in 1861. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Armstrong, from Canonbie. Their children included Elizabeth, Ann, William (an agricultural labourer and carter) and Mary. He is probably the carter at Greens listed among heads of households in 1835–41. William (b.1774/5) wright in Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He was a joiner in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and a wright in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on North Hermitage Street and in 1851 at about 5 Whitchester Street. His wife was Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Wemyss and they had a son, Charles (b.1814). William (b.c.1770s) servant at Horsleyhill in Minto Parish according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. In 1801 a wright of the same name was also listed at Horsleyhill. William (b.c.1780) wright at Horsleyhill in Minto Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was separate from the farm servant of the same name who was also there in 1801. One of them was probably the William whose children George (b.1806) and Catherine (b.1807) were baptised in Minto. William (b.c.1780s) labourer at Howpasley according to the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. William (d.1842) son of a mason from Lower Burnmouth in Castleton, he was educated at Teviothead. From 1810 he was master at the small school at Burnmouth, and was later a mason in Newcastleton. He made a sketch of Hermitage Castle before it was renovated in 1820. In 1806, at the desire of Lord Dalkeith, he performed some excavations at Hermitage, uncovering a paved floor and finding a large key. When the school at Burnmouth was closed during harvest time he travelled the country lettering new tombstones, and deciphering old ones. He collected historical artefacts, and was an expert on local traditions. He published ‘Border Exploits’ in Hawick in 1812 (2nd edition 1832) and also ‘Beauties of the Border’ (1821). He was recorded as schoolmaster at Burnmouth among heads of households 1835–41. He was listed as master of the auxiliary parochial school at Burnmouth in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He married Isabella Veitch from the Bedrule family. He had 3 sons, one of whom, Andrew (b.1800), became a Professor at Aberdeen University, while another, Thomas, was a teacher at Beith and Kirkcaldy in Fife. He is probably the William (aged 77) who is recorded as a schoolmaster at Burnmouth in 1841, living along with his wife Janet (presumably a second wife). He died after accidentally being thrown from a cart and is buried in Castleton. David Anderson wrote a poem after he died – ‘No more will be sculpture the stone for the dead, No more show the young the pure path they should tread, No more, lonely Hermitage, will he pourtray Thy clear sparkling waters and battlements grey’ [DA].

William (18th/19th C.) married Jean Lillico in Wilton in 1819. William (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the publican on the High Street (at about No. 30) on the 1841 census, living there with Christian, Robert, Adam and Margaret, probably all his younger siblings, and all born outside Hawick. William (b.1778/9) mason at Borthaugh Cottage. He is recorded as a mason at Borthaugh in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; he was still at Borthaugh in 1799 when listed was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish’ and still listed as a mason at Borthaugh in 1801. His wife was Helen, and their children included Isabella, James, John, William, Robert and Thomas. William (c.1779–1855) son of William and Euphemia Smail, he was born in Traquair. He was brought up in Yarrow and Ettrick Parishes, but later was a handloom weaver in Balgonie, Markinch Parish, Fife. He married Isobell Bell, who was born in Dunbar and died in Balgonie, Fifeshire. Their children were: William (1801–48), farm worker in Ashkirk Parish; John (b.1803); Margaret (b.1805); Euphemia (b.1807); James (1809–74), wood sawyer who died in Galashiels; Walter (1811–33); David (b.1813); Thomas (b.1817); Isabell (b.1819); Robert (b.1822); and Andrew (1825–97), weaver in Selkirk. He died in Selkirk. William of Teviot Bank (1782–1841), W.S., eldest son of John of Glenormiston, who was a younger son of William of Woll and Jean Balfour. He trained as a lawyer, being apprentice to William Riddell. He purchased Teviot Bank in about 1804, and became a heritor of Minto Parish. He was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1838. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He was said to be a writer on the subjects of phrenology and scriptural history. In 1831 he presented more than 40 volumes to Denholm Subscription Library. In 1808 he married Jane Jordan of Edinburgh in 1808 and they had one son, John, who succeeded. In 1816 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Dr. Andrew Duncan, Professor of Medicine of Edinburgh and had 3 further children: Dr. Andrew James (1817–84);

William Charles (1820–1871); and Agnes Beatrice, who died unmarried. William (b.1788) 3rd son of Alexander and Christian Scott. His great-grandfather was John Scott of Woll. He succeeded his father as tenant of Ladhope farm in Yarrow. In 1847 he married Jean, daughter of Mr. Currie of Howford. Their children were: Alexander (b.1847) who succeeded to the tenancy of Ladhope, married his cousin (once removed) Jane, daughter of Henry Scott of Gilmanscleuch, and moved to Whinfell Park near Penrith; Charles William, who became a tweed manufacturer in Galashiels; and Henrietta, who married Thomas Mitchell from Cumberland. William (b.1788/9) born in Cavers Parish, he was an agricultural worker in Minto Parish. He was living at Minto on the 1841–61 censuses, being listed as a shepherd in 1861. His children included Isabel (b.c.1815), John (b.1814/5), Barbara (b.c.1820), James (b.c.1835) and Elliot (b.1836/7). William (1789–1867) born in Wilton, son of handloom weaver Walter and Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Biggar, who both died at Dovemount. He emigrated to the U.S.A. in 1812, and also encouraged his brother Robert and sister Margaret to move to Ohio (while his brother Walter and sister Sarah continued to live in Hawick). He eventually settled in New York, becoming a successful businessman, partner in Scott & Leggat (with his old Hawick friend William Leggat), a dry goods firm. He was a keen member of the St. Andrew’s Society in New York. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Dr. John Philip Burkhart Roos. Their children were: Walter L., and William L., who died young; Mary; Eliza; Sarah Gertrude; Margaret J.; Henrietta; Charlotte; and John Burkhart. He returned to Hawick in 1856. A portrait of him was painted by Seymour Guy in 1860, and his grandfather clock, from Thomas Graham’s in Hawick, is still with the family. William (1792–1828) youngest son of Charles, Laird of Wauchope and Howcleuch and Elizabeth Dickson. He was a Lieutenant in the 21st Madras Native Infantry and then Captain in the 42nd Madras Native Infantry. He died unmarried in India. William (b.1792/3) born in Selkirk, he was a shoemaker on the Howegate, at about No. 14. He is listed on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 director, as well as on the censuses for 1841 and 1851. His wife was Elizabeth, and children included Walter, Jane, Elizabeth, James and Catherine. William (b.1792/3) slater in Hawick and Wilton. In 1835 he was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, when he was a slater at Damhead. By 1840 he was living on Melgund Place. He was a journeyman slater on O'Connell Street on the 1841 census and he was at 13 O'Connell Street (probably what was later No. 2, now demolished) as a slater. His wife was Agnes and they had a son Robert. William (b.c.1795) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a joiner on Buccleuch Street. He was probably at about No. 25 on the 1841 census. His wife was Agnes, and children included Agnes, Janet and Margaret. He may have married Janet Cook, who was a widow and innkeeper at 17 High Street. He may be the William whose heirs were recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick in about 1874. William (1795–1859) clerk with Wilson's, who was known as a local poet and a strong temperance supporter. He was a friend of James Ruickbie, and had 10 of his own poems included in Ruickbie's 'Poems' (1826). He wrote some lines about the talents of his contemporary, James Hogg (of 'Teribus'). He was also a close friend of the local poet Elliot Aitchison, as well as Andrew Leyden, brother of the poet and linguist. He was a competitor in the contest for poems of the Auld Brig in 1851, and also contributed to the local press. A poem on the celebration of the Duke of Buccleuch's birthday apparently earned him a job as a clerk at the Dalkeith colliery. He later moved further away and died in Belfast. His daughter Margaret Isabella Sarah was the first wife of Sir James A.H. Murray, while another daughter, Elizabeth Jane married George Easton. His long poem 'The Sportynge Dominie; or, a Sang o' ane Gray Cattie' was published in 'Living Bards of the Border' in 1859, when he was said to have 'now left this country and gone to Ireland'; this poem contains many examples of dialect words from the mid-19th century. William (b.c.1785) butcher of the Howegate, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is probably the Hawick butcher of that name who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He may be the William listed as a flesher in Hawick (after George, also a flesher) among heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 census he was living alone at around 60 High Street. An unnamed child of his died in 1816 and his son James died in 1823, aged 15. William (19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Hogg and their children included Robert (b.1833). William (1800/1–1858) eldest son of Walter, he took over as tenant of Girnwood. He was already listed there in 1841, when he had 2 female servants and also 2 farm labourers also living in his house. He married Ann Laidlaw in Roberton in 1821. Their children were: Walter (b.1822), who succeeded as tenant of Girnwood; and Margaret, who married George Davies, and whose daughter Hannah purchased the property. William (1801–48) born in Yarrow Parish, he lived in Ashkirk, at several farms around Synton, working as a farm labourer, gamekeeper and thatcher. In 1841 the family were living at Synton Lodge. In 1826 he married Mary Scott (c.1806–80), daughter of John and Helen Scott from Selkirk Parish; there are thus a lot of Scotts in this family tree! Their sons were: William (1826–78); John (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); George (b.1836); Alexander (b.1840); and Walter (b.1846), who emigrated to Canada. He died in an unfortunate way, having fallen into the mill lade near Roughheugh Mill, and being rescued, he walked home to Synton Mill on a cold October night and next day was found to the north of Groundstone Heights, having frozen to death. His widow and children were living at Dimpleknowe in 1851. He is buried in Ashkirk kirkyard. William (b.1803) son of George, he was a joiner at Deanburnhaugh, like his father before him. He was recorded as a joiner there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His retired father George was living with his family in 1861. He married Isabella Brown in 1836 and their children included: George (b.1836); William (b.1838); Barbara (b.1840); Robert (b.1842); Mary (b.1844); Isabella (b.1847); Adam (b.1849); Margaret (b.1852); and Ann (b.1858). William (19th C.) shepherd at Gorrenberry. In 1832 he was accused of 'the sin of fornication' with Alison Crozier. At the same time John 'in Castleton' was accused of the same thing with Jean Crozier (perhaps her sister). William (19th C.) listed as a carrier in 1837, leaving Hawick for Langholm once a week. It is possible that he was from Langholm. William (b.c.1800) ironmonger and blacksmith on the Howegate. He is recorded at about No. 7 in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Isabella, from Aberlady, and their children included Joseph, George, Helen, Margaret and Isabella. William (b.1802/3) foreman at Weensland Mills. He was living there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Ann, and their children included Ebenezer, Louisa (who married James McMorran), John, Janet Stuart, Robert, William and Ann. Sir William of Ancrum (1803–71) 7th Baronet, son of Sir John. He succeeded his brother Sir John when still a minor, and lived at Ancrum House. He served briefly as an officer in the 2nd Life Guards. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1826, but left in 1834 when the Chariman refused to toast the new Whig M.P. He was M.P. for Carlisle 1829–30 and for Roxburghshire 1859–70. He was unopposed in 1865, defeated Lord Schomberg Henry Kerr in 1868 and resigned in 1870. He was also a J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, as well as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for the county. He served on the Lunacy Board for the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick and on the Police and Prison Boards for Roxburghshire. He was also a Vice-President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of David Anderson of Balgay, Forfar, and she died in 1878. He was succeeded by his son Sir William Monteath, with whom the Baronetcy became extinct. His other children were: John (d.1859), Captain in the Scots Guard; Henry (or Harry) Warren (1833–89), who married Cecilia Louisa Burnaby; Arthur (1835–74), who died unmarried; Elizabeth, married Lieut.-Col. Charles Lennox Tredcroft; Harriet, married Col. Edward E. Dulier, and whose daughter Irene became the 10th Baroness; and Louisa, married Sir Robert William Duff, M.P., Governor of New South Wales. William (19th C.) shepherd at Dinlees. He was recorded among heads of households in Castleton Parish in 1840 and 1841. William (b.1807/8) originally from Peeblesshire, he was blacksmith on Allars Crescent. His wife was Christian and children included Robert, Adam, Margaret and Christian. William (b.1809/10) innkeeper on Douglas Street in Newcastleton. He is probably son of Thomas, who was previously an innkeeper in the village. In 1852 he is listed as proprietor of the King's Arm's (which later became the Commercial Inn, and is now the Liddesdale Hotel). His wife was Anne (from Langholm), and their children included Mary and Thomas. William (b.1809–77) tobacconist at 40 High Street and later farmer at Burnhead. Unmarried, he was son of the Town Treasurer, James, who was also a tobacconist, with his mother being Elizabeth Turnbull. He was Cornet in 1832, served on the Town Council and was twice a Magistrate. He is listed on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He is listed at about 40 High Street on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, living with his sisters Elizabeth and Margaret. In 1851 he was employing 1 man, 1 apprentice, 5 boys and 1 girl. In 1868 he was recorded as farmer at Burnhead. William (19th C.) resident of Denholm. His poem 'Oh, Gin My Luve was a Daisy' was published in 'Living Bards of the Border' in 1859. He is distinct from the Hawick poet of the same name (who is also included in the same volume); however, he may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (b.1813/4) bootmaker at 3 Bourtree Place. His wife was Elizabeth, and their children included Robert, George L., William, James G., Rachel A., Thomas R., Elizabeth N. and Nancy A. William (b.c.1815) shoemaker at the east end in 1841. He was probably living around 6 Bourtree Place. In 1851 he was recorded at 2 Bourtree Place (although the numbering was probably different). His wife was Elizabeth (Betsey), from Leith. They had children Robert, George L. William, James G., Rachel A. and Thomas R. William (b.1816/7) skinner in Wilton and Hawick. In 1851 he was a skinner at Wilton Lodge Gate House, employing an apprentice. In 1861 he was at 2 Round Close, employing 2 men and 3 apprentices. He could have been partner in either 'Michael & Scott, Punch Bowl close' or 'Scott & Michie, Teviot square', both of which are listed in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1872 he was listed as a skinner in Hawick, with his discharge connected to the Teviot. His wife was Margaret R. (probably Davidson). William 'Willie' (b.c.1820) farm labourer who lived at Martinshouse. He was known as a great runner. There was a special race arranged between him and William Stewart from Hawthornside. It took place over half a mile near Stobs, with all of his supporters present; however, he lost to Stewart. William (1821/2–83) son of John, from whom he succeeded to Timpendean. In 1857 he became a member of the Royal Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland. In 1861 he was farmer there of 1600 acres, employing 16 labourers. He was recorded at Timpendean in a directory of 1868. He married Margaret Patterson, from Morebattle. Their children included John, Ellen, Agnes, Francis, Margaret and Isabella. William John (1827–73) son of James of Ellem and Agnes. He was a great-grandson of William of Woll. He was living at Teviot Bank in 1851, when he farmed 240 acres and employed 9 labourers and had 5 servants. His cousin Jane Elliot also acted as a housekeeper. He was also listed at Teviot Bank in an 1852 directory. He formally succeeded to Teviot Bank on the death of his mother about 1857, but sold it in 1860. He married Theresa Newcomer Harris (1839–1928) in London, Ontario. He was born (in 1837 according to some sources) in Jedburgh and died on the H.H.S. Palestine near Suez. His wife secondly married explorer Clement Littledale, and she became the first woman to enter the Tibetan monastery of Lhasa. William Percival (1820/1–93) son of Robert and Janet Colledge. He was a stockingmaker in Denholm, living on Leyden Road. He married Mary McCallum, who died in 1910, aged 90. William (b.1824/5) from Melrose, he was an agricultural labourer living at Minto Kaims in 1851. He married Margaret Henderson (from Jedburgh) and their children included Margaret (b.1849) and John (b.1851). William (19th C.) quarryman recorded in Denholm in the 1860s, when he was a registered voter in the Parish. William (19th C.) game-keeper to the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1863 he presented to the Museum a gyr-falcon, which had been shot at Tandlaw Moss. William (1826–78) eldest son of William and Mary Scott, he was born at Synton Parkhead. In 1841 he was a labourer living at Whinfield in Ashkirk Parish, in 1851 he was a farm servant living at Synton Mill and in 1861 he was a carter living at Under Hope Park in Wilton. He was later a forester on the Abbotrule estate until he died. He married Jane Hogg and had a son William (b.1851). Sir William Monteath of Ancrum (1829–1902) 8th Baronet of Ancrum, son of Sir William. He served with the 79th Highlanders and the Roxburghshire Volunteers. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant and County Councillor for Roxburghshire, as well as being a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for the county. He had a new house built at Ancrum when the original house burned down in 1873. In 1861 he married Amelia, daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Monteath Douglas of Stonebyres, and she died in 1890. They had one child, Constance Emily. William (b.1830/1) son of William and Agnes Armstrong from the Greens. He was an agricultural labourer and carter, He could be the carter of that name who is recorded in the 1860s running from Newcastleton to Hawick once a week. William (b.c.1830) born in Cavers Parish, in 1861 he was a ‘Gameguard’ living at Sunnybank in Wilton Parish. His wife Jane was from Canonbie. He may be the son of shepherd Adam and Janet Leithead who was living at Houdshall in Cavers Parish in 1841, since Janet died at Sunnybank in 1865. William (b.1833/4) born in Ettrick, he was a shepherd, living at Adderstoneshiels Cottages in 1901. His wife was Jane and their son William was also a shepherd. William Munro (b.1844) son of weaver Charles. He was a younger cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. His middle name came from his uncle. It is said that he built a canoe, which he paddled to Berwick and then down the coast to Newbigging, where he almost drowned. William (19th C.) corn merchant in Hawick. He wrote a discursive article on ‘Auld Hawick’ for the 1890 Transactions. He was Acting Father in 1888. William, J.P. (b.1848) son of Walter, tenant at Hummelknowes Mill, who later lived at Ormiston. He lived at Cheviot View, Lilliesleaf. He married Mary, eldest daughter of Thomas Bailey, Gatley, Cheshire. He had a son, Walter Nichol. William Laidlaw ‘Wowie’ (1847–1922) son of grocer and shoemaker Charles. He was said to be somewhat simple and had a speech impediment. He continued his father’s shoemaking business. William (b.1851) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, son of William and Jane Hogg. His father William (b.1826) was born in Ashkirk, son of William and Mary Scott. He worked locally in the building trade. He later moved to England, where he was an architect. He married 3 times, and had 4 children, one of whom, Euphemia, had a son, Hugh McNeill, comic-book artist of the mid-1900s. Scott an Oman’s (ske'-in-ō-minz) n. photography business at 4 Mill Port in the late 19th century. George Oman came to Hawick in 1867 and in 1868 formed a partnership with William Scott. Their business was initially based in the former photography rooms of William Beattie.

Scott an Paterson (ske'-in-pi'-ur-son) n. local printing firm, established in 1911 by ‘Piper’ Scott and Tom Paterson. Originally at 21 High Street, the firm later moved to No. 9. In 1988 it was purchased by John Thorburn.

Scott an Rutherford’s (ske'-in-ru-thurfordz) n. auctioneers and livestock salesmen. They sold sheep at the Auction Mart, as well as on Denholm Green. There is a 1915 photograph of sheep being driven to one of their auctions on Noble Place.

Scott-Chisholme (ske'-chi-zum) n. name sometimes used for the last few generations of the Chisholmes of Stirches (also written ‘Scott-Chisholm’; see Chisholme).

Scott Crescent (ske'-kre-sin') n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1952 and named after Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford.

Scott-Douglas (ske'-dug-lis) n. Sir George Henry of Springwood Park (1825–85) 4th Baronet and son of Sir John James Douglas and Hannah Charlotte Scott of Horsleyhill and Belford, as well as being the grandson of Sir George Douglas, who had been M.P. for Roxburghshire 1784–1806. His father had changed the family surname as part of the inheritance of his mother’s family lands (she was daughter of Henry Scott, last Laird of Horsleyhill). He succeeded in 1836 and became Captain of the 34th Regiment of Foot (later the Border Regiment). He sailed extensively in the Mediterranean, journals of these trips surviving. He returned to Kelso in 1853 and made extensive improvement on the Springwood estate. He retired from the army in 1857, but in 1859 became Captain of the Kelso company of volunteers, taking command in 1867. In 1866 he is listed as Major of the Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire Battalion of Rifle Volunteers, as well as Convener of the Border Rifle Association. He was also Brigadier-General in the Royal Company of Archers. In about 1874 he was owner of Heiton and other lands in Roxburgh Parish. A Conservative in politics, in 1874 he defeated the Marquess of Bowmont in the election for Roxburghshire M.P., and he held the seat until 1880, when he lost by only 10 votes to Liberal Arthur Ralph Douglas Elliot. He also served as Chairman of the County Road Trustees and County Road Board and was a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and member of the Police Board for Roxburghshire. He took an active part in many organisations in the Kelso area and was a member of the Jedforest Club. He married Mariquita, daughter of Don Francisco Serrano Sanchez de Pina of Gibraltar. His children included: James Henry (1853–79), Lieutenant with the Royal Scots Fusiliers, who was killed in the Zulu War; Sir George Brisbane (1856–1935), who succeeded and reverted to the surname ‘Douglas’; Francis John (1858–1934); Mary Helena (b.1861); William Sholto (b.1864); and Andrew Henry (d.1868). Sir John James of Friarshaw (1792–1836) son of Sir George Douglas, he was 3rd Baronet. He served in the 15th Hussars, fighting in the Peninsular Wars and at Waterloo. He retired in 1820 and succeeded his father in 1821. He also became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1821. He stood as M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1826, but was defeated. He lived at Springwood Park until about 1830 after which he travelled abroad a great deal. He married Hannah Charlotte, daughter and heiress of Henry Scott of Belford (and Horsleyhill) and thus assumed the addition of ‘Scott’ to his surname. His widow remarried to William Kerr of Sunlaws. His children were: Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas, who succeeded; and 3 daughters. A portrait of his is the last work of Raeburn.

Scott-Elliot (ske'-e-li') n. Adam (1775–1821) 4th son of Rev. William Scott of Southdean. He was an insurance broker in London and merchant in Leith. In 1807 he married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton. After his wife’s brother Maj. Robert Elliot died in 1810 she became sole heir, and they assumed the conjoint surname. His wife died in Edinburgh in 1816. In 1818 he became a member of the Jedforest Club. His children were: Ann (b.1809 in Hackney); William (b.1811), W.S., who succeeded to Arkleton; and Cassandra (b.1814), who married John Rutherford, W.S. George Fraser (1784–1848) youngest child of Capt. James Scott, who lived at Forge in Canonbie. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. A childhood accident left him lame, and with the nickname ‘Pinfoot’. He worked as a law clerk in London. After the death of his father’s cousin, Maj.-Gen. William Elliot of Larriston in 1803, he inherited the lands of Larriston and took the additional name of Elliot; he was just 19 when he inherited. A local rumour circulated that he was the illegitimate son of the Maj.-Gen., but this was not the case. He is probably the ‘George Elliot’ of Larriston listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He also lived at ‘Woodslee’, near Canonbie and farmed at Nether Woodslee. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In the Land Tax Rolls for 1811 he was owner of ‘Larriston, comprehending Over and Nether Lariston, and Mill and Mill Lands thereof’, as well as Larriston Rig and Blackhope. In 1813 he became a member of the Highland Society of Scotland. He also became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813 and gave the 2nd toast at the gathering to welcome home the 5th Duke of Buccleuch in 1839. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was a cautioner for the agent of the Leith Banking Company in Langholm in 1822, and involved in a related court case in 1830. Having inherited an estate that was already in debt, and failing in introducing a new breed of sheep, he became insolvent in 1843 and sold Larriston to James Jardine. He married Ann Marjory ‘Marion’, from the closely-connected Bell family. Their children included: William Elliot (b.1818), who became Surveyor of Customs; James (1820–80), merchant in Calcutta, father of explorer George Francis; George (1821–49), Lieutenant in the Madras Artillery, died at Jalnash; Marion (1823–1908), married George Douglas and secondly Rev. George Colville of Canonbie; Charles (1825–99), became a General in India and married Mary Vertue; Harris, or ‘Harry’ (b.1828); Pheobe Anne (‘Annie’, d.1868) married Alexander Walker; and Eliza Georgina Isabella, who married Francis Henry Connolly in 1865 and died in Madras. He died at Woodslee, Canonbie, where he is buried. James (1820–80) 3rd son of George Fraser. He became a prosperous merchant in Calcutta, returning to Scotland in 1866.

He kept extensive diaries in the period 1842–65, which are in the National Library. He married Francisca May Durand. They had 3 sons and 5 daughters, including: Prof. George Francis (1862–1934), a botanist, explorer and author; Lieut.-Col. William (1873–1943), who has descendants still bearing the ‘Scott-Elliot’ surname; Charles, who died in infancy; Edith May, who married Joseph Gillon Fergusson; Annie Emilia, who married Capt. Arthur Ripley Pott of Todrig and Borthwickshiels and secondly married Capt. J.A. Doig; Lilian, who married Eric Talyeur; and Ethel and Eliza, who both died young. A portrait of him exists. His diaries are in the National Library of Scotland. John (b.c.1818) 2nd surviving son of Thomas Elliot (brother of William of Harwood) and Helen Scott (daughter of Thomas of Peel). He inherited Riccalton (in Oxnam Parish) from his uncle John Scott and took the additional surname of Scott. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also succeeded to the life-rent of Peel on the death of his brother William. He was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 as owner of ‘Backstonelees, Blackstonelees, or Peel’, as well as Riccalton, with his name written as ‘John Scott Elliot Scott of Peel’. When he died the liferent and existing leases went to his nephew John Elliot in Flatt. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (1779–1816) daughter of William of Arkleton. Her brothers Adam, Robert and William all died in service overseas. She inherited Arkleton in 1810 and assumed the name Scott-Elliot. In 1807 she married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott, minister at Southdean. Their children were: Ann; Cassandra, who married John Rutherford; and William, who succeeded. Walter Travers of Arkleton (1895–1977) only child of William. He was the 11th Laird of Arkleton and was a Captain in the Coldstream Guards. He was Managing Director in the Bombay Company, trading goods between Britain and India. In 1945 he was elected as Labour M.P. for Accrington, serving as a Parliamentary Private Secretary to the War Office and on the Executive Committee of the National Trust. He stood down in 1948 and went back to his estate and business. He firstly married Reichsdele Maria Alice, daughter of Capt. Alexander Reichstitter von Groeller, formerly of the Austro-Hungarian Navy. He secondly married Dorothy, daughter of William Nunn of Calcutta. In 1964 he sold Arkleton to Prof. Higgs of Oxford. Along with his wife Dorothy, he was murdered by his new Butler, Archibald Hall, after being drugged and driven to the Highlands. The case caused a sensation at the time. William of Arkleton (1811–1901), W.S., only son of Margaret Elliot and Adam Scott. His parents had adopted the double-barelled surname in order to inherit the Arkleton estate. He is famous for modelling for a portrait by Sir Henry Raeburn at the age of about 4. His father died in 1821 and he succeeded to Arkleton when he reached majority. He was trained as a lawyer, became Writer to the Signet in 1833 and served as a J.P. He attended the 1839 dinner at Branhholme given in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch. He had Arkleton renovated as a Scots baronial house, probably under the influence of his father-in-law. In 1848 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Edinburgh architect Lewis Alexander Wallace, and they had 7 children: William (b.1849), who succeeded; Louisa (b.1850); Isabel (b.1852), who married Edward A. Baxter of Kincaldrum; Margaret (b.1854); Lewis Alexander (b.1857), who firstly married Laura, daughter of Col. Hastings of the U.S. Army and secondly married Princess Eydua Marie, daughter of Prince Arthur Odescalchi of Szwipe, Hungary; Col. Adam (b.1860) of the Cameron Highlanders, who married Marjorie, daughter of Lewis Evans of Cornell Park; and Mary (b.1861). William of Peel (1811/2–71) 3rd son of Thomas Elliot (brother of William of Harwood) and Helen Scott (daughter of Thomas of Peel). He inherited the lands of Peel in Liddesdale from his uncle John Scott and took the additional surname of Scott (as his brother John did to inherit Riccalton). He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He was listed as one of the principal landowners in Castleton Parish in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farmer of 6098 acres at Kirndean, living with his sisters Ann Jane and Christian. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. After his death his brother John succeeded to the life-rent of Peel. William (1818–1905) eldest son of George Fraser. He was brought up to be heir of the Larriston estate, but after his father went bankrupt he entered the Customs & Excise service, eventually becoming Surveyor of Customs at Leith. After falling from his horse he was nursed by the woman he would later marry, Jessie Brown, daughter of a Renfrewshire minister. Their only son, William, died unmarried in 1948. They also had daughters Georgina, Netta (or Janet), Marion and Anne (or Annie). William of Arkleton (1849–1919) eldest son of William, and descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was a merchant banker in London. He was a member of the Theosophy Society,

the Scottish Cashmere Asocciation

through whom he met Charles Leadbetter. The pair claimed to have received knowledge of ancient Atlantis via ‘astral clairvoyance’. He subsequently wrote the books ‘The Story of Atlantis’ (1896) and ‘The Lost Lemuria’ (1904), in which he described the supposed development of early races of 15-foot tall Lemurians into modern humans. He matriculated arms in 1904. In 1893 he married Maude Louisa, daughter of Robert Boyle Travers of Farsid, County Cork. His only child was Walter Travers, M.P. for Accrington.

Scott Gallery (ske-’gaw-lu-ree) n. extension to Wilton Lodge Museum, built in 1975 with grants from the Scottish Arts Council, education authorities and other bodies. It houses the town’s collection of largely 19th and 20th century local artwork, and show-cases temporary exhibitions. It was named after Bailie F. Scott, who first suggested its construction back in 1906, and also partly after R.E. Scott, who was Museum curator at the time. The gallery was opened by Earl Haig of Bemersyde, with the first display being largely the former Hawick Art Club collection. During the building work sections of 5 foot thick walls from an earlier house were uncovered. This area behind Wilton Lodge was a courtyard of servants’ areas, coach-house and stables until the 1950s.

Scottie (ske-’ee) n. nickname for various people with the surname Scott, starting at least as early as James Scott in 1708.

Scottie Dottle (ske-’ee-do-’ul) n. nickname in use in the mid-19th century – ‘Scottie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam’l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grim’ [HI] (‘Dottle’ may relate to a Scots word for ‘dotage’, or to the half-burnt plug of tobacco in the bottom of a pipe).

Scottish (ske-’eesh) adj. relating to Scotland, its people, culture or language – ‘if it’s no Scottish it’s crap’, ‘...Can mingle with the mortal throng; ’Tis when from heart to heart we roll The deep-toned music of the soul, That warbles in our Scottish song’ [JL].

She married mime artist Desmond Jones and changed her name from Scott to Scott-Jones. She has appeared many times on stage, radio and television, as well as in movies such as 'Local Hero' (1983), 'Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan' (1984), 'Restless Natives' (1985) and 'God Help the Girl' (2014).

Scott-Kerr (sko'-ker) n. Alexander of Chatto and Sunlaws (d.1790) eldest son of William, whom he succeeded in 1782. He was a Lieutenant in the 62nd Regiment of Foot. He died unmarried in Philadelphia and his brother Robert succeeded. Robert of Chatto and Sunlaws (d.1831) son of William. He succeeded on the death of his brother Alexander in 1790. In 1806 he married Elizabeth Bell, daughter of David Fyffe of Drumgeith. He had an only son, William, as well as daughters Anne, Elizabeth Graeme, Margaret, Rebecca Agnes and Madeline. Robert of Chatto and Sunlaws (b.1859) eldest son of William and Frances Louisa Fennessy. He served as Lieutenant in the Scottish Borders Militia, later was a Major in the Grenadier Guards and eventually became Brigadier-General during WWI. He was a Magistrate for Roxburghshire and became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1894. He married Margaret, daughter of W. Walters. William (1731–82) eldest son of Dr. Alexander Scott of Thirlestane, who was descended from the Scotts of Harden. His mother was Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden. He became a merchant in Edinburgh. In 1759 he was entailed in the lands of Chatto and Sunlaws by his distant relative Christian Kerr. He thereafter changed his surname to inherit. He sold Thirlestane (or 'Thirlestain', near Yetholm) before he died. In 1762 he married Elizabeth Graeme of Balgowan, Perth. Their children included: Elizabeth (1763–1845) who married Dr. James Chichester Maclaurin; Barbara Christian (1766–1845); Janet (or Jesse) Murray, who married Sir Peter Thriep-land; Alexander, who succeeded to the estates; Robert, who succeeded his brother; Charlotte, who lived with her sister Barbara in Edinburgh; Stuart (d.1797); and Rebecca Agnes, 'Nancy Rebecca' (d.1796). William of Chatto and Sunlaws (1807–90), J.P., only son of Robert. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was listed as owner of lands in Heiton in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. In 1837 he married Hannah Charlotte, only child and heiress of Henry Scott of Horsleyhill and Belford, who was widow of Sir John Douglas of Springwood Park. They had one child, Elizabeth Mary Charlotte, who married Sir James H. Ramsay of Banff. In 1855 he secondly married Frances Louisa, daughter of Robert Fennessy, from London; she died in 1884. Their children were: Robert, who succeeded; William Murray Thriepland, who succeeded to Fingask and Toftingall; Francis Louis (b.1868), who was in the Cameron Highlanders; Francis Edith; Jessie Louisa, who married James Hunter of Anton's Hill; Christian Alice, married J.W. Scott-Moncrieff (sko'-mon-kreef) n. Robert (1793–1869) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch from 1828 until his death. He mainly dealt with the Dalkeith estate and succeeded Mr. Tait. He was at the 1839 banquet held at Bransholme to honour the Duke of Buccleuch. He married Susan Pringle (also written 'Scott Moncrieff').

Scott-Nisbet (sko'-niz-bi') n. John of Craigentinnie (1729–64) born at Anrum, 3rd son of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and Christian Nisbet of Dirleton. He succeeded to the estate of Craigentinnie in right of his mother, taking the additional surname of Nisbet. He married Margaret Lewis, whose father was Collector of His Majesty's Customs at Leith. Their son John was Laird of Craigentinnie and later succeeded as 5th Baroent of Ancrum, dropping the additional Nisbet in his surname.

Scott-Noble (sko'-nō-bul) n. George (1923–2004) youngest son of Robert, he was born at Borthwickbrae. He attended Robertson School and then Loretto near Musselburgh. He worked for the family firm and then volunteered for the R.A.F. in 1942, transferring to the R.D.F. after suffering an ear infection in South Africa. He served in the Far East and was awarded the Burma Star. After the War he studied textile technology in Gala and rejoined the family firm, later becoming a Director. In 1967 the firm sold Glebe Mills to Pringles and merged their remaining business with George Roberts of Selkirk and Walter Thorburn of Peebles. He worked as a traveller, especially securing orders overseas. He was then a Director of Henry Ballantyne & Sons Ltd., who had formed a conglomerate with other firms as the Scottish Worsted and Woollens Limited. In 1967 he moved from his Hawick home of Greenbank to Innerleithen. He was keen on shooting, golf and bird-watching, and was a member of the Archæological Society. He married Sheila Scott, who was grand-daughter of the founder of Lyle & Scott. He died at his home in Portugal. James Robert (1915–91) son of Robert, he became one of Hawick's most illustrious soldiers, being in the K.O.S.B. during WWII. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1940 for action at Dunkirk and became Lieutenant-Colonel in 1942. After the war he returned to the family business, Noble's, becoming managing director. He later became a farmer at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He became a J.P. in 1961 and Deputy Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1962. He married Diana Dickson, who died in 2006, aged 92. They had children Sarnia, Vanessa and Anthony. Robert (1885–1968) manufacturer of Robert Noble & Co. In the early part of the 20th century he lived at 'The Elms', purchasing it in about 1900. The family also owned 4 farms in the Borthwick valley, including Borthwickbrae. He served as a Lay Elector and Church Warden of St. Cuthbert's Kirk. In 1914 he married Edith Alice, daughter of tweed manufacturer George Sime Hutton (1893–1974) and their children included: James Robert (1915–91); Alice Holt (b.1916), who was in the Women's Auxiliary Air Force; another son; and George (1923–2004), the youngest son.

Scott-Plummer (sko'-plu-mur) n. Charles (1821–80) son of Charles Balfour Scott of Woll and Eliza Ker. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy and Oxford University. He succeeded to Woll in 1838 and in 1839 succeeded to the estates of Middlestead and Sunderland Hall, through marriage of the Scotts of Woll into the Balfour family (his great-grandmother). He thereby relinquished the estate of Woll to his uncle, Lieut.-Col. John Scott. He also took the addition of 'Plummer' to his surname. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1857 he married Sophia, 3rd daughter of Joseph Goff, from Hampshire. His children included: Maj. Charles Henry, who succeeded to Sunderland Hall and married Muriel Grace Johnstone-Douglas; Lieut.-Col. Joseph Walter, who was a Selkirkshire J.P., served with the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and married Dorothy Elizabeth Pocklington Stenhouse of Nethershall; Jane Eliza, who married Robert Lang; and Eliza Sophia, who married Col. Sir Philip Trotter.

the Scotts (thu-sko's) n. important family in the Hawick area since at least the 13th century. They gained extensive lands around Branxholme about 1440, and became more powerful as the Scotts of Buccleuch, being involved in rieving, rivalries and politics since then. Uchtred 'Filius Scot' seems likely to have been an ancestor, whose family are said to have come from Galloway. There are some claims that Scotstoun in Peeblesshire may have been an early family possession. But in any case, the original local home of the family was at 'Rankilburn' (essentially synonymous with Buccleuch and Belenden) near the head of the Ale Water, later moving to Branxholme, and then Dalkeith and Bowhill. A letter of remission of 1526 lists no fewer than 60 men of this surname. The 16th century was a time of great power struggles, with feuds fought with both the Kerrs and the Elliots, as well as alliances with less powerful families, such as the Chisholmes, Dalgleishes, Gledstains and Turnbells. There were separate Scotts in Ewesdale and Eskdale until incorporated into the local clan by Sir Walter in 1596 (although it is also stated that they descended from the Thirlestane branch). Upper Teviotdale, the Borthwick and Ale valleys were the strongholds of the family for centuries. The Dukedom of Buccleuch became one of the richest in Scotland and the main Scott seat is now at Bowhill. Several minor branches of the Buccleuch family have been important within Hawick, including Scotts of Goldielands and Allanhaugh. The Scotts of Harden have an ancient history, and are now represented by the Lords Polwarth. The Scotts of Horsleyhill were prominent Hawick townsmen for centuries, as well as Scotts of Alton, and other local branches include the Scotts of Crumhaugh, of Whitehaugh, of Goldielands, of Burnfoot, of Hassendean, of Synton, of Todrig, of Whitslade, of Woll, etc. Around the 16th and 17th centuries there were property-owning Scotts, called 'o the Mote', 'o the Toor', etc., who were probably branches from younger sons of local Lairds. Around the 18th century there were also tradesman-class families within and around Hawick, e.g. the Mill Port Scotts, the West Port Scotts (probably related to the Crumhaugh branch), the East Port Scotts, the Scotts at the Cross, the Scotts of the Wyndheid, the Ormiston Scotts, the Scotts of Hummelknowe Mill, etc. The family motto is 'Amo' (I love), the arms of the Scotts of Buccleuch are a 6-pomited star and two crescent moons on a blue diagonal band (also described as 'or, on a bend azure a mullet between two crescents of the field') and the crest is 'a stag reippant, proper'. A huge amount of family history is contained in the records of the Scotts of Buccleuch, which are preserved in the National Archives of Scotland, much of which was transcribed by William Fraser in 1878 – 'He was gloved and mailed, he was booted and spurred, For a Scott must ride at the lightest word' [WHO].

Scott's (skots) n. gunsmith's shop at the Sandbed in the latter part of the 19th century.

Scott's (skots) n. popular name for 2 separate carrier's firms in Hawick in the early 19th century, before the coming of the railway. One operated between Hawick and Glasgow and the other to Selkirk, Gala and other local towns.

Scott's Bank (skots-bawngk) n. wooded slope on the burn between the Ettrick Water and Hynhope farm. It is on the lands of the farm, and formerly gave its name to the local Laird, e.g. Robert Scott in the late 17th and early 18th centuries (also written 'Scotsbank').

Scott's Level (skots-le-vul) n. former popular name for a flat strip of land on the Burnhead estate, which was used for training by athletes in the latter part of the 19th and earlier part of the 20th centuries. The name derives from the Scott family that farmed at Burnhead for centuries.

Scott Street (ske'-stree') n. street in Newcastleton off the west side of South Hermitage Street.

Scott's View (skots-vew) n. apparently Sir Walter Scott's favourite view over the Tweed valley from Bemersyde Hill, a few miles north-east of St. Boswells, and now a mecca for tourists.

Scott the painter's (ske'-thu-pān'-urz) n. former painting and decorating business at 26 High Street. It was started by Francis Napier Scott in the latter part of the 19th century, being continued by his son Francis William Scott as 'F. Scott & Son, Painters', which was continued by his eldest son Francis Napier Scott in 1946 and wound up in the 1950s. At one point it was the largest such company in the Borders.

Scott Watson (ske'-wawt-sin) n. Lieut.-Col. R. of Burnhead (20th C.) long involved with St. Cuthbert's Kirk. In 1954 he read the Roll of Honour there to commemorate those who had fallen in WWII. Capt. William of Burnhead (19th/20th C.). Probably the son of William Scott Watson, born in about 1893. He was involved with St. Cuthbert's Kirk. His wife Gladys Mary died in 1955. His only daughter was Eupham. Lieut.-Col. William of Burnhead. He married Margaret Smith, who died in 2004 (sometimes written 'Scott-Watson').

SCOTVEC (skot-vek) n. Scottish Vocational and Educational Council, the awarding body for vocational courses until 1997 when the Scottish Qualification Authority was formed.

Scouler (skoo-lur) n. Rev. Michael born in Newton Mearns, he went to Strathclyde University for a degree in Engineering and Economics and then trained to become a minister at Edinburgh University. He became a military chaplain, serving in Belize and the first Gulf War. He was also involved in helping the community cope with the Lockerbie disaster of 1988. After serving as a padre for 4 years he came to the Borders as minister at Earlston. In 2009 he moved to Hawick as minister of Trinity Kirk. He left that post in 2018 to be a pastor, leading the spiritual care team within N.H.S. Borders. He was a rugby referee and is a self-confessed St. Mirren fan. He played a leading role in '1514 the Musical'. In 2015 he served as Common Riding Chief Guest.

scour (skeoor) v., arch. to rush about, search hither and thither – '... terriers an' collies, o' a' shapes an' sizes, scourin' roond the hoose ends for the Whey Brae ...' [BCM1881].

the Scouts (thu-skowtz) n. the Boy Scouts organisation, founded by Lt. Gen. Baden-Powell in 1907 and popularised by the book ‘Scouting for Boys’ in 1908. The first Hawick troop was started following the formation of a committee in 1909, and Baden-Powell visited the town in 1910. That organising committee consisted of Rev. W. Farquharson, Rev. A. Ross, Rev. W. Ainslie, Councillor (later Provost) James Renwick and Captain Fyfe-Jamieson. The Scout Pipe Band was formed in 1937 (although a band is recorded as early as 1917). They either rented or were given space in a variety of locations, including the Buccleuch Memorial, Waverley Mills and Wilson & Glenny’s. In 1964 they took over a small garment manufacturing building (formerly Marcus and then Willgen) at 22 Commercial Road and this became their permanent home in 1965. However, in the late 1990s they moved to Union Street and the old building was demolished.

scowder (skow-dur) v., arch. to burn, scorch, singe through dry heat, tan, sunburn – ‘The sun’s scowderin’ sair, sair On the laigh raws’ [WL], n. a scorch, burn (see scowdert).

scowderdowp (skow-dur-dowp) n., poet. a joking name for a blacksmith – ‘The dirdums o’ the wheezelebugs Chunter the lee-lang day And for a smarroch o’ scowderdowps My greasly hert is wae’ [DH] (noted by J. Jamieson).

scowdert (skow-dur) pp., arch. burned, scorched, singed – ‘An’ whan the sun was up, they wer scowderet; an’ becaus they had nae rute they wutheret awa’ [HSR], ‘Birsselt an scowdert, leike a bubbly-jock duine weel in ov an oven’ [ECS].

scowf (skowf) n., arch. a base pearson, a blusterer – ‘He’s naething but a scowf, Teviotd.’ [JoJ], v. to steal, filch, sponge.

Scaesburgh (skrāz-bu-ru) n. hamlet between Jedburgh and Oxnam, with the remains of an ancient settlement. It was ‘Scaesburgh’ in about 1147, when part of the original charter for Jedburgh Abbey. John of ‘Screys[burgh]’ was recorded as a juror in Roxburghshire in about 1260. At various times it was either synonymous with Hunthill or may have been essentially the same as what would later be called Kersheugh or Ferniehirst. The ‘baronie de Scraysburgh’ is recorded in 1456. Once a prominent settlement, a document of 1544 records that a company of Englishmen ‘ventred vpoun the gratest towne in all Tieudale called Scraisbrugh a towne of the Lord Hunthyll’s’ where they took rich spils, a great amount of livestock and 38 prisoners. Land there was owned by the Rutherfords in the 17th century and it was purchased by William Elliot of Wells in the early years of the 18th century. In about 1788 John Rutherford of Hunthill sold part of the lands of Wester Scaesburgh to William Riddell. The term ‘Scaesbrough-peat’ was used to refer to peat brought for the moss there, and also used to refer to badly-made shoes (also written ‘Scaisburgh’ and variants; the origin is probably ‘Scraw’s fort’ from the Old English name ‘Scraw’ plus ‘burh’; the name first occurs in the mid-12th century as ‘Scauesburghe’).

scaigh o day (skrāch-ō-dā) n., arch. day-break, literally the ‘scream of day’ (also written ‘skaigh o day’; cf. scauch, screigh, skreek and skrich).

the Secession (thu-se-se-shin) n. event in the Church of Scotland in which a group of dissenting ministers left to form their own independent church. It was caused by 2 acts of the General Assembly in 1732, principally regarding the powers of the congregation to appoint ministers. The dissent was led by Ebenezer and Ralph Erskine, who were from Berwickshire (and related to Harry Erskine, minister at Roberton). The Seceders called themselves the Associate Synod, and gathered strength until they split over whether members of their church could conscientiously take the Burgess Oath, which talked of supporting the ‘true religion at present professed within the realm’. This led to the formation of the Burgher and Anti-Burgher kirks. In about 1738 it was stated that in Hawick Parish the Seceders did not register their baptisms, this amounting to about 3 per year. The customs within the secession movement were generally stricter than in the established church, e.g. it is stated that at local weddings in the 18th century the bridal party danced back to back. Some locals attended the associate church in Midlem before the Green Kirk was built in the 1760s, followed by the East Bank Kirk in the 1770s.

seck (sek) n. a sack – ‘black secks er juist bin bags’, ‘Sic lyke, there is comprised ane seck pertaining to Andrew Lyden, to 20s. ...’ [BR1644], ‘...I’d burn him in a brunstane seck, For he has murdered Johnnie’ [WP].

the Secretary (thu-sek-ri-tu-ree) n. member of the Common Riding Committee, whom, in most cases, has carried the bulk of the responsibility for the organisation of the events and ceremonies. When the Ceremonial Committee was established in 1887 the Chairman was the main position, but from 1891 the Chairman became the Provost, with the Honorary Secretary taking over most of the organisational duties. Typically the position is held by the same tireless individual for many years. J.E.D. Murray was Honorary Secretary until 1897 (although it is unclear how this fits in). Secretaries have included: James Edgar (1887–1891); J.Y. Hunter (1891–1900); James Edgar (1900–08); Tom Ker (1908–23); Thomas G. Winning (1923–25); James Glendinning (1925); Guy Armstrong (for 36 years); William Robertson; Alistair Marshall (1955??–65, who left town afterwards); Harold Simpson (1966–1975); George Crawford (for only a few months in 1975); Sandy Stevenson (1976–1988, and again for part of 2001); Frank T. Seeley (see-lee) n. Ian William (1942–2013) born in St. Andrews, he started to learn piano at age 11 and was educated at Madras College. He then went to the Royal Scottiah Academy of Music in Glasgow and Trinity College of Music in London, before training as a teacher in Dundee. He held teaching positions in Kirkwall and Lockerbie, then arrived in Hawick in 1970 to be Head of Music at the High School. He was music teacher there for 27 years, until his retirement. He was organist at Trinity Kirk 1970–82, and has been heavily involved in the Amateur Operatic Society. He wrote 'On With the Show' (2010), for the centenary of that organisation. He was also conductor of the P.S.A. Choir and on the committee of the Saxhorn Band. He was President of Hawick Rotary Club and received a Paul Harris Fellowship in 2003. His support for and involvement in the Common Riding grew with time. From 1987 he became pianist for the 1514 Club, the Mosstroopers' Club, the Callants' Club, the Ex-Cornets and Ex-Acting Fathers Association. From 2002 he became pianist at the Colour Bussing. He was Mosstrooper of the Year in 2008 and was also made an honorary life membership of the Callants' Club. He is writer of 5 modern Hawick songs: 'Callant's Song'; 'Where Teviot Rins'; 'The Queen O' the Auld Scottish Border'; 'Hawick Reivers'; and 'Songs of Teviotdale'. He also published 'Spider's Wings – A Collection of 50 Poems', as well as organ and choral church music. He arranged the music for the revival of 'The Gutterbludes' in 2000, matching the lyrics to some of Adam Grant's other music, as well as writing 3 entirely new pieces and an overture. He acted as musical editor for the 2001 edition of 'The Hawick Songs – A Complete Collection', providing some accompaniments to new songs and revised accompaniments to a few of the old. He also wrote the definitive guide 'Songs of Teviotdale: A Companion to the Hawick Songs' (2013).

the Seven Ill Years (thu-see-vin-il-yeerz) n., pl. name given to the years 1693–1700 in which there were very poor harvests throughout Scotland, leading to famine and depopulation, also referred to as the 'Lean Years'.

Seevens (see-vinz) n. 7-a-side rugby, usually a one-day knock-out competition. The first such tournament was at Melrose in 1883, with most Borders towns quickly following suit, including Hawick in 1885 (with the winners being Tynedale). Hawick's team seemed almost unbeatable in the early years, winning 22 of the first 26 Border contests. The Hawick team of 1912 won all of the local tournaments, the first team to do so. They repeated this in 1966. The competitions are held annually each Spring – 'The 'Greens' hev wun the seevin-a-sides at their ain spoarts' [ECS], 'There can be nae sweeter heaven Than a Teri winning seven ...' [RMc].

Til its destination in the sei o history’ [DH] (also sometimes spelled ‘sey’).

Sei Croft (sī-kroft) n. Sea Croft, an area of marshy, planted land behind Pilmuir, part of the Newbigging farm at one point, and long owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. It lies on part of the boundary of the old Common. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as a small pond and its position is located on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777. There was formerly a farmstead cottage there. Robert Fowler was there in 1743. The farmer recorded in 1797 was James Davidson (the name may be humorously applied because of the water in the area).

sei’d (sīd) contr. see it – ‘can ee sei’d fri up there?’, ‘... How er ee the day?’ they’d quite often git the answer ‘Ee sei’d aa’, meanin ... ‘ee can sei be lookin at is’ [IWL], ‘... when A suspect no mony o huz here the day’ll be aroond ti sei’d’ [IWL].

sei-efter (sī-ef-tur) v., arch. to attend to, seek for, inquire about (noted by E.C. Smith).

seier (sī-ur) n., arch. a ditch, drain, culvert, gutter – ‘... alang streets ... clairty wui creeshy glet threh fooel seier an brander’ [ECS] (‘syver’ and vairnats elsewhere in Scotland).

Seigiva (sā-gi-va) n. one of two women worshippers (the other being Rosfritha) from ‘Hahwick’ who apparently witnessed a miracle in the chapel of St. Cuthbert on the ‘Slitrit’, according to the contemporary historian Reginald of Durham. They are said to have travelled many miles on a feast day of St. Cuthbert before Reginald wrote his book in about the 1170s, coming to the chapel, which is generally assumed to be at a site near Cogsmill. They were dismayed at the failure of the altar candle, but with their faith in St. Cuthbert, a new candle appeared in the middle of the altar ‘which diffused all around its beaming rays’ (also transcribed ‘Seigiv’ and ‘Sægifa’).

seip (sīp) v., arch. to seep, ooze, leak – ‘Losh sakes mei! the thochts that come seipin ...’ [ECS] (also ‘sype’).

seisin see sasine

sei-side (sī-sul) n. sea-side.

seissle (sī-sul) v., arch. to misspend time, dawdle, trifle away time – ‘A seisslin’ body’ [JoJ], ‘Meg’s aye seisslin’ [GW], to confuse, mix up – ‘He seissl’t a’ the tickets’ [GW].

seissler (sīs-lur) n., arch. someone who mispends time, a dawdler.

sei ti (sī-ti) v., arch. to look at, observe – ‘See to the twaesome, how they hug and squeeze’ [JoHa], interj. an exclamation urging someone to look – ‘Sei ti! or sei till! = behold!; look at!’ [ECS].

sel (sel) n., pron. self – ‘But the brightest star I e’er see, it is my lassie’s sel, When I meet her at the gloamin’ in the Braw Birk Dell’ [JoHa], ‘The slipping away to some spot by ane’s sel’ ...’ [JoHa], ‘Hei did it his ain sel’ [GW], ‘Yin canna dae that yin’s sel’ [GW], ‘That’s duist him; sel first, an’ a’body fer eftir’ [GW], ‘Come ti denner eer twae sels’ [GW], ‘...Keeks o’er to see its bonnie sel’ [JBS], ‘...an’ if yer mistress was to send the deevil’s ain sell ...’ [WNK], ‘Wildest grandeur – Nature’s sel’ – Is seen i’ bonny Bleakburn’ [DA], ‘The Son o’ God’s ain sel is he ...’ [WL], ‘He glow’red and muttered to his sel’, For he was unco lame’ [WFC], the epitome, that and no other – ‘The roads ir fair awfih the day; thay’re duist glaar’s sel wui that rain’ [ECS], ‘He cam hyim glaur’s sel: duist kiver’t frae heid ti fit’ [GW], ‘The bairn’s been ill-nature’s sel the nicht’ [GW], ‘A’ve been oot bittlin thae rugs; thay war fair stoor’s sel’ [ECS], ‘We could be muck’s sel and dirt teh the eenholes’ [HAST1958] (this can be part of other pronouns, e.g. ‘masel’, ‘heisel’, etc., or written as a separate word; also spelled ‘sell’; cf. the suffix -sel; it seems to be particularly prevalent in Hawick).

-sel (sel, sul) suffix -self, used to make compound personal pronouns (seen in masel, hersel, etc., as well as in other compound nouns such as glaur-sel, muck-sel and stoor-sel).

Selby (sel-bee) n. Ephraim (b.1801) son of Robert, he was also factor at Minto. He lived for a while at Hassendeanbank. In 1861 he is recorded living at Minto Cleuchhead, farming 375 acres and employing 13 people. He served as a Commissioner for the county of Roxburghshire. He is probably the Mr. Selby who, along with George Pott of Dod, first suggested building a bridge and roads to connect Hassendean station with Denholm. He was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836. His right to be a registered voter was questioned in the House of Commons investigation into ‘Fictitious Voters’ in 1837. He was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was still recorded as farmer at Hassendeanbank in 1868. He married Catherine, daughter of Thomas Rutherford, servant to Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto; her diaries are in the National Library of Scotland Manuscript Collection. His children included Robert (who farmed at Hassendeanbank), Gilbert R. and William. His wife is probably the ‘Mrs. Selby, wife of the factor on Minto estate’, who is said to have helped the young James ‘Dictionary’ Murray to learn Italian and German. Robert (18th/19th C.) factor at Minto. His son Ephraim was also factor there, while his daughter Mary married hosiery manufacturer Peter Wilson. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Robert (b.1840/1) son of Ephraim. In 1861 he is recorded as farmer of 434 acres and employing 15 people at Hassendeanbank, although only 20 years old. He was present at the famous otter hunt of 1863, led by Dr. Grant of Hawick. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. Sir William (c.1556–1638) son of Sir John, he was Governor of Berwick and one of the Border Commissioners. In 1603 he was sent to deal with the Armstrongs and other Liddesdale men who were regarded as trouble-makers, burning many Border towers in the process.

selfcorn (self-kōrn) n., arch. a blackhead.

the Selgovæ (thū-sel-gō-vī) n., pl. ancient Celtic tribe which existed in the Borders during and after Roman occupation. Their territory consisted of the middle and upper Tweed basin and its tributaries (including the Teviot) and extended to the Solway (and was probably the origin of that name). One of their headquarters was at Newstead near Melrose, called Trimontium. The other 3 towns mentioned by Ptolemy were Carbantorigum, Uxellum and Corda, and all are unidentified. The Votadini were the tribe to the east and north, and the Novantae to the west. However, it is unclear whether the Selgovæ were part of the Votadini or distinct. They were effectively conquered by the Romans in 79–80 C.E. (the word is though to mean ‘hunters’).

seliceset (se-līs-se) pp., poet. ceased – ‘An’ whan they wer come intill the schip the win’ seliceset’ [HSR] (the word is obscure, perhaps a variant of ‘silenced’).

Selkirk (sel-kurk) n. town 11 miles north of Hawick, being the Ancient and Royal Burgh of Selkirk, built high above the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, which was the seat of the county of Selkirkshire. The town has for centuries been on the main road north from Hawick to Edinburgh. It was already an established mediæval town when David I established an abbey here in 1113 (although the monks soon moved to Kelso), with a castle and hunting forest following in the same century. Selkirk became a Royal Burgh perhaps in the 13th century and the Scottish Parliament met here in 1204. James V granted part of the royal forest as a common, and the town may have had the largest common in the country. The town has a mediæval plan, built around the market square, although the top part of the old town was levelled in the 1960s. It was burned by the English in 1418 and the inhabitants robbed in 1502 by Englishman Sir John Musgrave, with the help of Adam Turnbull (tenant at Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton). It was burned by the English again in 1543. A nearby massacre of Montrose’s Royalists took place by Leslie’s Covenanters in 1645. Sir Walter Scott was Sheriff here for 33 years. His statue sits in the square, and there are also memorials to Selkirk natives Mungo Park, Tom Scott and J.B. Selkirk, as well as the ‘Fletcher’ statue by Thomas Clapperton. The Pant Well monument is from 1898, although the well was in use much earlier. The old Court House dates from 1803 and has a 33 m (110 ft) spire. The County Buildings and Court House are linked to the Old Jail under the main road. Originally known for shoemaking, specialist tweed industries and latterly other light industries are now the main employers, with the mills on the low ground of the Ettrick haughs. Selkirk Common Riding is at least 400 years old, involving the Riding of the Marches as well as a commemoration of the return of ‘Fletcher’ from Flodden (another version states that Walter Brydon, the Town Clerk, was the only one surviving from the town’s 80 volunteers). Records of the ‘ryding off the comon’ go back to at least 1516/7. Ceremonies include ‘crying the burley’, bussing the Burgh Flag, fording the River Ettrick, and the ‘casting of the colours’.

Part of it was filmed around 1900 by Hawick man David Gaylor. Population (1991) 5,922. J. Walter Elliot has written several books on the history of Selkirk – ‘Then up with the banner to Selkirk men’s honour, That sounded o’er Britain eight ages and more ...’ [JH], ‘... And threaded his way through the oakwood brown To the diamond roofs of Selkirk town’ [WHO] (the origin is possibly Old English for ‘hall church’ or ‘church by the shields’; Teries often talk about going ‘ower ti Selkirk’; it is ‘Selechirche’ in about 1120, ‘Selkryke’ in 1415 and ‘Selcrige’ in 1597 in a letter from Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme).

Selkirk (sel-kurk) n. Herbert (d.1164) Tironesian monk, sometimes referred to as ‘Herbert of Selkirk’. He became the 3rd Abbot of Selkirk in 1119 and persuaded the King to allow the monks to move to Kelso by 1127. He was elected Bishop of Glasgow in 1147 and remained in that position until he died. He was thus Hawick’s bishop for about 17 years. He was Bishop around 1150 when he confirmed the gift of the Church of Molle to Kelso Abbey. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Hugh Selechirch’ during the reign of Alexander II, when Petronella, daughter of ‘Adam Harang’ granted lands in the Borthwick, which were said to be adjacent to his house. His name may be ‘selech’ rather than ‘Selkirk’. J.B. see James B. Broon. Rev. Matthew (c.1642–1728) graduating from Glasgow University in 1662, he was chaplain to Douglas of Bonjedward in the 1670s. He was said to have been assaulted for his support of ‘the Indulgence’ in the late 1680s. He became minister at Crichton in 1690. He married Agnes Cunningham and his children included Matthew, Robert, James, Janet, Agnes and Lawrence. Peter (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English document appraising horses in Berwick in 1311/2. His name is given as ‘Petrus de Selekirke’. William ‘Wullie Dunlop’ (1811–93) possibly Hawick’s shortest man. Born in Lauder, he lived in Gala until he was 16, but then spent most of his life in Hawick. At age 15 he developed severe joint pains, leaving him quite stunted. He worked as a seamer, and reared game cocks as a hobby. His walking stick is in the Museum.

Selkirk Abbey (sel-kurk-aw-bee) n. former abbey in Selkirk, with no visible trace remaining. It was founded around 1113 by David I, with 13 monks brought from the reformed Benedictine Order in France. It was founded in honour of St. Mary and St. John the Evangelist, and received a large amount of the surrounding lands. The location of the abbey itself was probably the old kirkyard of Lindean by the Batts (i.e. 'Abbot's Burn'). It is unlikely to have been a very substantial structure, since by 1128 the abbey was moved to Kelso. A roll of the abbots is: Radulf, 1113–17; William 1117–19; Herbert 1119–28.

Selkirk banni (sel-kurk-baw-ni) n. Selkirk bannock, a type of round fruit loaf made in Selkirk (also written 'bannae'; cf. curny banni).

Selkirk Castle (sel-kurk-kaw-sul) n. former castle in Selkirk, probably dating to the early 12th century. It was frequently used by Scottish Kings in the 12th and 13th centuries, mostly as a royal hunting seat, but also holding occasional parliaments there. A new castle was built in 1302, including a drawbridge and portcullis. In 1304 it appears to have been captured by the Scots, but was back in English hands 2 years later, and in 1310 the English King, Edward II, stayed there for several days. After Bannockburn the office of Constable of Selkirk passed to Turnbull of Philiphaugh. From the Turnbells it passed to the Murrays and later to families in Selkirk, who were 'of the Auld Peel'. Its ruins are near the end of Castle Street (formerly the 'Peel Gait') on Peel Hill, in the grounds of the Haining, where the motte and some associated earthworks can be made out. The 'castrum de selkirk' is recorded in 1502, when Walter, son of Walter Scott of Heandshaw was accused of stealing a horse from there.

Selkirk Common (sel-kurk-ko-min) n. common land of the Burgh of Selkirk, lying to the south-east of the town and containing a racecourse. There is a long history of dispute over ownership of these lands, which were once very extensive. There is a triangulation pillar there.

Selkirk Junction (sel-kurk-jungk-shin) n. junction of the Waverley Line with the Selkirk Railway, between Melrose and Galashiels. That line ran from 1856 until 1951 for passengers and 1964 for freight, with stations at Abbotsford Ferry and Lindean.

Selkirk Rob (sel-kurk-rob) n. distinguishing nickname for one of the men called Robert Scott in the mid-1800s.

Selkirkshire (sel-kurk-shīr, sel-kurk-shir) n. neighbouring county north-west of Roxburghshire, now part of the Scottish Borders. Parts of the Borthwick valley and areas around Ashkirk have shifted back and forth between Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire over the centuries, with some Parishes being split between both counties, or having disjoint parts in one or other county. A 2 volume history of the county was published by T. Craig Brown in 1886.

Sellar (se-lur) n. Margaret wrote 'Denholm: a history of the village' in 1989.

selled (seld) pp. sold – '... Or how Rattlin' Rab the Ranter, And Deans' mere, Beat the famous Black Enchanter That sell'd sae dear' [RH], 'That shauchlin' birkie, lang an' thin, Seld a' his sowl for jinglin' tin' [WP] (this is always 'sold' in English, cf. also selt; sometimes written 'seld' or 'sell'd').

sellie (se-lee) n., arch. diminutive of selfishness – '... That land where 'sellie' reigns supremely chief' [JoHa], adj., arch. selfish – 'Bit A daarsay there's a selly bit aboot uz aa' [ECS] (also written 'selly').

[AY], 'Wae-worth yon Plastic Breid that's sellt the-day, In sliddery greaseproof, wi a fancy name' [DH], 'They didni care what Hawick folk felt, Doon the river oo've been sellt' [IWL] (also spelled 'sellt' and 'sell't'; cf. selled and the older sald).

selvation (sel-vā-shin) n., arch. salvation.

Selvation Airmy see Salvation Army

selvedge (sel-vej) n. woven edge part of a garment, usually firmer than the rest of the material and forming a neat edge that will not unravel – 'The set of reed 4 in the split stands opposite the porters, 8 quarters or two yards wide, independent of selvages' [BCM1881] (there are spelling variants).

Selwynslands (sel-winz-lands) n. former name for lands near Jedburgh, given by William Aitchison to John Ainslie, son of the Lord of Delphinston in 1436 (recorded as 'Silwynislandis'). One of the witnesses was Thomas 'Underayll, burgess of Hawyc'.

semmit (se-mit) n. a woollen or flannel undershirt, vest – 'Women got their husbands to work semmets and stockings as a thank-offering ...' [RJW].

semple (sem-pul) adj., arch. simple – '... he brought upon himself the sport and merriment of the entire household, gentle and semple, to whom the custom of the schoolmaster was no mystery' [JAHM], 'The Lord preserfes the sempel; I was broucht leuch, an' he helpet me' [HSR], 'The mischief she did wad tak ower lang to tell, Baith gentle an' empil cam under her spell' [BM1901] (also written 'sempel' and 'sempil').

Semple (sem-pul) n. Rev. Gabriel (1631/2–1706) son of Sir Bryce of Cathcart, he trained as a Covenanting minister. He served at Kirkpatrick-Durham in Dumfriesshire until ousted in 1662. He is said to have been the first to start field conventicles. Being sought by the authorities, he hid in Yetholm and in Northumberland with Henry Hall and fled to Ireland for a while. He preached for several years at Ford and regularly crossed into Scotland to address field meetings. Lady Douglas of Cavers was accused of attending conventicles in the period 1679–82. He was captured in his sickbed at Blackcastle in 1681 and imprisoned in Edinburgh, but released after a short time. After the Revolution he was minister at Jedburgh. He had 3 wives: Margaret, daughter of Sir Patrick Murray of Blackcastle; Alison, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk; and Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Carr of Etal. His children included: Samuel, minister of Liberton; and Janet, who married Walter Home of Bassendean.

the Seturdi (thu-se'-ur-di) n. Common Riding Saturday, beginning with the end of the Ball and greeting the dawn with song-singing at the Mote, and then a last dancing of the Reel in front of the Tower. There is usually a short rest before the Drums and Fifes rouse the town at 8 a.m., walking from the West Port to the Horse. At 9.30 a.m. the mounted procession proceeds to the Park, where the Principals stand in their stirrups and sing 'Teribus' at the end of the Avenue, before laying wreaths at the War Memorial. They then ride through the streets and are led from the Horse to the Loan by the Drums and Fifes. They then proceed to the Moor via the Duke's Wood, the Flex, Wulliestruther, Pilmuir Rig and Pilmuir Field. The riders once again do a circuit of the race course, and the Flag is displayed as on the previous day. There are more races and events there, but shorter than on the Friday. The Cornet takes the Flag from the roof of the Committee room at 3 p.m., after which he leads his mounted supporters back to the Town Hall via Crumhaughhill, being met at the top of the Loan by the Drums and Fifes. The cavalcade then proceed along the High Street for the Handing Back ceremony at the Town Hall. The Cornet returns the Flag to the Provost 'unsullied and unstained', and displays it one last time from the balcony. As the Cornet lowers the Flag the Saxhorn Band play 'the Invocation'. At the end of the tune the Cornet re-plants the Flag and the Big Four say their last farewells to it and the crowd, the Left-Hand Man and then the Acting Father being last to leave the balcony. After this the men are usually carried shoulder-high to the Tower to dance the Reel again. The 'Greetin Denner' has been traditionally held on the Saturday evening and the Principals usually visit the Shows, or in recent years go back to the Moor to see the live bands. It is unclear how far back the Saturday traditions go, with the first clear record being in 1744 when it was written that the Cornet was 'to go to the moss on Saturday yr. after'. In older times the Saturday proceeded similarly to the Friday, with the Races and Games at the Haugh (with the Dinner between), but with a shorter programme. There was also a more formal Dinner on the Saturday, and the formal end of the Common Riding was the Kirking ceremony, which happened on the Sunday afterwards. The Drums and Fifes first took part in the Saturday procession from 1889. The tradition of riding the boundaries of the newly acquired Wilton Lodge estate was begun in 1890, but in 1892 was replaced with a visit to the Lodge. The Drums and Fifes and Burgh Officer were first involved in the Saturday procession from 1890.

His only son was William (b.1749). John (b.c.1780) labourer at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (b.c.1810) from England, he was a joiner in Hawick in the mid-19th century. In 1851 he was recorded on O'Connell Street as a 'Stocking Frame Smith' and in 1861 at No. 8 as a 'Broker' (possibly meaning a pawn broker, i.e. dealer in second-hand goods). His wife was Isabella and their children included James, Charles, Janet and Mary Ann. He could be the 'John Sharp, junior, Melgund Place' who in 1857 donated to the Archaeological Society old spurs found at Ruberslaw. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Swinside Mill, listed among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. John Scott 'the Tinckler' led a group of what was claimed to be 500 men on a day-long foray. Rev. Thomas (d.1791) licensed by the Presbytery of Linlithgow in 1778, he became minister at Ettrick in 1781 and was translated to Hawick Parish in 1784, before moving again to Corstorphine in 1789. He once fought off thieves who tried to steal the communion cups from his bedroom in the Old Manse. He is believed to have started one of the first Sunday Schools in Scotland at about the same time as Samuel Charters in Wilton (as mentioned in the British Chronicle or Union Gazette for 1786, although no names are given). He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. His servant Andrew Elliot witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick in 1789. He is said to have left Hawick on account of being unable to govern the people; however, he appears to have fared little better in Corstorphine, where he was 'accustomed to avow, there, that he loved even a dog if it came from Hawick'. He married Alison Russell of Ashiestiel, and they had 4 children. Vivian 'Viv' (1935–2012) born and bred in Hawick, he was named after Cornet Vivian Grieve and lived at 4 different houses on Dickson Street. He was an apprentice at Watson's, but became a plumber by trade. He served with the K.O.S.B. in Malaysia in the 1950s. He was a player, past President and Life Member of the Linden. He took up public singing only after a Burns Club singing competition in the late 1970s. But he soon became a fixture at the Common Riding, club dinners and wherever there was a sing-song. He released a CD 'Naturally Sharp' in 2001 and another with Drew Gibb. His regular party piece was 'I Like Auld Hawick the Best', which he sang annually at the end of the Thursday morning Hut. He married Betty and had children Lorraine, Michael and Natalie – 'Than ma freend Viv Shairp, few singers ir greater, Hei works for Grieve's as a plumber and slater' [IWL]. Walter (18th/19th C.) gamekeeper at Riddell in 1797, when he was working for Sir John Riddell. William of Hartsgarth (b.1749) only son of John, who was tenant at Mackside. He was also tenant at Mackside. In 1767 he purchased the lands of Weens from David Cleghorn. However, he sold the estate to William Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1773, and at the same time purchased from Oliver the lands of Hartsgarth and Langhaugh. He was 'William Sharp, Esq; Hartsgarth' on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784 and in 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–89. He was recorded as owner of Hartsgarth and Langhaugh in the 1788 county valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, the lands being valued at £466 13s 4d. He married Jean, daughter of Robert Elliot, farmer in Hermitage. Their children included: Ann (b.1772); John (b.1783); and Sally (b.1784), who for some reason was baptised in Robertson Parish. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. William (19th C.) Hawick tobacconist, son of James and Janet Clark. He took over James Rutherford's business at 60 High Street in 1899 and ran it for 38 years.

Shankend (shawng-kend) n. farm and station on the Waverley line. John Laidlaw was recorded there in 1694. Adam Pott was there in 1729 and William Pott in 1738. Thomas Oliver and Abel Armstrong were farmers there in 1797 and Christopher Grieve was a servant there in at least 1799–1801. Most of the railway buildings survive, including the twin-gabled cottages, station and signal box with piended roof (recently used as a stable). There were 2 passenger platforms (only one surviving) and formerly a footbridge connecting them. Mr. McKenzie was listed as Station Agent there in 1868. This was also an area where navvies lived in the 1860s during construction of the viaduct and nearby Whitrope Tunnel, with almost 200 temporary residents recorded in the 1861 census. J. Mather was listed at the farm there in 1868. The current farmhouse was designed (or altered) by J.P. Alison in 1910. The farmhouse was lived in by German prisoners-of-war during WWI, with some buried in the grounds.

Shankend Hill (shawng-hil) n. hill to the right of the B6399, south of Shankend farm, reaching a height of 376 m.

Shankendshiels (shawng-kend-sheelz) n. former farmstead in the upper Slitrig valley, just beyond Langburnshiels. John Elliot was there in the 1770s. Alexander Burns and family were there in 1841. A. Robson was recorded there in 1868 and Adam Scott was shepherd there in the latter part of the 19th century (marked on Stobie's 1770 map; also written 'Shankend-Shiels' etc.).

Shankend Station (shawng-kend-stā-shin) n. former railway station at Shankend. Mr. McKenzie was listed as Station Agent there in 1868.

Shankend Viaduct (shawng-kend-vI-a-dukt) n. 15 arch, 597 foot long viaduct on the Waverly line, about 10 miles south of Hawick, which still stands. It was constructed as part of the extension of the railway from Hawick to Carlisle, opened in 1862. The stone was taken locally from new quarries opened up near Elliots Field (later called Fleety Cottage) and at White Hill. The main contractor was William Ritson, and it was said to have been built with much delay. It remains a striking part of the landscape.

Shankfit (shawngk-fi) n. Shankfoot, a farmstead just beyond Dodburn farm. This is probably the 'Brough Shankfoot' where masons Walter and James Elliot were recorded in 1799 and 1801 and where masons Robert Elliot and James Hay, plus labourer Robert Hay, were recorded in 1801 (marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Shankfit (shawngk-fi) n. Shankfoot, also known as 'Milsington Shakfoot', a former farmstead near Milsington. The Scott family were there in 1841 and the Hogg family in 1851.

Shanks (shawngks) n. David (18th/19th C.) from Innerleithen, in 1798 he married Mary Miller from Hawick.

Shannon (shaw-nin) n. Danny 'the Pocket Hercules' (d.1915) played as back for Hawick R.F.C. in the early 1900s, and also capped for Scotland. He was killed at the Battle of Loos. Rev. James Wigston (1858–1926) from Carlisle, he worked as a coal miner from the age of 12. He later graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1886 and was ordained as minister of the United Presbyterian Church in South Street, Elgin in 1889. He became minister at Wilton South Church in 1892. The year after this the 'Ern Kirk' was abandoned, and the congregation met in the Temperance Hall until the new church was opened in 1894. He emigrated to Nuhaka-Morere, New Zealand with his family in 1921 and was inducted as minister there in 1923. He moved to Matawhero Gisborne in 1924 and was minister there until his strength failed. He was father of Mary Dorothea (b.1895), Mrs. Whitelaw. Mary Dorothea 'Molly' (1885–1964) born in Hawick, she emigrated to New Zealand with her parents in 1921, settling at Morere and then Matawhero. Her father was the minister at Matawhero, and when he died she effectively filled in as minister for a few months, which must have been unusual then. She later sat on several church-related committees. She became an Elder in 1960 and attended World Council of Churches assemblies. She married Rev. Alan Campbell Whitelaw of Edinburgh in 1930 and they lived at Te Awamutu, Blenheim, Johnsonville.

shape (shāp) v., arch. to cut clothes out from a pattern – 'Shaipin claes = cutting out garments, dresses, etc., following a pattern' [ECS], n. a paper pattern used for cutting out cloth, one's ordinary indoor clothes – 'A Hawick woman speaks of going out or about 'duist i ma shaip' when she does not wear any over-garment, such as a cloak, cape, etc., over her ordinary indoor dress' [ECS], a commotion, to-do – 'What a different shapes, firrst an last, as Jethart Casle saw' [ECS], an antic, a droll figure – 'What a shape it was!' Shaw (shaw) n. Maj. George Boyd ‘Tarry’ (1917–2004) born in Glasgow, he attended Hawick High School and then worked in Hawick’s woollen mills. He enlisted in the Scots Grey’s in 1934, and quickly became known as a brilliant horseman. He was promoted to quartermaster, then Sergeant Major. He saw active service in the Middle East, Italy, France, the Netherlands and on into Germany. After the War he was quartermaster sergeant, and helped prepare horses for the winning British team at the 1952

Olympics. He retired in 1967, having served as Regimental Sergeant Major in several overseas postings. He was also the last rough rider in the regiment, being the only man who could tame the wildest horses. He married Nancy Cressey and they had 3 sons and 2 daughters. Jane nee Hunter (19th/20th C.) daughter of commission agent James Hunter, she married printer William Clegg. She kept a china shop up a few steps at 5 Silver Street (which had previously been the Post Office and then Mungo Wilson's). She later moved to 68 High Street. Joseph (19th C.) Hawick innkeeper listed on the 1837 electoral roll, and listed as a vintner on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. He could be the Joseph listed as a weaver at about 30 High Street in 1841. Probably the same Joseph was on the subscribers' list for Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Lady (17th C.) recorded at Hyn-dhaughhead in Southdean Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. She paid tax for having 2 hearths. It is unclear who she was. Rev. Robert 'Robbie' (1780–1853) youngest son of George, minister of Abbotshall, and brother of the minister of Langholm. He was born at Abbotshall in Fife. He studied at the United College in St. Andrews and was licensed to preach by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1802. In 1804 he was appointed preacher at Teviothead 'chapel-of-ease' and was ordained there in 1807. In 1816 he was translated to Ewes Kirk, where he was presented by Charles, Duke of Buccleuch and became assistant and successor to John Laurie (son of the minister of Hawick). In 1818 he performed a baptism in Cavers (probably at Caerlenrig). He wrote an account of that parish in 1835, including a discussion of Moss-paul. In 1818 he married Mary, daughter of William H. Moncrieff, minister of Annan (and brother of David Moncrieff of Hawick). Their children were: George (b.1819), farmer at Dinlees; Jane (b.1820); Margaret (b.1825); William (b.1827); Ann Janet (b.1831); Marion (b.1837); and Helen Mary (b.1839). T. (17th C.) probably a local heritor or perhaps a factor of the Douglases of Cavers. He was 'T. Shaw of Cavers' in 1641 when he was one of the Roxburghshire men who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. His signature also appears on the existing 1638 Covenant of Minigaff (along with Douglas of Cavers). Thomas, K.C. 'Tammy' (1850–1937) son of a Dunfermline baker, he went to Edinburgh University and trained as a lawyer. A gifted orator, he entered politics, becoming M.P.

for the Hawick Burghs in 1892, defeating Robert Fraser Watson. He won a bye-election in 1894 and held the seat until 1909. He was made Solicitor General of Scotland and Lord Advocate of Scotland, became Lord Shaw of Dunfermline and ended as Lord Craigmyle. He was also responsible for advising Andrew Carnegie on disposing of £20 million on causes within Scotland, including the Carnegie Trust for the Universities of Scotland. He was a Liberal, with strong views on home-rule, the South African War and law reform. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1904 on the opening of the new Public Library in Hawick. He made the presentation of Tom Scott's 'Return from Hornshole' at the 1898 Colour Bussing. He served in a judicial capacity in the House of Lords and the Privy Council until 1929, although without any obvious distinction. He also served on many commissions and public inquiries. He published two unconventional autobiographies, 'Letters to Isabel' (1921) and 'The Other Bundle' (1927), as well as legal works, biographies and 2 plays in verse. He was succeeded as 2nd Baron Craigmyle by his son Alexander. Rev. William Berry 'Willie' (1775/6–1856) eldest son of George, minister at Abbotshall, he studied at St. Andrews University and was licensed to preach in 1799. His brother 'Robbie' was minister at Teviothead and then Ewes. At St. Andrews he shared a room with Thomas Chalmers, who became leader of the Free Kirk Disruption. He acted as assistant to Rev. Thomas Elliot at Cavers in 1801 and later in that year was ordained as assistant minister and successor at Robertson. However, he demitted in 1812 when he became the new minister at Langholm. During the intervening period he assisted the previous minister, James Hay, who had retired for his health, but recovered and took up his duties again in 1812. He remained at Langholm until his death. He was an anti-Reformist, in 1817 calling those from Langholm who wrote a Reformist petition 'idle, profligate miscreants'. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Eliza, youngest daughter of Henry Scott of Deloraine in 1813; she was the 'Bonnie lass of Deloraine' in a poem of the Ettrick Shepherd's, and along with her sister Margaret, they were the prototypes for 'Minna' and 'Brenda' in Sir Walter Scott's 'The Pirate'. Their children were George, William, Henry, Margaret, Jane and Elizabeth. He wrote 'Five Single Sermons' (published in Hawick, 1810), 'Sermons, Doctrinal and Practical' (1859) and a sermon in Gillan's 'Scottish Pulpit'. It is said that when he signed the Confession of Faith he added a flourish which looked like 'E.E.' perhaps meaning 'erroribus exceptis' ('excepting errors'). William 'Bill' (b.c.1805) weaver from England. He was said to be among those who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. In 1841 he was living at Hawick Kirkyard, in 1851 on the Fore Raw and in 1861 at 11 Kirkwynd. His wife was Agnes and their children included Margaret, Janet, James, Molly, Jane, William and Betsy. William Clegg (b.c.1835) son of weaver Bill, he was a printer in Hawick. He married Jane Young, daughter of commission agent James Hunter. Their children included: Ella Young (b.1870); and William Clegg (b.1871).

Shawbrae (shaw-brā) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish that were part of Dryden and Clews farms. It is probably associated with the modern Shaw Hill. 'Longhaugh and Strawbrae' [sic] is listed in 1780 among the lands whose liferent had been given to Dr. William Elliot, with 'the Shawbrae pasture-ground' recorded as part of the boundary of Elliot's lands.

Shawburn (shaw-burn) n. farm near the stream of the same name in Lilliesleaf Parish. T. Jeffrey was farmer there in 1868 – 'And whiles we've daundered up the glen Where flowers nod by Shawburn, And where the blossoms grow sae white On many an ancient thorn' [FL].

Shaw Burn (shaw-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, running past Lethem to join the Jed Water. Near the head of the stream is a linear earthwork, probably a boundary ditch. The stream passes 'Wattie's Spindles' and Hilly Linn. On the west side of its lower stretches are the remains of a small building on a terrace.

Shaw Craigs (shaw-krāgz) n. rocky hill on the boundary between Southdean and Jedburgh Parishes, just north of Lethem. It reaches a height of 300 m and is topped with a triangulation pillar. It also contains the remains of a fort and settlement, now within a clearing of the forest. It may be of early Iron Age date, with later construction phases, since it consists of different walls and ramparts, covering about 90 m by 50 m. It has also been suggested that the last period of construction may be post-Roman (also written 'Shaw Craig').

shawit (shaw-ee', -i') pp., poet. showed – '... an' shawet untill the chief priests a' the things that wer dune' [HSR].

shawn (shawn) pp., poet. shown – '... his rich-teousniss he heth opinlie shawn in the sicht o' the heathin' [HSR].

Shaws (shawz) n. former name for lands near Hawick. It is listed among the Baron's lands in Hawick in 1615. It is also listed in the 1627 valuation of the lands in Hawick Parish, between Weensland and 'Trowhauch' in the list, and hence probably somewhere in that area. It is described as 'three lands callit the Schawis' and 'paying presentlie 12 bolls; estimat to 8 bolls in stok and 2 bolls in teynd' annually (it is 'Schawis' in 1615).

Shaws (shawz) n. area around Shaws Under Loch, south of Shaw's Hill, between the Ettrick and Ale valleys, once a farm owned by the Waughs. This may be the Shaws held by Walter Scott (along with Berrybush) in 1513. It may be the 'Schawis' tenanted by the Laird of Cranston in 1541, valued at £10 and 'in rental' £22. It is possible this was the 'three merk land of Shaws' granted to William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1653. It was owned by John Ker in 1678 and by Charles Scott of Woll in 1785, and valued at £204 3s 4d. A stone cist and bones were discovered here in about 1870, at the nearby 'Sleepy Knowe'. There are several other local places called 'Shaws' (it is 'Schawis' in 1513 and 1670).

Shaws (shawz) n. farm to the east of the B6399 where the Roughley Burn meets the Hermitage Water. It is probably 'Le Schewis' which in 1428/9 was granted to Archibald Douglas of Cavers by William, Earl of Angus, and 'le Schawis' when granted to William Douglas of Cavers in 1470, with sasine given 2 years later. It was probably the seat of the Elliots called 'the Shaws' in the 16th century. In 1541 the tenants was Robert Elliot and the lands were valued at 5 merks. 'Hob of the Schawis' (an Elliot) is recorded in 1569, Gib Elliot of the Shaws in 1578 and Adam Elliot in the Shaw in the 1580s. Gavin Elliot of 'the Schawis' was there in 1611. Robert Henderson and William Watson were there in 1694. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it was combined with Newlands, the farms together covering 245 acres, bounded by Roughley, Cleuchhead, Toftholm, Netherraw and Millburnholm, and including some land on the west side of the river; the farmhouse seems to be in much the same place as the modern one, and woods are also shown, including young alders, between the farmhouses. George Turnbull was a mason there in 1799 and William Hardie a labourer in 1801. In the latter part of the 19th century the tenant was Mr. Ballantyne and the farm extended all the way to Steele Road. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of 2 circular earthworks on the farm (it is 'lye Schawis' in 1472, 'Schawis' in 1541, 1569, 1574 and 1578, 'the Shawes' in 1581, 'the Schaw' in 1586, 'ye Schawis' in 1623 and 'Shaues' in 1694; it is marked as 'Shawis' on Gordon's c. 1650 map, 'Shawes' on Blaeu's 1654 map, 'Shawes' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and 'Shaws' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Shaws (shawz) n. former name for lands probably near the head of the Borthwick and Teviot valleys. In 1610 James Douglas of Drumlanrig complained that William Scott of Howpasley and James Gledstains of that Ilk had not paid taxes they owed him on his lands of 'Ramseclewis, Howpaysay and Schawis'. It is unclear precisely where this was.

Shaw's Brae (shawz-brā) n. slope just to the south-east of where the Roughley Burn meets the Hermitage Water, being essentially a south-western extension of Arnton Fell.

Shaw's Bush (shawz-bush) n. name for a strip of plantation on the former Minto estate, south of the old church, and now forming part of the north-eastern boundary of the gold course.

Shaw's Close (shawz-klōs) n. popular name for a close off the High Street in the mid-19th century, with uncertain position. Presumably someone called Shaw once resided there.

Shawshiel Rig (shaw-sheel-rig) n. ridge in Liddesdale, essentially being the lower south-west part of Arnton Fell, between Newlands and the Steele. There are remains of a turf-walled building and field systems there. It was presumably once the shiel for Shaws farm.

Shaws Plantin (shawz-plawn-tin) n. former name for a plantation to the north of Spittal Tower (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Shaws Under Loch (shawz-un-dur-loch) n. small body of water on the Langhope Burn, north of Hellmoor, with the upper loch nearby.

Sheil see Shiel

Shein (sheen) n. John (17th C.) listed as a 'fisher' among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed as a resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. His surname may be a variant of some more well-known name.

sheive see shive

shelfie see shilfie

shelfs (shelfs) n., pl. shelves – '... but this consonantal change is still avoided in haaf (= half), haafs; laif (= loaf), laifs; shelf, shelfs' [ECS].

Shells (shelz) n. farmstead marked on Blaeu's 1564 map in the upper Slitrig valley, perhaps corresponding to Langburnshiels (although this is little more than a guess).

sheltie (shel-tee) n. a Shetland pony, a small pony generally – 'A wheen o callants lowsed the girths And loot the sheltie free ...' [WL].

the Shepherds (thu-she-purdz) n. one of a number of Friendly Societies existing in Hawick in the latter part of the 19th century. The local branch was Sanctuary 'Flower of Teviotdale', No. 5771.

Sheridan (she-ri-din) n. Francis 'Big Frank' (1837–1870) probably Hawick's tallest man. He was a native of County Cavan in Ireland, coming to Hawick as a young man. He grew to a height of 7 feet 8 inches, having a 52 inch chest and weighing 22 stone, but also had health problems. He worked as a labourer and as a stocking-maker, and apparently refused to go on a travelling show when asked. In 1861 he is recorded as a frame-worker, living on Mather's Close with his sister Bridget, their mother Helen and step-father Patrick McCart. He was for a while landlord of the Irish Harp pub in Baker Street. His coffin apparently had to be taken out of the window in Baker Street, because it was too large for the stairs, and his funeral was said to be about the best attended in Hawick up until that time. He is buried in the Wellogate and his walking stick is in the Museum.

sherk (sherk) n. a shark – ‘hei’s a right sherk on the pool table’ (also shairk).

sherp (sherp) adj. sharp – ‘hei was aye it the sherp end o the airgiments’, ‘yer tongue’s that sherp, ee’ll cut yersel’, ‘Thy arras ar sherp in the hairt o’ the King’s enimies ...’ [HSR], ‘Thy tung devæises mischeef: like ane sherp razor wurkin’ deceitfulie’ [HSR], ‘That lean yin, strecht an’ sherp’s a knife, Let cauld ambition rule his life ...’ [WP] (cf. shairp).

sherpen (sherp-in) v. to sharpen – ‘Gif he turnna, he will sherpen his sword ...’ [HSR] (cf. shairpen).

sherpenit (sherp-in-ee, -i) pp., poet. sharpened – ‘Thaye hae sherpenit thair tungs like ane serpint ...’ [HSR] (also sherpent).

Sherwinlaw (sher-win-law) n. hill and place name somewhere near Jedburgh. It is ‘Schorwinglen’ in a charter for Jedburgh Abbey in the time of King David, and ‘Xernwingslawe’ in a confirming charter of Earl Henry. Later Christiana, wife of Gervase Riddell, gave a third of her lands of ‘Hernwingslawe’ to the monks of Jedburgh. ‘Sire Wautier de Sherwynclawe’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296; the same man was ‘de Sherewyndelawe’ when he had his lands restored later in 1296. It is possible that this is the same place as Shirensclouch near Bellendean, but it is more likely it is an ancient form of Mervinslaw. Sir ‘Joceto de Scherwynlaw’ was witness to a charter relating to Kelso Abbey in about 1328 (recorded as early as the mid-12th century, the origin may be from Old English ‘sceorf’, meaning ‘steep slope’, plus ‘wynd’, or from the local dialect ‘shirrew’, meaning ‘field mouse’).

Sherwood (sher-wood) n. Andrew Godfrey Purvis (1950–) born in Kenya, he studied violin and composition at the Royal College of Music. He became Professor of Violin at Trinity Laban Conservatoire of Music and Dance. He has been principal conductor for the European Youth Summer Music, Director of the Brighton Youth Orchestra, Musical Director of the Musicians of All Saints, Director of Music and Choirs at the University of Brighton and Conductor of Somerset County Youth Orchestra. He married Mary Helen Hepburne-Scott and they live near Lilliesleaf. He wrote a piece called ‘Heart of Hawick’ to celebrate the opening of the new centre in 2008. He has also been involved in reviving pieces by local composers, particularly Francis George Scott and Sir John Blackwood McEwen.

she’s (sheez) contr. she’s, she is, ‘she’s an awfi blether’, she has – ‘she’s the scar ti prove eet’, ‘she’s the same mother, bit a different fither’ (this second form is less common in English).

sheugh (shooch) n., arch., poet. a ditch, trench, furrow, muddy drain – ‘... an’ heth fa’n intil the seuch whilk he mæde’ [HSR], ‘Forgotten was our snaw-wreathed road, It’s hidden sheughs o’ water’ [VW], ‘... each sheuch an heidie-hole i thir verra rigs was den for fairce sodgers in fechtin-graith’ [ECS] (also written ‘sheuch’, ‘seuch’ and variants; the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ū and oo).

shew (shoo, syoo) v., arch. to sew – ‘Yince in a day the maist o this wheat-seem was shewd be hand’ [ECS], ‘... Quoth she, ‘Oh get a pair o’ horns. I’ll shue them on ye, An’ make a goat o’ ye whilk conforms Ti sic a loonie’ [WP], n., arch. a sew, stitching (note these older pronunciations; also spelled ‘shue’ etc.).

shewin (shoo-win) pp., arch. shown, exhibited, displayed as proof – ‘... ane Act extract be ... clerk of our Judiciary, under his subscription manuale, schewin and producit befor the saidis Lordis ...’ [SB1500] (also written ‘schewin’).

shewman (shoo-mun) n., arch. a showman – ‘... An’ tongue as gleg to be as ony shewman’s’ [JoHa].

shew-up (shoo-up) n., arch. a bankruptcy, closing and winding-up of a business.

shiel (sheel) n., arch. a temporary hut or other rough building used by shepherds – ‘Weel Nature accords wi’ the sorrow I feel, As I gaze on the site o’ my grandfather’s shiel’ [DA], ‘Jock’s to the Plashetts gane for coals, An’ Crummie’s i’ the shiel’ [WiSp] (also shielin; it survives in the names of many steadings and other place names, e.g. Adderstoneshiel, Bellshiels, Borthwickshiels, Broadleeshiel, Burnfitshiel, Colterscleuch Shiel, Corries’ Shiel, Craikshiel, Doecleuchshiel, Emmettshiels, Foulshiels, Girnwudshiel, Greensheils, Hawick Shiel, Henlawshiel, Hoscoteshiel, Howashiel, Howcleuchshiel, Langburnshiels, Midshiels, Milsingtonshiel, Outersideshiel, Philhopeshiel, Priesthaughshiel, Riddellshiel, Ropelawshiel, Shankendshiels, Shiel Burn, Shiel Cleuch, Shiel Knowe, Shiel Rig, Shiel Sike, Shielswood, Skelfhillshiel, Soothdean Rig Shiel, Staneshiel, Syntonshiel, Templehaashiel, Todshawhillshiel, Westshiels, Whitehillshiel, Wundshiel and Wolfehopeshiels).

Shiel (sheel) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Goodfellow and their son Thomas was born in Hawick Parish in 1656. William (b.1647) is probably also his son. The James born in 1650 to Adam and 'Janet goodfallow' may also be his son. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Ballantyne. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1774, witnessed by the Associate Congregation. Adam (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1791. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as tenants in Lustruther in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Alexander (15th C.) witness to a 1479 sasine for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn, where he is 'Schevil'. He is probably related to David. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant somewhere in the Rule valley, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbells and others for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. His brother William and son John are also listed, their surname being recorded as 'Schewill'. David in 'Hoppiston' and David in 'Langrau' are also listed. He could be the same Andrew, 'alias Dand', who was listed in 1502 along with David, being among Turnbells and others called to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for his non-appearance and he was declared a fugitive and his goods forfeited. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote recorded in 1684 for failing to appear in Jedburgh when cited. Margaret Lorraine (who was married to a Shiel, perhaps even him) and Grizel Lorraine were also cited, and all of them were probably Covenanters. Andrew (b.1798/9) born in Jedburgh, he was farmer at Hassendean. In 1861 he is recorded as joint farmer with his younger brother John and nephew James. They were farming 250 acres and employed 14 people. Also living on the farm were his nieces Margaret and Elizabeth, and another nephew, Rutherford. He was still listed as farmer there in 1868. Anna (17th/18th C.) daughter of Margaret Lorraine, with her father probably being Andrew. She was listed (along with her mother and 2 other Shiels) in 1676 among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Baptie. This presumably means she objected to having an Episcopalian minister in her parish. She was listed as 'dochter of the said Margret, now servitrix to the Lady Bonjeddart' (probably wife of William Douglas of Bonjedward). Archibald (17th C.) tenant in Mack-side. He is listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to take 'the Test'. He may have been related to Walter in Abbotrule and John in Gatehousecote, who were also listed. Catherine (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. David (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1479 for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. His surname is recorded as 'Scheville'. Alexander is listed right after him, and so probably related. David (15th/16th C.) listed in 1502 along with Andrew, being among Turnbells and others called to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for his non-appearance and he was declared a fugitive and his goods forfeited. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Davids from Rulewater. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at 'Hoppiston', recorded in the 1516 remission for many Turnbells for assisting the traitorous Homes. The lands he farmed were in Rulewater, possibly Hobsburn. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Langraw in 1516, when he was listed among many Turnbells for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He was probably related to the other Shiels who were listed there. David (16th C.) tenant in Fodderlee. In 1567 he was listed among men on lands under the superiority of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to crimes against Englishmen. He was probably related to the later John in Fodderlee. David (16th C.) recorded as 'youngar in Langraw' in 1567. He was among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to answer changes of raiding into England. David in Fodderlee was also listed and probably related. David (18th C.) listed as house servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791, when he was working for John Elliot. David (b.1826/7) grocer and spirit dealer on Mather's Close on the 1861 census. He was probably son of weaver James. He married Jessie Scott and their children included: James (b.1851); Walter (b.1854/5); George (b.1856/7); Margaret (b.1848/9); and Agnes E. (b.1861). Along with Thomas (perhaps his brother), he created fizzy drinks. Edward (16th/17th C.) tenant at Langhaugh in Rulewater, recorded in 1605. George (17th C.) resident of the Abbotrule area. He was a Covenanter who died in prison. George (17th C.) recorded paying tax on £52 for Langraw on the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish. Probably the same George in Langraw had his will recorded in 1688. Perhaps he is the 'George Scheel' who died in 1691 and was buried in Hobkirk Parish, his gravestone bearing a tailor's 'goose' and pair of shears, indicating that he was a tailor. He is surely related to Lyle, who was at Langraw in 1643. George (18th C.) resident of Rulewater. Part of his lands (along with 'Boston's half of Kirk-know') were listed among the possessions of Elliot of Wolfelee in 1788, and valued at £22 15s. George (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Ann Pott (or Potts) and their children included Adam (b.1774), James (b.1776), Janet (b.1778) and Janet (again, b.1780). The witnesses in 1774 and 1780 were the whole congregation. His father James died in Hawick in 1787. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-air held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was 'Gilbertus schevil in bethroul' and was fined for non-appearance of his wife, for whom he was surety (with her name not given). He was separately listed when he had remission for several crimes, including: burning Minto; being a supporter of Alexander, Duke of Albany; stealing many sheep from Minto Craighend and from several different people in Bedrule; stealing an ox from Fulton; and stealing 40 silver shillings and a stone of butter. His surety for these entries was the Laird of Bedrule. In 1494/5 he was again listed being 'in bethroule' among a group of 8 Olivers who had remission for communing with the English. He may be the same man as 'Gilbert Schell' who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee in 1469. Hector (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-air in Jedburgh in 1502. Along with the Laird of Bedrule he had remission for stealing 9 sheep from Matthew Dodd out of Dolphinston. His surety was George Turnbull in Hallrule. Hector (d.bef. 1579) mentioned in 1579/80 as a resident of Selkirk when his son Philip witnessed a promise for 'Mathew of the bent in Tuchellaw'. Hector (17th C.) captured along with George of the Bog and presented for trial by Robert, Lord Maxwell, Warden of the West Marches. They were accused of murdering James Paterson and William Gleghorn in Langlandhill and for raids on Peebles and Tweeddale as well as on the Captain of Edinburgh at Cat-slack in Ettrick Forest. He was probably executed along with George of the Bog. Hector (17th C.) son of John, tenant of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish. In 1621, along with his father, he was pronounced as a rebel for cutting 'greenwood' in the woods of William, Lord Cranstoun. In 1618 he and Jenet Sinclair (who had remarried the minister of Hobkirk, Rev. Thomas Thomson) and her son Andrew Brydon had a 'wadset' for the 2 acres of land in the Kirkhaugh beside Hobkirk Kirk. This was with the consent of Bessie Turnbull, who may therefore have been his wife. Hector (17th C.) resident of the Hassendean part of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Young in 1687 and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were John Hope and Robert Scott. He is probably the cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Hector (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included James (b.1701) and Thomas (b.1704). He could be the Hector who married Margaret Young in Robertson Parish in 1687. Hugh 'Hog' (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hobsburn, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-air held in Jedburgh. The Sheriff of Roxburghshire was fined for his non-appearance, although his crimes were not specified; his name is given as 'hoigis schevil'. Probably the same man was recorded as 'hugone schewill alias hoge' in 1502 at the Justice-air in Jedburgh, among many men said to be guilty of the murder of Robert Oliver. George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for him failing to appear and he was declared as a fugitive. He was probably related to Andrew and David who are also listed. Isabel 'Tibbie' (1783-1878) inn-keeper who gave her name to a pub on the shores of St. Mary's Loch. She was daughter of Walter and Mary Grieve and born at Thirlestane Mill in Ettrick. When young she had been a servant with the Ettrick Shepherd's mother. In 1806 she married Robert Richardson (1783-1824), a molecatcher from Westmorland. They became tenants of a cottage near Chapelhope, at the upper end of the Loch of the Lowes. In 1823, shortly before her husband died, she moved to the coaching inn at the bridge between St. Mary's Loch and the Loch of the Lowes. The inn became famous as a meeting place for friends of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, including Sir Walter Scott and Professor John Wilson. She had all her mental faculties intact until her death, aged 95. The couple had several children, including: Thomas (1808-1890), who emigrated to Canada; Walter (c.1810-80), who also emigrated to Canada; Margaret (1812-52); William (1816-91), who remained at the family home; Mary (1818-96), who became Mrs. Michell, Crosscleugh and died in Hawick; and Dorothy

(b.1820), who died in infancy. J. Rutherford (d.1916) bought Midshiels from Turnbull of Fenwick in 1896. He is probably the man of the same name who donated an adder killed at Hassendean to the Museum in 1863. In 1906 he (along with Miss Joan, probably his daughter) contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. James (16th C.) tenant in Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme's farm at Blackgrain (in the Yarrow valley) according to his last testament of 1574. An inventory of the cattle there is provided in the testament. James (16th/17th C.) resident of Friarshaw. In the trial documents for witchcraft of Isobel Howison in 1628 there is a note to say that 'he kennes scho wes a chairme cat'. James (d.c.1694) tenant of Southdean Mill. He was witness to the baptism of a daughter of John Ker of Shaw in Southdean Kirk in 1681. In 1691 he had a discharge with William Curre of Whitmuir. His will is recorded in 1694. James (17th C.) farmer in Hassendean Parish. He is recorded being at Easter Burnfoot when his children were baptised in Robertson Parish in 1682 and 1688. In 1686, along with his son John, he rented the lands of Knowe from William Scott. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for another James in Hassendean in 1687. He was recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1694 and his son John may be the resident of Midshiels at that time. He could be the James 'in Knowhead' whose will is recorded in 1689. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for George Riddell in Robertson Parish in 1681 and another for Walter Sanderson in 1683. He married Christian Miller in Robertson in 1681 and their children included: Margaret (b.1682); Margaret (b.1682); William (b.1685); and Janet (b.1688). The 1682 witnesses were William Beattie and James . . . and in 1688 were Thomas and Walter Sanderson. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Janet Shiel and their children included Bessie and Isabel (b.1687). The witnesses were William Scott and James Shiel (probably the other man of the same name who was at Easter Burnfoot). James of Langraw (17th C.) witnessed a sasine for Hobbsburn in 1693. Also in 1693 he is the James 'called of Tour, indweller' at Langraw who witnessed a sasine between Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge and Sir John Pringle of Stichell. Probably the same James 'portioner of Langraw' was recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hobkirk Parish. He was probably related to George, recorded in Langraw in 1688. James (17th C.) resident at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1737 and 1742. His children may have included James (b.1737), John (b.1739), Mary (b.1741) and Isabel (b.1743). Perhaps the same James married Janet 'Boll' in Cavers in 1733. James (b.1770/1) born in Eckford Parish, he was farmer at Hassendean. He is recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 was farmer of 1,000 acres, employing 11 labourers. His wife was Helen, and their children included James, Andrew (who continued with the farm) and John (who assisted his brother). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Cairns and their children included: Isabel (b.1798); Janet (b.1800); Mary (b.1803); James (b.1805); Francis (b.1807); Euphemia (b.1809); and Margaret (b.1812). James (1776–1858) weaver of West Port who was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about No. 3 Loan. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included: George (b.1807); Margaret (b.1809), who probably married Burgh Officer Jamie Smith; Ann (b.1812); Thomas (b.1814); John (b.c.1819); James (b.1821); and David (b.c.1827), who was a grocer on Mather's Close. He had twin sons who died in 1819. He could be the weaver of this name listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia in 1797 (with the annotation 'Serving'); his name appears again in 1798, and later that year he was sworn into the Militia, as confirmed in the amended 1799 list. James (18th/19th C.) horsedealer of Hawick. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the carter whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1808. James (b.c.1795) farmer at Greenbraeheds and Whitlaw. He is recorded at Greenbraeheds in 1841, along with his brothers John and Robert, and their mother Janet. He was probably son of Robert, recorded there in 1797. By 1861 he was farmer at Little Whitlaw, unmarried and living with his brother John and sister Janet. He was still recorded at Little Whitlaw in 1868. James (18th/19th C.) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Common, who died at Southdean Schoolhouse in 1868, aged 90. Their children included: Thomas (1808–56), Schoolmaster in Hobkirk; and Mary (b.1816/7), who married Neil Taylor, schoolmaster at Southdean. John (b.c.1810), who was living with Thomas and Mary at Hobkirk Schoolhouse in 1841, was probably also his son. He died at the age of 47 and is buried at Borthwick Waas, along with his wife and parents. James (b.1805/6) innkeeper of the Coach & Horses at the Tower Knowe. He is listed on Silver Street in 1851 and on Teviot Square in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a widower and grocer at 30 High Street. He married Janet Stewart and their children included: Janet Cairns (b.1842); and Isabella (b.1844). James (19th C.) listed as Clerk of the Course at the Common Riding Races of 1873. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (b.1830/1) born in Oxnam Parish, he was farmer at Hassendean. In 1861 he was farming there jointly with his uncles Andrew and John. James (d.1919) born in the West End, he became Registrar, Inspector of the Poor and Clerk of the Burial Ground for Wilton Parish in the latter part of the 19th century. He was the first Registrar of Wilton, following the Registration Act of 1854. His full time job was as foreman in one of the factories at Damside. In 1861 he is listed as Inspector of Poor & Registrar on Albion Place. His later office (and probably house) was at 2 Laing Terrace. He was also later Clerk and Treasurer of Hawick Combination Poorhouse. Probably the same James was a singer at the Colour Bussing and similar events. His wife was Helen and their children included James, Andrew and Janet Helen. James (19th C.) proprietor of the West End Bar in the latter part of the 19th century. A stone bottle labelled with his name is in the Museum. He may be the Mr. Shiel who lived in the new house built at the foot of the Loan (and by the entrance to the Poorhouse) in about 1879. John (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded as son of 'tassy', although it is unclear if this was a forename or a nickname. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. John (16th C.) recorded in Fodderlee in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. In 1587 his sureties was recorded being 'Dand', Burgess of Jedburgh and William, also in Jedburgh. John (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot and brother of Steven. He is recorded as 'John Shevell his man' in a list of men accused in 1590 of stealing livestock from Middleton Hall in England in 1589. He was named along with 'Gib Elliott son to Robin', John Noble (another servant of Robert Elliot) and other Elliots and Croziers. He was also listed along with Steven, and Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, who were complained about in 1590 for a raid into England. Probably the same 'Jock Sheile' is accused along with Steven in another case of stealing from Sir John Forster's tenants in 'Cowperhaugh'. Probably the same Jock, along with Steven, Jenkin Nixon and Will Elliot of the Steele, was accused in 1590 of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he was probably the John, named along with Steven, among Elliots, Nixons and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them, and the John, named along with Steven and several Elliots accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as 'Jock Sheill Robin Elliott's man' in another case of 1590, with his brother Steven and several Nixons, Croziers and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinsons of 'Lynbriggs'; his name was given before Steven's and so he was presumably the older brother. John 'Jock' of Kirkknowe (16th C.) recorded in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. He was recorded as tenant in Kirkknowe when accused in 1590 of raiding the English farm of Middleton Hall in 1589. He was 'Younge Jocke Sheile of Kyrknowe' and 'Jock Sheile of the Kirkeknowe' listed along with Douglasses, Laidlaws, Turnbolls and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods. He was probably an ancestor of the later Shiels of Kirkknowe. John (17th C.) tenant in Kirkknowe in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in 1621. He and his son Hector were denounced as rebels for cutting down 'greenwood' on the land of William, Lord Cranstoun. In 1666 he (or his direct descendant) sold half the land to John Mair of Mackside. His son was Hector. Either the same John or his father was recorded as 'John Schewill in Kirknow' in 1610 in an inquest for the succession to Apotside and Tythehouse. They were surely related to Walter of Kirkknowe who was recorded in 1643. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret (or 'Malie') Grieve and their children included: William (b.1646); and Robert (b.1648). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Murray and their children included Helen (b.1650) and Marion (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were George Helm and William Scott. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their children included: James Shiel (b.1656). John (17th C.) tenant in Boosmill. Along with his brother (whose first name is not given) he was declared a fugitive in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (17th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote listed in 1684 among men proclaimed as rebels for being Covenanters. John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same John had a son Adam baptised in Cavers Parish in 1695. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Adam (b.1691) and William (b.1695). His name is recorded as 'Sheilds'. John (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas who was also listed there. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He was recorded as 'theiker' (i.e. thatcher) in 1704 when his son John was baptised, with witnesses gardener Patrick McLellan and weaver David Miller. Perhaps the same John was 'workman in Hawick' in 1706 when his daughter Bessie was baptised, with witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie George Martin. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for smith John Scott in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1709. Based on the handwriting in the parish records, it seems likely he started in about 1697 and continued until around 1714. He married Margaret Shiel in Ashkirk in 1703 and their children included: William (b.1704); George (b.1706); and Dorothy and Elizabeth (b.1709). The children baptised in 1709 were 'att one birth', presumably meaning they were twins. John (17th/18th C.) lived at Dodheadshiels in Yarrow Parish. In 1728 his unnamed son was baptised in Robertson Parish. It is unclear what his connection was to this parish. John (18th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1733 he married Helen Bell from Hawick. John (18th C.) farmer at Kirknowe who was a significant Hobkirk parishioner in the early 1700s. The land of Kirknowe was in possession of the Shiels from before the Reformation. The part that he held was formerly called Hobkirkstile or just Kirkstile. He held it from at least 1718. His only daughter was Janet, who married Richard, son of John Mair. He left his lands to his grandson, John Stephenson, according to a settlement dated 1749 and ratified in 1759. John (18th C.) recorded as herd in Shaws in 1785 when he was part of a legal case in Selkirk. This could be the Shaws near Ashkirk. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Beryfell according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798

he married Janet Cairns, who was also from Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as miller at Weensland Mill in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. John (b.1805/6) born in Jedburgh, he was farmer at Hassendean, along with his older brother Andrew and nephew James. In 1861 they are jointly recorded as farmers of 250 acres, employing 14 people. John 'Jocky' (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a tobacconist and sweet shop at the corner of the Loan and Beaconsfield Terrace. Leon (15th/16th C.) listed as 'Leonem Schavil' when he was on the 1517 panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Lyle (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; he appears right after Routledges and Douglasses who were probably local to the Cavers area. He was again recorded in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for his non-appearance. Lyle (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £52. His listed after George Turnbull of Langraw as 'Lyell Scheil there'. He is surely related to who held the same lands in 1663. Robert (15th/16th C.) resident in Bedrule. In 1502 he had remission for stealing 8 sheep from Thomas Phaup in Bedrule, with the Laird of Bedrule as his surety. Robert (16th/17th C.) servant to John Ker of Langnewton, recorded in 1621. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener at Alton in 1711. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Margaret (b.1711); and James (b.1715). He is probably the Robert married to Janet Smith whose daughter Jean was baptised in 1718. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Greenbraeheads in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. The farmers there in 1841, James, John and Robert, were probably his sons. Ruther (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet 'Query' and their children included George (b.1756). Rutherford (b.c.1805) farmer at Ulston in Jedburgh Parish. He reported to the inquest in 1837 into election intimidation that there was an attempt to stop him voting in Hawick, and in fact he did not vote. Steven (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'in Mynt' (presumably Minto) among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Steven (16th C.) recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. John was also listed and so presumably a close relative. In another case he and Jock were accused of stealing from Sir John Forster's tenants in 'Cowperhaugh'. He was further accused in 1590, along with Jock, Will Elliot of the Steele and Jenkin Nixon of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he and John were accused in 1590, along with Elliots, Nixons and others, of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall in England, and the Steven, named along with John and several Elliots accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as brother of Jock, who was 'Robin Elliott's man' in another case of 1590, along with several Nixons, Croziers and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinsons of 'Lynbriggess'. Thomas (d.c.1578) recorded as 'Thomas Schevill' in 1578/9 when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and members of his family were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for his murder. The others accused of being involved were Sir Thomas' sons Wat and Thomas, his nephew John and his son-in-law Edward Lorraine. He was presumably a local man, but it is not known where he was from. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Scheill' in Wauchope in 1605 and 'Thomas Schewill in Wauchup' in 1612 when he was witness to a sasine. Rev. Thomas (1630/1–1708) first minister at the newly created Parish of Roberton in 1689. Probably the same 'Mr. Thomas Shiel' witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish (along with Gideon Scott of Outerside) in 1687, suggesting he was already in the area at that time. He was a member of the Assemblies in 1690 and 1692. He was probably the same as the former minister at Kirkbride in Dumfriesshire, who was admitted in 1655, but deprived in 1662. His whereabouts during the time of persecution are unknown, but it seems that he may have settled in the Hawick area and started officiating at Roberton in about 1689. This same minister was restored by Act of Parliament in 1690 and was translated to Sanquhar in 1693, where he remained until his death (as confirmed by a Sanquhar Session minute book, starting in 1696 and recording his demise in 1708), and where he is buried. There is a letter dated 1691 from 'R. Wylie, Wooll, to Tarras' (i.e. from the minister of Ashkirk to Scott of Harden) saying that he may be kept in the area by offering him Wilton Parish until Roberton is re-erected. There is also an assignation of 1692 in which he requests the stipend from Hassendean to which he claims the right. He was recorded as tenant of the farm of Todshawhaugh, leasing half in 1672 and 1673, all in 1677, until 1693, and being tenant in 1694 along with his son Thomas. It seems likely he was the 'Mr Thomas Sheill' who was taxed for having 10 hearths at Lintalee house in 1694 (although why he would have been there at this time is a mystery), as well as being also listed as 'Mr Tho. Sheill' when taxed for 3 hearths at Todshawhaugh (although this could feasibly be his son). The Thomas who married Grizel Dalgleish (daughter of a Westerkirk minister) and had a son Thomas in 1701 was probably his son (since he himself would have been about 70 at the time, and there was no 'Mr.' title written). His son William farmed at Todshawhaugh, as clearly stated in a 1696 record. However, there is no documented evidence about his wife and the births of his children. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Denholm. He is listed in 1684 among men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. His wife Agnes Hall was also accused of attending conventicles. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John who was also listed there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of Rev. Thomas, he was tenant at Todshawhill. He was recorded as tenant in 1694, along with his father, the minister. In 1699 he rebuilt the farmhouse there on a more convenient site. He was 'in Todshahill' when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1712 for James Scott in Stobicote, in 1713 for a weaver called Douglas and in 1722 for Walter Scoon in Branholtmtown. He was in arrears for the rent of Todshawhill in 1713–20. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for William Grieve, tenant in Fenwick. In 1728 he was 'Mr. Shiel in Todja...' when he witnessed a baptism for Gideon Elliot of Harwood. He is still recorded as the tenant of the farm in 1735. He could be the Thomas of Roberton Parish who married Grizel Dalgleish in Westerkirk Parish in 1701; she was probably daughter of the former minister there, Walter Dalgleish. The couple had a son Thomas who was baptised in Hawick and Roberton Parishes in 1701; one of the witnesses was 'Mr James Dalgleish', suggesting his wife's brother or other near relative was a minister, and it seems likely she was daughter of Walter Dalgleish, outed minister of Westerkirk. Other children born to a Thomas in Roberton Parish (mostly in Todshawhill) were: Jean (b.1717); Grisel (b.1719); Elizabeth (b.1721); an unnamed child (b.1722); Rachel (b.1724); and Robert (b.1726). These seem likely to be the same father, although the gap between children is unusually wide, so perhaps he remarried. His servant Isobel Millar married Walter Scoon in 1720. In 1729 he is described as 'in Todshawhill' when his son James became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh and when his son Robert became a weaver's apprentice in 1741. He was no longer tenant by 1745. He was also a joint tenant of Linhope with Walter Grieve in 1729. James Grieve, tenant of Branxholme Park describes (in 1821) how he was son of a Dumfriesshire minister, and had a brother who married the sister of the 'Bonnie Lass o Branxholme'. However, it is possible there were 2 generations confounded here. Thomas (18th C.) recorded as 'apprentis to ye sd Walter' in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Hawick doctor Walter Scott. Thomas (1723/4–1812) buried in Borthwick Waas, his wife died in 1798. Their children included: James, who died aged 47, and whose son Thomas was Schoolmaster in Hobkirk. He may be the Thomas, son of James and Jean Karr who was born in Bowden Parish in 1723. Thomas (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. Thomas (1808–56) son of James and Margaret Common. He was Schoolmaster at Hobkirk Parish School, perhaps just before Mr. Lightbody. He was already teacher there in 1841, living with his mother, brother John and sister Mary. In 1851 he was living with his mother Margaret in the Hobkirk Schoolhouse. He was listed as Hobkirk schoolmaster in Slater's 1852 directory. After his death his widow and daughter took over the post office at Bonchester Bridge. However, not long afterwards his sister married the schoolmaster at Chesters. Perhaps the same Thomas was schoolmaster at Cogsmill from 1829. Tibbie see Isabel Shiel. Walter of Kirknowe (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £78. He was surely related to John in Kirknowe, who was recorded earlier. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Abbotrule listed in 1684 among those men proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. He may have been related to Archibald in Mackside and John in Gatehousecote, who were also listed. Walter (19th/20th C.) resident of Whitriggs in Cavers Parish. In 1906 he was among those who contributed to the fund for renovating Kirkton Kirk. William (15th C.) recorded as 'Willel-mum Schewile' in 1427 when he was on the 'inquest of retour' for William Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick from his father. Presumably the same 'William Schewyll' was on the 'retour of inquest' for Ker of Altonburn. William (15th C.) recorded as 'Willelmo Schevil' in the period 1456–60 when he was Clerk of the Court for Ettrick Forest and was assigned the farm of Kershope. William (15th/16th C.) witness in 1514 to the baronial sasine for Hawick. He is listed as 'Willelmo Schewyll'. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'William Schevill of Fodderlie' in 1618 when there was a bond in his name, involving Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule, 'for two bolls cherittie meal, of the met and measure of Jedburgh'. He may be the same man as the William in Hartshaugh recorded later. William (17th C.) recorded as 'William Schievill, indweller in Hartshaid' (probably 'Hartshaugh') when he was witness to a disposition of 1630 between Francis Hamilton and Rev. William Weir. His name is transcribed 'Williame Schewill'. William (17th C.) tenant in 'Mossyd' according to the Register of the Privy Council in 1676. His wife Agnes and daughter Bessie were among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Baptie. This presumably means that they objected to having an Episcopalian minister in their parish. He was probably related to the husband of Margaret Lorraine (also listed in 1676), who was also a Shiel (perhaps Andrew). It is possible he was the same as William in Mackside. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Walker and their children included: Helen (b.1655); and John (b.1657). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their son Hector was baptised in 1669. William (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (d.bef. 1719) described as 'writer in Hawick' when his son Thomas became a skinner's apprentice in 1719. William (17th/18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick. His 'servitrix' Janet Stothart married William Whillans in Hawick in 1714. He was rebuked by the Session in 1716 after the minister saw him 'coming home and holden on by a man riding behind him for drunkenness'. Also in 1716, he was witness to a baptism (along with servant William Brown) for wigmaker John Norville. It is unclear which inn he was associated with. William (17th/18th C.) farmer at Todshawhaugh. He was brother of the Thomas who farmed at Todshawhaugh, and son of Rev. Thomas. In 1696 when he rented Todshawhaugh he is clearly described as son of the minister Thomas; he appears to have taken over from his brother Thomas about then (since Thomas is listed as farmer in 1694). He is recorded in 1694 when he witnessed a disposition for the Elliots of Rulewater. He was still renting Todshawhaugh in 1698. He was rebuked by Roberton session in 1701 for allowing a ‘mock’ wedding to take place in his house on the Sabbath, between Archibald Scott of Boonraw and Esther Turnbull. He could be the brother of Thomas, farmer at Todshawhill, who is said to have married a sister of the ‘Bonny Lass o’ Branxholme’ William (17th/18th C.) recorded in Stobcote in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for apothecary Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same as the farmer at Todshawhaugh.

William (17th/18th C.) resident of the Flex. In 1712 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray in Whitlaw, along with Archibald Paterson in the Flex. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Cavers in 1705 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who may have been his include Jean (b.1702), Margaret (b.1704), Margaret (b.1711) and John (b.1714). He may be the William recorded at West Middle in 1719 when his son William was baptised in Cavers. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1824 when his child with Betty Laidlaw died (also formerly spelled ‘Scheil’, ‘Scheill’, ‘Schele’, ‘Schevell’, ‘Schevill’, ‘Schewill’, ‘Sheel’, ‘Sheil’, ‘Sheill’, ‘Sheills’, ‘Shevell’, ‘Schevil’, ‘Shield’, ‘Shiell’, ‘Shiels’ and variants).

Shiel Burn (sheel-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near Wilson’s Pile and running roughly north-west to join Boghall Burn. It is now entirely within forest. The 1857 Ordnance Survey map marks a small settlement on its banks, of which there is now no sign.

Shiel Cleugh (sheel-klooch) n. small stream in Southdean Parish, whichroft Plantation, between the sites of Slack’s Tower and Northbank Tower, and runs north to meet the Jed Water. There are lines of rig covering about 10 hectares on both sides of the cleugh, and aerial photography has revealed a possible farmstead, now buried in the forest.

Shielden Sike (sheel-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, just south of Burnmouth farm, between the Kiln Burn and Howden Cleuch. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined cottage there. Labourer John Lamb was there in 1835 and there were Elliots there in 1841, but it was abandoned before 1851. The area formerly had a fortified house, known as Stripshielden (it is ‘Shelden’ in 1835 and ‘Sheldon’ in 1841).

Shielie’s (shee-leez) n. sweetie shop at the Sandbed in the early-to-mid 20th century – ‘Across the road auld Shielie did us braw For bawbees we wad ware owre there ...’ [WL].

shielin (shee-lin) n., arch. a remote and often crude shelter built for shepherds, remote pasture lands where animals would be driven in the summer – ‘...as the sheilins o’ Kedar, as the coortins o’ Solomon’ [HSR], ‘The mirth o’ the glen and the warmth o’ the shieling Are brought to the wynds o’ the grey toun again’ [WL] (also shiel).

Shiel Knowe (sheel-now) n. hill lying south-west of Riccarton Junction and west of Saughtree, reaching a height of 292 m.

Shiellaw (sheel-law) n. former farmstead, close to the present location of Hassendean Common farm (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Shiellaw Plantin (sheel-law-plawn-tin) n. former plantation near Hassendean Common (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Shiel Rig (sheel-rig) n. ridge in Southdean Parish, situated on the right, opposite the turn-off for Lethem. There are the remains of a group of 4 shielings, 5 pens and a stock enclosure there, just to the west of the forest. These are probably the remains of a mediæval steading. There is also a 300 m boundary bank to the south-west, near the Carter Burn (also written as ‘Shielrig’).

Shiels see Shiel

Shiel Sike (sheel-sik) n. stream in the Borthwick valley, which rises as the Red Cleuch near Redcleuch Edge and Cowbush hill, and joins the Dirthope Burn before running into the Borthwick. There is an old rectangular enclosure on the eastern side and a building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Shiel’s Lands (sheelz-lawnd) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish. In 1811 ‘Part of Shiel’s Lands, and Boston’s half of Kirk-know’ were valued at £22 15s, among the lands of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee, while the rest was valued at £68 5s and owned by William Oliver of Langraw.

Shielsteeds Hill (sheel-steedz-hil) n. Shielsteeds Hill, small hill in southern Castleton Parish, just west of Kershope Bridge. It has been suggested that this might be the site of the shielings of Eadulf, which are noted in a 14th century charter confirming a 12th century grant of neighbouring land at Kershope.

Shielswud (sheelz-wud, -wood) n. Shielswood, area around Shielswood Loch and Shielswood farm, on the Ashkirk to Roberton road. This is the highest part of Ashkirk parish, containing the hills Cringie Law, Threephead, Smasha Hill, Gandiesknowe, Horn Hill, etc. William Turnbull was recorded at 'scheliswod medow' when Thomas Lauder of Todrig was accused of stealing from him in 1494/5. The lands there were owned by a branch of the Scott family from the mid-16th century and more recently became part of the estates of the Elliots of Minto. In 1581 Margaret Scott, widow of William Scott of Burnfoot, resigned her liferent of lands there to her son William. William Scott then leased the lands and steading to Walter Scott of Todrig, promising also to finish building a stone house there, but the liferent went to his new bride, Janet, daughter of William Scott in Huntly. The lands were valued at £260 in 1643 and owned by Walter Scott of Shielswood. It still had the same value according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, and also in 1678 when it was owned by James Scott. The main house is listed as having 5 hearths in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with 3 other tenants on the estate and one poor person. The lands were gained by the Elliots of Minto in the early 18th century. In 1779 the liferent had been given by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto to Rev. Simon Haliburton, and it was still valued at £260. It was also described in 1780 as 'a four merk ten shilling and eight penny land'. William Scott is recorded as shepherd there and William Miller as farmer, on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Hobkirk was a servant there in at least 1799–1801 (the house there is marked as 'Sheelswood' on Gordon's c. 1650 map, Blaeu's 1654 map and Adair's c. 1688 map, and is 'Shiels Wood' on Ainslie's 1773 map; it is 'sche-liswod' in 1494/5, 'Scheilliswod' in 1581, 'Scheilliswode' in 1609, 'Schelliswoid' in 1616, 'Scheilliswood' in 1617, 'Scheilswode' in 1648, 'Sheilliswood', 'Sheill-wood' in 1695, 'Scheilswood' in 1690, 'Scheilswood' in 1692 and 'Shilsuood' in 1694).

Shielswudhaugh (sheelz-wud-hawch) n. former steading near Shielswood. Thomas Gray was a weaver living there in 1709. Gideon Scott was recorded there in 1727 (it is 'Shielswood hauch' in 1709).

Shielswud Loch (sheelz-wud-loch) n. Shielswood Loch, loch about 3 miles north-west of Hawick, south of Shielswood farm on the 'Hill Road to Robertson' (it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Sheelswood L.').

shift (shift) n., arch. a stratagem, ploy, plan, evasion – 'The Treasurer informed that some who owed money by Bill to the Session refused or made shift of payment' [PR1724], livelihood – '...for gameing at ye Cards ...that that was a sinfull and dishonest shift to get a liveing' [PR1724], '...and the other of them is not so, his wife being valetudinary, and can make no shift for a livelihood' [PR1725], v., arch. to evade, dodge – 'The Treasurer made report that the Delinquents shifts the payment of their penalties of fornication' [PR1724].

shile (shil) v., poet. to pull faces, screw up the face – 'How brainless dundrums sneer an' wink, An' shan' an' shile, and leering blink, At pover-tie' [JoHa].

[JJW], 'The robin wi' his rosy vest, The wren in russet livery drest, And shilfa frae his cosie nest On the Bank aboon the Boosie' [DA], 'Mute and sad is the mavis, for simmer's awa; And a lilt frae the shilfa I ne'er get ava' [TCh], 'The shilfie's warble and the cusha's cry Wake woodland echoes from the feathered throng' [TK] (shilfie is more common locally).

shilfie (shil-fee, shel-fee) n. the chaffinch, Fringilla coelebs – 'The callant at herreet the shilfie's nest' [ECS], 'The shilfies frae the buskit thorn Sing salutations to the simmer' [DH], '...Where shilfies, blackies, linties poure Their offering o' sang' [WL], 'The hedge sparrow trills and the robin pipes, and 'shelfies' are flitting nearby' [WFC] (also spelled 'shelfie', 'shilfy', etc.; cf. the less common shilfa).

shiller-shakers (shi-lur-shā-kurz) n., pl., arch. quaking grass, Briza media (also shillin-shakers).

shillin (shi-lin) n. a pre-decimalisation coin (i.e. from before 1971), worth twelve old pence or one twentieth of a pound, and still used occasionally to mean five new pence – '...To send a bottle out o' fight, Could he command a shillin' ...' [JR]. The word is also used to indicate the strength of beer, historically indicating the duty payable per barrel – 'A'll hev a pint o yer aeighity shillin'. Additionally it was sometimes used as a unit of weight, representing 1/20 of a pound – 'Item, Gowldilands, neuer payit ferme; estimat to pay 100 lbs. in stok, parsonage 3 bolls, vicarage 7 lbs. 10 sh.' [PR1627].

the shillin (thu-shi-lin) n., arch. also called the King's Shilling, this was a token bounty accepted when signing up for the army – 'Come laddies come, hear the cannons roar, Tak' the King's shilling an' we're off tae war' [T].

Shillinlaw (shi-lin-law) n. (Shiilinglaw) Andrew (b.c.1810) agricultural labourer living at Milsington in 1841. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret, Mary, Christian, Robert, John and Jane. George (18th C.) son of Joseph, who was miller at Legerwood. He was recorded as groom and postillion at Burnhead in 1788, when he was working for William Scott. He married Dorothy Smith and they were living at Crow Hill when their daughter Betty was baptised in 1787; the baptism was recorded in both Wilton and Earlston Parishes and the witnesses in Wilton were William Beattie and Adam Scott. By 1789 he was living at Currie in Borthwick Parish. He was later a gardener and nurseryman in Earlston, where he had several additional children, and was said to have supplied plants to Sir Walter Scott at Abbotsford.

shillin-shakers (shi-lin-shā-kurz) n., pl., arch. quaking grass, Briza media (also shiller-shakers).

shilpit (shil-pee', shilpi') adj. pale, puny, sickly, underfed looking – 'look it that pair wee shilpit dog', '...an wad spruish an turn leify again the maist shilpeet an disjaskeet!' [ECS], 'Whiles they wad look gey shilpit When the wund was snell' [DH], arch. unfriendly, dreary – 'In a like manner one sense of Shilpit in Roxb. is 'cold and comfortless, ungenial'' [JoJ].

shine (shin) v., arch. to throw, pitch, fling – 'There was nochts for't but the plates, an' aw shined them and a bowl or twa doon and made a fit-ba' o' the fragments' [HAST1868], 'Hei sheind eis bonnet doon an wantet ti fecht' [ECS], 'She shined the ashet doon on the fluir' [GW], to slam a door – 'A'll shein the door in eer face if ee come nerr here again' [ECS] (also written 'shein').

shine (shin) n., arch., poet. a social gathering, party, bustle, caper, row – 'Gude kens how 'twill end at the last, But sairly I'm dreading a shiney; I doot it will end in a blast, For the deil's i' the lasses o Limey' [JoHa], 'Shein (sb. [noun]) = social gathering. Cookie-shein = tea-party' [ECS], 'When that was dune, the shine was owre, Weel pleased the leddies een' ...' [WFC].

shinit (shī-nee', -ni') pp., poet. shone, shined – 'Owt o' Zion, the perfiteniss o' beutie, the Lord heth shynet' [HSR].

shinty (shin-tee) n. a Scottish game similar to hockey, also sometimes applied to the version played on ice – 'And then what fun beyond compare! What joy abune a' price! We'd pick oor sides and play the game O' shinty on the ice' [WLu]. It was played in Hawick in the early 19th century.

Shiplaw (ship-lu, -law) n. area around the former cottage of 'Shiplaw Cross', near the cattle-grid on the Earlside to Hawthornside road. Cars often stop near here to watch the horses cross the road on the Bonchester Ride-out. There is another Shiplaw north of Peebles near Eddleston and Sharplaws outside Jedburgh and near Hownam.

Shiplaw Bog (ship-lu-bōg) n. marshy area to the north of Cogsmill school, presumably related to the old chapel near there.

Shiplaw Corse (ship-lu-kōrs) n. area on the side road between Hawthornside and Earlside. Also known as 'Chapel Cross', 'Sheeplaw Cross' or 'Shiplaw Cross', the cottage here was the highest house in Cavers Parish. William Whillans (who had been blacksmith at the Flex) was there in 1725. Robert Wilson was living there in 1749. It was a shepherd's cottage from about 1780, when the shepherd was John Rutherford, whose descendants were blacksmiths in Bonchester. Adam Easton was there in 1792. The cottage was rebuilt in 1826, with the farmer about that time being John Elliot. Later it was occupied by a roadman, and in the mid-19th century the tenant was a Mr. Blake, when visited by Lady Scott of Spottiswood, who made a sketh of it. The house was destroyed by fire in 1902. It can be seen in a photograph of the mid-19th century, and is a late surviving example of country houses of an earlier era. It was a 1-storey thatched dwelling, built of rough, undressed stones, with the holes filled with mud. The walls were about 7 feet high and 3 feet thick. The name survives in the nearby plantation called 'Chaipel o Cross Plantation'; the 'Chapel of Cross' has been suggested to be a medieval chapel dedicated to the holy cross, but there is no evidence that there was such a chapel there, with its existence probably deriving from the name (the connection with a 'cross' is unclear, however, it is possible there was a wayside cross associated with the chapel at Cogsmill; it is 'Shyplawcross' in 1725, 'Sheeplawcross' in 1749 and appears to be 'Sleepracross' in 1792).

Shiplaw Cross see Shiplaw Corse

Shipley (ship-lee) n. Frederick (1889–1917) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Jane Fraser. His paternal grandparents were William (who came from England) and Margaret Stevenson, while his maternal grandparents were George Fraser and Mary Ballantyne. He emigrated to Ontario, Canada in 1906, with his mother following the next year. He married in 1912, but his wife died in childbirth in 1914. He enlisted in 1915 and was killed at Vimy Ridge. He is buried at Nine Elms Military Cemetery in France. He was posthumously awarded the Memorial Cross, which in 2007 was bought on E-Bay by the museum in Welland, his adopted home town.

shippit (shi-pee', pi') pp. shipped, took ship – ‘Aw shippit again frae Glasca, and now comes the strangest pairt o’ the story’ [JEDM].

Shipshieldean (ship-sheel-deen) n. another name for Stripshielden, as recorded in a survey of Buccleuch lands in 1718 and marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. In 1718 it was ‘Shipselden alias Side’, suggesting it was alternatively called Side.

shire (shir) adj., arch. exact, bare – ‘Shire, Shyre. Used in the sense of strait, or S. scrimp; as ‘shire measure’, that sort of measurement which allows not a hair-breadth beyond what mere justice demands, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

Shirensclench (shI-rinz-klooch) n. former farmstead near Bellendean. It is possible that ‘Sire Wautier de Sherwynclawe’ of Roxburghshire, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, was an early owner; although this seems more likely to be Mervinslaw, it could have a similar etymology. The farmhouse was demolished when Ale-moor Reservoir was built. John Scoon was farmer there in 1787 (also written ‘Shiringcleuch’, ‘Shirings Cleuch’, ‘Shyreings Cleugh’, etc.; the name may be related to the word ‘shirins’).

shiriff (shi-rif, she-rif) n. a legal officer who sits as judge in a Sheriff Court. Formerly each county had a principle official called the Sheriff, responsible for criminal and administrative matters, with a Sheriff-Depute appointed to perform legal functions. In Roxburghshire the office became a hereditary one with the Douglasses of Cavers, and was synonymous with the title ‘Sheriff of Teviotdale’. After such heritable positions were abolished in 1748 the position was replaced with the Sheriff-Principal, assisted by Sheriff-substitutes, who were usually known as simply ‘Sheriffs’, a title they took officially after 1971.

Shiriff (shi-rif, she-rif) n. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was in Cavers itself in 1741. His children included Archibald (b.1740) and James (b.1741).

the Shiriff (thu-shi-rif) n. nickname for Robert Oliver in the 16th century.

Shiriff Clerk (shi-rif-klerk) n. clerk appointed to act as secretary to the Sheriff Court, specifically to record the business of the court.

Shiriff Court (shi-rif-kör', she-rif-kör') n. local court dealing with non-serious crimes and civil cases, Hawick’s cases being dealt with at the Sheriff Court in Jedburgh. From about 1895 until sometime in the mid-20th century there were weekly Sheriff Courts held in the Town Hall in Hawick.

Shiriff Depute (shi-rif-de-pewt) n. deputy appointed to assist the Sheriff in running the Sheriff Court. In earlier centuries this was usually someone with formal legal training who would help the Sheriff. After the abolition of heritable sheriffships, the ‘Depute’ actually held the office of Sheriff and the term ‘Sheriff Depute’ was synonymous with ‘Sheriff Principal’, with deputies known as ‘Sheriff Substitutes’.

shiriff officer (she-rif-o-fee-sur) n. official of a Sheriff Court, charged with duties such as delivering summonses or seizing goods to pay off debts. William Henderson was described as ‘Shiref officer in Hawick’ in 1722. In Hawick, before the Police Act of 1861, he was responsible, along with the two Burgh Officers, for maintaining law and order.

Shiriff o Roxburgh (shi-rif-ō-roks-bu-ru) n. hereditary title, synonymous with the Sheriffship of Teviotdale, and held for generations by the Douglasses of Cavers. This was formally a royal appointment and the holder was the King’s officer in the county. In the earliest times it may only have been a military leader connected with Roxburgh Castle, but later it became an office with administrative and judicial responsibility for the county. The first known ‘vicecomite’ of Roxburgh was Gospatric, mentioned in the founding charter of Selkirk Abbey. Henry Kerr was Sheriff in the 14th century, George Douglas, Earl of Angus, gained the title along with several lands in 1397 and Sir Archibald Douglas acquired the hereditary title by royal charter in 1412. A decree of 1620 abolishing heritable jurisdictions led to William Douglas of Cavers agreeing to part with the Sheriffdom (and teinds from Cavers Kirk) for the sum of £20,000 Scots. But in 1626, when only £4,000 had been paid, he refused to surrender the office, and Parliament agreed he could do so until the full amount was paid. In fact the family held on to the Sherifffdom until the final abolition of such offices in 1747. A roll of the Sherifffdom is: Gospatric, c.1125; Gervase Rid-dell, c.1138; Robert, son of Guy, 1147; John, son of Orm, c.1170; Bernard of Hadden, c.1203 and 1227/8; John Maxwell, c.1214 and 1223/4–26; Adam of Bathgate, 1237/8; Nicholas de Soulis, 1246; Aymer Maxwell, c.1250; Hugh Abernethy, c.1264; Thomas Cavers, c.1265; Thomas Randolph, 1266; Hugh de Pearsby, at least 1285–6; William de Soulis, 1289/90; Walter Tonke, 1296; Sir Robert Hastings, 1296–1307 (English); Sir Ingram de Umfraville, 1302 (Scottish); Sir Robert of Mauley, at least 1305–07 (Scottish); Aymer Valence, c.1310 (English); Sir Henry Baliol, around 1328; Galfrid Mowbray, 1334 (English); Sir Alexander Ramsay, 1342; Henry Ker, 1349; John Copeland, 1350–55; Henry Percy, 1355–57 (English); Sir Richard Tempest, 1357–61 (English); John Copeland 1361–63 (English); Sir Richard Tempest, 1366–72 (English); Alan Struthers, 1368–70 (English); Lawrence of Govane, 1373; Sir Malcolm Drummond, c.1389; Sir William Stewart, c.1390; George, Earl of Angus, 1397; Sir David Fleming of Biggar, 1405; Archibald Douglas of Cavers, 1412; hereditary title of the Douglasses of Cavers until 1662 when Sir William Douglas was removed for not conforming; James, Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch, 1669; continuing with Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1689 until Archibald Douglas gave up the right in 1774 (also called ‘Sheriff of Roxburghshire’; see also Shiriff o Teviotdale).

Shiriff o Teviotdale (shi-rif-ō-teev-yi’-dāl) n. office for maintaining law and order in Teviotdale, held by Sir Herbert de Maxwell, Alexander Ramsay, then Sir William Douglas, and for generations by Douglas of Cavers, starting with sir Archibald Douglas from 1412. In earlier times the title usually went along with that of Keeper of Roxburgh Castle, and hence ‘Sheriff of Teviotdale’ and ‘Sheriff of Roxburghshire’ were synonymous. The Sheriff was responsible for raising and commanding the local militia, local defence, collecting taxes and administering justice. This title ended in 1747 when heritable sheriffships were removed by the Crown. Archibald Douglas of Cavers (the 15th Laird) was the last Sheriff (see also Shiriff o Roxburghshire).

the Shiriff’s Tree (thū-shi-rifs-tree) n. old larch on the grounds of Weens, named because it was planted by Sheriff Rutherford of Edgerston.

shirins (shI-rinz) n., pl., arch. liquid poured out of something, surplus liquid poured off.

shirra (shi-ra) n., arch. a sheriff – ‘It was in the year o’ aughty-sev’n Highchesters ca’d oot a’ his men To meet the Shirra of Tividale At the Kirk o’ Hassendean’ [T], ‘I’ve trailed him to the maister’s fit, But frae my grip he broke; I’ll ha’e to face the Shirra yet For our little Jock’ [JT], ‘O, but ye’re a loon, Willie! O, but ye’re a loon! Ye brought the Shirra in a chaise To pull our wages doon’ [T] (cf. shirrif).

the Shirra (thū-shi-ra) n. nickname for Sir Walter Scott in and around Selkirk – ‘And when the Shirra ettled syne To set the ballads down ...’ [WL].

Shirraship (shi-ra-ship) n. the office of Sheriff – ‘... Who could frae Douglas wrest and hold The Sherraship o’ Teviotdale’ [AD] (also ‘Sherraship’, etc.).

the Shit Brig (thū-shi’-brig) n. n., imp. former popular name for the Lawson Bridge, so-called because it was heavily used by workers from the West-end to get to Sime’s, Henderson’s, Innes’ and Turnbull’s mills, which gave the acronym. Also known in polite circles as ‘This Bridge’ shite (shī, shīt) n., imp. excrement, faeces, something of poor quality or little value, a ludicrously false statement – ‘that’s a load o auld shite’, a contemptible person – ‘hei can be a right shite when hei wants ti’, foolish, deceitful or boastful language – ‘deh talk shite’, v. to defecate, adj. disgusting, contemptible, of poor quality – ‘they deserved ti get bate cos they were shite’, interj. used to express extreme displeasure (note, preferred to the southern English ‘shit’).

shive (shīv, shIv) n., arch. a slice, especially of bread – ‘...shives of wheat bread and butter with a covering of sugar’ [WKN], ‘A sheive o’ curnie-banna’ [ECS], ‘Gie’s a sheive off-o that laif’ [ECS], ‘...the man had taken eleven cups of tea and eight ‘shives’ of bread’ [RMM] (also spelled ‘sheive’ and ‘sheiv’).

Shivers (shi-vurz) n. Fr. Patrick (19th/20th C.) priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1887–92. He set up a Catholic Young Men’s Society (which did not last long) as well as the Children of Mary. He was responsible for the first ‘Mission’ recorded being preached in Hawick, in 1888. He was transferred to Kirkcaldy. He is probably the Canon of the same name who was priest at Denny and died in 1916, aged 59.

shivery bite (shi-vu-ree-bī’) n. something taken to eat when emerging from swimming –

shoarn (shōrn, shō-rin) pp. shorn (past participle of shear).

shoddie (sho-dee) n., arch. childish name for a baby shoe (noted by G. Watson).

shoemakers (shoo-mā-kurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were incorporated before the existing Burgh Records (which go back to 1638). In 1643 they were directed by the Council to ‘try the market’ for the quality of the shoes and the quartermasters are recorded in 1677 examining the shoes at the market, to make sure they were ‘all of sufficient barked leather’. They were in earlier times referred to as ‘cordiners’, although the ‘cordiners’ made a request to form a separate incorporation in 1722; the cordiners were allowed to be a separate incorporation from ‘those who make single-soled shoes’. However, they are not mentioned as separate bodies in later times, and so presumably merged again soon after. In 1747 they were ordered by the Council to turn over their books. In local parades they would sometimes appear attired in the costume of the Ancient Order of St. Crispin, and were described as particularly splendid in the 1832 Reform Bill celebratory parade.

shog (shog) v., arch. to shake, rock, swing from side to side – ‘... some of which made her pouch wagg and shogg’ [BR], ‘Though the waters o’t rair, an’ ar troublet; though the mountans shog wi’ the swallin’ o’ thame’ [HSR], ‘... thou hest broken it: men’ the gaaps thero’, for it shogs’ [HSR], ‘Boondin bleithely on wui ma airms shuggiein lowce threh ma oxters’ [ECS] (sometimes ‘shug’; from Middle English).

Shoreswood (shōrz-wood) n. John (17th/18th C.) son of John, with his mother being a Home. In 1693 he was served heir portioner, along with James Dickson and Alexander Morrison, in the Barony of Home, inherited from Jean, daughter of John Home. This included superiority over lands in Hassendean, and explicitly Appletreehall, as well as the lands of Redfordgreen, Drycleuchlea, Huntly and Hartwoodburn. His father was already deceased in 1693. It is unclear what happened to the Barony afterwards.

Short (shor', shōr') n. Colin Roderick 'Doddy' (1942–2010) son of Pipe Major Robert, he was born and bred in Hawick. He was Head Boy at Trinity, then attended the High School and Henderson Tech. He worked for Pringles for 25 years, then started his own business, Shorts of Hawick, making tartan hose for pipe bands. He played pipes with the Boys' Brigade and then the Hawick Pipe Band, being 2nd Pipe Major and band secretary for decades. He married Helen Greenhill and had children Karen, Kenny, Julie and Allister. James (1818–88) born in Eckford Parish, he was son of John, who farmed at Hartshaugh Mill. He was coachman at Wolfelee Glen in 1851 and coachman at Wauchope Cottage in 1861. He later moved to Jedburgh. In 1846 he married Helen (1823–1911), daughter of William Sibbald;

she died in Hawick. They they had 11 children, born in Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes, including: John (b.1846), who died in infancy; John (b.1848) the eldest surviving son, who became head gardener at Hummers Knott, Darlington; Margaret (b.1849); Euphemia (b.1852), who worked in the hosiery industry in Hawick; Mary (1853–93); Helen (b.1855), who died in infancy; William (1858–69); James (b.1860), who died in infancy; James (1863–1905), also a gardener in Yorkshire, died in Hawick; Peter (1865–1921), a telegraph linesman; and Francis (b.1868). John (16th C.) joint owner of a particate of land (along with Stephen Scott and Janet Liddersdale) on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. He may have been related to Robert who is also listed as a particate-holder in 1537. Probably the same John was deceased in 1560 when his brother Thomas inherited his tenement on the north side of the High Street; this was between the tenements of Thomas Logan and John Halliday. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612. John Elliot was claimed by Elliot's wife to have been murdered 'within the said Jok Schortis duelling hous', but but in fact appears to have hanged himself with his own belt when imprisoned in St. Mary's steeple. This suggests that he was an innkeeper. John (b.c.1775) farmer at Hartshaugh Mill. He is listed as miller at Hartshaugh in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He was at Hartshaugh Mill in 1841, but absent by 1851. He married Margaret Davidson and their children (born in Eckford Parish) included: John (b.1808); Francis Davidson (b.1809); Euphan (b.1812); William (b.1817), who married Mary Dalgleish; James (b.1819), who married Helen Sibbald; George (b.1820), who married Rachel Scott; and Adam (b.1822). He could be the John, son of John and Isobel Thomson, born in Kelso Parish in 1779. John Dalgleish (b.1842) farmer at Hartshaugh Mill and later Borthwickbraefoot. He was son of William, also farmer at Hartshaugh Mill and nephew of the John who married Margaret Davidson. In 1861 he was a ploughman, living with his siblings and widowed mother in Chesters. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Cavers, also from Rulewater. Their children included Mary Euphemia (b.1881) and John (b.1891). Robert (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. A piece of land lying between his land and that of John Scott to the east was reserved for Sir James

Douglas according to the 1537 Charter. Robert 'Bob', M.B.E. (??–) originally from Thurso, he was a Pipe Major. He formed the Hawick Boys Brigade Pipe Band in 1937, leading to the Hawick Pipe Band of today. His wife was Margaret and their son Doddy continued the family piping tradition. Their other children were Robert and Angus. Robert 'Bert' (1935–2014) eldest of 3 piping sons of Bob, he started playing from the age of 7. He took first prizes in the Borders B.B. Championships from the age of 12 for 5 five years in a row and gave a recital on B.B.C.'s Children's Hour when he was 12. He did National Service with the Royal Scots, where he joined the pipe band. Returning home, he took over as Pipe Major for the Hawick Pipe Band, leading them through many competitions. He taught piping at summer schools through the Scottish Amateur Music Association and was on the National Council of the Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association. He married Edith and had children Maureen, Aileen and Graham. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1560 when he inherited his deceased brother John's tenement in Hawick. This was a piece of land on the north side of the High Street, between the tenements of Thomas Logan and John Halliday. In 1674 he sold this same tenement to Robert Johnstone, from Annandale. William (b.1819) son of John, he was born in Eckford Parish. In 1851 he was a corn and meal dealer at 3 Kirkstyle in Hobkirk Parish. In 1861 his wife was a widow, farming 25 acres at Hobkirk Glebe in Chesters. In 1845 he married Mary, daughter of John Dalgleish, from Swanshiel. Their children included: John Dalgleish (b.1842); Jane; Margaret; Thomas; and Euphemia (b.1855) (formerly spelled 'Schort', 'Schorte' etc.).

shortbreed (shor'-breed) n. shortbread, baked item made from flour, sugar and butter – 'A pek of flur bikin short brid and buttor to it, £1 4s' [1690/HAST1905].

Shortbutts (shor'-buts) n. former name for lands in the territory of Sorbie (probably meaning near Sorbietrees) in Liddesdale. In the late 12th century Race Fitz Malger granted half of the land there to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1541 it is valued at 20 shillings and said to pertain to the Laird of Shortbutts. Along with Flatt it was owned by Francis Robson in 1632 (it was is 'Scortebuttes' in the late 1100s, 'Schortbuttis' in 1541 and 'Schortbus' in 1632).

the Shorter Catechism (thu-shor'-ur-kaw'-e-ki-zum) n. short form of the question and answer instruction manual, designed to be memorised in order to test parishioners. The short form was the one mostly used, consisting of 107 questions. It was written in the 1640s by English and Scottish clergy, and also referred to as the Westminster Shorter Catechism. Locally it was called 'the carritch'. Examination was often carried out in the parishioners own houses by the minister, but often in order round a circle, so it was possible to memorize only a subset of the answers.

Shorthope (shor-tup) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, before reaching Kirkhope and Phawhope. In 1557 'Auld Hob Scot of Riskynhoup' paid rent for the lands to Melrose Abbey. In 1609 it was owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane, with tenant Andrew Scott. Robert Scott of Whitslade was served heir to his father's lands here in 1643. It was still part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. It was long part of the Buccleuch estates (it is 'Schorthope' in 1564 and 'Schorthoip' in 1609; 'Shortup' is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

short-leet (shor'-lee') n. a short list – 'A deh ken if A've got the job, bit A'm on the short-leet' (this term survives, although the use of 'leet' itself seems to have died out).

Shortreed (shor'-reed) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed in the 1526 remission given to a large number of Borders men for an attack upon the Earl of Arran; his son John is also listed. Probably the same Andrew was one of the men who in 1530 swore that William Scott of Harden did not owe more than a merk to the deceased Stephen Lauder. He is probably the Andrew who owned a piece of land in Selkirk according to a document of 1530. He witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches over Synton in 1531. He was also part of an inquest into the disputed lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533. Most of the other men listed were local, and so he was probably from the family based near Ashkirk. Probably the same Andrew 'Shortreid' in 1532 among the witnesses to a public declaration made in Selkirk by William Scott in Headshaw. In 1536 he was cited by Walter Scott (brother-german of Kerr of Sunderland Hall) for failing to produce Adam Gledstains at the market cross of Selkirk. Andrew (b.c.1770s) servant at Synton according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He could be the Andrew who married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton in 1804. Bernard (15th C.) tenant in Essenside. In 1494/5 he had remission for theft of sheep from the Murrays of Sundhope. Adam Scott of 'auldinnis hop' served as his surety. David (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. He was surely related to William, who was also at Burnfoot. David (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Essenside when he was cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale. He is probably related to Thomas, who was also at Essenside, but distinct from David who was at Burnfoot. George of Essenside (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as an executor for the children of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert Scott of Palace. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1705, 1706 and 1711. He may be the James who married Margaret Shiel in 1692. He could be the James who is recorded as resident at Whitehaugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed a baptism (along with Robert Renwick) for George Renwick in the Sandbed in 1697. James (1726–83) eldest son of Robert and Elizabeth Elliott, he was 'younger of Essenside'. He acquired part of Hermiston from George Johnstone in 1758, the lands being valued at £260. He was owner of Easter Essenside in 1759, and sold the lands to Capt. (later Adm.) John Elliot in 1778, with the consent of his wife Helen Curren and the trustees for his creditors: Cornelius Elliot, W.S.; Robert Laidlaw, tenant in Falnash; and Walter Scott of Wauchope. He was struck off the list of freeholders of Roxburghshire in 1780, having lost his lands in the county. He married Ellen Currie (also recorded as 'Helen Curren') in 1754 in Ashkirk and they had a son, Thomas (b.1786). He is probably the same James 'late of Essenside' who was buried in old Wilton Kirkyard, his table stone stating that he died in 1783, aged 75; his wife Bella Currie was buried beside him, and died in 1808, aged 84. His wife may have been the 'Mrs. Shortreed' recorded as owner of 'Nethercroft, acquired from Langlands' according to the 1788 valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls; the farm was valued at £20 and later owned by John James Scott Chisholme of Stirches. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1755); Isabel Margaret (b.1756); Margaret (b.1760); Jean (b.1762); Jean (again, b.1764); Agnes (b.1766); Ann (b.1767); Nelly (b.1769); Robert (again, b.1771); Mary (b.1773); Thomas (b.1774); Elliotie (b.1775); Andrew (b.1776); and Willie (b.1777). John (15th/16th C.) listed in 1526 in the remission for a large number of Borderers who attacked the Earl of Arran's forces. He was son of Andrew. John (17th C.) recorded being in 'Longsintoune' in 1679 when he had a discharge for payment with the treasurer of Selkirk. He was in 'Langseintin' in 1681 when he had a similar discharge. John (17th/18th C.) farmer in Ashkirk Parish. In 1706 in Edinburgh his daughter Agnes married William Thomson, who was 'servitor to Bartholomew Brecher, bower'. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: William (b.1702); an unnamed son (b.1703); Helen (b.1705); and Andrew (b.1707). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Eilrig in 1718 and Borthwickbrae in 1720. He probably married Mary Hislop in Robertson in 1718 and their children included: Margaret (b.1718); and Janet (b.1720). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Rigg in 1729 when he married Margaret Scott. John (18th C.) tenant in Oakwood in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Perhaps the same John was tenant in 'Hainingmote' in 1741. Robert (16th/17th C.) local tenant recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. The farm he was connected with is not transcribed. Robert (17th C.) resident of Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert of Essenside (b.1695) born in Wilton Parish, he became a Bailie and lawyer in Ashkirk Parish. He may have been son of James and Margaret Sheil. He may be the Robert 'short-ridg' who witnessed a baptism for John Hendry in Wilton in 1721. He is probably the Robert who paid the window tax at 'woolie' in Southdean Parish in 1748 (presumably he lived there temporarily). He acted as attorney for Walter Scott of Leith when he gained the lands of Wauchope in 1750. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1725 he married Elizabeth ('Bessie'), daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill and sister of William Elliot, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. His eldest son was James and another son was farmer Thomas. He may have been father of Margaret (b.c.1735) who married William Elliot of Whithaugh. His sister Agnes may have married his brother-in-law Andrew. Robert 'Bob' (1762–1829) born in Southdean Parish, eldest son of farmer Thomas and Ann Maria Kerr of the Abbotrule family. He became Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. He had musical talent and collected local songs and legends. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, accompanying him on several trips in the Liddesdale area, gathering ballads etc. He paid the Horse Tax in Jedburgh in the 1790s. He represented Weens on the Hobkirk Parish heritors council in 1803. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was a founder member of the Jedforest Club and was the 2nd Honorary Secretary. He built a house in Jedburgh, which was later British Linen Bank house. His sister Mary married William Aitchison and helped him run the Cross Keys Inn at 11 Sandbed. He was Substitute to Sheriff William Oliver, who wrote some doggerel verse about him – 'From chattering women all refrain, Let silence universal reign, While thro' the world I proclaim A friend in need is Bob Shortreed'. He married Margaret, 3rd daughter of Jedburgh lawyer James Fair. He had 2 infant children buried in Jedburgh Abbey churchyard in 1802. His other children included: Thomas, who also helped Sir Walter Scott, and followed his father as Secretary of the Jedforest Club; John Elliot, bank manager in Wexford; Capt. William of the Bengal service of the East India Company; James Elliot, who succeeded his uncle to the Langlee estate and took the additional name of Fair; Col. Pringle of the Bengal Native Infantry; and Robert, tenant of Attonburn. Simon (d.1550) Vicar at Ashkirk, who was succeeded by James Ker. He is probably the 'Simon Schortreid' listed as a priest who witnessed an announcement by 'Walter Scot in Edschawe' in Selkirk in 1532. He also witnessed an agreement in 1531 between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton, another agreement regarding lands at Haining in about 1534 and an agreement regarding the 'Dean's lambs of Selkirk' in 1536. In 1536 he was 'ane discret man my servand' to the Parson of Ashkirk Richard Bothwell, when Richard set him part of the kirklands 'callit the clewis and kempis knowis' for 3 years; the witnesses included John Mitchellhill, James Davidson and David Brownfield, who were chaplains (but it is not clear where). In 1537 he invested Simon Scott in the benefices of the Rectorship of Rankilburn; Andrew was one of the witnesses (and may have been related). In 1538 he witnessed a document for Ralph Davidson involving Grahamslaw and 'Chames'. In 1539 he witnessed a transaction where Thomas Scott in Haining warned certain tenants to remove themselves. He was involved in a transaction for William Scott (probably relating to lands near Ashkirk) in 1542. In 1543 he resigned a tenement in Selkirk in favour of William (whose relationship is not recorded). Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Whitehillbrae (in Kirkhope Parish) in 1580/1 when Janet Turnbull (widow of John Scott in Blindhaugh) and William Allan assigned him their lands in Blindhaugh. Walter in Selkirk was one of the witnesses and may have been related. On the same day he confessed that he owed Walter money and was having to defer payment. He was also recorded as occupier of a husband-land in Blindhaugh in 1581 when the liferent was transferred to Walter, son of the deceased John Scott in Blindhaugh. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. He was probably related to David, who was also at Essenside. He may be the Thomas in Woll who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. Thomas (1733–98) farmer at Easter Essenside. He was son of Robert and Elizabeth, who was daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill (ancestor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae and Wolfelee). He also farmed at Wolfelee, Hyn-dlee, Lustruther and Jedhead, being one of the most extensive farmers in the Jedforest. However, he was financially ruined following the American War, and it is said the worry from this shortened his life. He was also said to have been the last man to carry out a Border raid, this after some English thieves had carried off some of his sheep; instead of appealing to the courts he crossed the Border and brought back his livestock, like had happened in earlier centuries. In 1757 he married Ann Maria, daughter of William Kerr of Abbot-rule. Their eldest son Robert was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, while their daughter Mary married William Aitchison. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Southdean. His children included Mary (b.1759), Betty (b.1760), Robert (b.1762), Margaret (b.1764), William (b.1768), James (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771) and Patrick (b.1775). Thomas (18th C.) tailor at Falnash. He is recorded in the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Hawick Parish, with his surname given as ‘Shrotreed’. He was still at Falnash on the ballot in 1801. Thomas (1786–1842) born in Hawick Parish, son of James and Ellen Currie. He married Isabella Armstrong in 1774. Their children were George, James, John, Robert L., William and Thomas. In 1831 he emigrated with his wife and 6 sons, settling in Guelph, Ontario. Thomas (1796–1826) eldest son of Robert, Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire. His great schoolfriend was Robert Lindsay Armstrong, later Director of the Mint in St. Petersburg. He was greatly interested in local history, publishing a pamphlet on the orchards of Jedburgh. He also collected Border ballads and helped Sir Walter Scott with ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. He was Procurator-Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He may be the Thomas listed at Falnash in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. In 1825 he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He took over from his father as Secretary of the Jedforest Club in 1820, retiring in 1826 because of ill-health. He never married and died at Camberwell. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 as witness to an agreement between Walter Scott of Ashkirk and John Scott in Aikwood over Ashkirk Mill. He is recorded as brother of Walter Scott, perhaps meaning brother-in-law. He is again recorded as brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk in a further transaction of 1581. He may be the same William recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. He was surely related to David, who was also at Burnfoot. He was still recorded as brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk when he witnessed a transaction for him in 1581/2 (also spelled ‘Schortred’, ‘Schortreid’, ‘Shortread’, ‘Shortreede’, ‘Short-reid’, ‘Shortridge’, etc.).

short-sighted (shor’-sich-teed) pp., arch. short-sighted – ‘The man that scatters his seed abroad Gets harvest to gladden his sight; But he that hoards the seed he has, Is a puir shortsighted wicht’ [FL].

Short Sike (shor’-sīk) n. small stream that rises on Park Hill and flows in an easterly direction to pass through Newcastleton village and join the Liddel Water. To the south of the upper part of the stream are the remains of a farmstead and field system.

Sibbald (si-buld) n. James (1745–1803) son of John, farmer at Whitlaw in Bowden Parish. His brother John was farmer at Borthaugh. He attended Selkirk Grammar School and then leased the farms of Newton (on Slitrig) and Whitehillbrae (on the Dod Burn) from Sir Francis Eliott of Stobs. He spent much of his time studying botany and the classics, and failed as a farmer, giving up his lease in 1779. Learning the publishing trade rapidly in London, he moved to Edinburgh, helping his cousin the publisher Charles Elliot in his shop. In 1780 he purchased (from Mrs. Margaret Yair) the circulating library that had belonged to Allan Ramsay, and became a bookseller and publisher on Parliament Square. A young Sir Walter Scott was a frequent visitor to his circulating library and described him as 'a man of rough manners but of some taste and judgment, [who] cultivated music and poetry'. In 1785 he started to publish the 'Edinburgh Magazine, or Literary Miscellany' as a competitor to the 'Scots Magazine'. He himself wrote many articles on Scottish antiquities, as well as many other topics, such as the first serious review of Robert Burns 'Kilmarnock' edition. He went through mixed fortunes, running a paper mill, giving up his publishing business, setting up a short-lived Edinburgh newspaper, handing over the circulating library (but later getting it back), spending some time effectively missing in London (when he wrote a book about the life of Jesus), and seeing the Edinburgh Magazine merge with the Scots Magazine. His best known work is 'Chronicle of Scottish Poetry from the Thirteenth Century to the Union of the Crowns, to which is added a glossary' (1802), with the 4th and final volume being effectively a Scots dictionary. This is locally valuable for including words attributed to use in Teviotdale in his time. There is an etching of him by John Kay, a portrait by an unknown artist (previously attributed to Raeburn) and he appears in W. Borthwick Johnstone's 1856 painting of Edinburgh literary characters. He died unmarried at his house on Leith Walk. James (b.1832) son of William. He was raised on a farm. In 1855 he married Agnes Hardie of Newcastleton, and the couple emigrated to Canada, settling in Bruce County. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters. He sold up his farm in 1890 and made a last visit back to Rulewater before joining several of his children to live out his days in Duluth, Minnesota. John (1714–83) eldest son of John and Agnes, daughter of Thomas Elliot, tenant in Oakwood Mill. His brother was William of Pinnacle. He was tenant farmer of Whitlaw in Bowden Parish, where he paid the window tax in 1753. He married Margaret Grieve in 1743. Their children were: James (1747–1803) publisher of 'The Edinburgh Magazine'; William of Gladswood (d.1817) merchant and ship-owner in Leith; John (b.1755), who was tenant in Borthaugh; Agnes (b.1751), who married Henry Scott, tenant in Deloraine; and Jean (d.1815), who married John Lang, Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire and was the lady who sent off her son's uniform to equip him in Edinburgh after the

'False Alarm' of 1804, as described in Sir Walter Scott's note 'Alarm of invasion' in 'The Antiquary'. John (1746–77) younger of Pinnacle. He was eldest son of William and Charlotte Cleland. He was a merchant in London. He married Anne Franks, and they had 1 son (Lt.-Col. William, who succeeded his grandfather) and 2 daughters (one of whom, Charlotte, married Archibald Scott of Howcleuch). The other may have been Ann, who married James Grieve, farmer in Branhholme Braes. John of Borthaugh (1755–1822) son of John and Margaret Grieve. His ancestors farmed in the Eildon and Bowden areas. He was recorded at Borthaugh on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed as owner of 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse. His servant Alexander Tait was listed at Borthaugh on the ballot for the Militia in 1801 (although his name was incorrectly given as William, rather than John). He was a local Conservative supporter of the early 1800s who is said to have put pins in his coat-tails before voting in Hawick, to avoid being 'winged'. He married Jean Cunningham (from Ettrick) in Wilton Parish in 1804 and they had a large family, including: John (b.1805), who was running the farm in 1841; Jean (1807–65), who married poet William Wilson and emigrated to Pughkeepsie, New York; James (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); William (b.1811), who was superintendent of the farm in 1851; Walter (b.1813); Agnes (b.1814); George (b.1816); Isabella (b.1817); and Helen (b.1819). It seems he must have been quite old when he had his family. John (1805–47) son of John and Jean Cunningham. He was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836. He was farmer at Borthaugh in 1841, living with his sisters Margaret and Agnes. He appears to have been dead by 1851, when his brother William was running the farm. John (b.1835) son of James and Elizabeth, he was born in Leith. He was assistant gamekeeper on the Cavers estate, living at Effledge. He was said to be a terror for the Hawick poachers. On one occasion a gang came to his house to get him, but he was ill and his wife called David Honeyman, the head keeper, who was badly beaten up instead. Another story told is how he caught 3 poachers who had swam out to the island in Buckstruther Loch to collect gulls eggs; he bundled up their clothes, but instead of giving themselves up to him they ran off naked in the direction of Hawick. He is listed as a ploughman at Effledge in 1861. He married Margaret Best in Ashkirk Parish in 1857. Their children included: John (b.1857); Alexander (1860–1942), who died in Victoria, British Columbia; Thomas (1863–1948), who also died in Victoria; and Agnes (b.1865). Margaret (b.1845) daughter of William and Margaret Laidlaw. She helped her father with his duties as postmaster at Bonchester Bridge, and took over after his death in 1880. She also served as Clerk to the School Board and Clerk to the Heritors, and was one of the best known people in the Rule valley in her day. She was one of the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk. She helped George Tancred with information for his Rulewater book. In 1901 she was living at Newington, Edinburgh. Peter (1835–85) son of William and Margaret Laidlaw, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He worked as a mason in Hobkirk and then in Hawick. He was visiting Howahill at the time of the 1841 census. In 1858 he married Mary (1827–1912), daughter of James Nichol. Their children were: William (b.1860); Peter (b.1862); Thomas (b.1864); Elizabeth Burnet (b.1865); and Robert Nichol (b.1872), who married Mina Inglis. Robert (b.1828/9) born in Hawick. In 1851 he was listed as a shoemaker at about 16 Howegate, with his wife Janet being a boot-binder. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children baptised there included: William (b.1757), probably the plasterer in Hawick; Samuel (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1763); Isabel (b.1764); George (b.1766); and Agnes (b.1768). Thomas (1863–1948) born at Effledge, son of John, who was an assistant gamekeeper there, and Margaret Best. He worked at Chatelherault, Kinmount, Croxton Park and Fawley Court, before becoming gamekeeper at Wells estate. He later moved to Victoria, British Columbia, where he died. He married Jessie, daughter of Alexander Anderson, forester on the Kinmount estate in Dumfriesshire. William of Pinnacle (1719–98) 2nd son of John and Agnes Elliot. He was recorded as owner of Pinnacle in 1788, valued at £500. He married Charlotte Cleland from Edinburgh, who died in 1791. They had 12 sons and 1 daughter. His eldest son John predeceased him, and he was succeeded by his grandson William. In fact he outlived all his sons, except for William, an officer in India (who had no children). His 10th son Hugh died while defending a fort at Seringapatam in 1792. William (d.1815) plasterer in Hawick, who lived at the Sandbed. He is said to have been a descendant of the Sibbalds of Pinnacle and Whiterig and the earlier portioners of Eildon and Bowden. He was probably son of Thomas, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1757. He witnessed a baptism for mason William Philip in 1792. He is listed as 'Plasterer' on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He married Mary Weir, who died in 1835. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Thomas (1784–1808); Ann (b.1786); Elizabeth ('Betty', b.1787), who probably married Walter Gillies and was a widow at 56 High Street in 1851 and 1861; Peter (b.1789); Mary (b.1792); Mary (again, 1793–1804); and William (b.1803), who became tenant on the Weens estate. The 1787 baptism was 'before the Congregation'. He may have earlier married Katherine Grieve in Hawick in 1778. He was 'Plasterer Sandbed' in 1815. Lt.-Col. William of Pinnacle and Whiterig (1771–1835), J.P., only son of John. He succeeded his grandfather William in 1798. He joined the army in about 1794, becoming Captain in the 35th Regiment of Foot, transferring to the 15th Foot as Lieutenant-Colonel in 1807. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1817 and was also a member of the 'Border Bowmen'. In 1807 he married Susan, 6th daughter of Thomas Mein of Eildon Hall. They had 9 sons and 2 daughters, including: John (1809–43), Captain in the 34th Madras Infantry; Thomas, Royal Navy Commander, who lived at Eildon Hall, Ontario; William (b.1814); James (b.1816); Archibald (b.1817); Charles (b.1819) who served as a militia officer during the Canadian rebellion of 1837; Hugh (b.1823), served in Bengal and also moved to Canada; and Francis Clunie, who served with the Royal Navy and was later a doctor in Sutton West, Canada. After his death the family lands were sold off. William (1803–80) son of Hawick plasterer William and Mary Weir, he was born in Wilton Parish and educated at Wilton School. He was a stocking-maker in Hawick and in about 1823 moved to one of the Scenty Hall cottages in Hobkirk, becoming a tenant farmer on the Weens estate. He then became a land measurer, in about 1840 was appointed Heritors' Clerk and in 1846 was made Inspector of Poor and Collector for the Parish. He later became Registrar and Clerk of the School Board and ran the Hobkirk Library, being a great lover of books. He was also Precentor at Hobkirk Kirk at one time. He served as a factor for the Weens estate for a while. The 1841 census lists him as a stockingmaker at Scenty Hall, and at 3 Weens Cottages in 1851. In 1861 he was listed as 'Registrar of Births &c. Inspr. of Poor' at Weens Cottages. He was Chairman at the Burns centenary celebration in Rulewater in 1859. Later in life he was postmaster at Bonchester Bridge, probably from the late 1860s, succeeding Miss Renwick. His daughter helped him as he got older, and after his death she became postmistress. In 1823 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of William Laidlaw of Weensmoor. Their children included: Helen (b.1823), who married James Short; Mary (b.1825), who was unmarried; William (b.1827), who was a frameworker in Hawick and died unmarried; James (b.1832), who emigrated to Canada and died in Minnesota; Peter (1835–85), a mason in Hawick; Thomas (b.1839), a joiner; and Margaret (b.1845), who helped her father and then became post-mistress (also formerly written ‘Sybald’).

sid (sid) pp. said – ‘Hogg was sid ti hev been pairt o the Hawick contingent thit merched ti Selkirk that fatefi day in 1815 ...’ [IHS] (note the pronunciation of this word, which is often rather than ā in conversation; see also said).

siddernwud (si-durn-wud) n., arch. south-ernwood, Artemisia arbrotanum (also suddrenwud).

side (sīd) n., arch. direction, district (this meaning is preserved in many place names, e.g. Appot-side, Castleside, Damside and Towerdykeside), a slope, hillside (names of perhaps older origin, from the Old English, e.g. Earlside, Falside, Hawthornside, Hazelyside, Mackside and Teind-side).

side (sīd) adj., arch. hanging low, extending far down – ‘...to see what passed between her and the man in the ‘side black gown’ [EM1820].

Side (sīd) n. former tower just south of New-castleton (or Copshaw). The earliest records are in a c.1376 rental roll, for ‘Locus Willelmi del Syde’ (8 shillings) and ‘Locus Ade de Syde’ (16 shillings). It is unclear to which family these men belonged. It is possibly also the ‘Siders’ recorded as an Elliot residence in 1498. It was home of ‘Jock o the Side’ in the 16th century, probably an Armstrong who was immortalised in the ballad of the same name. ‘Chrystie of the Syde’ is listed among Liddesdale chief’s at the end of the 16th century by Monipennie and may have been Jock’s brother. ‘Sym’ and ‘Lancie’ Armstrong of ‘the Syde’ are recorded in 1601 and John ‘called of the Syd’ in 1642. William Thomas was tenant there in 1694, with William Little, Thomas Ovens and George Hewitson also listed. Adam Henderson was tenant in 1706, when 2 of his servants were rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath. William Little was there in 1707 when summoned for having a ‘penny wedding’. In a survey of 1718 it is stated that Shipshielden was also known as Side. The site may be the farmstead whose remains are on the east side of Kirk Hill, at the head of Ettleton Sike, or perhaps further to the south, as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. The farmstead has at least 3 buildings, a kiln-barn and several enclosures, although the remains of a tower have not been established. Another site, pointed out in the 19th century (and said to be marked by a solitary tree), which is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, south of Kirk Hill, has no traces of foundations (also spelled ‘Syde’ etc.; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Syid’ and on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Syd’).

side-be-side (sīd-bee-sīd) adv. side-by-side – ‘...whan billies fell seide-be-seide till the braeface was traisselt’ [ECS].

sideeways see sideyways

Side Hill (sīd-hil) n. former name for a hill on the west side of the Liddel valley, near the lands of Side. It is probably the same as Kirk Hill, since it is described in the New Statistical Account in 1839 as having a square fort on top.

Siders (sī-durz) n. nickname for William Elliot about 1500, the designation referring to his residence, which may have been ‘Side’.

sides-away (sīdz-a-wā) n., arch. former street game, similar to kick-the-can – ‘Sides-away, that was another popular thing’ [DaS].

sideyways (sī-dee-wāz) adv. sideways – ‘sei if it’ll fit throwe sideyways’, ‘Fred and Flash Broon were awfih like yin another frae sideeways on’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘sideeways’, ‘seideways’, etc.; sometimes ‘sideyways-on’).

siege (seej) v., arch. to pester, bother, especially with questions – ‘Thae bairns heh seeged mei aa day wui thir speereen’ [ECS], ‘Hei mae seege iz till aa’s blew, bit A’ll no gaun ma fit-lenth’ [ECS] (also written ‘seege’).

the Siege o Cocklaw see Cocklaw sig (sī) n., arch. a seer, someone who predicts events (noted by J. Jamieson).

sign (sīn) n., arch. a signature, particularly on a legal document – ‘...in the handis of William Gledstanis ane of the baillies of the burcht of Hawik ... under the signe and subscription of William Slowane notar public’ [SPB1579].

sik see sic

sike see syke

sile (sīl) v., arch. to strain, filter, particularly milk – ‘The purest o’ water is siel’d through the rock, The mistiest morn’s oft the sunniest day’ [JoHa], ‘The thochts that come seipin, seilin throwe an rowl owre an owre amang ma herns’ [ECS], ‘Seilin the milk throwe a milsie’ [ECS] (also written ‘seil’, ‘seile’ and ‘syle’).

sile (sīl) n., arch. a couple supporting a roof, rafter – ‘A large beam, one end of which is placed on a wall, and the other pinned or nailed to another beam, of the same description, resting on the opposite wall, for the purpose of supporting the roof. These are denominated a pair o’ siles, Ayrs., Roxb.’ [JoJ], ‘Cyle, the foor or lower part of a couple or rafter; synon. Soire, Roxb.’ [GW] (also written ‘cyle’ and ‘syle’).

the Silent Toast (thū-sī-lin’-tōst) n. traditional toast to the memory of James Douglas of Drumlanrig at the Cornet’s Dinner, taken in solemn silence. The origin and antiquity of this tradition is uncertain, but it is recorded at least as early as 1887.

siller (si-lur) adj., arch. silver, made of silver, having a silvery lustre – ‘...I only scorn’d the ways Some take to catch thy sunny, siller blaze’ [JoHa], ‘Like siller muntbanks they spring ...’ [JBS], ‘When simmer waves wi’ siller wing, On banks and braes the daisies spring ...’ [DA], ‘The sillar saughs are in the bud, As down the glen we gang’ [JT], n. silver, money – ‘...with four 6 shilling peices, and 12 pence, with the rest of small siller ...’ [BR1642], ‘A party is fined for giving some of the border false, clipped, and counterfeit siller to James Badie ...’ [JW1704], ‘Gif she be ane wa’, we wull bigg apon hir ane palece o’ siller’ [HSR], ‘...kiveret wi’ siller, an’ her feathers wi’ yallo gowd’ [HSR], ‘...The symbols o’ sic strength and peace That siller canna buy’ [WL], ‘We spend oor siller, and stake oor life, And syne at the gloamin’ faa’ [WL], ‘...And the siller horn o’ the Hunter’s Mune’ [DH], v., arch. to give money to – ‘A siller’t snirt makes quickest sail, To Hymen’s port’ [JoHa], ‘...Bids siller’d blockheads them despise’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘sillar’).

Sillerbithaa (si-lur-bi’-haw, -hal) n. older version of Silverbuthall, referring to the area previously called Easter Heap.

Sillerbit Hall (si-lur-bi’-hal, -haw) n. this older name for Silverbuthall was adopted in 1861 for the lands purchased by Thomas Laidlaw (from Walter Wilson), and the mansion house he had built there in the period 1863–1866. The house was located roughly near the top of the present Churchill Road, with the approach from the main entrance at the top of Havelock Street. The architect was J.T. Rothead of Glasgow, and it was in the Scottish baronial style, with French elements.

The house was used by Belgian refugees during WWI. It was demolished in 1946 when the council purchased the estate (being quite full of dry rot etc.). A window panel (with the Burgh crest) is preserved in the Museum. The gate lodge for the main house still exists, now numbered as 23 Havelock Street. A 'wedge-shaped perforated hammer of rough surfaced sandstone' found near here was donated to the Museum (see also Silverbuthall).

sillerless (si-lur-lis) adj., arch. silverless, impecunious – 'Then up wi' the purse an' the siller, The jinglin' yellow for me; Than wed wi' a sillerless bodie, I'd far rather want till I dee' [JoHa].

siller Seterdi (si-lur-se'-ur-di) n., arch. the silvery seed tops of certain grasses.

siller shakers (si-lur-shā-kurz) n., pl., arch. quaking grass, Briza media.

silly (si-lee) adj., arch. poorly, weak, sickly – 'She's aye been a silly bairn; she's never thrivven sin she hed the mizzls' [ECS], hapless, helpless – 'Good; worthy; a sense peculiar to Liddesdale' [JoJ].

silly man (si-lee-mawn) interj., arch. an expression of kindness and compassion, literally 'poor fellow' (noted by J. Jamieson).

Silurian shale (si-loo-ree-in-shāl) n. shale formed in the third period of the Palæozoic Era, about 405–425 million years ago. It is the dominant geology around Hawick, specifically referred to as the Hawick Group.

Silverbuthall (sil-vur-bi'-hal, -haw) n. an area at the north end of Hawick, roughly corresponding to the old estate of Easter Heip, and now containing a housing estate. The name occurs as early as 1694, although spelling varies. The lands were part of the estates of Langlands of that ilk, until sold to James Scott, farmer at Boonraw, who was Laird there in the mid-18th century. Small enclosures were separately sold to James and Walter Knox, and later acquired by Archibald Dunlop and then John Scott Chisholme. Andrew Marshall was tenant there in 1711. John Blyth was living there in 1723, George Scott in at least 1728–32, James Scott in at least 1743–48 and Robert Smith in 1791. Thomas Hall was farmer there in 1797 and John Ferguson was a labourer there in 1799. The house there was lived in by banker William Oliver ('Auld Cash'), who died in 1808, when it was inherited by his nieces. The lands were valued at £80 in 1788 and 1811 (including the enclosures), when owned by James Scott. The lands were bought in about 1822 by James Scott, retired teacher from Yarrow, who died in the early 1840s. In 1841 there were 8 households living there. Small pieces of the lands were sold to Chisholme of Stirches and Robert Turnbull of Galalaw. A large part of the lands were purchased by Thomas Laidlaw in 1861, who had a new mansion built there (near the present Churchill Road), designed by J.T. Rothead, and including a lodge house (which still exists), with construction by local building firm George Tait. The house can be seen in an aerial photograph of 1933. This estate was acquired by the Council in 1945 for new housing in the north of town, with the 'prefabs' being constructed first, and the present day housing from the mid-1960s. It comprises Silverbuthall Road, Branhholme Road and adjoining streets (the word refers to the placement of the butts, i.e. archery targets, of Wilton Parish being sited near there, and the practice of having a silver arrow as shooting prize; it is 'Silverbothhall' in 1797 and 'Silverboothall' in 1808; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map; see also Sillerbit Hall).

Silverbuthaa (sil-vur-bi'-haw) n. another name for the mansion house called Sillerbit Haa.

Silverbuthall Lodge (sil-vur-bi'-hal-luj) n. former gate lodge for the mansion at Silverbuthall. It was probably designed by J.T. Rothead (who designed the main house, which was built 1863–6), and survives at No. 23 Havelock Street, the corner with Wellfield Road. It is in a striking Scottish Baronial style, with a circular stair tower and conical-capped gatepiers. It is a grade B listed building.

Silverbuthall Road (sil-vur-bi'-hal-rōd) n. main road through the Silverbuthall housing scheme, with houses built in 1965.

Silver Field (sil-vur-feeld) n. local name for a piece of ground to the north of Ettleton churchyard, said to be where coins were sometimes found. It was perhaps the manse of the old kirk.

the Silver Flush (thu-sil-vur-flush) n. former name for a spring at the lower end of the area where Newcastleton was built. It was said to be named after the 'palfrey' of a young lady (who was to marry the Laird of Whithaugh) stopped, with its silver bells being heard from some distance (as noted in 'Beauties of the Border').

the Silver Spurs (thu-sil-vur-spurz) n. annual race for married men at the Common Riding, since at least the 1840s.

Silver Street (sil-vur-stree) n. narrow street alongside the west bank of the Slitrig. It is one of the oldest streets in Hawick, although most of the present buildings are Victorian, and the name is not recorded before 1801. Up until the latter part of the 18th century it was part of the main road through Hawick, and houses there were referred to as on 'the King's High Street'. It was flooded in the great Slitrig flood of 1767, when several buildings were damaged. It became more of a back street with the erection of Drumlanrig Bridge in 1776, and moreso with the demolition of the Auld Brig in 1851. The banker 'Auld Cash' (William Oliver) lived there, and presumably had his banking office there too. A sketch of 'old court, Silver Street' exists by T.H. Laidlaw in the late 19th century. J.P. Alison designed alterations at Nos. 2 and 3. (the origin is obscure, with some suggestion that it is a reference to 'Auld Cash', similarity between his name 'Oliver' and 'Silver' perhaps not being a coincidence either; however, if the name is older than that, it may relate to the silver arrow prize at the Hawick 'butt's').

Sim (sim) n., arch. former short form of the Christian name Simon, popular in the 16th and 17th centuries (sometimes spelled 'Sym'; cf. Simmie and Syme).

Sim (sim) n. George (20th C.) foreman at Innes, Henderson and later Braemar. His wife was Jessie and their children were: Shonnie; Mary Shortreed ('Myra'), Provost of Hawick; and Vera. The family lived on Ramsay Road, Moat Crescent and lastly Burnfoot Road. He was reported in the national press for trying to break into the fever hospital to see his daughter Myra after reading her being named in a list of typhoid-related deaths. William (18th C.) married Marion Pott in Hawick Parish in 1775 (it is possible that the surname is a transcription error for 'Lunn').

Sime (sīm) n. James Boyd (1865–1953) son of William of Galashiels and Ellen Boyd, and brother of William Boyd. He was a manufacturer who was on the Town Council in the early years of the 20th century and lived at Dunira. He became a partner in Pringle's in 1906 and resigned in 1929. He was one of the earliest players of tennis in Hawick and also shared an early interest in cinematography with David Gaylor. He fought in WWI, but when his brother died in 1917 he became Chairman of Sime, Williamson & Co. He was also a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert's. On the 1891 census he was living at Ivy Bank, Fenwick Park, with his mother and his only sister, Ellen. He married Williamina ('Mina') daughter of dyer John Turnbull. Saida (??-??) gave a gift that helped build the Youth Centre in 1970. William Boyd (1867–1917) born in Galashiels, eldest son of William, who was partner in Sime, Sanderson & Co., Botany Mills, Galashiels. In 1889 he became partner in Sime, Williamson & Co., Weensland Mills. He lived at the Limes and then had 'the Coille' built for him. He married Margaret Elliot (sometimes incorrectly written 'Syme').

Sime's (sīmz) n. manufacturers Sime, Williamson & Co.

Sime, Williamson & Co. (sīm-wi-lee-um-sin-in-kō) n. tweed manufacturers, founded in 1889, with their main mill part of Weensland Mills. They were also sometimes known as simply Sime's. They purchased Howlands Mill (on Victoria Road) in 1911 and changed the name to Dean Mills. When William Boyd Sime died in 1917, his brother James Boyd Sime became Chairman. The firm went out of business in 1937 and Dean Mills became part of Innes, Henderson & Co.

Simey (sī-mee) n., poet. the Devil – 'There is ane at the Carlenrigg, Might sof'en the heart o' auld Simey, But gin ye want lasses that's trig, gae up the burn fa'ther to Limey' [JoHa].

simmer (si-mur) n., arch., poet. summer – '... For simmer sairs it little now – it's no' what it has been' [JoHa], 'When simmer came blythesome I milked the yowes ...' [JoHa], '... my moustir is turnet intil the drouth o' simmer' [HSR], '... thou hest mæde simmer an' wintir' [HSR], 'Let fortune's sun o' simmer shine ...' [RH], '... That brocht the sicht o' scenes lang tint, An' simmer days nae mair' [ECB], '... an i simmer, whan the smuists are woarst an the pluiffin ter froes up atween the causa-stanes' [ECS], '... Sing salutation to the simmer' [DH], 'She left me wi' the simmer's close Think not that she was untrue ...' [WE], adj. relating to summer – '... She's as blithe as the simmer day's lang' [WAP], '... and buttercups, and cranesbill and vetch on the gressy verge o the white simmer road ...' [DH], '... Unfurled ti kiss the simmer sky In Hawick ma Border hame' [IWL], v., arch. to summer – 'I simmered up in the Huron country lads, did a bit of hunting for the Hudsons ...' [JEDM].

simmer an wunter (si-mur-an-wun-tur) v., arch. to be long-winded, go into a subject at length, haggle – 'It serrd naething for ti stert simmereen an wuntereen' [ECS], 'It'll serr naething now ti stert simmereen-an-wuntereen' [ECS] (also written 'simmer-an-wunter').

Simmie (si-mee) n., arch. former pet form of the name Simon, also used as an informal name for the Devil – '... And ane and a' o' them they vow and declare, 'Twas Simmy, in shape o' a bodie' [JoHa] (cf. Sim and Syme).

Simmie's Pottie (si-meez-po'-ee) n. popular name for a block of freestone on the east side of Ruberslaw, which has a cavity on the top, its former use being uncertain. Presumably 'Simmie' refers to the Devil.

Simmons (si-minz) n. Anne Vernona of Tushielaw (1797–1837) daughter of Philip and Vernona Estwick. She was grand-daughter of Henry Peter Simmons and Ann Kirton and great-grand-daughter of Barbara Anderson of Tushielaw. She inherited the farms of Tushielaw and Hislop on the death of her great-uncle John Kirton Anderson in 1816. She married Benjamin Thomas Gaskin in 1818, and had their only child (a son of the same name) after her husband's early death. Her son took the additional surname Anderson when he inherited.

Simon (sI-min) n. (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf. He is recorded in a document of about 1206, re-establishing the church of Hassendean. There was a Precentor of Glasgow with the same name recorded at about the same time (also written 'Simeon').

Simon (sI-min) n. (13th C.) brewer listed in the period 1214–49 as witness to the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey. His name was given as 'Symone braciator'. He could have been related to the Rector of Lilliesleaf.

simple (sim-pul) n., arch. a herb, plant material used as an ingredient in a medicine – 'Her mother, — Scott, was great for simples (herbs), and belonged Deanburnhaugh' [JHH].

simpliciter (sim-pli-si-ter) adv., arch. simply, unconditionally – '...exonerat quit claims and simpliciter discharges the saidis two baylyeas ...' [BR1701] (a legal term).

Simpson (sim-sin) n. Alexander (18th C.) gardener at Langlands House in 1788, when he was working for Thomas Elliot. He was still gardener there in 1791, when he was working for Lord Napier. In 1794 he was gardener at Teviotbank in Minto Parish, working for David Simpson. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as tenant of Overraw, along with William, on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Andrew (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Isabel Scott, and whose daughter Janet was born in Hawick in 1671. Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1743, with witnesses ex-Bailie Robert Howison and wright Walter Scott. Perhaps the same Andrew was married to Margaret Turnbull when their son John was baptised in 1746. Andrew (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was already deceased in 1794 when his son John died. Dr. Andrew (20th C.) born in Kirkcaldy, he graduated in Medicine from Edinburgh University in 1923 and about 1924 took over the practice of Dr. Dixon in Hawick. He was Medical Officer for Hawick R.F.C. He was a founder President of Hawick Rotary Club and served as Chairman of the local British Legion. He retired in 1967 after being a Hawick G.P. for over 40 years. Dr. Andrew Rutherford 'Ford' (1932–2002) born in Hawick, son of local doctor Andrew. He was in the R.A.M.C. as part of National Service, then trained as a doctor, coming to practise with his father in Bridge Street in 1964. He served as President of the Hawick Rotary Club, team doctor and President of Hawick R.F.C., Callants' Club President, Chairman of Douglas Haig Court Committee. He was also known as a popular reciter of Border poetry. Archibald (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-are in 1494/5. His name appears as 'archibaldi symson'. Archibald (16th C.) Reader of Glasgow Diocese who supplied Lilliesleaf parish in the period 1575–82, the last pre-Reformation preacher to preach there. His name is spelled 'Symsoun' and 'Simsoun'. In 1575 Thomas Duncanson was Minister (also for Bowden, Langnewton and Melrose), i.e. he had most of the living of the parishes. In 1582 he is recorded as one of 6 preachers from southern Scotland who were deprived for 'abusing the sacraments', then excommunicated in 1588 and threatened with death in 1590 if they did not stop their practices. This may suggest that the men had been Catholic priests before the Reformation. Ashley (1973–) one of two women to publicly attempt to join Ride-outs in 1996. Bailie ?? Bailie of Hawick towards the end of the 19th century. David of Teviotbank (d.1806) son of Rev. James, minister of Wilton. He was 'of Know' in 1788 when mentioned as someone about to be added to the list of voters for Roxburghshire and said to be connected with Thomas Ogilvie and probably a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch in the election. He is recorded as 'David Simson of Know' when he was taxed in Minto Parish for having 2 female servants in 1789 and 1 in 1790; in 1791 he was 'of Teviotbank' when he was taxed for 2 female servants in Minto Parish. He also had a male servant at Knowe in 1790, 2 at Teviotbank in 1791–93 and 3 in 1794 and 1797. In the period 1792–8 he was taxed for owning a carriage and in 1789–97 for having 2 carriage or saddle horses. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is also recorded as owner of 5 farm horses. He was still at Know when he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He had the house at Teviotbank designed by Robert Burn about 1791. He was listed as owner of the lands of Knowe and Knowetownhead on the 1788 county valuation (and still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). He served on the Lieutenancy Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798 and 1799 (perhaps as a Justice of the Peace for the county). In 1791 he married Margaret, daughter of John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. Their children included Gen. Sir James (1792–1868). His will is recorded in 1808 and his estate was granted to his widow Margaret, along with Rev. William of Edinburgh (his brother). After his death there was an ongoing dispute regarding money he claimed he was owed from the Nabob of Arcot and the Ameer ul Omrah. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1808. David B., F.R.C.O. (1886–1941) born in Kilmarnock and raised in Dundee. On 1920 he became the first professional organist at St. George's Kirk, having previously been at the Parish Church of Leslie in Fife. He was also a private music teacher in Hawick, and was conductor of Hawick Choral Society in the 1920 and 30s. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. David M. (b.1861) son of George, farmer at Bedrule. He studied engineering at Edinburgh University then worked in several positions, including as constructing engineer on the Edinburgh Suburban Railway. In 1887 he went to Buenos Aires, then in 1891 to Havana, where he was awarded the Spanish Order of Merit for working during the rebellion. From 1896–1906 he was chief engineer of the Buenos Aires Western Railway. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for George Scott in 1671, along with John Scott, and another for John Blake in 1673, along with Walter Purdom. Francis 'Frank' (1888–1964) born at 10 Trinity Street, he was son of mill foreman Thomas B. He was church organist at Newcastleton and later at Minto. He also gave music lessons in this home at 4 Earl Street. He wrote the music for 'Teviotdale'. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. George 'Geordie' of the Raws (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Geordie Symson in the Rawis' when listed in 1576 among men who should not have been freed from ward. He is probably He the 'Gorth Simson' listed in 1583 among supporters of Elliot of Redheugh. He is recorded as 'George Symson of the Raw' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He is recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. Probably the same George is listed in 1590 among Armstrongs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh in 1590, taking many prisoners for ransom. He is also recorded in 1596 when there was a complaint that he and others had raided lands in England at King Water; others riding with him include Will Elliot of the Steele and Anthony Elliot of the Binks, suggesting he was from Liddesdale. He is probably the George who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. George (18th C.) factor to the estates of Scott of Harden in the period 1757–83. George (18th C.) son of Alexander, minister of Monymusk, he was made Honorary Burgess in 1751. George (d.c.1889) born at Oxnam Row. His father was David, while his grand-father George and great-grandfather John farmed at Bloodylaws in Oxnam Parish. He was tenant farmer at Bedrule from 1846, with his trustees continuing from 1889 until it was sold by the Eliotts to the Ushers in 1898. The farm was drained significantly during his tenure. This branch of the family often used the 'Simpson' spelling. He married Emily Roy and their son was David M. Geraldine (1921–2010) great-great-granddaughter of Pringle's founder Robert Pringle, she was born in Edinburgh to James Muir and Francis Pringle. She was sent to Hawick while her father recovered from injuries sustained during WWI, and raised by her maternal grandparents at Woodnorton. She attended school in Aberdeen and was a 'land girl' there in WWII, travelling around on horseback. With her mother she ran Fetteresso Castle as a temperance hotel; her grandfather Robert Pringle came to live with them in his last few years. She married Maurice 'Chrystal' Simpson, who was minister of Alford's Tullynessle Church, and they had a daughter Maureen. The family later moved to Muchalls Castle, which they restored. She helped found the Architectural Heritage Society of Scotland and was a keen photographer of old houses. She was a long-time friend of the the author Nigel Tranter. In about 2000 she returned to Hawick to present the family bible to the Museum, since she was essentially the last of the Pringle dynasty. Harold (??–) Council employee who was Common Riding Secretary from about 1966 until Reorganisation. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Mathison and their children included: Bessie (b.1697). He may be the James ‘in ye toun of Hawick’ whose son John married Janet Ker in Hawick in 1718. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed ‘oust the water’ in Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott, ‘brother to Goldilands’ in 1689. He was also witness to a baptism for shoemaker Robert Allan in 1709. He could also be the merchant who in 1709 was ‘called Latn [or something similar] Simson’ when his daughter Marion was baptised, with witnesses James Falsyde and Andrew Riddell. He may be the carrier who witnessed baptisms in 1711 for smith Thomas Huntly and for merchant Walter Scott, in 1716 for smith John Scott and for William Sanderson (along with smith John Scott), in 1719 for gardener James Dunn and in 1725 for weaver Robert Turnbull. He is probably the ‘tenant’ who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for shoemaker Patrick Hardie. Probably the same James was recorded in 1731 when he was paid for ‘lintseed oyle and whit lead got to the wither-kok in 1728’. His daughter Janet married weaver James Roger in 1724. He may be the merchant who married (assuming it was a second marriage, otherwise there are 2 generations here) Marion (or Mary) Stewart in 1706 and whose children included: Andrew (b.1707); Marion (b.1709); Caleb (b.1711); John (b.1713); Isabella (b.1716); Jean (b.1718); Christian (b.1721); and James (b.1725). The witnesses in 1707 were merchants Walter Scott and John Robson and in 1721 were Bailie James Deans and tailor Robert Wilson. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was living at Ormiston. His children included: John and William (b.1714); William (again, b.1715). Probably the same James was gardener in Cavers in 1727 and 1729 and also at Cavers in 1736 (perhaps marrying for a second time), with additional children were John (b.1727), Katherine (b.1729), William (b.1731), Helen (b.1734) and Gilbert (b.1736). James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Boa in Minto in 1721. Her father was Patrick Boa. He could be the same man as the gardener in Cavers. Rev. James (1708–71) Minister of Wilton Parish 1738–71. He was son of John, minister of Morebattle. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1737 and presented to Wilton by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch soon afterwards. He witnessed a baptism in Wilton in September 1737 and another in February 1738, suggesting he was already in the area. He was ordained at Wilton in 1738 and remained until his death. Wilton Common was divided during his time as minister, with the lands of Priestrig being reserved for the minister. In 1748 he arranged for a piece of his land (near Burnfoot Mill) to be exchanged for a piece of the Duke of Buccleuch’s ‘Trinity lands’, lying on the Wilton side of the Teviot. He is recorded paying the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Wilton Parish in 1748. He witnessed a baptism in Wilton for John Miller in 1759. In about 1763 his rebuke of dissenters during a baptism of a child of James Scott (farmer at Boonraw), convinced Scott to leave the established church, which led to the forming of the Green Kirk in Hawick. The oldest existing Wilton communion token is from 1763, during his incumbency. In 1743 he married Anne Cranstoune, daughter of the minister of Ancrum. Their children were: John (b.1743), who died young; William (b.1744), who became minister of the Tron Kirk in Edinburgh; John (again, b.1745); David (b.1747) of Know and Teviotbank; James (b.1748), perhaps also of Teviotbank; Anne (b.1748), who died young; and Andrew (b.1751), who also died young. The witnesses in 1747 and 1748 were William Scott of Whitehaugh and John Chisholme of Stirches, and in 1751 were Kirk Elders Robert and Walter Scott. James (18th C.) Bailie who, along with John Nixon, in 1793 presented a bible for use by subsequent Magistrates in St. Mary’s Kirk. It was moved to the Old Parish in 1849 and was there for at least another half-century. He was also Bailie in the very early 1800s. Gen. Sir James (1792–1868) grandson of Rev. James Simpson, son of David Simpson of Teviotbank and Mary Eliott of Borthwickbrae. He was educated at Edinburgh University and commissioned in the Grenadier Guards in 1811. He served in several campaigns, being severely wounded at Quatre Bras, and promoted through the ranks as he served in Mauritius, Bengal and Sind. He went to the Crimea as a Major-General in 1851, becoming acting senior officer and was promoted to General in 1852, along with receiving the G.C.B. He handed over command soon after and retired near Bury St. Edmunds. He was awarded many honours including the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour and being made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick while staying at the Tower Hotel in 1856 after visiting his cousin A.E. Lockhart at Borthwickbrae. He was said to be the tallest officer in the British Army. In 1839 he married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Sir Robert Dundas, but she died in the following year. John (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1674 he was fined for not allowing Bailie Purdom to take his horse to ride to Jedburgh on the Town's business. He could be the John who was married to Isobell Brown and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included John (b.1669) and Francis (b.1673). The witnesses in 1673 were John Scott and John Hardie. He may be the 'Jon Symson, skinner' recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Stobicote. He was listed in 1684 among many men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (17th/18th C.) son of James, he was a tenant in Hawick. In 1718 he married Janet, daughter of deceased gardener Robert Ker. Their daughter Janet was baptised in 1722, with witnesses John Cunningham (perhaps son of the minister) and (schoolmaster) John Purdom. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. It seems likely he was son of merchant James. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Patrick Hardie and in 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Bulloch. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for James Rodger and Janet Simpson (probably his sister). In 1728 he was witness for Robert Renwick in Sandbed. In 1728 he married Margaret, daughter of William Little. Their children included: Margaret (b.1729); Janet (b.1731); Janet (again, b.1737); Margaret (again, b.1737); James (b.1740); and William (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were weaver James Roger and shoemaker Patrick Hardie. John (18th C.) recorded in 1751 as 'lying at the Point of Death in all probability'. This was in the Hawick Session records, where there was a discussion about what to do with 'the Horse belonging to the Session'. His connection with the Session is unclear. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Adam Leyden. John (18th C.) recorded in 1771 when he was paid by the Town Council 'for a standard for salt from Jedburgh'. It is unclear what his occupation was. John (d.1794) tailor in Hawick, son of Andrew. He could be the John (b.1746) son of Andrew and Margaret Turnbull. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Dimpleknowe as owner of a saddle horse on the 1787-97 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as a farm horse in 1797. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. John (18th/19th C.) organist and precentor at Kirkton Kirk from 1895. Mary (18th C.) midwife in Hawick. In 1759 she was a witness for the baptism of a child of dyker George Sandie. It is extremely unusual for a woman to act as witness, suggesting there must have been a special reason. Mary (19th/20th C.) ward maid at Hawick Cottage Hospital for over 30 years. When her health failed, the managers of the Hospital arranged for her to have free board and lodgings there. Robert 'Smith' (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name is listed as 'roberti symson vocatis smyt'. He was also among men who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1500; he is listed as 'Robert Simson, callit Smyth'. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of West Riddell. A dispute with his servant Walter Stoddart from c.1823 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1825 a letter records how Walter Stoddart was hired as his servant at Hawick Fair and there are further letters about the age dispute. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1512 charter where Roger Langlands of that Ilk sold his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was probably from in or around the Barony of Wilton. Thomas (1833/4-98) shoemaker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on South Hermitage Street. His wife was Elizabeth, who died in 1916, aged 82. Their children included Andrew (1860/1-1933), who married Euphemia (1862/3-1939). Probably the same Thomas was manager of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk, recorded in 1879. They are buried at Ettleton. William (16th C.) tenant in Overraw, along with Andrew, recorded in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. William (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. William (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1770 for Anthony Haig. William (18th C.) resident of Whitriggs. In 1784 he was on the Poor Roll of Cavers Parish, with the inventory of his belongings being 2 beds, 2 chairs, 1 dresser, 1 pot, 1 pan, 2 chests, 1 stove, 6 pairs of blankets, 1 pair of sheets, 3 dishes and 1 girdle. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Headshaw on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785-1797. In 1797 he owned the grand sum of 13 farm horses and 1 carriage or saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He could be the tenant from about then who was recorded as an attender at Midlem Secession Kirk. He was probably father of William junior, who was recorded at Headshaw in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797; in 1799 he was 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Askirk parish' and he was still 'Junr.' at Headshaw in 1801. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Junior' at Headshaw in 1797 when he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. He was still 'Junr.' at Headshaw on the 1801 Militia ballot. He was probably son of William, who was farmer at Headshaw. He was probably the William recorded at Headshaw on the subscription list for Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He could be the William, married to Euphan Laidlaw, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included John (b.1813) and Jessie (b.1819). William (b.c.1805) from Galashiels, he was a tailor in Hawick. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 29 High Street. His wife (who died before 1851) was Mary and their children included Walter, Helen, William, Robert and David. William (b.1818/9) from Kelso, he worked for James Kennedy, book-binder. In about 1870 he started his own book-binders and printers at 9 Oliver Place. By 1886 he also had a shop at 3 Silver Street. His business was continued by his sons Ebenezer and Walter as E.W. & W. Simpson, which can be seen in a photograph of 1889. The firm was later incorporated into Deans and Simpsons. William (1862/3–1929) joiner in Newcastleton, who died at Burgh-by-Sands. He married Margaret Oliver, who died on the Isle of Wight in 1898, aged 29. Rev. William (1863–1946) born at Elves, Elgin, son of Charles and Margaret Edwards. He was educated at Aberdeen and St. Andrews Universities. He was licensed by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1891, and was minister in Australia and New Zealand before returning to Scotland in 1904. He was minister at Downfield and then at Maud, before being translated to St. Mary's in Hawick in 1927. He demitted his charge in 1933 and died as the result of an accident 13 years later. He married Sarah Dare (who died in 1940) and their son William Nightingale was a doctor in Stow (formerly also 'Simson', as well as 'Simsoun', 'Symphone', 'Symson', 'Symstone', etc.).

Simpson's (sim-sinz) n. D. Simpson Ltd., a tobacconist's at 60 High Street in the mid-20th century. It was an Edinburgh company, which took over from William Sharp just before WWII and continued into the 1960s. The shop had a striking red and black vitralite frontage and was also known for its blend of pipe tobacco called 'Teviotdale'.

Simpson's Hill (sim-sinz-hil) n. small hill between Northhouse and Old Northhouse, just to the east of Inner Hill. It reaches a height of 308 m.

Sim's Hob (simz-hōb) n. nickname for Robert Scott around 1600.

Sim's Knowe (simz-now) n. hilly area just south of Harwood House, being on the northern slope of Templehall Hill.

Simson see Simpson

Sim the Laird (sim-thu-lārd) n. nickname for Simon Airmstrong in the early 16th century.

sin (sin) adv. soon – 'she sin got a chance ti prove hersel', 'A'll sin tell ee', 'It's mony a month sin oo last saw ye in this gate-end' [JEDM], '... And sune we'll baith come back again and ring, ring the bell' [WE], 'That someday sune, Hit doon – mei abune ...' [JEDM], 'Oo've been kens where aa sin than' [ECS], 'But ma trials ir sune forgotten ...' [IWL], sooner – '... Aye comes there, sune or later' [DH] (also spelled 'suin', 'sune' etc.; also pronounced sūn in earlier times, with what E.C. Smith describes as a 'kind of 'medium' value ui-sound').

sin (sin) prep., conj., adv., arch. since – 'Sin' first thy varied blending check Was by her worn ...' [JoHa], '... And sin' they've aa taen their looks frae you, There's nane that'll come their gate to woo' [WL] (also written 'sin'').

since (sins) adv. ago – '... twae or threi month since' [CoH] (more common than in English, where 'long since' is the only frequent example).

Sinclair (sing-klār) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Adam Singlar' when he witnessed the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father's Lordship of Liddesdale. John was also a witness, and so perhaps related. Archibald (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1791–93, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1794 he was listed as groom at Minto and in 1797 was a gardener there. Beatrix (16th C.) married William

Ale Moor and had children with him. She secondly married William Scott, brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk. In about 1530 Walter Scott granted his brother William (along with her and her children with her first husband) half of Lilliesleaf Mill. Charles Lord Sinclair (1768–1863) eldest son of Andrew and Elizabeth Rutherford. He succeeded to the family titles in 1776, becoming 13th Lord. He joined the Royal Scots Regiment of Foot at age 16 and in 1790 raised an independent company. He switched to the 15th Regiment of Foot and became Lieutenant-Colonel, quitting the Army in 1802, but becoming Lieutenant-Colonel of the Berwickshire Militia. In 1807 he was elected as a representative peer of Scotland then was involved with the Haddington Militia. He served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. In 1802 he married Mary Agnes, daughter of James Chisholme of Stonedge. On the death of his father-in-law in 1812 he inherited the Stonedge estate. His wife died 2 years later and Their eldest son James became the 14th lord Sinclair. Their other children were: Matthew, who died aged 21; Charles, who became a Royal Navy Commander and lived at Eyemouth; and Susan. He secondly married Isabella Mary, youngest daughter of Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse in Roxburghshire and had 3 more children: John, who died aged 22; Eleanor; and Jane Elizabeth. He lived to the age of 95. Charles William Lord Sinclair (b.1831) eldest son of James, he was the 15th Lord. He was Colonel in the 57th Regiment, serving in Crimea, being present at Balaklava and Inkerman, in the Bosphorus, the Indian Mutiny and the New Zealand War, receiving several medals. He retired from the Army in 1878 and lived in Berwickshire, where he was a J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant, as well as being a representative peer. Among his titles was also Laird of Stonedge in Rulewater. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1870 he married Margaret Jane Younger, daughter of James Murray of Bryanston Square, London. Their sons were Archibald James Murray and Charles Henry Murray, both of whom served in the Army, and they also had 3 daughters, Ada Jane, Margaret Helen and Georgina Violet. Charles 'Charlie' (19th C.) resident of Lintalee. He could be the same man as Charles, Lord Sinclair. He was instrumental in forming the new pack of Jedforest Hounds in about 1882. He served as Huntsman 1885–92. George became a Director at Pringle's in 1947. James Lord Sinclair (1803–80) eldest son of Charles and Mary

Agnes Chisholme, from whom he inherited the Stonedge estate in Rulewater. He was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish, and in 1836 was referred to as being 'of Greenriver'. He was the 14th Lord Sinclair. He was Captain of the Grenadier Guards and became a Scottish representative peer. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1830 he married Jane, eldest daughter of Archibald Little of Shabden Park, Surrey, and she died in 1887, aged 75. Their children were: Charles William, who succeeded; Archibald, who became a naval Commander; James Chisholme, in the Madras Civil Service; Lockhart Matthew; Mary Agnes; and Helen. James H. Associate Minister at Selkirk, linked with Ashkirk, in the 1980s. Janet (d.1667) married James Brydon and had a son Andrew. She later married Rev. Thomas Thomson, minister of Hobkirk. In 1618, along with her son Andrew and Hector Shiel of Kirknowe she had a 'wadset' over lands adjacent to the Kirkhaugh of Hobkirk. This was registered in 1623. She was buried in Greyfriars churchyard in Edinburgh. John (15th C.) recorded as being 'in Mynto' in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he 'came in the King's Will for treasonably concealing and Stouthreif of ten score pas-pennys pertaining to the King, found in the Kirk of Mynto'. This was probably a cache of English gold coins, hidden by Sinclair, but claimed by the King as treasure trove. Although said to be 'in Minto', the Laird of Bedrule was specifically his surety (while William Langlands acted for 2 of the others), perhaps suggesting that he was from Rulewater; the others were John Turnbull, Thomas Bell, George Turnbull and John Aitkin (with William Burn's name also given, but scored out). Perhaps he was the same John recorded earlier in 1493 when the Sheriff of Roxburgh was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-airie in Jedburgh; this John was cited again at the Justice-airie in 1494/5. Possibly the same 'John Singlar' was on the panel that met at Cavers to decide on inheritance of certain Elliot lands in 1497/8. Possibly the same 'Johanne Sinclair' was witness to the sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale; there he is 'Halis signifero', i.e. standard-bearer for Hepburn of Hailes. Perhaps the same 'Johannis sinclar in baronia de caveris' had remission in 1502 for the murder of John Moffat, with George Turnbull of Hallrule as his surety. Thomas (16th/17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1618, he was presented as minister to Abbotrule Parish in mid-1618 and ordained there early the following year. However, he resigned before the middle of 1623, the reason being that he had ‘gone to London with the Prior of Coldingham’s children’ (presumably as their tutor). A man of the same name is recorded in a deed of 1608 as schoolmaster at Oakwood; this could be the same man or perhaps a close relative. William (19th C.) hired as a compulsory attendance officer in Hawick about 1873, following the requirements of the Education Scotland Act of 1872. He was thus the town’s first truant officer! His main job was as a stockingmaker (written ‘St. Clair’, ‘Sinclare’ and ‘Sinclar’ in early times).

Singdean (sing-deen) n. farm and former hamlet between the ‘Note o the Gate’ and Saughtree. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Sougdon’ (with a value of 12 merks) on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. On the 1541 roll it is listed as ‘Sangdane’, with the same value, and William Elliot being the tenant. There were originally separate farms of Over and Nether Singdean, which were part of the lands in upper Liddesdale held by Jedburgh Abbey. By at least 1632 the lands were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Adam Thomson was tenant there in 1694. The farm was included in those surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718; it covered 1770 acres, bounded by Hudshouse, Dawstonburn and farms belonging to other landowners, and with the farmhouse in the same location as the modern one. Walter Scott was shepherd there in the mid-19th century, known for making a particular plaster that was said to cure cancer. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. Jeffrey reports that in the late 1850s a rudely carved stone cross, nearly 4 feet long, was found at a pass near here and in the possession of Mr. Stavert of Saughtree. In 1793 Sir Walter Scott passed here, and heard a coughing cow, which the judge in an earlier court case had ruled impossible. Thomas Armstrong was shepherd there in at least 1797–99 and John Oliver was shepherd in 1801. Walter Scott was shepherd from at least the 1830s until his death in 1853 and his sons Andrew and James after him. The farm was part of those tenanted by John Elliot until his death in 1897. William Telfe was shepherd in at least 1898–1901. The farm was let to S.C. Gibbons in 1910 and sold by the Buccleuch Estates to James Beattie in 1920. In 1940 a lorry carrying 75 sheep left the road and plunged down the hill near here. Robert Kyle bought the farm from Andrew Beattie in 1963 and in 1967 it was purchased by Andrew Stavert Turnbull. In 1973 the land was purchased by Mr. & Mrs. Harris, who 2 years later sold it to Margaret Thompson, who left it to her daughter Stephanie in 2007. Chista and Del Dobson purchased it in 2012 and developed the ‘Alpnhau’ chalet for use as bed and breakfast accommodation (also written ‘Singden’ and ‘Singdon’; the origin is probably Old English ‘sengan denu’, for ‘valley cleared by burning’; it first occurs unambiguously as ‘Singdane’ in 1541, is ‘Singdown’ in 1632, ‘Singden’ in 1694 and ‘Sington’ in 1799; it is marked ‘Singden in Liddisdeill’ on Pont’s map, ‘Singdenn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map of Roxburghshire and ‘Singlenn’ on the Liddesdale map; it is ‘Singden’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Singdon’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Singdean Burn (sing-deen-burn) n. stream in the upper headwaters of Liddesdale, rising on Fanna Hill and flowing roughly south-east to become part of the Caddroun Burn near Singdean.

Singdean Hope (sing-deen-hōp) n. former name for area near Singdean. It was reported in 1890 that a landslide here had blocked the Dawston Burn, choking the Liddell downstream and resulting in the deaths of a large number of salmon and other fish. The name presumably applies to an upper part of the Singdean Burn.

the Singdean Plaister (thu-sing-deenplā-stur) n. poultice developed by a family at Singdean, which was supposed to cure external cancers. The recipe was said to have been learned by shepherd Walter Scott (c.1790–1853) from a French doctor. It consisted of perhaps as few as 3 herbs, all (or most) of which grew commonly near Singdean and were dried in a ‘keb-hoose’ on the hillside. At one point the cure became so popular that the shepherd used to hide out when visitors came to the cottage. It was said that large sums of money were offered for the secret, but the family never divulged it. Walter Scott’s notebook is in the museum in Newcastleton, but with the critical pages torn out. The secret was passed on to Walter’s son Andrew and then to Andrew’s sons Adam and Walter. A man called John Wood from Jedburgh, who also applied curative plasters, was said to possess the same recipe, but confessed that he did not know one of the missing ingredients. By 1940 it was said that the recipe was held by Miss Mary Scott, Fernlea, Bowden and later by a descendant in Arbroath.

singed sheep’s heid (sinjd-sheeps-heed) n., arch. formerly popular dish, made by taking a sheep’s head, burning the wool off it, and then serving it in various ways – ‘... there was a singed sheep’s-head on the table which had been ‘got up’ for next day’s dinner’ [WNK].

singel (sing-ul) adj. single – ‘there wasni a singel Teri among them’, also used to refer to an item ordered in a fish and chip shop without chips – ‘A’ll hev a fish supper an a singel haggis’ (note the lack of hard g).

singel-end (sing-ul-end) n., arch. a one-roomed cottage – ‘The single end next door was occupied by a Mrs. Turnbull and she was the mother of the original Turnbull of Haddon & Turnbull’ [JeC] (see also yin-end).

singit (sing-ee’, -i’) adj., arch. stunted in growth, shrivelled – ‘Let them alane, ye singit-like shurf’ [HAST1868], ‘The Hawick meaning of singeet is lean, emaciated, ill-fed’ [ECS], ‘ye singit thing’ [GW].

singit-lookin (sing-ee’-loo-kin) adj., arch. having the appearance of being puny or shrivelled – ‘ye singit-lookin’ wasp, shurf’ [GW] (also ‘singit-like’).

Singleton (sing-gul-tin) n. A. telegraph and station agent in Newcastleton in the 1860s.

Singley (sinj-lee??) n. former farmstead at Singley Brae near Penchrise. It once formed part of Cavers estate, and is recorded being resigned by Thomas Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas in 1368. It is listed as part of Cavers estate in a charter of 1511. It was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and also when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. It formed part of the estate of Eliott of Stobs in 1678 and was among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott from his father in 1692 (the origin is probably ‘clearing made by burning’ from the Old English ‘sengan’, to scorch, plus ‘leah’, a wood; the name is recorded as ‘Senglee’ in the 14th century, is ‘Singlie’ and ‘Synglie’ in 1511, ‘Singlees’ in 1678 and is transcribed as ‘Finglio’ in 1687).

Singley Brae (sinj-lee-brā??) n. area between Penchrise and the Maidens, on the slopes of the Pike. The Catrail passes down the slope, and there are earthworks and the remains of a farmstead nearby, presumably Singley farm.

Singlie (sinj-lee??) n. farm on the north side of the Ettrick valley, roughly opposite Hyndhope, with Singliehill End a little to the west. It was Crown lands from at least 1456, being assigned to Turnbolls in the 1480s, Homes in the 1490s and the Kers of Caverton and Cessford in 1499. John Reid was tenant there in 1494/5 when accused of rieving crimes. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1502 it is recorded that 50 sheep were stolen from John Dalgleish there. In a rental roll of 1541 the tenancy was claimed by the Laird of Cessford, ‘occupiit be the kingis gudis’ paying £24 yearly. The lands belonged to the Laird of Buccleuch in 1543 when they were raided by a group of English and Scotsmen, taking 1400 sheep and 2 prisoners, with 2 people killed in the process. John Lauder was there in 1579. Sir William Scott was granted the lands by John, Earl of Annandale in about 1605, although they appear to have been purchased by Simon Scott of Bonnington in 1593, confirmed in 1607. Robert Scott, son of William in Milsington gained the lease in about 1712, and his descendants farmed there until about 1879 – ‘There’s daft Jock Gray o’ Gilmanscleugh, And Davie o’ the Inch; And when ye come to Singley, They’ll help ye in a pinch’ [DJG], ‘The sun was low when they crossed the Ale, It was dark when they won to Ettrick vale, And the stars on Singlie had blazed an hour When the watchman challenged on Kirkhope Tower’ [WHO] (also spelled ‘Senglee’, it was ‘Singil’ in 1456, ‘Syngle’ in 1468 and 1471, ‘Single’ in 1484 and 1490, ‘seyngillie’ in singlins (sing-linz) n., pl., arch. gleaned corn, gleanings – 'Every bodie likit 'im, so did the bairns that gather't singlins among the stooks' [BM1898].

sink (singk) v., arch. to blast, ruin – 'He refused, saying, 'Sink it, na'' [RM].

sinker (sing-kur) n. a shaped thin plate for depressing the loops between the needles in a knitting machine. These can be for forming loops by pushing the yarn, or for holding the already formed web while the needles make the loops.

sinner (si-nur) adv. rather, sooner – 'A wad sinner gaun haim is stey here', '...Suner a canny gowk Than pride rowed in the glaur' [WL], '...A' the rest was a waste o' time Till the back-end o' July, When he saw it was suner derk at nicht; 'Oo're gettn't in!' says Dye' [DH] (also spelled 'suner' etc.).

sinsyne (sin-sin) prep., arch., poet. since then, since that time, ever since – 'But sic a queer scene ne'er sin' syne hae I seen, Nor afore, sin' the day o' my birth, man' [JoHa], 'An', though sin'syne its mony a year, I'll ne'er forget her spinnin'-wheel' [JJ], '...An' he's aye keepit it sin' syne, – Retailing spirits, teas, an' wine' [RDW], 'There hasna been a carriage at oor door nayther afore nor sin' syne' [WNK], '...excep' this ae strange sicht aw ne'er afore nor sin' syne saw onything supernatural' [BCM1880], 'The witch didna dee, as micht hae been hoppit, But ever sinsyne her cantrips were stoppit' [BM1901], 'Hello callant! What heh ee eer chafts tied up for? A forker gaed inti ma lug, i herrst, an it's aye been sair sinseine' [ECS], 'Lang years sinsyne haw passed away, and muckle joy and woe ...' [JCG], 'The Reuch Sike ... a guid name for a fiddler's howff, I've aye thocht, sin syne' [DH], '... And they have flocked In package tours sinsyne' [WL] (also written 'sin syne', 'sinseine', etc.).

Sinton see Synton

Sinton (sin'-in) n. county town of San Patricio county in Texas, named after David Sinton, major shareholder of the local pasture company that gave the land. His name in turn probably comes from the estate near Ashkirk.

Sinton (sin'-in) n. Adam (b.1819) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Isabella Scott. He worked as a grocer in Hawick, and later as a labourer. Along with mill-worker John Forsyth, he was found guilty in 1865 of stealing coins from Hawick Museum, and sentenced to 5 years in prison. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Waugh, blacksmith at Chesters. Their children included William, Robert and Elizabeth. His wife is recorded as a widow in 1874. Alexander (12th/13th C.) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew who was granted the lands and title by William the Lion. He witnessed several charter for Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century. There was confirmation of lands in Hownam in 1195–98, a gift of lands in Lessuden in 1199, confirmation of lands in Clifton 1201–09, gift of several churches by King William 1204–07, a gift of Sorrowlessfield 1208–12, a dispute between Melrose Abbey and Earl of Dunbar in 1208, a charter for the lands of Fairnington in about 1214, lands in Lilliesleaf 1214–40, lands in Elliston 1220–43 and a gift of Maxton in 1226. He was succeeded by another Andrew. Alexander (d.1292/3) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew, the 3rd Sheriff. He may be the Alexander who had a charter of the lands of Todrig from Aymer de Maxwell in about 1260. His accounts as Sheriff of Selkirk are recorded in 1265 and 1288. He may be the same Alexander who witnessed a charter for Alexander of Moravia in 1280. He was mentioned as Sheriff of Selkirk in 1293. His wife was Marie, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, as holder of the lands. In 1296 she complained that she had been a widow for 3 years, and pleased with the English King for her dower lands of 20 merks. Their children included: Andrew, who succeeded; and Isabella, who married Edward Keith and succeeded her brother. Andrew (12th/13th C.) appointed Sheriff of Selkirk by William the Lion. He is referred to as 'Andrew de Synton'. On his appointment he gave up the farm associated with Roxburgh Castle; this explains why Synton estate afterwards lay within Selkirkshire, even although it was surrounded by Roxburghshire. 4 generations of his descendants were also Sheriffs (as described at an inquest in 1305). In about 1250 he witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk to Coldingham Priory, where he is recorded as 'Andrea de Sintun'. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (13th C.) son of Alexander. He was the 3rd member of the family to be Sheriff of Selkirk. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (d.c.1300) probably son of Alexander and brother of Isabella. He held the title of Sheriff of Selkirk as well as the Synton estates. In 1296 he was captured at Dunbar and sent to Fotheringay Castle as a prisoner, along with several other Scottish noblemen; his name was recorded as 'Andreas de Synton'. In 1298 there was a command from Edward I for payment to his jailors. However, he died in prison, and his heir was his sister Isabella (although separately suggested to have been his wife Isabel, so this is either confusion or there were 2 women with the same name). The family's history is described in an inquisition in 1305. Andrew (b.c.1816) son of William and Isabella Scott. He was born in Jedburgh, although his mother was from the Hawick area. He lived in Ancrum and Cavers Parishes. He worked as a road contractor, probably on the Wynd in Denholm. He married Margaret Dodds in Cavers in 1841. Their children included: Margaret (b.1843); William (1845); Walter (b.1847); Isabella; Andrew; Helen (b.1854); James (b.1856); and twins Richard Thomson and Jessy (b.1859). Bailie (18th/19th C.) said to have been the first druggist in Hawick. His premises were at 29 High Street, which became known as 'Sinton's Close'. Note, however, that the same property is labelled 'Linton' on Wood's 1824 map and so there may be confusion over the surname. His first name is unknown, but it is possible that he is the same man as Andrew Linton. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1720. He married Bessie Scott in 1707. His children included: Walter (b.1709); Thomas (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); and George (b.1720). George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott. Their children included Thomas (b.1725). George (d.1806) labourer in Hawick. His daughter Alison died in 1790. Perhaps the same George married Margaret Beattie in Wilton in 1766 and in 1771 was living at 'Morrowshall', i.e. Morrishall. Their children included: Thomas (b.1771), who was a farmer in Laggan, Invernesshire; probably William (b.c.1778–1841), who married Isabella Scott and died in Jedburgh; and Allison (c.1780–90), who died in Hawick. He may be the son of John baptised in Ashkirk in 1737. He died in 'Lenton', which is probably Lanton near Jedburgh. George (18th/19th C.) from Leith, he was a grocer in Wilton. In 1897 he purchased the grocer's business from Mary (nee Govenlock) Brodie. Helen (18th C.) cook at Branhholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Probably the same 'Nelly' was cook at Midshiels in 1791. Isabella (b.c.1285) either sister or wife of the last 'de Synton' Sheriff of Selkirk, she was the heiress of Synton. It is possible that 2 separate women are conflated here; in 1296 Isabella, wife of Andrew of Sinton complained about her estates being seized when her husband was imprisoned at Dunbar, and pleaded for 20 merks worth of land. She was married to Edward de Kethe (or Keith), who was Sheriff of Aberdeen and son of Sir William de Keith. Together with her husband she claimed the sheriffdom of Selkirk from Edward I in 1305. Their children were Sir William, John of Inverugie, Catherine and Janet. James (17th C.) married Janet Govenlock in Ashkirk Parish in 1663. Probably the same James was recorded in 1661 when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Govenlock. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Anderson and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1689. James (17th/18th C.) recorded in a marriage in Wilton Parish in 1714, with the bride's name not given. Probably the same James was married to Bessie Henderson and had children Isobel (b.1715) and John (b.1716) baptised in Wilton. James (b.1702) son of John, he was born in Yarrow Parish. His brother John lived in Ashkirk and Robertson Parishes. He was at Deloraineshiel and Dodhead when some of his children were baptised. In 1728 in Yarrow he married Katherine Cairns. Their children, baptised in Ettrick and Yarrow Parishes, included: John (b.1729); James (b.1731); William (b.1732); Margaret (b.1735); Marion (b.1737); an unnamed child (b.1739); and Catharine (b.1744). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1726); and Ann (b.1728). James (c.1730s–1802) carrier in Abbotrule. He lived at Clesslee and at Strangeburnfoot. His wife may have been Margaret. Their children included: Peter; Thomas (b.1755); Margaret (b.1758); and James (b.1760). Probably he was the same James who also married Janet Oliver (from Unthank) in 1762, the marriage recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. Their children included: Mary (b.1763); Margaret (b.1765); Robert (b.1767), born at Strangeburnfoot; John (b.1769) also at Strangeburnfoot; James (b.1772), who married Barbara Oliver; and Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1773). He died at Clessleepeel. James (b.1731) son of James, he was a shepherd in Yarrow Parish. He was living at Wester Deloraine in 1774 and Inner Huntly in 1778. He married Mary Fletcher (b.1740, who was from Hawick) in Ashkirk in 1764. Their children included: James (b.1766); Catherine (b.1769); Jean (b.1772); Helen (b.1774); William (b.1778). James (b.c.1772) son of James and Janet Oliver. He married Barbara Oliver in Southdean in 1804. Their son was John (b.1806), born at 'Clesleepeel' in Southdean Parish. James (b.c.1775) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson, he was born at Southdeanmillhead. He married Margaret Wilkie. Their children included: Peter (b.1805), born in Wilton Parish; and Robert (b.1813), born at Clarilaw Moor. James (18th/19th C.) weaver at Brownhills in in Southdean Parish according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (b.c.1780) probably related to the other Southdean Sintons. In 1816 he married Isabella Fleming, and she died in 1867. Their children were: Robert (d.1897); and William (d.1851). He died in the 1840s, probably at Bonjedward. James (b.c.1780) servant at Synton Parkhead according to the 1801 Militia ballot for Ashkirk Parish. James (1805–61) labourer in Jedburgh, son of William. In 1851 he was a road labourer at Greenriver Garden in Hobkirk Parish and at Fulton in 1861. He married Margaret Hogg (1807–79) in 1836, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Jedburgh Parishes. His wife was born in Wilton, daughter of Walter Hogg, and said to be related to the Ettrick Shepherd. Their children included: James (b.1836); William (b.1837); Walter (b.1841); John (b.1845); and George (b.1847). The family were living at Fulton when he died; shortly afterwards his widow and sons John and George emigrated to New Zealand, where his son William had already settled. James (b.c.1821) born in Southdean Parish, son of Peter and Jane Wight. He married Mary Ann Fleming. Their children included: Robert William (b.1875), who was born at Blakedean, Morebattle; and James (b.1883), born in Bedrule Parish. James (1841–1938) of Eastfield, Joppa, where his house was called 'Hassendean'. He was born in Denholm, son of John (from Jedburgh) and Mary Ann Gillies. He served as groom to Daniel Mather of Hallrule. However, he later worked for Blackwood the publishers in Edinburgh. He contributed several articles to the Transactions, as well as editing some other works and bibliographies. He married Mary, daughter of Peter Bruce. Their son John (b.1867) was born in Hawick. He published Leyden's 'Tour in the Highlands and Western Islands' (1903) and wrote 'Leydeniana' (1912). He also edited William Laidlaw's recollections about Sir Walter Scott, published in Hawick in 1905. His major local contribution, however, was 'Bibliography of works relating to, or published in Hawick' (1908), which he stated to be 'a work of great labour, and it has occupied my leisure time extending over a very considerable period'. This was a more focused extension to his 'List of books relating to or published in the Counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles', which appeared as an appendix to Sir George Douglas' 1899 'History of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles'. His Hawick biography contains information about newspapers, maps and music, as well as a thoroughly researched list of books. He died in Denholm. James (19th/20th C.) resident of Greenriver Cottage. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. James (b.1883) son of James and Mary Ann Fleming. He was born in Bedrule Parish. He married Rhoda Carr and his son was also James. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including stealing 24 sheep, 3 cows and a horse from his lands in Synton, with the help of James Elliot. He was also witness to a 1508 sasine for the Erskine's land of Synton; like the other witnesses, he was probably local. He was probably the Laird in 1502 when the estate was attacked by David Scott. It seems likely that he was descended from the original Sintons of Synton. ('the Lady') and some Armstrongs, with many sheep and cattle stolen. John (16th C.) wool merchant ('lanitor') in Selkirk. In 1579/80 he stated in Selkirk that William Scott 'alias William with the teyth' stole 5 sheep from near Simon Glendinning's house. John (17th C.) recorded as a merchant in Selkirk in 1671. In 1674 he also had an account with the Burgh of Selkirk. Probably the same John was ex-Burgh Treasurer of Selkirk in 1663. John (17th C.) married Isobel Stoddart in Robertson Parish in 1679. John (17th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He was said to be a Covenanter who was taken prisoner in Redesdale, perhaps in 1683. John (b.1700) son of John, he was baptised in Yarrow Parish. His brother James was a shepherd at Deloraineshiel. He was a resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Cuthbertson (or 'Culbertson') in 1727, the marriage being recorded in both Robertson and Ashkirk Parishes. They lived at Synton Mill and then at Huntly. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: Isobel (b.1729), William (b.1733); John (b.1735); George (b.1737); Thomas (b.1739); an unnamed child (b.1741); and Margaret (b.1743). John (18th C.) farm worker in Ashkirk Parish. In 1737 he was recorded as a servant to Scott of Synton. He married Margaret Learmont in 1735. Their children were: Katherine (b.1735); Alexander (b.1736); Helen (b.1739), perhaps the Helen who died in Hawick in 1808, widow of John Turnbull; Walter (b.1746); Elizabeth (b.1749); and William (b.1750). He is probably the John who (along with Alexander Scott of Synton) witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Woll in 1744. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was a tailor at Wauchope in 1758. His children included Elizabeth (or 'Bessy', b.1752), James (b.1754) and Anne (b.1758). John (18th C.) recorded in 1785 as servant to John Paterson, tenant in Langhope, when he was involved in a legal case in Selkirk. Helen Hunter in Philiphaugh demanded that he acknowledge he was father of her son and demanding payment. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Wester Alemuir in 1771 and 1774 and at Bellendean in 1785. He is probably the John who married Betty Burnet in Robertson in 1769 and whose children included Isobel (b.1771), Robert (b.1774), Betty (b.1779), Christian (b.1782) and Mary (b.1785). John (b.c.1780) servant at Northhouse Haugh according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. John (1780–1856) son of William and Isobel Black. He was born in Southdean Parish. He lived at Letham and in Hobkirk Parish. He may be the servant at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He married Dorothy Easton (or 'Eastham'), who died in 1844. Their children, included: William (b.1807), recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean; Richard (b.1810), James (b.1815) and George (b.1817), baptised in Hobkirk; and Isabella (b.1823), baptised in Southdean. John (1806–54) son of James and Barbara Oliver. He was born at 'Clesleepeel' in Southdean Parish. In 1829 he married Alison, daughter of John Hall and Betty Briggs. Their children included: Robert (b.1831); John (b.1833); William (b.1836); and James Oliver (b.1848). They were all born in Jedburgh. He died in Argyll and was buried at Eckford. John (1810–65) son of William and Isabella Scott, who was from Hawick, he was born in Jedburgh and lived in Denholm. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer in Denholm. In 1851 he was a game watcher at Woodside Cottage in Cavers Parish. He firstly married Mary Ann Gillies in Hawick in 1835 and their children, mostly baptised in Cavers, included: William (b.1836/7); Jane (or Jean, b.1839); James (b.1841), who contributed local history articles; Isabel (b.1843); John Gillies (b.1843); and George (b.1845). He secondly married Mary Dickson, and their children included: Robert (b.1854); Thomas (b.1856), skinner in Hawick; and Mary (b.1860), who married

Adam Huggan, tobacconist in Hawick. John Gillies (1843–1904) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Mary Ann Gillies. In 1864 he married Isabella Wight in Maxton. Their children were: John (b.1862); Helen (1869–1948); Mary (b.1871); James (1873–1936); George (b.1878) in Hawick; William Wight (1866–95); and Francis Douglas (1882–1971). Marie (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. She was widow of Alexander, the former Sheriff of Selkirkshire. Her seal, attached to the Ragman Rolls, showed a figure of eight rays and the name 'S'MARIE DE SINTVN'. Also in 1296 she pleaded to the English King for dower lands worth 20 merks, since she had been left a widow for 3 years. Mark (16th C.) recorded in Lessuden in 1581 in a transaction in the Selkirk Protocol Books. Peter (d.1811) cattle dealer at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish. He also lived at Southdean Mill. His father may have been James. There is confusion because he is named Patrick in some records. He married Janet Donaldson. Their children probably included: James (1772–1855), born at Southdeanmillhead; John (b.1774), born at Strangeburnfoot; Thomas (1776–1861); Janet (c.1782–1855); Peter (c.1783–1866); Margaret (c.1790–1869); Isabella (1792–1869), who married Richard Robson; and Cecilia (c.1795–1877), who married William Thomson. He was buried at Abbotrule. Peter (c.1783–1866) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson, he was born in Southdean Parish. He is probably the Peter who was servant at Southdean on the 1801 Militia ballot. He married Jane Wight in 1806. Their children included: Peter (b.1808), who was born at Ruletownhead; and James (b.c.1821), who was born in Southdean. Peter (b.1805) son of James and Margaret Wilkie. He was born in Wilton Parish. He married Marion Ker and their children included Alexander (b.1839), who was born in Midlothian. Peter (b.1808) born at Ruletownhead, son of Peter and Jane Wight. He married May Scott, and their son was John (b.1859), who was born in Corsenside, Northumberland. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (b.1813) born at Clarilaw Muir, son of James and Margaret Wilkie. Their children included Robert (b.1852), who was born at Raelees in Selkirkshire. Robert (c.1817–97) born in Southdean Parish, son of James and Isabella Fleming. He married Helen Scott. Their children included: George (b.c.1845); Robert (b.1847); William (b.1856); and John (b.1866). Robert (b.1818) born in

Hobkirk Parish, son of Thomas and Mary Elliot. He married Isabella Oliver, and their children included Thomas (b.1851), who was born at Lanton. Thomas (1776–1861) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson. He was born in Southdean Parish. He is probably the labourer at Burnkinford recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He married Mary Elliot in Hobkirk in 1810. Their children, baptised in Hobkirk, included Peter (b.1812) and Robert (b.1818) and Thomas (b.1822). He is probably the Thomas, servant in Southdean who is listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. Probably the same Thomas married Elizabeth Hastie in Southdean in 1828. Thomas (b.1856) son of John and Mary Dickson. He was a skinner in Hawick. His sister Mary married tobacconist Adam Huggan. He married Annie Scott and their children included: John (b.1878); and Walter (b.c.1886). Walter (16th/17th C.) brother of William ‘in Helialdrum Burne’. Along with his brother, Thomas Brown and others, he was directed by Walter Scott of Goldielands to apprehend William Oliver. William (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80, purchased 2 rigs of land there in 1580 and witnessed transactions in 1581. Also in 1581 he leased a tenement in Selkirk from John Hall and he may be the William in Newton recorded as witness to another transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1582. His surname is recorded as ‘Suyntoun’ in a charter of 1588 relating to lands in Selkirk in the Melrose chartulary. Given the location it seems likely he is a descendant of the family from Synton. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Helialdrum Burne’ recorded in 1618. Along with his brother Walter, Thomas Brown ‘in Thorishop’ and others, he was directed by Walter Scott of Goldielands to apprehend William Oliver ‘in Lanyburne’ (possibly Langburnshiels). Oliver complained to the Privy Council and those responsible for his unlawful capture were declared rebels. could be Langburnshiels. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Dryden in Roberton Parish in 1714. He may be the William in Borthwickburn whose daughter Bessie was baptised in 1714. Perhaps the same William witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Kersel in 1720. William (b.1718) born in Duns, son of John and Janet Scott. He married Isabel Dunlop. His children included: James (b.1760), who was born in Ashkirk; and Thomas (b.c.1763). William (b.1733) son of John, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Dunlop in Ashkirk in 1760. Their children included: James (b.1760), baptised in Ashkirk; and Margaret (b.1777) and Thomas (b.1781), baptised in Selkirk. Possibly the same William was living at Henwoody when his children Janet (b.1764) and William (b.1766) were baptised in Roberton. William (b.c.1750) probably born in Jedburgh and related to the Southdean Sintons. He married Isobel Black. Their children included: James (b.c.1776); and John (1780–1856), born in Southdean. William (c.1778–1841) born in Jedburgh. He is presumably closely related to other Sintons, perhaps son of George and Margaret Beattie. He married Isabella Scott in Hawick in 1804. Their children were: James (1805–61), who married Margaret Hogg from Wilton; William (1808–73), who lived in Denholm; John (1810–65), who also lived in Denholm; Thomas (b.1813); Andrew (c.1816–68); and Adam (b.1819). There are many descendants living in New Zealand. He died in Jedburgh. William (1808–73) son of William and Isabella Scott, his parents being from Jedburgh and Hawick, respectively. He lived in Denholm, probably on Canongate, where he was a farmer and road contractor. In 1851 he was farming 50 acres and employing 2 men. His wife was Jessie Lamb and their children included: William (b.1847); Betsy (b.1850); Isabella (b.1854); and George (b.1857) (also written ‘Sintone’, ‘Sintoun’ and variants; note the possible confusion with Linton in older written records).

Sinton's Close (sin'-inz-klōs) n. former name for a close at 29 High Street, demolished in 1875 when the property was rebuilt. It was named after a wealthy Bailie who had been the first druggist in town. Afterwards Armstrong the printer began selling drugs there, then a Mr. Wilson started up the same kind of business there.

the Six Airch Brig (thu-siks-ārch-brig) n. popular name for the Slitrig Viaduct, out beyond Lynnwood. It was built in 1860 as part of the line from Hawick to Carlise, and demolished in 1982 (partly because of the danger of people throwing things from it). An early photograph shows the bridge being constructed. A set of steps was built here around 2009, allowing walkers to connect between the road and the former railway line. Whins have rapidly taken over this area. Because of the prominence of the viaduct when entering Hawick from the south, it became widely known as 'the town with the six-arch bridge'.

skaddaw (ska-da) n., poet. a shadow – 'I satt doun anunder his skaddaw wi' grit delicht ...' [HSR], 'The hills wer kiveret wi' the skaddaw o't' an' the bouchs o't wer like the guidlie cedars' [HSR] (also written 'scaddaw').

She played junior rugby with Gala Girls and was later with Watsonians, moving to DMP Sharks in 2019. She originally played in the back row, but is best known as a hooker. She represented Scotland Women at the U15, U16, U18 and U20 levels and made her first full international appearance in 2012. She now has more than 40 caps for Scotland.

skelf (skelf) n. a splinter, slice, sliver (note that splice is more common in Hawick).

skelf (skelf) n., arch. a shelf (the word survives in the placename Skelfhill).

Skelfhill (skelf-hil) n. farm to the south-west of Hawick, also the name for the surrounding area, in particular the hill Skelfhill Pen. The lands were probably owned by Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill in the mid-16th century. Robert Elliot of Skelfhill is recorded in 1607, Robert Scott was tenant in 1694 and William Scott in 1711. Surveyed in 1718, it consisted at that time of 2062 acres (including Langcleuchside and Fairnyside), bounded by Brugh, Priesthaugh, Billhope, Gorrenberry, Linhope, Phaup, Northhouse and Doecleuch. Walter Turnbull was there in 1722, Robert Scott in at least 1727–38, Walter Hogg and Francis Bell in 1729, James Fulton in 1736, James Pott in 1738–48 and Francis Gledstains in 1745. Robert Scott and his son James were tenant farmers there in the 18th century. There is a record of a house being built on the farm by Buccleuch estates in 1763. William Scott is recorded there in 1772, Robert Grieve in 1777–78 and Archibald Scott in 1780. James Scott was farmer there in at least the period 1785–97. Gideon and Archibald Scott were servants there in 1799. In 1801 James Nichol was a servant and William Elliot was shepherd. William Grieve was there in the 1860s. Tradition has it that the cauldron used to boil William de Soulis was preserved at the farm. It is also said that John Deans (whose gravestone is at St. Mary's) was killed near here in 1546 while defending his neighbour's goods. There was a Common Riding ride-out there in 2006. Aerial photography shows an enclosure about 200 m north-west of the farmhouse – 'At the Skelf-hill, the cauldron still The men of Liddesdale can show ...' [JL], 'The day is gane, the night is come, Sae I'll away, wi' right guid will, To see the lass that I loe best, The bonnie lass o' fair Skelfhill' [JoHa], 'When the moon, frae o'er the hill, Gilds wi' gowd the trickling rill, And clearly shines on fair Skelfhill, Meet wi' me, my dear, O' [JoHa], 'Sae we'll ower by the Skelfhill Pen As sune as the sun gangs doon, An' we'll rest neither horses nor men Till we've harried some English toon' [TK] (the name is probably from a Scandinavian form of the Old English 'skelf' meaning a shelf, referring to the shape of the hill and with the old p-Celtic 'pen' like in the nearby Penchrise; the name appears at least as early as 1569; it is 'Scelfhill' in 1727, 'Scalfhill' in 1729 and 1738 and 'Schelfhill' in 1772; it has its modern form by Blaeu's 1654 map, although it is 'Shelfhill' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Skelfhill Craig (skelf-hil-krāg) n. hill region just to the north of Skelfhill farm.

Skelfhillhope (skelf-hil-hōp) n. shepherd's cottage on the upper Skelfhill Burn, probably the same as Skelfhillshiel. William Nichol was shepherd there in the mid-19th century. It is now derelict (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and with buildings still indicated on the modern map).

Skelfhill Pen (skelf-hil-pen) n. prominent hill, height 532 m (1,749 ft), located south-west of Hawick and containing a triangulation pillar. It is often just called Skelfhill. Like other peaks in the area, it is largely made of igneous rocks, in this case trachyte, with complex intrusions of other mineral types. It has a triangulation pillar and adjacent cairn. The cairn was re-erected by the local children to celebrate the Jubilee of Queen Victoria in 1887 – ‘On my hills the moonbeams play From Craik-cross to Skelfhill-pen, By every rill, in every glen ...’ [SWS] (a local remnant of the ancient Brythonic word for hill, ‘pen’).

Skelfhillshiel (skelf-hil-sheel) n. former steading on the upper part of the Skelfhill Burn, later called Skelfhillhope (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

He was a clerk living at about 55 High Street in 1841, and at about 25 Buccleuch Street in 1851, when he was ‘Clerk to Nursery & Seedsman’. By 1861 he is listed as a seedsman at 25 High Street. He is probably the agent for British fire insurance listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and is listed as a ‘clerk’ on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Mary, from Wishaw. Their children included Mary Ann, Thomas P., John C., Isabella, George J. and Margaret. He was one of the first deacons of Hawick Free Kirk, also acting for a short time as Treasurer. He was declared bankrupt in 1864. Thomas (18th/19th C.) groom at Midshiels in 1797, when he was working for Archibald Douglas.

skinners (ski-nurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were the fourth oldest of the Town’s incorporations, being incorporated in 1694, and sometimes also called the ‘skinners and glovers’ (although it is possible they were separate bodies at one time).

skirl-nakit (ski-rul-nā-kee', -ki') adj., arch. stark naked.

Skirmish Field (skir-meesh-feeld) n. meadow by the river Tweed near Melrose, which was the site of a battle of 1526. Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch with about 600 Scotts, Elliots and supporters from Liddesdale and Annandale tried to wrest the young King James V (supposedly at the King's request) from the control of the Earl of Angus and his local allies the Kers and the Homes. Scott failed in this attempt and lost 84 men in the struggle (including John of Ashkirk), while Andrew Ker of Cessford was also killed at 'Turn Again' (possibly by an Elliott of Stobs, although this predates their ownership of the estate). This led to a feud between the Scotts and the Kers, which lasted for decades. After the battle James Elliot was hanged for treason. In 1527 a number of local lairds had remission for mustering their supporters at this battle, specifically Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk, James Hoppringle, Walter Scott in Synton, Robert Scott of Allanhaugh, Robert Scott in Howpasley, William Scott of Hassindean, John Scott of Borthaugh, Philip Scott in Headshaw, William Turnbull of Minto, Robert Turnbull in Hallrule, John Scott of the Walls, Simon Scott of Fenwick and Master Michael Scott. The battle is also known as the 'Battle of Darnick' and the 'Battle of Melrose'. The Waverley Castle Hotel, the first concrete building in Scotland, was built on the site (also known as 'Skirmish Hill'). Another nearby hill, known as 'the Charge Law' was where Buccleuch gathered his men for the attack, while 'Turn Again' is a small eminence where Scott's men rallied and Andrew Ker was killed. This event is said to have been marked by a standing stone, which still exists.

Slacer (slā-sur) n. John (18th C.) recorded in Lochburnfoot in 1748 when his daughter Ann was baptised in Cavers Parish. His surname is otherwise unknown locally, and so it may have been written in error. William (18th C.) from Southdean. In 1863 he married Betty Inglis, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included William (b.1775), baptised in Southdean (also written 'Slazier').

slack (slawk) n., poet. a pass, hollow, gap, saddle in a hill ridge – 'Red Ringan sped and the spearman led Up Goranberry slack; Aye, many a wight unmatch'd in fight, Who never more came back' [JL], 'And up the slackis of the morning cloud, Aneath the lirks of light' [JTe], a bog, morass, particularly used in liddesdale – 'The fell and the woodland, each summit and slack, Smiled on us, and said – 'We will welcome you back'' [DA] (preserved in 'Deep Slack', 'Mitchell's Slack', 'the Paddock Slack' and other place names).

Slack see Slack's Toor

Slack (slawk) n. former name for lands near Borthwickbrae and Howcleuch. In 1581 'Borthuikbray and Slak' were together assessed for tax at £10, while 'Slak et Westsyde de Howcleuch' were described in 1621 as pertinents to the lands of Borthwickbrae.

Slack (slawk) n. James (b.c.1780) from Lockerbie, he was a tailor in Newcastleton, recorded on the ballots for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. His name there was written 'Slacke' in 1799. He was also listed in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was at about 1 Langholm Street, and by 1851 he was a pauper lodging on South Liddel Street. His wife was Jenny. Rev. John Watson (d.2003) minister of Ashkirk, linked with Selkirk Lawson Memorial. He served from 1983 until 1986.

slack handfi (slawk-hawnd-fi) n. an amount of something, such as sweets, that fits into a loose palm – 'Gie iz a slack handfi o Hawick Baas'.

Slackhills (slawk-hilz) n. farm recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Kedzie was farmer there, with 2 horses working on the farm. Given that this occurs in the list between Teindside and Commonsides, it is possibly an error for Slaidhills.

Slacks (slawks) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish, north-east of the hamlet of Southdean. There are still remains of the peel tower to be seen there, as well as signs of several other buildings, enclosures and agricultural development. Immediately to the south of the tower are the grass-covered footings of another pele (perhaps earlier). The farmstead and its enclosures was probably just to the south-east of the tower. Further to the south and west are extensive rig lines, partly erased by cultivation. A field to the north-west shows an old turf boundary and south of the peel is an old turf-walled enclosure, as well as several apparently phases of boundary and enclosure banks. The lands were valued at 44 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. In 1541 Thomas and John were tenants of part valued at 22s, with Charles tenant of the remaining part valued at 11s. John Oliver was a tenant in 1544. William Oliver was recorded there in 1583. George, William and John Oliver are recorded as tenant farmers in 'Slacks' in 1669. Margaret Oliver was there in 1684. The 1694 Hearth Tax Return lists 3 hearths at 'Slaks'. But the settlement seems to have disappeared in the 18th century (also written 'Slacks' with no apostrophe; it is 'Slaikis' in 1538 and 1539, 'Slakkis' in 1541, 'Slakis' in 1544, 'the Slakkis' in 1571/2, 'Slakes' in 1583 and 'Slaxes' in 1694; it is marked 'Slack' on Blaeu's 1654 map on the south side of the river, roughly opposite where Southdean Mill lies, but is absent from 18th century maps).

Slack's Toor (slawks-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 16th century tower in Southdean Parish, located near the head of a stream off the Jed Water, to the north-east of the hamlet of Southdean. The peel tower had 3 floors, with a plan 12 m by 7.5 m (a little longer than other local towers). The gables are still standing. There are also signs of 3 buildings immediately to the north and 3 more to the south-east, as well as an earlier tower to the east, all part of an archæological survey in 1991. The area around the tower shows signs of a complex settlement, with extensive agricultural development. Just south-east of the tower are the remains of a farmstead, with some enclosures, presumably the farm of Slacks.

slae (slā) n., arch. sloe, blackthorn, wild plum, Prunus spinosa – 'Twae een she had as black as slaes, An' like twae diamonds glancin', An' gaed sae neat aye in her claes, Gart a' the lads rin dancin'' [JR], 'The slae maun be frostit ere pleasant to eat; The rose maun be pu'd frae the prickly brier' [JoHa], 'Came ye, lads, by Braxholme Braes, Whaur Teviot, gentle river, Glides among the saughs and slaes' [GWe], '...Where first I pou'd the rasp and slae, On the Bank aboon the Boosie' [DA], 'We've denned 'aneath the blooming slaes, And row'd amang the ferns' [JT], 'He'll hear nae mair the gurgling rills Nor gather up the slae' [BM1898], 'Where oft in boyhood's happy days I gathered nits and slaes' [GD], '... And echoed sternly back by Whitlaw braes – Renowned alike for bairns, and nuts, and slaes' [WNK].

slaid (slād) n., arch. a sled, formerly used to transport goods – 'They fynding ane slaide made up standing at the sd George Renwicke's, the ane tramme tharof being of ash and the other of aicke ...' [BR1686].

Slaidhill see Slaidhills

Slaidhills (slād-hilz) n. farmstead above Teindside, sometimes called the singular 'Slaidhill' and also formerly known as 'Slatehill' and 'Slatehills'. An earlier name for essentially the same area is 'Almondslands'. The lands were part of the estate of Teindside and Harwood owned by the Abernethy family from the late 14th to late 15th centuries. The lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell in 1580 when there was a raid by Elliots and Armstrongs, who stole 12 cows and oxen and 'left ane of hir servandis lyand for deid'. Francis, Earl of Bothwell had the lands confirmed to him in 1585. It is 'Almonslandis alias Slaidhills' when listed among the Baron of Hawick's properties in 1615. It is probably the 'Steadhills' listed (along with Teindside, Harwood and Carlinpool) among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1681 Thomas, son of Thomas Crawford, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to the lands of 'exterioribus et interioribus de Slaidhills' and in 1683 the next Thomas was served heir to his grandfather Thomas in the same lands. William Elliot was tenant in 'outer slaidhills' in 1694. William Waugh was tenant there in 1699, with William Oliver, William Waugh and John Waugh recorded in 1701. William Scott was recorded there in 1702 and Thomas Pott in 1704. Alexander Hutton was tenant in 1707, with Thomas Rae as shepherd. James Miller was a weaver there in 1717. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch Outer Slaidhill and Inner Slaidhill are listed separately: Outer Slaidhill consisted of 366 acres, bounded by Braxholme Moor, Hott, Inner Slaidhill, Commonsides, Woodburn and Chisholme; and Inner Slaidhill lay to the south and was not a Buccleuch property. Robert Elliot was tenant in at least 1740–43. Patrick Hume was also tenant in 1743, with Adam Hogg also living there. Thomas Miller was there in 1801. Christopher Grieve was there in about 1822. Robert Grieve was shepherd there in 1851, and weaver James Lamb also lived there. About 350 yards north-east of the farmhouse are the remains of a hill-fort on a rocky knoll. The inner area is about 205 ft by 105 ft oriented east-west, with an entrance on the north side. There are 2 other forts on Teindside Hill just to the south (the origin of the name is probably Old English 'slaed hyll', meaning 'the hill with the hollow in it', referring to the shape of the hill to the east of the farm, with the 2 apparent summits probably also explaining the sometimes plural form; the name occurs as 'Sleidhillis' in 1494, ‘Slaidhillis’ in 1581, ‘Slaidhill’ in 1585, ‘Slaidhillis’ in 1634, ‘Sledhills’, ‘Slaidhills’ in 1664, ‘Sledhill’s’ in 1693, ‘Slatehills’ in 1701, ‘Sclethills’ in 1702, ‘Slatehills’ in 1740, ‘Sclatehills’ in 1743 and 1801 and ‘Slatehills’ in the 1851 census; it is ‘Sliddhills’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Slatchills’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Slaidhills Moss (slād-hilz-mos) n. marshy region to the north of Slaidhills farmstead, in the headwaters of Vales Burn. It is printed as ‘Slatchill Moss’ in William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’, when he is describing the course of the Catrail.

slaiger (slā-gur) v., arch., poet. to besmear, handle sloppily – ‘But noo awat, it is shallower far, When sae aft it’s slaigered oot o’ a jar’ [WL], to waddle in mud, to walk wearily – ‘In slow retreat, wi’ slorpin’ feet, I platch an’ slaiger hame’ [WaD].

slain (slān) n., arch. a wooded ravine, rugged slope (noted by J. Jamieson).

slains (slānz) n., arch. indemnity, particularly in the phrase ‘letters of slains’, being a document issued by the family of a murdered person stating that reparation had been made – ‘In witnes quhairoff we haue subscryuit thir present lettaris of slains, as efter followis, at Hawik ...’ [SB1581] (from the Early Irish ‘slán’).

slaipie (slā-pee) adj., arch. deceitful – ‘Ha! luck, I see, an’ ken the reason why, Thou rows thy fiber i’ thy slaipie cheek’ [JoHa], n. a mean-spirited or toadying person – ‘Slaipie, slapie. A mean fellow; a plate-licker, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also ‘slaipy’).

slaip-mowd (slāp-mowd) adj., poet. smooth-talking – ‘Na, no sae ner, I hae nae mind to kiss ye, Aul’ slaip-mou’d luck! I mean but to address ye’ [JoHa].

slater (slā’-ur) n. a wood louse, pill bug, Oniscus (also sklater; note, this term is obscure outside Scotland; the origin is probably because of often being found under slates).

Slater's Directory (slā'-urz-dI-rek-tu-ree) n. directory of people and businesses, more formally known as Slater's Royal National Commercial Directory. It was published in 1852, 1860, 1878, 1882 and 1893, and was essentially a continuation of Pigot's earlier directories. The volumes containing Roxburghshire are valuable as lists of businesses in Hawick, as well as Denholm, Newcastleton and some other villages. The publisher, I. Slater, was based in Manchester. Note that the information was not always up to date, and typically appears to have been current a year or so before.

slink veal (slink-veel) n., arch. meat from a calf born prematurely – ‘...and that no ‘slink veal’ be exposed for sale out of doors’ [BR].

slip (slip) n. a quantity of yarn, consisting of 12 ‘cuts’, usually being a 2 lb ‘hank’. By the 1820s Hawick and Wilton were producing more than 1,000,000 hanks annually – ‘A slip o’ yairn’ [GW].

Slipher (slī-fur) n. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in a Rulewater sasine of 1693 as ‘indweller in Weens’. He was also ‘baillie in that part’ for Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge.

slippit (sli-pee’, -pi’) pp. slipped – ‘hei’s off work cos hei slippit on the Street an twistit his knei’, ‘...And slippit it oure the auld man’s neck, With the bitt in his gaping mou’ [JTe], ‘O! sae blythesome the hours as they slippit awa, When I birrl’t aye at the spinning o’t’ [JoHa], ‘Ae day the weans had slippit aff On mischief bent ...’ [WFC].

slippy (sli-pee) adj. slippery (note ‘slippy’ is also sometimes used in standard English, but ‘slippery’ would be almost unknown in Hawick).

slipshod (slip-shod) adj., arch. careless, specifically used to refer to someone having boots on, but without doing up the laces.

slite (slī) v., arch. to rip up, slit, undo sewing, n., arch. a ripping of a sewn article (also written ‘sleit’; the past tense is slait and the past participle slitten).

slither (sli-thur) n., arch. a slide, sliding movement (cf. sclidder and slidder).

Slitrick see Slittrick

Slitridge (sli’-rij) n. former name and spelling for Slitrig, used in the 17th and 18th centuries. ‘The water of Slitridge’ is recorded in a 1687 sasine and it is ‘Slitridge Water’ on Wood’s 1824 map.

the Slitrig (thu-sli’-reeg, -rig, -reek, -rik) n. Slitrig Water, river that rises near Windburgh and joins the Teviot at Hawick, flowing for approximately 11 miles (17.5 km). It formerly divided the town into its east and west halves, and for centuries there was only one bridge across it, the ‘Auld Brig’. It is prone to rise rapidly, and has caused some of the most infamous town floods. The river rises in several headwaters, Floss Burn and Leap Burn meeting, becoming Lang Burn and being joined by Langside Burn where the Slitrig proper starts. After that it is joined by: Hope Sike; Penchrise Burn; Gibby’s Sike; Cogsmill Burn; Barnes Burn; Pagton Burn; Horsley Burn; Acreknowe Burn; Flex Burn and the Smaile Burn – ‘... Where Slitrig dances doon the glen’ [JT], ‘... And the Slitrig aye filling wi’ rain’ [FH], ‘Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet, With nature’s charms replete, There are beauties rare Beyond compare Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet’ [TK] (the origin is uncertain, ‘rith’ being Old English for ‘stream’, with the first element perhaps related to ‘slite’, a narrow opening, or ‘slitan’ to split, or even possibly ‘slitter’; it is first mentioned as ‘Slitrith’ in Reginald of Durham’s book on St. Cuthbert, where it is suggested that the name comes from the river abounding with fish, and although the connection with any words relating to an abundance of fish seems obscure, it is possible it is ‘sliht’, meaning animals for slaughter; there are a variety of earlier spellings, e.g. ‘Slyttryk’ in 1433, ‘slittrik’ in 1493 and 1502, ‘Slytryk’ in 1532 and ‘Slitrik’ in 1547/8; it is still ‘Slidderick’ in 1795, ‘Slitrig’ in 1821 and ‘Slitrig’ in 1839; it is ‘Slittrick R.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Slittrik’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Slitrig Bank (sli’-reeg-bawngk) n. house occupied by shoemaker Peter Wilson in the late 18th century, now being 1 Slitrig Bank. It was probably built a little before 1800. It was the headquarters for the Napoleonic prisoners-of-war, and partitions in the cellar may related to this use. The house is shown in a painting of about 1813; this painting exists in a photograph, but the original is lost. The current house is 2-storeys with an attic, in a rectangular plan, built of whinstone rubble and with sandstone dressings. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Bank (sli’-reeg-bawngk) n. short street between St. Mary’s and the Slitrig. It was named after the house of the same name, which is now 1 Slitrig Bank. The rest of the street was developed in the period 1850–55. A house there (probably the same No. 1) was the headquarters for the French prisoners of war in the period 1812–14, later the residence of George Scott the builder.

Slitrig Brig (sli’-reeg-brig) n. Slitrig Bridge, the name originally given to the main bridge over the Slitrig, built in 1776–77, and later named Drumlanrig Bridge. The masons may have been John Haldane of Gala and James Wood of Hawick, both of whom were made Honorary Burgesses in 1776. The name is recorded as an address in Pigot’s 1837 directory, presumably referring to houses around Silver Street or the Tower Knowe. The same name is also sometimes used for the bridge over the Slitrig at the bottom of the Kirk Wynd, more properly called the Slitrig

Slitrig Crescent Brig

Crescent Bridge. It may be that the ‘Auld Brig’ was also once known by this name – ‘On Slitrig Brig on that summer morn ...’ [DN].

Slitrig Cauld (sli’-reeg-kawld) n. name sometimes used for the weir near Lynnwood House, which supplied the water for the main Slitrig mill lade, ‘the Back Dam’ (not to be confused with Lynnwood Cauld, which was further upriver).

Slitrig Chaipel see St. Cuthbert’s Chaipel

Slitrig Cottage (sli’-reeg-ko’-ee) n. name sometimes used for No. 1 The Village. The house probably dates from the late 18th century and is 2 storeys plus attic. It is shown on Wood’s 1824 plan of Hawick in a drawing by M. Thirat in 1813, showing no windows to the right of the principal elevation. It is a grade C listed building. Note that the name was also used in the 1871 census for the house later called ‘Slitrig Villa’, where Backdamgate meets Slitrig Crescent.

Slitrig Cottages (sli’-reeg-ko’-ee-jeez) n. former name for the block of houses on the east side of Liddesdale Road south of Stonefield, also called Stonefield Cottages. These houses had the mill lade running in front of them, with a footbridge to reach the houses.

Slitrig Crescent (sli’-reeg-kre-sin’) n. crescent shaped, one-sided street along the south bank of the Slitrig, still occasionally known by its former name ‘the Crescent’. It was developed around 1799–1805 and was one of the first ‘suburbs’ of the town, the land having previously been known as Duntersdales. The original buildings were a row of 2-storey terraces, only a few of which retain their original details. In 1831 the houses here were the first in Hawick to have gas installed. The street was once very dirty on the river side, until retaining walls were built at the end of the 19th century, and the land tidied up as a small park. The street also contains St. Cuthbert’s Church, and for a long time had the Whisky House Mill, later premises of James Melrose & Sons engineers. Nos. 3, 4, 5, 17, 18 and 19 are grade C listed – ‘... The other dam, up Slitrig Crescent Where ee fed the ducks wi breid’ [AY].

Slitrig Crescent Brig (sli’-reeg-kre-sin’-brig) n. stone bridge over the Slitrig, connecting the Kirk Wynd with Slitrig Crescent. There was no bridge there in the early 19th century, but the ‘wire bridge’ was nearby, and there was also an adjacent ford. An iron bridge was constructed in the early 19th century, but was destroyed in the 1846 flood, with part of it being lodged against the Auld Brig by the floodwaters. A replacement footbridge is recorded in the 1846 Town Treasurer's accounts as 'Wooden Bridge at Kirk Wynd Foot' and is shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map. The present structure was built in 1864, consisting of a sandstone bridge of a single arch, containing the Ordnance Survey 360 foot benchmark and is said to have been built in only 10 days. It seems to have no generally agreed name, being referred to in many other ways, including 'the Kirkwynd Brig'. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Dam (sli'-reeg-dawm) n. the main mill lade fed by the Slitrig, and the oldest one in Hawick, also known as the Back Dam. It probably pre-dated the 1537 Charter, although presumably was lengthened over the years. Originally it was relatively short, but in the mid-19th century it was extended to join what was called Lynwood Dam or Nixon's Dam. It was fed by a cauld near Lynnwood House and ran along the east side of Liddesdale Road and Slitrig Crescent, providing water power for Stonefield Mills, Whiskyhouse Mill, and Hawick Corn Mill, as well as water for Slitrig Dyeworks. During dry spells it was possible to feed the dam by allowing water from Wulliestruther Loch to flow into the Slitrig. Several footbridges across the lade gave access to businesses and houses from the main road (the 1857 Ordnance Survey map shows at least half a dozen). Some of the first baptisms of the Brethren were performed in its waters. Much of the lade was covered over with concrete slabs in the mid-1960s. An explosion in the tunnel under Lynnwood Road (near the entrance to Lynnwood House) in the mid-1960s, caused by a build-up of natural methane, led to an understanding that unused tunnels needed to be filled. The lade was almost entirely filled in in the early 1970s when new housing was constructed in the area. The course of the dam is shown clearly on Wood's 1824 map.

Slitrig Dyeworks (sli'-reeg-dI-wurks) n. dying factory on Slitrig Crescent, also known as Turnbull the Dyers.

Slitrig (sli'-rij) n. another alternative spelling for 'Slitrig'.

the Slitrig Flid (utthu-sli'-reeg-flid) n. huge flood of 1846, which particularly affected the Slitrig. It should not be confused with the Great Flid of 1767. The high flood (sometimes also called the Great Flood) of 29th July 1846 commenced in the early evening with a torrential downpour and thunder and lightning for about 3 hours. The police warned some people to leave their houses at about 11 p.m. and the town bell was rung at midnight. The Teviot rose dramatically, but the biggest effect was on the Slitrig, which was 14–15 feet above normal levels, with trees, sheep, cattle, crops and carts carried downriver. Lynnwood Cauld, Slitrig Crescent iron footbridge and several wooden bridges were swept away, and its level at Towerdykeside is marked by a brass plaque 1.5 m (5 feet) above pavement level. The Auld Brig was again blocked by debris and effectively dammed the Slitrig. Silver Street became part of the river, with the ground floors about 3-feet deep in water and river pushing down Buccleuch Road as far as the Free Kirk; water ran over the Tower Knowe and down the Mill Port (where it gouged out a hole more than 10-feet deep), it flowed down the High Street as far as the Round Close, forming streams to the Teviot down several closes. The worst damage was to the businesses on the Sandbed, where goods were carried away. The Teviot also overflowed, causing great damage over a wider area, covering the Avenue and Damside (Victoria Road) and being a continuous sheet of water all the way to Teviot Crescent, and sweeping away iron railings at the Haugh. The cellars in Teviot Crescent were completely filled with water and several of the mills alongside the Teviot suffered damage. Further downriver the haughs were all flooded and part of the road at Burnfoot was washed away. The Town was in panic as people escaped flooded buildings and ran around trying to save property and belongings. A dramatic rescue of a small child from a house in Damside is one noted example, a baker named Connachie was rescued from his home under the Post Office, a window had to be broken at the Tower Hotel in order to free the horses in the stables and 2 horses belonging to William Watson were rescued from the Under Haugh. Fortunately there were no fatalities in Hawick. The flood subsided quickly, leaving huge amounts of debris, with the 'Market Place' being a sandbank, covered with large trees and 2 wooden bridges. There was similar damage in Teviotdale, Rulewater (where the river was said to be 10–12 feet higher than normal, a house was carried off at Bedrule and Hobsburn bridge was lost), the Slitrig valley (with whole fields and plantations being swept clean near Stobs), the Allan (where dykes and crops were carried away), Liddesdale (where some cottages were washed away) and elsewhere. It was said that the body of a man was seen floating above Ancrum Bridge and a man was drowned returning from Langholm Common Riding, which coincided with the day of flooding of the Esk.

Slitrig Gairdens (sli'-reeg-gār-dinz) n. gairdens along the west side of Slitrig Crescent, between the old Exchange Buildings and the bridge.

Slitrig Hall (sli'-reeg-hal, -haw) n. meeting hall on Old Manse Lane, formerly the fire station, built in 1857. The address is 2, 4 and 6 Old Manse Lane. It was used as the fire station into the early 20th century, but then converted to be a meeting hall, which was used by the Brethren Fellowship. The building is 2-storeys, with a roundel window above the (now blocked) arched engine entrance.

Slitrigheid (sli'-reeg-heed) n. name sometimes applied to the area at the head of the Slitrig Water. In the last few years of the 18th century William Elliot of Harwood leased a limestone quarry there to William Turnbull of Burnfoot and John Ridley of Parkend.

Slitrig Hoose (sli'-reeg-hoos) n. name sometimes used for 8–9 Slitrig Crescent, home of John Laing of Hawick, Ltd.

Slitrig Ludge (sli'-reeg-luj) n. Hawick branch of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes, Slitrig Lodge 9858. Sometimes known as 'the Buffs', this was one of two local branches of a fraternal and benevolent organisation founded in the 19th century. It met until 2015 in the Trinity Bar.

Slitrig Place (sli'-reeg-plis) n. former street behind Slitrig Bank House, at an angle between Slitrig Bank and the Kirk Wynd, named in 1878 after the River Slitrig. It was demolished around 1973/4 when a road through to Slitrig Bank was constructed in its place.

the Slitrig Road (thū-sli'-reeg-rōd) n. name sometimes used to refer to Liddesdale Road and its continuation up the Slitrig valley.

Slitrig Viaduct (sli'-reeg-vI-a-dukt) n. railway bridge crossing the Slitrig just south of Hawick, demolished in 1982, and popularly referred to as the Six Arch Bridge. Lynnwood Cauld, essentially under the viaduct, directed water through a mill lade that fed Lynnwood Mill.

Slitrig Villa (sli'-reeg-vi-la) n. former name for a house at the corner of Backdamgate and Slitrig Crescent, also known as 'Slitrig Cottage'. George Hobkirk and his wife were living there in 1861 and 1871, and the new name was used in 1891 and 1901. The building still exists, although it has been altered, with the original front door has been built up.

the Slitrig Witter (thū-sli'-reeg-wi'-ur) n. full name for Hawick's second river, the Slitrig.

Slitrik (sli'-rik) n. another spelling occasionally noted for 'Slitrig'.

Slittrith (slit-rith) n. first spelling of 'Slitrig' known, occurring about 1170 in Reginald of Durham's history of St. Cuthbert. It is stated (in translation) that 'there was a certain chapel, in a place which had obtained the name Slittrith from a river full of fish' (this may be a clue to the origin of the river's name, but it is unclear exactly what was meant).

slitten (sli'-in, sli-tin) pp., arch. slit, undone, said particularly of ripped out sewing – 'Wull ee steek this slittin oxtter afore it geets ony woare?' [ECS] (also written 'slittin'; past participle form of slite, with the past tense being slait).

slitter (sli'-ur) v. to make a mess, dribble or spill food – 'ee've slittered aa doon yer clean shirt', to do anything in a messy manner, n. a sloppy mess, spill – 'look it that slitter ee've made', someone who spill things, a messy eater or drinker – 'ee're sic a slitter', a liquid or semi-liquid mess (also sluitter).

Slitterick (sli'-u-, sli-tu-rik) n. spelling used sometimes for 'Slitrig' before about the late 18th century – 'The Ettrick and the Slitterick, The Leader and the Feeder, The Fala and the Gala, The Ale and the Kale, The Yod and the Jed, The Blackater, the Whittater, The Teviot and the Tweed' [T] (note the extra syllable in the pronunciation).

Slittrick (sli'-rik) n. former spelling for 'Slitrig', seen in Rev. Robert Cunningham's early poem about Hawick and still used in Agnes Douglas' award winning poem for the Auld Brig in 1851 – 'And waits from Slitricke his tribute to receive; Within this Brugh, and noe wher els he'll have ...' [RRC], '... But these, nor Yarrow, Tweed, or Ettrick, For speed and power, can match the Slittrick' [AD] (also written 'Slitrick' and 'Slitricke'; recorded on Pont's manuscript map of the 1590s and transcribed to Blaeu's 1654 map).

Smail (smāl) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as ‘son of Thomas there’. Adam (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the Adam, son of shoemaker John and Helen Aitkin, born in 1758. His name is recorded as ‘Smeal’ in about 1810 when his wife Jean Phillips died. Their son John was baptised in 1786, with witnesses Walter Aitkin and William Philip. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (b.c.1780) joiner on Bourtree Place, his premises located behind No. 8. This is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. Probably the same man was listed as a wright on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and still listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was recorded being at ‘Eastend’ on the 1841 census, with Adam Scott as his apprentice. At one point he owned the entire property from 6 to 16 Bourtree Place and all the way back to the railway line. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’) Redford. Their children included: Margaret, who married weaver Charles Scott; and Alison (b.1806), baptised in the East Bank Kirk, who married roper William Munro. He could be the Adam born in Jedburgh in 1779. It seems likely he is the wright recorded at Kirkton on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and the joiner at ‘Dean-braebarr’ in Cavers Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot (‘Denholm braeheads’ is crossed out and hence perhaps essentially the same place). Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of William. He was granted a half husbandland and a cottage-land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His father was also granted land at the same time. They were presumably residents of the village of Lilliesleaf at that time. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘in Lylisle’ witnessed a transaction for William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf in 1580. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Margaret White and in 1724 their daughter Jean married Walter Aitchison. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of James. He was living at Alton in 1737. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell, who was living at Alton. He married Margaret Hume in Minto in 1736 and their children included: James (b.1737); Agnes (b.1738); Walter (b.1739); and Andrew (b.1741). One of the witnesses in 1737 was George (presumably a near relative). Andrew (18th C.) married Katherine ‘Frier’ in Minto Parish in 1740. William (b.1742), John (b.1744), Isobel (b.1746) and George (b.1749) were probably also his children. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included John (b.1752), Betty (b.1753), Andrew (b.1754), George (b.1756), Robert (b.1757), Margaret (b.1759) and Agnes (b.1762). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Betty Scoon in 1765. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Anne Oliver and their children included: Margaret (b.1767); Thomas (b.1770); and an unnamed child (b.1773). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Janet Purves and their children included Andrew (b.1778), Margaret (b.1781) and John (b.1784). Anne (b.1786), Mary (b.1789), Thomas (b.1790) and Thomas (again, b.1792), with no mother’s name given, were probably also his children. He was recorded being in Ancrum Parish in 1789. Andrew (18th/19th C.) servant at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish’ and he was still listed at Ormiston on the 1801 Militia ballot. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as journeyman wright at Clerklands in 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Askirk parish'. George (17th C.) resident of Minto Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was a cottar in Headshaw Mill. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Elizabeth (b.1717) was baptised in Headshaw Mill ('being weak'). George (18th C.) married Helen Hill in Minto Parish in 1744. George (b.c.1780) toll-keeper at Spittal Toll. His wife was Janet. George (b.1810/1) from Ancrum, he was a blacksmith in Denholm. He is recorded on the 1841 census and by 1861 was at around Leyden Road. His wife was Agnes, and their children included John, Margaret and George. He secondly married Janet, and had step-daughter Janet Brown, as well as children Robert W., James D. and Mary. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1741), William (b.1742) and Elizabeth (b.1748). James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded at Linthill in 1789 when his son Robert was baptised. James (19th C.) purchaser of the farm of Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish. This was sometime before 1837. He was a nurseryman and seedsman. He was probably succeeded by William. James (19th C.) farm steward at Timpendean in the mid-to-late 1800s, working for Mr. Elliot Boag. He married Margaret, daughter of William Oliver, hind at Langraw. James (1828–1905) from Jedburgh, brother of printer John. He became a banker with the National Bank in Kelso, opening the branch in Earlston. He then moved to the Commercial Bank, working in Earlston, Galashiels, then Kirkcaldy, and eventually becoming Secretary of the head office of the Commercial Bank in Edinburgh. He was strongly connected with Rulewater, meeting his wife Margaret Boa there, and being a keen angler of the Rule and Jed Waters. He wrote verse under the pen-name 'Matthew Gotterson' and under this name published the poem 'The Callant' in the Scotsman in 1889 (reprinted in 'Hawick Songs and Recitations' in 1892); this was used as the anthem for the Callants' Club, the third verse being put to music by Addie Ingles in the late 1940s, and the words were erroneously attributed to J.E.D. Murray in the 2001 Hawick Songs anthology. A version of the ballad

'Little Jock Elliot' was written under this pen-name. There was additionally a collection of poems called 'Roole Water: a Remembrance'. He also wrote broadly on angling topics and was a President of the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club. He wrote an extensive article on the Catrail in 1880, having tried to trace its course for several days accompanied by Mr. Craig-Brown and Mr. Elliot of Hollybush, as well as local farmers and shepherds. He was also a keen Volunteer, being an officer of the Border Battalion and Secretary of the Border Rifle Association. Additionally he was involved as treasurer or secretary of the agricultural societies in Selkirkshire as well as the Landward School Board. His wife died later the same year he did. John (16th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He could be the son of Thomas, who received a half husbandland in Lilliesleaf from his father in 1581/2. Also in 1581/2 there was a marriage contract between him and Janet, daughter of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; the couple gained a half husbandland in Midlem from his father Thomas and he promised his mother land in Lilliesleaf in liferent. John (17th C.) merchant in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who was listed right before him. John (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to other Smails living there. Perhaps the same wright John was listed among Covenanter fugitives in about 1684. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in 1772 for Walter Aitkin. He married Helen Aitkin and their children included: George (b.1743); James (b.1744); Margaret (b.1746); Jean (b.1758); and Adam (b.1761). The witnesses in 1743 were cooper John Aitkin (perhaps related to his wife) and shoemaker Robert Wilson, and in 1758 were James Oliver and Walter Aitkin. John (18th C.) married Agnes Graham in Wilton in 1758. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Smail and their daughter Anne was baptised in 1792. John (b.c.1780) servant to Alexander Scott, tenant in Ashkirk, according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (b.1785/6) born at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was a cadger and carrier in St. Boswells. In 1852 he is recorded running a cart between Lilliesleaf, St. Boswells and Kelso. His wife was Esther and their children included Thomas and Jane. Margaret 'Meg' (16th/17th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area, wife of Mungo

Young. In the 1628 witchcraft trial of Isobel Howison, she gave evidence that about 9 years earlier Howison came to her sick child 'and said he had gotten a blast of ill wind betuene tuo furres [furrows] and shee spake some words over him and he wes better within twentie four houres'. Martin (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is listed as 'Martine Smail'. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Adderstoneshiel according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Raperlaw Townhead in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Robert (b.1798/9) born in Ancrum, he was a farmer at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Parish. His brother John also helped run the farm. In 1851 they were farming 41 acres and employing 1 labourer. Another brother, William, also lived on the farm. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in a document of 1561/2, agreeing that Thomas Young, his brother-in-law, should occupy some lands in Lilliesleaf during his mother's life. His mother was Elizabeth ('Bessie') Riddell, presumably related in some way to the Riddells of that ilk. His sister was Margaret. Probably the same Thomas in 1563 leased for 19 years a tenement from his neighbour Thomas Gray. He was to pay 20 shillings twice a year, along with 'ane pek to the boll' of grain, and if he built a kiln there, then Gray would provide him with beams for its construction. The witnesses in 1563 were 'Berte' Riddell, James Leithead and Robert Hastie, who may also have been from Lilliesleaf. In 1564 he witnessed a marriage contract for John Johnstone, tenant in Hermiston. Probably the same Thomas in Lilliesleaf is recorded in 1581/2 when Walter Turnbull in Belses took over his debt with Richard Wilson in Howford. In 1581/2 he resigned his half husbandland in Lilliesleaf in favour of his eldest son John and arranged a marriage contract between John and Janet, daughter of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; he gave the couple his half husbandland in Midlem and his wife Helen Clerk received quarter of a steading of William Middlemas. He may be the Thomas in Lilliesleaf whose son Adam was granted land in the village in 1595/6. Thomas (17th C.) married Janet Paterson in Ashkirk in 1642. Thomas (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to merchant John, who was also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) tenant farmer in Borthwickbrae in the Horse Tax Rolls for 1787-88. Thomas (18th/19th C.)

farmer at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who farmed at Raperlaw. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Junr.' at Longnewton on the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. Thomas (b.1808/9) agricultural labourer from Ancrum Parish. In 1851 he was living at Hallrule Cottages and in 1861 was at Fairnington in Roxburgh Parish. He married Mary, daughter of Walter Hogg from Wilton. Their children included Margaret, Walter, Janet, Euphemia, John, Thomas and George. Thomas (19th/20th C.) driver of the Wolfelee estate carts (mainly coal from Hawick) under 3 separate Lairds. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Baptie and a Buckham. He retired to Hawick. William (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His son Alexander was also granted land at the same time. William (17th C.) tenant in Harwood in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull. Their son William was born in 1687. He could be the William born to Martin and Helen 'Furgrie' in Hawick in 1635. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Wight and their son Philip was baptised in 1688. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Leyden and their children included: William (b.1744); Adam (b.1754); and Helen (b.1756). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785. In 1786 he was 'of Catch' at Raperlaw. His surname was given as 'Smeal' in 1788, when he was recorded as owner of Catshawhill. He was still at Raperlaw in 1797. He is probably the William 'Small' recorded as possessor of the land of 'Kaims-muir park' in 1780. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although the information came from earlier) he was listed as owner of Catshawhill and part of Raperlaw. He may have been father of James of Catshawhill recorded later. Probably the same William at Raperlaw subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Probably the same William of Catshawhill served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His name was recorded as William 'Sonmail of Catshawill' in the 1819 list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire. William (18th/19th C.) from Lilliesleaf Parish, he married Janet (or 'Jenny') Stuart. Their children included: Margaret (b.1801); and Elizabeth (b.1803). name given, may also have been his children. William (d.1838) from Lilliesleaf. In 1790 he married Janet Thomson and their children included: Janet (or 'Jessy', b.1803), who married Andrew Buckham; Alexander (b.1805); and Robert (b.1810), who probably married Ellen Ramage. Helen (b.1797) and William (b.1799), with no mother's name given, may also have been his children. In about 1820 the family emigrated to eastern Ontario and there are descendants in the United States. He may have been father of William who in about 1823 married Mary Hunter in Edwardsburgh Township, Ontario; if so, he was said to have been a companion of a young Walter Scott at Smailholm. He died in Elgin Ontario and is buried in Montreal. William (c.1795–1879) prominent citizen in the area of Edwardsburgh, Ontario, along with his brother Robert and nephew Andrew. He was said to be from the Jedburgh area, but was probably son of William and Janet Thomson, who came from Lilliesleaf, emigrating in 1820. In about 1823 he married Mary Hunter (from Ayrshire) and their children included Robert, Andrew, Thomas, John, Alex and Ann. He served as 'Reeve' of Edwardsburgh and county councillor and was an organiser of the Reform movement, which laid the foundations for the Liberal Party of Canada. His farm was called Glen Smail (formerly written 'Smaill', 'Smaile', 'Small', 'Smeal', 'Smeall', 'Smell' and 'Smyle').

Smailcleugh (smāl-klooch) n. former house about 3 miles south of Jedburgh in Southdean Parish. It was near the foot of the Smail Cleuch, on the opposite side of the Jed Water from Ferniehirst Mill. The farm was in the 17th century the residence of the famed Ringan Oliver, who was said to have lived in a tower there. There was a blacksmith's there in the 19th century (also written 'Smailcleuch').

Smaile see Smail

Smaile Burn (smāl-burn??) n. stream now running underground from the Nipknowes to Hag-gishaa, with the original course being over the Vertish, and on to the Slitrig. The name was in use from at least as early as the 15th century. The springs that feed it provided an early town water supply (1797–1865), conveyed in lead pipes to a reservoir at the top of the Loan (the origin is probably from Old English for 'small'; the name occurs in 1433 as 'Smaleburne' and is 'Smale Burn' in 1448).

Smailholm (smā-lum) n. village north-west of Kelso, with Smailholm Tower, the 18th century Smailholm House and a church dating back to the 13th century, last rebuilt in the 19th. Robert Ker of Altonburn had a charter of the lands in 1404 and Robert Pringle had a charter probably not many years later. The lands were held by Lord

Cranston in 1502. In 1544 it was raided by men of Tynedale and Redesdale, taking 600 cattle, 100 horses and 100 prisoners. Also the name of the surrounding Parish of northern Roxburghshire, bounded by Kelso and Makerstoun, as well as Berwickshire. According to one story, St. Cuthbert was born in the nearby village of Wrangham, which has entirely disappeared. It is said that it was the first parish to divide its common land, starting a trend that would sweep across Border parishes, including Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, etc. 'Book of the Bazaar, On Smailholm Men, Smailholm Parish and Smailholm Church' (1896) was written by William Lamb Sime (the origin is probably Old English 'smael ham', meaning 'the narrow village'; the name first appears in 1160).

Smailholm (smā-lum) n. Henry (d.bef. 1364) admitted as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1354, with his name written 'Smalham'. He served until his death.

Smailholm Toor (smā-lum-toor, -tow-ur) n. 5-storey 15th century peel tower on an isolated crag near Smailholm village, about 6 miles west of Kelso, renovated in the 1980s and now housing a museum. It may have originally been built by the Kerrs for the eldest son of Ferniehirst. The existing tower was probably built by the Pringles around 1400. It was the subject of many raids in the 16th century, and was sold to the Scotts of Harden in 1645. It is sometimes also called 'Sandyknowe' from the farm and hillock on which it stands. Sir Walter Scott regarded it as very inspirational in his youth – 'These crags, that mountain tower, which charmed my fancy's waking hour . . . Methought grim features, seemed with scars, Glared through the window's rusty bars' [SWS], 'At Smailholm's Tower, Scott's youthful hours Were nursed in song and story' [RF].

smairg (smārg) adj., v. to bedaub, besmear – '...for thaye smairg inequitie apon me, an' in wræth thaye hæte me' [HSR], '...an a smairggin rowk feiles ilka thing' [ECS], to smear sheep with a tarry mixture to protect the fleece against vermin.

smairt (smār) adj., v. smart (also the more common smert).

Small (smaw, smawl) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Belses Mill. His son William was recorded on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (17th C.) listed along with Andrew Robson in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Together they paid tax on £390 for the lands of the Laird of Haining (probably John Pringle). William (18th

C.) leased the lands of Boghall (presumably in Wilton) from Scott of Harden in 1749 for 11 years.

William (18th/19th C.) mason recorded in Barnhills in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Belses Mill recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was still at Belses Mill in 1801 and recorded as son of Adam (it is possible this is the same as Smail).

small-pox (smaw-, smal-poks) n. contagious viral disease, which was a major source of death across Europe until well into the 19th century. It was not always fatal (Mary, Queen of Scots and Elizabeth I of England both contracted it), but it often left victims scarred or blind. Hawick was hit by a particularly fatal outbreak in 1821. Inoculation was introduced in the early 19th century, but taken up in a patchy way, and largely among the wealthier classes; its historical effectiveness is still a matter of debate, but ultimately it led to eradication of the disease.

Smallshiel Sike (smaw-, smal-sheel-sik) n. small stream on the east side of the Whitrope Burn, opposite Flasket Sike.

smally (sma-lee) adj., arch. small, meagre, under-sized – ‘Smaallie (adj.) = delicately framed (applied especially to a child of frail physique)’ [ECS], ‘A smally bairn’ [GW] (also written ‘smallie’; diminutive of smaa).

smarroch (sma-roch) n., poet. a confused collection, crowd – ‘The dirdums o’ the wheezlebugs Chunter the lee-lang day And for a smarroch o’ scowderdowps My greasily hert is wae’ [DH].

Smasha Hill (smaw-sha-hil) n. hill to the east of Blawearie at the end of the ‘Hill Road to Robertson’, reaching a height of 335 m. It contains a Bronze Age burial cairn, about 500 m yards east-north-east of the summit, measuring about 10 m in diameter and about 0.4 m high. There are also several others in the vicinity. On the north side of the hill there is a ‘droveway sign-wall’, a section of drystone dyke to indicate the direction for droving, or perhaps as a warning to drovers.

smashit (smaw-shee, -shi) pp., poet. smashed – ‘An’ whamseaevir sall fa’ on this stane sall be smasht ...’ [HSR].

smat (smat) pp., poet. smote – ‘Behald he smat the rok, that the waters rashet owt ...’ [HSR], ‘An’ smat a’ the first-born in Egypt ...’ [HSR].

smatter (sma'-ur) n., pl., arch. small pieces, smithereens – ‘Hei broke it inti smatters’ [GW], v., arch. to break into small pieces – ‘The pane he smattered wi’ a pelt’ [HSR], ‘Thou didist smatter the heæds o’ leviathan intil flenders ...’ [HSR].

Smeaton (smee'-in) n. John (b.1827/8) born in Dunfermline, he was Governor of Hawick Combination Poorhouse during the 1861 census. He presented some items from Borneo to the Museum in 1863. His wife was Matron and Harriet Smeaton (probably his sister) also worked there.

smeddum (sme-dum) n., poet. spirit, mettle, common sense, resourcefulness, strength – ‘The smeddum o’ your barmie pills, Gars misers loose their poses, But wi’ your carts ye send twa deils, Like to rive aff folks noses’ [JR], ‘... And pits sic smeddum in my step’ [WL] (from Old English).

smeeg (smeeeg) n., arch. a kiss (noted by J. Jamieson).

smert (smer) adj. smart, clever – ‘deh try ti be smert’, ‘Let cleverality, mockreef folk that are unco smert ...’ [ECS], well-dressed, stylish, attractive – ‘ee’re lookin awfi smert the day’, ‘Hei’s a smert keind o fallih, thon’ [ECS]’, ‘Weel, aa met a lorry-driver, As smert as ee could sei ...’ [DH], ‘Hei’s a big smert felli mind’ [JCo], ‘she’s a smert lookin lassie, no like her mother’, brisk, quick – ‘An so, efter a smert hurl, oo clattert inti Hawick High Street duist on the chaap o six ...’ [ECS], v. to smart – ‘ma backside’s still smertin’, ‘... And lashed oor smertin’ cheeks’ [WL] (cf. the less common smairt).

Smellie (sme-lee) n. James (19th C.) teacher at Ashkirk in the 1860s. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish.

Smert (smer) n. (Smart) Alexander (b.1815/6) born in Stow, he was a baker in Hawick. He is listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 39 High Street and in 1861 at 2 Allars Crescent. His wife was Agnes and their children included Alexander William, Agnes, Jane and George. Rev. William (1775/6–1837) from Blackfriars Kirk in Jedburgh, he was ‘probationer’ at Castleton Burgher Kirk following the resignation of Fletcher in 1801. He was said to have done much to inspire confidence in the waning congregation and helped to secure a site for the new church in Newcastleton village. However, he remained only a short time, because in 1802 he was called to Paisley. He died suddenly while returning from a meeting of the Presbytery there. A volume of his sermons was published by his son Rev. William of Linlithgow.

smarter (smer-tur) adj. smarter – ‘... Like panoramic views were cast, still better an’ still smarter’ [VW].

smiddie see smiddy

Smiddielands (smi-dee-lawndz) n. former name for lands in Bedrule Parish, adjacent to Newton. They were included in the lands inherited by William Kerr of Newton in 1637.

smiddies (smi-deez) n. blacksmith's workshops. These used to be common and crucial parts of everyday life in Hawick and surrounding area. Local ones included Peter Clark's at the Sandbed, Rob Young's of the Back Raw, and 3 in the Fore Raw (including James Bowie and Tom Ferguson), as well as others in the Croon Close, Brougham Place (Murray in the basement of No. 7), Melgund Place (No. 5) and Albion Place. In the mid-19th century there must have been around a dozen in Hawick. Those of the surrounding countryside included Ashkirk (Kirkhouses), Bonchester Bridge, Borthaugh Wudfit, Borthwickbrae Burnfit, Cauldmill, Chisholme, Denholm (two), Flex, Forkins (or Unthank), Hassendean, Headshaw, Heap, Hobkirk (Blacklee), Kirkhouses, Kirkton, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Newmill, (Bedrule) Newton, Park (Copshaw), Stirches, Stobs, Teviothead (Bowanhill) and Todshawhaugh. The business in the Crown Close (Telfer's) survived until the late 1970s, and Hook's on Union Street even more recently. As well as shoeing horses and dealing with other metalwork jobs, through much of the 18th and 19th centuries they were also responsible for performing medical procedures like tooth extractions and bleedings for various ailments. Adam Scott is recorded as smith in Hawick in 1640 and 'Hew Elliot' in 1642.

smiddy (smi-dee) n. a smithy, blacksmith's workshop – 'He took the horses next to Boa's smiddy to get their shoes taken off' [RM], 'And in winter we wad gather round the bleezin' smiddy hearth ...' [JT], a frame-smith's or mechanical workshop in a mill (also spelled 'smiddie').

the Smiddy (thu-smi-dee) n. former blacksmith's in Ashkirk, now a pub and restaurant.

smiddy-end (smi-dee-end) n., arch. gable wall of a blacksmith's – 'A dandert aboot amang the auld byres an smiddie-ends' [ECS], 'Oh, the Auld Smiddy end, where in youth's happy day A merry band o' bairnies wad gather at their play' [JT].

smirl (smi-rul) n., arch. a trick, prank – 'I'll play him a smirl for that yet', Teviotd. Nearly syn. with Pliskie' [JoJ].

smirn (smirn) n., arch. a smug, officious person.

smirr (smir) n., poet. drizzle, light rain – 'A smirr o' rain was fa'in' That buid to spoil the day' [WL], 'There cam' a blast wi' smirr o' snaw As Tam cam' amblin' hame' [WFC], v., arch. to drizzle (the origin is unknown).

smitch (smich) n., poet. Thou art a' fair, my loefe, ther is nae smitch in thee' [HSR].

Smith (smith) n. Adam (17th C.) listed as a smith on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water'. He paid tax on 2 hearths. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1696. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Hallrule who was listed among the poor in Hobkirk Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir Alan (1917–2013) born at South Shields, he was R.A.F. pilot who fought alongside Douglas Bader and was awarded the D.F.C. He was later an industrialist, being a strong Tory supporter and becoming a friend of Margaret Thatcher. He ran Dawson International from 1970. He was Chief Guest at the 1986 Common Riding. With the demise of Pringle's following soon afterwards, he was among the executives blamed for the downfall of Hawick's knitwear industry. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for John Hunter, who also lived at Appletreehall. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1766, and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: James (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); John (b.1772); Susanna and Christy (b.1773); John (again, b.1775); Margaret (b.1778); Peggy (b.1780); David (b.1784); and Alexander (b.1786). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Reid and in 1772 were James Dryden and Robert Hume. Alexander (b.c.1770s) wright at Nether Burnmouth according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Alexander (b.1817/8) son of Hawick blacksmith James. He was blacksmith at Appletreehall and later also vet there. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1841. He lived at Appletreehall with his sister Jane. Late in life he married Margaret, from Stranraer. Alexander 'Alex' (d.1960s) originally from Wick, he came to Hawick to work as a watchmaker in George Reid's High Street shop. In 1947 he started his own jeweller's and watchmaker's shop on Walter's Wynd. This business was continued by his son Hamish. He also had a son Alasdair. Andrew (17th/18th C.) mason in Bedrule Parish. His children Isobel (d.1690) and William (d.1693) are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Andrew (b.c.1770s) weaver at

Roughhugh according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. Sir Andrew, M.D. 'Smithie fri Soothfield' (1797–1872) born at Heronhaa near Southfield (also referred to as Winnington Rig), son of a shepherd, he was an Army surgeon who became Director General of the Army Medical Department and is sometimes described as the father of South African zoology. He was baptised in Kirkton Parish, his father being Thomas P., his mother Grizzel Tait, and the location given as Winnington. He was the eldest of 5 children, having 1 brother and 3 sisters. He attended school at Stobs, where he was said to be flogged regularly for playing truant. In 1809 the family moved to Hassendean and he attended Minto and then Lilliesleaf schools. He had a 3 year apprenticeship with Dr. Walter Graham in Hawick (sometimes given incorrectly as a 'Mr. Gordon in Roxburghshire') before training at Edinburgh University and joining the army in 1815, shortly after Waterloo. He trained at various stations around Britain, and later when quartered in Edinburgh, continued his studies at the University, where he received his M.D. in 1819. He went to the Cape in 1820 as a medical assistant to the 72nd Regiment, and was there for 16 years, also being associated with the 49th and 98th Regiments and the Cape Mounted Rifle Corps. He was district surgeon at Albany and in 1822 opened the first free dispensary for native patients in South Africa. He learned much about the indigenous peoples and was sent on several missions to visit tribes beyond the frontier, resulting in a description of the customs of the Xhosa tribes in 1824. Spending much of his leisure time studying natural history, he established a reputation as a zoologist and ethnographer. He reported on the Bushmen and the Amazooloo (specifically the San, Khoi-Khoi and other peoples). In addition his expertise in zoology was sought out by Charles Darwin. He led a 6 month expedition to Port Natal, the report from which ultimately led to the founding of the colony at Natal. He was also the first Superintendent of the South African Museum from 1825. In 1834 he led probably the first scientific expedition into the interior, where he also negotiated treaties, as well as exploring the Oori, Mariqua and Limpopo rivers, returning after 18 months. About 5,000 specimens, 500 drawings and 1800 artefacts were brought back. In 1836 he met a young Charles Darwin when the Beagle stopped at the Cape, showing Darwin rock formations and giving him some rock samples. He returned to Britain in 1837, being promoted to the rank of surgeon and based at Fort Pitt, Chatham. A grant was appropriated to publish his 5 volume 'Illustrations of the Zoology of South Africa' (1838–47), which he wrote with no personal remuneration. He identified and named many animals, particularly reptiles and birds. He described more species of South African birds than anyone before or since and Gekko smithii (a gecko), Lepidophyma smithii (a lizard) and Pangshura smithii (a freshwater turtle) are all named after him. He was also first to formally describe the largest living shark, the whale shark, as well as to properly distinguish the genus of the great white shark and to name it 'Carcharodon' (so that the species was sometimes called 'Carcharodon smithii' as a result). Ill health prevented him publishing the expedition journal, but much of the information appeared elsewhere (and his diaries from 1834–36 were finally published in 1939–40). He continued to be promoted, becoming Principal Medical Officer at Chatham, then Deputy Inspector of Hospitals in London, and by 1853 he was Director General of the Army and Ordnance Medical Department. During the Crimean War he was personally attacked for being responsible for the state of medical care for British troops, with Florence Nightingale calling him the 'smoke-dried Andrew Smith'. However, his conduct was vindicated after inquiries by several parliamentary committees. He retired in 1858, when he was made a K.C.B. He received numerous other honorary titles and awards, including being Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, the Zoological Society and of the Royal Society. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1838 on a visit back to Hawick. He also received honorary degrees from Edinburgh and Trinity College, Dublin. He retired from his post in 1858 and was then knighted. In 1844 he married his housekeeper, Ellen Henderson (c.1802–64), and converted to her Roman Catholic faith. After the death of his wife and then his sister, he lost interest in African exploration and scientific writing and went into decline. He died at his home at 16 Alexander Square, London and is buried at Kensal Green Cemetery. There are at least 2 known portraits of him. A plaque (on the right-hand side of the road past Southfield) marks the site of the cottage in which he was born (actually on the opposite side of the road). Annie Henderson nee Cowan (b.1861) daughter of Elliot Cowan and Jeanie Hunter. She was well known locally as a singer, for example, singing 'Up Wi' the Banner' at the 1889 Colour Bussing. She was mother of William, James and Elliot and married to Cornet John, with whom she moved to the Manchester area in the 1890s. She gave a talk to the Archæological Society in 1935, providing valuable information about 19th century Hawick language and place names. It was said that she insisted on her family speaking Hawick dialect at home in Manchester and their house was a haven for other Teries in Lancashire. Her son Elliot referred to her as 'a leal and competent guardian of the vernacular', and explicitly highlighted her influence in developing his fascination with the dialect of Hawick. Archibald 'Airchie' (b.1782) son of Thomas and Mary Scott 'The Flooer o Rankleburn'. He was listed as son to Thomas at Hartshaugh Mill on the Militia ballot in 1801. It is said that as a young man in charge of carts in Berwick, he was press-ganged into joining the crew of a man-of-war. He returned to Rulewater a few years later and married Mary Turnbull (whose sister Ellen has married his brother Peter). One of their sons was found dead at the bottom of a cliff at Edgerston, while a daughter married Robert Taylor. He may be the Archibald whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parich, included Thomas (b.1802), Mary (b.1804), Walter (b.1807), Betty (b.1812), Archibald (b.1814), Peter (b.1817), Isabel (b.1820) and Andrew (b.1825). Along with the rest of his family he emigrated to America. Archibald (19th C.) married Margaret Armstrong in Hobkirk Parish in 1837. Charles (19th C.) grocer on the High Street. He is listed as grocer, spirit dealer and victual dealer on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was Cornet in 1840. He appears to have left the town shortly afterwards. Mysteriously he appears to have fathered an unnamed child who died in 1840. Rev. David (b.1892) educated in Dunfermline and at Edinburgh University. He was licensed to preach by Dunfermline Presbytery and was assistant minister in Dumfries. He was ordained as minister of Saughtree Kirk in 1921. However, he was translated to Inverkeithing the following year, and later went to Ceres. He married Anna Clarke. David Nicholson 'Kel' (20th C.) driving instructor in Hawick. His nickname came from the fact that he grew up in Kelso. He was well known as Clerk to the Course at the Common riding Races for many years, with many stories told of his droll humour heard over the loud-speaker system at the Moor. Elliot Cowan (1891–1917) native of Hawick, whose father, grandfather and great-grandfather had been Cornet. His father was John and his mother Annie Cowan. He was a student at Manchester Municipal High School and worked as an accountant. Well read in all forms of literature, he had a particular interest in Scottish writing and the vernacular of Hawick. In 1914 he wrote what is probably the best example of Hawick dialect prose 'Mang Howes an' Knowes: a Day's Dander Throwe Border Waeter-Gates'. This when he was only 23 years old, and after having spent most of his life in the Manchester area, where his family moved. It was published in 1925, with illustrations by his brother, James Dryden. He also contributed the dialect dictionary and discussion 'Braid Haaick' to the Transactions, as well as publishing 'To Dee and Don: recollection and rumination' (reprinted from the Hawick Express) in 1912. He was also a lover of music, from high opera to old Scottish songs. Never being in robust health, it was said that he was disappointed not to be able to enlist like his 2 brothers. He lived at 61 Carlton Street, Old Trafford, Manchester. He died at the age of only 25 and is buried in the Wellogate. George (18th C.) tenant in Hawick. He married Helen Graham and their children included: Janet (b.1722); and George (b.1725). the witnesses in 1725 were weavers Robert Wight and John Stevenson. George, A.R.C.O. (19th/20th C.) organist at St. Cuthbert's in the early 20th century. He gave organ lessons to Adie Ingles. Gilbert (18th C.) house servant at Stirches in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Stewart, who lived at Stirches. Hamish D. (1946/7–) jeweller at Bourtree Place, well known for incorporating local elements into his designs. He was educated at Burnfoot and Hawick High. He worked with Lyle & Scott and was then a fencer on motorways, then worked in his father Alex's jewellery shop at 45 High Street, which in 1970 became his own business at 17 High Street. The premises moved to 47 High Street then in 1991 to Eastbank House on Bourtree Place (with members of the Linden being enlisted to move the heavy safe). He was Hawick Business Forum Chairman in the 1980s. He has designed badges and chains of office for several of the local clubs. He also makes badges for Jedburgh, Lauder and Duns festival principals. The 'Teribus Clock' has been a feature of his shop since 1996 (constructed by him, Tosh Scott and other local tradesmen). He and Tosh Scott also provided a new clock for the Town Hall balcony. In 2012 he created a

Hawick version of the olympic torch. He married Sylvia and had children Janie and Graham. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. James (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, in the Hassendean part. He witnessed a baptism in Hassendean for William Lamb in 1687. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1679 and their children included: Walter (b.1679); Janet (b.1682); and Margaret (b.1688). He is probably the resident in Westerhouses recorded in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. It seems likely that he and his wife are related to the Walter Armstrong who married Isobel Smith in Roberton in 1686. James (1680/1–1743) blacksmith at Longtown. He had at least 3 children who died young: Archibald (b.1722/3); Mary (b.1725/6); and Agnes (b.1725/6). He was buried in old Wilton Cemetery. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Ashybank in 1709 when he married Helen Turner in Cavers Parish. James (17th/18th C.) married Agnes ‘M.’ in Wilton Parish in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) married Elspeth Aitken in Wilton Parish in 1708. Isobel (b.1710), with no mother’s name given, may have been his child. James (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turner in Cavers Parish in 1709. James (17th/18th C.) married Beatrix Buckholm in Bedrule Parish in 1718. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at ‘Heap burnfoot’ in 1725. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Aitken and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Margaret (b.1719); Agnes (b.1723); and James (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were James and Robert Easton. It is possible he was the same as the blacksmith at Longtown. He is surely related to John, who was blacksmith at Stirches and recorded at Heapburn at about the same time. James (18th C.) married Margaret Buckholm in 1746, the marriage recorded in both Bedrule and Kirkton Parishes. James (18th C.) married Margaret Brown in Kirkton Parish in 1749. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong in 1761. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Lees and their children included James (b.1766). James (18th C.) married Jean Davidson in 1775. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: John (b.1777); Margaret (b.1779); and John (again, b.1781). James (18th C.) married Betty Elliot in Cavers Parish in 1793. James (b.1790/1) gardener in Castleton Parish, originally from Canonbie. He was living at Castleton in 1841 and in Newcastleton in 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included James, Betty, George (a teacher), John and Joseph. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Apple-treehall. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the James who married Jean Forsyth in Wilton Parish in 1816 and had children: Alexander (b.1817); Janet (b.1819); and Jane (b.1821). James (b.c.1780) carpet-weaver in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Probably the same weaver in Hawick is recorded when an unnamed child of his died in 1809. He could be the James who had a child John (b.1800) with Margaret Oliver, baptised in Hawick, and married Margaret Oliver in Kirkton in 1804. The couple additionally had Robert (b.1806) and John (b.1809) baptised in East Bank Kirk. James (1785–1855) born in Oxnam, son of John. He was blacksmith in Hawick at 5 Melgund Place, and before that at Cauldmill. He may have been a grandson of John, blacksmith at Heap. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as blacksmith and mill-wright on Melgund Place along with William (presumably his son). In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a blacksmith on Melgund Place. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Kennedy in Wilton in 1804 and she died in 1872, aged 86. Their children included: John (b.1805), baptised in Wilton Parish; William (b.1807), baptised in Melrose Parish; James (1809–37); Janet (1811–70); Isabel (1813–29); Robert (b.1815); Helen (b.1817); Margaret, teacher; Charles Kennedy (b.1822); Alexander (b.1824), who was blacksmith at Appletreehall; Joan (1824/5–82), who married shoemaker William Burnet; Thomas Young (b.1827), watchmaker, who emigrated to Australia; Gilbert (b.1830); and Jessie. Most of their children were born in Cavers Parish, with Thomas recorded at Cauldmill. He is buried in old Wilton Kirkyard. A story is told of how a stranger sought shelter from the rain in Cauldmill Smiddy in the early 1820s, and after he quoted some lines of poetry the visitor confessed that he was the author, William Knox, whereupon he was invited in for a meal and conversation. James (b.1805/6) stocking-maker, who was one of the 5 men tried for mobbing and assault during the 1837 election in Hawick. He was the only one found not guilty; this was largely because of a technicality, with the indictment saying he chased one of the men into the house of Jean Turnbull (nee Riddell), while it was actually the house of her son George. James (19th C.) one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left along with the minister during the Disruption of 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. He was probably the first Session Clerk of the new church, serving until 1855. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Glendinning and their children included Mary (b.1822). James 'Jamie' (b.1805/6) born in Cockpen, Midlothian, he was a grocer on the Howegate and then Burgh Officer and Halberdier in Hawick from about 1860. He was the Burgh Officer for a while along with 'Tam-a-Linkin', then with Michael Wintrup. He was noted as a wit. He also looked after the town's poor house for many years. It is said that he was well liked in the town, and that even the beggars respected him. He married Margaret Shiel, and their children included: Agnes (b.1831), who married house painter James Smith (probably no relation); William (b.1833); James (b.1835); and Catherine (b.1838). He lived at 4 Loan according to the 1861 census. James (19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk, married to Janet Miller. Their children included Margaret (b.1828) and Alexander (b.1830). James (19th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1830. James (b.c.1795) farmer at Braidhaugh in Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Helen and their children included: Helen (b.1837). James (b.1810/1) farmer at Templehall and proprietor of Harwood Sawmill. He was at Harwood Mill in 1841 and listed there in 1861 as farmer of 1000 acres, employing 3 labourers. He was still recorded as farmer at Harwood Mill in 1868. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Henderson in 1836 and their children included: Thomas (b.1837); Mina (b.1839); Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1844); William (b.1846); James (b.1848); Peter; and Oliver (b.1853). The Jane Smith (aged about 70) living with him in 1841 was probably his mother. He was probably the 'Jamie Smith of Harwood Mill' listed among local 'Hard-riding Dick's' in H.H. Dixon's 'Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)' (1865); he was said to be a keen fox-hunter. James (19th C.) married Elizabeth Henderson in Hobkirk Parish in 1836. James (b.1817/8) from Canonbie, he was gamekeeper at Larriston House in 1851 and 1861. James (19th C.) married Isobel Beattie in Wilton Parish in 1844. James (19th C.) married Elizabeth Scott in Hawick Parish in 1845. Their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, were Jane (b.1846) and Mary (b.1849). James (19th C.) married Agnes Oliver in Hawick Parish in 1847. James (b.1815/6) born in Hawick Parish, he was a shoemaker in Wilton. In 1851 he was lodging with the Rivile family on Wilton Path, along with his wife Jane. James (1819/20) born in Hawick, he was a woollen spinner in Wilton. In 1861 he was living on Roadhead with his wife Caroline (from Jedburgh) and their children James H. and Mary. James (b.1823/4) painter, son of whip and thong maker John. He was a grandson of James 'Deacon' Dryden, father of John and grandfather of Elliot Cowan. He was Cornet in 1846, and Acting Father for his son John in 1881. He annually painted a line at Towerdykeside to mark the level of the flood in the year of his Cornetship; this was replaced by a plaque in 1902. There is a painting (by Andrew Kennedy) of him and his Right- and Left-Hand men crossing the Teviot near Laidlaw's Cauld. This is probably the earliest image of the Common Riding. There is also a photograph of him with the Cornets of 1845 and 1897; this makes him one of the first Cornets of whom we have a photographic image. In 1848 he married Agnes, probably daughter of Howegate grocer and Burgh Officer James Smith. Their children were: Margaret Shiell (b.c.1850), who married Allan Watt; Elizabeth (b.c.1851); Hannah; John (b.1856); Jemima Catherine (b.1863); Ann; Agnes Ellior (b.1869); Agnes Ellior (again, b.1870); and Helen (b.1873). The family lived at 8 Howegate, then 3 Green Wynd, and then 4 Loan, where they kept a 'house of refuge'. After his wife's death he lived at 1 Silver Street and lastly 19 Howegate. He was still alive in 1901. James (19th C.) married Jane Hogg in Wilton Parish in 1852. James (b.1831/2) from Canonbie, he was groom and gardener, living at Cavers Manse Cottage in 1861. His wife was Mary (from Hutton, Dumfriesshire) and their children included Walter, Peter T. and Mary. James Turnbull (d.1905) eldest son of Thomas and Mary Smith. In 1900 he married Margaret Murray (b.1875), who was from Galashiels. Their children were Peggie, Mary and Thomas James (born after his father's death). He died following a bad fall from his bicycle at 'Jenny Walker's Brae'. His wife was later keeper of the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. James Dryden 'Jamie' (c.1881–1966) son of John and Annie Cowan, and older brother of Elliot Cowan. He was named after his great-great-grandfather 'Deacon Dryden', who was Cornet in 1772. He moved to Manchester with the rest of his family when he was young. He became a member of the Royal Institute of British Architects and was employed by a brewer's in Manchester for many years. After retiring he moved back to Hawick, where he and his wife settled at 11 Backdamgate. He was a keen student of Hawick's dialect and became known as a local historian, who was often consulted. He was also a rugby enthusiast, acting as correspondent for Manchester papers, for both Rugby Union and Rugby League. He provided the illustrations for 'Mang Howes an Knowes'. He accompanied his mother to Gallipoli in 1926, as part of an organised family memorial trip, and wrote about it for the Hawick Express; they were able to walk on the battlefield where his brother William had fallen, and he made a sketch while they were there. He was a member of the Archæological Society Committee and contributed an article to the Transactions in 1958. He acted as Bard for Lodge 111, and was also a member of the Callants' Club. He also was donor of the J.D. Smith bequest, which benefited several local causes. He was described as a 'small and dapper figure'. He married his cousin Jane Hunter Scott. He was buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Jean (18th C.) kitchen maid at Wilton Lodge in 1791, when she was working for Lord Napier. Jenny nee Ferguson (1908–74) born in Stirling, she trained as a teacher in Dundee, being qualified as a primary teacher with a specialisation in music. She first taught in Yetholm, then moved to Manchester, after marrying local baker Robert T. The couple moved to Hawick in the late 1930s, where her husband established his bakery business on Bridge Street. She taught at Drumlanrig 1964–71, and while there wrote the music for 'Hurrah! for the Cornet', to words written by her Primary 5 class. She also wrote a song 'The Jewel in the Crown' for the 1970 Burnfoot song competition. In 1971 she remarried, becoming Mrs. Dorward. She died at the Cottage Hospital and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (16th C.) doctor recorded in 1581/2 being in Riddell and also in Lilliesleaf. He witnessed the marriage contract between Helen, daughter of Alexander Gledstains and Gavin Gledstains (who sold Stobs), as well as an instrument of sasine between Alexander Gledstains (Burgess of Selkirk) and Gavin Gledstains (who sold Stobs to Gavin Elliott). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son James was baptised in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1715. His children were probably: James (b.1714); Margaret (b.1715); John

(b.1717) and William (b.1719). John (18th C.) blacksmith in Stirches. In 1736 he is recorded living at 'Heap foord' in 1744 and at 'Heapburn' in 1747. In the records for the division of Wilton Common in the 1760s he is referred to as 'John Smith, smith in Heip, on the lands of Stirkshaws'. In 1735 he married Margaret Dryden (1712/3–51) in Wilton Parish. Their children included: James (b.1736), who died aged 7; Margaret (b.1739); John (b.1739), who died young; Alexander (b.1741); Isobel (b.1744); and Elspeth (b.1747). The witnesses in 1736 were John Lockie and John Scott, in 1744 were James Dryden (probably related to his wife) and Walter Scott and in 1747 were James Dryden (again) and Thomas Laidlaw. He seems likely to have been closely related to James, who was also at Heapburn about the same time. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His wife was 'Cecil Spinnie' (or 'Spindie'). Their children included John (b.1751), George (b.1752), James (b.1754) and Agnes (b.1756). Helen (b.1758), an unnamed son (b.1760), Margaret (b.1762) and Agnes (b.1767) may also be his children. John of Spittal (18th C.) made an Honorary Burgess in 1777. John (18th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Betty was baptised in 1790. It is possible that the same John was a ploughman at Bewlie Hill according to the 1801 Militia ballot. John (18th C.) resident at Scaw Mill in Wilton Parish, when he paid the cart tax in 1791. It is possible he was the same as the Stirches blacksmith. John (d.1794) blacksmith at Heap. He must have been son of the previous blacksmith John (or else he was the same man and quite old when he died). He may have been father or grandfather of James, the blacksmith at Cauldmill and at Melgund Place, Hawick. He died at Cavers and is buried in old Wilton Cemetery. Isabel, who died in 1807, aged 27, was buried along with him, and so probably a daughter. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Betty Chain (or 'Chine' or 'Shien') in Hawick in 1757 and had children: Christian (b.1758); James (b.1760); Walter (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); William (b.1766, probably 'Wull the Cutler'); and John (b.1768). He was listed as a weaver in the 1764 baptism, when the witnesses were clothiers Gavin and Thomas Turnbull, and also in 1766 when the whole congregation were witnesses. The witnesses in 1768 were fellow weavers Francis Cairns and Robert Chisholme. The death of his son Robert is recorded in 1798, his daughter Christian in 1800 and his wife Betty Chain in 1799. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Cavers in at least the period 1793–97, when he was working for George Douglas. He was recorded in Cavers in 1792. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Isobel (b.1790), Christian (b.1792) and John (b.1794). John (18th/19th C.) innkeeper in Newcastleton. He is probably the resident of the village recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1817 his inn was used as the meeting place for creditors of a bankrupt merchant in Newcastleton. He was listed as proprietor of a public house in Newcastleton on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was probably the John, inkeeper in Newcastleton, who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He may be the carter of that name recorded as male head of household in Newcastleton in 1835. John (b.1773/4) from England, he was a shoemaker on the Mid Raw in 1841. Jane and John, who lived with him were probably his children. John (b.c.1780) carter at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was distinct from the man of the same name who was a ploughman at Bewlie Hill in 1801. John (d.1811) weaver in Hawick, son of Walter. John (b.1794/5) whip and thong maker on the Howegate. He lived at 8 Howegate, being there in 1841 and 1851, and was at 3 Brougham Place by 1861. He married Elizabeth Dryden (b.c.1801). Their children included: Christian (b.1820/1); James (b.1823/4), who was Cornet in 1846; Helen (b.1826/7); and Walter (b.1835), who was a shoemaker. He could be the John who was born to John in Cavers Parish in 1794, but he was also related to William, 'Wull the Cutler'. His sister Jenny is said to have gone to Flodden in about 1820 and returned with green twigs to adorn the Cornet's followers in the procession to the Games. John (19th C.) gamekeeper for the Earl of Minto. A story is told in the 1881 Border Counties' Magazine of how he kept a pet fox on a chain; it would deliberately scatter barley within reach so that it could catch a hen when it got close enough. John (b.1810/1) born in Edinburgh, he was a baker in Denholm. His shop was probably on Main Street. He married Margaret Eckford and their children included Helen, William, John and Catherine J. John (1827–69) of Darnick (near Melrose). Last major head of the family architects and builders business, John & Thomas Smith. They were responsible for many of the finest Victorian buildings around Melrose, as well as the North Brig in Hawick, the Wallace Statue at Dryburgh and the Hermitage Water Bridge. He was commissioned to make a survey of the Auld Brig of Hawick before it was demolished in 1851. He was also an early photographer, who took photographs of Queen Victoria's visit in 1867. He added an east wing to Darnick Tower. His sister Mary married John Elliot of Binks. The Smith Memorial Hall was built in Darnick in his memory. John (19th C.) one of the first professional cricketers in town, playing for the Wilton team in the late 1850s. John (1856–1904) son of Cornet James and sister of Margaret, the matriarch of the Watt family. He was Cornet in 1881, with his own father as Acting Father. He also served as Acting Father in 1886 (2 years after his own father served in this role). He married Annie Cowan, and their sons were: James Dryden; William, who died at Gallipoli; and Elliot Cowan, who wrote 'Mang Howes an Knowes'. A plumber by trade, he moved with his family to Old Trafford, Manchester in the 1890s. There he became the first Chairman of the Hawick Exiles' Club. Dying at a young age, he was buried in Hawick, being the first Cornet's coffin to be draped with the Burgh Standard. Rev. John (1859–1928) born at Haddington, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1888. He was minister at Denholm Free Kirk from 1892 until his death. In 1908 he helped compile the notes of Rev. Duncan Stewart into the book 'The Covenanters of Teviotdale and Neighbouring Districts'. He married Agnes Hume. His daughter was a geography teacher at the High School in the 1950s and his grandson was a local vet. Joseph (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1761. Joseph (19th/20th C.) gas manager in Hawick. His daughter Annie was the 2nd wife of Robert Riddle Thompson. Rev. Malcolm (1860–91) from the Gillespie area in Glasgow, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1886 and B.D. in 1889. He was ordained as the 1st minister of Wilton South Kirk in 1890. However, about a year and a half later he drowned while swimming on holiday at Spital. Some of his sermons and a memorial were collected and published in Hawick in 1891. Margaret nee Murray (b.1875) daughter of Robert, carpenter at Blacklee, Hobkirk Parish. She married James, eldest son of Thomas Smith, tenant farmer at Tythehouse. They had 3 children, but her husband died as the result of an accident. She later was keeper of the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. Rev. Martin trained as a Pastor at Charlotte Chapel in Edinburgh, he became Pastor of Hawick Baptist Church in about 2018. Oliver (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Mary Smith and their children included William (b.1832). Thomas (b.1835), with no mother's name given, may also have been his child. Oliver (19th C.) son of Thomas and Jane Oliver. He was a farm steward at Langraw in 1861. He married Helen Waters in Hobkirk in 1833 and their children included: Jane Oliver (b.1837); Alexander (b.1839); James (b.1841); John (b.1843); Oliver (b.1845); Henry (b.1848); Janet (b.1850); and Helen (b.1853). The last 3 children were baptised in Southdean Parish. Patrick (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as 'Patricius Smyth'. The other men were Scotts, Turnbells, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably also local. Patrick (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Patrick (b.1757) and Andrew (b.1760). Peter (18th/19th C.) brother of Thomas (tenant of Hartshaugh Mill), he was factor to Elliot of Wolfelee. He was resident in Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1788 and 1790 when he had children baptised. He was also tenant of Kirknowe in 1797, when he owned 2 horses. In 1807 he bought the lands of Hobkirk Kirkstile (part of Kirknowe) and farmed there. He married and had at least 7 children: Peter (b.1788), who married Helen Scott; Isobel (b.1789); Betty (b.1790); Jane; Margaret (b.1797); Thomas (b.1798); and Walter (possibly b.1802), who emigrated to America. James (b.1793) was probably also his child. Peter (b.1780) eldest son of Thomas and Mary Scott, 'the Flooer o Rankleburn'. He is probably the Peter recorded at Bankend on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He farmed at Harwood Mill. He was probably the Peter at 'Harrot' who subscribed to 6 copies of William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Ellen Turnbull, whose sister Mary married his brother Archibald. They had a large family, including: Thomas (b.1801); Walter (b.1803); Peter (b.1804); Archibald (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808), who married J. Blake; Mary; Andrew (b.1812); William (b.1814); Mark (b.1815), who died at Lanton; Turnbull (1816-79), farm steward, who died at Hawick; Nelly (b.1818), who married W. Elliot; and Isobel (1821-1898), who died in Hawick. He is said to have been very strict in all things relating to religion. Peter (b.1788) eldest son of Peter, he was factor for James Elliot of Wolfelee in the early 1800s and lived at Kirknowe. He was farmer at Kirknowe in 1841 and in 1851 was farming 170 acres and employing 4 labourers. In 1823 he married Helen Scott, one of the Scotts of Woodhouse and related to the Turnbells who farmed at Spittal. Their children were: Isobel or Isabella (1824-49), who married Robert, son of Robert Stewart, farmer at Hawthornside; Peter (b.1827), who married Isobel Oliver; Betty (b.1830); John (b.1832); and Agnes Scott (b.1835). Peter (1804-86) son of Peter, who was the eldest son of Thomas. He became farmer at Harwood Mill, where he was born. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Parkhead in Robertson Parish, in 1851 was at Hunthill and in 1861 he was farm steward at Greenriver. His cousin Mary married Robert Purdom of Hawick. He himself married Elizabeth 'Betty' Ronaldson Dunlop in Coldstream. Their children were: Mary (b.c.1839); Peter (b.1841), who died at Jarrow-on-Tyne; Helen Turnbull ('Ellen', b.1843), who married A. Telfer; Williamina (or Mina, b.1847), who married Sandbed baker John Young (and was mother-in-law of J.E.D. Murray); and Elizabeth (or Betsy, b.1852), who emigrated to Queensland. There is a story told of him encountering a 'spunkie' (i.e. 'will-o'-the-wisp') when riding past Mackside Demmings. He was active until a few years before his death, which occurred at Swanshiel. Peter (b.1825/6) toll-bar keeper at Deanbrae in 1851. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter, Dorothy. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably a tenant of Douglas of Cavers. He may be related to the two Thomases who were also listed. Robert (17th C.) Hawick Councillor who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as a resident of Whitfield in 1751 and 1769. He was also farmer in Newton, in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Pott, resident of Borthaugh, in 1751. He was one of the founders of the secession church, which met in Hawick in 1763. He may be the Robert who is recorded as formerly being in possession of an enclosure that was part of Silverbuthall, according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married Alison Irvine (or 'Irwin') in 1748, the marriage being proclaimed in Wilton and Ancrum Parishes. Their children included: John (b.1749); Thomas (b.1751); Walter (b.1753); James (b.1755); Janet (b.1758); Nelly

(b.1762); Robert (b.1764); and Thomas (again, b.1769). The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. The witnesses in 1769 were James Scott (probably the farmer at Boonraw, who was also an Anti-Burgher) and Walter Irvine (who was surely related to his wife), the baptism carried out by Mr. Arnot, who had previously been connected with the Green Kirk in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1780 it is recorded that he was tenant of ‘House and yard’, with rent of 10s. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Silverbuthall in 1791. He married Isobel Ormiston and their children included: Esther (b.1791); and Robert (b.1794). Robert (18th/19th C.) slater in Hawick. His employee David Reid was recorded on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Swin’ in Kirkton Parish, possibly the same place as ‘Swinsteid’. He is recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 as owner of 2 horses. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Stonedge in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Miller in Hobkirk in 1833. Robert (b.1816/7) originally from Maxton, he married Helen Redpath in Hobkirk in 1840. He was living at Weens Cottages with his wife Helen (from Hobkirk) in 1851 and 1861. His mother Mary was living with them in 1861. Robert (b.1837/8) drystane dyker in the Hawick area around the 1860s. In the 1861 census he was in Wilton Parish, married to Mary and with daughter Janet. Robert Tait (d.1958) baker and rugby player. He played prop and was capped 7 times for Scotland in 1929 and 1930. He married Jenny Ferguson, who wrote the music for ‘Hurrah! For the Cornet’. Spending some time in Manchester, in the late 1930s he returned to Hawick and took over the bakery business of W. & R. Johnstone on Bridge Street. Ronald ‘Ron’ High School Geography teacher who was Assistant Headteacher 1984–2002. He has been heavily involved in Hawick R.F.C., co-editing ‘The Green Machine: 125 years of Hawick rugby’ (1998) and also ‘Glimpses of Green’ (2002). He has been a Scottish Borders Councillor and from 2011 until 2013 served as Hawick’s Honorary Provost. He was Rotary Club President from 2020. Thomas (16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branhholme. They may have been related to Robert, who was also named. Thomas (17th

C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Gray and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were James Murray and William Smith. Thomas (17th/18th C.) born at Wells in Rulewater. He was described in 1717 as ‘now keeper of ane puppie play’ (perhaps a dog entertainment of some kind) when he was fined for assault in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) footman at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. Thomas (1757–1827) brother of Peter, it is unclear where the previous generation came from. He was tenant at Hartshaugh Mill when his children were baptised in 1785 and 1788. He was listed as miller on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was owner of 2 horses. His son Archibald was listed on the Militia ballot in 1801. He is still listed as miller of Hartshaugh Mill in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Mary Scott, the ‘Flower of Rankleburn’. Their children were: Peter (b.1780), who married Ellen Turnbull of Harwood Mill; Patrick (b.1781); Robert; Archibald (b.1782), who later emigrated to America; Thomas (b.1784); Andrew (b.1785); Isobel (b.1787); Walter (b.1788), who may have died young; Betty (b.1790); Margaret (b.1791), who married William Crozier; Mary (b.1793), who married Robert Purdom of Hawick in 1817; and Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1795), who married John Dalgleish. He secondly married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Oliver in Southdean Parish in 1807. Their children were: Oliver (b.1809), who married Helen Waters and emigrated to America; James (b.1810), who married Elizabeth Henderson; Mina, who married W. Telfer, farmer at Roundabouts; Elizabeth, who died in 1864, and may have been the same as Betty; William, who emigrated to New Zealand; and another Oliver, who may have been a twin of William and died young. He is probably the ‘T. Smith’ whose mother is recorded dying in Hobkirk in 1815. Thomas. (18th/19th C.) from England, in 1789 he married Margaret Paterson in Robertson Parish. Their son Thomas (b.1790) was baptised in Robertson. Thomas. (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included James (b.1795). Thomas P. (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Heronhaa near Southfield. In 1797 he married ‘Grizzle’ (or Grizel) Tait, the marriage being recorded in both Kirkton and Wilton Parishes. They had 5 children: Sir Andrew (1797–1872), army surgeon and famous zoologist; Joan (b.1800); Barbara (b.1802); James (b.1804); and Agnes Anne (b.1807). All their children were baptised in Kirkton Parish. He may be the Thomas whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1810. Rev. Thomas (1828–1901) born at Powfoot in Dumfriesshire, son of John and Marion Murray. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by Annan Presbytery. He was ordained as minister of Ewes Kirk 1853 and remained there until his death. In 1856 he married Margaret, daughter of William Sutherland Fraser, jeweller in Edinburgh. Their children were: Agnes (1857–1913), who married Alexander Simson from Melrose; and Marion (b.1860), who married James Calder, doctor in Jamaica. Thomas (b.1827/8) born in Cavers Parish, son of blacksmith James. He was a watchmaker on the Howegate (near the top of the east side), listed in the 1851 census and in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Isabella. Thomas 'Tom' (b.1837) son of James and Elizabeth Henderson, and grandson of miller Thomas. He is recorded as a keen follower of the Jedforest Hunt in the latter part of the 19th century. He was tenant farmer at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish. He married a distant cousin, Mary Smith. Their children were: James Turnbull; Elizabeth; Thomas, who emigrated to Canada; and Peter Smith, who farmed at Coldtown. Thomas Aird (b.1854) son of William and Isabell Aird, who was sister of Thomas Aird. He was brought up at Bridgehaugh near Selkirk. He became tenant farmer at Kirkton and Bedrule, remaining at Bedrule 1898–1921. He was a keen hunter and said to be a heavy man, requiring specially bred horses. He had at least 3 children, Isabel, Jessie and William (who all followed the Jedforest Hunt when young). Thomas 'Tom' (19th C.) tenant farmer at Tythehouse. He was a keen supporter of the Jedforest Hunt. His eldest son was James. Thomas (b.c.1870) son of John James, who was born in Malta, and Isabella Morrison. Although born in County Durham, he grew up in Hawick, where his father was a hand-loom weaver and later publican. He also worked as a spirit merchant in Hawick. In 1901 he married Margaret, daughter of James Blaikie. Their son John James was born in Wilton in 1902. About 1907 he emigrated to Rainy River, Ontario, his wife coming later. Thomas 'Tom' (19th/20th C.) local bowler, who also laid out at least 30 greens, including the one for Wilton Bolwing Club. Turnbull (1816–79) son of Peter and grandson of the first known Thomas of Rulewater. He was a farm steward, who died in Hawick. Walter (d.bef. 1811) weaver in Hawick. He was on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He could be the son of John and Betty 'Shien' born in Hawick Parish in 1762. He may also be the Walter who married Helen Gibson in Hawick in 1789 and had an unnamed child baptised in Hawick. His son John, also a weaver, died in 1811. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He may be the Walter whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included William (b.1798), Francis (b.1800), Francis (again, b.1801), Walter (b.1802), John (b.1814) and Thomas (b.1815). Walter (b.1787/8) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Scaw Mill near the Dean. He may have been son of John, who was previously at Scaw Mill. He was recorded as miller there in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was farmer there on the 1841 census, married to Janet and with daughter Mary. He was still alive in 1861. Thomas, who was living at Scaw Mill Stable in 1841 may have been his son. Walter (b.1792/3) thong maker of the High Street, according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1841 he was at Miller's Close. He married Janet Oliver in 1814 and their children included Helen and Isabella. His mother may have been Helen. He was a widower by 1851. Walter (d.1840) weaver in Hawick. Walter (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Taylor in 1836 and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1837. Walter (b.c.1805) agricultural labourer in Hobkirk Parish. He was at Hallrule in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Janet (b.1829/30), John (b.1831/2), Andrew (b.1836/7) and Isabella (b.1839/40). Walter (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Margaret 'Phorson' and their son Robert was baptised in 1852. William (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Branhholme. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving John Geddes in Branhholme. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion 'Hellin' and their children included: George (b.1656); and Agnes (b.1660). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for Thomas in 1690. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1721, 1723, 1726 and 1729. He may be the William who got married in Kirkton in 1712 (with no wife's name given). His children may have included Margaret (b.1713), Marion (b.1715), George (b.1721), John (b.1723), Helen (b.1726), Euphan (b.1729), Bessie (b.1731) and Jane (b.1735). Perhaps the same

William was recorded at Denholm in 1715. William 'Wull the Cutler' (1766–c.1833) son of John and Betty 'Chine' and was related to the Hawick family that produced 2 Cornets in the 19th century. He was a wright by trade, making the first 'spinning jennies' in Hawick. He was known as a very snappy dresser in the late 18th century, and was particularly vain about his hair. He apparently took the first taste of the 'Auld Brig gin' (a keg of water) in the joke perpetrated on the exciseman by Wat Inglis. He took up fishing late in life. He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory as 'cutler & basket maker' on the High Street. He was nephew of Catherine Cheyne, who was long-time domestic servant of the Gledstains of Hilliesland; from her he gained possession of the 'Gledstane Bible', which he passed on to merchant Andrew Irvine. There is a portrait of him by Adam Brown – 'Auld Cash and Tufty blithely trip, Lean Yeddie Gibson's creel is full, Jamie Tamson and John the Dip Gang hand in hand wi' Cutler Wull' [HI]. William (b.c.1780) wright in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. It is unclear how he was related to other Smiths. William (b.c.1785) born in Oxnam Parish, son of John. He was probably brother of James, blacksmith in Hawick. He was a blacksmith in Denholm, listed on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is also listed in 1835 as a joint proprietor in Denholm with William Barrie, hosier. He probably lived on Westside. His wife was Elizabeth Anandale, and their children included Catherine and Margaret. He may be the William, at Hayknowe, whose model plough (for which he won a premium at Kelso in 1848) was presented to the Museum in 1857. William (19th C.) perhaps born on the English side of the Border, he married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw in Hobkirk Parish in 1827. Their children were: James; Joan; William; Helen (b.1829), who married William Stewart in Hawthornside; Thomas (b.1831); Anne (b.1833); and Mary (b.1836). His sister Mary married William Redpath, who worked at Weens. William (19th C.) blacksmith of Hawick, probably son of James. He is listed in the 1835 electoral roll as joint tenant along with James. In Pigot's 1837 directory 'Jas. & Wm. Smith' are listed as blacksmiths on Melgund Place. He does not appear on the censuses of 1841–61, but is listed in Rutherford's 1866 directory as blacksmith on Melgund Place. William (b.1803/4) from Stow, he was a mason living at Common-side Bankhead in 1841 and 'Bowanhillbridge' in 1851. His wife was Isabel and their children included Bridget, William, Alexander, Adam and Helen. William (b.1822/3) from England, he was listed as 'Railway Gaffer' in Newcastleton in 1861. He was on South Hermitage Street, lodging with carter Francis Scott. He is probably the Bill Smith who was in charge of bringing the first locomotive engine by road from Carlisle; the engine bogged down in mud and toppled a number of times, falling on him and killing him. William (b.1831/2) from Selkirk, son of John and Margaret. In 1861 he was a ploughman living at Easter Fodderle Cottages in Hobkirk Parish. He was already a widower and had children Isabella (b.1856/7) and John (b.1857/8). William (19th C.) farmer at Learmouth, Cornhill. In the 1860s he was a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. Rev. William Grierson (d.1870) born in Edinburgh, eldest son of James. He was educated at Glasgow University and ordained minister of Fintry in 1840. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Gilbert John, Earl of Minto and became minister there in 1861. He married Hannah Grierson of Bridgenorth, who died in 1891. They had a son Alfred William, who died young. He wrote a description of Fintry Parish. Rev. William (b.1840) born in Oldhamstocks, son of David and Ann Thompson. He graduated M.A. from the University of Edinburgh in 1868. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk 1870–77. He was ordained as minister of Dunsyre in 1877. William Walter (1852–1942) born in Hawick, son of gamekeeper Thomas and Ellen Robson. He worked as gardener in various English country houses and emigrated to New Zealand in about 1875. He continued to work as a gardener. He held the view that many native species would be driven extinct by the effects of colonisation and so began to collect native plants, insects, Maori artefacts and other items. He wrote extensive notes, some of which were published, and several species were named after him. In 1903 he was appointed to the commission charged with putting the Scenery Conservation Act into effect. He was later appointed curator of Pukekura Park, New Plymouth. It appears he was not easy to work with, holding down positions typically for only a few years at a time. However, he remained a sought-out authority on new Zealand natural history until his death, at New Plymouth, in his 90th year. He married Mary Foreman and had at least 7 children. Rev. William (1855–91) born in St. Fergus, Peterhead, son of a blacksmith. He studied at the Free Church College in Aberdeen and was ordained by the English Presbyterian Church in Scarborough. He then assisted at several churches, included Robertson. He came to Wolfelee Free Kirk to help while Rev. William Russell was ill in 1890. He was then inducted in 1891 (although some of the congregation objected that he was not himself in good enough health to take on the full task). He collapsed in the middle of his second sermon as minister and died about a month later, leaving a widow and young child. He married Agnes Shewan Kerr and their only child was John Kerr (b.1890). William (1893/4–1915) son of John and Annie Cowan, brother of Elliot and James. He became a calico designer in Manchester, but enlisted with the Territorials in Hawick, becoming a Corporal in the 1/4th K.O.S.B. He was killed at Gallipoli in the disastrous offensive of 12th July 1915. His name is recorded on the Helles Memorial (formerly written ‘Smycht’ and other variants).

Smith an Telford’s (smith-an-tel-furdz) n. hosiery factory on Lothian Street. It consists of several parts of different height, built over a period of time in the early 20th century. One section has a mansard roof, a ‘modern movement’ roof, and there are windows on the curved corner where Lothian Street meets Allars Bank. Recently the building was used by Douglas, and then by an antique dealers.

the Smith Cairn (thu-smith-kārn) n. roadside cairn marking the birthplace of Sir Andrew Smith, on the right-hand side of the road beyond the Caa Knowe.

Smithfieldhaugh (smith-feeld-hawch) n. farmstead in Kirkton Parish, just south of Stobs Woodfoot, on the left-hand side of the road. It was formerly part of the farm of Turn and was already part of the estate of Eliott of Stobs in 1643. It was recorded as just ‘Smithsfield’ in 1708, when James Henderson was there. In 1788 it was recorded as ‘the remainder of Teourn or Turn’ and valued at £15 10s. Walter Turnbull was a smith there in at least 1799–1801. It was home of the Mables in the 19th century. There were 2 separate families living here until about the early 1900s. James Scott was there in 1906 (it is ‘Smithfield-haugh’ in 1788).

smoker (smō-kur) n. an informal social gathering, usually for men; it is less formal (and with less dinner) than a ‘dinner’.

the Smoker (thu-smō-kur) n. specific social gathering with entertainment, often referring to the congratulatory smoker held for the Cornet-elect on Picking night. This is recorded as happening after the Tuesday night Picking of the Cornet in 1888, but may have happened from much earlier times. The Callants’ Club have organised this event since 1904. There are speeches and songs and the Cornet is presented with his badge. The term is also used to refer to other smokers.

smokit (smō-kee’, -ki’) pp. smoked – ‘...twae-threi bleithe-leike fallihs i glarry moleskins smokeet their claeypipes, tho their chafts war ditherin an bevverin leike as they war pairlt’ [ECS].

S.M.T. (es-em-tee) n. Scottish Motor Traction Company, which took over the main Hawick coach routes from Border Motor Transport about 1930, and ran bus service for about 50 years. They acquired the Borders-based company Brooke and Amos in 1926 and later Adam Graham and the Border Motor Transport Co. As well as the Edinburgh to Carlisle service, they ran bus lines around Hawick, as well as transporting mill workers. The firm became Scottish Omnibuses in 1949 and the local fleet was known as Eastern Scottish. The colours of the bus fleet were a distinctive green, later becoming green and cream. After de-regulation of bus services, the name of the operator (and the quality of service) changed several times, e.g. to Lowland Scottish and First. The offices were in Oliver Place and the main bus depot was in Dovecote Street, which closed in the 1980s.

smudge (smuj) v., arch. to laugh in a suppressed way, laugh to oneself, smirk – ‘Then with new keenness wad they caper, He sliely smudg’d to see them vaper ...’ [CPM], ‘...still Buffin an smudgin inti eis sel’ [ECS], n., arch. a suppressed laugh – ‘Loth. smuggle-the-geg (smu-gul-thu-geg) n., arch. a game formerly played by boys in which an agreed upon article (the ‘geg’) is concealed by one team, the other team trying to find the boy who has the article.

smugglin (smu-glin, -gu-lin) n. smuggling, the trade in goods without paying duties. This was rampant in the Hawick area in the 17th and 18th centuries and on into the 19th. Before the Union, the difference in duties meant that salt, skins and malt were smuggled into England, and wool smuggled into Scotland. In the 18th and early 19th centuries there was a brisk local business in smuggling whisky south of the Border, because of the large difference in duties. This was particularly after the increase on whisky duty in 1799. The favourite source of goods locally was from Capt. Daniel Fleury, who would land his boat at Boulmer in Northumberland, from where ‘Boomer-men’ would secretly carry goods over the Border. There was also a vigorous trade in black market salt, again encouraged by increased taxation. Smugglers were pursued by the excise officers. In the 18th century there was a collector, 2 supervisors and 18 officers in Teviotdale, and by the 19th century there were 28 mounted Revenue Officers employed in Roxburghshire. In 1836 the minister of Hobkirk records that ‘smuggling and illicit distilling are not now practised’.

smuik (smūk, smik) n., arch. smoke, fumes, v., arch. to smoke, emit fumes – ‘The mill chimlih smuiks leike a killogie’ [ECS], to fumigate, suffocate with smoke – ‘Thay’ve been ti smuik the hoose efter the fivver (fever)’ [ECS], particularly to smoke out insects – ‘To Smook, Smuik, To suffocate by means of sulphur; a term applied to the barbarous mode of destroying bees in order to gain their honey; or, as it is expressed, to ‘put them down’, Teviotd.’ [JoJ], ‘Whan div ee smuik the beis?’ [ECS] (also smook).

snab (snawb) n., arch. a rugged rise, rocky slope, steep ascent (Coldwell Snab is near Hermitage Castle).

Snaberlee (snā-bur-lee) n. area just to the east of where the Hermitage Water joins the Liddel, marked as ‘Snaberlee Rig’ on modern Ordnance Survey maps. There was formerly a small thatched cottage at Snaberlee Brae, inhabited by a lone woman until the late 19th century. In the early 1750s this was the site of open air sermons as part of the Secession movement in this parish.

The farm was acquired by William Manderson from the Laird of Whithaugh and in 1811 valued at £23 8s (the origin of the name is probably from the Old Norse personal name 'Snæbjorn'; it occurs as 'Snabirly' on Blaeu's 1662 map and is 'Snaberly' on Stobie's 1770 map; it is 'Sunaberlie' in 1665, 'Snaberlie' in 1666 and 'Snaberly' in 1811).

Snaberlee Sike (snā-bur-lee-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Snaberlee Rig and joining the Liddel just to the south of Leahaugh Cottage.

[WL] (also sometimes written 'Snout').

the Snoot Kirk (thu-snoo'-kirk) n. small former church in the Borthwick valley, built shortly after the Disruption of 1843 as Roberton Free Church, also known as Roberton United Presbyterian Kirk. The dissenting congregation first held meetings in the joiner's yard at Deanburnhaugh, before being given the ground at Parkhillhaugh by John Chisholme, with the church being built very quickly. It was reached from the main road via a footbridge. By 1852 the declining rural population meant that the church was reduced to a preaching station; it picked up again later, but always had a struggling existence. It switched from Selkirk Presbytery to Jedburgh Presbytery in 1880. The building was renovated in 1908/9, when a vestry was also built. It continued to be used as a church until 1927, and the congregation formally merged with Roberton Kirk in 1930. The land reverted to the Chisholme estate and was gifted to the Scottish Youth Hostel Association by Mr. Bruce of Chisholme in 1935. It was then used by the Youth Hostel Association, particularly as a pony trekking centre. The building succumbed to dry rot in the mid-1990s. A roll of the ministers is: John Dow 1845–52; James Logan around 1860; Thomas W. Paterson 1889–1900; Alexander Cameron 1906–11; David Brunton 1912–25.

the Snuffin (thū-snu-fin) n. ceremony taking place at the Kirkstile, near the site of the western end of the Auld Brig, early on the Friday morning of the Common Riding. Snuff is dispensed to the waiting crowd, harkening back to an old social custom of passing round the snuff box during some convenient halt in any proceedings. There is also a more fanciful story told that when the band returned from Hornshole in 1514 they found an old man partaking of snuff on the Auld Brig (long before tobacco came to the old world!). Formerly the ceremony took place on the Thursday evening on the Auld Brig, and was simply a private habit indulged in by the Burgh Officers and band members. It slowly became an accepted part of the traditions. After the Auld Brig was demolished in 1851 it was discontinued for several years, but subsequently restarted through the efforts of William Norman Kennedy, who provided a horn mull. The Thursday evening ceremony ceased in the 1870s. In 1881 the ceremony is recorded involving 'many hundreds'. The ceremony was again revived by the Ceremonial Committee in 1887, when the sons of W.N. Kennedy undertook to again be at the Snuffing with their father's horn mull. George O. Murray also provided a horn mull in 1889, or possibly just the snuff. Since those days the Snuffing has grown in popularity, was extended to the Friday morning, and now is restricted to the Friday morning only. The original horn mull is still in use. Since 1921 the song-singer has been in charge of distributing loose snuff from the horn, in a melee at the Kirkstile, protected by two bodyguards! This happens when the Drums and Fifes reach the site of the Auld Brig, shortly after 6 a.m. After the Song Singer reaches the Tower Knowe he throws small packets of snuff down from a window to the people below; these packets are highly sought after, even although the taking of snuff is now a thing of the past. It is traditional for the crowds to disperse to nearby hostelrys for rum and milk refreshments afterwards. There is a short film clip showing the Snuffing of 1905 and others in 1929, 1932, 1933, 1934 and 1937 – 'It was mebbe a melee ootside bit in the shop itsel was leike the snuffin at the Commin Ridin!' [HEx1966], 'At Snuffin' when ee hear the drum Efter ee've hed milk an rum Want ti laugh, want ti greet, Want ti be nimble on eer feet' [MB], 'A had never ever seen the Snuffin ceremony until the first time that A turned up' [HD].

Jedburgh, home of her mother's sister Martha Charters and Rev. Thomas Somerville. In 1804 she married a naval officer, Samuel Greig (Russian Consul for Britain, whose father had been the man who had brought Hobkirk's Adam Armstrong to Russia), who was a distant cousin; he died 3 years later. She was a regular visitor in Jedburgh, where she was taught Latin and other subjects by her uncle. She was in Jedburgh on the evening of the False Alarm of 1804. She had a telescope made by James Veitch of Inchbonny, was well acquainted with Sir David Brewster and also got to know Sir Walter Scott. In her widowhood she became further acquainted with mathematics, with the encouragement of William Wallace. In 1812 she secondly married her cousin William Somerville (1771–1860), eldest son of Dr. Thos.; he was a widower, an army surgeon (later physician to Chelsea Hospital) and an amateur scientist who encouraged his new wife's studies. The couple lived for several years in Edinburgh before moving to London; among their circle of friends there were influential scientists such as Thomas Young, John Herschel and Charles Babbage. Despite only 1 year of formal education, she educated herself at the family's Burntisland home and became a mathematician and science writer. In fact she has the distinction of being the first person to whom the word 'scientist' was applied, in 1834 in a review of her textbook 'On the Connexion of the Physical Sciences' (which ran to 10 editions). She published only 3 scientific papers in her lifetime (still quite unusual for a woman at that time), but contributed significantly through books. She translated and annotated a technical version of Laplace's work, hypothesized a planet perturbing the orbit of Uranus (which led to the discovery of Neptune), and wrote a popular geography and geology textbook. She was elected an honorary member of the Royal Astronomical Society and received many other honours; although the Royal Society forbade the appointment of female fellows, they commissioned a bust of her for their rooms in 1824. She spent most of the time from 1838 living in Italy. She was a great supporter of women's education, and Somerville College, Oxford was named after her. She also has an asteroid and lunar crater named in her honour. A history of her life was written by her daughter Martha. She is buried in Naples. Her children were: Woronzow Grieg (1805–65), a barrister; William George Grieg (1806–14); Margaret Farquhar Somerville (1813–23); Thomas Somerville

(1814–15); Martha Charters Somerville (1815–79); and Mary Charlotte Somerville (1817–75). Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded 'in ye Midle' in 1623, when Thomas Hood in Ancrum was accused of stealing 2 cows 7 years earlier from him. This was from lands at 'Plassadge' in England, the cattle belonging to him and Walter Scott of Todrig. It is unclear if he was tenant in Middle in Cavers Parish or elsewhere. Rev. Thomas S. (d.bef. 1710) minister of Cavers. He was son of James, who was second son of Sir James of Cambusnethan. He studied at St. Salvator's College and St. Andrews University, where he graduated in 1666. He was presented to Cavers in 1674 and ordained there in the following year. It is recorded that the Presbytery had to swear him in at the 'kirk-stile', since the church and churchyard were locked up and no keys were to be had from the house of Sir William Douglas of Cavers. The Presbytery were also met by a number of women in the churchyard bearing stones, which they threatened to throw, and called them 'soul murderers and the devil's servants'. Given the Covenanting support in Cavers Parish, it is clear that the new Episcopalian minister was not popular! In 1689 he refused to pray for William and Mary and read the Proclamation of the Estates (i.e. refused to embrace the return to Presbyterianism), but he may have continued as minister until 1693 (precisely what the arrangement was is unclear, since there was great confusion after the Revolution). He then moved to Hawick, where he continued to preach (probably in his own lodgings) to some adherents of Episcopalianism and the exiled James II. This group included members of the Gledstains and Chisholme families. Baptisms are recorded by him in Hawick in 1694 and 1697. He was listed as 'Mr Tho. Sumervall', living on the west-side of Hawick, on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is said to have ministered in Hawick along with Francis Scott, ousted minister of Hassendean, and a meeting house was opened at the Kirkwynd (or Playlaw) after the passing of the Act of Toleration in 1712 (but he must already have been dead by then). He may also have assisted Rev. John Langlands until about 1700. He married Miss Burnside and their son William was minister of Hawick (i.e., trained as a Presbyterian, despite he himself remaining true to his Episcopalian principles), while their daughter Dorothia married William Hadden, one of the masters of Edinburgh High School in 1710, and they had one other daughter. Rev. Dr. Thomas (1741–1830) historian, born in Hawick, son of Rev. William. He was orphaned at about age 17 and educated in Hawick, Jedburgh and at Edinburgh University. One of his close early friends was Samuel Charters, who would become minister at Wilton (and whose cousin he would marry). He was for a while tutor of the young Lord Minto. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1764 and presented to Minto Parish in late 1766 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, becoming minister there early the following year. He was presented to Jedburgh in 1773, translated there the following year, and this is where he spent the rest of his life. He was recorded there in the Horse Tax Rolls in the 1780s. He obtained a doctorate from St. Andrews University in 1789 and became one of his Majesty's Chaplains for Scotland in 1793. He was arrested while visiting the House of Commons about 1798, being mistaken for the accomplice of a notorious swindler. In 1798 he was offered the Chair of Church History at Edinburgh University, but declined, and had a yearly pension from 1800. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He wrote several political and historical books, including 'Candid Thought on American Independence' (1780), 'The History of Political Transactions and of Parties from the Restoration of King Charles II to the Death of King William III' (1792), 'Observations on the Constitution and State of Britain' (1793), 'The Effects of the French Revolution with respect to the interests of humanity, liberty, religion, and morality' (1793) and 'The History of Great Britain, during the Reign of Queen Anne' (1798), as well as several sermons published in Kelso, Hawick and Edinburgh. He also wrote descriptions of Jedburgh and Ancrum for the Statistical Accounts. His posthumously published book 'My own life and times 1741-1814' (1861) contains some valuable anecdotes relating to Hawick in the latter 18th century, and describes some aspects of everyday life in the neighbourhood in those times. He married Martha Charters (daughter of Samuel, Solicitor of Customs for Scotland), who died in 1809 and they had 3 sons: William, Inspector of Military Hospitals, and second husband of his cousin Mary Somerville the mathematician; Samuel, solicitor; and James Burges, who died young. They also had 4 daughters: Christian, who married Walter Riddell of Friar's Glen, 3rd son of Patrick Riddell of Muselee; Janet (or Jenny), who married Joseph Pringle of Ferney Green, Consul General at Medeira, and secondly Lieut.-Gen. Henry Elliot of Rosebank (son of Capt. Robert, brother of the Laird of Harwood); Margaret (d.1843); and

Martha, who married William Rutherford, solicitor of Jedburgh. His wife is said to have been a clever woman, who took great care with the education of her children, who were taught by David Brewster (later Sir David). When he died he was 'father of the church', i.e. the oldest serving minister, in his 90th year. He is buried in Jedburgh Abbey. Sir William (12th/13th C.) son of William of Carnwath. It is said that during the reign of William the Lion he slew a fearful monster, which was terrorising the district of Linton; the place was known as Wormington, and the event is commemorated in a carved stone in wall of the parish church. He was 'Willelmo de Sumerville' when he witnessed the granting of the Church of Molle to Kelso Abbey in the mid-1100s. In 1174 he had the lands conferred on him by the King. He also became Sheriff of Roxburghshire, as well as the Chief Falconer to the King. Rev. William (1691-1757) son of Thomas, the minister of Cavers, he was minister of Hawick Parish 1731-57, and father of Dr. Thomas. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1707, became a tutor for the family of Alexander, Lord Elibank, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Duns in 1719. He thereafter spent time in the household of James, Lord Somerville (presumably a relative), managing his business affairs. He was called to Hawick Parish in late 1731 and ordained early the following year. In 1735 he was involved with the Duke of Buccleuch in the sale of land within Dalkeith. He wrote an account of the Parish sometime before 1743 (perhaps in 1738), this being one of the earliest descriptions with any detail. There he mentions an examination he made of the Buccleuch vault under St. Mary's in 1738; his transcription of stones there was eventually published in James Wilson's 'Memories of Hawick'. He is listed at the Manse in 1748, when he paid the window tax in Hawick Parish. In 1733 he married Janet, only daughter of John Grierson, minister of South Queensferry (their post-nuptial contract is in the National Archives); she was said to be a great beauty. Their children included: Agnes (b.1735); James (b.1740), who may have died young; Thomas (b.1741), who became minister at Jedburgh; Jean (b.1742), who probably also died young; William (b.1744), who probably also did not survive; Janet (b.1745); and Helen. The witness in 1741 was schoolmaster James Anderson and the witnesses in 1742 were Francis Gledstains and Robert Boyd (the Bailies at the time). His first wife died in 1749 and in 1753 he secondly married again Isobel (or Isabella) Scott of Whitehaugh, described as ‘a maiden-gentlewoman of about 80’, and she died in 1759. He is probably the ‘Mr. Somervell’ who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758 (although probably deceased before then). It has sometimes been claimed that he was the original of the ‘little round fat oily man of God’ of James Thomson’s ‘Castle of Indolence’, but others insist that the model was instead an English clergyman, Rev. Patrick Murdoch. William (1771–1860) son of Dr. Thomas and Martha Charters, he was born at Minto. He trained as a surgeon and entered the army, travelling on expeditions to the Cape of Good Hope. He also travelled on a Mediterranean expedition against Napoleon and to Canada, where he was inspector-general of hospitals from about 1807–11. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1812. In 1812 he became deputy inspector of army hospitals in Scotland and in 1816 had to move to London as a member of the army medical board. In 1806 he married Miss Rutherford of Knowesouth, but she died 2 years later. In 1812 he secondly married his cousin Mary, daughter of Adm. Fairfax, and widow of Samuel Grieg; she is known worldwide as one of the first female mathematicians. It is said that after his marriage he gave up his own ambitions to support his wife’s scientific career. In 1818 he was involved in a legal case over inheritance of Knowesouth, claiming that his first wife’s uncle, a lawyer in Jedburgh, had defrauded him out of liferent on the estate. He became seriously ill in 1838, so that his family wintered abroad and from then on lived mainly on the continent. He died in his 89th year in Florence and is buried in the Protestant cemetery there. William (c.1800–49) shoemaker who lived at Miller’s Close on the High Street. He married Isabella (1807–89), eldest daughter of James Murray, and hence he was uncle of Sir J.A.H. Their children included John, Christian, Jean and James. He may have been born in Kelso, son of William and Mary Weatherhead (also spelled ‘Somervel’, ‘Somervell’, ‘Sumerval’, ‘Sumervel’, ‘Summervale’, etc. in early records).

the Somerville Buildins (thu-su-mur-vil-bil-dinz) n. modern name for a block of houses on Sunnyside in Denholm, with a pend through the middle (also called ‘Summerville House’).

the Sooth (thu-sooth) n. formerly, the South of Scotland district Rugby Union team, which existed through most of the 20th century, and is effectively replaced by ‘the Borders’ team.

Sooth Berryfell (sooth-be-ree-fel) n. another name for the main farm at Berryfell.

Sooth Bright Street (sooth-brī'-stree') n. South Bright Street, a street in the West End off Bright Street. The houses were built in 1927, but after restoration work in 1973 they were found to be unsafe and were demolished in 1975. The street was named after statesman and social reformer John Bright.

Sooth Croft Park (sooth-kroft-pawrk) n. Southcroft Park, former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was valued at £73 3s 6d in 1779 when included among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot. They are still so listed in 1811.

Soothdean (sooth-deen, soo-, sow-din) n. Southdean, hamlet on the A6088 towards the Carter Bar, on the banks of the Jed, formerly written ‘Souden’ and variants. Formerly part of Jed Forest, the name ‘Soothdean’ is fairly synonymous with Chesters, although perhaps more often applied to the upper part of the district. It is also the name of the associated Parish, which extends to Wolfelee and also contains the former Free Church there. The original church dates back to at least the 13th century and was a meeting place for Scottish leaders before Otterburn. A replacement church was built about 1690 and the current one in 1876. The village itself was burned by Dacre’s men (led by Sir John Radcliff) in late 1513 and again in 1544. Jock Oliver was recorded living there in 1544. In 1669 the farm of that name was tenanted by James Oliver, David Oliver and Thomas Oliver. William Oliver and David Baptie were there in 1694. James Baptie was tenant there in at least 1797–1801. Residents in 1801 included Alexander Baptie, Robert Kerr and Peter Sinton. An old outhouse in the area was called Peden's Barn and connected with Covenanters. The settlement has been on the main route from Hawick to Newcastle since long before the modern road was developed (around the 1820s). There are many nearby archaeological remains, including hill-forts, settlements and ruined peel towers. Several Bronze Age artefacts found nearby are in Jedburgh Museum, including a flat axe, part of a rapier blade, and a socketed axe. Other items from the area include a greenstone axe, a whinstone hammer-head and 3 small whorls of polished green stone. The Statistical Account of 1794 notes that the region contained several ancient cairns, one of which was found to contain bones, and nearly all of which had been robbed for stones. 'Souden Kirk: a Border shrine' was published by John R. Spence in 1951 (the origin is probably a corrupted version of 'Souden', the original pronunciation, which may be from the Old English 'suth dun', meaning simply 'the southern hill' or may be related to Old Welsh for a hill-fort; the name first occurs as 'Souddon' in 1275 and has various related forms, including Sudhden in 1291/2, 'Suthdon' in 1319, 'Soudon' in 1404, 'Sowdon' in 1455, 'Sowdone' in 1484/5, 'sowdene' in 1488/9, 'Sowdown' in 1491/2, 'Sodane' in 1538, 'Sodene' in 1539, transcribed as 'Fowden' in 1544, 'Sowdown' in 1559, 'Suddoun' in 1575, 'Suddum' in 1586, 'Sudan' in 1638, 'Sudden' in 1689 and 'Souden' in 1701; 'Soudan K.' is marked on Morden's 1687 map of Scotland and 'K. of Soudann' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Soothdean (sooth-deen) n. region in the hills to the east of Colterscleuch, containing Southdean Rigg (which reaches 354 m) and Southdean Burn (which joins Northhouse Burn). There was also formerly a farmstead here. The lands were once part of Ringwoodfield (marked 'Sudarig' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it is spelled 'Suddenrigg' in 1693 and 'Suddenrig' in 1744).

Soothdean Kirk (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-kirk) n. church in Southdean Parish. The original church was first mentioned as early as the 1260s. 'Ade de Osbernston' was appointed cleric there by the English King in 1291/2. Adam, the Parson, signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It was in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, but it is not known when it was dedicated. The patronage was held by the Douglasses, passing to Scott of Branhholme in 1528, reverting to the Crown in about 1537 and recovered by the Earl of Angus in 1542/3. The church consisted of a west tower and a nave, probably of 13th century, together with a chancel, probably added in the 15th century (replacing an earlier chancel). Excavations also revealed foundations of a perhaps earlier building, a few feet to the north of the nave. The church was the location for a meeting of Lord Douglas and the other Scottish commanders in 1388, in which an English spy is meant to have revealed information that was important for the skirmish at Newcastle and the battle at Otterburn. The ruins of this original 'Souden Kirk' stands just below the level of the main A6088 road, about a mile after Chesters. A commemorative plaque was erected there after excavations by the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1910. At the same time part of the tower was roofed over to hold some of the unearthened stonework, and the site was dedicated as a memorial to the Battle of Otterburn; repair work was carried out on the tower in 2015. A carved super-altar (of sandstone, about 23 cm by 18 cm), probably from the 15th century, was moved to the new church. This original church was abandoned in 1688 when the roof collapsed (on a Sunday, but fortunately after the congregation had left). A second church was built in 1689/90, whose roofless walls stand in the graveyard of the grounds of the new (1876) church near Chesters. This building had no ceiling and it is said that the pauper's coffin (with its hinged bottom) was stored in the rafters, in plain view of the congregation. Its doorway survives and part of the 'joughs' could be seen on the wall until fairly recent times. The new church contains a memorial window to James Thompson, author of 'The Seasons' and 'Rule Britannia' and another supplied by the tenantry of Jedforest. The organ was a gift of Mrs. Mair, wife of the minister. The new churchyard is displaced from the church, up on Chesters Brae. The Manse for the Kirk is located to the east of Whiteburn farmstead; it was built in 1795, on the site of the former building; this was 'The Mans' on which tax was paid for 4 hearths in 1694 and 20 windows in 1748. The glebe lands extended to 40 acres. The patronage was held by Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme from 1528, then the Earl of Angus from 1542/3. The benefice of the Rectory was held by Douglas of Bonjedward from 1566. The church was linked with Edgerston 1960–73, linked with Hobkirk in 1973, united formally with Hobkirk in 1988 and then linked with Cavers and Kirkton 1988–97. It became part of the wider area of Ruberslaw in 2004 (along with Denholm, Minto, Bedrule and Hobkirk). The oldest communion token is heart-shaped and made of lead. A roll of the ministers of the church is: Galfrid, Vicar in 1260; Adam of Osberton from 1291/2; Adam, Parson in 1296; Robert Halliwell, Prebend in 1319; Thomas Forest, Rector in 1404; Robert Penwen, from 1424 until at least 1455; John Inglis, Rector in 1471; William Scott, Rector from at least 1482–1491/2; Richard, Parson in 1526/7; Hugh Douglas, Rector at least 1558/9–63; Walter Lyle, Exhorter in 1567; John Douglas, Reader 1574–87; Andrew Clayhills, Minister in 1575; John Scott, Reader 1579–82; William Douglas 1585; Andrew Douglas 1599–1605; George Douglas 1607–08; James Logan, presented 1608; William Weir 1610–26; James Fisher 1626–35; John Davidson 1635–66; John Dargavel 1667–70; George Baptie 1670–88; Thomas Rutherford 1689; Samuel Johnstone 1690–99; Thomas Thomson 1700–16; Thomas Leck, presented 1716; John Inglis 1718–43; John Oliver 1736–55; Robert Muirhead 1756–84; William Scott 1785–1809; John Richmond 1810–47; John Mair 1847–1902; George Henry Donald 1902–06; John R. Spence 1907–50; John Roberts 1951–65; George Urquhart 1966–72; Stephen Goodbrand 1973–82; James A. Strachan 1983–88; Adam McC. Bowie 1988–96 (it is marked ‘Soudan K.’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

Soothdean Law (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-law) n. Southdean Law, hill near Southdean and also formerly the name of a farm there. In 1669 the tenants were Andrew Douglas and Robert Laidlaw. The hill is on the left hand side of the A6088. It reaches a height of 300 m and contains a fort and settlement, as well as having a triangulation pillar, all on the western peak. The fort consists of a pear-shaped enclosure around the summit, about 50 m by 30 m, and is probably from the early Iron Age (perhaps the first millennium B.C.E.). There is an annex to the north-east of the main enclosure, and this is probably later. In this area there are also the remains of 11 stone-walled houses (from 4.5 to 8 m in diameter) and several enclosures, perhaps dating to the 2nd, 3rd or 4th century. The surrounding slopes contain evidence of a field-system and rig lines, some running right up to the boundaries of the fort, and hence probably of a similar age. There are also the remains of an old building and enclosure to the north-west, in the direction of Slack’s Tower. 2 Bronze Age socketed axes were found near here, but their location is unknown (it is ‘Sudenlaw’ and ‘Souden Law’ in 1669).

Soothdean Manse (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-mawns) n. house of the minister of Southdean Parish. It is north of the village, to the east of the A6088. The current house was built in 1795, on the site of the former building, which was ‘The Mans’ on which tax was paid for 4 hearths in 1694 and 20 windows in 1748. The nearby glebe lands extended to 40 acres. A crude stone axe was built into a wall opposite here.

Soothdean Mill (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-mil) n. former corn mill in Southdean Parish, situated on a lade off the Jed Water, just to the east of Chesters village. It was valued at £5 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538, 1539 and 1541. Patrick, Janet and Marion Oliver were joint tenants there in 1541, with William and Marion (probably also Oliver, but surname not given) renting one third of the farm. James Shiel was tenant there in the 1680s and 90s. It is referred to in 1738 by the Duke of Douglas’s factor, shortly after it had burned down. Walter Riddell was tenant there in 1797 and Robert Riddell was there in at least 1799–1801. George Bell was miller and farmer there in 1866. ‘Southdeanmillhead’ is recorded in the late 18th century. There is still a farm in the same location, with evidence of its former use as a corn mill and a saw mill (it is ‘molendini de Sowden’ in 1538, ‘molendini de Sowdene’ in 1539, ‘Sodenmylne’ and ‘molendini de Soden’ in 1541, ‘suden milne’ in 1681 and ‘Suden Mylne’ in 1694).

Soothdean Parish (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-pā-reesh) n. Southdean Parish, lying along the upper banks of the Jed, crossed by the A6088 road from Hawick to the Carter Bar. It is also sometimes referred to as Chesters Parish. The Parish is about 12 miles by 7 miles in size, and is bounded by Jedburgh, Oxnam, Castleton, Hobkirk and part of Northumberland. It was formerly in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. It was a Rectory of Glasgow, taxed at £5 6s 4d in 1275 and £3 8s in 1376. In early times it was called ‘Suden’, and pronounced that way until fairly recently. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at £5500. In 1678 the lands had the same value, split between the Marquess of Douglas and Gilbert Eliott of Wolfelee. It received part of the former Abbotrule Parish in 1777 (including the area having the former church), with a small part moved from Hobkirk in 1793. However, a northern section (bordering on Bedrule, including Gatehousecote and Ruletownhead) was later transferred to Hobkirk Parish. There were 45 men listed there between the ages of 19 and 30 in 1799. It was valued at about £6500 in 1811. Some of the Cheviots are in the Parish, and the highest hills are Carter Fell, Carlintooth Fell, Peel Fell and Wolfelee Hill. Chesters is the main settlement, although it really only grew in the 19th century. The Parish contains a great many ancient forts, remains of peel towers, etc. There are Parish Council books for 1851–1930 in the Borders Archive and the Parish records date back to 1696. In 1834 there were in the Parish: 4 heritors; 20 larger and 18 smaller tenants; about 17,000 sheep; and one ‘alehouse’ at the Carter Bar. The register of births begins in 1696 (with a gap 1700–37 and also in the 1740s) and marriages and deaths in 1736 (but also with gaps); registration was irregular for births, but fairly complete for the proclamation of banns (it is ‘Soudon Par- ioch’ in 1694).

Soothdeanrig (soo-, sooth-deen-rig) n. Southdeanrig, former farmstead near Northhouse, lying on part of Southdean Rig, between the Cromrig and Southdean Burns, south of the Teviot. The lands were included in a set leased by Walter Scott of Braxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500 and stated to be in the Lairdship of ‘Ringwoodfield’. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Southcothrig’ (along with ‘Vestcotrig’ and ‘Bolburg’) where the King’s shepherd Richard Henderson is recorded in 1540. ‘The gudman of Syntoun and Arche Elliot of Thirlishoup’ (probably Walter Scott of Synton and Archibald Elliot of Thorlieshope) rented these lands, along with Cauldcleuch, from Melrose Abbey in 1557; at that time it was valued at £5. Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells said that Robert Scott of Satchells (his father or grandfather probably) received the lands of ‘Southinrig’ for his service to the house of Buccleuch. It was recorded as part of the land of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. William Clerk was there in 1708. In 1718 it was surveyed along with other Buccleuch properties, at that point covering 1017 acres and bounded by Northhouse, Phaup, Binks, Bowanhill and Colterscleuch. James Grieve was recorded there in at least 1723–35 and William Main in 1724–29. In 1744 the lands were leased by Thomas Elliot, farmer at Harwood. William Elliot was there in 1748–53, James Grieve was tenant in 1751 and Walter Elliot was there in 1757. Gideon Scott was there in 1785 and John Turnbull was herd 1785–97. An enclosed area on the north-east side contained a building and sheepfold, shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map (it is ‘Sowdinryg’ in 1500, ‘Sowdenrig’ in 1557 and 1564, ‘Soudenrig’ in 1621, ‘Sudenrig’ in 1634, ‘Soudenrig’ in 1660, ‘Suddenrig’ in 1661, ‘Suudinrig’ in 1663, ‘Suddenrigg’ in 1693, ‘Suddenridge’ in 1708 and ‘Southdean rigg’ in 1723; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Sudarig’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Sowdenrige’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Southdeanridge’; see also Soothinrig).

Soothdean Rig (sooth-deen-, soo-din-rig) n. ridge in Southdean Parish, lying to the south of the main A6088, being essentially the northern shoulder of Charlie’s Knowe. The area is rich in archaeological remains, around the Carter Burn, as well as further north to Jordan Sike. In particular there are apparent remains of buildings within enclosures.

Soothdean Rig Shiel (sooth-deen-, soo-din-rig-sheel) n. shepherd’s cottage on Southdean Rig. Francis Dickson and his son Francis, were shepherds there through much of the 19th century.

Soothdean Schuil (sooth-deen-skil) n. former school in Southdean Parish. It may have been established in the early 17th century. Thomas Turnbull was schoolmaster in 1620 and George Weir in 1622. There were more than 70 pupils in the 1830s. Thomas Armstrong was schoolmaster there from 1825 and his son Richmond Armstrong from 1837. School Board minute books are in the Borders Archive for the period 1873–1919.

Soothfield (sooth-feeld) n. Southfield, farm about 4 miles south of Hawick, lying on the boundary of the old Common. It was previously split into ‘Nether Soothfield’ and ‘Over Soothfield’, and these farms were surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. The name is also used for the general area around the farm. The marshy area just to the north was once dammed and labelled as ‘Mill Dam’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. James Glendinning was a tenant here in 1684 when he was listed among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. Adam Laidlaw was there in 1711. Grieves farmed here from at least the 1750s until 1988, when the lease was given up by Walter; this is probably the longest tenancy by a single family of any farm of the Buccleuch Estates. William Clerk was a servant there in 1797 and George

Douglas was living there in 1801. There are several forts, carins and ancient settlements in the vicinity. Several flint and chert implements found in the area around the farm are in the Museum, and some others may be in the National Museum of Antiquities. A spearhead found near here is probably still in the Museum's collection, and has been classified as Middle Bronze Age. (marked as 'N. Southfield' and O. Southfield' on Blaeu's 1654 map, and also marked on Visscher's 1689 map of Scotland; the name presumably just means 'the south field', but it may suggest that it was once part of Hawick Common; there are several places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland).

Soothfield Gate (sooth-feeld-gā) n. Southfield Gate, former farm, long ruined, near the road end just beyond the Caa Knowe, just after the turn-off for Southfield farm and shortly before the road reaches the Gate Burn at the Troutlawford. The name is also used to refer to the road to Southfield, and hence to the far end of the Common and the Caa Knowe – '...And syne, with them, by Southfield Gate, I pray I'll hear the Burgess-Roll and answer to my name' [JYH] (also written 'Southfieldgate'; it is marked 'Southfieldgate ruins of' on J.P. Alison's map of the Common in 1777).

Sooth Hermitage Street (sooth-her-mi'-eej-stree) n. South Hermitage Street, part of the main B6357 through Newcastleton, lying to the south of Douglas Square.

Soothinrig (soo-thin-rig) n. former name for lands at Southdean Rig, being more recently part of the estates of the Duke of Buccleuch and part of Colterscleuch farm. They were once held by an ancestor of Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells, and given for his services to the Duke (see also Soothdeanrig).

the Sooth Kirk (thu-sooth-kirk) n. name formerly used in Newcastleton for the United Presbyterian Church after it united with the Church of Scotland in 1929. The name was used to distinguish it from the 'Park Kirk'.

Sooth Liddle Street (sooth-li-dul-stee) n. South Liddle Street, being the southern extension of North Liddle Street and Mid Liddle Street.

Sooth Port (sooth-pōr) n. South Port, being the gate from town leading south up the Cross Wynd until the mid-18th century. The gate was probably situated a little way up the Wynd, and was once the beginning of the road towards Newcastle. It was recorded being 'taken down' in 1732, and may have been more fully removed in 1762 along with the Mercat Cross. A plaque was placed on the Town Hall near the original location by the Callants' Club in 1964. Until the 1830s this was the road to Newcastle and other points to the south-east (also sometimes the 'Cross Wynd Port' or 'Cross Port').

Soothron (sooth-rin) n., adj., arch. people from the south, i.e. the English – '...for at that period such was the thirst of Southron revenge that things both sacred and civil met with the same treatment' [WaD], 'And the fierce rieviers swam the currents o'er In hot pursuit of flying Southron foe' [GWe], '...Where pricking and spurring are rife, And the bluid boils up like a sea; But Southrons gand doon i' the strife! And wha daur meddle wi' me?' [T] adj., arch. southern – 'Oor forebears an ther Southron neebers coodna sit soft ava i thae days' [ECS].

Sooth Synton (sooth-sin'-in) n. former name for the main farm of Synton (or Sinton), to distinguish it from 'North Synton' on the opposite side of the Ale valley. It was long the property of the Scotts. The house there was rebuilt in the 18th century and demolished in the latter part of the 20th century. James Scott from South Synton Mill was minister at Ashkirk in the late 1500s (marked with this name on Gordon's c. 1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map).

soothwards (sooth-wurdz) adv. southwards – '...And, galloping doon the glen, Aye soothwards they disappear; They are riding their raids again For their ain or their neighbour's gear' [TK].

the Sootie Kittlin (thu-soo'-ee-kit-lin) n. nickname in use in the 19th century, presumably (somehow) related to a sooty kitten – 'The Sootie Kittlin' and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H'Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail' [HI].

Sooty Knowe (soo'-ee-now) n. small hill just south-east of Southfield. It once contained a cairn, marked on the 1926 Ordnance Survey map, but subsequently obliterated by cultivation and quarrying.

Sorbie (sor-bee) n. farm on a side road just south of Ewes, a few miles north of Langholm, once the site of a corn mill. It was confirmed to Simon Little in 1426. 'Dauid Armstrang de Sourby' witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. The lands were occupied by the Armstrongs into the 17th century. It was valued at £250 in 1671. John Armstrong is recorded leasing a quarter of the farm in 1672 and 1673 and there was a 1685 gravestone for John Armstrong of Sorbie in Ewes Kirkyard. Sorbie was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch farms in 1718, when it covered 329 acres, bounded by Kirkton, Glendivan, Howgill, Middle and Over Wrae, Staplegordon, lands of the Laird of Renaldburn and Burnfoot in Westerkirk. Thomas Armstrong leased the farm in 1735. William Borthwick was there in at least 1785–90, Mrs. Borthwick in 1794 and Alexander Borthwick in 1797. Robert Hardie was farmer in 1841 and D. Hardie in 1868. Henry Scott Riddell was born here in a shepherd's cottage which stood in the plantation near the bridge. A plaque on the bridge commemorates the site and a centenary celebration was held here in 1898. 'Sorbie Haas' was the former name used for the road from the Ewes valley to Westerkirk (the same name occurs elsewhere in Scotland and Northern England; it is 'Sourbi' in 1462 and 'Sourby' in 1456; it is 'Sourby' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Sorby' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Sorbie (sor-bee) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, near to Sorbietrees. In the late 1100s Race Fitz Malger granted the whole 'shaw' there, and 1 acre next to the shaw, with pasture for 40 cows and their calves, 2 bulls, 10 oxen and 2 horses. This was together with half of the land of Shortbutts, which was also in the territory of Sorbie. The farm of Abbotshaws may recall this early land transfer (it was 'Sourebi' in the late 12th century).

Sorbie (sor-bee) n. James (b.c.1770s) labourer at Lawston according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was a servant at Liddel Bank (also written 'Sorby').

Sorbie Hass (sor-bee-hass) n. name used for the road winding between Sorbie and Staplegordon. This was the main route through the lower Ewes valley to the Langholm area until Langholm became a separate parish in 1703. There was an old hawthorn tree at the junction of this road with the main Ewes road, which grew until sometime in the 19th century. It was said to be used as a meeting spot by the monks of Melrose (also written 'Haas', the word comes from Old Norse for a pass; the road is labelled on Crawford's 1804 map).

Sorbie treis (sor-bee-trīz) n. Sorbietrees, farm about 3 miles south of Newcastleton. When surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718 it extended to 1492 acres and included the farmsteads of High Mangerton, Catheugh and 'Demmebeck'. It was bounded by the Kershope Burn, Flatt, Mangerton, lands of the Laird of Whithaugh and Kershope, with the farmhouse clearly shown and a wood of old trees around the Fouty Sike. In 1541 it is listed along with Ragarth and Sorbie, with value 10 merks, and stated to eprtain to the Laird of Mangerton. It was formerly a stronghold of the Armstrongs. George Mitchelson and Roland Porteous were there in 1694. A shepherd here perished during the 'Gonial Blast' of 1794. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in at least 1794–97. John Amos was a tailor there in 1797 and William Armstrong was farmer in 1801. William Armstrong was there in 1841 and 1851; he was killed by the minister of Walton (being mistaken for an intruder), and is buried in Ettleton cemetery. The present farmhouse was built by the Buccleuch Estates and is run as a bed and breakfast. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of a circular earthwork on the farm. This is probably the site where ramparts were once removed, revealing paved area on the south side, with some burned material. In 2001 it had the dubious distinction of recording the first Scottish Borders case of foot and mouth disease – 'A wailing sugh is borne upon the breeze, Athwart the shatter'd pines of Sorbietrees' [HNo], 'To Sorbietrees and Larriston, Wi' news that Wull was deid, And craws nicht leeve in peace at last Frae Flatt to Tweeden-heid ...' [DH] (the origin of the name is probably the Old Norse 'saurr' and Old English 'treow', meaning 'trees at the muddy farm'; it first appears as 'Sourby' in 1456, but could be the 'Southby' recorded in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale; it is 'Sorbe et Sorbetrees' in 1541, 'Sorbitrees' in 1694 and 'Sorbytrees' in 1797, 1839 and 1851; it is 'Sorbitrees' on Stobie's 1770 map).

sorner (sōr-nur) n., arch. someone who lives off their neighbours, a scrounger – '... the country suffered sadly from bands of thieves, and sorners fleeing from labour and living in plenty upon the fruit of other men's labour' [WNK], 'The land was simply swarming with beggars and sorners, the latter of whom extorted food or help by terrifying the dwellers in lonely farms and cottages' [JJV].

sorri (so-ri, -ra, -re) n., arch. sorrow, a troublesome child – 'But I am puir an' fu' o' sorra ...' [HSR], 'For my liffe is spendet wi' sorra, an' my yeers wi' sichin' ...' [HSR], 'Yih saucy sorrih! ee'r owre fow-hauden' [ECS], 'A raikin sorrih is applied to child given to wandering against parental wishes' [ECS], (also spelled 'sorrih', 'sorra', etc.; the final vowel sound varies).

sorrifi (so-ri-fi) adj., arch. sorrowful – ‘...an’ begoude til be sorrafu’ an’ verra hivv’ [HSR], ‘An’ they wer excessiv sorrafu’ ...’ [HSR].

sorri-rape (so-ra-rāp) n., arch. a shoulder-strap attached to the handles of a handbarrow to relieve the strain on the bearer’s arms (noted by J. Jamieson).

Sorrowlessfield (so-rō-les-feeld) n. farm near Earlston. It is traditionally said to have been the only neighbouring farm to which anyone returned from Flodden, but it is actually known to have belonged to a Will Sorules in the 12th century. It was part of the lands owned by Melrose Abbey. Several flint arrow-heads and other implements have been found nearby, and a decorated spindle whorl from there is in the Museum (it is ‘Sorrowlesfeild’ in about 1564 and ‘Sorlersfield’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

sort (sor) v., arch. to tend, look after – ‘Thay’re fer owre mony foak i the hoose for yow ti sort eersel’ [ECS], to arrange, put in order – ‘A’ll heh ti sort thum; thay’re aa mixty-maxty an need ti be keindeet’ [ECS], to dress oneself, make oneself presentable – ‘Geet eersuls sorteet, an A’ll wait on ee, an oo’ll gang aathegither’ [ECS], to deal effectively with, rebuke, chastise – ‘A’ll sort ee, yih little bleckie, for poww-in aa ma fairns (ferns)’ [ECS], to mend, repair – ‘The sklater cam ti sort the ruif’ [ECS] (most of these meanings are not standard in English).

sort (sor) n., arch. a considerable number of some kind, but not too many – ‘There was a sort (or a sort o’ folk) at the kirk the day’ [GW] (noted by J. Jamieson).

sorter (sor’-ur) n., arch. person employed in a woollen factory to open bales of wool and separate the wool according to quality.

sortit (sor-tee’, -ti) adj., pp. sorted, put in order, arranged, restored – ‘... that weel-sorteet an taen sic grand care o’ [ECS], ‘Yiddie’s gairdeen’s aye neice; it’s that weel sorteet’ [ECS], ‘When they sortit the muddle oot at last, The lassies grat and roared ...’ [DH], ‘... An oor it was Or I’d the mischieff sortit’ [WL].

so’s (sōz) contr. so as – ‘A’ll pit thum there, so’s ee can look it thum efter’.

sooss (sos) n., poet. a soggy mess, wetting, drink of alcohol – ‘Where ye will get a whisky sooss To moistify your middle, For now nae langer at Hare-moss You’ll hear auld Ruickbie’s fiddle’ [JR].

sot (so) adv. so, indeed, used as an emphatic response to ‘not’, particularly by children – ‘Ee er not! A em sot!’, ‘A ded sot’, ‘ee wull sot’.

sotter (so-tur) v., arch., poet. to swarm – ‘The troots fair sotter’t in the Dunk-puil’ [GW], ‘Last nicht a guid ding-on o’ rain, Wi’ deid leaves sotterin’ under fit ...’ [WFC], to form an eruptive sore, to boil, sputter, scorch – ‘And leugh, and cried, as he trampet him down – He will be a sottering bleeze’ [JTe] n., arch., a cluster of things, especially scabs or pimples, a seething mass, swarm (of flies, minnows, rabbits, etc.) – ‘... a creeper-kivvert cottage wui its gairdeen a perfect sotter o bonnie flooers’ [ECS].

souch (sowch, sōch) v., arch. to blow, howl, sigh – ‘How the wund’s souchin’ i’ the chumla heid!’ [JAHM], ‘There’s music in the soughin’ wand, And in the whirrin’ reel’ [JT], ‘... The ice-drap hings at ilka twig, And sad the nor’-wind soughs through a’ ...’ [TDa], ‘Over the pastures of Bellendean The wind wails a weary souch ...’ [TK], ‘... a boaggly, gloomin planteen, where the whussellin wund gaed soachin throwe’ [ECS], ‘... And feel the soughin o’ the wund, The lash of raindrops stingin’ [WL], ‘... Murnin in tongues man kent afore His first word was let-fa, They keen and souch and blaw’ [DH], to single softly, whistle, hum – ‘As I am naturally musically inclided, I happened to be soughing over a well-known tune ...’ [JR], n. a sigh, blow, sound of the wind – ‘Through the darksome yew with eiry sough, The gurlly breeze it did play’ [JTe], ‘Wi’ drearie sugh the e’ening win’, Comes through the glen sae foggie’ [JoHa], ‘A calm souch, too, you aye maun keep, Save maybe for ae bit creak ...’ [WFC], ‘... A snell sough flichters them down’ [WL], a hubbub, fuss, frenzy – ‘A cot in the midst of a wide-spreading wood, Afar from the sigh and the sugh of the crowd’ [JoHa], ‘What wad they dae workin, Wi the sough o the flude i the air ...’ [DH], ‘It was a soft nicht, and birdsang seems to traivel better wi a souch o rain i the air’ [DH] (from Old English; also spelled ‘sough’, ‘sugh’, ‘soach’, etc.).

soucht (sowcht) pp., arch. sought – ‘Bie nicht on my bed I soucht him wham my saul loes’ [HSR], ‘... ay, I soucht him, but he couldna be fund’ [HSR], ‘... Wi’ his rowth o’ gowd he had need o’ noucht, But the mair he gethered, the mair he soucht’ [WL] (cf. sowt).

the Southern Reporter (thu-su-thurn-ree-pōr’-ur) n. newspaper, published in Selkirk from 1855 by the Tweeddale Press. It became the ‘Southern Reporter and the Border Standard’ in 1957, and merged again with the Hawick Express and the Kelso Chronicle & Jedburgh Gazette in 1983.

the Southern Uplands (thu-su-thurn-up-lindz) n. range of hills near the Border, generally west of Hawick. It is sandwiched between the Southern Uplands Boundary Fault to the north and the Cheviot hills of England to the south, reaching heights of 800 m and including the Southern Upland Way. The range is dominated by Ordovician and Silurian sedimentary rocks and includes the Carsphairn, Cheviot, Ettrick, Lammermuir, Lowther, Moffat, Moorfoot, Roxburgh and Tweedsmuir Hills – ‘Fold upon fold before me, the uplands stretch afar; A land so rich in romance, and song of love and war’ [WL].

the Southern Upland Way (thu-su-thurn-up-lind-wā) n. long distance walking route, opened in 1984, running from Portpatrick to Cockburnspath. It is 212 miles (340 km) in length, being the longest of Scotland’s long distance footpaths, and comes nearest to Hawick around Yair. It is sometimes jokingly referred to as the ‘Southern Upwards Way’.

the South Fencibles Regiment (thu-sowth-fen-si-bulz-re-jee-min) n. voluntary force set up Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1778, being embodied at Edinburgh. The Duke recruited from throughout the Scottish Borders. He is recorded being in Castleton on hiring day, for example. The regiment was disbanded at Dalkeith in 1783.

Soutra Aisle (soo-tra-I-yul) n. site of the Soutra mediæval hospital, where a section of the Roman road Dere Street is also preserved. It is located off the A68 between Jedburgh and Dalkeith, the Aisle itself being a private burial vault for the Pringles, dated 1686 and built in part of the former Church.

Soutra Hospital (soo-tra-hos-pi'-ul) n. a mediæval hospital, located on high ground about 40 miles from Hawick, just off the A68, also known as 'Soltre'. It was founded by Malcolm IV in 1164 for the accommodation of travellers and pilgrims and the treatment of the sick and poor of the district. It was dedicated to the Holy Trinity. A spring near there was known as the Trinity Well, and visited by many for its supposed healing powers. It was run by the Augustinian monks from the 12th century until around 1650, being annexed in 1462 to Trinity College Church and Hospital, Edinburgh. The superior was referred to as the 'Magister' or Master. It fell into ruin after the Reformation, and Trinity College Church and Hospital itself was demolished in 1848 (to make way for the railway). It was said that much of the ruins were used locally for building materials in the early 19th century. Excavations at Soutra have provided a wealth of evidence relating to mediæval medicine, including over 300 identified plant species. The hospital was run with the granting of 300 estates, including a small-holding in Hawick, 'Soutra Croft'. This is almost certainly the area that became known as the Trinity lands at the eastern end of town. The endowment of this croft may have gone to an altar dedicated to Mary in the church of Soutra (also written 'Soltre' and variants).

Soutralands (soo-tra-lawndz) n. another name for Trinitylands, the part of Hawick given to Soutra Hospital. In 1507 they are referred to as 'vulgariter vocatas ly Soltrelandis' and in 1578 as 'Sowtre landis in Hawik'.

sowens (sow-inz) n., arch. flummery, a sweet pudding made of strained boiled oatmeal or flour – 'A yeternal roon o' parritch for breakfast, pease bannocks an' black kail for dinner an' parritch and sowens for supper' [V&M].

Spalding (spawl-, spee-din) n. Charles 'Chairlie Speedy' (19th C.) manager and elder in Al-lars Kirk in the late 1800s. He could be the son of George and Agnes Stewart (born in Hawick in 1846, and who died in 1903) or the son of Robert and Jean (born in about 1837). Charles (19th/20th C.) one of the survivors of the Gallipoli Campaign, who visited the region in a group of Hawick veterans in 1965. George (b.1818/9) plasterer in Hawick. In 1851 and 1861 he was at 8 Cross Wynd. He married Agnes Stewart and their children included: Agnes (b.c.1841); Charles (b.c.1845); Ellen (b.c.1847); and Jemima (b.c.1850), Thomas (b.c.1853); Robert (b.c.1855); and Isabella (b.c.1860). James (19th C.) professional runner from Hawick. He recorded many wins in the period 1863–78. In one Common Riding Games, he won the 300 yards, 500 yards and half-mile races. He also won races in Middlesbrough, Bolton and Burnley. He is probably the son of William and Margaret born in 1845/6. John (1838–1918) son of William and Margaret Scott. He was a framework knitter in Hawick. He married Catherine Michie in 1863; she was daughter of Robert Michie and Christina Gillis. They emigrated to Canada, settling in Galt, where they were friends with fellow Teri Robert Murray. Their children were Christine, Helen, James, Catherine Wiekie and Mary. Robert (18th C.) resident in Harwood Mill. In the baptismal records his surname is recorded as 'Speedy' in 1790 and 'Speeden' in other years. This makes it clear that he was 'Spalding' and probably an ancestor of the family nicknamed 'Speedy' in Hawick in the 19th century. His children included: George (b.1790), Charles (b.1792), Jean (b.1792), Janet (b.1792) and Jean (again, b.1795). Robert (b.1810/1) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was at 'Head of Silver St' and in 1851 was on 'Kirkstyle Place'. By 1861 he was on Dovemount St. in Wilton. He married Jane Robson in Hawick in 1834. Their children included: Charles (b.c.1837); William (b.c.1840); and Isabella (b.c.1842). Robert (1855–1934) younger son of George and Agnes Stewart. He married Agnes Revel in 1876. He could be the 'Robbie Speedy' mentioned in 'Hawick Immortals'. William (b.1812/3) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the Back Row, in 1851 he was living on the Kirkwynd and was in Mather's Close in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children were: John (b.c.1839); Helen (b.c.1840); Charles (b.c.1841), who married Agnes Stevenson; Mary (b.c.1843); Robert (b.c.1845); James (b.c.1846); and Robert (b.c.1853). He also had a step-daughter, Mina Young, suggesting that his wife was previously married to a Young. He is probably the William who emigrated (with his family) to Guelph, Ontario and worked as a weaver in the factory of McCrae & Armstrong; while John Inglis was working there, he led the men to stop the machines and sing 'Teribus' at the factory during the Common Riding of 1876.

speldert (spel-dur') adj., arch. spread – ‘...When the bairns come in wi’ their glaur-speldered shoon’ [WL], stretched, extended, split open and spread out (as a fish) – ‘A’ve taen a notion o a speldert herreen ti ma tei’ [ECS].

spelk (spelk) n., arch. a surgical splint, v., arch. to splint.

spell (spel) v., arch. to exaggerate – ‘To spell, To asseverate falsely, Roxb.’ [Jo.J].

spelleen (spe-leen) n., arch. spelling – ‘Oo’ve hed ever sae mony ill coonts an ill spelleens at the skuil the day, bit A got thum aa richt’ [ECS].

Spence (spens) n. Alan (12th/13th C. listed in the period 1214–49 as witness to the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey. His name was given as ‘Alano spens’. It seems likely that he was somehow associated with Lilliesleaf. Barry L. (1950/1–2017) son of William, he ran Spence’s Music Shop for more than half a century, taking over from his father in 1966. Starting at the height of Beatlemania, he was the main person from whom Teries bought hit records through the last decades of the 20th century and into the 21st. A blues fan himself, he stocked all kinds of music. He was a long-standing member of the Teviotdale Harriers. His wife is Margaret and their children Adrienne and Sandi. John of Condie (d.1573) son of James, he became a Lord Advocate in Scotland. He was also Queen’s Advocate to Mary, Queen of Scots, from 1555. He acted as one of the curators for the young Sir Walter Scott, whose father had been killed in 1552. In 1564/5 he signed the bond between the Scotts and the Kers and also signed the further bond of 1568/9. Rev. John (19th C.) minister at Denholm Congregational Kirk 1844–46. In 1844 he married Ann Drew of Portobello. Rev. John Ryrie (b.1880) born in Helensburgh, son of James and Jane Ryrie. He graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1901 and B.D. in 1905, and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1905. He became assistant at South Leith before being ordained as minister at Southdean in 1907. He remained there until 1950. He married Janet, daughter of James Currie and their children included James (b.1911). Matthew (16th C.) farmer at Weens. His barn and yard are mentioned in the 1562 document regarding the Barony of Feu-Rule.

Spence’s (spen-seez) n. Spence’s Music Shop at 4 Buccleuch Street, which has been Hawick’s main supplier of recorded music, instruments and equipment from 1966. The business was started by William Spence in Drumlanrig Square in 1962 before moving to its familiar location. William’s son Barry retired in 2017.

Spender (spen-dur) n. Robert ‘Rab’ (17th C.) recorded on a gravestone in Abbotrule. His wife ‘Margat Turnbull’ was commemorated on a stone that was set into the east window of the ruined church, but is now not discernible.

sperk (sperk) n. a spark – ‘ee think ee’re a bright sperk div ee?’, v. to spark – ‘And the roar of the pitte was in their mouthes, And its fire was sperkin i’ their eyn’ [JTe], ‘...whaese heidmaister Robert Wood sperked off his lifelong interest in poetry’ [IWL], to issue, fly out, to sputter (as grease in cooking), to spatter.

sperkit (sper-kee’, -ki’) pp., poet. sparked – ‘The kerlyn’s eye it sperkyt wi’ joy, Her leathery chaftis grew wide ...’ [JTe].

the Spetch (thu-speech) n. the Spetchman’s (or Spetchmond) Haugh, an area of the Teviot above the Laurie Bridge, a favourite area for bathing in the Summer – ‘Yer great-great-grannie’s great-great-grannie Bathed in my Spetch in sunshine balmy ...’ [WP], ‘...Dookin in the Spetch was braw Divin in off the Dunk wa’ [IWL].

the Spetchman’s Haugh (thu-speech-minz-hawch) n. full name for the Spetch, being the flat land in the Park, on the south bank of the Teviot adjacent to the Laurie Bridge. The area was used in the period 1812–14 for morning roll call of the French prisoners of war in Hawick. The name is old, but not officially recorded until recently, hence its origin is obscure. It may have been pronounced as ‘spetchin’ in a transcript from 1764 (although willows are a prominent riverside feature near there, there is no evidence to support suggestions that it comes from an old Scots word for ‘willow’, and it seems more likely to derive from a personal name like ‘Spetch’ which means a leather patch or a cobbler in some dialects).

the Spetchman’s Sang (thu-speech-minz-sawng) n. poem written by David Hill, with the refrain ‘A day frae Hawick’s a day wasted’. Music was written for it by Scocha in 2001.

Spetchmond Haugh (speech-mund-hawch) n. a variant on the old name for the Spetch.

speug see spug

spewin (spew-in) adj. extremely bad-tempered – ‘spewin o ill-naitur’.

the Spider Hoose (thu-spI-dur-hoos) n. name for an outbuilding at Branxholme. Tradition says that it was either named after one of the Duke of Buccleuch’s favourite horses, or after a story connected with Wullie Craw climbing up to its rafters. It is recorded as 'Spider's House' in the Ordnance Survey Name Book and map of 1859, to the west of the castle ruins.

spiel see speel

spier see speir

Spiers (speerz) n. Rev. George pastor of Hawick Baptist Church around the 1950s. He was also minister at Shotts in Glasgow.

spile (spīl, spī-ul) v., arch. to spoil – '...for breach of Sabbath by gutting herring in the evening thereof, qch he ingeniously acknowledged, thinking they would spile if lying ungutted until ye Monday' [PR1712].

spill (spil) v., arch. to spoil, damage, ruin something – '... and gif any wobstar spillies, and makes not sufficient work after tryell, under the pane of £10 to the Bailies, and satisfaction to the party owner thereof' [BR1657].

Spinnie Bank (spi-nee-bawngk) n. area on the west side of the Liddel Water just north of Langhaugh, passed through by Spinnie Sike.

Spinnie Sike (spi-nee) n. stream that runs roughly south-east to join the Hermitage Water near Netherraw. There are the remains of 2 stock enclosures and sheep stell to the south of the stream. There was once a blacksmith's shop at 'Spinniesbank-End'.

spinnel (spi-nul) n., arch. a spindle.

spinniers (spin-nee-urz) n., pl., arch. a woman's cap with long lappets, a pinner – '... Aw'll leave her ma eye-holes To be a squintin'-glass To set her spinniers streight, For they often stude aglei' [JSB].

Spinniesbank (spi-nee-bawngk) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It is marked on Stobie's 1770 map just to the north of Langhaugh, and must have been located on Spinnie Sike.

spinnin (spi-nin) n. the industry of spinning yarn in Hawick grew up in the early 18th century and became fully established in the 1750s. Women would spin on the 'muckle wheel' and the yarn was carried on horseback to places such as Kendall, Boroughbridge (Yorkshire) and Stirling. The spinning wheel held a prominent place in households into the early 19th century, a wheel being the main gift for a new bride. The two main types were the 'little wheel' and the 'meikle (or muckle) wheel', an example of the former from Crumhaughhill being in the Museum. In 1733 a spinning school was opened in Hawick and in 1734 a spinning mistress was hired from England to take charge of the school, with some funding from the Board of Trustess for Manufactures. The first factor for the school was Robert Howison, and the instigation for founding it came from Douglas of Cavers, as well as Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, John Chisholme of Stirches and some other local gentlemen. Weaving appears to have been added about 1736. The industry really took off when machinery was first introduced around 1798. In about 1850 it was estimated that yarn-spinning supplied about 1300 looms in Hawick.

spinnin jenny (spi-nin-je-nee) n. a spinning machine that allowed multiple spindles to be turned using a single wheel, invented by James Hargreaves in Lancashire in 1764, and named after his daughter. It was in use in Hawick from the late 18th century until the mid-19th. In 1816 there were as many as 100 hand spinning jennies in the town. It was eventually replaced by the 'spinning mule', invented by Samuel Crompton; with the invention of an automated version in 1825 it was soon in wide use in Hawick's spinning mills.

spinnin jenny (spi-nin-je-nee) n., arch. a cranefly, 'daddy longlegs', a toy made with a piece of pipe-stem and a match, which spins by twisting a thread attached to the middle of the match and threaded through the pipe-stem (cf. jenny-spinner).

spinnle (spi-nul) n. a spindle – 'And the yairns whussle throwe the hacks Frae spinnle heavy banks' [WL].

the Spion Kop (thu-spi-in-kop) n. former drinking club based on the Loan from about 1890 (named after the mountain in Natal, which was the scene of a defeat of the British by the Boers in 1900, and Dutch for 'Look-out Hill').

spirly (spir-lee) adj., arch. spindly, thin.

spirly-leggit (spir-lee-le-gee) adj., arch. having thin legs.

spitefi (spi'-fi) adj. spiteful – '... Her mither's choice, to be fair to the lass, For a spitefu' dame was Herodias' [WL] (also written 'spitefu').

spite o (spīt-ō) prep., arch. in spite of – '... To drive care awa, spite o' frost, wund, an' snaw, The young fellows roond gathert there, man' [JoHa], 'Yet spite o' their snortin' an' snuffin' ...' [JoHa], '... Her mither's choice, to 'Yet, spite o' needle, yarn an' clout, His waulit hair was keekin' out' [RDW].

spither (spi-thur) n., poet. empty speech, frothy talk – '... Or some auld aunt's loquacious swither O' with and glee', 'Wha valu'd not your college spither, A rigmarie' [JR] (this word is obscure).

Spittal (spi'-ul) n. fishing village south of Berwick that became a seaside resort town in the 19th century – 'Thae browt 'im a mount for heiz got the smittal Juist half the size o' a donkey at Spittal' [MB]. Also a local name for Spittal-on-Rule and other former hospitals, e.g. Smailholm Spittal.

Spittal see Spittal-on-Rule

Spittal Brig (spi'-ul-brig) n. bridge at Spittal-on-Rule, carrying the A698 across the Rule Water. The original bridge was built in 1748 by the Douglasses of Cavers and stands just to the north of the modern bridge.

Spittalflatt (spi'-ul-flaw') n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Spittelflatt' in 1541. It is stated to be valued at 6 merks and at that time vacant, but formerly tenanted along with the lands of Flatt. It is presumably adjacent to Flatt. The connection is to a hospital is unclear, but just to the north is Abbotshaws.

Spittal Haugh (spi'-ul-hawch) n. former farm near Spittal-on-Rule. It was a tenanted farm of the Cavers estate.

Spittal Mill (spi'-ul-mil) n. corn mill of the 17th century in Spittal-on-Rule, and name of the associated farm. The old Teind Barn there was presumably connected with the mill. James Scott was miller there in 1694. In the 18th century the lands of Spittal-on-Rule were separated between the Murrays, Veitches and Bunyans, with the Veitches being tenants of the mill lands. John Veitch is recorded as tenant in 1792–97, Mark Turnbull in 1837, James Turnbull in 1852 and James Ingles in the 1860s.

Spittal-on-Rule (spi'-ul-on-rool) n. former village in the easternmost part of Cavers Parish, near the confluence of the Teviot and the Rule, between Denholm and Bedrule, off the A698. Rich in history, it is now little more than a farm. A leper hospital was probably founded there before 1425, with an attached chapel, possibly dedicated to St. Mary. The location of the chapel may have been the same as the later teind barn, or very close. In the chapel in 1425/6 there was a meeting of Turnbolls, Scotts and others to investigate the leprosy of John Turnbull of Minto (since lepers were legally forbidden from holding lands). John Davidson in Minto was recorded in 1493 having stolen 100 ells of woollen cloth from there. George Thomson was recorded there in 1502 (when he had 2 pigs stolen) and John Scott was also recorded there in the same year. The patronage of the church there was granted to James Douglas of Cavers in 1508 and the 'advocation and gift of the kirk of Spitaill' was listed among the rights inherited by the Barons of Cavers in 1509. The small graveyard was still used in the

Spittal-on-Rule

18th century, and the vestiges of a former orchard were still clear in the early 20th century. At the nearby 'Dead Haugh' the Turnbolls are supposed to have begged the King's forgiveness (with ropes around their necks) in 1494, instead every tenth man being hanged. The town was burned by Hertford's men in 1545, probably destroying the hospital and chapel. However, the 'advocation of the church' was still mentioned in the 1558 Douglas of Cavers charter. In 1554 an acre of land 'in terris hospitlis de Rowle, super lie Harparhill' was granted to Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry, along with the advowson of the chapel of St. Mary at Caerlenrig (perhaps suggesting a connection between the chapel at Caerlenrig and the one associated with the leper hospital at Spittal). The Mains of Spittal-on-Rule was sold by William Douglas of Cavers to Gilbert Ker of Primside in 1563. The lands were farmed by Patrick Storie in 1605 and Richard Brown in 1610. Robert and John Wright were tenants there in 1642. John Lindsay was tenant there in 1684 when declared as a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. 9 people were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Adam Leyden was there in 1721, Alexander Gowk in 1726, John Bunyan in 1727–30, John Veitch in 1727, James Bunyan in 1728, William Veitch in 1729–30 and William Douglas in 1733–44. John Fairbairn was there in 1781 and Thomas Rutherford and Archibald Whillans were servants in 1799. Thomas Rutherford, John Murray, John Henry and Archibald Whillans were living there in 1801. There were 3 tenants in the 18th century, the Murrays, Veitches and Bunyans, but the 3 holdings were combined in 1807. Thomas Bunyan was there in 1795. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William Johnstone is recorded as tenant in 1797. Robert Middlemas was a servant there in 1797 and George Veitch in 1799. John Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and 1851, James Turnbull in 1861 and William G. Turnbull in 1868. It was purchased by Thomas Green Shields Leadbetter from Mrs. Palmer-Douglas in 1913. The farm was a major local supplier of Leicester rams in the 19th century. Several ruins can still be found here, including the Teind Barn, once the oldest building in the parish, and an ancient stone grave, found in a small knoll near the modern farmhouse. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows the location of the site of the chapel and old graveyard. The Kirkyard (or 'Leper') Well was said to possess healing powers, and the last Denholm witch was buried here. The hospital that gave its name to the location was possibly for lepers and maintained by monks from one of the nearby abbeys. A road bridge crosses the Rule Water nearby, with the adjacent arch of an older structure. The village was the location for a toll on the road between Denholm and Jedburgh; the Toll House at the road bend has had its windows bricked up and painted over with ‘false’ windows. Often locally called just ‘Spittal’ (and spelled various ways in the past, such as ‘Spittle’ and ‘Spittalrule’; the origin of the name is ‘hospital by the river Rule’, with ‘spital’ being a Middle Scots word for a hospital, usually connected with a monastery; there are many places in Scotland and northern England that are also called ‘Spittal’ for the same reason; the name first occurs as ‘spittale de roull’ in 1493, then ‘villa de spittale’ in 1502, ‘Spittale’ in 1508, ‘Spitall’ in 1509, ‘Ecclesia de Spittale’ in 1511, ‘Rewle Spittel’ in 1545, ‘the Spyttyll, Roull’ in 1548/9, ‘Spittalroull’ in 1558, ‘Spytall of Roule’ in 1563, ‘Spittroull’ in 1576/7, ‘Rowll Spittell’ in 1605, ‘Rowlespittell’ in 1610, ‘Rowllspittle’ in 1619, ‘Spitle’ in 1694 and ‘Spital’ in 1801; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Spittell’).

Spittal Plantin (spi’-ul-plawn-tin) n. former name for a plantation near Spittal-on-Rule. It is unclear whether this referred to a wood near Spittal Ford, by the Teviot, or a wood by the Rule. The linen weavers of the Denholm area used to soak their lint near here.

Spittalrule see Spittal-on-Rule

Spittal Toll (spi’-ul-tōl) n. former toll-house at Spittal-on Rule, on the corner of the A698, with the road to the north-west formerly leading to the ford. The building is well known for its pretend painted windows. It is also known as ‘The Lucky Hoose’.

Spittaltoon (spi’-ul-toon) n. lost place name in Liddesdale, once part of the lands of Mangerton. It is listed as ‘Speteltoun’ and worth 4 pounds in a rental roll of c.1376.

Spittal Toor (spi’-ul-toor) n. Spittal Tower, modern farmhouse on the site of a former fortified house, west of Bedrule, up the Tower Burn from Spittal-on-Rule. The former farm, often just called ‘Tour’, was owned by Turnbells in the 16th century. Gavin Turnbull ‘of the Toure’ was recorded in 1551 and James Turnbull ‘of the Toure’ in 1579/80. It was valued at £104 in 1643 and 1663. The ‘Mains of Tour’ (perhaps the same as the Mains of Spittal) was valued at £560 in 1643 and at that time owned by Douglas of Bonjedward. By 1678 the former lands of Turnbull of Toor were then in the hands of the Douglasses of Cavers. The farm was tenanted by the Murrays in the 18th century, ancestors of ‘Dictionary’ Murray. John Murray was a gardener living there in 1715. [blank] Clerk was there in 1742 and Robert Cavers in 1778. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William Johnstone, younger, was recorded as farmer there in 1797 and Charles Scott was a servant there in the same year. Robert Bain was a servant there in 1799 and in 1801 William Tait and Samuel Porteous were servants and Thomas Oliver a shepherd. Robert Barrie was farmer there in 1851 and 1861. It was combined into a larger farm with Spittal-on-Rule in the 19th century (it was ‘touris of Roulwode’ in 1622 and ‘Tower’ in 1715; it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 map simply as ‘Tour’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Tourr’).

spitter (spi’-ur) n., arch. a light shower of rain or snow, small drops, hence drivel – ‘Wha valu’d not your college spither’ [JR], v., arch. to rain lightly (also written ‘spither’).

spittery (spi’-u-, spi-tu-ree) adj., arch. consisting of small, driving particles (said of snow), sputtering (said of a fire).

Spittle see Spittal-on-Rule

splairge (splārg, -rj) n., arch. a splash of mud, v., arch. to besmear with mud, sprinkle, splash, sprawl – ‘Cf. ti splairg, which gives more the impression of besmearing (as painting or plastering roughly) by means of a brush or other agent’ [ECS] (also ‘splairg’; cf. slairg).

splairgit (splār-gee, -jee) pp., arch. scattered, spattered, especially applied to a liquid – ‘Ee’re slairgit in sun cream, bit splairgit on the sofa’, ‘...whan A’m owther geetin jaappeet an splairggeat wui dirrt, or dunsht wui folk’ [ECS], sprawled, scattered – ‘Hei wuz that tyred, hei juist splairgit oot on the bed’.

Spottiswood (spots-wud) n. Alicia Anne (1810–1900) eldest daughter of John of Spottiswood, near Lauder. In 1836 she married Lord John Montagu-Douglas-Scott, 2nd son of Charles, 4th Duke of Buccleuch, who left her a widow in 1860. In 1870 she succeeded her brother as heir to the family estate and adopted the surname Scott-Spottoswood. She was said to have had a large collection of antiquities and to have endeavoured to save many of the ruins of Border peels. She wrote poetry and is famous for composing the tune for 'Annie Laurie' as well as other songs. David of that Ilk (d.c.1550) son of William and Elizabeth Hoppringle. He was probably the 'Spottiswod of that ilk' who was listed in 1549 among the associates of Ker of Cessford who were accused by Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme of raiding and burning his farms at Goldielands and on the Borthwick. He married Katherine

Pringle and Jane Brounfield of Hardacres. He was succeeded by his son Ninian. James (15th C.) rector of the church of Rankilburn, listed in 1453 on a roll of bachelors entered at the newly founded University of Glasgow. He is 'rector ecclesiæ de Rankelburn'. James of that Ilk (15th C.) son of Henry. He married a daughter of Sir Adam Johnstone of that Ilk. He was succeeded by William, who died at Flodden. He, as well as his sons James and Adam and brother George, are recorded at the Justice-aire held in Lauder in 1493. John (16th C.) recorded in 1558 as a rector of the church of Hawick, along with John Sandilands. This is probably the same man who was appointed as minister of Calder in 1560, son of William of Spottiswood (who was killed at Flodden). This John (1510–85) graduated from Glasgow University in 1536, went to London, returned to Scotland in 1643, became a Reformer and was appointed Superintendent of Lothian; he married Beatrix, daughter of Patrick Crichton of Lugton and Gilmerton and had children: John, who succeeded as minister of mid-Calder; James, Bishop of Clogher in Ireland; William; Rachel, who married James Tennent of Linhouse; and Judith. John (1565–1639) son of John, who was minister of Calder, and grandson of William of that Ilk, who was killed at Flodden. He went to Glasgow University at age 12 or 13, graduated in 1581, and became a favourite churchman of James VI. He was appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1603 and translated to St. Andrews in 1615. He must have temporarily held the superiority of local lands, since he granted a charter to Robert Scott for the lands of Headshaw, Crawknowe and Clews in 1606 and another to John Turnbull for the lands of Barnhills in 1607. He was Moderator at the Assembly that abolished the presbytery. He later became Primate of Scotland and Lord Chancellor of Scotland. He crowned Charles I at Holyrood in 1633. He objected to the Covenant, escaped to England, was deposed and died in London, being buried in Westminster Abbey. He married Rachel, daughter of David Lindsay, Bishop of Ross. His children were: Anne; Sir John; and Sir Robert. Rev. Robert (c.1634–1696) graduating from Glasgow University in 1654, he became minister at Temple in 1663 and was translated to Crichton in 1676. He was deprived in 1681 for not taking the Test. However, he was translated to Abbotrule in 1687, but may only have been minister there for a very short time. He seems to have been a Presbyterian minister, who survived through the Episcopalian years past the Revolution. His wife's name is not recorded, but their children included: Jean; Alexander, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1677; Robert, who also became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh, in 1681; and Elizabeth, who was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1696 (spelled 'Spotswood' and variants).

Spoutburn Park (spow'-burn-pawrk) n. name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was listed in 1779, 1788 and 1811 along with Coach Park, with a joint value of £43 14s 6d. In 1780 it was recorded being on the western boundary of Lillielaw Park; this suggests that the stream passing through Minto Glen may have been known as Spout Burn.

Spoutgills (spow'-gilz) n. farmstead in Castleton Parish marked on Stobie's 1770 maps, with 'Spoutgillfoot' just to the north. It is on a stream to the south of the Tweeden Burn, perhaps corresponding to the modern Jordan Sike, in which case it would be essentially the same as Blinkbonny. John Armstrong died there in 1756 and is buried at Teviothead. Thomas Beattie lived there with his family in the 1770s and 80s.

Spout Sike (spow'-sīk) n. small stream that runs in a roughly westerly direction to join Dawson Burn just to the north of Saughtree.

Springbank (spring-bawngk) n. house at the foot of Dickson Street, built in the early part of the 19th century. It was the home of 2 generations of hosiery manufacturer Alexander Laings. It took its name from a spring coming down from a former pond in Dickson Street.

Springbank Clinic (spring-bawngk-kli-neek) n. former centre for infant health, based at Springbank House, next to the Haig Maternity

Home on Princes Street. The house was acquired in 1921 as a child welfare centre and home for the ‘Jubilee’ district nurses, with the clinic built as a 2-storey addition in 1929/30. Over the years it was used for many community health purposes, e.g. family planning, well-woman services and various voluntary groups. Its last such use was as offices for the Borders Health Board. It was empty after 1989 and sold in the mid-1990s as private housing.

sprot (sprō) n., arch. the withered stump of a plant – ‘Sprot, The end of a grain, or branch blown from a growing tree, in consequence of high winds, Roxb.’ [JoJ], a chip, wood shaving (see also spret).

Sprot (sprō) n. Edward William of Drygrange (1846–98) younger surviving son of Mark. He presented a bell to Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1867 he bought the estate of Drygrange from Sir George Leith and built a new mansion there. He married Marian Gray, daughter of James Boyd and also married a second time. His children were: Edward Mark of Drygrange (b.1872), who served with the King’s Shropshire Light Infantry; James William Lennox (b.1886); Harold Maitland (b.1888); and John Boyd (1889–98). Frances (1808–1902) sister of Mark of Riddell. In 1883 she gave money to built 6 cottages for ‘friendless and deserving widows or daughters of clergymen, and other ladies who had formerly been in better circumstances’. John (18th C.) recorded at Woll on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at ‘New Woll’ in 1794. It is unclear if he was connected with the later Sprotts of Riddell. John (1775–1817) son of James and Frances Blair, descended from merchants in Edinburgh. He lived at King’s Road, Clapham Park, London. He made his fortune in the East India Company and provided for his 2 sons (who may have been minors when he died). In 1801 he married his cousin Mary, daughter of Benjamin Yule of Wheatfield. Their children (baptised in Holborn, Clapham and Streatham) included: Mark (1802–81), who became owner of Riddell; James (b.1804), who (with an amusing coincidence of names) bought the Spott estate near Dunbar; Marion (b.1805); Janet (b.1809); Mary (1811–46), who married Sir William Maxwell; and Caroline Isabella (1817–57), who married Capt. William Fordyce Blair. It is unclear whether he purchased Riddell before his death, or whether that was done by his executors on behalf of his son Mark. Col. John (1830–1907) son of Mark. He was educated in England and Germany and entered the 83rd Regiment as ensign in 1848. He served in Ireland and then for many years in India, where he was also put in charge of public works, directing the building of a road. He was Lieutenant during the Indian Mutiny of 1858. He returned to Britain in 1860, being in charge of the depot at Chatham and serving again in Ireland and in Gibraltar. He took leave from the army spending 18 months touring Europe, but then resumed duties as Major of the 91st Highlanders. He was then appointed Assistant Adjutant and Quartermaster-General for Scotland. He is said to have been the first person to recognise the potential military uses for the bicycle. He retired with the rank of Lieutenant-General in 1885, having succeeded to the Riddell estate in 1883. Despite reaching a higher rank, he is often referred to as 'Colonel', this being from his position as honorary colonel of Princess Louise's Argyll and Southern Highlanders. He extended the main farmhouse at Riddell in 1898. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1885. In 1869 he married Georgina Mary, daughter of H.E. Surtees of Redworth Hall and The Grove, county Durham. In 1878 he secondly married Cecilia Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Rev. W.B. Doveton of Corston. In 1886 he thirdly married Charlotte Gertrude, daughter of W.T. Cole of Boscastle, Cornwall (whose mother was Anne Rutherford, daughter of William Scott of Raeburn and Lessuden and cousin of Sir Walter Scott). His children included: Cecilia Mary Dorothea (1880–1964), who married Patrick Keith Murray; John Mark Francis (1881–1946); Col. Alexander William Ramsay (b.1883); Cecil George; Edward Walter Hearle (1887–1975); Gertrude Gladys Violet (1888–1966); and Jack Hugh Stewart (b.1894). He wrote 'History of the family of Sprot and the ancient mansion and estate of Riddell'. He also wrote several military pamphlets. Maj. John Mark Francis 'Mark' of Muselee and Riddell (1881–1946) son of Lt.-Gen. John. He gained the rank of Major in the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards (or 'Greys'). He presented his regiment with the Sprot Cup in 1906 for an annual steeple chase race. He was President of the Scottish Agricultural Organisation Society. He served as Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Meloria, daughter of Sir John Adam Hay. His eldest son was John, who succeeded. Their daughter Cecilia Doriel married Sir William Whitelaw and became Viscountess Whitelaw. Maj. John 'Jock' (1910–2010) of Riddell, born at old Riddell House. His sister was the Viscountess Whitelaw. He was educated in Buckinghamshire and Kent and joined the British Linen Bank in Edinburgh, later working for the International Paint and Compositions Company in London. He served with the Territorial Army and during WWII was a lieutenant at Drem Airfield, an intelligence officer in St. Boswells, a captain in charge of Italian prisoners of war in Galashiels and then was with special forces in India. He was stationed in Galashiels when Riddell House burned down in 1943. After the War he modernised the Riddell estate, developing the woodland in particular. He also served on Roxburghshire County Council. He was on the Royal Company of Archers and was an elder of Lilliesleaf Kirk. He also chaired the National Farmers' Union in Selkirkshire, the Co-operative Forestry Society and the Scottish Woodland Owners' Association. He was awarded the M.B.E. for his role as Vice-Chairman of the Electricity Consultative Council for the South of Scotland. He became interested in the history and the history of the Riddell estate. He moved to Clerklands in 1987. He lived to his 100th year and was buried at Lilliesleaf. An autobiography was published on his 98th birthday. The estate was transferred to his nephew Andrew Grant. Mark (1802–83) eldest son of John and Mary, daughter of Benjamin Yule of Wheatfield, he was born in London, in the same house as Benjamin Disraeli. His father spent time in India and made his fortune in London. His great uncle Mark, was a financier who was involved with founding the London Stock Exchange. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. His father died in 1817, and inheriting a fortune, he abandoned plans to enter the army (with an ensign's commission purchased for him in the 90th Regiment of Foot). The Riddell estate was purchased in 1823, while he was still a minor. He was listed as proprietor in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1826 he built an estate office there, which is now the main farmhouse. He had the lands drained and planted and built several farmhouses at that time. Letters relating to an agreement he had over the march dykes at Riddell are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1848 he was appointed as a Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire and he also served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for the county. In 1851 he was farmer of 1705 acres, employing 12 men and 26 women and had 9 servants living with his family in Riddell House. He was listed at Riddell in Slater's 1852 directory. In about 1874 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls as owner of the Barony of Riddell, as well as Friarshaw, Newhouse and other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish; he also held some of Midlem, the superiority of lands in Ashkirk and Bowden Parishes, as well as Lilliesleaf. In 1829 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Shewell of Sutton Park, Surrey. His sons were: John (1830–1907), who succeeded; Capt. Mark George (1832–59), who died in Geneva; James Lewis Boyd (1845–57), who died at school in Ealing aged 13; and Edward William (1846–98) of Drygrange. Mark (b.1881) see Maj. John Mark Francis (also sometimes ‘Sprott’).

S.S. Mary an David (sintz-mā-ree-an-dā-vid) n. Roman Catholic Chapel at 15 Buccleuch Street. This was the first Catholic church in Hawick since the Reformation, made necessary largely by the arrival of Irish workers, who had been meeting informally through the 1820s and 1830s. Fr. William Wallace of Traquair worked to build the church and purchased land in 1841. This plot (later designated 15 Buccleuch Street) was bought from William Wilson, between the Subscription Rooms and the meeting house of the Society of Friends. The land formerly held several 2-storey buildings, which were demolished. The foundation stone was laid in June 1843 (amid inclement weather), officiated by Fr. Wallace himself, flanked by the 2 Bailies. It was opened by Bishop Gillis the following year, with several other priests in attendance, as well as Earl and Lady Traquair and the choir of St. Mary's. It original seated 400, the furnishings, altar and pulpit being given by the Earl of Traquair. When erected it was the only Catholic church between Edinburgh and Carlisle. A house for the priest was built in 1850/1 on the property immediately to the south and the associated school was started in 1854 (later with a separate building behind the Chapel on Buccleuch Terrace). A side aisle on the south was constructed in 1879, increasing the seatings by about a factor of 2. The Statue of the Sacred Heart was unveiled in 1913 and a War Memorial in 1920. The adjoining property (built as the Subscription Rooms) was purchased in the 1920s, and opened by Archbishop McDonald as the new Halls in 1930. The ornamental facade was removed in 1967 when renovations extended the front by a few feet. For much of the 20th century there was an assistant in Hawick, as well as the Priest. The Scottish Catholic Archives have records covering the period 1793–1939 and there are marriage and birth records from 1847 in the National Archives. The roll of the priesthood is: James Monaghan 1846–47; Patrick Taggart 1847–87; Patrick Shivers 1887–92; John Stevenson Lyle 1892–1912; George H. Bennett 1912–18; Thomas Gillon 1918–24; Edward Mellon 1924–30; Dominic Hart 1930–38; Daniel Kelly 1938–42; Gordon Gray 1942–47; James K. Birnie 1947–56; Peter Higgins 1956–86; Michael Sloan 1986–??; Jeremy Bath 2003–2008; Michael John Galbraith 2008–. A roll of the assistants is: Andrew staffish (staw-feesh) adj., arch. not easily swallowed, particularly from being too dry (noted by J. Jamieson).

J. Cameron 1936–38; James G. Harold 1938–42; Gordon Gray 1941–42; Eric Gordon 1942–45; Thomas Watt 1945–46; Thomas Engelen 1946–47; Charles Brodie 1947–50; Eric Barber 1950–55; Liam O'Mahoney 1955–56; John F. stack-yaird (stawk-yārd) n., arch. a yard used for stacking peat or possibly harvested crops – ‘...did freely confess the taking away from Mr Robert Cunningham, minister of Wilton, three burdens of oat straw out of the stacke yaird’ [BR1700], ‘...they would find the fowls ‘under the muckle thorn-bush i’ the stack-yard’ [EM1820].

Stafford (staw-furd) n. Joseph ‘Joe’ (19th C.) English stockingmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. He may have married Janet Smith in Galashiels in 1864. He helped introduce cricket to the Town. John (19th C.) left Hawick to be a soldier in India in the 19th century, writing ‘The Hawick ‘Callants’ Farewell’ before leaving. He had been involved in the local Good Templar movement. John (1840/1–1910) Hawick man who was the last hosier to operate in Denholm. He worked in a building to the east of the Fox and Hounds. His wife was Christina Wallace, who died in 1914, aged 74.

staggerin bob (staw-ge-rin-bōb) n., arch. a newly born calf, so-called because it is unsteady on its legs, also the veal from this (noted by J. Jamieson as a Teviotdale phrase).

the Stag’s Heid (thu-stawgz-heed) n. the Stag’s Head Bar, on the right-hand side of Drumlanrig Square since the late 19th century. It was formerly Gotterson’s Innery and probably went by other names.

staig (stāg) n., arch. a young horse, colt or filly, especially an unbroken one – ‘God send the land deliverance Frae every reaving, riding Scot: We’ll sune hae neither cow nor ewe, We’ll sune hae neither staig nor stot’ [LHTB].

stainch (stānch) n., arch. to staunch, stop, check the flow.

Stainton (stān’-in) n. Alexander ‘Elec the Bellman’ (1853/4–1926) son of Samuel, he was

Hawick's last Bellman, effectively acting as Town Crier. He lived on Dickson Street or perhaps 10 Wilton Crescent. He may be the same Alexander who was Precentor at the East Bank Kirk. He was celebrated in a poem by William Peffers – 'A wee bit earnest, faithfu' man, Far sma'er than his voice. Ye'd wonder how he can contain Sic devastatin' noise' [WP]. He can also be seen in a portrait by 'Elliot'. A photograph of him used to hang in the staircase at Arhtur Armstrong's store. He also appears in a film clip at the Vertish Hill Sports in 1909/10, wearing a distinctive 'yauchting-style' hat. Private Thomas R. Stainton (1896/7–17) of the Black Watch was probably his son. James (b.1800/1) from England, he was a nail maker in Hawick. In 1851 he was at 8 O'Connell Street and in 1861 was a 'Nailmaker Master' at 2 Melgund Place, employing 1 man. His 1st wife died in 1840 and his 2nd wife was Janet, from Kirkton. Their children included Elizabeth. A story is told of how a stranger sought shelter from the rain in his smiddy on Melgund Place around the early 1820s, and after he quoted some lines of poetry the visitor confessed that he was the author, William Knox, whereupon he was entertained inside the house. Robert (c.1825–90) born in Hawick, son of music teacher James, he apparently left Scotland in 1850 after an argument with his father. He became a preacher, living for a while in Chester and travelling around the north of England. He married Elizabeth Warburton and later Eliza Hayton Davis, and his sons were Robert Kirk and James H. Following a famous court case in 1867, in which several Union men were convicted of bombings and other 'rattening' crimes, he interceded to try to get one of the men his old job back. He is buried at Huddersfield. Samuel 'Sam' (1820/21–1894) a native of Berwick, he went to Nottingham to learn the stocking-making trade, then moved to Hawick, where he was Sunday School Teacher, Organist and Precentor at Wilton Church from 1855. In that same year he led the formation of the Saxhorn Band, for which he was the first bandmaster. His regular job was a woollen frameworker. He was living at 12 O'Connell Street (probably formerly No. 4) in 1851 and on Dickson Street in 1861. He married Sarah Sales and their children included: James; John; Robert; Alexander ('Elec the Bellman'); Ann (b.1856); Agnes (b.1858); Elizabeth (b.1860); Sarah (b.1862); Sarah Elizabeth (b.1864); George Frederick Handel (b.1867);

stak (stak) n., arch. a rick of sheaves of grain – 'Item in the stak yarde in Paleis foure stakis of corne viz. ane stak of beir and ane stak of beir and quheit' [SPB1579] (later called a stook).

Stalker (staw-kur) n. Rev. James (d.1816) son of John of Edinkillie, he graduated from King's College, Aberdeen in 1777. His brother Donald was schoolmaster at Rothiemurchus. He was licensed by Chanonry Presbytery in 1784 and in 1785 was ordained as assistant minister at Fort George. Here he was Chaplain to the Royal Forces, leading to some service that earned the gratitude of his Patron, William, Duke of Roxburghe (then Lord Bellenden). He was also made a Burgess of the Burgh of Nairn in 1793. He was presented as minister of Lilliesleaf by the Duke of Roxburghe in 1804 and admitted there the following year. However, this was against the wishes of some of the Lilliesleaf parishioners, who wanted the previous incumbent's son John Campbell as their minister. This disagreement led to about 70 families seceding to form a Relief congregation, which built the secession church in the village.

Despite a rocky start, he stayed at Lilliesleaf until his death, and remained unmarried. A letter to his brother describes in detail the circumstances of his presentation to Lilliesleaf Parish. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. He died at the Manse.

stam (stawm) v., arch. to stamp along, stumble, stagger – 'Wi' giddy pates an' yill-stain'd claes, A' hamewards they gae stammin'' [JoHa] (see also stammle).

stammack (staw-muk) n., poet. stomach, appetite – 'The master's heartie raise to his hass, His stomach vow'd to flynych' [JTe], 'Baith haunds on her stomach, sae great was her pain, An' she yell'd, an she scrauch'd, an yell'd yet again' [BM1901], 'Syne, when the stammack's satisfied, The twae heids cry, 'Weel met!'' [DH], v. to fill the stomach, satiate with food – 'Where wi' herry and spulzie, wi' raif and wi' stouth, We stammacked our hunger and quenched our drouth' [JTe] (also written 'stamach' and 'stammached').

stammel (staw-mul) v., arch. to stumble, walk with a hobbling gait, to stumble upon something – 'I stammelit in upon them when they were courtin', Roxb.' [JoJ] (see also stam stample and stummle).

Stamper's (stawm-purz) n. public house at the north corner of North Bridge Street and Croft Road (address 2 North Bridge Street), in part of the former post office building. It is well known as a local music venue.

stance (stans) n. a station, position, site, particularly used for a taxi stand or bay in a bus station, location (of a house etc.) – ... and over the middle of the stance of a house in the midst of the town ...' [C&L].

stanchel (stan-chul) n., arch. an iron bar, particularly fitted in a window – 'Received for 27 lbs. stanchel iron taken out of the thieves' hole window, ... L.0 4 6' [BR1787], a bar for keeping a gate closed – 'Deel hae'm! his doup soud be

stand (stand) v., arch. to hesitate, be irresolute, to trifle, idle (noted by J. Jamieson).

standard (stan-durd) adj. word formerly used to refer to classes beyond the three infant classes, so that e.g. 'standard one' was equivalent to 'primary four'.

the Standard (thu-stawn-durd) n. another name for Hawick's Flag or Colour – 'The said day the baylyeas and town counsell did unanimously agree that ane new colour, standard, or pencell, should be bought ...' [BR1707], '... Of slayer slain, of Standard won Down here in days of old' [JEDM], 'Our Standard shall wave as it waved of yore by Teviot's rocky bed, As o'er many a Cornet it has streamed, now numbered with the dead' [JEDM].

the Standard (thu-stawn-durd) n. full title 'The Standard, Border Times and Hawick Telegraph', a newspaper published 1887–90 by W. Morrison & Co., coming out on Wednesdays. It had originally been the 'Border Standard', published in Langholm, which combined with some of Morrison's other newspapers.

the Standard (thu-stawn-durd) n. name of a stagecoach operating in Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1837 it was listed leaving for Edinburgh every afternoon (except Sundays) at 1 p.m., going through Selkirk and Galashiels, and also leaving for London at 11 p.m., going via Langholm, Longtown, Carlisle, Penrith and Lancaster. The other coach operating at that time was the 'Royal Mail'.

standart (stan-dur', -durt) n., adj., arch. standard – '... by plurality of votes Robert Scott, merchant, called of Falnash, was elected to carry the standart' [BR1722].

Standhill (stawnd-hil) n. site for sidings on the Waverley Line, just north of Hassendean, in Anrum Parish. The farm (or at least its 2 parts) was once owned by the Kers. David Murray was recorded there in 1494/5, when sheep, cattle, horses and other goods were pillaged from there, as well as the farm being burned. George Turnbull of Standhill is recorded in 1553/4. John Hodge was there in 1580. Hector Turnbull had a charter of 'feu farm' of the '2½ lands' of Standhill in 1610 and it was held by the Turnbulls of Knowe, as recorded in 1631 and in 1660 and existing in the National Archives. John Turnbull 'in Standhill' had his lands valued at £120 in 1643; he is also recorded as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678. It appears to have passed to the Riddells about 1664. However, Turnbull of Standhill is supposed to have been the leader of the Covenanter supporters who besieged and broke into Drumlanrig's Tower in 1679. It later formed part of the estates of the Elliots of Minto; there are deeds among the Minto papers dating from 1610 to 1806. 'Captain Turnbull' paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748. In 1779 it is recorded that the lands were owned by 'Mrs Turnbull and Mrs Stenhouse' and in 1788 by Capt. Stenhouse. John Amos was farmer there in 1794–97. William Jaffrae and James King were living there in 1801. The Minto estates sold it in 1951 (marked on Blaeu's 1654 map; it was 'standhil' in 1494/5).

Stand-in-the-rain (stawnd-in-thu-rān) n. nickname for William Scott at the end of the 16th century.

stand oot (stawn-doot) n., arch. a strike. Hawick's first one recorded was in 1817 – 'Hawick had hitherto been free of stikes, or 'stand oots', as they were called' [RM].

stand oot (stawn-doot) n., poet. to be in opposition, rebel – '... Nae stoutlier stude out for their laird, Nor did the lads o' Liddesdale' [CPM].

St. Andrew (sin'-awn-droo) n. patron saint of Scotland, who was crucified on a diagonal cross in Patras, some of his bones later finding their way to Scotland. The saltire was adopted as the flag of Scotland, according to legend because it appeared against the blue sky when King Angus prayed to St. Andrew during a battle in 832 C.E. It is reputedly the oldest national flag in Europe. The same saltire has made its way onto the Hawick flag.

St. Andrew's Convent (sin'-awn-drooz-kon-vin') n. name of the former convent and nursing home at Stirches House.

St. Andrew's Kirk (sin'-awn-drooz-kirk) n. St. Andrew's Church, founded as a branch of the Free Church in 1866, to serve the north end of town and also Wilton. Originally called 'Wilton Free Kirk', it was founded largely through the efforts of Thomas Laidlaw and George Hobkirk, with the first organisational meeting taking place in Peter Laidlaw's warehouse in March 1866. The congregation started with 115 members from Hawick Free Kirk, first meeting in the Exchange Hall until the church was built on North Bridge Street in 1868/9, and then named St. Andrew's. Its gothic-style design was by Glasgow-based architect J.T. Rothead, and it had a spire reaching a height of 103 feet. It was constructed by local building firm George Tait. The church could hold 900 people, and below it was a hall that could accommodate about 200 for Sunday School and other activities. The church manse was built off Weensland Road in 1890. A church organ was added in 1904 and in 1911 there were major alterations (designed by J.P. Alison), with the addition of a church hall. A serious fire in 1922 resulted in major repairs and a closure of 18 months, during which time the congregation joined St. John's. The church was demolished in 1959/60, with congregation becoming part of Trinity Church. The site was used as a petrol station and later a car wash. A roll of the ministers is: Duncan Stewart 1868–1908; William Farquharson 1908–14; James A. T. Kennedy 1915–21; John Mowat 1922–30; George Sutherland 1930–40; Neil D. Craig 1941–46; John S. Miller 1954–59.

St. Andrew's Nursin Haim (sin'-awn-drooz-nur-sin-hām) n. private nursing home in Stirches, located in the old home of John Blenkhorn. It cares for about 50 elderly patients, is run by Augustinian Sisters and has its own chapel. It is also known as 'Stirches Hoose' and 'the Convent'.

St. Andrew's Place (sin'-awn-drooz-plis) n. street planned for Stirches, but never built, despite appearing on Burrow's street map.

stane (stān) n. a stone, stone – 'A' ye wha pry deep into nature In yirth, an' stane, an' a' sic matter ...' [JoHa], 'My stanes the steps o' those hae borne, By which they gloried to be worn' [AD], 'Happy sall he be that tak's an' devals thy wee anes agayne the stanes' [HSR], '... an' he rowet ane grit stane til the dor o' the sepulchre, an' gaed his waye' [HSR], 'I couldna' thole the cauld hearth stane ...' [JEDM], 'Oh! Had thae rugged stanes a tongue What sermons they could preach' [JT], 'An' he liked to tell his gruesome tales O' skulls an' muckle banes, An' raws o' teeth an' giant ribs He'd fund among the stanes' [AO], 'Wulton was biggit in comely stane Quarried frae native hills – Frei-stane and whun ...' [DH], '... But the hert is stane that disna warm To the auld gray buskit mither' [WL], 'Grey are the stanes o' Drumlanrig's toor o' the Border' [IWS], stone weight (14 pounds), note that the singular form is often used for the plural – 'the twae stane hei'd lost didni half please his horse', 'Full fifteen stane o' Spanish iron They hae laid a' right sair on me ...' [CPM], v. to stone, throw stones at – '... the deevils staned us in, and staned us oot, an' staned us a' the time we were there' [WNK], 'Evil deeds, ye dirty savage, ye, I'll hae ye staned oot o' the Haugh if ye gie's ony mair o' yer impudence' [JEDM], adj. made of stone – 'Item, whatsomever person that monds tp big ane stane dyck betwixt his nichbour and him ...' [BR1640].

Stanedge see Stonedge

stane-dumb (stān-dum) adj., arch. completely silent – 'To sit stane-dumb ...' [JoHo].

Stanefield (stān-feeld) n. area around the Stonefield Place housing scheme, and the former Stonefield Mill, between Liddesdale Road and the old railway line.

Stanefield Centre (stān-feeld-sen'-ur) n. club for old people living in the area around the Stonefield housing development, converted from a building on the old brewery site. It has more recently been used as a nursery.

Stanefield Cottage (stān-feeld-ko'-eej) n. former house attached at the north end of the Rockvale block on Lynnwood Road, reached over the mill lade by a foot bridge. The block was also referred to as 'Stonefield Cottages' and perhaps also 'Slitrig Cottages'.

Stanefield Mill (stān-feeld-mil) n. factory on the eastern side of Lynnwood Road, demolished in 1973. It originally received water power via the Slitrig Dam. It was purchased by William Elliot in 1850. It was occupied by Laing & Irving in the mid-19th century, then Noble & Richardson for a few years (from about 1871), and later Grieve & Laidlaw and J. & R. Macnee, becoming a spinning factory around the 1920s. A painting showing the mill was painted by J.F. Pollocj in about 1890 and is in the Museum (also written as 'Mills').

Stanefield Place (stān-feeld-plis) n. Stonefield Place, housing aimed at elder people, built on the sites of the former Buccleuch Nurseries and Stonefield Mill in 1971–73. A footpath leads there to the old railway line. The housing underwent extensive redevelopment in 2015/6.

Stanegarthside (stān-girth-sīd, -garth-) n. mansion house above the banks of the Liddel Water on the English side. It was originally built as a tower house perhaps around the 13th century, with wings added in 1682. It was long the seat of the Forsters. William Glendinning was at Nether Stanegarthside in 1778 – 'What map of the Border Country would be complete without Bewcastle, and Stanegirthside, where the Captain of Bewcastle lived?' [DH].

Staneholm (stān-hōm) n. former farmstead in the Upper Teviot valley. It was part of the larger set of lands called Ringwoodfield when leased from Melrose Abbey by the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. It is probably the land called 'Grangia alias Stanyhetoun' which 'Sym Scot of Fernili and Arche Elliot of Gorumberry' rented from Melrose Abbey in about 1557; it was worth £4 at that time. Blaeu's c.1654 map shows it as 'Stonyhelme' south of Southdeanrig on the 'Cairtann' Burn. The precise location is uncertain, but a connection with Stanley Hill, just east of Southdean Rig, seems likely.

the Stane o Destiny (thu-stān-ō-des-ti-nee) n. stone on which Kings of Scotland were historically crowned at Scone, which was removed and taken to Westminster by Edward I in 1296, to be fitted into a chair used to crown subsequent English sovereigns. Although just a rather unremarkable oblong of locally-mined sandstone, the object was held to have mystical properties, with legends claiming it came from ancient Ireland or even the Middle East. In 1950 a group of 4 Scottish students removed the stone from the Abbey and 'repatriated' it to Scotland. With major Border crossings closed the group smuggled the stone by car up the A7 and there is a rumour that it spent the night in Hawick (perhaps in Bob and Nessie Oliver's shop on Drumlanrig Square) on its way north. Certainly one of those responsible, Alan Stuart, had a granny who lived in Hawick at the time. There was a huge police operation to find the culprits and the stone, which was deposited at Arbroath Abbey a few months later, quickly being returned to England, but 'loaned back' to Scotland in 1996.

stane pirrie (stān-pi-ree) adj. daft, feather-brained – 'Stane pirrie (for daft) derived, I think from Pirrie's stone ginger in Hawick' [HAST1958] (probably influenced by the adjective pirry, with a play on the name of the manufacturer Alex Pirrie).

Stanesden Burn (stānz-din-burn) n. former name for a stream near Hermitage Castle.

It is mentioned in a description of the lands of ‘Merchinlee’ granted to monks of Kelso, which formed the site of the original hermitage. The description mentions a ford crossing the Hermitage Water where this stream joined. It has been suggested that it is the same as what is now called the Roughley Burn.

Staneshiel (stān-sheel) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, close to the Staneshiel Burn. This is probably the ‘Stanesheldes’ and ‘Stanesheld’ where John Nixon and Jenkin Nixon were in 1544. It was ‘Stanny sheile’ and ‘Stain sheile’ in 1590 and ‘Staneshleale’ in 1595 when Hob Elliot was there. John Crozier was also recorded at ‘Stanyesheile’ in 1590.

Staneshiel Burn (stān-sheel-burn) n. stream in the upper Liddel valley. It rises near Bloodybush Edge and runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water between Dinlabyre and Steeleroad-end. There are remains of cottages at the foot of the stream, while higher up it contains a waterfall known as ‘Kiddslinn’ or ‘Kitty Linn’. A farmstead there is recorded in 1544. It could be the ‘Stanehilburnfoot’ where labourer Walter Hislop was living in 1835.

staney (stā-nee) adj. stoney – ‘Whan thair judges ar owerthrawn in stanie pleges ...’ [HSR], ‘... an the gray waas o Fatlips keekeet oot threh atween the treis that skuggeet Barnhill’s staney bed’ [ECS], ‘A flock mattress wi’ muckle lumps That felt like staney rocks’ [AY] (also written ‘stanie’).

the Staney Brae (thū-stā-nee-brā) n. alleyway from Allars Bank to Allars Crescent, with houses being part of Allars Bank. It was formerly part of Backdamgate, and presumably named for its roughness. An anvil at the bottom marks the site of the old blacksmiths.

Staney Burn (stā-nee-burn) n. former name for Honey Burn.

Staney Cleuch (stā-nee-klooch) n. small stream that rises to the north of Skelfhill farm and joins the Allan Water. There are signs of cord rig around it.

Staneyford Moss (stā-nee-fōrd-mos) n. Stonyford Moss, boggy area on the former Synton estate, located to the left of the A7 just before Synton Loch. It was one of 4 boggy areas drained by the Laird of Synton around 1800, and described as covering 40 acres. During the drainage, old oaks and red deer antlers were uncovered. There are traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation to the south. It seems likely (although perhaps on the wrong side of the Ale Water) that this is the ‘Staniford’ listed in about 1170 in a charter describing the perambulation of the pasture lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk.

Staneygill (stā-nee-gil) n. lands in Liddesdale, to the north of Whisgills. In a rental roll of c.1376 ‘Stanygill’ was valued at 5 shillings. In a 1541 roll ‘Stanygill’ was leased to Simon Armstrong (possibly of Tinnisburn), and valued at 5 shillings. In 1632 it is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale, as well as among the lands of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. Stanygill Rig lies to the east of Tinnis Hill, with the Stanygill Burn running roughly southwards to meet the Tinnis Burn near Redmoss. Where Black grain and Dow Sike join the Staneygill Burn is a sheepfold built over the remains of a rectangular structure, possibly a tower. Jeffrey suggested this was ‘Puddingburn Ha’’, but that seems more likely to be much further north, near Paddington Sike. The remains of the tower here are about 7 m by 5 m, with the east wall missing entirely. Further upstream, on the west bank, is a platform suggestive of the location of an illicit still (it is ‘Stannygill’ and ‘Stanygill’ in 1632; ‘Stainygil’ is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Staneyhaugh (stā-nee-hawch) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 8 shillings. The precise location is unknown, but probably on the west side of the Hermitage Water (it is ‘Stanyhalch’ around 1376; it could be connected with Staneshiel).

Staney Hill (stā-nee-hil) n. hill to the southwest of Old Northhouse, reaching a height of 335 m. It may be related to the lands of ‘Staneholm’, recorded in the 16th century (it is ‘Stony Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but ‘Staney Hill’ today).

Staney Meadi (stā-nee-me-di) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Stoney Meadow’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Staney Stewart (stā-nee-stew-ur) n. dyke builder in John Ballantyne’s song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’. His first name is unknown, but one possibility is Andrew Stewart, and agricultural labourer living at Crow Byres in 1841, about the time the song was written – ‘And as for Stoney Stewart, He’s often scarce o’ stanes, And for to mend his aulf fail dykes Aw’ll leave him ma auld banes’ [JSB].

stang (stawng) n., arch. a sting, wound, stab or pain made by a sting – ‘Her words nae stang was cairry’ [WL].

Stanger (stān-jur) n. Tony (1967/8–) rugby winger, he attended Wilton an Hawick High and played for the school teams, as well as the Wanderers and Linden. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. while still in high school in 1985/6. He later played for the Borders, Edinburgh, Grenoble and Leeds Tykes. He first played for Scotland in 1989 and gained 52 caps, scoring a total of 106 points, including a record 24 tries, one of which was the famous Grand Slam winner. He also played for the British Lions in 1997. He married Bid and settled in New Zealand, running a company that helps to develop coaching skills – ‘Come and tell me, Tony Stanger, have your feet returned to earth? Was it for this magic moment that your mother gave you birth? When you louped halfway to Heaven, did you hear the mighty roar, As fifty thousand voices were all willing you to score’ [TD].

Stanishope (sta-nis-hōp) n. farmstead in Cavers parish, to the north of the Maidens, reached via a track from Shankend. The Catrail passes near here. It is probably the ‘Scane-hushope’ among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers in an English document c.1380. It is listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers in a charter of 1511. There are further deeds from 1614, 1624 and 1625 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. It was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was listed among the lands of Elliott of Stobs in 1678. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was still listed among the possessions of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. William Little was shepherd there in 1861 and R. Elliot was there in 1868. The area is under forestation and an extensive area around the former steading are now sometimes called ‘Stennishope forestry plantation’ (also written ‘Staneshope’, ‘Stenishope’ and ‘Stennishope’ on the Ordnance Survey map; the origin is probably from Old English ‘stan hus hop’, ‘the valley with the stone house’; the name first occurs as ‘Stanehushope’ in the mid-14th century, is ‘Stenhushope’ in c.1380, is ‘Stanishop’ in 1511, ‘Staineyshope’ in 1678 and is transcribed ‘Stoniehome’ in 1687 and ‘Stainhope’ in 1698).

stannin stane (staw-nin-stān) n. a large stone that appears to have been deliberately placed in its location, often upright, and of great antiquity. Examples near to Hawick include individual stones at Midshiels, near Saughtree (the Knocking Stone and the White Stones), at Hermitage (the Buck Stone), on Brown Rig, at Lilliard’s Edge and near Priesthaugh (the Tinlee Stone), as well as the stone circles at Burgh Hill and Nines-tane Rig.

Stan Reid's (stan-reedz) n. popular venue for dances in the pre-WWII years, located in the Drill Hall, and organised by Stan Reid. For the next few years dances were organised by the Territorial Army, but still referred to as 'Stan Reid's'.

Stansfield (stanz-feeld) n. Sir James (d.1687) receiver general for the Scotts of Buccleuch from 1673, taking over the position from Patrick Scott of Langshaw. He was a Colonel in the Parliamentary army. He was murdered near Haddington by his son Philip, apparently because he disinherited him. The curious story involves the body apparently bleeding at the son's touch, this being considered as a divine sign of his guilt, and after the son was hanged his tongue was cut out for cursing his father, his hand cut off for patricide and his severed head put on public display. William (20th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1947 he was the last 'ploughman' recorded in baptismal entries in the parish. This was only 2 years after the first record of a 'tractor man'.

stap (stawp) v., arch. to stop up (a hole), block, stuff, choke, fill up – 'Drawe owt alsua the speer, an' stap the waye agayne thame that persikute me ...' – 'Haud aff me, ye muckle lang staup' [JoJ] (also written 'staap' and 'staup'; see also stappin).

Staplegordon (stā-pul-gor-din) n. village a few miles north of Langholm and name for the surrounding parish. The settlement was formerly of greater importance and was once a burgh in its own right. The parish was briefly united with Roxburghshire following an Act of Parliament in 1672. It was united with Wauchope in 1702 and its name changed to Langholm Parish (it is 'Stabilgortoun' in 1324 and 'Stablegorden' on Sandison's c.1590 map).

stappin (staw-pin) adj., arch. striding awkwardly (also written 'staupin'; noted by J. Jamieson; see stap).

stappit (staw-pee', -pi') pp., poet. stopped, stopped up – '...but the lipps o' thame that speik lees sall be stappet' [HSR], 'The brander's stappit up' [GW], '...when a muckle lang car stoppit and a man wi horn-rimmed glesses stuck his heid oot' [DH].

Starcleuch (stawr-klooch) n. a hill between Cauldcleuch and Greatmoor, about 10 miles south of Hawick, also known as Starcleuch Edge – 'Breath of the heather from glade and glen, By Caldcleuch and Starcleuch and Penchrise Pen' [JYH], 'Just the verses, in strong-standing Scots – un-pawky, hale and sound – and all on one theme. A hill called Starcleuch Edge' [DH].

stark see stirk

Stark (stawrk, sterk) n. Andrew (1827–1900) from Westruther, Berwickshire, son of Robert and Isabel Moir. In 1861 he was a grocer and corn dealer on Dickson Street in Wilton. He was later a farmer in Lilliesleaf Parish and at Broom in Ancrum Parish. In 1858 in Wilton he married Eliza, daughter of James Riddel. Their children included: an unnamed son (b.1858); Mary (b.1860); Jane (b.1862); James (b.1864); Isabella (b.1866); Robert (b.1870); and William (b.1875). David (17th C.) tenant in Harden in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Ian (1954–), O.B.E., born in Gala, he became known as an champion in horse trial competitions. He won 4 silver medals at the Olympics (in 1984, 1988 and 2000) for equestrian events, as well as gold medals in the European Eventing Championships in 1991 and 1997 and was winner of the Badminton Horse Trials in 1999. He retired from competition in 2007 and in 2013 opened the Ian Stark Equestrian Centre at Greenhill Farm near Ashkirk. He was Chief Guest at the Common Riding in 2003 and guest of honour at the 2012 Hawick Olympics celebration. He was awarded the M.B.E. in 1989 and the O.B.E. in 2000.

starnie (stawr-nee) n., poet. a star – ‘When no’ a starnie lent its light To cheer my lonely way’ [JT], ‘... And sweetly the starnies a’ blink through the blue’ [JT], ‘I saw the wee starnies beginning to sparkle, Aboon Christen-berry I saw the moon spiel ...’ [DA] (cf. ster and stern).

the Star o’ Robbie Burns (thu-stawr-ō-ro-bee-burnz) n. song written in 1879 by James Thomson, with music by James Booth (an English-born accompanist, based in Glasgow). It seems likely that Thomson met Booth when the latter was musical director for a performer at the Exchange Hall in 1873. The song was first sung at the Hawick Burns Club by Thomas Strathearn on the 120th anniversary of Burns’ birth, in Graham’s Hotel (later the Holland House). It was also popularised by the tenor singer J.M. Hamilton. The song was soon taken up by Burns admirers worldwide. It is typically the only song performed at Burns suppers that was not written by the Bard himself (sometimes also pronounced raw-bee).

start an o’er loup (star’in-ōr-lowp) n., arch. the limited right of livestock to startle and leap over a boundary into neighbouring lands – ‘... did not disturb the Hawick horses, as they allowed start and oerloup ...’ [C&L1767], ‘The tenants of his Grace, whose farms lay contiguous to the town-common, had been in the practice of taking start and o’er loup with their cattle on the burgh muir’ [RW] (see also owerloup).

the Station (thu-stā-shin) n. Hawick Railway Station, built when the Edinburgh line was opened in 1849 and reconstructed in 1862 with the opening of the Carlisle line. The original station was about 80m west of the newer one, and was then used as a goods depot. An extra platform and subway were constructed for the 1914

Highland Show. The Station area also had extensive goods yards and sidings, and the offices of coal merchants. The last train left on 5th January 1969, with the track lifted 2 years later, and the buildings demolished in 1975. The site eventually saw the opening of the Leisure Centre in 1982. There is little remaining to indicate a station was ever there, although part of the original platform is incorporated into the footpath to Burnfoot. The name is still occasionally used to describe this area, or more commonly to refer to the pub across the street, which is one of the few tangible reminders of Hawick’s railway past.

the Station Brig (thu-stā-shin-brig) n. popular name for the bridge across the Teviot, officially called North Bridge – ‘When ee stood there on the Station Brig Just lookin’ at the waitter There was naething mair excitin’ And naething else wad maitter’ [AY].

Station Buildings (stā-shin-bil-dinz) n. block of houses between Commercial Road and Laing Terrace, previously part of Dovemount Place, but renamed in 1890, and now being ‘Station Buildings, Dovemount Place’. It is 4 storeys high, with shops on the bottom and ornamental dormers. The much more plain lower block on the corner of Commercial Road was added later (this may be the block designed for Alan Watt by J.P. Alison in 1894). In its early days the name ‘Station Buildings’ was displayed prominently at the top. Businesses here include James Byrdon, grocers, and Kearney the chemists.

the Station Hotel (thu-stā-shin-hō-tel) n. hotel and pub on Dovemount Place, opposite Hawick’s former railway station. Also popularly known as ‘the Station’ or ‘the Station Bar’. The building was constructed in 1871, with Scots Renaissance and Baronial features, and is Grade C listed. The signal box by the station had the ability to ring a bell there to warn passengers in the bar that a train was leaving in 5 minutes.

station-maister (stā-shin-mās-tur) n. a station-master – ‘... where the station-maister has verra obviously juist laid doon his howe and put on his official coat and hat when he heard the signal wires gurrin’ [DH].

the Station Viaduct (thu-stā-shin-vī-a-dukt) n. main railway bridge crossing the Teviot just south of the Station, having 6 arches. The last train crossed it on 18th April 1971, when lifting track. The viaduct was blown up (twice!) in September 1975. The base of one of the pillars is still visible in the river (also called 'Teviot Viaduct' or just 'the Viaduct').

statute (sta'-ew') v., arch. to decree, enact – '...the two present baylyeas, and toun counsell being conveyned, did statut and enact unanimouslie nemine contradicente ...' [BR1694], '...the said Baylyeas and town Counsell did statut and ordaine that the said Robert Hardie ...should carie the said colour ' [BR1706], pp., arch. decreed, enacted – 'The said day, it is statute and ordained that the cordiners shall try this market for insufficient leather and unbarkit schone ...' [BR1643], 'It was statut, enacted, and ordained that noe person ...should ...transport or cary any other colour, pencell, or standard ...' [BR1707] (also spelled 'statut').

statutory labour (sta-tew-tu-ree-lā-bur) n. a system by which labouring classes were required to undertake public works up to a certain number of days a year. It was particularly used for the upkeep of roads, following Acts of 1617, 1661 and 1669. In later years there was some compensation for the work done. The system was abolished in 1845 and replaced by land assessment to pay for hired labour. But this would be a regular burden on local men in the late 17th, entire 18th and early 19th centuries.

staucher (staw-chur) v., poet. to stagger, stumble about – 'She chased auld Winter frae the lea Ti staucher hame ti Greenland ...' [WP], 'Gin wi' your faith set firm aboon, Ye staucher on alane ...' [WL] (also spelled 'stacher').

staun (stawn) v. to stand – 'Thy rough and ready weapon's nane sae blunt, 'Twill staun' a rattle 'gainst their cuttl't gullies' [JoHa], 'Sae weel we trow that's no' begun, Will gar us turn or staun' aghast, man' [JoHa], '...behold, he stan's ahint our wa'' [HSR], '...for they loe til prae y stanin' in the synigogues an' in the nuiks o' the throw-gangs' [HSR], '...But mansions stan split doon the middle, now – On Sunnyhill' [DH], 'Hei was stan'in at his back door, ca'in them blots on the landscape ...' [DH], n. a stand – 'There's pethers and potters, and gingerbread stan's, Peep-shows, puff-and-darts, and great caravans ...' [DA] (also spelled 'stan').

staur-licht (stawr-licht) n., poet. starlight – '...The whaups a' beddit, and ilk lamb and yowe, Snug aneth the staur-licht, the haill nicht afore him' [DH] (see also ster, stern and starnie).

stave (stāv) v. to sprain, wrench, numb – 'A staved ma pinkie when the baa dunted off eet', 'Staived thoom = a sprained thumb (a painful strain caused by the end of the thumb coming into violent contact with a hard body)' [ECS], n. an injury caused by a sprain or twist – 'it's no broken, it's juist a stave' (also written 'staive').

stave (stāv) v., arch. to walk aimlessly (noted by J.A.H. Murray).

Staven (stā-vin) n. John (16th C.) listed in the Admiralty Court Book in 1557 as 'Johnne Staven in Hawick' when he purchased a tenement in Jedburgh from advocate John Moscrop. The land was on the Canongate, and he paid £20. It is unclear if his surname has been transcribed correctly; it could be 'Steven' or 'Stavert', for example.

Stavert (stā-vur) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Pott and their children included William (b.1635) and John (b.1640). Adam of Hoscote (1750–1827) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He bought the portion of Hoscote that his brother George had inherited from their uncle, George Pott, and also bought the other portion from his cousin John Grieve. He is probably the Adam recorded at Todrig on the 1785–90 Horse Tax Rolls and 1791–97 at Hoscote. In 1793 he paid the land tax at Philogar in Hownam. He is recorded at Hoscote on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He was confirmed in the lands of Hoscote by Hugh Scott of Harden in 1801. He paid the land tax at Hoscote in 1802. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819 (although his name was transcribed as 'Stewart'). He was owner of Cunzier-ton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish, as well as Outsider in Robertson Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He was the Laird of recorded when he borrowed money from William Elliot of Harwood in 1824 and still Laird in 1825. He married Anne, daughter of John Brownell of Breck, Recorder of the Isle of Man. Their only child was Hannah, who married Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn. In 1797 he secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Scott of Whitehaugh; she is recorded as a widow in 1851, living with her brother James Scott at Whitehaugh, and she died in 1855, aged 83. Their children were: Thomas (1798–1847), who succeeded; Margaret (1801–65), who also later succeeded to Hoscote; Elizabeth (b.1805–1862), who married Richard Bryn; and John (1807–59), who succeeded his brother Thomas. When he died his trustees included Walter Scott, George Pott and James Pott. His gravestone in Robertson Cemetery appears to say that he died at the age of 84. Lieut.-Col. Adam William (1939–) current holder of the ‘Stavert of Hoscote’ title. He was educated at Stowe and Sandhurst. He married Shuna Nancy McNab and has family. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included Janet (b.1776) and Walter (b.1778). Andrew (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included Elliot (b.1838). Andrew (1809–91) son of Robert, he was a farmer at Dykecrofts in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 he was farming 1500 acres and employing 13 labourers. He was also there on the 1861 census and still there in 1868. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1836 and their children included: Ann (b.1834); Robert (1838–99), who moved to England; Francis (b.1840); Mary (b.1842); William (1843–91), died in Cheshire; Thomas (b.1845); Margaret (b.1847); Helen (b.1849); Andrew Graham (b.1851); and Jessie Elliot (b.1854). His brother Robert (a discharged soldier) was also living with them. He died at Dykecroft. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Foster and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1656, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and John Henderson. Archibald (b.1806/7) tenant farmer in Saughtree. In the 1834 electoral roll he is listed as joint tenant along with his brother Robert (residing in Manchester). The lands were assigned to them by their father with the consent of the Duke of Buccleuch. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He was recorded at Saughtree in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1851 he was farmer of about 3,000 acres of ‘mountain-land’, employing 4 labourers; in 1861 it was 3,200 acres and employing on average 8 labourers. He lived with his sister Janet. In the early 1860s, at this suggestion, Oliver’s Auction Mart in Hawick added the sale of lambs. He is probably the Mr. Stavert of Saughtree who donated a red deer to the Museum in 1863. He was still recorded at Saughtree in 1868. Archibald of Hoscote (b.1828) eldest surviving son of William and Marion Park. He became Laird of Hoscote in 1857, succeeding his aunt Margaret, his uncles having already died. He also owned lands in Oxnam and Hownam parishes, and had a house in Edinburgh at 34 Palmerston Place. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 (incorrectly as ‘Andrew’) as owner of Cunzierton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish, as well as (correctly as Archibald) Outerside. In 1857 he married Rosina, daughter of William Hope, and she died in 1897. Their children were: William James (b.1858), Rector of Burnsall, Yorkshire and Chaplain to the Earl of Craven; Thomas Hope (b.1859), Major in the Leinster Regiment; Herbert John (b.1861) accountant in Edinburgh; Archibald Arthur (b.1864) with the Priory of South Queensferry, linlithgow; Francis Edward Vose (b.1870); and a daughter. Miss C. (18th/19th C.) listed at Florida in 1821 when she subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. This was probably the farm of that name in Liddesdale. It is unclear how she was related to other Staverts. Elizabeth ‘Lizzy’ (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1815 when her child died. Dr. Elliot (1810–85) son of Thomas and Janet Armstrong, he was born at Saughtree in Castleton Parish. His forename came from his maternal grandmother, Margaret Elliot. He graduated in medicine from Edinburgh University in 1834 and became a doctor in Preston, Lancashire, where he was also a councillor. In 1837 he married Margaret Jenkinson and they had children Elizabeth, Thomas and Margaret. He secondly married Ann Eliza Whitehead. He died at Saughtree and his surviving daughter Margaret was an executor. Elliot (19th C.) farmer in northern Liddesdale. He was donator to Hawick Museum of the 2 stone cross pieces which were found near the Abbey Sike in the mid-19th century. The first was about 4 feet long, in the shape of a sword handle, and found about 1850 near the ‘Abbey’. The second was a rounded head with a cross on each side, found by shepherd John Chisholm in the Abbey Sike in 1880. He could be the Elliot (b.1838), son of Andrew, baptised in Castleton. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Whitfield in 1730. He witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1730 for William

Harkness in Stouslie, Robert Scott in Tandlaw and James Turnbull in Appletreehall. He married Jean Elliot in 1729 and their children included: George (b.1730); Jean (b.1732); Bessie (b.1734); and Walter (b.1739). The witnesses in 1730 were Robert Scott and William Harkness (in the same year he was witness, along with Robert Scott, for William Harkness). George (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included Agnes (b.1737). George (18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He married Betty (or 'Eliza') Neil in Robertson in 1750 and their children included: Mary (b.1758); Thomas (b.1760); and Betty (b.1766), who probably married Henry Turnbull. George (18th C.) married Ann Roger in 1775, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter is listed alongside him, and so presumably his brother or son. George (18th C.) married Jane Gledstains in Hawick in 1782. George (1756–1807) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He inherited part of Hoscode from his uncle George Pott. He was a surgeon in the Royal Navy. He is probably the George who owned Outersiderig in 1788. In 1783 he married Elizabeth Brownell, sister of his brother Adam's first wife. Their children were: Thomas (b.1787), Deputy-Lieutenant in Selkirkshire; and William (b.1792), who married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windymains. He died in Liverpool. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Earlside. His will is recorded in 1682. He must have been related to William, who is recorded at Earlside in 1684. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Craighend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He is recorded in Todshaw in 1720, 1723, 1725 and 1726. He married Marion Wilson in Robertson in 1718. Their children included: Thomas (b.1720); John (b.1723); George (b.1725); and Thomas (again, b.1726). John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1738 he married Helen Veitch from Cavers Parish. Margaret (b.1740), baptised in Cavers, was probably their child. Perhaps the same John had children to a previous marriage, Agnes (b.1732) and Jean (b.1734). John (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1769. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised at 'Todshaw hillshiel' in Robertson Parish in 1771. She may have been the Betty who married John Henderson in Cavers in 1791 and probably John Turnbull in Wilton and died in 1831 at West Port. He is probably related to the earlier John recorded at Todshaw. John of

Hoscote (1807–59) born in Robertson Parish, son of Adam. He was Laird of Hoscote after Thomas, his older brother. He served as Justice of the Peace. In the 1850s he was living at Burngrove. He married Elizabeth Bridget Watson, who died in 1868, aged 48. In 1851 he was living with his sister Elizabeth Bruce, who was a widow. Margaret (1801–65) elder daughter of Adam Stavert with his wife Agnes Scott. In 1851 she was living with her mother and uncle, James Scott of Whitehaugh. She inherited the estate of Hoscote after the death of her brothers Thomas and John. She married her cousin, Thomas Stavert, and died without children. Hoscote was inherited by her nephew Archibald. Ralph Alan (d.1978) inherited Hoscote in 1932. During WWII he was posted to India, where he worked as an engineer. He married Pearl Gallagher and she died in 1985. The iron gates, removed during the war, were replaced after his death, as a memorial to him. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. Robert (17th/18th C.) early member of this local family. He is listed at Earlside along with William on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is also recorded in 1695 at Earlside (or 'Earlswood'). His children (baptised in Cavers Parish) included: Janet (b.1695); Robert (b.1701); Isobel (b.1705); and Thomas (b.1709). Robert of Earlside (18th C.). First of the local lairds (rather than tenants) of this family, he may have been the son of Robert born in 1701. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Hummelknowes in 1737 and Ashybank in 1745. His children included: Isabel (b.1737); Margaret (b.1739); William (b.1743); Jane (b.1745); and William (b.1747). Perhaps the same Robert, married to Henrietta Black, had several children baptised in Cavers, including Thomas (b.1750), Walter (b.1752), Janet (b.1753) and Elizabeth (b.1756). Robert (18th C.) farmer at Effledge according to the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He was probably son of Thomas, farmer at Saughtree. He married Helen (or 'Nelly') Pott. Their children included: Thomas (b.1780), who farmed at Saughtree; Robert (b.1781); and Helen (b.1783). He is probably the Robert recorded at Saughtree on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Coliforthill according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He may have been related to Thomas, who was previously farmer at Coliforthill. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Mary Graham and their children included: Robert

(b.1808); Andrew (b.1809), farmer at Dykecrofts; and Ketren Elliot (b.1810). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included William (b.1684) and Marion (b.1692). The witnesses in 1684 were John Purcell and William Purdom. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1695 for John Armstrong in Park. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son John was baptised in 1705. Thomas (b.1697) son of William, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the Thomas who married Marion Williamson and whose son William was baptised in Galashiels Parish in 1723. Thomas (1709–93) son of Robert. He occupied the farm of Coliforthill, it is said this was a reward for military service rendered to the Duke of Buccleuch. He paid the Horse Tax at Coliforthill in 1785–97. Although supposed to have died in 1793, he is probably the Thomas recorded at Coliforthill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1744 he married Elizabeth (or Betty, d.1793), daughter of Adam Pott of Hoscote; his wife's sister Jean married Walter Grieve at the same time in Robertson. They had a large family, including: George (b.1756), who inherited part of Hoscote; Adam (b.1750), baptised in Cavers, who was later Laird of Hoscote; Betty (b.1752), Jean (b.1758) and Janet, none of whom reached adulthood; and Robert, who married Helen Pott. He may be the Thomas whose daughter Betty (b.1745) and unnamed child (b.1746) were baptised in Kirkton. He may also be the Thomas whose children Margaret (b.1748), William (b.1754) and Thomas (b.1761) were baptised in Cavers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Broadlee in 1753, 1762 and 1763. His children were probably John (b.1747), Isabel (b.1750), Margaret (b.1753), George (b.1756), William (b.1759) and Mary (b.1760), George (again, b.1762) and Janet (b.1763). It is unclear how he might have been related to Thomas, farmer at Coliforthill. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1756. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Davidson and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1767. Thomas (d.1798) farmer at Saughtree. He is probably the Thomas listed there on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He is recorded in the Edinburgh Magazine as dying 'in consequence of a fall from his horse in hunting'. His son Robert probably took over as farmer of Saughtree. Thomas, listed as farmer at Saughtree in 1799 was probably his grandson. Thomas (d.bef. 1810) resident of Robertson Parish. He may have been the son of Thomas (who lived at Broadlee), baptised in Robertson in 1756. He is probably the Thomas who married Jane (or 'Jean') Kidd in Robertson in 1777; her death is recorded in Hawick in 1810, by which time he was already deceased. He was recorded at Harden Burnfoot in 1781 and 1784. His children included: Margaret (b.1778); Thomas (b.1779); Marion (b.1781); and John (b.1784). Thomas (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He married Margaret Dodds, who died in 1811. Their children included Thomas (b.1801), baptised in Kirkton. Thomas (1779–1831) son of Robert and Helen Pott. He was farmer at Saughtree. He is probably the farmer at Saughtree recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801; in 1801 he was recorded being in the 'Yeomanry Cavalry'. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Janet Armstrong, probably daughter of Archibald Armstrong, farmer at Sorbietrees. Their children were: Robert (b.1802); James (b.1803); Archibald (b.1806); Thomas (b.1808); Elliot (b.1810), who was a doctor in Preston; Helen (or Ellen, b.1812), who married John Murray and died at Wolfelee farm; Janet (b.1814); Agnes (b.1816); and John Armstrong (b.1824). He may be the Stavert of Saughtree who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. Thomas, J.P. (b.1787) elder son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He married his cousin Margaret. Thomas (1791–1869) born in Hawick Parish, son of Robert. Both his parents died when he was 8. He moved to Ettrick at the age of 14, where he was one of the men employed to haul building materials for Thomas Boston's memorial. In 1820 he married Margaret Boa, and they had their first child, Catherine in Scotland. In 1821 the family emigrated to Prince Edward Island (Canada), where he was one of the pioneer settlers. They had several children who went on to be farmers on Prince Edward Island. Thomas of Hoscote (1798–1847) elder son of Adam. He was born at Hoscote, and lived in the house until he died, unmarried. The family were Laids of Earlside and then Hoscote from about 1695 until 1900. He was listed as a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Hoscote. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1821. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was involved with financial deals with the Elliots of Harwood in the 1830s. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was listed as 'Proprietor' at Hoscote in 1841, living with 5 servants. He was succeeded by his brother John. Thomas (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He could be the framework knitter, married to Euphemia who lived on the Loan and was born in about 1805; his wife was Euphemia Bramwell and their children included Margaret (b.1835), Thomas (b.1837) and Jamima (b.1839). Walter (17th C.) mentioned in 1655 when Robert Ruecastle was ordered by the Hawick Bailies to pay him 'four merkis, borrowed when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh, and 7s. Scots for a leg of mutton'. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, along with George, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same Walter recorded at Nether Tofts in the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Either he or a younger Walter was recorded as a labourer at Ormiston on the 1801 Militia ballot in Cavers Parish. William (17th C.) recorded in 1684, along with his wife Jean, signing a petition to the Laird of Cavers against having to pay a year's rent towards the fine exacted for the release of the good Lady Cavers. He is the first local man of this family on record, although they may have been retainers of Douglas of Cavers since the time of Otterburn. He may be the William listed at Earlside along with Robert on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is surely related to James in Earlside, whose will is recorded in 1682. He may be the William whose son Thomas was baptised in Cavers in 1697. William (17th/18th C.) married Malie Stoddart in Hawick Parish in 1707. William (18th/19th C.) draper and grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. He may be the 70 year old William recorded on Main Street in 1841. He is probably the William who married Ann Brown and whose children, baptised in Lilliesleaf, included: Elizabeth (b.1812), a straw-hat maker in Lilliesleaf; William (b.1814), sawyer and ploughman; and Janet (b.1817). He is probably the draper 'Wullie', after whose 'roup', the main village draper became John Lunn. William (18th/19th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. William (b.1792) younger son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott.

He married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windymains. Their eldest surviving son Archibald became proprietor of Hoscote after the death of their distant cousin Margaret (who was also the wife of his uncle Thomas). William (b.1814) son of Lilliesleaf draper William. He was a sawyer on Lilliesleaf Main Street in 1851 and a ploughman at Riddell West Lodge in 1861. He married Agnes Riddell and their children included: William (b.1854); David (b.1855/6); and Thomas (b.1857/8). William James (19th/20th C.) proprietor of Hoscote. He wrote an introduction to 'The Annals of a Border Club' in 1898 (formerly written 'Stavart', 'Stevart', etc.).

staw (staw) n., arch., poet. a surfeit, feeling of nausea, pest, nuisance, boredom – 'A've gotten a fair staw at it' [GW], 'Siccar the slow, slow fingers rub, Straikin without staw, Smoothin his name on the wa' [DH], a nuisance, bore, v., arch. to satiate, become full, fill, sicken, tire – '...whan ma lugs are staaed o throapply blethers' [ECS], 'Howt! A'm fair staad o laif, eend on. Let's sei a hyimm-backen scone' [ECS], 'A'm staw'd o' kail every day' [GW], 'Oor wames we'll staw wi' feastin, Oor heids wi' ribaldrie' [WL].

Staward (staw-urd) n. Henry (14th C.) traditionally said to be the ancestor of the Stavert family. He may be the Stavert who carried the pennon of the young Laird of Cavers (Archibald Douglas) at Otterburn. The story is also told of how his helmet was so dented at the Battle that he had to have it fixed by a blacksmith on the way back to Scotland. The Stawards (or Staverts) are traditionally retainers of the hereditary Sheriffs of Roxburghshire.

stawed (stawd) pp., adj., arch. sated, surfeited, full of drink, tired of something, wearied – 'A'm staw'd o' kail every day' [GW], 'Weel, A ranged the haaf o the toon, or A turnt staaed' [ECS] (also written 'staaed'; cf. seek-staaed).

stawn (stawn) pp., poet. stolen – '...For lang might thou in Cumberland dwelt, Ere the laird's Jock had stawn frae thee. Fala &c.' [CPM].

stawt (staw') pp., arch. sated, wearied – 'Ye're fairly staw't – I carena, gae thy way w'ye; My din's a deevance – thankye sir, gude day t'ye!' [JoHa].

stay (stā) n., poet. a help, support – 'Becaus thou hest been my staye, therfor in the skaddaw o' they wings wull I rejoyce' [HSR].

St. Boisel (sin'-boi-zul) n. (d.c.664) Abbot of Melrose Abbey and teacher of St. Cuthbert. Almost all that is known about him comes from Bede. He was a Northumbrian, trained at Lindisfarne by St. Aidan. He is supposed to have had prophetic powers, predicting his own death in a plague. He was buried at Melrose. Relics relating to him were taken to Durham, and parts of a shrine dedicated to him can be seen in Jedburgh Abbey Museum. His day was once celebrated on 23rd February. The town of St. Boswells was effectively named after him.

St. Boswells

St. Boswells (sin'-bo-zulz) n. formal name for the town known as Bosells.

St. Bullion's Day (sin'-bu-lee-inz-dā) n., arch. St. Swithin's Day, 15th July (from St. Martin of Bullion, whose feast day was 4th July, which became 15th July in the new calendar).

St. Clair see Sinclair

St. Cuthbert (sin'-kuth-bur') n. (c.638–87) 7th century bishop, born in the Borders, possibly on Leader Water. He was Prior at the old Melrose Abbey in the early 660s, and this was one of the resting places for his body (although he was buried at Holy Island). He was called a saint because his body was said to have been miraculously preserved 11 years after his death (and also said to be still uncorrupted when examined at the time of the Reformation!). He is traditionally supposed to have lived for a time near the location of St. Mary's in Hawick, founding a church there and spreading Christianity throughout Teviotdale and beyond. A description of miracles described in a 12th century account of his life (by Reginald of Durham) contains one of the earliest mentions of Hawick. It also refers to a chapel dedicated to him, which has been identified with a site at Cogsmill, and which was associated with several apparently miraculous stories. This may be the same place referred to by Bede as a place where St. Cuthbert took shelter, and miraculously found a loaf of bread, when travelling from Carlisle to Melrose. His remains were removed from Lindisfarne by his followers and moved from place to place, finally coming to rest at Durham Cathedral, where they are to this day, along with several relics associated with him. In the Middle Ages both 20th March and 4th September were celebrated as his saints day.

St. Cuthbert's (sin'-kuth-burts) n. popular name for St. Cuthbert's Kirk.

St. Cuthbert's Chaipel (sin'-kuth-burts-chā-pul) n. chapel on the Slitrig dedicated to St. Cuthbert, noted in the 12th century by Reginald of Durham and believed to have been at a site near Cogsmill. The chapel is supposed to have been founded in 687 (the year the saint died) and already ruined by the 12th century. Stories were related by Reginald in about the 1170s, as told to him by Dolfinus, Pastor of Cavers. The miracles include: a crowd celebrating his saint's day being protected from a snowstorm, even although the chapel was roofless; 2 women from Hawick, Sægifa and Rosfritha, whose candle went out, but another one appeared; a woman (Dolfinus' mother) was cured of swelling, after being an invalid for 17 years; a flock of sheep belonging to a poor widow from Cavers Parish was protected from wolves in the churchyard; a woman from Raperlaw, who was crippled from birth, was cured; and Hugh Flamang from Yorkshire, fled to Teviotdale, spending the night in the chapel, where moss from the stone basin prevented his enemies from recognising him. There is now no sign of the building, although the location has been associated with an apparently levelled shelf at Cogsmill, measuring 49 yards by 31 yards, with the probable graveyard surrounded by an earthen bank and covered with trees. This lies about 400 feet south of Adderstoneshiel farmhouse, and the stand of trees was planted to mark the site in about 1830. The area was once locally referred to as 'the Chaipel Park'. Excavations in the late 19th century uncovered 2 carved globe-shaped stone finials, which were added as gateposts to the farm garden. It is suggested these date from the 17th century, although there is also a record of some much older stonework being unearthed earlier. The associated graveyard must have been used for centuries, but there were already no existing stones there by the mid-19th century. Note that there have also been suggestions that the site of the chapel may have been near Penchrise (presumably an erroneous interpretation of the name) or near Hummelknowes (because of the adjacent Priestcrown).

St. Cuthbert's Cricket Club

St. Cuthbert's Court (sin'-kuth-burts-kōr') n. housing built on Slitrig Crescent opposite St. Cuthbert's Church in 1984, previously occupied by James Melrose & Sons engineers. It was essentially rebuilt from a wing of the former brewery.

St. Cuthbert's Cricket Club (sin'-kuth-burts-kri-ki'-klub) n. cricket club formed in 1862 for the pupils of St. Cuthbert's School and junior members of the Church choir. They played on the Brewery Haugh and had George Peterson and Ben Tillotson as professionals at various times. Nicknamed 'the Saints', it was the last club to survive, other than Hawick & Wilton, folding in 1889.

St. Cuthbert's Fitbaa Club

St. Cuthbert's Fitbaa Club (sin'-kuth-burts-fi'-baw-klub) n. rugby club associated with St. Cuthbert's Cricket Club in the late 19th century. It was formed in 1877, with William Laidlaw as Captain for the first 2 seasons. They played against the separate 'Hawick' and 'Hawick and Wilton' teams, and won the whole Borders championship one year. The club folded in 1892.

St. Cuthbert's Haugh (sin'-kuth-burts-hawf) n. another name for the Brewery Haugh.

St. Cuthbert's Kirk (sin'-kuth-burts-kirk) n. St. Cuthbert's Episcopal Church. The foundation stone was laid in 1857, after the 5th Duke of Buccleuch gifted the land between Slitrig Crescent and the river and paid for the building. The design was by Sir George Gilbert Scott (responsible for the resoration of several English Cathedrals, as well as the Episcopal Cathedral in Edinburgh and the Foreign Office in London), with John Herbertson of Galashiels the main builders and Melrose's supplying the iron work. The church was opened in 1858, and gave the first permanent home to a congregation that traces its roots back to the Disestablishment of the Church of Scotland in 1689. In Hawick it is sometimes referred to as 'the English Kirk'. For a long time it started its services half an hour later than the other churches. It was named after the local St. Cuthbert, who is said to have had a chapel nearby. There is a stained-glass window showing him as a bishop holding the head of King Oswald of Northumbria in his hand (apparently representing the fact that the Abbot of Melrose was the King's Confessor, thus holding his conscience). There is also an 1889 memorial window to the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, showing him presenting a model of the building to the Bishop of Glasgow, and 2 memorial windows for the Scott-Watson family of Burnhead, as well as a War memorial window, unveiled in 1921. The nave had 4 bays and there is a bell-cot over the chancel arch. The reredos by J. Oldrid Scott (son of the main architect) was added in 1905. At that time the niche in the apse became the site for a statue of St. Cuthbert holding the head of Oswald of Northumbria, like in the window design. The chancel screen is by Sir Robert Lorimer, and was added in 1908, at the same time that a vestry was built (designed by Lorimer and John Fraser Matthew). The vestry contains the original communion table, lent to the congregation in 1847 by Isaac and Johanna Edmondson. A plaque in the church commemorates to 2 Grieves of Branhholme Park who were killed on board naval vessels before WWI. The nearby Church Hall was formerly part of the brewery (and was converted around 1980 and is now 2 houses). The church possesses its own Episcopal Cemetery, and the adjacent Rectory has been converted into houses. The church building is currently listed category B. A centenary history was written in 1958 by Hector McBean Hart. Records for the church and school covering 1847–1944 are in the National Archives. The roll of ministers (sometimes called Rectors) of the Church is: Robert Campbell 1847–54; John Rose Dakers 1854–82; Douglas Powell Ware 1882–92; James W.T. Hart 1892–1903; Edward T.S. Reid 1903–10; Alexander L. Ross, assistant 1904–09; Alexander J. Hay 1911–55; Philip Crosfield 1955–60; Edward Robertson 1960–69; Maurice Sunter 1969–70; Aidan Michael Burn-Murdoch 1970–77; Humphrey Lopdell-Bradshaw 1977–88; Jonathan Willans 1988–91; Stuart Maxwell Paterson 1992–??; Simon Cake 2019– ; – 'It was Christmas times, and the Christmas chimes From St. Cuthbert's steeple rung; And the holly-green on the wall was seen, And the Christmas hymn was sung' [JT].

St. Cuthbert's Kirk Club (sin'-kuth-burts-kirk-klub) n. St. Cuthbert's Church Club, a local musical society of the late 19th century.

St. Cuthbert's Schuil (sin'-kuth-burts-skil) n. Episcopal school near to St. Cuthbert's Church on Slitrig Crescent. The school was for pupils of Episcopalian families, and like the church was gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It was built in 1850–52 and had a house for the schoolmaster attached. The building was also used for a few years for church services. Previous to the erection of the purpose-built school there had been an Episcopal school on the Mid Raw around 1846 and another (per perhaps the same one) in the ballroom on Half-Moon Close, starting in 1847 or 1848. The new school was situated on the opposite side of Lynnwood Road, beyond Stonefield Mill and was reached via a footbridge across Slitrig Dam. The school was often known locally as 'the English Schuil'. Pupils over the age of 12 were transferred to the High School in 1928, and it became St. Cuthbert's Primary School. It was closed in 1956, and the pupils incorporated into the renamed Drumlanrig and St. Cuthbert's Primary School. The school and adjacent schoolhouse were demolished in 1972. School Inspectors' Reports for 1935–56 are in the National Archives. The register for 1934–56 and log books for 1941–56 are in the Borders Archive. A list of schoolmasters (perhaps not all of them being Head teacher, and some of them for only a short period) is: Mr. Ellis; Mr. King; Mr. Craven; Jacob Jay 1861–93; Mr. Bountvie; Mr. Beaton; James Turnbull; Walter Inglis; David Gillis 1894–1915; Mr. Lumsden; Mr. Cormack 1945–48; and Mr. Walker.

St. Cuthbert's Terrace (sin'-kuth-burts-teris) n. private housing built behind St. Cuthbert's Court, off Slitrig Crescent, in 1985.

St. Cuthbert's Way (sin'-kuth-burts-wā) n. 62 mile (100 km) hiking trail from Melrose to Lindisfarne (Holy Island), named after the 7th century saint who began at Melrose Abbey and was buried on Holy Island. It was established in 1996.

the Steadin Pump (thu-ste-din-pump) n. former water source behind the Congregational Church, also known as 'Bourtree Well'.

Steadman (sted-min) n. George (b.1844/5) legendary wrestler from Whitehaven. He won the all-weights wrestling tournament at Hawick Common Riding Games for many years in succession in the 1880s. He started competitive wrestling in 1862 and still won at the Grassmere Games at age 51. He also took the prize in the Liverpool Road (London) contest 31 years running. He was about 275 pounds and 5 foot 11 inches, and often won other events, such as hurdles and 'neatest costume'.

steal-wads (steel-wawdz) n., arch. a game similar to 'Scotch and English' in which each of 2 sides tries to steal the others bonnets from opposite sides of a playing field (also called 'steal-bonnets'; here 'wad' is a pledge; J. Jamieson notes this as a Teviotdale phrase).

the Steam (thu-steem) n. old-fashioned public laundry, situated at the old Baths in Bath Street. It was built in the early 1930's and stopped operating in 1982. For 50 years it was a regular meeting (and gossiping) point for Hawick families.

steamin (stee-min) adj. very drunki, totally inebriated (short form of a phrase like 'steaming with drink', although also suggested to be associated with the steamboats on the Clyde).

stech (stech) n., arch. a grunt, pant, deep breath as a result of exertion, stifled groan from carrying a heavy load – 'Wei war off – wui a yerck an a dunsh an a stech an a 'Parp!'' [ECS], v., arch., poet. to pant with exertion – 'He cam stechin' up the brae' [GW], to puff oneself up, makes oneself look important – 'Ye sour-mou'd fo'k pang'd fu' o' prose ... Nae doubt ye'll steigh, and cock your nose' [JR], to stuff with food, sate – 'Nae mair wi' roasted lamb or mutton He'll stech his greed' [JoHa] (spelled 'stegh', 'steigh' and other variants; cf. pech).

steel (steel) n., arch. a handle for a barrow or plough – 'What are you going to do with that?' asked the doctor. 'I'm just gaun to mak' a barrow steel'. 'Aye, aye, a shaft to-day and a wheel to-morrow', was the doctor's observations' [BP], a stall for an injured finger (also written 'stiel'; noted by J. Jamieson).

steel (steel) n., arch. a steep bank, spur of a ridge – 'My dog run it down on the steele, – not in hunting season, but no matter' [JTe] (used in place names, particularly in the Borders, e.g. 'Ashiestiel', 'Leapsteal', 'the Steel' and 'Steele Knowe').

Steel (steel) n. Lord David Martin Scott (1938–) born in Kirkcaldy, son of a minister, he became M.P. for Roxburgh, Selkirk & Peebles from 1965, at age 26, and was known as 'Boy David'. He remained Hawick's M.P. until the boundary changes saw him move to Tweeddale, Ettrick & Lauderdale in 1983. However, in 1970 he only won by 550 votes. He was Liberal Party leader from 1976, including the period of the 'Lib-Lab pact' and the SDP-Liberal Alliance, resigning in 1987. He was knighted in 1990 and became Lord Steel of Aikwood in 1997 when he retired after 32 years in Westminster. He then became the M.S.P. for the Lothians and first Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament 1999–2003. He rode to MossPaul and followed the Cornet on the Friday in 1965 and was Common Riding Chief Guest in the Millenium year. James (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John witness in 1510/1 to a letter of acquittance by George Scott of Whames and Borthaugh, written in Edinburgh. He is recorded as 'Johnne Steyll'. Judith Mary 'Judy' nee MacGregor, M.B.E. (1940–) born in dollar, she studied law at Edinburgh University, where she met her husband, David. The couple married in 1962. She has published poetry, plays and other writings. In 1987 she founded the Rowan Tree Theatre Company in the Borders, and in 2011 was awarded the M.B.E. for services to theatre in the Borders. She championed the renovation of Aikwood Tower (including wood recycled from the pews of Hawick Parish Church), later housing a museum to her idol, James Hogg, 'the Ettrick Shepherd'. In 2007 her play 'The Journey of Jeannie Deans' was the first production to be staged in the new Heart of Hawick auditorium. She has 3 children, Graeme, Catriona Judith and Roray, and an adopted son, Billy. The couple retired to live in Selkirk. Rev. Robert (1826–1920) born in Saltcoats, he attended the Evangelical Union Hall in Kilmarnock. In 1866 he came to Newcastle to be minister of the Congregational Church there, and remained until 1875. After that he was minister at Dalmellington and Galston in Ayrshire. During the 1851 census he was a lodger in Newcastle, listed as 'Independent Minister', and so he had an association with the village long before 1866. Sir Samuel Strang of Philiphaugh (1882–1961) son of William Strang, who he succeeded at Philiphaugh. He stood unsuccessfully as an M.P. for Selkirk and Peebles in 1910 and served with the Lothians and Border Horse in WWI. He was an M.P. in Kent for a decade, was later President of the Scottish Unionist Association and was created a Baronet in 1938. He served with the Forestry Commission 1932–49 and was in charge of timber in Scotland in WWII. He was a County Councillor for Selkirkshire, Lord Lieutenant for that county 1948–56 and an Ensign in the Royal Company of Archers. He was also a member of the Archæological Society.

the Steel (thu-steel) n. hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, north of Swanstead Hill and south of Branxholme Wester Loch, reaching a height of 326 m. It may be associated with the lands of 'Steyll' mentioned in the 1420 charter for half of the lands of Branxholme (probably from the old English for steep).

The Steel Bonnets (thu-steel-bo-nits) n. book by George MacDonald Fraser, full title 'The Steel Bonnets: The Story of the Anglo-Scottish Border Reivers', it was written in 1971. Fraser was known as a writer of swash-buckling historical fiction. His background makes this book both grippingly written and over-romanticised.

Steele (steel) n. Andrew (1811–82) local poet, born in Coldstream. He spent a few years in the parish school, worked as an agricultural labourer and was then apprenticed as a shoemaker, moving to Galashiels. He published his first poem in the Kelso Chronicle and sometime thereafter published a volume of his poems. He moved to Hawick about 1869 and published a second edition of his book in 1871. In later life he sold tea for a wholesale grocer. He was also a great dog lover, writing a poem to his dog Nailer. His longer verses are derivative of well-known English poets, but his Borders poetry is more valuable. He died at 14 Dickson Street and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (19th C.) factor of the Minto estate, recorded in 1885. Thomas (19th C.) married Margaret Landles in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1838.

the Steele (thu-steel) n. former name of lands in Liddesdale, associated with the modern Steele Road. The specific place marked on maps is the ridge of land just to the north-west of the road junction at Steele Road, between the Hermitage and Liddel Waters. 'Willaim Niksoun in the Stele' is recorded in 1516, 'Barte Nixson of Stelle', as well as Archie, Thomas and Alexander in 1544, and Will Elliot of the Steele in 1583 and 1599. In 1584 Harry and Archie Nixon 'of the Steill' were among men who signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens. John Elliot was there in 1590 when complained about for a raid into England. Additionally the lands of 'Stellis within the Dyk' are recorded in 1541, when it was tenanted by Nixons; it is unclear if these are the same lands or not. Francie Beattie was there in 1623. Andrew Young was tenant in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of Nether and Over Steele, and was combined with Brighouse, 'Ingrasswall', 'Guelbeck' and Cleuchhead. Together they covered 706 acres and were bounded by Taylorscheuchhead, Dinlabyre, Bygate and Shaws, with the farmhouse being marked near the modern location of Cleuchhead and another farmhouse to the north, perhaps around Shawshiel Rig. The 'Steele Road' is the name given to the road that crosses here, linking the Liddel and Hermitage valleys

(also written 'the Steel'; it is 'Stell' and 'Stelle' in 1544, 'the Steill' in 1586, 'Steill' in 1694 and 'Steell' in 1718; the same word occurs in other place names, such as 'Ashiesteel', and means the spur of a hill, with the same Old English root giving us the word 'stile'; see also Steele Road).

Steele Knowe (steel-know) n. hill in Southdean Parish, on the left side of the A6088 after the hamlet of Southdean. It reaches a height of 273 m. To the north-east is an old stock enclosure with turf walls, as well as 4 small cairns. To the north is another enclosure, with a bank and ditch. On the south-west slopes are the remains of 2 turf huts. On a terrace on the west side are the remains of 3 round-ended buildings, one of which is 26.5 m long and divided into 3 parts (and may have been a combination of byre and domestic uses). There are also other enclosures and banks in this area between the hill and Jordan Sike, some cut through by a gas pipeline. To the south of the hill there is a roughly 3 km boundary bank, which runs all the way from Jordan Sike to the east, to finish south of Lethem (also written 'Steel Knowe').

Steele Plantin (steel-plawn-tin) n. plantation in Liddesdale, running along the north side of the Steele road (i.e. the road connecting Steele Road station with the B6399).

Steele Road (steel-rōd) n. small station on the Waverley Line, between Riccarton and Newcastleton, now a house. The station was opened in 1862 and closed in 1869 along with the rest of the railway. The name used until 1900 was Netherhope. There was a signal-box south of the station, which has been demolished. The place name 'Steele' long precedes the railway, with Nether and Over Steele being farmed by the Elliots and the Croziers from at least the 16th century and surviving into the 20th century. 'Steele Road' is the name of the road that crosses 'the Steele', and the station took its name from that. Several large enclosures have been identified to the west from aerial photography, as well as 2 areas of rig-and-furrow to the east (sometimes 'Steel Road'; it is 'the Steile' and 'the Steill' in the 1580s; it is marked as 'O. Steell' and 'N. Steell' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Steeleroad-end (steel-rōd-end) n. shepherd's cottage on the B6357, south of Larriston, marked the end of the road over 'the Steele'. It is situated where the way to the hamlet (and ex-station) of Steele Road meets the main road. It may also have been called 'Riccarton roadend'. This could be the ‘Road End’ where William Elliot was recorded in 1868.

Stell Hoose (stel-hoos) n. house situated at the corner of Havelock Street and Wilton Hill, demolished in 1945, with the site becoming part of the garage there. It was described as 2 buildings when the land passed from George Haliburton to John Miller in 1813. Dyer Robert Scott was there in 1835, and foreman John Middlemas and mason George Oliver in 1840. James Black and John Middlemas lived there in 1841 and it is marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map (originally adjacent to the farmlands of Wilton Mains, so presumably there was once a ‘stell’ nearby; also sometimes ‘the Still’).

the Stellhoose Brae (thu-stel-hoos-brā) n. a former name for Wilton Hill, named after the house that once stood at the bottom.

Stellhoose Park (stel-hoos-pawrk) n. area beside the 'Stell Hoose', which was drained in 1826. The area later contained the 'Cadger's Well' from 1842 until the early 20th century.

stells (stelz) n. sheep enclosures. These are usually circular and often about 50 yards in circumference and five feet high, although they vary in size. The entrances are on the leese of the prevailing wind, and are usually built wider at the top than the bottom. The stone came by sled from nearby quarries. There are thousands of them across the Borders and there is a claim that the basic design originated in Hawick.

Stells (stelz) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1541 rental roll as 'Stellis, within the Dyk'. It is valued at 31 shillings and tenanted by Nixons. The lands of 'Litlesteill' may have been nearby; they were valued in 1541 at 6 shillings and tenanted by Bartholomew Nixon (it is also possible this was related to Steele Road or the Steel).

stend (stend) v., poet. to leap, spring, bound – 'The spring that ilk ane lik'd he kend; Auld wives at sixty years wad stend ...' [CPM].

Stenhouse (sten-hoos) n. (Stenhouse) John (b.1812/3) born in Holmes, near Melrose, he was a grocer in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory (when he was also a toy dealer). His shop was at about No. 51. His wife was Catherine and their children included Elizabeth, Helen, Jessie and John. John (b.1812/3) born in Stow, he was a carrier in Bowden. In 1852 he is recorded running a weekly service between Hawick and Lilliesleaf, Midlem or Bowden, leaving from the Coach & Horses on Saturdays. He was also notary in 1618 for a bond between Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. In 1619 he was notary public in Raperlaw when accused of being among many Turnbolls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who took hay from Huntliehill. As one of the few men who appeared personally, he was not declared as a rebels (also written 'Stevin').

Stevens (stee-vinz) n. Mrs. ?? (18th C.) house-keeper at Cavers in 1789 when she was working for George Douglas. She was presumably wife of Thomas. Thomas (18th C.) vallet at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. He is probably the Thomas from Cavers whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Can-terbury in 1797.

Stevenson (stee-vin-sin) n. Agnes 'Nancy' (18th/19th C.) daughter of John of Kirkstile in Hobkirk Parish, and sister of Nel and Maizie, whom she lived with. She kept an unlicensed driking establishment at her cottage, apparently buying a whisky jug from Douglas Laidlaw in Hawick, to give her whisky an appearance of quality. She was visited by the exciseman one day and thereafter fined, although let off lightly because James Elliot of Wolfelee was on the bench. However, when caught again and fined more severely she gave up her illicit business. She was the last surviving member of her fam-ily and lived her last days at the old blacksmith's house at Forkins. Alexander (d.1724) shepherd at 'Wadiespinnells', presumably near Lethem in Southdean Parish. His will is in the Douglas of Cavers papers. Andrew (1795–1871) younger son of George. Like his father he was black-smith at Bonchester Bridge, taking over after the death of his brother John in 1823. He sold the cottage and blacksmith's shop at Hobkirk Kirk-stile to James Elliot of Wolfelee. It was said that he could neither read nor write, his educa-tion at the parish school having been hampered by a speech impediment. In 1861 he was listed as blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, along with his grand-nephew Thomas Rutherford. Ruther-ford took over as smith at Bonchester after his death. Andrew (19th C.) Hawick carrier. He may have been the Andrew born in 1832, son of James and Marion Douglas. His cousin Elizabeth Stevenson married Thomas Huggan. Andrew (b.1905/6) Hawick man who worked for Turnbull the Dyers, where his father was Foreman. He moved to Langholm in the 1930s to work for Ar-thur Bell and started his own dyeing business in 1946, called the Langholm Dyeing Company. His sons David and Neil joined the family firm, which evolved into Edinburgh Woollen Mill. Ann (18th C.) servant at Wells in 1791, when she worked for Gilbert Eliott. Archibald (18th C.) merchant of Peebles, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1736. Archibald Forrester (1811–47) son of Rev. David of Wilton. In Pigot's 1837 directory he was recorded as a surgeon in Lilliesleaf. He was recorded as a surgeon at the Sandbed (possibly Bridge House) in 1841. In 1835 he married Mary Moodie in Lilliesleaf Parish. They had children: Jessie (b.1839); Jessie (again, b.1843); Alexander (b.1845); and James (b.1845), twin of Alexan-der. He died the year of a cholera outbreak in Hawick. Rev. Charles Findlater (1831–1905) son of Rev. David of Wilton. He was born in Wilton Parish. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery. He was ordained at Stobhill in 1860 and was Minister of Barry from 1866. He died unmarried. It seems likely that he was named after Rev. Charles Findlater, minister of Linton and Newlands, who died in 1828. Rev. David (1784–1851) born in Glasgow, son of David and Jean Renton, he was educated at Glasgow Uni-versity. He became schoolmaster at West Linton in 1810 and was licensed by Peebles in 1817. He was presented to Wilton by Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch in late 1825, taking up his new position in 1826, where he remained until his death. In 1834 he wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account. He married Christian Taylor, daughter of a Lasswade farmer and they had many children, including: William (1810–57), who became a merchant and died in the U.S.A.; Archibald Forrester (1811–47), a surgeon in Ha-wick; Jane (1813–43), who married James Farish of Montreal; Alexander (1815–41), also a surgeon;

Thomas (1817–78), who worked with H.M. Customs; James (1819–44), a merchant; Catherine, who died in infancy; Anne (1821–91); Christian Buchanan (1823–87); Robert Dundas (1827–58), another surgeon; Catherine Forrester (1829–37); Charles Findlater (1831–1905), who became minister of Barry; and Ellen (1833–52). He published ‘Two Sermons preached on the death of Rev. James Strachan’ (1840) and ‘Sermons on important subjects, Doctrinal and Practical’ (1841) and also wrote a description of Wilton Parish for the New Statistical Account of 1845. David, C.B.E. (1941–) son of Andrew, he was born in the Haig Maternity Home, even although his family lived in Langholm by then. His grandfather had been foreman-dyer at Turnbells of Hawick. He attended school in Langholm, then Dumfries Academy and Edinburgh University, before qualifying as a chartered accountant. He was a champion pole-vaulter, breaking Borders and Scottish records on 10 occasions; his first open competition in the pole vault was at the Hawick Common Riding Games. He represented Scotland in the Commonwealth Games in 1962, 1966 and 1970, and Britain in the 1964 Olympics. He joined the family dyeing business in 1967. In order to promote the 1970 Commonwealth Games tartan he (and his brother Neil) started Edinburgh Woollen Mill. This grew into a retail company, expanding outlets, and using Heather Mills in Selkirk for producing cloth. He sold the company in 1996 and later concentrated on his firm Ashleybank Investments. He also became a racehorse owner, having several winners. Additionally he sponsored Borders show-jumper Ian Stark. He was made C.B.E. in 1988 for business achievements. He was Deputy Lord Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire for 20 years and was made Honorary Freeman of Dumfries and Galloway in 2012. He has been involved in several charities, such as the Robertson Trust and Scottish Sports Aid, championed the redevelopment of Langholm’s Buccleuch Centre and was founder chairman of the Langholm Initiative. He was the Hawick Common Riding Chief Guest in 2017. His wife Alix is a former international long-jumper and hockey player. They have 2 daughters, Karen and Lynne. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) cook at Branhholme in 1791, when she worked for Adam Ogilvie. Francis (b.c.1770s) servant at Larriston House according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. George (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersiderig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was surely related to Peter, who was also listed. George (d.bef. 1759) son of John. He was blacksmith at ‘Hobkirk-style’, recorded in 1735. He married a daughter of John Shiel of Hobkirk Kirkstile. Their children included: Charles (b.1732); John (b.1735); Betty (b.1738), who married gardener Adam Kersel in 1759; James (b.1740), who probably died young; Jean (b.1743), who married Robert Riddell in 1767; Ann (b.1746), who married William Henry in 1771; and Janet (b.1755). George (b.1760) son of John of Hobkirk Kirkstile, and probably grandson of the earlier George. He worked in the blacksmith’s shop with his father. He may be the George who was lived at Bonchester Bridgend according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Laidlaw. Their children (baptised in Southdean Parish) included: Jane (or Jenny, b.1787), who married Robert Amos; Betty (b.1789); John (1791–1823); Andrew (b.1795); Agnes, who married Alex Baptie; and Janet (b.1787). He appears to have changed the spelling of the family surname from ‘Stephenson’ to ‘Stevenson’. George Drummond ‘Stevie’ (1933–2012) played for Hawick P.S.A., Linden and the Greens in the period 1951–67. He was capped 24 times for Scotland, scoring a try against England in his debut match in 1956. He was also referred to as ‘Back-door Stevie’ because of the number of times he was called into the Scotland squad at the last minute. A career highlight was a solo try scored for the Scottish District when they defeated South Africa at Mansfield Park in the 1960s. He played at centre and wing, and at 6 feet 2 inches was tall for a back. Serving an engineering apprenticeship in Hawick, he then did National Service, worked for Bibby’s the farm suppliers and became a sales representative for Ballantine’s Whisky (although ironically he was a teetotaler), settling in Currie. His married Jessie and had children Fiona and Mark. Gilbert (b.c.1770s) servant at Birneyknowe according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Helen (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. Her name is given after James Scott, with Adam Scott being the tenant, and hence she may have been related to one or both of them. Helen ‘Nel’ (b.1771) daughter of John, Laird of Hobkirk Kirkstile and sister of Nancy and Maizie, with whom she lived.

She married a Murray, but they separated and she apparently hated to be called 'Mrs. Murray'. She made a living by spinning yarn. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Thomson and their son John was baptised in 1672. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: John (b.1702); William (b.1703); and John (again, b.1707). James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. In 1708 he was described as '(in Harwood) tenent to arcleton'. He married Jean Thomson and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Adam (b.1705); James (b.1707); John (b.1708); Bessie (b.1710); and Margaret (b.1710). The witnesses in 1705 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield, in 1707 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Francis Gledstains in Braidhaugh and in 1708 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Thomson in Newmill. James (18th C.) married Jane (or Jean) Scott in Cavers Parish in 1754. His wife died in 1814, aged 87. Their children included: Jane (1754–97), who married Thomas Grieve and died at Muselee; John (1759/60–87), who died at Alderybar; and James (1760/1–85), who also died at Alderybar. James (18th C.) married Ann Dryden in Hobkirk Parish in 1766. He may be the James whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk in 1770. James (b.c.1780) tanner in Hawick according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. James (1805–89) educated in Jedburgh, he entered the office of Roxburghshire Procurator-Fiscal Shortreed, and was appointed to that position himself in 1827 when he became of age. He served for the astonishing period of 60 years, latterly assisted by his son. He was also Clerk of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was a clerk in Jedburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. There are letters to him preserved in the Walter Mason Collection from the 1820s. He was honorary secretary and later full member of the Jedforest Club. He was an ardent Tory, but took no part in local politics. He married Charlotte, daughter of William Graham, doctor in Jedburgh and secondly married a daughter of Rev. William Aston Shute. His eldest son James Charles took over most of his county duties. John (16th C.) priest at the Kirk of the Lowes. He was listed as 'vicar pensioner of the Forrest kirk' in 1574 when he was still owed for previous years in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Learmonth and their son Robert was baptised in 1634. John

(17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son Gilbert was baptised in 1704. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Cavers in 1705. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. Probably the same John was baptismal witness in 1708 (along with weaver John Richardson) for weaver David Reid, in 1714 (along with shoemaker John Scott) for James son of John Scott 'Laird', in 1721 (along with weaver Adam Scott) for merchant William Black and in 1725 (along with weaver George Wight) for weaver Robert Wight and for George Smith (along with weaver Robert Wight). In 1716 he married Jean, daughter of Thomas Scott called 'Laird'. Their children included: Janet (b.1717); Thomas (b.1719); John (b.1720); John (again, b.1722); Robert (b.1724); and James (b.1726). The witnesses in 1719 were wright John Pringle and Walter Scott in Newbigging, in 1720 were weavers James Scott and Thomas Greenshields, and in 1722 were weavers Robert and Walter Tinlin. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary 'Milleken' and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1719. John (18th C.) early member of the Stevensons of Rulewater, first recorded in 1729 when he made use of the Hobkirk 'mort cloath' for a family burial. They were living at Singdean at that time. His mother died in 1733. His son was George, who was blacksmith at Hobkirkstile. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1716 and 1721. His children probably included: John (b.1716); Margaret (b.1721); and James (b.1728). John (18th C.) recorded getting married in Kirkton in 1751, with no wife's name given. John (18th C.) son of George, he was Laird of Hobkirk Kirkstile, which he inherited from his grandfather John Shiel. He was also portioner of Kirknowe. He lived in a cottage at Singdean. He sold Hobkirkstile in 1779. He had 3 daughters, Nel, Nancy and Maizie, whose lives are described in Tancred's history of Rulewater. He may have been the John who married Agnes Douglas in 1758. George (b.1760) was probably may also his son, as well as possibly John (b.1765). Janet (b.1759) may have been his daughter, as well as Betty, whose daughter Betty Beattie married blacksmith Tom Rutherford. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott and their son John was baptised in 1785 (or perhaps 1775). The witnesses were Archibald Elliot and John Smith. John (b.c.1770s) wright in Hawick. He is recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia and still on the list in 1801. John (d.1823) elder son of George and brother of Andrew. He took over from his father as blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. After his death he was succeeded in the business by his brother Andrew. He may be the John whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included Betty (b.1770), Helen (b.1771), Jean (b.1773), Douglas (b.1776), Agnes (b.1778), Maizie (b.1781) and William (b.1783). He may be the 'J.' who married Nelly Rodger in Hobkirk in 1769. John (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Renwick in Robertson in 1819. Rev. John (1846–1929) born in Eccles, Berwickshire, son of John, the schoolmaster there. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1865, was licensed by Duns Presbytery in 1869 and was ordained as assistant and successor to Rev. Archibald Craig of Bedrule in 1875. He was Clerk of the Presbytery in 1891. He married Christina Laing of Denholmhill, and she died in 1891. He secondly married Christina Govanlock Turnbull (daughter of John Turnbull, farmer at Priestrig), and she died in 1961 at the age of 94. His children were: Margaret Scott, who married Thomas William Brockie; Mary Farmer (d.1918), who married John B. Forsyth; and John, who was a Captain in the R.A.M.C. He demitted his charge in 1923, died at Bonchester Bridge and is buried at Bedrule, where there is a memorial plaque inside the church. John Briggs (1849–1931) son of Thomas P., he was born in Hawick. He went to Brownsea Island, Poole and then to Bournemouth in 1887, where he became Parks Superintendent, retiring in 1919. His children included Thomas, John, Charles, Harry and Hugh. He is probably the John Briggs recorded as proprietor of Commonsides in about 1900. Margaret (19th C.) resident of the West Port area. In 1832 she is one of the Hawick people who contracted cholera, but recovered. Mary 'Maizie' (18th/19th C.) youngest daughter of John who lived at Hobkirk Kirkstile with her sisters Nel and Nancy. She had a natural son called Robert Wilson, who worked on the plantations at Wolfelee. In later life she was the cleaner at Hobkirk Church. But she used the cushions from the 'Lairds' Lofts' as a bed for lodgers during the week, and was dismissed when this was discovered. Michael (d.1789) first landlord of the Tower Inn, from about 1771. In that year it is recorded that Bailie Hardie was reimbursed by the Council 'for a bottle of wine (Stevenson's), at attending His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch', suggesting that he was already running the inn by then. He was brought from Yorkshire specifically to be inn-keeper and was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1773. In 1773

the Council recorded that they met 'in Michael Stevenson's' to petition an agent of the Duke of Buccleuch regarding repairs to the Auld Brig. He is recorded as inn-keeper there in 1778 and 1780. He was taxed for having 2 4-wheel carriages in the years 1785–1789 and for having a female servant in 1787 and 1788. In 1785 he was taxed for employing James 'Stevanson' (who was presumably therefore unrelated) as a waiter, as well as an unnamed waiter in 1787. 'Mrs. Stevenson' was taxed for carriages in the year 1789/90 and for having a female servant in 1789, suggesting that he was deceased by then. In 1798 the death is recorded in Hawick of 'Mrs. Stevenson spouse to Decd. Mr. Stevenson tower inn'. He is described by W.N. Kennedy as 'of Falstaffian proportions, and a fine burly specimen of the Boniface brotherhood, and is reputed to have weighed upwards of thirty stone'. It was said that he needed a pulley to get to his feet in the morning and that after he died the coffin had to be hoisted in and out of the window of his bedroom. Patrick (16th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Robert (b.1651); and Bessie (b.1652). The witnesses in 1651 were Robert Grieve and William Elliot. Peter 'Pate' (16th C.) tenant in Outersiderig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as 'Pait Stevinsone' right after George. Peter (18th C.) surgeon in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. It is possible he was later the Peter, surgeon in Hexham, who died there in 1828. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. His wife was Mary Plendergast and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); and Christian (b.1702). Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Reid and their children included: Jean (b.1756); Janet (b.1758); John (b.1760); Jane (b.1762); Betty (b.1767); and Thomas (b.1771). The witnesses in 1762 were shoemaker John Scott and tobaccoist James Scott. Robert (19th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick. His infant child's death is recorded in 1840, with his wife Christian Scott dying 2 days later. Sandy (??–2002) local solicitor, born in Kelso. He came to Hawick in 1963, was Acting Father in 1973 and Secretary of the Common Riding Committee 1977–87 and again for part of 2001 Thomas (17th/18th C.) said to have come from Hummelknowes and become tenant at Little Whitlaw, where he kept more than a hundred sheep on the Town's Common. However, the 'Town Herd of Hawick hounded, scattered, and destroyed said Thomas Stevenson's sheep, till he was obliged to make sale of what was left, and gave up his farm'; this is according to evidence given by John Douglas in 1767. Thomas (18th/19th C.) winder of 'pirns' for stocking-makers. He lived near the West Port. He had a son, also Thomas, whose wife Margaret was one of the people who contracted cholera in early 1832, but managed to recover. He may be the deceased Thomas whose wife Isobel Turnbull died in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in a cholera outbreak). His son Robert with Isobel Turnbull was baptised in Hawick in 1797, with witnesses Rev. W. Knox (although hard to read) and merchant George Waldie. Thomas (b.1800/1) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton in 1829. They lived at the West Port, where his wife contracted cholera from a neighbour in 1832, but recovered. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835, when he was at Roadhead. He and his wife were at Roadhead in Wilton in 1841, 1851 and 1861. Their children included Jane, Isobella (who was Mrs. Peden), Thomas, Andrew, Agnes (who married Charles Spalding) and Jane. Thomas Pasley (1818/19–72) married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw, and she died in 1890, aged 71. Their children included: Thomas P. and Jemima (b.1860), who both died young; Agnes, who married mason James Turnbull; William Laidlaw, woollen merchant; John Briggs, who moved to England; Thomas, postman and proprietor of the Douglas Hotel; and Beatrix (b.1857). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Thomas (19th C.) from Langholm. Around the 1860s he came to Newcastleton once a week to operate a branch of the British Linen Company Bank. Thomas Pasley (b.1862) son of Thomas P. He worked as a postman and was later in the Douglas Hotel. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Trow Mill in 1744 when his daughter Jane was baptised. His other children included: Walter (b.1741); and Helen (b.1745). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Oliver. Their children included: William (b.1768); Walter (b.1768); Gilbert (b.1770); and Katharine (b.1779). The witnesses to William's baptism in 1768 were Gilbert Oliver (probably his father-in-law) and Francis Aitkin. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 his daughter with Ann Howison died. Walter Laidlaw (19th C.) partner with Alexander Innes in the woollen merchants firm Innes, Stevenson & Co. He retired in 1892, after which the firm continued with F.E.H. Chambers as a new partner. William (18th C.) listed as owner of a 'House and Yard' in Minto Parish in 1779. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811 and valued at £3 13s 2d. William (1729/30–1807) tenant farmer at Langburnshiels. He is recorded as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He also paid tax on 5 non-working dogs in 1797. His servant Gilbert Gray is recorded on the 1801 Militia ballot. He contributed to the subscription for the defence of the country (against the French) in 1803. It was said that his 'sound knowledge, singular abilities, and successful improvements, as a store-farmer, have been seldom equalled'. He could be the William who married Isabel Vass in Hobkirk in 1773 and whose unnamed child was baptised in Hobkirk in that same year. William (b.c.1785) tanner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about 23 High Street. His wife was Jane and their children included Agnes, Isabel, Jane, Thomas, Margaret and Williamina. His widow appears to be living at Kirkstyle in 1851. William Laidlaw (1845/6–93) worked for Laing & Irving, eventually becoming a partner in Irving, Groerson & Stevenson. He left this partnership to go into business with A.K. Innes as Innes, Stevenson & Co, retiring only about a year before his death. He built the villa Dunira. He married Susan Yule, who died in 1872, aged 26. Their only child was Bella, who married Maj. James Rodger (formerly spelled 'Stevinsone' etc., and interchangeable with 'Stephenson' before the mid-18th century).

His children included Janet (b.1723), Adam (b.1726), Bessie (b.1728), Margaret (b.1730) and Elizabeth (b.1732). Alexander Earl of Mar and Garioch (d.1435) illegitimate son of Alexander, Earl of Buchan, and grandson of King Robert II. He was a supporter of his uncle, the Regent Albany. He married Isobel, Countess of Mar, daughter of William Douglas, Earl of Mar. Through her he inherited titles, including part of the Barony of Cavers and the Forest of Jedburgh, as recorded in a document of 1405. He was appointed Admiral of the Realm of Scotland about 1420. He had only one (illegitimate) son, Sir Thomas, who pre-deceased him. Alexander (c.1454–85) 1st Duke of Albany, 2nd son of King James II. He was Warden of the Western Marches from 1475. He also held the positions of Lord High Admiral, Governor of Berwick, and Lieutenant of the Kingdom. He was imprisoned after being suspected of plotting against his brother James III, but escaped and made pacts with Edward IV of England. He also offered to give Ewesdale and other parts of the Borders to England. After being sentenced to death in Scotland he fled to France, where he died in a tournament accident. His titles were inherited by John, son of his 2nd wife. Several men from the Borders were much later (in 1493) given remission at Jedburgh for having been among his supporters, including Ralph Ainslie, Thomas Brown in Minto, Robert Dalgleish in Howden, George Davidson in Raperlaw, John Grahamslaw of Newton, Adam Kirkton in Crailing Mill, Patrick Mow, Thomas Riddell brother of Riddell of that Ilk, Gilbert Shiel in Bedrule, George Turnbull of Bedrule, John Turnbull in Bedrule, Thomas Turnbull in Gatehousecote and John Waugh (possibly in Hawick). Sir Alexander of Dalswinton and Garlies (d.c.1500) son of Sir William of Minto. In 1458/9 he and his wife Elizabeth had a charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle. His family held lands locally, including Howpasley, which he resigned about 1468, when he was still 'younger'; these may have previously belonged to an elder brother, Andrew, who must have died first. Another brother was Sir Thomas of Minto to whom he gave consent in 1476 to his father's grant of the lands of Minto. In the same year he also resigned to his brother the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle, also with the consent of his wife, Elizabeth, reserving for themselves a 20 merk land there. In 1477 he had a charter for the lands of Dalswinton, with the permission of his son, witnessed by his brother Thomas of Minto. He served as Scottish Ambassador to England in 1485 and fought at Sauchieburn in 1488. He is probably the Alexander mentioned in 1501 when it is stated that sasine had been given to him for half of the market rights in Minto, which had been in the King's hands for 3 years. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was succeeded by his son Alexander, who was killed at Flodden. His other children included: Agnes, who married John, 3rd Lord Maxwell;

John; Archibald, Parson of Kirkmahoe; and Janet, who married Sir John Dunbar of Mochrum. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1513) son of Sir Alexander and Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of the Laird of Cavers. He married Elizabeth Kennedy, probably a daughter of Kennedy of Blairquhan. He was succeeded by his son Sir Alexander, and was said to have also had 16 daughters, each of whom married a laird of distinction. He was killed at Flodden. Sir Alexander of Garlies (c.1508–c.93) son of Alexander who was killed at Flodden. He was the 4th of Garlies, and was a minor under his uncle Archibald, parson of Kirkmahoe. He was captured at Solway Moss in 1542 and his son was held as hostage in his place. Also in 1542 he erected his lands into the Baronies of Dalswinton and Garlies. The Dalswinton Barony included the family's half merkland in Minto, and patronage of the Rectory there. He was a Commissioner for Wigtownshire in the 1550s and sat in Parliament in 1560 and 1565. He acted as ambassador to Henry VIII in 1572. He was still alive in 1593, but died soon afterwards. He firstly married Katherine, daughter of Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell. He secondly married Margaret Dunbar and thirdly married Catherine, daughter of his cousin Walter Stewart of Barcyle. His children were: Sir Alexander, who died before him, with his son Sir Alexander succeeding; John; Margaret; Anthony; Robert; William; and Helen. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1597) 5th of Garlies, grandson of Sir Alexander, the previous Laird, his father (also Sir Alexander) dying before his grandfather. His mother was Katherine, 2nd daughter and co-heir of William, Lord Herries of Terregles. He inherited many lands, including the small piece of land and rights within Minto. He was knighted in 1590 and sat in Parliament in 1594 and 1596. He married Christian, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and secondly married Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of David, Earl of Angus, who was widow of Lord Maxwell. His children were Alexander (who succeeded), Thomas, William, Helen, Janet, Nicholas and John. Alexander of Garlies (d.1649) son of Sir Alexander and Christian Douglas of Drumlanrig. He inherited his father's rights in Minto in 1603; this included a half merkland in Minto, with the advowson of the Kirk there. He became Lord Garlies in 1607 and sat in Parliament several times. In 1623 he was raised to be Earl of Galloway. A firm supporter of Charles I he was appointed as a Privy Councillor. He married Grizel, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar and their children included: Alexander (d.1638); Sir James, who succeeded; and Anne. Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of James of Tinnis. In 1609 he was listed along with Walter Scott of Headshaw and other Scotts as men that Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane and his tenants were fined for resetting. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. His brother John was mentioned later. Perhaps the same Alexander 'in Tynneis' witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for the Turnbulls of Philiphaugh in 1580. Alexander (17th/18th C.) dyker in Hawick. He married Margaret Wilson and their children included Margaret (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were weaver Robert Tinlin and shoemaker Robert Allan. Alexander (b.c.1770s) hosier in Hawick. He was recorded as a stockingmaker in Hawick in the 1799 ballot for the Militia and at the Sandbed on the 1801 Militia ballot for Wilton Parish. His unnamed child died in 1811. He could be the Alexander who married Margaret Scott and had children Ebenezer (b.1805), Betty (b.1808), David (b.1810) and David (again, b.1812), baptised in Wilton. Alexander (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Stevenson in Cavers 1809. Alexander (b.c.1820) servant at Cavers House in 1841. Allan (19th C.) from Barra in Invernesshire, he was a quarryman in Hawick. He married Agnes Ekron in 1857 and their children included: Angus (b.c.1857); Anne E. (b.1862); and Elizabeth (b.1871). His wife may have been daughter of Andrew Ekron, with her mother's name being Elizabeth. Andrew (d.c.1460) eldest son of Sir William of Dalswinton, brother of Alexander and Thomas of Minto. In 1458/9 he had a crown charter of the lands of Minto, Howpasley, Longnewton, as well as lands in Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbright and Wigton. However, he probably died soon after, since his brother Alexander resigned the lands in about 1468 and later succeeded to Dalswinton and Garlies. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as servant to the Laird of Riddell in 1596. He was accused of crimes by Englishman Nicholas Forster in the previous year. Andrew of Ochiltree (c.1560–1628/9) son of Andrew, Master of Ochiltree, he was the 3rd Lord. He served as Lieutenant and Warden of the West Marches in the 1580s. He was later First Gentleman to the Bedchamber of King James VI. He was also General of Edinburgh Castle. He settled in Northern Ireland at Castle Stuart. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Kennedy of Blairquhan and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiels in 1732 and 1737. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull and Elspeth Douglas, residents of Midshiels and in 1733 another for William Turnbull, also living at Midshiels. He married Marion Huntly in Wilton in 1731 and their children included: Janet (b.1732); Robert (b.1734); Mary (b.1737); and Janet (again, b.1739). The witnesses in 1732 were James Scott and John Thomson and in 1737 were John Pringle and Robert Turnbull. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at 'Langlands' in 1744 and 1748. He married Janet Douglas and their children included: Agnes (b.1742); James (b.1744); George (b.1746); James (again, b.1748); Ann (b.1750); Andrew (b.1753); and Margaret (b.1755). The witnesses in 1742 were James Douglas (perhaps related to his wife) and James Dryden, in 1744 were William Scott and what looks like James Dryden and in 1748 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. Andrew (18th C.) married Jean Wright in 1761, both from Wilton Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Christian Crozier. Their children (born in Lilliesleaf, but baptised in Linton) included: Peggy (b.1787); and Robert (b.1790). Andrew (b.c.1770s) servant at 'Longtoun' according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Andrew, J.P. (19th C.) owner of the farm of Cotfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the 1870s. In about 1874 he is recorded owning the share of Lilliesleaf Common (and its teinds) that formerly pertained to the lands of Bewlie Hill, as well as Hermiston. Archibald (16th/17th C.) illegitimate son of James of Tinnis. In 1608 he was among the relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound over not to harm Archibald of 'Dephoip' or his sons. Archibald (19th/20th C.) gardener at Wells estate. He had a brother who worked on the Maxpoffle estate and sisters who lived in Melrose. In 1882 at Bedrule Schoolhouse, he married Frances, daughter of schoolmaster William MacNeill. After Wells estate was sold off he moved to West Linton. The couple's only child was William MacNeill. Bell (18th/19th C.) spinner from Glasgow. It is said that when the first spinning jenny arrived in Hawick, for operation at the Tower Knowe Mill, one of the strongest workers was given the task of operating it, but gave up, claiming that no one could stand to run it. The employers, Waldie & Pringle, then called for an experienced operator from Glasgow, to show the workers how it could be done easily. This was probably around the early 1820s. Charles (b.1618) son of

Francis and grandson of the last Earl of Bothwell. He was born at Tranent. There are papers relating to his lands of Wilton, Liddesdale and others in 1647 and 1648. He fought at the Battle of Worcester. He died unmarried, bringing an end to the local connection of the Hepburns and Stewarts. Charles 6th Duke of Lennox and 3rd Duke of Richmond (1639–72) son of George, 9th Seigneur d'Aubigny and grandson of Esmé, 3rd Duke of Lennox. On the death of his cousin Esmé he inherited the Lennox and Richmond titles. This included the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. As Duke of Lennox he paid a small amount in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls in Ashkirk. However, it is unclear if he played any role in local affairs. He served as hereditary Great Chamberlain of Scotland. He drowned at Elsinore on a trip as ambassador to persuade Denmark to join a war on the Dutch. Although he married 3 times (the third time to Frances Teresa Stewart, mistress of his cousin Charles II), he died without issue. Charles (d.1744) 4th Earl of Traquair. He succeeded to his brother William, his other brother George having died before him. He was the last of his family to be Laird of Wells in Rulewater. Burdened with his grandfather's debts, he sold the estate to Thomas Rutherford in 1687. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Maxwell, 4th Earl of Nithsdale and was succeeded by his sons Charles and then John. Charles Edward 'Bonnie Prince Charlie' or 'the Young Pretender' (1720–88) son of James Francis and grandson of King James VII. In 1745 he attempted to capture the throne for his father, from George, landing in Scotland, gaining the support of an army of Highlanders and marching into England, where they met defeat. After being on the run for several months in Scotland he was able to flee to France and died an old man in Rome. Although there seems to have little local support for him at the time, part of his army passed near Hawick in 1745, and many tales grew up around events said to have happened at that time. Charles (18th/19th C.) married Janet Broad in 1805, the marriage recorded in Kirkton Parish and East Bank Kirk. Charles (19th/20th C.) local writer, who used the pseudonym 'Karl Brown'. He who wrote a poem about the Sclaterford skirmish and may be the 'Carl Brown' who wrote 'A Hawick Common-Riding Toast'. He is also the author of the novel 'Andrew Macpherson: a tale of the Borders' (1905), which was serialised in the Hawick Express. This tells the story of the minister of the fictitious Roselea (a thinly disguised Lilliesleaf) and his love affairs, with some of the action taking place in South Africa. David (18th C.) merchant of Hawick who married Ann Fordyce of Aberdeen in Edinburgh in 1776. David 'Dave' (1930–2018) son of David and Jean, he was born on Ramsay Road. Contracting polio as an infant, he underwent many operations. Not letting his physical condition hold him back, he and Billy Murray cycled around Scotland when they were 19. He only received 4 years of schooling, but was an avid reader. He worked in Pringles and Pescos, where his last years before retirement were spent as gateman. Later he joined local walking groups and was a keen member of the Archaeological Society, being known as a font of knowledge on Hawick and the nearby rural areas. He was recorded speaking in dialect in 2004 as part of the BBC 'Voices' project. He met Marjory McGee at Waverley Station in 1949 and they were married in 1956. Their children were Elsa (b.1958) and Norma (b.1960). The family lived on Minto Place and Wellogate Place. Derek James resident of Wilton Dean, he published 'The Armstrongs' (2017) and 'Wha Daur Meddle wi Me' (2018). Rev. Duncan (1841–1908) from Dunblane, he studied at Edinburgh University and New College. He became the first minister of St. Andrew's Free Church, being called there in 1867 (despite originally having the intention of doing missionary work in Africa), inducted in 1868 and remaining for about 40 years. He was assisted for the first year by John Tainsh. His sister also helped him with some activities associated with his church. He was said to have 'the appearance of a jolly farmer of some twelve stones' and to possess a powerful voice. He was also described as 'a Puritan of the truest type'. He was involved with the temperance movement and the National Bible Society and locally with the Cottage Hospital and with Stobs. He also researched into Teviotdale connections with the Covenanters, for example publicising the besieging of Drumlanrig's Tower. He had deep sympathy with those persecuted in the times of the Covenanters, lectured on this widely and was preparing a book on the topic when he died. His widow and Rev. John Smith of Denholm put together his posthumous work 'The Covenanters of Teviotdale and neighbouring districts' (1908). In 1890 he married Mary J.S. Mitchell, daughter of the minister of Cluny and they had a son, John Livingstone (1894–1971). Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) resident of Denholm. In about 1684 she was accused of attending conventicles. Elizabeth 'Betty' (18th/19th

C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. An account of hers to Thomas Inglis for soap, muslin and lace from 1797. Esmé 5th Duke of Lennox (1649–1660) son of James, 1st Duke of Richmond. His father died in 1655 and he was served heir to the family properties and titles. This included the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. He went into exile to France with his mother and died of smallpox. His titles passed to his cousin Charles. Francis 5th Earl of Bothwell (1563–1611) nephew of James Hepburn, the 4th Earl. His father was John, Commendator of Coldingham, being an illegitimate son of James V (hence he was first cousin of James VI) and his mother was Lady Janet Hepburn, daughter of Patrick, the 3rd Earl. He was a powerful force in late 16th century Scotland. He was lay Commendator of Kelso Abbey, and held many baronies and estates, including Wilton, granted in a charter of 1568. Patronage of St. Mary's Kirk in Hawick was confirmed to him in 1581 and 1585 by James VI. In 1586, instructions from the King to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus (Lieutenant on the Border), conferred responsibilities on him to make bonds with leaders in Liddesdale and set up court in either Jedburgh or Hawick. Also in 1586 he released several lands in Liddesdale to Elliots. A charter of 1587 confers on him the forfeited titles of his uncle, the 4th Earl, including Keeper of Liddesdale and Hermitage. In November 1587 (according to an English letter) he rode to Branxholme and Hawick, there meeting with leaders from Liddesdale; although he publicly reminded them of the justice on the Border, his stepson Scott of Buccleuch carried out a raid around Bewcastle using his trumpet and standard. In 1589 there was a charge to him and Alexander, Lord Home, to keep peace with each other during the King's absence. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591 he escaped from prison in Edinburgh and there was a 'band' between the main noblemen of the Borders to lay aside their quarrels in order to capture him. He led several attempts to capture King James VI, including the 'Falkland Raid' of 1592, which involved about 300 horsemen from the Borders. This led to him losing all his titles, including Keeper of Hermitage, as well as his estates, to Sir Walter Scott, 1st Lord of Buccleuch (his stepson). A 'summons of treason' of 1592 lists him and his wife, along with many men (including some from the Borders) who were his supporters. Eventually forced to flee abroad, he died in Italy.

There is a bond of 1604 in which he promises '6 or 7 chalders of victual during recipient's life' to his servant Walter Scott of Burnfoot (on Ale Water) when he was restored to the King's favour and his former privileges; this never happened, with the Privy Council recording a complaint between his sons Francis, John, Harry and Frederick against William Scott of Burnfoot and his brothers Walter and Robert, and furthermore his son and heir Francis was still trying to recover the lands in the 1620s. He married Lady Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch; she was also denounced as a rebel following the Falkland Raid. His daughter Elizabeth married James, Master of Cranstoun (and their daughter married Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs). Another daughter Jean married Robert Elliot of Redheugh. A son John was Commendator of Coldingham, and another, Harry, held lands in Teviotdale. His seal showed a 'bend' in the 1st and 4th quarters, and a rose and 2 lions in the 2nd and 3rd, together with a surtout, a lion rampant, an anchor and a shield bearing 'F.S.' He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells, who mixes up father and son – 'King James the Fifth his bastard Son Was of as much regard, He married Buckcleugh's Relict He being but a Laird' [CWS]. Francis (1584–1639) eldest son of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was rehabilitated in 1614, a few years after his father's death. But he did not get back the bulk of the lands that had gone to the Earl of Home and the Lords of Roxburghe and Buccleuch. King Charles interceded to try to resolve differences between him and the Earls of Buccleuch and Roxburghe. In 1632 the patronage he had held of many churches around the Borders (including both Hawick and Wilton) went to Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. His rehabilitation was ratified by Parliament in 1633. In 1634 2 of the 'tutors' of the young Earl of Buccleuch went to London to hear the King's determination of the ongoing dispute he had over Buccleuch lands. He received lands in Lothian and made a financial arrangement over rights to the lands in the Borders in 1634. He married Isobel, daughter of Robert Seton, 1st Earl of Winton. Their children were Charles, Robert, Margaret and Elizabeth. Francis (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Helen Muir. His son William was born in 1637. Francis (b.c.1785) stocking-maker who lived at Appletreehall. He was also an army pensioner. His wife was Rachel and their children included George, Euphemia, Agnes, Francis, John and Janet. George (16th C.) farmer at Rulewood. His barn and yard are mentioned as part of the land dispute between Barons of Feu-Rule in 1562. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Groundistone in 1729. He married Isabel, daughter of William Harkness in 1727, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their daughter Mary was baptised in 1729, with witnesses James Scott and Robert Riddell. George (c.1715–93) Professor of Humanity (i.e. Latin) at Edinburgh University for more than 30 years from 1741. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He bought the estate of Midlem Mill in 1773, but must have already held Selkirkshire property before that. He was granted liferent of Shielswood by Elliot of Minto (probably as part of the common practice of adding supporters to the county voter's roll); he renounced this right in 1779, when it was given to Rev. Simon Haliburton. His son Gilbert was a historian and reviewer. George (b.c.1780) servant at Groundistone according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. George (b.c.1795) tenant of the quarry at Bedrule Mill in the 1841 census. His wife was Isabella and they has a son William. Helen 'Nelly' (18th C.) cook at Orchard in 1791, when she worked for William Elliot Lockhart. Helen (18th/19th C.) daughter of Rev. Walter. Along with her sisters Mary and Isabel, she succeeded her brother Matthew in the lands of Barnhills in 1796. The lands were sold soon afterwards to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot, with whom she had a heritable bond in 1798. She succeeded her 2 sisters in 1803. Henry 'Harry' (16th/17th C.) younger son of Francis, 5th Earl of Bothwell. He is recorded in the period 1640–42 in legal papers of Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch over the teinds of the lands of 'Kalrige, Commounsyde and Mynesingtoun'; the first place could conceivably be Caerlenrig. Hercules of Whitelaw (d.1595) son of John Stewart, Lord Darnley and brother of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was said to have owned Whitlaw near Hawick, but this is more likely to have been one of the numerous areas of a similar name elsewhere (near Bowden, Morebattle and in Lothian). In 1590 he and Francis, Earl of Bothwell were cautioners for Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Martin Elliot of Braidley. A 'summons of treason' listed him in 1592 and in 1593/4 he was denounced a rebel, along with others who had helped the Earl of Bothwell. He married Mary, daughter of Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk, and their children included Margaret and John. He was hanged in Edinburgh. Isabel (d.c.1348) probably daughter of Sir Alexander of Bonkill. She married Donald, Earl of Mar. They had 2 children: Thomas, who succeeded as Earl of Mar, and also inherited Cavers, but died childless; and Margaret, who became Countess of Mar in her own right, and was the ancestor of the Earls of Douglas. Donald was Regent of Scotland for a few months, but was killed at the Battle of Dupplin Moor in 1332, 3 years after his uncle, Robert the Bruce. She secondly married Geoffrey Murray, but divorced him soon afterwards. She thirdly married William Carswell, who was Sheriff of Roxburghshire. She claimed the sheriffship of Roxburghshire and the custody of Selkirk Forest as a hereditary right; this was looked into by Edward III in 1334 and led to the appointment of her husband by the English (then in control of the Borders) in 1347. She appears to have been deceased in 1348 when her husband William Carswell was granted her rights and lands in Scotland until her son Thomas (Earl of Mar) came of age. She may have also married Alexander Balliol, Laird of Cavers. Note that a later Isabella, Countess of Mar, was her grand-daughter. Isabel (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was fined along with Janet Halliwell for fighting over the placement of their market stalls. She could be the Isabel born in Hawick in 1650 to Francis and Helen Muir. James name of 6 Kings of Scotland, see under James. James (d.1513) 1st of Traquair, 2nd (and illegitimate) son of James Earl of Buchan, his mother being Margaret Murray. In 1507/8 he was the first witness to the document relating to the tower in Hawick 'between the bridges' for the Scotts of Whitchesters. Sometime before 1505 he married Katherine, grand-daughter of James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells. He is said to have taken her away from her family and compelled her to marry him. She is said to have failed to inherit any of the Rutherford lands because of this marriage being to a kinsman. However, their son would later become Laird of Wells, after the death of her sister Helen. They had a son William (who succeeded and married Christina, daughter of John, 2nd Lord Hay of Yester), and another son James, as well as a daughter Mary and another daughter who may have married Archibald, 6th Earl of Douglas. His widow complained about her treatment at his hands and the fact that she had lost her share of the inheritance to her sister; the result was that Rutherford and Wells went to her grandson Sir John of Traquair. He was killed at Flodden. James (16th C.) resident of

Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. He may have been related to the tenant there, Philip, or to Helen who was listed after him. James (d.1557) eldest illegitimate son of James V. His half-siblings included Mary (Queen of Scots), James (Earl of Moray, later Regent), Robert (Prior of Whithorn), Robert (Earl of Orkney), Adam (Prior of Charter House) and John (Lord Darnley, Commendator of Coldingham). He was the Commendator of Melrose and Kelso 1534/5–57, one of the last before the Reformation, and probably lived in the Commendator's House. He gave the 'Monk's Tower' at Has-sendean to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1546/7 and granted a charter of Cockerheugh to William Turnbull in 1556. His seal is in the National Museum of Scotland. James (c.1531–70) an illegitimate son of James V, his mother being Margaret Erskine. He was also known as 'the Regent Moray' and sometimes 'the Earl of Mar'. He became chief advisor to his half-sister Mary Queen of Scots on her return to Scotland in 1561, and was one of the leaders of the Scottish Reformation. In 1561 (or 1562) he commanded an expedition against freebooting Borderers. This included surrounding Hawick on market day to surprise people reselling stolen goods. 53 men were captured and 18 of them drowned in the Slitrig, 'for lack of trees and halters', while another 6 were hanged later in Edinburgh. In 1567 he repeated the exercise on Hallowe'en, attended by Lords Morton, Howe and Lindsay and their followers. In preparation for their visit, Hawick was among towns who were charged to 'have in reddines bakin breid, browin aill, hors meit, mannis meit and uther neidfull ludgeing and provisoun'. They then captured 34 thieves, including 22 Elliots and 6 Croziers, having 11 of them immediately hanged and 7 drowned in Hawick. It is said (by Robert Wilson) that the hangings happened on 2 beams laid across the Auld Brig. 10 of these men were held in Edinburgh Tolbooth and we have a record of their names (5 were called Robert Elliot!). He may also have revisited Hawick in 1569, and certainly in that year led an assault on Liddesdale, blowing up the tower of Mangerton, burning Whithaugh, etc. There was an order from the Privy Council for a large number of men (from all over southern Scotland) to muster in Hawick to meet him on 8th October (moved by 2 days to coincide with the full Moon), 'weill bodon in feir of weir, with xx dayis victuallis and provisoun', in order to subdue the 'rebellious subjects' of the Middle and West Marches. He was Regent from 1567, but fell from favour after failing in a bid to seize the crown from Mary. He was assassinated in Linlithgow by his old rivals the Hamiltons. He was succeeded by his daughter Elizabeth, who married her kinsman James Stewart. James of Bothwellhaugh (16th C.) in 1581 he received the Earldom of Arran from James Hamilton, who was considered insane, but these titles were restored to Hamilton in 1586. In 1584 he was appointed Lord Warden General of all the Marches, but this only lasted 1 or 2 years. James of Tinnis (16th C.) ally of Scott of Thirlestane. His home was presumably Tinnis in the Yarrow valley. In 1592 he had caution 'to behave himself loyally' and 'not come within ten miles of the King's presence'; he was also cautioner for several others, including William Scott in Hundleshope and his brothers Robert and David. He was listed in 1592 among those summoned for treason and William Stewart of Traquair was ordered to demolish his 'place and houses of Tynneis' because of his involvement in the Falkland Raid. His sons included Alexander, John and Archibald. James of Wells (16th C.) recorded in 1592 when he complained to the Privy Council about Turnbells attacking his lands of Wells. Specifically, John, brother of Walter Turnbull of Bedrule, threatened and menaced his servant James Newlands when he was ploughing. He may be the same as another Stewart. James of Shillinglaw (d.1607) 6th of the Barony of Traquair and also Laird of Wells in Rulewater. He succeeded his father William in 1605, his 3 elder brothers all having died without issue. As well as inheriting several lands, he had the right of patronage of Bedrule Kirk. However, he only enjoyed his position for a couple of years before dying and being succeeded by his grandson, Sir John, the 1st Earl. He married Catherine Kerr and their children were John (whose son succeeded), Robert of Shillinglaw, William, Margaret, Janet (who married John Veitch of Dawyck), Gelis, Walter, Isobel and Mary. James of Nether Horsburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Shillinglaw. In 1634 he was served heir to his father's lands of 'Helme et Middill', with grain mill and fuller's mill called 'Dowishauch', comprising a 3 merk land in the Barony of Cavers. He was separately served heir to his father in the lands of 'Roulwood', 'Majorwellis et Westlies', extending to a 6-pound land of old extent, lying in the Barony of 'Hareis' by annexation. James (17th

C.) described as a cordiner when he was a witness at a trial of Hawick Magistrates Court in 1642. He was deceased in 1666 when his son Walter gave evidence for a case involving a fight in St. Mary's Kirk. He could be the John, married to Manie Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included John (b.1643), Walter (b.1646) and an unnamed son (b.1648). Probably the same James witnessed baptisms in 1648 for George Hope and for James Lunn. James 4th Duke of Lennox, 1st Duke of Richmond (1612–55) eldest son of Esmé and Katherine Clifton. He was a key Royalist supporter in the Civil War and is buried in Westminster Abbey. Among his many titles and properties were the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, being granted these by Charles I in 1641. In 1643 he is listed as holder of feuduties for Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £18 5s. He still held superiority over Barnhills in 1653. He was succeeded by his young son Esmé. James (17th C.) recorded as resident of a parish in Clydesdale. He married Margaret Hutchison. Their twins Susanna and Janet were baptised in Hawick in 1688, with witnesses William Scott of Brieryyards and John Scott of Whitehaugh. James Francis Edward 'the Old Pretender' (1688–1766) son of King James VII (or II), he was forced to move to France when he was an infant and his father was ousted from the throne for being a Catholic. He this became the de facto leader of the 'Jacobite' movement. He led the Jacobite Rebellion of 1715, and escaped back to France when the attempt to take over from George I failed. In October of 1715 about 200 horsemen past through Hawick and proclaimed 'the Chevalier'. About 2 weeks later the Highlander army camped at Hawick Moor. There are many stories told relating to what happened during those few weeks. His son Charles, 'Bonnie Prince Chairlie', also led an unsuccessful revolt 30 years later. James (17th C.) resident of Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (17th/18th C.) smith at Falnash. His children included: Janet (b.1701); and James (b.1703). Margaret (b.1691) and David (b.1693), baptised in Hawick, may have also been his children. The witnesses in 1703 were John Scott in Falnash and Robert Riddell, miller in Falnash. Sir James of Coltness (1713–80) also referred to as 2nd Bart of Goodtrees. He was eldest son of Sir James and Anne Dalrymple. He married Frances, daughter of James, Earl of Wemyss and was succeeded by his son, also Sir James. This branch of the family often spelled their name 'Steuart'.

He owned the Chisholme estate in the mid-18th century, being involved in a dispute with John Elliot of Borthwickbrae over Branhholme Muir in the period 1743–60 and with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1763–67. James (18th/19th C.) listed as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stonedge according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) mason recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. The annotation 'Serving' suggests that he was already serving, with his name appearing again in 1798; in the amded list of 1799 he was among those already serving in the Militia. James (b.c.1780) servant at Stobsden according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. James (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He could be the 'Mr. Stewart' marked on Wood's 1824 map at about 24 High Street or the other one at about No. 55. He could be the merchant of that name whose child died in 1805. James (b.1815) son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He excelled at wrestling and jumping and took part in the Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. At the 1840 Common Riding Games he won prizes for wrestling, the standing and running hop-step-and-leap and the hitch-and-kick. He married Margaret (1827–1901), daughter of William of Netherwells (who had the distinction of being born after her father's death in a riding accident). Their children were Robert (who was born at Town-o-Rule and married Elizabeth Forster), William Glass, Alexander, Penelope and Mary. James (19th C.) from Wilton Dean. His children included Mary Ann (who married George Richardson), Margaret (who married James Hood) and James (who worked for the Manchester Guardian and was proprietor of 'Gas World'). Rev. James (1821–86) born in Stirling, 2nd son of David and Janet Galloway. He was educated in Stirling and at Glasgow University. He was licensed by Stirling Presbytery, became assistant at Largs and was first ordained as minister at St. Mary's, Dumfries in 1849. He was translated to Wilton Parish Church in 1851 and remained until his death. During his ministry the present Wilton Church was built, Mansfield Glebe and Old Manse were acquired by the town, and Wilton Hill and Stewartfield were feued for building purposes. East and West Stewart Place are named after him. A large cross in his memory stands near the main entrance to Wilton Church. He married Isabella, daughter of James Reid of

Wellfield. Their children were Elizabeth White-man, Isabella Reid, David Charles, James Reid, Catherine, John and Eleanora. He published 'Wilton Sabbath School Hymnal' (Hawick, 1877) and 'Last Sermon preached in Wilton Church, 12th Sept. 1886' (Hawick, 1886). His funeral sermon was given by Dr. John Mair and published in 1886. James (b.1828/9) from Langholm, he was schoolmaster at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish in 1861. Jean (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. She was probably from the west side. She could have been related to the dyker John, who was also listed. Jeanie (b.1820/1) born in Ettrick Bridgend. As a girl she worked at Catslack Burn and there met the Ettrick Shepherd on several occasions, sometimes acting as waitress when her master entertained the poet. She described him as a 'muckle jolly-looking fellow, singin' his ain songs and making grand speeches, wearing aye a shepherd's tartan plaid tied aneath his oxter'. In later life she lived at No. 8 Melgund Place. She could be the Jean, daughter of Charles and 'Tibby Fraiter', who was baptised in Yarrow Parish in 1823. Sir John (d.1419) son of Sir William of Jedworth and Minto. He was referred to as being 'of Teviotdale or Jedworth' and also became the 1st of Garlies. In 1406–09 he had an annuity from the customs of Edinburgh. In 1396 he married Marion, the only daughter (and heiress) of Sir Walter of Dalswinton. He was succeeded by his son Sir William of Minto. His wife resigned the Barony of Dalswinton in 1420 (when he was presumably deceased) to be granted to Sir Herbert Maxwell. His widow married Sir John Forester of Corstorphine in 1422. Sir John of Minto (d.bef. 1512) son of Sir Thomas, who had given up the lands in Minto, even although the family kept the designation. In 1477 he was the eldest son of Sir Thomas when he witnessed a charter for his father and mother. He also served as Provost of Glasgow. He is mentioned as being 'now Marshall' and son of Thomas in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, in relation to superiority of Minto. In 1502/3 he and his wife had a charter for the lands and Barony of Minto, as well as other lands. He witnessed a couple of charters in Edinburgh in 1508. He married Janet Fleming and was succeeded by Robert (who married Janet, daughter of John, 'the Outlaw Murray'). He is sometimes said to have died at Flodden. John (c.1484–1536) son of Alexander, Duke of Albany and nephew of King James III. He inherited the titles of Duke of Albany and Earl of

March from his father. He acted as Regent during the minority of his cousin's son, James V. In 1516 he granted a new infeftment of the Barony of Braxholme to Sir Walter Scott. Ousted from power in 1524, he spent most of the rest of his life in France. John of Traquair (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Bedrule in 1562. He probably succeeded from William Kerr, but was himself succeeded by Sir John Douglas (however, this may simply have been because of disputes over the patronage). He could have been the same as Sir John, 4th Laird of Traquair. He witnessed a document for Sir Walter Ker of Cessford in 1555. John (16th C.) listed along with George Wilson as 'servants and ministers for the time to William Ryddail', brother to the Laird of Riddell. This was in a transaction signed in Lilliesleaf Kirk, suggesting that he may have been associated with that church. Sir John of Minto (d.1583) son of Robert. He came from the family that had previously been Barons of Minto, and continued to use the designation. He still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, which was inherited by his grandson Walter in 1614. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. In 1556 he renounced his 3-pound land in Langnewton (called 'Stuart Lands') to Sir William Douglas of Lochleven. His name is recorded as witness to many documents, e.g. he was among the prominent men of the nation who declared James as King in place of Mary in 1567. He served as surety for Borderers in 1573. He married Joanna Hepburn and was succeeded by his son Matthew, who was also Provost of Glasgow. He also had a son Robert, recorded in Glasgow in 1564. His seal bore a horizontal band surmounted by a 'bend engrailed' and a cinquefoil on the left. He may be the 'Lard of Mynto, Collectour to the Comptrollar' recorded in relation to a case in Glasgow in 1566/7. Sir John (d.1591) 2nd son of William, he was the 4th Laird of Traquair. In 1549 he was served heir to his brother Robert, who died in 1548. In 1559 he settled the family disputes over succession, signing confirmation with his cousin Richard Rutherford of the lands of Edgerston, while he kept Wells (in Rulewater), as well as superiority of Edgerston. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he was a witness to the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He was knighted in 1565. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Braxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. In 1581 it was confirmed that he had the 'half merk land of Kirklandis of Bedrowll', including the patronage etc., which had belonged to Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Sir William. Sir John of Traquair (c.1600–59) son of John. He succeeded to the Barony of Traquair from his grandfather James, 6th of Traquair, being served heir in 1606. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater, and probably the Earl who purchased adjoining lands from John, Lord Balermينو. In 1619 he complained (through his tutor, Sir Robert of Shillinglaw) that a group of Turnbolls had cut down a large quantity of timber and removing hay from his lands at Huntliehill and further complained to the Privy Council that the Turnbolls of Bedrule were still at large, despite being denounced as rebels in 1615 and 1616 for not removing themselves from Huntliehill. He was apparently a favourite in the court of Charles I and was made an Earl in 1633. However, he supported the wrong side in the Civil War, being taken prisoner at Preston, and living in poverty after he was released. In 1634 he resigned the superiority of Edgerston to John Rutherford of Edgerston. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands valued at £210 10s in Cavers Parish, £409 10s in Hobkirk Parish (these both being for the Wells estate) and £108 for lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish, as well as the teinds of Bedrule, duties in Roxburgh and a large fraction of lands in Maxton Parish. His lands included Fastcastle, where 2 residents were cited in 1644 for not subscribing to the Covenant, saying that 'they would ken no session nor minister, but follow the command of their master, my Lord Traquair' (suggesting that he himself was a dissenter). He married Catherine, daughter of David Carnegie, Earl of Southesk. Their children were John (2nd Earl), Margaret (who married James Douglas, 2nd Earl of Queensberry), Elizabeth Stewart (who married Patrick Murray, 2nd Lord of Elibank), Catherine and Magdalene. John (1622–66) 2nd Earl of Traquair and also Laird of Wells, eldest son of the 1st Earl. He served with the Marquess of Montrose and then the Duke of Hamilton. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers, Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes in 1663. He married Henrietta Gordon, daughter of George, 2nd Marquess of Huntly and second Anne, daughter of George Seton, 3rd Earl of Winton. Their children included William (3rd Earl), George, Charles (4th Earl), John, Elizabeth, Isabel and Lucy. John (17th

C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism in 1661 for James Scott and Agnes Stewart. He married Janet Renwick and their children included: Margaret (b.1651); George (b.1653); and Margaret (again, b.1656). Isobel (b.1648), with no mother's name give, is probably also his child. The witnesses in 1651 were William Laidlaw and Robert Paterson and in 1656 were William Donaldson and Thomas Currie. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1658) and James (b.1661). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Veitch and their children included: Jean (b.1649); Marion (b.1651); and Jean (again, b.1653). The witnesses in 1651 were John Scott and James Liddell. John (17th C.) listed as being 'in Cavers' in the 1684 list of those who were declared fugitives for religious non-conformity. He may be the John whose wife Elizabeth Turnbull was also reported for attending conventicles. John (17th C.) recorded at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (d.c.1696) Burgh Officer for many years in the latter part of the 17th century. Following his death, Alex Scott was appointed in his place. He may be the John who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1683 for John Barrie, resident of Wilton Parish and for Thomas Turnbull. He was probably the 'John Stuart' who witnessed baptisms in 1685, 1687, 1688 and 1689, being 'officer' in one record, and was probably the man of that name listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same John was a weaver who married Marion Scott and had children: twins Janet and Jane (b.1680); Marion (b.1682); James (b.1684); Jane (again, b.1686); and William (b.1688). The witnesses in 1680 were William Purdom and Mr. Walter Gledstains (the Town Clerk, suggesting that he may indeed have been the Burgh Officer), and in 1688 were Mr. Walter Gledstains and 'litster' George Young. He may have been related to the John who was a Burgh Officer a few decades later. John (17th C.) recorded as 'caliario' when he witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1687. The meaning of the description is unclear, but might suggest that he was a shoemaker perhaps (or he could be the same man as the Burgh Officer). John (17th C.) dyker listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. It is unclear whether he lived in the town or outside. He is probably the John 'dyker to Irland' listed among the 'Deficients in Hauick Parich' in 1694; he may have worked as a dyker for Thomas Ireland. Perhaps the same dyker John was recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. He was probably from the west side. John (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He could be the John who in 1694 witnessed baptisms for John Williamson, for James Rutherford and for William Scott. John (17th C.) listed as a merchant on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He could be the John, son of James and Janet Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1652. He could also be the John who was married to Grizel Thomson, and whose son John was born in 1680. Sir John of Minto (d.1697) probably nephew of Sir Ludovic. He was the last in the long line of Stewarts of Minto, who were prominent citizens in Glasgow in the 16th and 17th centuries and held the Barony of Minto. The family interest in Minto had probably been lost either by his uncle or grandfather Sir Walter, although he was still referred to being 'of Minto'. He died on the outward voyage of the Unicorn as part of the Darien Scheme. Rev. John (d.bef. 1706) minister of Wilton. He studied at St. Leonard's College and graduated from St. Andrews University in 1670. He became minister of Wilton in 1683, the first Episcopalian since before the Reformation. There is an existing letter referring to him in 1683, following a complaint from the Archbishop of Glasgow that John Langlands had not preached for several Sundays; the precise nature of his appointment is unclear. He was also presented to Borthwick in 1688 (the delay suggesting there was argument over the extra duties and stipend). However, he was deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not praying for William and Mary (i.e. refusing to give up Episcopalianism). In 1706 his widow Margaret Forbes, is recorded receiving money from the Session of Arngask Parish, on the recommendation of Jedburgh Presbytery. John (17th/18th C.) 'workman' in Hawick. In 1709 he married Margaret Hislop, both of them being from the Town of Hawick. Their children included Walter (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Todshaw. His son Thomas was born in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'officer' in Hawick in 1723 and 'town officer' in 1725. Probably the same John was recorded in the Town Treasurer's book receiving payments in 1731 and 1732. He was likely to be the same John recorded as Burgh Officer around 1743 along with Francis Turnbull; after the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong, complained to the Magistrates about neighbouring tenants keeping their livestock on the Common, the pair were ordered to collect these animals, and managed to bring several black cattle to the West Port. He was probably related to the Burgh officer of the same name who died about 1698. He married Janet Cuthbertson and their son Walter was baptised in 1725, with witnesses Henry Orrock and Francis Ruecastle. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Cavers in 1779, when he was working for James Douglas. Sir John of Allanbank (1714-96) from the Berwickshire family, he was Sheriff of that county. He became an Advocate in 1737 and was appointed Solicitor of the Stamp Duties in 1767. He is listed as being life-renter of lands in Minto Parish in 1779 (and recorded as former liferenter in 1811). His lands were those that had been earlier known as Craigend and Minto Mill farms, including Minto Craigs, Millbank, Craigend Haugh, Millhaugh and a haugh by the Spittal road. He was one of 6 men who had been given liferent of parts of Minto by Sir Gilbert Elliot as a tactic to increase his support among the voters of Roxburghshire. There is no evidence that he had any other local connection. He married Margaret Agnes Smith and was succeeded by his son, Sir John. Rev. William Brown was chaplain to his family before becoming minister of Bedrule. John (18th C.) watchmaker in Hawick. He married Catharine Hall and their children included: William (b.1786); and Douglas (b.1788). The witnesses in 1786 were butcher Andrew Waugh and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller and in 1788 were wigmaker Francis McKenzie and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller. John (18th C.) watchmaker in Hawick. He was on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). John Govan of Hermiston (d.c.1861) lived at Cotfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the mid-19th century. He became a member of the Peeblesshire Society in 1827. In 1835 he was involved in a dispute over closing off an old drove road on his property at Hermiston. In 1851 he was listed as a landed proprietor at Cotfield, farming 97 acres. He was listed at Cotfield in Slater's 1852 directory and was still at Cotfield on the 1861 census, living with his nephew Peter and 3 servants. By 1874 he was owner of the lands of Bewlie Moor. His wife was Anna and her 'Lady's Companion' was Maria Mackintosh from Kensington, who appears to have been listed at Cotfield in a directory of 1868. He is buried in his family enclosure in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (b.c.1820) son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He took part in the Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers and was described as 'a very tall and powerful man and whom no one dared tackle'. He married Margaret Grieve from Buccleuch. John Thomson (1830/1–71) stockingmaker of 1 Loan. He later worked as a carrier. He married Jane Paterson in 1852. Their children included James, John, Agnes and another John (who all died in infancy) and Jane (who died aged 18). John (b.1830/1) farmer at Hermiston in 1861. He was probably son of the previous John. He married Agnes Marshall. Rev. John (1865–1930) born in Fife-Keith, son of John Macpherson and Elizabeth Wright. He was educated in Aberdeen, graduated M.A. in 1887 and B.D. in 1890, and was licensed by the Presbytery there the same year. He became assistant at St. Clement's Parish (Aberdeen) and then at Selkirk before becoming minister of Kirkton in 1892, where he remained until his death. In about 1900 he complained about the state of Kirkton Manse and the money he had personally spent to renovate and redecorate it. He acted as Chaplain for Stobs Military Camp 1903–12; despite this, he complained in several letters around 1921 that the Army had not paid the teinds from Stobs. His surname was usually written 'Stuart'. John Livingstone 'Jock' (1894–1971) born in Hawick, only son of Rev. Duncan of St. Andrews Kirk. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy and at the Royal Dick Veterinary College. In WWI he served in the Scottish Horse and the Argyll & Southern Highlanders. He played flanker for Scotland's Rugby team in 1921. He served in the Colonial Veterinary Service 1923–9 and became a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He was Director of the Veterinary Service of the Gold Coast (later Ghana) 1930–48. He wrote 'The Cattle of the Gold Coast' (1956). He was a large man, who was said to require 2 tubes in each wheel of his bicycle and to have once run over a lion! He is buried at Limpopo, South Africa. Maj. John Ross (1918–2015) from Loganswell in Renfrewshire, he moved to the Borders with his mother, who was a teacher at Yetholm and then Denholm. He worked as a tailor, but joined the Army Reserves in 1939. He was a survivor of Dunkirk and was then commissioned with the K.O.S.B., serving in India and Burma, and retiring with the rank of Major. He then became a tailor in North Berwick and ran a guest house there. He joined the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1981, serving on the Committee and as Syllabus Secretary. He wrote 'Borderers in Battle', which describes the Burma campaign of the K.O.S.B. Rev. John T. ex-army chaplain who was minister of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule 1978–84. Katherine (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. She was a resident of Minto when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was able to 'compon' for stealing from her, specifically 6 'chattels'. In 1494/5 the same Adam Turnbull had remission for several crimes, including stealing 6 cows and oxen and 2 bullocks from her in Minto. Kathleen W. nee Scott (1928/9–) growing up at Milsington, she married Sandy and later moved to Aberdeenshire. Her son James continued to own Milsington. She was a founder member of the Borders Family History Society and helped organise the first Hawick High School reunion in 1980. She wrote 'An Historical Record of Borthwick Wa's Burial Ground' (1987), 'Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Robertson' (1991), 'Redfordgreen School, 1885–1955' (1995) and 'History of the Scotts of Milsington' (3 volumes, 1993, 1996, 1998). Ludovic (1574–1624) 2nd Duke of Lennox and 1st Duke of Richmond, son of Esmé the 1st Duke of Lennox. He was the next in line to the throne of Scotland after James VI. He was made Lord High Admiral in 1591 and in 1592 was appointed Warden of the Middle March. In that year he and the Laird of Cessford were directed by the King to deal with the Armstrongs of Whithaugh and Roan. He gave a charter to Robert Scott for the lands of Headshaw and Easter Essenside, probably in 1593 (although transcribed as 1553); he must have been Baron of Ashkirk then. In 1594 he resigned into the hands of the King (for later infetment) the Earldom of Bothwell, including his Lordships and Baronies, such as Liddesdale, Longnewton, Wilton and Chamberlain Newton, lands of Teindside, Harwood, Slaidhills, Carlinpool and Alemoor and patronage of the Kirk of Hawick. In 1603 he had a charter for the lands and baronies formerly belonging to the Archbishop of Glasgow, which included the Baronies of Ashkirk, Lilliesleaf and Ancrum. He married 3 times. He was buried in Westminster Abbey and was succeeded by his brother Esmé. Sir Ludovic of Minto (17th C.) son of Sir Walter. He is recorded in several deeds in 1663. He was involved in disputes with his father and also an unsuccessful investment in lands in Ireland. In 1670 he sold the Barony of Minto to the Marchioness

Dowager of Montrose, Isabella Douglas. He married Elizabeth Cunningham, daughter of the 8th Earl of Glencairn, but they divorced in 1668. There were no children from the marriage and he was probably succeeded by a nephew, Sir John. Margaret (b.c.1775) recorded as 'Independent' in 1841, when she was living as a widow at the Sandbed. Her children included Mary, Margaret, Wilson, Beatrice and Margaret. Margaret (19th C.) daughter of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. She was known as an attractive girl with a charming personality. She married civil engineer William Blood of Cranagher, and their children were Blindon (who became Gen. Sir Blindon, K.C.B.), Bagot, Robert and Margaret. Mary see Mary Queen o Scots Matthew (1516–71) 4th Earl of Lennox, son of John, 3rd Earl. He was assigned the rentals of the Lordship of Ettrick Forest. After his death in 1575/6 there were complaints to the Privy Council on behalf of 2 Burgesses of Edinburgh and a large number of Borderers regarding payment of the 'mails'. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus. Sir Matthew of Minto (d.1610) son of John. His family still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, although it is unclear if they played any direct role in the district. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. He was among those appointed as commissioners to keep the peace in Lanarkshire in 1610. He firstly married Janet Stewart and their children were Sir Walter of Minto (who succeeded) and Janet. He secondly married Jean Colquhoun and had a son, Robert. He witnessed a document for the Duke of Lennox in 1594. Matthew of Barnhills (d.c.1796) son of Rev. Walter, minister of Ashkirk. He was served as heir to his father in 1750, but was not infefted in the lands of Barnhills until 1780. He had a 'decreet of excambion' with Robert Bennet in 1775. In 1780 he appears to have sold Barnhills to Cornelius Elliot and bought it back the following year. In 1780 he had a sasine for the lands of Wester Barnhills 'in fee' (with Alexander Alison holding them 'in liferent'). He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. His sisters Mary, Helen and Isabel inherited the lands in 1796. Mr. ?? (20th C.) Stationmaster at Hassendean. In 1934 he was sacked for allegedly for staging a fake robbery at the station so that he could steal money from the safe. Robert 1st Duke of Albany (c.1340–1420) 3rd and illegitimate son of King Robert II, brother of 'John' who became King Robert III.

He functioned as Regent during his father's infirmity, and also after his brother's death during the minority of his nephew James I. He was thus involved in internal power struggles in Scotland, as well as in leading military expeditions into England. This included indirect involvement in the 'Siege of Cocklaw' in 1403. He was captured at Homildon Hill in 1402, his son Murdoch was exchanged with Henry Percy, and he besieged Roxburgh Castle in 1417. Andrew 'de Hawick' served as his Secretary from 1406. He married firstly Margaret Graham, Countess of Menteith, and secondly Harriet, daughter of Sir William Keith. His children were: Murdoch, who became the 2nd Duke of Albany and was beheaded; Isabel, who married Alexander Leslie, Earl of Ross and Walter Haliburton of Dirleton; Margaret, who married Sir John Swinton; Marjory, who married Sir Duncan Campbell of Lochow; Elizabeth, who married Sir Malcolm Fleming of Cumbernauld; Joan, who married Robert Stewart, Lord of Lorn; Beatrix, who married James, 7th Earl of Douglas; a daughter who married an Abernethy of Salton; John, Chamberlain of Scotland, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Earl of Douglas; Andrew; Robert; and (a second) Elizabeth, who married Malcolm Fleming of Biggar. Robert of Traquair (d.1548) eldest son of William. In 1547/8 he is listed among the supporters of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme in a bond of loyalty to the Crown, along with the Kerrs. He was succeeded by his brother John. Sir Robert of Minto (d.1553) son of Sir John. In 1529 King James V granted him and his wife the Barony and lands of Minto. In 1533 he was appointed as his representative by William, son of the deceased John Turnbull. William Turnbull offered 'kindly service' to him, and he delivered an old reversion relating to Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat. He was Provost of Glasgow 1526–36. He married Janet, daughter of John, 'the Outlaw Murray'. His children included John of Minto (also Provost of Glasgow), Agnes (who married John Wallace, 1st of Auchams and Dundonald) and Elizabeth (who married John Maxwell of Calderwood). Sir Robert of Shillinglaw (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of James of Traquair. His lands of Shillinglaw lay close to Traquair in Peeblesshire. However, he also had charters in 1614 and 1617 for the Barony of Horsburgh and lands elsewhere, probably including lands in Cavers Parish. In 1618 he was listed among commissioners appointed to keep law and order in Teviotdale and in 1619 appointed as a Commissioner for Tweeddale. He served as tutor to his nephew John, who became the 1st

Earl of Traquair; he was tutor in 1619 when there were 2 cases brought against the Turnbulls for cutting down timber at Huntliehill and for removing hay from there. He was a member of the Commission for the Middle Shires around 1618. In 1634 his son James of Nether Horsburgh was served as his heir. Robert (17th C.) resident of the former Hassendean Parish. He married Mary 'Malkye' (Mackie) in Robertson Parish in 1684 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1685) and Robert (b.1687), baptised in Robertson; and William (b.1694) and George (b.1698), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1687 were George Scott (probably the one associated with Easter Groundistone) and Thomas Cowan. The witnesses in 1694 were John Scott and John Glendinning, and this is the earliest existing entry in the Wilton Parish records. He is probably the James recorded at Easter Groundistone on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (18th C.) servant of Francis Coltart in Woodburn (in the Borthwick valley). He is recorded in 1729 in the Robertson session books, having an altercation with William Bell, farmer at Broadlee. Robert (18th C.) schoolmaster at Caerlenrig from 1763. It is possible that the same man was 'Mr Robert Stuart, schoolmaster, Wilton' on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret ('Peggie') Collier and their children included: Andrew (b.1773); Agnes (b.1776); Janet (b.1777); Robert (b.1779); James (b.1781); and Charters (b.1786). The witnesses in 1776 were the Associate Congregation and in 1781 were the 'Special Congregation'. Robert (18th C.) resident of Damside in Wilton. He married Janet Cunningham and their children included: Janet (b.1772); Mary (b.1775); Mary (again, b.1777); and Anne (b.1784). The witnesses in 1775 were James Knox (probably the gardener at Damside) and John Lorraine. Robert (b.c.1770s) carrier in Hawick. In 1799 he was recorded as servant to Robert Pringle in Allars. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at 'Back of the Woods' in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably farmer at this house near Crawbyres. Robert (b.c.1790) son of Alexander and Mary Colquhoun. The origins of the family probably lies in the north, perhaps related to the Stewarts of Appin who lost their lands after supporting the 1715 and 1745 rebellions. He was tenant of Hawthornside farm 1834-47. He rented a farmhouse for another couple of years, but then left the district. He had a sister, Mary, and a brother, Alexander, who died young. He married Margaret Burnet and their children were: Alexander (b.c.1815), who died unmarried; Margaret (b.c.1825), who married William Blood of Cranagher, and whose son was Sir Bindon Blood; Robert (b.c.1820), who married Isabella Smith, daughter of the factor of Wolfelee and secondly married Esther Hudson; John (b.c.1820), who married Margaret Grieve from Buccleuch; Annie, who married John Wallace; Thomas (b.1816/7), who married Annie Donkin of Newcastle; Mary (b.c.1825), who married Daniel McPherson; and William Colquhoun (b.1828/9), who married Helen Smith. His sons James, Robert and John were prominent for the 'uppies' in Hobkirk Baa; however, the youngest son, William, was considered the best runner in the Borders in his day. Robert (19th C.) married Isabella Smith in Hobkirk Parish in 1847. Sir Thomas of Minto (d.1500) son of Sir William of Garlies. His brother Alexander married Elizabeth Douglas of Cavers and at one point held the lands of Howpasley. The family clearly had a local connection, including land in Minto Parish. His great-grandfather was Sir William of Jedworth, whose mother was a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Minto. He became Provost of Glasgow. In 1476 he had a charter of a third of the lands in the Barony of Minto, as well as superiority over the whole of the Barony, which had been resigned by his father, Sir William (and with the consent of his older brother Alexander). He had a further charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle in 1476, resigned by his brother and attached to the Barony of Minto. In 1477 he and his wife had a charter for lands in Renfrew. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1486. In 1488 he was granted a fee by the Crown, for his service as Marshal. He also had a lease of the lands of 'Dunrod and Fintelauch' for his fee, and continued in this position until at least 1492. In 1490 he granted the lands of Nether Crailing called 'Stewartlandis', which had been annexed to Minto, to Bartholomew Rutherford. In 1491/2 he resigned the lands of Sunlaws, which were granted to Robert Ramsay and his wife Agnes Haitlie. He married Isabel, daughter of Walter Stewart of Arthurlie. Their children were Sir John of Minto (also Provost of Glasgow), William (who became Bishop of Aberdeen and High Treasurer of Scotland), Archibald, Agnes, Marion (married Adam Maxwell of Southbar), Margaret, James, Nicolas, Robert and John. The family kept the 'of Minto' designation for several generations (including 5 Provosts of Glasgow), although they appear to have had no continuing local presence. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. Thomas (b.c.1800) publican on the Loan. He is recorded as vintner at the Nag's Head in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living with his wife Elizabeth at about the first house on the Loan. Walter (12th C.) see Walter Fitz Alan. Sir Walter (1293–1327) son of James, who he succeeded as 6th High Steward of Scotland. He was knighted after Bannockburn. In about 1320 he was 'Walteri Senescalli Scotie' when he was granted lands in Roxburghshire that had been forfeited by Sir John de Soulis and others. This included Eckford, Nisbet, Langnewton, Maxton and Caverton. He was Governor of Berwick, commanding there when there was a siege by the English in 1319. He was a signatory of the Declaration of Arbroath in 1320. Also in 1320 he witnessed the charter of the Lordship of Jedburgh to Sir James Douglas. He married Marjory, daughter of Robert the Bruce; she died possibly after a fall from a horse, with their son John (who became King Robert II) said by some to have been born by Cæserian section. He had earlier married Alice, daughter of Sir John Erskine of that Ilk, and later married Isabel, sister of Sir John Graham of Abercorn. He had a son, Sir John, who died without issue. He also had a daughter who married Sir William Graham of Kincardine, and another daughter, Egidia, who married Sir James Lindsay of Crawford, secondly married Sir Hew Eglintoun and thirdly married Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith. Walter (16th C.) recorded as Rector of Minto in 1542 and 1544. He was presumably a member of the Stewarts of Minto family. Sir Walter of Minto (d.1640s) son of Sir Matthew. In 1606 he was involved in some kind of fight with a group supporting Sir George Elphinstone in Glasgow, being held in Dumbarton Castle for a while. In 1614 he was served heir to his grandfather Sir John in $\frac{2}{3}$ of the superiority of the Barony of Minto (as well sa lands in Morebattle). Apart from the title, he had no direct local connection and lived in Glasgow, being Bailie to the Regality there (but not Provost, like several of his ancestors). He was also keeper of Dumbarton Castle. In 1641 he was a representative for Clydesdale to meet with the King. He married Christian Crawford in 1598/9. Their daughter Mrs. Liliastewart was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1663. The family fortunes dwindled at this time and he had to mortgage his property in Easter and Wester Craigs in Glasgow, which was sold off by his son, Sir Ludovic. He may also be the Stewart who sold off the family interest in the Barony of Minto. Sir Ludovic was succeeded by Sir John, who was even more impoverished (it is said he was a pauper who was sent barefoot to Edinburgh to beg a favour from one of his rich Stewart relatives) and died on a voyage out to the colony at Darien. Walter (17th C.) mentioned in one of the first existing entries in the Town book of 1638 as an officer of the Town (along with James Kinnaird). They were presumably the 2 Burgh Officers of the time, corresponding to the Halberdiers of today. Walter (17th C.) son of cordiner James. In 1666 he was a witness to the fight in St. Mary's Kirk between William Turnbull and James Chisholme. He could be the Walter baptised in Hawick in 1646, son of James and Manie Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Craik in 1733. His children included: Robert (b.1733); Janet (b.1735); Walter (b.1739); Walter (again, b.1741); and Mary (b.1745). Rev. Walter (1706–62) son of Bailie Matthew Stewart in Newton of Mearns, he was baptised in Canongate, Edinburgh. He studied at the Universities of Edinburgh and Leiden and was presented to Ashkirk Parish in 1730 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, one of the Lords of Session at the time. He paid the window tax at 'the mance' in Ashkirk Parish in 1748 and again in 1753. In 1742 he was recorded in Selkirk as 'minister of the Gospel at Ashkirk for victual supplied for the poor'. He also bought (from John Mackenzie of Devlin) the land at Barnhills in 1749 and hence is sometimes described as 'of Barnhill' (or 'Barnhills'). He was thus designated among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1750 in Edinburgh he married Mrs. Mary Duncanson (who died in 1793) of Garshake. Their children included: Mary (b.1751); Matthew (1752–82) of Barnhills; Helen (1754–1815); Margaret, who died in infancy; James (b.1756), died young; and Isabel (b.1759, or Isabella). Matthew inherited the lands of Barnhills from him and after Matthew's death they passed to Mary, Helen and Isabel. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson and Wilton Parishes. He was at Greenbank in 1780 and Stirches in 1792. He married Betty Miller in Robertson in 1774. Their children included: Betty (b.1780); Janet (b.1782); and Walter (b.1792). Isobel (b.1776) and Marion (b.1778), baptised in Robertson, with no mother's name listed, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1792 were Gilbert Smith and Thomas Ferguson (both servants of Chisholme of that Ilk, suggesting that he also worked for the laird of Stirches). Sir William of Jedworth (d.1402) 2nd son of Sir Alexander of Darnley and Crookston or perhaps son of Sir John of Jedworth, his mother being a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Minto. He was probably grandson (or other descendant) of 'John Senescal de Jedwith' who signed the Ragman Rolls. He was also known as 'of Teviotdale'. He may have been an ally of the English until 1384 when Teviotdale was recaptured for Scotland, then fighting on the Scottish side and being rewarded by Robert II with lands in Roxburghshire. He received money from the French to support the war against England in 1385 and was present at Otterburn in 1388. He was knighted around this time and in the 1390s served as auditor of the exchequer, as well as commissioner at march days. He was additionally appointed as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, although the extent of the appointment is not known. In the period 1390–1402 he acted as Clerk of Audit according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1390 he was granted lands within Minto by John Turnbull ('Out with the sword'), who was his uncle. This was confirmed by Robert II in 1390/1, and included the patronage of the church, which had been resigned by George Abernethy. He was thus probably the first of the Stewarts to own lands in Minto. He was probably the Sir William who witnessed a Lindsay charter for Stouslie and Groundistone about 1390. An undated charter of Robert III (probably around 1400) grants him $\frac{1}{3}$ of the lands of Minto. In the late 1390s he accompanied Archibald Douglas (later 4th Earl of Douglas) in an attack on the English-held Roxburgh Castle. In 1398 he was one of the 'borowis' for the Earl of Douglas bounds on the Middle March, according to an English document. He witnessed charters for the Earl of Douglas in 1400 and 1402. He led an unsuccessful raid into Northumberland in 1400 and was at the battle of Homildon Hill in 1402. There he was captured, tried and executed at the instigation of Sir Henry Percy, his body being quartered and displayed on the gates of York. He married Isabel, who was widow of Sir Richard Oliver, although her maiden name is unknown. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, 1st of Garlies, and had at least one other son. His widow Elizabeth remarried to Walter of Bickerton and received some of the customs duties of Edinburgh and Linlithgow in the period 1407–20. Sir William of Dalswinton (15th C.) son of Sir John, 1st of Garlies. In 1429 he succeeded to the Barony of Minto, but this was disputed by Walter Turnbull. As a result it seems that the barony was split, so that his family held the half barony. He was knighted by James III in about 1443 and sat in Parliament in 1467. He married more than once, with his last wife being Euphame Graham. His children included: Andrew, his heir, who predeceased him; Sir Alexander of Garlies, who fought at Sauchieburn and married Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Douglas of Cavers; Sir Thomas, who succeeded to Minto; and Walter of Tonderghie. William of Traquair (16th C.) son of James. In 1526 he was listed in the remission for a large number of Borderers who attacked the Earl of Arran's forces. His brother James was also listed. He became heir to the lands of Rutherford and Wells through his aunt Helen Rutherford. In 1533/4 he was involved in a bond in Selkirk with Patrick Murray of Falahill. In 1538 he had a regranting of his lands of Traquair. In 1541 he is recorded as occupier of Garlawcleuch, Blackhouse and Douglassraig in Yarrow; he may also be the William who was occupier of Berrybush and half of Phaup in Ettrick. Also in 1541 he was involved in a dispute with the Dicksons of Ormiston. He married Christina, 2nd daughter of John, 2nd Lord Hay of Yester. Their children were: Robert, who succeeded; John, who succeeded Robert; William, who succeeded John; James, who succeeded William; Margaret, who married James Murray of Falahill and George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward; and a daughter who married William Sinclair of Blans. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Sir William (d.1605) 5th Laird of Traquair. He succeeded to his brother Sir John, also inheriting the lands of Wells in Rulewater. In 1567 he was listed as brother-german of Sir John of Traquair when he witnessed the wedding contract for Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was a 'gentleman of the bed-chamber' of James VI and was made Governor of Dumbarton Castle in 1582. In 1592 he was surety for George Douglas of Bonjedward and Andrew Douglas of Timpendean. He witnessed a document for the Earl of Lennox in 1594 and in the same year was appointed a deputy justice for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. In 1602 he complained about 'reif' committed on him by James Scott of Whithopei and in 1603 was in dispute with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his chamberlains over taxation. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James of Shillinglaw. William (16th/17th C.) servant of James Douglas of Cavers. In 1612 he,

along with William Douglas of Whitriggs and his brother Robert, was accused by Gavin Elliot of Brugh of attacking his family on their way home from Cavers Kirk. However, the group were acquitted after swearing that the claim was untrue. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he, along with John, witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Agnes Stewart. He could be the William 'Stevart' who married Marion Henderson and whose son John was baptised in 1661, with witnesses John and Robert Henderson. Alternatively he could be the William 'Stevart' who married Agnes Scott and whose son Walter was baptised in 1661, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and James Dunlop. William (b.1657) 3rd Earl of Traquair, son of John, 2nd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1666. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Charles. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the weaver in Heap who witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver John Cairns in Wilton in 1711. William (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is also listed in 1694 on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William born in Hawick in 1637, son of Francis and Helen Muir. He could also be the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1669); Charles (b.1673); and Francis (b.1677). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1690. He married 'Mals' Hastie and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were John and James Stewart (who were surely related). William (1695/6–1760) tenant farmer in Gillfoot. He is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Elliot in 1720. Their children included Robert (b.1723) and Agnes (b.1726). He may be the William 'Steward' who witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for George Langlands of that Ilk in 1724. He also witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, resident of Tandlaw, in 1729. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Stouslie in 1770 and 1780. He married Margaret Ormiston in Wilton in 1764. Their children included: Helen (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); and George (b.1771). Probably the same William secondly married Jean Scott in 1777, with children: George (b.1778); and James (b.1780). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Reid. The baptism in 1780 was performed by Rev. John Young (meaning that he was a member of the Green Kirk), with witnesses James Scott and George Turnbull. William (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Mackay and their children included Margaret (b.1850) and Jane (b.1852). William Colquhoun (b.1828/9) youngest son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He took part in Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. He was known as one of the best runners in the Borders and was unbeaten over about 30 races. On one occasion he was dancing and playing the fiddle at Billerwell until 2 a.m., set out an hour later to meet his brother in Newcastle, arriving at 4 p.m., and then won a sprint race that his brother had put him up to. He ran against Willie Scott from Martinshouse, in a specially arranged match over half a mile near Stobs, and won. He married Helen, daughter of William Smith in 1853 and moved to Newcastle (also spelled 'Steuart', 'Stuert' etc. and in earlier times interchangeable with 'Stuart' as well as 'Steward').

Stewartfield (stew-ur'-feeld) n. popular name for the area around East and West Stewart Places.

Stewart's Cleuch (stew-urts-klooch) n. small stream joining Hope Sike near Pleaknowe and running into the eastern side of the Slitrig.

Stewashiels (stew-u-sheelz) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as 'Stewaschellis'. The location is unknown.

Stewie (stew-ee) n. pet name for Stewart or Stuart.

stey (sti) v. to stay, remain, wait, stop, tarry – 'stey there an deh move a muscle', 'some o thum steyed on efter the War', '...he that tells lees sallna stayer in my sicht' [HSR], 'Aw'll maybe get the name Poet Laureate Of course aw'll still stey the same ...' [AY], to live somewhere permanently, reside – 'oo yist ti stey up the Loan', 'A've traivelled wide, a've traivelled wide, In guid bits steyed, in guid bits steyed ...' [IWL], (also spelled 'stei', and 'stay' as in English; note that there are variations in the diphthong, going from 'ā-ee' to 'u-ee').

stey (sti) adj., arch. steep, stiff, difficult to climb – '... 'set a stour heart to a stae brae', and climb to the top of the Wisp' [HAST1875], 'It hed been a stey climm up ti Dunion-heed ...' [ECS], '... And lift us up the steyest brae, And o'er the plantin' stiles' [JT], '...He finds a steyp upended brae, That mony a sprawl hae dealt 'im' [WP], '...A hert to face the steypst brae' [WL] (also 'stae').

Steyll (stīl) n. former name for lands near Branhholme, mentioned in the 1420 charter when half of the lands of Branhholme were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. The description is of 'the lands and houses of Steyll, and the half of the broad meadow towards the lands of Steyll ... on the west side of the Syke'; the exact location is uncertain. Somewhere around Branhholme Town seems feasible, but a location much further west, near the hill called 'The Steel', is also possible (also written 'Steyl' in 1420).

steys (stīz) n., pl. stays, a corset, girdle – '...sellin a thing frae hoosehold goods ti back-lacin steys' [IWL].

St. George's Kirk (sin'-jōr-jeez-kirk) n. church in St. George's Lane, built in 1843–44 after the Disruption as the Free or Protesting Church. The land was purchased by the new congregation from James Anderson of Wilton Lodge. The original building was designed by Andrew Thomson of Glasgow and John Smith of Darnick. Several articles were placed in the foundation stone (and could not be found when the church was rebuilt). A manse was built on Wilton Path in 1846, designed by Smith of Darnick. The church was known as 'Hawick Free Kirk' for more than 50 years. It changed its name to 'St. George's United Free Church' in 1900 (after the union of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches); the reasons for the choice of the new name are uncertain. After purchase of the house and grounds of 'Ellabank' next door the church was rebuilt in 1913–16 using Doddington stone, but with parts of the original walls and a lintel inserted from the old building. The austere Gothic design is by architect J.P. Alison. It is a grade C listed building. An adjoining hall was built a few years later. It was re-named simply 'St. George's Church' in 1929 (after the union of the United Free Church and the Church of Scotland). It contains an east-end window, commemorating the 1929 reunion (possibly the only such window in Scotland), by Lilian J. Pocock of London. The organ was added in 1920 in memory of Bessie Scott (a gift of Peter Scott & Co.). A separate West End 'Free' congregation had been established in 1855, and after that church closed in 1956, St. George's was re-named 'St. George's West'. Since 1988 it has been known as Teviot Parish Church, with links to Roberton Parish. Kirk Session records for 1842–82 and 1900–14 are in the National Archives. A roll of the ministers is: John Aikman Wallace 1843–70; William H. Gaulter, assistant 1859–64; John MacGregor 1865–73; M.P. Johnstone 1873–79; W.A.P. Johnman 1880–1923; Donald G. Ross 1911–35 (assistant until 1923); C. Sydney Finch 1936–1967; Thomas N. Hood 1967–82; Neil Combe 1984–.

St. George's Lane (sin'-jōr-jeez-lān) n. another name for Free Church Lane.

St. George's West (sin'-jōr-jeez-west) n. name given to St. George's (Free) Church after the return of the West End congregation in 1956. It was renamed Teviot Parish Church in 1988. The old Manse for St. George's West is along Buccleuch Road.

St. Helens (sin'-he-linz) n. girl's school based in Heronhill House in about the years 1945–9. It was moved there from Bridge of Allan. The school had as many as 54 girl boarders and a few very young boys. Miss Jean Macdonald was the owner and Headmistress.

stibble (sti-bul) n., arch. stubble – 'Poor Habby's kail gat mony a nibble, De'il haet was left but runts an' stibble' [JR], 'Unmolested the maukins may feed on the stibble And dae as they like, for never shall he Catch them again as they nibble The sweet blades o' verdure on hillside or lea' [TCh], 'O my God, mak' thame as ane whurle, as the stibble afore the wund' [HSR].

stibbled (sti-bul', -buld) adj., arch. covered with stubble – 'The fruit's picked and the stibbled leas are still ...' [WL].

stibblewin (sti-bul'-win) v., arch. to cut ahead of a neighbouring reaper – 'In cutting down grain, one is said to be stibble-wundit when his neighbours in kemping, or striving, cut down the grain on each side of him, so as to pass him on the rig, or get before him and cut down in his direction, so that he has nothing but stubble on either side, as well as before him. Thus the wind blows over the stubble towards him on all hands' [JoJ].

Stichill (sti-chil) n. village north of Kelso, with the parish church dating from about 1770. The nearby Stichill House is demolished, but was long the home of a branch of the Pringle family. A grand entrance and lodge houses still survive, however (the name may derive from the Old English 'stycce', meaning 'a piece'; also written 'Stichill').

stick (stik, steek) v. to abide, bear, stand – 'For saicind year the cooncil pick Yin whae Hawick

stick (stik, steek) v. to gore or butt with horns – 'The yill-cup, the gill-stoup, Flee, like a sticking bull' [JoHa] (also steek).

stickers (sti-kurz) n., arch. goose-grass, Galium aparine (also called sticky wullie and sometimes sticky tam).

stickit (sti-, stee-kee', -ki') adj., pp. stuck, gored with an animal's horns, stabbed – 'The said John Gladstainis stiket John Purdie at the table' [1596/HAST1910] (also steekit).

stickit minister (sti-kee'-mee-nees-tur) n., arch. someone trained for the clergy but without a charge, popularised by the 1893 novel of that name by S.R. Crockett.

stick the heid in (stik-thu-heed-in) v. instruction to head-butt, or more generally to fight.

sticky-ooty see stickie-ootie

sticky tam (sti-kee-tawm) n., arch. goose-grass, Galium aparine (more commonly sticky wullie).

sticky wullie (sti-kee-wu-lee) n. cleavers, goose-grass, Galium aparine, a plant with hooked bristles that catches on clothing, also called 'adhesive William' (also stickers and sticky tam).

stiffie (sti-fee) n., arch. someone who is stuck-up, priggish or overly formal, a stiff – '... apart from one or two 'stiffies', we all looked forward to these sessions' [BB] (no longer in use with this meaning).

still an yow (stil-an-yow) n., arch. a children's ball game, where a ball is bounced off a wall and has to be caught by a nominated player, who, failing to succeed shouts 'still' to the others and then has to hit one of them with the ball to make them the new thrower – 'At fower o'clock we'd oot wi' top or gird, And whiles, gin we could boast a baa, I've seen oo play for oors at 'Still an' yow', Stottin't on Drummond's gable waa' [WL].

stilt (stil') n., arch. the handle of a plough – '... That ye between the stilts was bred, Wi' ploughmen schooled, wi' ploughmen fed' [BS], 'The Jamie Sword would leave the plough-stilts, and ... set to work to excavate the boulder' [RJR], a crutch.

stilt (stil') v., arch. to use stilts, cross water on stilts – 'To stilt the water, To cross it on poles, Roxb.' [JoJ], to go on crutches.

stilt (stilts) n., pl. wooden poles with foot perches, formerly used to cross rivers and streams. They were common in Hawick before the main bridges were built. And before the Victoria foot-bridge was constructed, workers used them to get to the mills across the Teviot. In Denholm every household had a pair, with the favourite crossing place being just below Denholm Mill.

stinkan (sting-kan) adj., poet. stinking – 'The stinkan brockke wi' his lang lank lyske, Shotte up his gruntle to see' [JTe].

Stinkin Well (sting-kin-wel) n. name for a spring to the east of the farm of Flatt in southern Liddesdale (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Stintieknowe (stin-tee-now) n. small farm steadying out beyond Stirches, near Dykeneuk Loch, and also known variously as Stinty-Knowes, Stinty Knowe etc. Walter Scott was farmer there in the early 19th century. In 1841 there were 2 households there, one the Curries and the other housing a variety of people. In 1851 Thomas Smith and family were in one house and the Campbell brothers in the other. In 1861 labourer

Stintin Burn

William Thomson and family were at the cottage with James Gledstains and family at 'Stintyknows Far House'. The hill there was originally the 'stenting knowe', where Wilton Common was stented, prior to its division in 1764. In other words this site was essentially the Wilton equivalent of the Caa Knowe – 'Stinty Knowe then the Cala Burn There isna a walk mair plesant Now oor on the Whitehaugh Road And in front o' ee a pheasant' [AY] (also written 'Stintie Knowe', 'Stintyknows', 'Stinty Knowes', etc.).

Stintin Burn (stin-tin-burn) n. former name for the stream in Wilton, also known as the Stirches Burn, which rises near Stintyknowe and flows through Stirches.

Stinty Knowes (stin-tee-nowz) n. another name for Stintieknowe.

Stirches (stir-cheez) n. area to the north of Silverbuthall, reached via Dickson Street. The name is now mainly identified with the council housing scheme, was developed after the property was purchased in 1971, with building commencing in 1973. The housing comprising a series of streets bounded by Stirches Road and Guthrie Drive, and contains a primary school, but no businesses. The main road to Selkirk and the north once went through here. The name goes back at least to the 16th century, and was formerly 'Stirkshaw' or 'Stirkshaws'. 'Watt Scott of Stirkschawis' was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. There were sons of the Scotts of Synton (or Whitslade) there in the 16th and 17th centuries, who sold it to the Chisholmes around 1660. About that time Thomas Scott of Whitslade paid tax on £214 for the land there. William Chisholme was owner in 1678 and it was still recorded with the same value in 1788 and 1811. William Cavers was living there in 1682 and William Telfer in 1683. The lands were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690 when that parish was suppressed and that part allocated to Wilton. In 1694 tax was paid on 4 hearths for 'Stirkshaus' his house', and Janet Lamb was listed among the poor. James Ormiston was there in 1721, Walter Lorraine in 1724–29, John Blyth in 1728 and William Lamb in 1729. Walter Stewart was living there in 1792 and Richard and William Turnbull were wrights there in 1797. The estate was bought by James Farrar Blenkhorn in 1898, who was already renting the house. The house was redesigned and eventually passed to the Sisters of St. Augustine, and used as a private nursing home. The estate was sold off in parts, following Minnie Blenkhorn's death in 1922. The lower area was developed as the Stirches housing estate in the mid-1970s – 'Coming in by Stirches hill, I saw auld Hawick a dreaming still' [IJ], 'Wi' haltin' step by Stirches brae To roam the Heap Hills ower ...' [WFC], 'A gentle walk up the Stirches road Then, when ee look around Ee think wi' awe this is hame And it feels like hallowed ground' [AY] (the name occurs regularly from 1481 until the early 18th century as 'Stirkschaw', 'Stirkschawis', 'Stirkshaws', 'Styrkschaw' and similar spellings; the modern 'Stirches' is first recorded in 1713, but it is still 'Stirkshaw' in Hawick Burgh records of 1728; it is 'Styrkschaw' in 1500, 'Stirkschaw' in 1501/2, 'Stirkschawis' in 1502, 'Styrkschaw' in 1504/5, 'Stirkschaw' in 1505, 'Stokschawis' in 1512, 'Styrkschawis' in 1579, 'Styrk Schawis' in 1579/80, 'Styrkschawis' in 1580/1, 'Stirkschawis' in 1590, 1592 and 1599, 'Sterchehewis' in 1602, 'Stirkshaues' in 1694, 'Stirkshawes' in 1678, 'Stirchaus' in 1682, 'Stirkshaws' in 1708 and 'Stirthces' in 1720; the origin is clearly from Old English 'stycr' plus 'sceaga' or Scots 'shaw', meaning a wooded area with young bullocks).

Stirches Band (stir-cheez-bawnd) n. popular name for the military band of the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps at the end of the 19th century, whose Captain was John Scott Chisholme of Stirches.

Stirches Brick Works (stir-cheez-brikwurks) n. works set up by Capt. Chisholme of Stirches, which produced bricks, tiles and pottery between about 1850 and 1870, mainly used in local building projects. The original idea had been to establish a pottery works, until it was found that the local clay was unsuitable. The works were abandoned when the price of transportation and coal became too expensive. The buildings were used by the shepherd when the estate was purchased by Blenkhorn in 1890. Some ruined remains can be seen on the right of the road leading from the Convent to Stouslie.

Stirches Burn (stir-cheez-burn) n. stream that rises perhaps near Priestrig and flows through

Stirches Croft (stir-cheez-croft) n. former farm on Stirches estate, where??.

Stirches Hoose (stir-cheez-hoos) n. Stirches House, an extensive mansion above Stirches housing scheme. A previously existing house was the residence of the Chisholms for about 200 years, being built on top of a mediæval tower in the mid-17th century by Walter Chisholm. The original tower was square (perhaps similar to Goldielands) and had a protecting courtyard wall. It was built by Scott of Whitslade, after he became Laird in the late 15th century. Above the doorway was a Latin inscription ‘Christus Rex Regum qui non dormitat in ævum protegat hanc ædem necnon sine crimini plebem 1503’ (‘Christ the King of Kings, who never sleeps in heaven, protect this house and the people guiltless of crime’); a copy is still above the door of the present house (an extra ‘b’ on the end of ‘crimini’ suggests it is an imperfect copy). The lower floor had a vaulted ceiling, with the upper floors reached via a staircase in the roughly 6 foot thick walls. The second level held a public room about 30 feet by 18 feet, with a fireplace at each end, and there were sleeping rooms above. The upper stories were demolished in about 1666, with new accommodations built on either side and the south front added to the house. The initials ‘W.C. M.B. 1666’ were carved above one of the windows (Walter Chisholme and his wife Margaret Balderstone), this panel now in the north-east gable. Tax was paid on 19 windows there in 1748. The main house was added to and altered over the years, becoming a white-washed cluster of buildings. The main building was in turn largely demolished in 1899/1900 for John Blenkhorn, and rebuilt to the designs of J.P. Alison. This included a fabricated Blenkhorn coat-of-arms in stained glass on the staircase and a stable for 12 horses. The only mediæval parts surviving are sections of the south gable and west wall. After it was finally completed in 1904, James Blenkhorn lived there for only another 5 years before his death. There are photographs of how the house looked during his time there. After Minnie Blenkhorn’s death in 1922 the house went on the market and since 1926 has been run by the Augustinian Sisters as St. Andrew’s Nursing Home, better known as ‘the Convent’. An intricately carved slab from the old house, bearing the Chisholm crest, is in the Museum.

Stirches Ludge (stir-cheez-luj, -loj) n. small house near the entrance to the drive-way of the former Stirches House, there since at least the mid-19th century.

Stirches Mains (stir-cheez-mānz) n. farm in the Stirches area, to the left of the road just after the Convent. The farmer there recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls was Mrs. Scott. Alexander Scott was recorded as tenant in at least 1797–1801, while Thomas was also living there in 1799–1801 and James Turnbull was a servant there in 1801. In the early 19th century was James Bunyan and in 1841 was Walter Knox – ‘Owre the lang brae frae Stouslie; Frae the mains o’ Stirches down; How micht I come at the day’s end To the bonny Border toun?’ [WL] (presumably once the home farm for Stirches).

Stirches Mains Hill (stir-cheez-mānz-hil) n. name sometimes given to the hill near Stirches Mains, reaching a height of 266 m.

Stirches Quarry (stir-cheez-kwa-ree) n. former quarry on the opposite side of the road from Stirches Mains.

Stirches Road (stir-cheez-rōd) n. the main road from Dickson Street to Stirches House, and also once the main road to Selkirk and points north. It now provides access to much of the Stirches housing estate.

Stirches Schuil (stir-cheez-skil) n. primary school in the Stirches housing scheme, built in 1976 on Roxburghe Drive. It’s characteristic feature is a forest of pyramidal roof lights.

stirk (stirk) n., arch. a young bovine animal after weaning, generally those kept for slaughter rather than breeding, usually referring to bullocks or steers, but also sometimes heifers – ‘...also from James Wardlaw, in Riccarton, was bought for 23s ‘an ox stirk of the guidwife’s at the mill’ [JaT], ‘Transform’d may I be to a stirk, If bonny Meggy’s wanton smirk ...’ [JR], ‘His time is up, he comes a hornless sirk – For faith! his sca’p’s sae soft that horns won’t grow on’t’ [JoHa], ‘...Sure he’d hae the heart o’ a stirk, Could look without love on sic beauty’ [JoHa], ‘...I know not if the stirks grew tired before the stars were set’ [WHO], ‘...And whiles I feel like tethered stirk Stuck here amang it a’ [WL] (also sometimes ‘stark’; from Old English; the word occurs in several local placenames, e.g. ‘Stirches’).

Stirkcleuch Height (stirk-klooch-hī) n. hill that is the north-eastern spur of the Pike, between Penchrise Pen and the Maidens. It reaches a height of 443 m. Further to the north-east is Burnt Craig.

stirkie (stir-kee) n., arch. diminutive form for a young bovine animal – ‘Each ’eer, as Januar’

– end returns, Ilk yowe and stirkie waefu' murns ...' [DH].

Stirk-rigg (stirk-rig) n. small hill about 1 km north of Bedrule farm, reaching only about 160 m in height. Just to the west of the summit are the remains of a circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter, probably a settlement. It was said (in the New Statistical Account) to have been removed by cultivation in the 18th century, but is still visible in aerial photographs. This was the former site of a farm, which was incorporated into the farm of Newton, with all signs of the farmhouse disappearing. 'Stirkrig' and 'Stirkrig-hill' were listed as part of Newton according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (also 'Stirkrigg').

Stirkshaws (stirk-shawz) n. early name for Stirches, after the stirks which grazed there. It changed to 'Stirches' in the early 18th century. The Chisholms were Lairds of Stirkshaws for about 250 years (also 'Stirkschaw', 'Stirkschaws', 'Stirkshaw', etc.; incorrectly written 'Strikshaws' by Keith Scott).

Stirkshielhope (stirk-sheel-hōp) n. former farm in Liddesdale, listed as 'Styrkschelhope' in a c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was valued at 8 merks and listed under 'Foresta' (which seems to have been the northern part, including the Hermitage valley). It is recorded as 'Streichelhope' on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, and still valued at 8 merks; the tenants were Robert Elliot in Ramsiegill, John of the Hill, Adam Elliot of Lees, 'Old' Robert Elliot of Ramsiegill, John Elliot and John's son James called 'Nelis Jok'. It could be related to 'Stitchel Hill' near Riccarton.

Stirk Sike (stirk-sik) n. small stream that joins the west side of Dawston Burn to the north of Saughtree. It is between Watch Sike and March Sike and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Stirling (stir-ling) n. Benjamin (b.1805/6) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1851 he is recorded as 'Pauper (formerly Tinsmith); Deaf & Dumb'. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James 'Jim' (1924/5–) from Cumnock, he volunteered for the Royal Navy at the age of 18. He was a telegraphist and then served on minesweepers. He was on a ship the cleared mines for the D-Day landings and later his ship was sunk and the crew spent hours in the water before being rescued. After the war he joined the police, serving in Duns, Coldstream, Yetholm, Jedburgh and Hawick. He retired as a sergeant.

He is Hawick's last surviving link with D-Day. Peter (b.1812/3) from Newtown, he was a tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. He was living on the north side of Main Street in 1851. His wife was Agnes. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His children included George (b.1743), Mary (b.1745), James (b.1750) and Margaret (b.1753). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, who paid the 1785 cart tax there and is also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is surely related to James, who is also listed in 1797. He was an innkeeper in Lilliesleaf, who subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. He may be the Robert who married Rachel Mathison and had children including Robert (b.1771), Sally (b.1774), Peggy (b.1776), Agnes (b.1778), Rachel (b.1780) and William (b.1783). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Junior Carter' at West Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenantancy Book for 1799. He is probably son of the older carter of the same name. He is probably the journeyman wright (suggesting that one of the occupations may have been an error) listed on the 1801 Militia ballot in Lilliesleaf. He is probably the Robert who married Jenny Gray and had a son James (b.1803) baptised in Lilliesleaf. Other children, with no mother's name given, who may be his, include Bella (b.1794) and William (b.1799).

stishie (sti-shee) n., poet. bustle, uproar – 'When the stishie has smooored oot my rest ...' [WL] (cf. strooshie).

stitch (stich) n., arch. a furrow or drill of potatoes, turnips, etc. (see also tatti-stitch).

stitcher (sti-chur) n. a worker who stitches final trimmings (e.g. ribbons or pockets) on garments in the knitwear industry, using a sewing machine, this traditionally being a woman's job.

Stitchel Hill (sti-chul-hil) n. hill just to the north-east of Riccarton junction, rising to 318 m. There was formerly a fortified house near here (it is 'Stitchelhill' in 1694 and 1736; it is marked as 'Stritcher-hils' on Gordon's c. 1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map).

Stitchelhill (sti-chul-hil) n. farmstead in northern Castleton Parish, near the hill of the same name. It could be related to the lands of 'Styrkschelhope' listed in northern Liddesdale in a rental roll c.1376 and 'Streichelhope' recorded in a rental roll of 1541. 'Willie's Airchie' Elliot 'of Strychill hill' is recorded in 1590. In 1632 it was owned by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs and listed as 'Struchehill alias Stitchelhill' (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it was combined with Laidlawhope and Whitrope, and extended to 1990 acres, bounded by Laws, Dawsonburn, Millburnholm and Roughley. The lands were rented by John Laing from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. John Oliver was farmer there in the 1830s. William Roxburgh was shepherd in 1835. There was a lime works there according to the 1841 census, with 7 quarrymen working there. George Scott and family were living there in 1861 (it is 'Stitchelhill' in 1694 and 1736; it is marked as 'Stichilhill' on Stobie's 1770 map).

stithy (sti-thee) n., arch. an anvil – '...While block and stithy rang wi' our daffin' an' our mirth' [JT].

Stiven (sti-vin) n. Rev. David Sime (d.1986) son of David Russell and Jeannie Sime, he was born near Dundee, where he was school Dux. He served with the Royal Scots, was awarded the Military Cross and returned to Britain wounded (with a missing leg, and an obituary having been written about him after being reported killed in action). He graduated from St. Andrews in 1919 and received his B.D. there in 1922, having a special interest in Hebrew and Biblical Criticism. He spent some time in Jerusalem, then became assistant at St. Cuthbert's in Edinburgh before being appointed as minister of Teviothead Kirk in 1925. He was translated to Gilcomiston, Aberdeen in 1929 and Inveresk in 1937. He was minister of Iona Parish 1958–66 and received a Doctorate of Divinity. He married Margaret ('Peggy') McIntosh in 1923 and they had several children (his surname is sometimes given as 'Steven').

stiver (sti-vur) n., arch. a small coin, something of little value – '...A single stiver would I give? never! Though he fell at my very door' [JoHa], 'Nixt race when it came oot an' won, Hed no a stiver tae pit on' [MB] (from an old Dutch coin).

stivet (sti-vi) n., arch. a stupid or obstinate person – 'He's an auld stivet!' [GW].

St. James' Fair (sin'-jām-zeez-fār) n. traditional fair held near Kelso, formerly on 5th August, and now in September. Its origins go back to the days when Roxburgh was a town, and the traditional location at Friar's Holm, where the Teviot meets the Tweed, is near the site of the old castle. It was probably for a long time the biggest fair in Roxburghshire.

St. James' Flid (sin'-jām-zeez-flid) n. name sometimes given to the flood of 9th August 1806, so called because it happened juts a few days after St. James' Fair. It was particularly devastating in Rulewater, with much property at Bonchester Bridgend being swept away. Sir Walter Scott described how the lower floor of Minto House was filled with water and trees and livestock sailed past his own house. It also took away the bridge over the Dean Burn at Denholm.

St. James' Hall (sin'-jām-zeez-hal) n. the Masonic Hall on Union Street, formerly used as a dance venue.

St. John's Kirk (sin'-jōnz-kirk) n. the former St. John's Church on Oliver Crescent. It was built as an additional Hawick church in 1878–80, largely by donations from Rev. John Thomson and his wife (who had inherited a large sum). The builder was Alexander Ferguson. It had the town's tallest steeple at 32 m or over 100 feet, and an adjacent church hall was also constructed in 1885. It also had magnificent stained glass windows by Wailes & Strang of Newcastle. It received its official status as a 'quoad sacra' parish by Decree of the Court of Teinds in mid-1881. The church survived for about 80 years, but in 1958 the congregation merged with those of St. Andrew's and East Bank to form the new Trinity Kirk. The church itself was sold and partially demolished in 1960, but re-opened as Arthur Armstrong's department store in 1962, later becoming Almstrong's. The steeple was removed and some of the stained glass (by Wailes & Strang of Newcastle) was rescued by R.E. Scott and the Brothers of Charity, a monastic order from Gattonside, where they were installed. The buildings are now listed on the Buildings at Risk Register for Scotland and although approval was given for conversion into accommodation units, no work has been done. A roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1881–89; Alexander Thomson 1889–94; William Brown 1894–1902; Robert Dickson 1902–05; William Lindsay 1906–13; Arthur Dunnett 1913–20; Walter Carter 1920–29; ??; William Wood 1958–59.

St. Jude's Fair (sin'-joodz-fār) n. name used for a fair held at Hawick in the 17th century, specifically mentioned in 1673. In that year the Baron (the Earl of Queensberry) complained to the Privy Council that the Bailies and others in Hawick stopped his officers from 'riding the fair' (i.e. collecting duties); this was probably part of a feud between the 2 parties over the use of the Common. It was also known as the 'St. Simon and St. Jude Fair'. St. Jude's feast day was 28th October, which was only a week or so before the date of Hawick's Winter Fair in the 18th century. Hence it seems likely that this was an alternative name for the Winter Fair, perhaps with the date being moved at some point and hence the association with St. Jude being dropped.

St. Leeonard's see St. Leonards

St. Leonard (sin'-le-nurd) n. Christian saint, believed to have been a 6th century hermit, although his historical existence is not certain. He became one of the most popular saints in Western Europe in the late middle ages. He is Patron of pregnant women, captives and prisoners of war, based on a version of his life from the 11th century, and an event involving the release of a Prince of Antioch from a Muslim prison in the 12th century. He is supposed to have created an Abbey at Noblac (now St.-Léonard) in France, where he is buried. His cult spread through Europe, with at least 177 British churches dedicated to him, including the hospitals of that name in Peebles, Edinburgh and Alnwick, as well as a smaller one at Ednam. There was additionally a nunnery named after him in Berwick and a hill and mill in Lauder. Shrines dedicated to him were associated with the curing of leprosy, as well as the freeing of captives and the safe delivery of children. It is unclear when and for what reason his name became attached to parts of Hawick Common. He is now regarded as patron saint of the Hut.

St. Leonards (sin'-le-nurdz, sin'-lee-nurdz) n. general name for the farm and neighbouring area lying on the Common at the top of the Vertish. The tenant of the farm plays host to the Cornet and his supporters during the Chases before the Common Riding, and officially serves the curds and cream breakfast on the Friday. It is traditional that the Flag is displayed outside the farmhouse during the Thursday and Friday morning Huts. The Hut is effectively a barn at the farm, which replaced a temporary marquee in 1924. The singing of 'Teribus' outside the farmhouse after the Friday morning 'Hut' was started in 1890. The tenant was Thomas Reid in the late 19th century. A stone axe found near there is in the Museum. It is unclear when the name was attached to the farm; it is labelled 'Hawick Townhead' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map – 'And lang may St. Leonard's retain the power To feast the sterling Teri; And lang may the flag Owre a cornet wag, And lang may we a' be cheery' [JEDM], 'In front of old St. Leonard's now the throng With one accord assemble, old and young All share the duties that to them belong – Again the Common Riding Song is sung' [JCG] (named after Christian Saint Leonard, the reasons for which, and era being unknown; also written 'St. Leonard's').

St. Leonard's Handicap (sin'-le-nurdz-hawn-dee-kawp) n. former race taking place at the Common Riding. It is recorded in 1875 on the Saturday, being run over 1½ miles.

St. Leonard's Moor (sin'-le-nurdz-moor, -mār) n. another name for Hawick Moor – '...Then in the breast alike of rich and poor There rises up a sense of joy refined, As on they journey to St. Leonard's Moor' [JCG].

St. Leonard's Moss (sin'-le-nurdz-mos) n. another name used generally for Hawick Moss, for the marshy land behind St. Leonard's farm or more specifically applied to the boggy land near to the north of Pilmuir Rig farm, in the middle of the Dipper Field. It is marked near Pilmuir Rig on J.P. Alison's map of the Common in 1777. In 1713 the Council granted the right to 'cast bakes' anywhere on the mosses of the Common, except for here, Winnington Moss or Whitchesters Moss. Burgesses were told they could cut their peat on the moss here in 1733.

St. Leonard's Park (sin'-le-nurdz-pawrk) n. race-course at the Mair, opened in 1854, and used exclusively for the Common Riding races since 1855. It is one of the highest race courses in Britain, and also used for a few 'flapping' meetings every year. The paddock was extended in 1889 and offices erected in 1894.

St. Leonard's Vaults (sin'-le-nurdz-vawlts) n. former name for the Ewe & Lamb pub in the late 19th century, at the Sandbed/Orrock Place (also sometimes 'St. Leonard's Spirit Vaults' and 'the St. Leonard's Bar').

the St. Leonard's Stakes (thu-sin'-le-nurdz-stāks) n. race formerly run on the Saturday of the Common Riding, from at least 1887. It was at one time a 'selling stakes', with the winner to be sold for 50 sovereigns. The 1888 race was declared void after the leading horse slowed before the post to allow the second horse to win, while another horse had jockeys of different weight switched.

St. Leonard's Well (sin'-le-nurdz-wel) n. spring just to the south of St. Leonard's Moss, between Pilmuir farm and Pilmuir Rig farmstead. It seems possible that this was the first local place to be associated with the saint, with the farm name following later. It may be the same as 'Lurgie's Well' (if that was not nearer to St. Leonards farm).

St. Malachy (sin'-maw-la-chee) n. (1094–1148) Archbishop of Armagh, baptised 'Maelmhaedhoc O' Morgair', who was the first Irishman to be canonised, and is known for his vision of the identity of the last 112 Popes. In 1139 he journeyed to Rome via Scotland, England and France. The chaplainry of 'Malachi and meadow lying within steads of Stobycot and Staneholm' was mentioned in 1500 as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield excepted from the lease to Walter Scott of Branxholme. This may have been the early chapel near Northhouse.

St. Margaret (sin'-mawr-gri') n. (d.1093) born in Hungary, her family fled William the Conqueror, were shipwrecked off Scotland, and then befriended by King Malcolm, who married her in 1070. She was brother of Edgar Ætheling, and daughter of the exiled English Prince Edward. Probably because of her family's influence, the Scottish King made many incursions into Northumbria. She had 6 sons and 2 daughters. She died a few days after her husband and son were killed at Alnwick Castle. She was canonised in 1251 and her feast day was 10th June (recently moved to 16th November). Another St. Margaret of Antioch was an early Christian martyr, and there are also other saints of the same name.

St. Margaret's an Wulton Sooth (sin'-mawr-gritz-an-wul'-in-sooth) n. former church near the top of Commercial Road (No. 34), built in 1894 to plans drawn up jointly by J.P. Alison and J. Chalmers of Glasgow. This replaced a temporary iron structure, and used red sandstone from Langtown Quarries. Originally called Wilton South Church, it was built for a new congregation established by the United Presbyterian Church in 1888. Wilton South merged with St. Margaret's Church in 1940 and was linked to the charge of St. George's West and Robertson churches in 1984. The building fell into disrepair towards the end of the 20th century, and the last service was in 1987. The congregation merged with that of St. George's and the building was demolished in 2001.

St. Margaret's Convent (sin'-mawr-gritz-kon-vin') n. convent in the West End, built 1910–12, for sisters belonging to the 'Third Order' of St. Dominic (being free to engage in pastoral work outside the convent), the first of its kind in Scotland. They originally came from Stone in Satfordshire. The first 4 sisters arrived in Hawick in 1909 (to a rather mixed welcome), setting up temporarily at 14 Buccleuch Street, opposite the Catholic Church. They included Sister Mary Antoninus, Sister Margaret Mary and Sister Theresa Margaret. A resident chaplain followed in 1912. They took immediate charge of the Guilds associated with S.S. Mary & David's, as well as teaching at the school. They also formed a Women's section of the Sacred Heart Confraternity. They moved to Myreslawgreen in 1912, the foundation stone having been laid there the previous year. A hall there was used as the Church Hall for S.S. Mary & David's until the new halls were opened on Buccleuch Street in 1930. The building is believed to be the last in Hawick built using the red sandstone from Denholm Quarries, with architect Reginald Fairlie from Edinburgh. From 1934 the sisters ran the St. Margaret's Home hospice, which was built on the grounds of the Convent. The Hall was demolished in 1970, with Myreslawcourt built on part of the site. The last nuns left the town in 1987, with the Convent building being taken over as part of the old-age Home. Chaplains at the Convent included: Michael A. Payne 1936–43; William Grant 1948–60; and Thomas Kelly 1961–63.

St. Margaret's Drive (sin'-mawr-gritz-driv) n. dead-end road off Bright Street, formerly being on the grounds of St. Margaret's Convent. It was named in 1990.

St. Margaret's Home (sin'-mawr-gritz-hōm) n. residential facility for the sick and aged, off Myreslaw Green. It was developed on the grounds of St. Margaret's Convent from 1934, with considerable extensions being made since. It was opened by Archbishop McDonald and was founded as a 'Home for Incurables', with accommodation for 45 patients. In 1987 the nuns left the town, and the Home was taken over by a voluntary committee. Since 1999 it has been run privately.

St. Margaret's Kirk (sin'-mawr-gritz-kirk) n. church on Wellington Road in Wilton, originally called Wellington Church. It was built in 1886 to house a congregation that had followed Rev. J.A. Birrell out of Hawick Parish Church following some internal disagreements. It was erected as a separate parish by a Decree of the Court of Teinds in 1896. In 1940 the congregation merged with Wilton South to become St. Margaret's and Wilton South, with the abandoned building being used for commercial purposes until demolished in 1975. New housing was built on the site in 1977. A roll of the ministry is: William Miller 1886–98; Charles Brownlie 1898–1904; William McCullough 1905–35; ...

St. Margaret's Schuil (sin'-mawr-gritz-skil) n. Roman Catholic primary school, originally established in 1854 by Fr. Taggart, with the financial assistance of Fr. Wallace of Traquair. This provided education for the children of Catholics within the community, originally mostly Irish workers who came to Hawick to work in the hosiery industry. Within a couple of years of its establishment it had 50 pupils enrolled. A new building was constructed on the present site on Buccleuch Terrace in 1878, and later extended. The staffing problems were largely solved when the Dominican Sisters arrived in Hawick and supplied 2 teachers. A more modern building was erected in 1965 to accommodate 140 pupils, and was opened by Cardinal Gray. Due to declining numbers, the school was closed in 2018 and the building was demolished in 2020. School Inspectors' Reports for 1867–1951 are in the National Archives.

St. Mary see sin'-mā-ree n. title sometimes used for the Virgin Mary, the mother of Jesus of Nazareth and wife of Joseph. The church in Hawick was dedicated to her in 1214 (and this may have been a rededication). A spring in Castle Cary (the main seat of the Lovels) was also dedicated to her, there possibly being a connection here. The celebration of her Assumption (i.e. the apparent taking up of her body) on 15th August was of local importance, being mentioned in the 1511 Charter as the date on which the token payment was to be made to the Baron, as well as in the earlier charter of 1407 when the Barony was granted to Douglas of Drumlanrig, and in the 1420 charter of half of Branxholme to the Scotts of Buccleuch. There were several other feast days associated with Mary, e.g. 1st January, 2nd July (Visitation), 8th September (Nativity) and 8th December (Immaculate Conception), which may also have been important in Hawick at one time. The entire month of May was also specially dedicated to Mary. James Wilson suggests that the date towards the end of May, mentioned in 1214, when the townspeople paid tribute to their church's saint, may have led to the Common Riding taking place at that time of year

St. Mary's see St. Mary's Kirk

St. Mary's Kirk (sin'-mā-reez-kirk) n.

St. Mary's Church, occupying an eminence above the confluence of the Slitrig and Teviot. The existence of a church in Hawick is first recorded in 1183, and it was dedicated to St. Mary in 1214 by Adam, Bishop of Caithness (as recorded in the Chronicle of Melrose Abbey, 'Dedicata est ecclesia Sanctae Mariae de Hawic a dompno A. Episcopo Cathenensi iiij, Kal. Junii', i.e. 'the Church of St. Mary of Hawick was dedicated by Lord Adam, Bishop of Caithness, May 29'). The original was probably at least as early as the coming of the Normans to the area, and may have been much earlier and Saxon. It contained ornate stonework (a few pieces of which survive in the Museum, including pillars surmounted by capitals and also a pattern of carved foliage, which was probably painted). The original may have been roofed with red flagstones. It was reslated and repaired in 1670. For centuries the church bell was rung to mark the passing of a resident of the Parish. Tradition says that a bell and clock were brought from Melrose Abbey when it was suppressed. The bell broke in 1693 and was melted and recast the following year (the Council enacting that it was only to be rung for deaths in those families that had contributed to the cost). In 1717 the charge for non-Burgesses was 2 shillings Scots (6 shillings for those outside the Burgh). The clock is recorded as early as 1701, when mention is made of it being broken for the last 12 years! In 1718 the Council asked for contributions for providing a new clock, and it was repaired in 1747, with new dial-plates made on the west and east sides; it was repaired again in 1761 at great expense, a clockmaker being brought in from Redpath for the purpose and a stent being raised to pay for it. The current clock dates from only 1873. The old steeple may have been turretted with a flat roof and a belfry at one of the corners; this 'bell-house' was rebuilt in 1723, since its ashlar work was in danger of falling. In 1729 it is recorded that the bell was rung daily at 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.; by the early 19th century the times were 5.30 a.m. and 8 p.m. Stone stairs were built up to the steeple loft around 1714, and the ladder to the steeple was mended in 1727. The bell was also taken down (and presumably replaced) and the steeple mended in 1747. The main floor of the church was still not fitted with seats in 1718, when the Session records describe a dispute over space for stools. Already in 1723 there were calls for an extension to accommodate the congregation, with the Minister expressing his disappointment in 1724 at failing to convince the Session to act. In 1733 there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch's commissioners to repair and extend the church. It was largely demolished in 1763, apparently being too solid to bring down easily. The church was rebuilt in 1763/4, in a much more plain style and a new bell was obtained at that time (at a cost of £50, weighing 560 pounds and made by Lester & Pack of Whitechapel); the cost was £497 (exclusive of the bell), the money coming from the heritors, the Trustees of Alexander Orrock, the weavers incorporation, the rural tenantry (who carted the materials) and the Burgh (who supplied the bell). Some of the original stone was used, but all previous ornamentation was hidden. The T-shaped plan used the long wall for gathering the congregation around both the communion table and pulpit, which was the common design after the Reformation. The steeple was also rebuilt at that time, John Purves, wright in Kelso, being the main contractor. The upper gallery of the kirk was then reserved for members of the incorporation of Weavers, with the front row kept for the Magistrates. Most of the other seats were reserved for heritors, farmers and members of the session, with very few for the ordinary townspeople (who had to stand). In 1826 it is recorded that some people were paying 6 shillings (presumably annually) for the use of a seat, and there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch for a larger church (which could seat 700 for a population of around 5000). Internal renovations were carried out around 1863 by mason's Marshall & Ballantyne and joiner's Scott & Wright. This work revealed the memorial stones of Walter Scott of Goldielands and some later family members (concealed under wood on the west-side of the aisle, where a furnace was installed), as well as some carved stonework from the earlier church. Severely damaged in a fire of 1880, it was substantially renovated in 1882/3 by the Edinburgh firm Wardrop & Reid, essentially as a replica of the one that burned down. The main changes were the addition of 2 circular windows in the gables as well as dormer windows, a move of the entrance from the south to the north side, and the building of 2 internal staircases instead of 3. The 18th century tower survived the fire, and is built in rubble of 5 stages, being topped with an ogival slated roof and a wrought-iron weather vane. There has been some dispute over the ownership of the tower, with the Town Council regarding it itself as the owners in the 19th century (and being responsible for its upkeep, as well as that of the clock contained within it); however, the legal status of such ownership was not established. The Kirk had its exterior refurbished in 1973, when floodlights were also installed to illuminate it on special occasions. It is currently a Category B listed building. The church contains the Buccleuch Vault, resting place of many of the earliest Scotts of Buccleuch, which has been sealed since the 1763 re-building. The church yard has been in use since at least the 13th century, and was in earlier times used for many civic functions, e.g. for the election of bailies. The permission to erect 'through-stones' appears only to have been given in 1712, following an Act of 1708. Although a proposal for enclosing the kirkyard was made in 1723, the surrounding wall was only built in 1811, and repaired in 1857. The churchyard was closed to burials in 1864. The iron gates were added in 1937 to mark the 400th anniversary of the granting of the 1537 Charter, and in 1973 the churchyard was extensively landscaped and tidied up. The 700th anniversary of its consecration in 1914 attracted an estimated crowd of 4,000. It was used for a while as a Red Cross Military Hospital in WWI. Before the Reformation (i.e. the late 16th century) St. Mary's was, of course, Catholic, like other churches in Scotland. It was part of the Archdiocese of Glasgow, and in 1447/8 was made a canonry and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell. Patronage of the church was vested in the Baron of Hawick for most of history, but given to the Earls of Bothwell in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. The church became insufficient for Hawick's population in the later part of the 18th century, when other churches began to be set up. It was the Parish Church until 1844 (when the Old Parish Church was built), becoming a 'quoad sacra' church in 1860, and reverting to the main parish church again in 1987. Also in 1987 the interior was refurbished. After it was separated from 'Old Parish' the new Manse was off the Braid Road. From 1997 it was linked to the churches of Cavers and Kirkton. Kirk Session records exist from 1700. The oldest recorded communion token bear the mark 'M.A.K.' for 'Master Alexander Kynneir'. Other existing tokens date from 1843 and 1860. A 'gaufre', or utensil for baking sacramental wafers, exists, and may be pre-Reformation. The National Archives contain records relating to the quoad sacra parish dating from 1833. A roll of the meenisters while it was the Parish Kirk is given elsewhere. The subsequent roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1860–79; Stewart Burns 1880–1925; Eric Raff 1926–27; William Simpson 1927–33; Walter Calderwood 1933–53; J.P. Wilson 1959–66; ... Duncan Clark 1976–83??; David Burt 1996–98; William Taylor 1998–??; Marina D. Brown 2010– Alastair Cook ?? – 'While, as up yonder Sacred Mount I looke; On which the temple that's situat on high, Stands much admired by strangers passing by' [RRC], 'Hark! the bell of old St. Mary Finds us armed alert and wary' [RSC], 'I sei the Slitrig whirlin' doon, and I hear St. Mary's clock' [JEDM], 'Where stands St. Mary's pointing to the sky, Encircled round its walls in peaceful rest And with the dust of ages intrepresed The ashes of the dead forgotten lie (The while the living pass unheeding by)' [TK], '... And the jowe o' St. Mary's bell' [WL] (usually referred to as just 'St. Mary's' or in earlier times as 'the Kirk' or 'Hawick Kirk' or 'the Pairish Kirk' to distinguish it from the other churches).

St. Mary's Knot (sin'-mā-reez-no') n., arch. a knot tied triply, so that it is hard to undo – 'He has tied them a' wi' St. Mary Knot, A' these horse but barely three. Fala, &c.' [CPM] (the note in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' suggests that the line refers to ham-stringing a horse, but this is inconsistent with the following verses).

St. Mary's Loch (sin'-mā-reez-loch) n. loch lying in the central southern uplands, about half-way between Hawick and Moffat. It is the largest body of water in the Borders, about 4 miles long, 7½ miles in circumference and 30 fathoms deep in places. It has the smaller Loch o the Lowes at its head. There was a dispute over right to the Loch between Lord Napier and Scott of Rodono in the mid-19th century. It is famous for its picturesque views and as the haunt of the Ettrick Shepherd – 'Long, long ago, ere the Yarrow wound Or the rainclouds filled St. Mary's, Long, long ago, when on Ettrick ground The only folk were the fairies' [WHO].

St. Mary's Place (sin'-mā-reez-plis) n. name adopted by the Council in 1946 for what was formerly Old Churchyard or Auld Kirkyaird. The house at the corner with the Kirk Wynd, No. 1 St. Mary's Place and 31 Drumlanrig Square was designed in 1891 by J.P. Alison and built for Miss Lamb; it is a grade C listed building. Most of the other houses in the street are quite old.

St. Mary's Schuil (sin'-mā-reez-skil) n. St. Mary's Infant School, gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch in the latter part of the 19th century. The buildings were at the top of Brougham Place, behind Trinity Church. It was set up through the efforts of Rev. John Thomson as the Parish School for St. Mary's, and hence was also called 'St. Mary's Quoad Sacra School'. The first master was William Murray, who had been running a private school at 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary's Place) since 1850. When the new school opened Murray marched all his students there in a body. The school became connected with the government so it could have student teachers, and after the passing of the Education Act it became the responsibility of the new School Board. A wooden building was built to house the infant department.

St. Michael

Eventually the school became specialised as an infant department, with the older primary pupils attending Trinity. It closed in 1967, the pupils being split among the neighbouring schools. The main building was later used by a knitwear firm before being converted into 2 houses, with the outbuildings demolished. School Inspectors' Reports for 1852–1951 are in the National Archives. The Borders Archive holds registers for 1898–1967 and log books for 1874–1967.

St. Mary's Shiel (sin'-mā-reez-sheel) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as 'Sant-Marie Scheillis', and there being no tenant at that time. The location is unknown, but the name suggests it could have been associated with Hermitage Chapel.

St. Mary's Steps (sin'-mā-reez-stepz) n. common name for the main staircase leading to St. Mary's Kirk from the Kirkstile. There are 33 steps in all.

St. Mary's Well (sin'-mā-reez-wel) n. spring on the north-north-west side of Ruberslaw. It was probably a 'holy well', i.e. at one point having some religious significance. A former spring near Hawthornside was known by the same name, or perhaps just Mary's Well.

St. Michael (sin'-mī-kul) n. David (12th C.) witness to a charter for Richard Lovel to the Priory of St. Andrews about the 1190s. His name is given as 'Dauid de sco micheale'. John was also a witness and they were both presumably part of the family that held lands at Whitchesters and elsewhere nearby. Elmeras (13th C.) son of Robert. In about 1240 he resigned his lands of 'Ylistoun' (Elliston near St. Boswells) to be granted to Dryburgh Abbey. John (12th C.) first witness listed in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands near Braxholme to the Priory of St. Andrews. David is also listed and so probably his son or brother. It seems likely he is descended from Walter, who is mentioned a generation earlier. John (13th C.) witness in 1249 to a charter granted by Agnes 'de Illifistun' (i.e. Elliston) to Dryburgh Abbey. He may well have been related to this Agnes. He is probably the same Sir John who witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk about 1250; he is there 'Johanne de Sancto Micaele'. Sir John (13th/14th C.) listed on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as 'Sire Johan de Seint Michel del Counte de Rokesburgh'. Presumably the same man is listed separately as 'Dominus Johannes de Seint Michel, miles'. His seal consists of an oval showing St. Michael slaying the dragon and a man with a hawk on his wrist, together with the name 'S'JOHANIS DE SCO MICHAELE'. He probably held lands at Whitchesters and elsewhere in the county. Another 'Johan' is also listed, presumably his son, along with 'Renaud de Seint Michel, clerk' (i.e. Reginald), possibly another son. In 1311 he is listed among Scotsmen whose lands had been taken by Edward II, but were now returned (specifically his lands of 'Heveside') because they 'came to his peace'. This is said to be an old Cumberland family and may be the same family who are recorded holding lands at Reban, Kildare in Ireland around 1300. John (13th C.) son of John of St. Michael. In 1278/9 he was accused of slaying Richard Bullock at 'Cambok', in a group along with 3 others. He was stated to be already dead, and so not declared an outlaw. Hence he cannot have been the later John, son of Sir John. John (13th/14th C.) probably son of Sir John. He was 'Johan de Seint Michel' when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. John (d.1451/2) holder of the lands of Whitchesters in the Barony of Hawick. He was on a 'retour of inquest' made in Hawick in 1424 for lands of Hownam and was 'Johannem de Samichell' in 1426 when on the inquest for the inheritance of Eilrig by Walter Scott of Rankilburn. He was probably the John of St. Michael who was witness to the 1435 charter where lands of Branxholme and others in the Barony of Hawick were transferred from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He also witnessed a document for Swinton of that ilk in 1432. In 1447 he witnessed a decree about James, Earl of Douglas being older than his twin Archibald; he was recorded being 'de Quitester'. He was succeeded by his son John. John 'of St. Michael' (15th C.), son of John. He was probably the last of his family to hold local lands. He is probably the 'Johanne de Sancto Michaeli juniore' who witnessed a charter between Margaret Cusing (wife of Hawick Burgess Simon Routledge) and Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1447. A 'retour' of 1452 confirms to him the lands of 'Qwitchester', on annual payment to the Baron, the Earl of Douglas, of a white or red rose at the feast of St. John the Baptist. In 1455 John of Langlands attested in a notorised document (made at St. Mary's Kirkyard) that he had inherited his father's lands of Whitchesters. In 1455 King James II granted Whitchesters to David Scott, heir to Buccleuch for services to the King, the lands having been forfeited by 'John of St. Michael, traitor' (probably his father). In 1456 there was a further notorial instrument attesting that he had inherited Whitchesters from his father; by this time his is described as 'quondam Johanni de Sancti Michael, filio quondam Johannis de Sancto Michael', suggesting that he was also deceased. The family, originally Norman, but settling in Ireland, had apparently held Whitchesters since before 1183, but forfeited them before 1455.

Robert (12th/13th C.) probably related to the local family. In about 1180 he witnessed a confirmation of the grant of lands in Eskdale to Melrose Abbey by the Avenels. He witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes in about 1200; he was recorded as 'Roberto de Sancto Michael', and other witnesses included John of Wilton and Simon of Hawick. His son 'Elmeras' is recorded in about 1240. Walter (12th C.) referred to in a charter sometime in the period 1163 to 1183. Henry Lovel granted the Priory of St. Andrews 2 oxgangs of land in Branxholme, which was half of the lands formerly held by him (also written 'de St. Michael'; it is possible there is a connection with the Carmichaels).

St. Mungo's Day (sin'-mung-gōz-dā) n. Saint's feast day celebrated on 13th January, the anniversary of the death of St. Mungo in the year 613. He was Bishop of Glasgow and sometimes credited as founding the city. His day was celebrated before the Reformation and still referred to in the 1622 records of the local Commissioners' Court. Also sometimes known as St. Kentigern, his image is included on the Founder's Window of St. Cuthbert's Kirk.

St. Ninian's Road (sin'-ni-nee-inz-rōd) n. street in the Terraces, named in 1931. The name was suggested by J.P. Alison, after St. Ninian (who died in 432), since he was one of the people to whom Trinity Church in Edinburgh was dedicated, this being connected to the Trinity lands in Hawick, near which the street was built.

St. Ninian's Well (sin'-ni-nee-inz-wel) n. former name for a spring on the Woll estate at Ashkirk. It is about 220 m to the west-south-west of the Parish Kirk, on a steep slope. This is one of a large number of sites throughout Scotland connected in name with this early Scottish Christian missionary. Ashkirk Kirk, which lies to the north-east of the spring, was originally dedicated to this saint. It has been suggested that the spring could have been so-named because it was used for baptisms.

stob (stob) n., arch. a stake, fence post – '...Of drystone dykes or fence stobs And far the eye can see' [WL], 'Compared wi' a nibbie, a walkin'-stick's nea better than a palin'-stob' [DH], a coarse nail (the first meaning is probably the origin for 'Stobs' and 'Stobi Hill', while the second may apply to 'Stobicote').

Stob Cleuch (stōb-klooch) n. small stream that rises on Stob-cleuch Edge and runs eastwards to join the Gorrenberry Burn.

Stobedge Wud (stōb-ej-wud) n. plantation to the north of Minto Craggs. In 1780 it is recorded that 'Stobedge planting dyke' formed part of the western boundary of Crigend and Minto Mill farms. An unrelated farmstead called 'Stobedge' was in Ancrum Parish and once part of the Chesters estate.

Stob Fell (stōb-fel) n. hill in the upper Hermitage valley, north of Billhope. It reaches a height of 518 m.

Stobicote (stō-bee-ko) n. farm between Southfield and Old Northhouse. The lands were leased to Walter Scott of Branhholme by the Abbot of Melrose in 1500 along with other lands in the 'Lordship of Ryngwodfeild'. In 1540 the King's shepherd William Henderson is recorded being paid for oats there. The first owner may have been David Scott, son of 'Wicked Wat'. In about 1557 it was rented from Melrose Abbey by Simon and John Scott, sons of the Laird of Allahaugh; it was valued at £6 at that time. It was listed as 'Stobbit, Coitbrugh' in 1634, 'Stobbit, Coitburgh' in 1653, similarly in 1661 and 'Stobitcoat-burgh' in 1663 (i.e. merged with Brugh in the transcription), when still part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was valued at £260 in 1643. In 1684 tenants James Glendinning and John Simpson were declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. 7 people were recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James Scott 'Drover' was tenant there in at least the period 1712–29, John Elliot was living there in 1716–22, Thomas Davidson was there in 1716, James Jackson in 1717 and William Telfer in 1720–23. When surveyed in 1718 it consisted of the combined farms of Over and Nether Stobicote, covering 694 acres, bounded by Allan Water, Brugh, Doecluch, Northhouse and Braidhaugh. William Edmondson was there in 1727, James Jackson and John Elliot in 1728, Walter Henderson in 1729 and William Scott in 1738. It was also the birthplace in 1765 of Gideon Scott, millwright. William Wilson was there in 1772. James Anderson was farmer there between at least 1763 and 1797. In 1788 the lands were valued at £260, and by then owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. George Hobkirk and family lived there in 1841. The route for the Mossypaul ride-out passes near here

(also known as 'Stobiescot', 'Stobicote' etc., and is 'Stobitcote' on the Ordnance Survey map; it is 'Stobycot' in 1500, transcribed 'Stobbe-Tait' in 1540, 'Stobecoit' in 1557 and 1564, 'Stobitcote' in 1643, 'Stobbitcoat' in 1660, transcribed 'Stobatecate' in 1684, 'Stobitcoat' in 1694, 'Stobbitcoat' in 1712 and 1716, 'Stobitcott' in 1717 and 1723, 'Stobitcoats' in 1718, 'Stobit Cott' in 1724, 'Stobbitcot' in 1718 and 'Stobbitcott' in 1799; it appeared as 'Stobbycott' on Blaeu's 1654 map and on de Wit's c. 1680 map of Scotland, while Stobie's 1770 map has 'Stobbitcot'; the name probably means 'cottage made with nails').

Stobie Cote see Stobicote

Stobie Cleuch (stō-bee-klooch) n. small stream joining the Hermitage Water from the west near Leahaugh Cottage, just north of Redheugh. On the lower banks of the stream there are the remains of 4 circular turf stells.

Stobie Rig (stō-bee-rig) n. small ridge of land between the Liddel Water and Foulshiels farmhouse, just south of Stobie Cleuch.

Stobie's map (stō-beez-map) n. map of Roxburghshire prepared by Matthew Stobie and published in 1770. Although this map is useful, it was prepared for the gentry and hence began the insidious process of anglicising our local place names.

Stobi Hill (stō-bee-hil) n. hill in the Ale valley, between Whitslade farm and Todrig farm, with Whitslaid Hill being the southern spur. There is a linear earthwork, an old field-bank, running from the hollow between this hill and Whitslaid Hill north towards Todrig (it is marked 'Stobiehill on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Stobi Meadi (stō-bee-me-di) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf granted by Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century and recorded as 'Stobimedue'.

Stobitcote see Stobicote

Stobo (stō-bō) n. John (17th C.) traveller from Kelso. In 1659 the Hawick Council decreed that the would not 'trouble nor molest our market, in buying either butter or cheese before the bell ring for that effect' [BR1659].

Stobs (stōbz) n. estate and former hamlet about 4 miles south of Hawick, along the Slitrig. In the 19th century it had about half a dozen homes, as well as a post office, blacksmith's shop and joiners (mostly in a long row of cottages), although there is now little trace of these buildings. It was also a station on the Waverley Line, converted into a house after the 1969 closure of the railway, with extensive sidings linking it with the military camp. The estate is heavily wooded, with sitka spruce and other conifers dominating. The name is recorded in the early 14th century, and gave rise to a surname. Thomas Cranstoun was granted the barony of Stobs by David II, sometime previous to 1370. A grant sometime before 1375 has Thomas, Earl of Mar and Lord of Cavers, granting parts of Cavers to Thomas Cranston, with his lands of Stobs being excepted. In 1458/9 the lands were among those held by Thomas Cranston of that Ilk. In 1509/10 it was listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers since the time of King David. In 1544 the lands were owned by Clement Crozier, and then passed to the Gledstains family. The superiority of the lands of Stobs was held by the Cranstons as part of the Lordship of Denholm according to a discharge of 1574. Gavin Gledstains inherited the lands from his deceased brother George in 1580. They were sold before 1584 to Gavin Elliot of Baillielie, who then became the first Elliott of Stobs. On his death they were inherited briefly by his surviving daughters and a grand-daughter, but sold in 1607 to 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters', who took full possession of it in 1614 (with the superior at that time being Sir John Cranston of that Ilk). In 1608 it was attacked by William Scott of Northhouse and a party armed with 'swords, gauntlets and plate-sleeves' threatening to burn 'all the evidents and writs of the said lands' unless they got what they wanted; 2 years later the same William and his brother Robert Scott attacked Gilbert Elliott of Stobs on the streets of Hawick. Beginning with this Gilbert, 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairtins', the estate became the seat of the Elliott family for many generations. The superiors of the lands were the Lords Cranston in the 17th century. In 1678 it (along with Langside, Penchrise, Stanishope, Harwood Burn and William's Rig) was valued at £1633 6s 8d, and owned by the Elliotts of Stobs. In 1694 'The place & office houses' of Stobs was taxed for 13 hearths, while 'Stobs his cooks wife' was taxed for a hearth in Hawick. John Henderson was recorded living there in at least 1726–30 and Andrew Lillico in 1736–41. Sir Gilbert Elliott paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748 and 15 in 1753. In 1788 (and in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) it was valued at £1633 6s 8d, with the teinds having been purchased from Douglas of Cavers and valued at £400. The estate was sold to the War Office in 1902, apparently partly because the terrain resembled the South African veldt. Over the next 5 decades it was used extensively as an army training camp and also prisoner of war camp. It was broken up and sold after WWII. A memorial stone cross was erected after WWI. A plan of the estate from 1779 is in the National Archives (also spelled 'Stobbs', 'Stob', 'Stobbis', 'Stobbes', etc.; the name is recorded in 1309 as 'Stobbis' and in 1370 as 'stokkis', perhaps in error, with 'the Stobbis' appearing in 1458/9, 'Stobis' in 1509/10, 'Stobbis' in 1511, 'the Stobbis' in 1586 and 1592 and 'Stobbs' in 1643; the modern spelling dates to at least Gordon's c. 1650 map, but is 'Stobbs' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it may be from the Gaelic, Old Norse or Old English for 'stakes' or 'stumps', perhaps meaning that it was a place marked by tree stumps).

Stobs (stōbz) n. David (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541. His steading was valued at 12s 6d. His surname is recorded as 'Stobbis'.

Stobs Camp (stōbz-kawmp) n. army camp, about 4 miles south of Hawick, established in 1903 as a summer training ground, with the officers stationed in Stobs Castle. The camp was based at the former estate of Stobs, including adjoining farms, covering about 10,000 acres. A small gauge railway track went from the Waverley Line right up to the camp, this tramway being dismantled when the camp expanded during WWII. Used initially by volunteer units as a summer training ground, it saw increased use around the time of the two World Wars and grew to be so large that it was referred to as 'the Scottish Aldershot'. At its peak in 1915 there may have been as many as 15,000 men stationed there. After WWI the camp wound down, with many of the huts being sold off. It was also used as a prisoner of war camp, with about 6,000 German troops interred there in WWI, and a small number in WWII. After the war it was used for the repatriation of Polish troops, and then reverted to use as a summer training camp until it closed in 1956 and was sold in 1959. Horst Rossberg wrote his recollections as a prisoner of war in the 1991 Transactions. Some concrete foundations survive, along with steps and terracing, showing the location of many more. The training ground stretched all the way to Penchrise Pen. A small cemetery, just inside the camp, was used to bury the 36 prisoners of war and 6 internees who died in the camp, the bodies being reinterred in 1962; the memorial was rebuilt in 2018. 2 interpretation boards were installed in 2020.

Stobs Castle (stōbz-kaw-sul) n. family seat of the Elliotts, destroyed in a fire in 1712, resulting in the loss of many of the family's early documents. A tradition is that people from Hawick were blamed for setting the fire. The original tower stood in a plantation about 400 yards south-east of the present structure, but there are no remains to be seen (it is marked as the site on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). A new mansion was built on the same site in 1719, but in 1764 it also burned down. It was said to be ‘a twae storey heigh thack-house’ [WaD]. It is said that many of the foundation stones were removed from the old castle in 1797. William Bulman was recorded as a servant there in 1799. The house was rebuilt by Sir William Elliot from around 1793, as a gothic-style residence. After that it was always referred to as ‘Stobs Castle’ rather than ‘Stobs Hoose’. The builder was John Laing of Hawick, and the architect was Robert Adam, this being his last castle. It narrowly escaped burning down again in 1824, being saved by the actions of the servants. There were also later Victorian alterations, around 1865, probably by James Anderson Hamilton. A carved family coat of arms hangs over the north entrance. 50 High Street has a freestone cornice salvaged from the Castle at the beginning of the 19th century. Manufacturer Thomas Lindsay Watson lived there briefly around 1892, when it hosted a demonstration of perhaps 6,000 people in support of the Liberal Unionists. When the estate was sold to the War Office in 1902 the house was used as officers quarters. The gothic single-arched bridge approach also survives, along with the Grecian-style gateway to the approach road. And along the track south of the house is the stable block.

the Stobs Castle Stakes (thu-stōbz-kaw-sul-stāks) n. race run over 2 miles on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the late 19th century.

Stobs Ceemetry (stōbz-see-mi'-ree) n. small cemetery situated just inside Stobs Camp, south of the former station. This was where 36 prisoners of war and 6 civilian internees were buried. A memorial was built from stones carried up from the Slitrig by Mr. Oliver, farmer at Winningtonrig. The names of those buried there were recorded along with an inscription: ‘To our comrades who died far away from their country’. The site was maintained by locals until 1962, when the bodies were reinterred at Cannock Chase German Military Cemetery in Staffordshire. A few remains of the memorial can still be seen today.

Stobs Cottage (stōbz-ko'-eej) n. former name for a cottage on the Stobs estate. The estate manager lived there in the 1860s.

Stobs Crater (stōbz-krā'-ur) n. crater on Mars, named after the area of Stobs in 1976. It is roughly 12 km in size, and situated at about 5° S, 321.6° E.

Stobsden (stōbz-den) n. former name for a place in Cavers Parish, presumably close to Stobs. It could be the same as Stobs Wudfit. John Learmonth was a farm servant there in 1799 and James Stewart in 1801.

Stobs Hoose (stōbz-hoos) n. name sometimes used for Stobs Castle, particularly before the baronial style mansion was built in the late 18th century. The estate was owned from the late 16th century by the Eliotts of Stobs, who built a fortified house there, which was destroyed in 1712. The new house was built in 1719, but was largely replaced by 1800. There were also additions around 1865.

Stobsiade (stob-zee-ad) n. newspaper produced by German prisoners of war at Stobs during WWI, with 26 issues being produced in the period 1915–19. At first it was produced by civilian internees, but by late 1916 (when the civilians were moved to the Isle of Man) it was continued by the military prisoners. It contained advertisements, news, poetry, puzzles and short stories. About 4,000 copies of each issue were printed (by Scott & Paterson in Hawick). The name means ‘news from Stobs’ in German, but is a play on the popular 18th-century epic poem ‘Jobsiade’. Despite censorship and other restrictions, the publication contains remarkable creativity and humour.

Stobside Hill (stob-shaw-hil) n. hill just to the west of Headshaw. It reaches a height of 298 m and may correspond to the ‘Stobbsidehill’ recorded in a description of boundaries in Headshaw in 1780.

Stobside Hill (stob-sīd-hil) n. former name for a hill on the farm of Dryden. It is recorded as ‘Stobbsidehill’ in 1780 and probably corresponds to the modern Stobshaw Hill.

Stobs Limery (stōbz-lī-mu-ree) n. name used for the lime works at Limekilnedge. It started production in the 1790s and ran into the latter part of the 19th century.

Stobs Lodge (stōbz-loj) n. former lodge house at Woodfoot, near the beginning of the drive to Stobs Castle, on the west side of the Slitrig. In the early 1900s it was let in the summer to a family called Nixon.

Stobs Loch (stōbz-loch) n. another name for Barnes Loch.

Stobs Park (stōbz-pawrk) n. former name for a farm near Stobs.

Stobs Sidins (stōbz-sī-dinz) n. railway sidings built for Stobs Military Camp at Acreknowe farm. This made a connection to the Stobs Camp internal tramway via a transfer platform. The tramway connected various parts of the camp at different times, e.g. it once ran to the rifle range on Penchrise Pen, and also to the ‘Meldrum Destructor’ (i.e. incinerator).

Stobs Station (stōbz-stāshin) n. former railway station at Stobs, once much used by the military. It was originally called Barnes, but renamed almost right away to Stobs. It had an ‘up’ platform (to London) and a ‘down’ platform (to Edinburgh) as well as a bay platform on the west side. The station building was built in a baronial style. Just south of the station was the cemetery for prisoners of war and internees.

Stobs Wudfit (stōbz-wud-fi) n. former set of cottages near Stobs, also called just Wudfit.

stock (stok) n., arch. the stalk of a plant, particularly of the cabbage family – ‘...admitted that she ‘went to the Roan Garden on the Sabbath day, and did there cut three or four stocks of green kale’ [JaT].

stock (stok) n., arch. the rental on a leased farm in addition to the teinds, this being in kind or its monetary equivalent, the amount of crops produced in addition to the tithe – ‘This is estimat to pay communibis annis [in average years], fyve scoir and 12 bolls in stok, and 28 bolls in teynd’ [PR1627], ‘Rentall of the Dutches of Buccluches ferme Lands of the barronie of Branxholme woltoun and whytchester sett stock and teind att Hawick’ [Buc1690].

stockeen (sto-keen) n. stocking – ‘...an serred hes time teh the stockeenmakin trade wi’ Peter Laidleh ower in Wultin Grove’ [BW1978].

Stockcleugh Edge (stok-klooch-ej) n. slope on the border with Dumfriesshire, being the southern part of Tamond Heights (it appears to be marked ‘Slack Cleugh Edge’ on the 1718 Stockcleugh survey).

Stock Grain (stok-grān) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley. It rises on Stock Hill, joining Ladshaw Sike and Gavel Sike to become part of the headwaters of the Howpasley Burn.

Stock Hill (stok-hil) n. hill lying between the headwaters of the Teviot and Borthwick valleys on the border with Dumfries and Galloway, reaching a height of 477 m (1563 ft) and having a triangulation pillar. It was at the western corner of Hawick Parish once Roberton separated off.

stockin soles (sto-kin-sōlz) n., pl. the wearing socks of without shoes – ‘...hei sits be the fire in his stickin soles’ [IWL] (note that in standard English the phrase is ‘stockinged feet’ or sometimes ‘stocking feet’).

stock-in-tred (stok-in-tred) n., arch. stock-in-trade – ‘The commercial kind are pairt o’ the stock-in-tred o’ maist bacca-shops ...’ [DH].

stockit (sto-ki’, -kee’) adj., pp. stocked – ‘Then up wi’ the purse an’ the siller, A weel-stockit maiden for me’ [JoHa], ‘My faither was laird o’ a weel stockit mailin’ [JT].

stocks (stoks) n., pl. long, white neckcloth worn as part of formal riding gear, popular in the 19th century. It was first adopted by the Principals at the 1928 Common Riding.

the stocks (thu-stoks) n. wooden boards with semi-circles cut into them, placed together to hold people as a form of public punishment. Hawick’s stocks were next to the Mercat Cross. A new set is recorded being purchased in 1755. In 1787 the ‘stocks, wood and iron work, and lock’ were mended. They were in regular use until the end of the 18th century, and are preserved in the Museum (in fact the wood crumbled and was replaced with a replica, using the original iron-work around 1898). People were sentenced by the Bailies to spend up to several days in the stocks for relatively minor crimes, including theft and assault. Usually the feet were secured, but sometimes also the arms. The last use was for an elderly female offender in November 1800 – ‘...and sal lie aucht days in the stockis, and stand with ane paper with the theft written upon their forehead at the mercat-crosse, upon the mercat day’ [BR1640], ‘...the baylyea fynes and onlaws him in fyftie pound Scotts, and ordaines him to go to the stockis immediately, and yrin to continue during the sd. regall baylyea his will and pleasure’ [BR1693] (see also the juggs).

Stockwell (stok-wel) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) servant of Hawick butcher Andrew Wilson. In 1815 he was found not guilty of assaulting Janet Ogilvie (or Orrock). It is stated that both were married people. He appears to have been married to Elizabeth Rae and had a daughter Isabella in Kelso in 1812. He was probably son of Thomas and Margaret Fairbairn, born in Kelso in 1789.

Stockwell Orphanage (stok-wel-or-fi-neej) n. orphanage in London, established in 1867 for boys and in 1879 for girls. In the 1880s Hawick had a circulating library, based at 2 Dovecote Street, to raise money for the orphanage.

stockyaird (stok-yārd) n. a stockyard, area where livestock is kept on a farm, typically close to a slaughterhouse – ‘...and convey the chests containin the plate ti Caverton Mill where it was buried in the stockyaird where it lay until the danger was passed' [IWL].

Stoddart (sto-dur') n. Andrew (19th C.) married Helen Little in Robertson Parish in 1831. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) listed along with John and Gilbert, servants to the 'Laird's Jock' (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. Archibald (17th C.) resident at Barnes in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. David (14th C.) owner of lands in 'Ermildon' (i.e. somewhere around Anrton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. 'Locus Daudid Stodhirde' is listed there with a value of 23 shillings and 4 pence. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as 'gudewife of Greatlaw' in Lilliesleaf Parish. Her lands there were valued at £104. She was presumably widow of the former owner of Greatlaws and may have been connected with the Riddell family. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Bessie Paterson in 1724. Their son Walter was baptised in 1725. He may be the Francis whose death at Stouslie is recorded in Wilton Parish in 1738. Francis (18th C.) married Janet Hardie in Ashkirk Parish in 1754. Gilbert 'Gib' (16th/17th C.) listed along with Archibald and John, servants to the 'Laird's Jock' (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. James (17th C.) listed at Flex among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who married Grizell Elliot and whose daughter Malie (b.1674) was baptised in Hawick Parish. James (17th C.) married Janet Brydon in Ashkirk Parish in 1653. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Ann Dalgleish. Their daughter 'An' was baptised in 1701. James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Stoddart in Wilton Parish in 1712. James (18th C.) recorded in Ormiston in 1726 and 1727. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Walter (b.1726) and Walter (again, b.1727). He is probably the James who married Isabel Nichol in Cavers Parish in 1725. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Armstrong and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were wright James Roger and merchant John Scott. James (19th C.) mason of Deanburnhaugh. He was one of the earliest Trustees of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk. John (15th C.) recorded as 'Joanne Stodhird' in the 1447 sasine for the Cousinlands, purchased by Sir Walter

Scott of Buccleuch. The witnesses are Scotts, except for the last 2, who are this man and Patrick Turnbull; it is possible that they were the Hawick Bailies at that time. John (16th C.) described as 'Johnne Stoddart, cobilman to the lard of Langlands' in 1576. This was in a pledge made for him (and George Elliot) to the Privy Council by Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that ilk. He was listed in 1578/9 among Borderers deemed to have continued in thieving and hence declared as fugitives. He was stated to have been 'enterit' and 'deliverit in the sheref of Roxburch his handis'. In 1586/7 he was 'cobleman at Hawick' when listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Perhaps the same man (or else his son) was 'Johnne Stoddart, cobleman at Hawick' when listed among those declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. What happened to him is not recorded, but it seems likely he would have been hanged or fled the area. His existence shows that there was a man employed to ferry people across the Coble Pool from at least the latter part of the 16th century. John (16th/17th C.) listed along with Archibald and Gilbert, servants to the 'Laird's Jock' (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. John (18th C.) described being 'in Hawick' in 1725. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for William 'workman in Hawick' in 1722. He married Margaret Stuart in Hawick Parish in 1720. Their children included: Archibald (b.1721); John (b.1723); and Janet (b.1720). The witnesses in 1725 were weaver James Weens and wheelwright William Wilson. John (18th C.) recorded in 'Borthwickburnfoot' in 1764, 1766 and 1772 when 3 of his children were baptised in Robertson Parish. He married Mary Anderson in Robertson in 1762. Probably the same John was father of Isabel (b.1764), Betty (b.1766), Mary (b.1768), Jean (b.1770) and Margaret (b.1772). John (b.c.1780) journeyman nailer in Minto according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He may have worked with John Oliver, who was also mlisted as nailer in Minto in 1801. Kenneth (1964-) born in Hawick, he qualified as a music teacher then became a hairdresser and moved to Australia. He was awarded the title of 'Australian Hairdresser of the Year' in 2005 and has styled hair for stars such as Kylie Minogue, Jerry Hall and Nicole Kidman. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Riddell and their son Alexander was baptised in 1637. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at the Flex. He married Jean Little and their children included: Isobel (b.1671); and Margaret (b.1674). Jane (b.1676), with no mother's name given, is probably also his child. The witnesses in 1674 were William Henderson (also in Flex) and Walter Martin. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant at the Flex, probably related to the earlier Robert who was there. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Henderson 'younger in Flex'. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Jane (b.1684); Janet (b.1686); Robert (b.1691); William (b.1693); Margaret (b.1695); Bessie (b.1701); and Francis (b.1704). The witnesses in 1695 were William and Francis Henderson and in 1704 were William Henderson (also in the Flex) and Andrew Riddell (in Goldielands). Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Little in Hawick Parish in 1726. Robert (d.1759) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw, probably in 1756. Their children included: John (b.1757); and Robert (b.1759), baptised after he had already died. The witnesses in 1759 were John Turnbull and Patrick Maxwell. Thomas (18th C.) labourer in the Hawick area. He was a 'workman' in 1725, and was living at Stouslie in 1729, Tandlew in 1732 and Burnfoot in 1737. He married Elspeth Turnbull and their children included: Janet (b.1725) and James (b.1729), baptised in Hawick; and Margaret (b.1729), Thomas (b.1732) and James (again, b.1737), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1725 were Walter Nixon and Simon Miller (both in Hawick Shiel), in 1729 were William Grieve and John Scott, in 1732 were John and James Dryden and in 1737 were James Blyth and Walter Scott. Thomas (1828–1905) born in Roxburgh, he attended school in Hawick, being apprenticed as a joiner at 16. He joined the army at 20 and left for Australia in 1853. In the Ballaarat area (near Melbourne) he worked as a miner, becoming a speculator and director of many mining companies. By 1880 he was a wealthy man, purchasing statues, and inspiring a local zeal that has led to Ballaarat being called the 'City of Statues'. His bust sits in the local Town Hall. He is recorded subscribing to Hawick Common Riding in the 1880s Walter (17th/18th C.) married Janet Redford in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was herd at Harwood in 1711. He married Jean Scott in 1709, the marriage being recorded in Wilton Parish. Their children included Isobella (b.1711) and Margaret

(b.1713). The witnesses in 1711 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot. Perhaps the same Walter had children Christian (b.1707) and Walter (b.1710) baptised in Robertson Parish. He may therefore be the same man as the Walter recorded at Meadshaw in 1710. Walter (18th/19th C.) weaver at Ashieburn in Anrum Parish, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant of Robert Simpson at West Riddell in about 1823. He may be the Walter who married Jessie Hogg in Robertson Parish in 1842. She is probably the widow Janet (from Ashkirk Parish, with surname 'Hogg' scored out on the census) was in 1851 living at Whitecleuchshide (in Robertson Parish) with children Walter (b.c.1845), Adam (b.c.1847) and unnamed (b.1851). Walter (19th C.) married Margaret Baxter in Lilliesleaf in 1845. William (17th/18th C.) married Janet Mercer in Hawick Parish in 1711. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. In 1719 he was 'servant to David Gray tenant in Weensland'. He was living at the Sandbed in 1724. He married Helen Wilson (also from Hawick) in 1719 and their children included: Archibald (b.1720); Robert (b.1722); and Janet (b.1724), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1720 were David Gray in Weensland and merchant John Johnston, in 1722 were John (who was surely related) and Richard Scott of Boghall, and in 1724 were Walter and John Scott. Based on naming conventions, John may have been his brother, with Archibald as their father. William (17th/18th C.) 'casaer' (i.e. road-layer) in Hawick. In 1719 he was 'Casaer in Flexs' when he married Marion, daughter of tailor Walter Gledstains. Their children included: John (b.1723); Bessie (b.1725); Janet (b.1727); and Jean (b.1730). Robert (b.1720), with the mother's name given as Agnes Gledstains, was probably also his son. The witnesses in 1730 were Will Stoddart (surely related) and John Telfer. He may be the William who (along with Archibald Paterson, perhaps also the cassayer at the Flex) witnessed a baptism for William Cathrae in 1728. William (19th C.) woolsorter who was Cornet in 1873. He acted as Right-Hand man again in 1875, since the previous year's Cornet was unable to attend. William 'Willie' (20th C.) mill worker in Hawick. He spent some time working in Canada as a teenager and served in WWI. In 1937 he became Hawick's only Communist Town Councillor, but within a few months joined the Labour Party. He was involved in setting up the Hawick Workers' Mill, which supplied woollen goods to anti-Fascist forces in Spain, as well as helping provide jobs for unemployed mill-workers in Hawick (formerly spelled ‘Stodart’, ‘Stoddert’, ‘Stodert’, ‘Stodherd’, ‘Stotherd’ and other variants; also Stothart).

stog (stōg) v., arch. to walk heavily, stride sturdily, stump – ‘By the policies o Ancrum Hoose ... A stoaggeet-on on the shadeet seide’ [ECS].

stog (stōg) v., arch. to stab, pierce, jab – ‘I have stogd myself in the leg’ [HAST1922].

stoggit (stō-gee’, -gi’) pp., poet. stabbed, thrust – ‘Thou hest stogget sair t me, that I nicht fa’...’ [HSR].

Stoghill (stōg-hil) n. former name for lands near Commonsides in upper Teviotdale. In 1591 these lands, along with Commonsides, Northcroft and Hillend were already occupied by Gilbert Elliot when leased to him by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear if the name is a variant of something more familiar.

stoiter (stoi-tur) v., arch. to stagger, stumble – ‘Making a low bow, he wheeled about, and ‘stoitered’ away as fast as his feet could carry him’ [JTe], ‘The step may stoiter, the eyne be dim ...’ [WL], ‘...But byways for the likes o’ me Although the step may stoiter’ [WL] (cf. the more common stotter).

Stonedge (sten-leej, stō-nej) n. farm west of Wolfelee above Howahill, once part of one of the main estates of Hobkirk Parish, also formerly known as ‘Stanledge’. It was also once a barony in its own right. It is probably the seat of John ‘de Stonesleghe’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and is ‘de Stounesleighe’ in 1303/4 on an inquest for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. The lands were bestowed on David Home of Wedderburn by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in 1464. It could be the ‘Stanleche’ in Ettrick Forest, whose ‘grassum’ was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1477 (although this could be confusion with Crown lands of the same name in Stirlingshire). James Turnbull was recorded there in 1586/7 and in 1590. Walter Scott was tenant there in about 1600. The size and ownership of parts of lands referred to as ‘Stonedge’ are complicated. The Earl of Angus sold off his superiority of these and other Rulewater lands to Sir William Cranston in 1605. The estate is recorded belonging to Hector Turnbull in at least 1603–09, part sold to Gibbie Elliott of Stobs in 1609 and part still owned by Andrew Turnbull in 1610. Andrew and Cuthbert ‘McDowall’ were there in 1616. It was sold by William, Earl of Lothian to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers in 1647, but given back the following year. Then in 1651 it was sold by William, Lord Cranston to William Elliott of Stobs (tradition says that Cranston did this to secure them against being forfeited before his joined attempts to rescue Charles I). In 1671 the lands of Over and Nether Woollee, Stonedge, Unthank, Howa, Sneep, Hobsburn and Little Gledstains were separated off from those of Stobs to become the new estate of Stonedge; this was disposed to Thomas, the eldest son of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs with his 2nd wife Magdalen Nicolson, and when Thomas died it went to his brother Gilbert. In 1694 the residents were John Mair, elder, Agnes Scott, John Mair, younger and Robert Oliver. In 1718 the western part was sold to Adam Scott (tenant farmer at Wauchope), and passed to his brother William, who later purchased the eastern part and became the new Laird of Stonedge. Along with Howa, Scott’s part was valued at £856 12s, with Elliot of Stonedge holding lands at the same time that were valued at £676 14s 8d. In 1766 the eastern part was valued at £412 19s 6d, with the superiority liferented by Elliot of Borthwickbrae, while the western part was valued at £842 6s. Adam Scott’s son Thomas sold his lands to Robert Lisle. Part (including Unthank) was also sold to Elliot of Woollee. In about 1788 it was listed as being disjoined from the Stobs estate and valued at £1300 in total, Elliot of Wolfelee holding lands in Stonedge valued at £112 5s 7d, while Robert Lisle’s part was valued at £1187 14s 5d, and Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee also owned small parts valued (along with Unthank) at £110 17s 2d. Lisle sold his lands in 1793 to James Chisholme before the previous purchase had really been completed. Robert Smith was living there in 1799 and Robert Glendinning in 1801. In 1811 it was listed as being owned by Robert Lisle and valued at about £1200. It passed through marriage to the Sinclairs, being owned by Lord Sinclair by about 1874. Robert Grieve (who died in 1785) was tenant farmer there. James Stewart was shepherd there in 1797. Lands formerly in Stonedge (including Unthank) were listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1811, valued at £112 5s 7d. The farm was tenanted by Thorburns through much of the 19th century and by the Barrie family into the 20th century. The original house was a strong tower situated on a rocky ledge, said to be surrounded by a very thick wall. All sign of this was already gone by the 19th century, although it is said that Mr. Barrie (who lived at Harden) picked up the old key to the peel and passed it on to the Marquis of Lothian. It was stated in the 19th century that there is a stone circle near here, in the direction towards Shankend, although if it existed it is now lost (many spelling variants exist in earlier documents, including 'Steinleath'; it is 'Stainletche' in 1562, 'Stenleche' in 1567, 'Stanielege' in 1586/7, 'Stonyleache' and 'Stonyletche' in 1590, 'Stanyleche' in 1595, 'Stanyleg', 'Stanylege' and 'Stanelege' in 1601, 'Stanileche' and 'Stainieloch' in 1603, 'Stanyledge' in 1604, 'Stanyledge' and 'Stenedrig' in 1606, 'Stennyledge' and 'Staneleiche' in 1607, 'Staineleche' and 'Stenletch' in 1609, 'Stanielege' in 1611, 'Stanyledge' in 1612 and 1615, 'Stainledge' in 1616, 'Stenniledge' in 1618, 'Staniledge' in 1647, 'Stainledge' in 1648, 'Stenniledge' in 1677, 'Stennilodge' in 1682, 'Stenedledge' in 1692, 'Stennilege' in 1694, 'Staneledge' in 1704 and 'Standlidge' in 1748; it is marked as 'Stennaleuch' on Blaeu's 1654 map; note that the l has persisted in the local pronunciation despite the official spelling, and that the pronunciation is never stān-; the meaning is probably 'stane leche', meaning 'stony stream').

Stonedge (sten-leej, stō-nej) n. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as being 'de Stonesleghe' when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. Although his name has also been transcribed as 'Scouneslegh', the more modern transcription makes the connection with the lands in Hobkirk Parish clear. His seal bore a 'cabossed' stag's head with a cross between the antlers and the name 'S'... OHIS DE STYKS'Y?'; William of Yetholm had a similar seal. He is 'de Stounesleighe' in 1303/4 on an inquest for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton.

Stonedge Hill (stō-nej-hil) n. hill lying to the south-west of Stonedge farm, reaching a height of 369 m. On its western side is a linear earthwork, some 330 m in length, probably an agricultural boundary, now obscured by the forestry plantation. Near the top of the hill there was previously a cairn, probably quite ancient, but now obliterated by forestry ploughing.

the Store (thu-stōr) n. Hawick Cooperative Store, which opened in 1839 as ‘the Chartist Store’ with a small shop in Silver Street. It grew into a set of around half a dozen general stores, 5 butchers, a baker’s shop (from 1851), shoe shop (1859), coal branch (1865), drapery (1873), carting (1874), van service to the country (1884) and penny savings bank (1887). The firm also ran its own stocking-makers at the old Tabernacle building in the years 1874–81. The stableyards and dairy were built on Orchard Terrace in 1891 (designed by J.P. Alison). The main shop, usually the one referred to as ‘the Store’, stretched from Tannage Close to Baker Street and from the High Street to Teviot Crescent. It contained many departments, including clothing, electrical, shoes, furniture, toys, ladies hairdressing and a tea room. This main building was constructed in 1885 at 65, 67, 69 and 71 High Street, with the surviving upper level frontage at 65–67 designed by local architect Michael Brodie in a French Renaissance style, with the first and second floor windows having arched heads, eacg with a different carving; this is a category B listed building. This was Hawick's biggest department store, with smaller shops elsewhere in town. There was a relatively large grocer's shop in Noble Place and others at the Sandbed, Drumlanrig Square, Myreslawgreen and Ladylaw Place, as well as the complex on Elm Grove (which contained a grocer's and a butcher's). Shoppers collected stamps that could be redeemed for goods, and departments within the 'Store' communicated via characteristic pneumatic tubes. The main shop closed in 1987, with the property sold off to several developers. The Co-op at Burnfoot remains, however; it was Hawick's first purpose-built self-service grocers. A history was published in 1889 – 'There er peis, peis, Thit come up ti yer kneis, In the Store, in the Store, There are peis, peis, This come up ti yer kneis, In the Hawick Co-operative Store!' [T], '... waitin eer turn at the Store' [ECS], 'In Hawick in days lang syne When the world and huz were younger Oo dune oor messages at the Store A still can mind ma number' [IWL].

the Store Dairy (thu-stōr-dā-ree) n. building and yard on Orchard Terrace and Elm Grove, constructed for use by Hawick Cooperative Society. It was built in 1891, designed by ??, and used to run the Store's dairy operations through most of the 20th century. The buildings were converted into Elm Court housing.

the Store Field (thu-stōr-feeld) n. field once grazed by the Hawick Co-op cows, situated behind Wester Braid Road, near the Miller's Knowes. The Co-op employees used to organise an annual sports day and picnic there, as a sort of forerunner to the Vertish Hill Sports – 'The picnic up at the Store Field The whole o' Hawick was there' [AY].

the Store van (thu-stōr-vawn) n. van that used to sell grocery items around the town. The vans started as a country delivery service in 1884 and continued into the latter part of the 20th century – '... wi' a biscuit in my hand Fresh frae the lang mysterious spicy drawer O' the Store van' [DH].

Storey (stō-ree) n. Matthew (b.1842) born in Castleton Parish, son of Thomas, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was a boarder at 3 Back Row. In the 1880s he had his own boot and shoemakers's shop at 3 Silver Street. He married Helen Richardson in 1864 and their children included Thomas (b.1865), William (b.1868), Janet (b.1870) and Isabella (b.1872).

Storff Burn (storf-burn) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Larriston Fells and flowing roughly north-west to join Great Warrington Sike, before eventually running into Larriston Burn.

Storff Sike (storf-sīk) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, which rises on Larriston Fells and is joined by Little Warrington Sike. Note that it distinct from Storff Burn, which lies further south.

storfully (stōr-fu-lee) adv., arch. excitably, in an agitated way – '...and then if she carries on storfully, as she's amaist shure to do, thraw half-a-dozen o' plates or sae doon i' the floor ...' [HAST1868] (cf. stoor and stour).

Storie (stō-ree) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded in Raperlaw in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbolls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Chester-house in Rulewater. In 1684 he was listed among men declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. Adam (17th/18th C.) wright in Denholm. His children included: Marion (b.1723); Robert (b.1728); and Marion (b.1730). Andrew 'Dand' (15th/16th C.) resident of Rewcastle. In 1502 Robert Rule (from the same place) was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, with the pair fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Ann (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer's shop at 6 Allars Bank in the mid-1900s. Cuthbert (17th C.) recorded in 1627 as 'Cuthbert Storey of Hawicke' in a presentment where 13 sheep were stolen from him. This is Hawick in Northumberland. David (b.1809/10) born in Morebattle, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was at Howcleuchshiel, in 1851 at Clarilaw in Bowden and in 1861 was shepherd at Nether Tofts in Kirkton Parish. He married Janet Lunn in 1833. Their children included: Margaret (b.1834); Elizabeth (b.1836); Euphemia (b.1839); William (b.1841); Fanny (b.1844); Janet (b.c.1848); Joan (b.c.1849); Mary (b.c.1851); Ellen (b.c.1854); Robina (b.c.1855); and David (b.c.1857). Gideon (18th C.) from Ashkirk Parish, he was recorded at Roughhough in Wilton in 1735. In 1727 he married Isobel Brown, who was also from Ashkirk. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: John (b.1731); and Elspeth (b.1735). The witnesses in 1735 were Robert Scott and Robert Storie (who was surely related). Harry (??–) Common Riding Song Singer 1950s??–1972. He was ill for a while and Bert Armstrong filled in for a few years, but he returned again as the official singer. Apparently there were some complaints about his over-gesticulating! Helen (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for her non-appearance. She was listed again in 1494/5. Other people who were not entered by the Sheriff were fairly local (but she is one of the only women). James (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. He may have been related to William. James (16th C.) servant of Gavin Eliott of Stobs and Jean Scott. In 1573 he was placed on their recently purchased 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton. However, he was attacked by Walter and John Scott (sons of Margaret Turnbull, who was widow of David Elliot in Chamberlain Newton), who possessed the other half of the farm. They 'crewellie sett upoun him, hurt and voundit him in sindrie partis of his body, and left him for deid; of the quhilkis hurt as yit he is in danger of his lyfe'. It is unknown whether or not he survived. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. He may be the James 'in Spittle' whose will was recorded in 1681 (if he made a testament long before he died), or else they were father and son. Either he or a near relative was probably the 'Laird Storie' whose lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish were valued at £18 in 1643, 1663 and 1678. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as 'undermiller att ...' (probably Newmill) in 1700. His children included: William (b.1693); Bessie (b.1698); and Anna (b.1700). The witnesses in 1698 were Robert Thomson and John Goodfellow and in 1700 were James Craw and James Dryden, smith at Newmill. James (d.bef. 1741) from Ancrum Parish. In 1718 he married Jean Bennet, who was from Bedrule Parish. In 1741 his widow gave money to the poor in Ancrum Parish, owing from her husband. James (d.1797) from Rulewater, he died at Robert Biggar's Inn in Hawick in 1797. He could be the James who married Elizabeth Henderson in Bedrule in 1755, and his wife could be the widow of that name who died later the same year in Silver Street. James (18th/19th C.) weaver recorded in Barnhills in 1799 and at Belses on the 1801 Militia ballot for Ancrum Parish. James (b.c.1780) servant at Colterscleuch according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. James (19th C.) local man known for his poetry. He competed in the 'Auld Brig'

competition and published 'Poems on several subjects' (1837). He was said to be a repository of local stories relating to the Covenanters. He could be the labourer, born at Southdean in about 1780, who was recorded at about 71 High Street in 1841 and on Brougham Place in 1851. John (15th C.) received a boll of victuals in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as 'Johanni Storis'. John (16th C.) recorded as 'John Story' on a list of tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Roughlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed along with Robert, to whom he was surely related. John (17th C.) tenantin 'Roods' (or 'Rodes') in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1757 (when he was 'younger', suggesting his father was also John) and at 'Harden anna' in 1762. He married Marion Borthwick. His children included: John (b.1757); and Helen (b.1762). John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickshiel (probably) in 1735 when his son John was baptised. John (d.bef. 1815) gardener in Hawick. He married Isabel Watson, who died in 1815. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1764); Elizabeth (again, b.1765); Helen (b.1767); Margaret (b.1796); Isabel (b.1772); and Robert (b.1779). The witnesses to the 1765 baptism were Thomas Cowan and Walter Scott and in 1772 were the whole congregation. John (19th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Hawick Parish in 1849. Patrick (16th/17th C.) tenant in 'Rowll Spittell' (i.e. Spittal-on-Rule). In 1605 Robert Scott of Thirlestane was caution for Walter Scott of Dykes in a bond not to harm him. Robert (17th C.) resident of the old Hassendean Parish. He was recorded at Over Boonraw in 1688. He married Isobel Wright in 1679 and their children (baptised in Robertson Parish) included: Isobel (b.1680); Margaret (b.1682); Bessie (b.1684); Walter (b.1686); and Robert (b.1688). The witnesses in 1684 were Robert and George Ormiston (who lived at Boonraw), in 1686 were William Nichol and Adam Scott and in 1688 were again George and Robert Ormiston. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in 1684. Along with Robert Ormiston, he witnessed a baptism for William Nichol in Boonraw in 1696. Robert (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Roughlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John was also tenant there and so presumably related. Robert (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Cavers in Wilton in 1720 and their children included: Christian (b.1723); and John (b.1726). He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1725 and 1732 for William Scott in Newton and in 1735 for Gideon in Roughheugh. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He had an unknown child baptised in 1744. He could be the deceased Robert whose grandson John died in Hawick in 1800. Robert (b.c.1805) joiner at Branhholme Woodfoot. His wife was Betty and their children included Jean, Thomas, Margaret, Robert, Janet and George. Robert (b.1812/3) born in Lilliesleaf, he was a groom who lived at Falnash. His wife was Janet Middlemas, and already dead by 1861. His children included Helen, George and Robert, and he had a nephew, William Easton. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Thomas Scott in Branhholme and John Scott in Spittal were convicted of a crimes against him. They came 'across him in villa de spittale Inter aqueduct de damys'. Thomas (d.bef. 1632) described as 'in Roucastle' in 1632 when his widow Bessie Craik feued lands in Ruecastle from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at Acreknowe (along with William Armstrong) recorded on the 1684 list of men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He is surely descended from the 'Laird Storie' who in 1643 owned the same piece of land, which later became part of the Knowesouth estate. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He owned part of the old lands of Ruecastle, as recorded in 1788, with value £18 (plus teinds). Probably the same Thomas was recorded paying the Land Tax for part of Ruecastle in 1811. Thomas (b.c.1780) labourer at 'Cadafits' according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. His location is obscure, but could be Cadroun Pots. Thomas (b.1793/4) blacksmith in Newcastleton. He was listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater's 1852 directory. He was living at about 40 South Hermitage Street in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He firstly married Mary Armstrong and their children included: William (b.1817), also a blacksmith; Hannah (b.1820); Elizabeth (b.1822); and John (b.1824). He secondly married Janet Nichol and their children included: Mary (b.1830); Thomas (b.1831); Margaret (b.1834); Walter (b.1836); Helen (b.1837); Elliot (b.1838/39); Robert (b.1839); Matthew (b.1842); Alexander (b.1844); Nichol (b.1849); Janet (b.1850/1); and Esther (b.1852). His father-in-law John Nichol (b.c.1780) was living with his family in 1841. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1551 as then occupier of an acre of arable land in the lands of Spittal-on-Rule, specifically on 'lie Harparhill' (whose location is unknown), which was granted by the Baron of Cavers to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry. He witnessed the associated notorial instrument and letter of reversion, along with 2 men called Alexander 'Wreth', one of whom was a miller. William (17th C.) recorded as 'in Weynis' (probably Weens in Rulewater) when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1631. William (17th C.) resident of Denholm. He and his wife Marion Beattie were accused of attending conventicles, probably in about 1684. William (17th C.) listed at Wadeshill among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as servant at Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799 (also formerly spelled 'Storey', 'Storrie', 'Story' and 'Storry').

Storiesteed (stō-ree-steen) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll, listed before Byreholm, and so presumably somewhere near Castleton. It appears as 'Storeisteid alias Gudelland', with a value of 5 shillings and tenanted by Christopher Armstrong.

storm (stōrm) v., arch. to beset or cover with snow or otherwise deprive livestock of pasture – 'The term 'being stormed' was originally used to express the want of food suffered by sheep when the ground was covered with snow' [RB].

Stot (sto') n., arch. James (18th C.) miller at Weensland. He married Margaret Lyden. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included Margaret (b.1719) and Charles (b.1723). The witnesses in 1723 were ‘Dand’ Gray in Weensland and gardener William Riddell. James (18th C.) Hawick resident. His wife was Margaret Cavers and their children included John (b.1730). James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He is recorded at Highchesters in 1753. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Magdalen (b.1745); Margaret (b.1748); Margaret (again, b.1749); Agnes (b.1752); William (b.1753); and James (b.1755). James (18th C.) married Mary Harkness in Wilton in 1761. Robert (18th C.) married Betty Thomson in Wilton in 1775. Walter (18th C.) Hawick resident. His son James was born in 1734. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant at Minto Kames according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799 (also written ‘Stott’; it is possible that some of these may be errors for ‘Scot’).

Stot Cleuch (sto'-klooch) n. small stream in southern Liddesdale, which flows roughly north-east to meet Tinnis Burn.

Stotfield (sto'-feeld) n. lands that were part of Lilliesleaf Common. Along with Nolt-lair, it was described in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls that it was feued by John Scott in Bewlie Mains from William Riddell of Camieston.

Stothart (sto-dur') n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1741. David (1773–1841) son of James and Jean Little, he was born in Langholm and was a resident of Deanburnhaugh. He married Christian Jackson, from Canonbie, who died at Doecleuch in 1851, aged 70. Their children included: James (1804–60); Christian (1805–82), who probably married William Gledstains; Jane (1807–41), who died at Deanburnhaugh; Joseph (1809–80), a mason at Deanburnhaugh; Henry (1814–90), baptised in Robertson; William (1815–78); David (1819–89), also a mason; Mary (1822–95); and Thomas (1828–95). They are buried at Borthwick Waas. In 1841 his wife and children Jane, Joseph and David were living at Deanburnhaugh. David (b.c.1780s) tenant at Muselee, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish in 1812. David (1819–89) son of David and Christian Jackson. He was born in Robertson Parish. In 1861 he was a mason living in Ayton. Later the family moved to Hawick, living on North Bridge Street. In 1847 he married Mary Orkney (1825–99), who was from Ayton and died in Hawick. Their children included: David (1848–1921), a joiner; James (1850–1909), who was killed by a train; John (1852–89), who died by suicide; Elizabeth ‘Lizzie’ Pringle (1855–84), who married James Swan Wood and had a daughter Agnes who married revolutionary socialist John Maclean; George (b.1857), George (again, b.1862) and Mary Jane (b.1862), who all died in infancy; Joseph (1864–1933), a saddler and bootmaker; and Mary Alice Jackson (1868–1925), who married James Orr and died of self-inflicted ‘irritant poisoning’. David (b.1851) son of Joseph, he was born at Deanburnhaugh. He worked as a dyker and mason, living in Wilton and Hawick. He is recorded in prison in Jedburgh and Dumfries in 1868, 1869, 1876 and 1881. David Orkney Smith 'D.O.' (1900–72) son of Joseph. He was a shopkeeper at 6 High Street, where his father was a saddler and bootmaker. After he took over the shop he branched out into sporting goods, fishing tackle and toys. He took on Len Elliot as a partner and later passed the business to him. He was also involved with local operatic productions. His cousin was Herbert Stothart, Hollywood musical director who won an Oscar for 'The Wizard of Oz'. James (1850–1909) son of David and Mary Orkney, he was born in Ayton. By the time of the 1881 census he was living in Hawick. He was co-owner of Stothart & Rutherford, bootmakers of Hawick. He was associated with the Total Abstinence Society in Hawick, serving as its President and was politically identified with Socialist causes. He was said to have taken a great interest in the welfare of the youth of the Town. He lived at 8 Orchard Terrace, where his niece Agnes Wood acted as his housekeeper for a few years from about 1901. He was killed by throwing himself in front of a passing express train at Bishopbriggs Station in Lanarkshire. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Janet (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who is recorded in 1725 being added to the poor list and receiving a badge allowing her to go begging. She may have been the Janet born to William and Bessie Elliot in Hawick in 1685. John (19th C.) married Betty Cowan in Castleton Parish in 1837. Joseph (1809–80) born in Langholm, son of David and Christian Jackson. He was a mason at Deanburnhaugh, being recorded there in the 1841 and 1851 censuses (in 1841 with his mother, along with David probably his brother). In 1861 was living at Wilton Dean. He married Janet Hudson in Roberton in 1832 and their children included: Jane (b.1842); Margaret and Adam (b.1844); Christian (b.1847); and David (b.1851), who was a dyker. Joseph (1864–1933) son of David and Mary Orkney. He was a saddler at 6 High Street, taking over in the 1880s from George Davies, who had been saddler there before him. He was also a bootmaker and passed the business on to his son David Orkney. He was involved with the Temperance Society in Hawick. He lived at 15 Lockhart Place. He married Janet Dick Smith (1866–1945) and their children included: David Orkney Smith (1900–72); and James Dunlop (1906–61). The family are buried in Wilton Cemetery (also spelled 'Stotherd' and 'Stother'; see also Stoddart).

Stothart's (sto-durts) n. D.O. Stothart, sports goods, fishing tackle and toy shop at 6 High Street through most of the 20th century. The shop was a butcher's run by George Davies in the mid-19th century. It was then taken over as a saddler's by James Thomson, then by Robert and Thomas Hall and then by George Davies (junior). Joseph Stothart took over in the 1880s, continuing the saddler's business and eventually it passed to his son David, who moved out of saddlery into sports equipment, fishing tackle and toys. Len Elliot took over the business in 1971 and it closed for good in 1989, when compulsorily purchased as part of the renovations for the Tower.

stotter (sto'-ur) v. to stagger, stumble, totter – 'hei was stotterin hame as yaisual', '...with a sort of nervous excitement which made it stotter' [HSR], 'Thaye reel bak-an-forwart, an' stotter like ane drunken man ...' [HSR] (cf. steiter and stoiter).

stottin (sto'-in) adj. extremely drunk, so as to stagger about, raining so heavily that the drops are bouncing.

stourie (stow-, stoo-ree) adj., poet. dusty – ‘May flowers did bloom, the skies were clear, The roads were dry an’ stowrie’ [JoHa], active, restless, excitable (said of a young child) – ‘Cuddle doon ye stoorie loon – Ye wee croodlin’ doo’ [JT] (see also stoorie).

Stouslie (stooz-lee) n. farm and cottages out beyond Stirches, reached by the left hand road at the ‘Fower Road Ends’. The Lindsays held these lands as Barons of Chamberlain Newton from the time of David II (late 14th century). There were Turnbuls here in the late 1400s, when the lands were a Lairdship. John Turnbull from the Borthwick was granted the lands by John, Lord Lindsay, having previously been held by William Lindsay of ‘Garmilton’, and Turnbull resigned them back to Lord Lindsay in 1468. Thomas ‘Trumbul’ of Stoiuslie was witness to a sasine in 1488. George Turnbull was recorded there in 1493 and Walter Turnbull in 1494/5. In 1494/5 Thomas and Adam Grahamslaw from Newton ‘came in the King’s will’ for stealing 60 sheep from here; these belonged to Walter Scott of Howpasley and Walter Turnbull of Stouslie, but were also said to pertain to the King. There were Scotts living here in the 1500s. In 1506 ‘Stously and the five merk lands of Grundiston were valued at £5 Scots, in time of peace at six merks, and were held of the Earl of Bothwell as baron of the barony of Chamberlain-newton for one penny blench’. In the 16th century it was still part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, with superior being the Earls of Bothwell and then the Lords of Home. Scott of Satchells lists ‘John Scott in Stowslie’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. In 1643 it was valued at £67 3s 4d, along with Boonraw (‘but disjoined’) and recorded as ‘Stouglie [probably a transcription error for ‘Stouzie’], or Stouslie, formerly in Hassendean Parish’. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. Mary Gledstains was liferenter of this farm and another (probably Boonraw) in 1643; she was probably widow of George Scott of Boonraw. Archibald Scott was liferenter there in about 1663, when he paid tax on £91 for the land. In 1678 George Scott paid land tax on £291 for these lands, along with Boonraw. John Henderson was living there in 1682. It was leased by George Scott of Boonraw and continued by his heirs in 1692. In 1690 the lands became part of Wilton Parish when Hassendean was suppressed. David Gray was recorded there in 1694. William Henderson was there in 1706. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 101 acres, bounded by Boonraw, Heap, Wilton Common and Coldhouse. Thomas Stoddart was there in 1729, William Harkness in 1730, Adam Harkness in 1732 and William Nichol in 1735–37. Francis Stoddart died there in 1738 and Robert Scott in 1750. William Stewart was there in 1770–80. By 1788 it had been disjoined from Boonraw and was valued at £67 3s 4d. William Stewart was recorded there in 1770. The Cala Burn was the western boundary of the farm, with the farmhouse on the burns eastern side. One of the cottages was formerly a school administered by Wilton Parish. The Town Dump is nearby – ‘... His stag-hounds still in the leash are led, As he turns his eye to the Stowhouselea’ [BCM1880], ‘Owre the lang brae frae Stouslie; Frae the mains o’ Stirches down; How micht I come at the day’s end To the bonny Border toun?’ [WL] (also spelled ‘Stowslie’, ‘Stouslea’, etc.; the origin of the name is possibly ‘Stuf’s wood’ from the rare Old English personal name ‘Stuf’, plus ‘leah’, a wood, or perhaps from the Old English ‘stybb’, a tree stump; the name first appears as ‘Stowislee’ in about 1390; it is also ‘Stowislee’ in 1468, ‘Stowisle’ in 1488, ‘stowisle’ in 1493 and 1494/5, ‘stowlislee’ in 1494/5, ‘stowisle’ in 1502, ‘Stouslee’ in 1525, ‘Stowislie’ in 1551, ‘Stouslie’ in 1552, ‘Stowslie’ in 1643 and 1663, ‘Stouslie’ in 1678, ‘Stousley’ in 1692, ‘Stueslie’ in 1729, ‘Stuslie’ in 1737, ‘stoueslie’ in 1750 and it is still ‘Stouslea’ in 1841; it is marked ‘Stously’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Stowlsee’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Stouslie Schuil (stooz-lee-skil) n. former school at Stouslie, run as a country school by the Parish of Wilton, and later by Hawick. It was founded in 1789 and a small private endowment was set up by a few of the heritors in 1838. In the 1830s it had about 50 pupils. The school was also sometimes referred to as Priestrig Schuil. Schoolmasters included William Lockie 1806–43 and David Wells in the mid-19th century. The National Archive has records relating to the period 1874–1920.

stouth (stooth, stowth) n., arch. theft, robbery – ‘A party convicted of stealing peats, is ordained to pay the bailies £10 for each of the three ‘stouths’ and to go to the stocks’ [BR1648], ‘... and stouth committ by him out of the purse of William Elliot ...’ [BR], ‘Where wi’ herry and spulzie, wi’ raif and wi’ stouth, We stammached our hunger and quenched our drouth’ [JTe] (also spelled ‘stooth’).

stoutlier (stowt-lee-ur) adj., poet. boldlier, more courageously, more fiercely – ‘...Nae stoutlier stude out for their laird, Nor did the lads o’ Liddesdale’ [CPM].

stove (stōv) v., pl. to stew or steam, especially potatoes steamed in dripping after being boiled – ‘Ti stove taatihs is to treat them, after they have been boiled, by ‘steaming’ them in dripping’ [ECS], ‘Kitcheen-fei was especially used when ‘stoavin taatihs’ [ECS].

stovie tattis (stō-vee-ta’-iz) n., pl. stoved potatoes, also known as stovies – ‘... A plate o’ stovie tatties birstled broon, A kail pot steamin’ owre the fire’ [WL].

stovies (stō-veez) n., pl. a dish made of sliced potatoes stewed with onions, occasionally with dripping or small pieces of meat added – ‘oo aye liked ti hev stovies wi oor haggis’ (short for ‘stoved potatoes’).

stow (stow) v., poet. to crop, trim, especially as a mark of ownership – ‘Grief’s stow’d the feathers o’ her wing, Her heart’s like lead’ [JoHa], n., arch. a slice, piece cut – ‘A cut or slice; pron. stoo’ [JoJ].

Stow (stow) n. town on the Gala Water, near the Moorfoot Hills, in the old county of Midlothian, and now in the Scottish Borders region. It is roughly half-way between Hawick and Edinburgh, and was a station on the Waverley Line. The road to Edinburgh via Stow (later the A7) was only opened in 1818, after which it has become well-known to all Teries. The settlement was once known as ‘Stow of Wedale’. Formerly one of Scotland’s original seats of sanctuary, it was also the Bishop of St. Andrews summer residence. The ruined Old Kirk (late 15th century, having been repaired in the 17th century) replaced an older church of 1242 and an even older one allegedly built by King Arthur, and holding a piece of the ‘true cross’. An ancient broch, Bow Castle and the 1654–55 Pack-horse Bridge are nearby. The town probably achieved burgh status in 1699. Population (1991) 528 – ‘Syne, up on the tap, wi’ a thankfu’ sigh, That its wark was gey weel throwe, Like a het-fit callant chased on by a whulp, It cam scamperin’ doon to Stow’ [WL].

Stow (stō) n. John (c.1525–1605) English historian. From humble beginnings he published several influential works, including editions of Chaucer, Chronicles of England and a Survey of London, although he remained poor all his life. His Chronicle contains the story of Hawick’s residents burning the thatch from their roofs before a visit by Sussex and his men in 1570.

stown (stown) pp., poet. stolen – ‘He hadna’ been awa’ a week but only twa, When my mither she fell sick, and the cow was stoun awa’ [CPM], ‘... which, says my narrator, ‘nae doubt they had stoun out o’ some honest laird’s cellar’ [EM1820], ‘They’ve stown the bridle off his steed, And they’ve put water in his lang gun; They’ve fixed his sword within the sheath, That out again it winna come’ [LHTB], ‘She stole my heart, she broke her vow, And love has stown my wits away ...’ [JTe], ‘O dool! an’ what will douce fook say, When this I tell – Death’s stown away The ae best soul e’er warmed clay?’ [JoHa], ‘Oh, waefu’ and sad was the tale he did tell – How that he had been stoun frae his daddie’ [JT], ‘At Wheel-Kirk, within the Catrail, Priest David had thirty-and-three Gude nowt that were stown head and tail By Percy o’ Keeldarstanelee’ [T].

stowp (stowp) n., arch. a tankard, flaggon, jug, liquid measure, bucket, particularly a deep wooden vessel, narrowing towards the top, crossed by a fixed wooden handle, and used for fetching water from public wells – ‘For takeing up of ane pint stope ... and offering to thraw it att James Newbie’ [BR], ‘... and ilk ane of them wantit 4 stoupis’ [BR1656], ‘The inhabitants were enjoined to keep their ‘water stoups’ well filled ...’ [V&M], ‘Come away, for the stoup it is toom, do you see?’ [JoHa], ‘Aa whiles think that life in this grey auld toon o’ Hawick Micht weel be compared to a river ...’ [DH], ‘May ill befa’ the cankered loon, That winna mak’ the pint stoup clatter’ [GWe] (also spelled ‘stoup’ and formerly ‘stope’, etc.; they were used locally well into the 19th century).

St. Quentin Strip (sin'-kwen-tin-strip) n. plantation to the southwest of Riddell, north of Boosmill. The name may be connected with St. Qunitegern's Fountain or else the forename Quentin formerly used by the Riddells of Riddell.

St. Quintegern's Fountain (sin'-kwin-tigernz-fown-tin) n. former name for a spring in Lilliesleaf recorded in the Register of Sasines in 1816. Given that the kirk there appears to have been dedicated to St. Mungo (also called ‘Kentigern’) it seems likely this was a spring near the church, perhaps one of the springs marked in Lilliesleaf Moss on modern maps. It may also be the place once known as the ‘Kirsenin Well’.

Strachan (straw-chin) n. Henry (15th C.) witness to the charter of James Scott of Kirkurd, granting Galalaw to his son David in 1494. He is recorded as ‘Henrico Strathauchin’. Rev. Ian M. minister of Ashkirk, linked with Selkirk. He worked with the Overseas Council in Ghana, then became minister at St. Paul's, Cambuslang in 1966, moving to St. John's, Gourrock in 1971. He was involved with education, appeared on Scottish Television's ‘Late Call’. He moved to Selkirk (linked with Ashkirk and Caddonfoot) in 1986. About 1990 he wrote ‘The Story of Ashkirk 1790–1990’ as part of bicentenary celebrations for the Parish Kirk. James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Wilson in Wilton in 1710. In 1711 he was living ‘with James Bell in Cavers But his Wife in Wiltoun burn’. His children included: Marion (b.1711); and James (b.1714). James (b.1778/9) from Elgin, he was a shopkeeper on the Crescent, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he was a handloom weaver, living at about 13 Slitrig Crescent with his wife Jane. In 1851 he was on the Kirkgate with his niece Elizabeth and a lodger. Rev. James (1783–1840) son of William, minister of Coulter, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by the Presbytery of Biggar in 1805. He was assistant to Thomas Elliot of Cavers at some point and was himself presented as minister by George Douglas of Cavers in early 1809. He stayed there until his death. He was described as having ‘integrity of principle, uprightness of mind, straightforwardness of purpose ... and an uncompromising detestation of everything mean and dishonourable’ and his sermons were said to be particularly well-conceived, strong and elegant. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jane Brown, daughter of the minister of Crailing. Their children were: William (1820–97), in H.M. Stationary Office; Janet Dawson (1821–1837); David (b.1823); a daughter who died young; James (b.1831), an army officer; Elizabeth Howison (b.1833); and Robert (b.1835). He wrote a description of the Parish of Cavers in 1839 (finished off by Henry Scott Riddell) for the New Statistical Account. 2 sermons preached on his death by David Stevenson, minister of Wilton, were published in 1840. Rev. James A. minister of Southdean (linked with Hobkirk) 1983–88 (also written ‘Strachon’).

In 1797 his surname is 'Stratton' when his employee James Elliot' was listed among the men in Hawick on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1790 he married Agnes, younger daughter of Walter Wilson. Their children included: John (b.1791), who was a teacher in Haddington; Walter (b.1793); Oliver (b.1794), who had a hat shop in Dalkeith and lived for a while in Hawick; Catherine (b.1796); Margaret (b.1798); Betty (b.1799); Ann (b.1801); and William. The witnesses in 1795 were merchants William Wilson (his brother-in-law) and George Turnbull (who was married to his wife's sister). He could be the John, son of Peter 'Straiten', born in Lilliesleaf in 1762. Oliver (b.1794) son of John and Agnes Wilson. He ran a hat shop in Dalkeith, and it is said he would regularly walk from there to Hawick, where he visited his relatives and may have purchased hats from William and James Wilson. He lost his money through bank failure and later moved to Hawick, living in the house of William Wilson. It was said that he 'had a scientific and literary turn of mind, and although most attentive and industrious, and very methodical in his habits, he did not possess much business aptitude'. Peter (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Oliver, and their children included: Peter (b.1759); John (b.1762); William (b.1764); Janet (b.1766); a son with indecipherable name (b.1768); and Elizabeth (b.1771). Peter (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785, when his name is listed as 'Straton'. Strang (strang) n. William (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl's inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere.

Strange (strānj) n. name used in the 19th century (as described by Jeffreys) for the land between the Rule and Jed valleys, which was formerly 'Strynds', possessed by the Olivers in the 15th and 16th centuries. Walter Turnbull was there in 1682. John was recorded as tenant there in 1689. The residents recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls were George Oliver and John Oliver. William Strange was a mole-catcher there in 1799. The location is marked on Stobie's 1770 map, and can be seen in aerial photographs, near a fork in the stream and just to the east of a small pond (it is 'Strang' in 1694; see also Strynds, Strangeburnfit and Strangeburnheid; the pronunciation may have been strānj, evolving from 'strynds').

Strangeburnfit (strānj-burn-fi) n. former farmstead in Abbotrule Parish. It is recorded in 1774 when there were Sintons there.

Strangeburnheid (strānj-burn-heed) n. former farmstead between the Rule and Jed valleys. It lay between Burnbrae and Ashtrees, and is marked on Stobie's 1770 map as just 'Strange'. It is unclear which stream this corresponds to on modern maps, but probably the branch of the Rule Burn, on the north side of the road between Ruletownhead and Westerhouses. The land here was once 'Stryndis', a home of the Olivers. It was probably called the 'burnhead' to distinguish it from a later farmstead built at Strangeburnfit (see Strange).

strikes (striks) n., pl. labour organisation was very difficult in the early days of industry in Hawick. The first 1-day strike was in 1817, with workers coming out against John Scott. This and was followed by the 'Lang Stand Oot' later in that year, lasting several months. The unions were successful on that occasion and again in 1822, when employers were fined for reducing wages. The Hawick Framework Knitters Association was the first legal labour group, formed in 1840. The practice of charging employees rental for frames was stopped in 1871, and there was a gruelling 12 week strike over conditions in 1872/73. Strike action continued through the 20th century, as the hosiery, tweed and knitwear industries went through ups and downs. The most bitter strike in living memory was the 5 week long strike of workers against the Hawick Knitwear Manufacturers Association in 1972.

strike up (stri-k-up) v., arch. to break down a door – ‘Decerns Walter Scott in ane unlaw and fine of £10, for the striking up of Thomas Broun his dure ...’ [BR1650].

the Struther (thū-stru-thur) n. familiar name for Williestruther – 'Perhaps the scented road o' pines To Struther's loch beguiles ...' [WFC].

Struthers (stru-thurz) n. Alan (14th C.) from the Northumberland family, he became Lord of Lyham through marriage. He was English Sheriff of Roxburgh in at least 1368–70. The lands he held included the Hawick in Northumberland. In about 1370 he was 'Alano de le Strother' when he witnessed a grant by John Neville of lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. His children included Alan (contemporary of Chaucer at Cambridge), Henry, William (married a daughter of the Mayor of Newcastle) and Joan. Sir Thomas (d.1395) probably son of Henry, who was Sheriff of Northumberland. He was likely to be the Sir Thomas 'of Strother' whose charters are included in the collection of David Laing (although that does not match with a death in 1395). He was appointed custodian of Jedburgh Castle in 1394. He was reputedly an English champion, who was marauding around the Scottish Borders, bragging that he would take on any Scotsman. The challenge was met by Sir William Inglis (then of Branxholme) at Rulehaugh, witnessed by Archibald, Earl of Douglas and Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland. Struthers was killed in single combat it is said. Other accounts describe how Inglis' force had attempted to breach the Castle walls and after being repelled when the English soldiers returned from the town, he challenged Inglis to single combat for breaking the truce (also written 'Strother' etc.).

Strynds (strindz) n. former lands in the Rule valley, near Westerhouses, later known as 'Strange'. This was home of a prominent branch of the Oliver family in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. Robert Oliver from there, along with 7 other Olivers and a Shiel, had remission in 1494/5 for the crime of communing with the English. Several members of the same family had remission for thefts and other crimes in 1502 in a number of cases. Later in 1502 4 Olivers from here were all found guilty of rieving crimes and probably hanged. This branch was said to never have been heard of again, although it was supposedly related to the later Olivers of Lustruther. The lands were valued along with Westerhouses at £6 5s, according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 (and the comptroller was allowed the 'fermes' from there for that year), as well as 1539. Edward Oliver was there in 1541, when the rent was 15 shillings. There were still Olivers there in the late 17th century (also 'the Strynds'; it is written 'le stryndis' in 1494/5, 'Stryndis' and 'Stryndes' in 1502, 'Stryndis' and 'Strydis' in 1538, 'Stridis' in 1539 and 'Strydis' in 1541; the origin is probably the Old Scots word for rivulets; see also Strange).

St. Stephen's Chaipel (sin'-stee-vinz-chā-pul) n. Roman Catholic Chapel built in 1962 on Burnfoot Road (at the corner with Fairhurst Drive) to serve the Burnfoot area. The building has a novel triangular design with a high slender spire. In 1986 it was closed as a chapel, declared surplus to requirements and in 1988 sold by the Archdiocese to the Abundant Life Church.

the Subscription Academy (thu-sub-skip-shin-aw-ka-du-mee) n. another name for Hawick Academy. There was a school run out of the Subscription Rooms from about 1830, sometimes referred to as the Subscription School. It was renamed 'the Subscription Academy' in 1857 when J.A.H. Murray was invited to be headmaster (at age 17!). Not long after the school moved along Buccleuch Street to the former Quaker meeting house, and was then called 'Hawick Academy'. It ran until 1865, after Murray had left for London. The 'Subscription School' meanwhile carried on with James C. Mudie as headmaster. Sometimes called 'Hawick High School', this ran until about 1874, when Mudie left town. Meanwhile Mudie's assistant, James Brand, had left to start his own school in Union Street, which eventually became the senior part of the High School (the confusion and inter-connection between the several Buccleuch Street schools makes some accounts very muddled!).

the Subscription Rooms (thu-sub-skip-shin-roomz) n. building erected on Buccleuch Street in 1821 from public subscriptions, and used as an institute for the arts, as a library and as a public meeting place. The location is shown on Wood's 1824 map. The foundation stone was laid with full Masonic honours, with a speech by Robert 'Lurgie' Wilson and a special verse by James Ruickbie. For the next few decades it was a popular venue for lectures, 'magic lantern' shows, concerts and related social gatherings. It was also used as the location for a private Academy, taught by Mr. Fleming 1837–40. Later it was rented to the Commercial Inn, although the main hall continued to be used for concerts etc. A particular event was a set of plays performed over 9 days by a company of actors (led by Burns Bryson, Keeley Halswelle and Gus Blake) from Edinburgh in October 1856, immortalised in the book 'Noctes Hawickianæ'. About 1864 it was sold to Mr. Mudie, who used it to run his private school, called 'Hawick High School', which was later taught by Mr. Brand, who moved to Union Street. It was also used for a while as the premises for the 'West-end Academy', taught by Mr. Brodie. In the 1890s it was purchased by James Bonsor's hosiery mill who used it until the 1920s. It was then purchased by the Catholic church and converted (largely through voluntary work) to become the Halls for S.S. Mary & David's Chapel next door. Until only a few years ago it had a frontage ornamented with a portico supported by 4 Grecian pillars. It was renovated in the early years of the 21st century and saw temporary use again as a school in 2006, housing pupils following the fire in Denholm – 'This house a public building is design'd To gratify the curious mind; Subservient to the parson and the player, By turns a theatre, and a house of prayer' [JR].

Summerfield (su-mur-feeld) n. Victorian villa between Ladylaw and Mayfield, now split into Summerfield East and Summerfield West. It is reached up Rosalee Brae, being the big house on the right. It was probably home to manufacturer James Veitch in the early 20th century.

Summers (su-murz) n. Adam (d.1808) clogger in Hawick. He married Isabel (or Helen) Currie in 1789, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Cavers parishes, his wife being from Cavers. Their children included: John (b.1790);

Thomas (b.1792); and Isabel (b.1794). The witnesses in 1794 were the ‘Associate Congregation’.

His name is also given as ‘Summer’ and ‘Sumors’. John (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the writer in Edinburgh, whose daughter Eliza married James Drummond of Comrie, W.S., in 1792.

summond (su-mind) v., arch. to summon, particularly in the legal sense – ‘The beddal was ordered to summond to ye next meeting of ye Session James Crow in Branhholm for breach of Sabbath’ [PR1712], ‘The Beddall was ordered to summond Robert Eliot eldest lawful son to Francis Eliot ...’ [PR1717].

Sunderland (sun-dur-lind) n. Mark (18th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. He married Margaret Flemington and their children included: Margaret (b.1787); Joanna (b.1787); Ann (b.1793); and Alexander (b.1798). His son William died in Hawick in 1798. Perhaps the same Mark secondly married Janet Crow in Hawick in 1800.

Sunderland Hall (sun-dur-lind-hawl) n. mansion on the south side of the Tweed, near where it meets the Ettrick. The Shaws, who were school-master and minister of Selkirk held the annual rent in the early 17th century. It was the home of the Kerrs, later the Plummers, and then the Scott-Plummers, who were descended from the Scotts of Woll.

sundert (sun-dur') pp., adj. sundered – ‘We’ve wandert mony a mile And fer oor steps hae sundert ...’ [DH] (also sindert).

Sundhope (sun-dup) n. former farmstead on the Sundhope Burn, above Whitropefoot. It was valued at 8 merks according to a rental roll of c.1376 and still 8 merks on the 1541 roll, when ‘Leoni Elwald’ and his brothers were tenants. The farm was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least 1613. Robert ‘Houiton’ and Adam ‘Houitone’ are listed there in 1694, as well as George Nichol. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 1654 acres, bounded by Stichelhill, Millburnholm and lands held by the Laird of Gorrenberry and others. At that time the farmhouse is shown in the same position as the modern one. It was tenanted by the Grieves of Branhholme Park for several generations. Robert Elliot was tenant in 1748 and Robert Hutton also lived there. It was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. John Anderson was farmer there in 1785. James Jackson was shepherd there in 1797, James Elliot and Ninian Scott in 1799, Ninian Elliot in 1801, Walter Anderson in 1835 and Andrew Rodger in 1851. It was held by James Raymond Johnstone of Alva in 1802, when valued at about £500 (including Hollandrig and ‘Sandbed of Sundhope’. There are waterfalls on the burn there. 5 flints found nearby are in Hawick Museum. North of the farmstead, towards Sundhope Rig, there is a linear earthwork, about 130 m long – ‘Whut’rope and Sundhope They ken the soond weel; It’s nae news to thaim That he troks wi the deil’ [DH] (it first appears as ‘Sondayahop’ in c.1376, is ‘Sondhope’ in 1510, ‘Sandhop’ in 1516, ‘Soundhop’ in 1541 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1613 and 1799; the stream is marked ‘Soundhoupp’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and the farm is ‘Sandhope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Sundhope (sun-dup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, where the burn of the same name meets the Yarrow from the south, just to the west of Yarrow Feus. It was a Crown property from about 1456, with the lease to the Laird of Ale-moor being given up in 1488, when it was let to ‘Robert domino Lile’ in 1488. Then it was let half to William Murray and half to Roger Murray from at least 1490 until 1499. In 1493 Alexander, brother of Robert Scott of Whames, was accused of stealing livestock from there, and John Waugh also stole a large number of sheep from the Murrays. In 1494/5 Robert Turnbull in Castlehill (near Branxholme) was charged with stealing 15 score sheep from the Murrays there. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1512 it was feued to Gavin Murray. In 1541 William Scott was tenant there, paying £14, while William and James Murray also appear to have occupied it, paying £24. William Scott was tenant there in the first half of the 18th century. There were Andersons and Laidlaws there in the 19th century. It was said to be the site of the slaying of Scott of Harden’s younger son, Scott of Gilmanscleuch – ‘But, low, low down, on Sundhop broom, My brother Harden spyd; And, with a stern and furious look, He up to him did ride’ [ES]; ‘Ere all is done, our blood may soak Our Scottish houms, and leave a stain – A stain like that on Sundup’s cloak, Which never will wash out again’ [ES] (it is ‘Sundhop’ in 1456 and 1468, ‘Sondhoip’ in 1490, ‘Sundhop’ in 1496, ‘Sondhop’ and ‘Sondhoip’ in 1499 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1541).

Sundhope Burn (sun-dup-burn) n. stream in Castleton Parish. It rises on Sundhope Rig and Greatmoor and flows roughly southwards to join the Whitrope Burn near Whitropefoot.

Sundhope Faas (sun-dup-fawz) n. waterfall on the Sundhope Burn, near where it meets the Whitrope Burn on the Newcastleton road, about 12 miles south of Hawick. It has been a favourite picnic spot. It is also known as the Laird’s Linn.

Sundi (sun-di) n. Sunday. Formerly there were strict rules about what behaviour was deemed suitable for the Sabbath. Work of any sort was banned, and there are fines frequently recorded in the parish records for transactions such as pulling vegetables. Certainly non-attendance at church was considered disreputable until fairly recent times, and regular non-attendance was a serious matter in the 18th century. Up until the mid-19th century even walking on Sundays was considered an offence (also spelled ‘Sundih’ etc.).

sundials (sun-dī-ulz) n., pl. devices that use the shadow of a gnomon, cast by the Sun, to tell the time of day. These were common ornamentation on buildings or in gardens around the 17th and 18th centuries. The Museum has 3 local specimens, which have been saved from demolitions, labelled: ‘17 WK 48’; ‘1823’, from Dickson Street; and ‘BC BT 1756’. There was also one from Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw, dated 1693. In addition there are (or were) sundials at Harden, Lilliesleaf Kirk, Synton Parkhead, Weens, Wells and Yarrow Kirk.

Sundi-mense (sun-di-mens) n., arch. ‘ti gie yin’s claes Sundi-mense’ is to attend church in one’s new clothes on the first Sunday after one gets them (also kirk-mense).

Sundi Schuil (sun-di-skil) n. Sunday School, i.e. religious instruction for school children taking place on Sundays. Hawick already had 2 such institutions in 1786 and was among the first to establish them in Scotland. The first was probably introduced by Rev. Charters of Wilton, followed shortly afterwards by Rev. Sharp of Hawick (however, it is sometimes also stated that William Crawford of Wilton introduced the first Sunday School in the 1730s). Around 1817 the town became well-known in the Borders for very popular Sunday Schools, which had been set up by Rev. James Henderson of the East-End Burgher congregation. David Russell of the Relief Kirk also set one up at about the same time. These early examples often lasted for many hours, but were about the only chance to learn reading, which many local children benefited from. Henderson’s Sunday School is sometimes said to have been the first in Scotland, and although this is clearly not correct, it may have been an early example of an ambitious educational programme on Sundays (rather than a shorter event aimed at children). Sunday Schools have continued in most of the town's churches down to the present time – 'Sunday Schule picnics then Horse and cairt ti Harden Glen ...' [IWL].

sung (sung) adj., pp., arch. singed – '...Brunt broun in the sun and near sung' [WL].

Sunlaws (sun-lawz) n. settlement on the Teviot south of Kelso, containing the Jacobean-style mansion called Sunlaws House Hotel (or Roxburgh Hotel), with adjacent golf course, an abandoned Mill and nearby caves. As part of the English invasion of 1544 there was 'a town called Synlawes, whereat divers bastel houses were destroyed, eight Scots taken, and 60 oxen brought away', with at least 6 men killed in attempting to pursue the raiders. The estate of Sunlaws was home of the Kerrs of Chatto and Sunlaws. The house burned down in 1720 (the origin is probably 'the look-out hill'; it is 'Sunlaes' on Blaeu's c.1654 map).

sunlicht (sun-licht) n., arch. sunlight – 'Sunlicht at last, and the dancin' day, and a quick eyed lass to see' [JYH], 'Oh, laddie! when sunlicht Is ower your young way, Fu' bricht wi' sweet promise O' manhood's fair day' [MNR], '...Wi' rowth o' callants in her train And sunlicht in her hair' [WL].

Sunnybank (su-nee-bawngk) n. cottage in Wilton Parish, just north of Tandlaw. Walter Blake, thatcher, lived there in 1841, as well as farm worker Richard Turnbull and his family. Walter Scott was there in at least 1835–41, Henry Paterson in 1851 and William Scott in 1861.

Sunnyfield (su-nee-feeld) n. bungalow on Sunnyhill Road, built in 1955.

Sunnyhill (su-nee-hil) n. area between Wilton and the Dean, consisting of Sunnyhill Road and surrounding region, containing mainly larger houses. The name was earlier also applied to the Rosalee Brae area. It was named apparently for its aspect with respect to the Sun. The area was feued in the latter part of the 19th century under the supervision of John Guthrie. Langlands was the first house about 1878, followed quickly by Deanfield, Kilmeny and Westwood – 'Here the tree-clad slopes rise upward From the water's sparkling rill, Where clematis and laburnum Deck the homes on Sunnyhill' [WL], '...in the days afore the nouveau riche manufacturers became upwardly mobile in mair ways than yin and built their mansions on Sunnyhill' [IWL].

The witnesses in 1787 were shoemaker Robert Elliot and workman Thomas Thomson and in 1789 were shoemaker Robert Oliver and farmer William Scott. Probably the same Mark married Janet Crow in Hawick in 1800. Norman J. (b.c.1890) son of Galashiels monumental mason George P. He ran the Hawick office of the family firm, with premises on Bridge Street. He was District Commissioner of the Boy Scouts. In his honour the local Scouts pipe band adopted the Sutherland tartan in 1953. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Pratt. Their son David was born in Wilton in 1881. Rory (1992–) born in Melrose, he was educated at Trinity and the High School. He represented the Borders and Scotland in the back row of youth teams, but switched to playing loose-head prop with Hawick R.F.C. Afterwards he played for Biggar and Gala and then professionally for Edinburgh from 2014. He was first capped for Scotland in 2016 and was named to the British Lions squad in 2021. Walter Kerr (1838/9–1902) born in Wilton, son of Alexander, he worked in the hosiery trade. In 1861 he was a 'Finisher of Hosiery' at 12 Back Row. He was also listed as a warehouseman and frame knitter. He married Ann, daughter of Thomas Scott and Adeline Bellom, and she died in 1902. Their children included: Alexander (b.1859); Adelina (or 'Adeline', 1861–1919); Thomas Scott (b.1863); Elizabeth Fiddes (b.1865), who married John Scott in 1888; Mary (b.1865); James (b.1871); Adam (b.1873); Ann Scott (b.1875); and Helen Leithead (b.1878). Walter Riddell 'Wattie' or 'Suddie' (1890–1918) youngest son of Alexander and Isabella of the Imperial Hotel. He was educated at Teviot Grove Academy. He was a member of the Teviotdale Harriers, being Border Champion over 100 and 220 yards, and was part of the team that won the 1 mile relay at the Common Riding Games of 1910. He also won the Scottish Amateur Athletic Association 220 yards title and represented Scotland. He played wing for Hawick R.F.C. from the age of 17, his first game being against Gala. He excelled at Sevens, being part of the 1912 team that won all 5 Border tournaments. He went on to become Captain of Hawick. He played for Scotland from the age of 18, his first cap being Willie Kyle's last, and went on to be capped 13 times. On the outbreak of WWI he joined the Lothian and Border Horse, transferring to the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and later to the Seaforth Highlanders, where he became 2nd Lieutenant. He was killed by a stray shell in October 1918, in the last days of the War. Afterwards his position on the Scotland team was taken by Eric Liddle – '...Or swerve like a Sutherland down the line to a rattling Mansfield score' [JYH] (also formerly 'Southerland').

swaible (swā-bul) v., arch. to dabble in water, splash about, wash out by swabbing – 'A was keindih dawallt oot, but A've gaen ti the spriggit and swaibblt masul weel up wui waeter' [ECS], 'Note that ti swaibbl conveys the idea of a much more vigorous action than ti daibbl' [ECS], n., arch. a splash about, splashing – '...A gaed an got masel cleaned an spruisht wui a grand swaible o waeter' [ECS] (also spelled 'swaibble' and 'swaibbl').

swaip (swāp) n., arch. a slope, slant – '...at the boddom o the lang swaip that hed garrd mei pech' [ECS], 'The dyke rins wi' a swaip owre the face o' the Law' [GW], a sloping course, ascent – 'It's easier ti gang owre be the swaip o' the hill' [GW], the oblique cut of a garment – 'The swaip o' a wumman's skirt. The swaip o' a cut-away coat' [GW], v., arch. to take a sloping path, rise or fall obliquely, slant – 'The auld fail-dyke swaips up owre the braeface. Ee maun swaip across the Fell ti wun ti the tap easy. The road swaips doon ti the Teiot' [GW], to cut the shape of a garment obliquely, adj. oblique, cut-away – 'A swaip-away coat' [GW].

swaird (swārd) n., poet. sword – ‘...Stands the roofless kirk in the auld kirkyaird, Where the gowans earliest gem the swaird’ [JoHa], ‘Yet oft ha’e I seen him wi’ pouchfu’s o’ siller, And crouse as a lammie that skips o’er the swaird’ [TCh].

swairm (swā-rum) n., v., arch. swarm – ‘We gathered their stolen gear, And lifted their ain forby, And a’ Harden Glen for a year Was swairmin’ wi’ nowte and kye’ [TK].

swall (swawl) v., arch. to swell – ‘Mr. Campbell bid her say that ‘twa o’ the Lord’s trumpeters ca’ed.’ The good woman replied, ‘I just thocht sae; yer cheeks are swalled wi’ blawin’ [JaT], ‘Thouch the waters o’t rair, an’ ar trouble; thouch the mountans shog wi’ the swallin’ o’ thame’ [HSR], ‘But there’s yin time o the ‘eer when the river o life In Hawick swalls suddenly until a rip-tide ...’ [DH].

swalla see swalli

swalli (swa-li, -la, -le) n. the swallow, Hirundo rustica – ‘Yis, the sparra hæs fuund ane hous, an’ the swalla ane est for hirsle’ ... [HSR], the act of swallowing, v. to swallow – ‘Ye blin’ guides, whilk strain at ane gnat, an’ swallie ane camel’ [HSR] (also spelled ‘swalla’, ‘swallae’ and ‘swallih’; the final vowel sound varies; cf. swally).

swallit (swa-lee, -lit) pp. swallowed – ‘Letna thame say in thair hairts, Aha! Aha! sae wad we hae it; letna thame say, We hae swallet him up’ [HSR], ‘Than had thaye swalliet us up quik, whan thair wræth was kinlet agayne us’ [HSR].

swalli-tail (swa-li-tāl) n., poet. an arrow with a barbed head – ‘The swallow-tail frae teckles flew, Five hundred flain into the flight ...’ [CPM].

swally (swa-lee) v. to swallow – ‘A find that a bit hard ti swally’, ‘... the Lord sall swallie thame up in his wræth ...’ [HSR], ‘Mine enimies wad swallie me up daye bie daye ...’ [HSR], ‘... ‘Twas like tae swally mei’ [JSB], ‘If you couldna swally the tother half, Though ye’d hed the denner at yin ...’ [DH], ‘...dinni swally eet or ee’ll chowk’ [CoH], n. a swallow – ‘A could dae wi a wee swally o yer juice’ (the bird is always swalli).

Swamp Field (swawmp-feeld) n. name for the field on the Common just to the south of the race-course.

Swan (swawn) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Patish. He married Elspeth Henderson and their children included: Francis (b.1817); Margaret (b.1819); William (b.1822); Walter (b.1824); Thomas (b.1826); George (b.1828); Alexander (b.1830); and Archibald (b.1832). Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed as merchant among those contributing to the new Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. She was also on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She seems likely to have been a shopkeeper (or similar) on the High Street. She could be the daughter of George and Margaret Bridges born in Hawick in 1642 or the daughter of Mungo and Helen Bridges born in 1672. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Margaret Bridges. Their son John was born in 1643. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Rebecca Scott. Their children included: Jean (b.1735); John (b.1737); and Rebecca (b.1741), who was the 2nd wife of Bailie John Hardie. The witnesses in 1737 were merchant James Sander-son and writer Thomas Watson and in 1741 were Thomas Watson and merchant Charles Tudhope. He witnessed baptisms in 1757 for weaver John Thorburn, in 1764 for John Hardie and his daughter Rebecca and in 1768 for mason William Ekron and Betty Dobie. He could be the George Swan who witnessed a baptism for Francis Cairns in 1783. Isabel (b.c.1760) listed as a shopkeeper in Pigot’s 1837 directory. By 1841 she was a pauper, living around Eastgate. James (19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant at 29 (later 27) High Street. He emigrated with his family to Detroit, where his son Andrew was involved with the Detroit Gas Company and his son James was a successful lawyer. John (16th C.) listed in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). John (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. He may have been related to the earlier John. John (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott. Their children born in Hawick Parish included: Jane (b.1676); Mungo (b.1682); and Helen (b.1685). In 1676 he was listed being ‘in Cavers’ (suggesting he lived in the Teviothead area perhaps), with witnesses William and Mungo (who were surely close relatives). He may be the same as John ‘Elder’. John (17th C.) listed as ‘Elder’ in 1694 among those ‘uest the water’ in Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. The younger John was also listed, suggesting that they were father and son. The pair were also weavers ‘younger’ and ‘elder’ recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4.

He was 'older' in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Jolly. John 'Nuckle' (17th C.) Hawick weaver on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He must have been separate from the elder and younger weavers who were also listed. It is unclear what his nickname meant. John (17th/18th C.) quartermaster of the Hawick weavers. In 1697 there was a case before the Magistrates dealing with Robert Tinlin, a young weaver, who had insulted him publicly, and refused to pay a fine imposed by the incorporation of weavers. He was still quartermaster in 1716 (along with the same Robert Tinlin) when he and other complained about people who were not part of the incorporated trades taking their seats in St. Mary's Kirk. He may be the 'John Swan younger' listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax and the 'younger' weaver listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the John who (along with Mungo) witnessed a baptism for weaver William in 1700. He was probably the weaver who witnessed baptisms for gardener Robert Roger in 1701, workman Archibald Elliot and shoemaker William Halliwell in 1704, and shoemaker Adam Kersel in 1725. He may be the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism in 1704 for Walter Paisley at Weensland Mill. He is probably one of the 2 John Swans who in 1709 witnessed a baptism for John Scott 'att ye port'. He was one of the 'two John Swans' (possibly 'Black John' and 'White John' or father and son) who was a Hawick elder recorded as one of the men asked in 1711 to 'perlustrate' the town to look for people still drinking after 8 'clock at night. In 1718 he (or the other John) was among those charged by the Session with trying to resolve the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham. There was a John Swan whose son John was born in Hawick in 1693 and another in 1696. John 'Black John' (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, with a nickname to distinguish him from 'White John'. One of them was probably the quartermaster of the weavers. He married Elspeth Clerk and their children included: Mary (b.1700); George (b.1702); Mary (b.1703); Jean (b.1704); Anna (b.1706); and Elspeth (b.1707). In 1700 and 1704 he was entered in the baptismal register as 'distinctionis causa called black John'. The witnesses in 1700 were weaver John Lunn and James Scott 'Laird', in 1704 were James Scott 'Doctor' and John Scott 'Laird', in 1706 were Andrew Clerk and another John Swan, and in 1707 were weaver James Lunn and shoemaker

John Scott. He is probably the John who was witness for baptisms for John Lunn in 1705 and for Archibald Douglas (along with James Lunn) in 1707. John 'White John' (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1701 he is recorded being 'distinctionis causa called white John'. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for a different John in 1706. He married Janet Allan and their children included: Mungo (b.1701); and Mary (b.1703). This suggests that he may have been son of Mungo. The witnesses in 1701 were Mungo (perhaps his brother) and weaver Thomas Turnbull (possibly his brother-in-law). Other children of either this or the other John are: William (b.1692); John (b.1693); Jean (b.1695); John (again, b.1696); and Janet (b.1706). The witnesses in 1695 were Thomas Turnbull and James Cowan. Mungo (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Helen Briggs, who was probably daughter of William and Bessie Brown. In 1665 (although this date may be an error, e.g. for 1685) his son-in-law, Thomas Turnbull, was accused of throwing his wife (Helen) down some stairs when she attempted to visit her sick daughter. The families are probably inter-related through George and Margaret 'Bridges' who are recorded having children in the 1640s. His children included: Helen (b.1657); and Bessie (b.1672). He is probably the Mungo who witnessed a baptism for John (who could have been his brother) in 1676 and 1680 2 others (along with William, who was surely therefore also related) for William Bridges. It seems likely he was father of 'White John'. Mungo (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who married Jean Briggs in 1702. Their children included Jean (b.1702). Other probably children, with no mother's name given are Thomas (b.1705), William (b.1708) and Mungo (b.1710). The witnesses in 1708 were Michael Bridges and James Scott, Laird. His wife probably secondly married weaver Robert Wight in 1715, suggesting he was deceased by then. He is probably the Mungo who (along with John) witnessed baptisms for weaver William in 1700, (along with Thomas Turnbull) for weaver John Lunn in 1701, for James Beattie in 1704 and for Town Herd William Palmer in 1707. Richard (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1483 relating to lands in Hassendean, given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers. He was also a witness in 1484 to a sasine relating to lands in the town of Hawick. Samuel (19th C.) married Isabel

Rutherford in Southdean Parish in 1834. William (d.bef. 1694) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1683 for Steven Greenshields. In 1689 he witnessed baptisms for fellow weavers William Brown and James Lunn. His widow 'Joan Bennet' was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the William recorded as 'Wm Suan Elder' in the 1694 list (but likely drawn up 2 or 3 years earlier) among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could be the William, son of George and Margaret Bridges who was born in Hawick in 1635. He married Helen (or Jane) Bennet, and their children included: Thomas (b.1669); George (b.1672); Margaret (b.1673); Mungo (b.1677); Jane (b.1680); and Walter (b.1683). The witnesses in 1680 were Walter Purdom and William Scott. He could be the William who witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Bridges and Andrew Dodd in 1673, Thomas Lunn in 1675, John in Cavers in 1676 (with Mungo being the other witness, suggesting that all 3 were closely related), Patrick Bridges, William Bridges (along with Mungo again), Francis Scott plus Isobel Bridges in 1678 and Andrew Jardine in 1684. In 1680 he witnessed baptisms for William Bridges (again), Francis Scott, James Lunn, John Scott (of Cavers) and Margaret Scott and Andrew Jardine and Janet Bridges. He may also be the William who (along with Patrick Bridges) witnessed a baptism in 1689 for Adam Lamb. William (17th C.) recorded as 'William Suan, younger' in 1687 among a group of men fined for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town's flock, without paying the Town Herd. He could be the same as the weaver of the same name. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He must be different from the William whose widow is also recorded on the same list, but could be their son. He may be the William who married Margaret Paisley and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1692), Walter (b.1698), Agnes (b.1700), William (again, b.1703) and Mungo (b.1706); the witnesses in 1696 were Henry Orrock and John Hart and in 1700 were weavers John and Mungo Swan. He is probably the William who witnessed baptism for Andrew Turnbull in 1698, for weaver James Jolly (along with John, perhaps his brother) in 1700 and for Walter Paisley at Weensland Mill (also along with John). He is probably the weaver of that name who was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the weaver who witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Tinlin in 1712. He is recorded in the records of the Presbytery of Melrose in 1726 when Christian Bunzie confessed that she had 'seen him playing at the kails in her father's garden'. He was 'a single, unmarried man, landlord of the house wherein Henry Gibson's relict lives'. His name is written 'Swain' and he could be the William, son of William, born in Hawick in 1683 or the William born in Hawick to another William in 1703. Perhaps the same William married Jean Stewart and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1731, with witnesses John Elliot and John Scott. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. His wife was Janet Swan and their children included: Jean (b.1806); and Samuel (b.1808), baptised at Liddelbank (written 'Suan', 'Suane', 'Swane' and variants).

the Swan (thu-swawn) n. former hostelry on Main Street in Denholm. It is recorded in 1852, when Thomas Field was proprietor. A meeting of 100 Total Abstinence supporters took place there the same year 'in Mr. Field's large room'.

swang (swang) pp. swung – '...But when he swang the tawse I didna craw sae prood' [WL].

the Swan Inn (thu-swawn-in) n. former public house on the Howegate, when??.

swank (swangk) adj., arch. agile, lithe, smart, well set-up – 'Maybe a wife to some swank herd or pleughman, Or joost as like ne'er to be wed ava' [JoHa], 'The leesh, swank-leike fallih ('at A'd been followin eis lead)' [ECS].

swankie (swang-kee) n., arch. a smart, strapping young man 'If a young swankie wi' his joe, In some dark nook play'd bogle-bo ...' [CPM], – 'At e'en, in the gloaming, nae swankeys are roaming ...' [JEM], 'The only word I ever altered from the original instead of 'Swankies are jeering' 'Youths now are jeering'. My father said swankies was a modern word and not a good one' [JEM].

Swanscourt Hill (swanz-kōr'-hil) n. small hill to the north of the farm of Knowetownhead. It reaches a height of 139 m (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Swansdale (swanz-dāl) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Swanisdale' in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was valued at 12 shillings and tenanted by Jeffrey Crozier. The location is uncertain, but perhaps around Larriston.

Swanshiel (swan-sheel) n. farm just to the west of Hobkirk, situated on the north side of the Blackhall Burn. The farmhouse now called Nether Swanshiel. The lands were formerly split into Easter and Wester Swanshiels, which were recorded as once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. At the Reformation the lands were valued at £1 6s. 8d. The Abbey's tenants were Turnbolls, who later became owners of the lands. Robert Turnbull is recorded as tenant in 1567 and James Turnbull in 1580. In 1643 Adam Turnbull 'in Swansheil' owned land valued at £66 13s 4d, and another (or the same) Adam Turnbull 'of Swansheil' had lands valued at £32 10s. In 1678 the Easter and Wester parts were valued at £66 13s 4d and £33 6s 8d, respectively. The lands (or perhaps just superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. James Turnbull was portioner there in 1684. John Wilkie was a tailor there in 1720. Wester Swanshiel was owned (along with Hartshaugh earlier) by the same branch of the Turnbull family for about 300 years until 1778. John Donaldson was tenant in at least 1797–1801. Earthworks from some ancient settlement were still visible a century ago. There was also once a joiner's shop there (it was 'Swanscheill' in 1567, appears as 'Sironscheill' in 1581, was 'Swoonshield' in 1604, 'Swansheil' in 1643, 'Swansheil' in 1684 and 'Swanhill' on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; it is marked 'Suamesheells' on Blaeu's 1654 map, but has the modern spelling by Stobie's 1770 map; Walter Deans says that it was formerly 'Suin Shieles' and 'Soneshiells' and suggests it meant the land facing the Sun, however 'swain scheil', meaning 'herdsman's hut' is more likely).

Swanshiel Cleuch (swan-sheel-klooch) n. name for the steep lower section of the Blackhall Burn, to the south-west of Hobkirk Manse.

Swanson (swan-sin) n. Andrew (16th C.) ploughman at Riddell. In 1580 he witnessed an agreement between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. James (18th C.) said to be from Wilton Dean, he was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He was on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Musum' in 1784. He is recorded there in 1785, working for Michael Stevenson, and named again in 1788. In 1790 he was working as a 'drawer' for vintner Robert Armstrong and was recorded as a waiter for Robert Armstrong in 1797. He was apparently very familiar with the customers of the hotel, of all ranks. One of his favourite phrases was 'Stick by could whisky, but never drink toddy, when ye're gaun a journey'. It is said that he was at some point dismissed by Armstrong, but reappointed after the Duke of Buccleuch interceded on his behalf. He had several children including: James, who became a ship's surgeon; and a daughter, who married weaver Tom Lunn. His wife Jean died in 1795. He could be the James 'Swenstone', married to Jane Wilson, whose daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Hawick in 1781. James (1779/80–1803) son of James, who was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He was apprenticed to Dr. Walter Graham in Hawick. In 1797 he was experimenting with concoctions and left a bowl on the window-sill, which was drunk by his niece, who unfortunately died. He left Hawick in 1798 to be a surgeon on a slave ship, sailing on 3 voyages. In 1802 or 1803 he was given command of 'the Prudence', which sailed to the Upper Guinea coast, returning to Liverpool with half his crew, a number of slaves, and also Tom Jenkins, who he brought to Hawick after a few weeks. It is said that attempts by the young African to say his (Swanson's) name sounded to the sailors like 'Tom Jenkins', which was then what they called him. He died in the Tower Hotel a few days after returning to Hawick, perhaps either from a lingering disease or from delirium tremens. He died at the age of 23 (coincidentally the day before Sir Walter Scott and the Wordsworths stayed in the Tower Hotel). He left behind an illegitimate son, who is probably the James, born to James and Betty Cairns in Hawick in 1797 (she may have been the Betty born in Wilton to Thomas Cairns in 1779). Note that a version of his life is told as part of the novel 'Alexander Hope: A Hawick Story'; this fictionalised accounts bears only passing resemblance to reality, but perhaps the part about him being found wandering round and round in a field and then collapsing may be true. James (1797–1856) son of James and Betty Cairns. His father trained as a surgeon and became Captain of a slaving ship, returning to Hawick with Tom Jenkins, but promptly dying. He and Tom were raised by his father's sister and her husband Tom Lunn, who lived at Shuttlehaa in Teviothead. He must therefore have been the closest thing that Jenkins had to a brother. He worked as a shepherd for James Scott of Allanshaws and then moved to Salisbury Craig in Edinburgh. He is recorded as a shepherd at Queen's Park in 1841 and on St. Leonard's St., Edinburgh in 1851. In May 1820 he married Sophia Glendinning (c.1802–70), the marriage being recorded in both Cavers and Ettrick Parishes; it is tempting to imagine that Tom Jenkins attended this wedding on his last trip back to Scotland before he left Britain for good. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Elizabeth (b.c.1825); John (b.c.1827); Sophia (b.c.1829), who married Andrew Gunn in Edinburgh in 1851; Mary (b.c.1830), who probably had a child Sophia in 1862; Christina (b.1832), who probably died young; Walter (b.1833), who married Barbara Kay; Isabella (b.1835), who married James Reekie; and Adam (b.1837), who married Isabella Barrie. Their last 4 children were baptised in Cannongate Parish. He died in Carnegie Street Edinburgh. William (18th C.) from Southdean Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter (probably after being captured at Bothwell Bridge), and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys which killed about 200 men. Most of the survivors were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica and New Jersey. William (b.c.1780) recorded as miller of Doveshaugh Mill in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In the 1841 census he was miller at Bedrule Mill. William (19th C.) recorded as labourer at Dovemount in 1835 (also formerly written 'Swanston', 'Swanstone', 'Swanstoun', etc.).

Swanstead Hill (swan-steed-hil) n. hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, in the headwaters of the Teindside Burn, north-west of the steading of Slaidhills. It reaches a height of 333 m.

swarei (swaw-rī) n., arch. a soiree (cf. swaree).

swarf (swarf) v., arch. to faint, swoon – 'O' them that came doon first on hearing his cries, Some swarf'd clean away, wi' their fear and surprise' [JoHa], 'an' I wullna sen' them awa fastin', in kase they swarf bie the waye' [HSR], 'My saul langs, yis, een swarffs, for the cuurts o' the Lord ...' [HSR], 'But in her endeavour she trippit an' fell, An' swarf'd clean awa – as the neebors can tell' [BM1901] (see also swarfit).

Swarf Hill (swarf-hil) n. hill in Liddesdale, lying to the south-east of Dykecrofts farm, about 2 miles east of Newcastleton. It reaches a height of 281 m.

swarfit (swar-fee', -fi') pp., poet. fainted – '... becaus they swarfet, an' wer scatteret abreæd, as sheep haein' nae shepherd' [HSR], 'I had swarf-fet, gif I hadna beliefet til see the guidniss o' the Lord in the lan' o' the leivin'' [HSR] (see swarf).

Swarf Moss (swarf-mos) n. marshy area in Liddesdale to the north-east of Black Knowe, to the north-east of Swarf Hill.

swarth (swarth) n., arch. exchange – 'In swarth o', in exchange for, Roxb.' [JoJ].

swash (swash) v., arch. to beat, slash, swish – '... they unscrupulously swashed them down ...' [HSR].

swashy (swa-shee) adj., poet. splashy, soggy – 'An' younge an' auld are eftir hir, Throwe pule an' swashy myre' [WiSp].

swat (swa) pp., arch. sweated – 'We've swat aneath an Indian sun, been cauld on Kamscha's sea ...' [JoHa], 'The usual observation [about Rev. Campbell of Lilliesleaf] ... was 'Eh, how he roared! and eh, how he swat!' [RJR], 'The twa' dumfoundert, stood appall'd, An' trembling, swat – their blood ran cauld' [RDW], 'Just like a cat I fufft and swat, Then daured them to a man ...' [WaD], 'A'body swat frae morn till nicht, Yon 'Shirt-sleeve Day!' [DH] (also written 'swaat'; this is the past tense of sweit, with the past participle being swutten).

swatter (swa'-ur) v., arch. to splash around in water, paddle – '... Lang may you row, trow, guzzle, swatter' [JoHa], n., arch. a splashing around, flunder in water – 'Seceders at the breach made sic a swatter' [JR].

swiff (swif) v., arch. to make a sighing sound (of the wind) – ‘Swiff, A term used to denote the hollow melancholy sound made by the wind, Roxb. Berwicks.’ [JoJ] (cf. souch).

Swin (swin) n. former farm in Kirkton Parish, where Robert Smith is recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It may be the same as the place recorded earlier as Swinsteid.

Swine Acre (swīn-ā-kur) n. lands once attached to the estate of Mangerton. ‘Swybe Acre’ was listed as a 3-shilling land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale (the name presumably relates to pigs).

swing-bat (swing-baw) n., arch. a wooden tool for beating flax, swingle – ‘The person who, in the act of swingling flax, first breaks it with a swing-bat’ [JoJ] (cf. swinglind).

swinge (swinj) v., poet. to beat, belabour – ‘I’ll thee obey, – or sorrow swinge me, I gie my aith’ [JR].

Swingill (swin-gil) n. remote farmstead in Ewes Parish. It is located where the Swin Gill meets the Meikledale Burn. Henry Oliver and family were there in 1841.

swingle (swing-ul, -gul) v., arch. to beat lint or flax in order to separate the fibres from the woody parts (from Old English ‘swincgle’, to beat or whip).

swingler (swing-lur) n., arch. a person who beats flax, or an instrument used for beating flax.

swingle-trei (swing-ul-trī) n., arch. the swinging part of a flail, particularly used for threshing flax.

swinglin (swing-lin) n., arch. the process of beating lint or flax, using a swingling-stock and swingling-hand to separate the flax from the stalk and to extract the finest fibres. The carrying out of this operation was formerly an occasion for social gathering in the countryside – ‘The next operation was the famous swingling, which broke up and enlivened the dullness of the winter nights so merrily in the generations by-gone’ [JAHM].

swinglind (swing-lind) n., arch. a wooden tool for beating flax, swingle – ‘The swinglinds gaed like horsemen’s swords’ [JoHo] (also written ‘swinglint’; cf. swinglind and swing-bat).

swinglin-haund (swing-lin-hawnd) n., arch. a sharp-edged wooden lath for dressing flax, also known as a ‘swingling sword’ – ‘...and beaten with a sword-shaped stick called a swingling-hand’ [JAHM], ‘They laid sae fast upon the boards, The swinglinds gaed like horseman’s swords’ [JoHo] (also ‘swinglind’ and ‘swinglint’).

swinglin-stock (swing-lin-stok) n., arch. an upright board, over which flax was held while it was beaten – ‘The operation was performed by means of a swingling-stock a board fastened uprightly to another peice upon which the foot was placed to keep it steady’ [JAHM].

swinglin-sword (swing-glin-sōrd) n., arch. a sword-shaped, wooden lath used for dressing flax. There are some old local examples in the Museum.

the swings (thu-swingz) n. general term for a playground – ‘grannie, can oo gaun ti the swings’.

swing ticket (swing-ti-ki) n. a hanging tag attached to a garment (e.g. in the knitwear industry) when it is finished.

Swinnie (swi-nee) n. hamlet and farm off the A68 on the B6357 towards Hallrule. Thomas Oliver ‘de Swyne’, who witnessed a sasine in Rulewater in 1436 may have been from here. Robert Oliver was there in 1502. It was listed along with Clarilee in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time they were valued at £4 6s 8d. In 1557 Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst complained to the Queen that a force led by the Laird of Bedrule had terrorised the tenant, Adam Kirkton; this was presumably part of land dispute. It was owned by the Marquis of Douglas in 1643 and 1678, when valued at £400

(along with Old Jedburgh and 'Standalane'); the Earl of Lothian owned the teinds. There were 10 separate households listed there on the Hearth Tax Rolls of 1694. Archibald Douglas of Douglas was recorded as owner in 1788. John Goodfellow was there in 1797. Richard Davidson was farmer there in the mid-to-late 19th century. There was formerly a toll-bar there. In about 1833 a horn was found here, containing silver coins from the reign of James I of Scotland and around 1845 a set of 300–400 silver coins were ploughed up on the farm, these being from the reigns of Henry VIII and Queen Mary. There is a linear earthwork to the west of the farm, which runs about a mile and is probably an old agricultural boundary. A plantation about 1 km south of the farmhouse has an interesting jigsaw-piece shape (also written 'Swinney' and 'Swinny', it is 'Swynny' in 1502, 'Swyne' and 'Swynne' in 1538, 'Swynnee' in 1539, 'Swynne' in 1557 and 'Swynie' in 1694; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Sownie').

Swinnie Moor (swi-nee-moor) n. moorland area between Bonchester and Jedburgh, around the B6357, near the hamlet of Swinnie and Swinnie Plantation. An area called Swinnie Dyke Nook was once the supposed haunting ground of a 'bogle' (the origin of the name is possibly from Old Norse 'svithningr', meaning 'the place cleared by burning' and first occurs as 'Swynny' in 1528).

Swinside (swin-sīd) n. hamlet on the Oxnam Water south of Oxnam village, the area once being the seat of the Kers of Swinside. William of Abernethy held lands there in the early 14th century. In 1468 Patrick and William Douglas were tenants there. Brothers Adam, Robert, Henry, Simon and George Douglas were recorded there in 1502, as well as separately brothers James, Adam and 2 Johns. Andrew Rutherford had sasine for these lands in 1506. In 1579/80 and 1586/7 George Douglas was there. There were Hislops there in 1590 and Murrays and Douglasses in 1623. The lands were held by Lord Jedburgh in the early 17th century. Simon Elliot of Swinside owned the lands in 1678, when they were valued at £1675. The Hearth Tax records list 13 householders on the estate in 1694. Alexander Lindsay paid tax on 31 windows there in 1748, while William Elliot paid tax for 10 windows. John Smith was there in 1797. The farms there were run by Douglasses in the mid-19th century (also written 'Sweinsyde', 'Swineside', 'Swinesyde', 'Swinsyde' and 'Swynside'; the origin is probably Old English 'swin set', meaning 'place where pigs are kept'; the name may be first recorded as 'Swyneshede' in

Swinsteid (swin-steed) n. Swinstead, former lands in Kirkton Parish, once held by the Elliots. This could be the 'Swintries' held by the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh and managed for him (along with Skelfhill, Peelbrae and Priestthaugh) by his step-father Gavin Elliott of Stobs in about the 1560s. James Murray and Hector Jardine were there in 1581. 'Gawin Elliot of Swinsteidis' is listed in 1583/4 among Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. It is probably the 'Swenesteidis' where the fugitive Martin Burn was tenant in 1606. In 1610 it was listed as part of the Lordship of Winnington, possessed by 3 sisters called Hamilton, heirs of their great-grandfather Patrick Hepburn. In 1622 Gilbert of Stobs purchased the 15 merk land of Over and Nether 'Swynsteid' from Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with the rest of the lands of Winnington; it was described as 'now commonly called the lands of Hilend Barnes and Newtown'. It then formed part of the estate of the Elliots of Stobs in the 17th century. It may be the same as the farm of 'Swin' in Kirkton Parish where Robert Smith is recorded as farmer in 1797 (it is probably 'Swinsteis' in 1574, 'Swinteis' in 1576, 'Swynsteids' in 1581, 'Swynsteid' in 1610, 'Over and Nether Swynsteid' in 1657, 'Swynsteide Ovir et Nethir' in 1670 and 'Over and Nether Swynstead' in 1681).

Swinton (swin'-in, swin-tin) n. village in Berwickshire on the Leet Water, set out around the green with its 18th century cross. It is the original home of the Swinton family, who claim the oldest charters of any family in Scotland. Swinton House was built around 1800 to replace an earlier house destroyed by fire and also has a tower-shaped dovecote, still occupied by pigeons. The surrounding Parish absorbed the parish of Simprin in 1761, where Thomas Boston was minister. The Wheatsheaf Hotel has won awards for its restaurant.

Swinton (swin'-in, swin-tin) n. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1822 he married Margaret Douglas, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Isabella (b.1823); Thomas (b.1825); Anne (b.1829); John (b.1832); Charles (b.1835); James (b.1839); and William (b.1839). John (1832–c.1913) son of Charles and Margaret Douglas. He was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee. He also helped secure a Cornet in 1856, when the man elected by the Council refused to accept. He celebrated the Common Riding along with other exiles in 1858 in Galt, Canada. He also acted as starter for the Common Riding Races. He remained on the Ceremonial Committee from 1887–95. In 1861 he married Elizabeth ('Betsy') Scott. Their children included Charles, Margaret, Ann and Elizabeth. Marion (18th C.) housemaid at Woll in 1791, when she was working for Charles Scott.

swire (swI-ur, swīr) n. a hollow between hills or flat area near the top of a hill, frequently having a road through it, a hill pass – 'Ti the sooth, ayownt the sweire, stuide Black Law ...' [ECS] (existing in place names, such as 'Priesthaugh Swire', 'Redswire', 'Swire Knowe', the use of this word is mainly restricted to the Borders).

the Swire (thu-swI-ur) n. Swire Knowe, a hill between Cauldcleuch and Greatmoor, reaching a height of 459 m. Just to the west is Windy Swire and south-east is Swire Rig – 'As I manage my steed on the slope of the Swire, I would sing thee a song of my heart's desire' [WHO].

Swirefit (swI-ur-fi) n. Swirefoot, former name for lands on Hyndlee farm, at the foot of the ridge between the Jed Water and the Catlee Burn. The Hare Cairn once existed there and a shepherd's cottage was built there later. A story is told about an old shepherd seeing fairies near here (also written 'Swyrefoot').

the Swires (thu-swI-urz) n. former name for the Borders, or perhaps some broad region within it. The phrase is used in the Register of the Privy Council in 1574 to refer to an area that certain local Croziers and others were to remove themselves from – '... thay sould be permittit to remove and transport thame selffis, thair wyffis, cornis and guidis outwith the Swyris, ... on conditioun that thai never returnit agane to dwell within the saidis Swyris thairefter, except befor thair returning and duelling thay fand responsall and sufficient suirteis, inlandis men ...'.

Swire Sike (swI-ur-sik) n. stream in the headwaters of Singdean Burn. It rises on Fanna Swire and runs southwards.

swirly (swir-lee) adj., poet. curly, tangled, abstruse, inconstant – 'Then, swirly fortune, frown an' fight ...' [JR] (also written 'swirlie').

swoof (swoof) v., poet. to swoosh, make a swishing sound – '... when they heard sitch a swoofing an' skraiking i' the firmament' [JTe].

Sword (sōrd) n. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick's first schoolmaster on record, according to deeds of about 1592 and also in 1616. Perhaps the same Andrew was also Hawick's second recorded Town Clerk, from about 1620 until some time in the 1630s. He was also recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1627 (for the Hawick Parish valuation). James (1786/7–bef. 1861) born in Stichill Parish, he was a master carpenter at Brieryshaw in the Ewes valley. He was listed there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Helen and they had children Jessie, James and Helen. His wife was a widow and 'Fund Holder' in 1861. John (17th C.) witness to the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627. It seems likely he was closely related to Andrew, who was notary for the document. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hazelhaugh in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (b.c.1779) shepherd from Selkirkshire. He he was living at Ettrick House in 1841 and 1851. In 1801 at Gamescleuch he married Janet, daughter of Walter Lunn and Betty Turnbull, who lived at Colterscleuch. His children were born at Eilrig, Nether Dagleish and Ettrick House. In 1861 his widow was living with their daughter Margaret Anderson at Easter Ale-moor, where she died a year later. Their children included: Elizabeth (Betty, 1802–82), who married Adam Beattie, and died in Annan, Ontario; John (1807–79), who married Jean Colthard and died at Easter Ale-moor; Margaret (b.1804), who married James Anderson, farmer at Easter Ale-moor; Walter (b.1810), who married Bella Hislop; James (b.1812), who married Helen Rieve; Janet (1813–19); William (b.1814), who married Isabella Hardie; and Robert (1821–84), who married Margaret Nichol and died in Annan, Ontario. Thomas (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1743 as ‘Officer’, meaning that he was either Burgh Officer or Kirk Officer (probably the former). He was paid one shilling for guiding a troop of dragoons from Hawick to Langholm in 1740. He is also recorded in the Kirk Session records being paid ‘for summonding the Parish’ about the same time. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for workman William Noble. Probably the same Thomas is recorded in 1756 when the Council paid 1 shilling for his ‘sentence money’. He is probably the Thomas, married to Margaret Brown, whose children included John (b.1737) and Thomas (b.1739). Thomas (b.1813/4) born in Southdean Parish, he was shepherd at Tythe-house in 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included John and David B.D. (also spelled ‘Sowrd’ and ‘Sworde’).

Sym (sim) n. Rev. Arthur Pollok (1862–1946) born in Greenbank, near Edinburgh, son of William and Mary Thomson Pitcairn. He received his M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1881 and his B.D. in 1884. He was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery that same year and became assistant minister at St. George’s Parish in Edinburgh. He was ordained at Lilliesleaf in 1888. In the period 1895–99 he was examiner for degree at Edinburgh University. He was Secretary of the Ministers’ Pension Fund Committee in 1907 and Clerk of the Presbytery in 1916. In 1900 he married Caroline Georgina, daughter of William Simson of the Bank of Scotland, and she died in 1938. He was awarded a doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1924. He demitted his charge at Lilliesleaf in 1928. He was also Convenor of the Committee on Admissions of Ministers of other Churches 1921–46 and Convenor of Committee on Proposed Scheme for Superannuation of Ministers 1933–37. He wrote the book ‘The Parish of Lilliesleaf’ in 1913. His religious writings included ‘Sermon on Temperance’ (1890), ‘St. Paul’s Last Letter’ (1900), ‘A Border Synod’ (published in Hawick, 1902), 'Suggestions for a Pension Scheme' (Hawick, 1906), 'Studies in the Period of Elijah and Elisha' (1915), 'The Twenty-Third Psalm: an Anthology of Metrical Versions' (1923), 'Marriage in Scotland' (1933, 1936, 1940, 1942, 1949). He also contributed to Hastings' 'Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels', was editor of 'The Church of Scotland Year Book' 1914–20 and edited Mair's 'Digest of Church Laws' (1923).

synin-gless (sī-nin-gles) n., arch. a mirror, looking-glass.

Synton (sin-tin, sin'-in) n. area just before Ashkirk, including several farms, formerly a large estate and separate barony, forming a disjoint part of Selkirkshire. The land was owned by the 'de Sinton' family for at east 4 generations. In the reign of William the Lion, Andrew de Sinton was appointed Sheriff of Selkirk, and gave up some lands in Roxburghshire, hence explaining why the estate became part of Selkirkshire. In the early 13th century the lands were described as marching with those of Lilliesleaf. In 1296 Marie de Sinton (probably widow of Alexander) signed the Ragman Rolls. In 1305 the lands were inherited by the 'de Keith' family through marriage to Isabella de Sinton. By the late 1400s the Barony was held by the Erskines, with some lands possessed by the Scotts in the 15th century, and with the Scotts being more or less permanent tenants from at least 1509. In 1494 the lands were valued at 40 merks, but in times of peace were worth £20; they were held for payment of a pair of gilt spurs at Whitsunday, if asked. The Barony may at one point have included the lands of Whit-slade and Dalglish, while part, owned by the Veitches, was annexed to the Barony of Dawyck. In 1502 the estate was attacked by David Scott 'in Stirkschawis' (i.e. Stirches) and some Armstrongs, as well as Adam Turnbull of Hornshole, when many sheep and cattle were stolen. In 1510 the Baron, Lord Robert Erskine, and his son Sir John Erskine, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehist. Details are complicated, but basically for 400 'merks' the Kerrs were sold a 20 merk land in Synton Mains (adjacent to the 5 merk land of

Walter Scott), and another piece of land of equivalent value within Synton, together with the option to take over the Scott lands after a few years. In 1537 Gilbert Ker had sasine for a 20 merk land in 'South Synton'. The lands were also raided in 1562, according to a decree made for Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. The Laird of 'Synton' was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. The Barony was granted to Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1621. George Scott, said to be 14th Laird of Synton sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden in about 1627. The Lairdship was revived by Sir William's younger brother Francis. At some early time the lands were split into South and North Synton (on opposite sides of the Ale Water), as well as Synton Mill, Synton Parkhead and Syntonshiel farms. The main estate was South Synton, with North Synton owned by the Veitches from at least 1407 until 1641, when it was sold to Francis Scott of South Synton. The estate passed from Sir John Edmondston of that Ilk to John, Earl of Mar in 1593, and was bought outright by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1619. The Barony and lands were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661, 1663, including 'the toure, fortalice, manor-place, housis, bigingis, yairdis, mylnes, mylnelandis, multoris, and sequellis thair of'. The estate was valued at £946 in about 1663. George Turnbull was living there in 1698, and James Veitch was a servant there at the same time. Thomas Bourhill was gardener there in 1717. In 1785 and 1803 the lands of Synton and Synton Mill were valued at £1600. George Helm was a servant there in 1797 and Andrew Shortreed in 1799. Residents in 1801 included valet Hugh Moffat, footman Peter McNaughton, coachman Andrew Ormiston and labourer Thomas Laidlaw. The arms of the original Scotts of Synton has 2 stars and a crescent and their motto 'Reparabit Cornua Phœbe'. The Harden-derived Scotts of Synton (and later the Corse Scotts) were important local lairds for many generations. Their arms are a 'bend azure' with a star and 2 crescents and their motto 'Crescendo prosim'. Since the estate was the site for the hereditary sheriffdom of Selkirk, there must have once been at least a fortified house there, but its precise location is unknown. It seems likely to have been near to where the 18th century house was built, this having stones built into it dating from 1570. This house was demolished in the latter half of the 20th century (also spelled 'Sinton', 'Sintone', 'Sintonne', 'Sintoun', 'Sintoune', 'Sintun', 'Suyntone', 'Suyntoun', 'Syntone', 'Syntoun', 'Syntoune', etc.; it is mentioned from at least the early 13th century; Blaeu's 1654 map shows 'South Synntoun' and 'North Sintoun', while Adair's c. 1688 map shows 'Syntoun'; an early connection with 'Swinton' is not impossible).

Syntoncorses (sin'-in-kōr-seez) n. farmstead between Synton and Synton Mains. About 140 m to the east are the remains of a 'burnt mound', at least 3 m in diameter. Robert Scott was shepherd there in 1851.

Synton Cottage (sin'-in-ko'-eej) n. cottage that is to the west of Synton farm. About 160 m to the north are the remains of a farmstead, with a building, 2 enclosures and traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation. About 190 m to the north-east are the remains of a plantation bank.

Synton Hoose (sin'-in-hoos) n. former house on the estate at Synton. It was rebuilt in about 1775 by Alexander Scott of Synton, probably on the site of the earlier house. It was located where modern maps mark 'Synton', although it was abandoned after WWII, demolished in around 1970 and there is now little sign of where it was. The stables are inscribed with the date 1777, and it seems likely the main house was rebuilt at this time. Reset within the walls were 2 stones from the older house, which together read 'GEORGE SCOT IN SYNTOVN AND MARGRET EDMESTOVN HIS SP(OVS IN THE) ZER OF GOD 1570 THE HEAR [heir] T(O WALTER SCOT)...'. The inscribed stones disappeared along with the house, although some tiles and bricks were discovered on the site in 2013 and were incorporated into new buildings there.

Synton Loch (sin'-in-loch) n. small lake to the left of the A7 before coming to the main Synton area. It covers about 6 acres and is stocked for fishing. It is what is left of the much larger area of Synton Moss, which was largely drained in the 18th and 19th centuries. To the southwest some bones of an aurochs was discovered there in 1979. On a ridge about 300 m to the south lie the remains of a settlement, trapezoidal in shape, about 75 m by 65 m, with entrance near the east corner. It contains 2 sets of banks and inside are what might be 4 hut platforms. An Iron Age sword, as well as shards of pottery, found there are in the Royal Museum of Scotland. These suggest earlier occupation of the site.

Synton Mains (sin'-in-mānz) n. farm just off the A7 opposite Ashkirk, with holiday cottages and a private loch. It has also been known as ‘Synton North Mains’. In 1510 the Barons of Synton, the Erskines, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst over a 20 ‘merk’ land within this farm, adjacent to the lands held by Walter Scott, and another 20 merk land where they please. In 1609 Walter Veitch was served as heir to his grandfather in the lands of North Synton, including ‘lie Maynes’ there. John Scott was servant there in 1709. Charles Scott was tenant in 1786. John Paterson junior was living at ‘Sinton Northmains’ in 1797, Thomas Paterson and James Scott were in the same place in 1799 and Walter Inglis was there in 1801. There are quarries nearby, used in the 18th and 19th centuries for dry-stane dykes. More recently there has been a driving range there (presumably once the home farm for Synton; it is ‘the Manys of Syntoun’ in 1510 and ‘Sintownmill’ in 1755; is marked ‘Mains’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Mill (sin’-in-mil) n. farm and former corn mill on the south side of the Ale Water north of Synton. Isobel Scott was there in 1635, according to a court case at Ashkirk Session, with Thomas Nichol and Andrew Nichol also mentioned as tenants. Tax was paid for 6 hearths there in 1694. Andrew Fletcher was miller there in at least 1689–98. Robert Foster was miller there in 1703 and William Henderson in 1715. William Tait was cottar there in 1717 and Thomas Scott was there in 1719. John Redford was there in at least 1755–65. John Rutherford was tenant there in 1797, when there were 4 work horses on the farm. Adam Neil was miller there in 1851 (also written ‘Syntonmill’, it is ‘Sintoune Milne’ in 1689 and ‘sintoune milne’ in 1694; it is marked as ‘Sinttoun Mill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Sintown Mill’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Moss (sin’-in-mos) n. land near Synton farm on the high ground just before Ashkirk. It was formerly a fairly extensive lake, but drained in the late 18th and early 19th centuries to obtain marl and peat. The remaining part is now called Synton Loch. Bones of several large extinct mammals were found there in the 19th century, including the skull of an aurochs ‘bos primigenius’, donated by Henry Ewen in 1857. The skull and several other bones from a prehistoric aurochs were discovered there in 1979, sent to Hawick Museum and later moved to Durham University.

Synton Mossend (sin’-in-mos-end) n. farmstead at the northern end of the Synton Moss area, to the left of the A7 before Ashkirk. It may have been alternatively known as Syntonshiel or Ashkirkshiel. The name is also applied to Synton

Loch. There are remains of a settlement in the woods to the south. A stone found on the farm had cup and ring markings and was moved to Whinfield Sawmills Yard in Selkirk before 1967. A horde of Roman coins was discovered there in 2011, consisting of 228 coins produced under 11 separate emperors, now displayed in the Trimonium Museum. A cutting by the A7 near gives a good opportunity to view folding of the Silurian strata – ‘Past Ashkirk the exile feels that hame is nearly in sight Synton Mossend is left behind and it’s a climb tae the heights’ [GM] (see also Ashkirkshiel).

Synton North Mains see Synton Mains
Synton Parkheid (sin’-in-pawrk-heed) n.

Synton Parkhead, farm on the road to Synton, off to the right of the A7. It is known locally as simply ‘Parkheid’. William Inglis was there in 1581. Thomas Lockie was a wright there in 1715. James Sinton was a servant there in 1801. The lodge house to the north was probably from the late 18th or early 19th century, but has been demolished. The farm there is now known as the Shepherd’s House. A bronze sundial in the garden there, on a modern pedestal, is inscribed ‘SEIZE THE PRESENT MOMENT THE EVENING HOUR IS NIGH’, and ‘1705 / THOMAS GRICE’. A Bronze Age spearhead found there is in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow, a cup and ring marked stone was discovered there in about 1960 and in 2017 an enamelled cooper-alloy strap-fastener from the Iron Age (it is ‘Parkheid in Syntoun’ in 1581).

Syntonshiel (sin’-in-sheel) n. former farmstead in the south part of Synton estate. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map between the main road and Synton Loch, corresponding roughly to the position of Synton Mossend. Adam Henderson was a farm servant there in 1801.

’t (t) contr. enclitic, common after many specific words, e.g. ‘in’t’, ‘is’t’, ‘was’t’, etc., also used in a redundant sense with an extra ‘eet’ – ‘A thocht A wad send Tam’t eet’ [ECS] (see also ’d).

tabber (taw-bur) n. a worker in the knitwear industry who hand sews labels (usually at the back of the neck) onto garments, traditionally a woman’s job.

the Tabernacle (thū-taw-bur-naw-kul) n. building on the Kirk Wynd built in 1805 for the Independent Church, and used by its congregation until about 1813. It was a plain building of 3 storeys, plus an attic. It saw additional use by the new Relief Church for a few months in 1810/11. The building was also used for dances, theatrical performances, etc. It later had many uses, being a carrier's warehouse, hosiery mill (by the Co-operative Society 1874–81 and Peter Scott's 1881–93), wool store and corn merchants. It became a billiard saloon in the early 20th century and was finally demolished in 1976 when the area was remodelled.

tablet (taw-bli') n. a confection made from sugar, butter and condensed milk, like a firm sort of fudge, but extremely sweet – 'ma granny aye makes tablet when oo're comin' (cf. taiblet).

the Tablet (thu-taw-bli') n. publication that ran for 3 issues in 1843.

[C&L1673], 'Walter Eliot tacksman of ye milne and customer of Hawick, desired yt a part be found out in ye Church ...' [PR1712], 'That the bailies, and all persons pretending to be tacksmen under them, ought to be discharged from molesting the burgesses ...' [BR1778] (e.g. used to describe the collector of the Duke of Buccleuch's levies at the markets and fairs in Hawick).

Taddei (taw-dee) n. Antonio Alonzio (1881–1957) son of Virgilio and Maria Celesta Macari, he was born in Marmande, France. He lived in Hawick and was father of the Taddei brothers, who ran several business in the Town. He married Loreta Bambina Forte, who died in 1963. His sons were: Augusto (1905–35), who died in a car crash in Lanark; Olimpio or 'Jimmy' (1907–88); Ernesto or 'Ernie' (1910–92); and Guido (1917–2003). He died in Hawick. Ernesto 'Ernie' (1910–92) 3rd son of Antonio, he was born in Beath, Fife. His business on North Bridge Street was variously a shop, cafe, billiard saloon and bingo parlour. He married Anna Forte and they had 2 sons and 1 daughter. He died in Dumfries. Guido (1917–2003) youngest son of Antonio, he was born in Cowdenbeath, Fife. Along with his brother Jimmy, he ran the Cadora Cafe on the High Street. He married Jean Walton and had 2 children. He died in Hawick. Jimmy see Olympio. Olympio 'Jimmy' (1907–88) 2nd son of Antonio, he was born in Auchterderran, Fife. He and his brother Guido ran the Cadora Cafe on the High Street. He married Clementina Borza and they had 3 daughters. He died in Kelso.

Taddei's (taw-deez) n. cafe run by the Taddei family (brothers Ernie, Jimmie and Guido), located on North Bridge Street since before WWII. Ernesto Taddei turned it into Hawick's premier billiard's venue after the War, with 7 tables upstairs and 6 downstairs. It converted to a bingo hall by the early 1970s, with an adjoining shop. The family also ran a chip shop on Oliver Place and the Cadora Cafe on the High Street, run by Jimmy and Guido. The family once sponsored a football team, which played in black – ‘Oo’ve hed the Taddeis, lassies and laddies, And in the Howegate oo hed Gusto ...’ [IWL].

taffee see taffie

taffie (taw-fee) n. toffee – ‘Did ee git a taffie aiple it the Shows?’, ‘There’s a sugar bool an taffy, tipenny pies, curney scones an’ Hawick bakes ...’ [JEDM], ‘Note that taffie generally signifies the sticky variety, made of trykul (treacle) or sayrup (syrup), in sticks or slabs ...’ [ECS], ‘And Jess McVeetie offered, up the Wynd, The grandest sticky taffie in the toun’ [WL] (also spelled ‘taffee’ and ‘taffy’).

taffie-join (taw-fee-join) n., arch. a social occasion for making toffee – ‘Taffie-join = a social evening, the principal feature of which was the making of a panful of treacle-toffy ... to defray the cost of which each guest had contributed a little’ [ECS] (sometimes ‘taffie-shine’; see also tam-trot join).

Taggart (taw-gur) n. Fr. Patrick (1809–95) born in County Tyrone, Ireland, he was ordained about 1846. He served in Dumfries and Edinburgh before becoming priest in Hawick in 1847, remaining for almost 50 years. Originally he ministered to Catholics in St. Boswells, Jedburgh, Kelso and Galashiels, as well as in Hawick. He was finally relieved of the responsibilities of Galashiels in 1853. He opened a Catholic school in Hawick in 1854. He also ran an evening school, since many of his pupils worked during the day. He had a house built for him in 1851, after living in the vestry for 2 years! He was known for regularly going walks with Rev. Dr. MacRae, and in general for being on good terms with the local protestant ministers. His services were used several times to try to quell riots that broke out during the building of the railway line, at St. Boswells and Shankend. It is also said that he helped get hosiery orders from the Admiralty directed towards Hawick firms in a time of very slack business. He later had a small cottage built behind the chapel to serve as his retirement home. In 1890 he was made a Domestic Prelate, with the title of Monsignor. He was buried in a vault at S.S. Mary & David’s and a stained glass window was erected in his memory.

taggit (taw-gee’, -gi’) pp., poet. tagged – ‘Her little tail wi’ white was taggit, Which often she in kindness waggit’ [JR].

taiblet (tāb-li’) n. a tablet, a sweet confection in general – ‘Note ... taiblet denotes the sugary or candy variety’ [ECS], ‘Thus coakih-nit taiblet = cocoanut candy’ [ECS], a particular confection like a hard fudge, made from condensed milk, sugar and butter (see also tablet).

taid (tād) n., arch. a toad, repulsive person – ‘The tade held up her auld dunne lufes, She lykit the sang sae weele’ [JTe] (also written ‘tade’).

taigle (tā-gul) v., arch. to tire, make weary – ‘An’ taigl’t age now totters in, Though he can scarcely hougel’ [JoHa], to detain, tarry – ‘...it didna molest them farther than it taiglet on about the buchte’ [LHTB], ‘My saul is excessiv sorrafu’, een untill deaeth: taigle ye here, an’

watch wi’ me’ [HSR], ‘...thou art my helpe an’ deliferer; mak’ nae taigglin, O my God’ [HSR], ‘A whuff o’ reek taigled flaffin’ about’ [GW], ‘Dinna taigle’ [GW].

taigelt (tā-gul) pp., arch. tired, tarried – ‘While the bridegroom taigglet, they a’ doveret an’ sleepet’ [HSR], ‘I taiggletna, but mæde hæste til keepe thy commandements’ [HSR].

tail (tāl) n., arch. a small portion of land attached to a larger piece, like a tail, especially a piece of lower ground or far end of the land. The word occurs in the 1609 service of heirs for James, son of Hawick minister William Auchmowty – ‘Annuo redditu 10 m. de turre lie toure cum cauda lie tail ejusdem’, presumably a piece of land attached to fields farmed by a tenant at the Tower in Hawick (with ‘cauda’ meaning ‘tail’, and so it was ‘with tail called the Tail’).

the Tail (thu-tāl) n. former name for a piece of additional land farmed along with the tenancy of the Tower in Hawick (recorded in 1609).

the Tail Burn (thu-tāl-burn) n. stream connecting Loch Skeen with the Grey Mare’s Tail – ‘The Tail Burn from the marshland leaps madcap down the brae, While Skene reflects in splendour, the late sun’s blinding ray’ [WL].

Tailfer see Telfer

tailit (tā-lee’, li’) adj. tailed, having a tail – ‘...having apprehendit ane foir meir, quhyt mainet and quhyt taillet ...’ [BR1641].

Tailleycleuch (tā-lee-clooch) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, roughly near the modern Steelroad-end. The stream there is marked Taylor’s Cleuch on modern maps. There is no sign of where the house may have been. A circular enclosure near there, and close to the railway line, was excavated in 1977; it is about 40 m in diameter, and seems to be a prehistoric settlement with later occupation, probably unrelated to the tower-house. It may be associated with the ‘Tailside’ recorded in 1632, which was probably close to there (see also Taylor’s Cleuch).

Taillyaird (tāl-yārd) n. name for former lands within Crook, i.e. near the Kirkton Burn in Cavers Parish. It is recorded in 1581 as a ‘hortulo herbario vulgo vocat taillzard’, i.e. a small herb garden commonly called Taillyard, on the west side of the lands of Crook (note that the transcription of the name is unclear; 'Taill' probably refers to a small piece of land attached to a larger area).

tailors (tā-lurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were probably incorporated towards the end of the 17th century. In 1679 their quartermasters were fined for 'making an act not to work out of their own houses'. They are recorded taking the Test in 1684. In 1734 the Council allowed a petition from them 'to convene at six o'clock to their work, and leave at eight o'clock at night'. The first female dressmaker in Hawick was in about 1793, with dresses before this period being made by the tailors.

Tailor's Slack (tā-lurz-slawk) n. short stream in Liddesdale, running into Greenshiel Sike, which becomes part of Ryedale Burn.

Tails Day (tālz-dā) n. former tradition on the day after 'Huntie Gowk', i.e. 2nd April, in which children (particularly at school) would try to pin paper tails on unsuspecting victims (this survived until around WWII).

Tailside (tāl-sīd) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, probably close to Steeleroad-end. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, along with Todsleuch, Fairside and Cleuchside. It may be associated with the modern Taylor's Cleuch and the fortified house of 'Tailley-cleuch'.

tailzie (tāl-yee) n., arch. term in Scots law, an entailment, whereby the legal succession of an estate is restricted to designated heirs – 'Free the gates ye throwless bailies! Leave for once your wads and tailzies!' [RSC], poet. a covenant – 'Til sic as keepe his taylye, an' til thae that bēar in mind his commandements til do thame' [HSR].

taings (tāngz) n., pl., arch. tongs, fire-tongs – '... when a mischievous cow-herd callant made as if he would have gripped it by the nose with a pair of het taings' [LHTB] (also tings and tyngs).

taingle (tāng-ul, -gul) v. to tangle – 'And 'tween thaim Aa let gaun, And the yins that got away, Lies a lang taingled story ...' [DH], n., arch. a tall lanky person – 'A lang taingle o' a chap' [GW].

tairger (tār-gur) n., arch. someone who hurries, a particularly large specimen of its kind.

tairget (tār-gi') v. to target, n. a target, arch. a long narrow shred of cloth, a tatter – '... wui stoory claes aa tairgets an spatches an faizzent-ends, an skluiffin shuin wurn inti bauchels' [ECS] (the English pronunciation is probably more common).

tairm (tārm, tā-rum) n. a term – 'this ees ma last tairm it schuil', 'Oo thoct o' gettin' yin at the tairm' [HNe1914], 'Mebbe the tairm 'discovery' is the appropriate yin tae yase ...' [BW1938], 'Yin comprehensive tairm Covers them a' – Birth-pangs, rheumatics And deid-thraw!' [DH]i, '... wonderin. maybe, if he'd sellt his short bit tairm o time owre cheap ...' [DH].

taistrel (tās-trul) n., arch. a slovenly or unmethodical person, particularly applied to a woman – 'Taistrill, tystrill, A gawkish, dirty, throwless sort of woman; often applied to a girl who, from carelessness, tears her clothes, Roxb.' [JoJ] (also written 'taistrill'; cf. teistrel).

tait (tait, tai') n. a small amount, little piece – '... when there's sic a need for baith you an' Katie to get the tait o' woo' spun up' [JTe], '... A tate o' meal, a pickle coals, Will help their New Year's Day' [TCh], 'A'll juist hev a wee tait o'd', 'The Cornet, a tait reed o' face On the road tae Monday Chase' [MB] (probably from Scandinavian).

Tait (tā') n. Adam (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. Adam (17th C.) resident of Shielswood in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Alexander (d.aft. 1595) recorded as 'Vicar-pensioner and Reader' at Traquair 1567–80. He was then deprived, living afterwards at St. Bride's Kirk, Traquair. He became minister of Bedrule in 1585, but was ordered to demit this in 1591. He is mentioned as still living in 1595. Alexander (1782–1851) youngest son of miller George and Agnes Scott. He is probably the Alexander recorded as servant to William (probably meant for John) Sibbald at Borthaugh on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Burnfoot Mill and his widow was living there in 1851. He died at Burnfoot in the 44th year of his service there. He married Margaret Younger, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included William and Margaret. They are buried in Wilton. Andrew (1778–1861) originally from Lauder, son of Andrew and Ann, he was a stockingmaker of the Green Wynd. He was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk. There is a record of him being granted money by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures in 1817 for a broad frame, after he had demonstrated that he had discovered how to make down tippets and muffs on the frame. He managed to make white feathered muffs, but when taste changed to coloured muffs, he was unable to get the feathers to dye properly. He was living on the Back Row in 1832, adjacent to where there were cholera victims. He is recorded as a widower living with the Kyle family on the Green Wynd in 1841 and 1851. Archibald (b.1705) farmer near Borthaugh. He was father of George, tenant of Borthaugh Mill. He is said to have lived into his late 90s, have married twice and had 19 children. He may be the tenant in Whitehillbrae whose wife Margaret Turnbull died in 1760, with her funeral recorded in Hobkirk Parish. His children probably included Archibald (b.1741) and George (b.1743), both baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Archibald (d.1824) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area. He is probably the Archibald, son of Archibald and Margaret Turnbull, who was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1741. He married Isabella Geddes, who died in 1822, aged 84. In her death record he is listed as 'Egglar', meaning a pedlar who collected eggs from outlying farms to sell at markets. Their children included: Janet (b.1773); Margaret (b.1777), who married carrier James Paterson; and William (b.1782), who was a carrier. His children were baptised in Hawick and Wilton Parishes; he was at Fenwick in 1777 and Borthaugh in 1782. The 1782 baptism was witnessed by George Tait (probably his brother) and Margaret Cowan; in an adjacent baptismal entry he was witness for George. He was probably son of the earlier Archibald and brother of George, tenant at Borthaugh Mill. He may be the Archibald who was charged with theft in Hawick in 1776. Archibald (1820–79) son of William and Elizabeth Forsyth. He was proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb Hotel in Melrose. He married Elizabeth Naylor. He died in Hawick. David (19th C.) shepherd near Addestoneshiel. In 1863 he presented to the Museum an otter that had been shot on Adderstoneshiel Moss. He is probably the 'D.

Tait' recorded at Adderstonelee in 1868. Ernest E., O.B.E., J.P. (??–) accountant in Pringle's, he was President of the Callants' Club in 1966. He became Secretary at Pringle's in 1939, taking over from James Watherston. In 1947 he was made a Director of Pringle's. George of Pirn (15th C.) listed on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. He is recorded as being 'of the Pren', his lands being in Tweeddale (near Stow). The David 'de pryn' recorded in the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5 is probably his son (and his son George is recorded in 1498). It is said that the Taites of Pirn died out in the male line and were continued by a daughter who married Horsburgh of that Ilk; they may be the oldest known Taites. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when James Gray in Fawhope had remission for stealing livestock from his farms of 'pyrne' (i.e., Pirn), Gatehope, Seathope and Innerleithen. He was probably son of the previous George of Pirn. Gray had also been accused of killing Anthony and stealing from Patrick and Margaret, all of whom were probably related to him. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet 'Caidyea' (i.e. Kedie) in 1654. Their children included: William (b.1656); John (b.1658); Isobel (b.1659); and John (b.1661). The witnesses in 1656 were Thomas Vogan and John Fraiter. George (d.c.1693) tenant in 'Newtown' in 1689 when his will was recorded. It is unclear which Newton this may have been (in the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh and Selkirk). George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He may have witnessed a baptism in 1691 (but it is hard to read). George (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Robertson itself in 1731 and at Highchesters in 1742. Children baptised in Robertson who are probably his include Margaret (b.1731), Isabel (b.1738), Helen (b.1742), John (b.1748) and James (b.1754). George (1743–1812) son of Archibald, he was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, being the last miller there. He married Agnes Scott, who died in 1812, aged 70. Their children included: John; Isabel (b.1773); Archibald (b.1776); George (b.1778), builder in Hawick; William (b.1780); and Alexander (1782–1851). The 1782 baptism was witnessed by Archibald Tait (probably his brother), while he witnessed the baptism of William, son of Archibald Tait. He was buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard.

George (1778–1853) son of George, who was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was listed as a mason at Borthaugh in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish’. In 1801 he was still listed as a mason at Borthaugh, but labelled ‘Hawick Volunteer’, suggesting that he was excepted from service because of already being in the volunteers. He became a builder in Hawick, whose son (also a mason) had the same name. He served on the ‘Eternal Council’ as a representative of the hammermen; he was certainly there as early as 1827. He lived on the Punch Bowl Close at 27 High Street, owning the property there; his son George later rebuilt the front, while another son James ran a drug-gists in one of the 2 front shops and had a school in the back. He is probably the George listed as a builder on the Fore Row on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the High Street in 1837. ‘Geo. Tait & Sons’ is listed on Punch Bowl Close in Slater’s 1852 directory. On the 1841 and 1851 censuses he is at Punch Bowl Close with his son James (drug-gist), with his other son George next door. He married Margaret Scott, who died in 1818, aged 38. Their children included: Margaret (b.1804); John (b.1808), also a builder; George (b.1812), who continued with his builder’s business; and James (b.1815). A portrait of him exists. The family (including 3 children who died in infancy) are buried in St. Mary’s. George (1812–97) son of builder George. He was also a mason and the 3rd George in a row in this family (his grandfather being miller at Borthaugh). Like his father before him, he was a member of the ‘Eternal Council’, representing the hammermen for several years from 1846. The Tait builders (including his father and brother John) between them erected many of the Town’s buildings, including much of North Bridge Street and a large number of local mansions, including Silverbuthall, Mayfield, East Bank Meeting House, St. Andrew’s Church and Orrock Place Church. In 1841 he is recorded on Punch Bowl Close, listed at 76 High Street in 1851 and 1861, and still there in 1875. He rebuilt the front of the property that had been owned by his father; however, the building was later demolished (along with the one next door) to make way for the Pavillion Theatre. He was a nearly life-long member (and later an Elder) of Orrock Kirk. He donated some fossils to the Museum in 1863. He was described as having ‘a fine portly form’ and was latterly very deaf. In 1836 he married Beatrice Wilson, who died in 1862, aged 51. Their children included: Margaret (b.1838/9), who married James Turnbull of Galalaw; Beatrice (b.1839), who died in infancy; Beatrice (again, b.1845), who died young; George (b.1847), also died young; and Elizabeth (b.1851/2), who married Alexander Welsh from Coldstream. George (b.1829/30) son of grocer John. He was listed as a shoemaker at Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1851 census he was living with his parents on Wilton Kirkstyle and listed as ‘Deaf & Dumb’. Gilbert (b.1803/4) gamekeeper at Whitehaugh in Castleton Parish. His wife was Jane and their children included Christian and William. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Crozier and their children included Andrew (b.1689). James (d.1815) tenant farmer at Eilrig. He is recorded there on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. He is recorded as ‘Mr James Tait’ at Eilrig in 1798 when his daughter was baptised in Robertson Parish. He married Janet Scott in 1795, the marriage being recorded in both Robertson and Ettrick Parishes. Their children included: Janet (b.1798); Helen (b.1803); Henry (b.1806); and Georgine (b.1810). His death is recorded in Hawick in 1815, with the words ‘Died suddenly’. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Helen Leithead from Hawick Parish. James (b.1805/6) coal agent in Denholm. His wife was Helen. James (1815–63) son of builder George, he was a chemist at 27 High Street in the mid-19th century. He also had a school in the back premises. He was said to be a ‘cripple and walked very lame’. He married Catherine Anderson, from Jedburgh. James (19th C.) editor of the Kelso Chronicle. He wrote the 2 volume study ‘Two Centuries of Border Church Life: with Biographies of Leading Men and Sketches of the Social Conditions of the People’ (1889, 1891). It principally contains details of churches associated with Kelso Presbytery, encompassing several areas around Hawick, including Lilliesleaf and Liddesdale. He also edited Walter Riddell Carre’s work ‘Border Memories, or, Sketches of Prominent men and women of the Border’ (1876) and ‘Wilson’s Tales of the Borders’ (1881, 1884). James (19th C.) local artist. His painting ‘Hawick Common Riding Procession at Tower Knowe 1890’ is in the Museum collection. He is probably also the James who painted a portrait of Provost George Wilson and possibly a picture of Minto

Pond. John 'Jock' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'in the toun of Halroule', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (17th C.) piper, named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627, among 15 other 'idle and masterless men' as fit to be sent to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Henderson and their children included George (b.1691), John (b.1693), unnamed (b.1694), Margaret (b.1697), James (b.1699), Agnes (b.1703), and Andrew (b.1705). The witnesses in 1691 were William Easton and James Veitch. John (d.bef. 1721) gardener listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Probably the same John was resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1715 he was fined 'for breaking the marches between the Common and the propertey of the Dutchess of B. at the Woillegate'. He was described as the deceased 'some times gardner' in 1721 when his daughter Isobel married flesher Robert Hardie in Hawick. The later gardener John was surely related to him. He may be the John who married Jane Gardner and had children Janet (b.1684), John (b.1693) and Robert (b.1696). The witnesses in 1696 were William Gardner (probably related to his wife) and Thomas Briggs. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. In 1719 his servant Bessie Anderson got married in Hawick and in 1720 his 'servitor' John Scott had a child baptised in Kirkton Parish. John (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish, perhaps son of the earlier gardener John. He was 'gardener att ye Cross wynd' in 1716. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for James Henderson in 1730. In 1716 he married Jean, daughter to Adam Armstrong in Barnes. Their children included: Isobel (b.1719); Beatrice (b.1721); Agnes (b.1723); John (b.1726); Bessie (b.1729); and Jean (b.1739). William (b.1732), with the mother's name given as 'Margaret' Armstrong, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1719 were wright Francis Gledstains and carrier William Miller, in 1723 were smith John Scott and James Chisholme 'Laird', and in 1726 were Bailie Martin and 'Dand' Gray. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1724 he married

Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish. He could be the John 'Teat' recorded at Borthwickshiels in 1725 when his son John was baptised and the John 'Tat' recorded in 1735 at Girnwood when his son John was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Ormiston in 1727. His children included: William (b.1725); and Helen (b.1727). John (18th C.) footman at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1778, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. In 1779 he was listed as a house and riding servant. John (18th C.) tenant farmer in Fenwick in about the 1750s, when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd. He was said to have 'came and drunk with Bailie Ker' in order to solve a dispute with the Town Herd over the use of the Common. John (18th C.) recorded at Winnington Rig on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1768/9–1812) road contractor who died at Abbotrule Lodge. His wife Elizabeth Bell died in Edinburgh in 1851, aged 82. Their youngest son Adam (born in Southdean Parish) died in Edinburgh, aged 30. The family were recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. John (1771–1851) son of George, he was born at Borthaugh Mill. In 1794 he married Agnes, daughter of Gilbert Amos, and she died in 1815. The marriage was against the wishes of her family, and so she was carried off from Adderstonelee at midnight! He then moved to Cavers, where he served as a forester on Cavers estate. Their children included: Gilbert (d.c.1819); George (1796–1856); John (1799–1863); James (1803–70); Peter (b.1805); and Margaret (b.1812). In 1819 he emigrated to New York state with 5 children, settling in Oxbow on the Oswegatchie River. His grandson James D. Taitt wrote a history of Oxbow Presbyterian Church, marking its centenary in 1921 (with several mentions of Hawick area families). John (b.c.1770s) recorded as servant at Branhholme Park on the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Welsh and their children included Archibald (b.1800), Helen (b.1803) and John (b.1805). These were all entered at the same time in the register, with witnesses being George Helm and John Scoon. John (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. John (b.1791/2) stone-cutter in Denholm, where he was a registered voter in the 1860s. In 1861 he lived at around the Canongate. He married Margaret Biggar and they had a son Thomas. John (19th C.) tenant farmer at Wolfehopelee and Braidhaugh in the mid-1800s. His daughter married farmer Thomas Grierson. John (b.1801/2) from Watten in Caithness, he was a grocer in Wilton. In 1851 he was living at Wilton Kirkstyle and he was listed as a shopkeeper at Wilton Place in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was at Melburn Cottage in Wilton. His wife was Christina, and their children included George (shoemaker), Jessie, Magnus Sandison, Christina, John, Robert, William, Elizabeth and Georgina. John (b.1808) son of builder George, he was a mason on the Cross Wynd. Like his father and brother George, he sat on the 'Eternal Coouncil', representing the hammermen from 1848. He and his brother built a good fraction of North Bridge Street, as well as several large mansions in the Hawick area. In 1851 he is listed as a builder, with 2 partners, employing 12 people, and residing at about 13 Cross Wynd. His wife was Agnes Reid from Langholm, and their children included Margaret, Isabella, Agnes, John, Helen, George and James. John (b.1829) son of carrier William, who died when he was young. He probably served in the army during the Crimean War. In 1863 in Wilton Parish he married Helen, daughter of mason Walter Cranston; she died in 1913. He was at that time described as a frameworker and Chelsea Pensioner and the witnesses were Archibald Brown and Agnes Cranston. Their children included: William Walter (b.1865); and Walter (b.1866). He also appears to have had an illegitimate son George with Mary Smith (nee Middlemas) in 1860. John G. (b.1830/1) head gardener at Cavers. In 1861 he was living at 'Cavers Garden', which was presumably the gardener's house on the estate. Rev. ?? (17th/18th C.) chaplain at Thorlieshope. He was one of the local clergymen who gave sermons in Hawick in 1721 when Rev. Cunningham was ill. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Honeyburn. In 1684 he was among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. He is listed separately from Robert in Hagburn. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Hagburn (in Rulewater). He is listed in 1684 among men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant in Lethem in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Thomas (b.1801/2) born in Channelkirk Parish, he was a gardener at Wells and then farmer at Denholm Mill. He is still recorded as farmer at Denholm Mill in 1868. He married Isabella Gray, who was from Crailing. Their children included: James (b.1828); John Gray (b.1830); David (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); William (b.1835);

William (again, b.1837), who was a shepherd; Peter (b.1839); Robert (b.1840); Charles Anderson Gray (b.1846); and Thomas (b.1843). Their children were born in Jedburgh and Southdean Parishes. Thomas (1833/4–1923) son of stone-cutter John. He married Christina Black, who died in 1908, aged 70. Their children included Rule (1866/7–97). Probably the same Thomas was tenant at Denholm Mill, recorded in the 1860s. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Adderstoneshiel, recorded on the 1788–92 Horse Tax Rolls. On the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he was owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax in 1797 on 3 non-working dogs. His son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1786, when he was also at Adderstoneshiel. Betty (b.1784), John Caverhill (b.1787), Caverhill (b.1788), Margaret (b.1790) and Susan (b.1792) were probably also his children. Walter (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer's shop at No. 2 Dickson Street in the mid-1900s. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the 'Cottars' on the Hearth Tax roll there. In 1697 he was 'cottar in Sinto' (presumably Synton). He married Agnes Beattie (sometimes written 'Brattie' or 'Brattine') and their children included James (b.1689), John (b.1691), Janet (b.1694), Marion (b.1697), William (b.1702), John (b.1705) and Robert (b.1705). The witnesses in 1694 were James Pringle and William Brown (who lived at Ashkirk Mill). Probably the same William was cottar in Synton Mill when his daughter Alison with Isobel Gibson was baptised in 1717. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1721 he married Margaret, daughter of William Hope, gardener. Their children included: John (b.1722); William (b.1724); Thomas (b.1727); Henrietta (b.1730); and Isabel (b.1734). The witnesses in 1722 were merchants William and Walter Tudhope. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1756 he married Agnes Hogg. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Jean Gordon and their daughter Ann was baptised in 1758, with Thomas Bunyan as witness. His occupation may read 'tinclar', i.e. a metal worker. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1762 he married Margaret Crozier, who was from Minto Parish. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Hassendeanburn in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. William (b.c.1780) servant at Tower in Cavers Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (1782–1832) son of Archibald and Isabel Geddes, he was baptised at Borthaugh in Wilton Parish. He may be the servant of James Riddell at Leaheads listed on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. He was a carrier, operating between Hawick and Dumfries and Annan, according to Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was listed as a carrier in the subscription list for Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. He is probably the carrier William who married Elizabeth (or 'Betty'), daughter of William Forsyth, in Wilton Parish in 1813 and whose children included: Margaret (b.1812), who married James Daykins; Isabella (b.1814), who married John Lawrie; Elizabeth (b.1816), who married Peter Blair, miller at Hundalee and emigrated to Australia; Matilda (1818–1900), who married George Aitken in Linton and died in Edinburgh; Archibald (b.1820), who married Elizabeth Naylor and was proprietor of the Ewe & Lamb in Melrose; Catherine (1823–64), who married farm steward Andrew Walker of Linton Parish; Williamina (1826–31); John (b.1829), who married Helen Cranston; and William (b.c.1831), confectioner. His wife died 2 days after him, leaving 8 children as orphans. In 1833 his former premises in the east end of Hawick were advertised for sale, including 'dwelling-house, offices, garden, and pertinents', with the house being built within the previous 20 years. William (b.c.1784) born in Hownam, son of David and Janet (or Jessie) Armstrong. He moved to Hyndlee as a shepherd and spent most of his working life at Wauchope Walls (also known as 'Langhaughwalls' or 'the Waas'). He was recorded there in 1861 and 1868. He also acted as carrier between Hawick and Jedburgh and the Wauchope area. Along with his wife Rachel and daughter Rachel, he was a member of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He married Rachel Riddell in 1805. Their children were David (who married Mary Paterson), Betsy (who emigrated to America), Janet (who married T. Waugh), Mary (who married A. Elliot), Margaret (who married labourer Christopher Shakelton), Agnes Douglas (who emigrated to America), Rachel, Isabel (who married Will Bell), Helen (born at Hislop), Jane and James. William (b.1802/3) from Bowden, he was a baker on the Cross Wynd. On Pigot's 1837 directory he was listed as a baker on the High Street. He was at about 4 Cross Wynd in 1841. He later lived on Backdamgate and Kirkwynd. He married Elizabeth Kerr, who was from Langholm. Their children included: Jessie, who married John Davidson; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Robert. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Rutherford in Hawick in 1834. William (19th C.) married Anne Hood in Wilton Parish in 1847. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Hardie in Hawick Parish in 1853. William (c.1831–1913) youngest son of carrier William, who died shortly after he was born. In 1861 he was a frame-worker, living at 11 Teviot Crescent. He was later a confectioner in Hawick. In 1853 he married Elizabeth (or 'Betsy') Bell. Their children included William (greengrocer), Jane and Margaret. He died at 1 Glebe View. William (b.1836/7–1914) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He is probably the shepherd at Langburnshiels whose daughter was mother of Peter Jardine, forester at Wolfelee. He married Thomasina Nichol in 1860 and she who died in 1889, aged 52. Their children included: Thomas (b.1863); Walter Nichol (b.1866); James (b.1867); William (b.1871); John (b.1873); and Isabel Grey (1892/3–1914). He died in Hawick and is buried at Ettleton. William (19th C.) son of William, he was a greengrocer. He was at 72 High Street in 1875. William (19th C.) farmer at Pin in Liddesdale in 1868. William (19th/20th C.) superintendent of St. George's Sunday School from 1916 until WWII. He was a member of the Public Assistance Committee and Chairman of Drumlanrig Home Committee. He also represented Scotland at bowling (formerly 'Taite' and other variants).

Tancred (tawng-kred) n. George (1831–1914) eldest son of George Cleghorn of Weens. He was born and raised at Weens, then educated in Edinburgh and at Leamington. When rowing on the Thames as a boy, he mangled his hand and lost part of a thumb. He joined the East India Company at age 19 and became an ensign in the 43rd Bengal Native Infantry, caught an almost fatal illness and was sent to Simla to recover. He then moved to Kashmir, when he became ill again with dysentery and returned to England in 1853. There he joined the West York Militia, purchased a commission with the 17th Lancers, and was transferred to the Scots Greys, where he became Captain, spending time in various parts of England and also Ireland. He retired from the army in 1866. He was a keen shooter, bragging that over a year he (and some friends) killed about 1000 patridges, 400 pheasants and 60 grouse. He succeeded his father in 1855, and was known as ‘Cleghorn of Weens’ for 30 years. However, he assumed the name and arms of Tancred in 1885 following the death of Charles Tancred of Arden Hall, Yorkshire, according to the conditions of succession to his estate. He substantially improved the house at Weens in the early years of the 20th century. He took possession of the ‘key of Gibraltar’ which had been taken from ‘the Rock’ by Lord Heathfield, who was born at Wells. He was a member of the Roxburghshire County Council, Chairman of Hobkirk Parish Council, Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, as well as the North Riding of Yorkshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1862. He was also a Vice-President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. He wrote ‘Historical Record of Medals and Honorary Distinctions’ (1891), ‘The Annals of a Border Club, the Jedforest’ (1899) and ‘Rulewater and its People: an Account of the Valley of the Rule and its Inhabitants’ (1907, reprinted in facsimilie 1992). This last book is an extremely valuable account of the histories of families the Rule valley (and neighbouring areas), particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries, and including ordinary people as well as the landed gentry. And the Jedforest Club book is actually an excuse for him to present the histories of a large fraction of the local land-owning families. He was said to be working on another book when he died, ‘Old Border Lairds and their Tenants’; it is not clear how far he had progressed and no manuscript survives. In 1862 he married Mary Anne Hay (who died in 1914), 3rd daughter of Col. Thomas Lumsden, from Aberdeenshire. They had 11 children: George Harry Lumsden (1863–1935), who served in South Africa, married Sarah Ann Gillespie and died in New Zealand; James Charles (b.1864), who was a Royal Navy Commander and married Cecile Margaret, only daughter of Walter Macmillan-Scott of Wauchope; Thomas Angus (b.1867), Major in the Royal Artillery; Richard Fairfax (b.1875), moved to Queensland; Edward Meynell (b.1877), also Queensland; John Yule (b.1879), with the Indian Staff Corps; Walter Cecil (b.1885), born at Weens, Lieutenant in the Royal Navy; Mary Norcliffe; Katherine Wray (b.1869), born at Weens, who married Alexander Ormiston Curle, W.S.; Frances Madeline (b.1871), also born at Weens; and Edith Dalton (1873–90). A plaque in his memory was erected on the wall of Weens House in 1981 (also known as ‘George Cleghorn’ and ‘Captain Cleghorn’).

Tandlaw (tawnd-law) n. farm just out past the ‘Fower Road Ends’, with a small loch nearby, Tandlaw Moss. It appears to have been part of the estate of Robert Scott of Alton in 1643. Robert Scott of Tandlaw paid the land tax on £40 in Hassendean Parish in 1678. It was contained within Hassendean Parish until 1690 when it fell within the new Wilton Parish boundaries. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1702 and mason William Gibson in 1708. Another Robert Scott was there in at least 1729–30, Thomas Stoddart in 1732, Walter Scott in 1758 and Adam Armstrong in 1791. Rev. Robert Scott of Innerleithen is recorded as owner in 1788 (continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £40 and recorded as ‘Tanlaw, or Tandlaw’. In 1851 it consisted of 200 acres. Robert Symonton was farmer there in 1797 and William Ormiston lived there in 1799. Adam Nichol was farmer in 1841 and 1851 (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw’; it is ‘Tandla’ in 1673, ‘Taandlaw’ in 1682, ‘Tandla’ in 1702 and ‘Tanlaw or Tandlaw’ in 1813; not to be confused with ‘Tanlaw Naze’ near Teviothead or ‘Tanlawhill’ etc. near Eskdalemuir).

Tandlaw Moss (tawnd-law-mos) n. marshy area and small loch to the west of Tandlaw farm. It is the source of the Boonraw Burn (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw Moss’).

the tane (thu-tān) n., arch. the one, that one, especially in the phrase ‘neither the tane nor the tother’, ‘... Waltir Scot of Branhelm, knight, on the tane part, and James Gledstanis ... on the tuddyr part’ [SB1519], ‘... did they believe the Bible, ye nicht as weel hae askit, for the tane just deserves as weel to be believed in as the tither’ [EM1820], ‘... whan A kennd feine naether the tain nor the tother cood be the richt oor ...’ [ECS], also used elliptically for the whole of the phrase – ‘Hei’s uncih lang i comin, A unk! Hei’s no weel or ei canna wun – the tain’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘the tain’; cf. the tother).

tang (tawng) n., arch. the tongue of a Jew’s harp – ‘The tang o’ the trump’ [GW].

tanker (tang-kur) n., arch. a tankard – ‘...an than A gaed inti a bit an slokent ma drooth (oot ov a tanker lippin-fowe ...)’ [ECS].

Tanlaw Naze (tan-law-nāz) n. hill between Falnash and Caerlenrig, reaching a height of 310m. The former farmstead near there was called ‘Tanlawnese’ (and variant) in earlier documents. Will and George Turnbull are recorded there in 1503. Along with the lands of Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was confirmed by James IV in a 1511 charter to Simon Dalgleish, with the consent of his son Kentigern Dalgleish. Along with Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was inherited by Archibald Elliot of Falnash from his great-great-grandfather Archibald in 1647. It was inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690 (the name probably derives from Scots ‘tandle’, meaning a bonfire, and Middle English ‘nese’ for a projecting nose of land; it is ‘tandilnes’ in 1503, ‘Tandilnes’ in 1511 and 1647, ‘Tandlaneis’ in 1675 and transcribed ‘Tabdbanerse’ in 1690).

Tannage Close (taw-neej-klōs) n. passageway off the middle of the west side of the High Street, between Nos. 61 and 63. It was named after the tanning pits at the bottom of the close, with the business carried out by John & Walter Wilson from 1800. In the early 1800s it was called Ewen’s Court, then was known as Moncrieff’s Close until Tannage Close was adopted about 1857 (although the 1858 Ordnance Survey map shows the bottom part called Tannage Close, with the upper part labelled Moncrieff’s Close). The Moncrieff family used to live on the east side of the close. The name ‘Guthrie’s Close’ has also been used (from the plumber and slater’s business on the west side). It was once an area of over-crowded housing, with re-development happening between the two world wars. A plaque was placed there in 2011 marking the nearby location of the workplace of Jimmie Guthrie.

tanner (taw-nur) n., arch. a sixpenny coin, sixpence – ‘Ee got intae Stan Reid’s for a tanner ...’ [AY], ‘Thrippences, tanners, bobs, florins, The odd halfcrown Come floatin’ doon’ [DH].

the Tanner’s Pool (thū-taw-nurz-pool) n. former name for a pool in the Teviot near the foot of Tannage Close, which was used for tanning. The base of the old Mercat Cross was once located here (and the iron ring in it used for securing skins), but removed when Teviot Road was built.

tannin (taw-nin) n. the act of converting hides into leather by soaking in an infusion of barks containing tannic acid. The tanning of leather and dressing of sheepskins was formerly an important trade in Hawick. Tanners would usually have open tanning vessels, producing a strong smell in the vicinity. Mactaggarts skinworks was a related modern business that successfully operated through much of the 20th century. The name ‘Tannage Close’ is one of the few remnants of this occupation.

Tantledie (tawnt-le-dee??) n. nickname for someone in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

tap (tap) n., arch. top, summit, a spinning top – ‘I watche, an’ am as ane sparra alane apone the hous-tap’ [HSR], ‘Let thame be as the gerse apone the hous-taps ...’ [HSR], ‘A rountree bus’ oot o’er the tap o’t ...’ [JBS], ‘...and three to be in ambush at the tap o’ the plantin’ at Denholm Hill Quarry’ [BCM1881], ‘The wee birds sit on the tap o’ the sheafs, An’ twitter an’ sing i’ the mornin’ licht’ [FGS], ‘...Frae the tap o’ her heid tae her feet’ [WAP], a distaff-full of flax, ‘ti take yin’s tap in yin’s lap’ is to pack up before departing, particularly after marrying (from the former custom of spinning flax at a neighbour’s house) – ‘For the bride has her tap in her lap, And the bridegroom his tail in his riggin’ [ES] (not now particularly Hawick pronunciation; cf. top; see also tappit).

taper (tā-pur) v., arch. to be scathing about an absent person (also written ‘taiper’; cf. taper off).

taper off (tā-pur-of) v., arch. to sum up a person in a disparaging manner, verbally tear to shreds – ‘The expression is often used of two persons ‘scandalising’ a third person. Thae twae’s stuiden bletherin an oor thegither; A’ll baet ee some puir sowl’s geetin taipert off’ [ECS] (also ‘taiper off’).

tapmaist (tap-māst) adj., arch. topmost – ‘Ae’ whow, Aw hardly ken what end o’ iz is tapmaist but Aw’ll gaun wi’ ma bairns’ [JEDM].

tap o tow (tap-ō-tow) n., arch. tuft of flax put on the distaff before spinning – ‘...But the graces o’ her mind, Wi’ sic purity combined, Has set my hert alow Like a bleezing tap o’ tow’ [FL] (cf. tow).

tappit (taw-pee’, -pi’) pp., adj., arch. topped, crested, tufted – ‘A bet on the subject was made between the two parties to the extent of a tappit hen’ [HAST1868] (see tap).

the Targets (thu-tawr-gits, -tār-gits) n. hilly area above the Braid Road, named after the former Boozieburn Rifle Range on the northern slope. It is also known as ‘Target Hill’ or ‘Target Hills’, and was formerly ‘Moss Hill’. The area includes Target Pond and the disused Black Quarries, and was recently the site of a greyhound racing track – ‘The summer sun shines as I sit in the silence Looking doon on ma hame frae the Target Hill’s crest, Weel-kent are the streets and familiar the places Of this old mill town that I’ll aye like the best’ [IWL].

tarran (taw-rin) n., arch. a person of ill-humour, someone who tries to get their on way by nagging, peevish child.

Tarras (taw-ris) n. lands lying between the Liddesdale and Eskdale. The farm was listed in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section labelled ‘Foresta’. ‘The Laird’s Rowie’ (i.e. Roland) Armstrong was recorded dwelling at ‘Tarrassyde’ in 1583. The lands there passed to William Scott (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) in 1606 and later his descendant became the first and only Earl of Tarras. The lands and Barony of Tarras were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch; the bounds of the lands at that time are describe therein. It was valued at £1100 in 1671. The river there was so full of rocks that it was said to be impossible to drown in, since ones brains would be dashed out first! – ‘Was ne’er ane droon’d in Tarras, Nor yet in doot, For ere the heid can win doon, The harns are oot’ [T], ‘From mountains wrapt in purple shrouds The Tarras pours her murky floods’ [WSB], ‘And sae, as the crying gangs up i’ the Border Bi Tarras and Hermitage, Ettrick and Yill ...’ [DH] (it is ‘Tarres’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Tarras Moss (taw-ris-mos) n. high area near the Border in a side valley between the Liddel and the Esk, notorious in rieving days. The lands were recorded as early as the late 14th century. The area was also known as ‘Black Tarras’ – ‘We stabled them sure on the Tarras muir We stabled them sure’, quoth he: ‘Before we could cross that quaking moss, They all were lost but me’ [JL], ‘A stark moss-trooping Scott was he, As e’er couch’d Border lance by knee; Through Solway sands, through Tarras moss, Blindfold, he knew the paths to cross’ [SWS], ‘See how they come when they hear the news Frae the lands ayont Craick Cross; They come frae Eskdale and bonnie Ewes, Through the wilds o’ Tarras Moss’ [JBB], ‘And sae, as the cryin’ gangs up i’ the Border Bi Tarras and Hermitage, Ettrick and Yill ...’ [DH].

Tarras Shank (taw-ris-shawngk) n. hill ridge lying between the Twislehope Burn and Tarras Sike, in the upper headwaters of the Hermitage valley (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Tarras Sike (taw-ris-sik) n. small stream off the Twislehope Burn to the west of Twislehope Hope. A spur on its south side is Tarras Shank (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

tatti howkin (ta’-i-how-kin) n., v. digging potatoes out of the ground to harvest them. After the last War, local farmers used to have help from schoolchildren to get the harvest in – ‘‘Tattie Howkin’ – or potato harvesting ... was part and parcel of our school life in the years just after the war’ [GM].

tatti peelins (ta’-i-pee-linz) n., pl., arch. the peelings of potatoes (noted by E.C. Smith; also ‘tatti peel’ and ‘tatti parins’).

tatti pit (ta’-i-pi) n., arch. a potato pit, trench in which potatoes are stored – ‘Some large wool-packet or tatta pit’ [HSR] (also noted by E.C. Smith).

tatti-ploom (ta’-i-ploom) n., arch. a potato-apple, the seed-containing fruit of the potato plant (cf. ploom).

tattis (ta’-iz) n., pl. potatoes. It should be remembered that this plant has not always formed part of the staple of the local diet. Potatoes are first noted in Scotland in a household book of the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1701. There is a record that Dickson of Hassendeanburn paid William Turnbull, a Denholm carrier, 1 shilling for a peck of potatoes in 1729; this may imply one of the earliest examples of potato cultivation in Scotland. They were still a relative rarity in the 1740s and there was apparently much opposition to eating them to begin with. In about 1760 William Scott of Woll was among the first to plant them far apart in drills. they did not become a staple of the local diet until the late 18th century.

taxt (takst) n., arch. a tax, levy – '... and to frie and exeem us from any proportione of the taxt to be laid on by the royall burrows upon burghs ...' [BR1699].

Taylor (tā-lur) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed after Simon Armstrong of Calfield and his servant in a 1601 list of Armstrongs and others who were said by the English to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. He thus presumably lived in Liddesdale and was an associate of the Armstrongs. He could be the 'Andro Tail-liour' listed 'in Schortburtholme' among Liddesdale and Eskdale men declared as fugitives for not appearing in a court in Hawick in 1605. Archibald 'Airchie' (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of 'Zairdhaus' in Liddesdale. Since this is listed by other farms near Newcastleton, it could be that Yethouse is meant. Charles (19th C.) teacher, who was one of the three people who met in 1877 to plan the Hawick Golf Club. He was also part of the first committee and later Club Captain. In 1879 he won the medal (presented by Robert Fraser Watson) at the first golf championship played in Hawick. He was conductor of the Hawick Choral Union in at least the 1870s. David (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for a child of Thomas Barrie. His children included Helen (b.1704) and David (b.1707). The baptism in 1704 was witnessed by weavers John Taylor (surely related) and David Miller. In 1711 he was a weaver at Roughheugh when his son Walter was baptised in Wilton Parish. He is probably the David who witnessed baptisms in 1724 for John Scott from Brieryhill and John Miller from Roughheugh. David (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Todshawhill in 1756 and 1762. His children included John (b.1754), William (b.1756), Isobel (b.1759) and Walter (b.1762). Agnes (b.1748 and Thomas (b.1749), baptised in Minto, may also have been his children. David (19th/20th C.) joiner at Damfoot, Newmill. He was responsible for the original wooden Lawson Bridge, as well as the 'Joogly Brig'. Douglas (1823–87) son of John. He was an apprentice joiner with James Rutherford at Bonchester, and his first job was to remove the thatch from the 3 'Scenty houses' in 1839. He was then a joiner on the Weens estate at Bonchester Bridge. He was the first in the area to erect wire fences, and developed a business supplying these. Henry Anderson worked for him in the late 1870s. In 1882 his joiner's business was taken over by Walter Turnbull. In 1846 he married Elizabeth ('Betsy'), daughter of John Thorburn, farmer at Stonedge. They had several children, including Walter. He died at Wilton Hill in Hawick and was buried at Hobkirk. Edmond (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as 'ewmund talzor'. James Scott in Ashkirk had remission for accompanying him to steal cattle from the farm of Cauldshiels. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. George (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He was probably from the Ashkirk area. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Margaret Hislop. Their son George was baptised in 1690, with witnesses Robert Taylor and William Hislop (who were surely related to the couple). James (15th C.) had a sasine for a merk land in 'Betherruill' (i.e. Bedrule) in 1473. It is unclear how long he held lands in Rulewater. James (18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Betty Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1761); Margaret (again, b.1763); and Peter (b.1766). The 1766 witnesses were weaver Robert Turnbull and John 'Kerswell'. James (18th/19th C.) fined in Cavers Parish in 1792 for an 'irregular marriage'. James (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was a spinner in Hawick. In 1842 he married Elizabeth Best, who was from Bedrule. Their children included: Margaret (b.1842); John (b.1845/6); Catherine (b.1848/9); Agnes A.J. (b.1854/5); and Elizabeth Jane Boston (b.1856). They were living at about 62 High Street in 1851. In 1861 his widow had remarried to grocer William Brown and the family were living on the Mid Raw. Janet (b.1780/1) born in Hawick Parish, she was recorded as 'Independent' at Highend in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. She was listed there as farmer's widow in 1851 and 1861 and was still recorded there in 1868. She had a daughter Margaret. John (16th C.) tenant in Alemoor. He is recorded in 1573 when he was to be entered at Edinburgh Tolbooth by David 'of Ailmure'. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were John Brown and William Allan. John (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. John (17th C.) cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for David, who was probably his son or brother. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1725 and 1726 he was at Robertson Burnfoot and in 1729, 1733 and 1736 he was at Mains. His children included: David (b.1725); Bessie (b.1726); Helen (b.1729); Walter (b.1731); Bessie (again, b.1733); James (b.1736); Helen (again, b.1741); and Marion (b.1746). John (18th C.) farmer at Langraw in Rulewater. In 1771 he married Betty Amos and had a son, also John, later that year. He may be the John who was recorded as tenant at Blackcleughmouth in 1797 and whose son Walter was listed on the Miltiia ballot on 1801. Other children of his may have been John (b.1771), Betty (b.1774), Margaret (b.1778), Agnes (b.1780), Walter (b.1782) and Mary (b.1785). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Lillico and their children included Margaret (b.1792). John (b.1770s) tenant farmer at Unthank, brother of Walter. He may be the son of John baptised in Hobkirk in 1771. He may be the John 'junior' living at Blackleemouth in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was recorded as a labourer at Unthank on the 1801 Militia ballot in Hobkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Renwick of Forkins. In 1800 they had a daughter called Betty (who married Douglas Lillico), followed by a son, John. They then moved to Swanshiel, where they had sons Robert (farm steward at Wauchope, before emigrating to America) and Walter (who married Margaret Gow). In later life he moved to Blacklee farm with his eldest son John (where they were in 1841). A few years after his death the farmhouse at Blacklee was allowed to fall to ruin. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Hassendeanburn in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Betty (b.1800), John (b.1802), Robert (b.1806), Walter (b.1808), Walter (again, b.1808), Isobel (b.1811), William (b.1813), Isabel (b.1817), Margaret (b.1821) and Douglas (b.1823). Joshua Joseph Henry (1831-1910) composer of music for 'The Banner Blue'. Born in the Huddersfield area, he came to Hawick in 1884 to work as a worsted designer with the tweed manufacturers Blenkhorn & Richardson's, and later became their mill manager. Musically talented, before coming to Hawick he wrote several short choral anthems, including 'Blow Ye the Trumpets in Zion', 'Come, Ye Children' and 'Rend Your Hearts', as well as a full Church of England Service. While in Hawick he wrote a new 'Te Deum', performed in Wilton Church in 1891, as well as his last anthem 'If, With All Your Hearts'. He was honorary organist at Wilton for about a year, after it installed a pipe organ in 1886. He was said to be 'a modest, retiring man'. He died at his home at 2 Wilton Hill and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Neil (b.1812/3) from Dunoon in Argyll, he was schoolmaster at Chesters, Southdean Parish around the 1840s to 1860s. He is listed as master of Southdean Parish School in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Mary Shiel, who was sister of Thomas, schoolmaster at Hobkirk, and they had a son Malcom T.S. He is recorded in 1866 as Registrar, Session Clerk and Inspector of Poor and still Inspector of Poor for the Parish in 1868. He also acted as postmaster for Chesters. He was a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Peter (b.1766) son of James and Betty Turnbull. He was a mason in Hawick. He lived at 19 Howegate in 1841 and 1851. He was probably the Peter who was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in about 1798. Richard 'Dick' (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. His name is given as 'Dyk Talzour' and he may have been from Ewesdale. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being once in Longnewton, then in Sansystanes. His surety was Archibald Heriot, Captain of Ancrum. He was convicted for intercommuning with Adam and Thomas Turnbull, who had been declared rebels for the slaughter of Patrick Hepburn. Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with John Scott of Wyndheid, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was 'ane half-fourpitt short'. He was presumably a merchant or shopkeeper of some sort. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk in 1691 when he witnessed a baptism for William Scott and Isobel Renwick. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Janet Oliver in Hawick Parish in 1702. They were both from Hawick Parish. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1706. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Brown and their children included Janet (b.1722). In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for John Easton in Galalaw. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He may be the Robert, son of John, born in 1703 in Hawick. In 1742 he was 'Tobacconist' when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for merchant James Douglas; this may be one of the earliest recorded instances of this word being used as an occupation. He was involved in a court case in 1748, in which he had taken £29 from his aunt Jean Taylor, getting Robert Tudhope to pretend to have borrowed it, but in fact he used it to pay a bill to merchant Thomas Turnbull; there he was stated to be a 'writer' (but that may be in error); he was stated to be a tobacconist in the related court case brought by Turnbull against Tudhope. He is stated to be a merchant when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull (from Hawick Shiels) in 1745. He married Margaret Douglas (proclaimed in Cavers and Wilton Parishes) in 1730, and their children included: Thomas (b.1739); Robert (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant James Douglas (surely related to his wife) and gardener Robert Turnbull, and in 1745 were Walter Turnbull from Hawick Shiels (whose own baptism he had witnessed on the same day) and William Scoon, servant to Rev. Somerville. Robert (19th C.) married Mary Smith in Hobkirk in 1831. Robert (b.1847) emigrated from Hawick to Pennsylvania at age 18. He sheered sheep for a living in California, then moved to Wyoming and ended up with a 75,000 acre farm near Grand Island, Nebraska. Robert M. 'Rob' (20th C.) published 'Teviot Reaches' in 1951, containing sketches and etchings around the Teviot. Ronald 'Ron' (??-) headmaster at Burnfoot Primary School who wrote the booklet 'Hawick Common Riding', with the help of the Callants' Club in 1983. He was unfortunately to later become Headmaster at Dunblane Primary School and witness the terrible aftermath of the shootings in 1996. He returned to Hawick as Common Riding Chief Guest in 1997. Thomas (16th C.) witness in 1531 to a sasine for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside being inherited by Hector Lorraine. He was probably local, like the other witnesses. Thomas (b.1829/30) born in Holywood, Dumfriesshire, he was a surgeon in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square. His wife was Mary Ann and their children included John T.E., James Joseph and Mary. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Walterus Talzour Baron de Hassindene' in 1493. He is otherwise unknown as Baron there, so perhaps the translation should be 'of the Barony'. He was allowed to 'componer' for 'communing with the English', the Laird of Buccleuch serving as his surety. It is unclear how he might have been related to any other Taylors. Walter Noble (17th C.) tenant at Effledge who was among those declared as fugitives in 1684 for being a Covenanter. Walter (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1733 when he married Bessie Blyth. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish who married Janet Nichols in 1758. He was at Whihope in 1761. His children included: John (b.1758); and Margaret (1761). Walter (b.1782) son to John in Blackcleughmouth according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He was brother of John and farmed at Highend in Rulewater. He may be the Walter whose children, baptised in Hobkirk, included John (b.1805), Agnes (b.1806), Betty (b.1809), Margaret (b.1811), Thomas (b.1813), Walter (b.1816), Janet (b.1818) and William (b.1821). Walter (b.1809) born at Swanshiel, he was a younger son of John, who had farmed at Unthank. He worked on the farm at Howahill, becoming tenant there. In 1849 he was listed on the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He was still there in the 1860s, being listed as a widower in 1861. In 1834 he married Margaret Gow (whose mother was Margaret Barry). She was said to be a very beautiful woman, who died in childbirth in 1848. Their children were: John (b.1835), who worked on the farm at Howahill; Agnes (b.1838); Isabella; George, who emigrated to new Zealand; Thomas, who lived at Howahill and died there from blood-poisoning, caused by an axe cut; William, who went to Australia, but returned to Howahill; Margaret; and Walter. Walter (19th/20th C.) son of William, with his mother being a daughter of Dr. Pringle. William (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. William (17th C.) tenant in Groundistone. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. William (17th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed as 'Wm Tylzer' on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. It is possible he is the William, son of James and Bessie Scott, born in Hawick in 1644. He could be the William, married to Isobel Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick were Bessie (b.1674), Elspeth (b.1677), Helen (b.1680), Marion (b.1682), Janet (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1687); the 1680 baptism was witnessed by Walter Purdom and William Haswell, the 1682 baptism by Walter Purdom and Andrew Hart and the 1685 baptism by Walter Paisley and James Gray. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in 1684. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson and Wilton Parishes. He was at Todshawhill in 1781. He married Betty Laidlaw in Robertson in 1778 and their children included: James (b.1781); Janet (b.1788); and Betty (b.1792). He is probably the son of David (who lived at Todshawhill) baptised in Robertson in 1756. William (b.c.1780) from England, he was a farmer at Newstead in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Anne. He could be the William recorded as a labourer at Appletreehall in 1840 and 1841. William (b.1821) son of Walter (although which one is unclear), he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He was a farm labourer living at Howahill Cottage (while Walter was farmer at Howahill itself). He married Mary Crozier in 1847. Their children included: Margaret; Janet; and Walter. In 1849 he was among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk and was a trustee. William (b.1840s) son of Walter and Margaret Gow. He went to Australia in his early life, but returned to the family farm at Howahill. He was a County Councillor for Hobkirk Parish. In 1886 he married a daughter of Dr. Pringle in Dundee and they had 5 children. William (1847/8–1916) from the Newhouses family, he was farmer at Ashybank. He was also a cattle dealer in Hawick and owned 10 Teviot Crescent. He married Barbara, daughter of blacksmith James Murray, and she died in 1911, aged 62. Their children included: George B. (d.1917), killed at Mahiwa, British East Africa; Christian R. (d.1926); William (d.1954); James (d.1955); Isabella Murray (d.1955); Eliza Litster (d.1958); Robert (d.1959) The family are buried in Denholm. Rev. William minister of St. Mary's, Cavers and Kirkton 1998–2004 (formerly 'Tailyeour', 'Tailzeour', 'Talzor', 'Tylear', 'Tyler' and variants).

Taylorcleuchheid (tā-lur-klooch-heed) n. Taylorcleuchhead, former farm in Liddesdale, situated around the stream marked Taylor's Cleuch on modern maps. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It consisted of 217 acres, bounded by Riccarton, Cleuchhead, lands held by the Laird of Dinlabyre and Roughley. The farmhouse was shown on the west side of a stream, possibly Todshaw Sike, and this could be the place where post-mediaeval remains were discovered in 1977. This could be the 'Taylor Gate' where labourer William Potts was living in 1797 (see also Tailleycleuch and Taylor's Cleuch).

Taylor's Cleuch (tā-lurz-klooch) n. stream that runs roughly eastward to join the Liddel Water south of Larriston. There are remains of an enclosure between here and the old railway line. It was partly excavated in 1977 before being surrounded by forest. It appears to be prehistoric with later occupation. There are also some mediæval and post-mediæval remains a little to the east by Todshaw Sike. It may have been called 'Tailorcleuchside' or Taylorcleuchheid.

tazie (tā-zee) n., arch. a silly young woman – 'Tazie, A romping foolish girl, Roxb. Hailick, synon.' [JoJ].

teer (teer) v., arch. to perform with vigour, work strenuously – 'Hei was in a teerin kip an wadna stoap a meenint' [ECS], n., arch. a boisterous time, piece of fun (also spelled 'tear').

Teerie see Teri

teesh (teesh) interj., adj. great, terrific – 'A hink the Bay City Rollers ur teesh, mei', '... A've fund ma niche and life is teesh A'm glad that a've come hame' [IWL] (seems to have been around in Hawick at least since WWII; originally restricted mainly to use by children, it was re-popularised by the band Scocha in the 1990s; it is unclear how widespread it has been beyond Hawick; one theory of its origin is that it was a deliberate joke on being 'sheet' backwards).

teesic (tee-zik) n., arch. a spell of illness due to overwork, indisposition of indefinite character.

Tefe (te-fee) n. form of 'Teviot' recorded around the year 800.

teh (te) prep. to – 'wull ee come teh ma bit the day?', 'Sae Aw'll promise teh join the Total ...' [RM], '... though when lengthened as in the remark : Whae ti? (i.e. To whom?) the vowel sound inclines slightly towards that of e in ten' [ECS] (this pronunciation is preferred in some phrases, cf. ti).

teh'd (ted) contr. to it – 'ee could gaun right up teh'd', '... bit ee can pit a variety o' things teh'd an aa like' [DaS] (variant of ti'd; note long e sound).

teh-teh (te-te) interj. ta-ta, used as a parting greeting – 'teh-teh the now then'.

tei (tī) n. tea, a hot beverage made using crushed leaves from the far corners of the Empire – 'go'an make is a cup o' tei wull ee?', 'coffee's no ma cup

o' tei', 'Ee got pies and tei at the muckle tent ...' [AY], 'Yin Common Ridin mornin Ma mother says ti mei 'Ee'd better watch eer-sul, lass, Here's a 'stranger' in eer tei' [DH], a light meal served in the early evening, high tea – 'what's for the tei the night?', '... ee're in an awfu' hurry. At least no until it was time ti gaun hame for yer tei' [We], 'I'll tak' my aith, ye've hed nae tei, So's ye could fill your wames wi' mei ...' [DH]. Tea did not start being drunk locally until about the 1760s, and was quite expensive for some time. In 1768 someone in Hawick was convicted for selling thorn leaves in place of tea leaves and was 'pinioned' as punishment (sometimes spelled 'tey').

teicher (tī-chur) v., arch. to ooze, said of a slight wound bleeding or exuding pus – 'When the skin is slightly cut, it is said to 'teicher and bluid', when the quantity of blood effused is scarcely sufficient to form a drop, South of S.' [JoJ].

teind (tīnd) n., arch. Scottish equivalent of the English tithe, a tenth part of one's income or produce from land, or a tenth of the value of the livestock born on a farm. This originally went to support the Church, but after the Reformation typically went to the local landowner. Such payments were split into 'vicarage teinds', which were minor tithes, often paid in kind – 'The Earle Bukcleugh is patrone, who payis to ye minister 800 merks yeirly, and leidis ye teynd' [PR1627] (and originally to the vicar rather than parson) and 'parsonage teinds' which were the more major tithes.

teind barn (tīnd-bawrn) n., arch. a barn used for storing the grain that was collected as a 'teind', called a 'tithe-barn' in England. The ruins of the old example in Spittal-on-Rule can still be sen.

the Teind Barn (thu-tīnd-bawrn) n. ruined building in Spittal-on-Rule. It was still thatched until the early 1900s, and was said by Tancred to be the oldest building in the parish.

the Teind Court (thu-tīnd-kōr) n. court set up after the Reformation, to deal with the value and sale of teinds, and the adequate provision for local ministers. It was a court within the Court of Session, set up to decide on matters of valuation of teinds, stipends for ministers, etc. After 1707 its powers passed to the Court of Session.

teinder an thirder (tīn-dur-an-thir-dur) n., arch. a person who occupies arable land at a rent equal to $\frac{2}{5}$ th of the produce (1 tenth and another 3 tenths) – ‘... the damage done to the corn at Whitlaw was comprised, and that Patrick Scott and John Gladstains paid the damage to the teinder and the thirder out of their own pocket ...’ [C&L].

Teindside (tīnd-, teend-sīd) n. farm on the A7 south of Newmill, as well as the name for the general area, also referred to as ‘Teinside’. The lands were owned by a branch of the Abernethy family from at least the late 14th century, passing from Sir William to his older brother James in 1393; they were at that time described as lying in the Barony of Hawick, with Archibald, Earl of Douglas as superior. The Abernethys sold the lands to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1494. In 1446/7 Oswald Abernethy appeared before William, Earl of Douglas at Newark and publicly asserted that his only superior of these lands was the Baron of Hawick. The lands were recorded belonging to Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1502. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick. However, in 1572 they were included among those held ‘in property’ by the Baron, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The Scotts of Buccleuch held lands there since at least the early 1500s, although Francis, Earl of Bothwell had the lands confirmed to him in 1585. It is listed among the property of the Baron of Hawick (Douglas of Drumlanrig) in 1594 and 1615. In 1627 they were listed as a ‘25 merk land’ producing ‘500 merks in stok, and to 100 merks in teynd’. The lands were listed in 1634, 1653 and 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. James Grieve was tenant there in at least 1709–10. In 1724 Gideon Elliot purchased the lands from his brother Robert. James Scott was living there in 1731. Thomas Watson owned the lands in the early 18th century and sold them to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1750. There were Murrys living there in the mid-1700s to early 1800s. Thomas Barrie was there in 1788. By 1788 it was valued at £426 13s 4d and still the same in 1811, as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. Gideon Scott was there in 1797 and David Murray in 1799. George Aitken, John Telfer and Thomas Rutherford were living there in 1801. Robert Elliot was farmer in 1841 and Robert Govenlock in the 1860s. There is a hill-fort on the Slaidhill, which lies above, near the source of the Teindside Burn, and 2 more on Teindside Hill. Ancient burial cists were found there in 1869, with an excavation carried out by Dr. Brydon and Lord Rosehall. And there are signs of ‘cord rig’ clutivation there also (also spelled ‘Tynside’, ‘Teinside’, etc., and possibly formerly pronounced tīnd-; the origin is possibly Old Welsh ‘din’ and Old English ‘side’, meaning ‘the slope by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Theynsyde’ in 1393, is ‘Tenside’ in 1446/7, ‘Teynsyde’ in 1494, ‘tynsyde’ in 1502, ‘Teneside’ in 1511, ‘Tenside’ in 1528/9, ‘Tenesyde’ and ‘Teneside’ in 1572, ‘Teyndsyde’ in 1595, ‘Teynsyde’ in 1627, ‘Tynesyde’ in 1634, ‘Tynesyd’ in 1653 and 1663, ‘Teyndsyd’ in 1661, ‘Teanside’ in 1731 and ‘Tein-side’ in 1839; it is ‘Teensydhall’ on both Blaeu’s 1654 map and Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Teindside Brig (teend-sīd-brig) n. bridge across the Teviot just after Teindside. It was built as part of the development of the toll road, which became the A7, perhaps around 1762. At the same time as it was built the road was improved from the bridge to Teindside farm, past the Horse Pool. A new bridge was built around the 1930s. A farm adjacent to the bridge was formerly known by the same name and also called ‘Teindsidebrae’. Walter Hogg was living there in 1779–84 and William Gledstains in 1784. Alexander Miller was tenant there in 1797, when it is ‘Tiendside Bridge’. William Lamb was Taylor at ‘Teindside Bridgend’ in 1799. Hugh Johnstone and John Cairns and families lived there in 1841 and 1851 (it is ‘Teenside bridgend’ in 1781 and ‘Tiensidebrigend’ in 1783).

Teindside Burn (tīnd-sīd-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot (from roughly the northwest) near Teindside. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail. The lands there are listed along with Teinside among the lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands there were purchased by the Scotts of Buccleuch about 1660. As it runs down from Slaidhills there is a waterfall in a ravine. A little further down there was once a cottage, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. Walter Hogg was farmer there in 1797, when Andrew Elliot was also there (it is ‘Tynessydburne’ in 1615, ‘Teyndsideburne’ in the mid-17th century, ‘Teindsideburn’ about 1755 and ‘Tiendsideburn’ in 1797; ‘Teindburnfoot’ is marked on Stobie’s map of 1770).

Teindside Hill (tīnd-sīd-hil) n. hill lying on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, north of Teindside Lodge. It contains the remains of 2 hill-forts, almost obliterated by cultivation. The one near the summit probably measured about 120 m by 65 m, while the one to the south sits on a rocky knoll, measuring about 60 m by 20 m, with a deep ditch on the north side. There were local excavations there by Mr. Govenlock in 1873, finding a 'hut eight feet square'. There is a further fort just to the north-west near Slaidhill. Additionally, there is a modern cairn, called 'Bert's Cairn', with an inscribed stone.

Teindside Ludge (tīnd-sīd-luj, -loj) n. house in Teviothead, also known as Commonsides Cottage, situated on the side road to Commonsides. It was once a farmhouse on the Buccleuch estate. Recently and part of the house has been let out for holiday accommodation. Just inside the entrance gate is a turf-covered cairn about 15 m in diameter.

Teindsideslope (tīnd-sīd-slōp) n. former farmstead near Teindside. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls John Irvine is recorded as farmer there, with 3 working horses. Alexander Johnson was there in 1799. David Cairns and Robert Walker lived there in 1841 and Constable Michael Oliver in 1851 (also written as 'Teindside Slope'; it is 'Tiendsideslop' in 1797).

teind yaird (tīnd-yārd-) n., arch. a yard used to store the produce collected as tithes – 'Item, to James Scott, servant, for keiping of the teynd yaird of Hawik, bigging the dykes therof, and heiding the stakes of the samyn the said year, eighteine pundes' [SB1633].

Teinside (teen-sīd) n. alternative version of Teindside.

Tei'ot (tee-i', tī-i') n., arch. Teviot – '...an thegither oo turnt ti the richt for the Teiot an the coonty toon' [ECS], '... And troots that i' the Tei'ot tippel' [DH], 'As by his haugh the Tei'ot rummle't' [DH] (a contracted spelling to denote the older pronunciation; also written 'Teiot' and 'Te'iot').

Teisday (tīz-di) n. Tuesday – 'I got to Berwick on Monday afternoon, and was unco weel on Teisday morning ...' [RW], 'My friens, be thankfu' that Sabbath is upon the day that its on, for had it been a Tysday ye wad hae been at Jeddart, or if a Fursday ye wad hae been at Hawick' [JW] (also written 'Tysday'; cf. the more modern Tuesdi).

teitim (tī-tim) n. teatime – 'A'll sei ee the back o teitim' (note the usual pronunciation of the second syllable; also tei-time).

tei-time (tī-tim) n. teatime – 'A was verrih mensefi at tei-time: A duist tuik yeh cup' [ECS].

Telfer (tel-fur, tāl-fur) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Grainfoot. He is recorded in 1797 among men of Castleton Parish balloted for serving in the Militia. In 1799 he was now at Redmoss among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in the parish of Castletoun'. He was still at Redmoss on the 1801 Militia ballot. He was probably related to Thomas, who was a shepherd at Redmoss in 1797. Adam (b.c.1770s) shoemaker at Netherraw according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Adam (19th C.) weaver in Newcastleon according to the ballot for the Militia in 1799. Andrew (1734–1804) from Southdean Parish. In 1761 he married Christian Lillico (1736–1815) in Hobkirk Parish. His children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: George (b.1762); James (b.1765); Marion (b.1767); William (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); Isabel (b.1773); and John (b.1781), father of James 'the poetic schoolmaster' of Saughtree. Andrew (b.1784/5) from Crailing Parish, he was farmer at Roundabouts in Chesters in 1851. His wife was Euphemia and their children included Jessie and William (who took over running the farm). His widow was recorded at Roundabouts in 1861. Andrew (b.1808/9) from Hownam he was a shepherd at Jedhead in Southdean Parish. His wife was Mina and their children included John, Helen and Anne. Andrew Hunter Cowan (1845–1916) born at Lethem in Southdean Parish, son of shepherd William. It is said that he was the first to be batpised in the Presbyterian tradition in Wolfelee Free Kirk and was thus named 'Cowan' after the minister. He attended school in Chesters and at the age of 16 apprenticed to joiner Gilbert Amos there. In 1867 or 1868 he moved to Edinburgh, where he became Chair of the Trades Council, being involved in the large demonstration organised after the failure of the Franchise Bill in 1884. He was then on the School Board and became a City Councillor in 1889, being regarded as the first working-class man to hold such a position in Edinburgh. As Convenor of the Plans and Works Committee, he was involved with the merging of Portobello with Edinburgh, with improvement in the fire brigade and with city control of street lighting. Also on the Library Committee, he helped establish a free library in Edinburgh. In 1899 he became a Bailie and was also a Justice of the Peace. He was actively involved in the Edinburgh Borderers Club. His wife was Elizabeth and they had 6 children. Archibald (18th C.) married Christian Liddell in Wilton in 1729. Rev. Charles (1693–1731) minister of Hawick Parish 1723–31. He was the son of an Edinburgh Magistrate, also Charles, who was Captain of the Trained Band. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1712, was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1719 (after reluctantly signing the Confession of Faith) and came to Hawick in 1721 as an assistant to Robert Cunningham. He helped lead sermons in Hawick while the minister was in ill-health. He was presented as the new Minister by Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch at the end of 1722 and ordained early the following year (after the Hawick elders petitioned the Presbytery ‘for putting a quick end of Mr Talefer’s tryals’). He is said to have borrowed heavily from Shaftsbury’s ‘Characteristics’ and other essayists for his sermons, and to have had an ascetic temper and a high opinion of himself. He witnessed baptisms in 1723 for surgeon Walter Scott and for Robert Henderson in Hilliesland, in 1724 for workman Robert ‘Huison’, in 1725 for merchant Thomas Thomson, for William Cathrae in Closses and for merchant Andrew Turnbull, and in 1728 for Thomas Turnbull (it was unusual for the serving minister to be a witness). In 1724 he complained about drunkenness at the Common Riding and in 1725 he proposed that 2 members of the Kirk Session should inspect ‘the families on this town who give ale or brandie, either at the outgoing or incoming of the horsemen and footmen’. But, surprisingly, he reported afterwards that ‘he was well pleased with the deportment and behaviour of those who were at the riding of the Common’. In 1729 he witnessed a couple of baptisms in Hawick, including one for Andrew Leithead. He is recorded preaching before the Lord High Commissioner in 1730 and was called before the Committee on Overtures the next day ‘for certain comparisons which he had used’, but the objections were dropped without censure. He married Katherine Elliot of Arkleton (widow of David Laing of Westerkirk) in 1727 in Hawick, and she lived until at least 1746. They had children: Elizabeth (b.1728), baptised in Hawick; and Christian Ann, also baptised in Hawick in 1730, with witnesses Rev. Crawford (of Wilton) and ‘Mr Cunningham’ (probably Patrick). Charles (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included: Thomas (b.1771); Margaret (b.1774); and Helen

(b.1777). Christian Lillico (1835–1909) daughter of James, Schoolmaster at Saughtree. She ran a small school near Sandholm, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters, also known as the ‘Brig End Schuil’. She was teacher there in at least the 1860s. Confusingly, she was known as ‘Catherine’, as well as ‘Christina’. She died in Newcastleton. Christina (b.1796/7) toll-house keeper at the Townhead Toll in Newcastleton. She was a widow in 1861, with daughter Elspeth and grand-daughter Christina. David (b.1824/5) son of John, he was farmer at Braidhaugh in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farmer of 500 acres there, employing 4 labourers. David (1945/6–2010) from Hawick, he joined Aberdeen Journals in 1973, becoming motoring correspondent, business correspondent, industrial correspondent and business editor. He was then editor of North of Scotland Publications, before returning to the position of business reporter. He married Moira and had children Ross, Robbie, Colin and Lesley. Elizabeth ‘Betsy’ (b.1828/9) born in Hawick Parish, she was daughter of Jane, who was teacher at the girls’ school set up in Cavers in the mid-19th century. By 1861 she was the main teacher at Cavers Cottages, with Margaret Grierson as assistant teacher. George (16th C.) recorded in Dodhead in 1579 when he made an agreement with John Lauder in Single to exchange their lands at the end of a year. He promised, along with Adam Scott of Bonnington, to pay Lauder for tack of a quarter of the ‘rowme’. There is surely a connection with the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer o the Fair Dodhead’. George (17th C.) tenant near Adderstoneshiel listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. He could be the George ‘Telfoord’ listed as shepherd at Addeerstoneshiel among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (18th C.) herd at Nether Southfield. He married Mary Thomson and their daughter Euphan was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1740. George (18th C.) merchant in Hawick who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for merchant James Ekron in 1758. George (18th/19th C.) master of the English School in Hawick until 1822. George (1979–) joined Hawick Boxing Club along with his childhood friend Colin Bain, when they were 11, later joining Hawick Royal Albert Boxing Club in 1998. He had more than 200 amateur fights, boxing for Scotland, with a highlight being winning the Scottish Welterweight Championship in Hawick Town Hall. He had 9 professional bouts in 2003–05, winning 7 and losing 2. Henry (19th C.) married Elizabeth Hardie in Hawick in 1845. James (16th C.) tenant in Huntly and servant to the Laird of Buccleuch in 1579. There was a complaint that the neighbouring tenant in Hutlerburn had taken his horse, claiming that it had crossed the march dyke and was pasturing on Hutlerburn. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, son of William in North Synton. He married Bessie 'Hutsone' and their son William was baptised in 1698. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Wiltonburn in 1705. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Veitch in Galalaw. His children included Agnes (b.1704) and Margaret (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were Adam and William Scott. He could be the James who married Bessie 'Hutson' in Ashkirk in 1696. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Thomson and their children included: Jean (b.1716); and Isobel (b.1722). Perhaps the same James had a son William baptised in 1718 (with his wife's name recorded as 'Jean'). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Lymiecleuch in 1716 when he married Jane Stewart and at Deanhead in 1722. His children included: Jenet (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1722). James (18th C.) recorded in Chapelhill in 1726 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Robertson Parish. He may be the James who married Isobel Bell in Robertson in 1718. James (18th C.) recorded being in Southdean Parish in 1747 when his marriage to Anne Maxwell was announced in Melrose Parish, with John Young as cautioner. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1761 he married Isabel Howison from Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Dinlabryre. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. James (d.1824) dyker whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) baker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. James (b.1797/8) from Langholm, he was an inn-keeper in Newcastleton. In the 1850s he was proprietor of the Buccleuch Arms on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Mary. In 1852 his name was given as 'Telford'. James (19th C.) married Jane Sinton in 1836, the marriage recorded in both Southdean and Jedburgh Parishes. James (1800–62) son of shepherd John and Isabella Taylor, with his step-mother being Anne Davidson, he was referred to as 'the poetic schoolmaster of Saughtree' in Liddesdale. He was born in Southdean Parish, although the census records of 1851 and 1861 state he was born in Oxnam Parish. He had 2 aunts who lived in a cottage near Battlingburn in Southdean Parish, and a story is told of one of them seeing a 'spunkie' (i.e. 'will-o'-the-wisp') the night the other one died. He was first employed as a shepherd, but then became a teacher to the children of shepherds in the Jedhead area. He was a great admirer of the James Hogg, the 'Ettrick Shepherd', who he got to know in his youth and who inspired and encouraged him to write poetry. In about 1824 he was stopped from attending a trial in Jedburgh by the Burgh Officer there, 'Lang Eaby' (or 'Ebey'), and in revenge he wrote a satirical ballad 'The Fearfu' Hinderend of Lang Eaby'. This became popular locally, and it is said that Sir Walter Scott enjoyed reading it; he was also said to be concerned that the poem was potentially libellous and so picked out a hiding place to flee to if any suspicious person approached his dwelling. He was self-taught, becoming schoolmaster in Castleton in 1827 and was at Saughtree from 1834 until he died. He was listed at Saughtree among heads of households in 1835–41. He was recorded as master of the auxiliary parochial school at Saughtree in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He was referred to as 'the poetic schoolmaster', since he wrote several ballads, including a long one 'The Gloamyne Buchte' about an encounter between a shepherdess and a fairy. A version of the ballad 'The Death of Percy Reed' was transcribed by him from an old woman called Kitty Hall (who lived at Fairloans near the head of the Kale). He published poems in the Newcastle Magazine (as well as a series of articles called 'Literary Gossip') and also in the Tyne Mercury. among other places. His first book was 'Border Ballads and other Miscellaneous Poems' (1824), which was dedicated to the Ettrick Shepherd; although it contains language that is rather pastoral (i.e. flowery), nevertheless it contains many dialect words that were probably common at the time and would otherwise be unrecorded. This collection contains his best-known poem, 'The Gloamyne Buchte', as well as 'Auld Ringan', about Ninian Oliver from Smaileleughfoot. 'The Gloamyne Buchte' was published on its own in 1843 and was additionally contained within Vol. II of the 'Local Historian's Tablebook' in 1844. He contributed to Wilson's 'Tales of the Borders' and his poem 'The Hunter-King' was included in 'Living Bards of the Border' (1859). Additionally, he wrote a novel 'Barbara Gray, or the Widow's Daughter: A Narrative of Humble Life' (1835). This was incorporated into an extensive volume of stories and verse 'Tales and Ballads' (1862), dedicated to the Duke of Northumberland (including a substantially revised 'Auld Ringan'); at the end there is a statement about another book, 'Border Gatherings', being in preparation, but this never appeared. It is said that he never earned more than £20 per year, and so must have struggled to raise a family. His house was a simple 'but and ben', with the 'but' being where his family stayed, and the 'ben' being the schoolroom. It was described how he would sometimes tell his class 'in a quiet, conversational way, and in the pure Border doric, of what he had been reading', including treating them to 'a captivating lecture on the tales and traditions of our Borderland'. He was a great friend of Robert White of Newcastle, who wrote about the history of Northumberland and the Border. He is probably the 'schoolmaster, likewise a poet' mentioned being antagonistic to John Halliday publishing his own verses in 1847. He married Janet Beattie (1802–89); she is recorded living at Saughtree in 1841 along with their children Margaret, Christian and Janet (he himself being absent). In 1851 the family were at Saughtree Schoolhouse (with Margaret having moved away by then). In 1861 his daughter Christian was living with them and described as a teacher; she ran a small school near Sandholm, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters. They also had a train driver lodging with them in 1861. His children included: Margaret (b.1833); Catherine Lillico (1835–1909); and Janet Armstrong Stavert (1839–1911), who died in Liverpool. One of his daughters had a son, Telfer John Telfer, who died in 1889, aged 25. His wife Janet died at Bankend. The family are buried in Old Castleton Cemetery. James (b.1821/2) shepherd at Wormsleuch in Castleton Parish. His wife was Christian and their children included Andrew, Margaret, John, James, Mary and Thomas. James 'Jim' (1941–) born between Gala and Melrose, he played rugby for Melrose and gained 25 caps for Scotland. He became Scottish Coach, leading the team to the 1984 Grand Slam. He trained as a teacher, eventually becoming Rector of the High School 1984–93. During some of this time the school was nicknamed 'the Rugby Academy'. He left to become the Scottish Rugby Union's Director of Rugby. Jane nee Bunyan (b.1805) daughter of Thomas, she was born in Cavers Parish, where she married James in 1827. By 1841 she was a widow, working as a dressmaker at West Middle. By 1851 she was teacher at a school for girls in Cavers. Her daughter Elizabeth ('Betsy') and Jemima assisted at the school, with another relative Catherine Rutherford also being an assistant teacher. She was presumably dead by 1861, when Elizabeth was the main teacher at the school. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Cook and their children included: Robert (b.1685); and Janet (b.1703). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1695 for John Armstrong in Park. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Robson and their son John was baptised in 1688. Helen (b.1693) and Margaret (b.1694) may also have been his children, although no mother's name is recorded. John (17th C.) resident of Peelbrae listed among the 'deficient' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the John 'Talefert' who witnessed a baptism for Robert Cook in 1685. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included James (b.1699) and Archibald (b.1703). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son John was baptised in 1707. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Smith and their son George was baptised in 1718. Margaret (b.1720) may also have been his child. John (18th C.) recorded as a householder at Branhholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same John, 'Coater' at Branhholme, witnessed a baptism for Walter Cook (gardener at Branhholme) in 1740. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bettie Muir and their children included: Mary (b.1727); Jean (b.1730); and Janet (b.1732). Charles (b.1735), with no mother's name given, may also have been his child. John (18th C.) Beadle at Hawick Kirk in the 1740s. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Patrick Hardie, for carrier John Ruecastle, for Francis Scott and for Archibald Paterson in 1729, for flesher Robert Wilson in 1730, for William Helm and for George Oliver in 1731 and for Robert Riddell in 1733. He is recorded as 'Officer' or 'Kirk Officer' when he witnessed further baptisms in 1737, 1738, 1741, 1742, 1743, 1745 and 1747. He may also be the John who witnessed other baptisms in 1738 and 1746. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1742), James (b.1743), James (again, b.1744), Jean

(b.1745), Margaret (b.1747), Robert (b.1747), Margaret (b.1751), John (b.1753) and Margaret (b.1755). There may be 2 families here. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Merrylaw in 1755. He married Helen Learmonth and their son William was baptised in 1755. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1757. John (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1761. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son George was baptised in 1766. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1771. John (18th C.) shepherd at Braidlie on Hermitage Water in about 1750. He married Agnes Main and was recorded at Braidlie in 1777 when his daughter Mary was baptised in Castleton Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1766 when his son George was baptised. He may be the John who married Janet Pringle in Robertson in 1765. His name is written 'Telford', although he is probably related to the earlier Telfers who were at Howpasley. John (18th C.) listed along with Thomas as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788, valued at £10. These were among the lands formerly held by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. They were still recorded as owners in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitehaugh in Castleton Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the John, married to Mary Mair, whose children included Mary (b.1788), Janet (b.1793), Anne (b.1794), William (1795), Andrew (b.1797), John (b.1798), Agnes (b.1800), James (b.1802), Gilbert (b.1804) and Jemima (b.1805). John (b.c.1770s) wright listed in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. He may have been brother of William, who was also on the 1799 list. John (b.c.1780) resident of Teindside according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. John (1781–1860) shepherd from Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Christian Lillico. He was shepherd at Carewoodrig in 1851, living there with his wife Ann, daughters Isabella and Mary, son-in-law John Scott and 2 grandchildren. He married Isabella Taylor and secondly married Anne Davidson (1784–1862). With his first wife he had James (1800–62), the 'poetic schoolmaster' of Saughtree. Later children (born in Hownam Parish) were: Andrew (1808–86); William (1810–82); Margaret (1812–71), who died at Flatt; Christian (b.1814); Thomas (1817–84); Isobel (b.1819); and John

(1822–38), who died at Todlaw. He died at Dykeraw and the family are buried in Chesters Kirkyard. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Ann Elliot and their son Robert was baptised in 1819. John (b.1789/90) from Westerkirk Parish, he was farmer at Braidhaugh in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was farmer there of 150 arable acres and 400 acres of pasture, employing 5 people. He was deceased by 1861, with his sons David and Walter taking over the farm. His wife was Isabella and their children included David, Walter, Betsy, Mina and Agnes. John (b.1794/5) resident of Castleton, originally from England. In 1851 he was living on South Liddell Street with his sister Elizabeth. John (19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Isabella Blyth and their children included: David (b.1825); Walter (b.1827); and Elizabeth (b.1829); Wilhelmina (b.1833). John (b.1818/9) from Jedburgh, he was a woollen worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the High Street with Frances, who was presumably either his wife or sister. He married Agnes Kyle and their children included: Janet (b.1849/50); Robert (b.1853); Thomas (b.1854/5); Henry (b.1856/7); George (b.1858/9); and Elspeth (b.1861). John (b.1834) son of William and Catherine Hume, he was born in Southdean Parish. In 1861 he was shepherd at Carewoodrig. He was living there with his wife Jane, daughter Janet, a domestic servant and 2 assistant shepherds. He was surely related to the earlier John who was at Carewoodrig. Mark (b.1826/7) from Nichol Forest in Cumberland, he was a carrier in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on Whitchester Street. His wife was Ann and he had a niece Betsy. Patrick (18th C.) tenant in Hassendean listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Richard (19th C.) farmer at Gillbraehead in 1868. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Elspeth Stothart in Hawick Parish in 1718. Robert (18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1757 and 1760 for shoemaker John Oliver and in 1766 for wright Gideon Easton. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1778 for ex-Bailie Andrew Scott. He may be the Robert who was paid by the Council in 1755 for the use of his horse 'to Kelso, pressed by Bailie Turnbull, with a shouldier [soldier] and his wife'. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. His unnamed child died in Hawick in 1797. He may be the same man as the blacksmith. Robert (18th/19th C.) herd at Jedhead in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He may be the Robert who married Agnes Sinton in Southdean in 1808. Robert (b.1803/4) clogger living on North Hemitage Street in Newcastleton in 1851 and 1861. He was listed in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son, John. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Bell and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1655. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His surname was recorded as 'Talefeir or Davidson'. He married Janet Robson and their son James was baptised in 1687. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1696. He married Margaret Scott and their children included William (b.1696); and Walter (b.1699). The witnesses in 1696 were Adam Scott and William Turnbull. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Armstrong and their son James was baptised in 1703. Probably Mary (b.1708) was also his child. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His father died the year he was born and he later carved his father's gravestone in Westerkirk Kirkyard. He became an engineer who was famous for road, canal and bridge construction, including the Menai Suspension Bridge in Wales. He worked on the Langholm Bridge over the Esk as an apprentice stonemason, and gave a bequest to keep the Westerkirk Library going in Bentpath and another to establish a library in Langholm. He was one of the first to suggest a Borders railway line, specifically a horse-drawn railway running from Berwick to Glasgow. He also published a poem 'Eskdale', which was printed in Hawick in the 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. Locally he was sometimes known as 'Laughing Tom'. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. William (b.1810/1) from Langholm, he was recorded as steward at Todshawhill in Robertson Parish in 1861. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter, Mina. William (19th C.) recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory as teacher at Castleton. It is unclear who he was or where exactly the school was located. It is possible this was an error for James Telfer. William Pattison (1836–1922) son of William Pattison and Elizabeth Murray. He was born in Newcastleton and educated in Dumfriesshire and then in Ontario, Canada. He worked as a stone-cutter and a teacher, later becoming a banker. He was elected a member of the Canadian House of Commons for Grey North in 1904, but was defeated in 1908. His son, William Pattison, Junior, was also a Canadian Member of Parliament (formerly spelled 'Tailford', 'Tailfourd', 'Talliefeir', 'Tylford', etc., and once probably the same as Telfer).

Telio's (tee-lee-ōz) n. cafe, chip shop, and ice-cream shop run by Telio Gonnella (apparently he was named after the village the family came from) in the mid-20th century on Dickson Street. There was another shop for a while on Green Terrace, and Telio also ran the hut near the top of the Loan as a fish and chip shop.

Temperance Hall (tem-pu-rins-hal, tem-prins-haw) n. former meeting hall at 6 Croft Road, the site now occupied by the Salvation Army Citadel. It was constructed in 1879 and initially run by Miss Thomson, a daughter of the local minister. In about 1900 it was converted into a picture house, 'The Theatre'.

Temperance Hotels (tem-pu-rins-hō-tel) n. alcohol-free hotels, which were popular in the latter 19th century, some lasting until WWII. In Hawick the Douglas Temperance Hotel was situated on the Tower Knowe, where the Office Bar is now, Gibson's was on Bridge Street, Inglis's on Teviot-side Terrace, Pringle's on Union Street, and the Washington Hotel at the 'Coffin End'. The Buccleuch and Victoria Hotels were also temperance for a time, and there were others, such as Blaikie's Temperance Hotel.

the Temperance Movement (thu-tem-pu-rins-moov-min') n. a social trend to recognise the evils of alcohol, which flourished towards the end of the 19th century, and died out between the Wars. The British Association for the Promotion of Temperance was formed in 1835 and, supported by some of the churches, it led to organised signing of teetotal declarations and the setting up of rigorously teetotal establishments. Locally the first such organisation was started in 1832, but still allowed the drinking of beers. The Hawick Total Abstinence Society was founded in 1838, with members pledging to avoid all intoxicating beverages. They lasted into the early 20th century, and had a popular annual soiree. There were also the Temperance Hotels (some lasting until WWII), the Temperance Burns Club, and even Temperance tents up the Muir. In 1920 a referendum to have alcohol banned in Hawick was opposed by a majority – ‘Ye’ve been the cause o’ muckle wae, O’ meikle scaith and scorn; I’ll sign the pledge this very day! Fareweel, John Barley-corn!’ [JT].

Tempest (tem-pist) n. Sir Richard of Hertford (c.1309–79) son of Sir John of Bracewell, he had an older brother, Sir John and a younger brother, Peter, who married Mary Douglas of Liddesdale. He spent time in France on business for the English King. In 1347 he was appointed Constable of Scarborough Castle (for life) and in 1350 was appointed Sheriff of Berwick, a position he held until 1354. In 1357 he was made Sheriff of Roxburgh and given the Wardship of Roxburgh Castle, which he held until 1361. In 1361/2 there was an inquest into whether he ‘retained Scottish grooms and other unfit persons’ at Roxburgh Castle. In 1357 he witnessed the treaty for the ransom of King David of Scotland. He was also Deputy Warden of the East Marches in 1359 and appointed Warden in 1367. In 1362 he was again Warden of Berwick Castle. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh once more 1366–72 and Sheriff of Berwick 1372–75. He married Joan, daughter of Sir Thomas de Hertford and secondly Isabel, daughter of Sir Thomas de Bourne. He had sons John and William. Sir Richard (b.1356) son of Sir Richard of Bracewell. He was Warden of Roxburgh Castle in 1385, Warden of Berwick in 1386 and Lieutenant of Carlisle Castle in 1396. He was M.P. for Lancashire in 1401 and Yorkshire in 1403. He fought at Agincourt in 1415. He had at least 3 sons. Sir Thomas (c.1476–1543/4) son of Robert of Holmside, he served in many positions in the north of England. He was in joint charge, along with Sir William Bulmer, of the force that burned Jedburgh in 1523. This raid led to his knighthood. His daughter Anne married Sir Ralph Bulmer. He was one of the English commissioners for negotiating peace with Scotland in 1528.

Temple (tem-pul) n. James (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. His son William was baptised in Minto in 1773. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Alexander (b.1774), Violet (b.1781) and Helen (b.1775). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included James (b.1779) and Nelly (b.1782). James (c.1770s–bef. 1841) recorded as a wright in Hawick on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. On the 1801 list he was recorded as a joiner. He was a joiner of the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In the 1841 census his wife Helen Oliver and 5 children were living at about 33 High Street, with his sons carrying on the cabinet-maker’s business. His children included: Helen (b.1805); James (b.1807); Robert (b.1810); Janet (b.1811); Alexander (b.1813); Marion (b.1815); John (b.1817); Margaret (b.1820); and Agnes (b.1822). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married May Halden and their son James was baptised in 1816. James (b.1807/8) son of James. He was listed as a High Street joiner in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was a master joiner and cabinet-maker, employing 7 men, at about 55 High Street. In 1847 he married Jane Turnbull, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Margaret (b.1848), Robert (b.1850), Helen (b.1852) and William Turnbull (b.1854). R. (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid in 1722 for a ‘jist to the steeple’. He was thus probably a wright or joiner in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Whitriggs in 1737. His children included: James (b.1733); and David (b.1737). Perhaps the same Robert had children William (b.1724), Isabel (b.1726) and Janet (b.1728) baptised in Jedburgh and a son Robert (b.1731) baptised in Ancrum. Robert (1771/2–1827) surgeon in Newcastleton. He subscribed to (to 2 copies of) William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was also listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Elliot (1777/8–c.1858). She is recorded in 1841 as 'Ind' at about 2 South Hermitage Street; in 1851 she was listed as a grocer, maiden name Elliot, living with her widowed daughter Kitty Scott (nee Temple) and granddaughter Helen Scott. His daughter Catherine (or 'Kitty') married Matthew Scott in 1836 and secondly married James Crosby in 1851. He was recorded as a surgeon at Nether Stone in Bewcastle Parish at the end of the 18th century, when he had children baptised there. His children included: Helen (b.1797), who married and moved to Canada; and Janet (b.1799), also known as 'Jessie', who married (probably a Robson) in Newcastleton. He was buried at Ettleton. Thomas (b.1805/6) born in Minto Parish, he was toll-keeper at Spittal. He was recorded at Spittal Bar in 1851 and in 1861 was a miller living at 10 Allars Crescent. His wife was Jane and their children included Alison, Betsy, William, Andrew, Thomas and James. William (18th/19th C.) mason at Hillend in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was 'Wester hillend' on the 1801 Militia ballot. He is probably the William who saw children James (b.1801) and Thomas (b.1805) were baptised in Minto.

Temple Croft (tem-pul-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was among lands whose liferent was held by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779. It was listed in 1779 and 1811, along with 'Notman-shot', with a joint value of £76 16s 8d (it was 'Templecrofts' in 1780).

Templehaa (tem-pul-haw, -hal) n. Templehall, farm east of Harwood, near Wauchope. David Crozier 'at the Tempilhall' is recorded among men of Liddesdale in 1494/5 and 1500, although whether this was the same place is uncertain. It was for a long time part of the Harwood estate. In 1538 and 1539 the lands were valued along with Wauchopebank at 40 shillings, and occupied by Patrick Turnbull. There is a 1567 charter of the lands, together with Brewlands, granted by James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) to Andrew Turnbull (son of David of Wauchope). In 1605 there was an action by Jean and Beatrix, daughters of the deceased Walter Turnbull of Wauchope, to remove their mother Marion Lorraine and several Turnbells from their lands of Templehall and Brewlands. They later passed to George Turnbull of Wauchope, then to Sir James Douglas of Mordington in 1627 and later to the Earl of Lothian. The Earl of Lothian paid tax on £300 for his lands there in about 1663. It was listed as a 4-pound land in 1678, when inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule. At about that time it must have been valued at £229 15s 4d (based on Kerr of Abbotrules other lands). Adam Murray was tenant there in 1694. The farm then passed from William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751 and then immediately to Henry Elliot of Harwood. John Thomson was there in 1751. In 1788 the farm was listed among those owned by William Elliot of Harwood and valued at £229 15s 4d. In 1794 and 1797 the tenants were John and Thomas Clerk. William Hastie was a servant there in 1797, Henry Johnstone and James Dodds in 1799 and William Rutherford in 1801. In about 1811 it was still part of the Harwood estate and valued at £262 10s. John Elliot was there in the early part of the 19th century and James Smith was farmer there in the 1860s. It is also the name of a hill to the south-west, between the Lurgies Burn and the Wauchope Burn. Just north-west of the farm are the remains of a settlement, with the most visible feature being a 75-m long crescent-shaped ridge. On the slope to the south are the remains of an ancient cairn. There is also a place of the same name near Lilliesleaf that is suggested to have had connections with the Knight's Templar, with a 'Temple' near St. Boswells perhaps having a similar origin (it is 'Tempilhall' in 1538, 1539 and 1604 and 'Timpilhall' in 1663; it is marked 'Tempil halt' on Blaeu's 1654 map and has its modern spelling by Stobie's 1770 map).

Templehaa Common (tem-pul-haw-ko-min) n. Templehall Common, the common associated with the neighbouring lands, with uncertain history. Its division was discussed at least as early as 1719, and in 1734 it was arranged by James, Lord Cranstoun, and William Kerr of Abbotrule. At that point it was possessed by the tenants of Wauchope and Templehall. It could be the same place marked 'Wauchope Common' on the modern Ordnance Survey map, to the east of Templehall Hill.

Templehaa Hill (tem-pul-haw-hil) n. Templehall Hill, hill in the southern part of Hobkirk Parish, south-west of Templehall and to the east of Lurgiescleuch. It reaches a height of 342 m. Near the summit is an old cairn about 10 m across and on the southern ridge there is another almost twice as big, now quite denuded and within the forest.

Templehaashiel (tem-pul-haw-sheel) n. Templehallshiel, former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish, on the western banks of the Wauchope Burn, near Templehall Hill. William Elliot was shepherd there in the mid-to-late 18th century, Alexander Lillico shortly before 1788 and John Elliot lived there in the 1810s (it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Templelands (tem-pul-lawndz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed as 'Tempyllandys' in the c.1376 rental roll. They were part of the lands owned by the church, but their precise location is uncertain (there is a place of the same name in Oxnam Parish).

the Temple o the Muses (thu-tem-pul-ō-thu-mew-zeez) n. monument in the form of a classical Greek pavillion, erected in 1817 by David Erskine as a memorial to the poet James Thomson (of 'The Seasons' and 'Rule Britannia' fame). It is situated on Bass Hill beside the Tweed, and near to Erskine's house at Dryburgh. It contains a bust of Thomson, and the original statue of Apollo having long since disappeared a new statue by Siobhan O'Hehir replaced it.

tenand (te-nand) n., arch. a tenant – '...and to becum tennand to me and thaim of the sam-myn' [SB1470].

tenandry (te-nandree) n., arch. land that is leased from a superior, the condition of being a tenant, tenancy – '...tenandry of lande if Hardenwod with the pertinentis lyande within the soyleze of Borthwicsheillis ...' [DoR1445], '...with tennenttis, tennandrijs and seruice of frie tennenttis of the samin, with the pertinentis, liand within the baronie of Branxhelme ...' [SB1569].

tendit (ten-dee', -di') pp. tended – 'The hills where he herdit are bonnie and green, The hirsle he tendit is white i' the glen' [JoHa].

tenement (te-ne-min') n., arch. a piece of land in a town held under some form of tenure and often built upon – '...upon ane tenement of land of his in Hawick, lyand betwixt the land of James Brown on the north part ...' [JW1558], '...befor ane of the baillies of the burcht of Hawik and thair purelie and semple resigne the said tenement of land' [PR1571].

Tennant (te-nin') n. Hugh (19th C.) married Mary Halliday in Hawick in 1840. Rev. Joseph (c.1575–c.1633) from Listonshiels, he was son of John of Cairns, Mid-Calder. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1595, was licensed in 1598 and ordained at Traquair in 1599. He was translated to Bedrule in 1601/2. He added responsibility for Abbotrule in 1605, when he is recorded being presented to the parsonage and vicarage on the death of Alexander Crichton. He appears to have been translated back to Bedrule again in 1608/9 and the reality appears to be that he held both benefices simultaneously for about 15 years. In 1616 he had a bond with Robert Turnbull in Bedrule. He witnessed a bond for Walter Turnbull of Bedrule in 1623 (also said by Tancred to have been witnessed by Thomas Tennant in Ruecastle, but this may be an error for Thomas Turnbull). He appears to have been deprived in about 1621, when Abbotrule was again disjoined from Bedrule. He is still recorded as a resident in Bedrule in mid-1632 (leasing 'Roullis land'). He died before the end of 1633 (probably unmarried), when his brother John of Cairnes became heir to a tenement in Edinburgh and land at 'Listounscheillis'. Katharine see Katharine Elliot (also spelled 'Tennent').

Tennant's Map (te-nints-map) n. map of Roxburghshire published in 1840 and surveyed by N. Tennant. It was the most detailed map of the county before the Ordnance Survey. This can also refer to Walter Tennant's 'Plan of the Town of Hawick and Environs', which was published in 1850, and again is the best record of the layout of Hawick streets and buildings before the large-scale Ordnance Survey maps.

tennis (te-nis) n. raquet ball game traditionally played by people in white outfits near Langlands Bridge. The game was played informally in the mid-19th century, with later tournaments on the cricket field. Early enthusiasts included J.R. Carmichael, J.B. Sime, G.C. Glenny, C.J. Glenny, James Barrie, George Murray Wilson, Elliot Oliver, George Grier, James Locke, and T. Lindsay Watson. A club was formed in the 1880s, and cinder courts laid down at the site below the cottage hospital. However, the club wound up in 1893, with many of the members having switched allegiance to golf, and the courts were abandoned. George Heron Wilson gifted the courts beside the cricket field to the High School in the 1920s, and the courts in Wilton Lodge Park were built much more recently.

tent (ten', tent) n., arch. heed, attention, care – 'Tak tent o' time, ere time be tint' (inscription at 25 High Street), 'A' therfor whatsaeveir they bid yow tak' tent o', that tak' tent o', an' do' [HSR], 'Hear the richt, O Lord; tent weel my crye' [HSR], 'He'd been thinkin' o' the bygane days, An' o' his life misspent, An' vowin' that, if spared to leeve, He wad tak' better tent' [AO], 'A planteet masel i the machine, takin tent no ti crack ma cantel as A claam in' [ECS], '...only take tent! aw was as sober as aw am enow' [BCM1880], v.

to tend, attend, watch over – ‘Then Jeanie McFadzean, wha tented the weans, Sae blooming and lovely, but yet in her teens’ [JoHa], ‘Where tenting ewes is a’ the trade, The brawest dress the tartan plaid’ [DA] (from Middle English).

tenter (ten-tur) n., arch. a frame for stretching cloth, specifically rails with hooks set up outside to dry and evenly stretch cloth after fulling. Large tracts of land around the centre of Hawick were once used for this purpose, e.g. the Commercial Road, Laing Terrace and Rosalee areas, as shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map – ‘The tenter grounds of Messrs. Laidlaw & Sons were almost all swept away ...’ [BM1997], ‘...with its tenter-field for the drying of blankets scoured at the Under Damside ...’ [WAPJ] (this gave rise to the phrase ‘on tenterhooks’).

tentfi (tent-fi) adj., poet. heedful, attentive – ‘...let thine ear be tentfu’ til the voyce o’ my supplicationes’ [HSR].

Tentifutie see Tentyfit

tenty (ten-ee, ten-tee) adj., arch. heedful, attentive, careful – ‘I mankind’s ways hae marked weel, Wi’ tentie, watchfu’ e’e’ [JoHa], ‘An’ Cupid sly, wi’ tentie aim, Pops in some’s heart an arrow’ [JoHa], ‘Come awa’, my little lambie, Toddle tentie, come to me; Weel ye like to get a hobble On yer auld grandfather’s knee’ [TCh], ‘Oh, cruel death! how could ye slay The tentie herd, sae auld and grey ...’ [TCh] (also written ‘tentie’).

Tentyfit (ten-tee-fi) n. Tentyfoot, the local name for an old tower at Branhholme. It is the only remaining part of the former courtyard of walls and buildings around the Castle, the fragment now standing being about 15 feet high. It is a grade A listed building (also spelled ‘Tentifutie’ and variants).

ter (ter) n. tar – ‘ee’ve got ter aa ower yer new breeks’, ‘...and in summer, whan the smuists are woarst an the pluiffin ter froes up atween the causa-stanes’ [ECS], note that the English phrase ‘tarred with the same brush’ more often involved a stick in Scotland – ‘...the sister. who was ‘tarred with the same stick’ ...soon severed the troublesome foot from her leg’ [EM1820].

terce (ters) n., arch. the right of a widow to one third of the rents of her husband’s property, this right being by default until 1681. A document of 1553/4 shows a dispute over the right of ‘terce’ between Janet Ker, 2nd (and divorced) wife of the late Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme and Buccleuch and his grandson, the new Sir Walter.

Teri (tee-ree) n. someone from Hawick – ‘Then rally, Teries, yin and a’, Let this year be the best o’ a’ [RH], ‘Hark again the stirring strains! Rouse ye Teries from your slumbers’ [RH], ‘...They’ll wish that they had ne’er been born Or else been born a Teri’ [JT], ‘...For Teries the wide world over Are Teries evermore’ [TK], ‘There’s a welcome and a greeting from the Teri in the street, And a gladness in the knowledge that old Hawick’s hard to beat’ [WFC] (also occasionally written ‘Teerie’; deriving from an abbreviation of the ancient Hawick slogan; the plural is Teries).

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) interj. short form of the Hawick slogan and battle-cry, ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ – ‘O Teribus! thy magic spell, Thy sons shall own where’er they dwell’ [RH], ‘...And while the strains of Teribus float on the air Within each breast the life-blood proudly runs’ [JCG], ‘...For it still sticks close to us In the town of Teri-bus. Rally round, rally round, rally round’ [AW], ‘The ‘Callants’ of Hawick gathered And joined with the hastening throng; And spontaneous The rousing Teri-bus Rang out as they marched along’ [TK], ‘Cry aloud, ‘Teribus’, conquering terror’ [IWS] (various spellings exist).

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) n. the main Common Riding song, with words written by James Hogg in 1819 to a tune that is surely much older, effectively replacing the slightly earlier words of Arthur Balbirnie. It was originally called ‘The Colour’, and is distinguished from Hogg’s other main song ‘Flodden Field’, which has the same chorus (and is about the events of 1513, rather than 1514). The words were reprinted in 1824, 1829 and 1836, with several changes. The melody bears some similarity with tunes derived from Border (or Northumbrian) pipe music (e.g. ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ and the essentially identical tune called ‘Brave Wully Forster’ that exists in a 1694 manuscript, as well as the beginning of a piece of music attributed to Praetorius, but believed to have been originally by Caroubel around 1600). However, it is unclear whether this gives any hint as to its age or origin. The version played by the Drums and Fifes also has several variations compared with the tune that is sung. An older version of the tune survives (on a manuscript page in the Museum), and said to be the one played by Walter Ballantyne, town piper in 1777; it is a variant of the better known tune, seeming more like a pipe tune, and perhaps fitting the words to Balbirnie’s song better. Hogg’s words were first published in Kelso (partly because of the two satirical verses); it is sometimes also referred to as ‘The New Common Riding Song’, to distinguish it from Balbirnie’s song (the ‘Auld Sang’) of perhaps a generation earlier, which had the same tune. Hogg’s words were clearly influenced by Balbirnie’s (although perhaps they were both using phrases from even older lyrics). A version preceding Balbirnie’s c.1800 verses had as the chorus ‘T for Teri, O for Odin, H for Hawick and C for Common’, but none of the rest survives. It may be that the song was also once called ‘Drumlanrig’s March’. Hogg’s words are not entirely historically accurate, but that has not dampened their popularity. There were at one time suggestions for ‘improving’ the words to make them more factually correct, but this never caught on (it is unclear who wrote these improved words in the latter part of the 19th century, but they are now lost). Hogg’s full version contains 24 verses, although only a subset of 14 of them are commonly sung, and 2 of the more controversial verses were not printed along with the rest until significantly later. There are also 2 additional verses attributed to Hogg that are never included: one referring to Henry Scott ‘the Hero of Quebec’; and the other commemorating the tricentenary of 1814. A shorter 5 verse version of the song is sung at each Ride-out by the ‘Big 4’, after they have mounted for the ride back to Hawick, as well as on other occasions, such as at the Overseas Night on the Wednesday and in the Avenue on the Saturday; these verses begin ‘Scotia felt ...’, ‘After Flodden ...’, ‘Down they threw ...’, ‘Magistrates ...’ and ‘Peace by thy portion ...’. It is sung at St. Leonard’s after the Thursday night Chase, and in the same place after the Thursday and Friday morning Chases of Common Riding Week. Its singing also marks the end of the Colour Bussing on the Thursday. At the ‘Sang Singin’ on the Friday (after the return from the Mair) the Sang Singer sings the complete version. The verse beginning ‘Annual since our flag’s been carried ...’ is used for toasts to the Cornet, ‘High the trump of fame did raise them’ for the Right- and Left-Hand Men (only relatively recently) and ‘Magistrates be faithful trustees ...’ for the Acting Father. The Drums and Fifes also play the tune numerous times, such as when the Cornet is presented the letter on Pickin Night, on the site of the Auld Brig on the night of the Orderin o the Curds an Cream, at the Kirk Wynd at the start of proceedings on the Friday, as the official party march from the top of the Mill Path to the Song Singing, and on the Saturday when the mounted procession passes them at Drumlanrig Place, and at the Handing-Back ceremony – ‘Teerie buss and teerie heather, Aye the ewe lap o’er the heather’ [JR], ‘... Sings ‘Teribus’ wi’ right goodwill On pyramid or steeple’ [MG], ‘A’ man, if ye was to play ony other tune enow but ‘Teribus’, the toun o’ Hawick wad rise’ [RM].

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) n. pipe march (in 2/4 time and D Major), which is similar, although quite distinct from the traditional Hawick song. The tune is very similar to ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ (otherwise known as ‘In and out the dusty bluebells’), much moreso than the familiar Hawick song. Although it is a standard of many pipe tune compilations, it is not generally known to be associated with Hawick, although the name surely means there is some connection. It is unclear when it was first published, and hence it is possible that both it and the ‘Auld Sang’ derive from the same basic tune sometime pre-1800. However, the first definite appearance is in the ‘Scots Guards’ collection of 1954, and so it is also possible that this was merely a personal version from an unknown piper of the early 20th century, or simply an error in the naming of the tune. Note that some web-sites and published discussions erroneously assume this is exactly the same as the Common Riding tune. To further confuse matters there is an earlier version of the tune for the song ‘Teribus’ known, this being in 4/4 time and being a variant of the modern melody, but again with only a passing similarity to this pipe tune.

Teribus (te-ri-boos) n. Sir John (14th C.) listed as ‘Johne de Teribus’ when he witnessed a charter confirming the church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1384. He also witnessed a document relating to the lands of Penangushope and Cauldeleuch in about 1360. It is presumably a coincidence that his name is similar to Hawick’s slogan.

the Teri Bus (thu-tee-ree-bus) n. name of a mini-bus used for transporting old folk in Hawick.

the Teribus Arms (thu-tee-ree-bus-ārmz) n. public house in the Fore Raw in the mid-19th century, opening around 1840. The early proprietor was Michael Wintrup. A glass gin bottle labelled ‘Teribus Arms’ is in the Museum.

the Teribus Altar (thu-tee-ree-bus-awl-tur) n. Roman altar stone at Chesters Museum on Hadrian’s Wall. It appears to contain the word ‘TERIBVS’, and since it has been labelled with a reference to the ‘old gods’, some Teries have suggested that it relates to the Hawick slogan. However, when it is realised that ‘-ibus’ is a common Latin ending, other, more mundane explanations suggest themselves. Most likely the part visible reads together as ‘DIBVS VI–TERIBVS’, meaning ‘to the gods named Viteri’ (or alternatively the broken stone contains only part of an inscription), since there are many other examples of similar words on other altar stones.

the Teribus Clock (thu-tee-ree-bus-klok) n. unique ornamental clock outside Hamish Smith’s jeweller’s shop at the Horse since 1996. It was designed and constructed locally by Hamish Smith, Tosh Scott and other tradesmen. It features 3 horses with riders in Common Riding regalia, which appear every quarter hour, while the chimes play ‘Teribus’.

teribus.com (tee-ree-bus-do’-kom) n. web-site dedicated to all things Hawick, set up by Cameron Reith in 2001.

the Teribus Spitfire (thu-tee-ree-bus-spi’-fir) n. presentation Spitfire fighter aircraft, funded from £5,325 raised by townspeople during ‘Spitfire Week’ in August 1940. It was probably a Mark I Spitfire, identity number R7128, and possibly shot down on 8th July 1941.

Teribus ye Teri-Odin (tee-ree-bu-see-tee-ree-ō-din) interj. the Hawick slogan, whose origin is lost in the mists of time. A popular theory is that it derives from the Anglian ‘Tyr haeb us, ye Tyr ye Odin’ meaning ‘Thor keep us, both Thor and Odin’. However, there is no evidence that Norse gods were ever worshipped in the Borders, and moreover, the period in which the area around Hawick was under the dominance of the Anglians of Northumbria (and hence speaking a version of Anglo-Saxon) but before it was Christianised (and hence not worshipping Anglo-Saxon gods) was quite short. This theory appears to have first been suggested by lexicographer John Jamieson around 1825, and was accepted by Sir James Murray. However, it is not supported by normal phonological development either (where one would have started with the Old English forms ‘Tīw’ and ‘Wōdan’ and these could not have conceivably developed into the Old Norse forms for the gods). Another idea is that the slogan derives from the Celtic ‘Tir a buidh’s, tir a dion’ meaning ‘Land of Victory, Land of Defence’. This is perhaps more likely, since Hawick people spoke a version of ancient Northumbrian (related to other ‘Brythonic’ languages, like modern Welsh) until perhaps the 8th century. A third, and least romantic theory is that the phrase is essentially a set of nonsense syllables used to sing along to the song (analogous perhaps to ‘Hey tutti tatie’, the former name for the tune used by Burns for ‘Scots Wha Hae’, said to have been the march used by Robert the Bruce’s men at Bannockburn). However, it should be stressed that all of these ideas are based on guesswork, and the truth could be something else entirely. In any case it appears that Hawick’s slogan is quite ancient, perhaps over 1,000 years old, and it is intriguing that it has survived through the Reformation and other political and social changes. Its survival is even more curious when one realises that, although familiar to everyone from Hawick, no one knows its meaning! – ‘Teeribus and Teeriodin ... is still shouted by the inhabitants of the borough, when they annually ride the marches’ [JoJ], ‘Teribus ye Teriodin! By our sires who fell at Flodden, Muster swift and rouse the river! Strike for Hawick, and Hawick for ever’ [RSC], ‘Ter y bus! Ter y Oden! Rolls from throat, and drum, and fife, Its deeper meaning mingles With the leaven of their life’ [MC], ‘Hawick heart’s shall e’er be proud. ‘Teribus y Teriodin!’ Sing the slogan long and loud’ [IWS] (the spelling is entirely subjective).

Teridom (tee-ree-dum) n. the state of being a Teri, the area around Hawick – ‘He burns to clasp the callant’s hand That’s come from some far distant land, Aince mair in Teridom to stand The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS].

Teridom (tee-ree-dum) n. web-site aimed at Teries, set up by Jane and Kevin Currie in 2000.

Teries (tee-reez) n., pl. plural of Teri – ‘Hail! Hail to the Teries, True, dauntless and cheerie – Laings, Watsons, and Wilsons, Scotts, Elliots, Laidlaws’ [T].

Terie-ess (tee-ree-es) n. word sometimes used to refer to female Teries (e.g. by George Luff when referring to his waitresses at the 1899 Common Riding dinner).

the Teri-hub (thu-tee-ree-hub) n. Hawick-based email news-group, set up by Graham Peacock in 1999, providing information and entertainment for Teries at home and abroad. It grew out of the old Hawick News web-site list, which was one of the first Hawick-based web-sites. It later moved to being a Yahoo group (also written ‘Teri Hub’).

Teriland (tee-ree-land) n., poet. the area around Hawick – ‘There was a priest in Teriland, An’ had he leaved lang syne He’d been a brave Crusader, An’ gaen to Palestine’ [FL], ‘Yet are there ever in their hearts enshrined, Visions of Teri-land, with many a thought Of friends and friendships they have left behind, Beneath the shadow of the auld green Moat’ [TK].

Teriodin (tee-ree-ō-din) n., adj. second half of the Hawick town slogan, also referring to the song – ‘When that gallant Chieftan came in view, And his war bugle loud he blew, The Hawick pipes played Teri Oddin, And sallied out the Border Bowmen’ [MP], ‘...Join in the old refrain Shout Teriodin again and again’ [JT], ‘They ha’e nae Teri-Odin flag ...’ [JT], ‘Unfold the Teri Oden flag, To kiss the breeze o’ Summer ...’ [JT], ‘Teri Odin’s strain entrancing Through the air triumphant soared ...’ [TK], ‘Though names be forgotten, as time passes by, Teri-Odin for ever – united the cry’ [WFC] (also written ‘Teri Oddin’, ‘Teri Oden’, ‘Teri-Odin’, etc.).

the Teri-Optimists (thū-tee-ree-op-ti-mists) n. theatrical group who performed songs, dances and sketches in the Town Hall in the 1930s. Prominent members included Bay Armstrong, Eileen Bannerman, Cameron Conn, Jimmy Glenny and Ian Mactaggart.

term-days (term-, te-rum-dāz) n., pl. the four days on which rents and other payments were traditionally due in Scotland, also known as quarter days. These days were once very prominent in the yearly calendar, particularly those in May and November; servants were hired by the year or half-year and leases by the year or longer, almost always on those days. The names, as well as the dates, were different in Scotland than in England. Called Candlemas, Whitsun, Lammass and Martinmas, they were originally on 2nd February, 26th May, 1st August and 11th November, respectively. However, Whitsun moved to 15th May when the Gregorian Calendar was formally adopted in 1752. But in 1886 the term days for hiring and renewing domestic and agricultural workers was changed in Scotland to 28th February, 28th May, 28th August and 28th November, and this was confirmed by an Act of 1990. Until well into the 20th century it was common to see the families of shepherds and other farm labourers moving from one farm to another on 28th May.

termigant (ter-mi-gin) n., arch. a violent, quarrelsome person – ‘Termigants have been rife in this same month ...’ [RM].

Term Thursdi (term-thurz-di) n. popular name for the first Thursday after Martinmas term, in November. It was formerly an important day in Hawick, which was treated as a fair day by the country residents. It was a day for settling accounts in Town, and for preparing for the Winter.

The ‘mairt’ (usually a fattened sheep) would be bought for the Winter’s meat supply and there would be a generally festive atmosphere. The practice stopped towards the end of the 19th century.

the Terraces (thū-te-ri-seez) n. popular name for streets in the Wellogate, largely built through the Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Company starting in 1866 and continuing to roughly the end of the 19th century. The land was petitioned for from the Duke of Buccleuch, partly as a result of the 1849 cholera epidemic. The grid-like layout gives little concession to the contours of the land.

terrier (te-ree-ur) n. nickname for a Territorial Army soldier. The T.A. headquarters is on Union Street.

terrification (te-ri-fee-kā-shin) n., poet. act of terriying, state of terror – ‘...wad meak the vera chafts to fo’ abreed, wuv doonright terrification’ [JTe].

terrin (ter-in) n. the act of applying tar, particularly to sheep. This was formerly a common practice locally, used to prevent infection in cuts and for identifying the sheep from a distance. However, the benefits were never entirely clear and it became less common by the mid-19th century as the preference for white woollens grew.

the Territorial Kirk (thū-te-ri-tō-ree-ul-kirk) n. name used in the early days of West Port Kirk.

Terrona (te-rō-nu) n. farm in Ewesdale, off the left-hand side of the A7 a couple of miles before Langholm. There are multiple spellings in older records. It was a 5-merk land when the superiority was inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, in 1550, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert Maxwell in 1619 and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Duchess of Buccleuch, when it covered 457 acres and was bounded by Cooms, Whitshiels, Arkin, Nether Wrae and Flask. James Little was there in 1797. James Paterson was farmer there in 1841 until at least the 1860s. There are remains of an ancient walled settlement to the southeast of the farmhouse (there are many spelling variants; it is ‘Torronna’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Toroun’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Tareona’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

tertan (ter'-in) n. tartan, a distinctive pattern of coloured lines and bands for cloth, traditionally worn in the Highlands, with specific designs attached to clans, often spuriously. Hawick District Corporate tartan was launched in 1996, with a dress version in addition. There is no indication that locals historically wore tartan clothing – ‘There’s the spot where we were lyin’ Rowed within your tartan plaid!’ [JT].

tertle (ter-tul) v., arch. to recognise, observe – ‘To take notice of; as, ‘He never tertled me,’ he took no notice of me, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (cf. tartle).

the Test (thu-test) n. one of a number of oaths of allegiance introduced, particularly in the 17th century, to differentiate between Protestants and Catholics in England or adherence to Presbyterianism versus Episcopalianism in Scotland. The most important ‘test’ was probably that of the Test Act of 1681, which enforced Episcopacy and attempted to suppress the Covenanters. In Hawick in that year it seems that the Bailies and Council subscribed to a specific text, stating that no one should ‘enter into covenants or leagues, or to convocate, convene, or assemble in any councils, conventions, or assemblies, to treat, consult, or determine in any matter of state, civil or ecclesiastical, without His Majesty’s special command’. The tailors and weavers took the Test in 1684.

testamentar (tes-ta-men-tar) adj., arch. pertaining to a testament, nominated in a will, especially in the phrase ‘testament testamentar’, meaning a testament in which the details are specified by the person whose testament it is – ‘The testament testamentar, and inventar of the gudis, geir, sounes of money, and dettis pertening to vmquhile Walter Scot of Branhholme ...’ [SB1574].

testificate (tes-ti-fee-ki) n., arch. a testimonial, solemn declaration, evidence, specifically a document issued by a Kirk Session for someone moving to a new parish, describing whether they were married or unmarried and whether or not they were free of scandal; the requirement to produce such a document was prescribed in an Act of Assembly of 1648 – ‘... by reason of our being vagrant and vagabond persons wanting testificatts ...’ [BR], ‘To a man that had a testificate’ [PR], ‘...and the beadle was further ordered to make inquiry anent the rest of the testificates’ [PR1713].

testit (tes-ti, -ta) adj., arch. testate, mentioned as part of a will – ‘...nor pursue ...but before the Bailies of this Bruch in ther awin Court, except for testat geir, under the pane of £5, toties quoties’ [BR1640], ‘Freemen prohibited from instituting prosecution for debts in any other than the Bailie Court, except testat goods’ [JW1701] (also spelled ‘testat’).

tethert (te-thur) pp., adj. tethered – ‘...and that nane keippe any in the day fra the 15th of April till harvest, except they be tetherit, under the lyik pane’ [BR1640], ‘... The cranes stand oot at the Port o’ Leith Whaur the boats lie trigly tethert’ [WL].

tethert (te-thur) adj., arch. in an untidy, unkempt or confused state (also written ‘thether’t’).

tethery (te-thu-ree) adj., arch. untidy, unkempt, confused (also tethery-methery and tethert).

tethery-methery (te-thu-ree-me-thu-ree) n., arch. an untidy mess, confused state (noted as ‘tetherie-metherie’ by E.C. Smith; related to the children’s counting rhyme, see eendy-teendy).

tetty (te-tee) adj., arch. irascible, bad-tempered – ‘Tettie, Having a bad temper, Roxb.; the same with Titty’ [JoJ].

teuch (tewch) adj., arch. tough – ‘They’re teuch sauchs growin’ i’ the Reuch Heuch Hauch’ [JAHM], ‘... thin Than a robin’s leg And twice as teuch’ [DH], ‘Glooms and glints, sudden flashes of gold across the fields – teuch and smooth on grass ...’ [DH] (the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ū and oo).

teuchent (tewch-en) pp., poet. toughened – ‘The teughtent bow o’ toil’s unstrung, Soft ease comes laughing gay, O’ [JoHa].

Teueot (tee-ee-i) n. another early spelling of ‘Teviot’ (e.g. on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland).

Teuiot (tee-ee-i) n. early form of ‘Teviot’, recorded in 1160 (the pronunciation of the time is of course unknown, but it seems that the v sound may have come later).

Tevidale (te-vee-dāl) n. former name for Teviotdale, used around the 15th and 16th centuries.

Tevidalenses (te-vee-da-len-seez) n. former name for the people of Teviotdale. At the Battle of the Standard in 1130 the second division of King David’s army consisted of them along with the Cumbrenses.

the Teviot (thu-tee-vee-i, -teev-yi) n. major river running through Hawick, having its source at Teviot Stone and joining the Tweed 37 miles later. Its main tributaries are the Borthwick, Slitrig, Rule, Ale, Jed and Kale Waters. Other minor watercourses joining it include: Lang Grain; Rashie Grain; Rams Cleuch Burn; Mare Sike;

Giddens Cleuch Burn; Commonbrae Sike; Hare Sike; Black Cleuch Burn; Frostlie Burn; Falnash Burn; Dryden Burn; Nest Burn; Weens Sike; Teindside Burn; Northhouse Burn; Howden Cleuch; Harwood Sike; Vales Burn; the Allan Water; Fenwick Burn; Wilton Burn; Dean Burn; Howden Burn; Boonraw Burn; Kirkton Burn; Hassendean Burn; Honey Burn; Dean Burn; Grinding Burn; Ale Water; Oxnam Water and Kale Water. The river has always played a significant role in the life of Hawick. In the town it used to be crossed by a ford at the foot of Walter's Wynd, or by boat at the Coble, until the Teviot Bridge was built in 1741. The river was harnessed (and much polluted) by manufacturers in the 19th century. The river is prone to flooding, some historical floods being very dramatic. It also has the potential to dry up almost entirely in hot summers, and also sometimes in the winter (as in January 1748, March 1785, January 1787, winter of 1803/4 and November 1838), presumably due to blockage by ice. Some stone artefacts found around the river in Hawick are in the Museum – '... And Teviot's banks, where flowers of fairy blow, – Couldst thou with cold unraptur'd eye survey, Nor wake to bardish notes the bosom-thrilling lay?' [JL], 'Ah! when shall I by Teviot's stream The haunts of youth again explore? And muse in melancholy dream On days that shall return no more?' [JL], 'O swiftly gae speed the berry-brown steed That drinks o' the Teviot clear' [JL], 'Where nature's lavish hand profuse has strew'd Luxuriant beauties. Here the Teviot winds Her easy course, me-and-ring round the vales' [JR], 'Far better loved young Liliās fair than tales of love to hear, To seek unseen her simple bower By Teviot's waters clear' [JTe], 'Life, like thy tide, sweet Teviot, hath its turns, Its devious windings, wayward, wild, and free' [GWe], 'The moon is on the waters! and silvert white they gleam, And soothing is the melody of Teviot's gentle stream' [GWe], 'There's ae auld toon by Teviot's side, That's famed in days o' yore' [JT], 'And while the Teviot's stream shall glide To reach Tweed's silver strand, They sons shall sing and dream of thee, Thou dear auld Borderland' [AO], 'While the silvert Teviot's flowing Ever onward to the sea ...' [TK], 'There's a toon, by hills surrounded, stands by bonnie Teviot's side' [TC], 'River of dreams, you are dear to us ever, Dear where the broad haughs invite you to Tweed; Dear where the willows dip low to your crooning Songs that you murmur through valley and mead' [WL], 'The Teviot babbles on its way; The clash of steel has passed away' [IWS] (origin uncertain, although the name is very old, possibly Celtic, and perhaps even older, with a suggestion that it is derived from the Sanskrit root 'taváś', perhaps meaning 'surging', which curiously may also be the same root as for the Tweed; it seems that the pre-Celtic hydronym gained the Cumbric suffix 'ed', probably later than the 8th century; it is 'Teuiet' in charters around 1200, 'aque de Teuyoth' in 1279, 'aqua de Teveot' in 1420, 'Theviot' in 1547/8 and 'Teueot' in 1579, with other spellings including 'Teviot', 'Tiot', etc.; it is 'Tiot fl.' on Gordon's c.1650 map, and 'Teatt fl.' on Gordon's map of Scotland in Blaeu's 1654 atlas).

Teviot (teev-yi) n. Ninian (16th C.) listed in 1579 among men accused by the Bailie of Hexham of stealing 2 horses from near there. He was 'of the Hilhous', and his lands were probably the Hillhouse near Newcastleton. The other men named were Mungo Armstrong 'Flie the Gaist', Alexander Bell 'Crat Bell' and Ninian Armstrong 'Gawdie'.

Teviotbank (tee-vee-i'-bawngk) n. merchant ship, built in 1938 by J. Readhead & Sons Ltd. for the Bank Line (Andrew Weir Shipping & Trading Co. Ltd.) and sold off to a company registered in Panama in 1955. It may have been used to lay mines during WWII.

Teviot Bank (tee-vee-i'-bawngk) n. villa overlooking the north banks of the Teviot, about a mile before Denholm. A house was built there about 1791 for David Simpson, designed by Robert Burn. In 1799 Joseph Elliot was a coachman there and James Walker was a footman. The house was rebuilt in 1833 with designs by William Burn (son of the previous architect). There was also a stable building to the west and a walled garden with gardener's cottage to the east. It was the residence of William Scott, grandson of William Scott of Woll, then J.S. Heron-Maxwell, followed by Edward Heron-Maxwell. To the north are cropmarks, indicating a possible ancient enclosure (sometimes written 'Teviotbank'; possibly also known earlier as 'The Knowes').

Teviotbank Gairdens (tee-vee-i'-bawngk-gār-dinz) n. street in Denholm off the north end of Canongate.

Teviot Brig (tee-vee-i'-brig) n. bridge across the Teviot, connecting the Sandbed with Wilton, built 1738–1741 with stone from Spittal quarry. This was the first bridge over the Teviot at Hawick, and it meant that traffic from the north no longer had to ford the river at Walter's Wynd, or travel all the way down-river to Ancrum. There had been some debate about whether to put it at the Sandbed or the foot of Walter's Wynd, the question being resolved by a group of local landowners. There was also a great deal of trouble raising the money (£450 total cost) and paying off the original bond (£250 from the Duke of Buccleuch's commissioners), this being probably the largest municipal project undertaken by the town. The bridge was completed when 'the kistone was perfected and close' on 29th July 1741, but the debt took about 20 years to clear; this is despite other towns being asked to contribute (e.g. Glasgow contributed £5). During construction the animals used to transport materials were pastured on the Common Haugh and Myreslawgreen (with no other animals allowed there during that time). The original bridge was too narrow for carts to pass in the middle (sometimes causing arguments), and was very steep on each side. The piers were strengthened around 1751 (along with drains being added) and after many other repairs it was removed in 1865 and replaced with a less steep and contracted bridge. The architect was Andrew Wilson and the builder was John Marshall. During excavations for the new bridge the trunk of an oak tree was found embedded in the gravel, presumably left there in some long ago flood. The original bridge can be seen in paintings of 1800, 1808 and 1812. The new bridge has 3 arches and was designed by A. Wilson. The bridge was also popularly known as 'the Haugh Brig' and has subsequently become known as the Albert Bridge, possibly because of an error in the Ordnance Survey map of 1898. The name 'Teviot Brig' is also used for other bridges across the river, including the one built at Denholm in 1864.

Teviot Brig Road (tee-vee-i'-brig-rōd) n. name sometimes used for Albert Road, or the street between the Sandbed and the Teviot Bridge (i.e. Orrock Place).

Teviot Court (tee-vee-i'-kōr) n. sheltered housing development built by Eildon Housing Association in 1989–91 on the Tannage Close property previously belonging to the Co-operative Store.

Teviot Crescent (tee-vee-i'-kre-sin) n. street between the High Street and the river, originally part of the Common, with lands feued after the Division of 1777, and the Wee Haugh being the sole remaining piece of public land. The area was used as nurseries by Dickson's. The houses were built around 1832 as skilled, middle-class workers' residences, and are now listed for preservation.

Teviotdale

They are 2 storeys, but most have attic extensions with dormer windows. The street was obviously named after the river. William Laidlaw & Sons had their Teviot Crescent Mills here. A mill lade used to run from Laidlaw's Cauld along the side of Teviot Crescent and through the Mills. It was filled in in 1914. The Drums and Fifes walk along this street as part of their march around the old tolls on 'the Nicht Afore the Morn'.

Teviot Crescent Mills (tee-vee-i'-kre-sin'-milz) n. hosiery and tweed factory built by William Laidlaw in 1834 on Teviot Crescent, to the north of the Little Haugh, and later extended. The suitability of the site (owing to the drop in the Teviot) was first suggested by millwright Gideon Scott. The factory was once very large, extending along the Teviot from the Little Haugh until almost the foot of Dovecote Street. The footpath along the riverside was popularly known as 'the Back o the Mill' or 'Chinnie's'. The factory was also referred to as 'Laidlaw's'. It was demolished in about 1908 and the site cleared. The open dam was filled in around 1914, with the southern part later becoming a car park. The site of the mill was used as a garage (later a supermarket) and also contained the Henderson Technical College (now houses).

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i'-dāl) n. the valley of the Teviot, in which Hawick is nestled. The word is sometimes synonymous with Roxburghshire, i.e. extending beyond the boundaries of the river valley itself. It was also the name used for the local arch-deaconry in early church organisation. This area was part of the Diocese of Durham in the 11th century, but was transferred to the See of Glasgow by the end of the 12th century. The region was occupied by the English in the 14th century, neing recovered in 1383/4 – 'My native stream, my native vale, And you green meads of Teviotdale ...' [JL], 'When morn's first rays fall quivering on the strand, Then is the time to stretch the daring hand, And snatch it from the bending poplar pale, The magic harp of ancient Teviotdale' [JL], 'And for the world I wadna' leave My Bonnie Teviotdale' [JoHa], 'Young Mary was the loveliest lass In all green Teviotdale; Her cheek outvied the budding rose, Her breath the rosy gale' [JTe], 'Oh, Teviotdale! loved land of song, What memories to thee belong' [JCG], '... Where nature's voices join to speak In praise of glorious Teviotdale' [RHL], 'O sing me songs of Teviotdale That tell an old familiar tale' [IWS] (called 'Teuidalia' by the Romans; it was 'Teuegetedale' in about 1117, 'Theiudall' around 1147, 'Thevi-etedalia' about 1165, 'Tevietedale' in about 1170, 'Teuietesdale' in the early 13th century, 'Tev-idall' in Bagimond's Roll of 1275, 'Thevidat' in a Scottish record of 1297, 'Tevydalle' in an English document of 1391 and 'Tevidalia' in the 1407 charter for the Barony of Hawick; the early spelling varies wildly, e.g. 'Theuydalia' in about 1360, 'Teuidalie' in 1415, 'Thewidalie' in 1427, 'Teuidaylle' in 1431, 'Teuidale' in 1433/4, 'Tev-idalie' in 1448, 'Tevidalia' in 1453, 'Theuidaille' in about 1452, 'tevidale' in 1498, 'Tewidall' in 1501, 'Tavidale' in 1516, 'Tevidale' in 1479, 1500 and 1525, 'Tyvidalie' in 1525, 'Tevidall' in 1530, 'Tavidale' about 1540, 'Tewydayll' in 1546, 'Theviotdall' in 1547/8, 'Tevydell' in 1566, 'Tewidale' in 1567, 'Teviotdall' in 1583/4 and 'Teuiotdall' in 1591).

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i'-dāl) n. song with words by Robert H. Laidlaw and music by Frank Simpson. The words were published in the Hawick Express in 1934 and reprinted in 1950 when the music had been written. It was first sung publicly at the Glasgow Hawick Association's Common Riding Night, the singer being Mrs. Margaret Turnbull (a niece of Francis George Scott). The original key of D major was later lowered to B flat major. It has no chorus, and is probably a little too complex to be sung regularly.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i'-dāl) n. blend of pipe tobacco sold by D. Simpson Ltd., from about the War years until the 1960s.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i'-dāl) n. blended whisky, formerly labelled and sold by John Turnbull of Hawick.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i'-dāl) n. Thomas (16th C.) Englishman, who was tenant in Ingram and had a local surname. He was recorded in 1590 as 'Thomas Tevidaile' when it is claimed that he was wounded by a group of Scottish raiders, specifically Burns, Youngs and others.

Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club (tee-vee-i'-dāl-am-ee'-ur-bī-see-kul-klub) n. earliest known cycling organisation in Hawick, also known as Teviotdale Cycling Club. It was formed before 1881, when the Hawick Bicycle Club (to become the Hawick Cycling Club) was formed, and some competitive events were held between them in the 1880s. The club ceased to be active in about 1889.

Teviotdale Bakery (tee-vee-i'-dāl-bā-ku-ree) n. former bakery at 2 Princes Street. It was run by Martin P. Baillie, father of singer Isobel.

the Teviotdale Club (thu-tee-vee-i'-dāl-klub) n. former social club near the foot of Beaconsfield Terrace, also known as 'Hawick Billiard Club'. The building was constructed in 1877, and has had many subsequent uses, including as a milliners, the office for Bonsor's factory and the Jehovah's Witnesses Kingdom Hall.

Teviotdale Crescent (tee-vee-i'-dāl-kre-sin) n. ??.

Teviotdale Cyclin Club (tee-vee-i'-dāl-sī-klin-klub) n. alternative name for Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club.

Teviotdale Dairy (tee-vee-i'-dāl-dā-ree) n. former dairy at 49 North Bridge Street, next to the Buccleuch Memorial. The buildings were designed in about 1899 by J.P. Alison as a symmetrical, 2-storied, 3-bay block in red sandstone, with Dutch influence in the detailing. The company was set up in the late 19th century and continued in the 1930s as 'Honeyburn and Teviotdale Dairy Company' by Andrew Haddon and his son Andrew. Other partners were Jimmy Taddei and Mr. Collier the grocer. The company delivered certified (i.e. Brucellosis and T.B. free) milk to the local region. It was later owned by the Buttercup Dairy Company. It finally folded in 1982, with the building surviving (with monogrammed gable still visible) as a shop, although the bottling plant at the back was demolished.

Teviotdale Farmers' Club (tee-vee-i'-dāl-fer-murz-klub) n. organisation formed in 1859 to be a forum for discussion and to represent the interests of local farmers. The first President was William Aitchison from 1859–73, with James Oliver being secretary from 1859–1905. It used to meet in a room in the Tower Hotel, where portraits of several ex-Presidents hung through much of the 19th century. It grew out of the Agricultural society for the west of Teviotdale, formed by James Douglas of Cavers in 1835 (although both existed together for several decades). The Oliver family were Honorary Secretaries for the Club 1859–1994. The regular meeting time has been Thursday nights during the winter months. The club is still going strong.

Teviotdaleheid (tee-vee-i'-dāl-heed) n. name formerly used for the upper Teviot valley, particularly to refer to the Buccleuch estates there in the 17th and 18th centuries. It was once included in the lands formerly known as Ringwoodfield. It is referred to in 1551 as part of the bounds described when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Justiciar of Liddesdale (it is already ‘Teviotdaleheid’ in 1551 and ‘Teviotdailheid’ in 1633).

Teviotdale Herriers

Teviotdale Herriers (tee-vee-i’-dāl-he-ree-urz) n. Teviotdale Harriers, the local amateur running club. Following a cross-country run by 9 local men, who met at Deanfield, the club was formed in 1889 as a by several local merchants and professionals. The 12 founders were John R. Turnbull, Findlay Purdom, George Heron Wilson, John Purdom, Douglas Oliver, Robert Blair, James Blair, Harold Evers, Robert Anderson, Charles McLaren Purdom, Willie Laing and Robert Laing. The first Captain, Vice-Captain and Secretary/Treasurer were John R. Purdom, George H. Wilson and Charles M. Purdom, respectively. It is said to be the third oldest in Scotland in continual existence. The inclusion of track competitions came a few years after the club started. The club’s Challenge Cup was first presented in 1894. Rob Barton was an early success for the club, representing Britain at 800 m in the 1908 Olympics. A Junior Section was formed in 1907 and a Ladies’ Section in 1930. Clubrooms were built on Bath Street in 1956, and moved to the former Citizens Advice Bureau at 1 Towerdykeside in 2006. A history, ‘The First Hundred’ was written by John L. Coltman in 1989.

Teviotdale Hockey Club (tee-vee-i’-dāl-ho-kee-klub) n. mixed hockey team existing before WWI, based in Hawick. The 4 Laing brothers all played for the team.

Teviotdale Leisure Centre (tee-vee-i’-dāl-lei-shur-sen’-ur) n. official name for the Leisure Centre, also known as ‘T.L.C.’.

Teviotdale Lodge (tee-vee-i’-dāl-luj, -loj) n. house in Commonsides, just past Newmill, built in 1934 as a shooting lodge for the Duke of Buccleuch. It has been for many years run as a hotel, Teviotdale Lodge Country House. It has also been the site of Common Riding Ride-outs.

Teviotdale Lodge (tee-vee-i’-dāl-luj) n. Hawick branch of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes, Lodge 10417. Sometimes known as ‘the Buffs’, this was one of two local branches of a fraternal and benevolent organisation founded in the 19th century. It folded in 1990.

Teviotdale Mills (tee-vee-i’-dāl-milz) n. former factory at the corner of Commercial Road and Albert Road, being the main premises of Scoon & Hood, previously Scoon & Barrie. It was built in 1877 (or perhaps earlier) by Greenwood, Watt & Co., and sold to Scoon & Barrie in 1888. J.P. Alison designed a new yarn store there. It was later Scoon & Hood’s until about 1930. It may also have been owned by Innes & Henderson. The building more recently became a garage, with Croall Bryson.

Teviothaugh

the Teviotdale Regiment (thu-tee-vee-i’-dāl-re-jee-min’) n. foot regiment formed by Sir William Kerr, 3rd Earl of Lothian, in 1639, after the signing of the National Covenant. It was one of the armies raised to protect Scotland against Charles I, and also referred to as ‘Lothian’s Regiment’ (Buccleuch commanded a Tweeddale regiment, Hume a regiment from the Merse, etc.). The Regiment probably consisted of about 500 men, many of whom must have been local. They were part of the Covenanter force that crossed the Tweed with Montrose in 1640, capturing Newcastle. The Regiment was disbanded in 1641, but reformed in 1642 and sent to Ireland. About 1642 Lords Lothian, Buccleuch and Cranston were made Colonels of foot of a combined force, with Sir William Scott of Harden commanding the horse. They returned from Ireland in 1644, but mutinied for lack of pay in 1645 and then suffered huge losses at the Battle of Auldearn. The Regiment continued to exist for about the next 40 years.

the Teviotdale Rifles (thu-tee-vee-i’-dāl-rī-fulz) n. alternative name for the Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteers, also known as the Border Rifles.

Teviotex (tee-vee-ō-teks) n. textile company based at 15 Commercial Road, weaving country tweeds and luxury cloths at Lovat Mill.

Teviot Grove Academy (tee-vee-i’-grōv-aw-ka-du-mee) n. seminary run towards the end of the 19th century at 10 Union Street by James Brand, also known as ‘Brand’s Schuil’. It was taken over in 1895 by the School Board and run as the town’s Secondary School. Pupils were transferred to the new school from Buccleuch Street along with the teacher A.S. Williams. The Science and Art classes were held in the Buccleuch Memorial, and James Brand was the Rector. The secondary school transferred back to Buccleuch Street in the early 20th century. School Inspectors’ Reports from 1896–1904 are in the National Archives.

Teviothaugh (tee-vee-i’-hawf) n. farm near Denholm, on the north side of the Teviot, just beyond the north end of Denholm and to the south of Minto. It was once part of the Minto estate. Nailer John Oliver was living there in 1815. Christopher Hislop was farmer there in 1841. It was farmed by James Young in the 1860s and by the Miller family in the late 19th century, until the 1920s.

Teviotheid (tee-vee-i'-heed, teev-yi'-heed) n. Teviothead, village about 9 miles south of Hawick, which is spread out along the A7, and was formerly called Caerlenrig. Prior to the opening of the Scots Dyke to Haremooss Turnpike, there was an alternative route from Langholm to Selkirk (skirting past Hawick) which diverged at Teviothead and crossed to the Borthwick valley. The area was for many years the home of Henry Scott Riddell, with a plaque on his cottage there, his memorial cairn overlooking the area, and his burial place in the churchyard. The Chapel of St. Mary's of Caerlenrig existed there from early times. There was a 'chapel of ease' there, for the outlying members of Hawick Parish from the early 18th century. The parish itself was formed in 1850 out of parts of Hawick and Cavers, and extends to the Dumfriesshire boundary. Prior to this time the area was generally known as Caerlenrig. The area was famous for the 1530 capture and hanging of Johnnie Armstrong and his men. His grave and commemorative plaque are there. The village long had its own primary school, but it was closed in 2004. It also had its own library from at least the 1830s. A stone war memorial (designed by J.P. Alsion) was erected after WWI – 'There is no men of all the men in this grey troop of mine But blind might ride the Borderside from Teviot-head to Tyne' [WHO], 'At Teviothead there stand three stones, If ever you're that way, Take time to seek them out And read the words they have to say. One man was called to fight a fight And one to win a race And one to write a special song To mark his time and place' [IWL] (the place name appears as 'Teviotheid' in 1623 and is used regularly from the 1660s).

Teviotheid Cottage (tee-vee-i'-heed-ko'-eej) n. home of Henry Scott Riddell at Teviothead, built for him about 1840 by the Duke of Buccleuch, and also known as Dryden Cottage, Caerlenrig Manse and Dryden Burnfoot. It still exists and has a commemorative plaque to Henry Scott Riddell, erected there in 1898. About 100 yards to the east there were 2 ancient cairns that were excavated in 1869, an iron spearhead being found, which is now in Hawick Museum. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows an additional ruined building that is now gone.

Teviotheid Haa (tee-vee-i'-heed-haw) n. Teviothead Hall, village hall in Teviothead, used for various community events.

Teviotheid Library

Teviotheid Kirk (tee-vee-i'-heed-kirk) n. church in Teviothead Parish. The site of the ancient Chapel of St. Mary's of Caerlenrig lies within the old churchyard, and contains an ancient stone, as well as the burial site of Johnnie Armstrong, with the memorial stone of 1897. 'Mr' Thomas Hume was recorded witnessing baptisms in the area in 1713 and 1714, suggesting he was acting as preacher there. There was a 'chapel of ease' near there around 1715, as part of Hawick and Cavers Parishes, built on the Thornyhaugh by Falnash, with regular services commencing in about 1721. A collection was made in Hawick Parish to raise money to repair the masonry of the meeting house in 1722. A petition of 1725, signed by about 100 locals, requested the Duchess of Buccleuch to supply an allowance for a preacher. In the 1752 Hawick Parish records the church is referred to as 'Meeting House at Thorny Hall'. A new building constructed on the other side of the stream in 1799 (later converted into the village school). The Parish was created in 1850 from the more distant parts of Hawick and Cavers, repaired in about 1821 when a new preacher was installed. The church was built in 1855/6, and designed by Mr. Cowan, the Duke of Buccleuch's Clerk of Works. It is a plain rectangular building of whinstone, with freestone edges and buttresses. Some alterations were designed by J.P. Alison around 1900. The church was linked with Hawick Old Parish 1972–89 and with Wilton from 1989. It celebrated its 150th anniversary in 2005, with the present Duke of Buccleuch in attendance. A communion token exists from 1854, oval in shape. A roll of the ministry is: Thomas Hume, at least 1713–14; David Graham, from 1714; John Chisholme, from 1720; John Laurie 1738–c.45; Andrew Walker 1745–50; Robert Rutherford 1750–56; Patrick Kerr, from 1757; James Erskine 1763–64; John Riccarton 1764–65; Charles Paton, from 1780; James Sanson 1785–c.88; Thomas Dyce 1792–c.1804; Robert Shaw 1804–16; Joseph Thomson 1817–19; Gavin Turnbull 1821–c.31; John Dobbie, about 1831; Henry Scott Riddell, 1832–42; William Lamb 1843–44; Daniel MacNee, from 1847; James Duncan 1850–53; Robert Young 1854–84; Robert F. Colvin 1884–87; Archibald H. Dinwoodie 1887–1919; Arthur H. Dunnett 1920–24; David S. Steven 1925–29; James Livingston 1929–40; James Hill 1940–63; Robert McConnell 1966–72; David L. Wright 1972–86; George Watson 1989–91; Brian Hendrie 1992–97; John Shedden 1998–.

Teviotheid Library (tee-vee-i'-heed-II-bru-ree) n. former library in Teviothead Parish, also called the Caerlenrig Chapel Library. It was probably established in the early 1800s and mentioned in the New Statistical Account in 1839.

Teviotheid Parish (tee-vee-i'-heed-pā-reesh) n. Teviothead Parish, formed in 1850 from the outlying parts of Hawick and Cavers parishes, centred on the village of the same name. It is bounded on the south by Dumfriesshire, and on the other sides by the parishes of Robertson, Hawick, Cavers and Castleton. There was a chapel at Caerlenrig from early times and a 'Chapel of Ease' here from long before the Parish was created. Parish records exist from 1824.

Teviotheid Schuil (tee-vee-i'-heed-skil) n. primary school in Teviothead, which taught pupils up to the end of Primary 5. There was informal teaching there earlier, but the teacher's salary was not established until 1803. Mr. Armstrong 'the Tailor' (brother of Hawick schoolmaster Christopher) was master there in the early 1800s. When the Presbytery refused to allow Tom Jenkins to take over as teacher, the smiddy was converted for his use (about 1815–18), with him having as many as 45 pupils and the official school just 4. The parish-appointed schoolmaster at that time was a Mr. Elliot. When Jenkins left, the new schoolmaster for the district was Simon Little, who was there until at least 1861. It was referred to as a 'side-parochial school' in 1839 and was run by Hawick and Cavers Parishes together. There were more than 30 pupils in the 1830s. The school closed in 2004, with the pupils being transferred to Drumlanrig.

Teviot Kirk (tee-vee-i'-kirk) n. Teviot Parish Church, being a new name for St. George's, adopted in 1988, and having links with Robertson.

Teviot Lodge (tee-vee-i'-loj, -luj) n. house that stood on the eastern part of the site of the present High School until shortly after WWII. It was built for the Dickson family, Miss Dickson being owner in 1824 and William Dickson living there in the mid-19th century. It was later the home of Col. William Scott Elliot. It was the first house in Hawick with electric lighting, installed by William Elliot (with the assistance of William Melrose), using 2 copper wires in porcelain insulators, running all the way from his factory at Tower Mill (across the roofs of houses, etc.). An ingenious mechanism allowed Elliot to operate a sluice at the mill so that the lights went off when he was ready for bed. And it was also arranged for signals to be sent by morse code between the house to the mill. A billiard room was added to designs by J.P. Alison in 1890. The daughters of Col. Elliot gifted the house and grounds to the school in 1933. It was used for a while as a nursery, and as the headquarters of the Women's Voluntary Services Organisation during WWII, while the gardens became part of the 'dig for victory campaign' and the riverside lawn was used for games. The house was demolished in the 1950s to make way for the High School science buildings and gymnasium, built around 1960. Wood's 1824 map shows its location and the lay-out of the grounds. A bungalow built at the corner of the site in the 1970s was given the same name.

Teviot Road

Teviot Mill (tee-vee-i'-mil) n. hosiery factory in Weensland, built by Walter Wilson in the 1850s, on a piece of ground that had formerly belonged to John Oliver & Sons. The premises of Walter Wilson & Sons there made hosiery and tweeds. It was later associated with Sime, Williamson & Co. and Kenway & Co. Part of the mill was used for a while as barracks during WWI (also sometimes plural 'Mills').

Teviot Parish (tee-vee-i'-pā-reesh) n. Teviot Parish Church, being the name used for what was St. George's Church, with a connection to Robertson.

Teviot Place (tee-vee-i'-plis) n. street name used in the mid-19th century, presumably the same as one of the other similarly named streets.

Teviot Raw (tee-vee-i'-raw) n. Teviot Row, street alongside the river in the Weensland area, previously named simply 'Weensland', renamed when houses were constructed in 1872 and demolished when considered unsafe in 1968.

Teviot Road (tee-vee-i'-rōd) n. road along the Teviot, parallel to the High Street, leading from Teviot Crescent to the foot of the Mill Port. The houses were developed from 1824, and on Wood's map of that year it is labelled 'New Projected Street'. Previous to that it was a roughly 3 foot wide cobblestone path, close to the water level, which was dangerous in high water, and connected the foot of Walter's Wynd with the Round Close. In the 1830s there was a proposal to build a High Street bypass along the riverside here, together with a bridge to the Sandbed, linking with the New Road, but this never transpired. During the construction of Pringle's Rodono Mills in the 1950s and 1960s there was extensive demolition of old buildings and closes around the bottom of the Round Close, with replacement by the path and steps. After Rodono was demolished the ground was cleared in 1980, part being grassed over and part being used as a car park. The Health Centre was built there in 1989.

Teviotside (tee-vee-i'-sīd) n. poetic name for the banks of the Teviot – ‘As I came in by Tiviot-side, And by the Braes of Branhholm, There I spied a bonny lass; She was both neat and handsome’ [CPM], ‘Welcome Spring’s return’d again, Trees bud, flowers deck the plain, Birds their former notes do strain, Among the woods of Tiviot side’ [BY], ‘By Teviotside they took this Colour, A dear memorial of their valour’ [AB], ‘No place could be so dear to me As Bonnie Teviotside’ [RHL], ‘No pen or brush can e’er describe The beauty of the Teviotside’ [JCa], ‘A love ti walk be Teviotside And sei its ripplin witters glide’ [IWL].

Teviotside Foondry (tee-vee-i'-foon-dree) n. former premises of James Melrose & Sons on the east side of Commercial Road, adjacent to the Victoria Laundry.

Teviotside House (tee-vee-i'-sīd-hoos) n. former private school at 1 Teviotside Terrace (then a corner house on North Bridge Street), run by Mrs. Dumbreck from 1865 until the 1870s. It was a school for girls, but also took in small boys, one of them being Sir Thomas Henderson. It was continued by her daughters, Euphemia and Katherine, and perhaps also by the Misses Mitchell into the 1880s.

Teviot Road (tee-vee-i'-sīd-rōd) n. name used for the south side of Commercial Road before it was officially named in 1884.

Teviot Terrace (tee-vee-i'-sīd-te-ris) n. short one-sided street off North Bridge Street, being the back of some houses on Dovecote Street, built around 1875. The Dumbrecks had a school for girls here on the corner from about 1865, called ‘Teviotside House’, which was presumably the origin of the name (with the street not actually very close to the Teviot).

Teviot Square (tee-vee-i'-skwār) n. former name for the Sandbed, or the western or central parts, in use between about 1847–57 (e.g. in Slater’s 1852 directory). The name had been officially changed by the Council, but was never very popular – ‘...An’ divots an’ rough-heads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK].

Teviot Stane (tee-vee-i'-stān) n. source of the Teviot, reached by walking about 2½ miles over the moorland from where the road ends at Merrylaw farm. It was once the extremity of Cavers Parish, before being transferred to Teviothead in 1850. There was once a large stone there, said to be 4 feet high and ‘thickly studded with initials’, but broken into fragments, probably in the 19th century. An inscribed boulder was erected there by the Callants’ Club in 1931 – ‘... And urged, in dreams, the forest race, From Teviot-stone to Eskdale moor’ [SWS], ‘Does your memory, Teviot, wake, To your birth by Teviot Stone’ [RSC], ‘Near to the stream that with pellucid wave, From Teviot stone flows to the Tweed’s fair breast ...’ [JCG], ‘And Tei’ot Stane pinpointed wi a dab o’ jeely ...’ [DH], ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill But ootbye Rashiegrain Fresh sprung frae Teviotstane They’re clear as crystal rill’ [WL] (also sometimes ‘Teviotstane’; it is marked ‘Tiot-stane’ on Gordon’s map c. 1650 and ‘Tiot stain’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Teviotstane see Teviot Stane

Teviot Tweed (tee-vee-i'-tweed) n. tweed merchants located at 17 High Street (or equivalently the Round Close) around 1906 (the name seems like an oxymoron).

Teviot Viaduct (tee-vee-i'-vI-a-dukt) n. another name for the Station Viaduct.

tew (tew) v., arch. to toughen leather, to toughen or shrivel in cooking, to tire, wear out (see also tewd).

tew-airn (tew-ār) n., arch. the iron plate in which a blacksmith’s belows is fitted, the nozzle through which the blast passes into a blacksmith’s fire (also written ‘tew-arne’ and ‘to-airn’).

tewd (tewd) pp., adj., arch. shrivelled, sapless (said of fruit) – ‘...whan the bruizzin, frizzlin heat turns frush things tewd and rizzert’ [ECS], toughened, worn out – ‘Nor was A tewd or mauchless, bit limbber an lither’ [ECS] (see tew).

the Text Hoose (thu-tekst-hoos) n. building at 3 Main Street, Denholm, bearing the inscriptions ‘All was others all will be others’ and ‘Tak tent in time ere time be tint’, just like houses on Hawick High Street. The house was apparently originally built in the 18th century by Thomas Turnbull, as one of 5 houses constructed for his 5 sons. It was demolished in 1910 and rebuilt by Dr. John Haddon, with the texts inspired by the ones in Hawick.

textiles (tek-stīlz) n., pl. the industry that has been the mainstay in Hawick for more than 300 years. It began with hand knitting, while frame knitting was introduced around 1680, carpet weaving from the early 1750s and hosiery became commercialised by John Hardie in 1771. In 1728 the Board of Manufactures set up a person in Hawick (as well as 9 other towns), to sort, staple and wash coarse, tarred wool. In 1777 there were stated to be about 65 looms in the Town, manufacturing a range of linen and woollen products, and by 1820 Hawick had about half of Scotland's frames. Cloth manufacturing began in about 1787. By the early 19th century there was also manufacturing of blankets and gloves. The first cloth to be made in Hawick was a coarse blue variety, which was sent to Leeds for finishing. Tweed grew to prominence from the 1830s, becoming the main sort of locally produced cloth. The focus shifted from stockings to woollen underwear in the latter half of the 19th century and to women's knitwear and sportswear in the 20th century.

thiefs (theefz) n., pl. thieves (an example of the use of a different plural form in Hawick).

the Thief’s Hole (thū-theefs-hōl) n. name used to describe Hawick jail, which was a room in the old tollbooth, partly below ground level. Part of Jedburgh Jail formerly had the same name (also known as the Rogues’ Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Thief’s Hole Sike (theefs-hōl-sīk) n. stream that rises to the west of Barnes Loch and joins the Gate Burn just before it crosses the road at the Troutlawford (the origin of the name is unclear; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Thief’s Road (thū-theefs-rōd) n. popular name for an ancient hill track, part of which leads from Dod farm over to Hermitage Castle and was used by Mary Queen of Scots when she visited Boswell. It was also the name for the road leading across Woll Rig, perhaps a continuation of the same trail. Note that ‘the Maiden’s Way’ may have been essentially the same route from the Dod Burn to Liddesdale, and this was also used as a drove road – ‘The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o’ The Roan Scartit in wi’ a pencil’ [DH] (also called the ‘Thief Road’; it may be the ‘Thewesrode’ mentioned in an English document of 1255 listing the boundary of lands in the Cheviots).

Thief’s Sike (theefs-sīk) n. stream that rises on Thiefsike Head, to the south of Hermitage Castle, and flows near Hartsgarth to join the Hermitage Water. On the west bank there is a turf building with a knocking-stone. On the eastern side there are the remains of a township, containing about 10 buildings, along with field systems and rig lines. This is probably the settlement of ‘Brocol’ shown on Blaeu’s c.1654 atlas, which was abandoned by the early 17th century. A little higher up are the remains of shieling huts, as well as cairns and cultivation terraces (also written ‘Thief Sike’).

thieftously (theef-tis-lee) adv., arch. thievously, clandestinely, by stealth – ‘...and thieftously stealing and away taking out of her house ...’ [BR], ‘Item, that na persone nor personnis scheir medowis, balkis, or haynit gers thifteously ...’ [BR1640] (also theftously).

thift (thift) n., arch. theft – ‘...or that comitts greitere thift, sal be banyshit the town, and lose thir freedom for ever’ [BR1640], ‘...that the said Bailie Ruecastle was guiltie of Sacridege, Thift, and with most opprobrious speeches and names ...’ [PR1718], ‘For out o’ the hairt procede ill thouchts, murders, advoutries, furnications, thifts, fause-wutness, blasphemies’ [HSR].

Thilestane (thīl-stān) n. former lands listed in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693. It is listed among the lands in upper Teviotdale that were once part of the Lordship of Ringwoodfield, hence presumably this is not ‘Thirlestane’.

thi’ll’ve (thi-luv) contr. they’ll’ve, they will have.

thim (thim) pron., arch. them (noted by E.C. Smith; thaim and thum are more common).

thimblor (thim-blur) n., arch. a thimblorigger, someone who runs a shell game – ‘A fiddler is here, and a thimblor is there, Wi’ nut-men and spice-men at Copshawholm Fair’ [DA].

thimmle (thi-mul) n. a thimble, a foxglove flower (probably the more common local form; see also thummle; see also thimmles).

thimmlefi (thi-mul-fi) n. a thimbleful – ‘No, no, just a thimblefu’. It manna gaun tae ma heid or Aw’ll no’ can tell ma story’ [JEDM].

Thimmle Haa (th-mul-haw) n. former name for a building in Hawick, also known as ‘Tummel Haa’ (noted by G. Watson).

thimmles (thi-mulz) n., pl., arch. the foxglove, Digitalis pupurea.

thin (thin) conj., prep. than – ‘she’s a faster rin-ner thin am er’, ‘yer een er bigger thin yer belly’, ‘...when ee wax lyrical ti yer less thin fortunate Gala pals’ [IHS] (also spelled ‘than’, as in English; cf. then).

thin see then

thing (thing) n., arch. amount, quantity, extent – ‘I understand little thing can be brought against you o’ this day’s mischief’ [RW], sort, kind (almost used as a suffix) – ‘I’ve some mair paper, but it’s no sic guid thing as that’ [JAHM], ‘Wad ye like some black ink, or some blue thing?’ [JAHM], ‘Mask iz a pickl new thing’ [ECS], ‘The broon thing’s mair uise as the yallih’ [ECS], pl. matters, duties, etc. – ‘Ee’ll finnd ee’ve other thing adae’ [ECS] (these senses not common in English; also hing).

thingubeed (thing-u-beed) n. a thingum-abob, someone or something temporarily forgotten (thingubby and hingummy are also used, as well as the English ‘thingummy’).

thingubby (thing-u-bee) n. something whose name is not known or forgotten, a thingummy, thingumajig, whatsit – ‘A hink what’s ‘ei’s name din eet, thingubby, frae up the Loan’, ‘Thing-a-bee, thing-a-beet, thing-a-meet, etc., is a substitute for the name of a person or thing unknown or temporarily forgotten. Cf. Gen. Scottish thingumbob, thingiment, etc.; English thingummy’ [ECS], ‘As ee get older ee yaise that a lot mair, thingubby, thingubby, thingubby!’ [ME], adj. whatchamacallit, descriptive word which temporarily cannot be recalled – ‘it was aa thingubby, ee ken?’ (also written ‘thing-a-bee’; perhaps used more frequently than ‘thingummy’ when referring to a person rather than a thing).

Thinside Hill (thin-sīd-hil) n. hilly region in Liddesdale, just to the north of Hartsgarth. There are many enclosures and some springs marked there.

thir (thir) pron. there – ‘thir’s only the twae o oo left’, ‘thir must be somethin guid aboot Gala, shairly?’ (something closer to the standard English pronunciation is used for the adv., adj. and interj. forms).

thir (thir) pron., arch. these – ‘...before yir witnesses, John Scot Bailzie, Robert Dennis, surgeoune, George Scot, James Morlaw, and Robert Nilhag’ [JW1558], ‘When ‘thir’ is used absolutely without a noun following, it generally becomes ‘thirs’; ‘Thirs is meyne’ [JAHM], ‘Boonjeddart, Hundlie, and Hunthill, Thir three they laid weil on at last’ [CPM], ‘Thirs is mine, thae’s (= those are) yours, but whae’s aucht thon yins?’ [GW], common in the legal phrase ‘thir presents’, meaning ‘the present document’ – ‘Be it kend til al men be thir present lettris, me Daid Scot of the Bukcluch ...’ [SB1470], ‘...before thir witnes, Thomas Glendynwyn, Alexander Scot ...’ [SB1510/1], ‘...befoir thir witnessis, ... Walter Scot of Gordelandis, Walter Scot of Tuschelaw, and Johne Watsoun, with vtheris diuerse’ [SB1574], ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scoir bolls in stok ...’ [PR1627], ‘I Thomas Henderson, smyth in Flex, grants me be thir presents ...’ [BR1701], ‘We by thir presents binds and obleisses us and our successors in the office of baylyearie and toune counsell of the said brughe of Hawicke ...’ [HAST1902], adj., arch. these – ‘Quo’ Johnnie, I’d rather in England die, Ere thir sax sheep gae t’ Liddesdale wi’ me’ [CPM], ‘But wha comes neir, wi’ statelye stryde? Wha is thir gentil twa?’ [WiSp], ‘... thir braes hed seen unco sights’ [ECS], ‘The wund and the rain’s been roarin’ Thir twae nichts and mair ...’ [DH], used specifically for foods – ‘...to which a collective significance is attached by the prefixing of a plural demonstrative or other adjective, as thir kail (= these kale)’ [ECS] (sometimes plural; there is more common).

Thirat (thee-raw) n. M. (18th/19th C.) French Napoleonic prisoner of war located in Hawick. He painted ‘View of St. Mary’s’ (1813) among other local scenes (unclear whether this is ‘Monsieur’ or his first initial).

thirl (thi-rul) v., arch. to bind in servitude, to be bound or under obligation – ‘they were thirled ti the mill, meanin they hed ti git their corn ground there’, ‘Langsyne, when mills were few, The district roon Was thirled to ane, an’ a’ within The legal boond ...’ [FL].

thirlage (thir-leej) n., arch. the state of being thirled, usually applied by rule of the landowner to his tenants. It was part of the feudal structure which tied a farmer to a particular mill – ‘...whereby these Baillies created a sort of thirlage that drew all the drinking to their own houses’ [C&L1780].

Thirlestane (thi-rul-stān) n. ruined tower and surrounding area in the Ettrick valley, a mile or so north-east of the village of Ettrick. It was once the seat of the Scotts of Thirlestane, who became the Lords Napier of Merchiston and Ettrick, which included the Lord Napier who once resided at Wilton Lodge. They gained the lands in the early 1500s from the Laird of Cranston-Riddell, although there is a John Scott of Thirlestane mentioned in 1483 (when he became Baron of the half barony of Wilton). There is a record in 1493 of cattle and horses being stolen from Thirlestain Mains. The lands were formerly held by Melrose Abbey; in 1524, when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was regranted the office of Bailie of the lands of Melrose Abbey, he was given this farm and that of Northhouse for his fee. This continued in the inheritance of the lands and titles of his grandfather by Walter Scott in 1553/4 (and at that time the lands were jointly valued with Northhouse at £20 Scots), as well as his grandson Sir Walter in 1564 and the next Sir Walter in 1574. These lands were raided by a group of 160 Armstrongs in 1543. The precedence of the Thirlestane branch of the Scotts and ownership of the lands has a complex (and debated) history through the 17th century; the designation 'of Thirlestane' was used by 3 separate families (one probably for the lands of the same name west of Yetholm). Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter for these lands from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620 and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. It was still listed as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653 and 1661, when held (perhaps just the superiority) by the Scotts of Buccleuch. The Laird of Thirlestane's lands in Selkirkshire were valued at more than £3000 in 1678. The L-plan tower stood on the left-bank of the Thirlestane Burn, north-west of the later farmhouse. The tower was burned by the English in 1544, although rebuilt. It contains a lintel stone with the initials 'R. S. M. C.' for Robert Scott and Margaret Cranston. The nearby house was built by the Napiers, partly using stones from the tower; however, it was demolished in the 1960s to avoid death duties. The estate passed to George Walker in the late 18th century and then to Richard Brack. The mill lade there was still visible in the late 19th century. It should not be confused with the castle near Lauder of the same name, or the area near Yetholm – 'Proud she looked round, applause to claim – Then lightened Thirlestane's eye of flame; His bugle Watt of Harden blew, Pensils and pennons wide were flung, To Heav'n the Border slogan rung, 'Saint Mary for the young Buccleuch!' [SWS], 'Wher Ettrick wandirs down a plain, With lofty hills belay't, The staitly towirs of Thirlestane With wundir hee surveyt' [ES] (also written 'Thirlstane'; 'Thyrlestan maiori' stream and 'Thyrlestantgate' are recorded in a charter around 1236; it is 'Thirlstane' in 1524, 'Thyrlstane' in 1533, 'Thirlstane' in 1550 and 1553/4, 'Thrilistane' in 1557, 'Thirlistane' in 1564, 'Thyrlstane' in 1599, 'Thirlestaine' in 1661, 'Thirlstoun' and 'Thirlestoune' in 1670, 'Thirlestaine' in 1690 and 'Thirlstoune' in 1695; it is marked 'Thirrllstaine' on Blaeu's 1654 map and is 'Thirlstaine' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin is presumably a reference to the 'mill-stone' to which tenants were 'thirled').

Thirlestane (thi-rul-stān) n. Thirlestane Castle, a turretted edifice of red sandstone, near Lauder, overlooking the Leader Water. The central section was built about 1590, then rebuilt in the 17th century and enhanced around 1840. It was the seat of the Maitland family, Earls of Lauderdale, and is now owned by a charitable trust and open to the public (the only connection with 'Thirlestane' in the Ettrick valley was the origin of the name).

Thirlestane (thi-rul-stān) n. farm near Yetholm, just to the north of Yetholm Loch. In 1661 the lands here were purchased from Sir Andrew Ker by James, brother of Sir William Scott of Harden. James Scott was thus the first Laird of Thirlestane in Berwickshire, who are not directly related to the Scotts of Thirlestane in the Ettrick valley. James' son William Scott was the 2nd Laird. It was said that a member of this family was a physician and distinguished chemist to Charles II, whose laboratory here was called the Warlock Room. William Scott-Kerr sold the lands and the house was demolished in the early 19th century.

Thirlwall (thi-rul-wal) n. John 'the elder' (14th C.) recorded as owner of the lands of Roughley and 'Grenhowe' (possibly Greenholm) in Liddesdale in 1365, when Edward III bestowed protection on his tenants there. The suggestion is that he had acquired lands that had once been part of the Comyn holdings in southern Scotland. His seat was at Thirlwall Castle in Northumbria, near the eastern end of Hadrian's Wall.

thirsel (thir-sel) pron., pl. themselves – 'Keep thum be thirsel' [ECS] (used as a collective plural; cf. theirsel).

the Thirteen Drifty Days (thu-ther-teen-drif-tee-dāz) n. popular name for a great snowstorm of early 1674 in which the snow fell continuously for 13 days. In the higher parts of southern Scotland whole flocks of sheep were lost, as related by the Ettrick Shepherd. It is said that many shepherds made walls from piles up the dead sheep in order to give some shelter to the living. As much as 90/Scotland perished. The winter weather began in January, and never really let up until the end of March, with the 13 days themselves beginning on 20th February (although there is some confusion over the dates). The Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch obtained a special licence in 1675 to import 4800 cattle and 200 horses from Ireland to restock their farms in southern Scotland.

the Thirty Shillin Haugh (thu-ther'-ee-shi-lin-hawf) n. former name for an area of flat ground around the Hermitage Water near the old tower of Park.

this (this) adj. this, in distinction to 'next' (for example, on a Saturday, 'this Mondie' would be in 2 days, while 'next Mondie' would be 9 days away).

this day ... (this-dā) pron., arch. phrases such as ‘this day ten days’ mean ‘10 days from today’ – ‘The minister told us that God willing he intended to administer the Sacrament of ye Supper of our Lord this day twentie dayes, being the thirs Sabbath of October ...’ [PR1720].

this efternin (thū-sef-tur-nin) n., adv. this afternoon – ‘where er oo gaun this efternin?’ (treated as though it is ‘the sefternin’ in analogy with ‘the night’, ‘the day’, ‘the morn’, etc.; sometimes shortened to the sef).

This is no my ain Hoose (this-iz-nō-mI-ān-hoos) n. tune that is in the repertoire of the Drums and Fifes, and sometimes played on picking night. The tune is also known as ‘Colonel David Stewart of Garth’s Reel’ and is played as a strathspey reel throughout Scotland. It is recorded from at least the early 18th century and Bonnie Prince Charlie is supposed to have danced to it before the Battle of Prestonpans (also called ‘Oh! This is no my ain Hoose’).

thistledoon (thi-sul-doon) n. thistledown, a soft fluffy yarn used for luxury knitwear garments, called after the silky down or pappus inside the head of a thistle – ‘... An’ oor cashmeres an’ angoras An’ oor thistledoon lambswool’ [WL], ‘... Her step as licht as the thistle-doon, Wi’ easy grace she gaed dancin’ roun’ [WL].

Thistlesike (thi-sul-sīk) n. farm in Liddesdale, just south of Mangerton, on the opposite bank of the Liddel. It is on the Trysting Sike, and with the forest there known as Thistlesike Plantation. It is probably associated with the place known as ‘Sisselscheillis’ on the 1541 rental roll, valued at 13 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Alexander Armstrong.

thit (thi, thit) pron. that – ‘it was efter that thit aa moved ti Hawick’, ‘... thit there’s nae where else on earth it that moment, they wud rither be’ [IHS] (only pronounced this way in certain contexts; see also that).

thits (thitz) contr. that’s – ‘... it’s that spirit thit’s instilled in oor bairns, the next generation o’ Teries, a love for song n’ poetry thit nae other toon can boast’ [IHS].

tho (tho, tho) prep. though – ‘A was right tho!’, ‘she’s a right affront tho’, ‘Hei cam tui, an rallied, tho, an away ei birrlt ...’ [ECS], ‘Note, too, that theh (or thoh) is used for although, though, notwithstanding, however, for which we use also for aa’ [ECS] (also written ‘thoh’; commonly used in conversation at the ends of sentences; note the short o and the common th instead of the standard English th).

thocht (thocht) n., arch. a thought, act of thinking – ‘Sic a thoct! Na’ never fear ye ...’ [RH], ‘The thoct o’ what’ll Hawick folk say Aye strengthened heart and hand’ [RH], ‘... Nor gi’e a thoct to the awfu’ cloors, That may empty oor saddles ere lang’ [JBB], ‘The thoct o’ hills an’ brattlin’ burns Where grows the heather bell, lassie’ [FL], ‘Oh! mony a fond whisper and soul cheering thoct ...’ [JJ], ‘... Their thochts wull often backward stray Ti Hawick their Border hame’ [IWL], a pinch, small quantity – ‘Gie’s a thoct o’ saut’ [GW], a moment – ‘Wait a thoct’ [GW], pp., arch. thought, past tense of ‘think’ – ‘... That he heard Samuel Rutherford say, that he thoct nane had his purs bot he ...’ [BR1642], ‘If onybody hed eyed iz, heid’ heh thoct A was shuir ready for Bowden!’ [ECS], ‘An’ aw thoct o’ a wumman, A’d kent a ma life ...’ [IJ], ‘But then oor luck began tae turn We thoct we’d try yon wee bit burn ...’ [DH], ‘He thoct, wi the fog, he’d better bide the nicht there ...’ [DH] (used for either the past tense or past participle; cf. thowt and thought).

thochtless (thocht-lis) adj., poet. thoughtless – ‘The thoctless heart, the careless fit, An’ hurts the chaps that has nae wit ...’ [FL].

thochtlessly (thocht-lis-lee) adv., poet. thoughtlessly – ‘Maist folk are apt to keep in shoals, An’ thoctlessly sail wi’ the stream ...’ [FL].

thockit (tho-kee, -ki) pp., poet. panted, breathed heavily with exertion – ‘His toothless gans they fell abreide, He thockyt and he blew’ [JTe].

Thoftcotys (thoft-kots) n. former place name in the Borthwick valley, occurring in a document of 1410, when the Regent Albany conferred lands there and at ‘Borthwic’ on Sir William of Borthwick, on their resignation by Robert Scott. The lands are suggested to be at Hoscot, perhaps being an earlier version of the name, or just part of those lands (the name may be a rare local example of the Middle English root ‘toft’, meaning a homestead, unless it is the same as the earlier Yrostilcotis; it seems likely that this was a variant of Hoscot, with the transcription of the ‘s’ for ‘f’).

thole (thōl) v., arch. to endure, tolerate, suffer, undergo, bear – ‘... His beating heart could hardly thole, For thinking on her beauty’ [JR], ‘And O, for blessings, never threshe, If ye wadna the brydle thole ...’ [JTe], For she’ll ride ye post to the clutye deil, And he to the reikye hole' [JTe], 'Tis love, and beauty, and the glass, Makes lifetime worth the tholin' [JoHa], 'Then where's the rain we canna thole ...' [JoHa], 'Tho' hard tae thole, they seldom last, That's ae guid thing aboot them!' Thom (tōm, tom) n. James (d.1874) Superintendent of police in Hawick 1854–61. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archæological Society, was also involved in the Hawick Volunteer Corps and helped found the Lodge St. James. He was appointed as Curator of the Society's Museum collection in June 1957. Also in 1857 he read a paper at the Archæological Society on 'the Noachian Deluge' and donated a collection of coins. In 1861 he donated a large axe-head, found at Northhouse, to the Museum.

Thomas of Wilton see de Wilton

Thomas the Rhymer (to-mis-thu-rī-mur) n. (c.1210–c.1290) Thomas Learmonth, Laird of Erildoune (an old name for Earlston). Although he certainly existed, little detail is known of his life, which has been heavily romanticised. He may have been born in Earlston, where a fragment of his tower remains. He possibly retired to the priory of Fail in Ayrshire, and his lands were transferred to the house of Soutra in 1294. He made many prophecies, often in rhyme, supposedly predicting the accidental death of Alexander III in 1285. He is also meant to have gone off with the Queen of the fairies for 7 years (but actually seems to have been in Aberdeenshire!). His son Thomas is recorded resigning lands to Soutra Hospital in 1294. After his death his reputation as a prophet became legendary, with predictions of the defeat at Flodden, the Union of the Crowns, Bannockburn and the Jacobite risings all being attributed to him – 'True Thomas lay on Huntlie bank, a ferlie he spied wi' his ee; And there he saw a ladye bright come riding down by the Eildon Tree' [SWS], '... Where Rymour, long of yore, the nymph embrac'd, The first of men unearthly lips to taste' [JL].

Thomline (tom-lin) n. Alexander (1781–1827) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Jean Smith. He was a slater and glazier on the Cross Wynd, listed there in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He married Janet Crawford and their children included: William (d.1808); Robert (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); William (again, b.1811); and Alexander (b.1812). His wife could be the widow 'Tomline' recorded keeping lodgings on the Cross Wynd according to Pigot's 1837 directory. Alexander 'Alex' (19th C.) first Treasurer of the Hawick Home Mission when it was founded in 1873. Andrew (b.1792/3) stocking-maker in Wilton. On the 1841 census he was living on Underdamside with 'Tibby', who was probably his mother. George (d.1815) recorded in the Hawick death register. James (b.c.1770s) spinner at Roughheugh according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. James (19th C.) inspector of the poor in Hawick in the late 1800s. He also served as a student teacher in St. Mary's School. He was also Registrar in Hawick in the early years of the 20th century. John (18th C.) woollen manufacturer of Hawick, in partnership with William. Since his name is given first he was presumably the older brother. They are described in David Loch's 1778 book on Scottish trade as 'dyers and clothiers' who 'have considerable business at present, and they have a brother in Glasgow instructing as to the making of cloths fit for that market, and how to use woad in dying of blues & c.' There are records of help given to them in 1779 by the Board of Trade for Manufactures, instructing them how to use a woad vat. In 1780 he and William were witnesses for a baptism for John Clerk, who was at Roughheugh. The company operated as dyers and finishers in the old Roughheugh waulk mill until they sold it to the Inkle Company in 1797. In 1764 they loaned money to Francis Scott, with 9 High Street as collateral, in a sasine that still exists. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of 'Waulkmill of Roughheugh' in Wilton Parish, valued at £22 6s, and another piece of Roughheugh valued at £9. He and William were still recorded as owners of the 'Waulkmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands' on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. The family had been known as 'Thomline of that Ilk' and had long resided in Wilton, with their main residence near 'the Nitton'. However, all trace of the family and its original home had disappeared by the 20th century. He is probably the John who married Mary Ekron in Wilton in 1772 and whose children included: Isabel (b.1773); Andrew (b.1775); James (b.1776); Jean (b.1778); John (b.1784); Andrew (again, b.1786); and William (b.1788). His wife was probably daughter of James Ekron and Isobel Betty Richardson. John (d.1849) Hawick stockingmaker who was presumably related to the old Wilton family. He is probably the John recorded on the 1841 census at the Cross Wynd, with wife Helen and children John and George. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Murray (whose son was born at Damside) in 1810. He married Helen Scott and their son George was baptised in Hawick in 1825 Thomas (b.c.1815) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was at Kirkyard, on Silver Street in 1851 and by 1861 was at 48 Loan. His wife was Isobel and children included Jean (or Janet), James, Alexander, Robert, John, Ralph, Christian and James (again). Walter (b.c.1770) dyer in Wilton. He married Elizabeth ('Betty') Hinshelwood (or 'Hanselwood'). In 1841 he was living at Underdamside with his wife Betty. Their children included: Jane (b.1793); and Nancy (b.1807). He is probably the 'Walter Tomlin' whose child died in Hawick in 1798. In 1851 his widow Betty and son William were living on Underdamside with the family of John Peacock, his son-in-law. William (18th C.) partner with John in an early wool dying business at the Waulk Mill in Wilton. He was probably younger brother of John. In 1780 he and John were witnesses for a baptism for John Clerk, who was at Roughheugh. He and John were recorded as owners of the 'Waulkmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands' according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1766. Their children included: Agnes (b.1767); Jean (b.1769); Andrew (b.1770); and Walter (b.1771). He was recorded at Roughheugh in 1770, with the witnesses being Gavin Turnbull and Thomas Turnbull (perhaps their employees in the mill). He may also be the William who married Jean Smith in 1778. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1778 he married Jean Smith and their children included: Alison (b.1779); Alexander (b.1781); Robert (b.1786); William (b.1789); and Jane (b.1794). William (b.c.1800) born in Innerleithen, he was a stocking-maker in Wilton. He was probably son of Walter and Elizabeth. In 1841 he was living in the same residence as the Lockie family on Damside. In 1851 he was living with his brother-in-law, John Peacock, as well as his mother Betty (also formerly spelled 'Thomlin', 'Thomlins', 'Tomlin', 'Tomlins', etc.).

Thompson (tom-sin) n. John Riddle (19th C.) married Jessie T., daughter of Walter Wilson and Isabella Richardson. He had sons Robert Riddle (b.1860) and Walter Wilson (b.1862). Mark Hawick-born power lifter. He won the British Weightlifting Association Bench Press Championship in the 110 kg division in 2005. Robert Riddle (19th C.) son of John Riddle and Jessie Wilson. He was a baker and later insurance inspector in Hawick. He firstly married Margaret, daughter of baker Robert Young, and they had children Aggie Lamb Dryden, Jessie W., Walter W., Robert Young, Elizabeth Margaret and Thomas Dryden (who died in 1917 and is commemorated on the Mikra Memorial). He secondly married Annie, daughter of Joseph Smith, gas manager. Richard (18th/19th C.) from Hawick Parish. He is referred to as being at Woodfoot in 1808 when his sister Janet died. Thomas 'Tommy', 'Tufty' Cornet of 1955. He rode on the Friday in his jubilee year. William Lindsay (19th/20th C.) from Allan Glen's School in Glasgow, he became High School Rector in 1908, and remained in the position until 1919 (see also Thomson).

Thomson (tom-, tam-sin) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as a resident of 'est grange' at the 1494/5 Justice-are in Jedburgh. Thomas Clommell in Minto was charged with stealing a pig from him. He probably lived at Grange in Ancrum Parish. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Singdean in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Rev. Adam (1813-74) born in Coldstream, he was son of Dr. Adam, minister there, who was instrumental in abolishing the monopoly on publication of the bible in Scotland. In 1833 he became assistant and successor of Rev. Henderson at the East Bank Church in Hawick, having also been called to Dunoon. He was recorded living at the East Port in Pigot's 1837 directory. He suffered from ill-health, spending 6 month periods in Europe in both 1852 and 1856. However, he remained as minister for 28 years, resigning in 1860 and leaving for Sydney, Australia the following year. There he became the first Moderator of the General Assembly of New South Wales. Before his departure there was a special soiree was held, attended by almost all the local ministers. He was there presented with an illuminated address bearing the Burgh Seal, signed by the Magistrates and about 800 others, as well as other gifts, including a copy of the Encyclopædia Britannica from J.A.H. Murray on behalf of the citizens of Hawick. For the last 2 years of his life he was Principal of St. Andrew's College in Sydney. He published several sermons while minister in Hawick, including 'A pastoral memorial; discourses ...' (1860). His sister Elizabeth married John Wilson, manufacturer of Ladylaw, while another sister, Isabella, married Army Paymaster James M. Green and has a memorial obelisk in Wellogate Cemetery. He married Helen Ritchie Wilson (1819–53), daughter of hosiery manufacturer Peter. Their children were Adam, Mary (who married James Hogg) and Helen (who married James Fell). He later remarried. A memoir 'Life and Ministry of Rev. Adam Thomson, D.D.' was written by his son-in-law Rev. P. Landreth. A portrait of him exists. Adam (19th C.) married Jessie Affleck in Hawick in 1849. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Alexander (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitchesters. He is listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls and is also recorded there in the early 1700s. He is probably the Alexander who witnessed a baptism for William Scott in Whitchesters in 1696. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott, who was also tenant in Whitchesters (as well as Robert Scott, the other witness). He was attested to be tenant in about 1710 in the evidence given regarding the state of Hawick's Common in 1767. William Wilson was his servitor in 1712 when rebuked by the Hawick Parish Session. He witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1713. He is probably the Alexander, married to Marion Armstrong, whose children born in Hawick included an unnamed son (b.1683) and John (b.1685). He was deceased in 1719 and 'sometimes tenent in Whitchesters' when his daughter Agnes married John Scott (tenant in Hawickshiel). Alexander (d.bef. 1777) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Cathrae, who died in hawick in 1777. Rev. Alexander McInroy (d.1897) licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1888, he was assistant at St. Clement's in Dundee and then ordained as minister of St. John's in Hawick in 1889. He resigned his position in 1894. Allan (16th/17th C.) described as 'in Clarelaw' in a 1612 document, where a number of people were accused of over-charging interest on loans. Andrew 'Dand' (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish who married Marion Brown in 1722. He may also have married in 1721, with the bride's name not recorded. His children included Robert (b.1723), Mary (b.1726) and Adam (b.1729). Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish, probably distinct from 'Dand'. His children included Margaret (b.1719), James (b.1721), John (b.1723), John (again, b.1727), John (again, b.1729), William (b.1731) and Robert (b.1734). Andrew (b.1716/7) workman of Hawick, chosen as one of the 6 representative Burgesses in 1767 to define the boundaries of the Common. He may be the Andrew, son of John, born in Wilton Parish in 1715. He could be the Andrew who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leithead and Marjory Thomson. He could be the Andrew who married Margaret Riddell (who died in Hawick in 1781), with their daughter Betty baptised in 1758. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1738. Andrew (18th C.) cottar at Ashkirk Mill. He married Bessie Riddell and their children included: Robert (b.1745); and James (b.1749). Andrew (18th C.) married Isabel Mathieson in Castleton Parish in 1767. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Isabella was baptised in 1784. Andrew (18th C.) married Janet Paterson in Ashkirk Parish in 1774. Their children included William (b.1782). Andrew (18th C.) recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (b.1763/4) farmer at Bewlie, recorded on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He also had 6 farm horses in 1797 and paid the dog tax at Bewlie in the same year. He was probably the Andrew recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1787 when his marriage to Christian Usher was announced in Melrose Parish, with Andrew 'Heitton' as cautioner; she was daughter of John Usher of Toftfield. He was at Bewlie on the subscription list for Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. He was recorded as deceased in 1828 in a letter from James Usher, writer in Edinburgh, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection; this was either an error, or referred to his father perhaps. He was at Bewlie in 1841, along with children John, Jessie and Betsy. In 1851 he was a retired farmer at Bewlie Mains, where his son John was farmer. His children probably included: Robert (b.1788); John (b.1789); Janet (b.1794); Thomas (b.1796); Betsy (b.1798); James (b.1800); William (b.1803); and Andrew (b.1806). Andrew (b.c.1770s) mason at Calaburn according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He was probably related to mason John, who was at Calaburn in 1799 and 1801 and George, who was there in 1801. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: James (b.1804); Helen (b.1806); Robert (b.1808); Archibald (b.1810); Jean (b.1814); and Janet (b.1816). He could be the Andrew who was a servant at Fairloans on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Andrew (b.c.1780) son to the tenant of Chapel (presumably George), he was recorded as 'Lame of one of his thumbs' on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. Probably the same Andrew was ploughman at Chapel according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is recorded as 'Independent' in 1841 when he was living in Lilliesleaf, probably on the north side of Main Street. He was there with his children Helen, George, Esther and Andrew. He married Jean Harvey and their children included: Helen (b.1815); George (b.1817); and Andrew (b.1826), who farmed at Billerwell. Andrew (b.1783/4) farm worker in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was a 'Woodforester' at Sandholm, living with his children Janet, Andrew, Jane and Mary. He married Margaret Common, who died before 1841. Andrew (1788/9–bef. 1861) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was a road surveyor in Ewesdale. He was living at Brieryshaw in 1841 and 1851. He was unmarried and lived with his sister Mary Riddell; she was a widow in 1851, and listed as 'Fund Holder' in 1861. Andrew (19th C.) architect who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. Probably the same Andrew was involved with the building of St. George's Church in Hawick. Andrew (b.1800/1) born in Wilton, he was mill master at Roughheugh Mill in 1861. His wife was Helen (from Hobkirk Parish) and their children included: William (b.1829/30), born in South Leith; Margaret (b.1839/40), born in Edinburgh; and John (b.1841/2), also born in Edinburgh. Andrew (b.c.1810) millwright in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Melgund Place. His wife was Agnes and their children included Walter and Elizabeth. Andrew (b.c.1815) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Fore Row with his mother Lizzy and brother Richard. He is recorded in Dumfries Jail in 1841 and Jedburgh Jail in 1843. Andrew (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish, he was son of Andrew, who was also a forester, like him. In 1861 he was 'Assistant Wood Forester' at Sandholm. He married Margaret Elliot in 1849 and their children included: James (b.1850); Robert (b.1851); James (again, b.1852); Margaret (b.1854); John (b.1856/7); and Walter (b.1859/60). Andrew (b.1826) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, son of Andrew and Jean Harvey. He was tenant of Billerwell farm for about 40 years in the latter part of the 19th century. He was at Billerwell in 1861 as farmer of 300 acres, employing 5 people, also living with his brother George and sister Helen. He married Janet Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1851. Their children included Margaret (b.1852/3), Jane (b.1854/5), Andrew (b.1856/7) and Mina (b.1859/60). He had a brother George and a sister Helen. Andrew (b.1832/3) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a policeman in Wilton. In 1861 he was '1st Class Constable, Roxburghshire Constabulary', living at Under Hope Park. His wife was Helen and they had a son William (b.1861). Andrew (b.1834/5) son of shepherd Robert, he was born in Southdean Parish. He became shepherd at Wigg on Wauchope farm. Like his father he was a strong supporter of Wolfelee Free Kirk. His children included: William, who was also a shepherd at Wigg; and Marianne. His wife died in 1904. Andrew (19th C.) framesmith at Robert Ewen's factory, who left for Nottingham. He was a popular local singer. He is probably the Andrew listed as a millwright journeyman at Melgund Place in 1841, with wife Agnes and children Walter and Elizabeth. Ann (18th C.) housemaid at Wells in 1785, when she was working for Gilbert Eliott. Archibald 'Archie' (16th C.) listed in 1576 as a servant of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. There was a promise that he, as well as Martin Crozier in Bedrule, and Martin's son Martin, should all refrain from theft. However, they were all declared rebels in 1578/9. Archibald (18th C.) married Christian Liddell in Wilton Parish in 1729. Archibald (18th C.) foreman at Dickson's Hassendeanburn nurseries around 1770. Benjamin (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1729 he witnessed baptisms for miller John Henderson, John Scott and Adam Kersel. Rev. Charles (1795–1871) born in Dalserf in 1795, he was educated at Edinburgh University. He came to Hawick in 1821 to be assistant for Rev. James Arkle of Hawick Parish. There appears to have been some dispute with the Duke of Buccleuch about his appointment, and he did not become Arkle's successor. He was ordained at North Shields in 1823 and became minister of Wick in 1840, then went to the Free Church at the Disruption of 1843, serving at Wick until his retirement. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. In 1825 in Hawick he married Janet, daughter of merchant Francis Ballantyne, and had 11 children. He visited Hawick in 1837, during the contested election, and gave evidence at the later investigation. He was mentioned in a poem by David Waters, suggesting he was locally an unpopular anti-Reform minister, and also claiming that involvement in vote rigging was the reason he failed to get support from the local aristocracy for a living – '...Or, maybe for a daintie kirk, As did his Reverend Frien' o' Shiels. – (Thae Tory priests are very diels For mischief, roguery and cunnin' ...) '[RDW]'. It was also said that by marrying the daughter of Ballantyne, he took some of the spoils that had been fraudulently extracted from Ballantyne's former partner, 'Auld Cash' – 'A black robed son of light – yclep'd a priest, Removed a load of guilt from off his breast, He wed his daughter and then shared the spoil Which half-way went to save Francisco's soul' [RDW]. Christopher (d.1800) recorded as 'Old Christophor' in the Hawick death register. David (16th C.) recorded in North Synton in 1581/2. George Caverhill in Whitehaughbrae resigned to him a tenement in Selkirk. David L. son of Rev. Lyndsay, he was educated at Hawick High School. He then attended Aberdeen and Glasgow Universities. He is an evolutionary and environmental biologist and is Associate Professor at the University of Hong Kong. Douglas (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer's shop at 64 High Street in the mid-1900s. He lived at 25 Wilton Hill. In 1947 thieves raided the house and used provisions they found inside to prepare a makeshift explosive, which they used to blow open a safe! Elizabeth (15th C.) mentioned in 1494/5 when she was allowed to 'compound' for resetting 'Joiffe Glenquhin' (possible Geoffrey Glenholm), who had been involved in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. She is referred to as 'in Corrisheuch', which may be Corrie Sike in upper Teviotdale. However, it is unclear where she came from or how she may have been related to other Thomsons. She is recorded as 'Besse Thomsonsone' in the Treasurer's accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. Elizabeth 'Betty' (17th/18th C.) Hawick parishioner who died in the early 1700s. She left a 'mortification'

to help the poor. The Session decided to enter her name in gilt letters on a big black board in the church, as a way of encouraging other donations; unfortunately this project used up all the money she had left! Elizabeth 'Betty' (19th C.) baker in Newcastleton according to Pigot's 1837 directory. She could be the Betty Thomson (or Little) who was a widow at about 17 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and 1851. Elizabeth 'Betty' (b.c.1800) baker on the Fore Raw, recorded on the 1841 census. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Spittal. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 2 pigs stolen from him there, by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it included Hasendean. The baptism of his daughter Bessie is recorded in Robertson in 1680, 'begotten in fornication with Issobell henderson'; the witnesses were Robert and James Thomson (presumably close relatives, perhaps his brothers). He married Isobel Turnbull in Robertson in 1684 and had children including Isobel (b.1685) and Robert (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Robert and James. Along with Robert he witnessed a baptism for James in 1686. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. George of Fodderlee (18th C.) husband of Margaret Kerr, from whom he probably inherited the half lands of Fodderlee. In 1788 (and continued in 1811) he is recorded as owner of the lands of Easter Fodderlee, valued at £80. His son was Robert. George (18th C.) married Janet Gordon in Ashkirk in 1759. George (18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Wilton in 1776. George (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1791, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Perhaps the same George was also listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in the same year. He was still a servants at Weens in 1792. In 1794 he was a house servant at Larriston, still working for William Oliver. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chapel in the 1787–1789 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1797 he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He is probably the tenant in Chapel whose son Andrew is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. George (b.c.1780) mason at Calaburn according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was probably brother of Andrew and John, who were also masons at Calaburn in 1799 and 1801. George (b.1788/9) born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Cavers Knowes in 1841. In 1851 he was a gardener in Wilton, living at Wilton Kirk Style. He was a member of Allars

Kirk in about the 1830s. His wife was Isabella (from Robertson) and their children included Helen, George, Walter, Margaret, Isabella and Elizabeth. Dr. George William (b.1818) son of Thomas and Anna Drummond from Midlothian. He was brother of Wyville Smith Thomson, who was minister at Cardross, Dunbartonshire. He became a doctor in Hawick with practice on the High Street. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as a druggist on 'Market pl' and as part of the partnership of 'Graham & Thomspen', physicians on Buccleuch Street. However, in 1861 he is recorded living at 10 Buccleuch Street. In 1841 he married Margaret Lang from Dumfriesshire. His children included: George William; Margaret Cadenhead, who married William Scott Elliot; Walter Gowdie; John Lang; Thomas Drummond; Anna Drummond, who married John Turnbull Laing; Emma M.; and Wyville Smyth. He lived at 10 Buccleuch Street and at Northville, Bridge Street. George (b.1820/1) from Lilliesleaf, he was farmer at Newhouses in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1851 with his brother Andrew and sister Helen. George (19th C.) married Margaret Beck in Wilton in 1853. George (19th C.) left Hawick in about 1869 and later became Provost in Johnstone in Renfrewshire. He was Provost there 1893-99. In 1897 he gifted to the Town an ornamental fountain, which was sited in Drumlanrig Square, to be replaced about 1910 with the more elaborate Brown Fountain. He attended the 1899 Common Riding, but was reported being in ill health later that year. Gideon (b.1684) son of Robert. In 1707 he and his father were witnesses for a baptism for James Renwick, undermillar at Newmill. Gifford (b.c.1780) servant at Haggiehaugh according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. The word 'Gilford' is also written, making it unclear which version of this unusual name was correct. Helen 'Nelly' (18th C.) laundry maid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Isobel 'Tibbie Tamson' (d.1790) resident of Selkirk, said to be of weak intellect. She was accused of stealing yarn and hanged herself. According to local custom suicides could not be buried in consecrated ground, so her coffin was dragged to a place 'where 3 lairds' lands meet', specifically the Lairds of Philiphaugh and Bowhill and the Burgh of Selkirk, just to the north of Selkirk on Foulshiels Hill. She was interred there, with a rough gravestone placed there later to mark the spot. At

Selkirk Common Riding a wreath is placed on her grave, which was marked with a plaque in 1990. There are similarities with the story of 'Jenny Saut Haa' in Wilton. J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Westburnflat. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. James (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Braxholme. James (16th/17th C.) notary who in 1599 signed a bond for John Turnbull of Minto that was subscribed between several Turnbells at Barnhills. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children (with no mother's name given) included Margaret (b.1632), Thomas (b.1635), Robert (b.1638), William (b.1641), an unnamed child (b.1644), Marion (b.1644), James (b.1647) and Bessie (b.1648). Perhaps the same James, married to Isobel Scott, had a daughter Jean (b.1652). James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Nivison and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1659. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Robert (b.1679); James (b.1680); Christian (b.1683); Bessie (b.1686); and Andrew (b.1688). The witnesses in 1680 were William Gray and Robert Graham and in 1686 were Robert and George (who were probably related). He is probably the James who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms for George in 1680 and 1688, who witnessed a baptism for Robert in 1687 and who witnessed another for Andrew Leyden in 1683. He is probably one of the Jameses recorded at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Thorbrand and their son David was baptised in 1689. James (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) resident of 'the netherend' of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Townhead according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Weensland in 1704. He married Agnes Thorbrand and their children included: David (b.1689), baptised in Ashkirk; and Alexander (b.1704), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1704 were David Miller and Walter Paisley. James (17th/18th C.) married Elspeth Scott in Bedrule in 1715. James (18th C.) married Jean Phaup in Minto in 1722. Their children probably included Matthew

(b.1723), John (b.1726), Jean (b.1729), James (b.1731) and Gilbert (b.1734). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ashybank in 1726 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Ann (b.1727), baptised in Cavers, was probably also his child. James (18th C.) tenant at Midshiels. His daughter Christian married nursery-man Archibald Dickson. He could be the James who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Richard Turnbull, resident of Midshiels. James (1700–48) poet born at Ednam. He grew up at Southdean, 3rd son of Thomas, who was Minister there (and who apparently died during an exorcism at Wolfelee). He should not be confused with his more famous Hawick namesake! He attended Jedburgh Grammar School and had a Presbytery Bursary in Arts and Divinity at Edinburgh University 1715–24; he was ‘Lowland Bursar’ for Hawick Parish for the last 4 of these years. He was patronised by Sir Gilbert Eliott of Minto, among other men, and spent some vacations at Minto. He also held lands at Wideopen, near Morebattle, inherited via his mother. He moved to London in about 1725. He wrote the words for ‘Rule Britannia’ and the epic poem ‘The Seasons’ (used by Handel as text for his oratorio), as well as the highly successful play ‘Tancred and Sigismunda’ amongst other things. Scenes from ‘the Seasons’ are inspired by areas around Jedburgh and Southdean, with the description of a storm collecting over mountain cliffs said to have been based on Ruberslaw. A cave near Ancrum, popularly known as ‘Thomson’s Cave’ was supposed to have been a popular spot for him to visit, and to have his name carved on its roof. He retired to Richmond, Surrey, where he is buried. The armchair in which he composed the ‘Castle of Indolence’ (being high-backed and made of beechwood, with a burn on one arm where it is said a candle fell while he was absorbed in his writing) was acquired by Gilbert Eliott of Otterburn, factor at Wells; Eliott insisted that Burns sit in the chair during his brief visit to Wells House in 1787. A large hawthorn bush in a garden in Southdean was long regarded as being associated with the poet. There is a memorial obelisk to him overlooking Ednam, another memorial (‘Temple of the Muses’) on the Bass Hill of Dryburgh, erected by David Stuart Erskine, and a memorial window at Southdean Kirk. Erskine organised a memorial celebration to which Burns was invited but sent lines of apology. There was also a bicentenary celebration at Ednam in 1900 – ‘So long, sweet poet of the year, Shall bloom that wreath thou well hast sown While Scotia, with exulting tear Proclaims that Thomson was her son’. A bi-centenary celebration with speeches etc. was held at Southdean kirk in 1900 and a more extensive celebration in Ednam – ‘To thee, fair Jed! a holier wreath is due, Who gav’st thy Thomson all thy scenes to view, Bad’st forms of beauty on his vision roll, And mould to harmony his ductile soul’ [JL], ‘And Ednam’s Bard, whose moral strain, I ween, Shall run coeval with the tide of time, While love and taste and genius shall the soul sublime’ [JTe]. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Todshawhillshiel in 1721 and 1726. His children, baptised in Robertson, included: ‘Maury’ (b.1721); James (b.1724); and Jean (b.1726). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included Christian (b.1718), William (b.1721), Walter (b.1723) and Margaret (b.1726). James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Wilson and their son James was baptised in 1725. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Deans and their children included Isobel (b.1726), George (b.1728), Robert (b.1730) and James (b.1732). James (18th C.) married Mary Elliot in Hawick in 1727. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Hislop and their son John was baptised in 1728. James (18th C.) married Rachel Douglas in Wilton in 1731. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Welch, perhaps in 1734 (although no bride’s name is given). Their children included: Marion (b.1735); Katherine (b.1737); Thomas (b.1739); William (b.1741); Katherine (again) and Margaret (b.1744); and Helen (b.1748). James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Nivison and their children included Elizabeth (b.1743) and William (b.1744). James (18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Wilton in 1747. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Turnbull and their children included Andrew (b.1752). James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1764. His children, baptised in Robertson, included Bettie (b.1750), Helen (b.1755), James (b.1758), John (b.1760) and Robert (b.1764). James (18th C.) tenant farmer at Nether Ancrum. In 1778 he had a sasine for the lands of Fodderlee, following a disposition by Robert of Fodderlee, who must have been a near relative. In 1784 East Fodderlee was sold to William Riddell, and along with Riddell he granted a disposition for the lands to John Thomson; this may have been the John born to a James Thomson in Minto Parish in 1783. He was surely related to George, who was recorded as owner of East Fodderlee in 1788 (unless there is an error in forenames). James (1752–1831) born in Hawick. In 1785 he emigrated to the Niagara district of what was then called Upper Canada. There he married Margaret Emerick and they had 10 children; this included David, who rose to the rank of Major in the Canadian militia, a founding member of the Grand River Navigation Company and owner of several mills and Canadian Member of Parliament. He and his sons built their brick house, baking the bricks themselves. He was described as ‘a stern old Presbyterian’. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Pater-son and their children included Robert (b.1771). James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Stirling and their children included Janet (b.1775). James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Dinlabyre in 1778. He married Janet Shiel and their son Duncan was baptised in 1778. James (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1776), Betty (b.1778), Robert (b.1779), James (b.1781), John (b.1783), Agnes (b.1786), Archibald (b.1788), Mary (b.1791), Thomas (b.1794) and John (b.1796). James (18th C.) married Jeany Oliver in Minto Parish in 1794. Their son James was baptised in 1794. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Outerside in 1793, in 1794 was ‘late in Broadlee’ and in 1798 was at Unthank in Ewes Parish. He married Isobel Graham in 1792 and their children included: Jane (b.1793), James (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796) and Janet (b.1799), all baptised in Robertson; and Mary (b.1802), John (b.1803), Edward Aitchison (b.1805), Robert (b.1807), William (b.1808), Christian Aitchison (b.1810) and Edward (b.1811), all born in Ewes. James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Aitchison in Wilton in 1796. James (18th/19th C.) married Betty Noble in Wilton in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) gardener at Stobs. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. The entry is annotated with ‘deserted’, suggesting that he fled in order not to serve. His name still appears on the list in 1798, but among those who failed to appear or failed to produce substitutes; William Johnstone, farmer at Tower, was balloted in his place. A reward of 1 guinea was then offered for his apprehension. His status as a deserter was confirmed on the 1799 list. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as servant at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf

Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. James (18th/19th C.) son of William, tenant in Raperlaw and Netherraw. He is listed in the ballots for the Militia in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1799 and 1801. He could be the James who married Margaret Easton and whose children, baptised in Lilliesleaf, included Christian (b.1810), Esther (b.1814), Jessy (b.1815) and Agnes (b.1818). James (b.1799), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his child. James (b.c.1780) ploughman at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He is distinct from the son of William in Raperlaw who was also listed in 1801. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Teindside, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same James was resident of ‘Woodfoot’ on the 1801 ballot for the Militia; he may have been related to John, who was at ‘Branksholm Wood foot’ on the same list, and Richard, who was farmer at Borthaugh Woodfoot in 1797. James (b.1776/7) born at Over Huntly, son of James and Mary Stirling. He may be the James, labourer at Woll, recorded on the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish; William was joiner at Woll in 1801, and may have been a brother or other close relative. He was surveyor of roads on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may be the ‘Mr. Thomson’ whose land is marked on the left side of the Loan, just before the Moat, on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed as a road-surveyor on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is probably the James from Hawick, recorded in a document related to the Hare Moss Toll, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in Selkirk. In 1841 he was living on the Loan with his wife Rachel and children Robert, William, Mary and Rachel. He was still living on the Loan in 1851, as a retired surveyor. He married Rachel Wilkie from Midlem and their children (all baptised in Ashkirk Parish) included: Andrew (b.1800); John (b.1804); Robert (b.1806), grocer; Janet (b.1808); William (b.1810), hosier; Mary (b.1814); Rachel (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1821). James (b.1781) born in Minto Parish, son of James. He was a forester in Castleton Parish, living at Sandholm. Probably the same James was a labourer in Newcastle on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. He was listed as a labourer at Sandholm on the 1801 Militia ballot; Robert was also there and so perhaps his brother. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a 'Woodforester' at Sandholm in 1835–41. He married Margaret Common. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1816), who married Andrew Elliot; Richard (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); Jane (b.c.1822) and Mary (b.c.1825). Either he or his father was recorded as forester for the Buccleuch estates in Liddesdale in at least the period 1798–1807. He is probably the Thomson from Sandholm who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. James (18th/19th C.) listed at 'Pingle' on the subscription list for William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He probably lived at Pingle south of Langholm, but it could have been Pinglehole. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rachel Wilkie and their children included: Rachel (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1821). James (18th/19th C.) servant at Shaws in Castleton Parish. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835. He married Janet Jackson, but they were rebuked for 'antenuptial fornication' in 1832. James (b.c.1805) born at Apple-treehall. He was a joiner in Jedburgh. His wife was Jane and their children included Mary Ann, John, Elizabeth, Isabella, James and Thomasina. James (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Agnes Turnbull and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1835. James 'Jimmy' or 'Jamie Tamson' (1827–1888) poet and song-writer, born in Bowden, son of Robert and Helen Wilkie. He had a maternal uncle, Dr. Wilkie of Innerleithen, who was an archaeologist and friend of Sir Walter Scott, James Hogg and Dr. Jamieson. He had an aunt, Henrietta Wilkie, Mrs. Drummond of Tranent, who also wrote poetry and he was additionally a second cousin of poet Thomas Aird. As a boy, he herded cows in the Eildons, where he was said to carry a battered copy of Burns' Kilmarnock Edition in his plaid, and where he got to know the poet Andrew Scott. From age 16 he served an apprenticeship as a wood-turner and cabinet-maker in Selkirk. He worked there for a while, before moving to Hawick, where he spent more than 30 years. His first compositions appeared in the Dumfries Herald. He was writer of 'Up wi' the banner', 'The Border Queen', 'Hawick Volunteers' and 'The Star o' Robbie Burns', as well as poems such as 'The Auld Mid Raw', 'The Mither Tongue', 'The Wee Croodlin' Doo' and 'Hairst', many contained in his book 'Doric Lays & Lyrics' (1870). 'Our Robin' was one of his first poems, being published in the late 1850s, with his 'Hogmanay' sung at the New Year of

1860 at the Ewan's Mill gathering. A great admirer of Burns, he helped found the Burns Club in Hawick; it is said that Burns' 'Kilmarnock Edition' was his constant companion while he was a herd. He was Bard for Lodge 424, as well as being Masonic Provincial Grand Bard for Peebles and Selkirk. He was said to have lived in the auld Mid Raw and later at 54 High Street, where a commemorative plaque was erected in 1995. In the 1861 census he is listed on Wilton Terrace, living with a housekeeper Mary Riddell, and her children Mary and Catherine, as well as their children together, John and Helen. In poor health in later life, he moved back to Bowden in 1886, but returned to Hawick a few months later and was supported by his Masonic brethren. At the suggestion of J.Y. Hunter, he set about composing a new Common Riding song in 1887 and later presented 'Up wi' the Banner' to the Cornet, this being only about a year and a half before his death. He died in the Cottage Hospital and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, where Lodge 424 erected a memorial obelisk (about a decade after his death). A wooden cup he made from material salvaged from the Mid Raw is in the Museum. The Hawick Burns Club unveiled his portrait at their clubrooms in 1924. In 2005 the new bridge across the Teviot was named after him, and an adjacent statue (by Bill Landles) unveiled in 2006. James (d.1939) son of John, farmer at Synton Mains. He became a saddler of 6 High Street, taking over the butcher's premises of George Davies, with Robert and Thomas Hall taking over from him. His brothers William and John were both farmers. He was secretary of the Border Oddfellows for 30 years and was for many years Session Clerk for East Bank Church. Janet (b.c.1790) confectioner at the Sandbed. In Pigot's 1837 directory she is listed as a baker and confectioner on the High Street. She was recorded at about No. 12 Sandbed on the 1841 census. John (15th/16th C.) witness to a sasine for the Erskines in their lands of Synton in 1508, where he is 'John Thomesoun'. Judging by the other witnesses, he may have been local. John (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. John (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Headshaw. He was recorded in Headshaw in 1580 when he and Richard Brown acted as cautioners for Walter Scott of Headshaw to make payment to Thomas Ker of Kippielaw. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbells of Bedrule. John (16th/17th C.) resident of Mangerton. In 1603 he was 'Johnne Thomson of Marguerstoun' when there was a complaint that he and others had raided 'Sewingdene' in 1601, stealing livestock and goods and injuring several people; 'Cubbie's Archie', servant of Simon Elliot of Binks, was the leader of the group, which also contained Armstrongs. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Caverhill and their children included James (b.1649). John (17th C.) recorded in Penchrise in 1684 when his son, also John, was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. John (17th C.) tenant in 'Mabinslaw' on a 1684 list of Roxburghshire men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He probably farmed at Mabonlaw. John (d.c.1687) tenant in Flatt when his will was recorded in 1687. It is unclear if this was the Flatt in Castleton Parish. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Whillans and their children included James (b.1674), Isobel (b.1684) and Bessie (b.1687). The baptism of Bessie was witnessed by Stephen Greenshields and Michael Turnbull. John (17th C.) tenant in Lethem in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick, living near the East Port. In 1706 he was one of the people who were disturbed at night by a group who were involved in drunken revelry, and later charged. He was apparently forced to 'ryse naked out of his bed' and threatened with being taken away by the pretend officers. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Drinkstone in 1722 and Wester Burnfoot in 1731. He married Isobel Gray in 1714. Their children included: Andrew (b.1715); Andrew (again, b.1718); and Isobel (b.1722). The witnesses in 1722 were William Riddell and John Scott and in the same year he (along with John Scott) witnessed a baptism for William Riddell, who lived at Appletreehall. He is probably the John 'Thoms' who witnessed a baptism in 1731 for John Cook in Newton in Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Andrew Stewart in Midshiels in 1732. He may be the John in 'Brihool' (probably Brieryhill) whose funeral is recorded in 1750. John (18th C.) resident of Giddenscleuch. His son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. John (18th C.) resident of the Flex. He married Mary Miller and their children included: Mary (b.1721), Gideon (b.1722), James (b.1726) and Robert (b.1728), baptised in Hawick; and Mary (b.1731) and William (b.1734), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1726 were George Gibson and James Gledstains. John (18th C.) married Marion Sword in Minto in 1728. Marion (b.1728), baptised in 1728, was probably his daughter. John (18th C.) married Margaret Easton in Minto in 1740. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was living at Templehall in 1751. His children included 'Mebill' (b.1749), George (b.1751), William (b.1754) and Janet (b.1756). John (d.bef. 1776) grocer in Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1776, when his daughter Christian married David Brown. John (18th C.) farmer at Wester Essenside. He was recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. He is probably the John who married Mary Gray in 1758 and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: Andrew (b.1759); Margaret (b.1760); Agnes (b.1761); Robert (b.1763), who probably took over the farm of Wester Essenside; Jane (b.1765); James (b.1768); Thomas (b.1774); and Mary (b.1776). John (18th C.) married Isabel Liddell in Wilton Parish in 1763. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Boyd in 1789. Their children included: Thomas (b.1792); and John (b.1794). The 1792 baptism was carried out 'In presence of the Congregation' and the 1794 baptism witnessed 'by the Burgher Congregation'. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Robertson Parish. In 1795 he is recorded at Greenbank. He married Helen Chisholme in Robertson in 1794 and their children included William (b.1795). John (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier who owned 2 horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same carrier was recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; in 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'. He was still on the list in 1801 and may have been related to carrier Walter, who was listed after him. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Deanbrae, recorded as owner of 4 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Teviotbank in 1797, when he was working for David Simpson. John (18th/19th C.) possibly son of James, who owned Fodderlee and farmed at Nether Ancrum. He was granted a disposition for East Fodderlee in 1784 and in 1802 sold the lands to Thomas Gregson, farmer at Whitchesters. John (18th/19th C.) tenant of Billerwell farm, in the Rule valley. After the Teviot flood swept away much of Hassendean churchyard (where his ancestors were buried) he moved the tombstone to Billerwell. He could be the farmer at Billerwell whose servant William Hunter was on the 1801 Militia ballot. John (b.c.1770s) mason at Calaburn according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He was probably related to mason Andrew, who was at Calaburn at the same time, as well as George, who was there in 1801. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Chisholme in Wilton in 1798. John (b.c.1780) resident of Branhholme Woodfoot according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. Perhaps the John at 'Woodfoot' on the same list is a duplicate entry. He may have been son or younger brother of Richard, who was at Borthaugh Woodfoot in 1797 and perhaps James, who was also at Woodfoot in 1801. John (b.c.1780) servant at Penchrise according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1801. John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Janet Reid and their children included: Janet and Jean (b.1803); and Cicely (b.1806). John (18th/19th C.) married Mary Nichol in Wilton Parish in 1804. John (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1805. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Dunlop and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1806. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1808), John (again, b.1809) and Betty (b.1810). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rachel Scott and their son John was born in 1814, with witness appearing to be Jane Scott. John (18th/19th C.) farmer in the Hawick area. He married Agnes Lambert and their children included: Maria (b.1847); John (b.1848), who was a mason; and Thomas (b.1851). John (b.1789) son of Andrew, who farmed at Bewlie. He himself is recorded in 1851 at Bewlie Mains, farming 1035 acres and employing 35 labourers. He was unmarried at that time and living with his retired father and sister Betsy. John (19th C.) married Margaret Hunter Hardie in Wilton in 1823. John (19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Preston in 1828 and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Violet (b.1832); and Agnes (b.1834). John (19th C.) married Jane Little in Southdean Parish in 1833. John (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Mary Beattie and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1839. John (19th C.) married Margaret Latimer in Wilton in 1843. John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Laidlaw and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1854. Rev. John (1823–1889) born in Over-Roxburgh, son of farmer William and Margaret Shiel. He was educated at Ancrum School and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1854 and became assistant minister at Selkirk. He was ordained as minister of St. Mary's after it had become a 'quoad sacra' church in 1860. In 1861 he became a Mason in Lodge 111, receiving the first, second, and third degrees and afterwards being elected an office bearer, all in one evening. He lived at 9 Buccleuch Street and later built Rosalee when his wife inherited a small fortune. He also owned Allanshaws in Kelso. Together they founded St. John's Church in 1880, and he formally became its first minister in 1881 (having resigned his position at St. Mary's in 1879). He was Chaplain to the Cornet several times in the 1880s and supported the Common Riding at a time when many of the other local ministers railed against it. His acceptance of an invitation to the Cornet's Breakfast in 1887 was the start of that event becoming a formal part of the proceedings, and his reciprocation to invite the supporters to his church the following Sunday was the beginning of the 'Kirkin'. The lands that he purchased included some parts of what had previously been Roughheugh (and owned by Walter Scott). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1877. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His wife was Mary Ann, daughter of James Scott of Allanshaws and Mary Brown. Mrs. Thomson also paid for the new iron pump at the Verter Well (she later married William Ludovic Mair, Sheriff-Substitute of Lanarkshire, and died in 1891). Their children were Margaret Shiel (who married Robert Grierson Laidlaw of Hazelwood, Hawick), and 5 others who died young. He wrote several books including 'Address to Ploughmen' (also called 'Address on the Evils of the Bondage System', published in Hawick, 1866), 'The art of weaving spiritualised' (Hawick, 1869 and 1874), 'Voices from the Plough' (Hawick, 1869), 'History of Peter Plough' (Hawick, 1872), 'Life and times of William Thomson' (1875 and 1879), 'Alexander Hope: a Hawick story' (1878, perhaps with a 2nd part in 1879), 'The Life of James Scott of Allanshaws' (1879), 'The Art of Ploughing Spiritualised', plus at least one other sermon and 'Speeches delivered on Different Occasions' (Hawick, 1882). Although 'Alexander Hope' was a work of fiction (with a strong moralistic message, particularly against the evils of drink), it contains several local anecdotes that are still of interest. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Greensidehall and later Sinton Mains. He was brother of saddler James and farmer William. His son John was Secretary of the Oddfellows. John (19th/20th C.) commercial traveller of Hawick, he served as Session Clerk for St. George's Kirk 1915–24. Rev. John Archibald Glover (b.1883) son of John Cornwallis, minister in Edinburgh and Anne Dundas Glover. His brother was James C. He was born in Sanquharr, Dumfriesshire and educated at George Watson's College, Glasgow Academy and Glasgow University. He was licensed to preach by Glasgow Presbytery in 1906, became an assistant at St. Andrew's in Edinburgh, and in 1910 was ordained at Wallace-town, Ayr. He moved to the Tron Kirk, Edinburgh, in 1916 and served with the R.A. Chaplains' Department 1917–18. He became minister of Hawick Parish in 1925. He also stepped in as 'interim-moderator' for St. George's Kirk when it was without a minister in 1936/7. He wrote 'Roll of the Parish Ministry of Hawick, A.D. 1183–1929' (1936), which he had made into a fine manuscript volume, preserved in the church. He married Ethel Maud Richardson and they had a son Aiden (b.1911). Rev. Joseph (1791/2–65) son of John, the Town Clerk of Jedburgh. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1814 and appointed preacher at Caerlenrig (Teviothead) 'chapel-of-ease' in 1817. However, 2 years later he was ordained as minister at Ednam, then translated to Morebattle in 1844. In 1823 he married Margaret (who died in 1844, aged 43), daughter of Thomas S. Hardie, minister of Ashkirk. He later married Elizabeth F. Robson. He wrote an account of Ednam Parish. Rev. Lindsay (1938–2014) born in Edinburgh and brought up in Stow, he studied at Edinburgh University and served as Assistant Minister at Palmerston Church in Edinburgh from 1962. He was ordained as Minister of Balnornock North in Glasgow in 1964 and then moved to Hawick in 1972 as Minister of Trinity Kirk. He became a well-known and active member of the local community, growing to love its traditions and institutions. He acted as Callants' Club Chaplain and was also involved with the Probus Club. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2008 and retired that year after 36 years of service. Despite being advised to move away from his charge in order to enjoy a peaceful retirement, he insisted on staying on in Hawick. He married Brenda Shanks and their children are Stuart, David and Helen. Lisa (1997–) attended Trinity and Hawick

High Schools and then Edinburgh University. She played for Melrose Ladies, Edinburgh University, French side Lille Metropole and D.M.P. Durham Sharks. She turned professional in 2016. She made her international debut against England in 2016 and was Scottish team Captain for the 2018/9 season. She has been capped 35 times for Scotland. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being 'ī dēnū', which is probably an abbreviation for 'in dennum', i.e. he lived in Denholm. Richard (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He married Martha Norval and their children included: John (b.1758); and Margaret (b.1760). His wife was probably recorded in 1787 when 'Martha Novels Grandchild' died in Hawick. Richard (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1778 he married Euphan Cairns and their children included: James (b.1779); Janet (b.1781); John (b.1783); and Archibald (b.1785). The witnesses in 1779 were 'The Associate Congregation' and in 1781 the 'Special Congregation'. Richard (18th/19th C.) recorded at Woodfoot in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably farmer at Borthaugh Woodfoot. He is likely to be the Richard whose daughter Isabel died in Hawick in 1815. He may have been father or elder brother of Andrew, who was recorded at Branhholme Woodfoot in 1801. Richard (19th C.) married Agnes Hardie in Hawick in 1844. Robert (16th C.) farmer at Hawthornside 'Newtown'. His barn and yard are recorded in 1562 in the document dealing with the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. Robert (d.c.1606) minister of Ratho who was presented as minister of Castleton Parish at the end of 1604. He may have held both at the same time, but not for long, since he was dead within less than 2 years. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Dobie and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1646. Robert (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (the part corresponding to Hassendean). Along with James he witnessed baptisms for George in 1680 and 1688, and along with George he witnessed a baptism for James in 1686. It seems likely that he was father or brother of both George and James. He also witnessed a baptism for John Hope in 1681 and Andrew Leyden in 1683. He married Margaret Gray in Robertson Parish in 1679 and their children included: Helen (b.1680); Dand (b.1682); Robert (b.1684); and Janet (b.1687). He was probably also the Robert recorded in Burnfoot in 1697 when his son

Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish. The witnesses in 1687 were James (perhaps his brother) and Thomas Caldwell. The witnesses in 1697 were Adam Scott of Burnfoot and James White. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel mentioned in 1679 when Robert Wright was fined for destroying a load of peat that he had cut, and he himself was fined for 'ane ryott committ upon the said Robert Wright'. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.bef. 1720) resident of Hawick Parish. He may be the Robert who witnessed baptisms for John Dryden (along with Alexander Riddell) in 1675 and 1683. His wife was Janet Dickson. Their son George was born in 1687, with Gideon Scott of Outerside and Rev. Thomas Shiel as witnesses (suggesting he was from the countryside to the south of Hawick). His children included: Helen (b.1675); Gideon (b.1684); Isobel (b.1685), who married Robert Nichol in Hawick in 1720; and George (b.1687). In 1707 he and his son Gideon witnessed a baptism for James Renwick, undermillar at Newmill. This suggests he may be the same man as the tenant in Castlehill and Newmill. Robert (1668/9–1740) tenant in Greens in Castleton Parish. He married Betty Scott, who died in 1739, aged 73 years. He may have had a son William (also tenant in Greens), whose wife Isabella Armstrong died in 1748, aged 40. They are buried in Etleton. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant at Castlehill (near Newmill) in 1690. He is listed as 'Rot. Thomsone officer', but it is unclear what 'officer' meant. He is probably the same Robert listed as tenant at Newmill on Teviot on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, where he was 'wt tuo kilns' and paid tax for 4 hearths. He was in 'Newmilne' in 1696 when his son Walter was baptised. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Storie in 1698 and for smith John Dryden in 1700. He was also in Newmill when he witnessed baptisms in 1700 for William Bell in Whitchesters and Walter Wilson in Castlehill, in 1701 for smith John Dryden (whose wife was a Thomson), in 1702 for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield, in 1704 for Walter Wilson in Castlehill, in 1705 twice (one at Branhholmtown), in 1706 for Robert Henderson, in 1707 for Walter Wilson again, for Walter Crow in Branhholme Town and for Robert Scott, carrier in Branhholmtown, in 1708 for James Stevenson in Harwood, in 1709 for James Scott, tenant in Nether Southfield, in 1710 for Walter Crow in Branhholme Town again, for John Nichol in Newmill and for Robert Prendergast, in 1712 for Robert Scoon in Branhholme Town, for William

Allan (in 'Park'), for James Scott in Stobicote (husband of his step-daughter) and for carrier Thomas Penman, and in 1713 for John Riddell in Branhholme Town. Given all the baptisms that he witnessed, it is likely he was a Kirk Elder, acting for the Newmill area. He was recorded in Newmill in 1709 when his 'servitor' John Nichol had a child baptised. Probably the same Robert was in Newmill in 1723 when (along with William) he witnessed a baptism for smith James Dryden and in 1726 other baptisms (also along with William) for John Scott, for John Riddell and for Walter Scott in Newmill. In 1729 he and William also witnessed a baptism for Robert Goodfellow. In 1731 he witnessed a further baptism for William (who was also at Newmill). He may have been ancestor of the later Robert at Newmill on Slitrig (although maybe that is just a coincidence). He is probably the Robert who married Margaret Falside, and whose children baptised in Hawick included William (b.1694), Walter (b.1698) and Robert (b.1701). The witnesses in 1698 were John Dryden and Thomas Elliot. He is probably the Robert 'in New milne' whose step-daughters included: Margaret Scott, who married Walter Hume in 1707; and Anne Scott, who married James Scott (tenant in Stobicote) in 1712. It seems likely that his wife Margaret Falsyde was widow of William Scott, and that he took her children into his family. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Burnfoot in 1697. He married a Gray and their children included Robert (b.1697). He may be the Robert whose son Robert was baptised in 1712. He may be the Robert in Appletreehall who had a legal process against James Laing, maltman of Selkirk in 1723. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish who married Anna Henderson. Their children included: Isabel (b.1701); and William (b.1704). Robert (17th/18th C.) married Mary 'E.' in Minto in 1704. Robert (18th C.) ex-Bailie in 1738 when he was involved with the construction of the Teviot Bridge. Perhaps the same Robert was recorded as an Elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Highchesters Mill in 1733. His children included: Robert (b.1733). He may be the Robert who in 1773 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Scoon and Rachel Riddell and in 1776 witnessed another baptism for miller John Scott and Betty Thomson (who was probably related). Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Gledstains in Minto in 1737. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk

Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1738. Robert (18th C.) married Betty Crowden in Minto in 1749. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Billerwell farm in the Rule valley. His family came originally from the Hassendean area. He is recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. When he died (in the late 1700s) he left around £1200 to a distant relative called Boog, who spent it all within about a year. He could be the Robert whose children baptised in Hobkirk Parish included John (b.1786), Gilbert (b.1788) and George (b.1790). Robert (18th C.) only son of George and Margaret Kerr. In 1757 he had a sasine for the half lands of Fodderlee. He married Mary Dick. She and her son George had a sasine for the 'liferent' of Fodderlee in 1764. However, he had another sasine for these lands in 1766, along with Isobel Kerr. She was presumably either a second wife, or a relative of his mother. In 1778 the lands went to James, who may have been another son. Robert (18th C.) married Betty Fairbairn in Ashkirk Parish in 1769. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wester Essenside, perhaps son of John. He is probably the Robert recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1791 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Wester Essenside as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably also the farmer at Essenside taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He was surely related to Thomas, who was recorded as farmer in the same place in 1799. He may be the Robert who married Isabel Simpson and had children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, including John (b.1812), Mary (b.1814), William (b.1816) and Isabel (b.1819). Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Lockie in Ashkirk Parish in 1794. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at New Mill on Slitrig, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He is probably related to the Robert recorded there in 1712. He may be the Robert who was at 'Newmiln' in 1789 when his daughter Magdaline was baptised in Kirkton Parish. In 1799 he was listed at New Mill on the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) footman at Minto according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (b.c.1780) labourer at Sandholm according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. James was also listed there and so probably his brother, suggesting he was the Robert born to James in Minto in 1781. Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Oliver and their children included Nelly (b.1808). Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Mary Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1809), William (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813) and Jeany (b.1815). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1828). Robert (b.1801/2) agricultural labourer in Hobkirk Parish. In 1841 he was at 'Gatehousecote Hinds Houses'. His wife was Agnes and their children included George (b.1832/3), Isabel (b.1835/6) and Robert (b.1838/9). Robert (1806–70s) born in Ashkirk, son of surveyor James and Rachel Wilkie. He was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his parents and siblings at 27 Loan. His grocer's and spirit merchant's shop was at 9 High Street, on the ground floor of the house owned by joiner Walter Wilson. He later became factor for the Cavers estate. In 1861 he was listed as a land factor, still living with his mother and sister at 27 Loan. He also served as Chairman of the Cavers Parochial Board. Robert (19th C.) married Agnes Hall in Wilton in 1828. Robert (b.1810/1) son of a shepherd at Bellsrigg in Deadwater. He was a shepherd in Rulewater, living at Blackburn Cottage in Southdean Parish. In the 1841 census he is recorded as 'Skyehead' and at Southdean Rig in 1851. He was one of the main early supporters of the Free Kirk at Wolfelee, being the first elder, one of the first two elders appointed in 1850 and one of the trustees. He married Margaret Armstrong, from Inverness-shire. Their children included: Andrew (b.1834/5), shepherd at Wigg; Helen (b.1836); Janet (b.1838); Esther (b.1840); Jane (b.1843), born at the Rig, who married carter James Moore; Thomas Armstrong (b.1845); John; and Euphemia. Robert 'Bob' (19th C.) son of Adam and Janet Cairns from around Newtown St. Boswells. When young he worked on a farm, but an accident injured his arm. He was appointed as postman in the Rulewater district, succeeding George Nichol about 1873. Starting on foot, he later got a horse and trap. In 1900 he was transferred to Newtown St. Boswells, and received a long-service medal from the King. He lived at Weens Cottages, was a keen gardener, librarian for Hobkirk, active member of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of shepherd Robert Hume. His children were: Adam, assistant gardener at Wolfelee, who married Martha Dalgleish; Robert, gardener at Hunthill, who married Margaret Eunson; James, blacksmith at Wark-on-Tweed, who married Euphemia Hope; George, footman at Kippilaw House; John, grocer; William, tailor; Charles, gardener; Helen; and Janet. Robert (1833/4–1909) from Crookham in Northumberland, he worked in the tweed business in Carlisle and was then a traveller for one of the Hawick firms. He was later a wool agent in Galashiels, and was regarded as one of the authorities on wool, yarn spinning and weaving in the Borders. Thomas (15th C.) recorded 'in quithalch braa' in 1494/5. He contributed '1 nag' to the itinerant court held in Selkirk. His lands could be Whitehaugh Brae near Hawick. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1522, for the Homes of Wedderburn. Rev. Thomas (c.1577–1626) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1597, he became minister of Soutra in 1605 and was translated to Hobkirk in 1609. He died sometime in the first half of 1626, with William Weir becoming Hobkirk's next minister. He married Janet Sinclair (who was buried in Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh in 1667), widow of James Brydon. Their son John became a tailor's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1629, while another son was probably the Thomas who was minister to the garrison of the Earl of Callendar in 1645, then to a congregation in Hartlepool and finally to Slamannan. Rev. Thomas (c.1666–1716) minister at Southdean. He was son of Thomas, gardener to Andrew Edmonston of Ednam and descended from the family of Rousland, near Kinneil. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1686, was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1691 and became minister at Ednam in 1692. He was translated to Southdean in 1700 (although there were also calls from Newcastleton and Morebattle) and remained there until his death. He is said to have died after being struck by lightning (or a 'ball of fire') while exorcising a ghost from a building at Wolfelee (there seems to be some truth in this story, with a tradition that the main house there was haunted by a brownie, and evidence that he was buried quickly after his death, but few details are certain). He was a quiet man, little known beyond his congregation, but respected for his piety and pastoral duty. In 1693 he married Beatrix Trotter of Wideopen (on Kale), daughter of Alexander Trotter of Fogo and Margaret Home of Bassendean, and she died in Edinburgh in 1725.

Their children were: Andrew (b.1695); Alexander (b.1697); Isobel (b.1699); James (1700–48), well known as a poet, author of 'The Seasons'; Margaret; Mary (d.1790) who married William Craig in Edinburgh and whose son James planned Edinburgh's New Town; Elizabeth (d.c.1746), who married Robert Bell, minister at Strathaven, in Edinburgh in 1740; Jean (d.1781), who married Robert Thomson, Master of Lanark Grammar School; and John (d.1735), who acted as dictator for his brother James. His house in Ednam was converted into the schoolhouse. A brass plaque was added to his gravestone at Chesters in 1867. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull, daughter of the Laird of Knowe in Minto Parish in 1721. He was rebuked by the Hawick Session for this 'irregular marriage', which took place in England. Their daughter Marion was baptised in Hawick in 1725, with witnesses Rev. Charles Telfer and weaver James Roger. Perhaps the same Thomas also married Mary Elliot and had a daughter Elizabeth (b.1729). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Dryden in 1718 and their children included: Robert (b.1719); and Adam (b.1722). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Deanbrae in 1726. His children included Janet (b.1724) and James (b.1726). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Denholm. He is probably the Thomas who married Marion Tudhope in Cavers Parish in 1728. He was recorded at Denholm in 1729 and 1730 (when he was a herd). His children included Bessie (b.1729), Helen (b.1730) and Adam (b.1734). He is probably also father of some of these children baptised in Cavers Parish (with the others being part of the other Thomas; family): Helen (b.1728); Alison (b.1732); George (b.1732); and an unnamed child (b.1739). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Borthaugh in 1732. He married Mary Elliot and their son John was baptised in 1732, with witnesses George Bell and George Home. His surname is written 'Thomason'. Thomas (18th C.) married Margaret Kersel in Minto in 1736. Thomas (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Isabel Hardie and their children included: Peter (b.1756); Isabel (b.1759); Agnes (b.1762); and Robert (b.1764). The witnesses in 1759 were fletcher Robert Hardie and Kirk Officer Alexander Bunyan. He is probably the carrier of that name who witnessed a baptism for John Hardie in Hawick in 1768. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Coltart and their children included James (b.1765), Walter (b.1766) and Agnes (b.1768). He may be the workman who witnessed a baptism for stocking-maker Mark Sutherland in 1787. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Oliver and their son Thomas was baptised in 1773. He may be the deceased Thomas whose son Andrew died in Hawick in 1781. Thomas (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 he was listed as holding part of Minto Hills farm 'in tack', the other part being held by Andrew Nichol. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1787. He married Margaret Elliot in 1785 and they had an unnamed son in 1787. Thomas (b.c.1770s) mason in Hawick. In 1799 he was recorded as apprentice to mason John Laing when he was on the ballot for the Militia. Thomas (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who was already deceased when his daughter Marion died in Hawick in 1815; in that record the word 'Slorige' or 'Slorage' appears after his name. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Mervinslaw Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (b.c.1770s) farmer at Wester Essenside according to the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He was surely related to Robert, who was recorded as farmer in the same place in 1797. He could be the Thomas, son of John and Mary Gray, who was baptised in Ashkirk in 1774. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Jean Laidlaw and their children included: John (b.1821), baptised in East Bank Kirk; and William (b.1826), baptised in Ashkirk. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Roan. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1817), Janet (b.1820) and Andrew (b.1823). Thomas (19th C.) married Robina Hay in Wilton in 1824. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Elliot in 1842 and their children included Janet (b.1844). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Alison Scott and their son George was baptised in 1849. Walter (17th C.) married Helen Grieve in Robertson in 1681. Their son James was baptised in 1685. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Janet Rutherford in Castleton in 1709. Walter (18th C.) married Helen 'Mader' in Bedrule in 1751. Their son George was baptised in Cavers in 1755. William (b.1753) and Janet (b.1760), also baptised in Cavers (with no mother's name given) were probably also their children. Walter (18th C.) married Isabel Dunlop in Wilton in 1779. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included Janet (b.1780), Thomas (b.1784) and Thomas (b.1785). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Horsburgh and their children included William (b.1787). Walter (b.c.1770s) carrier in Hawick, recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He was still on the list in 1801 and may have been related to carrier John, who was listed before him. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Dalgleish and their children included: Margaret (b.1790); Mary (b.1793); John (b.1795); Agnes (b.1798); Thomas (b.1800); Rabina (b.1802); and Walter (b.1809). Walter (19th C.) married Beatrix Scott in Robertson in 1849. Their children included Wilhelmina (b.1850), William (b.1852) and Henry (b.1853). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Dunlop and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1651, with witnesses Walter (surely related) and John Wilson. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) tenant in Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th/18th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1702 he was listed as servitor to Gideon Scott of Falnash. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included William (b.1702) and Margaret (b.1707). The witnesses in 1702 were smith John Dryden and Robert Riddell, miller at Newmill. He is probably the William 'older' in Newmill, who (along with William 'younger') witnessed baptisms in 1716 and 1718 for James Scott in Stobicote, in 1717 for William Allan and in 1719 for William Clerk, workman in Castlehill. Perhaps the same William witnessed a baptism for smith John Dryden in 1705; Dryden's wife was Isobel, who may have been his daughter. He could be the William who married Agnes Cook and whose children included James (b.1680); the witnesses in 1680 were William Wilson and William Paisley. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'officer' in the Hawick Session records of 1722, when he was asked to summon a person to the Court of the Baron Depute. He was probably a Burgh Officer of the time, but may instead have been a Kirk officer. William (18th C.) resident of Newmill in

Hawick Parish. He was probably son (or grandson) of Robert, tenant in Newmill. In 1733 he is recorded being at 'New Miln' and 'at New miln' in Hawick Parish in 1740. He may be the William 'younger', who (along with William 'older') witnessed baptisms in 1716 and 1718 for James Scott in Stobicote and in 1719 for William Clerk, workman in Castlehill. He was 'in Newmiln' in 1720 when he witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott in Branxholme Town, William Mitchellhill in Branxholme Town and James Dryden in Newmill. He is probably the William who (along with Robert, both in Newmill) witnessed a baptism for smith James Dryden in 1723. He may be the William who witnessed baptisms in 1726 (along with Robert) for John Scott, for John Riddell and for Walter Scott in Newmill, and another (along with Robert) for Robert Goodfellow in 1729. His servant Robert Deans witnessed a baptism in 1742 for William Anderson in Raesknowe; this was the same day as the baptism of one of his own children in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot in 1729, the marriage being proclaimed in Robertson. Probably the same William in Newmill secondly married Isobel Scott (with whom he had children baptised in 1738 and 1740), with her name being recorded as 'Margaret' in 1742. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1729); Nichol (b.1731); Margaret (b.1733), Katherine (b.1735); Janet (b.1738); Helen (b.1740); and Margaret (again, b.1742). All the baptisms were recorded in Hawick, except the first Margaret, who was baptised in Robertson Parish. Janet (b.1736), with no mother's name given, may also have been his daughter. The witnesses in 1731 were Walter Scott and Robert Thomson, in 1740 were blacksmiths James Dryden, elder and younger, and in 1742 were his servant Robert Deans and Kirk Officer John Telfer. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1740. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1740. William (18th C.) married Agnes Gray in Minto in 1745. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Doecluch in 1749 when his son Thomas was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1750. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Lockie in 1762 and their children included Jean (b.1774) and John (b.1777). William (d.bef. 1791) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Beatrix Scott and she died in 1791. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is listed in 1780 as possessor (probably tenant) of the lands of Horse Park, with rent of £9 9s. William (18th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1784 he witnessed a baptism for miller John Scott and Betty (who may have been his daughter or sister). William (18th C.) recorded as 'Servant to Capt. Douglas of Cavers' in 1784. He was listed as footman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. In 1791-73 he was still footman at Cavers for George Douglas and in 1794 and 1797 was a house servant at Cavers. His son could be the 'William Thomson, Jun. Cavers' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish included: Tibby (b.1778); Nelly (b.1784); William (b.1787); and George (b.1788). Additional children, also baptised in Cavers, may include: Walter (b.1779); and James (b.1792). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Netherraw according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. In 1799 and 1801 his son James was recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Lilliesleaf Parish; he is listed as 'Tenant Repperlaw Netherrow'. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Mains according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same William was a servant at Dinlees on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may be the William who married Margaret Lamb and had a son James (b.1801) baptised in Castleton Parish. William (b.c.1780) mason at Damside according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (b.c.1780) servant of William Turnbull at Burnfoot in Wilton Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1801. William (b.c.1780) joiner at Woll according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He may have been related to James who was also at Woll at the same time. William (18th/19th C.) listed at Gatehousecote on the subscription list for Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. William (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Knox (or perhaps King) and their children included John (b.1813), David (b.1815), Isobel (b.1817), Ann (b.1819) and George (b.1822). He may be the William whose child died in Hawick in 1824. William (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1826 he and Robert Dryden were put in charge of the Parish mort-safes. William (b.1790/1) stone dyker living at Longhaugh on Hermitage Water in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Thomas, Jane (whose married name was Scott), Margaret and Janet. William (b.1799/1800) from Selkirk, he was a tailor on Allars Crescent. He was listed there in the 1851 census (when he employed 3 men) and in Slater's 1852 directory. By 1861 he was at 1 Manse Lane. His wife was Isabella and their children included Agnes, Margaret, William, Andrew, Ann and Jemima. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1821. William (b.1810) manufacturer of hosiery on the Loan, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was a son of surveyor James, and was living at about 27 Loan with his parents and siblings in 1841. William (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Nichol and their son George was baptised in 1823. William (19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Helen Dickson and their children included: Sarah (b.1830), baptised the following year; and Helen (b.1833). William (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. Cecilia Sinton and their son James was baptised in 1823. William (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Jane Brown and their children included William (b.1835). Mary Bell Elliot (b.1831) and Andrew (b.1832), with no mother's name given, could also be his children. William (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Ann Oliver and their son Robert Oliver was baptised in 1837. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Laing in Wilton in 1840. William L. (c.1820–bef. 1861) stone dyker, born in Minto Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was living at Stouslie Schoolhouse. He married Elizabeth Anderson in 1845. Their children included Mary (b.1845/6), William L. (b.1847/8) and James (b.1849/50) and Isabella (b.1851/2). In 1861 his widow and children were living at Orchard Cottage. William (19th C.) married Jane Brodie in Wilton in 1854. William (19th C.) mason in Denholm in the 1860s. He was a registered voter at that time. William (19th/20th C.) farmer at Hummelknowes and later Coliforthill. William Lyndsay (19th/20th C.) High School Rector 1908–19. William 'Bill' or 'Jimpy' (1936–) worked in various mills in Hawick, and long involved with the British Legion, he was Common Riding Secretary 2001–05 (formerly spelled 'Thomason', 'Thomesoun', 'Thompsone', 'Thomsone', 'Thomsonne', 'Thomsoun', 'Thomsoune', etc.; also pronounced as in 'Tamson' or 'Thamson').

Thomson's Cave (tom-sinz-kāv) n. name given to a particular cave on the bank of the Teviot near Ancrum. This is said to have been a popular haunt of for the poet James Thomson (of 'The Seasons'), who wrote his name on the roof.

the Thomson Well (thu-tom-sin-wel) n. small ornamental iron drinking fountain on the site of the Mid Raw before the Brown Fountain was built. It was provided by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, Renfrewshire and handed over to the town in late 1897. It can be seen in a photograph of Drumlanrig Square taken in about 1898. It apparently bore the inscription 'Presented by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, to his native town in commemoration of Queen Victoria's record reign, 1897 ... It's yer ain; protect it'. However, it was only in place for a few years and its whereabouts are unknown.

thon (thōn, thōn) pron. that, those, yon, yonder – 'This is mine, that's yours, but whae's aucht thon?' [JAHM], 'Yiddie's a bleith fallih, bit A dinna leike thon Jock yin!' [ECS], 'And thon's jist the stert. What about the audience bogles?' [JuH], adv., adj. those – 'What's the name o thon close it the Croon Hotel?', 'But still, up thon weary brae, Onward aa blundert ...' [DH] (this form is peculiarly local, while yon appears in other British dialects; also sometimes thone; it is used to indicate more distant objects than 'this', while yon corresponds more often with 'that').

thonder (thōn-dur) adv., adj., pron. yonder, over there – 'if ee'r lookin for yer fither hei's ower thonder', 'Thonder was the moniment A jaloozed ti be the Lilliard's Edge Memorial' [ECS], 'Guid-nicht to my freend owre thonder' [DH], 'Away up thonder abune the Wusp ... at Westminster ...' [DH].

thone (thōn) adv., adj., pron. that, those – 'A fair likeet Nardini's ice cream. Was thone no the best?' [We] (also thon).

thoom (thoom) n. a thumb – 'hei's aa fingers an thooms', 'A ken ma thoom's beelin, 'cause it's putt, puttn (throb, throbbing)' [ECS], '... Wi' tea, an' crackers no' the size O' even ane's thoom nail' [WFC] (also spelled 'thoomb' or 'thoum').

thoomb see thoom

thoom-steel (thoom-steel) n., arch. a stall or covering for an injured thumb.

thoosand (thoo-zind) n. a thousand – 'Thoosands, gude kens how mony, to the breeder, An' hauf as muckle for a cock to tread her' [JoHa], '... Mair worth than an estate a thoosand miles square' [JoHa], '... but A'd a thoosand rather be

thoot (thoo', thoot) prep., poet. without – '...An', holy beacons, glow 'thoot flaw or wane' [JoHa], 'Nought but the vera rims o' men, 'Thoot saul or spunk – a glazent den' [JoHa].

Thor (thōr) n. Norse god of thunder, rain and farming. Son of Odin, he is traditionally thought of as one of the gods in the Hawick battle cry 'Teribus ye Teri-Odin'. It is unclear how old the tradition is of associating Thor with the Hawick slogan, but there appears to be little evidence that it precedes Victorian attempts to explain its origin. There is certainly no mention in Hogg's song of 1819 (which does mention Odin), or in anything published earlier than that – 'The spirit still lies on the Border side – The spirit of Thor and Odin' [JBB], 'With spirit rapt, and, full of kith and kin, Pray Thor of Holy Church exalt her horn' [JBSS].

Thorbrand (thōr-brawnd) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) wheelwright in Hawick. Probably the same Adam was recorded in 1707 when Walter Deans was fined by the Council for summoning him to the Court in Jedburgh when the case was already being considered by the Court in Hawick. He is probably the Adam who married Elspeth Stevenson and whose daughter Jean was baptised in Hawick in 1703. In 1717 he witnessed a baptism for tenant Walter Bryson. He is probably also the wright who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for carrier Walter Bryson. Adam (18th C.) married Susanna Rutherford in Ashkirk Parish in 1728. George (17th C.) son of wright James. He witnessed a baptism in 1683 for William Veitch. He was witness to the document describing his father's work on the 'steiple-loft' in St. Mary's Kirk in 1684; he is referred to as 'my sone wryter thereof'. He was probably son of the James who married Jane Veitch. James (16th C.) recorded as 'Jacobum Thronbrand in Wiltoun' in 1553/4 when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather's lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. It is not known where in Wilton he was tenant or whether he was related to later local Thorbrands. Bailie James (17th C.) recorded in 1660 when Bailie Walter Chisholme promised that he would not disobey the Burgh's rules regarding 'the question of neighbourhood for theiking' between them. He could be the James who was one of Hawick's Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). He was listed as Councillor in 1668 and Bailie in 1673. In 1669 a woman was fined for saying that 'the jogges was mair fitting for him nor hir'; he was probably Bailie at that time. He was described as a 'late bailie' when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Lord of Queensberry in 1672. He may be the wright on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. Also in 1673 he was witness to baptisms for John Chalmers, Thomas Cowan and James Newbie. In 1683 wright Francis Gledstains was fined for attcking him and for stealing the 4 ducks that he had caught. Also in 1683 he was the wright who was late 'baylea in Havicke' when charged with the task of constructing the first gallery in St. Mary's Kirk. This was the 'Steeple (or Middle) Loft' in St. Mary's in 1684. He was married to 'Jeane Wetch' (presumably Veitch). His sons included: Thomas (b.1652); and George (b.1654), who married Margaret Scott. Jane, who married William Laing, may have been his daughter. Given the confusion between the names he may well be the 'Bailyea Thorburne' listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. In 1675 he witnessed a baptism for William Welch (or 'Wetch'), who may have been related to his wife. James (19th C.) farmer at Stonedge in the 1860s. John (17th/18th C.) wright in the early 1700s. He is recorded in the Parish Records as 'wright in Hawick, and this, with what Bailife Purdem pay'd him, is all he gote for placing about the palling rail about Mr Elliott's grave stone, £12'. He may be the John who was listed as 'student' in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Elliot in Whitchesters. Robert (16th C.) witness to an instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1592. Simon Routledge was 'in Cruik', while he described as being 'there', presumably meaning he was a resident of Crook, but not a tenant. William 'Will' (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Greatlaws. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of 'Grett Law' and Clerklands. His name is listed as 'Volle Thurbrand' (formerly 'Thronbrand' and 'Thurbrand'; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorburn).

Thorburn (thōr-burn) n. Adam (d.bef. 1799) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Janet Miller is recorded in 1799. Adam (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His property may be the 'Thorburn' marked on Buccleuch Street on Wood's 1824 map. He had an unnamed child who died in 1798 and another who died in 1811 (where he is recorded as 'Berwick Carrier'). He is probably the Adam who married Janet Paterson and whose children included: Agnes (b.1796); John (b.1797); Adam (b.1799); Catherine (b.1801); Janet (b.1803); George (b.1805); William (b.1807); and James (b.1815). The witnesses in 1796 and 1797 were Robert Tinlin and Michael Anderson. Adam (1764–1837) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America, settling in Bovina, New York. He married Janet Patterson and their children were Adam, William, Catherine, Janet, George, Nancy and James. Andrew (19th C.) son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He is said to have gone out to the New Zealand gold rush with local builder John Eckford, and to have died in New York at the age of 99. Both his sister Janet and brother George are also said to have died at an advanced age. David (18th C.) resident of Hawick as recorded in a letter from him in 1791, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He may also be the David from 'Brounmoorhight' recorded in another letter. He married Sarah Thomson and their son David was baptised in Hawick in 1790. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1694 when he was listed among the 'Cottars' on the Hearth Tax roll there. He could be the George who married Helen Tailor in Ashkirk in 1707. George (18th C.) smith in Ashkirk. He was said to have married Jean, daughter of James Anderson and Helen Lithgow; their daughter Jean married John Anderson, tenant at Newton, Wilton Parish, and whose daughter Jean married John Eckford, who later claimed the remains of the fortune of his ancestor Hector Lithgow. Another daughter, Betty, married John Russell in Ashkirk in 1760. Assuming that the genealogy is essentially correct, then he would have been born around 1725 and could have been son or grandson of the earlier George from Ashkirk. George (b.c.1755) farmer at Stonedge. He was listed there in 1841, along with his son John and his family. His children included: John (b.c.1790), who farmed Stonedge after him; Thomas (b.c.1800), born in Ashkirk Parish, who helped his brother John on the farm; Janet, who married farmer William Little and lived to be 99; Andrew, who went to New Zealand and died in New York, aged 99; and George, shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston, who died at over age 80. He is easy to confuse with a contemporary man from Ashkirk; the forenames used are similar enough that the 2 families are surely related (or are being confounded here). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the man recorded among Volunteers in 1803 as 'George Thorburn, Ashkirk, lame, but willing to serve'. He married Jeanie Henderson in Wilton Parish in 1786. Their children included: Jeanie (b.1788); John (b.1789); Anne (b.1791); George (b.1793), who was a carrier in Newcastleton; Thomas (b.1795); and James (b.1797). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1828). He may be the same man as George from Castleton Parish. George (1793–1884) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of farmer George. He was a carrier in Newcastleton, operating a weekly service to Hawick according to Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed at about 4 Stopford Street. He could be the George of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Janet Geddes, who died at Stonedge in 1832, aged 33. He secondly married Mary Inglis, who died in 1889, aged 88. His children included: George (b.1818), who died in infancy; Andrew (b.1819); Jean (b.1821); Jane (b.1822); and Lieut. James (1824–58), who died at Aldershot Camp; John (b.c.1828); William (b.c.1840); Margaret; Isabella; and George (again). George (19th C.) said (by J.H. Haining) to have been son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He was shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston and claimed to have died at over the age of 80, like his sister Janet and brother Andrew. 2 of his daughters were: Kate, farmer at Harwood; and Jane, widow of wool agent William Dalgleish. However, there is no record of him on the local census records of the mid-1800s. George (b.c.1820) son of John. Like his father, he farmed at Stonedge. He was one of the 18 founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. He was tenant there in the 1860s. George Cumming (1950/1–) son of Park gardener Jack and brother of Hawick R.F.C. Secretary John. He worked at Forbes Nursery as a schoolboy, and was educated at Edinburgh University, where he received a Ph.D. in horticulture. He was founder and Managing Director of Global Horticulture Limited. He was speaker at the 2005 Callants' Club dinner and Chief Guest of the 2009 Common Riding. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Midlem. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. James (18th C.) footman at Cavers in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for James Douglas of Cavers. James (19th C.) local schoolmaster of whom a portrait exists. James (b.1824) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John. In 1861 he was listed as 'Probationer M.A. of U P Church' when visiting the house of John Governlock in Ewesdale. He may be related to Rev. John, who was also from Hobkirk. Janet (18th/19th C.) daughter of George, farmer at Stonedge. She married William Little, farmer at Salenside. She is said (by J.H. Haining) to have 'lived to be 99, got second sight and a third set of teeth, although they decayed very quickly'. She has a brother Andrew who also lived to 99, and another brother George, who lived beyond 80. Jean (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when she was working for Thomas Turnbull. Probably the same person was a female servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791. Jock (1926/7–) came to Hawick as a refugee in 1939. He worked as foreman at the Walled Gardens and had a long association with boxing in Hawick. He married Teri Jean Cumming. They had sons George and John. the couple celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary in 2019. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was married to Janet Gillis and their children included John (b.1703). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Moss and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1727. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Inglis in 1754. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Bulloch in 1756 and their children included: Jean (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); and Elizabeth (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were mason Andrew Turnbull 'junior' and weaver George Swan. John (d.1794) carrier. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish. He was 'killed by his own cart at Drydon'. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Minto Kames. He may have been son of Thomas, who was farmer there before him. He was recorded at Kames in the 1789–1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 12 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Kames in 1797.

He is probably the John who married Betty Horsburgh in Minto Parish in 1785 and whose children included Isabella (b.1786), Nelly (b.1789), Margaret (b.1790), Betty (b.1792), Jane (b.1797) and Robert (b.1798). John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house and grocer on the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He could be the same man as the carter and farmer. John (b.1784/5) farmer at Stonedge, son of George. His wife was Elizabeth and children included: George (b.c.1821); Eliza; Isabella (b.c.1835) and Jane (b.c.1837). He was at Stonedge in 1841 along with his elderly father. He was still living at Stonedge in 1851, along with his brother Thomas; he was then employing 4 men and farming 50 acres of arable land and 1250 acres of pasture. By 1861 his wife was a widow, and his son George had taken over Stonedge. John (b.c.1780s) labourer at Bellendean, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. John (b.1790/1) farmer up the Loan and also a carter. In 1841 he is listed at Green Wynd as a farmer, and in 1851 is a carter on the Loan and farmer of 10 acres. In 1861 he was a 'House Proprietor' at 32 Loan. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Beck, and their children included: Margaret Wilson (b.1819); Isabella (b.1821); John (or 'Jack', b.1827), also a carter; William (b.1829); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Galashiels mason Adam Thomson in 1859. He is probably the John born to Robert and Isabella Hall in Hawick in 1791. John (19th C.) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was associated with Allars Kirk in Hawick. He became 3rd minister of St. Paul's Relief Kirk (in Aberdeen) in 1841. The church had financial difficulties, closed in 1842, to reopen in a new building, and in 1845 he resigned amid controversy. However, within a few months he was minister of the Relief Kirk at Dunning. He became minister at Gatehouse of Fleet in 1851, leaving in 1859 and dying in Glasgow. He married Jessie Walker and their children included John, Susanna, George and Elizabeth. John (b.1827) son of carter John. Like his father he worked as a carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 32 Loan along with his elderly father. He married Margaret Rae (from England) and their children included Agnes, Susan Wright (b.1854), John and William J. John (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son Douglas in 1846. John (b.1829/30) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a ploughman. In 1861 he was living at Easter Essenside Cottage. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret, Andrew and Jessie. John son of Jock and younger brother of George. He works for the Bill McLaren Foundation and has been Secretary of both Hawick R.F.C. and the 1514 Club. Mungo (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He was at Friarshaw in the 1780s and 90s according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isabel Redford and their children included: Robert (b.1791); Andrew (b.1793); Mungo (b.1795); William (b.1797); James (b.1799); and John (b.1803). Mungo (b.1794/5) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was farmer at Nether Bowerhouse in Berwickshire in 1861. Probably the same Mungo was at Headshaw in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Robert and Andrew. Robert (18th C.) wheelwright in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Rae and their children included Thomas (b.1740), Jean (b.1743) and Margaret (b.1743). He could be the Robert who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hall and their children included Agnes (b.1789) and John (b.1791). Robert (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick. His daughter Nelly died in 1800. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer in Hawick recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Where he farmed is unclear. Rev. Robert (19th C.) born in Bowden, son of Robert and Margaret Cochrane. He is said to have been taught by George Scott in Lilliesleaf. He attended Edinburgh University and was appointed to Falmouth in Jamaica in 1834. He joined the Free Church in 1843 and became minister of Warwick Presbyterian Church in Bermuda. His brother Walter was also minister in the same Bermuda church. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Kames in Minto Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–88. He was surely related to John, who farmed there immediately afterwards. Thomas (b.1798/9) son of George, farmer at Stonedge, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at ‘Stonedge Stable’. In 1851 he was at Stonedge helping his brother John with the farm and in 1861 was a ‘Barnman’, helping his sister-in-law Elizabeth. He died unmarried. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Wooplaw in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was probably related to John, who farmed at the neighbouring Lethem. Walter (18th C.) tailor of Hawick Parish. In 1762 he married Christian Ballantyne, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Robert (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); Adam (b.1766); William (b.1768); Janet (b.1771); and an unnamed child (b.1773). The witnesses in 1763 were John Thorburn and Walter Ballantyne, in 1766 were

Robert and Adam Thorburn (who were surely related) and in 1771 were the whole congregation. He may be the Walter who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary (or Marion) Ekron and their children included: Mary (b.1761); Isabel (b.1766); and Elizabeth (b.1770). He is probably the Walter from Hawick recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1780 and 1785. His children included: Janet (b.1780); Thomas (b.1784); and Walter (b.1785). Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Langton in Ashkirk Parish. In 1797 he paid tax on 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse there. Walter (19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of 21 Buccleuch Street. His family’s land there is marked ‘Thorburn’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He was nephew of William of William Lockie & Co. He married Betsy Stevenson Huggan, daughter of hosiery worker Thomas. Their children were William Lockie (Cornet in 1911), Bessie and Mary Hall (who married Robert Laidlaw). Walter (b.1822/3) resident of Robertson Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Harden in 1841, was living with his mother Janet Lockie at Borthwickbrae Haugh in 1851 and was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1861. He married Beatrix Scott from Newcastleton. Their children included Wilhelmina (b.1850), William, Henry, James, Janet and Marion. Walter ‘Wat’ (19th/20th C.) Bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band from about 1882. He was also known as an accomplished soloist. Walter Lockie (20th C.) Cornet in 1937, who was Right-Hand Man for a second time after WWII in 1946. He was usually referred to as ‘W. Lockie’. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Euphan Elliot and their children included: Violet Hardie (b.1798), baptised in Ashkirk, who married Hawick seedsman John Turnbull; and Walter (b.1801), baptised in Selkirk. William (d.1836) tailor on the Howegate. He was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in the late 1790s. He was possibly the son of Walter and Christine Ballantyne who was born in Hawick in 1768. He is recorded as tailor and ‘furnishing’ on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Like some of the Independents, he later became a confirmed Baptist, and was effectively leader of that group in Hawick until his death. He married Margaret Renwick in 1792 and their son Walter was baptised later the same year. The witnesses were weaver Robert Renwick (probably related to his wife) and tobacconist William Brown. He may also have married Margaret Lunn in 1800. William Lockie (19th/20th C.) son of Walter. He worked as a hosiery manager and was Cornet in 1911. He married Agnes, daughter of coal merchant Andrew Robson. Their son W. Lockie was Cornet in 1937 and farmed at Kidshielhaugh, near Duns (also written 'Thorburne'; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorbrand).

Thorlieshope (thōr-leez-hōp) n. farm in the Liddel valley near Saughtree, once a seat of the Elliots. The house is situated in a glen, with similarities with the location of Harden. It is 'Thorleshop' in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. 'Robert Elwald' was Laird in 1488 and 'John Elwald in Thorleshope' is recorded in 1498, along with other Elliot Laids through the 16th century. It is probably the 'Thornyshope' recorded in the 1541 rental roll, with a value of 4 merks and with Robert Elliot as tenant. The house of 'Thirleshope' belonging to 'Arche Elwode' was burned by the English in 1541. Probably the same 'Arche Elliot of Thirlishoup' rented Southdeanrig and Caldcleuch from Melrose Abbey in 1557. Robert Elliot, called 'Hob of Thorlieshope' was among the 34 thieves who were captured in Hawick in 1567 by the Regent Moray. John of Thorlieshope is listed among the Elliots of the Braidlie branch in 1583, while John 'of Thorlosope' signed a bond of assurance in 1584, on behalf of the Elliots of Thorlieshope. Adam 'Rakkis' was recorded there in 1611. The lands were already owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1613. It could be the 'Thorishop' where Thomas Brown was recorded in 1618. John Elliot 'callit Dods' was tenant in 1623, as well as Robert Routledge. The lands appear to have part of the estate of Scott of Mangerton in 1643 and were valued at £520 in 1678, when John Elliot owned them. John Graham of Claverhouse ('Bluidy Clavers') wrote a letter from there to the Marquess of Queensberry on 3rd July 1685. Tax was paid on 5 hearths at 'Thorlishopes hous' in 1694. Thomas Hall was Laird in 1761 and William Walker by 1788 and still in 1811, when it was valued at £520. Robert Beattie was a labourer there and Andrew Oliver a mason there in 1801. William Nichol was steward there in 1841. John Wilson lived there in the 1860s. It was owned by the Jardines in the 19th century. It is said that the tower stood where the current garden is. A former house (perhaps the tower) was once described as being a ruined 2-storey building, with lintel dated 1682 and monograms 'DME' and 'WEAC' (surely related to William Elliot of Thorlieshope and Christian Ainslie, since this is the year of their marriage). This lintel and some other stonework was built into the new farmhouse, erected in the 19th century. A flint arrowhead was found in the garden in 1882, but subsequently lost. A mineral spring on the farm, up in Deadwater, was once regarded as having healing properties. There is also a disused lime kiln and quarry near the house, while further to the east, the Thorlieshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries operated until at least the end of the 19th century. Thorlieshope Pike is a nearby hill reaching 1,180 feet. A 'decorated stone disc, smoked on one side, whole surface polished' from here is in Hawick Museum. Sir Walter Scott used the name as the basis for 'Charlieshope' in 'Guy Mannering' (the name probably means 'valley with the thorny clearing'; it is 'Thorleshop' in 1488, 'thornlawishop' in 1494/5, 'Thorleshope' in 1498, 'Thorleshop' in 1500 and 1516, 'Thirleshope', 'Thorlieshope' and 'Thorlishopp' in 1541, 'Thorlyshop' and 'Thorlyshope' in 1546, transcribed as 'Thorllshowp' in 1547, 'Thorlishoip' and 'Thorlishop' in 1569, 'Thornesope' in 1583, transcribed 'Thorwishoip' in 1587/8, 'Thoirlishop' in 1594, 'Thorlesop' in 1595, 'Thirlishope' in 1613, 'Thoirleishoip' in 1623, 'Chorlesoip' in 1646, 'Thorlishoppe' in 1648, 'thorlishop' in 1678, 'Thorlishope' in 1690, 'Thorleshope' in 1692, 'Thorlishop' in 1704 and 'Thorlishope' in 1811; it is 'Thorlisope' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and 'Thorlishope' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Thorlieshope Burnfoot (thōr-leez-hōp-burn-fi) n. former steading in Castleton Parish, near where Thorlieshope Burn meets the Liddel. Labourer David Jackson and his family were there in 1851 and 1861.

Thorlieshope Heights (thōr-leez-hōp-hīts) n. general name for hilly area to the east of Thorlieshope farm, south of Thorlieshope Pike. A triangulation pillar with a height of 396 m lies to the south, between here and Foulmire Heights.

Thorlieshope Pike (thōr-leez-hōp-pīk) n. hill on the eastern border of Castleton Parish, reaching a height of 360 m. The farm of Thorlieshope is located to the west, and Thorlieshope Heights to the south. George Watson writes in 1921 of a small stone cross lying in a quarry near there, possibly part of a boundary marker; there is no sign of it today.

thorn (thörn) n., arch. the hawthorn tree (used in place names, e.g. Thorniewhats, Thornybank and Thornyhaugh).

Thornebogg (thōr-nee-bōg) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of Martin Crozier, however, the exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Thornhill (thörn-hil) n. town in Dumfriesshire, the nearest major settlement to Drumlanrig Castle. This is where the Baron's Head Courts were held, which the landowners in Hawick were accustomed to attend twice a year. In 1670 they were explicitly excused from attending the Michaelmas Court on account of the poor state of their crops.

Thorniewhats (thōr-nee-whats) n. farm just to the east of Hollows (Gilnockie) between Langholm and Canonbie, once a seat of the Armstrongs. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch (it is 'Thornyquhat' in 1579, 'Thornythaite' in 1583, 'Thornyquhattie', 'Thornyquhatt' and 'Torniquhatt' in 1585, 'Thorniquhat' in 1623 and 'Thorniequhatis' in 1663; it is marked as 'Thornwhat' on Gordon's c.1650 manuscript map; note that it should not be confused with 'Thornyhaugh' near Falnash).

Thornton (thörn'-in) n. former name for piece of land on the farm of Braidhaugh near Hobkirk, probably near to the Rule Water and 'Thornton Pool' (also 'Thorntoun').

Thornton (thörn'-in) n. Lewis Henry Jenkins (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1853 he married Elizabeth, daughter of stockingmaker Peter Fraser.

Thornton Pool (thörn'-in-pool) n. deep pool in the Rule Water near the farm of Braidhaugh. The name was still in use in the early 20th century.

Thornwud Avenue (thörn-wud-aw-vi-new) n. Thornwood Avenue, a street in Weensland, named for its proximity to the former Thornwood House and constructed in 1976.

Thornwud Hoose (thörn-wud-hoos) n. mansion built by James Oliver in 1870, which eventually became the Mansfield House Hotel. The name probably derived from being 'on a bleak hill side covered with whins and thorns', according to a contemporary newspaper report. The original design, in a Greek Revival style (with Italian elements), was by Glasgow-based architect John T. Rothead in 1867. The house was sold to Lt.-Col.

Mudie in 1936 and by the 1950s it had become a hotel (see also Mansfield Hoose).

Thornwud Park (thörn-wud-pawrk) n. Thornwood Park, a street in Weensland, part of Daykins Drive. The whole street was called Daykins Drive when built in 1982, but this name was favoured by many residents and later made official. It derives from the proximity to Thornwood House.

Thornybank (thōr-nee-bawngk) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish, probably located between the lands of Harwood and Fairnieles. This could be the same as 'Thornydykes', where Robert French is recorded in 1603 ('Thorniebankis' in 1562).

Thornycleugh (thōr-nee-klooch) n. former farmstead to the west of Bellendean and south of Redfordgreen, in the far corner of what was once Robertson Parish. William Little 'in thornycluch' is recorded in 1494/5 when his son-in-law John Scott was fined. It is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map, to the north of Crooke Loch on the Bellendean Burn. The stream called 'Thorniecleuch Burn' is curiously on the other side of the B711, flowing into Clearburn Loch.

Thornyhaugh (thōr-nee-hawch, -haw) n. flat land by the stream near Falnash. The 'Chapel of Ease' for the outlying parts of Cavers and Hawick Parishes was built here some time around 1715. It was repaired in 1722 and used until 1789, when a new church was built on the other side of the stream. There are now no signs of this building. The area had a teacher appointed in the 18th century. The farm there was occupied by Robert Scott in 1738 and Robert Laidlaw was there in 1741. John Hume was there in 1781–85 and was tenant in 1797. Peter Hume was there in 1795. (it is 'Thornihough' in 1738 and 1741 and 'Thornihall' in 1781 and 1785; also written 'Thorny Hall' and 'Thorniehall', perhaps erroneously).

thorter (thor-tur) prep., arch. across, over, transvers (the word only survives in placenames).

Thorterdykes (thōr'-ur-, thor-tur-diks) n. old name for the land between roughly the Mote and the south side of Rosebank Road. It largely overlapped with what was also called Moat Croft, and probably also included the areas of Easterdykeback and Westerdykeback. It may also have been pronounced 'Whirter Dykes' in the 19th century. In the early 1760s there were sometimes open air services here for the newly established secession congregation, before the Green Kirk was built.

The name is now in use for ‘Thorterdykes Roadhouse’, the pub there (it appears in 1666 as ‘the thorter dikes’; its origin is uncertain, but probably Old English for ‘land lying athwart the Mote or a ditch’).

Thorterdykes Roadhouse (thōr’-ur-diks-rōd-hoos) n. public house at Thorterdykes. It is based in the house that was constructed as a villa on Rosebank Road in 1882 for manufacturer Thomas Scott and lived in by the Bonsors.

thorter-ower (thor-tur-ow-ur) prep., arch. across – ‘Thorter-ower, Across; a pleonastic term, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

thorter-thraw (thor-tur-thraw) v., arch. to pass an object back and forwards (noted by J. Jamieson).

Thorter Rig (thōr’-ur-rig) n. ridge just south of Crooked Loch in the headwaters of the Ale.

Thorter Villa (thōr’-vi-la) n. name used in the early days for the house at Thorterdykes, e.g. in the 1897 valuation rolls.

Thorterwud (thōr’-ur-wud) n. Thorterwood, former farm on the western side of the Jed valley, just south of Bairnkine and west of Woodhouse. John Laidlaw was there in 1694 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

It is played in a different manner in Teviotdale. Two stand together, facing each other, having their hands clinched, and lifted above their breath, so as to form an arch. Under this perhaps twenty or thirty children pass, holding each other by their clothes. When all have passed save one, the arms of the two, like a portcullis, fall down and detain this individual as prisoner. He, or she, is asked in a whisper, 'Will ye be Tod or Fern-buss?' If Tod is the answer, the person takes one side, and must wait till all are caught one by one. This being done, the Tods draw one way, and the Ferns another, the two candidates still keeping hold of each other's hands; and he, who can draw the other and his party to the opposite side of the street, and separate their hands gains the victory' [JoJ].

Thursdi (thurz-di) n. Thursday. This was formerly market day in Hawick (also spelled 'Thursdih'; cf. the older Thorsday).

the Thursdi (thu-thurz-di) n. common name for the Thursday before Common Riding weekend. It begins with a Chase up the Nip Knowes, with the Cornet carrying the (unbussed) flag for the first time. After the 'Hut' there is a ceremonial singing of 'Teribus' in front of the farmhouse at St. Leonard's and a ride around the racecourse at the Moor. Then the Principals visit local schools, requesting that the pupils be given the rest of the day and the next off school. In the evening is the Drum and Fife procession round the tolls, the Colour Bussing, the Burgh Officer's Proclamation, the tying of the ribbons at the Horse monument and the Cornet's Walk. The evening is the first time that the 'Big Threi' wear their traditional Cornet's uniforms of green jackets and tile hats. In early times the Halberdiers and musicians would visit the house of the Minister, Senior Bailie, Cornet and also various inns where the participants would dine on the Friday. At each location they would be greeted with refreshments, and they would also stop on the Auld Brig for snuff, with the bussing of the Flag itself being quite an informal affair. Until the 1880s the Flag used to fly from the Chief Magistrate's house after the morning Chase until it was bussed in the evening. Until 1886 the Cornet and his followers used to call at the houses of his supporters for refreshments after returning from the Thursday morning Chase. In the late 19th century there used to be a canter round the racecourse after 'the Hut' and then proceeded round by Wilton. In the years 1900–04 and in 1921 the Riding of the Marches and the Cutting of the Sod were tried out on the Thursday morning after the Chase. The striking up of the Drums and Fifes at 6 p.m. on the Kirk Wynd is considered by many people to be the start of the Common Riding proper.

the Thursdi Mornin Chase (thu-thurz-di-mōr-neen-chās) n. phrase used to distinguish the Chase of the Thursday morning of Common Riding week from the other Chases. It is in a sense a rehearsal for the events of the following day. It begins with the usual muster in the Backdamgate, but at 6 a.m. the Cornet now has the (unbussed) Flag for the first time. As usual the married men go first, led by the Acting Father, followed by the Cornet and his unmarried supporters. There is usually a large crowd at the Vertish, to see the Flag again. The Acting Father takes the Flag at the top of the Nipknowes and carries it to St. Leonards, where it is displayed outside the farmhouse while the Cornet and supporters attend the Hut. Afterwards the Song Singer sings Teribus outside the farmhouse and the riders remount. They proceed via Pilmuir field to the Moor, where they ride round the racecourse, the Cornet leading with the Flag. The return is via Crumhaughhill and the Loan, passing the children arriving at Drumlanrig School. The route then takes the cavalcade along the High Street, over the North Bridge, along Dovemount and turning onto Princes Street, down Wilton Path, through the Sandbed and so back to the Town Hall. There the Principals dismount and the Flag is displayed from the balcony awaiting the Colour Bussing in the evening.

the Till (thu-tīl) n. river in Northumberland, which runs into the Tweed. It is deep and was hard to ford in former times. The crossing was important during the Battle of Flodden. It is also somewhat unusual in having 2 names, the upper part being called the Breamish – ‘Says Tweed to Till ‘What cars ye rin so still?’ Says Till to Tweed ‘Though ye rin wi speed And I rin slaw, For ae man that ye droon I droon twa’ ...’ [T], her mither’s throat, it’s cheerfu’ music still, Has socht a nest in the yellow gorse beside the murmurin’ Till’ [JYH], ‘Then the dreadful roar of battle Echo’d from the distant hill, While the life blood flow’d so freely That it dy’d the sluggish Till’ [JAHB], ‘The minstrel climbed the sacred mound And gazing eastward where the Till To Tweed his devious pathway wound Through woods that fringed that fatal hill’ [WHO].

Tillielee (ti-lee-lee) n. former name for the farm at Peelbrae. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers in an English document c.1380. It was owned by the Elliots of Redheugh before 1497/8, when it is recorded as ‘Tellile’, along with ‘Cald-cluch’, in the Douglas of Cavers papers. There was a ‘retour of inquest’ held at Cavers to rule on the inheritance of these lands by Robert ‘Elwalde’, grandson of the former Robert. It may also have been written ‘Tilloly’, and the name was mostly lost in the 17th century, although it may be related to the Tinlee Stone. It was still recorded in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands had a boundary with Dod, passing along the Dod Burn and then the Rowantree dyke to the boundary with Priestthaugh, the line being partly marked with stones (it is ‘Tilloly’ in c.1380, ‘Tillelee’ in 1511, ‘Tillielie’ in 1687 and transcribed ‘Tilbie’ in 1698).

Tillieleehope (ti-lee-lee-up) n. alternative name for the steading of Peelbrae, recorded as ‘Tillieliehope’ in 1660.

‘Some, pointing to the machine, would exclaim – ‘see till’t! disna that beat a’ [HAST1868], ‘There’s nae end till’t, [ECS], ‘Div ee taik shoogir till’t?’ [ECS], ‘Hei’ll need nae mair till’t’ [ECS], ‘... born and bred till’t, Wi a Common Riding in the verra blude-stream ...’ [DH], also used elliptically for a verb of motion or labour – ‘It’s a case o hei till’t an shui till’t’ [ECS] (cf. ti’d and till).

till yince (til-yins) adv., arch. until at length, until some condition has been met – ‘... that none should enter intil the said loft, till once the persons that use ane right and proertie to the said loft be once settled’ [BR1716].

tillysow (ti-lee-sow) n., arch. a small lodging-house or commercial inn built by a landowner to accommodate the servants of his guests at their own expense – ‘He would say he would have a board placed before his house, with the announcement, ‘No Tillysow kept here’ [JW].

the Tima Witter (thu-ti-mu-wi’-ur) n. small river that rises near the border with Dumfries & Galloway and flows about 6 miles roughly north to join the Ettrick Water at Ramseycleuch – ‘Then a murmur wakes in the heath and fern, And the fairies gather, unseen of men, Riding up from the Rankleburn And trooping down from the Teema Glen’ [WHO] (it is ‘Tymeye’ in 1235/6 and ‘Temay’ in 1415; ‘Timo B.’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Timbersidemill (tim-bur-sid-mil) n. former name for Scawmill, a cottage in the north of the old part of Wilton Dean. It was once a corn mill, distinct from Deam Mill. The 1694 Hearth Tax rolls records ‘Thomas Miller and John Bue wt an kilne betuixt thm’ there; Andrew ‘Andisone’ was also recorded there, among the poor of Wilton Parish. Francis Scott was there in 1697. John Cairns was there in 1721 and James Scott in at least 1721–27. John Turnbull was there in at least 1743–7. John Scott was recorded as farmer there in 1797 (it was ‘Timbersydemilne’ and ‘timbersidmilne’ in 1694, ‘Timersydemil’ and ‘Timbersydemiln’ in 1721, ‘Timbersyde miln’ in 1727, ‘Timer miln’ in 1743, ‘Timber Syd mill’ in 1747 and ‘Timbersidemiln’ in 1797; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

time (tīm, tim) n. time, a specific time such as for eating or feeding livestock – ‘It’s horse-time, cow-time’ [GW] (note the pronunciation with the soft i in phrases such as ‘tei time’ or ‘yon time’; also sometimes spelled ‘teime’ to emphasize the pronunciation).

time about (tīm-u-boo’) adv. alternately, by turns, turn and turn about – ‘... Sure, time about timously (tī-mis-lee) adv., arch. punctually, early – ‘...to attend their respective posts on ye day following, without and within ye church, and to be timeously thereat’ [PR1717], ‘And finding that they have lost considerably through their not lifting the annual rents timeouslie ...’ [PR1724] (there are spelling variants).

Timpendean (tim-pen-deen) n. ruined 16th century tower near Lanton, stronghold of the Douglasses. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. The tower is high above the south side of the road, opposite the farm of Timpendean, which is on the other side of the A698. The area was referred to by Jedburgh residents as ‘Timp’. It can be reached via a farm track, and is surrounded by older earthworks. The land here was long owned by the Douglasses, originally being part of the lands of Bonjedward, but granted to a 2nd son, Andrew Douglas, in 1479. The Laird of Timpendean was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. In 1643 the widow of John Douglas held the lands in liferent, and the total value was £418. William Douglas paid the land tax there in 1663 and they still had the same value in 1678. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. By 1707 the estate was valued at £567, with Douglas of Timpendean having acquired additional land in Lanton. ‘Lady Ferninton’ (probably a Rutherford) paid tax for 23 windows there in 1748. In 1788 the estate consisted of ‘six husband-lands of Timpendean’ (valued at £158), addition lands that had been liferented in 1643 to the widow of John Douglas (valued at £260), part of Lanton acquired between 1678 and 1707 (valued at £149) and another part of Lanton purchased from Capt. Scott (valued at £299). There is a plan of the farm drawn up in 1791. David Brown was a servant there in 1801. The lands were sold off by George Douglas, 12th of Timpendean to the Marquess of Lothian in 1843. It was tenanted by Scotts in the latter part of the 19th century. There are several circular structures and ramparts on a hill just to the south, presumably older than the tower. The tower is about 29 ft by 24 ft, with an addition made in the 17th century, in the direction of the earthwork. A polished stone axe found at the tower is in Hawick Museum and a bronze axe is in the National Museum of Antiquities – ‘Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikiminn, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lilliesleaf, Or the merriment of Redfordgreen’ [WL] (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh ‘din pen’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘the valley by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Tympynden’ in 1499/1500, is ‘Tympyndeane’ and ‘Tympanedene’ in 1504, ‘Tympenden’ in 1540, ‘Tympinton’ in 1545, ‘Timpindene’ in 1551, ‘Tympyndane’ in 1557, ‘Tympenden’ in 1584/5, ‘Tympenden’ in 1590 and 1610, ‘Tempindene’ in 1600, ‘Tempandean’ in 1655, ‘Timpendein’ in 1680, ‘Timpingdean’ in 1714, and ‘Timpintine’ in 1739; it is ‘Timpendein’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is written ‘Timpentown’ in 1858).

the Tinlee Stane (thu-tin-lee-stān) n. the Tinlee Stone, near Peelbrachope. It is an upright stone over 4 feet high, about 3 feet broad at the base, and tapering towards the top. It has been used as a boundary marker, but its original purpose is uncertain. It may be significant that it is situated close to a section of the Catrail. An archaeological report of 1981 describes ‘a stone with a badly weathered inscription’ found nearby.

Tinlin (tin-lin) n. supposed name of the first Cornet, who carried the flag back from Hornshole. This is possibly a confusion with the tales of Watt Tinlin, as further romanticised by Sir Walter Scott.

Tinlin (tin-lin) n. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, mentioned from 1669. In 1693/4 he donated money towards a town bell. Also in 1694 he was ‘John Tinling weaver’ among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1697 he was fined for publicly lying to John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, and then refusing to go to prison. He married Agnes Broun and their children were: Robert; Thomas (b.1677); George (b.1679); Agnes (b.1682); and probably Walter, father of ‘Rob the Naig’; as well as 2 daughters who died in infancy (probably including the unnamed baptism in 1684). The witnesses in 1684 were George Young and William Purdom. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Halliday in 1675 and another for William Bryson in 1680. John (c.1775–1844) son of Robert. He was William Wilson’s first apprentice in 1790. He later lived in the Fore Row. He was there in 1841, with his sister Ann, and recorded as a woollen hose sorter. Perhaps the same stockingmaker John was listed on the men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797; in 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’ and he was probably the John listed as ‘Constable’ in Hawick on the 1801 ballot. John (19th/20th C.) resident of Birneyknowe. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Joyce nee Cavers, known locally for her beautiful singing voice, making ‘The Fairest Spot o’ a’ her own. She has served as President of Wilton Dean Women’s Institute and Chair of Hawick Saxhorn Band, and has been involved with the Bright Eyed Daughters. In 2015 she became the first woman to propose one of the main toasts at the Common Riding Dinner. She sings ‘The Fairest Spot o’ a’ on ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006) and ‘Soft Lowland Tongue of the Borders’ on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). Richard (1772–1851) son of James and Ann White, he was baptised in Roxburgh Parish. He was a servant at Turn in Kirkton Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was at Kirkton by 1802 and in Wilton from 1810. In 1802 in Kirkton he married Isobel, daughter of Francis Oliver, tenant at Turn. Their children, baptised in Kirkton, included: Mary (b.1803); Anne (b.1805); Isobel (b.1807); and James (b.1809). The same couple also had children baptised in Wilton, including: Helen (b.1812); Margaret (b.1815); and Christian (b.1817). The family emigrated to Canada and he and his wife were buried at Binbrook, Ontario.

Robert (1672–aft. 1725) eldest son of John and Agnes Broun. He was a weaver in Hawick. In 1702, 1704, 1705, 1707 and 1710 he witnessed baptisms for his brother Thomas. In 1697 he was fined by the Magistrates for publicly insulting John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, resisting the payment of a fine to the incorporation, and refusing to go to the Tolbooth. He witnessed baptisms in 1703 for Janet Bruntfield (wife of Walter Laing), in 1707 (along with Thomas) for Adam Brown ‘Headhouse’ younger, in 1712 for weaver Robert Turnbull, in 1714 for Alexander Stewart, dyker in Hawick, and in 1717 for weaver Robert Wight. He was later quartermaster of the weavers himself along with Swan, as recorded in 1716 (when they complained about other people using their assigned seats in St. Mary’s). In 1721 he was recorded as a weaver when he witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver Andrew Jardine. He and Walter (probably his brother) witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver John Stevenson in 1722. He is probably the weaver Robert who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas (probably his son) in 1725. He married Christine Purdom, and their children included: Thomas (b.1702), who married Janet Riddell; James (b.1704); Christian (b.1707); and possibly Robert who moved to Kirkwhelpington. The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Purdom (surely related to his wife, perhaps her brother) and carrier John Aitkin. Robert ‘Rob the Naig’ (1737–1815) son of Walter and Anne Tinlin. He was known as an outspoken and independent individual, said (just a few decades later) to belong ‘to a class now extinct’. He was Burgh Officer, hence acting as half the town’s police force. He was also Beadle at Hawick Kirk, and in that capacity would sit directly in front of the pulpit; he would shake his head when he thought that a visiting preacher had gone on too long, and if the sermon continued he would eventually proclaim

'hae dune'. Claimed to be a descendant of Watt, his more immediate forebears were said to be from Old Crumhaugh. He used to openly give his views on matters such as the election of Bailies, and always ended his proclamations with 'Hawick for ever and independent' (James Wilson suggesting that this custom may have been handed down from earlier Halberdiers). He was also said to be extremely loyal to the Crown and Government, perhaps on account of being the same age as the King; he would refer to anyone who did not support the Government as a 'blackneb'. He is probably one of the two men (likely Burgh Officers) 'Tinlin & Hardie' paid during the 1767 flood for watching the Auld Brig. In 1771 he was paid by the Council for mending his halberd (confirming definitively that he was a Halberdier). In 1773 he was paid for 'watching the town after fire'. He was the last Burgh Officer who collected the 'yule fees'. He is probably the Robert recorded in 1791 in a letter preserved in Selkirk in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1796 and 1797 he witnessed baptisms for Adam Thorburn and in 1797 another for James Mein. He also witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1804 and 1811. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1760 and she died in 1816. Their children were: Ann (b.1761), who married John Kersel; William (b.1763), called 'Wull the Naig'; Walter (b.1766), who died in infancy; another Walter (b.1767), who served as his assistant; and John (b.1775). He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1766 for Isabel (most likely his sister) and John Grierson. A story is told of an encounter between him and Wull Craw – 'Sic a sight I never saw. A Naig sent up to herd a Craw' [WiS]. Robert (19th/20th C.) farm worker, who moved to Rulewater about 1879, working at Cleuchhead and then becoming hedger at Wolfelee estate. He married Jessie, daughter of Robert Minto, gamekeeper at Wolfelee. Thomas (b.1677) son of John and Agnes Brown and brother of Robert. He was a weaver like other members of his family. He and Robert witnessed a baptism in 1707 for Adam Brown 'Headhouse' younger. He married Bessie Dryden in 1701 and their children were: Jean (b.1702); Nicholas (b.1704), a daughter; Euphan (b.1705); Anna (b.1707); Margaret (b.1710); and Robert (b.1713). The witnesses in 1702 included his brother Robert, in 1704 were his brother Robert along with merchant Robert Brown, in 1705 were Robert again along with Adam Brown 'headhous elder', in 1707 were Bailie Robert Brown and his brother Robert again, and in 1710 were Bailie Robert and his brother Robert. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Kersel in 1720. He is probably the weaver Thomas who (along with Robert, possibly his father or brother) witnessed a baptism for weaver Walter (perhaps his brother) in 1725. In 1719 he married Janet Liddell, who was 'servant to ye Lady Burnfoot'. Their children included: Isobel (b.1720); and Euphan (b.1725). John (b.1722), with the mother's surname given as 'Riddel', was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1720 were Archibald Scott of Boonraw and Robert Scott of Burnhead and in 1725 were weavers Robert and Walter (who had a child baptised the same day). Walter 'Watt' (c.16th C.) said to be a retainer of the Scotts of Buccleuch, holding a small tower in Liddesdale. He was a shoemaker by trade, but became famous as an expert archer, and supposedly shot the Captain of Bewcastle through the thigh. He was the inspiration for the fictional 'Watt Tinlin' in Sir Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel', and hence fact and fiction are hard to separate – 'If I cannot sew', retorted Tinlin, discharging a shaft, which nailed the captain's thigh to the saddle, 'if I cannot sew I can yerk' [SWS]. Walter (d.1761) probably son of John and Agnes Brown, although possibly a grandson. He was a weaver in Hawick from at least 1715. He and Robert (probably his brother) witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver John Stevenson in 1722. He is witnessed a baptisms in 1725 for weaver Thomas on the same day that Thomas and Robert witnessed a baptism for him; they were surely all related, perhaps as brothers. In 1723 he married Anne, daughter of John Tinlin of Kirklands, Ancrum. Their children were: Christian (b.1725), who married a Langlands; John (b.1727); Ann (b.1729), who may have married Robert Farquharson; Robert (b.1737), 'Rob the Naig'; and Agnes (b.1744), who may have been the mother of Robert 'Lurgie' Wilson. Isabel, who married John Grierson, may have been another daughter. Witnesses to the 1729 baptism were 'Mr' Chisholme and Thomas Watson and to the 1737 baptism were merchant William Tudhope and surgeon James Scott. Walter 'Wat' (b.1767) son of 'Rob the Naig' and brother of 'Wull the Naig'. He was assistant to his father and a shoemaker by trade. He was known for his strength of character and quick temper, which ran in his family; it was said that his 'angry word, like his father's, was quickly followed by a blow'. He liked to claim the it was his 'for-fadder yat fetched the flag off Flowden Field'. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Laidlaw in 1796. William 'Wull the Naig' (c.1763–1836) another member of the family of Burgh and church officers. He was probably a son of 'Rob the Naig', and was a cousin of Robert 'Lurgie' Wilson. He may have been Beadle at St. Mary's for a while. However, he was known as a half-wit, who was tormented by youngsters with shouts of 'Naig, Naig' or 'splonsters'. He became a beggar, but had the same blunt, outspoken nature as his ancestors, and was often involved in street skirmishes. He was a common figure around the town in the early 1800s, living near the bottom of the Fore Row. He is listed as 'Will the Nag' in the death register (also 'Tindlin', 'Tinlan', 'Tinline', 'Tinling', 'Tinlinn', 'Tynlin', 'Tynline' and other variants).

Tinnis (ti-nis) n. lands in the Yarrow valley, between Hangingshaw and Yarrow. Modern maps show 'Old Tinnis' and 'Tinnis Farm'. There were Crown lands here from around 1456, held by Sir James Liddell for his fee as Ranger of Yarrow, then John Murray from 1488, with Alexander, Lord Home thereafter. In 1494/5 Thomas, George and Robert Mark and David Pringle were recorded there. It contained some of the King's flocks in 1502. Alexander, Lord Home, had a charter for the lands in 1512. James Pringle held the lands in feu according to a rental roll of 1541, with rental of £50. In 1551 the lands were inherited by Alexander, Lord Home from his father, George, Lord Home and in 1564/5 there was a decree by the Lords of Council that those inhabiting the lands remove themselves, namely the Stewarts and Pringles, as well as their tenants. A branch of the Pringles held these lands in the late 15th and early 16th centuries; there was a letter of reversion between the Pringles and Homes regarding these lands in about 1606. Thomas Scott 'callit of West Tynneis' was in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1617. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there in 1653 and according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. There were Ballantynes there in the 19th century (also written 'Tinneis', 'Tinnis', 'tynnis', 'Tynnes' and variants, as well as 'Tunnies', 'Tymmes', etc.; the origin may be the Cumbric 'din' for 'fort' or 'refuge').

Tinnisburn (ti-nis-burn) n. former lands in Liddesdale. 'Over and Neather Tynneisburne' are listed among the lands possessed by Thomas

Kerr of Ancrum in 1632 (it is 'Tenissburn' on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561., is 'Tyneisburne' in 1580, 'Tyneisburne' in 1599 and 'Tynnesburne' in 1605).

Tinnis Burn (ti-nis-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Tinnis Hill and flows roughly south-east to join the Liddel near Burnmouth (it is 'Tunnies burn' in 1718).

Tinnis Burn see Tinnis Witter

Tinnisburnfit (ti-nis-burn-fi) n. former farmstead in lower Castleton Parish, on the north side of the Tinnis Burn, where it meets the Liddel Water (it is marked 'Tinnisburnfoot' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Tinnisburnheid (ti-nis-burn-heed) n. former farm in Liddesdale, presumably on the Tinnis Water. It is 'Tynneisburnheid' in 1632 when listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale.

Tinnis Hill (ti-nis-hil) n. hill south-west of Newcastleton, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway. It reaches a height of 404m, has a triangulation pillar and some remains of ancient cairns, sheepfolds and terraces. A wooden bowl found there, possibly neolithic, is in the Museum. There are cairns and standing stones to the south of the hill. The lands there were formerly a farm, valued at 6 pounds in 1541, and vacant at that time. There is another Tinnis on the Yarrow (including Tinnis Farm and Old Tinnis), another in Southdean Parish, east of Chesters (with an ancient settlement) and one more (with an ancient castle), near Drumelzier, between Peebles and Biggar – 'High Tinnis is crested with flame as of yore, And flings its broad glare down the Solway's red tide' [Fi] (it is 'Tynneshill' in 1541; it is 'Tinnise hill' on Blaeu's 1654 map and is also marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Tinnis Hill (ti-nis-hil) n. another name for Hoodie's Hill in Southdean Parish. The fort on the east side is so recorded in the R.C.A.H.M.S. listings, and marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Tinnis Witter (ti-nis-wi'-ur) n. Tinnis Water, also known as Tinnis Burn, stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Tinnis Hill and meets the Liddel near Kershope. It is said to have once been heavily wooded and 'the residence of freebooters' – 'Tarras and Dod and Douglas, Tinnis Water and Trow; To the drone of bees On the clovered leas, Would sing me a welcome now' [WL] (it is 'Tinsburne' on Sandison's c.1590 map; the origin may be the same as 'Tinnis' in Selkirkshire, namely the Cumbric 'din', meaning 'fort').

Tinniswood (ti-nis-wood) n. T. (19th/20th C.) composer of the piano tunes ‘Cornet’s Lancers’ and ‘Cornet’s Schottische’. He also organised a local orchestra in the early 20th century.

Tinniswud (ti-nis-wud) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Tenaswd’ in the c.1376 rental roll of the area. They were there valued at 9 merks. ‘Tynneswoodgrene’ is listed in 1541, with a value of 5 merks and tenanted by Simon Armstrong. It must have been somewhere on the Tinnis Burn, but the precise location is unknown.

tint (tin) adj., pp., arch. lost, mislaid, forgotten – ‘Tak tent o’ time, ere time be tint’ [inscription at 25 High Street, and at the Text House in Denholm], ‘...and they could come to nae other conclusion, than that it had tint its companion’ [LHTB], ‘For Sense she now has drawn the cork, An’s tint the art o’ thinkin’ [JoHa], ‘Some’s tint a hat, an’ some a plaid, An’ some hae tint their siller’ [JoHa], ‘I hae gane astraye like ane tint sheep ...’ [HSR], ‘... toasts (tōsts) n., pl. these form an important part of many Common Riding functions. By tradition the Cornet’s Toast is the verse of ‘Teribus’ that starts ‘Annual since, our Flag’s been carried ...’, that of the Acting Father is ‘Magistrates! Be faithful trustees ...’, while the Right- and Left-hand men get ‘They are Jolly Good Fellows’. The toast to the memory of Drumlanrig is always pledged in solemn silence. Other toasts might include ‘the Provost’, ‘the Council’, ‘the Lasses’, ‘Absent Teries’ and ‘Safe Oot, Safe In’. Dinners typically end with ‘Cornet’s Up’.

tobacci (to-baw-ki) n. tobacco, plants of the genus Nicotiana, brought back from the New World from the 16th century and prepared for smoking or taking as snuff, originally believed to have remarkable medicinal properties. Like elsewhere in Europe, social customs were to change utterly with the arrival of these dried leaves. The first record in Hawick is in 1652. There were attempts to grow it in the Borders from about 1778, with successful farms near Melrose and Kelso, but the business was scuttled by changes to agricultural laws – ‘Persewit be John Scott, merchant, for payment to him of £6 10s. worth of tobaccopypis, broken be him in carrying of thame out of Edinburgh’ [BR1652] (also bacci).

tocher (to-chur) n., arch. a dowry, marriage portion – ‘... fyve hundir merkis for the mariage and tochir of James of Douglas, my sone and apperand are, wyth Jonet, the dochter of the said David ...’ [SB1470], ‘...the said Waltyr Scot, knight, payand the toquhir to the said James ...’ [SB1519], ‘...for, if she canna reckon kith an’ kin, an’ bring a heavy tocher, she can boast of a tight shape, a lily skin, an’ a heart filled wi’ the fear o’ God’ [JTe], ‘...That tell the tocher o’ a leal Scots lass, The oot-gleam o’ a hert that’s true’ [WL].

tocher-gude (to-chur-good) n., arch. money given as a dowry – ‘Item, to the Laird of Johnestoun for the rest of his tocher gud, ane thousand and foure hundreth merkis. Item, to the Laird of Phairnyhirst for the rest of his tocher-gude, and thousand pundis’ [SB1574].

tocherless (to-chur-lis) adj., arch. without a dowry – ‘But, alack! an’ a day! her charms were laid, For Bess o’ the Brae was a tocherless maid’ [JoHa], ‘... A tocherless lassie, baith friendless an’ poor’ [JT].

Tocher Lodge Moss (to-chur-loj-mos) n. boggy area near Woll Rig, just to the south of the Bishop’s Stone.

tod (tōd) n., poet. a fox – ‘All his associates did wear a tod tail; Which they esteem most by their engadges, More than French gallants do of their plummages’ [CWS], ‘The todde he came frae the Screthy holes, And courit fou cunninglye’ [JTe], ‘And the tod ran up, and the tod ran down And the tod ran high and low; And unto the middle of Ringan’s corn, The wily tod he did go’ [JTe], ‘Tak’ us the tods, the wee tods, that waste the vynes ...’ [HSR], ‘An’ Jesus saith untill him, The tods hae holes, an’ the burds o’ the air hae nests’ [HSR], ‘Another herd the flock may tend, And frae vile tods the lambs defend ...’ [TCh], ‘By none was the clash of their hot spears heard Save the tod in the crags and the lone night bird’ [WHO], ‘They’ve a tod for telegraph-boy, nae doot, Sae fer frae the haunts o' men ...' [DH], '...Then owre the heid and oot As shairp as a tod' [DH], '...O' ringin' frosts and gale-force blaws, o' thievin' tods and hoodie craws' [TD] (the word survives in several place names, e.g. Todholes, Todrig, Todsleuch, Todshaw and Todshawhaugh).

Tod (tod) n. Thomas of Drygrange (1726–1800), W.S., son of Archibald, writer in Edinburgh. His family were from Melrose. He was an advocate, who was one of the trustees for Dr. Robert Langlands when he sold off his estate to satisfy creditors in about 1780. He was on the roll of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1788 he was recorded as liferenter of the lands of Langnewton Mill, as well as lands in Newstead. He was also recorded in 1811 as owner of the feu-duties from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. By 1875 these duties were among the possessions of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Langhope in Ashkirk Parish. He finished editing the 1837 description of that parish for the New Statistical Account, since the minister, Rev. Hamilton, died before publication. He also wrote 'The obligation of civil rulers to establish the means of religious knowledge and instruction: deduced from the universal moral government of God' (1836) and an essay describing a device for compressing peat into fuel, published in the Transactions of the Highland and Agricultural Society in 1832 (see also Todd).

Todcleuch see Todsleuch

Todd (tod) n. David (1930/1–) from Fife he was a policeman in Hawick and retired to Burntisland. He is known for his matchstick models, including one of Trinity Kirk, where he became an Elder in 1973. Francis (1857/8–1910) came to Hawick in 1889 as choirmaster at St. Andrew's Church, remaining for 15 years. He conducted the Hawick Select Choir and others throughout the Borders and was also a music teacher. Gladys Ruth (1901–2002) born in Hawick, she became a school teacher, returning to town in 1925. She spent 30 years at Drumlanrig School and then 4 years at Wilton, retiring in 1959. Always known as 'Miss Todd', she was fondly remembered by ex-pupils. A supporter of the Border Music Festival and lover of the Hawick songs, she lived to celebrate her 100th birthday. James (19th C.) station-master at Stobs in the 1860s. Nichol (19th/20th C.) resident of Ormiston Lodge. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. William (15th C.) witness to the 1469 sasine for Wolfelee. It seems likely that he was local to Rulewater. His surname is recorded as

'Tode'. Sir William (d.bef. 1564) associated with Bedrule Kirk from 1541. He was recorded as Parson and Vicar of Bedrule in November 1557. It is feasible that this is a transcription error for 'Ker', who was a clergyman there soon afterwards; however, it seems that he resigned in 1557 and was replaced by William Ker. His 'tack' of 1557 was used by Kerr of Ferniehirst to support their 1564 claim against the parishioners of Bedrule that they had rights to the parish teinds (formerly spelled 'Tod' and 'Tode').

toddle (to-dul) v. to walk with unsteady steps, walk jauntily, totter – 'Lang about Ettrick may ye toddle' [JR], 'The bales o' guid humour, the bags o' love fare, The smiles an' the smirking that toddle it there' [JoHa], 'Some playfu' toddlin' sweet wee bairn'; 'Some lovely youth, or maiden dear ...' [AD], 'Come awa', my little lambie, Toddle tentie, come to me ...' [TCh], 'A toddlin' troot, and a toddlin' troot, And a wee bit bonnie toddlin' troot: If ye search a' the water about, Ye'll no' fin' siccan a toddlin' troot' [T].

Todds (todz) n. William (18th C.). In 1693 his children Thomas, Robert, Archibald and Oliver had a decree against Adam Scott of Bowhill and William Scott in Langhope. He was probably a tenant on Langhope (near Ashkirk).

Todholes (tod-hōlz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Todholys' in c.1376, with rental valued at 4 shillings. It is probably the 'Toddellis' recorded in the 1541 rental roll, valued at 5 shillings and with Christopher Armstrong as tenant; given the position on the roll, its location is somewhere near Mangerton (the origin could be 'fox hollows').

Todholes (tod-hōlz) n. former lands in the Barony of Cavers, listed in the 1511 charter of the Douglasses of Cavers, as 'Denummains, called Todholis' (or 'Todeholis'). In the 16th century Helena Douglas was heiress of 'Todheils' when she married Robert, 3rd son of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. It was listed as the principle 'messuage' of the demesne lands of Denholm in 1687 when part of the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas and when inherited by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands were described as also having a mill. It is unclear where these lands were, although possibly the same as ‘Todlaw’ on the Dean Burn (it is transcribed ‘Todhold’ in 1687 and 1698).

Todholeside (tod-hōl-sīd) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf. Along with ‘Standestanerig’ these lands were sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to the monks of Melrose in the early 1200s, sometime between 1214 and 1249. The precise location is unknown, but it lay between Clerklands and the part of Lilliesleaf held by William, son of Alexander of Lilliesleaf (spelled ‘Thodholesid’).

Todhunter Grain (tod-hun’-ur-grān) n. stream in Castleton Parish which rises on Windy Edge and flows into the Tinnis Burn near Whisgills. There are old sheepfolds along its banks. The former farmstead of Grainfoot may have been at the foot of this stream – ‘Sad thoughts of the past often steal through my brain, As I fancy I see him on the ‘Todhunter-grain’’ [DA].

Todlaw (tod-law) n. farmstead in Cavers Parish, on the Dean Burn, lying between East Middle and Denholmhill. The farmer there in 1797 was Michael Anderson and in 1801 was James Scott. In 1851 the farmer was Robert Scott. The 1863 Ordnance Survey ‘Name Book’ describes it as ‘a one storey house with garden attached’. This could be the ‘Todha’ near the head of Denholm Dean mentioned in a story related in 1830 (and printed in the Border Counties Magazine of 1881).

Todlaw Wells (tod-law-welz) n. plantation in Bedrule Parish, to the south-east of the Dunion, lying on the route of the Borders Abbey Way. There is an enclosure, rig and furrow lines and a possible settlement in the area.

Todrick (tod-rik) n. older variant of Todrig.

Todrig (tod-rig, tōd-rig, -rij) n. farm near the confluence of the Todrig Burn with the Langhope Burn (which flows into the Ale). Some time in the period 1248–58 Henry of Ashkirk gifted the lands to Coldstream Priory. In about 1260 there is a charter from Aymer de Maxwell granting the lands to Alexander de Synton. ‘Hector Ladir’ brother of the Laird is recorded in 1494/5. Cuthbert Lauder from there was convicted of reset, communing with rebels and other crimes in 1508. There is a charter of 1511/12 confirming the superiority of the lands to John Lord Hay of Yester, which had previously belonged to his father. John Hay granted the lands to Stephen Lauder in about 1512; it was then in the Barony of Olivercastle through annexation. William Lauder inherited the Lairdship as heir of Stephen and in 1535 he announced that his tenant William Scott should be ejected from the lands. Katherine Gray had the right in 1538 to remove the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder. The Hays continued to hold the lands (or perhaps part of them) at least up until inherited by John, Lord Hay of Yester in 1610. The lands were held by the Scotts of Harden, with George of Todrig being the 3rd son of the first William of Harden. The family arms of this old branch of Scott of Todrig was cut into their seat in the old Ashkirk church in 1622. However, sometime around 1622 George’s son Walter sold the property to Thomas, younger brother of Sir Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Whitslaid. For more than a century it belonged to this new branch of Scotts of Todrig or ‘Toderick’. The motto of this branch was ‘Pro aris et focus’. Tax was paid for 13 hearths on the estate in 1694. Thomas Scott’s lands in Roxburghshire were valued at £552 in 1678 (this being for Wester Essenside, Leaphill and their associated teinds). Thomas Cowan was gardener there in 1709. John Hendry was living there in 1710. The estate was sold off by Thomas Scott in 1746. George Pott was the proprietor on Ainslie’s 1773 map. Robert Brown was living there in 1787–89. The estate was valued at £576 in 1785 and 1802. The main house dates from at least the 17th century on the eastern side, with alterations from 1862 converting it to a more modern farmhouse. The original entrance can still be made out on the south wall. Adjacent farm buildings contain 2 stone panels, one with the date ‘1698’, the other having the initials ‘G P’ (probably for George Pott), together with a lozenge and inscription ‘REBUILT 1833’. A mill is marked nearby, on the opposite side of the Todrig Burn, on Ainslie’s 1773 map. A bronze tripod pot (probably dating from around 1500) found there in 1956 is in the Royal Museum of Scotland. There is a farm of the same name south of Greenlaw, and another east of Eccles. One of these places (or more than one perhaps) gave rise to the surname ‘Todrick’. The arms of Scott of Todrig bore a star and 2 crescents and the family motto was ‘Pro aris et focus’ (for home and hearth) – ‘First came Todrig, Then came Woll, Last came Whitslaid, The Chief of the Water Ail’ [CWS] (the name occurs as ‘Todholerig’ in a charter of the late 12th century; the house is marked as ‘Todrigg’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Todrig’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map and ‘Todrigg’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; also formerly spelled ‘Todrick’, ‘Todrik’, ‘Toderick’, etc., it was 'Todderig' in about 1250, 'Toddryk' in 1535, 'Todryk' in 1540, 'Todryge' in 1638, 'Toodrige' in 1644, 'Todrige' in 1678 and 1682, 'Todrigg' in 1694 and 1710, 'Todridge' in 1720, 'Todrige' in 1761 and 'Todridge' in 1785 and 1787; whether the origin is 'fox ridge', or something else, is unknown).

Todrig (tod-rig) n. Alexander (15th C.) priest who witnessed an Edinburgh document in 1488. His name was spelled 'Todrick', and he may have had a connection to the local estate. Archibald (15th C.) described as 'of Todrik' when he was witness to a document made at St. Giles in Edinburgh in 1477. Probably the same 'Archibaldus Todryk' who was a Bailie of Edinburgh according to a charter of 1482. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. Probably the same Archibald was 'Archibaldi Tothrik', Burgess of Edinburgh in a charter of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith in 1504, where his son and heir William is also mentioned. David (16th C.) son of Robert, Burgess of Selkirk. He is recorded as witness to several documents in Selkirk in the period 1528–44. In 1536/7 he had a marriage contract with Helen, daughter of Stephen Wilkinson. In 1542 he was listed as 'serjeant' and in 1543 he complained about a transaction with Simon Fairley. He was witness to a transaction in 1544. David (16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He may be the David recorded in 1561 in Selkirk when he made an agreement with Robert Robson 'in Hauyk'. A tenement formerly pertaining to him is recorded in Selkirk in 1579 and he was a Burgess in 1580 when he witnessed another transaction in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed a dispute between Bailies in Selkirk. George (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded as 'Todrik' in 1552. John (15th/16th C.) witness to an Edinburgh document of 1501/2, where his name is spelled 'Todrik'. Robert (d.bef. 1537) witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1527. In 1528 and 1534 he witnessed documents in Selkirk, along with his son David. Also in 1528 and 1534 he was recorded as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. In 1532/3 he was a 'special tenant' in the 20 shillingland of East Haining, wadset to John Scott, Burgess of Selkirk. He was deceased in 1536/7 when his son and heir David succeeded to his lands and money in Selkirk. Thomas (15th C.) listed as resident of lands in Linlithgow in a charter of 1496. Thomas (16th C.) described as 'Thomas Todrik, serjeant' in an Edinburgh document of 1548. Perhaps the same Thomas was a traveller when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1551. William (15th

C.) recorded as 'Wil. Tothrik' in a charter of 1428 when he held lands in Edinburgh. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. William (15th/16th C.) referred to as 'of Todrig' in 1505 when he was a Burgess of Edinburgh and gained houses on Edinburgh High Street. He is also mentioned (as 'Willelmi Todryk') in a charter of Trinity Collegiate Church in 1511. It is unclear whether he had a local connection. Probably the same William was described as a Bailie of Edinburgh (and spelled 'Todrick' and 'Tothrik') in the period 1501–07 and witnessed another charter in Edinburgh in 1502. He married the King's cousin Margaret Crichton and was given an exemption from customs for life.

Todrig Mill (tod-rig-mil) n. former mill near Todrig farm. William Riddell was miller there in 1617. It is possible that he was the miller of 'Todrig mylne' who was said to have killed Robert, only son of Simon Scott of Bonnington, leading to the retaliatory murder of Walter, 3rd son of Walter Scott of Harden in 1616. Walter Nichol was there in 1763 and John Glendinning in 1781 (it is 'Todrig Mylne' in 1617, 'Todrigg Miln' in 1763 and 'Todrigg miln' in 1781; it is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Todrig Shank (tod-rig-shawngk) n. former name for a place, presumably close to Todrig. It is 'Todrik Schank' in 1581 when it was the location where an agreement was signed by Walter Scot of Goldielands, Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, John Scot of Robertson and William Dalglish in Crookston, relating to a dispute between Adam Scott in Bonnington and Robert Scott of Haining.

Todsleuch (todz-klooch) n. former fortified house in the Liddel valley, near the present Steeleroad-end. It is probably related to Todshaw Sike, which is marked near there on modern maps. The farm is recorded as 'Todcleuche alias Todcleucheside' in 1632, among the lands possessed by Hab Henderson. Ninian Wigham was tenant there in 1694, with Andrew Pott, weaver, also a resident. Michael Dang was recorded as farmer at 'Todsclueghside' in 1797 (marked on Blaeu's 1654 map, with 'Todsclueghside' appearing on Stobie's 1770 map; 'Todscluechsyde' is recorded in 1659 and is 'Todsclueghsyde' in 1694; the name is presumably related to the fox; note that there is an unrelated 'Todcleuch' near Canonbie).

Todshaw (tod-shaw) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley. It is unclear how far back the name goes, because of confusion with Todshawhaugh. However, it may be that this general name came first and the 'haugh' was added to the nearby farm later. In any case 'Todshaw' is listed among those lands granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. The farm was part of the Harden estates in the 17th century. There were 18 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely George Turnbull, Isobel Renwick, John Turnbull, Janet Turnbull, Walter Fairgrieve, William Henderson, Sarah Rule, Michael Renwick, John Aitchison, Janet Scott, Mark Coltart, Janet Paterson, William Grierson, Mungo Brand, Isobel Shortreed, Marion Scott, Marion Brand and Grisel Hall. It was included within Hawick Parish (according to a valuation of 1678) and along with Todshawhaugh, Todshawhill, Whithope and Whithope Mill was valued at £1658 when disjoined to the new Roberton Parish. It was included among lands inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester from his father Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1694. Mungo Scott, John Mowat and John Rule were listed as residents there in 1694. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. William Miller was there in 1703, Walter Scott in 1710–15, John Jackson in 1711, William Helm in 1720, John Stavert in 1720–26, Patrick Blaikie in 1722 and John Scott in 1725. It was sold by William Scott of Thirlestane about 1750 and was owned by John Murray of Philiphaugh in 1757 when its head lands were divided from those of Mabonlaw. Until 1689 when Roberton was formed, it was part of Wilton Parish, while the separate farm of Todshawhaugh was in Hawick Parish. William Purdie was there in 1763–67, George Coltart in 1767 and Walter Armstrong in 1789. In 1788 the owner is recorded as John Johnstone of Alva, when it was valued at £113 15s 3d and it was £130 in 1811 with the same owner. In about 1874 the owner was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell. It lay between Mabonlaw and Mervinslaw, as marked on Stobie's 1770 map (while Blaeu's 1654 map shows it between Mabonlaw and Harden, but this map is not always accurate). The geography is somewhat confused by the existence of several places of similar name stretching over about 2 miles. Todshaw Hill (268m) lies behind Highchesters Hill, on the north side of the Borthwick valley, with Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean being in the upper reaches of the Wilton Burn. Todshawhaugh farm is on the south side of the Borthwick valley, near where Todshaw Cleuch joins the river, and below Todshawhaugh Hill. And a higher Todshaw Hill (288m) and the farm of Todshawhill lie about another mile to the south, near Chapelhill farm (recorded as 'Todscha' in a 1588 contract and again in 1643; the name is presumably related to the fox).

Todshaw (tod-shaw) n. James (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull in Roberton Parish in 1681. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Jean Kinnear in 1683 and their children included: John (b.1684); John (b.1685); and Elizabeth (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were James Scott and George Riddell. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism in Roberton for James Scott and Janet Elliot (formerly 'Totchaw').

Todshaw Cleugh (tod-shaw-klooch) n. stream that rises near Todshaw Hill and runs in a north-easterly direction to join the Borthwick Water to the east of Todshawhaugh farm.

Todshaw Dean (tod-shaw-deen) n. area along a stream in the headwaters of the Wilton Burn.

Todshawhaugh (tod-shaw-, to-jee-hawf) n. farm a mile or so along the Borthwick, opposite Highchesters. It was along a tenanted farm of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 167 acres, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Branhholme Park, Branhholme Mains, Todshawhill and Whames. It was also stated to have some stands of ash and birch trees. There was a William Turnbull there in 1426. It was among lands exchanged by Thomas Inglis of Manor with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1446. It is probably the lands of 'Todscha' held by Robert Scott in 1463/4, and Robert Scott was there in 1484/5. John Scott 'of Todscha' is recorded in 1492 and Robert Scott 'in todshawhalch' in 1493. The tenant in 1549 was Walter Scott, who was one of the men who complained that their farms had been raided and burned the year before by a group of English and Kers. William Scott, who resided at Whames was also listed in 1549 as 'alias callit Wille of Todscha'hauch'. Through the 16th century it was held by a branch of the Scotts. In 1627 it is described as paying '6 bolls in stok, 1 boll half boll in tenyd, 3 lb. in vicarage'. Walter Scott from Todshawhaugh was recorded in 1628 when he was accused of cutting down some of Scott of Buccleuch's trees on his park there. Robert Gledstains 'pr Todschauch' (portioner there) signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. There were 11 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Gledstains, Agnes Rule, James Scott, Andrew Cook, Agnes Davidson, Helen Wilson, Margaret Scott, Helen Robson, Walter Hogg, Isobel Scott and Lillas Armstrong. In 1650 John Renwick and 'Pail' Murray were tenants. Walter Cavers was there in 1680. It was part of Hawick Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90. Rev. Thomas Shiel and John Cuthbertson were tenants in 1672 and 1673, Thomas Shiel himself in 1675 and Thomas Shiel and Walter Scott in 1677. The minister was also recorded as tenant of the farm in 1690–93 and with his son Thomas also there in 1692. Robert Langlands appears to also have been tenant here in 1686. The householders recorded there in 1694 were Thomas Shiel, Thomas Turnbull, Robert Murray and Thomas Stavert, with Agnes Murray also listed there among 'the poor'. William Shiel (also son of the minister) was tenant in 1696 and 1698. James Grieve was recorded there in at least 1712–23, James Brydon in 1725 and Robert Govenlock in 1727. It was also the site of a blacksmiths in the 18th and 19th centuries. Walter Grieve (of Bransholme Park) farmed there in the late 18th century, until he died in 1800. The farm was then leased to Robert Scott of Singlie. Walter Armstrong was living there in 1800. In 1812 the residents included tenant Robert Scott, hind David Laidlaw, ploughman John Hobkirk and labourer Robert Murray. In 1841 Walter Scott was farm steward there and the residents at the cottages were Turnbells and Millers. The flat land on the south side of the Borthwick there is known as Todshaw Haugh, and the hill to the west is Todshawhaugh Hill (also spelled 'Todshawhauche', etc., it first appears as 'Todgishalch' in 1426, is 'Todschauch' in 1446, 'Togehawch' in 1484/5, 'Todschauch' in 1486, 'Todshauhauch' in 1490, 'Todschauch' in 1492, 'Todschauch' in 1549, 'Todschauch' in 1580/1, 1591 and 1594, 'Todschaucht' in 1581, 'Todschauch' in 1627, 'Todshahauche' in 1628, 'Todschauch' in 1648, 'Todshaw-haugh' in 1678, 'Todschauch' in 1692, 'Toitchahaugh' in 1694, 'Todshahauch' in 1714, 'Todshahaugh' in 1721 and 'Todziehaugh' in 1757; it is 'Todshahauch' on a 1650 parish map, appears to be marked simply 'Hauch' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Todshawhaugh Hill (tod-shaw-hawf-hil) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Harden Bridge, and to the south-west of Todshawhaugh farm. There are remains of a hill-fort and earthworks on the northern spur. The nearly circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter has been almost obliterated by ploughing on the eastern side. The ditch of the ridge-fort appears to connect with this and runs for about 20 m to the south-west, with traces of a rampart along its inner side. A little further south is a peak called Ladies' Seat, which is a little higher.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil, to-jee-hil) n. hill above Chapelhill and Todshawhill farms, between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys. It reaches a height of 288 m and has a fort on its summit and settlement a little to the north, as well as some small ponds. The former farm of Todshawhill stood here. To confuse things, another hill of the same name, reaching 268 m, stands on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, near Mabonlaw farm. This (southern) one has a fort on its summit, and the farm of Todshawhill is adjacent. Between these 2 hills is the lower Todshawhaugh Hill. The fort is on a ridge near the summit, about 90 m by 70 m in size, surrounded by 3 ramparts, with an entrance on the west. A crescent-shaped depression inside is probably a hut floor. The other archaeological site on this hill lies on the northern spur, covering an area of about 55 m by 40 m, surrounded by a single rampart, but much denuded by ploughing. There may be an entrance to the north-east and a scooped area inside could be a hut site. Note that there are several forts and settlements on the neighbouring Whitcastle Hill. There is yet another hill of the same name north of Alemoor Loch, which is 352 m high.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, between Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean, just to the east of Mabonlaw farm. It reaches a height of 268 m, and can be easily confused with another hill of the same name near Chapelhill farm, on the southern side of the valley.

Todshawhill (tod-shaw-, to-ja-, -jee-hil) n. former farm near Chapelhill, about 2½ miles west of Hawick. Its early history is closely related with that of Todshawhaugh, with which it can sometimes be confused. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 251 acres, bounded by the Todshawhaugh, Branhholme Mains, Branhholme Muir, Whithope and Whames. It was among the lands that passed from the Inglis family to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1446. From at least the mid-16th century it was another home of a local branch of the Scotts. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. Philip Scott is recorded as tenant in 1549. Andrew Scott of 'Totchahill, from the family of Robertoun' is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch. It is described in a 1627 valuation as paying '21 bolls stock and teynd; estimat to pay in stock 12 bolls, parsonage 3 bolls, 3 lbs. vicarage'. The Land Tax Rolls of 1643 lists the value of the farm at £133 6s 8d, owned by John Scott of Todshawhill. There were 12 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Agnes Scott, Euphan Haliburton, Helen Haliburton, Joan Scott, Agnes Scott, John Renwick, Isabel Kedie, Robert Renwick, John Renwick, Bessie Hendry, Robert Scott and Margaret Turnbull. Adam and William Scott were tenants from 1632 until about 1671. James Nichol was listed as a tenant in 1671 and Ninian Elliot in 1672 and 1673. James Carruthers was also recorded as tenant in 1673. Walter Scott of Harwood was leasing the farm in 1677. It was part of Hawick Parish until becoming part of the new Parish of Robertin in 1689/90. In 1691 it was leased to William Ogilvie and in 1693 to James Moffat, William Nichol and Robert Anderson. In 1694 the householders listed there were William Ogilvie, William Young (ploughman), Robert Blaik (shepherd) and James Scott, with Robert Scott listed there among 'the poor'. William Ogilvie was tenant again in 1696 and Capt. Francis Scott in 1697. Thomas Shiel was tenant there from at least 1699, when he had the farmhouse rebuilt on a more convenient site at about that time. 2 houses were built, each 42 feet long, one having 2 stone chimneys and 8 windows; it is unclear if anything survives from this time. This is probably the 'Todschill' where William Pott is recorded in 1702. John Douglas was living there in at least 1711–18 and James Leithead in 1722. Thomas Shiel was still recorded as tenant in 1735. It was tenanted by several generations of the Scoon family, starting with John in about 1748, with Robert being the last Scoon tenant, who emigrated to the U.S.A. in about 1842 after defaulting on the lease.

The farm was then amalgamated with Chapelhill. David Taylor was living there in 1762, James Scott in 1765 and 1771, James Crow in 1766, Andrew Henderson in 1771 and William Taylor in 1781. Robert Scoon is recorded as farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Ploughman William Scoon and labourer John Scoon were living there in 1812. In 1841 the residents of the cottages there were the Hoggs and the Grahams – 'The three Scotts o' Commonsides, The Tamsons o' the Mill, There's Ogilvy o' Branhholm, And Scoon o' Todgiehill' [DJG] (also sometimes incorrectly 'Todshawmill'; it appears as 'Todsshawhillis' in 1435, 'Todsshawhil' in 1446, 'Todsshawhill' in 1549, 'Todschahill' in 1627, 'Todshaw-hill' in 1678, 'Toddyhill alias Todsshawhill' in 1660, 'Toitchahill' in 1694, 'Todgahill' in 1791 and 'Todgiehill' in 1856; it is 'Todshahill' on a 1650 parish map, marked 'Todshahill' on Blaeu's 1654 map; the name is presumably related to the fox; note there is a farm of the same name in Eskdalemuir Parish).

Todshawhillshiel (tod-shaw-hil-sheel) n. former shepherd's cottage on the farm of Todshawhill. William Lawson was recorded there in 1716, James Thomson in 1721–26, John Stavert in the 1770s and Robert Riddell in 1788–90. William Scoon and Robert Riddell were there in the 1780s and George Michie was shepherd there in 1799 (it is 'Todshaugh Hillshiel' in 1771).

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream behind Highchesters Hill. It rises near Muckle Knowe, runs around Todshaw Hill and joins Wilton Burn.

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream that joins Taylor's Cleuch and flows into the Liddel Water just south of Larriston. There is a complex of mediæval and post-mediæval buildings nearby. This may be the settlement once called 'Todsclenchside'.

Todstead (tod-steed) n. Todstead, former farm in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Todistede' and with a value of 4 shillings in a rental roll of c.1376. It is unclear where this was located.

toft (toft) n., arch. a homestead, farmstead and attached land (the word survives in the names of several farms, e.g. Tofts, Toftfield, Toftholm and Kirkton Tofts).

toft an croft (toft-in-kroft) n., arch. an entire holding, land and buildings – ‘...to enter the said Walter in Eidschaw to his husbandland with onset, toft and croft and pertinents’ [SPB1581].

Toftfield (toft-feeld) n. former name of an estate near Melrose, adjacent to Abbotsford. It was purchased by John Usher in 1753, then held by his son James and grandson John. In 1819 it was bought from the Ushers by Sir Walter Scott, who changed the name to Huntlyburn and improved the simple 2-storey house there. It seems that it was formerly called ‘Tylehouse’, perhaps related to tile manufacturing for Melrose Abbey (the 1574 will of Gibbie Hatley of Gattonside refers to a ‘Faften field’ which may be the same place).

Toftholm (toft-hōm) n. farm in the Hermitage valley, opposite Shaws. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Tofts, covering 329 acres, bounded by Shaws, Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscote, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. Andrew Crozier was there in 1623. James Crozier was tenant in 1694 and William Crozier was also listed there. Thomas Pott was recorded as farmer there in 1797 and in 1801 Adam Armstrong was a labourer there and Thomas Potts a shepherd. Adam Scott was shepherd there in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. A sandstone axe-hammer found near here is in Hawick Museum. On the edge of a terrace just to the south-west there is an ancient enclosure and further south-west, on a small terrace, are the remains of a farmstead, named ‘Upper Row’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. There is also a field system and rig lines there (marked as ‘Toftthoome’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Toftsholme’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, it has its modern name on Stobie’s 1770 map; also called ‘Toftsholm’, it is ‘Taftsholme’ in 1694; this is probably from ‘howm’, meaning low-lying land beside a river; see also Toftsholm Sike).

Tofts (tofts) n. farm in Kirkton Parish, in modern times split into Nether Tofts and Upper Tofts. The place name is quite old, with ‘William of Tofts’ being recorded as Parson of Cavers in 1333, and possibly the Ingram, Robert and William ‘de Toftes’ recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 also being connected with this location. Hence it may have given rise to a surname. There are deeds from 1550, 1554 and 1639 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. John Turnbull ‘in toftis’ is recorded in 1493. It was owned by the Turnbells ‘of Toftis’ in the 16th and 17th centuries. Martin Douglas of Tofts inherited lands from his uncle Archibald (presumably the lands of Tofts) in 1608. Martin Douglas ‘of Toftis’ is also recorded in 1615 and John Douglas, ‘called of Toftis’ in 1619. It was valued at £300 in 1643 (when owned by ‘Laird of Tofts’, who also held £ of land in Abbotrule Parish) and in 1678 (when owned by an unnamed Turnbull). William Turnbull of Tofts inherited the 2 farms from his father Thomas in 1695. William Turnbull paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. Anthony Turnbull was there in 1788 and still in about 1813, when still valued at £300. William Richardson Dickson of Alton were there in the 1870s. George and Robert Deans were farmers there in the 1860s (the origin is probably just ‘the homestead’ in Middle English, deriving from the Old Norse ‘topt’; it has its modern spelling at least by Gordon’s c. 1650 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map already shows ‘N. Tofts’ and ‘O. Tofts’).

Tofts (tofts) n. possible former name for Kirkton Tofts (it is unclear whether this is the same place or not).

Tofts (tofts) n. Adam of Norwich (13th C.) listed in 1291 among men who had letters of protection from Edward I. He was serving the English King at Roxburgh Castle. It is unclear whether he was related to the Roxburghshire Tofts family. Ingram (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296 along with William and Robert ‘de Toftes’. His name was listed first, so he may have been the senior member of the family. His seal consisted of a large fleur-de-lis and the name ‘S’INGRAMI D’TOFTIS’. John (19th/20th C.) carter in Hawick. He lived upstairs at No. 3 Silver Street. His wife was Bessie and their children included: Robert, who was wounded twice in WWI; and James (b.1917), who was killed in Belgium and commemorated on the Tyne Cot Memorial. Robert (13th C.) listed as ‘de Toftes’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows an 8-rayed figure and the name ‘S’ROBERTI D’TOFTIS’. William (13th C.) swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, along with Ingram and William. William (14th C.) recorded in 1335/6 when he was ‘persone ecclesie de Cauers’. He settled the amounts due on the lands of ‘Ethrestone’ (probably Adderstone), which had been forfeited by Robert ‘of Ethrestone’ to the English Crown. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Willelmo de Toftys' in 1363 when he was Rector of 'magna Cauers'. He was most likely associated with the lands of Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and parson of the neighbouring parish of Cavers. He was probably a descendant of the earlier 'of Tofts' family.

the Tofts (thu-tofts) n. former farm in the Hermitage valley, just to the north of Toftholm. It is probably the 'Toftys' recorded as being in the 'Quarterium de Ludne' in a rental roll of Liddesdale c.1376, with a value of 5 merks. It is shown on Blaeu's 1654 map on the southern side of the valley, roughly opposite the present village of Hermitage. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Toftholm into a farm covering 329 acres, bounded by Shaws, Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscote, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. It probably included the area marked as Tofts Knowes on the modern Ordnance Survey map.

Tofts Hill (tofts-hil) n. hill in Kirkton Parish, just south of Upper Tofts farm. It reaches a height of about 250 m. There is a small pond on the north side and a quarry on the south side. Aerial photography has also shown 2 rectangular enclosures, some field banks and some rig lines to the south west of there.

Toftsholm Sike (tofts-hōm-sīk) n. small stream that rises at Thiefsike Head and runs roughly parallel to the Hermitage Water, to join that river at Toftholm. There is the ruin of a cottage on its north side, and the remains of 2 shieling-huts in its headwaters, as well as old remains of sheepfolds and dykes (see also Toftholm).

Tofts Knowes (tofts-nowz) n. area of terrace on the southern side of the Hermitage Water, opposite Hermitage Castle. There are the remains of an old settlement there, with a farmstead, an extensive field system, rig lines and quarry pits.

togedder (to-ge-dur) adv., arch. together – '...were onlawed for being found togedder by the church censors, after the tenn hour bell was rung' [BR1702], '...the present Baylyeas, Robert Hardie and Robert Brown, haveing conveined and called togidder the towne Counsell ...' [BR1706] (also written 'togidder'; cf. the more modern the-gither).

toilets (toi-litz) n., pl. there have been many public toilets over the years in Hawick. Present conveniences include those in the Haugh, Howegate, the Cross Wynd, the Museum and Volunteer Park. The Burns Club was built on an 1843 'necessary' and the one at the end of Bourtree Place was demolished along with the railway bridge in the 1970s. Other toilets were at Towerdykeside, at the south end of the Little Haugh and by the McDonald Shelter (top of Mansfield Road). The first facilities were installed at the Moor in 1889. Two 1 penny locks were added to the closet doors in 1913 and a new urinal was built in 1925. The first Ladies toilets were built at the Paddock in 1963.

Tojo (tō-jō) n. nickname for High School teacher J. Anderson in the years after WWII.

Tokeley (tōk-lee) n. Albert Victor 'Vic' (1928/9–2003) born and raised in Yetholm, he lived most of his life in Hawick, working as an accountant and becoming Managing Director of Croall, Bryson. He was an all-round sportsman in his youth. He became President of the Rotary Club, was President and long-time committee member of the Archæological Society, and was a Tweed Commissioner for 34 years. He was well known as an expert on the Yetholm gypsies and on angling, writing 'The Kirk Yetholm Gypsies' (2004), which was completed by his daughters Anna and Jill, with the help of Jules Horne. A memorial stone was erected on Yetholm Green.

the Tolbooth (thu-tōl-booth) n. Tolbooths were generally the place where traders paid their fees on market days and where goods were weighed, as well as acting as the town jail. Hawick's former Tolbooth was on the site of the previous Town Hall, before being demolished in 1781 (with the timber being sold for £1 6s.). It was said to be a 'humble and primitive erection' with a thatched roof of heather and a rough barn-like interior. It would have served many municipal functions in its day, including as the local court and town prison. The building was sold to the town by William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1657, although there was probably a building with a similar function before that, somewhere else on the High Street. In fact there is a mention in 1612 of the Town being in debt for a number of reasons, including 'bigging of thair tolbuith'. The building was said to be in a ruinous condition in 1693 and was rebuilt around 1694. Its use by the Council for meetings is recorded in the Town Book in 1638 and 1660. There was some dispute in the 17th century over the rights of the agents of the Baron to use it for particular purposes. In 1704 it is recorded that it needed to be thatched. In 1724 the Council resolved to demolish the old building and rebuild it, 'set out to the south corner of Horsliehills House' (probably on the other side of the High Street), at a cost of 600 merks. In 1727 the Council decreed that the weigh-house 'or under tolbooth' should be leased. A staircase was erected there in 1732. In 1737 the stair was mended and the building re-limed. 2 panes of glass were purchased for it in 1755. A man paid the Council for keeping 'wild beasts' in it in 1768. The lock of the old jail door is in the Museum. The word 'Tolbooth' was also later applied to the building at the Loan Toll, where the tolls were collected, as well as sometimes being used for other houses at toll-bars on the roads around Hawick – 'The Court of the bruche of Hawick, halden within the Tolbuith thereof ...' [BR1638], 'Item, whatsomever person that sall be committed in waird, and brekis the Tolbuith, or cumes furth thereof without license of the bailies, or ane of them, sal pay £10 money, and wardit during the bailies' will' [BR1640], 'Walter Scott ... bailie of the regality of Hawick, under William Lord Drumlanrig, craves of the bailies of Hawick the key of the tolbuith ...' [BR] (also spelled 'Toll-booth' and 'Tolbuith').

tolerat (to-le-ri') pp., arch. tolerated – '...was ordered to bring a testimonie from Mr. Douglas, Minister of Kirkton, failing which he would not be tolerate to stay in ye toun' [PR1717].

the Toleration (thu-to-le-rā-shin) n. name sometimes used to refer to the 1689 Act of Toleration. This permitted freedom of worship for Protestant dissenters, but not for Catholics.

toll (tōl) n. a system of charging for the use of a road, introduced in the 18th century to fund major road improvements, but enormously unpopular with the general public.

toll-bar (tōl-bawr) n. a beam placed across a road at a toll house, to prevent carriages from passing without paying the toll, also used to refer to the adjacent house itself. It was also sometimes also called a 'turnpike bar'. There were toll bars every few miles along the main roads, following the Turnpike Acts of the mid-18th century. These toll houses were usually licensed for the sale of alcohol, and used as resting points by travellers.

Hawick also had toll bars at the main entrances to town, specifically the Wester Toll, Loan Toll (or 'Auld Wester Toll'), Easter Toll, Dovemount Toll (or 'North Toll') and those at Crumhaugh and at the Common Haugh (also written 'toll bar').

toll-hoose (tōl-hoos) n., arch. a toll-house, building in which a toll-keeper lived. These were built every few miles along the main turnpike roads in the 18th and early 19th centuries, as well as at the main entrances to towns. Many are still in use as dwellings today and are easily distinguished because they have a window which seems perilously close to traffic. Existing examples include those at the Wester Toll, Greenbank (Roberton), Colterscleuch, Fiddleton, Langholm and Heriot. The former toll-house near the end of what became Commercial Road can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races.

the Toll Hoose (thu-tōl-hoos) n. name used for any of the local buildings where tolls were collected. The name was particularly used in the 19th century for one near the corner of what became Albert Road and Commercial Road.

tolls (tōlz) n., pl. one of several toll-bars at the entrances to Hawick or on the neighbouring roads. In the 17th century even the main roads were in appalling condition. There was a Highway Act of 1669, and another of 1691, which led to little genuine improvement. General Wade's roads, built in the Highlands in the 1720s and 30s, led to further calls for general improvement and the Turnpike Act of 1750. This made construction of improved roads compulsory, paid for by collection at toll-bars, typically located every 6–8 miles. Hawick was on the Scotch Dyke to Hare Moss toll road, which is now part of the A7. This was established by a special Act of 1764, published in 1770. There were also acts to regulate maintenance of local roads under the statutory Labour system. The highway toll acts were repealed in 1807, but already astonishing progress had been made locally. As well as toll-bars across the main roads, there were also tolls at the entrances to towns, Hawick having 4 of these at one point. They were: the Wester Toll (on the New Road, outside the present High School); the Loan Toll (in the middle of the Loan, for the old road South); the Easter Toll (on Bourtree Place near the old Con Club); and Dovemount Toll (at Dovemount on the road to Edinburgh). Plaques mark their positions. There were additional tolls at other times, e.g. across the Teviot Bridge by the Common Haugh, and another at Crumhaugh.

Tolm (tōm) n. former place name in Liddesdale. On the 1863 Ordnance Survey map a small plantation in the middle of ‘The Steel’ is marked ‘Tolm Tourick’ (presumably meaning a little tower). Perhaps this was the claimed site of the former tower-house of Steele.

tomati (to-ma’-i) n. a tomato – ‘You say ‘tomato’ and I say ‘tomati’, You say ‘potato’ and I say ‘potati’.

tombolo (tōm-bō-lō) n. former name for bingo, in use around the 1950s.

tombstane (toom-stān) n. a tombstone – ‘...but also named on the family tombstane in Duns Kirkyard’ [IWL].

tome (tōm) v., arch. to draw out into a thin line – ‘ti toam taffie’ [ECS] (also written ‘toam’; cf. taw).

Tomes (tōmz) n. Alan ‘Toomba’ (??–) rugby player, born in Hawick, but grew up in the Newcastle area, he worked for banks and the gas board. At about 6 ft 5 inches, he playing as a lock, and was known for his large stature. He played for Hawick R.F.C. from 1973, winning 48 caps in 1976–87, a record for a middle row player, and he also played for the British Lions in 1980.

Tomscotsteed (tōm-sko’-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Thomscotsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

the Tongue (thu-tung) n. narrow strip of land on the former boundary between Tofts and Hallrule. It was said to have been given by Turnbull of High Tofts to Douglas of Cavers as a way of protecting him from any attempts by Elliott of Stobs to force him off his land (as he had done to Turnbull of Denesyde). The field still survives, just east of the Dean Burn, to the left of the A6088 a little before Hawthornside.

the Tongue (thu-tung) n. spur of land in Castleton Parish, between the Green Burn and an unnamed tributary, situated north-west of Kirk Hill. There are the remains of a farmstead, a cottage and a sheepfold there. The farmstead may be 18th century; the cottage was known as Greenburn, and probably the farmstead also. At the southern end of the spur are further enclosures and ‘lazy-beds’.

tongue-ruits (tung-ritz) n., pl., arch. roots of the tongue, especially in the phrase ‘at one’s tongue-ruits’, meaning ‘on the tip of one’s tongue’ or about to be said – ‘It was at ma tung-ruits ti cry on the hoattery affair’ [ECS].

Tonke (tongk) n. Walter (13th C.) recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh Castle in 1296. He was probably a clerk of the English King’s household.

the Too’er see the Toor

toom (toom) adj., arch., poet. empty, unoccupied, vacant – ‘But, let me tell ye, gin yer pouch be toom, sirs ...’ [JoHa], ‘Toom as a teapot newly dreepit, Ae single plack, or I’ll be wheepit!’ [JoHa], ‘...an’ whan he is come he fin’ith it toom, swupet, an’ decket’ [HSR], ‘...Mr. Spunk’ll be lyin’ lookin’ up at St. Mary’s Kirk wi’ a green blanket ower his toom ribs ...’ [JEDM], ‘He was tired and wat and the big creel was toom’ [UB], ‘We view them now baith toom and bare Wi’ empty pouches’ [RF], ‘...Leaving the toom shafts o’ the trap To mock his fuddled ee’ [WL], not running, idle – ‘A stane-nappin in-jin gaed-on leike a tuim mill’ [ECS], v., arch. to empty, particularly a drinking glass – ‘Ane faster than another strives, In tooming toil-fil’t purses’ [JoHa], ‘...An’ play his pouch a pliskie – Will toom’d this night’ [JoHa], ‘An’ aye we ca’d the ither cog, An’ toom’d the reamin’ horn!’ [JT] (also spelled ‘toum’, ‘tume’; see also tuim, etc.).

toon (toon) n. a town – ‘There came a queer bodie unto oor toon ...’ [JoHa], ‘There’s a toon, o’ toons the pride That stands on bonnie Teviot side’ [JLH], ‘...Frae the silent slopes on my native toon’ [TC], ‘...On earth, Hawick is the only toon The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS], formerly any settlement situated at a major farm – ‘John Glendinen and Andrew were ordered to gather in the touns following, in ye landward part of ye parish, viz., Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Crofts, and Whitchesters, together with the Toon Book

Closses' [PR1717], 'Were ye e'er in Hawick toun? Gin ye hae, then fill your glasses' [GWe], adj. relating to the town – '...that no other toun or landward heritor of tenements and houses within the said burgh ...' [BR1699], 'But the toun-clock cheery chimes owre a'' [WL] (also spelled 'toun').

the Toon Book (thu-toon-book) n. the official record book kept by the Town Clerk, essentially synonymous with the Burgh Records. The first such book that still exists was begun by Gilbert Watt on 1st October 1638 and was continued by 4 successive Town Clerks until 8th October 1681. Many other books followed, listing the official business of the Town, including details of cases before the Magistrates' Court, etc. They are crucial pieces of early historical information about events and people in Hawick, as well as the language – '...quhilkis premises the said Adam Gowanlock desirit to be insert in the common toun-buik of Hawick' [BR1641].

toon clerk (toon-clerk) n. town clerk, an official appointed as secretary to a town council, keeping records and performing administrative duties – 'Item, whatsoever personnes gevis unrevrent language to the bailies, minister or towne-clark, sal pay £10 efter tryal ...' [BR1640], '...for calling Gilbert Watt, Toun-Clerk, ane suckler, and for other injurious words' [BR1650].

the Toon Clerk (thu-toon-klerk) n. the Town Clerk of Hawick. Originally he was appointed by the citizens to keep the town records and to perform other legal duties. He was chosen by the Burgesses every 2 years, the only official to be elected rather than appointed by the Council. The first recorded one was 'Hew Counston' or 'Cowstoun' in a single Privy Council document of 1612, and then Andrew Sword is recorded in 1630. The earliest existing 'Town Book', recorded by the Town Clerk, has its first entries in 1638. The Gladstains and Purdom families gave many decades of service to this office. The Town Clerk used to lead the march around the Burgh boundaries when the riders returned from Riding the Common. It was said in 1711 that he was 'now and then in custom to get ane burgess complimented over to him' (i.e. had his income supplemented by the occasional burgess fee). In 1720 he was awarded 10 shillings yearly for pen, paper and ink. The first full time appointment was not until 1937, and the position was dissolved along with Reorganisation in 1975. An approximate list follows (although some dates are far from certain): Hugh Cowston 1610s; Andrew Sword c.1620–1630s; John Richardson

the Toonfit Kirk

1630s–1638; Gilbert Watt 1638–1650s; James Liddell 1658–1659; Andrew Tunno 1659–70; Andrew Rutherford 1670–c.73; Walter Gladstains 1673–96; William Rutherford 1696; Walter Gladstains c.1696–1710; Walter Gladstains and Walter Gladstains (second) 1710–18; Walter Gladstains (second) 1718–39; James Weir c.1732–61; John Gladstains c.1763–70; James Winthrope 1760s (jointly with John Gladstains); James Weir (second) 1770; John Gladstains 1770–83; James Winthrope c.1783 (possibly); James Inglis 1790–1810; John Oliver 1810–41; James Wilson 1841–62; Thomas Purdom 1862–86; Robert Purdom 1886–1924; John Purdom 1924–1936; Robert F. Pollock 1937–38; Robert Barbour 1938–68; and William Hogg 1968–75. Bill Hogg was the last Hawick Town Clerk, moving to Roxburgh District in 1975.

the Toon Council (thu-toon-koon-sul) n. Hawick's Town Council. The earliest recorded composition of the Council was 12, plus 2 Bailies, the Clerk and the Treasurer. In 1701 the number was increased by 6 to 18. The Deacon Convenor from each of the Trades also sat on the Council. In 1759 it was decreed that all Councillors had to go on the Common Riding or else forfeit their place on the Council. By 1780 the Council consisted of 31 members, being the 2 Magistrates elected annually, 15 councillors (for life) elected by the sitting members, and 2 representatives (quartermasters) from each of the 7 incorporated trades. This was fixed by a ruling of the Court of Session in 1781, following an action raised by William Freeman and others. During the 19th century the Council met twice a month. The make-up of the body led to it being called 'the Eternal Council'. The newer Town Council was constituted after the Police Act of 1861, with wider representation by all men paying a rent of £10 or over. The Council saw many changes over the years, particularly with the setting up of the County Council in 1889, and its extension in 1929, and the associated transfer of responsibility. It was disbanded in May 1975, following local government Reorganisation, when power was removed from the burghs and centralised. A minority of people claim things improved.

the Toonfit Kirk (thu-toon-fi'-kirk) n. the Townfoot Church in Newcastleton, the first to be built in the village. It was erected in 1803/4 for the Toon Guaird

the Toon Guaird (thu-toon-gārd) n. another name for the Watch.

the Toon Hall (thu-toon-hall) n. the original Town Hall, sometimes called the ‘Town House’ was built in 1781 and demolished in 1884. This itself replaced the Tolbooth, which dated from about 1694, and earlier buildings before that. The current building was erected on the same site, 36 High Street, in 1884–86 at a cost of £16,000, with architect James Campbell Walker of Edinburgh, selected in an 1883 competition. The design is said to be Scottish Baronial with French elements, and is reminiscent of the work of David Bryce (with whom Walker had worked). The memorial stone was laid by the Duchess of Buccleuch, and the builders were John & William Marshall. The tower contains a clock, with 4 faces and bells ringing the quarter hours; the roof includes 2 separate weather-vanes. The complex contains the Council offices, the old Council Chambers, the former Magistrate’s Courtroom, the main Hall and the Lesser Town Hall. The back part (off the Cross Wynd) was once the police house, while the basement has the old police cells and was set up for use as a nuclear shelter. The building is used for many municipal purposes, including council administration, concerts and shows, the Colour Bussing, dances, etc. It currently stretches over 34–44 High Street and is a grade A listed building. Outside is a datum level of 352.9 ft elevation marked and another plaque commemorates the former site of the South Port – ‘In the Town Hall all things are ready, Knives and forks we’ll ply them steady’ [AB], ‘There’s the Town Hall tower wi’ its clock tickin’ ower’ [IWS].

the Toonheid (thu-toon-heed) n. Townhead, former name for the top of the town, i.e. an area around the West Port. It was used as a location in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory (e.g. for slater Robert Elliot). The Ordnance Survey map of 1863 marks St. Leonard’s farm as ‘Hawick Townhead’.

the Toonheid (thu-toon-heed) n. former name used for the top part of Denholm village, at the west end.

Toonheid (toon-heed) n. Townhead, name used for lands in Hassendean Parish, probably the same as the modern Knowetownhead. It was also known alternatively as ‘East Mains’. In 1692 Thomas Gray paid the vicarage teinds for the lands there. Thomas Gray, James Thomson and John Hood were there in 1694 (it is ‘Tounheid’

the Toon Hoose

Toonheid (toon-heed) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish near Chesters. George Oliver was the tenant there in 1669.

the Toonheid Port (thu-toon-heed-pōr) n. the Townhead Port, name given at one time to the West Port.

the Toonheid Toll (thu-toon-heed-tōl) n. the Townhead Toll Bar in Newcastleton. It was located on North Hermitage Street. Christina Telfer was toll-keeper there in 1861. The house still exists, on the right-hand side of the road coming out of the village.

the Toon Herd (thu-toon-herd) n. former Burgh employee, with responsibility for collecting the town’s cattle in the morning, taking them to the Common to graze and returning them by nightfall. In the early 19th century he also had the privilege of setting up a drinks tent on the Moor at the Common Riding. He may have lived at St. Leonard’s farm during some periods and in the cottage at Hawickmoor at others. In 1733 it is recorded that a herd was selected for horses pasturing on the Common, which was presumably a different person than the main Herd. In 1755 the building of a ‘herd’s house’ is recorded, this presumably being somewhere on the Common. In the following year 1 shilling was ‘given the herd when his child was almost burnt to death’, and so there was perhaps a fire in the house. It is unclear when the first Herd was appointed. Those filling the appointment included: William Palmer (recorded in 1707); Adam Hobkirk (recorded in 1713); Walter Scott ‘Crooked Wat’ (early 18th C.); Mungo Armstrong (c.1720–c.44); James Armstrong (recorded in 1740); Robert Hobkirk (c.1752–c.57); James Wilson (late 18th C.); William Elliot (from at least 1800); Andrew Ormiston (until 1853); and James Cairns (from about 1853) – ‘About the year seventeen hundred and ten, Walter Scot was Town Herd of Hawick’ [C&L], ‘...the pond was scythed for thatch every year in the auld days be the toon herd whae bade at St. Leonards ...’ [IWL] (also ‘Toon Hird’).

the Toon Hoose (thu-toon-hoos) n. name sometimes used for Hawick’s previous Town Hall, also sometimes called the ‘Council House’. It was built around 1781 on the site of the old Tolbooth, and was an unpretentious building with a tall steeple and an outside staircase. It had a thatched roof and was ‘of a homely description, the rafters, visible from beneath, giving it the appearance of a common barn’. It incorporated a bell the Toon Litter (thu-toon-li'-ur) n. carrier for bodies, hired out by the town, acting effectively as a hearse. It is referred to in 1722, when the charge was half a crown for those outside the Burgh or those not paying 'stent nor lott'. It is also mentioned in the Treasurer's Book in 1732. It is unclear when this stopped being used, or what form this took, but it was probably little more than a large wheel-barrow.

(at a cost of £24, 14s.), to complement the one at St. Mary's in order to call the curfew. Part of it was rented out for dancing lessons, singing lessons and lectures in the late part of the 18th century. One of the 6 wells fed from the Sclider Springs stood beside it from 1797. In one of the last vestiges of feudalism the weight house on the ground floor was owned by a tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch ('tacksman of his Grace's customs'); the Duke contributed £100 to the cost of the building, plus half the cost of paving the streets at the time. There were considerable additions to the steeple in 1806 and a clock was inserted in 1809. The top of the steeple also held a weather cock. The door in the steeple at the first floor level, with its projecting ledge, was known as the 'Oyes door' and was used for the reading of proclamations. The ground floor on the Cross Wynd side had open arches, which were closed at night with iron gates. This was the location for meal and butter markets. The Council Chambers were upstairs. There is a single surviving photograph from about 1880. The building was demolished in 1884 to make way for the new Town Hall.

Toon-o-Rule (toon-ō-rool) n. Town-o-Rule, a farm north of Bonchester Bridge, formerly a significant settlement in the area, once one of the major estates of Hobkirk Parish, and later being a large part of the barony of Feu-Rule. There were houses along the left side of the syke there (according to Tancred), but there are is now no sign of where exactly they were. It has also been suggested (by Jeffreys) that the original parish church of Hobkirk was situated here. In 1535 there is a record of 'Thome Turnbull et Andree alias David Turnbull' who were tenants there. This could be the 'towne in Tevedall cauldy Rowlle' burned by John Musgrave's men in 1542. The 'town' was burned again during the English invasion of 1545. The lands are described in 1562 as lying between the Mains of Hallrule and Plewlandhill on the east and those of Hawthornside and Hoilhouse on the west. It is probably where Jock Tait 'in the toun of Halroule' was recorded in 1586/7. 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters' obtained a charter of the lands in 1632. Walter Amos and Robert Paterson were there in 1739. William Elliot was tenant in the mid-18th century. Gideon Wilson was herd there in 1751. Thomas Rule was there in 1788. In 1805 it was sold off by Sir William Elliott to John Wilson of Hallrule, and at that time was also referred to as being the east part of 'Over or Outer Halrule'. William Mabon was farmer in the 1860s. There was also once a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The cottage on the north side of the farm was known as 'North Town-o'-Rule', referred to by locals as 'Drythropple', and renamed 'Heathfield' for a while. An old well there (built in circular form) was called 'Dobie' or 'Dubbie', and probably corresponds to the well marked to the north of the farm buildings on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The residents there used to use the Sun's reflection off 'Cloon Craig' on Ruberslaw to tell the approximate time of day. An ancient oval-shaped earthwork once stood close to the farmhouse, but was largely obliterated by agricultural improvements before the mid-19th century. A prehistoric stone axe-head was found in one of the outfields in the 19th century (formerly spelled 'Toun o' Roull' and variants; the name appears in the records of Jedburgh Abbey; it is 'villa de Rowle' in 1535, 'Toun of Roull' in 1694 and 'Toun of rule' in 1739; it appears as 'Tou of Roull' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Toon-o-Rule Burn (toon-ō-rool-burn) n. Town-o'-Rule Burn, stream, running to the north-west of Weensmuir and Heathfield farms, and joining the Hallrule Burn.

Toon Piper (toon-pī-pur) n. official player of the pipes, probably the bagpipes. However, in earlier documents it is unclear precisely what kind of musical instrument is meant, with perhaps the Border pipes being used at some times and it is also possible the word 'piper' was also synonymous with 'fifer' in earlier times. Pipers are mentioned in connection with Hawick in the early 17th century, e.g. John Tait and John Laing were both 'pyper' in 1627. Adam Moffat was rebuked by Ashkirk Parish in 1638 for 'pyiping at bridals' and was probably associated with Hawick or one of the other neighbouring towns. William Turnbull was appointed as Hawick's piper in 1674. Thomas Beattie is recorded as piper in 1693/4. In 1700 the town's piper was fined for playing through the town after the fair; it is recorded that he played the 'great pipe', which is unambiguously the Highland-style bagpipes. In 1703

the town's 'officers, pyper, and drummers' were to be paid for 'coatts att the Common rydeing in anno 1702' and were also allowed 'to have coatts att Common-Ryding this year, 1703, as formerly; this makes it clear that the piper and drummer (or drummers) were separate from the Burgh Officers at that time. James Oliver, 'Jafra the Piper', is mentioned several times in the Parish records of the 1710s (in connection with misbehaviour!). A man called 'Fouller' was paid to be piper in 1721; he was Robert Fowler, piper in about 1721–32. John 'Meader' (probably the same as Mather) was perhaps piper 1732–41. William Brown is recorded as Town Piper in 1745 and Walter Ballantyne in the 1770s, the last man whose name we know. Hawick had a town piper (along with a drummer and bellman, although they may well have shared duties) for probably a couple of centuries until the late 1700s, when he was replaced by a fifer (first mentioned in 1797). In 1803 the Council resolved 'that the piper shall not be any longer continued', and that was the last official mention. One of the last pipers may have been John Douglas, who is recorded as 'late piper Hawick' when his daughter died in 1810; however, there is a reference to him playing the riders back into town in Balbirnie's version of 'Teribus'. John Halliday wrote a poem 'Davie's Dead', published in 1847, which appears to be about a piper. The Common Riding Procession of 1894 is reported to have been led by the brass band, the drums and fifes 'and the pipers'. 'Hawick Pipe Band' traces its roots to 1937 – 'The town's piper, for his nicht revelling, on going on the fair nicht playing with the great pipe thro the haill toun, is fined £100 Scots' [BR1700], '... the pyper is only allowed four pounds Scotts to buy him ane coatt' [BR1713].

Toonrig (toon-rig) n. former fortified house on the Hermitage Water, on the north bank of the valley just east of Gorrenberry (marked on Gordon's c. 1650 map as 'Tounrig' and on Blaeu's 1654 map and Visscher's 1689 map as 'Tounric').

toonsfolk (toonz-fōk) n., pl. townsfolk, townspeople – 'No' sae lang syne a guid wheen o' the toonsfolk didna' hesitate tae condemn the annual festival wi' a' the invectives they could command' [BW1939], '... hei confirmed the toonsfolks' right ti yaise the Common land and gave thum ... 'land for tillage peats and pasture' [IWL].

the Toon's Purse (thū-toonz-purs) n. former prize race at the Common Riding. It was the opening event of the 1834–36 Friday Races.

the Toon Steel-yaird (thū-toon-steel-yārd) n. former steel-yard in Hawick, located on the High Street. It is recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory, when James Kennedy was 'collector'.

the Toon Subscription Purse (thū-toon-sub-skrip-shin-purs) n. race run at the Common Riding in at least the 1840s to 1860s. It took place on the Friday on the Moor in many years, but in some years there was a race with this title on both days. Presumably the prize money was raised by subscription in Hawick.

the Toon Treasurer (thū-toon-tre-shoo-rur) n. former position on the Council, charged with gathering the money from Burgesses and others. The first record of the election of a person to this office is in 1655. The position was later named Burgh Chamberlain. The Treasurer kept records of the financial transactions of the Burgh, which provide valuable information about what went on in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries. In 1739 the amounts started to be written in sterling rather than in Scots money. The Treasurer was elected annually on the same day as the Bailies, i.e. the 2nd Friday in October. Extracts from the Town Treasurer's books in the period 1721–1805 are given in James Wilson's 'Hawick and its Old Memories' (1858). People who have held the office include: John Scott, around 1734; William Scott, at least 1763–69; William Wilson, early 1800s; Walter Wilson, early 1800s; James Scott, early 1800s; James Oliver, 1820s; James D. Kenney, mid-1800s; John Murray, 1880s; A.S. Lawson, late 1800s; Adam Laing, early 1900s; George Gass, early 1900s.

toonty (too'-ee, toon'-ee, toon-tee) n. twenty – 'if ee're no in bed be the time A coont ti toonty ...', 'Look ... Owre yonder, D'ye see him? Teh, toonty pund, I'm shair. Fish rinnin, fish rinnin Enough and to spare!' [DH], '... an oot o' the toonty-fower entered the wunner was Dick Wricht threh Langtoon' [BW1974], 'Last night A hed a dream, And wi' this A end ma ditty, It was toonty year frae now, Hawick hed been renamed Safe-way City' [IWL], 'Teribus is an amazing piece o wurk, toonty fower versus o pure poetical genius ...' [IHS] (cf. the rarer toanty).

the Toonty-Five Year Cornet

toor (toor) n. a tower – ‘Ther was an certain houshaulder ... bigget ane touer, an’ let it out til husbanmen ...’ [HSR], ‘Grey are the stanes o’ Drumlanrig’s toor o’ the Border’ [IWS], v. to tower – ‘There, at the yeh hand, tooered the threeples Eeldons ...’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘toorer’, ‘toore’, ‘touer’ and ‘tour’).

the Toor (thu-toor) n. popular name for Drumlanrig’s Toor, for centuries the most imposing building and de facto geographical centre of Hawick. The word is also used generally for this area of Hawick (also spelled ‘Too’er’ etc.).

Toor Brig (toor-brig) n. occasional name used for the Drumlanrig Bridge over the Slitrig near the Tower Knowe.

the Toor Burn (thu-toor-burn) n. stream that runs from above Spittal Tower to join the Rule Water at Spittal-on-Rule.

the Toor Close (thu-toor-klōs) n. former name for a passageway next to Drumlanrig’s Tower, giving access to the area behind. In 1767 it is said that ‘trees, packs of wool, couples, joists, and household furniture’ were all deposited there by the flood. The close is wide enough to allow the cavalcade to emerge at the Common Riding, and the wall contains the Cornets’ Board.

Toordykeside see Toor Dykeside

Toor Dykeside (toor-dīk-sīd, tow-ur-dīk-sīd) n. Tower Dykeside, short street linking Slitrig Crescent with the Tower Knowe. The name derives from the wall which once encircled the Tower on the south side. It is a relatively new street, since the Tower is believed to have sloped down to the Slitrig perhaps as recently as the 18th century. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 are all parts of the former Tower Hotel, which is grade B listed. The wall along by the Slitrig was mostly swept away in the flood of 1846 – ‘And though the matin bells have not yet rung Their usual peal unto the world wide, Alert with joyous life both old and young Their steps are wending to the Tower Dykeside’ [JCG] (sometimes ‘the’ Tower Dykeside, occasionally one word, and also formerly ‘Toor-gate-side’; it is ‘Tower Dyke side’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Toorgateside (toor-gā'-sīd) n. former name for Tower Dykeside. Before the wall was built

the Toor Hotel (thu-toor-hō-tel) n. Drumlanrig’s Tower, during the days it was used as a hotel, also known as ‘the Tower Inn’. This phase of the building’s history started in 1773, and continued until 1981. The landlords used to farm fields at the Wellogate, with an onstead in Bourtree Place (which became the Con Club site). The ballroom inside was used for dances, theatrical performances and other social functions in the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

the Toor Inn (thu-toor-in) n. usual name for the Toor Hotel in the 18th and early 19th centuries. The first landlord was Michael Stevenson, from 1773, followed by Robert Armstrong for about a decade. Thomas Scott was a ploughman employed by the Inn in 1799. William Brown (‘Billy’, d.1839) was landlord in the early part of the 19th century, then John Fenwick (with William Crozier as long time hostler) and later Frank Fenwick. The landlord farmed some land up the Wellogate and had some space for stabling where the Con Club was later built. A coachhouse for the inn stood where the Exchange Buildings were built in the 1860s. Wordsworth stayed here in 1803 and the first Burns supper in Hawick was held here in 1815. In the 1830s, being the Town’s polling station, it was the focus of troubles during several elections.

the Toor Knowe (thu-toor-now) n. area in front of Drumlanrig’s Tower, so-called because it was a few feet above street level into the 19th century. It would have seemed higher relative to the surroundings before all the houses were built, and it must have once had the mill lade crossing its nothern side, isolating it from the rest of the Town. It has been used as a street address since the late 19th century. It was formerly a small green hill, is said to have once had the ‘deuil tree’ upon it, and still had a few trees in the late 18th century. In the 18th century there were 2 small clay-built houses to the west of the river bank, the proprietors of which owned the Knowe itself. There was also formerly a row of single-storey houses extending for about 50 yards at the eastern end, which split the High Street in half at this point (running from roughly opposite 2 Tower Knowe to a point in line with 18 High Street). For a century from about 1760 it held the daily spectacle of arrivals and departures of the stage-coaches passing through the town. It was also where the Town Herd used to collect the cattle. It was formerly used as a marketplace and for annual hiring fairs, as well as being where bonfires would be lit to mark special occasions. No. 7 was formerly known as ‘Kedie’s Buildin’, but rebuilt by James Harkness, with a cantilevered section sticking out over the Slitrig. Essentially the entire street is composed of grade C listed buildings – ‘I wish tae guidness ee wad get alang the road tae the Too’r Knowe and no bother mei wi’ eer blethers’ [JEDM].

the Toor Knowe Brig (thu-toor-now-brig) n. Tower Knowe Bridge, another name used for Drumlanrig Brig.

Toor Mill (toor-mil) n. Tower Mill, built over the Slitrig approximately where the ‘Auld Brig’ once stood. It was constructed on the site of an earlier mill by William Elliot & Sons in 1852. The building is 3½ stories in whinstone with sandstone dressings, built over a flat-arched bridge, and is currently listed Category A. The magnificent arch over the river makes its design quite unique. It was water-powered originally, and provided the first electric lighting in the town (conveyed all the way to the house of Col. William Scott Elliot at Teviot Lodge). The water wheel still exists in the basement, and is the largest of its kind in Scotland. When the water was low it was supplemented by a steam engine, installed in 1882. At its height the workforce of the factory was 660. In the late 19th and early 20th centuries it operated as a carding and spinning mill, run by Col. Walter Elliot and then his son, Col. William Scott Elliot. Between the wars it was switched to hosiery production. During WWII the building was used as a grain and sugar store and then for several decades as a warehouse for Murray Brothers mail-order knitwear firm. The building fell into disrepair and ownership was transferred to the Scottish Historic Buildings Trust in 1995. There was strong disagreement about whether to demolish or renovate the building, but it was saved by the Hawick Townscape Heritage Initiative in 1998. With funding from the European Union rural development funding, Scottish Borders Council and the Scottish Arts Council, it was refurbished to accommodate visitor facilities and commercial space, as part of the Heart of Hawick initiative. The architects for the conversion were Gray, Marshall & Associates. The ‘Bean Scene’ opened in 2007, with a glassed section overlooking the Slitrig, and the old water wheel visible underneath. The rest of the building includes a small cinema and creative workspace (also sometimes called ‘Toor Knowe Mill’ or ‘Elliot’s Mill’).

Toor Mill Dam (toor-mil-dam) n. Tower Mill Dam, name sometimes used for one of two short mill lades in the centre of Hawick. One fed Tower Mill from the Slitrig, with the cauld being at the foot of Slitrig Crescent. The other was effectively an extension of the Back Dam, running under the Tower Knowe to power the original Hawick Mill on the Mill Port.

toosle (too-sul) v. to tousle – ‘They’ve crush’d an’ spoilt her brand new cap, Her bonnet’s a bamboozl’d, As flat as ony rattan trap, An’ a’ her ringlets toozl’d’ [JoHa] (also written ‘toozle’).

toot see tout

toozy see tousie

top (top) n., arch. a tuft of hair, fowl’s crest, upper bushy part of certain plants (cf. tap).

top-lookin (top-loo-kin) adj., arch. stalwart, erect in bearing (noted by E.C. Smith).

toppit (to-pee, -pi) adj. topped – ‘There was the Eildons and then Ruberslaw and the roond toppit Minto Hills ...’ [JEDM].

the Top Tent (thu-top-ten) n. large beer tent near the top of the hill at the Mair, distinguished from ‘the Bottom Tent’. In recent years there have been live bands playing there in the late afternoon and evening of the Saturday.

torfle (tor-ful) v., arch. to come to grief, perish – ‘I’se rād he’ll toorfel’ [GW], to toss about, tumble, dishevel, tousle – ‘Their ringlets fluttered round their lily necks, As if they had, by the effects, Been torfellet wi’ the weather’ [HSR], (also ‘toorfle’ in Liddesdale; see also torfelt).

torfelt (tor-fel) pp., arch. tossed about, tumbled, tousled – ‘But the schip was now in the middle o’ the se, torfellet wi’ waves’ [HSR], ‘... I am torfellet up an’ down as the locust’ [HSR], ‘... hair aa torfellet an toozellt’ [ECS].

tormentit (tor-men-tee', -ti') pp., adj. tormented – ‘...Tormentit ticht wi’ steeks an’ stringin’, Syne jagged wi’ preens!’ [DH].

Toronto (to-ron-tō) n. largest city in Canada, in the province of Ontario. Many exiled Teries have settled in the area. In 1921 a number of them gathered at the home of James H. Ross and organised a Common Riding celebration of their own. It took place on 1st July (Canada Day) in High Park, with W. Matherston (who had lost a leg at Flanders) as Cornet and C. Ingles and W. Corbett as Right- and Left-Hand men, respectively. There was a replica flag, which was bussed, pipe music, a ‘snuffin’’, Hawick songs, (non-alcoholic) beverages, races, a speech by Alex Craighead (from Galashiels), and all in over 30°C temperatures. Matthew Leydon probably served as Cornet in 1925. In 1926 the Cornet at High Park was Telfer Anderson Huggan, and the replica 1514 flag was bussed by Edith Whillans. In 1927 the Cornet was James Miller and the Lass was Annie Steele.

Torsonce (tor-sins) n. area on the Gala Water to the south of Stow, for long an important seat of the Pringle family. The last Clan Chief was John Hoppringle of that Ilk and Torsonce, who died in 1737. The mansion is built on the foundations of the older peel. Nearby are the ancient ‘Our Lady’s Well’ as well as the remains of a chapel.

Torthorwald (tor-thur-wald) n. Adam (15th C.) received 10 shillings in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He may have been a local man.

Torwoodlee (tor-wood-lee) n. Georgian house north-west of Galashiels, built near to some older ruins, which were home to the Pringles. The tower dates from 1601 and replaces the one that was sacked in 1568. This was an attack by John Elliot of Copshaw and perhaps as many as 300 other Elliots, Armstrongs, Beatties and Grahams, when the master of the house (George Pringle) was murdered and a huge amount of loot stolen, including silverware and 17 horses. In the latter part of the 15th century the lease of the farm was granted to the Ranger of Tweed Ward for his fee. It was supposedly home of the Pringle who married Mary Scott in the ballad of that name. The house was used as a temporary refuge in 1681, by Covenanters the Earl of Argyll and John Scott (ousted minister of Hawick) on their escape from imprisonment. There are efforts underway to stabilize the crumbling structure. There is a golf course on the estate. A bridge nearby was built in 1808 and the modern house in 1783. The remains of Torwoodlee Broch (not to be confused with Torwood Broch, near Falkirk), perhaps 2,000 years old, is also nearby; it is similar to the better preserved one at Edin’s Hall – ‘The Leader, rolling to the Tweed, Resounds the en-senzie; They roused the deer from Caddenhead, To distant Torwoodlee’ [SWS] (it is ‘Torwartlee’ in 1456 and ‘Torvodle’ in 1552; it is ‘Torwoidlie’ in 1607, and marked ‘Torwoodlie’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 and ‘Torrid Lee’ on Roy’s c.1750 map).

Tory Tam (tō-ree-tawm) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Wicked Tammy and Tidy Mars, The Sap, Paul Laidlaw and Tory Tam; Tip-ma-Daisy hame frae the wars, Johnny Macmannus and Neddy Lamb’ [HI] (presumably someone called Thomas who was a Conservative supporter).

totch (toch) v., arch. to move with short quick steps – ‘To totch, to move with short steps, and somewhat quickly; as ‘a totchin’ poney’, Roxb. [JoJ], n., arch. a sudden jerk.

the tother (thū-to-, tu-thur) n., arch. the other, especially in the phrase ‘neither the tane nor the tother’ – ‘...And bids the tother theme to try, While th she fans the flame’ [JoHa], ‘An’ the cruke aye jangles at hir tayle As she gi’es the tother spang’ [WiSp], ‘...an’, as for the tother – the whusky – aw darsa, aw gat ae gless at pairtin’ ...’ [BCM1880], ‘...An A’d geet mair guid yeh way as the tother, atweel’ [ECS], ‘...an on the tother hand – the richt – the road wunds aboot the Green’ [ECS], ‘If you couldna swally the tother half, Though ye’d hed the denner at yin ...’ [DH], ‘And aa hed a cheese-supper dream the tother nicht That some day we’ll feenish wi a Regional Common Riding ...’ [DH] (also written ‘the tuther’; a variant of tither and cf. the tane).

the Trades (thu-trādz) n. Hawick Trades, a 'junior' rugby team, playing in the Borders District League. It was formed in 1946, with first President Jimmy Murray, other founding members being Tom Wright and Andrew Middlemas, and with Jock Imrie and Tom Reid being long-time club stalwarts. Minute books and accounts exist from 1946. The club grew out of efforts in the War years to keep rugby going, with teams from the B.B.'s, local mills, High School and the 'Combined Trades'. After the War this latter team joined the South District League and Border Junior League as 'Hawick Trades'. The team used to change in the old Baths, and later established clubrooms behind the Waverley Bar. They joined the Linden in 1963 in renting the facilities at the Volunteer Park. The team has had an annual tradition of playing Welsh club Glynneath since 1956. They were also the first local junior team to tour abroad, at Pesaro in Italy. They play in sky blue tops with white shorts and navy socks. A history, 'The First Fifty', was published in 1995.

Tranter (tran-tur) n. Nigel (1909–2000) writer, born in Glasgow and educated in Edinburgh. He wrote over 90 Scottish historical novels, and also the 5 volume study 'The Fortified House in Scotland'. His 'Cheviot Chase' (1953), set in the 1930s and 40s, is about a modern enmity between the towns of Hawick and Hexham caused by the Hornshole events, 'Balefire' (1958) is set in the Borders right after Flodden, while 'Portrait of the Border Country' is a useful work of non-fiction. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1957 and was made an honorary life member of the Hawick Archæological Society after giving a talk in 1986.

Trantfile (trawn'-fee??) n. former name for lands in Ewesdale, recorded in a 1525 'letter of reversion' between Simon Armstrong and George, Lord Home. The name occurs in a list between Unthank and Fiddleton, although the precise location is unknown (the origin may be related to that of 'Tranty-fit' etc.).

trantie (trawn-tee) n., arch. a person who is intelligent above his or her station (once a common term, cf. the Tranties, Tranty-fit, and possibly Tibbie Tantry; origin uncertain, but perhaps related to Middle English 'trant', a trick, or the provincial 'tranter', a pedlar; the word seems to be peculiarly local, but was already obsolete by the 1850s).

the Tranties (thū-trawn-tees) n., pl., arch. popular name for two sisters from Hawick who died about 1814 (according to James Wilson), Marjory and Isobel Hume. For about 30 years they kept a lodging house for beggars, near to the Auld Brig. They were said to be 'rather more intelligent than their neighbours in a similar humble condition of life'. They are also mentioned in Agnes Douglas' prize poem about the 'Alud Brig' – 'Even in the Tranties, wi' their beggars, The spoilers had found fearfu' fleggars' [AD].

Tranty-fit (trawn-tee-fi) n. Tranty-foot, supposedly a witch, sister of 'Speed-o'-foot' who lived at Goldielands. It may also have been a name for one of the two towers of Goldielands – '...The wonder-working witches Tranty-foot and Speed-o'-foot, the occupants of Goldilands Peel' [RW] (probably related to trantie, applied to someone who was so clever as to be suspected of withcraft).

Traquair (tru-kwār) n. house south of Innerleithen, in a secluded valley of the Quair Water. It is reputed to be the oldest home in Scotland, being lived in continuously since 1107. It is associated with several Scottish Kings of the 12th and 13th centuries, as well as with the Stuarts and the Jacobite cause. Prince Charlie was entertained there by the 7th Earl in 1745. The 'Bear Gates' (or 'steekit yetts') were reputedly closed at that time, never to be reopened until a Stuart sits again on the throne (although there are other stories). Mary Queen of Scots also stayed here in 1566. The present structure is probably a 15th century core with alterations through to the 18th century. It is owned by the Maxwell-Stuarts, and now open to the public. The brewery in one of the wings of the house was built around 1700, although brewing on the site is even older. Brewing ended there in the late 19th century, but was restarted in 1965 (the first record of the name is 'Treverquyrd' about 1124; it is 'Tracquhair' in 1507/8, 'Tracquar' in 1527, 'Trocquair' in 1564/5 and 'Trakwair' in 1574; the first element may be the old p-Celtic 'tref' for 'farm on the Quair').

Trevelyan (tre-vel-yin) n. Sir George Otto (1838–1928) historian and Liberal M.P. for the Hawick (or Border) Burghs 1868–86. He was the first such M.P. in 1868, winning subsequent elections in 1869, 1874, 1880, 1882, 1885 and 1886 (three of which were bye-elections on account of his appointment to senior government posts). Later in 1886 he lost to A.L. Brown by only 30 votes, the election campaign being focussed on the issue of Home Rule. By this time he was a Unionist, rather than a Liberal. There are existing letters from him regarding subscriptions to Selkirk Races in 1872 and 1877. He held appointments as Secretary to the Admiralty, Chief Secretary for Ireland and also Scottish Secretary. He is perhaps best known as biographer of his uncle Lord Thomas Macaulay, and for his more famous sons George and Charles. Trevelyan Terrace is named after him.

Trevelyan Terrace (tre-vil-yin-te-ris) n. street in the West-end, originally built in 1879, but demolished and rebuilt in 1974–76. It was named after Sir George Trevelyan. The first houses were built there by joiners Riddle & Graham and Eckford the builder.

trimmle (tri-mul) v., arch. to tremble – ‘Thou hest mæde the yirth til trimmel; thou hest brokin it ...’ [HSR], ‘Feærfuniss an’ trimmlin’ ar cum apon me, an’ horrar heth ower-layde me’ [HSR], ‘‘My lease o’ life’, quo trim’lin’ Dan, ‘Is surely no run dune, Juist gies anither year or twa Or aw’m tane abune the mune’’ [AO] (also written ‘trimmel’; cf. tremmle and trimmelt).

Trimontium (tri-mon-tee-um) n. Roman name for the Eildons, where there was a substantial fort, occupied from the late 1st through 2nd centuries. It was one of the most important sites on the northern frontier of the Roman Empire in those times, and guarded an important crossing of the Tweed. It was probably built around the year 80 and abandoned around the year 200 and not rediscovered until the building of the railway line in 1860. The fort itself covered about 15 acres, with an area of as much as 200 acres occupied. At one time it probably held about 1500 men from the 20th Legion ‘Valeria Victrix’ (Valiant and Victorious), with perhaps 1500 civilians living outside the fort. Many of the items recovered in the excavations are in the National Museums of Scotland, but some are in the Trimontium Museum at Newstead. The Trimontium Stone, a granite monument, was erected by the Edinburgh Border Counties Association in 1928.

the Trim Track (thu-trim-trawk) n. fitness course established in Wilton Lodge Park in 1978, made possible by a grant from the Silver Jubilee Fund.

Trinity (tri-ni'-ee) n. name for the area between the Bourtrees and Weensland, being called ‘the Trinity Lands’ from early times. These lands were part of the endowment of the Hospital Church of Soutra in the 14th and 15th centuries. Soutra was dedicated to the Holy Trinity and also known as ‘Trinity Hospital’, with a well there, also dedicated to the Holy Trinity, being known as the ‘Tarnity Well’. This hospital was annexed in 1462 to Trinity College Church and Hospital, Edinburgh, which had been founded by Mary of Gueldres (widow of James II); the church lay at the foot of Calton Hill, and was demolished in 1848 because of railway development. The Hawick lands appear to have been among those owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. They gave their name to Trinity Street and Trinity School, as well as later (indirectly) to St. Ninian’s Road. The naming of the new Trinity Church (not in the old Trinity area) has somewhat confused the geography.

the Trinity Bar (thu-tri-ni'-ee-bawr) n. public house at 16 Duke Street.

Trinity Gairdens (tri-ni'-ee-gård-inz) n. Trinity Gardens, public gardens below Trinity Church, near the Horse. It is a popular hang-out spot for youngsters. The gardens were renovated and a new band-stand built in 1999. The land was once known as the Wheathole, and was later the site of the East Bank Kirk – ‘Doon at the Horse, on a sunny day Sittin’ on a Trinity sate Or lookin’ up at Wulton Kirk Man it’s hard tae bate’ [AY].

Trinity Haugh (tri-ni'-ee-hawch, -hawf) n. former name used for flat area by the river associated with the ‘Trinity lands’. This land was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch and was drained and feued in 1875.

Trinity Kilnhill (tri-ni'-ee-kiln-hil) n. former name for an area south of Weensland Road, roughly oposite Trinity steps, and also known as ‘Kilnhill’.

Trinity Kirk (tri-ni'-ee-kirk) n. Trinity Church, off Brougham Place. It was built in 1843 to replace the old East Bank United Free Church meeting house, which stood lower down. In 1958 the three congregations of St. John’s, St. Andrew’s and East Bank joined together to become Trinity, when East Bank was renamed and the other two closed. The congregation was linked with Cavers and Kirkton in 2004. The building is set within its own grounds and has a session house and vestry at the south-west corner. The design is relatively plain and the architect is unknown (sometimes wrongly attributed to William Burn). It was extended to form a T-plan in 1872 and redecorated by William Jardine in 1892, with halls added in 1896. A pulpit and organ case, designed by Alexander Inglis, was added in the early years of the 20th century. The organ was installed in 1911, boasting 1,182 pipes, built by James Jepson Binns of Bramley Organ Works in Leeds. The church, session house, vestry and halls are grade C listed building. A roll of the ministers includes: Dennis Leadbeater 1960s; Lindsay Thomson 1972–2008 (the name comes from the 3 churches, and is unrelated to the Trinitylands to the east).

Trinitylands (tri-ni'-ee-lawndz) n. older name for the Trinity area of Hawick, dating back probably to the 14th century, and a connection with Soutra, also known as the 'Trinity Hospital'. The same lands were also known as the 'Soutrallands', since they were originally part of the endowment of Soutra, although the reason for this is not known. The boundaries and full extent of the lands are also unclear. In 1472 there was a court action brought by Sir Edward Bonkle, Provost of Trinity Collegiate Church, against Thomas Blair, for rent on the lands. They were confirmed to Trinity Collegiate Church by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1507. They are described (as 'Soltracraft') in a 1557 charter, as lying between 'Ladyland' to the east, the lands of the town of Hawick to the west, the highway to the south and the lands of West Mains to the north. In 1565/6 they were again leased to William Scott 'in Hawik' and his son and heir Robert; they are there described as lying between Ladyland, lands pertaining to the town of Hawick, and the West Mains. At least some of the lands were gained by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, since the inventory drawn up after his death in 1578 states that he 'conquist the Sowtre landis in Hawik'. In 1627 it was a 'three merk land called Trinity land' estimated as 'paying presentlie 20 bolls' and possessed by the Lord of Buccleuch and Walter Gledstains of Dod. In 1628 Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch complained that several Hawick men had cut down trees on 'his lands and barony of Branxholme and Trinitie lands of Hawick'. In 1692 the lands were leased by the Duchess of Buccleuch to Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. In 1696, it is included in a list of lands owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh; this could refer to part of the lands, perhaps the same as 'Ladyland', which was owned by the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in 1627. In 1748 a small part lying on the Wilton side of the Teviot was exchanged with the minister of Wilton for a part of his lands which the Duke wanted for carrying water to Burnfoot Mill. The name was still used as late as 1907 in plans

Trinity Mills (tri-ni'-ee-milz) n. main factory of Hawick Hosiery Company on Earl and Duke Streets (and not Trinity Street, as the name might suggest), now the home of Hawick Cashmere Company, or 'Hawico'. It was built in at least 1888, when it was occupied by Renwick & Raeburn, then the Raeburn brothers 1889–97. It was occupied by Messrs. F. Knox Cowie & Co. 1906, but cthath ollapsed after about a year. Hawick Hosiery Company moved in in 1911 and was rebranded as Hawick Cashmere in 1990.

Trinity Schuil (tri-ni'-ee-skil) n. Trinity Primary School, previously situated near the top of the steps on the south side of Weensland Road, to the east of the entrance to the Miller's Knowes. It was built in 1876, and apparently originally called 'St. Mary's', but changed its name when the new St. Mary's School was built at the top of Brougham Place. It took the older pupils from St. Mary's Parish School and another school which formerly existed in Weensland. The school moved to its present location in 1935/36, the architects for the new building being Reid & Forbes of Edinburgh. It was constructed with a raised ground floor to protect against flooding. The former building was demolished and council houses built on the site in 1955. School Inspectors' Reports for 1915–53 are in the National Archive and log books for 1873–1906 in the Borders Archive. William Murray was first Headmaster, from 1876 and Bill Scrimgeour from 1950.

Trinity Steps (tri-ni'-ee-steps) n. Trinity Steps, unofficial name for steps leading from Weensland Road down to the bottom of Trinity Street. There are 56 steps.

Trinity Street (tri-ni'-ee-stree) n. street running off Weensland Road, named after the Trinitylands, the former name for the area, relating to lands once owned by the church at Soutra. The main houses were built in 1885. It has long had a hotel at the top, and the primary school is at the bottom. At the corner with Earl Street there was Lizzie Fordyce's grocer's shop in the earlier part of the 20th century, becoming J. Wood's.

Trinity Thistle (tri-ni'-ee-thi-sul) n. Trinity Thistle Football Club, a rugby club from the Trinity area, existing before WWI. It may also have been referred to as 'Trinity Union'.

trinkle (tring-kul) v., arch. to trickle – 'Yill Waeter ... trinklin ti its treist wui Teiot' [ECS].

trinnle (tri-nul) v. to trundle, roll, spin, waddle, trickle – '... trinnlin alang owre its staney chennel' [ECS], 'Yill Waeter, trinnlin alang owre its staney chennel' [ECS], 'The ba' trinnl't inti the cundy' [GW], '... Crying 'Shairly it must be time, now, To trinnle my dydie egg!' [DH], 'So sklim' high heaven, trinnle throw hell ...' [DH], 'At Easter A've trinnled dydie eggs ...' [IWL], n. a gentle stream, the noise made by trickling water – 'The trinnle o' pule and stream ... the lost lease-haud o' youth ...' [DH] (cf. trunnle).

trinnly (trin-lee) adj., arch. suitable for rolling, small and roundish – 'Trinnly bits o' coal' [GW].

tripe (trīp) n. cow innards, traditionally served when there's an 'R' in the month (because it went off in summer). It can be boiled with onion and other ingredients, fried, or served in a white sauce. There were formerly several well known purveyors of tripe in town, including Jen McVitie, Mag Burns and Teenie Balmer.

trippit (tri-pee', -pi') pp. tripped – 'A neater messin ne'er was tippet, Nor on a parlour carpet trippet' [JR], 'But in her endeavour she trippit an' fell, An' swarf'd clean awa – as the neebors can tell' [BM1901], '... But hei trippit in the straw As a wheelin' maul came roond like a herd o' kye' [DH].

Trip ti Hawick Jig (trip-ti-hlk-jig) n. composition by Scottish accordion maestro Jimmy Shand, in 6/8 time.

trock (trok) v., arch., poet. to barter, peddle, deal with – 'Trocked, whiles, wi' smuggled brandy – Unless I dae him wrang' [DH], 'Now Wattie neither begs nor buys, Nor steals, nor sells, nor does he trock ...' [WP], 'Whut'rope and Sundhope They ken the soond weel; It's nae news to thaim That he troks wi the deil' [DH], n., poet. a bargain, trade, deal – '... And the feck o' the trock they took away, Ye wadna hae cairried hame' [WL] (also written 'trok'; see also truck).

trodge (trōj) v., arch. to trudge – '... But happy gae lucky, we'll trodge on our way' [HSR], 'A was telld that if A was for a richt denner A wad need ti trodge on ti Jethart' [ECS].

troke (trōk) v., arch. to trade, barter – '... Troked whiles wi' smuggled brandy' [??], n. truck, trade, dealings – '... An' hides ilk wee bit secret troke, An' sma' transgression' [JR] (cf. truck).

tron (trōn) n., arch. a system of weights, officially abolished in 1618, but in use into the early 19th century, with the tron pound varying between 21 and 28 ounces avoirdupois – 'Item, that ilk merchand that buys cuntrie geir with trone wecht, sall sell it again in small with the lyik wecht ...' [BR1640], a standard of weight – '... and from thence bring home to the toune ane Holland brasen trone, to be ane true and just standard for the trial of their weights amongst themselves' [BR1687].

Trone (trōn) n. probable name for lands within Crook in the Parish of Cavers. It appears to be recorded in a document of 1581 as 'horreum vulgo nuncupat trone et troneland', i.e. a barn commonly called Trone and Troneland. It was in the north part of Crook (note it is possible that this is a scribal error for 'Trows').

Troneyhill (trō-nee-hil) n. small hill between Belses and Barnhills, with a farmstead on it. Thomas Turnbull was farmer there in 1536. It may be the 'Tronnyhill' listed among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford's men in 1545, but if so is incorrectly listed under Rule Water. Watt and Dand Turnbull from there are recorded in 1576. David Turnbull of 'the Cronyhill' was probably from there when he was declared a rebel in 1581. It was among the lands for which the Bennets and then Ogilvies of Chesters were superiors. In 1788 it was listed as being part of the estate of Chesters. Robert Turnbull was living there in 1801 (it is 'the Tronyhill' in 1536, 'Trannehyll' in 1548/9 and 'Tronyhill' in 1576; it is marked on Pont's 1590s manuscript map as 'Tronehill'; the origin may be the Celtic for 'house with ash trees').

troosers (troo-zurz) n. trousers – 'Forfochen at the seams As a gangrel's troosers' [DH], '... they taen on onybody in a per o troosers' [IWL], '... a wumin can rin fer faster wae ir skirt up than a man can wae iz troosers doon' [MB].

troot (troo', troot) n. trout – 'A toddlin' troot, and a toddlin' troot, And a wee bit bonnie toddlin' troot: If ye search a' the water about, Ye'll no' fin' siccan a toddlin' troot' [T], 'Now a man that would net baith the fish and the troots Of his honesty, trowth, we may well have oor doots' [UB], 'My bonnie troots ye come ti kill; Ca' murder sport, an' nurse yer thrill' [WP], '... And troots that i' the Tei'ot tippel' [DH], 'Mebbe they've a' gien up at last And taen to catchin troots ...' [DH].

trot (tro', trot) n. trot, used in the phrase 'on the trot', meaning 'in a row', one after the other – 'A got picked thrice on the trot'.

mair I canna name, In troth I think but little shame ...' [JoHa] (cf. trowth).

trottit (tro'-ee', tro-ti') pp. trotted – '... As he trottit aboot on his short bit legs, Watchin' the rin o' play!' [DH].

Trotter (tro'-ur) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) joiner in Knowetownhead, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. He was recorded as joiner at Hassendean on Militia ballot for 1799 and 1801. His is probably the Adam, son of James, baptised in Minto in 1775. Charles (20th C.) road surveyor. He purchased Wilton Bank from Robert Lindsay Watson in about 1950. Gavin (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1797 as 'Student of Phisic' at Knowetownhead, in the Lieutenancy Book, among names of men balloted for the Militia. He may well have been son of joiner Adam, who was also listed in 1797. George (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant on the High Street according to Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of William Beck. Their children were: Margaret (b.1806); Thomas (b.1809); William (b.1816); George (b.1818); Ann (b.1820); and Agnes Fulton (b.1822). James (18th C.) wright in Minto. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland' (1752). He is probably the James who married Isabel Hill in Minto in 1734 and whose children included Helen (b.1735), Thomas (b.1739), Isabel (b.1743), Margaret (b.1745), James (b.1747) and Margaret (again, b.1849). James (18th C.) farmer at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th C.) wright in Minto. He could be the son of James baptised in 1747. In 1801 his apprentice Adam Hilson was recorded on the ballot for the Militia. He is probably the James whose children, baptised in Minto Parish, included James (b.1771), Adam (b.1775), Gavin (b.1777) John (b.1781), William (b.1783), Margaret (b.1785), Thomas (b.1789) and James (again, b.1792). James (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Somerville in Wilton in 1807. James (19th C.) married Margaret Robison in Wilton in 1848. John (19th C.) married Agnes Dunbar in Hawick in 1848. Robert of Bush (18th C.) listed in 1779 as liferenter of a set of lands in Minto Parish, valued together at £433 17s 10s. The lands probably corresponded with what was previously called Deanfoot. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as having formerly been liferenter of these lands. The liferent of parts of Minto was perhaps just to get friends of Lord Minto onto the voters list in Roxburghshire. He was Postmaster General for Scotland. His wife's portrait was painted by George Romney. William (1816–1904) stockingmaker who was long Secretary of the Hawick Stockingmakers' Association (or Hawick Framework-Knitters' Society). He was son of George and Sarah Beck. He was a second cousin of Provost Edward Wilson and manufacturer Charles John Wilson as well as a grand-son of William Beck. He may be the William recorded in Selkirk in 1856 in a receipt for furnishings for the Charity School. He married Elizabeth Revell (1818–90) in 1837. They were on the High Street in 1841 and at Howdenburn in 1851. Their children included: Elizabeth (1838–1918); Sarah; William; Margaret; George; Thomas (b.1855); and Agnes (b.1862). William (1845–1923) probably son of William and Eliabeth Revell. He married Margaret Lyon in Hawick. Their children included: Margaret Ferguson (1878–1946); William (b.1880); Matthew Lyon (b.1881); Elizabeth R. (b.1886); and James (b.1889). William 'Bill' (1941–2021) son of Bill and Jenny, he was brought up in Wellington Street and spent his entire working life at Pringle's. He was a bowler, a keen fan of the Greens and supporter of the Common Riding. He married Elspeth Nichol in 1971 and they lived in Dalkeith Place. They had a daughter, Karen. Rev. William (19th/20th C.) born in Jedburgh, he attended St. Andrews Kirk in Hawick. He studied in Glasgow and was ordained as a minister of the Freek Kirk at Bannockburn in 1897. He later moved to New Zealand.

the Trough Inn (thu-trof-in) n. former inn on the right side of Weensland Road, by the old stone watering trough that remains there. A stockingmaker called Grey is recorded there when he died in 1840.

Trough Sike (trof-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on the eastern slopes of Roan Fell and flowing into the Hartsgarth Burn. Near the head of the burn, on the south side is a circular sheepfold, with a carved stone inscribed 'James Elliot, Shepherd Septr 30', and a second stone inscribed 'William Elliot Builder 1820'. Peden's stone is just south of here.

Troutlawford (trow'-law-fōrd) n. point that formed the western boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter, remaining so until the Division of the Common in 1777. According to the 1767 description of the old boundaries of the Common, and the map drawn up by J.P. Alison, the Common came to a point here, between the road and the Gate Burn. Given the strange shape of the Common here, and the possibility that the farm of Hawickshiels may have once been within the boundaries of a larger Common, it seems likely that the ford had some special significance, so that it remained within the boundaries. The site is now where the Gate Burn crosses under the road, presumably being a ford in earlier times, and is marked by a plaque. There is an illustration 'The Troutlawford: Hawick Burgesses on the Trail of Reivers, 1546' by Tom Scott '... the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawford upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South' [BR1734] (marked 'Troutling Ford' on some earlier maps, it is also sometimes 'the Troutlawford'; it is 'Trowtlaw Ford' in 1767).

Troutling Ford see Troutlawford

trow (trow) v., arch., poet. to trust, believe, feel sure – 'Sae did I trow, because I wiss'd it se; Wi' hopes, alake! we aft oursels betray' [CPM], 'He tends me weel I trow' [??], 'But gin they saw him when they trow he's sleepin', They'd fin' him fou, an', for ye ken what, greapin'' [JoHa], '... but I aye trowed the time o' sic miraculous things was past' [JTe], '... And who, if here at this same hour, I trow would little praise the poor' [AD], '... for they trow that they sall be heard for their meikle speikin'' [HSR], 'But I'll gi'e him his gilded ha', – I trow he's little skill ...' [JT], 'They're some beauty-spots, aw trow, Where the Slitrig wimples throw' [TK], 'Baith auld and young are mixed I trow – Rob Lurgie lingers wi' the lave, Caleb and Clinty seem cronies now Wi' Horrie Robbie and Cannie Dave' [HI].

trow (trow) v., arch. to troll, to fish by dragging a line through the water – 'Heels up, [he] trowed in the dam outright' [HSR], to waddle – 'Lang may you row, trow, guzzle, swatter' [JoHa], 'It rows aboot, it trows aboot, Baith near and far awa'; Whiles it is on the Maiden's Paps, And whiles on Ruberslaw' [TCh].

Trow Brig (trow-brig) n. name sometimes used for the bridge over the Teviot at Hornshole.

Trow Burn (trow-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from the south near Hornshole, essentially a name for the lower part of the Kirkton Burn. It was said that the recesses around this burn were once hiding places for Covenanters –

' 'Twas then the plunderers found a grave where Trow goes purling down; And hence this trophy cherished still, of those Callants who saved the town' [JEDM], '... it was nae teime owregane or oo war birlin owre the Trow Burn leike five ell o wund' [ECS].

Trowhaugh (trow-hawch) n. lands listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. They are also described in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. They were presumably the same as the Trows, or situated nearby. The description is of 'ane land' (presumably meaning a husbandland) 'estimat to 4 bolls in stok, i boll teynd' (it is transcribed 'Troinhauch' in 1615).

trowit (trow-ee', -i') pp., poet. supposed, believed, trusted – 'But whan the first cam', they trowet that they shud hae gotten mair' [HSR].

Trow Knowes (trow-nowz) n. farm just outside Hawick beyond Weensland, above Trow Mill. Andrew Nichol was there about 1880 and George Oliver and Robert Murray in 1906.

Trowmill see Trow Mill

Trow Mill (trow-mil) n. small woollen mill at 'the Trows', on the Teviot, about 2 miles down from Hawick. The factory was built in 1885, and was latterly run by Wrights of Trowmill Ltd. The area formerly held one of the corn mills of the Cavers estate, active up until the late 18th century. William Aitkin and William Borthwick were there in 1684. Archibald Aitkin was there in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths for 'himself undermillers & kilns'. James Scott was living there in 1724–37, Walter Stevenson in 1744 and Robert Waugh in 1753. William Ferguson was there in at least 1787–92. James Curle was tenant there in at least 1797–1801, Thomas Winthroppe was miller in 1801 and Stevn Oliver was servant there. and the millers in 1841 were William Cranston and James Black. Alexander Goodfellow was miller there in the 1850s and Hugh Goodfellow was farmer in the 1860s. Rubble from houses demolished at Lynnwood was used to extend the car park there in the 1980s. Known in the latter part of the 20th century for its mill shop and factory tours, it closed, with the site being cleared and redeveloped as housing – 'The waters o' the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill. ...' [WL] (also written 'Trowmill', it is 'Trow-miln' in 1684, 'Troumilne' in 1694 and 'Trowmiln' in 1797; it is marked 'Trowsmill' on Stobie's 1770 map).

trows (trowz) n., pl., arch. troughs, wooden conduit leading water to a water wheel.

trows (trowz) n., arch. a former small boat used for fishing in local rivers – 'The 'trows' were shaped something like this, Λ. The man stood with a foot on each leg of the 'trows', and steered and propelled it with the leister. When the 'trows' were not in the water there was a movable wheel attached to its point, and it was pushed along the road like a wheelbarrow' [JTU] (presumably related to both trow and trows).

Trows (trowz) n. hamlet on the south bank of the Tweed, between Roxburgh Newtown and Roxburgh Barns. It is also known as Makerstoun Trows. There is another place of the same name, and also a stream just south of Windy Gyle in Northumberland (the name perhaps derives from the narrow 'troughs' on the bed of the Tweed here, although another possibility is the old Celtic 'tros', suggesting a river crossing; it may have the same origin as for the more local area the Trows; it occurs on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Trowis').

the Trows (thū-trowz) n., pl. popular name for the area surrounding the Teviot near Trow Mill, and for the farm also called Trow Knowes. Simon Routledge is recorded there in 1494. George Douglas was recorded there in 1502. 'Trows' was one of the farms of the Cavers estate, listed as such in 1511. The name is also used in the earliest account of the 1514 incident (Wilson's 'History of Hawick') to describe the general location, rather than the word 'Hornshole', this being more correct if the skirmish took place on the south side of the Teviot. George Douglas of Trows is recorded in 1517. It was still part of the Cavers lands in 1558. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters' sermons in the 17th century. It was inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698, with the mill. James Douglas was there in at least 1694–1705, Archibald Douglas in 1747 and Alexander Douglas in 1791–96. The precise site of the former house is unknown, although it is marked between the Crook and Westcote on Stobie's 1770 map, and with Trowsmill down by the Teviot at the same time – 'Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes' [T], 'The lazy Griersons o' the Crook, An' Douglas o' the Trows, An' Cad-don wi' his bluidie shears, Fra' clippin' o' his yowes' [T], 'Hawick better lo'ed sic needfu' rows As cowed the English band at Trowes' [AD] (often written 'Trowes', it is 'le Trowis' and 'trowis' in 1502, 'Trowis' in 1511 and 1517 and 'Trowes' in 1694; it appears as 'Trows' on Pont's c.1590 map, is still 'Trowis' on Gordon's c. 1650 map, and 'Trowes' on Blaeu's 1654 map; the origin of the name is unclear, but one suggestion is the Old Welsh 'tros', which means 'across' something, and occurs in other place names associated with river crossings, while another suggestion is 'trowch' for a channel in a river bed, or a mill trough).

trowth (trowth) n., arch., poet. truth, troth – 'Tweel ye hae walth to wale on if it's sae; Sae sigh nae mair, for trowth ye mak me wae' [CPM], '...Of his honesty, trowth, we may well have oor doots' [UB], 'Thaye stan' siccer forever an' evir, an' ar dune in trouth an' uprichtness' [HSR], '...O' ane trowth thou art the Son o' God' [HSR] (also written 'trouth'; cf. troth).

trunle (tru-nul) v. to trundle, move along by rolling or spinning – ‘it Easter oo trunnled eggs it the Miller’s’, ‘...As the wairp mills trunle roond’ [WL] (cf. trinle).

Truslye (trus-lee) n. former name for lands near Groundstone, just to the north of Hawick, once part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. It was listed in 1535, along with ‘Groundeston’ as when the King revoked a former charter, and so its superiority passed from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to George, Lord Home. It is unclear precisely where these lands were.

trustit (trus-tee, -i) pp., arch. trusted – ‘Was unco clever, dealt sae fair, An’ ilka day was trustit mair’ [RDW], ‘But I trustet in thee, O Lord: I said, Thou art my God’ [HSR].

try (trI) v., arch. to test, examine, scrutinize – ‘...the cordiners shall try this market for insufficient leather and unbarkit schone, and what fines they receive, the ane half thereof shall pertain to the town’s use, and the other half to the craft ...’ [BR1643]. ‘The quartermaster of the shoemaker trade tried the market, to find if the shoes were all of sufficient barked leather ...’ [JW1677].

tryit (trI-ee, -i) pp., arch. tried – ‘Item, whatsoever person that committs ryottis ..., being tryit, sal pay 50 shillings ...’ [BR1640].

trykle (trI, trī-kul) n., arch. treacle – ‘Note that taffie generally signifies the sticky variety, made of trykul (treacle) or sayrup (syrup), in sticks or slabs ...’ [ECS], ‘...a shive o’ wheat bread, wi’ the maskins o’ peppermint leaves sweetened wi’ trycle, an fegs we thoct oorsels gey braw!’ [V&M], ‘Wi try-cle on eer chowks. Better,

tryklee-taffie (trī-klee-taw-fee) n., arch. treacle toffee – ‘Taffie-join = a social evening, the principal feature of which was the making of a panful of treacle-toffee (trykul-taffie, tryklee-taffie) ...’ [ECS] (also ‘trykle-taffie’, etc.).

trykle yill (trI-kul-yil) n., arch. treacle beer, a drink made with treacle or molasses, together with sugar, water and yeast, once brewed by housewives. It was a cheap and refreshing drink, popular up to the end of the 19th century. It was sometimes used in porridge instead of milk – ‘...and he remembered that his old grandfather always had his jug of treacle yill’ beside his porridge plate’ [JeC].

tryst (trīst, trist) n., arch. an appointment, rendezvous, meeting, meeting place, country get-together, market, particularly for the sale of livestock (but distinguished from a true fair or market in that it was not generally established by charter). In in the 18th and 19th centuries there was a tryst in Hawick held on the third Tuesday in October, established in 1785 on the land at Thorterdykes, also sometimes called the Cattle Tryst. Black cattle were stopped at Hawick on the way from northern markets, such as Falkirk, to southern markets at Carlisle or Newcastle – ‘...In honour of my Jeanie bright, At the tryste in the glen on a bonny summer night’ [JTe], ‘And fair or tryst aye proves the best To him wi’ a bit brawl in’t’ [MG], ‘When the tryst has been set in some lane leafy dell, That echoes the sound o’ the eicht o’clock bell’ [JJ], ‘And can ye be the bonny lass That set the trysts wi’ me! And sat beside me on the grass ‘Aneath the hawthorn tree’ [JT], v., arch. to meet, engage to meet, fix an appointment – ‘They nivir trysted with the like emergence before them tabled ...’ [PR1714], ‘Turn backward Carle Time wi’ me Through twice ten years o’ gloom, And tak’ me to the trystin’ tree Among the yellow broom’ [JT], to arrange for someone to perform a service at a specific time or place – ‘Yeddie Kyle o’ Hayknowe, wha can han’le the bow, Was trysted to play on the fiddle’ [JoHa], to befall, afflict – ‘...as justly he deserved the severest punishment to be trysted with’ [PR1717], to arrange at the same time, be coincident – ‘The Treasurer could not attend this day the Session in the Manse by reason of some emergencie he was trysted with and could not evite’ [PR1724].

with an area of 1 acre and 31 poles, and also being referred to as 'Hawick Loanin' or 'the Green Gress'. The fair was established by the Magistrates in October in 1785. There was also a cattle fair established in the same year (in November), to encourage drovers to stop off in Hawick.

trystin (trīs-, tris-tin) adj., pres. part., arch. meeting, getting together, bargaining, agreeing – 'And voice calls to voice by the spirit mound Where the Burgess-Dead keep trysting-ground' [JYH].

Trystin Sike (trīs-, tris-tin-sīk) n. Trysting Sike, stream that rises on Kirk Hill and runs roughly south-east to join the Liddel Water near Thistlesike, south of Mangerton.

Trystside (trist-sīd) n. loop off Longhope Drive at the top of Crumhaughhill, constructed in 1980 and named for the area nearby that was used as a trysting place, in particular for a horse fair.

the T26 (thu-tee-toon'-ee-siks) n. former name for the A7, designated in the 1936 Trunk Roads Act. It was also known as the T7.

tuck (tuk) n., arch. a beat, bang, tap, especially on a drum (from Old French; see also tuck o the drum).

tuck o the drum (tuk-ō-thu-drum) n. a proclamation made by public crier using his drum – 'The officers are ordered to banish Elizabeth Miller ...and ordained to discharge, by toucke of drum, all persons from harboring and resetting her' [BR1695], '...to be brunt on the chiek with the lette H, and thereafter to be banished the town by touck of the drum ...' [BR1697] '...and ane proclamation to go through the towne at night, by tuck of drume ...' [BR], '...and ordain the same to be intimated this day through the toun by tuck of drum accordingly' [BR1736], '...A Cornet there's been wi' tuck o' the drum' [JEDM] (a familiar phrase in the 18th and 19th centuries).

the Tud (thu-tud) n. nickname for someone in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

Tudhope see Tudhope Hill

Tudhope (tu-dup) n. farm just to the west of Jedburgh, presumably the origin of the surname. There is a holy well on the farm. 'Jhone off Towdop' is recorded in the Burgh Court Book of Selkirk in 1523 and 'William Tudhoip' in the following decade.

Tudhope (tu-dup) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction between John Johnstone of Hermiston and Patrick Johnstone. Adam (17th C.) tailor in

Denholm. He married 'Gellan' (or Helen) Dryden in Cavers Parish, probably in about 1675. In about 1684 he and his wife were accused of attending conventicles. He may be the Adam who is listed as a resident at Ormiston in Cavers Parish in 1694. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Adam (b.1694). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Clerk there in 1699. He may have been brother of Thomas as well as Janet, who married John Douglas in Cavers in 1707. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Isabell Stewart in Bedrule Parish in 1716. Helen who married John Rutherford in Bedrule Parish in 1721, and Bessie who married William Mill in 1725 may have been his sisters. Adam (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Marion Oliver in Hawick in 1722. They had a daughter Isabel (b.1723), with baptismal witnesses carrier Robert Aitken and mason Robert Mein. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1798 he married Agnes Scott, who was from Westerkirk. Their son James was baptised in 1799. Alexander (17th/18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1702 in a case brought by John Turnbull for assault. Bailie Charles (18th C.) merchant of Hawick, he was Magistrate in the 1750s. He witnessed baptisms in 1741, 1742, 1743, 1745, 1747 and 1757, suggesting that he may have been an elder of the Kirk. A 'ly-bell' from him to someone in Selkirk in 1741 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland' (1752). David (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1536. William Douglas allowed him to grow oats and pasture cattle on the meadow of Friarshaw for the rest of his life. He was presumably a former tenant of the Douglasses of Friarshaw. He also witnessed transactions in the period 1538–42. In 1562 he was appointed as executor for Janet Scott (who appears to have been someone else's wife, rather than his). leaving him her goods and land in Peebles. Probably the same David was recorded in 1563 leasing part of the lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. Francis (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was listed as a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the Francis who in 1767 married Betty Miller from Robertson Parish. Their children were: John (b.1770); Walter (b.1772); Isabella (b.1774), who may have married Joseph Henderson in 1794; Beatrix (b.1779); and Janet (b.1781). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. He is probably the Francis who paid for the use of the Parish 'mortcloth' in 1773. Francis (1805–70) born in Hawick, son of John and Isabella Dryden. He married Margaret Nutter from London. In 1840 he was selected as a teacher at Grahamstown in the Cape Colony, and went out to South Africa with his wife and 3 young sons, John, James and Francis. Gavin (b.1807) son of John and Isabella Dryden. He married Janet Watson (from Galashiels) in Wilton Parish in 1832. He worked as a wool-spinner in Selkirk (according to the 1851 census), and had at least one child, Ann (b.1842). He was listed as a spinner at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. James (17th C.) named on a list of men suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627, specifically they were said to be 'fitter to be employed in his Majesties service nor to be suffered loytering at hame'. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. James (17th C.) recorded as one of 3 men fined for the oats of Gilbert Watt (the Town Clerk) that their livestock ate in 1642. He may be the same James who was recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at 40 merks when provided for the Covenanting army 'in case the horses come nocht back again or be lost'. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott, and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1642); William (b.1643); Alexander (b.1645); Walter (b.1647); Christian (b.1650); and William (again, b.1652). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Clapperton and their son Robert was baptised in 1635. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Falla and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1639. The witnesses were Robert and Allan Deans. James (17th/18th C.) brother of Robert. He was called before the Hawick Session in 1717, but excused because he was 'att Newcastle upon his brother's service and business'. He could be the James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. James (18th C.) married Margaret 'Badie' in Hawick Parish in 1726. James (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He may be the James who (along with William) witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott of Burnfoot in 1723. In 1718 he married Agnes, sister to gardener Walter Turnbull. Their children included: Walter (b.1720); Janet (b.1723); William (b.1724); and Elizabeth (b.1729), who may have married Robert Balmour in 1762. The witnesses in 1723 were merchant William (who was surely related) and wright Robert Scott. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Marion (or May) Littlejohn and their children included: Charles (b.1737); and Agnes (b.1740). James (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Palmer in 1758. Their daughter Helen was born in 1760. It is possible he was the same James who married Margaret Henderson a year later. He may be the deceased James whose daughter Helen died in Hawick in 1798. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Margaret Henderson in 1761. Their children included: William (b.1762); Adam (b.1765), mother's Christian name given as 'Isabel'; John (b.1767); Adam (b.1769); Charles (b.1773); and Elspeth (b.1774). The witnesses in 1762 were possibly George Turnbull and Robert Young (but hard to read), in 1765 were smith Robert Young and carrier Robert Chisholme and in 1767 were Robert Leithead and another James Tudhope. He may be the James 'Tuleup' whose use of the Parish 'mortcloth' is recorded twice in 1773. He may be the James who in 1773 witnessed a baptism for miller John Scott. James (18th C.) married Janet Mason in Wilton Parish in 1767. James (18th C.) married Betty Davidson in Hawick in 1784. James (d.1797) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was presumably a carrier, and the same as one of the contemporary Jameses, perhaps the carrier married to Margaret Henderson. He is probably the carrier whose son William died in 1797. His death is recorded in Hawick, where he is stated to be 'late Langholm Carrier'. James (b.1823) born in Hawick, probably son of Thomas. He was a tobacconist and china merchant at 10 Sandbed. In 1861 he lived with his sister Janet, and his housekeeper was Agnes Huggan. John (17th C.) described as maltman in Cavers in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Douglas of Cavers' servant accused him and several other people of stealing his wallet in Hawick. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he (along with Adam Ogilvie) witnessed a baptism for James E.... He married 'mellie' Cowan and their children included Adam (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were Adam Ogilvie and Thomas Scott. John (17th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1686 he was appointed, along with James Boyd, as 'marchers of the toune betwixt neighbour and neighbour annent the marching of yr. yards and gavell, being joyned to John Hardie, William

Purdome, and William Paysley, who were former marchers'. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He could be the John who married Isobell Huntly and whose children born in Hawick included Walter (b.1670), Margaret (b.1672), Marion (b.1677) and Jane (1679). John (17th C.) flesher on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was also listed as a flesher among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed as a flesher when he witnessed baptisms for wright Andrew Scott in 1704 and for merchant Andrew Turnbull in 1723. He married Helen Gillespie and their children included: Robert (b.1693); John (b.1696); and Alexander (b.1702). The witnesses in 1702 were miller James Paterson and Bailie Patrick Richardson. He witnessed a baptism in 1714 for shoemaker Robert Elliot and in 1716 for Thomas Waugh (along with fellow flesher Thomas Wilson). John (18th/19th C.) married Helen Lamb in Bedrule in 1704. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1705. John (18th C.) merchant in Selkirk. In 1733 his servant Isobel Wilson complained that someone had tried to drown her at the Cross Well in Selkirk. Probably the same John was recorded in Selkirk in 1717 and 1718, charged with debts and with assault in 1727 and in a further cases for his debts and against someone for non-payment of rent in 1736. It was probably his son who was the John 'younger' recorded when accused of assault in 1719 and a claim against debtors in 1720. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick who married Isabel Ker. Their children included: Robert (b.1735); Andrew (b.1739); Francis (b.1742); and Walter (b.1744). The witnesses in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle and William Scoon, servant to Rev. William Somerville; fellow carrier James Paterson and his wife Helen Ruecastle had a child baptised on the same day. John (b.c.1770) saddler in Hawick who was Cornet in 1798. He was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799, along with his apprentices Andrew Leggat and William Turnbull. He was still on the ballot in 1801. He could be the John, from Hawick, who is on the list of subscribers for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Joseph Henderson and Isabel Tudhope in 1794 and the John who (along with Walter) witnessed another for the same couple in 1798. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident married to

Isabel Dryden. His wife may have been the Isabel (b.1781), daughter of Gavin Dryden, born in Hobkirk Parish. Their children included: Francis (b.1805), teacher in South Africa; and Gavin (b.1807), who married Janet Watson. He may be the son of Francis baptised in Hawick in 1770. He is probably the John who, along with Walter (perhaps his brother) witnessed baptisms in 1798 and 1801 for Joseph Henderson and Isabel (perhaps his sister). He may be the same man as the saddler. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish. He married Margaret Wood and their children included: James (b.1698); Margaret (b.1700); John (b.1703); Robert (b.1705); Isabel (b.1708); and John (b.1710). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was living at Raesknowe in 1704 and was herd at Over Southfield in 1709. He married Jean (or Janet) Scott and their children included Mary (b.1701), William (b.1704), Robert (b.1707) and John (b.1709). The witnesses in 1704 were John Graham (also in Raesknowe) and Robert Riddell in Allanhaugh Mill. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was 'servant to Falesh' in 1708. He married Esther Elliot and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1708, with witnesses Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and James Falsyde. Robert (18th C.) brother of James, mentioned in 1717. Possibly the same Robert was married to Helen Scott and had children: Helen (b.1727); Robert (b.1733); and Betty (b.1735). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Ormiston and their children included Elspeth (b.1723). Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident married to Helen Hardie. Their children included: John (b.1730); Janet (b.1737), who may have married Robert Renwick in 1766; and Anne (b.1741). The witnesses in 1730 were John (who was surely related) and Walter He could be the flesher who witnessed baptisms for skinner John Curren in 1743 and 1745. This same flesher was involved in a pair of court cases in 1748, involving the payment of a debt by Robert Taylor to Thomas Turnbull, in which he was an intermediary. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Davidson in Hawick in 1760. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Jean, daughter of John Ekron and Jean 'Dinlap' (i.e. Dunlop); she died in 1775. He is probably the Robert who in 1768 witnessed a baptism for mason William Ekron (perhaps his brother-in-law). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish. He is recorded in a complaint in Selkirk in 1787. He married Margaret Fairbairn and their children included: Alexander (b.1768);

Nelly and John (b.1770); Robert (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1778). Perhaps the same Robert is recorded being in debt in documents of 1813, 1814 and 1817. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Marion Pott, who was from Cavers Parish. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He may have been brother of Adam and Janet. His children included: Marion (b.1699), who probably married Thomas Thomson in 1728; and Thomas (b.1706). Thomas 'Tammy' (18th/19th C.) trader in toys and other items at local fairs. He was long remembered in Denholm by a phrase repeated by children, 'Tammy Tudhope the toy-man!' and the cry 'The fair's begun, yonder's Tammie Tudhope'. It is unclear where he came from. Thomas (b.1791/2) tobacconist at the Sandbed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater's 1852 directory. He was probably part of the business marked 'Tudhope & Scott' on Wood's 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. In 1841 he was listed on the Sandbed and at Teviot Square (probably about 10 Sandbed) in 1851, when he was listed as a master tobacco manufacturer, employing 1 man and 1 boy. His Sandbed shop was seriously affected in the 1846 flood, with the front counter being underwater and water bursting through the back door, forcing tobacco into the street. He married Isabel Murray in 1816 and their children included: Mary (b.1817), who may have married George Porteous in 1848; Elizabeth (b.1819), who probably married Robert Biggar in 1846; Agnes (b.1821), who may have married Joseph Park in 1845; James (b.1823); John (b.1825); Thomas (b.1831); Janet (b.1835); and William (b.1837). Perhaps the same Thomas was one of the original deacons of Hawick Free Kirk from 1844. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick, married to Marion 'Thor'. Their son John was born in 1634. Walter (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Graham in 1722. She was daughter of Walter Graham (perhaps the Bailie) and died in 1777. Their children included: Walter (b.1727); William (b.1729); Jean (b.1732); and John (b.1737). The witnesses in 1729 were Bailie Graham and John Graham (probably his father-in-law and brother-in-law). He is probably the merchant who (along with merchant William) witnessed a baptism in 1722 for shoemaker William Tait. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded being 'with Joseph Henderson brewer' in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and he was still a brewer on the ballot in 1801. He and John (perhaps his brother) witnessed baptisms for Joseph Henderson and Isobel (perhaps his sister) in 1798 and 1801. He may be the Walter, son of Francis, who was baptised in Hawick in 1772. Widow (17th C.) listed among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear who her husband was. William (16th C.) farmer at Hallrule. 'William Tudopis duelling hous and yaird' are recorded in the 1562 Baronial dispute over the lands of Feu-Rule. Bailie William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is recorded buying a bag of 'Irish happenies' from the Kirk Session about 1711 and becoming an elder in 1723. In 1717, 1723 and 1726 he witnessed baptisms for wright Richard Turnbull, with his surname being 'Thowdup' in 1726. He witnessed a baptism for carrier Thomas Porteous in 1720 and for merchant James (surely a relative) in 1723. He is probably the merchant who (along with merchant Walter) witnessed a baptism in 1722 for shoemaker William Tait and the William who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott of Burnfoot in 1723. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Huntly. He is probably the William who (along with Robert Boyd) witnessed baptisms for William Davidson and for Robert Ker in Hawick in 1731. He was elected Magistrate in 1737, although Bailie Burn complained that many of the voters were his servants or were minors. He was Bailie in 1738 when plans started for the building of the Teviot Bridge. He witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller and another for shoemaker George Gardner. He is probably the merchant William who witnessed the baptisms of children of Walter Tinlin and William Oliver in 1737. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for druggist Gideon Scott and was 'late Bailie' in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Gardner. He paid tax for 19 windows in Hawick in 1748. In 1716 he married Elizabeth (or Elspeth), daughter of Robert Scott in Drinkstone. Their children were: Walter (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); Charles (b.1722); James (b.1723); Anne (b.1725); May (b.1728); May (again, b.1730); and William (b.1732). The baptismal witnesses in 1723 were schoolmaster James Anderson and surgeon James Scott, in 1725 were James Anderson (again) and 'Tacksman' Robert Elliot, and in 1728 baptism were 'Mr. Anderson' and Robert 'Pote'. He is probably the William who was former owner of lands (in Wilton Parish) that George Hailburton owned in 1788, having been purchased from Langlands of that ilk. William (18th C.) married to Isobel Riddell. Their daughter Anne was born in 1739. William (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the 'Hair Merchant' who died in Hawick in 1808 and whose sister Janet died in 1811 (also spelled 'Toudhop', 'Toudhope', 'Towdop', 'Tudhop', 'Tudhoup', 'Tudop', 'Tudup', 'Tudwp', 'Tutob', 'Tutop', etc.).

Tudhope Hill (tu-dup-hil) n. hill east of Moss-paul, between the Allan and Hermitage Waters, on the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire. It reaches a height of 599 m (1,961 ft) and is topped by a triangulation pillar. A smaller peak, to the west, is called Little Tudhope Hill, and reaches 483 m (also sometimes just 'Tudhope' or 'the Tudhope' and occasionally 'Tudhope Fell'; there were several former spellings, e.g. it is 'Tutop' in 1839).

Tuesdi (tewz-, chewz-di) n. Tuesday. This is early closing day in Hawick, and traditionally the day for the mid-week Ride-outs (also spelled 'Tuesdih'; cf. the older Teisday).

the Tuesdi (thu-tewz-, -chewz-di) n. sometimes referring to the Tuesday of Common Riding week. There is a Chase in the morning. This is also usually the day when the Principals, preceded by singers and members of the Drums and Fifes, visit the local hospitals and old-folks homes.

Tullie see Tully

Tulloch (tu-loch) n. John (19th C.) fishmonger at 30 High Street in the late 19th century. He was noted as a bass singer and was precentor of Allars Kirk. He moved to Campbelltown in 1899. Thomas of Elliston (18th/19th C.) son of Robert of Bogton. He served as Deputy Lieutenant in Roxburghshire in 1797 and 1798.

Tullochgariac (tu-loch-ga-ree-ach) n., poet. word of uncertain meaning – ‘Ye’ll no forget to send an answer, An’, harkye, Wattie, gie’s a dancer, An’ ootright Tullochgariac prancer, To mak me start’ [JoHa].

Tully (tu-lee) n. David (b.1787/8) local farmer, who gave his name to the phrase ‘Tully’s Mill’ when he was dragged into the Slitrig at the Mill Port and had the upper half of his clothing torn off by the mob for being a Tory voter. This was during the election of 1837; 5 men were tried for mobbing and rioting and assault, against 7 victims. He may have been one of the Hawick men who went down to London to be witnesses in the investigation. The court document state that the mob ‘did violently drag or force him to the side of the Slitrig River ...’ forcing ‘him off the bank into the said river, which was then in a swollen state, and of considerable depth, and did compel him the pass through to the other side of the river’. The family lived at the Millpath, in a house that was removed to make way for the railway. His wife was Janet, and their children included James and Janet. The death of a child of his is recorded in Hawick in 1824. In 1861 he was living at 25 High street with grandchildren Agnes Murray, David Murray, James Tully and Jessie Tully; he was then described as a farmer of 75 acres. George (b.c.1780) baker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Lethem in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. His surname is given as ‘Toolie’. James (b.1816/7) son of David. In 1861 he was living at 17 Howegate and listed as a farmer of 30 acres. His wife was Margaret and their children included James and David. John (18th C.) married Martha Jackson in 1730, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) mason who was chosen as ‘rebel’ Cornet in the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809 in opposition to the Council’s choice of John Kyle. The dispute was over new regulations regarding invitations to supporters. He was the second choice of the ‘Wesla Water’ group, after Henry Halliburton had declined. He rode the Common on the Friday, behind the ‘royalist’ Cornet, although he had more supporters. He also entered the Haugh, although with some obstruction – ‘If you love your ancient freedom, Their new Cornet never heed him; From among you choose a Cornet, Hand it down to sons unborn yet’ [JH], ‘The Westla’ Lads waur Rebels ca’d, John Tully led them on a yaud’ [MB]. John (19th C.) married Janet Tully in Hwick in 1851. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1635. Isobel Scott in Synton Mill complained that she had called her a witch and a thief; she denied the first, but claimed she could prove that Scott had stolen money from Andrew Nichol. However, after several witnesses were called there was no proof of theft, and so she had to sit in the place of repentance ‘in her linen sheitts, and to sit all the tyme of preaching’, then ask the congregation for forgiveness. William (18th C.) local wigmaker immortalised in a rhyme – ‘Robert Miles the barber, and Michael up the stair, Willie Tully makes the wigs, and Jenny buys the hair’ [T] (also spelled ‘Tullie’ interchangeably in early times, as well as ‘Tulley’).

Tully’s Mill (tu-leez-mil) n., arch. term meaning rough treatment at the hands of a mob, or more specifically being thrown into the Slitrig at the Mill Port. The term came from David Tully, known as a Tory supporter, who received such treatment during the election of 1837. Similar treatment was common during the elections of the 1830s. David Waters wrote a facetious poem called ‘Holy Tammie’s Prayer, and thansgiving for his marvellous escape from ‘Tully’s Mill’ at the late election’, published in 1838 – ‘...he got ‘Tully’s Mill’ in the Slitrig under the Tower Knowe bridge’ [JTU] (also written ‘Tuillie’s Mill’).

tully-wap (tu-lee-wawp) n., arch. a game involving a chain of children curling around a leader and then all falling down – ‘Tuilyie-wap, a childish amusement in Teviotdale, in which a number of boys take hold of each other’s hands, and wrap themselves round the one who is at the head; clasping themselves as firmly together as possible, and every one pushing till the mass fall over. From Tuilyie and Wap, to throw' [JoJ].

tulzie (tul-zee) n., arch. a quarrel, fight, struggle – 'If it was het, the langkail gully, Play'd smash amang't to end the tulzie' [JR], v. to quarrel, come to blows – 'Syne Tam an' Geordie had a bout, An' tulzied 'boot a hizzie' [JoHa] (also tully).

tummelt (tu-mul) pp. tumbled – '...Whilk dang puir Yeddie's head agee, Till drunk he tum-milt, An', as oor sacred authors gree, Life's garden bum-milt' [JoHa], 'O! Mony's the mirry mile I've raiked, And mony a wainch in hey tum-mle't ...' [DH] (also written 'tum-mle't').

tum-mle (tu-mul) v. to tumble – '...Losh he wammelt and tum-m'led ower on to the floor' [UB], 'Wha toss an' tum'le, waupit a' through ither, Until the grun' they tread on seems alive' [JoHa], 'Sweat, pech, an' stacher up Parnassus' brae, An' though thou tum'le, try't an' try't again' [JoHa], 'When a' the world looks could an' grey, An' a' things tum'lin under ...' [WP], '...Here they come at the spring-cleanin', Tum-melin' oot o' the derk again ...' [DH], 'Syne aff frae his shouter'll tum-mle his pack ...' [WL], '...And crystal rivers tum-mle doon' [IWL], n. a tumble – 'hei took a right tum-mle doon they stair'.

tum-mle-car (tu-mul-kawr) n., arch. a kind of primitive box cart with wheels that revolved with the axle, and hence moved with a jolting motion – '...Roostit horseshoon, an queer wheel-rings O' tum-mle cars, The swords o' ancient knights an' kings, Lost i' their wars' [JoHa].

tundle (tun-dul) n., arch. tinder, especially in the phrase 'as dry as tundle' (also written 'tundl'; noted by E.C. Smith).

Tun-grig (tun-g-rig) n. farm probably in upper Liddesdale, recorded in 1613 and 1622, relating to branches of the Scotts.

the Tunnel (thu-tu-nul) n. name used in the 19th century for a long, dark close leading to Backdamgate from around 12 or 14 High Street. It contained several badly illuminated houses and was demolished around 1857 when the Royal Bank was built.

the Tunnel (thu-tu-nul) n. epithet for the road between Hawick and Langholm, referring to the steep pass between upper Teviotdale and upper Ewesdale.

Tunno (tu-nō) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) notary in Melrose. In 1612 he is recorded as school-master in Melrose. He is recorded in making an extract of the 1615 sasine of Robert Scott of Alton from Gilbert Watt's Protocol Book, with the precise date is unknown. He is listed as procurator for some cases in the records of the Regality of Melrose in 1638–51. In 1642 his son Andrew is mentioned as a witness in Melrose and by the late 1640s was 'younger' and already a writer. His son was probably Town Clerk of Hawick (unless this was in fact him, rather than his son). Andrew (17th C.) Town Clerk of Hawick. It seems reasonable to presume that this man was son of the Melrose notary, who was described as a student in Melrose in 1642, and already a writer in 1643. In 1659 he is described as 'notary in Melrose, now at Hawick', in a bond referred to in a complaint against his tenant. He served as Town Clerk of Hawick 1659–70. In 1670 a case was raised against him by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the Melrose court of Regality (in which he is described as 'portioner of Melrose'), complaining that he held the 'protocol book' of Gilbert Watt, notary, which contained 2 instruments of sasine relating to succession of the lands of Goldielands. He agreed to make copies, although they do not appear to have survived. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Men and women are listed, and so it is unclear if this was a male or female name. William (17th C.) servitor of Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. He witnessed the Earl's last will and testament in 1633.

Tunny (tu-nee) n. James Good (d.1887) proprietor of the photography business J.G. Tunny & Co., which continued long after his death. The company had several studios in Edinburgh and also opened one at 47 High Street Hawick in the period 1903–06.

tup (tup) n. a ram, male sheep – 'The skulls o' elk-deer, bisons, tups, Fund i' the mosses ...' [JoHa], 'A large and powerful tup turned on Jock and attacked him' [RM], 'I'm no acquaint wi' mealy pows; I was brought up wi' tups and ewes ...' [JR], 'Let's awa' and see the tups', is the unvarying watchword on the 'wild green links' of 'The Dales' [HHD], 'Your credit with us rises up each time you turn a stubborn tup ...' [TD] (this was formerly tuip).

Tup Knowes

18th and 19th centuries. It was also for a while a major lamb fair.

Tup Knowes (tup-nowz) n. former name for lands near Hawick. They are mentioned among lost placenames by James Wilson in 1850, and may be part of the old Common.

tur (tur) v., arch. to turf, cover with turf – ‘... that every inhabitant within the brughe shall have liberty to tur and theik, and sett ane ladder in his neighbour’s close’ [BR1660].

turbleent (tur-bleen') n., arch. a sudden gust of wind, turbulence – ‘Yeh gowsty nicht (wui a wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wundihs) a turbleent woare as the ordnar dang doon the firrst Peinelheuch Monument’ [ECS] (also ‘turbleen’ and ‘turblin’; from the Mediæval English and Old French).

the Turf Hotel (thu-turf-hō-tel) n. former hotel at Langburnshiels, offering food, drink and accommodation to travellers. It was opened by Mr. MacDonald in early 1860. Later that year the guests and proprietor were attacked by a gang of navvies and there was an even worse riot on St. Patrick’s Day 1862. It is unclear how long the hotel operated.

Turfy Sike (tur-fee-sīk) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Thorlieshope Burn.

Turie (too-ree) n. name for former lands on the Stobs estate. It is listed in 1657, between Horselee and Acreknowe, although the location is unknown.

Turk’s Close (turkz-klōs) n. popular name in the 19th century for a passageway between 58 and 60 High Street, home of the ‘Turks’. This was a nickname of long standing for John Scott and his family.

the Turk’s Halfpenny (thu-turkz-hāp-nee) n. name for a temporary trade union in Hawick, instigated as the result of John Scott (‘the Turk’) reducing the price of men’s hose by 6 pence per dozen (or a halfpenny each) in 1817. The stocking-makers of the Town levied 6 pence on each man and used the funds to try to fight the imposition of wage reductions. James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’) and James Scott were arrested and spent several days in Jedburgh Jail before the employer yielded. The resulting celebration inspired James Hogg to recite the following verse – ‘See my dear comrades, turned to ashes, The cursed page that once did fash us, And bear in mind, we once did wish Our persecutors just like this; But innocence should

Turlenbrae (tur-lin-brā) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, probably near Coldhouse and Whitfield, according to its entry on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Henderson was tenant at that time (it is possible this is an error for some other place).

turn (turn) v. to become, grow – ‘Him and mei turned fast freends and Aw hev him in New York now ...’ [JEDM], ‘Ee’re denner’s turnin caald’ [ECS], (more common than in standard English, and often with the participle coming after the noun; see also turnt).

turn (turn) n. the middle of something, particularly a night – ‘... the turn o the nicht’ [ECS], the act or process of changing – ‘... a turn for the better; ... the turn o the eer’ [ECS], a bout of illness, especially in the phrase ‘a bad turn’, a favour – ‘... ee’ve duine iz a guid turn wui that’ [ECS], a walk, stroll – ‘A’m duist oot for a bit turn afore A gaan ti bed’ [ECS] (these senses all more common than in standard English).

Turn (turn) n. former name of a farm near Stobs, roughly between Woodfoot Cottage and Railway Cottages. It could be the ‘turni’ where James Crozier was located in 1494/5. It is probably the ‘Torne’ listed along with ‘Wenerton’ and ‘Fowlerawe’ as farms on the Slitrig belonging to the Laird of Gledstains, which were burned by the English in 1547/8. It was among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. It was still listed as part of the Barony of Winnington at the end of the 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. William Turnbull was there in 1708 and James Nichol in 1720. George Fletcher was tenant there in the 1750s. When a valuation of the separate lands in the Stobs estate was made in 1779 an entry read ‘Part of Te-ourn or Turn, possessed by William Elliot and Robert Potts in 1779’, valued at £178 5s 5d, with the other part being Smithfieldhaugh and valued at £15 10s. Walter Paterson was a slater there in 1797, John Scott was a servant there in 1799 and Richard Tinlin in 1801. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, Sir William Elliott of Stobs owned part of ‘Te-ourn, or Turn’, a small part of which was called Smithfieldhaugh; together they were still valued at about £194. It was also referred to as ‘Acreknowe Turn’ and housed 2 separate families until about the early 1900s (also written ‘Turne’; it is marked as the Turn Again Stane (thu-turn-a-gān-stān) n. standing stone on the farm of Kae-side, overlooking Tweedbank, traditionally said to have been erected to commemorate the place where Elliot turned and speared Ker of Cessford to death at the battle of Skirmish Feild in 1526. In fact the stone lies beside an ancient pathway, and probably predates the 16th century.

Turnbull (turn-bul, tru-mul) n. Adam of Whithope (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1390 as a witness to the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. in a charter of 1409 as ‘ade turnebule de quithope’ (i.e. Whithope) when his son John was granted lands at Hassendeanbank. Adam of Fulton (14th C.) listed among the witnesses to the 1390 charter where John Turnbull of Minto granted Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. Adam (15th C.) listed as one of the witnesses to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas in 1432. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Turnbells, but John of Bedrule and William of Hassendeanbank are also listed. He may be the Adam who witnessed a charter for lands in Sprouston in 1433/4, Adam of Wauchope (15th C.) described as ‘Adam de Walchhop’ (and listed after several Turnbells) when part of an inquest into lands in Jedburgh in 1440. He may be the same Adam who was witness to a charter for Thomas Cranston being granted part of Sprouston in 1446 and who was also on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn in 1446/7. Adam (15th C.) granted the lands of Greenwood in 1439 by charter of James II. These lands had previously been held by Walter Dalgleish of Greenwood and are probably the same as Girnwood on the Borthwick Water. He was probably father or grandfather of Thomas of Greenwood, recorded in 1488, and also related to the Turnbells of Minto. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Ade’ in 1471 when he and George Cranston had remission for 2 ‘schelis’ in Ettrick Forest. Adam of Philiphaugh (15th C.) recorded in 1484 when James Turnbull claimed compensation from him for disturbing him in his lands of Westfield and spoliation of his cow at his lands of Kirkhope.

At the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1502 he was probably the ‘Adam turnbull dominus de quith-law’ (likely an error for ‘Whithope’) who was fined for failing to give suit for his lands of Philiphaugh. In 1503 he was ‘de philiphalche’ when he presented Ronald (probably a relative) to the court in Selkirk as suitor for his lands of Philiphaugh. In 1504 he was among a number of men who had remission for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed right after Mark, who may have been related, and before his son and heir William, followed by James in Kirkhope and James in Gargunock. He is also listed in the 1506 remission for the same crime. His son and heir William is also recorded in 1504 as a procurator for Helen Rutherford, heiress to Rutherford of that ilk. Probably the same Adam of Philiphaugh was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alemoor in 1509. Janet, who was granted a charter for part of Philiphaugh in 1509 was surely related to him, as well as Ralph, who held the same third of Philiphaugh shortly afterwards. Adam (d.bef. 1509) resident of Hornshole recorded at the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was allowed to ‘componer’ for several crimes, specifically: stealing 2 bolls of barley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools from John and Thomas Young of Minto; stealing ‘catallorum’ from Katherine Stewart from Minto; common theft and pillage; stealing 36 ewes from the Murrays in Sundhope; stealing 56 ells of cloth and 2 horses from Lauder; stealing 40 sheep from Philiphaugh; and stealing 12 sheep from Thomas Williamson from the Kirkland of Wilton. Additionally he and Walter, also in Hornshole, were allowed to componer for a series of other crimes: stealing livestock from 3 separate men in Minto; bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder Minto; and for common theft. Their surety was Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1494/5 he had remission for several related crimes: stealing sheep, cows and a horse from John Sinton in Synton, in the company of James Elliot; stealing further horses from Torwoodlee, Fairnilee and Lauder; stealing sheep from Glenrath; stealing an ox from Heartside and ‘chattels’ from Hugh Douglas; stealing cattle from Katherine Stewart in Minto; bringing in men from Tynedale to plunder from Thomas Wilkinson; and for common theft and delivery of stolen goods. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpasley. He was also described as ‘in Hornshole’ (i.e. tenant there) in 1502 when he was indicted for stealing 200 oxen and 80 horses from

James Newton, tenant of Synton. David Scott (called 'the Lady') tenant of Stirches was involved in the same or a similar incident at Synton. Later in 1502 he was 'in Hornishole, now in chalmerslane newtoun' when he had remission for a series of crimes: stealing 80 sheep from Broadmeadows (probably also involving David 'the Lady' Scott in Stirches); bringing in Englishman Sir John Musgrave; stealing 2 horses from Lauder; stealing 3 oxen and a cow from Muircleuch; stealing 4 cattle from Hermiston; stealing 7 cows from Whitmuir; stealing 160 sheep from Hundleshope; stealing 25 sheep from George Bonnington; stealing 28 sheep from the 'cauldschelhou'; stealing 30 sheep from Philiphaugh; stealing 100 sheep from William Turnbull at Oakwood; stealing 60 sheep from Cauldschiels; bringing in Archibald and Ninian Armstrong to raid Synton, stealing 200 cattle and 80 horses from James Newton there; and stealing 17 cows, 2 horses, 100 sheep, a doublet, a sword and 40 shillings from St. Leonard's Hospital near Peebles. James Newton in Synton and Walter Scott of Howpasley were sureties for him and Walter (son of Walter Scott of Headshaw) appears to have been involved in 2 of the same incidents. Musgrave's men burned Selkirk and stole 1000 merks worth of goods from the inhabitants; he also had remission for his role in this raid; George of Hallrule and Bartholomew in Rawflat acted as sureties for him. Also in 1502 he may be the Adam 'de natoun' (perhaps Newton) who was surety, along with several other Turnbull chiefs, for Margaret in Hawick, who was convicted of theft and resetting thieves. In 1509 Andrew Crozier was hanged for several crimes, including his murder, along with the murder of another Adam, called 'Gabirlenzeis'. There are no details given for the events leading to his death. He may be an ancestor of later Turnbells who were tenants of Hornshole. He may be the 'Ade Trumbull' listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with David and Robert, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of Angus responsible for their pledges. Adam (15th C.) member of the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam 'Gaberlunzie' (d.bef. 1509) killed along with Adam in Chamberlain Newton (so they may have been related). Andrew Crozier was hanged in 1509 for this and other crimes. No information is given about this incident and no clues as to the reason for his nickname, which is recorded as 'Gabirlenzies'. He was surely related to Walter, 'gabirlenze'. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. The other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick. Note that there was also a separate Adam listed, but neither had another designation, and so it is impossible to know if they were the same as any of the other contemporary Adam's. Adam (15th/16th C.) witness to the notorial instrument of 1501/2 for the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, relating to their lands of Feu-Rule in the Barony of Cavers. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of Walter in Stouslie. In 1502 William in Crumhaugh was surety for him at the Justice-aire, and was fined for his non-appearance. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded among the men who were put to the horn in 1502 for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Mark Ker of Dolphinton, George of Hallrule, while John in Wells was also listed and so surely related. Adam (15th/16th C.) described as 'of Billerwell' in 1502. In 1502 he was 'de bullirwell' when he was fined for failing to produce Ninian in court among a group of men charged with the murder of Robert Oliver. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Peter Turnbull in Bonchester. In 1506 he had remission for 'resetting, supplying and intercommuning' with William Turnbull of Minto, as well as with his accomplices, the rebels Mark, Edward and Walter Turnbull. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale; he was there recorded as being 'in Bullerwell'. George Turnbull was Laird of Billerwell in 1589, so presumably a descendant. Adam (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with George and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbells to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant in Wolfelee who was listed among the many Turnbells given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; James was also listed there as tenants of 'Wolfley', and so may have been related. Adam (d.bef. 1532) killed along with Thomas Dalgleish, when a group led by Clem Crozier, Martin Crozier, Hob Elliot of Ramsieggill, Sym Forester and Johnnie Forester from Liddesdale raided 'within the boundis of Teviotdale'. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Adam (16th C.) listed along with Gavin in 1534 when they were entered into ward in Blackness

Castle, with Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme being discharged of the bond he had made to the King for their good behaviour. It seems likely they were either father and son or brothers (with his name given first), but it is not clear where they were from exactly (the names match the Turnbills of Billerwell, for example). Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1552/3 as 'Adam Trumbull of Woulie' when he had a bond with John Ker of Ferniehirst and others to remain within Jedforest. He is probably the Adam who was tenant in Wolfelee (along with Walter) when listed among many Borders men in the remission of 1526 for riding against the Earl of Arran. Probably the same Adam signed a bond in 1557 (along with others) with John Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in William Nixon; he is there recorded as 'Adam Trumbill in Wolvie'. Adam of Billerwell (16th C.) signed a bond in 1557 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, to bring in the thief William Nixon. Probably the same Adam of 'Bullerwell' is recorded in 1571 when he had to appear before the Privy Council and was warder. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbills and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbills (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. He may be the same 'Adam Trumbill of Billirwall' who was part of the 'pacification' granted by the King to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and his friends and servants in 1581. He must have been related to the Adam recorded a couple of decades later. Adam (16th C.) tenant in Westwood. He is recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. He could be related to the later Lairds of Westwood. Adam (16th C.) son of Sandy. He was recorded in 1567, along with Hector 'in Turnbull' (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as 'Isobel's Robin', 'Part Pursell' and 2 Olivers. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. Adam (d.bef. 1578) recorded as 'in Belsis' when he witnessed a charter in 1549, hence he was presumably tenant of Belses. The charter was for Robert Scott of Howpasley granting Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbills and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Hallrule, Billerwell and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbills (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill), not to harm each other. Also in 1576 there was a pledge made before the Privy Council, that his sons 'Hekie', David, George and John would refrain from thieving. In 1576/7 his servant Patrick Bennet was attacked by Walter in Firth, servant of John of Minto (despite the bond that had been signed between the feuding Turnbull branches); his son Hector was also mentioned, with the pair appearing personally. His sons were all declared fugitives in 1578/9. Hector is recorded in 1580 having a brother-in-law called Patrick Richardson, and so presumably this was the husband of one of his daughters. Adam (16th C.) described as a 'clerk' at Hallrule in 1562, when his house and yard were part of the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. The Adam of half a century later must be a descendant. Adam of 'Yaton Scott' (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. Andrew was also listed as being at the same location, and although it is unclear where this was, most of the others were Turnbills of Rulewater. Adam 'Reid Adie' (16th C.) tenant in Over Hassendean. He is recorded in 1576 when Sir Thomas of Bedrule was surety for him, promising that he would refrain from theft; the pledge was stated to have been broken in 1578/9. He is also recorded in 1583/4 among men of that area cited for failing to appear to give evidence relating to charges against sons of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. Adam (16th/17th C.) son of Stephen, from whom he inherited the right of rental of the lands of 'Wowlie and Wowahoplie' (i.e. 'Wolfelee' and 'Wolfehopelee') in 1590. He resigned the rental in favour of Sir William Cranston in 1607. In 1616 he was witness to a bond between William Scott of Todrig and Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh, where he is referred to as Adam 'called of the Wowly'. He was surely related to the Adam in Woollee of the 1550s. Adam (16th/17th C.) referred to as 'sumtyme servand to the said Walter Trumbill of Raflat' in the 1603 trial of George Turnbull of Belses. George was accused of killing a son of Walter of Rawflat, and shooting another son, and also of capturing him 'binding him with fetteris, and hinging him be the feit and schouderis, ouer ane balk [beam], for the space of xij [12] dayis, quhairthrow his feit rottit fra him'. What became of him is unrecorded. Probably the same Adam, servant to Walter Turnbull of Rawflat was accused by the widow of Mark Turnbull of Nether Bonchester in 1617 of burning the 'writs and evidents' of the lands there, as part of harassment of her by Walter of Rawflat. It is possible he was the brother of David in Belses (with other brothers George and John) recorded in 1581 and 1583, when they were accused of attacking the farm of Rawflat. He could also be the brother of 'Geordie in Belseis' listed in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties.

Adam (16th/17th C.) tenant of Wauchope in Rulewater, recorded in a court case of 1605. He may have been related to the George who was also a tenant there, and perhaps more distantly related to the Turnbulls of Wauchope themselves.

Adam of Billerwell (16th/17th C.) one of the members of an inquest of 1610 to judge the proper succession to James Hamilton's lands of Appotside and Tythehouse. In 1619 he had a bond, along with his son George, with John Haliburton of Mertoun, and this was witnessed by 'my brother' Andrew Turnbull. His son George was witness to a sasine of 1612. Probably the same Adam 'in Bullerwall' was one of the men accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in 1598–1605, when his brother Andrew was also listed; both were 'past fra', i.e. the case was not pursued. He then served as surety for the other Turnbulls. In 1617 he was transcribed being 'of Bullereule [Bedreule]' when complained about along with his eldest son George at the Privy Council; it seems more likely this was Billerwell than Bedrule. John Ainslie, maltman in Jedburgh, complained that he still owed him money and should be apprehended. Adam of Abbotrule (16th/17th C.) involved in a dispute in 1610, where Andrew Turnbull accused him and others of grazing their animals on his lands at Stonedge and Harwoodtown. He is probably the Adam, called 'of Tounheid of Abbotreull', who had a bond with Walter of Bedrule in 1617/8. He had a bond with John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton, signed in Hawick in 1619 and registered in 1624. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'in Bonechester tounhead' (i.e. Bonchester Townhead) in 1618 when he witnessed a bond between Walter of Bedrule and Adam of Abbotrule Townhead. In 1619 he had a bond with 'his good friend, Walter Lorane in Gattascot'. He may be the 'Adam Trumble, called the As [presumably Ass], in Bunchester' who in 1619 was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor (or the man listed as 'Ninian's Adie' or the one just listed as Adam). Perhaps the same Adam is recorded being in '...head', among Bonchester landowners, in the 1643 valuation for Abbotrule Parish; his lands were valued at £25. Adam 'Ninian's Adie' (16th/17th C.) listed in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. His name was given as 'Ninian's Ady' (so his father was Roland) among several Turnbulls from Bonchester. Adam 'Adie' (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh, the Kirklands and Swanshiel. However, there may have been other Adams in the same family (uncles and cousins) at the same time, so it is uncertain this is all the same man. He could be the Adam recorded in Hartshaugh in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men (including Hector in Hartshaugh) under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. In 1623 he was served heir to his grandfather Hector of Hartshaugh in the lands of 'Vicarilandis' (i.e. Kirklands) in Hobkirk, as well as Wester Swanshiel and 'Clerksbankis'. He is recorded as 'in Hartshaugh' in the Circuit Court of 1622 when (along with another Adam Turnbull!) he was caution for James Turnbull of Braidhaugh, who was found guilty of stealing 24 sheep from 'Hairrlesyd'. In 1623 he was recorded as the miller 'in Hartshauchmylne' when Lyle Turnbull gave security for him and when he was acquitted of stealing cattle from Gilbert Elliott's land at 'Leisburne'. It is unclear when he succeeded his father in the lands that had been in the family for many generations. However, it appears that he neglected to 'enter' with his superior and so in 1630 he lost Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Hobkirk (to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), although he held on to Wester Swanshiel. He is still recorded as owner of Wester Swanshiel in 1643, when it was valued at £32 10s; he may also have been the Adam 'in Swansheil' who was tenant in the other part of Swanshiel, valued at £66 13s 4d. It is likely he is the same Adam recorded in Easter Swanshiel and Wester Swanshiel on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (even although he may have been deceased by then). Adam (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with David as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. Adam 'Clerk' (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester according to the 1643 county valuation. His lands were valued at £25. He was distinct from the 2 Adams recorded at Bonchester Townhead, but could be the same as the Adam recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1663. He could be related to Thomas 'called Clack' who is recorded as a landowner in Abbotrule in 1663. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownhead along with Walter in 1643. The lands were valued at £140. Adam of Ruletownfoot (17th C.) recorded in 1643 in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. Adam (17th C.) listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £104. He may have been related to Walter and William who also held Raperlaw lands at the same time. Adam (17th C.) recorded on the Land Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish in about 1663. Although difficult to transcribe it appears that he also paid for his part of Hallrule in 1663. Perhaps the same Adam 'in Roull' was listed on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Abbotrule Parish when he paid tax on £70. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick in 1673 when a woman was fined for telling him to hang himself and calling him 'ane land loppon lowne'. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Nether Tofts. His will and that of his wife, Margaret Douglas, are recorded in 1682. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Hawthornside. In 1678 he paid tax on £40 at Hawthornside. In 1684 his son (whose name is not legible or recorded) was listed among people declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. The will of his wife Isobel Shiel is recorded in 1688. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Elfhaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Adam married to Jane Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Janet (b.1670); Thomas (b.1673); Robert (b.1681); Michael (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1687). Adam (1653/4–1732) son of William of Bonchester. He was tenant farmer at Doorpool. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1731, aged 75. His only daughter Helen married Walter Scott, 4th Laird of Nether Bonchester. Along with his father and wife, he was buried in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Adam (d.1716) merchant at the Westport in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright George Haliburton in 1704. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Bessie (b.1701) and Elspeth (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were carrier Andrew Clerk and innkeeper Francis Elliot. Probably the same merchant Adam married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1714. In 1716 his widow presented their son Adam for baptism in Hawick, with witnesses 'student' Patrick Cunningham and Beadle Walter Scott. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hassendeanbank. He may have been son of William of Cockerheugh. He was succeeded in the tenancy by his son James and then his grandson, who was also Adam. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1714. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Helen Nichol in Minto in 1716. Adam (17th/18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His children included: Christian (1718/9–35); and John (1723/4–45). Andrew, who was also miller at Mangerton Mill, was probably also his son. They are buried at Ettleton. Adam of Denesyde (17th/18th C.) last Turnbull Laird of Denesyde (also called 'Nether Hawthornside'). He is said to have been a Jacobite supporter in the rebellion of 1715, probably accompanying William Kerr ('Bitterbeard') in fighting with the Old Pretender. As a consequence he was encouraged to leave (or possibly run out of) the area by Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, who bought up all the 'wadsets' which the estate was under and advised him to leave the country. Eliott agreed to keep 'St. Mary's Well' as a roadside watering place, and also gave him some money for his journey. He went south with his family, first to Tarsfoot in Tyneside. His son Thomas was a weaver there, but some of his grandchildren returned to the local area. He may be the same Adam of Hawthornside whose son (first name not given) was among those listed as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Adam (18th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Oliver. Adam (18th C.) resident of Kilnknowe. His wife Christian Lorraine died in 1762 and was buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. Adam (d.bef. 1769) schoolmaster at Abbotrule, recorded in 1769 when his daughter Elizabeth married Finlay Stewart in Edinburgh. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Stevenson and their children included: Helen (b.1768); and Walter (b.1770). Adam (1766–1810) tenant of Hassendeanbank. His father was James, who also farmed there, with his grandfather being Adam and great-grandfather probably William, tenant of Cockerheugh. He is probably the Adam recorded at Hassendean on the 1787–94 Horse Tax Rolls and also in 1797, where he is listed as owner of 8 farm horses. He also paid the dog tax at Hassendean in the same year. He may be the 'Mr Turnbull' whose servant Thomas Hill was listed on the Militia ballot in 1801. In 1788 he married Betty, daughter of James Scott of Skelfhill. They had at least 12 children, including: Jean (1790–1874); James (1791–1854); Robert (1792–1822); William (b.1794), who farmed at Falnash and Merrylaw; Adam Ogilvie (1796–1835), who became an architect; Gideon Pott (1797–1841), who died in Berbice (Guyana); Agnes (1799–1829), who married Pater Brodie; Gavin (b.1800–54); Thomas (1802–81); Helen (1803–79); Betsy (1805–63); and John Robson (1807–66), Master of Works at Windsor Castle. Adam (1760/1–1851) eldest son of Thomas and grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He was a shepherd in Tyneside, but joined his younger brother Thomas on the farm at Grange, on the Abbotrule estate. He leased Midburn (also called 'Africa') in about 1823, and renewed the lease along with his eldest son Thomas in 1848. He is listed at 'Africa' in 1851, but must have died soon after the census was taken. At that time the farm consisted of 50 acres of arable land, 100 acres of pasture and employed 3 people. He married in Tyneside and had a daughter Margaret (who was brought up by her aunt at East Fodderlee and married James Stewart) and another daughter who died young. He secondly married Mary, daughter of John Turnbull, farm worker at Stonedger, and she died in 1852, aged 74. His children with his 2nd wife included Thomas (who farmed at Midburn), John (who married Jane Nichol and moved to Selkirk) and Michael (who married Beatrice Nichol, sister of his brother's wife). Adam (18th/19th C.) tailor in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He could be the Adam from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Adam Ogilvie (1796–1835) son of Adam and Betsy Scott. Like his brother John Robson, he attended Minto School and trained to be an architect. He was a builder in Edinburgh and died there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. His son James Somerville became a doctor and emigrated to New Zealand. Adam (b.1817/8) grocer and spirit dealer on the Mid Row. He was at about No. 4 in 1851 and was listed as a grocer on the Back Row in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Helen and their children included William, Robert, James and Alexander. Bailie Adam (1867–1946) son of Robert and Margaret Wilson. He was a teacher in Hawick. He was also well known on both the rugby and cricket fields. He played full back for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1880s. He was on both the South of Scotland teams in Rugby Union and Cricket. He took over from George Wilson as the second Secretary of Hawick R.F.C. He also refereed at least 7 international rugby matches. He also acted as Session Clerk to Hawick Parish. He was a member of the committee of the Roxburgh and Selkirkshire Unionist Association. He married Helen Paterson (1867–1942), and they had 4 children, including Rev. Robert Wilson (b.1893) and Helen (b.1895). He became blind 11 years before his death. Adam (19th/20th C.) stood in as Left-Hand Man in 1897, perhaps the only time this honour was given to someone who had not already been Cornet. It is said that he was meant to be Cornet in 1898, but either fell out with the organisers, or turned it down because his sister died about then. In any case he refused to act as Left-Hand Man again in 1898. Agnes (16th C.) daughter and heiress of Walter in Dalkeith. She married Thomas Home, also from Dalkeith, and in about 1567 she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewlands in Rulewater. She passed them to Andrew, son of David Turnbull of Wauchope, who may have been a relative. Agnes (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. She was probably from the Ashkirk area. Agnes 'White Ersed Nannie' (d.1805) her death is recorded in the Hawick parish records (along with her nickname!). There are several possible births of Agneses that could be her. Agnes (b.c.1790) keeper of a lodging-house at 36 High Street. She was married to William, also known as 'Wull the Bellman'. Their children included Mary, William and Isabella. In 1861 she was a widow, still running the lodging house. Agnes (b.1814) daughter of Wilton Schoolmaster James and Margaret Dalglish. She was teacher at the 'Image Garden' school in the 1840s, probably assisted by her mother, her father having died in 1834. She may have married David Host. The school building can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races, but probably did not last more than a few years. In Slater's 1852 directory, she is listed as teacher at Wilton Cottage. Alexander (15th C.) notary public in the Fife area in 1488/9. It is unclear how he might have been related to local Turnbells. He may be the same 'Alexandro Turnbull' among the witnesses to the charter granting Harden to John Turnbull in 1482, made at Kirkcaldy by Henry Wardlaw of Wilton. He was notary public for the diocese of St. Andrews in 1506, when there was a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) held by Melrose Abbey. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1493 being 'in Wowlee', i.e. resident of Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. The next entry was for Robert, also in Wolfelee. Alexander (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being in Unthank, which is presumably the farm in Rulewater. He was cited again at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was probably related to Henry, who was also recorded in Unthank in 1494/5. Alexander (15th C.) son of Andrew of Dryden. In 1494/5 he had remission for resetting Adam 'howatson' and Robert Jackson, who had stolen sheep from James Ker in Fas-theugh and helped the 'Thieves and Traitors of Levyn' in killing the wife and 2 sons of Thomas Middlemas of Ploro, as well as stealing a long (and very detailed) list of his goods. He could perhaps be the same man as Alexander in Commonsides, who served as surety for Adam Howison in Commonsides, also in 1494/5; Alexander in Commonsides was also recorded in 1502 when he was surety (along with John in Dryden) for Philip in Whithope and David in Carlinpool. He is recorded in the Treasurer's accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 'bel-lentyne' at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He probably lived at Bellendean. He was allowed to 'componer' for communing with 'the traitors of Leven'. His brother 'Blinnd John' was also recorded as 'sande turnbulis brother of bellentyne' in 1494/5, when he contributed 2 cows for the expenses of the Justice-aire. Alexander (15th C.) son of Robert. He was recorded in 1494/5 when Thomas Lauder of Todrig had remission for several crimes, including resetting him. He had apparently stolen cattle from Thomas Yair in 'laudoma'. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant in 'dodrik', which is probably Dodrig to the south of Hawick. In 1502 Patrick, son of Adam Scott in Harwoodhill, had remission for stealing 15 sheep from him. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among men who Marjory Turnbull was convicted of resetting. His name appears after John, to whom he was probably related, but it is not stated where they were from. Alexander 'Sandy' (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1503 as 'sande turnbull in braidlee', his farm probably being the one in the Borthwick valley (although those near Ashkirk and in the Hermitage valley are also possible). He was listed among men who were fined (in his case 8 cows and a horse) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with Sym and Rob also listed in the same place (and hence probably related). Probably the same Alexander was tenant at Broadlee in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig was convicted of stealing 2 horses from him. Alexander 'Sandy' (16th C.) recorded in 1567 when his son Adam was among men who David Home of Wedderburn had to present to answer charges brought by Englishmen. Alexander (d.c.1600) farmer at Crosscleuch, near Fulton in Bedrule Parish. He is listed as deceased in a letter of 1602 which states that 'the ferme hes beine waist sen the pest tyme', suggesting that he had died of the Plague. His wife was Margaret Cockburn. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. The baptism of his son Walter with Isobel Scott is recorded in 1650, with the label 'for:'. The witnesses were George Turnbull and Andrew Routledge. Alexander (1691/2–1761) married to Helen Murray, who died in 1780, aged 66. His son Thomas was a merchant in Denholm and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Alexander (18th C.) tenant in Langraw. His son was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738. Alexander (d.1810) recorded as 'Brother to the Laird of Tofts' when he died in Hawick. It is unclear who his brother might have been, but perhaps Anthony. Alexander (18th/19th C.) baker and keeper of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. In the 1834 electoral roll he was also joint proprietor of houses with joiner John Turnbull. Alexander 'Auld Sandy' (1791–1859) 5th son of James and Betty Adamson and brother of the schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He was a carrier, based at Nursery House, Bonchester Bridge, initially helping his grandfather George Adamson. In 1851 he is listed as 'Carrier & Grocer' at '1 Woodside' in Bonchester. In later life he moved to Kirkton, where he died. In 1817 he married Elspeth ('Betty'), daughter of George Alexander, farmer at Bonchester farm. Their children were: James (b.1817); Helen (b.1819); and George (b.1822), who emigrated to New Zealand and died in Dunedin; Agnes (b.1824); Isobel (b.1826); Elizabeth (b.1829); Ebenezer Alexander (1831–93), who died in Leith; and Margaret (b.1834). Alexander Rutherford (1835–97) of the firm Turnbull the dyers. He was son of the company's founder, John. In 1861 he was master dyer, employing 30 people. He married Janet Armstrong Hume and their children were: Annie Hume (b.1865), who married Town

Clerk John Ritchie Purdom; John Elliot (b.1868); James Armstrong (b.1871); and Arthur Rutherford (b.1873). Alexander Dobson (1853–1932) hosiery manager, he was son of George and Jessie Mark. He was cashier at Innes, Chambers & Co. He had both Wellogate Villa and Woodside built for him by David and Peter Dalgleish (Galashiels builders, who were his brothers-in-law). He was a member of the Hawick Archæological Society. He is recorded as ‘Alex. D.’, cashier at 2 Teviotside Terrace, where he died. He married his second cousin Mary Warwick. They had 8 children, including: William Dickson of the Crescent Cleaning Co., George, law clerk in Edinburgh; Keith; and Mary (b.1881), who married Provost James D. Lawson of Pittenweem. Alexander (b.1867) born at Newton, Jedburgh. He worked as a servant on the Wolfelee estate. In 1893 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Little, shepherd at Gorrenberry. Their children included John, Andrew, Helen and Alexander. Alison (16th C.) daughter and heir of John, Burgess of Selkirk. She is recorded in 1544 and 1545 when served as heir to her deceased father. She shared a tenement with Margaret, another heir (whose relationship is not stated). She immediately sold her share to William Elliot. Andrew of Dryden (15th C.) witness to a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. He is recorded as ‘Andrea Turnbule de Driden’, his lands probably being in upper Teviotdale. The Andrew of Dryden recorded 4 decades later may be the same man, but is more likely to be his son. Andrew (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Stephen and John, who directly follow him, or Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Andreas Turnebule’. It is possible he is the same as Andrew of Dryden. Andrew (15th C.) witness to the sasine of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is recorded as being ‘of Hawick’ and Thomas of Stouslie was another witness. It is possible he is the same man as Andrew of Stouslie. Andrew (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1490 sasine in which Robert Scott purchased a ‘tenement’ of land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He is described as ‘Andrew Trumbull of Stowisle’, which is presumably Stouslie. He must be related to the Thomas of Stouslie recorded in 1488. Andrew (15th C.) recorded at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh as being at Bonchester. George, son of Walter in Bonchester, was surety for him, and he also served as surety for himself, being fined for non-appearance. Probably the same ‘Dand’ is recorded in Bonchester in 1503, listed among men who were fined (in his case 2 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh; Crystal (son of Robert) and David were also listed being in Bonchester and hence perhaps related. Andrew of Dryden (15th C.) recorded as being ‘of Dridan’ in 1494/5 when his son Alexander had a remission for raids on Ker at Fastheugh and Middlemas at Ploro. He was also recorded in that same year when his son John was named among men who John Scott of Deloraine was accused of associating with. This is probably the Dryden in upper Teviotdale. He was surely related to John of Dryden, recorded in 1498, and probably a descendant of the earlier Andrew of Dryden. Andrew (15th C.) recorded as being called ‘calvus’ (i.e. ‘bald’) in 1494/5 when he had remission for burning and stealing from Fastheugh, for resetting the ‘Traitors of Levyn’ (i.e. Englishmen) and helping them in a raid on Hangingshaw. The Laird of Whithope acted as surety. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote. In 1502 he was among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while John and William in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. Presumably the same Andrew in Gatehousecote is also listed on the 1516 remission that a number of Turnbulls had for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother William is also listed, as well as Thomas, Patrick and David, who were also at Gatehousecote, and so possibly related. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant in Bedrule in 1502, when he was listed among Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in court to answer to the charge of murdering Robert Oliver. Andrew in Gatehousecote was listed separately and hence was a different man. It is unclear how he might have been related to Thomas, Laird of Bedrule at the time. His surety was Mark Ker of Dolphinton. Also in 1502 he was ‘in bethroull’ when he served as surety for David, brother of the Laird of Bedrule at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 he was among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Mark Ker of Dolphinton. He was separate from Andrew in Gatehousecote and

Andrew in Bedrule, who were also listed. Andrew 'Dand' (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1505 at the Justice-aire. Thomas of Bedrule, David of Wauchope, William of Minto and Bartholomew in Belses were joint sureties to enter him to the next court in Selkirk, after he was 'borowit out of the castell of Edinburgh'. Also in 1505 the Chancellor of Scotland, John Murray of Falahill and David Pringle of Tinnis were sureties for Richard Lawson, the Justice Clerk, to enter him at the Justice-aire in Selkirk; he is there 'alias dand' and given the men involved in the pledge, he must have been of some importance. He is probably the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew 'Bellit Andrew' (15th/16th C.) tenant in Highchesters. He is recorded as 'bellyt androu' in 1503 among men who were fined (in his case 2 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. His nickname probably indicated that he was bald. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Sir Andrew', chaplain, in 1512 when he was witness to a charter where Roger Langlands of Wilton sold Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was thus probably the Chaplain of Wilton. Possibly the same 'Sir Andrew' was witness to a document at Kelso Abbey in about 1520. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with Adam and George (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbills to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Overchester, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbills had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. His son Thomas was also listed. Other tenants there were Mark, Archibald, Mark younger, Richard, David and Ninian. Andrew (15th/16th C.) brother of David, tenant of Hassendeanbank. He is on the 1516 remission for Turnbills and others who may have assisted the Homes. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rule, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbills for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. Ninian was also a tenant there, so possibly related. Andrew (d.bef. 1535) recorded in 1535 as 'Andree alias David Turnbull' in the trial of Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. Along with Thomas, he was tenant in Town-of-Rule and said to have been cruelly killed by Scott and the men he brought in from Liddesdale. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as being 'in Hornishill' (presumably Hornshole) in 1562/3 when Alexander Lord Home tried to have several men removed as 'pretended tenants' from the local lands for which he was superior. He may be related to other Turnbills who were connected with this place. Andrew (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as 'Andro', and he is listed after George, to whom he was surely related. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) son of Eckie (i.e. Hector) of Belses. In 1580 he, his father, and his father's brother-in-law Patrick Richardson were accused by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, of murdering her husband John Hamilton and were denounced as rebels. In a separate record of 1580, he was convicted, along with John Young 'in the Cames' of murdering and stealing from John Hamilton of 'Benestoun'. Young was hanged, but being still a minor he was delivered to Andrew Lindsay to be kept in ward. His name is given as 'Andro Trumbill' and also as 'Dand Turnbull, sone naturall' to Hector. Probably the same 'Andro Turnbull, bastard sone to Heckie of Belseis' and (presumably a duplicate entry) 'Andro turnbull, bastard sone to umquhile Ekkie in Belseis' was listed in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes. He is probably the Andrew in Belses for whom Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst acted as surety in 1587, as well as for George and David in Belses. Andrew (16th C.) son of David of Wauchope. He is recorded in a charter of 1567 when the lands of Templehall and Brewlands were feued to him by the superior James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) on resignation by Agnes Turnbull and her husband Thomas Home. The feu was extended to his nieces Jean and Beatrix Turnbull in 1604, daughter of his brother Walter of Templehall. Andrew 'Spangand Andro' (16th C.) listed as one of the 10 men accused in 1581 of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. His nickname may refer to 'springing' an arrow. There is no information about which branch of the Turnbills he belonged to. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in 'Yaton Scott', listed in 1581 (along with Adam of the same place) among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. It is unclear where this location was, but presumably in Rulewater. Andrew (16th C.) son of John of Philiphaugh and brother of Mark. In 1579/80 he was brother to Mark, 'apparent heir of Philiphaugh', when he witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. Also in 1570/80 he was son of John of Philiphaugh when he witnessed a promise and brother of Mark when he witnessed another proclamation. Sir Andrew of Bedrule, 'Auld Bedrule' (16th C.) mentioned in the 'Raid of the Redeswire', so presumably Laird in the late 1500s. However, his relationship with other near contemporary Lairds of Bedrule is unclear, and it is possible that he never existed – 'But little harness had we there; But auld Badrule had on a jack, And did right weel, I you declare, With all his Trumbills at his back' [T]. He was supposed to be such a notorious thief that Home and Kerr refused to sign a bond of alliance with the Turnbills and Rutherfords, claiming that he had stolen cattle from Home of Wedderburn. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) tenant in Troneyhill. He is recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbills and others (from Minto, Bewlie and Kames), who swore not to harm another group of Turnbills (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters). Watt from there is also listed and hence surely related. Andrew (16th C.) uncle of William of Barnhills. He is listed in 1584/5 as 'Andro Turnbull of the Bernhills' along with his nephews William, Robert, Gavin and Hector, among Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Andrew of Howden (16th C.) listed among the Border Liards who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. His brothers George and Robert are also listed. Probably the same Andrew 'in Howdene' is listed in 1579 as a debtor to the deceased James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. He also witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80, along with his brother Robert and was a witness in 1581 and 1582. Andrew 'Andro' of Bewlie (d.1601) son of Walter of Bewlie and brother of Robert and Hector. He was probably among the group of Turnbills accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. In 1595 he was recorded along with his father Walter and brothers Robert and Hector, among Turnbills and Davidsons, when John Ker of Barnhills complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhills; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. In 1601 he was 'Andro Turnbull of Bewlie' when accused of attacking a Bailie of Jedburgh and his son, and later, with his brother Hector, returning to harass the Bailie, with 'grit nowmeris of thair freindis upoun the streitis and in houssis of the said burgh, awaiting to have assisted thame in case thay had bene straitit'; he was committed to Edinburgh Tolbooth. There was then a proclamation posted at 'Jedburghe, Hawik, Selkirk, Peiblis, Lauder and other places' asking for any other complaints to be lodged against him and his brother Hector. Thomas, heir apparent of Minto, acted in 1601 as cautioner for him and his brother Hector, both 'called of Bewlie', that they should be lawful and also pay a fine for shooting pistols. Also in 1601 he is listed along with Mark of Bewlie, Eckie of Firth, Eckie in Stonedge and James, servant to the Laird of Minto, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present them at Edinburgh Tolbooth 'to answer such crymes as thay wer suspect gilty of'; Kerr had to pay a penalty for failing to produce Eckie of Stonedge, so presumably he and the others were imprisoned. He was beheaded at the Market Cross of Edinburgh for his role in the murder of Thomas Ker and George Gardner in Jedburgh. This was part of a feud between Turnbills and Kerrs, in which 30 Turnbills and associates attacked specific Kerrs on Jedburgh Fair Day, perhaps in retaliation for the earlier murder of Henry Oliver. He lost 'the lytill fingar of his left hand' in the fight. The court case was long and complicated, and it seems clear that the legal system was stacked in favour of the Kerrs. Andrew (16th/17th C.) brother of Adam of Billerwell. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbills accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. However, the case against him and some of the others was dropped, with the main Turnbills of Wauchope being pursued instead. Andrew (16th/17th C.) heir to Hector of Stonedge. In 1610 he is recorded in a legal dispute with Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and others for having their animals graze his lands at Stonedge and Harwoodtown. In 1611 he was 'Andro Turnbull of Stanielege' when John Riddell, younger of that ilk was cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Bonchester. In 1612 he and his sons Thomas and John, along with John 'in Elscheuch' complained to the Privy Council that John, Lord Ker of Jedburgh, had unfairly imprisoned them, and they were ordered to be released. The details of the complaint were that Sir John Ker of Littledean, angry that he would not yield the farm at Gatehousecote, captured him and took him to Jedburgh, with the Laird of Bonjedward securing his release. Then later in 1612 Ker and his servants drove him and his family off Gatehousecote, causing his injured son Andrew 'to be taken out of the house in a pair of blankets, and to be cast on the feildis', as well as assaulting his son Thomas 'with batons'. Later John Ker's son William led an assault on him at Bonchester, capturing him again and having him put in the stocks in Jedburgh for 8 days, then apprehended his son Andrew, and meanwhile the Kers harvested all the crops. Ker of Littledean was found to have overstepped his authority and was sentenced to imprisonment in Edinburgh. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule, he was also known as David. He was a butcher and Burgess of Jedburgh. In 1616 he had a bond with James 'called of Bedrule' (probably his uncle) and Mark in Hartshaugh. In 1619 he witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule and George Ker of Cavers Carre. Andrew (d.1622) recorded in 1618 along with George in Belses when the curators of the young Andrew Scott of Aikwood complained that they had not paid the profits of the lands of Hawthornrig for the previous 2 years. He is recorded as 'Andro in Belsches' when he was tried for perjury and bribing witnesses Robert Ker, David Turnbull and James Young. They had apparently all lied in a case of theft brought by him against William and Walter Middlemas. He was sentenced to execution in Edinburgh. Andrew of Bewlie (17th C.) presumably related to earlier Turnbolls of Bewlie. He married Marion, daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, according to a marriage contract of 1627. In 1628 there was caution paid for him by Thomas of Knowe to ensure that he did not molest Adam Scott of Burnfoot, Walter Scott of Midshiels, or their tenants and servants. In 1640 he paid off a debt to his step-father and wife (probably part of the marriage contract). He was recorded as owner of Bewlie, valued at '56 bolls victual, half bear meal, bear £6, meal £8 [actually £7] the boll', corresponding to £364. Either he or his descendant was recorded as Andrew of Bewlie in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls when he paid tax on £367. Andrew (16th/17th C.) servant to James Ker of Bewlie. He is recorded in 1622, along with Ker and other servants of his when there was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Andrew (17th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £54. He could be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (17th C.) miller at Appotside Mill. He witnessed a Rulewater sasine of 1654, and may have been related to the Turnbull tenants of Harwood and Templehall who were also witnesses. It is also likely he was related to the man of the same name who was miller at Woollie Mill in the 1680s and 90s. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick who married Janet Miller. Their children included Thomas (b.1648), Isobel (b.1651) and John (b.1654). The witnesses in 1648 were David 'Badie' and William Briggs. Andrew (17th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1676 Samuel Newbie was found guilty of assaulting him and another mason, Andrew Wilson. Andrew (d.1691) tenant at 'Woollie-mill' (i.e. Wolfelee Mill) in 1684 when his servant John Hall was listed among those declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. His was one of the oldest gravestones in Hobkirk Kirkyard, the inscription being 'Here lys Andrew Turnbull, miller in Wollie Miln'. His wife Elizabeth Lillie died in 1719. He could have been father of Robert, who was tenant at Wolfelee Mill later. His descendants were tenants of Hallrule Mill for 3 generations. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (17th C.) cooper in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was living on the west-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He could be the Andrew, married to Margaret Chisholme, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Robert (b.1670); an unnamed child (b.1676); John (b.1679); Andrew (b.1681); and Walter (b.1686). He could be the Andrew whose son Adam was baptised in Hawick in 1698, with witnesses William Swan and John Turnbull. Andrew (d.c.1688) tenant in Belses whose will was recorded in 1688. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Appletreehall. In 1680 he was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. In 1681 he married Isobel Scott and their children included: Bessie (b.1681); Janet (b.1684); and Andrew (b.1686). The witnesses in 1686 were George Scott and James (who may have been related to him). Andrew (1667–1747) son of Thomas, he is sometimes described as the last Laird of Bedrule, although he did not actually possess any of the ancestral lands. He farmed at Minto Cleuchhead. He married Jean Scott, who died in 1712, aged 32. He secondly married Agnes Turnbull, and she died in 1732, aged 39. His is the first name included on a memorial tablet to the Turnbolls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk. His children with his 1st wife were: Agnes; Thomas, of the Hawick carpet factory; and William tenant of Ancrum Woodhead. And with his second wife: Jean, who died unmarried; Margaret, died aged 16; Helen (Nellie); Stephen; and John. His brother William was probably tenant at Bedrule Mill. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1702 when he married Helen Paterson. Their children probably included Marion (b.1703). Other possible children are: Jean, daughter of William, who married William Fletcher in Minto in 1732; and Jean, daughter of William, who married Jean Paterson in Minto in 1735. Andrew (17th/18th C.) Hawick mason. He was listed as a mason among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was one of the tradesmen chosen in 1713 by the minister and heritors to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse in Hawick. He was also charged with valuing Andrew Rodger's house for the Kirk Session, perhaps for the same purpose. Around the same time it was presumably the same Andrew who was paid by the Session for erecting a large sign with the name of Betty Thomson, who bequeathed money to the poor of the Parish. In 1715 he was the 'younger' mason (suggesting his father was also Andrew) when he witnessed a baptism for mason John. In 1716 and 1720 he witnessed baptisms for fellow mason John Napier. In 1720 he (along with mason John) witnessed a baptism for gardener Andrew Colwart. Either he (or possibly his son) was the mason Andrew whose illegitimate child Andrew, born to Margaret Aitken, was baptised in 1723; the witnesses were merchant James Aitken (probably Margaret's brother) and Beadle John Scott. In 1725 he witnessed baptisms for John Hardie and Isobel Aitken and for wright Walter Scott. He married the same Margaret, youngest daughter to William Aitken (tenant in Hawick) in 1724 and their children included: Andrew (b.1723); William (b.1726); John (b.1729); and Andrew (again, b.1732). The witnesses in 1729 were John (probably a relative) and George He witnessed an irregular marriage between merchant John Scott and Anna Laing in 1724. Along with John (also a mason), he witnessed a baptism for smith William Young in 1725. Also in 1725 he was a candidate for Session Treasurer. Probably the same Andrew, along with mason John, witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Andrew Scott and Janet Turnbull in 1721, 1726 and 1728, and for smith Robert Turnbull in 1726. He witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness in 1742, when he is 'elder' and another in 1743 for former Bailie Depute Walter Scott, when he was described as 'Senior'. He also witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Gardner in 1743. He was probably related to the earlier mason of the same name, recorded in the 1670s (however, there may be more than 2 generations here). The mason called Andrew who is recorded in the 1740s and 50s seems likely to have been his son. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in Drydenburn. His wife was Helen Beattie and their daughter Helen was born in 1725. Also in 1725 (on the same day) he witnessed a baptism for John Graham in Allanhugh Mill. Andrew (17th/18th C.) servant of Rev. Robert Cunningham. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron. Andrew (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for weaver James Weens. In 1719 he was described as 'merchant att ye Damme bridge' when he married Marion, daughter of gardener James Falsyde. Their children included: James (b.1720); Andrew (b.1721); Margaret (b.1723); Robert (b.1725); James (again, b.1727); and Marion (b.1737). The witnesses in 1720 were William Cunningham (son of the minister) and Walter Scott (servant to the minister), in 1721 were baxters William Hodge and William Mitchel, in 1723 were Bailie James Burn and flesher John Tudhope, and in 1725 were Rev. Charles Telfer and John Scott. Andrew (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1742 he was 'Elder Carrier' when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew 'Younger, Town Post'. He was thus probably father of Hawick's letter deliverer. Andrew (18th C.) recorded as 'Town Post' in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick. It is unclear what this meant, but one possibility is that he was a Burgh Officer (since the Town courier seems unlikely). He was also 'Town Post' in 1742 when one of his children was baptised. He was additionally 'younger' in 1742, suggesting he was son of the 'elder' carrier (and not the same as the family of masons). He married Esther Porteous and their son Andrew was baptised in 1742, with witnesses merchant Robert Scott and carrier Andrew 'Elder' (presumably his father). Andrew 'Little Andrew' (d.1776) mason in Hawick, probably son (or other close relative) of the earlier Andrew. He may be the Andrew 'jun' who witnessed baptisms for workman Alexander Burnet in 1738, for shoemaker Thomas Scott and for gardener Robert Kerr in 1742, for weaver John Thorburn in 1757 and for James Dodds in 1758. Perhaps the same man was listed as Andrew 'senior', mason, when he witnessed a baptism in 1745. Probably the same Andrew, described as 'elder', was paid for fixing part of the steeple of St. Mary's in 1755. Probably the same Andrew was among the men paid in 1755 'for the herd's house building'. In 1757 and 1765 he witnessed baptisms for glazier William Turnbull and his wife Isobel Turnbull (one of whom was probably his relative). In 1759 he was 'mason, senior' when he witnessed a baptism for William Scoon. In 1765 he was 'Sen' when he witnessed a baptism (along with glazier William) for James Clerk. He may be the mason of that name who witnessed baptisms for mason Andrew (probably his son) in 1764, 1765 and 1767, as well as for William Burnet in 1766. Probably the later masons of the same name were his descendants. He is probably the 'old Mason' of this name who died in Hawick in 1776. His son Andrew was also a mason, who died in Hawick in 1810. Andrew (18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His wife Agnes Armstrong died in 1757, aged 39 years, and is buried at Ettleton. He was probably son of Adam, who was earlier miller of Mangerton Mill. Andrew (18th C.) farmer near Hawick. He is recorded in 1789 buying 600 hawthorn plants for a hedge. Andrew (d.1810) mason in Hawick, who was son of Andrew. His father had the nickname 'Little Andrew' on the death register. He could have been the mason Andrew recorded earlier in the 18th century, but there is likely to have been another generation there. In 1763 he married Agnes Deans, who was also from Hawick Parish; in the record he is described as a mason. She may be the daughter of flesher George Deans born in 1735. Their children included: Andrew (b.1764); Margaret (b.1765); Andrew (again, b.1767); and Nichol (b.1769). The witnesses in 1764 were Andrew (probably his father) and Robert Thorburn and in both 1765 and 1767 were Andrew (again) and George Deans (probably his wife's father or brother). He is probably also the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for George Deans (probably his brother-in-law) and the mason Andrew who witnessed another for William Philip, both in 1777. He is probably the deceased mason whose daughter Janet died in 1811. Andrew (18th C.) married Beatrice Turnbull (both from Hawick Parish) in 1761. He may be the same as one of the other Turnbolls. Andrew (d.bef. 1811) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1811 it is recorded that his daughter 'Menie' (probably Wilhelmina) 'Burnt to Death'. He is probably the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Veitch. Their children included Andrew (b.1770). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Alison

(b.1777); Mary (b.1780); and Agnes (b.1786). He is probably the man recorded as 'Anne', married to Margaret Scott, whose son Walter was baptised in 1772, with witnesses merchants Andrew and Walter (possible relatives). He is probably the Andrew whose daughter 'Ailey' died in 1776. Andrew (b.c.1780) labourer at 'Poperburn' in Castleton Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Wright Andrew was also listed there and probably his brother. They likely lived on the Piper Burn. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Thomas (b.1806); Janet (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); William (b.1812); Oliver (b.1816); and Isabella (b.1817). The witnesses in 1808, 1810 and 1812 were wright William Hislop and Janet Paisley; these 3 baptismal entries were recorded together, suggesting that the family were members of one of the secession churches. Andrew (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer based on the High Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Possibly the same Andrew was a stockingmaker with William Wilson on the 1801 ballot list for the Militia; however, there was a separate stocking-maker of the same name also listed in Hawick in 1801. He may be the stockingmaker called Andrew whose young daughter died in Hawick in 1823. He may also be the stockingmaker whose 'bastard' child died in Hawick in 1800. Andrew (1795/6-1827) from Jedburgh, he was Procurator Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He is recorded in letters of 1826 and 1827 preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He married Isabella Mein, who died in 1833, aged 35. Andrew (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. Anna (17th C.) served heir to her brother James of Wauchope in 1674. Anne (b.1812/3) sewing teacher in Minto Parish. In 1841 and 1851 she was living in Minto village with her mother Jane and brothers John and William, who were agricultural labourers. In 1861 she was 'Annie', living with her brother John. Anthony of Knowe (18th C.) probably son of Thomas. He became a Burgess of Selkirk in 1712 when he was 'younger of Knowe'. In 1737 he was the ruling elder of Jedburgh Presbytery at the 1737 General Assembly. He is recorded in a discharge of 1741 for rents paid to Thomas Thomson and in a bill dispute in 1743 with Walter Scott, late of Cockerheugh. In 1742 he witnessed the baptism of Walter Scott, last of Crumhaugh, son of Walter of Crumhaugh, who was then residing at Midshiels; he also witnessed a baptism in the same year for

James Miller in Appletreehall. He paid the window tax in Minto Parish in 1748. Letters of 1748 exists that he wrote to William Elliot of Wolfelee (lawyer in Edinburgh) concerning rents at Huntlaw and in Selkirk. He was probably succeeded by Thomas, who was probably his son, making Thomas's sister Isabella his daughter. Anthony of Tofts (d.1811) recorded as owner of Tofts in 1788. These lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £300, and still listed being owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1813. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Turnbells of Tofts. He is probably the 'Laird of Tofts' whose brother Alexander died in Hawick in 1810. His own death is also recorded in Hawick. Archibald (15th C.) part of the 'retour of inquest' for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbells he belonged to, but he is listed right before Lawrence, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Archibald (15th/16th C.) son of the deceased John, he is recorded in 1499 along with William of Minto having remission from the Privy Council for the murder of 'Johne of Rutherford' and for fleeing to England. Archibald (15th/16th C.) brother of Mark, who was tenant in Overchester. They were listed among several Turnbells who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Probably the same 'Arche turnbull markis bruther' is listed in 1503 among men who were fined (in his case 4 cows and a horse) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Archibald (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee in 1522. Hector is listed before him and possibly related. Archibald (16th C.) occupier of land in Ednholm in 1535, along with William Davidson and James Hobkirk. These lands were inherited by Janet Scott, widow of Walter Scott. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) son and heir of Wat of 'Howatt'. This seems likely to be Howa in Hobkirk Parish. In 1553/4 he pledge for his father, as part of an assurance given by the Rutherfords and Turnbells. His son George was recorded in the inventory of goods and finances for Mark Ker of Kippielaw in 1579. He is probably the 'Archie in Hawla' whose son Gavin was recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. In 1587 he was 'in Howa' when accused of being involved with taking sheep from Sir William Sinclair of Herdmandstoun, or at least of resetting the sheep stolen by his son Gavin. Sir Thomas of Bedrule appeared in his name, but he was found guilty and order to be confined until Sinclair received recompense. He appears to have been father of: Robert, tenant in Hallrule; William in Barnhills; Gavin in Howa; Hector in Stanedge; and George. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) son of Thomas in Hartshaugh. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer charges of raiding into England. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 on a list of defaulters who refused to appear before the judiciary court. He is 'callit Unthank', which is probably the farm in Hobkirk Parish. He may well have been related to iother Turnbells associated with Unthank, e.g. the earlier Leo, and the later Robert and David. Archibald 'Airchie' of Langraw (16th C.) listed in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to answer charges of raiding into England. He is also recorded in 1579 among a group of Turnbells who were accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of 'Pansoun' in England. He was also recorded in 1579/80 in a list of men accused of taking part in raids into England. His caution was the Laird of Bedrule. He was one of those charged to repay 'Johne Selby of Twysill tuicheing the guidis taikin furth of Monylawis'. He could be the 'Archy Trumble' listed along with 'Gib Lorreyne' among men of Teviotdale in complaints of a raid into England in 1597 Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Broomhall in 1759. He married Mary Lamb in 1755 and their children included William (b.1756) and Margaret (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and Robert Easton. Archibald (18th C.) married Anne Rutherford in 1760, the marriage recorded in Wilton and Bedrule Parishes. Archibald (18th C.) portioner of Cavers Parish. In 1771 he borrowed £5 sterling from the Kirk Session. Archibald Oliver (1825–69) eldest son of Thomas Turnbull with his 2nd wife Mary Beattie. He was born at East middle and educated at Denholm and then from the age of 12 at Minto under Mr. Grant. He was said to be Minto School's second best scholar, after 'General Knowledge' Moodie. He became a legal apprentice to George Potts of Hawick at the age of 16. 4 years later he went to Edinburgh University, where he trained as a lawyer. In 1850 he became a junior partner with Elliot's in Jedburgh then set up on his own in 1859. He researched and wrote about the Turnbull clan, and also gave recollections of Denholm, which are related in Tancred's 'Rulewater' book. He is buried in the place of internment of his ancestors at Bedrule. Barrie (20th C.) proprietor of the family grocer's business at 51 High Street. His son John took over the business after he fell seriously ill. Bartholomew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rawflat in 1502 when he (along with George of Hallrule) was surety for Adam, in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton. He is probably the Bartholomew in Belses who was joint surety along with Thomas of Bedrule, David of Wauchope and William of Minto at the Justice-aire in 1505, the 4 men signing a bond at Caerlenrig. Possibly the same 'Bertholomeum Trumbull' was on the 1508 panel for Adam Helpburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. Beatrice (1908–86) wife of Sir Richard, born in Armadale and died in Jedburgh. She is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Beatrix (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Templehall (also called 'Wat o Wauchope'). Along with her sister Jean she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewlands (in Rulewater) from her uncle Andrew (son of David of Wauchope). In 1605 she was represented by her 'tutor' George Turnbull, suggesting she was still a minor at this point. In 1632 she claimed the other half of the lands that had belonged to her by then deceased sister. Charles (b.1736) son of Robert and Euphan Douglas, born in Cavers Parish. He lived in both Wilton and Hawick, working as a gardener. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Euphan (b.1761); Robert and an unnamed child (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1766); Janet (b.1768); and Helen (b.1770). The witnesses in 1768 were Robert Scott (probably a relative of his wife) and Alexander Bunyan. His wife may be the 'Lizzy', spouse of Charles 'now in America', who died in Hawick in 1809. Charles (b.1809/10) from Denholm, he was a joiner in Hawick. He lived at about 20 Kirk Wynd in 1841 and 1851, moving later to Drumlanrig Place. His wife was Isabella and their children included Thomas, Euphemia, Jane, Charles, Mary, Jessie and Isabella. Charles 'Charlie' (1939–2019) born at Crown Lane, son of baker George. He started his 60 year association with the Scouting movement in 1945 and joined the pipe band at the age of 12. He enlisted in the Royal Marines at the age of 18, serving for 19 years and being Pipe Major of the regimental band. He lived in Portsmouth for many years, but returned to Hawick to take over his father's 2 bakery shops. He renewed his association with the Hawick Scouts and was their band's Pipe Major 1975–2005. He wrote a history of the band for their 100th anniversary in 2017. He married Elizabeth Hunt and later Frances

Scott, and had 5 sons. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Christian (b.1805) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Eleanor in Pigot's 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. She and her sister Esther were living with their mother Mary on Buccleuch Street in 1841. In 1851 she was a 'Woollen Seamstress & Annuitant' living on Allars Crescent. Cock (15th C.) son of John in Tofts. He was recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 when he had remission for stealing an ox belonging to William Rennie (or perhaps Rae), from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. His surety was his father John. His name is given as 'Cok turnbule', but it is unclear if 'Cock' was a nickname or a short form of a forename. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford was allowed to compone for several crimes, including assisting and resetting him after this same theft from Minto. Probably the same Cock 'of Fulton' was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing and ox of his. Colin (1975/6–) played football with the Legion and rugby with the P.S.A. and the Harlequins before debuting for Hawick R.F.C. at the age of 19. He also played for the South of Scotland and professionally for the Border Reivers, as well as for club sides in New Zealand, Australia and Canada. He moved to County Durham and works as a kitchen fitter. Crystal (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1503 as 'Cristall t[ur]nbull Robin sone in bonechster'. He was listed among men who were fined (in his case 2 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was presumably son of of Robert, who was tenant in Bonchester. Cuthbert (d.bef. 1530) recorded as already deceased in 1530 when his tenement of land in Selirk is mentioned in relation to lands of Patrick Murray of Falahill. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1496. He may be the Cuthbert recorded in 1579 as once being owner of land in Selkirk. which later was owned by his daughter Janet, who married Cuthbert Brydon. David (15th C.) part of a 'retour of inquest' for the lands of Eilrig in 1426 and for the Barony of Hawick in 1427. Perhaps the same David was on a retour in 1439 for Douglas of Bonjedward. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Turnbells. David (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1484/5 for lands in Mangerton, involving the Scotts of Branhholme. 2 other signatories were Turnbells of Rule Water. He may be the 'Dauid Trumbull' who was among the witnessed for the last will of Sir David

Scott of Branhholme in 1491/2 (and possibly the David who received 10 sheep in the will). Perhaps the same David was listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5; he was explicitly listed with George of Hawick. He may be the same as 'David Trumbull with George Trumbull' listed along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere pledging good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. It is possible that he is the same as David of Wauchope. David (15th C.) son of the Laird of Whithope, probably the one in the Borthwick valley (where Philip, son of William was recorded 40 years earlier). In 1494/5 he was recorded as being 'in Ernheuch' (probably adjacent to Singlie in the Ettrick valley) when he had remission for stealing 14 ewes from Ninian Murray at Kershope and for stealing a white horse from Thomas Forest at Innerleithen; his surety was Walter Scott of Tushielaw. Philip in Whithope was recorded in 1502, and may have been his son or brother. He was probably related to the John of Ern Cleuch recorded in 1464/5. David (15th C.) recorded being 'In hoscot[is]' (i.e. Hoscote) in the 1494/5 Justice-aire. In the accounts for the court held in Selkirk he contributed 1 horse. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and George. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David (15th/16th C.) brother of the Laird of Bedrule (probably Thomas). He is recorded in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh when Andrew in Bedrule was surety for him (and he was additionally surety for himself), but fined for non-appearance. David of Bonchester (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when David Scott (called 'Lady') in Stirkschaws had a remission for several crimes, including being part of a raid with him on the farms at Minto Craigend. Other participants of the raid were Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong and 'other Traitors of Levin and Liddalsdale'. They burned the farms, including 7 horses (presumably in a barn), as well as stealing 16 oxen and cows, 4 horses and sundry other goods. Perhaps the same David 'in bonechester' was mentioned in 1493 as surety for George Turnbull (there and in Stouslie), who was fined for his non-appearance. He was surely related to the John in Nether Bonchester, who is recorded in 1494/5. Probably the same David 'in bonechestir' was recorded in 1502

among many Turnbells and others who were declared as fugitives for their part in the murder of Robert Oliver. The people who were supposed to enter him into the court were George of Hallrule and Robert Elliot in Redheugh, who were fined for his non-appearance. William in Bonchester was also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as William's son Lawrence, and were presumably related. He may be the David for whom Walter, son of Walter Scott had remission in 1502 for resetting in his crimes. He is also recorded being 'in bonchester' in 1503 among men who were fined (in his case 5 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh; Crystal (son of Robert), and Dand are also recorded in Bonchester and hence perhaps related. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Carlinpool in 1502 when he and Philip Turnbull in Whithope had remission for bringing in the 'Traitors of Levin' to raid Fastheugh and Hanginshaw. Their sureties were John in Dryden and Alexander in Commonsides. David (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to a charter signed in Edinburgh in 1506. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. David of Wauchope (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when the Laird of Cranston was fined for failing to arrest him. Also in 1502 he served as surety for several men at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, including George called 'Hawick', Thomas Dunbar and himself. He is recorded as joint surety along with Thomas of Bedrule, William of Minto and Bartholomew in Belses, to enter Andrew at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1505; the 4 men signed a bond to this effect at Caerlenrig. He is also listed in 1504 among men who were given remission for involvement in the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey; David, listed after him, may have been his son. He is also recorded in 1508 as 'Dauid Trumbull de Wauchop' when he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He may be the same Laird of Wauchope who was injured by an arrow at the skirmish at Sclaterford in 1513. He probably had a son of the same name, since David of Wauchope is recorded in 1530 and 1567. David (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hassendeanbank recorded on the 1516 list of Turnbells and others who had remission for any part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Andrew is also listed. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Overchester, listed among many Turnbells who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Several other Turnbells are also listed there, and so probably related, with Mark apparently the main tenant, and William and John his sons. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbolls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Thomas and Patrick. David of Wauchope (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1530, along with Walter Turnbull of 'Howay', Philip Nesbit of that Ilk, Robert Haig of Bemersyde and others. He may be the 'lard of Wawchop' listed among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. He is recorded in 1549 when his brother Hector was granted 2 husband lands in Appltreehall by Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers. Thomas (possibly his brother or other close relative) was pledge for him in 1553/4. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather's lands of Branhholme and Buccleuch. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. He is probably the David of Wauchope among those who appeared before the Queen in 1561, promising to provide lists of thieves and then required by the Queen to appear later in Jedburgh to answer for their failure to apprehend fugitives; his brother Thomas also appeared. In 1564 he is probably the 'Lard of Wauchop' listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is probably the same David who was recorded in 1567 when his son Andrew was granted the lands of Templehall and Brewlands in Rulewater; another son, Robert, was a witness to the charter. He is probably the David of Wauchope whose brother Walter of Hobsburn is listed among men ordered to appear in 1567 to answer accusations of raiding into England; he was also ordered to appear himself and to present his 'man and servand' Adam Lyle, while another brother of his, Thomas of Harwoodtown, was also instructed to present a servant. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573 along with his son and heir Hector, both 'with our handis at the pen'. His son and heir Hector is recorded in 1572/3, when he swore allegiance to the Crown. David (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Rouchhope according to a rental roll of 1541. Perhaps the same David was also tenant in the neighbouring farms of Wauchopehead and Wauchopebank. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Davids, perhaps even David of Wauchope. David (d.1576/7) presented to the Parish of Hobkirk in 1550, replacing James Bennet as priest there. He was referred to as 'Sir' David of Minto in 1569, when he was among a number of Borders clerics who were called before the Regent and Privy Council for adhering to pre-Reformation sacraments. He was recorded as the deceased Sir David in about 1577 when John Douglas replaced him as Vicar of Hobkirk. His designation 'in Minto' when he was called before the Privy Council suggests that he was from the family of Turnbolls of Minto (rather than being minister at Minto). David (16th C.) recorded being 'called David of Crawden' in 1583/4 when he was listed among some Borderers denounced for failing to appear before the Privy Council. David (16th C.) tenant in Belses. He was listed along with his brother George among a group of Turnbolls accused of performing a raid into England in 1579. He was also leader of a group of Turnbolls who attacked the farm of Rawflat in 1581, killing Walter of Rawflat there. The others in the group were his brothers George, John and Adam, as well as Thomas of Billerwell; the complaint was made again by the widow of Walter of Rawflat in 1583. George was in 1603 found guilty of several related crimes. This was all presumably part of some family feud. In 1587 he was brother of George in Belses, when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst acted as surety for the pair, as well as Andrew also in Belses. David (16th C.) listed among the Turnbolls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He is transcribed as being 'of the Cronyhill', which was probably Troneyhill (and hence he may have been son of Thomas of Troneyhill). Failing to appear before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel in 1583 (mis-transcribed as 'Andro Turnebill in Cronyhill' in part of the citation). His son Thomas was listed in 1610 amongst Turnbolls who were to be apprehended for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Kerr of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. David (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being in Jedburgh, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. In 1587 his sureties were recorded being Sir Thomas of Bedrule and Andrew Oliver in Ancrum. David (16th C.) recorded in 1593 being 'in the Watter of Roule'. Along with Alexander in Odhamstocks and 2 Frasers from the same place, he was accused of attacking the farmers of the lands of Newbigging

(perhaps the one near Lauder) and were declared rebels for non-appearance. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other Davids. David (d.1598) son and heir of Hector of Wauchope. He married Margaret, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1593 (not 1567 as recorded in Tancred's 'Rulewater'). He and his bride were infefted in the lands of Langhaugh in Rulewater. He is referred to in reference to the lands of Wauchope in 1604 when his son Andrew's nieces inherited Templehall and Brewlands to the west of Wauchope. He was slaughtered near his house in 1598, with his neighbour James Lorraine of Appotside being one of those implicated, along with Gilbert and Hector, uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. David (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'in Fowltown' in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. Other tenants of Fulton farm were Pate Clerk, Walter Turnbull, David Turnbull (son of Adam), Willie Turnbull (the 'Guidman') and Thomas Turnbull. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Mackside. In 1611 his son 'Hob' was convicted and executed in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert, who was tenant in Denesyde. In 1611 his brother acted as cautioner for his appearance in court in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as 'Davie Trumbill in West Leyis' when he was listed among fugitives in the Middle shires. He probably came from West Lees in Rulewater and was likely related to John who was there in 1616. David (16th/17th C.) recorded as a farm worker of George, portioner of Belses. In 1618 there was a complaint that he and John Brown were tending the animals at Belses during Sunday worship when a group of Middlemases from Lilliesleaf 'unhonestlie strak and dang thame and brak their headis, to the effusioun of thair bloodis'. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Lustruther. In 1622 he was found guilty of perjury, apparently having been bribed by Andrew in Belses to lie in the case of theft he brought against William and Walter Middlemas. He was sentenced to have his 'tounge pearcet with ane hett boitkyn; and thaireftir Banischet this realme'. David (17th C.) tenant of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, along with Robert, recorded in 1643. They were probably related to the earlier Archibald. David (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with Adam as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. David 'Millionaire Turnbull' (18th/19th C.) younger son of Thomas of Fenwick and Brieryyards. He left for India in 1799 as part of the medical service, became an indigo planter there and also speculated in cotton. In 1818 he was a civil assistant surgeon at Mirzapore, but retired some time after that. His nickname came from the large fortune he made in India as an indigo planter and cotton speculator. His son was William, who became Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and inherited Fenwick from his cousin. He died in India, during his father's lifetime (probably 1820s). David of Fenwick and Brieryyards (b.1837) son of William. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1875. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1878. He was involved with the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association in the 1880s. He succeeded to all of the family lands in 1891 (except Palace, which had been sold). He had the house at Brieryyards renovated. However, he later sold all his property and left the country. In 1875 he married Christian, daughter of Hawick lawyer George Oliver. They had 1 daughter and 6 sons: William, who worked in the nitrate business in Chile and married Marie Salmon; David Oliver, a vet in Zomba, Nyasaland, who married Muriel MacKinnon; Margaret Lindsay, who married Hal Worke and had a son who went to British Columbia; George Archibald, who worked for the Cape Civil Service and was killed in the Boer War; Harry, who married Flossie Salmon; John MacLeod MacKinnon, who worked for the South African Forestry Service and wrote for Cornhill magazine; and James, who married Violet MacKinnon and died in East South Africa in WWI. Ebenezer (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1798 as a 'constable against the person in the parish of Cavers'. This was when James Thomson deserted after being balloted to serve in the Militia and his apprehension was sought. His name was also recorded as a constable in relation to a balloted man in Morebattle Parish; hence it is unclear where he was from. Ebenezer (19th C.) recorded in 1837 as apprentice to James Wilson, writer in Hawick. He could be the Ebenezer whose infant daughter's death was recorded in Hawick in 1822. Edward (15th C.) resident of Bedrule. In 1493 he had remission for stealing a cow from Robert Davidson in Newton, with the Laird of Bedrule acting as surety. Eleanor (1785-1853) daughter of William of Burnfoot. She lived at 5 Slitrig Bank with her younger sister Jane. In 1851 she was described as an 'Annuitant', showing that she had been set up with an allowance from her father. Eleanor (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer's shop on Langlands Bank in the mid-1900s. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) received sasine of the lands of Lanton in Roxburghshire in 1506. This was along with Margaret, who was probably her sister. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) had a sasine for Gargunnoch and other lands in Stirlingshire, along with Janet (perhaps her sister). Elizabeth (16th C.) resident at Haining Castle in 1580 when an inventory of her possessions was recorded. Robert Scott of Haining and his wife Janet Scott were her executors, and she left everything to them, except for a gown and 'paitlot' to be given to each of her daughters when they came of age, plus a share of her goods, at the discretion of her executors. It seems likely that she was the mother or step-mother of Robert Scott of Haining and hence wife of Thomas Scott of Haining). Her goods (some in the houses of other people) included several gowns and petticoats, a feather bed, a bolster, several pairs of sheets, blankets, towels, cushions, curtains and some gold jewellery. She also had debts owing from Grizel Scott, Lady Borthwick, from William Crichton in Fala, from Patrick Murray of Falahill, from John, son to Patrick Turnbull, and from several people in Cranston. Elizabeth nee Elliot (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, she married John Turnbull of Minto. Her husband died in 1641 while on army service in Newcastle, and her son John succeeded while still a minor. She and her brother-in-law Rev. William of Makerstoun appear to have acted as guardians for the young Laird of Minto; in 1643 she was listed along with her son and Rev. William as owner of the Minto estate. Other children of hers included William and Robert, who became merchants' apprentices in Edinburgh in 1650 and 1651, respectively, and probably Alison, who married William Douglas of Timpendean in 1655. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) resident of Barnhills. Along with her cottar, Robert Young, she was arrested (probably around 1684) by Capt. Bruce for being a Covenanter and jailed in Selkirk Tolbooth. Elizabeth (d.1698) resident of Minto Parish, possibly related to the Turnbells of Minto or of Knowe, who are buried there. Her small headstone marked 'Beseiy Turnbul' is still in the old graveyard, but her husband's name is illegible. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth 'Betty' (b.c.1770) listed as a flesher in Denholm on Pigot's 1837 directory. She was living on Main Street in 1841, with surname Leyden, with Robert Laidlaw (probably her grandson) being a flesher. Elizabeth nee Wilson (1753–1828) eldest daughter of Walter Wilson, 'Haunless Wat'. She married draper George Turnbull and worked in the draper's shop at 14 High Street. She is said to have had 15 children, 10 of whom survived infancy. Several of her children died of consumption, and it is said that 'when the last one was reported to her as being about to die, she would not even go to visit the sick one, so much had her motherly instincts been blunted by the constant visit of death to her children'. She was known in later life as 'Auld Betty Turnbull'. Elizabeth 'Betty' nee Alexander (b.c.1790) born at Swinnie, daughter of farmer George Alexander. She married carrier and grocer Alexander. In 1861 she was a 'Petty Shopkeeper' in Kirkton, living as a widow there with her daughter Margaret, who was born at Bonchester. Elizabeth 'Betty' (19th C.) daughter of inn-keeper John. She took over as Bonchester post-mistress from her brother John and also ran the public house at Bridgend after her father died in 1838. However she soon afterwards moved to another public house in Moffat. Elliot (b.1794/5–1857) labourer living at Whiggills Edge in Castleton Parish in 1841. By 1851 he was living near Canonbie and farming 3 acres. He may be the man of that name listed at 'Sorbies' in 1821 among the subscribers to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty'), who died in 1873, aged 62. Their children included: Betty; Janet; Elspeth; Robert; Agnes (1847/8–1900), who died at Newcastleton; and Mary (1851/2–97), who died at Southfield. He died at Gillfoot and his wife in Newcastleton. The family are buried at Ettleton. Elspeth (17th C.) servant to Bailie Scott of Ormiston. In 1683 she was struck by stones thrown across the Teviot by a group of men, wounding her, when she and Isabel Hardie (daughter to cooper Robert Hardie) were watching linen clothing that was being bleached there. Elspeth (17th C.) tenant in Flatt in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Elspeth (19th C.) listed as a straw hat maker in Newcastleton in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 she was living in the house of Rev. John Black. Esther (b.1809) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Christian in Pigot's 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. She and her sister Christian were living with their mother Mary on Buccleuch Street in 1841. In 1851 she was a 'Woollen Seamstress & Annuitant' living on Allars Crescent, in a separate household to her older sister. Fergus (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hillhouse, listed after James, also there, in the 1516 pardon for Turnbolls who might have assisted the Homes in actions against the King. This is not a common local name. Francis (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Bedrule in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbolls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. Francis (b.1700/1) Burgh Officer of Hawick. He gave evidence during proceedings for the Division of the Common in 1767, when he was described as being married. He was also a Burgess, on which account his evidence was objected to by the Duke of Buccleuch's lawyers. He became a Burgh Officer in 1733, and remained until at least 1767. He described how he and fellow Officer John Stewart once managed to drive cattle belonging to neighbouring tenants (which were being pastured on the Common, against the orders of the Magistrates) to the West Port; this was probably around 1743. He was recorded as 'Town Officer' in a baptismal record of 1743. In 1753 he was one of the 2 Burgh Officers who were granted a yearly salary of 10 shillings 'on account of their age and infirmity'. He may be the Francis, son of William, born in Hawick in 1703. He could be the Francis who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1729 for Francis Scott. He married Elizabeth Gibson and their children baptised in Hawick, included: Isobel (b.1732); Isobel (again, b.1739); James (b.1740); and Gideon (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were Bailie Gideon Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. Francis (18th/19th C.) servant at Mackside in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire, with the annotation 'Subst.', suggesting that someone substituted for him. His name appears again in 1798, with John Peggie, tailor in Edinburgh, serving as his substitute in the Militia. Francis (18th/19th C.) mason at Yethouse. He was among the subscribers to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. At Yethouse in 1841 were Janet Brydon (aged about 70) and mason Francis (aged about 40), who were probably his widow and son. Francis (b.1797/8) stone mason at Yethouse. His mother was probably Elizabeth Brydon, who was there in 1841. It seems likely that his father was Francis, the mason at Yethouse recorded in 1821. He was still at Yethouse in 1851, but by 1861 his name appears as Francis Armstrong. Francis 'Frank' (19th C.) shepherd at a farm near Saughtree. He was a collector of local antiquities, including coins, flints, an iron sword, which were examined by the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club when they visited in 1889. Gavin (16th C.) listed along with Adam in 1534 when they were entered into ward in Blackness Castle, with Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme being discharged of the bond he had made to the King for their good behaviour. It seems likely they were either father and son or brothers, but it is not clear where they were from exactly. Gavin (16th C.) recorded as 'Gawenn Trumble of the Wowley' among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The other men named included James of Stonedge as well as Oliver of Westerhouses. He presumably lived at Wolfelee in Rulewater. Gavin (16th C.) recorded as 'called of Bullerwell' when he witnessed a marriage contract between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Turnbull of Wauchope in 1593. The designation suggests that he no longer resided at Bullerwell. He must have been related to the slightly earlier and late Adams. He may be the same 'Gawin Trumbill in Bullerwall' listed in a court case of 1605. Gavin in Howa (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert in Hallrule and Hector in Stanedge, as well as uncle of Hector of Barnhills. He is probably the 'Gawen', brother of William of Barnhills, who is listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. He is probably the brother of Robert 'tutor of Barnhills' and also Hector who (along with his brothers, as well as Hector in Barnhills) was declared as a rebel in 1586 for his part in the murder of 6 men called Grahamslaw. Perhaps the same Gavin was 'sone to Archie in Hawla' recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is recorded in 1604, along with his nephews Hector and George, as well as Hector of Stanedge, being tried for the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton. In 1606 he is recorded as 'Gawin Turnbill in Howe', brother of Hector in Stanedge and the deceased Robert in Hallrule, when there was a summons for them to prosecute the sons of Harry Grahamslaw who had been accused of the murder of Robert in Hallrule. There was clearly an ongoing feud between the 2 families. Gavin (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Bedrule. He is listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in '...side' in Abbotrule Parish. This was probably Mackside, with his land being valued at £24. He may have been related to the Laird of Tofts, who held the bulk of the property in 1643 as well as £102 worth of land in Minto. Gavin of Clarilaw (17th C.) recorded in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean Parish. He was also listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Hassendean Parish, paying tax on £273. He was presumably related to the earlier Hector of Clarilaw. He could be the same Gavin who had a charter for 'Kerswell' in Hassendean from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1621. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in Robertson Parish (when it included Hassendean) in 1684. A 'bastard child' of his was baptised, with witnesses John (who was surely related, perhaps his father) and Andrew Leyden. Gavin (18th C.) clothier in Hawick. He was listed along with Thomas as witness to a baptism for weaver John Smith in 1764. It seems likely he was either father or brother of Thomas (who was a clothier and dyer, and father of poet Gavin). He may be the Gavin who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Wilton in 1769. He and Thomas were witnesses to a baptism for William Thomline (who may have been their employer at Roughheugh Mill) in 1770. It is possible that he was the Gavin, son of William, born in Kirkton Parish in 1731 (but this would be too late if he was indeed the father of Thomas). Gavin (d.c.1800) school friend of John Leyden's. He was the first of his cohort to go off abroad, travelling to India, but dying soon after he arrived. He is mentioned in John Leyden's poem 'To Mr. James Purvis' – 'The first that tried the eastern sea Was Gavin, gentle youth, was he! His yellow locks fann'd by the breeze, Gleam'd golden on the orient seas: But never shall his steps be seen Bounding again on Denholm's pleasant green' [JL]. It is possible that he is the Dr. Gavin who was listed at Wiltonhall (in Wilton Parish) in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Gavin (1764–1816) born in Hawick, son of 'Tammy Trumble' and Beatrice Ruecastle. He moved from Hawick when he was about 10, with his father seeking work in factories elsewhere, including Galashiels and being a dyer in a factory in Kilmarnock. Although his parents were once fairly well-off, their circumstances changed and he was forced to abandon his education and become an apprentice in a carpet factory (Gregory & Thomson) in Kilmarnock; he writes of himself that he was 'deprived early in life, by unforeseen misfortunes, of the means of pursuing that liberal plan of education he once had a prospect of'. He was said to be small in stature and of a dark complexion. It is also said that he spent more time thinking about poetry than weaving and as a result lived in poverty in a small garret, where 'the poverty of Burns, of which there has been much talk in the world, was opulence compared to it!'. In Kilmarnock he became a friend of Robert Burns (whose poetry style he imitated, and they both had many of the same influences). It has been suggested that he may have told Burns the story of the giant pin of the haggis served at Haggishaa, which inspired the lines in 'Address to a Haggis'. He moved with his family to Glasgow, where he worked as a labourer, and it was there that his first volume of verse was published. He later became an actor with George Sutherland's Company in Dumfries and wrote at least one short play, 'The Recruit'. In Dumfries he became reacquainted with Burns. However, the acting company in Dumfries broke up (at least in part because of its revolutionary politics, which made it unpopular with the authorities). He married an actress (who appeared with him in 'The Recruit' in 1794) and in 1795 emigrated to America, settling in Charleston, South Carolina. There he joined a theatre company and contributed poems to the local newspapers. He lived in modest addresses in downtown Charleston and taught part time. In 1813 he became an American citizen. He had a brother, Thomas, who also emigrated to America, and has surviving relatives. His publications are 'Poetical Essays' (1788) and 'Poems, by Gavin Turnbull, Comedian' (1794). Many of his verses are elegies and pastorals, in the tradition of the late 18th century, with one known as 'Silvanus, or The Genius of Tiviot' and another ode to the Tweed (as well as several to Irvine Water); however, the most interesting are in Scots dialect and in a similar style to Burns' best-known poetry. Note that the suggested years of his birth are given in some works as being as early as 1758 and as late as 1770, while the year of his death is sometimes suggested to have been much earlier than it was; in fact his death is recorded in a Charleston newspaper in 1816, where he is described as 'late Comedian, whose talents as a performer on the stage, will long be remembered by many of the inhabitants of this city'. Shortly afterwards a notice appeared in a South Carolina newspaper asking for subscriptions to a volume of poems to support his widow (however, no such volume ever appeared). The project 'The Collected Poems of Gavin Turnbull Online' was completed in 2015. He is buried in the cemetery of the First Presbyterian Scots

Church in Charleston. Gavin (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Mary Blake and their son Gavin was born in 1800. Gavin (1800–54) son of Adam, tenant of Hassendeanbank, brother of Adam Ogilvie and John Robson. He was partly educated at Minto Parish school under William Grant. He became a surgeon with the East India Company. He may married Isabella Jane Fenwick in 1826 and they had 5 children. He secondly married Mary MacDougall Stuart in 1841. He died on Jersey. Rev. Gavin (1800–32) born at Brieryhill, he became minister of Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ from 1821, and probably remained there until his death. He was certainly still preacher there in 1831. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He published ‘A Sermon on Meekness’ in Hawick in 1832. He was probably son of John, who was tenant farmer at Brieryhill in Wilton Parish. George of Bedrule (15th C.) witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castlelaw in 1448. He may have been son of John of Bedrule, who was recorded in 1432. In 1461 he was witness to a sasine for lands near Branhholme, where he is recorded as ‘of Bethroul’; William of Minto was also a witness, so he may have been a close relative. He may be the George who (along with Hector, John and William of Minto) was on the 1464/5 panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. He was also witness to a sasine of Denholm Mains involving the Cranstons in 1465/6. Probably the same George ‘of Bethoroull’ witnessed a sasine of 1484/5 for Walter Scott of Branhholme for lands in Mangerton. He may be the George who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee in 1479. He may be the George ‘de bethroul’ who had remission in 1493 (along with David Waugh, also from Bedrule, and weaver William White), their crimes being stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilmuir, associating with John of Gatehousecote, communing with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was Walter Ker of Cessford, while he himself served as surety for the other 2 men. He may be the Laird of Bedrule who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. ‘Thomas turnbule Junior dominus de bethroul’ served as surety for several Turnbulls in 1494/5; this suggests that he was still alive, but perhaps old and infirm, so that his son Thomas was effectively acting as chief of the Turnbulls at that time. He was probably succeeded by his son Thomas, mentioned as his heir apparent in 1501 and already mentioned several times in the previous decade. Thomas had a brother William, who was thus also his son. George (15th/16th C.) infetted by Walter Turnbull (probably Baron of Hassendean) in the lands of Hassendeanbank in 1493. He may have been a relative of Walter. He was deceased by 1534 when his son an heir John was recorded in a dispute with Andrew Davidson in Selkirk. George (15th C.) recorded being in Bonchester and also ‘in stowislie’ (i.e. Stouslie) at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. David in Bonchester served as his surety and the pair were fined for non-appearance. George (15th C.) recorded at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh as son of Walter in Bonchester. The entry is after that for George in Bonchester and Stouslie, and hence this is possibly a different man. He was surety for Andrew Turnbull (in the same place), who failed to appear and was accordingly fined. He may be related to Walter of Stouslie, who is recorded in 1494/5. George (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire of 1493 along with 4 others. Their crime was concealing a trove of coins that had been found in Minto Kirk, but by rights were Crown property. The Laird of Bedrule served as surety for him and for John Sinclair. Perhaps the same George in Minto had remission in 1493 (in the very next case) for crimes before the date of his previous remission. George of Hallrule (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘of Haw of Roull’ when he was witness to a charter of 1484/5, along with George of Bedrule and others. He was appointed as Captain of Hermitage by Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, probably around 1492. In 1493 he was ‘de aula de roule’ when he was surety for Archibald Plenderleith in Bedrule, as well as Simon in Clarilaw. Also in 1493 he had remission for a series of crimes: stealing sheep from Nettleflat on Gala Water; separately stealing a horse and tools from Nettleflat; plundering from Thomas Rutherford at Bonjedward; and involvement in the slaughter of Archibald Rutherford. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. In 1494/5 he and Patrick Earl of Bothwell (Lord of Liddesdale) were fined £10 Scots for the non-appearance of William Elliot and each of 85 other Borderers; he was there recorded as Captain of Hermitage. Also in 1494/5 he was also surety for Thomas Turnbull in Gatehousecote. He is probably the George ‘in the Hermitage’ who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498, along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere. Probably the same George of ‘Hawroull’ was listed in 1502 among about 20 Turnbulls and others who were fined for failing to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; he was supposed to enter into the court John, Andrew and William in Gatehousecote, William in Bonchester and his son Lawrence, David in Bonchester, and David, Andrew and Hugh Shiel. Also in 1502 he was surety (along with Bartholomew in Rawflat) for Adam, tenant in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton, who had brought Englishman Sir John Musgrave to burn and plunder Selkirk. That year he was also surety (along with Robert Scott in Stirches) for Walter Turnbull in Branhholme, as well as for Hector Shiel and for John Sinclair (from Cavers, who murdered John Moffat). Also in 1502 he was surety, along with several other Turnbull chiefs, for Margaret in Hawick, who was convicted of theft and resetting thieves. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. All of these records together show that he was a prominent man in Rulewater at the time. George 'Hawick' (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being called 'hawic' and living at 'turri de wauchop' (presumably Wauchope Tower). David of Wauchope was surety for him and they were fined for non-appearance. Perhaps the same man was 'georgii turnbule de hawik' and explicitly listed with along with David (who was probably a close relative and perhaps the same David of Wauchope), among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He presumably lived at or came from Hawick. George (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Georges. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as 'in Wyndis' (probably Weens in Rulewater) when along with about 20 Turnbolls and others he failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Walter Scott in Newhall Burnhead and Thomas Brown in Cavers were called to enter him, with his surety being the Sheriff of Roxburgh. Failing to appear, he was put to the horn and forfeited his goods. George (15th/16th C.) recorded 'in Toftis' in 1502 when he was allowed to pay a fine for his crimes of assisting rebel Robert Turnbull, called 'Muriale' in the burning of Riddell and stealing of 480 sheep, 2 cows and goods. John Turnbull of Tofts served as surety, so was presumably his close relative. Note that Pitcairn appears to have mistakenly called him 'David'. George (15th/16th C.) tenant in 'tandilnes' (probably Tanlaw Naze) in 1503.

He was listed among men who were fined (in his case 4 oxen, 4 cows, a horse and 30 sheep, which was more than most others) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was probably related to William, who was listed in the same place. George (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bedrule, recorded in the 1516 remission for Turnbolls and others who may have given assistance to Alexander, Lord Home. It is possible that he was the Laird of Bedrule, but he is clearly listed as being 'in Bethroule'. He may be the same George 'in Bedrule' mentioned in 1523. George of Bedrule (d.bef. 1528) possibly son of Thomas of Bedrule, who is recorded in 1502. He is not mentioned on the 1516 remission for a large number of Turnbolls, suggesting perhaps that he was a minor, or elsewhere at the time (William of Minto is named first and is clearly the head of the family at that time). He was on an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523, along with George 'in Bedrule' (therefore possibly related). He may have been the Laird who was present at the signing of the bond among Border Lairds to help the Warden (Earl of Angus) in 1524/5. It is also possible that he was the George, son of Thomas, who was wounded by William Scott, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh. It is unclear exactly when this happened, but Scott had remission in 1535. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1519 and was succeeded by his son Thomas. In 1528 Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme had a gift from King James V of the 'ward, relief and non-entry' of his lands, as well as the marriage of his heir, Thomas (then still a minor). He must have had other children, since Sir Walter Scott also had rights to the marriage of 'ony vther aire or airis male, or female, of the said vmquhile George'. In 1553 Robert 'brother german of the lord of Bedroull' is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books and presumably his son. In 1578/9 there is a record of John, 'broder sone to the said Sir Thomas', who must have been his grandson (although the son's name is unknown). Sir Walter Scott married his widow in 1530/1. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as being at Minto and listed right after William of Minto among a large number of Turnbolls pardoned in 1516 for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He may be the same as one of the other Turnbolls. George (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with Adam and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbolls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He may be same as George 'in Foulton' who
