.) son of George. He was served heir to his father in the lands of Fairnington in 1674. He could be the same as one of the other Georges, although this seems like a separate generation. He is probably the Laird who paid the land tax in Roxburgh Parish in 1678. He may be the George of Fairnington who married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas (and Elizabeth Turnbull), who was son of Robert of Edgerston. George of Fairnington (17th/18th C.) son of George and Elizabeth Rutherford of Edgerston. He succeeded his father in 1692. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1686 he married Barbara, daughter of John Haliburton of Newmains and Margaret Rutherford of Edgerston; she died in 1750. Their children were: George, who succeeded, and killed his brother-in-law; David; Margaret, who married Robert Pringle of Clifton; and Elizabeth, who married Thomas Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, and secondly George Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, Lord Provost of Edinburgh. George (17th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1691. George (17th C.) married Bessie White in Bedrule Parish in 1692. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish whose children included John (b.1693), Helen (b.1695) and John (again, b.1697). His wife was probably either Margaret Turnbull or Bessie White. George of Fairnington (b.1691) son of George and Barbara Haliburton of Newmains. He may be the younger Laird of Fairnington whose name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. In 1716 he slew Thomas Haliburton of Muirhouselaw in a drunken fight over the rights to a spring bordering their properties; the spring was afterwards known as the 'bloody well'. He kept in hiding until it was clear that he would not be prosecuted. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. His wife could have been the 'Lady Ferninton' who paid the window tax at Timpendean in 1748. His son George, W.S., married Mary, daughter of Strother Ker of Littledean.

George (18th C.) married Jane Armstrong in Ashkirk Parish in 1764. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Lees in Hobkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Gilbert (b.1791). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Betty (b.1796) and George (b.1797). Lieut. George of Knowesouth (d.1806) 2nd son of Thomas of Knowesouth. He succeeded his brother John, who died without an heir, only a few years after inheriting Knowesouth. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, and while serving on the Trident had been responsible for sentencing some men to illegal punishments, which had led to their deaths. He was taken into custody in Plymouth, but escaped from ship the night before the trial, and was believed to have drowned. Doubts over the circumstances of his death (and rumours that he had effected an escape) led to delays in legal proceedings to decide on the inheritance of the estate. He was ultimately succeeded by his aunt, who had married Thomas Scott, and their son Charles Scott. George (18th/19th C.) married Jane Bunyan in Bedrule Parish in 1819. George (b.1783/4) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a shepherd. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Lairhope in Hawick Parish. By 1851 he was a shepherd at Lodgegills in Ewes Parish. He married Mary Jackson and their children included Margaret, Walter, Thomas, Jackson, Mary, Simon, Robert, Jessie and George. George (18th/19th C.) watch and clockmaker on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He may have been related to Francis, who was listed separately as a clockmaker at the same time. One of them was probably the Rutherford marked at about 39 High Street on Wood's 1824 map. George (b.c.1800) from Jedburgh, he was farm steward on the Minto estate. He married Mary (or 'Mina') Easton, probably in St. Boswells. In 1841 he was living at Minto Lillielaw Lodge with his wife and 4 children. Their children included: James (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); Helen (b.1830); John (b.1833), partner in Turner & Rutherford's in Hawick; and Isabel (b.1839). George (b.1806) joiner at Blacklee and Kirkstyle in Hobkirk Parish. His father was James, joiner at Bonchester Bridge, while several other brothers were also joiners. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at 'Killnknowe', and was a joiner at 'Blackley' in 1851. He married Agnes Inglis in Bedrule in 1829 and their children included: James (b.1830); William (b.1832); Helen (b.1834); Isabella (b.1836); Thomas (b.1838); Janet (b.1839); Betty (b.1843), George (b.1845); and Margaret (b.1847). George (b.1805/6) originally from England, he was a shepherd at Hyndlee in Southdean Parish in 1841 and 1851. He married Jane Rutherford and their children included Helen (b.1831), George (b.1833) and Isabella (b.1835). George (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Margaret Lees and their children included Mary Ann (b.1853). George (b.1816/7) farm servant at Burnfoot in Wilton Parish in 1851. His wife was Margaret (from Hobkirk) and their children included Agnes, Archibald and William. George (19th C.) originally from Ancrum Parish, he was a labourer in Cavers Parish. In 1861 he was a quarry labourer living at Deanhead Cottage. He married Isabella Taylor and their children included: Janet (b.1846/7); George (b.1849/50); Margaret (b.1854); William Taylor (b.1857/8); and James Taylor (b.1860/1). George (b.1806/7) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was a labourer at Killnknowe in 1841 and a joiner at Blacklee in 1851. He married Agnes Inglis, who was from Castleton. Their children included William (b.1832), Helen (b.1834), Isabel (b.1836), Thomas (b.1838), Janet (b.1839), Betty (b.1843), George (b.1845) and Margaret (b.1847/8). George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabella Waldie in 1849 and their children included: John (b.1848); Elizabeth (b.1850); and William Waldie (b.1853). George (19th C.) married Helen Hutton in Southdean Parish in 1851. George (b.1822/3) married Sarah Fox in Hawick in 1851. His wife was born in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was an agricultural labourer at Wauchope Common. George (d.c.1895) son of James. He carried on his father's tailor's business at 60 High Street, later becoming a tobacconist. He married Mary Ann, daughter of James Stewart. They had a son, Thomas. After his death his wife carried on the business for a few years, before it was taken over by William Sharp. She later married Mr.

Irving. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded as 'Gilberti de Ruthirfurde' in 1437 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch was granted lands in Eckford for capturing him. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. One suggestion is that he is the same man as William, 3rd son of Sir Richard and Jean Douglas. Gilbert (b.c.1780) stocking-maker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He may be the Gilbert who married Betty Clerk in Wilton in 1802. Gilbert (1832/3–99) Hawick resident. In 1852 he married Agnes Park, and she died in 1907, aged 75. Their children included: Maggie, who died young; William (1852–98), baptised at Hawick Free Kirk, who died at West Meridan, Connecticut, U.S.A.; Mary (1854–1925), also baptised at Hawick Free Kirk; Margaret (1856–61); Frank (1865/6–1928); Betsy (1870–1931); John (d.1936); and Gilbert, tweed merchant. He died in Howlands Terrace and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Gilbert (b.1863) son of Gilbert. He became a tweed merchant in Hawick and lived at 3 Douglas Road. He married Nellie, daughter of farm steward George Moffat. He secondly married Esther Aitken, sister of Bailie George Aitken. His children included: George, cashier with Blaikie's coal merchants; and Gilbert, who died in WWI. Gregory (13th C.) one of the earliest of the family on record. He was witness to a document relating to Fairnington in the Melrose Abbey charters in about 1214. He witnessed another document (relating to Elliston) for Melrose Abbey in about 1220 to 1243; he is listed there as 'Gregor de Ruthirfurd'. He witnessed 5 other documents in about the same period. Helen (d.1544) daughter of Philip, who was eldest son of James of that Ilk and Wells. She was also known as 'Ellen'. She managed to gain the estates of Rutherford and Wells after the death of her brother Richard, the other lands being inherited by her uncle Thomas. She was served heir in 1502/3, but the male heirs objected, and it took until 1505 to go through the courts. She also later gained Edgerston. She delivered the lands of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston into the hands of the King, so they could be infefted to her and her husband in 1505 and 1506. Also in 1506 her husband received a pardon for the murder of Thomas Rutherford within Jedburgh Abbey. About the same time the King confirmed to her the 'half merk land of Bethiroull' near the parish church, 'held in tack by Herbut Turnbull'. In 1511 James Douglas of Cavers resigned his superiority of Rutherford and Wells to her and her husband. In 1534/5 she appears to have been in debt when some of her lands in Rutherford were granted to William Jackson. In 1537 her lands of 'Hurdhouse and Theifknowis' were attacked by a large band led by the Kers of Auld Roxburgh and 'Stokstruther'. She married 4 times, her husbands being: Sir John Forman of Davine (who had been one of her tutors); Sir Thomas Ker of Mersington, who was killed by the Rutherfords, apparently as the newly weds left the church; Andrew Rutherford of Hunthill; and Patrick Home of Broomhouse. She gallantly defended the tower of Broomhouse from the English force led by Sir Ralph Evers, eventually being burned to death there, along with her children. The cruelty of this act was used as a rallying cry by the Scots at the Battle of Ancrum Moor. Since she never had a surviving son to succeed her, despite her desperation to do so, her lands passed to other family members. Henry Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded at Redfordgreen as Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. He may only have been given the lands in order to be a voter, since there is no evidence he ever lived in the area. Hugh (18th/19th C.) servant at Horsleyhill in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. James of that Ilk (c.1395–1454) son of Sir Richard. Along with his brother Nichol he was appointed guarantor of a treaty with the English in 1449. He is probably the 'Jamys of Rothirfurd' who witnessed a document between Haig of Bemersyde and Melrose Abbey in 1425. In 1427 he was 'Jacobo de Rothirfurd' when he witnessed the charter granting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1429/30 he was on the 'retour' panel for the lands of Caverton. In 1430 he witnessed a charter between Andrew Rule of Primside and Andrew Ker of Altonburn and also the confirmation in 1432. He witnessed a charter of 1435 transferring lands of Branxholme etc. in the Barony of Hawick from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He may be the James who witnessed the sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. He also witnessed a sasine for the lands of Grahamslaw in 1436/7, and was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that Ilk when he infefted the same lands in 1439. In 1437 he was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. In 1439 he was on a retour for Douglas of Bonjedward. In 1439/40 he was a witness to the charter of Primside granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. In 1446/7 he was on a 'retour' panel for Ker of Altonburn. In 1447 he was witness to a feu charter between Simon de Routledge and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for Burnflat and part of Birkwood, near the present day Duke's Wood. He held the lands of Edgerston at least by 1448 when he had a sasine. In that year he was 'Jacobo de Rudderfurde de eodem' when he witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castlelaw. In 1449 he and his brother Nicholas acted as guarantors for a treaty with the English and in 1451 they were among the conservators for the truce. In 1451 and 1452 he had charters for the lands of 'Leithbert, 'Leithbertshiels', etc. He married Christian a grand-daughter of Sir Robert Lauder and was succeeded by his son James. James of that Ilk and Wells (c.1420–93/4) son of James. He was the first Laird of Wells in Rulewater. Note there is some debate over these generations, one genealogy suggestion being that there are 2 separate Jameses covering this entry. In 1455 he had remission for certain rents because of the damage he endured on the death of his father in defence of the realm. He was the 'lorde of Rutherfurde' on the panel of 1456 which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1457 he received the patronage of the Kirk of Rutherford (previously belonging to the Earl of Douglas), was a Conservator of a truce with the English and was appointed a Warden of the Marches. In 1464 he had a sasine for Hownam. In 1464/5 he was on the panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to Archibald Douglas and on the panel for deciding on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. In 1468 he was part of an agreement with the Homes and Kers over lands of Crailing. In 1471 he received a charter of the lands of Hownam, Capehope and Swinset, confirmed along with his wife in 1483. He is probably the James who had a debt relating to Crown lands in 1471, with Thomas Turnbull and Robert Rutherford as pledges. In 1482 he had a charter for the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. In 1483 he was also witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains and another for Smailholm. He was appointed a commissioner for settling the Border marches in 1487, under the designation of Lord Rutherford. In 1488 he was mentioned in a charter of James III re-granting the regality of Cavers to William Douglas; there he is stated 'for the favour which he bears to the said William Douglas' to perform his service to the King. He gained the barony of Edgerston in 1492/3 and is recorded in that year when his superior James Douglas confirmed the lands of Rutherford and Wells (or 'Walls', in the Barony of Cavers) to him and his heirs. His possessions described in 1492/3 included the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. He is last recorded in early 1494 when he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas, Lord Erskine. Their children included: Philip, whose son Richard succeeded, and whose widow married Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme and Buccleuch; John, recorded as son of the Laird of Rutherford in 1493; Thomas of Edgerston, who succeeded his nephew as Rutherford of that Ilk; Andrew; Robert; Christian, who married Sir Robert Ker of Caverton; and Janet, who married John Rutherford of Hundalee. He was succeeded by his grandson Richard, who was the last Rutherford of Rutherford. James (d.c.1500) son of Adam, he was murdered at the Kirk of Hawick. In 1502 Peter Turnbull in Bonchester had remission for his murder, as well as a long list of other crimes. Some other Turnbulls (accomplices of Peter) were 'at the horn' for being involved in his murder. Probably the same James was mentioned in 1494/5 when Patrick Turnbull at Wauchope Tower 'componed' for associating with the Turnbulls who were responsible for his murder. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he was part of a letter of 'respite and protection' for the friends and family of William Douglas of Cavers (Sheriff of Teviotdale), while he was away in Denmark. Other men named were William Douglas (heir of the Sheriff) and William, Robert and Thomas Rutherford. It seems likely that they were members of the family of Rutherford and Wells. He could be the same as the James listed among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran, recorded between the Rutherfords of Hundalee and of Grange. James 'Kay' (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Ancrum in 1502 when he had remission for a list of crimes. This included stealing cattle, sheep, geese and threaves of oats from Fairnington on several occasions, his surety being Archibald Heriot, Captain of Ancrum. James (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694, when he paid for 8 hearths. Probably the same James married Margaret Hastie and had children, baptised in Ashkirk: Beatrice (b.1691); James (b.1692); John (b.1694); unnamed (b.1695); Margaret (b.1696); and George (b.1697). The witnesses in 1691 were Robert Pringle and John Cuthbertson and in 1694 were John Stewart and Andrew Fletcher. James (17th C.) tenant in Ormiston. He was resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1716 in Hawick his daughter Mary married Archibald

Paterson, tenant in the Flex. James (b.1697/8) shepherd in Hawick Parish. He worked as shepherd for 20 years at Alton Croft, 14 years at Nether Southfield and later at Langflat. In 1761 he was 3 men selected to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft to regularise it. He was a widower in 1767 when he gave evidence in the court case regarding the division of the Common. James of Bowland (d.1747) only son of Robert of Bowland and Anne Murray. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1730–34, succeeding his cousin John Pringle. He also served as Commissary for Peebles in 1733. He was a ruling elder at the 1737 General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He is supposed to have owed a large sum in arrears of teinds, but was unable to find evidence that his father had purchased the right of these teinds; however, in a dream his dead father told him about the old writer who had the documents, which he was able to retrieve the next day. He married Isabella, daughter of John Sharplaw (or perhaps Simpson). His daughters Anna and Barbara emigrated to North Carolina. James (17th/18th C.) married Jean Robson in Bedrule Parish in 1711. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included James (b.1715). James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1727 and 1728 he was living at Eilrig. In 1726 he married Helen Haliburton, also from Roberton. His children included: Janet (b.1727); Maly (b.1728); and Isobel (b.1730). The same couple seem to have had more children baptised in Hawick: William (b.1739); Margaret (b.1741); and James (b.1744). Walter (b.1737), baptised in Hawick with no mother's name given, was probably also his child. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Elizabeth Spinner in 1745 and their children probably included John (b.1746), Andrew (b.1748), Agnes (b.1753) and Alison (b.1755). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Helen (b.1755) and Margaret (b.1757). James (18th C.) farmer at Falahill in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1789–92 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th C.) listed as gardener at Midshiels in 1791 and 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. He may be the James in Wilton who married Agnes Hogg in Melrose in 1790. He may also be the James who married Jane (or Jean) Thomson in Wilton in 1795 and had a son William (b.1796). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Sandystones in Ancrum Parish. He owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. James (b.1768/9) born in Crailing Parish, he was farmer at Barnhills. In 1851 he was farmer there of 360 acres, employing 12 labourers. His children included Elizabeth, Agnes and Andrew. James (18th C.) married Jane Thomson in Wilton Parish in 1795. James (b.1777/8) joiner at Bonchester Bridge, probably son of John, who was shepherd at Shiplaw Cross. He was a wright at Blackcleughmouth on the 1801 ballot for the Militia (for some reason in Southdean Parish, rather than Hobkirk). He first set up as a joiner at Hobkirkstile, then moved to Langraw and finally to Bonchester Bridge by about 1813. His joiner's shop was next to the blacksmith's there. He is recorded there on the 1841 census. He married Isabella Thomson (1779/80–1847) and their children were: Agnes (b.1804), who must have died young; John (b.1805), joiner at Old Gatehousecote; George (b.1806), joiner at Kirkstyle; James (1808–41), whose son Tom was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge; Elizabeth (b.1810), who probably died young; Thomas (b.1811), who was a soldier and then policeman in Hawick; William (b.1812), who emigrated to Australia; Robert Scott (b.1814), also a joiner, married Isabella Hall; Agnes (again, b.1816), who married a Hawick shoemaker called Elder; Douglas (b.1818), who worked in a sawmill in Leith; and Alexander (b.1820), who followed his father as a joiner. He could be the James who was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836. It is possible he was the James, son of John and Janet Noteman, born in Wilton Parish in 1778. Probably the same James was recorded as wright at Blackleemmouth in Southdean Parish in the Lieutenantcy Book for 1799. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His son James was baptised in 1801. James (d.bef. 1840) slater in Hawick. His daughter Jemima died in 1840. James (1808–41) 3rd son of Bonchester joiner James. He married Betty Beattie, who was daughter of Betty Stevenson and grand-daughter of John Stevenson, Laird of Kirkstyle. Their son Thomas (b.1832) eventually took over as blacksmith from his grand-uncle Andrew Stevenson. James (1818/9–1900) tailor of 60 High Street. He is listed in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed at 21 High Street. He married Mary Wilson in 1844, who died in 1892, aged 73. Their children included Betsy Waldie, William, Isabella and Elizabeth, who all died in infancy, Robert, James, George (tailor and tobacconist), Alison and Mary (who married Andrew Wight). It is said that as a boy he 'took part in the rare old sport of guizarding, and on one occasion appeared at Abbotsford along with some other boys'; Sir Walter Scott rewarded him with a half-crown for the performance and his rendition of 'Scots Wha Hae'.

James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Semple in Southdean Parish in 1847. James (b.1825/6) born in New York state, he was a hosiery ware-houseman in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 1 Teviot Place (which may be the same as 4 Teviot Road). He married Isabella Elliot and their children included: George (b.1856); and Thomas Elliot (b.1861). James (b.1842/3) born in Robertson Parish. In 1901 he was shepherd at Dodburn. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter who was also Janet. James (b.1843) son of William, farmer at Ferniehirst Mill. He was farm steward at Kershaugh and in 1877 or 1878 moved to Gatehousecote, where he was also farm steward. By 1891 he had moved to Chesters Grange in Ancrum Parish. He married Isabella Hood and their children were William Rae (b.1877), John Hood (b.1878), Cecilia Richardson (b.1880), Henry James (b.1883), Charles (b.1885/6) and Robert (b.1887/8). James (b.1876) son of Tom, blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. He was educated in Hobkirk and served his apprenticeship with his father. He worked in Kelso and Hawick, returned to Bonchester, worked with a ship-builders in Belfast and then in Edinburgh, before taking over as blacksmith at Bonchester in 1899. In about 1904 he became tenant of the inn at Bonchester and gave up the blacksmith's business. He married Margaret Sparks, who was sister of his brother Thomas' wife. James (b.1861) born in Hawick, he attended St. Andrews Kirk. He studied at Edinburgh University and was ordained as a minister of the Free Kirk in Coldstream in 1887. He became minister at Craigmillar Park, Edinburgh in 1896. James (20th C.) Managing Director of Turner & Rutherford's at Mansfield Mills. He was in this position at the time of the 1955 fire, which was not long before the firm folded. Jane see Mrs. James Rutherford Oliver. Janet (17th C.) landowner in Abbotrule Parish in 1663. She paid £70 on the Land Tax Rolls. Perhaps she was widow of a man who formerly owned lands in Abbotrule, for example 'Bertie Rutherford of the Wood' or George of the Grange. Mrs. Janet (18th/19th C.) closest relative of William Turnbull, last Laird of Langraw. She inherited the property sometime in the 1790s.

She married a Mr. Easton, who settled in America, and sold Langraw in 1801. Jean (b.1753) daughter of John of Knowesouth and Mary Kerr. She inherited the Knowesouth estate from her brother Thomas. She married Thomas Scott, a cousin of Sir Walter Scott. Her son Charles Scott later inherited Knowesouth. Jean (18th/19th C.) wife of Caleb, she was known as 'Jean Caleb', and her surname is uncertain. Together with 'the Noted Beattie' they locally performed 'Wild Man of Bengal' shows. Her snuff box is in the Museum, with the date February 22 1803. John of Hundalee (15th C.) probably son of Nicholas of Hundalee. In 1434 he was ordered to leave Jedburgh Abbey and to allow the Abbot, Thomas Cranston, to take possession (probably a dispute over burial rights in the choir between the 2 families). He was witness to the sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. John, son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet was also a witness, showing that they are different men; he is there recorded as 'Johannis de Rutherford de Hundwelle'. He may be the John who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. In 1464/5 he was 'Johne of Ruthirforde of Hundwellee' when he was on the panel to rule on the dispute over Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1467 he is recorded as 'Johannis Ruthirfurde, dominus de Hundwalyey' when he was appointed by Parliament (along with John Ainslie of Dopphinston) to make an evaluation of Roxburghshire. He appears to have married Margaret Charteris (daughter of Thomas of Cagnore) and then a daughter of Sir Thomas Cranston. The contemporary John appears easy to confuse with him, while the later John of Hundalee was possibly his son, but more likely to have been son of Andrew of Hundalee. John (d.c.1470) son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet. Along with his father he witnessed the sasine of Woollee and Wolfehopelee to David Home in 1436. This was also witnessed by John of Hundalee, showing they are 2 separate people, even although he may be the later John of Hundalee; this is clearly confusing, and family histories may be muddled. In 1450 he was on the panel for the 'retour' of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1453 he had a lease of the Crown lands of 'Kyncavil'. In 1457 he had a sasine for lands at Falnash, Hassendean, Grubet and Kirk Yetholm. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1458 he is probably the John, heir of the deceased Nicholas who had previously dealt with the accounts for Jedburgh. He firstly married Elizabeth, sister of John Rutherford of Yetholm. His second wife was Margaret

Turnbull. He was succeeded by his son Andrew of Hundalee and had another son George. John of Edgerston (d.bef. 1501). In 1494 he was fined 10 pounds at the Judiciary Court for failing to produce Walter (probably a relative). He was one of the sureties (with Sir Robert Ker) for the appearance of Robert Langlands to answer to his murder of chaplain George Fairneylaw in 1494/5; they had to pay £20 when Langlands failed to show up. In the same year he was also surety for Thomas, son of Nicholas Rutherford, who had killed Duthac Rutherford, for James Davidson in Raperlaw, George Davidson in Raperlaw and for the Grahamslaws of Newton. He also served as surety for others in 1494/5 and was fined for the non-appearance of some of them. He was possibly second son of James Rutherford of that Ilk and elder brother of Thomas of Edgerston. He is probably the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers in 1491/2, and also the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who was surety for a resident of Edgerston in 1493. It is possible he is the 'Johnne of ruthirfurd in edzartoun' who was fined 'a ruk of corne' in 1503 for failing to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. It is possible he is the servant of the Duke of Albany who accompanied him to France and communicated with the English King in 1482. John (15th/16th C.) brother of Ninian in Ancrum. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, he was surety for himself, as well as his brother acting for him. He failed to appear and was to be fined at the next court. At the 1502 Justice-aire he was surety for his brother Ninian in Ancrum, as well as for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston; failing to appear, he was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized. John of Hundalee (c.1450–c.1524) son of Andrew of Hundalee. He is easy to confuse with the slightly earlier John of Hundalee (who may have been his uncle). He is probably the 'Johanni Roderfurd de Hundolee' who was a bailie appointed by Alexander, Lord Home, to infeft Andrew Ker in the lands of Crailing and Hownam in 1484. In 1491/2 he was recorded as 'Johanni Ruthirfurd de Hundolee' when he had a charter for the lands of Ruecastle (resigned by Thomas Dickson), as well as Samieston (resigned by Thomas Ker of Cessford). In 1492 he obtained a decree from the Privy Council against William and Archibald Douglas of Cavers, as well as John Gledstains of that Ilk for 100 merks due to his grandfather, Nicholas. He was a member of the panel of 'retour' for the lands of Synton in 1494, where he is 'Johannem Ruthirfurde de Hundolee'. At the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 his 'suitor' was Adam Sluthman, who was present at the court for his lands of Ruecastle. In 1499 he witnessed a document for Walter Ker of Cessford and also the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1502 he presented Nicholas Oliver at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, to 'give suit' for his lands of Grubet. In 1502 he and his brother Thomas were sureties for Nicholas, and also had remission 'for intercommuning with ye Ruthirfurdes, ye Kingis rebels'. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Richard in Littledean, for James in Nisbet and for John 'Fiffe', and he was fined for the non-appearance in court of William Turnbull in Bonchester. Additionally William of Hunthill was surety that he would not harm John Tait in Yetholm. In 1504 he acted as a specially appointed 'bailie in that part' for the sasine of Maxton Craig granted to William Turnbull. In 1508 he was on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was appointed as temporary Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1509 to give the inheritance of Cavers Barony to James, son and heir of Sir William Douglas; he is recorded as 'John Ruthirfurd of Hundolee' and George is also listed (so possibly related). In 1516 he, along with Thomas of that Ilk and George of Hunthill had a bond of manrent with Alexander, Lord Home. The house at Hundalee was destroyed by the English while he was Laird. He married Christian Boyd. Their children included: George, who succeeded; Lucia, who married Adam, son of Philip Nisbet of that Ilk; Janet, who married Adam Grimslaw; Margaret, who married Ralph Ker of Primside Loch; and Alison, who had a marriage contract with George, eldest son of William Ker in Lintalee, but appears to have died before the wedding, since her parents were ordered to pay 90 merks to Ker in 1500. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when the Coroner, William Cranston, was fined for failing to arrest him. His name is given as 'Johanne ruthirfurd' called 'fiffe' in 'le grange'. In a separate court entry he was found to be infirm, with his surety being John of Hundalee. It is unclear how he might be related to other Rutherfords of Grange. John 'the Cock o Hunthill' (c.1510–77) son of George, he succeeded his older brother Andrew. There was a 'retour of inquest' in 1529, finding that he was heir of his brother Andrew in the lands of Nether Chatto and others. He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1535, with David (possibly related) as his attorney and in that year the Sheriff of Selkirkshire confirmed that he was to be restored to the Lordship by royal letters, dismissing the dispute with Alison Douglas, widow of David Home of Wedderburn. A further 'retour of inquest' in 1558 established that he was heir to his brother in the lands of Capehope. In 1530 he resigned lands in Scraesburgh in favour of himself and his wife Christian Hoppringle. He had charters for several lands and baronies in the 1530s. In 1535 he was represented in Selkirk by 'the venerable sir William', who may have been a relative. He was convicted in 1538 of assisting several men who were 'at the horn'; also convicted were James Douglas of Cavers, other Rutherfords and also Kers. In 1541 he was tenant of Blackhaugh in Tweed. He was probably the Laird of Hunthill who was accused of resetting English fugitives in 1541, specifically 9 Hunters of Tynedale. He was on retours in 1542 and 1564. He was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the 'lard of Hunthill' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1549 he was listed among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers; he signed with his hand led by the notary and the pledge for his sons was John of the Knowe. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather's lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1558 he granted the lands of Scraesburgh (occupied by Thomas Rutherford and others) to his son and heir John. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he and his son John was said to be responsible for the murder of Andrew Ker of Corbethouse and as part of the restitution his 2nd son William was to marry a daughter of James Ker of Corbethouse, while his son and heir John was to offer his sword to ask forgiveness from James Ker. He signed the bond 'at the pen led by the notar', meaning that he could not write himself. In 1561 he was listed among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of those who were guilty of theft. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565

he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. In 1565 he was explicitly instructed (along with Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst) to enter one of his servants at the next truce day, to answer accusations from Englishmen; later this was increased to 2 servants to relieve the Warden, and then he himself was warded in Edinburgh Castle to redress the charges against his servants, then was ordered to pay the expenses to Ker of Cessford. Also in 1565 he signed the 'Band of Teviotdale' (but helped by the notary). Additionally, he was among landowners summoned before the Privy Council in 1565 to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and the people of Jedburgh. In 1566 he was ordered to enter 'Sym Oliver, Cuddy Hendirsoun, and Mathow Dowglas' to the Warden. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He signed the bond of peace for the Borders in 1569. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. Additionally in 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtour, as well as for Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and was directed to relieve Sir Walter Ker of Cessford of a debt. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and was surety for David Oliver in Whiteside. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571 and 1577. In 1572/3 he gave his assurances that he would not help Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, with Richard of Edgerston as surety. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573, 'with my hand at the pen'. In 1574 he, his son John, and several other Rutherfords had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. In 1576 he was surety for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1529 he firstly married Christine 'Hoppringle', daughter of David Pringle of Smailholm, this requiring special permission because of consanguinity. He secondly married Isobel, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His children included: John, who succeeded; Mariotta, who married William Rutherford of Leith; Mary, who married David Ainslie of Fala; Betty, who married Richard Rutherford of Edgerston; Steven, recorded in 1582 and 1593; and Thomas of 'Grundisnake'. He may have secondly married a daughter of Ker of Greenhead. He could be the 'vmquhile Maister Johne Rutherford' named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574 in connection with the lands of Lanton. John (d.bef. 1560) probably son of Thomas and brother of Richard and Philip. He was said to have 'dwelt in the tofts', 'had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot' and to have been 'of memorable strength and courage'. He is listed being 'in Edzarstoun' (i.e. Edgerston) in 1560 on the document attempting to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He was killed by Sir Andrew Ker of Littledean and his friends. Also 'Johne Ruthirfurd thair' (hence probably related) was mutilated in the same attack. As part of the attempt to resolve the feud, the daughter of Philip in Edgerston was to marry Andrew, son of Robert Ker of Newhall. John of the Knowe (16th C.) recorded in 1553/4 as a pledge for the sons of the Laird of Hunthill, that they would keep order. His lands were probably the Knowe of Nisbet. He described as being 'in Know' in the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was one of the signatories of the bond, and hence must have been a fairly important family representative at that time. In 1572/3 he was 'Jok of the Know' when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Andrew of Hundalee and Richard of Edgerston as sureties. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst; he was there recorded as 'Jok of the Know in Nisbett'. In 1574 he and several other Rutherfords had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He was 'of the Know' in about 1578 when he and other Rutherfords and Turnbolls agreed to annul all former bonds and swear allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. He was recorded in about 1590 as 'Johnne Ruthirfurd of the Know in Nysbit' among landed men of the Borders. Perhaps he is the same as one of the contemporary Johnns. He was probably succeeded by George. John of Hunthill (16th C.) son of John. He was known as 'the Cock', like his father. In 1558 his father granted to him (and his wife) the 8 husbandlands of Scraesburgh that was occupied by Thomas Rutherford and others. In 1565 he was 'of Hunthill, youngar' when he was one of the sureties for Robert Kerr of Woodhead. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. Along with his father and friends, he was said to be responsible for the murder of Andrew Ker of Corbethouse; as part of the bond of 1560 to end the family feud he agreed to ask forgiveness from James Ker of Corbethouse by offering him his sword. In 1571 he was younger of Hunthill when he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and also acted as surety for tenants in Oxnam. In 1573 he was among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. He is probably the John of Hunthill who signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbolls in about 1578 and another between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was juror on a retour in 1579. His brother Stephen is recorded in 1582. He is listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 and on a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, at about the same time. He is recorded in 1586 when he was surety for Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead and vice versa and was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He was also denounced in 1586 for not appearing (along with his son Thomas and others) to answer charges of stopping the Commendator of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. He is recorded in 1587 when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him to appear before the Privy Council, the penalty being the large sum of £10,000. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was listed among leaders in Teviotdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Also in 1590 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonson of that Ilk. He is further recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with Englishman Edmund Crawster. He was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for helping the Earl of Bothwell, but this was lifted a few months later. In 1593 he was again denounced as a rebel (along with his brothers Steven and Thomas of 'Grundisnuke', among others) for failure to appear to answer accusations about raids into England. In 1595 he, along with William Scott of Howpasley and Hector Turnbull of Wauchope were 'put to the horn' for failing to pay to the Sheriff their 'blench ferns and castlewards'. He married his cousin Grizel Home and also married Agnes Kirkton (perhaps in 1558, when the couple were granted lands in Scraesburgh). His children included: William, who may have been the eldest son (and if so, predeceased his father), recorded in 1592 when he was denounced as a rebel; Thomas, who succeeded and who married a Cranston of that Ilk; John, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Bankend, who married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk; Grizel, who married Walter Ormiston of that Ilk; Jean, who married Adam Rutherford of Chatto; George; Andrew; Percie; Steven; Robert; and 5 other daughters. Richard of Littleheugh may also have been his son. John 'Jock' of Tofts (16th C.) probably son of Richard of Edgerston. He was said to be a man of prodigious strength, who had 6 digits on each hand and foot. He was named in several accusations of raids on English farms in 1590. His son Andrew is also listed in some of them. He was also recorded in about 1590 among landed men of the Borders. In 1602 there was a complaint about him, his sons Robert, Thomas and William, his son-in-law John Stevenson and others that they attacked 'Jackie Laidley' and his family and servants at his lands near Jedburgh. Thomas, younger of Hunthill was cautioner for him and his sons Thomas, Archibald and William, not to harm 'Jacques Laidley in Ancrauch'. John (16th/17th C.) 2nd surviving son of John 'the Cock' of Hunthill. In 1619 he was referred to as 'Master John Ruthirfurd, sheriff-depute of County Roxburgh'. In 1623 he had the lands of Hyndhousefield, Howdenbraes and Maison-Dieu confirmed to him, his wife and eldest son. He married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw. His eldest son was John of Bankend, who served as Provost of Jedburgh. John 'Provost's Jock' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 along with James Middlemas (brother of William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf) and Patrick Brotherstone. George Douglas of Friarshaw and George Douglas in Lilliesleaf complained that the 3 men attacked the houses at Friarshaw and Lilliesleaf. His name is given as 'Provestis Jok', suggesting that his father was Provost, perhaps of Jedburgh. John of Hunthill (17th C.) son of Thomas of Hunthill and Jean Cranston. He was served heir to his father and grandfather in 1610. In 1615 the lands of Nether Chatto, 'Eidlescleuch', 'Hanganshaw' and Gateshawfield were conveyed to him and his wife by James Ker of Chatto. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1630. His lands of Hunthill, Scraesburgh, etc. were valued at £1200 in 1643. He was still alive in 1666 when he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. He married Alison, daughter of Andrew Kerr, 1st Lord Jedburgh; she was recorded as Lady Hunthill in a deed in 1663. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded, but had no male heirs; John, who succeeded his elder brother, but died unmarried; Sir Thomas, who succeeded his 2 older brothers and became the 2nd Lord Rutherford; Archibald, 3rd Lord Rutherford; Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford; Liliass, who married Henry Ker of Graden; Isobel, who married Alexander Burnet of Carlops; Helena, who married Thomas Lewin of Amble; Anna, who married Rev. Thomas Abernethy of Hownam; and Margaret, who married William Elliot of Dinlabyre. John (d.1679) 2nd son of Richard of Littleheugh. His older brother Walter died without issue and he succeeded his father in 1626. His lands included 'Capehope vocatis Phillop-hope, Hardroddis, Maksydbank, Priestschawis, &c.', to which he was served heir in 1643, with confirmation in 1666. He married Eupham, daughter of Walter Gledstains of Dod. He was succeeded by his sons Walter and John. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1641. John (17th C.) recorded in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. He owned lands valued at £140, but the name of the property is not listed. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1665) transcribed 'de Cowsnothe' in the 1666 services of heirs. In that year his son Thomas (referred to as 'junior', presumably meaning he was a minor) was served heir to his lands of Ruecastle, including Harden Mains and Newtonhaugh. He was described as already deceased in 1672 when his son Andrew became a merchant's apprentice in 1672. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, and another son Robert became an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1673. John of Edgerston (c.1622–86) eldest son of Robert and Margaret Riddell. In 1643, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He raised a troop in the 1640s and fought for King Charles; it is said that at the Battle of Dunbar he was severely wounded and all but 5 of his men were killed, and he lost a leg while defending the bridge at Worcester. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the 'carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch'; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1654/5 he and Robert (Town Clerk of Jedburgh) were acquitted of liability for a sum of £300, which was taken from the tax-collector by 'a strong party of mosstroopers'. In 1658 he was one of 2 commissioners sent by 20 'gentlemen and heritors' of Roxburghshire to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. After the Restoration he commanded a troop of dragoons who kept order in the Borders. He paid the land tax in 1678 for £2700 in Jedburgh Parish. Also in 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King. He married Barbara Abernethy, daughter of the Bishop of Caithness (and related to the family that had earlier possessed lands at Teindside and Harwood south of Hawick, with his mother being a Murray of Philiphaugh). He had 4 sons and 12 daughters, including: John, who died before him; Andrew, who succeeded, but died without issue; Thomas, who succeeded Andrew; Robert of Bowland, who married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; and Isabel, who married Andrew Ker of Littledean. His testament was recorded in 1682. John (1641–1710) born in Yarrow, son of John and Isabella Ker. He was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott the author. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk and was master of Selkirk Grammar School; he was recorded there in at least the period 1676–85, and probably served until 1691, when he was ordained in 1691 as minister of Yarrow. In 1685 he was described being 'in Philiphaugh' and in 1692 was 'late schoolmaster of the burgh of Selkirk and now present minister'. He was minister at Yarrow until his death. He still had dealings with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1707. He married Christian, grand-daughter of John Shaw, minister of Selkirk. His children included: Robert, who died young; John (1695–1779), Professor of the Practice of Medicine at Edinburgh University; Jean (b.1693), who died unmarried; and Anne, who married William Scott of Whitehaugh. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1691. John (17th/18th C.)

from Hawick Parish. In 1704 he was 'in Dernick-toun' (presumably Darnick in Melrose Parish) and Margaret 'ivson' (perhaps Gibson) was 'his wife in Goldilands' when their daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and gardener James Falsyde. John of Knowesouth (b.c.1685) son of Thomas and Cecilia Douglas. He may have been a doctor, and succeeded his father before 1715. His sister Ann married William Chisholme, son of Robert and grandson of Walter of Stirches. He was probably the man of this name who qualified as a doctor in Utrecht in 1709 and was called 'doctor of physic' and 'younger' in 1713. He was presumably the eldest son of Thomas of Knowesouth who was among the Jacobite supporters who surrendered at Preston in 1715. It is believed that afterwards was transported to Virginia, where he probably died. A set of letters from him when he was in prison in Liverpool were printed in the Border Magazine in 1909. He married Isabella (or 'Tibbie'), daughter of William Scott of Raeburn in 1711. Their children included: Thomas (b.1713), who died young; William (b.1715), also died young; John (b.c.1716), who succeeded; and Ann, who married William Thomson, surgeon in Jedburgh, and whose son John married his cousin Euphemia Rutherford. He may have died in 1728, when his son John was served as his heir. John of Ladfield (17th/18th C.) descendant of John of Ladfield (d.c.1686), who was Provost of Jedburgh. His father may have been Adam. He was 'younger' in 1712 when he married Margaret, daughter of the deceased William Rutherford of Falla, this taking place at Hummelknowes. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1702. He may be the John whose children, baptised in Bedrule, included Bessie (b.1700), Thomas (b.1703) and Janet (b.1708). John (17th/18th C.) married Isabel Storie in 1705, the marriage being proclaimed in both Bedrule and Jedburgh Parishes. John (18th C.) married Isabel Scott in Bedrule Parish in 1711. Sir John of Edgerston (1687–1747/8) son of Thomas. He was knighted in 1706 and succeeded to Edgerston in 1720. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash (his sister Violet) sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. He is probably the Sir John who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Cairncross of Langlee in 1710. They had a large family, including: John (b.1712), who succeeded; William (b.1714) of Nether Ancrum; Thomas (b.1715), who married Martha Town from York and whose sons Richard and John were in the Navy; Susanah (d.1791), who married Alexander Pringle of Whytbank; Robert of Fairnington (b.1723), who became a Russian Baron; James (d.1742), who was unmarried; Walter (1723–1804), who married Mary, daughter of Gen. Alexander, and whose son John was an American politician; Mary, who married Sir Alexander Nisbet of Dean; Elizabeth, who married John Horsburgh of that Ilk; Jean, who married Charles Inglis of Manorhead; Hugh, who had 4 daughters; Archibald; Jean; and Agnes. He secondly married Sarah, daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dean (sister of his son-in-law). Their children were: Henry of Hunthill, who married Agnes Lauder; and Christian, who married Rev. Dr. Davidson of Muirhouse. John (1695–1779) born in Yarrow, son of John, minister there, he was descended from the Rutherfords of Hunthill. He was educated in Selkirk and at Edinburgh University. He became a partner in a medical practice in Edinburgh in 1721 and they petitioned the University to start teaching Medicine, the 4 partners becoming the first Professors of Medicine there. He delivered clinical lectures in the Royal Infirmary, beginning the relationship between the university and the hospital. He firstly married Jean Swinton and they had a daughter Anne, who was mother of Sir Walter Scott. He secondly married Anne Mackay (daughter of the Jedburgh minister) and their children included: Daniel, who was a physician and botanist; Jean, who married Col. William Russell of Ashiestiel; and several children who died young. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Tudhope in Bedrule Parish in 1721. He is probably the John whose daughter Jean was baptised in Bedrule in 1722. John (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Mary (b.1737) and Helen (b.1739). John of Edgerston (1712–58) son of Sir John of that Ilk and Elizabeth Cairncross. He trained as an advocate and was elected M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1734, being re-elected in 1741. However, later that year his younger brother Walter convinced him to go to America, where he joined the Independent Regiment of Foot in New York. In 1756 he became a Major in the Royal American Regiment. In 1737 he married Eleanor, daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto; she died in 1797 at her house in George Square, Edinburgh. They had 11 children, most of whom were born in America, and 7 of whom survived to adulthood: John, who succeeded; Jean (or Jane) married William Oliver of Dinlabyre; Robert (d.1780), who served with the East India Company; Archibald (d.1790) who was an army Captain; Eleanor (d.1822), unmarried; Elizabeth, married Andrew Sinclair of Hermandston and was mother of Lord Sinclair; and Agnes (1758–1840), who died unmarried. He died at Ticonderago and his family then relocated back to Scotland. There are several documents among Peebles Commissary Court Deeds following his death. John (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Thomas (b.1740), William (b.1741), Mary (b.1742), John (b.1744), Cicely (b.1745), Isabel (b.1745), Charles (b.1747) and Euphan (b.1758). There are probably 2 separate families here. John (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Betty (b.1742). John of Knowesouth (c.1716–88) son of John and Isabella Scott. He was served heir to Knowesouth in 1728, this perhaps being when his father died, after being transported for being a Jacobite supporter, probably to Virginia in 1716. In 1739 married Mary, daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule, this marriage ending in divorce. It appears that he was mentally ill, and the records describe years of abuse before his wife finally left him in 1749. He paid the window tax in Bedrule Parish in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded in Peebles Court records several times in the period 1757–61. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. By 1763 he was an inmate of the 'Bedlam' in Edinburgh. He is recorded as Laird in 1764 when his eldest son Thomas married Margaret Elliot of Kirklands in Ancrum. He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1747 he was in a dispute with William Henry, Marquess of Lothian over his alleged wrongful possession of the lands of Ruecastle; it appears that an infetment of Ruecastle was made obtained by his (young) eldest son Thomas in 1748 (or perhaps 1758). In 1770 this son Thomas was in dispute with his wife (i.e. Thomas' mother), younger children and creditors. These other children were: Jean (b.1753), who married Thomas Scott and whose son Charles later succeeded to the estate; Anne, twin to Jean; William, who died without issue; Capt. John of the Royal Navy; and Euphemia, who married her cousin Jedburgh Town Clerk John Thomson. In 1788 he is recorded owning lands valued at £466 19s 10d, with his son Thomas also holding lands valued at £48 10s. He died in Edinburgh. Maj. John 'the Little Major' of Mossburnford (1746–1830) son of Thomas and grandson of the Laird of Edgerston. His father died in the Barbados when he was an infant, and he was sent back to the care of his grandfather at Edgerston. After going to America to seek his fortune he was apparently captured by Indians, but escaped after several years. He joined the 42nd Highland Regiment and was promoted to Captain in 1778. After retiring and returning to Scotland he purchased the estate of Mossburnford. He was a Major in the Dumfries Militia in the short period 1798–99. His nickname derived from his short stature. He paid tax on 2 male servants in Jedburgh Parish in 1778 and 1779. He was probably also Collector of Supply for about 35 years. He paid the Land Tax for Glenkerry in Ettrick Parish in 1785. He was one of the Borders men who entertained Burns on his tour of 1787. He served on the Lieutenancy Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798–9, in his capacity as a Justice of the Peace for the county. He was on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, along with his son John. In 1810 he was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1819 he was appointed as Collector of Assessed Taxes. He married Eleanor Chalk of Artane, Dublin and secondly Agnes, daughter of Rev. Andrew Chatto, minister of Morebattle. His children included: John, W.S. (1777–1801), who was the Edinburgh agent for Jedburgh; Charles (1780–1846), who inherited the lands of Fairnington, served as a Lieutenant in the local Militia 1799–1800, but died unmarried; Thomas (b.1784), who succeeded his brother; Martha, married Charles Robson of Samieston; Helen (or Eleanor) married William Elliot, Laird of Harwood; Walter (1801–56) who served with the East India Company in Bengal; and at least 5 who died young. Capt. John (1744–1833) younger son of John of Knowesouth and Mary Kerr of Abbotrule. His elder brother Thomas inherited the estate and then it passed to his sister Jean (who married Thomas Scott), since he was unmarried. He was, however, served heir to his nephew John Rutherford in 1815. He was a member of the Jedforest Club, joining in 1819. He could be the John who was recorded at Knowesouth in 1797, where he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse, as well as 2 non-working dogs. He is probably the ‘Mr Rutherford’ whose 2 servants were recorded at Knowesouth on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He is probably the Capt. John who died in 1833 and was considered as the last of the Knowesouth line. John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Douglas and their children included John (b.1776).

John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shiplaw Cross in 1780. This was the highest cottage in Cavers Parish. He had a son James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge and his great-grandson was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. Note that Tancered lists him as James rather than John. John of Edgerston (1748–1834) son of John of Edgerston and that Ilk. He was born in America, while his father was in the army there. He succeeded to Edgerston following his father’s death in 1758 (his father having been overseas since succeeding Sir John in about 1749). In 1759 he inherited lands in Hillslap from Elizabeth Cairncross. He owned land at ‘Rink’ in Hawick, which was used for the October market from 1779. He was Vice-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and was already on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1780 he was appointed Major and Captain in the Southern Regiment of Fenciblemen and by 1797 was in command of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Militia). In 1788 he was described as a ‘popular man’ in a private list of voters in Roxburghshire, and was also said to be connected with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was additionally listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. His estate in Jedburgh Parish was valued at more than £2000 in 1788, and he also owned other lands in Oxnam Parish. He paid tax on 2 male servants in 1778, and was taxed for having male and female servants through the 1780s into the 1790s as well as for owning a carriage in the period 1788–98 and for having horses and dogs in the period 1785–97, including 8 carriage or saddle horses and 4 non-working dogs. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in at least the period 1797–1801. Also in 1797 he was knocked off his horse in Jedburgh and struck in the head, but fully recovered. In 1803 he became Colonel-Commandant of both battalions of Roxburghshire volunteers. He was listed as ‘Major’ on the 1808 subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He paid the land tax on his estate in 1811, and also owned Overton. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1802–06 and Roxburghshire 1806–12. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1787 he married Mary Ann, daughter of Maj.-Gen. Alexander Leslie-Melville and died without issue. He left the lands of Edgerston to William Oliver of Dinlabyre, son of his sister Jane, and Fairnington to Charles, son of John Rutherford of Mossburnford. There is a watercolour sketch of him by Lord Sinclair. John (18th C.) resident of Alton in Wilton Parish. In 1777 he married Janet Notman. Their children included: James (b.1778); John (b.1779); Thomas (b.1783); and Robert (b.1785). The witnesses in 1779 were George Scott and James Lorraine. John (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included William (b.1784) and Janet (b.1786). He may be the John who married Janet Scott in Southdean in 1770. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1786 he was living at Howpasley. His children included Henry (b.1783) and John (b.1786). John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Knowesouth in 1794, when he was working for Thomas Rutherford. John (d.c.1805) eldest son of Thomas of Knowesouth. He apprenticed as a lawyer to William Riddell and became Writer to the Signet in 1798. He died after succeeding his father. However, he died without issue and the Knowesouth estate was inherited by his brother George, who also died without issue. John, W.S. (1777–1801) eldest son of Maj. John of Mossburnford. He was an agent for Jedburgh in Edinburgh and died in 1801. He is easy to confuse with John of Knowesouth. John (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. In 1789 he paid a fine for his 'irregular marriage' with Betty Hogg. Their children included: Charles (b.1790), baptised in Wilton; Walter (b.1792), baptised in Minto; Isabel (b.1795), baptised in Minto; William (b.1802), baptised in Lilliesleaf; and Thomas (b.1805), baptised in Minto. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Synton Mill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also recorded at Synton Mill in 1797 when his son Francis died in Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newbigging in Hawick Parish in 1797. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Betty Hogg and their children included Janet (b.1797), Rebecca (b.1800) and William (b.1802). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Greenholm in Castleton Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. John (18th/19th C.) weaver at Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was surely related to Robert, who was a weaver there at the same time. Perhaps the same John was servant to Peter Brown at Newton in Bedrule Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may be the John whose son Robert was baptised in Bedrule in 1801. Elizabeth (b.1817) may also have been his child. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Thomas (b.1793), Agnes (b.1795), John (b.1797), Adam (b.1801) and Andrew (b.1803). John (b.c.1780) labourer at Whitriggs according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1801. John (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Corbet in Wilton Parish in 1803. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Christian Veitch and their children included: Christian (b.1813); Andrew (b.1817); John (b.1818); and Christian (again, b.1821). Betty (b.1810), with no mother's name given, may also have been his child. John (18th C.) married Helen Smith in Hobkirk Parish in 1821. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Agnes Noble and their children included John (b.1820). Capt. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1830). He died unmarried and so the family estate passed to Charles, eldest son of his oldest sister, who sold it. He is probably the Capt. John who is listed as owner on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He must be different from the Capt. John recorded earlier. John (b.1805) son of James, joiner at Bonchester Bridge. He was a joiner at Old Gatehousecote in Hobkirk Parish in 1841 and by 1851 he was a joiner at Old Belses. He married Helen Curran Murray in 1831. Their children included Robert (b.1833/4), James (b.1836/7), Walter (b.1838/9), Isabella, John (b.1841), Helen and George. In 1855 the family emigrated to Australia, settling in Tasmania, where several sons worked as carpenters. Rev. John Hunter (19th C.) evangelical minister from Kelso from the early 1840s. The Congregational Church in Kelso started in 1841 and met in the Friends' Meeting house there. He led the first communion service of what would become the Hawick Congregational Kirk in May of 1848. This was in the Subscription Rooms, with an audience of about 45 people. He had been invited to Hawick in 1847 by William Munro, minister of the faltering Congregational group in Hawick, and took up the invitation in the Spring of the following year. The 'mission' of intense prayer meetings lasted for 7 weeks and had to be moved twice to larger premises. Rev. John Kirk of Edinburgh joined after the first week, and they preached together for the next 6 weeks, the direct result of which was the founding of the Evangelical Union Kirk (which became today's Congregational Kirk). He preached himself every other week until Alexander Duff arrived in late 1848. John (18th C.) married Helen Murray in Hobkirk Parish in 1831. John (b.1811/2) from Middlebie, he was a shepherd in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was at Old Larriston. His wife was Agnes Scott (transcribed 'Weight', from Tinwald) in 1846 and their children included Helen (b.1847/8), David (b.1848/9), Thomas (b.1850/1), Janet (b.1852/3), John (b.1853/4), William (b.1855/6), James (b.1857/8) and Andrew (b.1859/60). John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jane Deans and their son Robert was baptised in 1845. John (18th C.) married Janet Jerdon in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1846. John (19th C.) married Isabella Purdom in Castleton Parish in 1855. John (c.1835–1906) son of Joseph, he was born in Hawick. By 1851 the family were living at Swinburn in Northumberland. He worked for the Newcastle City Police for 8 years and was then prison officer and warder at the Newcastle Borough Gaol and Correction House. From 1871 he was Chief Warder and in 1875 was Master of the Berwick Union Workhouse. There were disputes with the authorities and by 1888 he had moved to North Shields where he was innkeeper. In 1855 he married Hannah Gray (1825–c.90). It appears the couple adopted his niece Sarah. In 1894 he married his housekeeper Elizabeth 'Isabella' Rutter and the couple became tenants of the Britannic Inn and then the tiny Beehive Inn in South Shields. In 1898 he was found guilty of manslaughter after his wife was found dead (and beaten) in their upstairs room. He served 3 years in Newcastle Gaol. John (1838–1914) composer of the music for 'The Border Queen', written specifically for Thomson's words. Born in the West End, he was (probably) son of Thomas. However, his early years are unclear. He is probably the John who was 3 years old when listed with his sister Mary living with Ann Andison on the High Street, in 1851 was a 'pauper scholar' lodging on the Kirkwynd and in 1861 was a boarder at 4 Melgund Place working as a shoemaker. He worked for 30 years as a shoemaker, with Robert & William Burnet of the Howegate. He apparently had a fine baritone voice and was prominent in the choir of the Catholic Church in Hawick. In 1884 he emigrated to Australia as a hotel keeper, to help out his widowed sister. There is a report of a 'Hawick Night' at the Middlesburgh Hotel there in 1885. He is recorded as a subscriber to the 1888 and 1889 Common Ridings, where his address is Royal Hotel, Rockdale, Sydney, N.S.W. He was a member of the Sydney Scottish Borderers Association, recorded as a judge at their races in 1899. He returned to Hawick in 1892 and 1901, and was apparently preparing to return for the quater-centenary when he took ill. It is not known whether he wrote any other music. In 1860 he married Margaret Gallagher. Their children included: Mary (b.1861); Ann (b.1863); Edward (b.1866); William (b.1866); John (b.1870); His daughter Margaret married Bailie John Gilroy. He is buried at Rockwood Necropolis, Sydney. John (19th C.) iron merchant who was one of the early elders of St. Andrew's Free Church. Katherine (15th/16th C.) younger daughter of Philip, who was the only son of James of that Ilk and Wells. After the death of her brother Richard of that Ilk, there was dispute over succession to the lands and titles, Rutherford and Wells going to her sister Helen, with the rest going to their uncle Thomas. She lost out on her portion due to her fornication with a relative, James Stewart of Traquair, who she married when quite young. He died at Flodden and she claimed 'that in tender age she had been reft away by the said James Stewart, held in subjection and compelled to marry him'. She was probably the Katherine who supported Patrick Murray of Falahill in 1530, against an objection to his being Sheriff, with John Scott, Vicar of Hawick as procurator. In 1536 she was 'Lady of Trakquare' when she had a court order not to communicate with the rebel Douglasses who were in England. Her son and heir to Traquair was William Stewart. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded as tenant in Oakwood in 1494/5. He had remission for a number of crimes: stealing cattle from several different people, including an ox from the Vicar of Ancrum; resetting Robert Young and William Scoon; stealing sheep from Yair and Kershope; stealing and resetting horses; burning the farm of Hartwood; and stealing from the widow of William Dickson. His surety was John Rutherford of Edgerston. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-are in Jedburgh in 1502. He had remission for stealing sheep from Ninian Murray out of Kershope, with George, junior Laird of Hurdalee as his surety. He was 'in quhitmeir', which was probably Whitmuir. Lawrence (15th/16th

C.) recorded in 1502 when he had remission for stealing cows from a servant of Margaret Murray out of Traquair. He was recorded being 'now in 'hartwod' (probably the lands between Ashkirk and Selkirk). His surety was Ralp Ker of Primside Loch. Mrs. Margaret nee Turnbull (1850/1–1925) keeper of the post office and shop in Cogsmill. She married William and had a son William (b.1891). Mary (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when she owned £20 in Hobkirk Parish. She is listed being 'of Rydvell' and Marie Turnbull was also there, but it is unclear where it was. Michael (18th/19th C.) clockmaker recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and he was still on the list in 1801. It is possible he was a child of Hawick watchmaker William. Michael (19th C.) recorded as father of 'Frances Elliot' in a baptismal record in Hawick Free Kirk in 1843. This seems to be an error for William Rutherford, husband of May Rutherford. Mungo (16th C.) tenant of Nisbet. He was on the 1553/4 panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather's lands of Branhholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as 'Kentigernum Ruthirfurd in Nesbet' and may also have been known as Quentin. One of his descendants was John (brother of Gavin), who married Grizel Ramsay, and died at East Nisbet in 1630. Sir Nicholas (13th/14th C.) early member of the family. He witnessed a document in the Melrose charters in the period 1269–89. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He held the Manor of Doddington in Northumberland, which was forfeited by Edward I; in 1306 his grand-daughters and heiresses, Eva and Marjorie, petitioned the English King to restore their lands of 'Doddingstone'. 'Blind Harry', in his history of 1460, states that he met Sir William Wallace in Ettrick Forest with 60 warriors. He may have been related by marriage to Marion Braidfute, heiress of Lamington. He was succeeded by his son Sir Robert. Nicholas (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1357 on a panel of inquest held in Roxburgh under English authorities, relating to the lands of Caverton and Plenderleith. In 1361 he was on another panel of inquest in Roxburgh, relating to Makerstoun. Nicholas of Yetholm (d.c. 1457) probably son of Sir Richard of that Ilk. He may be the Nicholas who received charters for Kirk Yetholm, Grubet, Makerstoun, Corbet and other lands in the years 1421, 1426 and 1430. However, these generations are quite confused. Probably the same Nicholas was part of a 'retour of inquest' in Hawick in 1424 for lands of Hownam. He served as Bailie in Liddesdale for William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, recorded in 1428/9. He witnessed a charter for Alexander, Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. He was also Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1436 for the granting of the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee to David Home of Wedderburn; he is there 'Nicolaud de Rutherford de Zhetam'. He is probably the Nicholas who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. He is probably the Rutherford who was Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1439 for a charter for Douglas of Bonjedward. In 1449, along with his brother James of that Ilk, he was appointed as a guarantor of a treaty with the English; in 1451 they were both among the conservators of the truce. He may be the 'Nechole of Rutherford' who was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1456 of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1458 his heir John was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to his having previously handled the accounts of Jedburgh. He may be the 'Nocol' who was a younger son of Sir Richard of that Ilk, and ancestor of the Henderlee (or Hundalee) branch. His son John also witnessed the sasine for Wolfelee in 1436, and separately also John of Hundalee (showing that they are separate people). His son John married Elizabeth Rutherford of Yetholm. He had a grandson, John, who became Provost of Aberdeen, with that office also being filled by 3 later generations of the same family. Nicholas (15th/16th C.) resident of Hundalee. He is recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when he had remission for several crimes, specifically stealing horses from Haddington Priory, a 'caldrone' from the wife of Richard Rutherford, a cow from Lawrence Pile, 5 cows from the Earl of Huntly and a horse from Thomas Hall; John of Hundalee and his brother Thomas were his sureties. Also in 1502, along with Thomas in the Grange, he had remission for supplying and intercommuning with other Rutherfords, who stole 5 horses from the King's army at Norham. And he was explicitly referred to as 'in hundole' when he had remission for his own part in the theft of the 5 horses at Norham; John of Hundalee was his surety and was surely related. Sir Nicholas of Hundalee (d.1572/3) probably son of George, whom he succeeded in about 1545. He was listed (along with his father George and brother Andrew) among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He may be the Nicholas said to have been one of 3 attendants who accompanied the Earl of Bothwell to a secret meeting with the Earl of Northumberland in 1531. In 1544 he was among local Lairds who gave their pledges to England. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford, accused of raiding the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in collusion with the English. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. He is probably the Laird of Hundalee who was appointed as a deputy march warden in 1553. In 1553/4 he was first listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers and the pledge for him was Batholomew of the Grange. He and other Rutherfords also appeared to promise that Adam and Charles, their pledges, would remain in ward in Edinburgh. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather's lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. Also in 1561 was (along with Walter Scott of Syn-ton and Thomas Scott of Haining) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance. In 1564 he and James Langlands of that Ilk were listed as sureties for Ormiston of that Ilk in the bond between the Scotts and Kers and their supporters. Also in 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. Also in 1565 he was engaged in a serious dispute with the people of Jedburgh, and tried to insist that they should chose him as their Provost, because of family tradition; a number of Burgesses and local landowners were summoned before the Privy Council to resolve the 'allegeit bluid and inymitie'. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting the superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. Also in 1569 he and his sons Andrew and Nichol were sureties for George in the Grange. In 1596 and again in 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. He is said to have been at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575, although it seems more likely that was his son. He signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbolls in 1578 (although perhaps this was 1569). He married his distant cousin Margaret Rutherford and secondly married Margaret McDowell. His children included: George, who died as a rebel by 1526; Andrew, who succeeded; Nichol, listed along with his father and brother Andrew in 1569; Marion, who married Andrew Ker of Graden; Mary, who married David Ainslie of Fala; and probably Martin, vicar of Makertoun. Nicholas (16th C.) recorded as Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1548. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. He may be the 'Nycholl Ruderfurd' who signed the bond between the Rutherfords and Kers in 1560. Nicholas of Hundalee (c.1565–c.1628) son of Andrew of Hundalee and Margaret Hoppringle of Smailholm. However, in some genalogies he is stated to be brother of Andrew and younger son of Sir Nichol. In 1591 he is listed along with Rutherfords, Kers and Turnbolls in a bond of allegiance to King. In 1592 the cautioner for him and his father Andrew was James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose, that they would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He was juror on a retour in 1601. He is probably the 'Hundielie' who signed the bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace in 1602. In 1608 he was appointed by Parliament, along with Douglas of Bonjedward, to meet with the Bailies of Jedburgh to fix the price of leather. In 1606 he renewed his charter of Grubet and in 1620 gave a charter of Belses to his son-in-law, Sir James Kerr of Crailing. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council. He was listed as a land-owner in the Barony of Belses in the tax roll of the Abbacy of Jedburgh in 1626. He married Martha, daughter of Andrew Stewart, Master of Ochiltree. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded in 1633; John; James; Marie, who eventually became heiress and married Sir James Ker, 2nd Lord Jedburgh; Margaret; and Anna. Ninian 'Ringan' (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as 'Rinzeane of Rutherfurde'. Along with 'Hew of Douglace' he appears to have captured George Young, who Walter Scott of Buccleuch pledged to bring before the next Justice Aire in Jedburgh. He could be the Ninian in Ancrum who was surety for his brother John at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5; John did not appear. This same Ninian in Ancrum was allowed to 'componer' for many crimes in 1494/5, in particular stealing livestock and grain from several tenants in Fairnington, as well as thefts along with his brother John, with the Laird of Rutherford as surety. In 1502 his surety was his brother John (who was also surety for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston), who failed to appear and hence was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized. Presumably he was the same as Ninian in 'uvir ancrum' who was surety for himself in 1502 and was fined and deprived of his lands until he found surety. Nicholas (b.1820/1) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He was at Lawston in 1861. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Ann (b.1845/6), Jane (b.1847/8), Isabella (b.1849/50), Andrew (b.1851/2) and Hannah (b.1858/9). Oliver (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Elizabeth (b.1805), William (b.1807), Jane (b.1808), Alexander (b.1810), Violet (b.1812), Agnes (b.1814), Eleanor (b.1816), William Alexander (b.1818), Archibald John (b.1820) and John Chatto (b.1827). Peter (14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1343. Philip (d.bef. 1492) eldest son of James of that Ilk and Wells. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His widow later married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He had an only son, Richard (who succeeded his grandfather), and 2 daughters: Helen, who married Sir John Foreman of Davine, secondly Andrew of Hunthill and may also have married 2 other times; and Katherine (or perhaps Christian), who married James Stewart of Traquair and later became heir of the Rutherfords of that Ilk. He pre-deceased his father. In 1495 his widow (now wife of Scott of Branxholme) brought a case to the Lords of Council demanding payment of promised rentals. Philip (15th/16th C.) witness of a sasine for the Erskines in the lands of Synton in 1508. He could not have been the son of James of that Ilk (and Margaret Erskine), since that Philip died before his father, several years earlier. Perhaps the same Philip, son of Alan, was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn; his brother John was also listed. Philip (16th C.) probably younger son of Richard and son of Thomas of Edgerston. He is recorded as being 'in Edzarstoun' (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. As part of the agreement, Andrew, son and heir of Robert Ker of Newhall was to marry his daughter; he signed the bond 'at the pen led by the notar', meaning that he was unable to write. He may have been son of John in Edgerston, whose earlier murder was part of the feud. John Rutherford, also in Edgerston, who signed the 1560 bond, was probably his brother. In 1573 he and John 'breder in Edgarstoun' were among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 he was 'in Edzarstoun' when along with several other Rutherfords, he had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He was a tutor to his brother Richard's son Thomas, 'the Black Laird'. He may have been father of 'Philip's Andro', recorded in 1601. Richard (14th C.) recorded as Provost of Stirling in the Exchequer Rolls in 1330. Sir Richard (c.1345–1424/5) probably son of William (or possibly a younger brother). He was said to be a favourite of King Robert III. He witnessed a charter by James, Earl of Douglas in the 1380s. In 1390 he was 'of that Ilk' when he witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. He was one of the ambassadors to the Court of England in 1398 and was also Warden of the Marches from about this time. Additionally in 1398 he was one of the 'borowis' for the Earl of Douglas bounds on the Middle March, according to an English document. About 1399 he was captured by the English, according to the story, along with his 5 sons (although he may in fact have had no more than 3 sons) and John Turnbull ('out with the sword'). An English record of 1400 forbid his captors to release him and other Scottish leaders. In 1424 (apparently not long before his death) he was on a 'retour of inquest' for lands of Hownam, witnessed at Hawick. He married Jean Douglas and their sons were: Sir James; John of Chatto, ancestor of the Hunthill branch; and Nichol, ancestor of the Hundalee branch. He was succeeded by James, although there is some suggestion that he was predeceased by his son and succeeded by his grandson James. He may also have had sons William (or Gilbert) of Eckford and Sir John, who was killed at Cravant in France along with Sir John Turnbull. Richard of that Ilk (d.c.1502) grandson and heir of James of Rutherford, only son of Philip. He was the last Rutherford of that Ilk. He was served heir to his 'goodfather' (presumably grandfather) according to an inquesy in 1499. A document of 1500 shows lands of his going to several Kers because of 'non-entry'. He is probably the Richard whose name led a 1501 list of Rutherfords and others whose fines were compounded by Walter Ker of Cessford and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain. He died without children, leading to a dispute over who should succeed to the estates and titles, these mainly going to his uncle Thomas, although his sister Helen inherited the estates of Rutherford and Wells. However, in 1502 the gift of ward of the lands of Rutherford was granted by James IV to Andrew, Bishop of Moray and his brother John Forman. Also in 1502, Nicholas had remission for stealing a 'cavobi le caldrone' from his wife (whose name is unfortunately not given). Richard (15th/16th C.) tenant in Littledean. In 1502 he had remission for wounding George Young in Minto Craig, as well as stealing several items from Young. His surety was John Rutherford of Hundalee. Richard of Edgerston (16th C.) son of Thomas (or perhaps Robert). He is probably the 'Richart Rutherford of Edyarstoun' listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledges were Charles and John 'sone of the Grene'. He may have succeeded about 1558 and in 1559 he finally settled the dispute over succession to Rutherford lands and titles with his cousin, Sir John Stuart of Traquair (who received the estates of Rutherford and Wells). In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he was to shake hands with John Haitlie of Mellerstain in order to settle the feud between those particular families and he signed 'at the pen led by the notar' (meaning that he could not write himself). In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1564 he was 'Lard of Edyarstoun' when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle. Also in 1567 he was surety for entering several men with the Warden. In 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtour. He also signed a bond to suppress the Border thieves in 1569 and another recognising Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst as Warden of the Middle Marches in the 1570s. In 1571 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers, along with John, younger of Hunthill, and 2 Turnbells. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was cautioner (along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule) for several men from Southdean, as well as for John of Hunthill. He himself swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with Andrew, younger of Hundalee, as surety. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. He signed a 'bond of manrent' to Archibald, Earl of Angus in 1574. He was at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. Also in 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. He signed an agreement with other Rutherfords and Turnbells in 1578, annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1583/4 he (or his son) was among the Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Either he or his son was in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. He married Elizabeth ('Bittie'), sister of John Rutherford, the 'Cock o Hunthill'. He was probably succeeded by his son Richard. Other sons may have been: John of the Tofts, a man of pridigious strength, who had 6 digits on each hand and foot; Philip, tutor of Edgerston; and Gilbert of 'the Aicks'. Richard (16th C.) Provost of Jedburgh. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. In 1569 he was also among the signatories of a bond to suppress thieves on the Border. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and also acted as surety for Hob Young in Waterside. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 he and several other Rutherfords had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. Also in 1574 he was a witness for the Turnbells in their bond of service with Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. In about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. He may have been the 'Gray Will' elected as Provost of Jedburgh in 1590, against the wishes of the King, who had ordered the position to be filled by Ker of Cessford. Richard of Edgerston (d.bef. 1605) probably son of Richard (although not all sources agree there was another generation here). He may be the Richard of Edgerston in 1587 when Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, acted as his cautioner. He is probably the Richard mentioned in a 1590 case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain 'bills' of English complainant. In 1592 his surety was William Stewart of Traquair. He was witness to the 1595 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He married Jean, daughter of William Elliot in Hartsgarth. They had a son Thomas (the 'Black Laird'), and a daughter Margaret, who married Thomas Haliburton of Newmains. He may also have had 8 other sons who helped him in his exploits on the Border; however, this could be confusion among generations, since it is separately claimed that he was helped by his 6 brothers. His daughter Jean was served as his heir in 1611. Richard of Edgerston (d.bef. 1615) eldest son of Thomas 'the Black Laird'. He succeeded his father, but died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Robert. Richard of Littleheugh 'Dickon Draw-the-Sword' (d.c.1634) son of John 'the Cock o Hunthill' or possibly William of Littleheugh. He led the Jedburgh men at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575. He is probably the Richard, son of William of Littleheugh who was accused in 1590 of raiding into England. He was fined in 1611 for the non-appearance of several other Rutherfords. He was on the inquest for the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1622 and 1623. He also served as Provost of Jedburgh, an office later held by his nephew, John of Bankend. He appears to have been unable to write, since his signature had to be led when he supported a bond with the Earl of Bothwell. He married Liliass, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk (with John Rutherford, probably his brother, marrying Liliass' sister Barbara). His children included Walter (who died without an heir) and John of Capehope. John of Capehope's grandson, Capt. John, became 5th Lord Rutherford in 1737. Richard (18th C.) married Mary Middlemas in Minto Parish in 1742. Richard (18th C.) married Nelly Anderson in Southdean Parish in 1786. Their children included James (b.1787) and Janet (b.1789). Richard (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Betty (b.1791) and Christian (b.1794). Richard (b.1822/3) tailor in Hawick. In 1851 he was a Master Tailor at Market Place (i.e. the Tower Knowe), employing 1 man and 1 apprentice). His wife was Agnes. He is probably the Richard who married Agnes Latimer in 1845, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Richard (19th C.) married Isobel Amos in Castleton Parish in 1842. Robert (12th C.) perhaps the earliest known member of the family. Sometime in the reign of David I he witnessed a charter to Gervase de Rydal. He is there recorded as 'Robertus dominus de Rodyrforde'. There is no clear genealogy connecting him with later generations. However, it seems likely he was an ancestor of Hugh, who is recorded in about 1200 and Gregor, who is recorded in about the 1210s to 1230s. Robert (13th/14th C.) valet of Sir 'Ebulo de Montibus', Constable at Stirling Castle. In 1310/1 he was recorded in an English document regarding provisions for the Castle. His surname is written 'Rotherforde'. Sir Robert (d.1330) son of Sir Nicholas. He was said to be a friend of Robert the Bruce, accompanying him on the trip to Palestine with the heart of James Douglas. He died in Spain. Robert of Chatto (c.1410-bef. 95) son of Sir George of Chatto and Janet. However, these generations are confused, and it may be that there are two men here, one being a son of John of Chatto. In 1429 there was a confirmation by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, of the gift made formerly to his father George, of the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, 'Eddylliscluch' and Hangingshaw; this was confirmed in 1439/40. He may be the Robert who in 1437 was one of those who was on the 'retour' at Jedburgh for Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the East Mains of Hawick. He was also on the 1450 retour for William Douglas to inherit his father's Barony of Hawick. In 1464 there is a grant of lairs in the choir of Jedburgh Abbey to him and his wife Margaret (a highly unusual example of the granting of the right of sepulture). In 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas and also on the panel to rule on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1465 he had a charter from Simon of Glendinning for the west half of Scraesburgh and the lands of Hunthill (which he is said to have acquired by marriage). He is recorded in 1468 in a document relating to lands of Crailing for the Homes of that Ilk. In 1471 he witnessed a document for Ker of Cessford. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Simon Glendonwyn. He had a charter of the lands of Hunthill and half of Scraesburgh from his father-in-law in 1465/6. He witnessed a charter for James Rutherford of that Ilk in 1468, another for William, Lord Abernethy in 1471. He is probably the Robert who was pledge for James of that Ilk in 1471 and whose fine for absence from the Beltane Court was remitted in 1478. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. In 1486 he is mentioned along with George and Richard, probably his sons. He was succeeded by his son George of Hunthill, while Robert of Chatto was probably another son. Robert (15th C.) assigned the lease of Aikwood in 1484, along with his grandson and heir, Ninian. He leased it with his son Lawrence in 1485. Robert (15th C.) son of Lawrence. In 1490 he was assigned the Crown lands of the Middlestead of Hartwood. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Todlaw, probably the one near Jedburgh. In 1502 he had remission for stealing cushions, silks and other clothing from Jedburgh Kirk, with Robert Turnbull of Blindhaugh as his surety. Robert (16th C.) listed as 'Roben' among 'Scottesmen rebels resete within England' in 1540. He was said by the English Wardens to be hiding in Redesdale. He may be related to George 'Cockbank'. Robert (16th C.) recorded being 'in Edzarstoun' (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He and his friends were said to be responsible for killing William Haitlie 'in Fawnis', while his own son John was killed by the Haitlies. It is unclear if he was Laird of Edgerston, or just tenant there, but it seems likely he was father of Richard, who was Laird in the 1560s. He may have been the 'lard of Egerston' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Robert of Edgerston (c.1590–1659) younger son of Thomas, 'the Black Laird'. He succeeded his brother Richard in 1615. In 1619 he complained that William, brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, was still at the horn. He acted as a cautioner for an Ainslie in 1623. He is probably the Rutherford of Edgerston who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638 (even although it appears to say 'W.'). Around 1640 he purchased the Mill of Edgerston and other lands, which had been inherited by Francis Elliot of Hartshaugh through marriage. He firstly married Marion (or Margaret) Riddell, and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of Turnbull of Minto. He was succeeded by his son John. He may have been father of 'Lady Gaudielands, Edgerstons Aunt', who is recorded in a document of 1666 describing the division of the choir of Jedburgh Abbey into burial lairs for various Rutherfords. Robert (17th C.) notary public recorded in 1640 at the admission of Henry Elliot as minister of Bedrule. Robert (d.1724) younger son of John of Hunthill. In 1685 he succeeded his brother Archibald as 4th Lord Rutherford, also inheriting the family lands comprising the Barony of Hunthill, including the 10 merk lands called Gledstane's Lands. In 1691 he sold Nether Chatto and the Barony of Scraesburg to Sir John Scott of Ancrum. He sat as a peer in Parliament until the Union. He married Dame Sara Ollens and they had 2 children: Margaret, who married Charles Scott of Palace Hill; and John, who died young. Like his elder brothers, he died without male issue and the honours were later claimed by Capt. John, descendant of Richard of Littleheugh. Robert of Bowland (d.bef. 1728) son of John of Edgerston. He purchased Bowland (on Gala Water) in 1697. In 1712 he purchased Hollinglee and Thornilee in Ettrick. He married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; she was widow of Alexander Pringle of Whytbank. In 1728 his widow resigned her annuity to her only son James, who succeeded and was M.P. for Selkirkshire. They also had a daughter, Barbara. Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) solicitor in Edinburgh, he was referred to in the family as 'the Nottar'. He was said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He served as Deputy Receiver General for Scotland. He inherited some lands from his father, acquired parts of Capehope from Sir John Scott of Ancrum in 1701 and bought lands in Scraesburgh in 1702. In 1719, 1727 and probably 1734 he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk, and a bond in 1731. He firstly married Bethia Lidderdale and they had 2 sons, David and Capt. William, neither of whom produced a male heir. In 1699 he secondly married Alison, only surviving daughter of John Ker of Shaw. Their numerous family included: Robert, who married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton; and Alison, who wrote a version of 'Flowers of the Forest'. He was the last of his family to be buried in the Bell-house at Jedburgh Abbey. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Susana (b.1701) and James (b.1703). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as a 'walker' (presumably a 'waulker'). He married Helen Cavers and their children included Robert (b.1706) and Margaret (b.1720). Other children, baptised in Hawick, who are probably his include: John and William (b.1713); and John (again, b.1716). The witnesses in 1706 were Bailie George Martin and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands, and in 1720 were John Wilkie, tailor in Swanshiels and cooper Robert Hardie. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Bell in Castleton in 1709. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Elizabeth Turnbull in Hawick Parish in 1721. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of James, surgeon in Jedburgh. He married Esther, daughter of Robert Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1738 he was one of the 3 'heirs-portioners' (along with his wife Esther and John Gledstains of Whitlaw) for Janet, last of the Gledstains of that Ilk. The lands of Dod were divided among them.

Rev. Robert (1719/20–90) son of Gideon of Kidheugh, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1743, was licensed by the Presbytery of Earlstoun in 1746 and became preacher at Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) from 1750 until probably 1756. He moved to Longframlington in Northumberland in that year and became minister at Castleton in 1763, where he was presented by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785–89. In 1767 he married Elizabeth Widdrington of Huxley in Northumberland, and she died in 1768, aged 26. He wrote 'A Scripture Catechism' (1794). Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) son of Robert, who was a solicitor in Edinburgh, said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He inherited his father's lands in Ancrum and Scraesburgh. He is probably the Robert of Fairnilee recorded in a discharge in Selkirk in 1743. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton. Robert of Fairnington (1723–c.94) 4th son of Sir John of Edgerston and Elizabeth Cairncross. He was created a Baron of the Russian Empire following the assistance he gave during Russia's war with Turkey in 1770. He repurchased the lands of Fairnington in 1779, planting trees and naming fields after some of his Russian friends. He also built a summer house on top of Down's Law in the 1780s; this was known ever after as the 'Baron's Folly'. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and was described at that time as being 'very independent'. Also in 1788 (and still in 1811) he was listed as owner of Fairnington and neighbouring lands in Roxburgh Parish; he was listed in the county valuation as 'Baron of the Russian Empire'. He was taxed for having 3 female servants in the period 1785–91, as well as 3 male servants 1785–91 and 4 in 1792, 1793 and 1794 (when he was deceased). He is recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls in the 1780s and 1790s, but was deceased in the year 1794/5, when the duty was paid on his behalf by John of Edgerston. He left Fairnington to his nephew, John of Edgerston. There is a portrait of him by Benjamin West. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1794. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1751). Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Gowanlock and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1758. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1751) and Andrew (b.1757). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Robert (b.1743) and Agnes (b.1753). Robert (18th/19th C.) ploughman in Newton in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was listed as a herd at Newton on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may be the Robert who married Agnes Reid in Bedrule in 1801 and whose daughter Jane was baptised there in 1802. Robert (d.1787) mason in Hawick. He married Mary Simpson in 1761; she was daughter of Andrew Simpson and Agnes Turnbull. Their children included: Thomas (b.1762); Caleb (b.1765), Burgh Officer in Hawick; Helen (b.1767); unnamed (b.1773); Susan (b.1775); and Robert (b.1777), known as a fiddler. The witnesses in 1767 were wright Francis Paisley and cooper John Miller. He died in Hawick. He was probably born in 1738 in Cavers, son of Thomas, although it has been suggested he is the son of Walter and Isabella Turnbull born in Wilton in 1724. Robert (18th C.) married Elizabeth 'Withrenton' in Castleton Parish in 1767. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Hannah (b.1777). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Betty (b.1790). Robert (b.1768/9) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a shepherd at Branhholme Town. He was recorded there as an agricultural labourer in 1841 and was also stated to have been a farm grieve. He married Jane (1784–1859), daughter of James Crawford and Janet Elliot; she was from Wilton, also known as Jenny and Janet and was buried in Wilton Kirkyard. Their children, mostly baptised at East Bank Kirk, included: William (b.1812); Walter (b.1814), who succeeded as shepherd and emigrated to Canada; Nelly (b.1817); an unnamed child (b.1822); and Charles Dickson (b.1824), a grocer living in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) married Betty Ruecastle in Hawick in 1793. Robert (b.c.1775) labourer in Southdean Parish. He was a farm servant at Ruletownhead according to the Militia ballot in 1801. He was living at Ruletownhead (or Bowset) in 1841 and his widow was there in 1851. His wife was Agnes (from Minto Parish) and their children included Jane (b.1818/9) and Robert (b.1821/2). Robert (1776/7–1843) probably son of mason Robert. He is probably the weaver Robert who was listed in the 1797 Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire; the annotation ‘Serving’ suggests he had been selected in the ballot and later enlisted, with his name appearing again in 1798 and this being confirmed on the 1799 list of balloted men. He was known to have been in the Militia in his youth, and noted for refusing to flog a fellow soldier. Afterwards he was not himself given corporal punishment (perhaps because he was a balloted soldier), but had his wages reduced by twopence a day as a result; it was said he submitted to this cheerfully for the man ‘had dune him nae ill’. He was well known locally as a fiddler, being described by James Wilson as ‘long remembered by the present generation as a charming performer on the violin’ and ‘without any of the dashing execution of the race of youngsters who strive to dazzle rather than delight, his object was to please’. He paid a yearly visit to Tyneside and performed often at Minto House. A portrait of him exists in the Museum, painted by Adam Brown, and donated in 1897 by his grand-daughter, Mrs. Joseph Wilson. He is probably the Robert, recorded as ‘musician’ on Walter’s Wynd in 1841, living with wife Mary and other family members. He married Mary Riddell and their children included: Robert (b.1809); William (b.1811); and Thomas (b.1813). Mary (b.1821/2), Martha (b.1827/8) and Robert (b.1834/5), living with him in 1841, may have been grandchildren. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1801) and Anne (b.1804). He may be the Robert who married Janet Robson and had children Samuel (b.1803), Adam (b.1808), Isabel (b.1810), Robert (b.1812) and Andrew (b.1813). Robert (18th/19th C.) weaver at Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was surely related to John, who was a weaver there at the same time. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Riddell and their children included

Robert (b.1809), William (b.1811) and Thomas (b.1813). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Walker in Southdean in 1815. He is probably the roughly 45-year-old labourer from Hobkirk living at Bairnkine in 1841, living with his wife Agnes and children Isabel, Janet, Walker and John. He was a shepherd and widower with 3 children at Barkine in 1851. Robert (1789–1838) son of Thomas and Maydeline Dryden. He was probably nephew of Caleb. He was a builder at Millbank, i.e. the Mill Path. He probably owned the building on the south side of the top of the Mill Path, labelled ‘Mr. Rutherford’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He is recorded as a builder at ‘Townhead’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and at ‘Mill bank’ in 1837. He married Jane, daughter of William Waldie; she married William Laidlaw after she was widowed and died in 1871. His children included: Mary (1815–80), or ‘May’, who married William Rutherford, watchmaker; Thomas (1816–69), who married Mary Hutton, and died in Newcastle, New South Wales; William (b.1818), who married Beatrix Brydon and emigrated to Ontario, where he may have named the village of Millbank; Robert (1821–43); Elizabeth (1822–93), who married George Hogg; John (1826–75), who married Elizabeth Hackins; Jane (1828–55), first wife of auctioneer James Oliver; Agnes (b.1830), who married James Johnston and William Laidlaw; George (1831–58), who died in Hong Kong; and James (1833–8). Most of his family were still living at Millbank on the 1841 census. Robert (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Betty Oliver and their children included George (b.1834), James (b.1837), Oliver (b.1844) and Helen (b.1846). Robert (1814–bef. 61) son of James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge. In 1851 he is listed as a joiner at 4 Bonchester Bridge, employing 1 man. He married Isabella, daughter of shepherd Andrew Hall, in Hobkirk Parish in 1850. Their children were: Helen (1850–60); James (b.1852), who was a joiner with Douglas Taylor; and Isabella (b.1855, although it is unclear if he was the father). He went to America, leaving his family behind, and died there. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living at Hallrule Cottages. Robert (19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Helen Stewart in 1852 and their children included: Robert (b.1852); and Donald (b.1854). The baptisms were recorded in Southdean Parish, as well as in Jedburgh Associate Kirk. Robert (19th C.) married Charlotte Renwick in 1850. The marriage was recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean and Parishes.

Robert (b.1828/9) from Maxton Parish, he was farm steward at Courthill in Wilton Parish in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Agnes R., Elizabeth and Susan. Robert (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Mary Shiel and their children included Janet (b.1852) and Mary (b.1854). Robert (c.1846–98) son of shepherd Walter. He became a shepherd himself. In 1870 he married Ellen Nichols. His children included Helen or Nellie (b.1870); Walter (b.1871), Ann (b.1875), Robertson (b.1877), Janet (b.1879), Mary (b.1880), Aggie, born in Canada; and John, also born in Canada. In 1882 the family emigrated to Huron County, Ontario and he was farmer at East Wawamash. He was killed by a bull on his won farm in the Camille district of Manitoba. Samuel (17th C.) described as servitor to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1642 when he accused a large group of his drinking companions of stealing his wallet and its £11 contents. He was also accused by John ‘Lethane’ of trying to retrieve his wallet through violence. Steven (16th/17th C.) younger son of John ‘the Cock o Hunthill’ and brother of the next John of Hunthill. In 1582 he was recorded in a document with Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus; he signed ‘witht my hand led at the pen be the notar’. He is also recorded in 1593. Susan-nah (b.c.1795) from England, she was publican in Newcastleton, recorded at the King’s Arms in Pigot’s 1837 directory. This was probably the same place that became the Liddesdale Hotel at about 17 Douglas Square. In 1841 she was living with Thomasina (probably her mother). Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrule had remission for premeditated felonies carried out against him at Bonjedward. The nature of the crimes is not given, but were presumably plundering of his farm. He could be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (d.bef. 1504) killed in Jedburgh Abbey. At the Justice-aire of 1504 Lord Home, the Earl of Bothwell, Hugh Douglas in Biggar and several men in Jedburgh became sureties for a list of men who were accused of his murder. Later in 1504 there was a long list of tenants, factors and servants of the Archbishop of Glasgow, Robert Blackadder, who had remission for involvement in his murder. In 1506 there was also remission to John Forman and several Rutherfords for involvement in his murder. It is unclear which branch of the Rutherfords he belonged to, and what the circumstances were that led to his death. It is possible he was the Thomas, son of Nicholas, who was denounced as a rebel in 1494/5 for the murder of ‘Duthac Rutherford’ and who was also ‘at the horn’ in 1498 for his part in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. The Thomas who was connected with the death of Patrick Hepburn was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him, Adam Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. Thomas of Edgerston (15th/16th C.) 3rd son of James of that Ilk and Wells. His brothers Philip and John died before him, and he succeeded his nephew Richard. However, his niece Helen gained Rutherford and Wells, and he kept Edgerston. He was thus the progenitor of the Lairds of Edgerston. He was probably the son of James of that Ilk who was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. In 1502 Richard Hunter had remission for stealing sheep from his lands at Edgerston. He may be the Thomas who in 1503 witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primsideloch. He may be the Thomas of that Ilk who (along with John of Hundalee and George of Hunthill) had a bond of manrent with Alexander, Lord Home in 1516. He was succeeded by his son Richard (or possibly Robert). Other sons may have been: Philip, who lived at Edgerston and was tutor to his nephew Thomas, the ‘Black Laird’; John, who is said to have had 6 digits on each hand and foot, and to have had ‘memorable strength and courage’, and whose descendants occupied ‘the Tofts’; and Archibald of the Townhead, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Townhead and of ‘the Hall’. It is possible he was the Thomas who was on the panel in 1482 for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Apple-treehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. He may have been the Thomas who as on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill in 1525, and who was listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Thomas of the Grange (15th/16th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Hundalee. He seems likely to be the brother of the Laird of Hundalee who in 1493 acted as surety for Patrick Rodman from Rulewater. He was described being in the Grange of Abbotrule at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh when he acted as surety for Patrick Rodman. Also in 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Hundalee when he was surety for Jedburgh men. In 1502 he was recorded as brother of John of Hundalee when the pair of them served as sureties for Nicholas (who may have been related). Also in 1502 he had remission for resetting Gilbert Oliver, a man called 'Wobstar' and James Rutherford, who had stolen animals; John of Hundalee was his surety. Additionally he had remission in 1502 for stealing livestock and for resetting other thieves, including Nixons, who raided Raperlaw and elsewhere, and Englishmen from Redesdale; again John of Hundalee was his surety. He is listed as being 'in the Grange' among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His sons Andrew, George and 'Dougal Stible' are also listed (the last presumably being a son-in-law). He was probably succeeded by George. Thomas (16th C.) first man listed as a witness to the instrument of resignation for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30, witnessed at Cavers Kirk. It is unclear whether he was a church official or local landowner, or how he was related to other Rutherfords. Sir Thomas 'the Black Laird of Edgerston' (c.1550–1615) son of Richard and grandson (or perhaps great-grandson) of the first Robert of Edgerston. His nickname came from his complexion and dark hair ('being of a swarthy complexion and black haired'), but he was also known as a local leader to be reckoned with, along with his 9 sons (or perhaps this is his 8 brothers). He supposedly turned the tide of battle at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575 when he arrived with the Jedburgh contingent; however, he only succeeded as Laird in 1605 and hence it was likely to have been his father or grandfather Richard who was at the Raid. He is also said to have led the Rutherfords at the Battle of the Hencleugh. He is recorded as son and heir of Richard in 1587, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him. He married Jean, daughter of Gavin Elliott of Stobs, who may have been his cousin (although there is much confusion over this). He is said to have had 9 sons (but this is not documented, and may also have referred to his brothers). He was succeeded by his sons Richard and Robert in turn. A daughter, Jean, inherited Stobs, along with her aunts Dorothy and Esther. He is also said to have had a daughter Joan, who married William, called 'Neck of Steel', son of Robert Elliot of Larriston (but this may be confusion). Thomas 'Lippie' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It is unclear what his nickname referred to. Thomas of Tofts (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Rutherford of Tofts' in 1610 when he was on an inquest relating to lands in Rulewater. His brother William was listed among fugitives in 1618. His son Robert was accused of stealing horses in 1623. Thomas of Hunthill (16th/17th C.) son of John of Hunthill. In 1583 he and his father were summoned to appear at Jedburgh to answer charges. He was also denounced as a rebel (along with his father and others) in 1586 for not appearing to answer charges of stopping the Commendator of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. In 1590 he was 'son and apparent heir' of John of Hunthill when his cautioner was recorded as William of Littleheugh. He is probably the 'younger of Hunthill' listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March, particularly in pursuing the Earl of Bothwell. In 1592 he was summoned for charges of treason for being an accomplice of the Earl of Bothwell, but his 'horning' was lifted soon afterwards. He was juror on a retour in 1601. Also in 1601 he was head of a group of Rutherfords who were accused of firing weapons towards the Youngs at a horserace; his brothers William and Robert were also listed and after confessing he was warded in Edinburgh Castle for 24 hours. Alexander Lord Home was his cautioner that he would pay 500 merks to the Crown for 'shooting ith pistols'. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace and was cautioner for John in the Tofts and his sons. In 1603 he was cautioner for George of 'Ewingstoun'. In 1611 he was fined for the non-appearance of a man he was cautioner for. In 1612 he had a charter for the lands of Hunthill and others. He married Jean, daughter of John Cranston of that ilk. He was succeeded by his son John of Hunthill. His daughter Grizel married Adam Kirkton of Stewartfield, the contract being signed at Wolfelee in 1612. Thomas of Ruecastle (16th/17th C.) probably a younger son of George of Longnewton, he was served heir to his brother Andrew 'called of Quhytehouse in Nesbit'. He had a charter of 'Rouchcastell' in 1642, along with the attached forest and the mains of Harden. In 1643 he was 'in Whitehouse' when his lands in Ruecastle were valued at £240. In 1656 he was referred to as 'Thomas of Rowcastell, called of Quhytehouse, in Nesbit'. He is probably the Thomas 'of whythouse' who paid tax on £340 in Bedrule Parish in 1663, as well as £144 worth of land he had purchased from the Earl of Traquair. He married Elizabeth Mader. It is unclear how he was related to the Thomas of Ruecastle who was served heir to his father John of Knowesouth in 1666. Sir Thomas of Hunthill (d.c.1680) 3rd son of John. He succeeded his brother John in 1656. He is probably the 'Thomas Rutherford' called of the towrs in Sjraisbury' recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. He was recorded in 2 deeds in 1663. In 1664 he succeeded to the estate of Rutherford after the death of his relative Andrew, Lord Rutherford and Earl of Teviot. In 1665 he complained to the Archbishop of Glasgow over rights to the loft in Jedburgh Church. He was also made the 2nd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Archibald. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Regality of Hawick in 1672. In that year he wrote to the inhabitants of Hawick exonerating them from attending the Head Court at Thornhill (near Drumlanrig) that year; he wrote from Jedburgh, suggesting that he could be same man as Thomas of Hunthill or Thomas of Knowesouth. Also in 1672 he was recorded, when setting the fair in October, being asked to use the Hawick drummer and piper to 'set the fair', rather than the ones from Jedburgh; he called the roll in the kirkyard for all the inhabitants to ride the fair. Thomas (17th C.) residend of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Robson and their children included William (b.1659). Thomas (17th C.) residend of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary (or Manie) Fletcher in 1660 and their children included: Walter (b.1661). Thomas of Ruecastle or Knowesouth (17th C.) eldest son of John of Knowesouth. In 1666 he was served heir to his father's 7-pound-10-shilling land of Ruecastle, with 'lie Maynes de Harden et forresta de Rowcastle' (annexed to the Barony of Grubet), as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle with a piece of land called Newtonhaugh (in Bedrule Parish), some land in the Earldom of Traquair and a further 1½ merklands in Ruecastle (in the Barony of Ulston). It is unclear how he was related to the John of Ruecastle recorded a little earlier, but was described in 1666 as 'junior' (suggesting this was used to distinguish him, or just that he was a minor when he succeeded). In 1673 his brother Robert became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. He paid the land tax in Bedrule Parish in 1678, the lands then valued at £511 and included lands previously in Ruecastle. In 1687 he sub-leased the lands of Minto 'Kaims and Hills' from William Mather. He is probably the Thomas of Knowesouth who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690. He may have been Laird in 1694 when the Hearth Tax was paid on the Knowesouth estate. He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1673 he married Isobel, daughter of Robert Ker of Linton (hereditary Bailie of Jedburgh) and was probably succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas (17th C.) married Isobel Scott in Robertson Parish in 1680. Thomas (17th C.) listed as resident at Roughheugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas of Knowesouth (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas and Isobel Ker. He married Cecilia Douglas, grand-daughter of George Douglas of Ardit, and daughter of William Douglas and Agnes Scott (daughter of Patrick of Ancrum). His children included: Ann, who married William Chisholme of Broadlee in 1702; John (b.c.1685), who was probably a doctor, in 1710 married Isobell, daughter of the deceased William Scott of Raeburn and as a captured Jacobite supporter was transported to Virginia; William, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1708; and Christina (1702–82), who married Gilbert Ainslie in 1724. Although his son John was a Jacobite, he himself stayed loyal to the Crown; however, he probably had to pay in order for his son to be settled in Virginia without being a slave. Rev. Thomas (17th/18th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1683, he became minister of Southdean Parish in 1689. However, he was deprived later that year for 'not reading the Proclamation of the Estates, and not praying for their majesties William and Mary' (i.e. refusing to give up Episcopacy), and was said to have instead prayed for the late King James. The case was brought to the Privy Council by a group of Southdean Parishioners. He was declared a fugitive, but what happened to him afterwards is not known. Thomas of Edgerston, Hunthill and Wells (c.1650–1720) 3rd son of John. He succeeded after his brother Andrew's death in 1718, but only held the lands for a couple of years before his own death. They had become 'of that Ilk' in 1703 when Robert Earl of Rutherford resigned his lands. He was also Laird of Wells, purchasing it (with his wife's money) from Charles Stewart, 4th Earl of Traquair in 1687. He was listed as Laird of Wells in 1694 when he paid for 19 hearths in several parishes. He was also 'of Wells' when he contributed £800 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1690 and 1704 he was listed as Laird of Wells on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. However, in 1707 he sold Wells it to William Elliot, and was thus the last Rutherford Laird of Wells. He also acquired Bonjedward, Mounthooly and Scraesburgh, before 1707, when he was recorded as owner of more than £2200 worth of land in Bonjedward. He married Susanna, daughter and heiress of Walter Riddell of Minto and Catherine Nisbet of Dirleton. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir John. His other children were: Barbara; Catherine; Jean, who secondly married William Douglas of Timpendean in 1718; Agnes; Isabella; Susanna; and Violet, who married Robert Scott of Falnash. A stone preserved in the new Wells House built in the early 20th century, bore 18 coats of arms, showing the descent of both him and his wife. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Walter (b.1691) and Robert (b.1694). Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1694. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Janet Elliot in Castleton in 1707. Some of these children, baptised in Castleton, are probably theirs (the others perhaps being children of Robert and Agnes Bell): Agnes (b.1708); Mary (b.1708); Thomas (b.1708); Janet (b.1710); and Michael (b.1710). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Elizabeth (b.1735) and Robert (b.1738). Thomas (18th C.) married Bessy Taylor in Minto Parish in 1743. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Helen 'Fameltoun' in 1747 and their children included George (b.1748). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included James (b.1752) and William (b.1755). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1746), John (b.1748) and an unnamed child (b.1757). Thomas (18th C.) married Agnes Richardson in Southdean Parish in 1761. Thomas of Knowesouth (1742–96) son of John and Mary Ker, he held a charter of Knowesouth in 1758 (his father being declared insane). He was descended from the Rutherfords of Ruecastle. In 1788 he was 'younger of Knowsouth' when his lands of Westfield (and others) in Lanton were listed in the valuation roll. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having a small estate, being 'once Sheriff-Substitute of the County under Oliver of Dinlabyre' and probably being a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–94. He paid tax for having a male servant in 1778, 1779 and 1794. In the 1788 county valuation he is recorded as owner of 'Lands in Rewcastle acquired from
