had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. In 1841 he was at about 15 High Street and described as 'Independent'; he lived there with Helen, probably his wife, along with 2 servants and 2 draper's apprentices. His business was later taken over by Robert Fraser, who may have been his nephew. John (b.c.1780) recorded as a staymaker in Hawick on the 1801 list for the Militia ballot. John (b.c.1780) servant at East Middle, according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1801. Perhaps the same John married Jean Anderson in Kirkton Parish in 1805. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Thomas (b.1805); and Janet (b.1807). John (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had a local connection. John (b.1797/8) shepherd at Knowehead near Newcastleton in the 1850s. He was listed among heads of households in Castleton Parish in 1836–41. His wife was Helen and their children included Isabella, Robert, Mary, Margaret and William. He was probably dead by 1861, when his son Robert was shepherd at Knowehead. John (b.1804/5) originally from Selkirk, he was a grocer and spirit dealer at about 60 High Street. In 1841 he was a 'Woollen Stocking dresser' on the High Street (at about No. 47) and was at No. 60 as a grocer in 1851. He is listed in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Jane Cairns and their children included: James (b.1831); William (b.1833); Isabella (b.1836); John (b.1838); Thomas (b.1840); Jane (b.c.1842); Jane (b.1844); Margaret (b.1846); and Christian (b.1849). Some of his children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. John (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1839 he married Helen Davidson, who was from Jedburgh. John (b.c.1817) cabinet-maker living on Needle Street in 1841. His wife was Mary and they had a son, Robert. He may be the John who married Mary Oliver in Hawick in 1840. Martha (b.c.1775) baker, recorded at about 21 Howegate in 1841. She was presumably widow of the former head of the family. Their children included James and Betty. Mary (18th C.) cook at Stobs in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Francis Eliott. Presumably the same person is listed as 'Nanny Hyslop' in 1789 and 1791, still cook at Stobs. Nicholas (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas Turnbull to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary's Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as 'Nicholao Heslihop'. Ninian (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He was probably from the Ashkirk area. Ninian (18th/19th C.) shepherd at 'Kittyilins' (i.e. Kidd's Linn) in Castleton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835 and 1836–38. In 1840 and 1841 he was at 'Stanehilburnfoot' Walter, listed at Stanehilburnfoot was surely related. Robert (16th C.) listed as 'Ronet Heslihop' among the tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Robert (19th C.) stocking-maker. In 1844 he took William Watson & Sons to court for wages that they refused to pay him. The dispute centred on the practice of giving out yarn in a wet state, with disagreement about the weight; the Sheriff decided in his favour. Robert (b.1839/40) son of shepherd John. Like his father he was shepherd at Knowehead near Newcastleton. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of Robert and Johanna Edmondson and nephew of Bailie Stephen Anderson. He was Sheriff Clerk Depute in Hawick. Robert Steven 'Steve' (1962–2003), also known as 'Hizzy', from a local motor-biking family. He was born in Hawick and grew up in Chesters, attending Jedburgh Grammar School. He won his first T.T. race in 1987, eventually winning 11 races there, including 3 races in both 1989 and 1991, and breaking the 120 m.p.h. barrier for the first time. He is also remembered for winning on a Norton in 1992, the last victory by an all-British machine. In 1990 he won the British 250cc Supercup, he was world champion in endurance racing in 1993 and British Superbike Champion in 2002, despite suffering horrendous injuries that year, and breaking his neck in 2000. He lived on the Isle of Man and published an autobiography 'Hizzy' in 2003. He was training to be a helicopter pilot, but crashed near Caerlenrig. An exhibition of his life and memorabilia was set up in Drumlanrig's Tower. There are memorial statues in the Park (unveiled in 2005, a full-scale representation, looking over at his hero Jimmie Guthrie) and on the Isle of Man, and he is buried in Southdean graveyard. The Hizzy Memorial Run has been organised since 2003, originally from Kirkcaldy to Denholm, but since 2012 starting and ending in Denholm – 'Farewell to a brave Border callant, In tune with his racing machine, Who conquered the world with his talent, And comes home to sleep in Southdean' [TD]. Simon (15th C.) witness in 1482 to the resignation of the lands of Mangerton, made at Branxholme. He is recorded as 'domino Symone Heslihop capellano' and appears after the

Rector of Southdean; he was this a chaplain, but of which parish is unclear. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Thoma Hesleop' in 1501 when he witnessed a document relating to the lands of Lairs for the Douglasses of Drumlanrig. Thomas (b.1784/5) born in Ancrum Parish, he was a farm worker at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer there and was a ploughman there in 1851. His wife was Mary and their children included Margaret, Helen, William and Robert. Thomas (b.c.1805) cotton handloom weaver living on the Fore Row in 1841. His wife was Helen and their children included Agnes and John. Thomas (b.1806/7) born in Cavers Parish, he was a clockmaker in Hawick. He was living on the Fore Row in 1851 and was listed as a clockmaker on 'Front row' in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was at 8 Fore Row. His wife was Ellen, from Perthshire, and their children included James and Jean Walter (16th C.) recorded living in Clerklands (presumably in Lilliesleaf Parish) when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1543. Walter (18th C.) shepherd hired at Gorrenberry in about 1750. Walter (b.1800/1) from England, he was a labourer and roadman in Castleton Parish. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41, when he was living at 'Stanehilburnfoot' and Brighouse. His wife was Agnes and their children included Ninian, Betty, Anne, John, Margaret, Mary, Walter, William and Jemima. The family emigrated to America in 1842. Walter (b.1800/1) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was farm steward at Deanbrae in Cavers Parish in 1861. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502. He was presented by the Lord of Buccleuch at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh as his 'suitor' for the lands of Branxholme. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hislop. His son William was baptised in 1698. Archibald and John Scott were witnesses. He himself witnessed a baptism for James in Lairhope on the following day. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Kedie and their children included Isobel (b.1691), Adam (b.1693) and Agnes (b.1696). Mallie (b.1695), with no mother's name given, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1691 were John Kedie and Andrew Kedie. He is probably also the servant at 'Langtoun' recorded in 1698 along with his wife Janet Kedie, when their daughter Elspeth was baptised in Ashkirk. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1712 he was recorded as 'servitor to Walter Nickson in Hawicksheels'. He was 'in Hawick Sheils' in 1716.

He later lived at Over Southfield. In 1719 he was 'servant in Allan haugh mill'. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Reid, tenant in Raesknowe, in 1719. He was described as a 'workman' in 1721. He married Agnes 'Lateth' (or 'Lauder') in Hawick Parish in 1711. Their children included: William (b.1712); Christian (b.1716); John (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); Bessie (b.1724); and Margaret (b.1725). The witnesses in 1712 were Walter Nixon and Walter Scott (both tenants in Hawick Shiel), in 1716 were Henry Orrock and Walter Nixon, in 1719 were William Reid and weaver John Scott, and in 1721 were Walter Nixon and James Grieve. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1808, 1810 and 1812 as witness to baptisms in Hawick for Andrew Turnbull and Margaret (probably his daughter or sister). He was probably a merchant. William (b.1800/1) originally from Ewesdale, he was farmer at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was at Raperlaw in 1841 and in 1851 was farming 150 acres there, and employing 3 people. He married Isobel Tillie (who was from Bowden) and their children included Mary (b.1825), Walter (b.1828), John, William, Robert, James, Elizabeth and Isabella. William (18th/19th C.) labourer at Old Castleton. He was recorded among heads of households in the Parish for the first time in 1837, when he was a roadman from Oakenshaw Toll, England. He was listed at Old Castleton in 1840 and 1841. He emigrated to America about that time. William (b.1809/10) originally from Selkirk, he was a frameworker in Hawick. He was living on the Back Row in 1841 and on Allars Crescent in 1851. His wife was Beattie (from Aberdeen) and their children included Jane, Margaret, Thomas, 'Lowis', William and Margaret (again). William (b.1809/10) agricultural labourer in the Hermitage area. In 1841 he was at Florida (or Dykeraw). In 1861 he was living at Old Dykecrofts, but in 1868 was listed as farmer at Gorrenberry. His wife was Mary. William (b.1820/1) son of Thomas, he was born in Minto Parish. In 1841 he was a joiner and in 1851 a carpenter, living with his parents at Bairnkine. He married Janet Sprot. William (b.c.1835) from Lilliesleaf Parish, he was farmer at Harwood on Teviot. In 1881 he was farming 750 acres at Harwood and employing 5 people. He was still there in 1901 (formerly spelled 'Haselhope', 'Heaslope', 'Heislop', 'Heislope', 'Hesliop', 'Hessilop', 'Hislope', 'Hyslip', 'Hyslop', 'Hyslope', etc.).

History of Hawick (his-tu-ree-ov-hlk) n. book written by Robert Wilson in 1825, with full title 'A sketch of the history of Hawick: including some account of the manners and character of the inhabitants, with occasional observations: to which is subjoined a short essay, in reply to Doctor Chalmers on pauperism and the poor-laws'. This was the first published history of the town. The extensive list of subscribers contains the names of many Borderers with an interest in history. The second edition, published in 1841 was entitled 'The history of Hawick: including some account of the inhabitants with occasional observations, to which is appended a short memoir of the author'. These works are the first history of our town, with historical anecdotes interspersed with a series of discussions on the political issues of the day. The note-book containing what would become the book was started on 21st November 1822, headed 'Amusements of Leisure Hours, by Robert Wilson'; he was 50 years old at the time. Wilson was firmly a Liberal, and many of his views are strikingly modern, as well as being both articulate and refreshingly humorous. He wrote against the greed of lawyers, saying '... the rapacity of lawyers, who in these days sucked like the horse-leech, the vitals of their clients ...!' He also expressed regret that 3/10 of Hawick's Common had been lost in the Division (during the minority of the Duke), and hoped that the House of Buccleuch would one day restore the part of the Common its lawyers had taken. The book also includes the first printed version of several now familiar local stories, no doubt colouring their later retellings. This includes the Hornshole incident (which curiously does not mention the name of Hornshole) and the story of 'Hab o Hawick'. An appendix contained the first published translation (by Town Clerk Walter Gledstains) of the 1537 Charter. The book received a glowing review in the Scotsman, and the editor, Charles Maclaren came to Hawick to seek out Wilson, arriving on Common Riding Saturday, and having to find him on the Haugh.

History of Hawick (his-tu-ree-ov-hlk) n. title for pair of books written by Robert Murray, covering the times up to and subsequent to 1832. The first volume was published in 1901 and the second ‘History of Hawick from 1832’ appeared the following year, being completed after the death of its primary author.

Hobbie Noble (ho-bee-nō-bul) n. border ballad that first appeared in print in ‘Caw’s Poetical Museum’, published in Hawick in 1784. The origin of the manuscript was probably John Elliot of Redheugh. The hero of the poem is one Robert Noble, although it is unclear if he was based on a real person. He was an Englishman who had been banished and was residing with the Armstrongs of Liddesdale. ‘Sim o the Mains’ (a Scottish traitor) persuades him to go on a raid to England, and then tells the 'land-sergeant' there about his coming, so that he is captured. Brought back to Carlisle Hobbie refuses to confess, saying he would rather be a prisoner than a traitor – 'Now Hobie was an English man, And born into Bewcastle dale; But his misdeeds they were sae great, They banish'd him to Liddesdale. Fala, &c.' [CPM], 'The laird's Jock ane, the laird's Wat twa; Oh! Hobie Noble thou ane maun be, They coat is blue, thou has been true, Since England banish'd thee to me' [CPM].

Hobbieshowe (ho-beez-how) n. former name for a deep gorge where the Howa and Sneep Burns meet in Hobkirk Parish.

hobble (ho-bul) v., poet. to rock, wobble, bob up and down – 'And they hobbled and lap with their gysent shins, And daunced on the clammy floore ...' [JTe], 'Come awa', my little lambie, Toddle tentie, come to me; Weel ye like to get a hobble On yer auld grandfaither's knee' [TCh] (this meaning is obscure in standard English).

Hobhouse (hob-hoos) n. John Cam 1786–1869) 1st Lord Broughton. Known as a great radical politician in his younger days, he was M.P. for Westminster and a friend of Lord Byron. In 1823 and again in 1824 he spent several days staying at Chisholme, the home of Charles Chisholme, the brother-in-law of his friend Edward Ellice. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825.

Hobkirk (hob-kirk, hōp-kirk) n. village about 7 miles south-east of Hawick, and about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile up the Rule Water from Bonchester. It still has a traditional 'Baa' game. It is also the name for the surrounding parish, which includes Bonchester, and which originally belonged to the canons of Jedburgh Abbey. It is essentially the same as the Barony of Feu-Rule, recorded until the mid-16th century (the name was first recorded in 1220 as 'Hoppchirk', and became 'Hopekirk', 'Hopkirk' or 'Hopes kirk' through the 16th and 17th centuries, becoming corrupted to 'Habkirk', 'Habskirk', and finally 'Hobkirk' in the 18th century; it is marked 'K. of Hoppkirck' on Blaeu's 1654 map; the origin is probably Old English for 'church in the valley', or possibly Old Norse for 'shelter church').

Hobkirk (hob-kirk) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Rebecca Turnbull in 1694. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1695. Adam (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Hawick Parish. In 1713 he was described as 'tounherd in Hawick', meaning that he served as the Town Herd. He was also shepherd for Thomas Kedie in Over Southfield and at Whitlaw. He married Bessie Laidlaw in Hawick in 1712 (when described as 'herd in Whitla'); she was 'servitrix to Bailie Burn'. Their children included: John (b.1713); Robert (b.1715); and Agnes (b.1717). The witnesses in 1713 were Bailies James Burn and Robert Hardie. Perhaps the same Adam also married Margaret Laidlaw (unless this is the same woman and the name is an error) and had a daughter Margaret (b.1719). It is also possible that he was the James whose children baptised in Robertson Parish included James (b.1721), when he was at Parkhill. He was probably the shepherd recorded at Hummelknowes when his daughter Janet was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1723. It is also possible he was the Hobkirk (with no fore-name given) who was at Alderybar in 1727 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers. Adam (1744/5–1809) probably from the Hawick area, he was a merchant in London and Jamaica. He was probably the Adam recorded returning to Kingston, Jamaica in 1774 and was in partnership with a Mr. Moore in 1779/80. His wife is recorded important goods for her shop in Kingston in 1779 and 1780, and also for posting a reward for the return of a runaway slave. He is recorded several times in Jamaica in the 1780s and up to 1794. He is likely to be the Adam from London who was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1784. He is probably the Adam of 34 Hart Street, Bloomsbury, who took out fire insurance in 1786 and the Adam recorded renting property belonging to the Duke of Bedford in St. Giles in the Fields and in Bloomsbury, in the years 1786–1809. His wife was Mary (surname not recorded), who died in Cheltenham in 1825, aged 70. Their children included: Adam (c.1780–1853), who died in France; Samuel (c.1784–1853); William (c.1785–1825), who was in the Dragoons and died when washed overboard from a ship returning from Jamaica; and Mary (b.1789–c.94). Note that he is easy to confuse with another Adam from London, son of William and Letitia, whose siblings had essentially the same names. His will of 1809 gives most of his estate to his wife, but also some to his sister Margaret (through William Scott of Hawick) and brother Walter. His address in 1809 was Gower Street, St. Giles in the Fields. He was buried at Westminster. His family later fought over his estate, including his property in Jamaica. Adam (d.1829) probably born in Cavers Parish, he may have been the son of John born in 1750. He is said to have worked at Abbotrule, Grange and other estates. He married Jane Scott in Robertson Parish in 1787. Their children included: John (b.1788), christened in Hawick Parish, who emigrated to America; Archibald (1790–1867), christened in Southdean Parish; Mary (b.1792), who married Thomas Scott; and Adam (b.1795), who also emigrated to the U.S.A. He died at Todlaw farm, near Jedburgh. Adam (1795–1864) younger son of Adam. In 1823 he married Elizabeth Ferguson (who died in 1871), the marriage recorded in Wilton and Southdean Parishes. In 1830 he emigrated to U.S.A., along with his wife and daughters Jane and Isabel. They had 3 more daughters in America, as well as a son, Adam A. Adam (b.1802) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of Thomas. He was a shepherd at Kirkhope, Selkirkshire. He married Margaret Elliot in 1835 and their children included: Jane (b.c.1836); Thomas (b.c.1837); Jessie (b.c.1840); William (b.1841); John (b.1844); Elizabeth (b.1846); Mary (b.1848); Andrew (b.1850); Margaret (b.c.1853); and Robert (b.1856). Allan became Director of Pringle of Scotland in 1964. Andrew (15th C.) resident of Eckford. He is recorded in the Justice-are held in Jedburgh in 1493, when 2 men had remission for stealing from him, with Robert Scott of Whitcheater acting as his surety. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1742); and Margaret (again, b.1743). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Andison in Hawick Parish in 1759 and their children included: Isabel (b.1759); and William (b.1761). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Cook in 1773 and their son John was baptised in 1774. Andrew (b.1786/7) born in Cavers Parish, he was a shepherd in Yarrow Parish. He was at Eldenhope in 1841 and Hartleap in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included John and Thomas. Andrew (b.1820) son of James, he was born in Denholm. In 1861 he was a woollen framework knitter in Lanton. He married Isabella Daniel in Bedrule Parish in 1861, and their children included: James (b.1867); and Andrew (b.1870). Andrew (b.1822/3) born in Denholm, son of James and Jane Scott. In 1861 he was a woollen framework knitter in the village of Lanton, living with his sisters Margaret and Isabel and his nephew William. Andrew Borthwick (1885–1977) born in Hawick, son of Thomas and Mary Miller. He served in the Navy and died in Mitcham, Victoria, Australia. Andrew Moss (20th C.) probably son of James and born in Cavers Parish. He was Headmaster of Newcastleton School in the 1940s and was first Secretary of the village hall committee. Archibald (b.1790) born in Southdean Parish, son of Adam and Jane Scott. In 1841 he was a farmer at Todlaw in Jedburgh Parish and in 1851 and 1861 he was a grocer in Jedburgh. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty' or 'Eliza') Millar in 1823 in Jedburgh. Their children included Adam, Christian, Jean (who married George Miller in Hawick), Mary, Eliza and Martha. Christina nee Scott (b.1792/3) born in Melrose, she was a grocer at 41 High Street, recorded in 1861. George (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. He may have been related to John, who was also named. George (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall. He married Betty Lorraine and they had a son George (b.1789), baptised in Wilton. George (b.1789) born in Wilton Parish, probably son of George, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was living at Darnick Vale near Abbotsford and was a widower in Darnick village in 1861. His wife was Margaret and they had a son George. He is probably the George who married Margaret Davidson in Wilton Parish in 1817. George (1805–1881) son of Thomas and Janet Nichol, he was born in Ashkirk Parish and worked as an agricultural labourer and shepherd at Stobicote. He is recorded there on the 1841 to 1861 censuses. In 1838 he married Elizabeth ('Betty') Scott in Castleton; she came from Ewes and died in 1898, aged 88. Their children (baptised at Teviothead) were: Thomas (b.1838), who was a ploughman at Hermiston in 1861; Jane (b.1839); William (b.1841), also a shepherd; Janet (b.1843); Margaret (b.1845); Eliza (b.1847); George (b.1852); and Elizabeth ('Betsy', b.1855). He died at Stobicote. George (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His wife was Mina Nichol and their children included Margaret (b.1834); she was probably the wife of Tom Heatley who died at Hartshaugh Mill in 1898, aged 64. George (1816–77) 4th child of William and Agnes Laidlaw, born at Highchesters. He was brother of James, farmer at Broadhaugh and Robert, builder. He was Cornet in 1843. He was a baker in Hawick and afterwards corn merchant in Backdamgate. He is probably the George who sang at the centenary Burns night in 1859. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Teviot Square, probably about 3 Sandbed. In 1861 he was at 'Crescentfoot', i.e. Backdamgate, and was at Backdamgate on a register of 1866. His business was one of those said to have suffered severe damage during the 1846 flood. In Slater's 1852 census he was listed as a corn merchant on Teviot Square. He is probably also the George who farmed at Broadhaugh. He helped found St. Andrew's Free Church and was an active member of the Parochial Board, with a particular interest in the administration of the Poor Law. In 1849 he married Jessie (1828–1913), daughter of cabinet-maker Walter Wilson, but they had no issue. He died at Slitrig Villa. George (b.1824) from Oxnam, son of Robert. He was a resident of Southdean Parish. He was at Falside in 1841. He married Margaret Robson and their children included: Robert (b.1848); and John (b.1851). George M. (1884–1970) Hawick-based architect. He was son of joiner Thomas. He was associated with his father's business and started designing buildings from about 1905. He was involved with the designs for the Museum conversion in 1910 and St. George's Church in 1913. He was probably articled to J.P. Alison. From the early 1920s he was in partnership with Alison, with the firm of Alison & Hobkirk lasting until 1959, the business eventually turning into Aitken & Turnbull. Other building designs attributed to him included Council Housing on Renwick Terrace and at Rosebank, Bemersyde House, Rutherford Lodge, Allars Kirk and Hall, the Pavillion, Blackfriars Kirk in Jedburgh, the Relief Kirk in Kelso, Hawick Cottage Hospital, Selkirk Gas Company, Taddei's Cafe and Billiard Salloon, 4 Wellington Street, Langton Mill Farm near Duns, Drumlanrig's Tower renovations and Burnfoot Parish Kirk. James (15th/16th C.) one of the Bailies appointed in 1512 by James Douglas of Cavers to give sasine to William Cranston in the lands of Denholm. His name is recorded as 'Jacobus Hopkirk'. James (16th C.) occupier of land in Denholm in 1535, along with William Davidson and Archibald Turnbull. These lands were inherited by Janet Scott, widow of Walter Scott. James (16th C.) recorded as Vicar of Carington (or Kerrington) Parish in Midlothian in 1549. He is an early example of someone bearing this surname. He must have converted to the new religion, since his name appears as Reader of the same Church in 1574. James (d.1679) from Cavers Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on 'the Crown of London' when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. James (17th/18th C.) recorded being 'in Burnflat' in 1705 and as 'casier coater to Walter Paterson' in Burnflat in 1708. He was presumably a road-layer living in a cottage on Paterson's land at the time. He and Walter Paterson of Burnflat witnessed a baptism for 'Casier' Archibald Paterson in 1707. He married Helen Paterson, who was called Isabel in the 1702 marriage record in Cavers Parish; she was probably related to the Patersons of Burnflat. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included Margaret (b.1705) and John (b.1708). The witnesses in 1705 were Walter and Archibald Paterson and in 1708 were Walter Paterson of Burnflat, Archibald Paterson, 'Casier' and Francis Paterson in Flex. James (18th C.) married Isobel Murray in Robertson Parish in 1751. James (18th C.) married Janet Black in Hobkirk Parish in 1764. She was daughter of William Black. James (18th C.) married Janet Hogg in 1777, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Ashkirk Parishes. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1784 when recorded as 'junior' (suggesting he was son of James. His children included: Nelly (b.1783); and Nelly (again, b.1784). He may be the same James who married Jane Scott in Robertson Parish in 1785. He was surely related to Robert, who was at Highchesters at the same time. James (b.c.1770s) recorded as a wright in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. James (18th/19th C.) miller in Castleton Parish. He married Jane Scott. Their son Robert was a labourer and quarryman. He is probably the James, married to Jean Scott, whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included: Margaret (b.1805); John (b.1807); Isabella (b.1808); William (b.1812); and Andrew (b.1820), frameworker in Lanton. James (b.1814/5) from Jedburgh Parish. He was a tailor in Hawick. He was a lodger on the Fore Row in 1851 and was living at 50 High Street in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included Janet, John, James, Margaret and Graham. James (19th C.) married Jean Beattie in Castleton Parish in 1849. James (1819–1904) born in Robertson Parish, younger son of William and Agnes Laidlaw, and brother of Robert, William and George. He was for a while a baker and was later farmer at Broadhaugh, and also also farmed at Eilrig. In 1851 he was living with his parents in Peebles as a master baker. In 1861 he was a farmer at West Langlee in Ladhope Parish. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1862. He showed Cheviot sheep in local competitions and was Chairman of the Teviotdale Farmers' Club. He also gave an account of the plague of voles that hit the Border counties in 1876. He served as a Magistrate for Roxburghshire county and was on the Hawick Parish School Board. He was responsible for building the Evangelical Union Kirk on O'Connell Street in 1848–9. He was also one of the first Deacons of that church (which became the Congregational Kirk) as well as one of the first Trustees. He married Mary Scott Taylor, sister of Provost John Melrose's wife. Their children included Maj. Ernest William (b.1890). He died in Melrose. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Common and their children included: Margaret (b.1856); and Graham (b.1859). James (b.1867) born in Cavers Parish, he was son of Andrew and Isabella Daniel. He was a joiner. In 1898 he married Elizabeth Maclean and they had 2 children, including Andrew Moss, Headmaster at Denholm School. John (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being 'in dēnū', which is probably an abbreviation for 'dennum', i.e. he lived in Denholm. He was cited again at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. John (16th C.) recorded among a list of tenants and other associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers in 1541. He may be related to George, who was also listed. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, he was at Whitchesters in 1714 and 1717. In 1720 he was tenant in Whitchesters. In 1731 he witnessed a baptism for James Glendinning (who also lived at Whitchesters). He married Agnes (or Janet) Hunter in Bedrule Parish in 1712 and their children included James (b.1714), Margaret (b.1717) and an unnamed son (b.1720). The 1714 baptism was 'att ye examina[tio]n in Newbigging before witnesses Walter Scott and James Davidson, tenants in Newbigging. The 1717 baptism was witnessed by John Gledstains of Whitlaw and his brother William Gledstains and the 1720 baptism by John Glendinning and William Williamson. John (18th C.) married Helen Robertson in Cavers Parish in 1739. He may have been father of James (b.1744), George (b.1746) and Adam (b.1750). Perhaps the same John was a 'Casway layer' in Ormiston in 1761, who married Ann Wright and had children (baptised in Cavers Parish): an unnamed son (b.1753); Helen (b.1755); John (b.1757); Walter (b.1759); Marion (b.1761); and William (b.1763). John (18th

C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son Robert (b.1786) with Janet Bryson was recorded in Hawick as what appears to be 'For.' (suggesting they were unmarried). The witnesses were Robert (perhaps his father or brother) and Robert Turnbull. John (18th C.) gardener at Timpendean in 1778, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. John (18th C.) married Isabel Scott in 1774, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Selkirk Parishes. Their children included James (b.1784) and Janet (b.1787), both born in Robertson. He was recorded living at Harden in 1784 and Harden Anna in 1787. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, farmer in Whitchesters, in 1766. He may also be the John who married Isabel Waugh in 1789, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Shielswood according to the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. John (b.1787) from Robertson, probably son of John and Isabel Scott. He might be the ploughman at Todshawhaugh recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish in 1812. He was a frame-work knitter on the Back Row in 1841, on the Kirk Wynd in 1851 and at 22 Howegate (probably now 1 Loan) in 1861. His wife was Helen (or 'Ellen') and they had a grandson John Green. John (1788–1852) son of Adam and Jane Scott, he was baptised in Hawick Parish. He lived in Southdean Parish, but in 1835 he followed his younger brother Adam out to America, settling in New York state. He married Christian Riddell in 1829 in Hobkirk Parish and she died in 1875, aged 81. Their children included: Janet (b.1830), who probably died in infancy; Adam (b.1832); Jane (b.1834); and Isabella (b.1838). John (b.c.1805) agricultural worker in Southdean Parish. He was living at Falside in 1841. He married Margaret, and their children included Agnes (b.c.1827), Margaret (b.c.1833), Esther (b.c.1835) and John (b.c.1838). George, who was at Falside in 1851, was probably also his son. John (1809–89) born in Galashiels, he was a joiner and cabinet-maker in Hawick. He lived at 4 Allars Bank and on Allars Crescent. He was listed in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Jane Borthwick (probably daughter of the Newmill miller), who died in 1884, aged 74. Their children included: William (b.1841); Jane (b.1845); Thomas (b.1847), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk; and John (b.1851), also baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, who died young. His sons carried on the joiners firm of W. & T. Hobkirk. John (b.1813) born in Wilton Parish, probably son of Robert. In 1841

he was living on Buccleuch Street and listed as a District Police Officer. He was a knitter at 10 Teviot Crescent in 1851 and was a gardener living at 29 High Street in 1861. He married Margaret Smith from England in 1832. Their children included Elizabeth, Jane (b.c.1835), Eliza and Robert (b.c.1850). John (b.1819/20) from Jedburgh, he was a machine-cleaner in a wool factory, living at the Sandbed. In 1851 he was at Buccleuch Street, with his older brother William also living with his family. In 1861 he was at '10 Sand Bed, Back House No 1'. His wife was Isabella, and their children included William. He is probably the John who married Isobel Fulton in Wilton Parish in 1847. John (19th C.) resident of Robertson. He married Jane Pringle in 1862 and their daughter Sarah was baptised in the same year. John (19th C.) married Beatrice Cunningham Mowbray in Wilton Parish in 1871. John (1836–1911) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Margaret Roxburgh. He worked as a teacher of music and a tailor in Douglas, Lanarkshire. Later he was postmaster there. In 1860 in Hawick he married Margaret Eliza, daughter of William Martin. Their children included: Mary MacDonald (b.1861), born in Hawick; Margaret (b.1863), who married George Hogg, gardener at Bucklands, also born in Hawick; Janet Nesbit (b.1865); Elizabeth Charteris (b.1867); Robert (b.1869), who died young; William Martin (1870–1946); John Roxburgh (b.1872); Mina Beatrice (1877–1967); and Flora (b.1879). John (d.1941) said to have been son of William and grandson of William, he was Chairman of Weensland Spinning Mills. He was Chairman of Hawick Parochial Board in the 1880s and was also as a Justice of the Peace. He served as Treasurer at St. George's Kirk 1914–21 and there is a memorial lectern to him and his wife in St. George's. He was President of the Callant's Club in 1923. In later life he lived at Ladylaw. He married Robina Hogg, who died in 1939. They are buried in Wilton Cemetery. Matthew (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he served as surety for Henry Turnbull in Unthank, as well as for himself. He was fined for non-appearance. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson. He married Marion Nichol and their children included Margaret (b.1739). Robert (b.1715) son of Adam. He was shepherd on several farms around Hawick in the 18th century, specifically Over Southfield, Goldielands, Flex and Whitlaw. He was Hawick Town Herd roughly 1752–57. He may thus have been the Herd from whom a new house was built in 1755 and who in 1756 was given a shilling by the Council 'when his child was almost burnt to death'. He gave evidence in 1767 in relation to the use of the Common; he was at that time married and living in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1781 and 1786. He married Jane Crozier in 1778, the marriage being recorded in Robertson and Ashkirk Parishes. Their children included: James (b.1779); William (b.1781); John (b.1782); and Margaret (b.1786). He was surely related to James, who was at Highchesters at the same time. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1786 for John. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Cavers Parish in 1800. Robert (18th/19th C.) probably son of John and Janet Bryson. He married Margaret Blaikie in Wilton in 1812. Their children included: John (b.1813); Jean (b.1815); Robert (b.1817); Joseph (b.1819), who moved to the United States; Anna (b.1821); and William (b.1822). In 1841 his wife and 3 children were living with Hector Blaikie (probably his brother-in-law) at Howdenburn, and so he was presumably deceased. His wife, son Joseph and 2 other children emigrated in 1842. He is probably the proprietor of the Grapes Inn, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. Robert (c.1801–72) son of James and Jane Scott, who came from Robertson. He lived in Newcastleton, where he worked as a labourer, including at the Stichehill Limery. He was listed as labourer in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835. He was recorded as a farm worker who was living at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish in 1841. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square. He married Mary Armstrong from Canonbie, who was listed in the 1841 census as 'Wife of R. Hobkirk, Q'man'. Their children included: Jean (or Jane, b.1822), who married Richard Murray; William, who was a gardener in Lancashire; Robert (b.1833); and Agnes (b.1838). Their children probably also included Janet, Walter, Helen, Mary and Margaret. Robert (1801–61) born in Ancrum, son of Walter and Beatrice Dunlop. He worked as a coal merchant in Hawick and lived at 69 High Street. In 1841 he was listed as a gardener at Slitrig Cottage, was a coal salesman on the High Street (around the Crown Close) in 1851 and by 1861 he was a gardener at about 69 High Street. In 1830 he married Margaret, daughter of John Roxburgh from Ancrum. Their children included: Janet (b.1831); Walter (b.1834); John Roxburgh (b.1836), who moved to Douglas, Lanarkshire; Robert Roxburgh (b.1838); and Robert (again, b.1842). He died in Hawick. His widow is recorded applying for poor relief in 1866 and 1867. Robert (b.1808/9) born in Ashkirk Parish. He was a shepherd at Berrybush in 1851. In 1861 he was listed as a former shepherd, living at Huntlaw Cottages in Minto Parish, along with his brother Thomas, who was a cattle dealer, and his niece Janet (from Teviothead). Robert (1809–1911) mason of William Hobkirk & Sons, eldest son of William and Agnes Laidlaw. He was baptised at East Highchester in Robertson Parish, and was brother of George and James. He was an early Trustee of St. George's Kirk. He was living at 10 Teviot Crescent in 1851 and listed as a builder on Teviot Crescent in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a mason at Hope Hill Cottage in Wilton Parish. He later moved to Southburn, Tundergarth. He married Elizabeth Grierson in 1849 in Kirkton; she was sister of Thomas Grierson, farmer at Effledge. His children were: Elizabeth 'Bessie' (b.1851); William (b.1852); Robert (b.1853); Agnes (b.1855), who married Alexander Scott, farmer at Kinninghall; Margaret (b.1857), who married Provost Edward Wilson; Wilhelmina (b.1859); Georgina Isabella Grierson (b.c.1863), who later married the same Alexander Scott; and Jemima (b.c.1865). He later moved to South Burn, Dumfriesshire and may have died at Tundergarth. Robert (b.1815/6) from Ancrum, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. He lived on the High Street (probably near No. 55) in 1851. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1841 and their children included Jane J.D., William, Janet and Margaret. Robert (19th C.) married Annie Hogarth in Hawick in 1875. Robert William 'Bob' (1921–2002) fiddler, born in Westerkirk. His father (William Smith) played the bagpipes and his mother (Mary Janet Black) played the melodeon. He took up the fiddle at the age of 14, and played his first dance at 16. He worked as a herd at Colterscleuchshiel (near Teviothead), then Hawklaw (near Bonchester). In later life he worked at Dodburn Filters, which gave him more free time to pursue his music. In 1950 he married Elizabeth (Lily) Margaret Beck. He played for the Teviotdale Valley Dance Band and the Roger Dobson Scottish Dance Band. He was a founder member of the Borders Strathspey and Reel Society. He performed his folk fiddle music widely, being Scottish Fiddle Champion three times and featured on the albums 'The Borders – songs and dances of the English-Scottish Border' (1960) and 'Border Fiddlers' (released 2000, from much earlier recordings). A tune he wrote, sometimes used by morris dancers in the English North-west is called 'Robbie Hobkirk's Polka'. Following a serious car accident and a stroke, he has limited use of his left-hand side, but recovered enough to keep playing until his last days. After his death there was a celebratory session in the Horse and Hounds, with a memorial concert the following year at Thorterdykes. Thomas (d.1568) yeoman of Gateshead, County Durham. He is an early example of someone bearing this surname, and may be related to many later Hobkirks of the Newcastle area. His daughter Katherine was recorded being of Laystoffs, Suffolk. His daughter Agnes was married to Anthony Bell, a sailor. In 1573 there was a deed between the 2 sisters relating to his lands in Gateshead. John who died in the same place in 1573 was surely related. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who married Bessie Cessford in Bedrule in 1694. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same Thomas in Denholm married Margaret Scott in Cavers Parish in 1708 and was recorded in Denholm in 1716. His children included: Bessie (b.1709); James (b.1711); Janet (b.1713); Margaret (b.1716); Thomas (b.1718); and James (again, b.1721). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Janet Cathrae in 1724. He was at Borthwick Mains in 1725 when their daughter Margaret was baptised. It is possible he was the same man as Thomas from Cavers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1730 when his son William was baptised. Thomas (1716–81) born in Glasgow, he lived in Dalkeith, purchasing Dalbeth estate in about 1754 after making his fortune as a tobacco merchant in the West Indies. He married Elizabeth Smellie in 1744 and their children were Mary, Barbara, Elizabeth, James, Francis, Elizabeth, Mary (again), Margaret, Thomas, Francis (again), and Mary (once more). In 1774 he matriculated arms, probably the first of his surname to do so. He was 5th and only surviving son of Francis and Mary Paterson, and said to be great-great-grandson of a John 'Hopkirk', who came from Germany. His connection to the Hobkirk area is unknown. Thomas (b.c.1717–67) born in Scotland, he lived in London. It is possible he was the Thomas, son of Thomas, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1718. He firstly married Elizabeth Parry in 1748 in St. George, Mayfair. Their children were: Walter (b.1750); Margaret (b.1751); and Thomas (b.1753). He secondly married Eleanor Pegus in 1760 in St.

Martin in the Fields. Their children included: Jane Eleanor (b.1761); Ann (b.1762); John Peter (b.1763); and Jane Dorothy (b.1765). He was buried at St. Paul's Church, Covent Garden. Thomas (18th/19th C.) nurseryman in Hawick. He married Isabel Scott in 1793, the marriage being recorded in Jedburgh and Maxton Parishes. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included: James (b.1795); and Robert (b.1797). The family are buried in Old Wilton Kirkyard. Also buried there is his sister, Janet (d.1826), who lived in Jedburgh. Thomas (b.c.1770) originally from Cavers, he later lived in Ashkirk Parish. In 1791 in Cavers Parish he married Janet Nichol, who was from Southdean. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Whinfield. In 1851 and 1861 he was a shepherd at Synton Mill. Their children included: Margaret (b.1794); William (b.1795); John (b.1797); Janet (b.1799); Adam (b.1802), shepherd at Kirkhope; George (b.1805), shepherd at Stobicote; Robert (b.1808); and Thomas (b.1813), shepherd at Dykes. Thomas (b.1813) son of Thomas, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was shepherd at Dykes in Cavers Parish. Thomas (19th C.) married Janet Jackson in Castleton Parish in 1865. Perhaps the same Thomas married Mary Jackson in Teviothead Parish in 1869. Thomas (1847/8–1930) son of John, he ran the joiners firm W. & T. Hobkirk with his brother William. He lived on Orchard Terrace and was an office-bearer for St. George's Kirk for 57 years. In 1871 in Wilton Parish he married Margaret (or Mary), daughter of Robert Miller and Anne Scott. Their children included: John (b.1872); George M. (1884–1970), local architect; and Andrew Borthwick (1885–1977), who died in Australia. Thomas (b.1879), who served in the Navy, may also have been his son. Walter (17th C.) attorney in Hawick. In 1688 he represented Bessie Ruecastle, wife of Alexander Hislop in a land transfer with her husband. Walter (18th C.) married Agnes Cessford in Bedrule Parish in 1707. Their children included: William (b.1707); Adam (b.1709); James (b.1710); Walter (b.1712); Margaret (b.1713), perhaps the Margaret who married John Cessford in 1748; and William (again, b.1715). Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ester Dryden and their children included Margaret (b.1743). He may be the Walter whose son Adam was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1739. Walter (18th C.) married Jean Millar in Hawick Parish in 1757. Walter (18th C.) married to Betty Dickson. Their children included: Walter (b.1761), baptised in Hawick Parish; James (b.1764), born in Duns; and William (b.1766), also born in Duns. Walter (b.1761) born in Hawick Parish, son of Walter and Betty Dickson. He lived in Ancrum Parish, where he may have been a gardener. He married Beatrice Dunlop in 1793 in Ancrum and their children included: William (b.1797); Helen (b.1799); Robert (1801–61), who died in Hawick; Walter (b.1804); and George (b.1806). Walter (b.c.1815) living in Lilliesleaf in 1841, probably on Main Street. His wife was Mary. Walter (c.1829–69) born in Hawick, he emigrated to Australia. He was a shopkeeper, butcher and publican in North Adelaide, Campbelltown and Port Augusta. In 1852 in Jedburgh he married Alice or Alison Rae. He emigrated to South Australia in 1854, along with Alison (probably his wife), Elizabeth (b.1838, perhaps his sister), Margaret and Robert. The passage was horrific, with cholera killing many on board. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing a sheep of his from Bedrule. William James (d.1679) laird of land in Hobkirk parish, and one of the earlier people to bear that surname (actually written 'Hopkirk'). He was a covenanting supporter who was imprisoned after the Battle of Bothwell Brig. Later sentenced to transportation to the American Colonies, he was drowned when the transportation ship wrecked off Moul Head in the Orkneys. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1702. His children included Thomas (b.1702). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1715). He could be the 'Coater' who (along with John Wilson, tenant in Branhholme Town) witnessed a baptism for John Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Brewhouse and their son Alexander was baptised in 1724. William (18th C.) resident of London, he was landlord of 'the George' in Enfield in the 1770s. In 1772 he married Letitia Hawes and their children (mostly baptised at St. Andrews Church, Enfield) were: Adam (b.1774); Alicia (b.1775); Sarah (b.1777); Mary (b.1778); William (b.1779); Henry (b.1781); and Samuel (b.1783). Given the similarity of names, it seems likely he was related to the older Adam who lived in London at that time, was also connected with Jamaica, and probably came from the Hawick area. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Longside in Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Hawkass in 1779 and 1780. He was taxed at Langside for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Thomas (b.1767); William (b.1770); George (b.1771); John (b.1773); Jean (b.1775); Mary (b.1779); Betty (b.1780); and Rachel (b.1782). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Riddell and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1811. William (1781–1859) probably son of Robert, he was christened at Robertson. He was a mason, and was the founder of the Hawick builders firm William Hobkirk & Sons. He was recorded as a mason at Wiltonbun on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. In 1809 in Wilton Parish he married Agnes Laidlaw (1790–1873). Their children (mostly baptised in Robertson) were: Robert (1809–1911), also a mason; William (1811–70), baker; Margaret (1813–61), who married Adam Beattie, millmaster in Edinburgh; George (1816–77); James (1819–1904); Adam (1822–c.70); John (1825–76), who married Margaret Leishman and died in Edinburgh; and Thomas (b.1829), who died in infancy. In 1841 he was a mason living at Ashkirk Mill, with his wife and sons Robert, James and Thomas, while the rest of the family were at the Sandbed. In 1851 he and his family were living in Peebles. William (b.1810/1) from Jedburgh, he was a handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living with the family of his brother John on Buccleuch Street. William (1811–c.70) son of William and Agnes Laidlaw, who were from Robertson. He was a baker on the Sandbed. He was recorded there in 1841 with his brothers George (also a baker), Adam (a joiner's apprentice) and John (baker's apprentice), as well as sister Margaret. He and his brother George were also corn merchants for at least 25 years. He gave evidence to the Commission into the law of 'hypothec' in 1865, stating that he had been a corn merchant in Hawick for 10 years and Edinburgh for 15 years, buying grain from Prussian and Danish ports. He is probably the brother of James of Broadhaugh and hence the William who wrote poetry for local papers, including a piece celebrating the Duke of Buccleuch reaching majority in 1852, entitled 'Long Live Good Buccleuch' (attributed to George Hobkirk in one source). He died at Teviothead. William (b.1815/6) born in Cavers Parish. In 1861 he was a labourer at 'Spittal Guidepost'. His wife was Janet from Castleton, and she had a son, Walter Little, by a previous husband. He may be the William who married Janet Smith in Castleton Parish in 1865. William (b.1818/9)

from Selkirkshire. In 1861 he was a shepherd at Peelbraehope. His wife was Mary (or Marion) and their children included: Mary (b.1845), born at Craik; and Andrew (b.c.1849). William (19th C.) married Marky Scott in Hawick Parish in 1843. Their Children included: Margaret Bell (b.1846), baptised in Hawick; and Andrew (b.1849), baptised in Eskdalemuir. He may be the shepherd from Yarrow who was at Kiddomhill in Eskdalemuir in 1851. William (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His wife was Marion Laidlaw and their children included: Mary (b.1845). William (1841–1913) shepherd at Borthwickshiels and later at Edgerston. He was probably son of George, shepherd at Stobicote. He is probably the shepherd of that name living at Skelfhill in 1861. In 1865 at Hummelknowes Mill he married Janet Smith, and she died in 1906. Their children were: James (b.1864), baptised in Bedrule; George (b.1866); Ellen (b.1867); William Smith (1871–1942), baptised in Southdean Parish, who also worked on local farms; George (again, b.1872); Thomas (b.1874); and Helen (b.1876). He died in Hawick. William (1841–1913) Hawick mason and joiner who was involved with Hawick Free Kirk. He was son of John and Jane Borthwick. He ran the joiners firm W. & T. Hobkirk with his brother Thomas. He married Jean Brown and later Margaret, daughter of Archibald Johnstone Donaldson, oil extractor. William Smith (1871–1942) son of George and Janet Smith, he was born at Letham in Southdean Parish. Based on the birthplaces of his children, he must have worked on Eilrig farm and at Elfgill farm, Westerkirk, probably as a shepherd. In 1908 he married Mary Janet Black. Their children were: Agnes ('Nan', b.1909); Janet ('Jenny', b.1914); and Robert ('Bob') William (b.1921). He died at Hawklaw, near Bonchester, and was buried in the Wellogate Cemetery (also spelled 'Habkirk', 'Hapkirk', 'Hopekirk', 'Hopekirkie', 'Hopkirk', etc. in earlier records).

Hobkirk Baa (hob-kirk-baw) n. handball game still played in the village of Hobkirk, also sometimes called 'Bonchester Baa'. The ball is traditionally thrown up on the site of the old church (and in earlier times was thrown over the building). There are 3 hails for each side: for the 'doonies' they are at Hawthornside, at Abbotrule and behind the Horse and Hounds; for the 'uppies' they are at the Forkins, at Wolfelee and at Highend. In earlier times they were about a mile from the kirkyard, at Harwood Mill for the uppies and Hobsburn for the doonies. Additional hails at Abbotrule House and Drythrople were added in the 1840s (apparently because the Stewart brothers had been so successful in preventing the ball getting up the water to the single hail). The event is traditionally held on the first Monday after the New Moon after Candlemas, before Denholm Baa. In early times it was traditional for the ball to be thrown over the church before daylight and for some participants to climb up to ring the bells. Stalls were set up on gravestones in the churchyard, selling nicknacks, snacks and liquor. The heritors tried to suppress the gathering in 1803, but failed. In modern times each ball is sponsored by local people and businesses.

Hobkirk Glebe (hob-kirk-gleeb) n. lands once attached to Hobkirk Kirk. They were referred to as ‘all and hail the old Glebe of Hobkirk’ in 1757 when sold by Thomas Scott of Stanedge to William Elliot of Wolfelee. These could be the same as the lands of ‘Hobkirkmanse’, listed as being farmed by Andrew Ormiston and James Turnbull on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls.

Hobkirk Kirk (hob-kirk-kirk) n. church of Hobkirk parish, built in the narrowest part of the Rule valley. It dates back to at least the 12th century, and at early times belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1220 the vicarage was valued at 10 merks, with the vicar being obliged to give the canons half a stone of wax annually at the feast of St. James (as part of an agreement between Jedburgh Abbey and the Diocese of Glasgow). Jedburgh Abbey continued to receive benefits from the church until the time of the Reformation, when the teinds (from Wells, West Lees, Billerwell, Hallrule, Town o’ Rule, Hobsburn, Weens, Gledstains, Howa, Stonedge, Apotside, Hawthornside and Wauchope) amounted to 1 chalder, 3 bolls of barley and 1 chalder, 6 bolls of meal. The present church, with its great square tower dates from only 1862–69, with David Rhind as architect, and was restored in 1914. It incorporates parts of the older church of 1690–92, demolished in 1862, which was plain and heather-thatched, with a clay floor 2 steps below the churchyard, and no ornamentation (and can be seen in an old sketch). A bell and bellfry were added in 1741, the bell (inscribed with that date) and bellfry roof being later moved to Weens House. The old church was re-thatched in 1742 and 1758. It was substantially repaired in 1777 after the suppression of Abbotrule Kirk; the roof was slated and a new aisle was built to hold the new worshippers from Abbotrule. It was again repaired in the 1840s with the floor repaired (but a mass of human remains was found just below the surface and reinterred. There is also some existing carved stonework from an earlier 12th century chapel (one piece engraved with the date 1211), which was situated on the rising ground to the north-east of the churchyard and was probably the original ‘Ecclesia de Roule’; three carved capitals are described in 1904. They were recoved from Weens House in 1937, along with others from a nearby cottage in 1950, and are now in the present church, with a decorated quoin later positioned in the churchyard. A baptismal font stone was said to have been on Cowdie’s Knowe before being moved to Weens garden. The eastern gable of the early church was incorporated into the newer (17th century) one and the chancel converted into an aisle for the Elliots of Harwood. It has also been suggested (by Jeffrey) that the earliest church was at Town o’ Rule. The previous minister’s house was repaired in 1659 and the Manse was listed as ‘waste’ in 1694, so that no tax was paid on its 5 hearths. Tax was paid on 17 windows for the manse in 1748. The current Manse dates from 1770. The glebe lands constituted about 15 acres, augmented by 24 acres from Abbotrule. The kirkyard was enclosed by a wall in about the 1820s, before that being regularly used for games and displaying goods during Hobkirk Baa. It is said that an ancient stone kist was once discovered when digging a grave near the site of the old church, and a large quern was unearthed when digging foundations for an aisle for the Wauchope family. Prominent sites in the kirkyard are devoted to the Elliots of Harwood, and the families of Wauchope and Weens. The church was without a minister for about 5 years following the ‘Revolution’ of 1689. There was also formerly a Free Kirk established near Wolfelee serving those who ‘came out’ of Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes in 1843. The Parish was linked with Southdean in 1973, united with Southdean and linked with Cavers and Kirkton 1988–96, and then in 2004 became included in the new parish of Ruberslaw (along with Denholm, Minto, Bedrule, and Southdean). The church originally belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. Parish records exist dating back to 1726. A partial roll of the ministry is: Rodger, Parson of Rule in about 1170 and in 1214; Ada Onidius, clergyman around 1220; Aleyn, Parson of Rule in 1296; James Bennet, Vicar until 1550; David Turnbull 1550–76; John Douglas, from 1576; George Douglas, possibly 1602–9; Thomas Thomson 1609–26; William Weir 1626–51; James Douglas 1652–65; John Ainslie 1665–82; John

Hobkirk Pairish (hob-kirk-pā-reesh) n. parish about 7 miles south-east of Hawick, containing Bonchester Bridge and Hobkirk villages. It runs along the Rule Water from the watershed with Liddesdale in the south to the boundary with bedrule Parish in the north, being about 11 miles long and 3 miles wide. It was bounded by Bedrule, Cavers, Kirkton, Southdean and Castleton. The parish was mentioned as early as 1220 and before the Reformation consisted of the estates of Wells, West Lees, Billerwell, Hallrule, Town o' Rule, Weens, Hobsburn, Hawthornside, Gledstains, Unthank, Appotside, Howa, Stanedge, Harwood and Wauchope. The old Barony of Feu-Rule may have originally corresponded with the boundaries of the Parish of Hobkirk. In the county valuation of 1643, the lands of the Parish were valued at £8542 10s. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £7600 and in 1678 the lands were valued at 8542 13s 4d. It was extended by having part of Abbotrule annexed to it in 1777. There were 37 men listed there between the ages of 19 and 30 in 1799. The original church probably dates from the early 13th century. It was replaced by a second church, completed in 1693 and used until 1862. The present church, partially incorporating the older one, was built in 1869, and restored in 1914. The proprietors of the parish were for a long time the Turnbulls and many Elliots of Harwood are also buried in the churchyard. The parish has given rise to a surname. A history of the parish and surrounding area is given in George Tancred's 'Rulewater and its People' (1907). Records of baptisms and marriages begin in 1726. The Borders Archive has Parish records for 1846–1930.

Hobkirk Schuil (hob-kirk-skil) n. school in Hobkirk Parish, existing from at least the early 17th century. Tancred describes its state in the 1840s, being a small cottage lying below Kirkknowe, with one room for the schoolmaster and another for the scholars. The floor was of clay, the benches narrow, the lighting poor, the only heat from the fireplace, and no sanitary facilities. A new building was erected shortly afterwards and is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map to the south of the Kirk. There were 60 pupils there in the 1830s. Thomas Young was schoolmaster in 1616, William Rutherford in 1616 and 1618, James Arbuthnott in 1619, George Henderson in 1657, William Clerk in 1681, Andrew Watson in 1693, Sam Oliver 1726–50, William Armstrong 1751–1808, William Turnbull 1821–46, Thomas Shiel probably until 1856 (when he died), John Malcolm from 1857 and Thomas Culbertson from 1886. The Borders Archive has school board minute books for 1873–1919. There was also once a school for girls, situated at Cleuch Head, and established by Mrs. Elliot of Wolfelee.

Hobkirkstile (hob-kirk-stīl) n. another name for Kirkstile in Hobkirk Parish (it is so marked on Stobie's 1770 map; also spelled 'Hobkirkstyle', it 'Hobkirk Stile' in 1799).

Hob o Alton (hob-ō-awl'-in) n. nickname for Robert Scott, Bailie of 1612.

Hob o Thorlinsope (hōb-ō-thor-linz-hōp) n. nickname of Robert Elliot, one of the Liddesdale thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567.

Hobsburn (hobz-burn) n. mansion house near Bonchester, dating to the 17th century and now run as a small guest house. The house is on the stream called Hobs Burn, which joins the Rule Water at Bonchester Bridge. The lands there were once a Lairdship within the Barony of Feu-Rule. 'Hogg' Shiel was recorded there in 1494/5. Robert Turnbull was there in 1562 and his house was already called 'the auld hous' at that time. Walter Turnbull 'of Hoppisburne' is recorded in 1568, and was Laird in 1574 when he had to appear before the Regent and Lords of Secret Council for building his own mill there; this may have been a small threshing mill, powered by water from a pond. Probably the same Walter Turnbull of Hobsburn was cautioned by the Privy Council in 1580 and was only 'called of Hobsburn' (suggesting he had lost his lands there) when listed among criminals in 1586/7. Thomas Turnbull is recorded there in 1589 and 1590. James Turnbull 'of Hoppisburne' servitor to Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst is recorded about 1601. The lands were sold in 1606 by Thomas Turnbull, younger of Hobsburn, to John Scott, brother of Walter Scott of Allanmouth. The lands of 'Hoppisburn and Weynds' are there described as being between Hallrule on the east, Rouchlaw Sike on the west, Nether Bonchester on the south and Hallrule Common on the north. The house itself may date to around 1600, and is said to be the oldest house in Hobkirk Parish. It was used as a dower-house by the widow of Sir Gilbert Eliott in the late 17th century. In 1691 it was sold to Thomas Inglis. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1694. The estate was formerly an important one in Hobkirk Parish, recorded before the Reformation, and at one time extended as far as to include the lands of Midburn. The lands later became part of the Stonedge estate, with 'Hobsburn' being the name used for the main house there in the 18th century. The name was changed to 'Greenriver' around 1793 by James Chisholme, after his Jamaican plantation, but reverted back to the original later. Along the south side of the stream, to the east of the house, lies an ancient earthwork, called Duncan's Hole. The bridge there was washed away in the flood of 1846. The 'Kail-pot (or Kitchen)' of the farm was the location for the 'hail' for the 'dooies' in the game of Hobkirk Baa in the 19th century (recorded at least as early as 1562, it was formerly written 'Hoppisburn', 'Hoppisburne', etc., being 'Hopisburn' in 1494/5, 'Hopisburne' in 1567, 'Hoipisburne' in 1574, 'Hoppisburne' and 'Hopisburne' in 1580, 'Hoppisburne' in 1582 and 1606, 'Howpisburne' and 'Hoppisburne' in 1586/7, 'Hoppesborne' and 'Hoppesburnn' in 1590, 'Hopsburne' in 1652, 'Hobisburne' in 1653, 'Hobisburn' in 1677 and 'Hobsburne' in 1694; the name probably derives from the stream there).

Hob's Burn (hobz-burn) n. stream that runs roughly east to join the Rule Water at Bonchester Bridge. Hawthornside Burn and Mid Burn join it further up (labelled 'Hopps B.' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Hobsburn Yett (hobz-burn-ye') n. former place name in Hobkirk Parish. It is recorded as 'Hoppisburne Zett' in the 1562 document relating to the Baronial dispute over lands in Feu-Rule. It probably lay to the east of Hobsburn, near the haugh and what is now the village of Bonchester Bridge.

Hob's Knowe (hobz-now) n. hill between Craik village and Buccleuch, directly between Black Rig and Deep Slack, reaching a height of 366 m. There is a disused quarry there (it is unclear who the 'Hob' might be).

Hob the Lonkie (hob-thu-long-kee) n. nickname for Robert Scott, recorded in 1612. It is possible the name was actually 'Loukie', meaning 'blessed'.

hoch (hōch) n., arch. hock, joint in the hind leg of an animal, back of the knee, 'to cruick a hoch' means to bend the knees in order to sit or kneel – 'A cruicket ma hoach an clappeet masel doon a meenint on ov a foggie bank' [ECS] (also written 'hoach'; cf. hough).

hockert (ho-kur) v., arch. to crouch in a sitting position, crouch over a fire for warmth (cf. hoakert).

hockey (ho-kee) n. game played with sticks and a small ball, popular as a girls school sport in the latter part of the 20th century. The sport had been popular with both sexes in the last few years of the 19th century and in the early 20th, with matches played in the Park. Hawick's particular claim to fame in the world of field hockey is that Ivan Laing scored the first goal in the Olympics in 1908.

hocky (ho-kee) interj., arch. used as an emphatic declaration, sometimes 'By hocky!'.

Hoddam (ho-dam) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, when he is recorded as being 'de Hodolm'. His seal showed a squirrel (or perhaps lion rampant) with the words 'S'ADE DE HODVME'. He is recorded as 'Adam de Hodholme' in the early 1300s when he resigned lands in the Borthwick valley. This included Kirk Borthwick and Hoscote. The lands that he had formerly held in Kirk Borthwick were granted to William Barbour in about 1321. He was presumably associated with Hoddam (or 'Hoddom') in Dumfriesshire, later a seat of the Maxwells. The Borthwick lands were then granted to William Barbour by Robert the Bruce. He was presumably a supporter of the opponents of the Bruce. Robert of Hoddam, from Roxburghshire, who also signed the Ragman Rolls of 1296, was surely a relative.

hodden (ho-din) n., poet. a coarse, grey, homespun, woollen cloth – 'Hey! thou that wears the mony-colour'd wig, An' hates to look on hamely hoddin grey' [JoHa], '...your puir brother, when he comes hame, will prefer a coat o' his mother's hodden grey, to the ane he has been sae lang wearin'...' [JTe], 'The blunked blue or hoddin grey, which the outer garments of our forefathers displayed ...' [RW], '...To be coosily cled In the coorsest o' hodden grays' [WL], 'Hither and yont throu the hodden mist Rise the merks o' her classic story ...' [WL] (also spelled 'hoddin' and familiar from Burns; the cloth was naturally grey from a combination of wool from white and black sheep; possibly related to harden).

hoddert (ho-dur) pp., arch. hobbled – ‘... An’ pass the time till a’ get hoddert hame’ [JoHa].

hoddle (ho-dul) v., arch. to walk with a hobble or waddle – ‘This self-same chuckie had been nought uncommon, But joost a hirplin, hoddlin, hamely woman’ [JoHa].

hoddle (ho-dul) n., arch. a loose, temporary hay-stack (noted by J. Jamieson).

hoddlemadock (ho-dul-maw-dok) n., arch. a dumpy person who walks with a waddle.

Hoddleswuddie (ho-dulz-wu-dee) n. Hoddeswoodie, former farm on the lands of Hobsburn. It lay on the roadside near Bonchester Bridge and was still thatched in the mid-1800s. In the early 1700s Rev. Nichol Edgar is supposed to have convinced a ghost to stop haunting Hobkirk churchyard and instead walk a straight line between here and Howaburn; this was recounted by George Tancred, and may have been the subject of a lost ghost story of John Leyden, entitled ‘Hoddleswoodee Haugh’. James Turnbull was there in 1786 and James Douglas in 1790 (also written ‘Hoodleswoodie’, it is ‘Hodleswoody’ in 1786).

Hodge (hoj) n. John (16th C.) recorded in Standhill in 1580 when he had a contract for his daughter Elizabeth to marry James, son of James Sharp in Langnewton. William (17th/18th C.) baxter in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1707 for merchant ‘Black Walter’ Scott, in 1708 for fellow baxter Walter Boyd, in 1709 for merchant Michael Scott and for merchant William Craig, in 1711 for shoemaker Robert Porteous, in 1713 for carrier Walter Deans, in 1714 for candlemaker John Scott, in 1717 for wright Richard Turnbull, and in 1721 for merchant Andrew Turnbull. He is probably the William whose son Robert was baptised in 1695, with witnesses Thomas Purdom and John Whillans. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Liddelbank according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. In the 1801 ballot he was listed as a gardener at Liddelbank. William (18th/19th C.) gardener at Borthwickshiels. He witnessed a baptism for Robertson Schoolmaster Robert Miller in 1798.

hodgel (ho-jul) n., arch. a kind of dumpling, made of oatmeal (a ‘yitmeal hodgel’) or flour, apples or other ingredients, a stodgy piece of food – ‘A nice hodgel o’ dumplin’ [GW], a stout, clumsy person – ‘Or gin we haena swords an’ spears, To stick an’ slash the vap’rin’ hodgels’ [JoHa] (also hodiell).

Hodgins (ho-jinz) n. William ‘Billy’ Hawick middle distance runner. He set a new record for the 880 yards in 1956 and was 6 times winner of the British half-mile championship. At the Common Riding games the 800 m race is competed for the Billy Hodgins Challenge Cup.

Hodgson (hoj-sin) n. Rev. James (19th C.) pastor at Hawick Baptist Kirk 1896–97. He edited ‘Grace and Truth’, the local church newsletter. There was friction during his incumbency, and he resigned, but was convinced to return. However, 30 members of the congregation formed their own group, meeting on Union Street. He therefore stepped down for good, and it took great effort to reunite the congregation and appoint his successor. Richard (1812–77) Borderer and M.P. for Devonport. He was Chairman of the North British Railway when it was selected to extend their Edinburgh line through Hawick to Carlisle, but was forced to resign in the late 1860s amid financial irregularities. At the sod-cutting ceremony in 1859 he was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick; his wife turned the first sod. He may also have been called Thomas – ‘High o’er the rest, Tam Hodgson stood – High, like a farmer’s cock – And loudly crowed, till all his band Re-echoed what he spoke’ [T].

hodiell (ho-deel) n., poet. a dumpling made of oatmeal, fat and seasoning, or sometimes with flour, apples, etc. – ‘Dumplings, hodiells, weel made up Wi’ suet, spice’ [JoHo] (cf. hodgel).

hodrod (hod-rod) n., arch. a confused collection of things, conglomeration – ‘A perfec’ hodrod o’ stuff lyin’ in ablow the bed’ [GW].

Hoffman presser (hof-mun-pre-sur) n. job in the knitwear industry, someone who operates a Hoffman presser. This was the first generally available steam presser.

Hogarth (hō-garth) n. James (b.1879) born in Galashiels, he was educated at Melrose School. In 1895 he became an apprentice gardener at Newton Don, then moved to Culdees Castle, worked in Lord Powerscourt’s gardens near Dublin and was then at Perthshire and Midlothian, before taking up employment at Weens in 1903. At Hallrule in 1903 he married Bessie Thomson (b.1878), whose parents were in Mackside Tollhouse. Paul (1959–) wing forward for Hawick R.F.C. He first played for Burnfoot Bandits, later playing for the High School team, the P.S.A. and the Y.M. He represented Hawick R.F.C. from 1977/8 and won 6 league winners’ medals with the Greens. He also appeared for the South team, was Captain of the Scotland B side and played for the Scottish Border Club team in the Hong Kong Sevens in 1982. He moved to Edinburgh, where he ended his rugby-playing days with the Accies. In 1990 he set up his own landscape gardening firm, The Paul Hogarth Company, which has offices in the U.K. and Ireland and has won awards for its work. He has collaborated on projects with his old schoolfriend Gordon Muir; in 2020 the pair re-designed the landscaping around the Hornshole Monument. Living in Dollar, he married Lesley Wells (also from Hawick) and had a son Tom and daughter Charlie. Robert (1785–1860) born in Channellkirk, Berwickshire, he was son of Robert and Mary Scott. His father was said to be an early grower of turnip and is credited with the introduction of the potato at Carfrae in about 1780. His brother George was a lawyer, newspaper editor and music critic in Edinburgh, friend of Sir Walter Scott and father of Catherine, who married Charles Dickens. He was tenant farmer at Newton in Bedrule Parish, where most of his children were born. He later farmed at Scremerston in Northumberland. He married Elizabeth Purves (who died in 1825) and their children included: Margaret (b.1811), who married Patrick Clay Grieve; Mary Scott (1813–76), who died unmarried; Elizabeth Jane (1816–91), also died unmarried; Robert (1817–59); Peter Purves (1819–59); and Christina (b.1825), who married John Ballantyne. Robert and Peter died in the wreck of the Royal Charter off Anglesey. He died at Tweedmouth. T.A. (19th/20th C.) Secretary at Hawick Baptist Church 1901–13.

hog-back gravestone (hōg-bawk-grāv-stān) n. a gravestone from the 9th–11th century, perhaps a relic of pre-Christian traditions, with a Viking influence. They are named for their appearance, reminiscent of a hog's back, but in fact representing the roof of a house. There are local examples from Bedrule (built into the church porch), Ancrum churchyard and Nisbet (where there were 3, the best of which is preserved in Hawick Museum).

hogg (hōg) n. a young sheep, after weaning but before its first shearing – 'Item nyne hoggis in syntoun price of the pece ourheid 13s 4d' [SPB1579], '...£11 Scots for some malt, ane yow, and twa hoggis' [BR1638], 'For either gimmer, hogg, or croak, By George, I'll g'ye a cowin'' [JoHa], '...stock wethers hogs unclipt, 12s. 9d.; ditto ewe hogs unclipt, 14s. 2d.; ewe hogs sold at market,

11s. 3d.' [RGJH], 'Our helper, workmate, slave and friend, you are the one we have to send to gather ewe and hogg' [TD] (also written 'hog'; the word is used in several place names, e.g. Hog Gill, Hoghill and Hog Knowe; the diminutive is hoggie).

Hogg (hōg, hog) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1579 among those owed money by the deceased James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. Adam (b.1709/10) shepherd in Newbigging for 10 years, for 6 years at Alton Croft and then was at Todshawhaugh. He gave evidence at the court case for the division of the Common in 1767. He was probably the Adam, son of James, born in Hawick in 1710. He could be the Adam who was at Slaidhills in 1743 and who married Jean Elliot, with children: Helen (b.1739); Janet (b.1743); and James (b.1747). The witnesses in 1743 were Robert Elliot and Patrick Hume, tenants in Slaidhills. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jane Graham and their children included Jane (b.1818) and Janet (b.1819). Adam 'Satch' (20th C.) art teacher at Hawick High School. Agnes (18th C.) cook at Woll in 1785, when she was working for Charles Scott. Agnes (1824/5–1902) daughter of James of 'Teribus' fame. She married stocking-maker Adam Laing and their children were: Jane (b.c.1845), who married James Renwick; James (c.1847–1909), grocer; Euphemia (c.1851–1918), who lived at Marlefield and died unmarried; Eliza (b.c.1853), who married William Pitcairn, Headmaster of Buccleuch School; Agnes (1855–1910) who married manufacturer Francis Elliot Wilson; Adam (b.1858), who died young; Christina Grey (b.1861), who married Alfred Warr, minister of Rosneath, and had 2 sons who were well-known clerics, Alfred Ernest Warr and Charles Laing Warr; and Jessie D. (b.1864), who married James White and lived in Glasgow. Alexander (16th/17th C.) granted in 1595/6 the husbandland in Lilliesleaf that was formerly owned by the late James Bennet. Rev. Alexander (d.c.1619) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1601, he received testimonials from the Presbytery of Hamilton, and became minister at Ashkirk in 1611. A dispute with 'the gudewife of Sintoun' (probably the widow of Walter Scott of Synton) in 1615 led to her taking communion at both Hassendean and Lilliesleaf Kirks, which resulted in a rebuke for both those ministers. Presumably this arose out of a difference of opinion on church matters between this lady (as one of the parish heritors) and her minister. He was minister until 1619 and died before March of the following year. He married Agnes Scott (who later married James Scott of Whitslade). Their children included: Jean, who married Robert, son of Robert Scott of Chesterhouse; and Elizabeth. Alexander (17th C.) probably schoolmaster of Bedrule (according to a gravestone of his widow Margaret in the churchyard there). Alexander (d.c.1687) resident in 'Newtoun' whose will if recorded in 1687. It is unclear which Newton this might have been, although certainly in Roxburgh, Selkirk or Peebles counties. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His children included George (b.1739) and Robert (b.1739), baptised on the same day. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Jean Davidson and their children included James (b.1771) and Jean (b.1773). Alexander (b.c.1780) labourer in Lilliesleaf according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Perhaps the same Alexander married Jenny Smail and had a son Alexander baptised in 1806. Alexander (18th/19th C.) listed operating as a carrier, along with John Brown, in Pigot's 1825 directory. They left from Denholm to Edinburgh every Monday fortnight. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included George (b.1851) and John (b.1854). Amos see John Amos Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) witness in 1550 to a lease granted by the curators of the young James Cranston to his mother Janet Beaton, who was wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme. It was witnessed at Branhholme, and so he was probably a local man. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret 'Hessilop' (i.e. Hilop) and their children included John (b.1657). An unnamed child baptised in 1650, with no mother's name recorded, is probably also his. Andrew (18th C.) married Isabel Smail in Wilton in 1744. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret 'Robieson' and their children included James (b.1776). Andrew (18th C.) recorded at Threephead in 1781, 1785 and 1787. His children, baptised in Roberton parish, included: Jane (b.1781); Euphan (b.1783); Nelly (b.1785); and Andrew (b.1787). He could be the Andrew, son of James, baptised in Roberton in 1747. Andrew (b.1802/3) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was educated in Selkirk and Edinburgh. He may be the son of James born in Lilliesleaf in 1798 and was surely related to John, the poet at Roadhead. He was schoolmaster in Roberton in the 1820s and early 1830s and helped prepare the description of Roberton Parish (written by the minister) for publication in the New Statistical Account of Scotland in 1841. A letter of 1828 in the Walter Mason Collection discusses 'payment by War Office of his Militia account'. In 1833 he moved to be schoolmaster in Wilton, where he is recorded several times in the period 1835–41. He lived there with his sister Mary, described as 'housekeeper', and Elizabeth, who was probably a younger sister. He prepared a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account (1834), where he is described as 'formerly schoolmaster of Roberton, now schoolmaster of Wilton'. In 1851 he was Inspector of Poor in Wilton, living on Wilton Place and was listed as 'collector of poor rates, Wilton place' in Slater's 1852 directory. Charles 'Charlie' or 'the Mumper' (??–) grandfather of Jake Irvine, he played forward for Hawick R.F.C., worked on the railway and was known for his pawky humour. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid out of the Wilton poor box in 1705. Elizabeth 'Betty' (1938/9–) local woman who was raised on a farm, she worked at Trowmill and Barrie's and lives in Denholm. She wrote a memoir 'Echoes: The Memoirs of a Country Woman', a novel 'Web of Intrigues' (2008) and several books of poetry. Francis (b.1798) son of William and Jane White, he was an agricultural labourer from Ashkirk Parish. He was listed at Drinkstone among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. On the 1841 census he was living at Drinkstone Cottage, at Castleside in 1851 and at Woll Lodge in 1861. He married Margaret Scott and their children were: William (b.1822); Charles (b.1824); Elizabeth, 'Betty' (b.1824); Jane (b.1828); Christian (b.1831); Margaret (b.c.1835); Anne (b.c.1838); and Francis, 'Frank' (b.1840), the Hawick song writer. Francis 'Frank' (1840–1880) son of Francis and Margaret Scott, he was born at Drinkstone Cottage. His father was a farm worker, who moved back to the Ashkirk area. In 1851 they were at Castleside and in 1861 he was a lodger with his brother Charles at 16 Buccleuch Street. He later lived at 1 Allars Bank. He became a solicitor's clerk with George & James Oliver in Hawick. He was writer of 'I like Auld Hawick', which is his only known poetical work, contributed to the magazine of the Hawick Literary Society in 1867. He acknowledged himself as writer 10 years later when he sang it at a dinner for the departure of Bailie

Michie. He was active in the Conservative Association, being the joint Secretary and Treasurer. He was also instrumental in setting up a Public Library, a keen member of the Congregational Church, the Good Templar movement and other improvement societies. He became a member of the Archæological Society in 1865, was Treasurer for 12 years, and contributed some papers to the Transactions (e.g. one about 'Some Old Songs, with Local Allusions'). He became ill and died suddenly in the Exchange Hall. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery, and Frank Place was named after him. A portrait of him exists. George (16th C.) recorded being in Wester Lilliesleaf in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. George (d.c.1687) shepherd in Sundhope when his will was recorded in 1687. It is unclear which Sundhope this was. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Fife and their son George was baptised in 1688. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Wilson and their son Walter was baptised in 1696. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. One of the oldest surviving headstones in the old kirkyard commemorates his wife Margaret Leyden, who died in 1695 and another wife, Janet Elliot, who died in 1705. George (17th/18th C.) miller in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Hogg in 1725. Their children included: Alexander (b.1726); Janet (b.1727); and Ann (b.1730). The witnesses in 1727 were Benjamin 'Th...' and John Scott and in 1730 were George and Robert Scott. George (1725/6–1787) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1762 he married Mary Armstrong who was from Minto Parish and died in 1810, aged 77. Walter (b.c.1780), who lived in Wilton, may have been his son. He is buried in Ashkirk. George (18th C.) shepherd on the farm of Whitlaw. His house was described in the perambulation of the Common carried out in 1767, and lay within the boundaries of the Common. He was probably related to James, recorded at Whitlaw in 1766. George (18th C.) married Helen Inglis in Ashkirk Parish in 1775. George (c.1792–1850s) mason who lived at Bramble Hall. He firstly married Margaret Forsyth in Cavers in 1815, and she died in 1832. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1823); William (b.1824); Thomas (b.1826); and George (b.1831). In 1836 he secondly married Mary Pearson from Castleton. Their children were: Helen (b.c.1838); Alexander (b.c.1841); Adam (b.c.1843); Joseph (1845–1903); James (b.c.1848); and Andrew (b.c.1850).

He is recorded on the Back Row on the 1841 census. George (b.1795/6) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was a carrier at Salenside in 1841, a carrier and grocer at Salenside Tower in 1851 and at Barebacklaw in 1861 when listed as farmer of 28 acres. Andrew Grieve, living with the family in 1841, may have been his brother-in-law. He married Isabella Grieve, and their children included: Janet (or 'Jessie, b.1830); William (b.1833); Isabel (b.1839); and James (b.1845). George (1817–74) son of Walter, he was born in Wilton Parish and worked for William Watson's. In 1849 he was appointed by the trustees of William Lindsay Watson to oversee the hosiery branches in Hawick and Selkirk. In 1863 he took over the hosiery branch at Underdamside, forming the firm of George Hogg & Sons. He was later based in the mill at Mill Bank. In 1851 he was 'Foreman over Frame work knitters' living on Wilton Place and in 1861 was 'Overseer Wool Hosiery Factory' living at Wellington Place. He married Elizabeth Cavers, who died in 1880, aged 61. They had 9 children, including: George (b.1840), partner in the family firm; and Helen Wilson (b.1841/2–95), who married George Redhead; Robert (b.1847/8), 3rd son, also a manufacturer; Adam (b.1850), who died young; Elizabeth (b.1852); Andrew White (b.1854); and Margaret Ker (b.1857). A portrait of him exists and he is buried in Wilton Cemetery. His sister Christian married baker Andrew White. George (b.1816/7) son of William, farmer at Cavers Knowes. He took over the farm from his father, running it along with his younger brother Robert. George (19th C.) married Elizabeth Rutherford in 1844, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. George, J.P. (1840–1900) eldest son of George. In 1874 he became partner (along with his brother Edward) in the family firm of George Hogg & Sons, hosiery manufacturers, which then moved to Millbank. He was a councillor from 1886 for Teviot Ward, a Bailie from 1888, Provost 1890–93 and returned to the Council in 1898. A keen bowler, Mason and cricket supporter, he was also a member of Hawick Parish Council and Poorhouse Committee. He married Agnes Paterson of Melrose (who died in 1928, aged 81) and is buried in Wilton Cemetery. George (b.1862) born at Woll Gate in Ashkirk Parish. He was gardener at Bucklands. In 1891 (in Lanarkshire) he married Margaret Hobkirk (1863–1938) from Hawick. Their children were William, John, Annie, Selby and George (all born in Wilton Parish). George

(b.c.1870) from Newcastleton. He apprenticed with a blacksmith, but showed a literary interest. In 1886, at about the age of 16, he produced a monthly newspaper, entitled 'Hogg's Journal and Newcastleton Review'. In all 5 issues were published (in Hawick by Vair & McNairn). Harry (20th C.) Beadle at Cavers Kirk around the 1950s. He was known for being short-tempered with the minister being late for Sunday services (which in those days were held at both Cavers and Kirkton churches), waiting with his watch and when the minister arrived slamming the pulpit and vestry doors and going home! James (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine for the lands of Denholm Mains in 1465/6. Perhaps the same James was on the 'retour' panel for on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick in 1437 and another for the Kers of Altonburn in 1446/7. James (d.bef. 1527) owner of 2 husbandlands within the town of Lilliesleaf, rented from the Bishop of Glasgow. In 1527 his heir and brother John gained the lands. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included Thomas (b.1631) and Adam (b.1632). James (17th C.) resident at Horselee in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; Walter, who was listed after him, was surely related. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as servitor to Walter Scott in Crumhaugh in 1709 when he married Margaret Scott (also of Hawick Parish). Their children included: Adam (b.1710); Walter (b.1714); and Isabella (b.1716). James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Eupan Elliot in Eskdalemuir in 1725. He was living at Howpasley in 1726. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, probably included: an unnamed child (b.1726); James (b.1730); and John (b.1735). If he remarried, then Andrew (b.1747), baptised in Roberton, may also be his son. James (18th C.) married Janet Scott in Ashkirk in 1744. James (18th C.) resident of Burnflat. He married Mary Rutherford in Hawick Parish in 1763 and had a daughter Isabel in 1764. James (d.1782) resident of Whitlaw, who was a cooper. He was probably related to George, who was recorded as shepherd at Whitlaw in 1767. He married Christian Hood, who was also from Hawick, in 1764. Their children included: Agnes (b.1766); Walter (b.1768); and George (b.1773). The witnesses in 1766 were the whole congregation. It is possible he was the father of James, writer of 'Teribus', whose father is said to have died when he was an infant. James 'Cuddy' (d.bef. 1804) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Rutherford in 1763. The death of his son John is recorded in 1804, when he is 'Cuddy' and the death of his wife Mary Rutherford in 1808, when he is 'Cudy'. James (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. His wife Lizzy Thomline died in 1816 and an unnamed twin of his died a week later. It is not impossible that this is the same man as the author of 'Teribus', if he was married twice. Alternatively, he could be the 'workman' James recorded in 1779 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier Gideon Scott. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. In 1772 he married Jane Dawson and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1773); Janet (b.1777); William (b.1779), who served in the army; Adam (b.1782); John (b.1784); Isabel (b.1787); and Susan (b.1787). The witnesses in 1779 were John Kyle and Robert Thomson. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Wilkie in 1789, who was also from Roberton. Their children included Thomas (b.1792). James (1770-1835) poet and novelist, called the 'Ettrick Shepherd', not to be confused with his more famous namesake and contemporary from Hawick! Locally he was referred as 'Jamie the Poeter'. From a common upbringing, it is said that he never fit in well with polite society, and lived most of his life in the Borders. He was born at Ettrick Hall, in a cottage that was demolished in 1847. His father Robert was a shepherd who lived to about 90, and his mother was Margaret Laidlaw, who was a great teller of tales and singer of songs. He spent a total of 2 periods of about 3 months at school, worked as a cowherd, then at age 16 got a job in Peeblesshire, moving to Yarrow in 1790, where he had use of his employer's library, and started to write verses from 1796. He took lease of the farm at Ettrick House in 1800, soon after publishing his first poem, with a collection 'Scottish Pastorals, Poems, Songs, etc.', mostly written in the dialect of the South' in 1801. He met Sir Walter Scott and became friends with Allan Cunningham. Finding no success in farming, he moved to Edinburgh, where he attempted to pursue a literary career, while continuing odd agricultural jobs. Success came with the publication of 'The Queen's Wake' in 1813, followed by life rent of Altrive (in the Yarrow valley) being given to him by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1815. He continued to publish verse and works of fiction, his poem

‘Kilmeny’ and novel ‘Confessions of a Justified Sinner’ were literary landmarks. He also helped inaugurate the ‘Border Games’, which first took place at Mount Bengier Haugh in 1816, and he continued to attend until 1833. At age 50 he married Margaret Phillips from Annandale, and they had one son. He was a frequent visitor to Hawick, particularly for fairs and Common Ridings, and was a friend of James Ruickbie. A poem ‘Round About Hawick’ appears in the tale ‘The Souters of Selkirk’ and the Punch-Bowl public house features in another story. ‘Memorials of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd’ (1898) was edited by his daughter. There is a statue of him at St. Mary’s Loch (unveiled in 1860) and a memorial at Ettrick Hall where he was born (built by J. Marshall & Sons of Hawick, ornamented by R. Stenhouse of Hawick and unveiled in 1898) – ‘Beside the lone St. Mary They have raised to him a pile, – ‘Mid the haunts of elf and fairy, The scenes he loved so well’ [JT], ‘And next the name of Ettrick’s Bard I saw; Sons of the desert – nature’s darling child! Say, shepherd, from what sources didst thou draw They strains so sweetly beautiful and mild?’ [JTe]. James (18th/19th C.) tenant of Lilliesleaf Mill, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also recorded as tenant in Lilliesleaf Mill in the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. James (c.1778–1838) writer of the familiar version of ‘Teribus’. We have no record of the date (or even year) of his birth. Born in Hawick, his father died in infancy, and he was hired as a shepherd at Wisphill at age 9 or 10, becoming a stocking-maker’s apprentice 2 or 3 years later. He became an avid reader and was a member of the Anti-Burgher (Green Kirk) congregation (probably the reason why his children’s births are not in the Hawick Parish records). He was listed as a stockingmaker on the 1799 ballot for the Militia (meaning he was aged between 19 and 30 at that time); however, for some reason his name is absent from the 1801 ballot lists (unless he is the man of that name recorded in Jedburgh) and the fact that he was not on the 1797 list suggests he was then younger than 19 (the cutoff in that year). He repaired and made several improvements to the stocking frames, and was once jailed for labour organisation. ‘An Address to the Inhabitants of Hawick’ (1809) was his first poetical production; it seems that the actions of the Council regarding changes to the Common Riding, and appointment of a Cornet, in opposition to the wishes of the inhabitants of the West-end, fired him up into becoming an ardent Common Riding supporter. His version of ‘Teribus’ was developed soon afterwards, the final version being published in 1819, along with ‘Flodden Field’, its pre-quel. He wrote an additional verse for the tri-centenary of 1814. He also wrote a poem on the Carterhaugh Baa, and another on the death of Rob Reid of the Road-head’s dog Flora, but nothing else survives. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was said to be short in stature; in an argument with Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson, Lurgie said ‘Ye’re a big man to be sae little’, to which he replied ‘An’ ye’re a little man to be sae big’. He married Ebenezer (which in those days could be a woman’s name) M. Porteous in 1817 in Wilton Parish, and she died in 1846, aged 58. She was living on Green Wynd in 1841 with children James, Euphemia, Eliza and Robert. Their children included: Euphemia (b.c.1819), who may have married a Mr. Henry; James (b.1821/2); Eliza (b.1823/4), who married Andrew Ramsay of the Queen’s Bodyguard, who was later clerk at the Tower of London; Agnes (b.1824/5), who married stockingmaker Adam Laing; Robert (1827/8–1913), also a frame-worker; and possibly Margaret, who married John Gilroy. In 1851 3 of his children were living together at ‘Hensnest’ in the Village. A commemorative plaque was unveiled at 14 Loan on the night of Common Riding Thursday 1900 (by his grand-daughter Miss Hogg), although the date of his death given there disagrees with what is in the register of deaths. The parish register notes ‘James Hog Stocking-maker (Poet) (died suddenly)’. He was buried in Wilton Old Cemetery, where his gravestone was refurbished in 2008 – ‘So long as Hawick upon the Teviot stands – Long as the Common Riding is in vogue – So long your song, sung by her jovial bands, Shall still immortalize the name of Hogg’ [JR]. James (b.1801/2) born in Hawick Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. He was living at Todshawhill Cottages in 1841. In 1851 he was at ‘Old Easter Essenside’ and in 1861 at Netheraw Cottage in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1827 he married Margaret Robson (from Hobkirk) in Robertson Parish. Their children (mostly baptised in Kirkton Parish) included: Agnes (b.c.1833); Thomas (b.1835); James (b.1837); and Alexander (b.c.1839); Walter S. (b.c.1841); and Margaret (b.c.1846). Either he or perhaps his father could have been the James, resident of ‘Todjahill’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. James (b.1801) from Lilliesleaf, son of James and Mary Henderson. His brother John was a mason and he also had siblings Jane and Robert. He was farmer at Crumhaughhill. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851, when he farmed 126 acres and employed 3 men. By 1861 he farmed 75 acres and he was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Agnes and their children included: James and William. James (b.1821/2) son of James Hogg of 'Teribus' fame. He worked as a framework knitter. He was said to have considerable literary abilities. He was also interested in local history, being an early member of the Archaeological Society (No. 21 on the membership list). In 1851 he was living at 'Hensnest' in the Village, with his siblings Eliza and Robert. In 1861 he was at 5 Slitrig Bank. He married Jessie Douglas (from Bellie in Morayshire, 1833–1913) in Ancrum in 1860. Their children included Jeannie (1861–1954) and Euphemia (1865–1937). He died at 6 Dalkeith Place. James (19th C.) grocer in Hawick. His shop was at 9 High Street, and was the oldest licensed grocer's in town in the late 1800s, with the old building demolished about 1900. Probably the same establishment can be seen in an 1899 photograph at 28 High Street. James (b.1870/1) Stationmaster in Hawick. He married Elizabeth M. Reid, who died in 1945, aged 67. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (15th/16th C.) brother and heir of James. In 1527 he took over his brother's rental of 2 husbandlands within the town of Lilliesleaf, rented from the Bishop of Glasgow. This was for 'his service as serjeant'. John (16th C.) recorded in Todrig in 1580 when he was listed as a debtor to John Hall, webster in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction for Walter Scott of Todrig. John (16th/17th C.) granted 2 cottage-lands in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1632. John (17th C.) weaver in Bonjedward recorded in 1684 on a list of Covenanter fugitives. John (17th C.) married Manie Scott in Ashkirk Parish in 1631. John (17th C.) resident at Newbigging in Hawick Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed as 'webster there'. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'John Hog Labourer' when his name appears on the 1797 list of Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. The annotation 'Subst.' suggests that he did not serve. His name appears again in 1798, but with James Murray from Yarrow Parish as his substitute, and his status is confirmed in the 1799 list. John (d.1822) son of a Lilliesleaf schoolmaster. He moved to Hawick, and became a weaver at Roadhead, where he published his volume of verse 'Poems on Different Subjects' (1806). This contains many poems in dialect, whose lines have been used as early examples in dictionaries. He was also known for his penmanship, and may have worked for a while as a teacher. He was a good friend of James Ruickbie, and he appears in Wilson's 'Tales of the Borders'. He married Beatrice Stuart. Their children include John Amos, baptised in Lilliesleaf, one of the founders of Hawick Co-op. Probably all of these children baptised in Lilliesleaf were his: Joan (b.1788); Andrew (b.1790); Robert Stuart (b.1793); John Amos (b.1795); Walter (b.1798); Agnes (b.1800); and Beatrix (b.1804). He was buried in Old Wilton Churchyard. He may have been son of Andrew and Helen Archibald, born in Lilliesleaf in 1764 (and baptised there in 1765). John (b.c.1770s) servant at Liddelbank according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Probably the same John was at Mangerton in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He was probably related to Robert, who was at Mangerton in 1797. John (b.1792/3) born in Ashkirk Parish. He was an agricultural labourer at Lustruther in 1841 and New Harwood (in Hobkirk Parish) in 1851, and a shepherd at Forkins in 1861. He married Helen Crozier, from Robertson and their children included: Christian (or Catherine, b.1820), baptised in Ashkirk; William (b.1822), also baptised in Ashkirk; John (b.1828/9); Jane (b.1834/5); Thomas (b.1830/1); and Adam (b.1832/3). John Amos (1795–1882) son of the poet John, he was born in Lilliesleaf. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick and locally was very influential in liberal politics, particularly the Chartist movement, being the first Secretary following its formation in 1838. This led to him being one of the founders of the Hawick Co-operative Society in 1839. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at 1 Kirkwynd. His wife was Agnes and their children included Margaret, John, Joan, Christian, Agnes and Helen. He was grandfather of John Gilroy the bookseller, through his daughter Margaret. John (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Ferguson and their son George was baptised in 1807. John (19th C.) married Marion Hardie in Wilton in 1827. Their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included Marion (b.1828), Robina (b.1830) and William (b.1832). Rev. John (d.1877) from Hawick, he was associated with Allars Kirk and ordained as a minister in 1846 at Dumfries Townhead. However, he resigned over financial uncertainty in 1850. He travelled to Canada, becoming a minister in Hamilton, Ontario, moving to Detroit in 1859, and by 1861 had become a Church of Scotland minister in Guelph. He obtained a Doctorate of Divinity in 1870. He married Jane McMillan (also from Scotland) in Detroit. A photograph of him exists. John (19th C.) married Margaret Fraser in 1849, the wedding being proclaimed in both Hobkirk and Robertson Parishes. John (b.1828/9) born in Robertson Parish, he was a butcher in Hawick at 71 High Street. His wife was Mary Black, who died in 1877, aged 44. Their children included: Janet (1860/1–1942); and Elizabeth Mary (b.1867), who died in infancy John (1831/2–97) shoemaker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on South Liddel Street. He married Margaret Hogg, who died in 1922, aged 85. Their children included: John (b.c.1856); Walter (1858/9–96); Thomas Taylor (1859/60–1958); Robert (1861/2–1949), who married Mary Graham; and George (1868/9–95). They are buried at Ettleton. John (1853–1908) local artist. His paintings of ‘Wilton Lodge’ and ‘Teviot Bridge’ are in the Museum. John (20th C.) farmer at Headshaw. He had a lease for the farm of Headshaw from the Earl of Minto in 1936. John G. ‘Hoggy’ (1957/8–) played for the Trades and 160 times for Hawick R.F.C. as a full back. He later became a rugby referee. He was Cornet in 1983. His sons Stuart and Graham both play rugby. He worked as a manager for Johnstons of Elgin in Hawick and retired in 2020. He became Chairman of the Common Riding Committee in 2019 and President of the Callants’ Club in 2020. Joseph (1845–1903) son of George from Hawick and Mary Pearson from Castleton. He worked as a French Polisher. In 1864 he married Margaret, daughter of William Laidlaw in Hawick. They had 15 children and the family emigrated to the U.S.A. in 1894, settling in Philadelphia. Their children were: George (b.1864) who died young; Christina (1866–1919), married John Leithead; George (1869–95); Mary (1871–74), died young; William (b.1873), died young; Robert (1874–1917); Mary (b.1875), died young; William Laidlaw (1876–1944); Alexander (1878–1901); Daniel (b.1880); Margaret L. (b.1882); Joseph (b.1884); Rachel Laidlaw (b.1887), died young; Mary (1890–1909); and James (b.1891), died young. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1508 sasine where Adam Hepburn inherited his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. Walter was listed just before him, and so probably related. Most of the men were local, but it is unclear how they may be related to other Hogs. Robert

(17th C.) resident in Weensland. He married Margaret Anderson and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were Bailies William Laing and Robert Wright. Robert (1729–1821/2) born at Bowhill, he was tenant of Ettrick Hall. He married Margaret (1730–1812/3), daughter of William Laidlaw, ‘Will o Phaup’. James, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’ was their son. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Manger-ton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 6 horses. He was probably related to John, who was recorded there in 1821. Robert (1786/7–1857) coachman at Edgerston, son of Robert. He married Isabella Murray, who died in 1860, aged 71. Their children included: Robert (1817/8–53); and Elisabeth, who died aged 13. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Robert (b.c.1790) stocking-weaver in Ashkirk Parish. He was living at Bowhouse (probably Synton Bowknowe) in 1841 and at Dimpleknowe in 1851 (with the additional notation ‘£4 from Kinloch Bequest’). He married Catherine Wilson and their children included: Nancy (b.1820); William (b.1821); Richard (b.1825); Jane (b.1823), who married a Grieve; Robert (b.1829/30); Catherine (b.1833); Thomas (b.1835); Alexander (b.1837); and Robina (b.1839). Robert (1827/8–1913) younger son of James, author of ‘Teribus’. He worked for 30 years for hosiery manufacturers Renwick & Co, this being run by the husband of his niece, Jeanie Laing. Robert (1854/5–96) coachman in Hawick. He married Mary McBain, who died in 1933, aged 92. They are buried in Wilton Cemetery. Stuart (1992–) son of John, who was Cornet and played for Hawick R.F.C., he attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools. He played back for the Wanderers and the P.S.A. before being selected for Hawick R.F.C. himself, later signing as a professional for Glasgow Warriors and joining Exeter Chiefs in 2019 (where he was part of the 2020 Champions Cup winning team). He was first capped for Scotland in 2012, when still a teenager. He now has more than 80 caps for Scotland, was named player of the tournament in the 2016 and 2017 Six Nations competitions and served as Captain in 2020/1. He was Captain during Scotland’s 2021 victory in the Calcutta Cup, the first victory at Twickenham for 38 years. In 2021 he became the most capped full back in world rugby. He also toured with the British and Irish Lions in 2013, 2017 and 2021. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Adam was baptised in 1639. Thomas (17th C.) shepherd at ‘Chisholme and Widburne' in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Dickson and their children included: Walter (b.1703); James (b.1706); Agnes (b.1708); and Jean (b.1714). Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bowanhill Roadside (near Teviothead), listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) saddler who was one of the first members of Hawick Curling Club. He may be the same as the carter whose daughter Betty died in 1810. Thomas (d.1824) resident of Newmill-on-Teviot when his death was recorded in Hawick. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nelly Turnbull and their children included: William (b.1810); Walter (b.1812); Jane (b.1818). Thomas (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1816. He may be the Thomas who married Isabel Stavert and had children Walter (b.1785) and Thomas (b.1787). Thomas (1791–1882) born in Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer at Borthaugh. In 1841 he was living at Borthaugh Cottages and was at Cottage No. 2 in 1851. He may be the Thomas who was a shepherd at Hartwoodburn Cottage in 1861. He married Jane Scoon (1795–1847). Their children (mostly baptised in the East Bank Kirk) included: Thomas (b.1817), died in infancy; Janet (1818–43), who married William Bell; Isabella (1820–98), who married Thomas Murray; Euphemia (1823–46); Thomas (again, 1827–46); Julian (b.c.1827); Margaret (1829–1902), who married Simon Gordon and died on Staten Island; and Robert (1832–1904), who died in Rhode Island. Thomas 'Tom' (1934–) local councillor and Honorary Provost 1996–99. Walter (15th/16th C.) listed as a witness to the sasine of 1508 in which Adam Hepburn inherited Liddesdale and other lands previously belonging to his father, Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. Robert is listed after him, and so they may have been related. Walter (16th C.) listed among those named on the side of the Kers in the 1568/9 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. This was to resolve the long-running feud, including apolgising in Melrose Abbey for the murder of the earlier Sir Walter in 1552. This suggests that he may have been involved in that murder on Edinburgh High Street. Walter (17th C.) listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James, who was listed after him, was surely related. Walter (17th/18th C.) from Canonbie, in 1713 he married Helen, daughter of James Scott, shepherd at Falnash. Walter (18th C.)

recorded as 'servant' (along with John Elliot) in 1742 when they witnessed a baptism in Hawick for herd Walter Laidlaw. Perhaps the same Walter was at Ormiston in 1728 when he married Janet Main and in Skelfhill in 1729 when one of his daughter Agnes was baptised in Cavers Parish. James (b.1730), baptised in Roberton, may also have been his child. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1772 when his child Isabel with Janet Crozier was baptised in Hawick Parish. The baptism is labelled 'For.', making it clear that the couple were unmarried. It was witnessed by James (surely a relative, but there are several contemporary men of that name) and Walter Wilson (perhaps 'Haunless Wat'). Walter (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1797 his son William was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Teindside Bridge in 1779, 1781, 1783 and 1784. Probably the same Walter was recorded at Teindsideburn according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His children included: Walter (b.1779); Janet (b.1781); Thomas (b.1783); and Thomas (b.1784). Perhaps the same Walter, married to Cecilia Huggan, had additional children Betty (b.1785) and George (b.1787) in Hawick Parish. Walter (c.1778–1865) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was a frame-worker in Hawick. His death certificate names his mother as an Armstrong; he may thus have been a son of George and Mary Armstrong who were married in Ashkirk in 1762. He could be the stocking-maker of this name listed on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick in 1801 (but not listed earlier, suggesting he was born no earlier than 1780). In 1841 he was living on Underdamside. In 1851 he was living with his daughter Christina and her family on Wilton Path. He firstly married Margaret (or 'Peggy', from Selkirk) Kerr in Wilton in 1806 and she died in 1811 (with their surname listed as 'Hoggie' on her death certificate). Their children were: Margaret (b.1807), who married James Sinton; Mary (1808–69), who married Thomas Smail and died in Bedrule; and Christian (1810–14). He secondly married Euphemia (or Euphan) Hardie in Wilton Parish in 1815. Their children included: George (b.1817), who became a hosiery manufacturer; Christina (b.c.1819), who married Andrew White; and Robert (b.1819/20), who worked as a woollen finisher. Walter (1784/5–1826) died at Falnash Mill. He is buried at Teviothead along with his son Thomas. He is probably the son of Thomas and Isabel Stavert born in 1785. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident at 'Bridgend'

when he paid the cart tax in Cavers Parish in 1791. He may also be the Hawick carrier who owned 2 horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret (or 'Peggy') Kerr and their children included: Margaret (b.1807); Mary (b.1808); and Christian (b.1810). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Glendinning and their children included: Mary (b.1817); Margaret (b.1819); Isabella (b.1822); and Thomas (b.1825). Walter (b.1797/8) born in Wilton Parish. He served in the 42nd Regiment of Foot 1816–40. Walter (b.1827/8) from Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer in Ashkirk Parish. In 1861 he was living at New Headshaw with his wife Margaret (from Jedburgh) and children: Ann, born in Lilliesleaf; John, also born in Lilliesleaf; and Elizabeth, born in Wilton. Walter (19th C.) ploughman to Mr. Pringle at Hyndlee farm. He was a member of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Church. Walter (19th C.) married Mary Jane Hobkirk in Hawick in 1874. William (15th C.) witness to the sasine of 1464/5 in which William Douglas of Drumlanrig was given the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. He is recorded as 'Wilelmo Hog', and most of the others appear to have been local. William (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. William (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Laidlaw in Wilton in 1714. Their children included: William (b.1715); Isobel (b.1717); and Isobel (again, b.1720). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Hardie and their children, baptised in Wilton, included John (b.1722) and James (b.1724). The witnesses in 1722 were James Hardie (perhaps his father-in-law) and John Scott. Probably the same couple also had children baptised in Melrose: Andrew (b.1727); George (b.1729); Jean (b.1732); and Agnes (b.1734). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Dodhead in Yarrow Parish. In 1720 he married Margaret, daughter of James Anderson, tenant in Ramsaycleuch. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was in Denholm in 1719 when he married Ann Douglas and also in 1722. His children probably included: Margaret (b.1721); and an unnamed son (b.1722). Andrew (b.1743), also baptised in Cavers, may also have been his son. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong and their children included: Helen

(b.1770); and Margaret (b.1773). He is probably the William who got married in 1766 (with no wife's name given). William (18th/19th C.) joiner and cabinet maker on the High Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He is probably the wright of that name whose daughter Janet died in Hawick in 1797 and the wright of that name whose wife 'Beanie' Crawford died in 1805. He may also be the wright whose wife Margaret and daughter Margaret Elliot both died in 1809. He witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull in 1808. William (18th/19th C.) son to carrier Walter. His name appears on the 1797 list of Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean White and their children included: Robert (b.1787); John (b.1789); Anne (b.1792); William (b.1796); Francis (b.1799); and John (b.1799). His wife's name is transcribed 'Elling Whit' in 1787. George (b.1794) may also have been his son. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Lillico and their children included: Jane (b.1805); and Isabel (b.1808). William (b.1774/5) from Roxburgh Parish, he was tenant farmer at Cavers Knowes. In 1861 he is recorded there as farmer of 183 acres. His wife was Margaret and their children included George and Robert (who both carried on the farm), together with Andrew, Margaret, Ellen and Marie. William (b.1779) born in Hawick Parish, son of James and Jane Dawson. He may be the man of that name recorded in Newmill in Hawick Parish on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia and recorded as a wright at Newmill on the 1801 list. He later lived at Robertson Woodfoot; he is recorded there as an army pensioner in 1841 and 'Chelsea Pensioner' in 1851 (suggesting he may have been selected in a later Militia ballot), along with his sister Elizabeth. In 1819 he married Helen Oliver in Robertson Parish and she was deceased by 1851. William (b.1795/6) agricultural labourer in Ashkirk Parish. He was living at 'Hogshaugh' in 1841 and 'Hoggshaugh' in 1851 and 1861; however, it is unclear if the name was a coincidence or connected with his family. He was a 'Road-Contractor' in 1861. He married Isabella Currie (from Selkirk) and their children included: Helen (b.1829); William (b.1832); Jane (b.1835); George (b.1838); Ann; and daughter Laurence M. William (b.1831/2) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1861 he was living at Manse

Cottage. His wife Elizabeth was from Crailing. Their children included Georgina Bell, William and Agnes Ainslie. William (19th C.) resident of Robertson and Ashkirk Parishes. He married Margaret Currie and their children included: Anne (b.1841); Elizabeth (b.1845); Francis (b.1847); and Margaret (b.1851). The earlier children were baptised in Ashkirk and the later ones in Robertson. William (b.1857) son of George and Mary. He lived at 3 Back Row and enlisted with the Royal Scots in 1881. William C. ‘Bill’ (??–) Hawick’s last Town Clerk 1968–75 and first Chief Executive of Roxburgh District Council. Wilson (1898–1969) son of Robert and Joan Wilson, he was born in Hawick. In 1933 he married Isabella (‘Bella’, 1899–1935), daughter of John Ekron. They had a daughter Brenda (b.1934), who married Wilson Clark. He died in Hawick (also spelled ‘Hog’, ‘Hoge’ and ‘Hogge’ in early documents).

hogg an score (hōg-in-skōr) n., arch. one extra for every 20 sheep purchased – ‘Hog and score. A phrase formerly used in buying sheep of any description, one being allowed in addition to every score; a cled score, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

hogg an tatti (hōg-in-taw’-i) n., arch. a dish involving sheep that died naturally, along with potatoes and other ingredients – ‘Hog and Tatoe. It is customary with those who have store-farms to salt the ‘fa’en meat,’ (i.e. the sheep that have died of ‘the sickness,’) for the use of the servants through the winter. This is stewed with onions, salt, pepper and potatoes; whence the name, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

hoggie (hō-gee) n., arch. a young sheep – ‘...doddies an stirks an queys an stots an gimmers an hoggies an grumphies an guissies’ [ECS] (diminutive of hogg).

hogg in hairst (hōg-in-hārst) n., arch. a young sheep that is marked at the end of harvest, when it has ceased to be a lamb – ‘A lamb is smeared at the end of Harvest when it is denominated a hog; hence the phrase harvest-hog. After being smeared the second time, a ewe-hog is denominated a gimmer, and a wedder-hog a dymond’ [JL].

Hog Gill (hōg-gil) n. stream in the hills to the west of Newcastleton. It rises on Roan Fell Flow and runs through Hog Gill Bog to join the Black Burn, with a waterfall known as Hog Gill Spout just before that. There are old sheepfolds and a shepherd’s bothy nearby (the name is probably related to young sheep).

Hogg’s Journal (hōgz-jur-nal) n. monthly newspaper printed by Vair & McNairn in Hawick for George Hogg of Newcastleton. It ran for 5 issues in 1886. Its full title was ‘Hogg’s Journal and Newcastleton Review’. It was said that Hogg was only about 16 years old at this time.

Hogg’s Mill (hōgz-mil) n. originally in Underdamside and part of William Watson & Sons, it was taken over by George Hogg in 1863 as a hosiery factory; Hogg had previously been manager of the hosiery side at Watson’s. This factory had much earlier been the ‘Inkle House’ and also known as Roughheugh Waulk Mill. Around 1885 George Hogg’s company moved to area between the Mill Path and the railway. This factory there may have formerly been the premises of Robert Ewen, and took up the entire site between the railway line and Mill Path. The taller block was built on the north side of the property in 1887; this was an imposing Victorian building, with large windows, ornamental corbels near the rood level and an ogee-headed gable on the side facing the road. The factory became derelict in the 1980s, burned down in 1999 and was demolished a year later. An in-house history was written for the centenary ‘The House of Hogg of Hawick, 1855–1955’.

Hoghill (hog-hil) n. former farmstead above Teindside and Commonsides, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map. It is listed in 1686 among the lands of Anna Duchess of Buccleuch, which were occupied by Robert Grieve in Commonsides. It is probably the place where John Henderson ‘of the Hoghyll’ came from in 1595.

Hoghill (hog-hil) n. farm on the east side of the Ewes valley (and A7 road) between Sorbie and Wrae. It is probably the same as the place formerly known as ‘Howgill’. There are remains of a settlement to the north-east of the farmhouse (it is marked on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Hog Knowe (hog-now) n. hill to the south of the B711 just before reaching Clearburn Loch.

Hoglair-burn (hog-lār-burn) n. former name for a farm in Lilliesleaf Parish. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was recorded among the properties of the Riddells of that Ilk, having been purchased from Andrew Gray. It was valued at £15 11s 9d. It is unclear where it was located.

Hogmanay (hog-mu-nā) n. New Year’s Eve. Note that before 1600 the New Year in Scotland started on March 25th (long preceding the change in England, which happened in 1752). It was traditional for children to go around local mansions singing for cakes, thus it was also called ‘Cake Day’. Another country custom was to remove gates on this day to let the New Year in. It was also a custom in the early 19th century for local youths to gather up all the carts they could and lock them together across the High Street, blocking the street; the origin of this prank is uncertain – ‘Frae ilka door they’re jinkin’ To hail the happy day And they a’ gang a’ linkin’ To seek their Hogmanay’ [JT] (from Old French; see also Hanganay, Hangmanay and the New Eer).

hogs (hōgz) n., pl. work that piecers would enter in their daily pay book, even although they would not actually finish until the following day, this being generally considered a bad practice and sometimes known as ‘working a deid horse’.

Hogsdale (hōgz-dāl) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Hogisdale’, with value 6 shillings and 8 pence. The location is uncertain.

Hog’s Haugh (hōg-hawch) n. former name for a flat area of land on the northern side of the Ale Water between Castleside and Burnfoot. William Hogg and family were living there in 1841 (it is ‘Hogshaugh’ in 1841, ‘Hoggshaugh’ in 1851 and ‘Hoggshaugh, Castleside’ in 1861; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hogshiel (hōg-sheel) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Hogischeill’, with annual value of 6 shillings and 8 pence. It is uncertain where this was located.

Hogson (hog-sin) n. Gilbert (15th C.) listed as ‘suitor’ for Riddell of Lilliesleaf and Whitton at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. His surname is recorded as ‘Hoigsone’.

Hoilhoose (hoil-hoos) n. Hoilhouse former lands in Hobkirk Parish, once part of the Barony of Feu-Rule and part of the dispute over superiority of the Barony in 1562. It is unclear where these lands were located, but they were adjacent to Hawthornside Wood and Little Gledstains, probably to the east of these lands. There is a place of the same name near Moffat, as well as others elsewhere in Scotland (written ‘Hoilhous’, it presumably means ‘house in the hollows’; see also Hillhoose).

hoise (hoiz) n., arch. a hoist, heave – ‘Gie’d a hoise’ [GW] v., arch. to hoist, heave – ‘For aa that the sun, hoisin itsel i the lift owerheed ...’ [ECS], ‘A patriarch-leike body, – heed-bared, an airm hoised as ei hailed the Musies’ [ECS] (also written ‘hoize’; cf. heeze).

Holcaldrumhill (hol-kal-drum-hil) n. possible place name near Hawick. It is recorded in 1628 when ‘James Scot in Holcaldrumhill’ is among men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down trees on his lands at Todshawhaugh and Trinitylands. It occurs in the petition after men from Galalaw and Heap, but it is unclear where this place could have been, or if it was transcribed correctly. It may be related to the farm of Hellcadrounburn, which was somewhere near the Caddroun Burn in upper Liddesdale.

holden (hōl-din) pp., arch. held – ‘... the granting of which ... the said Laird of Gladstaines, will be holden and reput as ane piece of singular kyndness done to him ...’ [BR1704], ‘... for ane supernummerie marriage of the sd. John Hardie upon Isobell Aitkine, daughter to the sd. William Aitkine, houlden in his oun house ...’ [BR1706] (see also hauden and haulden).

hole (hōl) v., poet. to disappear from view – ‘The rying moone like saffron grewe, And holed ahint a cloude’ [JTe].

Hole (hōl) n. former placename in Castleton Parish. John Armstrong was recorded as shepherd there on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. It’s location is uncertain, with one possibility being that it is the same as Pinglehole.

the Hole in the Waa (thu-hōl-in-thu-waw) n. popular name for a close next to the Stag’s Head bar on Drumlanrig Square, or the house next to it (the south corner of which contained the hinges for the West Port). This house contained an inn in the early 19th century. John Inglis was born there in 1838.

the Hole o the Burn (thu-hōl-ō-thu-burn) n. former name for a piece of land beside Denholm Kirk, which was also a right of way around the church. It was so-called because a stream flows under there and was usually covered by a flagstone.

Holiday (ho-li-di) n. Christopher (1707/8–47) son of John. He was returning home to Ewesdale from Carlisle and near Longtown was attacked by Adam Graham, who shot him in the back and beat him with his own staff. He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard.

Holland (ho-lind) n., arch. a kind of linen made in Holland, or cloth made in a similar style – ‘... for 10 ells of sheets woven in the Holland reid, 5 groats the ell’ [BR1695].

Holland Hoose (ho-lind-hoos) n. pub at 4 Drumlanrig Square, established in 1885, formerly being ‘Graham’s Hotel’, with proprietor John Graham. The name is possibly in connection with the Earl of Holland, who was a well known literary patron of his day; however, it has also been suggested to be connected with Dutch wool merchants who once lodged there. Thomas Graham was publican later. It closed in the 1990s and the building is now a beauty parlour, after renovations in the early 2000s (also sometimes 'the Holland Hoose').

Holland's Jean (ho-lindz-jeen) n. nickname for Jean Scott.

Holliday (ho-li-di) n. John (1858/9–1945) tenant farmer in Demainholm. He married Jane Elliot, who died in 1922, aged 44. Their children included: Margaret Jane (1917–9); Mary Evelyn (1916–7); and Elizabeth Jane (1920–1). He died at Caulside House. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery.

the Hollies (thu-ho-leez) n. house in Denholm on the Wynd.

hollin (ho-lin) n., poet. holly, the holly tree – 'Alone in greenwood must I roam, Hollin, green hollin; A shade of green leaves is my home, Birk and green hollin' [JDC].

Hollin (ho-lin) n. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch presented him at the Justice-aire in Selkirk as suitor for his land of Buccleuch. His name is recorded as 'Johannem holyne'.

the Hollow Burn (thu-ho-lō-burn) n. another name for the Flex Burn around Whitlaw. It is so named (along with 'the How Burn') in the 1767 description of Hawick Common. It may be that the name was only applied to the lower part of the stream, between the point where Whitlaw Slap joined and the mouth at the Slitrig. James Wilson describes it as lying between Meikle Whitlaw and Little Whitlaw.

the Hollows (thu-ho-lōz) n. former lands just north of Canonbie, by the A7. This was essentially the same place as 'Gilnockie', where the Armstrongs once had a tower (or 2 towers). The restored tower there is now called 'Gilnockie Tower', although Hollows Tower was quite distinct, with the original Gilnockie being just on the other side of the River Esk. It seems likely this is the place meant by 'Hoilhous' in records of Armstrongs of the 16th and early 17th centuries. In 1588 it is probably the 'Hoilhous' listed among houses ordered by the King to be cast down by his Lieutenant on the Border, on account to being the home of rebels. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. It was a hamlet in the 18th and 19th centuries, with a blacksmith and half a dozen other houses (it is 'Hoilhous' in 1622 and 'Halhous' in 1663; it is marked 'ye Hollas' on Sandison's c.1590 map and 'Holhous' on Gordon's c.1650 manuscript map).

Holly Cleuch (ho-lee-clooch) n. small stream just to the east of Roughlee, which flows into the Jed Water in Southdean Parish.

holm (hōm) n. a stretch of low-lying grassland, usually by a river, a meadow, a 'haugh' – '... of the bonnie glen with all its wiels and its wimples – its green holms and its fairy crooks' [JTe], 'Gone the peels that used to cluster On the bonnie, verdant banks; On your holms the clans ne'er muster, Disbanded are the loyal ranks' [JBB], 'Around each haugh and holm, each stately hill, Each beauty spot that mind and sight entrance' [TK] (see also howm).

Holm (hōm) n. former name for lands near Bedrule, adjacent to Middle, both also being formerly known as Dykes. The farm may once have been part of the Barony of Feu-Rule. It is listed along with Middle in the 1511 charter of the Douglases of Cavers. This land was once part of the Wells estate (it is 'Helm' in 1511 and 1634 and 'Holme' in 1738).

Holm (hōm) n. George (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Currie and their children included: Mary (b.1806); Betty (b.1808); James (b.1810); Isabel (b.1814); and an unnamed child (b.1817).

the Holm (thu-hōm) n. familiar name for Newcastleton, a shortened form of Copshawholm, so called because it was built on the 'holm' (i.e. low, flat land) occupied by some former holdings called Copshaw. The name could correspond to the lands of 'Holme' which were recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 12 pence and no tenant – 'In the upper reaches of the valley, the people speak of going to the holm, when speaking of proceeding to their capital' [BNC1889], 'The Holm' ... a teacher came here, an he'd been here months an he said 'it must be a very big orphanage at Newvastleton' [IWL].

Holm Brig (hōm-brig) n. bridge over the Liddel Water at the south end of Newcastleton. It was built in 1823 by local builders William Crozier and John Nichol.

Holmdows (hōm-dowz) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as 'Holmedowis' and stated to have no tenant. It is unclear where these lands were.

Holmfit (hōm-fi) n. Holmfoot, farm in Castleton Parish, situated near the south end of Newcastleton. It may be another name for 'Townfoot'. William Little was a mason there in 1821. George Underwood was there in 1868.

Holm Hill (hōm-hil) n. hill just to the west of Newcastleton. It was formerly the site of the Common attached to the village, where the householders would pasture their cattle, and where each residence was assigned 2 acres of land. It now hosts the 9-hole Newcastleton Golf Course. In 2020 an area of 750 acres there was purchased from the Buccleuch Estates by Newcastleton and District Community Trust.

Holm Sike (hōm-sīk) n. small stream that joins Whithope Sike near the farm of Whithope, to form Howford Sike and run north to join the Borthwick Water (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; it is possible that the name is connected to Whames).

Holshiel (hol-sheel) n. probable place name in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Holschel’ in a rental roll of c.1376, in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’.

holsie-jolsie (hōl-see-jōl-see) n., arch. a confused mass of different sorts of food, as in pigswill (a Teviotdale example of rhyming reduplication; noted by J. Jamieson).

Holstruther (hol-stru-thur) n. lost place name near Branhholme. It is recorded in the description of the half barony of Branhholme in the charter of 1420 where it was granted to the Scotts of Buccleuch. The lands lay ‘on the west side of the Syke, running down from the kirkland’, suggesting perhaps a connection with the former chapel between the Newmill Burn and Chapelhill farm (‘struther’ refers to a marshy area, as in ‘Wullie-struther’ and ‘Buckstruther’).

holt (ōl) n., poet. a wood, stretch of wooded land – ‘And they flew oure sea, and the flew oure land, Oure mountain, holt, and town . . .’ [JTe].

the Holt (thu-hōl) n. former cottage on the lands of Harwood-on-Teviot, also known as Hott.

Holydean (hō-, hā-lee-deen) n. ruined castle, once the home of the Kers, about a mile west of Bowden. It was said to built in 1530 (as inscribed on a stone lintel with the name of Dame Isabel Ker), but probably in the later 16th century. It was largely demolished around 1760, with the remaining part incorporated into the farmhouse. An adjacent gable contains Hobby Ker’s Well and there are also the remains of an ancient chapel nearby. There was also an ancient deer park here, and there are some old ash and birch probably surviving from this period. The lands were among those in the original grant to the monks of Selkirk by David I – ‘. . . And there came Kerr from Ferniehirst, And Kerr from Haliedean’ [JTe] (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘halig denu’, meaning ‘holy valley’; it first occurs as ‘Olyden’ in 1385, then in Abbey charters frequently as ‘halyden’ or ‘halydene’ until the 17th century; it is Cas of Halydem’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Holly Dean’ on Roy’s c.1750 map).

Holywell Rig (hō-lee-wel-rig) n. ridge to the south of Priestthaugh farm, between the Skelfhill and Priestthaugh Burns. It reaches a height of 428 m. The name is surely connected with the spring at Priestthaugh, which was supposed to have healing powers and was a site of pilgrimage at least until the early 17th century. The northern slopes have signs of cultivation terraces and a linear earthwork.

Home (hōm) n. Alexander (d.c.1460) 1st Lord Home, son of Sir Alexander and Jean Hay. He was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. In 1451 he had a passport for safe conduct to accompany the Earl of Douglas in England and was an envoy from James II to England to negotiate a truce with England. He married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Montgomery, and secondly married Marion, daughter of John Lauder. His children were: David; Nicholas; Sir Thomas; Ellen, who married Adam Hepburn, Master of Hailes and secondly Alexander, 3rd Lord Erskine; Alexander, Master of Home, whose son Alexander succeeded; John, Prior of Coldingham; Katherine, who married John Sinclair and then Archibald Douglas; George of Ayton; and Sir Patrick of Fastcastle. His son Alexander was assigned the farm of Aikwood in 1492. Alexander (d.1506) 2nd Lord Home, son of Alexander, Master of Home and Agnes Hepburn. He was grandson of the 1st Lord Home, whom he succeeded about 1461. In 1464 he was on an inquest regarding the inheritance of the lands of Swinton. He fought against James III and gained considerable power after the crowning of the young James IV. In 1484 he was recorded as grandson of Alexander, Lord Home, when he had a precept for infefting Andrew Ker in the lands of Crailing and Hownam. He became a Privy Counsellor in 1488 and was Warden of the East Marches 1489–96. He was also made Great Chamberlain of Scotland in 1488, and the offices of several wardships were transferred to him, e.g. he became Bailie of Ettrick Forest, Keeper of Newark Castle and Ranger of the Ward of Yarrow; he had the lease of Tinnis for his fee from 1488 until 1496, with his son Alexander mentioned in 1492. He also had the lease of Kirkhope. In 1490 he was named in a document for the Haigs of Bemersyde. In 1491 he and his son Alexander were mentioned in relation to the lands of 'Aikwood et Huntlie'. He also leased Gilmanscleuch in 1492. In 1492/3 King James IV granted him the lands of 'Grenewod' (in the Borthwick valley), which had formerly belonged to Sir Thomas Turnbull. In 1493/4 he gained superiority over Appletreehall from Elizabeth Cunningham and lands and the Barony of Hassendean from William Livingstone of Drumry. In 1499 he witnessed an indenture between the Royal Treasurer and George Douglas, Master of Angus, for keeping order on the Border. He served as Comptroller and Ranger for Ettrick Forest, and is recorded many times in the Exchequer Rolls around 1500 regarding payments for lands in Ettrick. In 1501 he was granted relief for the 40-pound lands of Chamberlain Newton. In a 1501/2 bond of reversion, he promised to pay Robert Scott of Stirches £100 Scots for the lands of Harden. In 1502 he was fined for non-appearance to 'give suit' for his lands of Hassendean, Appletreehall, Broxfield and Crailing at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1502 (as superior of the lands) he granted Appletreehall to Walter Scott of Howpasley. Also in 1502 he was also surety for William Scott in Broadmeadows. He received the rental of Carterhaugh as Keeper of Newark Castle in the period 1503-07. He served as Great Chamberlain of Scotland. He firstly married Isabel Douglas and secondly Nichola (sometimes written 'Nicolas'), daughter of Sir George Ker of Samuelston (and step-daughter of Marion Sinclair, who was widow of George of Wedderburn). His children included: Alexander, who succeeded as 3rd Lord, but was executed; George, who succeeded his brother as 4th Lord; John, Abbot of Jedburgh; Patrick; William, executed the day after his brother Alexander; Andrew, who feued the lands of Cacrabank and Corsecleuch in 1510; David, Prior of Coldingham, who was murdered; Elizabeth, who was Lady Samuelston in 1542; Marion, who married John, Earl of Crawford, who died at Flodden; and Nichola, who married Andrew, 2nd Lord Herries and later Patrick Hepburn of Bolton. Alexander (d.1516) 3rd Lord Home, eldest son of Alexander, 2nd Lord. In 1490 he was appointed, jointly with his father, as Bailie of Ettrick and Keeper of Newark Castle. He leased Tinnis in Yarrow along with his father in 1492, as well as Aikwood, 'Douglascrag, Quhithop, Duchir and Tynnes'. In 1493/4, when he was still 'Master of Home' he was infefted in the lands of Hoscote, which had formerly belonged to Robert Turnbull.

He succeeded his father in 1506, the lands including Greenwood (Girnwood), Lyne, Stouslie, Groundistone and Harden in Roxburghshire, as well as Ewesdale and extensive lands in Berwickshire. He had a confirming charter of his lands in 1509/10, including the Barony of Hassendean and lands of Appletreehall and Ewesdale, as well as many other properties. Like his father, he was Receiver of the accounts for Ettrick Forest, starting in 1507. In 1510 he feued the lands of Oakwood, Redfordgreen, Hartwoodburn, Huntly, Altrieve, etc. In 1511 he was among the witnesses to the charter granting the Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1512/3 he bought Broadlee (in the Borthwick valley) from Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was Lord Warden General of the Marches from 1510 until about 1513. He commanded part of the Scottish force at Flodden, leading the vanguard with Alexander Gordon, Earl of Huntly and routing the force of Sir Edmund Howard, but coming under criticism for remaining inactive afterwards. However, he was executed for treason because of his support for the Earl of Angus in trying to control the young King James V, while his brother William, Prior of Coldingham, was assassinated by the Hepburns. Sir Anthony Darcy (or 'De la Bastie') was made Warden in his place, and all of this led to Darcy being killed by Sir David Home of Wedderburn. In 1516 a large number of Turnbells and others had remission from the King for treasonably helping him and his brothers. His estates were forfeited, which led to Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme gaining Harden, Hoscote and lands in Hassendean (although many of his lands were restored by Parliament to his brother George in 1522). His lands in Ewesdale went to Robert, Lord Maxwell. His lands of Aikwood (which he had presumably let to Robert Scott in Aikwood) reverted to the Crown and were in 1517 feued to Robert's son Michael Scott. After the execution, his head (and his brother William's) was fixed to the Edinburgh Tolbooth, but forcibly removed by his brother George and buried in 1520. He married Agnes, daughter of James Stewart, Earl of Buchan and secondly married Katharine Stirling. He was succeeded by his brother George. His daughter Janet married John Hamilton and succeeded to the lands of Samuelton. Alexander (d.1575) 5th Lord Home, son of George, 4th Lord and Margaret Haliburton. He was appointed Warden of the East Marches in 1550. In 1551 he had a 'retour' for his father's lands, which included Stouslie, Groundistone, Harden, Broadlee, Hoscote and Girnwood, as well as lands in Berwickshire and elsewhere. In 1555/6 he had a 'precept of sasine' for Hoscote and also summoned William Scott in Harden to appear at Melrose Abbey to receive the sum of £40 Scots as redemption of these lands. He was appointed Warden of the Eastern Marches in 1557 and reappointed in 1561. In 1559 there is a 'letter of reversion' between him and William Scott of Todrig (and Harden) and his son Walter; although he had sold them his lands of Harden, they agreed to resign them to him on payment of 160 merks. In 1562 he was appointed Warden and Keeper of the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was among the prominent men of the nation who signed the document declaring James as Monarch (in place of Mary) in 1567. In 1567 he had a charter from James VI granting him the hereditary Sheriffship of Berwickshire and Bailiary of Lauderdale. He was warded in Edinburgh Castle in 1574. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Ker, and secondly married Agnes, daughter of Patrick, Lord Gray. He was succeeded by his son Alexander, 1st Earl Home. Alexander (c.1567–1619) 6th Baron Home and 1st Earl Home, son of Alexander, the 5th Lord, whom he succeeded in 1575. Among the titles he inherited was Baron of Hassendean, including the lands of Appletreehall. He was also Warden of the East Marches. In 1587 Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh infefted him in the Lordship of Jedburgh, which included Ruecastle, Abbotrule, Bonchester and other parts of Rulewater. In 1589 there was a charge to him and the Earl of Bothwell to keep peace with each other during the King's absence. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1590/1 he was named in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens. In 1594 he had a Commission, along with Sir Robert Ker and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, to raise all men between the ages of 16 and 60 to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. He was Warden of the East March in 1600 when listed among leaders ordered to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. In 1601 he was cautioner for Thomas Rutherford of Hunthill. In 1601 he was warned by James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn to remove himself from lands in the Barony of Hassendean and in 1612 he was summonsed to produce all his documents relating to lands in Hassendean. In 1602 he had been given the escheat of goods and liferents of Hector Turnbull of Barnhill, and complained that a gang of Armstrongs and Elliots had attacked his farm of Hallrule. He was appointed Lieutenant and Justiciar over all the Scottish Marches in 1603. In 1610 he complained to the Privy Council about a large number of Armstrongs and others for not paying their teinds. In 1611 he was served heir to his grandfather George, Baron Home. In 1616 he sold the lands of Middle Mains of Hassendean and Wester Hassendean (or Horsleyhill) to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1618 he was listed among commissioners appointed to keep law and order in Teviotdale. His testament of 1616 survives. He married Christian, daughter of William Douglas, 5th Earl of Morton and secondly Mary Sutton, daughter of Lord Dudley. He was succeeded by his son James and then by a cousin, also James. After the death of James his heirs were his daughters Margaret (Countess of Moray) and Anne (Lady Maitland), who were the superiors of some local lands, including Harden. He had a natural son, William, who was Provost of Dunglas. Alexander (d.1682) portioner of Home, he was a Covenanter supporter. Along with Thomas Turnbull of Standhill, he led the men who besieged Drumlanrig's Tower in Hawick in 1679. At his trial in 1682, James Newbie, Sheriff-Officer in Hawick, described that he was 'riding on a bay horse or mare, and that he had pistols before his saddle, and cloak lined with red', while another witness said he also had a black velvet cape; he was also said to have black hair, and so in court had his wig removed to check. He led about 100 rebels, who broke into the tower and took away the arms the following day. He was found guilty at the trial in 1682 and was hung in Edinburgh for his crimes. Andrew (16th C.) 2nd son of George, 4th Lord Home, he was Commendator of Jedburgh. 'Maister Johnne Hume son to the Abbot of Jedburgh' is recorded in 1547, and was presumably his son. In 1561 he was among men who were to appear before the Privy Council to present criminals. In 1567 he sold many of the abbey's lands (including Abbotrule) to Adam French and his wife Margaret. In 1569 he was one of the sureties for George Rutherford of Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. In 1583/4 he granted half the meadow of Belses to Walter Turnbull of Bewlie and the other half to William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf. He is probably the 'Abbat of Jedburgh' listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He was probably the Commendator of Jedburgh who in 1590 was listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Sir David of Wedderburn (d.1467) 2nd son of Sir Alexander of Home and Dunglas, and younger brother of Alexander of that Ilk. He was armour-bearer to William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, who granted him the lands of Wedderburn in 1413 (confirmed by James I in 1431), as well as Hutton in 1415/6. He witnessed a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1433/4, Archibald, Earl of Douglas also granted him Wolfelee and Wolfeleehope in 1436 (with associated sasine), confirmed in 1464, along with Stonedge. He was thus the 1st Home Laird of 'Wollee', (i.e. Wolfelee). He was made Bailie of Coldingham Priory in 1442. In 1443 he witnessed a charter for the lands of Hownam. It is said that his older brother, Alexander, went to France in his place, dying at the battle of Verneuil. He had a discharge to Sir Alexander of that Ilk (probably his nephew) in 1464. He married Alice de Wedderburn, from whom he may have gained his main titles. He had 2 sons, David and Alexander, his elder son predeceasing him, so he was succeeded by his grandson, George. Given that he is recorded over a period of 50 years, he either lived to a very old age, or else there are 2 generations here. David (15th C.) elder son of Sir David of Wedderburn. He witnessed a charter for the lands of Hownam in 1443, along with his father and several other Homes. He is probably the David who was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. He married Elizabeth Carmichael, who died in 1495. He predeceased his father and his son George was served as heir to the lands still vested in his mother when she died. Sir David of Wedderburn (d.1513) eldest son George, he was also 3rd Laird of 'Woollee' (i.e. Wolfelee). His father passed on the lands of Wolfelee to him in 1474, retaining 'liferent' for himself. In that same year he also had a sasine for the lands of Wedderburn. In 1479 he had a sasine for the lands of Over Woollee, Nether Woollee and Wolfehopelee. Also in 1479 he had sasine for half of the lands of Polwarth, resigned by his mother, Mariota Sinclair. He succeeded his father in most of his lands following his death in 1497. Also in 1497 he had respite as head of 100 or so men for burning lands of William Wallace of Craigie. In 1501/2 he had remission, along with others for the murder of 'John Lowdonne'. In 1502 he succeeded to his father's lands of Morriston, Peilrig and others. He is probably the Sir David who had 20 oxen and cows stolen from his lands at Lammermuir by David Oliver in Strange, as recorded in 1502. In 1505 he leased lands in the barony of Upsettlington, in 1506 had sasine for 'Hetschaw' in Lauderdale and in 1507 inherited his father's lands of Jardinefield. Along with his brother John he witnessed a document for Melrose Abbey, regarding land in Leith, in 1510. He married Isabella (also known as Elizabeth), daughter of David Hoppringle of Smailholm and had 8 sons. 7 sons (known as 'The Seven Spears of Wedderburn') accompanied him to Flodden, where he was slain along with his eldest son, George. The traditional story is that their surviving retainers carried them from the battlefield wrapped in the Wedderburn banner. Tradition also says that the same banner was used in 1650 at the Battle of Dunbar, when another Sir David and his son George were slain. His children were: George, who was killed at Flodden; David, who succeeded; Alexander of Manderstoun; John, who married Beatrix, heiress of Andrew Blackadder of that Ilk; Robert, who married Margaret, other heiress of Blackadder of that Ilk; Andrew, Parson of Lauder; Patrick, progenitor of the Homes of Broomhouse; probably Bartholomew; Margaret, who married John Swinton of that Ilk; Isabella, who married William Cockburn; Mariota, who married James Towers of Innerleithen. His wife is probably the 'Elizabeth Hoppringill lady of Polvort' who witnessed a document for David Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm (her brother) in 1529 and a record of 1551 states that his wife 'Elizabeth Hoppringle' died 5 years earlier, when certain lands were inherited by his grandson, also David. His seal showed a lion rampant, together with a crest on a helmet, with a boar's head. David of Wedderburn (d.1524) 2nd son of Sir David, he succeeded to the estates when his father and elder brother were killed at Flodden. He thus became 4th Laird of 'Woollee' (i.e. Wolfelee). In 1510 he had the rental from his father of the lands of 'Mydlested of Windidurris alias Blackhauch' in Ettrick Forest. He had sasines for inheriting his father's lands in 1513/4 and 1514, and in 1515 had sasine for Over and Nether Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. In 1516 he had sasine for Coldingham and lands in Ayton. He helped the Earl of Angus (his brother-in-law) retain control over the young James V. In 1517 he received half of the lands of Manderstoun, which had belonged to the executed Alexander, Lord Home. In 1517, in revenge for the deaths of his cousins Alexander, Lord Home and William, Prior of Coldingham, he killed Sir Anthony Darcy (or 'De la Bastie'), the newly appointed

Warden of the Marches, who had been installed at Home Castle by the Regent Albany. Later making peace with Albany, he helped with the siege of Wark Castle, being rewarded with a gold chain by James V. In 1522 his possessions were all restored, and he had sasine for the Hirsell, with the Lordship of Dunbar. Included was a new sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. There are letters preserved from 1523 between him and the John, Duke of Albany, Regent of Scotland. When the Earl of Angus was forced to flee to England he also fell out of favour. He married Alison Douglas, widow of Robert Blackadder (also killed at Flodden) and sister of Archibald, 6th Earl of Angus; she survived until at least 1543, as documents relating to her lands and teinds show. In 1535 she was involved in a land dispute with John Rutherford of Hunthill. He was killed in a conflict with the English, leaving 3 young sons (including George and David, who both succeeded, the other being John, killed by the English in Coldingham Tower in 1542) and 3 young daughters. Shortly before his death he appears to have been involved in a conflict with the forces of the Earl of Arran (Lieutenant to the King) in Edinburgh and later at Stirling; the force included his relative George, Lord of Home, as well as Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and about 160 Borderers, who received remission in 1526. Sir David of Wedderburn (d.1574) 2nd son of David, he succeeded his brother George in 1547, also becoming 6th Laird of 'Wollee' (i.e. Wolfelee) and 'Wolhopelee'. He was a supporter of Queen Mary and of Bothwell, and also of the young King James VI. He had sasine for Wolfelee in 1550. In 1551 he inherited his brother's lands of 'Myddilsteid and Wynddydurris or Blackhauch' in Ettrick Forest. In 1552 he had a contract with his sister-in-law Joan Hepburn over rents of Wedderburn and other lands, as well as a tack with the Parson of Whitsome. In 1553 he had a contract for lands in Ayton and in 1554 a letter of reversion for Middlestead and Blackhaugh. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. There were documents relating to Whitsome in 1560, 1562 and 1571. There was a further instrument for Blackhaugh in 1563. In 1564 he had a gift of the duties from the family lands since his brother's death. He was put in ward in Galloway, this being changed to Edinburgh and then waived in 1566. Also in 1566 he refused to sign the Roxburghshire 'General Band' of 1561, stating that he lived in the Merse and was not guilty of the crimes committed by the men of Teviotdale. In 1567 he was commanded to present several Turnbells and Olivers to answer to accusations associated with raids into England. He had discharges for fees on lands of Coldingham and in Renfrewshire in 1572/3. He married Mariota Johnstone, daughter of the Laird of Elphinstone, and she died in 1564. He secondly married Margaret Ker, widow of Pringle of Whytbank. His children included: George, who succeeded to the estates; David of Godscroft, who became a historian, writing a family history in Latin, as well as a history of the house of Douglas; James, Parson of Hilton; John, who is said to have died from the effects of over-studying, and was declared a rebel for the murder of George Home, sometime of Spott; Isabel, who married John Haldane of Glenaeles; Margaret, who married David Home of the Law; Julian (or Juliane) who married Sir John Ker of the Hirsell, but divorced him, secondly marrying James Hoppringle of Whitelaw; and Janet, who married William Cockburn of Langton; and an illegitimate son, Patrick. Unlike many generations of his ancestors he actually died in his bed in comparatively old age. George of Wedderburn (d.1497) eldest son of David and grandson of Sir David of Wedderburn, whom he succeeded in 1467. He also became the 2nd Laird of Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee), with a sasine in 1469. He had a charter for lands in Bonkle in 1470. In 1473/4 he is recorded componing with the King in order to infest his son and heir in his lands. In 1474 he resigned the lands of Wolfelee into the hands of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to be infefting in his son David, reserving 'liferent' to himself and a 'terce' for his wife. In 1476 he bought the lands of Jardinefield from John Jardine of Applegirth and also lands in Duns. In 1477 he had a pension for serving as Keeper of Berwick Castle. In 1478 he had sasine for the 'Plewland' in Berwickshire and a charter for lands previously belonging to 'Richard of Edyntoun'. In 1478/9 he had a contract for his sister Sibill to marry Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain. He gained the lands of 'Moricestone' in Lauderdale in 1490 and a sasine for Coldingham in 1495. In 1493 he received damages from envoys of Henry VII. He was a Commissioner on the Border in 1494. He was charged to enter James Curren at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He had a 'retour of service' for inheriting his father's lands in Berwickshire in 1495, which had been held by his mother Elizabeth Carmichael, who died in that year. In 1496 he and his wife had a sasine for 'Hetschaw' in Lauderdale. He had a brother, Patrick, who was progenitor of the Homes of Polwarth. It is said that he and his brother fell in love with the 2 daughters and heirs of John St. Clair (or Sinclair) of Herdmanstoun (their mother being Catherine, sister of Alexander, Lord Home), and had to forcibly extract them from their uncle's clutches at Hermandstoun Castle. He married Mariota (or Marion), while his brother married Margaret and they split the lands between them. He had 2 sons, David (who succeeded) and John (who appears to be a cleric when recorded in 1510). He was killed in an engagement with the English. His widow secondly married George Ker of Samuelston. George (d.1513) eldest son of Sir David of Wedderburn. He was one of 7 brothers, known as 'The Seven Spears of Wedderburn'. He was killed along with his father at Flodden. It is said that as the heir he was encouraged by his family to leave the field, but on the way home he stopped off at Coldstream Priory, where the Prioress, Isabella Pringle, convinced him to return to the Battle and his doom. His brother David succeeded to Wedderburn and other lands, including Wolfelee. George 4th Lord Home (d.1549) son of Alexander, 2nd Lord, he succeeded from his brother Alexander, 3rd Lord Home, who was beheaded in 1516. Another brother was John, Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1520 he rode to Edinburgh with a large force, removed the heads of his brothers from the Tolbooth and held a funeral and banquet in their honour. Many of the family lands (or the superiority over those lands, including kirk patronage, etc.) were restored to him by an Act of Parliament in 1522 (and confirmed by a reversion of previous charters issued by the King in 1535). This included parts of Broadlee, Harden, Groundistone and Stouslie (or at least the tenancies of these lands, rather than the superiority). Specifically he was appointed as tenant of William Turnbull of Minto's lands of Greenwood (or Girnwood) in 1522, in place of his brother. In about 1524 he and David Home of Wedderburn were considered as rebels when a force of about 160 Borderers met with them in Edinburgh and went to Stirling to try to confront the Earl of Arran (presumably in support of the Earl of Angus); remission was given to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and others in 1526. In 1525 Simon Armstrong had a 'letter of reversion' with him for lands in Ewesdale, including Mossypaul, Fiddleton and Unthank; he must have been the superior of Ewesdale at this time. In 1525 he had a

'precept of sasine' from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, for lands of Stouslie, Groundistone and Harden (this being for the superiority), confirmed in a 'precept of clare constat' with date transcribed as 1552 (but probably 1525 is meant). In 1525 he had another precept for lands in Boncle, together with Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. He had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus, in 1526. In 1528 he granted the upper part of Ewesdale to Ninian and David Armstrong, and they had a bond of 'manrent', pledging to serve him. He was appointed a Royal Lieutenant for keeping peace on the Border in 1529. In 1530 he was one of the Border chiefs imprisoned by James V for failing to keep thieves and other 'broken men' in order. In 1535 he gave a confirming charter of Harden to William Scott, as well as a letter of reversion to him for the lands of Harden and Hosscote. In 1540 William Scott of Harden gave the lands of Nether Harden to Simon Scott of Fenwick 'until George, lord Home, redeems them'. In 1543 he signed the 'Secret Bond' with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English influence over the young Queen Mary. He served as Warden of the East Marches in 1543. In 1544 he and the Earl of Bothwell headed a force that made some attempt to defend Edinburgh against the English invaders under the Earl of Hertford. In 1546 he was appointed for a year as Warden of the Merse and East Marches. He married Mariota, daughter of Patrick Haliburton, Lord of Dirleton. His children included Alexander (5th Lord, who married Margaret Ker of Cessford), Andrew (Abbot of Jedburgh) and Margaret (who married Sir Alexander Erskine of Grogar). He died after being thrown from his horse in a skirmish the day before the Battle of Pinkie. George of Wedderburn (1515/6–47) eldest son of David, he was also 5th Laird of 'Woollee' (i.e. Wolfelee). He succeeded to his father's lands and titles in 1524 at age 9. And he had sasines for most of the lands in the next few years. In 1528 he received a confirming charter of the family estates from James V, including for Wolfelee. During his minority the estates were managed by his uncle, Alexander of Manderstoun, and after reaching majority he was for a while confined to Blackness Castle (where he had 2 illegitimate sons, David and George, to a daughter of the Captain of the Castle). In 1540 his mother had an assignation for the lands of Hutton from the Earl of Glancairn, to go to him after her death. In 1541 he claimed a feu of

Blackhaugh in Tweed. In 1542 he had a new arrangement for renting Blackhaugh in Ettrick Forest. In 1545/6 he had a gift from Queen Mary of the lands of Morriston in Berwickshire and also a sasine for Easter Polwarth. He married Joan (or Jean), daughter of Sir Patrick Hepburn of Waughton and had 3 children, his only legitimate son John predeceasing him (although he also had a 'natural' son, David). He died at the Battle of Pinkie and was succeeded by his brother David. His wife remarried to John Hamilton of 'Ryisholm'. Her husband was killed by a group of Turnbells from Belses, who were declared rebels in 1580; however, she also accused her nephew, also George of Wedderburn, of harassing her and her servants. Sir George of Wedderburn (1552–1616) eldest son of David, he was also 7th Laird of 'Woollee' (i.e. Wolfelee), confirmed in a sasine of 1564. He was born at Elphinstone and was a sick child, but grew rapidly in his youth. Until the age of 7 his teacher was John Knox. His father gave him lands in Berwickshire in 1566/7. He succeeded his father in 1574, including the lands in Berwickshire, as well as 'Wolley and Wolhopley'. In 1574/5 he had sasine for Wedderburn, Hutton, Jardinefield and the Hirsell. Also in 1574/5 he had a discharge for part of the dowry for his sister Isabel and in 1576 he had a financial agreement with his step-mother Margaret Ker. Also in 1576 he was surety for some Haitlies. In 1578/9 there was a discharge for teinds of Whitsome and in 1579 a decret involving the lands of Upsetlington. In 1578 he was appointed Warden of the East Marches and also served as Comptroller of the Royal Household for King James VI. Because of his position the documents relating to him are extensive. There are several preserved letters between him and the King regarding Border matters. In 1579/80 he was involved in a bond with Sir John Forster, Warden of English East March. In 1580 he had the 'escheat' of Eckie Turnbull of Belses and John Young in 'Camys', who were convicted of the murder of John Hamilton of Cumnock; however, he was also accused by Hamilton's widow (Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, who was his aunt) of harassing her over a longer period. Also in 1580 he had an agreement with the Commendator of Pluscarden. In 1581 William Lord Hay of Yester was caution for him not disturbing 'Jehane Hepburne, Lady Wedderburne'. In 1581 he was relieved of ward beyond the River 'Erne' and in 1584 of his ward in Castle Doune. In 1584 he and his supporters had permission from the King to return home from the first Raid of Stirling. He gave a charter of 'Kymmerghame' to William Brown in 1585. In 1586 he had sasine of the Tweed fishing around Upsetlington, and another sasine for half of Polwarth. He had an acquittance of a financial arrangement with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in 1586. He was further relieved of ward in 1586. In about 1588 he was appointed as one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Berwickshire. In 1589 his brother John was granted Godscroft and other lands and also his brother James was granted teinds of Hilton and Otterburn. In 1590/1 he was cautioner for Alexander Lord Home in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens. In 1591 he made an agreement with his relatives John and David Home over the lands of Hilton. In 1593 he and his brothers supported a letter of 'Lawburrows' for his sister Julian against her former husband Sir John Ker of the Hirsell and his family, not to molest her in her liferent of the lands of Littledean. He served in the Scottish Parliament in the period 1590–1605, as a minor Baron and also representing Berwickshire. His testaments of 1590 and 1596 are preserved. In 1596/7 he was a Border Commissioner for dealing with the English. In 1598 he was involved in a contract with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (dated at Edinburgh and at Hawick) regarding Patrick Hepburn and the lands of Whitsome. In 1597/8 he had a contract from Robert Logan of Restalrig for Hutton, Bonniton, Berwick Castle and other lands in Berwickshire formerly belonging to Sir George Ogilvie of Dunlugas. In 1597 Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch wrote to him from Hawick regarding relations with England, presumably as a result of the capture of Kinmont Willie the year before. His account books as Comptroller of the Royal Household from 1597 and 1598 give details of daily consumption and where the Court was located. In 1599 his 'escheat goods' in the regalties of Jedforest, Bonkle and Bothwell were given to John Simson of Dryburnford due to a debt. In 1601 he had sasine for the lands of Whitsome and in that year many of his tenants complained they were in arrears because of the 'barrenness of the haill grund and landis in this cuntrey' for the past 3 years. In 1602 he purchased lands in the Parish of Duns. In 1603 he and John of Cowdenknowes were sureties for John, heir of Blackadder; his brothers James and John were also mentioned. At about the same time he and his brother James are listed among many Homes and others who were ordered to appear at Edinburgh Tolbooth to be on an assize. Apparently as a result of debts incurred while serving as Royal Comptroller he had to sell some of his estates, including Woollee, which he sold to Sir William Cranstoun in 1605; this severed a 170 year connection between the family and the Rule valley. In 1608 he was asked to appear before the Privy Council for not repaying a debt of several years earlier. There were still disputes over fees for his time as Comptroller up until he died. In 1577/8 he married Jean Haldane, sister of John Haldane of Gleneagles. His children were: David, who succeeded, married Margaret Home, widow of Sir Mark Ker of Littledean, and was Sheriff of Berwick, but died at Dunbar along with his own son George (like their ancestors at Flodden); Anna, who married James Stirling of Keir; Isabel, who married George Home of Manderstoun; Elizabeth, who married Walter Ker of Fawdonside; Margaret, who married Hugh, Lord Loudoun and Archibald Stewart of Ardgowan; Mary, who married James Dundas of Arniston; and Beatrice, who married John Dickinson, minister at Kells. George (c.1556–1611) 3rd son of Sir Alexander of Manderston, he became the 1st Earl of Dunbar. In his last decade he was extremely important in Scotland, being the chief advisor to James VI in Scotland. In 1606 he was made sole Commissioner on the Scottish side for keeping peace on the Border. He did this by ruthlessly pursuing alleged thieves, often having them convicted and executed with no real trial. He is said to have had 140 men executed soon after taking office and later had 5 of the leaders in Liddesdale executed, as well as 14 others. This was one of the last blows that broke the Elliot and Armstrong clans, causing many of those left to disperse. He also had the names of fugitives posted on market crosses, the list running to 262 names; many were in the West March, but there were 24 Elliots and about 40 Armstrongs. James (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He was listed as 'James Hwme' along with 'Wille Hwme in Fawnis' and others. James (c.1607–33) 2nd Earl of Home, served heir to his father Alexander in 1621, including the lands and Barony of Hassendean, containing Appletreehall, as well as Redfordgreen, Drycleuchshiel, Hyndhope, Whithope, 'Fawodscheill', Huntly, Altrieve, Cacrabank, Hartwoodburn and Corsecleuch. He was granted the 'teinds and spiritualities of the Abbey of Jedburgh' in 1621, which included lands in Rulewater; he resigned the superiority of these lands to Sir John Ker of Jedburgh in 1624. In 1630 he paid the agreed 8,000 merks to Gilbert

Elliott of Stobs for the resignation of the lands of Middle Mains of Hassendean and Wester Hassendean (also called Horsleyhill). He married twice, but had no children, and was succeeded by a distant cousin, James. His sister Margaret was served as heir to some of his lands in 1633. James (d.1666) 3rd Earl of Home, son of James of Whiterig, descended from the 2nd son of Alexander, heir of the 1st Lord Home. His mother was Lady Anne, daughter of George Home, Earl of Dunbar. Before he succeeded to the Earldom he was known as 'of Cowdenknowes'. He was served heir to his father and to his grandfather in 1633. He married Jean Douglas, daughter of William, 8th Earl of Morton. His sons Alexander, James and Charles were all Earls in turn. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as liferenter in '...side' in Abbotrule Parish. This was probably Mackside, with her land being valued at £50. She was probably widow or mother of a previous landowner there. John (b.1487) younger son of Sir Alexander, Lord Home. He became Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1530 he was ordered by the King (along with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John Edmondson of that ilk) to desist in their dispute over the lands of Ednam. In 1531 he introduced the charter for Hector Lorraine inheriting Harwood and Hawthornside. He was probably the 'Mr. Jhon Home' who granted lands in upper Liddesdale to Scott of Harden, these being 'Over and Nether Clifhoupis, Quhytekirk and Quhyteland, Ermscleuch and Abbotisykes'. In 1543 he signed the 'Secret Bond' with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English influence over the young Queen Mary. Sir John of Cowdenknowes (d.bef. 1573) probably son of Mungo, who died at Flodden. They were descended from the 1st Lord Home. In 1530/1 he was witness to Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. In 1541 he was tenant of Hartwoodmyres. He was the first man named in the indictment for Kers and others for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme on Edinburgh High Street in 1552. He was said to be 'ane strykar of the said Valter with zour awin handis', to have cried out to Cessford 'Streik, tretour, and straik for thi faderis saik' and afterwards to have stated 'Ly thair, with my malison, for I had lewor gang by thi graif, nor thi dure'. He and his bairns were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford (whose death was blamed on the Scotts). In 1524 Andrew Ker resigned lands in

Smailholm to the couple. He was succeeded by his son Sir James. Rev. John (c.1630–90) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1650, he was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1658 and by the Bishop of Edinburgh in 1662. Probably in about 1664 he became Episcopalian minister at Ewes. However, he was deprived in 1681 for not taking ‘the Test’. He married Ann, daughter of David Livingstone of Dunipace. He died in Edinburgh. Katherine (15th C.) daughter of Sir Alexander, 1st Lord Home. She firstly married John Sinclair and secondly married Archibald Douglas. In 1479 she requested a copy to be made of a charter for Polwarth, with her procurator being Thomas Pitt, Rector of Abbot-rule. Margaret (d.1683) daughter of Alexander, Earl of Home and brother of James. In 1627 she married James Stewart, 4th Earl of Moray and had 9 children. In 1633 she was served heir to some of her brother’s lands, including Redford-green, Drycleuchshiel, Hyndhope, Whithope, ‘Fawodscheill’, Huntly, Altrieve, Cacrabank, Hartwoodburn and Corsecleuch. Patrick (d.1478) cleric who became Archdeacon of Teviotdale after William Croyser was deprived in 1441. However, he was in dispute for a while with Walter Blair. He was Archdeacon from 1443 (when he is recorded as a witness), but did not settle the claims with Blair until 1446. In 1451 he lost the office to Croyser again, but regained local possessions a couple of years later and was fully recognised as Archdeacon when Croyser died about 1461. He resigned on a pension in 1472, and was still referred to as Archdeacon when abroad in 1474. He died in Sutri, Italy. His seal had a shield with the 1st and 4th quarters showing 3 papingoes (i.e. parrots) for Pepdic, and the 2nd and 3rd showing a lion rampant, for Home. Sir Patrick of Polwarth (d.1503) 2nd son of Sir David, he was Comptroller of Scotland in the period 1499–1502. His name appears many times in the Exchequer Rolls for that period. He leased the lands of Aikwood in 1490. In about 1500 he acted as bailie for George Ker of Samuelston in a land deal involving John Ker, as well as Alexander Lord Home and Nichola Ker. In 1499 he was assigned the Middlestead of Langhope (probably in the Ale valley) as well as Redford (perhaps related to Redfordgreen). In 1500 Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus had a letter of obligation with him and his wife Helen Shaw. Sir Patrick of Fastcastle (d.1507) son of Alexander, 1st Lord Home. He was assigned the lands of Singlie and Erncleuch in 1488 and again in 1492. In 1490

he was named in a document for the Haigs of Bemersyde. He was a Commissioner on the Border in 1494. He was one of the negotiators for the truce between Henry VII and James IV. He was father of Cuthbert of Fastcastle (who died at Flodden), Ada, Elizabeth, Isabel, Alison and 2 others. Sir Patrick (d.1648) 1st Baronet of Polwarth, son of Sir Patrick and Julian, daughter of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was served heir to his father in 1611. In 1632 he gained several baronies and estates in 1632, including Feu-Rule. He represented Berwickshire in the 1630 Parliament. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Alexander Hamilton and of Innerwick (and his wife later remarried to Robert, 3rd Lord Jedburgh). He was succeeded by his son Patrick, Lord Polwarth. Ranulphus (13th/14th C.) English nobleman who was granted part of the estate of Chisholme (along with Robert de Manvers) by Edward in 1317. However, 3 years later it was restored to John de Cheseholme. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme on Edinburgh High Street. He is recorded as ‘Wille Hwme in Fawnis’ (probably Fawnys in Berwickshire) and listed along with James, the Laird of Cowdenknowes and other Homes. Lieut. William (19th/20th C.) wrote the book ‘With the Border Volunteers in Pretoria’ (1901), which was published in Hawick (written ‘de Hum’ and variants in the earliest documents, as well as ‘Hume’, ‘Howme’, ‘Hwme’, ‘Hwume’, etc.; see also Hume).

the Home (thu-hōm) n. name sometimes used for the Haig.

Home By Burnfoot (hōm-bl-burn-foo) n. song with words and music written by Neil Mackay in 1970. The song was written in response to a competition devised by Burnfoot Residents’ Association, for a song celebrating both the Common Riding and Burnfoot. It was sung as one of three finalists at a reception given for the Cornet at the Burnfoot Roadhouse on his return from Denholm. It has rarely been sung since it was first written. However, arrangements have also been made for brass band (by Robert Hume) and for piano (by Ian Seeley).

the Home Guaird (thu-hōm-gārd) n. voluntary defence organisation during WWII, operating 1940–44. It was formed of men who were either too young, too old or in protected occupations, and so could not serve in the regular army. The local unit was called the 1st Battalion, Border Home Guard. In Hawick they organised training, were set up originally to be a second line of defence for invasions and later to cope with air-raids. Their commanding officer in the early days of the war was Walter Thomas Hepburne-Scott, Master of Polwarth and later was Lieut.-Col. Ben Montgomery. They had a 'stand down' parade in the Volunteer Park in December 1944. A closely allied organisation was the Royal Observer corps, who were set up as spotters on neighbouring hills, e.g. near Earlside. Observers at Jedburgh and Ashkirk both spotted Rudolph Hess's plane in 1941 (note, note usually pronounced hām-gārd).

Home Law (hōm-law) n. hill just to the north of Buccleuch, reaching over 410 m. It has an earthwork on its southern slopes.

the Homes (thu-hewmz) n. leading family of the Eastern March (roughly Berwickshire) during the 14th to 17th centuries, who have continued to have local influence until the present. They are said to be derived from the Earls of Dunbar and Northumbria. They traditionally had many lairds, rather than a single powerful chief. Home Castle lay just south of Greenlaw, while recent Earls of Home have lived at the Hirsell near Coldstream. Major lands of the family included Aytton, Coldingham, Eyemouth, Fastcastle, Lamber-ton and Paxton. In the 15th to 17th centuries the Lords and Earls of Home held lands and superiority of lands much more local to Hawick, including Appletreehall, Broadlee, Chamberlain Newton, Girnwood, Groundistone, Harden, Hassendean, Hoscoate, Midshiels, Stouslie and Wolfelee. In addition the Homes of Wedderburn also held superiority over lands in Rulewater. Old manuscripts of the Earls of Home are described in a volume by William Fraser in 1891, while those of the Homes of Wedderburn were published in 1902 – 'Lord Hume he has summoned Tweed, Ettrick, and Yarrow; Tweed, Ettrick, and Yarrow obeyed his call' [JH] (also sometimes 'Hume').

Homildon Hill (ho-mul-din-hil) n. battle of 1402, north-west of Wooler, in which Henry 'Hotspur' Percy defeated and captured Earl Archibald Douglas and inflicted heavy losses on the Scots. Henry IV gave Percy little credit for this victory, and claimed the ransom money for himself. However, he did bestow all of Teviotdale on Sir Henry Percy. These events led to the siege of Cocklaw Castle (at Ormiston) the following year, when Percy was to be further upset at Henry's lack of support, leading to the revolt against Henry (also called 'Humbleton Hill').

The Honest Country Club (thu-o-nist-kun'-ree-klub) n. club formed by local gentleman farmers in 1711, which only lasted until 1716, although it served as a sort of predecessor for the Hawick Farmers' Club and the Teviotdale Farmers' Club and Wisp Club much later. The founding members were John Pringle of Haining, Walter Scott of Woll, William Plumber of Middlestead, Andrew Pringle in Haining, Philip Scott in Oakwood, Andrew Waugh of Shaw and Adam Ogilvie, younger of Hartwoodmyres. 6 other members were admitted in 1712–14. The minute books exist in the National Archives, with the last entry reading 'this day the club did not meet the whole members being more concerned, the storme being so great to preserve their sheep from sterveing then for clubbing'.

Honest Men and Bright-Eyed Daughters (o-nist-men-in-brī'-īd-dow'-urz) n. book created by Ian Landles and Derek Lunn, published in 1991 to accompany an exhibition in the Scott Gallery. It consists of photographs and 'pen portraits' (in dialect) of 'fifty o' Hawick's weel kent faces'. It was followed by the sequels 'Mair Honest Men' (1993) and 'Son of Honest Men' (2000).

Honeyburn (hu-nee-burn) n. farm just before Denholm. It is believed that the church lands of Denholm mentioned in the 14th century were located here, and the house still has a cross on the west gable. It may be that the monks of Melrose Abbey had an apiary here. The farm was formerly part of the Cavers estate. A tenant there in 1684, Robert Tait, was declared as a fugitive for being a Covenanter. The current house is certainly old, was once thatched and has internal walls with an interesting construction. Andrew Haddon moved there in 1848 and several generations of Haddons were there subsequently, with the family purchasing it from the Cavers estate in the 1930s. The road from Hawick to Denholm used to pass to the south of here (also called 'Honeytoon' and similar; it was 'Hunyburn' in 1684).

Honey Burn (hu-nee-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from the south near Honeyburn farm. It was formerly called 'Staney Burn'.

Honeyman (hu-nee-mun) n. David (19th C.) head gamekeeper on the Cavers estate. On one occasion he was beaten up by a gang of Hawick poachers who had come to find the assistant keeper, John Sibbald. Edward (18th/19th C.) possible name of resident of Limekilnedge. His son George is listed on the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1799, with the surname appearing to be 'Hinmen'.

Honeytoon (hu-nee-toon) n. Honeytown, former name for the farm and hamlet at Honeyburn. The farmer there in 1797 was James Heron and John Lockie was a servant at the same time. Thomas Buckham was a shepherd there in 1801. James Turnbull was a retired farmer there in 1841 (it is ‘Honeytoun’ in 1797 and is labelled ‘Honeytown’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Honorary Burgess (on-ur-ur-ee-bur-jis) n. person who is admitted to the Burgess role gratis, rather than paying for the privilege. They continued to be appointed in Hawick long after there were no formal Burgesses, usually the honour being given to people who were not resident in the area. This honorific title carries no specific rights in the modern era, but formerly was equivalent to an ordinary Burgess, without the need to pay a fee. It is equivalent to the ‘freedom of the Burgh’ or being made a ‘freeman’ in other towns. One of the first entries in the Town Book is for Robert Wright, shoemaker in Easter Burnfoot, who was admitted in 1690 ‘in respect it is the custom of all towns, that the Provost or other Magistrates have the liberty to create 2 or 3 Burgesses gratis’. In 1694 2 men were admitted for having served for the Town in the Militia. Formerly the Bailies would sometimes make a local a Burgess for free. However, in 1718 it was decreed that no Bailie should thereafter create ‘any person burgess gratis, except it be some gentleman or other stranger, upon and for onerous causes’. The past list includes the following: 1734 Robert Scott of Horsleyhill; 1735 John Scott ‘wool comber’; 1736 Archibald Stevenson; 1740 William Adams and Francis Gatton; 1746 Charles Scott; 1748 Francis Scott (Earl of Dalkeith); 1749 Charles Johnstone; 1750 James Atkinson, John Chisholm, Mark Maugham, Michael Hoyes, William Robertson and John Elliot; 1751 John Dick; 1753 William Kirk; 1755 John Ramsay; 1760 Anthony Barclay and Robert Elliot; 1767 Lawrence Porteous; 1775 Adam Ogilvie; 1776 Andrew Lookup, William Robertson, John Haldane and James Wood; 1777 Thomas Scott, David Loch, Walter Grieve, Joseph Davidson and John Smith; 1778 Lieut. John Douglas and John Scott; 1779 Charles McKenzie; 1784 Adam Hobkirk; 1785 Vincent Lunardi; 1802 Lt.-Col. William Dickson, Capt. Archibald Campbell and Capt. McQuarrie; 1803 Lieut. Thomas Oliver; 1806 William Nixon; 1813 Hugh Mitchel; 1814 James Anderson and Charles Chisholme; 1818 James Grieve and David Moncrieff; 1819 Prince Leopold of the Belgians; 1821 Walter Montague Douglas Scott

(Duke of Buccleuch) and Lord Montagu; 1823 Edward Ellice, William Lockhart and Charles Riddell; 1825 James Douglas, Gilbert Elliot (Earl of Minto) and Sir William Elliott; 1828 Walter Scott and John Corse Scott; 1830 Dr. Robert Douglas; 1833 Capt. George Elliot; 1834 Henry Brougham (Lord Brougham and Vaux); 1834 Archibald Douglas; 1836 Thomas Murray; 1837 John Elliot; 1838 Dr. Andrew Smith; 1840 Lord John Russell; 1844 Richard Cobden and Rowland Hill; 1856 Louis Kossuth and Gen. Sir James Simpson; 1859 Richard Hodgson and James Wilson; 1881 William Elliott Lockhart; 1885 William Scott (Duke of Buccleuch); 1898 Gilbert Elliot Murray Kynnmound (Earl of Minto); 1904 Andrew Carnegie, Thomas Shaw and John Montague Douglas Scott (Earl of Dalkeith); 1906 James Murray; 1910 Lt. Gen. Baden-Powell; 1925 Earl Haig and David Cathels; 1933 Lord Dalkeith, Walter Elliot and Sir Thomas Henderson; 1970 David Atkinson; 1971 Chay Blyth; and 1974 the K.O.S.B.

Honorary Provost (on-ur-ur-ee-pro-vist) n. term used to refer to the Provost during the Common Riding ceremonies after the reorganisation of 1974 meant that Hawick no longer had civic head. The Honorary Provost is selected by the local councillors, chairs the Provost’s Council, acts in the role of Provost during the Common Riding and represents the Town at other town’s festivals. The Provost’s mongram is used as a decoration in the Town Hall during the Common Riding events. Perhaps the most important duty is the statement to congratulate the Cornet’s Lass on bussing the Flag and then asking the Cornet ‘to ride the meiths and marches of the commonty of Hawick according to ancient custom then having done so return the Flag to the Provost’s Council Chambers on Saturday unsullied and unstained’ (see also the Provost).

hoo (hoo) v., arch. to howl, hoot like an owl – ‘The hoolet frae his garret grey Hoos up the glen at close o’ day ...’ [DA], exclam. a cry of attention, halloo – ‘... Uhu, hu, hu, hu! by Jove but that’s a gude ’in, A firs-rate idea, every way completit – Gude, hu, hu, gude! there’s naething e’er can beat it’ [JoHa] (also written ‘hu’).

hoo (hoo) adv., conj., arch. how – ‘Hoo memory wreesals at the sneck Whene’er the ‘slogan’s’ soonded ...’ [RH], ‘Hoo sic bits o’ eggshells could haud echt full-grown men, Is a thing that aw never can yet comprehen’ [BM1900], ‘They wondered hoo to spend the day, When busybodies cam’ their way’ [WFC], ‘Aye, they tell it still when the tale they raise, Hoo the pair lived couthily aa their hooch (hooch) interj., arch. exclamation denoting triumph, excitement or exhilaration, particularly during Highland dancing – 'An' the pith o' their lungs they threw into their tongues, An' they hoogh'd an' they roared oot right mightly' [JoHa], '... List to the hoochin o' the couple in the middle On the day o' the Hiring Fair' [ECS], '... Boston Memorial Hall, where many a good 'hoochin' country dance has sent the Ettrick hoolets mad with envy ...' [DH] (also written 'hoogh').

Hood (hood) n. Alexander (17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf. He held land valued at £10 in 1643 and is still recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1678. These lands were later owned by William Redford. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Bowden Parish. In 1730 he married Ann Dickson in Cavers Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) miller in Hassendean in 1797 when his name appeared on the list to be balloted for the Militia. He was also listed as miller at Hassendean in the Lieutenantcy Book in 1799. He was probably related to Thomas and John, who also lived at Hassendean in 1799. He was listed as a labourer at Hassendean on the 1801 Militia ballot. In 1798 in Minto Parish, he married Janet Martin, who was from Hawick. He is probably the Andrew whose children, baptised in Minto, included James (b.1800) and Walter (b.1802). Andrew (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Janet Martin and their children included Samuel (b.1806) and Margaret (b.1808). Andrew (1815–69) stockingmaker of Sillerbithall. He married Elizabeth Murray (1819–1905) and was thus an uncle of Sir James A.H. Their children were James (hosiery foreman with Elder & Watson of Strathaven), John (tweed manager), Elizabeth, Betsy and Christian. He was living on Bourtree Place in 1851. F. Murray (19th/20th C.) known locally as a singer. G.B.W. (19th C.) tweed manufacturer of Wilson & Glenny's. George (17th C.) tenant in Cauld Faulds according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records, where his surname is written 'Hude'. He is probably the George, married to Agnes Armstrong, whose children baptised in Robertson Parish included John (b.1679), William (b.1682), George (b.1685) and Margaret (b.1687). The witnesses in 1682 were James Johnstone and Walter Armstrong and in 1687 were Robert Turnbull and John Noble. George (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son James was baptised in 1719. Perhaps the same George was living in Cavers in 1721 when his daughter Euphan was baptised. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Mervinslaw in 1737. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Boghall in 1742. He married Helen Miller in 1736 and their children included: William (b.1737); Helen (b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); 'Jonna' (b.1749). The witnesses in 1737 were William Miller and William Hood. George (18th C.) married Isabel Hart in Wilton Parish in 1773. George (b.c.1770s) shepherd at Billhope according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. George (b.c.1780) labourer at Hassendean according to the ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish in 1801. He may have been younger brother of Thomas, Andrew and John, who were labourers recorded at Hassendean in 1799 and 1801. He is probably the George whose son Gilbert was baptised in Minto in 1807. Gideon (19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1834. Gideon (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son John was baptised in 1695. James (17th/18th C.) weaver in Whitchesters. In 1723 he married Margaret Hood, who was from Hobkirk Parish. He may be the James whose children, baptised in Kirkton, included Agnes (b.1728), Betty (b.1731), William (b.1734) and Janet (b.1747). James (18th C.) wright of Dryburgh. He married Isobel Spottiswood (sister of 'The Hazel Dog o the Toor') who lived 1718–1809. His descendants included the Hoods who were drapers in Lilliesleaf, as well as G.B.W. James (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Andrew (b.1776); and James (b.1785). Thomas, Andrew, John and George, all labourers at Hassendean in 1801, may have been his sons. James (b.1813/4) brother of Andrew, he was a thatcher and slater. In 1841 he lived with his mother, Helen, and siblings, on Walter's Wynd. By 1851 he was married to Janet and living at the Kirkstyle. His children included John, Betty, Charles and Janet. He could be the James, married to Janet Miller, whose son James was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1854. James (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Grace Learmonth and their son James was baptised in 1854. J.L. (??–??) local knitwear manufacturer. He became a partner with Walter Scott Barrie and James Scoon, then co-founded Scoon & Hood, tweed manufacturers, Teviotdale Mills. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Janet Law and their children included Marion (b.1679) and Jean (b.1682). John (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Townhead according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included John (b.1696). John (18th C.) recorded as herd at Hummelknowes in 1727 when an unnamed child of his was baptised in Cavers Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son William was baptised in 1728. Perhaps the same John was living in Bedrule Parish in 1730 when his son John was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Gray and their son James was baptised in 1742. John (18th C.) married Marion Storie in Wilton Parish in 1746. John (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Walter (b.1753) and John (b.1772). John (18th/19th C.) labourer at Hassendean in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was probably related to Andrew and Thomas, who were also living at Hassendean in 1799. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was a labourer at Hassendean 'Who has one serving for him in the Lancashire Volunteers'. He is probably the John who married Isobel Clerk and had children baptised in Minto Parish, including William (b.1807), Jeany (b.1809), John (b.1811) and Robert (b.1812). John (b.1780) son to labourer Robert at Hassendean according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish. He was distinct from the other John who was also in Hassendean at the same time. John (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Betty Hill and their children included Jeany (b.1807). John (19th C.) married Betty Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1810. Their son Walter was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1810. John (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Agnes Minto and their children included Mary (b.1814), Andrew (b.1816), Nancy (b.1819) and Helen (b.1822). John (19th C.) married Helen Graham in Wilton Parish in 1821. John (19th C.) resident of Hawick. His son Walter became a merchant Burgess in Glasgow in 1845. John Murray (20th C.) son of James, he became editor of the Hawick Express, coming there after working for the Manchester Guardian. He was known as a stickler for precision. Joseph (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1761 he witnessed a baptism for gardener John Ainslie. He married Janet Inglis and their son George was baptised in 1756. Rice (19th C.) married Janet Bertran.

Their children included: George (b.1833), baptised in Roberton; and Margaret (b.1835), baptised in Hawick. It is unclear if his unusual forename is an abbreviation or nickname. Robert (17th C.) listed as 'Rot. Hod' in 1689 when he was fined by the Hawick Magistrates for an irregular marriage with Margaret Armstrong. He was described as a 'passenger', suggesting that he was not from Hawick. The couple eloped to England, but were harshly fined 'their hail moveable goods and gear' and 'banished the toune in all tyme to come'. Robert (18th C.) labourer at Hassendean. His son John was recorded on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish. He married Mary Thomson and their children included John (b.1780). Thomas (18th/19th C.) labourer at Hassendean in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was probably related to Andrew and John, who were also living at Hassendean in 1799. He was still a labourer at Hassendean on the 1801 Militia ballot. Rev. Thomas Neilson (1922–82) born in Coatbridge, he became a structural engineer and draughtsman, but re-trained for the ministry, thus following the path of his twin brother, James. He was licensed at Hamilton and served as assistant in Airdrie and Stonehouse. In 1967 he became minister at St. George's West in Hawick, which was to be his only charge. He died after collapsing in the Church of Scotland Bookshop in Edinburgh. He married Margaret in 1957 and had no children. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son George was baptised in 1698. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Newbigging and then in Nether Southfield. He married Margaret Stevenson and their children baptised in Hawick Parish included: William (b.1701); Robert (b.1704); Agnes (b.1708); and Robert (again, b.1710). The witnesses in 1704 were John and Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield and in 1708 were Robert Scott in Newbigging and Walter Scott, tenant in Nether Southfield. He witnessed a baptism for James Davidson (in Hawick Shiel) in 1698. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: John (b.1716); and Agnes (b.1720). William (b.1714), with no mother's name given, may also have been his child. William (17th/18th C.) employee of Pringle of Roughheugh Mill, working as a waulker. In 1723 he was recorded 'att the large kirk door in sackcloth betwixt the second and third bells' and was rebuked for adultery with Isobel Lethen. It appeared that the onus was on this couple to prove the death of Isobel's husband, Benjamin Taylor. However, the required proclamation at Leith pier probably involved too much expense, so he appeared in sackcloth for 6 Sundays, and Isobel for no less than 11 Sundays, plus his employer paid a fine on his behalf. The couple's son Joseph was baptised in 1723, with him recorded as 'walker'. The witnesses were Walter Kay and tailor John Scott. William (b.1701) son of William, he was born in Hawick Parish and was a weaver in Hawick Shiel. He was at Whitchesters for 6 years, before spending the period from about 1727 at Hawick Shiel. He is probably the weaver William who witnessed a baptism for James Hume in Hawick Shiel in 1743. In 1757 he was one of the residents of farms neighbouring on the Common who had their 'bakes' at Blackgrain Moss broken up on the orders of the Town Council and were fined. In 1767 he gave evidence relating to the use of the Common; at that time he was still married. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ashybank in 1725 when his son Robert was baptised. Janet (b.1722) was probably also his child. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Gray and their son James was baptised in 1742. William (18th C.) married Jean Leitch in Wilton Parish in 1733. Their son William was baptised in 1734. William (18th C.) married Janet Scott in Wilton Parish in 1737. Their children included: Margaret (b.1738); and Isabel (b.1741). Note the confusion with a couple of the same names a couple of decades earlier. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for George (surely a close relative) in 1737. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Lamont and their son William was baptised in 1744. William (18th C.) married Isobel Learmonth in Wilton Parish in 1742. William (18th C.) weaver in Denholm in 1744 when his son William was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included John (b.1767) and Robert (b.1768). William (18th C.) resident of Newton in Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Armstrong in 1761 and their children included: Jean (b.1762); Janet (b.1766); and William (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were William and Thomas Irvine. William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1773) (formerly spelled 'Houd', 'Houde', 'Howd', 'Hoyd', 'Hud', 'Hudd' and variants).

Hopper (hoo-pur) n. Thomas Howey (b.1816/7) from Northumberland, he was a druggist in Hawick. He was at 3 High Street in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1851 he was a widower, with his sister Sarah as his housekeeper. He married Janet Hall Elliot in Hawick in 1844. He had children Christina W., Georgina E., Adam and Elizabeth. His caricature from 1856 appears in the book 'Noctes Hawickianæ'. Apparently he made a bet that he could punch through the crown of his hat, but failed, since the hat just came away from the rim. His name is sometimes written 'Hooper'.

hoor (oor) n. an hour, note that the singular form is often used for the plural – 'she's been in there six hoor already', 'it plays 'Teribus' every quarter o an hoor', 'it takes aboot twae hoor ti drive ti Glesgi', 'An' his servant was haellet in that verra same hoor' [HSR], '... an' tak' deep thought o' thee in the hoors o' the nicht' [HSR], 'Sae in aboot an oor he makes his way wast o' Hawkburn up the Law ...' the Hoose o Refuge (thū-hoos-ō-re-fewj) n. former name for the old house at the top of the Green Wynd, at one time the Nag's Heid. It was used as the town's poor house, providing a nicht's shelter and porridge in the morning for the destitute and itinerant people. Thomas Wells was Keeper of the House in 1851. It is listed on the Loan in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1881 it existed at 4 Loan, adjacent to the Combination Poorhouse, and presumably had a somewhat complementary role, as a last resort refuge for the travelling unemployed. James Smith, house painter (and ex-Cornet) was the keeper at that time. Its functions were presumably taken over later by the Combination Poorhouse.

the Hoose o Refuge (thū-hoos-ō-re-fewj) n. former house behind Denholm Kirk. It was used as an overflow jail and had a water barrel in front which was often utilised for sobering up drunks.

hoose-room (hoos-room) n. house-room, accommodation in a house, lodging – '...the sma Conventicle o' hens that bide, This nicht o' Februar thaw, Hoose-room at Haggis-ha' [DH].

Hooses (hoo-seez) n., pl. groupings of pupils at the High School for the purposes of competitive sports. The 4 houses were Branhholme, Cavers, Harden and Minto, with specific colours for each. These designations were used through most of the 20th century, but have recently been replaced with less historical names.

hoose-tap (hoos-tawp) n., poet. a house-top – '...an' what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetaps' [HSR], 'I wathe, an' am as ane sparra alane apon the hous-tap' [HSR].

hoosewife (hoos-wif) n. a housewife – 'The hoosewife, the minister, the followers They fought the shutdoon tae the end' [AY].

hoosework (hoos-wurk) n. housework – 'Aw think she still has kindly thochts o' Danny and gaungs pairt o' the day tae help Mysie wi' hoosework' [JEDM].

hoot (hoot, hoo') interj. exclamation of dismissal, impatience, remonstrance, etc. – 'Cried, 'Peggy, ha'ye nae paper? gies a piece'. Hoot aye, there's plenty, Neddie's on the brace' [JoHa], 'Huff'd are ye? hoot na; come this way a wee, For here's a scene, I trow, ye'll like to see' [JoHa] (cf. hoots and the locally much more common howt and howts).

hoots (hoots) interj. exclamation of annoyance or disagreement – 'Hoots, gae way wi' ye Mr. Spunk, ye maun let me stand ma hand on this suspicious occasion' [JEDM] (rare locally, cf. howts).

hope (hōp, hup, whup) n. a small upland valley, hollow enclosed at one end, now mainly in place names – 'Thus the proper name Hope, signifying a particular kind of glen, they pronounce as if written whupp ...' [RAC]. It is particularly common in the Borders, e.g. in Hobkirk, most often at the end of the name, when it is often shortened, e.g. Kershope, Phaup (Fawhope), Hislop (Hazelhope) and Philip (Philhope). Double uses of 'hope' include Dryhope-hope and Lewenshope-hope in Yarrow and Twislehope Hope in Liddesdale – 'No sound could be heard in hope or glen To tell that his world was a world of men ...' [WHO], 'The clouds sail doon Teviotdale Owre every hope and grain, The road and river wanly glint And the hills are derk wi' rain' [DH].

Hope (hōp) n. Alexander (19th C.) fictional character in the book 'Alexander Hope: A Hawick Story', written by Rev. John Thomson and published in 1878. Alexander is the son of a Hawick man who had made good in Australia and sent his son back to Scotland to learn about sheep farming etc. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Martin. His children included Bessie (b.1645) and Helen (b.1648). The witnesses in 1648 were James Stewart and William (who was probably a relative). George (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Watson in Bedrule Parish in 1695. George (18th/19th C.) servant at Hallrule in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. George (b.c.1780) servant to Rutherford of Knowesouth according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. George (b.c.1780) servant to William Thomson at Netherraw in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. George (18th/19th C.) married Rabina Henderson. Their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Mary (b.1812); and John (b.1814). He is probably also the George, married to 'Beatrix' Henderson, whose daughter Agnes (b.1809) was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1810; the witnesses were wright W. Telfer and Janet Scott. George (19th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Cavers Parish in 1838. Horatio Nelson Trafalgar (b.1807) eldest child of William and Jane Scott. He was presumably named in honour of Nelson's victory and death at the battle a year or so before he was born. He was a clerk in Hawick and subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. It is unclear what happened to him, but he may be confused with a man of a similar name who emigrated to Prince Edward Island. James (18th C.) resident of Mackside in Southdean Parish. In 1764 and 1767 he had unnamed sons baptised. Probably the same James had these other children baptised in Southdean: Margaret (b.1752); Robert (b.1753); and James (b.1755). James (18th/19th C.) linen draper in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. John (16th C.) one of the King's shepherds, who, along with John Hall, had sheep stolen from him by a group of Armstrongs and others in 1535. This was at 'Braidlee in the Forest', which was probably the farm in the Borthwick valley. The same 2 men were recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 in 'Braidlee and Filop' when they were paid £6 13s 4d for 10 bolls of grain. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, the part associated with Hassendean. He witnessed baptisms for Walter Gledstains in 1681, for Walter Crinklaw in 1686, for Adam Sanderson in 1687 and for John Scott in Appletreehall and for Hector Shiel in 1688. He married Barbara Graham and their children included: William (b.1681); Marie (b.1686); and Elizabeth (b.1689). The witnesses in 1681 were Robert Thomson and Adam Sanderson and in 1686 were William and James Redford. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Hassendeanburn. John (1671/2–1748) gardener at Wells. He 'lived in a thatched cottage with his wife, keeping a cow and poultry, and from time to time supplying the mansion with their produce'. The estate factor Archibald Jerdan describes that the plate of the house (i.e. silver cutlery, etc.) was in his care. He married Betty Samuel, who died in 1742, aged 76. Their children included: James (1698/9–1769); and Margaret (1708/9–86), who married Robert Scott, gardener at Wells. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. John 'Johnnie the Whup' (b.c.1785). From the family that gave its name to the lands of Hopehill, off Wilton Crescent. He is probably the John, married to Mary, who lived at 'Roadside' in 1841, and is described as an 'Independent Gentleman' in the census. John 'Hopey' (1941–2022) son of John and Ivy, he was born at the Haig and raised on Garfield Street. He was educated at St. Mary's, Trinity and Hawick High Schools. He was Cornet in 1963 and Acting Father in 1998. He married his Cornet's Lass, Lilian Young and they had daughters Jackie (Cornet's Lass in 1991) and Julie. The family lived in several parts of Hawick and Denholm. He worked in the knitwear trade all his life, retiring in 2006; thereafter he devoted time to volunteer work, driving people to hospital for dialysis and being a mobility-assist driver for children with special needs. Always a great Common Riding supporter, he served on the Common Riding Committee for 24 years, taking responsibility as Master of Ceremonies for 12 years and assistant for 3 years, and being made an Honorary Life Member in 2018. He followed at other Border festivals, getting the oldest rider prize at Jethart in 2013, and retiring from riding only in 2016. He also served as Chairman of the Hawick Community Council and led walks at the Reivers Festival. He was Jubilee Cornet in 2013 and played the part of the Hexham standard-bearer in the Big Return in 2014. He also modelled for a figure in the Return from Hornshole statue. Known for his positive attitude and good humour, it was said that no one ever had a bad word to say about him. Matthew (1764–95) probably son of John, born in Langholm. He was a merchant in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He married Jane Potts in Hawick in 1781 and their children included: Walter (b.1782); Robert (b.1785); Helen (b.1787); and Janet (b.1789). The witnesses in 1789 were George Fairlie and Robert Scott. His first wife appears to have died in 1789 and he secondly married Elizabeth Hill and had 5 more children in Langholm. His death is recorded in Hawick. Mona born in Hawick, but raised on Stornaway, she started working in Hawick's Registrar's Office in 1981 and retired 29 years later. She married local knitwear firm owner Eric. Mungo (17th C.) described as 'in Hassendean Know' in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the 'Hope in Hassingdeaneburne' who is listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. Peter (19th/20th C.) early trainer of Hawick R.F.C. Robert (17th/18th C.) wright in Ashkirk Parish. In 1723 his daughter Isobel married John Riggs, printer in Edinburgh. Dr. Robert (1812–78) born in Morebattle, son of Robert and Joan Culbertson. He graduated M.D. from Edinburgh University in 1834, winning a surgery prize. He came to Hawick as assistant to Dr. John Douglas. He may have set up on his own, since in Pigot's 1837 directory he is listed separately as a surgeon on the High Street. In 1838 he emigrated to New South Wales, practicing at Narellan, and then moving to live near his brothers. Together they established flour mills, farmed sheep and supplied goods to miners during the gold rush. They were early viticulturists in the Geelong district. He also served in the Victorian Legislative Council. He married Catherine Elizabeth Hassell. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Reid and their son John was born in 1767. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Margaret Napier in 1767. His wife was also from Hawick Parish and their children included: Andrew (b.1770); and Agnes (b.1773). He is probably the Thomas whose child died in 1773. Thomas (18th C.) resident of 'New Harrot' in Hobkirk Parish in 1788 when his daughter Euphie was baptised. Perhaps the same Thomas was the tenant at Langraw in Hobkirk Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant at Eastcote according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) owner of the land at Hopehill, as marked on Wood's 1824 map. His 2nd wife was Elizabeth Ingles. Walter (b.c.1780) merchant in Hawick according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was Cornet in 1804. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Martin and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1646. William (17th C.) farmer at Branhholme Town in 1671, when there were 7 tenants recorded there. His name also appears in connection with Branhholme Town in 1675 and 1677. He could be the William, married to Bessie Martin (also a surname from that area) whose daughter Helen was born in 1646; this same William probably witnessed a baptism for George in 1648. He is probably the William 'in Branhholme' whose will is recorded in 1684. William (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1716 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Gledstains. In 1721 his daughter Margaret married shoemaker William Tait. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Pringle and their children included Janet (b.1744). William (18th/19th C.) mail-guard in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He could be the William who married Jane Scott and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included: Horatio Nelson Trafalgar (b.1807); Harriot Ormond (b.1808); Mary Ann (b.1810); Henry Charles (b.1812); William Todd (b.1814); Samuel Todd (b.1817); Jane (b.1819); and Wilhelmina Amelia (b.1822), who married James Blenkinsop. His son Thomas died in 1819. William 'Willy' (b.1788/9) from Ancrum, he was a draper and grocer in Denholm. His shop was probably on Sunnyside. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a linen draper. In 1851 he was living with his niece Margaret as house-keeper. He used to travel around the neighbouring valleys (including Rulewater) with a covered cart containing his wares. He died unmarried (formerly written 'Hop').

Hope the Gaird

Hopeheid (hōp-heed) n. Hopehead, former name for lands near Larriston Rig. They were purchased (perhaps under 'wadsett') from Robert Elliot of Larriston along with Larriston Rig by John Elliot of Thorlieshope in 1675 and there was a further wadsett in 1697 with Robert, son of the previous Robert Elliot. It is unclear exactly where these lands were located.

Hopehill (hōp-hil) n. house on the land adjacent to Hope Park, off Wilton Crescent, which was named by the Hope family who once lived there. It was later the home of wool merchant David Law, Rev. Robert Mitchell and Provost Melrose. It is also referred to as 'Hopehill Cottage' and is now run as a guest house.

Hopehouse (hōp-hoos) n. Hopehouse, farm in the Ettrick valley between Tushielaw and Thirlestane. The Cranstons of tat Ilk are recorded in connection to these lands in 1581. It was owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1609 when the tenants were Thomas Hislop, Robert Paterson and Robert Cowan. In about 1622 it is described as a 'pendicle' of Thirlestane (it is 'Hoiphous' in 1609 and 1622).

Hope-Johnstone (hōp-jon-stin) n. Capt. Wentworth William 'Wenty' (1848–1910) famous British gentleman jockey, who rode his first flat race at Hawick in the 1860s, borrowing boots and breeches for the occasion, and apparently hearing the starter and his brother trying to fix the race! Later in his career he twice won 5 races in one afternoon.

Hopekirk (hōp-kirk) n. former name for Hobkirk, in use before the 18th century.

Hope Park (hōp-pawrk) n. former name for an area in Wilton which became the upper end of the west side of Wilton Crescent. It was named by a family called Hope who lived there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

Hope Sike (hōp-sik) n. stream that rises near Hare Hill, passes the farmstead of Pleaknowe, joining Stewart's Cleuch and running not the Slit-rig from the east.

Hope the Gaird (hōp-thu-gārd) n. one of the guards (the other well-known one being Dougal) on the Royal Mail coach, which passed through Hawick in the early part of the 19th century. His first name is unrecorded. They had a livery of scarlet and gold, and were armed with blunderbuss and pistols – 'Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Ten-cocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird' [HI], 'With hats in hand, and three loud cheers, Hope the guard first started,

And drank his Royal Highness' health, All in good order parted' [BY].

Hopkirk see Hobkirk

Hopper (ho-pur) n. Thomas H. (b.1816/7) from England, he was a druggist at 3 High Street in the 1841, 1851 and 1861 censuses. His wife was Williamina and their children included Christina W., Georgeina E., Thomas and Elizabeth.

hoppergaw (ho-purgaw) v., arch. to sew seeds unevenly, so that the plants grow in patches (noted by J. Jamieson).

Hoppringle (ho-pring-ul) n. farmstead on the Toddle Burn, to the east of the A7 north of Fountainhall, which was the original home of the Pringle family (the derivation is something like 'small enclosed valley of the round hill', although an earlier romantic theory suggested it meant 'son of the pilgrim').

Hoppringle see Pringle

Hopsburn see Hobsburn

hork (hork) v., poet. to scrape, dig – 'The muse is like to spleet her jaws ... But horking howks 'mang epita's, Sin' Davie's dead' [JoHa].

the horn (thu-hörn) n., arch. trumpet used figuratively to declare someone an outlaw, to be declared 'rebel at the horn' or 'at the King's horn' is to be outlawed (from the former practice of the King's herald giving 3 blasts on his horn at the Cross of Edinburgh to pronounce the person an outlaw).

the Horn (thu-hörn) n. ridge on the east side of the A7 just before coming to Linhope farm. It is essentially the southern extension of Meg's Hill, and is flanked by Frostlie Burn and Mare Sike.

the Horn Brig (thu-hörn-brig) n. bridge that the A7 takes over the Frostlie Burn just north of Linhope. So named because the stage-coach guard used to sound his trumpet on the approach to Linhope farm. The bridge has been modernised from the original.

Horne (hörn) n. Donald, W.S. (1787–1870) 2nd son of John of Stirkoke. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to his uncle, John Home of Stirkoke, Caithness. He became Writer to the Signet in 1813. He was a keen volunteer in Edinburgh. He acted as Edinburgh agent for the Duke of Buccleuch in the 1830s. He held strongly Conservative political views and was involved in electoral struggles in the years after the passing of the Reform Bill. Before the 1835 election he purchased property in the Borders, splitting into £10 lots and registering people from Edinburgh and elsewhere as 'faggot voters'. As a result he was not entirely popular among Hawick folk, and someone mistaken for him was beaten by the mob at the election. In 1837 it is said that the mob waiting around the Tower Knowe the night before the election threatened to kill him when he arrived (although his name is confusingly given as 'David' in some of the records). His offices in Edinburgh were in Sir Walter Scott's former house. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1836. Later in life he grew deaf and at the Jedforest Club he got up to return his thanks when mishearing a toast to 'the donor of the horn'. In 1821 he married Jane, daughter of Thomas Elliot Ogilvie of Chesters, and she died 13 years later. They had 3 sons, James being the eldest and father of Lord Horne – 'There's honest Horne, a man o' zeal, He'd face the verra diel, Mak's MUSHROOMS spring in ilka biel', To help the cause' [RDW]. Julie 'Jules' (1963–) local writer, born in Hawick and living near Kelso. Her writings have appeared in several anthologies, as well as on the radio and in theatrical performances. She was joint winner of the Robert Louis Stevenson Award in 2002, worked as Associate Playwright for Playwrights' Studio Scotland in the Borders, was attached as a writer to the National Theatre of Scotland and has taught creative writing at the Open University. Writer of many short plays, her first full-length play 'Gorgeous Avatar' was performed at Edinburgh's Traverse Theatre in 2006 and her play 'Allotment' won a Scotsman Fringe First in 2011. She published the books 'Nanonovels, Five-minute Flash Fiction' in 2015 and 'Wrapped Town' in 2016. Neil High School Rector 1993–2006. Peter (b.1938/9) proprietor of Deans & Simpson, stationers in Hawick. He and his wife Margaret Neal retired in 2020, having worked there for more than 40 years. Robert (d.bef. 1690) tenant in Acreknowe. The will of his widow Janet Veitch is recorded in 1690.

Horne Court (hörn-kör) n. former factory and warehouse at 13 Dovecote Street, converted into flats in 1984 and named after W. Horne & Son, the North Bridge Street furnisiers who owned the warehouse for many years. It had earlier been owned by Laidlaw's and by R.G. Maxwell & Co., cloth merchants.

Horne's Pool (hörn-z-pool) n. place on the Teviot near Hawick mentioned in Sir Walter Scott's journal as 'a scene of deep and solemn retirement ... from its having been a daily haunt of a contemplative schoolmaster known to him in his youth'. Scott stopped here with the Wordsworths in 1803. It is surely Hornshole, since it lay between Denholm and Hawick, and here 'a stone bridge crossed the water at a deep and still place' according to Dorothy Wordsworth. However, Scott's story of a former schoolmaster of named Horne is belied by the name of the place going back to at least the 15th century.

the Hornet (thu-hōr-ni) n. joke version of the Cornet, selected on the Saturday night, formerly at the 'Greetin Denner'. He is carried around by the other supporters, using a broom instead of a flag.

hornie (hōr-nee) n., arch. a small horn, diminutive term for a horned animal, the devil, especially in the phrase 'auld hornie'.

hornie-holes (hōr-nee-hōlz) n., arch. a game similar to 'cat and bat', played by 4 people, involving a stick and a hole – 'Hornie-holes. A game in which four play, a principal and an assistant on each side. A. stands with his assistant at one hole, and throws what is called a cat (a piece of stick, and frequently a sheep's horn) with the design of making it alight into another hole at some distance at which B. stands, with his assistant, to drive it aside with a rod resembling a walking-stick, Teviotdale' [JoJ].

Hornie Robbie (hōr-nee-ro-bee) n. nickname of an old Hawick character – 'Baith auld and young are mixed I trow – Rob Lurgie lingers wi' the lave, Caleb and Clinty seem cronies now Wi' Hornie Robbie and Cannie Dave' [HI].

hornin (hōr-nin) n., arch. the process of putting someone 'to the horn' – '...be delyuerance of the lordis of Counsale, of horning, poinding and warding, the ane without preiudice of the vther ...' [SB1599].

Hornshole (hōrnz-hōl) n. site about 2 miles down the Teviot from Hawick, where the river narrows into a deep, dark pool. The name originally applied to a farm on the north side of the river, but is now associated with a small piece of land on the south side of the bridge. Here tradition says that a band of Hawick youths routed a party of English marauding soldiers in 1514, bringing back their flag triumphantly to Hawick. Although it does seem likely to have happened, there is little evidence of historical value relating to the events of that skirmish, or for fixing precisely where it occurred. Nevertheless several speculative accounts of the battle have been written. The first mention of the events in print occurs in Balbirnie's 'Auld Sang', which simply states 'By Teviotside they took this Colour, A dear memorial of their valour'; this dates from around 1800. Hogg's slightly later song, published in 1819, devotes about half of the verses to these events, including an explicit mention of Hornshole, 'Nigh where Teviot falls sonorous, Into Hornshole dashing furious, Lay their foes with spoil encumbered: Quite secure, even sent'nels slumbered'. However, the first detailed account to be published in prose (in Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick') refers to the site of the skirmish as 'the Trows' rather than the more specific 'Hornshole' (this making sense in the days before the bridge). That account (originating with Scott of Burnhead) tells how the Magistrates decided to resist the marauding English group, sending out about 200 people from Hawick, who massacred the roughly 40-strong English force. There is, of course, no evidence to support these numbers, and most likely there were far fewer people involved. And whether it was at the Trows or Hornshole, there is no reason to doubt the basics of the tradition. However, given that existence of the 'chase' of former days from the Bogliebarns (said to re-enact the return with the Flag), it seems likely that the action took place on the south side of the river (consistent with the Trows, or near Hornshole Pool, but not consistent with being on the lands of Hornshole itself). The traditional date of the riding of the marches suggests that the event took place near the end of May, although the letter from Dacre describing English raids was written in mid-May and the full moon (when raids often took place was around the 8th of May in the old-style calendar). In the 15th and 16th centuries the name 'Hornshole' was definitely used for a farm on the nothern/western side of the Teviot, in Hassendean (later Wilton) Parish. There are many variants of the name, including 'Horne's Pool' (probably erroneously) by Dorothy Wordsworth and 'Hornshiel' (in the 17th century). The conflict is said to have taken place on a piece of flat land on the southern side of the river, perhaps near where the monument was erected in 1901 – hence it was perhaps more likely to be at 'the Trows' (Cavers side) rather than 'Hornshole' (Wilton side), although the name may have been used to apply to the pool in the river, rather than the lands on one of the banks. James Turnbull of Hornshole was witness to a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. Adam and Walter Turnbull in Hornshole were allowed to 'componie' for other crimes in 1493. William Douglas of 'hornyshole' is recorded in 1494, being surety for Simon and Matthew Routledge, tenants in the Trows. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1501, Adam Turnbull in 1502 and John Turnbull in 1516. The lands were granted to Thomas, 2nd son of Thomas Turnbull of Minto in 1619. In 1643 the lands were valued at £100 and owned by Rev. John Turnbull of Makerstoun. In the 1663 valuation the owner was William Turnbull. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. The lands were still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. In 1678 the lands were valued along with Brieryyards (in Hassendean Parish) at £360. The bell from Hassendean Church is supposed to have been thrown into the Teviot there during the dispute with Robertson in 1690. At this time the lands were transferred from the suppressed Hassendean Parish to Wilton. John Scott was tenant there in 1694, while Janet Young was listed among the poor. James Muir was living there in 1731 and Walter Riddell in 1737. The Brieryyards mansion house overlooks the pool in the river here, and a bridge was built in 1774. In 1788 the lands were owned by Turnbull of Fenwick (along with Briery Yards). The Cornet's Lass lays a wreath at the monument after the Kirkin on the Sunday before the Common Riding; before 1977 they did this after the Colour Bussing – 'Nigh where Teviot falls sonorous, Into Hornshole dashing furious' [JH], 'The flag for which oor fithers died At Hornshole be Teviotside' [IWL], 'When in Hornshole valley, with sword and shield held tight, Like a phoenix rising from the ashes, We crushed the English might' [GLG] (the name possibly originates from the promontory of land and the deep pool, another possible origin is 'Orm's hole', but that is merely speculation, and it is unclear whether a feature in the river gave its name to the farm or vice versa; there are many spelling variants; it is recorded as 'Hornshole' in 1456, 'Hornishole' in 1488/9, 'Hornishoile' in 1491/2, 'Hornyshole' in 1493 and 1494/5, 'Hornishole' in 1501 and 1502, 'Hornishole' in 1516, 'Hornishill' in 1562/3, 'Horneshoill' and 'Horinsholl' in 1619, 'Hornshoill' in 1640, 'Hornescheill' in 1645, 'Hornesholl' in 1655, 'Hornsholl' in 1663, 'Hornscheill' in 1670, 'hornsholl' in 1678 and 'Hornsholl' in 1694 and 1737; the area in the river is marked 'Horn's Hole' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hornshole (hörnzh-höl) n. song composed by Ian Landles in 2008, written for Song Singer Michael Aitken and performed at a concert held at Thorterdikes that year. The music is essentially a slow foxtrot. The piano arrangement is by Ian Seeley.

Hornshole Brig (hörnzh-höl-brig) n. the bridge at Hornshole, built over the Teviot in 1772–74 with money from neighbouring landowners, assisted by a grant from the Road Trustees. It has a single arch over a narrow stretch of the river, and crosses near a deep pool. Construction was by Adam Scott and John Pott, although Scott gave up following an accident when the framework to build the arch collapsed. The work was hampered by the difficulty of getting materials to the site. Pott died soon after completion, as the result of an injury suffered when removing planks after the bridge was completed. It is a grade C listed building – 'And lang as Hornshole Brig shall stand, That trusty valour through the land ...' [JLH].

Hornshole Hill (hörnzh-höl-hil) n. small hill to the east of Courthill farm, lying high above Hornshole Bridge. This is a reminder that the area formerly called Hornshole was on the Wilton/Hassendean side of the the Teviot (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hornshole Monument (hörnzh-höl-mo-new-min) n. monument erected in 1901, on a small piece of land near Hornshole, gifted by Capt. Palmer-Douglas of Cavers, and paid for with money left over from the 'Return to Hawick' painting subscriptions. It was unveiled (by Bailie Lawson's daughter) on the Saturday before Common Riding week, with Mrs. Oliver of Thornwood giving an address and Jed Murray writing a special poem for the occasion. The opening is recorded in a photograph. It is a fairly plain stone monument, 11 feet 3 inches high, sculpted by Robert Robson and inscribed with the phrase '1514 Lest we forget'. In 1977 a plaque was added, reading 'In this vicinity in 1514, the year after the Battle of Flodden, youths from Hawick routed a band of marauding English soldiery and captured their flag'. The monument was replaced by a copy in 2014, along with a new plaque. After the entire site was gifted to the people of Hawick, it was re-landscaped in 2020/1, with designs by Paul Hogarth and Gordon Muir; time capsules were buried under the new set of 28 oak bollards. On the Sunday before the Common Riding, after the Kirkin ceremony, the Cornet's Lass lays a wreath here. And after the ride-out on the Saturday before the Common Riding, the Principals stop here, singing 'Teribus' and standing in their stirrups.

Hornshole Pool (hörnzh-höl-pool) n. pool in the Teviot at Hornshole – '...Stirring the ripples on Hornshole Pool Where Dacre woke to his day of dule' [JYH] (it seems reasonable to suppose that the land on the north side of the river got its name partly from the 'hole' in the Teviot here, and then this name was transferred back to the pool).

the Hornshole Stakes (thū-hōrnz-hōl-stāks) n. race meeting at the Common Riding, started in 1950.

Horny Robbie (hōr-nee-ro-bee) n. nickname for Robert Howieson.

Horsburgh (hors-bu-ru) n. Alexander of that Ilk (1536–91) son of John and Christian Rutherford. His lands were in Peeblesshire. In 1581 he gave sasine of Wester Horsburgh to Andrew, son of Walter Riddell of that Ilk, in the name of his sister Janet Riddell, reserving for himself the liferent of a croft of land; he and his son William witnessed the transaction. In 1588/9 he served as cautioner for John Turnbull of Minto. He married Christian, daughter of William Stewart, 2nd Laird of Traquair and was succeeded by his son Alexander. Alexander of that Ilk (c.1555–1620) son of Alexander. He had sasine for Horsburgh in 1581. He served as Depute Sheriff of Peeblesshire. In 1592 he was cautioner for the good behaviour of Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and John Turnbull of Minto. In 1598 he and Andrew Riddell were cautioners for James Pringle of Galashiels not to carry hagbuts and James Pringle was cautioner for him to to harm a Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1581 he married Jean, daughter of Walter Riddell of that Ilk and she died before 1623. There were complaints that the family did not attend communion and a specific accusation in 1603 that his wife was not attending church; however, it was reported that 'ze Lady Horsburt was diseasit & yf fore could not conveniently conforme to hir housband promeis'. This was presumably all part of the religious schisms of the times. His brother William slew the son of the minister, James Douglas, and the whole family had a feud with the ministers allies, the Lairds of Haldane and Gledstains. Also in 1603 he was one of the sureties for Thomas Ker of Cavers. In 1604 he was surety for the whole town of Peebles. He was succeeded by his son Alexander, although he was known for his beligerence, even attacking his own brothers. Alexander of that Ilk (1753–1829) son of John and Elizabeth Rutherford. In 1778 he married Violet (d.1834), daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, the marriage taking place at Knowe and being proclaimed in Innerleithen. Through his wife he came into possession of the lands of the Turnbells of Knowe. in 1834. He was served heir to to Pirn and Horsburgh in 1779 and to 'Tounheid of Hassendean' in 1787. In 1788 he was listed under 'Votes of Rutherford of Edgerston' among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was involved with Thomas Turnbull (his brother-in-law) in dispositions regarding lands at Hassendean Common in 1789. His children (baptised in Innerleithen) included: John (b.1779), who died young; Susan (1780), who married Walter Scott of Raeburn; Elizabeth (b.1781); Jean (b.1782); Charlotte (b.1784); Violet (b.1785); Thomas (b.1787), who succeeded, but died unmarried; Alexander (b.1788); Samuel Mitchelson (b.1789); and Mary Nisbet (b.1791). Alexander (b.1825/6) farmer at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 158 acres there, employing 5 people. He was still recorded there in 1868. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. John of that Ilk (1704–74) from the family based around Peebles and Innerleithen and who would eventually inherit the estates of Turnbull of Knowe. He was involved with a court action and 'letters of horning and poinding' against Rev. George Hall of Abbotrule in 1735, to recover a loan. There was a similar action against Thomas Watson, Clerk of the Regality of Hawick in 1757. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Peeblesshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Rutherford of Edgerston and that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Alexander, who married Violet, daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. John (18th C.) local thatcher. In 1758 he was hired to thatch the roof of Hobkirk Kirk with broom. William (b.1800/1) born in Cavers Parish, he worked on farms in Robertson Parish. He was farmer at Hoscoteshiel in 1841, 'Drainer' at Howpasley in 1851 and agricultural labourer at Old Howpasley in 1861. He married Mary Jackson, and their children included: Janet (b.c.1833); Walter (b.1835); James (b.1838); Elizabeth (b.1840); William (b.1842); and Adam (b.1845).

the Horse (thū-hors) n. the equestrian statue standing at the east end of the High Street, erected by public subscription in 1914, and properly known as the 1514 Memorial. Despite being colloquially called 'the Horse', it is of course the rider and the flag that are of most significance. It is a life-size bronze statue, on a stone plinth, designed by William Beattie (his plaster model of 1913 being in the Museum), cast by J.W. Singer & Sons. It was unveiled by Lady Sybil Scott (daughter of the Duke of Buccleuch) on the afternoon before the Colour Bussing in 1914, as part of the Quater-centenary celebrations (and the unveiling ceremony was filmed). The inscriptions were completed by Thomas Beattie in 1921. It also now gives its name to the open street area surrounding it, which was previously known as Central Square. Since 1923 it has been publicly bedecked with blue and gold ribbons by the Cornet after the Colour Bussing ceremony (filmed at least as early as 1929). The horse that modelled the statue was well-known for being able to keep still, but apparently a bucket was used to rest its front foot on! The face of the rider was apparently modelled on that of A.H. Drummond, Cornet of 1888. The monument was moved slightly in 2003 as part of traffic re-routing, and had an extra base added. A 'time-capsule' from 1914 was discovered, and another was buried there in 2005. In 2004 the plinth was removed from the base to try to curb vandalism problems. In 2014 the memorial was cleaned (funded by the Mosstroopers' Club and supervised by Beltane Studies), revealing details that had not been seen for many decades, including fringes on the flag and the sculptor's signature. The inscription on the base reads 'Merses Profundo Pulchrior Evenit', which is from Horace Odes, 4.4.65, and translates literally as 'Plunged in the depths, he emerges more magnificent', paraphrased perhaps as 'You can't keep a good man down!' (here 'Merses' may also be a play on the Merse). It is a grade A listed building. There are some existing photographs of the construction process – '...And the Horse is there, and the Callant Wi' the brave flag held high' [WL], 'Now Hawick's aye chowked wi' cars, And the plan that wad relieve eet, Means hevin' ti move the Horse, Whaever wad believe eet' [IWL].

the Horse an Hoonds (thu-hors-an-hoonz, -howndz) n. country pub in Bonchester Bridge, just before the bridge, at Bridge-end. It was established as a coaching inn in 1701, but a new building was erected there by James Chisholme of Hobsburn in the early years of the 19th century. It was originally intended as a house and joiner's shop, but soon became a major stop on the Hawick to Newcastle road, which was opened in the 1820s. Robert Turnbull was the first proprietor of the new pub at that time. James Rutherford was proprietor around 1900. It was for a horse-cloth (hors-kloth) n., arch. a cloth used to cover a horse, particularly the special funerary cloth hired out from the Kirk Session when a horse was needed to transport a body a great distance for burial. There are several mentions of this in the Hawick Parish records of the 18th century – 'Received from Singlie for the horsecloath, £1 16s' [PR], 'Mrs. Scott the bestcloath wt the hors clos for her husband, Mr. Scot of Harwood, £4 10s' [PR] (cf. mort-cloth).

horse-knops (hors-nops) n., arch. the knapweed, Centaurea nigra.

Horselee (hors-lee) n. former farmstead in the Slitrig valley on the opposite side of the river from Newmill-on-Slitrig, lying near the Horsley Burn. At the Reformation it was part of the Lordship of Winnington, being listed among the lands owned by the Hamiltons in 1610. It was among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. It was listed among the lands owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in 1657 and still part of the Barony in the late 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. James Hogg, Walter Cavers and James Reid were there in 1694. Walter Scott was there in 1720. It was valued at £136 12s 3d in 1788 when disjoined from other parts of the Stobs estate. The farm may be the ruin and enclosure marked in the area on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but of which no sign remains; it is listed as the site of a hill-fort in 1863. Robert Turnbull was there in 1682. In 1684 the tenant (William Armstrong) was among the local men fined for attending conventicles. Francis Aitkin was there in 1789–90. Michael and John Broad are recorded as farmers there in 1797 and James Broad in 1799. It was still recorded among the farms of Elliott of Stobs in 1813, when still valued at £136 (marked on Stobie's 1770 map; also spelled 'Horselee', 'Horseley', 'Horselie' and 'Horsley'; it is 'Horslie' in 1610, 1657 and 1694, 'Horselie' in 1684 and 'Horsly' in 1720; the origin of the name is obscure; there is no obvious connection with Horsleyhill, except that closely related Eliotts/Eliotts once owned both).

Horselee Burn (hors-lee-burn) n. Horsley Burn, stream that runs in a westerly direction to join the Slitrig Water at Colislinn.

Horsemanford

Horsemanford (hors-mun-fōrd) n. farmstead in the Hermitage valley, just south-east of Gorenberry. Robert Knox and his family lived there in 1861 (it is on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Horse Park (hors-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was listed in 1779 (and in 1811) with a value of £34 11s 6d and a rental of £9 9s. It was said in 1780 to be possessed (probably as a tenant) by William Thomson (it is 'Horse-park' in 1780).

Horse Park (hors-pawrk) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Probably the lands of the same name were those listed as part of the Bonjedward estate in 1707.

the Horse Pool (thu-hors-pool) n. pool in the Teviot at the bend near Teindside Cottage (also written 'the Horsepool'; perhaps this was a place where horses could be washed).

the Horse Tax Rolls (thu-hors-tawks-rōlz) n. farm horse tax rolls, listing the names of owners of work horses, the register taken in 1797 and 1798. It forms a useful list of the farmers and merchants in and around Hawick at the end of the 18th century.

the Horsewaird (thu-hors-wārd) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. In 1683 a piece of land in Craigend, called 'lie Grassland' is mentioned being in the ward of 'Horsewaird'. A dyke there is mentioned in the 1695 charter to Gideon Scott of Highchester when describing how it bordered a piece of land at Minto Mains, with Craigend house at the other end. Among the lands inherited by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1778 was 'the inclosure called Horsewaird'.

Horsleyhill (hors-lee-hil) n. farm and area around it, about 3 miles north-east of Hawick, between Clarilaw and Hassendean. The estate seems to have been owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 15th century, and was inherited through marriage by the Elliots about 1555. Gavin Elliot was listed as a tenant there in 1551, and was probably great-grandson of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill (whose daughter and heir married William Elliot of Larriston). In 1555 Alexander, Lord Home (superior of Hassendean) granted a charter, on wadset and reversion, to Gavin Elliot. However, there was some kind of local dispute between the Elliots and the Scotts, culminating in the murder in 1564 of David Scott of

Hassendean, with the Horsleyhill Elliots playing a leading role, and several of them being executed as a result. In 1616 it was also called 'Wester Hassendean, with tower, fortalice, etc.' when it was sold by the Earl of Home to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. It was sold by the 7th Elliot Laird to Elliott of Stobs in the mid-17th century and passed again to the Scotts. 'Mar. Scott, gudewife of Hosliehill' is recorded as owner of lands valued at £637 in 1643. William Scott was Laird in 1663 and Robert Scott in 1678, when the land was still valued at £637. William Collin was living there in 1682 and John Renwick in 1688. The Scotts of Horsleyhill were a prominent local family, who had a house at the top of Walters Wynd, still partly surviving at 51 High Street; 'The Laird of Horslihill' was taxed for 4 heaths in Hawick in 1694. The Scotts of Horsleyhill also held lands in the eastern part of Hawick (perhaps just to the north of the Little Haugh) until sold to Walter Purdom in the early 18th century, as well as land in Weensland and elsewhere. The lands became part of Minto Parish after Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. Householders (probably tenants) on the farm in 1694 were John Noble, John Turnbull and Thomas Knox. Others listed among the cottars and poor there were George Knox, Bessie Turnbull, William 'Culling', Agnes Knox, George Hood, William Aitken, Robert Scott, John Knox and Janet Gray. Archibald Elliot was there in 1710. The road was improved around 1773 to connect to the Turnpike road at 'the Nitton'. By 1788 the land had been split into the 'North-end of Horsliehill' (owned by Robert Dickson, valued at £382) and 'South-end of ditto' (owned by Archibald Dickson, valued at £255). 'Messrs Ainslies' were farmers there in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. Joiner Adam Kersel was recorded there in 1797 and 1798. William Boyd was there in 1798. William Scott and Hugh Rutherford were servants there in 1799. The residents in 1801 included Archibald Dickson and servants Robert Lawson, Robert Miller and Adam Leyden. A resident from here is reported to have turned up at the muster in Jedburgh during the False Alarm of 1804; despite not being a Volunteer, being dressed in his work clothes and having an old gun, he was sworn in on the spot. It was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, when the south part was owned by Robert Dickson (valued at £255), while the north part was owned by Archibald Dickson's heirs (valued at £382). Andrew Hall was there in 1861. There was preumably once a peel tower there, but there was already no sign of it by 1845. In the early-to-mid 20th century the farm at Horsleyhill was known as a local dairy farm. In 1991 a group of 56 Edwardian coins was found in a field there – ‘He turned him now from Teviotside, And, guided by the tinkling rill, Northward the dark ascent did ride, And gained the moor at Horsliehill’ [SWS] (also spelled ‘Horsliehill’, ‘Horseley Hill’ and other variants; it is ‘Horslehill’ in 1561/2, 1563 and 1564, ‘Horslihill’ in 1573, ‘Horslehill’ in 1581, ‘Horslehill’ in 1604, ‘Horsliehill’ in 1605 and 1678, ‘horslihill’ in 1682, ‘Horslawhill’ in 1688, ‘Horslihill’ in 1690 and 1710, ‘Horseliehill’ in 1797 and ‘Horsleyhill’ in 1811; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Huslawhill’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin is uncertain, although some connection with horses seems obvious).

Horsleyhill Cottages (hors-lee-hil-ko’ee-jeez) n. collection of cottages to the south of Horsleyhill, essentially the same as the place formerly called Westerhouses. The Deans family were joiners there in the 19th century.

Horsleyhill Port (hors-lee-hil-pōr) n. former name for the North Port at Walter’s Wynd, or for the street itself.

Horsleyhill’s Wynd (hors-lee-hilz-wīnd) n. former name for Walter’s Wynd, until the mid-18th century. It was named for the town house of the Scotts of Horsleyhill, which was at the top of the street. Fixing of ‘the port in Horslee Hills Wynd’ is recorded in 1704.

Horseliehill see Horsleyhill

Hoscoat see Hoscote

Hoscote (hos-ko) n. estate in the Borthwick valley, about 6 miles from Hawick, with the entrance gates and lodge on the main road at Deanburnhaugh. ‘Wautier de Holcote’, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 could have been an early owner (if this is a transcription error). The lands were resigned by ‘Adam of Hodholme’ in the early 14th century and bestowed upon William Barbour by Robert the Bruce. It then appears to have been part of the holdings of the Scotts of Buccleuch and Rankleburn, but in 1410 was probably the ‘Thoftcotys’ (or ‘Thostcotys’) granted to Sir William of Borthwick on resignation by Robert Scott. It was recorded being west of Milsington in 1451. The lands were resigned by Robert Turnbull of Hoscote into the hands of their superior William Lord Borthwick and then conferred upon Alexander Master of Home in 1493/4. David Turnbull was recorded there in 1494/5. The Laird was fined in 1502 for failing to give suit for his lands at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk; however, the name of that Laird is not recorded. The lands were gained by Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme in 1516 through forfeiture of Alexander, Lord Home. However, by 1535 there was a revocation of the previous charter, and so Hoscote appears to have passed to George, Lord Home, with William, Lord Borthwick as superior. In 1551 it was inherited by Alexander, 5th Lord Home, the lands described as ‘worth 3 merks yearly are held in chief of John Lord Borthwick for service due and wont’. And in 1555/6 Alexander Lord Home summoned William Scott of Harden to appear at Melrose Abbey to receive £40 Scots as redemption of these lands (suggesting it passed to the Scotts of Harden). William Elliot and Gavin Elliot appear to have been tenants there in 1579/80 and William again in 1583/4. The farms of ‘Hoscot’ and ‘Hoscotrig’ were owned by Wat Scott of Harden in 1580 when they were attacked by a group of Elliots and Armstrongs; they stole ‘four scoin ky and oxin, sex horse and meris, and the insicht and plennening of four of his pure tennentis houssis’. ‘Will Elliot of Hoistcoitt or Fallinesche’ was recorded in 1586, among chiefs in Teviotdale. ‘William Elliot of Harscat’ was handed over as a prisoner to the English Warden in 1595/6 and probably the same ‘Will of Hescottes an Elwood’ was a Scottish pledge who escaped from prison in York in 1600; it seems likely he was tenant in Hoscote. In 1643 Sir William Scott of Harden was served heir to his great-grandfather William’s 40-shilling land there, and then the land was inherited by Sir William Scott in 1676. There were 14 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely John Elliot, William Scott, Janet Elliot, Francis Scott, Margaret Clerk, Bessie Scott, Robert Elliot, Agnes Scott, John Govenlock, Joan Glendinning, Adam Glendinning, Marion Andrew, William Davidson and Bessie Davidson. Walter Chisholme was there in at least 1703–10, Robert Fletcher in 1710 John ‘Huotson’ and Thomas Cairns in 1711–16, John Cathrae and John Murray in 1712 and 1718, Adam Dalgleish in 1718, Thomas Cairns and Walter Grieve in 1721 and Simon Nichol in 1725. It was long a seat of the Scotts and was tenanted by the Ogilvies (Chamberlains to the Duke’s of Buccleuch) in the early 18th century. On the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, some lands in Liddesdale (between Foulshiels and Netherraw, around Hartgarth) were shown belonging to the Laird of Hoscote. In about 1723 Hoscote was sold to Adam Pott, and on his death passed to his son George. On George Pott’s death it was split between his nephews John Grieve and George Stavert, and later was entirely acquired by George's brother Adam Stavert. The estate was in the parish of Wilton until Robertson was formed in 1689. It is also in the part of the Borthwick valley that was once in Selkirkshire. John Henderson was recorded there in 1781–87 and Robert Brown in 1792. The teinds of Robertson, Howcleuch and Hoscote were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 and 1802, while John Grieve paid the land tax on £200 in 1785 and Adam Stavert in 1802. The present house was built in 1858 and is situated in a 600 acre estate. Surprisingly, the name of the architect does not seem to be known, but it appears to be in a similar style to Wilton Lodge, which was renovated around the same time. There is a photograph of the house and estate in 1893. It is now used for corporate meetings and other functions, sleeping 17 (also spelled 'Hoscoat' well into the 19th century, as well as 'Housecoates', etc. earlier; the name first appears in 1451 as 'lee Hostcotis', and is transcribed as 'Thoscot' in 1493/4, 'hotcotis' in 1494/5, 'host cotte' in 1502, 'Hostcot' in 1516, 'Hoscotts' in 1522, 'Hoscottis' in 1535, 'Hoscotes' in 1551, 'Hoscoat' in 1555/6, 'Hoistcoit' in 1579/80, 'Hostcoitt' in 1583/4, 'Hosctcott alias Howscot' in 1612, 'Hoscot' in 1643, 'Hoscottis' in 1650, 'Hoscoat' in 1676, 'Horscoat' in 1691, 'Hosscot' in 1705, 'Hoscots' in 1710 and 1713, 'Horsquots' in 1711, 'Huscoat' in 1718, 'Hoscott' in 1721, 'Hoscoats' in 1737, 'Hoskit' in 1738, 'Hoscatt' in 1761, 'Hoscoat' in 1781, 'Hoscat' in 1797, 'Hosecote' in 1811, 'Hosecoat' in 1821, perhaps also being the 'Hoscroce' in 1535; it is marked on a parish map of 1650 as 'Hoscote', on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Hostcott', with 'Hostcothill' farm above and is also on Adair's c. 1688 manuscript map, although almost illegible, and is 'Hosket' on Ainslie's 1773 map; the origin is probably Middle English 'host' meaning a place providing lodgings to travellers on a main road, combined tautologically with Old English 'cot', although it may also be related to the earlier names 'Yrostilcotis', of 1351, and 'Thoftcotys', of 1410, which may be the same area).

Hoscote Burn (hos-ko'-burn) n. stream running into the Borthwick Water from the west, joining near Hoscote House. It forms part of the boundary line of the Catrail. It is fed by several smaller streams, including Girnwood Linn, Loch Sike, Black Sike and Mid Sike.

Hoscote Hoose (hos-ko'-hoos) n. house on Hoscote estate. The present building was erected in 1858 for John Stavert. It was probably designed by the Edinburgh architects Brown and Wardrop. From 1937 it was the home of Maj. John Dunlop, who was appointed to run Lyle & Scott's as an ammunition factory.

Hoscoterig (hos-ko'-rig) n. former farmstead near Hoscote. It was raided by Elliots and Armstrongs in 1580. It is unclear exactly where this was (it is recorded as 'Hoscotrig' in 1580).

Hoscoteshiel (hos-ko'-sheel) n. former stead above Girnwood in the Borthwick valley, being near the end of the Catrail. Thomas Glendinning was there in 1756. In 1797 the farmers there were Thomas Brydon, Mary Park and William Gladstone. John Broad was there in 1800 and James Ferguson in 1812. William Horsburgh was farmer in 1841 (also written 'Hoscote Shiel'; it is 'Hosketshiel' on Ainslie's 1773 map and 'Hoscatshiel' in 1797).

hosel (hō-sul) n., arch. the socket of a spade, hoe or other implement into which the shaft fits.

hosier (hō-shur, -zee-ur) n. a maker of stockings, once a large fraction of Hawick's workforce – 'Lord Minto is coming, huzza! huzza! Lord Minto is coming, huzza! huzza! Lord Minto is coming, The hosiers are running, To draw him in his carriage away, way, way' [BY].

hosiery (hō-shu-ree) n. stockings, stocking making and knitted garments in general. Knitting socks was once an important domestic activity. The industry began in Hawick with the introduction of the first 4 stocking frames by John Hardie in 1771, building upon the successful carpet and inkle manufacturing. In a description of Hawick's trade in about 1777 (by David Loch) it was stated that Hardie had 14 frames and James Halden had 2. Hosiery manufacturing was soon expanded by John Nixon, around 1780, along with other firms shortly afterwards. Originally the industry was based on linen and worsted, but after about 1785 it moved over to lambswool. In 1791 it is reported that there were 12 frames in Hawick, that the trade employed 14 men and 41 women, and that 4099 pairs of stockings were produced. A Hawick Hosiers banner, with painted date 1797, may be one of the oldest existing trades society banners in Britain. By 1800 there were 22 men employed in the trade, with an average wage of 8 shillings and 4 pence. In 1824 there were 8 mills with 20 sets of machines, and in 1826 it was stated there were 500–600 stocking frames in the Town.

Broad frames were first introduced in 1827, allowing shirts and underwear to be more easily made. In the early days the frames were in houses or small stocking-shops, with children assisting with winding etc. Usually the frames were each located by a window, since the work needed good light, and the machines were operated by the use of foot treadles, with the workers sitting on high stools. By 1837 there were 14 mills with 40–50 sets of machines, employing about 200 people. Firms expanded rapidly and quickly branched out into woollen underclothing generally. The move to larger factories came with the advent of power-driven frames in the early 19th century. It is said that in the 1840s 2,000 of Scotland's 2,600 knitting frames were located in the Borders, and more than half of those were in Hawick, producing more than a million pairs of stockings per year. By the mid-19th century Hawick was the centre of Scotland's hosiery industry. Around that time workers commonly had a 60 hour work week and were paid fortnightly, with few holidays. Boys and girls started work legally at 13, but were often younger. By the late 1860s there were 900 frames in Hawick, but they produced up to 6 pieces at a time. A strike in 1872 improved working conditions, and largely saw an end to the practice of workers renting frames from their employers. This grew into the present knitwear industry, which has employed a large fraction of the town's labour for over 200 years. The word 'hosiery' is still used to refer to the local industry, although it has focussed on outer garments for several generations. The last hose were manufactured in Hawick in the 1920s. The last stockings were manufactured in Hawick in about 1966, after which the term 'knitwear' became preferred – '... For there lay Dye – still haudin' his flag – But as flat as a hosiery board!' [DH].

the Hosiery Company (thu-hō-shu-ree-kum-pi-nee) n. co-operative hosiery company that formed in 1872 with premises in the Kirk Wynd, and ran until 1881.

hotels (hō-telz) n., pl. Hawick has had many hotels through the years, although many establishments that called themselves 'hotel' or 'inn' were probably simply pubs. There was also a fashion for Temperance Hotels in the last half of the 19th century. A list of genuine hotels might include: Bridge Hoose Hotel; the Buccleuch Hotel; the Central Hotel; the Croon Hotel; the Elm Hoose Hotel; the Imperial Hotel; the Kings Hotel; Kirklands; the Mansfield Hoose Hotel; the Station Hotel; the Toor Hotel; the Victoria Hotel; the Washington Hotel.

Hotson (hot-sin) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Mary Byers in Ewes Parish in 1716. George (1651/2–1728) tenant in Netherraw. His children included John (1702/3–47). He could be the George, son of William Hotson and Jean Scott, born in Hawick Parish in 1645. John (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His surname is written as 'Hotson'. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Liddelbank on the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. He was at Dinwoodie according to the 1801 ballot, where his surname was written 'Hutson'. Probably the same John married Kitty Forsyth and their children included: William (b.1797); Walter (b.1799); John (b.1803); John (b.1806); Robert (b.1808); Janet (b.1811); and Helen (b.1815). Robert (19th/20th C.) farmer at Effledge. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Jean Elliot and their children included: William (b.1702); and John (b.1704). Janet (b.1707) and James (b.1711), baptised in Hawick with no mother's name given, are probably also his children. The witnesses in 1702 were John Elliot in Nether Southfield and William Henderson in Flex. Walter (17th C.) resident at Barnes in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear if his surname may be a variant of some more common name. He could be the Walter, son of Robert and Isabell Davidson born in Hawick Parish in 1653. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Acreknowe in Kirkton Parish. His children included Janet (b.1719) and Walter (b.1721) (the surname is perhaps a variant of Howieson, Howison or Whutson).

hott (hot, ho') n., arch. a small heap of soil or manure – 'Going over to Hawick Shiells they found that — Scott, tenant there, had ploghd. up ane march corner hott standing upon the nortt side of said Common' [BR1717], '... there were little mounds, 'hotts' or hillocks of old turf' [C&L], '... there was a gey little hote o muilleens left for Lazarus!' Hott (hot, ho') n. former farm above Harwood, between Slaidhill and Branhholme Muir, containing Hott Hill. It was listed as 'the Hott' in the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627, estimated to pay 'in stok 50 merks, in teynd 10 merks'. William Davidson was tenant there in 1702. George Wilson was recorded there in 1722 and Walter Little was herd there in 1725. It is shown on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, although it was not owned by them at that time. Walter Cavers was the herd there in 1797 (it is probably the place marked 'Nutt' on Blaeu's c.1654 map; a building at 'Hott' is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

hotter (ho'-ur, ho-tur) v., arch., poet. to bump around, move in a jerky way, walk unsteadily, bump around (as on a cart), to simmer – 'Twa oors to boil, a wee hotter, And there's a broth, a king to feed' [WL], n. a confused heap of anything.

hottery (ho'-u-, ho-tu-ree) adj., arch. bumpy, in a jolting way, uneven (of a road) – 'It was at ma tung-ruits ti cry on the hoattery affair, for fear it was ma hinmaist chance o a cairrie ti Haaick' [ECS] (also written 'hoattery').

Hott Hill (hot-hil) n. hill to the west of Newmill, and just south-east of Branhholme Wester Loch, height 312 m. Another unnamed peak to the west reaches a height of 326 m. The former farmstead of 'the Holt' on Harwood estate is surely connected.

hot trod (hot-trod) n. a hot pursuit in rieving days, referring to the law allowing people who had been robbed to raise support within a fixed time, to mount a legal pursuit to recover their property. They could cross the Border if necessary, with the leader brandishing a piece of burning turf on a lance as a symbol (this gave rise to the phrase 'hot to trot'). Rules for reprisals in this manner were outlined, for example, in a treaty of 1549, although it is suspected that the laws were simply used to justify rieving.

houchle (howch-ul) v., arch. to hobble, limp – 'He can scarcely hougel [sic] [GW].

Houd (hood) n. Andrew (b.1815/6) joiner in Denholm in the 1850s, probably on Westside. He married Margaret Nellis, from Chirnside. Their children included John (b.1842), Agnes and Margaret (see also Hood).

Houdshall (howdz-haw) n. former steading on the eastern bank of the Allan Water, west of Burgh Hill and just south of Doecleuch. Agricultural labourer Adam Scott and family were living there in 1818 and again in 1841 (it is 'Houdeshall' in 1841 and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; the pronunciation is uncertain).

hougel (how-gul) v., poet. to shuffle, walk with a shambling gait – 'An' taigl't age now totters in, Though he can scarcely hougel' [JoHa] (cf. hochle).

hough (hoch, howch) n., arch. hock, ankle, joint cut from the shin of a pig or cow, particularly used to make 'potted meat' – '... in regaird he is become valetudinarie and troubled with an uneasiness in his hough and feet whereby he is not able to go up to the usual place of repentance' [PR1721], '... Sit thy ways down a little while Dickie, And a piece o' thy ain cow's hough I'll gi' thee. Fala, &c.' [CPM], 'Though houghs grow thin and chafts fa' in, And hair grows white and scanty' [MG] (from Old English; also hoch).

houghams (ho-chumz) n., pl., arch. a wooden structure to support loads on pack-horses – 'Bent pieces of wood, slung on each side of a horse, for supporting dung-panniers, are called houghams, Teviotdale' [JoJ].

Houghton (haw'-in) n. John (18th/19th C.) clockmaker in Newcastleton. He was listed as a watchmaker in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He married Margaret Telford (1794–1841). Their sons John and Thomas founded the London & Liddesdale Benevolent Society. Thomas, in London, is recorded as a subscriber to David Anderson's book of verse in 1868.

Houghton Park (haw'-in-pawrk) n. street in the north of Newcastleton village. It was named after John Haughton (or Houghton), watchmaker in Newcastleton in the 19th century.

Howa (how-u) n. former estate in Hobkirk Parish roughly to the west of the Kirk, containing the farm of Howahill and the former farms of Howabank and Howashiel. Walter Turnbull 'of Howay' is recorded in 1530 and Watt Turnbull 'in Howa' in 1565. In 1606 George Turnbull there was involved with raiding Appotside and Harwood. Gavin Turnbull in Howa is also recorded in 1606 as part of a feud between Turnbells and the Grahamslaws of Newton. The main house was located on a dry hill with a spring at its foot, not far from the present farm of Howahill; by the 19th century there was already no sign of the original house, except for a stand of ash trees. By the 17th century it was part of the extensive Stobs estate. It then became part of the Stonedgie estate, being sold to Adam Scott in the early 18th century. In the 1800s a bronze pot was found in a drain and a battle-axe in an adjoining field (recorded as as 'Hova' in the earliest documents, e.g. in 1567, it is 'Howe' in 1606 and 1677; it is 'Howa' on Blaeu's 1654 map, although it is unclear precisely to which farm this refers).

Howabank (how-u-bawŋk) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, once part of the more extensive farm of Howa and later incorporated into the estate of Hobsburn. Rev. Nichol Edgar is supposed to have convinced a ghost, which had been haunting Hokirk churchyard, to instead walk a straight line between here and Hoddleswoodie.

Howacre (how-ā-kur) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, once owned by the Riddells of that Ilk. It is listed in the service of heirs for Sir John Riddell in 1669, the description being 'an acre of land at the east end of the town of Lilliesleaf, called Howaiker'.

Howahill (how-u-hil) n. farm south-west of Bonchester, once part of the estate of 'Howa'. It is now the main farm in this area, where there were formerly several separate steadings. Walter Deans was tenant there in the mid-18th century and his son Thomas Deans was farmer there in 1797. Walter Taylor was farmer in the 1860s and Robert Elder in the early 1900s (the area is recorded as as 'Howa' on Blaeu's 1654 map, while the modern farm location is on Stobie's 1770 map).

Howard (how-urd) n. John (1726–90) English prison reformer. He spent 2 nights in Hawick in the late 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson). Sent away from the Black Bull, he stayed at the King's Head (run by Nelly Dickson) and attended the East-end (Burgher) meeting house (which was then without a permanent minister), and apparently gave largely to the collection. He may also have attended Dr. Young's church service (although this could be confusion). His ideas on improving prison conditions were not taken up until the 19th century, with Jethart Jail being one of the best preserved examples of a 'Howard Reform Prison'. Thomas Earl of Surrey (1473–1554), son of Thomas, he was also 3rd Duke of Norfolk, and known locally as 'Surrey'. He married Anne Plantagenet, becoming brother-in-law to Henry VII. He fought at Flodden and became Earl of Surrey in 1514, when his father was made Duke of Norfolk. He then led devastating raids on the Scottish Borders, including the burning of Jedburgh in 1523, which he described in a detailed letter. He became a great survivor in the treacherous court of Henry VIII (who married one of his nieces) and unusually for the time, he died of old age. His tomb, bearing his effigy, is in Framlingham Church – 'Shall proud Surrey; shall yon Howards, Tell the king they fought with cowards?' [JH]. Thomas 4th Duke of Norfolk (1536–72), grandson of Thomas the 3rd Duke, he commanded English forces in Scotland in 1559–60. He had several marriages, including one to Lord Dacre's widow. He also proposed marriage to Mary Queen of Scots, was later involved in plots within England and was executed for treason.

Howarth (how-urth) n. Robert (b.1794/5) from Rochdale, he was a grocer near the top of the Back Row, listed on the 1851 census. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a 'broker'. His wife was Catherine and they had sons James and George.

Howashiel (how-u-sheel) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, roughly between Midburn and Highend. It was rented by John Turnbull in the late 18th century. William Glendinning was there in 1797 (marked on Stobie's 1770 map; also referred to as 'Howashiells').

how be (how-bee) prep., arch. how would it do to, what about – 'How be yow clippin the gress the teime A'm sawin the seed?' [ECS], 'Where wull oo gang? Oh, how be gaun owre owre ti Stobs an back be the Crescent?' [ECS] (local idiom, cf. what be).

Howburn (how-burn) n. George (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branhholme, when he died in 1552. He was owed the relatively large sum of 4 pounds and 4 shillings. He was probably related to James who is recorded in 1537. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Wester Belses. In 1502 he was absent from the court in Jedburgh when summoned by the sergeant. He may have been related to Thomas, who had remission in the same year for resetting Thomas Rutherford at Rutherford. John (16th C.) listed in Hawick's 1537 charter as a holder of one particate of land on the south side of the High Street. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Grierson and their son James was baptised in 1651. The witnesses were Lawrence Scott and William Telfer (also written 'Houburn' and 'Howburne').

Howcleuch (how-klooch) n. farm on the left just after Robertson, on the B711. It was owned by a branch of the Scotts from at least the early 16th century. In 1535 Walter Scott of Robertson sold it to his brother Stephen Scott, and Stephen's son John. Lands there called 'Slak et Westsyde de Howcleuch' were described in 1621 as pertinents to the lands of Borthwickbrae. It was owned by the Scotts of Harden from at least 1643. There were 12 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Andrew Wilson, Janet Fletcher, William 'Howatsonne', Margaret Telfer, John Armstrong, Margaret Ballantyne, Adam Little, John Wilson, Simon Wilson, Mary Scott, Walter Hobkirk and Janet Fenwick. James Richardson was there in 1683. It was mentioned in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. A mill there is referred to in the late 17th century. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. William Scott was there in at least 1710–12, Alexander Hislop in 1710, John Stevenson in 1716 and Robert Learmonth in 1717. John Murray was tailor there in 1712. It was sold by Scott of Harden in 1719 and then owned by the Haliburtons (of Jedburgh), perhaps through marriage to the Elliots of Swinside. John Stevenson and Walter Nichol were there in at least 1718–21, Thomas Nichol in 1722, John Anderson in 1725, Walter Turnbull in 1727, Walter Park in 1728, John Hume and John Riddell in 1731, John Pringle in 1733, William Richardson in 1734, George Heatley in 1736, William Laidlaw in 1742, Francis Scott in 1743–57, John Miller in 1743 and Andrew Davidson in 1752. In 1755 it was bought by Walter Scott, farmer at Commonsides, and direct descendant of Walter of Goldielands. It then passed to his 2nd son Charles. James Scott was recorded there in 1756, Francis Scott and Robert Elliot in 1757, Walter Deans in 1762–74, James Thomson in 1764, Robert Chisholme in 1767 John Miller in 1774 and Walter Wilson in 1788. 'Mr. Grieve' is recorded as owner of 2 horses there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. The teinds of Robertson, Howcleuch and Hoscote were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 and 1802, and possessed by the Duke of Buccleuch, while Walter Scott (in 1875) and Charles Scott (in 1802) of Wauchope paid the land tax on £133 6s 8d. At the same time William Elliot of Borthwickbrae owned 'West side of Howcleugh'. Walter Irving was there in 1812 and Thomas Irving in 1821. It was farmed by the Elliots in the 19th century. There is a walled enclosure for the Scotts of Howcleuch in Robertson Cemetery (the name first appears as 'Houclicuch' in 1533; it is also spelled 'Houclicugh', 'Howclicuch', 'Howclicuche', 'Howclicugh', etc.; it is marked on a parish map of 1650, Blaeu's 1654 map records 'W. Houdeuch' and 'E. Houdeuch', presumably transcription errors, while Adair's c. 1688 map shows 'Howclicugh'; the origin is probably Old English 'hoh cloh', meaning 'the ravine by the height').

How Cleuch (how-klooch) n. name for the lower part of the Pinkie Burn in Southdean Parish, before it joins the Jed Water.

Howcleuch Burn (how-klooch-burn) n. stream that passes Howcleuch and joins the Borthwick Water near Borthwickbrae Cottages (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as 'How Cleuch').

Howcleuchshiel (how-klooch-sheel) n. farm beyond Howcleuch, at the end of the 'Hill Road to Robertson'. The residents in 1841 were mason Francis Govenlock and labourer David Storie and their families. There is a stone horse trough at the roadside. The spring flowing into it was used as a source of drinking water well into the 20th century (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

How Dean (how-deen) n. tree-lined stream between Melgund Glen farm and Minto village. It runs south into the Grinding Burn. In 1780 it is recorded that 'Hawdean Syke' formed part of the eastern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park; also 'Howden syke' was listed as part of the boundary of the lands of Minto Townhead.

Howden (how-din, how-den) n. wooded hollow through which the Howden Burn flows, on the north side of Hawick. There are many other Howden's in Britain and several others in the Borders, e.g. a farm a little west of Selkirk and another just south-east of Jedburgh (from Old English 'wooded hollow').

Howden (how-din) n. former tower in Liddesdale, on the east side of the valley a little north of Larriston. The stream there is still known as Howden Cleuch, but there is no evidence of the site of the house. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is valued at 15 shillings, and tenanted by William Nixon, who was also recorded in 1544. 'Hary Niksoun of Howden' is recorded in 1581. 'Dinlabyre and his lands, Lareistoun, Howdown, and Sheipshelden' are recorded in 1632, when possessed (probably meaning tenanted) by Robert Pringle. It was combined with Highhouse, Hightrees, Harden and Burnmouth on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch (it is 'Holden' in 1541 and 'Hawden' in 1544; it is 'Houdenn' on Blaeu's c.1654 map, and marked on Gordon's c. 1650 map and de Wit's c. 1680 map of Scotland as 'Houden').

Howden (how-din) n. former name for land in Minto Parish. It is listed in the 1779 and 1811 Land Tax Rolls along with 'Quarter of Whitefield', valued at £47 11s 3d. It was among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot in 1779.

Howden (how-din) n. area to the south of Jedburgh, around the Howden Burn, with a farm of the same name lying near the headwaters of the stream. There is a triangulation pillar there, at a height of 171 m.

Howden (hoo-, how-din) n. David (1811–73) born in Hawick, he married Alice Hunter Chalmers in 1841 and farmed at Churnside. He emigrated to New Zealand in 1848 as a ploughman-manager and their son John was born on the voyage. He is credited with ploughing the first furrow at Dunedin (with his plough in the museum there). He was first Chairman of the school committee at Green Island Bush, and in recognition of his early services to education the name of School Street was changed to Howden Street in 1953. The couple had 8 children in all. John (18th C.) recorded as butler at Minto House in 1788, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. He was listed as butler and gamekeeper in 1794 and was still butler there in 1797 (also written 'Houden').

Howdenbank (how-din-bawngk) n. name sometimes used for the Anderson Sanatorium, built in 1911 on land overlooking the Howden

Burn (at the eastern end of what is now Silverbuthall) on the site of a more modest earlier sanatorium. The whole area was also known by the same name.

Howdenbank (how-din-bawngk) n. street built in 1965 as the eastern addition to the Silverbuthall scheme. It was named after the nearby Howden Burn.

Howdenburn (how-din-burn) n. name for the area around the Howden Burn, also known as Howden. This was long one of the routes to Selkirk. Sadler Andrew Leggat was living there in 1801. The name was used in the 19th century for the northern end of Wilton Hill. There were 18 households with that address on the 1851 census – '...large crowds lined the Howdenburn road and the skirts of Galalaw Hill, to meet the musicians' [RM], 'How micht I come to the auld toun? Sall I the New Road spurn, And glint the tops of the long lums Frae the brow o' Howdenburn' [WL] (also written 'Howdeanburn', 'Houdenburn', etc.).

the Howden Burn (thu-how-din-burn) n. stream that is the lower part of Stirches Burn, flowing alongside Howdenbank and the A7, in the northern outskirts of Hawick, thereafter running underground to join the Teviot – 'My thochts like carrier doos return Tae wander through the streets at e'en. Frae Haggis-Ha' tae Howden Burn – Frae Miller's Knowes tae Wilton Dean' [HI].

Howden Cleuch (how-din-klooch) n. stream that flows roughly north-west to join the Teviot opposite the farm of Teindside. To the north of the stream are the remains of an earthwork, now almost obliterated by ploughing.

Howden Cleuch (how-din-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, on the east side of the Liddel about mid-way between Burnmouth and Larriston.

howdie (how-dee) n., arch. a local woman who acts as unofficial midwife, traditionally also in charge of cutting the whole cheese that was given for luck after birth, up until the 19th century – 'She had neirly flung the sportsmen a', An' howffed i' the howdie's biggin' [WiSp].

howdie-fee (how-dee-fee) n., arch. a small amount of money traditionally given to a child at a private baptism, when bread, cheese and whisky were partaken of by guests.

howe (how) n., arch. a hollow or depression, a low lying area, often surrounded by hills, a valley, glen – '...An' we hae dannert i' the howes where flowers were ever fair' [JoHa], 'Hei was awanteen threh eis weel-leikeet Aibbey doon i the howe' [ECS], 'And grassy howes, and fairy knowes – The playground of the Callant’ [MG], ‘Yet sweet Tee’otdale to me Wi’ its howes and haughs an’ a’ ...’ [TK], ‘Old tales of glamour, love and glee Lurk ’mong our heights and howes ...’ [JT], ‘Or step I by howe or hill-pass Or come I the High Road through, The leal hands haud oot a welcome, The sib herts still beat true’ [WL], ‘Is their crack o’ simmer ploys: story baths, Hotchin and croonin in howes i the grund ...’ [DH], ‘And then a lover’s hill, and the courting of a lass in the heathery howe’ [DH], the middle or depths of something – ‘In the howe o’ the year’ [JAHM], ‘the howe o the nicht’ meant between about midnight and 3 a.m., ‘the howe o the wunter’ was from November to January, adj., arch. empty – ‘... And read a solemne litanye, With a voice baithe sture and howe’ [JTe], hungry, starved – ‘In A gaed ti fill ma empy keite, for my certies! A was howe!’ [ECS] (once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong; the word also appears in several place names, e.g. Howcleuch, Howden, Howford, Howlands, Howpasley and Hobbieshowe).

howe (how) v., arch. to hoe – ‘The lad that howes the Lum-Back neeps Richt cheerily he plies his paidle’ [DH], n., arch. a hoe – ‘... Wi’ blunt auld fingers calloused frae the howe’ [DH].

Howcleuch see Howcleuch

Howedykes (how-dīks) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Howdykis’, with a value of 18 pence, and with no tenant at that time. It is unclear where these lands were located.

the Howe Ford (thu-how-fōrd) n. former name for the ford near the modern Parkdaill, which was used to cross the Teviot to reach the Borthwick valley. The name derived from it being the lowest crossing point in the area.

the Howegate (thu-how-gā) n. one of the oldest streets in Hawick, leading up from the Sandbed to the Loan, which was formerly the course of the main road to Carlisle. There was once a minor gate at the bottom, leading to Silver Street and the Auld Brig. There also used to be a public well at the foot of the street on the south side. The spelling was ‘Howgate’ until the latter part of the 19th century. It was extensively and sympathetically redeveloped in the period 1980–85, by Aitken & Turnbull, beginning with the east side, and is part of Hawick’s conservation area, this work winning several awards. At the back of 7A is an inscription with the letters ‘DA’ in a square and the date 1855. In about 1931 a stone cross was discovered under old plaster of No. 15, perhaps associated with a right-of-way to St. Mary’s along Needle Street. The house visible at the back of No. 18 is surely one of the oldest in Hawick. 10 pottery and clay pipe fragments found in developers’ trenches are in the Museum. No. 2 housed Pete Gow’s greengrocer’s shop in the mid-20th century and Murray the grocer was at No. 20. Much of the street is grade C listed (the origin has been suggested to be related to the Mote, but more likely is Old English for ‘way to the hollow’).

Howegate (how-gā) n. former name for a triangular piece of land bounded by Galalaw (Miller’s) Knowes, Orchard Road and an old dyke. The name is the same as the other Howegate, and appeared in valuation rolls until the early 20th century (also probably from Old English; sometimes formerly written ‘Howegates’ and ‘Howgate’).

Howepasley see Howpasley

howf (howf) n. a meeting place, haunt, particularly a pub – ‘The quarters of the Hawick carriers in the Grassmarket was a great howf of Wull’s’ [WNK], ‘... ane saufe hie-plece for the oppresset; ane saufe hie-howff in times o’ trouble’ [HSR], ‘The heich hills ar ane howff for the wild-gæets, an’ the roks for the rabbits’ [HSR], ‘The Reuch Sike ... a guid name for a fiddler’s howff, I’ve aye thocht, sin syne’ [DH], ‘His howffs ir the Level at denner time, ...’ [IWL], ‘One of the best known howfs was Jean Renwick’s ...’ [??], used figuratively for a hovel-like or disreputable state – ‘She saw them wha she’d envied sair, Mothers, wi’ minds the houfs o’ care’ [JoHa], v., arch. to frequent a place, haunt, take shelter – ‘He drave down the maukins to howff ’mang the whins’ [HSR], ‘She had neirly flung the sportsmen a’, An’ howffed i’ the howdie’s biggin’ [WiSp], ‘... and whae was aye a welcome visitor aboot the mills, where he howfed ...’ [BCM1880] (also written ‘howff’ and ‘houf’; probably from Dutch or Flemish).

Howford (how-fōrd) n. farm near Ettrickbridge, once a home of part of the Scott family. It was formerly referred to as the middle steading of Langhope (perhaps referring to the Langhope over the hill towards the Ale Water). John Scott and Thomas Tweedhope are recorded in 1494/5 having some of their sheep stolen from there. In 1510 the feu passed from Sir William Cranston to Alexander Scott. Alexander Scott held the 6-pound lands there in 1512. The lands were claimed by Robert Scott in 1541, paying £25. Robert Scott of Howford is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch, and was said to have been given the lands of 'Cowdhouse' (i.e. Coldhouse) for his service. Walter Scott of 'Howfuird' married Marie, sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres in 1615. 'Howfoordmill' was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. Thomas Inglis (member of Ashkirk Kirk) lived there in 1762. James Murray was tenant at Howford Mill in the early 19th century. There is another Howford near Traquair – 'Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whit-slade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me' [WSB], '... A song to the pebbles to speed their way, And the sorrel horse went stiff of his wound As he climbed the steep of the Howford brae ...' [WHO] (also formerly written 'Howfoord', 'Howfuirde', 'Howfurde', etc.; it appears to be marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Noufurd').

Howford Haugh

Howford Haugh (how-fōrd-hawch) n. former name for the ground on the south side of the Coble Pool, i.e. roughly the present location of the High School.

Howford Sike (how-fōrd-sīk) n. stream on the south side of the Borthwick valley near Whithope farm. The smaller streams of Whithope Sike and Holm Sike join to form it near Whithope (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Howgate see Howegate

Howgill (how-gil) n. former name for lands in the Ewes valley, possibly at the modern Hoghill. There were Armstrongs there in the 16th century. Along with Flask and Glendivan it was described as a 10-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It is listed as part of the lands of Ewesdale about 1610. It is listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 476 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Cooms, Flask, Over Wrae and Glendivan. Adam Jardine was there in 1783. There were Jacksons and Lewises there in 1841 and A. Stevenson was farmer in the 1860s (it is probably the 'Howgilsyd' recorded in 1611; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map, with 2 other places of the same name on the Tinnis Water to the east; it is 'Hogel' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Hougill' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Howieson

Howick (hō-wik) n. often confused with Hawick, it is a small village in Northumberland, east of Alnwick, famous for being the site of Howick Hall. This was the home of Charles Grey of Howick, who was variously Earl, Baron and Viscount (as well as British Prime Minister and the man for whom the tea blend is named), a later Earl (who was Secretary for the Colonies) and other Lord Howicks down to recent times. Several towns were named after them, including settlements near Auckland, New Zealand, in Ontario, Canada and in Natal, South Africa. There are additionally small Howicks in Monmouthshire and West Sussex, a Howick Cross in Lancashire and a Howicks in Surrey.

howie (how-ee) n., arch. diminutive form of 'howe', a small hollow – 'On height and in howie there's many a ewie Lamentin' the loss o' their lammies this day' [TCh].

Howieson (how-ee-sin) n. Adam (18th C.) local writer of some pieces of music for the violin in the late 1700s, published later by Adam Grant. Specifically 'Three old Hawick Tunes from 'Adam Howison, his Music Book. Begun Hawick, 19th April, 1766' was edited and arranged by K.E.R., Hawick; this consisted of 'The Lasses o' Hawick', 'Lament on the division of Hawick Common, 1777' and 'The New Bridge of Hawick'. He may have been father of 'John Howison', who was a fiddler and composer of music. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Thomson and their children included: Margaret (b.1760); and Robert (b.1762). It is possible he is the same man as John Howison, the fiddler. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Skelfhill. He paid tax in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. Robert (18th/19th C.) made up a bill of mortality for Hawick in 1818, which is a valuable social record of that time. Robert 'Stiltie Robbie', 'Horny Robbie' (1838/9–1900) familiar figure on the streets of Hawick in the 19th century. He was crippled following an accident in his infancy. He became a stockingmaker at Ancrum for a while, but also worked in Hawick. He was well known as a race card seller at Borders Common Ridings, with his cry 'Sold again, gentlemen, sold again' and his distinctive red hunting coat, given to him by one of the Scotts of Buccleuch. There is a photograph of him with his race cards and walking sticks in 1881. He could be the Robert born to John Howison and Jane Cavers in Hawick in 1838, the family residing in the Kirk Wynd (see also Howison; formerly spelled 'Houatsone', 'Huison', 'Howatsonne', etc.).

Howison (how-ee-sin) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Alexander Turnbull, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, had remission for the crime of resetting him and Robert Jackson. It seems likely he is the same man as 'Adam howatson in commonsyd' who had remission in 1494/5 for stealing 6 sheep from James Ker in Fastheugh. His surety was Alexander Turnbull in Commonsides. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Robson and their son John was baptised in 1739. Adam (18th C.) breeches-maker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). Robert, mason in Langholm, subscribed to 26 copies (one of the largest numbers), and may have been a relative. He may be the Adam who married Janet Storie in 1775, and she died in 1787; their children included Robert (b.1780). He could also be the Adam whose wife Janet Walker died in Hawick in 1822, aged 62. It is possible he was the same as the writer of music Adam 'Howieson'. Adam (b.c.1845) son of frame-worker John and Jane Cavers. He was a stockingmaker with Innes & Henderson, who apparently first raised the suggestion that the Burgh should purchase Wilton Lodge. In 1867 he married Jean Welsh. David (d.1628) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Henry and their children included: James (b.1808); and William (b.1810). Isobel (d.1628) resident in Riddell. She was tried in 1628 for the crime of being a witch, dispositions being taken in both Lilliesleaf and Melrose. Her name is recorded as 'Issobell Howetsone', and the men given a commission to try her were Sir James Pringle of Galashiels, Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. She supposedly used two spells, one to cure people and the other to cure animals. She was also said to be a 'meter of the belt', which seems to have been a divining method, where a belt was measured and if it had shrunk, then it foretold death for the wearer. Among the detailed accusations are that she cured a boy in Selkirk using south-running water, another boy in Midlem, who later had a calf die, a third boy who was the son of the farmer at Chapel, a child of Med Smail and a horse at Clarilaw (in Bowden Parish). Additionally she would not see the son of Andrew Riddell, who died shortly afterwards, was accused of doing something to cause the death of Bessie Riddell's and she was said to have visited a farmer at Clarilaw in the form of a bee. She was presumably burned at the stake. John (16th C.) one of the men who in 1530 swore that William Scott of Harden did not owe more than a merk to the deceased Stephen Lauder. His surname was written 'Hovatsone'. John 'Jock' (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as 'Jokke Howatsone'. John (18th C.) local man who was well-known throughout the Border country as a fiddler. However, little concrete is known about him. He is also said to have composed some tunes, and may be the same as 'Adam Howieson', or else his son. W.N. Kennedy (writing in 1863) states that he was half brother of John Pringle, also known locally as a fiddler and composer. However, James Wilson mentions him briefly in 1858, stating that he was grandfather and teacher of John Pringle. This means that the period of his life is not known with any certainty. He was said to have died at a relatively young age, his step-father (or perhaps father) saying, as the coffin was lowered, 'Here lies the master of music'. He may have been related to William 'Whaton', who was recorded as a fiddler in Hawick in 1712 and 1718, and also to Robert 'Whitson', who was recorded as a fiddler in Hawick in 1744. John (18th/19th C.) from Ewes Parish, in 1794 he married Catherine Forsyth in Wilton Parish. John (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Reid in Wilton in 1804. John (19th C.) frame-worker in Hawick Parish. In 1841 he was living with his family on the Kirk Wynd and in 1851 was living on the Back Row with his wife and 5 children. He married Jane Cavers and their children included: Isabella (b.1831/2); Robert (b.1834); Elizabeth (b.1835); Robert (again, b.1838); Jane (b.1841); John Cavers (b.1843); and Adam (b.1854/5). John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was a frame-worker and widower living at 'Under Hope Park' in 1841. His children included: Robert (b.1838/9); John (b.1843/4); and Adam (b.1845/6). Robert (18th C.) see Robert Whutson. Bailie Robert of Orchard (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1730 he is 'Robin Huisone Mrt' when one of his own children was baptised, and is probably the 'Robert Huisone' who witnessed a baptism for another man of the same name in 1730. He is probably the Bailie Howieson recorded in 1731. He purchased a bible for the Magistrates in 1734 and was involved with plans for the rebuilding of St. Mary's in 1763. He was appointed as factor for the spinning school that was set up in Hawick in 1734. Also in 1734 he was one of those appointed to ask the Chamberlain of Buccleuch why he had removed the Bailies' seat from the Kirk. He is probably the Robert 'Howison' who acted as Bailie Depute for the Regality of Hawick in 1736. In 1738 was appointed one of the Commissioners for the construction of Teviot Bridge, and in 1739 was one of the Councillors appointed to oversee the construction of a new Parish school. He was ex-Bailie when he witnessed baptisms for smith Robert Young in 1740, for workman William Richardson in 1741, for merchant Robert Scott, for flesher Walter Sheen, and for Excise Officer Patrick Panton in 1742, and for tailor John Turnbull and for weaver Andrew Simpson in 1743. In 1744 he purchased Orchard from Archibald Crombie. He witnessed baptisms for druggist Gideon Scott in 1744, for Patrick Panton in 1745 and for carrier James Oliver and merchant Francis Gledstains in 1746. He paid tax for 15 windows in Hawick in 1748. In 1749, along with 5 others and 'the Club of Hawick', he loaned the Town money to help pay off the debt coming from building Teviot Brig. He is recorded in 1751 distributing some money among poor parishioners, which had been given in by 'a Gentleman in the neighbourhood (tho' not of this Parish)' and also one of 4 people appointed by the Session as a trustee for dealing with Francis Ruecastle's estate. In 1757 he is 'Baillie Robt. Howieson of Oarchyard' when he witnessed a baptism for John Nichol, as well as another for wheelwright James Aitkin. He was listed as 'Robert Huison of Orchyard' among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761 and in that year witnessed a baptism for Francis Gray from Weensland. He was referred to as late Bailie in 1763 (in connection with the Town borrowing to pay for the new bell). He could be the Robert who is recorded paying for use of the Parish 'mortcloth' in 1773. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included: Agnes (b.1724), who married Rev. George Dickson; Walter (b.1727); and Elizabeth (b.1730), who married Robert Scott, from the Scotts of Falnash. The witnesses in 1728 were Bailie (probably Robert) Ruecastle and Francis Ruecastle and in 1730 were Robert Elliot 'Taxman' and Bailie Martin. After his death Orchard went to his grandson William Dickson. Robert (18th C.) resident of

Hawick Parish. The banns were read in about 1772 for him to marry Christian Ruecastle, but she eloped with Andrew Haddon from Selkirk. About a decade later he married Christian's sister Barbara Ruecastle and their children included: John (b.1783); and Elizabeth (b.1785). Robert (b.c.1780) stockingmaker in Hawick according to the ballot list for the Militia in 1801. Perhaps the same Robert married Isabel Coltart and had children including: John (b.1804); Janet (b.1806); Margaret (b.1808); Margaret (again, b.1810); Isabel (b.1812); and Elizabeth (b.1814). His wife could be the widow Isabella, who was a seamstress living on the Loan in 1851. Thomas (17th C.) 'workman' listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Thomas (d.1714) merchant in Hawick. In 1699 he was fined for 'forestalling' barley from Lady Newton and from 'Gladstanes'. He was recorded as Thomas 'Huison' or 'hutson' whose children baptised in Hawick included: Thomas (b.1692); James (b.1700); William (b.1702); and John (b.1704). He may be the Thomas who married Jean Elliot and whose children Walter (b.1709) and James (b.1711) were baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1700 were Thomas Elliot in Hummelknowes and Robert Huntlie and in 1702 were John Elliot in Nether Southfield and John Scott, tenant in Branhholme. His was a merchant in Hawick with surname 'Hoatson' in 1713 when his marriage with Janet Miller was proclaimed in Wilton Parish. He may also be the merchant Thomas 'Huison' who married Margaret Scott (from Barnes in Kirkton Parish) in 1714 and who was 'latelie dead' in 1715 when his widow presented their son Thomas for baptism 'in her dwelling hous'; the witnesses were Thomas, son to flesher Thomas Wilson and Beadle Walter Scott. Walter (17th C.) baker listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Walter 'huison' who in 1696 witnessed a baptism for Alexander Hislop. He could be the Walter 'Huison' whose children baptised in Hawick included: an unnamed daughter (b.1690); Robert (b.1692); and Charles (b.1697). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included: Jean (b.1726); Ann (b.1728); Euphan (b.1728); Isobel (b.1730); and Thomas (b.1733). He could be the William who was at Ormiston in 1723 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish; this may be the later mason in Hawick. William (d.bef. 1797) mason in Hawick. In 1764 he was witness to a baptism for James Buckham and Jane Howison howk (howk) v. to dig, unearth, excavate, extract, carve out, scrape, root like a pig, pull up – ‘stop howkin yer nose laddie’, ‘they got twae bob each for tatti howkin’, ‘He mæde ane pitt an’ howket it deepe ...’ [HSR], ‘Thaye howk owt inequities: thaye akomplish ane eident enquaërie ...’ [HSR], ‘And woblin’ lobseters’ mony feet Houk oot the howest pool’ [JL], ‘Dan howk’d the graves for a’ the folk Wham Daith had lowly laid; Gif young or auld or guid or bad Dan happ’d thm wi’ his spade’ [AO], ‘... But horking howks ’mang epita’s, Sin’ Davie’s dead’ [JoHa] (from Low German; sometimes spelled ‘houk’).

howkit (how-kee’, -ki’) pp., arch. dug, excavated, scraped – ‘... And he howkit up the fatte curatte Thatte burset in Easter week’ [JTe], ‘The greedy worms were crawling there, An’ ilka hole they howkit sair’ [RDW], ‘... whilk withowtten caus thaye howket for my saul’ [HSR], ‘... thaye hae howket ane pitt afore me, in the middle o’ whilk thaye thamesel’s hae fa’n’ [HSR].

Howlands (how-lindz) n. former name for part of the Langlands estate, extending between Roadhead and roughly Wilton Path, and south of Langlands Road. Walter Irvine, who served as factor for the Langlands estate, was living there in 1737. First feued from George Langlands to David Knox in 1741, it stayed with the Knox family for several generations subsequently. Part of the land, where Wilton Grove was built, was feued to John Ormiston in 1764. ‘Howlands inclosure’ was valued at £13 16s in 1788 and owned by Archibald Ormiston (and still recorded that way in 1811). The lands then passed to the Cathrae family and later were recorded being owned by Mrs. Elizabeth Graham and Mrs. Agnes Bowie. The land further to the east was once called Easter Howlands. The name survives in Howlands Terrace and also a house at Norwood (the name derived presumably from being relatively low lying; it is ‘Houland’ in 1737).

Howlands (how-lindz) n. villa-style house at Norwood, formerly the residence of manufacturer Luke Greenwood.

Howlands (how-lindz) n. an alternative name for Newlands, as recorded on the ‘Decreet Demolishing the kirk of Hassendean’ and establishing which parts went to neighbouring parishes’ (although possibly a transcription error).

Howlands Hoose (how-lindz-hoos) n. former name for house on Wilton Path. It is listed as the residence of the Knox family in the 1851 census. They farmed lands off Langlands Road.

Howlands Mill (how-lindz-mil) n. former name for the main knitwear factory at the western end of Victoria Road. It was built for Greenwood, Watt & Co. in the 1880s, and designed by John Manuel. It originally contained 78 looms, but had enough space for as many as 300 looms in three large bays, and was powered by steam from the outset. There was an extension in the early 1900s on the site of some former cottages. It was sold in 1911 to Sime, Williamson & Co., who changed the name to Dean Mills. Later it became part of Innes-Henderson and finally Braemar. The mill was demolished in 2004 to make way for the new hospital, with the tower being the first to go, in the midst of attempts to save it. Some of the stone was used for the bases of the Steve Hislop statues in Hawick and the Isle of Man (also sometimes plural ‘Mills’).

Howlands Nursery (how-lindz-nur-su-ree) n. former plant nursery on Victoria Road, preserved in a photograph of 1885. Turnbull’s factory was built on the site soon afterwards.

Howlands Terrace (how-lindz-te-ris) n. street off Wellington Road, built in 1890 and called after a former name for the area.

Howlet

Howlet (how-li') n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, near Saughtree. It is recorded as 'Howletcruik' in the 1541 rental roll after Saughtree. The farm was valued at 30 pence and tenanted by Thomas Henrison. It is associated with the farms of Saughtree and Pinglehole on the 1718 map of Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it is 'Houlet'.

howm (howm) n., poet. a low-lying stretch of grassland, a 'haugh' – 'They ran their horse on the Langholm howm, And brak their spears wi' meikle main ...' [CPM], 'In a howm, by a burn, where the broon birks grow, And the green ferns nod when then wild winds blow' [JoHa] (also holm).

How Meadow (how-me-di) n. former name for a small farm between the farms of Castlehill and Chapelhill, a little to the north of Newmill on Teviot. From the Buccleuch properties survey of 1718 it was the upper part of Castleside, and had no farmhouse of its own. It had 'Reggs' on its west and Chapelhill around its north and east, and consisted of 35 acres, with the Newmill Burn cutting through the middle. On modern maps it lay roughly between Newmill Burn Plantation and Loch Sike Plantation.

Hownam (hoo-, how-num) n. village in the eastern Borders, where the Hownam Burn meets the Kale Water. Lands there were once held by the Rule family, resigned by the 4 heiresses Marjory, Isabella, Janet and Ellen in 1443. It has a church built around 1600, but extensively renovated in 1752 and 1840. The church was gifted to Jedburgh Abbey at the end of the 12th century. The parish is supposedly the birth-place of the legendary figures 'Rab the Ranter' and 'the Flying Tailor'. The 'Hownam Rings' and the 'Shearers' are nearby ancient stone arrangements, and there are also several hill-forts and cultivation terraces in the area. Hownam Law, an outlier of the Cheviots, reaches a height of 449 m (1472 ft) and contains the remains of one of the highest hill-forts in Scotland. This is also the name of the surrounding Parish of wouth-eastern Roxburghshire, bordering on the Cheviots and England. The Roman road Dere Street passes through the parish, which also contains the fort at Pennymuir – 'The mist is deep on Hounam Law, And Cheviot sits within the cloud, The drenching rain it still does fa'; The howling gusts are lang and loud' [JTe], (also spelled 'Hounam'; the origin of the name is uncertain, since there are different early variants including 'Hunedon' and 'Hunum' occurring from the late 13th century).

Howpasley

Hownam (hoo-, how-num) n. Robert (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll (also written 'Hounam').

howp (howp) n., arch. hope – 'For thou art my houpe, O Lord God ...' [HSR], v. to hope – 'Jock will be hame, an' Crummie's alive, An' baith, I houp, are weil' [WiSp], '... he sall refreschen an' mak' strang your hairt, a' ye that houpe in the Lord' [HSR] (also written 'houpe'; see also how-pit).

Howpasley (how-pas-lee, hups-lee) n. farm at the end of the Borthwick road, just after the turn-off for Craik and about 7½ miles beyond Robertson. Until 1689/90, when the Parish of Robertson was formed, it was part of Hawick Parish. In the 15th century the lands were held by the Stewarts of Dalswinton and Garlies, who resigned them in 1468. In 1467/8 James III granted the lands to Alexander Scott of Abington (probably a younger son of Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Buccleuch), after they were resigned by Alexander, son and heir of William Stewart of Dalswinton. Walter Scott of Howpasley and Robert Scott of Howpasley were both recorded in the 1490s. Robert Jackson was recorded there in 1494/5. Matthew Graham was there in 1502. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The old tower near here was burned by Dacre's men (and 'twenty-eight score sheep and other gear' taken) in late 1513. It probably stood just to the east of the steading of Old Howpasley, about a kilometer further up the Howpasley Burn. In 1535 the farm was burned and raided by a group of Armstrongs and others from Liddesdale. The lands continued to be listed among those held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick in 1559 and 1572. The Laird of 'Howpislott' was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. Sometime in the late 16th century Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig took the lands for himself, infuriating the widow Lady Scott of Howpasley, who held a meeting in Hawick in 1615 and organised a group of men to slaughter all of Douglas' sheep. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. In a parish valuation of 1627 it is 'in stok estimat to 300 merks, vicarage 32 lb'. There were 7 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Thomas Nichol, Margaret Scott, Bessie Graham, John Scott, James Nichol, Margaret 'Cobban', Bessie 'Lyntoune', Margaret Graham and Helen Nichol. The Covenanter Andrew Hislop is meant to have been sheltered here in 1683 before Claverhouse's soldiers caught up with him and shot him. William Telfer and Thomas Pott were tenants there in 1685. From 1674 and for the first half of the 18th century it was owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh, then sold to the Duke of Buccleuch about 1760. However, at least part was among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. William Telfer and Thomas Pott, from there, were in 1685 accused of being Covenanter supporters. Walter Scott and Adam Laidlaw were there in 1703. By 1707 the lands were valued at £722 3s 4d. John Cunningham was there in 1711, Thomas Bell in 1712, John Moffat in at least 1716–21, Archibald Scott in 1718, William Pringle in 1721–23, William Park in 1725 and James Hogg in 1726. John Pringle was there in 1761–61, William Pringle in 1761–67, John Telfer and Walter Wilson in 1766, William Oliver in 1772, Walter Paterson in 1780, Adam Pringle in 1781, John Rutherford in 1786, James Grieve in 1787 and William Angus in 1789. Walter Grieve was farmer there in 1797 and James Oliver from 1858. In 1788 and 1811 the farm was still valued at £722 3s 4d and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. Residents in 1812 included John Beattie, William Scott, John Rodger, James Pringle and William Haliburton. One of the routes from Langholm to Selkirk used to pass here (before about the mid-18th century), coming from Teviothead and travelling up the Borthwick valley. A drove road also used to connect the upper Borthwick valley with Eskdalemuir via this area. There was a small school near here from the mid-19th century until 1947. A green track leads along the Howpasley Burn to 'Auld Howpasley' and the shepherd's cottage at Howpasleyhope – '... Howpasley, he sent out his brother, And Allan-haugh sent out another' [CSW], 'Can I not claim a noble birth? – The daughter of a hundred rills, That issue sparkling from the earth Among Howpasley's lonely hills' [AEM] (the name appears as 'Hewpaslot' in 1485, with several spelling variants thereafter, including 'Holpaslot', 'Houpaslay', 'Houpaslet', 'Houpaslot', 'Howepasley', 'Howpaislay', 'Howpaislett', 'Howpaisley', 'Howpaislatt', 'Howpaislop', 'Howpaislott', 'Howpaslait', 'Howpaslat', 'Howpasla', 'Howpaslaw', 'Howpaslate', 'Howpaslatt', 'Howpaslay', 'Howpaslet', 'Howpaslett', 'Howpaslocht', 'Howpaslot', 'Howpasloht', 'Howpaslott' and 'Howpasly', with the modern form appearing by the late 17th century; it appears as 'Houppaslett' on Blaeu's 1654 map, 'Houpaslett' on de Wit's c. 1680 map of Scotland, 'Houpaslett' on Visscher's 1689 map and 'Howpaslee' on Ainslie's 1773 map; the origin of the name is probably Old English 'holh pæth slæd', meaning 'the valley with the sunken path').

Howpasley Burn (how-pas-lee-burn) n. stream that rises near Stock Hill and runs north to become part of the Borthwick near Craik village. Smaller streams that feed it include Stock Grain, Ladshaw Sike, Gavel Sike, Foul Cleugh, Mark Sike, Whiteholm Sike, Bloody Sike, Cat Cleugh, Hedley Burn, Rut Sike and Loans Cleuch.

Howpasley Comb (how-pas-lee-koom) n. former shepherd's cottage on Comb Sike, far to the south-west of Howpasley, just to the south of Craikhope, (see also Combe).

Howpasleyhope (how-pas-lee-hōp) n. former shepherd's cottage up the Howpasley Burn from the modern Howpasley. This marked the furthest limits of habitation of the old boundaries of Hawick Parish.

Howpasley Schuil (how-pas-lee-skil) n. former school near Howpasley, located just on the left after the turn for Craik village. It was provided by the Duke of Buccleuch for his tenants in that area, sometime before 1873. In that year it was presented to Robertson Parish. It was thereafter used as a school and also for occasional church services and as a Sunday school until 1947, when the pupils and teacher, Mr. Dodds, were transferred to Robertson. The Borders Archive has registers and log books for 1875–1947.

[BR1706], '...and such gentle contradictions as 'Hout, tout, faithier' [WKN], 'Hout, you an' yer abstract ... Gudewife, gie Andrew his denner i' the abstract the day, an' see how he'll

howt aye (howt-I) interj. yes, certainly, of course (also 'howts aye').

howts (howts) interj. expression of annoyance, objection or dismissal, tuts – 'howts mun, deh be daft', 'o howts no', 'Howts mother, gie me the can and I'll gaun doon masel' [JEDM], 'Howts, that's nowts, ee should sei her shepherd's pie!' [JCo], 'Howts in ma day ee were cool enough juist ti hev a telly' [We] (corresponds to hoots in other parts of Scotland, and 'tuts' in parts of England).

hoy (hoi) v. to heave, move forcibly – 'they were aa hoyed oot it midnight', v., arch., poet. to hurry, walk with a brisk step, walk determinedly – 'Yeh bit sate on the kei-stane o the brig; ... an A hoyed strecht for the 'clachan'' [ECS], 'Noo, Jenny, hoy, fetch towels here An bring anither cup ...' [WFC].

Hoy (hoi) n. James (17th/18th C.) from Yarrow Parish, he married Margaret Goodfellow in Hawick Parish in 1703. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in Selkirk in 1710. John (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Douglas in Wilton Parish in 1804. John, Jr. (1755/6–81) minor Border poet, born at Gattonside. He is probably the son of John and Agnes Hardie baptised in Kelso in 1755. His 'Poems on various subjects' was published in Edinburgh in 1781. He died at the age of 25. John (b.c.1770s) recorded as smith in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. Perhaps the same John married Isabel Paterson and their daughter Alison was baptised in Hawick in 1813. John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jane Mair and their children included: Helen (b.c.1853); Georgina (b.1858); James (b.1861); and John (b.1864). His wife (from Ashkirk) is recorded without him on Dickson Street in the 1861 census. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Margaret Easton and their children included: Thomas (b.1734); John (b.1735); James (b.1737); John (again, b.1738); and Robert (b.1740). Samuel (1740/1–1808) smith in Hawick, described as a 'whitesmith' when his death was reported in the Scots Magazine. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He married Betty Flemming in Hawick in 1770 and their children included: John (b.1771); Agnes (b.1773); Samuel (1775–90); and Helen (1777–78). The witnesses in 1773 were the Burgher Congregation. An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1808, a couple of months before his own death. Thomas (18th C.) married Janet 'Moure' in Wilton in 1727. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Adam Easton in 1770. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included: Isobel (b.1634); and James (b.1638).

Hoyes (hoiz) n. Michael (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1750.

'hreh see threh

hrei (hrī) n., adj., arch. three – '...ei said firrst that it was gaun ti Haaick at 'haaf-past 'hrei!, an neext ei said 'haaf-past fowr!' [ECS] (note the swallowed initial consonant; cf. threi).

Hubback (hu-bawk) n. Joseph (19th C.) recorded at Hoscote in 1868.

hud (hud) n., arch. a hod, the flat horizontal side of a fireplace, resembling a seat, a hob on a fireplace – 'Auld Ringan sat i' the Smailcleuch Tower, And he sat all alane; And only heard the cricket chirp, Ahint the black hud stane' [JTe].

hmuddlt (hu-dul) pp. huddled – 'But here presents itself another view – Elders an' lawyers huddl't a' through ither' [JoHa].

Hudshoose (hudz-hoos) n. Hudshouse, area to the north-east of Saughtree, between the Dawson Burn and the Liddel, marked on the maps now as Hudshouse Rig. In the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale the lands are valued at 20 shillings and with Philip Crozier as tenant. It is among lands in upper Liddesdale which were once held by Jedburgh Abbey. 'Francie Batie' was there in 1611 and Hob Glendinning in 1622. In a listing of lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1632 occurs 'Steid forenent the Hirdhous, Hundhous, possest be the Erle of Buccleuche'; this surely relates to these lands, although the precise location of the Stead and Hirdhouse are not clear. The farm was owned by Elliots in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1694, and other householders were John Forester and John Armstrong. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it was a long piece of land in the north-east/south-west direction, covering 1820 acres, bounded by Myredykes, Peel, Thorlieshope, Dawsonburn and Singdean. There were 2 houses marked on the farm in 1718, one by the Liddel, near the site marked 'Tower (remains of)' on modern maps, and the other close to Myredykes farmhouse. Robert Pott was tenant there in the mid-1700s. Andrew Nichol was servant there in 1799 and George Gray and John Amos were labourers there in 1801. John Turnbull was there in 1821. Archibald Scott, William Hardie and their families were there in 1841. Matthew Elliot and family were there in 1851 and it appears to have been abandoned soon after. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of 2 circular earthworks on the farm. The remains of a farmstead and probable tower are located to the south of Hudshoose Rig on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, between the Liddel Water and the side road from Saughtree to Kielder. A report from 1896 (and a visit by the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club in 1889) suggests that there are remains of 3 British camps on the southern slopes of Dawston and Hudshoose Rig, but there is no evidence for this today. On the crest to the south-east are the remains of an old cairn by a sheepfold. It is said that the Highlanders crossed here in 1745, one of them dying as a result of gorging on mutton (the origin is probably from the Old English personal name 'Hud'; it is 'Hudishous' in 1541, 'Hundishous' in 1611, 'Huddishous' in 1622 and 1637 and 'Heeds-house' in 1839; it is marked on Gordon's c. 1650 map as 'Hudshous', Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Hudshouse' and also 'Hudshouse' on Stobie's 1770 map; there is another Hudshouse near Dent in Yorkshire).

Hudshoose Rig (hudz-hoos-rig) n. ridge of land between the Dawston Burn and the Liddel Water. Essentially the same area is known as Dawston Rig. On the north side, the old road passes a little up the rig, to the east of the modern B6357. On the south side, near where the Caddroun Burn joins the Liddel are the remains of a settlement, consisting of two 'round-about's', as well as a linear earthwork, once believed to be associated with the Catrail (it is marked 'Daston Ridge' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Hudson (hud-sin) n. Adam (b.1794/5) from Westerkirk, he was a shoemaker in Deanburnhaugh. He was recorded there in the censuses of 1841, 1851 and 1861 (when he was listed as sub-postmaster). He married Euphemia Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1817); Thomas (b.c.1820); William (b.c.1826); Nancy (b.c.1827); Mary (b.c.1830); and Euphemia (b.c.1827).

hud-stane (hud-stān) n., arch. a stone placed transversely to strengthen a hearth – 'Hud-stane, a flag-stone set on edge as a back to a fire on the hearth, Dumfr. Teviotd.' [JoJ].

hue an cry (hew-an-crī) n., arch. the pursuit of a suspected riever, announced by public proclamation, with a legal obligation on others to follow the pursuit. This was part of the Border Law, as laid down in the 15th and 16th centuries, and its use at that time led to the modern meaning of the phrase (from Middle English).

Huggan (hu-gin) n. Adam (1855–1904) son of Robert and Janet Cumming, he was a tobacconist at 17 High Street. He married Mary Sinton, who was sister of Thomas Sinton, skinner, and she died in 1906. George (b.1809) born in Jedburgh, son of John and Ann Mortimer. He was a framework knitter in Hawick. His wife was Isabella Marshall, and their children were: Jessie (b.c.1837); Agnes (b.c.1839); Thomas (b.1842); William (b.c.1845); James (b.c.1847); and Fanny (b.c.1850). George (c.1824–95) son of Thomas and Katherine Swan from Jedburgh, and brother of Thomas. He moved to Hawick and was a frameworker. In 1846 he married Jemima Rae in Hawick; she was daughter of John and Margaret Cumming. They lived at 7 Back Row in 1851 and 1861. Their children were: Margaret, who married James Wilson; Thomas, who married Mary Stringer; Catherine; George (b.1855); James (b.1858), who married Elizabeth Richardson; Jemima (b.1860); John (b.1863), who married Isabelle Turner; and Andrew Swan (b.1869). Jared 'Jed' (1939/40–) brought up in Dickson Street, he attended Wilton and the High School. He served with the R.A.M.C. for National Service, then worked for Pringle's, William Lockie and Barrie's. He played rugby for the Y.M. (including as part of the team that won 13 sevens in a row), and played for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1959/60 season. He was Cornet in 1960 and followed for 50 years. He also won the Tradesman's Handicap 5 times. He married his Lass, Irene Wylie (originally from Rosyth), who worked as a hairdresser and auxilliary nurse. In 2020 they were the Diamond Jubilee Principals. The couple have 2 children, Iain (Acting Father in 2012) and Stuart. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Earlside, recorded on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 6 farm horses in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He may be the John whose death is recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1817, with his wife a year later. John (1914–89) writer of music for John Fairbairn's poem 'The Exile's Dream'. Born at 8 Wellogate Place, his father, also John, was a frame worker, who died of wounds in 1918, and his mother was Isabella Carstairs Clark. He was brought up on Galdstone Street and Mansfield Road. He worked for Innes, Henderson & Co. after leaving school, but had a love of music, learning from local church organists, gaining the L.R.A.M. and L.T.C.L. diplomas, and becoming organist at St. John's. He attended teacher training at Moray House 1836–37, then left to become music master at Buckie, Banffshire, before joining the R.A.F. in 1940. After the War he became Principal Teacher of Music at Galashiels Academy, and remained there until retirement in 1974. He taught piano in Roxburghshire for 2 more years, then moving to Edinburgh. In 1957, as an exile living in Gala at that time, he objected to the song being included in the Hawick Songs 'Red Book', insisting that it was no good! But his family gave permission for inclusion in the later 'Blue Book', allowing it to reach a wider audience. He died at Edinburgh Royal Infirmary.

Robert (b.1811) from Jedburgh, son of John and Ann Mortimer. He was a frameworker in Hawick, like his brother George. His wife was Janet Cumming (or Common), and children included: John (b.c.1845); James (b.c.1850); and Adam (1855). They were living on Walter's Wynd in 1851.

Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1713 he was queried about what is probably the first recorded 'irregular marriage' in the existing Session records. He married Elizabeth ('Bessie'), daughter of Bailie Graham in Longtown in England in 1713; this may have been an elopement. In the following year he was allowed to have his child baptised, following a rebuke before the pulpit. In 1716 several people were reprimanded for late night drunkenness and a fight at his house, the meeting connected with the fact that he 'had disposed ane hatt to a public raffle'. He probably started the fight with William Oliver in the house of Isobel Gledstains. His children included: John (b.1714); Walter (b.1715); Walter (again, b.1718); and Janet (b.1720). There were no witnesses recorded in 1720.

Thomas (b.c.1770s) saddler in Hawick. He was recorded in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia and still on the 1801 list. In 1796 he married Janet Tait. Their son John (b.1797) was baptised in Hawick Parish, with the witnesses being George Caverhill and William Wilson. He witnessed a baptism for William Easton in 1795.

Thomas (b.1785) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Elizabeth Turnbull. He married Katherine (or Catherine) Swan and the family moved to Hawick, where he was a 'woollen hand loom weaver journeyman'. Their children (baptised in the Associate Kirk in Jedburgh) included: George; Thomas (b.1826); John (b.1828); Christian Catherine (b.1831); and James (b.1833). They lived on the Back Row in 1841.

Thomas (1825/6–1901) from Jedburgh, son of Thomas and Katherine Swan. He came to Hawick and worked as a stockingmaker. In 1851 he was living at about 17 Loan and in 1861 at 46 Loan. In 1846 he married Elizabeth (or 'Betsy') Stevenson, a cousin of carrier Andrew Stevenson, and she died in 1887, aged 63. Their children were: Margaret, Janet and another Janet, who all died young; Christina or Catherine (b.1846), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk; Isabella (b.c.1849); Elizabeth (Betsy) Stevenson (b.c.1851), who married Walter Thorburn; Thomas (b.1857), who died in Rhode Island; Robert (b.1862), who died in Selkirk; William (b.1864); a 3rd Janet (b.1866); and Margaret (b.1868). He also had a step-son, James Helm.

William 'in Wauchop' (17th C.) recorded in the 1641 Town Book as an appraiser for a horse. It is unclear which Wauchope he may have been tenant for. He may be the William who married Bessie Wright and whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick in 1644.

William (b.1816/7) from Jedburgh, he was a frameworker in Hawick. His wife was Janet (b.c.1810), and their children included: Thomas (b.1842); Margaret (b.c.1844); John (b.c.1846); and Christina or 'Kirsty' (b.c.1850). They were living on the Loan in 1851 and at 1 Back Row in 1861.

William 'Bill' (1933/4–2021) son of Walter and Ella, he attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools. He emigrated to the U.S.A. in 1955, working for 43 years as a typesetter for the New York Daily News. Although he spent most of his working life in America, for decades he returned twice a year, for the Callants' Club dinner and the Common Riding. He was made Mosstrooper of the Year in 2010 and was widely known in Hawick for his kindness and generosity. He married Sylvia in Peebles in 1962 and they had a son, John (formerly spelled 'Huggon', 'Huggens', 'Hugon' and variants).

Huggan's Park (hu-ginz-pawrk) n. name for an area of Standhill farm. It was said that a Covenanter hid himself in the broom that grew there when he was pursued by the dragoons, probably around 1680.

huggery-muggery (hu-gu-ree-mu-gu-ree) adj., arch. disorderly, dishevelled, in disarray, topsy-turvy – 'Imagin iz: ... rufflt claes, creest an huggery-muggery' [ECS], '... a boy with dishevelled hair, unwashed face and tattered clothes, altogether a huggery-muggery, lazy-looking lout' [JHH], adv. in a confused and disorderly state (an example of 'rhyming reduplication').

Hugh (hew) n. (d.1199) also known as 'Hugo de Roxburgh' he was a Chancellor of Scotland. He was elected Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding Jocelin, but may have died before he was consecrated. He is buried in Jedburgh Abbey.

Hugh (hew) n. brewer of Hassendean, recorded around the 1220s when he was granted lands of Cresswell by Christina, daughter of William, son of Adam of Hassendean. His name is given as 'Hugoni'.

Hughes (hewz) n. Thomas 'Tom' (1907–86) Border fiddler. Son of a ploughman, and from a fiddling family, he lived in many places including Orchard, where he started playing at social events. He spent his life working on farms and playing music in the evenings. He formed the 'The Kalewater Band' about 1933 and 'The Rulewater Band' after WWII. He was farm steward at Ruletownhead. An album 'Tom Hughes and his Border Fiddle' was released around 1980.

Hughie the Graeme (hew-ee-thu-grām) n. Border ballad set in the West March, about a leader of the Graeme's taken to Carlisle and killed by Lord Scrope – 'Here Johnie Armstrang, take thou my sword, That is made o' the metal sae fine; And when thou comest to the English side, Remember the death of Hughie the Graeme' [T].

Hugh McLeod Place (hew-ma-clowd-plis) n. part of Stirches, to the north, off Guthrie Drive, built in 1977 and named after rugby player Hugh McLeod.

Hugh McLeod's (hew-ma-clowdz) n. Hugh McLeod Sports, former shop at 3 Oliver Place. The business began in 1967 as a small sports department above Pringle the ironmongers, moving to Oliver Place in 1971. It was a joint partnership between Hugh McLeod, Ronnie Scurfield and his son Ron, being owned by Ron alone from 1992, and closed in 2006 when he retired.

Hugh Speed (hew-speed) n. grocers at 28 High Street from the 1940s to 60s. It was also referred to as just 'Speed'.

Hugh the Smith (hew-thu-smith) n. recorded in a charter of around 1280. Sir William de Soulis granted lands near Castleton churchyard to Jedburgh Abbey, including half an acre of meadow that 'Hugo Faber' had previously held.

Hugonis (hew-go-nis) n. David (15th C.) Clerk of the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1478 he requested that since the Vicarage of Hassendean was 'at present vacant and has been so long vacant that collation has devolved to the Apostolic See', that the be granted the benefice. Presumably this happened, although he continued to plead for other benefices and certainly held the Vicarage of 'Cader'. His surname could be 'Hughes' or 'Hugan'.

huid-sheaf (hūd-sheef) n., arch. a sheaf (usually one of a pair) placed on a stack of grain to keep off the rain (also huid).

huider (hū-dur) v., arch. to heap together in an untidy way (see also huther).

huiddle (hi-dul) v., n., arch. huddle.

huidie (hi-dee, hū-dee) n., arch. a small hood, a baby's first bonnet, 'that's putten the huidie on eet' means 'that's capped it', a hooded crow (also hoodie).

Humbleton Hill see Homildon Hill

Hume (hewm, hoom) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) builder on Buccleuch Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He had an unnamed son who died in 1819. Both he and Robert are listed as masons in Hawick, when they subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, along with mason ‘J. Hume’. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1732 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Thomson in Borthaugh. George (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1797 as ‘Georg Hoom collecktor of his Majesties customs att Alisone bank’ in Cummertrees Parish (in Annandale). He married Janet Scott, who was from Ashkirk Parish. George (1783–1857) son of Ashkirk toll-keeper Robert and Jane Elliot, he was baptised in Elsdon, Northumberland. He was a shepherd and died in Yetholm Parish. His wife was Elizabeth Hall. George (b.c.1780s) labourer at Broadlie according to the ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish in 1812. Isabel (d.1829) listed as ‘tranty’ when she was buried in Hawick. She was the second of the 2 sisters known as ‘the Tranties’, with Marjory dying in about 1814. They kept a boarding house and were known to be intelligent above their station (which is what the word ‘trantie’ meant). She may be the ‘Isobel’, daughter of Walter and Helen Dryden, baptised in Hawick Parish in 1742. J. (18th/19th C.) listed as a mason in Hawick when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was surely related to Adam and Robert, masons who also subscribed to the book. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1648. Perhaps he was the James of Ashkirk Mill recorded in a bond of 1673. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Paterson and they had an unnamed son baptised in 1686. James (17th C.) tenant in ‘Shappelhill’ in 1684, when his wife Margaret Scott’s will is recorded. He was probably tenant at Chapelhill and either the same man as the James who died around 1720, or else a close relative. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for Patrick Scoon in 1685. His children included: Margaret (b.1679); and an unnamed son (b.1683). He may be the James in Chapelhill who paid for the use of the Wilton ‘mortcloth’ for his wife in 1705. James (d.bef. 1723) leased the farm of Chapelhill in at least the period 1690–98. He was resident at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 he acted as cautioner for Robert, who rented part of the farm of Borthaugh. Probably the same James was in arrears for rent at Chapelhill in 1711 ‘carried for his brother’, and was also in arrears in the period 1712–18. In 1715 he was unable to pay the debt from the deceased Robert (presumably the same brother), and caution was offered by Thomas (who must have been another relative). He was recorded at Chapelhill in 1718 and 1720 when children of his were baptised in Robertson Parish. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, probably included: Margaret (b.1713); James (b.1715); Helen (b.1718); and Isobel (b.1720). In 1723 he was deceased when his widow Janet Hill and son James became tenants of Chapelhill. His widow may be the same Janet Hill who married Walter Hume in 1724. James (18th C.) leased the farm of Chapelhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1735. Walter acted as cautioner, and so was presumably an older relative. He was possibly the son of James, who was the former tenant of Chapelhill. James (18th C.) resident of Whitlaw. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for James Reid, tenant in the Flex. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Shiel. He is thus described in a baptismal record of 1743, probably to distinguish him from James ‘in Whitlaw’, who is recorded on the same page. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Jean (b.1741); John (b.1743); and John (again, b.1745). The witnesses in 1743 were weaver William Hood and ‘Officer’ John Telfer. He could be the deceased James whose daughter Jean died in Hawick in 1787. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. Probably the same James was at Harden in 1752, Mabonlaw in 1757 and Highchesters in 1762. His children may have included (although there are possibly 2 families here) Ann

(b.1749), John (b.1750), James (b.1751), William (b.1752), Walter (b.1753), Walter (b.1754), Christian (b.1756), Peggy (b.1757) and Janet (b.1759). James (18th C.) resident at 'Mains' (presumably Borthwick Mains) in 1762 when his daughter Agnes was baptised. He may be the James who was fined in Robertson Parish in 1763 for an 'irregular marriage'. James (d.bef. 1795) farmer at Chapelhill. He was tenant at Chapelhill in 1763 when a son Walter was born. He is recorded still renting Chapelhill from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1792, but by 1795 he was deceased and the farm was taken over by his son James. He could be the 'S...Tenant Hume' (perhaps married to Martha, the entry is hard to read) whose daughter Katherine was baptised in Hawick in 1784, with witnesses merchant James Ekron and Postmaster James Inglis. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chapelhill. He took over from his father in about 1795, when he was recorded at both Chapelhill and Branhholme Common. He was at Chapelhill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses, and also on the Dog Tax Rolls as owner of 2 dogs. He was leasing Chapelhill and Branhholme Common in 1802 and was in arrears for Chapelhill in 1812. James (b.c.1780) baker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (b.1799/1800) born in Wilton Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. He married Elizabeth Goodfellow and their children included: Janet (b.1824); James, Jane, Elizabeth (b.1833); Agnes (b.1840). 1851 he was in Crailing and in 1861 was at Edgerston. James (b.c.1800) farmer at Chapelhill. He is mentioned in a letter of 1827 as father to an illegitimate child (with Jess Dickson of Harwood). He was probably the John recorded as tenant at Chapelhill in the period 1831–40. In 1841 he was recorded as farmer at Chapelhill, along with William (probably his brother) John (17th/18th C.) son of James. Resident in Parkhill in 1710, Easter Parkhill in 1717 and Whithope in 1721. In Robertson Parish in 1709 he married Bessie, daughter of Adam Elliot. His children included: James (b.1704), Robert (b.1706); James (again, b.1711); John (b.1717); and Thomas (b.1721). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1731 when his son Walter was baptised. He may be the same as John at Highchesters. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He is recorded at Easter Highchesters in 1736. He married Jean Cowan in 1729. His children probably included: John (b.1736); and Margaret (b.1738). He could be the John who witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1733. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Hume and their children included James (b.1745). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He is recorded at Highchesters Mill in 1757. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, probably included John (b.1748), Walter (b.1749), Helen (b.1754), Robert (b.1756), Janet (b.1757) and Margaret (b.1759). He is surely related to the John who was at Easter Highchesters in the 1730s (and could be the same man, if he married twice). John (18th C.) mason in Hawick Parish, probably the son of Robert born in 1738. He may be the John who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for Joseph Govan. In 1766 he married Isabel Armstrong, who was living in Hobkirk Parish, daughter of Adam Armstrong and Helen Dodds; she was sister of William Armstrong, Schoolmaster at Hobkirk. Their children included: Robert (b.1767); Helen (b.1770); Margaret (b.1772); Adam (b.1774); Margaret (again, b.1776); Janet (b.1778); Adam (again, b.1781); and John (b.1783). The witnesses in 1767 were Robert and Walter (probably his father and brother), in 1772 were Robert (again) and Alexander Bunyan, in 1774 were Robert and Walter (again), and in 1776 were William Armstrong, schoolmaster at Hobkirk (probably his brother-in-law) and Robert (again). John (18th C.) resident at Greenbank recorded in 1773 when his son Patrick was baptised in Robertson Parish. It is possible that Margaret (b.1776), Margaret (again, b.1777) and Nelly (b.1779) were also his children. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Thornyhaugh (in Teviothead Parish). He is recorded there in 1781, 1783, 1785 and 1785 and also listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1781); John (b.1783); Ann (b.1785); and Peter (b.1795). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Whitehaugh in 1797. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Elliot in 1794 and their children included: Helen (b.1795); John Scott (b.1797); and Jean (b.1803). John (18th/19th C.) member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. John, W.S. (1758–1831) eldest son of George, Town Clerk of Leith. He gained the lands of Clerklands in Ashkirk Parish in 1826. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Beatrix Liddel and their children included: John (b.1806); Robert (b.1808); Margaret (b.1809); William (b.1812); and James (b.1813). John (b.1797) son of Robert and Elizabeth Stewart, he was grocer and spirit dealer in the West End.

He is listed on the Back Row in Pigot's 1837 directory and on the Mid Row in 1841. By 1851 his wife was a widow living on the Kirkwynd. He married Margaret (b.1803), daughter of grocer Walter Scott. Their children included: Isabel (b.1824); Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1826), who married John Gladstone; Janet (b.1829); Mary (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); Christian (or 'Kirsten', b.1835); Margaret (b.1836), who probably died young; Walter (b.1838); and Sarah Scoon (b.1841). John (b.1828/9) from Langholm, he was farmer at Gledsneist in Teviothead. In 1861 he was farming 18 acres there, and he was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Janet and their children included William Ellen D., Andrew, Walter and John. John (19th/20th C.) hatter, glover, hosier and shirtmaker of 8 Oliver Place. He can be seen outside his shop in a 1901 photograph. Joseph of Ninewells (1757–1838) son of John and Agnes Carre, who was only daughter of Robert Ker of Cavers Carre. His uncle was the celebrated the philosopher and historian, David. He was a Captain in the 2nd Dragoon Guards, but retired to his family estate. He was patron of Bedrule Parish in the late 18th century, presumably a right that was inherited through his mother. He died unmarried. Joseph (1777–1855) Tory M.P. for the Borders constituency in 1812, born in Montrose. He trained as a doctor before turning to politics, eventually becoming a radical, campaigning for universal suffrage and religious freedom, moving to the Whigs and shifting to a Middlesex seat. Marjory (d.c.1814) one of the 'Tranties' along with her sister Isabel. These 2 unmarried sisters kept a boarding house and were said to be 'more intelligent than their neighbours in a similar humble condition of life'. She may be the 'Margaret', daughter of Walter and Helen Dryden, baptised in Hawick Parish in 1738. Mary (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer's shop at No. 3 Mansfield Road in the mid-1900s. Patrick see Patrick Home. Patrick (17th C.) resident at 'Chisholme and Widburne' according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He had 2 kilns there and paid tax for 3 hearths. He was probably the Patrick who served as cautioner for his brother Robert, who leased part of Borthaugh in 1690; the two were also renting part of Borthaugh in 1691 and 1692, and he was cautioner again in 1694. It seems likely that he and his brother Robert were blacksmiths. Patrick (18th C.) resident of Salenside. He is recorded in 1731 when he had a libel case for debt against William Tunno in Selkirk. Patrick (18th C.) recorded at 'Callendridgerigg' (presumably Caerlenrig) in 1726 when he married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who may be his include: Magdalen (b.1730); Margaret (b.1733); Mary (b.1735); Walter (b.1738); William (b.1740); John (b.1743); Adam (b.1745); and Alexander (b.1747). Patrick (18th C.) farmer in Hawick Shiel. In 1757 he was tenant there, and was found (along with other neighbouring tenant farmers) to be making 'bakes' at Black Grain Moss, against the explicit orders of the Town Council. As a result a group led by Bailie Robert Scott mustered in Hawick at 4 a.m. and went up to the Common, to break up the peats. He may be the tenant at Slaidhills (along with Robert Elliot) in 1743 who witnessed a baptism for Adam Hogg. He may be the same as the tenant of Todshaw. Patrick (18th C.) tenant in Todshaw. His daughter Helen was born in 1755. He is probably related to James, who farmed at Chapelhill. Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Scott and their children included an unnamed child (b.1790). Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Helm and their children included Peter (b.1784), John (b.1788) and James (b.1791). Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Thornhaugh in 1795 and at Bowanhill in 1797. Perhaps the same Peter was a labourer at Lodgeknowe according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He could be the Peter who married Betty Dinwoodie, and whose children, baptised in Cavers, included Peter (b.1795), Ann (b.1797), Jean (b.1800), Peggy (b.1805), Peter (again, b.1810) and Peter (again, b.1815). Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Davidson and their children included James (b.1811), Isabel (b.1813) and Peter (b.1815). Robert (17th C.) leased quarter of the farm of Borthaugh in 1690, with his brother Patrick acting as cautioner. In 1691 and 1692 both he and Patrick were the farmers of $\frac{1}{4}$ together, and in 1694 he held $\frac{1}{4}$ himself again, this continuing until at least 1698. In 1696 his cautioner was James, who was hence surely related. He is recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh; he was listed 'with tuo kilns', suggesting he was a smith or other artisan. It seems likely he was blacksmith at Borthaugh. Robert (18th C.) tenant along with Walter at Chapelhill in 1725. Robert (18th C.) mason in Hawick Parish. He is probably the Robert who in 1767 and 1774, along with Walter (probably his son) witnessed baptisms for mason John (probably also his son) and witnessed further baptisms for John in 1772 and 1776. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: John (b.1738); Christian (b.1739); Margaret (b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were Robert Scott (probably the Bailie) and Andrew Turnbull (but it is unreadable which one). Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Katherine Govenlock and their son William was baptised in 1759. Robert (b.1740) son of Walter and Helen Dryden. He was a toll-keeper, living in Ashkirk and then at Elsdon in Northumberland. He married Jane Elliot (b.1743) in Hawick in 1769. Their children included: William (b.1771), baptised in Hawick; Robert (b.1774); Thomas (b.1775); James (b.1779); George (b.1783), shepherd; and Walter (b.1787). Three of his children were baptised in Ashkirk Parish and the last 2 in Elsdon. Robert (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Elizabeth ('Betty') Stewart in 1793 and she died in 1797. Their children included: Mary (b.1795); and John (b.1797), grocer in the West End. Robert (d.1840) builder on the Fore Row, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was probably related to Adam, who was a builder on Buccleuch Street at the same time. The pair both subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821, as well as mason 'J. Hume'. He was recorded as a mason in the death register of 1840 (along with 9 others on the same day, and hence possibly in a cholera outbreak). Robert (19th C.) listed as grocer on 'Front Row' in Slater's 1852 directory. He may be the son of grocer John. Robert (19th C.) shepherd at Templehall. His daughter Mary married postman Robert Thomson. Robert (b.1828/9) from Lilliesleaf, he was a shoemaker in Denholm. In 1861 he was a lodger with John Davidson on Canon-gate. Robert (b.1834) frameworker in Hawick, son of grocer John. In 1851 he was still living with his mother on the Kirkwynd and in 1861 he was at 28 High Street. He married Isabella Elliot in 1856 and their children included: John (b.1855); Margaret (b.1856); Isabella (b.1859); Archibald (b.1861); Walter (b.1862), who became Headmaster at Drumlanrig; Robert (b.1865); Jane (b.1867); Thomas (b.1870); Janet (b.1872); and William (b.1874). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident at Commonsideside and elder of Hawick Parish. He was described as 'Mr' and 'probationer' in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, herd in Drydenburn. This presumably meant that he was a young preacher (before being ordained) working at the chapel in Teviothead. In 1714 he was 'preacher' when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw, herd in Commonsideside. In 1715 he gave in the money that had been 'mortified' by James Grieve (farmer at Commonsideside) for the poor of the Parish, particularly those from the 'highlands'. In 1716 he was 'Mr Tho: Hume in Comonsid' when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Clerk in Ramsaycleuchburn. In 1717 he was assigned the duties of collecting money from Harwood, Teindsideside and Commonsideside, suggesting that he lived in this area. Presumably the same Thomas was described in 1718 as 'officer of the Excyse in Hawick' when he was hauled up by the Session for his 'irregular marriage' to Jean, daughter of Andrew Brown, wright in Kelso. The marriage was carried out by John Middleton and witnessed by other excise agents, Thomas Burden and Andrew Lithgow. In 1719 his servant Isobel Laidlaw married John Blyth, tenant in Heap. He was 'Mr Thomas Hume in Comonsideside' in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Murray, herd in Hislop and also in 1722 when he witnessed a baptism for William Coltart, servant in Commonsideside. Thomas (b.c.1770s) resident of Newmill in Hawick Parish according to the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. He was recorded as a wright at Newmill on the 1801 ballot; William was also listed as a wright there and hence possibly his brother. Thomas (b.c.1770s) labourer in 'Deweyhaugh' according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He was also at Dewyhaugh on the 1801 Militia ballot. Perhaps the same Thomas married Agnes Scott and had these children baptised in Cavers Parish: Williamina (b.1804); William (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); Mary (b.1810); Isabel Aitchison (b.1812); James (b.1815); and Barbara (b.1819). He may be the resident at Henderson's Knowe who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Helm and their son Robert was baptised in 1822. Thomas Arthur (19th/20th C.) step-son of letter-carrier Robert Thomson. He was an apprentice gardener at Weens, then moving to Wells, Hunthill and Wolfelee. He married Margaret Oliver, daughter of the Bedrule blacksmith, and they had 3 sons and 2 daughters. Thomas 'Tom' (20th C.) employee of Turnbull & Sons, Slitrig Crescent. During WWII he was Head Warden in Hawick. Walter (17th C.) listed as 'broken and fled' at Borthaugh among the 'deficient' on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the Walter, married to a Scott (fore-name not recorded) whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Wilton in 1694. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Hardie in 1689. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Chapelhill. His son Thomas was baptised in 1718, with witnesses the older and younger William Thomsons from Newmill. He is probably the Walter, living at Chapelhill, whose funeral is recorded in Wilton Parish in 1720. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, recorded at Parkhill in 1713 and Mains in 1720 and 1723. These are probably all his children (baptised in Roberton): Robert (b.1709); William (b.1711); William (again, b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); John (b.1715); William (b.1720); and Beatie (b.1723). It is possible that he is the same as the Walter who married Margaret Scott in Hawick. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1707 he married Margaret (or Marjorie) Scott, who was step-daughter of Robert Thomson in Newmill. Their son Walter (b.1728) was baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses probably (but hard to read) the Laird of Harwood and Walter Hume. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Hill in Roberton Parish in 1724, the marriage also being proclaimed in Ashkirk Parish. It seems likely that his wife was the same Janet Hill whose husband James had been farmer at Chapelhill. It is unclear how closely related he might have been to his wife's first husband. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Goodfellow in Roberton Parish in 1724. Note that there was another marriage of a Walter in the same Parish at almost the same time. This Walter lived in Roberton Parish, and may be the tenant in Chapelhill. Walter (17th/18th C.) rented the farm of Chapelhill along with Robert in 1725. He also acted as cautioner for James in 1735, who rented Chapelhill. He was presumably a close (but older) relative of James. Walter (18th C.) carrier at Branhholme Town. He married Helen Dryden and their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Margaret (b.1738); Robert (b.1740), who probably married Jane Elliot; Isobel (b.1742); and Helen (b.1744). It may be that his daughters Margaret and Isobel were the sisters known as 'the Tranties'. The witnesses in 1740 were blacksmiths James Dryden, elder and younger, from Newmill (who were surely related to his wife) and in 1742 were Robert and Walter Scoon, tenants in Branhholme Town. Note that in 1742 his name is recorded incorrectly as 'Wm'. Walter (b.1748) and James (b.1750) may also have been his sons. Walter (18th C.) married Isabel Elliot in Roberton Parish in 1745. Walter (18th C.) married Isabel Wright in Kirkton Parish in 1749. Their unnamed son was baptised in 1749. Walter (18th C.) married Janet Graham in 1755, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. Their children, baptised in in Wilton Parish, included: Walter (b.1758); and Margaret (b.1761). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cavers itself in 1794. His children included Betty (b.1794). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Whitfield (in Wilton Parish) in 1799, when recorded as 'Mr Walter Hume'. He married Mary Beattie in Roberton in 1796 and their children (baptised in Roberton) included: James (b.1797); Adam (b.1799); and Christian (b.1802). He could be the farmer at Woodburn in Roberton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. Walter (b.c.1810) drover living at Chapelhill in 1841. His wife was Agnes and their children included Walter, John, James and Jane. He was surely related to James, who was farmer at Chapelhill at the same time. Walter edited 'Fifty years' football in Hawick, 1873–1923' (1923). He was an early member of the committee of Hawick R.F.C. Walter (b.1862) Headmaster of Trinity School. He was son of Robert, and grandson of Mary (or Margaret) Scott, who was a daughter of grocer Walter Scott. He was also known as a singer. He was a founding member of the Callants' Club and the driving force behind the Club's establishment behind a school essay competition started in 1909. William (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish, in 1701 he married Jane Beattie in Westerkirk Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Miller. Their children included Helen (b.1721), Janet (b.1723) and John (b.1728). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was a servant of Andrew Ogilvie at Branhholme in 1719 when he married Helen Govenlock (servant to William Ogilvie, also at Branhholme). He may be the 'servant to Crumhaugh' who was recorded as a fornicator with Isobel Govenlock in Hawick in 1720. Perhaps the same William was recorded at Chapelhill in 1723 and Highchesters in 1725. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included James (b.1723) and Sarah (b.1725). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Lamb and their children included

Hume Castle

Jane (b.1762). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Helen Aitken in 1766. Their children included Robert (b.1767). William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Jean (b.1789). William (b.c.1780) wright at Newmill in Hawick Parish according to the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. Thomas was also listed as a wright there and hence possibly his brother. William (b.c.1780) servant at Wolfhopelee according to the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Southdean Parish. William (b.1810/1) born in Robertson Parish, probably from the Chapelhill family. He may be the William living with farmer James (perhaps his brother) at Chapelhill in 1841. In 1851 he was innkeeper at Tushielaw Inn and was already widowed by that time. Rev. William Roger (1865–1932) born in Edinburgh, son of John and Marjory Irvine, who was from Hawick. He attended Edinburgh University and trained for the ministry at New College. In about 1911 he contributed a couple of poems to the Rymour Club's 'Miscellanea' publication, these being learned by his mother from her aunt, Miss Rodger (who was also from Hawick and was great-granddaughter of Andrew Rodger, inventor of the fanning machine). He was minister of Toiro, near Balclutha in New Zealand. He died while travelling to attend the General Assembly in Christchurch. (also spelled 'Hoom' and 'Hoome'; see also Home).

Hume Castle (hewm-kaw-sul) n. folly dating from about 1770, between Kelso and Greenlaw, built on a prominent mound containing the ruins of a stronghold of the Humes, originating in the 13th century.

Hume's (hewmz) n. gentleman's outfitters at 57 High Street, established 1860 and surviving into the early 20th century, advertised as 'Ye Olde Hatterie'.

hummelcorn (hu-mul-kōrn) n., arch. awnless grains, poor quality grain, adj. not bearded (of grain) – '...ane peck of insufficient humillcorn meill, out of which there was dight ane choppin dish full of rouch seids' [BR1675], 'Robert Black, milner in Hassendean, is fined for selling insufficient humil corne meils' [BR1697], poor quality – 'Mean, shabby; applied both to persons and things; as 'a hummelcorn discourse', a poor sermon, 'a hummelcorn man', &c; Roxb.' [JoJ].

Hummelknowe Mill (hu-mul-now-mil) n. former corn-mill at Hummelknowes. Thomas Scott was miller there in 1642. In 1684 the tenant, James Scott, was among the men fined for attending conventicles. Robert Elliot was miller there in 1694. James Elliot was tenant in 1700 and through the early 18th century. Robert Cairns was living there in at least 1709–15 and Robert Elliot in 1720–35. John Scott was miller there in at least 1755–61. It was tenanted by Scotts for more than a century, the last miller being Walter Scott, who left in 1855. John Scott is recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as Walter Glendinning. James Glendinning was a servant there in 1801. The weir was damaged in the 1846 flood. John Scott was listed as miller there in 1852 (also referred to as 'Humble Knowe Mill' and other variants, it is 'Humelknowe Miln' in 1642, 'humbleknowmilne' in 1700, 'Hummelknow mille' in 1715 and 'Humbleknows miln' in 1797; a mill is marked there on the east bank of the Slitrig on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Hummelknowes (hu-mul-nowz) n. farm by the Slitrig just outside Hawick, reached over the Hummelknowes Bridge. It was included in a description of Cavers Barony in an English document c.1380. It appears to have been owned by Robert Lorraine in 1428/9, when his son Patrick resigned the lands in favour of his niece Janet Rutherford. It was burned in 1547/8 by the English, when referred to it as 'Hoble Knowes'. There were Croziers there in 1569 when a bond of security was signed by 'Clame Crosar in Hammilknowis' and 8 other family members. In 1574 this was among the lands that James Gledstains of Cocklaw served as surety for, with Clem Crozier having been his tenant there. It was owned by the Gledstains of that Ilk in 1643. It was among the farms owned by the Gledstains family on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when William Glasgow was tenant and 3 other householders were listed there. James Elliot was there in 1700, William Reid in 1709 and Thomas Miller in 1717. Adam Hobkirk was shepherd there in 1723, John Hood was there in 1727 and Thomas Kyle in 1729–31. It was held by Gledstains of that Ilk until 1734, when it passed to Scott of Burnhead. Robert Stavert was there in 1737. John Crawford was there in 1776–79 and Andrew Ferguson in 1781. William Scott of Burnhead was owner in 1788 (as also reported in about 1811), when it was valued at £254. In 1799 George and James Glendinning were servants there, Robert Lawson and Robert Murray were labourers and Walter Miller was a hedger. George Glendinning was still there in 1801. William Scott Watson was owner in about 1874. George Jobson was farmer there in the mid-to-late 19th century. It was also formerly the location for a corn-mill. The 234 m high hill above is the site a hill-fort (also ‘Humble Knowes’ and often two words ‘Hummel Knowes’; spelled ‘Hummelknows’ on some Ordnance Survey maps; the origin is probably Old English ‘hamel cnoll’, meaning ‘abrupt, steep, rounded hills’, although there is a possible connection with the old Scots ‘hummel’, meaning ‘hornless’; the name first appears as ‘Hameleknolles’ in c.1380, is ‘Homylknolle’ in 1428/9, ‘homylknollis’ in 1494/5, ‘Ham-milknowis’ in 1569, ‘Humilknowis’ in 1574, ‘Humbleknows’ in 1643, ‘Humelknous’ in 1694, ‘Humbleknow’ in 1700 ‘Humillknoues’ in 1704, ‘Humbleknowes’ in 1718, ‘Humbleknows’ in 1748 and 1753, transcribed as ‘Huntliknows’ in 1788, ‘Humbleknowes’ in 1799 and ‘Hummelknows’ in 1811; it is mis-spelled ‘Humilkowis’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, but is ‘Hummilknowes’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Hammelknows’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hummelknowes Brig (hu-mul-nowz-brig) n. bridge over the Slitrig, just off the B6399 leading to Ormiston etc. It is sometimes known as ‘Lover’s Lane Brig’ or ‘Greenbraeheids Brig’. It was opened by Princess Christian in 1869, and hence formerly referred to as the ‘Princess Christian Bridge’.

Hummelknoweshaugh

(hu-mul-nowz-hawch) n. farmstead on the left-hand side of the B6399 Newcastleton Road opposite the Flex road-end. The area of land between the main road and the river was formerly known as ‘Whitlaw Haugh’. The farm was also known as ‘Hankemshaugh’, ‘Hankimshaugh’ or ‘Hankumshaugh’. James Montgomery was there in 1780. The fields were much damaged in the 1846 flood, with both crops and soil being washed away. Mason Robert Scott lived there in 1841 and Walter Paterson was recorded there in 1861 and 1868 (also written ‘Hummelknoweheugh’, ‘Hummelknowe Haugh’ and ‘Humbleknowhaugh’, it was ‘Hummelknowhaugh’ in 1780).

Hummel Side (hu-mul-sīd) n. hill in the upper Ale valley, to the east of Easter Ale Moor. It reaches a height of 312 m.

humml (hu-mul) adj. humble, v. to humble – ‘He cruuches down an hummls himsel’, that the puir maye fa’ bie his strang anes’ [HSR], ‘Wha hummls himsel’ til behald the things that ar in heaveen an’ in the yirth’ [HSR].

humol (hu-mol) n., arch. perhaps a local name for the hemlock stem – ‘The stem [of hemlock] is generally hollow and fistular, and some of them are used as blow-tubes for shooting arrows, as school-boys use ‘humols’ in our own country’ [HAST1866] (cf. humlo and humlock).

humph (humf) n. curvature of the spine, hunch, hump-back – ‘that jai ket makes ee look like ee’ve got a humph’, ‘His skin was wuzzen’d, unfizzen’d, and broon, He’d a humph on his back as big as Paddy’s balloon’ [JoHa], the act of carrying a heavy load – ‘it was an awfi humph up yon hill’, ‘Ti come up yin’s humph = to take it into one’s head; to resolve upon voluntarily’ [ECS], v. to carry a heavy burden, particularly on one’s back, to lug, haul, hoist – ‘humphin heavy secks didni dae his back muckle guid’, ‘oo hed ti humph that demned piani up fower flights o stair’, ‘He humph’t off wi’ the seck o’ tataes’ [GW], ‘Ti humph off wui = to carry off or bear off anything; particularly applied to a bulky, awkward article’ [ECS], ‘...that’s why A dinnae humph a drum nae mair’ [CT].

humph (humf) n., arch. a bad taste or smell, as of meat that is going off, v. to smell bad, begin to putrefy.

humph-backit (humf-baw-kee’, -ki’) adj., arch. hunch-backed – ‘Look here, d’ye see that auld humph-backit fallow, Wi’ clenched megs and deep grey ferret een’ [JoHa] (also humphie-backit).

humphed (humfd) adj., arch. smelling, tainted.

hunch-backed – ‘How is’t that yon humphie-backit hicht Can steer up thochts sae tender?’ [DH] (also humph-backit).

the Humphie-Backit Brig (thu-hum-fee-ba-kee’-brig) n. name attached to any hunch-backed bridge, particularly the road bridge over the old railway line at the top of Brougham Place.

Humphrey’s (hum-freez) n. night-club in part of the old Exchange, which burned down in 1992. The bar next door, in the Arcade, was called ‘Bog-art’s’.

humple (hum-pul) v., arch. to walk unevenly, hobble – ‘A’d naether bumble, brizz, bate, nor blusht-bit ti play the limm an gar iz humple or turn lameter’ [ECS].

hunchie (hun-chee) adj., poet. having a hunched back – ‘... An’ humphie an’ hunchie aft met wi’ demand, But she was left lane on the pityfu’ staund’ [JoHa].

hund (hund) v., arch. to hound, n. a hound – ‘So in I gaed to plunge or to wade, As the hunds at mei made a dash ...’ [WaD] (also hoond).

Hundalee (hun-du-lee) n. farm about a mile south of Jedburgh, off the A68. It was long the seat of the Rutherford of Hundalee. There was a corn mill there at one time. In about the 1490s a group of Kers were indicted for oppressing the tenants, ‘casting thame out of their housis and landis’. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at £10. The Laird of ‘Hundeley’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. There were schoolmasters recorded there in the early 17th century. The nearby ‘scaur’ on the Jed once held an ancient cave, which collapsed some time around 1880 (the origin is probably from Old English ‘hund hoh leah’, meaning ‘hound-hill-wood’; it first occurs as ‘Hundwaley’ in the 1450 retour for the Barony of Hawick; it is ‘Hundole’ in 1464, ‘Hundwellee’ in 1464/5, ‘hundolee’ in 1494/5, ‘Hundole’ and ‘Hindole’ in 1502, ‘Hunduelle’ in 1504, ‘Hundolee’ in 1525 and 1526, ‘Hundolee’ and ‘Hundoley’ in 1538, ‘Hundoley’ in 1541, ‘Hundeley’ in 1551, ‘Hundelie’ in 1549, 1553/4, ‘Hundoley’ in 1553, ‘Hundalie’ in 1560, ‘Hundeley’ in 1564 and ‘Hundolie’ and ‘Hundoley’ in 1569; it is ‘Hundalie’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

hunder (hun-dur) n. hundred – ‘if A’ve telt ee yince, A’ve telt ee hunders o times’, ‘... nor clame ony mair of the said nyne hundreth merkis bot alanerly fyve hundir merkis’ [SB1470], ‘We looked down the other side, And saw come breasting

the Hunder Stair see the Hunder Steps

the Hunder Steps (thu-hun-dur-steps) n. also known as the ‘Hundred Steps’ (or ‘Stairs’), and previously as ‘Jacob’s Ladder’. It is a stairway leading from the top of Wilton Path down to Bath Street. It is indicated in Wood’s 1824 map as a path, still as a path in 1850, as steps in 1859 and in 1867, and well established by the 1898 Ordnance Survey map. It never had 100 steps, the number varying with time, but currently being about 95, although there are still arguments about this! It was closed in 2002 following safety concerns, but reopened later that year after refurbishment. Although most of the surrounding buildings have been demolished, the stairs themselves survive, now starting from the back of the Sainsbury’s car park. However, the ownership of the land has been a matter of debate. The coat of arms in the wall at the foot of the steps was rescued from the Buccleuch Memorial (also called the ‘Hunner Steps’ or ‘Stairs’).

hunderth (hun-durth) adj., n. hundredth – ‘The 1514 Memorial was commissioned ti merk the fowre-hunderth anniversary o the incident that took place the year efter the battle o Flodden’ [IWL], ‘What cood be mairi appropriate on that form’s hunderth birthday’ [BW1978] (also hundert).

hunderwecht (hun-dur-wecht) n., arch. hundredweight – ‘But I’ll up throwe thir divots Afore him, massy, his lane, Ablow thon lee’in’ hunderwechts O’ marble stane!’ [DH].

hundie-gowk (hun-dee-gowk) n. a person sent on a fool’s errand on 1st April (also huntigowk).

Hundlecleugh (hun-dul-klooch) n. former name for lands in Cavers Parish. In 1716, quarter of these lands, called Curriescleugh, were bought by Walter Scott (uncle of Walter of Crumhaugh) from Walter Scott of West Port. The precise location of the lands is unclear.

hundreth (hun-drith) n., arch. a hundred – ‘...the soume of twa hundreth merkis of vsuale mone of Scotland ...’ [SB1470], ‘...writin at Hawik the penult day of Januar, in the yeir of God ane thousand fyf hundreth thre score ane yeir’ [RBA1561], ‘First, anent the scool ther wad be ane hundreth pundis allowed for the maintaining of a scool in this large toune’ [PR1627], ‘...their releiffe of two hundreth merks payd out by them as the pryce for building of the steiple loft ...’ [BR1685], ‘Summa totalis is Foure hundred and Fyve bolls of victwall and Foure hunreth and twentie Eight keans’ [Buc1690], hundreds – ‘...the true liberties and privileges of the sd. burgh enjoyed for some hundreth of years by-gane ...’ [BR1706].

Hunewic (hun-wik) n. mentioned in a charter granted by the English King John to Henry Lovel in 1208. This is probably ‘Honeywick’ near Castle Cary in Somerset and not a variant of Hawick.

hunger (hung-ur) n. hunger – ‘...Wund, hung’r, cauld, and strength’s declension?’ [JoHa] (note there is no hard g sound).

Hungerflat (hung-ur-flaw’) n. lands in Liddesdale, listed in a rental roll of around 1376. It is recorded as ‘Hungyrflat’ and with a value of 40 pence (G. Watson suggests that the name came from poor land with soil that required much manure).

hunger-gut (hung-ur-gu’) adj., arch. unfertile (of land), hungry, producing poor crops.

hungert (hung-gur’) adj., arch. hungry – ‘For I was ane hungret, an’ ye gae me meæt’ [HSR], ‘...That wrocht the jaw-banes, stilled the hungert voice, and swalled to girdit bliss the void below!’ [DH] (also written ‘hungret’).

hungery (hung-u-ree) adj. hungry – ‘Gif I wer hungerie, I wadna tell thee ...’ [HSR], ‘...an’ fills the hungirie saul wi’ guidniss’ [HSR] (also written ‘hungerie’; note the lack of the hard g sound and the extra syllable compared with standard English).

hunging (hung-in) pp., arch. hung – ‘In witnes of the quhilk thing to thir lettris I haue hunging my sele ...’ [SB1470] (note the odd tense, which was common in documents).

Hungryhill (hung-gree-hil) n. former farm on the south side of the Ettrick valley near Hungry Hill on the Huntly Burn. An Ashkirk Parish record for 1727 states that ‘a man in the Hungryhill was buried having the Mortcloath payed’. Walter Grieve farmed there around 1763 and Andrew Herbertson was farmer in 1797, when it is on the Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish. It is also listed on the 1811 Horse Tax Rolls, when it was valued at £71 along with Four Rigs, and a tenement and yard in Lilliesleaf, all owned by Andrew Gray.

hunker slide (hung-kur-slīd) v. to slide on ice in a crouched position, to fall down or be negligent in one’s job – ‘hei’s been hunker slidin on his job, either that or hei’s jist yissless’ (also hankerslide).

hunkers (hung-kurz) n., pl., arch. haunches, backs of the thighs, buttocks – ‘...An’ critics, printers, binders, bankers, Hae set her sae upon her hunkers’ [JoHa], ‘...hed hoakkert doon on ti ma hunkers till A gethert back ma braith’ [ECS].

hunkert (hung-ker’, hung-kert) pp. hunkered – ‘...Wi spunk nor smeddum, hunkert by the ingle, It’s then, but no till then, I’ll ken I’m auld’ [WL], ‘...Only the jougals hunkert roond, Enjoyment seemed tae fin’ [DH], ‘Then, juist when Aa’d hunkert doon to sei-in ablow a brainch ...’ [DH].

hunner (hun-ur) n. hundred – ‘she must hev telt the same story hunners o times’, ‘yin Hawick man’s worth a hunner fri onywhere else’, ‘There’s ane I ken – may blessings aye be on her – I wadna gie for sic as yon a hun’er’ [JoHa], ‘Sing hey for a wife wi’ a hunner or twa! A canty bit wife wi’ a hunner or twa! Contented and blithe and hoo croose wad I craw, Gin I had a wife wi’ a hunner or twa’ [AS], ‘... And the owner, a Radical, as I’ve heard folk say, Asked a price, aye a hunner times ower much to pay’ [JCG] (cf. hunder).

Hunsdon (hunz-din) n. Lord Hunsdon was the title of Henry Carey.

Hunt (hun’) n. Henry (19th C.) came to Hawick from England as a stockingmaker. He later took over the licensed grocers in O’Connell Street which had formerly been Thomas Bell’s. He married Agnes Waugh in 1845 and had at least one child, Henry David.

Hunter (hun’-ur) n. Adam ‘Ade’ (16th C.) brother of Matthew, who was ‘John Crosyer kynsman’. They were listed, along with another brother Pate, and Matthew’s son Martin, in a 1544 list of local men who gave allegiance to Henry VIII. Perhaps the same man was ‘Eddie Hunter’, servant to Robert Elliot (probably the Laird of Redheugh), listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. Adam T. (1879/80–1906) son of Robert, he was a traveller for Wilson & Glenly and killed in a train accident near Arbroath. Agnes Sophia (1777/8–1856) daughter of Dr. Henry Hunter of London, who wrote ‘Sacred Biography, Translations of Lavater’ and ‘St. Pierre’s Studies of Nature’. She was niece of Rev. Dr. Charters of Wilton. She published ‘Miscellany’ in Hawick in 1811 (with a second edition in the same year). This was a small volume of essays on education and related other topics. Several of the articles were contributed by her uncle, Dr. Charters. She also wrote an account of the life of her uncle, included in James Wilson’s ‘Hawick and its Old Memories’. She became Mrs. Semple and had a son who was a doctor in London. Alexander (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Justicelee according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. William and John were joint tenants. Alexander (1882–1952) son of William and Margaret Paxton. He drove one of Hawick’s first taxis. He married Catherine Elliot (1877–1974), who was from Liddesdale. Their children were: William Alexander (‘Bill’, 1906–92); James (‘Jim’, 1907–43); George (1909–89); John (‘Jack’, b.1911); Percival Archibald (‘Percy’, b.1913); and Walter (b.1914). Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Hannah Laing (possibly daughter of Walter) and their children included George (b.1770/1), born at Appletreehall and baptised in Wilton (by the minister of the Jedburgh Relief Kirk). Thomas Blyth and James Dryden (who lived at Clarilaw and Appletreehall) were witnesses at the baptism. Andrew (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Helen Nixon and their children included Elizabeth (b.1830), John (b.1833), Isabella (b.1837), George (b.1842) and Helen (b.1844). Andrew William (1810–60) son of George with his first wife Margaret Laidlaw. He was the first person to be baptised in the new Relief Kirk congregation in Hawick, this happening on the Haugh, since the church did not yet have its own premises. He married Elizabeth MacLean in Jedburgh in 1831 and their children included: Elizabeth (1832–1914); Margaret (1834–1908); Jane (1837–71); George (1839–1913); Andrew (1841–42); Andrew

(1843–1921); Thomas (1845–1942); William Andrew (1848–1913); Agnes (1851–1937); and Jessie (1853–1926). He lived in Preston for a while, where some of his children were born. He emigrated to Canada in 1842, one of his sons dying on the voyage. The family settled in Beverley Township near Hamilton, Ontario. The area was later known as ‘Hunters Corners’. He died in a horrific sawmill accident. His son Thomas started an insurance brokerage business, which still exists. Other descendants are still farming in the Hunters Corners area. Andrew Galloway (c.1809–82) from Denholm, he trained as a chemist and wrote some articles for the Encyclopædia. He founded the Glasgow business A.G. Hunter & Co., who were ‘Hat and Forage cap Manufacturers to the Queen, Prince consort and Royal Family’. He married Isabella, daughter of Hawick manufacturer William Wilson and their children included: Thomas C. (b.1833); Andrew George (b.1838); Sir William Wilson Hunter (b.1840); and John James (b.1842). He may be the Andrew, son of George, who was born in Cavers Parish in 1802. He died at Deneburn in Denholm. Charles (b.1806/7) from Lochmaben, he was a frameworker in Hawick. For many years he was President of the Chartist Association, formed in Hawick in 1838. He married to Anne Carswell (or Kersel), and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Janet (b.1831); Margaret (b.1833); James (b.1836); John (b.c.1838); and Feargus O’Connor (b.c.1840), presumably named after the Irish Chartist leader. In 1841 and 1851 the family were living on the Loan and in 1861 were at No. 26 (probably now 24). Col. Edgar (d.1807) son of Dr. William and grandson of Rev. William of Lilliesleaf. He already held Midlem Mill by 1788 and also lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, specifically Chapel (valued at £390), ‘W. Scot’s acres’ (valued at £200), Porteous Croft (valued at £78), Childknow (formerly part of Raperlaw, owned by James Middlemas, valued at £82 12 2), part of Greenhouse (valued at £16 3s), Union Hall (valued at £121 10s), additional lands that had formerly belonged to the feuars of Lilliesleaf (valued at £10 6s 8d) and associated teinds (valued at £92 7s 2d). Together his lands in Lilliesleaf Parish were valued at almost £1000, making him the second largest landowner (after Riddell of that ilk). He was also at Midlem Mill in 1797 when taxed for having a non-working dog. He was an officer with the 19th Dragoons, being placed on half pay in 1805. He was the owner of the estate of Linthill (including Midlem Mill and Union Hall). He was listed there as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He also acquired several smaller pieces of land in Lilliesleaf Parish, including Bewlie Hill, Kirklands of Bewlie, part of Chapel, Porteous Croft, Childknow, and those previously owned by Davidson of Greenhouse, William Leithead and William Redford. He was killed after falling from his horse at Clarilaw Burn near Linthill and died unmarried. His estate being inherited by his cousin, William Riddell of Camieston, with part of Lilliesleaf Moor being acquired by Sir John Buchanan Riddell of that Ilk. Elizabeth (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541. Her steading was valued at 12s 6d. She was probably related to William, who was tenant at Mervinswood. George (18th C.) resident of Selkirk. In 1789 he had an account with the treasurer there for mason work. George (b.c.1760) resident of 'Parkhouses', i.e. Burnhead Cottages. It seems likely he is the son of John and Ann Whillans who was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1757. He was listed as a mason at 'Pityhouses' in 1840 among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In the 1841 census he was listed as 'Ind.' (and age 80) at Packhouses, suggesting perhaps that he was retired by then (but wealthy enough that he was not a pauper). Given the location, he may have been related to the George who was a publican in Hawick. He may be the George (no other information given) who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He is probably the resident of Wilton Parish whose wife was Margaret Cairns, and whose son John was born in 1785. He seems likely to be the 'Mr. Hunter', mason at Peatishouses, who built the bridge over the Dean Burn at Denholm that washed away in 1806, and was father of John, inkeeper of the Black Bull. He may be related to the mason George who was recorded performing work in Selkirk in the 1770s and 80s. George (1770–1857) born at Appletreehall, son of Andrew and Hannah Laing. He may be the George who is recorded as owner of 2 horses at Appletreehall on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was a tailor in Denholm according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He worked in Denholm as a tailor, and was a 'portioner' there. He knew the poet John Leyden, and made his clothes for him. He was later the proprietor of the Fleece Inn in Hawick. In 1808 he catered the dinner arranged at the top of Ruberslaw where the Lairds of Cavers and Wells were to settle a boundary issue. A storm began and the party had to decamp the tent and retire to a barn, and when the cart jolted on the way down he is said to have uttered 'The deil's in the man' about the carter, the closest he ever came to cursing! He was recorded at the Fleece Inn in Pigot's directories of 1825/6 and 1837. He took over from James Kennedy (of the Ordnance Arms) as superintendent of the weigh-house in Hawick, and served until the weigh-house was closed. He was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk, and early meetings of the church Managers took place on his premises. He was recorded on the High Street in 1841. It was said that old parishioners of Cavers used to frequent his inn in Hawick. He married Margaret Laidlaw in Cavers Parish in 1801, and she died in 1821. Their only surviving child was Andrew William (1810–50), who was a millwright, living in Jedburgh, then Preston for a couple of years, before emigrating to Canada in 1842. He secondly married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Laidlaw and Janet Davidson and she died in 1864. Their children included: Thomas Laidlaw (1823–97), who was an engineer in Gateshead; Margaret (b.1826), who may have married a Turnbull; George (b.1826), probably a twin of Margaret, who moved to Edinburgh; Janet Davidson (1828), who married James Dunlop and went to London; Hannah Laing (b.1830), who married Samuel Barnes; and Agnes (b.1833), who died in infancy. He later moved to the Roond Close, where he died. In 1851 he is listed at the Round Close as 'Formerly a Tailor (a pauper)'. He was buried at St. Mary's. Rev. George (1829–1881) born in Earlston, son of James and Margaret Waugh, he was educated at Earlston and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Earlston Presbytery in 1852 and became assistant at Linton and at St. Mary's in Hawick. He was ordained as minister of Kirkton in 1857 and remained until his death. He married Ann Elizabeth Favey. George (1840/1–1916) from Minto Parish, he was son of farm-worker Andrew and Helen. He became teacher at Ringford near Kirkcudbright. He wrote an article on the history of the Parish of Tongland. His wife was Euphemia, and their children included John and Andrew. James (15th C.) recorded as 'Jacobo Huntar' in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Several of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where he was from. James (15th/16th C.) recorded among the Borders men who were pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Steven is listed right after him and so probably a close relative. James (1734/5–63) wright from Jedburgh, who served his apprenticeship with Robert Moodie in Lilliesleaf. He died in a fall from the steeple in Jedburgh. He was buried in Lilliesleaf with a carved bust and an inscription on the tombstone: 'Stop, Traveller, as you go by, I Once had life and Breath; But falling from A Steeple High I swiftly pass:d Through Death. Take you Example by my fate And be by me advis:d; Repent before it be too late Lest you be this surpris:d'. Local tradition states that a Mr. Moodie of Lilliesleaf had a premonition of the fatal accident, and when learning it had happened that same day in Jedburgh, arranged for the man to be interred in his own family plot; however, facts do not support this fanciful version of events, with Hunter simply having no close relatives of his own and being a frequent visitor to Lilliesleaf, where he was buried (not in the Moodie family plot). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Rachel Lockie. Their children included William (b.1803). James (b.1797/8) born in Ednam, he was a weigher at Hawick Station. He lived on O'Connell Street in 1851 and 1861 and was unmarried. James (d.1859) minor local poet. His verse 'The Gipsy's Song' was published in Living Bards of the Border in 1859. He died on the Kirk Wynd. James (1821–92) born in Ancrum, he was eldest son of Thomas 'Kit-tlin Soup'. He was cashier at Watson's, Dangerfield Mills and later a commission agent. He was recorded as a clerk and warehouseman in 1845 when he witnessed the last will and testament of William Lindsay Watson. He was also a manager of East Bank Church. In 1851 he was living at 9 Teviot Crescent and in 1861 at 2 Melgund Place. He married Helen Young, who died in 1897, aged 71. Their children were: Jane Young (b.1846/7), who married printer William Clegg Shaw; Thomas (b.1848/9), who married a Coutts of Selkirk; John Young (1850–1903), photographer; Robert (1854–1905), mill manager and local poet; Margaret D. (b.1857/8), who married Alexander Bonthorn Patrick; and Beatrice, who married Thomas Hunter. James (b.1821/2) born in Hawick Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was living at Highchsters Cottages and in 1861 at Borthaugh Hind's Cottages. He married Jessie Johnstone and their children included Elizabeth, Margaret and Thomas J.J. James Young (1877–1937) son of Robert, he became Headmaster of Cellardyke School in Fife and should not be confused with his uncle John Young Hunter. He was born at 4 Brougham Place and educated at Buccleuch School. He attended the Free Church Training College in Edinburgh and in 1899 became an assistant teacher at Drumlanrig School. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1900 and held positions in Dalbeattie and St. Andrews. He became headmaster at Lundin Links and then at Cellardyke. He wrote a biographical sketch of his father for the Transactions. He wrote several poems of a local flavour, including 'Hawick Lasses – 1514' (set to music much later by David Gibb), 'The Heart's Hame of the Callant', 'June Fever', 'The Ca'-Knowe', 'Follow the Flag!' and 'Sing me a Song, a Hawick Song'. He wrote 'Heart's Hame o' the Callant' was written for the Colour Bussing of 1899, and recited it himself. For many years, until about a decade before his death, he contributed a Hawick-based poem to the Hawick Express every Common Riding, including 'Hawick Lasses – 1514'. He died in Crieff in his sleep and is buried in the Western Cemetery, St. Andrews. Jess nee Johnstone (19th/20th C.) one of the 5 sisters who lived to be over 80 and whose photo hangs in the Museum. She stayed at the Tollhouse above the Dunk, and was called 'Jess o the Toll'. John (d.bef. 1535) brother of Robert. In Selkirk in 1535 Walter Scott of Robertson asked for clemency from Robert Hunter for his murder. John (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Justicelee according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. William and Alexander were joint tenants. John (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690; this was along with his brother Thomas. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Appletreehall in 1764. In 1755 in Minto Parish he married Ann Whillans (or 'Whollance'), probably daughter of William Whillans and Janet Stothart. Their children included: George (b.1757), possibly the mason of Packhouses; Jean (b.1759); Margaret (b.1762); Rachel (b.1764), who married Peter Kyle; and William (b.1767). The witnesses in 1764 were James dryden and Alexander Smith. He was probably related to Walter (married in Wilton in 1767) and Andrew, resident of Appletreehall. John (18th C.) groom at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. Probably the same John was a house servant at Midshiels in 1788, working for Archibald Douglas. John (d.bef. 1837) proprietor of the Black Bull Inn at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He is probably the John from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Mary Oliver, who was from Kirkton Parish. Their children included: Francis (b.1813); Mary (b.1816); Margaret (b.1821), who married Provost Robert Miligan; and John (b.c.1823). In 1837 his wife Mary was listed as vintner at the Black Bull, and so he was presumably deceased; in 1841 she was running a pub on the Round Close, and she was listed as a former innkeeper there on the 1851 census. He was said to be son of a mason from Peatihuuses, perhaps George. John (1824–1905) cabinet-maker of John Hunter & Sons. He was said by James Haining to be son of a mason who came from the North and lived at Peatihuuses; however, this may be confusion with John of the Black Bull. In about 1879 he had 4 villas built on land at Wilton Hill, and lived in one himself, 'Olive Bank'. Hunter Terrace there was named after his son Robert. He was associated with the Hawick Baa game in its early years. He was said to have brought together his brother-in-law, Robert Richardson, with Robert Noble, to form the partnership Richardson, Noble & Co. He married Esther (b.1825/6), daughter of spinner John Richardson. Their sons were Robert and George (manager at Abbots Mill, Galashiels). John Young 'J.Y.', 'Jye Wye' (1850–1903) photographer, born in Hawick, son of commission agent James and brother of poet Robert. He trained in photography with John Aitken in the Arcade. He started his own business on North Bridge Street in the 1870s, then moved to 59 High Street in 1888. Following his father's death in 1893 he also became a commission agent. He was the first Chairman of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee from 1887, with the Committee being established at a meeting in his photographic studio in April of that year. In those early days the Chairman was probably the most important member of the committee. He was also Honorary Secretary for some years, until James Edgar was appointed in 1900. Through his efforts (and those of a few others) the Common Riding revamped its traditional ceremonies and dramatically increased in popularity. He also acted as judge at the Common Riding Races. He was personally in charge of arrangements for the Colour Bussing for about 15 years and resigned from the Ceremonial Committee in 1895. In 1887 he encouraged James Thomson to come up with a new Hawick song, the result being 'Up Wi' the Banner'. He was also heavily involved with running the Saxhorn Band, and with other musical associations in the town. In addition he was an active member of the Mutual Improvement Society, the Parliamentary Debating Society, the East Bank Literary Society, the Ornithological Society and Lodge 111. He was one of the originators of the Con Club, and also helped start the working men's flower shows. He followed cricket and keenly played bowls, being Hawick & Wilton President. Although he became lame, he was seen around town in later years on his tricycle (and is probably in the c.1890 photograph of the 'Coffin End'). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. (Note that the poems signed 'James Y. Hunter' were written by his nephew). Martin (16th C.) son of Matthew, who was 'John Crosyer kynsman'. They were listed, along with two brothers of Matthew, Ade and Pate, in a 1544 list of local men who gave allegiance to Henry VIII. They may have been the same Hunter family connected with Wiltonburn. Mary nee Oliver (b.1781/2) born in Kirkton Parish, she married innkeeper John. Her husband was proprietor of the Black Bull at the Sandbed. However, she was listed as proprietor herself in Pigot's 1837 directory, and so he was presumably deceased. In 1841 she was running a pub on the Round Close, and living with her son John and daughter Margaret. The pub could have been the Royal Oak. She was still alive in 1851. Matthew (16th C.) cousin of John Crozier who is listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. Matthew, son of John Crozier was also mentioned, although the precise family relationship is unclear. Presumably the same man was 'Mathewe Hunter John Crosyer kynsman' listed in 1544 among Croziers and others who swore allegiance to Henry VIII; his brothers Ade and Pate, and son Martin, are also mentioned. He may be the same as the resident of Wiltonburn in 1549. Matthew (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn, recorded in 1549 as 'Matho Hunter' among a list of tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers raiding their farms. He was probably related to his neighbour, Patrick. He may be the same man as the cousin of John Crozier. Patrick (16th C.) tenant at Wilton Green resident, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. It seems likely he was related to Matthew, who lived at Wiltonburn at the same time. He could be the 'Patte', brother of Matthew, 'John Crosyer kynsman', who was listed among local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544; another brother listed was Ade, as well as Matthew's son Martin. Robert (16th C.) resident of the Selkirk area. In 1535 Walter Scott of Robertson came to Selkirk to seek clemency for his part in the 'violent killing' of his brother John. He accepted the apology (and payment presumably), promising not to pursue Walter Scott any further over the matter. Robert (18th C.) tenant in North Synton. In 1737 he was recorded in a court case in Selkirk with merchant John Tudhope and perhaps in another case in 1742. He is probably the Robert who married Helen Scott, and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk, included Helen (b.1741), John (b.1743), Kirsten (b.1745), Walter (b.1747) and Helen (b.1749). He may be the Robert, son of Thomas and Helen Shortreed who was baptised in Ashkirk in 1701. Robert (d.1816) resident of Hawick. In 1788 he married Mary Welsh, who died in 1823, aged 72. His death is registered in Hawick. Robert (1819–53) grocer at 16 Howegate, son of Thomas 'Kittlin Soup'. He was born at Chesters, but lived almost all his life in Hawick. In 1841 he was grocer and spirit dealer on the Mid Raw and in 1851 was on the Howegate. In 1852 he is listed as a grocer on Silver Street. He married Jane Fleming, who died in 1883, aged 63. Their only child was Sir Thomas (b.1850), Edinburgh Town Clerk. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1854–1905) writer of poems such as 'An Auld Man's Common Riding', 'Hawick Common Riding', 'Oor Ain Kailyaird' (sent to Robert Murray in Canada), and 'The Teri Test', as well as the words for the song 'Oor Bonnie Border Toon'. Born in Hawick, he was son of James and brother of J.Y. and Thomas. On leaving school he worked for William Watson's as a power loom tuner, and spent some time working in Banff and Carlisle. He then became a cashier at Wilson & Glenny's and was managed there for 25 years. He was an ardent Temperance supporter, being President of the Total Abstinence Society. He was also elder of East Bank Church, Sunday School teacher and President of the local Band of Hope. He was also Masonic Bard (for Lodge 111) and won second prize in a poetry competition for the Burns statue dedication in Dumfries. He married Margaret Douglas Turnbull, who died in 1919, aged 63. Their children included: James Young (b.1877), who also composed local poetry, and wrote a biographical sketch of his father for the Archæological Society Transactions; and Helen Rae (b.1881). He died at 13 Beaconsfield Terrace and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, where his refurbished gravestone was unveiled at a special ceremony in 2005. Robert

R. (1856–1938) son of cabinet-maker John, he moved into the hosiery trade, setting up Hunter & Co., Abbotsford Mills, Galashiels, along with his brother George and partner Thomas Ovens. He later established Inverteviot, Hawick. Hunter Terrace was named after him. Steven (15th/16th C.) listed as 'Stevin Huntar' in 1526 among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branksholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed right after James, who was presumably related. Thomas (16th C.) listed as 'Hountar' in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). Thomas (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl's inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branksholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere. Thomas (17th C.) brother of John. In 1690 the pair were joint tenants of part of Wiltonburn farm. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as tenant in 'Langtoun' in 1697 and tenant in Dimpleknowe in 1709. He married Helen Shortreed and their children included: John (b.1697); Robert (b.1701); 'Betrech' (b.1703); James (b.1706); Thomas (b.1709); and Thomas (again, b.1713). Perhaps the same Thomas was living at Harden in 1716 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. He could be the Thomas recorded in a 'lybell' in Selkirk in 1719. Thomas (b.1777/8) from Glenholm in Peeblesshire, he was a farm worker at Branksholme. In 1841 he was a servant at Branksholme Park and in 1851 he was a house servant at Branksholme Woodfoot. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Janet and Grizel (or Grace). Thomas 'Kittlin Soup' (b.1789) born in Ancrum Parish, son of John. He was a farm labourer around Hawick and then farmer himself. He had several fields up the Loan and also kept cows. In 1815 he married Margaret Dodds, and they lived at Alton, then Haysike (where they were in 1841 and 1851), as well as Chesters, before moving to Drumlanrig Place (by 1861). Their children were: John (b.1817), who went to Australia; Robert (b.1819), grocer; James, commission agent (1821–92); Margaret (b.1823), who married Alexander Purdom; Mary (b.1825), who married tailor Robert Martin; Agnes (b.1828), who married clogger John Jackson; and Jeanie (b.1830), whose husband Elliot Cowan carried on the farming activities of his father-in-law. He was grandfather of local poet Robert and photographer J.Y. Thomas (b.1799/1800) from Earlston, he was a hand-loom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Round Close, and in 1851 at Slit-rig Cottage. His wife was Mary, and their children included Magdalen, Elizabeth, Margaret, John and Thomas. Sir Thomas (1850–1919) native of Hawick, son of Robert the grocer and cousin of Robert the poet and J.Y. He was educated for a while by J.A.H. Murray, and trained under Thomas Purdom, the Hawick Town Clerk. He received a first prize in Scots Law at Edinburgh University, became W.S and Notary Public in 1893 and in 1895 became Town Clerk of Edinburgh. He was also Deputy Lieutenant for the county, and heavily involved in the affairs of his local church. Provost William Scott Nichol worked in his offices for a time and he was Callants' Club guest in 1913. Thomas (19th/20th C.) eldest son of James, brother of Robert (the local poet) and John Young. He was hosiery manufacturer with Hunter & Young of Commercial Road. The firm operated from about 1885 until 1914. He married a Miss Coutts of Selkirk. Their sons were James Young, who worked with the Royal Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh and William Coutts, who farmed near Ancrum and married Isabella, daughter of George Davidson. Thomas (19th/20th C.) commission agent, known for his geniality, who lived at 9 Carnarvon Street. He married Beatrice Hunter, daughter of commission agent James. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Johnson in 1767. William (16th C.) recorded as 'William Huntare' among a list of the occupiers of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. William (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinswood in a rental roll of 1541. Elizabeth Hunter was one of the tenants at Mervinslaw and hence probably related. William (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Justicelee according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. Alexander and John were joint tenants, but his name occurs first, suggesting he may have been the senior one. William 'Will' (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as 'Will Huntar'. William (16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving the Johnstones of Hermiston Rev. William (1657–1736) minister at Lilliesleaf. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1693, was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1694 and was ordained at Lilliesleaf in 1695. He was a friend of Thomas Boston, who he sometimes assisted at communions. He was termed one of the 'twelve apostles' for being one of a group of a dozen ministers who gave a petition to the General Assembly in 1721 against an Act that had condemned 'the Marrow of Modern Divinity'. He was referred to as 'of Union Hall', since he acquired lands there (part of the Linthill estate in Lilliesleaf Parish). It was probably because of him that a dissenting petition, presented to the General Assembly in 1732, was signed at Raperlaw. He married Alison, daughter of James Hogg, minister of Carnock, and later married Margaret Potts. His children included: Alison, who married Adam Milne, minister of Melrose; William, a doctor, who acquired the Linthill estate and passed it to his son Col. Edgar Hunter; and Margaret of Courthill, who married Thomas Riddell of Camieston, 3rd son of the 4th Baronet of Riddell. Dr. William (d.1781) son of Rev. William. He inherited the farm of Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish. These lands included those separately called Union Hall, Ryecheester and Quartersides, as well as part of Greenhouse. He paid the window tax there in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Part of the lands of Child-Know were sold by him to Robert Dickson of Huntlaw. In 1780 he was approved to be added to the voters' roll for Roxburghshire; in 1788 he is stated to be about to be enrolled on the list of Roxburghshire voters, but was already deceased, with his heir living abroad at that time. He married Margaret Edgar (who died in 1792) and their children included: Col. Edgar, who inherited Linthill; William; and 2 daughters. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Janet Wait and their children included: Walter (b.1784); and Agnes (b.1786). William (b.c.1780) servant to Mr. Thomson at Billerwell according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in hobbirk Parish. William (1836–1920) hedger at Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was son of George (an agricultural labourer in Melrose Parish) and Alison Cockburn and was born in Lauder Parish. He later moved to Hawick, where he was a park-keeper and lived at 14 Linden Terrace. He married Margaret Paxton, daughter of a cabinet-maker in Nairn. Their children were: Margaret (b.1869); Alison Isabella (b.1873); William (1874–95); Mary Jane

(‘Jean’, b.1877); and Alexander (1882–1952), who married Catherine Elliot. Sir William Wilson (1840–1900) possibly born in Hawick or Denholm, he was son of Andrew G. and Isabella Wilson and grandson of William Wilson, manufacturer. He was educated in Glasgow, graduating from the University in 1860. He led the open competition for the Indian Civil Service in 1861 and went out to Bengal in 1862. He was author of several books on the history of India, beginning with ‘The Annals of Rural Bengal’ (1868), which ran to 6 editions. He also wrote ‘A Comparative Dictionary of the Non-Aryan Languages of India and High Asia’ (1868) and ‘Orissa’ (1872). He wrote an influential government report on Indian Muslims in 1871 and was selected to lead a statistical survey of the whole of India, ‘The Imperial Gazetteer’, on which he worked for 12 years. Additionally the report of the Commission in Education, over which he presided, revolutionised education in India. He served as Vice-Chancellor of the University of Calcutta in 1886 and retired from active service in 1887 (when he was knighted). He then lived in Edinburgh and Oxford, where he devoted himself to working on a history of India, and contributed a weekly article on Indian affairs for the Times. He wrote several other books, including short biographies on ‘The Rulers of India’ (1875), ‘Bombay, 1885 to 1890’ (1892), ‘The Old Missionary’ (1895) and ‘The Thackerays in India’ (1897). He received honorary degrees from Glasgow, Oxford and Cambridge. In 1863 he married Jessie Murray and they had 2 sons. He died of influenza, having only managed to publish one volume of his planned history (with one more following posthumously). He was buried in Cumnor, near Oxford. William John ‘Big Billy’ (1934–2016) Hawick and Scotland rugby player, playing as a lock. He played rugby at the High School, then the P.S.A. and Linden. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. in 1952 and eventually became team Captain. He was a regular member of the South of Scotland side and received the first of his 7 Scotland caps in 1964. He also played for the Barbarians. He worked at the skinyards and was manager at Hawick Abbatoir, before setting up his own boarding and breeding kennels. He also played golf and showed prize-winning canaries. He married Helen and had children Alan, Derek and Stuart. William ‘Billy’ (1946–2022) son of Tom and Ina Cooper, he was educated at Wilton and Hawick High Schools. He worked at Pringle’s, mostly in the work-study department. His aptitude for figures also led him to a side-job as a bookmaker, working alongside Ian Laidlaw, Iain Logan, Richie Thomson and Angus McKechnie at the greyhounds, flapping meetings, Kelso and elsewhere. Along with Iain Logan, he ran the Wee Shop on Weensland Road for 13 years, retiring in 2016. He was a member of the Burns Club and latterly the Border Club. He married Doreen and adopted Steven (and artist in Dallas, Texas) and Sharon (who took over the Wee Shop). He is remembered for his hospitality, love of travel and cheerful disposition (formerly written ‘Huntar’ and ‘Huntare’).

Hunter an Young’s (hun’-ur-an-yungz) n. hosiery manufacturing firm of Thomas Hunter and William Young, operating on Commercial Road from about 1885 until around 1914. Their factory was in a building at 22 Commercial Road. The building was afterwards occupied by Hawick Woollen Manufacturing Co. Ltd. 1922–25 and Wilglen Hosiery Ltd. from 1925 until the 1930s. The building was L-shaped, and the main part was used by the Hawick Scouts as their headquarters. The part used by the Scouts was demolished in 2000, with the part at the back left standing.

Hunter Holes (hun’-ur-hōlz) n. area near the head of the Dirthope Burn in the upper Borthwick valley, on the north-eastern side of Crib Law. Now part of Craik Forest, a bike trail goes through the area.

the Hunter Lounge (thu-hun’-ur-lownj) n. part of the Burns Club, named after Tom Hunter, who was Secretary for 19 years.

Hunter’s Hill (hun’-ur-hil) n. hill in Liddesdale, to the east of Castleton. It reaches over 290 m and has Queen o’ Fairies’ Hole on its south-west side.

Hunter’s Pool (hun’-ur-pool) n. popular name for a pool somewhere to the south of Newcastleton – ‘... Laigh down I louted on my knees, An’ preed the Hunter’s pool’ [ECB].

the Hunter’s Sweepstakes (thu-hun’-ur-sweep-stāks) n. race formerly held on both days at the Common Riding. It was only for horses that rode in one of the local hunts. It is recorded in 1875 over 2 miles on the Friday, with another race over the same distance on the Saturday.

Huntershill (hun’-urz-hil) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Winnington, once owned by the Eliotts of Stobs. It is recorded at the end of the 17th century, but its precise location is uncertain. It is probably the half merkland of ‘Huntliehass’ listed among properties inherited by Sir William Eliott of Stobs in 1692.

Hunter Terrace

Hunter Terrace (hun'-ur-te-ris) n. street off Wilton Hill, built in 1879 and named after mill owner Robert R. Hunter.

Huntford (hun'-ford) n. farm on the A68, just north of the Carter Bar and junction with the A6088. There are signs of an old stock enclosure there.

Hunthill (hun'-hil) n. farm just to the south-east of Jedburgh, formerly a seat of the Rutherfords. It was formerly also known as 'Scraisbury' or Scraesburgh. It seems that the land held by the Douglasses of Cavers in the 17th century was a different place, even although it had the same name. It was one of the places where dragoons were posted in about 1676, so that they could scour the local countryside for people attending illegal field conventicles. The house dates from around 1800, replacing an earlier tower-house. The entrance gate has lions rampant on the piers. It was owned by the Bells of Hunthill and then the Meins of Hunthill in the 19th century – 'Boonjed-dart, Hundlie, and Hunthill, Thir three they laid weil on at last' [CPM].

Hunthill (hun'-hil) n. former farm in Cavers Parish, although probably the same as lands adjacent to Hunthill near Jedburgh (just in a different parish for historical reasons). Some of the lands there (or perhaps just the superiority) belonged to the Douglasses of Cavers in the 17th century. It is recorded in a document of 1581 relating to Douglas of Crook. It was owned by the Gledstains of Dod in the 17th century, and seems likely to correspond to the 'Gledstane's Lands' that were once part of the Barony of Scraesburgh (which was an old name for Hunthill), mentioned as properties of the Gledstains in the 15th and 16th centuries. In 1676 Abraham Gledstains of Hunthill was served heir to these lands of his grandfather Walter Gledstains of Dod; at that point they were described being in the Abbacy of Jedburgh and Parish of Cavers. There is an inventory from 1775 in the papers of the Douglasses of Cavers. In 1788 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and valued at £50. 'Hunthill, formerly Scott of Horselyhill's' is recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls among the properties of George Douglas of Cavers, when it was valued at £50. Perhaps the same Hunthill (or part of it) was included in a valuation of the lands of Elliott of Stobs in 1779 and 1811.

Hunthill (hun'-hil) n. former name for lands that were part of Acreknowe farm. In 1788 the 'Remainder of Acreknow, Hunthill and Abbot's-acre' were valued at £151 2s 11d. On the 1811 Land Tax Rolls the 'Remainder of Acre-know,

Huntlaw

Hunthill, and Abbot-acre' were owned by Sir William Elliott of Stobs and still valued at £151. It is possible this is the same as part of the lands of Hunthill near Jedburgh.

huntie gowk see huntigowk

huntigowk (hun'-ee-gowk, hunt-ee-gowk, hunt-thu-gowk) n. an April Fool trick, fool's errand, to 'make someone huntigowk' is to play an April Fool's trick on them – 'First an' saicont o' April, Hunt the gowk another mile' [GW] (additionally spelled 'huntie gowk', hunt-the-gowk, 'hunty gowk', etc.; also hundie-gowk).

Huntingdon (hun-ting-din) n. Alexander (12th/13th C.) granted the land called 'Schotteschaes' (probably Satchells) in Lilliesleaf Parish in the period 1202–07. The grant was by the Bishop of Glasgow for his homage and service, including that of his father.

Huntknow (hun'-now) n. former farm that was once part of Bonjedward estate, listed in 1707. In 1678 it is recorded in Bedrule Parish, owned by Andrew Ker of Wells and valued at £66 13s 4d (plus teinds). It was still recorded this way in 1788 (and continued in 1811), when owned by William Elliot of Wells.

Huntlaw (hun'-law, hunt-law) n. farm on the B6359, just west of Hassendean and about 5 miles north of Hawick. In about the 1180s one ploughgate of land here was granted by King William to Paisley Priory; the land had previously been held by Richard the Chaplain and Walter Stewart, son of Alan. This land was still confirmed to Paisley Priory by James II in 1451/2. In 1643 the lands were listed as part of Hassendean Parish, valued at £66 13s 4d and owned by 'Martin ... of Huntlaw', with the surname not listed. A 10-shilling land there was owned by Rev. Alexander Forrest, minister of Hassendean, and inherited by his son William in 1665. Alexander Forrest paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d there in 1678. Adam Inglis was living there in 1682. In 1690 Huntlaw became part of Minto Parish, after Hassendean was suppressed. James Wilson was recorded there in 1694. James Blyth was a labourer there in 1801. It was formerly one of the homes of the Dicksons. In 1811 it was owned by the heirs of Archibald Dickson and valued at £66 13s 4d. Thomas Drawhill was farmer there in the 1860s (also 'Houndlaw', 'Huntla' and other variants in earlier documents).

Huntlaw (hun'-law) n. Ann (18th C.) housemaid at Cavers in 1789 when she was working for George Douglas. Her name appears on the female servant roll as 'Huntla'.

Hunt Law (hun'-law) n. small hill to the west of Commonsides farm, off the right-hand side of the A7 (travelling from Hawick). It reaches a height of 296 m. Running from here to Dryden, to the south, is a linear earthwork, stretching about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile. It seems similar to the nearby Catrail. It was probably a boundary ditch for lands lying between the Back and Dryden Burns. It is possible that this area is associated with the lands of 'Huntliehassoun', which are listed among those in the Barony of Cavers owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century.

Huntly (hunt-lee) n. area west of Woll Rig, consisting of Huntly Rig, Outer Huntly (also called Over Huntly), Inner Huntly, etc. Although formally part of Yarrow Parish, the residents there were historically often members of Ashkirk Kirk. Robert 'de Huntelegh' signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and may have been associated. The farm there was owned by the King from at least 1456. In 1478 it was leased to John, son of Sir Thomas Turnbull. William Turnbull was recorded there in 1494/5. Lands there remained Crown property until at least 1541. Michael Scott of Aikwood was tenant of half the lands there in 1541, the other half being occupied by Walter Scott in Synton, together paying £22. It was burned by the English in 1543, and at that time was a property of the Laird of Buccleuch. Part of the lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell in 1581/2 when a band of Nixons and others stole 6 cows from there. It was an estate possessed by the Scotts in the 16th century and earlier part of the 17th century. William Scott and James Telfer are recorded there in 1579 when there was a dispute with neighbouring tenant in Hutlerburn, who took a horse from there, claiming it was pastured over the march dyke. Scott of Satchells says that Outer Huntly was held by Robert Scott of Langhope for his service to the house of Buccleuch. It was valued at £22 when included among lands whose superiority was held by the Earl of Home. John Scott of Huntly succeeded his father James in 1638, and Walter Scott of Huntly is recorded in 1644. A Laidlaw was herd there in 1715 and Robert Fletcher was tenant in 1717. The lands were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663 and when 'Outer Huntlie' was surveyed in 1718. However part was held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. In 1802 Outer Huntly was valued at £313 and Inner Huntly at £14, when they were part of the Buccleuch estates; Hugh Scott of Harden also paid tax on £126 for his part of Inner Huntly.

Robert Grieve was there in the 1860s and 70s – 'Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me' [WSB] (it is recorded in the late 12th century as 'Huntleie' and later often spelled 'Huntlee' or 'Huntlie'; it is 'Huntlee' in 1456, 'Huntle' in 1471, 'Huntlee' in 1477 and 1541, 'Huntlie' in 1581/2, 'Huntley' and 'Hundley' in 1608, 'Huntlie' in 1621 and 'Huntlies' in 1663; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Huntlÿ').

Huntly (hunt-lee) n. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Little Cote who was listed in the 1694 Horse Tax rolls. He may be the Adam whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Isabel (b.1695), Margaret (b.1700), Margaret (again, b.1702) and Marion (b.1705). Isobel (b.1708) and Bessie (b.1710) may also be his children. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 and 1723 he was living at Ormiston. He probably married Marion Haddon in 1713. His children included Jane (b.1714), Adam (b.1715), Isobel (b.1717), Walter (b.1720) and William (b.1723). Adam (18th C.) recorded in 1746 when he was paid 'for going two rounds to the country in quest of baggage horses to the military'. This was during a period where soldiers were billeted in Hawick. He was probably a carter, and likely an ancestor of the later carter Adam. He may be the Adam who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. Adam 'Yeddie' (18th/19th C.) carter whose cart doubled as the Steward's stand at the Common Riding Races. James (17th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Whitriggs in 1720. He probably married Bessie Nichol in Cavers in 1706. Their children included: Isabel (b.1708); Robert (b.1710); William (b.1712); James (b.1715); James (again, b.1717); and Bessie (b.1720). John (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Langlands in 1724. In that year he witnessed baptisms for James Ormiston and Gideon Turnbull (who also witnessed baptisms for each other). Also in 1724 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Margaret Huntly (who was probably related to him). In 1721 in Cavers he married Margaret Scott. Their children included: Adam (b.1722); and Margaret (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were John and Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same John who was previously married to Bessie Nichol. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (13th C.) recorded as being 'de Hanteleye' when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore a 'vesica' with interlacing and the name 'S'ROBERTI DE HVNTO-LET'. His lands were probably either at Huntly, north of Ashkirk, or at Hundalee, south of Jedburgh. Robert (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Marion Turnbull and their children included: Isobel (b.1679); Robert (b.1681); and John (b.1685). The witnesses in 1681 were Walter and Robert Scott. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is surely related to Walter who was also listed there. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Thomas Howison. Probably the same Robert witnessed a baptism for Robert Wilson and Janet Huntly (perhaps his daughter). He is probably the Robert whose children included: Helen (b.1693), baptised in Hawick; and Margaret (b.1695), Robert (b.1697), Marion (b.1699) and Janet (b.1701), baptised in Cavers. Perhaps the same Robert was recorded as 'servitor to Mr Cunningham' in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Crozier (weaver in Clarilaw). Probably the same Robert witnessed a baptism for smith Thomas and Bessie Huntly (one of whom was surely related to him) in 1723. Possibly the same Robert witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Thomas Hardie in 1725. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) smith in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1713 for William Bulloch, in 1714 for John Little, in 1720 for carrier James Henderson, and in 1743 for carrier William Gledstains. He may be the 'Thohontlie' who witnessed a baptism for John Hendry in Wilton in 1721. He married Bessie Huntly in 1709, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. Their children were: Robert (b.1710); Adam (b.1711); Helen (b.1714); John (b.1715); Janet (b.1718); Robert (again, b.1720); Thomas (b.1723); Bessie (b.1726); and Thomas (again, b.1729). The witnesses in 1711 were carrier James Simpson and flesher Thomas Waugh, in 1714 were Walter Laing and flesher George Renwick, in 1720 were merchants Michael Scott and Robert Robson, in 1723 were weaver William Scott and Robert Huntly (who was surely related), and in 1729 were William Tudhope and Walter Paisley. Thomas (b.1693/4) tenant in Closses. He was servant to carrier Robert Robson in 1715 and then spent 35 years as tenant in Closses, ending in 1764. He was a widower living in Newbigging in 1767 when he gave evidence at the court case for the division of the Common. Thomas (18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Mary (or 'Marrion') Thomson in 1759 and their children included Thomas (b.1760), Agnes (b.1762), James (b.1764), Robert (b.1767) and Adam (b.1771). The witnesses in 1760 and 1762 were the whole congregation. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for cabinetmaker George Scott in 1776. Thomas (18th C.) weaver in Denholm, recorded in 1781 and 1785. His children, baptised in cavers Parish, probably included Janet (b.1781), Nelly (b.1782), Elspeth (b.1785) and Nelly (again, b.1790). Walter (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1717 and 1723. He is probably the William who married Margaret Blyth in Cavers in 1709. His children included: Bessie (b.1710); Marion (b.1712); Adam (b.1714); Margaret (b.1717); Helen (b.1720); Ann (b.1723); and Janet (b.1729). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish, recorded as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having a greyhound in 1797 (also written 'Hundly', 'Huntlea', 'Huntley', 'Huntlie' and variants).

Huntly Hill

Huntlyburn (hunt-lee-burn) n. house southwest of Melrose, which was called Toftfield until bought and improved by Sir Walter Scott in 1817. Part of the estate was used to build the Borders General Hospital in the late 1980s.

Huntlyburn (hunt-lee-burn) n. former name for lands in Jedforest, whose location is unclear, recorded as 'Huntlawburn' in 1538 and 1539. It was among lands that passed from the Douglasses to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch accused of occupying the farm at that time. It may have been close to Blackburn, which was also listed. It is possible that it is Huntlaw Burn.

Huntly Covert (hunt-lee-kōvur) n. plantation wrapping around Huntly Rig. There is a triangulation pillar to the north-east of there, reaching a height of 353 m.

Huntly Hill (hunt-lee-hil) n. hill between Huntly Rig and Inner Huntly, with Hutlerburn Loch to the south. It reaches a height of 352 m. A hill to the east, sometimes called Huntly Covert, contains a triangulation pillar.

Huntlyhill

Huntlyhill (hunt-lee-hil) n. former farm in the Rule valley, once part of the Wells estate. It may have been the same as 'Rulewood'. In 1615 the Stewart of Traquair complained about Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and others not removing themselves from his lands there, and they were denounced as rebels. In 1619 John Stewart of Traquair accused a large group of Turnbells of cutting down a large quantity of timber from his lands there, taking away 24 horse-loads. John Murray is recorded as farmer there in 1797 (also written 'Huntliehill', it is 'Huntlethill' in 1797).

Hurrah! For the Cornet

hurkle-backit (hur-kul-baw-kee', -ki') adj., arch. having hunched shoulders, hunch-baked.

Hurklebuss (hur-kul-bus) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll along with the other lands of 'Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank', with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

Hurkle Rig (hur-kul-rig) n. ridge just north of Redfordgreen, reaching a height of 371 m.

Hurklewunter Knowe (hur-kul-wun-tur-now) n. hill in south-eastern Liddesdale, at the southern end of Larriston Fells and reaching a height of 442 m. There may be a connection with the lands of 'Harklebuss' (but the name is surely related to being cold and bleak in the winter).

hurl (hu-rul) v. to roll along, wheel, go for a ride – 'can ee hurl yer sister's pram ower ti yer auntie's?', n. a ride in a vehicle – 'A took ma grannie oot for a hurl in the car', 'Yince an A'd wun there, A thocht, A micht mebbies cood geet a hurl the lenth o Hawick' [ECS], '...ye might have gotten a hurl a' the road tae the verra yett' [RM], 'Mr. Wm. Hurrah! For the Cornet (hu-rā-for-thu-kōr-ni') n. poem written by the pupils of Drumlanrig & St. Cuthbert's Primary School in 1968. It was set to music by their teacher, Mrs. Janet Smith and has been sung by more recent pupils

hurrit (hu-ree', -ri') pp. hurried – ‘... a hurreet phone ca’ teh the city brocht a spaishal car doon in ner record time ...’ [BW1978].

hursle (hur-sul) v., arch. to raise or shrug the shoulders (cf. hirsle and hussle).

hus see huz

husbandland (huz-bind-lund) n., arch. a holding of a tenant of a feudal superior, an area of arable land equal to 2 bovates or about 26 acres (although the precise area may not be well defined, depending on productivity and perhaps varying from place to place) – ‘Imprimis, thair are 28 husband lands in the toune of Hawick ...’ [PR1627], ‘... viz. the tower, fortalice, mannor-place of Hawick East Maynes, extending to nineteen husband lands, and three-fourth parts of ane husband land ...’ [SB1686] (common in southern Scotland and northern England until about 1600, but the word continuing in use for some time afterwards).

husbandman (huz-bind-mun) n., arch. a farmer with a small holding – ‘William Whilans Husbandman Chesters, George Oliver Husbandman Chesters’ [LB1801].

husbant (huz-bin', -bint) n., arch. a husband.

hush (hush) n., arch. a strong rush of water, a gush.

Hush (hush) n. David ‘Hushie’ (1961/2–) ‘Hushie’ local binman, known for his many sporting achievements. He played cricket for Hawick & Wilton, rugby for the Wanderers, the Harlequins and the Greens, football for the Waverley (with a short stint at Hawick Royal Albert), and has had success on the professional running circuit. He once filled in for the Y.M. on the same day as playing for the Waverley.

hushaba (hu-shu-baw) interj., arch. used for lulling a baby to sleep – ‘Now hushaba, my little pet, Ye’ve a’ the world can gi’e ...’ [JT].

Hussa (hu-sa) n. (6th C.) King of Bernicia (which probably included Hawick) for a few years until about 593. He was the last son of the 6 sons of Æthelric to rule the kingdom.

hussle (hu-sul) v., arch. to shrug the shoulders, wriggle the shoulders to relieve an itch – ‘Then hussled up his shouders baith, And hastened to the door O’ [HSR], ‘A met ... a shauchlin, husslin-shoodert skeibult wui a toozy, taaty heed’ [ECS] (also hussle; cf. hirsle).

hut (hu') pp. hit – ‘it looks like a bomb’s hut eet’, ‘hei got hut ower the heid’, n. a hit (cf. the alternative hat and the past participle form hutton).

the Hut (thu-hu') n. building at St. Leonards farm, where the Cornet and his supporters are entertained on the Thursday night, the Thursday morning and the Friday morning. There are also less formal Huts on the other mornings of Common Riding week, but the Friday morning Hut is the main event. On each occasion there is a series of songs and toasts and good-natured male camaraderie. Tickets for the Friday event (available in limited numbers to non-riders) are always highly sought after. After the Hut there is the traditional singing of ‘Teribus’ in front of the farmhouse. The Friday morning ‘Hut’ is where the Curds and Cream repast occurs, ordered from a local farmhouse at the Thursday evening Chase the week before. This is recorded as being held at Whitchesters in 1846, Newmill on Slitrig in 1856, Crumhaughhill in 1860, the ‘Herd’s House’ 1872–76, Pilmuir 1882, St. Leonard’s 1883–1900, Pilmuir 1901–11 and at St. Leonards from 1912 until now. In earlier times a marquee was erected at St. Leonard’s. The building itself was constructed at St. Leonard’s in 1924 (following a wet Common Riding the previous year, when the tent was blown away!) and extended in 1964. Exactly when the full schedule of entertainment became a feature of these events is unclear, but now tickets are a highly sought after commodity. It usual for many people to listen outside to the entertainment – ‘It’s a’ happenin again, the great occasion is here but it a’ sterted this morning wi that ‘tremendous grand Hut’ [GM], ‘The world hez mony wonderful venues, the Hollywood Bowl, the Sydney Opera House, the Albert Hall in London, the Volunteer Hall in Galashiels but nane o thum can touch the Hut’ [IWL], ‘And as long as St. Leonard’s Hut shall stand That trusty valour through the land Shall tell the story proud and grand Of Hawick on the Border’ [IWL], ‘Unlike other farm sheds, the Hut is not for agricultural purposes’ [BEL].

hutch (huch) n., arch. an embankment built to hinder water from washing away the soil (noted by J. Jamieson).

Hutcher's Riverside (hu-churz-ri-vur-sīd) n. former name for a small piece of land in Minto Parish. It was listed in 1779, with a value of £1 16s 6d, and still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. In 1780 it was said to belong to Thomas Kennedy (although also said to be included in the lands of Deanfoot liferented to Robert Trotter), with a rent of 10s.

Hutchin Brae (hu-chin-brā) n. name given to an area to the east of old Cavers house, and west of West Middle, on a side road leading to the south.

Hutchison (hu-chee-sin) n. Thomas (17th C.) carrier on the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Thomas Oliver ‘Tom’ (1931–98) educated at Hawick High School, he was in the Border Schoolboys team in 1949. He studied science at St. Andrews University. He joined I.C.I., becoming a manager of the plastics division, and joining the Board of Directors in 1985. He was President of the Association of Plastics Manufacturers in Europe 1980–82, Deputy-Governor of the Bank of Scotland, Deputy Chairman of Cadbury Schweppes and on several other boards. His wife was Frances and they had 3 sons. He lived in the London area and had a house in Normandy, but stayed close to his Scottish roots (also ‘Hutchisone’).

huther (hu-thur) v., arch. to heap together, over-clothe – ‘The bairn’s fair hudder’t wi’ claes’ [GW] (also spelled ‘hudder’; cf. huiddier).

Hutlerburn (hut-lur-burn) n. farm on the south side of the Ettrick valley about a mile east of Ettrickbridge (it is ‘Huthralburne’ in 1579; it is probably what is marked ‘Hontÿr’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

hutten (hu'-in) pp. hit – ‘hei was hutten wi a muckle stane’, ‘...for thou hest hutten a’ mine enimies apoun the cheikbane’ [HSR].

Hutton (hu'-in) n. Adam (17th C.) resident at Sundhope in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His surname was written ‘Houtitone’, and must have been closely related to Robert, who was also listed in the same place. It is unclear if the modern equivalent of his name was ‘Hutton’, ‘Howitson’, ‘Whutson’, or something else. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Veitch in 1761 and they had twins Isobel and Elizabeth (b.1762). The witnesses were Walter Scott, Commonsides and Thomas Bunyan, Teindside. Alasdair, O.B.E. (??–) Conservative Member of the European Parliament for South of Scotland 1979–89. He was on the Scottish Borders Council since 2002 for Kelso Central, where he has been Convenor. He is also known as a broadcaster and has been the narrator for the Edinburgh Military Tattoo for many years. He reads about John Buchan on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). Alexander (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John, who was also listed there, was surely related.

Alexander (17th/18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills. He married Christian Simpson in 1706 and their children included: Andrew (b.1707); and Helen (b.1709). Note that he is (presumably incorrectly) ‘Adam’ in one baptismal record. Perhaps the same Alexander had a child Jean baptised in Wilton Parish in 1694. George (18th/19th C.) resident at ‘Apple-tree-Hall’ in 1811 when he was on the subscription list for Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso. Rev. George (d.c.1868) born at Camieston in Howden Parish. His parents were members of the Secession Kirk in Lilliesleaf. He was educated at Edinburgh University and then taught at several schools. He entered the Divinity Hall of the Secession Church in 1826 and in 1831 he was inducted as the 3rd minister at the Anti-Burgher Kirk of Linlithgow, East. He retired in 1863 because of ill-health and moved to Greenock for the last 5 years of his life. He married twice, having 3 sons and 1 daughter. George Sime (1851–1919) born in Newcastle, he was a tweed manufacturer in Selkirk. He married Alice Holt (b.1858) and their daughter Edith Alice (1894–1974) married Robert Scott-Noble. Henry (18th/19th C.) farmer at Kershope, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His surname is listed as ‘Hutson’. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included: John (b.1645); and Helen (b.1653). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism for John Grieve in Eilrig. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1775 he married Janet Black and their children included: James (b.1776); James (again, 1777–81); Thomas (1779–81); and Janet (b.1781), who probably married Adam Kersel in Kirkton. The witnesses in 1777 and 1781 were the whole congregation. Perhaps the same James was in Ormiston in 1784 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander, who was also listed there, was surely related. John (b.1819/20) from Ewes, he was a master clogger at 4 Howegate in 1861. His wife was Agnes and they had a son Alexander; his wife’s children from a previous marriage were Jane and Robertann Laurie. John Elliot ‘Elliot’ (1942/3–) son of butcher Billy. He was Cornet in 1968, riding his thoroughbred ‘Shish Kebab’. In 2018 he was Jubilee Cornet. Ninian (b.c.1780) son of George, he was listed at Newhouses on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. His brother Thomas was also listed there in 1801. Robert (17th C.)

tenant in Sundhope in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name was written ‘Houiton’, and he was surely related to Adam, who was also listed there. Robert ‘Hobby Hutton’ (18th C.) travelling pedlar who lived at Sundhope in the Hermitage valley. As described in ‘Beauties of the Border’, he was an eccentric and irascible character, who would board with others when travelling, but refuse to stay in the same house as any other traveller, and would also fly into a rage when offered potatoes. He could be the Robert recorded in Sundhope in 1748. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at ‘Borthbrae parkhead’ in 1757. His children included Helen (b.1755), Henry (b.1757) and Thomas (b.1759). Robert (18th/19th C.) labourer at Peel in Castleton Parish. He is listed among heads of households in 1835 and 1836. He is probably the shepherd at Peel called Hutton from whom William Oliver of Langraw collected many Border ballads. Ronald son of Jimmy and nephew of Billy, he attended Wilton and the High School, he worked in the family butcher’s shops on the Howegate and in Bourtree Place. He retired in 2003. In 1970 he married Liz Telfer and their children are Brian and Jacqueline. The couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020. Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Courthill according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was at Newhouses and listed as son of George; his brother Ninian was also listed there. Probably the same Thomas married Margaret Clerk in Wilton in 1802 and had children George (b.1803), Jessie (b.1804) and Margaret (b.1806), all baptised in St. Boswells Parish. William (16th C.) resident of Borthaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He could be the same as ‘Willie’ who is recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, signed in Hawick in 1574; he was left ‘threttie or fourtie pundis, as it sall pleis to his said spous and vther freindis, and he to serve his wyf befor ony vtheris’. William (d.c.1683) shepherd in ‘Tuishope’ in 1683 when his will was recorder in Peebles Commissariat. This could have been Twislehope. William (b.1794/5) shepherd at Thorlieshope in 1861. He married his housekeeper Jemima Scott in 1863 (formerly written ‘Hutoun’).

Hutton-Riddell see Riddell

Hutton’s (hu’-inz) n. butchers at 16 Howegate and 18 Bourtree Place, with its meat paste a specialty. It is now Hawick’s oldest established butchers.

Hymers (hI-murz) n. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Easter Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Edward (18th/19th C.)

recorded in 1799 when his son George was on the ballot for the Militia at Limekiln in Hobkirk Parish. Edward (b.1802/3) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Ashtrees in Southdean Parish in the 1860s. He was also at Billerwell in the 1850s. In 1861 he was farming 272 acres at Ashtrees, and employing 7 people. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Helen (who married Robert Cavers) and probably Mary (who married Andrew Ormiston). His name was recorded as ‘Hindmarsh’ in an 1868 directory. George (b.c.1780) son of Edward, he was a resident of Limekilnedge according to the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Hobkirk Parish. His surname appears to be written ‘Himners in 1799. It is possible he is the George born in 1782 in Jedburgh. William (18th/19th C.) from St. John Lee in Northumberland, he moved to Hobkirk Parish and lived for a while at Limekilnedge and later moved to Jedburgh. His first wife was Hannah and his second wife was Eleanor Plummer, from Southdean Parish. Their children included: Mary (b.1800); Edward (b.1802), the 1st son; Robert (b.1803); Anthony (b.1805); William (b.1808), 4th son; and Jane (b.1810).

Hyndhaughheid (hīnd-hawch-heed, -hew-) n. Hindhaughhead, former fortified house in Southdean Parish in the upper Jed valley, roughly between Falside and Whiteside. It was situated on the south side of the Jed Water, and there are still clear remains there. The tower was 6.2m by 4.3m and had an enclosure to the south-east. There are also signs of a smaller building to the east, and another larger one to the north (presumably part of the farm). To the north-east of the tower are also the remains of an old kiln. It was one of the towers burned by Dacre’s men in late 1513, specifically a force including Nicholas Harrington, Nicholas Ridley, Thomas Middleton and George Skelton. It was valued at 22 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. Margaret Oliver and her son Gilbert were there in 1541, paying 25s yearly. Dand and Adam Oliver from there were among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544 (but may have switched sides at the Battle of Ancrum Moor). This may explain why it was burned (again) in 1544, by a forced led by ‘Mr. Clefforth and Besforth’. David Oliver of ‘Hyndhewche’ is recorded in 1557 and David ‘in Hynhanchheid’ in 1597 was one of the Oliver chiefs. James Oliver was the tenant there in 1669, and at the time of the Hearth Tax (1690s) it was occupied by Lady Shaw (although who she might be is unclear). There were also Kers there in the late 17th century. The farm appears to have been abandoned by the mid-19th century. An area to the west contained rig and furrow, as well as old stock enclosures and sheep-folds, but all have been destroyed by cultivation. Note that Slack's Tower and Clesslee Tower were quite close by (it is 'Hyndhalghehede' in 1513, 'Hyndhauchheid' in 1538, 'Hyndhauchheid' in 1538, 'Hyndhauchheid' in 1541, 'Hindawgheid' and 'Hyndrawghthede' in 1544, 'Hynochheid' in 1669 and 'Hyndhaughead' in 1694; it is marked as 'Hyndheuchheed' on Blaeu's 1654 map, but on the wrong side of the Jed, and is 'Hindhaughead' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Hyndhope (hin-dup, hīnd-hōp) n. farm in the Ettrick valley roughly opposite Singlie, with 'Old Hyndhope' further uphill to the south. It was one of the 3 steadings of Redford held by the Crown in the 5th century and feued to Alexander, Lord Home in 1510. In 1541 Walter Scott in Haining claimed the tenancy, paying £15 13s 4d yearly. 1644 Katherine Kendell, widow of John Young, brought a case before parliament to force Walter Scott of Huntly to eject him from the lands and provide her with the duties of this farm. Several men from there were declared rebels in 1619 for cutting wood on Scott of Satchells lands at Dodhead. It became the property of Rev. Alexander Cunningham about the 1660s, and was sold to James Mercer of Scotsbank around the 1720s. Thomas Elliot farmed there in the mid-19th century and Gideon Scott in the 1860s (also spelled 'Hindhope', it is 'Hyndhop' in 1510 and 'Hindhop' in 1542; it is marked 'Hyindhoop' on Blaeu's 1654 map, along with the burn, 'Hyindhoope B.' and is 'Hindehope' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; there is another farm of the same name in Oxnam Parish).

Hyndhope (hin-dup, hīnd-hōp) n. former lands in the Barony of Plenderleith, Oxnam Parish. They belonged to Andrew of Rule, passing through his 4 co-heiresses to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1454/5. The Davidsons were tenant farmers here in the 18th and 19th centuries including James, 'Dandie Dinmont'. There were Halls there in the 18th century. William Oliver was farmer there in the early 19th century and Thomas Elliot later in the 19th century (easily confused with the farm of the same name in the Ettrick valley; written 'Hindhope' on modern maps).

Hyndlee (hind-lee) n. farm and hamlet on the 'Note o the Gate' road, south of Wolfelee, in the headwaters of the Rule valley. The lands there were an old possession of the Douglasses. As part of Jedforest, the farm passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands. In 1541 the farm was valued at 25s, with half tenanted by George Turnbull in Billerwell and half by Adam Rutherford in Grange. This could one of the farms tenanted by John Oliver according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. A supposed encounter there between an old shepherd and some of the fairy folk is recounted in 'The local historian's table book' in 1844. The tenant there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, James Davidson, was partly the original for Sir Walter Scott's 'Dandie Dinmont' at 'Charlieshope'. Robert Laidlaw was there in at least 1785–88 and Thomas 1789–91. Walter Johnstone was a servant there in 1799, and in 1801 Thomas Armstrong was a shepherd and George Robson a servant. Andrew Scott was there in 1821. Later the farmer was David Pringle of Torquhan, succeeded in 1889 by Mr. Thornton. The stream that forms the extreme south-eastern portion of the Rule valley is Hyndlee Burn. A cairn called the Hare Cairn once stood near the shepherd's cottage by the Wheel Causeway (note the pronunciation stresses the first syllable; also spelled 'Hindlee', it is already 'Hyndlee' in 1538, is 'Hyndlie' in 1539 and 1541 and 'hyndla' in 1694; it is 'Hyndlie' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Hyslope (hiz-lup) n. Alexander (17th C.) town treasurer at the end of the 17th century (a variant spelling of 'Hislop').

hyrin (hīr-in) n., arch. payment received for being hired – 'Syne he'll gether his hirin' and gae Alang on his roun' ...' [WL] (also written 'hire' as in English; cf. hirin fair).

hyuck (hyuk) v. to throw, chuck, toss – 'hyuck eet ower here when ee're din, wull ee?', n. a throw (a variant of yuck; see also chuckie).

hyucker (hyu-kur) n. a big one, particularly a stone – 'it was a hyucker o a stane'.

i see ih

i (i) prep., contr., arch. in – '...They poach i' the derk, and they poach i' the licht' [UB], '...The swords o' ancient knights an' kings Lost i' the wars' [JoHa], 'While i' the frost sae snell and hoar, I stand and shiver' [JoHa], 'En' as for

-i (i) suffix -ow, e.g. in 'felli', 'piani' and 'shaddi', as well as 'tatti', etc. (see also -fi).

Ian (ee-in) n. sometimes pet name of John.

Ida (I-du) n. (b.c.517–559) ruler of the kingdom of Bernicia, formally founding it in 547 (although it had existed earlier). He was thus the earliest recorded monarch of a kingdom that probably included the Hawick area. He married Bearnoch and their sons Glappa, Adda, Æthelric, Theodoric, Frithuwald and Hussa were all supposedly kings afterwards (although some may have been grandchildren or nephews).

Ida (I-del) n. (12th/13th C.) Chaplain of Lilliesleaf Kirk, recorded as 'Idelo' in about 1201, when he witnessed a charter granting lands to Melrose Abbey.

Idel (ee-del) n. (12th/13th C.) priest of Lilliesleaf Kirk, recorded in about 1201. His name is written 'Idello'.

I Like Auld Hawick (I-līk-awld-hlīk) n. song written by Frank Hogg with music by Mrs. Euphemia Dumbreck, being one of the few Hawick songs well suited to the female voice. The words were written in 1867 for the Hawick Literary Society magazine. The music was written probably around 1876, perhaps in response to a request in the Hawick Express in 1875 when reprinting the words. It is the only one of the older Hawick songs with the tune (or words) written by a woman. The song was probably first performed in public at a farwell dinner by Hogg himself in 1879, and first sung at the Colour Bussing by R. Paterson in 1887. It is the only poetical work of Hogg's that is known. The full poem contained 7 verses, but today only the first, second and last verses are usually sung. The tune was rearranged by Adam Grant around 1930, with the publication dedicated to ex-Provost James Renwick.

I Like Auld Hawick the Best (I-līk-awld-hlīk-thu-best) n. song with words and music by Tom Ker, arranged by Adam Grant (although originally credited to 'M. Rosenberg'). Grant considered this to be his best musical arrangement of a Hawick song. It was published in 1900 and first sung at the Colour Bussing that year by Robert T. Paterson, then at 23 other Colour Bussings before WWII. It has a different chorus for each verse, often confusing the audience. The words may have been influenced by Jeffrey's 'Mary of Argyle'. Ker also wrote a second version of this song, which is never sung. For the last decades of the 20th century and the first decade of the 21st this song was regularly performed by Viv Sharp.

ilk (ilk) adj., arch. each, every – 'Item, that ilk man keippe the calsay before his awin dure ...' [BR1640], '...and six shillings and aught pence for ilk act of cattione within the town' [BR1640], '...as if ther wer ane particular paper granted by us and ilk ane of us ...' [BR1692], '...fyned ...ilke ane of them for disturbing the baylyeas and council ...' Aye, suire we'll hae that, I'll get ane for ilk leevin' soul ...' [WL] (from Old English, a variant of ilka).

Ilk (ilk) n. place or family, usually in the phrase 'of that Ilk', meaning of the main family line, in direct descent from the original family who took their name from their place of abode. Local examples have included Chisholme of that Ilk, Gledstains of that Ilk, Langlands of that Ilk and Riddell of that Ilk, all these lines being now gone. Slightly further afield we have Rutherford of that Ilk, Glendinning of that Ilk, etc. (generally only used in Scotland; in older charters it is translated from the Latin 'de eodum').

ilka (il-ka) adj., arch. each, every one – '... And ilka wife to anither can say, That's the man loos'd Jock o' the Side. Fala, &c.' [CPM], 'May ilka thing that's good attend ye, May fortune hug, and ladies friend ye' [JR], 'Wi' love or rest ilk swain is blest, From native land I'm torn away' [JTE], 'For ilka wauf o' wund that blaws dings dauds o't on the lea ...' [JoHa], 'Lament him, ilka hearty maid ...' [JoHa], '... ill-naitur (il-nā'-ur) n. bad-temper, irritability – 'What's putten ee i sic a bad tuin, ava?; Aw'm shair ee've been ill-naiter's sel aa nicht' [ECS] (also spelled 'ill-naiter').

ill-naitured (il-nā'-urd) adj. bad-tempered, having a sour disposition – 'she can be a right ill-naitured auld besom when she wants ti be'.

the Ill Raid (thu-il-rād) n. retaliatory raid of August 1513 in which Lord Alexander Home led thousands of men into England. Slowed by their booty, they were ambushed at Milfield Plain (north of Wooler) by a much smaller force of Sir William Bulmer. Several hundred Scots were killed or captured in this incident, which also led to the battle at Flodden.

Ill Rob (il-rōb) n. nickname for Robert Elliot of Ramsiegill (presumably this is ‘ill’ in the sense of harmful or vicious).

ill-scrapit (il-skrā-pee’, -pi’) adj., arch. unrefined, particularly in the phrase ‘ill-scrapit tongue’ meaning lacking in courtesy, foul-mouthed – ‘... and woe betide those who offended her. They got to run the gauntlet of her ill-scrapit tongue whenever she met them’ [RJT].

the Ill Week (thu-il-week) n. period immediately after the death of Elizabeth I of England in 1603, when there was much looting and burning throughout the Borders. It is also sometimes referred to as the ‘Busy Week’. There was a belief that until the new monarch was proclaimed, the rule of law was suspended, and hence families of the Border (particularly the west marches) determined to settle old scores. Raids were of such an intensity for several days that the period was given its name. There were serious reprisals by King James afterwards, particularly against the Grahams, but also Armstrongs, Croziers, Elliots, Irvings, etc.

Ill Will (il-wil) n. nickname for William Armstrong in the early 16th century.

ill-wull (il-wul) v., arch. to hate, wish evil upon – ‘A’ that illwull me whuspier thegither agayne me ...’ [HSR], to envy – ‘... the flichterin burdies daibbelt an dookeet; an A fair ill-wulled thum o ther plowtereen and ther swattereen’ [ECS], n., arch. envy.

ill-wusher (il-wu-shur) n., arch. term applied in the 18th and 19th centuries to someone suspected of having supernatural powers, particularly the ability to lay curses – ‘... generally go under the softer, though still suspicious, character of being uncannie or ill wishers’ [EM1820].

im (im) v. am, used for emphasis – ‘im A gaun is weel?’, ‘ee might no be, bit A im’, ‘Hev a great Common Ridin. A’m gaun ti. A already im’ [IWL], ‘As a local historian the longer A live the mair conscious A im o how little A ken’ [IWL] (note also em and um, as well as occasionally the English ‘am’).

’im (im) pron. him (used in similar contexts as in colloquial English, cf. the more common um).

the Image Gairden (thu-i-meej-gār-din) n. former name for a private school and its gardens. It was situated in the Langlands/Sunnyhill area, and can be seen on the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races. It may have been the same building that was also known as ‘Wilton Cottage’. The school was run by Agnes, daughter of Wilton Schoolmaster James Turnbull and her mother, Margaret, and was presumably a school for girls. The name came from the statuettes and carvings in the school grounds. The land there may have previously been owned by ‘Auld Cash’, and then his assistant Francis Ballantyne – ‘The ‘Image Garden’ wi’ some parks, Were soon our decent, honest Clerk’s’ [RDW], ‘Ladylaw, the F.C. Manse and the Image Garden ...’ [V&M].

impurity (im-pew-ri'-ee) n. former euphemism for the sin of fornication. Until well into the 18th century ferreting out fornicators was the business of the Kirk Session, who investigated all pieces of parish gossip. Offenders were made to stand on the 'pillar' or 'stool of repentance', often for three Sundays in a row, sometimes longer. Wealthier parishioners could escape this public exhibition by paying a hefty fine.

Imrie (im-ree) n. Carswell educated at Hawick High School, he worked for Welch's accountants. He was Cornet in 1966, the first one to be kirked at Burnfoot Church. He acted as Secretary of both the Mosstroopers' Club and Ex-Cornets and Ex-Acting Fathers Association for 10 years.

[PR1725], arch. to the extent of – '... the bailies and council unlawit ilk ane of them in 12s. to the bailies ...' [BR1643], '... were each of them fyned and onlawed in tenn pound Scotts ilke ane of them ...' [PR1708], also used redundantly – 'A met in wi' 'im' [GW], 'She's eatin' in her words' [GW], v., arch. to bring in crops, harvest – 'He inned the corn himself ...' [WNK], '... e.g., small quantities of hay which have fallen from the ricks when these have been moved or 'in'd' [ECS] (cf. i; in older documents someone described as 'in' a place, as opposed to 'of' or 'at', usually meant they were a tenant).

-in (in) suffix present participial ending, ubiquitous for verbs in Scots generally, a particular local use involved changing word order – 'She hed a bairn cairryin (i.e., She was carrying a baby). The dog hed a blinnd man leedin be a cheen (i.e. the dog was doing the leading)' [ECS] (sometimes written 'in', although the 'g' is actually missing entirely, rather than neglected; note that -een was formerly used for participial noun form, i.e. 'hei was weshin claes' versus 'she was daein the wesheen').

Ina (ī-nu) n. familiar short form for female Christian names where the first part is a male name, e.g. Georgina, Williamina or Christina.

incorporation (in-kor-pu-rā-shin) n. an incorporated body, specifically one of the trades guilds given a ‘Seal of Cause’ by the Town Council. In Hawick, like in other towns, their purpose was to regulate trade within the town, improving standards, imposing fines, etc. They had Burgess rights and duties and only Burgesses were allowed to be members of the trades from 1694. Each Trade had specific seats assigned to them in the gallery of St. Mary’s Kirk. They were also officially recognised by the Council (and each appointed 2 councillors from 1739), having jurisdiction over their members and all matters relating to that trade within the Burgh. Their officials were called quartermasters or deacons of trade, and in 1749 it was decided that the quartermasters should be appointed before Michaelmas each year. In 1781 it was fixed by a ruling from the Court of Session that each of the 7 trades would elect 2 quartermasters on the Thursday before the election of the Bailies in October, these men to sit on the Council for the next year, with no one being allowed to serve for more than 2 years successively (and each incorporation being responsible for electing a substitute in the event of the death of a quartermaster). By about 1810 there were apparently only about 60 members in total of the town’s incorporations. They also had a monopoly on their trade within the Burgh until about 1846. Members of the trades remained on the Council until it was reorganised in 1861, although by then the organisations were already on the wane. The 7 incorporations in Hawick were the weavers, shoemakers (or cordiners), skinnners (and glovers), hammermen, fleshers, tailors and bakers (or baxters). At one point the shoemakers and cordiners may have been separate incorporations, and the status of the merchants is unclear (since they are referred to as an ‘Incorporation’ in 1687). It is said that many of the records of the incorporations were carried off in the flood of 1767; however, some minute books of the hammermen, weavers and tailors are preserved in the Museum. Records exist for the trades in Selkirk, Kelso and elsewhere, which were probably similar – ‘There presently are, and shall henceforth continue, seven Incorporations within the said burgh, viz., Weavers, Tailors, Hammermen, Skinnners, Fleshers, Shoemakers, and Baxters’ [RW], ‘...the two present baylyeas of the Burgh of Hawick for themselves and in name and behalfe of the toun counsell and incorporatione thereof . . .’ [BR1701].

the Independent Kirk (thū-in-dee-pen-din’-kirk) n. evangelical church that was founded in 1798 after visits to the town by preachers James and Robert Haldane, John Aikman and Rowland Hill. The efforts were continued later by Mr. Paton (later of St. Andrews) and Mr. Arthur (later of Dalkeith). Among the original members were William Thorburn, William Laidlaw, Peter Taylor, Robert Leithead, Mr. Johnstone and David Dick. They originally met in a barn in the Backbraes and built the Tabernacle and nearby manse on the Kirkwynd in 1805 (with assistance provided by the Haldane brothers). Charles Gray was brought to Hawick as the first and only permanent minister. The congregation rose to about 150, which was the capacity of the Tabernacle. However, it had many difficulties and disappeared entirely in 1813, although it effectively led to the Congregational and Baptist Kirks in Hawick. Charles Gray accepted Baptist principles (like his patrons the Haldane brothers), leading to most of his congregation abandoning him. He subsequently left Hawick, since the number of Baptists was too small to support him. However, some carried on, to form the Hawick Baptist Church later, while others continued to worship as Independents, later becoming the Congregational Kirk. The Independent Kirk was still recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory, but with no minister listed. In 1839 it was described that there were only 18 members, who met in a school-room. In Slater's 1852 directory Rev. William Munro is listed for the Independent Chapel on Melgund Place, separate from the Congregational Chapel on O'Connell Street.

indiction (in-dik-shin) n., arch. a 15 year cycle used as a way of reckoning the year in mediæval times, also used to refer to the specific year within the cycle – '...the said yeir, month, day, hour, and place that is, Indiction and Pape before specifyt' [JW1558] (still recorded in Hawick in a sasine of 1558).

ingle cheek (ing-gul-cheek) n., arch. fireside – 'I sat by the ingle cheek, dowie an' eerie ...' [JT].

Ingles (ing-ulz, -gulz) n. Adam L. 'Adie' (1914–1991) optician and jeweller by trade, with shop at the bottom right-hand corner of the Howegate. He was born at 7 Green Terrace, started work with Inglis the joiners, then moved to Innes, Henderson's stock-room, before joining his father in his Sandbed watchmaker's shop. He served in the R.A.F. and after the War qualified as an optician and later went into partnership with his nephew Jim. In 1971 he moved to 57 High Street, but in 1974 he set up as an optician at 2 Howegate, where he worked until he retired in 1984. He was Acting Father in 1964 and President of the

Callants' and Mosstroopers' Clubs, but will always be remembered for his contributions to Hawick music. He had piano lessons as a child and organ lessons from George Smith (organist at St. Cuthbert's). He was a church organist and choir-master at St. Margaret's Kirk from the age of 18, and continued when it merged with Wilton South about 4 years later, remaining until 1959. In that year he became organist for St. George's West, and moved to the Old Parish in 1961 and in 1969 started a brief period at Trinity, finally moving to St. Mary's Kirk in 1970. He composed the music for 'We'll Follow oor Cornet', 'The Callant', 'Auld Hawick, My Dreams', 'Auld Hawick where I was Born' and 'Borthwick Water' and made new arrangements for many more songs. His work on the 1957 compilation 'The Hawick Songs', containing many revised accompaniments and several changes of key, established the versions of most of the popular songs as we know them today. He also wrote songs for other Border town's festivals. He was accompanist at Common Riding functions for a couple of decades from 1970, was the driving force behind the Callants Club records, and wrote 'Notes and Comments on the Songs of Hawick', published from his notes in 1992. He was regular pianist for the Callants', Mosstroopers' and 1514 Clubs. For the 1514 Club he instigated the 'Hawick Sings' concerts and wrote the music for the Club's song. He died in the Cottage Hospital and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Alexander (18th C.) wright in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1798. He could be the Alexander, married to Margaret Elder, whose son Alexander was baptised in Hawick in 1791, with witnesses James Hume and John Elder (although the entry is hard to read). Alexander (1822/3–51) tenant in Blackburn, son of James. He is recorded at Blackburn in 1851, farming 11 arable acres and 1800 acres of moor, with 3 labourers on the farm. His son Alexander died in St. Boswell's in 1902, aged 50. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He also had daughters Isabella (b.c.1846) and Jane (b.c.1850). Alexander (19th C.) Hawick resident. In the 1887 and 1888 business directory, he is described as an artist's colourman and picture-framer, with premises on the Exchange Arcade. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Walter Hall (b.1873); George Scott (b.1874), painter in Leicester; Alexander (b.1878), painter-decorator in Hawick; and William Scott Anderson (b.1884), local watercolour artist. Alexander 'Alex' (1878–1961) brother of W.S.A. and George, he was born in Hawick. He had a picture-framing business, and also later became a house decorator, based at 10 High Street and then Burlington House, North Bridge Street. His brother William (W.S.A.) also worked for the business. They used to display paintings by other local artists, Tom Scott being the most prominent among them. He retired to Edinburgh after the War. George Scott (1874–1952) son of Alexander and Agnes Scott. He was brother of Alexander and W.S.A. After studying at the Royal College of Art in London he became a painter and lithographer in Leicester. He was Principal of the Leicester College of Art. He had works exhibited at the Royal Academy and the Royal Scottish Academy. He painted a view of Haggishaa, as well as 'Goldielands and the Teviot from Overhall', 'Scotch Fir near Wilton Dean' and 'Sunrise near Scarborough', which are in the Museum. J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Bowanhill in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. James (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (1705–94) born in Ewesdale, he was tenant farmer in Millholm in Castleton Parish. When the Duke of Buccleuch took over Millholm he was moved to be tenant of Blackburn. He married Janet Anderson, who died in 1760, aged 50. He secondly married Agnes Brydon, who died in 1807, aged 71. Their children included: James (b.1762), who took over as tenant of Blackburn; Elizabeth (b.1765), who married Archibald Scott; Janet (b.1767), who married Thomas Murray; William (b.1769), who married Elizabeth Ballantyne; Alexander (b.1771), who married Margaret McLaren; Agnes Brydon (b.1773); and John (b.1781), who married Isabella Ballantyne. He is buried at Ettleton, next to 'Ingles' families of Newcastleton. James (18th/19th C.) carrier, operating between Hawick and Berwick, according to Pigot's 1825 directory. James (1760/1–1845) farmer at Blackburn, to the north-west of Newcastleton. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and still there in 1841. He married Mary Elliot, who died in 1816, aged 55. He secondly married Isabella (or 'Bella') Oliver, who died in 1872, aged 87. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery, along with 4 of his children, who died in infancy or were stillborn. His son Alexander (b.1822/3) succeeded as farmer at Blackburn, and he also had a daughter Janet (b.c.1827). Mrs. S.A. local artist who made a coloured sketch of a print by James Dalgleish, 'High Street Hawick 1839'. William (b.1815/6)

born in Lyne Parish, Peeblesshire, he was a shepherd. In 1841 he was at Foulage, Peeblesshire, but in 1851 and 1861 was shepherd at Whaupshaw in the Borthwick valley. Later he may have been shepherd at Priesthaugh. His wife was Agnes Fleming, from Drumelzier. Their children included: James (b.1842); Thomas (b.c.1844); Catherine (b.c.1847); Christian (b.c.1839); Agnes (b.c.1856), who probably married William Bell, who farmed at Langraw; and Jane (b.c.1858). William (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Murray and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1853. William Scott Andison 'W.S.A.', 'Wullie' (1884–c.1950) local artist, son of Alexander and Agnes Scott, brother of Alexander and George. His paintings are usually signed 'W.S.A.I.' or sometimes 'W.I.' He was an apprentice with Francis Scott, painter and decorator at 26 High Street, later moving to work in his brother Alex's business. Tom Scott was a major influence on him as a young artist, and one can see similarities in their watercolour styles. He painted many scenes of long gone parts of Hawick, including a picture of the 'Auld Mid Raw', about 1880, which is in the Museum, inside of which was found a 'secret' painting of Needle Street. He made a well-known sketch of St. Mary's from the Kirkstyle in 1909 and the Museum also has 'The End of the Wood'. He had 23 paintings exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy. He also worked as a photographer, based on the High Street with his brother Alex and then at Burlington House, 25 North Bridge Street. A bachelor all his days, he lived at 9 Lothian Street, and was said to have a timid nature and delicate constitution. He died at a hospital in Melrose (see also Inglis).

Ingleside (ing-gul-sīd) n. villa built on Buccleuch Road around 1903 for Robert L. Mactaggart, designed by J.P. Alison. It is a grade C listed building.

Inglis (ing-ulz -gulz) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Thorbrand and their children included John (b.1642), Janet (b.1644), William (b.1646) and Janet (again, b.1649). His surname is recorded as 'English'. Adam (17th C.) listed among the deficient of Hassendean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was at Wester Groundistone, 'Adam Inglis there out of the shire'. He could be the Adam 'in huntla' (presumably Huntlaw), married to Margaret Minto, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1682, with witnesses Walter Knox and Thomas Wilkie. Alexander (15th C.) from the Manor family, he must have still held some lands near Branxholme. In 1461 the lands of 'Kirkstone and Toftis' in the Lordship of Branxholme were confirmed to his daughter and heir Katherine, wife of 'Arnou Gourlau'. He may be the same Alexander 'de Tarvate' who witnessed a document for the Douglasses in 1457 and who witnessed a charter in 1475/6. Alexander (15th C.) proposed as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1471, after the resignation of Patrick Hume. However, he appears not to have taken up the office. It is possible he is the same Alexander who became Dean of Dunkeld in 1477 and Archdeacon of St. Andrews in 1480. Alexander (15th C.) son and heir of Alexander of West Tarvet. He witnessed the charter of Over Newhall, granted by David Lindsay of the Byres to James Scott of Kirkurd in 1484. In 1487/8 he had a charter for Tarvet and in 1489 had a charter for other lands in Fife, along with his wife Janet Durham. Probably the same Alexander of Tarvet is also recorded as witness to a charter in 1508 and had a grant of lands in 1513. Alexander (18th C.) recorded in 1791 when his son Alexander was baptised in Hawick. The entry is hard to read, but his wife may have been Margaret Elder, with John Elder as one of the witnesses. Alexander (19th C.) married Mary Miller. Their son James was baptised in Hawick in 1825. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Inglis and their children included: Jane (b.1849); and Alexander (b.1852). Alexander (1877–1964) nephew of John, to whom he was apprenticed. He then became articled to J.P. Alison, rising to an assistant there in 1896. He moved briefly to a firm in Edinburgh, but returned in 1901 when his uncle died and he inherited the joinery business. He developed an 'Arts & Crafts' design style. He worked on several major projects as J.P. Alison's assistant, including the Con Club, Liberal Club and Stirches House. He also designed the Fever Hospital at Burnfoot (1902), cottages on the Cavers estate, the Stewart Memorial in St. Andrew's Kirk, additions to the Cottage Hospital and the Golf Clubrooms, Newcastleton Hospital (c.1905), Hawick Slaughterhouse (1907), additions to Anderson Sanitorium, Turnbull's Dyeworks office block (1911), Hawick Swimming Pool (1912) and alterations to Wolfelee House (1913). He established a building construction course in Hawick, which was taken over by the School Board. In 1950 he became partner with his assistant Charles F.J. Turnbull. He wrote an article for the Transactions on the old Southdean Kirk. He married

Jane Miller Cooper. Andrew (b.1806/7) born in Southdean Parish, he was a joiner at Deanbrae Cottages in Cavers Parish. He married Jane Nichol and their children included: John; James; Andrew; and Thomas. William, who was also a joiner at Deanbrae, was probably his brother. His firm may be the A. Inglis & Son who were responsible for joinery at Lyle & Scott's factory in 1874/5. Andrew (19th/20th C.) resident of Nether Tofts. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Archibald (17th C.) son of Richard, he succeeded his father as minister of Douglas in 1654 and moved to Moffat in 1660. He was commissioned by the Synod of Dumfries to that of Lothian and Tweeddale regarding union. He was also named as a minister who refused to conform to Episcopacy in 1662, although there is no evidence to support this, since he was clearly an Episcopalian minister afterwards. About 1663 he moved to Westerkirk, was translated to Lochmaben in 1667 and then became minister at Ashkirk in 1675. It is unclear whether he served Ashkirk in the period 1679–85, when the previous Presbyterian minister, Robert Cunningham was reinstated. In any case he was moved to the Parsonage of Glasgow in 1685. He became Rector of Glasgow University in 1686, but had to flee at the Revolution in 1689. In 1694 he became Rector of Killybegs and Raphoe in Donegal, Ireland. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1789 he married Marion Stoddart (or possibly Stavert). Their children (baptised in Yarrow Parish) included: James (b.1790); Margaret (b.1792); and Agnes (b.1795). Francis (b.1804/5–83) son of William and Elizabeth Ballantyne. He was a grocer in Newcastle, listed in 1837 and 1852. In the 1851 census he is recorded as a labourer, at about 9 North Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet Scott and their children included: William; Jane (b.1830), who married Robert Lunn; Elisa; Andrew; and Archibald. George (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators for Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when he resigned Mangerton to his superior in order for these lands to pass to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as 'Georgium Inglis'. Harold 'Harry' (17th C.) servant of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. In 1623 he compiled an inventory of the titles and deeds in the Thirlestane charter chest. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Laidlaw and their children included Janet (b.1694). The witnesses were John Cant and James Brown. James (17th C.) son of James of East Craigie and

Isobel Heriot. He was Chamberlain to the Earl of Minto, recorded in a bond of 1673. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1731 when his daughter Helen was baptised. He is probably the James who married Helen Beattie in Robertson in 1730. James (1723–1806) schoolmaster in Hawick, son of Walter and Margaret Wilson, he was born in Hawick. He was father of Town Clerk James, local prankster 'Wat' and Hawick's postmistress, Joanna. He was Hawick Parish Schoolmaster for a long period. He was master during the flood of 1767, when the school on Slitrig Bank was washed away. In fact he was teacher at 'the English Schuil' from 1756 until his death, a period of about 50 years. Apparently before his death and in several years following, his ex-pupils would meet for dinner at the Cross Keys Inn to celebrate his birthday. In 1758 he was paid 3 shillings for teaching a poor boy from Cavers Parish. Complaints about his low salary were responded to with an increase in 1768. He is recorded as serving as postmaster in 1772 and also in 1789, so he must have held this position for at least that period. He also served as Session Clerk, Precentor and Reader for the Parish, as well as Heritor's Clerk. He was presumably the man who wrote the register of baptisms etc. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for writer (and Town Clerk) John Gledstains (who was his brother-in-law), when he is recorded as 'English Schoolmaster'; in the same year Gledstains and surgeon James Wilson witnessed a baptism for him, and in 1775 he and James Wilson witnessed a baptism for John Gledstains. He witnessed another baptism for John Gledstains in 1781. In 1767 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Balmer. He was 'Postmr' in 1784 when he witnessed a baptism for what appears to be a Hume, and separately (on the same page) 'Session Clerk' when he witnessed a baptism for miller John Scott. He was witness for baptisms of 2 children of John Goodfellow and Janet Deans in 1784 and 1786 and for William Jackson and Janet Miller in 1788 and 1791. He was recorded (by himself!) as Postmaster in 1789 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Peter Wilson and was probably the Postmaster who witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk James (his son) in 1792. A letter from him in 1799 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He married Joan (or Joanna) Gledstains in 1757 and she died in 1795. He may be the James from Hawick recorded in 3 letters to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. Their children included: James (b.1757); James (again, b.1759), Town Clerk; Elizabeth

(b.1760); Walter (b.1762); Joanna (b.1766), post-mistress; Agnes (b.1768); and John (b.1770), who was a baker. James (1759–c.1820s) son of James and Joanna Gledstains, he was nephew of Town Clerk John Gledstains and was Town Clerk himself 1790–1810. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784) and is probably the James from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is probably the writer in Hawick who paid the Horse Tax in 1789–97 and the James listed among local men who contributed money for the war against France around 1799. He may also be the James who was Ensign in the Hawick Military Association (volunteers). He was recorded as 'Town Clk' in 1792 when one of his children was baptised in Hawick. He married Helen Bunyan in 1792 and their children included: Betty (b.1792); James (b.1794); Joanna or Joan (1795–1815); and Christian (b.1799). The witnesses in 1792 were Thomas Bunyan, farmer at Teindside, and Postmaster James (probably his father). Although it has been stated that he died in 1810, this was only the year he ceased to be Town Clerk. He was certainly alive in 1814 when there was a court case regarding a document he had drawn up for a shepherd (whose wife had apparently been compelled to sign, although she could not write her own name). He is surely also the 'Ingles Jas.' listed as a writer and notary on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 directory (probably drawn up a year or 2 earlier). His ledgers covering 1781–97 are in the National Archives of Scotland. He may be the James who witnessed baptisms in 1802 and 1805 for Bailie Robert Armstrong. James (18th/19th C.) farmer on the High Street, probably at No. 26 in 1841. He married Ann Stewart and their children included Elizabeth (b.1827), William, Ann, Margaret, Janet and Jane. He could be the James 'Junr., Mealdealer' who was on the 1817 short-list for Cornet; in which case he may be the James, son of James and Helen Bunyan, born in Hawick in 1794. James (18th/19th C.) carrier listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He ran between Hawick and Berwick once a week. James (b.1790/1) spinner from Selkirk, he lived at Appletreehall. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He married Margaret Thorburn. Their children included: John Thorburn (b.1821); Margaret (b.1823); William Thorburn (b.1826); Alexander (b.1838), who probably died young; Thomas Thorburn (b.1831); Andrew (b.1835); and Andrew (again, b.1838). James (1793/4–1876) labourer in Newcastleton. In 1861

he was on South Hermitage Square. He married Helen Robson, who died in 1873, aged 74. Their children included: Adam (d.1829), Walter (d.1841), Betty (d.1844) and Frances (d.1846), who all died young; James (1824/5–53); and Francis (b.c.1847). They are buried at Ettleton. He may be the James recorded as grocer in Newcastleton in 1835–40 and then labourer in 1841; he was a grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Pigot's 1837 directory, along with Francis who was also a grocer. James (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had a local connection and could have been related to Thomas, who also subscribed. James (1802/3–95) mason in Newcastleton, son of John and Isobel Ballantyne. In 1841 he was living at about 5 South Hermitage Street and in 1851 and 1861 was a 'Stone Dyke Builder' on South Hermitage Street. In 1825 he married Isobel (d.1892), daughter of Adam Glendinning. Their children included Elizabeth (1825–1908); Isabella (b.1827); Caroline (b.1829); John (b.1831); Margaret (1833–1921), who married John Scott; Adam (b.1835); Francis (1837–1922); William (b.1839); Alexander (Sansy, 1841–1917); Thomas (1843–74), who died in East India; Charlotte (b.1845); Robert (1847–1913); and James (b.1851), who married Isabel Edgar. They are buried in Ettleton. James (b.1816/7) from Ancrum, he was a joiner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Back Row. In 1861 he was listed as a journeyman cabinet-maker at Myrselawgreen. His wife was Mary and their children included Elizabeth, John, Robert, James T. and Andrew. James (b.c.1820) spinner, living at the Crescent in Hawick. He was listed in 1841 among heads of households for Wilton Kirk. He was probably eldest son of James and Margaret Thorburn. James (19th C.) miller at Spittal-on-Rule in the 1860s. James (1842–88) son of James, who was shepherd at Whaupshaw up the Borthwick. He worked as a shepherd and later as a cattle dealer, dairyman and butcher. In 1868 in Teviothead Parish he married Eliza (b.1847), daughter of shepherd James Elliot and Mary Nichol. Their children were: Mary Jane (b.1869); William (b.1870); Agnes (b.1873); James (b.1876); John (b.1878); and Walter (b.1880). He died in Hawick. Joanna 'Miss Inglis' (b.1766) post-mistress until 1809, sister of 'Wat' and James (since she was never referred to as her first name, she could have been a different child of James and Joanna Gledstains). She apparently succeeded in the position from a letter carrier named Tinlin who could neither read nor write. John of Manor (15th C.) son of Sir William of Manor. He had a charter confirming him in his father's lands of Manor from the superior Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1420 he exchanged half of Branhholme with Sir Robert Scott of Murdostoun, as confirmed in a 'letter of transumpt' in 1431. Thus began the long association of the Scotts of Buccleuch with Branhholme and the area immediately to the south of Hawick. In 1431 he was also witness to the document transferring the lands of Heap from James Langlands of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch. His wife was Janet. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, to whom he and his wife resigned their lands of Branhholme etc. in 1435. Sometime before this (the charter is undated) he granted the lands of 'Kyrktoun and Toftis' in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon, this being witnessed by his brother Robert, Sir Thomas, Keeper of Castle Douglas and William of Manorhead (surely near relatives), as well as Robert Scott of Murthockstone and 'James of Ra', Burgess of Selkirk. John (15th C.) Rector of Southdean recorded in 1471 as witness to a charter granted by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to Robert Graham of Fintree. He is listed as 'D. Joh. Inglis rectore de Soudone'. Another John was also listed as a witness, and so may have been related. John 'Johnnie' or 'Step Stately' (16th/17th C.) Hawick man recorded in 1612 along with several others for charging too high an interest on loaned money. His name is missing from the original list, but included as 'Johnne Inglis, callit Step Staitlie' in the list of those found guilty. He appeared to answer the charge, and hence presumably paid a fine and was released. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Turnbull and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1636. He may be the John 'Inglis' who witnessed a baptism for Robert Elliot in 1639. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Hardie and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1650. Rev. John (d.1743) minister of Southdean. He was licensed by Selkirk Presbytery in 1711 and ordained at Southdean in 1718. He preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. In 1736 John Oliver became his assistant. When he died (unmarried) he left a library of 119 volumes to his successors. John (18th C.) married Euphan Rutherford in Southdean Parish in 1738. He is probably the John whose unnamed child was baptised in Southdean in 1740. John (18th C.) resident at Broadlee when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1743. This son could be the John listed at Borthwickbrae in the 1770s. Other children of his may have been: Bessie (b.1745); James (b.1748); William (b.1750); and possibly Margaret (b.1755), who may have married John Davidson. He is probably the John (1704/5–1780) in 'Elbridg' (most likely Eilrig) who is buried in Borthwick Waas along with his children Elizabeth (1745/6–75) and James (1747/8–80). He seems likely to be the John who married Margaret Roger in Robertson in 1742. John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Grizel Beattie and their children included Janet (b.1751). John (18th C.) married Magdalene Gledstains in Hawick Parish in 1768. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1771 and Borthwickbrae in 1773. His children included: John (b.1771); Elizabeth (b.1773), who may be the 'Lilias' who married George Scott of Wilton in 1789; Margaret (b.1776); and Robert (b.1779). He could be the John, son of John, born at Broadlee in 1743. John (1770–1832) son of teacher James, he was a baker in Hawick. He is recorded as a baker on the 1799 list for the Militia ballot. In Pigot's 1825/6 directory he was recorded as a baker on the Howegate. He may be the John, married to Martha Murray, whose son James was baptised in Hawick in 1796. His unnamed child died in 1808. His death in Hawick is recorded in 1832. John (b.c.1775) wright at Deanbrae. He was living at Deanbrae Bar in 1841. His wife was Elspeth and their children included in William, James and Thomas. He may be the resident of Cavers who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He may be the John who married Elspeth Scott in Southdean Parish in 1805, with children baptised there including Andrew (b.1806) and John (b.1808). It is possible that the same John was wright at Appletreehall according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. John (b.c.1780) 'Driver' at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. John (b.c.1780) shoemaker in Newcastleton according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) married Christian Hall. Their daughter Betty was baptised in the East Bank Kirk in 1806. John (1797/8–1861) descended from the Walter Gledstains who was Town Clerk of Hawick. He worked as a framework knitter in Hawick. In 1838 he married Mary Blaikie, and she died in 1861 aged 62. He was father of John the local writer and museum curator. He was recorded as a handloom weaver on the Loan in 1841 and 1851. In 1861 he was a 'Chelsea Pensioner' and frameworker at 2 Loan. His children were: Joan, who married Robert Whalley in Lancashire and emigrated to Australia; John (1838–1928), local poet; and Martha (or 'Matty', b.c.1840). He could be the John from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821.

John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Lockie and their children included: John (b.1819); and James (b.1821).

John (b.1808/9) from Southdean Parish, he was a joiner at Newmill Damfoot. He was there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Susan, from Dumfries, and they had an adopted daughter, also Susan. He may be the John who married Susana Anderson in Hawick Parish in 1839. He could be related to Andrew (b.1805/6), who was also a joiner from Southdean.

John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Watson in Hawick Parish in 1836.

John (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Robina Currie and their son James was baptised in 1854.

John (b.1829/30) farmer at Salenside Lodge in Ashkirk Parish. He was probably son of William. In 1861 he was farmer there and living with his wife Helen, children Beatrice and William, and sister Agnes.

John (b.1829/30) carter at 78 High Street. He was recorded as 'Farmer of 10 acres & Carter' there in 1861, living with his mother Jessie (from Crailing) and his cousin James Taylor.

John (19th C.) member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880.

John (1838–1928) local poet who worked in the hosiery industry and was later Curator of the Museum. Born in Hawick (in the 'Hole in the Waa' on Drumlanrig Square), he was son of John (a 'woollen journeyman', descended from the Gledstains of Cocklaw) and Mary Blakie. It is said that his 2 grandfathers were schoolmaster in Hawick and the last Coble Pool ferryman (although other information suggests they were baker John Inglis and Peter, not Hector Bleakie, so perhaps these were his great-grandfathers). He worked in the tweed industry for Wilson & Armstrong. In 1872 he moved to Guelph, Ontario with his young family, and there worked for a hosiery firm, which was co-owned by David McCrae (father of poet John McCrae, famous for the WWI poem 'In Flanders Field'); he wrote several poems while living in Guelph. However, after only 2 years (apparently after suffering a bereavement) the family returned to Hawick and he worked as foreman for Wilson & Glenny. His poem 'Borderland' was first published in Guelph in 1875. He was writer of the words for the well-known songs 'The Banner Blue' and 'Hawick Among the Hills', as well as 'Bonny Brieryhill' and many other poems contained in the book 'The Borderland and other poems' (1879, with 2nd edition in 1907). After retiring he became Curator of the Museum, setting out the exhibits after the move from the Buccleuch Memorial to Wilton Lodge, and continuing in the position for the rest of his life. He was also a Volunteer, where he was known as a good marksman, was a Director of the Hawick Working Men's Building & Investment Co., and also involved with the Border Bards' Association and the Foresters. He was an elder of Wilton Church and a lifelong abstainer. He married Ellen (or Helen) D. Rodger, who died in 1907, aged 65. They had 6 children: John (1864–1935), who married Isabella Turnbull; Andrew, who was a trooper with the Imperial Yeomanry, killed at Bethlehem, South Africa in 1900; Robert (1868–1933); William; Mary Ellen (1882–1971), who married George Storie; and Elizabeth, who died in infancy in Canada in 1872. He died in his 91st year at Wilton Lodge and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. His photograph is in the Museum.

John (1864–1935) eldest son of John the poet. He married Isabella Turnbull and their children were John, Maggie, William and Douglas Rodger (1899–1989).

John (20th C.) Superintendent of Wilton Lodge Park. He was in charge when Hawick won the Britain in Bloom award in 1992.

Katherine (15th C.) daughter and heir of Alexander. She married 'Arnou' Gourlay. In 1461 she inherited the lands of 'Kirkstone and Toftis' in the Lordship of Braxholme according to a sasine given by Walter Scott of Braxholme.

Lillias (18th C.) chambermaid at Borthwickbrae in 1785, when she was working for John Elliot. She married George Scott in Robertson Parish in 1789. She was 'Lillie' in 1790 when their son Robert was baptised in Wilton and 'Lillies Inglis' in 1793 when their daughter Sophia was baptised (perhaps named after the daughter of Lord Napier, who was born at Wilton Lodge in 1791). She was probably a maid at Wilton Lodge in the 1790s, working for Lady Napier. In 1799 she went to Yair House to attend Lady Pringle, and stayed there to have her own children, 5 days after Charlotte Pringle was born at Yair. These were the twins, named Francis Napier Scott (after Lord Napier) and Alexander Pringle Scott (after the Laird of Whytbank and Yair); on the baptism record her name appears as 'Elanor'. She may be the same woman as 'Elizabeth' who was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1773, daughter of John Inglis. Marion (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. Mrs. ?? (18th C.) recorded in the description of the flood of 1767, when 2 houses to the east of hers were swept away, this being somewhere near Towerdykeside. She may have kept an inn or similar. Patrick (15th C.) part of a 'retour of inquest' held in Hawick in 1424 to decide on the inheritance of part of the Barony of Hownam. Most of the other men were quite local. He was 'Patricium Inglise' in 1427 on the 'retour' for the Barony of Hawick. Robert (17th C.) maltman in Hawick. In about 1651 he was judged by the Bailies to pay '£30 to the town's use, because he was not burdened with quartering the English army in February and March last'. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Redfordgreen in 1723 and Henwoodie in 1728. He married Bessie Thomson in Robertson in 1727 and their children included Henry (b.1728). Francis (b.1723) may also have been his child. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Burnfoot according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included William (b.1804), Robert (b.1808) and James (b.1810). Robert (19th C.) tenant farmer at Wolfehopelee. He married Joan, daughter of William Elliot, who was shepherd at Wauchope. Robert (19th C.) married Betty Hall in Castleton Parish in 1837. Sir Simon (15th C.) uncle of John of Manor and Branhholme, and hence probably brother of Sir William. He was granted the lands of 'Kyrktoun and Toftis' in the Barony of Hawick by his nephew John; the charter is undated, but must have been before John resigned the lands to his son Thomas in 1435. Other witnesses include Sir Thomas, Keeper and Bailie of Castle Douglas, and William of Manorhead, Laird of Langholm, as well as Robert Scott of Murthockstone. Simon (15th C.) recorded as 'dominus Symoni Ynglis' in the will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme, when he was bequeathed 40 shillings. He was probably a minister of one of the local churches. Thomas of Manor (15th C.) son of John of Branhholme and Murdostoun. He had a charter of the lands of 'Brankishelme, Goldilandis, Quitlaw, Quitrig, Todschawhillis, Harwod and Kirkton tofts' given by the Earl of Douglas in 1435 (having been resigned by his father and mother). In 1446 he exchanged the second half of Branhholme and other lands in the Barony of Hawick (Todshawhill, Todshawhaugh, Goldielands, Whitlaw and Whitrig) for lands in Lanarkshire (Murdostoun and Hartwood) with Sir Walter Scott, thereby effectively ending the local influence of the Inglis family; in this charter he is recorded as 'Thomas Ingelis de Mennar, dominus de Brankishame'. In 1449 he was 'Thoma Ynglis de Murthowstoun' when he witnessed the charter of renunciation of Lochurd and Kirkurd by Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was married twice, his son William succeeding to Murdostoun, while John was given the lands of Manorhead. As well as John, sons with his second wife, Christian, included Oswald and Gavin. Thomas (15th/16th C.) perhaps a descendant of Thomas of Branhholme. In 1530, with his permission, his wife Christian sold her lands of Philhope to William Brydon, Vicar of Auld Roxburgh. James Scott, Burgess of Selkirk, acted as her procurator and the 'instruments' were sought at the house of Janet Porteous wife of another Brydon in Selkirk. Thomas (17th C.) surgeon-apothecary in Kelso. In 1691 he and his wife Margaret Scott had a bond with Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge for the lands of Hobsburn. This was continued in a document on 1693, but discharged in 1694 when payment was made by Henry Elliot of Harwood. Given the habits of the times, either he or his wife could have been related to Elliott. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, he lived at Howford. He married Helen Stoddart and their children included Isabel (b.1762). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Borthwick Burnfoot in 1787. He married Nelly Turner in Robertson in 1784 and their children included Robert (b.1787) and James (b.1791). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had a local connection and could have been related to James, who also subscribed. Walter (d.bef. 1777) resident of the Hawick area. The death of his son John is recorded in 1777. He could be the Walter 'Engliss' whose son John was baptised in Kirkton in 1728. Walter 'Wat' (1762-c.1830) candle-maker with a shop at 2 Tower Knowe. He was son of James and Joanna Gledstains and brother of James, the Town Clerk. He was a lover of practical jokes, sticking coins to the pavement, and once cooking his dog for some guests. He once tricked the exciseman with a keg of water hidden in the pool by the Auld Brig (while the keg of smuggled gin they were looking for was hidden in a friend's house, although in the end the friend kept the gin, knowing he could not complain to anyone).

He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for William Duncan in 1793. In 1796 he was involved in a prank about revolution breaking out in Hawick, which was believed enough to appear as a story in the British Chronicle in Kelso, and this ultimately led to the Kelso Mail appearing after the Chronicle went defunct. He was listed as a merchant in Hawick in 1797 when he paid the dog tax – ‘For mischief and for planning plots Ye’ve aye ta’en muckle pride; Ye keep yer neibours a’ in fear, Yer fauts they winna hide. Ye’ve aye made fun o’ other folk, At that ye never fail; Ye play yer pranks on young and auld, Ye made the Kelso Mail’ [BY], ‘Auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’s there, Biddy the Hawker’s sellin’ preens; Wat Inglis is at his tricks yince mair, And there’s baith Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI]. Walter (b.c.1770s) tailor in Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Walter (b.c.1770s) labourer at Greenhill according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Probably the same Walter was a labourer at Synton North Mains on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may have been brother of William, who was a labourer at Greenhill in 1801. He may be the Walter who married Mary Hastie, and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: William (b.1802); and George (b.1804). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Barbara Hall and their children included: Helen (b.1813); and Alexander (b.1815). Walter (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Sibbald and their son John was baptised in 1835. Walter (19th C.) schoolmaster of St. Cuthbert’s School for a short period in 1893/4, between Mr. Turnbull and Mr. Gillis. Sir William (d.c.1420) probably brother of Sir Simon and also related to Sir Thomas, who was Keeper of Castle Douglas and William of Manorhead, who was Laird of Langholm. He was the first of the Inglis of Murdostoun, who had a family home at Branhholme. During a foray in 1395 he answered the challenge of the English champion Thomas Struthers (or Strother) and killed him in single combat at Rulehaugh. This was witnessed by Archibald, Earl of Douglas and Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, the two Wardens of the Marches. Another version of events describes how his men surrounded Jedburgh Castle, scaled the walls with ladders and attacked Struthers (who was custodian of the Castle). They were forced to flee when the English soldiers returned from the town, and he was then challenged to combat by Struthers for breaking his oath to observe a truce.

In 1396 King Robert III granted him the barony of Manor, south-west of Peebles, in recognition of this deed (all of that barony except the lands of Hundelshope, which belonged to William of Gledstains, ancestor of the local Gledstains family). He was succeeded by his son John, while another son was Robert and his grandson was Thomas. William of Murdostoun (15th/16th C.) son of Thomas. In at least the period 1485–92 he leased the lands of Glenpyet in the Yarrow valley. It is possible that the same William was recorded as tenant of Phaup (in the Ettrick valley) in 1494/5 when he was able to compone for stealing sheep and associating with ‘traitors of Leven’. Probably the same William ‘Ynglis’ obtained remission from the King at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5. William (15th/16th C.) of Langlandshill (in Peeblesshire). He had a sasine for Langlandshill in about 1500 and may have been related to the family of Murdostoun. He was recorded at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1502. He witnessed a charter for lands in Peeblesshire in 1506/7. In 1512 he was given lands at Mervinslaw by Roger Langlands of Wilton for 1 penny ‘blench farm’, payable at Pentecost in Wilton Kirk. He may therefore have been a relative of the Langlands family also. His brother David was also a witness to this charter. Also in 1512 he had a respite, along with John Symonton of that Ilk for making counterfeit money. William (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branhholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. William (16th C.) recorded in Synton Parkhead in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between John Scott in Kirkhouses and Walter Scott in Ashkirk. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Hawick who was among those cited by the Privy Council in 1612 for charging interest of more than 10 percent. He appeared to answer the charge. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Preacher and their children included William (b.1661). William (17th C.) servant to William Lowis in Catslack-knowe in 1684 he was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Warden and their son Thomas was baptised in 1710. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was in Robertson itself in 1710, 1713 and 1718. His children included: Margaret (b.1706); Robert (b.1710); John (b.1713); and James (b.1718). William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He was recorded as ‘servant in Crumhaugh’ in 1719.

He married Margaret Wilson and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1719); William (b.1721); and James (b.1723). The witnesses in 1721 William Cunningham and 'servant' Walter Scott and in 1721 were Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and Bailie George Martin. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1763 he married Helen Murray, from the same parish. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlside in 1772. His children included Mary (b.1772) and Janet (b.1774). William (18th C.) resident of Appotside Moor when his children were baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1786 and 1788. His children included Robert (b.1778), John (b.1780), William (b.1782), Walter (b.1784) Isabel (b.1786); and Betty (b.1788). William (b.1769) born at Milnholm, son of John and Agnes Brydon. He lived in Castleton Parish. He could be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Elizabeth (1776–1860), daughter of Francis Ballantyne, who was born at Whithaughburn. Their children included: Francis, who married Janet Scott; James, who married Helen Robson; Agnes, who married Thomas Hall; Elizabeth, who married William Hardie; Robert (d.1892), who married Elizabeth Hall; and Janet, who married James Grieve. William (b.c.1780) labourer at Greenhill according to the 1801 Militia ballot for Ashkirk Parish. He may have been brother of Walter, who was recorded at Greenhill in 1799. William (b.c.1780) from Stow Parish, he was farmer at Salenside. He was recorded there in 1841 and 1851, farming 44 acres. He married Betsy (or Betty) Harvey, from St. Boswell's. Their children included: Janet (b.1820); Helen (b.1822); Margaret (b.1824); William (b.1826); James (b.c.1828); and Jane (b.1830). He may also have been father of John, who farmed at Salenside Lodge. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bonchester recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (1796/7–1851) merchant in Hawick, who was Cornet in 1827. He was proprietor of the inn and attached ballroom at 64 High Street, which was later known as the Half-Moon Hotel. The well near there also popularly bore his name. His property is marked there on Wood's 1824 map, and also the well on the street. In 1837 and 1841 he was on the High Street and listed as a grocer. He was still listed as a vintner on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory, although he was deceased by then. Late in life (in 1846) he married Jessie Best, who kept a hotel at 16 Buccleuch Street with her widowed mother (Margaret Best, nee Rae). Their son William was also Cornet. His wife must have survived him, since the inn also became known as 'Mrs. Inglis'. She later moved to 78 High Street. William (1802/3–85) born in Yarrow Parish, he was farmer at Salenside in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was farmer at Barebacklaw in Ashkirk Parish, farming 25 acres. In 1861 he was farming 80 acres at Salenside and living with his son William. He married Isabella Glendinning (from Dumfries) and their children included: John (b.1828); John (again, b.1829); Euphan (b.1831); Helen (b.1834); Nancy (b.1836); Isabella (b.1841); and William (b.1844/5). It is unclear whether he was related to the William recorded earlier at Salenside. He is buried in Ashkirk Cemetery. William (1818/9–1885) quarryman in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living at about 7 North Hermitage Street. He married Marion Murray, who died in 1887, aged 71. Their children included: Helen (1845/6–54); Robert (1848/9–75); James (1849/50–75); and Robina (1833/4–98). They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. William (19th C.) wool merchant of Wellogate Bank. He took an early photograph of the old Town House of Hawick, also showing the Cross Well. He was for a long time a staunch member of Hawick Free Kirk, being an elder and Clerk of the Deacon's Court. However, he resigned in 1887 after objecting to the minister allowing a parade of volunteers in the church, but withdrew his resignation after huge consternation among the congregation. He was also known for being a staunch Temperance supporter and long operated the 'magic lantern' at meetings of the Sunday School and Band of Hope. He married Jessie Blaikie (daughter of saddler George), who died in 1905, aged 75. William (1840/1–81) joiner in Newcastleton. He married Margaret Currie, who died in 1880, aged 33. Their children included James (1873–1883). He may be the William recorded at Stichelhill Limery in 1841. William (b.1848/9) son of Cornet William of the Half-Moon Hotel and Jessie Best. He was Cornet himself in 1868. He attended school in Kirkton, perhaps where his mother's family had come from. By 1881 he was proprietor of the Half-Moon Inn. William (1847/8–1909) builder in Newcastleton, son of Peter. He married Mary Dickie, who died in 1914, aged 76. Their children included: John (1871/2–1909); Mina (1875/1964), who married Robert M. Sibbald; and Jessie (1877/8–1913). They are buried at Ettleton. William (19th/20th C.) farmer at Doorpool. He was owner in the early 20th century, when the farm was valued at about £210 (formerly 'Englis', 'Inglische', 'English', 'Ingliyshe', 'Inglis' and variants; see also Ingles).

Inglis' (ing-ul-zees) n. former carrier's firm, also known as 'the Berwick Smack', which made weekly trips between Hawick and Berwick before the arrival of the railway.

the Inglis's (thu-ing-ul-zeez, -ing-gul-zees) n. family who had an early home at Branxholme, acquired some time after 1335, and held under vassalage to the Earls of Douglas. In 1395 Sir William Inglis answered the challenge of an English champion Sir Thomas Struthers, killing him in single combat at Rulehaugh, for which the King granted them land near Peebles. In 1420 John Inglis exchanged half of the lands of Branxholme for lands at Murdostoun (or Murthockstone, in Lanarkshire) with Sir Robert Scott of Rankilburn. In 1446 they exchanged the rest with Sir Walter Scott for other lands in Lanarkshire. However, they kept the lands of 'Kirkton Tofts', as confirmed in 1461 and passed to the Gourlay family through marriage to Katherine Inglis, heir to Alexander.

Inglis's Hotel (ing-ulz-, ing-gul-zees-hō-tel) n. former temperance hotel on Teviotside Terrace.

Inglis' Well (ing-gulz-wel) n. former water supply somewhere around O'Connell Street.

Ingram (ing-grum) n. former placename in Cavers Parish. William Falside was living there in 1797. It was also written 'Ingerhope' in 1799.

Ingram (ing-grum) n. (d.1174) of unknown origin, he had brothers Simon and William and was also known as 'Enguerran', 'Engelram' and other variants. He was Archdeacon of Teviotdale from around 1160, and served as Chancellor of Scotland under Malcolm IV 1161–64. He was then elected Bishop of Glasgow and consecrated by the Pope in France. He authorised the opening of the tomb of St. Waltheof. He witnessed the renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. In 1166 he was 'Engelram' when he witnessed a charter by King William to Robert de Brus. In 1170 he was confirmed in the church of Ashkirk by Pope Alexander III.

Ingramsways (ing-grum-swāz) n. place name marked on Blaeu's 1654 map between Over and Nether Steele in Liddesdale. It is transcribed as 'Ingrasswall' on the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads.

inhabitant (in-haw-bi-tant) pp., adj., arch. inhabiting, indwelling – '... to proceed and goe before through the haill towne, the baylyeas, towne Counsell, and other honest inhabitant burgesses, contrair to all former ancient practice' [BR1706].

inhalation (in-ha-lā-shin) interj. voiced intake of breath used to express agreement or sympathy, perhaps more common in women than men.

injure (in-jur) v., arch. to wrong, maltreat, abuse, insult – 'Bailie Graham compeared for injuring and calumniating Bailie Ruecastle ...' [PR1718].

inkle (ing-kul) n. linen tape woven on a narrow loom and typically used for trimmings. The industry was important in Hawick for a few decades, starting in 1782 or 1783 – 'The inkle manufacture was begun in the year 1783' [RRG], '... the lasses o' the Inkle House factory dancing round it' [AM] (also spelled 'incle').

the Inkle Hoose Factory (thu-ing-kul-hoos-fawk-tu-ree) n. another name for the Hawick Inkle Company built in Under Damside, off the present-day Commercial Road. It is probably the same structure known as the Roughheugh Waulk Mill (adjacent to the Roughheugh Corn Mill). The building was leased in 1797 by William Wilson to manufacture hosiery, and was still known as 'the Inkle Hoose' long after the manufacturing of linen had ceased in Hawick. The building continued to be used by the partnership of Wilson & Watson, and when they split in 1818 it went to William Watson & Sons, who continued to use it as a stocking shop. In about 1863 this part of the business was taken over by George Hogg (also written 'Incle').

inlack (in-lak) n., arch. deficit, shortage – 'Decerns Andrew Deans, skinner, to content and pay to Walter Robson ... for the inlack of wool sold to him' [BR1642], v., poet. to lack, want – 'The young lions inlack, an' thole hungir: but thaye that seik the Lord sallna inlack onie guid thing' [HSR], 'Thy nuil is like ane roond goblit that inlaksna likker ...' [HSR], 'The Lord is my shepherd; I sallna inlack' [HSR].

Inner Grey Hill (in-ur-grā-hil) n. small hill just to the north-west of Drinkstone farm. It is connected to Outer Grey Hill and together they form part of Drinkstone hill.

Inner Hallrule (i-nur-haw-rool) n. former name for part of the farm of Hallrule, in distinction to Outer Hallrule. In 1779 'Inner-Hallrule, consisting of six inclosures' was valued at £493 17s 8d.

Inner Hill (in-ur-hil) n. small hill between Northhouse and Old Northhouse, reaching a height of 309 m.

Innerleithen (in-ur-lee-thin) n. large village in Peeblesshire at the confluence of the Tweed and the Leithen Water. An important knitwear centre since the setting up of Alexander Brodie's Caerlee Mill in 1788. It grew further when its medicinal spring was publicised by Sir Walter Scott in 'St. Ronan's Well'. It has held the annual St. Ronan's Border Games since 1827, started by the Edinburgh Six-feet-high Club. This is now mixed in with the annual festival, including the 'Cleikum Ceremony' in which St. Ronan drives out the devil, as well as a Standard Bearer leading a procession through town and up Caerlee Hill. Robert Smail's Printing Works is operated as a museum and Traquair House is nearby. Latterly it has been best known as the home of Caldwell's ice cream. Population (1991) 2,515 (the origin is probably Gaelic 'confluence of River Leithen', which in turn is probably Old English for 'broad'; it was sometimes formerly 'Inverleithen').

innerie (i-nu-ree) n., arch. a tenement reached by a common passage or staircase – 'Hei beides in o thon innery' [ECS], 'Why should there no' bei a stane putten up tae merk th' site o' Gotterson's Innery?' [HEx1921] (also written 'innery').

innerliness (i-nur-lee-nis) n., arch. compassion, sympathy (noted by J.A.H. Murray).

innerly (i-nur-lee) adj., arch. interior, in-lying, intimate, friendly, affectionate – 'An a feelin-herteet yallih-yorleen ... cocket eis luggie an cheepeat-in rale kaif an innerly' [ECS], 'Innerly, introspective sheets that hae nae look on bookshelves ...' [DH].

Innes (i-nis) n. Alexander Pringle (1837–89) born at Robin's Nest Cottage, Yair, he was a manufacturer of A.P. Innes & Co, which became White's of Hawick. He formed a partnership with James Henderson in 1868, which split again in 1885, when he took over the rear part of Victoria Mills and concentrated on the wholesale market. He was President of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society in the 1880s and he talked at the 1884 franchise rally held at Loch park. He married Agnes Laing and their children included: Alison Mackay (b.1863); Mary Jane (b.1865); William (b.1867); Charlotte (b.1868); Agnes (b.1870); William Anderson (b.1871); and Hannah (b.1874). He died at his home, The Firs on Sunnyhill. Alexander Kedie (1855–1938) son of John and Mary Kedie, and older brother of Robert. He was born in Glasgow, but came to Hawick in the 1870s. He was a woollen merchant in the partnership Innes, Stevenson & Co. until 1892, then in partnership with F.E.H. Chambers. He later became sole partner in tweed merchants Innes, Chambers & Co., Commercial Road. He lived at Lindisfarne. He served as a Bailie around 1900. During WWI he was accused of trading with the enemy, but found not guilty. He married Annie Brydon. Their son James Brydon (b.1891) was killed at Gallipoli. When he died he left a sum of £1000, in the name of his son J.B. Innes, to be distributed to the poor in Hawick at Christmas, with preference given to soldiers and ex-soldiers. James (c.1685–1767) born in South Leith, son of wine merchant Robert. He was educated in Edinburgh, where he graduated M.A. in 1704. He became the first schoolmaster of Hawick's Grammar School, staying 1710–18. His servant Isobel Wilson got married in 1716. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for Dand Gray, tenant in Weensland, when he is recorded as 'Mr James Innes probationer'. He was then appointed Minister at Mertoun in Berwickshire. He married Christian, daughter of advocate Robert Munro in 1726 and she died in 1770. Their children were: Mary; Robert, who was a doctor; Capt. Albert; James, minister of Yester; and Anne. James (b.1756/7) from Kelso, he was schoolmaster in Bedrule from 1799. He signed the list of eligible men from Bedrule in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1799, his name appearing as 'Ja Innes S Mr'. He is recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was still schoolmaster, but already in his 80s, with his son William acting as assistant schoolmaster. He was still living with his son William and still recorded as schoolmaster in Slater's 1852 directory. Lieut. James Brydon (1891–1915) son of Alexander, he grew up at Lindisfarne in Hawick. He was educated on the continent and fluent in French, German and Italian. He travelled in Europe on behalf of his father's firm, Innes, Chambers & Co. He served with 1/4th K.O.S.B. and was seriously wounded during the charge of 12th July 1915 and found by his cousin W.K. Innes. He asked his cousin to cut off his arm and give him a cigarette; then he died, still cheering on his men. His memorial headstone in Wellogate Cemetery has his image carved into it. He left £1000 to be distributed to the poor of Hawick at Christmas. John (d.1679) from Castleton Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on 'the Crown of London' when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. It is said that 'they were taken prisoners, stripped almost naked, and treated more like beasts than human beings'. John (c.1817–70) silk merchant in Glasgow. He spent time in Hawick in the 1850s and in 1854 married Mary, daughter of Robert Kedie from Hawick. Their children were: Alexander Kedie (b.1855), who lived at Lindisfarne in Hawick; Robert Kedie (b.1858), draper and manufacturer in Hawick; John William (b.1860); and Jessie (b.1862). Robert Kedie (1858–95) born in Glasgow, son of Hawick parents John and Mary Kedie. He was nephew of William Kedie. He returned to Hawick in 1879 as a manufacturer, becoming partner in William Kedie & Co., along with Blenkhorn and Richardson. His hobby was apparently breeding 'Dandie Dinmonts'. He was Captain in the Border Rifles (volunteers) in the late 19th century. He married Catherine Brown Oliver, daughter of James Oliver and Jane Rutherford. They lived at the Old Manse and later at Wilton Bank. They had an only child, William Kedie (1893–1958). In poor health for a couple of years, he died at age 35. He had a military style funeral and his grave in the Wellogate Cemetery is marked with a sandstone obelisk. After his death his wife remarried, to Herbert Higham Llewellyn and died in Harrogate. William G. (b.1805/6) son of James, schoolmaster at Bedrule. In 1841 he was assistant schoolmaster at Bedrule. He became teacher at Nisbet, and in 1851 he was recorded at Nisbet Schoolhouse as teacher of English, Mathematics and Latin. He married Mary and their children included Agnes, Jane, Mary, Alexander, Eliza and Alison. Maj. William Anderson (b.1872) son of manufacturer Alexander. He was Cornet in 1892 and Callants' Club President in 1914. He lived at the Firs and ran the family firm A.P. Innes & Co. He also served as President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He was heavily involved with the Volunteers, was honorary recruiting officer in WWI and was often referred to as 'the Major'. He also served as a Justice of the Peace. William Kedie (1893–1958) son of Robert and Catherine Oliver, he was born at Wilton Bank. He was educated at Cambridge, his degree being interrupted by WWI. He served with the K.O.S.B. and received the D.S.O. In 1915 he married Ivy Edith Baxter, and in 1925 he secondly married Hilda Voisey Middleton. His children included: Kathleen Betty (b.1916); Robin Frederick (b.1920); Vivian Voisey; Charles Ian; Kedie; James Alexander Kedie (b.1932); Gilliam Marie; and William (b.1935). He died at West Hartlepool.

Innes' (i-ni-seez) n. former name applied to one of the factories run by Innes, sometimes in partnership with others, particularly the warehouse operation of A.P. Innes & Co. at Howlands.

Innes, Chambers & Co. (i-nis-chām-burz-in-kō) n. tweed manufacturers of the early 20th century. Alexander Kedie Innes became sole partner and the main factory was at 33 Commercial Road. It was badly damaged by fire in 1920 and the site purchased by the Masons in 1921 to build their new Lodge.

Innes-Henderson (i-nis-hen-dur-sin) n. Innes, Henderson & Co. Ltd., Hawick knitwear company, with their main mill on Victoria Road. The firm started in 1868 in what was basically a cottage at Wilton Grove. They built Victoria Mills on Victoria Road in 1875. In 1885 the firm split, with Henderson supplying the retail trade and using the front building, and Innes dealing with the wholesale trade from a 3-storey building behind. The firms of A.P. Innes & Co. and James Henderson & Co. operated separately until merging again in 1920 (although the exact relationship between them during the intervening years is complicated). Around this time they had the largest hosiery mill in Hawick, employing about 1100 workers. They also had a small factory on Commercial Road for a while. They supplied specially designed knitted underwear for Eric Shipton's Everest expedition. The firm manufactured knitted goods bearing the Braemar label, and later changed their name to match. The firm finally went out of business in 1973. Records covering the period 1896–1973 exist, with the Museum having some 20th century papers.

Innes-Ker (i-nis-ker) n. George Victor Robert John 9th Duke of Roxburghe, 'Bobbo' (1913–74), son of Henry John and Mary Goelet. He was heavily involved with local politics and became who was Convenor of Roxburgh District Council. He married Lady Mary Evelyn Hungerford Crewe-Milnes in 1935, they were divorced in 1953 and he remarried Margaret Elizabeth McConnel. His children were Guy David (who succeeded as 10th Duke) and Robert Anthony. Guy David (1954–) 10th Duke of Roxburghe, son of 'Bobbo'. He married Jane Meriel Grosvenor and Virginia Mary Wynn-Williams. He lives at Floors Castle. Henry John (1876–1932) 8th Duke of Roxburghe, son of James Henry Robert. He was Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire and Lieutenant of the Royal Company of Archers. He was educated at Eton, served with the Household Cavalry in the Boer War and was severely wounded in WWI. He married Mary Goelet and was succeeded by George Victor Robert John. Sir James Norcliffe (1736–1823) eldest surviving son of Sir Henry Innes and Anne Drummond Grant. He was descended from Lady Innes, 3rd daughter of Harry, Lord Ker, son of the 1st Earl of Roxburghe. He served as an officer in the Army in his youth. Following the death of his distant cousin William, 7th Lord Bellenden, 4th Duke of Roxburghe, there was 7 years of legal battle, and he eventually became 5th Duke of Roxburghe after a pronouncement by the House of Lords. He then adopted the name Innes-Ker. He was one of the Scottish Representative Peers in Parliament 1818–20. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He married Mary Wray (with whom he is said to have had nothing in common) and then Harriet Charlewood when he was 71. His only son James succeeded. A portrait of him and his wife was painted by Henry Raeburn and hangs in Floors Castle. James Henry Robert (1816–79) 6th Duke of Roxburghe, son of James Norcliffe. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Susanna Stephania, only child of Sir Charles Delbiac (and she was niece of George Cleghorn of Weens). Their children were: Susan Harriet; Charlotte Isabella; James Henry Robert, who succeeded; and Charles John. He died at Genoa. James Henry Robert 7th Duke of Roxburghe (1839–92) son of James Henry Robert, the 6th Duke and Susanna Stephenia Delbiac, Lady of the Bedchamber. He was born at Floors Castle. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1870–74, while Marquess of Bowmont. In 1874 he was defeated by Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas by only 26 votes. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He became Duke of Roxburghe in 1879 and thereafter lived at Floors Castle. He was Lord-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, Chairman of the River Tweed Commissioners and patron of the Border Union Agricultural Society. He also served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. A document exists in which he recounts his memories of the rebellion of 1745 and the Seven Years War. He married Lady Anne Emily Spencer-Churchill and was succeeded by Henry John. He was buried at Kelso Abbey (see also Ker).

Invocation (in-vō-kā-shin) n. song written by J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant as a finale to the 1914 Pageant. It was sung by a huge chorus, accompanied by the Saxhorn Band on the 2 nights of the quater-centenary celebrations, and published by Grant in 1915. The music is now played by the Saxhorn Band during the handing back of the Flag on the Saturday of the Common Riding, and the words are rarely heard. The tune may have been influenced by the German hymn 'Nun Danket alle Gott'. It is also sometimes called 'Hail Great and Glorious Power!', because of the line in the song. The words are now seldom sung, although they were resurrected for the 2004 Callants' Club centenary commemoration service (often incorrectly or dialectally 'The Invocation').

inwaird (in-wārd) adj., adv., poet. inward – 'Thair inwaird thocht is, that thair houses sall contina forevir ...' [HSR], 'Behald, thou desyrist trouth in the inwaird pairts ...' [HSR].

or ane of them, sal pay £10 money, and wardit during the bailies' will' [BR1640].

in wi (in-wi) adj., arch. friendly with.

the I.O.G.T. (thū-I-ō-jee-tee) n. the Institute of Good Templars, an international organisation founded in 1851, promoting total abstinence from alcohol. The organisation arrived in Hawick around 1870 and soon 5 Hawick lodges were formed: the Scottish Border Beacon; the Teviotdale; the Rose of Teviotdale; the Slitrig; and the Ever Watchful. They each held weekly meetings. The first survived the longest, and two others were formed later in the 19th century: the Hope of Hawick; and the Jubilee. They had a hall down the Round Close, referred to as 'the I.O.G.T. Hall' or 'Templar's Hall', which was also used by many other groups, e.g. the Brethren and the Saxhorn Band.

I.O.U.S. Mechanics (I-ō-ew-ess-me-kaw-neeks) n. Friendly Society, active in the latter part of the 19th century, with separate Teviotdale and Hawick (No. 4) Lodges. It may have been set up around 1845 and lasted until at least 1888. The Teviotdale Lodge met in the Temperance Hall on the first Monday of the month. The National Archives have some undated records.

ir (ir) v. are – 'ir ee gaun?', 'Whae ir oo and Whaer oo ir, Facts a' Callants should Ken' [JEDM], 'Is yours a fardin' tae? Ah then, ma gingerbreed men's a ha'penny, but here ee irr' [JEDM], '... where the public toilets ir now' [IWL], 'Some folk ir juist born fortunate ...' [IWL] (also spelled 'irr'; er and ur are also used).

ir (ir) pron., arch. her – 'Nochts ull stoap ir if she's taen the maggot inti er heed' [ECS], 'A was gaan ma yirrants whan A met in wui ir' [ECS].

ir ee (ir-ee) interj., arch. will you please, if you're willing – '... used exclusively after a request in the sense of 'if you please'. The word willing or agreeable might almost be taken as being understood to follow the pronoun. Thus a Hawick bairn might say: 'Mother, gie's a peece, ir ee?' [ECS], 'Gie's a yin, ir ee?' [ECS], 'Faither, tak' us teh sei the Greens (the local Rugby team) this efternune, ir ee?' [1947].

Ireland (Ir-lind) n. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Paid but not listed in Hauick Toun'.

Irelands (Ir-lindz) n. John of that Ilk (15th C.) holder of lands in Wilton, which were commonly known as 'Irelandis landis'. In 1454 he gave a charter of these lands to David, son and heir of Walter Scott of Kirkurd; he is recorded as 'Johannes de Irelandys de eodem'. The family were mainly based in Stirlingshire and Perthshire;

it is unclear whether he ever actually resided in Wilton, and if so where he moved to afterwards. He is recorded as witness to a charter for William Hay in 1450, signed at Perth. And either he or his father was mentioned in a charter of 1424 for lands in Perth. It has been remarked that the families of Inglis, Irelands and Scott all owned adjacent lands in the 15th century, i.e. names associated with England, Ireland and Scotland.

Irelands-lands (Ir-lindz-lawndz) n. common name for lands in the western half-Barony of Wilton, which were granted by John Irelands of that Ilk to David Scott in 1454, with the superior being Henry Wardlaw, Baron of Wilton. The lands were to be held of the Baron for the yearly fee, if asked, of one pair of spurs and one pound of cucumbers! It is unclear where these lands were. Presumably the name came from the connection with the Irelands family, and was replaced with another name (or the former name).

the Irish (thu-I-reesh) n. people from Ireland. It is said that in about 1806 there was only one native of Ireland living in Hawick, who ‘when teased by boys, was accustomed to threaten to tear their limbs from their bodies’. Many more arrived to work in the knitwear industry during the 19th century, boosting the congregation of the Catholic Chapel. Lots of labourers who worked on railway construction in the 1840s to 1860s were from Ireland.

the Irish Harp (thu-I-reesh-hawrp) n. former hostelry at 9 Baker Street, run by Frank Sheridan in the mid-19th century.

the Irish Schuilmaister (thu-I-reesh-skil-mās-tur) n. nickname of Thomas Lawler.

Irn Brew (I-rin-, ern-broo) n. orange-coloured carbonated soft drink, popular in Scotland, also known as ‘Irn Bru’. Scocha wrote a song about it in 2011 – ‘Irn Bru, Irn Bru, Built ye up, when ye grew, Its the only thing to do, Drink, Irn Bru, Irn Bru, Irn Bru, Irn Bru’ [Sco].

irni (ir-ni) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘they irni the same ony mair’, ‘... But, tell the truth, the legs irna the same Nowadays. Weel, sin’ auld-age wunna hide’ [DH], ‘... awfih vexed that the Miss Lindsays irni pairt o the supper pairty’ [IWL], ‘... Pairish Kirk is hooses now Folk irni the same somehow’ [IWL] (also written ‘irna’; usually used after the noun in distinction to irren; see also arni, erni and irn’t).

irn’t (i-rin’) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘Hawick folk ir better than Gala folk, irn’t they?’ (note that this form usually precedes the noun or pronoun, cf. irni).

the Iron Age (thu-I-rin-āj, -ern-) n. period of development following the Bronze Age, characterised by the spread of iron tools and weapons, beginning around the 8th century B.C.E. New settlers arrived in the Borders around the 1st century B.C.E. and took over from the former Bronze Age residents. Tribes speaking Brythonic were already well established by the time of the Roman occupation (about 70 C.E.). Most of the examples of forts, settlements, homesteads and earthworks that pepper our local hills are from the Iron Age. A particularly good example is on Whitecastle Hill, between Chapelhill farm and Branhholme Loch.

Iron Castle (I-rin-kaw-sul) n. ancient earthwork in Southdean Parish, just to the east of Westerhouses. It occupies the top of a small knoll just to the south of Ironcastle Sike. It is about 75 m by 30 m and has been partially obliterated by a plantation. It seems likely to be an Iron Age settlement.

irregular mairriage (i-re-gew-lur-mā-reej) n., arch. term used to describe a marriage taking place outwith the church, often by poor people, and sometimes simply involving a pledge before witnesses. Discovery of such an arrangement often resulted in a fine imposed on the couple by the Kirk Session, as well as attempts to identify the person who performed the marriage and the witnesses present, so they could also be fined or imprisoned. However, these arrangements continued in any case, presumably some being elopements, some simply to save money, and others because of religious differences. When discovered, any children produced by the union would be refused baptism until amends had been made by the couple.

irreverend (i-re-vu-rind) adj., arch. irreverent – ‘James Scott, called Pedee, is fined for ane great disobedience to the bailies . . . , but gave them opprobrious and irreverend language, and sicklike this day . . .’ [BR1679].

Irvine (ir-vin, ā-rin) n. Adam (b.1791/2) brewer at Whisky Houses in Hawick. A letter from him to a Selkirk lawyer, concerning a gig in 1825 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed there on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he is listed as a brewer at Whiskyhouses, living with his wife Henrietta and children Jessie, Mary, Alison, John,

Adam, Henrietta and Andrew. His assets were sequestered in 1842. Agnes 'Nanny' (18th C.) cook at Burnhead in 1791, when she was working for William Scott. Andrew (17th C.) shepherd at Doecluch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Wiltonburn in 1742 and 1747. He married Elizabeth Dunlop in Wilton Parish in 1733. Their children included: Jean (b.1734); James (b.1736); Many (b.1739); Walter (b.1742); Allie (b.1744); Elizabeth (b.1747); William (b.1751); and Andrew (b.1754). The witnesses in 1742 were 2 Walter Scotts and in 1747 were Walter and Thomas Scott. Probably the same Andrew witnessed a baptism in 1727 for Walter Scott at Wiltonburn, one in 1747 for Alexander Burnet at Wiltonburn and another in 1751 for Hector Blaikie at Boathouse. He paid for the use of the Wilton bell for a funeral in 1749. Andrew (1786–1870) son of Walter and Janet Smith, he was baptised in Hawick Parish. He was an actuary with the National Security Savings Bank and grocer at 26 High Street. He also served as Heritors' Clerk for the Parish of Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is listed as a grocer on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories, in Slater's 1852 directory and on the 1841 census. In Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory he was treasurer of the Savings' Bank on the High Street. A letter from him to a Selkirk writer in 1827 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1851 he was listed as a grocer, Treasurer to the Savings' Bank and Heritor's Clerk. In 1852 he was also agent for the Aberdeen insurance company. He was an elder and session clerk for the West End Church. He was given the 'Gledstane Bible' by William Smith ('Wull the Cutler'), who may have been a relative of his mother. He married May Roger, and their children included: Walter (b.1820); William (b.1822), tweed manufacturer and merchant; Margery D. (b.1823); Janet (or 'Jessie', b.1825); Alexander James (b.1828); Mary (b.1832); and Adam (b.1836). Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. In 1759 he was recorded at Wester Mill in Wilton. He married Mary Elliot in Hawick Parish in 1758. Their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Janet (b.1759); John (b.1761); and Betty (b.1763). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and James Dryden and in 1763 were 'Mr John Laurie student' and church officer Alexander Bunyan. Elizabeth (18th C.) housemaid at Minto in 1791, when she was working for Sir

Gilbert Elliot. George (17th C.) servitor to maltman John Hardie. In 1666 he was fined by the Magistrates for cutting divots at Myreslawgreen, even although his master had directed him to go to 'the thorter dikes'. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mains (near Castleton), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably related to William 'Irving' who was at Mains in 1821. He is recorded there in 1777. He married Jane Armstrong and their children included: Mabil (b.1775); Dolly (b.1777); Dorothy (b.1778); William (b.1781); Elizabeth (b.1782); William (again, b.1784); and John (b.1788). Jake see John R. James of Cleuchhead (16th/17th C.) servant of Lord Cranston, he was recorded in 1610 when Robert Elliot of Falnash was cautioner for him. This was for answering the charge of wounding John, son of Adam 'Haliday in Lure'. His name is given as 'James Irwing of Cleuchheidis'. Given the identity of his cautioner, it seems likely his home was at Cleuchhead in Liddesdale. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Liddell and their children included: William (b.1681); James (b.1682); and Robert (b.1684). In 1684 he witnessed baptisms for John Beattie and for John (who was surely related). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was tenant of Wiltonburn in 1711. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott at Wiltonburn. His probably the James who married Janet Miller in Wilton in 1703 and had other children Andrew (b.1704), Thomas (b.1708) and James (b.1713). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Riddell and their children included Walter (b.1716) and James (b.1718). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Helen (or 'Nelly') Turnbull and their children included: James (b.1756); Robert (b.1758); Many (b.1759); and James (again, b.1762). Perhaps the same James secondly married Isobel Learmonth and had a son James Andrew in 1765. The witnesses to this baptism were Andrew Irvine and Walter Lorraine. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Isabel Learmonth and their son James Andrew was baptised in 1765. James (d.bef. 1797) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife Marion Blyth died in Hawick in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) shoemaker living at Bedrule in 1797 when his name appeared in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. James (18th/19th C.) wright in Minto according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. James (b.1806/7)

hedger in Minto Parish. He was living at Clockerhall in 1861. His wife was Christina and their children included William and Cecilia. James Stewart 'Jamie' (1820–91) descendant of 'Staney Stewart' (whom he was named after), a familiar character on the streets of Hawick, in the 19th century. Born in Hawick he was a simpleton, harmless when sober, but often drunk in his younger days. He spent 4 years in Melrose Asylum, after which publicans were ordered to refuse to serve him. He was known for his amazing memory and a fear of the army. Janet (b.c.1788) recorded as farmer at Newton in Wilton parish in 1851. She farmed 383 acres and employed 1 labourer. In 1841 she was living in the household of John Oliver, who was probably a retired farmer at Newton. Jean nee Kennedy, M.B.E. (1876–1962) pharmacist who was the first female president of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain. She was daughter of bookseller Walter Phillips and Jane Law. She was an apprentice in Hawick with chemist Thomas Maben. She moved to Glasgow where she worked at the Glasgow Apothecaries Company and the Glasgow Royal Infirmary. She married chemist Peter Irvine and assisted him in running 2 pharmacies in Glasgow. The couple worked in London during WWI and she became responsible for the pricing of subscriptions in the south-east for 35 years. She was made an M.B.E. in 1928 for 'meritorious service in connection with the National Insurance Scheme'. She was first woman to be president of the health insurance staff of Whitley Council, then of the Insurance Committee Officers Association for England and Wales and the National Association of Women Pharmacists. In 1937 she became only the third woman member of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society and became its first woman President in 1947. Her portrait (by Norman Hepple) hangs in the Pharmaceutical Society headquarters. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Aitkin and their children included Margaret and Janet, baptised together in 1684. The witnesses were James (surely a relative) and Walter Henderson. Perhaps the same John was living at Hawickshiel when he had a son Walter baptised in 1696, with witnesses Walter Irvine (presumably a relative) and William Douglas. He may be the same man as the resident of Hawick Shiel. John (17th/18th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is recorded as tenant in Hawick Shiel when his children were baptised in 1704 and 1706. His children included: James

(b.1704); and Margaret (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were James Gray in Whitlaw and gardener James Falsyde and in 1706 were Walter Nixon and Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel. He may also have been father of Walter (b.1696). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish in 1738 when he married Bessie Scott, who was from Kirkton Parish. He was tenant in the Flex in 1741. His daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick in 1741, with witnesses John Cavers and John Goodfellow, both at the Flex. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Elizabeth Hutton and their children included: Jane (b.1743); Jane (again, b.1748); and Margaret (b.1750). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in 1759. He married Agnes Scott and their children, baptised in Wilton, included Thomas (b.1754), Robert (b.1755), Betty (b.1757), James (b.1759) and Walter (b.1761). The witnesses in 1759 were James Dryden and Robert Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1759), Agnes (b.1763), Walter (b.1765), Margaret (b.1767), Helen (b.1769) and John (b.1772). It is possible they are identical with the couple of the same name who previously had children in Wilton; this would only make sense if James (b.1759) was baptised in both parishes. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1759. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Teindsideslope in 1797, when he was taxed for having 3 horses. John (b.c.1817) from Southdean Parish, he was farm steward at Commonsides in 1851. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Helen. John (b.1826/7) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a rope-maker in Hawick. In 1861 he was a journeyman 'Rope & Twine Spinner' living at 28 Loan. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Isabella (b.1855); Jessie (b.1857); Walter Scott (b.1858), who was Cornet in 1886; Margaret Scott (b.1861); and Archibald Scott (b.1868). John R. 'Jake' (1940–) local Liberal councillor and Honorary Provost 1982–88. He wrote 'The Westenders' (1990). Peter educated at Hawick High School, he wrote 'Scotland the Best'. He has been involved in the organisation of many arts festivals and events in Scotland. Reginald (d.c.1267) served as the 2nd Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1242. In 1245 he moved to become Archdeacon of Glasgow. He died before 1268. Robert (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Telfer and their children included: Margaret (b.1764);

William (b.1766); and James (b.1773). Robert (18th C.) recorded as tenant of the land of Nut Bank in Minto Parish in 1780. Robert (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Wilton Parish in 1789. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had a local connection. Samuel (18th C.) schoolmaster in Wilton during at least the 1760s. In 1767 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Robert Riccarton. He may be the same as Samuel in Newfield. Samuel (18th C.) farmer at Newfield, near Hummelknowes, brother of Walter, who lived at Northhouse. He was part of the group that founded the Green Kirk in 1763. He owned 2 horses at Newfield according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ormiston in Cavers Parish. His children included: Andrew (b.1701), who married Bessie Turnbull in Minto in 1723; Thomas (b.1703); Isabel (b.1706); James (b.1708); William (b.1710); and John (b.1713). He may also be the Thomas whose children baptised in Minto Parish included: Alison and Bessie (b.1715); Walter (b.1717); Samuel (b.1719); Helen (b.1721); and Adam (b.1724). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Langlands in 1722 and was at Netherhall in 1726 and 1729. He witnessed baptisms in 1724 for Andrew Martin at Clarilaw and for James Young at West Burnfoot, in 1728 for John Blyth at Stirches, in 1729 for James Easton at Alton and in 1735 for William Nichol in Stouslie. He married Margaret Scott in 1718 and their children included: Walter (b.1719); Thomas (b.1722); John (b.1726); and Adam (b.1729). The witnesses in 1722 were John Scott and John Wilson and in 1726 were Adam Scott and John Irvine and in 1729 were John Scott and John 'Dryon'. Thomas of Newton (18th C.) recorded in the 1786 Horse Tax Rolls in Wilton Parish. He and William witnessed a baptism for William Hood at Newton in 1770. He married Mary Easton in Hawick in 1783 and their children included: William (b.1783); and Janet (b.1787). The witnesses in 1787 were George Goodfellow and George Turnbull. Walter (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1696 for John in Hawickshiel Walter (18th C.) factor for the Langlands estate. He ran the estates after the death of George Langlands and before Robert was served heir in 1758. He was living at Howlands in 1737. He married Helen Scott in Wilton in 1736. His children included: David (b.1737); Mainie (b.1739); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1737 were James and Francis Scott.

In 1745 he was recorded as a gardener, and the witnesses to the baptism in Hawick were merchant James Douglas and Andrew Turnbull senior. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for James Noble, resident of Mervinslaw, in 1751. His name is also written 'Irvin'. Walter (18th C.) resident of Northhouse. His brother Samuel was at Newfield. They were part of the founding group of seceders, who met in Hawick in 1763, leading to the establishment of the Green Kirk. He was recorded at Northhouse on the 1786-90 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of part of Weensland in 1788. His land there was valued at £18 1s 8d and had probably been purchased from the Scotts of Horsleyhill. He was still owner according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was surely related to William, who had owned part of Weensland earlier. He is probably also the Walter who paid the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He may be the Walter who married Janet Smith in 1785 and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Andrew (b.1786), Robert (b.1788), Alison (b.1790) and Adam (b.1792). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Newfield. His wife 'Ailey' Thomline died in Hawick in 1815. He was probably son of Samuel or Walter. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Tinlin and their children included James Blair Ken (b.1821) and John (b.1823). Walter Scott (1858-1936) son of John and Agnes Scott. He was a frameworker in Hawick and Cornet of 1886. His Cornet's Lass was probably either Miss Murray or Miss Fraser, who were recording in the local press at the Colour Bussing ceremony in 1887. He emigrated to America and returned in 1887 to take up his duties as Right-Hand Man, a long journey in those days. He was honoured with a special reception, where he was presented with a gold medal and watch. He was unable to repeat the feat as Left-Hand Man, however. He married Mary Ann Carter and died in Altoona, Pennsylvania. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Shortreed and their children included Thomas (b.1743) and Helen (b.1745). William (18th C.) linen draper who was Bailie in the 1770s. He was recorded as a merchant in 1779 when he acted as a witness (along with his apprentice John Nixon) for a baptism in Cavers Parish. Probably the same William was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick in 1785. He is probably the William recorded in 1788 as former owner of 2 parts of Weensland (having purchased this from Scott of Horsleyhill) valued at £23 19s 6d and £23 8s 10d, and by 1788 owned by William Dickson of Orchard. He is probably also the William who owned the farm of Newton (valued at £238) in 1788; if so he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for William Hood at Newton in 1770. He is also mentioned as a former owner of part of Weensland in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811. He may be the Bailie who witnessed a baptism for merchant James Scott in 1796. William (b.c.1765) farmer at Glendivan in the Ewes valley. His wife was Henrietta and their children included John (who took over the farm), Archibald, Isabella, Jessy, Eliza, William and Robert. His wife was a widow by 1851. William (18th/19th C.) smith at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. A note says that 'his age is doubted', suggesting that he may not have been in the prescribed age range of 19–30. William (b.c.1785) listed as 'Ind.' on the 1841 census, when he was living at about 54 High Street. William of Newton (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of Chamberlain Newton in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was a subscriber to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Glasgow who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had a local connection. William (b.1793/4) farmer at Cavers Mains, listed in 1841. In 1861 he was there farming 186 acres. He married Mary H. Elliot, probably daughter of John, who lived at Shiplaw Corse. William (1824–93) son of Andrew of the Savings Bank. He was a manufacturer in partnership with 'Allie' Laing in the latter part of the 19th century, the warehouse at 26 High Street giving its name to 'Irvine's Close'. He was a local leader in politics and social reform in the 19th century. He was involved in the Hawick press and also wrote some poetry. For a while he also lived at 67 High Street. He presented a couple of Roman coins to the Museum in 1863. His wife Ellen (from England) and children Andrew, George T. and Alexander L. were living at 7 Teviot Crescent in 1861. He may be the William whose poem 'I Love to See the Morning Climb' was published in 'Living Bards of the Border' in 1859. He may be the William whose book 'An Easter Ramble' was published in Hawick in 1860. (the former pronunciation was ā-rin; previously written 'Irvine', 'Irvin', 'Irwin', 'Irvine', 'Urvin' and variants; see also Irving).

Irvine and Turnbull's (ir-vin-in-turn-bulz) n. tobacconists on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. This was a partnership between William Turnbull and one of the Irvines, possibly Andrew.

Irvine's Close (ir-vinz-klōs) n. passageway at 26 High Street leading to Laing & Irvine's tweed business in the mid-19th century.

Irving (ir-vin) n. Archibald 'Bauldie' (19th C.) farmer at Shirensclouch. Christopher of Binks, 'Kick-ma-leerie' (17th C.) said to have been a fiddler, it is unclear where he originated from. It is also unclear why he got his nickname (since it has 2 somewhat different meanings). He became fairly wealthy and was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He bought Binks from Simon Elliot of the Binks and is recorded there in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, paying tax on the value of £300. He is also recorded in 1678 as owner of part of the former estate of Elliot of Larriston in Castleton Parish, valued at £700. By about 1688 he had bought all of Over and Nether Larriston, Greenholm, Redheugh, Hartsgarth, Langhaugh and Gullenflat from Robert Elliot of Larriston, who died bankrupt. His children were: wife of Adam Beattie, to whom he gave Hartsgarth, Langhaugh, Greenholm and Redhaugh in Liddesdale; and Mary, wife of Adam Elliot, who got Catlowdie in Cumberland. The lands of Binks passed to John, 3rd son of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. David (1778–1860) born in Langholm, son of Janet and Helen Little. He was educated at Langholm Grammar School and privately there and then at Edinburgh University. He was intended for the Church, but devoted his life to literature. His first publication was 'The Life of Robert Ferguson, with a critique on his works' (1799), followed by 'Lives of Scottish Authors' (1801), 'Elements of English Composition' (1801, running to 12 editions), 'The Lives of the Scottish Poets' (1804) and 'Memoirs of the Life and Writings of George Buchanan' (1807, 1817). He obtained an honorary doctorate from Aberdeen in 1808. He married Ann Margaret Anderson in 1810, but she died 2 years later. He secondly married his cousin Janet Laing. In 1820 he was appointed principal librarian of the Faculty of Advocates, Edinburgh. He published extensively on topics of Scottish literature, editing volumes for the Ballantyne and Maitland Clubs, and contributing to the Encyclopedia Britannica. Later works include 'An Introduction to the Study of the Civil Law' (1837), the 2 volume 'Lives of Scottish Writers' (1839) and 'History of Scottish Poetry', published posthumously. Edward 'Reid' (16th C.) recorded in 1591 when he is accused of joining a group of Elliots of the Hill and others in stealing from the tenants of Scaleby. He is recorded as ‘redd’ Edward Urwen’. He may be the ‘Edward Irving of Boneschaw’ listed in 1586 among ‘principallis of the brokin men of the west marche’ in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. Perhaps the same man is Edward ‘of Beraldrone’ listed among men ordered in 1588 to appear before the Warden in Dumfries. George ‘Geordie’ (16th/17th C.) part of the notorious rieving family of the West Marches. In 1590 he was ‘Geordie Kang’ when accused, along with Christie Armstrong of Barnglies and other, of rieving from Willie Graham in Leven. He was probably the ‘Geordie Kange’ who in 1592 was accused by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods; other Irvings listed were Willie, Ritchie and Tom of Rowanburn. In 1597 he was ‘Georde Urwen alias Kange’ when the English Warden demanded a pledge for him. Along with other Irvings (probably his brothers) they were ‘Davy, Will, and Geordy Kang’ complained about in 1600/1 for a raid on Scotby in England, accompanied by Armstrongs of Barnglies and Kinmont. Note that several earlier Irvings are mentioned in earlier English records (e.g. in 1541), who were probably related. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was James ‘Irwin’, married to Isobell Liddell, whose children baptised in Hawick included William (b.1681), James (b.1682) and Robert (b.1684). He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) rented a third of the farm of Wiltonburn in 1698. He was recorded as tenant in Wiltonburn in 1708 when his son Thomas was baptised in Wilton. Other children, baptised in Wilton, who could be his, include James (b.1713). James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Miller in Hawick in 1702 (recorded in Wilton in 1703). He could be the James in ‘aiches’ (but hard to read, possibly Stirches?) whose daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1704; the witnesses were William and John Scott. Other children may have included Andrew (b.1704), Thomas (b.1708), William (b.1711) and James (b.1713). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for George Lorraine in 1706. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Mary Riddell. Their children included: Walter (b.1716); and James (b.1718). He may be the James with wife ‘Riddell’, whose daughter Marion was baptised in Wilton in 1698. John (18th/19th C.)

farmer at Glendivan in Ewesdale in 1797 according to both the Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (16th C.) accused by Taylors in 1592 of stealing livestock and goods; other Irvings listed were Willie, Geordie and Tom of Rowanburn. His name is written ‘Richie Kange’. Thomas of Rowanburn (16th C.) accused in 1592 by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods; he was probably an Irving, since he was listed just after the ‘Kangs’, Willie, Geordie and Ritchie. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Howcleuch in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was surely related to Walter, who was at Howcleuch in 1812. Walter (b.c.1780s) ploughman at Howcleuch, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Willie Irving’, servant to John’s Christie Armstrong, when accused of being part of a gang of Armstrongs and others who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582. He may be the ‘Willie Irving of Graitnayhill’ listed in 1586 among ‘principallis of the brokin men of the west marche’ in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. William ‘Willie Kang’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Armstrongs and others who were accused of rieving from Bewcastle. He was also ‘Willie Kange’ when accused in 1592 by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods; other Irvings listed were Geordie, Ritchie and Tom of Rowanburn. He is also complained about in 1596, among Scotsmen accused of leading raids into England. His name is given as ‘Willie Yrwen ‘Kange’ and one of the ‘Kanges’ along with Geordie (probably his brother) in a complaint about a second raid. Associates on these and other raids included Armstrong of the Hollows, Jamie Elliot called ‘Tod’ and other Armstrongs and Elliots of southern Liddesdale. He and other Irvings were probably the ‘Willie Kange and his brethren’ who were said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. His brother David was listed in 1605 among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. It is unclear what the nickname meant. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Mains (probably in Castleton Parish) in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably related to the George ‘Irvine’ who was at Mains in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) portrait painter in Longtown. In the Carlisle Exhibition of 1824 he exhibited these paintings: ‘W. Brown Esq. Hawick’; ‘Alexander Brown, Esq.

Orchard'; 'Mrs Dixon, Hassendeanburn'; and 'A Dixon, Hassendeanburn'. He died aged 60. He was listed as a portrait painter in London in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'; he must have been related to John, a painter in Longtown who also subscribed to the book. William S. (19th C.) teacher in Hawick. He was President of the Hawick Branch of the Educational Institute of Scotland and Vice-President of the Scientific and Philosophical Society in the late 1800s. He also acted as Clerk to the Deacon's Court of Hawick Free Kirk from 1887. In 1889 he left to become Headmaster of Westerkirk School (formerly written 'Irwine', 'Irwing', 'Urvin', 'Urwin' and variants; see also Irvine).

Ivanhoe Terrace (I-vin-hō-te-ris) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1949, with additional blocks of flats constructed in 1967. It was named after the character Ivanhoe, popularised by Sir Walter Scott.

ivir see ever

iver (I-vur) adj., arch. upper, ‘ower’, the higher of two places – ‘Ever, Iver. A term applied to places where there are two of the same name, denoting that which is uppermost, or farthest up the hill, reckoning from the bed of the nearest river; as Iver Nisbet, Iver Crailing, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (‘Iverhaa’ was an old form of ‘Overhaa’, and ‘Iver Burn’ is probably also an example of this usage).

the Iver Burn (thū-I-vur-burn) n. former name for a stream near the Common Moor, the precise location of which is now uncertain. It was stated in 1767 that formerly the herd of the Laird of Hilliesland used to be driven down this stream in order to reach the Common (also written ‘Iverburn’; probably from iver).

Iverhaa (I-vur-haw) n. former name for Overhaa.

Jack o the Garret see Jock o the Garret

Jackson (jawk-sin) n. A. (18th/19th C.) mason in Castleton in 1821 when subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. Adam (1763–1860) born at 'Howpathy', which may be Howpasley, he was a shepherd at Redmoss and at Fairloans in Castleton Parish. He was a keen hunter and known as 'The Hunter King of Liddesdale' and is said to have served as inspiration for part of Sir Walter Scott's 'Guy Mannerling'. He is listed as shepherd at Fairloans among heads of households in 1835–41. He was said to have said about whisky that he would like to be 'a whaup and live by suction'. He married Helen Crozier and their children included: William (1792–1819), who served at Waterloo; James (1795–1809); Adam (1797/8–1834); John, also shepherd at Redmoss; Helen (b.c.1800); Thomas (b.c.1800), who married Isabella Hislop and emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Elmira, Illinois; Walter (1803–89), shepherd at Broadlee; and David (1806–94). Adam (b.1806/7) born in Robertson Parish, he was shepherd at Roughley in Castleton Parish. He is probably the Adam listed for the first time as a head of household at Toftholm in 1837 and still there in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jane. Adam (b.1816/7) son of James and Elizabeth Murray, he was born in Ewesdale. He worked as a farm labourer in Teviothead Parish. In 1861 he was at Commonbrae. He married Mary Martin and their children included Walter, Mary, Andrew, Isabella and Eliza. He died at Changehouse. Adam J. (1836–1922) son of shepherd Simon. He was born in the Ewes valley. He became a shepherd at the age of 12, but emigrated to America when he was 20. In 1856 he settled in Vienna, Delaware County, New York, where he farmed with his brother. He married Francis C. Smith. He was the last survivor of a family of 11 siblings. Alexander (d.bef. 1580) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1579/80 his son Thomas renounced his 2 half husbandlands in Lilliesleaf to Walter Riddell of that ilk. David (18th/19th C.) farmer at Netherraw in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. David (1806–94) youngest son of shepherd Adam. He was shepherd at Fairloans and other places in Liddesdale. He was listed as head of household at Fairloans in 1835–40 and labourer at 'Thorliesburnfoot' in 1841. He married Jessie Dickson. Their children included: Adam (b.1832); Janet Jardine (b.1834); Michael (b.1836); Helen (b.1837); Isabel (b.1840); and Thomas. Elizabeth (b.1774/5) from Langholm, she was a widow living at 'Poor's houses' in Ewesdale in 1851. She is described as a tailor's widow and was probably related to Margaret. Elliot (b.1851) son of David, labourer at Thorlieshope, and Janet Moffat. He was a Police Constable in Jedburgh. In 1871 he married Helen Murray, who was a servant at Flatt. He was a subscriber to David Anderson's poetry book in 1868. Elspeth (17th C.) listed as a midwife in 1676 among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Baptie. This presumably means she objected to having an Episcopalian minister in her parish. Gordon, M.B.E. (1952–) born in the Haig, educated at St. Mary's, Trinity and Hawick High Schools, he was an apprentice joiner with Brydons and worked for a while for Jock Oliver's parcel delivery service. He joined the ambulance service in 1979 and has also worked with several charities, including being Chairman of the Border Holiday Group (arranging holidays for people with physical and mental learning difficulties). In 2011 he received the M.B.E. for his work with the Scottish Ambulance Service and Border Holiday Group. He has been President of the Mosstroopers' Club and on the Vertish Hill Sports Committee, as well as Session Clerk at Cavers Kirk. He was Acting Father in 2010 and Common Riding Chief Guest in 2019. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Paterson in 1662 and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1688. James (17th C.) cottar in Dimpleknowe in Ashkirk Parish. In 1698 his daughter Janet married James Rule, herd in Whit-slade. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Stobiscote, recorded in 1717 and 1728. His children included: John (b.1717), baptised in Robertson; and David (b.1728), baptised in Cavers. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Sundhope in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He was probably related to the James recorded being hired at Braidlie in 1750. James (1756/7–1837) shepherd at Arkleton, son of John and Margaret Tait. In 1788 he married Elspeth Armstrong, and she died in 1815, aged 60. Their children included: John (b.1787); James (b.1789); Walter (1791–1803); Simon (b.1793), who was a labourer at Arkleton; and Mary (b.1795). The family are buried at Ewes Kirkyard. James (1763/4–1838) shepherd at Howpasley. He married Margaret Elliot (1762/3–1800). Their children included William and 2 who died in infancy. He secondly married Janet Brydon (1771/2–1850), who died at Roughley. Their son James was born in 1804, and also lived at Howpasley. James (1783–1871) son of John and Helen Laidlaw. He was ploughman at Arkleton in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was living at Sandyhaugh and described as ‘Formerly Ploughman’. He married Elizabeth Murray, and she appears to have already been deceased by 1841. Their children included: David (1810–71), who died at Meikledale Haugh; James (1811–70), who died at Tythehouse, Hobkirk; Robert (b.1813); Adam (1815–90), who died at Changehouse, Teviothead; Helen (b.1817); Henry (1819–94), who died at Torwoodlee; Mary (b.c.1827); and Isabella (b.c.1827). James (b.1799/1800) born in Castleton Parish. He was a game-watcher at Clerkleap in 1841. He was then living with his sister Eliza and daughter Jane. James (b.1804) son of James and Janet Brydon. Like his father, he was an agricultural labourer at Howpasley. He was recorded as ‘Howpasley New’ in 1841, with his widowed mother living with his family. In 1851 he was a retired shepherd living at about 34 North Hermitage Street in Newcastleton. In 1833 he married Esther Hardie (from Castleton Parish) in Roberton, their children including Nancy, James, John, Janet, Esther and Adam (b.1846). James (b.1829/30) son of Simon and Mary Jardine. He was a shepherd at Arkletonshiels in 1851. He was then living with his sister Elspeth and brother Adam. He was married by 1861, his wife being Margaret, and their children including Simon, John and James. He could be the James recorded as farmer at Arkleton in 1868. James (b.1829/30) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a shepherd at Borthwickshiels in 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included Adam, Francis, John Elliot and Margaret. John (d.bef. 1502) resident probably of the Holydean or Nisbet areas, who was killed along with James. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502 there is mention of several men being declared fugitives for their parts in these murders, the surnames including Jack, Morrison, Rufy, Smith, Thorbrand and Weir. Additionally John Coltart in Rutherford was beheaded for the crime. The details of the events that led to these murders are not recorded. Since John’s name was given first, he was presumably either father or elder brother of James. John (16th/17th C.) Burgess of Selkirk who was recorded as ‘knokkeiper’ (i.e. clock-keeper) in 1608. John, brother of Walter Scott of Woll, and his half-brother John Turnbull came to his house and wounded him, apparently on being ‘hounded out’ by Robert Scott of Haining. The 2 were apprehended by the Bailies of

Selkirk, whereupon a group of other Scotts and their followers (from Thirlestane, Bowhill, Synton and other places) rescued the pair. The exact nature of the dispute is now obscure. John (17th C.) miller of Appotside Mill, witness to a sasine of 1632. He is also recorded as ‘Johnne Jacksoune’ in 1637 when his son William witnessed a sasine in Hobkirk Parish. John (17th C.) ‘webster’ at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Borthaugh in 1705. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1705). John (17th/18th C.) recorded at Todshaw in 1711 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1750 he married Bessie Elliot, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included Catherine (b.1752). John (18th C.) resident at Philhopeshiel in 1763 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably the John who married Margaret Tait and had children, baptised in Roberton Parish, including: Margaret (b.1744); Bessie (b.1747); James (b.1748); John (b.1750); Bessie (b.1752); Robert (b.1753); Walter (b.1755); Isobel (b.1758) and Helen (b.1760). In 1753 the record says ‘the mother of the child being sponser’, suggesting that he was not from Roberton, but his wife was. John (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Margaret Tait (probably in 1754) and their children, baptised in Ewes, included Bessie (b.1755), James (b.1757), Beatrice (b.1758), Margaret (b.1769) and Simon (b.1760). It is unclear if he could be the same as the Roberton John, whose wife’s name was the same. John (1719/20–80) shepherd at Arkletonshiels. He married Margaret Tait, who died in 1794, aged 63. Their children included James (b.1756/7), who was also shepherd at Arkleton. John (1787–1870) son of James and Elspeth Armstrong. He was at least the 3rd generation of his family to be shepherds in Ewesdale. At the age of 23 he married Betty Oliver (1789–1870), who was literally from across the road. They had 16 children, born in Castleton Parish: Walter (1811–92); Peter (1813–91); James (1814–95); George (b.c.1815); Jennet (1816–97); John (1818–95); Elspeth (1820–85); Jane Jardine (1821–1907); Mary (b.c.1822); Charles Maxwell (1824–77); Barton (1826–53); Adam (1828–1908); Simon (1829–95); Betty (1831–90); Margaret (1831–1914); and Ellen (or Helen, 1833–89). Around 1838 he emigrated to America, most of his family joining him in 1840, settling in Andes, Delaware County, New York. John (18th/19th C.) resident of 'Hardon' (probably Harden in Castleton Parish) in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He may be the shepherd John who was at Riccarton in 1835. John (b.1790s) son of Adam and Helen Crozier. Like his father he was shepherd at Redmoss in Castleton Parish. He was there in 1835 (while another John was shepherd at Riccarton) and still listed there among Parish heads of households in 1841. He married Helen Moore and their children were: William (b.1821); Elizabeth (b.1825); Helen (b.1827), married William Glendinning; Adam (b.1829); James (b.1831); Walter (b.1833); Agnes (b.1835); John (b.1838); David (b.1841); and Thomas (b.1843). John (b.1801/2) born in Jedburgh Parish, he was a farmer at Bush in Ewesdale. In 1861 he was at Ewes, frming 2035 acres and employing 6 people. His wife was Eleanor H. and their children included Thomas L. John (1815/6–76) clogger in Hawick, from Langholm, he was born in Ewesdale. He is listed as a clog-maker on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed at 9 Howegate. He married Agnes Hunter (born in Wilton), who died in 1912, aged 83; she was described as a 'vigorous woman, belonging to the family of grocers etc.' Their children were Simon (who married a daughter of 'Danny o the Dean'), Margaret (who died young), Thomas, Robert, Thomas (again), Mary (who emigrated to Australia with her mother, but died aged 16) and John (mill cashier). He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. John (d.1909) son of John, he was known as a somewhat simple individual. He worked as cashier with A.P. Innes & Co. and with William Lockie's. He was Clerk of the Deacon's Court at St. George's Kirk in the early 1900s. Margaret (b.1791/2) shopkeeper at 'Poor's houses' in Ewesdale. She is listed there in 1851, when she was unmarried. She was probably related to Elizabeth. Patrick (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as 'Philippus Jak-soun'. The other men were Scotts, Turnbells, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalglish etc., and so he is probably local. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Howpasley. He is recorded in 1494/5 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he was surety for himself and fined for not appearing. He could also be the Robert who was recorded in 1494/5 along with Adam Howatson, when Alexander Turnbull, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, had remission for the crime of resetting them. Perhaps the same Robert is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. His name is given as 'Robertus Jaikson'. The other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick. Perhaps the same 'Roberti Jak-soun' was also listed in 1501 among 10 men (mostly Turnbells) whose fines were remitted. Probably the same Robert was described as tenant in Wolfcleuchhead in 1502 when he had remission for bringing in 'traitors of Leven' to steal cattle and goods from Ninian Murray at Kershope, with John Turnbull of Dryden as his surety. He was described being 'with the Laird of Howpasley' at the same court in Jedburgh in 1502 when he had remission for stealing cattle and other goods from Kershope. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Robert (b.1832/3) shepherd at Wester Alemoor. His wife was Janet and their children included Janet and Adam. He made coin donations to the Museum. Simon (1793–1855) son of James and Elspeth Armstrong, he was a farm worker at Arkleton. He was living at Arkleton Cottage in 1841. He married Mary Jardine and their children included: Betty (b.1819); Elspeth (1822–74), who went out to America to join her brothers; Walter (b.1827); John (b.1825); James (b.1829); Simon (b.1831); William; Adam J. (1836–1922), who emigrated to New York state; and Thomas. He died at Dorniegill. Simon (b.1852) son of John, he lived at 9 Howegate. He married Margaret Stewart, daughter of 'Danny o the Dean', and was known as an ardent Liberal. Thomas (d.bef. 1580) son of Alexander, resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1579/80 he renounced his 2 half husbandlands in Lilliesleaf to Walter Riddell of that ilk. This is because he 'now dwells in England and is in service there and cannot, therefore, occupy the said roum'. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Marion Dalglish. Their children included: John (b.1645); and Agnes (b.1650). probably the same Thomas witnessed a baptism in 1651 for Robert Elliot. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Bellendean in 1764. He married Isobel Thomson in Robertson in 1752. His children included Margaret (b.1758) and Richard (b.1760) and Peggy (b.1764). Patrick (b.1754), baptised in Yarrow, may also be his son. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Harden in 1798. He married Mary Veitch in Cavers in 1782. Their children included Robina (b.1798), baptised in Robertson. Thomas (b.c.1810) farm worker living at Broadlee in Robertson Parish in 1841. His wife was Harriet and their children included James, Robert, Janet, Thomas, Adam and John. Thomas (b.1810/1) from Westerkirk, he was farmer at Shankend in 1851. He was unmarried and living with his nieces Jeanie and Elizabeth Corbet at that time. In 1861 he was a carrier visiting Ormiston Lochend at the time of the census. Thomas (19th/20th C.) one of the survivors of the Gallipoli Campaign, who visited the region in a group of Hawick veterans in 1965. Walter (15th C.) witness in 1456 to a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, witnessed at Braxholme for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as 'Walterus Jakson'. The document probably refers to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. Walter (18th C.) hind at Falnash. In 1740 he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot, cottar at Falnash. He married Barbara Scott in Cavers Parish in 1731. Their children baptised in Hawick Parish included: John (b.1734); Isobel (b.1737); and Betty (b.1739). The witnesses to the 1737 baptism were Walter Wilson (servant to Walter Scott in Commonsides) and John Telfer (Kirk Officer). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Riccarton in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. Walter (1803–89) younger son of Adam and Helen Crozier. He was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Braidlie and elsewhere in Liddesdale. He may be the Walter, shepherd at Larriston, recorded in 1835–40. He married Nicholas Hislop. Their children were: Jean (b.1825); Elizabeth (b.1827), who married James Edgar, grocer in Castleton; Jean (again, b.1829); Isabella (b.1831); Janet (b.1835); David (b.1837); Margaret (b.1839); William (b.1842); Jamina; and Thomasina. His children were born at North Greenholm, Cleuchhead, Redmoss, Larriston Rigg and Larriston House. William (17th C.) son of John. He was tenant at Appotside Mill in 1637 when he witnessed a sasine. William (18th C.) married Isabel Rutherford in Cavers Parish in 1720. William (18th C.) married Agnes Lillico in Hawick in 1722. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Heap on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Miller in 1787 and their children included: Isabel (b.1788); Janet (b.1791); and Joan (b.1793). The witnesses in 1788 and 1791 were Postmaster James

Inglis and Thomas Miller (surely related to his wife), and in 1793 were butcher George Deans and Thomas Wallace. William (18th/19th C.) married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1817. William (18th/19th C.) weaver in Newcastleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835. William (19th C.) resident of Dinlabyre in 1868. William (b.1808/9) from Castleton, he was groom at Greenriver in Hobkirk Parish in 1861. William (b.1823/4) shepherd at Riccarton in the 1860s. He was possibly son of John, shepherd at Redmoss. His wife was Isabella and their children included christin, John, James and Robert T. William Douglas 'Dougie' (1941–2018) rugby international from Hawick. He grew up at 91 Burnfoot Road and attended Wilton and Hawick High Schools. He played rugby for the Y.M., becoming known as a fast winger. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. in 1958/9 and played until the 1970/1 season, turning out more than 200 times and being part of the team that won 10 sevens competitions in a row. He also played for the South of Scotland and received 8 caps for Scotland. He later coached the Y.M. and was Club President. He was also involved with the Boys' Brigade in Hawick. He worked briefly in the knitwear industry, but spent most of his life in the building trade. When visiting Newcastle Races, he appeared in a crowd scene of the film Get Carter. He married Sheila Turnbull (sister of Cornet George) in 1964 and they had children Vivienne (b.1965), Caroline and Sandra (b.1969) (formerly spelled 'Jacksons', 'Jakson', 'Jaksone', 'Jaksonn', etc.).

Jack's alive (jawks-a-llv) n., arch. a game played with a lighted match or piece of paper, passed between people, with the loser the one holding it when it goes out – 'Jack's alive, A kind of sport. A piece of paper or match is handed round a circle, he who takes hold of it saying, 'Jack's alive, he'se no die in my hand.' He, in whose hand it dies or is extinguished, forfeits a wad; and all the wads are recovered only by undergoing a kind of penance, generally of a mirthful description; Teviotd.' [JoJ].

Jack-startles-a-stovy (jawk-star-tulz-a-stō-vee) n., arch. saying among shepherds when the hill-tops appear to undulate in the heat, heat haze – 'He gave the term 'Jack startles a stovy', or 'stoopy' to the undulatory exhalations in hot weather, when the hill-tops appear to be running off, like a band of 'startled' cattle. When 'Jack startles his stovie', it is the signal for the children

the Jacobites (thu-ja-kō-bīts) n. followers of the Stuarts in the 18th century, particularly during the two rebellions of 1715 and 1745. There were local Jacobite sympathisers, but support was not widespread in the Borders. Zerubabel Haig of Bemersyde was possibly the only local nobleman to support the Jacobites, while Elliot of Minto and others were in favour of King George. However, 16 men from Teviotdale joined the Jacobite force at Jedburgh. In mid-October 1715 about 200 horsemen under Lord Kenmure and Mr. Foster passed through Hawick, where they proclaimed 'the Chevalier' King James VIII; the Hawick Session records state 'No sermon, in regard of ye tumult occasioned by a numerous multitude in arms against King George and his government'. It is also said that they ransacked Stobs for the armoury that they heard was there. Robert Patten's 'History of the Rebellion' describes Hawick as 'a small poor Market-Town belonging to the Duchess of Buccleuch at whose House the English Lords with their Relations, and Mr. Forster took up their Quarters'. 3 Jacobite divisions then met at Kelso and there was much debate about what course to follow. About 2 weeks later James' Highland host, commanded by Lord Derwentwater and his brother Charles Radcliffe, marched south, coming to Hawick from Jedburgh. Some officers, including Derwentwater, Radcliffe and Kenmure, were quartered in the Tower, while the Highland host were encamped on the Moor. There was a near mutiny there, with the Highlanders refusing to march into England, preferring to fight the enemy on Scottish ground. They spent the night of October 29th at Hawick, and that night there was a false alarm raised, with speculation that it was a ruse to test the Highlanders. The next day the soldiers marched on to Langholm and were later convinced to cross into England. The Session book records succinctly 'No Sermon, Kenmure, Englishes and Highlanders in ye toun'. There are several other entries in the Session records of official days of thanksgiving or praying for the success of the King's armies and such like. The country was generally in an unstable state at this time, the Hawick Minister saying in 1716 that 'the reason was that he had not sooner begun to catechize, the countrie was in a tumult occasioned by manie riseing of arms against ye present government of our sovereign, King George'. Adam Turnbull of Denesye (near Hawthornside) was also said to be a Stuart supporter and convinced to give up his family lands and flee in 1715. During the 1745 rebellion the people of Hawick appear to have offered essentially no support; however, there were probably individuals who supported the Jacobite cause, as in the case against a Selkirk shoemaker in 1743 for 'drinking the Pretender's health'. Part of a force under Lord Balmerino, along with cavalry, spent the night in Hawick in November of that year, while 'Bonnie Prince Charlie' stayed at Larriston. Robert Wilson tells several stories about 1745 which are probably confused with events of 1715, for example that Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw was an officer under the Prince, and that a lady from Hawick followed the Prince all the way to Carlisle, but refused to be given an audience. An old man called Charles Stewart residing in Hawick Parish at the end of the 18th century was said to have been an illegitimate son of Bonnie Prince Charlie; however, many people were called Charles around that time. There is also a tale (no doubt largely fictional!) of a Hawick man who acted as guide when the army passed through in 1745, meeting with Lord Lovat, and later becoming a barber in Newcastle, where he slit the throat of one of the main testifiers against Lovat. A butter dish, said to have been used when Bonnie Prince Charlie dined at Newmill (although that seems doubtful) was presented to the Museum in 1856. Another story tells of a detachment of the Jacobite army camping near Spittal-on-Rule and after having their paymaster's money-bag stolen the Highlanders threatened to burn Denholm, after which the money was returned. When some of the Highlanders marched up the Rule valley towards Carlisle they enlisted Sam Oliver, the Hobkirk schoolmaster to be their guide through Liddesdale. When a small part of Charlie's army passed through Castleton they carried off a beehive belonging to a weaver from there; after failing to get it back he is said to have proclaimed 'Let them go, (with a jeer), I have furnished the Prince a larger number, in full armour, with several months' provision, than the greatest chieftan in the Highlands' – 'Well six full months and mair went by The Prince was then in hiding He'd rued the day he didna' bide and sie Hawick's Common-Riding' [T].

jambstane (jawm-stān) n., arch. a stone part of a doorway – 'I took my rung that I had flung Ayont the auld jambstane ...' [WaD].

James (jāmz) n. name of 7 Stuart (or Stewart) Kings of Scotland, including 2 Kings of the United Kingdom. James I (1394–1437) King from 1406, although in name only until 1424. He had been sent away from Scotland to avoid his uncle the Duke of Albany, but was captured by the English and spent 18 years in effective captivity. He returned to Scotland and led the killing of Albany's relatives. There was dispute over his rights to the throne, leading to him being killed in a plot involving the Earl of Atholl (Albany's brother), possibly in a blocked up sewer at Blackfriars Monastery. In 1412, while captive at Croydon, he granted a confirming charter of the lands of Hawick (as well as Drumlanrig and Selkirk) to William Douglas of Drumlanrig; the charter was written in his own hand and still survives. James II (1430–60) King from 1437–60, he was crowned at Kelso Abbey. After the death of the Regent, the 5th Earl Douglas, he schemed to have other Douglasses killed, and personally killed the Black Douglas at a state dinner. His defeat of the Douglas forces at the Battle of Arkinholm in 1455 led to the weakening of the strength of the House of Douglas, including their power in Teviotdale, which shifted to the Scotts. He became heavily involved in military conflicts with England, but brought peace and prosperity to the Nation for a short time. He also moved the capital from Perth to Edinburgh. He married Mary of Gueldres. He granted John Langlands the half Barony of Wilton in 1451. He died when a cannon exploded during the siege of Roxburgh castle, and it is said that a holly bush later marked the spot. James III (c.1452–88) King from 1460. Born the Duke of Rothesay, he was apparently not a popular King and was also reportedly bisexual. He was crowned at Kelso Abbey a week after his father died. During his minority he was under the control of the Boyd family. In 1464 he granted lands to Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Kirkcudbright in gratitude for services to himself and his father. He married Margaret of Denmark, receiving the Orkneys and Shetlands as a dowry. There were ongoing feuds with his 2 brothers and with other noblemen. An army was raised against him at the Battle of Sauchieburn, in which his own son fought against him. He was killed immediately afterwards by an opponent disguised as a priest. Just a few days before his death he regranted the Barony of Cavers to William Douglas, after Douglas had promised to be faithful to the King and to defend him ‘against all that live or die shall’. James IV (1473–1513) King from 1488, he was involved in the Battle of Sauchieburn against his father James III. He is regarded as an effective and popular ruler. In an attempt to make peace with Henry VII he married Margaret Tudor in 1503, celebrated in poetry as the union of the thistle and the rose (and taking place at Galashiels Market Cross). He also visited Eskdale in 1503. In 1510 he visited Rulewater to suppress some outlaws there; he is supposed to have publicly humiliated a group of about 200 Turnbells at Spittal-on-Rule, hanging perhaps 20 of them. He removed Douglas’s lands of Hawick in 1510, but re-granted them in the 1511 charter, which contained the ‘burgh of barony’ status for Hawick. When Henry VIII invaded France he was thrown into a new conflict with England. He led the Scots at Flodden and was killed there – ‘Royal James still urged the battle, Though forewarned it would be fatal’ [JH], ‘The fatal arrow Breathless laid the royal hero; Round him youths and warriors hoary, Ended their career of glory’ [T]. James V (1512–42) King from 1513, when only 18 months old. During his minority the country was ruled by his mother and then by the Duke of Albany. Later his step-father, the Earl of Angus, tried to wield power. In 1526 Sir Walter Scott of Branksome and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig (and Hawick) attempted to rescue him from the control Angus near Melrose. He visited Jedburgh in both 1526 and 1529. In 1530 he put together an army from the loyal Lairds and marched on the Borders to try to suppress the worst of the ‘Theives and lymmaris’. This led to the execution of William Cockburn of Henderland and Adam Scott of Tushielaw. He also had Johnnie Armstrong and several of his supporters hanged at Caerlennig in a manner, which was considered grossly unfair at the time, giving rise to a ballad. He was traditionally associated with Hawick through the ‘Hab o Hawick’ episode, when he is said to have stayed at Drumlanrig’s Tower. In fact in that 1530 expedition (as traced in the ‘Household Books’) it is known that he stayed at Caerlennig and then at Allan Water (signing a charter at Priesthaugh), and probably got no closer to Hawick before moving through Ewesdale. However, an English letter suggests that he passed through Hawick in November 1542, en route to the fateful battle at Solway Moss (although Scottish accounts say that he stayed at Lochmaben Castle). He married Madeleine of France, and later Mary of Guise. He died at Falkland Palace, after the Scots defeat at Solway Moss, apparently out of a lack of will to live. He was succeeded by his infant daughter Mary (‘Queen of Scots’). His illegitimate sons included: James, ‘the Regent Moray’; James, Commendator of Melrose and Kelso; Robert, Prior of Whithorn; Robert, Earl of Orkney; Adam Prior of Charter House; and John, Lord Darnley, Commendator of Coldingham. James VI (1566–1625) King of Scotland from 1567. In 1570 his army gathered at Hawick for a ‘Raid’. In 1592, Francis Earl of Bothwell and others tried to capture him at Falkland, this leading to a number of Border Lairds being denounced as rebels, including Walter Scott of Harden and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He became James I of England in 1603. He was son of Mary and Lord Darnley, and was raised as a Presbyterian. He was never a very popular ruler in England, but only briefly returned to Scotland once after being crowned in London. After assuming the English throne he turned some of his attention to the Borders, setting up a commission in 1605, which appointed Sir William Cranston to ‘tame’ the Borders on the Scottish side. This spread terror across the Borders, including a huge number of hangings and forced emigrations, and led to great hardship for many local clans. However, it also led to the region becoming much more peaceful, with the ‘Marches’ now being referred to as the ‘Middle Shires’. In 1617 he visited Cavers house on his way to Edinburgh. Known as one of the most intellectual Kings, he fostered culture in Britain and authorised the popular English translation of the Bible. He married Anne of Denmark and was succeeded by their son Charles – ‘A tale of bygone days I sing, When James the Sixth was Scotia’s king; Oft then the Borderland did ring With sounds of sternest strife ...’ [JCG]. James VII (1633–1701) King from 1685–89. Younger brother of Charles II, he was Duke of York for much of his life, and converted to Catholicism while in exile in France. This led to his unpopularity throughout most of Britain. He made attendance at conventicles a treasonous act, but had to include tolerance to Protestant dissenters in his laws of tolerance to Catholics, allowing Presbyterian ministers to return to their parishes in 1686. his is also known for having New York named after him, as well as for being heavily involved with the slave trade. The Duke of Monmouth (and Buccleuch), Charles II’s illegitimate son tried to seize the throne from him and was executed in 1685. In 1688 he was ousted in the ‘Glorious Revolution’ by the Protestant William of Orange, husband of his daughter Mary. Ministers who continued to pray for him (rather than to William and Mary) were deprived from their parishes. He died in exile in France, continuing to claim his right to the throne. His son James Francis Edward Stuart (‘the Old Pretender’) took up the Jacobite cause to regain the crown for the Stuarts.

Jameson (jām-sin) n. George (19th/20th C.) son of Christopher and Agnes Scott, from Braxton Moor (near Flodden Field), Northumberland. He was gamekeeper at Ancrum, then Chisholme and became gamekeeper at Wolfelee in 1893. In 1877 he married Agnes Hislop. James (18th C.) surgeon of Kelso who was involved in the sale of Adderstone by Francis Scott of Gorrenberry to Capt. John Douglas, brother to the Laird of Cavers in 1750. Rev. William (c.1593–1661) educated at Edinburgh University, he was admitted as a minister at Peebles in 1617, and became minister at Langnewton. In 1621 he complained about John Ker of Langnewton and others for violently interfering with grain that was impounded for his use. In 1631 he complained that several Kers from around Ancrum, Douglas of Timpendean and others took his teinds. He was one of 51 ministers who signed a Protest for the Liberties of the Kirk’. In 1638 he signed the National Covenant, probably in Hawick. In 1640 he was translated to Jedburgh, but had to take on an assistant in 1658. He took part in 7 General Assemblies. His son John was minister at Eccles (ass also Jamieson).

James’s Plantin (jām-zeez-plawn’-in) n. James’s Plantation, wooded area on the former estate of Synton, located just to the south of Syntoncorses.

the James Thomson Brig (thū-jāmz-tom-sin-brig) n. modern footbridge linking Teviot Road with Commercial Road, from near the bottom of Mill Port to the back of the Burns Club. It was built in 2005 and named after local poet James Thomson.

the James Thomson Statue (thū-jāmz-tom-sin-staw’-yoo) n. commemorative bronze statue, sculpted by Bill Landles, with some involvement by Iain Scott. It was unveiled in 2006, beside the bridge named after the local poet. It depicts Thomson seated at his writing desk and incorporates 4 tablets with some of his best-known verses, oriented in relevant directions, while above ‘mony a costly wreath’s been twined Ti grace his honest brow’. A smaller plaque dedicates the work to Anne Redpath. A few stones built into the plinth came from the Auld Mid Raw. Thomson himself is facing ‘Where Slitrig dances doon the glen to join the Teviot waters’.

Jamie (jā-mee) n. diminutive or hypocorism for ‘James’ (also ‘Jimmie’/‘Jimmy’ as well as the former ‘Jemmie’).

Jamie Adams (jā-mee-aw-dumz) n. Hawick character, probably of the 19th century. He could be the James Adams from England who was a road labourer living in Hawick in 1851 – ‘Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].

Jamie Cant (jā-mee-kawnt) n. nickname of James Broon.

Jamie Jolly (jā-mee-jo-lee) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Anon Jock Bewlie shuffles by, And Hie Hi hobbles ahint pell-mell; There’s Jamie Jolly watchin’ a skly, And Daft Jamie ringin’ St. Mary’s bell’ [HI].

Jamie Nichol’s Trough (jā-mee-ni-kulz-trof) n. alternative name for Mag Nichol’s Trough.

Jamieson (jā-mee-sin) n. Andrew (b.c.1800) innkeeper in Denholm who was locally well-known for his collection of historical artefacts. He was listed as a vintner in Denholm in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His personal museum is described in a poem by John Halliday, published in 1847, ‘Epistle to Naturalists and Antiquarians’, which was ‘written on viewing a collection of antiquities, preserved beasts, birds, reptiles &c., belonging to Mr Andrew Jamieson, Innkeeper, Denholm’. He married Helen Beattie in 1825 and their children included: Agnes; Margaret; Helen; and Isabella – ‘I’ve tell’t ye a’ o’ Jamie’s hame, Sae gang an’ see; Weel is he worthy o’ his fame, An’ three times three’ [JoHa]. Andrew (b.1827/8) shoemaker in Denholm. His wife was Helen and they had a daughter Isabella. Archibald (b.c.1800) watchman at a woollen factory. He was listed as a labourer at Wilton Dean among heads of households in 1835. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Roadhead with his wife Isobel and their children Gideon, John, Archibald, Margaret and Agnes. Rev. Henry M. ‘Harry’ minister of Lilliesleaf Kirk, linked with Ashkirk, 1969–76. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1702. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Elliot in Galalaw. James (b.1817/8) from Cavers Parish, he was a stocking-maker in Hawick. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at Roadhead. He married Mary Ann McKinnon and their children included Isobel (b.c.1841). He is recorded in prison in Jedburgh in 1843. James (c.1838–bef. 1905) born in Hawick, among his childhood friends were John Inglis and James Winthrope. From a relatively poor family, he received little schooling, but from an early age had an aptitude for drawing and reading. He is probably the James living with Janet and Margaret (perhaps his mother) at Purdom’s Yard in 1841. In 1851 he was living on Mather’s Close with his aunt Janet and 2 Margarets (probably his mother and sister). At about 14 he became an apprentice with James Tait, druggist, and his employer encouraged him to pursue his literary interests. At one point he took down the words of ‘The Sunflower’, the only known surviving poem of Dr. John Douglas, allowing it to be later printed in the Hawick Advertiser. He became a member of the Hawick Mutual Improvement Society in 1858, reading his first paper there that year, and remaining associated with that society until he left Hawick. His first poem ‘Home Sickness’, was published in the Hawick Advertiser in 1856, and he made frequent contribution there afterwards. 3 of his verses appeared in James Watson’s ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859), namely ‘Oor Ain Fireside’, ‘My Grannie an’ her Spinnin’-Wheel’ and ‘A Voice from the Fields’. He is probably best known for his poem ‘The Aicht o’clock Bell’, about the ringing of the curfew bells in Hawick. His poem ‘Eventide in Teviotdale’ received a prize when it was published in ‘The Key’. He intended to publish a volume of his poetry, but this never appeared. He had several temporary positions in Hawick, then left the Town permanently in 1861 to train as an engraver with James R. Hope in Edinburgh. He then worked with Mould & Todd, where he renewed his acquaintanceship with the engraver C.O. Murray (brother of ‘Dictionary’ Murray). Apart from a short stint in Bradford he remained in Edinburgh until about 1888 when he moved to Aberdeen. James (1919/20–60) born in Hawick, he worked in the Post Office and joined the Royal Corps of Signals in 1939. In 1948 he was appointed Assistant Controller of Posts in the Federated Malay States, staying there until 1959 and then moving to Western Australia. His wife, Margaret Stewart Tweedie operated a store and post office there until her death in 1973, aged 60. Their children included J. Jardin (b.1943) and Kay (b.1952). Rev. Dr. John (1759–1838) Scottish lexicographer. Son of a Glasgow minister, he became a theology student at age 14 and a minister at 20. He started at Colmonell in Ayrshire and was Anti-Burgher minister at Nicholson Street in Edinburgh from 1797, accepting the call that John Young turned down in order to stay in Hawick. He helped to re-unite the Burgher and Anti-Burgher secession churches. He was a keen antiquarian, with a particular interest in language. His ‘Etymological Dictionary of the Scottish Language’ (1808) was a unique work for its time, using illustration from both old and modern Scots. The Supplement, which appeared in 1825 had the assistance of people from all over Scotland; there are many descriptions therein of Teviotdale words and idioms, which are otherwise unrecorded (these are usually noted as either 'Roxb.' or 'Teviotd.'). One person who helped him directly was Mrs. Patrick, the eldest daughter of Rev. Young of the Green Kirk in Hawick. Others in the Roxburghshire area included Thomas Wilkie from Innerleithen, James Fair of Langlee, the Shortreeds of Jedburgh, James Hogg (the Ettrick Shepherd) and Hogg's nephew Robert. He laid the essential groundwork for what would become the Scottish National Dictionary. He was a keen angler and later in life spent time every summer fishing on the Tweed and its tributaries.

John (b.c.1790) shoemaker in Denholm, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on Main Street with his wife Janet Laidlaw and children James, Catherine, William, John, Andrew and Peter (also written 'Jamisone', 'Jammison' and variants; cf. Jameson).

Jamieson's Croft (jā-mee-sinz-kroft) n. former croft near Hawick, the name being used long after the farmstead itself was gone. It is mentioned by James Wilson in 1850 and J.J. Vernon in 1900, but the precise location is uncertain.

Jamie Tackets (jā-mee-taw-kits) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the early 19th century, known for his smuggling – 'Wullie the Paidle, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott' [HI], 'There's Jamie Tackets o' Hawick, And other two also, They saddled their horses on Sunday, And off to Boomer did go' [T] (perhaps related to the small nails).

Jamie Tamson (jā-mee-tam-sin) n. familiar name for James Thomson.

Jamie Telfer (jā-mee-tel-fur) n. 'Jamie Telfer o' the Fair Dodheid', ballad telling of the Captain of Bewcastle stealing the cattle of Jamie Telfer of Dodhead, who then goes to raise the fray. It is best known from the version in Sir Walter Scott's 'Minstrelsy', where Telfer roused the Scotts, who rode off in pursuit, killing all the English and capturing their cattle, but leading to the death of Willie Scott. In another version (sometimes referred to as the Sharp manuscript and entitled '...i' the Fair Dodhead') it is the Elliots who are roused and the Scotts who refuse to help Telfer. There is much circumstantial evidence that Sir Walter changed the words to switch the Scott and Elliot roles, thereby mangling the geographical sense of the ballad; he is thus attacked in an essay by Col. Elliot. The existence of multiple versions is one of the reasons why the location of 'the Fair Dodheid' is uncertain. In the pro-Elliot version it is likely to be the former farmstead in the Ettrick valley near Singlie, while in the pro-Scott version it would make more sense if it was in the Dod Burn valley, although there is no evidence there was ever a place there called Dodhead. Andrew Lang wrote a chapter on the ballad, defending Sir Walter Scott, and arguing that in the end it is a work of fiction, rather than history. Whatever the details of the original version or its historical accuracy, it remains one of the few Border ballads where some of the action takes place in the immediate neighbourhood of Hawick.

Jamie the Poeter (jā-mee-thu-pō-i'-ur) n. local nickname for James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd.

Jamie the Scaur (jā-mee-thu-skawr) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – 'Dan Narry and Kit i' the Bar, The Cud and Coulter and Five O'clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock' [HI].

Jane Dice's Kirn see Jenny Dice's Kirn

jannie (ja-nee) n. a janitor, especially in a school – '...the tug-o-war team were trained be Jock Heggie the jannie' [IWL].

Januar (ja-new-ar, jan-war) n., arch. January – '...writin at Hawik the penult day of Januar' [RBA1561], '...that the said Mr Blair did upon the twenty-third day of Januar immediatlie last bypast marry the said John Young upon the above designed Margaret Clerke ...' [PR1706], 'Each 'eer, as Januar' – end returns, Ilk yowe and stirkie waefu' murns ...' [DH].

Janus (jā-nis) n. column in the Hawick News, typically stirring up local issues. It was originated by Neil Mackay, but written by several contributors over the years.

jap (jawp) v., arch. to splash, bespatter – 'Harry, all 'japped' over with soapsuds ...' [RM], n. a spot of mud, splash of dirty water (also 'jaap').

japperty-jee (jaw-pur'-ee-jee) n., arch. wreck and ruin – 'It's a' ti japperty-jee' [GW] (also 'jaapertie-jee').

jappit (jaw-pee', -pi') pp., arch. splashed, splattered – '...whan A'm owther geetin jaappeet an splairgheat wui dirrt, or dunsht wui folk' [ECS], 'Ma top-coat an ma breek-feet ir aa jaapeet wui glaar' [ECS] (also 'jaupit'; see jap).

the Japs (thu-jawps) v., pl. occasional nickname for people from Selkirk (originating among rugby supporters, and said to have come from the appearance of some housing on the way into the town from Hawick).

jar (jawr) n., poet. disharmony, dispute – ‘For Border chieftains soon began To blow the coal of war; And over all fair Liddesdale, Spread robbery, blood, and jar’ [JTe].

Jardine (jār-, jer-, jawr-din, -deen) n. Adam (17th C.) tenant in ‘Heugh-head’, although it is unclear which Heughhead this might have been. He was mentioned in 1687 when the will of his wife Isobel ‘Rickeltown’ is recorded. He may be the Adam who witnessed a baptism for William Gardner in Hawick in 1705 and the weaver who witnessed a baptism for weaver James Brown in the same year. He could be the Adam who married Helen Cook in Hawick in 1702 or the Adam who married Margaret Frazer in Hawick in 1706. Adam (1758–1811) son of weaver Andrew and Betty Brown, he was a miller in Hawick Parish and may also have worked as a carter. He is recorded in 1790 as ‘Under Miller’ when an unnamed child of his died; this was on the same day as the child of miller John Scott, perhaps suggesting he was under-miller of Hawick Mill (and that the same disease took the lives of the new-born children). In 1794 he was a ‘workman’. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’, b.1759) Murray in 1783, in Ewes Parish and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1783), born at Howgill in Ewes, who married Andrew Scott, from Morebattle; Andrew (d.1787); an unnamed child (d.1790); John (b.1789/90); Isobel (d.1794), who died in infancy; and Helen (c.1796–1860), who died in Morebattle, unmarried. In 1798 he secondly married Jane Graham, who may have died in 1806. The witnesses in 1783 were John and William Murray (surely related to his wife). He died in Hawick. Adam (18th/19th C.) married Jane Graham in Hawick in 1798. Adam (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish, living at Bygate in 1841. He married Jean Watson and their children included: Abraham (b.1833); and Isabela (b.1838/9). Alexander (b.1801/2) from Glasgow, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He was one of the first Deacons and first Trustees of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk in Hawick, in the late 1840s. He is recorded at 8 Teviot Crescent in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet. Their children included Elizabeth, Jessie, John, Alexander Pringle, Thomas and Jean. Andrew (17th C.) tenant at Dykeraw. He was listed in 1684 among many people declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Adderstoneshiel listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694

Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as ‘Andrew Jirdin’ among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Andrew ‘Gyrden’, married to Janet Goodfellow, whose children Adam (b.1684) and James (b.1688) were baptised in Hawick; the witnesses in 1684 were William Swan and Patrick Bridges (both weavers) and in 1688 were William Scott of Whitehaugh (suggesting some connection to that family or area) and Robert Scott. He is probably the weaver who witnessed baptisms for weaver John Jolly in 1704 and for James Leithead in 1704. He was a weaver in 1709 when he witnessed another baptism for merchant Walter Bryson. He was probably the man recorded as weaver ‘Andrew Girdin’ when he was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He was ‘Andrew Jerden older’ in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid. His first wife was probably Janet Bridges (daughter of William), with children including: Thomas (b.1671); William (b.1673); Margaret (b.1678); Andrew (b.1680), also a weaver; and an unnamed son (b.1682). The witnesses in 1671 and 1680 were William Bridges (probably his father-in-law) and William Swan (who was a weaver), in 1673 were Walter Purdom and William Bridges and in 1678 were Patrick and Adam Bridges. Isobel may have been another daughter. John (b.1690), baptised in Hawick, was probably also his son. Andrew (b.1680) weaver in Hawick, son of Andrew, with his mother being Janet Bridges and his step-mother being Janet Goodfellow. He was recorded as ‘Adam [sic] Jerden younger weaver’ in one version of a baptismal record of 1709. The member of the Council recorded in 1711 was either him or his father. He was ‘younger weaver’ in 1711. In 1715 he petitioned the Hawick Session to reinstate the place for his wife’s stool in the Kirk, she having been in Ewes Parish temporarily. Probably the same Andrew was questioned by the Session in 1718 about why he was seen coming out of the Beadle’s house at a late hour of the night. He may be the weaver who witnessed baptisms for butcher Robert Hardie in 1723 and 1726 and for shoemaker George Oliver in 1745. He married Helen Cook in Hawick in 1702 and their children included Janet (b.1703), Margaret (b.1705), Andrew (b.1707), James (b.1708), Beatrix (b.1709), Jean (b.1711), John

(b.1713), James (b.1717), William (b.1717), Helen (b.1718), Christian (b.1719), Andrew (b.1721) and Elizabeth (b.1722). The witnesses in 1703 were weaver Jasper Richardson and gardener William Gardner, in 1707 were James Gray (tenant in Whitlaw) and weaver James Wight, in 1708 were weavers Thomas Briggs and John Oliver, in 1709 were John and Jasper Richardson, in 1711 were weaver Thomas Briggs and gardener William Gardner, in 1713 were William Gardner and John Napier, in 1721 were weaver Robert Tinlin and shoemaker John Scott, and in 1722 were Walter Scott (probably the Minister's servant) and John Cunningham (perhaps the Minister's son). Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1706 he married Margaret Fraser, who was also from Hawick Parish. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) Hawick resident, possibly Burgh Officer or joiner. In 1732 he was paid for mending the beam for the weights of the clock in St. Mary's Kirk. And in 1735 the Bailies and Council elected him 'to keep the town clock sufficiently to his power under the penalty of forfeiting a year's salary'. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) probably the Andrew, son of Andrew, baptised in 1721. He was a weaver in Hawick. He married Betty Brown, who died in Hawick in 1781. Their children included: Isobel (b.1743); Helen (b.1745); and Adam (b.1758). The witnesses in 1743 were baker John Kedic and wright James Roger and in 1745 were late Bailie John Scott and saddler Francis Ruecastle. Archibald (19th/20th C.) writer of 'History of Hawick Baptist Church' (1925), as well as a short history of Hawick Home Mission. Archibald (b.1891) son of James. He worked in his father's tweed merchant's on Croft Road, this later becoming a drapery business and moving to 8 Oliver Place. He started in the family business at age 14 and retired in 1962. He also served in the Artillery in WWI. Charles (b.1817/8) farmer at Riccarton. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1851 he was farmer at Riccarton, employing 4 labourers. He was still farmer there in 1861, but was unmarried. He was a generous subscriber to David Anderson book of verse in 1868 and was recorded as farmer at Riccarton in the same year. Probably the same Charles was recorded as a 20-year-old farmer at Dinlabyre in 1841. He may be the son of Walter baptised in Castleton in 1817. Gavin (d.bef. 1535) recorded as 'umquhill Gawin Jardin' when a charter was revoked involving the lands of Broadlee in the Borthwick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig, in favour of him. It is unclear whether his family was local. George (b.1838/9) tailor in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on Langholm Street with his mother Elizabeth Swan and his siblings Margaret A. and William M. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Dinlabyre in 1784 when one of his children was baptised. He is recorded as 'Mr. Gilbert Jardin, Dinlawbyre' in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was recorded in the period 1789–92 in the Horse Tax Rolls at Dinlabyre with 1 horse. His surname was 'Jerden' in 1797 when described as a footman at Haggiehaugh in Castleton Parish, working for Col. William Elliot. He married Isabel Sharp (from Southdean) in 1765. Their children included: James (b.1766); Helen (b.1771); Janet (b.1773); Isabel (b.1782); and Gilbert (b.1784). Robert (b.c.1778), farmer at Harwood on Teviot, may also have been his son (based on his children's names). Hector (16th C.) tenant of Swinstead in Kirkton Parish. In 1581 he was 'in Swynsteids' along with James Murray when they (along with several Elliots) witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs from his deceased brother George Gledstains. Helen 'Nelly' (d.1816) resident of Hawick Parish. Her death, along with 'Frenchmans Bastard Child', is recorded in 1816. It is unclear whose daughter she was. Presumably the father of her child was a French prisoner of war. James (17th/18th C.) witness to a baptism for merchant Michael Briggs in Hawick in 1712. James (17th/18th C.) recorded in Lymiecleuch in 1719 when his daughter Jane was baptised in Cavers Parish. James (b.1727), William (b.1732) and James (again, b.1734), baptised in Cavers, are probably also his children. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Arkleton in Ewesdale in 1785–97 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He had 3 farm horses and a saddle horse. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dinlabyre, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. His name there is spelled 'Jardane'. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He is probably the son of Gilbert, born in Castleton Parish in 1766. It is unclear if he was the same man as the farmer at Larriston. He may be the James recorded aged 81 in 1841, living in Castleton village with his 29-year-old daughter Janet. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Jardine and their children included: Isobel

(b.1801); Robert (b.1805); Janet (b.1806); Helen (b.1808); and Betty (b.1813). James (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Larriston on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. He was also taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He is also recorded at Larriston in 1794. He is probably related to other Jardines who farmed in Liddesdale and was probably succeeded by James. He may be the James of Larriston listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He may also be the James of Thorlieshope listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1819, along with his son Walter. James (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Irving and their children included Isabel (b.1833); Agnes (b.1835); and Elizabeth (b.1838). James (d.c.1810) tenant farmer at Wauchope. His sons were John and Walter. He had a bond with the Elliots of Harwood in 1763. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Oliver and their children included Elizabeth (b.1814). James (18th/19th C.) keeper of a public house in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was also listed as an innkeeper in Newcastleton among male heads of households in 1835, and 'late innkeeper' 1837-41. James of Thorlieshope (1809/10-46) eldest son of Walter of Thorlieshope. He was tenant farmer at Arkleton, being listed there in 1841. His son-in-law was Dr. Charles Maxwell, who had the lease of the farm at Riccarton. He died at Arkleton and was buried in Castleton. James (b.1815/6) born in Ecclefechan, son of mason John and Agnes Halliday. He was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at the head of Silver Street, in 1851 at about 14 Loan and in 1861 at 5 Loan. Probably the same 'hosier' James was in Jedburgh Jail in 1868. He married Beatrix Laidlaw in Hawick in 1836. Their children included: Margaret (b.1837); Agnes (b.1839); and Walter Brown (b.1841). In 1848 he secondly married Elizabeth Rodden in Hawick. Their children John (b.1849), Agnes (b.1851) and Elizabeth (b.1853) were baptised at Hawick Free Kirk. His wife (previously married to a Ballantyne) also had children Margaret and Charles. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1839 he married Janet Turnbull, who was also from Hawick. James (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabella Beattie and their son James was baptised in 1846. James of Larriston (19th C.) recorded as a principal landowner in Castleton Parish in the 1850s and 60s. He purchased Larriston from George Scott-Elliot in 1843 for £29,000. He was

James 'Esq., of Larriston, Dryffeholm, Lockerbie' who was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s, and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire at about the same time. In 1874 he was listed as owner of Over and Nether Larriston, as well as Larriston Rig and Blackhope. It seems likely he was son of the previous James of Larriston. He may be the James of Thorlieshope recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory and the Jardine of Thorlieshope on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library in 1832. James (1852-1927) local poet, who always signed 'J.J. Weensland'. He was a native of Dumfriesshire, being born at Broadmeadow, Ecclefechan, son of George. He was orphaned at the age of 9, and at 13 went to work for a manufacturer in Lockerbie. Not long after he moved to Weensland, where he served an apprenticeship in a tweed warehouse. He was said to be a regular attendee of evening classes. Due to an injury he gave up work as a warehouseman and became a tweed merchant, based on Croft Road. He contributed poems regularly to the local press and lived most of his life in Hawick. He served as President of the Border Bards Association in 1881. In 1896 he published the article 'Weensland: Past and Present, and the Old Corn Mills of the District. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Campbell Turnbull and Mary Buchan, who came from Ancrum. She died in 1938. Their children were: Georgina; Bessie Jane; and Archibald, who took over the family tweed merchant's. John of Applegrith (15th C.) witness to a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456; it is possible this refers to him being witness to the return of a few years earlier. He may be the same John of 'Appelgarth' who sold Jardinefield to George Home of Wedderburn in 1476. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Pott and their children included: Janet (b.1794); and William (b.1807). He may be the William recorded in 1841 as 80 years old and a lodger at the spa at Deadwater, run by William, who was probably his son. John (1789/90-1877) born in Hawick, he later lived in Langholm. He was son of Adam and Margaret Murray, as described on his death certificate. He was a shoemaker in Langholm in 1861 and was described as 'Post Messenger' in Langholm in 1871. In 1812 he married Janet (or Jane), daughter of Walter Scott and Margaret Kennedy; she was born in Ettrick Parish. Their children included Walter, William, Thomas and James. John (19th C.)

resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Graham and their children included William (b.1833). John of Thorlieshope (b.1811) son of Walter of Thorlieshope. He farmed at Arkleton from the time his brother James died in 1846. He is listed as 'Esq., of Thorlieshope, Arkleton, Ewes' in the 1850s when he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale. He was also 'of ThorliesHope' in Slater's 1852 directory. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was still of Thorlieshope in the 1860s. He is listed at Arkleton in 1861, farming 2000 acres and employing 1 labourer. He was listed as owner of Thorlieshope on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He remained unmarried. His support of the Liddesdale route for the railway was unpopular in Langholm – 'Has Jardine gane to mind his dogs An' left the maps to minin' rogues; He may invest in tups an' hoggs, But mind I've said it, His cash will sink in Plashett's bogs As fast's he's made it' [BM1907]. John (19th C.) married Ellen French. Their son Thomas Welsh was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1847. John (b.1813/4) tenant of Ruecastle farm in 1837, and listed on the 1841 census. In 1851 he was farmer of 300 acres, employing 7 labourers. Sir John (d.1919) M.P. for Roxburghshire 1906–18. He was succeeded as Baronet Jardine by his son John Eric Birdwood. Peter (b.1847) born at Langhaugh Walls on the Wauchope estate, his mother was daughter of Langburnshiels shepherd William Tait. He was educated at Hobkirk Parish school and started working on Wolfelee estate in his teens, eventually becoming the forester. In 1866 he married Margaret Armour of Ayrshire (from the same family as Robbie Burns' wife). They had a daughter Janet Barr, who married W. Stedman. Robert (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Elliot and their children included Isabel (b.1766). Robert (b.1761/2) toll-keeper and spirit dealer at Ewes New Toll Bar in 1841. He was living there with Catherine, probably his wife. Robert (b.c.1778) farmer at Harwood on Teviot from at least 1815. He may have been a son of Gilbert and Isabel Sharp from Castleton (based on the forenames of his children). He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was recorded as 'Independent' at Harwood in 1841, along with his children Agnes, Isabella and Gilbert. He married Agnes, eldest daughter of John Nixon, in Hawick in 1811; she was recorded as 'Mrs Jardine Harwood' when she died in Hawick in 1815. Their children included: Agnes (c.1815–71), who was a

'Woollen Semastress & Annuitant' in 1851i, married Angus Sutherland in Hawick in 1860 and died in Melrose. He secondly married Elliot (or 'Ella') Grieve in Hawick in 1822 and she died in 1824. Their children were: Isabella (1822–59), who married James Murray in Bovina, New York; and Gilbert (c.1823–93), who was a farmer in Bovina, where he died. Sir Robert of Liddelbank (1825–1905) born in Edinburgh, he was a successful merchant and Liberal politician. He was M.P. for Ashburton in Devon, then for the Dumfries Burghs and later for Dumfriesshire. He was created 1st Baronet of Castlemilk, Dumfriesshire in 1885. He owned the farm of Thorlieshope in upper Liddesdale in the late 19th century, as well as Liddelbank in the southernmost tip of Castleton Parish. In 1874 he paid the land tax on Liddelbank, which was part of Greena. Robert (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Jean Elliot and their children included: Jessie (b.1823); and Mary (b.1826). Theodore (b.1815/6) from Dumfries, he was a framework knitter in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at Kirkstyle Place. His wife was Janet and their children included Maria, James, David and Alexander. Thomas (19th C.) married Mary Scott in Castleton Parish in 1845. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Fairloans in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was also recorded as farmer at Fairloans according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. Walter (1771/2–1826) son of James and brother of John. He was listed along with his father as a Commissioner in Roxburghshire in 1819, when he was still younger of Thorlieshope. He farmed at Thorlieshope. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was a cautioner for the agent of the Leith Banking Company in langholm in 1822, and involved in a related court case in 1830. His wife Margaret Armstrong died in 1818, aged 32. Their eldest son James died at Arkleton in 1846, aged 36. Other children included: John (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); Thomas (b.1815); and Charles (b.1817). The family are buried in Castleton. Walter (18th/19th C.) agent in Hawick for carrier John Hargreaves, who operated to all parts of the North according to Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Walter (b.1813) son of Walter and brother of James and John. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at Arkleton and listed as a 'Retired Lieutenant Indian Navy'. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. William (19th

C.) resident of Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was ‘Keeper of the Spa’ at Fairloans ‘or Dead Water Well Spa’. In 1851 he was a game-watcher at Tweedenbank. He married Agnes Ingles and their children included: John (b.1833); James (b.1837); Thomas (b.1840); and Isabella (b.1845). He may have been son of John, who was recorded as a lodger at the spa in 1841. His sister Elizabeth was living with him in 1851 (formerly synonymous with Jerdan; also written ‘Girdin’, ‘Gyrden’, ‘Jardin’, ‘Jardon’, ‘Jerdon’, ‘Jirdin’, ‘Jordand’, etc.).

Jean Cumming’s (jeen-ku-minz, ki-minz) n. shop run by Jean Cumming (or ‘Kimming’), situated on the north side of the Howegate in the early 19th century. It was well known for selling a wide variety of ‘small-wares’, dealing with almost everything edible or useful. The shop was in an old pended house, and was reached by descending 2 steps. It had no window at the front, but had its door in halves, so the owner could lean out the top while talking with passers-by. The room at the back had a small window and was the ‘Widow Cumming’s’ house. The building was thatched until first slated in the early 1800s. The shop was taken over by Jean’s daughter Nannie. A right of way led to the back from Kennedy’s on the Sandbed, which would be walked annually (also known as ‘Jean Kimming’s’).

Maitland fall in love with her daughter 'The Bonny Lass of Branksome'. Further information from James Grieve, tenant in Branhholme Park, suggested that she was Jane Scott and kept an inn at Scatterpenny. She was presumably a widow at the time of the song, which (if it describes historical events) appears to be set about the late 17th century. It is possible she was the Jean Scott listed as a householder on the 1694 Hearth Tax records.

jeck (jek) v., arch. to discard, disband, break up, jilt, give up – 'When we got tired of some too well-hidden, the cry would go up. 'Oot, oot, oot, the game's jecked up!' [HAST1958], 'She jeckit 'im up again, the limmer!' [GW], to dislocate a joint, throw out of place by jerking – 'A've jecked ma cuit' [ECS] (similar to 'jack' in English).

Jedburgh (jed-bu-ru) n. official name for Jethart (the name first occurs in relation to 'Jedburgh Forest' in the early 14th century, but this modern anglicised form was not applied to the town until a document of 1630; it occurs on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Jedd-brugh').

Jeddart Justice see Jethart Justice

Jedfit (jed-fi) n. Jedfoot, former station on the Jedburgh Railway of the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway. The nearby 'Jedfit Brig' is the main road bridge across the foot of the Jed on the A698 from Hawick to Kelso.

Jedforest (jed-fo-rist) n. another name for Jedburgh, or the area around Jedburgh, used for example by the rugby team. 'Jedburgh Forest' was a former barony and regality, which included Southdean Parish and other outlying lands. The Lordship of Jedforest was held by the Douglasses (since at least 1324) and was granted to Englishmen during the time of occupation of Roxburghshire in the 14th century. It was later held by the Homes and came into the hands of the Crown in 1539, which resulted in a surviving rental roll of 1541, listing the tenants and values of about 40 farms. The lands were it was valued at more than £4400 in 1811. The rugged terrain was used as cover by the Scots forces harassing the English garrison at Jedburgh Castle in the 1330s and 1340s.

the Jedforest Club (thu-jed-fo-rist-klub) n. club set up in 1810 to serve the gentlemen of the area around Jedburgh, probably inspired by the older Forest Club of the Ettrick valley. The founder was William, Earl of Ancram (later Earl of Lothian) along with 23 other men. The Club met quarterly at the Spread Eagle Inn in Jedburgh, with the membership limited to 40. The members originally had to dine in a green jacket, specially made from Cheviot wool, replaced later with blue jackets. In 1834 many of the Whig supporters left the club after the Chairman refused to drink the health of the sitting M.P. (who was a Whig).

the Jedforest Hounds (thu-jed-fo-rist-howndz) n. fox hunting group, formed in the mid-19th century in the Rulewater area. The lands were set aside for hunting by the Duke of Buccleuch and it attracted horsemen from a wide area, centred on Rulewater. The western boundary was the Allan Water, on the north the Teviot, on the east Dere Street and on the south the Border. Hounds have been kept at Abbotrule in recent times. The foxhounds were transferred from Baillie of Mellerstain to the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1827 and were the first 'subscription' pack in Roxburghshire. A new pack was put together in about 1885 by Charlie Sinclair, with the assistance of Captain Palmer-Douglas and others. Tom Scott Anderson was Master in about 1892–1903.

Jed Forest (jed-fo-rist) n. ancient forest around Jedburgh. The Capon Tree is supposed to be the sole survivor of the forest, although there are also still some old trees along the Jed Water in Southdean Parish. The lands there were formerly known as ‘Jedworth Forest’ and variants.

Jedheid (jed-heed) n. Jedhead, area near the source of the Jed Water, in the southern part of Southdean Parish. The farm is one of those that passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands. David Laidlaw was tenant there in 1694. William Fox was shepherd there in 1797, Robert Telfer, John Middlemas and Adam Ainslie in 1799, and James Davidson in 1801. It was also ‘Jedheads’ in 1868 when J.H. Pringle was farmer there (it is ‘Jedheid’ in 1538 and 1539 and ‘jedheads’ in 1694).

Jed Murray (jed-mu-ri) n. familiar name of J.E.D. Murray.

Jed Murray’s Studio (jed-mu-riz-stew-dee-ō) n. former photographer’s studio of J.E.D. Murray, on the east side of North Bridge Street. This was where his business moved from its previous premises located where the Post Office would later be built. Nos. 43 and 45 North Bridge Street were designed by J.P. Alison as a studio and house. They were built in an art nouveau style in 1899–1900, in red sandstone with interesting mosaic work and internal details. The ‘House’ and ‘Studio’ signs can still be read on the building. The Studio was in use until 1972, with the Border Club moving there in 1973.

the Jed Murray Trophy (thu-jed-mu-ri-trō-fee) n. the J.E.D. Murray Memorial Challenge Trophy, a prize competed for at the Common Riding Races since 1938. It consists of a brass portrait of Murray in bas-relief on a circular wooden base, with small plaques to mark the winners.

jeelous (jee-lis) adj. jealous (also jalous).

jeelousy (jee-li-see) n. jealousy – ‘... jeelasie crewil als the graffe’ [HSR], ‘... an’ muvet him til jeelesie wi’ thair gravin imagies’ [HSR] (spelling varies).

jeeny (jee-nee) n. a female of certain animals, a spinning jenny.

jeest (jee) n., arch. a joist – ‘For gist to the steeple’ [JW1722] (also written ‘jist’).

jeet (jee) n., adj. jet.

Jeffrey (je-free) n. Alexander (1806–74) son of Alexander and Janet Smeaton, he was born near Bewlie. He worked at Lilliesleaf Mill as a boy, but was a keen reader and in 1825 entered the legal office of James Curle in Melrose and eventually in 1838 became a solicitor of the Roxburghshire Sheriff Court. He was said to be well known for taking on what seemed like hopeless defence cases. He was a strong proponent of the Reform Bill, although his idiosyncratic views kept him apart from the other local Reformers. Interested in all things related to the antiquities and customs of the Borders, he wrote 'An Historical and Descriptive Account of Roxburghshire' (1836) and 'Guide to the Antiquities of the Border' (1838). In 1855 he published the first volume of his monumental work 'The Histories and Antiquities of Roxburghshire and adjoining Districts', which was followed by 3 other volumes. This forms a valuable early collection of information about the county, based on a large amount of research (although it is occasionally inaccurate or wildly speculative). He also published a few other more modest works. His wife Katherine died in 1872 and he himself died following some kind of stroke suffered while at the Sheriff Court in Jedburgh. He is buried in Jedburgh Abbey kirkyard. George (b.c.1780) hind at Sandystones on the 1801 Militia ballot for Ancrum Parish. His surname is written 'Jaffrae' and he seems likely to be related to William, who was at Pinnacle at the same time. William (18th/19th C.) 'yeoman' at Minto Kames according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He may be the William 'Jaffrae' who was at Standhill on the 1801 Militia ballot for Ancrum Parish.

the Jehovahs (thu-je-hō-vuz) n. members of the Jehovah's Witness movement, founded in the U.S.A. in the late 19th century, promoting active evangelism and preaching the imminent Second Coming. In Hawick the Kingdom Hall meeting house was on Buccleuch Place, in the former Teviotdale Clubrooms, and they are now based at 18 Deloraine Court.

jeist (jist) n., arch. a joist – 'The jeists o' our hous ar cedar, an' our raftries o' fir' [HSR].

Jeistins'-haugh (jist-inz-hawch) n. former name for a flat piece of land by the Rule Water at Bonchester. It is said to have been where local youths used to practice archery and jousting (also called the Justin Haugh).

Jemmie (je-mee) n. erstwhile diminutive form of James, later replaced by 'Jamie'.

Jemmy-linkum-feedle (je-mee-ling-kum-fee-dul) n. a frivolous person – 'These fribish characters which on the Border we call a 'Jemmy-linkum-feedle', too conceited to be pleased with natural feeling, too shallow to fathom his subject, and too vain to deny his reader the perusal of his most trifling and common-place remarks' [JL].

Jen (jen) n. Christian name, often a familiar form of Jane or Janet.

Jenet (je-ni') n. former version of the Christian name 'Janet', common into the 18th century (also written 'Jennet').

Jenkins (jeng-kinz) n. Daniel (b.1848) 3rd son of Tom, he was born in Mauritius. He was educated at Royal College, Mauritius and attended London University from 1865. He was a student of the Middle Temple in 1874 and called to the bar in 1883. He then became a prominent lawyer in Mauritius. He firstly married Amelia Keeley and secondly married Mary Louisa Payne. His children included Daniel Remy, William, Marie, Laura Amelia and Elsie. A small street in the western part of Port Louis is named after him. Thomas Joseph 'Black Tom' (c.1798–1859) probably Teviotdale's first black resident. Born somewhere on the Guinea coast of west Africa (probably in the modern Sierra Leone or perhaps Liberia), he was possibly the son of a slave-trading chief called 'King Cock-eye' (because he was missing an eye). In 1803, in his 6th year, he was taken back to be educated in Britain by James Swanson (or Swanstone), who was from Hawick, son of a waiter at the Tower Hotel; unfortunately Swanson died a few days after returning from Africa. On the journey the young African became a favourite (and also the object of ridicule) of the sailors, and his first attempts to say the name of his sponsor apparently sounded like 'Tom Jenkins', which was then adopted as his own name (although there is an alternative explanation that the name may have been a variant on his African title). After a few weeks in England, Swanson brought him back to Hawick, but unfortunately died after only a few days. Tom spent the first couple of months at the Tower Hotel, where he was cared for by Mrs. Brown, wife of the proprietor. He then lived for a few years with Tom Lunn (Swanson's brother-in-law) at 'Shuttlehaa' near Teviothead, learning English and particularly the local dialect. He thrived academically at the school in Teviothead, and was also the best dancer when that was taught. He was taken on as cow-herd and errand-boy for Mr. Pott of Caerlenrig and was then hired by Mr. Laidlaw of Falnash, helping on the farm and running errands to Hawick. He was further educated at an evening school in Hawick, eventually studying Greek and Latin (buying a Greek dictionary at auction in Hawick). Already being a student assistant at the school, at the age of about 20 he became schoolmaster at Teviothead; however the appointment had to be endorsed by the authorities. Although tested and approved by the local heritors (including the Hawick minister, Rev.

Arkle), he was rejected by the Presbytery. So instead, an old smiddy was converted as an independent school for him to teach in (paid for by the Duke of Buccleuch and other heritors), from around 1815 until December 1818. It is said that he taught 5 days a week and on the 6th day would walk to Hawick to continue his own studies with the master of the Grammar School, Christopher Armstrong (and would also attend Hawick Kirk on the Sabbath). He was also supported in Hawick by David Moncrieff, who additionally helped get him an introduction (and funds) to take some courses at Edinburgh University (although he was perhaps only there for a month or two). He was also patronised by the Watsons of Hawick (the Quaker family of manufacturers). After this he resumed teaching in Teviothead, but was then recommended as a missionary by the Christian Knowledge Society. He said his last farewells to his male friends (and perhaps some female ones, since it was said that 'he never was scorned wi' a lass'). Hawick manufacturer William Watson wrote him a reference in 1818 for the British and Foreign School Society and that year he was enrolled in their teacher training college at Borough Road in London. While there he taught at a new school for poor children in Pimlico, which he helped to set up, and also taught at a school on Grafton St., Fitzrovia. In 1821 he was sent to Mauritius to be a teacher there. He never corresponded with his old friends in Hawick, so that it was generally believed locally that he had not survived the voyage to Mauritius. In fact he was a successful and respected teacher there for the next 37 years. He ran the 'Model School' in Port Louis and was involved in introducing several new teaching methods (e.g. singing lessons and the use of the creole dialect). He married (his wife's name being Augustine Laurencia Jenkins) and had 4 children, who were born in the 1840s: Samuel Thomas; Thomas Lionel, who trained as a lawyer; Daniel, also a lawyer; and Mary. His later life is unclear, with a possibility that he returned to Sierra Leone and established a private school there. Certainly a man of that name is associated with Sierra Leone and his story (e.g. in the article 'Early Religious Influences in Sierra Leone') mixes up the 2 men; he was said to have first arrived in Freetown in 1815, 'garbed fantastically in a Scotch kilt and having the new American flag above it', then moving to Scotland where he attended 'classes at Edinburgh University, acting as schoolmaster in a village near Berwick-upon-Tweed, volunteering for service with the Christian Knowledge Society, and becoming a missionary to Mauritius'. He was then said to have returned to Freetown, where he established a school in Wilberforce Street and was much in demand as an orator. In 1858 his name appears on a list of members of the Mercantile Association of the City of Freetown who petitioned for a change in the way the government was administered in Sierra Leone. It is unclear how many stories are compounded here and whether our Tom Jenkins ever returned to Sierra Leone. His local story was described in a posthumous W.N. Kennedy article in the Transactions of 1870, with further details in Rev. John Thomson's 'Alexander Hope: A Hawick Story' (1878). His existence in Mauritius was already noted in the 1837 publication 'Exemplary and Instructive Biography' (updating an article on Tom published in Chambers' Edinburgh Journal in 1832). M. Duffil wrote further Transactions article on this subject in 1990 and 1994. In 2003 a memorial plaque was unveiled at the old smiddy where he taught in Teviothead. Thomas 'Tammy' (19th C.) tramp who was a regular visitor to Liddesdale in the mid-19th century. He was 'a dainty, cannie body, who always carried a cat in his bosom'. Thomas Lionel (b.c.1845) 2nd son of Tom. He was a student at the Middle Temple in 1862 and called to the bar in 1865. He practised at the supreme court of Mauritius.

Jenkin's hen (jeng-kinz-hen) n., arch. a hen that never knew the attentions of a cock – 'To die like Jenkin's hen' [JoJ], used figuratively – 'Ti dei the daith o' Jenkin's hen – for the want o' braith' [GW].

Jen McVitie's (jen-muk-vi'-eez) n. tripe shop, across from Laura Bennett's on the corner of Drumlanrig Square and the Kirk Wynd, which closed in the late 1920s.

Jenny (je-nee) n. Christian name, usually a familiar form of Jane or Janet.

jenny (je-nee) n., arch. a country girl, a man who does housework – 'Hei's a raigler jenny' [GW] (cf. jessie).

jenny-aathing (je-nee-aw-thing) n. a general shop, run by a woman.

Jenny-Aathing (je-nee-aw-thing) n. nickname for former specific shop, perhaps applied to more than one such business and the female shopkeeper who ran it – 'When ye run oot o' butter, or need a bit soap, Jist pop roond the corner, tae Jenny's wee shop' [IJ], 'Here's Soapy Ballantyne and Wull Slush, Here's Todd Lowrie and Peggy Neill; Davie A'-things and auld Kush-Mush, And Jenny A'-things is here as weel' [HI].

Jenny Dice's Kirn (je-nee-dī-seez-kirn) n. former name for a bend in the Wauchope Burn in Rulewater, situated to the south of Dykeheads farmstead. It is marked this way on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and is 'Jane Dice's Kirn' on a map of 1772 (the origin of the name is unclear, but presumably it was a place where the water was churned up and named after a local character, either real or imaginary).

Jenny Din (je-nee-din) n. Hawick character of the 19th century – 'Peggy Duncan and Jenny Din, Nellie Herkness and Mensie Mein; The Wilton Priest wi' his coat o' skin, Staney Stewart and Candy Jean' [HI].

Jenny Ern-yetts (je-nee-ern-yets) n. nickname for Jenny Cathrae (also written 'Airn Yetts' etc.).

jenny hunder-feet (je-nee-hun-dur-fee') n., arch. the centipede (also maggie monyfeet and meggie monyfeet).

jenny-speeder (je-nee-spee-dur) n., arch. the cranefly, Tipula oleracea (cf. jenny-spinner and speeder-jenny).

Jenny's Penny (je-nee-pe-nee) n. nickname for a Hawick character around the mid-19th century – 'Goold Ballantyne and auld Hawick Jock, Wattie Moudie, Jock Gray and a'; Jenny's Penny wi' plaid o' check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law' [HI].

jenny-spinner (je-nee-spi-nur) n., arch. the cranefly – 'In Roxb. it is not only named Jenny Spinner, but Langleggit Taylor' [JoJ] (cf. jenny-speeder and spinnin jenny).

Jenny Storie's Stane (je-nee-stō-reez-strān) n. large natural stone, said to be shaped like a sedan chair, on the Border near Peel Fell.

Jenny Stott (je-nee-stō') n. name for the field on Hawick Common, behind the trees to the west of the racecourse. The origin of the name is unknown.

Jenny the Deevil (je-nee-thu-dee-vul) n. local character of the early 19th century, full name unknown. She kept a licensed house on Silver Street that was known simply as 'Jenny the Deevil's'.

Jenny's Tongue (je-nee-tung) n. small hill near the border of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire. It lies between Little Tudhope Hill and Millstone Edge and reaches a height of about 425 m.

Jenny Trantlicks (je-nee-tran'-liks) n. nickname for Jenny Cathrae (cf. the Middle English 'trant', meaning a trick, or possibly a derivative of 'trantle', meaning a trinket).

Jenny Trankletts (je-nee-trangk-lits) n. another variant on 'Jenny Trantlicks', nickname of Jenny Cathrae – 'The Sootie Kittlin' and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H'Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail' [HI].

Jenny Walker's Brae (je-nee-waw-kurz-brā) n. hill road somewhere in the Rule valley, probably a name for the road connecting the A698 with the Rule Water, between Denholm and Spittal.

Jepps (jips) n. John (b.1841) son of John and Mary Seely, from Steeple Bumstead. He was coachman to Sir William Elliott of Stobs. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Amos of Rulewater. They later moved to London, where his wife died in 1870, leaving daughters Margaret and Mary (also written 'Jipps').

Jerdan (jer-din) n. Archibald 'Baldy' (18th C.) brother of Alexander, a rich Newcastle merchant and banker. He served for a short period as factor to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, being recommended to Col. Elliot of Wells in 1726. He ran the estates there (Col. Elliot being almost always in London), and instigated much planting (including 10,000 young fir trees in one purchase from Dickson's nurseries). For his efforts he was paid £12 per year, along with grass for his horse, and allowance for paper, ink and wax, as well as the use of a modest bedroom in the mansion house. In 1742 he surveyed the lands of East and West Mains of Hawick for the Scotts of Buccleuch, leading to their division. He paid the window tax for the Wells estate in 1753. He grew quite wealthy and purchased part of Bonjedward in 1751 (with more of the estate in 1767), followed by Haughhead (in Eckford Parish) and then Brockmoor in Warwickshire. However, he continued to serve as Wells factor for the next 2 Laids, retiring in the late 1760s. He was probably the 'Archibald Jerdon of Boon Jedburgh' listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. His only child was Jane, who married Thomas Caverhill and their son Archibald took the surname Jerdan as his heir. His rental book (covering the period 1728–60) was described in an article by A.O. Curie in 1908. His wife is probably the ‘Mrs. Jerdan’ who is listed paying tax in Jedburgh for having servants in her employ. Archibald of Bonjedward (c.1770s–1842) only son of Thomas Caverhill and Jane Jerdan (who died in 1780, aged 30). He succeeded as heir to his grandfather, taking Jerdan as his surname. He was taxed for having a female servant in 1785 and in 1788 was recorded as owner of Bonjedward and other lands in Jedburgh Parish, valued at more than £2400, as well as lands in Eckford Parish. His sister Jane married Rev. Peter Young of Jedburgh. He fought a legal case to keep the estate from another branch of the family. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club and in 1810 became Captain of the 1st Regiment of Roxburghshire Militia. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was said to be liberal in all things, but often came into financial difficulty, and had to sell off parts of his estate (in 1808 the estate was advertised for sale, entirely or in parts). He married Elizabeth Sarah Milner in 1808. They had 2 sons and 5 daughters. He and his wife died within a few days of each other, the local story at the time being that they had eaten something poisonous. He was succeeded by his son Thomas Caverhill Jerdan, who was a doctor with the East India Company, published ‘A Catalogue of the Birds of the Peninsular of India’ and sold Bonjedward to the Marquess of Lothian in 1845. His daughter Jane married John Elliot, son of William of Harwood. William (1782–1869) son of John and Agnes Stuart, he was born at ‘Lang Linkie’, Kelso, near where the Teviot joins then Tweed. His father served as Baron Bailie for Kelso (where the court was frequented by ‘Hawick Willie’), but died suddenly in 1796 when he himself was only 13. He took an interest in Border ballads and history from an early age. He spent time in Edinburgh, eventually moving permanently to London to pursue a writing career. He wrote extensively as an essayist, critic and poet, eventually becoming editor of the Sun newspaper and then the Literary Gazette (for 33 years). He also became famous for standing next to Prime Minister Perceval when he was assassinated in 1811, and being the first to grab the assassin. He helped found the Royal Society for Literature in 1826. After his retirement, in 1852/3

jerkin (jer-kin) n. a close-fitting, collarless, sleeveless jacket of the 16th century, the word more recently applied to a coat of any sort – ‘...While bill-men leather-jerkin clad Came bounding down the Dean’ [JI] (interchangeable with jirkin).

jerkined (jer-kind, jir-kind) adj., pp., arch. wearing a jerkin – ‘I see the Teviot reddened to a sunrise long ago And the line of helmed and jerkined lads, asplash to the saddle bow’ [JYH].

Jerusalem (je-roo-saw-lum) n. former name for a farm in Lilliesleaf Parish, also sometimes ‘New Jerusalem’. It probably corresponds to Friarshawmuir. Andrew Cunningham was farmer of 150 acres there in 1851. John Hislop was farmer there in 1868.

jesp (jesp) n., arch. a speck, stain, blemish – ‘He hasna a jesp o’ dirt on ’im’ [GW], a seam or flaw in fabric (also jasp).

Jess McVeetie’s (jes-muk-vee’-eez) n. former shop at the corner of Drumlanrig Square and the Kirk Wynd – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for oor tools, Jess McVeetie’s for rock bools, Lynch’s hed a’ kinds o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies ...’ [IWL], ‘Hawick bakes ...’ [JEDM], ‘And Jess McVeetie offered, up the Wynd, The grandest sticky taffee in the toun’ [WL].

Jess o the Toll (jes-ō-thu-tōl) n. nickname of Jess Hunter (nee Johnstone).

Jethart (je-thur) n. Jedburgh, town 12 miles north-east of Hawick, lying on the Jed Water, which flows into the Teviot. The town is first recorded in 854 as ‘Gedwearde’ and is claimed to be the first parish in Scotland. It was a Royal Burgh since the 12th century and was a former county town of Roxburghshire. A church was noted here from as early as the 9th century, with a priory established by David I in 1118, and the abbey shortly afterwards. The castle was handed over to the English in 1174, as part of the Treaty of Falaise, and was later occupied by the officers of Edward I and II. The town was given to the English by Edward Baliol in 1334, recovered by William Douglas in 1342, but claimed again by the English several times over the next century.

Jethart Abbey

The town was destroyed several times by the English, in 1410, 1416, 1464 and most notably in 1523 by the Earl of Surrey's men. As well as the Abbey, a house of Carmelite friars was established in 1513. The town was long afterwards known for its pear orchards, presumably a vestige of the monk's fruit gardens. The town was looted and burned by the English in 1544. In the 17th century it was said to be a centre for smuggling goods south of the Border, particularly malt and leather. Several early Kings of Scotland spent time there, including David I, Malcolm IV, William the Lion, Alexander II, Alexander III and Robert the Bruce, as well as Mary, Queen of Scots. The old bridge at the foot of the Canon-gate, dating from the 16th century, is probably similar to Hawick's Auld Brig. The Public Hall was designed by J.P. Alison in 1900. There are several other notable historic buildings, including the Castlegate area, which was extensively repaired in the 1970s. And of course there is the Abbey and Castle. The town had a woollen factory from at least 1728, probably the first in the district. The town is also known for 'Jethart Hand-baa' played at Candlemas between the 'uppies' and the 'doonies', supposedly commemorating a defeat of the English at Ferniehurst Castle, when the Scots played with their cut off heads. Sir David Brewster (physicist), John Ainslie (cartographer) and Mary Somerville (mathematician) were born here, and the town also has connections with Mary Queen of Scots, Bonnie Prince Charlie and Sir Walter Scott. Just south of the town James Hutton discovered his 'geologic angular unconformity', which supported the idea that the earth is at least millions of years old. The brach railway to the town was completed in 1856. Jedburgh Callants Festival was inaugurated in 1947, and includes a ride-out to Redeswire, as well as a mounted procession to Ferniehirst Castle and to the Capon Tree, led by the Callant. Population (1991) 4,118 – 'Dear Borderland! Blench na' for fear! Oor Borderland, nae foe comes near! Stand firm and sure; for Jethart's Here! Stand firm and sure; for Jethart's Here!' [T] (the origin of the name is 'Jed worth', i.e. Old English for 'settlement by the Jed', with 'Jed' perhaps being from a Celtic word for a wood; it first occurs as 'Gedde wrda' in 1139 and there are many variations of 'Jedworth' until the town officially became 'Jedburgh' in the 17th century; the old form survives in the local pronunciation; Teries usually talk about going 'doon' to Jethart, presumably because of the river).

Jethart Castle

Jethart Abbey (je-thur'-aw-bee) n. Jedburgh Abbey, founded by David I for Augustinian monks in 1138, following the 1118 priory. This may have followed an earlier foundation by Egred, Bishop of Lindisfarne, perhaps in the 830s. An early chapel attached to the abbey was at Old Jeddart. It was dedicated to Mary (so that some local places called things like 'Ladyland' may be connected with the Abbey). The lands possessed by the Abbey from early times included Lanton, Nisbet, Crailing, Ulveston, Ancrum, 'Alneclive' (unidentified part of Ancrum); 'Rule Hervey' (later called Abbotrule), Raperlaw (in Lilliesleaf Parish) and 'Crumesethe' (which could be Crumhaugh); many of these are listed in the 1165 charter of King William, confirming earlier grants by David I and others. Around 1280 Sir William of Soules granted the abbey lands near Castleton churchyard. It later gained lands at Winnington and Belses. Connected churches included most of those around Jedburgh, and also Hobkirk and Castleton. The Abbey contained altars to both St. Ninian and St. Mungo. The Abbey was never fully completed, being destroyed as many as nine times by the English, including by the Earl of Surrey's men in 1523 and in 1545 by Hertford's men. It was occupied by the English from 1547, the French took possession in 1548, fortifying it, but levelling some of the damaged parts. Note that this constant strife means that none of the records of the Abbey have survived. Although quite ruined since then, it is the most complete of the Border abbeys, with 3 tiers of arches, an 86 ft high transept tower, and a wheel window in the west gable. Part of the Abbey was used as a local place of worship until 1875. The Kerrs of Ferniehirst are buried here and there is also the Marquess of Lothian Memorial. Major excavations in the 1980s revealed a greater extent to the buildings and a new visitor centre was opened then. The Abbey held a great deal of land around the Borders, including superiority over the parishes of Abbotrule, Castleton and Hobkirk.

Jethart Castle (je-thur'-kaw-sul) n. Jedburgh Castle was ceded to the English under the Treaty of Falaise in 1174, but changed hands many times over the coming centuries. It was the location for the wedding feast of Alexander III in 1285, when it was said that a ghostly apparition warned of his impending death. In 1334 it was surrendered to the English by Edward Baliol and held by them for 75 years. It was destroyed by order of the Scottish Parliament in 1409, shortly after the town was recaptured. The destruction was supervised by ‘Robert de Hawyk’ a Burgess of Edinburgh. In the early 18th century it was the site of the town gallows, with construction on the old gaol beginning there in 1820, with architect Archibald Elliot. It also served as lunatic asylum and ‘bridewell’. This prison was also often referred to as ‘Jethart Castle’.

Jethart Castle Jail (je-thur'-kaw-sul-jāl) n. former prison on the site of Jedburgh Castle, built 1820–23, and now housing a museum. It was designed by Archibald Elliot (from Ancrum) in 3 separate 2-storey blocks, the builder being Mr. Gillespie. This was the local county jail for Hawick in the 19th century, closing in 1886, and continuing in use as police cells until 1890. It is now the best preserved example of a Howard Reform Prison, considered modern in its day – ‘I’d rather lie in the belly o’ a whale Than spend a nicht in Jethart Gaol’ [T] (formerly spelled ‘Gaol’).

the Jethart Comb (thu-je-thur'kōm) n. the Jedburgh Comb, an ancient artefact found during excavations at the Abbey in 1984. It is an ornate 12th century comb, carved from walrus ivory and decorated with a griffin and a dragon. It was discovered along with the torso of a man (who appears to have been murdered) and other artefacts in a pit in the Abbey grounds, and is now on display there.

Jethart Greyfriars (je-thur'-grā-frI-urz) n. site of a former friary in Jedburgh, excavated in the 1980s and laid out as a garden in 1993. It was home to a group of Observant Franciscans from around 1500. Also known as ‘grey friars’ or ‘begging friars’, the order were extremely rigorous in following the rules instituted by St. Francis, and led ascetic lives, going barefoot in their grey woollen robes. A superior of the convent called Home was involved in transmitting letters between Henry VIII and the young King James V. Adam Bell was a monk there, who wrote a history of Scotland up until the year 1535. The friary was burned by the English raids of 1523, 1544 and 1545, and probably never fully repaired before the Reformation.

Jethart Jail see Jethart Castle Jail

Jethart Jim (je-th-ur'-jim) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the mid-19th century, presumably with a Jedburgh connection – ‘Scot-tie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam'l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grim’ [HI].

Jethart Justice (je-thur'-jus-tis) n. popular name for the form of justice in use during the reiving days, i.e. hang them first and ask questions later. Jedburgh was the judicial seat of the Scottish West March. The phrase dates back to the late 16th century and was also used figuratively – ‘... For hang't! he sae wi' plagury bust is, He's fit eneugh for 'Jethart justice'’ [JoHa] (also ‘Jeddart Justice’ etc.).

Jethart peirs (je-thur'-peerz) n., pl. pears grown in Jedburgh, long famed for its orchards, these being a vestige of the days when the monks grew fruit extensively. Many different varieties were grown, mostly derived from France, but some being Scottish variants. This included Achan, Bell-tongue, Bergamot, Bon-Chrétien, Buchanan, Cranstoun, Crawford, Douglas, Drummond, Fair Maid, Grey Goodwife, Honey, Lady Lamont, Longueville, Ludd, Mother Cob, Musk, Pitfirrane, Pound, Rob Hyal, Warden and Worrie Carle. Pears were also grown in Melrose, and probably other local places with ecclesiastical connections.

Jethart's Here (je-thurts-heer) n. slogan of the town of Jedburgh. It was supposed to have been shouted at the Raid of the Redeswire on the arrival of the Jedburgh contingent, a call that is repeated each year at the Callant's Festival – ‘Then raise the slogan with ane shout – 'Fy, Tindaill, to it! Jethart's here!’ [T], ‘A Rouse! for Hawick callants, They well deserve a cheer; And let nae Border man forget The slogan ‘Jethart's here’ [JBS].

Jethart staff (je-thur'-stafw) n. former type of weapon, consisting of a pole perhaps 7 to 8 feet long, topped with a long metal blade. It was also known as the Jedburgh or ‘Jeddart’ stave (and other variants). Its existence is recorded at least from 1513 and it was banned by the Scottish Parliament in 1516. It was also sometimes called the ‘Northern staff’, and the reason for its connection with Jedburgh is unknown, although it appears to have been only used in Scotland. Another weapon existed (also used in England) called the ‘Jethart axe’ (although this may have been invented by Sir Walter Scott), which was sometimes confused with the ‘staff’ (even in the arms of Jedburgh). The 2 may have also been known as the short staff and the long staff, and it is clear that the length and design varied.

He was still recorded there in 1868. In 1866 he married Jane (‘Jeanie’) Dryden Blaikie (who died aged 82). He emigrated to America, and his father-in-law George Blaikie took over his business in Hawick. They had at least one child, George B.

Jocelin (jo-se-lin) n. (d.1199) probably from south-east Scotland, possibly from a Norman family, he entered Melrose Abbey about 1150. He had a brother called Elias. He became Prior and then Abbot of Melrose in 1170. He may have commissioned the writing of the Chronicle of Melrose. He also encouraged the cult of Waltheof, who emerged as a saint. In 1174 he was elected Bishop of Glasgow, but continued to exert influence back in Melrose. During his time Teviotdale was a Deanery under the jurisdiction of Glasgow, and hence he was Hawick’s Bishop. His rights to the churches of Liddesdale (as well as Ashkirk) were confirmed by 3 Popes in 1179, 1181 and 1186. He was also a powerful political figure of his time, being embroiled in the struggles over the Borderland. He mediated a dispute between Jedburgh and Dryburgh Abbeys and he witnessed many charters. As Bishop of Glasgow he gifted the church of Hassendean to Melrose Abbey. He also accompanied King William to England when he married Ermengarde. He additionally helped establish Glasgow as burgh with significant privileges. He died at Melrose Abbey and was buried under the monks’ choir. His seal showed a full-length figure of a bishop, with one hand raised and then other holding a crozier, with the words ‘SIGILLUM JOCELINI GLASGUENSIS EPISCOPI’ (also written ‘Jocelyn’).

John (jōn) n. (12th C.) son of Orm, whom he succeeded as Lord of Hownam. In about 1155 he and his father witnessed the charter granting the Church of Old Roxburgh to Glasgow Diocese. Sometime in then period 1164–70 he granted lands in Hownam to Melrose Abbey, as confirmed by his son William in around 1190; he perambulated the boundaries between his lands and the neighbouring lands of Whitton, Grubet, Clifton and Mow. He witnessed a grant to Kelso Abbey in about 1170. About 1175 he witnessed a grant of lands in Mow to Paisley Abbey by Eschina, wife of Walter, son of Alan the Steward and another charter to Melrose Abbey by Anselm of Whitton. He witnessed another charter by Waldeve, son of Gospatric, Earl of Dunbar to Helias, son of Huctred, who was cousin of both Waldeve and his own father Orm. He was also recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh, one of the first known people to hold that office. However, it is not known how long he was Sheriff, and whether the office at that period just meant he had responsibility for Roxburgh Castle, or also for the county. He may have married the daughter and heiress of Robert de Landles, from whom he acquired lands in Berwickshire. His son and heir was William ‘de Landales’ and Hownam and his grandson was William de Ormiston, probably the first person to have that designation. His seal bore an armed knight on horseback, holding a sword and shield, and with the words ‘SIGILLUM JHNIS FILII ORM’.

John (jōn) n. (12th/13th C.) recorded as Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1195/6. He is also recorded as Dean of Roxburgh in 1204 and Dean of Teviotdale again before 1207. He is a different man from John de Huntingdon, who was a contemporary Glasgow cleric.

John Broon’s Brae (jōn-broonz-brā) n. former name for the street linking the bottom of Dickson Street with Wilton Crescent.

John Laing’s (jōn-lāngz) n. John Laing & Sons, hosiery manufacturers, established in 1830/1 (although this may have been as part of Dicksons & Laings, with the separate company formed in about 1851 after the death of John Laing’s father Alexander). In 1852 hosiery manufacturer John Laing is listed at Slitrig Bank. The premises at 8 and 9 Slitrig Crescent had previously been occupied by hosiery manufacturer Thomas Wilson. The firm introduced the first steam-driven frame to Hawick in 1858. In 1869 it is stated that the firm was the only one in Hawick producing ‘fashioned’ stockings, using merino wool and spun silk. It was reconstituted as ‘John Laing & Sons (Lanso) Ltd.’ in 1939. The company now specialises in cashmere knitwear. The firm went into receivership in 2006, with the factory at 8–9 Slitrig Crescent closing. It was bought out by Dawson International and moved to a smaller operation within the Barrie’ factory at Burnfoot.

Johnman (jōn-mun) n. Rev. William Andrew Patton (1837–1923) minister of Hawick Free Church (St. George’s) for a period of 43 years. A native of Blairingone (or Fossoway) near Dollar, he was ordained at Darlington in 1865 and came to Hawick in 1880. Well read and interested in a wide range of topics, he wrote many articles for the Archæological Society Transactions (e.g. about local wells, highways, bridges, pipers, etc.), served as President for many years, and was a keen collector of curios for the Museum. He is credited with re-invigorating the Society after a lull in its activities and falling off in membership in the 1880s. As well as articles from the Transactions appearing in pamphlet form, his 1892 memorial sermon to Rev. Dr. MacRae was published, and also a few other sermons. He was heavily involved in efforts to get the Buccleuch Memorial and the Cottage Hospital funded. He was said to have a great frankness of speech, sometimes to the point of embarrassment, and took up strong positions in opposition to several local issues. For example, he worked hard to have rabbit baiting stopped in the town. In addition he carried out in the local press a public argument with Provost Mitchell over gambling and drinking, and was an opponent of the excesses of the Common Riding. He also caused consternation among his congregation for allowing a parade of Volunteers in the church in 1887. He was a very keen traveller, and often gave lectures after his trips. In 1900 he was appointed first Moderator of the Hawick United Free Presbytery. Throughout his ministry he lived at St. George's Manse on Wilton Path. He liked to tell a story of how he once preached to the Queen, meaning the Queen of the Gypsies in Yetholm. He served as Hawick Minister until his death. There is a memorial to him in St. George's, unveiled in late 1924, when Dr. Cathels gave a eulogy. He left money to establish an educational bursary. His articles include: 'Sermon on Church and State' (1885); 'Horse Racing: or the Turf and its Produce' (1888); 'The Religion of the People called Quakers., A Lecture' (1888); 'Capital and Labour: in View of the Present Railway Strike. A Discourse' (1891); 'In Memoriam: William Inglis. A Discourse' (1891); 'In Memoriam: Rev. Dr. Macrae. A Sermon' (1892); 'In Memoriam: The Duke of Clarence, with Life Lessons' (1892); 'In Memoriam: George Blaikie' (1897); 'The Archaeology of Bazaars and of Kindred Trade Associations' (1895); 'Unfermented Wine, or Divine Teaching on Temperance' (1895); 'Short Papers read at Dalkeith and Newbattle Abbey' (1896); 'Our Programme ; with special reference to the Monumental Commemoration of Past Celebrities' (1897); 'A Talk on Military Weapons, Ancient and Modern, with description of examples from the Museum and from Without' (1899); 'Saut Ha' and its Tragedy, with an Excursus on the Ancient

Salt Industry' a Supplement on Salt, Social and Symbolical' (1899); 'After Twenty Years: An Address' (1900); 'The Bi-Centenary of James Thomson, Author of 'The Seasons', at Southdean, 8th Sept., 1900. An Address' (1900); 'The Ordering of the Church of God . A Discourse' (1902); 'Celebration of the Semi-Jubilee of Rev. W.A.P. Johnman' (1905); and 'Who give Hawick an Ill Name : The Presbytery or the Press?'

Johnnie Armstrong (jo-nee-awrm-strōng) n. ballad about John Airmstrong of Gilnockie. It reccounts how Armstrong, a noted Border riever, is summoned to meet the King, but is tricked and arrested along with his men. He pleads for his life, offering the King everything he can think of, but to no avail. He and many of his men were hanged on the spot, with the trees withering afterwards, according to local legend. The ballad is based on historical events, although liberty is taken with some details, e.g. it is set in Edinburgh, rather than at Caerlenrig. The tone of the ballad is essentially pro-Armstrong and against James V. It first saw print in Allan Ramsay's collection 'Ever Green' (1724) and later appeared in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784) and Scott's 'Minstrelsy'. Tradition says that it was recited for Ramsay's collection by a 6th generation descendant of John of Gilnockie himself.

Johnny and the Roccos (jo-nee-and-thu-ro-koz) n. rock 'n' roll band, led by Hawick-born Bob Fish. Formed in 1973, they became professional in 1973, recording their first album 'Shakin' all over' in 1978, which was followed by six others, plus compilation albums etc. Particularly popular in Germany and Scandinavia, they have had a top ten hit in Norway.

John of Hawick (jōn-ov-hlk) n. priest of Glasgow and notary public, recorded in 1530. There is also an earlier Rector of Hawick Church from the mid-14th century, and several other men of the same designation, making it difficult to distinguish how many of them are distinct (see de Hawick).

John of Lancaster (jōn-ov-lang-kaws-tur) n. (1389–1435) 3rd son of Henry IV, brother of Henry V. He commanded English troops during the Hundred Years' War. He was also made Duke of Bedford. In 1407/8, Henry IV granted him lands formerly possessed by Henry Percy. This included Jedburgh, Bonjedward and Hassendean.

John Oliver & Sons (jōn-o-lee-vur-in-sunz) n. relatively short-lived woollen manufacturers of the 1830s and 40s. The business was run by Hawick lawyer John Oliver and his sons Thomas and William (and perhaps others). Along with William Wilson & Sons they purchased the Weensland Corn Mill and adjoining land from Douglas of Cavers in about 1835. However, although Wilson built a new woollen factory there, the Oliver land remained largely undeveloped until Walter Wilson built Teviot Mill on it in the 1850s. Thomas and William Oliver were recoded as manufacturers at Dean Mill in 1837, however, within a decade or so they were both tenant farmers.

old local song, once second only in popularity to 'Teribus', also sometimes referred to as 'John Paiterson'. It was discussed by William Norman Kennedy in an article in the 1863 Transactions. The song was published in an 1887 Hawick News article in connection with the revamped Common Riding, but was already a very old song. It is played by the Drums and Fifes at specific times during the Common Riding, particularly just before the Friday breakfast, as they walk from the Kirk Wynd to the Tower Knowe via Drumlanrig Square and the Howegate. The words supposedly refer to a miller, Paiterson, who lived in the Hawick area and was known for the quality of his horses. He once entered a big race bare-back and with a straw-rope bridle, much to the hilarity of the on-lookers, but ended up winning. The King apparently wanted to buy the horse, but Paiterson instead gave it as a gift and composed the song in celebration. Another story claims that it relates to Sir John Paterson of Eccles, who rode a race on an old racecourse near Lilliard's Edge. In fact the song is widely known (with slightly different words) throughout Britain and it has been suggested that it came from Ayrshire in the early 18th century, and related to the Patersons of Bal-laird there. The tune has also been connected with a song referred to as 'She's yours, she's yours, she's nae mair oors' which is about a race (bruise) for a bride's handkerchief at a wedding. It is also known as (or extremely similar to) 'The Horseman's Port', 'The Black and the Brown', 'New Market' and 'The Cameronian Rant'. It was said that James Thomson attempted to put new words to the song in about 1887, but found it too difficult, and instead wrote 'Up wi' the Banner'. The song was part of the repertoire of Shetland fiddler John Sickle, was adapted by Martin Carthy in 1983 for the song 'Fable in the Wings' and has also been popular with some pipers.

Johns (jōnz) n. William (15th C.) recorded as 'Willelmi Johannis' in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. So he was probably related to the Lairds there. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. It is possible his surname has some other modern equivalent.

Johnson (jon-sin) n. A.J. (20th C.) served as 6th Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk.

the Johnson-Marshall Report (thu-jon-sin-mawr-shul-ree-pōr') n. local government planning report of 1967, which made recommendations for the future expansion of the Borders.

This included a new community of 10,000 people in the St. Boswells area (which led to Tweedbank), but no strong priorities for Hawick.

John Spencer's (jōn-spen-surz) n. knitwear mill that occupied Heronhill House in the mid-20th century.

Johnston (jon-stin, -sin) n. Agnes (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitlaw, recorded in the Session books of 1723 when money was given to pay a woman for teaching her son. Alexander (18th/19th C.) footman at Orchard Cottage in 1797, when he was working for Robert Scott. Perhaps the same Alexander 'Johnson' was living at Teindsideslope according to the 1797 ballot list for the Militia. Andrew (17th C.) resident of the Adderstone area on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed 'wt ane kilne', suggesting that he was a smith or similar artisan. David (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Christian Oliver and their children included: William (b.1729); and Margaret (b.1731). The witnesses in 1729 were Bailie Ruecastle and Robert 'Whitsone' and in 1731 were Walter Graham and Robert Ruecastle. David (b.1817/8) from Newlands in Peeblesshire, he was a heddle-maker on the Fore Row in 1851. His wife was Agnes, from Dumfries. He may be the same David who was listed as a shopkeeper on the Fore Row in Slater's 1852 directory. David (1900–1982) writer of words for the songs 'We'll Follow oor Cornet', and 'My Borderland', as well as 'Hawick and me' and several local poems, many included in the book 'A Freen Among Freens' (1974). He was born and educated in Kelso, worked as a gardener at Floors Castle and also lived in Gala, but married a Hawick girl and moved to the town. He worked as a handyman at Lyle & Scott's Burnfoot factory and was for many years boilerman at the Victoria Laundry. He lived for much of his life in Burnfoot, hence he was sometimes referred to as 'the Burnfit Bard'. He was a regular contributor of verse to the local press. His 2 well-known songs were collaborations with Adie Ingles. They also worked together on a song for the Burnfoot competition of 1970, and another, 'Braw Border Queens', survives in manuscript form. He moved away after the death of his wife, and lived near his son in Arbroath, where he died. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Elizabeth G. 'Isabella' or 'Isa' (1910/1–1981) from Hawick, she worked as a nurse in Maternity Seives in Edinburgh and Glasgow and retired back to Hawick in 1963. She was also a keen Guide. She wrote many poems published in the local press, including 'Ablow the Kitchen Bed', a number of them collected into 'Pictures in the Fire' (1967). Rev. George (b.1550/1) became minister at Fouliden in 1572 and was transferred to Ancrum a few months later. In 1574 he also had charge of Old Roxburgh, Eckford, Bedrule and Abbotrule (although they may have had separate readers). He complained to the Assembly of 1578 that another man had been appointed to part of his benefice. He also attended the Assemblies of 1581 and 1589. He is recorded in 1585 refusing to subscribe to articles drawn up by Sir John Maitland. He was transferred to Crailing before 1586, but returned to Ancrum in 1588, although probably without any further connection with Abbotrule or Bedrule. In 1589/90 he was listed among ministers with a special commission in Roxburghshire for getting people to adhere to the Confessions of Faith. In 1608 he and 2 others refused to recognise the authority of a Visitor appointed by the Assembly. In 1620 he complained to the Privy Council about non-payment of dues from several people. He was deprived in 1622 for not conforming to the Articles of 1618, being declared a rebel and ordered to be imprisoned in Annadale; however, he lived until at least 1631. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1697 his daughter Isabella was baptised in Wilton. The witnesses were William Cavers and William Scott. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Hilliesland in 1709. He married Anna Reid and their son John was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland and weaver James Wight. George (18th/19th C.) plasterer on the Howegate, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. George 'Copper Top' (19th/20th C.) worker at Pesco's, known for playing rugby for Hawick R.F.C. He first played for the Greens in 1902 and was Captain in the 1906/7 season. He was also a member of the 1912 team that won all 5 Borders Sevens tournaments for the first time. He also played for the South of Scotland. Graham (b.1869) heraldic painter to the Lyon Court. Along with W.R. Lawson he designed the 1914–19 Roll of Honour for Hawick Men who fell in WWI, which is displayed in the Museum. Isabella see Elizabeth G. James (17th C.) recorded as being 'late servant to John Turnbull in Cavers' in 1684 on a long list of men declared fugitives for refusing to take 'the Test'. James (17th C.) listed as shepherd at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (b.1871) born at Lochnew, Wigtownshire, he became gamekeeper at Harwood

(on Rule) around 1900. Rev. J.B. see Rev. James Barbour Johnstone. Jessie (b.1812/3) from Minto Parish, in the 1850s she was a teacher of sewing and English on Allars Crescent. John (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Headshaw. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbolls of Bedrule. His name is recorded as 'Johnne Johnstoun'. Rev. John (16th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1590, he became minister of Nisbet. He is recorded as also having Wilton in his care in 1594, but not in the following year when he held the charges of Abbotrule and Bedrule. He seemed to remain with this arrangement until 1599. He was translated to Longnewton in 1607. It is unclear what role, if any, he played in Wilton Parish. John (d.c.1682) tenant in Hawick, whose will is recorded in 1682. He could be the John the baptism (labelled 'fornic') of whose son Robert with Malie Lauder was recorded in 1680. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Clarilaw. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Eilrig in 1712 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitlaw. In 1720 and 1723 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Archibald Pater-son, tenant in Flex. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1720 (along with David Gray in Weensland) he witnessed a baptism for workman William Stoddart. He married Isobel Anderson and their children included: Walter (b.1719); Agnes (b.1721); John (b.1723); Margaret (b.1726); and Jean (b.1730). The witnesses in 1721 were Robert 'Lasten' and James Gardner. John (18th C.) lived in Roberton Parish in 1734 when his unnamed child was baptised, with no residence given. He is probably the John who married Mary Scoon in Roberton in 1733. Perhaps the same John was at Whithope Mill in 1743 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Marion Nichol in 1734. He is probably the John whose son John was baptised in 1734. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1791 he married Margaret Brown, who was from Minto. John (c.1893–1949) Hawick Registrar. He died of a heart attack. Martin (16th/17th C.) referred to as 'Martyne of the Mylne' when he was fined along with several other men in 1609 for harassing and threatening Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane.

The others included Armstrongs of Liddesdale, although it is unclear where he was from. Michael (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Harden Burnfoot in 1771. His forename is sometimes written 'Mitchel'. His children, baptised in Roberton, included: Charles (b.1753); Isobel (b.1755); Hugh (b.1759); and Janet (b.1771). P. (18th/19th C.) mail-guard in Hawick who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Robert (d.bef. 1637) gardener at Branxholme for the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1637 his wife Mary ('in Carlill', presumably Carlisle) had a discharge for £96 Scots for her late husband's fees during his time as gardener. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1774. The witnesses were workman Robert Turnbull and shoemaker Robert Renwick. Robert (19th C.) married Christian Linton in Hawick in 1845. Prof. Thomas Lothian (1927–2009) born in Whitburn, West Lothian, son of a railway signalman. When he was 1 year old his father was transferred to Newcastle, where he grew up. He attended Hawick High School, leaving in 1944 when he volunteered for the Royal Navy, later becoming an officer. He gained a place at Cambridge University, but chose to go to Edinburgh so he could stay close to Hawick, where he played rugby for the Trades and for Hawick R.F.C. After graduation he went to work with Professor Gunnar Myrdahl and his wife Alva, and there learned Swedish, as well as learning about Manpower Economics. He returned to Edinburgh in 1955, where he was awarded a Ph.D. for his thesis on the Swedish Labour market. He lectured at Edinburgh University 1955–65 and became the founding Professor of Economics at Heriot-Watt, where he taught all first year Economics students in the years 1966–76. He also served on many government appointed boards and committees, e.g. the Scottish Economic Council 1977–91. In 1977 he was appointed as first Chairman of the Manpower Services Committee for Scotland. In 1981 he returned to Heriot-Watt as Principal and Vice-Chancellor. In 1983 he resolved the serious dispute between striking water workers and the Government. He worked to foster stronger ties between the university and industry. He also served as President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh 1993–96. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1995. He married Joan Fahmy in 1956 and they had 2 sons and 3 daughters. William (16th/17th C.) described as 'servitour to Mari-ones Hob' (i.e. Robert Scott) in documents relating to a murder trial in 1612 (spelled 'Jhonsoun', ‘Johnnestoun’, ‘Johnstonne’, ‘Johnstoun’, ‘Johnstown’, etc. in early documents; see also Johnstone).

Johnstone (jon-stin, -sin) n. Adam of that Ilk (d.1509) succeeded from his brother John in 1488. He wrote an agreement of ‘kindness’ towards each other with Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1501/2. He was recorded at the Justice-aire in Dumfries in 1504, where his son James was surety for him and he was surety for other Johnstones. He was married to Marion Scott, aunt of Walter; she was widow of Archibald Caruthers of Mouswald. He was succeeded by his elder son James. Alex (19th/20th C.) plumber who served on the local Military Tribunal during WWI. Charles (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1749. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Wester Parkhill in 1799. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1791), baptised in Selkirk; and James (b.1799), baptised in Robertson. Gabriel (1698–1752) son of Rev. Samuel and Isobel Hall, he was born in Southdean Parish, where his father was minister. He studied at Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities, then moved to London, where he wrote political articles for ‘The Craftman’. In 1733 he was appointed Governor of North Carolina, where he held the position for 18 years, longer than any other Governor. Although unpopular with many, he managed to introduce several important reforms. He married (as her 4th husband) Penelope Goland, one of the wealthiest women in the province, and he secondly married Mrs. Frances Button. His children included Penelope, Henry, Carolina and Polly. He is buried at Eden House, near Edenton. Johnston County and Fort Johnston were named after him. George ‘Geordie’ (17th C.) from Essenside. In 1622 William Scott of Burnfoot (on Ale Water) was recorded having a bond of security for him. But in 1623, along with William Elliot of Bonjedward, he was convicted of stealing a horse belonging to Walter Scott of Burnfoot in Ale Water and hanged (probably in Jedburgh). He was ordered to be hanged. George (17th C.) recorded at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to James, who was also listed there and John who paid the land tax there in 1678. He could be the George who witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk in 1689 for John Turnbull and William Balmer. George (18th C.) owner of 3 husband-lands in Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was presumably related to the earlier George.

He sold the lands to James Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1758. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) tenant at Minto Craigend. In 1502 David Scott (called ‘Lady’) in Stirkshaws had a remission for several crimes, including a raid on those lands. He specifically had 2 mares stolen from him. William (surely a relative) is also mentioned as being a tenant there. Henry (18th/19th C.) servant at Templehall in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Perhaps the same Henry was servant at Deanfoot according to the 1801 Militia ballot in Minto Parish. Herbert Benyon (19th/20th C.) of Barkers. He became a partner in Hawick knitwear firm Pringle’s in 1919. Hugh (b.1814/5) from Morton in Dumfriesshire, he was an assistant gamekeeper, living at Teindside Bridge in 1841 and 1851 and Newlands (in Castleton Parish) in 1861 and 1868. He married Hannah Anderson (or Andison) in Hawick Parish in 1839 and they had children: Jane (b.1840); Thomas (b.1843); Jessie (b.1845); Isabella (b.1847); William (b.1850); Hugh (b.1852); James (b.1855); and Robert Hannah (b.1859). He was probably father of the ‘5 Johnstone sisters’ whose photo of 1910 is in the Museum (suggesting he also had daughters Helen b.c.1833 and Violet): Mrs. Andrew Burnett [Helen] of Adderstonelee; Mrs. Reid; Mrs. Jess Hunter; Mrs. Little; and Mrs. Violet Tullie of Bowanhill. Sir James of Johnstone (c.1567–1608) son of Sir John. He was made Warden of the West Marches 1588–90 in place of Lord Maxwell, this being part of the struggle for power and feud between the 2 families. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh in 1592 (perhaps for assisting the Earl of Bothwell), but managed to escape. His men pillaged in Nithsdale, leading to pursuit by the Maxwells, who gathered a large force. He amassed his own supporters, and surprised the Maxwell’s and their force at Dryfe Sands in 1593, leading to the death of Lord Maxwell and many others. Among his own supporters were a number of men from Liddesdale and Teviotdale. He was declared a rebel, but gained respite from the King in 1594. He was made Warden of the West March in 1595, probably serving until 1598. But after failing to quell disturbances he was declared a rebel and imprisoned in 1599. But he was reappointed Warden again 1600–03. He married Sara Maxwell, daughter of Sir John, 4th Lord Herries of Terregles, and was succeeded by his son James, who married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Douglas, 1st Earl of Queensberry. James of Westerhall (d.1643) son of Sir James. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden and was succeeded by his son Sir James. Rev. James (d.1622) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1598, he became minister of Minto Parish in 1607. However, he was suspended later that year for being absent from 2 Synods and was deposed at the end of 1608 'on a confession of fornication'. In 1611 the Presbytery 'all with ane voce givis consent and approbation to his admission to the holie office quhich and quher it sall pleas God to appoint him to serve' and that year he became minister of Westerkirk. Sir James of Westerkirk (d.1699) son of James and Isabella, daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden (or Walter Scott 'Auld Wat' of Harden); it has also been suggested that his wife's name was Isabel. He was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eskdale in the 1670s and sat in Parliament for Dumfries 1689–99. He married Margaret, daughter of John Bannatyne of Corhouse. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, who was 1st Baronet, followed by his younger son Sir William. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Clarilaw in 1682 (and hence was in the former Hassendean Parish). He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: John (b.1679); and Robert (b.1682). The 1682 witnesses were John Armstrong and John Turnbull (probably related to his wife). In 1682 he also witnessed baptisms in Robertson for tailor Andrew Donald and for George Hood. James (17th C.) recorded at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths and was surely related to George, who was also listed there, as well as John, who paid the land tax there in 1678. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish for Thomas Knox in 1690. James Raymond of Alva (1768–1830) based in Clackmannanshire, he also held lands in Selkirkshire. In 1785 and 1802 he is recorded paying the Land Tax on Hangingshaw, Lewinshope, 'Scadarig', Wester Kershope, Sundhope, Hollandrig, 'Sandbed of Sundhope', Sundhopehead, Shaws, 'Baillieslees' and Helmburn. His name was used in a case involving a swindle over a game licence in 1828, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was succeeded by his son James. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greenhill in Ashkirk Parish, recorded as owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James of Alva (1801–88) son of James Raymond and Mary Elizabeth Cholmeley, he succeeded to the Alva estate in Clackmannanshire. He lived at Hangingshaw in Selkirkshire. He was listed among the landowners of Robertson Parish in 1841. He was M.P. for Clackmannanshire and Kinross 1851–57, and was a J.P. He was a Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He firstly married Augusta Anne, daughter of Fletcher Norton, and secondly Sarah Mary, daughter of Lt.-Col. H.P. L'Estrange. His son Maj. James Henry L'Estrange lived at Hangingshaw. Rev. James Barbour (1815–85) 4th son of Walter and 2nd child with his 2nd wife Agnes Carlyle, he was born at Bridekirk near Annan. His elder half-brother John was an early photographer in Birmingham. He was educated in Maxwelltown and Dumfries and in 1835 went to Birmingham to work as a draughtsman in an architect's office. He turned to religion in 1838, ran the local Scots Church Sunday School, became a member of the Independent Chapel in 1843 and attended classes at the New College in Edinburgh from 1844. He was a missionary at Culross 1846–47 and was licensed by the Free Presbytery of Dunfermline in 1848. After short periods at Stanley and Gatehouse he was ordained as the first minister at Wolfelee Free Kirk in early 1849. He lived at Denholm, until the manse was built. He was also known as a painter. He described his encounter with a 'will-o'-the-wisp' somewhere in the Rule valley, on his way back from preaching at Crailing. He moved from Wolfelee to St. John's, Warrington in 1862. He resigned in 1875 and settled in Glasgow, finally moving to Dumfries in 1878, and drifted back to the Established Church. In 1839 he married Mary Maiben, daughter of Robert Whyte from Edinburgh; she died in 1860. In 1868 he married his 2nd wife, Janet Stavert, from Saughtree. His children included: probably Agnes Francis (b.1840), who died in infancy; Mary Whyte (1842–1925), who married James Cash; Robert Whyte (b.1844); James Carlyle (1846–1873) who died in Africa; Agnes (b.1848), married Andrew Tait; Walter (1850–84), baptised in Cavers, also died in Africa; Bryson (b.1853), baptised in Hobkirk, became an oriental merchant; John Carlyle (1855–1927), born in Hobkirk, became a doctor; Margaret Elliot (b.1857), born in Hobkirk, married John Robert Galloway; and William Johnstone (b.1860), born in Hobkirk, but died in infancy. He was buried in Hobkirk Churchyard. Sir John of that Ilk (d.1383) son of Gilbert. He was appointed one of the Warden of the West Marches in 1371 and it is said that he fought against the English Borderers in 1378. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, who was also a Warden of the Marches.

John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. John of that Ilk (1507–67) son of James of that Ilk and Mary, daughter of John, Lord Maxwell. He served as a surety for entering John, son of Walter Scott of Synton and William, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh in 1530/1. In 1543 there was a ‘bond of manrent’ with him signed in Hawick by Nichol Graham ‘of Meskeswaye’. He married Elizabeth Jardine and secondly Nicola, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1545 he was among Border lairds who gave assurance to ‘have na intelligence with England’. He served as a Commissioner to keep order on the Border in 1552. However, he and 2 of his sons were declared fugitives in 1564. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir John, since his son James died before him. John of Hermiston (16th C.) recorded in 1563 leasing part of the lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish from John, son of George Ker of Faldonside. In 1564 he was ‘lard in Hirdmanstonne’ when he had a marriage contract with Marion Wilson; ‘Jok Wilsone’ was one of the witnesses and probably related to his wife. He was ‘of Hyrdmestoun’ in 1580 when he gave sasine of lands and houses in Hermiston to his son Patricki and his son Patrick in turn gave sasine of lands in ‘rindail’ to his wife Marion Wilson (who was presumably not Patrick’s mother, otherwise the document would have said so). His wife Margaret (or Marion) Wilson also promised not to dispoise her possessions to anyone except his daughters Margaret and Marion. He was in 1580 ‘seik in body and haill in Mynd’ when he stated that he had never received any of the children’s part of the goods and gear of Christian, daughter of John Pringle ‘of Bow’ and therefore does not owe them anything (this suggests that he served as tutor for these children). John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale. Sir John Laird of Johnstone and Dunskeillie (c.1550–87) eldest son of James. He was one of the ‘curators’ for the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane in the 1570s. In 1571 he had a bond with other Johnstones, signed at Branxholme, where he must have been visiting at the time. In the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme he was still owed ‘for the rest of his tocher gud, ane thousand and foure hundreth merkis’; he was also named as an executor of the will. He was recorded as surety in 1573,

left along with the minister to form Hawick Free Kirk during the Disruption of 1843. He served as Session Clerk 1855–61. Rev. Matthew Pool (b.1843) born near Annan, he studied in Edinburgh and was ordained at Symington in Ayrshire in 1869. He became minister of Hawick Free Kirk (i.e. St. George's) 1873–79. He was involved in national and local Liberal politics, and had a particular interest in education. After Hawick he moved to the Free Middle Church, Greenock, despite a petition by the Hawick congregation for him to stay. In 1871 he married Jane B. Milligan. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1510 when he inherited the half lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf from his father Quentin. He was probably ancestor of George and James, who were at Hermiston in the late 1600s. Patrick (16th C.) received sasine of 3 husbandlands of land in Hermiston from his father John of Hermiston in 1580. On the same day he gave sasine to Marion Wilson, his father's wife, of half a husbandland in 'rindaill', at that time occupied by William Elliot. He was 'in Hyrdmestoun' in 1581 when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas. Quentin (d.bef. 1510) father of Patrick. His son inherited the lands of Hermiston from him in 1510. Richard, O.B.E. (??–) pupil at Trinity and the High School and keen local cricketer, he became Professor and Vice-Dean at Stirling University. He was awarded the O.B.E. in 2004 for services to language, having been Director of the Scottish Centre for Information on Language Teaching. Robert (d.1530) part of the family of Johnstone of that Ilk, he was known as a riever. He was killed by Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme 'to gratiffie the King' shortly after the Border raid that James V organised in 1530 to suppress the thieves on the Border. This led to a feud between the Scotts and the Johnstones. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1537/8 at the Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale. He appears to be listed as Keeper of Hermitage at that time. Robert (16th C.) from 'Kirkhelme' (i.e. Kirkholm) in Annandale. In 1574 he purchased a tenement in Hawick from Thomas Short. In 1579 he sold the same tenement in Hawick to David, brother of Walter Scott in Chamberlain Newton. This piece of land was on the north side of the High Street, between the tenements of Simon Sanderson and George Halliday. The transaction was done in Selkirk, with his brother James in 'Rammarhill'

as a witness. It is unclear how a man from Annandale came to hold lands in Hawick. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married a Scott and their son Robert was baptised in 1651. The witnesses were Thomas (who was surely related) and William Hall. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Minto and their son John was baptised in 1689. The witnesses were Thomas Johnstone and John Minto (who were probably both related to the couple). Robert (19th C.) mason in Hawick in the mid-19th century. Robert (1821/2–96) born in Kelso, he worked in Hawick in the 1850s. He then moved to the Langholm area and returned to Hawick to be gardener at Brieryyards around 1870, moving later to Cleadon, near Sunderland. He married Catherine Shine in 1850 and they had 9 children: Denis William; Margaret; Robert; Janet; Alison; Catherine Marion; Jane; Agnes; and Mary. Rev. Samuel (17th/18th C.) minister at Southdean. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1677 and went to Southdean in 1690. That same year he was a member of the General Assembly. He was to have been translated to Oxnam in 1699, but instead went to Dundee. He was the last of the neighbouring parish ministers to preach at Hassendean in 1693. He married Isobel Hall, and one of their children was Gabriel, political writer and colonial governor. Simon 'Syme' (16th/17th C.) tenant in Foulshiels. In 1623 he entered James Graham in Moffat Water at the Commissioners' Court. It is unclear if his lands were Foulshiels in Castleton or elsewhere. Thomas (15th C.) part of a 'retour of inquest' held in Hawick in 1424 to decide on the inheritance of part of the Barony of Hownam. Most of the other men were quite local. Perhaps the same Thomas was on the 1429/30 'retour' panel for the lands of Caverton. Thomas (15th C.) bequeathed 20 shillings in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme. He is listed as 'Thome Jhonsoun'. Thomas (16th C.) son and heir of 'master' James, Burgess of Selkirk. In 1534 there was a marriage contract between him and John Scott in Hawick. John Scott agreed to pay 80 merks as a dowry for the marriage of Janet, his daughter. Additionally after 1 year, the couple were to be vested in John's house, then after paying 50 merks ('in pennies and pennyworths') were to receive sasine. The agreement was done in the room of William Brydon in Selkirk. Additionally, Janet Scott had sasine (in conjunct fee) for his tenement in Selkirk. However, later in 1534 Thomas, nephew of the deceased James (presumably cousin of this Thomas) had sasine for this same tenement; this Thomas is probably the son of Bailie Thomas who was given sasine of another tenement as heir of his grandfather Thomas in 1535/6. Also in 1534 he complained that some men had broken an arrangement over the carved bed that he held heritably, and at the same time John Mitchellhill admitted he possessed the best gown of the deceased 'master James'. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1536 as son and heir of the deceased John, Burgess of Selkirk. He inherited 2 rigs that had belonged to his father and his grandfather Thomas. He also resigned a tenement to James 'Keine'. He is probably the Burgess, married to Helen Rutherford, recorded in 1543, when his wife received a tenement from him in liferent. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1651 for Robert (who was surely related) and in 1652 for James Henderson. He married Helen Laidlaw and their children included Helen (b.1656) and Isabel (b.1658). The witnesses in 1656 were James Easton and Archibald Elliot. Thomas (17th C.) married Marion Dodds in Ashkirk Parish in 1647. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included Helen (b.1657) and Janet (b.1659). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Chisholme and their children included Margaret (b.1748), Janet (b.1750) and John (b.1752). Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Adderstoneshiel according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. Perhaps the same Thomas was a servant to James Fairbairn at Castleside in Ashkirk Parish in 1801. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1812. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant at Hyndlee in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. William (15th/16th C.) tenant at Minto Craighend around 1502 when the farm was burned by a group of Armstrongs, Turnbulls and others, led by David Scott, called 'Lady', in Stirkschaws. His fellow tenant farmers were Thomas Young and his son, also Thomas, as well as Simon Leitch. His name is recorded as 'Johnesone' and Gilbert is also mentioned there. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their son George was baptised in 1661. William (17th C.) landowner in Lilliesleaf Parish. According to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls he paid tax on £130 for part of Hermiton (probably the part that had formerly belonged to Robert Scott of Whitslade). He is probably related to John, who paid the land tax there in 1678. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Brighthouse in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was living at Huntly in 1727 when his son James was baptised Sir William (1729–1805) 2nd son of Sir James, 3rd Baronet of Westerhall and Barbara, oldest sister of Patrick Murray, 5th Lord Elibank. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, and was a friend of Adam Smith and Robert Adam, as well as a patron of Thomas Telford. He served as an M.P. in 7 successive Parliaments. He married heiress Frances Pultney and changed his last name when he inherited extensive estates near Bath. It is said at one point that he was the wealthiest man in Britain. He was involved in the construction of the main road up the Ewes valley (now part of the A7), following an Act of Parliament of 1763. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, but 'will scarcely swear' (i.e., was unlikely to vote); his brother John was also a Selkirkshire voter, having purchased part of Philiphaugh. He was said to be extremely rich when he died. He had no sons and only one daughter, Henrietta, who became Countess of Bath and married her father's cousin Sir James Murray, but had no children. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Spittal, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. His son was tenant at Tower. William (18th/19th C.) listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as 'Junior', when he was farmer at Tower with 3 horses. He is listed after the farmer at Spittal, who was presumably his father. Probably the same William 'Farmer Tower' was listed in 1797 among men balloted to serve in the Militia; in 1798 it is explicitly recorded that he was balloted in place of James Thomson, gardener at Stobs. However, he then paid £10, presumably to avoid serving and in 1799 was listed among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish'. William (b.1792/3) born in Canonbie, he was a road contractor, living at Campknowes in Ewesdale in 1841, 1851 and 1861. By 1861 he was listed as a 'Wood Contractor and Farmer of 21 acres'. His wife was Isabella and their children included William (a gamekeeper), Elizabeth, Janet, Isabella and Helen. William (1853/4–1938) farmer at Greenhead (or Greenheads) and butcher in Denholm. As a youth he looked after the steam engine in Weensland Woollen Mill in Hawick, then working in the dyeing house for Robert Greenwood. He married Greenwood's daughter at the age of 16, but unable to provide for he, went out to New Zealand, finding a permanent job as an engineer and dyer in Dunedin. His wife refused to join him (after 7 years absence) and he returned to the Borders, where he took over running the family farm and bought butcher's shops in Denholm and Ancrum. After living for a few years in Denholm, the family moved to Greenhead in 1902. He married Jane Maria, daughter of Robert Greenwood; she died in 1942, aged 89. Their children were: Bessie S. Johnstone, who died aged 9; William (b.1897), well known artist; and Mary (d.1962). William 'Wullie' (20th C.) local Scout leader and piper who served with the K.O.S.B. and was killed in WWII. His pipes were returned to Hawick and Rob Lyle played them at the Menin Gate decades later. William (1897–1981) artist, born in Denholm above the butcher's shop on Main Street. He was the only son of William (farmer and butcher) and Jane Maria Greenwood. His maternal grandfather was Robert Greenwood, textile designer with Wilson & Glenny's. He grew up at Greenhead farm near Selkirk, where his father farmed from 1902. He left school early, put off by the authoritarian style of education. He was inspired by his cousin John Maxwell, who was a tweed designer, and at an early age influenced and encouraged by Tom Scott. His work on the farm kept him from active duty until the last months of WWI. He then studied in Edinburgh and Paris, incorporating surrealist ideas into his paintings, often inspired by the Borders countryside. He lived briefly in California, and settled in London in 1931, where he taught at a secondary school, and developed radical ideas on how to develop artistic abilities in children. Along with Francis George Scott and Hugh MacDiarmid, they planned a renaissance of Scottish arts. He was one of the more influential painters of his time, particularly as Principal of the Cambertown School of Art (1938–48) and of the London Central School of Arts and Crafts (1948–61). He was awarded the O.B.E. in 1954, and an honorary degree by Edinburgh University, where many of his paintings can be seen in the Talbot-Rice Gallery. He painted a portrait of Francis George Scott (his cousin) in about 1931. He also published books, including 'Creative Art in England' (1938), 'Child Art to Man Art' (1941) and an autobiography, 'Points in time' (1980). He married Flora Macdonald of San Francisco, who was evacuated back to the U.S. in 1940, along with his daughter Elizabeth Jane (b.1931). He later married Mary Jane Bonning and had another daughter. He retired to Satchells farm near Ashkirk in 1960, later moving to Ettrick then near Crailing. He then had a late burst of creative output, with the help of the patronage of Hope Montagu Douglas Scott. He also in this period made a series of plaster reliefs with assistance from local plasterer George Turnbull. There are 2 short films about his life and art. He died at the Cottage Hospital in Hawick and is buried in Denholm. William 'Bill' nephew of Bill McLaren, he was educated at Hawick High School. He became a rugby commentator for BBC Radio Scotland. (see also Johnston; formerly also spelled 'Johnstoune' and variants).

Johnstone's Central Rooms (jon-stinz-sen'-rul-roomz) n. former tea room and restaurant at 3 O'Connell Street, which became the location for the Legion Club.

Johnston's (jon-stinz) n. Johnston's of Elgin, a luxury textiles firm established in 1797, with a knitting factory set up much later at Eastfield Mills in Hawick. They received a Royal Warrant from Prince Charles in 2013.

John the Dip see the Dip

John the Laird's Lands (jōn-thu-lārdz-lawndz) n. name for former lands in Roxburghshire that were part of the holdings of James Douglas of Cavers according to the 1511 charter. They are there listed last, as 'the twenty shilling lands called John the lardis lands'. They were still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687, and still described as a 20-shilling land. There is no obvious clue as to their location or who John the Laird was.

John the Spunkman (jōn-thu-spungk-mun) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the early 19th century.

John the Turk (jōn-thu-turk) n. nickname of hosiery employer John Scott in the early 19th century, also sometimes called 'Jock the Turk'. It was apparently a name of long standing in that family, which led to their close in the High Street being known as 'Turk's Close' (insulting association of Turkey with cruelty and thievery).

John the Turk's (jōn-thu-turks) n. popular name for a former pended house on the south side of the High Street, occupied by this family in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It was later occupied by Mr. Wright.

the John Wright Band (thu-jōn-rī'-band) n. former locally based folk trio, composed of John Wright (who lived near Newcastleton), Kenny Speirs (who lived near Denholm) and Stewart Hardy (who lives further south). They became professional in 1996, toured regularly, released several CDs and split up in 2002. Their version of 'Lock the Door Larriston' features on 'Sounds of the Borders' (2012).

John Wulson's (jōn-wul-sinz) n. John Wilson & Sons, the sons being William and Frank, manufacturers of hosiery and tweed at Ladylaw and Langlands mills from 1851–1875. It grew out of part of William Wilson & Sons, which was split up in 1851, with John continuing the tweed, flannel and blanket trade, as well as the manufacturing of hosiery. The firm received a gold medal for goods shown at the Exhibition of 1851. In 1871 it was employing 190 people and producing almost 400,000 pounds of goods yearly.

Jolly (jo-lee) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Bennet and their children included Bessie (b.1677). Annie (19th/20th C.) occupant of a cottage on Hawick Moss, the site of an old tree near there afterwards being called 'the Jolly Trei'. She lived there with her husband Tom. They were well known for hospitality to people who came to use the adjacent skating pond, providing cups of tea and iodine for skinned knees. James (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was listed as a weaver when children of his were baptised in 1705 and 1707. His wife was Janet Swan and their children included John (b.1700), Michael (b.1703), James (b.1705) and Thomas (b.1707). The witnesses in 1700 were weavers William and John Swan and in 1707 were Michael Bridges and James P... John (16th C.) Burgess who was recorded as witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1579, when Robert Johnstone sold a tenement to David, brother of Walter Scott in Chamberlain Newton. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Malie (or 'Manie') Chisholme and their children included: Robert (b.1636); and Thomas (b.1639). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Hardie and their son William was baptised in 1675. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Hall and they had an unnamed child baptised in 1686. He may also be the John whose children included Robert (b.1692), Mary (b.1694) and Bessie (b.1700). John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He married Bessie Thomson and their children included Bessie (b.1700). The witnesses in 1700 were John Purdom and Henry Orrock, but separately listed as John Swan 'older' and Andrew Jardine. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1721 he married Euphan Scott, who was a 'natural Daughter' of Walter Scott in Harwood. Their son James was baptised in 1721. Michael (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid. Michael (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1728 he married Mary, daughter of shoemaker Robert Hardie. Their children included James (b.1729) and Barbara (b.1731). The witnesses in 1729 were James Anderson (Rector of the Grammar School) and Patrick Angus and in 1731 were John Turnbull and John Scott. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Gledstains and their children included Margaret (b.1672). He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Dodd in Hawick in 1671. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas Turnbull. He married Margaret Munro and their children included: Isobel (b.1718); and an unnamed child (b.1720). The witnesses in 1720 were William Cunningham (the minister's son) and Walter Scott (the minister's servant). Robert (17th/18th C.) cooper of Hawick, who had a seat in the Wester Loft in St. Mary's Kirk. In 1716 he was rebuked for creating a disturbance during the Sunday service. This involved John Ruecastle who stated that 'when he entered the said Loft the above written Robert Jolly did thrust him hard by the feet upon his belly'. This followed him being appointed to keep the key to the Weaver's Loft, so stop unauthorised people from sitting in the seats there. He may have been the Robert born to Michael in 1690 or the one born to John in 1692. Thomas 'Tam' (b.1878) tweed scourer at Dean Mills. He served with the K.O.S.B. during WWI and was wounded. He lived at the 'Jolly Cottage', near St. Leonards, with his wife Annie. Their children included Thomas and Louise. He continued to live in the old cottage after his wife died, finally leaving in the early 1950s and moving to a nursing home in Kelso. William (17th C.) listed among the poor householders in Abbotrule who could not pay the Hearth Tax in 1694 (also formerly written 'Jolie' and 'Jollie').

the Jolly Trei (thu-jo-lee-tri) n. an old tree on Hawick Moss, near the site of Annie Jolly's cottage. This was home to 3 generations of the Jolly family, despite being a small house with a living room and only 2 bedrooms, and with no running water or electricity. The cottage was lived in until the early 1950s and demolished in the mid-1960s, although foundations are still visible. The tree is a Norway Spruce, planted in 1937, alongside a rowan. It escaped being chopped down along with others through the intervention of the men who regularly walked the 'Ponderosa' loop.

Jones (jōnz) n. Jack (1942/3–2020) local policeman. He joined Berwick, Roxburgh and Selkirk Constabulary in 1965 and was posted to Hawick, then worked in Jedburgh, returning to Hawick in 1972 to join the C.I.D. He became Uniform Sergeant in 1976, then Detective Sergeant and Administration Inspector in 1983. He thereafter worked in Galashiels, at the Police College in Tulliallan and returned to the Borders as Chief Inspector of the C.I.D. He was involved in several high-profile cases outside the Borders, including the Lockerbie bombing probe and the investigation of the murder of Susan Maxwell. He retired from the force in 1997. A keen walker, he helped develop long-distance footpath networks. He married Irene and they had sons Brian, Ian and Neil. In Hawick, he lived at Silverbuthall and Raeson Park. He died at Newstead.

joogle (joo-gul) v. to jiggle, wiggle, shake – 'joogle eet aboot an sei if that helps', '... As oo joogled oor mates At the droll hotchy-pig[??]', n. a jiggle, shake.

joogly (joo-gee) adj. jiggly, wobbly – '... I found my way ower hills an' plains. Through joogly bogs an' sylvan lanes ...' [WP].

the Joogly Brig (thu-joo-gee-brig) n. popular name for a wooden footbridge over the Borthwick, near Borthaugh farm, officially known as 'Borthaugh Footbridge'. It was built near the site of the former blacksmith's shop, and provided a popular loop walk for several decades. The builder was local joiner David Taylor, who made a lamination with bolted wooden spars to form one gentle curve over the roughly 60 ft span. But unfortunately the weight of the bridge caused it to buckle, forming an extra rise in the middle. The bridge eventually became unsafe and was replaced by a more stable metal bridge in 1966.

jookery-packery (joo-ku-ree-paw-ku-ree) n., arch. jiggery-pokery, trickery, funny business – 'Then, wi a quick look at his watch, in case o ony jookery-packery, he was off ...' [DH] (an example of 'rhyming reduplication').

jooral-i-joo (joo-rul-ee-joo) n., arch. an itinerant one-man band, with melodion, cymbals, bells, etc. – 'Jooral-igh-joo = 'Jingling Johnnie' or 'one man band' [ECS], 'The jougals yowl't at the jooral-i-joo Whanever hei stert' tae play; A shilpit scurryvaig hei was, And shuttle-gobbit tae' [DH] (an example of 'rhyming reduplication').

Jordan Burn (jor-din-burn) n. stream that flows roughly north-east past Belses to joint the Ale Water to the west of Belses Mill.

Jordan Sike (jor-din-sik) n. stream in Southdean Parish, rising on Steele Knowe (near the A6088 at Charlie's Hill) and running to the north to join the Jed Water. Between the stream and Steele Knowe, to the east, there are extensive signs of old agricultural development, including rig lines, grouse shooting butts, enclosures and boundary banks. These extend to connect with boundary dykes around Northbank Tower, and seem to show 3 distinct phases of development. There are also the remains of 3 round-ended buildings and several turf huts in the area. On the west side is a field system, an old drove road, disused quarries, shooting butts and several enclosures and boundary banks. Near the head of the stream is the start of a boundary bank, which runs for about 3 km towards Lethem.

Jordan Sike (jor-din-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising near Blinkbonny and running north-west to join the Tweeden Burn.

Joseph (jō-zif) n. pseudonym for Thomas Chapman.

Junct (jungkt) n. Adam (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Philhope, among those ‘not Listed yet payd yr’. His surname could be a writing error for something more familiar.

juncturer (jung-too-rur) n., arch. a great coat – ‘Jumcturer [sic], Zn old term for a great coat, Roxb. It seems allied to Fr. jointure; but for what reason, and whether from its various joinings or as corresponding to the shape of the body, cannot be ascertained’ [JoJ].

jundie (jun-dee) n., poet. a shove, push, particularly with the elbow – ‘A staff supports his tott’rin frame, A wee bit jundie mars his aim’ [JR].

June (joon) n. the best month of the year, as far as Teries are concerned. The Common Riding is now at the end of the week following the first Monday in June. In the earliest records it took place at the end of May, but was moved to June in 1715 ‘in respect of the month of May was cold, rainy, and windy’ [RW]. It moved back to May in 1725 and didn’t return to June until 1753 – ‘And year after year as June days draw nigh, A horseman stands guard wi’ flag tae the sky’ [JEDM], ‘When unfurled in leafy June Drums and fifes strike up their tune ...’ [AW] (formerly Juin).

Junior Magistrate (joon-yur-maw-jis-trā) n. the less senior of two officials elected to administer and enforce law in the town until 1861. Also referred to as the Junior Bailie.

junior rugby (joon-yur-rug-bee) n. local rugby played at many levels, with several of the clubs serving as feeders for the ‘senior’ Hawick R.F.C. squad. The teams are Albion, Linden, P.S.A., Quins, Trades, Wanderers and Y.M., many of which have their own pitch and clubrooms.

junkers (jung-kurz) n., arch. a timber-wagon.

Junkison (jung-kee-sin) n. John (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written ‘Junkisone’, which could conceivably be a variant of Jenkison, or even Jackson. Walter (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name is transcribed as ‘Junkisone’. He may be the son of William ‘Juncisone and Margaret Turnbull born in Roxburgh in 1644.

jupe (joop) n., arch. a rose-hip – ‘...the Rose-tribe (Roseæ), whose fruit is an urceolate, or bottle-shaped fleshy calyx, containing hard or chaffy seeds – well represented in the hep or joop of the rose’ [JAHM] (also written ‘joop’).

Justice (jus-tis) n. Rev. Alexander (d.1611) he was presented to Dron before the middle of 1593 and translated to Ashkirk in 1604. The Presbytery admonished him in 1608, saying ‘that he is too passionate, and that he be more diligent in discipline’, and he was rebuked again in 1609 for being absent from the Presbytery for 4 days. He was ‘under disease’ in 1611 and ‘content to tak order anent providing his kirk at the sight of the mins. of Melrose, Earlston, and Stow’. He died shortly after this. He was married and his only son was Patrick.

justice aire (jus-tis-ār) n. circuit court of the Crown. Through much of its history Scotland’s justice was administered in 2 regions, divided by the River Forth. Hawick lay in the southern region, sometimes also for this purpose called ‘Lothian’, presided over by the Justiciar for Lothian. Itinerant courts would be held twice a year, generally in the spring and the autumn, with Jedburgh being the usual location for cases relevant to Hawick (but aires were also sometimes held at Roxburgh and Melrose). The route was often from Jedburgh to Lauder, then Jedburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Lanark, Dumfries, Kirkcudbright, Wigton, Ayr, Dumbarton and Stirling. Records still exist for such courts held in the periods 1493–1504 and 1507–1513, these being among the oldest local documents that give some detailed insight to life in the Borders. The court may have been effectively replaced by the Commissioners’ Court in the later 16th century.

Justicelee (jus-tis-lee) n. former lands in Jedforest, recorded in a rental roll of 1541. The tenants were William, Alexander and John Hunter, and the lands were valued at 18s 9d. It is unclear where these lands were, but they are listed after Rouchhirst and Old Jedburgh. It is ‘Justice-lies’ in 1684 when John Laidlaw from there was on a list of Covenanter fugitives.

justifiet (jus-ti-fl-ee, -i) pp., poet. justified – ‘For bie thy words thou sallt be justifiet, an’ bie thy words thou sallt be condemet’ [HSR].

the Justin Haugh (thu-jus-tin-hawch) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish, part of the farm of Nether Bonchester and on the Weens estate. The name appears in a 1606 charter for Hobsburn and Weens, where it formed the southern boundary. It was said to be a level field, presumably near the river, and must form part of the modern village of Bonchester Bridge. Tradition says that this haugh was once used for jousting matches, but there is no direct evidence for this (also written ‘Justinhaugh’, it is ‘the Justing hawche’ in 1606 and in 1887 Walter Deans calls it ‘Jeistings’-haugh’; the name is perhaps related to jousting; see also Jeistins’-haugh).

the Juvenile Total Abstinence Society (thu-joo-vi-nīl-tō-al-awb-stin-ins-su-cl-i-ee) n. branch of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society aimed at discouraging the consumption of alcoholic drinks. The group met in Miss Riddle’s room on the High Street in the latter part of the 19th century.

kaim (kām) n., arch. a comb, the ridge of a hill, long, steep-sided hill-crest – ‘... And high hung the hills, wi’ their star-topped kaimbs’ [JoHa], ‘At the kaim o the nicht, A turnt roond for another keek ahint’ [ECS], v., arch. to comb, used figuratively as a threat – ‘... Butte, with the kente was in his neif, He kaimed the kerlyn’s buffe’ [JTe], ‘A’ll kaim eer heid for eel’ [GW], ‘... wi their ‘cleir hair’ kaimed owre their young shooders ...’ [DH], to dress a haystack with a rake (also spelled ‘caim’ and ‘kaimb’; the word survives in the names of some local places, e.g. Kaimend, Kaim Law and Minto Kames).

Kaim Cleuch (kām-klooch) n. small stream that rises on the southern side of Kaim Law and runs in a westerly direction to join the Slitrig near Hummelknowes Bridge.

Kaimend (kām-end) n. farm, south of Ormiston, in the hills to the south east of Hawick. Part of the area was formerly also known as Hilliesland. James Rathie was farmer there in 1797 and William Rathie was labourer there in the same year. James Rathie was tenant in 1801, with his sons William and James also listed there. Robert Scott was farmer in 1841 and until at least the 1860s (also written ‘Kaim End’, it is ‘Cambend’ in 1797 and ‘Combend’ in 1801 and 1811; note there is also a village called Kaimend in South Lanarkshire and a house in North Berwick; the name probably derives from ‘kaim’, which is old Scots for a comb or the ridge of a hill).

the Kaimend Hills (thū-kām-end-hilz) n. hills to the east of Hawick. One of the peaks, Kaim Law, is 238 m high, lies to the west of Kaimend farm, contains a hill-fort, and was sometimes referred to as ‘the first Kaimend’. The other main peak, sometimes called ‘the second Kaimend’, is 275 m high, lies to the south of the farm, and is named Whiteacres Hill on modern maps.

Kaim Law (kām-law) n. the highest peak in the Kaimend Hills to the immediate south-east of Hawick, reaching a height of 238 m (777 ft). It has also been referred to as ‘the first Kaimend’ and has a well-defined hill-fort on its summit. This measured about 110 m by 30 m and had ramparts and ditches that are still easy to see. The entrance was probably to the south-west, and there are indications of oval huts inside. The fort at the nearby Castle Law is surely associated in some way.

the Kale (thu-kāl) n. popular name for the Kale Witter and its valley – ‘The sweetest flower I ever saw In blossom upon hill or dale, It was a beauty, bloomin’ braw, Upon the bonnie banks o’ Kale’ [TCh].

Kale Witter (kāl-wi’-ur) n. river rising in the Cheviots, passing through the villages of Hownam, Morebattle and Eckford, and flowing into the Teviot. The river is about 20 miles (34 km) long. The first bridge over the river was probably the one at Eckford Mill, built in the 1690s. There is also a chain suspension bridge at Kalemouth, built around 1836 by Capt. Sir Samuel Brown. Douglas Hall edited the book ‘Kalewater: a miscellany’ (1999) – ‘Where you slip sullenly under the shadows Skirting the feet of old Roxburgh’s tower: Where you take, lowver-like, close to your bosom, Kale, and the music of copice and bower’ [WL] (the origin of the name may be from an early Indo-European root ‘kal’, meaning ‘hard’).

the Kames (thu-kāmz) n. former area in Minto Parish, also called Minti Kames (also written ‘Kaims’; it is probably the place transcribed as ‘the Cayves’ after Minto in a list by Sir Ralph Bulmer in 1548/9).

Kameside Park (kām-sīd-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. In 1779 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it was owned by Lord Minto, valued at £65 14s, and had liferent held by Sir John Dalrymple. However, in 1780 it was stated to be possessed by William Brown, with a rental of £18 (it was ‘Kaimside park’ in 1780).

Kames Moss (kāmz-mos) n. boggy area by the old railway line at Minto, near the farm of Minto Kames. It is referred to as ‘Minto Kaims Moss’ by James Murray in 1863. It is related to the former lands of ‘Kaymes’, part of Belses, recorded being leased by Thomas Hamilton (then Lord Binning) to Walter Davidson in 1632. The area to the south of the farm now contains Kames South Loch, with Kames North Loch further north towards Standhill (cf. Minti Kames).

Kames Muir Park (kām-mewr-pawrk) n. former name for a small piece of land in Minto Parish. In 1780 it was stated to be possessed by William Smail, with a rental of £8 (it was ‘Kaimsmuir park’ in 1780).

Kate Dalrymple (kā’-dawl-rim-pul) n. tune that the Drums and Fifes sometimes play, along with ‘Stumpy’, at the end of the Common Riding for the Cornet, Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father to dance the Bull Reel to. It is a well-known traditional reel, and was for many years the theme music for BBC Radio Scotland’s ‘Take the Floor’. It was first published in 1750 as ‘The New Highland Laddie’, while the modern name apparently comes from a famous beauty, perhaps influenced by the Gainsborough portrait of ‘Mrs. Grace Dalrymple Elliot in the 1770s.

Kate the Cuddy Wife (kā’-thu-cu-dee-wīf) n. nickname for a former Hawick resident, probably from the 19th century – ‘Kate the Cuddy Wife, Tammy Lauder, Wullie Gotterson, Jockie Eye; Auld man Fox was never madder Than when the callants chased his kye’ [HI].

Katey’s Cross (kā’-eez-kros) n. local name for a meeting point near Lethem in Southdean Parish, where there used to be a market. It corresponds to the small hill called ‘Wattie’s Spinnels’, where there are remains of a former settlement and tower. Whether there was ever a market cross there is unknown.

Katharine Elliot Centre (kath-rin-e-lee-i’-sen’-ur) n. centre for social education of learning disabled and physically disabled adults, built by the Borders Regional Council in 1973 and named after Dame Baroness Katharine Elliot of Harwood, Chair of the Social Work Committee at that time. There is also an adjacent supervised housing facility built in 1980. The land had previously been allotments, and during WWII had

Katharine's Court (kath-rinz-kōr') n. housing development off Howdenbank, named after Dame Baroness Katharine Elliot of Harwood. The housing was built adjacent to the Katharine Elliot Centre in 2000.

kavie (kā-vee) n., poet. a hen-coop – 'I mean the hubbub 'boot yon braw-built kavie, Where sits a clocker trim, and twa-three burds' [JoHa], 'An' gin ye'd like a worthy weel-fill'd kavie O' bonnie, healthy, hardie, mettl't burdies ...' [JoHa].

Kay (kā) n. Rev. George (d.1766) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1729, he was licensed by Kirkcaldy Presbytery in 1734 and became minister at Collessie in 1739. He was presented to Minto by Sir Gilbert Elliot in 1741, assistant and successor to John Ritchie. However, he moved to Dysart (Second Charge) after only 2 years. He then went to St. Cuthbert's (Edinburgh) in 1747, New Greyfriars in 1752 and Old Greyfriars in 1754. He was given a doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1759 and was Moderator of the General Assembly the same year, as well as being made Chaplain of Stirling Castle. He married Charlotte Sheriff in 1747 and their children were David, Charles and Margaret. He later married Ann Forth. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as brother of Adam Scott in 'aldinershope' (probably Annelshope. Scott had remission for a series of crimes, including resetting him, particularly in the theft of 80 cattle and goods to the value of 100 merks from George Middlemas and Matthew Paterson out of Dryhope. It is unclear if he was perhaps Scott's brother-in-law or if 'Kay' was a nickname and he was also a Scott. John (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He married Helen Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1757); Andrew (b.1759); and William (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation and in 1759 were Rev.

James Laurie and William Dyce. Thomas (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1734 he was a witness to the notorial instrument in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He married Jean Briggs and their children baptised in Hawick included Walter (b.1737), James (b.1739) and Helen (b.1742). The witnesses in 1739 were weaver John Scott and 'Senior Shoemaker' George Oliver. It seems likely he was a son of Walter, who was also a tailor in Hawick. Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1716 he presented for baptism the illegitimate child of Walter Scott, brother to the Laird of Whitslade; this suggests that he played some role within the church. In 1721 his son Robert was rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath with Thomas Weddell. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for waulker William Hood. He married Margaret Pringle and their children included: Adam (b.1713); and John (b.1715) (also written 'Key').

the Kay (thu-kā) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the 19th century – 'The Sootie Kittlin' and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H'Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail' [HI] (perhaps related to a jackdaw, referring to a chatterbox, cheating or ill-omened quality).

Kaymes see Minti Kames

Kay Wud (kā-wud) n. Kay Wood, small plantation on the southern slopes of Ruberslaw, north of Town-o-Rule. It contains an old enclosure.

the Kazba (thu-kaz-baw) n. name for the No. 10, adopted around 2000, and sometimes called 'the Kazba Venue Bar'.

kean see kain

Keane (keen) n. George (15th C.) witness to the sasine granting the Barony of Hawick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1484. His name is spelled 'Keyne'. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Johanne Kene' in 1528 when he witnessed the 'precept' infesting David Scott in the lands of his father, Sir Walter of Branhholme. William (15th C.) recorded as 'Kene' when witness to the document proclaiming William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig, as the Baron of Hawick in 1428/9; most of the witnesses were local men.

Kearney's (keer-neeze) n. chemist's shop in the station buildings in the early 20th century.

keb (keb) v. to give birth to a still-born lamb, to lose a lamb at an early age – 'Ewes are said to be keb, when their lambs die early, and they are suffered to go yeld' [JL], 'Whareo' ilka ane hes twons an' nane kebbet amang thame' [HSR], '... O' kebbin yowes and rotten lambs, wi mony hells and blasts and damns' [TD], n., arch. a ewe that has lost her lamb – 'Item, five scoir and ten kebbis, price of the scoir ourheid, xvj £' [SB1574], a still-born lamb – 'He coungers our kyloes, and causes our kebs, And a fearfu' auld carl is Johnie Nip-nebs' [HSR].

kebbuck (ke-buk) n., arch. a whole cheese – 'And kebbucks and cruppoeks enow, But Jenny Muirhead brought a capon' [ES].

keb-hoose (keb-hoos) n., arch. a small farm building where a ewe is confined in order to adopt motherless lambs.

keckle (ke-kul) n., v. cackle – 'Her handsome shape an' glancin' een Wad gart a farmer keckle' [JR].

Keddie see Kedie

Kedie (ke-dee) n. Adam (18th C.) elder of the Burgher congregation at the East-end Kirk. In 1791 he signed the call to James Henderson on behalf of the 'seventy-six persons [who] could not with their own hands sign the call'. He may be the Adam, married to Margaret Stewart, whose children included: Betty (b.1772) and Janet (b.1784), baptised in Hawick; and Agnes (b.1774), George (b.1777), James (b.1779) and William (b.1781), baptised in Wilton. He is probably the Adam 'Kedy' who rented the 'best' mortcloth in 1771. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving the Johnstones of Hermiston Andrew (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1630. This is probably the earliest local record of this family name. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1691, along with William, he witnessed a baptism for William Hislop and Janet (perhaps his sister). His son William was baptised in 1691. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1740) and Andrew (b.1743). Daniel (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was at North Synton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is probably the Daniel who witnessed a baptism for John in Ashkirk in 1690. In 1709 he was tenant in Wester Burnfoot. He married Bessie Elliot in 1691 and their children included: Isobel (b.1692); Thomas (b.1694); Anna (b.1696); Bessie (b.1698); William (b.1701); John (b.1704);

Mary (b.1707); and Jean (b.1709). The witnesses in 1694 were John and Andrew Riddell (who lived at Dryden). Daniel (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Rennalson and their children included Isobel (b.1696). David (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Turnbull in 1688 and their children included James (b.1696). It is possible that his name was 'Dand' rather than David. George (18th C.) Hawick resident. He was probably married to Agnes Elliot or Scott and had a son Adam in 1747, baptised in Hawick (whose grandson would become a prominent real estate developer in Chicago). He may be the George who had an unnamed son baptised in Jedburgh in 1740 and the George whose daughter Isobell was baptised in Southdean Parish in 1740. In 1763 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Grieve and Isabel Scott. Humphrey (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Clerklands. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of Greatlaws and 'Clerklandes'. His name is listed as 'Umphra Cadzou' and he was probably related to William, who was also there, as well as Walter in Greatlaws. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1652 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Brown. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Telfer and their children included James (b.1716). James (17th/18th C.) listed in 1724 among the residents of Ashkirk Parish receiving poor money. James (18th C.) married Janet Curren in Ashkirk in 1742. James (b.1814/5) forester and factor at Abbotrule Grange. He presented a fossil to the Museum in 1863. His wife was Isabella and their children included Andrew, Elizabeth, William and Helen. James (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Helen Elliot and their children included James (b.1840), Anne (b.1842), John (b.1845), Andrew (b.1847), Betty (b.1850) and William (b.1852). James (19th C.) blacksmith of the Fore Row in the latter part of the 1800s, succeeding from James Bowie. It was probably his nephew William who was killed in South Africa in 1899. John 'Jock' (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Greatlaws. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of 'Grett Law' and Clerklands. His name is listed as 'Jok Cadzou' and he was probably related to William and Humphrey, who were at Clerklands. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott in 1689 and their children included: Isobel (b.1690); and William (b.1693). The witnesses in 1690 were George Scott and Daniel Kedie (probably related to the couple). In 1690 (along with Andrew), he witnessed a baptism for William Hislop and Janet (who may have been his sister). John (d.1786) baker, probably son of Thomas, who was said to have been a centenarian. He is probably the John who was Cornet in 1737. He is probably also the 'baxter' John, son of Thomas, who was made a Burgess in 1737. He witnessed baptism in 1741 for weaver David Haig, in 1742 for shoemaker Robert Wilson and in 1743 for weaver Andrew Jardine. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for merchant Adam Scott in 1765. He may be the 'John Keidzly', the entry into whose 'stackyard, on the south or south-east side of the high road without the West Port of Hawick' was described in 1767 as the starting point for the perambulation of the Common undertaken as part of the court case brought for its division; he also owned houses on the Loan just beyond there. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James Brown. He is probably the John who was paid 1 shilling in 1783 for 'liberty for the Dran in his Park for the Well'; this was presumably the pipe running down to the Pant Well. He is probably the baker who in 1783 witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Peter Wilson and Joan (his daughter). He firstly married Betty Turnbull from Liddesdale, and their children included: Thomas (1743–1811), also a baker; and Janet (b.1745), who married Archibald Douglas. His second wife was Betty, daughter of wright John Pringle. Their children were: Betty (1754–82), who married David Kyle of Melrose; Joan (1756–1840), who married shoemaker Peter Wilson and had 14 children; John (1759–1826), also a baker; George (b.1763); and Mary (b.1765), who married George Rutherford, a Kelso farmer. The baptism in 1743 was witnessed by shoemaker Robert Oliver and William Oliver junior, the one in 1745 by John Ruecastle and William Scoon and the one in 1765 by Alexander Bunyan and James Brydon. The 1763 baptism of George was witnessed by his grandfather Thomas. He is said to have been 85 when he died, placing his birth in 1700/1, but it seems likely he was born later. John (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1797 as farmer at 'Slackhills' in Hawick Parish. This is probably Slaidhills. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He is probably the John whose daughter Isabella (b.1786/7) married Hawick tailor Walter Riddle. John (1759–1826) son of John and Betty Pringle. He was also a baker, but moved to London. In 1789 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Peter and Joan (his sister). In 1785 he married Isobel, 3rd daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield, and she died in 1805. He later married Mary Anderson, who died in 1831. His children were: Mary (b.1789), who married soldier James Thomson; Elizabeth (b.1791), who married farmer Robert Goodfellow; Williamina (b.1793), who married a Mr. Clark and their son Robert became a bookseller in London; Isobel (b.1795), who married first a Fairbairn and then a Warland; Jacky (b.1799), who married a Mr. Notman; John (b.1800), who was a sailor; and Jean (b.1810), perhaps also known as Janet. He also had an unnamed child who died in Hawick in 1797. John (b.1804) son of Thomas and Mary Scoon. He is probably the tobacconist John who lived at 13 Howegate with shoemaker John Douglas and John's wife Elizabeth, who was his sister. He was there at least from 1841 to 1861, and was unmarried. Robert (b.c.1759) probably a baker. He married Janet Adamson. Their children included: Robert (b.1790); Philip (b.1793); and Jannet (b.1795). Robert (1790–1869) Hawick baker of Silver Street, son of Robert and Janet Adamson. He was probably the Silver Street baker and spirit dealer listed on Pigot's 1825/6 directory, and whose house, on the south-east side of the Auld Brig, is marked on Wood's 1824 map. He was also listed as a Silver Street baker on Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. His business was one of those said to have suffered severe damage during the 1846 flood. In 1841 his house was described as 'Head of Silver St' (presumably meaning at the corner with Kirkstyle). In 1861 he was described as a farmer of 8½ acres, living at 1 Kirkstyle. His wife was Janet Farsyth (and she died before 1861). Their children were: Thomas (b.1816), baker and Cornet; William (b.1818), draper; Janet (b.1820); Mary (b.1823), who married John Innes; Jane Charters (1826–1912); Joan (b.1838); and Janet (b.1842). A portrait of him exists with his wife and son William. Robert, J.P. (1844–1915) born in Hawick, son of Thomas and Mary Fraser. He lost both parents as a child and was raised by his uncle William. He was educated at Hawick Grammar School and the Episcopalian School in Hawick. He was an apprentice with his uncle, later joining the retail merchants Stewart & Macdonald in Glasgow, where he eventually became managing partner. He also served as Director of Glasgow Chamber of Commerce and as Director of the Glasgow Night Asylum for the Houseless, and was associated with the Trades' House, Merchants' House, Commercial Travellers' Benefit Society, Glasgow Savings Bank, Athenæum and Western Infirmary. He married a daughter of William Forsyth and had 2 daughters and 1 son. Thomas (17th C.) married Isobel Donaldson in Ashkirk Parish in 1659. Their children included William (b.1660). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He witnessed a baptism in 1690 for Andrew Riddell (who may also have been at Dryden). In 1691 his son Thomas had a bond with James Haddon in Selkirk. Thomas (17th C.) son of Thomas in Dryden. In 1691 he had a bond recorded in Selkirk. He is probably the Thomas recorded as tenant in Dryden in 1717. He may be the same Thomas who married Janet Brown in 1705 and whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included Isobel (b.1708), William (b.1717) and Mary (b.1718); they also had a son 'Ebenezer Kidsly' baptised in Hawick Parish in 1723. Thomas (c.1662-c.1763) farmer and then baker in Hawick. He is one of the earliest recorded members of the local family. He could be the Thomas 'Kedzee' who witnessed a baptism for Francis Scott of Alton in Wilton in 1722. He was admitted as a Burgess in 1728, with his name then recorded as 'Cadzie'. His wife's name is suggested to have been Betty Hitcher (although that surname is otherwise unrecorded locally), and also Fletcher (which seems more likely); she died before 1732. His children with Betty Fletcher were: Thomas, who died in infancy; John (said to be 85 when he died in 1786, but this may be incorrect), also a baker and made a Burgess in 1737, when he was probably also Cornet; Thomas again; another son; Isobel; Janet; Mary; and 2 other daughters, the 5th daughter being born in 1720. He was a witness to the baptism of his grandson George in early 1763 and it said that he died soon after in his hundredth year. Thomas (18th C.) tenant farmer in Over Southfield in the 1720s. Thomas (18th C.) son of Thomas and Betty Fletcher. He was a baker and is said to have also farmed at Borthwick in Midlothian and to have died in the prime of his life. His children included: Jane (b.1751), who married dyer Adam Scott. Thomas (1743-1811) baker of Hawick, son of baker John and his first wife Betty Turnbull. He could be the Thomas who was Cornet in 1766. In 1789 he witnessed a baptism for John Waldie. He was recorded (as 'Kedzie') as a baker on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Mary Scoon, who died in 1831. Their children included:

John (b.1786); Janet (b.1787), their 2nd child, who married stockingmaker John Pringle; Robert (b.1791); Betty (b.1798); and John (b.1804), probably the tobacconist on the Howegate. The witnesses in 1786 were weaver Archibald Douglas and shoemaker Peter Wilson. He died in Hawick, recorded there as son of deceased baker John. Thomas (b.1816) son of baker Robert. He was Cornet in 1836. He was a baker living with his father in 1841. He won the silver spurs for married men at the Common Riding races of 1843. He is probably the Hawick resident, who married Mary Fraser (from Robertson) in 1841 and whose children included: Joan (b.1838); Janet (b.1842); and Robert (b.1844). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf Parishes. He married Janet Anderson and their children included: 'Tamsene' (b.1805), baptised in Ashkirk; and Walter (b.1814), baptised in Lilliesleaf. He is probably the journeyman wright in Lilliesleaf recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Isabella Martin and their children included Agnes (b.1830), Jessie (b.1831), Catherine (b.1835), William (b.1835) and John Sprot (b.1837). William (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Clerklands. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of Greatlaws and 'Clerklandes'. His name is listed as 'William Cadzou' and he was probably related to Humphrey, who was also there, as well as Walter in Greatlaws. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who in 1651 witnessed a baptism for Walter Coltart and another in 1652 for Thomas Bell. William (17th C.) married Isobel Spottiswood in Ashkirk in 1652. Their children included Janet (b.1653) and Helen (b.1660). His surname is written 'Caidyea'. William (17th C.) married Margaret Tait in Ashkirk in 1653. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Bessie 'Milln' and his surname is given as 'Kedslie' in 1732 when his son Thomas was baptised in Makerstoun Parish. William 'Willie' (b.1805/6) born in Jedburgh, he was shepherd to Elliot of Hindhope. He was groom for the Jardines at Arkleton on the 1861 census. He was known as a breeder of greyhounds. His wife was Mary and their children included James, John, Margaret, William and Andrew. His older children were born in Bedrule Parish. William (1818-80) Hawick draper, son of baker

Robert. He served his apprenticeship with Charles Williamson and took over the business in partnership with Walter Armstrong when Williamson left for Australia in 1839. By 1853 he was running his own draper's business at the Tower Knowe. He also ran a small tweed manufacturing business, William Kedie & Co., which was taken over by Innes, Blenkhorn and Richardson, who built Riversdale Mills around 1880. He was a Trustee and one of the first deacons of St. George's Kirk and was involved in setting up the West End Mission. Despite being heavily involved with the Free Kirk, in 1850 he purchased the Old Manse from the established Kirk, and then lived there. In 1861 he was living on Old Manse Lane, with his sister Jane C. and niece Joan. He also raised his nephew, Robert. William (1879/80–99) nephew of Mr. Kedie, blacksmith of Drumlanrig Square. Born in Hawick, his family moved to Dundee when he was 7. He served with the 2nd Battalion, Black Watch, and was killed in action in the Boer War. He is listed on the Hawick Boer War Memorial (also spelled 'Cadyea', 'Cadzie', 'Cadzou', 'Cadzow', 'Caidyea', 'Caidzow', 'Kaidye', 'Kaidyea', 'Kaidze', 'Kaidzie', 'Keddie', 'Keadzie', 'Kedslie', 'Kedyea', 'Kidsly', etc. and formerly synonymous with Kedzie).

Kedie an Airmstrong's (ke-dee-in-ārm-strōngz) n. draper's business on the Tower Knowe in the mid-19th century. It was started by William Kedie and Walter Armstrong after Charles Williamson emigrated to Australia in 1839. The flood of 1846 made a hole, 6 feet deep, at the end of the shop, which was said to have stopped the flood waters running further down the High Street. The firm was listed at Market Place in Slater's 1852 directory.

the Kedie Hoose (thū-ke-dee-hoos) n. popular name for the building where generations of Kedie's lived, last occupied by Robert Kedie in the mid-19th century. It was a 2-storey thatched house located roughly where the spiral staircase of the Exchange Buildings was later built. An old building, it was full of 'holes, boles and wee windows'. It had a baker's shop on the ground floor, and in the early 19th century Mrs. Kedie kept an inn there. During the great flood of 1767 about a dozen people used a ladder across to the house to escape when trapped on the Auld Brig. It was said that the street 'was stripped to the very rocks' between here and Ekron's houses. The house was said to have been the lodgings of theologian Thomas Chalmers. The house was demolished in 1863 to make way for the Exchange, but the Kedies (thū-ke-deez) n. local family of some importance in the 18th and 19th centuries, with the name also written 'Kedzie' and other variants. Isobel 'Kedyea' is recorded as mother in a Hawick birth record of 1650. A branch of the family lived in the same place for seven generations, on the west bank of the Slitrig, near the mill, known as the 'Kedie Hoose', before the tenement was torn down in 1863. The family were also sometimes referred to as the Old Manse Lane Kedie's and produced 3 Cornets. The 20-mile long street Kedzie Avenue in Chicago (and its associated subway stations) is named after a descendant of this Hawick family. There were burgesses of Selkirk called 'Cadzow' recorded in Selkirk in the early 16th century and people called 'Kaidyea' in Ashkirk in the 17th century (also sometimes 'Keddie', 'Kedzie' and other variants; the name may be related to Cadzow near Hamilton).

Kedie's (ke-deez) n. William Kedie & Co., also known for a while as Kedie, Darling & Co. Ltd., Hawick woollen manufacturers of the latter part of the 19th century, with main factory at Riversdale Mills. William Kedie, a High Street draper, started his small tweed business in the mid-1800s, and when he died in 1880 it was taken over by his nephew Robert Innes, with Blenkhorn and Richardson as silent partners. Innes died in 1895, and Adam Darling became a partner in 1898. The firm went into increasing debt in the early 1900s and was incorporated into Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. around 1910.

Kedie's Buildin (ke-deez-bil-din) n. building at 7 Tower Knowe, near where the Kedie family had previously lived. It was built by Harkness the builders and is beside the steps to the Millport. The site was probably the location of the original Mill of Hawick. It is the first house on the North side of what was effectively the High Street, and was occupied by William Kedie, draper in the 1850s. The site was much later known as the Tower Cafe (also known as 'Kedie's Shop' and not to be confused with 'the Kedie Hoose' on the other side of the Tower Knowe, or the Ruecastle Tenement formerly at 7 High Street).

Kedzie (ked-zee) n. Adam (1746–1818) son of George Francis and Agnes. In 1770 he married Margaret Stewart (1756–1820), recorded in Hawick and Castleton Parishes. Their children were: Elizabeth (1772–1850); Nancy (1774–1841); George (1777–1834); Christie Archibald (1778–1868); James (1779–1860); Margaret Hume (1780–1865); William (1781–1828); Margaret Telford (1792–1874); Janet (1783–1849); Isabel (1785–1881); Adam (1790–1820); Margaret, who died in infancy; and Mary (1797–1830). In 1795 he emigrated with his wife and eight children, staying in Bovina, Delaware County, New York, before moving to Stamford, Connecticut. His grandson John Hume Kedzie was an important real estate developer, with Kedzie Avenue in Chicago and Kedzie Street in Evanston named after him. Kedzie Avenue is a very long street running north/south through Chicago, with a subway station of the same name (spelling varies, e.g. ‘Keidzea’; see also Kedie).

Kedslie (kedz-lee) n. farm west of the A68 beyond Earlston, with a nearby hill of the same name (the origin of the name is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Cada’; it is first recorded in about 1200 as ‘Caddysleya’ and is ‘Kedslie doors’ in 1643; it seems likely that there is a connection with the local Kedie/Kedzie/Kedzlie family).

keek (keek) v. to peek, peep, glance, pry, look furtively – ‘she’s keekin oot her wundi’, ‘... Tae bei a keekin’ glass’ [JSB], ‘... Keek i’ the Kirk (keek-i-thu-kirk) n. nickname for William Scott.

Keelenlows (kee-lin-lōz) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map on the west bank of the Liddel, roughly opposite Kirndean and south of Whitehaugh. It is unclear if it corresponds to some place with a slightly different name.

keelie (kee-lee) n., arch. a small Highland cow – ‘... aa keinds, untellin – kye an tuips an keilies an yowes, mixty- maxty’ [ECS] (also kyløe).

keelin (keel-in) n., arch. the process of stock-taking of sheep by marking each animal with dye or ‘keel’ – ‘... ‘keeling’ may be termed a sort of stock-taking, when the different classes of sheep are counted and marked with ‘keel’ (ruddle in England)’ [RB].

keely-vine (kee-lee-vin) n., arch. a lead pencil – ‘... when so fortunate as to obtain ... the stump of a keely-vine’ [RM].

keen (keen) adj., arch. lively, spirited (noted by E.C. Smith).

Keenan (kee-nin) n. Fr. Stephen (19th C.) priest at Edinburgh, who started visiting Hawick every 3 months in 1837, until a more permanent arrangement was made a few years later. He was thus the first priest to celebrate Roman Catholic sacraments in Hawick since before the Reformation. He wrote several books, particularly ‘Controversial catechism; or Protestantism refuted, and Catholicism established, by an appeal to the Holy Scriptures’ (1846, 1849, 1854, 1875, 1896).

keep (keep) v. to fare, get along, manage, ‘do’ – ‘how’r ee keepin?’, ‘how’s yer mother been keepin since she got oot o Peel?’, to mind, tend – ‘We say keep a bairn where in English the expression is nurse (or ‘mind’) a child’ [ECS] (these usages are not common in standard English).

Keilder (keel-dur) n. common misspelling of Kielder.

Keir (keer) n. James (19th C.) married Martha Rutherford in East Bank Kirk in 1830. William of Whitehaugh (d.1818) possibly son of Thomas of Powisholm and Elizabeth Elliot, heiress of Whithaugh. He was Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale and Liddesdale from perhaps 1772 to 1818. He lived at Milnholm, near Langholm, where he is recorded in the Horse Tax Rolls in the 1780s and the dog tax in 1797. In 1787 he advised the Duke that some people in Liddesdale were petitioning for land to create a village, which would become Newcastleton. He was in charge of the plans for the town’s layout. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the William ‘of Raniston’ listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. His agricultural improvements were the focus of a 2004 Ph.D. thesis at Edinburgh University by Brian Bonnyman. He was succeeded as Chamberlain by James Davidson. Whithaugh seems to have been inherited by William, who was probably his nephew. However, it is unclear how many Williams there were. He died at Milnholm. He is probably the man of the same name whose book ‘A Summons of Wakening; or, the Evil Tendency and Danger of Speculative Philosophy exemplified in Mr. Leslie’s Inquiry into the Nature of Heat, and Mr. Malthus Essay on Population’ was published in Hawick in 1807. William of Whithaugh (b.1810) son of Thomas and Eliza Elliot, he was born at Langholm. He probably inherited Whithaugh from his grandfather. He acted as estate improver for the Duke of Buccleuch. He resided at Potholm, near Langholm until 1848. In 1851 he is recorded at Whithaugh in Castleton Parish, as farmer of over 2,000 acres and employing 18 labourers. He was at Whitehaugh in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was still at Whithaugh, which is recorded as a house having 8 rooms with 1 or more windows. He was recorded as ‘Wm. Kerr’ at ‘Whitheugh’ in a directory of 1868. He was listed as owner of Whithaugh in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He was probably the ‘Kei [sic] of Whitehaugh [sic]’ listed among local ‘Hard-riding Dick’s’ in H.H. Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865). He served as Chairman of the Parochial Board for Castleton. He was President of the Liddesdale Curling Club. He was also a breeder of prize cattle. His wife was Janet. He died without issue and Whithaugh was inherited by his nephew William Little.

Keith (keeth) n. Alexander of Belses (18th/19th C.) accountant in Edinburgh. He was recorded as owner of parts of Belses (purchased from Bennet of Chesters) in Ancrum Parish in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He presumably held some of the lands of Belses, but this may only have been for the purpose of voting. Sir Edward (c.1280–1346) son of Robert, who was Great Marischal of Scotland. He is probably the Edward mentioned in a letter from Edward I in about 1300, granting him licence to take any of the goods from ‘Monsire Guilliam de Galeys’ (i.e. William Wallace). His brother Sir Robert succeeded their father as Great Marischal and commanded the cavlary at Bannockburn. He is referred to as ‘de Kethe’ when, along with his wife Isabella de Synton, he claimed the Sherifffdom of Selkirk from Edward I in about 1305. Isabella was the sister of the previous Sheriff, Andrew de Synton, and heiress to the Synton estate. He had a confirming charter for his lands and offices from David II. His account as Sheriff was recorded in 1328. He secondly married Christina (or Christian), daughter of Sir John Monteith, Lord of Annan; she secondly married Sir Robert Erskine of that Ilk. His children included: Sir William; John of Inverugie, who married Mariot de Chen; Catherine; and Janet (or Joneta), who married Sir Thomas Erskine. Jean (presumably Janet) is recorded as his heir in a charter of 1368. It is unclear whether he or any of his children played any role locally. But Joneta married an Erskine, suggesting that the Synton estates passed through her to that family. His seal is attached to the Declaration of Arbroath. He died at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. His seal was divided into 6 vertical regions and decorated with lozenges, with a diagonal stripe on top. Janet or ‘Joneta’ (c.1345–1415) youngest daughter of Edward and Christina Menteith. She was also great-grand-daughter of the 11th Earl of Mar (resulting in a long-standing claim of the Erskines to the Earldom of Mar). She married David de Barclay (in Selkirk), then David Hamilton of Cadzow and finally Sir Thomas Erskine. In 1368 she is described as ‘Jean Berclay, daughter and heir of deceased Sir Edward Keth, lord of Syntoun’. One of her sons was Robert, 1st Lord Erskine, who probably inherited the Synton estates from her. William (13th/14th C.)

recorded in a financial record of 1335/6 as having forfeited the lands of Nether Harwood to the English King. His other ands included ‘Tochenside’ and ‘Bondyngtone’. He could be the 2nd son of Sir Robert, Marischal of Scotland, who is recorded opposing the peace between England and Scotland in 1335.

Kelloe Plantin (ke-lō-plawn’-in) n. plantation to the west of Borthwickbrae.

Kelly (ke-lee) n. Fr. Daniel (d.1943) priest at S.S. Mary & David 1938–42. He came from the neighbouring parish of Selkirk. He was responsible for significant redecoration of the interior of the church, and cleaning of the exterior. He resigned his charge in 1941 due to ill-health, remaining as assistant for another year before retiring fully. Elizabeth see Ruecastle. Frederick (19th C.) highwayman, whose accomplices held up carts of drink and other goods around Langburnshiels and Whitrope in the early 1860s. Fr. Thomas (1896–1963) born in County Leitrim, Ireland, he was ordained a priest in Glasgow in 1925 and served in Glasgow, Airdrie, Saltcoats, Glasgow (again), Newmains and Portobello before arriving in Hawick as Chaplain of St. Margaret’s Convent in 1961 (formerly spelled ‘Kellie’, etc.).

Kelly Cleuch (ke-lee-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Rain’s Hill and flowing roughly westwards to join the Liddel Water between Hewis Bridge and Dinlabyre. It is probably associated with the former farm of Killoley.

kelpie (kel-pee) n., arch. a young mischievous being, associated with water – ‘Fierce drove the storm, with sleet and rain, The waters rose and raged amain, And oft we heard the kelpy’s cry Amid the tempest’s melody’ [JTe], ‘...’Bout bogles, brounies, ghaists an’ fays, an’ kelpies o’ the linn’ [JJ].

Kelsae see Kelsi

Kelsi (kel-si) n. Kelso, 21 miles north-east of Hawick, built at the confluence of the Tweed and the Teviot. It was an abbey town from 1128 and traditionally a market town for farmers, artisans and particularly shoemakers. The lands of the village were granted to Kelso Abbey in 1343, and it became a Burgh of Barony in 1634. It was governed by the Baron Bailie (appointed by the Duke of Roxburghe) until well into the 19th century. The town was largely destroyed by fire in 1684, when it is said that 306 families lost their homes. It is renowned for its Georgian, Flemish-style Square, with a bull ring in the centre, plus the 1816 ionic-columned Town Hall, and 1761 Cross Keys. The first stone bridge of 1754 was an important crossing point for the Tweed (swept away 1797) and Rennie's 1803 bridge was the model for the Waterloo Bridge. Kelso remains an agricultural centre, with tourism, fishing, a Race Course and light industry. Ednam House (built 1761), the Corn Exchange (1855) and the octagonal Parish Church (1771–73) are important historical buildings, and Floors Castle is just a mile to the west. The Turret House serves as a local museum. The route between Hawick and Kelso would have directly followed the Teviot for centuries; the improved road (essentially the A698) was completed in the late 18th century. Kelso Civic Week is in July and was inaugurated in 1937. It comprises the Kelso Laddie's Reel, a ceremony at the Trysting Tree, commemorating the old Whipmen's society, and ride-outs, including one to Yetholm. An older tradition is St. James Fair, formerly in August and now in September. 'Guide to Kelso' was published by J. & J.H. Rutherford in 1880. Population (1991) 5,989 – 'Bosom'd in woods where mighty rivers run, Kelso's fair vale expands before the sun; Its rising downs in vernal beauty swell, And fring'd with hazel winds each flowery dell' [JL] (the name is from the Old English 'calc hoh', meaning 'chalk hill', or perhaps from Old Welsh 'calch' plus Old English, meaning 'heel-shaped spur of land'; it first appears as 'Calceho', 'Calcho' and 'Calkou' in the 12th century; it is on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Cailso'; the local pronunciation 'Kelsey' appears in the 16th century; often also written 'Kelsae').

Kelsi Abbey (kel-si-aw-bee) n. Kelso Abbey, founded in 1128 by monks from Tiron, France, having been originally founded in Selkirk in 1113, with a charter by David I. The grants from David included lands in Lilliesleaf, as well as elsewhere around the Borders. It was dedicated to Mary and St. John in 1143 and the rights and lands of the monks were confirmed in a charter by Malcolm IV in 1159. It is the most ruined of the four Border abbeys, but was once the largest and wealthiest, having possessed the revenues of 33 parishes; it was not until about 1430 that its superiority was overtaken by St. Andrews. The founder was Prince Henry, son of David I, who is buried at Roxburgh. The infant James III was crowned at the Abbey in 1460 after his father was killed nearby. The last Abbot was James Stewart, illegitimate son of James V. It was burned in 1523 and then partly destroyed by a force of Spaniards in Hertford's 1545 invasion, and burned again in 1547. Part of the Abbey was later used as a prison, and then as the parish church until 1771. Only the western section remains of a once much larger construction, with memorial additions for the Dukes of Roxburghe. The ruins are open to the public, although with minimal information no visitor centre and unlike the other Border abbeys no entrance fee either! (spelling varied over the years, with 'Kelcho' turning up in 1159, 'monasterii de Kelchou' in 1249 and 'Calco' still appearing in 1550).

Kelsi Brig (kel-si-brig) n. name generally used for the main road bridge across the Tweed at Kelso. The foundation stone was laid with great ceremony in 1754, but the central arch collapsed before it was completed, killing 7 workmen. The eventual cost was a staggering £3,000. It became the only substantial bridge between Peebles and Berwick, and was presumably heavily used for traffic going north from Hawick. The bridge fell into disrepair, however, and was swept away in a flood in 1797. The new John Rennie design was built 1800–03 at the huge cost of about £18,000, and it was said to be the prototype for the Waterloo Bridge in London. It has toll-houses at the northern end, this being the location of a riot by the townspeople in 1857, frustrated with paying the bridge toll for over 50 years.

the Kelsi Chronicle (thu-kel-si-kro-nee-kul) n. the Kelso Chronicle, founded in Kelso in 1783, it was the first newspaper published in the Borders. It was renamed the British Chronicle or Union Gazette in 1784, and was discontinued in 1803, but resumed again in 1832. Merging later with the Border Pioneer, Jedburgh Gazette, etc., it ran until 1932, eventually becoming part of the Southern Reporter. Because of its Liberal stance (in opposition to the Tory-backed Kelso Mail) it often covered newsworthy events in Hawick. It is also useful as a source of local death notices and obituaries, particularly before the first Hawick-based papers appeared.

Kelsi Junction (kel-si-jungk-shin) n. junction of the Waverley Line with the Kelso branch line, south of Newtown St. Boswells. This linked Hawick with Kelso and points towards Tweedmouth (1851–1964), as well as to Jedburgh via another branch (1851–1948).

the Kelsi Mail (thu-kel-si-māl) n. the Kelso Mail, or Roxburgh, Berwickshire and Northumberland Gazette, one of the earliest newspapers published in Roxburghshire. It started in 1797, and was one of only printed sources of local news for about 50 years, before the first Hawick newspapers started. It was founded by James Balantyne (friend and later publisher of Sir Walter Scott) and was staunchly pro-Tory. The first Hawick agent was John Nixon. It ceased publication in 1945. The same company started publishing books (at the suggestion of Sir Walter Scott), moving to Edinburgh in 1802, and publishing many of Sir Walter's novels.

Kelsi Wull (kel-si-wul) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Wullie Dunlap and Big Frank creep Past us, and Cashie’s near at hand; There’s Kelso Wull and Wat the Sweep, And Wullie Goudlands leadin’ the Band’ [HI] (presumably a William with a connection to Kelso).

Kelso see Kelsi

kelter (kel-tur) v., poet. to fall, tumble, go head over heels – ‘Though soul an’ conscience baith should kelter, I’ll cleek a shillin’, When Meggy’s coy, ’twill help to melt her, An make her willin’ [JR].

kemp (kemp) v., arch. to engage in a contest in the harvest field – ‘He was once kemping with a celebrated shearer ...’ [RM], n., arch. a contest, particularly between bands of reapers – ‘The kirk day cam’, a kemp began, And hard and fast it grew ...’ [JT], poet. a champion, great fighter – ‘Syne he’s ca’d on him Ringan Red; A sturdy kemp was he, From friend or foe in border feid Who never a foot would flee’ [JL].

kemp (kemp) n., arch. the plantain, Plantago major, particularly the stalk and seed-head (noted by J. Jamieson).

Kemp (kemp) n. James (b.1822) son of William and Elizabeth Ketchin, he was an ironmonger in Galashiels. He is probably the Mr. Kemp of Gala who, in 1856, donated to the Hawick Archaeological Society a mastodon tooth and other fossils and rocks. John (19th C.) brewer of Hawick who was also an early member of Al-lars Kirk. It is possible he is the same man as the cooper. John (b.c.1790) from Melrose, he was a cooper in Hawick. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and recorded at about 16 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was a widower around the Crown Close and in Slater’s 1852 directory he is a cooper on the High Street. In 1861 he was a widower at 4 Melgund Place (probably the modern No. 9). His wife was Margaret and their children included Helen, Catherine, Margaret and Jane. Rev. Joseph William (1872–1933) born in Hull, son of a policeman. His parents died when he was young, and he had minimal education.

He attended night school, then the Bible Training Institute in Glasgow, where he was baptised. He became minister at Kelso Baptist Church in 1897 and moved to Hawick Baptist Church in 1898. During his brief ministry several new features were added to the congregation’s work, e.g. open air services on Sunday evenings, and services were sometimes also held in the Theatre on Croft Road. He remained until 1902, when he moved to Charlotte Baptist Chapel, Edinburgh. He vastly increased the congregation there, moved to new York in 1915, then Auckland in 1920. He established the New Zealand Bible Training Institute in 1922 and became President of the Baptist Union of New Zealand in 1929, but earlier illness returned and he died a few years later. He was said to be temperamental and difficult to work with. He was extremely conservative in his theological principles, fighting against what he saw as the evils of dancing, card-playing, the theatre and cinema. He wrote some short books, including ‘The Soul Winner and Soul Winning’ (1916). He married Winifred Binnie in 1897, and they had 2 children. He is buried at Auckland, and it is reported that 6,000 people attended his funeral.

Kemp’s Castle (kemps-kaw-sul) n. popular name for the remains of a settlement near Blawearie. The hill there is essentially the north-eastern spur of Borthwickshiels Horn, and reaches a height of 349m. The main enclosure is an oval about 50m by 40m, defined by a bank with an outer quarry ditch. The entrance is on the east side and there are as many as 5 hut circles inside. Another fainter enclosure to the south-west measures about 90m by 75m and contains other hut circles. This may be an early iron age settlement. There are signs of cord rig on the eastern slopes (there are other Kemp’s Castles elsewhere).

Kemp’s Close (kemps-klös) n. occasional name used in the mid-19th century for a passageway at 7 High Street, named after the cooper’s there.

ken (ken) v. to know, recognise, be acquainted with – ‘A deh ken’, ‘div ee ken Mrs. Broon’s in the hospital?’, ‘ee deh ken the half o eet’, ‘Div ee ken Ken Dodd’s ded’s deed?’, ‘But in ae point ye’re fair to blame – Ye ken yousel’, ‘Ye neither did set down your name, Nor where ye dwell’ [JR], ‘Then I could ken – and man and woman Kenn’d weel as I did – what was comin’ ...’ [AD], ‘I got your kindly letter, And you may ken it pleased me weel’ [JoHa], ‘A ken o’ a stream lang streekit an’ blue’ [JEDM], ‘I ken that he will aye be true – For Willie lo’es me weel’ [JT], ‘Ye may ken, I

[WHO], arch. one's mind – 'They ken their ain ken best' [GW] (from Mediæval English; see also kin, kenned, kent, Ken fine, kens what and kens when).

Kendall (ken-dul) n. Dr. Adrian (1946/7–) originally from Broxburn, he was educated in Edinburgh and moved to London in 1964 to study at St. Thomas Hospital. He was a doctor in Torbay and Peterborough. In 2014 he was awarded the Queens Jubilee Medal for his services to mental health charity Park View. He first came to Hawick to visit his aunts at Stirches Convent. In 2015 he purchased Woodnorton and restored it.

ken fine (ken-fīn) v. to know well, be fully cognisant of – 'A ken fine whaese they er', 'deh come eet, ee ken fine it was yow'.

Kenilworth Avenue (ken-ul-wurth-aw-vi-new) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1951 and named after the novel 'Kenilworth' by Sir Walter Scott. Neilson's grocer's shop was once there.

Kennaway (ke-nu-wā) n. Thomas (19th C.) Acting Father in 1876, charged with culpable homicide in the death of Edward Dearden, who was run down by his horse during the Thursday night Chase. Along with 7 other riders he was arrested on the Friday, with the others released on bail, but Kennaway being held until the following Monday. They were all fined £1 at their trial and Kennaway was found not guilty. He married Williamina Beattie in Wilton in 1870 – '... Barrin' Tam Kennaway, whae was tried, On a chairge o' culpable homicide' [MB] (also referred to as 'Luke', his name may have been spelled 'Kennoway').

Kennedy (ke-nu-dee) n. Aitchison (1889–1914) son of James Aitchison, who was a butcher's clerk in Hawick. In 1913 he got married, but he enlisted when WWI broke out, being a private in the Black Watch and was killed in September 1914 after only 22 days in France. Alexander (17th C.) resident at Langflat (near Southfield) in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Riddell according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the 'deficients' of the Parish, but was charged tax for 2 hearths. Alexander Allan (19th/20th C.) manager of the Wells estate in Rulewater from 1885. He had previously been at the Earl of Seafeld's Strathspey estate. In 1877 he married Emma Groves from Gloucestershire. Andrew (b.1820/1) painter-decorator, who had a younger brother Robert. He was also known locally as an artist, painting 'The Hawick Common-Riding of 1846' which is in the Museum, along with portraits of some prominent Hawick men of his day, e.g. Tommy Robertson (which he donated to the Archæological Society along with other items). He was also responsible for decorating the Victoria Bridge when it was first built. In 1841 he and his brother were recorded on the High Street (probably about No. 71). He lived near the Millport Steps, moved later to 12 Teviot Crescent (which became the Burns Club) and feued land at the foot of Baker Street. He is listed as a painter at Teviot Crescent in Slater's 1852 directory. He was a Trustee of St. George's Kirk. He married Elizabeth Morgan, and thier children included: Mary (b.1850); Elizabeth (b.1852); Robina (b.1854); Thomas; Margaret; and William H.G. The first 3 children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. David (1839–1907) born in Kilmarnock, he moved to Hawick in about 1861. He had a chemist's shop on the High Street. In 1875 he found a large quantity of old coins while digging the foundations for a house on the High Street, these apparently having been deposited there in about 1555. In 1869 he married Helen Crichton, daughter of Gideon Ker. Their children were: Annie; Maggy; and Robert (b.1875), who took over the chemist's shop. Es-ther (1820/1–1900) well-known resident of Et-trick Brigend. She ran a shop there for decades and knew everyone in the valley. She was noted for her 'force of character, quick and keen discernment, ready expression and high descriptive power'. Gilbert (15th C.) Canon of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell and Prebendary of Hawick. In 1470 he swapped these benefices with James Lindsay for the Rectory of Benholm in St. Andrews Diocese. Rev. Hugh (1698–1764) born in Northern Ireland of Scottish parents, he graduated from Glasgow University in 1714 and became Chaplain to the Douglasses of Cavers. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1720 and became minister of Torthorwald in 1721. He was presented to Cavers by Archibald Douglas in 1722 and became minister in 1723. In 1730 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Whutson. He served as Moderator of the Merse and Teviotdale Synod. An addition to Cavers Kirk, adjoining the Elliott Aisle bears the inscription '17^M_H^K30'. He remained at Cavers until moved to the Scots Kirk in Rotterdam in 1737. There he translated into Dutch the works of several of the best-known Scottish and English theologians. He obtained a D.D. from Aberdeen in 1762 and was described as 'one of the best pulpit-men in the kingdom'. He was said to be tall, slender and with an open face and ruddy complexion. He married Margaret Scott (d.1746), a sister of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, and they had 13 children, including: Anne (b.1724), who married Alexander Livingstone, Provost of Aberdeen and merchant in Rotterdam; Archibald (b.1726); Hugh (b.1727); Charles (b.1729); Rachel (b.1730), who married William Fraser of Fraserfield; Walter (1732–77), who became a planter in Surinam; Robert (b.1735); William (1737–1782), who became Professor of Greek in Marischal College, Aberdeen; Beatrix, who married Capt. Bradshaw; and a son who died young. The 1726, 1729, 1732 and 1737 baptisms were carried out by John Douglas, minister at Kirkton. He published several sermons, some of them in Dutch, including 'Sermon at opening of the Synod' (1732), 'Discourse concerning the Nature, Author, Means, and Manner of Conversion (1743), 'Sermons in the Dutch Language' (1748), 'A short Account of the Rise and Progress of a remarkable Work of Grace in the United Netherlands' (1752), as well as prefaces in other works. Several of his works were abridged in 'Remains' (1828) edited by John Brown of Whitburn. James (17th C.) smith living at Ashkirk Mill. In 1684 and 1685 he had a bond with Patrick Fletcher, Burgess of Selkirk. He was resident of Ashkirk Mill in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He may be the James who witnessed baptisms in 1690 for William Veitch (also in Ashkirk Mill) and for William Donald. James (18th C.) married Margaret Clark in Minto Parish in 1739. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Blyth and their son William was baptised in 1789. James (18th C.) chaise-driver at Teviotbank in 1794, when he was working for David Simpson. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Peggy Kennedy and their son John was baptised in 1805. James (1771–1842) innkeeper of the Ordnance Arms and Quarter-Master-Sergeant in the Royal Horse Artillery. He was probably the James born in Cavers Parish to James. He was known locally as a veteran of Waterloo. He enlisted in 1790 and retired from the army in 1818, during which time he saw almost constant active duty, including in the Peninsular War; he was present at Badajos, Torres Vedras, Salamanca, Ciudad Rodrigo and Vittoria. Based on the baptismal records for some of his children, he was in 1809 based at the army barracks in Christchurch on the south coast, part of the force defending Britain from the threat of invasion by Napoleon's army. He was on the battlefield at Waterloo and was also part of the occupying army in Paris after Waterloo. From another birth record, he was probably in Ireland in about 1818, shortly before retiring from the army. He attained the highest grade of a non-commissioned soldier and apparently turned down a commission. He was known as one of the best artillerists in his regiment. After retiring he was miller at Spittal-on-Rule briefly, but then became landlord of the Ordnance Arms (which he presumably named), which was also known as the Cannon Inn, at 12 High Street. He is recorded there in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and on the 1841 census. He also served as superintendent of the weigh-house in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, and served as 'Preses' of the Relief Kirk Session. It is said that his only child with his first wife was born in Ireland, probably while he was stationed there, but actually James D. was baptised in Hampshire, and this may instead have been the birth of Robert, with his 2nd wife. He may also have lived for a while in Kelso, since that is where his son William N. was born in 1821. He married twice, firstly to Sarah Damone (who died in 1812) and secondly to Lucille (or 'Angelique Lucilla') Hervieu. It is said that he met his second wife during the time he was in the occupying force in Paris, and that to begin with neither of them spoke a word of the other's language. His children included: Priscilla (1804–91), christened in Chitschurch, Hampshire in 1809; Anne (1806–91), also christened in Hampshire in 1809; John, also christened in Hampshire in 1809; James Damone (b.1809), also in Hampshire; Robert (1818/9–82), perhaps born in Ireland; William Norman (b.1821), born in Kelso; Lucilla (b.c.1823), who married Thomas Kedie Pringle; and Frederick (b.1825), born in Hawick. Priscilla (d.1891) and Anne (d.1891), who were buried along with Robert in Grange Cemetery, Edinburgh (and said to be of Church Hill House) were additional children with his first wife, and appear to have lived as spinsters in Edinburgh. James (b.1803/4) frame-work knitter in Hawick. He was on the Kirk Wynd in 1841, the Back Row in 1851 and Drumlanrig Place in 1861. He married Janet Bower in Wilton in 1830. Their children included: Catherine (b.1831); John (b.1834); and Ann (b.1836). In 1836 he secondly married Isabella Stavert, and she died before 1861. Children by this second marriage included: Oliver (b.1839); Margaret (b.1841); Helen; James; Thomas; and Jane (b.1855). James Damone (1809–73) bookseller, bookbinder and printer of Sandbed and Teviot Square. He was son of James and Sarah Damone and brother of Robert and William Norman, and said to have been born in Athole Ireland when his father was stationed there; however, he was christened in 1809 in Christchurch, Hampshire (just 2 weeks after his birth) along with his brother John and sisters Priscilla and Ann. He was a bookbinder's apprentice with Archibald Rutherford in Kelso, worked for a short time in Jedburgh and then in 1829 set up as a bookbinder, bookseller and stationer in Hawick. He also became a printer in 1836 and in 1842 he published 'The Hawick Observer and Scottish Border Intelligencer', the town's first newspaper. He also operated 'Kennedy's Circulating Library' in the 1830s to 1850s, being listed this way in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slaters' 1852 directory. He was listed as a bookseller, stationer and bookbinder, as well as a printer, at the Sandbed, in Pigot's 1837 directory. In Slater's 1852 directory he was a bookseller, stationer and printer and also a book-binder. Additionally he acted as life insurance agent for the Association of Scotland. Many local books were published by his firm, including 'Upper Teviotdale and the Scotts of Buccleuch' (1887) and 'The Hawick Tradition of 1514' (1898). His first premises were on the other corner of the Sandbed, but he quickly moved over to No. 2. He was an elder of Hawick Parish for 25 years and a Town Councillor for 10 years. He also served as Burgh Treasurer. He married first Alison Rutherford and then Christian Lamb. He had at least 10 children, including: James (b.1828); Francis Rutherford (b.1830); Alison (b.1832); Sarah Damone (b.1834); Priscilla (1836–80), who is buried along with her cousin Robert in Edinburgh; Anne (b.1837); William Rutherford (b.1839); Charlotte Matilda (b.1843); Walter Phillips (b.1854), who ran the firm of W. & J. Kennedy, along with his brother; and John William (b.1857), who also ran the family business. He died suddenly at a Town Council meeting. At the time of his death he was the oldest shopkeeper and oldest member of the Kirk Session in Hawick. James (19th C.) listed as collector at the Town Steel-yard on the High Street, in Pigot's 1837 directory. James (b.1808/9) frame-worker in Hawick, living at 77 High Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Elizabeth (or 'Eliza') Pattison from Langholm. Their children included: John (b.1834); Matthew (b.1835); Mary (1836–1919), who married James Elder; Ann Little (b.1839), who married James Graham; James A. (b.1841); James A. (again, b.1845/6); Elizabeth Pattison (b.1848), who married Richard Edmondson; and Jane H. (b.1851/2). James (b.1809/10) from Selkirk, he was a frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 3 O'Connell Street (perhaps the modern 13). He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Elliot and Euphemia Laidlaw. Their children included Euphemia, James, Walter, Agnes, Janet, George, Margaret (b.1851), Elliot (b.1857) and Elizabeth (b.1861). James (b.1817/8) shepherd in Wilton Parish. In 1861 he was living with his wife Elizabeth Renwick and his mother-in-law at Lockiesedge. His children included Heriot S. and Elizabeth. He may be the same James living at Roadhead in 1851, with an earlier wife Mary, and working as a frame-work knitter. James Aitchison (1845/6–1918) Hawick Bailie, son of frameworker James and father of Lieut.-Col. James. In 1891 he was a butcher's clerk, living at 4 Teviot Road. He later lived at Myreslawgreen and 1 Weensland Road. He appears to have married Isabella Ainslie in 1880, Mary Wemyss Beattie in 1882 and Beatrice Robson in 1885. His children included James (b.1881), Janet D. (b.1884) and Aitchison (b.1889). James (19th/20th C.) from Hawick, he was described as 'Jas. Kennedy, jr.' when he won a race of members of the Sydney Scottish Borderers' Association in 1899. His brother 'T. Kennedy' came second. James D., M.B.E. (19th/20th C.) son of John William. He enlisted in WWI, becoming a sergeant in the K.O.S.B. He fought in Flanders, where his great-grandfather James had fought with Wellington. He later worked for the forestry service in West Africa. Lt. Col. James (1881–1938), D.S.O., M.C., son of James Aitchison, he was one of Hawick's most illustrious soldiers. He enlisted in the Black Watch in 1900, serving in South Africa and India. He was affectionately known as 'Chocolate Kennedy' for encouraging his men to eat chocolate to keep up their energy. He was sent to France in 1914, being awarded with the D.C.M. later that year, followed by the Military Cross in 1915. The next year saw him appointed as Acting Lieutenant Colonel with the Welsh Regiment, and he later received the D.S.O. He retired from the army after WWI, having received a bad hand wound. In civilian life in Hawick he was associated with several servicemen's and sporting institutions. He was made an Honorary Life Member of Lodge 111. He was Acting Father in 1921 to Chap Landles. He married his cousin Christina Elder in Hawick in 1908 and they later lived at Oakbank, Lilliesleaf. Their children were John, Mary, Capt. James (d.1946) and Walter Elder (also died in WWII). Rev. James A.T. (19th/20th C.) minister at St. Andrew's Kirk 1915–21. Catp. James (d.1946) son of Lt. Col. James. He is sometimes confused with his father. He was a Captain in the Black Watch and died in Palestine, while still on active service. James (20th C.) railway blacksmith who worked at Loch Park. He was known as a great singer. In 1950 he was the first person to sing 'Auld Hawick, Where I Was Born' in public. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Kennedy and their children included John (b.1780). John (18th C.) inn-keeper in Hawick. He married Ann Ward and their children included: George (b.1779); George (again, b.1784);

and William (b.1786), born in 1785. The witnesses in 1779 were miller John Scott and Church Officer Walter Scott. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Minto. His name appears in 1797 and 1798 in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire; however, it is recorded that David Miller, labourer in Hawick, served as his substitute in the Militia. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. John (18th/19th C.) formerly Pipe Major of the 75th Highlanders, he was appointed town piper in 1802, but only for about 1 year. He would play the pipes through the town nightly at 7 p.m. He was the last of Hawick's official pipers. John (b.c.1780) stocking-maker living at about 48 High Street in 1841. His wife was Mary and their children were George, Margaret and Mary. He could be the native of Hawick who died in Galt, Ontario in 1855, aged 76, with his wife dying there in 1857, aged 73. John (b.c.1807) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on Kirkyard, in 1851 he was at about 12 Howegate and in 1861 was in the back house of 26 High Street. He married Mary Scott in 1831 and their children included Margaret (b.c.1832), John (b.c.1834), Robert (b.c.1836), Janet (b.c.1837), James (b.1838), George (b.1840), Mary (b.1844), Agnes (b.1848) and Thomas Turnbull (b.1850). The last 3 children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. John (19th C.) married Mary Stothart in Hawick Parish in 1842. John (b.1834) shoe-maker journeyman living at 14 Howegate in 1861. He was born in Hawick, son of James and Janet Bower. He married Helen Rutherford in Hawick in 1855. Their children included: James (b.1856), who probably died young; Helen (b.1857); William (b.1859); Janet (b.1861); John Bower (b.1863); Jane (b.1865); James (b.1866); Oliver (b.1868), who donated the Medway Cup; Thomas (b.1871); Catherine (b.1873); and Agnes (b.1874). John William (1857–1934) son of James Damone and brother of Walter Phillips, with whom he ran the firm W. & J. Kennedy. He became an expert on the history of the Borders and was said to have had a quiet disposition. He suggested and organised the erection of the Johnnie Armstrong commemorative stone at Teviothead, unveiled in 1897. For the 1903 edition of 'Hawick Common-Riding Songs' his researches uncovered the names of the Cornets from 1713 to 1718. He also contributed to the Transactions of the Archaeological Society and was a member of the Society for 59 years; during the period 1907–33 he served as either President or Vice-President. His published articles included: 'The Scottish Borderers at Marston

Moor, 1644' (1902); and 'The Teviotdale Regiment. David Leslie's March from Hereford to Philiphaugh' (1903). He also helped James Sinton compile his bibliography of Hawick-related works. He married Annie Scott Edie, who died in 1940, aged 71. James D., M.B.E., was their son. They also had 3 daughters, Lucille and Peggy being long-time workers in the family shop. John (d.1985) from the bookseller's family. He rose to a prominent position within the Forestry Commission, which started awarding a trophy in his name to encourage multi-purpose woodlands. Oliver (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Sinton in Cavers Parish in 1808. Oliver (19th C.) married Sarah Ann Henson. Their son Thomas Oliver was born in Hawick in 1874. He was probably the Oliver born to James and Isabella in Hawick in about 1839. Oliver (b.1868) son of John and Helen Rutherford, he was born in Hawick. He was a stockingmaker to trade, moving to Southend to set up his own company, and using 'Medway' as his trade name. He presented the Medway Cup in 1927, to be competed for at the Common Riding Races. A cousin on his mother's side was Isla Coulton, nee Scott. He is probably the Oliver who either married Jane Beattie in Hawick in 1906, Isabella Hughes in 1911 or Euphemia Haldane Davies in 1916. Robert (1777/8–1860) blacksmith of Melgund Place. He was son of shepherd James and Janet Fulton and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1818/9–1882) son of James of the Ordnance Arms. He was older brother of William Norman and younger half-brother of James Damone. It is possible he was the Robert, born in Ireland, who was a weaver living on O'Connell Street in 1841, aged about 25; this would match with his father being based in Ireland for a while. However, he later became an engineer. He wrote some poetry, including 'Plea for the Common Riding', being a strong Common Riding supporter, despite being an exile. He also wrote an inauguration ode on the unveiling of Prince Albert's Monument in Edinburgh and verses on the erection of the Bruce Statue in Stirling. He was a civil engineer who spent much of his life in India and retired to Edinburgh. However, he was said to be 'a frequent visitor at Hawick, especially at the Common-riding time, when he liked to forgather with Hawick worthies, and get his memory refreshed with local reminiscences'. He donated a large collection of Indian artefacts to the Museum in 1863, as well as a number of coins and hunting and fishing trophies from India. He was described as 'one of the most munificent of the donors to whom the Museum has been indebted'. He would annually bring the old snuff horn of his brother's over to Hawick for the Snuffing. He married Sarah Eliza Ross (1829/30–1861) and their son Robert Ross (d.1861) died in infancy in Madras. He is buried in Grange Cemetery, Edinburgh. Robert (b.1824/5) born in Wilton, brother of Andrew. He was a painter, living with his brother Andrew in 1841. In 1851 he was living in Jedburgh and described as a Master Painter employing 1 man. Robert (b.1827/8) born in Hawick, he was a basket-maker. He is recorded in Jedburgh Jail in 1847, 1867 and 1869, Selkirk Jail in 1859 and 1865 and Dumfries Jail in 1871. In 1851 he was living with his mother and siblings in Jedburgh and in 1861 was in Melrose. His wife was Mary and their children included William, Michael, Margaret and Catherine. Robert (1875–1948) son of David and Helen Crichton Ker. He took over his father's chemist's shop on the High Street. He sold the shop in 1910 and emigrated to Canada the following year. He married Annie Wilson Miller and their children were David, John and 2 daughters who died young. He returned to England in the 1940s. Thomas (17th/18th C.) smith in the Sandbed. In 1719 he is recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. He also had another discharge in 1727 and perhaps others in 1729, 1730, 1733 and 1736, as well as bringing a law suit against Alexander Scott for debt. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Hawick Kennedys. Thomas (18th C.) recorded as tenant of the land of Hutcher's Riverside in Minto Parish in 1780. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Margaret (or 'Peggy') Armstrong and their children included: Thomas (b.1808); John (b.1811); Alexander (b.1813); James (b.1815); James (again, b.1817); Mary (b.1819); an unnamed child (b.1821); Robert (b.1823); Margaret (b.1825); and Catherine (b.1828). Most of his children were baptised in the East Bank Kirk. Thomas (b.1805/6) from Fife, he was a coach-builder. He lived on the Backdamgate in 1851, employing 5 men and was listed as a coach-maker there in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife Ann was from Midlothian and they had children Thomas D. and Montague. Sir Thomas Lawrie 'Jock' (1928–2013) born in Hawick and educated at Hawick High School, he joined the R.A.F. in 1946 and became a pilot officer in 1949. In 1971 he was appointed Deputy Commandant of the R.A.F. Staff College, Bracknell. By 1979 he was Deputy Commander-in-Chief, R.A.F. Strike Command. He retired in 1986, with the rank of Air Chief Marshal. He also served as Deputy Lieutenant for Leicestershire and Lord Lieutenant of Rutland. He married Margaret Ann Parker and had a son and 2 daughters. Walter Phillips (1854–1913) son of James Damone and Christian Lamb. He learned about the book trade in Edinburgh, and ran the business W. & J. Kennedy with his brother John William. He was a teacher in the Science and Technology School in the late 19th century, who moved to be one of the teachers in the Buccleuch School. In 1874 he was one of two young men who raised a petition to get the School Board to support a mathematics class in the town. Eventually this led to a committee, independent of the School Board, which organised classes in science and art, which were later found a home in the Buccleuch Memorial. His contribution to technical and scientific education in the town was immense. He was also involved with the Archæological Society. In addition he was a Volunteer for over 30 years, retiring with the rank of Major. He married Jane Law and secondly Emma Landles. Jean (later Mrs. Irvine, b.1876), first woman President of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society, was his daughter. Dr. W.P. (b.1899) was his son. After his death former pupils subscribed to the establishment of the Kennedy-Dechan Prize in science and mathematics. Walter Phillips (1899–1983) son of Walter Phillips. He was born in Hawick and educated at the Buccleuch Memorial Institute and George Heriot's. He graduated with a B.Sc. from Edinburgh University in 1920 and a Ph.D. in 1927. He became a doctor and for a while was Professor of Physiology at the Royal Medical College in Baghdad, then moving to the Ministry of Health in London. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. William (17th C.) listed among the 'Deficients in Hauick Parich' in 1694. He appears to be at 'The mance of Hauick' and is listed as 'Wm Kennitie in Park' (although it is unclear where 'Park' might be). William (b.1790/1) born in Hawick, he was living at 7 O'Connell Street in 1841 and 1851. He was working as a woollen spinner. His wife was Margaret Leithead, but she died before 1851. Their children included William and Thomas. Probably the same William was living in Hawick when listed among heads of household in Wilton Kirk in 1835. William (b.1817/8) born in Wilton Parish, he was living at Allars Crescent in 1851 and on Dickson Street in 1861. His wife Jane was born 'At Sea'. Their children included William, James, Catherine, Margaret, Barbara, Thomas and Jane. William Norman 'Norman' (1821–1865) son of veteran James and Lucille Hervieu, from France. He was christened in Kelso. He was younger brother of Robert and half-brother of James Damone. He trained as a book-binder, probably with his half-brother. He was Inspector of the Poor in Hawick for about 15 years, but succumbed to fever after visiting a sick pauper. He was a founder of the Archæological Society, being its first official member, acting as Secretary 'pro tem' in the first months, then being the first Treasurer (personally paying for the publication of the initial reports) and a regular contributor to the early Transactions. Despite his life being cut short, he contributed no less than 48 papers, on a wide range of subjects, as well as articles published in other places. Essentially an early folklorist, his descriptions of Hawick characters (mostly presented at the Archæological Society, but published after his death) formed the basis for Robert Murray's 'Hawick Characters'. They are an invaluable source of information about ordinary Hawick people in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, containing examples of local dialect and numerous funny stories! They formed part of what he referred to as 'The Local Ethnology of Hawick and Neighbourhood', suggesting that we might one day have seen the publication of a full-scale book. His writing shows a skill that stands out compared with most of his contemporaries, suffused with a strong empathy for his fellow humans, with liberal views that seem quite modern (e.g. in his comments about the African-born teacher Tom Jenkins). His liberal views seem sense of humanity. He was probably the Mr. Kennedy who donated to the Archæological Society in 1856 'some very interesting fossil remains from the greywacke quarry at St. Mary's head of Slitrig Crescent'. He was also one of the first (in 1858) to suggest the Catrail was a boundary connecting between streams rather than a defensive ditch. In addition, he performed early examinations of local hill-forts, and was elected a member of the Society of Antiquarians of Scotland. He was the first to compile a list of the ministers of Hawick Parish. He wrote some poetry, including 'Dialogue Anent the Auld Brig', another poem on the same subject (intended for the Auld Brig competition, but never entered) and others that appeared in the local press. In 1863 he presented to the Museum some items he had found while St. Mary's Kirk was being renovated. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, and personally reinstated the ‘Snuffing’ tradition. He wrote a short history of Common Riding traditions, published posthumously from notes of a book he was working on. He had also been working on the Burgh records to trace the Town’s history, and had extensive notes on the history of manufacturing in Hawick, all of which he was intending to compile into some kind of book. He became a friend of Rev. James Morton (author of ‘Monastic Annals of Teviotdale’ and editor of the John Leyden collection), and helped him with preparation of a supplement to Dr. Jamieson’s dictionary of the Scottish language. In 1851 he was living at Teviot Square with a servant, and in Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a shopkeeper at Teviot Square. He later lived at Stonefield Cottage, where he is listed in 1861. He married Matilda Cox, who was born in Ireland. Their children included: James Robert (b.1850); Charlotte Elizabeth (b.1851); Lucille Hervieu (b.1853); William Norman (b.1856); Robert (b.1857); John Ross (b.1861); and Matilda (b.1863). His portrait was painted by his brother Robert. He is also in another portrait (by John Guthrie) along with fellow Archaeological Society founders Alexander and Robert Michie, and there is an early photograph of him. His death came unexpectedly after he attended to a feverish woman in the West-end, not being able to find anyone else to help. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William Norman ‘Willie’ (b.1856) son of William Norman. He dispensed the snuff at the Snuffing in the late 1800s and early 1900s. There is a photograph of him with the snuff mull in 1907. He may have been the proprietor of the Tower Hotel and married a daughter of Andrew Minto (formerly written ‘Kennety’, ‘Kenniday’, ‘Kennidie’, ‘Kenitie’, ‘Kennitie’ and variants).

the Kennedy-Dechan Prize (thu-ke-nu-dee-dee-kin-priz) n. science bursary prize fund at the High School, set up by in memory of Walter Phillips Kennedy and Martin Dechan about 1915. The initial fund was subscribed to by former pupils, raising over £1100, with later donations by the Callants’ Club. It was used to award gold medals to 3rd year High School pupils who excelled in science and mathematics. More recently the prize has been given to final year pupils. University prizes in these subjects, available for 3 years, were also originally awarded.

Kennedy’s (ke-nu-deez) n. W. & J. Kennedy, booksellers, bookbinders and stationers shop at 2 Sandbed. It was founded by James Damone Kennedy, then continued by his sons Walter and James. They also ran a circulating library around the 1830s. They published many local books, and were the town’s pre-eminent bookshop for decades. The business left the Kennedy family in the early 1960s, being run by Frances and Allan Hobkirk, but retaining the old name. It closed in 1971 after 142 years, following a compulsory purchase order by the council as part of the Howegate redevelopment scheme; however, the planned realignment of the property never materialised.

kenspeckle (ken-spe-kul) adj., arch. well-known, easily recognised, prominent, conspicuous – ‘It was noo, when aw saw him aboot as kenspeckle as aw sey yow ...’ [BCM1880], ‘... an A cam on o another kenspeckle landmerk – Peinelheuch’ [ECS], ‘Wullie’s kenspeckle fither ‘Moosie’ played for Hawick ...’ [IWL], ‘To mak the pattern o’ the claith Kenspeckle o’ its ilk’ [WL] (from Mediæval English).

kens how (kenz-how) pron., arch. who knows how (used with ellipsis) – ‘Kens how ei’ll wun throwe, ava!’ [ECS] (E.C. Smith notes that in such expressions ‘kens (the vowel is scarcely sounded, thus: ‘k’ns’) is used elliptically in place of goodness knows or dear knows, etc.’).

kens how lang (kenz-how-lawng) adv. phrase, arch. who knows how long – ‘Kens how lang him an mei’s wroacht thegither’ [ECS], ‘He’ll be kens how lang wi’ that job’ [GW].

kens whae (kenz-whā) pron., arch. who knows who, goodness knows who (used elliptically) –

kens what (kenz-whaw) pron., arch. who knows what, goodness knows what – ‘...would gie kens what for ane’ [JoHo], ‘Wi’ ‘Currie Powders’, and, kens what, through ither, He’ll scour ye off the world a’thegither’ [JoHa], ‘Hei said kens what afore hei’d duin’ [ECS], also in the phrase ‘kens what aa’ – ‘Kens what aa they fand i the hoose’ [ECS].

kent (kent, ken) pp. knew – ‘We hae our joys that pride ne’er kent ...’ [JoHa], ‘...O’ grief then I kentna the meaning o’t’ [JoHa], ‘...For weel they kent the law’ [JT], ‘The streets ye kent when ye were bairns ...’ [WL], ‘The bond was made, and the auld folk’s blessin’ The couple kent, or they kent caressin’ [WL], ‘...an then when it got ower the top it said ‘Ah kent A could, A kent A could, A kent A could’ [IWL], pp. known – ‘ee’re kent be the company ee keep’, ‘Wi’ fame yet your name yet Shall be kent everywhere’ [JoHa], ‘...That makes Hawick Callants kent in thae competition days’ [JEDM] (see also the less common kenned, kennit and knewn).

kent (kent) n., arch. a long pole, staff, particularly used by shepherds to help jump over streams – ‘...Butte, with the kente was in his neif, He kaimed the kerlyn’s buffe’ [JTe], ‘...Hadna’ the maister’s heavy kent Fawn whack upon her riggin’ [WiSp] (mentioned in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1620 relating to an attack on Hawick High Street ‘with lanceis, staulffis, swerdis, long kentis or grite trees’).

Ken the Horse (ken-thu-hors) n. soubriquet for the Equestrain Monumnet or 1514 Memorial. The joke comes from the use of the statue as a landmark, particularly when giving directions, which invariably start with the question ‘ee ken the horse?’. The phrase was a focus of the speech given by Ian Landles when the monument was moved in 2003. A ‘Ken the Horse’ supporters group was started in 2009. In 2010 the Enterprise Group at Hawick High School used the ‘Ken the Horse’ brand to raise money through car stickers and other merchandise. In addition a song was written by Iain H. Scott, and some cartoons were produced.

Keown (kyoo-in) n. George (1941/2–) from New Zealand, he came to Scotland in 1967 and became teacher at Burnfoot School. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and gifted a trophy that has been competed for since 1968 by Hawick primary-school rugby teams. Returning to New Zealand he married Peggy Morgan, who was also a teacher (and the couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020). He was a Head Teacher for 29 years and retired in 1999. He played rugby until he was 40. Returning to the area in 2000, he and his wife became supply teachers. Their children are Barrie (who played rugby in Hawick and joined the police) and Raelene.

kep (kep) v., arch., poet. to catch (especially a thrown object), stem the flow of water, contain, confine, keep – ‘With jugs and bowls [they] kepped the liquor as it was flowing out’ [HAST1875], ‘...A grassy pule to kep the lap o’t’ [JBS], ‘Ilka blade o’ gerss keps its ain drap o’ dew’ [JaB], ‘The gowan keps its drap o’ dew’ [WE], ‘Ti kep gushes = to dam the flow of streams of water such as run down the street channel (‘the gutter’)’ [ECS], ‘Keppin gushes was a favourite pastime amongst Hawick bairns, who dammed with their bare feet the water in the street ‘gutters’. At a given signal, the cry of Let oot! the water was freed to ruch ‘doon the brae’ in a grand spate’ [ECS], n., arch. a catch, opportunity – ‘Lookin oot for keps = lying in wait for chances; watching opportunities’ [ECS].

kep-a-catch (kep-a-kawch) n., arch. an item that is useful in an emergency, saved for a rainy day (cf. kep-a-gush).

kep-a-gush (kep-a-gush) n., arch. a children’s game involving blocking a gutter in the street and letting it build before releasing the water – ‘...Kep-a-gush and gainin grund, Skatin on the curlin pond’ [IWL], a splay-footed person.

Ker (ker, kawr) n. Adam (15th C.) Clerk of Glasgow Diocese who was the notary for the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1428/9, following the death of William’s father. It is unclear if he was attached to a particular local church. Adam (15th C.) appointed as one of the bailies to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to give sasine of Wolfelee to David Home of Wedderburn in 1479. Adam (d.bef. 1489) owner of the lands of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk, which were the eastern demesne lands there. In 1489 his son Thomas was retoured as heir to the lands of 'Sant Elene Shaw', including 'le Kyrk croft', 'Caponland' and 'Gersland', by Ralph Ker, bailie to George Douglas, Master of Angus. He is probably ancestor of the later Kers of Shaws. Adam (d.bef. 1579) only son and heir of William of Shaws. In 1528 he gave sasine of lands in Selkirk to John Scott and in 1530 he was recorded receiving yearly rent for lands in Selkirk. In 1530/1, with the consent of his father William, he gave sasine of lands in Selkirk to George Chapman and other lands to John Morlaw. In 1533 he and his father sold a tenement to John Brydon. He was in 'Sanct Helyne Schawe' in 1534 when he resigned an annual rent. In that same year he is recorded as heir of William and husband of Janet Newton when James of Mersington gave a letter of obligation to them at 'the tower of St Helyne Schaw'. In 1540 he and his father resigned a tenement in Selkirk and along with his wife ('Janet Neutoun lady of Dalcoif') had a transaction involving Little Newton in Lauderdale (with a further transaction for the same lands in 1552). He was recorded as a juror in 1541. He was involved in further transactions in Selkirk in 1543/4 and 1544. He married Janet Newton, who was heiress of the lands of Dalcove in Berwickshire. He was deceased by 1579 when his son Thomas had sasine for his daughter Elizabeth's lands of 'Sancthelingschaw' with tower and other lands in Selkirk. Adam (b.1808/9-79) from the Hawick area. In about 1832 he emigrated to Galt in Ontario. In 1850 he was elected as Clerk and Treasurer, serving until 1858. He was then Mayor of Galt in the period 1868-74. Alexander (16th/17th C.) servant to John Ker of Langnewton, recorded in 1621. Hw was listed as 'Willis Elchie', so that his father must have been called William. Along with some of his associates he was declared a rebel in 1621. Alexander (d.1817) 2nd son of John. He was employed in the naval service of the East India Company, but retired due to bad health. He was 'Alexander Carre brother-german to John Carre of Cavers' on the 1780 roll of electors in Roxburghshire. He was also listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788. He was taxed for having male servants in the

1780s. He succeeded to Cavers Carre and Hundalee on the death of his brother Capt. John in 1798. However, he was first listed on the Horse Tax Rolls at Cavers Carre in 1792. In 1800 he married Ann, eldest daughter of Robert Boswell, W.S. Immediately afterwards he had a new part of the house built at Cavers Carre. After getting into financial difficulties he sold Bedrule in 1801, part of this having been in the family since 1528. Belses was also sold about the same time. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 (and still listed in 1819). He died without issue and Hundalee went to the Marquess of Lothian (as nearest male heir to Lord Jedburgh), while he left Cavers Carre to his sister Elizabeth. Her son William Riddell Carre later succeeded. Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn (d.1444) 2nd son of Henry, he was the first Ker to be designated 'of Cessford'. In 1420 he was witness to the charter for Branhholme, granted by William Inglis to Robert Scott. He may be the Andrew who was on a 'retour of inquest' made in Hawick in 1424 to decide on some lands in Hownam and another in 1427 to decide on inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. He was served heir to his brother Richard in 1428, although he is called 'of Altonburn' even before that. In 1429/30 he was on the 'retour' panel for the lands of Caverton. In 1430 he held the lands of Primsie for loaning a sum of money to Andrew Rule (with some suggestion the date is really much earlier). However, in 1432 these lands were resigned by Andrew Rule to his son George, who had married Margaret Ker (his own daughter). In 1433/4 he had a charter of half the lands of Borthwickshiels from George Crichton of Blackness. He is probably the Andrew who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. Also in 1437 he had a charter from William Earl of Douglas for the lands of Primsie. He was probably the 'Andree Ker' who was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that Ilk in 1439, when Grahamslaw was infefted in Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1439/40 he acquired Primsie outright from the daughters of Andrew Rule, and finally the lands of Plenderleith and Hindhope from the Rules in 1454/5 (although that was finalised by his son Andrew). In 1441 he and his son James had a 'letter of reversion' for the lands of Lempitlaw with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He had a grant of the Mains of Hownam in 1443. He married a daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers and was succeeded by his son Andrew. Other children included: James, who had a charter of Primsie in 1444 and may be the same man as James of Linton; Thomas, who also held lands in Primside and probably Gate-shaw; and Margaret, who married George Rule of Primside. He was still alive in August 1444, and died close to Christmas that year. Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn (d.bef. 1484) son of Andrew, who he succeeded in 1445. He was probably the originator of the left-handed family tradition. He became prominent as a supporter of the Earl of Angus and was given lands in Jedforest. He was 'younger' in 1441 when he witnessed a charter for the lands of Cessford. It was either him or his father who was 'Andro Ker lord of Awtounburne' in 1445 when Henry Wood leased his tenantry of Harden Wood (within Borthwickshiels) to him. In 1446 he was 'Andrea Ker de Awtonburne' when he witnessed a charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. He witnessed a document for Oswald Abernethy, made before the Earl of Douglas in 1446/7, relating to the lands of Teindside and Harwood. Also in 1446/7 there was a retour at Newark to decide that he was his father's heir in the lands of Primside. In 1447 he was a witness to the charter of Margaret Cusing (wife of Simon Routledge, Hawick Burgess) to Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme. He was 'Bailie in that part' in a 1448 document whereby Stephen Scott gained the 'Burrellands' in Eckford. In 1450 he had a charter for lands in Stirlingshire. In 1450 he had a passport of safe conduct for 3 years to travel the Earl of Douglas. He was Walter Scott of Buccleuch's Bailie in Eckford (along with Stephen Scott) in 1454. In 1453 he had a mutual bond of manrent with Sir Robert Colville. In 1456 he was accused of bringing Englishmen to burn Eckford, Crailing, Grahamslaw and Jedburgh, but was acquitted. Also in 1456 he and his brother James were involved with collecting rents on the King's lands in Ettrick Forest, for which he had the lease of the farms of Bowerhope and Ashiestiel. In 1457 he was made Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest by George, Earl of Angus; in place of his seal the agreement used the seal of David Pringle of Pilmuir, since he 'had no seal of his own present'. He was named in an indenture between Scottish and English Commissioners in 1458. In the early 1460s he sided with Robert, Lord Boyd, in seizing power from the young King James III. In 1464/5 he was on the inquest for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh (to Archibald Douglas) and also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex (between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains). In 1468 he and his son Walter were involved in an arrangement with

Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk, when they acted as procurators for Henry Wardlaw of Torrie (and Wilton). In 1469/70 he witnessed the granting of the Governorship of Hermitage to the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Earl of Angus. In 1470 he was a witness to another charter for the Douglasses of Cavers, and was one of the bailies appointed by the Earl of Angus to give sasine of these lands in 1472. In 1470/1 he was indicted for helping the English, bringing in the traitor James Douglas, involvement in the battle in which the Laird of Rutherford and others were captured, wounded or killed, helping Robert, Lord Boyd, in capturing the King for a period, and involvement in plotting to kill Andrew, Lord Avondale, Chancellor of Scotland; he appeared before a jury and was acquitted, with the decision witnessed by several Border Lairds. In 1471 his son and heir Walter took possession of the lands of Borthwickshiels and Harden Wood. Also in 1471 he had a debt relating to Crown lands. In 1475/6 he was witness to a document relating to Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1479 he received the 'fermes' (i.e. rental fees) of Jedburgh. He may be the Andrew who was infefted in the lands of Crailing and Hownam by Alexander Home in 1484. He was said to have married a daughter of William Douglas of Cavers (although this may have been his father), and secondly married Margaret Tweedie (or perhaps Herries). His children included: Andrew, younger of Cessford, mentioned in 1464/5, who died before his father, and married Margaret; Walter of Caverton and Cessford, who succeeded; Thomas, who became the 1st Laird of Ferniehirst and is usually spelled 'Kerr'; Robert, Abbot of Kelso; William of Yair and Boithill; Ralph of Primside Loch, also called 'Radulpho'; and Margaret, who married Sir James Sandilands of Calder. James of Linton and George of Samuelston may also have been his sons (but both of these are open to debate). Andrew (d.bef. 1479) eldest son of Andrew of Cessford, but he died before his father. He is mentioned in 1464/5. He may have married a Hepburne, and after his death his wife married a Haliburton, Laird of Dirleton (she was probably the 'Mariota' who was wife of George, 4th Lord Haliburton of Dirleton). His only child was Margaret, who in 1479 renounced all claim to the Barony of Cessford in favour of her uncle Walter. Andrew of Gateshaw (15th/16th C.) perhaps son of James. In 1498 he was in dispute with the Abbot of Melrose over the 'herezeld' of his tenants. In 1510 he and Thomas, brother of

Philip Scott of Headshaw, were accused of murdering John Murray of Falahill. His sureties were his son Lancelot, along with James of Whitrig. Sir Andrew (d.1526) Laird of Cessford, son of Sir Robert (who died before he could succeed). In 1503 he had sasine for Cessford, 'Huntleisland', Auld Roxburgh, Altonburn, 'Bordislandis' and Castleside. In 1508/9 he had a charter for Auld Roxburgh and in 1511 a confirming charter for Cessford, Caverton (called 'Rutherforddislandis'), 'Fetheringamyslandis', Hownam, 'Penniside' and Smailholm. He served as Warden of the Middle Marches (possibly along with his brother Ralph) about 1503 and again in 1515. He probably fought at Flodden. In 1519 he had a charter of half the lands of Hassendean from William Elphinstone, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1525 he was named on a bond for keeping peace on the Border. He was killed at the Battle of Skirmish Hill by James Elliot, a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch. This led to a feud between the Scotts and the Kers that lasted decades, and led to the murder of Sir Walter of Buccleuch on Edinburgh High Street in 1552. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Patrick Crichton of Crichton Riddell, and was succeeded by his son Sir Walter. His other children included: Mark, Commendator of Newbattle; Andrew, who married Marion Pringle; Catherine, who married Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes and was granted lands in Smailholm in 1524; and Isobel, who married Sir William Sinclair of Roslin. In 1524 his wife 'Ann Cre[...]' (either the same as Agnes Crichton, or a 2nd wife) resigned her lands in Selkirk. Andrew of Primside and Greenhead (d.bef. 1537) son of Ralph. He is probably the 'Andreas ker filius Radulph' who was part of a bond in 1498 to act upon men who were already fugitives. In 1519 he witnessed a document in Selkirk and was involved in another document in 1520. In 1526 he was listed among the large number of Borderers (led by Walter Scott of Braxholme) who had remission for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He was 'of Greenhead' in 1527/8 when he agreed to appear at a tribunal in Selkirk. In that same year he and his wife Marion Pringle had a sasine for the lands in Maxwell Fields. In 1529/30 he was still 'of Greenhead' when he witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton (who may have been a relative). In 1530/1 he was witness to Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose

Abbey. Also in 1530/1 he had documents involving the lands of Softlaw. In 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In 1532 Robert Scott, tutor of Howpasley and George Scott of Blindhaugh agreed to pay him a fee for the marriage of Janet Scott of Howpasley to Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun. Also in 1532 he purchased the lands of Birkenside from Robert Scott of Howpasley. He witnessed a document in Selkirk between the Kers of Mersington and Shaws in 1534. In 1535 he was involved in a dispute with Thomas Ker in Yair; there he is 'in Prumsydloucht at his dwelling place called Grenheid', making it clear that Andrew of Primside and Andrew of Greenhead were the same person). In 1537 he ordered Walter Scott in Synton to leave certain of his lands. In 1538 he and his wife Marion Pringle were absolved from paying past fees on 'Mabyllynflat' to John Turnbull of Hassendean, with their son Gilbert to pay in future. He claimed tenancy of Broadmeadows in 1541. He also claimed tenancy of 'Myddilsteid of Hartwod', as well as 'Blakmeidnes', Bailielee and half of Phaup. He was said to be one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme (although already deceased by then). He married Marion Pringle and was succeeded by his son Gilbert of Primside; in 1536/7 his wife refused to act as his executor 'because of the great dangers it will incur' and in 1539/40 his wife and son obtained the non-entries from Janet Newton and Adam Ker. In 1544 his widow had an agreement with Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme that Scott would pay her for rents on her lands of Broadmeadows. His daughter Janet appointed John Douglas, Burgess in Edinburgh, as her procurator in 1533. Andrew of Graden (d.bef. 1563) younger son of Ker of Cessford. In 1528 he had a charter for Water Hoelaw, formerly belonging to Mark of Dolphinston. He was listed in 1561 among men who had to appear before the Queen to promise to keep peace on the Border. He married Helen Ker and was probably succeeded by Andrew. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) recorded 'in Scheilstokbrayis' in 1567 when Dame Janet Beaton, Lady Buccleuch, was ordered to present him. He was described as her 'householdman and servant'. Sir Walter Ker of Cessford (and his son Thomas) were also instructed to present him, since he lived on their lands. He presumably lived at Shielstockbraes, in Morebattle Parish. He may have been succeeded by James. Andrew (d.c.1573) son of Andrew of Cessford and brother of Sir Walter of Cessford. In 1538 he was among a group of local Laids accused of assisting 'George

Ruthirfurde, called Cokburne' and 'called Jock of ye Green' Rutherford. In 1547/8 he was among the Kers who burned lands in Ale Water that belonged to Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme. In 1551 he was 'broder to Cesfurde' when he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. In 1553/4 he was one of the Ker pledges to keep good rule against both Scotland and England. Andrew of Linton (16th/17th C.) probably son of James and grandson of George. He is recorded in 1581 when his procurator warned Thomas Ker of Maisondieu (and his wife Isobel) to appear at Lindean Kirk to receive redemption money. He was involved in the slaughter of Robert Pringle, tutor of Blindlee, in about 1586. In 1590 Thomas of Cavers Carre was his surety not to harm Thomas of Mersington. In 1590/1 he was cautioner for William of Cessford not to reset Sir Robert (younger of Cessford), who was 'at the horn' for the murder of William of Ancrum. He is probably the Ker of Linton listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden and who also subscribed to a bond of allegiance to the King against Bothwell, Home and others. In 1599 he and his son William gave a charter of lands in Duddingston to John, Burgess of Edinburgh. He was a juror on a retour in 1600. Probably the same Andrew signed the bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace in 1602. In 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who 'had been put to the horn' for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen's Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He married Katherine, sister of Sir Andrew of Greenhead and their children included: William, his heir in 1599; and George, who is probably the George who succeeded to Linton. Sir Andrew of Faldonside (d.1599) son of George of Faldonside and nephew of Sir Andrew of Cessford. His estate was on the Tweed, south-west of Galashiels. His curators were Andrew of Hirsell and Alexander, 5th Lord Home. He complained against Robert Kerr of Woodhead in 1564, resulting in Robert being warded in Edinburgh Tolbooth. He and his children were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his son and heir George was to marry Janet, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, but the Kers did not fulfil this part. He was said to have held a pistol at the side of Mary, Queen of Scots in 1566, when she was forced to watch the murder of David Rizzio. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thorlieshope with the

Regent Moray. He served as surety in 1569 for Lencie Armstrong of Whithaugh, as well as Hob Elliot ('callit Sweit Mylk alias Greit Leggis'), and was also surety in 1571 and 1572 and then in 1573 for some Elliots. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1572/3 he was surety for James Langlands of that Ilk and for William Douglas of Cavers; they were swearing that they would not help the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Pringles in their feud with the Elliots. He is listed in Monipennie's c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. In 1580 he was recorded as superior of the lands in Darnick for which John Scott was hereditary feuar. In 1581 the same John Scott owed him for 'unpaid fermes'. He acted as Deputy Keeper of Liddesdale in the early 1580s. His brother John was listed among Border criminals in 1586/7. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. In 1590/1 he was cautioner for William of Cessford not to reset Sir Robert (younger of Cessford), who was 'at the horn' for the murder of William of Ancrum. He is listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden. Robertson, Lord Seton was his surety in 1592. In 1594 his eldest son George and another son Walter had bonds for not harming Thomas Falside of that Ilk and Patrick Livingstone of Saltcoats. In 1595 he was surety for Lancelot of Gateshaw not to harm Elizabeth Cranston, widow of Lancelot of Little Newton. In 1596/7 he was a Border Commissioner for dealing with the English. In 1598 he and his son and heir George were involved in a bond. He firstly married Elizabeth Johnstone of Elphinstone and in 1573 secondly married Margaret Stewart, who was the widow of reformer John Knox and sister of the Regent, the Earl of Arran. He had 4 sons and 3 daughters, including: George, who succeeded; John, whose daughter Mary married William Elliot, Parson of Bedrule; and Margaret, who married Andrew Ker of Yair. In 1632 Robert, son of Andrew of Faldonside (either him or a later generation) succeeded to lands in Feu-Rule. In 1599 his widow Margaret Stewart and son George had a bond for Robert Falside of that Ilk not to harm them. Sir Andrew 'Dand' of the Hirsell and Littledean (d.1573) son of Mark of Dolphinston and Littledean, and descended from the Kers of Cessford. He is probably the Andrew of Littledean who in 1539 witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam Scott. He is probably also the 'Dande Carr of Litleden' who in 1541 was accused along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch of being responsible for the death of an Englishman. He was said to have been granted the lands of Hirsell (in Berwickshire) in 1542 after being the first man to report to the King about the Scottish victory at Hadden Rigg. Also in 1542 he made a raid into England, taking prisoner the Constable of Etal and others. In 1547 he and his son Walter of Dolphinston were listed in the summons for those accused of murdering Darnley. He was Provost of Edinburgh 1548-50 and was knighted in 1552. He is probably the 'Dand Ker' who signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh' in 1551. He is 'Andro Ker of Hirsell' in 1552 when indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; his son Walter was also listed. In 1553/4 he was listed among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kers. He may be the same as Sir Andrew of Littledean who was to satisfy George Rutherford in 1560 as part of resolving the feud created by the murder of George's father, George Rutherford of Longnewton; he was also to ask forgiveness from Sir William Cranston 'for being vpon the grovnd quhair Sir Walter Scot of Bukclewch Knycht was slaine', this being Cranston's uncle. He was among those required by the Queen in 1561 to appear in Jedburgh to answer for their failure to apprehend fugitives. In 1562 he was among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. He is mentioned as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He signed the 'Band of Teviotdale' in 1565, but helped by the notary. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thorlieshope with the Regent Moray. In 1568/9 he was one of the main Kers to sign a contract with Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme relating to the slaying of Sir Walter's father in Edinburgh. They had to appear at the church of Melrose 'to make homage for the said slaughter' and his grandson John Kerr was to marry Elizabeth Murray, sister of Sir Walter (and if not, then another son was to marry another relative of Scott of Buccleuch); however, this does not appear to have happened. He may also be the 'Andro Ker of Litilden' who signed the bond for suppressing Border thieves in 1569. Also in 1569 he was surety for Sir William Ainslie and was 'Sir Andro Ker of Hirsell Knycht' when a bond was made with John Edmondson of that Ilk. He is probably the 'Andro Ker of Litildene knycht' who signed a bond to act against Borders thieves in 1571/2. He firstly married Margaret Cranston and secondly Euphame Wauchope of Niddrie Marshall, widow of John Edmondson of that Ilk. His children included; Walter of Littledean; and an illegitimate son James, who in 1604 held the teinds of Rutherford, Maxton and Littledean. His will from 1573 is recorded in Edinburgh. Sir Andrew of Caverton (d.bef. 1564) son of Sir Walter of Cessford. He was the heir to the Cessford titles and estates, but died before his father, and his brother William succeeded. He was one of the men named in 1552 for their involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme. In 1562 he and his father (on behalf of their whole band) promised not to enter Ancrum. Also in 1562 he was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Additionally he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1562. He may be the 'Andro Ker of Hietoune' (i.e. Heiton) who is mentioned as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. In 1556 he was contracted to marry Elizabeth, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, but the marriage does not appear to have happened. He had 2 daughters (perhaps illegitimately), Grisel and Bessie, to whom his mother, Dame Isobel, served as 'tutrix' after his death. Andrew of Graden (16th C.) perhaps son of the earlier Andrew of Graden. He was named in 1590 along with 'Gib Elliott son to Robin', 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall in the previous year. He is recorded as 'Andrew Karr alias the tutor of Gradoun reset by Robine Elliot' (suggesting he was already declared a fugitive). It is unclear how he was related to other Kers of Graden. He is probably the 'Andrew Carr Robin Elliot's man' recorded in a separate case in 1590 when a group of Elliots and others were accused of stealing from the 'Hewrde' family, as well as maiming and taking prisoner Christopher 'of the Whithall'. Andrew of Newhall (16th/17th C.) probably son of Robert. His tutor was James Ormiston of that Ilk. He is recorded in 1591/2 when Sir Robert, younger of Cessford, was cautioner for a complaint against him by tenants in Langnewton. This seems to have been part of a long-running feud. In 1592 he was released from Blackness

Castle, with Sir Robert promising to presented him to the court if requested; his brothers Robert and James are also mentioned being exiled. In 1595 Sir Robert was declared a rebel for failing to present him and the Earl of Morton continued to complain that there was no promise made to stop harassing his tenants in Longnewton. Andrew of Yair (16th/17th C.) son of William. He was succeeded by William and had other sons Andrew, Robert and Thomas. He was recorded in a transaction in Selkirk in 1582, involving James in Yair and others. Also in 1582 he warned James to accept redemption money from him for annual rents. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591/2 his cautioner was George Pringle of Blindlee that he would keep the peace. In 1602 there was a letter against him and his sons William (his heir), Andrew, Robert and Thomas telling him not to encroach on Selkirk Common. Also in 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1607 he was 'bailie in that part' when he gave sasine for Broadmeadows. He was involved in a dispute over lands with the Burgh of Selkirk according to documents of the period 1611–15. The 1611 'Letter of Lawburrows' from James orders him and his 'men of Yair' (many of whom are listed) to stop molesting the inhabitants of Selkirk; his sons Robert, Mark and John are also named. In 1612 another letter with the King's seal suggests that Selkirk should refrain from riding the marches and he should refrain from pasturing animals on Selkirk Common. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He married Margaret Ker of Faldonside and had at least 4 sons and 6 daughters. Sir Andrew of Greenhead and Primside (d.bef. 1617) possibly son of Gilbert and grandson of the earlier Andrew of Greenhead and Primside. He was 'Dand' in 1576 when he and his father Gilbert of Primsideloch signed a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He is recorded in 1586 when he was surety for John Rutherford of Hunthill and vice versa, the penalty being the large sum of £10,000; he was also surety for William Kerr of Ancrum and he was later denounced as a rebel for not appearing. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council; his brother Walter of Lochtour was also listed. He is probably the Laird of Greenhead listed among Borderers who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1593 John of 'Lumphoy' was cautioner for him not to reset associates of the Earl of Bothwell. He was denounced in 1597, along with Walter Scott of Todrig and Robert Scott of Bowhill, for not restoring teind sheaves to Mr. James Durham. He was juror on a retour in 1600. He was knighted in 1602 and served as Deputy Warden of the Middle March 1597–1602. In 1602 he was appointed 'warden and justice of the Middle March' during the absence of Robert, Lord of Roxburghe. Also in 1602 he was surety for Archibald, Bailie to Lord Roxburghe, and his son George, to answer for a murder. He married Alison, daughter of Gilbert Wauchope of Niddrie Marshall and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Gilbert of Lochtour may have been his 2nd son and William of Greenhead may have been an illegitimate son who was naturalised in 1622. His daughter Alison married Ralph Ker of Dalcove. He was said to have had 7 sons, known as the 'seven lads of Greenhead'. Andrew (16th/17th C.) brother of the 'goodman of Quhytemure' in 1618 when he was among men of the Selkirk area accused of illegally carrying guns. His brother was presumably tenant in Whitmuir. Andrew (16th/17th C.) served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the period 1625–27. It is unclear whether he is one of the other contemporary Andrews. Andrew of Graden (17th C.) after the Battle of Philiphaugh in 1645 he spent 7 Sundays in sackcloth at his parish church as punishment for supporting the wrong side. In 1648 he in the army of the Engagement under Hamilton, with his sons Henry and Andrew. His sons included: Henry; and Andrew. Andrew of Linton (d.bef. 1688) son of Andrew of Linton, as recorded in a receipt of 1625. As a Kirk Elder, he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce the National Covenant in 1638. He was recorded in the Roxburghshire Valuation Roll for 1643; his valuation was £2043 6s 8d, and that of Lady Linton £1620. He was recorded as grantee in a deed of 1663 and as granter in another of 1673. He was probably succeeded by Henry (likely his son) who was recorded in the valuation of 1678. He married Elizabeth Home, recorded in a deed of 1673, who was a widow in her testament of 1688. Their children included: Henry, who succeeded; Jean, who married Sir James Cockburn of Ryslaw; William, 'son of the Laird of Lintoune', recorded in a deed of 1663; and George. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Oakwood. Along with Robert Nelson in the same place and Robert Harvey in Broadmeadows, he was fined for non-conformity and forced to flee. This was probably around the 1670s. Sir Andrew of Cavers (1630–76) eldest son of Sir Thomas. He was ‘fiar thairof’ listed after his father in 1648 among the local men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He was probably the Andrew, son of Sir Thomas, who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1649 and probably the Andrew ‘fear of Caveris’ who witnessed a contract relating to Appotside in 1654. He succeeded to the lands of Bedrule, as well as others, having a deed under the Great Seal in 1649. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace in 1663. He was still ‘fiar of Cavers’ in a deed of 1663. His lands were confirmed by Parliament in 1672 and included the Barony of Bedrule, as well as Ruecastle, Menslaws and others. He allowed Thomas Turnbull, chief of the Bedrule Turnbells to stay at Bedrule Mill and part of the Mains until he found another home. However, he himself died without a male heir and the lands and titles reverted back to his father in 1678, before he was succeeded by his cousin John of West Nisbet. In 1652 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie, and she died in 1661. The marriage contract gave his wife ‘ane annual rent of 3000 merks furthe of the barony of Bedroull, tennandrie of Caverse, Milrig, and Peilquarters, Belches, Woodenis, and Pendicle Hill’. They had 4 daughters: Agnes, who married her cousin John Ker of West Nisbet; Anna, who married Mr. Murray of Deuchar; Margaret, who married Matthew Sinclair of Hermandston; and Jean, who married Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. In 1689 his daughters were served as heirs to him, his father Thomas and his son Thomas. Andrew of Wells (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He was brother of Lord John of Locktour and owned lands in Rulewater, including Wells. He witnessed a baptism for Henry of Linton in 1671. He paid the land tax in 1678 for Huntknow in Bedrule Parish, valued at £66 13s 4d, as well as land valued at and £409 in Hobkirk Parish; he may also be ‘The walls’ who paid tax on £214 10s in Cavers Parish in the same year. In 1698 his lands were inherited by his daughter Joan and her husband John Murray of Ashiestiel and later owned by Thomas Rutherford of Wells. Sir Andrew of Greenhead (d.1665) served heir to his father Sir Andrew of Greenhead in 1617, he was created a Baronet in 1637. In 1612, when ‘younger of Greneheid’, he and his brother Thomas, were among a group of 60 or so men accused of aggressively coming to the lands of Hartwoodmyres. His lands in Selkirk are mentioned in 1629. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the ‘Confessions of Faith’. He defended Smailholm Tower against a band of English musketeers in 1640. In 1641 he was a Commissioner for maintaining peace on the Border and was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He owned land in Bowden, Kelso, Selkirk, Sprouston and Yetholm Parishes in 1643. In 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He was also an M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1645 and 1648/9. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1649 he was on the Commission for the plantation of kirks. He supported the Covenant and was imprisoned in Edinburgh and fined in 1662 after the Restoration. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1658 he was one of 2 commissioners sent by 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire to oppose payment requested from the county. Also in 1658 he was recorded in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk over rent. In 1660 he was imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle with Pringle of Greenknowe, presumably for their religious views and he was heavily fined. In 1661 he sold the lands of Thirlestane, as well as Heiton Mains and Mill to James, brother of Sir William Scott of Harden. He owned a large amount of land in Kelso Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1634 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden and in 1664 he married Katherine, widow of David Carnegie of Craig, daughter of John, 1st Earl of Wemyss; in 1684 she was fined £16,000 for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism. His children included: Sir Andrew, who succeeded; Sir William, who succeeded his brother; and Gilbert, recorded in a deed of 1673. Sir Andrew of Greenhead (d.bef. 1676) son of Sir Andrew of Greenhead. He was Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1658/9 and 1669–74. In about 1675 he took part in the funeral procession of Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburghe. He appears to have had a marriage contract with Mary, Countess of Buccleuch (while she was only about 12), but this did not go ahead. He married Jean, daughter of Sir Alexander Don, 1st Baronet of Newton, and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1669); Andrew (b.1673); Jean (b.1673); and Jean (again, b.1674). However, he died without a surviving heir and was succeeded by his brother Sir William. The witnesses in 1673 birth were William and Gilbert, probably his brothers. After his death his widow married Sir Roger Hogg of Harcarse. Andrew of Littledean (17th C.) son of John of Littledean. He married a daughter of Sir James Dundas of Arniston, Governor of Berwick. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded; John of Blackburn in Berwickshire; and Mark of Blackburn. Andrew (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Henry of Linton. His father sold off most of the family estates in 1699. However, he may have been left a small part of the old family lands by his father. He is probably who was meant by 'Lintons interest younger' in the Hearth Tax rolls of the 1690s, with 12 houses listed below that. He was a grenadier and married Mary Culpeper. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Ruecastle in 1701. Andrew of Littledean (17th/18th C.) son of Andrew. In 1666 he married Isabel, daughter of John Rutherford of Edgerston. Around 1673 he registered arms. He was a Commissioner of Supply in 1704. He was succeeded by his son Walter. Andrew of Roughleeneuk (d.bef. 1731) recorded as deceased in 1731 when his son Robert signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. Andrew (18th C.) married Jane Clapperton in Hawick in 1771. Their children included Andrew (b.1773). Andrew (b.c.1775) joiner in Minto. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was recorded in a directory of 1852. His wife was 'Effy' according to the 1841 census. He was probably the Andrew who married Elspeth Turnbull and had children Thomas (b.1810), Mary (b.1810) and Euphy (b.1814). Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Chaise driver' in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'. Andrew (18th/19th C.) wright at Bonchester Bridgend according to the ballots for the Militia in Hobkirk Parish in 1799 and 1801. Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Laidlaw in Wilton in 1804. Their children included Margaret (b.1805), Jeany (b.1807) and Andrew (b.1811). Ann (b.1801/2) from Jedburgh, she was wife of grocer Gideon. She ran the grocer's shop on the Fore Row after her husband's death. She is listed in the 1851 census as 'mistress employing one woman' (her niece Margaret Story) and in Slater's 1852 directory as a grocer and spirit dealer on 'Front Row'. Archibald of Graden (17th/18th C.) perhaps son of Henry. He married Helenor, daughter of Sir James St. Clair of Roslin. His children include: Henry (b.1698). Catherine (16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford. She married Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, who died in about 1562. In 1564 she complained to the Privy Council that officers of the Queen had removed her teind sheaves from Over Crailing. She produced a document from Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh, granting her these teinds for 5 years. She also argued with her son Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst over her rights to these teinds. She is referred to as 'Dame Kathrene Ker, Lady Pharnyhirst' and signed 'with my hand at the pen'. In 1566 her son Sir Thomas was ordered not to molest her or her other children and servants. George of Samuelston (15th C.) possibly son of Andrew of Cessford. In 1451 William, Earl of Douglas granted him a charter of Huttonhall, along with his 3 natural sons. He received a pension in 1477 for serving as Keeper of Berwick Castle. He firstly married Elizabeth Carmichael and secondly married Marion Sinclair, widow of George Home of Wedderburn. His children were: George, who married Mariota St. Clair and died without issue; and Nichola, who became his heiress and married Alexander, Lord Home. George (15th/16th C.) Rector of Auld Roxburgh. He was let the farm of Fairnilee in 1501, his name appearing as 'Master George'. James, son of his late brother, was also joint tenant of Fairnilee. He is probably the 'Maistir George Ker' who was among the men to whom to whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Buccleuch, had to give in his accounts in 1506/7 (the others including Ralph of Primside Loch). He could be the 'Master George' who was listed (along with Lawrence and his brother George) being indicted for oppressing the tenants of Handalee. He is probably the Rector of Morebattle and Prebendary of Glasgow who appointed Thomas Ker as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1514, and is recorded in many documents in the 1510s and 20s, preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. In 1523 he married Isabel, daughter of Lancelot Ker and his testament is recorded that same year. George of Linton (15th/16th C.) son of James of

Linton. In 1509 he was son of the deceased James when he had sasine for lands in Linton. In 1514 he was son of the deceased James of Linton when he appointed Master Thomas, Canon of Glasgow (and perhaps a relative) as his procurator. In 1517 he had a deed with Robert of Sunderlandhall. His brother german Robert is recorded in 1524. Either the same or a later George of Linton is recorded several times in the Protocol Books of Selkirk in 1535–40; his son and heir James is also mentioned. He appears to be separate from the George who was Canon of Glasgow, Vicar of Morebattle and Rector of Auld Roxburgh. In 1525 he was recorded as tutor to the children of his deceased uncle, John Liddell (and John's wife Margaret Whitehead). In 1529/30 a group of Elliots and Armstrongs pledged to bring Robert Elliot 'alias Flaskvod' into ward in Fairnilee to answer for raids and other crimes perpetrated against him. The witnesses to the pledge included Martin in Littledean, George in Falside and Andrew in Greenhead. In 1530/1 he was witness to Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. In 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In 1531 he witnessed a document for Thomas in Yair and another for David Pringle of Smailholm in 1532. In 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. He may be the same as George of Linton who was accused (along with Walter of Cessford and Mark of Littledean) by Sir Walter Scott of raiding his lands at Newark and in the Borthwick valley, and also of burning Cunzierton and killing two Halls in 1537. George of Linton's son and heir James was granted lands in Primside by Walter of Cessford in 1537. In 1538/9 he infefted his brother Robert in the lands of Easter Blakelaw. In 1539 George, son of Robert in Crooked Shaw (perhaps his brother) served as his bailie. In 1539/40 he witnessed a transaction for the Kers of Primside and Shaws. In 1540 he witnessed William Brydon resigning the Vicarage of Auld Roxburgh in favour of Thomas, with witnesses including Gilbert of Primside, Thomas in Sunderlandhall and Andrew in Auld Roxburgh. In 1541 he was tenant of Fairnilee in Ettrick. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Borthwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. He is probably the Laird of Linton who was among those locals giving their pledges to England in 1544. He was witness to a bond of assurance in 1545. In 1546 he gave to his son and heir James some lands in Linton. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. He was one of the men indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme in 1552. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was also listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He and 'his bairnis, his oyis and bruder bairnis' were listed in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He may be the George of Linton listed in 1575/6 and 1578/9 regarding the 'mails' on Fairnilee (but if this was the same George, he must have lived to be very old). His son Robert witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1580 and Andrew of Linton (probably his grandson) was also mentioned then. He was predeceased by his son James and probably succeeded by his grandson Andrew of Linton. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married James Pringle of Whytbank. He had additional sons, including David (d.1582), who was killed by one of the Kers of Littledean. George of Nether Howden and Cavers (d.c.1560) 2nd son of Ralph of Primside. He was a nephew of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst and cousin of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was the 1st Ker of Cavers Carre, being granted the lands by the Commendator of Melrose and Kelso Abbeys in 1550 (probably his near relatives). He married Margaret Shaw of Sauchie. He was probably succeeded by Thomas, then George, then Sir Thomas, although these generations are uncertain. It is also unclear how his surname should be spelled. He could be the 'Master George' who 1541 was offered (along with his brother William) by Sir Andrew (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. His brother John was recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1553. He may be the 'master George Ker in Cavers' recorded in a document for Sir Walter of Cessford in 1561. He is probably the George of Cavers who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. George of Gateshaw (d.bef. 1566) son of Lancelot. He succeeded to his father's lands in Selkirk in 1544 and then sold them. In 1544 he was 'of Gaitschaw now living in Fastheucht'. Also in 1544 he was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English. In 1545 he witnessed a sasine giving part of the lands of James Riddell (younger son of John of that Ilk) to his wife Janet Ker (who may have been related). He was one of the Kers who was involved in the burning of lands in Ale Water belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1547/8. He was 'George Ker of Gaitschaw' when he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh' in 1551. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft (listed separately from George of Linton, showing that they were different men). In 1564 his brother Richard was one of the Kers who signed a bond with the Scotts, pledging not to attack each other. He was part of a contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1569. He married Janet Edmondson and was probably succeeded by Richard, his brother. George of Faldonside (d.1553) son of Sir Robert of Caverton. He is recorded as advisor to Sir Walter of Cessford, his nephew. He was already deceased in 1563 when his son John leased his lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Haliburton, co-heiress of Dirleton. His children included: Sir Andrew, who succeeded; Margaret, who married Robert Haig of Bemersyde; Richard; John, recorded in 1586/7 as brother of Andrew; and Isabel. George (16th C.) recorded as 'sometime tutor of Gradane' in 1580/1 when he sold some land near Melrose. George (16th C.) servant to the Warden, Sir Walter of Cessford. In 1581/2 he responded when Walter Scott came to Hermitage, on the track of a band that had raided Harwood on Teviot. Along with another servant and tracking dog, they followed the trail, but found too large a group of Elliots, who would not let them search for the stolen goods. George of Linton (16th/17th C.) probably son of Andrew of Linton and brother of William (who may have died before their father). He may be the George of Linton village who was recorded as a main actor in a performance of the folkloric 'Robin Hood' in 1610. He may be the George in Linton who in 1615 was sought for the murder of Robert, son of Thomas of Priorhall. His children included: William, who probably succeeded; and Jean, who married James Pringle of Galashiels. He may also be the Laird of Linton whose son James was a candidate for Professor of Philosophy in Edinburgh in 1611. George of Faldonside (d.1612) son of Andrew. He is recorded along with his father in 1598 in a bond not to harm certain neighbours. In the same year he was cautioner for his brothers William, John and James, he was also surety for Robert Haig of Bemersyde not to harm Ralph of Shaw and his brother Walter had a bond not to harm the Halliburtons, while the Halliburtons had a bond not to harm him or his

4 brothers. In 1599 there were assurances for him and his brother Walter not to harm James Stalker, writer in Edinburgh, and vice versa. He may have been father of Sir Walter, last of Faldonside. George of Cavers (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Cavers. He was recorded as son and heir of Thomas when he was signatory to a caution for the good behaviour of James Scott of Whithope in 1592. He signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds as 'appeirand of Caveris' in 1602. He is probably the 'son and apparent heir' recorded in 1603 as surety in relief for Thomas of Cavers. He is recorded as 'apparent of Cavers' in 1618 when he became cautioner for William and Walter Middlemas, not to harm George Turnbull of Belses or his family or servants. Also in 1618 he was cautioner for his brother Robert not to harm John Ker of Langnewton. He was 'fiar of Cavers' in 1622 when he served as caution at the Justice Court and was 'of Cavers' when he served in the same capacity in 1623. In 1622 he was still heir apparent when appointed to assist Sir Andrew of Oxnam in keeping peace on the Border. He may not have lived long enough to succeed formally. In any case, his son Sir Thomas was served heir to his grandfather Thomas. Other sons included: John, who acquired West Nisbet; and Robert, who acquired Middlemas Walls. His son John may be the 'brother to Caivers' who in 1628/9 was part of the funeral procession for Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh. Gideon (b.c.1776/7–1843) from England, he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Fore Row, listed there in 1837 and 1841. His mother was Eleanor (1736–1819). He was recorded on the Fore Row there in 1841, along with wife Ann and 3 children. His first wife was Elizabeth (1767–1826). He secondly married Ann Storey, who died in 1875, aged 74. Their children were: Agnes (1833/4–51); John (1834/5–65), an engineer in the Navy; Robert ('Bob', 1838/9–64), who worked at the Auction Mart; and Helen C. (or 'Nelly', b.c.1842), who married chemist David Kennedy. His wife ran the shop after his death, selling the property in 1862. Early photographs exists of his wife and 3 children separately. He is buried in Hawick. It is possible he was the hosier named Gideon who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded in 1537 when he had sasine for the 20 merk land of 'South Synton' (i.e. Synton). This was done in Edinburgh, with witnesses at Synton including Thomas in Sunderlandhall and William, Rector of Auld Roxburgh. It is unclear if he is the same as Gilbery of Primside. Gilbert of Primside Loch and Greenhead (16th C.) son of Andrew of Greenhead and Primside, and grandson of Ralph. He was already 'in Grenheid' in 1536/7. 'Gilbert Ker, young Laird of Greneheid' was also among the men accused in 1537 of burning Cunzierton and killing 2 men called Hall. He was involved in land transactions in Selkirk in 1538; in one he was clearly recorded as son of Andrew and Marion Pringle when charged to pay the future 'fermes' on 'Mabylynflat' to John Turnbull of Hassendean. In 1539 he witnessed a document for William, Rector of Auld Roxburgh, along with James in Greenhead. It is possible he is the same Gilbert who was 'alderman for the time' for the town of Selkirk in 1539. In 1539/40, along with his mother Marion Pringle, he received the non-entry of lands in Town Yetholm from Janet Newton and her husband Adam Ker. In 1540 he witnessed William Brydon resigning the Vicarage of Auld Roxburgh in favour of Thomas, with witnesses including George of Linton, Thomas in Sunderlandhall and Andrew in Auld Roxburgh. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Borthwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. He was probably the Gilbert of Greenhead who was among the Kerrs accused of supporting the English at Pinkie in 1547/8, and the 'lard of Grenehed' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1551 he sold the lands of Bailielee (in Selkirkshire) and Caveling (in Cavers Parish) to Gavin Elliot (later of Horsleyhill). Also in 1551 he was 'of Greneheid' when he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. In 1553/4 he was listed (as 'of Greneheid') among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kers. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. In 1560 he was the first person named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was recorded in 1563 as 'of Primsydelock' when he purchased the Mains of Spittal-on-Rule from William Douglas of Cavers. The witnesses include William, Commendator of Melrose and Mark, 2nd son of Robert, Burgess of Edinburgh (who were surely relatives). Also in 1563 he had a letter of reversion for the lands of Yetholm, 'wadset' to him, his wife Elizabeth 'Admanstoun' and their 3rd son Walter, by James, Earl Bothwell. He was one of the Kerrs who is listed as an exception in the bond to end the feud with the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1564/5. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thorlieshope with the Regent Moray. In 1569 he was one of the men to sign the bond to suppress thieves in the Border. Also in 1569, Sir Walter of Cessford was surety for him. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. He was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme as surety for a bond of the late William Douglas of Cavers; other sureties were his son and heir Andrew, as well as the deceased William Ker of Yair. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding 'mails' for Braidmeadows and Middlestead. In 1576 he and his son 'Dand' had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. His son Robert was recorded in 1581, promising to pay the minister of Selkirk. He received money for lands in Selkirk in 1581/2. In 1582/3 there was caution for him not attacking the tenants of James, Commendator of Melrose and others, with James Veitch of North Synton and John, younger of Littledean as his cautioners. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4, along with his son Andrew. He is probably the Gilbert of Greenhead listed as a servitor of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch when he witnessed a document in Edinburgh in 1591. He may be the 'George Karr of Prumsyde myll' who was accused in 1590 of resetting riever Peter Oliver. He married Elizabeth Edmondson of that ilk and his children included: Sir Andrew, who succeeded; and Katherine, who married Andrew Ker of Linton. Other children may have included: Ralph of Broadmeadows; James of Middlemass Walls; Walter of Town Yetholm; and John of Raperlaw. A younger son of his was said to be Lancelot of Gateshaw and Crookedshaws (but this is disputed). Gilbert of Lochtour (d.c.1635) possibly 2nd son of Andrew Ker of Primsideloch and Greenhead. He presumably received Lochtour (part of the estate of Primsideloch) from his father. He was listed as juror on a retour in 1600. He was appointed as one of the 2 executors to Gavin Eliott of Stobs, who died 1606/7. He married Gavin's daughter Esther; his wife was one of the 3 heirs portioners to Stobs in 1607 and sold the lands to Gilbert Eliott ('Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters'), her half-brother. He sold Bailielee to the same Gilbert Eliott in 1609 and in 1628 he sold him 'Moiddlesteid and Blackmidding' in

Ettrick Forest, with the permission of his wife Esther Elliot and his son and heir John. In 1611 he and his son Robert had a charter of Town Yetholm. In 1612 Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres complained that he and other Kers (including his brothers William and John) and others had 'rave up and tillt over agane' the fields and attacked the house at Hartwoodmyres; however, he was acquitted for lack of evidence. In 1622 he had a bond of caution with Robert Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was in a legal dispute with the Minister of Yetholm over teinds in 1623. Also in 1623 he was a curator for his grand-nephew James Kerr of Chatto. His children included: Robert, younger of Lochtour (d.1624); John, who succeeded; William, called 'Mr.' in 1616, suggesting he may have trained for the ministry; and Mark, recorded in 1616. Gilbert of Lochtour (d.1666) son of Sir John of Lochtour. He was heavily in debt when he succeeded. In 1651 he made an agreement to sell his estate to Sir John Wauchope (his mother's 2nd husband), this being finalised in 1661. He married Jean, sister of Inglis of Elvieston and had children John and Rachel. Gilbert (17th C.) son of Sir Andrew of Greenhead and brother of Sir William. In Edinburgh in 1684 he married Sophia, daughter of Henry Ker of Linton. Henry (d.bef. 1399) son of John. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh from at least 1349. In about 1358 he witnessed a grant of the lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch to Melrose Abbey, by William, Earl of Douglas. His accounts as 'vicecomitis de Roxburgh' are recorded in 1359. He was collector of the contributions from the Sherifdom of Roxburgh in the Exchequer Rolls from 1360. He is probably the 'Henrico Kerre' who witnessed the confirmation of the grant of the advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey by William, Earl of Douglas, in about 1360. He had a document for safe passage into England in 1363, which was revoked by Edward III in 1363/4. His wife was Elizabeth St. Michael; after his death she resigned her lands of Whitchester (in Hawick Parish) to be granted to her second husband, Sir John Maxwell of Pollock. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert of Altonburn. Henry 'Harry' (d.1642/3) only surviving son of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburghe. He is probably the 'Henrie, Lord Ker' named in 1642 to a commission to try a large number of Borders fugitives. Since he died before his father and had no sons, the succession went to his sister's husband, William Drummond. He married Margaret, daughter of William Hay, 10th Earl of Erroll. His daughter Margaret married

Sir James Innes and his great-great grandson, Sir James Innes-Ker would later become 5th Duke of Roxburghe. Another daughter, Anna, married John, Lord Fleming. Col. Henry of Graden (17th C.) son of Andrew. He was 'Captain Harrie' in 1648, when he fought alongside his father and brother 'Coronet Andrew'. He was a J.P. in Roxburghshire and persecuted Covenanters in the 'Killing Times', assisting Adam Urquhart, Laird of Meldrum. He is probably the man recorded as 'Harrie, fiar of Graden' in 2 deeds of 1663. He captured the Covenanters Archibald Riddell and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe near Selkirk in 1680. In 1688 part of his estate was claimed by Pringle of Crichton through wadset. He resettled the family across the valley at Wester Hoselaw, which was renamed Place-Graden or New Graden (and which the family had owned since 1528). He married Lillas, daughter of John Rutherford of Hunthill and sister of Robert, Lord Rutherford. His children included: Archibald. Henry of Linton (17th C.) probably son of Andrew. In 1674 he sold parts of Linton (including the Park) to Robert Pringle of Clifton; he sold much of the rest of Linton to Andrew Pringle of Clifton in 1699 (although bequeathing a small part to his children). In about 1675 he carried the 'great Mourning banner' at the funeral of Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburghe. In 1678 he paid £1132 6s 8d on land tax in Linton Parish and is in the Roxburghshire Valuation records with the value £1431 6s 8d (which is considerably less than the value in 1643). His wife 'The Ladie Lintoun' was taxed for the teinds of Hadden in Sprouston Parish in 1678. He is probably the 'Lintone Elder' who paid the hearth tax on 'his hous & offices houses & tuo kilnes', for 8 hearths in all in the 1690s. He married Margaret, daughter and heiress of David Home of Harcarse. Their children included: Andrew, who succeeded and married Mary Culpeper; Christian, who married John Kerr of Frogden; Elizabeth, who married James Scott of Bowhill; Henry; James; Janet; Julian, who married Francis Armstrong of Whithaugh; Mary, who married Robert Scott, tenant in Park in Liddesdale; Sophia, who married Gilbert, brother to Sir William of Greenhead; and William (b.1671). The 1671 baptismal witnesses were William, Earl of Roxburghe, Andrew of Wells and Robert Pringle of Clifton. Henry of Graden (1698–1751) son of Archibald. He lost his father when he was young, was raised as a Catholic and was sent into the Spanish Service. In 1728 he moved to the Irish Regiment. He was part of the court proceedings for the succession of the Rutherfords in 1738 as 'grand-nephew and heir of line to the last Lord Rutherford'. He took up arms again in 1745 as one of the few Border Lairds who joined the Jacobite army. He acted as Aide-de-Camp to Prince Charlie. In Staffordshire he captured the spy Captain Weir. He was captured and spent 2 years in prison in London; although sentenced to death, he was eventually pardoned and spent his last years soldiering in Spain again. Isabella (16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, she married Sir William of Cessford. She was granted certain lands in her own right. She may be the 'DEM ISBEL KER' recorded in an inscribed door lintel at Holydean. In 1563 she complained that Thomas and John Young were occupying her quarter of Hassendeanbank without paying 'mail ferme'. Her children included Sir Andrew (who succeeded to Cessford), William (who succeeded his brother), Thomas, Agnes, Isobel (who married John Rutherford of Hunthill) and Margaret (who married Alexander, 5th Lord Home). She also served as 'tutrix' for her grandchildren Grisel and Bessie. Isabella (d.1650) daughter of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburghe and brother of William, Master of Roxburghe. She married James Scrymgeour, 2nd Viscount of Dudhope. In 1634 she was served heir to one third of her brother William's lands, including part of Alton near Hawick. Her sister Maria was served heir to a third part of the lands at the same time. James (15th C.) witness, along with several other local men, to the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1427; no designation is given, so it is unclear what family branch he belonged to, but he could have been related to Andrew, who was on the same panel. Probably the same James was on the 'retour' panel for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. He may be the same 'Jacobum Ker' who was on the 'retour' for the next Douglas of Drumlanrig to inherit the Barony of Hawick in 1450. James (15th C.) son of Andrew and brother of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. He had a charter of Primside in 1444 and a charter for Bonnington in Linlithgow county in 1452. In 1456 he and his brother Andrew were involved with collecting rents on the King's lands in Ettrick Forest. He could be the James who gave consent to his son's entry for a debt to the Ranger of Ettrick Ward in 1471. It is possible he is the same man as James of Linton. James of Gateshaw (15th C.) perhaps son of Thomas. In 1471/2 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Margaret and John

Home of Ersiltoun, Whitrig and Crailing. He may have been succeeded by Andrew. James of Linton (d.bef. 1509) 2nd son of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. His father was probably the Andrew of Altonburn who died before 1450, but it is possible he was son of the next Andrew (who died in about 1480). He was probably the first Ker of Linton, although it is unclear exactly when he gained the lands and from whom (although the lands were held by Thomas, Lord Somerville in 1426). In 1452 he appears to be recorded being brother of Andrew of Altonburn when the King granted him lands in Bonnington. He served as surety for some Border thieves in 1502, including the sons of William Elliot, known as 'Hob the King' and 'Dand the Man'. He was also surety in 1502 for a man who had remission for a murder in Selkirk. He was succeeded by George, who is recorded as his son in 1509 and 1514. Robert of Crookedshaws may have been another son. His son George was tutor (in 1525) for George's uncle John Liddell; this suggests his wife was a Liddell. James (16th C.) recorded in Whitmuir in 1531 when he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. William in Whitmuirhall was also recorded in 1531 and may have been related. In 1541 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Patrick Murray of Falahill. In 1542 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Robert, Vicar of Lindean. He was probably an ancestor of the later James in Whitmuir. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Borthwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. He may have been succeeded by a later James of Whitmuir. James of Mersington (16th C.) probably son of Thomas. He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1534 when he proclaimed a letter of obligation to the Kers in Shaws. His procurator, Thomas McDouglas went to 'the tower of St Helyne Schaw', pounded on the door and 3 times repeated the promises (which are not specified). In 1541 he was involved in a dispute over lands with Alexander Pringle of 'Craglethe'. He is also listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme. Ironically the same James of Mersington was one of the cautioners for Sir Walter when he was in ward within Edinburgh Castle in 1540/1. He was a juror on retours in 1550 and 1551. He married Janet Wauchope and had at least 6 sons and 1 daughter. His son and heir Thomas is recorded in 1557 and 1561. James of Fairnilee (16th C.) recorded in 1534 when he was

witness to a letter of obligation between James of Mersington and the Kers in Shaws. In 1535 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Rutherfords and Homes. In 1540 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Linton and of Whitmuirhall and another for the Pringles of Whitton. James (16th C.) recorded in Greenhead in 1539 when he witnessed a document for William, Rector of Auld Roxburgh. He is probably related to the other Kers of Greenhead, e.g. Gilbert of Primside, who was also a witness. James (16th C.) presented to the Vicarage of Ashkirk in 1550. He may have been Vicar at Linton in 1569. James (16th C.) son and heir of George of Linton. He had a charter as heir apparent of his father in 1537. However, he appears to have predeceased his father and his son Andrew succeeded to the Lairdship. James of Whitmuir (16th C.) perhaps son of the earlier James. He is recorded in the 1560 bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He signed 'at the pen led by the notar', meaning that he could not write himself. His lands appear to have been in Sprouston and not those near Selkirk. Perhaps the same James in 'Qihitmur' witnessed a transactions for other Kers in Selkirk in 1581 and 1582. He could be the 'Goodman of Quhitmuir' who in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. His son Ralph inherited the lands of Whitmuir in Sprouston Parish from him in 1603. James (16th C.) son of Thomas in Yair. He is recorded being in Yair in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for the Turnbulls of Philiphaugh. In 1581 he received redemption money for an annual rent from Thomas of Sunderlandhall. Also in 1581 he had sasine for Catslack and Mountbenger. In 1582 he had a dispute with a messenger acting for Andrew of Yair. Also in 1582 he is recorded as lawful son of the deceased Thomas in Yair and brother of Robert when warned by Andrew of Yair to accept redemption money on his lands. He could be the James of Sunderlandhall recorded in a decree under the seal of Queen Mary, regarding a dispute over lands of Yair with the Burgh of Selkirk. James (16th C.) mentioned as Keeper of Hermitage Castle (under the Earl of Bothwell) in 1583. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (16th C.) accused of leading a group to the lands of James Sinclair in Ewingston, where oxen were killed and 4 horses stolen. In 1586/7 Sinclair complained that the horses had been reset by John Scott of the Palace, servant to George Scott of Synton, with Scott of Synton declared as a rebel for not appearing in court. James of Lintalee (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Ralph. He is recorded in 1586 when Dand Moscrop was his surety to appear before the Privy Council and was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He was listed in about 1590 among the landed men of the Borders. He was among Kers and others, dependents of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who in 1601 besieged and burned a house in Jedburgh, and were declared as rebels; his son William is also listed. He was juror in Oxnam in 1602. He was recorded as part of inquest into lands in Rulewater in 1610. In 1616 he was removed from Lintalee by William Douglas, Earl of Angus, with John Douglas made tenant there instead. His sons George and William and William's son Thomas was recorded in the case heard by the Privy Council in 1617. Although he complained about unfair removal, it was found to be lawful. James of Bewlie (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622, along with his son Walter and his servants Andrew Turnbull, Thomas Leithead, John Wight and Robert Winthrope. There was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Rev. James of Grange (c.1601–1694) younger son of Sir John of Littledean and Margaret Whytlaw, Lady Innerwick. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1621 and was licensed to preach in 1623. He was presented to Abbotrule Parish in the middle of that year and ordained there in 1624. He was Laird of Grange in Abbotrule Parish, presumably being granted these lands by the Baron after becoming minister. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of land in Abbotrule Parish (presumably Grange) valued at £400. In 1646/7 he was one of the chaplains for Lord Lothian's regiment. There was a complaint about his behaviour (along with John Scott of Hawick), at the admission of Andrew Rutherford as minister of Eccles. He was deprived in 1662 when Episcopacy was re-established, and confined to his Parish (rather than be ousted, like the younger ministers). In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 he paid tax on £433 6s 6d for lands in Abbotrule Parish. He was also offered Hownam Parish in 1672, but it is unclear that he accepted it. In 1678 he and his daughter-in-law (presumably wife of James of Grange) paid the land tax on £433 6s 8d in Abbotrule Parish. He was found guilty of preaching to a 'field conventicle' in 1680 when he delivered a sermon to an overflowing congregation of about 500 people in his house at Grange. He was imprisoned for several weeks but released on caution. During the times of persecution when he was harassed by Adam Urquhart of Meldrum's soldiers and is supposed to have prophetically said 'Sir, I was a minister before you had a being, and will be one when you are gone'. His wife was also accused of witchcraft at a meeting of the Presbytery, but 'most unjustly' and the charge shown to be unfounded. Surviving till the Revolution, he was restored to Abbotrule in 1690, but may not actually have resumed his former position, probably due to infirmity of age. When he died he was 'Father of the Church', i.e. the oldest minister. He married Christian Airth and their children were: James of Grange; an unnamed child; Isabella, who died unmarried before 1683; Elizabeth, also dead before 1683; Eupheme; and Andrew. His 'oye' (probably grandson) John Turnbull had a son baptised in Hawick in 1704. James of Whitmuir (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when he and several others were in dispute over Selkirk Common. James of Grange (17th/18th C.) son of Rev. James. He held the same lands of Grange in Abbotrule Parish as his father. His wife (name not given) paid the land tax along with his father in Abbotrule Parish in 1678. He is probably the James of Grange who contributed £300 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1689 his eldest son John was served heir to his sisters Isobel and Elizabeth, in the lands of Grange. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as servant to the Laird of Whitslade in 1717. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Jean (b.1714), Andrew (b.1715) and Barbara (b.1717). James (1739/40–92) schoolmaster at Bedrule. He married Helen Turnbull, who died in Ancrum in 1812. Their daughter Jean died in Lanton in 1803. They are buried in Bedrule cemetery. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Cairns (resident of Wiltonburn) in 1780. In 1777 he married Margaret ('Peggy') Cairns and their children included: Betty (b.1782); Walter (b.1785); Nelly (b.1789); and Betty (again, b.1792). An unnamed child (b.1779), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his. James (d.1794) gardener to Mr. Dickson, whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) cooper of the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. James (b.1812/3) from Kelso, he was headmaster at Drumlanrig, the 'Ragged Schuil', from about 1860. He married Margaret Macgregor in Kelso in 1855. Their children included: Tom (b.1856), who became a great Hawick Common Riding supporter; Margaret Clark (b.1860); Agnes (b.1862); Mary (b.1864); Elizabeth (b.1866); William Macgregor (b.1868); and James (b.1870). Janet (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in 1502, along with James Elliot and John Lauder. The three had 7 cows stolen from them, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. Janet (b.c.1815) grocer and spirit dealer on the Kirkwynd. She is recorded there in 1841 with her infant children James and Alison. John (d.1340s) recorded in a letter to Edward III in either 1340 or 1347/8, when his death is mentioned. With his brothers Henry and Thomas, they were 'the greatest enemies the writer had in the forest in the company of William Douglas'. He was killed in combat with the English, 'from a blow ... through the body and through his hakecon and habergeon', while his 2 brothers were taken prisoner. It seems likely he is related to the first John of Altonburn. John 'of the Forest of Selkirk' (d.c.1360) the first known ancestor of the Kers of Cessford etc. He became the first Laird of Altonburn (or 'Auldtounburn'), acquiring the lands from John 'of Coupland' in 1357/8, with witnesses including William of Gledstains, William 'de Roule' and Alexander of Flex, just 3 years after the lands had been passed from Adam of Rule. About the same time he witnessed a grant for lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. He is probably the John on an English panel of inquest held at Roxburgh in 1357/8. Robert Riddell of Riddell witnessed 2 charters to him in 1357 and 1358. In 1361 he was on a panel of inquest in Roxburgh, relating to Nether Crailing. He is probably the 'John Kerre' who was in 1363 granted custody of the Teviotdale lands of William Rutherford until William's heir reached majority. He married Mariota (with unknown surname, but possibly daughter of John of Copeland) and was succeeded by their son Henry. John (14th/15th C.) recorded as 'John de Ker' in 1405. He was one of 12 Scottish prisoner in Calais who were put on a ship to England, and although they tried to take command during the voyage they were held for ransom. It is unclear if he was related to the Border Kers. John (15th C.) mentioned in the document of 1479 resigning the lands of Broadlee (in the Barony of Hawick) by Robert Turnbull to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. His name is recorded as 'Johannem Ker'. Probably the same 'Johanne Ker' was witness to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick at the Mote in 1484. John (16th C.) son of George of Faldonside, and presumably therefore brother of Sir Andrew of Faldonside. In 1563 he leased his lands of Hermiston (in Lilliesleaf Parish) to 4 men. In 1586/7 he was 'bruther to Andro Ker of Faudounsye', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (16th C.) 2nd son of Thomas of Kippielaw. In 1581 he renounced his rights to lands in Bowden to his father and mother Elizabeth, while his father and mother assigned to him the Kirklands of Bewlie, with 2 acres at the east end of Lilliesleaf. John of Raperlaw (16th C.) younger son of Gilbert Ker of Primsideloch. He was servitor to Lord Glamis 1585–86. In 1586 he and his wife Janet Gib had a Crown charter for lands in Raperlaw and 'West Bernis' in Roxburghshire. John (16th/17th C.) younger son of George of Cavers and brother of Thomas of Cavers. He was a burghess of Edinburgh. In 1603 he and other burghesses of Edinburgh served as sureties that Thomas, after being freed from ward in Edinburgh Castle, would pay his fines or re-enter. John (16th/17th C.) servant to John Ker of Langnewton, recorded in 1621. He is listed as 'Thomes Johnne', so presumably his father was Thomas. Sir John of Littledean, the Hirsell and Jedburgh (d.bef. 1631) son of Walter of Littledean and grandson of Sir Andrew of the Hirsell. In the 1568/9 bond between the Kers and the Scotts he is named as the son and heir of Walter, and promised in marriage to Elizabeth Murray, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when 'he beis of perfyte age, fourtene zeiris outrun'; however, the marriage does not appear to have taken place. He was still son and heir of Walter of Littledean in 1588 when he was cautioner for brothers of Cockburn of that ilk. In 1589 he promised to appear before the Privy Council. In about 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1591 he and his brother Mark had a bond for not harming certain Homes. In 1593 there was a letter of 'lawburrows' against him, his father and brothers, brought by his 'sometime spouse' Juliane Home and members of her family, the Homes of Wedderburn, not to molest her in the liferent of Littledean. Also in 1593 there was an order for the Warden of the Marches and Sheriff of Roxburgh to apprehend him, since he was already excommunicated and denounced as a rebel, guilty of adultery and other crimes. A further complaint by the Homes of Wedderburn in 1593/4 accuses him of 'double adultery' for also enticing the wife of Hamilton of Innerwick to cohabit with him at Spylaw. In 1595 he was involved in a quarrel with Sir Robert of Cessford, who assaulted him in Edinburgh. He led a raid into England in 1597. In 1598 he had 'Auld Wat' of Harden declared a rebel for failure to pay him for profits coming from Borthwickshiels, 'specified in a decree of removing'. In 1599 he tried to make Scott of Buccleuch answerable for Scott of Harden's non-appearance, but this was unsupported by the courts, because it was a civil and not criminal matter. In 1600 Andrew of 'Mylnerig' was surety for him that he would keep the King's peace. He may be the Sir John who signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. Also in 1602 he complained about Kers from the Morebattle area stealing livestock from his farms. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1605 and 1607. In 1608 he had a charter for the Baronies of Maxton, Linton and Town Yetholm. He was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire in 1610 and in 1618 was appointed by the King as one of the commissioners for keeping law and order in Ewesdale and the Debateable Land. In 1611 he exchanged the Hirsell for the lands of Jedburgh Abbey and in 1624 was granted all of the lands of the Lordship of Jedburgh that had been resigned by James, Earl of Home; he was thereafter known as Lord Jedburgh, although this was later disallowed on the basis that the title lay with the Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1619 he had charters for the Lordship of Jedburgh and the lands of Nisbet. In 1621 he complained about being banned from intercommuning with his son John of Langnewton and was given permission to meet with him as the parties tried to settle their differences. Also in 1621 there was an Act of Parliament forbidding him from using the Jedburgh title and in 1622 he lost it for good to Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1576 he married Juliane, 3rd daughter of David Home of Wedderburn, but she divorced him in 1589 and remarried James Hoppringle of Whitelaw. In 1589/90 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Patrick Whitelaw of that ilk (and divorced wife of Sir Alexander Hamilton of Innerwick); she died in torment in 1627 and was said to have practiced witchcraft. His relationship with the woman who became his 2nd wife was the reason for two divorces, and the legitimacy of progeny from this 2nd marriage would become part of the claim to the succession of the Dukes of Roxburghe made by Gen. Walter of Littledean more than 200 years later. His children with his first wife included: Sir Mark of Dolphinston, who married Margaret, daughter of John Home of Cowdenknowes; Andrew (d.bef. 1618), whose 4 sisters of full blood were served as heirs portioner; Isobel, who married William Kerr of Linton; Agnes; and Christina. Children with his second wife were: John of Langnewton, who succeeded; William, who died without issue; Andrew of Morriston; James of Grange, who became minister at Abbotrule; possibly Robert, minister at Kelso and Linton; Alison, recorded in a discharge with Alexander, Earl of Home in 1611; and Esther, who married Sir Hugh Wallace of Craigie.

John of Barnhills (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 as holder of the infeftment and sasine of Barnhills. He complained that 'Dandie Davidson, pretended tenant of the said lands' and a gang of Davidsons and Turnbells harassed his tenants and pastured their animals there. He is probably the same as one of the other Johns. John of Lochtour (d.1644) son of Gilbert, he succeeded since his elder brother died before their father. In 1624 he was served heir to his brother in the lands of Town Yetholm, Cherrytrees and Hayhope. He married Janet, co-heiress of George Falside of Cothroppill. His children included: Sir John, who succeeded; Andrew, who had sasine of Town Yetholm in 1639; and Margaret, who married Rev. Robert Know of Kelso. John of Langnewton and Littledean (16th/17th C.) son of Sir John of Littledean, the Hirsell and Jedburgh. He was known as 'of Langnewton' while his father was still alive. In 1618 Robert, son of Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre complained that he had sent his servant after him on horseback to attack him with a sword and pistol. He served as cautioner for his servant not to wear 'hagbuts and pistolets' and for him not to harm the family of Thomas Ker. In 1619 Sir Andrew of Oxnam complained that he and over 100 men came at night to Oxnam Moor to break up and steal the 'grite number of turvis' cut for Sir Andrew there; there was insufficient proof to convict any of them, but it was presumably part of some dispute over rights on common moors. In 1621 there was a complaint that he, along with several of his servants and associates, attacked John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw and others, killing one of their dogs, and later shot at Haliburton and his associates near Fairnington. He was declared a rebel, along with several associates. In 1621 his father, Sir John of Jedburgh complained that he had been unfairly barred from intercommuning with him, and was allowed to do so to help the parties resolve their disputes. In 1622 there was a complaint against him by Rev. William Jameson, that he had violently interfered with grain that had been impounded for the minister's use. He was served heir to his father in 1631, with his legitimacy not being questioned, despite the potentially illegal marriage of his parents, because of the time that had passed. The name of his wife is unclear, but she could be the Margaret Ker, called 'Old Lady Littledean' who was charged at the court in Jedburgh in 1684 with not attending her parish church and was fined. His children were: Andrew, who succeeded; Jean, who married Sir John of Lochtour; and Esther, who married Sir Hugh Wallace of Craigie. John (16th/17th C.) possibly a younger brother of Sir Andrew of Greenhead. He sat in Parliament for Selkirk 1617–30 and was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1649. Sir John of Lochtour (17th C.) son of John of Lochtour and grandson of Gilbert. He represented Roxburghshire in parliament in 1644 and his brother Sir Andrew was an M.P. in 1648. His sister Margaret married Robert Knox, minister of Kelso. Either he or his father signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of most of the lands in Yetholm Parish. In 1648 he was one of the men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He was knighted by Charles II in 1651, but died soon afterwards. He appears to have deeply in debt through most of his time as Laird of Lochtour. In 1640 he married Jean, daughter of Sir Thomas Kerr of Redden (and she later married Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie, who inherited most of his lands). His children included: Gilbert (who succeeded); Thomas of Hayhope (d.1673), killed at Crookham in Northumberland; William of Cherrytrees and Newton; Margaret, who married Richard Learmonth of Whytlawhoue; and Jean, who married William Bennet of Grubbet. John of Gateshaw (d.c.1654) 9th Laird. He was heir to his great-grandfather, Lancelot of Gateshaw. He was still a minor in 1635 when there was a marriage contract between him and 'Cicill Ker, dochter naturall to ane noble erle, Robert, Erle of Roxburghe'. In 1644 he made a new infeftment of his lands to himself and his wife 'in liferent' and to his son Robert 'in fee'. In 1645 he contrinuted supplies after the accidental burning of Kelso. He served as a Commissioner of War for Roxburghshire. His sons Robert, Andrew and Henry all featured in the funeral procession for the Countess of Roxburghe in 1675. John (17th C.) tenant in Middleknowes. He was witness to discharges for the teinds of Harwood and Appotside in 1655. For a further document of 1656, relating to the lands of Appotside, he was 'baillie in that part'. John of West Nisbet (17th C.) son of George and brother of Sir Thomas of Cavers. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He married Jean, daughter of Sir James Kerr of Crailing, who became Lord Jedburgh. His son John married his cousin Agnes Ker of Cavers. John (17th C.) gardener in 'Knows' (probably Hassendean Knowe, since he is named right after men from Hassendean). He is on the huge list in 1684 of men declared fugitives for being Covenanters. John of Grange (17th/18th C.) son of James of Grange, and grandson of the minister of Abbotrule. In 1689 he was served heir to his father's sisters Isobel and Elizabeth, in the annual rent totalling £88 (corresponding to 2200 merks) of the lands of Grange in Abbotrule Parish. It is unclear if the family continued its ties with Abbotrule after this. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for William Nixon in Hawick Parish in 1678. John of Cavers Carre (d.1737) eldest son of John of West Nisbet and Jane Kerr of Crailing. In 1684 he inherited the Cavers Carre lands and titles from his uncle Sir Thomas. This included the Barony of Bedrule and lands in the Rule valley as well as lands in Belses, Raperlaw, Rawflat, Pinnacle and Firth. He may have adopted the spelling 'Carre' after he succeeded. He is recorded in several local bonds in the late 1600s with the Elliots of Harwood, Stanedge and others. He was also served heir to his uncle Robert (through his mother's side), Lord Jedburgh, in 1693. This included annual rents from Appletreehall, as well as many lands around Jedburgh. He married his cousin Agnes, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker. Their children included: Robert, whose son Thomas succeeded to Cavers Carre; John, who succeeded his nephew Thomas and probably married a daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of Riddell; James; and Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Don in 1705. He secondly married Miss Home, daughter of Lord Kimmerghame and their children included: George, who became Lord Nisbet. John of Gateshaw (17th/18th C.) son of Robert. He was 11th and last Laird, selling the estate to Sir William Scott of Ancrum in 1749. His eldest son Robert was also involved in the sale. John (c.1680–1741) 1st Duke of Roxburghe. He was a younger son of Robert, succeeding to the Earldom of Roxburghe on the death of his brother Robert in 1696. Among his possessions were those formerly held by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale, including the church lands of Lilliesleaf, the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk, plus the lands of Hassendeanbank, Cappitrig and Alton near Hawick. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He became Secretary of State for Scotland in 1704. He helped bring about the union with England, and was created Duke in 1707 (the last Scottish peerage created) in relation to this. He was one of Scotland's Representative Peers in Parliament 1707–10. He was also Keeper of the Privy Seal of Scotland and again Secretary of State for Scotland in the British Parliament. However, he opposed Walpole in Parliament and was dismissed from office. In 1727 he was one of the pall-bearers for Sir Isaac Newton's coffin in 1727 and also served as Deputy High Constable of Scotland at the Coronation of George II. He had the teinds of Hassendeanbank from Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch in 1734, bought Cockerheugh from Walter Scott of Cockerheugh in 1737 and bought 'Ladylands' from Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1739. In 1745 he had the family valuables taken to Caverton Mill for safety while the army of Prince Charles passed through Kelso. He was succeeded by his only son Robert. John of Cavers Carre (d.1746) 2nd son of John of Cavers and Nisbet and Agnes Ker. He was an advocate. In 1742 he succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate after the death of his nephew Thomas. He paid the window tax in Bowden Parish in 1748. He may have used the spelling 'Carre' for his surname. He married Elizabeth Monteith, heiress of Fox Hall. His children were: John, who succeeded; Robert, Captain in the Navy; Stair Campbell, army Captain; and Agnes. All of his children except John died unmarried. John Strother of Littledean (d.1779) son of Walter, who he succeeded in 1739. In 1746 he married Marion, daughter of James Pringle of Torwoodlee. He secondly married Jean, daughter of Harry Maule of Kellie and widow of George, Lord Ramsay; she died in 1779. He thirdly married Frances, daughter of James Dean of Woodhouselee, widow of William Wishart (Principal of Edinburgh University) and of Dr. John Scott of Stewartfield. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Walter. John (d.1766) eldest son of John of Cavers, whom he succeeded to the estates of Cavers Carre and Hundalee. He paid the window tax in 1753. He and his son John were recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jane Reid and their children were: John, who succeeded; Alexander, in the East India Company's naval service; Janet, who died young; and Elizabeth, who married William Riddell of Camiestown (and whose son Robert Riddell Carre would succeed to Cavers Carre). In 1763 he secondly married Jane, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell, 4th Baronet; she died in 1806. John (18th C.) smith at Hawickshiels. He married Margaret Henderson and their children included Isobel (b.1758) and Thomas (b.1760). Witnesses to the 1760 baptism were Walter Scott and James Laidlaw. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in Hawickshiels in 1766. John (1740–1804) 3rd Duke of Roxburghe, son of Robert, 2nd Duke, he was known as a great book collector. In 1797 he exchanged his lands at Hassendeanbank with those of George Douglas of Cavers at Denholm Haugh. It is said that he was attached to the oldest daughter of the Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, but was unable to marry her, since King George III married her younger sister. He remained unmarried. He was appointed Lord of the Bedchamber, Knight of the Thistle, Groom of the Stole and Knight of the Garter. He collected valuable and curious books, and the sale of his collection (of about 10,000 volumes) led to the establishment of the Roxburghe Club. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of large amounts of land in Roxburghshire, in Ancrum, Bowden, Eckford, Hownam, Kelso, Lindean, Lilliesleaf, Makerstoun, Maxton, Morebattle, Oxnam, Roxburgh, Selkirk and Sprouston Parishes. In 1797–8 he served as chair of the Lieutenancy Committee in Roxburghshire. He sold his lands of Hassendeanbank to the Elliots of Minto in 1799. Probably the same John was listed on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls for Hundalee Mill and other lands. He had no surviving children and after his death there was a dispute over succession; he was eventually succeeded by a distant cousin, John Bellenden-Ker. Capt. John of Cavers Carre (d.1798) eldest son of John and Jane Reid. He was a Captain in the army. He was still 'of Cavers junior' when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He succeeded after the death of his father in 1766, and retired from the army, living at Cavers Carre and at Hundalee. In 1777 he had much of the old house at Cavers Carre demolished, but did not manage to have it rebuilt. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1788 he was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire (and supporter of the Conservatives). Also in 1788 he was recorded as owner of Cavers Carre and other lands in Bowden Parish, as well as Bedrule Mains, Bedrule Mill, Corsecleuch and Fulton in Bedrule Parish, Belses Mill in Ancrum Parish and other lands in Jedburgh Parish. He was taxed for having male servants (both within Jedburgh and outside, presumably at Hundalee) from 1778–97, the number varying from 4 to 1. He was a bachelor in 1785–91 when taxed for having a female servant; in 1789 he was paying the tax at Hundalee. He was also taxed for having horses in the period 1785–97, in some years in Jedburgh as well as in Bowden Parish. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was Provost of Jedburgh and played a leading role in the politics of that burgh. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Alexander. However, a child called John 'to John Carre Esqr. of Cavers' was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1784, and was probably his child (perhaps illegitimate). John Strother of Littledean (1757–95) son of Walter, who he succeeded in 1789. He was a Major in the Scots Greys, died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Walter. John (1834/5–65) son of Gideon, who was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Fore Raw. He was born in Hawick and educated at Jedburgh Grammar School. He became an engineer with the Royal Navy. His ship H.M.S. Driver was wrecked off Bermuda in 1861, and then spent about a year on H.M.S. Racer off the coast of America during the Civil War. Partially deaf, he was invalided from the Navy, returning to 3 Bridge Street in 1863, but dying only 2 years later. An 'ambrotype' photograph exists of him in uniform and many letters from him to his family survive. Lancelot 'Lance' of Gateshaw (d.c.1543) son of Andrew. In 1510 he served as one of the sureties for his father, who was accused of murdering John Murray of Falahill. He was accused of 2 raids into England in 1515. In 1522 his tower at Gateshaw was burned by the English, perhaps in retaliation; he strengthened his pele and built 'New Gateshaw' nearby. He is recorded in documents of 1527, regarding tenements in Selkirk. Probably the same Lancelot is recorded in a land transaction in Selkirk in 1528 and as witness to others in 1529/30. In 1530 he was among Border lairds who came to Jedburgh to find surety for crimes for which they were responsible. In 1532 he had sasine for a piece of land in Selkirk and another for a tenement in 1533. He may be the Lancelot who wadset tenements in Selkirk in 1539. Also in 1539 he was infefted in the liferent of parts of Primside and Hownam. His brother 'sir Peter' acted as his attorney in 1539, when he paid rentals to William and Adam of Shaws. In 1541/2 he sold a tenement in Selkirk to Alexander Hall. He was a juror on a retour in 1542 and in the same year was in dispute with Mark of Dolphinston over the wardship of John Mow of that ilk. In 1544 he was deceased when his heir was recorded as George of Gateshaw. He also had other sons, including Richard, who succeeded George. Lancelot 'Lancie' of Gateshaw (16th C.) probably son of Richard and grandson of the earlier Lancelot. He is recorded in 1587 when John Cockburn of Ormiston served as his cautioner. His brother 'Markie' was recorded in 1588 and 1588/9. Also in 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. He is probably the Laird of Gateshaw listed among Borderers who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1595 Andrew of Faldonside was surety for him not to harm Elizabeth Cranston, widow of Lancelot of Little Newton. He was a juror on a retour in 1600. He was probably succeeded by James. Lancelot (d.bef. 1593) recorded being in Little Newton in 1593 when John in Broomlands of Kelso had surety not to harm his widow Elizabeth Cranston. At the same time his brother George and some Ainslies had surety for not harming his widow. In 1595 Andrew of Faldonside was surety for Lancelot of Gateshaw not to harm his widow. Maria (d.1650) daughter of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburghe and brother of William, Master of Roxburghe. She married James Haliburton of Pitcur and secondly married James Carnegie, 2nd Earl of Southesk. In 1634 she was served heir to her brother William in many lands around Kelso, Sprouston, Maxwellheugh, Midlem, Whitmuirhall, etc. Included in the list is a third part of the lands of 'Altoun prope villam de Hawick'. Her sister Isobella was served heir to a third part of the lands at the same time. Mark of Dolphinston (d.1551) 2nd son of Walter of Cessford, younger brother of Sir Robert of Caverton. He was also referred to as 'of Maxton and Littledean'. His sister married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He owned Borthwickshiels in 1502 when it was burned by a group of Armstrongs from Liddesdale. Also in that year he was fined for failing to enter into court several men to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver: Andrew Turnbull in Bedrule; William Turnbull, brother of the Laird of Bedrule; John Turnbull, called 'Blue John'; Andrew Turnbull; Alan Davidson, 'Taboner', John Turnbull in Jedburgh; John Turnbull in Wells; and Adam Turnbull in Wells.

Furthermore, in 1502 he also served as surety for John Oliver (who had been involved in some raids around the Jedburgh and Rulewater areas), was also surety for Robert and Ingram Oliver (whose crimes were several raids and 2 murders), was fined for not entering several men (including an Ainslie and men from Auld Roxburgh and Caverton) into the court and was surety for Adam Gramslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton, as well as other men. In 1505 he had remission (along with 3 others) for crimes perpetrated upon John Rutherford and others. In 1507/8 he was witness to the document for Scott of Whitchesters relating to the tower 'between the bridges' in Hawick. In 1515 he headed a band of Kers and others who stole 200 cattle, 30 horses and took 40 prisoners from Redewater. In 1525 he was among the Border Barons who had a bond to assist the Earl of Angus. In 1530 he was one of the Border chiefs imprisoned by James V for failing to keep the 'broken men' and thieves in check. In 1530/1 he was witness to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He is probably the Mark in Littledean recorded in 1534 along with his son Andrew; goods were seized at 'erin heuch', which belonged to his son and not to him. He was warded in Dundee in 1535. In 1539 he is recorded as the founder of the altar of the Holy Rood in Selkirk. In the early 1540s he served as a kind of deputy to the Warden of the Middle Marches, his name showing up many times in English letters. In 1542 he was said to have gone with his brother Dand and son Davie to Kelso Abbey and taken all of the King's sheep that were there. He witnessed an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and William Cairncross of Colmslie in 1544. In 1545 he was 'Mark Kar of Littleleden' among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. About 1547 he was among the Border Lairds who paid homage to the Duke of Somerset. He was among the Kerrs accused of supporting the English at the Battle of Pinkie. In 1549 he was one of the Kers (along with Walter of Cessford and George of Linton) accused by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme of raiding his lands at Newark, as well as his lands in the lower Borthwick valley. In about 1501 he married Marjorie, daughter and heiress of John Ainslie of Dolphinston. His children included: Sir Andrew of the Hirsell; John; Mr. Thomas; William, recorded in

1550; Robert, a natural son, legitimised in 1558; and Janet, who married John Haitlie of Mellerstain. His direct descendant Maj.-Gen. Walter of Littledean lost a legal battle in 1812 to be declared the rightful heir to the Roxburghe titles. Mark (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1531 he gave up all claims to the lands of Philiphaugh, in favour of Robert Turnbull, tutor of Philiphaugh. Also in 1531 he had a precept of sasine read out in which Patrick Murray of Falahill granted him lands in Selkirk. Additionally in 1531 he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. He was probably the Mark who in 1530 headed a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken men, horses, meal and other goods from travellers they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned all the goods. He was probably the Mark who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531. In 1531/2 and 1532 he was a Bailie in Selkirk. He was probably the son of Robert and Elizabeth Gledstains recorded in 1533, when his mother gave up her liferent of a tenement to the church. His heir Thomas witnessed a document in 1535 and he himself witnessed a further document in 1536. He may be the Mark who purchased a husbandland (occupied by Alexander Scott) from Patrick Murray in 1536 and a maltkin and yard from Peter Porteous. He may be the same man as Mark of Kippielaw. Mark of Kippielaw (16th C.) recorded 'in Kippielaw' when he witnessed a court case in Selkirk in 1534. In 1535 he bound himself to discharge George Mitchellhill and William Bennet of contracts, as well as acts made with Melrose Abbey through John Scott in Thirlestane. He also witnessed a document relating to John Rutherford of Hunthill in 1535. Also in 1535 he and Robert Turnbull agreed to each hold half of the lands of 'Philhop' (but Philiphaugh is probably meant) until John Turnbull (son and heir of the deceased Ralph) came into entry of the lands; they held the wardship of John Turnbull and it seems that he received Robert Turnbull's half 'by reason of an omission of his marriage contract'. In 1536/7 John Turnbull of Philiphaugh (then described as his nephew) came of age, and appointed him as curator for his lands. In 1537 he renounced his claims over a maltkiln in Selkirk, in favour of Peter Porteous. He is listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40. He was one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme on

Edinburgh High Street, along with several Kerrs and others. His son and heir Thomas is recorded in an undated document from the 1550s resigning lands in Midlem to his younger son Andrew. He and his son Robert of Lochtour were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his name appears as 'Mark Ker of Kippeschaw'. It is possible he is the same man as the contemporary Burgess of Selkirk. Thomas in Kippielaw, who is recorded in 1562/3, was his son and heir. An inventory of his 'gudis and geiris' was made in 1579, with his son Thomas and grandson Robert mentioned; he was at that time 'seik in body and haill in mynd'. Mark 'Markie' (16th C.) brother of Lancelot of Gateshaw. In 1588 he and William of Hayhope were accused of wounding William Methven, minister of Langton. Sir Mark of Dolphinston (d.1607) son of Sir John of the Hirsell and Littledean. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. He died without issue and his widow secondly married Sir David Home of Wedderburn. Mark (16th/17th C.) younger son of Walter of Littledean. He was probably trained in the priesthood, since he was known as 'Mr.' In 1588 he was appointed Commendator of Coldstream Abbey. He was also Commissary of Lauder and owner of the lands of Brotherstanes. His son Andrew was the first Ker of Morriston in Berwickshire. Mark (17th/18th C.) gardener at 'Newtoun Kerr' in Bedrule Parish. In Edinburgh in 1712 he married Agnes, daughter of Edinburgh gardener John Weir. Matthew (15th/16th C.) agent appointed by George, son of Robert Scott of Whames in an action of 1505, where George claimed his father's lands of Muirhouse in the Barony of Crichton. Ralph of Primside Loch (15th/16th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Cessford. However, he may be confused with the son of Thomas of Kersheugh and Ferniehirst. He may be the 'Radulpho Ker, fratri Wateri Ker de Cesfurd' in 1484 when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in certain lands, the 'Radulpho Ker' who was a bailie appointed by Alexander, Lord Home, to infeft Andrew Ker (perhaps his father) in the lands of Crailing and Hownam in 1484, and also the 'Radulpho Ker de Primside louch' further directed in 1489. He is probably the 'Radulfo Car' who leased the lands of Broadmeadows in 1488. Also in 1488/9, he and his brother Walter were directed by the King to infeft George Douglas, Master of Angus, in lands in Berwickshire. In 1491 he was mentioned in a document relating to the lands of Ruecastle and he and his wife were mentioned in relation to the lands of Middlestead. He may be the 'Radulpho Ker' who acted as surety several times at the Justice-aires held in Jedburgh in 1493 and 1494/5, as well as at Selkirk in 1494/5. In 1494 he was 'Radulphum Ker' when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He who was part of a bond in 1498 to act upon men who were already fugitives (also agreed by his son Andrew and by William Turnbull of Minto, among others). In 1499 he was recorded as 'Radulphus' brother of Walter of Cessford in a document relating to George, Master of Angus. Also in 1499 he was tenant in Broadmeadow, Bailielee and half of Phaup in Ettrick. In 1501 he served as pledge for Sir Thomas Turnbull. In 1501/2, along with his wife, he had the gift of the ward of 'Hownum, Cesfurd, Caver-ton and Primsid' through the decease of Walter of Cessford; he is recorded as being 'of Prymsidloch'. In 1502 he was surety for several Olivers and a Waugh who had killed Robert Brig and Adam 'Barnisfader' at 'Kelshop'. In the same year he was also involved in a respite with William Ker and James Elliot in 'Quhitmere' and Alexander and Patrick Gray in Greenhead, involving thefts by the Elliots. Also in 1502 he had a charter of appraisal for the lands of Falside in Jedforest after being yielded by George Douglas, Master of Angus for not delivering one of his tenants to court. Additionally he was also surety for the Douglasses of Swinside and for Lawrence Rutherford, as well as being fined for failing to produce a riever. He may be the Ralph 'in le grenehed' who was fined in 1502 for failing to enter Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. He held the lease of Broadmeadow, Ploro and Berrybush in 1502. And in that year both William Scott in Fenwick and James Scott in Ashkirk had remission for stealing livestock from his farm at Cauldshiels. In 1503 he had a financial agreement with George Douglas, Master of Angus, done in Jedburgh, with the procurator being Gavin Douglas, Provost of St. Giles. In 1506 he had a charter for lands in Ettrick. In 1506/7 he was one of the men to whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Buccleuch, had to give in his accounts. In 1509 he and his wife Margaret Rutherford sold lands in Heiton. Also in 1509 he was 'de Prymsidlowich' in an agreement with George Douglas, Master of Angus, done at his house of 'Grenheid'. In 1510 his son Andrew was declared a rebel and his goods forfeited after he failed to appear for killing John Brown, assisted by William in Whitmore and his brother James. Also in 1510 he was involved in an indenture, along with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, with the Erskines, over lands in Synton; for 400 merks they bought a 20 merk land in Synton Mains, as well as another 20 merk land within Synton, rights to take over the lands of Walter Scott of Synton later, plus lands in Nisbet. Another condition was that the Erskine's would not sell any neighbouring lands to John Murray of Falahill (his brother-in-law), for reasons that are unspecified. He married Margaret, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill and secondly married Margaret Rutherford. His children included: Andrew of Greenhead and Primside; George of Cavers Carre, who was probably father of Thomas of Cavers Carre; William, Commendator of Kelso; and John, recorded in 1553. Ralph (15th/16th C.) brother of Thomas, Abbot of Kelso. He may be the same as Ralph of Primside (although it appears that 2 nearly contemporary men of the same name are sometimes confounded). In 1532 he was granted a tack of the lands of Cavers Carre by his brother Thomas. He married Marion Haliburton, and their armorial bearings were carved in stones saved from the old house and built into the new one in 1800. His eldest son was George. Ralph of Lintalee (16th C.) recorded having the tack of Lintalee in 1541. He is also recorded as juror on a retour in 1560. He was probably succeeded by James of Lintalee. Ralph (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as 'Rafe Ker', but it is unclear where he was from. Ralph (16th C.) entered into ward in England 'for the bill of Newtoun', with a bond given by Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme, sometime during the time of the Regent Moray. In 1573 he broke his ward and was with Lord Hay of Yester, with Sir Walter's bond forfeited. It is possible that he was the Ralph, son and heir of Thomas of Dalcove and Shaws, who in 1581 married Janet, daughter of Walter of Littledean; he was given most of Dalcove and Shaws, with his father keeping 2 husbandlands of Dalcove that were occupied by the Newton family. He could be the 'Raulff Ker of Shaw' who escaped from Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1590. In 1598 there were bonds to resolve a feud between him and Haig of Bemersyde. He was recorded as a juror in retours of 1600 and 1601. He is probably the 'Raiff Ker of Schawis' who signed ('with our handis at the pen') a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He may also have married Alison Ker of Primsidloch. Ralph (16th C.) servant of Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle. In 1597/8 he was 'Raulff Ker' when his master complained that he had been attacked and captured by Scotts from Gamescleuch, Glack and 'Jedwartfeild'. Richard of Altonburn (d.1437/8) son of Robert and grandson of Henry (although these generations are confused). He had a charter for several lands from the Earl of Douglas in 1412. As well as Altonburn, he held 'Wawtyswelys' and 'Quitebanke-dene', in the regality of Sprouston. He may be the Richard 'Kere' who witnessed an agreement between the Rules of Primside and the Kers of Altonburn in 1432. He appears to have died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn in 1438 (even although Andrew appears to have been known as 'of Altonburn' before that). Richard of Gateshaw (d.1577) brother of George and younger son of Lancelot. He was named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts, trying to end the family feud. In 1565 he was charged for disobeying the Warden of the Middle Marches. He had sasine for lands in Primside from Walter Ker of Cessford in 1566/7 and was infefted as heir to his brother. In 1571 he entered into a contract with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. His children included: Lancelot; who succeeded; James; Adam; and a daughter, who married Elliot of Larriston. He made his will in 1576. Robert (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English document appraising horses in Berwick in 1311/2. His name is given as 'Robertus del Ker'. He may be an early ancestor of the Border family. Robert of Altonburn (14th/15th C.) probably son of Henry. In 1404 he had a charter for the lands of Smailholm and others from Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. He had 2 sons: Richard, who appears to have died without issue; and Andrew, who succeeded after the death of his brother. Sir Robert of Caverton (d.1500), younger of Cessford, eldest son of Walter. In 1490 he had the lease of Bowerhope in Ettrick Ward. In 1490/1 he had a charter for lands in the Barony of Haldane. He is probably the Sir Robert who was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the Branxholme and Buccleuch titles and lands in 1492. He was an ambassador to England in 1492. He acted as surety at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493 and was also fined for non-appearance. And he was probably the Sir Robert who acted as one of the sureties in 1494/5 for Robert Langlands after the murder of chaplain George Fairneylaw, paying £20 when Langlands failed to appear. He was Master of the King's Artillery to James IV and Warden of the Middle Marches. In 1499 he was tenant of Singlie, Erncleugh, Altrieve and Bowerhope, along with his father. He was murdered by 8 Northumbrians, who were imprisoned in Fast Castle until they died. He married Christian Rutherford of that ilk. Since he died before his father the Cessford titles and estates were inherited by his son Sir Andrew. Another son was Thomas of 'Marsingtoun'. Robert 'in cavertoun', recorded in 1502, may also have been related. Robert (15th/16th C.) 4th son of Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn. He was Abbot of Kelso 1468–1506. He and his brother Ralph had sheep stolen from their farm at Cauldshiels by William Scott in Fenwick. Robert (d.bef. 1526) tenant in Sunderlandhall. He purchased Ashybank from Sir William Douglas of Cavers and sold it back to him in 1498. Possibly the same Robert 'de Sonderlandhall' was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Ale Moor. Probably the same deceased Robert of Sunderlandhall was recorded in 1526/7 when his son and heir Thomas is mentioned in a document in the Selkirk Protocol Books. In 1530 his widow Margaret Hunter assigned lands near Selkirk to her 2nd son, James. Robert (d.bef. 1533) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1533 his widow Elizabeth Gledstains resigned her tenement and orchard into the hands of her son Mark and Bailie James Scott, to donate them to the chapel in Selkirk. It is possible he was the 'Robert Carre of Selkridge' listed among men who were to mediate between Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus and his wife, Margaret, Queen of Scotland, in an agreement of 1517. Robert of Crookedshaws (16th C.) probably son of James of Linton. He is probably the 'brother german' of George of Linton recorded in a record in Selkirk in 1524. He was a Burgess of Edinburgh, having that right through marrying Elizabeth, daughter of farrier John Harvey. They had a son George. Robert of Graden (16th C.) listed as 'Robert Car of Greyden' when he signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. He is listed as 'Robin' in 1547/8 among the Kers who burned lands in Ale Water belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, the raid led by supporters of the Lairds of Cessford and Ferniehirst. It is unclear how he was related to other Kers. He may be the 'Robin Ker, broder to the Lard of Ferniehirst' who was said to have sided with Sir Ralph Evers at 'Lylzeartis Croce' (i.e. Ancrum Moor) in 1545. He was 'Robert Carr of Grayden' in 1544/5 when said to have been put to the horn for the slaughter of the Rutherfords. He may also be the

Robert, brother of Walter of Graden, who witnessed a charter other Kers involving Primside in 1537. He is probably the Laird of Graden named in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; in the same bond there were arrangements made for addressing a broken marriage contract involving him, together with Rutherford of Hunthill and Ker of Newhall. He may be the Robert of Graden who was one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. Robert of Lochtour (16th C.) son of Mark of Kippielaw. He and his father were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. Robert of Newhall (16th C.) listed on the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. He had apparently been responsible for the murder of William Rutherford of Longnewton and was to come to Ancrum Kirk and offer his sword to George, son of William of Longnewton. He married Margaret Rutherford and had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: Andrew, who succeeded to Newhall; and James and Robert, mentioned in relation to harassment of the tenants of Longnewton in 1595. Robert (16th C.) brother of the Laird of Greenhead. In 1552 he was one of the men indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme. He could be the 'Robet Ker, elder, burges of Edinburcht' named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He is probably the 'Roberte Carr sone to the Lorde of Grenehede' listed in 1541 among Kers, Scotts and others who were accused of leading a raid on Mindrum and Hethpool. Robert (16th C.) son of Thomas of Kippielaw. He is mentioned as executor for his grandfather Mark of Kippielaw in 1579. In 1581 he was involved with a transaction between his father and younger brother John, regarding lands in Bowden, Bewlie and Lilliesleaf. He was a servant to Sir Walter of Cessford in the period 1581–87. He is probably the Robert of Kippielaw who in 1594 was surety for Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch to answer a complaint against him by William Cranston, younger of that Ilk. He married Agnes Pringle. Robert (16th C.) son of Gilbert of Primside Loch. In 1581 he represented his father and their tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. Robert (16th C.) local cleric. He was titular Archdeacon of Teviotdale after the Reformation and is so recorded in 1582. He was minister at Linton, Mow, Yetholm, Morebattle and Hownam. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as lawful son to the deceased Thomas of Yair. His brother James had a warning to accept redemption money from Andrew of Yair. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in Yair in 1617 when he was listed among the supporters of the Scotts of Yair in their feud with the Scotts of Bonnington. Robert (d.1622) recorded as being 'in Bewlie'. He was executed in Edinburgh for perjury. He had apparently been bribed to lie by Andrew Turnbull in Belses in a case of stealing he brought against the Middlemasses. Robert (16th/17th C.) portioner of Fairnington. In 1621 his son John was among a list of associates of John Ker of Langnewton who were accused of attacking John Haliburton of Muirhouseleaw and others. Sir Robert 'Habbie' (1570–1650) of Cessford and 1st Earl of Roxburghe, son of Sir William of Cessford. He was committed to ward in 1587 for incursions on the Border. He was knighted at the coronation of Queen Anne in 1590. Also in 1590 he killed William Kerr of Ancrum, part of the feud between the Kers of Cessford and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst; however, in 1591 he obtained a remission for his involvement. He was Deputy Warden of the Scottish Middle March from about 1594 to 1603, and assisted his father as Deputy Warden before that. He served as Keeper of Liddesdale in 1591–92 and Deputy Keeper in 1593. In 1594 he, along with Alexander Lord Home and Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme, he had a commission to raise men to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. He was an extremely powerful Baron and carried on a great feud with the English Warden Robert Carey, although they apparently grew to respect one another after he was a prisoner of Carey's at Berwick. In 1595 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to present Andrew of Newhall. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation between him and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst and Thomas of Cavers Carre over the murder of William of Ancrum. In 1596 his sureties were Robert, Lord Crichton and Andrew of Romano Grange. He was a Privy Councillor in 1596 and 1599. He was Warden of the Middle March in 1600 when listed among leaders ordered to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. There is a document of about 1600 recording a challenge on him by Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme, with the combat to involve only short swords; it is unclear if either party was injured, but it could not have been very serious. He was created Lord Roxburghe in 1600, accompanied James VI when he ascended the English throne, and was made the Earl of Roxburghe in 1616. He was Bailie of Kelso Abbey in 1602 and appointed his son as Commendator. In 1605 and 1606 there were formal apologies to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst (for the death of William of Ancrum) and compensation of 10,000 merks, which effectively ended the family feud. In 1606 he was served heir to his father Sir William, and in 1610 inherited further lands, including Hassendeanbank, which he resigned to the Baron in 1643 (probably to be regranted). In 1618 he was listed among commissioners appointed by the King to keep law and order in Teviotdale and in 1619 was appointed with increased powers. He was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Cessford, in the lands of Cessford Mains in 1623. His Book of Family and Household expenses for the period 1619–30 shows much of what life was like for a wealthy Border Laird in this period. He was one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Walter Scott, 2nd Earl of Buccleuch, who died in 1633. He was Lord Privy Seal of Scotland in 1637. His properties are listed in the 1643 valuation roll for the county, including land in Hassendean (valued at £550), Lilliesleaf (valued at £1060), Ancrum (valued at £1970), Bowden, Eckford, Kelso, Lindean, Makerston, Maxton, Morebattle, Roxburgh, Smailholm and Sprouston Parishes. He took part in the 'Engagement' of 1648 and was deprived of the office of Privy Seal. He married Margaret Maitland and then Jean Drummond. His children were: William, who died unmarried; Jean, who married her cousin John Drummond, 2nd Earl of Perth; Isabella, who married James Scrymgeour; Maria, who married Sir James Haliburton of Pitcur, and James Carnegie, 2nd Earl of Southesk; and Henry, who married Margaret Hay, but died before his father. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir William Drummond, who changed his name to Ker. He died at Floors and was the first of the family to be buried at Bowden Kirk. He was effectively the last of the male line of Ker of Cessford. His daughters Maria and Isabella were served heir to their brother William in several lands in 1634 (including Alton near Hawick). Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 along with 'Lancie Airmestrang' when they were claimed to be from his Majesty's Guard when sent by the Scotts of Harden to remove Lady Bonnington from her house and lands at Newhouse on the Ettrick Water. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) son of Andrew of Faldonside. In 1632 he was served heir to his father in the Mains of Feu-Rule, also called Hallrule, with the mill there, plus Deanside and lands in Bowden. In 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Perhaps the same Robert 'of Fadeanside' was listed as owned of lands in Lindean Parish in 1678. Robert (d.1682) 3rd Earl of Roxburghe, son of William (who had been born Drummond). He was served heir to his father (as well as his mother) in 1675, inheriting a large amount of land in Roxburghshire and elsewhere, including Alton near Hawick and the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk. He paid the land tax for property in Ancrum Parish, Ashkirk Parish and several other parishes in 1678, as well as the teinds of Lilliesleaf Parish and the Kirklands of Bewlie. He married Margaret, daughter of John Hay, 1st Marquess of Tweeddale (her mother being Jane, daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch). His children included: Robert, who succeeded as 4th Earl; and John, who succeeded his brother. He may also have had another son, William, who was 'brother-german to Roxburgh' in the Darien Scheme list of 1695. He was lost at sea in the ship 'Gloucester' when it wrecked off Yarmouth Sands, while proceeding with the Duke of York from London to Leith. He is said to have cried out with an offer of money for a boat, and his butler tried to save him on his back, until grabbed by another drowning man. Robert of Gateshaw (17th C.) 10th Laird, he was son of John. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire 1661–86. He was recorded in a bond in 1663. He represented the Hays of Errol in the funeral procession of Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburghe, in about 1675. His son John succeeded him and sold the estate to Sir William Scott of Ancrum. Robert (d.1696) 4th Earl of Roxburghe, eldest son of Robert, 3rd Earl. He was served heir to his father's extensive lands and titles in 1684, including lands previously held by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale, the lands and advowson of Lilliesleaf Kirk, the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk, and Alton near Hawick. He also inherited his grandfather William's lands of Hassendeanbank and Cappitrig. In 1695 he was appointed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He was succeeded by his younger brother John. Robert (d.bef. 1718) gardener in Hawick. In 1718 his daughter Janet married John, son of James Simpson and in 1721 his daughter Mary married cooper John Aitken. It is likely he had a son Robert, also a gardener, who married Jean Gledstains in 1721. He may also have been father of Margaret, who married gardener James Dunn (and for whom he witnessed a baptism in 1713), as well as Jean who married Walter White (for whom his son Robert witnessed a baptism in 1725). Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick, possibly son of Robert. In 1721 he (along with gardener James Dunn) witnessed a baptism for weaver Walter White and Jean Ker (perhaps his sister). In 1741 he witnessed a baptism for weaver James White. In 1721 he married Jean, daughter of William Gledstains of Kirklands. Their children included Isobel (b.1723), Patrick (b.1725), Margaret (b.1727), William (b.1729), Janet (b.1731), Robert (b.1735) and Adam (b.1742). In 1723 the witnesses were Walter Purdom and smith John Scott, in 1725 were William Gledstains (probably his father-in-law) and Bailie James Scott, in 1731 were William Tudhope and Robert Boyd, and in 1742 were ex-Bailie James Scott and junior mason Andrew Turnbull. He may be the Robert who (along with James Gledstains) witnessed a baptism for Adam Scott in 1726. He is probably the gardener of that name who witnessed a baptism in 1737 for wright James Winthrope. He may be the Robert who was given part of the responsibility for collecting subscriptions 'east the water' to help pay for the Teviot Bridge in 1740, and who served as a Bailie in the 1740s and 50s. Robert (c.1709–55) 2nd Duke of Roxburghe, only son of John, the 1st Duke. He married his half-cousin Essex, daughter of Sir Roger Mostyn. He was succeeded by his son John (b.1740). He also had a son known as 'Lord Robert' (b.1747) and 3 daughters (none of whom married). Lt.-Col. Robert of Cockertoun (1747–1781) younger son of Robert, 2nd Duke of Roxburghe and brother of John, 3rd Duke. He was known as 'Lord Robert'. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He stood unsuccessfully as Roxburghshire M.P. in 1790, objecting to the addition of several people to the roll and the refusal of some of his supporters, claiming that he was 'duly elected by a majority of legal voters'. Thomas of Gateshaw (15th C.) 3rd son of Andrew of Altonburn, with his mother being a Douglas of Cavers. He was recorded as owner of Gateshaw in 1451, being the first Ker of those lands. He may also have owned part of Primside. He may be the Thomas who had a passport of safe conduct to travel with the Earl of Douglas in 1451. He was probably ancestor of later Kers of Gateshaw, perhaps being father of James. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Adam of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. In 1489 he was retoured as heir to his father's lands of 'Sant Elene Shaw', including 'le Kyrk croft', 'Caponland' and

'Gersland', by Ralph Ker, bailie to George Douglas, Master of Angus. Thomas (d.bef. 1534) recorded in documents preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. It is possible that he was a son of Sir Andrew of Cessford. In 1514 George Ker, Vicar of Morebattle (and Canon of Glasgow) invested him in the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. About the same time he complained about his removal from the choir of Glasgow Cathedral. In 1516 he granted a dispensation to marry (within the usual bounds of consanguinity) to Ingram Elliot and Elizabeth Scott. He witnessed other documents in 1516 and 1520. He was recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale when he died, which was sometime before 1534. Thomas of Yair (16th C.) grandson of William. In 1523 he was granted his grandfather's lands of Stevinston in Peeblesshire from James Douglas, Earl of Morton. Witnesses included James and Robert Ker. In 1530/1 he gave sasine of his lands in Lindean. In 1531 he was in dispute with Patrick Murray of Falahill over the lands of Cranton Riddell. Also in 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In about 1532 he witnessed a marriage agreement between Gavin Elliot and Margaret McDougall. He could be the Thomas in Selkirk who in 1530 was part of a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken men, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned all the goods. In 1532/3 he was witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John Scott of Robertson. In 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. In 1535 he promised to take down a dyke impinging on Selkirk's North Common. In 1536 he delivered money to Andrew of Primsidloch for redemption of lands. In 1539 he complained that men from Selkirk had perambulated the boundaries of Yair (presumably while marking their Common). Also in 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam Scott and took sasine for lands in Sekirk. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Borthwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. He married Elizabeth Crichton and was succeeded by his son William. Thomas of Sunderlandhall (16th C.) recorded several times in the period 1531–37 as 'Master Thomas', suggesting he was a cleric of some sort. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1533 he declared that he was lawfel tenant of Sunderlandhall. In 1535 he promised to remove part of a dyke impinging on Selkirk Common. Also in 1535 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Rutherfords and Homes. In 1536 he came to the market cross in Selkirk to represent his 'brother german' Walter Scott, requested the debt to be repaid by Andrew Shortreed on behalf of Adam Gledstains. His name appears to be scored out and 'Thomas' could be an error for 'William'. In 1536/7 he witnessed a document for Marion Pringle, widow of Andrew of Primside. In 1540 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Linton and of Whitmuirhall and another for the Pringles of Whitton. In the same year he witnessed William Brydon resigning the Vicarage of Auld Roxburgh in favour of Thomas, with witnesses including Gilbert of Primside, George of Linton and Andrew in Auld Roxburgh. His son John was recorded in 1543. He may have married a Ker of Boghaugh and was probably succeeded by another Thomas. Thomas of Yair (16th C.) son of William or possibly Ralph. He was listed as 'Thomas Ker of the Yair' in 1564 when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was recorded in a dispute of about 1570, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was probably succeeded by his son William. He is probably the Thomas of Yair who was deceased in 1581 when his lands in Selkirk are mentioned. His sons Robert and James are recorded in 1582. Thomas of Mersington (16th C.) son of James of Mersington. His lands were in Eckford Parish. He was recorded in 1557. In 1561 he was 'eldest sone to James Ker of Mersingtoun' when listed among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He, 'his fader, bruder, and thair bairnis' were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1590 Thomas of Cavers Carre was surety for Andrew of Linton not to harm him. He is probably the Ker of Mersington listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. He was also a juror on a retour in 1591. He was probably succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas of Kippielaw (16th C.) son of Mark. He was recorded in Kippielaw in 1562/3 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. In 1563 he was involved in deals for lands in Midlem, Bowden and Eildon, when his wife Bessie Ker is also recorded and he was also stated to be son and heir of Mark in Kippielaw. Additionally in 1563 his eldest daughter Margaret was one of 2 choices of wife offered to William Davidson by Walter Riddell of that Ilk. In the inventory of his father's goods, he was listed as son and heir, with his own son Robert being next in line, and another son John being mentioned. In 1580 he received £30 in payment from Walter Scott of Headshaw for 10 bolls of oats. He was recorded in 1581 as grieve to Sir Walter of Cessford. In 1581 he was recorded in a financial arrangement with Andrew Douglas of Friarshaw. Also in 1581 his 2nd son John renounced land in Bowden in favour of him, his wife Elizabeth and son Robert; in return he assigned the Kirklands of Bewlie and 2 acres in Lilliesleaf to his son John. He also had a daughter, Elspeth, who married Thomas Pringle. Thomas (16th C.) presented as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1565, although these were very unclear times for such titles and benefices. He stayed in the office essentially until about 1572, when it passed to an unnamed person who was hostile to the Reformation. That was the end of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. Thomas of Dalcove and Shaws (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as son of the deceased Adam and brother of Elizabeth when he received sasine for his sister's lands of St. Helen Shaw. Robert acted as bailie for the transaction and may have been related. He was a ward of Thomas of Mersington. He was mentioned in a transaction in Selkirk in 1580, involving the mill and lands of Shaws, and another involving a payment to him in Selkirk. He also witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1580. Also in 1580 he transferred 'Schaw Milne' from James Gowdie to Peter Sharp. He was recorded as Thomas of Dalcove in 1581, along with his son and heir Ralph, when they gave sasine of lands in Dalcove to Janet, daughter of Walter of Littledean as part of a marriage contract of Ralph with Janet. Additionally his son Ralph assigned to him 2 husbandlands in Dalcove occupied by the Newton family and he gave Ralph his lands of Shaws, reserving for himself a tenement in liferent. He married Isabel Ker. David, 'son of Thomas Ker of Schawis' was recorded in a disturbance in Merton Kirk in 1598/9, along with 'Thomas Ker of Dalcowie' (suggesting this was a different Thomas). Thomas of Sunderlandhall (16th C.) perhaps son of an earlier Thomas. He is recorded in 1580, along with his wife Margaret Ker. He gave sasine of lands to Thomas of Maisondieu and his wife Isobel Ker, with his brother Robert mentioned too. Also in 1580 he was principle tenant of Sunderland when he admitted Patrick Gray as his tenant and also when he witnessed an instrument giving John, Lord Flemming, sasine of half of Sunderland. In 1581 he and his wife Margaret Ker warned Thomas in Maisondieu and his wife Isabel to appear at Lindean Kirk to receive redemption money, and they also gave sasine of a tenement in Selkirk to George Mitchellhill. Also in 1581 he paid redemption money to James of Yair and Thomas Elliot in Yair, and sold a house and yard in Selkirk. In 1582 he acted as cautioner for James in Yair. He may be the Laird of Sunderlandhall listed among Borderers who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1600/1 he was cautioner for Gideon Murray of Elibank. He signed a bond to keep the peace in 1602. He may have been son of the earlier Thomas of Sunderlandhall. Thomas of Whitmuirhall (16th C.) perhaps son of John of Whitmuirhall and grandson of an earlier Thomas. He was recorded in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. In 1581 he purchased lands in Dingleton from John Mabon; his wife Marion Ker is also mentioned in the agreement. Additionally he loaned money to Adam Marshall based on other lands in Dingleton. He could be the 'Goodman of Quhitmuirhall' listed in 1590 among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1590 his cautioner was Robert, Burgess of Edinburgh. Thomas of Cavers (d.c.1628) son of George, he was the 2nd Ker of Cavers Carre. He succeeded since his older brother Andrew predeceased their father. He may be the 'Thomas Ker sumtyme of Caveris' who was listed as a traitor along with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1571/2. In 1579 he witnessed transactions done at Riddell between the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Todrig and between Andrew Riddell and the Scotts of Todrig. He may have been the Thomas of Cavers who was recorded in the 'pacification' given to Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and his followers in 1581 and who also witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581. In 1590 he was acquitted of the stealing cattle from Englishman Richard Fenwick, was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents, was accused of not keeping his bond to enter a Scottish prisoner and served as surety for Andrew of Linton. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders and in the same year Patrick Murray of Falahill was his surety. In 1592 he was cautioner for the good behaviour of James Scott of Whithope; one of the signatories was his son and heir George. In 1594 he was temporarily imprisoned for not helping fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his supporters. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation of him and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst with Sir Robert, younger of Cessford, over the murder of William of Ancrum. In 1596 he brought a case against Englishmen for raiding his lands. He is recorded in a discharge of 1597 and on Monipennie's list of Border Lairds about the same year. In 1599 there was a complaint that the clerk of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire had refused to register letters of horning against him raised by a Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1600 he was on the 'retour' for Ker of Cessford. In 1601 Adam Scott 'the Peck' was hanged for stealing from him at Nether Whitlaw (as well as a long list of other crimes), and he also complained against other Englishmen who had stolen sheep from him. Also in 1601 he was mentioned having about 8 years earlier been attacked and hurt as part of the feud between the Kers and Turnbells. Additionally in 1601 he served as cautioner for Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst to present certain Turnbells of Bewlie and elsewhere at Edinburgh Tolbooth; he had to pay 2000 merks, which the Laird of Ferniehirst was ordered to repay. A letter from Turnbull to him in 1602 discusses possession of Fulton and mentions a number of tenants in that area of Bedrule. In 1603 he had a charter from James V for the lands of Cavers Carre and others. Also in 1603 his brother John and other burgesses of Edinburgh served as sureties that after being freed from ward in Edinburgh Castle, he would pay his fines or re-enter; additionally his sureties to re-enter when requested were James Pringle of Galashiels, William Laude of Whitlaid, Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk, and his brother John. In 1607 he was surety for James Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. In 1611 he and his son George, along with Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst had complaints against them by Hamilton of Innerwick. In 1620 he was involved in a dispute with the Cairncrosses of Colmslie, with his sons William, Andrew and Robert also mentioned. In 1623 he gained possession of much of the remaining lands of Bedrule from the Turnbells, probably through defaulted loans, this included Fulton, Crosscleuch, Menslaws, Speirmanslands and Ruecastle. He was listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire in 1628. He was succeeded by his son George. In 1618 his son Robert complained about being attacked by the servant of John, son of John of Jedburgh. He married Isobel, daughter of Riddell of that Ilk. They had at least 5 sons and 2 daughters, including: Robert; Janet who married William Turnbull of Bedrule; Grisel, who married Robert Straiton of Straiton Mill; William, recorded in 1631, along with his own son, Walter; Mark; and John. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to George Haliburton in Pinnacle, he lived at Langnewton. In 1619 he was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. Sir Thomas of Cavers Carre (1593–1681) son of George. He was served heir to his grandfather Thomas in 1629. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the ‘Confessions of Faith’. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He is recorded as owner of part of Samieston in 1643 as well as lands in Bedrule Parish valued at £1565, consisting of the Town of Bedrule, Menslaws, Corsecleuch and Fulton, and also lands of Belses in Ancrum valued at £291, as well as lands in Bowden, Kelso and Roxburgh Parishes. In 1644 he was commended, along with Sir William Scott of Harden, for helping organise the tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch to repel the (Royalist) forces of the Earl of Montrose. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire and in 1643–44 and 1648–49 he represented Roxburghshire in Parliament. He also held the lands of Stanedge, Lurgiescleuch and others in Hobkirk Parish in the 1640s. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He held lands in Abbotrule (as well as Kelso) according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He was recorded in a discharge of 1663. He became Baron and Laird of Bedrule in 1668, perhaps earlier. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenant supporter. In 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King. He paid the land tax in Ancrum, Bedrule, Bowden, Jedburgh, Kelso and Roxburgh Parishes in 1678. Also in 1678 he was served heir to his deceased son Andrew’s lands and baronies, including the Barony of Bedrule and lands in Belses, Raperlaw, Rawflat, Pinnacle and Firth; his Bedrule lands were valued at £1632 in 1678, and included land formerly belonging to Turnbull of Bedrule. These lands were later conveyed to John, son of his brother, John of West Nisbet. Also in 1678, 1679 and 1680 he had discharges for annual rents in Selkirk. He married Agnes, eldest daughter of Sir John Riddell of that Ilk, but she died in 1635. He may then have married another woman, whose name is not known. In 1638 he re-married to Grizel, daughter of Sir Robert Halket of Pitfirrane, and she died in 1682, aged 85. His children included: Sir Andrew, son of his 1st wife, who succeeded to Cavers Carre; Isabel, who married Hugh Scott of Gala; Grizel, who married Patrick Home, Lord Polwarth; Margaret, who married Alexander Haliburton of Newmains and secondly Alexander Wedderburn (and also possibly Matthew St. Clair of Herdmanstoun); and Elizabeth, who married James Erskine of Shielfield. Another daughter may have been Christian, who married Francis Scott of Mangerton. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Bessie Dryden in 1726. In 1736 he witnessed a baptism for William Lorraine, resident of Borthaugh. Thomas of Cavers (1724–40) son of Robert and grandson of John of Cavers. In 1738 he succeeded his grandfather. He went abroad for his health with a tutor, but died at Naples. His uncle John succeeded to Cavers. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1856–1932) writer of ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, ‘The Fairest Spot o’ A’’, ‘Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet’, and many poems, such as ‘Roond Aboot Hawick Moat’ and ‘Under the Shadow of the Moat’. He was born in Kelso, but raised in the schoolhouse of Drumlanrig school in Hawick, where his father James was head teacher. He trained as a draper and then worked in the hosiery trade, with John Laing’s and then Pringle’s, where he was a traveller. He was a keen sportsman, particularly of cricket, rugby and cycling. He played in the first official rugby game in Hawick, a match with Langholm in 1874, and captained the Greens 1877/8 (being only the second Captain) and 1880/1, as well as acting as club secretary. He was a Town Councillor for North High Street Ward for 12 years from 1900. He was a great Common Riding supporter, being Secretary of the Committee 1908–23, as well as Treasurer for many years. He was also a founder member and first President of the Callants' Club; he was additionally responsible for honouring the annual dinner guest with an acrostic verse. He was a member of Lodge 111, writing their history in 1898, and acting as their Bard. Enjoying singing, he was a member of Hawick Choral Union, and sung some of his own compositions at gathering of the Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club; 'The Fairest Spot o' A' would be later transcribed from memory by Adam R. Grant, and 'Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet' recovered from notes found after the death of Adam Grant (senior). He also wrote episode 7 of the 1914 Pageant, based on the story of 'Hab o' Hawick'. He was a regular contributor of verse to the local press and the Border Magazine, often using the pseudonym 'Tee Kay'. In 1889 he married Isabella, daughter of James McDonald and Isabella Luke, who was from Melrose. Their children were: William, 'Bill' (1895–1917), who died in WWI; Edith, 'Ede' (b.1897), who married Jimmy Russell from Peebles, a motor engineer and great friend of Jimmy Guthrie; Ronald, 'Ronnie' (b.1898), who emigrated and never returned to Hawick; Ruby (b.1903), who married an Alexander and spent time in India; and James, Ralph and Thomas who died in infancy. His wife appears to have suffered from mental health problems and died in Dingleton. He had a second family with Janet McDonald in Edinburgh, consisting of Thomas McDonald (b.1912), a daughter who died at birth and another daughter who was given up for adoption. His poetry is collected in the book 'Some Thoughts o' Mine in Song and Verse' (1924); it contains 66 poems and 26 acrostics. He also wrote 'Short Historical Sketch of Hawick St. John's Lodge of Freemasons' (1892). Late in life he moved to Edinburgh and then to Glasgow (to be near his daughter Edith), where he died. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery, with the epitaph 'I Like Auld Hawick the Best' on his gravestone. Walter of Caverton and Cessford (d.1501) 2nd son and successor to Andrew. In 1450 he had a 'letter of reversion' to William Douglas of Cavers for the lands of 'Blackpule' in the Barony of Cavers; he was there stated to be son of Andrew of Altonburn and grandson or nephew of Douglas of Cavers. He witnessed a charter for James, Earl of Douglas in 1454 and another for William Douglas of Sunderland in 1465. In 1471 he was son and heir of Andrew when he took possession of the lands of Borthwickshiels and Harden Wood. In 1472 he was (along with Andrew of Cessford and David Scott of Buccleuch) appointed bailie for the Earl of Angus in order to give sasine of certain lands in Liddesdale to William Douglas of Cavers. In 1473 he had conferred upon him the Bailliary and Justiciary of the lands of Kelso Abbey. In 1474 he had a charter of the lands of Cessford, Auld Roxburgh, Altonburn, Primside and others, which had been resigned by his father, confirmed in 1481. In 1475 he founded a perpetual chaplainry in Kelso Abbey. In 1479 his niece Margaret resigned the Barony of Cessford to him, as well as the lands of Feu-Rule and others. In 1483 he was witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains. In 1484 his brother 'Radulpho' was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infest Robert Elliot of Redheugh in some lands. In 1488 he had a charter for Auld Roxburgh. Also in 1488 he was a commissioner for negotiating a truce with England. He had several passports of safe passage in England and concluded a truce with England in 1494. In 1489, along with James Riddell of that Ilk, he had a decree against him for not paying the teinds to Lilliesleaf Kirk. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1493. Also in 1493 he served as surety for several men at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. Also in 1494 he was a Commissioner on the Border, as recorded in an indenture at Coldstream. In 1494/5 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh and also served as surety for several people. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1498. In 1499 he was Sheriff of Dumfries when he witnessed the sasine for George Douglas, Master of Angus gaining his local titles. Also in 1499 he had a charter from James IV for the site of the ruined castle and town of Roxburgh. In 1501 he and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain compounded the fines of 25 men (mainly Rutherfords), according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1502 Adam Scott had remission for several crimes, including burying and pillaging farms pertaining to him on the waters of Borthwick and Ale. His sons were Sir Robert and Mark of Dolphinston and Littledean. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir Andrew. A younger daughter, Elizabeth, married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch (and was previously married to Philip, eldest son of James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells). Sir Walter (d.1584) of Cessford, son of Sir Andrew. He is mentioned (along with several local Scotts) in the 1529 indenture to end the feud between the Kerrs/Kers and the Scotts. As part of the arrangement one of his daughters was supposed to marry a son of

Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was among the Lairds of the Borders who submitted themselves to the King in 1530 to keep better order. In 1531 he was granted his father's lands of Hassendeanbank by the superior, William Cunningham, the ceremony taking place at Hassendeanbank. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He was Warden of the West Marches in 1536 when he bound himself to keep Edgerston Castle and to apprehend Robert Rutherford. In 1538 he was convicted (along with James Douglas of Cavers and others) of assisting several men who were 'at the horn', thereby breaking an earlier 'band'. In 1536 he resigned the lands of Hassendeanbank to the Baron, William, Earl of Glencairn, and then had a sasine for them (along with his wife) in 1545. In 1537 he granted the lands of Primside to James, son and heir of George of Linton. In 1541 he was tenant of Windydoors in Tweed, as well as Bowerhope in Ettrick. In 1543 he signed the 'Secret Bond' with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English influence over the young Queen Mary. In about 1544 he was recorded as Bailie of the lands of Kelso Abbey. In 1544 he was removed from office as Warden of the West Marches, accused of plotting with the Earl of Angus, assisting the English, and using the office for his own ends. He was among the local Lairds listed as having given pledges to the English in 1544. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 250 of the 500 soldiers who were mustered in Teviotdale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the 'lard of Cesfoorth' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Also in 1547 he was gifted the bailliary of Ashkirk by the King, but in the following year burnt much of the Ale valley in retaliation for Scott of Buccleuch's force attacking Ferniehirst and Cessford. In 1547/8 he and other Kers supported the English at the Battle of Pinkie and in burning lands of the Scotts of Branxholme. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh for this, but released to sign a bond of loyalty along with the Scotts. In 1549 Walter Scott of Buccleuch petitioned the Lords of Council to be able to post summonses against him, John Kerr of Ferniehirst and others at market crosses of Hawick and other towns, following their assisting the English in carrying out destruction; this specifically included the raiding of farms in the lower

Borthwick valley, 'clois tyme of harvist, of the cornis, cattell, guidis, geir, insicht, barnis, byris, biggingis, peilles, places, stables, howss, and duelling places' pertaining to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. There was a further complaint that he had stolen goods from Scott of Buccleuch at Newark. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1550 and was reappointed in 1559. He was implicated in the murder of the same Sir Walter Scott in 1552, along with several other Kers and accomplices; in 1552 he pleaded for mercy to the Privy Council on behalf of the Kers, saying that they had been put to the horn, had their goods seized and were being pursued by the Scotts. In 1553 it was decided not to mete out further punishment and in 1553/4 he led a group of Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers and was also part of another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kers. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. Also in 1561 he was reappointed as Warden of the Middle March. In 1562 he and his son (on behalf of their whole band) promised not to enter Ancrum. Also in 1562 he was the first man who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. A letter is preserved from 1563 in which, as Warden of the Middle Marches, he authorised a certain Englishman to travel without harm. In 1563/4 he had a marriage contract for his son William with Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1564 there was a list of Borders lairds who swore to support him, with proclamations being made at the mercat crosses of Jedburgh, Kelso, Hawick and Selkirk. In 1564/5 he led the signatories of the bond with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his supporters, to end the family feud (partly over the slaying of the previous Sir Walter of Branxholme), promising to go to St. Giles Kirk and ask forgiveness on his knees from God and from the Laird of Buccleuch for the murder of his grandfather. In 1565 his lands at 'the Burnes' were raided and burned, with 2 of his servants killed, by a group of men from Liddesdale; this embroiled him in the ongoing feud between the Elliots and the Scotts. He signed the 'Band of Teviotdale' in 1565. Also in 1565 he had 2 of his own servants warded in England for crimes committed by servants of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and John Rutherford of Hunthill, this included a servant called Thomas Ker. In 1567 his son Thomas had a marriage contract with Elizabeth, sister of Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was an opponent of Mary Queen of Scots and fought against her supporters at Langside in 1568. In 1569 he was surety for Gilbert of Primside Loch. Also in 1569 John Rutherford of Hunthill was directed to relieve him of a debt. In 1569 and 1571/2 he was one of the men to sign bonds to suppress the Border thieves. He supported the Regent Moray at Langside in 1568 and fought for the young King at Leith in 1571. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. He served as cautioner for 'Hekky' Armstrong in 1573 and separately for a group of Elliots, as well as being surety for the Bishop of Dunkeld in 1576. In 1576 he had a 'decreet of transumpt' for the lands of Hassendeanbank. In 1577 he wrote to the Regent Morton about the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and Kers. In about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there was a reminder at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop the feud between him and his son William, and the Rutherfords of Hundalee, Hunthill and Edgerston, plus the Bailies of Jedburgh, George Douglas of Bonjedward and Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1582 he was the main signatory of a bond to heal a feud among the Kers, instigated by the murder of David, brother of the Laird of Linton by Kers of Graden and Davidsons. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst; in 1560 she was 'dame Ysabel Ker lady of Cesfurd' when she purchased quarter of the timber from Melrose Abbey. He was succeeded by his sons Sir Andrew and then William. His other children included Thomas, Agnes, Isobel (who married John Rutherford of Hunthill) and Margaret (who married Alexander, 5th Lord Home). His wife, Dame Isobell, was 'tutrix' for their grandchildren Grisel and Bessie. Walter of Littledean and the Hirsell (d.c.1598) son of Sir Andrew of the Hirsell. He was a servitor of the Governor of Arran 1545-46. He was listed in 1552 among the men claimed to be involved in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was listed as son and heir of Andrew of Hirsell in 1553/4 as one of the Ker pledges to keep good rule against both Scotland and England. In 1561 he was Walter of Dolphinston (son to Sir Andrew of the Hirsell) when appearing before the Privy Council. He is the 'Wat Ker of Dolphingstoun' listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford, and who was also listed among Borderers to appear before the Queen to promise to keep peace on the Border. In 1567 he was 'of Dolphingtoun' among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle; his surety was Robert Ker, younger, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1568/9 he is listed as being 'of Dolphingtoun', son and heir apparent of Sir Andrew of the Hirsell, in the bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his eldest son John is also mentioned being contracted to marry Elizabeth Murray, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. He is probably the 'Watt' of Dolphinston who swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with Walter of Caverton as surety. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. He was served heir to his father in the lands of Borthwick Mains in 1575. In 1576 he was surety for William Ker, younger of Cessford and was also involved in a dispute with others, including the Bailie of Jedburgh. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. In 1580 he complained to the Privy Council about the Haitlies and others. In 1581 his daughter Janet received sasine of lands in Dalcove from Thomas of Dalcove (as part of a marriage contract with Ralph, heir to Dalcove) and he received payment in redemption for the annual rent of Dalcove. He signed the 1582 bond between various Kers, following the murder of David, brother of the Laird of Linton. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4, 1588 and 1591. He was mentioned in a case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain 'bills' of English complainant. In 1590/1 he was subject of a case before the Privy Court for non-payment, his son Mark appearing for him. In 1596 his sureties were his son Andrew of 'Mylnerig' and James, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1551 he married Euphemia, daughter of John Edmondson of that ilk. His children included: Sir John of Littledean, the Hirsell and Jedburgh; Mark, Prior and Comendator of Coldstream, and ancestor of the Kers of Morriston; Andrew; James; and Robert. They are mentioned in a case brought against them by Julian Home, divorced wife of John of the Hirsell, to not molest her in her agreed liferent of the lands of Littledean. Walter of Lochtour (16th C.) son of Gilbert and brother of Andrew of Greenhead. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. Walter (16th C.) witness to a Hawick sasine in 1622 for Allan Deans. He is described as 'ianitore', i.e. a porter. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew and brother of George of Faldonside. In 1598 he had a bond not to harm the Halliburtons, while the Halliburtons had a bond not to harm him or his 4 brothers. In 1599 there were assurances for him and his brother George not to harm a writer in Edinburgh. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622, along with his father James of Bewlie and his father's servants Andrew Turnbull, Thomas Leithhead, John Wight and Robert Winthrope. There was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Walter of Faldonside (d.1664) probably son of George of Faldonside. He is recorded in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1622. He died without issue and this line of Kers became extinct. Walter of Littledean (d.bef. 1739) son of Andrew. He married the heiress of the family of Strother of Fowberry in Northumberland. He may also be the Ker of Littledean who married Jean, daughter of William Elliott, merchant in London, and grand-daughter of Gilbert of Stobs. His children included: Andrew, who had an illegitimate child with his maid, but died before his father; John Strother, who succeeded; Barbara, who married Sir John Scott of Ancrum; and Katherine, who married John Blackadder of St. Leonard's. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1758 he witnessed baptisms for Robert Cowan in Borthaugh and for William Telfer in Borthaugh. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1749); Thomas (b.1751); Jean (b.1753); James (b.1755); and Robert (b.1758). The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and George Lamb. Walter of Littledean (d.1788) son of John Strother, who he succeeded in 1779. In 1754 he married Dorothy, daughter of Alexander Collingwood of Unthank in Northumberland. His children were: a daughter who died young; John Strother, who succeeded; Alexander (b.1758), who also died young; and Walter, who succeeded his brother John Strother. He and his wife are buried in Maxton. Walter (18th C.) smith in Denholm in 1780 and 1782. His surname is recorded as 'Carre' in 1782. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Betty (b.1776); James (b.1780); Belton (b.1782); Andrew (b.1785); Robert (b.1787);

and Mary (b.1791). Maj.-Gen. Walter of Littledean (d.1833), son of Walter. He succeeded his brother John Strother, who died unmarried in 1795. He also owned Nenthorn and East Bolton in Northumberland. In 1805-12 he was one of the 4 people who claimed succession to the Dukedom of Roxburghe. He was descended from the heirs male of the 1st Earl of Roxburghe. He lost the legal battle and this is supposed to have ruined him. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1797 he married Jane, daughter and heir of Matthew Forster of East Bolton. His children were: Walter Forster, last of the male line; Matthew, who died young; Thomas Collingwood, who died without issue; Eleanor (d.1861), who married William Gray of East Bolton; and Essex, who married John Edward Gray, her brother-in-law, and is said to have been the original for 'Di' Vernon in Sir Walter Scott's 'Rob Roy'. Walter Forster of Littledean (d.1841), son of Walter. He was a Brigade-Major in the 9th Regiment and died in Madras. Thus ended the male line of Kers of Littledean. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in 1494/5. In 1502, along with James Elliot (in the same place) and Alexander Gray in Greenbank, he had remission for the murder of John Ford in Selkirk. The same men also had remission for resetting the sons of William Elliot and stealing from Fairnington, with James Ker acting as surety. Additionally, in 1502 Walter, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw was accused of stealing a grey horse from him (but had remission for this and other thefts). William of Mertoun and Yair (d.bef. 1512) younger son of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. He was tenant in the King's lands of Yair in 1469 and re-granted the lease in 1476. He was witness to a sasine in 1471 for the lands of Borthwickshiels and Harden Wood. He was also referred to as being 'de Martoun' (Mertoun, in Berwickshire). In the period 1486-1499 the lands of Yair were let to him and his son William, with his son to have both steadings if he visited the Roman court. In 1493 a man obtained remission for stealing sheep from him. In 1494/5 Lawrence Rutherford in Oakwood and Adam Cranston in Oakwood each had remission for stealing livestock from his farm at Yair. In 1494/5 he served as surety for William Stable in Yair, as well as William Turnbull and James Hall in Selkirk. Also in the same year John Scott in Tushielaw was allowed to 'componer' for stealing sheep and cattle from his farm and tenants at Yair. He was also tenant of Williamhope as recorded in 1477 and 1499. In 1503 he was 'de

Zare' when he witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primsideloch. He continued to have the lease of Yair until at least 1504. He witnessed a bond between Turnbills at Caerlenrig in 1505. In 1505 he was appointed as Coroner and Serjeant of the county of Selkirk. He had a charter for the lands of Boithill in Peeblesshire in 1507. In 1511/2 he was 'in Yare elder' when he witnessed a document in Selkirk. His wife was Christian. His son and heir was probably also William, and may have died at Flodden. William (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of the Laird of Cessford. He was Archdeacon of Teviotdale, recorded in 1491 and again in 1510/1. However, it is unclear if he was ever confirmed in the office. William (15th/16th C.) son of William of Yair and Boithill and grandson of Andrew of Cessford. He leased the Crown lands of Yair along with his father from 1486. In 1499 he had a lease for Yair, along with his father. In 1509 he was on the panel of 'retour' for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor; he was there described as 'juniozem de Zare'. By 1512 his father was deceased when Yair was leased to him and his mother Christian. He was probably succeeded by his son Ralph. Thomas of Yair was recorded in 1528, and surely related, perhaps grandson. This is the family commemorated in Melrose Abbey by the description 'Here lies the race of the House of Zair'. It is possible that he died at Flodden. He is probably the William in Yair who was deceased in 1532 when his daughter Margaret leased land from David Pringle in Yair. William (16th C.) recorded being 'in Schaw' in 1528. He claimed that James Murray had a false sasine for his lands of Shaws in Selkirk. His only son and heir Adam gave sasine to John Scott for lands in Selkirk. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1529/30 and was mentioned in another document in 1530, along with Adam of Shaws. In 1530/1 he and his son Adam sold their rigs in Selkirk to John Morlaw. In 1531 there is a document in which John Aitchison owed him money. In 1533 he and his son Adam sold a couple of tenements in Selkirk. In 1534 they were 'of Sanct Helyne Schaw' when they sold 2 separate halves of a tenement. Also in that same year he is recorded at 'the tower of St Helyne Schaw' when James of Mersington gave a letter of obligation to them. In 1535 he and his son sold a tenement to William Curren. In 1539 he resigned a tenement to Hector Newton and another in 1540 to James Doby; Janet 'in St. Helyne Schaw' also gave her consent and may be his daughter. His son may be the Adam who, with his mother Marion Pringle, received non-entries in 1539/40; in that case his wife was Marion Pringle. William (16th C.) recorded in 'Quhitmureha' (i.e. Whitmuirhall) in 1531 when he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. James in Whitmuir was also listed and probably related to him. In 1533 he assigned part of 'Quhitmurhall' to his 'beloved cousin' John; Bailie Mark and Robert, Vicar in Lindean, were the witnesses. He also witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1534. In 1535 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Rutherfords and Homes. He was probably deceased by 1540 when Janet Ker, widow of William of 'Quhitmurhall' made an agreement along with her son William and George of Linton. William (d.1566) probably son of Ralph of Primside. He was Commendator of Kelso Abbey in the period 1559-66. In 1563 he witnessed a sasine for Spittal-on-Rule, sold by Douglas of Cavers to Gilbert Ker of 'Primsydelock' (probably his cousin). He could be the same as the 'vmquhile Williame Ker of Zair' recorded in 1574 as a surety for a bond between William Douglas of Cavers and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He could be the 'William Karr brother to the said Master George' who in 1541 was offered by Sir Andrew (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. He was murdered in 1566. William of Yair (d.1572) probably son of Thomas. He married Christian Pringle and had 2 sons and 6 daughters, including Andrew who succeeded. Sir William of Cessford (c.1543-99/1600) 2nd son of Sir Walter. He was 'younger' in 1569 when he served as surety for John Elliot of the Park. He may have been the Sir William of Caverton recorded in 1571, when he served as cautioner for 4 inhabitants of Hawick. He was 'youngar of Cesfurd' in 1571/2, when he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was surety for William Douglas of Cavers, James Gledstains of Cocklaw, John Gramslaw of Little Newton, Hector, son of David Turnbull of Wauchope, and several others, who were swearing allegiance to the Crown and not to help the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. He was still younger in 1573 when he was surety for presenting an Elliot. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1576 he was involved in a dispute with Turnbull of Bedrule over lands in Nether Ancrum. In 1577 he was involved with disputes with Davidsons and Taites. In about 1578 he and his father were involved in a bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was younger of Cessford in 1581, and recorded as Warden of the Middle March and Keeper of Liddesdale, when he was bound for the re-entry of Armstrongs and Elliots. He was also Warden and Keeper in 1583 and again from 1585, assisted by his son Sir Robert. He was also Provost of Jedburgh and Keeper of Jed Forest. He inherited Sir Walter's lands, including Hassendeanburn and Cappitrig. In 1583/4 he was Warden when he headed a list of Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1585 he was among the noblemen listed as having their forfeitures lifted. In about 1588 he was appointed as one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He was listed as Bailie Principle of the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf in 1589. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. In 1590 the King ordered that he or his son Sir Robert would be Provost of Jedburgh for as long as they were Warden of the Marches. He was Warden of the Middle March in 1590/1 when a case was brought against the Scottish Wardens, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his cautioner. Also in 1590/1 his cautioners were Andrew of Faldonside and Andrew of Linton that he would not reset Sir Robert (younger of Cessford), who was 'at the horn' for the murder of William of Ancrum. He served as a Privy Councillor in 1592 and was a Commissioner for the King in actions involving Spain in 1588 and the Jesuits in 1589. He served in Parliament in 1597 and 1599. In 1562 he married Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, who was widow of James Tweedie of Drummelzier. In about 1588 he secondly married Jean Johnstone, widow of Alexander, Lord Abernethy. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir Robert who became 1st Earl of Roxburghe. Other children included: Sir Mark of Ormiston; Margaret, who married Walter Scott 1st Lord of Buccleuch; and Elizabeth, who married James Bellenden of Broughton. William (16th/17th C.) described as 'in Newtoun' in 1612, when the Lord Advocate listed a large number of men convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans. He may have been related to Robert Kerr of Newton, possibly even his son. Rev. William (16th/17th C.) son of George of Linton, his mother being Elizabeth Ker. His elder brother was James of Linton. He was minister at Lindean from 1569, deprived around 1599, but still mentioned as Vicar in 1606. He may also have been Bishop of Lisamore in Ireland. In 1619 there was a complaint against him and his wife regarding a contract between them and Archibald Ker, Bailie of Bowden and his son George; he and his wife were ordered to be apprehended and have their goods seized for non-appearance. He married Marion Steill and their children included James, M.A. William of Linton (16th/17th C.) son of George of Linton. He was recorded in 1625 along with his son Andrew infefting Robert Pringle in lands in Clifton. His wife's name is unknown and his children included: Andrew, who succeeded; William; Mark, portioner of Clifton; James; and Margaret, who married Sir William Scott of Harden (as his 2nd wife). William of Yair (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew. He is recorded in 1619 when he was still 'younger'. There was a complaint before the Privy Council that he 'ryding on ane little naig upon the head of the water of Reule' when James Lorraine in Appotside threatened him with a hagbut, which misfired, and he only escaped being fired at again when some others intervened. He was still 'appeirand of Yair' when directed in 1621 to apprehend some rebels for the murder of his cousin James Dalmahoy. He is recorded along with his son Andrew in 1633. The Kers of Yair are buried at Melrose Abbey. William of Linton (17th C.) see William Kerr. Sir William nee Drummond (1622–75) 2nd Earl of Roxburghe. He was son of Jean Ker and John Drummond (2nd Earl of Perth) and hence the grandson of the 1st Earl of Roxburghe. He married his cousin Jean Ker in 1655 and changed his name to Ker when he assumed the Earldom in 1650. In 1650 he was named one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He commanded a regiment in the Dutch service, joining the Royalists when he returned to Scotland, leading to a fine by Cromwell in 1654. The family held extensive lands in Roxburghshire in the 1600s and he was recorded paying large sums in several parishes (including Hassendean and Ancrum) in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1673 he was involved in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk over the division of the common there. His wife's funeral in about 1675 was a lavish ceremony, with representatives of many branches of the Kers. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Sir William of Greenhead (d.1721) succeeded his brother Andrew as the 3rd Baronet of Greenhead in 1676. He paid the land tax in several parishes in 1678. He was fined for supporting Covenanters in 1684, but was also in that year one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He was appointed one of the 2

Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1686, and again in 1702 and 1706. He was thus a member of the last Scottish Parliament, and voted for the Union. He then served on the first Parliament of Great Britain 1707–08. He was also a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690 and 1704 and Colonel of the eastern regiment of militia (appointed in 1689). His brother Gilbert is recorded in sasines in 1710 and 1712. Following his death there was a legal challenge in 1726 between his grandson (also Sir William) and Walter Scott of Whitfield, William Scott of Thirlestane and Walter Scott of Woll. William ‘Bill’ (1895–1917) eldest child of Hawick poet Tom. He became an apprentice at the Royal Bank of Scotland in Hawick at the age of 14. He enlisted in 1914 and became a Corporal in the Lothian and Border Horse. He was killed in action at Salonika in Greece. He is buried at Sarigol Military Cemetery and is listed on the Royal Bank’s War Memorial in Edinburgh (see also Kerr).

Kereti (ke-re-tee) n. Gerard (d.1363) canon of Amiens, and counsellor to the King, who also held the Rectorship of Hawick. In 1346 he obtained papal permission not to be ordained for 7 years, in order to enjoy the ‘living’ of several parishes. He was canon of Amiens and clerk and counsellor of King Philip VI of France (who lost the battle of Crécy that same year and died in 1350). It is unclear whether he was in France during this period. His brother Henry, Rector of Villers-en-bois in the Diocese of Amiens had the same petition in 1346. He may be the same ‘Guido Kieretti’ (or ‘Quiret’) who was Archdeacon of Glasgow over at least the period 1342–61 (also spelled ‘Kerete’).

kerlin (ker-lin) n., arch. an old woman – ‘What ails the orpit doytterd stycke’, The kerlyn loudly said’ [JTe] (variant of carlin).

Kerncross see Cairncross

Kerr (ker, kawr) n. Abraham W. (19th C.) clothier of Kerr & Mackenzie, 72 High Street. This could be the premises of the ‘Mr. Kerr’ recorded near there on Wood’s 1824 map. He married Charlotte, daughter of Hawick jailor Michael Anderson, and later re-married. Adam (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, who, along with William Miller, was rebuked in 1713 for riding on stilts on the Sabbath ‘thereby causing crowds of bairns to follow them’. Alexander Boyd

(1810–67) younger son of Gen. Thomas William, his grandson Alexander Nairne would succeed to the Abbotrule Lairdship. He was born in London (when the family still owned Abbotrule). He had a military career with the 24th Madras Native Infantry, ending as an Honorary Colonel. He was involved with suppressing the rebellion at Coorg in 1837. In 1838 he married Jane Helen Campbell, daughter of Lt. Gen. Alexander Murray MacGregor and Lady Charlotte Sinclair. Their children were: John MacGregor, whose son would succeed to the Abbotrule title; Charlotte Sarah Fanny; Amelia Margaret, who died young; Helen Isabella Ramsay, who died unmarried; and Charlotte S.F., who married J. Pringle, surgeon of the East India Company; and another who died in infancy. He retired to Edinburgh and is buried in the Cannongate. Alexander Nairne ‘Alec’ (1882–1964) elder son of John MacGregor, born in India and educated at Marlborough. He joined the Army in India and retired as a Lieutenant Colonel; he also served in East Africa in WWI, for which he received the Military Cross. He was also a keen sportsman. He became the 10th Kerr of Abbotrule on the death of his cousin William in 1919. He married Eva Theresa Wayne and their only child John Kinloch became the 11th Kerr of Abbotrule. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.1405) son of Thomas. He was Cup-bearer to King Robert III. He married a daughter of Edmonson of that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.c.1450) son of Thomas. He accompanied the Earl of Douglas to Rome in 1450. He is mentioned by Thomas the Rhymer. He married Jean, daughter of Crichton of Crichton and was succeeded by his son Ralph. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.1488) son of Ralph. He married Mary, daughter of Herbert, Lord Herries. Their children included: Thomas, who succeeded to Kersheugh and may have been the first of Ferniehirst; and John, ancestor of the Kerrs of Greenhead, Chatto and Sunlaws. Sir Andrew ‘Dand’ of Ferniehirst (d.c.1545), son of Thomas of Smailholm and Margaret Kerr of Ferniehirst (although other accounts say he was the eldest son of Thomas of Ferniehirst and Catherine Ochiltree). He could be the ‘Andream Ker de Vuercraling’ who was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands and titles of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. He served as surety for Simon Young in Roughlee in 1493, as well as Adam Kirkton. He was ‘Andream Ker de Farnyhirst’ in 1494 when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. In 1494/5 there was a ‘suit of peace’ against him, not to harm the Vicar of Oxnam. He was referred to being of 'Vuir Craling' (i.e. Over Crailing) when Sir William Colville resigned the half Barony of Feu-rule in 1499, and being 'of Farnyhyrst' in 1501/2 when he held the half Barony; William 'Elwald' was there described as his follower (perhaps acting as his Bailie). In 1502 he was fined for failing to produce Patrick and Philip Turnbull in court. In 1502 he served as surety for David Oliver ('Nae Guid Preist') in 'Stryndis' (probably 'Strange' in Rulewater) who had a remission for several raids around the Jedburgh area; he was also surety for another David, Robert, 'Little John', Matthew and Martin Oliver, all in the same place. He was also surety for Jedburgh men in 1502, as well as for his brother William. Additionally in 1502 he resigned lands in Oxnam to John Fawlaw of Softlaw. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh. In 1508 he was fined by the High Court of the Judiciary. In 1509 he resigned part of the Barony of Oxnam. In 1510 he was involved, along with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch, in an indenture with the Erskines, Barons of Synton. He witnessed the 1512/3 charter of Sir William Drumlanrig when he sold Broadlee. In 1513 he witnessed a charter for John Nesbit of Dalziel. He probably led some of the Borderers at the 1513 Sclaterford skirmish. On the night after the Battle of Flodden, he broke into Kelso Abbey and ousted the superior, installing his brother Thomas as the new Commendator. In 1525 he was among the Border Barons who signed a bond with the Earl of Angus for keeping the peace. Also in 1525 he was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill. In 1526 he was involved in the 'Battle of Skirmish Field', where he supported the Earl of Angus and others against the Scotts and Elliots, who tried unsuccessfully to capture the young James V. He was listed in 1526/7 among prominent men charged by James V not to attack the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton while those men were in 'respite' for the charge of treason. He was mentioned (along with several local representatives of the Scott family) in the 1529 indenture to end the feud between the Kerrs and the Scotts. In 1530 he was one of the Border chiefs who were briefly imprisoned for not keeping thieves in check. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1538. In 1541 he claimed to hold the lands of Ashiestiel in feu. He became Bailie of Jedburgh Forest in 1542. Documents of the early 1540s give him and his son Robert the rights to various lands, as well as the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. In 1544 he and his son John were taken prisoner by the English during a raid on Rulewater. He swore fealty to Henry in order to be released, and sided with the English army in 1545. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth and had at least 7 children, including: Thomas, who pre-deceased him; Sir John, who succeeded; Janet, who married George Turnbull of Bedrule, and secondly married Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; Isabel, married Sir Walter Ker of Cessford; Christian, married Sir James Douglas of Cavers; Margaret, who married James Menzies from Perth and secondly a Hay of Smithfield; and Robert of Ancrum, whose family carried on the Ferniehirst title after Sir John's line died out. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as 'Andrew Karr man to Robine Elliott' in 1590. He was accused of being in a group led by William of the Steele who stole livestock and prisoners from Catton in England. Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst (d.1631) 1st Lord Jedburgh, eldest son of Sir Thomas of Oxnam and Ferniehirst. He was 'younger of Farnieherst' in 1583/4 on a list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. His curators were William Douglas of Cavers and Robert Ker of Ancrum. He succeeded to Ferniehirst on the death of his father in 1585. In 1587 he served as surety for Rutherfords and Frasers, that they would appear before the Privy Council. In 1587/8 he had a charter confirming the bailiary of the lands belonging to Jedburgh Abbey (which had been held heritably by his father, grandfather and great-grandfather before him). In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. He was involved in an ongoing feud with the Scotts of Buccleuch. He is probably the Laird who was accused of being responsible for a group of 100 men raiding part of Tynedale in 1589. In 1590 his servants John Chalmers and John Kirkcaldy were killed, leading to bonds by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch not to molest him, and by 1595 he had a contract affirming he was satisfied that Scott had made amends. Also in 1590 he was accused by an Englishman of being responsible for his servant, who had stolen a horse. In 1590/1 he was cautioner for William Ker of Cessford, in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens; however, at about the same time he was among those who complained that William Ker of Cessford had reset his son Sir Robert Ker, who was 'at the horn' for the murder of his kinsman William of Ancrum. In 1591 he was a 'gentleman of the King's bedchamber' to James VI. He was Keeper of Liddesdale in 1592, under the Duke of Lennox. He was temporarily denounced as a rebel in 1592 for helping the Earl of Bothwell. In 1593 he succeeded to the lands of Kirkaldy of Grange, through his mother. Also in 1593 he is recorded as Deputy Keeper of Liddesdale when ordered to enter 'brokin men and utheris, inhabitants of Liddisdale'. In 1594 he and his brother Thomas were denounced as rebels for a bond they made with Sir Robert Ker, apparent of Cessford. In 1595 he inherited half the Barony of Feu-Rule from his father Sir Thomas. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation of him and Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre with Sir Robert Ker, younger of Cessford, over the murder of William Ker of Ancrum. In 1596 he had a bond for the good behaviour of several Kerrs and others; in 1602 he failed to appear to answer for many of them who were at the horn for murder and other crimes in Jedburgh. In 1597 he sat in Parliament as a minor baron. His initials, and those of his wife, were inscribed at Ferniehirst Castle in 1598. He was listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. He acted as Captain of the King's Guard and Commissioner of the Middle Shires from around the time of the Union of the Crowns. He was also Provost of Jedburgh during the slaying of his brother Thomas by a band of Turnbolls in 1601; several Turnbolls were convicted in a protracted court case, including a counter case against him and several Kerrs and other supporters for killing and maiming some of the Turnbull party, in which it seems that the legal system was somewhat stacked in favour of the Kerrs (and he used his later elevated position to avoid trial). In 1601 he was found to have failed to produce 'Eckie Turnebulle of Stanyleg' and he and his cautioner Thomas Ker of Cavers were ordered to pay the penalty. Also about 1601 his servitor James Turnbull of Hobsburn is recorded disbursing money. He served as Warden of West Teviotdale 1600–03. He is probably the Andrew of Ferniehirst who held a 'wadset' in 1606 with Walter Scott of Todrig for the lands of 'Hardenhead'. In 1615 he had a remission for the murder of several Turnbolls and other crimes taking place while he was a Commissioner. In 1619 he was recorded as Captain of the Border garrison, with Sir William Scott of Harden as his Lieutenant.

He was created Lord Jedburgh in 1622 and inherited served lands from his father in 1625. He served as an Extraordinary judge of Session and a Privy Councillor. In 1629 he is recorded gaining the Barony of Feu-Rule (as well as other lands) as heir to his deceased son, Sir Andrew, but died himself soon afterwards. In 1631 he granted a confirming charter for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. In 1584 he married Anne, eldest daughter of Andrew Stuart, Master of Ochiltree. He had a son who died before him, as well as 6 daughters, and was succeeded by his half-brother James of Crailing. His children were: Sir Andrew of Oxnam, Master of Jedburgh (d.1628); Margaret, who married Sir John Macdowall of Garthland; Jean, married Thomas Kennedy of Pinwhirrie; Alison, married John Rutherford of Hunthill; Anne; Mary; and Liliass, married a McCulloch. Sir Andrew of Oxnam (d.1628) Master of Jedburgh. He was son of Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh, but died before his father. As heir-apparent of his father, he was referred to as 'Master of Jedburgh'. He held land in the Rule valley and specifically the Barony of Feu-Rule. He became owner of the lands of Appotside in 1610. He appears to have removed Robert Elliot 'in Gledstains' in 1610, not accepting him as a 'kindly tenant'. He had a 'contract of wadset' for the lands of Templehall and Brewlands with George Turnbull in 1612. In 1615 he had remission for the slaughter of Hector, son of Walter of Bewlie at Lilliesleaf about Martinmas 1604, and of Hector Turnbull of Stenedge in 1611. It seems likely he was acting as an agent of the Commissioner for the Middle Shires, Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. However, there appears to have been an ongoing feud between the Kerrs and the Turnbolls. He was appointed Captain of the King's Guards in 1618 and was appointed as a Commissioner for the Middle Shires in the same year. In 1619 appointed as a Commissioner for Teviotdale, in the absence of Robert, Earl of Roxburghe. In 1622 he still sat on the Commission for keeping peace on the Border. He was also one of the Senators of the College of Justice. He married Margaret Kerr, 3rd daughter of Mark, 1st Earl of Lothian; she was widow of Lord Hay of Yester, and usually called 'the Lady Yester'. He had no issue, and in 1629 his lands of Ashiestiel were inherited by his father. His funeral procession was elaborate, with a great number of local lairds carrying banners and other regalia from Jedburgh Castle to the Kirk. Andrew of Sunlaws and Chatto (d.1661) son of the first James of Chatto, and uncle of John of Chatto and Sunlaws. He is easily confused with a nearly contemporary Andrew of Chatto. He purchased the lands of Chatto, Sunlaws, etc. from the Earl of Traquair after John of Chatto and Sunlaws had been forced to sell them. He was a supporter of the Commonwealth cause in Scotland, who was made Sheriff and Commissary Depute for Teviotdale. He was captured by Scottish Royalist forces in 1653 and brought to Borthwickbrae by a small force under Sir Arthur Forbes, who were pursued by an English Commonwealth force. There was a skirmish at Philip, where he was released, but run through the thigh by an English trooper in the struggle. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Wright of Gladswood. His children were: Joan; Christian, who married her cousin, John of Chatto; and William, said to be 'a weakly boy', who was served as his heir in 1678. Andrew of Chatto (1628–1705) son of Sir Thomas of Redden and Jean Ker, daughter of James of Chatto. He married Isabella, daughter of George Cranston of Bold, who died in 1675 aged 36. He secondly married Agnes (d.1718), daughter and coheir of John Abernethy, Bishop of Caithness. His children were: George (1657–88); Andrew of Chatto (1661–1702); James (1664–65); John (1665–95); Thomas (1657–1714), goldsmith in Edinburgh, whose son James of Bughrig was M.P. for Edinburgh; James (again, 1669–1712); William (1673–1731), whose son William was a Bailie in Kelso; Jean (b.1659); Agnes (1671–1763); Isabella (1675–75); Robert (b.1678); Charles (1680–bef. 1759); and Henry (b.1682). He was ancestor of the Kerrs of Buchtrig and the Haie. Andrew (17th/18th C.) son of Mary Kerr and John Kerr. He inherited half of the lands of Fodderlee through his mother. Andrew (18th C.) farmer at Hudshouse and Singdean. In 1755 all the stock from his farms was sold off and the Duke of Buccleuch advertised for a new tenant. It is unclear what happened to him afterwards. Andrew (18th/19th C.) servant at Stobicote, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same Andrew was servant at Newton in Kirkton Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot. Andrew (b.1786/7) from Cavers Parish, he was a carter in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 9 South Liddell Street and in 1851 and 1861 at about 13 North Hermitage Street. He married Helen (or 'Ellen') Turnbull and their children included: William (b.1816); Isabel (b.1818); Walter (b.1820); John (b.1823); Andrew (b.1826); Robert (b.1829); Mary (b.1835); and Betty (b.1838). Andrew

(1826–1900) born in Castleton Parish, son of Andrew and Helen Turnbull, he was a farm worker. He was a ploughman at Grenhill Cottage in Ashkirk Parish in 1861, farm Steward at Greenhill in 1871, agricultural labourer at New Belses in 1881 and farm worker at Old Belses in 1891. In Lilliesleaf in 1853 he married Catherine, daughter of Andrew Gray. Their children included: Andrew (1854–1930); Jane Isabella (1857–98); Walter Sturrock (1861–1924); and James (b.1867). Anne (d.1667) daughter of Robert, Marquis of Lothian and brother of William, she was Countess of Lothian in her own right. In 1642 she and her sister Jean were served joint heirs to their father in many lands and rights, including the church of Hobkirk. She married Sir William of Ancrum, who became 3rd Earl of Lothian. Her sons included Robert, 1st Marquess of Lothian and Charles of Abbotrule. Charles (d.1690) 2nd Earl of Ancrum, son of Robert, the 1st Earl and his 2nd wife Anne Stanley. He sat in the Scottish Parliament as a Peer 1671–81 and was said to be a Parliamentary speaker of note. He sold Ancrum to Sir John Scott of Kirkstyle in about 1670. In 1678 and 1680 his lands in Abbotrule were valued at £572 and those in Hobkirk at £300. He married in 1662 and had a son who died before him. He is said to have ended his days in poor circumstances and broken-hearted. His titles eventually merged with those of his brother's family, the Lords of Lothian. Charles of Abbotrule (1642–82) 3rd son of Sir William, 3rd Earl of Lothian and Ann, who was sister of Robert, Marquis of Lothian and Countess of Lothian in her own right. He is the ancestor of the Kerrs of Abbotrule, his father being the 1st Kerr Laird. He held a charter of the lands of Abbotrule in 1648 (or perhaps 1658), being given this Lairdship during his father's lifetime. This was confirmed in 1664 and 1665, whereby he received full title to the estate. The land was created a barony in 1667. From 1667 until 1678 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1674 he was part of the dinner party at Swanside, after which James Douglas of Cavers was murdered by Andrew Rutherford (for which he was tried and executed). He is said to have spent much time in London and received a ring from King Charles for having the best manners at Court. In 1678 he paid land tax on £300 in Hobkirk Parish and £572 in Abbotrule Parish. He may also be the 'Mr Charles Kerr' who was listed holding the teinds of lands in Jedburgh Parish. In 1666 he married Cecily (or Cecil), only daughter (by his 2nd marriage) of Patrick Scott of Langshaw and Ancrum. His children were: William, the eldest son, who succeeded to Abbotrule; Charles (b.1669), who died young; Robert (b.1671), who also died young; Patrick (b.1673), who farmed at Lustruther, and was mentioned in his brother's entail; Cecily (b.1670); and Margaret, who appears to have been his daughter who married John Scott of Gorrenberry. His son William was served as his heir in 1680 (which may have been while he was still alive). Little else is known about him. Charles (c.1734–56) 5th Laird of Abbotrule, eldest son of William. He succeeded to the Lairdship in 1752 when still quite young. He entered the service of the Honorable East India Company, probably being introduced through Col. Elliot of Wells. After receiving a commission in 1754, he died only 2 years later, it is said in the defence of Calcutta. Since he died without children, he was succeeded by his brother Patrick. Charles of Wells (18th C.) listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. It is unclear how he was related to other Kerrs. This was probably the 'Wells' near Jedburgh (where he paid the Land Tax in 1771). Charles (1767–1821) 7th Laird of Abbotrule, eldest son of Patrick. He was educated at the Royal High School in Edinburgh. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to David Erskine and became a Writer to the Signet in 1789. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott at school, and was to serve as the inspiration for 'Darsie Latimer' in Scott's 'Redgauntlet'; some of their correspondence was published in 'Walter's Postbag' (1932). In 1792 he succeeded to the Abbotrule estate, which was probably already in debt. He is recorded in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of Abbotrule. He also paid the dog tax there in 1797. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson's Scots dictionary in 1808. In 1811 he was recorded as owner Gatehousecote, parts of Grange (formerly possessed by John Elliot) parts of Ruletownhead, 'Bossithill' and Burnkinford (formerly possessed by George Dickson and George Elliot), Doorpool, Midquarter and 'The Parks of Abbotrule'; together they were valued at about £1100. He married Mary Ann Thompson from Peel, Isle of Man, who was only 16 at the time; he was on the island to escape creditors. He was known for debts, gambling and duelling, and fled to Jamaica, where he worked as a clerk. In 1792 he returned to claim his inheritance following the death of his father. He immediately sold off Gatehousecote and Over Bonchester, but for some reason the sale was never completed, and he had them back again. In 1804 he also had a stable block built, bearing his initials. He purchased the neighbouring farm of East Fodderlee in 1806. He joined the Roxburghshire Cavalry and became recruiting officer. By 1800 he had fought 4 duels and purchased a commission as Paymaster of the 68th Regiment of Foot (the Durham Light Infantry). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In about 1814 he arranged to sell the unenclosed slope of Bonchester Hill to George Cleghorn of Weens, but desiring to change the deal at the last moment, it fell through; he blamed Cleghorn for this and is said to have had all the trees cut down on the hill to spoil the view from Weens. He then returned to the army and was Paymaster for the Royal Dragoons, perhaps serving at Waterloo. He sold East Fodderlee in 1815. In 1818 he was forced by his creditors to sell all of the Abbotrule estate (to Robert Henderson), ending his family's connection with the area, although the Lairdship passed to son Patrick and still survives in name today. His children included: Margaret (b.1790), who married John Oliver, younger brother of William Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre; Mary Anne (b.1795); Patrick (b.1796), who succeeded; and William (1800–23), who died at Penrith. He may also have had an additional daughter. He died at Weymouth only 3 years after selling the estate. Charles (d.1835), M.D., younger son of William, who bought Gateshaw. He was Assistant Inspector of Hospitals for the Army Medical Department and was knighted for his services in 1822. In 1801 he purchased his brother's estate from his creditors. After retirement he lived at Corbethouse, while he allowed his brother to live at Gateshaw. In 1835 he bequeathed his estate to his nephew William. Rev. Charles Alexander Gray (1933–) educated at the Open University, Birmingham University and Edinburgh Theological College, he was ordained in 1967 and became Curate at St. Cuthbert's in Hawick 1967–9. He went on to become a Priest in Birmingham and then Rector in Musselburgh, retiring in 1986. Christian of Chatto and Sunlaws (18th C.) eldest surviving daughter and heir of William. She was known as 'Lady Chatto'. She extended the house at Sunlaws and had a new one built at Chatto. She married her cousin Charles Kerr, but they had no children. She left the estates to her distant relative William, son of Alexander Scott of Thirlestane and Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden. Elizabeth

'Betty' (b.1878/9) from Denholm, she was a grocer in Newcastleton. In 1852 she was listed as a shop-keeper in the village. She was also called 'Hunter', which was probably her married name. She lived at about 22 South Hermitage Street. In 1841 she was libing with Betty Hutton or Waugh, and in 1851 and 1861 with her niece, also Betty Kerr. George of Corbethouse (16th C.) had a charter for the lands of Corbethouse in Morebattle Parish in 1526. He witnessed a charter in 1535. A transaction with George Ker of Linton in 1540 makes it clear that he probably the same man as George, son of Robert 'in Cruikitschaws' (i.e. Crooked Shaws). He made a pledge to serve the English King (along with many Kers and others) in 1544. He may be the 'Johnne Ker of Corbet-hous' listed in 1553/4 among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers. He was succeeded by his sons Andrew and then James. George of Lintalee (17th C.) recorded as 'George Kerr of Lintly' in 1628 when he was one of the pall-bearers at the funeral of Lady Isobel Kerr, wife of William, Viscount Drumlanrig, when she was buried in Edinburgh. In 1628/9 he was part of the funeral procession for Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh; there he is 'of Lintilly'. George (17th C.) described as portioner of Fodderlee in 1631 when he had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose for lands in Lessuden. He must have been related to the others Kerrs of Fodderlee. George (18th C.) servant to the Douglasses of Cavers in 1755. He married Isabel nichol and their children included: Betty (b.1752); Margaret (b.1755); Nelly (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1759). George (d.1782) resident of the Kirkwynd. His death registration records him as 'George Kerr Kirkwind'. He could be the George who married Betty Aitkin (also from Hawick Parish) in 1763. He seems likely to be the George who is recorded in 1811 as previous owner of the lands called 'Allers Garden' (then owned by John Scott), which seem likely to have been in the modern Allars Crescent. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1822 he married Helen Scott, who was also from Hawick. Their son James was baptised in 1824. Gilbert of Gateshaw (b.1749) son of William and Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. His father was Town Clerk of Kelso and Chamberlain to the Duke of Roxburgh, purchased Gateshaw from Sir William Scott of Ancrum in 1758, bringing it back into Ker hands. He was taxed for having a female servant in the 1780s. In 1780 he was 'younger of Gaiteshaw' when added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. Around 1800 he took over as factor of Wells estate from his uncle Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn. This also meant he was given the key of Gibraltar, a memento of his relative Lord Heathfield, which he took back to Gateshaw when he retired about 1818. He married Margaret, daughter of John Hood of Stoneridge, Berwickshire. They had 9 children: William, who succeeded his uncle, Sir Charles; Lieut. John of the 19th Regiment, who died in Ceylon; Gilbert of the Royal Navy; Thomas, merchant, who died in Jamaica; Jane; Eliza; Cecilia; Margaret, who married Francis Brodie; and Agnes. It is said that his large family resulted in financial problems, so that Gateshaw was purchased from his creditors by his brother Charles. James of Corbet (16th C.) son of George and brother of Andrew, who he succeeded. His estate was also called 'Corbethouse' and included the tower of Gateshaw. He was listed as being 'of Corbithows' in 1560 when he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. His father Andrew of Corbethouse, had been killed by John Rutherford of Hunthill and his friends as part of this feud. As part of the arrangements to resolve the feud his daughter 'Haufie' was to marry William, 2nd son of John Rutherford of Hunthill. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He was also listed as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. However, he was one of the men involved in signing the further bond between the Kers and the Scotts in 1568/9; he is also listed there as being 'of Corberthouse'. He may be the James in Corbet whose son John witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1582. In 1588 and 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is probably the 'James Karr laird of Corbett' recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with an Englishman. His sons John and Andrew were among men accused in 1590 of theft and reset from Woodend, with his sons John and James being accused in a separate case in 1590. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Kerr of Heiton. He was succeeded by his son John and also had a daughter Liliass (who married a grandson of the Earl of Bothwell). James (16th/17th C.) brother of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst, He was among Kers and others who in 1601 besieged and burned a house in Jedburgh, and were declared as rebels. James of Chatto (d.1615) 3rd son of Kerr of Greenhead.

He may be the 'James Carr of Greneheadd' who was a deputy of the March Warden recorded in 1583; however, it is possible there are 2 generations of Jameses here. He is recorded as son to the Laird of Greenhead in 1586 when instructed to enter into court his servants George Middlemas and Archie Elliot. He could be the James 'sone to the Laird of Grenheid' who was named in the complaint by the Homes of Wedderburn against the Kers of Littledean in 1593. He became the 1st Kerr Laird of Chatto after purchasing the lands there in 1595. In 1612 he was listed among local men accused by the Privy Council of charging too much interest on loans. He later bought other lands, including Sunlaws from William Rutherford in 1614 and Hangingshaw, Gartshawfield and Pennymuir near to Chatto. He married Christian, sister of Sir John Stewart, Earl of Traquair. His children included: James, the eldest son, who succeeded; Andrew, whose daughter Christian married her cousin John; Margaret, eldest daughter, who married Andrew Scott of Aikwood; and another daughter. His widow remarried to William, brother to Sir Robert of Ancrum. In 1622 some men were accused of stealing some of her cattle from 'Hakkerstonne'. James of Chatto and Sunlaws (d.1631) eldest son of James of Chatto. He was said to be extravagant in habits and left debts for his successor. He married Joan, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. He was succeeded by his son John and also had 3 daughters. Sir James of Oxnam and Crailing (d.1645) succeeded from his brother Thomas, being served heir in 1603. He was son of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and Janet, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was half-brother of Sir Andrew, Lord Jedburgh, and succeeded to the title of Lord Jedburgh, although he did not assume it (perhaps because there was a more valid heir, their distant cousin, James, grandson of William who was full brother of Andrew Lord Jedburgh). His family were in reduced circumstances compared with the times of his father. In 1611 he had a charter for some of the lands in Roxburghshire forfeited by Lord John Maxwell. In 1619 he complained that more than 100 men came to Oxnam Moor, breaking up most of the turfs that had been cut for him there and taking away the rest; this was presumably a dispute over the rights on common land. In 1620 he had a charter if lands of Belses, conferred on him by Nichol Rutherford of Hundalee (his father-in-law). In 1622 he was stated to be Captain of the Guard to the Privy Council for the

Borders. He served on Parliament for Roxburghshire in 1630. He is probably the Lord Jedburgh who granted a deed to the lands of Barnhills in 1633 (hence had superiority over these lands). He was also known as 'of Hundalie' having inherited that estate from his wife Mary, daughter of James Rutherford of Hundalee. His children included: Robert of Crailing, 3rd Lord Jedburgh; and Jean, who married John Ker of West Nisbet. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1792 he married Elizabeth (or 'Lizzie') Oliver, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Janet (b.1793) and James (b.1796). James (b.c.1800) green grocer at about 73 High Street. His wife was Elspeth and their children included Elizabeth and James. James Alexander eldest son of John Kinloch, he is the 12th Kerr of Abbotrule. He married Alice Gibbs. James (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Goodfellow and their children included John (b.1840). Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. She married George Turnbull of Bedrule, who died shortly before 1528. In 1530/1 she married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (as his 2nd wife). She held a third of the lands of Bedrule from her first husband. She received the 'liferent' of the Lordship of Jedforest as part of the marriage contract with her 2nd husband. Because they were 'secund and thrid of affinite, thriddis of consanguinite, and thrid and ferd of affinite' they had to ask for special permission from the Pope. In 1546, as part of the marriage contract she was required to come to Lilliesleaf Kirk to receive a sum of money; she protested that she was in dispute with Walter at that time (perhaps it was during the divorce) and would not accept the money. However, this marriage ended in divorce, with no children. Sir John (d.1562) of Ferniehirst, 2nd and succeeding son of Sir Andrew. In 1538 he was Chamberlain for the Crown's lands of Jedforest, and was still Chamberlain in 1539, with the returns made by his brother Robert. He served as Depute to his father, who was Warden of the Middle Marches, being recorded in this role in 1541. In 1542/3 he had to appear to answer the charge of murdering Sir John Striveling of Keir. In 1544 he was taken prisoner by the English, along with his father, following a raid on Rulewater. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 125 of the 500 horsemen who were mustered in Teviotdale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He served as Bailie of Jedburgh Abbey's lands in 1546 and was Bailie of Jedforest both under the Crown and the Earls of Angus. He was probably the 'lard of Fernyherst' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1547 and 1548 there are records of several bonds (with Elliots, Armstrongs and others) for entering prisoners with him at Ferniehirst. In 1547/8 he was one of the Kerrs who was accused of supporting the English at Pinkie, and of ravaging the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme later in 1548. This included the farms of Goldielands, Todshawhill, Whithope, Wiltonburn, Borthaugh, Todshawhaugh, Wilton Green and Whames. He was knighted in 1548. He led a force that recaptured Ferniehirst from the English in 1549, from which event the motto of the Kerr's of Abbotrule derives, 'J'Avance'. It is also sometimes suggested that this event is the origin of the 'Jethart Baa', the balls representing the heads of English soldiers. A chronicler of the time describes how they butchered the entire French garrison of Ferniehirst. He was part of the feud between the Scotts and the Kers; in 1549 Walter Scott of Buccleuch petitioned the Lords of Council to post summonses against him and others at the market crosses of Hawick and other towns, following their assistance of the English in carrying out local destruction. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. He was knighted in 1552. He was indicted for his part in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1552, along with several other Kers and his brother-in-law James Douglas of Cavers. In 1553/4 he was listed among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Ruthfords not to harm the Kers. Also in 1553/4 his estate was given to his sons Andrew and William, following his non-appearance to answer charges of murdering Walter Scott of Branhholme. In 1557 he complained to the Regent about the behaviour of the Turnbells of Bedrule and Hallrule raiding his lands. He purchased the lands of Ruecastle in 1558/9. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1561/2 he (and his son Sir Thomas) had a bond with several Elliots to enter a Routledge as a prisoner at Ferniehirst. There was a decree of 1562 at his instigation, against the 'invaders' of his lands of South Synton. In 1561 and 1562 he raised a court action regarding disputed lands in Feu-Rule, in which he claimed half the Barony and $\frac{2}{3}$ of the other half, resulting in a 'decreet of division' with Agnes Herries. He appears to have acted as some kind of assistant Warden, since there are several bonds with him in the late 1550s and early 1560s for the capture of thieves. He married Catherine, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford. Their children were: Sir Thomas of Oxnam and later Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married John Hay, Lord Yester; Elizabeth, who married Andrew Lundin; Andrew of Nethergogar; William, Parson of Bedrule; and John. In 1562 it is recorded that the Barony of Feu-Rule (essentially the Parish of Hobkirk) was divided between him and Agnes Herries. John of Shaw (d.1688) brother of Andrew of Kippilaw, he lived at Hyndhaughhead in Southdean Parish. In 1665 at Smailholm he married Catherine, eldest daughter of Sir Robert Carr of Ettal. Their children included: Margaret (1666–90); Alison (1668–1725), who married Robert Ruthford of Fairnilee and was probably mother of Alison who wrote a version of 'Flowers of the Forest'; Thomas, Robert and Marie, who died young; William (b.1679); and Marie (again, b.1681). He died at Hyndhaughhead and is buried in Southdean Kirk. John of Chatto and Sunlaws (17th C.) son of James and Joan Murray. He was forced to sell his estates to his great-uncle the Earl of Traquair, although they were later bought by his uncle Andrew. He married his cousin Christian, youngest daughter of Andrew Kerr. His children included Henry, who married Miss Wauchope of Edmonstone, and whose daughter Barbara married Dr. Alexander Scott of Thirlestane and had a son who became William Scott-Kerr of Chatto. John of Gogar (17th C.) received the 'ward and non-entry' of the lands of Whitslade in the period 1663–72. John (1665–95) 3rd son of Andrew of Chatto and Isabella Cranston. He is said to have died at Fodderlee, so he must have been related to Robert of Fodderlee, presumably either his nephew or cousin. He was recorded being 'off fotherlie' in 1690 among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr (who may have been related to him). He is probably the 'John Ker in Fotherlie' recorded in Abbotrule Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the John 'of Fodderlie' whose will is recorded in 1695. John (17th/18th C.) servant of Walter Pringle, proprietor of Roughheugh Waulk Mill. In 1713 the Bailies heard a 'process of riot and assassination' against him, brought by Alexander Buchan, surveyor of ale in Hawick. John of Cavers Carre see John Ker. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Miller and their children included: William (b.1779), botanist; Andrew (b.1791); and Robert (b.1793). In 1816 he made a declaration (included in the Hawick Parish birth records), along with James Miller (labourer at Northhouse), stating that his son William had been born in Hawick in 1779. John William Robert (1794–1841) 7th Marquess of Lothian, son of William, 6th Marquess. He was styled Lord Newbottle until 1815 and Earl of Ancram 1815–24. He expanded his family estates, including acquiring Bonjedworth, Timpendean and other lands. He was a Conservative politician, serving as M.P. for Huntingdon and was Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard in the House of Lords. As Lord-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire he was charged with keeping the peace during some of the troubling elections of the early 19th century. In July 1841 he entered Hawick with a troop of dragoons who had been waiting at Hassendeanburn in order to quell the near riots. He married Cecil Chetwynd-Talbot and was succeeded by his sons William Schomberg Robert and then Schomberg Henry. John MacGregor (1839–1915) born in India, only son of Alexander Boyd, his son was to become the 10th Kerr of Abbotrule. He joined the East India Company in 1856 and served with the 3rd Madras Light Cavalry, eventually becoming a Commandant in the Army. He retired as a Colonel after serving for 32 years. He married Janet Margaret Nairne of Dunsinnan House, who reached the age of 100. Their children were Janet Frances, Alexander Nairne (who succeeded to the Lairdship), Ida Margaret, Lorraine MacGregor and Evan Sinclair. He was very keen on shooting, fishing and golf. A portrait exists of him as a child, as well as later photographs. John Kinloch (1924–94) only son of Alexander Nairne, he became the 11th Kerr of Abbotrule on the death of his father, although the family had long ago sold the estate. He followed the family tradition into the Indian Army and was seconded to the Singapore Police after WWII. He married Janet Barbara Ferguson and their children James, Andrew and Rosemary were born in Singapore, with Georgina following after their return to Britain. Loraine MacDowall (19th C.) eldest son of Gen. Thomas William Kerr of the Abbotrule family. He was born in Ceylon, served in India with the 65th Native Infantry, retired as a Lieutenant and became a merchant in Edinburgh. He married Mariane White and they had 4 children, with William Alexander succeeding to the Abbotrule Lairdship title. Margaret (c.1570–1645) daughter of Mark, Earl of Lothian. She first married James Hay, 7th Lord Yester and then remarried to Sir Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh. She was thus known as Dame Margaret, Lady Yester, and was founder of Lady Yester's Church in Edinburgh. She still owned land in Kelso and Sprouston Parishes in 1643. In her will she left money for the poor and schoolmasters of the parishes of Jedburgh, Sprouston, Hobkirk and Oxnam. In Hobkirk Parish the sum of £100 still yielded significant interest in the early 19th century. Mark (d.1584) 2nd son of Sir Andrew of Cessford. He became Abbot of Newbattle in 1546 and Commendator at the Reformation in 1560. In 1547/8 he was among the Kers who burned lands in Ale Water that belonged to Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme. He was listed as brother of Sir Walter of Cessford in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He married Helen, daughter of George Leslie, 4th Earl of Rothes. He was succeeded by his son Mark, who became 1st Earl of Lothian. Other children included: Andrew of Fentoun and Romanno Grange, who married Isabella Whitlaw; George; William, who married Jean, daughter of James Johnstone; and Catherine, who married William Maxwell 5th Lord Herries of Terregles. Mark (1553–1609) son of Mark, Abbot of Newbattle. He became Master of Requests in 1577, Privy Counsellor in 1587 and Lord of Parliament in 1591. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1594 he was 'lord of requestis' when appointed a deputy justice for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. In 1597/8 he was 'Lord of Neubottle' when he complained about Scotts from Gamescleuch, Glack and 'Jedwartfeild' attacking and capturing his servant Ralph Ker. He was created 1st Earl of Lothian in 1606. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Maxwell, 4th Lord Herries of Terregles. He was succeeded by his son Robert. His other children included: Margaret, who became Lady Yester; Isabel, who married William Douglas, 1st Earl of Queensberry; and Lillas, who married John, 8th Lord Borthwick. Mary (17th/18th C.) only daughter of Robert of Fodderlee. She married John Kerr in 1686. In 1689 she was infefted in half of the lands of Fodderlee, and in turn her son Andrew was infefted in these lands in 1695. She was recorded as owner of Fodderlee in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. She was recorded as owner of 'the east side of Fotherlie' in 1707, with a value of £80. Mary nee Scott (b.c.1813) keeper of a lodging house at 6 Cross Wynd. Her brother was James Scott, engineer and millwright. She married Thomas Kerr, who was a balcksmith on the Cross Wynd. However, she was already a widow by 1851. Her children included Margaret, Euphemia, Mary and Andrew. Ned (17th C.) merchant listed in Hawick among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. The forename given may be an error, since it is essentially unheard of locally at that time. Nichola (15th/16th C.) daughter of George of Samuelston and his first wife, Elizabeth Carmichael. She became her father's heiress and married Alexander, Lord Home. The couple were granted the lands of Samuleston according to a charter of 1497. Her name is sometimes confusingly written 'Nicolas'. Patrick (17th/18th C.) younger son of Charles, 2nd Laird of Abbotrule. He was described as 'of Lustruther'. He married Agnes, daughter of Andrew Ker of Bloodylaws, and they had a son, William who is recorded in 1741. Patrick (18th C.) preacher at Teviothead from 1757 until about 1763 (When James Erskine took over). His subsequent history is unknown. It is possible he was the Patrick who was ministered at Caerlaverock Castle and moved to Eskdalemuir about 1762. Patrick (d.1791) 6th Laird of Abbotrule, a younger son of William. He inherited the estate from his brother Charles in 1756, but there was some complication over the confirmation of his succession (specifically, the establishment of the death of his brother), which did not occur until 1762. He was sometimes referred to as 'the Abbot'. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Francis Pringle and Walter Scott. He became Writer to the Signet in 1768. He was the driving force behind suppressing the Parish in the 1770s, possibly in part because of a falling out with the minister. He supposedly then took some of the best glebe lands for himself and had the manse pulled down. It is said that 17 years later, following a Sunday Sacrament at Southdean, a pale horse appeared to the minister and elders, with a ghostly apparition of the hated laird; this was also the same day that the Laird died (although the story no doubt improved with the telling!). He was apparently bad tempered, and in later years seldom left the estate. In 1780 he objected to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto being on the Roxburghshire electors' roll (on account of having sold the liferent of much of his property to others); in addition he objected to addition of all the liferenters of parts of Minto and Headshaw proposed by Elliot. Clearly this was part of a political battle between the Whigs (including Elliot and his invented supporters) and the Tories (which must have included Kerr himself). In 1788 his estate in Southdean Parish was valued at £940 4s 8d, and he also held feu-duties of lands in Hobkirk Parish and teinds for lands in Jedburgh Parish. In 1788 he is listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, his privately circulated description being that he was then 'Embarrassed in his affairs. A family' and in the election probably a supporter of 'the Marquis of Lothian, but thinks himself indifferently used by the Marquis's Trustees'. In 1766 he married Jean (or Jane), daughter of Thomas Hay of Huntingdon and Mordington. His children were: Charles (b.1767), who sold Abbotrule; Thomas William (b.1768), who became a General; Margaret (b.1769), who remained unmarried; Beatrix (b.1770); and Amelia Wilhelmina (b.1771), who had a sketch made of her, lived in Edinburgh and died unmarried. After his death his widow lived on South Bridge in Edinburgh. Patrick (1796–1864) 8th Kerr of Abbotrule, and the first one not to own the family estate, which had been sold by his father Charles. He became a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, having joined at age 15. He married Margaret Lewis and their daughter Mary Ann kept a school. He may also have married Helen Mitchell. He died at Chepstow and was succeeded by his uncle's grandson William Alexander. Ralph of Kersheugh (d.c.1350) early local ancestor of the Ferniehirst branch. About 1330 he was given lands near the Jed Water, with the Douglasses as superiors, possibly being the first family member to settle in Teviotdale. The lands were previously known as 'Scraesburgh', known by him as 'Kersheugh' or 'Kershaugh' and were essentially the same as what was later called Ferniehirst. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. Ralph of Kersheugh (d.c.1460) son of Andrew. He married Mary, daughter of Towers of Innerleith. His sons included: Andrew, who succeeded; and Robert of Yair. Sir Robert (d.1511) Warden of the Middle March who was said to have been murdered by an English trio called Starhead, Lilburn and John 'the bastard' Heron. This was used as an excuse for King James embarking on the invasion that led to Flodden. The date may be erroneous and confused with Sir Robert Ker of Caverton, who died c.1500. Robert of Woodhead and Ancrum (d.1588) 3rd son of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. In 1539 he made the returns for the Crown land's of Jedforest, with his brother John as Chamberlain. He had a charter of the lands of Woodhead in the Lordship of Over Ancrum in 1542. He also had a charter for a third of the lands of Dirleton, and also Newton in the Barony of Bedrule. He may be the 'Robyn Ker' who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. In 1551 he served on the panel for David Home of Wedderburn inheriting lands in Ettrick Forest. He became quite wealthy, and was involved in dubious activity around Jedburgh, at one point taking several Burgesses prisoner. It appears that in 1548 he applied for an assurance from Somerset that he could travel to his own house in order to serve the English King. The house he built at Ancrum had an inscription 'Robert Ker and Isobel Home Foundar and Compleitar 1558'. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He was in ward in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1564, as a result of accusations by Andrew of Faldonside. He is mentioned as one of those excepted in the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs in 1564/5. He was in ward in Edinburgh in 1565, with Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst, Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and John Rutherford of Hunthill, younger, as sureties. He was released, but this was an error and he was ordered to present himself again to be warded in 1565/6, with a case brought against him by William Turnbull, Burgess of Edinburgh, resolved shortly thereafter. In 1567 he signed a bond to support the infant King James on the throne and was also among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1569 he was a surety for George Rutherford of the Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. He was in ward in 1571 and also ordered to pay for a cask of wine. There is an existing list of his 'plenishing' as removed by the Jedburgh authorities (led by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, along with other Turnbells and Rutherfords) in 1571; in 1573 he complained about the raid on his house, but the authorities ruled that he had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, and had no right to complain. In 1571 and 1574 he was surety for his illegitimate sons Robert and William. In 1582/3 he was fined by the Privy Council along with Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Gavin's Jock Elliot for the non-appearance of 2 Elliots from Ramsieggill. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He signed a marriage contract in 1586 between his son Robert and Helen Grahamslaw of Newton. Either he or his son was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace in 1617. He married Isabel, daughter of David Home of Wedderburn. He was succeeded by his son William, and was grandfather of Sir Robert, the 1st

Earl of Ancrum. Other children were Robert of Newton, Thomas, Catherine (who married Henry Haliburton of Mertoun) and Isobel (who married George Douglas of Bonjedward). Robert of Newton (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Woodhead and Ancrum. In 1586 he purchased Newton, in Bedrule Parish from John Grahamslaw. Also in 1586 he served as surety for his brother William of Ancrum to appear before the Privy Council; he was also surety for William Kirkton at the same time. He was later in 1586 denounced as a rebel for not appearing. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1590/1 he was among those who complained that William Ker of Cessford had reset his son Sir Robert Ker, who was 'at the horn' for the murder of his brother William of Ancrum. In 1592 his surety was James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose. In 1594 he was denounced as a rebel for an assurance signed with Sir Robert Kerr, heir apparent of Cessford; along with his brother William he was warded in Dumbarton Castle. He married Helen, daughter of the same John Grahamslaw and was succeeded by his son Robert, who married Euphemia Douglas. He and his wife were declared rebels in 1601 for failing to make payment to Sir William Stewart of Traquair; Stewart complained in 1603 that although they had been in the Jedburgh Tolbooth, they were then freely living in their own house, and so they were to be denounced once more. In 1619 there was a dispute between his wife and her son-in-law John Scott of Huntly; so he must have had a daughter who married Scott of Huntly. Robert (d.1624) eldest son of Mark, he was 2nd Earl of Lothian. He married Annabella, daughter of Archibald Campbell, 7th Earl of Argyll. Without surviving male issue his elder daughter Anne became Countess of Lothian in her own right and married Sir William of Ancrum, who became 3rd Earl of Lothian. In 1641/2 his daughters Anne and Joanna were served heirs to many of his lands and rights, including the church of Hobkirk. Robert of Newton (d.c.1639) son of Robert and uncle of Robert, Earl of Ancrum. In 1622 he (or perhaps his father) gained lands resigned by his cousin Sir Robert Kerr of Ancrum. His lands included Newton in Bedrule Parish. In 1628 he was listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. He married Euphemia Douglas. He was succeeded by his son William. Sir Robert 1st Earl of Ancrum (1578–1654) son of William of Woodhead and Ancrum (who was killed in 1590) and descended from the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His brother William is recorded in 1602. Also in 1602 he was cautioner for some Rutherfords in Jedburgh and he signed the bond among Border lairds for keeping the peace, when he was Provost of Jedburgh. He was made a Knight of the Bath in 1603. He was served heir to his father in 1603 and his grandfather in 1608. He followed King James to London and spent much time in Court; however, he was forced to flee the country, having become involved in the feud between the Maxwells and Johnstones, in which he slew Charles Maxwell in a duel. He then spent time on the Continent, where he collected art (later presenting them to Charles I). Restored to his post in the Royal Bed-chamber, he acted as Charles I's advisor on Scottish affairs. He as Captain of the King's bodyguard until 1613 and served as Keeper of the Privy Purse. He was created Earl in 1633 and had his portrait painted by John Eycks. He was known for his interest in the arts, and wrote poetry himself. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Murray of Blackbarony, and sister of the wife of Sir John Riddell of Riddell. He secondly married Anne Stanley, only daughter of the 6th Earl of Derby (whose portrait was painted by Cornelius Johnson), and widow of Sir Henry Portman. His children (all but the first by his 2nd marriage) were: William, who became the 3rd Earl of Lothian; Charles, who became 2nd Earl of Ancrum; Stanley, who died without issue; Vere, who married Dr. Wilkinson of Oxford; Anne, who married Col. Nathaniel Rich of Stondon; and Elizabeth. There is an interesting correspondence (sometimes called the Ancrum papers) still in existence between him and his son, covering about the last 30 years of his life, during some of which he was living in Holland to escape Cromwell's England, as well as his creditors. He was a friend and supporter of the poet John Donne and was bequeathed one of the most recognisable portraits of him when he died; this is now in the National Portrait Gallery. He died in Holland, being reduced to poverty in late life. Robert (17th C.) son of George and brother of Sir Thomas of Cavers. He acquired the lands of Middlemas Walls (also called the Mains of Softlaw). He is probably the 'Robet Ker of Cavers' who complained to the Privy Council in 1628 about William Turnbull in Braidhaugh obstructing the apprehension of his son James, and for 'hurting and wounding him'. In 1643 he is 'of Middlemistwalls' when recorded owning lands on Sprouston Parish. He married Isabel, daughter of Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and was probably succeeded by his son Thomas of Middlemas Walls. Robert of Prieston (17th C.) owner of the north part of Prieston in 1678. He was listed in 1680 among Borderers convicted for being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking 'the Tower and Castle of Hawick'; however, he did not appear in court, and was presumably in hiding at that point. Robert of Fodderlee (17th C.) recorded in 1685. He must have been a son of one of the landed branches of the Kerrs; he was surely related to John, the 3rd son of Andrew of Chatto, who was born in 1665 and died at Fodderlee in 1695. In 1686 his only daughter Mary married John Kerr. Robert (d.1692) son of Sir James of Crailing and Marie Rutherford. He inherited Hundalee through his mother, who was daughter and heiress of Nichol Rutherford of Hundalee. He repurchased the Ferniehirst estate from the Earl of Lothian. He became 3rd Lord Jedburgh in 1670. He paid land tax for Ricclaton, Ferniehirst, Hundalee, Over Crailing and other lands in 1678. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Alexander Hamilton of Innerwick and widow of Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth. He had no children and was succeeded by his distant relative William, eldest son of the 1st Marquess of Lothian. However, the estates of Hundalee and others were inherited by his sister's son, John Kerr of Cavers. He was effectively the last of the male line of Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His will is recorded in 1693. Robert (1636–1703) eldest son of Sir William, he was 4th Earl of Lothian from 1675, became 3rd Earl of Ancrum in 1690 and the 1st Marquess of Lothian in 1701. He was a volunteer in the Dutch War in 1673. He paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. About 1685 he raised a troop, with Sir William Eliott of Stobs as Lieutenant, to round up local Covenanters. He supported the Revolution of 1688 and served the government of William III. He married Jean, daughter of the Marquess of Argyll. He had 10 children, including: William, who was known as Lord Jedburgh before he succeeded; Charles; John, of the 31st Regiment; Mark, commander of the 11th Dragoons, who is mentioned in the song 'Johnnie Cope'; and Mary, who married James, Marquess of Douglas, and was mother of the Duke of Douglas and Lady Jane, who had twins at the age of 52, with the succession argued in court. Robert of Cavers (17th/18th C.) son of John and Agnes Ker. His name is often written 'Carre'. He succeeded to the patronage of Bedrule Kirk, as well as the Cavers Carre lands. In 1718 he married Jane, daughter of Robert Milne of Balnillo, and she died in the following year. He secondly married Helen, sister of Sir Walter Riddell, Baronet of Riddell. His son Thomas inherited the estate, but died in his youth. The lands then went to his brother John. However, patronage of Bedrule went to his daughter Agnes and her husband John Hume of Ninewells and Ferney Castle (brother of David Hume the philosopher). He also had another daughter, Margaret. Robert (b.c.1780) shepherd at Southdean according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Robert (b.c.1790) born in Cavers Parish, he was a tailor in Newcastleton. He is probably the Robert in Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 5 Montagu Street. His wife was Helen or Ellen and their children included Robert (carpenter), John, Francis and Walter. Robert (b.1822/3) son of tailor Robert. He was a joiner in Newcastle. He married Margaret, daughter of John Cavers. Their children were Margaret, Robert, an unnamed daughter, John, Walter, John Cavers, Helen, Janet, and Francis Napier. The family emigrated to Manitoba, Canada. Robert (19th/20th C.) resident of Effledge. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Schomberg Henry (1833–1900) 9th Marquess of Lothian, son of John, the 7th Marquess and brother of William Schomberg, the 8th Marquess. He spent much of his life in the diplomatic service, in Lisbon, Tehran, and then several European cities. He was Colonel of the 3d Battalion Lothian Regiment. He contested Roxburgh county for the Conservatives in 1868, losing to Sir William Scott of Ancrum. He lived for a while at Monteviot. He gained the lands of Belses, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow from John Edmund Elliot of New Belses in 1872. He also served as Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire and was also Deputy-Lieutenant of the county from 1885. He was also Rector of Edinburgh University, Secretary of State for Scotland, Keeper of the Privy Seal, Captain-General of the Royal Company of Archers, Gold Stick of Scotland, etc. Lothian Street in Hawick was named after him. In 1865 he married Lady Victoria Alexandrina Montagu-Douglas-Scott and hence was son-in-law of Walter, 5th Duke of Buccleuch. His children were: Cecil Victoria Constance, who married John Walter Douglas-Montagu-Scott; Walter William Schomberg, who died from a gun accident in Australia; Margaret Isobel, who lived to 96; Schomberg Henry Mark, died in infancy; Mary, who married Henry Kidd; Helen Victoria Lilian, who married Col. Frederick Walter Kerr; Robert Schomberg, who succeeded, but had no sons; Victoria Alexandrina Alberta, who married Maj. William Gosling; and Isobel Alice Adelaide, who married James Cospatrick Hepburne-Scott. The Lothian titles were inherited by the families of his brothers Ralph and then Walter. Thomas of Kersheugh (d.1389) son of Ralph. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Somerville of Carnwarth. He was succeeded by his son Andrew. He may have had another son, John, who settled near Aberdeen. Thomas of Kersheugh (d.c.1430) son of Andrew. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Home of that Ilk. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, and had other sons Thomas and James. Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst (d.1499) son of Andrew of Kersheugh. He was the first of his family to be designated 'of Ferniehirst'. He probably built the original tower there, sometime around 1490. He also had a new charter of his lands from Archibald, Earl of Angus. In 1474 he was summoned to Edinburgh by the King, probably relating to keeping peace on the Border. In 1476 he is listed among other Border Lairds in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville. He married Catherine, daughter of Robert Colville of Ochiltree (who died at Flodden). It is unclear if they had any sons, but they also had a daughter, Margaret, who married Sir Thomas of Smailholm (with whom he is easily confused, and indeed some genealogies have claimed they are the same man). Thomas of Smailholm (d.1484) son of Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn (whose name is usually spelled 'Ker'). He was probably the builder of the original Smailholm Tower in the 1470s. He may be the 'Thom Ker' who was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. He married Margaret Kerr of Kersheugh, daughter of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst, through whom their son probably gained the lands of Ferniehirst. He was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. Other children include: Ralph of Primside, ancestor of the Cavers Carre branch; Thomas, Abbot of Kelso, d.1528; George; and William, who had a charter of Langlee and 'Gallastongis'. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness in 1501 to a notorial instrument relating to Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst's lands of Feu-rule in the Barony of Cavers. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas of Lintalee (15th/16th C.) first man named on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branhholme in 1517. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. He may be related to the later Ralph of Lintalee. Sir Thomas of Oxnam and Ferniehirst (d.1585) eldest son of Sir John and Catherine Ker of Cessford. He could be the 'Thomas Karr son to John Kerr' who in 1541 was offered on behalf of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. In 1561/2 he (and his father Sir John) had a bond with several Elliots to enter a Routledge as a prisoner at Ferniehirst. He succeeded on the death of his father in 1562. Also in 1562 he was among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Later in 1562 he was ordered to appear before the Privy Council and to remain in ward, along with his brothers Andrew and William. He was a strong supporter of Queen Mary, accompanying her to Dumfries in 1565, and helping her escape from Lochleven in 1568. In 1564 he was listed as the 'Lard of Pharnyhurst' among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was involved in a feud with the Homes about 1564. Also in 1564 he was warded in Edinburgh Castle, at least partly for non-payment of teinds to the Commendator of Jedburgh; it is also reported that he and his brothers Andrew and William forcibly took the teind sheaves of Bedrule and Innerleithen. In 1564/5 he was specifically listed as an exclusion in the bond to end the feud with the Scotts, while his brothers Andrew, William and John were listed as part of the bond. In 1565 he was explicitly instructed (along with John Rutherford of Hunthill) to enter one of his servants at the next truce day, to answer accusations from Englishmen; later this was increased to 2 servants to relieve the Warden, with he himself being warded in Edinburgh Castle to redress the charges against his servants, and then was ordered to pay the expenses to Ker of Cessford. He signed the 'Band of Teviotdale' in 1565. Also in 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. Additionally he was a surety for Robert Kerr of Woodhead in 1565 and was among those summoned before the Privy Council to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and the people of Jedburgh. In 1566 he was ordered not to molest his mother, Dame Katherine Ker, or her other children and servants. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He was also ordered to present a number of Turnbells and others to answer charges of raiding into England. In 1568/9 he is still explicitly excluded from the bond signed between the Kers and Scotts. In 1569 he also signed the bond to suppress thieves on the Border. In 1569 he and some others were sureties for George Rutherford in the Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. In 1570, along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, he raided into England, with Sussex and Hunsdon retaliating by demolishing Ferniehirst the same year. He was Baron of Feu-Rule, as well as holding other local titles; however, he appears to have forfeited these temporarily. His mother brought a decreet of removal against him in about 1571. He was accused of treasonous acts in 1571 (and confirmed in 1574), probably meaning that he had not given up Catholic sympathies. In 1571/2 he fled from Edinburgh, meeting his supporters under Alexander Trotter and was reset at Ancrum Woodhead by Robert Kerr. He later fled to France, but returned several years later and was rehabilitated in 1581. In 1581 he gained the estates, baronies and lordships given up by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. This included the Barony of Feu-Rule and lands of Hallrule and others. In 1581 he also had a 'benefit of pacification' from the King, for crimes committed by him and his followers in the period 1567-74. There was a dispute between him and Thomas Turnbull, Baron of Bedrule, as well as the parishioners of Bedrule, over the rights of the benefice, the teinds etc.; this must have been at least somewhat related to the Reformation and the ouster of the Catholic priests. He was also Provost of Jedburgh. He may have been temporarily Keeper of Hermitage in 1563 when some Elliots are recorded in a bond to enter Jock Elliot with him. He was Warden of the Middle Marches, appointed sometime in the 1570s and perhaps again in the last couple of years of his life. He certainly served as Warden of the Middle Marches and Keeper of Liddesdale Castle by 1583. In 1585 a fray took place following a meeting of the March Wardens, in which Sir Francis Russell was killed (the English first saying it was an accident, but later accusing him of deliberately plotting the murder). His Royal Commission for pursuing offenders in order to keep peace on the Border was revoked in 1585, since he was found to be using this power to pursue his enemies for his own purposes. As a result he was committed to ward in Aberdeen, where he died. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Kirkaldy of Grange and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh. Other children by his first marriage were: Julian (or Janet), who married Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth, and Thomas Hamilton, 1st Earl of Haddington; Margaret, who married Robert, Baron Melville; Mary, who married James, son of William Douglas, 6th Lord Morton; and William, who married Elizabeth Lyon and was also called Kirkaldy of Grange. Portraits exist of him and his wife. In 1569 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and sister of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch; this was part of the 1564/5 bond between the Kerrs and the Scotts, and he was still owed £1000 of dowry money according to the 1574 testament of Sir Walter Scott. In 1573/4 his wife was granted lands in Oxnam and Ashiestiel (while he was in exile), but there were complaints that Dame Catherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst (his mother) and Andrew Kerr (his brother) were harassing her farms. Their children included: Sir James of Crailing; Thomas of Oxnam; Ann, who married John Elphinstone, 2nd Lord Balmerinoch; and Robert, 1st (and last) Earl of Somerset, who took the surname 'Carr'. In 1590 his son and wife were charged with not repaying a debt that he had incurred while in England. In 1592/3 his wife Jean Scott, 'Lady Pharnyhirst' was in dispute with Sir Robert Ker of Cessford over crops from Redden. Thomas of Oxnam and Over Crailing (d.1601) younger son of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and brother of Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh, who was Provost of that town. There was a serious feud between the Kerrs and the Turnbells in the later years of the 16th century and early years of the 17th. He and his servants Andrew Hogg and George Gardner were declared as rebels in 1596 for the murder of Henry Oliver in 'Hyndmureheid'; he claimed that they had a 'relaxation', and in 1599 the Sheriff of Roxburghshire was accused of failing to bring the men to justice. He was killed at Jedburgh Rood Day Fair in 1601 in a fight between the 2 families, when about 30 Turnbells and allies from the Minto area came to specifically seek him out. He was slain along with his servant George 'Glaisher' (or 'Glaidner'), while on the other side Robert Turnbull of Bewlie and John Middlemas (brother of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel) were killed, and several men were seriously wounded. A number of Turnbells were murdered in the following years by members of his family, including Hector Turnbull of Bewlie, who may have been one of those responsible in 1601. The case continued until 1604, with Hector Turnbull of Lilliesleaf declared a rebel for the murder of him and his servant. He had no children and his brother Sir James succeeded to the Oxnam and Crailing titles after his death. Sir Thomas of Redden (16th/17th C.) 3rd son of William of Ancrum and Woodhead. He is probably the Thomas of Ancrum who in 1628/9 was part of the funeral procession for Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh. He may be the Thomas 'Ker of Ancrum' whose lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale are recorded in 1632. He spent much time abroad in the army and after his return was knighted in 1633. In 1637 he objected his daughter Jean marrying Sir John Ker of Lochtour, but the marriage went ahead later anyway. In 1643 he appears in the county valuation records for Sprouston Parish as being 'of Gateside, his lands in Reddin'. He married Jean, daughter of James of Chatto. Their children were: John (d.1645); James of Redden, whose successor was Capt. Charles of Redden; Andrew of Chatto; Jean, who married Sir John Kerr of Lochtour and secondly Sir John Wauchope of Nithsdale; Katherine; Christian; and Vair (b.1636). He secondly married Mary Douglas and they had daughters Margaret, Mary and Anne. He also had an illegitimate son, George (b.1639), with Agnes Wilson. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as being 'of Ancrum' when his extensive lands in Liddesdale were listed in a Privy Council document. It is unclear who he was, since Sir Robert was Laird of Ancrum at that time (and would become 1st Earl), but he may have been the same as Thomas of Redden, brother of Sir Robert. His Liddesdale lands included Catlee, Dinlees, Over and Nether Tinnisburn, 'Civishill', Staneygill, Foulwood, 'Wilwigholms steid', 'Megie Twedmes', Whisgills, Raltonholm, Copshawholm, Gillfoot, Christie's Hill, Pollock and Kirkhill. He was also part of a bond, recorded in 1637. Thomas William (1768–1825) 2nd son of Patrick, the 6th Laird of Abbotrule and brother to Charles, the 7th Laird. He was born in Southdean and entered military service as a Lieutenant in the 73rd Highlanders (Black Watch), eventually becoming a Major General. He may have served as Governor General of Ceylon and it is said that Raeburn painted his portrait. He married Sarah Anne, daughter of William Ker of Meadow House in Berwickshire, and she died in 1812, aged just

26. They had 5 children: Loraine McDowall, who was a Lieutenant in the 65th Native Infantry and later a merchant in Glasgow, and whose son William Alexander succeeded; Margaret Amelia, who married John, son of Francis Brodie; Alexander Boyd, whose grandson Alexander Nairne succeeded; Charles, who died young; and Sarah Anne, who married Alexander Maclean, minister of Carnwarth. The 3 oldest children were shown in a painting along with their mother. He is buried at Cannongate Cemetery, Edinburgh. Thomas (c.1810–bef. 1851) blacksmith on the Cross Wynd. He married Mary Scott in 1837; she was probably daughter of millwright Gideon Scott, who lived next door at 8 Cross Wynd. The 1841 census records him at No. 6, living with his wife Mary and children Margaret and Euphemia. There were further children, Mary and Andrew, but he died before 1851, when his wife was a widow running a boarding house at the same Cross Wynd address. His daughter Mary married Rev. Robert Fordyce, minister at West Port. William (16th C.) brother of Andrew of Ferniehirst. In 1529/30 he had a charter for the lands of Woodhead in the Lordship of Over Ancrum. He could be the ‘Willelmo Ker’ who witnessed the ‘precept’ by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme infefting his son David in his lands in 1528. He may be the William who was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill in 1525. It is possible that he was the William who had 101 sheep of his stolen by the Olivers of Strange according to a case at the 1502 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh; the Olivers had remission for these thefts, their surety being Andrew of Ferniehirst. He was also listed as brother of Andrew in a 1502 case where he was pledge for ‘gilbert chiridane’ in Jedburgh. William (d.c.1563) a younger son of John of Ferniehirst. He was presented to the Kirk of Bedrule in 1557. In 1562 he was recorded as sometime Parson of Bedrule (and spelled ‘Ker’). Also in 1562 he is probably the William, along with his brother Thomas of Ferniehirst, and their other brother Andrew, who were ordered to remain in ward, or be fined £1000; this was presumably related to accusations against his brother Thomas. In 1563 he is recorded along with Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and Sir John Allan in a ‘crown precept’ brought by Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and the parishioners of Bedrule, charging them to produce their writs proving that they are entitled to the benefices of the parish. This suggests some dispute over who was the minister in this time of the Reformation. Probably William held much of the benefice (like in pre-Reformation times), while John Allan was the actual minister. In 1564 he was accused along with his brothers Thomas of Ferniehirst and Andrew, were accused of forcibly taking the teind sheaves of Bedrule and Innerleithen parishes. William of Ancrum and Woodhead (d.1590) son of Robert of Ancrum and brother of Robert of Newton. In 1572 he was convicted for the murder of 2 Burgesses of Jedburgh and in 1574 was obliged to appear before the Privy Council. In about 1578 he was excluded from a bond by the Kers and Rutherfords, since he had been declared a fugitive for the murder of John Rutherford and others in Jedburgh. He was still ‘younger’ of In about 1583 he obtained the gift of the ‘escheat of the liferent’ of the lands belonging to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, his son Walter and Mungo Bennet of Chesters. He was described as William of Ancrum in 1586, when he had an obligation to Hugh Nisbet of Reishill. He was son and heir apparent of Robert in 1585/6 when 6 he was involved in a court case with the Bailies of Jedburgh about whether lands granted to him were in their jurisdiction; they also blamed him for the murder of 3 local men and said he was in a feud with the Moscropes. In 1586 he insisted that the Sheriff of Teviotdale should enter him into possession of the lands of Bedrule, Chesters and Halden, but failed to appear personally. Also in 1586 Andrew Ker of Greenhead served as surety for him to appear before the Privy Council; at the same time he was surety for his brother Robert and they were both stated to be sons of Robert of Ancrum when reminded to appear ‘to answer touching the quietnes and gude ordour of the Middle March’. They were all later denounced as rebels for not appearing. He was also denounced in 1586 for not appearing to answer charges of stopping the Commendator of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is probably the Kerr of Ancrum listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. He married Margaret, daughter of Alexander (or Archibald) Dundas of Fingask, who was widow of Sir David Home of Fishwick. Their children were: Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Ancrum; Sir Thomas of Redden; Isabel, who married John Ker of Corbethouse; William of Overton, Sunlaws and Linton, Groom of the Bedchamber to James VI and Charles I; Andrew, who probably died abroad, unmarried; and George, probably Canon of Glasgow. He was killed by Robert

Ker (younger of Cessford), who was later 1st Earl of Roxburghe; in 1590/1 there were cautioners appointed for other Kers not to reset Robert Ker and his accomplices, who were 'at the horn' for his murder. The feud between the 2 families was not resolved until letters and payments made in 1606.

William (16th/17th C.) recorded 'in Newton' in 1612 among men accused of charging too much interest on loans. This was probably the Newton in Bedrule Parish, and he was surely related to the other Kers of Newton. It is recorded that he appeared to answer the accusation and hence probably paid a fine and was released. William of Overton and Sunlaws (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Ancrum and brother of Sir Robert of Ancrum. He was sued for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Bewlie and others in Jedburgh in 1601, but was never convicted. He was among Kers and others, dependents of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who in 1601 besieged and burned a house in Jedburgh, and were declared as rebels. Probably the same William 'of Lintoun' was in 1617 among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He was on an assize in 1622. Also in 1622 he was appointed to assist Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in keeping peace on the Border. In 1625 he had a charter of the lands of Overton from his father William of Ancrum, and was styled 'of Linton' in a confirming charter of 1629; this makes him easy to confuse with the Ker Lairds of Linton, to whom he was not closely related (however, it is not clear if it was the same Linton). In 1630 he was served heir to his brother George, Canon of Glasgow. He served as Groom of the Bedchamber to both James VI and Charles I. He married Isabel, daughter of Sir John Ker of Littledean and the Hirsell. Their children included: James; Janet (or Joneta), who married Lancelot Pringle; William, who married Anne, daughter of Philip, Lord Wharton; Henry; Letitia (or Lettice), who married Alexander Popham of Littlecote; and Anne, who first married a younger brother of her sister Letitia's husband, and secondly married Philip Lord Wharton, father of her brother William's wife! He was still alive in 1640. William (16th/17th C.) Sheriff-Clerk Depute of Roxburghshire, recorded in 1620 when he was witness to a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule. He may be the 'William Ker' who signed the Covenant in Hawick in 1638. William of Newton (17th C.) son of Robert, from whom he was served 'heir special' (perhaps meaning he was underage) in 1639. This was composed of Newton, including the newly built mill, and 'lie Smid-diellands'. He was confirmed in the lands of Newton (in Bedrule Parish) in 1642/3. He is probably the 'W. Kerr of Newtone' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1646-47 and 1656-58 he was one of the Roxburghshire representatives in Parliament. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was Lieut.-Col. of the regiment of horse raised in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the 'carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch'; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined. He was probably the Laird of Newton who paid the Land tax on £853 in 1663 and 1678. He married Agnes, daughter and co-heir of John Abernethy, Bishop of Caithness. He may also have married Janet, daughter of Sir William Murray of Dunearne. He had 3 daughters, Euphemia (who may have been 2nd wife of William Kerr of Cherrytrees), Agnes and Margaret (who married Andrew Kerr of 'Sowcoat', possibly Chatto). Another daughter may have been Christian, who married William Turnbull of Sharplaw. He could be the William of Newton whose will is recorded in 1691 (unless that was the next generation). Sir William (1605-75) Earl of Lothian, eldest son of Sir Robert, Earl of Ancrum by his 1st wife Elizabeth Murray. His 1631 marriage to Anne Kerr (daughter and heiress of Robert, 2nd Earl of Lothian), who was countess of Lothian in her own right, made him 3rd Earl of Ancrum. A series of letters between him and his father still exists. He married Anne Kerr, who was Countess of Lothian in her own right, and was elevated to the peerage as the 3rd (or 1st) Earl of Lothian. His marriage reunited the Ferniehirst and Cessford branches of the family. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. He raised the Teviotdale Regiment (also known as 'Lothian's Regiment') in 1639 as part of the Covenanter force. The Regiment crossed the Tweed with Montrose in 1640 and when Newcastle was captured Lothian was made Governor, with a garrison of 2,000 men. He resigned after the Battle of Fyvie, and the Regiment was disbanded in 1641, but reformed the next year. He had a confirmation of the Lordship and Barony of Jedburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was appointed as one of the Colonels of Foot for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. Also in 1643 he was recorded as holder of the teinds for much of Jedburgh and Linton Parishes, as well as the lands of Over Ancrum, Woodhead, Braidlaw, Palacehill and Belses, the teinds of Over Ancrum and lands in Longnewton Parish. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He acquired Ferniehirst and Riccaltoun in 1646 (from the creditors of Andrew, Lord Jedburgh), but in 1669 settled them on Robert Kerr of Crailing (later Lord Jedburgh). He became Scottish Secretary of State in 1649, and was one of the Commissioners negotiating with Charles II in 1650. He lived much of his life at Newbattle Abbey, but also held lands at Fernieles and Templehall (part of Harwood on Rule), which he is recorded giving over for a loan from Walter Riddell in 1649 and 1652, and then transferring to Mark 'Carre' (presumably a relative) in 1658. He was also the 1st Kerr of Abbotrule, acquiring the land perhaps around 1642, and gained the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1649, later selling it to Eliott of Stobs. Like many others, he was fined in 1662. He is recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 in the parishes of Ancrum and Crailing, Hobkirk, Jedburgh, Longnewton and Oxnam. His children were: Robert, 1st Marquess of Lothian; Sir William of Halden; Charles of Abbotrule; John; Anne; Elizabeth; Mary; Margaret; Vere; Henrietta; Lillas, who probably married Thomas Lewin of Amble; and at least 4 other children who died young. A portrait exists of him. William of Chatto and Sunlaws (1653–1721) only son of Andrew. Although apparently expected not to survive to succeed, he lived to a reasonable age. He became entangled in litigation and sold Ormiston to William Elliot of Wells. In about 1675 he took part in the funeral procession for Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburghe. He paid the land tax in Kelso and Sprouston Parishes in 1678. In 1673 he married Christian, eldest daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden. They had 7 children: William (d.1705); John, who married Margaret, niece of Sir William Kerr of Greenhead, and was disinherited; Elizabeth (b.1683); Christian, who succeeded; Robert (b.1687), who died after being transported to Maryland; Margaret (b.1689); and Joan (b.1690). He secondly married Grizel Porteous. William of Newton (17th/18th C.) probably related to the earlier William of Newton. He is recorded related to Bedrule teinds in 1692. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when he paid tax for 6 hearths at 'the place of Neuton' in Bedrule Parish, and whose several tenants are also listed. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. Probably the same William sold Newton (although perhaps not permanently) to the Marquess of Lothian in 1707. Along with his wife, he was probably the 'Newton Ker and his Ladie' who gifted communion cups to Bedrule Kirk in 1716. William (1661–1722) 2nd Marquess of Lothian, eldest son of Robert. He inherited the title of Lord Jedburgh in 1692, and thus sat in the Scottish Parliament. He was Colonel of the 7th Regiment of Dragoons in 1696. He succeeded his father in 1703. He had command of the 3rd Regiment of Foot in 1707, but was removed in 1713 for political reasons. He married his cousin Jane, daughter of Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll. He was succeeded by his son William. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. William 'Bitterbeard' (1667–1747) 3rd Laird of Abbotrule, son of Charles, to whom he was served heir in 1680, when still a minor. His nickname derived from his long unkempt beard. In 1689 he was appointed as a Captain in the local Militia to guard against 'the papists'. In 1690 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, and in 1700 was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. In 1700 and 1703 he witnessed baptisms for John Scott of Gorrenberry. He is recorded in 1707 as owner of land in Abbotrule Parish (including Braidhaugh), valued at £700 6s 8d. It is said that he was a Jacobite supporter in the 1715 rebellion, fighting in the army of the 'Old Pretender', and taking several Rulewater men along with him. He appears to have been a prisoner in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1716. In 1727 he was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He was involved (along with James, Lord Cranstoun) with the division of Templehall Common in 1734. In 1743 he had a 'bond of tailzie', resigning his lands in favour of his eldest son William. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of Alexander Nisbet of Craigentenny (an oil painting of her exists) and they had 2 children: William, who succeeded; and Cecily, who married Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge. He later married Mary Henry, daughter of the Piper of Banff, and had a further 3 children: Mary, who married John Rutherford of Knowesouth in 1739, with an annulment in Edinburgh in 1750; Charles, who died young; and Charlotte, who married Dr. Thomas Elliott of Edinburgh. His second wife is supposed to have exerted strong influence on him, including convincing him to remove his beard. It is said that a portrait of him was painted, but its whereabouts are now unknown. He executed a deed of entail in 1737, where it is stated that his heirs would bear the name and arms of Kerr of Abbotrule. Also in 1737 he granted a provision of 60,000 merks for his daughters. The year of his death is said by Tancred to have been 1751, which is not consistent with an age of 81. In 1753 his wife was the 'Lady Abbotrule' who paid the window tax. William (1690–1767) 3rd Marquess of Lothian, son of William. He was Lord Jedburgh before succeeding his father in 1722. He served many times as a Representative Peer. He was Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly 1732–38. He lived at Monteviot, where he paid the window tax in 1748. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Nicolson of Kemnay, and secondly married his cousin, Janet, daughter of Lord Charles Kerr of Cramond. His children were: William, who succeeded; Robert, who died at the Battle of Culloden; and a daughter. William (c.1695–1752) 4th Laird of Abbotrule, son of William. His year of birth is unknown, and he only became Laird 5 years before his death. He paid the window tax at Abbotrule in 1748. In 1751 he sold off part of the family estates (including Mackside, Broadhaugh, Templehall, Hartshaugh Mill, Kirknowe and Blackcleughmouth) by roup within John's Coffee House in Edinburgh. He married Mary Brown of Cumberland and they had 7 children: Margaret, who died unmarried; Charles, who succeeded; Ann, who married Thomas Shortreed of Easter Essenside; Alexander; Patrick, who later succeeded his brother Charles; William, who died unmarried; and Cecily. William Henry (1713–1775) 4th Marquess of Lothian, son of William. He was the first to use the title Earl of Ancrum before succeeding. He was Captain in the 1st Regiment of Foot, then Lieut.-Col. of the 11th Dragoons, being wounded at Fontenoy in 1745 and seeing his brother Robert fall at Culloden in 1746. He was a Representative Peer in Parliament. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Caroline, only daughter of Robert D'Arcy, Earl of Holderness, great-granddaughter of Frederick, Duke of Schomberg (who was shot at the Battle of the Boyne by his own regiment). His children were: William John, who succeeded; Louisa Kerr, who married Lord George Lennox; and Wilhelmina Frances. William (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. In 1763 he was one of the men appointed by the Council to arrange for the collection of money to pay for the new bell for St. Mary's. He may be the William whose garden wall formed part of the boundary of the Little Haugh in 1767. William of Gateshaw (1707–94) descendant of George Ker of Linton, and Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His father was Andrew, merchant in Kelso and his mother was Marie Cranstoun. In 1758 he purchased Gateshaw (previously a seat of a branch of the Kers) from Sir William Scott of Ancrum. In 1765 he also purchased Corbethouse. He became Town Clerk of Kelso and Chamberlain to John, Duke of Roxburghe. He was charged for having a male servant in 1778 and 1779. He was recorded as active among the freeholders of Roxburghshire in a meeting of 1780, acting on behalf of Walter of Littledean. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. At that time he was also listed as owner of lands in Morebattle Parish. He may be the Kerr who was mainly responsible for the rebuilding of Gateshaw. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge in 1739. Their children were: Andrew, who died young; Gilbert, who succeeded to Gateshaw; John, died young; Sir Charles, who succeeded his brother Gilbert; William, W.S. in Edinburgh; Robert, Lieut.-Col. in the East India Company; John, died young; Cecily, died young; Mary, died unmarried; Elizabeth, married Ellis Martin; and Essex, married Capt. John Turner. William (1779–1815) born in Hawick, son of John and Janet Miller. He grew up at the time that Dickson & Turnbull was established in Hawick as a prominent plant nursery, and it seems reasonable to imagine that this had an effect on his career choice. He became a gardener at Kew and a hunter of plants. He may have been the first professional full-time plant collector in the West. At Kew he was instructed by Sir Joseph Banks and was sent to China in 1804. There he discovered many species, including Euonymus japonicus, Lilium lancifolium, Pieris japonica, Nandina domestica, Begonia grandis and Rosa banksiae. He additionally collected plants in Java and the Philippines. He sent back to Kew Gardens some 238 plants that were new to European science, including the shrub named after him, Kerria japonica. In 1812 he was sent to Colombo in Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) to oversee the gardens at King's House and on Slave Island. He died there 2 years later, apparently as a result of opium addiction. Borders Distillery named a gin after him. William John (1737–1815) 5th Marquess of Lothian, son of William Henry. He was Colonel of the 1st

Regiment of Life Guards and later Colonel of the 11th Dragoons. He was taxed for having male servants in the 1770s. In 1788 his lands included Ferniehirst and Over Crailing in Jedburgh Parish and parts of several other parishes in Roxburghshire, namely Ancrum, Crailing, Hownam and Oxnam. He married Elizabeth, only daughter of Chichester Fortescue of Dromiskin and cousin of the Duke of Wellington. His children were: Mary, who married Gen. Frederick St. John; William, who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married John Evelyn Pierrepont Dormer; Charles Beauchamp, who married Elizabeth Crump; Vice-Adm. Mark Robert, who married Charlotte MacDonnell, Countess of Antrim; and Maj.-Gen. Robert, who married Mary Gilbert. William John (1763–1824) 6th Marquess of Lothian, son of William John, 5th Marquess. He was founder of the Jedforest Club in 1810 (when still Earl of Ancrum) and was Lord-Lieutenant for Midlothian and Roxburghshire. He was Provincial Grand Master of the Masons 1815–27. He firstly married Harriet Hobart-Hampden, daughter of the Earl of Buckinghamshire and secondly married Harriet Scott, daughter of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son John William Robert. He died when visiting the Duke of Buccleuch in Richmond on the Thames. William Schomberg Robert (1832–70) 8th Marquess of Lothian. He was eldest son of John, the 7th Marquess. He was said to be a promising scholar at Oxford, but died while still relatively young. He married Lady Constance Harriet Mahonesa Chetwynd-Talbot, his cousin. He was succeeded by his brother Schomberg Henry. William Alexander (1831–1919) eldest son of Lorraine MacDowall. He served in the Army in India, being awarded the Victoria Cross for action during the 1857 mutiny. However, he apparently had to leave the military after striking his superior officer. He married Harriet Atty from Rugby. He published some books on riding and cavalry tactics. He became the 9th Laird of Abbotrule on the death of his cousin in 1864, although the family no longer owned any land locally. Having no children, he was succeeded by his nephew Alexander Nairne. William (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer's shop on Drumlanrig Place in the mid-1900s. It also contained a sub-post office (occasionally spelled 'Karr'; see also Ker).

Kerrfield Burn (ker-feeld-burn) n. stream on the farm of Newton in Bedrule Parish. It is listed in a description of the lands of the farm in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. 'New Kerrfield Houses' were described as being to the west of there.

kerrie-haundit (ke-ree-hawn-dee', -di') adj., arch. left-handed (said to relate to the left-handed Kers of Ferniehirst, and their purpose-built spiral staircases; also ker-haundit).

Kerriot Rig (ke-ree-i'-rig) n. place name in the headwaters of the Ewes valley, marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Kerriot rigg'. It is probably the same as Carewudrig.

Kerr Pool (ker-pool) n. name for a pool in the Liddel Water in the southern part of Roxburghshire, south of Kershopefoot.

the Kers (thu-kerz) n. important local family, being in the Borders since the 12th century, obtaining Jedforest in 1457 and building the original Ferniehirst Castle around 1470. Kers from the counties of Stirling, Edinburgh, Peebles and Ayr signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The Borders family had two main branches, the Kers of Ferniehirst and the Kers of Cessford, who intermarried and occasionally feuded. The spelling often (although not always) distinguished the 2 branches; additionally the Cavers Carre family preferentially used the 'Carre' spelling. They were Wardens of the Middle March for generations, dominating the history of the area around Kelso and Jedburgh. They were also associated with rieving, and received their motto 'Sero Sed Serio' (Late but in earnest) at Ancrum Moor. The family are traditionally left-handed, starting with Sir Andrew Kerr, who apparently found it to be a useful trait at Flodden. The name may derive from the Gaelic for left-handed, or from the Norse for 'small wood'. The Dukes of Roxburghe and the Marquesses of Lothian are derived from Kerr ancestors. Closer to Hawick, a branch of the Kers were Lairds of Abbotrule in the late 17th to early 19th centuries, with a motto 'J'avance' – 'The Douglass cam' frae Liddisdale, Wi' the young laird o' Buccleuch; And there were Kers and Cockburns baith, All knights of honour true' [JTe], 'His record is unbroken, A' the world avers, Their names are on the Empire, Oor Elliots, Scotts, and Kers' [JBS] (although a distinction is often made between the 'Ker' and 'Kerr' spellings, the difference is less clear in older texts, and 'Ker' is almost unknown now; there are several different theories for the origin of the name).

Kerryrig Park (ke-ree-rig-pawrk) n. former name for lands that were part of Newton in Bedrule Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

the Kers see the Kers

Kersel (ker-sul) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick. His daughter Bessie was born in 1692. Adam (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1717 he married Isobell (or Helen) Jackson. Their children were baptised in Hawick, including: John (b.1718), also a shoemaker; Marion (b.1720); Janet (b.1723); Agnes (b.1725); Bessie (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); and Adam (b.1731). The witnesses in 1720 were Thomas Tinlin and William Sinton, in 1723 were wright James Pringle and shoemaker Andrew Scott, in 1729 were Benjamin Thomson and Patrick Angus and in 1731 were James Scott and Walter Purdom. He may be the Adam from whom 3s. 2d. was received by the Town Treasurer in 1755 'for Rowly-powly loft'; this was presumably for his right to sit there. Adam (18th C.) gardener at Abbotrule and Weens. In 1767 he is recorded as a gardener at Abbotrule. He was listed as 'Adam Carsal' gardener at Weens in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. His name is recorded as 'Kerswall' 'Carswell' and variants at Weens in the period 1785–88. In 1757 he married Betty, daughter of George Stevenson. He is probably the Adam whose children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: Jean (b.1761), possibly the Jean who married Adam Goodfellow in Wilton in 1788; Agnes (b.1764); John (b.1767), who married Ann Tinlin; and Betty (b.1769). He is probably also the Adam whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included: George (b.1772); Margaret (b.1774); Adam (b.1776); and James (b.1780). Adam (1745–1811) shoemaker in Hawick, son of John, and grandson of shoemaker Adam. In 1789 he (along with shoemaker Robert Oliver) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Turnbull. He married Ann Scott in 1769 and she died in 1800. Their children were: Ann (b.1770); John (b.1772); Adam; William (1775–76); and Agnes (1778–79). It was probably his (later) daughter Agnes who is recorded dying in 1810. Adam (18th/19th C.) joiner at Horsleyhill. His surname appears (with 'Rusle' crossed out) on the list of men balloted for the Militia in 1797 and again in 1798. In early 1799 he paid £10 to avoid serving. It is possible he is the wright Adam 'Helson' or 'Kelson' who was at Hassendean on the 1801 Militia ballot. Adam (b.c.1770s) wright of Hawick. He was listed as a wright on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Hawick Parish and was still on the list in 1801. He married Jean Turnbull in 1799. Their children included: an unnamed child, who died in Hawick in 1802; Helen (1803–82), who married

James Hardie; Elizabeth (1806–51), who married George Fiddes; Jean, who died in 1812; Jane (1816–56), married Walter Rae; Joan (c.1818–92), married Walter Graham Harley; and another unnamed child died in 1820. Helen may be the female servant, along with her sister Joan, living with John Hislop's family at about 15 High Street in 1841; she was in Jedburgh by 1851. He was listed as a joiner on death certificates. Adam (1772/3–1853) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1805 he married Janet (1781–1851), daughter of James Hutton and Janet Black from Hawick. Their children included: James (c.1818–64); and Adam (c.1820–59). There were surely more children, but no baptismal records have been found, perhaps because they were members of a secession church. The family emigrated to the Galt area of Ontario in 1831, where he was a farmer and member of the First United Presbyterian Church in Galt. They are buried at Cedar Creek Cemetery, North Dumfries, Waterloo County. Adam (1796–1862) shoemaker on the Kirk Wynd, son of John and Anne Tinlin. In 1822 he married Margaret Dryden (1789–1861) from Galashiels. They probably had 9 children: John (b.1820), who died in infancy; an unnamed daughter (d.1821); Ann (1822–77), who married Andrew Wilson; Elizabeth ('Betty', c.1824–1900), who married Robert Waldie; Margaret (c.1826–96); Agnes (c.1828–1912), who married John Laidlaw; John (c.1830–92); Janet (c.1832–1904) married Thomas McCabe; Charlotte (1835–1925), married John Scott; and Esther (1837–83), married George Davidson in 1855 and emigrated to Galt, Ontario, secondly marrying Andrew Hewie (originally from Berwickshire) in 1872. His unnamed daughter died in Hawick in 1840. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 they were living on the Kirk Wynd. In 1861 he is described as 'Shoemaker now Pauper' and he died at 12 Kirk Wynd. Note that his name is sometimes transcribed 'Harswell'. Adam (c.1820–59) probably son of Adam and brother of James. He most likely travelled to Canada with his family in 1831, settling in the Kitchener-Waterloo area of Ontario, where he was a farmer. He is buried in Cedar Creek Cemetery along with his family members. Adam (b.c.1851) son of John and Elizabeth Tait. He was probably born in Hawick. He married Isabella Waugh and their daughter Jean married M. Gordon from Hawick. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children, baptised there, include an unnamed son (b.1768), Agnes (b.1770), Adam (b.1773) and

Betty (b.1766). James (c.1818–64) said to have been born in Hawick, probably of Adam and Janet Hutton. He emigrated to Canada along with his father and family and married Mary Jane Cranston, from Yetholm. Their children were Adam, Robert, James, Adam Cranston, Alexander, Andrew, Margaret and Jessie. He lived in North Dumfries Township near Waterloo in Ontario. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is probably related to the Robert recorded in Minto a decade later. John (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son John was born in 1693. It is possible that he was also father of shoemaker Adam (whose first-born son was called John). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Alton in 1724, Borthaugh in 1727 and Drinkstone in 1729. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell, who was living at Alton. He married Agnes Oliver in Wilton in 1718; she was also from Wilton. Their children baptised in Wilton included: Margaret (b.1719); Jean (b.1721); Marion (b.1724); Adam (b.1727); Andrew (b.1729); and Marion (again, b.1732). Note that his surname is listed as 'Carsel' and 'Carsell'. The witnesses in 1724 and 1727 were John and Walter Scott and in 1729 were William Scott and James Cavers. He may be related to the John recorded at Wester Heap in 1694. John (1718–88) son of Hawick shoemaker Adam. In 1745 he married Agnes Leithead in Hawick Parish. Their children included Adam (b.1746), who was also a shoemaker. John (b.1767) born in Southdean Parish, son of Adam. He was a shoemaker journeyman in Hawick. He may be the shoemaker in Hawick recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia (but if so, must have been born a little later than 1767). He is easily confused with the John who was born about 5 years later. He married Ann (b.1761), daughter of Robert Tinlin ('Rob the Naig'). Their children included: Adam (1796–1862), the Hawick shoemaker; Ann (1805–73), who married Charles Hunter; Margaret (1809–70), who married Thomas Newall and George Didsbury; and John (b.c.1810), who emigrated to Australia. Agnes (b.c.1803) and Janet (b.c.1807) were probably also his children, and died young. The witnesses in 1796 (when his name is incorrectly given as 'Adam') were shoemaker Walter Scott and miller John Oliver. He may be the John whose daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1806 and the deceased shoemaker

John whose daughter Janet died in 1811. In 1841 his wife, brother-in-law John and son John were living on the Fore Raw (suggesting he was already deceased). John (b.1772) son of Adam and Ann Scott, he was baptised in Hawick Parish. Family tradition says that they lived at the Mid Raw. He is likely to be the shoemaker in Hawick recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia, and still on the list in 1801. He was probably the progenitor of 'Karsells' in the United States, Canada and Australia, with his children likely being: Robert (b.1800), who emigrated to the U.S. in 1832; Nancy, who married Charles Hunter and emigrated to the U.S. in 1852; Adam (b.1803), who emigrated to Canada; and John (b.c.1810), who emigrated to Australia in 1852. None of these baptisms are in the Parish records. Note that he is hard to distinguish from the John who was born about 5 years earlier. John (c.1810–90) son of John and Ann Tinlin, he was born in Hawick. In 1841 he was a 'Woollen Stocking Maker Journeyman' living on the Fore Raw with his mother and uncle John Tinlin; his age was given there as 26, but that was probably an underestimate. In 1851 he was a frame-worker, living next door to shoemaker Adam's family on the Kirk Wynd. In about 1847 he married Agnes (or perhaps Ann) Henderson and the family emigrated to Australia in 1852. Their children included Robert (b.c.1849–97), Margaret (1851/2–1935, also known as Agnes), John, Ann and James. The first 2 children were born in Hawick. He died at Moonambel, Victoria. John (b.1829/30–92) son of Adam and Margaret Dryden. He was a woollen spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at 4 Weensland and in 1861 at 3 Kirkwynd. In 1848 he married Elizabeth Tait, who was from Kelso and died in 1892. Their children were: Elizabeth (c.1849–1911), who married Edward Wilson; Adam (c.1851–1928), who married Isabella Waugh; Margaret (c.1853–1914), who died unmarried; William (b.1855) and William (again, b.1856), who both died in infancy; John (1858–1922), who emigrated to New Zealand; Robert (1860–1930), who married twice, but had no children; and two more Williams (b.1863 and b.1865), who also died in infancy. John (b.1858) son of John and Elizabeth Tait, he was born in Hawick. In 1881 he emigrated to New Zealand. His children were John Edward, Adam ('Jim'), Robert ('Roy') Tait, Herbert, Kenneth Henry, Doris Guest, Norman, Jean Myrtle and Thelma Bettsworth. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children include: Jean, who married James, son of John Scott in 1726; Margaret (b.1704); and William (b.1706). He is probably related to the John recorded in Minto a decade earlier. Jean, who married James Scott in Minto in 1733, may have been his daughter, as well as Margaret, who married Thomas Thomson in Minto in 1736. Robert (1800–92) probably son of John, he was born in Hawick. He was a stocking weaver in Hawick and then in Edinburgh. He spent 12 years in the Navy, where he lost his sight in an accident. In 1832 he emigrated to Ohio, U.S.A. and later lived in Bloomington Indiana. He married Margaret Anderson and secondly Eleanor W. Finney. He lived to the age of 92. His descendants changed their surname to 'Karsell'. Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife Helen Halliday is recorded being in Jedburgh Jail in 1839. She was a widow and pauper living on the Back Row in 1851, with her grand-daughters Janet Kersel and Helen Elliot. Robert (19th/20th C.) local manufacturer. In about 1903 he went into partnership with Walter Scott Barrie to form Barrie & Kersel at Annfield Mills, Teviot Crescent (formerly written 'Carsel', 'Carsell', 'Carswell', 'Karsell', 'Kersal', 'Kersall', 'Karswell', 'Kersell', 'Kersill', 'Kerssel', 'Kerswel', 'Kerswell' and variants).

Kersel's (ker-selz) n. small knitwear firm of the 19th century, probably preceding the founding of the Barrie & Kersel partnership.

Kershaw (ker-shaw) n. James (b.1795/6) weaver from Lancashire, who worked as a weaver in Hawick. He was said to be among those who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living on O'Connell Street (at the former No. 8). He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') McBirnie, who was from Denholm and related to John Leyden. Their children included John (1835/6–98), Thomas (b.1837/8), Janet (b.1838/9), Samuel (b.1842/3), Abraham (b.1845/6), James (b.1846/7), Mary (b.1849/50) and Edward (b.1858). John 'Jack Kaish' (1835/6–1898) eldest son of James and Betty McBirnie, he was a noted Hawick character who was only about 4-feet tall. He had stunted growth in his legs, but had a stocky build. Having an aptitude for learning, he was at one point intended for the ministry, but family circumstances meant that he became a frameworkeer. He was said to have a great memory, a stock of common sense, a huge store of amusing anecdotes and to be well liked by everyone. He was a keen angler and won medals at the Buccleuch Bowling Club, where he was made a life member. In politics he was a Liberal and he was also a member of Masonic Lodge 111. He died unmarried and was buried by his brother Masons. A photograph exists of him, staged playing bowls.

Kersheugh (kers-hewch) n. farm on the Jed Water, just south of Glendouglas. It was a home of the Kers from early times. This is probably the place written as 'carshuyoill' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when Andrew Douglas was there. John Douglas was there in 1797 and Andrew and Robert Douglas in 1801 (it is 'Corysheuch' on Pont's c.1654 map, matching the former local pronunciation).

Kershope (ker-shup, -sup) n. area on the Border, immediately south of Newcastleton, alongside the Kershope Burn, with Kershope Forest stretching off into Cumbria. The farms of Scotch and English Kershope are across the Border from each other here. Lands here were granted by William de Rosedale to the hospital of St. Peter in York, probably in the mid-12th century, as recorded in a copy made in the early 14th century; the grant describes the boundaries of the lands as 'the fosse of the Galwegians and the rivulus running from thence into the Lydel, and on the other side of the fosse straight to the high moor, and so by the watershed of the moor as far as the old way of Roxburgh, and as said way falls into Creshope from above the shealings which were Eadulf's'. This was presumably the same as the lands recorded as 'Greshoppa' given to the same priory by William 'de Russendale' and his wife, as confirmed by King Malcolm and the 'Gressehope' listed in the English part of Liddesdale in 1276. Being right on the Border, the area must have been regularly subject to raids. In 1494/5 Stephen Turnbull, brother of the Laird of Whithope, had remission for stealing 80 cows from there along with some Englishmen, and for killing John Murray. In 1502 Robert Jackson in Wolfcleuchhead had remission for bringing in 'traitors of Leven' to steal 14 cows and goods from there, as well as raiding 'le pele de kerschop'. It is further recorded in 1502 that Adam Scott had 23 sheep and a horse stolen from him there. In 1541 the lands were valued at 10 merks, but said to be then waste 'except for summering'. In 1551 it was listed as one of the places on the boundaries of Liddesdale where meetings could take place between the Justiciar of Liddesdale and the English Wardens. In 1552 it was written by the English that 'From the foot o Cryssop unto the head of Cryssop three several Watches, and in every Watch four men; whereof one to be at Craighill-foot, and the other two beneath, and the Searchers for every Watch nightly to be appointed by the said John Musgrave'. Gilbert Elliott of Stobs had sheep there (perhaps on the English side) in the early 17th century. In 1633 rental was owed from there by the Earl of Buccleuch to Sir Richard Graham. In about 1645 a flock of 50 sheep, belonging to the Earl of Buccleuch, was stolen from there, but the shepherd followed the thieves to an alehouse at Kirkclinton in Cumberland, where he accosted the thieves, warning them that other men were also following, whereupon they fled, and he recovered the stolen sheep. The Scottish farm is shown on the 1718 survey of properties belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch. At that time it consisted of 1007 acres, bounded by the Border, Sorbietrees, lands owned by the Laird of Whithaugh and Flicht; the farmhouse appears to be close to the modern Kershope Bridge. The farmer there in 1797 was Henry Hutton – 'When cauld, sleety showers stain the braes o' the Kershope, They slightly skim o'er the sweet lass o' the shiel' [DA], 'Richt ower frae Frostylee To Kersop in Siccan Stour, We garr'd the Southrons flee Wi' mony a clash and clure' [TK] (the name first appears as 'Greshoppa' and 'Creshope', in the mid-12th century; it is 'Kershop' in 1494/5 and 1500, 'Cresoppe' in 1584, 'Kershoipe' in 1633 and 'Carshop' in about 1645; it is 'Kirsop' on Gordon's map of Scotland in Blaeu's 1654 atlas and 'Kershope' is marked on Stobie's 1770 map at the modern position of the twin farmsteads of Scotch and English Kershop; its origin is probably the Old English 'cærse hop'. meaning 'cress valley').

Kershope (ker-sup) n. former name for lands in the Ward of Ettrick, which were Crown lands at one point. They should not be confused with Kershope on the Border. They are located to the east of Yarrow village, with Easter and Wester Kershope marked on modern maps. The lands were owned by the Crown from about 1456. In the late part of the 15th century the lands there were raided by Stephen Turnbull (brother of the Laird of Whithope), stealing 80 cattle belonging to John Murray of Falahill. The lands were leased by John Murray, then to brothers John and Ninian, then to John's widow and son in 1486, by Baldred Blackadder in 1488, then Ninian and John Murray in 1490. In 1499 the lands were let half to Thomas, son of John Murray, and half to Ninian Murray. Then on the death of Thomas Murray, half was let to James, son of Peter Murray. It remained Crown property until at least 1502 and in 1510 was feued half to John Murray and half to James, son of Peter Murray. Adam Scott was there in the early 16th century, with his son William complaining in 1533 that the Scotts of Howpasley and Dryhope raided the farm. In 1533 Isobel Murray (wife of Alexander Elliot) assigned her lands there to her 'brother german' Michael Scott. In 1541 the 'Est Syde of Kershope' was occupied by John Murray and the western side by Michael Scott. In 1555 Robert Scott of Bowhill was served heir to his brother Walter in half a steading there, called 'Westsyd de Kershop'. In 1610 Andrew Scott of Aikwood inherited his father's half land of 'Forrestae de Kerhoip'. Adam Scott was tenant there in 1731. Wester Kershope was held by Johnstone of Alva n 1802 (it is 'Kershop' in 1456, 1468 and 1486, 'Carsope' in 1499 and 1501; it is marked 'Kersupp' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

the Kershope Burn (thu-ker-shup-burn) n. stream that forms part of the Scotland/England Border for about 8 miles near Newcastleton, and flows into the Liddel. The area was once more heavily populated and there are many signs of former cultivation and settlement along its banks, including settlements, cairnfields, hut circles, rig and furrow lines and sheepfolds. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrave described it thus: 'Kyr-sopp is a smale becke and desendes from the wast grounde called Kyrsope heade. It devydes the realmes from the meare dyke untill it meat with Lyddall, and is from the head unto the foote without habitation, and at the foote of it is the fortes' (the origin is possibly Old English for 'cress valley').

Kershopefit (ker-shup-fi) n. Kershopefoot, hamlet on the south (i.e. English) side of the Kershope burn, just where it meets the Liddel Water. It is 'Kyrsope fott' in a letter of 1541 dealing with disputes on the Border. It is recorded as 'Kyrsopefoote' on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561, when there were Foresters there. It was formerly a station on the Waverley Line, marking the official crossing of the Scotland/England border on the route to Carlisle. Earthworks here are probably the site of the former tower. James Armstrong was farmer in the mid-1700s. Mr. Little was there in 1868 and Richard Armstrong in the latter part of the 19th century. There was also a mill just to the east. The place is mentioned in the ballad 'Hobie Noble' – 'At Kershope foot the tryst was set – Kershope of the lily lee; And there was traitor Sim o' the Mains, With him a private companie. Fala, &c' [T] (it is 'Kirsopfoote' on Sandison's c.1590 map and is marked on Stobie's 1770 map; it is 'Kersehopefoot' in 1821).

Kershopeheed (ker-shup-heed) n. Kershopehead, a farm on the English side of the upper Kershope Burn. It is 'Kyrsope hed' in a letter of 1541 dealing with disputes on the Border. It is 'Kyrsopehead' on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. The stream itself is marked 'Kirsopheade' on Sandison's c.1590 map of the Debateable Land. The name also appears to have been used to describe the area around the head of the Kershope Burn, near Flight Moss. This is probably the area referred to as 'Cahopehead' in about 1645, when a group of Armstrongs left stolen sheep there, when they went off to look for food, only to find that the English owners had followed them and recovered the booty.

Kersley (kers-lee) n. Leonard (1882–1918) son of William and Hannah Shackell of Winchester. He worked as a printer with Allan Watt's and also at the Hawick News and opened a draper's business at 8 Myreslawgreen. He was a Lieutenant in the Salvation Army and served as Vice-President of the Hawick Trades Council. He was Lance Corporal in the K.O.S.B. He was killed in WWI. In 1907 he married Margaret ('Meg') Young, daughter of Walter Nisbet; she continued to run the shop until 1936 died in 1970 and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. They had children Victor William (1909–2002) and Margaret (b.1916) and lived at 2 Morrison Place. The circumstances of his death in June 1918 are not known; he is buried at Dusans British Cemetery, France. Prof. Leonard 'Len' (1938–) son of Victor William and Helen Haig. He was educated at Hawick High School and gained a Ph.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He is Professor in the Physics department at Aberystwyth, researching in atmospheric physics. In 1970 he married Jill Wallace and they have 2 children.

kick the can (kik-thu-kan) n. children's game in which one person tries to find the others before any of them can kick a can that is placed at base – 'It niver cost oo owt ti play kick the can. What fun oo hed though' [We], '...whaeever was first ti kick the can, now if hei ran by mei an kicked the can, A'd ti gain away an hide, an hei was left ti dae'd' [DaS].

Kidd (kid) n. name of a travelling dentist of the mid-19th century, who set up shop at Bunyan the Barbers, 29 High Street, charging sixpence for an extraction. He could be the Thomas D., retired dentist from Lilliesleaf, who is recorded at the Crown Inn in 1871.

Kidd (kid) n. David (d.1835) mason in North Greenholm. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835. Helen see Margaret. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at 'Borthwickshiels Eskdal' (although it is unclear what this means) in 1780 and at Borthwickshiels in 1785. He is probably the James who married Isabel Forsyth in Robertson in 1779. His children included: Kathrine (b.1780); Margaret (b.1782); and John (b.1785). He may be the James, son of John, born in Robertson in 1747. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1753. He married Margaret Watson in Robertson in 1746. His children included: James (b.1747); Jean (b.1750); Bell (b.1753); and John (b.1756). John (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–91, and was also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls at Lilliesleaf. In the 1788 cart tax roll he was listed as 'Robert'. He may be the John who married Agnes Winthrop and whose children, baptised in Lilliesleaf, included John (b.1782) and George (b.1784). James (b.1787), David (b.1790) and Thomas (b.1797), with no mother's name given, may also have been his children. He could be the 'old man from Alewater' of that name who is recorded dying in Hawick in 1805. John (b.1782) son of the earlier John. He was a ploughman at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Margaret 'Maggie' (16th C.) resident of the Saughtree area, also known as 'Helen' in a different version. She was said to have fathered several children to Robert (or perhaps William) Elliot of Larriston (or perhaps Redheugh), according to a Liddesdale tradition. According to different version, these offspring included Gilbert Elliott, 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters' or Gilbert, who was recorded as 'bastard brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh' in 1603. She is said to have lived at a place called 'Kidd's Walls', but had to be moved by Elliot when his wife discovered her. She then lived in a small tower he had built at Hartsgarth, the ruins of which were used to build the house there, according to Thomas Elliot of Meikledale. A different version of the story (recounted by Jeffrey) has her being poisoned by the Elliot women and with her dying breath cursing the family to die single and despised. Note that about 200 years later Robert Elliot of Redheugh married a woman of the same name, suggesting that there may be some confounding of stories (also written 'Kid').

Kidd's Linn (kidz-lin) n. waterfall on the Staneshiel Burn on the farm of Dinlabyre in upper Liddesdale. It is also known as 'Kitty Linn' or 'Kitty Linns'. There was formerly a shepherd's cottage there, where Ninian Hislop was in 1835. James Armstrong was shepherd in 1851. Meg, the wife of an earlier shepherd claimed to have had an encounter with the Devil, pushing him over the precipice near her house. This inspired some lines entitled 'The Deil's Dead', to which Newcastleton poet David Anderson composed the reply 'The Deil's no dead' (it is 'Kittylinns' in 1835).

Kidd's Scar (kidz-skawr) n. cliffy region by Craikhope Burn in the upper Borthwick valley. An enclosure and some old ring enclosures are visible near there on aerial photographs.

Kidd's Waas (kidz-wawz) n. supposed site of the former house of Helen (or Maggie) Kidd, who tradition says was a lover of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, tragically poisoned by his family to end the unsuitable match. In Jeffrey's history of 1864 he identifies a site on the hillside on the opposite side of the valley from Saughtree schoolhouse. Shepherd Frank Turnbull identified a similar site according to a report of 1889. However, it is unclear whether there are any remains there now.

Kiddy (ki-dee) n. Rev. William (1818/9–49) from Coldstream, he became minister at Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk in 1843. However, he died suddenly of cholera only 6 years later; he visited a family with the first cholera case in Lilliesleaf village and was dead the next morning. He married Grace, daughter of Rev. Robert Cranstoun of Morebattle and left a young family.

Kid Sike (kid-sik) n. small stream that joins the north side of the Teviot near the farm of Commonsides.

Kielder (keel-dur) n. village over the Border into England, in the Cheviots, where the Kielder Burn meets the North Tyne. Also the name of the general area, including Kielder Forest Park and Kielder Water. An old barn there was used in the mid-19th century for 'Tynehead Preaching' in the summer, with services attended by people from both sides of the Border. Kielder Castle was originally a hunting lodge, built for the Duke of Northumberland in 1775. An old gun found near there is in Hawick Museum – 'Whar Keelder meets wi' the Tyne, Masel an' ma kinsmen three, We tackled the Percies nine – They'll never mair meddle wi' me' [T], 'The eiry blood-hound howl'd by night, The streamers flaunted red, Till broken streaks of flaky light O'er Keeldar's mountains spread' [JL] (note often misspelled 'Keilder').

Kielder Forest

Kielder Forest (keel-dur-fo-rist) n. Britain's largest forest, and the largest man-made forest in Europe, covering over 230 square miles in Northumberland. Managed as a commercial forest, mainly planted with Sitka and Norway Spruce, it is also used as a recreational area.

the Kielder Stane (thu-keel-dur-stān) n. a boulder marking the Border, since at least the time of the Rievers, about 3 miles east of Deadwater, now in the Kielder Forest. It is said to be unlucky to walk round the stone 3 times counter-clockwise.

Kielder Witter (keel-dur-wi'-ur) n. largest man-made lake in Europe, in the North Tyne valley of upland Northumberland. It is about 8 miles long, with 27 miles of coastline, covers some 2,684 acres, and is said to contain enough water to submerge all of England to a depth of 8 m. It supplies water to much of Northumbria, and is a recreational centre attracting a huge number of visitors (sometimes called 'Kielder Lake' or 'Kielder Reservoir').

Kildowan (kil-dow-in) n. villa on Wilton Hill, roughly opposite the Police Station. It was built for manufacturer William Lyle in about 1883.

Kilford (kil-furd) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu's 1654 map, roughly on the opposite side of the valley to Riccarton in Liddesdale. It is near the Kiln Burn, suggesting that the name is connected. However, the precise location of this tower house is not known. This is probably the 'Kylsfurd' listed on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, valued at 24 shillings, and with Henry and William Nixon as tenants. 'Grey Will of the Kyll Fuir'd' is recorded in 1563, when there was a bond for apprehending him. In 1586 it is referred to as 'the tuentie four schilling land' when half of it was occupied by Martin Elliot of Braidlie and released to him by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. It was one of the farms possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632 (it is 'Kilfurde' in 1586 and 1632; it is labelled as 'Kilfurd', and probably not 'Kilsurd' on Blaeu's map).

Kilgarth (kil-gawrth) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu's 1654 map between Todsclench and Tailleyclench, on the opposite bank of the Liddel valley from Larriston. There is no evidence of a former house in the area. It is probably the 'Culigrath' recorded in the rental roll of 1351, valued at 12 shillings and tenanted by Clement Crozier. It may be the land referred to as Culgatis in a leased of 1586 (possibly the same as Kingarth).

the Killin Hoose Brae

kilknowe see Kilnknowe

kill (kil) n., arch. a kiln – 'A party is fined for away taking six gang of divatts off the common of Hawick, which were casten for the use of the common kill' [BR1680], 'The council appoint every one to pay for burning and shealing every kill 4 shillings Scots ...' [BR1729], the framework on which a corn stack is built, a gap left in a stack for airing – 'The stack kill' [GW].

the Kill Burn (thu-kil-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, which flows along the right-hand side of the side road to Lethem, joining the Shaw Burn and eventually the Jed Water. An old boundary bank crosses the burn and goes up to the north side of Crink Law.

Kill Croft (kil-kroft) n. piece of land above the 'Deidhaugh', the name being in use in the early 19th century. The land was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and was once suggested as the site for the new schoolhouse. The area was later referred to as 'Dr. Graham's Field' and eventually became part of Wellogate Cemetery (also 'Kiln Croft').

Kill Dry (kil-drI) n. nickname for some Scotts in the late 18th and early 19th centuries (presumably related to the drying action of a kiln).

kill-ee (kil-ee) n., arch. a kiln, fireplace of a kiln (also killogie and kiln-logie).

Killhoose (kil-hoos) n. Killhouse, former farmstead in the southernmost part of Castleton Parish. It was situated on the Muir Burn, near Chapel Knowe. Robert Bryson and his family were there in 1841.

killie (kil-ee) n., arch. a kind of seesaw made using a plank laid across a wall, with a child sitting on the longer end who is raised up by the other children pressing on the other end, an instance of using a 'killie', v. to raise a plank by pushing down on the shorter end, to cause a plank to be raised in this way, to throw up being (said of a horse).

killin hoose (ki-lin-hoos) n. an abattoir.

the Killin Hoose (thu-ki-lin-hoos) n. former abattoir in Hawick, situated by the railway line on Eskdaill Bank, which became known as the Killin Hoose Brae. The building can be seen in an old photograph, with workers standing in the doorways.

the Killin Hoose Brae (thu-kiln-, ki-lin-, hoos-brā) n. familiar name for Eskdaill Bank, so-called because of the abattoir that used to stand there. It may have been rebuilt around 1907 to designs by Alexander Inglis.

the Killin Times (thu-ki-lin-tīmz) n., pl. popular name for the period of Scottish history roughly 1660–88 (and particularly the early 1680s) when Covenanters were persecuted for their beliefs.

killit (ki-lee, -li) pp., poet. killed – ‘Wharfor ye be wutnesses untill yoursels that ye ar the childer o’ them whilk killet the prophets’ [HSR], ‘An’ the husbanmen tuik his servents an’ nevellet ane, an’ killet anither, an’ stanet anither’ [HSR].

killogie (ki-lō-gee) n., arch. a kiln, the open space in front of a kiln fireplace – ‘A muckle . . . motor-laarie – a perfect killogie for reek – cam snorkin an dunnerin bye’ [ECS], ‘The mill chimlih smuiks leike a killogie’ [ECS] (also kiln-logie and kill-ee).

Killoley (ki-lō-lee) n. former farm in Liddesdale, said to be near the site of the Chapel at Dinlabyre (the existence of which is uncertain). It may also have been known as Killoley Chapel. The name could be related to Kelly Cleuch, which is about 1 km to the north. It is listed in the c.1376 rental list in the charters of the Douglasses of Morton, recorded as ‘Kelloley cum Mylneholme’ and worth 5 merks. In 1541 it is valued at 5 merks and tenanted by Nixons. John and William Nixon were there in 1544. ‘Dand Niksoun of Kewly’, recorded in 1581, could also have been a tenant, as well as ‘Hobb Nixon of Kelleley’ in 1590. In 1667 (and apparently again in 1691) it was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre, having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth (it is ‘Kellilee’ in 1541, ‘Kellell’ and ‘Kellele’ in 1544, ‘Calleley’ in 1590/1, ‘Kelelie’ in 1595, ‘Killillie’ in 1667, ‘Killilie’ in 1691 and ‘Kel-lyly’ on Pont’s c.1608 map).

Killoley (ki-lō-lee) n. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as joint tenant of the lands of Heuchhousehill, along with John Nixon. His name is given as ‘Kellelee’, and is surely related to the nearby lands of Killoley.

killpatrick (kil-pa-trik) n. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Euphan Storie and their unnamed child was baptised in 1682. The witnesses were ‘students’ Robert Cunningham and William Gledstains.

killt (kilt) pp., poet. killed – ‘Whiles hei saw a herlin soom, And whiles killt a troot . . .’ [DH] (not obviously Hawick).

Kilmeny (kil-me-nee) n. large house on Wilton Park Road built for ex-Provost George Wilson around 1879, designed by John Guthrie. It was later the residence of Charles J. Glenny. It was gifted to the Education Authority by George Heron Wilson in 1929 and used as a hostel for country girls attending the High School. For a brief period it was run as a hotel. In the yers 1948–57 it provided accommodation for district nurses (the name could be related to the poem by the Ettrick Shepherd).

Kilnbrae (kiln-brā) n. former name for the Mill Path, in use in the 17th century, named after the kiln that stood there. This may be the kiln that 2 men climbed onto to escape the Slitrig flood of 1767 (also written ‘Kiln Brae’ as well as ‘Kiln Peth’).

Kiln Brae (kiln-brā) n. region just south of the farm of Twislehope in the upper Hermitage valley. The farmstead of Kilnbraehead was once there.

Kiln Burn (kiln-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, which rises on Mervins Law and runs roughly north-east to join the Jed Water near Old Jeddart.

Kilncleuch (kiln-klooch) n. possible name of lands near Abbotrule. A court case involving John, son of Gilbert Oliver ‘in kilclewis’ is recorded in 1502. It is possible that it is the same place as Kilnsike).

Kiln Croft (kiln-kroft) n. area of land near Hawick Mill, part of which was taken over for the section of Wellogate Cemetery opened in 1849 (this may be an error for Kill Croft).

Kiln Green (kiln-green) n. public park land on the haugh in the north of Langholm, between the A7 and the Ewes Water. It was said to be the location where the rescue of Kinmont Willie was planned in 1596.

kilnheugh (kiln-hewch) n., arch. the open space in front of a kiln, where the kiln-man could shelter, a ‘killogie’ (used by John Hogg).

Kilnhill (kiln-hil) n. former name for an area south of Weensland Road and west of Bramblehall, also known as ‘Trinity Kilnhill’, presumably named after a kiln that once stood there (perhaps associated with Bogliebarns).

Kiln Knowe (kiln-now) n. hill above Limekiln Edge, reaching a height of 430 m and containing a triangulation pillar.

Kilnknowe (kiln-now) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, lying to the north-west of the Kirk Manse. It was once part of the Barony of Abbotrule. It was 'Killknow' in Hobkirk Parish in 1678, when owned by Gilbert Eliott and valued at £80. Andrew Hood was tenant there in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George Henderson was a weaver living there in the 18th century. Along with other parts of Abbotrule estate, it was sold by William Kerr in 1750. James Notman was there in 1788. In 1788 it was valued at £80 and owned by William Elliot of Harwood. John Minto was mason there in 1801. He was still owner according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811, when it was 'Kill-know' and valued at £47 5s. It was also written 'Kilnknowe' (it should not be confused with Kirknowe, which lies directly to the north).

Kilnknowe Junction (kiln-now-jungk-shin) n. junction where the Peebles Railway Extension joined the Waverley Line, just north of Galashiels.

kiln-logie (kiln-lō-gee) n., arch. a kiln, the fireplace of a kiln – 'I found the decent old miller lighting in at the kiln-logie' [BCM1880] (also kil-logie and kill-ee).

Kiln Peth (kiln-peth) n. Kiln Path, former name for the Mill Peth. It is so marked on Wood's 1824 map.

Kiln Peth (kiln-peth) n. Kiln Path, a lane connecting Wilton Path and Underdamside, named after the kiln for drying oats at the Roughheugh Flour Mill. The name disappeared by the early 20th century. Also a former name for Mill Path (e.g. on Wood's 1824 map) after the drying kiln there.

Kiln Pots (kiln-pots) n., pl. local name for a series of hollows on the hillsides of the upper part of the farms of Peel and Myredykes in Castleton Parish. They vary in size from about 4 to 12 feet, and occur naturally as a result of erosion of the rock there.

Kilnsike (kiln-sik) n. ruined fortified 16th century farm-house on the road between Jedburgh and Chesters, just to the east of Westerhouses. It measures 11.5 m by 7.5 m, with the ruin still having 3 walls to the first floor. The lands were valued at 25 shillings according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538. The tenant there in 1541 was Andrew Oliver. It is 'kilsyk' on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls when there were 2 hearths there (it is 'Kil-syke' in 1538 and 'Kylsyke' in 1539 and 1541).

Kiln Sike (kiln-sik) n. small stream that joins Ironcastle Sike to the east of Westerhouses in Southdean Parish. The remains of Kilnsike Tower are near the head of the stream and the Iron Castle settlement near the foot. There is also an area of rig lines there.

Kiln Sike (kiln-sik) n. small stream in Castleton Parish, running south to join the Black Burn to the north-west of Newcastleton. It rises on Kiln Rig and the farm of Woolhope is on its banks, with Kiln Knowe near its mouth. The area also contains old sheepfolds, boundary dykes and at least 6 peat-covered cairns higher up ('Kill Syke' and 'Kill Rig' are marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

kilt (kilt) n. traditional dress worn formerly in northern Scotland, and in the Lowlands on celebratory occasions, also known as a 'skirt', v., poet., arch. to hike up skirts, tuck up clothing so that the legs are free – 'For Mangertoun-house Auld Downie is gane, Her coats she has kilted up to her knee ...' [CPM], 'The trout wallop about were too much for mother, so she kilted her coats and waded in and went home with a load of trout' [JeC] (from Danish).

kilt (kilt) v., arch. to overturn, upset, tumble – 'A thocht the sowl wad take a dwam, an kilt owre' [ECS], n., arch. an overturning, upset – 'A bang'd again 'im, an' gae 'im sic a kilt' [GW].

Full many a steer ha’ they reft o’ mine, But aye they ha’ paid me in kine for kine’ [WHO], ‘A haunted land, where stalks the spectral form Of buckled reiver, driving stolen kine’ [WL] (cf. the more common kye).

king (king) n., arch. a boy holding a special position at school on account of giving the largest donation to the schoolmaster at Candlemas (see bleeze-money).

King (king) n. Christina (b.1827/8) daughter of James, she was a niece of Janet, who was housekeeper at Abbotrule. She also worked on the estate, being in charge of the poultry and milking. In 1888 she moved into Hawick. James (16th/17th C.) local man described as ‘in Clarelaw’ in a 1612 list of people convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans. James (18th C.) signatory of the document signed by 56 people at Raperlaw in 1732, protesting against acts of the General Assembly and being connected with the Secession. He was probably a resident of Lilliesleaf. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Marjory Park, who was also from Hawick. Probably the same James and ‘Mader’ Park had children Adam and William Elliot baptised in Minto Parish in 1807. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at North Synton, recorded on the 1791–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. In 1799 he was listed at North Synton on the ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. James (b.c.1780) herd at Standhill on the 1801 Militia ballot for Ancrum Parish. James (b.1796/7) born in Cavers Parish, he was a farmer at Dimpleknowe near Ashkirk. In 1861 he was at Dimpleknowe, farming 200 acres and employing 6 people. In the 1860s he was recorded as a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. His wife was Sarah. By 1868 W. Douglas was recorded as farmer at Dimpleknowe, perhaps his son. James (1916–93) born in Hawick, brother of Harry and Thomas, with his mother being Elizabeth. He was a Sergeant Major in the 6th Battalion, Seaforth Highlanders, who received the Distinguished Conduct Medal in 1944. Janet (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £2 3s 11d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. Janet (b.1810/1) servant to the Henderson family at Abbotrule. She served as nurse and later as housekeeper. Her niece Christina also worked on the Abbotrule estate and later moved to Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) tenant in North Synton. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; in 1799 he was ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Askirk parish’ and he was still tenant on the 1801 Militia ballot. He must have been related to James, who was farmer at North Synton at about the same time, perhaps his brother. He could be the John, son of William, who was baptised in Ashkirk in 1775. John George (d.1860s) brewer of Hawick. He died at his brewery, aged 34, and is buried in Wellogate cemetery. His widow later married R.R. MacQueen of West Port Church. Mark (18th/19th C.) cooper who lived in a small thatched cottage in Abbotrule. He was a staunch Anti-Burgher, and was known locally as ‘Maister Clairk’s recruiting sergeant’ (Rev. James Clerk being the minister of the Townhead congregation in Jedburgh). His son Jamie followed his father’s beliefs and would alternate between attending the church in Jedburgh and Hawick West. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in 1580 when he and his wife Marion Turnbull gave a tack of land to Stephen Bulman. This was an acre of land called ‘Halhill’ between the ‘Mercat gait’, the street that passes to Langnewton Mill and ‘the Watter’. Richard (1685/6–1752) Kirk Officer in Ashkirk. He married Betty Holywell, who died in 1756, aged 65. They are buried in Ashkirk. Robert (b.1786/7) from Jedburgh, he served in the Artillery and later lived in Lilliesleaf. He was listed in the 1851 census as a Chelsea Pensioner, living with his wife Martha Riddell and children John, James and Robert, as well as his brother-in-law James Riddell. In 1861 he was on the north side of Main Street. He was a member of the Burgher Kirk in Lilliesleaf. In 1873 his article ‘Some Jedburgh Characters’ was published in the Transactions. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Redford and their children included: John (b.1775), probably the farmer at North Synton; Margaret (b.1778); Agnes (b.1784); and Mary (b.1786).

the King (thu-king) n. nickname for one of 2 people (the other being ‘the Queen’) who lived on Sunnyside in Denholm in the late 19th century. Also a nickname for an early Robert Elliot, recorded in 1500.

the King (thu-king) n. nickname for Thomas Douglas in Hobkirk.

Kingarth (king-arth) n. former lands just to the south of Riccarton, perhaps associated with some of the remains of buildings in the area (possibly the same as Kilgarth).

King Nellie (king-ne-lee) n. nickname for Nellie Dickson.

the King o the Dean (thu-king-ō-thu-deen) n. popular name for a large tree in Denholm Dean. It was adjacent to ‘the Queen o the Dean’, but closer to the bank. It was among the trees swept away in the Denholm Flood of 1806.

the King o the Wud (thu-king-ō-thu-wud) n. large oak tree on the Ferniehirst estate, at the top of a small ravine, to the east of the Capon Tree. It once reached a height of about 78 feet, with a circumference of 14 feet – ‘How many years, O King, have ye looked from your high throne down On the broad white road into England, on the winding stream of the Jed ...’ [WHO].

the Kings (thu-kingz) n. theatre on Towerdyke-side, in the old Corn Exchange buildings, having live shows and theatrical productions, the name being current in the first half of the 20th century. There were films of the Common Riding made especially for showing in this theatre in at least 1929, 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934. It became part of the Odeon cinema chain and was also called the Odeon. It was later renamed the Classic and the Marina, and burned down in 1992. The name was also used to describe the Kings Hotel on North Bridge Street in the latter part of the 20th century – ‘... For the Kings tippence oo paid Or jooket in doon the Arcade’ [IWL].

the King’s Airms (thu-kingz-ārmz) n. former inn in Newcastleton. It was located on Douglas Street and later became the Commercial Inn and then the Liddesdale Hotel. In 1837 the proprietor was Sussanah Rutherford and in 1852 was William Scott.

king’s claver (kingz-klā-vur) n., arch. melilot, a kind of clover, Melilotus officinalis.

the King’s Common Street (thu-kingz-ko-min-stree) n. former name for the road that connected the Howegate with the Newcastleton Road, in use in the 17th century. The road ran through the Kirkwynd, over a ford at the foot of ‘Manse Lane’ and up the ‘Kilnbrae’. It is mentioned in the Town Book in 1710.

king’s covenanter (kingz-kuv-in-an’-er) n., arch. a children’s street game involving a child calling ‘King’s Covenanter, come if ye dare venture’ and trying to catch any who run over, with the captive replacing the captor.

king’s ellwand (kingz-el-wawnd) n., arch. the stars in the Belt of Orion, the foxglove, Digitalis purpurea.

the King’s Heid (thu-kingz-heed) n. the King’s Head Hotel, a former inn located at 13 High Street. James Dickson was probably proprietor in the latter part of the 18th century, with his wife Nellie running it after this death. William Scott (‘Wullie the King’) was proprietor in the early 19th century. It may also have been the name of 'Lurgie' Wilson's inn at the Sandbed for a while.

the King's High Street (thu-kingz-hI-stree') n. common name for the High Street in old charters and sasines. Also known as the 'King's Highway', the 'King's Street' and similar terms. The name also applied to the continuation of the modern High Street as the main thoroughfare via Silver Street, the Howegate and the Loan and out of Hawick to the north and the south (it is 'the kingis streit' in 1579 and 'the King's hie streat' in 1688).

the Kings Hotel (thu-kingz-hō-tel) n. hotel at 23 North Bridge Street in the latter part of the 20th century. It was built as Northville, a private house, in the late 1800s. It then became a temperance hotel, Gibson's, and sometime after WWII it had become the Kings. It also expanded into the adjacent building. For a few years it was run as the Roxburgh Inn, but by the mid-1990s the building had fallen on hard times and was empty for about a decade. In 2005 the main building was converted into housing units.

Kingside Loch (king-sīd-loch) n. body of water south-east of Buccleuch. Kingsideloch Sike flows into it from the east (possibly the bosy marked 'Pott Loch' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it is 'Kingsmoorloch' on Ainslie's 1773 map).

the King's Rantin (thu-kingz-rawn-tin) n. former celebration (at public expense) by the local dignitaries on the King's Birthday. Such a celebration was recorded being held for George I (whose birthdate was 28th May) in 1724 and the expenses are recorded in 1732. It moved to 30th October in 1733, the birthday of George II. In 1739 it is recorded that festivities began at 10 a.m. In 1747 (because of the debt over Teviot Brig) the Council ordain that the Town would not pay the expenses. The festivities grew in size, particularly during the reign of George III, celebrated on the 4th of June (shortly after the Common Riding). This was George III's actually birthday, but the same day was also celebrated throughout Britain as George IV and William IV's official birthdays. There was a function in the Council Chambers of the old Town Hall, with the alcohol traditionally being supplied by the Bailies. The excess of the celebration was denounced in James Hogg's lines 'Frugal temperance urged no cesses, Birthday rants, nor Bailie's messes'. There were displays of home made fireworks in the town and rival 'Eastla' and 'Westla' bonfires. In the 18th century this was a major focus of activity for the town's youth, with material being collected for about a month before, and regular raids on the opposing gang's store of fuel. The bonfires lit at each end of town were said to be a very old tradition, but ended about 1800. In the early years of the 19th century the King's health was drunk outside the Town Hall by the Magistrates and their guests 'Highland fashion', with glasses thrown over the shoulders and women of the town catching them in their aprons. In later years there was also a parade through the town – 'Payd that night ye lickor was got to Ranting 2 4 0' [BR1732].

King's Rig (kingz-rig) n. ridge on the north-east side of the Maidens, crossed by the Catrail. A stream there (which joins the Harwood Burn and ultimately the Slitrig) is called King's Sike (the connection with any King is obscure).

the King's Street see the King's High Street

kink (kingk) v., arch. to choke, gasp, have a coughing fit, to laugh until out of breath, laugh or cough convulsively – 'Then in cam' auld Satan, the chief o' the tribe ... And he kinket and leugh as, I canna describe' [JTe], n., arch. a coughing fit, catch of the breath, sound of whooping-cough – 'That puir bairn's gey nerr chowkeet every teime ei taiks yin o thae sair kinks' [ECS], an extreme bout of hilarity, fit of laughter – 'A laachd masul inti sic a kink A cood harly geet ma braith again' [ECS] (from Old Dutch).

kink cough (kingk-kof) n., arch. whooping cough, pertussis – 'It's no the Measles, Mistress Kaishie – it's the Kink cough' [JEDM], 'Kink-cough = whooping cough' [ECS] (also written 'chincough').

kin-kind (kin-kīnd) n., poet. all kinds, all sort of people – '...an' at our yettes ar a' kin-kynd o' amene frutes ...' [HSR], 'Speik furth his glorie amang the heæthin, his wunders amang a' kin-kyne' [HSR], '...an' hælin' a' kinkind o' ailment amang the peeple' [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

kinlin (kin-lin) n. kindling – 'that piani wud make grand kinlin'.

kinly (kin-lee) adj., poet. burning – 'Let kinlie cools fa' apon thame: let thame be thrawn intil the fire' [HSR].

Kinly Stick (kin-lee-stik) n. song written around 1870 by William Easton. It follows a satirical story about two well-known contemporaries of Easton's, George (also sometimes referred to as Dick) Whillans ('Kinly Stick') and John Mitchell ('Heather Jock'), who pawn the very shirts on their backs in order to get more drink. A fifth verse was added later (by 1909, and probably not much earlier) about visiting Mil-moe's pawn shop. The song is clearly based on the song called 'Ring the Bell Watchman', with words and music written by Henry Clay Work in 1865 (he also wrote 'My Grandfather Clock', 'Marching Through Georgia' and 'Father, Dear Father'). The song followed right after the American Civil War, and the chorus evoked images of the Liberty Bell; it was therefore extremely popular at the time in the U.S. The Hawick words can be seen as a direct parody of Work's, being about ringing the bell at the bar, rather than in the church! Other parodies also exist, including 'Strike the Bell, Second-mate' and the more modern 'Strike the Bell, Landlord'. Adie Ingles suggested that the Australian sheep-shearing version, 'Click Go the Shears', was brought back from there by Mitchell (Heather Jock) himself, but there is no evidence that he ever left Hawick (and the Australian version is clearly itself a parody of 'Ring the Bell Watchman', first published in 1891). Note that the words of the chorus are almost always slightly altered compared with the published version. The accompaniment was slightly changed for the 2001 edition of 'The Hawick Songs', with an attempt to restore some cheer to the music. It has been covered by some other artists, e.g. the Caern folk trio in 1969. Scocha recorded a 'punkified' version on their 2006 CD 'Gie'd Sum Wellie' – '... Ring the bell, Kinly, Stick, ring the bell' [WE], – '... And the Kinly Stick he's mortal And he lies upon the flags' [WE].

Kinmont Willie (kin-mon'-wi-lee) n. nickname name for William Airmstrong who was rescued from Carlisle Castle in 1596 by the Bold Buccleuch, as immortalised in the ballad. He lived at Morton Tower (also called Sark Tower), west of Canonbie, and was the Armstrong chief in that area. According to a letter from Lord Scope, there were 500 (although this is clearly an exaggeration) horsemen, supporters of Buccleuch and Kinmont involved in the assault on Carlisle Castle, 'appointed with gavlockes and crowes of iron, hand peckes, axes and skailinge lathers', getting in at a corner of the outer court, undermining the postern door and carrying away Willie. English reports say that 2 watchmen were killed and a guard of the prisoner injured, the action being easy because the night watch were sheltering from the weather. It is also claimed that Johnstones and Irvings were lying in wait near the Border, in case the band of rescuers were pursued and needed help. Further details are available in (probably biased) English accounts of the subsequent investigation. It is said that there were meetings a few days before with certain Englishmen to plan the raid, and that some of the watchmen at the castle had been paid off. An exact roster of the rescuers is not known, but Scott of Satchells gives a list of 33 Scotts who rode with their chief, and we can assume that many Armstrongs also took part. An English informer claimed that the party included: the Laird of Buccleuch (Sir Walter Scott, later 1st Lord of Buccleuch); Walter Scott of Goldielands (probably son of the Laird); Walter Scott of Branxholme (probably an error for Buccleuch); Walter Scott of Harden (either 'Auld Wat' or a son of his); (Walter) Scott of Todrig; William Elliot of Gorrenberry (or perhaps a son); John Elliot, called of Copshaw (also perhaps a son); the Laird of Mangerton (Archibald Armstrong); the young Laird of Whithaugh (probably Simon) and his son (perhaps Lancelot); 3 men of 'Calfhills' (probably Armstrongs of Calfield); Sandy Armstrong, son to 'Hebbye' (son of Abraham of Woodehouselee); 4 sons of Kinmont Willie, Jock, Francie, Geordie and Sandy; Willie Bell 'Red Cloak' (Laird of Blackethouse) and 2 of his brothers; Walter Bell of 'Godesby'; 3 Armstrongs from Tweeden (perhaps Hector, Jock and Ringan); John Armstrong of Hollows and his brother; Christie Armstrong of Barnglies and Robbie of Langholm (probably his brother); the Armstrongs of Chingills; and 'Willie Kange and his brethren' (the Irvings) – 'And when we cam to the lower prison, Where Willie o Kinmont he did lie, 'O sleep ye, wake ye, Kinmont Willie, Upon the morn that thou's to die?' [T] (also 'Kynmont', 'Kynmonth' and variants; 'kinmonts tower' is marked on Sandison's c.1590 map).

Kinnaird (ki-nārd) n. James (17th C.) mentioned as a Burgh Officer (along with Walter Stewart) in 1638, this being one of the first records in the earliest existing Town Book. They were presumably the 2 Burgh Officers of the time, corresponding to the Halberdiers of today. He is also mentioned swearing on oath that Thomas Oliver drew his sword at one of the Bailies in a 1642 case. William (16th C.) listed as 'Kynhard' in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Has-sendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). William (18th C.) resident of Crook in 1730 when he married Margaret Miller in Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1737. His children included Janet (b.1732) and Hugh (b.1737).

Kinnear (ki-neer) n. Rev. Alexander (c.1627–67) Hawick minister. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1647, became Schoolmaster at Lesmahagow in 1653, and was then assistant at Roberton (in Lanarkshire), before being translated to Bathgate in 1656 and then to Hawick in 1663. This was to replace John Scott, who had refused to accept Episcopacy. His ‘friend’ (presumably a relative) James Kinnear was entered as a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1659. It is unclear whether he was locally popular, after replacing the ousted John Scott. He was a member of the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1666 and was still described as ‘minister at Hawick’ in an Edinburgh record of September 1666, when he married Margaret Cunningham. She survived him and later married Robert Richardson (W.S.) of Edinburgh. He died a few months before being replaced by John Langlands. A communion token from his time as minister has ‘hK’ (for Hawick Kirk) on one side and ‘M — AK’ on the other. Note that another man of the same name was minister at Whitsome Parish from 1608–54 and may of course have been related (also spelled ‘Kinnair’, ‘Kinneir’ and ‘Kynneir’).

kinneh (ki-nu, -ne) contr. kind of – ‘...oo might be proud, in some kinnae distant Border reiving incestuous brotherhood, o’ the likes o’ the Ettrick Shepherd or Sir Walter Scott, bit it’s yer ordinary Hawick man thit really makes ee stand an inch taller’ [IHS] (also kindeh).

Kinnelcutty (ki-nul-ku’-ee) n. an area in the Borthwick at the top of the steep climb in the road out to Roberton. The cottages there are still called by this name. The stone drinking trough exists, although is no longer used by travellers (the origin is possibly from drovers stopping for a smoke there; also spelled ‘Kinnelcuttie’ and ‘Kinnel Cutty’).

kinnelt (ki-nul’) pp. kindled – ‘...whan his wræth is kinlet onlie awee’ [HSR], ‘An’ ane fire was kinlet in their clan ...’ [HSR], ‘...hed kinnelt a hunt an war thrang poatchin aboot an maskin tei’ [ECS], ‘...Scraped his buits aye at the door, Kinnelt the fire, an’ never swore’ [IJ] (also spelled ‘kinlet’ and variants).

kinnen (ki-nin) n., poet. a rabbit – ‘Make kinnen and capon ready then, And venison in great plentie; We’ll welcome hame our royal king, I hope he’ll dine at Gilnockie’ [CPM].

the Kinnin Braes (thu-ki-nin-brāz) n. area in the Ale valley near Ancrum – ‘Before my tottering feet should fail In life’s late wintry days, Oh, let me hear the voice of Aill Amang the Kinnin Braes’ [WP].

Kinninghaa (ki-ning-haw) n. Kinninghall, farm between Cauldmill and Cavers. It is near the former farm of West Mains. Robert Scott was farming here and at Little Cote in the 1860s (also written ‘Kinning Hall’ and sometimes ‘Kinneyhall’; the name was introduced by an owner after the town in Norfolk, Kenninghall).

Kinninghaa Hill (ki-ning-haw-hil) n. Kinninghall Hill, hill in Cavers Parish, just to the east of Deanbrae, reaching a height of 217 m (718 ft). Its summit contains fragmentary remains of a hillfort, with 2 sets of ramparts and possible hut circles inside. To the south-west are the remains of a possible enclosure.

kinnle (ki-nul) v. to kindle – ‘And saw the sun o’ Easter Heeze up and lowe until It kinnled till a burnin’ buss The thorns on Hardie’s Hill’ [DH].

kinsh (kinsh) n., arch. a lever used in quarrying, v., arch. to twist, tighten by twisting, to steal, pilfer, filch – ‘Ee’d better heide thae rockbools, or the bairns ‘ll kinsh thum’ [ECS], ‘That greedy gullmaw ov a callant hed kinshed the haaf o the fookie-meat A brocht hyimm’ [ECS], ‘Thae ill-deedie callants kinsh’t a hash o’ aipples’ [GW] (this is ‘kinch’ elsewhere in Scotland).

Kinshel Haugh (kin-shul-hawch) n. area on the east side of the Wauchope Burn, between Wauchope Common and Hemlaw Knowes, in Hobkirk Parish.

kintra (kin-tru) n., poet. country – ‘The sough o’ her cantrips had spread far an’ wide, Her pranks were the crack o’ the haill kintra side’ [BM1901].

kip (kip) n., arch. rush, hurry, haste – ‘Hei was in a teerin kip an wadna stoap a meenint’ [ECS], a fit of anger, outburst – ‘Wheiles she’s aa richt, bit she’s awfih kippy tempert, an oo’ve fund ir in yin o ir kips the nicht’ [ECS].

kip (kip) n., arch. a turned-up tip, especially of a nose (noted by E.C. Smith), the peak of a sharp-pointed hill – ‘Brave Bruce clomb, unskathed, Abyssinia’s dread kippis’ [HSR] (also written ‘kipp’; the word is used in several local hill names, e.g. Coldhouse Kipp, the Kipp and Newhouse Kip; see also kip-nosed and kippit).

the Kipp (thu-kip) n. small hill to the south-east of Heip Hill, also known as Kippielaw, reaching a height of 218m. The name may also have been formerly synonymous with Heip (or Heap) Hill itself (marked ‘The Kipp’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Kipp (thu-kip) n. eastern spur of Todshawhaugh Hill, lying just to the south of Todshawhaugh farm.

Kippielaw (ki-pee-law) n. former house to the west of Stirches Road, which disappeared in the late 19th century. John Ferguson was there in 1790. The nearby hill, above Greensidehall, reaches a height of 218m, and is also known as ‘the Kipp’. There are several other places with the same (or similar) name around Scotland – ‘The tiny yellow tormentil Is peeping here and there, The hollows of the Kippilaw Are never dry or bare’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘Kipielaw’ and ‘Kippilaw’, it is marked ‘Kiplaw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is presumably the same as that of the place of the same name 10 miles to the north-east in Bowden Parish).

Kippilaw (ki-pee-law) n. farm in Bowden Parish, off the B6359 between Lilliesleaf and Bowden village. There were once Kers there (the origin is probably the Old English ‘coppede hlaw’, meaning ‘hill with the summit cut off’; it first occurs as ‘Kyppelaw’ in 1552, then ‘Cyppelaw’ in 1567 and ‘Kyppylaw’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

kippit (ki-pee’, -pi’) adj., arch. turned up (of the nose) – ‘She hes a kipeet nose, an A’ve harrd eet said that’s a sein (sign) o a short temper’ [ECS] (also written ‘kipeet’; see kip).

kipple (ki-pul) n., arch. a couple – ‘But some said she had in her han’ a kipple o’ bottles o’ branny’ [ES], the inclined rafter or beam of a roof – ‘My auld wife here And me, just quietly on steer Aneath the auld black kipple’ [HSR], ‘Wha layes the kipples o’ his chammers in the waters ...’ [HSR].

kipple-yill (ki-pul-til) n., arch. the drink given to workmen after erecting the rafters of a house.

Kipps Plantin (kips-plawn’-in) n. plantation to the north-east of the Minto Hills, adjacent to Lambslair Plantation and south of Standhill farm. It is probably associated with Kip’s Park.

kippy (ki-pee) adj., arch. quick-tempered, hasty – ‘Wheiles she’s aa richt, bit she’s awfih kippy tempert, an oo’ve fund ir in yin o ir kips the nicht’ [ECS], having an upturned nose.

Kip’s Park (kips-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. It was listed as part of the Minto estate in 1779 (and 1811), when valued at £102 7d. The rental for ‘Kip’s park and inclosure’ was £28 in 1780. It was probably associated with the modern Kipps Plantin, but it is unclear who ‘Kip’ was.

kirk (kirk) n. a church – ‘the whole faimily we’t ti kirk on Sundis’, ‘... But he must pass the lone kirk stile, Before he reach’d her dwelling’ [JR], ‘An’ I say alsua untill thee, That thou art Peter, an’ upon this roke I wull big my kirk’ [HSR], ‘Though time has wrocht a change or twae On kirk and shop and mill’ [WL], ‘Where Teviot rins by kirk and tower ...’ [IWS], ‘And A pick oot fer ablow iz Every weel kent kirk and mill’ [IWL], ‘ti make a kirk or a mill o’d’ means to do what you like with it, v. to pass through a formal church attendance, particularly applied to the Cornet during Kirking Sunday, often capitalised – ‘It is the day the Cornet is Kirked’ [BEL] (the origin of the word is the Old Norse ‘Kirkja’).

Kirk (kirk) n. Charles (b.1808/9) born in Dunfermline, he was a lawyer in Hawick. He was for a while in partnership with Walter Haddon. He had offices at the corner of the Sandbed and Buccleuch Street and was agent for Western Bank, which failed in 1857. He was an early Trustee for St. George’s Kirk. In 1852 he was listed in Slater’s directory as a ‘writer’ on Buccleuch Street, as well as agent for the Edinburgh insurance company and for the West of England company. In 1851 he was living at about 20 Buccleuch Street, and was ‘Procurator in Sheriff Court of Roxburgh Shire & in practice’. In 1861 he was listed as a Solicitor, living at 3 Buccleuch Street. In the 1860s he is recorded as the Depute-Clerk for the court, which met every other month in Hawick. He was also the local collector for the Inland Revenue. His wife was Margaret B., and their children included Charles M., Mary, James H. and Margaret H. James (d.c.1820) Rector of Hawick Grammar School 1798–1818. He was previously schoolmaster at Haddington, and came to Hawick to replace Thomas Barrie. He also applied for the position of Hawick postmaster in 1802, but appears not to have been successful. In 1799 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for George Nicholson. He married Eleanora Whitehead in Haddington in 1794, and their children included John, Edmond, Marion,

Maria, James and Isabella; all but the first were born in Hawick. He resigned in 1818 and was then teacher in Leith. In 1821 his daughter Elizabeth married Nicholas Whitehead in Leith, but which time he was deceased. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He probably had a local connection. Rev. John (19th C.) minister of the Brighton Street Evangelical Union Church in Edinburgh. In the Spring of 1848 he came to Hawick to assist John Rutherford in leading a special 'mission' of prayer meetings and sermons. He joined at the end of the first week and stayed for the following 6. This led directly to the founding of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk in Hawick. He returned to Hawick about 1858 to conduct some revival meetings and again returned in 1864 as the Rev. Prof. Kirk to induct the new E.U. minister David Hislop. 3 of his sons became ministers, including Rev. Edward Bruce, who was also a noted amateur astronomer. William (18th C.) collier of Musselburgh who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1753. James Wilson suggests that he was probably a 'coal viewer' (but it is unclear what that means).

the Kirk (thu-kirk) n. the Church of Scotland, which seceded from Rome in 1560, led by John Knox, and now has the largest membership of any church in Scotland. It has a Calvinist doctrine and a Presbyterian structure, where each congregation elects its own governing elders.

Kirkandrews (kirk-awn-drooz) n. area in the north of Cumbria, just over the Border off the A7, with an 18th century church and a 16th century occupied peel tower nearby. This was an important part of the English West March, owned by the de Soulis family, then passing to the Douglasses and Grahams. The associated parish was part of the Debateable Land' (also written 'Kirk Andrews').

Kirkbank (kirk-bawngk) n. former station on the Jedburgh Railway, off the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway.

Kirk Borthwick (kirk-bor-theek) n. former site of the chapel that served parishioners in the western part of Wilton Parish (which may even have been a separate Parish of Borthwick in early times) and the name used for the surrounding area. It lay near Borthwickbrae and close to Borthwick Waas cemetery. The precise location is uncertain, but it was probably on the north side of the road on a level platform on the East bank of the Kirk Cleuch, which is a narrow ravine leading up through the lands of Borthwickbrae (however, some accounts place it on the south side of the road). It was probably founded in the late 1200s and was either originally part of the Diocese of Glasgow (like much of Teviotdale), or belonged to the monks of Melrose Abbey (who held lands and pasture rights in the area). It is said that it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It could be the church of Borthwick referred to in the charters of Glasgow in about 1150, consecrated by Robert, Bishop of St. Andrews. The land there was referred to as Kirk Borthwick by the time of Robert the Bruce, but only as Borthwick in the first half of the 13th century. A spring about 500 m to the north-west is known as 'Lady's Well', and presumably connected with the church. If the chapel was once in a separate parish, it was certainly annexed to Wilton by the early 14th century. In 1612 it is recorded that half of the living was given to Francis McGill by the minister of Wilton, and as late as 1688 it was listed as part of the charge of the Wilton minister. It was used as the church of the new Borthwick Parish for a while, until Robertson Church was built in 1659, at the centre of the enlarged parish (which was suppressed soon afterwards before finally becoming Robertson in 1689). It was probably in use until the 1650s, but ruined soon afterwards. John Langlands of Wilton (and later Hawick) may have been the last minister to preach there. It is said that the foundations of the church could still be made out up until the mid-19th century (also known as 'Borthwick Kirk' and 'Borthwick Waas Kirk'; the name occurs as 'Kirkborthewyc' in the early 14th century).

Kirkgate (kirk-gā) n. name used between about 1837 and 1882 for the street formerly known as Old Churchyard and now called St. Mary's Place. The house at 8 Kirkgate was run as a private school by William Murray, the forerunner of St. Mary's and later Trinity schools.

kirk-gaun (kirk-gawn) adj., arch. church-going – 'Wullie being a 'kirk-gaun' man, and a hunter of new ministers, he had many a quaint remark to make about the various styles of preachers and preachings' [RM], 'Hech, sirs! The denty fowk! Primpin by, pair by pair, Kirkgaun ...' [DH].

Kirkhaugh (kirk-hawch) n. former name for lands that were part of the Hawick Common.

the Kirkhaugh

They were mentioned in 1725. However, it is unclear where these lands were.

the Kirkhaugh (thu-kirk-hawch) n. lands adjacent to the Kirk of Hobkirk. In 1618 there was a ‘wadset’ for ‘the former two acres of land with a day’s wark meadow adjacent thereto lying in the Kirkhauch beside the Kirk of Hopkirk’.

Kirk Hill (kirk-hil) n. hill to the east of the old Buccleuch Kirk on the Rankle Burn, reaching a height of 397 m. The name presumably comes from the former church.

Kirk Hill (kirk-hil) n. hill to the west of Ettleton churchyard in Liddesdale. It reaches a height of 282 m and is topped by a triangulation pillar. There is a hill-fort on the summit, and the extensive remains of a farmstead and field-system on the eastern slopes, possibly the lands of Side where ‘Jock o the Side’ lived. There are terraces, with rig lines and other signs of cultivation to the north-east. On the western side is an enclosure and associated building and ‘lazy-beds’. To the west is also the remains of an old farm at Greenburni on a spur of land called The Tongue.

Kirkhoose (kirk-hoos) n. Kirkhouse, former name for a freeholding near the boundaries of Wilton Glebe, Easter Howlands and the southern part of Roughheugh. Presumably named for its proximity to lands related to Wilton Church.

Kirkhooses (kirk-hoo-seez) n. Kirkhouses, former seat of a branch of the Scott family near Ashkirk. The land was presumably attached to the Kirk, either historically or geographically. The first Laird was James, who was a younger son of George of Synton. John, his son and heir had a confirming charter in 1609, when it is ‘Kirkhousis’, and probably the same John was recorded there as early as 1579. In 1579/80 a document was witnessed there regarding the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead, involving the Scotts. The lands were valued at £143 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls James Rutherford paid for 6 hearths and there were 6 others listed there, including a blacksmith, Thomas Brown. In 1698 James Matheson was smith there and Francis Elliot was also there. Thomas Scott was there in 1724 when he was given money by the Parish. The ‘five-merk land of Kirkhouse’ was recorded in 1753. By 1788 (and also according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811) it was owned by Thomas Wilkinson and with the same value as earlier – ‘... Andrew of Sallinside he was one, With James of Kirkhouse, and Ashkirk’s John’ [CWS], ‘Tell

Kirkhope Toor

Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Robertson, with Harden bold and crouse’ [WSB] (also called ‘Kirkhouse’; it is ‘Kirkhouss’ in 1579 and ‘Kirkhousses’ in 1627).

Kirkhope (kir-kup) n. settlement in the Ettrick valley just west of Ettrickbridge. ‘Old Kirkhope’ lie in the hills above and has a ruined tower. The farm was owned by the Crown from about 1456. It was leased by Sir Thomas Cranston from at least 1471, for his fee as Bailie of Ettrick Forest, passing to John Cranston until about 1490 and then to Alexander, Lord Home. In 1502 it is reported that John Scott in Walls had remission for stealing 3 of Lord Cranston’s horses from here. It remained Crown property until at least 1502 and was feued to Sir William Cranston in 1510. Alexander Scott was tenant in 1536. Lord Cranston still claimed the lands in 1541. There were Turnbull tenants there in the early 16th century. Thomas Johnstone paid rent to Melrose Abbey for the lands in 1557. The lands were owned by the Cranstons of that ilk in the late 16th century, passing to the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1594. The lands remained part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. The Scotts of Harden sold them to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the early 18th century. James Matthewson was there in 1702 and Gideon Scott in 1785. It is also the name of an ancient parish of Selkirkshire, which was reconstituted in 1852 out of part of Yarrow Parish – ‘Ho! for the blades of Harden! Ho! for the ring of steel!’ The stolen steers of a hundred years Come home for a Kirkhope meal! [WHO], ‘The kye are weary o’ more and fern And ’tis many a mile to the Kirkhope Burn’ [WHO] (it is ‘Hirkhop’ in 1471, ‘Kirkhoup’ in 1557 and ‘Kirkhope’ in 1564; it is marked on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland as ‘Kirkhoop’; it is ‘Kirkhoope’ and ‘Kirckhoope wood’, but too far away on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Kirkhope Toor (kir-kup-toor) n. 17th century peel tower located about 7 miles west of Selkirk, near Kirkhope, built on the site of an earlier tower burned by the Armstrongs in 1543, and restored in the 1990s. It was a stronghold of the eldest sons of the Scotts of Harden. In his youth ‘Auld Wat’ brought Mary Scott of Dryhope ‘the Flower of Yarrow’ here and allegedly later ‘Young Wat’ brought ‘Muckle Mou’ed Meg’ – ‘In the mystic hush of the morning hour Came the clatter of hoofs from Kirkhope Tower ...’ [WHO], ‘... To Yarrow where the Swire climbs Around grey Kirkhope Tower’ [WL].

kirkin (kir-kin) n. a ceremonial attendance at church, especially by councillors after an election. The term was also used in the 19th century (and earlier) to refer to the attendance at church of the bride and groom, usually on the Sunday following their Friday marriage ceremony.

the Kirkin (thu-kir-kin) n. ceremonial church service that takes place in the Cornet's church on the Sunday morning beginning the week of the Common Riding. Traditionally lily of the valley is worn, and it is the first time for sporting the Cornet's tie. The Principals, in formal dress (morning suits and tile hats), walking behind the Halberdiers, lead the 'Cornet's Kirk Parade' from the Council Chambers to the church. Behind the Principals come the ex-Cornets in order of year, then the ex-Acting Fathers and finally the rest of the supporters, all walking in pairs. At the church the parade meets the Provost and Bailies and the service is also attended by the Lasses. There the Cornet and his Lass is presented with a bible, and afterwards the party goes for the Cornet's Lass's Lunch. The ceremony was initiated in 1887, when Rev. John Thomson (of St. John's Kirk) invited the Common Riding supporters to his church on the following Sunday, after he had accepted an invitation to the Cornet's breakfast. For many years it took place on the Sunday immediately after the Common Riding, rather than before. The officiating minister is sometimes referred to as the 'Cornet's Chaplain'. The 1914 ceremony was part of the Quater-centenary celebrations and also the 700th anniversary of the consecration of St. Mary's, being attended by an estimated 4,000 people in the churchyard. In 1891 there were both Episcopalian and Evangelical services in a tent on the Haugh on the Sunday after the Common Riding.

Kirkin Sundi (kir-kin-sin-di) n. Sunday preceding the Common Riding weekend, when the Cornet is 'Kirked'. After the Cornet's Kirk Parade and church service, there is the Cornet's Lass's Lunch, and then the Principals are driven to Hornshole for the laying of the wreath at the 1514 Memorial. This ceremony is carried out by the Cornet's Lass (and done by the 50-year Lass in 2001 and 2020). Then the Principals go to the Mair to inspect the course before the events of the following week. The day is also referred to as Exhibeetion Sundi. Note that before the Common Riding was revamped in the 1880s, there had been an 'old custom of visiting the race course' on the Sunday before, as a sort of practice for the racing that was to come.

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf adjacent to Bewlie. This was 'Kirklands of Bewlie', which were part of the Earl of Roxburghe's lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1643, valued at £90 and subsequently sold to Riddell of Camieston. In 1678 the Earl of Roxburghe paid land tax 'for the kirklands of and teyndes of the paroch'. Walter Scott of Whitfield (later Harden) owned these lands in 1720 when they were leased to James Shiel and John Mathieson. 'Kirklands of Bewlie' were still valued at £90 in 1788 when owned by Duke of Roxburghe. In the mid-19th century the lands were purchased by Riddell of Muselee (also 'Kirklands'; marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541, and said to pertain to the Vicar. Presumably these lands were near the original site of Castleton Parish Kirk.

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. Rev. Robert (1906/7–85) born in Glasgow, he became minister of Orrock Church in 1932 and moved to Edinburgh in 1939. During the War he served with the Royal Marines and was awarded the M.B.E.

the Kirkland (thu-kir-lind) n. former name for farm lands owned by Scott of Buccleuch, and presumably once attached to the Kirk of Hawick. It is possible they were related to the 'Kirkton' and 'Kirkton Tofts' recorded in early documents. They are mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme, when the land produced 'aittis', 'corne' and 'peis', and 'Willie of Allanehauch' was given 'the Kirkland, his awne rowme'. Probably the same land is described as 'ye Kirkland' in a 1627 valuation of the Parish of Hawick; it is listed among the lands closest to the Town, consisted of 32 acres, was owned by the Lord of Buccleuch and 'payand presentlie 32 bolls in stock, estimat in stok to 12, and 3 bolls of teynd' yearly. In 1692 the lands were described as consisting of 34 acres, and were leased by the Duchess of Buccleuch to John Scott, 'Sodger', Thomas Scott, 'Laird', Andrew Clerk, Robert Ruecastle and Walter Ruecastle (also written 'the kirk land', etc.).

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. alternative name for the lands of Wilton Glebe, originally belonging to Wilton Parish Church. This could be the 'kirkland de Wiltoun' where Thomas Williamson was farmer in 1493. The name survives in Kirklands Hotel on West Stewart Place. It is also the name of a house in Denholm, behind the Church.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. name sometimes formerly used to describe the lands attached to Hobkirk Kirk, somewhat more extensive than those later called the Glebe of Hobkirk, and originally being in the Barony of Abbotrule. Hector Turnbull of Hartshaugh possessed these lands in 1580 and had a charter in 1604 which described them as ‘the kirk lands called Vicar’s Lands of the kirk of Hobkirk’, with the Manse and Glebe being explicitly excluded. His grandson Adam inherited these lands of ‘Vicarishallis’ in 1622, along with ‘Vicarishall’.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. former name for land attached to Bedrule Kirk. In 1557 a complaint was made by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst that Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others had invaded his lands there, beating his servants; this may have been part of a dispute over ownership. In the 16th century (as confirmed in 1581) it was ruled that this ‘half merk land of Kirklandis of Bedrowll’ belonged to Sir John Stewart of Traquair rather than Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. house and small estate on the south of the Ale Water, to the west of Ancrum and adjacent to the graveyard. The house dates from about 1830, and there is an enclosed parkland with large lime trees. John Richardson (lawyer, occasional poet and friend of Sir Walter Scott) lived there in the 19th century, purchasing the estate in 1830, spending the autumn months in residence until his retirement, and dying there in 1864.

Kirklands Hotel (kirk-lindz-hō-tel) n. long-time hotel in Hawick, situated in West Stewart Place. It was built as Viewforth for hatter George Porteous in 1878. It was designed with a mixture of Dutch, French Renaissance and Gothic elements, and had a later extension to the east corner. I. Washington Wallis lived in it for a while, and John Farrar Blenkhorn rented it for a few years. Prior to WWII it became a temperance hotel and after the War was run as a regular hotel. It ceased to be a hotel in 2007. It is a grade C listed building.

Kirklea (kirk-lee) n. house built in 1859 as manse for Ashkirk Free Kirk. That church closed in 1909. In 1917 the poet W.H. Ogilvie leased the house and later purchased it.

kirkless (kirk-lis) adj. without a church – ‘Sae try to make yoursel’ content, Though kirkless aye, ye’se never want’ [RDW].

kirk-mense (kirk-mens) n., arch. a first appearance at church – ‘Gaein (an article of dress) kirk-mense or Sunday-mense, respectively, is to let the first occasion on which it is worn be a church service, or fall on a Sunday. According to an auld frait this must invoke some kind of blessing on the article and on its wearer’ [ECS] (also Sundi-mense).

Kirknowe (kirk-now) n. former farm near Hobkirk Church, once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. It was described as lying between Langraw and the Church, and is described in older deeds as being in the territory of Langraw in the Parish of Abbotrule. The farmhouse stood on a high bank above Kirkstile. The farm lies to the west of the Parish Kirk and the place is still shown on the modern Ordnance Survey map. It was owned (or perhaps tenanted hereditarily) by the Shiel family from before the Reformation, with half being sold in 1666. It was valued at £78 in 1643 when owned by Walter Shiel and also in about 1663 when Walter Scott was tenant. Thomas Boston paid tax on £78 there in 1678. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1694, with Jean Bennet and Isobel Turnbull also residents. John Mair purchased the farm in 1704 and his son Richard sold it to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. Andrew Mair was wright there in 1739. Peter Smith was tenant in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Half of the land was owned by James Riddell in 1788, with the other half being owned by William Turnbull of Langraw (and a small part of that half by Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee). ‘Boston’s half of Kirkknow’ was recorded among the lands owned by Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1788 (and continued in 1811), with another part owned by William Oliver of Langraw; the other half was possessed by Alexander Anderson. Thomas Renqick was a mason there in 1799. The farm of Wester Swanshiel was incorporated into it in the early 19th century, under the ownership of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. The other half of the original land was called Hobkirkstyle. It should not be confused with ‘Kilknowe’ or ‘Kilnknowe’, which is also in Hobkirk Parish (also spelled ‘Kirkknow’ and ‘Kirk-knowe’, it is ‘Kirkeknowe’ in 1590; it is marked ‘Kirkknow’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; Tancered writes it once as ‘Kirkwood’, presumably in error).

the Kirk o the Lowes (thū-kirk-ō-thū-lowz) n. Church of St. Mary of the Lowes (or Lochs), former place of worship in Yarrow Parish, near St. Mary’s Loch. Situated on a terrace near the foot of Copper Law, there is now nothing but a mound to indicate its position. It was originally the 'Forest Kirk', dedicated to St. Mary and built in perhaps the 12th century. It was formerly the location for meetings and the signing of documents, e.g. one for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood in 1488. It was abandoned around 1640 in favour of Yarrow Kirk, nearer the centre of the Parish. In 1557 a band of about 200 Scots and others broke open the doors of the church looking to murder Sir Peter Cranston; they were unsuccessful and were later bound over not to harm him or his servants in the future. In 1575 'Maister Johnne Scott' was minister there, with responsibility over Ashkirk, Ettrick New Kirk and Rankleburn.

Kirkpatrick (kirk-pawt-reek) n. Roger (16th C.) recorded as Rector of the Nether Kirk of Ewes in 1556. The Parish was stated to be vacant in 1567 and 1574, and so he presumably did not survive as minister after the Reformation.

Kirk Pool (kirk-pool) n. former name for a pool in a bend in the Teviot near the site of Hassendean Kirk, opposite Hassendeanburn and Knowetownhead.

Kirk Raw (kirk-raw) n. Church Row, name used as an address in the mid-19th century. It probably refers to houses in the Kirkstyle or St. Mary's Place.

Kirkrig (kirk-rig) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1780 'half of the Kirkrig' was included in lands in Dryden and Clews whose liferent had been given to Dr. William Elliot.

kirk-riggin (kirk-ri-gin) n., arch. church roof timbers, 'a kae in the kirk-riggin' means a noisy misbehaving child.

the Kirk Road (thu-kirk-rōd) n. former name for what is now Princes Street and Langlands Road, often referred to in old documents as 'the Kirk road from Langlands to Wilton'.

kirks (kirks) n., pl. churches. There were once many more of these in Hawick than at the present day, the proliferation of Church of Scotland churches being a result of the factions that developed within Presbyterianism in the 18th and 19th centuries. Many of the churches have gone by several different names at different times. A list of the various names that have been used for different church buildings in Hawick (ignoring smaller organisations that may not have had a permanent meeting place) includes: Allars Kirk/the Relief Chaipel/the Relief Kirk/the Cross Wynd Kirk/the Cross Wynd United Presbyterian Kirk; the Anti-Burgher Kirk/the First Secession Kirk/the Green Kirk/the West End

kirk session (kirk-se-shin) n. a body consisting of minister and elected elders in the Presbyterian church, dealing with matters of religion, membership, discipline etc. in a particular parish, being the lowest court of that church –

the Kirk Session (thu-kirk-se-shin) n. body of elders and the Minister of Hawick Parish Kirk, also referred to as simply ‘the Session’. They were appointed to oversee the good conduct of the congregation, and formerly would meet each week, directly after the church service. Two elders were appointed to supervise each of the districts of the Parish, 4 in the Burgh itself and 3 in the country part. The duties they carried out in the 17th and 18th centuries were later mainly taken over by the School board, police and Parish Council. It appears that the main heritors of the Parish also served as part of the Kirk Session, at least for the enactment of some of the business. The minute books of the Session meetings are an invaluable record of civil as well as ecclesiastical matters in the 18th and 19th centuries. The first existing Session Book covers 1711–25 (and is quite comprehensive), the second 1751–68 and the third 1785–1826 (these 2 recording only minutes of the more important meetings). There are also Kirk Treasurer’s books from 1723. A Session Book covering 1700–04 still existed in 1857 (and some extracts are given in James Wilson’s ‘Memories . . .’ book), but disappeared before the end of the 19th century. All previous books, like earlier communion plate etc., probably went with the former ministers, like they did elsewhere in Scotland around the time of the Revolution.

Kirkside (kirk-sīd) n. street in Denholm, running along the north-east side of the Green and running past the church.

Kirksteed (kirk-steen) n. recorded in 1541 as ‘Kirkstead’ on the rental roll of Liddesdale, when it was listed as having no tenant. It is uncertain where exactly these lands were.

Kirk Steps (kirk-steps) n. another name for the Kirkstile, in use in the mid-19th century.

the Kirkstile (thu-kirk-stīl) n. short street leading to St. Mary’s Church, formerly known as Easter Kirkstile, and also formally the address of the Church. This is where the Snuffing takes place on the Friday morning of the Common Riding. The street consists partly of a bridge over the Slit-rig, which was built to replace the ‘Auld Brig’ in 1852, paid for by William Elliot (who had Tower Mill built). This bridge is about 13½ feet wide and about 5½ feet lower than the Auld Brig, and with no central pier (i.e. less obstructive during floods). There was once a building of some sort here (perhaps a storage building for the church), referred to in 1686 as ‘the church stile building’ when someone was fined for stealing lime from it. When the old church was demolished in 1763, a large part of the steeple fell here, and the material had to be carried back up for making the new building – ‘. . . There’s peace owre the Kirkstile wa’ [JEDM] (also written ‘Kirkstyle’, ‘Kirk Stile’ etc.; the word originally meant the opening in the wall around a church, or the steps in the wall of a churchyard).

Kirkstile (kirk-stīl) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, adjacent to the parish kirk, and once forming half of the lands of Kirknowe. It was held by the Shiels since before the Reformation. It passed from John Shiel to his grandson John Stevenson in an agreement ratified in 1759. In 1779 it was sold to a Riddell, then passed to Alexander Anderson and then Peter Smith. A part of the lands held a cottage and blacksmith’s shop (also called ‘Hobkirkstile’ or ‘Hobkirkstyle’; sometimes spelled ‘Kirkstyle’).

the Kirk Stile see the Kirkstile

Kirkstyle see the Kirkstile

Kirkstyle (kirk-stīl) n. former cottage near the church in Ewesdale. It was occupied by 5 separate households in 1841.

Kirkstyle Place (kirk-stīl-plis) n. name occasionally used for the Kirkstile.

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. hamlet on the A6088, about half-way to Bonchester, roughly 4 miles from Hawick. This has been the main route from Hawick to Newcastle since about the 1830s (when it replaced the Wellogate Birneyknowe and Forkins road). It has a church, the present one dating from 1841, and once contained a school. It is also the name of the surrounding small parish, which is probably the same as ‘Cavers Parva’ recorded in Mediæval times. Kirkton farm was formerly part of the Cavers estate. Arthur and William Douglas in Kirkton are recorded in 1569. In 1574 it was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty ‘for the cryme of thift in tyme bigane’; this included ‘Barty Crosar’. The ‘4 and 2 merk lands’ of Kirkton were sold by Sir Gilbert Eliott to his uncle Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1655. There was a blacksmith’s there, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James Douglas was at the farm there in 1718. The lands were part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. George Heatley was living there in 1797. Thomas and James Oliver were farmers there in 1797 and Andrew Oliver and William Dalgleish were there in 1801. A small ball of gneiss with projecting knobs was found there and is now in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow. A stone axe was also found there. Note that there are many other Kirktons throughout Scotland, and also an old name of lands near Branhholme (also spelled 'Kirktoun', 'Kirktoune', 'Kirktown', 'Kirton', etc.; the name is first recorded in 1458 as 'Kirketoune'; it is 'Kirkctoun' on Blaeu's 1654 map; the origin is simply 'the farm by the church', combining the Old Norse 'kirkja' with the Old English 'tun').

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. former lands somewhere near Branhholme, referred to also separately as Kirkton Mains and Kirkton Tofts in the 15th and 16th centuries and still recorded in the 17th century. It could be the same lands referred to as 'terra ecclesiastica' in the 1420 charter, when half of the lands of Branhholme were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. In 1446, when the other half of Branhholme and neighbouring lands were granted to Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme by Thomas Inglis of Manor, the deal included superiority over 'certain lands of Kirkctoun', lying in the Barony of Hawick. In 1484 these were lands (along with East Mains) which James Douglas of Drumlanrig and his wife already held when James inherited the Barony of Hawick. Later the lands passed to the Douglasses of Cavers, with 'Kirkctoun and Kirkctoun Mains' still being mentioned in Douglas deed of 1662. It seems reasonable to suppose that these lands were connected with the former chapel near Chapel Hill. However, it is also possible that these were in fact the same lands as those in Kirkton Parish, if they were a detached part of the Barony of Hawick (it is 'terrarum de Kirkctoun' and 'Kyrktoun' in 1446).

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. lands adjacent to the Kirk of Ewes, near Sorbie, near where the Kirkton Burn meets the river. This was 'Kirkctoun', confirmed to Simon Little in 1426. Hector Armstrong of Hillhouse was 'in the Kirkctoun of Ewiscalle' in 1590/1. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 583 acres of pasture and 83 acres of corn land, both shared with Brieryshaw farm, which was owned by the Laird of Byrecleuch. It was bounded by Glendivan, Bush, Sorbie, the lands of Sir William Johnstone and Burngrains. The Byers family were there in 1841 and William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1861 (it is 'Kirkctoun

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. Adam (15th C.) tenant in Crailing Mill in 1493, when he had remission for several crimes. He was specifically said to have been involved with theft, reset and intercommuning with the English, as well as for being with the Duke of Albany during the rebellion and for kidnapping off a shoemaker from Jedburgh for ransom. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him. Probably the same Adam 'in Oxnam Mains' was recorded in the Justice-aire in 1494/5 when he 'came in the King's will' for unspecified crimes, with Andrew Kerr again the surety. Probably the same Adam in Crailing had remission in 1502 for bringing in Englishmen to steal livestock from Mellerstain. Adam of Stewartfield (d.bef. 1571) perhaps son of William. He was Steward of Jedburgh Abbey in 1543. He was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme at Goldielands and elsewhere. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1557 as tenant of the farm of Swinnie under Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Kerr complained to the Queen that a group of men 'boddin in feir of weir' came to his farm and dug up peats and terrorised him. He may be the same 'Adam Kyrkton' who witnessed a bond of 1557 in which Turnbulls, Elliots and others promised to bring in William Nixon. Possibly the same Adam is listed in 1561 among men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. The line 'Wi' Kirkctoun, Newctoun, noblemen' in the ballad 'The Battle of Red-Swire' may refer to him. He may be the same man as Adam of Stewartfield. Adam of Stewartfield (16th/17th C.) succeeded his grandfather William of Stewartfield in 1606 and inherited lands in Bonjedward from his father in 1611. He married Grizel, eldest daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Hunthill. The marriage contract was witnessed at Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) House in 1612, with Cranston of that ilk and 2 other Cranstons (who owned the estate at the time) on the record. His son William was served as his heir in 1642. Alexander (17th C.) Provost of Jedburgh, elected in 1620. He represented Jedburgh in Parliament in 1617 and 1630. Along with John Moscrop, younger (Burgess of Jedburgh) he was joint owner of Nether Bonchester until selling it to Walter Scott in 1653. Andrew (16th/17th C.) graduated from Edinburgh University in 1617 and

became minister of Oxnam Parish. Probably the same Andrew, 'M.A.' was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1619 and 1623. He married Elizabeth Knox and had sons John and Thomas. George (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He may have been related to Robert, who was also involved, and was listed along with other men from the Jedburgh area and Berwickshire. John (d.1538) associated with the Kirk of Bedrule. After he died, in 1539, Bernard Baillie was presented, but refused by the Archbishop. John (16th C.) officer of the Warden of the Middle March, William Ker of Cessford. In 1583 he appeared at a day of truce with the English Warden, in place of 2 sons of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Robert (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was said to have been on Edinburgh High Street with John Peacock, servant of the Laird of Cowdenknowes, and Lance Ainslie, when they stabbed the wounded Scott several times and took his cloak and bonnets. Perhaps the same Robert was listed in an actin against a Frenchman in Edinburgh in 1550. Robert (17th C.) resident of Jedburgh Parish. His son William was baptised in 1666, with witnesses Andrew and William. Thomas (17th C.) servant of Andrew Kerr, Lord Jedburgh. He was a witness to a document relating to Harwood and Hawthornside in 1631. William (15th C.) listed as 'Wyll of Kyrktoun' in 1454 when he was witness to a document for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He is also recorded as 'William of Kirkton' when he was witness to a 'tack' of David Scott, younger of Branxholme in 1478. Since several of the other witnesses were connected with Jedburgh Abbey, this seems likely to be the local Kirkton. He may be the same William 'Kirktone' listed among Border lairds in an action registered with Parliament in 1476. He could be the William who had a saine for Bonjedward in 1483. Perhaps the same William 'kirkton in kirkton' was recorded in the Justice-aire held in 1494/5 when he 'came in the King's will' for crimes against Ingram Oliver in Jedburgh. Either the same William, or a later one, was fined in 1502 for failing to 'give suit' at the Justice-aire for his lands of Bonjedward; in 1503 he presented John Smith as suitor at the Justice-aire for these same lands, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his procurator. A probably related 'William Kirktone' was one of the men who signed the pledge to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace in Edinburgh in 1524/5. William of Fairnington (16th

Kirkton Hill

C.) recorded in 1581, along with his sons Mungo and John. In a transaction involving Haliburtons, there was mention of a 1580 decree from the Lords of Council in which Walter Haliburton in Ancrum evicting them from his lands in Ancrum Spittal. William of Stewartfield (16th C.) son of Adam, who he succeeded as Steward of Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed along with Olivers of Southdean in 1572/3, when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston were their cautioners. His surety was for £1000, twice that of the other men; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He was separately listed in 1572/3, with George Douglas of Bonjedward as surety. He could be the 'Willame Kirkton, officer of the Middle March' recorded in 1586 when William Ker was his surety to appear before the Privy Council; he was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for not appearing (and was then described a a Bailie of Jedburgh). He is listed on the list of 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590 and is probably the Kirkton of Stewartfield listed in Monipennie's c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. There may be 2 generations of Williams here. William (17th C.) son of Adam of Stewartfield. In 1642 he was served heir to his father's 3 husbandlands in Bonjedward, as well as the lands of Stewartfield. Probably the same William is recorded as owner of lands in Ulston in 1643 (spelled 'Kirktown', 'Kirtoune', 'Kyrktoun' and variants).

the Kirkton Burn (thu-kirk-tin-burn) n. stream that rises near Earlside, runs through Kirkton and alongside the A6088 till past Cauldmill, joining the Teviot near Hornshole. Alongside the stream to the south of Birneyknowe is the start of a linear earthwork, which runs about 800 m to end near the road connecting Stobs with Bonchester. There are some signs of enclosures at both ends, suggesting that this was a boundary related to grazing rights. On the upper section, an exposed part of the basaltic dyke which runs across Roxburghshire was used by geologist David Milne-Home in 1842 to illustrate his theory of a crack being filled by lava.

Kirkton Hill (kirk-tin-hil) n. hill behind the Kaimends, south-east of Hawick, and south of the village of Kirkton, reaching 275 m (897 ft). It is the site of a hill-fort and there is evidence of settlements there from the Iron Age to mediæval times. The fort was oval, measuring roughly 190 ft by 170 ft, with double or triple ramparts, probably with an entrance on the south-west. The interior of the fort appears to have been later converted into a settlement, with at least 9 huts. An even later enclosure, about 60 ft by 50 ft, containing 2 scooped courts, may date from the 15th or 16th centuries.

Kirkton Hoose

Kirkton Hoose (kirk-tin-hoos) n. former home of John Turnbull of Slitrig Dyeworks, situated in Kirkton.

Kirkton Kirk (kirk-tin-kirk) n. church in Kirkton. Before the Reformation it was a Rectory, and it is known from at least the time of the Ragman Rolls. However, it does not seem to have had its own minister (separate from that of Cavers) until about the time of the Reformation. The former church was described in 1838 as ‘in a very bad state of repair’. The location is close to the eastern boundary of the Parish, which was inconvenient for those living further west, but meant that some families from Cavers Parish would attend Kirkton. The present church dates from 1841, and contains some panels from the previous building. A stone slab that had formed the ‘stool of repentance’ was discovered during the demolition of the previous church building and in 1861 it was presented to the Archæological Society (but seems to have subsequently disappeared). The church was remodelled in 1906, with J.P. Alison as architect (replacing the more ambitious plans that were deemed too expensive by the Session). During remodelling 2 inscribed stones were installed in the walls, one having a crudely carved sword from about the 16th century and the other reading ‘HOW SHORT IS TIME HOW LONG ETERNITY 1688’. The Manse was taxed for having 2 hearths in 1694 and 12 windows in 1748. It was rebuilt in about 1760 and around 1840 converted into use as a byre and stables, before eventually becoming the church halls in 1933. A new Manse was built near the church in 1866. A Liszt organ was installed in 1893, presented by R. Ballantyne in memory of his parents. Due to falling rolls, the church was linked with Cavers (being served by a single minister) in 1955 and united with it in 1976. Cavers and Kirkton were linked with St. Mary’s 1976–88, with Hobkirk and Southdean 1988–96 and with St. Mary’s and ‘Auld Pairish’ in 1996. Since 1955 the church has only been used for occasional special services. 2 pewter cups are still held by the Kirk, but other communion plate appears to have disappeared. The oldest surviving communion token is from 1734, is made of lead, heart-shaped and bears the initials ‘K.K.’; another similar token is from 1761. A roll of the ministry is: Maurice Lovel in 1296; Patrick ‘of Albania’ in 1453; William ‘Amuligane’ (probably Milligan) in 1545; Archibald Heriot, until 1550; William Cranston (Vicar and Parson), 1550–67/8; George Douglas (Vicar and Parson), 1567/8–c.97; William Auchmowtie (Minister, along with several neighbouring parishes), from 1574; John Watson in 1588; John Douglas (Parson and Vicar), from 1597; Walter McGill (Parson and Vicar, along with Cavers), from 1606; James Scott 1616–c.19; Robert Brownlie 1620–c.45; Andrew Pringle 1646–50; Gavin Elliot 1652–62; Alexander Forrest 1664–83; Alexander Burnet 1684–85; Patrick Cunningham 1687–c.1706; John Douglas 1707–50; Alexander Glen 1751–57; Thomas Elliot 1758–63; James Erskine 1764–74; Alexander Gordon 1775–85; James Hay 1785–86; Benjamin Dickison 1787–1800; John Elliot 1801–17; Adam Laidlaw 1818–34; William Stewart Martin 1834–57; George Hunter 1857–81; David Cathels 1882–92; John Stuart 1892–1930; William Robertson 1931–40; George E. Cowe 1940–51; James B. Primrose 1951–55; William Welsh 1955–75; Duncan Clark 1976–84; Alexander C. MacCartney 1985–87; Adam McC. Bowie 1988–96; David W.G. Burt 1996–98; William P. Taylor 1998–.

Kirkton Mains (kirk-tin-mānz) n. lands near Hawick, probably adjacent (or perhaps identical to) ‘Kirkton Tofts’ near Branhholme. They are mentioned in 1464/5 along with the Flex in a dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig (Baron of Hawick) and Alexander Gledstains. Douglas had a sasine for these lands and the Flex, along with the associated mill, the sasine being delivered at the ‘capitale messuagium’, i.e. principal dwelling house. There was also a mill there. The lands of ‘Est Manis of the Kirkton, with thair pertinentis, lyand in the barony of Hawic’ were among those to be infetted to James, heir to Drumlanrig, as part of his marriage contract in 1470; this is probably the same as (or part of) Kirkton Mains. The lands are mentioned alongside Crumhaugh in Hawick’s 1511 Charter, as part of the Barony of Hawick held ‘in property’ by the Baron. This suggests a location perhaps near Martin’s House or Branhholme Bridgend; however, there is still a possibility that these lands were in the Parish of Kirkton, but somehow associated with lands nearer to Hawick. In 1545 these lands were specifically mentioned in the inheritance of James Douglas of Cavers, as lands he possessed in the Barony of Hawick, and again when infefted to his son William in 1558. In that year the 'liferent' was granted to the mother of the new Laird, Christian Kerr, the value being 40 shillings and held 'in blench ferm for one penny of asked' from the Baron of Hawick. The lands are mentioned (again coupled with those of Crumhaugh) in the retour of James Douglas for the Barony of Hawick in 1572. In 1594 the lands of 'Cruhauch and Kirkton of Manys' are ratified to the Baron Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with many others in the Barony and it is still listed among the Baron's lands in 1615 (it is 'Kyrktonemanys' and 'Kirktonne Maynis' in 1464/5, 'Kirkton Manys' in 1511, 'Kyrkton Manys' in 1511/2, 'Kirkton Manys' and 'Kyrktonne Manys' in 1514, 'Kyrkton Manys' in 1545, 'Kirkton Mannis' in 1559, Kirkton Manis' in 1572, 'Kirtoun of Manys' in 1594, 'Kirktonmaynis' in 1615 and 'Kirkton Maynes' in 1686; see also Kirkton Tofts).

Kirkton Manse (kirk-tin-mawns) n. former minister's house in Kirkton Parish. It was taxed for having 2 hearths in 1694 and 12 windows in 1748. A new house was constructed in about 1760. Around 1840 this was converted into use as a barn and stables, before eventually becoming the church halls in 1933. A new Manse was built in 1866 and is now a private house.

Kirkton Pairish (kirk-tin-pā-reesh) n. small parish a few miles to the east and south of Hawick. It is narrow, being about 8 miles long by 2 miles wide, running north-east to south-west, and bounded by Cavers, Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes. It corresponded to the mediæval 'Cavers Parva' and had the status of a Rectory before the Reformation. It formally became a separate parish in the 16th century, and was part of the Diocese of Glasgow. A church existed there at least from the time of Edward I. The Parish is bounded mostly by Cavers, but also by Hawick and Teviothead. The boundary with Cavers used to pass straight through the farm of Cavers Mains. The extent of the Parish formerly included farms as distant from Kirkton village as Winningtonrig and Acreknowe. The lands of Middle were partly in the parish, but included in the Barony of Cavers. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £4200 and the total value was £4526 13s 4d in 1678. In the early 19th century there were 4 heritors, namely, Eliott of Stobs, Douglas of Cavers, Douglas of Adderstone and Dickson of Tofts. In 1838 it was stated that there were no villages, no toll-bars and no public houses in the Parish. Parish records exist from 1707, although not all births were registered, and only a small fraction of marriages and deaths; there are gaps in baptisms 1710–15 and 1738–42, as well as several gaps in the marriage records. There was a proposal in 1766/7 to suppress the Parish in favour of a new parish in the western parts of Cavers and Hawick (which became Teviothead).

Kirkton Schuil (kirk-tin-skil) n. former school in the Parish of Kirkton. It existed since at least 1669, when it was recorded that the position of schoolmaster was vacant. The building was situated on the left hand-side of the A6088 a few hundred yards before reaching the main settlement of Kirkton, where Clints Cottage was later built. There were about 50 pupils there in the 1830s. The school later moved to the building later known as Athole Cottage until a new building was constructed in 1887. The school closed in 1963. The Borders Archive has school registers for 1890–1939 and log books for 1873–1963. It was once run by the joint Cavers and Kirkton School Board. Thomas Wilson was schoolmaster until the mid-1780s, Walter Scott taking over for a few years (including 1787) and then being succeeded by Andrew Scott. The schoolmaster from 1834 to the 1860s was Thomas Little. John Turnbull was recorded as schoolmaster in at least 1903–06. The ridge overlooking the school has the remains of a hill-fort, consisting of a summit area and a plateau slightly below it, with triple ramparts, but no existing evidence of internal structures; it is about 115 m long by about 40 m, but tapering to the north-east.

Kirkton Tofts (kirk-tin-tofts) n. lands mentioned as an Inglis possession in a 1435 charter, along with Branxholme, Goldielands, Whitlaw, Whitrig, Todshawhills and Harwood, but all in the barony of Hawick (transcribed as 'Kalkistoftis'). This might appear to refer to the farms of Tofts in Cavers Parish, near to Kirkton, but it is hard to see how this could have been in the barony of Hawick. An undated charter some time before this (and probably before 1426, since Robert Scott was a witness) has John Inglis of Manor and Branxholme granting the lands of 'Kyrktonne and Toftis' in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon Inglis. In 1461 the lands of 'Kirktonne and Toftis' in the Lordship of Branxholme were confirmed to Katherine, daughter and heir of Alexander Inglis, along with her husband 'Arnou Gurlau'. And in 1521 '6 merkland of Kyrkton' in the Barony of Branxholme were given to John Gourlay, as heir to his deceased father, John Gourlay of Rulewood; since the lands appear to have been close to Branhholme, perhaps they were associated with Chapelhill Kirk. This may be the place (or places) transcribed as 'Toftis, Kirkwod' in the 1594 and 1615 lists of lands for which the Baron of Hawick was superior (see also Kirkton Mains).

Kirkurd (kir-koord) n. small parish and former barony in western Peeblesshire. Lands there were held by the Scotts from perhaps the early 13th century, and they were probably given the superiority of the barony in the early 14th century. Certainly the superiority was confirmed to Walter, son of Robert Scott in 1389. The family would later move their headquarters to Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire to become the Scotts of Branhholme and Buccleuch, although they continued to hold these Peeblesshire lands until the mid-17th century. Individual pieces of land within Kirkurd were held by Douglas of Dalkeith and Cockburn of Henderland. In the early 16th century there was some dispute over the lands between Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme and James Murray of Falahill. In the later 15th century the lands were considered part of the Barony of Branhholme. By 1574 the lands were valued at 80 merks, when they were considered as a separate barony of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branhholme in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. It was still recorded as an 80-merk land in 1653. The church there was long the property of Soutra Hospital (also written 'Kirkcurd', 'Kirkhurde', 'Kirkurde', 'Kyrkcurde', 'Kyrkevrde', 'Kyrkwurde', 'Kyrkurd', 'Kyrkurde', etc.; it is 'Ecclesia de Orda' in the 1170s).

the Kirk Walk (thu-kirk-wawk) n. former popular name for the route between Cavers and the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, via Denholm Dean, which the Douglasses of Cavers walked every Sunday through the 18th and 19th centuries.

Kirkwood (kirk-wood, -wud) n. Alexander (19th C.) first pastor of Hawick Baptist Kirk. He served the new church, perhaps intermittently 1846–52. He probably preached in Allars Crescent. W.M. Anderson took over from him. Lord Archibald Johnstone 'Archy' (1946–) politician, born in Glasgow. He obtained a degree in Pharmacy at Herriot-Watt University, became the first sabbatical student President there, re-trained as a solicitor, and was a partner in Hawick with Andrew Haddon for a while. He was elected M.P. for Roxburgh and Berwickshire in 1983, is a member of the Liberal Democrats, has been party Chief Whip and also spokesman on welfare issues. He holds the record for the longest period as Hawick's Parliamentary representative. He has taken part in some Common Riding Ride-outs. He was knighted in 2003 and became Lord Kirkwood of Kirkhope in 2005 after stepping down as M.P. Rev. James (c.1650–1709) born in Dunbar Parish, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1670, was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1676 and became Chaplain to the family of Sir John Campbell, Earl of Caithness (and later Breadalbane). He was then assistant at Wemyss and was presented to Minto Parish by Walter Riddell of Minto in early 1679, becoming minister later that year. However, he was deprived in late 1681 for not taking 'the Test', i.e. refusing to accept Episcopalianism. He went to Colmonell Parish around 1682 or 1683. Then in 1684, through the influence of Dr. Gilbert Burnet (Bishop of Salisbury) he was given the modest living of Astwick in Bedfordshire. He is said to have been 'outed' with his consent in 1702, and moved to Ireland. He worked hard to circulate Gaelic copies of the Bible, and to promote libraries in every parish. He left some papers to the Presbytery of Dunbar detailing his efforts to circulate the Bible throughout the Highlands in Gaelic. His books were later transferred to the collection of the General Assembly. He wrote 'A Discourse of the right way of improving our Time' (1692), 'An Overture for Founding and Maintaining Bibliotheks in every Paroch throughout the Kingdom' (1699, 1889, based on which he is sometimes given the title 'Father of the Free Libraries'), 'A Copy of a Letter anent a Project for erecting a Library in every Presbytery, or at least every County in the Highlands' (1702) and 'A New Family Book, or the True Interest of Families' (1690, 1693). He appears to have died unmarried.

Kirkwud (kirk-wud) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded c.1376 as 'Kyrwud', with a value of 40 pence. It was in the section called 'Foresta', but the precise location is unclear (perhaps near 'Kirk Hill' or near the old Castleton Kirk).

Kirkwud (kirk-wud) n. former name for lands listed among those held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick in 1511 and 1572. It is possible that this is an error for 'Birkwood' (it is 'Kirkwod' in 1511 and 1572).

Kirkwudheid (kirk-wud-heed) n. former name for lands near Winnington Rig. They were listed as ‘lie Over et Nether Kirkwudheid’ as part of the Lordship of Winnington in 1610. ‘Kirkwood’ was listed among lands in the Barony of Winnington in the late 17th century.

the Kirkwynd see the Kirk Wynd

the Kirk Wynd (thu-kirk-wīnd) n. old road from Drumlanrig Square to the Slitrig, named for its proximity to St. Mary’s Church. It was referred to as a ‘vennel’ in a 1610 sasine. By the 19th century it had become a very over-crowded street. Most of the older buildings were demolished in 1973/74, with a car park by St. Mary’s church and a road through to Slitrig Bank being constructed. Some houses were restored and inhabited in 1984. It is the site where the Drums & Fifes assemble to begin the main day of the Common Riding at 6 a.m. on the Friday.

kirky (kir-kee) adj. enthusiastic about church attendance and support of church affairs – ‘ma granny was an awfi kirky wumman’ (also ‘kirkie’).

kirkyaird (kirk-yārd, -yird) n. a church yard, burial ground attached to a church – ‘a green Christmas makes a fat kirkyaird’, ‘...Stands the roofless kirk in the auld kirkyaird, Where the gowans earliest gem the swaird’ [JoHa], ‘...And oot through the cauld kirkyaird’ [WL], ‘...Naething but scoores and scoores o’ craws On every kirkyaird trei’ [DH] (accent on 2nd syllable).

Kirkyaird (kirk-yārd) n. another name for the street by St. Mary’s, previously called Old Churchyard, and now named St. Mary’s Place. It was in earlier times part of the burial grounds of the church, the surrounding wall only being built in 1811.

Kirkyaird Entry (kirk-yārd-en-tree) n. former name for Wilton Lane, for its proximity to Old Wilton Churchyard.

the Kirkyaird Well (thu-kirk-yārd-wel) n. spring by the old church yard at Spittal-on-Rule, also called the Leper Well.

kirn (kirn, ki-rin) n., arch. a churn – ‘There’s a right wind blowing along the burn, The dead leaves dance at an elfin kirn ...’ [WHO], v., arch. to churn, to wind up a piece of machinery – ‘... the motor dreiver ... beguid o kirneen an caain eis injin’ [ECS].

kirn (kirn) n., arch. the last handful of grain cut at the harvest, formerly made into a kind of doll that was displayed conspicuously during the ensuing celebrations and for until the following harvest – ‘Wi’ merry nights, as kirn and ball, As wedding, fair, or fuddling squal’ [JoHa], ‘... Made ilka ane anxious to win the kirn day’ [JoHa], ‘The kirn day cam’, a kemp began, And hard and fast it grew; Across the rig wi’ lightnin’ speed The glintin’ sickles flew’ [JT], ‘The corn’s shorn, the kirn’s won, Kirnie, kirnie, ho, ho’ [T], ‘ti win the kirn’ is to cut the last handful of grain, ‘ti cry the kirn’ is to give the cheer when the reaping is finished, a harvest home, a celebration at the end of the harvest, involving eating, music and dancing – ‘... At kirn or mairket there was nane sae bauld’ [WL], ‘... such as acting as doorkeeper at numerous kirns and balls’ [RM].

Kirndean (kirn-deen) n. farm just south of Dinlabyre, on the Liddel Water, to the east of the road, about 4½ miles north of Newcastleton. In 1541 it is valued at 1 merk on the rental roll of Liddesdale, with tenant George Armstrong. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 1589 acres, bounded by Dinlabyre on the east, Sorbietrees and the Border on the south, Dykeraw and lands of the Laird of Whithaugh on the west and Whitehaugh on the north; a house is shown near the modern farmhouse and another far to the south-east. It was one a home of the Armstrongs and then by the Elliots from the early 17th century until about 1950. ‘Fightin Charlie o Liddesdale’ is described in the notes to Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’, and is meant to have been an Armstrong or Elliot from here. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1681 and 1682. Andrew Murray was tenant there in 1694. Adam Elliot was farmer there in 1797, Thomas Elliot in 1841, Henry Elliot in 1851, William Scott Elliot in 1861 and Thomas Murray in 1868. It is said that William Scott was farmer there in the early 19th century, and had an interaction with his neighbour ‘Little Robbie o the Castleton’. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. In an area of open moorland to the east lies the remains of a homestead, about 100 ft across, which is labelled on the Ordnance Survey map as ‘Homestead Moat’ (and may correspond to the position of the other house marked in 1718), although there is no indication that the ditch was ever water-filled. 3 flints found near here are in Hawick Museum. It is also the name of a farm in Zimbabwe, although whether this is connected is uncertain (the origin is possibly Old Norse ‘kjarn’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘valley of rich pasture’; it first occurs as ‘Kyrndene’ in kirn-milk (kirn-milk) n., poet. buttermilk – ‘... for this Is the first of the ancient private tribal festivals, And gaun, as usual, like a kirn-milk mairket!’ [DH].

kirn-doly (kirn-do-lee) n., arch. a decorated representation of a female form made out of the last corn to be harvested.

kirnel (kir-nul) n., arch. a kernel (also kurnel).

kirsens (kir-sin) v., arch. to christen.

Kirsmaas (kirs-mis) n., arch. Christmas.

Kirsty o’ Cocklaw Castle (kir-stee-ō-kok-law-kaw-sul) n. musical play written by J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant, performed in the Silver Street Hall in 1903, to raise money for the Saxhorn Band. The script is one of only 2 of Jed Murray’s musical plays to survive.

kirtle (kir-tul) n., poet. a close-fitting tunic worn by men in the Middle Ages or a long dress worn by women – ‘Fair Ellen she rose, put her kirtle on, Just by the skriche of the day ...’ [JTe], ‘But the kirtle o’ green, an’ the kerchie o’ white, Wi’ your bonnie locks hangin’ down’ [JTe], ‘For that was the brooch these mother hands Fastened for clasp on his kirtle bands ...’ [WHO], ‘Sometimes a kirtle of brown she wears When the ploughs fight up the brae ...’ [WHO].

kissit (ki-see’, -si’) pp., arch. kissed – ‘...richteousniss an’ peece hae kissit ilk ither’ [HSR], ‘An’ furthwuth he cam’ til Jesus, an’ said, Hail, Maister; an’ kisset him’ [HSR].

the knittin (thū-nī-in) n. the making of garments using needles and yarn, applied either to hand-made or machine made articles. Home knitting used to be much more common, taking up much of the spare time of local women in the 18th and 19th centuries. Straw or quill needles were once used, along with stocking wires.

knitwear (nī-wār) n. generic name for knitted clothing, particularly machine-knitted garments. Weavers were certainly a prominent class of workers in Hawick from the earliest records in about 1640. The knitting of stockings is said to have been introduced into Scotland during the time of the Protectorate of Cromwell, i.e. the 1650s. The local origins of the industry are in traditional linen and woollen manufacturing, the latter perhaps being developed through the sheep farming of the local monks. The availability of sheep, and the abundance of sources of water-power were the natural seeds for development. Spinning a weaving were originally a domestic business, but people employed specifically as weavers were already a reasonably large fraction of the population of Hawick when the Burgh records begin about 1640. In 1728 the Council encourage the manufacturing of 'tarred wool' by helping with the rent of workhouse and 'to pay £20 yearly to the dresser of coarse wool'. In 1736 it is recorded that 'at Kirkcudbright, Hawick, Monygaff, and other Places near the Wool Countries, several Packs of tarred Wool have been washed and cleaned, and some of it sorted and combed, spun, and wrought up into Blankets, and other coarse Goods, by private Hands, for their own Use'; the names of Hawick's first encouragers of local industry are not known. There is early reference to a fulling mill, and wool was spun for manufacture in other towns. By the mid-1700s there was a small factory making linen checks, and from the 1750s Hawick had small factories manufacturing carpets and linen tapes. John Hardie introduced stocking frames in 1771, initially making hosiery from linen and worsted, but gradually giving way to lambswool. In about 1776 there were 65 looms in Hawick, making linens and woollens (including carpets) and just 6 stocking frames. By 1791 there were 14 men and 51 women employed in connection with the manufacture of woollen goods, making about 3500 pairs of lambswool hose and 600 pairs of cotton hose annually. In 1816 there were 7 carding mills with 44 'scribbling' machines and 100 spinning jennies; the Town spun 12,000 stones of wool annually, and manufactured 328,000 pairs of stockings on 510 frames. Hawick grew as a hosiery (stockings etc.) manufacturing centre from the later 18th century into a producer of a wide range of knitwear in the late 19th century. There were over a million stockings made in 1838, with over 100,000 stones of wool consumed in the factories, where there were more than 1200 stocking frames and more than 200 weaving looms, making more than a million pairs of stockings annually, as well as other items. In 1839 it was stated that items being manufactured included 'yarns, under clothing, flannels, plaiding, shawls, tartans, druggets, cloths of various descriptions, lamb's wool hosiery of the finest texture, and blankets'. Attention switched from hosiery to tweeds through the 19th century. By 1850 there were 268 weaving looms and 3465 people were employed in the industry. In 1869 it was estimated that there were 64 set of machines, 52,864 spinning spindles, 270 power-looms and 100–150 hand looms, with 1.8 million pounds of wool being carded annually. In 1875 there were 653 power-looms for tweed, as well as 1017 hand frames and 86 power frames for hosiery. Around 1900 there were 18 hosiery and 14 tweed manufacturers in Hawick. It took many decades for the word 'knitwear' to popularly replace 'hosiery' as the description of Hawick's main industry; there are conflicting claims about which company used it first, but it seems likely this portmanteau word was coined in Hawick. Innes, Henderson & Co. used 'knit wear' in 1924, with a brochure in 1929 having it as one word, while the minutes of the Board of Pringle's first used it in 1945 – 'Though I'm forever roving My heart is interwoven With the fabric of this old mill town' [DF].

knock (k-nok) n., arch. a clock – 'For taking doune & mending of the knoik' [BR1701], '... and now for mending of the knocke and putting her to chap again' [BR1701], v., arch. to strike – '...he shall keep the Town's knocke in the steeple in ane good going order and sufficient case and condition, without cracke or flaw for knocking and chopng hourly night and day' [BR1702], '...lykewise that oyl be furnished yearlie for the knocke, and towes for the bell ...' [BR1704] (there were many spelling variants).

knockit (no-kee', -ki') pp. knocked – 'I couldna thole his priestly greed; His threatening made me scoff; I gied my airm ane angry swing An' knockit his bonnet off' [FL].

knoll (nōl) n., arch. a chunk, lump, large piece of anything – '...an ahint hit, Ruberslaw's michty noal, wui plewed rigs an planteens' [ECS], 'Sic a muckle noall!' [ECS] (also spelled 'knoles', 'noal', etc.; cf. knowe).

knoop (noop) n., arch. the cloudberry, Rubus chamæmorus – 'On the very summits of the Teviothead, Liddesdale, and Cheviot Hills ... we find the Cloudberry (R. Chamæmorus), showing in June its white star-like flower, and in September its delicious orange fruit, known to the shepherds as knoops' [JAHM], 'Knots' or Knoops' (the Cloudberry) are abundant on Peel Fell; parts of the hill-top are even red with them; also on Hartshorn Pike and Deadwater head. The berris are gathered and jame made of them' [BNC1889].

knot (nō') n., arch. a lump, chunk, figuratively applied to the head – 'Knot o uimor = suppurative swelling' [ECS] (this may be the meaning of 'Note' in 'Note o the Gate').

knottit (no'-ee', -i') pp., arch. knotted – '...Wi' sash an' buckle, sword, star, knottit gaiter' [JoHa].

Know see Knowe

knowe (now) n. a small rounded hill, hillock, knoll – 'hei'll be owre the knowe the now', 'mibbe there was a saicond shooter on the gressy knowe?',

‘... We saw come marching ovr the knows, Five hunder Fennicks in a flock’ [CPM], ‘The glow-worm’s lamp is gleaming bright, The sheep on ilka knowe are still ...’ [JoHa], ‘Gi’e me the bonnie broomy knowe, The burn that roond it rins ...’ [JEDM], ‘Fareweel! ye balmy haughs an’ knowes ...’ [JS], ‘Here Hardie’s Hills in rugged beauty rise, With knowes and hollows interspersed between ...’ [JCG], ‘In throwe the knowes o’ bracken That huddle roun’ Winnington Rig; Or slowly along the ribboned road That said-dles Crawbyres Brig?...’ [WL] (sometimes written ‘know’; it is essentially a variant of the English ‘knoll’, although used more frequently; it exists in many local place names, particularly small hills).

Knowe (now) n. hamlet to the east of Hassendeanburn, on the opposite side of the Teviot from Ashybank. It was nearer to the river, with ‘Knowetoonheid’ being a little to the north. It was at one time referred to as the East Mains of Hassendean. Thomas Turnbull was owner in 1643, when it was valued at £279 10s. John Turnbull paid tax on £227 8s for land there in 1663 and Thomas Turnbull in 1678. The lands became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. The Turnbells of Knowe, related to the Minto branch of the family, held land here for many generations, before it passed to the Horsburghs of that Ilk through marriage. Tax was paid in 1694 for 6 hearths for ‘Know and his servants’; in fact Thomas Turnbull of Knowe acted as a collector of the Hearth Tax for Roxburghshire. Anthony Turnbull paid tax for 22 windows there in 1748. Thomas Scott and John Gray were living there in 1799. The lands were listed as owned by David Simpson of Knowe on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when valued at £227. Edward Heron-Maxwell of Teviotbank was owner in about 1874. A glass stirrup-cup used by this family is in the Museum. Their arms showed an ear of rye between 3 bulls’ heads. Andrew Reid farmed there in 1797 (also formerly spelled ‘Know’).

Knowe (now) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It is marked ‘Know’ on Stobie’s 1770 map, to the south of Castleton village and just to the east of Bellshiels.

the Knowe (thu-now) n. occasional short form for the Toor Knowe – ‘Fornenst the Knowe was Jimmie Tamson’s place, The queerest store your een nicht see ...’ [WL].

the Knowe (thu-now) n. former name for the farm at Bowanhill, Teviothead, also known as ‘Henderson’s Knowe’.

Knowebog Hill (now-bog-hil) n. hill in Craik Forest, near the head of the Borthwick valley, north-east of Wolfcleuchhead. It reaches a height of 377 m.

Knowe Brig (now-brig) n. former bridge over the Hermitage Water near Toftholm and Shaws farms, which once carried the main road. A farm by this bridge was known as ‘White Know’.

Knowe Burn (now-burn) n. alternative name for the Toftholm Sike, which joins the Hermitage Water between Toftholm and Netherraw. The road bridge across the stream was formerly known as the Knowe Brig, and a cottage by the roadside was Whiteknowe.

knowe-en’ (now-en) n., poet. the end of a hill – ‘Snaaws join the squal, wi’ pu’lin’, pirlin’, An’ drifts, as ’round knowe-en’s a-whirlin’ [JoHa].

Knoweheid (now-heed) n. knowehead, former farmstead to the west of Newcastleton, on the south-west side of Park Hill. It was still occupied by shepherd John Hislop in 1858 and by his son John in 1861. The remains of several buildings and enclosure walls can still be seen.

Knowesouth (now-sowth, noo-sooth) n. mansion on the A698 road to Jedburgh, now a private nursing home. The estate was held by a branch of the Rutherford family (descended from the main Edgerston stem) from about the mid-17th century, who sometimes spelled their name ‘Rutherford’. The lands were valued at £484 in 1678. The farms of the estate featured prominently in the Hearth Tax list for Bedrule Parish at the end of the 17th century, with 4 hearths in the house and 19 tenants listed. Robert Bonnar was there in 1690. John Rutherford paid tax for 26 windows there in 1748 and 1753. Labourer James Young was there in at least 1797–1801, gardener James Oliver in 1799 and George Hope in 1801. When Thomas Rutherford died in 1796 and his brother Capt. John Rutherford died unmarried in the early 19th century the inheritance of the estate was disputed between the husbands of different daughters. It eventually went to Thomas’ nephew Charles Scott. He sold it to William Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre, who had a mansion built there in about 1835. However, in 1838 Rutherford sold it to George Pott (who had already purchased the neighbouring Ruecastle). Robert Oliver and John Rutherford are recorded as farmers there in 1797 and James Young was a servant. George and Gideon Pott of Dod lived there in the 1840s to 60s. There is an oil painting of the old house, probably from the mid-19th century. The house was re-built around 1870 for William Oliver Rutherford on the site of the earlier house. It has a spectacular 18th century lectern-type 'doocot' (although largely hidden by trees). About 500 m to the south-east are the possible remains of a settlement (also spelled 'Knowsouth', it was 'Knoushoth' in 1694; it may be marked on Pont's 1590s manuscript map as 'Cowsmowth', but is not on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Knowesouth Burn (now-sowth-burn) n. stream that rises on the north-west slopes of Black Law in Bedrule Parish and runs roughly northwards, past the farm of Knowesouth to join the Teviot. On the west side of the stream are the remains of a settlement. It consists of a roughly circular enclosure, about 43 m in diameter, with another bank outside, lying between 2 gullies. This is probably the 'encampment' described in the 1837 parish summary in the New Statistical Account.

Knowetoonheid (now-toon-heed) n. Knowetownhead, hamlet about 4 miles north-east of Hawick, between Hassendeanburn and Teviot Bank. It is on the east bank of Hassendean Burn and a little to the north of the old farm of Knowe. It was locally also known as simply 'Toonheid' (or 'Townhead') and was formerly known as 'East Mains' of Hassendean. It became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. William Turnbull held it in the late 15th century. It appears to have been part of the lands owned by Robert Scott of Alton in 1643 and owned by Thomas Gray in 1678, when it was 'Now called Know Townhead' and valued at £214. It was owned by the Turnbells of Knowe in the 17th and 18th centuries, although their house was probably nearer to the river than the modern farmhouse. It was farmed by William Little around 1700. In 1797 Adam Trotter and James Hilson were listed as joiners there and John Armstrong was a servant. The farmhouse contains a carved wedding plaque, showing '1628 TT HT', probably the marriage of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, with his wife perhaps being Helen Turnbull; it was presumably taken from the old house of Knowe. There are 2 carved stones built into the wall, one showing 2 dragons, and the other a lamb bearing a cross or banner; these may have been from Hassendean Kirk. In the county valuation of 1788 it is recorded as 'Thomas Gray of Alton's Lands, now called Know Townhead' and valued at £214 (marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Knox (noks) n. Adam (b.1826) son of Walter and Elizabeth Hart. He was the first Cornet from Wilton, being elected at a public meeting in 1856 after the first nominee had declined and then the Council had refused to be further involved. He is shown as Right-hand Man in the first photograph of the Common Riding Principals. He worked as a 'flesher' (i.e. butcher). Agnes (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. She was probably related to George, John and Thomas, who were also listed there. Andrew 'Dandie' (17th C.) married Marion Redford in Ashkirk Parish in 1634. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism in 1690 for Thomas in Ashkirk Parish. Andrew (1690/1–1768) tenant at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Kirkwood, who died in 1768, aged 74. Andrew (1756/7–1830), tenant of Mainhill, who is recorded on the same headstone, is probably his grandson. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1789. A.O. (18th/19th C.) residing at Wilton Mill, he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Dan fictional character from 'The Gutterbludes', described as 'Son of a Duke's farmer', one of 3 Teri schoolmates who emigrated as settlers to Canada. David (18th/19th C.) resident at Whitlaw, along with James, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. The pair were probably the uncles of William, who was later farmer at Meikle Whitlaw; they were said to have succeeded as tenants to John Gledstains. David (b.1821) son of Walter and Elizabeth Hart. He was farmer at lands off Langlands Road, before it was developed. In 1851 he was living at Howlands House on Wilton Path, farmer of 34 acres, employing 2 men. In 1861 he was assistant farmer at Meikle Whitlaw. His wife was Ann, from Newcastleton. Their children included Agnes, William and John. David (b.1820/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Martinshouse. In 1861 he was farming 116 acres and employing 4 people. He was also recorded there in 1868. His wife was Agnes. George (17th C.) resident at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. George (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Agnes, John and Thomas, who were also listed there. He may be the George, married to Janet Robson, whose children baptised in Robertson Parish (when it still contained Hassendean) included Agnes (b.1684), Thomas (b.1687) and Andrew (b.1689). The witnesses in 1684 were John Knox (who was surely related) and John Brown. George (b.c.1805) stockingmaker of Howdenburn, and early member of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. He was son of George, who was a private in the 16th Regiment of Foot, and Agnes Gordon. He lived with his sister Janet. A sketch of him exists. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with James, as residents of 'Cordlane'. It is unclear where this was, but James Davidson in Raperlaw was accused of stealing 40 sheep from there. James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Henry at 'Cordlane'. James (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitlaw along with David on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably ancestor of James who farmed at Little Whitlaw a few decades later and possibly uncle of William, who farmed at Meikle Whitlaw. James (18th/19th C.) gardener at Damside who was also a volunteer. He is probably the James recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh in 1788, valued at £15 3s. He spotted the beacon on Crumhaughhill at the False Alarm of 1804 (although confusingly sometimes this is said to have been 'Walter'); he ran down the Loan and the Howegate waving his gun, with a crowd running after him, reached the Tower Knowe and fired his gun as a signal, gaining the prize of 20 shillings. He could be the James, who, along with Walter, is described in the 1808 will of 'Auld Cash' as 'late in Damside now at Silverboothall'; according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he and Walter were formerly in possession of enclosures that were part of Silverbuthall, and he is probably recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (later owned by auctioneer James Oliver). He may be the James who married Jean Irwin in Wilton in 1756 and had children: David (b.1757); Andrew (b.1758); Elizabeth (b.1760); Helen (b.1762); James (b.1766); Jean (b.1768); Andrew (b.1770); Walter (b.1771); John (b.1774); and Isabel (b.1780). The witnesses in 1780 were Robert 'Irwin' (probably related to his wife) and Thomas Rae. James (b.c.1790) farmer at Little Whitlaw. His brother William was farmer at Meikle Whitlaw. His wife was Thomasina and their children included: Archibald; Janet, who married a Turnbull; and Thomas, who was cashier at Haddon & Turnbull's. He was probably nephew of David and James who were earlier at Whitlaw. In 1851 he was recorded there, farming 97 acres and employing 3 people. James (19th C.) resident of Harden in Castleton Parish in 1868. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Horsleyhill. He was probably related to Agnes, George and Thomas, also listed there. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for George in 1684. John (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1761 for William Nichol and Janet Blaikie. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Belses Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (1763/4–1832) son of William, tenant at Newhouse. He farmed at Faldonside. He married Janet Scott, who died in 1836, aged 58. Their children included William and Jean, who died in infancy. He is buried in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (b.1828) son of William. He was a baker in Melrose. He took over his father's tenancy of Meikle and Little Whitlaw. However, he gave them up in 1895. He died without issue. Rev. Robert (1606–59) eldest son of Robert, who was probably the grand-nephew of the reformer John. He became minister at Kelso in 1633. He signed the National Covenant, probably in Hawick, in 1638. He used some vaults in the old abbey as his manse, adding to the chambers used by his father. He firstly married Margaret, sister of John Ker of Lochtour and secondly Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. Rev. Robert (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1668, he was recorded living at Cavers in 1677. Hence he may have been private chaplain or tutor for Douglas of Cavers. He wrote to Rev. Wylie (the former tutor at Cavers) about the apparently supernatural case of Sir George Maxwell of Pollock, and also about the 'ethart' spirit, which accompanied a lady who lived 'in the West marches' of Scotland. He is recorded in Cavers in 1683 and 1684 in discharges to the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. He became assistant minister at St. Mungo's in Glasgow in 1688, but was forced to give up on account of being an Episcopalian. He was presented to Peebles in 1690, and although he was not settled, he 'continued to possess the Kirk by violence', eventually being forced to withdraw. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Robertson. He married Jean Turnbull in 1682. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Graham and Margaret Knox (perhaps his sister) in 1681. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Shiel and their son Andrew was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were James Johnstone and Andrew Knox (who was surely related). Thomas (17th C.) resident at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to George, who was also listed there, and seems likely to have been an ancestor of the later Thomas who farmed at Firth. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Agnes, George and John, who were also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Marion (b.1740); and Thomas (b.1747). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1759 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Waugh at Groundistone. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Firth, recorded on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Firth in 1797. He married Barbara Turnbull and was father of the poet William (b.1789), who was baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish. Other children were probably Jessie (b.1790), Dorothea (b.1794), Thomas (b.1796) and Henrietta (b.1798). His wife has previously been married to George Pott of Todrig. He may have been related to the earlier Thomas at Newhouse. Thomas (19th/20th C.) son of James, farmer at Little Whitlaw. He worked in the woollen trade for a while and was then cashier at Haddon & Turnbull's. He lived at Ebony Cottage. He was described as 'an intelligent and kindly man off business, but somewhat to be feared if immersed in business'. He married Isabella, daughter of Benjamin Hall and Mary Wilson. Thomas 'Tom' worked in the Tourist Information Centre in Hawick, where he became known for singing to visitors. He wrote the song 'Where Slitrig Meets Teviot'. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included Andrew (b.1653). Walter (18th/19th C.) labourer in Minto in 1797 when he was taxed for having a greyhound. Perhaps the same Walter was listed as owner of a 'House and Yard' in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d, which was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. Walter (18th/19th C.) shopkeeper in Wilton, with a grocer's shop. He also ran carts, carrying coals etc., with the help of his sons. It seems likely he was son of James, gardener at Damside; in the 1808 will of 'Auld Cash', he and James are described as 'late in Damside now at Silverboothall'; according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he and James were formerly in possession of enclosures that were part of Silverboothall. He was probably the 'Mr. Knox' who owned land around and to the north of Langlands Road, according to Wood's 1824 map. He was listed as farmer at Howlands among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1837 he was mentioned as an example in the House of Commons investigation into 'fictitious voters'; along with his sons Walter and James they rented Hutlerburn in order to have votes in Selkirkshire. He married Elizabeth Hart and their children included: James (b.1809); Helen (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); Jane (b.1815); Adam (b.1817); and Helen (again, b.1819); David (b.1821), who took over the farm in Wilton; John (b.1824); Adam (b.1826), first Cornet from Wilton; and Mary. All of their children were born in Wilton Parish. His widow was living at Howlands House in 1841 and 1851. Walter (b.1813) son of Walter. He farmed at Stirches Mains. He was listed there among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He was married to Elizabeth and their children included Jessie and Walter. William (1721/2–96) tenant at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was recorded there on the 1788–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Janet Smail, who died in 1791, aged 60. Their son John (b.1763/4) was tenant at Faldonside. They also had 2 children who died in infancy. William (1732/3–77) tenant farmer at Dunstane Moor in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Cairns, who died in 1772, aged 34. His brother James (1726/7–1805) is recorded on the same headstone. William (1762/3–1825) tenant at Belses farm. He married Margaret Hume, who died in 1859, aged 91. Their children included: Robert (1799/1800–16); Margaret (1803/4–16); Barbara (1801/2–08); and 3 children who died in infancy. William (1789–1825) local poet, born at Firth, near Lilliesleaf, he lived for a while at The Cottage, near Orchard. He was the eldest son of Thomas, a Lilliesleaf farmer, and Barbara Turnbull (who had been married to George Pott of Todrig). He was educated at Lilliesleaf Parish School until aged 12 or 13 and then spent a few years at Musselburgh Grammar School. He was a good friend of Rev. John Cochrane of Hawick, the husband of his sister Jessie Elizabeth. His family farmed at Todrig, where Henry Scott Riddell was a herd in his youth, and later farmed at Langhope. He himself tried unsuccessfully as a farmer at Wrae near Langholm when he was 23, lasting about 5 years. His family moved to Edinburgh in 1820, where he worked as a journalist, wrote sacred poetry, and became a friend of Sir Walter Scott. His publications include 'The Lonely Hearth and other poems' (1818), 'Songs of Israel' (1824) and 'The Harp of Zion' (1825). The 'Harp of Zion' was supposedly recalled entirely from memory after the printer lost the manuscript copy. His poem 'Mortality' (also known as 'Oh!

Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?', published in 'Songs of Israel') was a favourite of Abraham Lincoln and it was also said that the Emperor of Russia had it printed in gold and hung on the palace walls. He was described as short, but handsome, with a fair complexion and light hair, and was said to recite his compositions enthusiastically. Stories are told of him taking shelter at Stainton's Smiddy on Melgund Place and also at Cauldmill Smiddy, when the smith quoted one of his own lines of poetry to him, obliging him to confess that he was the author of those lines, leading to an invitation to hospitality and a long night of conversation (it seems likely that the stories are both inspired by one event). He died at Leith after suffering a stroke, aged only 36, and is buried in New Calton Cemetery in Edinburgh. The Museum has an original letter of his. There is a tablet to his memory in Lilliesleaf Kirk. 'Some Correspondence Prnted for Private Circulation among the Poet's Relations and Friends' was published in 1891. William (18th/19th C.) from Lilliesleaf Parish. He emigrated to Canada, settling in Walterloo County, Ontario, where he called his farm Langside, after the place he left in Lilliesleaf. He emigrated with his sister Jessie (who married Robert Leithead), and their farm was next to that of his cousin Charles Scott, who was also from Lilliesleaf. He later moved to Toronto. William (b.1796/7) farmer at Meikle Whitlaw and later at Little Whitlaw. His brother James was tenant at Little Whitlaw. He was said to have succeeded 2 of his uncles, who became tenants in about 1746 (although it was probably later than this); they could have been the David and James recorded at Whitlaw in 1797. His wife was Nancy Scott (listed as 'Mina' in the birth records of her children). In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 64 acres at Meikle Whitlaw and in 1861 was farmer of 150 acres, employing 5 people. He was still recorded there in 1868. His children included: Williamina ('Mina', b.1819), who lived at 11 Glebe View; Isabel (b.1820); David (b.1822), who went to Canada, but returned to Scotland to farm at New Hope, Kirkpatrick Fleming; William (b.1824); James (b.1826); John (b.1828), baker in Melrose, who succeeded to the farms; Margaret (b.1831); Agnes and Jessie (b.1833); and Mary (b.1836). One of his daughters became Mrs. Rutherford from Moffat (sometimes written 'Knocks' and 'Nox' in early records).

knuigle (ni-, nū-gul) v., arch. to squeeze with the hands and knees, to give artificial respiration (also knuizle).

knuizle (ni-, nū-zul) v., arch. to press the body, especially an injured person (also knuigle).

Knyvet (ni-vi') n. Sir Henry (c.1506–bef.1547) of Charlton, Wiltshire, son of Sir Thomas and Muriel Howear. He was one of the lieutenants of the Earl of Hertford during the 1545 ravaging of the Borders. He married Anne Pickering in 1537. Their son Thomas was famous as the captor of Guy Fawkes (older form of 'Nivet' with many spelling variations).

koag see cog

the K.O.S.B. (thū-kā-ō-es-bee) n. the King's Own Scottish Borderers, local infantry Regiment, covering the Borders and nearby areas. The Regiment was raised in March 1689 in Abbey Close at Holyrood by David Leslie, 3rd Earl of Leven. About 800 men were gathered in about 2 hours as a 'loyalist' force to protect Edinburgh against the Highlanders and other supporters of William of Orange. This force was eventually renamed the Kings Own Borderers in 1805 and the K.O.S.B. in 1887, and formally adopted the Leslie tartan in 1898. The K.O.S.B. has fought in almost every campaign involving the British Army in the last 300 years. There is a record of them celebrating the Hawick Common Riding in Egypt in 1889. The regiment undertook a march from Berwick to Dumfries, partly as a recruitment drive. The 1/4th Battalion (Territorial Force, pronounced 'first fourth', i.e. the first part of the 4th Battalion) grew out of the Border Rifles and included many local volunteers who signed up in the years leading up to WWI. In 1915, because of the losses suffered by the regular army units, the 1/4th were sent to Gallipoli, where they took place in that ill-conceived campaign against Turkey. They later served in Egypt, Palestine and on the Western Front. Later the 7th/8th presented the town with their Colours when they were disbanded after WWI. The entire Regiment was given the last freedom of the town in 1974. The Regiment paraded through Hawick in 2006 before merging with the Royal Scots to become the Royal Scots Borderers, 1st Battalion of the Royal Regiment of Scotland. In 2009 a plaque was placed outside the Town Hall to honour all the men who served with the regiment. 'For king and country and the Scottish Borderers the story of the 1/4th (Border) Battalion, the King's Own Scottish Borders on the Gallipoli Peninsula 1915' was written by Gavin Richardson in 1987 and 'After the Kosbies (thu-koz-bees) n., pl. popular name for members of the K.O.S.B.

Gallipoli: the story of the 1/4th (Border) Battalion, The King's Own Scottish Borderers 1916–1918: Egypt, Palestine and the Western Front' in 1992. 'Borderers in Battle: The War Story of the King's Own Scottish Borderers, 1939–1945' (1948) was written by Hugh Gunning.

Kossuth (ko-sooth) n. Louis (1802–94) Hungarian revolutionary, who worked for Hungarian independence, becoming President in 1849. However, the republic was short-lived, with Russia intervening to help Austria. He toured Britain and the U.S. and received ovations as a champion of liberty, including being made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1856 after delivering a lecture 'in the cause of European Freedom'. The visit was organised by Peter Laidlaw, Alex Hogg and others. A large crowd turned out to watch his carriage arriving in Hawick. One of the welcoming banners in Hawick had been made by James 'Dictionary' Murray and said 'Thy Kingdom Come' in Hungarian. He talked to the crowd from a window of the Tower Hotel and delivered 2 speeches in East Bank Kirk over his 2-day visit. He was later in Galashiels, Kelso, Jedburgh and Selkirk. In Glasgow he stayed at the observatory with John Pringle Nichol, who had been a teacher in Hawick. His first name is also written 'Lajos'. Unable to improve the situation in Hungary, he died in exile.

Kowe (kow) n. Thomas (15th C.) notary for the sasine giving James Douglas of Drumlanrig the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He was a presbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow. It is unclear if there would be a more modern spelling of his surname.

krame (krām) n., arch. a temporary merchant's booth, stall at a fair – 'Assoilzies George Makwetie fra the claim persewit be John Scott, pethar, for a half dozen of butes, mae or fewer, allegit taken away fra his crame in Hawick' [BR1655], '...for the stealing and theftuously away taken out of his craime in open market ane pair of single soled shoes' [BR1680], 'Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame' [HI], 'Gibbie the Gowk's no' sic a gowk but he'll pack up the krame a' right enough' [JEDM], 'Rows of 'krames' laden with toothsome dainties ...' krame-wife (krām-wif) n., arch. a female stallholder at a fair etc. – '...and on Hopekirk Ba' morning the kraim-wives regularly took up their station in the kirkyard and exposed their wares of gingerbread, tam trott, and clagam on the old through stones' [WaD] (also written 'kraim-wife').

Kristenbury Crag (kris-ten-bu-ree-krawgz) n., pl. Christianbury Crag, a rocky outcrop near the farm of Flatt on the English side of the Kershopp valley. It can be seen in the distance from parts of southern Liddesdale.

Krucrewch (krook-rooch) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed among tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. It is unclear what the modern form of this name would be, perhaps just an error for 'Crook' or 'Crooch'.

KS (kā-ess) n. for a long time the 2-letter car licence plate code indicating Roxburghshire.

the Kumfy Mill (thu-kum-fee-mil) n. popular name for the Braemar factory on Commercial Road. It was earlier the business of A. Brodie & Co.

kurnel (kur-nul) n., arch. a kernel (also kirnel).

Kush-Mush (kush-mush) n. nickname in use in the 19th century – 'Here's Soapy Ballantyne and Wull Slush, Here's Todd Lowrie and Peggy Neill; Davie A'-things and auld Kush-Mush, And Jenny A'-things is here as weel' [HI].

kye (kI) n., pl., arch. cows, cattle – 'Item sex ky viz. foure ky with followaris and twa with cauf price of the pece ourheid £8' [SPB1579], '...Betide me life, betide me death, These three ky shall gae t' Liddesdale wi' me. [IWL], '... For ma slice spells serious danger For Elec Cavers' kye' [IWL] (also written

kyle (kīl) n., arch. a small hayrick, a ‘coil’, v., arch. to gather hay into ‘coils’.

Kyle (kīl) n. Alexander (b.c.1795) dyer living on the Howegate, at about No. 12. His wife was Jane, and their children included John, Anne, Mary, William, Archibald and Thomas. Alexander (19th/20th C.) son of John, he worked in the tweed trade and then was tobacconist at 3 Tower Knowe. He was Cornet in 1872. He married Jessie S. Elliot, who was daughter of Hawick’s first cabman, and died in 1885, aged 29. His son William was Cornet in 1905. Their other children included Thomas, Lizzie H. and William, none of whom reached adulthood. Andrew (1729/30–1833) born at Heughhead farm in Castleton Parish. He was tenant farmer at Braidlie on the Hermitage Water. He was farmer at Demainholm on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls, and Braidlie in 1794 and 1797. He was also taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean, daughter of David Murray, and she died in 1834, aged 83. He died in his 94th year and is buried at Ettleton. Their children included: David (1776/7–1861); William (1776–1855); John, recorded as his son on the 1799 Militia ballot; and probably Arthur, who later farmed at Braidlie. His daughters could be the ‘Miss Kyles’ recorded at Braidlie in the 1830s. Andrew (1805/6–91) farmer at Dinlabyre and Midtoddhills near Carlisle. He was farmer at Dinlabyre in 1851, when he is recorded farming 140 acres ‘arabl, of Moor N. Known’ and employing 5 labourers. His wife was Elizabeth, who died in 1908, aged 90. Their children included: Margaret (1841/2–1908); William (1842/3–1903); Mary Anne (1844/5–1922); James; Jane (1850–96); and Elizabeth (1853/4–1924). He died in Inverness-shire and the family are buried at Ettleton. Arthur (18th/19th C.) farmer at Braidlie in Castleton Parish. He was listed at ‘Broadlee’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was also listed as head of household there in 1835–38. He was probably son of Andrew, who was farmer at Braidlie in 1797. He was brother of David, who also farmed at Braidlie. He could be the same Arthur who was farmer at South Greenholm in Castleton Parish in 1841. David (18th C.) resident of Melrose. In 1776 he married Betty Kedie, daughter of Hawick baker John, the marriage being proclaimed in both parishes. They had several children in

Melrose. In 1782 his daughter Betty died in Hawick. David ‘Auld Kyle’ (1777–1861) farmer at Braidlie (or Broadlee) in Castleton Parish. He was son of Andrew and Jean Murray, and brother of Arthur. He was recorded as a shepherd at Braidlee in 1797 on the list of Castleton Parish men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in the parish of Castleton’ and he was a shepherd at Broadlee on the 1801 Militia list. In 1851 he was listed as farmer of 2000 acres of moorland, employing 4 labourers. He married Betty Milligan. Their children included: Mina Crozier (b.1821); Elliott (b.1823); Jane; Andrew; and Anne (b.1833), Anne married shepherd William Glendinning. He is probably the ‘Davie Kyle’, breeder of Dandie Dinmonts, of whom a poem was written by ‘Halbert Noble’ in 1861. He was described in H.H Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865) as a keen hunter, once competing against Routledge, Laird of the Flatt. He hunted hare in his youth, switching later to foxes, hunting with Dandie Dinmonts. As a famer, he had a peculiarity of having all his tups horned. He fathered a child with Jean Armstrong of Canonbie in 1832. David (b.c.1785) recorded as a ‘broker’ on the Fore Raw in 1841. His wife was Margaret. Francis ‘Frank’ (1818–c.1900) son of James and Janet. He was farmer at Hilliesland, taking over from his father as the Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant there in 1843. He was Cornet in 1845 and owned 74 High Street. His son John was also Cornet and farmed at the Wellogate. In 1851 he was listed at ‘4 High Street – F. Kyle’s’ (although 74 High Street is clearly meant), a farmer of 30 acres, employing 1 person. He was listed as a farmer on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was one of the townspeople who recovered from cholera during the 1849 outbreak. He lived into his 80s and was the oldest living Cornet in the late 19th century. He turned out for the Friday at least as late as 1881. There is a photograph of him with the 1846 and 1897 Cornets; this makes him the earliest Cornet of whom we have a photograph. In 1847 he married Isabella Cairns and their children included: Agnes (‘Nancy’, b.1848); Janet (b.1850); Isabella (b.1853); James (b.1855); John (b.1857), who was Cornet in 1885; Beatrix (b.1861); Helen (b.1864); Elizabeth (b.1867); and Frances (b.1869). George (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Headshaw, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same George was cottar in Castleside in 1762; he married Margaret Laidlaw and had several children baptised in Ashkirk Parish, including Thomas (b.1762), Agnes (b.1763), Mary (b.1765), Janet (b.1767), Isabel (b.1771), and Margaret (b.1775). James (1733/4–1813) weaver in Castleton Parish. He lived at Heughhead, where his wife and some children died. However, he moved to Newcastleton, where he himself died. His wife was Agnes Armstrong, who died in 1803, aged 61. Their children included Margaret (1779/80–93). James John (d.bef. 1797) gardener in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains in 1761. He married Agnes Mitchellhill in 1751 and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: William (b.1757); John (b.1759); John (again, b.1760); Adam (b.1762); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1762 were Walter Cook and Thomas Cowan. Note that his forename is sometimes given as just ‘John’ and his wife’s surname sometimes as ‘Mitchel’. James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He married Esther Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1787); Esther (b.1789); John (b.1791); William (b.1794); Robert (b.1796); Beatrix (b.1798); and Adam (b.1802). The witnesses in 1791 were William (surely a close relative) and Thomas Brown. The death of his daughter Beatrix is recorded in Hawick in 1815. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Hardie in 1798. James (1752–98) flesher in Hawick. He paid the Horse Tax in 1792 and 1797. He married Mary Porteous (1753–1824). Their children included: Mary (b.1778), who died young; Helen (b.1780), also died young; John (b.1781) manufacturer in Hawick; Andrew (b.1784), who died aged 10; and Mary (again, b.1786), also died young. He is buried in old Wilton Cemetery. He may be the gradener James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Brown and Beatrix Kyle in 1793. James (c.1780–c.1843) joiner and woodturner of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is likely the Kyle recorded around 74 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map (but could be the other Kyle listed at No. 33), and at about the same place in the 1841 census. He probably also farmed at Hilliesland. His wife was Janet and their children included: Nancy; Francis, who became Cornet; and Janet. He may be the James recorded in about 1874 as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick (even if he was deceased by then). Jane (b.1783/4) proprietor of an inn in Newcastleton in 1825/6, and explicitly of the Grapes Inn in 1837. This was situated at 16 Douglas Square. In 1851 she was recorded as a widow. She was living with her children William and Mary in 1841 and Mary in 1851. She was also at the Grapes Inn in 1852, although incorrectly listed as ‘Ryle’. She was probably Jean Foster, who married George and had children Betty (b.1806), William (b.1808), Fanny (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813), Mary (b.1815) and Georgina (b.1819). John (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Helen Beattie and their children included: Janet (b.1756); Robert (b.1759), also a mason; and Sarah (b.1762). The witnesses in 1759 were smiths James and Robert, who were probably related to his wife. He was deceased before his son Robert died in 1801. He could be the John who witnessed baptisms in 1772 for Thomas Lookup and in 1779 for wright James Hogg. John see James John. John (c.1744–1800) farmer at Heughhead, son of William and Betty Wilson. He was recorded at Heughhead in the Castleton Horse Tax Rolls in 1789–90. He and his father were probably the ‘Messrs Kyles, Heughheads’ who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Agnes Murray, who died in 1806, aged 46. They had a daughter Isabel (d.1869). He was buried at Ettleton. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1797, when he was working for George Douglas. On the 1799 ballot for the Militia he was recorded as a gardener at Cavers. He was also recorded as gardener at Cavers in 1800 and on the 1801 Militia ballot he was a gardener at Cavers who ‘wants th sight of an eye’. His children included: Mark (b.1798); Alexander (b.1800); and Thomas (b.1801). John (1781–1851) son of butcher James and Mary Porteous, he was a merchant and hosiery manufacturer of the early 1800s, with firm John Kyle & Co. operating on the High Street. He was listed as a merchant in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He was the ‘royalist’ Cornet of the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809, selected by the Council, but opposed by the ‘Wesla Lads’. This was in objection to new rules imposed by the Council, restricting the Common Riding participants to a limited circle of invited guests. The ‘Wesla Lads’ instead appointed their own ‘rebel’ Cornet, John Tullie. Kyle had about 45 supporters, half of whom were said to be strangers, and they were hissed and cursed at by the crowds. He may also be the same John who was a member of the Curling Club in 1812. He was listed as a stocking manufacturer on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and may also have been the grocer and spirit dealer of the High Street. 'John & James Kyle' was listed on the High Street among hosiery manufacturers in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In the 1841 census he is living with James and Mary, probably both younger siblings. Mary Ann, who is listed as house proprietor and hosier on the High Street on the 1851 census, is probably the same sister; she was on Bridge Street in 1861 – '... Elect a trader ca'd John Kyle, Massy in iz merchant style' [MB]. John (b.c.1770s) son to Andrew in Braidlie, according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He was recorded as a 'Drover' at 'Broadlee' on the 1801 ballot (along with his brother David). John (1791–1866) gardener at Wilton Lodge for 50 years, he was also a Trustee and elder of the Relief Kirk. In 1851 his address was recorded as 'Wilton Lodge Garden House'. His wife was Margaret, and children included Helen and James. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John 'the Nether Wulton Youth' (1827–1900) son of Alexander and Jane (or Janet) Reid, he was born at Netherwilton, Northumberland, and his father was originally from Kelso. His family moved to Hawick when he was about 10. He was known as a great runner in his younger days, hence his nickname. His brothers were William, Thomas and Richard (who was a foreman skinner in Galashiels). He worked all his life with John Laing & Sons, becoming a hosiery manager. He held many positions associated with the Common Riding organisation, and was Acting Father in 1872 for his own son. He attended his 59th Common Riding dinner in 1899, this being said to be a record. He was also a keen Mason, being Master of Lodge 111. On Old Year's Night 1847 he married Margaret Hall from Eskdalemuir, and she died in 1904, aged 76. Their children were: Alexander, Cornet in 1872; James Hall, framesmith, who married Jane Little; John, engineer in Bloemfontein, South Africa; Mary, who married Robert Millar; and William, who died in infancy. John (1829–1909) son of William and Robina Cavers. He was a carter, agricultural labourer and ploughman in Castleton. In 1860 he married Mary (1836–1931), daughter of John Armstrong and Janet Glendinning. Their children were: Janet (1860–1908); William (b.1836); Robina (1865–1952); Agnes (1868–82); and John Armstrong (1871–81). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery, next to Andrew (d.1891). John (b.1857) son of Francis. He was a farmer who was Cornet in 1885. It is said that his year saw the beginning of the resurgence of interest in the ceremonial side of the Common Riding, with the Council resolving to officially support the events. His Cornet's Lass was probably either Miss Murray or Miss Fraser, who were recording in the local press at the Colour Bussing ceremony in 1887. He may be the farmer John whose property at 74 High Street was demolished to make way for the Pavillion Theatre. John (1871–1958) born in Hawick, son of a fine art dealer Andrew, and Agnes Waugh. He left the High School in 1885, having won the Queen's Prize for drawing. He worked for 8 years as a watchmaker and jeweller, then got an assistant teaching position in Lancashire, and finally won a scholarship to the Royal College of Art in London. After 3 year's of study, he travelled in Europe, taught at Huddersfield technical College and in Alloa and emigrated to Canada in 1905, becoming the Art Supervisor for City Schools in Vancouver. He was later described as 'an outstanding educationalist and one of the most influential men in the history of British Columbia Arts and Crafts'. He was one of the founders of the British Columbia Society of Fine Arts, started the first art night classes in Vancouver and was also instrumental in starting correspondence courses. He was Director of Technical Education for the Province of British Columbia 1913–38. He is also credited with being the first to sponsor an exhibition by Emily Carr. He wrote and illustrated 3 books on teaching woodwork, lettering, and metalwork, 'Design for Industrial Arts' (1931). He married Nellie Hadfield, an English-born school teacher in 1920 and they had at least 2 daughters and a son. He established an educational trust for the High School, the Andrew, Agnes and John Kyle Bequest Fund. Robert (d.1801) mason in Hawick. He was son of John, who was also a mason. His wife Betty Turnbull died in Hawick in 1815. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme and Buccleuch. It is unclear how he was related to other Kyles. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Hummelknowes in 1729 and 1731. His children included: Mark (b.1729); and John (b.1731). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1737. His name is written 'Cayle' in 1737 when he witnessed baptisms for Walter Scott and William Lunn in Wilton. He married Marion Sliman and their children included: George (b.1737); and Isobel (b.1739). The witnesses in 1737 were Robert and William Scott. Thomas (19th C.) brother of John, William and Richard. He was a commercial traveller for John Laing & Sons, and his son was also Thomas. Thomas 'Tom' (1830s–1921) son of Thomas, he worked for John Laing & Sons for about 60 years, mainly as a commercial traveller. He was secretary of the Trades Committee for several years, Clerk of the Course at the Moor for 11 years and member of the Race Committee and Ceremonial Committee. He was known as a good cricketer and was a keen supporter of Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club. He celebrated his golden wedding anniversary with his wife Jane Ferguson, daughter of Mrs. Burns of the Crown Hotel. William (c.1709–98) born at Burnmouth in Castleton Parish, son of William and Isobell Moffet. He was tenant at Heughhead. He and his son were probably the 'Messrs Kyles, Heughheads' who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Betty Wilson, who died in 1786, aged 74. Their children included: John (1743/4–1800); George (1756/7–1819); and 2 sons who died in infancy. William (1776–1855) son of Andrew in Braidlie. He may be the resident of Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same William was farmer at Braidlie in 1797 when he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in Castleton Parish. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in the parish of Castletoun'; he was 'now Farmer Greenholm'. He was also farmer at Greenholm on the 1801 ballot. He may be the 'William, senior, Castleton' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 along with 'William, junior' (presumably his son). William (18th/19th C.) baker in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had a local connection. William (18th/19th C.) listed as 'William, junior, Castleton' in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' along with 'William, senior'. He may be the same William as the flesher listed in Newcastleton in Pigot's 1837 directory. William (b.1794) son of James and Esther Scott. He was a gardener living on the Sandbed (actually at 6 Buccleuch Street) in at least 1841–61. In 1852 he was listed as a greengrocer on Buccleuch Street. He lived with his sisters Mary and Agnes, and nieces and nephews Helen, James, John and Margaret.

In 1861 he was recorded as a market gardener. William (19th C.) recorded at Greenholm among the gentry living near Newcastleton in Pigot's 1837 directory. He could be the same William of Greenholm recorded dissolving the drapers John Armstrong and Company in Glasgow in 1839. William (1796–1890) carter and farmer at Leahaugh in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he is recorded as 'Farmer of about 300 acres more or less'. He married Robina, daughter of joiner John Cavers and Jane Douglas; she died in 1877, aged 71. Their children included: Agnes (1827–82), who married Andrew Mitchellhill; John (1829–1909); James (1830–46); William (1833–1909), farmer; Thomas (1835–1914); Jane (b.1837), who married Matthew Murray; Betty (b.1839); Henry (b.1843) and another Henry (b.1845), who both died young; James (b.1847), a shepherd; George (1850–1908), a builder; and Mary (b.1853), who died at Netherraw. The family are buried at Ettleton Cemetery. William (1829/30–1904) brother of John, Thomas and Richard. He was a commission agent. William (1833–1909) eldest son of William. He farmed at Leahaugh, like his father before him. He and his brother Thomas were subscribers to David Anderson's book of verse in 1868. He died at Leahaugh and is buried at Ettleton. William Elliot 'Willie' (19th/20th C.) son of Alexander, he worked as a joiner and then coal merchant, and was probably the most famous Hawick rugby player of his day. He played forward for Hawick R.F.C. for many years, retiring after being concussed in the final of the 1913 Hawick Sevens. He came out of retirement during and after WWI and also played for Scotland. In his first international match he was the only forward not educated at a Public School. He was Cornet in 1905 (formerly 'Cayle', 'Kyel', 'Kyll' and variants).

kyles (kīlz) n., pl., arch. the game played with small skittles (James Murray wrote that this was played in Hawick 'in the early part of the 19th c.'; possibly from Old French 'quille').

Kyle's Close (kīlz-klōs) n. passageway off the High Street in the mid-19th century, position uncertain. There are Kyles labelled on Wood's 1824 map at about Nos. 33 and 74; the one opposite the Cross Wynd is clearly marked as a passageway.

Kyle's Gairden (kīlz-gār-din) n. name used in the late 19th century for land near the Playing Fields, where exactly??.

kylie (kī-lee) n., poet. a small Highland cow – 'All the grass he had on Closses would not maintain a cayley cow ...' [C&L1767], 'And they keep, when lade (lād) n. a watercourse, especially one that carries water to a mill, also called a dam – 'they decided ti fill in the auld mill lade' (sometimes called a 'mill lead').

lades (lādz) n., pl. watercourses built to supply power to mills. Those in Hawick at times diverted more water than was flowing through the rivers, while at other times had a reputation for being filthy. Over time large sections of some were covered over, but some parts remained open. Signs still remain of the several that were built in Hawick. They include: the first lade off the Slit-rig (the 'Dam' of the Backdamgate etc.), which ran the water wheel for Hawick Mill; the later lade in Lynnwood; the old lade in Wilton called Wilton Dam or Roughheugh Dam (with the water diverted by the Cauld) and its extension through Wilton Glebe lands in 1827–28; the lade along Teviot Road; and the lade used by Weendland Mill. A survey was carried out of the complex of lades off Commercial Road in 1999/2000, with 2 of them being bricked up afterwards. A section of the lade in Weensland is still visible near Oliver Park. There were also lades constructed for most of the mills in the countryside around Hawick. These include a channel from Wilton Burn passing the farm of Netherhall, the one at Wilton Dean.

Ladhope (law-dup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, between Whithope and Sundhope. It was a Crown property from about 1456, being assigned to Patrick Crichton of Cranston in 1488 and Walter Scott (probably of Howpalsy) in 1490 and 1492. Dicksons were recorded there in 1494/5, accused of rieving crimes. In 1541 the lands were occupied by Robert of Howpasley, paying £24 yearly. Walter Scott 'of Landhoip' is recorded in 1599. Walter Scott in Ladhope was recorded as deceased in 1671 (it is 'Ladhope' in 1456, 1488 and 1490, 'Laidhope' in 1492, 'laidhop' and in 1494/5 'Laudhope' in 1541).

the Ladies' Circle (thu-lā-deez-sir-kul) n. a charitable and social organisation, started in 1930, the sister organisation of the Round Table. The Hawick organisation??.

the Ladies' Clothin Society (thu-lā-deez-klō-thin-su-sī-i'-ee) n. local charitable organisation, providing clothing for the poor, active in Hawick in the late 19th century. It was run by Mrs. Palmer Douglas and Mrs. Turnbull of Ormiston.

the Ladies' Pool (thu-lā-deez-pool) n. former name for a shallow pool below the Cauld, on the north side of the Teviot (with the 'Cat's Pool' being on the other side), used for swimming in summer. The name was in use in the mid-20th century when the river course almost split in two below the Cauld. Boys who went in that side were called 'jessies' (also sometimes 'Lady's Pool').

ladies' purse (lā-deez-purs) n., arch. the shepherd's purse, Capsella bursa-pastoris, also used for flowers of the calceolaria.

the Ladies' Purse (thu-lā-deez-purs) n. race held at the Common Riding from at least 1834 to the 1860s. For example in 1861 it was one of only 3 named races, with the others being races for riding gear etc.

ladies' purses (lā-deez-pur-seez) n., pl., arch. flowers of the calceolaria.

Ladies' Sate (lā-deez-sā') n. Ladies' Seat, southern part of Todshawhaugh Hill, on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Todshawhaugh farm. It reaches a height of 264 m.

Ladies' Slack (lā-deez-slawk) n. pass between Heip Hill and Welsh's Hill, just to the north-east of Whitehaugh farm (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Ladies' Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring just to the east of Knowesouth. It may be the 'Lady's well, or Our Lady's Well' described in 1837, and suggested perhaps to be associated with Jedburgh Abbey. The Land Tax Rolls of 1811 includes mention of 'Lady's Well Meadow' being part of Newton, adjacent to Lanton.

Ladies' Edge (lā-deez-ej) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed 'as Lady's-edge' in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

the Lads (thu-lawdz) n. name sometimes used to refer to followers of the Cornet, particularly the unmarried and/or younger ones. Since 1961 the upstairs gallery at the Colour Bussing has been reserved for 'the Lads'.

the Lads' Gallery (thu-lawdz-gaw-lu-ree) n. middle section upstairs in the Town Hall, specifically during the Colour Bussing ceremony, when it is taken up by the Cornet's supporters. Each 'Lad' has a ribbon pinned on him by one of the Maids of Honour. It has become traditional for programmes to be made into paper aeroplanes and thrown down towards the Maids of Honour at the end of the proceedings.

Ladshaw Sike (lad-shaw-sīk) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley. It rises on Ladshaw Fell, joining Gavel Sike and Stock Grain to become part of the headwaters of the Howpasley Burn.

Lady (lā-dee) n. former house on Hermitage Water, located on the north side of the valley between the Castle and Braidlie, at the foot of what is now Lady's Knowe (marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map as 'Lada').

the Lady (thu-lā-dee) n. nickname for David Scott of Stirches.

Lady Appotside (lā-dee-aw-pi'-sīd) n. name used to refer to Lady Margaret Lorraine of Harwood and Appotside.

Lady Day (lā-dee-dā) n. Feast of the Annunciation, 25th March, formerly the beginning of the New Year. The phrase is recorded in the local Commissioners' Court for 1622, shortly after the beginning of the year had been shifted to 1st January. It was used to denote the end of the hiring period beginning with Whitsunday.

Lady Highchester (lā-dee-hI-ches-tur) n. title of Margaret Hamilton, wife of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester (or 'Haychester').

Lady Howpaslot (lā-dee-how-pas-lo') n. name used to refer to Lady Scott of Howpasley.

Ladykirk (lā-dee-kirk) n. village on the Tweed in Berwickshire. The site was an important one for Scottish-English diplomacy, e.g. it is where John Balliol acknowledged Edward I as his feudal superior in 1291 and where a treaty was signed between the 2 countries in 1559. Originally Upsettlington, its name was changed around 1500 by James IV after he nearly drowned there, it being a popular crossing point for armies. The church dates from the early years of the 16th century, and is the oldest surviving church building in the Borders. The mansion there was built in 1799, but demolished in the 1930s and replaced by a new house in the 1960s (it is 'Lady K' on Blaeu's c.1654 map).

Ladyland (lā-dee-lawnd) n. former name for lands in the eastern part of Hawick. They are referred to in a charter of 'Soltracraft' (i.e. the Trinitylands) in 1557, which is described as having Ladyland to the east. This means the lands were somewhere east of Trinity, perhaps around what was later called Weensland. They are again mentioned in 1565/6 as being adjacent to the Trinitylands. A 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish states that 'there is a land, called Ladyland, possessed by Sir Walter Scott of Goudilands, ther are sick lands as are pretendit to belong to the kirk', suggesting a connection with St. Mary's Kirk; the lands are valued at '4 bolls in stok, ane boll in teynd'. In a 1696 sasine of Charles Scott of Crumhaugh and Goldielands we find 'Trinity lands' included, and it seems likely this was the same piece of land, taking on the more generic name of the larger adjacent lands.

Ladylaw Hoose

Ladyland (lā-dee-lawnd) n. former piece of land in the Barony of Minto. It was formerly called 'Hassendean Ladylands' and owned by Douglas of Cavers; part valued at £18 was sold to the Duke of Roxburghe before 1743 and incorporated into Minto Parish, while another 6-acre part valued at £16 was sold to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1745 and also incorporated into Minto. It is described in 1683 as being 4 acres commonly called Ladyland, inherited by Gilbert Eliott along with Craigend and Deanfoot. In 1811 it was 'Hassendean Lady Lands'; the 2 separate parts were still then owned by the Duke of Roxburghe and by the Duke of Buccleuch. The name suggests that the lands (like Lanton Ladylands) were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was once parton (see also Oor Lady Land).

Ladylands see Oor Lady Land

Ladylands (lā-dee-lawndz) n. former name for land near Lanton. They were valued at £10 in the 18th century and 'formerly stated in Cavers parish'. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describes how these lands had been in the Barony of Cavers, and were 'Langtoun Lady Lands, now in the parish of Jedburgh'. The lands were probably connected with 'Ladies' Well' and 'Lady's Edge', which were once part of the lands of Newton. Like 'Hassendean Ladyland' in Minto Parish, these lands were probably once associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was patron, both formerly being contained in the Barony of Cavers (see also Lanton Lady Lands).

Ladylaw (lā-dee-law) n. another name for Ladylaw Hoose and the area of eastern Sunnyhill around it.

the Ladylaw Centre (thu-lā-dee-law-sen'-ur) n. multi-purpose commercial building converted from part of the former Wilson and Glenny's factory on Wilton Path after it closed in 1980. The complex included a furniture and carpet warehouse, small companies, offices and a bistro, which opened in 1983. It was never fully used and closed about 10 years later, being then demolished, and is now the site of a supermarket. Only foundations are left, along with the Bath Street Centre (part of Borders College).

Ladylaw Hoose (lā-dee-law-hoos) n. house constructed above Langlands Road on Rosalee Brae for manufacturer John Wilson sometime before 1846, perhaps as early as 1830. It was the first house built in Sunnyhill, in an area of the old Langlands estate formerly known as Roughheugh, and to which it later gave its name. The name itself was probably invented by John Wilson. The house can be seen as the only one in the Sunnyhill area on the painting of Hawick from the Mote in about 1850. It was built in an Italianate style and had a north wing added in 1902, probably by J.P. Alison. Alison lived in the house himself and installed a fireplace in the central hallway, with an inscription commemorating how he survived a gas explosion at the house in 1910. In 1953 the house was split into 2 dwellings. It is a grade B listed building.

Ladylaw Mills (lā-dee-law-milz) n. textile mill in the Langlands or Roughheugh area, for a long time in the Wilson family. It was built for Wilson & Watson's, then taken over by William Wilson in 1819. In 1851 it passed to John Wilson & Sons and in 1876 to Wilson & Glenney's, with whom it remained for a century. A water wheel was installed by Melrose's in 1885 and repaired in 1920, when it was used along with steam engines. Following a major fire in 1959, the mill was substantially rebuilt in 1961, but closed in 1980, to be converted into the Ladylaw Centre and later replaced by Lidl supermarket (also sometimes singular 'Mill').

Ladylaw Place (lā-dee-law-plis) n. row of houses built from 1841 on the north side of the western end of what is now Princes Street, named after the nearby Ladylaw House. The Wilton branch of the Co-op was here in the mid-1900s. The name vanished when the area was reconstructed around 1971 and renamed part of Princes Street. North of Ladylaw Place there were allotments in the mid-to-late 19th century, and before that the first open field was called 'the Pedlar's Field'.

the Lady Riders (th-lā-dee-rī-durz) n. Hawick Lady Rider's Association, set up shortly after the 1996 Common Riding, amid the furore over whether women should be allowed to ride during the Ride-outs and the Common Riding itself.

lady's gairtens (lā-gār-tinz) n., pl., arch. ribbon grass, Phalaris arundinacea (also gairtens).

Lady's Knowe (lā-deez-now) n. small hill to the west of Hermitage Castle, reaching a height of 223 m. There is a settlement enclosure on the east side, including the remains of a later farmstead and with a trackway leading downhill from it. The slopes of the hill are covered with evidence of early field systems, including cultivation terraces and rig lines.

the Lady's Pool (thū-lā-deez-pool) n. former name for a pool in the Slitrig near Lynnwood. It is mentioned as part of a story about 'Yedie Broon' recounted in 1863 (descending to there from Hagghishaa to clean off the sticky treacle toffee).

the Lady's Pool see the Ladies' Pool

Lady's Scar (lā-deez-skawr) n. steep bank on the west side of the Liddel just north of Leahaug Cottage.

Lady's Sike (lā-deez-sīk) n. stream that effectively forms the western part of the defences of Hermitage Castle, although it was diverted to join the Castle Sike and flow to the east. On the slope between this stream and Castle Sike there is a series of small cairns (the name presumably derives from the nearby chapel being dedicated to St. Mary).

Lady Stirches (lā-dee-stir-cheez) n. name used formerly to refer to Mrs. Chisholme of Stirches.

Lady Symington (lā-dee-si-ming-tin) n. listed among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century by James Wilson. Her name is written 'Sumington'. Her lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £200 in 1643, and in one transcription of the valuation rolls she is entered as 'Anna McGill, Lady Summington'. Her name appears to be wrongly transcribed as 'Lady Farnington' in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Since her name appears alongside that of Rev. Walter McGill, then she was surely related to the minister. Rev. The children of Sir James Douglas of Cavers with his 2nd wife (a daughter of Sir James McGill) were said to have taken the surname McGill in order to claim inheritance from their maternal grandfather. It is hence possible that she and Rev. Walter were brother and sister, or alternatively (and perhaps more likely, given the timing) they were brother-in-law and sister-in-law of Douglas of Cavers. She presumably married the Laird of Symington, but which one is not clear. By 1678 her lands in Cavers Parish were back in the hands of the Douglasses of Cavers. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls her name is mis-transcribed as 'Farnington'.

Lady's Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring on the lands of Borthwickbrae. The 1859 Ordnance Survey Name Book describes it as 'a well of excellent water'. It lies only about 500 m from the former chapel of Kirkborthwick, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

Lady's Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring near Abbotrule church, presumably named after an association with 'Our Lady'.

Lady Synton

Lady Synton (lā-dee-sin'-in) n. name used for the wife of the Laird of Synton, particularly the widow Isobel Scott.

Lady Todrig (lā-dee-tōd-rig) n. former name used for the wife of the Laird of Todrig, i.e. Mrs. Scott.

Lady Whitehaugh (lā-dee-whi'-uf) n. title used to refer to the wife of the Laird of Whitehaugh.

Lady Whitslade (lā-dee-whi'-slād) n. title used to refer to the wife of the Laird of Whitslade (e.g. in 1707).

laggart (law-gur', -gurt) n., arch. a laggard, straggler.

laiber (lā-bur) v., arch. to besmear, especially with food – ‘The bairn laiber’t hir jupie or daidle’ [GW].

laibers (lā-burz) n., pl., arch. slobber, slavers (also labber and lebber).

laich see laigh

laid (lād) n., arch. a load – ‘And with this lade I’ve sprawl’d and foughten Hail ten lang mile’ [JoHa], ‘... as ane hivie lade thae ar ower hivie for me’ [HSR], ‘So on I gaed, wi’ love a lade My heart played loup and flutter ...’ [WaD], overindulgence in strong drink, as much liquor as one can hold, v. to load – ‘Blisset be the Lord, wha daye efter daye lades us wi’ goud things ...’ [HSR] (also written ‘lade’).

laid (lād) pp., adj., arch. smeared with butter, tar or other substance, to protect from the weather or vermin (said of a sheep’s fleece, or the wool produced from it) – ‘Cheviot wool laid with tar and butter, per stone of 24 lbs. English, 10s. 7d.; ditto laid with turpentine, 14s. 2d. ...’ [RGJH].

laidman (lād-mun) n., arch. a carter who works for a miller, delivering corn – ‘Aw mind ... the first barley mill in Ashkirk Mill, whan Aw was a young chap and the miller’s laidman there’ [BCM1880].

laidner (lād-nur) n., arch. a larder, hence winter’s provisions, particularly referring to an animal slaughtered and cured for winter food – ‘The lands of meikle whitlaw sett by rentall right To Francis Gledstanes of Whitlaw during his lifetyme for gentleman Srvice with ane fat mart at ladner tyme or price throf’ [Buc1692].

laid-treis (lād-trīz) n., arch. a large frame to fix to a farm cart to allow it to take an increased load.

Laidlaw

Laidlaw (lād-law, -lu, -lee, -li) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name was given as ‘Edde Ladlay’ from Whiteside in Jedforest, and the only other Laidlaw named among a set of mostly Olivers was John of ‘Breerbushe’. Adam ‘Great Legs’ (16th C.) named along with Douglases, Turnbells, Shiels and others who were accused in 1590 of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton. He may have been from Rulewater like some of the other men named. His name is recorded as ‘Eddie Ladelie Greteleges’. He was also ‘Eddie Ladley ‘greatt leges’ in 1590 when accused, with David of ‘Antreahawghe’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull, of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman. Additionally in 1590 he was accused along with David of Roughlee of stealing cattle from ‘Hefferlawe’. Presumably his nickname meant he had long legs, rather than good-looking legs! Adam ‘Adie’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden’s tenants, along with Thomas of the Haugh, as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshill and others. He is also ‘Eddie’ when accused in 1590, along with Thomas of Haugh, of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Great Legs’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1656 his son James with Bessie Grieve was baptised in Hawick. This child was born illegitimately, with witnesses John (surely a relative) and James Grieve (probably related to Bessie Grieve). Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Veitch and their children included an unnamed son (b.1660). Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included Walter (b.1669) and Margaret (b.1673). Adam (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Little Cavers’ in 1684 when he was listed among a huge number of people declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel ‘Andison’ (presumably ‘Anderson’) and their children included: Alexander (b.1689). Adam (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Leadon’ (probably Leyden) and their children included Robert (b.1701). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Southfield in 1711. He married Janet Fletcher and their children included: David (b.1711); and Adam (b.1715). The witnesses in 1711 were Walter Scott in Newbigging and James Scott in

Nether Southfield. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He is recorded at the Marklair in 1716 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Bell and their children included: Violet (b.1729); Simon (b.1730); and William (b.1734). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1731. Adam Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Wester Burnfoot in 1736 and Galalaw in 1747. He married Violet Bonar and their children included: Thomas (b.1736); William (b.1738); Helen (b.1741); Margaret (b.1743); and Violet (b.1747). The witnesses in 1736 were Archibald and John Scott and in 1747 were John and Thomas Scott. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Veitch and their children included: Adam (b.1754). Adam (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1787–90. Rev. Adam (1753/4–1834) licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1778, he was ordained as minister at South Shields in 1782, and promoted to St. James', Silver Street, Newcastle in 1784. He was presented to Southdean Parish in 1809 in competition with John Richmond, who was preferred. However, he became minister at Kirkton in 1818 (although it is unclear what he did in the interim), where he remained until his death. In 1820 he performed a baptism in Cavers (probably at Caerlenrig). In 1786 he married Mary Laidlaw, who died in 1849. Their children included William, Adam, Thomas, John Whitfield, Robert and David. He could be the Adam, student of divinity who witnessed a lease for Simon in Boos Mill in 1773 (suggesting a relationship). Adam (b.1814/5) mason who worked with his uncle Andrew Rodgie Michie. He was disabled in an accident, and had to give up being a builder, becoming a coal agent instead. He is listed in Slater's 1852 directory as a coal agent at the Station for Edmonston Colliery. After his uncle's death in 1854 he ran his own builders firm. They built Heronhill and several other local villas and started work on the Exchange Buildings, although the first arch caved in and the firm was replaced. He is probably the builder of this name who was a Hawick Town Councillor for Wilton Ward, retiring in 1869. He married Margaret Cathrae in Wilton in 1838. In 1841 he was living at the North Toll Bar. He later lived at Kirkhouse in Wilton Parish and then farmed at Ancrum Craigs. His children included: Adam, who was a clerk; Thomas C., who carried on the farm; John Michie; James, who farmed at Trowmill; and Marjorie (or Margaret Michie), who married a farmer named Elliot, later married D. McBurnie Watson, and was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library. One of his children died in 1838. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in Edgerston in 1502. He was convicted for communing with Rutherfords and Grahamslaws who were fugitives and for the murder of Patrick Hepburn, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as surety. Alexander (16th C.) part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably local, like all the other men on the panel. Alexander (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Robert, who was also tenant there. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Laidlaw in 1765 and their children included: David (b.1767); Violet (b.1769); and Margaret (b.1773); and Margaret (again, b.1777). Alexander (18th C.) married Isobel Thomson in Wilton Parish in 1768. Alexander (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Hobkirk in Robertson in 1802. Alexander (d.1842) tenant farmer at Bowerhope in the Yarrow valley. He survived being buried for 14 hours following an avalanche when he was a shepherd. He was a good friend of the Ettrick Shepherd, contributed to the 'Scots Magazine' and wrote essays for the Highland Society. He was related to William Laidlaw, who wrote 'Lucy's Flittin''. Alexander (b.c.1807) farm worker for Ebenezer Beattie at Oakwood. In 1825 Sir Walter Scott writes of an incident in which he came across some little people dressed in strange clothes, sitting under some trees near the Ettrick. Convinced that he was seeing the 'fairy court', he summoned neighbours, who also beheld the same sight. However, it turned out that these were puppets which had been stolen from the belongings of a man who had just given a puppet show at a fair in Selkirk, and had been abandoned in the countryside by the thieves. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in Wadeshill in Jedforest in 1541, paying 22 shillings yearly. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Branhholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (c.1725–81) tenant farmer at Gair, in Ettrick Parish. He previously lived at Glenkerrie and perhaps also at Ropelawshiel, where one of his children was born. In 1746 in Westerkirk he married Agnes Glendinning, who died in 1792, aged 67; she was daughter of Archibald Glendinning and Jane Beatty. Their children were: Walter (b.1747); Robert (b.1749);

Archibald (b.1751); Jean (b.1753); John (1755–69); William (1758–62); James (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1762); William (again, b.1765); John (again, 1769–99), buried at Robertson; and Andrew (b.1774. He is buried at Teviothead. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Askirk Parish. His wife was Isabel and their children included: Charles (b.1767). Andrew (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Jean Elliot and their children included Barbara (b.1797). Perhaps the same Andrew was recorded in a legal case in 1814, involving Hawick lawyer Gilbert Amos. Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Susanna Rutherford in Robertson Parish in 1819. Barrie (1921/2–2004) international rugby referee from Hawick. He played for Hawick Harlequins. Bennet (16th C.) listed as tenant in Northbank in 1541 along with ‘Belle’ and Thomas, paying 22 shillings yearly. His first name is recorded as ‘Bennete’. Charles Gray (1804/5–73) youngest son of William, he was named after the evangelist preacher of the Tabernacle. He lived on the Loan (at about No. 14 in 1841). In 1851 he was a widower lodging at 5 Mid Raw with 3 of his children and in 1861 was still there (with his brother-in-law James Harkness). He married Hannah Harkness (who died in 1849), niece of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. Their children included Margaret, William, Ellen (or Helen, who died in infancy), Thomas, George, a second Ellen (whose son was Walter Laidlaw) and Charles. Daniel McGowan (1826–64) younger son of William and Jane Fisher. He was a commercial traveller and partner in the family hosiery business. He built Hopehill, intending to be married, but died aged 39. There is a portrait of him. David (16th C.) tenant at ‘Anterhauch’ (i.e. Antroch) according to a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably an ancestor of the later David there. David (16th C.) resident at Roughlee when he was among men accused in 1590 of raiding into England 2 years earlier. He is ‘Davie Ladley of the Roughley’, and he is listed along with Adie ‘Great Legs’. Additionally he was accused in 1590 of stealing horses from John Salkeld, along with ‘Rennye’, Thomas of Haugh and Steven of the Bank. David ‘Cuddy’s Davie’ (16th C.) listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbells and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. His name is recorded as ‘Davie Laidlea Cuddis Davie’, but it is unclear who his father was. David (16th C.) described as ‘Davie Ladley of Antreahawghe’ in 1590. He was accused of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman, along with ‘Adie Great Legs’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull. It seems likely that ‘Antreahawghe’ is Antroch in the Jed valley. David of Sunnyside (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he was accused (along with Rutherfords, Croziers, Elliots and Armstrongs) of rieving from Woodburn in the previous year. His name is written ‘Davie Ladley of the Sonnye syde’. He probably lived around the Jed valley. David (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Brydon and their son David was baptised in 1686. David (17th C.) tenant at Jedhead in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. David (18th C.) farmer at Highchesters. He was related to John Leyden’s father, his sister Margaret probably being Leyden’s paternal grandmother. He married Isabella Armstrong, who claimed descent from the Armstrongs of Gilnockie; she died in Hawick in 1808, when he was already deceased. Their children included: Robert (b.1753); and Isabella (b.1764), who married Robert Grieve. David (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1772 when his son David was baptised in Robertson Parish. Other children who may be his included Margaret (b.1759), James (b.1761), Agnes (b.1768) and John (b.1770). David (b.1784) son of Robert, he was an agricultural labourer in Robertson Parish. He was a hind at Todshawhaugh on the 1812 ballot for the Militia. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Whitope. He married Helen Hart in 1825 and their children included: Robert (b.1826); George (b.1827); Isabella (b.1831); Helen (b.1834); Margaret (b.1836); and Davina (b.1838). David (b.c.1810) educated at New Mill and Edinburgh, he was Schoolmaster at Newmill from 1837. He is probably the teacher David, living with Thomas and his family at Branhholme Loch in 1841. He may be the David, son of John, born in Minto Parish in 1808. David (1907–2003) born near Hawick, and educated at the High School and then Nottingham University, he worked in accountancy, manufacturing and other jobs. He founded the first Scout troop in Hawick, and travelled to Switzerland for the very first Scout Jamboree. He moved to Cornwall, where he spent most of his life, where he was an enthusiastic Rotarian. He married Elsie in 1936. Douglas (b.1810–77) son of William and Helen Douglas, he was from the Rulewater Laidlaws. He was a licensed grocer in Hawick in the early 1800s and apparently known for selling good whisky. He is listed on the Tower Knowe in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is recorded at about 3 Tower Knowe in the 1841 census, living with Joan and Jessie, probably his sisters. Probably before 1851 he emigrated to the Toronto area, where he married Elizabeth Ross and had a daughter Mary Douglas. He had a general store in Holland Landing and in about 1853 went to Lefroy, where he traded in grain. George (1797–1844) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America. They lived in Delaware County, New York, then moved to Niagara Township in Canada, and from about 1843 set up a farm at Caistor in Lincoln County. In 1817 he married Margaret Rae (d.1846). Their children were: William (1818–53), born in Hawick; Jenny (b.1819), who died in infancy; Jane (1821–63), born in the U.S.A.; Maria (1823–1913); Margaret (b.1824), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1825–95); and James (b.1826). Gideon (1802/3–1900) born near Tushielaw. He knew the Ettrick Shepherd in his younger days, met Sir Walter Scott and Professor Wilson and was present at the Carterhaugh Baa. He died at Single Inch and was then the oldest resident of the Ettrick valley. Helen see Nelly. Helen (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isabel ‘Belle’ (16th C.) tenant in Northbank in 1541, along with Thomas and Bennet. Isabella (b.1865) daughter of William, farmer at Weensmoor, and Agnes Purdom. She was recorded as a pupil teacher in Hawick in 1881 and in 1891 was in Midlothian working as a G.P.O. Clerk. She worked for the Post Office in London. Jackie (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 as ‘Jaquie Laidlaw’ when he was part of the raid on the Kers in Jedburgh by a group of Turnbulls and their associates. Jacob (17th C.) recorded at Antroch on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branhholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Laidlo’. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Jacobi Laidlaw’ listed as a debtor in the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501, along with David Scott ‘de Franscurni’ and Adam Scott, with Walter Scott of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. James (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, along with Lawrence, probably his father or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Thomas renting another part of the farm. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included Malie (b.1651). James (b.1648), with no mother’s name given, may also be his son. The witnesses in 1651 appear to be William and Walter Laidlaw. James (17th C.) owner of quarter of the lands of Fairnieles in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ of 1647. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hislop and their children included William (b.1651). The witnesses were William Elliot and William Dickson. James (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert was also listed there, and so probably a relative. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Wadsholm’ (probably near Wadeshill) in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James (17th C.) tenant in Kirkton. He is listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. He was recorded there in 1700. In 1699 in Hawick he married Margaret Hislop from Castleton Parish. Their children included: James (b.1700), baptised in Hawick. He is probably the James in Branhholme Town whose son Andrew was baptised in 1702. The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and William Clerk in Colterscleuch and in 1702 were James Ogilvie (gardener at Branhholme), Henry Orrock and Alexander Hislop (probably related to his wife). Perhaps the same James married ‘Mary Hiselip’ in Kirkton Parish in 1716. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Hislop in 1698. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as a herd in Ashkirk itself in 1715. He married Margaret Hislop and their son James was baptised in 1715. It is possible he is the same James from Hawick who married Margaret Hislop. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son Adam was baptised in Robertson parish in 1703. Walter (b.1705) may also have been his son. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Deanbrae in 1716. He married Bessie Armstrong in Cavers in 1701. His children baptised in Caves included: William (b.1702); Margaret (b.1703); Walter (b.1705); Walter (again, b.1706); Janet (b.1708); James (b.1711); Thomas (b.1716); John (b.1718); Walter (b.1721); Robert (b.1724); and Agnes (b.1724). James (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘coater’ (i.e. cottar) at Branhholme Park in 1708. He married Margaret Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Adam (b.1703); and James (b.1708). The witnesses were Walter Grieve ‘in Park’ and James Grieve in Commonsides. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His marriage is recorded in 1715, with no wife’s name given. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, recorded at the

Marklair in 1722. Perhaps the same James married Marion Laidlaw in Hawick in 1721. He had an unnamed child baptised in Roberton in 1722. James (18th C.) tenant at Berryfell in the 1730s, where several of his children were born. He leased Over Cassock from Walter Scott of Harden in 1738. He married Margaret Mack in Cavers Parish in 1733 and their children probably included: an unnamed son (b.1734); Helen (b.1736); James (b.1738); James (again, b.1740); and Betty (b.1741). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1737 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. It is unclear if he could be the same man as the tenant at Berryfell. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton in 1738. James (18th C.) resident of 'Mains' (i.e. Borthwickbrae Mains) in 1743 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. Bessie (b.1749) was probably his daughter. He may be the James living at Parkhill in 1736 when his daughter Janet was baptised. James (d.1756) shepherd at Wigg. His son William was wright in Toon-o-Rule. It seems likely that he is closely related to James, who was progenitor of the Laidlaws of Weensmoor. James (b.c.1738) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. He lived at Weens, Weensmoor, and Bonchester Bridge. In 1764 he married Margaret Scott. Their children were: John (b.1765), who married Margaret Buckham; William (b.1768), who farmed at Weensmoor; Thomas, who died in infancy; James (b.1771); Janet (b.1774); Thomas (again, b.1776); Walter (b.1780), born at Weensmoor, gardener at Raby Castle; and Euphemia (b.1783), who married Walter Elliot from Hawick. He may be the James, son of John who lived at Parkhill. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Oliver and their children included: Thomas (b.1769); Janet (b.1773); Margaret (b.1776); Agnes (b.1778); and Mary (b.1780), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1773 were Thomas Rutherford and Robert Riddell. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Hawickshiels blacksmith John Ker in 1760. James (18th C.) farmer at Hartwoodburn, recorded on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Learmont, who died in 1797 (the result of a drowning). Their children included: Janet (b.1771); James (b.1774); Robert (b.1778); and John (b.1785). The witnesses in 1771 were John Bridges, senior and Alexander Bunyan and in 1774 were the whole congregation.

James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Meadshaw in 1780 and 1786. His children included Walter (b.1780) and James (b.1786). He may be the James who married Isobel Scoon in Roberton in 1777 and whose children included Beatrix (b.1791). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1795 he married Janet Darling and she died in 1810; the word 'sauglay' appears to be written after his name, and although it is unclear what it meant, it is probably the same as 'Saughlaw' applied to Walter in 1787 and 1795. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mabonlaw, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. James (1795–1838) son of hosiery manufacturer William. He was a hosiery finisher, and lived for several years at West Port House. He married Ann Affleck, from Peebles and she died in 1834. He died leaving a young family of 4 sons and 1 daughter: William (b.1821) the eldest; Thomas (b.1824); Robert (b.1826); Catherine (1828–1841); and Walter (b.1832). James 'Jimmie' (1797–1879) son of William and Helen Douglas, he was born at Langraw. He was miller at Hallrule Mill, recorded in Pigot's directories of 1825/6 and 1837, as well as Slater's 1852 directory. He was listed at Hallrule in 1841. He was tenant of Hallrule Mill farm in the period 1825–55, and all his children were born there. He was later farmer at Hartshaugh Mill, where he was recorded in 1868. For a while he also transported grain across the Border by horse and returned with coals. By 1871 he was farming 237 acres at Hartshaugh Mill. In 1826 he married Isabella Turnbull at Greenriver House, and she died in 1871, aged 73; she was daughter of Henry Turnbull and Betty Stavert. Their children included: Elizabeth (Betsy, 1827–1906), who married Andrew Murray; William (b.1829), who took over at Hartshaugh Mill, but moved to Canada and died unmarried; Henry (1831–89), who had an accident that affected his brain; Helen (b.1833), who lived at old Hallrule House and cared for her brother Henry and father James; John Douglas (1835–1911), who emigrated to Toronto; Isabella Grieve (b.1838), who married George Scott; and probably James Douglas. He and his wife are buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. James (b.1818/9) from Jedburgh, he was miller at Trow Mill. His wife was Isabella Walker and their children included George and Andrew. James (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jane Hislop and their children included George (b.1865). James (19th C.) son of builder and farmer Adam. He worked as a mason and also farmed at Trowmill. He later emigrated to Australia, where it is said he was very successful. James C. (b.c.1880) son of local painter and artist T.H. He helped his father to illustrate the book 'Hawick Characters' (1901). James Armstrong (1911/2-44) son of Robert and Ellen, he was born in Hawick. He served as a Lance Corporal with the 1st Singapore Volunteer Corps. He was captured by the Japanese and killed on the Rakuyo Maru, one of the 'Hell Ships', which were torpedoed by US submarines. Janet (b.c.1775) listed as 'Independent' in 1841 when she was living at Hallrule with the Smith family. She was probably a widow of a local Laidlaw. J.B. (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Edinburgh. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had a local connection. Jock (1920-2001) born in Makerstoun, nephew of piper Daniel. He joined the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders as a boy piper and served with them during WWII. He was one of only 79 survivors from his battalion who made it back to Britain after the fall of Dunkirk. In 1945 in Burma he led his company into battle, probably the last time this was done in the British army. After the War he lived in Hawick for a while, where he as Pipe Major to the Scout Pipe Band. He then moved to Banbury in Oxfordshire, where he helped found a new pipe band. He was honorary piper to the Dunkirk Veterans' Association and the Burma Star Association. In later life he lived in Springwood village, near Kelso. He married Margaret and they had children John and Sandra. John (d.bef. 1502) resident of Lilliesleaf. Archibald Douglas in Effledge had remission for his murder. John (16th C.) tenant in Bank, recorded in a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He held half of the farm. John (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Rouchhirst according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. John (16th C.) tenant in a small part of Harelawcleuch in 1541. He was probably related to Patrick, who was one of the tenants in the other part. John (16th C.) tenant in 'Waldospindillis' (i.e. Wattie's Spinnels) in 1541, paying 44 shillings yearly. He was probably related to other Laidlaws who farmed nearby. John (16th C.) recorded as 'John Ladlay of Breerbushe' on a 1544 list of Scotsmen who gave their allegiance to the English King. 'Edde' from Whiteside was the only other Laidlaw listed. His lands were probably Brierlee, near Edgerston. John (17th C.) tenant in Antroch in

Jedforest. In 1602 he is recorded as 'Jacques Laidley in Ancrauch' when Thomas Turnbull, younger of Minto, was his surety not to harm Jock Rutherford in Tofts and his sons; Thomas Rutherford, younger of Hunthill, was surety for the Rutherfords of Tofts not to harm him. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Wadeshill in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John (17th C.) resident at Shankend in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 3 hearths. John (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to Walter, who was at Ormiston in 1684. John (17th C.) resident of Rouchhirst on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas who was also listed there. John (17th C.) recorded at Thorterwood on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. John (17th C.) resident in 'wails' near Newmill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. This was probably the farm of Valesburn. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Hume and their children included Isobel (b.1702). Margaret (b.1707) may also have been his child. John (d.bef. 1709) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Robson and their children included Margaret (b.1702); and Agnes (b.1709). His wife was a widow in 'Langtoun' in Ashkirk Parish when their daughter Agnes was baptised. John (d.1712) resident of Craikshiel. His daughter Isobel was baptised in 1712 after his death, his brother 'being sponcer for ye child'. He may be the John who married Mary Murray in Robertson in 1707. He may have been related to 'Will o Phaup', who was born at Craik. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1708 he was described as 'servitor to Adam Eliott of Arcleton In Harwood' when his son Walter was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Adam Elliot and Bailie Walter Graham. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick Shiel. In 1721 he married Janet 'Betie' (i.e., Beattie) from Eskdalemuir. They had a daughter Mary, baptised in 1722, with witnesses James Gray, elder in Whitlaw and merchant Robert Robson. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Easton and their children included Janet (b.1729). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. In 1721 he married Christian Scott. They had a daughter, Bessie (b.1726). This baptism was witnessed by James Grieve and Robert Scott. He appears to be distinct from the tailor who lived in the same place, but they were probably related. John (18th C.) resident at Philhopeshiel in 1726 when his son James was baptised in Robertson Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk

Parish. He married Agnes Easton and their children included Janet (b.1729). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Ann (b.1732) and Helen (b.1741). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included Helen (b.1738) and May (b.1740). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Todd and their children included: James (b.1733). John (18th C.) resident of Highchesters in 1732 and Deanburnhaugh in 1743. He married Agnes Easton in 1728 and their children, baptised in Robertson Parish included: Walter (b.1732); William (b.1734); James (b.1738); Thomas (b.1741); and Helen (b.1743). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Aitkin in 1736 in Wilton Parish and their children included: George (b.1737). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included William (b.1738). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel 'Larment' (presumably 'Learmonth') and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1739). John (18th C.) married Helen Murray in Wilton Parish in 1744. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Scott in Ashkirk in 1744 and their children included Ann (b.1747). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Merryllaw in 1749. He married Margaret Blake and their children included David (b.1749). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Helen Murray and their children included Margaret (b.1752). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1792 he married Janet Waugh who came from Hawick. Their children included Alexander (b.1794) and Margaret (b.1796). John (b.1765) eldest son of James and Margaret Scott, he was born at Weens. He married Margaret Buckham in 1792 in Bedrule Parish. Their children were: James; John (b.1796), a lawyer in Edinburgh; Jane or Janet (b.1794), who remained unmarried; Margaret (1798–1855), who married Dr. William Brown Purves, and whose son Dr. William Laidlaw Purves was an ear surgeon; and Euphemia (b.1800), also unmarried. He could be the John who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1814. John (1769–99) son of Andrew and Agnes Glendinning. He was a shepherd at Muselee. In 1790 he married Margaret, daughter of James Burnet. Their children included: Agnes (b.1790); Margaret (1794–1856), who married Adam Leyden and died in Hawick; and Andrew

(1798–1889), shepherd at Thurston Mains, Innerwick. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Newton in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) herd at Hassendean in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. John (b.c.1780) servant at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Scott in Wilton Parish in 1799. Their son James was baptised in Robertson in 1801. John (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Anderson in Wilton Parish in 1806. John (18th/19th C.) married Isobel Scott in Wilton Parish in 1810. John (b.c.1780s) labourer at 'Easter Loughs', i.e. Branhholme Easter Loch. His name appears on the Militia ballot list for Robertson Parish in 1812; he is absent from the rectified list, suggesting he had moved or become too old. He could be the John, son of James, baptised in Robertson in 1778. John (b.1796) son of John and Margaret Buckham, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He became a lawyer in Edinburgh. He was involved with the founding of the Union Bank of Scotland in 1830. His services to the bank were noticed after his sudden death. He died unmarried. John (19th C.) married Agnes Kersel in Hawick in 1852. John Douglas (1835–1911) son of James and Isabella Turnbull, he was born at Hallrule Mill. He emigrated to Canada, becoming a grain merchant in the Toronto area. He later settled in Lumsden, Saskatchewan. He married Annie Louise McKeggue. Joseph (19th/20th C.) cashier with Andrew Oliver & Sons. He was Sunday School Superintendent for Hawick Free Kirk 1889–95 and Session Clerk 1889–95. He may be the same Joseph who had a villa built around West Stewart Place about 1880. Ken see Thomas A. Kenneth Lancelot (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Northbank in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Lawrence (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, along with James, probably his son or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Thomas renting another part of the farm. Lawrence and James were also tenants there, and perhaps related. Lionel (17th C.) recorded in 1590 along with Thomas of Haugh. They were accused of stealing from the Reeds of 'the Old towne' in England. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Margaret (b.1794/5) grocer at Robertson Glebefoot. She was there in 1841, along with Agnes, who may have been her daughter. In 1851 and 1861 she was listed as a 'Huckster' at Howcleuchshiel. She could be the Margaret, born to John and Janet Waugh in Wilton in 1796. Margaret Shiel

(19th/20th C.) lived at Hazelwood and was made a Justice of the Peace in 1921. Marion (d.c.1685) resident of Abbotrule whose will is recorded in 1685. Nelly (b.1777) youngest daughter of William, wright of Town-o-Rule. She was christened 'Nelly' rather than this being short for something (although the 1841 census lists her as 'Helen'). She worked on farms and took up residence at the Scenty. She was mainly self-educated and was a keen reader. At the age of 49 she became the teacher at the 'Scenty Schuil', which Mrs. Cleghorn set up in Hobkrik Parish. She was always known as 'Mrs. Laidlaw' although she was never married. She was known as a strict disciplinarian, but very fond of teaching. She is listed as a teacher at Scenty Hall in 1841. She is buried in Hobkirk cemetery. Ninian 'Ringan' (16th C.) probably name of 'Rennye Ladley' recorded in 1590 when accused of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. This was along with Thomas of Haugh, Steven of the Bank and David of Roughlee. He was probably from somewhere in the Jed valley. It seems likely that the same 'Ninian Laidlo' was listed along with Olivers of Southdean and William Kirkton of Stewartfield in 1572/3, when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston were their cautioners; this was probably related to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. Patrick (16th C.) tenant in part of Harelawcleuch in 1541, along with John Oliver and Richard Oliver. He was probably related to John, who was tenants in the other part. Peter Fisher (1830/1–1917) 2nd surviving son of William, and brother of Thomas and William, he was named after his maternal grandfather. He planned to enter the ministry, but instead joined his father's manufacturing business, then set up on his own as a hosiery manufacturer in Melgund Place. He later moved to Appletreehall, although that factory burned down. He then lived at Wilton Grove, where he ran a small frame shop, which was later taken over by Robert Murray, then Mr. Routledge and eventually by Peter Scott. He moved to Jedburgh at one point, to work at Allars Mill (run by other family members), but spent most of his long life in Hawick. He later lived at Galabrae and became a coal merchant, auctioneer and newspaper correspondent. He was the last surviving member of the first 'reformed' Council, and one of the last two surviving Hawick Burgesses. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He joined the Free Church at the Disruption, and the first meeting to set up a Free Church in Wilton took place in his warehouse in 1866. He was described as 'unconventional in manners and address'. In 1857 he married Catherine Gray in Rothbury. Their children were: William, who died young; George (b.1861), also died young; Jessie Lindsay (b.1862); Jane Fisher (b.1864), who married W.F. Duncan; another William (b.1866), who spent many years in Australia and later farmed in California; George Gray, a fruit grower in California; Mary, who married G.A. Hillman of Chino, California; Thomas; Daniel, a chemist in Basingstoke; and Catherine, who married chemist W.B. Rawlinson. He was healthy to the end, walking from his house at Galabrae into town until about a year before his death. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Peter (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Rachel Scott in 1862 and their children included: Helen (b.1863); Hannah (b.1865); Sarah (b.1867); Thomas (b.1869); Robert (b.1871); and Sarah (again, b.1874). Richard (19th/20th C.) served as a Bailie and also as Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He also wrote articles for the Archæological Society Transactions. In 1939 he was living at Wilton Lodge. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded being 'in knawis edzartoun' in 1502. He was presumably tenant in part of Edgerton. He served as surety for his brother Walter (alias 'Rutherford'), as well as for himself, and was fined for non-appearance. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Alexander, who was also tenant there. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Borthwick and their children included: John (b.1640); and Isobel (b.1644). Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Wigholm and their children included William (b.1655). Robert (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Whiteside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He was probably related to James, who was also listed as a tenant there. Robert (17th C.) recorded in a rental roll of 1669 along with Adam Oliver. It is unclear where they were tenants, but perhaps Northbank or Slack. Robert (17th C.) listed in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is ambiguous where he was a tenant, but he is listed right after John in Wadeshill and before Robert in Southdean Law. He could be the tenant of Wadeshill who is recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (17th C.)

resident of Hawick Parish. He married Euphan 'Bellinden' and their children included William (b.1676). Robert (17th C.) listed as tenant in Southdean Law in the 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish whose son James was baptised in 1693. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Roughlee according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is probably the same Robert recorded at Southdean Parish on the crossed out part of the rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Northbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Helen Anderson. He was recorded in Haregrain in 1709 when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Walter Grieve in Park and Walter Scott in Merrylaw. Perhaps the same Robert was herd in Commonsides in 1714 when his unnamed child was baptised, with witnesses Thomas Hume 'preacher' and Walter Purdom. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Falnash in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Redfordgreen in 1711 and 1724. His children included Janet (b.1711) and Bessie (b.1724). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Eilrig in 1711. His children included Andrew (b.1711). He must be distinct from the Robert in Redfordgreen, since the baptisms are just a month apart. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Thornyhaugh in 1741 when his son Thomas was baptised. Robert (b.1743), Walter (b.1745) and John (b.1747) were probably also his children. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee in Hobkirk Parish in 1785–88, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He was surely related to Thomas who was farmer there immediately afterwards. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Falnash from about the 1760s. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Nichol. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–97. In 1797 he was recorded having 3 work horses as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for 5 dogs in the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. Around 1799 he was one of the local men who contributed money to help in the war against France. He may have been father of Elizabeth, who married William Elliot in Millburnholm. He may also have been father of Thomas, who moved from Falnash to take over the farm of Todshawhill in Eskdalemuir after the 'Gonial Blast' of 1795. He married Jane Shortreed and had children born in Cavers and Hawick Parishes: Elizabeth (b.1750); Mary

(b.1752); Margaret (b.1753); Robert (b.1755); Jane (b.1759), who may have married Rev. William Hardie Moncrieff and died in 1821 at Falnash; John (b.1761); Janet (b.1762); Thomas (b.1764); Janet (again, b.1765); William (b.1766); John (again, b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Cornelius (b.1772). The witnesses to the 1764 baptism were John Pott and George Pott of 'Ridge', while in 1766 they were Walter Scott senior (Commonside) and Robert Scott (Skelfhill). Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son David was baptised in 1784. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gorrenberry, recorded on both the Horse Tax Rolls in 1792–97. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He may be the Laidlaw at Gorrenberry whose daughter Jean married Henry Elliot of Bush. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Janet Scott, who was from Cavers Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Falnash. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He may have been son of Thomas and grandson of the earlier Robert, tenant at Falnash. Robert (d.bef. 1804) wright at West Port. His death is recorded in Hawick in 1804 and the death of his wife Margaret Scott in 1809; the couple had married in 1790. He was probably the Hawick mason who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at Harden in 1786 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. He could be the Robert who married Margaret Grieve in Robertson in 1786 and had children Agnes (b.1788) and Robert (b.1791) baptised in Hawick. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1796 as 'Resident in Denholm'. He married Margaret Blyth and their children included Betty (b.1796) and Andrew (b.1798). Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant in Kingledoors in Drumelzier Parish. In 1788 (and also in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he is recorded as owner of the parts of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish that had previously been owned by Ralph Davidson and Andrew Davidson, valued together at £210 5s 6d. He married Dorothea Turnbull, who was probably daughter of Walter Turnbull of Firth, a previous occupant of Greenhouse. Their children were Robert (b.1782), Walter (b.1783), Dorothea (b.1785), Elizabeth (b.1786), Barbara (b.1788), Robert (again, b.1790), Alexander (b.1792), William (b.1795), Agnes (b.1797), Mary (b.1799), Robert (once more, b.1800), Elizabeth (again, b.1802) and Mary (again, b.1803). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Sibbald in

Wilton Parish in 1803. Robert (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. His son James died in 1819. He also had a child who died in 1838. He may be the Robert who married Anne Walker in Wilton in 1837. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Beatrix Michie and their children included: William (b.1815). Robert 'Auld London' or 'London Laidlaw' (1792–1878) son of William, the first of the family to come to Hawick, with his mother being Margaret Aitken. He rented the Moat and other fields and sold milk etc., at his house at 17 Loan. He acted as one of the witnesses called to London to give evidence about the conduct of some Hawick men at the election of 1837, and was given his nickname as a result. He is said to have told his friends on his return that during the boat trip there had 'only been a fir deal between him and eternity'. His nickname was also pronounced 'Auld Lunan'. He married Rachel Rae, who died in 1866, aged 71. Their children were: William (b.1815); Margaret (b.1820), who married Andrew Blyth; Rachel (b.1822); Janet (b.1825); Jane (b.1827); and Robert (b.1832), who was Cornet in 1852 and married Jessie Gow. He is probably the stockingmaker Robert whose infant son's death is recorded in 1822 – 'Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van' [HI]. Robert (b.1799) only son of Thomas, he was farmer at Nether Cassock, like his father. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Jean Beattie and his children included Mary and John. Robert (19th C.) married Ann Walker in Wilton in 1837. Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Blake and their children included Betsy (b.1853). Robert (b.1820s) 4th son of Thomas. He became a small hosiery manufacturer in Glasgow, then in 1886 emigrated to New Zealand (although this may have been a generation later). Robert 'Robbie' (19th C.) appointed choir-master of Hawick Parish Church in the mid-19th century, being one of the first to hold such a position in Hawick. Robert (b.1825/6) butcher in Denholm. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a butcher and shopkeeper. In 1861 he was living with his mother Mary and sister Margaret, probably on Main Street. He may be the Robert who chaired the centenary Burns night in Denholm in 1859. Robert (1832/3–1908) son of Robert, he was a mason to trade, but later took over his father's fields up the Loan. He was

Cornet in 1852. He married Jessie Gow from Perthshire, who died in 1910, aged 48. Their children included James (who died aged 25 at Burnflat Cottage), John (who died in infancy), Robert (who died aged 17), Stewart (who died in infancy), another Robert (who died in infancy), Rachel, Eliza (who married Robert Oliver Pott, from Duns, woollen manufacturer in Honley, near Huddersfield), Walter and Agnes (who lived at Thongsbridge, near Huddersfield). Robert (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Murray and their children included James (b.1863) and Janet (b.1866). Robert Grierson (1856/7–1933) son of Thomas, he helped run the family tweed manufacturing business along with his brother William. He was for a while President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He was also Captain of the Golf Club. He lived at Hazelwood in the late 1800s. After the firm folded around 1908 he carried on as a commission agent, finally retiring only a few years before his death, and passing on that business to George Wilson & Sons. Sir Robert (1856–1915) 2nd son of William and Agnes Purdom, he was born at Bonchester. He was educated at Kirkton and Denholm schools, and served his apprenticeship with Wood, Graham & Co., drapers in Hawick. He then moved to work as a draper in London, leaving in 1875 for Cape Colony (i.e. South Africa), where he carried out business in Kimberley. In 1877 he sailed for Japan, but broke his journey in India. He moved to Calcutta, where he worked for 5 years. In 1881, along with Edward Whiteaway, he set up Whiteaway, Laidlaw & Co., which operated on a strictly cash basis (unusual for businesses in India in those days), with the first premises in Chowringhi. The firm expanded from drapery into general goods, and soon there were department stores in about 20 major cities throughout India. In 1898 he became sole partner and the firm expanded into other Asian cities (including Shanghai and Singapore); it was often referred to as 'the Selfridge's of India', at its height employed 2400 people, and remained in business until 1962. He also owned tea plantations in Darjeeling and rubber estates in the Federated Malay States, and was senior partner in a shipping firm. He joined the American Methodist Church in India and became involved in missionary work and Christian schools. In particular he supported the Calcutta Boy's School, which opened in 1877, with a girls' school following 9 years later. He spent 20 years in India before returning to Britain, settling in Chislehurst.

He bought a new house there by Camden Park and named it 'Bonchester'; the street that it is on was later called Bonchester Close. A Liberal, he became more interested in politics on his return to Britain, and was M.P. for West Renfrewshire 1906–10, with Winston Churchill being one of his political supporters. He was knighted in 1909, and became British Commissioner to the International Opium Commission in Shanghai. In 1909 he moved to 'The Warren' at Coney Hall, Hayes, and grew rhododendrons and azaleas there. A keen traveller, he was a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. He was also President of the World's Sunday School Association and an Executive of the National Temperance League. In 1912 he purchased the estate of Wolfelee from Edward Elliot, 6th Laird; in later life he was referred to as being 'of Wolfelee'. In 1879 he married Mary, daughter of Capt. W. Blow Collins and widow of W.L. Francis of the India Office. He became step-father to the several children of his wife, and together they had children: William, who died in infancy; Ethel; Mildred (or Margaret); Dorothy; and 2 daughters who also died in infancy. He had the William Laidlaw Memorial Hall erected at Bonchester Bridge in memory of his son William, as well as his father, who was also William. He left some money in his will to support a school for poor children in South India, which is still known as the Laidlaw Memorial School, Ketti Nilgiris. He privately published 'By the Way', about a trip he took around the world. Robert Henderson (1872–1953) writer of the words for 'Auld Hawick My Dreams' and 'Teviotdale', among other songs. He was son of stocking-maker Thomas and Robina Henderson and born at 6 Slitrig Bank. He apprenticed as a printer in Hawick, but emigrated to America, working in Boston. On returning to Hawick he joined the Hawick Express and became foreman printer there. He contributed poems to the newspaper and also wrote the Betty Whutson's Letter column for many years. He wrote an article on the Verter Well and associated poetry competition for the Archæological Society. He was long connected with West Port Church, being Session Clerk there for 22 years, as well as Sunday School Superintendent. He was also a lay preacher himself and was a member of Lodge St. James 424. He married Agnes Anderson. He lived at 22 Beaconsfield Terrace, where he died, and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Note that an older brother of the same name was born in 1863 and died in infancy, leading to some confusion over his own year of birth.

Simon (15th C.) listed as a witness on the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. His name is recorded as 'Symone Laidlaw' and he may have been a 'presbyter', along with Thomas Falconer. Simon (18th C.) tenant at Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1762. He was later farmer at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish, according to a tack of 1773, with the Riddells of that ilk. He was also tenant there according to the 1789–94 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isobel Anderson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Thomas (b.1758); Helen (b.1760); and Adam (b.1762). The witnesses in 1762 were William (perhaps his brother) and William Anderson (surely related to his wife). He is probably the Simon, son of Adam and Helen Bell born in Ashkirk in 1730. Steven of Bank (16th C.) recorded in 1590 of stealing horses from Englishman John Salkeld. His name is recorded as 'Steven Ladley of the Banke' and others named are 'Rennye', Thomas of Haugh and David of Roughlee. He is surely related to Ninian, who was recorded as tenant 'in the Bank' in 1572/3. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Northbank in 1541, along with 'Belle' and Bennet. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, paying 22 shillings yearly. Lawrence and James were tenants in another part of Letham and probably related. Thomas (d.1543) tenant of the Earl of Angus. John Musgrave led a party of Englishmen on a raid into Scotland in July 1543 in which he was killed trying to recover the spoils from his farm. It is unclear where his farm was, but since the Douglasses held much of Southdean, it could be that he was the tenant of Letham. Thomas (16th C.) son of Lyle. He was listed as 'Lyalles Thome' among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The other men were local Scotts, Oliveres and others. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Haugh in the Jed valley. In 1590 he was accused by John Forster of having reset Clement Crozier (son of Martin) and William Oliver of Lustruther. He was recorded as 'Thomas Lade-lye of the Hawghe' in 1590 when he was among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott's of Carrick; others listed include Elliots of the Hill, Martin's Clem Crozier, James Douglas of Earlside and John Henderson of Plenderleith. He was also listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden's tenants, along with 'Eddie', as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshill. Additionally he and 'Eddie' were accused in 1590 of stealing a horse from Ralph

Salkeld and along with 'Rennye', Steven of the Bank and David of Roughlee he was accused of stealing horses by John Salkeld. He was further recorded along with Lionel in 1590, accused of stealing from the Reeds of 'the Old towne' in England. Thomas (17th C.) paid the land tax in Southdean Parish on behalf of the Marquess of Douglas in 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Rouchhirst according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. 'Martin Laidlae, yr.' was also listed, and presumably his son or brother. Probably the same Thomas was listed at Rouchhirst in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, along with John. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant of 'Antwoch' (i.e. 'Antroch') in a rental roll of 1669 for Jedburgh Forest. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at the farm of Haugh in the Jed valley according to a 1669 rental roll. Probably the same Thomas was still tenant in Haugh on the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. There were Laidlaws at Haugh at the end of the 16th century. Thomas (17th C.) married to 'Euphan Bellinden'. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1676, with witnesses Thomas Borthwick and Robert Grieve. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Lorraine and their children included: Helen (b.1686); and Isobel (b.1689). He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Roberton in 1686 for John 'Bleak' and Katherine (who may have been his sister, or other relative). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Stirches in 1747. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Smith (also living in the Stirches area) in 1747. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1744 and their children included: James (b.1745); Thomas (b.1747); Margaret (b.1750); and Robert (b.1752). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He married Margaret Anderson and their children included: Janet (b.1765) and James (b.1767), baptised in Hawick; and Janet (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771), Betty (b.1773), Agnes (b.1775), Adam (b.1778), and Adam (again, b.1780), baptised in Wilton. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1767 for herd John Scott and in 1771 for Thomas Elliot in Newmill. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee according to the 1789-91 Horse Tax Rolls. He succeeded Robert as farmer, and was presumably his son or brother. Thomas (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick. He was on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799 and again in 1801. In 1792 (along with fellow weaver William) he witnessed a baptism for Walter. He was thus probably closely related (perhaps brother) to the the carpet-making Laidlaws. In 1795 and 1797 he witnessed baptisms for William. He married Margaret Stewart and their children included William (b.1796). The witnesses in 1796 were Walter (perhaps his brother) and Walter Tinlin. He could be the son of William and Isabel Birnie baptised in Hawick in 1772. Thomas (18th/19th C.) 'gauger', i.e. exciseman in Hawick. The death of 'Mr. Laidlaw Gaugers Child' is recorded in 1804 and the death is in 1811 of 'Mrs. Laidlaw', spouse to his father. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newlands in Minto Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Crowhill according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same Thomas was a labourer at Synton according to the 1801 Militia ballot in Ashkirk Parish. Thomas (d.1823) farmer at Falnash. He was probably son of Robert, who also farmed at Falnash. He was listed at Falnash on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1786. He took on the additional farm of Nether Cassock in 1800. He was probably the 'Mr Laidlaw of Falnash, a gentleman of great responsibility and intelligence' who took the young Tom Jenkins into his household, and later encouraged his education. He married Margaret Beattie and had one son, Robert. He was listed at Nether Cassock when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He could be the Thomas of Cavers Parish whose son Robert was baptised in 1771. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Agnes Glendinning and their children included Thomas (b.1814). Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker who moved to London. In 1815 the death of his mother, Anne Hogg, is recorded in Hawick. Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker at Denholm, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He may be the resident of Cavers Parish who married Amanda Wood and whose children included Anne (b.1817), Thomas (b.1820), Helen (b.1823) and John Young (b.1826). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Hobkirk and their children included Janet (b.1827) and Robert (b.1829). Thomas (1801/2-28) son of William. He emigrated to America and died in a canal there aged 26. His children included William (grocer in Hawick and manufacturer at Cumledge Mills), Thomas (also grocer for a while), Walter (who moved to Australia), Robert (hosiery manufacturer of Glasgow, who moved to New Zealand) and Catherine (who married Alexander Mercer and moved to Australia). Thomas (b.1810/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was a farmer at Longbault. In 1841 he was living at Easter Branhholme Loch (with a teacher, David, who was probably his brother). He was still there in 1851. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 20 acres there. His wife was Hannah and their children included John, David, Peter, Thomas, Sarah, Helen, Hannah and Mary. Thomas (b.1820s) 2nd son of Thomas. He carried on his brother William's grocer's business at 4 High Street, then moved to Bolton. His children included William, Thomas, James and Catherine. Thomas 'Chinnie', 'Secky' (1829–1907) hosiery manufacturer who ran William Laidlaw & Sons from 1855, and built the mansion house he called 'Sillerbuthall' (completed in 1866). His name is entered onto the Land Tax records in about 1874 as owner of Dovemount and Silverbuthall (acquired in 2 parts from James Scott) and also for owning 'Souter's Acre' that was formerly part of the Whitehaugh estate. He was recorded at Silverbuthall in 1868. He was the third son of William, and continued to develop the family business. He acquired Lynnwood Mills from William Nixon in 1864, carrying out more yarn spinning, while giving up hosiery, but extending Teviot Crescent Mills. It is said that he was an easy-going boss until he found out he was being cheated by some of his employees, and thereafter was much harsher; this probably explains his nickname of 'Secky' (and perhaps also 'Sheckum'). His manner was described as being brusque and unaffected. In the 1850s he served on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Hawick District. He was a Conservative in politics and was Councillor for North High Street Ward 1861–66. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also a member of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce, being President for a while. He was for many years Chairman of Hawick Gas Company. He also helped found St. Andrew's Free Church, and deacon there for a long time. He married Beatrice, daughter of Robert Grierson, and she died in 1898, aged 66. Their children were: William; Robert Grierson, Daniel McGowan, who died aged 6 after an accident with a pony; Elizabeth, who died in infancy; Elizabeth (again), who married solicitor Henry Cousins; Jane Beatrice (b.1868), who married Anton Becker of Leeds; Margaret Isabella (b.1871), who married E. Jenkins, of the Bank of Scotland; and Kate, who lived in Edinburgh. He was buried at the Wellogate and his sons William and Robert G. wound up the family business about a year later. Several stories are told about him (in notes by James H. Haining). Thomas (19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. He married Robina Henderson, and their children included: Thomas (b.1864); Robert Henderson (b.1866), who died in infancy; William (b.1868); John Henderson (1870), a tailor who emigrated to Boston and settled in Port Hood, Nova Scotia, with his son Alexander Fraser being a leader in the Canadian co-operative movement; Robert Henderson (b.1872), song writer; and William (again, b.1874). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Paterson and their children included Mary (b.1871). Thomas Hill 'T.H.' (1846–1915), J.P., born in Annan, son of John, he became a master painter in Hawick. One of his schoolmates was the artist W.E. Lockhart. He was apprenticed to a painter in Annan in 1860, came to Hawick in 1866, but then worked in England for a few years. In 1870 he purchased the business of Alexander Wilson in Hawick and moved there permanently, living at 13 High Street. He encouraged his workers to attend classes in the Art School and his firm became known for its quality of decoration. He had a reputation locally as an artist, particularly in black and white. He illustrated Robert Murray's 'Hawick Characters', Goodfellow's 'Guide to Hawick', Mrs. Oliver's 'Upper Teviotdale' and Tancred's 'Rulewater and its People'. He also painted a back view of the old Town House. He additionally designed Christmas cards for a London firm. At a lecture in Hawick, entitled 'The Teviot from its Source to the Sea', while Mr. Domingo read the lecture he painted in watercolour several illustrative pictures. He joined the Town Council in 1883, immediately becoming a Bailie, retiring after 3 years, but returning later to serve for many more years. He was the ex-Bailie Laidlaw who was on the initial Common Riding Ceremonial Committee of 1887 and served as a Race Steward. He was a keen bowler, serving as President, Secretary and Treasurer of the Buccleuch Club and was President of the Border Bowling Association. He was President of the Border Counties' Master Painters' Association, a Fellow of the Incorporated Institute of British Decorators and on the committee of the Association of Master Painters in Scotland. In 1901 he published the article 'Decoration as a means of making Home Beautiful'. In 1868 he married Jane Scott, daughter of Gavin Pow and sister of John Pow. Their children included: Mary Bell (1870–1944); Bessie (b.1872); John (b.1874); Hannah H. (b.c.1877); Guy (b.c.1878); James C. (b.c.1880), who was also an artist; Thomas Hill (b.1881); Andrew S. (b.c.1889); and William Poole (b.1891). Thomas A. Kenneth ‘Ken’ (1936–) son of Jean and Arthur of 6 Northcote Street. He started cycling at age 15, and became extremely successful. He won the Scottish Daily Express 3-day road race in 1957, later winning the Scottish 100 mile championship in record time. He was the only Scot in the 1960 Olympic Games team and in 1961 was the first Scot to complete the Tour de France, leading during the 16th stage. He emigrated to New York in 1964, where he worked as a carpenter, and later moved to Savannah, Georgia. He married Theresa and emigrated to Savannah, Georgia. In 2005 he was made an Honorary Life Member of the Hawick Cycling Club at a special dinner. An annual event in Hawick, the ‘Ken Laidlaw Sportive’, was named in his honour. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded is 1502 as brother of Robert ‘in knawis edzartoun’ and also in the same place. He was ‘alias Ruthirfurd’, although it is unclear why he would have had this nickname. His brother was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter (17th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Laidley in Ormiston’ on the 1684 list of men declared rebels for refusing to take ‘the Test’. This is probably the Ormiston near Hawick. He is probably related to William in Little Cavers, who was also on the list of fugitives, and John, who was at Ormiston in 1694. Walter (17th C.) resident of Deanbrae according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same Walter had children baptised in Cavers Parish, including: Isabel (b.1696); Bessie (b.1701); and Janet (b.1713). Walter (1659/60–1712) tenant in West Deloraine. He is buried in Borthwick Waas, along with 6 of his children. He could be the Walter whose children baptised in Ettrick Parish included: an unnamed son (b.1695); William (b.1696); Helen (b.1696); Jean (b.1697); William (again, b.1697); an unnamed son (b.1699); and Margaret (b.1706). Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1721 when he was paid by the Council ‘for a sled fut when ye robbish was taken away at he crose’. He was presumably a tradesman of some sort in Hawick. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in Hawickshiel in 1766. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Spinny and their children included: Isobel (b.1718); and James (b.1720). Walter (18th

C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Anderson and their children included: Isobel (b.1737); and Margaret (b.1742). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Smail and their children included Margaret (b.1741). Walter (18th C.) shepherd in Robertson and Hawick Parishes. He was at Eilrig in 1733, 1735 and 1736 and was recorded as ‘herd’ in 1742. He may be the man of that name who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1725 for George Dickson, herd in Rashiegrain. He married Janet Chisholme in Robertson in 1731. Their children included: Margaret (b.1732), Janet (b.1733) and Margaret (again, b.1736), baptised in Robertson; and Walter (b.1742), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1742 were Walter Hogg and John Elliot (both servants). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Wilson and their son William was baptised in 1745. Walter (18th/19th C.) probably brother of William, with whom he came to Hawick to work in the carpet factory. In 1796 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas (perhaps another brother) and in 1797 he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for William. He married Mary Miller in Hawick in 1780 and their children included: William (b.1781); Beatrix (b.1784); Isabel (b.1785); William (again, b.1788); Margaret (b.1792); and Robert (b.1796). The witnesses in 1792 were weavers William and Thomas Laidlaw, who were probably his brother and another relative. The names of his children suggest that he could also have been a son of William and Isabel Birnie, but his baptism is not recorded in Hawick Parish. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1787 as ‘Sauglaw’, when his daughter Margaret died and again in 1795 when his unnamed child died in Hawick Parish. Presumably the designation was the place where he lived, but this is unclear. He was probably related to James ‘sauglay’, recorded in 1810. He may be the Walter whose son James died in Hawick in 1781. Walter (b.1780) son of James and Margaret Scott. He was born at Weensmoor in Hobkirk Parish. He became head gardener at Raby Castle, home of the Duke of Cleveland. He had daughters Mary and Anne. Walter (b.c.1780) born at Meadshaw, son of James and Isabella Scoon. He became a butcher in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 19 High Street. In 1801 he married Margaret Oliver (b.1777) in Kirkton. Their children included: Robert (b.1802); Mary (1806–81) married James Little; Isabella (b.1812) married Mr. Temple; and Walter (b.1816). Walter

(b.c.1780) labourer at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Walter (b.1811/2) from Jedburgh, he was a blacksmith in Wilton. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a blacksmith on Wilton Place. In 1851 he was on Wilton Place, at about the modern 34 Princes Street, and in 1861 on the east side of Dickson Street. His wife was Janet and their children included Thomas and Elizabeth. Walter (1838–1911) poet and local historian in Jedburgh. He wrote several articles about Jedburgh and its history and for 20 years acted as custodian for Jedburgh Abbey. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He wrote 'Poems: chiefly on Jedburgh and vicinity' (1901) and 'Poetry and prose' (1900, 1904, 1908) – '... a geyan yibble poyeter an a leal Border Scot ti buit, Walter Laidlaw maun be a sair miss ti the Waeter-gate o Jed' [ECS]. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as one of the tenants of the lands of Deloraine and 'Wardishope' in Ettrick. William (17th C.) recorded as a tenant in Woll in 1639. He was called as a witness in a dispute between Francis Scott of Castleside and his mother-in-law, Margaret Scott. Perhaps the same William had the following children baptised in Ashkirk Parish: William (b.1631); Margaret (b.1632); James (b.1636); Janet (b.1639); Robert (b.1639); Thomas (b.1641); an unnamed daughter (b.1643); Agnes (b.1645); and William (again, b.1647). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1651 for John Stewart and perhaps one for James. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Grieve and their children included John (b.1648). William (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Bank according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John Oliver was tenant there at the same time. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant in 'Brewbuse' in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear exactly where this farm was. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Whillans and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1681. William (17th C.) tenant in Little Cavers recorded in 1684 on a list of men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. He is probably related to Walter in Ormiston, who was also on the list of fugitives William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Laidlaw and their children included: Agnes (b.1688). William (1656/7–1717) tailor in Dodburn. He is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (17th/18th C.) herd in Wester Essenside. He married Mary Elliot in 1697. Perhaps the same Laidlaw (with no forename given) was herd in Huntly in 1715 when his son John was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Anderson in 1700. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: Jean (b.1701); and Janet and Catherine (b.1705). William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Anderson in Cavers in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1712) and Robert (b.1715). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Sharp in 1721. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Jackson and their children included: James (b.1706); and Robert (b.1708). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1707 he married Margaret Scott. William 'Will o Phaup' (1691–1784/5) born at Craik, he was the maternal grandfather of James Hogg, the 'Ettrick Shepherd'. Hogg wrote that he was 'the last man of this wild region who heard, saw and conversed with the fairies; and that not once but at sundry times and seasons'. He was a shepherd at Upper Phaul on the Ettrick Water. His gravestone in Ettrick Kirkyard bears the inscription 'Here lyeth William Laidlaw. The far-famed Will o' Phaup. Who for feats of frolic, agility, and strength. Had no equal in his day'. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: James (b.1726); Robert (b.1728); Margaret (b.1730), the oldest daughter, who married Robert Hogg, and was mother of James Hogg, the 'Ettrick Shepherd'; William (b.1735); Agnes (b.1738); and Janet (b.1741). One of his direct descendants was the Canadian author Alice Munro (nee Laidlaw), winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature. William (18th C.) married Margaret Davidson in Bedrule in 1726. William (18th C.) married Margaret Graham in Hawick in 1728. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1728 he was at Broadleeshiel when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Howcleuch in 1742 when his son James was baptised in Robertson. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1727, 1730 and 1737. He is probably the William who married Margaret Reid in 1725 and had children John (b.1727), Thomas (b.1730), Janet (b.1732), Betty (b.1735) and Bessie (b.1737). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott in 1725 and their son John was baptised in 1726. William (18th C.) married Agnes Bell in Robertson in 1739. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Grizel

Scott in 1744. William (18th C.) son of shepherd James, he was a wright in Town-o-Rule. It was said that the family were related to the Laidlaws of Weensmoor, and their burial grounds were adjacent in Hobkirk Kirkyards. In 1762 he married Margaret Best of Kirkton Parish, the marriage recorded in both Hobkirk and Kirkton Parishes; they were members of the Associate Kirk in Jedburgh. Their children included: Agnes (b.1763), who married an Oliver; Bettie (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); Thomas (b.1773); Mary (b.1775), who married a Thomson; and Nelly (b.1777), who became teacher at the 'Sclenty Schuil'. He could be the William who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1811. William (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1764 and 1767. His children (baptised in Roberton) included James (b.1764) and Alexander (b.1767). He may be the William who married Bett Matheson in Roberton in 1762, his wife being from Yarrow Parish. William (18th C.) roadman in Hawick. He married Helen Grieve in Wilton Parish in 1764. His sister-in-law Agnes Grieve died in Hawick in 1800. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Brown in 1764 and their children included: Adam (b.1765); and Helen (b.1768). William (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Roberton in 1769. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Birnie (or Burnet) in 1754 and their children included: William (b.1759); Isabel (b.1762); Margaret (b.1765); and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. Given the names, it is possible that he was father of William of the carpet factory, as well as father of Walter and Thomas. William (18th C.) married Margaret Moffat in Roberton in 1770. William (18th C.) married Jean 'Bleekie' in Southdean in 1772. William (18th C.) married Janet Hood in Hawick in 1774. William (1759–1823) along with his brother (perhaps Walter) he came to Hawick from Leith to work in the Orrock Place carpet factory. However, it seems that he may be the son of William and Isabel Birnie born in Hawick (so perhaps the brothers returned to Hawick rather than coming as complete outsiders). His property on the Cross Wynd was sold in 1811 to form part of the site of Allars Kirk. He was also one of the founder members of the Independent Kirk in Hawick, being an elder in that church and calling his youngest son after one of the evangelist preachers, Charles Gray (the 'Tabernacle' was built next door to his wife's family home on the Kirk Wynd). He may be the William who paid the cart tax in

Hawick in 1785. He was progenitor of the most prominent local branch of the family. He is probably the weaver William who in 1792 (along with fellow weaver Thomas) witnessed a baptism for Walter. In 1794 he witnessed a baptism for manufacturer Walter Richardson. In the early part of the 19th century he set up his own hosiery business with his son William, starting out with just 4 frames. They later expanded to both tweed and hosiery, building the main mill in 1834, and later focussing just on tweeds. He married Margaret Aitken (1765–1842), daughter of Robert and Janet Scott. They lived in the Mid Raw and their children were: Janet (b.1784), who married spinner Robert Wilson; William (b.1786), 'Shaffles'; Robert (b.1792), 'Auld London', who lived at 17 Loan; James (b.1795), who married Ann Affleck and died leaving a young family; Thomas (b.1797), who emigrated to America and drowned in a canal; Walter (b.1797), who probably died in 1819; George (b.1797); Charles Gray; Isabella, who married William Wilson, spinner of Lynnwood; Grace, who married draper George Borrowman; and 3 other sons, including one who farmed in Yarrow. The witnesses in 1795 were James Rae and Thomas (who was surely related) and in 1797 were Thomas and Walter (perhaps both his brothers). William (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (b.1768) son of James and Margaret Scott. He was born at Hartshaugh near Bonchester (although Tancred states he was born at Wester Swanshiel). He was farmer at Weensmoor in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded there in 1841. His wife was Helen, daughter of James Douglas from Castleton; she was said to be a favourite of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Their children included: James (b.1797), who farmed at Hallrule Mill and Hartshaugh Mill; Douglas (b.1799), born at Kirknowe, but died young; Christian (b.1801), who married William Gowanlock; Margaret (b.1803), who married William Sibbald; Mary (b.1806), married William Smith; Helen, married John Turnbull and went to Canada; Douglas (again, b.1810), who emigrated to Toronto; Joanna (b.1812), who later went to Canada and married storekeeper David Davidson; John (d.1814); William (b.1815), who later farmed at Weensmoor; and Jennet or Jessie (b.1817), who married Hawick shoemaker Charles Scott. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greatlaws in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf

Parish, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was also recorded as farmer at Greatlaws in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799; a note says 'Selkirk Y', suggesting perhaps that he was a volunteer with the Selkirkshire Yeomanry.

William (b.c.1780) weaver in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. William (1780–1845) born at Blackhouse in Selkirkshire, the Ettrick Shepherd worked for his family for 10 years. Together they helped Sir Walter Scott to gather Border ballads. He first encountered Scott when he travelled to Yarrow with John Leyden in 1802. He was a farmer, then an exciseman and later worked as Scott's factor and secretary. He wrote several poems of his own, including 'Lucy's Flittin' (which appeared in 'The Banquet of Euphrosyne', published in Hawick in 1811). He also wrote a description of Selkirkshire for the Edinburgh Encyclopædia. 'Recollections of Sir Walter Scott (1802–1804). Edited from the M.S. in the Laing Collection, University Library, Edinburgh', by James Sinton, was published in Hawick in 1905. William (18th/19th C.) married Betty Easton in Wilton Parish in 1809. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nelly Waldie and their children included Mary Jane (b.1813). William (18th/19th C.) road contractor, who was one of the first residents of Bonchester Brigend in the early 1800s. William (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Glendinning in Cavers in 1819. William 'Auld Laidlaw', 'Shaffles' or 'The Auld Laird' (1786–1861) eldest son of the first William, along with whom he founded the hosiery firm William Laidlaw & Sons in 1811, succeeding to the business of Mr. Purdom. To begin with he was the traveller for the firm, spending much time in the Newcastle area (where he often stayed at the 'Robin Hood' on Pilgrim Street) and further afield, sometimes in the company of Robert Leishman. One story is told of how he returned to Hawick on foot during a snowstorm, losing his way, but bumping into Willie Winter's post, thereby recovering his bearings. It is said that he loved to bargain, and could not take a trip, even once retired, without some goods to sell. He lived for a while in a house at 14 Howegate, with his stocking-shop behind; this is probably the place marked 'Laidlaw' on Wood's 1824 map. In 1834 he built Teviot Crescent Mills, expanding into the much larger premises there and moving into tweeds. He built up a huge manufacturing business from humble beginnings. In his day he was apparently the only person to openly sing 'Teribus' out of season, at the Bailies' dinner, and he would sing the 'Auld Sang' at the married men's Common Riding dinner. He was an ardent Conservative in politics, losing his coat tails during the election troubles of 1837, and objections to 'Radicals' seeking the vote were often made in his name afterwards. In 1814 he married Jane Fisher (daughter of a Glasgow merchant), who died in 1844, aged 50. His sons were: William (1817–59); Daniel McGowan (1826–54), who built Hopehill; Thomas (b.1829); and Peter Fisher (b.1830). They also had daughters: Margaret (b.1820), who married Rev. John Gilchrist Dyer in 1846; Jane (b.1826); Jessie (1833–41); one who became Mrs. McGinly; and 4 others who died in infancy, probably including Grace (b.1816) and Jane (b.1822). He later married Jane Rutherford (nee Waldie) at Edinburgh in 1845, the marriage also being recorded in Hawick. Her daughter Agnes Rutherford married William, her step-brother. Although most of his family left for the Free Kirk at the Disruption, he stayed with the 'Auld Kirk', despite repeatedly being cited for not keeping fast days. He lived beside his factory of Teviot Crescent, and is buried in St. Mary's Cemetery. A portrait of him is in the Museum, by an unknown artist. William (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Wilson and their children included: William (b.1807); James (b.1809); and John (b.1811). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included: Margaret (b.1803); Janet (b.1805); and Agnes (b.1807). William (b.1788) son of the first Hawick William's brother (possibly Walter), and hence cousin of 'Shaffles'. He was a weaver and later a grocer. Along with his brother Walter he owned property at 8 Loan. He is listed as a grocer in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He married Agnes Lamb. Their children included: Mary (b.1819), who married Thomas Stevenson; Agnes (b.1821), who married Hugh Douglas; and Walter (b.1823), an engineer with the government in India. He is buried at St. Mary's. He could be the 'Wm. Laidlaw, Loan' who arranged for a musician from Jedburgh to play for the 'rebel' Cornet of 1809. William (b.1792/3) porter in Hawick, living at about 20 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was described as an 'Out door Labourer' and living around the Crown Close. His wife was Isabella and their children included John, Margaret, Elizabeth, William, Catherine, Sophia and Isabella. He could be the William listed in Slater's 1852 directory as a coal agent (for Arniston Colliery) at the Station. William (19th C.) married Margaret Jamieson in Cavers in 1836. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Middlemas in Wilton in 1844. William (19th C.) married Sarah Ormiston in Hwick in 1854. William (19th C.) tinsmith in Hawick. He married Helen Elliot Amos (from the Hobkirk family) in 1866. William (b.1814/5) shoemaker in Denholm. In 1851 he was living with his wife Margaret Jamieson and their children Janet, Ann, Catherine, Thomas, Margaret, Joan and Jane. William (1815–80) son of Robert, 'Auld London'. He was a frameworker living on the Loan, at about No. 9. He married Christian Affleck Scott (1815–75). Their children were: Robert (b.1838); George (b.1840); Margaret (b.1846), who married Joseph Hogg; Rachel (b.1852); and Daniel (b.1855). He took in 3 sons of his uncle James when he died about 1838: Thomas (b.c.1824); Robert (b.c.1826); and Walter (b.c.1833). William (1815–84) son of William, who farmed at Weensmoor. He is recorded as farmer of Weensmoor in 1851, farming 52 acres and employing 1 labourer. He lived with his niece Mary and nephew James. By 1861 he was farmer at Bonchester, farming 152 acres and employing 3 people. He farmed at Bonchester for 19 years. He was listed on the first congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849, was a trustee and was Treasurer for 37 years. He also helped with building the first church there. In Hobkirk in 1853 he married Agnes Purdom (from Newcastleton), aunt of the Agnes Purdom who married mason Andrew Waugh. His children included: William (b.1854), farmer at East Fodderlee; Robert (b.1856), Indian businessman and M.P. for East Renfrewshire; Agnes (b.1858), who married Stewart Douglas Elliot, a Councillor in Edinburgh; Helen (b.1859), who married James Phimister; James (b.1861), who emigrated to Canada and died unmarried; Isabella (b.1865), who worked for the Post Office in London; Arthur (b.1867), who emigrated to San Francisco and married Hattie Turner; John (b.1868), who emigrated to Australia; Margaret (b.1870), who married James Armour, a tea manager in India; Douglas (b.1874), a market gardener in Congleton; and Walter Scott (1877–1919), who trained as a doctor and managed a rubber plantation in the Straits Settlements. The William Laidlaw Memorial Hall was built partly in his memory. William (1817–59) son of William, he took over the firm of William

Laidlaw & Sons in partnership with his brothers in 1845. The firm purchased Lynnwood Spinning Mill from Nixon's. He was Cornet in 1838. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. In 1851 he married Agnes, daughter of builder Robert Rutherford, and his step-sister. Their children were: William (b.1851) of Grieve & Laidlaw; and Jeannie Waldie Fisher (b.1858), who married John G. Wilson. He later married Christina F. Scott (who died in 1875, aged 59). In 1861 his widow was an 'Annuitant' at 3 Teviot Crescent. William (b.1818/9) originally from Melrose, he was a farmer at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. He is listed there in 1841, when he farmed 150 acres and employed 8 men. His wife was Isabel and their children included William and Mary. William (b.1821) from Hawick. He married Betsy Elliot and became a sheep farmer in Fodderty, Ross and Cromarty. William (1821–1908) manufacturer, born in Hawick, son of James and grandson of hosiery manufacturer William. His mother was Ann Affleck, from Peebles. At the age of 17 he was left with no parents, and entered the warehouse of his uncle William on Teviot Crescent, but after a few years became a grocer. His premises were on the High Street (No. 12), where the Cannon Inn had been and the Royal Bank would be built later. In the 1841 census he was there (near the top of the Millport), but in 1851 he was at No. 4 High Street, formerly Andrew Borthwick's property. In Slater's 1852 directory he was 'William Laidlaw, jun.' on the High Street. He left Hawick in 1854, turning over the grocer's business to his brother and taking a lease of Cumledge Mills near Duns. He started in yarn weaving, but moved into blanket manufacturing. From 1875 he was also involved (along with other family members) with Allars Mill in Jedburgh. The overall business was called Laidlaw Brothers, and later Laidlaw's Blanket and Tweed Mills, Ltd. He purchased Cumledge Mills outright in 1888. He managed the Cumledge Mill side of the business along with his sons William and Alexander, with the older brothers, James and John managing Allars Mill. In the 1930s the company directors included 3 William Laidlaws, all cousins! In 1844 he married Elizabeth Middlemas, from Ednam. Their children included: James, J.P., who was Provost of Jedburgh; John, J.P.; William; Alexander; Isabella Broomfield (who married Robert Huggan); and Ann, who was unmarried. He and his wife held their diamond wedding anniversary in 1904. He remained strongly a Teri at heart and was known for his stories of

Hawick in olden times, one of his earliest memories being the celebration for the coming of age of the future Duke of Buccleuch in 1827. He died at Cumledge Mills and is buried in Preston Cemetery, Berwickshire. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Sanderson in Hawick in 1852. William (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Elizabeth Bell and their children included: Mary (b.1861). William (1835/6–1917) son of Thomas. Along with his brother Robert Grierson he was a partner in Thomas Laidlaw & Sons, but wrapped up the business in 1908. He died at Broadstairs and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (1854–1911) son of William and Agnes Purdom. He farmed at East Fodderlee. In 1880 he married Elizabeth ('Bessie', 1854–1925) Hall, 2nd daughter of baker Robert Young. They had 4 sons and 1 daughter, including Douglas (b.1888), Agnes Lamb and Alexander (b.1892). In 1901 his family were living in Minto. William (b.1845/6) son of William and Jane Newell. His marriage certificate states that he was born in Dumfriesshire, although family tradition says that he came from Hawick. He emigrated to Australia and in 1870 in Melbourne married Agnes Ferguson (daughter of a Denholm mason). They had 2 sons. William (1852/3–91) son of William. He was a manufacturer of Grieve & Laidlaw, Stonefield Mills. He married Mary Reid Clark, who died in 1929, aged 76. Their children included William Rutherford Clark, who died aged 16. William (1857/8–1912) cycle agent in Hawick. He was Captain of St. Cuthbert's (rugby) Football Club for its first two seasons, from when it formed in 1877. He was also known as a keen cyclist in his early years. He worked for 38 years with Geo. & Jas. Oliver, providing valuable assistance to John Oliver in his work as Clerk to the School Board. He was in partnership with Robert Milligan for a while as a cycle business. He married Betsy Park, and she died in 1935, aged 70. They had 2 children who died young. William (1866–1931) eldest son of Peter Fisher. At the age of 19 he emigrated to Queensland, where he was involved with gold mining and prospecting and served in the Australian Bushmen's Corps in the Boer War. After marrying he moved to California where he became a fruit grower, and his wife Rev. Alice Z. Laidlaw was pastor at the church in Narod. (formerly spelled 'Ladlaw', 'Ladley', 'Laidla', 'Laidlay', 'Laidlae', 'Laidlea', 'Laidlie', 'Laidley', 'Laidlo', 'Laidlow', 'Laidlue', 'Laidly', 'Leudlaw', etc.).

Laidlawhope (lād-lup) n. former farm in Liddesdale, probably on the Laidlehope Burn. It is listed as 'Ladlawhope' in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 4 merks. On the 1541 rental roll it is 'Ladilhope' and still worth 4 merks, but vacant at that time. It is possible that this is the 'Ladhope, of the laird of Howpaslettes lands called Scott' which were burned by the Armstrongs in 1544 (although 'Lairhope' could be meant). It is probably the 'Laidhop' listed in 1632 among the lands in Liddesdale owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). In 1718 it was combined with Whitrope in the farm of Stitchhill (it is 'Ladhope' in 1718).

Laidlaw Memorial Hall see William Laidlaw Memorial Hall

Laidlaw Place (lād-law-plis) n. street marked incorrectly for Ladylaw Place on the 1897 Ordnance Survey map.

Laidlaw's (lād-lawz) n. William Laidlaw & Sons, manufacturers of hosiery and tweeds, founded in 1811 as a hosiery manufacturers in the 'Mid Raw'. The business moved after a few years to 14 Howegate, with a second stocking-shop in the Backdamgate. Their main factory was next to the Little Haugh (Teviot Crescent Mills), erected in 1834, with extensions built to produce tweed in 1841. A weir was built in the Teviot to channel water along beside Teviot Crescent to power the mill; this was Laidlaw's Cauld. The firm then introduced piecing machines made by Melrose's. They also made blankets in the 1840s. Their 'tenter grounds' were carried off in the 1846 flood, as well as coal from the engine house. The company was listed at Teviot Crescent Mills in 1852. From 1864 they purchased Lynnwood Mills and concentrated on yarn spinning and tweed manufacture, selling off their hosiery equipment in 1865. They also operated the Weensland spinning mill for several years after 1864. The family retired from business in 1908 although the company name carried on for a while, and was succeeded by George Wilson & Sons. The main mills were later demolished, although some photographs still exist to show how extensive they were. The Museum has company ledgers from 1926–32.

Laidlaw's Cauld (lād-lawz-kawld) n. weir once stretching over the Teviot near the old Victoria Laundry, named after Laidlaw's Mill nearby. It was built in about 1834 by Gideon Scott & Sons, and obliterated the piece of ground known as the Fairy Faulds. Traces of it in the form of undressed stones between wooden supports, can still be easily seen when the river is low. It was used to divert water through a mill lade, which ran alongside Teviot Crescent and through Teviot Crescent Mills, coming out opposite Dickson's & Laing's Mill; the open lade was filled in in 1914. A second branch ran to the foot of Croft Road and came out near the Henderson College (now Dovecote Mews). The rubble-built Cauld itself was largely removed after WWII. In earlier times there had been a ford near here, just upriver from the main ford at the foot of Walter's Wynd. In the 19th century, when the river was frozen, there were sometimes curling matches played there. The Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men are shown crossing the Teviot near the Cauld in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding. It also features in the song 'The Anvil Crew' – 'But when we came to Laidlaw's Cauld, There a horde of pirates lay' [WE].

Laidlaw Terrace (lād-law-te-ris) n. street constructed in 1888 along the south bank of the Teviot, off North Bridge Street. This involved building up the river-side, with the library being added at the top in 1904 (now Nos. 1 and 2). It was named after William Laidlaw & Sons, yarn spinners and tweed manufacturers, with the street essentially being built to provide accommodation for workers at Teviot Crescent Mills. The bottom of the street long had an undeveloped area used as a sawmill yard and later a builder's yard, with an adjacent footpath along the riverside.

Laidlehope Burn (lād-lup-burn) n. stream that rises near Kiln Knowe, above the Slitrig's headwaters, and flows south to join the Roughley Burn, not far from the Ninestane Rig. This is related to the farm of 'Ladlawhope' recorded in c.1376. Where the burn was crossed by the Waverley Line there was Laidlehope Culvert (it is written 'Laidlerhope' by Smail in 1880).

laif (lāf) n., arch. a loaf – 'A made a fa-iasable mael oot o pie-soop, ... caald flesh, picklt ingans, an nae skrimp o laif' [ECS], 'Th' breid in Glesca bein' reduced a ha'penny th' quarter laif' [HEX1921], also used to distinguish bread from other baked goods – 'Howt! A'm fair staad o laif, eend on. Let's sei a hyimm-backen scone' [ECS] (note that the plural is usually 'laifs'; see also laives).

laif-breid (lāf-breed) n., arch. loaf-bread, flour-based bread baked as loaves, as distinct from other baked goods such as oatcakes.

laigh (lā, lāch) adj., arch., poet. low – '... the said Francis Scott, his tenement of houses, high and laigh, back and fore, with the yeard and pertinents lying within the town and burgh of Hawick' [BR], '... set, let, or hire any of their houses, high or laigh, back or fore, to any families or person, strangers, whatsoever, without the first acquainting the present Magistrates ...' [BR1699], 'The first ae guide that they met wi', It was high up in Hardhaughswire; The second guide that they met wi', It was laigh down in Borthwick water' [T], 'Then Johnie let a spear fa' laigh by his thigh, Fala, &c. Thought weil to hae slain the innocent, I trow ...' [CPM], '... They fand their tree three ells o'er laigh – They fand their stick baith short and sma'. With my fa ding, &c.' [CPM], 'An' if ye'll tak sae laigh a look, As patronize this little book' [JR], 'She lookit hiche to the bodynge hille, And laighe to the darklynge deane ...' [JTe], '... for we ar brung verra leich' [HSR], 'Hei leuch at the laich doorheid' [JAHM], '... Laigh doun I louted on my knees, An' preed the Hunter's pool' [ECB], 'To see far doon in the valley, The flicker o' mony lights, Sall I come in by the laigh gate Or owre the wind-blawn heichts?' [WL], 'Haud laigh wi' the stubble, But cannie and clean' [GWe], n., poet. a vale, hollow – '... toun and strath, And ben and loch ... laich and howe and island ...' [DH] (also written 'laich' and 'leich'; cf. leuch and low).

laighest (lā-chist) adj., poet. lowest – '... an' thou hest freet my saul frae the leichist hell' [HSR], '... an' queerlie wrought in the leachist pairs o' the yirth' [HSR].

laigishin (lā-gi-shin) n., arch. a large, cumbersome quantity (related to the local word for 'legacy').

laik (lāk) adj., arch. lacking, wanting – 'All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scoir 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great teynd, laik ane firloft, and 20 libs of vicarage' [PR1627].

Laik (lāk) n. James (b.1740) son of Thomas, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. In 1785–91 he was listed as house servant at Wells, working for Gilbert Elliott. In 1785 his name was listed as 'John'. In 1791 he was listed as a butler at Wells and in 1792, 1794 and 1797 as a house servant. His name was sometimes listed as 'Luke'. He could be the James 'Loch' whose son Thomas was baptised in Southdean in 1774 or the James whose daughter Susana was baptised in Hobkirk in 1799. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was living in Hallrule in 1739, when he had twins baptised. His children included Thomas and James (b.1739). Joshua (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was a gardener in Cavers. His children included Christian (b.1715) and Isobel (b.1717). Rev. Thomas (17th/18th

C.) recorded in Billerwell in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland. He was licensed as a minister by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1711 and presented to Southdean Parish in July 1716. However, the parishioners refused to sign the call in December and he ended up as minister at Longframlington, Northumberland. He was recorded in the Hawick Parish Session records of 1713 (presumably during a sermon) reminding parents to send their children to school, and also as a substitute in 1714 when Hawick's minister was absent. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: James (b.1740); Agnes (b.1744); Margaret (b.1753); and John (b.1756); (also written 'Laick' and 'Lake' and probably the same as 'Leck').

Lailsell (lāl-sel) n. former name for lands in the upper Slitrig valley. It is listed in 1607 along with 'Carlinghall' (probably Carlin Hole), 'Brounishall' (probably Broon's Hill) and other lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. It may be a transcription error for somewhere more familiar.

Laing (lāng, lān) n. Adam (1818/9–1900) Hawick stockingmaker apparently noted for his gentlemanly bearing. In 1851 he was at about 29 High Street and in 1861 was living at 5 Slitrig Bank. In 1844 he married Agnes (1824/5–1902), daughter of James Hogg, the writer of 'Teribus'. They had 8 children: Jane (b.c.1845) or Jeanie, who married hosiery manufacturer James Renwick; James (1846/7–1909), grocer; Euphemia (1850/1–1918), who lived at Marlefield; Eliza (b.c.1853); Agnes (1855–1910) who married manufacturer Francis Elliot Wilson; Adam (b.1858), who died young; Christina Grey (b.1861), who married Alfred Warr, minister of Rosneath; and Jessie D. (b.1864), who married James White and lived in Glasgow. Adam (1859–1918) Burgh Chamberlain of Hawick, co-author of 'The Hawick Tradition of 1514' (1898) with R.S. Craig, and author of 'Bransholme Castle and the Land of the Scotts' (1901). The book 'The Hawick Tradition of 1514' was significant in establishing the connection between the Hawick Flag and Hexham, which overcame criticism at the time about the lack of historical evidence for the events of Hornshole. The 3rd son of Walter of Denholm Hill and Margaret Scott, he was educated in Denholm and at Teviot Grove Academy. He was an apprentice with Purdoms, trained further in Edinburgh and returned to Hawick to work with W.M. Syme. He served as Burgh Chamberlain for 16 years from 1891, before becoming the first Burgh Treasurer. He was one of the founder members of the Callants' Club, its first Honorary Treasurer, and Vice-President during WWI. He was one of the founders of the Teviotdale Cycling Club, won a couple of Mossypaul to Hawick races, and was also involved with other local sports organisations. He helped get the Liberal Club premises built and was Club Treasurer for many years. He was a member of the Archaeological Society and the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club. He also acted as Secretary of the Public Library and Secretary and Treasurer of the Museum. In addition he was heavily involved in erecting many of the monuments and plaques carried out in his day, as well as helping resuscitate Mossypaul. He was a keen Common Riding supporter and pushed for the resumption of the riding of the full marches at Pilmuir and the cutting of the sod ceremony. Sinton's bibliography of Hawick-related works (which he helped to compile) states that he possessed a rare 3rd edition of James Hogg's 'Flodden Field and the Colour', inserted inside of which was a manuscript of the tune as played by the town piper in 1777. Alexander 'Sandy' (1786–1850) hosiery manufacturer. He was son of John and Agnes Donaldson, brother of David, father of Walter and grand-father of J.T. of Linden Park. He was in partnership with his brother from about 1802, with premises where the Sandbed Store was later located. Originally they spun yarn on the hand jenny and operated a small hosiery business. However, they joined with the Dicksons in 1815 to form Dicksons & Laings. He is probably the 'A. Laing' whose property at Dovemount is marked on Wood's 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had the house Springbank built for him, above the main factory area. The family were Reform supporters of their day. In the 1834 electoral roll he and his brother David were listed as joint proprietors in the spinning mill. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as manufacturer at Wilton Mills. In the 1841 census he was living at Wilton Mills. His first wife was Ann (1789–1822), youngest daughter of Walter Wilson (and sister of skinner Thomas Wilson), who died in childbirth. Their surviving children were: and Ann (b.1811) who married John Elliot and moved to Massachusetts, U.S.A.; John (b.1812); and Walter (b.1820). He secondly married Janet, daughter of William Roger, who was his cousin (their mothers both Donaldsons being sisters).

They had 2 surviving children: Margery Donaldson, who married William Brown from Galashiels and was mother of Alexander Laing Brown; and Alexander Brown (b.1829), who married Jane Dinwiddie. She was a widow living at Springbank in 1851 along with her son Alexander and 2 servants. Alexander (18th/19th C.) from Minto Parish. In 1826 he married Elizabeth Thomson from Jedburgh. Alexander 'Allie' (b.1829) son of manufacturer Alexander and his 2nd wife Janet Roger. He followed his father into woollen manufacturing. He was partner (with William Irving) in the firm Laing & Irving and lived at Ivybank. In the 1850s he was the Alexander (of Laing & Irvine) who was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He became a partner in Laing, Michie & Graham and Laing & Gawn, which later merged to become Currie, Lee & Gawn. His caricature appears in the book 'Noctes Hawickianæ'. He is probably the Alex recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in about 1874. He married Jane Milligan (1844-1911), daughter of James Dinwiddie, who helped establish the hosiery industry in Dumfries. They had a large family, Alexander 'Lal' being the oldest son. Alexander James 'Lal' (b.1865) son of Alexander and Jane Milligan Dinwiddie. He was a prominent Hawick rugby forward from around 1883, being Captain of the Hawick team in 1888. He represented Roxburgh County and South of Scotland. He was known as a fast forward. He also played in the British team which first went to Australia in 1888. He emigrated to America shortly after this, married twice and had at least one daughter who visited Hawick a few times and died in Palm Springs. Andrew (b.1803/4) innkeeper of the Black Bull in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was gamekeeper at Ayton in Berwickshire. His wife was Isabella and their children included Jessy, Isabella, Thomas, Elizabeth, James, Helen, Robert and Margaret Ann. David of Westerkirk (d.bef. 1727). He married Katherine, eldest daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton in 1720. His widow later married Charles Telfer, Hawick's minister and thirdly Robert Elliot of Fenwick. David (d.1781) mason in Hawick. He was probably the David, son of Walter, born in Hawick in 1710. In 1734 he and his men were paid for 6½ days' work they did on the West Port. He was recorded as a mason in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness and as a wright in 1745 when he witnessed 2 baptisms. In 1752 he was paid 'for pointing a hole on the steeple-head, and altering a crack'. He was among the men paid in 1755 'for the herd's house building'. He witnessed a baptism for John Richardson in 1772. He is probably the mason David who (along with mason Walter, likely his son) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his other son). He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason John (possibly his son). He was deceased when his mason son Walter died in 1798. He married Helen Wallace and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Walter (b.1733); Ann (b.1735); Janet (b.1737); Helen (b.1739); Jean (b.1742); John (b.1744); and James (b.1746). It is possible he was also father of: Robert (b.c.1748); and Hannah (b.c.1750), who married Andrew Hunter. The witnesses in 1742 were Robert Pringle, Excise Officer and wright Robert Pringle. He could be the David who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. His death is recorded in 1781 as 'Auld David Laing Mason'. David (1782-1840) son of John, he was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He was originally in partnership with his brother Alexander (from about 1802) and later as part of Dicksons & Laings of Wilton Mills (from 1815). He was Cornet in 1805. He lived at No. 1 Wilton Bank, which was probably the same place as Springbank. He was one of the first members of Hawick Curling Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Janet, daughter of John Fiddes in Hobkirk Parish in 1811; she died in Glasgow in 1868, aged 79. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1812); John (b.1814), draper; Agnes (b.1816); Helen (b.1819); Jemima (b.1824); and James Robert (b.1827). 3 of their daughters moved to Warkworth, Northumberland. His widow was living on Wilton Bank in 1841, along with Helen, Jemima, James and a servant. In 1851 Janet was living on the Howegate with Jemima and James. He died at Springbank and is buried at St. Mary's. David (b.c.1780) recorded as 'Junior Mason' in Hawick on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. This suggests that he was a grandson (or other close relative) of the earlier mason of the same name. David (19th C.) Bailie of the 1820s and 1830s. He went to Jedburgh along with 70 special constables to help keep the peace in the election of 1831. He may have been the same man as manufacturer David. After the election of 1832 he released a prisoner in Hawick (by the name of Scott) who had been accused of disorderly conduct and assault; this led to complaints on behalf of the Duke of Buccleuch and others. He is probably the 'D. Laing' whose property is marked on Wood's 1824 map, on the middle of the north side of the Sandbed. Donald McLeod (b.c.1898) son of Thomas Alexander and Agnes Brown. He enlisted in the army in 1914 when he was probably only about 16. After WWI he worked on rubber plantations in Malaya. He married his cousin, Margery Haddon. George (1883–1947) son of manufacturer John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was educated at home and in Eastbourne, along with his brothers Walter, Ivan and Maurice. He farmed at Nikuyu in Kenya. Gilbert (d.1777) son of Walter, he became a merchant in St. Petersburg. His brother was William of Meikledale and his sister Margaret married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He also had a nephew 'Watty' Scott, who spent some time in St. Petersburg, but returned to Scotland in ruin. He suffered strokes in the late 1770s and died in Russia. He married Elizabeth Catherine Gardner in 1765. Some of his correspondence is in the National Archives, labelled 'I desire my son William not to burn these letters till he has leisure to read them all over'. Ivan (1885–1917) 3rd son of John Turnbull and Anna Drummond Thomson. Born at Springbank (before it was the Haig Maternity Hospital), he was educated at home by a governess and at New College, Eastbourne, as well as in Belgium. When he returned to Hawick he lived at Ashleigh in East Stewart Place. Well-known as an athlete, he excelled at swimming, played three-quarter (wing) for Hawick R.F.C. and also played for the Teviotdale (mixed) hockey team. By some lucky chance he ended up playing for Scotland (with the home nations having separate hockey teams) in the 1908 London Olympics. The story goes that he was spotted on the platform by the other members of the team when their train passed through Hawick and convinced by a sporting friend, Dr. Norman Stevenson, to join the team. How much truth there is in this version is unknown (since a team sheet published the week before the game shows his name), but it certainly makes for a dramatic story! He played in 2 games, scoring the first ever Olympic goal in hockey (against Germany, which is ironic, given the events of a few years later). The official match report reads 'At the beginning of the game Scotland attacked, and from a pass by Stevenson, Laing quickly scored the first goal'. That first game took place at Shepherd's Bush stadium, months after the rest of the Games had finished. In the second game they were defeated by England. The team refused to play

Wales for the 3rd place play-off (all in the same day!), and he apparently returned to Hawick on the overnight train. However, he never again represented Scotland at hockey. He went into partnership with his father in 1908, their hosiery business being Drummond & Laings, Wilton Path. This was later taken over by Innes-Henderson's, with whom he remained until enlisting in the War effort. In 1915 he joined the 28th Battalion of the London Regiment, the 'Artists' Rifles', and was then gazetted into the Coldstream Guards. He was awarded the Military Cross at the Somme in 1916. But he was killed by machine gun fire when his unit were taking Gouzeacourt. Another tragic casualty of WWI, he is buried in Metz-en-Couture cemetery in France. In 2008, to commemorate the Olympic goal centenary, the Archaeological Society commissioned Hamish Smith to make a trophy to be competed for annually by girls versus boys teams at the High School. Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate. His 1672 will is in the National Archives (but he appears to have died significantly later). He was related to the Laing family who were later Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch and owned land at the Flex, Burnfoot-on-Ale and elsewhere. He was a Bailie during the 1660s and 70s. He could be the James recorded as one of the owners of West Mains in 1663. He was Bailie in 1668 when the Council made a decree to support the breaking of illegal dykes on the Common. He may be the James who was Bailie in 1670/1, and whose brother William was farmer at Earlside. He is recorded as an ex-Bailie in a sasine of 1687 when his son Walter was witness to a sasine in Hawick. He could be the James, married to Helen Elliot, whose son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1653. James (17th C.) tenant in Earlside. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He was probably son of William, who was tenant in Earlside and transported for being a Covenanter. James (18th C.) hedger in Abbotrule, recorded in 1785. James Robert (b.1827) son of David and Janet Fiddes. He was a draper on the Howegate. In the 1851 census he was at about 2 Howegate, living with his widowed mother and his sister Jemima, as well as

George Webster and a servant. His draper's partnership with Webster is listed in Slater's 1852 directory. It appears that he moved to London, where the business expanded, become a general warehousing firm. He later became partner in Paterson, Laing and Bruce, registered in London and Melbourne. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of Robert Fiddes of London. He had a son James Robert (d.1916), and a daughter Jane Tullock Fiddes. He is probably the James Robert of 27 Earl's Court Square, London, who died in 1898. James (b.c.1847) only surviving son of Adam Laing and Agnes Hogg. He was grandson of James Hogg of 'Teribus' fame, and erected the gravestone to the memory of his parents and grandparents in Old Wilton Cemetery in 1909, replacing an older stone. He was a grocer in Hawick, being foreman in the business of Mungo Wilson on Silver Street, and later taking over. After his death the shop was acquired by Oliver and Thomas Mason Hardie. John (d.1483) from the Laings of Redhouse near Edinburgh, he held minor benefices and acted as secretary to Mary of Gueldres in the 1460s. He became Royal Treasurer from 1470 and was Clerk Register. In 1474 he was appointed as Bishop of Glasgow, thus becoming Hawick's bishop. He founded a Franciscan friary in Glasgow in 1476. He became Chancellor to James III in 1482 and was involved in the rejection of William Scheves, Archbishop of St. Andrews. His seal bore images of 3 saints, probably Kentigern, Michael and Catherine, and also the words 'S' JOHIS EPL. GLASGUENSIS'. John (16th C.) recorded as 'John Lane' on a list of tenants at Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (17th C.) piper who was on a list of 16 local men named in 1627 by the Hawick Bailie as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. His surname is written 'Leing'. John of Westerkirk (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696 when he was on the Commission of Supply for Dumfriesshire. His children included: Walter, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Selkirkshire, perhaps the Walter baptised in Westerkirk in 1694; John, Chamberlain in Liddesdale, who held lands at the Flex; Helen, who married James Grieve, tenant at

Todshawhaugh; and another daughter who married Ogilvie of Brieryyards. John (d.c.1780) son of John of Westerkirk and brother of Walter. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Liddesdale in the period 1730-66. He also acted as 'factor loco tutoris', i.e. in place of one of the young Duke's guardians for business in Teviotdale around 1756. In 1736 he rented 'Stitchelhill and Leyes' in Liddesdale from the Duke of Buccleuch. He lived at 'The Roan' and held lands at the Flex. He paid the window tax at Roan in Castleton Parish in 1748. He is recorded in 1774 writing from the Flex to his niece Meg (or Margaret) Elliot at Borthwickbrae, regarding the debts of Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He is also described as 'of Burnfoot' (probably in Ale Water); he was so recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761 and on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. The Elliots of Borthwickbrae eventually came to possess the lands of Flex and Old Melrose through this marriage to his niece. In 1777 he gained about 7 Scots acres of Hawick Common in the Division. John (18th C.) house servant at Wells in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Nassau Elliot. John (1744-1816) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. In 1781 he married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Donald (also listed as Donaldson), and she died in about 1824. They had 9 children, including: David (b.1782), manufacturer in Hawick; Agnes (b.1783); Alexander (b.1786), also a manufacturer, who married his cousin Janet Roger; Helen (b.1788); Walter (b.1790); John (b.1792); James (b.1799). The witnesses in 1790 were masons Walter and David (probably his brother and father) and in 1792 were wright William Roger (who also married a Donald) and mason David (probably his father). An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1798. He may be the John from Hawick recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. He may be the John who was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He conveyed all his property to his eldest son David, with the condition that he should pay £100 in rentals to his third son Walter a year after his death, or alternatively to give Walter half of the property of his 'opposite to the West Pant-Well of Hawick'; because David ended up liable for his debts, but the other children renounced their claims, but still expected a share of money from this arrangement, it led to a dispute between the 2 brothers in court in 1829. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1799 his apprentice Thomas

Thomson was on the ballot in Hawick for the Militia. He was a mason from Hawick who worked on Stobs Castle around 1800 and who helped compile a 'New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick' in 1814. This may be the same mason who died at Doveshaughbraehead in 1824, aged 57 and whose wife Isabella Hunter died in Hawick in 1841, aged 69; this family are buried in Bedrule churchyard. He may be the Hawick mason whose unnamed child died in 1798. He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason David. John (1812–76) hosiery manufacturer of the mid-19th century. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson. He was partner along with his father in Dicksons & Laings from an early age. But after his father's death he went into business for himself at 8 and 9 Slitrig Crescent, the firm being named John Laing & Sons; it survived until 2006. He is listed as a merchant in Hawick among heads of households in Wilton Parish for 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was living at 18 Buccleuch Street and listed as a manufacturer of woollen hosiery, employing 28 men and 14 women. He was the first to introduce power frames into Hawick in 1858, and was also an early promoter of the use of merino wool. He was the first President of the Hawick Bowling Club. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Mary, 7th daughter of Thomas Anderson of Kirkcudbright, and she died in 1892, aged 68. Their children were: Alexander and Mary Marion (buried in Menton Cemetery, France), who did not reach adulthood; John Hugh Alexander, a doctor in Edinburgh; Janetta McNaught; Thomas Anderson, manufacturer; Patrick Anderson (b.1853), also manufacturer; and Samuel James Anderson (b.1861). He died at Slitrig House. A portrait of him exists. John (b.1814) son of David and Janet Fiddes, he worked as a draper and later was a hosier and coal merchant. He was cousin of John, the hosiery manufacturer. His draper's firm is recorded on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He lived at about 55 High Street in 1841 and 49 High Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet, and their children included James, Ellen, David and William. John (b.1817/8) from Bedrule, son of John, he was a boot-maker in Hawick. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the High Street. In 1851 he was at about 29 High Street. In 1861 he is recorded at 10 High Street, and employed 8 men. John Turnbull (1854–1913) local manufacturer, son of Walter and Euphemia Turnbull. He was educated in the school where J.A.H. Murray was teacher and then at Branham College in Yorkshire and in Europe. He became a partner in the family firm in about 1875. He was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He was a staunch Liberal in politics, serving as President of the Hawick Liberal Club. He was prominent in local politics in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and lived at Linden Park. He was also on the original committee of Hawick Bowling Club, and served as President in the 1860s. He was also a strong supporter of local science and technical classes and was a Director of the Hawick Building and Investment Company. He married Anna Drummond (1855–1931), 2nd daughter of Dr. George Thomson. Their sons were Walter, George, Ivan and Maurice Wyville. For several years the family held an annual New Year's day mixed hockey match against the Grieves of Branhholme Park. John A. (20th C.) Engineering Director at Pesco's 1920–61. Kenneth Joseph Price (b.1890) son of manufacturer Patrick. He married his cousin Florence Laing. He rode motorbikes in WWI until he learned to fly, becoming a pilot with the RAF in 1918, where he is credited as an ace with 5 victories. He is said to have been the first person to fly over Hawick. He was wounded in a motorcycle accident while on leave in 1918. He later worked as an engineer with John Melrose & Sons and lived well into his 90s. Marjory (17th C.) said to have thrown stones at dragoons at a conventicle held on Ruberslaw and then taken to Edinburgh Castle. This is based on a story told by Andrew Haddon. She may have been from Earlside, like William, a Covenanter fugitive. However, it is unclear if she ever existed and may be a fiction based on a name given in a poem about the Killing Times by the Ettrick Shepherd. Marjory (17th C.) grandmother of Andrew Haddon of Honeyburn. She was said to have been named after an ancestor from Earlside who threw stones at dragoons at a conventicle. Maurice (1885–1955) son of John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was younger brother of Walter, George and Ivan. He was a successful district hockey player and later South selector. He served with the Royal Field Artillery in WWI and became Captain. He married Sheila Brown of Galashiels (unrelated to the other Browns who had married into this family). They had one son (who worked at the Cape Observatory) and several daughters. Norman Hugh Anderson (b.1888) son of manufacturer

Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price, i.e. one of the 'Balcary Laings'. He was a farmer at Cleuchhead. In 1916 he married Sarah Grey Gunn 'Cissy' (1894–1988), 2nd surviving daughter of Dr. George Gunn Bannerman. Their children included: George; Patrick, who received the Military Cross in WWII and set up the haulage firm P.A. Laing; and Drummond, who moved to Cape Town, South Africa. Patrick Anderson (1853–1921) son of John and Mary Anderson. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Thomas. He lived at Balcary. He married Florence 'Fanny' Elizabeth (who was born in Chicago), daughter of Joseph Price of Clapham Common. She was sister of Mrs. Robert Pringle of Wood Norton, and died in 1917, aged 54. Their children were Patrick Lindsay Price (Major with the K.O.S.B. in WWI), Norman Hugh Anderson (farmer at Cleuchhead), Kenneth Joseph Price (engineer with Melrose's) and Margaret Frances Lindsay (married Isaac Grey Wallis). This branch of the family were known as the 'Balcary Laings'. Patrick Lindsay Price (b.1886) eldest son of Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price. He was a Major in the K.O.S.B. and was awarded the Military Cross in WWI. He commanded 'C' Company in the Battle of Romani in 1916, securing the Suez Canal, and receiving the Order of the Nile from the Sultan of Egypt. Patrick Anderson (20th C.) from the Balcary Laings, son of Norman. He served with the 51st Highland Division at Dunkirk and later transferred to the Reconnaissance Corps. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1945. He set up the haulage firm P.A. Laing. in 1955. He married Shirley, daughter of Hawick lawyer Guy H. Armstrong. There children were Hugh and Lucinda Steen. Robert (16th/17th C.) merchant of Hawick, probably a tanner. He gave evidence in the 1612 case of the death of Jock Elliot. He was 'in the Kirkyaird of Hawick priking some skynnis' (showing that at that time the churchyard was used for many purposes) and found Elliot 'hingand in his awin belt; quilk belt he cuttit, and thair being lyfe in the defunct, was brocht out, bot shortlie thairefter he deceist'. He may have been the same Robert who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. Robert (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Bennet in Hawick in 1656. Robert (18th C.) footman at Minto House in 1788, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Thomas Anderson (1851–1920) son of manufacturer John and grandson of Alexander. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother

Patrick. He was Honorary Treasurer of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He lived at Netherwood and Langlee. He married Agnes Eliza Douglas Brown from Kirkcudbrightshire (who died in 1933); she was sister of Esther Brown who married M.P. Alexander Laing Brown. They had a family of 11, including a daughter (who married Charles W. Grieve of Braxholme Park), Donald McLeod (who married his cousin, Margery Haddon), and Florence (who married her cousin Kenneth). This branch were known as the 'Netherwud Laings'. Walter (17th C.) son of Bailie James. He was witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1687. Probably the same Walter witnessed a baptism in 1687. He is likely to be the merchant and listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is possible he was a witness to a baptism for Andrew Angus in Hawick Parish in 1678. Walter (1649/50–1736) son of John of Westerkirk. He was a 'writer' in Edinburgh. From 1717 he was Chamberlain to Francis, Duke of Buccleuch, covering Eckford, Lempitlaw and Langton (as well as Ettrick Forest for part of this period) and being based at Newark. He served in this function until 1734, being succeeded by William, probably his son. In 1716 he is 'clerk to ye Duchess of Buccleugh' and 'Tenent of Park' when his 'servitor' Walter Little married Janet Scoon. He married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Alexander Johnston of Elshiesheills about 1713. His sons were probably William, Gilbert and James. His eldest daughter Violet married David Scott, tenant at Carterhaugh and his 2nd daughter Marion married John Laing, farmer at Westerkirk (and surely a relative) about 1750. Another daughter, Margaret, married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae (and through her the Elliots of Borthwickbrae would come into possession of her uncle John's lands of Flex, Old Melrose, etc.). He died at Todshawhaugh, home of his brother-in-law James Grieve. Walter (b.1680) son of William and Jane Thorbrand. He is probably the Walter who married Janet Bruntfield, and had children Elspeth (b.1703) and David (b.1710). Only his wife witnessed the baptisms, since he was forbidden from attending because of the scandal he caused by getting his niece (Agnes Scott) pregnant, having the child over the Border and then pressuring her and others to swear that there was no bastard child. The witnesses in 1703 were weaver Robert Tinlin and glover James Burn. Walter (d.bef. 1764) probably son of Walter, he was also sometimes Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch at Newark. It is said that he was given the position after risking his life to save some papers for the Scotts of Buccleuch at Dalkeith House. His eldest daughter Margaret married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1764, and she later inherited the lands of Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot. He had a son Gilbert who became a merchant in St. Petersburg and another son, William of Meikledale. James may have been another son. His relationship with John (also a Chamberlain to Buccleuch) is unclear. Walter (d.1798) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. He is probably the son of David and Helen Wallace born in Hawick in 1733. He is probably the mason Walter who (along with mason David, likely his father) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his brother). Walter (b.c.1790) farmer at Denholmhill. He is probably also the builder in Denholm, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He acquired Denholmhill farm in about 1818 and expanded the quarrying, which had been started by the Fergusons and the Littles. He opened up the eastern (white) quarry and the western (red) one. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was still alive in 1851, but dead before 1861. His son Walter took over the farm and quarry. Walter (b.1819/9) son of Walter. He took over the farm of Denholmhill and the quarry there. In 1861 he was farming 520 acres, employing 26 people on the farm, and also tenant of the quarries, employing 37 masons and 26 labourers. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, Christina, Thomas, Adam and Helen. Walter (1820–1895) manufacturer of Laing & Irvine's and later of Dicksons & Laings. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson and brother of John. He carried on with the firm after his brother John split off to form John Laing & Sons. He lived at Springbank and later Linden Park. He was a member of the new Town Council who argued for continued Council involvement in the Common Riding in the 1860s. He was also one of the founders of the Working Men's Building & Investment Co., and its Chairman from 1890–95. In addition he was on the School Board and became Chairman of the Science and Technical School in Hawick, as well as the School of Art. A Liberal in politics, he was President of the Hawick Advanced Liberal Association. He married Euphemia Turnbull, who died in 1895. They had a large family, but all except John Turnbull died before reaching adulthood. Walter (1882–1959) son of John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was brother of Maurice, Ivan and George. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and served in the Coldstream Guards. There is a letter from him to his brother Maurice, bringing the news of Ivan's death on the front. He married Joan Gotto from Belfast and had 2 children. He died in County Down. William (17th C.) tenant in Earlside, brother of James, who was Bailie in Hawick. He was tried in 1678 for being a Covenanter supporter, the accusations including that he was 'present at divers house and field conventicles, kept at Lilsliemuir, Hassendeanmuir, Blackriddelhill, or about or near the said places, where he has heard John Welsh, Samuel Arnot, Mr. G. Semple, Mr. Riddell, Mr. Robert Traill, Mr. George Johnstone, Mr. John Blackater, Mr. David Williamson, and divers other declared rebels', as well as being a local ringleader and resetting rebels. Refusing to give up any names, to pay the 500 mark fine or accept Episcopalianism, he was sentenced to be deported to the slavery plantations in Virginia. After 3 months in jail, he was sent on a prison ship from Leith to Gravesend. However, the person in charge of them could not find Ralph Williamson, who was to keep them in prison until the transport ship was available and so they were set free in London. Like many of the others (including Alexander Peden), he probably made it back to Scotland. He is listed among those declared fugitives for refusing to take 'the Test' in 1684; he was then recorded being 'in Hawick'. Their crime was 'rebellion and reset of rebels', meaning religious non-conformity following the re-introduction of Episcopalianism. On this second occasion he did not escape, but was among 32 men who were transported to Carolina, subject to great hardship on the journey and then after arrival, so that only 6 returned after the Revolution. Local tradition says that he died on the journey and his body was thrown overboard. He may be the William 'Lyng' whose widow was recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls, listed after the house of Earlside in 1694. He might be the William on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Hamilton in Hawick in 1673 and others for William Veitch (or Welsh) in 1675 and 1683. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Scott (who probably lived in the Borthwick valley) in 1676, as well as for Rev. Patrick Cunningham in 1680. It is said that he had a brother James in Hawick. The James who was

tenant in Earlside in 1683 may have been his son. Bailie William (17th/18th C.) Hawick Councilor recorded in 1683 and 1684, who was Bailie in 1685 and in 1697. He may be the William in Hawick (married, aged 28) who gave evidence in 1681 in the trial of Covenanters who had attacked Drumlanrig's Tower. In 1685, along with Walter Scott, he had permission from the Council to be reimbursed for the costs of building the 'Steeple Loft' in St. Mary's, suggesting that he was Bailie around the time of construction. In 1688 and 1700 he witnessed baptisms for merchant John Scott 'Whiteyetts' and he witnessed another for Robert Hogg in Weensland in 1688. He was 'late baylyea' on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the 'Wm Laing laite Bailyea' who paid tax for 4 hearths on the west-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694; this suggests that he lived in a large house. He is probably the William who, along with 'Mr James' witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1700 for glover James Scott. He was 'balyie' when he witnessed a baptism in 1686 for schoolmaster John Purdom and 'late Bailie' in 1700 when witnessing a baptism for the same man. He also witnessed a baptism for merchant John Forman in 1707, for shoemaker John Scott in 1708, for wigmaker John Scott, for glover James Scott and for tailor John Scott in 1709, for smith Thomas Huntly in 1714, for Henry Paterson in 1716, and for miller Robert Elliot and for William Ogilvie (who married his daughter) in 1718 and 1720. He could be the same ex-Bailie who in 1721 gave the excuse that he could not mount the 'pillar' of repentance in the Kirk because he was 'valetudinarie and troubled with an uneasiness in his hough and feet'; the Session allowed him instead to pay a fine and be rebuked in his usual pew; it is unclear what his transgression was. In 1716, 1718 and 1721 he witnessed baptisms for John Ekron. He was probably the William born in Hawick in 1652/3, son of James and Helen Elliot. This William married Jane Thorbrand (probably daughter of Bailie James), and their children were: James (b.1676); Jane (b.1678); Walter (b.1680), who married Jane Bruntfield; David (b.1681); Margaret (b.1684), who married James Gledstains; Helen (b.1686), married a Grieve; Anna (b.1688), who married John Watson, Clerk to the Regality and then John Scott in 1724; John (b.1689); and Martha (b.c.1690), who married William Ogilvie. The witnesses in 1676 were William Elliott of Stobs and Thomas Scott of Whitslade, suggesting that he had some standing in the Town at that time. The witnesses in 1680 were William Scott, glover and Mr John Purdom and in 1688 were James Scott and Robert Wright. In 1720 he was 'late bailie of Hawick' when he and Isobel Tait were recorded as 'Fornicators' when their daughter Mary was baptised. He is probably the William 'Lang' mentioned in 1735 when the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate, which was to the west of his, which by then belonged to James Scott. William (1715/6–74) Chamberlain to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He had a house on the Fore Row, referred to as 'the Chamberlain's Hoose'. He may also have been related to the William who, in the 1720s, owned a small corn farm and yard to the north (i.e. in Wilton Parish) of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed. He succeeded as Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest in 1735, taking over from Walter, probably his father; he served in this capacity until 1766. He was recorded in a Selkirk libel case in 1737. His brother was James, and he must also have been related to John, who was Chamberlain for Liddesdale (probably his uncle). Gilbert was probably another brother. Hudshouse (in Castleton Parish) was rented to him and his brother by the Buccleuch estates in 1742. In 1750 he purchased the lands of Meikledale from William Scott. He left these lands to his nephew, William Elliot Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) tenant of Sinton Mains. In 1813 he brought a case against John Smith, carter in Selkirk, claiming that Smith had taken his cart and harness when they were with an innkeeper in Edinburgh (also spelled 'Lainge', 'Layng', 'Laynge' and 'Leing' in earlier documents).

Laing an Irvine's (lāng-an-ir-vinz) n. wholesale tweed merchants of the 19th century, with their main factory built in 1856 at the corner of Commercial Road and Bath Street. They were effectively an offshoot of Dicksons & Laings, being tweed manufacturers and later tweed merchants. For a while they operated out of Stonefield Mill. They also had a mill in Peebles. At the 1867 Paris Exposition the firm gained a bronze medal as a manufacturer of cloth. They went bankrupt in 1868, and the building later had many uses. They also traded at 26 High Street, which was sometimes called 'Irvine's Close'. The partners were Alexander ('Allie') Laing and William Irvine. The company partially reformed as Irvine, Grierson & Stevenson. There were also later firms of Laing, Michie & Graham and Laing & Gawn, which merged into Currie, Lee & Gawn.

Laing Terrace (lāng-te-ris) n. short street off Dovemount Place, built in 1872, and named after the Laings of Dicksons & Laings. It was essentially built to provide nearby housing for workers at Wilton Mills.

lains (lānz) n., pl., poet. loins – ‘For my lains ar fillet wi’ foulsume deseese, an’ ther is nae suundness in my flesch’ [HSR], ‘Let thair eyne be derkenet that thaye seena, an’ let thair lains continwallie shak’ [HSR].

laip (lāp) v., arch. to lap – ‘A dog or cat licks or lapes (= laps) milk, etc.’ [ECS], ‘... the cuill, silver Teiot, where it laipheet bye leafy Monteviot’ [ECS], ‘The dog’s laipin’ a’ the kittlin’s milk’ [GW] (also written ‘lape’).

laipie-luggit (lā-pee-lu-gee’, -gi’) adj., arch. lop-eared, having prominent or protruding ears (also ‘laipy-luggeet’ etc.; noted by E.C. Smith).

lair (lār) n., arch. a place of shelter for livestock – ‘Three lambs I hae on Crawbrae lair Will no be worth a benty-strae’ [HSR], a final resting place, burial plot v., arch. to drive livestock to an enclosure – ‘That part of the Common called the west end of the little Bailie Hill, where Mungo Armstrong used to lair the black cattle under the charge in the middle of the day’ [C&L] (from Middle English; the word exists in several local place names, e.g. Cherry Lair, Dinmont Lair, Ewelair Hill, Lairhope, Lairs, Lamblair Edge, Lamblair Hill, Lamblair Knowe, Lamblairs, Marklair and Nolt-lair).

lair (lār) n., arch. learning, education, lore – ‘... Left him scarce ane, nor durst he cock His trusty gennet; for girt fo’k Had now found out by college lair, That God had giv’n them ilka hare’ [JR], ‘As little can lair make a weak mind produce strong thoughts’ [JoHa], ‘Yet though I canna dive into the deeps, Not ’natomise the joints o’ classic lair ...’ [JoHa], ‘I like to encourage lair, my lads, An’, if the morrow’s cleir’ [WiSp], ‘... an’ yow that has schule lair an’ awquant wi’ sae muckle new licht o’ things they hae fund oot noo-a-days aboot the sterns an’ sae an’ sae’ [BCM1880] (also lear).

laird (lārd) n. a landowner, landed proprietor, nobleman, lord – ‘For here’s the laird’s Jock, the laird’s Wat, And Hobie Noble, come to set thee free’ [CPM], ‘The King has come to see us a’, Our Highland lairds and ladies bra’ [BY], ‘I envy not the laird his wealth, the lord o’ his degree ...’ [JoHa], ‘... Wagtawse an’ the young Scrammeldykes, The laird o’ Hunter’s Ha’ [WiSp], ‘My faither was laird o’ a weel stockit mailin’ [JT], ‘Says the auld laird ‘We’ll hae nae crap This drookit year’ [WL], ‘There was no belly-crawling dedication to some laird who had promised to take a dozen copies’ [DH] (also sometimes capitalised; in Scotland the word was applied to the owner of a estate of any size and hence is closer to the English ‘squire’ than ‘lord’).

Laird (lārd) n. nickname of James Scott, the first recorded Cornet. Thomas and Robert Scott are both recorded in 1693/4 with the same nickname, suggesting perhaps that they were all related, as well as an earlier James recorded in 1676 and a contemporary Walter in 1707. John Chisholme also had this same nickname in 1712. There are other similar nicknames, e.g. ‘the Blue Laird’, ‘the Black Laird’, ‘the Duddie Laird’ and ‘the Muckle Laird’. Many of these may have been Hilliesland ‘Lairds’, i.e. local men who kept fields up beyond the Wellogate, or elsewhere around Hawick. When a landowner had a grown son they would often be the ‘Auld Laird’ and ‘Young Laird’. In earlier centuries it was common for the sons of a major landowner to be known as ‘the Laird’s Wat’, ‘the Laird’s Jock’, etc.

the Laird (thu-lārd) n. nickname of the 18th and early 19th centuries, commonly given to men with some property, e.g. William Laidlaw, even small fields, e.g. the Hilliesland Lairds. It may also be that the name was used jocularly or ironically. A person called ‘John ye Laird’ was one of the poor of the Parish who is recorded receiving some of the collection in 1711 and ‘Wat the Laird’ was recorded around 1800.

Laird’s Hill (lārdz-hil) n. hill in the upper Borthwick valley, just north-east of Old Howpasley, reaching a height of 343 m.

lairdship (lārd-ship) n. state of being a laird, territory and rights of a laird – ‘... and the said lardschip of Coklaw to cum to the airis famail of the said James ...’ [SB1519].

Laird’s Knowe (lārdz-now) n. small hill on Craik Moor, just to the north of the old Roman road. The stream to the north-east is Laird’s Cleuch Sike. It is unclear which Laird gave his name to these features.

the Laird’s Wat (thu-lārdz-waw) n. popular name for Walter Scott of Goldielands – ‘... And the laird Watt, that worthy man, Brought in his surname, weil be’t seen’ [CPM].

lairge (lārj) adj. large – ‘... aw just went rum-maging aboot, an’ then aw saw a lairge fire, an’ made ma way towards it’ [JHH].

lairge (lārj) adv., arch. boastfully (this meaning peculiar to Roxburghshire), adj., arch. boastful, bombastic, copious, full – ‘...and obligt that the sd. persones shall give satisfacione to ye kirke as orthodox and largie’ [BR1689].

lairgeness (lārj) n. largeness, arch. generosity, largesse – ‘The discriptiōvne of Valter Scot of Govdilandis his qvalities. ... Heir lyis bvreit lairgenes & lavtie ...’ [MI1596]. the side road from Teviothead at Bowanhill. The Lairhope Burn passes here

lairger (lār-jur) adj. larger – ‘Weel, naither tae haud not tae bin’ was the wife! She donned her best bonnet, an’ lairger than life ...’ [BM1900].

Lairhope (lār-hōp, lā-rup) n. former farm above Falnash on the Lairhope Burn, with a small loch nearby. The track here used to be (before about the mid-18th century) part of an alternative road from the south towards Hawick, crossing over to the upper Borthwick valley via Old Howpasley. The main lands were originally ‘Lairs’, with the ‘hope’ being attached, and later the base name being lost. It may be the ‘laris’ where Robert Turnbull was recorded in 1493 and ‘Robertus Scot in Laris’ is recorded in 1501. It seems likely to be the ‘towne callid Ladduppe in Tyvidaill, of the Larde of Howpasleis callid Scot’ which was burned by a band of Armstrongs in 1543/4. Matthew Little was tenant there in 1576. Hob Armstrong was there in 1586/7. Patrick Nichol was there in 1618 and Andrew Armstrong in 1623. It was valued in 1627, paying ‘50 lb., vicarage 10 lb.’, listed along with Chisholme and Parkhill. Walter Scott of Newton was owner in 1678, when it was valued at £266 13s 4d. It is listed along with ‘Lares’ in the list for the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. Janet Grieve was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. James Hislop was there in 1698. James Nichol was tenant there in 1705 and John Nichol was herd in 1711. The farm was purchased by the Buccleuch estates from the trustees of Elliot of Fenwick around 1756, when it was referred to as the ‘5 merkland of old extent of Lairs alias Lairhope’. James Renwick was there in 1786. In 1788 and 1811 it is ‘Larehope’ when valued at £266 13s 4d as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. John Anderson was shepherd there in the mid-19th century, George Rutherford in 1841 and Walter Elliot in 1851 and 1861. On the south-east slope of Lairhope Braes are the foundations of several buildings and enclosures of unknown age, probably a township by the side of the former main road (it is probably the ‘Larishop’ of 1500, and is ‘Lairhowp’ in 1576, ‘Lairhoip’ in 1618 and 1623, ‘Lareshope’ in 1686, ‘Larehop’ in 1698 and ‘Larehope’ in 1711; it is marked ‘Lairhoope’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; ‘lair’ is Scots for a place where animals sheltered).

Lairhope Burn (lā-rup-burn) n. stream in the headwaters of the Teviot, joining Hazelhope Burn to become Falnash Burn. It rises around Pike Hill and is fed by smaller streams such as Ruthead Sike, Hare Grain, Lousey Hass and Crib Sike. There is a marshy area around Lairhope farm.

Lairhope Braes (lā-rup-brāz) n. hilly slope just to the west of Lairhope, in the headwaters of the Teviot. The name presumably derives from being a slope on the old road that used to pass from here to the top of the Borthwick valley via Howpasley.

lairn (lārñ) v. to learn – ‘she gien thum a bible verse ti lairn every night’, ‘A lairned eet fri ma fither’, ‘...gie me understan’in’, that I may lærn thy commandments’ [HSR], ‘‘Gin I hadna traivelled,’ the first ane said, ‘I had never lairned.’ ‘Gin I hadna my buiks,’ quo the second ane, ‘I had naething airned’’ [WL], to teach – ‘that skelpin lairned um aa right’, ‘This day Mr John Purdom gave in ane account of poor scholar’s quarter wages ... and other three in the end of the account are set down, whom he learned gratis’ [PR1712], ‘Ye glowrin’ idiot. That’ll lairn ye tae glower at me’ [JEDM], ‘...Lairnin hunders o Hawick rugby boys The basics o the game’ [IWL].

lairnt (lārñ) pp. learned – ‘...And many generations syne, Cauldrife, I should hae lairnt to care’ [DH], ‘...that’s where hei lairnt aboot the world’ [IWL], ‘And the thing that makes oo spai-cial Is oo speak in oor ain way, And now that oo hev lairnt ee, Ee can dae eet tae’ [IWL] (also written ‘lairned’).

Lairs (lārz) n. original name for lands that were later known as Lairhope. Robert Turnbull ‘in laris’ was recorded in 1493. It was owned by George Scott in 1501, with some dispute over whether it had been historically held ‘in blanch farm’ or ‘by ward and relief’, from the superior, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. Robert Scott was also recorded as tenant there in 1501. The lands of ‘Lares and Lareshope’ are listed among lands owned by Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686, so they were separate at one point (it is ‘Laris’ in 1501; see also Lairhope and Larristofts).

laishur (lā-shur) n. leisure (also formerly leasure).

lait (lāt) v., arch. to allure, entice (noted as an old Teviotdale word by J. Jamieson).

laith (lāth) adj. loath – ‘...An’, wi’ a look that seems to say, ‘I’m laith’, Trys them with fire ...’ [JoHa], ‘I’m sure I’m neither laith nor lazy, Though my auld banes be stiff and crazie’ [JoHa], ‘To hurt the creatures I’ll be laith, Gar but the owner pay the skaith’ [JR], ‘I was be laith to advise ye to aught that’s no for your weelfare’ [JTe], ‘To injure you I would be laith, So hide not thou thy horns frae me ...’ [TCh], ‘Bit ‘nae man can tether tieme nor teide,’ an, sweer-drawn an laith tho A was ...’ [ECS], ‘... Ilk feathered songster’s laith to gang Frae the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA], ‘Sae, naething laith, hei drank it slowly doon ...’ [DH], ‘Aw tell o’ the day that Scobie was laith ...’ [MB].

laithly (lāth-lee) adj., poet. loathsome, horrible – ‘Aboon the aizles’ dying gleid, The laithly kerlyn satte’ [JTe].

Laitin (lā’in) n., arch. Latin. The following gem is meant to have been recited by a Hawick pupil in the early 1800s – ‘Cæsar Galliam intravit summa diligentia omnibus copiis (Cæsar entered Gaul on the top of a diligence, his forces going in the omnibus)’.

laives (lāvz) n., pl., poet. loaves – ‘An’ they say untill him, We hae here but five laives an’ twa fishes’ [HSR] (note that the plural is usually ‘laifs’; see laif).

Lakes Haugh Park (lāks-hawch-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was listed ‘Lake’s-haugh’ in 1779, with a value of £36 9s 10d. It was among lands liferented to Robert Trotter in 1779, but disputed in 1780, with a rental of £10. It was still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Lal (lawl) n. nickname for Alex Laing.

Laldie (lawl-dee) n. a thrashing, particularly in the phrase ‘gie it laldie’, which figuratively means to give it one’s all, perform a task with full energy – ‘... several of the band we’re givin it laldie, playin away’ [IA] (common throughout Scotland).

Lamb (lawm) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish. He married Bessie Laidlaw and their twins James and Janet were baptised in Hawick in 1689. The witnesses were William Swan and Patrick Bridges. Adam (d.1808) weaver in Hawick, son of weaver John. Perhaps the same Adam married Janet Linton in Hawick in 1778 and had a daughter Isabel baptised in Hawick in 1779. He may also be the Adam who married Agnes Hogg (also from Hawick) in 1794.

Adam (1826–1913) born in Hawick, son of John and Elizabeth. He trained as a thongmaker, but then emigrated to Galt, Ontario, later moving to MacGregor, Manitoba, where he was among the first settlers. He firstly married Janet Gibb, and secondly married Mary Queen. His children included Robert E. (1862–1932). Adam (b.1832/3) born in Hawick, he was a framework knitter. In 1861 he was living at 2 Kirk Wynd. His wife was Ann, from Wilton. Agnes ‘Bonnie Aggie’ (19th/20th C.) seller of confectionary in Hawick. She is believed to have been the originator of the recipe for Hawick Balls. She may have started in Needle Street and then moved to Commercial Road, where she was in business with Jessie McVittie. She certainly had a shop at 31 Drumlanrig Square for a while. She is probably the Agnes Lamb who married Robert Young, who was a baker at 75 High Street. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Newlands. In 1684 he was listed among local men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. He is probably also the Andrew ‘servant to Andrew Ogilvie’ (of Newlands, who was associated with Branhholme) on the same list; he was thus listed twice. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Cavers itself in 1741. His children included: Ann (b.1741); and Archibald (b.1743). Benjamin (b.1766) son of James, he was a weaver in Hawick. He married Mary Weens in 1790, and she died in 1806. Their children included: James (1791–1804); Agnes (b.1797); and Benjamin (b.1802). Benjamin (b.1829/30) stockingmaker in Hawick. He was in Jedburgh Jail in 1851 and 1852. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1799 when her illegitimate child was buried in Hawick. George (17th C.) recorded being ‘about Bonjedburgh-mill’ in 1684 on a list of Covenanter fugitives. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Wester Mill in 1751. Probably the same George witnessed baptisms in 1748 for Walter Telfer in Galalaw, Robert Easton in Wiltonburn and John Martin in Clarilaw, and in 1751 for Walter Ker in Borthaugh. He married Mary Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1743 and their children included David (b.1745) and Jean (b.1751). The witnesses in 1751 were Walter and Robert Scott. George (18th C.) gardener who married Janet Laidlaw in Hawick Parish in 1759. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Mary

(b.1765); and George (b.1768). The witnesses in 1760 were John Laidlaw (probably related to his wife) and James Bridges. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Nelly Paisley and their children included: John (b.1779); George and Robert (b.1780); Margaret (b.1781); and George (again, b.1789). George (18th C.) Rector of the Grammar School James (b.1791); Agnes (b.1797); and Benjamin (b.1802). 1773–87. He may have been the first to use the title of ‘Rector’. He resigned from the position, presumably to take up another position elsewhere. It is not impossible that he could be the George Lamb described as a schoolmaster and formerly a dissenting minister, who performed ‘irregular marriages’ at Lamberton Toll near Berwick, dying in 1816, aged 68. He is recorded as ‘The Rev. Mr George Lamb’ in Hawick on the subscriber list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). George (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick who married Janet Laidlaw. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Mary (b.1765); George (b.1768); and Walter (b.1771). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were John Laidlaw and James Briggs. He is probably the George recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, and the George who died in 1802, father of cooper Walter. It is possible he is the George, son of John and Janet Scott, who was born in Wilton Parish in 1740. He may also be the gardener at Wilton Lodge listed in 1792–94, when he was working for Lord Napier. George (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1809. In 1797 in Hawick possibly the same George married Betty Turnbull from Wilton. Hugh (18th/19th C.) Hawick baker. His daughter Betty died in 1801 and his son Hugh in 1805. James (d.c.1683) tenant in ‘Whitrigg’ in 1683 when his will was recorded. This could have been Whitriggs or perhaps somewhere else in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. James (17th C.) name of 2 separate residents of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Flight in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (d.bef. 1808) weaver in Hawick. He was already deceased in 1808 when his son Adam died. James (b.1765/6) weaver who was an old man living at Slaidhills with his daughter Elizabeth in 1841 and 1851. James (b.c.1785) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about 59 High Street with his wife Elizabeth and son James. James (b.c.1795) from Teviothead, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was living at ‘Eildrige

Shank’, i.e. Eilrig Burnfoot and in 1851 he was at Dodburn. In 1861 he was an agricultural labourer, living at the farmhouse on Hawick Moor (probably St. Leonard’s). His wife was Catherine (or Christina) from Melrose. Their children included James, John, Catherine, George, Jane and Walter. James (b.1817/8) woollen framework knitter in Hawick. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at about 48 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Isabella, James, Thomas and Elizabeth. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Stirches. Janet (19th/20th C.) shopkeeper of a baby linen and fancy goods shop at 59 High Street. She can be seen outside the shop in an early photograph. The shop sign read ‘John Lamb’, presumably her father, and they must have been from the Needle Street family. She retired in 1928 and the business was sold to Miss Rutherford and later continued by Mr. Stormont. John (15th C.) tenant in Wilton who is mentioned in 1493. Jock Elliot (from Caverton) had remission for several crimes, including stealing 16 sheep from him. John (1652/3–1725) weaver in Bedrule. He is buried in the Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably the John listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694, and likely related to the William who is listed after him. He is probably the John whose children, baptised in Bedrule, were Janet (b.1690), Marion (b.1693), Helen (b.1693), Bessie (b.1694) and Helen (again, b.1697). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in ‘Gurnford’ in 1703, when his son John was baptised. This happened at the same time as the baptism of a son of John Lorraine, with the witnesses being Adam Scott and Walter Scott. He had other children George (b.1704) and John (again, b.1706). He may be the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Boonraw in 1696. He may be the John whose son William married Jean Turnbull in 1726. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1724. He is probably the John who in 1733 and 1738 witnessed baptisms for Robert Ormiston, resident at Boonraw and in 1732 witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Netherhall. He married Bessie Collins in Wilton in 1711. Her surname is also recorded as ‘Colven’ and their children included: Janet (b.1718); and John (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were John Dryden and Thomas Dodds. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism in 1729 for William, who was living at Stirches. John (18th C.) resident of

Wilton Parish. In 1729 he married Janet Scott, who was also from Wilton. Their children included: Agnes (b.1730); John (b.1732); Margaret (b.1735); Robert (b.1738); George (b.1740); Jean (b.1743); an unnamed child (b.1745); and Janet (b.1753). John (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His daughter Mary was baptised in 1759. John (d.1805) gardener on the Cross Wynd. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for William Turner and Agnes Lamb (perhaps his brother-in-law and sister). He married Janet Turner and their children included Agnes (b.1757), William (b.1760) and Andrew (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole of Wilton Congregation, in 1761 were Bailie Robert Scott, merchant, and gardener Andrew (who was surely related to his wife). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Isabel Welsh, also from Hawick. Their daughter Joan was baptised in Hawick, probably in 1789. The witnesses were Andrew Elliot and Thomas Miller. He is probably the John whose son Andrew died in Hawick in 1800. John (b.1778/9) born in Wilton, he worked as a labourer and drainer. He was a widower living at Castleside in Ashkirk Parish in 1851. John (b.c.1780) servant to William Pringle at Bedrule according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (b.c.1790) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at 'Nixons Mill', which probably meant Lynnwood Cottages. In 1851 he was on Slitrig Crescent. He married Betty Scott and their children included Andrew, James, John, Adam, Robert, Agnes and Margaret. John (b.1793) son of James and Mary. He was a needle-maker at 10 Mid Raw. He is recorded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was listed as a needle-maker in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Janet and their children included Margaret, Mary, Elizabeth ('Betsy'), Benjamin, Agnes, Isabell, Janet and John. John (b.1793/4) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Sandbed with his wife Margaret and son John. John (19th C.) married Jane Sheen in Wilton Parish in 1851. Mary (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Burnhead in at least the period 1786-88, when she was working for William Scott. Matthew (15th C.) resident of Raperlaw. In 1494/5 he was convicted of common theft 'of old and new', but his case was suspended. Miss (18th/19th C.) seller of 'rock boots' from the end of Needle Street in the 1800s. This could be the same as the person mentioned in 'Hawick Immortals' - 'Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame'. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as a 'fisher' in 1708. He married Bessie Wilson and their children included James (b.1708), with baptismal witnesses carriers John Hardie and James Aitken and Bailie James Deans. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Ormiston in Wilton Parish in 1764. Their children included: John (b.1765); Jean (b.1767); James (b.1769); Robert (b.1771); Janet (b.1772); and Robert (again, b.1781). The witnesses in 1769 were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid, in 1772 were Bailie Andrew Scott and Alexander Bunnan (Kirk Officer) and in 1781 were weaver John Briggs and Thomas Miller. Robert (b.c.1780) labourer in Westerhouses in Minto Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Probably the same Robert married Christian Noble and had a son John (b.1806) baptised in Minto. Robert (b.1784/5) born in Hawick, he was a farm worker and gardener in Robertson Parish. He was living at Hoscote Cottage in 1841 and Deanburnhaugh in 1851. By 1861 he was a gardener in Kelso. He married Christian Noble and their children included: John (b.1808/9); Betty (b.1810/1), who married a Gibson; Robert (b.1812); Margaret (b.1814); Robert (b.1816); Christian (or 'Christy', b.1819); Miney (b.1821); Agnes (b.1826); Peter (b.1832/3); and Barbara (b.1830/1). The first 2 children were baptised in Minto Parish and the next 4 in Ashkirk Parish. Robert (b.c.1832) born at Wilton Pathhead, son of John and Betsy. He trained as a woollen hosiery dresser, like his father. He emigrated to Galt, Ontario, along with his older brother Adam. They later moved to MacGregor, Manitoba, where they were among the first settlers. He farmed there and gave 2 acres of his land to establish a school, which he called Path Head School, after his birthplace. There is a cairn marking the location of the former school. Stewart (b.c.1815) Hawick stocking-maker who was found guilty of mobbing and rioting against Tory supporters at the 1837 election in Hawick, along with 3 others (and one who was found not guilty). He was sentenced to 1 year in prison. In 1841 he was a 'Woollen Slubber Journeyman' living at about 62 High Street (with Benjamin, perhaps his brother). By 1851 he was living in Selkirk. He married Margaret Murray in 1840 and their children included Helen. His second wife was Isabell Young and their children included James, Mary, Isabella and Elizabeth, with step-children Margaret and Robert. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Woodhead (probably in Ewesdale). He was one of the founders of the Wisp Club in 1826. Thomas (1851–1939) slater in Hawick. He joined the Hawick Fire Brigade in 1872, eventually becoming Captain and retiring from the service in 1922. Also a keen bowler, he won the Buccleuch Bowling Club championship 11 times. Walter (1771–1846) son of George and Janet Laidlaw. He was listed as a cooper in Hawick on the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia. He was a cooper of the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about No. 6. He married Christian, daughter of William Phillips and Mary Scott. Their children included: George (b.1809), who moved to Canada; Mary (b.1811); William (b.1812), who trained for the ministry; Janet (b.1814); and Christian (b.1817), who was the 2nd wife of James Damone Kennedy. Walter (b.1814/5) frameworker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at about 23 High Street and in 1861 was at 5 Tannage Close. His wife was Jean and their children included Eliabeth, Agnes, James and Walter. William (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Cavers Parish in March of 1546/7. It is unknown how long he held this position or if he was ever in the parish. He was the sister's son and heir of Patrick Panter, who was Abbot of Cambuskenneth and Secretary of State. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet 'Badie' and their son David was baptised in 1669. William (17th C.) recorded as 'walker in Bonjedburgh' in 1684 on a list of Covenanter fugitives. He was presumably a waulker. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Penman and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1682. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (when Hassendean was still part of it). He is recorded at Newton in 1688. He married Isobel Leyden in 1686 and their children included: William (b.1687); James (b.1688); and George (b.1689). The witnesses in 1687 were William Leyden and James Smith and in 1688 were William and James Leyden, who were surely related to his wife. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1681 and another for William Scott in Newton in 1683. He may be the William who, along with John, witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Boonraw in 1696. William (17th C.) resident at Stirches according to the 1694 Hearth Tax roll for Hassendean Parish. William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Taylor in Cavers in 1707. Children baptised in Cavers who could be his include Archibald (b.1708), William (b.1710), George (b.1713), Ann (b.1716), Thomas (b.1718) and John (b.1719). William (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Renwick in Wilton in 1711. William (b.1712), baptised in Wilton, may have been his child. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Easter Ale-moor in 1714 when his daughter Euphan was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Isabel Turnbull in 1721. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Chisholme and their children included: William (b.1719); Margaret (b.1721); Helen (b.1722); John (b.1723); and Robert (b.1725). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Boonraw in 1724 and Stirches in 1729. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1735 for William Scott, resident of Wester Burnfoot. He married Agnes Renwick in 1719 (and perhaps also proclaimed in 1718, although no wife's name is listed). Their children included: John (b.1720); Helen (b.1722); Jean (b.1724); Euphan (b.1727); John (b.1729); William (b.1731); and William (again, b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were James and John Armstrong, in 1727 included William Lorraine and in 1729 were John Lamb (surely related) and John Scott. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine (resident of Stirches) in 1729 and another for John Lorraine in 1754. He may be the William who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He could be the William 'Ballad Singer' who was already deceased in 1797 when his daughter Jean died in Hawick. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Scott. Their daughter Mary was baptised in 1730. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Isobel Culbertson. Their son James was baptised in 1736. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Bessie Scott in 1736. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of John. He was recorded living at Wester Burnfoot in 1735. In 1726 he married Jean, daughter of Robert Turnbull, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included: Jean (b.1728); Euphan (b.1734); Johanna (b.1735); and Robert (b.1739). The witnesses in 1735 were Walter Riddell and William Sanderson. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Thorburn and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1738. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Anne Sinclair and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1754. William (18th C.) married Mary Noble in Hawick in 1761. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Sarah Hume in 1763. Their unnamed child was baptised in 1766. His wife was from Minto Parish. They had an unnamed child baptised in 1766. William (18th C.) recorded in a marriage in Hawick in 1787, with no wife's name given. William (18th C.) married Helen Miller in Hawick in 1788. William (d.1815) recorded in the Hawick death register as 'Betty Ingles's Husband'. It is unclear why he would have been recorded in this way, but presumably by the time of his death his wife was more well-known in the Town than he was. The couple married in Hawick in 1791. William (18th/19th C.) tailor at Teindside Bridgend according to the Militia ballot for Cavers Parish in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included Janet (b.1799), Thomas (b.1801), Elizabeth (b.1804), Mary (b.1806) and Jemima (b.1813). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Rutherford and their son Thomas was baptised in 1816. William (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Elliot and their son William was baptised in 1837. William (18th/19th C.) married Ann Taylor in Hawick in 1848. Rev. William (1812–77) born in Hawick Parish, he was son of cooper Walter and Christian Phillips. He was educated at Edinburgh High School and University and licensed as a minister by Jedburgh Presbytery. He was preacher at Caerlenrig (Teviothead) Chapel of Ease 1843–44 and was then translated to Ednam, where he remained until his death. He married Christian Archibald MacDougall, daughter of Joseph Yair, minister of Eckford. His children were: Helen Josephine (b.1869); Walter minister of Lauder; Christian (b.1871); William (b.1874); George (b.1875); and John Yair (b.1877) (also formerly written 'Lambe').

His wife was Mary A. and they had a son James. James (b.1786/7) farmer at Clerklands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was recorded as a miller in Lilliesleaf in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1851 he was farming 575 acres and employed 14 workers.

He was already widowed and living with his son William. He may be the James who was recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1819 when his marriage to Jeam Melrose was announced in Melrose Parish. James (b.1809/10) born in Selkirk Parish, he was probably son of James. He was farmer and miller at Midlem Mill and Toft Barns in Bowden Parish. In 1851 he was farming 85 acres and employing 4 labourers. His wife was Margaret from Heriot. Their children included Isabella, Janet, Margaret, Jean, Helen and James. James (19th C.) railway guard. He married Agnes (1829–1916), daughter of William Murray. Later she kept a washhouse at 29 Wellogate Place, afterwards run by their daughter Helen. His sister-in-law (also Helen) married Andrew Lambert, possibly his brother. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Allanhaughmill in 1797. His name appears to be 'Lammert'.

lamp (lawmp) v., arch. to limp, hobble, stride,

the Lamp (thū-lawmp) n. the 1537 Charter stipulates that a lamp should be permanently burning before the High Altar of the Parish Church '... for the souls of the Barons of Hawick, founders of said lamp, and their successors'. According to the Charter it was the duty of the heirs of James Blair to provide this lamp, and they thus held some special status through paying one penny Scots each Pentecost in return for a half particate of land. Whether this lamp was part of the original foundation of St. Mary's (and hence started by the Lovels) or began with Douglas of Drumlanrig, or at some point between, is unknown. It is also unclear when this arrangement ended, but certainly the burning of the lamp would have been abolished by the Reformation. The presence of Sir James Douglas at Parliament during the ratification of the Confessions of Faith in 1560 effectively exonerated the people of Hawick from their obligation to maintain the lamp. The lamp symbol appears on the Hawick coat of arms, and similar lamps were incorporated into the War Memorial – 'The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, At matins, mass, and vesper hymn, Cast here its rays subdued and dim' [WNK].

Lampin Lizzie (lam-pin-li-zee) n. local character of the early 19th century.

the lamplighter (thū-lawmp-lī'-ur) n. official town appointment after oil lighting was installed in 1813 (60 lamps being installed in the main streets). He used a ladder and a flaming torch, lighting the oil lamps nightly from 15th November until 7th April. He was later responsible for lighting the gas lamps, introduced in 1831.

lan' (lawn') n., poet. land – 'Though I maun face storms, baith by laun' an' water ...' [JoHa], 'He turnet the se intil dry lan' ...' [HSR], '... my saul thrists efter thee as ane thristie na'' [HSR] (also written 'laun').

Lanark (law-nurk) n. town in South Lanarkshire, which has been a Royal Burgh since the early 12th century. The earliest record of a riding of the marches festival is 1570 and it still continues, focussed on 'Lanimers Day' (usually the same day as the Thursday of Hawick Common Riding) and involving a 'Lord Cornet' and 'Lanimer Queen'. Population (1991) 8,877.

Lancaster (lang-kaw-stur) n. Leslie (1912–2004) born at Houghton Ferry House on the North Tyne, he came to Hawick in 1929 with his family. There he played rugby for the P.S.A., Harlequins and Hawick teams. He worked at Lyle & Scott's and served in the R.A.F. during WWII. He then took teacher training, qualifying in 1948 and working first at Drumlanrig School. He moved to Lilliesleaf in 1952, where he was Headmaster and was Headmaster at St. Boswell's from 1971 until retirement in 1977. He was a Life Member of Hawick Angling Club, a member of the Archæological Society, involved in amateur theatre and painted in oils after retirement. He died at home at Lynnwood House.

land-end (lawnd-end) n., arch. top end of a rig, end of a furrow – '... But Robin reached the land-end first And foremost o' the boon' [JT].

Landles (lawn-dulz) n. Andrew (1819–53) originally from Northumberland, he was born in Tweedmouth, son of David and Margaret. He moved to Hawick in the early 1840s, working as a master framesmith; he was thus the progenitor of the Landles in Hawick. In 1841 he was living in Tynemouth with his wife Mary and daughter Margaret. In 1851 he was living at Teviot Square (probably 12 Sandbed), employing 4 men. He was listed as a framesmith on the Back Row in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife (actually widow) and 3 children were living at the 2nd back house of 8 Howegate in 1861. In 1839 in Hawick, he married Mary, daughter of David Affleck, who was living in Hawick, but born in Wigtownshire. It is unclear what his connection to Hawick was that would enable him to meet his wife and then move to the Town permanently. Their children included: Margaret or 'Maggie' (b.1839/40), who married a Brown, brother of Thomas Brown who married a granddaughter of Robert Burns; Maria (b.1843/4); David (b.1846/7); and Andrew (b.1853). He went out to Australia in the Gold Rush in 1853, but died there. Baillie Andrew, J.P. (1853–1940) son of Andrew. He was a Town

Councillor from 1909 and Bailie in the 1920s, as well as J.P. from 1913. He worked in the woollen industry all his life. He was involved with setting up Hawick R.F.C., and wrote a memoir of those times in the early 1920s. He was also involved with the Volunteers, the Foresters and the Home Mission. He retired from the Common Riding Committee in 1932 after 40 years of service. He married Sarah, daughter of Valentine Godfrey, and she died in 1941. He was grandfather of Wullie and great-grandfather of Ian. His children were: Andrew, Professor of Music at Eugene, Oregon; David, who died young; Thomas, who was a policeman and member of the Brethren; William, who was a hosiery worker and artist; John Chapman Gray 'Chap', who was Cornet and Provost; Jessie, who married confectioner Alexander Murray; and Mary Affleck, who married baths attendant Frederick Crozier. He and his wife are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Andrew (1877–1944) son of Bailie Andrew. He emigrated to Eugene Oregon, where he was a Professor of Music. He married Sarah Calderhead. His son Andrew was 5 when the family emigrated and died aged 95 in 1999; his ashes were returned to Hawick in 2001. Andrew 'Andra' (??–??) uncle of Ian and brother of Wullie. He was a stalwart committee man of the Archæological Society and known for his sense of humour. David (d.1832) recorded dying in Hawick, with his surname given as 'Landle'. It is unclear whether he was related to the other Hawick people of this surname. David (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Charlotte Scott and their children included Andrew (b.1871). Ian William (1952–), B.E.M., High School History teacher, and son of Wullie. Educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh University, graduating in 1974, he then trained as a teacher at Moray House, returning to Hawick as a teacher in 1975. He later became Head of the History Department, retaining the position until retirement in 2009. He was the instigator of the battlefield tours for pupils and later adults from Hawick. He is writer of the words and music for 'Auld Hawick, Ma Border Hame', 'My Teviot Valley', 'A'm Comin' Hame' and other more impromptu songs set to well known tunes (e.g. 'Safeway' and 'Teelio'). His poems include 'The Vertish Hill', 'The Man that oo Ca' Bill' and 'Doon Oor Close And Up Oor Stair'. He is frequent accompanist at Common Riding and other functions, having taken over in 'the Hut' from Adie Ingles. He has also been star of the annual

Panto and played ‘Gibbie the Gowk’ in ‘The Gutterbludes’. He is a public speaker extraordinaire, local dialect enthusiast and general all-round entertainer. He has made a large number of valuable tape recordings of elderly locals (an archive of 150 cassette tapes being digitised in 2015), and contributed to local history and culture in innumerable ways. He also has an unrivalled collection of photographic slides relating to Hawick and area. He wrote ‘Honest men and bright-eyed daughters’ (1991), ‘Mair honest men’ (1993) and ‘Son of Honest Men’ (2000) with Derek Lunn, ‘Walking in the Land of the Reivers’ (2011) with Alan Brydon, and has contributed many articles to the Archaeological Society Transactions, as well as serving in most capacities on its committee. He wrote the musical plays ‘A Reiver’s Moon’ and ‘1514: The Musical’ with Alan Brydon. He was Hawick Citizen of the Year in 2000, Common Riding Chief Guest in 2004 and has been President of the 1514 and Callants’ Clubs, as well as Hawick R.F.C. He also provides the acrostics for the Callants’ Club dinner guest. He was heavily involved in arranging the Adam Grant plaque, the James Thomson statue and the Bill McLaren bust. His ‘night cless’ ran for 40 years until 2020. He was recorded in dialect in 2004 as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project. In 2013 he was awarded the British Empire Medal for services to the community in Hawick – ‘Now as maist o ee ken ‘A few remarks’ and ‘Ian Landles’ irni words ee wad expect ti come across in the same sentence!’ [IWL]. John Chapman Gray, J.P., ‘Chap’ (1892–1980), son of Bailie Andrew and uncle of Wullie. He had his schooling at Buccleuch and Wilton. He served an apprenticeship with Barrie & Kersel and spent the rest of his life with Innes & Henderson. In WWI he served with Lothian and Border Horse. He played rugby, swam and was in the water polo team in the opening game at ‘the Baths’. He was Cornet in 1921, Councillor from 1931 for South High Street Ward and Bailie from 1935. He served as Provost 1938–40, and has been described as Hawick’s first ‘working man’ Provost. The ‘Provost Landles Spitfire Fund’ raised money for the purchase of the ‘Teribus Spitfire’ in WWII. He rode the Marches himself in 1940, and led a group each year during the rest of the war. He was the first enrolled member of the Hawick British Legion, President of the Callants’ Club and of Hawick R.F.C. He was a director on the Board of the Co-op Society, Convenor of the County Health Committee and an elder in St. Andrew’s Church. Landles Road is named after him. Thomas

(19th/20th C.) son of Bailie Andrew. He was a policeman and then worked with Urban Electric Co. in Hawick. He was a leading preacher with the Open Brethren. His son William was the local poet, father of Ian. William (14th C.) probably a descendant of John de Landales, who was great-grandson of Orm. He was granted the lands of Swinside and Renalston in about 1390, after they were forfeited by Robert Burrell. He was also granted a charter of lands in Oxnam. He was ‘William de Laundelis of Swynshede’ in 1390 when he witnessed the charter of John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. He also received a charter of lands in Oxnam, forfeited by John Wylie. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Katharine, who married John Lauder. William ‘Wullie’, M.B.E. (1912–98) cousin of Bill and nephew of ‘Chap’, he was born at 7 Sandbed and educated at Buccleuch and Wilton Schools. He worked in the knitwear industry, first for Turner & Rutherford and then at Glebe Mills, where he was company secretary. He later spent time working for Roberts of Selkirk and Thorburn of Walkerburn before returning to a Hawick firm in John Laing’s, and finally retiring in 1977. After retirement he wrote court reports for the Hawick News. However, it is as a writer that he is remembered, particularly as a poet, publishing over 400 pieces. Among these were ‘Oor Border Hame’ and ‘Borthwick Water’, both set to music. Many of his poems have local flavour, including ‘The Exile’s Return’, ‘A Callant’s Games’, ‘Hawick Sang’, ‘Hame Toun’, ‘The Centre o’ them a’’, ‘The Rowan Hills sae Green’ and ‘The Herd’s Psalm’. His poetry collections include ‘A Breath frae the Hills: verses Scots and English’ (1950), ‘Gooseberry Fair, and other verses, Scots and English’ (1952), ‘Penny Numbers: poems Scots and English’ (1969) and ‘Turn o’ the Year and other poems chiefly in Scots’ (1989). As ‘Quartus’ he was writer of the ‘Thought For The Week’ Christian commentary column in the Hawick News; these were collected in ‘I to the Hills’ (1979), ‘All Good Gifts Around Us’ (1982) and ‘Roving Commission’ (1992). He wrote a short book on Will H. Ogilvie in 1992. He was awarded the M.B.E. for services to Border literature in 1996. In addition he was a lay preacher, involved with the local Brethren Fellowship. He was father of Ian W. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William ‘Bill’ (1923–2016) cousin of Wullie and nephew of ‘Chap’. He was born in Langlands Bank and attended

Hawick High School. He worked as a message-boy for the Store, was then a grocer in their High Street branch and was sent as a manager to Riccarton Junction during the War. He was a largely self-taught sculptor, being mentored by Anne Redpath and attended stone-cutting night classes in Hawick given by Andrew Dodds' (who had worked on the 'Horse' statue with William Beattie). He later went to Edinburgh College of Art, winning a scholarship there, and commuting daily on the train. Training as a teacher, he taught art at the High School for 23 years, retiring in 1980. He exhibited regularly at the Royal Scottish Academy, being known particularly for his figures and has work in galleries all over the world. He sculpted the Will H. Ogilvie memorial (with a replica in Australia), the Adam Grant plaque and the James Thomson statue. There was an exhibition of his work at the Scott Gallery in 2006. He moved to Tyne and Wear in his last years. He and his wife Joyce celebrated their 70th wedding anniversary and they had two children, Eric and Linda. He was described as being a 'gentleman but also a very gentle man' (formerly also written 'Landels').

Landlesism (lawn-dul-zi-zum) n. a play on words, often involving idiosyncrasies of the Teri tongue when contrasted with standard English. Named after Ian Landles (or perhaps his uncle Andra, to whom he credits his sense of humour), for his inability to speak for more than a couple of minutes without interjecting such a phrase. 'Black secks', 'the atmosphere's elestic' and 'Airchie Oliver Society' are typical examples, while sentences like 'Hawick folk canni dae sums, oo've got a Big Haugh and a Wee Haugh' are also abundant.

Landles Road (lawn-dulz-röd) n. road between Mansfield Gardens and Mansfield Square, at one time site of a spur railway line for the Gas Works, Eastfield and Riversdale Mills and then a private road. It was taken over by the council and named after Chap Landles in 1985. However, it is not the address of any house.

He is also recorded in 1688 when his will was listed in Peebles Commissariat. He married Margaret Gledstains and their children baptised in Hawick Parish included: James (b.1682); Marion (b.1683); Margaret (b.1685); Helen (b.1686); and Jane (b.1687). The 1682 baptism was witnessed by William Douglas and John Scott 'Whiteyets'. In 1685 he witnessed a baptism (along with William Douglas) for John Scott (also written 'Lans').

land-setting (lawnd-se'-in) n., arch. the letting of land to tenants – 'The day before the arrival of the Duke of Buccleuch's commissioners to let his land at Hawick, which took place annually, and was called the 'land setting' [JJV], '...as the Laird of Whithaugh did signifie to our minister at ye landsetting' [PR1715], 'When the Duchess of Monmouth attended the land-sitting, at Hawick, she was remarkably fond of conversing with Hobby ...' [WSB]. This was a great annual occasion in Hawick, with the Duke's Commissioners and country gentlemen gathering in the town, with a fatted ox slaughtered for the dinner, as described in Somerville's 'Life and Times' (also sometimes 'land-sitting').

the Land Tax (thu-lawnd-tawks) n. tax imposed on lands according to their valuation. The rolls were compiled by the Commissioners of Supply in each county and form a valuable record of ownership of land, as well as details of individuals, boundaries, etc. For Roxburghshire (although not all parishes in all cases) there are specific records for 1649, 1663, 1678, 1771, 1803 and 1813 and similar records in Selkirkshire. In most cases the information is accurate a few years earlier (e.g. in 1811 for the 1813 Roll).

laneness (lān-nis) n., poet. loneliness – '... An' a' past on, till a laneness play'd, Wi' a stoond, thro' the heart o' the tocherless maid' [JoHa].

Lanercost Priory (law-nur-kost-prI-u-ree) n. priory in Cumberland, near Brampton, on the Irthing River, established about 1166. Edward I used it as a base for attacking Scotland, and the Scots devastated it in 1296. The Robert the Bruce's men held it in 1312, while David II's army pillaged it in 1346. Its final ruin was at the Reformation, when it became the property of Thomas, Lord Dacre. A section was converted into private dwellings by the Dacre family, now called Dacre Hall, with part housing their family vaults, and some restoted later as the parish church.

lanesome (lān-sum) adj., poet. lonesome – 'Gae seek her in her laneous bower, Gae seek the Fairy Linn ...' [JTe], 'For merridge bliss was no' his fate, He still could gang his laneous gait' [WFC], 'When it's laneous that I wad be, Frae the toun and its thrangity free ...' [WL] (also lanelisome).

lang (lawng) adj. long, extensive – 'enjoy yer life, ee're a lang time deid!', 'I'll say a grace as lang's a tether ...' Lang (lawng) n. formerly a common nickname for someone who was tall.

Lang (lawng) n. Andrew (1712–53) writer in Selkirk, son of John (Selkirk Deacon of Trades) and Isobel Murray (from Philiphaugh). He was recorded as the Procurator Fiscal in Selkirk in 1751. In 1741 he married Henrietta Chisholme, widow of Robert Mercer; she was daughter of William Chisholme of Broadlee and Ann Rutherford (daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth). Their children included: Isobel (b.1742); Henrietta (b.1743); John (b.1744); and Katherine (b.1752). He drowned in the Ettrick and left a son John and 4 daughters. In 1761 his widow had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk, on behalf of herself and her son John; she had several other discharges in the years until 1782. Andrew (1783–1842) son of John, who was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire. He was also Sheriff Clerk and served under Sir Walter Scott. His son John was also Sheriff-Clerk and his grandson was the author, also Andrew. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Several letters relating to his legal work are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in the period 1825–29. In 1809 he married Margaret Suter (1787–1874) who was from Ross-shire. Their children included: Elizabeth (1811–40); John (1812–69); Jean (1814–45); Andrew (b.1817); Gideon Scott (1819–80) a pastoralist and writer in Australia; Mary (1820–1904); Margaret Suter (1821–1875); William (b.1823); Mark Pringle (1824–25); Henrietta (1828–1901); and Diana Scott (1829–98). Andrew (1844–1912) author, born at Viewfield in Selkirk. His parents were John, who was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire and Jane Plenderleath Sellar. He was descended from a family of trades deacons in Selkirk, and he also had Chisholmes of that Ilk and Murrays of Philiphaugh among his ancestors. He was educated in Edinburgh, St. Andrews, Glasgow and Oxford, and lived most of his life in London. He became a journalist, writing extensively for the Daily News and for Longman's Magazine. He wrote such a varied selection of things that many people of the time believed he was a pseudonym for a whole group of writers! His collections of fairy tales and writings on angling are still widely read, but he was also a poet and essayist. For works of local interest, he edited Scott's Waverley Novels, as well as his Poems and Ballads, wrote 'Sir Walter Scott and the Border Minstrelsy' (1910) and 'Highways and Byways in the Border' (1913, with his brother John). He is buried in Selkirk and the cottage hospital there was renamed the Andrew Lang unit. Janet (18th C.) laundrymaid at Minto in 1791, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. John (1812–69) son of Andrew, he was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire like his father before him. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He inherited Overwells (near Jedburgh) from his maternal uncle Gideon Scott. In 1843 he married Jane Plenderleath. His son Andrew was the famous author, while his 2nd son, Patrick Sellar, succeeded as Sheriff-Clerk. John (d.1941) cousin on Andrew the author, and brother of Florence and Margaret, who both married Robson-Scotts. He worked for the Indian Civil Service. In 1923 he purchased Cleithaugh from the Duke of Roxburghe. He also purchased Mervinslaw for the shooting. He was a member of the Roxburghshire District Council. He married Winifred Ethel Laurie (from the 'Annie Laurie' family). Their son William died when his aircraft crashed in 1941. Their 2nd son, John, was a Commander in the Royal Navy and inherited Newton. His wife remained at Cleithaugh until her death in 1958. John Robert (20th C.) 2nd son of John of Cleithaugh. He was a Commander in the Royal Navy. In 1967 he inherited Newton (near Bedrule) from his cousin Marjorie Robson-Scott. He married Jennifer Douglas and their children included Rear-Adm. John Stewart (b.1941) and Alistair Laurie (b.1943).

langam lily (lawng-um-li-lee) n., arch. the dandelion (a joking reference to Langholm).

Langbaulk (lum-bawlk, lawng-bawlk) n. farmhouse on the left hand-side of Buccleuch Road, just after the Dunk, being at the end of the 'Lumback' road. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester parts. John Henderson was farmer here in 1797, 1801 and still recorded there in 1841. John

Langbaulk Road

Halliday (of 'Bonnie Teviotdale' fame) was living there in 1847. Francis Henderson was there in the mid-20th century.

Langbaulk Road (lum-bawk-rōd) n. more recently spelled Longbaulk, but pronounced 'Lum-back', this is the right fork at the top of the Loan. It was probably developed as a proper road in about 1762, as part of the coach road to Carlisle before the 'New Road' was opened in 1815. It is now often used for country walks. Part of the original road is a grass-grown right-of-way, which leaves the metalled road and passes the Longbaulk farm steading. It was named in 1965, with new private and council houses built here between 1970 and 1980. The part officially called 'Longbaulk Road' is a dead end, with 'the Lum-back' continuing as Crumhaughhill Road. After the 'New Road' was built there was for a long time a notice that read, when coming towards Hawick, 'No road this way for the public. Trespassers will be prosecuted for evasion of the toll bar' (the name either means 'a long hard pull' or refers to a long 'baulk' or strip of land left unploughed).

Langbaulk Toll-Hoose (lum-bawk-tōl-hoos) n. former toll-house on the New Road, being now the first house on Parkdaill.

Langbits (lawng-bits) n. lands in the Barony of Cavers. In 1519/20 they were promised from James Gledstains as part of the marriage contract for his son James, and a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear where exactly these lands were, but probably near Teviothead (written 'Langbittis').

Lang Burn (lawng-burn) n. stream in the upper Slitrig valley (essentially being the upper part of the Slitrig itself) running alongside the B6399 from Shankend to Langburnshiels. It is essentially formed from the confluence of the Leap Burn, Flosch Burn and Rope Sike. The lands there may be the same as those lands recorded in a Baronial dispute of Feu-Rule in 1562 (it is probably the tributary of the Slitrig marked 'Langhburn' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Langburn (lawng-burn) n. former farm on the Long Burn. It was once separate from the modern Longburnshiels. William Telfer was her there in 1759. In 1801 the tenant was John Oliver, while William Stevenson was at Longburnshiels. William Foster was a servant there in 1801.

Langburnshiels (lawng-burn-sheelz) n. Longburnshiels, hamlet and farm near Shankend on the Newcastleton road, once site of the 'Turf

Lang Cairn

Hotel' used by railway labourers. It was contained within Hobkirk Parish and was once part of the estate of Elliot of Harwood, being listed as 'Langburne' among the Harwood farms on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. It could be the 'Lanyburne' where William Oliver was recorded in 1618. Robert Oliver was there from around the 1760s and John Elliot shepherd at about the same time. Robert Elliot was recorded there in 1785, Robert Oliver 1786–90, Alexander Lillico in 1790 and Thomas Oliver in 1791–94. There was a Robertson there in 1797 and in 1799 the residents included William Turnbull, Francis Armstrong and William Robson. The tenants were William Stevenson in the late 18th century till 1807, then James Mather from 1813, followed by Daniel Mather. The Carruthers and Elliot families were there in 1841, and the Carruthers and Scotts in 1851. Thomas Carruthers was manager of the farm there until the 1860s. The Hawick postman used to go as far as here by bicycle. Peculiar lines of stones have been noted on a nearby hill, examined by Alexander Michie and James Murray in 1863, as well as a possible hill-fort being described nearby (it is just 'Langburn' in 1790; this may be the place marked 'Shells' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it has the modern spelling by Stobie's 1770 map).

Langbyre (lawng-bīr) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, near the modern Lymiecleuch. It was included in a description of Cavers Barony in an English document c.1380. It was among lands purchased by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. The lands were included among those of Lymiecleuch when sold by William Eliott of Stobs to a group of Eliotts in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. It was among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott from his father in 1692 (it is 'les Langebyre' in c.1380; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Lang Cairn (lawng-kārn) n. Long Cairn, near the Kershope Burn, situated on Long Knowe, directly north of Scotch Kershope, now in the middle of Newcastleton Forest. It is the only known neolithic structure in Roxburghshire. It is a stone-built, barrow-like burial cairn, roughly pear-shaped, with maximum size about 53 m by 14 m, and with part of an exposed cist towards the north end. It was excavated around 1850 and investigated again in 1870 when it was said to contain 'several stone coffins of various sizes standing

Lang Cleuch (lawng-clooch) n. stream that rises on the northern side of Skelfhill and runs roughly north-eastwards to join the Skelfhill Burn.

Langcleuch (lawng-clooch) n. former farmstead marked on Blaeu's 1654 map in the upper part of the Allan valley, perhaps near Skelfhillhope. 'Langcleuchside' was listed as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in 1660. 'Longcleuchside' is shown on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands, attached to Skelfhill and Fairnyside. The cleuch itself is labelled on the map, corresponding to the modern Pen Sike. John Armstrong was farmer there in the late 18th century. It could be the 'lang-cluch' recorded in 1502 when John Winthrope, James 'aronyk' and Robert Paterson had 60 sheep stolen from there by Patrick, son of Adam Scott in Harwoodhill.

the Lang Croft (thu-lawng-kroft) n. long field that once lay north and north-west of the present Crumhaughhill Road, and on part of which Longcroft Crescent and Road were built. It is now the name for the general area of these 2 streets – 'For haddock, plaice and cod, They came frae Ramsay Road, Fri Myrselawgreen they came, Langcroft yins din the same' [IWL].

Langcroft Crescent (lawng-kroft-kre-sin') n. Longcroft Crescent, loop off Longbaulk Road, built in 1938 and named after the 'Long Croft' which once stood there.

Langcroft Road (lawng-kroft-rōd) n. Longcroft Road, street connecting Longcroft Crescent with Longbaulk Road, built in 1938 and named after the 'Long Croft'.

Langdale (lawng-dāl) n. remote area in Cumbria that was a neolithic axe factory. The polished greenstone volcanic tuff found here is the source for a large fraction of the neolithic axe-heads discovered around Britain. An example found at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot (measuring $4.5 \times 1.75 \times 0.75$ inches and now in the National Museum) came from here.

Lang Eild-rig (lawng-eeld-rig) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

langer (lawng-ur) adj., adv. longer – 'Jimmy Rae's no cuttin hair ony langer!', 'if ee stand there ony langer, ee'll take ruit!', '... and to remove from the town for ane yair and langer ...' [BR1644], 'He reas the text with haly anger, 'Till he could sit nor read nae langer' [JR], 'Where will ye get a whisky soss To moistify your middle, For now nae langer at Haremosse You'll hear auld Ruickbie's fiddle' [JR], 'Nae langer could he thole, She tore his vera soul' [JTe], 'The langer the better: sae, love, dinna greet ...' [JoHa], 'Then say nae langer nay to ane Wha weel could dee for thee, Mary' [HSR], 'Some say it is a gross abuse, Some say they'll it nae langer use ...' [TP], '... on account o hevin been there a sicht langer' [DH] (note there is no hard g in the pronunciation).

langest (lawng-ist) adj. longest – 'Aye', he said, things lest langest efter they're dune' [JHH] (note the lack of the hard g in the pronunciation).

Lang Flow (lawng-flō) n. Long Flow, area between Redfordgreen and Bleak Law, marked on Ainslie's 1773 map (see flowe).

the Lang Field (thu-lawng-feeld) n. name for the field of the Common, to the east of the road between Pilmuir and Pilmuir Rig farms.

Langflat (lawng-fla') n. former name for a farmstead bordering on the old Common, being the eastern part of Southfield farm, lying west of the road shortly before the Caa Knowe. Simon Learmonth and Alexander Kennedy were living there in 1694 when it is 'Langflatte' (mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common).

Langformacus (lawng-for-mā-kis) n. Longformacus, a village in Berwickshire, on the Dye Water, north-west of Duns, containing the 18th century Longformacus House and associated unusual dovecote (the origin is 'church meadow of Maccus' in Old Welsh).

Lang Gill (lawng-gil) n. Long Gill, stream in a narrow ravine in the hills to the west of Newcastleton, rising on Millstone Edge and running roughly south to join the Black Burn. There are a couple of ruined bothies and sheepfolds along its banks, as well as turf-banked enclosure to the south (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Lang Grain (lawng-grān) n. Long Grain, stream that joins the Whitrope Burn just south of Whitropefoot. There are grouse butts in the upper part and an old sheepfold part-way down. On the banks of the stream, just to the west of the main road are the remains of 2 shieling-huts. 'Langgrainfit' was a former farmstead on the drove road, once an important stopping point before the turnpike road (B6399) was opened. There are many other small streams with the same name, e.g. one in the headwaters of the Teviot, another at Mossypaul and a third near Altrieve in the upper Ettrick valley ('Grain' is Scots for a branch of a stream, derived from Old Norse).

Lang Grain (lawng-grān) n. stream that runs to the east to join the Black Burn near Mossypaul. It rises on Wisp Hill and forms part of the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire.

Lang Grain (lawng-grān) n. small stream that rises on Lamblair Hill and flows north-east to join Singdean Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Langgrainfit (lawng-grān-fi') n. former farmstead on the drove road by Whitropefoot, near the foot of Long Grain.

Lang Hassendean (lawng-haw-sin-deen) n. lands in the Barony of Hassendean, recorded in a charter of 1457 when they passed from William Cunningham to his son Neil, excepting the part called 'Camehill'. There was a dispute among the Cunninghams, with the land being confirmed to Elizabeth (daughter of George Cunningham of Belton) in 1483, and confirmed again in 1514. The 1514 sasine states that the lands include a tower, so it may be that 'Langhassendean' was simply the name used for the main town of Hassendean. The 'precept of sasine' of 1514 also refers to 'Eister Hassindene', so these may also be the same lands. A document of 1470 refers to the whole (half) barony as 'Lang Hassindean'.

Langhauch see Langhaugh

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. former fortified house on the north side of the Teviot valley somewhere between Teviothead and Blackcleuch. The lands were listed among those held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615. James Douglas of Drumlanrig had a 'horning' in 1607 for William Scott of Howpasley to remove from these and other lands. In 1624 the lands were purchased from the Earl of Douglas by Robert Elliot of Falnash (along with Hislop). In 1647 Archibald Elliot of Falnash was served heir to his father's 5 merk land there. They were sold back to the superior, James, Earl of Queensberry in 1650. They were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh from 1674. The lands of 'Langshaugh water' were inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690, along with part of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze and Calfshaw. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. It is 'Longhaugh-water' in 1707 when valued at £166 13s 4d (and can be identified as part of the Hawick Parish lands of Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane in 1678). It is 'Longhaugh-water' in 1788 and 'Langhaugh Water' in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when valued at £166 13s 4d. (it is 'Langhauche' in 1511, 'Langhauch' in 1572, 'Longhauch' in 1610, 'Langheuch' in 1637 and 'Langhauche' in 1647; it is marked 'Langhauch' on Gordon's c. 1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, between Netherraw and Hartsgarth. It is listed in a rental record of about 1376, valued at 10 shillings. It was held by the Elliots of Redheugh from the latter part of the 15th century to at least the early 17th. This is probably where Robert 'Elwald' was recorded as Laird there in 1494/5. Will Foster was recorded there in 1611. It was among the lands contested between the Elliots of Redheugh and the Scotts of Buccleuch in about 1612. Archibald Elliot from there was recorded in 1618. It was one of 3 farms that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. It was under a 'wadsett' until James Elliott (son of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters') paid it off in 1639. The lands were valued (along with Hartgarth) at £466 13s 4d in 1678. Christopher Irving of Binks purchased the farm (along with several others) in 1688, after Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt. There was a shepherd recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It was purchased by the Olivers of Dinlabyre about 1700 and sold in 1773 to William Sharp of Hartsgarth. Dyker William Thomson and family lived there in 1851. Before about 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. By the 18th century it appears that the farm had migrated down-hill. There is now a cottage marked there close to the road. On the eastern slopes of Thornside Hill above are 2 boundary dykes, probably defining the boundaries of the former farm, and area of about 50 hectares, including evidence of ancient field systems and rig lines. On a terrace on the hillside are the remains of a farmstead and hut (it is 'Langhalgh' around 1376, 'langhalch' in 1494/5, 'Langhauche' in 1612, 'Langhauch' in 1618, and transcribed as 'Lahauche' in about 1624; it is marked 'Langhauch' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Longhaugh' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former farm in the upper Rule valley, just north of Wauchope. The lands specifically lay to the east of Templehall and Brewlands. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1502. It is mentioned in 1767 as

‘the Twenty pound land of Wauchope and Longhaugh’ (it is ‘le langhauch’ in 1502, ‘Langheuch’ in 1567, ‘Langhawght’ in 1604, ‘Langhauch’ in 1605, ‘Langhauche’ in 1637 and ‘Langhaughe’ in 1649; marked on Gordon’s c.1590 map, Blaeu’s 1654 map and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Longhaugh’).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former name for part of the lands of Deanfoot in Minto Parish. In 1779 they were valued at £36 and part of the Minto estate, with the liferent being held by Robert Trotter of Bush. In 1780 the lands were referred as ‘Long-haugh parks’. It was still listed in 1811.

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish that were part of Dryden and Clews farms. ‘Longhaugh and Strawbrae’ is listed in 1780 among the lands whose liferent had been given to Dr. William Elliot.

Langhaugh Waas (lawng-hawch-wawz, -walz) n. former farmstead near Langhaugh on the Wauchope estate, also sometimes referred to as ‘Wauchope Waas’ and popularly known as ‘the Waas’. It consisted of small patches of land between the road and the Rule Water. There may have been a small shop there in the early 19th century. The residents in the mid-19th century were William and Rachel Tait (also written ‘Langhaughwalls’, etc.).

Langheugh Hoose (lawng-hew-hoos, -hewch-hoos) n. villa-style house off Buccleuch Road designed by J.P. Alison in 1905. Langheugh Road was originally its drive-way.

Langheugh Road (lawng-hew-rōd) n. private street off Buccleuch Road, opposite the playing fields, containing several large houses. It was developed largely in the period 1965–70, and named after several houses had already been built. Many of the residents use Buccleuch Road as their address.

Langholm (lawng-um) n. town 24 miles south of Hawick, along the A7, where the River Esk is met by the Wauchope Water and the Ewes Water. In the heart of riever country, it has been prominent in the tweed industry, with the first major factory being built in 1832; before that there was extensive employment in cotton manufacturing, and later the town was known for the production of checked cloth. Whita Hill (1163 ft) looms over the town, with the monument to Sir John Malcolm on the summit. The Battle of Arkinholm was fought nearby in 1455. It was actually 2 towns on opposite sides of the Esk, with the old town on the east side of the river being made a burgh of barony in 1610 (with other charters later that century), and the new or ‘Meikleholm’ being built on the west side of the river to a fairly regular pattern from 1778 for Henry, Duke of Buccleuch after the construction of a bridge over the Esk in 1775. There used to be an annual fight between the 2 sides at the Toonheid Brig. At the end of the 17th century the town was temporarily in the county of Roxburghshire. The library dates from 1875–78 and the Town Hall from 1811–12. There were 8 separate textile factories in the town. The ruins of Langholm Castle lie just to the north, built around 1526 and abandoned in the early 18th century. Additionally James Playfair’s Langholm Lodge was built 1786–89 as a hunting lodge for the Duke of Buccleuch. Langholm Common Riding dates back to 1759, with the first Cornet elected in 1817; it involves the carrying of traditional emblems (the ‘banna’, ‘saut herring’, thistle and floral crown, as well as the flag) through the streets and the unique ‘Crying of the Fair’ (an example proclamation being published as early as 1731), while the colours are based on those of the Derby winner. John Hyslop’s ‘Echoes from the Border Hills’ (1912, revised in 1992) contains anecdotes from Eskdale in the 19th century. The book ‘Langholm as it was’ (1912) was also written by John Hyslop, with a new edition appearing in 2002. Population 2,538 (1991) – ‘The roads atween Hawick And Langholm Are the roads atween Heaven and hell ...’ [DH], ‘...was a gaird on the mail coach afore hei took ower the Croon Inn in the Langum’ [BW1979] (it is ‘ye Langhame’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map, while ‘Cast. of Langhoome’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Langholm Castle (lawng-um-kaw-sul) n. ruined tower in Langholm, near the confluence of the Esk and Ewes Water, once home of the Armstrongs. It may have been built in the 1520s after Johnnie Armstrong of Gilnockie was granted lands in Langholm. It seemed to be taken by the forces of the Scottish Regent in 1529 (before Armstrong and many of his followers were captured at Caerlenrig). The castle was largely demolished in 1725. All that now exists are the south wall and fragments of the adjoining walls, although it clearly once extended over a much larger area. It is also known as ‘Langholm Tower’.

Langholm lily (lawng-um-li-lee) n., arch. a soubriquet for the dandelion (recorded in the Hawick News in 1954).

Langholmite (lawng-um-ī) n. person from Lanholm. Famous Langholmites include Hugh MacDiarmid, Thomas Telford and William Julius Mickle.

Langholm Street (lawŋg-um-stree) n. street in Newcastleton which is the beginning of the road over the hills to Langholm. The Parish Manse was at No. 23.

Langhope (lawŋg-up) n. former name for part of the farm at Crumhaughhill. There are several other places of the same name, including a height near the Wisp Hill, a stream that joins the Ale Water and a former property of the Scotts of Buccleuch near Melrose (it was mentioned in the court case for the division of the Common in 1767).

Langhope (lawŋg-hōp, -up) n. Longhope, farm on the Langhope Burn near Todrig, west of Ashkirk, which was once a Scott possession. It is recorded in a document from the reign of William I, relating to the Diocese of Glasgow's lands in Ashkirk Parish. They were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, split into the 'Eststeid de Langhop', 'Middillsteid' and 'Weststeid'. In the 1470s John Cranston of that Ilk had remission for the 'grassum' there. In the 1480s they were leased to Ainslies, Cranstons and John Scott of Todshawhaugh. In 1499 and 1501 they were assigned to Alexander Scott and his mother, Robert Scott of Stirches, Patrick Home and William Cranston of that Ilk. The land remained Crown property until at least 1502. Adam Ewart was recorded as tenant there in 1502. In 1510 the west steading was feued to Thomas Cranston, the middle steading to Sir William Cranston and then Alexander Scott, and the east steading to Walter Scott; the middle steading was also called 'Howford', suggesting this was the place on the Ettrick, further to the north (making it unclear whether this was the same place or another Langhope on Ettrick). Walter Scott in Synton was tenant in 1541, paying £18 yearly. The meadow there 'langhoup medo' was part of lands belonging to George Scott of Blindhaugh, which he assigned to his 3rd son William. 'Robert Scot of Langup' is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch (this probably around 1600). The Scotts of Langhope were descended from the Huntly branch, and owned the lands until about 1620. The old Scotts of Headshaw then bought the lands, which were sold (along with Headshaw) in 1629 to John of Yorkston, who passed it to his son John Scott of Langhope. 'Langupmedow' was owned by Scott of Woll in 1609. William of Langhope had a 'wadset' with Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1669, and by 1677

Walter was 'now of Langhope'. In 1688 it was sold to his son John Scott, then to Adam Scott of Bowhill in 1691. In 1691 the value was given as £18. Tax was paid for 5 hearths there in 1694. It was later owned by the Elliots of Minto (probably purchased along with Headshaw in 1696). Thomas Nivison was herd there in 1697. John Brydon was tenant there in 1784 and John Pater-son in 1785. In 1785 and 1802 it was valued at £548 'of Stock' and £33 for the teinds. Walter Todd lived there in the early 19th century and Thomas Scott in the 1860s. It is also mentioned in the ballad 'The Fray of Elibank' – 'Though Andrew o' Langhope had fa'n i' the fight, He only lay still till the battle was by, Then ventured to rise an' climb over the height, An' there he set up a lamentable cry' [ES] (the name occurs in the late 12th century; it is 'langhop' in 1502, 'Lang Hoip' in 1541 and 'Langhop' in 1661; it appears on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Langup' and is 'Longhope' by Ainslie's 1773 map).

Langhope Burn (lawŋg-hōp-burn) n. stream that joins the Ale Water above Ashkirk. It is first noted as part of the boundary of the lands of Whitslade in a charter by William I and also as 'the rivulet of Langhope' as part of the boundary of lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk – 'And now the dreary distance doth wear it like a bride, Out beyond Langhope Burn and over Essenside' [WHO] (it is 'rivulus de Longhope' about 1170; there is another stream of the same name in the headwaters of the Ettrick).

Langhope Drive (lawŋg-hōp-driv) n. Longhope Drive, part of the private housing development at the top of Crumhaughhill, built in 1979. It is named after a former croft incorporated into Crumhaughhill farm, the name meaning a piece of enclosed land, usually a hollow.

Langhope Height (lawŋg-hōp-hī) n. hill south of Teviothead, being the western ridge of Comb Hill, with the stream called the Lang Hope nearby.

Langhope Rig (lawŋg-hōp-rig) n. ridge above the Langhope Burn, between Shaws Under Loch and Akermoor Loch. Since 2015 it has been the location for a wind farm, consisting of 10 turbines. A related community fund has supported small projects in the neighbouring district.

langin (lawŋg-in) n. longing, desire – 'Lord, a' my langin' is afore thee; an' my graenin' isna hidden frae thee' [HSR], '... an' satisfieist the langin' o' ilka leivin' thing' [HSR], '... the thoughts, the langin's, an' the resolves o' an exile thrae hame' [BW1939].

langish (lawng-eesh) adj. longish, somewhat long – ‘Well, kindle the pipes chaps, and make yourselves snug, for it’s a langish yarn . . .’ [JEDM].

langit (lawng-ee’, -i’) pp., poet. longed – ‘Behald, I hae langet efter thy precepts . . .’ [HSR], ‘. . . for I langet for thy commandements’ [HSR] (see lang).

lang kail (lawng-kāl) n., arch. a form of borecole that is purplish and with less wrinkly leaves than the more common variety, soup made from this – ‘If it was het, the langkail gully Play’d smash amang’t to end the tulzie’ [JR] (also written ‘langkail’; see also kail).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for a large part of western Wilton town. The more extensive estate was the eastern half barony of Wilton, being the estate of the Langlands family since at least 1451. Robert of that Ilk’s estate in Wilton Parish was valued at £953 16s 8d in 1643 and he paid tax on £992 of land for the estate in 1663. It was still valued at £992 16s 8d in 1678. The Laird of ‘Langlandis’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. On the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls the estate is recorded as being composed of Whitfield, Mervinslaw, Brieryhill, Dean Mill, Roughheugh and Heap. The Laird of Langlands is described as ceremoniously observing the marking of his land’s boundary with Hawick in the early 1700s. This happened at the Coble Pool and at Roughheugh Mill. The land remained in the family for 300 years, being diminished over time, particularly in the 18th century, and then sold off entirely in 1783 to Thomas Elliot. By that time the main estate was valued at £278 12s 8d and consisted of the half-Barony of Wilton, as well as Calaburn and ‘sundry inclosures in Rough-heugh, sold to other persons, but not yet disjoined’. It then passed to Lord Napier around 1790, to James Anderson about 1805 and finally descended to the Pringles. It was valued at £278 12s 8d in 1811, and some enclosures in Roughheugh were later sold to Rev. John Thomson, so that the value in about 1874 was about £262. By then the remaining property was known as Wilton Lodge and was purchased by the Town in 1889 as a public park. In older records there are people recorded living at ‘Langlands’, but it is not clear how extensive an area was covered by that designation. Note that there are several other places called ‘Langlands’, e.g. in Angus, Ayrshire, Devon, Essex, Falkirk, Kirkcudbrightshire, Lanarkshire, Somerset and Yorkshire (formerly spelled ‘Langlandis’, it is ‘Langlans’ in 1748).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. Victorian villa-style house in Sunnyhill, designed by John Guthrie about 1878. It was built for manufacturer Walter Pringle, and was one of the earliest villas in the Sunnyhill area. There were new stables, alterations and additions designed by Peddie & MacKay of Edinburgh in 1880. It was formerly the home of the Pringles and then Sir Thomas Henderson. Art deco style interior alterations were made in the 1920s or 30s. It is now split into ‘East’ and ‘West’ parts and is a grade C listed building.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale. They are recorded in 1541 along with Millholm, as pertaining to the Laird of Mangerton. The precise location is unknown. It could be the same as the lands ‘called Langland, within a hedge, worth 33s. 2d.’ listed in the English part of Liddesdale in 1276 (it is ‘Langlandis’ in 1541; the existence of this name also in Liddesdale is confusing).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for land in Minto Parish. It is listed in the 1779 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) along with ‘Quarter of Whitefield’, valued at £73 3s 6d. It was among lands whose liferent was given to Rev. Robert Elliot (brother of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto) in 1779. In 1780 it is listed as part of the eastern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for lands lying within the Barony of Caverton in Roxburghshire. The name occurs as ‘Langislandis’ in the Exchequer Rolls for the 1450s and 1470s. There is presumably no direct connection with the lands in Wilton.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) listed among the men who accompanied Robert Scott, younger of Haining in an attack on Selkirk Mill in 1608. Possibly the same Adam (tenant of some lands that are not transcribed) accompanied the Scotts of Whitehaugh, Headshaw, Kirkhouses and Huntly when they forcibly took possession of the farm of Hartwoodburn in 1627. He may be the uncle of George of that Ilk recorded in 1610 when the family, along with several Scotts, petitioned for removal of a horn-ing and reduction of penalties. George acted as cautioner for him and several others, promising they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhaugh) and associates. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded in ‘Spittell’ in

1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. This is probably Ancrum Spittal, but could be Spittal-on-Rule. Adam (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Wilton in 1721. Andrew (15th C.) monk of Newbattle, who was witness to a charter of the Barony of Cranston McGill in 1477/8. In 1488 he was Abbot of Newbattle when he witnessed another document, and was Abbot until at least 1492. He may have been related to the local family. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1610 as uncle of George of that Ilk when there a request to lift the 'horning' and modify the penalty on their ancestor. This was probably his father James, who was declared a rebel in 1581. It seems likely that he was brother of the previous Laird Robert. He may be the same Andrew who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. Charles (16th C.) recorded in 1531 as 'Karolo vicario de Dryvisdall', i.e. Vicar of Dryfesdale near Lockerbie. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in the register of Cupar Abbey in 1550. George (16th/17th C.) of that Ilk, son of Robert. In about 1611 he was served heir to his father in the half lands and Barony of Wilton, including the alternating advowson of the Parish Kirk. In 1610, along with his brothers Robert and James and his uncle Andrew, as well as several Scotts, he asked for suspension of the 'horning' (possibly the one imposed on James in 1581), and reduction of the penalties imposed to find caution that they not harm the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. His cautioner in this dispute was William Scott, younger of Harden, while he himself acted as cautioner for the Scotts of Sinton, Whitehaugh and Burnfoot, as well as Robert, James and Adam Langlands, plus Roger in Hawick. He was confirmed in the half barony in 1614 and is recorded in a charter (related to Easter Heap) in 1615. In 1616 he was foreman of the jury that convicted Jock Scott 'the Suckler' guilty of multiple thefts. He may have been succeeded soon afterwards by John, who is recorded as 'of that Ilk' in 1617. However, he may be the same George who was recorded several times until 1638 (if John was not actually Baron). George (17th C.) of that Ilk. He possibly succeeded his father John (or is the same as the previous George). He is listed as Laird in 1628 among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. He signed the Confession of Faith in 1638. This document was also signed by Robert 'fier of that Ilk' (i.e. probably his son and heir), together with Andrew and Walter of Brieryhill (probably close relatives). He was probably the George who married Esther Scott, younger daughter of 'Auld Wat' of Harden (and widow of Elliot of Falnash). George (d.bef. 1681) of that Ilk. Probably son of Robert, the length of his tenure as Baron is uncertain. He is recorded as witness to a Gledstains christening in 1672. He was recorded in a deed of 1673, and is probably also the George 'fiar of that Ilk' recorded in another deed that year. The land tax was paid by the 'laird of Langlands' in 1678 (for about £990), with the name not given, suggesting perhaps he was recently deceased and formal succession not yet established. His wife was Janet Douglas, whose will exists from 1681 (when she was 'relict of George Langlands, of that Ilk'). Her 'plenishing' included 'feather beds, bolsters and cods, some of which were stuffed with worsted, blankets, sheets and table linen, servitors, board cloths, towells, spindles of worsted, and straiken yarn, round stoupit beds, kists, barrells, tubs, koags, and bickers, one and a half dozen trenchers, pair of clatts and (hand) cairds, heckles, reels, dishes and ladles, baskets and creels, posset pig, pair of raxes and ane speit, broad pleats, two chandleis, salt fat, ane pot and flaggon, ane pynt stoup, crook, girdle and pot coffer' [DMW]. George (d.1689) eldest son of John, minister of Wilton. His will exists, where he left a parcel of books and other goods, some money and bonds due to him. This is recorded at the commissariat of Peebles in 1690, where he is 'Mr. George Langlands son to Mr. John Langlands late minister at Wiltoun'. It is unclear where he might have been a minister himself (or if he was instead a schoolmaster perhaps). He is probably the 'Mr Geo: Langlands' who witnessed a baptism in Hassendean in 1687 for Adam Scott and Esther Langlands (who was his sister). In his will, he is stated to have left 'ane litle parcell off books', as well as £40 Scots of 'lying money' and £400 in cash. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included 'Rocher' (b.1724). George (d.1752) of that Ilk, son of Robert and Mary Scott, and brother of Rev. John. He was the second last Laird. He was probably the George 'of that Ilk younger' who witnessed a baptism in Wilton in 1709. He may be the George who was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh (as a surgeon) in 1715 and is further listed in Edinburgh records of 1718 and 1721. He is recorded as Laird in a disposition of 1725 and was 'preses' of Wilton Kirk Session meetings in 1741 and 1751. He paid the window tax for Langlands in 1748. There are existing papers relating to the sharing of the patronage of Wilton Kirk with the Duke of Buccleuch. He feued part of his estate, including Howlands, in the mid-18th century. He is recorded having an illegitimate child called 'Rocher' with Margaret Scott in 1724; the witnesses to the baptism were William 'Steward' and James Simpson (perhaps his servants). He married Anna Couper, and their children included: Marion (b.1725); Robert (1727–1803), who succeeded as last Laird; Margaret (1730–1819) last of the local Langlands; William (b.1732); and Isobel (b.1734). The witnesses in 1732 were his brothers William and Archibald 'uncls to the said child'. George (d.1758) died in Hawick Parish. Henry (19th C.) married Janet Wilson in Wilton in 1826. James (d.aft. 1453) of that Ilk, son of John. He succeeded to the family lands and from then the family surname was 'Langlands'. He is mentioned in charters from at least 1427, when he was witness to the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig; he is there recorded as 'Jacobum de Langlandis'. He is probably also the James who was on an 'inquest of retour' in 1424 made in Hawick for lands in Hownam (although it is unclear if he was already Laird). In 1431 he granted the lands of Heap (which had been resigned by Robert of Hepe) to Walter Scott 'Lord of Muirthoustoun' at St. Mary's Kirk. It thus appears likely that he was already Baron of Wilton at that time. In 1432 he was witness at the old manor of Cavers to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. He is recorded as 'Jacobus de Langlandis' in 1437 when he was on the panel in Jedburgh to decide on the dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains, over the lands of the East Mains of Hawick. In 1447 he was 'Jacobus Langlandis de eodem' when he witnessed the charter from Margaret Cusing (wife of Simon Routledge, Burgess of Hawick) to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was the father of the John to whom he resigned the half Barony of Wilton in 1451, reserving a free tenement for himself and after his death to his wife Mary (or 'Mariote'). He also swapped the lands of Milsington with those of Heap with Walter Scott at Wilton Kirk in 1451. And in 1453 he had an 'excambion' with Walter Scott of Kirkurd for the freehold of the lands of Wester Heap. This was signed by his son and heir John, as well as Robert of Langlands who must have been a close relative. James of Langlands (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to Richard Rutherford being served heir to his grandfather in 1499. He is recorded as 'James Langglens of that Ilk'. Probably the same man was 'of Wilton' in 1500 when listed as one of the valutors for Whithope. He was probably either the son or brother of Roger/Robert (who killed George Fairneylaw). He is also probably the 'James Langlandis of Wiltoun' listed among 24 Roxburghshire who had remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III, particularly on the field of battle at Stirling. James (d.c.1590) of that Ilk, probably son of John. He is recorded in a sasine of 1559 and in a bond between the Scotts and Kers in March 1564/5, where Walter Scott of Branhholme assumes the burden for 'James Langlandis of that Ilk and his barnis'. So they were presumably related, perhaps through his wife or mother (and the suggestion is also that he had children by then). Also in that document he is listed (along with Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) as a special 'umpire' for the feud between Ker of Cessford and Ormiston of that Ilk. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. He is mentioned numerous times in the Register of the Privy Seal. In 1569 he was one of the sureties for some Elliots, that they would enter into ward in St. Andrews. He was admitted as a messenger for Roxburgh by Sir David Lindsay, the Lyon King of Arms, in 1569 and mentioned in an inquest in Jedburgh the same year. He was entered before the Privy Council in 1571. He signed the Roxburgh band and 'made faith' to James IV and the Regent Morton in early 1572/3, with Andrew Ker of Faldonside as his surety; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He was also surety for William, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw at the same time. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573 ('with my hand at the pen'). He was also in 1573 surety for the non-appearance of William Robson, charged with the murder of William Hall of 'Wollie', and had to pay 20 merks to his daughter 'Malie' on Robson's non-appearance. He was recorded as being 'de Wiltounhill' in 1574, when he was superior of the lands of Borthaugh (held by the Scotts of Buccleuch). In 1576 he gave a pledge for George Elliot, 'the Cleg' and John Stoddart, his 'cobilman'. Also in 1576 he was a surety along with

Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Langlands of that Ilk for tenants in Lairhope and Broadlee. Also in 1576 it is mentioned in a charter for Stewart of Minto that he held half the market rights of Minto at that time. Furthermore, in 1576 he had an obligation to relieve sureties before the Privy Council. Also in 1576 he was ordered to pay 20 merks to Malie Hall for satisfaction for the murder of her father, James Hall in Woolle by Will Robson of 'Rochthewchmylne'. Along with 21 other Border lairds, he was summoned to appear at Stirling as caution for his kinsmen and retainers in 1578/9, but failed to appear. He was stated to have 'enterit the said Johnne Stodart, his cobilman, to the said lord lieutenant and Justice', but nevertheless was found liable for the other fines. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he was on a long list of Scotts and others summoned to appear before the Privy Council to answer several charges made by Elliot of Braidlie and the Armstrongs. He was denounced a rebel in 1581 (among a large number of Border Lairds accused of not presenting men to answer rieving charges), but must have been reinstated since he was among Lairds invited to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 to help quiet troubles in Teviotdale and Liddesdale. In 1581 he gave sasine to his son and heir Robert of his half Barony of Wilton, retaining lifrent for himself and after his death the payment of 20 bolls of grain annually to his wife Marion Scott for 'uphalding of hir and hir bairnes'; the precept of sasine was made in Selkirk (for unspecified reasons), the witnesses including Walter Riddell of that Ilk, George Scott of Synton, William Scott in Huntly and Walter Veitch of North Synton. The sasine was also recorded in Selkirk, with witnesses Rev. William Auchmowtie, John (his son) and 2 servants of his son Robert. In 1588 he is recorded in a contract regarding teinds with his son John (Parson of Wilton) and Walter Scott of Harden. In 1589 he was cautioner for Edward Lorraine of Harwood. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. The last record of him is in 1590 and he is probably the Laird of Langlands listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in about 1590 (although probably prepared earlier). He may be the James Langlands denounced in 1598, along with John Turnbull in Minto, James Turnbull in Hassendean and Walter Scott 'of Ordschaw' for not paying Selkirkshire taxes to the Lord of Newbattle. He married Marion Scott and was succeeded by his son Robert. Other sons included Rev. John and probably Andrew. James 'Jamie' (16th C.) recorded as tenant of lands of Kelso Abbey in 1567. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being acquitted of crimes in Jedburgh in 1611. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands. He could be the brother of George of that Ilk who was mentioned in 1610 when they petitioned to have their horning and penalties reduced. James (d.c.1695) brother of Rev. John of Wilton. In 1695 his nephew James was served as his heir. He presumably died without issue. His existence may provide a clue to the identity of the father of Rev. John of Wilton. James (17th C.) son of John, minister of Wilton and younger brother of George, from whom he inherited in 1691. He could be the James listed as resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. In 1695 he was served heir to his uncle James. James (17th/18th C.) Baron of Wilton, who is said to have ridden a black stallion named Nimrod and would turn out in his gaudy finery for a ceremonial marking of the boundaries at the Roughheugh Mill (the axle of its water wheel being on the boundary), with him making a show of defending his property. This was described by Robert Wilson, but it is unclear which period this took place in; the name seems likely to be confused with another Baron. James (18th C.) married Janet Mack in Bedrule in 1737. It is unclear how he was related to the other local Langlands. Janet nee Douglas (d.c.1683) wife of George of that Ilk. She was a widow in her will, which includes a detailed list of her possessions, giving an idea of the contents of a late 17th century mansion house. John (d.c.1363) possibly the first family member to use the name 'de Langlandis', he was probably the successor to Thomas de Longueville (or Charteris), inheriting the Peeblesshire estate in 1340. He also had lands at 'Milsallystoun' (Milsington) and 'Ochterhyud' (Outerside), along with a mill there, which were granted to his widow 'Mariote Cumyne' (i.e. Marion Comyn) by David II in 1363. It is possible he was the John, son of Margaret, who had a charter for the Barony of Wilton after it was forfeited by William Maxwell during the reign of David II. John (15th C.) of that Ilk, son of James. In 1450 he was 'Johannem de Langlandis' on the 'retour' for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick by William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was granted the (eastern) half Barony of Wilton, along with

Langlandshill (in Peeblesshire) in 1451 by James II, the lands having been resigned by his father. His mother Mary is also mentioned in this charter. This is the first definitive record of a line of Langlands Lairds that would stretch over 300 years. However, it seems clear that the family (or the closely related 'de Charteris' family) held the lands for several generations before. He probably moved the family seat from Peeblesshire to Wilton about this time. Also in 1451 he had a charter of 'excambion' with Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd (and Buccleuch), where he gave up Milsington for Heap. In 1453 he witnessed a charter of 'excambion' with Walter Scott of Kirkurd involving the freeholding of Wester Heap; Robert of Langlands was also a witness, so probably a brother or uncle. He is recorded attesting that John of St. Michael inherited his father's lands of Whitchesters in a document of 1455 notarised in St. Mary's Kirkyard. In 1455 he is also recorded as 'Lord of Heip'. He is probably the 'Johannes Langlandis' listed among the men who received a reward from the King for the capture of James Douglas of Balverny in 1463/4. And presumably the same 'John Langlandis' was on the panel in 1464/5 to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh by Archibald Douglas. It is unclear who succeeded him, but there is probably an extra generation between him and Roger, who was responsible for the death of George Fairneylaw around 1493. John (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. James of Wilton was also listed, and so they may have been related. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. He may be the same 'John of Langlandis' listed among the men chosen by William Douglas of Cavers to value the lands of Whithope in 1500; James of Wilton was also listed there. It is possible he was the 'Joh. Langlandis' who witnessed charters in Edinburgh in 1471 and 1474. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the accounts of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland as an 'Officiar' in the period 1515–1523. The business sometimes involved delivery of letters and proclamations in the Borders, suggesting that he was from the local family, perhaps even the Laird of Langlands. Another James was recorded as 'messenger' to the Queen, delivering letters relating to the complaint between Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst and the Turnbells of Bedrule and Hallrule in 1557, and also witnessing the bond of 1557 in which Turnbells and others swore to bring in William

Nixon; it seems unlikely that this is the same man, but surely is related. John (16th C.) of that Ilk, possibly son of Roger. He was witness to a sasine in 1522. In 1528 he may be the John who was listed among the supporters of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, who were summoned to appear before the King and forfeited their lands. He was made a 'nuncio' under the Lyon King of Arms in 1540. However, this is confused by Roger being recorded also in 1531/2. In 1539 he witnessed a notorial instrument for Cranstons. He may also be the same Laird of Langlands mentioned as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1552. John (16th C.) recorded in Dunfermline in 1561. It is unclear how he is related to other Langlands. John (16th C.) recorded at Ancrum Spittal in 1586/7, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (d.c.1602) son of James of that Ilk. He is first recorded in 1575 as 'Johnne Langlandis, reidare at Wiltoun' (i.e. Reader, meaning he assisted the minister, who served several parishes). He received a stipend of 20 merks and the Kirk lands left vacant by Thomas Weston. Afterwards he was appointed Rector and is recorded as Reader for the period 1574–85. During that time it appears that William Auchmowtie was minister for Wilton and several neighbouring parishes. The division of responsibilities between the 2 men is unclear, and it is also merely a guess that while Auchmowtie was a Protestant minister, Langlands had been trained as a Catholic Priest. Both he and Auchmowtie were witnesses in 1581 to the sasine where his father resigned his half Barony of Wilton to his brother Robert. In 1588 he is recorded as Parson in a contract (in which his father is mentioned as James of that Ilk), with Walter Scott of Harden involving payment of teinds. He was deposed from Wilton some time before 1590, possibly indicating that he had formerly been a Catholic. However, it is also possible that he was reinstated and served until his death, which appears to have been in 1602, when William Clerk became the new minister. It is possible that he was the minister who received the gift of about 80 acres of the Mains of Wilton, but other versions of the story (which seem more likely) say it was the 17th century minister of the same name. However, he was son of the Laird and certainly held property in his own right in Heiton and Easter Heap (and possibly elsewhere), which his son William inherited in 1612. His children included William (who was served as heir about 10 years after his death, suggesting perhaps there was an older brother or otherwise legal complciations) and Bessie (who married Adam, brother of William Scott of Burnhead). John (d.bef. 1628) of that Ilk. His name occurs in a bond of 1617, when Border Lairds renewed their promise to keep the peace. He therefore appears to have succeeded George. If he was Baron, then he was succeeded by another George. Alternatively he may have been brother (or other close relative) of George, and not actually Baron himself. Rev. John (d.bef. 1692) minister of Wilton, he was brother of the Laird of Langlands (probably Robert, but possibly George). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1634 and became one of the Masters of Edinburgh High School in 1638. He was also one of the signatories of the Confessions of Faith in Hawick in 1638. He was presented to Wilton by Francis, Earl of Buccleuch (incorrectly given as Bothwell in one account) in 1641. He is reputedly the minister who received the extensive (80 acre) lands of Wilton Glebe (or Mains). It is said that his brother granted him the extra land of Wilton Mains to increase his income to help with his family of 10 (this account was told by the last local Langlands). He baptised Walter Scott, son of Gideon of Highchesters in 1644. There is a record of 1648 involving Gideon Scott and Francis, Earl of Buccleuch over valuation of teinds. In 1649 there is a record of complaint against the Earl of Buccleuch, craving a more stable stipend, which appears to have been resolved. He also preached occasionally at Borthwick Kirk, probably the last minister to do so; he certainly asked to be freed of his responsibilities in the Borthwick, or to be given a stipend out of it, in 1642. He is listed as proprietor of Wilton in a list of communicants of the area west of Hawick in 1650 (while the Baron, Robert, is listed at Dean Mill); from that document his wife may have been Agnes Douglas, although elsewhere she is named as Anna Douglas (and it is not clear which branch of the Douglas family she was from), and the other household residents (presumably servants) were John Scott, William Douglas, Adam 'Roe' (probably Rae), Janet Scott and Janet 'Roe'. He is recorded in a sasine in 1664 having an annual rent of land at 'Hayning' (probably the Haining in Selkirk). In 1662 he was confined to his Parish for refusing to conform to Episcopacy (i.e. being a Covenanter; the younger ministers were removed from their parishes entirely), but possibly did conform, appears to have been reinstated in 1667 and is still recorded as minister in 1669. He continued as minister, but was removed some time after refusing to take the Test. There is a letter of 1683 from the Archbishop of Glasgow to the Persbytery to stop favouring him since he 'has not preached for some Sundays', and asking advice about John Stewart, who succeeded him that year; this suggests that he was probably removed because of religious dispute. In 1669 his son James became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh, and in 1692 his son Walter followed suit, by which time he was deceased. His children are listed (presumably in order) in the will of his son George. His daughters were: Anna, who married Henry Haswell in Crailing; Esther, who married Adam Scott in Galalaw; Elizabeth, who married William McKay or Mackie in Dunbar; Margaret, who married William Elphinstoun in Hartshaugh; Marion, who married Walter Leathead, portioner in Lilliesleaf; Agnes, who married Robert Elliot of Rig (i.e. Caerlenrig); and Rebecca and Jennot, who both stayed in Hawick. His sons were: George, who died in 1689; the already mentioned James; Walter, who lived in Hawick; Robert, who died between 1665 and 1668; and probably John the minister of Hawick (although this is unconfirmed, it seems extremely likely). In 1695 his son James was served as heir to his brother James. It is possible his wife was the 'Mrs Langlands' who was taxed for 3 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694. Rev. John (1633–1707) minister of Hawick. Note that he is easily confused with the earlier minister of Wilton of the same name, who was probably his father. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1662, was licensed by the Bishop of Edinburgh in 1666 and was installed in Hawick in October 1667, replacing Presbyterian Alexander Kinnear. He is still recorded as minister in 1684 when the new 'Steeple Loft' was built. He was eventually deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not Praying for William and Mary (i.e. he refused to give up Episcopalianism after the Revolution). He was also accused of praying for the late King James. He was the last Episcopalian minister of Hawick Parish, before the Revolution. He is mentioned in an Edinburgh record as marrying 'without proclamation' William Murray, younger of Haddin to Margaret Gladstains (daughter of the late Gladstains of that Ilk) in 1693. After his removal he continued to minister in Hawick to a small congregation of Episcopalians (and presumably Jacobite supporters), in a private house at the top of the Kirk Wynd. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Robert Langlands (who was surely related and perhaps his son) renting $\frac{1}{12}$ of the farm of Wiltonburn. He is mentioned in a disposition relating to the Alcorne family in 1695. He is recorded in the Gledstains bible baptising 4 of the children of Walter Gledstains in the period 1672–81. He is also said to have moved to the north of England, where his family settled near Alnwick (but this seems more likely to have been the family of one of his brothers). He married Margaret Rutherford in Jedburgh in 1671 and their children were: Robert (b.1675); John (b.1678), who became a doctor; Margaret (b.1681), who presumably died young; Alison (b.1682) who may have married Francis Scott in 1713, and was recorded being in Jedburgh Parish at that time; and Margaret (b.1687). John (b.1678) son of Hawick minister John, he became a doctor. He is mentioned in a disposition of 1708 (in the National Archives) when he assigned lands to William Ainslie of Blackhill. It is possible he was the John in Woodhouselee served as joint heir (along with Robert) of Walter, Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1694 and whose son Walter was served as his heir in 1700. He may be the John who in 1718 petitioned the Bailies of Selkirk to be recognised as the heir of his uncle Walter. John (18th C.) recorded in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for Will Turnbull in Hawick. John Charles (1800–74) direct descendant of the Langlands of Wilton. A son of the Rev. John of Wilton lived and died in Newcastle, his son Ranald was baptised in 1715 and the family continued in Northumberland, with John marrying in 1764, then his son John being baptised in 1773, marrying in 1794 and dying in 1804, and his son being John Charles. He married in 1830 and had 2 sons and 6 daughters. He was born in Newcastle and became tenant of Old Berwick in 1823. He made genealogical notes about the Langlands family. The church there contains memorial panels to several family members. Margaret (1730–1819) daughter of George of that Ilk and sister of Robert, the last Laird of Langlands. She is said (in Wilson's 'Memories of Hawick') to have given the origin of her family as Norman, and described the motto as 'Bon Esperance'. She died in Hawick, at 26 High Street in reduced circumstances, some accounts saying that this was in 1814 or 15, but the later date is correct, since it is in the Hawick Parish records. She was the last person to be buried in the family aisle in old Wilton Kirk.

Since this was below the loft inside the church itself, there was some opposition to this, but it is said that Dr. Charters stated that he would not allow her to be separated from her forefathers. Some of the seats had to be lifted to allow the grave to be dug, and the graveside was lit by candles because of the lack of natural light under the loft. She left £20 'to be distributed among the industrious of the parishes of Hawick and Wilton'. Mrs. ?? (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. She could be the wife of Rev. John or the wife of Robert of that Ilk. Peter (d.1549) Priest at Wilton Kirk. John Greenlaw replaced him after he died. He was presumably son of a former Laird of Langlands. It is probably the same Peter who in 1542 witnessed a procuratory where George Rutherford of Hundalee resigned his lands in favour of his son Nicholas Rutherford. Rachel see Rachel Scott. Richard (14th/15th C.) master of the hospital at St. Germain's. He witnessed a charter of Robert II in 1421. He was presumably related to the Langlands of that Ilk. Robert (15th C.) witness to the 1451 transfer of Heap for Milsington, between John Langlands of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Braxholme. He was probably the brother of the Laird or younger brother to the heir, James. He also witnessed the related sasine at Milsington in 1453, where he is 'Roberto de Langlandis'. Robert (15th/16th C.) of that Ilk, said to have been the Baron of Wilton who killed George Fairneylaw. However, it seems more likely that this was Roger, or that the names were used interchangeably. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness in 1512 to the charter where Roger of that Ilk granted his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was surely related to the Laird, probably brother or son. Robert (d.bef. 1610) of that Ilk, son of James. In 1580/1 his father resigned his half Barony of Wilton in his favour, reserving a liferent for himself, and with a provision to provide for his mother (Marion Scott) and her children. He is recorded as witness to a bond of March 1594/5 (along with William Scott of Allanhaugh and Allan Deans in Hawick) made by James Gledstains, pledging that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. He was still head of the family in a record of 1599. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He was succeeded by George some time before 1610. George's brothers were Robert and James, and so they were probably all his sons. Similarly, George's uncle was Adam, so this was probably his brother. His son George was served as his heir in 1611. Robert (17th C.) named by the Hawick Bailie on a list of 16 'idle and masterless men' fit for sending to the army in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found 'not fit for the wars' and dismissed. Robert (17th C.) of that Ilk. He appears to have succeeded George (probably his father) around 1640. In 1638 he signed the Confession of Faith and is recorded there as 'fier of yt. ilke'. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and was also on the Committee of War for the county in 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1648. He was the second largest landowner in Wilton Parish (after the Earl of Buccleuch) in a 1643 valuation, with a value of £953 16s 8d. He was probably also the Robert whose land in Hawick was valued at £3 in 1643. He is also recorded as a heritor of Wilton in 1649. Probably the same Robert was proprietor of Dean Mill in a list of communicants of 1650, and from that document his wife may have been Margaret 'Per' and their (adult) children George, Adam and Margaret. In any case, he was probably succeeded by George. In 1659 another son Robert is recorded becoming a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. He was fined £1,800 (about 2 full years rental as valued on his estates) in 1662 for refusing to give up Episcopacy. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He was probably the brother of John, minister of Wilton (who was similarly fined). He must have been the Robert of that Ilk recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when he paid tax on £992, with part 'pertaining to Margaret Donaldsone', who may have been his wife. Robert (17th C.) probably related to the Wilton family, although the connection is unclear. He was a tutor of a branch of the house of Cardross, being governor of the brothers of the Earl in the 1670s. In 1675 he was seized by guards under Sir Mungo Murray, but later released. He took refuge in Holland, returned after the Revolution and became a minister. Robert (17th C.) son of Robert of that Ilk. In 1659 he became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. Perhaps the same Robert 'Son of Robert of that Ilk' was recorded in a deed in 1673. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhaugh. In the 1686 ratification of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is stated that he was sometimes occupier of Whames. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could be the Robert, married to Isobel Scott, whose daughter Isobel was born in Hawick in 1680. The witnesses to that baptism were Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and George Scott of Boonraw (who were probably related to his wife). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Scott in 1688. Robert (17th C.) rented 1/2 of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1694 and 1696. Rev. John acted as his cautioner; this makes it clear that he was not the same man as Robert of that Ilk, but it also suggests that he was probably related to the minister. It seems possible that he may be the Robert, son of Rev. John, born in 1675. His will is recorded in 1696, suggesting that this is when he died. However, he could be the Robert whose death is recorded in Wilton in 1709. Robert (d.bef. 1725) of that Ilk, probably the son of George and Janet Douglas. He was most likely the Laird who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and again in 1690. He was also probably the Laird of Langlands in 1694 when his interests in Wilton Parish are recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls; he paid tax for 6 hearths at his house. In 1687 he was granted a sasine for 2 tenements in Hawick, and is also recorded in another Hawick sasine in 1691. He also owned the piece of the Sandbed on which the Grammar School would be built, which he bought in 1701 and sold to Adam Elliot of Arkleton in 1713. In 1701 he obtained a lease of Wester Ale Moor from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for gardener Robert Roger in Hawick in 1701. In 1704 he was again listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Mary Scott and a sasine in her favour, recorded in 1690, may have been part of the marriage contract; it is unclear from which branch of the Scotts his wife came. His son George succeeded before 1725, when his widow was still alive. His eldest daughter was Isabella, who married Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk and died in 1740. He also had sons William and Archibald, who witnessed a baptism for their brother George in 1732. Dr. Robert (1727–1803) of that Ilk. Son of George, he was the last Laird of Langlands, being served heir of the half Barony of Wilton in 1758 (with Walter Irwin acting as factor in the interim). Born in Hawick, he studied medicine in Edinburgh and practised there as a surgeon, perhaps also serving with the family of the Duke of Argyll. He played an active part in the work of Wilton Parish in the period 1759–73, his name appearing regularly in the minute books. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in

1761. As a member of the Roads Trustees Committee, he was the principal proponent for the building of the New Road for many years before it was finally approved by the Roads Trustees. His first proposal was in around 1765, which was opposed by the Duke of Buccleuch's Chamberlain, his only supporters then being Eliott of Stobs and Scott of Synton; the road was finally built 50 years later. He was also a local Justice of the Peace in the 1760s. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He appears to have sold off the patronage of Wilton Kirk to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. The estate was already much reduced when he inherited it, but it further diminished under his Lairdship. The estate was handed over to trustees (Sir Francis Eliott of Stobs and writers Thomas Tod and Cornelius Elliot) in the 1770s, and the final part was sold off in 1783. However, he kept the superiority of Langlands and on that basis was kept on the voters roll for Roxburghshire in 1780. He returned to Edinburgh to practise as a doctor in the mid-1770s. He is recorded in 1780 obtaining 'liferent' of the lands of Broomhall and part of Mertoun from Walter Scott of Harden, with sasine following in 1792. In 1783 he donated 'a chicken, preserved in spirits, having two heads conjoined laterally at the back of the skull' to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He remained unmarried and died in Edinburgh in April 1803, being buried in Old Calton cemetery, in the burial place of the Boyds of Maxpoffle. Roger (15th/16th C.) of that Ilk, Baron of Wilton. Based on dates he is probably a grandson of John of Langlands who is last recorded in 1455. He is said to have beheaded the messenger of Melrose Abbey, George Fairneylaw, around 1493 or 1494, in a dispute over tithes payable to the Abbey (although Fairneylaw was actually a cleric of the Diocese of Glasgow, and his own name is often incorrectly given as 'Robert'). The tradition also states that the Heap Cross marked the spot of the murder, although this is long gone (and seems likely to have existed long before). He is supposed to have immediately sought the King's pardon, saying that he had knocked the bonnet off a dignitary of the church, and omitting to say that his head had been in it! The only historical record (from the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, described in Pitcairn's 'Criminal Trials') is of Sir Robert Ker and John Rutherford of Edgerston being sureties for his appearance to answer to the slaughter of 'Sir George Farnylaw, chaplain', and of him being denounced a rebel and being fined

(then having all his goods forfeited to the King) in February 1494/5 for failure to appear. He appears to have had a sasine for Wilton in 1503. He was reconciled at least by 1506, when he was witness at an inquest held in Jedburgh. He was also witness to a 'retour' of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1508 and another of Adam Hepburne, Earl of Bothwell that same year. In 1512 there is a charter of transfer of his lands at Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill (the name connection with the lands perhaps suggesting he was perhaps a relative) for 1 penny 'blench farm' payable at Pentecost in Wilton Kirk. Robert was a witness, and so presumably a relative. There are no records of him after this (and John is mentioned in 1522), so perhaps he did not survive Flodden – 'Oh, Langlands ye're a graceless man An' a graceless man are ye; If ye wunna pay the kirk its due The kirk's curse ye maun dree' [FL]. Roger (16th C.) recorded as 'of Wiltonhall' in 1531/2 in a charter of the lands of Borthaugh. This may indicate that there was another generation in the early 16th century, and he may have succeeded from John and been succeeded by another John. Roger (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Hawick in 1610. George of that Ilk acted as cautioner for him (and several other Langlands and Scotts) that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhaugh) and his associates. He was surely a relative of George of that Ilk (but probably not brother or uncle, since that would have been stated). Thomas (14th/15th C.) Abbot of Newbattle in 1422. He is recorded as 'de Langlandis' and so presumably directly related to the main family branch. Walter of Brieryhill (16th C.) signatory of the local Confession of Faith in 1638. He signed along with George of that Ilk, Robert (George's son and heir) and Andrew, who were all surely close relatives. Walter (d.c.1694) Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1689 he is described as 'chamberlain to Sir William Scot of harden elder and younger' in a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk regarding annual rent. In 1694 his brothers Robert and John were served as his joint heirs. Robert was described as his immediately younger brother, and John was 'in Woodhouselie'. His will is recorded in Lauder in 1698, where he is described as Chamberlain to Sir Walter Scott of Harden in the Parish of Merton. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands; however, given the earlier connections of the Langlands of Wilton to the Scotts of Harden, it is probable he was from the local family. Perhaps he was the eldest (and otherwise unrecorded) son of Rev. John of Hawick, who also had sons Robert and John. He may be the Walter whose nephew petitioned the Bailies of Selkirk in 1718 to be recognised as his heir. William (15th C.) served as surety in 1493, along with the Laird of Bedrule, for John Sinclair in Minto, as well as for John Aitkin and Thomas Bell. It seems likely that he was either Laird of Langlands, or closely related. William (16th/17th C.) son of John, Rector of Wilton. In 1612 he inherited land at 'Heytoun' (possibly Heiton) and an annual grant of grain from 'Eister Heap'. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Haining recorded in 1618 among men accused of illegally carrying guns. He was ststed to be too poor to find caution and hence promised not to repeat the offence on pain of banishment and having his hand cut off if he returned. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their son William was baptised in 1719, with witnesses William Cunningham and Beadle John Scott. He is probably the William whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish in 1737. William (d.1785) died in Hawick Parish. William (18th/19th C.) married Janet Notman in Minto in 1794 (spelled 'Langlandes', 'Langlandis', 'Langlanis', etc. in earlier documents).

the Langlands (thu-lawng-lindz) n. important family in Wilton, from perhaps as early as 1290, and certainly 1451, until the family sold off the Langlands estate in 1783, with the last local family member dying in Hawick in 1819. Langlands Hill in Peeblesshire may have been the original family seat. The family may have once been 'Longueville', while the 'de Charteris' family may also have been one and the same; however, these connections have been the subject of much debate. Local members were buried in the eastern end of old Wilton Church, in an aisle under the gallery. A branch of the local family moved to the Newcastle area and there are memorial panels to some of them in Old Berwick church. The seal of the local family (showing a lion rampant, without motto) is in the Museum. The family shield is silver with a red chevron and 3 mullets (stars), while the crest shows an anchor standing in the sea and the motto is 'Spero' ('I hope') or 'Bon Esperance'. The family seal was donated to the Museum in 1856 and an armorial panel in Wilton Kirk was apparently painted over in the middle of the 19th century – 'They saw bold Langlands proudly ride In armour burnished bright, With stately Wallace by his side, Fair freedom's fearless knight' [JI], 'And Langlands ne'er meets the marchmen now, To see that his flag is planted fair, And peace prevails where once was feud, And Langlands o' Langlands is nae mair' [BCM1880].

Langlands Bank (lawng-lindz-bawngk) n. long row of working-class housing, built between 1850 and 1855, on a parallel street to the south of Langlands Road, and named after the Langlands family who once owned the area. A series of steps led down to the lower level flats. The block can be seen in an 1865 photograph, with little other housing around. The houses were demolished in 1971 and the site grassed over, with the rubble being used to raise the level of the Big Haugh.

Langlands Boathouse (lawng-lindz-bō'-hoos) n. Langlands Boathouse, once in the grounds of what is now Deanfield, and the home of the Coble Pool ferryman. Walter Rutherford was living at 'Boathouse' in 1730 and William Allan was at 'boathouse' in 1732.

Langlands Brig (lawng-lindz-brig) n. Langlands Bridge, a footbridge across the Teviot in Wilton Lodge Park, off Buccleuch Road at the western end of the Playing Fields. It was erected in 1894 and marks the former boundary of the Burgh (named after the Langlands family).

Langlands Cauld (lawng-lindz-kawld) n. another name for the Coble Cauld (mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common).

the Langlands Club (thu-lawng-lindz-klub) n. social club which met in a back room of the Museum in the early 20th century.

Langlands Court (lawng-lindz-kōr') n. sheltered housing complex built in 1984 near the previous Langlands Bank, and on the site of the former St. Margaret's Church.

Langlands Dean (lawng-lindz-deen) n. former name for Wilton Dean. It was in use in baptismal records from at least 1797, but had died out by the 1860s.

Langlands Mill (lawng-lindz-mil) n. another name for Ladylaw Mill (sometimes called 'Langlands and Ladylaw Mills' or 'Langlands Spinning Mill'), long the property of the Wilson family, and later the main factory of Wilson & Glenlyon's. For a time the Langlands Mill part was separate, also sometimes known as the Roughheugh Waulk Mill. A new factory was built behind Dangerfield Mill, probably been 1810 and 1818 when the Wilson and Watson partnership ended; this is marked 'Langlands Spinning Mill' on Wood's 1824 map.

Langlands Park

It was originally constructed for Wilson to supply yarn for his expanding stocking frame business. The mill was driven by water in the Wilton Dam. In 1831 it contained the first steam engine built in Hawick (by Melrose's). A separate mill was built perhaps 1851 on a site adjacent to the Roughheugh Waulk Mill, and known at that time as 'Ladylaw', distinct from Roughheugh.

Langlands Park (lawng-lindz-pawrk) n. villa built possibly for James Oliver. It was designed in Scottish baronial style by Glasgow-based architect John Thomas Rothead in 1863. The house was renovated for Peter Scott in 1914, and so may have changed its name.

Langlands Place (lawng-lindz-plis) n. street that was incorporated into Wilton Crescent in 1865 (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Langlands Raik (lawng-lindz-rāk) n. area mentioned in an old description of the Common at Myreslawgreen, meaning an extent of land used for grazing sheep or cattle – '... the highway from West Port to Langlands Raik on the east' (i.e. the 'Common Vennel', so that 'Langlands Raik' must have been around the Playing Fields or Coble; this could be 'Reach', i.e. a stretch of the Teviot).

Langlands Road (lawng-lindz-rōd) n. street stretching from the top of Roadhead to Wilton Path. It was once known as 'the kirk road from Wilton to Langlands', and was named around 1868. The street was once very narrow, but widened about 10 feet in 1904, with some demolition of houses at the Roadhead end. The street was extended when Langlands Bank was demolished in 1971.

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. house above Langlands Road, built in 1907 to designs by J.P. Alison. It may have originally been built for manufacturer T.A. Laing and was later the home of George Scott, son of the founder of Pesco's.

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. farm on the west side of the Jed Water, opposite Ferniehirst Castle. It was listed as 'Langley' in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were 'claimed by the laird thereof'; at that time it was valued at 25 shillings. It is probably the lands of 'Langley' listed among those held by the French family in 1588 (and formerly part of the holdings of Jedburgh Abbey). It was owned by the Bruce family from the early 1800s, then the Dalrymples. James Fair owned the lands in 1788 and through the early 19th century, passing them to his nephew James Elliot Shortreed-Fair. It was bought by Charles Scott of Howcleuch (son of Walter of Wuahcope) in the late 19th century.

Langnewton

The house built about the 1790s was replaced with a design by David Bryce in the 1860s. There is planted parkland from an earlier period (it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Langly').

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. area between Galashiels and Melrose, on the north of where the Gala Water meets the Ettrick. It was formerly an estate with mansion house. It is now a rather depressing suburb of Galashiels.

Langley Cleuch (lawng-lee-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, that rises near Blinkbonnt and runs through Langleycleuch Wood to become part of the Tweeden Burn.

lang lie (lawng-lī) n. the act of staying in bed longer than usual, a sleep in – 'tall folk aye hev a lang lie'.

lang-leggit tailor (lawng-le-gee'-tā-lur) n., arch. the crane fly – 'In Roxb. it is not only named Jenny Spinner, but Langleggit Taylor' [JoJ].

lang-luggit (lawng-lu-gee'. -gi') adj. having long ears.

the Lang Moss (thu-lawng-mos) n. area near the northern extent of the old Wilton Common, now on Drinkstone farm, just to the west of Drinkstone Hill (and marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). It was near here that the temporary grave of 'Jenny Saut Haa' was located. There is another 'Long Moss' near Cavers Knowes farm.

Langmoss Knowe (lawng-mos-now) n. small hill on the northern side of Drinkstone Hill, containing the remains of some ancient enclosures.

lang-nebbit (lawng-ne-bee', -bi') adj., arch. long-nosed – 'O ye lang-nebbit pryin' race, Who kittle words an' letters trace' [JR], astute, learned – 'Lang-nebbit words he has in store, His brains were ne'er surpassed by ony; Kirk session law, he bang'd it a', Did Cuillie Jock o' auld Blink-bonny' [DA].

Langnewton (lawng-new'-in) n. Longnewton, hamlet about 3 miles south of Newton St. Boswells. This was also a small, ancient parish, which was absorbed into Ancrum at the end of the 17th century. Hence it was once the western part of the later Parish of Ancrum. The church was described as a benefice of 8 merks in 1220; there is now no sign of it. The Rectory belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. John of 'Longa Newton' swore paid homage to Edward I in 1296. The barony was granted to Robert, Stewart of Scotland by Robert the Bruce around the 1320s. In 1335/6 some tenements there belonging to William of Soules and others belonging to Robert, Steward of Scotland, were valued at 20 pounds in peacetime, but described being in waste. By the late 14th century the barony was held by a branch of the Douglasses. In 1377 there was an indenture between John of Kinghorn and William, son of William of Newbigging for lands there. There were Rutherfords there in the 15th century. Patrick and Arthur Crawford were at the mill there in 1493. Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, was infefted in lands there in 1499/1500 and the lands were confirmed to Adam, Earl of Bothwell in 1511. There was a tower house here in the 16th century, which in 1513 was given to the custody of Adam, Master of the Anchorite Order, for protection, and in 1589 it was taken by Andrew Ker of Newhall, who was then denounced as a rebel. In addition the Kers of Newhall broke parts of Langnewton Mill in 1589. In the latter part of the 16th century lands there were held by James Douglas of Lochleven as Commendator of Melrose; in 1586 he complained that an armed band of Kers, Rutherfords and others had prevented him 'fra teinding and leiding his teyndis tairof'. The Barony was held by Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch when he inherited his father's lands and rights in 1634. The whole Parish was valued at about £2500 in 1643 and 1663 and was held by the Earl of Lothian. It was among baronies and lands inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Patrick Scott, fiar of An-crum, paid the land tax on the whole parish there in 1678, when it was valued at about £2200. Langnewton Moor was said to be a location for Covenanter meetings around 1680. Residents in 1801 included Alexander Richardson, Francis Scott, James Colville, Thomas Smail, William Blyth and James Burn. There was formerly a mill here, on the right bank of the Teviot, as well as a school. The area to the north of the village was formerly known as Longnewton Common – 'The Craig for strength, Woodhead for length, Palacehill for beauty, Sandystones the most confused place In all Longnewton barony' [T] (the name first appears as 'Longa Neutun' in 1220, and is thereafter often 'Langnewtoun', 'Langneutoune', 'Langnewtone', 'Langnewtonne', 'Langnewtoun', 'Langnewtoune', 'Langnewtown', 'Langnewtowne', 'Longnewtoun', or similar; it is 'Lang new' on Gordon's map[of Scotland in Blaeu's 1654 atlas; the origin is simply Old English for 'long new town', which is descriptive of the village).

Langraw

Langowater (lang-ō-waw'-ur) n. former farmstead in upper Teviotdale. In the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed between Hislop and Blackcleugh, 'estimat to 20 lb., 3 lb. in teynd' with 'no corne'. It is unclear precisely where it was located.

Lang Penman (lang-pen-min) n. nickname for a minor riever, captured by the Laird of Buccleuch in 1530. He was also recorded in 1535 as 'servant of one called Dikkis Wille' (possibly William Armstrong, son of Richard) among a list of men denounced as rebels for a raid on the farm at Craik. His surname was probably Penman and he was presumably tall.

Langraw (lang-raw) n. farm just south of Bonchester Bridge. The land there was apparently once owned by monks from Jedburgh Abbey, as part of the Barony of Abbotrule. David 'Schewill' (or Sheil) was tenant there in 1516 and another David recorded there in 1567. A tower there was burned by the English in 1545. In 1569 it was acquired (along with several other lands) by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and was still listed as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Archie Turnbull 'of Langraw' was recorded in 1579/80. Robert Elliot 'in Langraw' is recorded in 1610, a Shiel was tenant in 1626 and George Shiel in 1688. The lands were valued at £104 in 1643 and 1663, with Lyle Shiel in 1643 and George Shiel in 1663 owning an additional £52 there. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, William Turnbull 'of Langraw' was taxed for having 2 hearths, and James Shiel, 'portioener' there, was also taxed for 2 hearths. Alexander Turnbull was tenant there in 1738. Walter Barrie and Thomas Hope are recorded as tenants in 1797. Robert Barrie was there in 1801, along with his son Walter and son-in-law Robert Renwick. It was owned by the Turnbulls through the 17th and 18th centuries, until sold off by the heir of the last Laird in 1801. It was purchased by William Oliver and held by that family through most of the 19th century. William Oliver was owner in 1811, when it was valued at £104. By about 1874 it was partly owned by George Tancred of Weens, the other part by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. From 1882 it was tenanted jointly by William Bell junior and senior. A collection of partly burned bones was discovered here in the 19th century, in a circular area about 18 feet in diameter, reported in the Statistical Account in 1836; this could be the same as the tumulus that is reported to have existed there in 1926. A socketed bronze axe found there was donated to the National Museum of Antiquities in 1833. A stone axe-head, whorls and an arrow-head were found there and in the collection of Walter Deans (it is 'Langrau' in 1516; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map and Stobie's 1770 map).

Langraw (lang-raw) n. Longrow, farm in the southern part of Castleton Parish. It is about the southernmost part of Roxburghshire. Just north of the farm are old quarries, in one of which there are exposed parts of a cist, and in another is a grass-grown mound that was a lime kiln. There was formerly a lime kiln to the north-west, on the banks of the Muir Burn. Henry Forester was there in the period 1788–91. John Scott was farmer there in 1851 (it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Langraw Scaur (lang-raw-skawr) n. former name for cottages near Langraw (by Bonchester Bridge), presumably named for a 'scaur' there. It was also known as 'Scaur Nook'. William Oliver, hind at Langraw, lived there in the mid-19th century.

Lang Sandy (lawng-sawn-dee) n. nickname for Alexander Scott.

Langshaw (lawng-shaw) n. ruined 16th century L-plan tower a few miles north of Galashiels, stronghold of the Borthwicks. It is very close to Colmslie and Hillslap towers. It was in the hands of Lord Home in the latter part of the 15th century and was once a seat of the Murrays. Part of it was rented from Melrose Abbey by the Pringles of Galashiels according to a document of 1529 (the name is probably simply Old English for 'the long wood' and is first recorded in 1586; it was spelled 'Langschaw' and variants and was later 'Lainshaw').

Langshawburn (lawng-shaw-burn) n. remote farmstead over into Dumfriesshire, just to the west of Craik Cross Hill. It was once split into Upper and Nether Langshawburn. Cowans and Murrays lived there in 1841 (it is marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch).

lang shears (lawng-sheerz) n., arch. period of work, labour – 'By the 'lang sheers o' Gordon' I'll pay ye a' off; Another day's work ye shall ne'er hae frae me' [JoHa], 'She's come throw the lang shears' [GW].

Langside Burn

Langside (lawng-sīd) n. villa at 39 Weensland Road. It was built for manufacturer Adam Darling in the latter part of the 19th century. James Burnet was there in the 1930s (also written 'Langsyde').

Langside (lawng-sīd) n. former name for the lands at Langsidebrae. It formed part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs in 1678. At about that time it was said that the Covenanter Alexander Peden arrived at the farm incognito, asking for work in exchange for accommodation, only for the family from there to recognise him when he preached at Ruberslaw on the next Sunday. and still recorded that way in 1811 and in about 1874. William Pott was living there in 1702, Walter Bowie in 1719, William Scott in 1757 and William Nichol in 1769 (it is 'Langsyde' in 1573, 1692 and 1698 and 'Langside' in 1678).

Langside (lawng-sīd) n. farm near Bowden. A story is told of the Covenanter Alexander Peden working there in disguise and then being recognised by locals at a field preaching on the following Sunday. There were Elliots of Langside in the 17th century (easily confused with Lansidebrae near Shankend).

Langsidebrae (lawng-sīd-brā) n. farmstead just to the west of the Langside Burn above Shankend in the upper Slitrig valley. This is probably the 'Langside' listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. The lands here are referred to as just 'Langside' in a 1511 charter of Douglas of Cavers. In 1573 Douglas of Cavers had a decree to remove Robert Elliot of Redheugh from these lands, but Elliot argued that 'his fader and guidshire wes in possessioun of the saidis landis thir mony yeris bigane'. It is probably the farm of that name, possessed by William, younger of Cavers in about 1614 when some livestock were stolen. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when that was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was 'Langsyde' owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. inherited by Sir William Elliott in 1692. John Elliot was tenant in 'Langside' in 1694. Walter and James Armstrong were farmers there in 1797, with William Hobkirk as shepherd. Thomas Cairns was there in 1868. John Rae was shepherd here in the mid-19th century. Charles Anderson was there in the early 1900s.

Langside Burn (lawng-sīd-burn) n. stream joining the Slitrig at Shankend and fed by smaller streams that rise on the slopes of the Maidens and Greatmoor, including Fore Burn, Mid Burn, Back Burn and Pap Sike. In its upper part is the waterfall of Hawkass Linn, with an adjacent earthwork. A little further down, near where it crosses the line of the Catrail are the remains of a farmstead, being a D-shaped enclosure about 55 m across, with signs of 2 sets of rectangular foundations, one inside and one outside. The stream runs through Langside Burn Wood, near where the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows some buildings. The steading of Langsidebrae is to the west. There is a farm of the same name in Bowden Parish and several others across Scotland.

Langside Burn (lawng-sīd-burn) n. former name for a stream near Whithope, perhaps Whames Sike. It is listed as ‘langsideburne’ in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands between Whithope and Whames.

Lang Sike (lawng-sīk) n. small stream joining the Leap Burn just to the west of Robert’s Linn bridge. The Catrail crosses just to the south and there are the remains of a settlement there, being about 110 m in diameter and enclosing 3 platforms. The area is now covered with forest.

Langslack Sike (lawng-slak-sīk) n. Longslack Sike, stream that flows roughly north-east to join the Jed Water, to the east of Southdean Mill. The area is rich in archaeological remains. Hyndhaughhead Tower lay on its northern banks, and Slack’s Tower a little to the south. There was another tower house just 150 m east of Hyndhaughhead, on the south side of the stream. The foundations are still visible, about 6.6 m by 3.8 m, surrounded by banks, and with 2 larger farmstead buildings adjacent. There are also signs of rig lines, enclosures and other banks from the former farm. It is also possible that there are remains of a homestead here, buried in peat. This may correspond to ‘Watersyde’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map.

langsome (lawng-sum) adj., arch. slow, tedious, weary, lengthy – ‘But I forget the langsome years that o’er our head ha’e fled, I didna see the burning tears Thae een o’ blue ha’e shed’ [JT].

the Lang Stand Oot (thu-lawng-stand-oo’) n. local industrial dispute of 1822–23, lasting 14 months. It was prompted by the Hawick hosiery employers trying to reduce wages so that they could price their goods more competitively. This was a combined effort of all the town’s manufacturers, except William Beck. Plays and other entertainments were put on in the Town Hall and elsewhere to raise money for the strikers. Strike leaders were imprisoned in Jethart Jail, but were freed without trial. Eventually the employers conceded.

lang syne (lawng-sīn) adj., arch., poet. of long ago, old-time, ancient – ‘Lang syne, whan decent gude grey claith, Did hap the laird an’ tenant baith’ [JR], ‘A’ ye wha doat on langsyne things, Wha heap auld armour up in bings ...’ [JoHa], ‘... Gin I be near, I’ll buy’t a frock, For auld langsyne’ [JoHa], ‘Jingo ring was mair i’ ma line i’ th’ lang-syne days ...’ [HEx1919], adv., arch., poet. long ago, literally ‘long since’ – ‘But aa mind a day, long-syne, Aa met ee at The Vertish edge’ [DH], ‘And whiles I think that muckle o’ life’s fun, The satisfaction kent langsyne ...’ [WL], n., arch., poet. the days of the past, old times, nostalgia – ‘... The perfect content o’ the games o’ lang syne’ [??], ‘I feel once more the dreams come back - the days of auld langsyne’ [GWe], ‘In auld langsyne, my friend, In auld langsyne; Where Wallace hid, and Mary Scott, In days o’ langsyne’ [BY], ‘Fra sister fonts o’ auld lang syne Sae flows your gutterblude wi’ mine’ [JEDM], ‘Gane, the auld petted ewie that fed on the lea – Naething left o’ langsyne but my grandfather’s tree’ [DA] (sometimes written as one word, ‘langsyne’).

Lang Synton (lawng-sin-tin) n. possible former name for lands, perhaps near Synton. In 1679 John Shortreed in ‘Longsintoune’ had a discharge for payment with the Burgh of Selkirk and he was in ‘Langseintin’ in 1681.

Lang Tae (lawng-tā) n. hill in Craik Forest, near the head of Wolfcleuch Burn. It reaches a height of 438 m.

Langtae Hill (lawng-tā-hil) n. hill just to the west of Cauldcleuch. It reaches a height of 554 m (1,786 feet) and is the source of the Skelfhill Burn.

Lang Tam Dyce (lawng-tawm-dīs) n. nickname for Rev. Thomas Dyce.

lang-tholance (lawng-thō-lins) adj., poet. long-suffering – ‘... fu’ o’ tendir pitie, an’ gracious, lang-tholance, an’ waynesum in mercie an’ trouth’ [HSR].

Langton (lawng-tin) n. William (b.1814/5) from England, he worked as a stocking framesmith in Hawick. In 1841 he was at about 55 High Street, but by 1851 had moved to O’Connell Street. His brothers John and James were living with him by then. The family moved to 15 Backdamgate, then back to O’Connell Street by 1871. In 1837 in Hawick he married Mehala Dow, from London. Their children included: William (b.1837), also a framesmith; Rebecca (b.1840); Mehala (or Matilda, b.1844); Mary (b.1847); John (b.1854); Catherine (b.1851); John (b.1854); Eliza (b.1856); and Ann (b.1861).

Langtonheight

Langtonheight (lawng-tin-hī') n. farmstead in Ashkirk Parish, just to the east of Synton Parkhead. It is probably the 'Langtoun' where Thomas Hunter was tenant in 1697 and William Hislop was servant in 1698. Janet Robson was a widow living there in 1709 and Walter Veitch was tailor there in at least 1715–19. In 1716 Walter Dunlop was tenant there, Michael Anderson was herd and Thomas Scott was cottar. Francis Cumming was cottar in 1717 and John Dunlop was tenant in 1724. This is recorded as 'Longtown' where Michael Anderson and Walter Veitch were located in 1719. Walter Thomson was farmer there in 1797, with 4 work horses on the farm. John Riddell and Andrew Stewart were servants there in 1799. Walter Scott was shepherd there in 1851 and John Mason and family were there in 1861 (it is 'Longtounheight' in 1797 and 'Longtoun' in 1799; 'Longtown' is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Langtoon (lawng-town) n. Longtown, town on the A7 towards Carlisle, about 3 miles south of the Border. It has a handsome bridge, is near to the site of the Battle of Solway Moss (1542), and was a former station on the Waverley Line. Population about 3,000 – '...the wunner was Dick Wricht threh Langtoon whae got echt pound iz heis reward' [BW1974].

Langtoon see Lanton

Langview (lawng-vew) n. Longview, a Victorian villa-style house behind the 'Auld Man's Sate'.

lang-wundit (lawng-wun-dee') adj. long-winded – 'Ilk ane believes the other ane A great lang-wundit blether, An' like the man that couldna' speak On onything but leather' [FL], 'That langwundeet title remains iz the offishial yin altho it's seldom spoken at length' [BW] (also written 'langwundeet', etc.).

Lanso (lawn-so) n. short form for 'John Laing & Sons Ltd.', but not nearly as commonly used as 'Pesco'.

Lant (lawn') n. former lands in the Barony of Hawick, probably the same as Harwudhill. The ratification of the Barony to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686 lists 'the lands of Harwoodhill and Emmetsheels, somtymes called Lant and Emmetsheells'.

the Lantern Show (thu-lan-turn-shō) n. former name for a slide-show, particularly those associated with the Brethren Hall in Old Manse Lane in the early part of the 20th century.

Lanton (lawn'-in, lawn-tin) n. village about 8 miles north-east of Hawick, half a mile off the

Lanton Cauld

A698. It contains several 18th century buildings and also a 16th century peel tower incorporated into Lanton House. There is also a garden having a plaque inscribed with Wullie Landles' poem 'Lanton'. The village used to be home of the Crouner (i.e. coroner) of Roxburgh and was also known as Cranstoun. Lands here were part of the original grant to Jedburgh Abbey in the early 12th century. Later the lands were split among several different owners, with a total value of more than £1700. Janet Turnbull had sasine for the lands in 1502, and Margaret and Elizabeth Turnbull in 1506. The area was burned by Dacre's men, led by Sir Roger Fenwick in late 1513, and by Hertford's men in 1545. A '6 pound land of Langtoun' was owned by the Scotts of Branhholme and Buccleuch from at least 1502; they were valued at £6 in 1574, when still held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branhholme according to the services of heirs in 1634 and 1653, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The Mathers of Lanton were a prominent family in the Jedburgh area in the 17th century. A large part of the land passed to the Douglasses sometime in the 17th century (with 2 acres there being included among possessions of the Douglasses of Cavers in 1687 and 1698) and was sold to the Fergusons in 1694, then passed to the Youngs and the Browns. Rev. George Dickson held part of the lands from 1770, and they were sold by his trustees to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot in 1796. In the 1788 county valuation draft lands there were owned by George Black of Menslaws, the Duke of Buccleuch, George Dickson's trustees, William Douglas of Timpendean, Walter Hunter of Polmood, Andrew Mather, John Mather's heirs, Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters, James Porteous, Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth, Robert Scott, William Turnbull and Thomas Waugh of Hawkburn. There was once a school in the village (the origin is probably Old English 'longa tun', meaning 'the long town'; it first occurs as 'Langtoun' in the mid-12th century, remaining that way for centuries, and still being 'Langton' and 'Langtown' into the late 18th century; it is 'Langtoun' on Blaeu's map of 1654).

Lanton (lawn-tin, lawng-toon) n. William (15th C.) member of the 'retour of inquest' for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. He is recorded as being of 'Langthoun'.

Lanton Hill (lawn'-in-hil) n. hill south of Lanton village and west of Jedburgh, containing a farm of the same name. There are 2 forts on its northern side. There is also a linear feature stretching from here to the south, towards the Dunion.

Lanton Lady Lands (lawn'-in-lā-dee-lawndz) n. lands near Lanton that were once owned by the Douglasses of Cavers and valued at £10. The lands were incorporated into Jedburgh Parish before 1788. They are described as 'formerly in Cavers Parish' in the 1788 draft valuation, when they belonged to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. The name suggests that the lands were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers once held the patronage (along with Hassendean Lady Lands).

Lanton Mains (lawn'-in-mānz) n. farm just past Knowesouth on the A698. In 1870 a Bronze Age cist was discovered there, containing skeletal remains, a beaker and flint flakes.

lap (lawp) n., poet. a leap – '... A grassy pule to kep the lap o't' [JBS].

lap (lawp) pp., arch., poet. leapt, jumped – 'Then Dickie lap a loup fu hie, Fala, &c. And I wat a loud laugh laughed he ...' [CPM], '... With witches' hazel in each steel cap, In scorn of Soulis' gramarye; Then shoulder-hight for glee he lap, 'Methinks I spye a coming tree!' [JL], 'The yowes they lap out owre the buchte, And skippit up and downe' [JTe], 'And they hobbled and lap with their gysent shins, And daunced on the clammy floore ...' [JTe], 'A better never took a hill, Not lap an aul' feal dike o'er, On ony day' [JoHa], 'An' when Yeddie play'd up, how they caper'd an' lap, they thrimml'd their feet a' sae tightly' [JoHa], 'An' bauld wi' hindberries frae the syke, I lap an' ran a turn Alang the divots on the dyke, Doon to the Tweeden burn' [ECB], 'She was a yauld and willint bitch As ever lap ower hedge and ditch' [JH], 'He lap tae gird his sword, At his leal auld chieftain's word' [JEDM], '... an laap an flaang as yauld as a wuddie' [ECS] (also written lap (lawp) n., poet. a flap of a garment, lapel – '... Aye, and tell me the monie on my cloak lap; For there's no ae fardin i'll trust thee. Fala, &c.' [CPM].

the Lapland Rat (thū-lawp-lind-raw') n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

lappert (law-pur') pp., arch. clotted – '... An' cowpit the lappert milk he got His vyttles owre to synd' [WiSp].

lappert gowan (law-pur'-gow-in) n., arch. common name for the march marigold, Caltha palustris – 'The Marsh or March Marigold, commonly known as Lappart Gowans, opens its large full yellow wax-like flowers in meadows and marshes' [JAHM].

larrie (law-ree) n. a lorry – 'Fient a trap, boaggie, geeg, laarrie, caager's cairt or hurlie' [ECS], 'Hei was on ov a laarrie comin birrlin alang ...' [ECS] (also written 'laarie').

Larristofts (law-ris-tofts) n. lands listed in 1511 among those held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands continued to be listed in 1572 when James Douglas inherited the Barony of Hawick. In 1615 it is transcribed 'Lairis, Toftis, Kirkwood', which is probably 'Larristofts and Kirkwood'. It seems likely that this is related to the lands of Lairs near Teviothead, and unrelated to Larriston, although of course there may be other possibilities (it is 'Laristoftis' in 1511 and 'Lairis Toftis' and 'Lairris Toftis' in 1572).

Larriston (law-ris-tin) n. farm on the Liddel Water, south of Saughtree. The Larriston Burn, draining from Larriston Fells, joins the Liddel just below here. A former tower there was an important seat of the Elliots from the early 16th century. It is suggested that the site of the tower was on the Larriston Burn near Upper Larriston, some distance from the main house today. However, there may have been a separate tower-house near the modern house. Jeffrey says that when the foundation were dug up in about 1800 a large oven and an 18 pound cannon-ball were found. It may be the 'Lanorowstanys' listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. Two separate farms there were formerly called Over and Nether Larriston; these were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh by the Earl of Angus in 1484. The farm was occupied by several Nixons in 1544. This was probably the site of the tower built by Martin Elliot of Braidlie in the 1570s and which was attacked by the English in 1584 (referred to in another English account as ‘Martins tower’). Probably a new tower was built by Robert Elliot of Redheugh in the late 1580s, since an English letter of 1596 describes that he ‘within these 12 years, has erected another called laristone’. The last Robert of Redheugh mostly resided there in the early 17th century. He had a daughter Margaret, who married James Elliott, son of ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Garters’, and their son Gilbert became the next Elliot of Larriston. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls the whole estate was valued at £1934, with Larriston itself valued at £834. Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt and the lands of Over and Nether Larriston were sold to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688. Tax was paid for 4 hearths at the house in 1694, and there was a shepherd and another house with a kiln recorded. Robert Elliot was able to buy back the lands in 1695, reinstating the dower rights from the rents to his grandmother (Margaret of Redheugh). Bonnie Prince Charlie is said to have spent the night here on his march south, and for a long time the bed he slept in was pointed out. When the farms of the Scotts of Buccleuch were surveyed in 1718 there were 3 small pieces of land belonging to the farm in loops of the Liddel Water adjacent to Riccarton farm. The Elliots of Larriston finally lost the lands through debt, selling Over and Nether Larriston and Larriston Rig to John Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1719 (for £1,808 6 shillings sterling). However, they were back in Elliot hands when purchased by Maj.-Gen. William Elliot (from William Oliver of Dinlabyre) in 1786. In 1788 the lands were recorded valued at £834. Francis Stevenson was a servant at the house in 1799. Servant Thomas Waugh, shepherd Thomas Grieve, servant Robert Scott and clogger Robert Oliver were living there in 1801. Maj.-Gen. Elliot left the lands to his cousin’s son, George Fraser Scott, who took the additional surname ‘Elliot’. This George Scott-Elliot was Laird in 1811 of ‘Lariston, comprehending Over and Nether Lariston, and mill and Mill Lands thereof’, valued at £627. George Turnbull was a resident there in 1821. Scott-Elliot sold the estate in 1843 to James Jardine for £29,000. It may be the ‘Lanorowstanys’ listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was popularised in the Ettrick Shepherd’s ballad ‘Lock the Door Lariston’. A lintel above the cottage door there is inscribed ‘J.S.’ and ‘M.R.’ for James of Stobs and Margaret of Redheugh – ‘See how they wane, the proud files of the Windermere, Howard ah! woe to the hopes of the day; Hear the wild welkin rend, While the Scots shouts ascend, Elliot of Larriston! Elliot for aye!’ [ES] (also spelled ‘Lauriston’ and ‘Lariston’; the origin is probably from the Middle English personal name ‘Lauri’ or ‘Larri’, a diminutive of ‘Lawrence’; it occurs as ‘Larrostone’ in 1484, ‘larostanys’ in 1489, ‘Lauerokstanis’ in 1515/6, ‘Larestanis’ in 1516 and 1556, ‘Larestanys’ in 1516, ‘Larastanis’ in 1526, ‘Larlestane’ and ‘Lawrellstane’ in 1544, ‘Lauerokstanis’ in 1548, ‘Lauriestone’ in 1565, incorrectly transcribed ‘Lamestone’ in 1565, ‘Lareston’ in 1595, ‘Lariestounis’ in 1613, ‘Lariestoun’ in 1627 and ‘Lairiestounes’ in 1637, and although it attains its modern spelling at the end of the 17th century it is incorrectly written ‘Ladiestoune’ in 1718, is still ‘Lauriston’ in 1797, ‘Lariestoun’ in 1801 and ‘Laristone’ in 1821; it appears on Sandison’s c.1590 map as ‘Ladiestaine, Ro. Elliott’s’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Laristown’).

Larriston Burn (law-ris-tin-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on Foulmire Heights and Loch Knowe and flowing west and south-west to join the Liddel Water near Steeleroad-end. Among its tributaries are Hirst Sike, Holm Sikes, Pipe Sike, Bught Sike, Storff Sike, Little Warrington Sike, Great Warrington Sike and Westly Sike. It has several waterfalls along its length. It passes the farmstead of Upper Larriston, where the original tower-house may have been situated, as well as Larriston lime works. The farm of Larriston Burn was once separate from that of Larriston. Airchie Elliot was there in 1590, John Nixon in 1588 and 1590/1 and Geordie Nixon in 1590, all accused of rieving (it is ‘Lareston burne’ in 1588, ‘Larestone burne’ in 1590 and ‘Layrestenburne’ in 1590/1).

Larriston Fells (law-ris-tin-felz) n. centre of the Debateable Lands on the Scottish side, over the Border from Bewcastle Fells. The hills reach a height of 1,677 feet and feed the Larriston Burn to the west.

Larriston Knowe (law-ris-tin-now) n. hill that is part of Whitrope Edge, north of Whitrope-foot (it is unclear whether there is a connection to the Larriston further south).

This area has also been referred to as Upper Larriston. It started in 1811, and expanded in 1820 after demand from local farmers. It is labelled ‘Larriston Lime Works’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, with ‘Tile Works’ a little to the south. There are remains of lime kilns and old quarries scattered over a wide area.

Larriston Mill (law-ris-tin-mil) n. former mill at Larriston.

Larriston Rig (law-ris-tin-rig) n. farm in Liddesdale, to the east of Larriston farm, also called Haggiehaugh. John Elliot of Thorlieshope owned the lands (or perhaps just a ‘wadsett’ on the lands) from about the 1670s. They were among lands sold by Robert Elliot of Larriston to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688, after Elliot went bankrupt. However, they were bought back by Elliot in 1695. John Nixon and George Armstrong were there in 1694. George Scott-Elliot of Larriston was owner in 1811, when it was valued at £207 and ‘now called Haggiehaugh’. James Jardine was owner in about 1874 (also also written ‘Larriston Rigg’ and ‘Larristonrig’; it is ‘Larriston ridge’ in 1694 and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

lass (las) n. a girl, young woman – ‘Delivered to Bailie Martin in name of Isa Anderson for teaching poor lassies £4 0 0’ [PR], ‘Push about the flowing glasses – Sing and dance and kiss the lasses’ [AB], ‘Whan bonny lasses blush’d at kissin’, Nor took a bite afore the blessin’ [JR], ‘Now lasses see to-morrow night, That all your candles do burn bright ...’ [BY], ‘... Like her lasses blithe and bonnie’ [??], ‘For lads leal and true, And lasses braw and fair’ [TC], ‘Here’s to Hawick’s bonnie lasses!’ [GWe], ‘Lasses’ een sae brichtly glancin’ [RH], ‘... Lang life tae the lasses whae bussed it again!’ [CB], ‘As I strolled through old Hawick town, I met a bonny lass ...’ [WFC], ‘... I vow she’s the handsomest lass in the toon’ [DJ].

the Lasses (thū-law-seez) n., pl. collective name for the partners of the Common Riding Principals and their supporters.

the Lasses Association Denner (thū-law-seez-aw-sō-see-ā-shin-de-nur) n. dinner organised for the new Cornet’s Lass and Acting Mother on Picking Night. The pair both make speeches and are presented with their Lasses Association

lassie (law-, la-see) n. a girl, young woman – ‘what a bonnie wee lassie’, ‘Delivered to Bailie Martin in name of Isa Andersson for teaching poor lassies £4 0 0’ [PR1712], ‘O, lassie dear, O, lassie fair, My heart you’ve fixed in a snare’ [JoHa], ‘O the lassie’s young and bonny, O the lassie’s dear to me’ [JoHa], ‘It canna bring back joy to me Since my sweet lassie’s gane’ [WE], ‘And it’s then that Ah whisper sweet words in the ear O’ the lassie that works in the mill’ [WAP], ‘I walked more quickly up the brae, The lassie smiled at me, The sun shone fair on Hawick town, I’d met my love, you see!’ [WFC], ‘... A wall of emotion, Like the swell of the sea My lassie in Canada’s waiting for me’ [AlB] (diminutive of ‘lass’, implying slightly younger).

The Lassie That Works in the Mill (thū-law-see-thi’-wurkz-in-thū-mil) n. song written by Walter Peden, in a dialect that is only partly Hawick. It was performed regularly by his sons George and Jock, lost for a while, but recovered from a tape recording at the Gilded Chamber. The music was later adapted by Henry Douglas, adding 8 bars to the original 16. Ian Seeley wrote a piano accompaniment for the 2001 ‘Hawick Songs’ collection. It is included on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Henry Douglas.

lassock (la-sok) n., arch., poet. a small girl – ‘... And there’s nought to marrow the tender grace That lights the smile o’ a lassock’s face’ [WL] (diminutive form of lass).

Lasson (la-sin) n. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son John was baptised there in 1712. Perhaps the same Robert ‘Lasten’ witnessed a baptism for Hawick merchant John Johnston in 1721.

lat (law’, lawt) v. to let, permit – ‘... ‘lat be, my lad, e’en lat it be; For sae rins a’ humanity’ [DH] (it is unclear how common this has been in Hawick; cf. luit and lut).

latch needle (lawch-nee-dul) n. a needle with a small hook at the end which is closed with a hinged latch to hold the yarn in place while the loop is formed in a knitting machine, thus allowing loop formation and ‘knock-over’ to happen simultaneously. This was common on a ‘V-bed’ hand-knitting machine and is similar to a ‘bearded needle’. It was patented by a Leicester hosier in 1849.

lately (lā'-lee) adv., arch. recently, newly, not long since – ‘Wr. Scott the Beddel being laitlie dead, the minister thought convenient that John Scott son to the said deceast Walter should be admitted to supply the place’ [PR1717].

the Latin Schuil (thū-law'-in-skil) n. another name for the Grammar Schuil, used to distinguish it from the ‘English’ or Parish School (also Laitin).

Latoun (lā-tin) n. Sir Brian (d.1545) English commander of Henry VIII, who was Governor of Norham Castle. Along with Sir Ralph Evers headed the invading forces that laid waste to the Borders in 1544/5, possibly including Hawick and Braxholme. Their ‘bloody ledger’ boasts of destroying 192 towns, towers, barkines, churches and houses, killing 403 Scots, capturing 816 prisoners, and taking 10,386 cattle, 12,492 sheep, 1296 horses, 200 goats and 850 bolls of corn, along with an incalculable amount of goods. He was killed at Ancrum Moor and probably buried at Jedburgh – ‘The ravag’d abbey rang the funeral knell, When fierce Latoun and savage Evers fell’ [JL] (also spelled ‘Laiton’, ‘Layton’, etc.).

latter-will (law-tur-wil) n., arch. a will, document setting out a persons intentions for disposing of their estate – ‘Followis the Legacie and Latterwill. At Hawik, the ellevint day of April, the zeir of God jmvc and thrie scoir and fourtene zeris ...’ [SB1574].

Lau see Hawick Lau

lauch (lawch) v., arch. to laugh – ‘He that sits in heaveen sall lauch ...’ [HSR], ‘The Lord sall lauch at him, for he sees that his daye is cumin’ [HSR], ‘The bairns was lauchin’ an’ schrauchin’ amang the sauchs doon i’ the hauch’ [JAHM], ‘...folk noo-a-days disna believe thae things, an’ ye only get yersel’ lauched at’ [BCM1880], ‘Wi’ mony a face o’ lauchin’ glee, Around the auld hearthstane’ [JT], ‘Jean lauched fit tae spleet at a lot o’ young chaps Wha were rinnin’ wi’ airmfu’s o’ big wheaten baps’ [BM1900], ‘...it mae rain at, for ochts A care! – Lauch at! Ee’ll finnd A’m richt for aa’ [ECS], ‘...His frien’s a’ lauchit him to scorn, He rued the day that he was born’ [WFC], n., arch. a laugh – ‘Last, Red-cowl gave a lauch, It was a lauch indeed; ’Twas mait like a hoarse, hoarse schrauch, Syne a tooth fell out o’ his head’ [T], ‘A’ll aye meind the lauch ei leuch!’ [ECS], ‘But aince and again their lauchs wad droon The dunt as at whiles they brocht ane doon ...’ [WL], ‘Auld Warlock Hermitage There on the haugh, Sits square on his hurdies And gies a bit lauch’ [DH] (also written ‘laach’; the past tense is leuch or sometimes lauchit and the past participle leuchen).

lauchful (lawch-ful) adj., arch. lawful, permitted by law, legally appointe – ‘...be the said vmquhile Robert as lauchfull tutoure to me for the tyme’ [SB1569], ‘Item, whatsomever person that beis not present yeirle at the Commoun ryding and setting the ffares, sall pay fortie schillingis toties quoties, and wardit without licence or any lauchfull excuse’ [BR1640] (also ‘laughtful’ and other variants).

lauchter (lawch-tur) n., arch. laughter – ‘Than was oor mooth fillet wi’ lauchtir, an’ our tung wi’ singin’ ...’ [HSR], ‘The way I mind him sae weel is – he keepit the company in roars o’ lauchter’ [BM1903], ‘...her smittle lauchter echoes clear’ [WL].

laud (lawd, lowd) v. laud (note the diphthong in the former pronunciation).

Lauder (law-dur) n. town on the Leader Water, in the former county of Berwickshire. It has preserved its original mediæval form, with a single street widening into the Market Place, and the main road being divided by the central Mid Row, with its 18th century Town Hall. A bridge is recorded there as early as 1482. It was made a royal burgh in 1502, and was the site of the 1482 hanging of six favourites of James III by Archibald Douglas (Bell-the-Cat). Thirlestane Castle lies just outside the town. The town is on the main A68 road north from Hawick via Jedburgh, and until 1755 was also part of the route north via Selkirk, so it must have been a familiar stopping point for centuries of travelling Teries. Its Common Riding is one of the oldest, with reference to it in 1686, although it was in abeyance for 80 years before being revived in 1910. It includes a mounted procession to the Watering Stane and on to the Burgess Cairn. ‘Lauder and Lauderdale’ was published by Andrew Thomson in 1903. Population (1991) 1,064 (the origin of the name is probably a corruption of the Leader Water, however, it has also been suggested to be related to the Welsh ‘llawedrog’, meaning ‘heaped’).

Lauder (law-dur) n. Adam (b.c.1790) slater in Newcastleton. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and was listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about 41 South Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had children Adam, John, William, Agnes and Walter. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Alexander (16th C.) son and heir of William, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1540 he and his wife Marion Hay were given sasine of his father's lands of Todrig by John Hay, Lord of Yester. These lands included the 'manor and mansion thereto and pertinents'. Also in 1540 he and his wife was Marion Hay sold a tenement to Alexander Gledstains. In 1543 he was directed to pay a sum to Katherine Gray (widow of a former holder of lands at Todrig) for her 'terse', but protested. In 1544 there was an agreement between him and his wife Marion Hay over lands in Selkirk pertaining to Alexander Gledstains. In 1545 he and his wife sold a tenement in Selkirk to Patrick Kelso. He was recorded as Burgess of Edinburgh in 1557. Alexander (b.1794/5) born in Smailholm, he was miller at Riddell Mill. In 1861 he was there farming 65 acres and employing 4 people. He was still there in 1868 His wife was Margaret and their children included Alexander and Mary. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1731. He probably married Bessie Chisholme in 1728. His children included: Janet (b.1739); Walter (b.1731); James (b.1734); Adam (b.1738); and Margaret (b.1741). He may also be the Andrew who married Margaret Scott in Robertson in 1737. Cuthbert of Todrig (15th/16th C.) convicted in 1508 of several crimes. This included stealing 2 horses from Alexander Turnbull at Braidlie, resetting and abetting with the thieves and rebels Alexander Cranston, William Oliver, Simon Turnbull and Robert Turnbull. For these crimes he was drawn and hanged and all his possessions forfeited. His brother and heir Walter is recorded in a document in Selkirk in 1528. David (–) local mortgage advisor and runner who won the 2003 'New Year Sprint' event at Musselburgh Racecourse. Edward (14th/15th C.) cleric who held some rights as Archdeacon of Teviotdale. He resigned these in favour of William Crozier in 1419. George of Whitlade (15th C.) granted the lease of Deloraine and Warleshope in 1488. His family lands were Whitlade in Berwickshire (not the place of the same name in Ashkirk Parish).

George (16th C.) mentioned in 1538 along with Thomas, when Katherine Gray had their sheep legally removed from Todrig. Probably the same George was also mentioned in 1537 along with Richard when they were ordered to remove themselves and their servants from Todrig. Hector (15th C.) attorney for George, 4th Earl of Angus in 1456, when he accepted sasine of Ewesdale on behalf of Douglas. His name was written as 'Ector of Lawadyr'. He was specially deputed as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1464/5 for an inquest giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to Archibald, son of the deceased William Douglas of Cavers. His name is recorded as 'Hector of Lawdre'. He was also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5, where he is 'of Lauedyr'. Hector (15th/16th C.) tenant in Clerklands recorded in 1493 as brother of Thomas. He was allowed to 'componer' at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for a series of crimes, including stealing from several farms, bringing in Nixons from England and associating with William Elliot 'and other thieves of Branhholme'. His sureties were Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw, and the Laird of Buccleuch. In 1494 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he witnessed the charter for the lands of Galalaw by James Scott of Kirkurd in 1494. In 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he had a remission for several crimes, including: helping 2 Elliots and 5 Armstrongs, 'Traitors of Levyn' in a raid on 'Quhitmur', involvement in a raid on the 'Pot-Loche' of Selkirk; resetting Armstrongs, Elliots and Fosters; 'wickedness' done to Adam Thomson in Selkirk; bringing in 2 Nixons; pilaging from Whitlawhouse; the theft of cattle, sheep and a horse from the Turnbells from Langhope; and further thefts from Shilling Green and Harthern. Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw was surety for him in 1494/5. He is probably the Hector listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined (including Walter Scott in Headshaw and David Scott in Galalaw). In 1502 he is described as 'in Clerklands' when he had remission for several crimes: stealing 40 cows from John Scott of Hoddon House, along with a band of Armstrongs; burning Whitlade house with the Armstrongs; stealing 2 horses from Lauder woods; stealing several other horses from different people; stealing cows from William Wood out of Harthern and Whitlawhouse; stealing 16 cows and 2 horses from Whitlade; and stealing cows from Traquair. John

Scott 'in le walis' acted as surety. He also had remission for stealing 60 sheep from John Thomson in Harthorn and for wounding Adam Thomson in Selkirk, with Robert Scott of Stirches acting as surety. Additionally in 1502, he had remission for stealing 5 horses from several men in the Forest of Lauder, with James Scott of Ashkirk as his surety. James (15th/16th C.) younger brother of Cuthbert of Todrig. In 1582 his brother Walter (who was heir to Cuthbert) appointed him as his procurator to deal with matters related to their brother's estate. James of Carolside, 'Beau' (d.1799) son of John and Agnes Adam. He was owner of the lands of Redfordgreen and Drycleughshiels in 1785. He paid the land tax on their value of £169 6s 8d. He also owned Whitslade and paid tax on its value of £266 13s 4d. His main estate of Carolside was near Earlston. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in 1502, along with James Elliot and Janet Ker. The three had 7 cows stolen from them, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. John (d.c.1551) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1534. He succeeded George Lockhart, who became Dean of Glasgow, possibly with some exchange between the pair. He resigned the office in favour of John Hepburn in 1544, but retained some of the benefices until his death. John of Carolside and Whitslade (d.c.1788) owner of the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen and Drycleughshiels. He married Agnes Adam, who inherited the lands from her brother John Adam of Whitslade. He was succeeded by his son James. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when her goods were listed as part of a transaction involving the lands of Todrig. She is probably the Katherine Gray, recorded in connection with Todrig in the same year. She may have been wife of William of Todrig. In 1543 she was 'spouse of the deceased ...' when Alexander Lauder was directed to pay her 16 merks for the 'terce' on a husbandland (probably in Todrig). Richard (16th C.) mentioned along with George in 1537 when they were ordered to remove themselves and their servants from Todrig. Sir Robert of the Bass and Quarrelwood (d.1337) son of Sir Robert. He was referred to as 'elder' to distinguish him from his son, also Sir Robert. He served as Ambassador to England during the time of Robert the Bruce. He was also Keeper of Berwick Castle and for a while was Chamberlain of Scotland. From about 1319 he was Justiciar of Lothian, responsible for the justice aires south of the Forth, including those held in Roxburghshire. He was present at the Battle of Halidon in 1333. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant at 'Merchcluche' whose lands were raided and goods stolen by Peter Turnbull of Bonchester and a group of Englishmen. He himself was taken to Bewcastle 'until he redeemed himself', i.e. he was held for ransom. In 1502 Turnbull had remission for these crimes. Robert of that Ilk (d.c.1526) son of Oliver. He held the estate of Muircleuch near Lauder and also the superiority of Sunderland near Selkirk. He firstly married Marion, daughter of James Pringle of Smailholm, secondly married Christine, daughter of Hugh Hamilton of Innerwick and thirdly married Janet Logan. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Robert of that Ilk (16th C.) son of Robert. He is recorded in 1528/9 when he was involved in a deal with John Cranston of that Ilk, for lands in Smailholm. These lands had belonged to Oliver. He was among Border lairds summoned by the King in 1530. He was also listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He married Alison Cranston and had 2 sons, including Richard, who succeeded. Stephen (d.bef. 1530) Burgess of Selkirk. In about 1512 he was granted a charter by John Hay, Lord Yester, for the lands of Todrig 'with the manor and dwelling house thereto and pertinents lying in the said barony of Olivercastell in the sheriffdom of Selkirk'. Richard Lauder was one of the witnesses, and presumably related. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1519. In 1526/7 he received money for lands then belonging to James Murray of Falahill. In 1527/8 he was 'not sound in his mind but labouring in his final pains' when he retified his testament. He was deceased in 1530 when William Scott of Harden swore he owed him 'na mair bot ane merc', and others swore the same one behalf of William Scott in Todrig. This was all in the presence of his widow, Margaret Lauder. His son William inherited his tenement in Selkirk in 1532. Thomas of Todrig (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5. He had remission for his part in several crimes: attacking John and Adam Thomson in Selkirk; stealing sheep from Harthorn; stealing from a poor man called Robert Gordon at Peebles ford; stealing 6 cows from Innerleithen; stealing a cow and a list of items from William Mitchell at 'war'; stealing a skin from the Laird of Dewar; stealing 16 head of cattle from 'cabrostoun'; stealing cattle and sheep from Purveshill; resetting Alexander, son of Robert Turnbull; a theft from William Turnbull in Shielswood; and common theft and delivery of stolen goods before the date of his previous remission. Walter Scott of Howpasley served as his surety. He is also recorded in 1493 when his brother Hector was allowed to compound for rieving crimes; since the same Hector was later recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig, then presumably that was him. He was presumably father or elder brother of Cuthbert, who was Laird of Todrig in the early 16th century. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in 1538 along with George, when Katherine Gray had their sheep legally removed from Todrig. He is probably the Thomas listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in Selkirk in 1539/40. Thomas (16th/17th C.) tenant in Braidhaugh in 1620. He was witness to a charter for Goldielands, given by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. The lands of 'Braidhaughe' were presumably the place near Branxholme. It is possible he was the Thomas, brother of the Laird of Whitslade who in 1618 was accused among men of the Selkirk area of illegally carrying guns. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Priesthaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (18th C.) resident at 'Todridge'. His son William was baptised in 1732. Walter (15th/16th C.) brother and heir of Cuthbert of Todrig. In 1528 he is recorded in a document in Auld Roxburgh (but preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books) in 1528 when he made his brother James his procurator. William (d.1425/6) son of Sir Robert of Edrington and The Bass, and Edinburgh, and nephew of Sir Alan of Hatton. His mother was Annabella, and his half-brother was Alexander, Bishop of Dunkeld. He was educated in France and became Archdeacon of Lothian by 1405. He appears to have dispossessed John de Hawick from his position as Precentor of Glasgow in the period 1403-6. In 1408 he was consecrated as Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding Matthew Glendonwyn. He acted as an envoy to England and France and probably helped persuade Robert, Duke of Albany, to support Martin V instead of Benedict XIII. He was appointed as Chancellor by Murdoch, Duke of Albany, and continued under James I. It is unclear if he played a prominent role in Teviotdale. However, he did extend Glasgow Cathedral, and is buried at the old parish church in Lauder. His seal was very elaborate, showing the Trinity, saints, a kneeling bishop, shields and the words 'S' WILLELMI DEI GRACIA EPISCOPI GLASGUENSIS'. William (d.bef. 1539) Burgess of Edinburgh, who was heir to Stephen.

He was recorded as one of the officials for a document in Selkirk in 1527/8. In 1530 he was among a group of men from the Selkirk area who took goods from men from Moffat, but later returned them. In 1530 Patrick Murray of Falahill granted him sasine of lands in Selkirk. He may be the William who in about 1530 was heir to his grandfather John in a tenement in Selkirk. In 1532 he had a charter for Stephen's tenement in Selkirk. A further document records how he was to receive rent for the building from Nicholas Ker and Marion Brydon. In 1533/4 he resigned a tenement in Selkirk to Marion Notman. In 1534 he was a Burgess of Selkirk when he resigned a tenement in Selkirk. In 1535 he was 'burgess of Edinburgh and lord of the lands of Toddryk' when he came to the house of his tenant William Scott and 'placing outside of a stool at the front door as is the custom in such things' announced that William Scott should be ejected from his lands of Todrig. He is probably the William of Todrig recorded in 1537 when William Mathieson agreed to pay annual rent to him for lands in Selkirk. He was deceased in 1539 when there was an inquest for the succession of his son and heir Alexander for his lands of Todrig; Katherine Gray, wife of Hubert Maxwell was also involved, and may have been his widow. In 1540 Alexander was given sasine of his lands of Todrig. William (16th C.) listed as 'Maister' in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was owed money 'conform to the Lairdis obligatioun'. However, it is unclear who he was, or whether he was local (formerly 'Ladder', 'Lader' and variants).

Laura Bennett's (law-ra-be-nits) n. corner shop in the Kirkstyle, on the corner with the Howegate, during the 1940s and 50s. It had a reputation for being open for long hours - '... And if owts oo forgot A often would be sen-et Ti some wee corner shop Like Laura Bennet's' [IWL].

the Laurels (thu-law-rulz) n. Guest House at 8 Princes Street.

Laurie (law-ree, low-ree) n. George from Jedburgh Parish, in 1793 he married Margaret Lamb in Cavers. Their children Anne and Jean were born in Jedburgh. Rev. James (c.1704-83) Minister of Hawick Parish 1757-83. He attended university along with Dr. John Armstrong (of Liddesdale and later London). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1724, was licensed by Duns Presbytery in 1732 and was ordained at

Langton (in Berwickshire) in 1734. There he married and had a family. He was presented to Hawick by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in mid-1757 and installed a few months later. In 1759 he acted as witness for a baptism for wright John Kay. He was known for being very pugnacious and was an acquaintance of the influential Dr. Alexander Carlyle (minister of Inveresk), who called him 'a boundless liar' in his diaries! He was also described thus: 'as a companion he was very amusing by the relation of fictitious stories'; it is said that he recounted fantastic tales based on the time he and Dr. Armstrong had joined a band of gypsies while they were students and also the time he spent visiting the doctor in London, where he claimed he befriended the top politicians of the day. He accompanied Carlyle and his party through Langholm to Carlisle, where he got into a fight 'with a drunken squire of the name of Dacres, who had insulted him with foul language' (a descendant of Lord Dacres perhaps?). However, there is little independent information to support this general character assassination. He gathered some parishioners together in St. Mary's churchyard to pray during the great flood of 1767, afterwards claiming to have helped abate the waters (although according to the miller the flood had already much receded by then!). Both the Burgher and Anti-Burgher secession churches were formed in Hawick during his ministry, presumably encouraged in part by his unpopularity. It was also said that he refused to allow the parishioners to use a well at the Manse, as they had done previously, and Council records show a wall was pulled down, which he had had built across a thoroughfare on Burgh property. In 1767 he was described as owner of property in the East End of Hawick. In 1743 he married Elizabeth Foggo, who died in 1792. Their children (all baptised in Langton) included: John (b.1744), who was minister at Teviothead, Eskdalemuir and Ewes; Cumberland Alex (b.1746); Mary (b.1748); and Elizabeth (b.1751). He could be the James born to John and Elizabeth Whitehead in Cockburnspath in 1707 – 'Lawrie, that honest man o' God, Deeming it judgement sent abroad Frae heaven direct because o'sin, Collected folk the kirk within' [AD]. John (16th C.) notary to a charter relating to Harden in the Barony of Wilton in 1559. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Girnwood in 1716 and 1718. His children included William (b.1714), Janet (b.1716) and Janet (again, b.1718). Rev. John (1702/3–62)

graduating from Edinburgh University in 1722, he was licensed by Penpont Presbytery in 1731 and was the second of the regular preachers at the Teviothead chapel-of-ease from 1738 until about 1745. In that year he was translated to Middlebie. He witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1743 (for workmen John Rieve and John Armstrong, who may have had a connection to Teviothead); he is recorded there as 'Mr John Lawrie preacher of the Gospel'. He married Anna Bell, who died in 1797, aged 85, and they had at least one son. Rev. John (1744–1817) son of James, minister of Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1761, 1762, 1763, 1764 and 1765, when he was still a student (perhaps being the stand-in when the parents did not have other witnesses available, or else being an assistant in the church). He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1767 and became the minister at Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) shortly after that. However, there is some potential confusion here with the earlier Teviothead minister of the same name. In 1772 he was recorded as 'Preacher' when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Lookup, who probably lived in the upper Teviot valley. He is probably the 'Mr' John who witnessed a baptism in 1776 for George Balmer. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He was translated to Eskdalemuir in 1785 and to Ewes in 1791. He was taxed for having a female servant in the 1780s. He was recorded at Ewes on the 1790–1797 Horse Tax Rolls and the 1797 Clock Tax Rolls. In 1786 he married Anne, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield, and she died in 1834, aged 73. Their children included: James (1787–1851), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines; William (1788–1842), Captain in the Royal Marines; Mary (1789–94); John (1790–1861), who became a Major General; Elizabeth (b.1793), who married Lieut. David Maxwell, younger of Broomholm; Adam Ogilvie (1795–1814), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines, who died at sea; Robert (1797–1828), who died in Langholm; and Walter (1805–44), surgeon with the 4th Regiment Madras Light Cavalry, who died at Anantapur, India. John R. (19th/20th C.) wrote some lines in memory of his brother-in-law James Davidson. Walter (b.c.1833) baker at 39 High Street. His wife was Janet and their children included: David; Adam; Walter; and Euphemia. Walter (1858–1923) son of baker Walter. He was also a baker, based at 39 High Street, who became a licensed grocer at the foot of the Mid Row and wine and spirit merchant of 13 Teviot Crescent. Additionally, he produced and sold aerated waters. He was a well known speaker at social functions and a member of the Masons. He bequeathed money for the Laurie Brig and Laurie Shelter (formerly written 'Lourie' and 'Lourrie'; see also Lawrie and Lowrie).

the Laurie Brig (thu-law-ree-brig) n. foot-bridge across the Teviot at the Spetch in Wilton Lodge Park, named after Walter Laurie, built in 1924 and opened by the Prince of Wales. It is near here that the riders stop to sing 'Teribus' on the Saturday morning of Common Riding week, the Principals standing in their stirrups. This tradition apparently began because it was once the site of a large gun, melted down like other sources of iron during WWII. The scissors used in the opening ceremony are in the Museum (sometimes erroneously written 'Lawrie').

Laurie's Den (law-reez-den) n. area to the north of Faw Hill and west of the farm of Ashtrees. To the south-west there are the remains of an ancient enclosure, perhaps a mediæval stock pen (note the place of essentially the same name in Hawick, Lawrie's Denn).

the Laurie Shelter (thu-law-ree-shel'-ur) n. shelter in Wilton Lodge Park located near the Boer War Memorial, named after Walter Laurie who bequeathed money for its erection.

law (law) n. a hill, often a large one with somewhat of a pointed top, and separated from others, e.g. Black law, Broad Law, Cringie Law, Duns Law, Esdale Law, Gala Law, Herman Law, Kaim Law, Kippielaw, Mervinslaw, Rubberslaw, Tushielaw, Woden Law, and formerly in Hawick the 'Playlaw' – 'From the bridge to the foot of the play la' [PR1717].

law (law) adj., arch. low – 'And fare thee weel now Liddesdale, Baith the hie land and the law – Keep ye weel frae traitor Mains; For goud and gear he'll sell ye a'. Fala, &c.' [CPM].

Law (law) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident at Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Archibald (b.1770/1) born in Bowden, he was a grocer and carrier in Lilliesleaf. In Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories he is recorded as carrier, leaving Lilliesleaf for Hawick once a week. In 1851 he was 'Landed Proprietor & Ag. Lab.' on the south side of Main Street. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed simply as a grocer. He had a daughter Ann. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) resident of Menslaws. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 5 firlots of grain stolen from him there by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton. Hugh (19th C.) farmer and coal agent, who was the last tenant of the fields between Havelock Street and Howdenbank, at that time part of Wilton Mains. He may have been the same Hugh described as an engineer of Wilton Place. James (c.1560–1632) born in Fife, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1581, and became minister of Kirkliston. As a young minister he is recorded being censured (along with John Spottiswood) for playing football on the Sabbath. He became a royal chaplain in 1601, and was titular Bishop of Orkney from 1605. He was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1608 and preached in favour of Episcopacy before the assembly in 1610. In 1615 he was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow, succeeding his friend Spottiswood. He must have temporarily held the superiority of local lands, since in 1624 he gave a sasine for Headshaw, Dryden and other lands to Andrew Hay, and in 1628 gave a charter of the lands of Barnhills to William Bennet. He married at least twice. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Horsleyhill. His will is recorded in 1682. He could be the James who witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott and William Scott in Robertson Parish in 1681. Jean (19th C.) name (or possibly nickname) for a Hawick character of the mid-1800s – 'Goold Ballantyne and auld Hawick Jock, Wattie Moudie, Jock Gray and a'; Jenny's Penny wi' plaid o' check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law' [HI]. John (d.c.1687) tenant in Hawick. His will is recorded in 1687. Probably the same James witnessed a baptism in 1682 for James Turnbull in Fenwick. Rev. John (1791–1875) coming from Linlithgow West, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed as a preacher of the Associate Presbytery of Falkirk. He became the third minister of Newcastleton Burgher Kirk in 1812. He was described as 'very young and blooming' when he started and 'never seemed to grow older or less comely'. He was thus an object of much attention among local farmers with marriageable daughters. He was said to be a 'handsome and vigorous preacher' who became known as 'the Lion of Liddesdale'. He started one of the first Sunday Schools in the district, and brought in 2 people from Carlisle to give singing instructions to the congregation. He visited London in 1824, and his wife would only let him go if he left a portrait of himself, so he got one done in Hawick in about 2 hours. In 1828 he was translated to St. Margaret's, Dunfermline. He moved to Innerleithen in 1850 and had his jubilee as a minister in 1862. He married Jane Murray, who was from his congregation and one of 7 sisters; in 1841 she was living with her son-in-law George Wilson and she died in 1847. They had 4 daughters and 1 son: Agnes; Janie, who married manufacturer George Wilson in Hawick; Janet, who married John Tod from Dalkeith; Ellen, who married Thomas Bonnar, architect in Dumfermline; and William, who died in Trinidad. In 1859 he remarried, to Jessie Sanderson, but she died in 1860. It is said that he was related to Prime Minister Andrew Bonar Law. He died at Eskbank, Dalkeith and is buried at Dunfermline, alongside his wife Jean Murray of Whisgills. John (1906–59) schoolmaster at Denholm. He married Margaret Janet Robertson. They are buried in Denholm. Robert (17th C.) described as 'in Kames' in 1632 when along with several others he feued Westbarns (near Belse) from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. Walter (19th C.) commission agent of 7 Slitrig Crescent. His daughter Margaret married Walter Scott (of Lyle & Scott), while Kate married John Rennie (of the British Linen Bank) and Jane married Walter Phillips Kennedy (bookseller). He may be the Walter, married to Janet Kedie, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Mary (b.1868); Walter (b.1872); and Thomas Kedie (b.1874). William (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Linton in Robertson in 1801.

the Law (thu-law) n. popular name used in the district of Denholm for Ruberslaw – '...an' then for the Law – his ordinar' hunting grund' [BCM1881] (e.g. used by James Murray in 1863).

law borrows (law-bo-rōz) n., arch. legal security given by a person, that they will not harm another person – '... James Budie, dreading personal and bodyly harme of Adam Brown, weiver, and craved lawborrowes ...' [BR].

lawest (law-iist) adj., poet. lowest – 'Thou hest layde me in the lawist pitt, in mirk, in the deeps' [HSR].

lawfi (law-fi) adj., arch. lawful, official, proper – '...told her that neither God nor man was her master, and that she was a 'lawfu' witch' [EM1820], legitimate, offspring recognised by the law – 'The Beddall was ordered to summon Robert Eliot eldest lawful son to Francis Eliot ...' [PR1717] (also written 'lawfu'; the last meaning common in older documents, sometimes contrasted with natural).

Lawgaps (law-gaps) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as part of the area called Ermildon. It was recorded as 'Lawgappis' and listed as being valued at 20 shillings.

lawgier (law-gee-ur) n., poet. a lawgiver – 'Ephraim alsua is the strenth o' mine heæd, an' Judah is my lawgieer' [HSR].

Lawhope (law-up) n. former name for land in the Barony of Ashkirk. They were part of the estate purchased by Archibald Cochran of Ashkirk in 1795. They are described in 1815 as 'Lawhope meadow'.

lawin (law-in) n., arch. a bill, particularly in a public house – 'A paid ma laween ... an than A lifteet the sneck an gaed oot again ti the Mercat Cross' [ECS], 'Yin champagne-cork, left for the lawin', By a Pipe Band efter yon drummin' and blawin' [DH] (also written 'laween').

Lawler (law-lur) n. Thomas 'Tom' or 'the Irish Schoolmaster' (d.1874) once a schoolmaster in Longford, Ireland, he worked in Hawick as a labourer, lodging-house keeper, and a hawker and carrier along with his wife Kate. He died in Hawick Poorhouse.

lawlie (law-lee) adj., poet. lowly, humble – '...for I am meik an' lawlie in hairt' [HSR], n. the lowly – '...the lawlie sall heær o't, an' be gladsume' [HSR].

lawly (law-lee) adv., arch. lawfully – 'The Court lawlie fensit. The said day, with the consent of the bailies and council of said bruche of Hawick ...' [BR].

Lawrence (law-rins) n. Samuel (19th C.) town bellman in the late 1900s, who was also the last tenant of the Fleece Inn – 'Scottie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam'l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grim' [HI].

Lawrie (law-ree, low-ree) n. David (b.c.1770s) labourer in Denholm, according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. David (18th/19th C.) from Glasgow, he was fifer to Capt. Campbell of the 91st Regiment. He used to play for the recruiting party, which paraded through Hawick on market days in the early part of the 19th century. In 1809 he offered to play for the 'rebel' Cornet, but was forbidden by his Captain. James (18th C.) owner of lands referred to as 'Lawrie's Denn', located around Oliver Crescent and Oliver Place. He may have been the 'John Lawrie' referred to by Robert Wilson as one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers' Club in 1776. Peter (1828–1902) son of William, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Jane, daughter of Ebenezer Wemyss and Janet Laidlaw. In 1853 the family emigrated to Australia, settling in Tarnagulla, where gold had been found. There are many descendants in the area of Victoria today, using the spelling 'Laurie'. Thomas (18th C.) listed at 'Danston Mill' in Lilliesleaf Parish when he paid the cart tax in 1785. 'Danston' is presumably Dunstane. William (b.c.1797) stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Wilhelmina ('Mina') Pasley (or Paisley), who had previously been married to Frederick Diener. Their children were: Peter, a stockingmaker; Margaret, who married Robert Richardson; Thomas, who was a cabinet-maker's apprentice; and an infant son who died in 1822. He may be the same as the William Lawrie who provided entertainment on the 'slack rope' as part of the efforts to raise money for strikers during the 'Lang Stand Oot' (see also Laurie and Lowrie).

the Lawrie Brig see the Laurie Brig

Lawrie's Denn (law-reez-den) n. former name for area at the east end of Hawick, in use before the houses were built there. It is marked on Wood's 1824 map near where the Auction Mart was later built, and on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map the name appears near the beginning of Weensland Road. In 1824 the land was owned by Archibald Dickson. It is referred to as 'Laurie's Yard' and 'Laurie's Den' in the 1841 census. The name derives from James Lawrie who once owned the lands, together with the Old English for 'wooded hollow' (also written 'Laurie's Denn').

Lawrie's Flat (law-reez-flaw) n. name marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map for the orchard area roughly where Trinity School was later built, a little further from the centre of town than 'Lawrie's Den'.

Laws (lawz) n. former lands occurring as 'Lawis' on the 1594 list of those held 'in tenancy' by the Baron of Hawick. The name occurs between 'Langhaugh' and 'Tofts', suggesting a location in the upper Teviot valley. However, it is possible that the lands meant are those in Liddesdale.

Laws (lawz) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, between the B6357 and Riccarton Junction. They are recorded in the rental roll of c.1376 in the region then known as Ermildon (probably around the modern Arnton Fell). 'Lawis superior' is valued at 12 shillings and 'Lawis inferior' as 7 shillings, as well as 'Locus

Lawshill

Ricardi de Lawis' (8 shillings), 'Locus Roberti de Lawis' (8 shillings 4 pence) and 'Locus Ennie de Lawis' (3 shillings); it is unclear to which family these Lairds belonged. It seems likely this is the same place as Lawshill, which is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map and associated with Law's Hill on modern maps. It could also be the same place as 'the Hill', which was a seat of the Elliots in the 16th century. It is 'Leys' on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it extended to 546 acres, bounded by Dawstonburn, Saughtree, Riccarton, Roughlee and Stitchelhill; the farmhouse was shown on the map close to the place marked as the remains of Riccarton Tower on modern maps.

Lawshill (lawz-hil) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu's 1654 map, roughly north of Riccarton farm. It is surely connected with the lands of 'Lawys superior' and 'Lawys inferior' listed on a c.1376 rental roll. Law's Hill is essentially the southern spur of Shiel Knowe, with Palmer's Hill Cutting passing through it. The farm was occupied by John Nixon in 1623 and by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47, along with Riccartonfoot and Prickinghaugh (it was 'Lawishill' in 1623 and 'Laweshill' in 1634).

the Laws of the Mairches (thu-lawz-ov-thu-mār-cheez) n. rules for governing the Border, set up by a commission of English and Scottish knights in 1249. This included the establishment of the Wardens and how they were supposed to deal with rievvers etc.

Lawson (law-sin) n. Bailie Alexander Sutherland (1842–1916) watchmaker and jeweller of 1 Sandbed. He started his business in 1864, and also acted as an optician, silversmith and shipping agent. He was a member of the Town Council for 43 years, being Treasurer, becoming a Bailie and later a Judge. He was a Mason, associated with B.U.R.A. No. 424. He was also one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee in 1887, and acted as a Race Steward. He donated the Cornet's Silver Challenge Cup. He supplied a 7-day clock (in a mahogany case) for Watson's Watch House in about 1882. The Lawson Bridge was named after him, and he can be seen in a photograph of the older version of the bridge about 1900. His wife's name was Catherine. His daughter Lilley unveiled the Hornshole Memorial in 1901. He was presented with a silver spade when he planted a tree in the Park to commemorate the Coronation in 1902 – '...There to answer Bailie Lawson About every wound and scar' [WE]. Isobel

Lawson

(18th/19th C.) living at Newmill in 1793 when her daughter Margaret (b.1774) was baptised in Robertson. She acted as 'Sponcer for the child'. James of Cairnmuir (17th C.) had the teinds of the Parish of Bedrule ratified to him in 1639, confirmed by a Private Act of Parliament of 1641. It is unclear what his connection was, but the original grant appears to have been from Rev. Joseph Tennant in 1632. James (18th C.) waiter working for vintner Robert Armstrong in Hawick in 1794. John (b.c.1780) servant at Newlands according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Guy and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1645. Robert (17th C.) listed at Whithope among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish whose son John was baptised in 1712. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Huntly and their daughter Betty was baptised in 1740. Robert (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish whose son Walter was baptised in 1743. Robert (18th C.) resident at Teindside. He married Margaret Scoon, in Robertson Parish in 1739; she may be the daughter of Walter Scoon and Isobel Miller born in 1720. Their children included: Robert (b.1745); Isobel (b.1747); Elizabeth (b.1750); John (b.1756); and George (b.1760); and Walter (b.1760). His children were baptised in Hawick, Wilton and Robertson Parishes. He was probably also the workman whose son William (b.1742) was baptised in Hawick, with the mother's name given as 'Janet' Scoon and witnesses John Elliot at Goldielands and Robert Scott at Crumhaugh. The witnesses in 1745 were the Thomas Elliot in Harwood and Bailie Robert Boyd, and in 1750 were John and Robert Scott from Galalaw. Robert (18th C.) probably son of Robert. He is probably the Robert who married Agnes Grieve in Robertson in 1772. He was resident at Chapelhill in 1774 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Robertson Parish. Other children were William (b.1775), Walter (b.1776), Margaret (b.1778), Margaret (again, b.1779) and Robert (b.1782). Robert (18th C.) married Esther Scott in 1780, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Robertson Parishes. Robert (b.c.1770s) labourer at Hummelknowes according to the 1799 ballot for the

the Lawson Brig

Militia in Cavers Parish. He could be the Robert, son of William, who was baptised in Robertson in 1775. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Hassendeanburn according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1835. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Curren in Hawick Parish in 1851. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded on the amended ballot list for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. He was a servant at Wilton Lodge, but 'In the Ballot Box of Peeblesshire', with his entry crossed out in the Wilton listing. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant at Doorpool in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. Walter (b.1811/2) from Westerkirk, he was a farm worker in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was at Meadshaw Cottage and in 1851 at Craik. In 1840 in Ettrick Parish he married Janet Jackson (from Cavers Parish) and their children included: Janet (b.1841); Jane (b.1842); Thomas (b.1844); Jean (b.1849); and Susanna (b.1854). Walter (19th C.) Burgh Officer in the 1880s, acting as Keeper of the Town Hall among other duties. He was also the halberdier in 1887 when the custom was revived of having the Burgh Officer, accompanied by the Drums and Fifes, walk to the Cornet-elect's house on Picking Night. Sir William (d.1632) son of Thomas of Little Usworth, County Durham. He was High Sheriff of Cumberland and in 1591 was made Conveyor of the Commission of the Marches. Knighted in 1604, in 1605 he was Convenor to the English Commission to govern the Borders. His name occurs many times in relation to the pacification of the Borders (i.e. capturing men from various families and executing or exiling them). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Todshawhillshiel in 1716. His children included: Helen (b.1714); Robert (b.1716); and Walter (b.1719). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Burnfoot in 1743 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Robertson Parish. Margaret (b.1737) and Janet (b.1740) were probably also his daughters. William (18th C.) recorded at Eilrig when some of his children were baptised in the 1770s. He married Jean Elliot in Robertson Parish in 1771. His children included: Isobel (b.1772); and Robert (b.1775). William (19th/20th C.) of Edinburgh designer of Hawick's WWI Roll of Honour (formerly also spelled 'Lason', 'Lasson', 'Lausone', 'Lawsonne', etc.).

the Lawson Brig (thu-law-sin-brig) n. iron foot-bridge over the Teviot connecting Free

The Lay of the Last Minstrel

Church Lane with the Haugh, originally constructed in 1904, and replaced in 1988. It was named after Judge Lawson and replaced an earlier wooden structure erected in 1886, with steps at either end. This was built by David Taylor, with building foreman J.P. Tait. There is a photograph showing the original opening in 1886. It was popularly known as the Shit Brig.

Lawston (law-stin) n. farm in the far south of Castleton Parish, between the B6357 and the Liddel Water, after Kershopefoot. There are rig lines to the south-east and to the south are 3 oval hollows, which are probably coal pits. There was a colliery here from a few decades startin about the end of the 18th century, the only one of consequence in Roxburghshire. The stream there is said to have once had a sulphurous spring. William Oliver was there in 1797 and James Sorbie was a labourer there in 1799. William Graham was farmer there in at least the period 1821–51 (it is 'Lawstone' in 1821, 'Lawstown' in 1838 and 1851 and 'Lawstone' in 1799; it appears as 'Lawstonn' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Lawyhaugh (law-ee-hawch) n. possible place name in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll c.1376 as 'Lawyhalch', with a value of 3 pounds. This is distinct from 'Langhalgh', which is also listed, but the location, and pronunciation, are unknown. It is possible it corresponds to the small farmstead labelled on Stobie's 1770-map as 'Lawsholm', on the Liddel to the southeast of Lawston farm.

lay (lā) n., arch. the movable frame of a loom, containing the reed, which oscillates to beat the yarn into place – 'Now when sitting at work on his loom, He thought, as the shuttle flew From end to end of the moving lay, That he had had troubles enow' [JCG].

layne (lān) v., poet. to conceal, keep secret – 'Its I, Watty Wudspurs, loose the kye! I winna layne my name frae thee! And I will loose out the captain's kye, In scorn of a' his men and he' [T].

The Lay of the Last Minstrel (thu-lā-ov-thu-lawst-mins-trul) n. narrative poem by Sir Walter Scott, which is set partly at Branxholme. It was finished in 1804, published in 1805 and was immediately successful and hugely influential. This success contributed significantly to the romanticised view of Borders history and to local tourism. The poem is composed of 6 cantos and written in an irregular metre. The main story is told by an aging minstrel who receives hospitality from Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch at Newark Castle. He sings about the Lady of Branhholme Castle (Janet Beaton), who opposes the marriage of her daughter Margaret to Henry of Cranstoun, and enemy of the family. Her champion William of Deloraine is dispatched to get the mystic book of Michael Scott from Melrose Abbey, but Deloraine is injured by Cranstoun on his return and the book falls into the hands of Cranstoun's dwarf retainer. The dwarf finds the book and learns a spell of illusion from it, which he uses to lure the young heir of Branhholme into the woods, where he is later captured by the Englishman Lord Dacre. Dacre comes with a force to Branhholme demanding Deloraine in exchange for the boy. But the Lady of Branhholme makes a deal whereby Deloraine will fight the English champion Sir Richard Musgrave, who has accused Deloraine of plundering his lands during a truce. The goblin page transforms Cranstoun into Deloraine to fight the duel, which he wins. The heir of Branhholme is released and finally Margaret and Henry are allowed to marry. But during the wedding celebrations the ghost of Michael Scott appears to reclaim the evil dwarf as his servant.

lazy (lā-zee) n., arch. a fit of laziness – ‘Ach, na! A’m no verrih on wui’d – A’ve taen the laizy the day!’ [ECS] (also written ‘laizy’).

lea (lee) n. a piece of fallow land, untilled land, grassy field – ‘At Kershope-foot the tryst was set, Kershope of the lily lee’ [T], ‘And Crosier says he will do waur – He will do waur if waur can be; He’ll make the bairns a’ fatherless. And then, the land it may lie lee’ [T], ‘... my faither chanced to look along the lea at the head o’ the bucht’ [LHTB], ‘Fair May unto the window ran,

To see what she could see; And there she saw the hunting band, Parading on the lea’ [JTe], adj. fallow, barren (also written ‘lee’; it is common as a suffix in place names, where it can also be ‘ley’ and ‘lie’).

lea’ (lee) v., arch., poet. to leave, depart from – ‘My heart is unco wae to lea’ thee’ [JS], ‘The plooky-fac’d drinker lea’s hauf o’ his dram ...’ [JoHa], to leave alone – ‘Lea’ ’er (’im, iz, ’d, etc.) alane’ [GW].

Leaburn Drive (lee-burn-drīv) n. street off the south of Weensland Road, with housing begun in 1934, with more development after the War and the road being taken over by the Council in the 1960s. It was originally the driveway from Weensland Road to Leaburn House. The road has a turning place half-way up.

Leaburn Grove (lee-burn-grōv) n. street off Leaburn Drive, developed in 2001.

Leaburn Hoose (lee-burn-hoos) n. former house on Leaburn Drive, demolished in 1964. It was built for one of the Wilsons and in 1871 purchased as the town-house of manufacturer Thomas Lindsay Watson. William Lindsay Watson later lived there (presumably named after the meadow on which it was built, and the Boozie Burn that flowed through it).

lead (leed) v., arch. to convey a cart, carry peats etc. – ‘May it therfor please yow to grant your petitioner freedom and libertie as to cast, win, and lead, make in and away take of your Commone Muire of Havicke als many divots as will thatch his said stable ...’ [BR1704], ‘... upon ane missive letter from the laird of Gladstains, the bailies and council gave liberty to him to cast, win, and lead some divots off the common’ [BR1707], ‘... for him to buy a beast for carrieing heather, leading of fuel, and carrieing to anie who would employ him’ [PR1723], ‘Paid James Heardy for liding 600 difeits to tolboothe, 1 10 0’ [BR1739], ‘... the Hawick beasts seldom touched it, because of the distance, unless when they were leading their peats or turfs’ [C&L].

Leadbeater (led-be’-ur) n. Rev. Dennis (20th C.) minster at Trinity Kirk in the 1960s.

Leadbetter (led-be’-ur) n. Alan Edmonstone Greenshields (1897/8–1917) son of Thomas. He was a Major in the Royal Horse Artillery who was mentioned in dispatches at Gallipoli, was wounded at Longueval and killed near Ypres. He is buried at Elverdinghe and there is a memorial plaque in Bedrule Kirk. Thomas Greenshields, J.P. (1859–1931) son of James Greenshields and Margaret MacPherson, he was born in Glasgow and was an architect with Leadbetter & Fairley. He started his own architect's practice in Edinburgh in 1890, taking on James McLellan Fairley as a partner in 1895. In 1897 he inherited Stobieside from his father and in about 1912 became owner of Spittal Tower near Bedrule, which he had restored. He designed the renovations for Bedrule Kirk in 1914, and the War Memorial there, and was an elder at the church 1919–31. He also designed the new Wells House, as well as many other houses in southern Scotland. He married Mary Anne Usher (daughter of Sir John of Norton and Wells) in Ratho in 1890. There is a plaque to their memory inside Bedrule Kirk. Their children were James Greenshields (solicitor), John Usher and Maj. Alan Edmonstone (killed in WWI), Mary Balmer and Jean Gillespie.

Leaderfit (lee-dur-fi) n. Leaderfoot, a village just east of Melrose, with a modern bridge over the Tweed for the A68, together with the elegant 1779–80 Drygrange Bridge and adjacent 1865 19-arch railway viaduct. The area is sometimes jokingly called ‘Tripontium’.

Leadhouse (led-hows) n. Robert (17th/18th C.) butcher in Hawick. He married Janet Scott and their son Robert was baptised in 1710, with witnesses Bailie Robert Hardie and merchant William Dickson. This surname is otherwise unknown in the area.

leadin (lee-din) n., arch. the grain or other crops carted in from the fields – ‘Fenwick had a happy knack of turning up on such occasions as clippings and hay leadings’ [BM1907], ‘I finished ma schooling at Kirkton ... an startit work on the farm drivin a one horse wi a cart ... for feedin sheep an cartin leadin in for cattle turnips’ [TH] (see lead).

Leafauld (lee-fawld) n. former lands in Liddesdale, near Leahaugh, Langhaugh and Harts-garth. It is probably the land referred to as ‘et le faulde’ in 1479 among the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1637 it is ‘Leyfauld’ when part of the lands to be inherited by James Elliott and his wife Margaret, daughter of Robert of Redheugh (the name presumably comes from ‘le fauld’; it is ‘Liefauld’ in about 1624).

leafs (leefs) n., pl. leaves – ‘... The banes o’ murderers an’ thieves, An’ bandit leaders, Porcupine quills, an’ withert leafs, Frae Leb’non’s cedars’ [JoHa], ‘The fisslin leafs trimmelt an bevvvert i the simmer breeze’ [ECS], ‘... keekin throwe atween the leafs ...’ [ECS] (an example of the use of a different plural in Hawick than in standard English).

Leafy Hoose (lee-fee-hoos) n. former name for a house in the Weensland area, recorded in the 1851 census. It is probably the same as ‘Ivybank’.

the Leagair (thu-lee-gār) n. rising ground on the south side of the Liddel Water, inside Cumberland, roughly opposite Liddelbank – ‘... Awake all the song birds adown in the valley, The day-dawn is breaking ayont the Leagair’ [DA].

the League o Pity (thu-leeg-ō-pi’-ee) n. children’s wing of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, specifically the Scottish version. It was a prominent charitable association in the mid-20th century, organising many local fund-raising events. It was the forerunner of today’s N.S.P.C.C. Schools.

Leahaugh (lee-hawf) n. farmhouse on the Hermitage Water, just south of the Hartsgarth Bridge. Across the road there is the remains of what was once a public right of way and probably the main road through the valley until the 18th century. The name was once also ‘Leauch’. It is ‘Layhalcht’ in 1479 when granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with ‘Carolschelis’ and ‘harts-garth’. The Elliots held it, along with Hartsgarth, Langhaugh and Leafauld, through the 16th century and into the early 17th. It was one of 3 farms given by the last Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his daughter Esther in about the 1640s. It was possessed by Will Armstrong in 1632. It was valued (along with Greenholm) in 1678 at about £137. John ‘Weily’ was there in 1694. It was owned by William Manderson according to the 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, and still valued along with Greenholm at £136 15s 8d. John Blacklock was there in at least 1799–1801. Robert Elliot and John Blacklock were both there in 1837. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in the 1840s. The farm was ravaged by the flood of 1846. Thomas and William Kyle were there in 1868. By 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farm at Leahaugh Holm was destroyed in the great flood of 1846 (it is ‘layhauch’ in 1489, ‘Layhauch’ in 1526, ‘Layheuch’ in 1537/8, ‘leyhauch’ in 1613, ‘Leyhauche’ in about 1624, ‘Lehauche’ in 1632, ‘Layheuch’ in about 1640, ‘Lehaugh’ in 1694 and ‘Leehaugh’ in

Leahaugh Brig (lee-hawf-brig) n. bridge carrying the B6399 road over the Hermitage Water at Leahaugh. It is for some reason labelled 'Leahough Bridge' on the Ordnance Survey map.

Leahaugh Cottage (lee-hawf-ko'-eej) n. cottage in Castleton Parish, between the main road and the river, between Leahaugh and Redheugh farms. Arthur Moffat was farmer there in 1861.

Leaheid Loch (lee-heed-loch) n. Leahead Loch, a small body of water out beyond Stirches, by the roadside roughly opposite Stintyknowe, also called Dykeneuk. There were adjacent farm buildings shown on the Ordnance Survey map of 1863.

Leaheids (lee-heedz) n. Leaheads, former farmstead by Leahead Loch. Two orphans called Miller were there in 1703. William Goodfellow was there in 1708 and Walter Scott in 1709. There was an unnamed death there in 1734. Alexander Cunningham was there in 1747, John Miller in 1759 and James Riddell in 1797. William Douglas was shepherd there around 1840 and Thomas Lockie was 'Game Guard' in 1851 (it is 'Leehead' in 1734, 'Leeheads' in 1797, 'Leehead' in 1840 and 'Leahead' in 1841; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map of Roxburghshire).

leal (leel) adj., arch., poet. faithful, loyal, true – 'Now see that ye do treat him weel, And shew yourself both kind and leal' [BY], '...the leal an' aefauld loe thee' [HSR], 'When lovely, light-hearted, and leal, and young, I've seen the cloud o'er thy beauty flung' [HSR], 'He's weel an' he's leal, an' he's on his way home ...' [JJ], 'For lads leal and true, And lasses braw and fair ...' [TC], 'Here though art, and where to-morrow, Far from Hawick, leal and kind ...' [TCh], '...At his leal auld chieftan's word' [JEDM], '...A laddie kind and leal' [??], '...The leal hands haud oot a welcome, The sib herts still beat true' [WL], 'Lang may the Common Riding leeve in the herts O' every leal Teri ...' [DH] (from Old English; sometimes spelled 'leil').

leally (leel-lee) adv., arch. faithfully, loyally – '...and the faith in my body lelely and treuly bindis and oblisys me til a noble and honorabil man, William Douglas of Drumlangrig' [SB1470], '...wee shall lelilie and trewlie keip this our bonde for all quarrells, bloods and goods ...' [CBP1584].

lealest (leel-ist) adj., poet. most loyal – 'O he was the lord o' the keenest sword, And he was the lord o' the lealest love' [JTe].

lealthfu' (leelth-foo) adj., poet. loyal, staunch – 'Her lealthfu' heart' [HSR].

leam (leem) v., poet. to gleam, flash – 'But it never kent the glorie That leamed frae flags to riggin ...' [WL], n., poet. a gleam, flash, glow, radiance – 'And the brunstane leme came frae their throats, And syngit his drakit tail' [JTe], '...its kools ar kools o' fire, whilk hae ane maist vee-ment leme' [HSR], '...Hae the same leme o colour As Mimi wore at her corsage And braidit in her hair' [DH] (also written 'leme').

Lean Yeddie Gibson (leen-ye-dee-gib-sin) n. song of the mid 19th century, written probably by William Tait and Andrew Cameron, with help from Adam Brown and set to music by Walter Davidson. It is about an enthusiastic Hawick angler who died while fishing the Teviot in the 1850s.

the Leap (thu-leep) n. name often used for Leap Hill to the south of Hawick.

Leap Burn (leap-burn) n. stream that joins the Floss Burn to create the Lang Burn near Langburnshiels. It is hence one of the headwaters of the Slitrig.

Leap Hill (leap-hil) n. hill along the 'Hill Road to Robertson', on the north side, to the south of Western Essenside. It reaches 319m high and contains various ancient earthworks. A probable hill-fort, just south-east of the summit has been largely destroyed by cultivation. The remains of 2 old sheepfolds lie on the south side. This was also the name of a farmstead there, part of the lands owned by George Scott of Blindhaugh in 1544. In that year George's 3rd son William was assigned 'all and haille the leip hill langhoup medo and porcions of land about the burn syd callit lainghoup burn', occupied by Walter Watson. It was owned by the Scotts of Woll in the early 17th century and the Laings in the 18th century, passing to the Cochranes of Ashkirk in 1795. It was valued at £140 in 1643 and owned by Thomas Scott; the teinds were valued (along with Woll, Castle-side and Broadlee), valued at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. Part was owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1788 (as still recorded in about 1811) and Allan Eliott Lockhart by 1874, still valued at £143 (it is 'Leiphill' in 1609, 1643 and 1788).

Leap Hill (leap-hil) n. hill between Whitrope Cottages and the Maidens, reaching a height of 472m (1544 feet). It is often referred to as simply 'the Leap' and was formerly called 'Leap Steel'. There is a linear earthwork running west from the western slopes of the hill, now hard to make out, but perhaps once running as far as the head of the the Leap Linns (thu-leep-linz) n. popular name for a narrow gorge through which the Ale Water flows, near Leap Hill, just south-west of Shielswood farm. A pool there was sometimes a summer swimming spot, and for a while this area was a spot for locals to have summer picnics. On an eastern spur of Leap Hill there, there are the remains of a settlement, about 100 m by 45 m, and contains evidence of a hut circle and 2 enclosures, probably later sheepfolds (the name is probably the 'de Lepes intra Askirke et Whitesalde in Alne', i.e. between Ashkirk and Whit-slade, mentioned in a charter of the late 12th century; the 'linns' probably refers to the narrow gorge there, and not to a waterfall; it is marked 'Leap Linn' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Leapsteal (leep-steel) n. former name for an area around the Leap Burn (described as part of the Catrail's course, between the Maidens and Robert's Linn, in William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' (1821), Wilson's 'Annals of Hawick' and contemporary descriptions).

lear (leer) n., arch., poet. learning – '... For want o' braith or lear' [DH], 'What's this? His lear wad flype The wisdom o' the day!' [WL], v. to learn, teach (also lair).

Learmonth (leer-munth) n. Archibald (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1742 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children included Robert (b.1741) and Margaret (b.1746). Perhaps he is the same as Archibald 'Lernment' at Deanhead, whose daughter Isabel was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1737. Henry (19th/20th C.) son of Henry. He was Cornet in 1882, with his own father serving as Acting Father. He was a 'powerloom tuner', but later farmed at Greenbraehead, and then emigrated to America. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; Laurence and Thomas were listed right after him. William, son of James, who was called later, may also have been his son. They were all recorded again in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for their non-appearance. Perhaps the same 'Jacobum Lermontht' was recorded in 1508 when he witnessed the sasine for Adam Herpburn inheriting his father's Lordship of Liddesdale; many of the other men were relatively local. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster at Minto in deeds of 1624 and 1625. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Govenlock and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1683. He witnessed a baptism for Andrew Fisher in 1681. James (17th C.) resident of Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1710 and Whitfield in 1712. His children included: Robert (b.1710); and Isobel (b.1712). James Pringle, J.P., Manager of the British Linen Bank in Newcastleton in the mid-20th century. He lived at the Bank House and was first Treasurer of the village hall committee. John (17th/18th C.) resident in 'Mains' in Roberton Parish in 1717, 1721, 1726, 1729, 1731 and 1734. He is surely related to Thomas, who was there at about the same time. He is probably the John who married Isobel Tinlin in Roberton in 1716. His children included: James (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); John (b.1721); Agnes (b.1724); Isobel (b.1726); John (again, b.1729); William (b.1731); and Thomas (b.1734). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded living at 'Mossalgreen' in 1755. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1755). Perhaps the couple with the same names were in Canonbie in 1766 when an unnamed child of theirs was baptised. John (d.bef. 1794) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Turnbull in 1756 and her death is recorded in 1794. They had a daughter Margaret (b.1757). John (18th/19th C.) servant at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. John (b.c.1770s) servant at 'Stobsden' according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; James was listed right before him and Thomas right after. They were all recorded again in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for their non-appearance. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Noble and their son John was baptised in 1686. Helen (b.1684) was probably also his child. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Falsyde in 1686 and another for James Noble in 1687. He may be the same Robert who was at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Borthwickshiels in 1711, when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Probably the same Robert was recorded at Howcleuch in early and late 1717 when his sons Robert and John were baptised. He may be the Robert who married Elspeth Little in Roberton in 1708. Thomas, who married Margaret Inglis in Roberton in 1726, may also be his son. Robert 'Rob' (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Janet Andison. In 1721 they were rebuked by the Hawick Session because they 'did accommodat married men and young men, yea, even boyes, with Candle and Cards, they curseing, swearing and blaspheming the name of God in ye season of ye night'; this would appear to a gambling house (although possibly to do with Tarot cards). In 1724 he was further cited for 'allowing persons for meeting in his house for playing att cards'. After promising to no longer allow people to come to his house for gambling, the Beadle was instructed to check on him from time to time, this possibly ending the practice. He may have been the Robert born in Hawick to James and Helen Gowenlock. Robert (18th C.) married Janet Martin in Hobkirk Parish in 1731. His children included Walter (b.1732), John (b.1736) and Robert (b.1736). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Wait and their unnamed child was baptised in 1763. He could be the Robert, son of Robert, baptised in Hobkirk in 1736. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was at Hallrule in 1751. His children included: John (b.1751); and Andrew (b.1755). Simon (17th C.) resident at Langflat (near Southfield) in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1475/6 to a document relating to the lands of Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch. His name is recorded as 'Thoma Lermont'. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; James and Laurence were also listed, and so they were surely related. All 3 were again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as 'Thomas Lermont, callit Lard of that Ilk'. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Weens, recorded as 'Thomas Leirmont' in the 1562 dispute over lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule. Probably a related Thomas 'Leirmonth' is recorded in an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1727 and 1728

he was at Mains. He was surely related to John, who was at Mains at the same time. In 1726 he married Margaret Inglis, also from Roberton. His children included Isobel (b.1727) and Isobel (again, b.1728). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish. He married Jean Riddell in 1730 and their children included William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1735 were Thomas and John Irvine. William (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded as son of James, who may have been the same James called earlier at the 1493 court. He was cited again at the 1494/5 Justice-aire. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as gardener at Whitslade in 1698. His wife was a Brunton and their children included Isobel (b.1698). Perhaps the same William also married Isobel Scott and had further children Janet (b.1701) and Thomas (b.1703) (also spelled 'Larment', 'Learmond', 'Learmont', 'Learnment', 'Leirment', 'Lerment', 'Lermond', 'Lermont', 'Lermonth', 'Lormon' and variants).

lease (lees) n., arch. division of the threads for weaving – 'In order to prevent two threads of different colours from coming together in the 'lease' at the end of each gang or course in warping ...' [BCM1881], v., arch. to wind off, separate threads before weaving – 'Ti lease yairn' [GW].

leasehaud (lees-hawd) n. leasehold – 'The trinnle o' pule and stream ... the lost lease-haud o' youth ...' [DH].

leases (lee-seez) n., pl. rentals of farms. These were traditionally made for periods of 15 or 19 years, but sometimes 9 years or shorter. The land-owner usually leased to the same farmer, sometimes extending over several generations of the same family. Rent was once paid in kind, but that eventually gave way to cash. There were several different kinds of lease, sometimes also called a 'tack'.

leasur (lee-zur) n., arch. leisure – 'Bot the season now confyning us to our housses and giving us more leasur to mind and attend thess domesticke affairs ...' [BR1692] laishur).

leave (leev) n., arch. dismissal, permission to leave, playtime at school – 'The bairns new oot o the skuil for leave, gaed ... rinnin aboot' [ECS].

leave-piece (leev-pees) n. a snack for playtime at school.

leazle (lee-zul) v., poet. to exert – ‘...næther do I leazle mysel’, makin’ a-wark in meikle mat-tirs, or in things ower heich for me’ [HSR] (this word is only known once, and is suggested to be a misprint for ‘bazle’, a variant of ‘baissle’).

Leche (lesh) n. John (d.1395) secretary to the Bishop of Glasgow. He obtained the living of Hawick Church sometime before 1363 and in that year asked for papal confirmation that he held it over the former incumbent John Fleming. It is said ‘he had the church of Haweyk, near the English march, which on account of wars and pestilences brings no fruits’. He held the Hawick benefice until at least 1378. There is no reason to believe that he ever visited the town, however. In 1366 he is recorded paying the contribution of the See of Glasgow to the King’s Chamberlain (and there was a contemporary of the same name recorded in the Exchequer Rolls who was a Burgess of Linlithgow). In 1376 he is the John ‘Lethi’ or ‘Lechi’ who was ‘vicar-general in spirituals’ of Walter, Bishop of Glasgow, when he arranged the transfer of the living of Cavers to Matthew Glendonwyn. There is a Patrick, perhaps his son, who was Dean of Glasgow sometime after 1421 and before 1444, and Chancellor of Glasgow from around 1444–60 (also spelled ‘Liche’ and possibly equivalent to ‘Leth’).

Leck (lek) n. Rev. Joseph of Rawflat (c.1698–1785) minister of Yetholm, 1731–85. He gained the lands of Rawflat in 1739 and they later passed to John Edmund Elliot. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. A story is told of how he was set upon by robbers, and when he and the leader (the local gypsy Will Faa) recognised each other, there were apologies made, and the pair agreed never to speak of it again. He married Ann Scott from Sprouston and their children included: Henry (1736–67); Susan (b.1742), who married Henry Ainslie, Sheriff-Clerk of Roxburghshire; Jean; William; and Thomas. Robert (b.1811/2) from Castleton Parish, he was a publican at about 31 High Street in 1841 and 1851. This was possibly the same as the White Hart Inn and was listed as the Bull & Butcher in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was listed as an agricultural labourer, living at 3 Slitrig Bank. He married Mary (1811–55) daughter of Robert Mitchellhill. Their children included Margaret, Jane, Mary, Robert, Julian, Helen, Thomas, James and William G.

lector (lek-tur) n., arch. a pupil of English (as opposed to Latin), someone who reads the scripture in church – ‘...those who learned humanity, and also the lectors, were all taught under one roof by the then incumbent ...and when those who learned humanity, and others who were lectors, were disjoined ...’ [PR1713].

ledder (le-dur) n. a ladder – ‘...As he spiels up and doon his ledder o’ sang, Blithely I ken’ [DH], ‘Hei’s often swung frae scaffolds and faen frae led-ders’ [IWL] (see also the older lether).

leddy (le-dee) n., arch. a lady, female landowner or wife of landowner – ‘...Babie needna be ashamed to haud up her face wi’ e’er a leddy i’ the land’ [JTe], ‘...her blessings on Leddie Elliot were both loud and long ...’ [RM], ‘...But now I was ledy o’ houses an’ land’ [JT], ‘Hooray for Verter’s famous Well, An’ Tamson’s bonnie leddy’ [VW], ‘And we’ll hing thegethger like burrs, As lang as oor heads we hain, For his Leddy has tabled his spurs, And Harden maun ride again’ [TK], ‘Then a’ the leddies curled their brows, The cup smashed wi’ a tune ...’ [WFC], ‘...Amang them aa there was nane to marrow Auld Harden’s ledly, the ‘Floer o’ Yarrow’ [WL] (also spelled ‘leddie’ and ‘ledy’, and sometimes capitalised).

led ferm (led-ferm) n., arch. a small farm that is let along with a bigger one on which the tenant resides, the smaller farm having just one or more shepherds living on it – ‘It had been the custom for many years that Craikhope was let as a led farm along with Billholm ...’ [RB].

lee (lee) n., poet. a lie – ‘...As near’s I can tell’t, without telling a lee’ [JoHa], ‘...But raither wud wait till oor back’s oot o’ sicht, To drap what they ken is a lee’ [WFC], v. to lie – ‘...An muckle mair, if I should mention, Ye’d swear I lee’ [JoHa], ‘Let the leein’ lipps be putten til seelence, whilk speik sadlie ...’ [HSR], ‘Thou loeist ill mair nor guid, an’ leein’ ræthir nor til speik richteousniss’ [HSR] (cf. the locally more common lei).

Lee (lee) n. Agnes (16th C.) widow of Robert. In 1541 she was recorded as tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh. Her first name is written ‘Agnete’. George (b.1803/4) probably born in Hownam Parish, son of John ‘Lees’ and Isobel Paterson. He worked for several years as a jeweller in Hawick. He married Margaret Paris in Stow in 1826; she was daughter of the Stow schoolmaster. Their children included: Mary (b.1827); John (b.1829), who must have died young; James Paris (b.1831), firearms inventor; John (b.1833) Canadian foundry owner; Isabella (b.1835); Margaret Paris; Ann; George; and Jessie. The first

5 children were born in Hawick. He emigrated to Canada with his family in 1836, originally settling in Galt, Ontario. He was recorded there as a watchmaker in 1852. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably related to the Lees who held the other half of the lands. James (19th C.) recorded as teacher at a school in O'Connell Street on Pigot's 1837 directory. James Paris (1831–1904) born in Hawick, son of George, a watchmaker and jeweller. His mother was Margaret Paris. The family emigrated to Galt, Canada when he was 5. There he became a watchmaker like his father, before moving to the U.S.A. and setting up the Lee Firearms Company during the U.S. Civil War, which led to the Remington-Lee rifle design of the 1880s. He later had a hand in developing the typewriter, and back in Britain developed the Lee-Metford rifle. Modifications to this design at the Enfield Royal Ordnance Factory led to the famous Lee-Enfield rifle in 1895, which was extensively used worldwide over the next 50 years. Variants of this rifle were used in every conflict from the Boer War to the Korean War, and the Lee-Enfield Mark III was the decisive British battle rifle of WWI. He married Caroline Chrysler (of the later automobile family) and had sons William and George. He died while on holiday in Newhaven, Connecticut. A commemorative plaque was placed on the stair from the Kirkwynd to St. Mary's in 1981, the 150th anniversary of his birth. There is a large plaque in Wallaceburg, Chatham-Kent, western Ontario, where he is said to have completed the design of the box magazine while visiting his brother John. John (1833–1907) born in Hawick, son of George and Margaret Paris. He was a younger brother of James. The family emigrated to Galt, Ontario when he was only about 2 years old. He later settled at Wallaceburg, near Chatham-Kent, in south-western Ontario. He owned a foundry there, and worked with his brother to invent the prototype bolt-action rifle, which led to the Lee-Metford and Lee-Enfield series. Oral tradition says that the first shots of the prototype were fired into an oak tree outside the foundry in Wallaceburg. The original gun is housed in a museum there. He married Louisa Cordelia Clifford and had children James Paris and Frank M. Robert (15th C.) recorded as 'Roberti de Lee' in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. William is also listed, before him and so probably related. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Old Jedburgh farm. In 1541 his widow Agnes was recorded as tenant of the half farm, with Gilbert (surely a relative) in the other half. William (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby, including Robert, who was probably related. William (16th C.) tenant of the farm of 'Auld Jedburghheid' according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was surely related to the other Lees at Old Jedburgh.

leear (lee-ur) n., poet a liar – 'I said in my hæste, A' men ar leeirs' [HSR] (cf. leier).

leeberal (lee-bu-rul) adj. liberal – 'The rantin' sangs, the leeberal drams, An' lashins o' bitter yill' [RM], relating to the Liberal Party – 'I've aye voted Leeberal, the Tories I ban; I'll vote Leebeal again, Mr. Elliot's my man' [JCG].

the Leeberal Club (thu-lee-bu-rul-klub) n. Hawick Liberal Club, being a political and social club connected with the Liberal Party. The premises stood at the corner of the High Street and Brougham Place, and were built in 1894 on the site of Milligan's the cabinet-makers. The architect was J.P. Alison (with help by apprentice Alexander Inglis). It is a prominent L-shaped building with Renaissance detailing and a prominent 3-storey bay window. The club went through periods of financial difficulty, with parts of the building being let for other purposes. It closed in the late 1990s and re-opened as Hawick Sports and Social Club. However, the building has been involved in an ownership dispute, and its future remains uncertain. The building is marked with a plaque commemorating the laying of the foundation stone.

leed (leed) adj., n. lead – 'hei was hut ower the heid wi a pipe made o leed', 'But, oh! the herd that's in the clay, And cauld as leid ...' [TCh], a needle on a knitting frame, v. to coat with lead paint – 'Ee gaun ower the fireplace wi' a duster But oor mothers hed a black leeded grate' [AY] (note the pronunciation; also spelled 'lead' and 'leid').

leefi (lee-fi) adj., arch. lawful – '...in all honest, gude and lefull querelis aganis all men ...' [SB1527], 'And thairfor I, the said Walter Scot of Branxhelme ... byndis and oblissis me to fortifie, manteine, and defend the said Robert Scot of Alanehauch ... in all and sindrie their leefow (lee-fow) adj., arch. wilful, obstinate (noted by J. Jamieson; cf. leefi).

lee-lang (lee-lawng) adj., arch. live-long, the whole – 'There is a preacher in our chapel, Fala, &c. And a' the lee lang day teaches he ...' [CPM], '... And the lee long night she had turned and sicht, But her ailment wadna name' [JTe], '... the lee-lang nicht mak' I my bed til soon' [HSR], 'At nicht A'm waukrife, an' aft the lee-lang simmer's day ...' [WFC], '... He worships her the lee lang day. She showers her favours on his croon' [WP], 'The dirdums o' the wheezlebugs Chunter the lee-lang day ...' [DH], 'Croochin wi scaly claws lockit ticht to the spaik, The lee-lang wunter nicht, Till sweir daylight' [DH].

leemit (lee-mi) n. limit – 'An if ee gi'e um a time leemit o' five meenites hei'll probably no speak for much mair as an hoor an' a half' [IWL].

leenge (leenj) v., arch. to lounge, slouch, walk slouchingly.

'le-en hoor (lee-in-oor) n., arch. literally 'eleven hour', a mean taken at 11 a.m., usually by workers or children – 'A guid 'le-en hour' [JoHo] (see also eleeven hoors).

Lees (leez) n. former name for the farm now called West Lees, near Appletreehall. The old names for the lands there were Easter and Wester Moormaw. There were Scotts of Lees in the 17th and 18th centuries, connected with the Scotts of Catslack. William 'in Lees' was recorded in 1698. Robert Scott was there in 1705. John Elliot was tenant there in 1711, Adam Scott in 1721–35, David Renwick in 1725 and Robert Graham in 1729. Robert Scott in Lees died in 1738. George Graham was there in at least 1744–47, John Irvine in 1759 and John Scott in 1764. Alexander Somerville was tenant there in 1812. The lands were valued at £52 in 1811, when owned by William Scott of Burnhead. John Wilson was farmer there in 1841 and Thomas Turnbull in 1861 (also written 'Lies'; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Lees see Laws

Lees (leez) n. Alexander (b.1821/2) from Earlstoun, he was a blacksmith on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 79 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret and Isabella. David (1812/3–78) farmer at Fenwick. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 140 acres, employing 3 people. He married Isabella Tait, who died in 1871, aged 59. Their children included Janet, Isabella and James (who married Jane Little). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. David Crawford (19th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He donated a set of communion plate to the Relief (Allars) Kirk before emigrating to America about 1850. These sacrament vessels went to the elders on the closure of Allars. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1721. He married Margaret Graham and their children included: James (b.1719); and Francis (b.1721). The witnesses in 1721 were John Dryden and James Blyth. Bessie (b.1723), James (b.1726) and Helen (b.1729), baptised in Minto, could also be his children. John (18th/19th C.) servant in Longnewton Mill, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. William (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branhholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as 'Leys' (also written 'Lies' and 'Leys').

the Lees (thu-leez) n. mansion house near Coldstream, built around 1770 for the Pringles and destroyed in 1975. It was then peculiarly converted into a circular house.

leevin (lee-vin) n., poet. a living – 'Now, Fortune, thou kens thou maun fin' a patron, An' sae present him wi' some decent leevin'' [JoHa], '...Though they in Bowmont get a synd, 'Tis for an honest leevin'' [TCh], '...He felled big trees wi' mony a welt A' for a scanty leevin'' [WP], the living – '...an' rute thee owt o' the lan' o' the leivin'' [HSR], '...that I maye gang afore God in the licht o' the leivin'' [HSR].

leeze (leez) v., arch. to hurt, damage, cause loss to, be deprived of – '...sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings ...by the skaithe to the pairtie lesed' [BR1640], 'Therefore, if any nobleman, gentleman, or others, having lands lying contiguous or adjacent to the said Commonty, shall find themselves leized or prejudiced in any sort by this day's marching ...' [BR1816] (also spelled 'leize', 'lese', etc.).

leeze me on (leez-me-ōn) interj., poet. expression of extreme pleasure or affection, 'I am very fond of' – 'Leeze me on law! when we gang wrang It keeps us aye in order, And never suffers us to gang O'er the forbidden border' [JR], 'Leeze me on a religious cloak, It ranks ane aye wi' decent folk' [JR], 'Leese me on the day when the Lord o' Blawearie On his auld Highland pownie rode up to our door' [JT], 'Leeze me on the Border, Leeze me on the land, Known by every nation, Where freedom takes her stand' [JBS], '...And there be true hearts, where love downa die, Then leeze thee on the lassie that's aye leal to thee' [TDa] (also spelled 'leese').

Legerwood (le-jur-wud) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) smith at the Forkins, also known as the ‘Woollee smiddy’. He was listed among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. He married Mary Scott in 1814. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. His name was written ‘Ligertuood’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish when his daughter Margaret was baptised in 1719. He is probably the James who got married in Ashkirk in 1715 (with no wife’s name given). John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His name was written ‘Ligeruood’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Kedie in 1699 and their children included: Isobel (b.1702); Margaret (b.1707); and John (b.1709). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1720 he married Bessie Riddell, who was also from Robertson, the marriage taking place in Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Lidgertwood’ (former spelling variants include ‘Liddgertwood’, ‘Ligertwood’, ‘Litchardwood’ and even ‘Lizzarhide’).

Leggat (le-ga’) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Archibald (b.1716), William (b.1718) and Margaret (b.1720). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish whose son Gideon was baptised in 1722. Andrew (18th/19th C.) coachman and servant to Rev. Dr. Charters of Wilton for 42 years. He was recorded as ‘chaise driver’ for the minister in the tax records of 1797. He was a seceder, being a member of the ‘Burgher’ congregation and hence never entered the church to hear his employer preach. When his master preached at a neighbouring church, he would sleep in the carriage until the service was over. He once drove all the way to Ashkirk by mistake without the minister inside the carriage. He was said to be rather slow in his movements, and a story is told of how, when sent on an errand into Hawick, he would fetch a horse from the far end of the Glebe, so that a maidservant had already gone to Hawick and returned before he was ready to go. It is also said that frequent complaints were made by the maidservants about his old-world and disobliging ways, but the minister would always just say ‘As long as I have a house, Andrew shall have a chair’. Andrew (18th/19th C.) gardener and house servant at Woll in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Scott of Woll. By 1785 he was ‘Footman & House Servant’ for Charles Scott of Woll and continued there until at least 1788. By 1791 there was a different servant at Woll, and he was listed as ‘postillion’ at Burnhead. He was still coachman at Burnhead in 1793. It seems possible he was the same man as the coach-driver for Rev. Charters of Wilton. He is probably the Andrew who married Janet Scott in Ashkirk in 1775, and whose children included: John (b.1777); Andrew (b.1779); Margaret (b.1780), possibly the same as Peggy; Gideon (b.1785); and William (b.1790), born in Wilton, who became a merchant in New York. Andrew (18th/19th C.) whip-maker in Hawick. He is probably the apprentice to saddler John Tudhope recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in Hawick in 1799. He may also be the sadler at Howdenburn recorded on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. His son William died in Hawick in 1808 and his daughter Margaret in 1810 (although this could be the daughter of the older Andrew, born in Ashkirk in 1780). He may be the son of Andrew baptised in Wilton in 1779. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Andrew (b.1750); Walter (b.1752); John (b.1754); Bettie (b.1856); Gideon (b.1758); James (b.1763); and Robert (b.1767). He may be the Gideon in Unthank who (perhaps secondly) married Margaret Oliver from Abbotrule in 1762. He may be the Gideon, son of Andrew, born in Kirkton in 1722. Gideon (b.c.1770s) cooper in Denholm according to the list for the Militia ballot in Cavers Parish in 1799. John (18th C.) listed as house and stable servant at Woll in 1797, when he was working for Charles Scott. He was probably son of Andrew, who had earlier been the servant of the Scotts of Woll. Also in 1797 he was recorded as servant at Woll on the list of men of Ashkirk Parish who were balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He may be the John whose son Walter was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1791. Janet, described as 'independent' in Denholm in the 1841 census, may have been his widow; by 1851 she is a 76 year old pauper, recorded as born in Denholm. Margaret 'Peggy' (b.1780) probably daughter of Andrew and Janet Scott. She married Thomas Purdie in Wilton in 1802.

Rev. Robert (b.1861) son of James and Jane Finlay, he was born at Coatbridge (or Old Monkland). He was educated in Glasgow and learned shorthand at an early age. He worked in an accounting office, then for a newspaper, but gave up journalism to train for the Church. He was licensed in 1889 and in 1891 was ordained as minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He remained there until 1898 when he left for Bankhill Church, Berwick, which he resigned in 1919. He set up a Literary Society in Rulewater and contributed to several newspapers and magazines. He did not marry.

William 'Willie' or 'Wullie' (1718–1768) 2nd son of Andrew, blacksmith at Cauldmill, he grew up with his older brother Archibald and sister Margaret, who worked on Cavers estate. He was a simple-minded worker employed on Cavers estate to run errands, and is traditionally said to have been killed by the cook when he returned with the wrong vegetables. He was immortalised in stone through a crude statue, where he is posing with his dog, bonnet and basket. He lived with his sister Margaret at Cauld Mill; she was a servant, possibly working in the washing house there. Lady Cavers appears to have been kind to him, since there are several estate records of purchases of clothing and shoes on his behalf. The statue was probably an apprentice piece by a mason at Denholm Quarry. One story is that Wullie did not like it and kicked off the dog's ear in anger. The statue originally stood in the walled garden at Cavers, later being moved to the sawmill and then to near the mansion house itself. There it was vandalised and the pieces fell into different hands and the statue was believed to be lost forever. However, the pieces were collected by W.B. Little and Jack Fraser and the statue reconstructed by Fraser and placed in the garden of old Wilton Manse. After Fraser's death (and much negotiation) it was returned to Cavers around 2002, and is now situated outside the modern Cavers Kirk. William (b.1790) born in Wilton, son of Andrew and Janet Scott. In Hawick he was a friend of William Scott, later his business partner. He emigrated to New York in 1818, where he started a dry goods firm of Scott & Leggat, with a shop on Hudson Street. He married Mary Robertson and then Jane Ann Atwill (who was a niece of William Scott's wife). His children were: Jennett (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); Richard (b.1833); Gertrude Roos (b.1834); William Scott (b.1839); Mary Jane (b.1840); Anna (b.1843); and Alexander (b.1845). It is said that he 'cherished an ardent love for his native country and retained to the last in all its purity the Scottish accent'.

leggeet (le-gee, -gi) pp., adj. legged – '...on the Vertish Hill Sports Committee since Moses and Aaron won the threi-leggeet race' [IWL].

leggums (le-gum) n., pl., arch. leggings – '...the motor dreiver, trig in eis ticht leggums' [ECS], 'A per o' leggims' [GW] (also 'leggims').

the Legion (thu-lee-jin) n. Hawick Royal British Legion Club, formed in 1938. The Club met originally in the Y.M.C.A. rooms on O'Connell Street, then on Commercial Road and after WWII moved to 3 O'Connell Street, which had been the 'Central Rooms' or Johnstone's tea rooms. The Club existed to help ex-servicemen in difficulty and as a social centre for ex-servicemen, and was a branch of the national association founded by Earl Haig in 1921 (with the 'Royal' title being granted in 1971). Capt. B. Montgomery was the first Chairman and Provost Landles was the first enrolled member. The Club published the 'Hawick Pictorials' 1939–59. It also helped found a football team in 1953, started by Ronnie Telfer. The Club closed in 1997, with the club-rooms later used as a fitness centre. There was also a branch in Newcastleton, at 3 North Hermitage Street.

the Legion (thu-lee-jin) n. Hawick British Legion Football Club, an amateur football team, originally sponsored by the Legion club, being founded with the aid of a donation in 1953. The club has had many premises and is now located in Princes Street.

lei (li) v. to lie, fib – 'deh lei ti mei', 'yer mother can aye tell when ee're lei-in', n. a lie, untruth – 'it was juist a teeny-weeny lei', 'Hei said they ca'd um Chairlie Broon – Mind, it could hev been a lei ...' [DH] (often spelled as in English 'lie'; note the hard i sound, and that 'to recline' is pronounced li).

leibelt (lī-bul') n., v., arch. libel.

leibult (lī-bul') n., arch. a piece of writing, often implying a long screed, a harangue – ‘Let this beide as a merk o the respeck o the wreiter o this leibult ...’ [ECS] (also written ‘lybelt’; perhaps in analogy with a legal document; cf. leibelt).

leid see leed

leify see lify

leigh (lāch) adj., poet. low – ‘Their courage grew leigh’ [HSR] (not common, cf. laigh, leuch and low).

Leigh (lee) n. Henry (c.1555–c.1606) of Rockcliffe Castle, Cumbria, son of Thomas. He was appointed Deputy Warden of the English West Marches in at least 1597. In that year there was an indenture signed at Copshawholm between him and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for the delivery of 5 Scotsmen. He appears to have suffered from lack of family wealth and was imprisoned, probably for meeting personally with James VI, among other things. He may be the same man who was Captain of Carlisle Castle in 1604 and a Border Commissioner in 1606.

lei-like (lī-līk) adj., arch. like a lie, fictional, untruthful (recorded in the Hawick news in 1954).

lein (līn) pp., arch. lain (noted by E.C. Smith).

Leipzig (līp-zig) n. battle of 1813, where the coalition armies defeated the French under Napoleon, being the largest battle in Europe until WWI, and the first major defeat for Napoleon. Although no British troops were involved, the victory was a cause of huge celebrations throughout the country. It was celebrated in Hawick with illuminations, probably meaning extra lamps and candles in the mains treets, burning tar barrels and a torchlight procession.

leish (leesh) adj., arch. supple, athletic, active, nimble, sometimes suggesting tallness – ‘...my faither was buchtin’ the Brockalaw yowes to twae young, lish, clever hizzies ae night after sunset’ [LHTB], ‘A pairteet threh the leesh, swankleike fallih’ (‘at ‘Ad been followin eis lead) at the whusht road-end at Jedfit’ [ECS], ‘My fishin’-wand, it’s strang and leish ...’ [DH], ‘The gress grew lang and leish ahint the schule’ [DH] (occasionally spelled ‘leash’, ‘leesh’ or ‘lish’).

Leishman (leesh-min) n. James (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Edinburgh and the north, as well as to Newcastle, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may have amrried Catherine and had children includin Robert. Robert (b.c.1812/3) Hawick hosiery traveller from the West End. In 1837 he was running a cart from Buccleuch Street to Edinburgh and Galashiels twice a week, and once a week to Newcastle. In 1841 he was listed as a carrier on the Back Row. He often accompanied William Laidlaw on sales trips to the Newcastle area. It was said to have been ‘an open secret that Robert’s conscience did not trouble him with knotty questions of excise’ [JHH]. His wife was Margaret, and their children included James, Catherine, Agnes, Margaret, Jane and Thomas. His mother was probably Catherine (living with him in 1841). By 1871 he was living in Berwick and his name was spelled ‘Lishman’. Robert ‘Bert’ (1896/7–1961), well known local auctioneer, with a saleroom in the old ‘Green Kirk’ building at Myreslawgreen. He was writer of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column for many years. He was also a member of Hawick Town Council and Bailie from 1946 to 1961, when he died on a visit to Tasmania.

Leishman Place (leesh-min-plis) n. part of Burnfoot, built in two phases, beginning in 1957. It is a dead-end street off Ruberslaw Road and was named after Bert Leishman.

Leishman’s (leesh-minz) n. carriers firm of the early 19th century which ran weekly between Hawick and Newcastle.

leisome (lī-sum) adj., arch. telling a lie, fibbing – ‘If it’s nae lee, it’s e’en unco leesum like’ [JoJ] (also written ‘leesome’, but not to be confused with leesome).

leisome-like (lī-sum-līk) adj., arch. like a lie – ‘A leisome-like story’ [GW].

leister (lee-stur) n. a spear with three or more prongs used for fishing – ‘Wi’ their nets and their leisters, their bowats and gags ...’ [UB], ‘In my youth, when ‘leisters’ were not illegal, or at least when their use was winked at by the powers that were ...’ [RB], v. to fish with a leister – ‘...when law allowed the leistering of salmon ...’ [RM] (probably from Old Norse; some old examples exist in the Museum).

the Leisure Centre (thū-leeshur-sen’-ur) n. Teviotdale Leisure Centre, Mansfield Road, opened in 1982 on the site of the former railway station. It consists of a swimming pool and squash courts, with an indoor bowling hall opened in 1985. It was designed by Faulkener-Brown, Hendy & Stonor of Newcastle, with opinions differing as to its aesthetic qualities. The bowling extension was not designed to match the original part, and here opinions do not differ. The palm tree fell into the pool in 2008.

Leitch (leech) n. Andrew (b.1838) son of Andrew from Largo, he studied at St. Andrews University 1855–59. He became a teacher, working in Castletown, Caithness, Dollar Academy, Dalry, and also in Hawick. George (b.1795/6) from Galashiels, he was farmer at Barnes in 1851. He was then farming 730 acres and employing 6 people. His wife was Isabel (from Smailholm) and their children included James M., Alexander, Isabel and Richard W. Simon (15th/16th C.) tenant of Minto Craigend about 1502, along with Thomas Young and his son Thomas, and William Johnstone. Their farms had been raided by a group led by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirks-shaws, for which Scott received remission. His name is recorded as ‘Symon Leich’.

Leith (leeth) n. port situated where the Water of Leith joins the Firth of Forth, now essentially part of Edinburgh. It was an important port for local trade, particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries. Sometimes proclamations were read ‘at the peer of Leith’ in order to be widely broadcast, e.g. a record in the 1723 Session books relating to an attempt to ascertain whether a Hawick woman’s husband was alive or not.

Leitheid (leeth-heed, lut-heed) n. (Leithead) Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as workman in Goldielands in 1723, ‘in Crumhaugh’ in 1725 and weaver in Crumhaugh in 1726. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, workman in Goldielands. In 1722 he married Rachel Scott in Hawick Parish. Their children included: Isabel (b.1726); an unnamed child (b.1728); Walter (b.1729); and Isobel (again, 1732). The 1723 baptism was witnessed by fleshers Robert Deans and George Renwick, the 1726 one by William Elliot and John Scott, the 1728 one by John Elliot and William Elliot (probably the tenants at Goldielands and Crumhaugh) and the 1729 by Rev. Charles Telfer and another Andrew. He could be the man of that name, ‘old Andrew Cross Wind’, who died in Hawick in 1778. He could be the Andrew who witnessed baptisms in 1772 for Robert and for Walter and in 1774 (along with Robert) for John. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He could be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for the other Andrew in 1729. He married Margaret Wilson and their children included: Robert (b.1742); Andrew (b.1747); and Margaret (b.1759). David (17th C.) resident of ‘Crackuooll’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. Probably the same David married Janet Shiel with their daughter Agnes baptised in 1690, and witness Robert Pringle and James (probably a relative). David (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Wight and their son David was baptised in 1727. Gladstones (b.1744) local labourer, son of William. He married Helen Hall and their children, baptised in Kirkton Parish, included: Betty (b.1769); Helen (b.1774); Gilbert (b.1776); Janet (b.1777); and another Janet (b.1786/7), who married shepherd and carrier Adam Scott. Henry (b.1817/8) from Polwarth in Berwickshire, he was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He is recorded there in 1851 and 1861. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianæ’. He was said to have ‘a curious habit of putting his tongue out at the side of his mouth, and is here represented doing so.’ He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Hymers in Cavers Parish in 1856. Their children included James (b.1857), Margaret (b.1859) and Elizabeth Agnes (b.1860). Isabel ‘Tibbie o the Green’ (c.1795–1870) well-known West-ender of the mid-19th century. Daughter of market gardener Robert, the family had a garden at Myreslawgreen, the property of Mr. Turnbull of Brieryards. She lived in a house near there, possibly corresponding to 4 Myreslawgreen, being there with her brother William until his death in the 1850s. She was known as an independent but warm-hearted person who kept old-fashioned dress. She is probably the woman of this name who was among West-enders to recover from cholera in 1832. In 1851 she was described as a ‘Gardener’ and in 1861 she was an ‘Outdoor Worker’. She also had a niece Isabel Mein and a grand nephew Robert M. Laurie. Her bier is said to have been the last that used the Hawick ‘mort-cloth’. The family name locally goes back at least to William of Cavers Parish, whose daughter Margaret was married in Edinburgh in 1708. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from the wright there. James (17th C.) wright of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Nichol and their children included: James (b.1704); and William (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were ‘vintner’ Francis Elliot and weaver Andrew Jardine. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism in 1725 in Hawick for Archibald Paterson, tenant in Flex. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ormiston who married Janet Laidlaw in Cavers Parish in 1708. Helen (b.1710), baptised in Cavers, was probably his child. Perhaps the same James was at Ormiston in 1705 when his son William was baptised in Cavers. James (17th/18th C.) farm worker in the Borthwick valley. He was a servant to James Grieve in Todshawhaugh in 1714 and resident in Milsington in 1717 and 1725. He married Bessie Riddell in 1714, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Robertson Parishes; his wife was described as a servant to Andrew Ogilvie of Newlands (who lived at Branxholme). His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included William (b.1715), Jean (b.1717) and an unnamed child (b.1725). He is probably also the James recorded at Todshawhill in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Boonraw in 1723. He married Janet Hill in Bowden in 1716. Their children included: Janet (b.1723) and James (b.1725), baptised in Wilton; and Agnes (b.1728) and Isobel (b.1732), baptised in Morebattle. The witnesses in 1723 were John Scott and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Blaikie and their son 'Gledstines' was baptised in 1775. He may have been a brother of Gladstains. James (19th C.) married Helen Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1847. James 'Jimmy' (d.2003) Acting Father in 1960. In 1961 he carried the Flag again, since that year's Acting Father, Tom Crosbie, had broken his leg. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1702 and 1716. His children probably included: Andrew (b.1696); William (b.1702); John (b.1713); and Robert (b.1716). Perhaps the same John was at Whitfield in 1698 when his son William was baptised in Wilton; the witnesses were John and Robert Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Katherine Thomson and their children included: Jane (b.1767); John (b.1770); Jane (b.1772); Margaret (b.1774); and Andrew (b.1777). The witnesses in 1774 were Andrew and Robert (who were surely close relatives). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Mitchelhill and their children included John (b.1786), Mary (b.1787), William (b.1791) and Henry (b.1794). John (18th C.) recorded as owner of land in Lilliesleaf in 1788, valued at £6 13s 4d. He was still recorded as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who also owned lands in Lilliesleaf. John (18th/19th C.) carrier in the Denholm area. He was involved in the trip to the summit of Ruberslaw where the Laids of Cavers and Wells met to resolve a boundary dispute over dinner. He allowed the cart to jolt, resulting in George Hunter (of the Fleece Inn) to come closest in his life to cursing! He may be the John of the Cross Wynd whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1811. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (1781–1843) born at Shankend, son of William and Janet Tait. He lived at Sandyhall (Ashkirk), Woll (Ashkirk), Birkwood (Ashkirk) and Langshaw (Melrose). In 1803 he married Jane Harvey. Their children included: William (1805–74); Robert (b.1807), who married Janet Jessie Knox and emigrated to Waterloo County, Ontario; Jane (b.1811), who married William Dodds; James (b.1816), who died in Wyoming; Thomas (b.1817); John (b.c.1820); and Janet or Jessie (b.c.1824), who married James Cousins. John (b.c.1810) carter in Hawick. In 1841 he was listed as a farmer, probably on the Cross Wynd, but by 1861 he was at Mather's Close. His wife was Mary and their children included John, William, Janet, Henry, Thomas, Agnes, Mary and Margaret. He may have been son of the earlier John of the Cross Wynd. Richard (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son William was baptised in 1771. Richard (b.c.1775) mason who lived on the Kirkwynd. He was listed in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and was still on the list in 1801. He married Elizabeth Aitkin and their children included: Mary (b.1802); Robert (b.1805); James (b.1807); William (b.1809); John Stott (b.1811); Isabel (b.1814); and David (b.c.1818). Robert (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is probably the Robert who (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism in 1774 for John. He married Betty Laidlaw and their children included Andrew (b.1770) and Isabel (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were Andrew (perhaps his father) and Alexander Bunnan. He is probably the Robert whose wife was buried in Hawick in 1772. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hogg and their son Walter was baptised in 1777. The witnesses were John and Walter, who were surely his close relatives. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Tudhope in 1767. Robert (18th/19th C.) one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in about 1798.

Robert (18th/19th C.) described as 'R. Leithead o' the Green'. He may be the market gardener who was father to 'Tibbie o the Green'. In 1809 he and weaver Peter Fletcher walked to Selkirk to secure the services of a drummer and a fifer for the 'rebel' party at the Common Riding. He could be the stocking-maker Robert who contracted cholera in 1832, but recovered; he lived in an upper flat of the house containing Henry Haliburton on the Back Row. He married Janet Anderson in 1782. Their children included: William (b.1783), who was a frame-worker; Robert (b.1785); Robert (b.1786); Jane (b.1787); Isobel (b.1790), 'Tibbie o the Green'; Agnes (b.1792); Margaret (b.c.1796), who married George Wilson; and Mary (b.c.1800). His mother 'at the green' died in 1782. He is probably the stockingmaker Robert whose unnamed child died in 1811. Robert (19th C.) stocking-maker who lived on the Loan. In 1863 he presented the Archæological Society with the flag from the 'Wasla Water' party of 1809. He was surely related to the earlier 'R. Leithead o' the Green' who had been involved on the 'rebel' side in 1809. He could be the Robert born to Richard and Elizabeth Aitkin in 1805. Samuel (b.c.1780) journeyman mason in Lilliesleaf according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He married Margaret Stirling and their children included Robert (b.1802) and James (b.1804). Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to James Ker of Bewlie. He is recorded in 1622, along with Ker and other servants of his when there was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Thomas (18th C.) married Jane Scoon in Robertson Parish in 1788. Walter (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed in Lilliesleaf. He may be the Walter, portioner of Lilliesleaf, who married Marion, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth (or Euphan) Henry and their children included: Andrew (b.1766); and George (b.1768). Witnesses to the 1766 baptism were Andrew and John, who were surely closely related to him. Probably the same Walter witnessed (along with John) a baptism for Robert in 1777. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marjory

Thomson and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were Andrew (surely related to him) and Andrew Thomson (probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Easton and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1672. William (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same William married Isobel Scott and had a son Walter baptised in Ashkirk in 1691. The baptismal witnesses were Robert and William Scott (probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He was probably related to Walter, who was a wright in Lilliesleaf at the same time. William (17th C.) farmer in Cavers Parish. He is recorded as deceased in 1708 when his daughter Margaret married Alexander Grib in Edinburgh. William (17th/18th C.) gardener at Fenwick. He married Bessie Stevenson in 1714, possibly at the house of William Whillans at the Flex. This was a 'super-numerary marriage', i.e. the celebration had more guests than the modest amount prescribed by the law of the time. Both he and Whillans probably lost the bond that they had lodged with the Session. Their children included Janet (b.1715) and Jean (b.1717), both baptised in Hawick. William (b.1721/2) farm labourer in Hawick Parish, living at Meikle Whitlaw and Flex from infancy. He worked mainly as a ploughman. In 1741 he was recorded as resident at Whitlawhaugh. In 1767 he gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common; he was described as married at that time. He married Bessy Gledstains, and their children, born in Hawick Parish, included: John (b.1737); Gledstains (or Gladstone, b.1741), an unusual forename, presumably from his mother's maiden name; and Janet (b.1743). The witnesses in 1741 were carrier John Ruecastle and Kirk Officer John Telfer. Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Whitlaw in 1768. William (18th C.) recorded living at Orchard in 1749. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included John (b.1743), Richard (b.1745) and Robert (b.1749). William (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish that had formerly been owned by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. These lands were valued at £171 10s. He was also recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as former holder of lands in Lilliesleaf that had been acquired by Edgar Hunter and were at that time owned by William Riddell of Camieston. He was probably related to John,

leman (le-man) n., poet. a sweetheart, concubine – 'HE would have wooed the gentle may To be his light leman' [JTe], 'Ther ar thriescoore queens, and fourscoore lemanes, an' mays wuthowtten nummer' [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

Lempitlaw (lem-pi'-law) n. village in north-eastern Roxburghshire, about 3 miles east of Kelso. It used also to be the name of a small parish, which was annexed to Sprouston. The church there was connected with Soutra. The site of the 13th century parish church can still be made out in the churchyard, which includes a well-preserved hog-back gravestone. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott of Rankilburn and his son Walter in the early 15th century. They were effectively annexed to the Barony of Branxholme, remaining that way through part of the 16th and 17th centuries. In 1517 they were described as being 'waste', but valued at 20 pounds in times of peace. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. In 1692 the 'tacks' of the lands were set to Sir Patrick Scott, along with those of the Barony of Eckford and the lands in Hawick owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties and still listed as a Buccleuch property in the Land Tax Rolls of the 19th century (the origin of the name is probably Old English 'lempedu hlaw', meaning 'limpet-shaped hill'; it first occurs as 'Lempedelawe' in 1190 and is 'Lompatelaw' in 1426, 'Lompatlaw' in 1463, 'Lempetlaw' in 1484, 'Lompatlaw' in 1517, and 'Lempetlaw' in 1528 and 1553/4).

len (len) n. a loan – 'gie's a len o a fiver', 'Wull ee gie'z a len o eer graip' [ECS], 'Gie's a len' o' eer hurlbarra' [GW], 'Howanever, instead o' comin for the len o' mine for the denner tables ...' [BW1978], v. to loan – 'Sin' I've to len' a haun' to raise the treasure, 'Lang wi' the toil, I'd like to share the pleasure' [JoHa], 'Ane guid man shaws faavor an' len's ...' [HSR], 'Can ye len's half a croon?' [RM], 'He is evir misrecorde, an' len's: an' his affspring ar blisset' [HSR] (shortened form of lend; also written 'len'); see also take a len o).

lenity (le-ni-tee) n., arch. mildness, lenience – '...and whereas the said Mr John of his own lenity, since the aforesaid year 1669, never quarelled several persons in the toun to educat children further than the said book ...' [PR1713].

lenten kail (len-tin-kāl) n., arch. a meatless vegetable soup, often made of boiled cabbage served in milk – 'Dame Appetite, he thought to bang her, But flesh is frail! That day – bad luck, (misfortune hang her), Brought lentrin kail' [JR], 'It [the food] consisted of milk and meal and what was called 'Lenten Kail', an expression now rarely heard in the parish [of Teviothead]' [HAST1902] (also 'lentrin kail'; probably from being served in the Spring).

lenth (lenth) n. length, the extent of something – 'look it the lenth o that hing!', '...lyk as at mair lenth is contenit in the decret gewyn thairwpon ...' [SB1500], 'The paroche is 8 mylles in lenth, so there are some rowmes 8 mylles or thairby from the kirk ...' [PR1627], '...of before she took them away she either made price with the pursuer, or askit his liberty to goe that lenth with them?' [BR1680], '...as the said act ...in it selfe at mair lenth proportions ...' [BR1692], 'The awfihest blatter o rain cam on, and A was amaiest drookeet be A wan the lenth o the Sandbed' [ECS], state of extreme agitation or anger, tantrum, fit – 'she we' an awfi lenth when she saw the mess', 'Hei's gaun a bonnie lenth' [ECS], distance to someone's adode – 'If ee come ma lenth, gie's a ca' [GW], the whole extent – 'The day be the lenth' [GW] (note the difference in pronunciation compared with standard English).

the lenth (thu-lenth) adv. the distance, as far as required – 'But they told Bailie Purdom who went the length, that ...' [PR1722].

the lenth o (thu-lenth-ō) adv. as far as, the full extent of – 'the bairn got the lenth o the street afore they fund 'er', 'Yince an A'd wun there, A thocht, A nicht mebbies cood geet a hurl the lenth o Hawick' [ECS], 'A wun the lenth o' the brig' [GW].

leper squunt (le-pur-skwun) n., arch. a leper's squint, a small, low window in a church through which lepers could hear and see the communion service without coming into contact with the congregation. There may be an example in Cavers Auld Kirk (also written 'leper's' or 'lepers').

the Leper Well (thu-le-pur-wel) n. popular name for a spring near Spittal-on-Rule, still current in the mid-20th century. The spring was surrounded by dressed stones, and its name gives some credence to the idea that there was once a leper's hospital there. It was also known as 'the Kirkyaird Well', and used to be thought to possess healing powers, particularly for skin diseases.

leprosy (lep-ru-see) n. chronic, mildly contagious disease caused by Mycobacterium leprae, characterised by inflamed nodules beneath the skin, loss of sensation and wasting of body parts. It now occurs only in tropical and sub-tropical regions, but was common in Mediæval Europe, where it was seen as both holy and sinful. It was certainly rife throughout the British Isles by the 11th century. Robert the Bruce is suggested to have died of the disease in 1329, and John Turnbull of Minto may have died from it about 1425 (causing a dispute over his lands). The hospital at Spittal-on-Rule may have been founded to help lepers, perhaps related to the Laird of Bedrule. A spring near there was known as a 'leper well'. Cavers Auld Kirk may have a 'leper squint'.

leptous (le-ris) adj., arch. affected with pig 'measles' – '...[Fined] for publicly selling ... ane carcass of swyne which was leptous and consequently dangerous to be made use of' [BR1692].

lese see leeze

the Leshie (thu-le-shee) n. popular name for the Leisure Centre.

Leslie (lez-lee) n. A.J. (19th/20th C.) London sculptor responsible for 'Youth', which was incorporated into the Hawick War Memorial.

the Lesser Toon Hall (thu-le-sur-toon-hal) n. smaller venue in the Town Hall, off the main auditorium, frequently used for lectures, coffee mornings etc.

Lessuden (le-su-din) n. alternative older name for St. Boswells, surviving in Lessuden House (the origin is Old English 'laes side wynn', meaning 'the meadow by the slope with the pasture'; also spelled 'Lessudden').

Lessuden Hoose (le-su-din-hoos) n. family home of the Scots of Raeburn, in St. Boswells. It goes back to at least 1680, with remodelling in each of the following centuries. It has a tower-shaped dovecote dating from about 1800.

lest (lest) v. to last, endure – 'A deh ken how long hei'll lest is the new R.E. teacher', 'She's like a guid bit tweed hersel', 'Made tae lest forever' [IJ], '...thinkin that here was a meenit o his life he

lestit (les-teek) n., adj. elastic – 'My mither aince for lestit sent me roun', 'A yird o' black to dae her need' [WL], 'Skinny' or 'grey' – 'ee even got a choice: Succulent dauds o lestit-sided dough' [DH], 'Sailin roond in a sea o' bliss wi a coconut in yin hand And a 'lestit ba' in the tother ...' [DH] (cf. leskit and eelestit).

let bat (le'-baw) v., arch. to give an indication, let on, inform, declare – 'Never luit bat! = Take no notice! or Keep 'mum'!' [ECS], 'Brer Rabbit 'never luit bat' when he 'lay low and sed nuf-fin' [ECS], 'A hard 'im, but A never let bat' [GW] (usually with a negative; cf. bat).

let dab (le'-dawb) v., arch. to hint, divulge a secret – 'Aw think she jalooses what Aw've come for, but mind, Aw never let dab about the rest o' ee' [JEDM], 'And, loons, here's a secret I'm gaun tae loot dab ...' [DJ] (sometimes 'loot dab').

Letham see Lethem

Letham (le-thum) n. James (1954–) born in Airdrie, he was educated in Aberdeen at Madras College in St. Andrews and at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music in Glasgow. After training as a teacher he was appointed to Galashiels Academy, then became Head of Music at Jedburgh, before succeeding Ian Seeley as Head of Music at Hawick High School in 1997. He has been involved in a large number of musical enterprises in the Borders, including serving as musical director for Hawick Amateur Operatic Society, conductor of the Eildon Singers and the Borders Youth Orchestra and work with the Hawick community choir the Melody Makers. He has been a strong promoter of the work of Hawick-born composer Sir John Blackwood. He also wrote the music for 'The Best O' A'. He retired in 2011 (see also Lethem).

Lethem (le-thum) n. hamlet between the A6088 and A68, just before the Carter Bar, in the eastern part of Southdean Parish. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 3 stedings and valued at £3 6 shillings. In 1541 Thomas Laidlaw was tenant of part paying 22s yearly and Laurence Lawrence and James Laidlaw were tenants of another part paying 22s yearly. John Oliver and Simon Robson were there in 1623. John Thomson was tenant there in 1694. Thomas Scott is recorded there on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls and his son was still there in 1841. Walter Renwick was shepherd there in 1797. James Tully and Thomas Tait were servants there in 1799. There was once a chapel here, but no signs of it remain, although the small hill to the west is known as Chapel Knowe; here there are the remains of a settlement, about 43 m by 33 m in size, overlain by a smaller, roughly triangular enclosure (note, however, that there could be confusion here with the ancient chapel which was once situated in the village of Leitholm in Eccles Parish). A fort is on the hill just to the north. 'Katey's Cross' was also just to the west, once used as a gathering point for a local market, and on the site of the former settlement of 'Wattie's Spinnels' (also written 'Letham', as well as 'Leatham', 'Lethame', etc.; there are other places of the same name in Eccles Parish near Berwick, also called 'Leitholm', as well as elsewhere in Scotland).

Lethem (le-thum) n. Edmund (13th/14th C.) rector of 'the church of Saint Marie of Farmain-ishop' (i.e. St. Mary's of the Lowes, Yarrow) from 1292. He is recorded as 'Master Edmund de Letham'. In 1296 he swore fealty to Edward I, and later that year he received a writ from Edward to restore him to his lands and rights as 'parson of the church of the forest'. Helen nee Turnbull (17th C.) wife of James. She kept an inn in Hawick after her husband's death. Here in 1642 a large group was drinking with a servant of the Laird of Cavers, who accused his companions of stealing his wallet, with the case heard by the Hawick Magistrates. John and William, mentioned in the same case, were her sons. Henry (15th/ 16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbolls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. Isobell (b.1687) born in Hawick, daughter of James and Isobell 'Gyrden'. She is recorded as 'Lithen' in the Parish records in 1713 when she returned to Hawick after working 'in service' in Edinburgh, and was asked to produce a 'testificate' since it was rumoured that she had been married and her husband Benjamin Taylor had deserted her. In 1715 she was described as 'servitrix to ye Laird of Whithaugh' (the one in Liddesdale) when summoned by Hawick Session from Castleton Parish 'to come and satisfie here for her scandal of adulterie'. She stood several mornings at the church door in sackcloth, but because of the distance she had to travel was then leniently 'to appear hereafter on the usual place of repentance in sackcloth two other days, before noon and after noon'.

She appeared for the last time at the end of that year, and appears to have then fully satisfied the Session. It is possible she is the Isobel 'Lithen' recorded in 1716 when her son John, conceived in adultery with John Scott, was baptised in Hawick. By 1723 she appears to have settled into a relationship with William Hood, and again the Session became upset by 'the scandal of adulterie'; she stood in sackcloth for 11 Sundays and her partner William for 6 Sundays. James (16th/17th C.) 'messenger' in Hawick. He was assaulted by Walter Scott of Burnfoot and his wife Margaret with a large stone in St. Mary's Kirk in 1616. The pair were also accused of later assaulting him and his wife Helen Turnbull on the High Street, along with 7 accomplices. The same James was probably an innkeeper, whose widow Helen Turnbull is recorded in 1642 as part of a court case when a group of people were accused of stealing a wallet in her establishment. Their sons are there recorded as John and William 'Lethane'. He may also be the 'James Lechen' recorded in the 1616 trial over the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig's sheep at Howpasley; afterwards when 'Marion's Geordie' was confronted in Hawick as a suspect by James Douglas, he and 2 other men ('Bonnie Johnnie' Scott and James Wemys) took the pistol from Geordie before he could shoot. James (17th C.) probably son of John and Isobel Turnbull. He married Isobel Jardine (or 'Gyrden'). Their children included: John (b.1783); Andrew (b.1686); Isobel (b.1687); and Andrew (again, b.1689). The witnesses in 1689 were Bailie James Deans and Andrew Porteous. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 (suggesting they were related). James (17th C.) recorded as an officer of the Baron in Hawick in 1672, specifically 'the ane of the Erles officers', at the 1672 setting of the fair. In 1673 he was recorded as Procurator-fiscal of the Regality of Hawick. James (17th/18th C.) sheriff officer in Hawick. He was 'officer' in 1700 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Robert Paisley and for Robert Gledstains. In 1702 (or perhaps 1712) he was found guilty by the Session of drinking after 10 p.m., and for swearing. He is described as 'James Leythen, shyreff-officer', but it still seems unclear whether he was a Burgh Officer or an officer of the court. He was 'officer' in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter (who was surely related). He could be the same 'James Leithan' listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. It is possible he was the same James who was Procurator-fiscal of the Regality of Hawick in the 1670s, or otherwise was surely related to him. John (13th C.) witnessed to a charter for Melrose Abbey sometime in the period 1220 to 1243. John (17th C.) son of James and Helen Turnbull. He is described as 'in Hawick' in a 1642 Magistrates Court trial when he was one of several people accused of stealing the wallet of Samuel Rutherford (a servant of Douglas of Cavers) in his mother's inn. He later accused Rutherford of violently demanding the whereabouts of his wallet. His brother William was also mentioned in the 1642 case. He could be the John 'Lithen', married to Isobel Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1648), James (again, b.1649), Helen (b.1652), William (b.1654), or alternatively the John, married to Janet Gledstains, whose son Francis was baptised in Hawick in 1643. Probably the same John 'Lethane' was mentioned in Hawick in 1656, when Martin Elliot was ordered to pay 30 shillings 'for absence from his service for 5 weeks', although let off the money claimed 'for the Trooper coming to the said John Lethane'. John (17th C.) Bailie or officer of the Baron in Hawick in 1673. In that year the Earl of Queensberry complained that his representatives were attacked when trying to 'ride the fair' in Hawick 'and particularly did assault and invade the said John Leathen with drawn swards, and masterfully pulled him off his horse, tore off his clothes, and struck him'. His surname is given as 'Leathen', and it is possible this may have been a variant of 'Leyden' rather than 'Lethem'. However, he may have been related to the slightly later James 'Leythen' who was a 'shyreff-officer'. Richard (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident recorded as 'Leythen' in 1707. William Sutter was rebuked for being in his house at the time of Sunday morning service. Walter (17th/18th C.) shoemaker listed among the young men fined for their part in the disturbances at the Common Riding of 1706; his surname is recorded in the Town Book as 'Leythen'. The group seemed to be mostly from the West-end, suggesting he was also from there. He is probably the Walter, son of William 'Lithen' and Jane Morrison, born in Hawick in 1682. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1722 for Sheriff Officer William Henderson. He was Walter 'Lithen' when he married Isobel Newbie in 1707; they had several children baptised in Hawick, including Marion (b.1708), James (b.1711), William (b.1713), Jane (b.1715), Walter (b.1717), Gavin (b.1719), Robert (b.1721) and Patrick (b.1723). The witnesses in 1711 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and James Lethem 'officer', in 1717 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and saddler Francis Ruecastle, in 1721 were Bailies George Martin and Robert Ruecastle, and in 1723 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and merchant John Cavers. William (17th C.) brother of John in Hawick. They were listed in 1642 among acquaintances of Samuel Rutherford, servant of the Laird of Cavers, who accused them of stealing his wallet in Hawick. William (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He is probably father of shoemaker Walter, and hence likely to have been a shoemaker himself. He is likely the son of John and Isobel Turnbull, born in Hawick in 1654 and the husband of Jane Morrison, whose children baptised in Hawick included Walter (b.1682), Thomas (b.1684), Beatrix (b.1687) and Helen (b.1689). the witnesses in 1684 were Thomas Turnbull and James 'Lithen' (who was surely related). (spellings vary, such as 'Leithan', 'Lethane', 'Letham' and 'Lithen'; the surname probably derives from the lands of Leitholm in Berwickshire, but some fraction may come from the more local area in Southdean Parish; it is possible that the name was once the same as or confused with Leyden).

let oot (let-oot, le'-oo) interj., arch. phrase said by children to others who had blocked the gutter with their feet – 'At a given signal, the cry of Let oot! the water was freed to ruch 'doon the brae' in a grand spate' [ECS].

Letzlingen (letz-ling-gin) n. site of a Common Riding festival organised by Hawick men serving in the K.O.S.B. during WWII, when??.

leuch (lewch) pp., arch. laughed, uttered a laugh – 'And leugh, and cried, as he trampet him down – He will be a sottering bleeze' [JTe], ... An' tellt them. Some leugh, others thought him gaen mad' [JoHa], '... An' leugh to hersel', an' blest that morn, When poverty doom'd her mankind's scorn' [JoHa], '... An' whiles we leuch, an' whiles we grat' [JJ], 'An' aye he chucklt, an' aye he leuch, At what suld come to passe ...' [WiSp], 'Hei leuch at the laich door-heid' [JAHM], 'The captain turned him round, and leugh; Said – ‘Man, there’s naething in thy house, But ae auld sword without a sheath, That hardly now wad fell a mouse!’ [T], ‘A’ll aye meind the lauch ei leuch!’ [ECS], ‘He leuch a guid yin’ (= had a hearty laugh) [GW], ‘... he never leuch but when the clock chappit’ [DMW], ‘Syne he up and he leuch at the baur he uttered, And missed the aith that the leddy muttered’ [WL] (also written ‘leugh’; past tense of lauch; the past participle form is leuchen); the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ū and oo).

leuch (lewch) adj., arch. low in various senses, not high, short – ‘Cash from Andrew Pertos, for the rent of the leach prison, 0 10 0’ [BR1751], ‘Shurelie men o’ leuch degree ar vanitie: an’ men o’ heich degree ar ane lee’ [HSR], ‘Beith leuch an’ heich, riche an’ puir thegither’ [HSR], ‘Duist at the gangeen-in ti the village, along the laeuch road thonder ...’ [ECS], ‘A leuch-lyin’ place’ [GW], adv. low in respect to situation (also written ‘laeuch’ and perhaps ‘leach’; cf. laigh and law).

leuchen (lew-chin) pp., arch. laughed, ridiculed – ‘Than Herod, whan he saw that he was leuchen at o’ the wyse men, was excessiv angrie ...’ [HSR] (this is the past participle of lauch, with the past tense being leuch).

the Level (thu-le-vul) n. popular name for the High Level pub.

Leven (lee-vin) n. old name for the ‘Line’ or ‘Lyne’ Water just over the Border in Cumbria. It was formerly one of the lawless valleys of the Border. It is probably the place referred to in the late 15th and early 16th centuries when many Scotsmen were charged by the Privy Council with ‘communing with the English of Levin’ and similar. For example, in 1493 Walter Scott of Headshaw paid a fine for ‘treasonably Intercommuning with the Thieves and Traitors of Levyn’ and Robert Scott in Todshawhaugh and John Turnbull in Hawick compounded for bringing in rebels ‘de levyn’. In 1494/5 Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for bringing in 5 Armstrong brothers, traitors ‘de levyn’. In a note to a legal case of 1502, Pitcairn gave a footnote to word ‘Levin’ as ‘A district of Lancashire, then infamous for its ‘Traitoris’ and ‘lymmaris,’ who made numerous raids and forays every year on the least protected parts of the Scottish Borders’. However, it seems likely that the term was used to apply fairly generally to rieviers from over the Border, rather than only for Englishmen from this valley. Thomas Musgrave in 1583 described it thus: ‘Black Leven water is a littell brooke, and so is Whyt Leven the lyke, and are not in anie place a myle and a halfe distant one from an other, and are inhabyted with the Nyxons, untill it come to a place called the Blackdobs, are then the Rutligis dwell on bothe the side of it, untill it come to a place called the Lukkins of Leven, then it descends Sowpert, wheare the Taylors have it, thens it descendes the boundes of Sopert, and is inhabyted with Graymes called the Graymes of Leven, and runeth into the ryver of Eske at Gorth Storys howse called the Lard. There is also a river of the same name in North Yorkshire, which drains Lake Windermere into Morecambe Bay, but it seems unlikely this is what is meant in the 15th and 16th century references (it is written ‘levy’ in 1493).

lew in (loo-in) v., arch. to involve, oblige to do something – ‘Ti lewe in = to involve; to ‘let in’ or ‘drag in’ [ECS], ‘A was lew’d in ti pay his fine’ [GW] (also written ‘lewe in’; only used in the past participle).

Lewenlees (lew-in-leez) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded c.1376 on a rental roll as part of the area then known as Ermildon. It was recorded as ‘Lewynleys’, and valued at 16 shillings and 2 pence. In 1541 it was ‘Lewinlowis’ and valued at 10 shillings, with Robert Elliot as tenant.

Lewenshope (lew-inz-hōp) n. former farm on the north side of the Yarrow valley, south of Hangingshaw. These were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, leased to Sir George Douglas and to the Murrays, with the Murrays continuing as owners into the 16th century. James Murray of Falahill held the lands of the Queen in 1528 and assigned them to his wife, Margaret Home. Patrick Murray of Hangingshaw was recorded as owner in 1541, when the rental was £50. ‘Lewinshope & Scadarig’ were held by Johnstone of Alva in the 1802 Land Tax Rolls (it is marked both ‘Lewinshoope’ and ‘lewinshoop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Lewynnishop’ in 1456 and 1471, ‘Lewinishope’ in 1484, ‘Lewynshop’ in 1486, ‘lewynhop’ in 1494/5, ‘Lewinshop’ in 1502 and ‘Lewynnishop’ in 1541).

lewer (loo-ur) n., arch. a lever, pole for levering – ‘The mouse proposes to join her in spinning; and inquires, ‘But where will I get a spindle, fair

Lewis (loo-is) n. Alexander (19th C.) listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a cole merchant for the Duke of Buccleuch, based at the Hawick Station. James (b.1828/9) born in Cavers Parish, son of Walter and Barbara. He was living with his parents at Howgill in Ewesdale in 1841. By 1851 he was teacher at Burnmouth School in Castleton Parish. He lived there with his younger sister. By 1861 he had been replaced by John Hardie, but it is unclear what happened to him.

ley see lei

ley (II) n., arch. lea, untilled ground – ‘Well, we had special socks for the ley, an couters for the ley, an when ye gaed on tae stubble, ye used the bigger rougher type’ [TH], ‘Some pech wi beagles owre the leys, And think it pleasant ...’ [DH].

leycht see licht

Leyden (lā-, II-din) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married ‘Issobell Lune’ and their son William was baptised in 1682. Adam (17th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Ledan in Little Cavers’ in 1684 when he was among those proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. Adam (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Andrew (b.1694), baptised in Cavers Parish, was probably his son. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Spittal in 1721. He is probably the Adam who married Helen Turnbull in Cavers in 1709 and their children included: Helen (b.1710); Betty (b.1712); Jane (b.1714); Isabel (b.1717); William (b.1719); and James (b.1721). Adam (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Pott. He married Elizabeth Richardson in 1752 and their children included: John (b.1757); Adam (b.1759); Elizabeth (b.1761); Peter (b.1762); Walter (b.1765); and Robert (b.1767). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation, in 1762 were weaver John Simpson and Kirk Officer Alexander Bunnan and in 1765 were Alex Nivison and James Brydon. He could be the Adam ‘Liddon’ who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. He is probably the Adam whose son Andrew died in 1778. Adam (b.c.1770s) carrier in Hawick according to the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. His name was drawn in 1800, in place of John Fowler, who was found to be too old to serve. However, he was ‘found unfit for Service from an ulcer in his leg’ and John Scott from Weensland

Mill drawn in his place. Adam (b.c.1780) servant at Hassendeanburn according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish. Adam (b.1780/1) bookseller in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on Miller’s Close with farmer John (probably his brother) and Helen (John’s wife). In 1851 he was a lodger on O’Connell Street. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (1788–1876) son of Robert and Helen Clerk. He was a farmer living up the Loan. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer of 30 acres, and resided at about 66 High Street. His fields were probably up the Wellogate. In 1816 he married Margaret Laidlaw, and she died in 1856. Their children included: Robert (1819–77), who married Betty McAlpine; Betty (b.1819), who died young; John (1821–57); Matthew (b.1824), who died in Melbourne; Andrew (b.1830), coal agent and Cornet; and Helen (b.1834), who married Alexander Nivison Scott. Adam (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Stewart and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1833. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. He is probably the Andrew, married to Catherine Aitchison, whose children baptised in Hawick included Manie (b.1635) and Christian (b.1640). The witnesses in 1640 were William Lorraine and Simon Adamson. He himself witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Scott in 1640. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (probably actually the Hassendean area). He witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott and Isobel Turnbull in 1683 and another for Gavin Turnbull in 1684. He married Janet Fletcher and their children included: Isobel (b.1681); and Andrew (b.1683). The witnesses in 1681 were William Turnbull and William Redford and in 1683 were Robert Thomson and James Thomson. Andrew (18th/19th C.) youngest brother of Dr. John. He stated that, although young at the time, he remembers the farewell visit of his brother, and their mother singing the ballads ‘Young Benjie’, ‘Tamlane’ and ‘Bonora’. Andrew (b.1830) son of Yeddie, farmer at the Wellogate, who lived at 66 High Street. His mother was Margaret Laidlaw, from Melrose. He was Cornet in 1857, when the first known photograph of the Principals was taken (note that there is some confusion over whether the image might be flipped, with the sash over the wrong shoulder and hence the Ritgh- and Left-Hand Men switched). He worked as a coal agent. In 1859 he married Margaret Elliot (b.1829) from Castleton Parish, daughter of John Elliot and Fanny Wilson. He moved to 6 Cross Wynd and later moved to Newcastle where he ran a pub. Their children included: Frances (formerly surname Elliot, b.1856); William Elliot (b.1859); Margaret (b.1861), who died young; Adam (b.1862), cabinet maker; and John (b.1864). George (b.c.1775) baker who lived at about 49 High Street. He is recorded there in 1841 with his wife Janet and children Joan, George and Margaret. He married Janet Noble and their children included: Adam (b.1804); Helen (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); Jane (b.1813); Peter (b.1817); George (b.c.1820); and Margaret (b.c.1825). James (1637/8–88) tenant in Earlside and ancestor of John Casper. He was probably among the tenants of Douglas of Cavers who complained about punitive rental demands on them in 1684 (as punishment for supporting Lady Cavers and other Covenanters). His gravestone in Cavers kirkyard was written in verse, starting 'Here lies the body of James Leydon, In this churchyard beneath this stone; And Margaret Scott, his spouse alone, Lyeth also here beneath this stone. And their posterity that's gone, Lies also here beneath this stone: William, Adam Leydon, and John, Ly also here beneath this stone. In Earlside they lived some years ago, Now here they ly beneath this stone'. He was said to have composed his own epitaph and to have been known locally for his verse. John Casper (in the glossary for the 'Complaynt of Scotland', described him as 'John [sic] Leyden, a poetical farmer in Upper Teviotdale, who died in 1688', writing the lines 'The plough and harrow, Commend me thra thé; The frail it is a flinging fiend: Kit, cap and can, Commend me to thé; For thou's been aye my stannin friend'. He adds that 'many more of his rude strains were recollected by the peasants of Teviotdale within these twenty years; but all are now supposed to be lost, except his own epitaph'. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included William, Adam and John. His will is recorded in 1688. He could be the James (with surname blank) recorded 'in Earlesyde' in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. James (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys that killed about 200 men. Most of those who survived were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica or New Jersey. James (17th C.) tenant in Little Cavers. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He may be the James who was listed at Ashybank in 1694 or the James in 'Estlodge' (if this is East Lodge) whose will is recorded in 1698. James (17th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. The will of his wife Margaret Greenshields is recorded in 1690. James (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1788–91. He was a carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and had 4 horses at that time. He is probably the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose son Adam was baptised in Hawick in 1783. He is probably also the James 'Leadon' whose child died in Hawick in 1787. James (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Hay in Hawick in 1813. Jane (b.1813) one of the operators of the first 4 power looms to arrive in Hawick, at Dicksons & Laings in 1830. She seems likely to be the 'Joan Leyden', working as a 'Woollen Yarn Warper', aged about 25 and living with her parents at 49 High Street in 1841; she must have been still a teenager when she first learned how to use the powerloom. Her father was baker George. It is unclear where she was living at the time of the 1851 census. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1688 along with Bessie Wilson, when they were fined for insulting Bailie Scott when he was equipping the Royalist Militia. Janet (17th C.) listed 'eist the water' in Hawick when she paid the Hearth Tax in 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Gledstains and their son Francis was baptised in 1643. His surname is given as 'Lithen'. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included James (b.1648), James (again, b.1649), Helen (b.1652) and William (b.1654). The witnesses in 1654 were Andrew Liddersdale and Robert Scott. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Young and their children included Janet (b.1688). John (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1694); Isabel (b.1696); and Margaret (again, b.1696). William (b.1693), baptised in Hawick, may also be his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident at Dodburn. In 1706 he married Janet Scott in Hawick Parish; he was recorded being from Kirkton Parish. His children baptised in Cavers and Kirkton Parishes included: James (b.1706); Samuel (b.1707); and James (again, b.1709). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Tower in 1727 when he married Bessie Murray. He may be the John who was in Denholm in 1730 when his son Samuel was baptised. He may also be the John who was in Birneyknow when his unnamed child was baptised. He may be the John who married Jane English in 1713. His other children may have included: Adam (b.1714); Bessie (b.1718); John (b.1722); Adam (b.1724); Hugh (b.1726); Isabel (b.1728); Walter (b.1728); John (b.1734); Margaret (b.1736); Euphan (b.1738); an unnamed child (b.1740); another unnamed child (b.1742); Margaret (b.1743); and James (b.1744). It seems likely that there are at least 2 families here. John (18th C.) tailor in Denholm, recorded in 1726. Probably the same John was also recorded in Denholm in 1730 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. His children included: Hugh (b.1726); and Bessie (b.1730). It is unclear which other children were his, and which were the other contemporary James in Cavers. John (18th C.) cooper at Dykes. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1730. He may be the John who married Bessie Murray in 1727. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Margaret Laidlaw. Their children included Robert (b.1750). John (b.1764), Margaret (b.1766), Nelly (b.1767) and Betty (b.1769) may also have been his children. John (18th C.) father of John Casper (b.1775). He was shepherd at Henlawshiel from the late 1770s and later took over the whole of Nether Tofts. He married Isabella (or Isabel) Scott. They had 3 other sons, as well as 2 daughters. His children may include Betty (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771), Jean (b.1777) and Mary (b.1780), all born in Cavers Parish, but with no mother's name given. Robert was one son and the youngest was Andrew (but there appear to be no records of their baptisms). He is probably the John, son of John, born in Cavers Parish in 1734. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included Thomas (b.1778) and Margaret (b.1792). John (18th/19th C.) heckler at Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William was also recorded in Denholm, and so probably related. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may either be the resident of Castleton Parish who married Helen Scott or the one who married Margaret Kerr.

John (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton. He married Helen Scott and had children John (b.1798) and Francis (b.1800). John (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton. He married Margaret Kerr and had a daughter Isabel (b.1799). John (d.1808) from Cavers Parish, he was described as a lapidary (i.e. jeweller) in Edinburgh when his death was reported in the Scots Magazine. He left £50 to his native parish. Dr. John Casper (1775–1811) linguist and poet, born in Denholm, in the thatched cottage on the Green (which can be seen in an early photo of Denholm, and still exists today). His father John was manager at Nether-Tofts farm and his mother Isabella Scott was from Liddesdale. The family moved to Henlawshiel when he was four. He was taught to read by his grandmother and learned Border ballads from his mother. He went to Kirkton School at age 9, where his roughly 3 years of schooling was interrupted by one schoolmaster dying and another being removed. He was tutored by Rev. James Duncan of Denholm for another couple of years, where he developed his Latin and Greek abilities. It is said that his father wanted to purchase an ass to convey him the 3 or so miles to Denholm, and although put off by the ridicule he would get from his classmates, he accepted the offer when the owner threw in a copy of an old language dictionary (the 'Calepini Dictionarium Octalingue'). At age 15 he went to Edinburgh University (apparently going half-way with his father on a horse, then walking the rest), where he qualified as a doctor and a minister. In Edinburgh he joined the Literary Society, where he made many friends and practised public speaking. He is said to have already known French, Spanish, Italian, German, ancient Icelandic, Arabic and Persian before he was 20! On trips back to Denholm he studied in a bower in Denholm Dean in the summers and in Cavers old kirk in the winters. He also spent one summer as an assistant teacher at Clovenfords (more specifically Caddonlee), where he met Nicol the poet. He was also allowed access to the library of Cavers House when back from university. He was said to be fond of practical jokes, e.g. playing to claims he was dabbling in the black arts by scaring people (with an accomplice draped in the mortcloth) in Cavers Kirk who had come to watch him summon spirits; when he was a guest preacher in Cavers in about 1798 he mischievously took as his text 'Get thee behind me, Satan'. In the later 1790s he served as private tutor in the summers, and so spent less and less time in his beloved Borderland.

With an interest in travel and other cultures, he wrote 'Historical and Philosophical Sketch of the Discoveries and Settlements of the Europeans in Northern and Western Africa, at the Close of the Eighteenth Century', published in 1799. Additionally he contributed poetry to the Edinburgh Magazine. However, he continued to be a regular attender at Hawick markets, and nearly came to grief there in 1799, when a troop of Volunteers, friends of Mungo Park's, objected to Park's treatment in his book on African discoveries. He was licensed to preach in St. Andrews in 1798, and gave occasional sermons around Edinburgh. At one point there was an arrangement for him to become assistant and successor to the minister of Cavers, but this fell through. He collaborated with Walter Scott in collecting ballads, wrote poetry and edited 'the Scots Magazine' for about 6 months. In 1800 he spent several months touring the Highlands (his manuscript travelogue being published much later). His poem 'The Elfin-king' was published in Lewis' 'Tales of Wonder' in 1801. On having the prospect of an appointment with the East India Company as assistant surgeon, he quickly completed his medical training, receiving an M.D. from St. Andrews. He paid his last visit to his parents and Teviotdale in late 1802. He missed embarking on the intended ship through illness, that ship wrecking on Margate Sands. While waiting for the next ship he prepared the epic 'Scenes of Infancy' for publication. He then sailed for Madras, where he served as surgeon, then went as surgeon and naturalist on an expedition through Mysore, although he became ill and convalesced in the house of Sir John Malcolm (of Eskdale). His anthology 'The Scottish Descriptive Poems with some illustrations of Scottish literary antiquities' was published in 1803. It was said that he was ill with fever in India in 1804 when news reached him of the False Alarm and how the volunteers mustered; when hearing particularly about the Liddesdale men marching into Hawick to the tune 'Wha daur meddle wi' me?', he jumped from his sick bed and gesticulated wildly while singing the old song. In 1805 he went on a sea voyage to Pulo Penang (Prince of Wales Island) Malaysia, where he was the only European on-board, and they narrowly avoided being captured by the French. He spent months there, where he met Stamford Raffles among other people, addressing his verses 'The Dirge of the departed Year' to Raffles' wife Olivia. He returned to Calcutta and after writing a dissertation on asiatic languages was appointed

Professor of the Hindostani language in Bengal College, which he later gave up to be a Judge in Calcutta (being appointed by Lord Minto). After 2 years he switched position again to be a Commissioner of the Court of Requests in Calcutta, which required knowledge of the local languages. In 1810 he became Assay Master at the Calcutta mint, with relatively high salary and light duties. But this new easy life was short-lived, for in 1811 he accompanied Lord Minto on an expedition to Java, where he helped translate and write letters between the British and local chiefs. He accompanied the conquering British troops to Batavia but there contracted a fever (it is said from the 'pestilential air' of a store room containing ancient objects in a Dutch government building, but probably either malaria or dengue). Three days later he was dead, at the age of 36. He was buried at Tanabang Cemetery, Batavia (now Jakarta). He was said to be of medium stature, but strong and athletic in his youth. He also strictly abstained from vices. He talked loudly and a lot (Lord Minto wrote 'I do not believe so great a reader was ever so great a talker) in a 'shrill, piercing, and at the same time grating voice'. He was proudly independent, was said to be lacking in refined manners, and retained his Teviotdale accent throughout his life (which put off many Englishmen). Encouraged to lose his accent he replied 'Learn English! no, never; it was trying to learn that language that spoilt my Scotch, and as to being silent, I will promise to hold my tongue, if you will make fools hold theirs'. It is said that the main defect of his personality was 'his passion for display' and hence 'he was naturally enough judged by many, who measured him by an ordinary standard, to be more superficial than profound'. Nevertheless his drive to study, even through illness, was remarkable, and he said 'I cannot be idle; and whether I die or live, the wheel must go round to the last'. He is supposed to have spoken 34 separate languages or dialects (the estimated numbers vary), and translated several texts in obscure dialects. He also translated some of the gospels of the New Testament into Pushtu, Maldivian, Beluchi, Macassar and Bugi. At the time of his death he was contemplating a comparative arrangement of languages. There are only 2 surviving likenesses of him, one being a sketch made by Capt. George Elliot on the voyage to Java. A monument to him was erected in 1861 in the middle of Denholm Green, designed by Hector H. Orrock. The cottage in which he was born still stands on the north side of the Green. A granite obelisk was erected at Henlawshiel where he spent his childhood. His first published poem was in the Edinburgh Literary Magazine in 1795, followed by many more, including 'Ruberslaw' that same year; these first contributions were signed 'J.L., Banks of the Teviot'. As part of his long poem 'Scenes of Infancy' (1803), he wrote the oft-quoted lines: 'Boast! Hawick, boast! thy structures rear'd in blood, Shall rise triumphant over flame and flood; Still doom'd to prosper, since on Flodden's field Thy sons a hardy band, unwont to yield, Fell with their martial king, and (glorious boast!) Gain'd proud renown where Scotia's fame was lost'. His 2 other poems with local flavour are 'Lord Soulis' and 'Cout of Kielder'. He contributed several pieces to Scott's 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border' (1801), including most of the essay on fairy superstitions. The glossary of his annotated 'The Complaynt of Scotland' (1801) is a useful early source of local words. He also edited 'Scottish Descriptive Poems' (1803). Much of his output was published in 'The Poetical Remains of the Late Dr. John Leyden, with Memoirs of His Life', edited by Rev. James Morton (1819). Although his poetry has largely gone out of fashion, the fantastic poems 'The Mermaid' and 'The Elfin King' have had a lasting popularity. Several of his translations and other largely completed projects, left with his friends Richard Heber and William Erskine, were published posthumously, but others were lost forever. 2 books, 'Life of Dr. John Leyden, Poet and Linguist' (1908) by John Reith, and 'Leydeniana: or, Gleanings from some unpublished documents regarding Dr. Leyden' (1912) by James Sinton, collected much of what had been learned about Leyden in subsequent years. A centenary celebration was held in Denholm in 1875 and there were also events in 2011 to mark the 200th anniversary of his death. A booklet 'Dr. Leyden's Punjabi Translations' was published in 2011 - 'The tongue that was spoken by Leyden and Scott ...' [WS], 'His bright and brief career is o'er, And mute his tuneful strains; Quenched is his lamp of varied lore, That lov'd the light of song to pour; A distant and a deadly shore Has Leyden's cold remains' [SWS], '... Since Leyden left his dearly loved strand To find a grave in scorched Java's sand' [JoHa], 'Poor Leyden suffered death's eclipse Upon a foreign strand, The words upon his dying lips Were o' the Borderland' [JBS], 'Regretted by the worthy and the wise, A higher monument is his, by far, Than any costly pile of stones can show, Or sculptured column towering to the skies' [JCG], 'A fremm land claimed his banes, and though He feared we'd a' forget In loyal herts oor lad o' pairts Will lang be honoured yet' [WL]. John (b.c.1780) employee of Walter Richardson according to the ballot for the Militia in Hawick in 1801. John (b.c.1785) farmer on the High Street. He was living on Miller's Close in 1841. His wife was Helen and they also lived with Adam (probably his brother), a bookseller. Janet, who was probably related, was a widow on Miller's Close in 1851, with daughter Jane and grand-daughter Margaret Hutton. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Denholm. He married Isabella, daughter of Rev. William Burn. Their children included: John (c.1805-50); Percy Georgina (b.c.1809), who married James Miller; and William (b.1811), proprietor of the Fox & Hounds; Isabella (1815-64); and Douglas (1817-18). John (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Minto in Hobkirk Parish in 1818. John Lamb, O.B.E., C.B.E. (1904-88) descendant of John Casper, he was born locally and became a linguist and diplomat. A plaque to his memory was added to the Leyden memorial. Margaret 'Peggy' (18th C.) servant at Cavers in 1791, when she worked for George Douglas. Matthews (b.1794/5) stocking maker in Wilton and Hawick. In 1835 he was listed among heads of households at Wilton, but in 1840 and 1841 was at Melgund Place. By 1851 he was a foreman in a wollen factory, living at 3 Weensland (which probably meant Weensland Mill Houses). In the 1841 census he was at about 7 Melgund Place. His wife was Helen (or Ellen) and their children included Robert, Helen, Margaret, John, Edward N. and George. Robert (c.1770-1840) carrier in Hawick. In 1816 he purchased 66 High Street, and the buildings behind 66 and 68, from stockingmaker Walter Murray. His family owned these properties for almost 50 years. He may have been the Robert who was son of Adam and Eliza Richardson, born in Hawick in 1766. He is recorded as a carrier in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He married Helen Clerk in 1791 and she is probably the wife of his whose death is recorded in 1808. Their son Adam ('Yeddie') farmed up the Wellogate. He probably died in the cholera epidemic, his death being listed along with 9 others on the same day. Robert (18th/19th C.) son of John and brother of Dr. John. He studied medicine. He lived for a while in the old family house in Denholm and was an early member of the Subscription Library there. It is said that he took an unfinished portrait of his brother John

Leyden Bank

(perhaps the only accurate portrait) and had it altered to become a portrait of himself. Sir Walter Scott wrote to him on hearing the news of his brother's death. Robert (1819–77) son of Adam and Margaret Laidlaw, he was baptised in Robertson Parish. He married Betty McAlpine. Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Beatrix Balmer in 1844 and their children included: George Lunn (b.1855); Robert (b.1857); and Helen (b.1862). Samuel (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was at Dodburn in 1730 when he married Helen Elliot. His children, baptised in Cavers, included John (b.1731), an unnamed child (b.1737), Hanna (b.1743), Jean (b.1745), Elizabeth (b.1748). William (17th C.) married Bessie Elliot in Robertson Parish in 1688. His wife was from Cavers Parish. He is probably the William who witnessed baptisms for Isobel (perhaps his sister) and William Lamb in Robertson in 1687 and 1688. William (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was probably related to Adam, who was also listed in Denholm. He is probably the William who was living at Ashybank in 1702. He could be the William whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Andrew (b.1694); James (b.1696); John (b.1702); and Janet (b.1704). William (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written 'Leadin'. He could be the 'W. Leyden' fined along with 'J. Swan' in 1702 for drunkenness. William (17th/18th C.) wright in Denholm in 1722 when his son Adam was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers Parish, who were probably his include William (b.1716), Helen (b.1717), William (again, b.1720), Bessie (b.1727) and William (again, b.1732). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included an unnamed son (b.1724), William (b.1726), John (b.1728), Euphan (b.1731) and James (b.1734). William (18th C.) married Helen Blyth in Cavers Parish in 1726. William (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably related to the William mentioned in 1735 when the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate, which was to the east of his. He had a son who died in Hawick in 1815. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1751. William (18th/19th C.) cooper in Denholm, recorded in 1769 and 1771. His children included James (b.1769) and Janet (b.1771). Probably the same William was the resident in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse

Leyden's Cottage

Tax Rolls; he was probably related to James, who is also listed under Denholm. There appear to have been 2 contemporary Williams in Cavers, with other children of one or other family being Jane (b.1763), Betty (b.1765), John (b.1765), Isabel (b.1767), James (b.1767), Betty (b.1770), Jeany (b.1773) and Bellow (b.1773). William (18th C.) married Isabel Hardie in Hawick Parish in 1778. William (b.1811) born in Denholm, son of John and Isabella Burn. In his youth he was a superb athlete, excelling at multiple sports at the St. Ronan's Games in the period 1832–35. In 1833 he won both the running and standing versions of the 'hop, step and leap', as well as 2 races. In 1834 and 1835 he won just about every event he entered, including the long jump, high jump, wrestling and throwing. He was also said to have once ran from Denholm to Innerleithen, won the race there, and then ran home, all in one day! He was a stockingmaker in Denholm and also proprietor of the Fox and Hounds. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as vintner at the 'Hare & Hounds'. His wife was Cecilia and their children included Elizabeth and Isabella (formerly written with many variants, including 'Leadin', 'Leadon', 'Ledan', 'Leidan', 'Leidane', 'Leidden', 'Leiden', 'Leidon', 'Leidone', 'Leydon', 'Lidden', 'Lithen', 'Lydan', 'Lyden', 'Lydon', etc.).

Leyden Bank (lā-din-bawngk) n. street in Weensland, developed in 1963 and named after John Leyden.

Leyden Cottage (lā-din-ko'-eej) n. house in Denholm that was the birthplace of John Leyden in 1775. It is a small thatched and harled cottage off the north corner of the Green, on Leyden Road. It bears a commemorative plaque, and is now designated a 'Class B' listed building. It can be seen in the 1850s sketch by J.A.H. Murray and in a photograph from perhaps the 1860s. It was re-thatched in 1946 (also called 'Leyden's Cottage').

Leyden Monument (lā-, ll-din-mo-new-min') n. memorial to John Leyden erected on Denholm Green in 1861. It was designed by Hector H. Orrock and sculpted by Handyside Ritchie. It consists of a Swinton stone Gothic spire on top of two tiers of Aberdeen granite columns. It used to get an annual wash by the Denholm fire brigade. It was restored in 1982 with funds raised by a sponsored walk following the route Leyden took when he left to attend Edinburgh University.

Leyden's Cottage see Leyden Cottage

Leyden's Road (lā-, II-dinz-rōd) n. street in Denholm, lying between Sunnyside and the Canongate (also called 'Leyden Road').

Leyden's Trei (lā-dinz-trī) n. popular name for a former tree in Denholm Dean, where it is said that John Leyden composed some of his poetry, such as 'Scenes of Infancy'. The location of the tree's stump is marked in a photograph in the Border Magazine for 1896.

Leyden's View (lā-dinz-vew) n. house on Main Street in Denholm.

Leyes (leez) n. former name of lands in Liddesdale, roughly between Stichell Hill and Riccarton. It is now marked by 'Leys Burn' and the farm of Leysburnfoot. Adam Elliot of the Leyes was recorded in 1541 and 'Hob of the Leyes' in 1595. The lands there were rented by the Duke of Buccleuch to his Chamberlain John Laing in 1736. The farmhouse must have been quite close to what became Riccarton Junction (it is 'Leyis' in 1541; it is probably the place marked 'Lires' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Leythen (II-thin) n. James (17th/18th C.) Sheriff-Officer in Hawick, recorded in 1702.

Richard (17th/18th C.) probably an innkeeper in Hawick. In 1707 William 'Sator' was rebuked for coming to his house during the time of church service in the morning (this is probably a variant of Leyden).

liart (II-ur) adj., arch. streaked with grey or white – '...and a nag of lyart colour, two oxen, three cows, one cowdow, ten auldscheip, six lambs now in the possession of the said Andrew [of Friarshaw]' [SPB1581], 'And startled up auld liart carlins may be Englished, 'and transformed themselves into old grey headed witches'' [EM1820], '...Even as he spoke, a glancing ball His lyart temple grazed' [JTe] (also written 'lyart').

libel (II-bul) v., arch. to state as grounds for prosecution – '...either to their respective confessions or refusing to depone in the matter lybelled for the reasons and causes and many other reasons above written ...' [BR1706] (also written 'lybel').

libelt (II-bult) n., arch. a tedious discourse, harangue.

liberty (li-ber'-ee) n., arch. authorization, sanction to do something – '...and that nane within the burgh take money far ony merchant for libertie to stand before their doors ...' [BR1662], '...Walter Scott of Goldilands, quhair in he desyred liberty to bigg upon the topp of that pairt of the Common dyke quhich marcheth with his ground ...' [BR1675], '...the Laird of Gledstaines ...obtained allwayes when neid requyred the lyke libertie without interruptione' [BR1704], privileges enjoyed by a free burgh, right of trading within a burgh – 'Item, that the hale websters ...convene and meet together ...on any occasion concerning the craft, or for any other particular concerning the town and liberties thereof ...' [BR1640].

the Library (thu-II-bru-ree) n. Hawick Public Library, founded in 1878 under the provision of the Public Libraries Act (which allowed the use of rate money). It started in rooms in the Exchange, with a temporary move to Bridge Street in 1883, before moving to an upstairs part of the new Town Hall in 1886. The earlier history is unclear, with some accounts suggesting that the first 'public' library was founded in 1760 or the first 'subscription library' in 1762, with other 'circulating libraries' started later; the 'Public Library of Hawick' published a catalogue in 1792. Dr. Charters of Wilton set up a free circulating library for members of his congregation in the early 1800s. The Trades' Library was started in 1802. The current library building on North Bridge Street, built with a gift of £10,000 from Andrew Carnegie, was opened in 1904 by Carnegie himself, with Mrs. Carnegie ceremonially unlocking the doors with a golden key. The opening day was a half holiday in the town, and the streets were decorated with flags etc. It was designed by John Nicholl Scott and Alexander Lorne Campbell of Edinburgh (who also designed the Boer War Memorial), following a design competition. The building has some stonework by William Birnie Rhind, with the exterior dominated by the corner entrance tower and the round-headed gables. There are 4 large windows with heraldic designs, with the arms of Dunfermline (Carnegie's home town), Hawick, Galashiels, Selkirk, Jedburgh, Kelso, Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Berwickshire and emblems of Scotland, England and Ireland, together with the arms and mottoes of the Ker, Scott, Douglas, Gladstains, Elliot, Armstrong and Turnbull families. A catalogue of the library's books was published in 1904. Users were able to choose books directly (without use of a catalogue and staff request) from 1926. The building had a major extension in 1939, funded by Sir Thomas and Lady Henderson. In 1956 it became the first library in Scotland to offer a homebound service. The Library was taken over by Borders Regional Council in 1975 and is now integrated into the Scottish Borders Council Library Service. It still holds a valuable reference section of materials relating to Hawick. There were extensive internal refurbishments in 1987 and computerisation came in 1999. It is a grade B listed building, which celebrated its centenary in 2004, with several events, including a re-enactment of the opening ceremony. The first person appointed as Librarian in Hawick was Mrs. Margaret Elliot (nee Laidlaw) of Ancrum Mains in 1879, followed by George McNairn from 1894, Richard Halley from 1906 and William F. Cuthbertson from 1929. Rhoda McIvor was the last Burgh Librarian, serving from 1947 and retiring in 1977. Liz Robinson was Area Librarian from 1978, succeeded by John Beedle in 1981, then Gillian McNay in 1997 and John Beedle again in 2001. In the 1970s High Mackay became Deputy Librarian and Paul Taylor became Children's Librarian.

Lichton (lich-tin) n. (15th C.) proposed as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1472, on the resignation of Patrick Hume. However, by 1474 the Archdeaconry was held by David Luthirdale.

the Licht Roads (thu-licht-rōdz) n. former popular name for the road in the Thorterdikes area distinguished from 'the Derk Roads' in not being covered in trees, and presumably corresponding to the present Rosebank Road and Burnflat Brae.

lichts (lichts) n., pl., arch. lights. Hawick's first street lights were a set of 60 oil lamps, ceremoniously lighted on New Year's Day 1813, mainly along the High Street. They were lit nightly by the lamplighter from 15th November until 7th April, and several more were added in 1815. Gas lighting was introduced to the streets in 1831. Electric lighting started in 1901 with the Urban Electric Supply Company. Lighting was first used for rugby games as early as 1879.

lichtsome (licht-sum) adj., poet. light, care-free, cheerful – '...failed to damp the buoyancy of his spirits, which was so remarkable that 'as lichtsome as Yedie Broon' became a local proverb' [WNK], 'O ye that bear the lichtsome soul, that love things waggish, daft and droll' [RM], 'I'm humming sudden snatches of a lichtsome melody ...' [JYH], '...ma lang Dander throwe the Bonnie Borderland, ... – cam ti an end i the hert o a lichtsome strooshie' [ECS], 'Aroond the toun in lichtsome lilt There's music sweet and clear' [WL].

lichtsomeness (licht-sum-nis) n., poet. light-someness, nimbleness – '... But she taks her lichtsomeness oot o' the springtime, The lass wi' the lauch that wad gliff awa care' [WL].

lick (lik) n., arch. a stroke, blow, the merest drink or taste – 'Gie's a lick o sayrup, mother, ir ee?' [ECS], 'Faix bit A'm dry; A hehna hed a lick aa day' [ECS].

lick (lik) v., arch. to hurry, speed – 'Sometimes he would ride striddle-legs on the one stick and lick away with the other' [RM], '...birrlin alang

lickorish (li-kō-reesh) n. liquorice – 'When L was for lickorish and P was for peels' [??].

the Liddel (thu-li-dul) n. popular name for Liddel Witter – 'Right ovr the knowe where Liddel lyes, – Nae wonder that it catch'd his ee! A thing of huge and monstrous size Was steering that way hastily' [ES], 'Come fill me a bumper, we'll pledge thee in glory, The links o' green Liddel in echo shall ring' [JTe], 'Sweet sand the Liddle at our feet, I never heard it flow so cheery; With bliss life's moments seemed complete That night by Liddle wi' my dearie' [TCh] (sometimes written 'Liddell' or 'Liddle' and formerly 'Liddal').

Liddelbank (li-dul-bawngk) n. mansion on the Liddel Water, near the very southernmost point of Roxburghshire. It was built on what had been part of the farm of Greena in 1793 for William Oliver, the local Sheriff and enthusiastic promoter of road improvements. Oliver was recorded there as owner of no less than 10 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas Foster, William Hodge and John Hotson were servants there in 1799. Walter Douglas, John Murray and James Sorbie were servants there in 1801, and William Hodge was a gardener. James Alexander Attwood was there in the early 19th century and Walter Armstrong around 1821. Robert Jardine, M.P., lived there in the mid-19th century, William Brackenridge around 1870 and Thomas Bell in the latter part of the 19th century. Coal was once mined (in limited quantities) on the estate. It is also sometimes called 'Bellsbank'. The house has a walled garden, now derelict – 'Liddelbank, unrecorded in tale yet, or story, Neglected – forgotten in Border bards' song: Fair gem of the Liddel, its pride and its glory, I will chant thee a stave as I journey along' [DA] (it is 'Liddel Bank' in 1797 and 'Liddell Bank' in the 1860s).

Esk. Nothing remains now of this Norman fortification, except some impressive earthworks between the road and the river, on a promontory, surrounded on 3 sides by the river and the Kirk Cleuch Burn. It was once surrounded by the Castle Town, which gave its name to the area, although little evidence of former habitation remains today. The castle was probably built by Ranulph de Soulis when he was granted the surrounding barony by David I in the 12th century. It was constructed on the usually motte and bailey pattern, covering about 200m² in the north section and 160m² in the southern, sloping section. The location of a well can also be identified as a square depression. The castle appears to have been abandoned around the early 14th century. Around the 18th century it was sometimes referred to as 'the Roman Camp', because the origin of the mounds were not understood.

Liddell (li-dul) n. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as 'servant to Widow Layng' on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Betty Hardie, who was also from Hawick. Their daughter Jane was baptised in 1788. George (15th C.) Rector of Ettrick Forest according to a charter of 1477. He was also recorded as Rector there in 1482 when he witnessed a charter for James Hunter, Rector of Cranston; the other minister who acted as witness was Alexander Murray, Rector of Hawick. He was probably a relative of Robert, who was Ranger of Yarrow Ward. George (18th/19th C.) born at 'Stenton knows', i.e. Stintieknowe. In 1800 he was substitute in the Militia for weaver Walter Dalgleish. He was sworn in and sent to report to Edinburgh Castle within 8 days. Sir James of Halkerston (d.c.1484) Ranger of the Ward of Yarrow in at least the period 1476–82. He was Steward to the Duke of Albany and as a result was tried for treason in 1484 and executed soon after. He was patron of Blind Harry, and it is said he was a major source of information for the poem 'Wallace'. James (17th C.) Town Clerk 1658–59. Probably the same James was on the Council in 1668 and was Procurator Fiscal of Hawick in 1673. In 1673 Robert Scott of Horsleyhill was charged by the Bailies with stealing from his house 'five firelocks with ane pair of bandeliers belonging to the town'. Presumably he had charge of some of the firearms used by the Burgh Officers, and the theft could be part of the events around disputes between the Hawick authorities and the Baron's Bailie. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Stewart in 1651 and another for Thomas Scott in 1654. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for John Elliot, farmer at Southfield, in 1672. He may be the merchant of that name on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. In 1676 he checked the measures used by several Hawick traders, in presence of divers and sundry witnesses, upon complaint given in not only by the tacksman of the Duke's measures for making use of other measures besides his, but also by ane great number of poor people'; he thus effectively served as the surveyor of weights and measures for the Burgh, and is also referred to as a merchant. He may be the James, married to Isabell Watt, whose children included: Isobell (b.1650); and William (b.1653). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Waugh and their son William was baptised in 1683, with witnesses Thomas Waugh (probably related to his wife) and Walter Scott of Whitehaugh. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who He was at Burnfoot in 1736 and Clarilaw in 1742. He married Isabel Hoy and their children included: Isobel (b.1734); Thomas (b.1736); Mark (b.1739); Christian (b.1742); and James (b.1743). The witnesses in 1736 were James Scott and William Sanderson and in 1742 were John and William Anderson. Given that Thomas was married to Margaret Hoy at about the same time, it seems likely that the families were multiply connected. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Waugh and their children included: Margaret (b.1772) and 'Bel' (b.1774). Rev. John (17th C.) graduating from Glasgow University in 1674, he was licensed by that Presbytery in 1681. He was presented to Hobkirk Parish in late 1682 and ordained there in early 1683. He was unable to attend a trial of Covenanters in 1684 on account of having broken his leg, but sent a list of charges against his parishioners. However, he was deprived in 1689 for not praying for William and Mary (i.e. not giving up Episcopalianism), specifically saying that 'he would never pray for them as long as his blood was warm'! He may have reformed, however, since he (or another man of the same name) was recorded as assistant at Montrose in 1696 and Brechin in 1698. John (19th C.) married Alison Davidson in Wilton Parish in 1831. Mark (18th C.) married Margaret Irwin in Wilton Parish in 1772. Their son Thomas was baptised in 1774. Mark (18th C.) married Alison Cairns in Wilton Parish in 1772. He is presumably a different man than the Mark who got married 4 months earlier. Robert of Balmure (15th C.) Steward of King James II. He was one of the Commissioners for negotiating with the English in 1453. He served as Ranger of Yarrow Ward from at least 1456 and through the 1460s. He had the farms of Blackgrain, Montbenger and then Tinnis in Yarrow for his fee. Probably the same Robert was also Keeper of Dunbar Castle, as well as being involved with the leasing of Crown land in Galloway and March, and thus mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1440s and 50s. He may be the Robert whose murder by James Davidson 'in Quhitmerhall' is recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502. It seems likely he was related to George, who was Rector of the Forest in the 1470s and 1480s. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Cawfaulds in 1727. He married Bessie Scott (perhaps in 1714, although no wife's name is given). Their children included: Robert (b.1717); Robert (again, b.1720); Janet (b.1723); and Isobel (b.1727). The witnesses in 1727 were Thomas Turnbull and William Douglas. He is probably the Robert who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Andrew Harkness, resident of Clarilaw. Robert (18th C.) resident of Burnfoot Mill. He married Agnes Douglas in 1748 in Wilton Parish and their children included: Robert (b.1751); James (b.1752); Agnes (b.1754); Thomas (b.1757); Archibald (b.1765); and Euphan (b.1770). The 1770 baptism was carried out by Rev. Young of the Associate Congregation in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) married Elizabeth Cunningham in Wilton Parish in 1768. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Isabel (b.1781) and Margaret (b.1785). Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was deceased by 1793 when his widow, Elizabeth Hardie married Alexander Shaw in Edinburgh. Thomas (17th C.) married Isobel Wright in 1686. They were both from Robertson Parish (probably the part corresponding to Hassendean). Their son Robert was baptised in 1687, with witnesses George Scott and James Wright (who was probably related to his wife). In 1686 he witnessed a baptism for George Cockburn in Robertson Parish. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1703); and James (b.1707). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Briery Yards in 1722 and Clarilaw in 1724, 1727 and 1729

and Clarilaw in 1736. He married Isobel Cavers in 1720 and their children included: Thomas (b.1722); Isobel (b.1724); James (b.1726); Helen (b.1727); Helen (b.1729); James (again, b.1731); Robert (b.1734); and William (b.1736). The witnesses in 1722 were William and Robert Easton, in 1724 were James Cavers (probably related to his wife) and John Dryden, in 1727 and 1729 were James and John Dryden and in 1736 were James and Walter Scott. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Parkhouses in 1742 and 1751. He married Margaret Hoy in 1740 and their children included: Robert (b.1742); William (b.1745); Mark (b.1748); Thomas (b.1751); John (b.1753); and Elizabeth (b.1759). The witnesses in 1742 were John Noble and Walter Scott and in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Davidson and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1825); Isabella (b.1827); James (b.1829); Margaret (b.1831); Agnes (b.1832); and Jemima (b.1833). Walter (17th C.) see Walter Riddell. William (17th C.) referred to as 'merchant, younger' in Hawick in 1644 when he held the surplus of the money collected for the Covenanting army. He or his father may be the same as the procurator fiscal of the Burgh in the 1630s. He may also be the William who was elected to the Council in 1648. He could be the William, married to Jean Lidderdale, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included John (b.1637), Isobel (b.1639), Janet (b.1640), Marion (b.1644), Jean (b.1646) and James (b.1648). He witnessed baptisms in 1641 for William Wright and Thomas Oliver, both along with Andrew Liddersdale (who was presumably closely related to his wife). William (17th C.) listed among the poor of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was 'in Burnfoott'. This was presumably Hassendean Burnfoot. He could be the William, married to Margaret Scott, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1683. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Scott in 1760 and their children included: Thomas (b.1762); William (b.1764); and Agnes (b.1766). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Bryson in Hawick in 1789 and their children included: Nelly (b.1790); and William (b.1795). William (19th C.) married Jean Dodds in Wilton Parish in 1824 (sometimes spelled 'Liddel' and formerly 'Ledale', 'Liddale', etc.; see also Liddle).

Liddel Strength (li-dul-strenth) n. ruined fortress on the south bank of the Liddel Water, near the confluence with the Esk and the village of Moat in Cumbria. It has an impressive high motte and two baileys built on a cliff and dating to the 12th century with a later tower. Sir John Wake held the castle in the late 13th century, and then it passed to Sir Simon Lindsay, who also held Hermitage at the same time.

Liddel Viaduct (li-dul-vI-a-dukt) n. railway viaduct across the Liddel Water on the Waverley Line, just south of Newcastleton. It has been demolished, but the approaches are still visible.

Liddel Witter (li-dul-wi'-ur) n. the Liddel Water, formed by the meeting of 3 burns near Saughtree in the Deadwater heights, it is about 27 miles long and joins the Esk near Canonbie. It was a central feature in the area of cross-border raids that went on for centuries. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrave described it thus: 'The ryver is all Scottishe, untill it come to Kyrsoff foote, planted with Ellotes untill it come neare Wheatoughe towre, then the Armestronges inhabit it on both sydes, untill it come to Kyrsoff foote, where it takes the dyvyssion of the realmes from Kyrsoff – then the Armestronges have the one syde, and the Englishe Fosters the other syde, soe it desendes by the Harlowe on the one syde and the Haythawyt on the other, and runeth into the ryver called Eske. Its valley, Liddesdale, is now quite under-populated, with Newcastleton the major town (also spelled 'Liddle' and older variants).

liddy (li-dur) adj., arch. lazy, tardy – 'Now Liddesdale has lyan lang in, Fala, fala, fala, faliddle. There is nae riding there at a': Their horses are grown sae liddy fat, They downa stur out o' the sta'. Fala, &c' [CPM], 'I've been very liddy in writin'' [GW].

Lidderdale see Liddersdale

Liddersdale (li-durz-dāl) n. Adam (16th C.) 'flescheour' (i.e. butcher) of Hawick listed in the testament of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He was owed money for supplying 'flesche to the place' and his name is recorded as 'Adame Lidderdale'. Andrew (16th C.) holder of 5 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. He was probably related to others of the same surname who also owned lands at that time. He could be the same man as Andrew 'Lutherdale'. Andrew (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. He is probably the currier from Hawick who witnessed a deed in 1630 for Thomas of St. Mary's Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire), who was granted a fourth part of Easter Mains by Viscount Drumlanrig; John, currier in Hawick, and Andrew, currier in Selkirk, were also listed and so presumably related. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Wright and Thomas Oliver in 1641, for George Scott in 1651 and for John Leyden in 1654. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1651 when his daughter Janet, with Isobel Young, was baptised in Ashkirk. The record is labelled 'for', and witnesses were George Ormiston and George (who was surely related to him). George (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. He was son of Thomas, who was also a witness. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded as being 'of Liddesdale' in 1278/9 when he was on a panel at Newcastle. His family presumably had lands in Liddesdale, and may have given risen to this surname. Hawise (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. The forename could have been 'Hally' or some other close variant. James (15th/6th C.) recorded in 1502 being 'in hawik'. He and Philip Fawlaw were sureties for each other and failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, being fined at the next court. James (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as 'alias Blakstanehous in Hawik'. He was probably a Bailie in Hawick, since he gave sasine of the half Barony of Wilton from James Langlands of that ilk to his son Robert Langlands. It is unclear what his nickname refers to. Janet (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Presumably the same Janet was also joint owner (along with Stephen Scott and John Short) of another particate on the south, as well as a particate on the north side. She was probably related to Andrew, Hawise, Thomas and Nichol, and may have been a widow or heiress. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Johannis Lidderdale' in Hawick in 1493 when George Waugh in Hawick was surety for him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In the next entry the same John in Hawick was himself surety for Thomas, who was fined for non-appearance. In 1494/5 the pair of men were allowed to 'componer' for the crime of consorting with the Elliots of Branxholme. John 'Jock the Deacon' (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, with the events themselves happening 2 years earlier. He may have been a Burgh Officer of some sort, given his implication in the treatment of the prisoner in Hawick steeple. His nickname suggests he may have been Deacon in one of the Trades. It seems likely he was related to the earlier John in Hawick.

John (17th C.) leather merchant in Hawick. In 1630 he acted for Thomas of the Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire) when he had a 'clare constat' for quarter of the lands of East Mains, from the Viscount Drumlanrig. He was presumably related to Thomas in some way, and probably closely related to Andrew (currier in Hawick) and William (currier and Burgess of Selkirk) who were witnesses.

John (17th C.) schoolmaster in Hawick, who was one of the witnesses to the signing of the 'Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union' (Covenant) in 1638. He is the first schoolmaster on record in Hawick, and although it is not known what sort of school he was in charge of, it was presumably the Parish School. In 1639 he was 'Mr John Lidderdale' when he witnessed a baptism for James Burn in Hawick. Margaret (16th C.) holder of 1½ particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter.

Nichol (16th C.) holder of half a particate of land on the south side of the main street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Philip (16th C.) recorded in 1552 when his wife ('vxori Phelippi Lidderdail') was listed as being owed money by William, younger of Branhholme. He may be the same Philip listed as owning 2 particates of land on the north side of the main street in Hawick's 1537 Charter.

Robert 'the Corbie' (17th C.) one of a list of 16 local men named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. However, when produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found 'not fit for the wars' and dismissed.

Thomas (15th C.) fined in 1493 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John was his surety and he also acted for himself. Both men were 'in hawic'. He was probably related to the later Thomas.

In 1494/5 both he and John were allowed to 'componer' at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for the crime of consorting with the Elliots of Branhholme. In the Treasurer's accounts for 1494/5 he is recorded having obtained remission from the King. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in the 1537 as holder of 2 particates of land on the south side of Hawick's public street. He was presumably related to some of the other Liddersdales in the Charter.

Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His son George was also a witness and he was listed as 'elder' (suggesting there was another Thomas at the time). Thomas (17th C.) of St. Mary's Isle (in Galloway), given quarter of a 'merkland' of Easter Mains by Viscount Drumlanrig in a deed of 1630. The deed also mentions John and Andrew, curriers of the same place, and William, Burgess of Selkirk (probably a variant of 'Liddesdale'; also spelled 'Lidderdail', 'Lidderdeil', 'Lidderdale', 'Lidderdail', 'Liddirdaile', 'Liddirdale', etc.; see also Lutherdale, which may be the same name in some cases).

Liddesdale (li-diz-dāl) n. valley of the Liddel Water, extending more than 20 miles from about Peel Fell to the Esk. In rievying days this was one of the most lawless areas in the land, with the Elliots and Armstrongs holding sway over the upper and lower parts of the valley, respectively. The name is sometimes used synonymously with Castleton Parish. A rental roll of around 1376, among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton, is invaluable for listing all the farms in the area in the late 14th century, including the names of many land-owners at that time ('Willelmi Sturhes', 'Croyser', 'Fethyng', 'Loumane', 'Willelmi filii Alani', 'Willelmi del Syde', 'Johannis Rauffon', 'Ricardi Broun', 'Thome Gilson', 'Ade de Syde', 'Elie Nobill', 'Dauid Stodhirde', 'Ennie de Lawys', 'Ricardi de Lawis', 'Roberti de Lawis', 'Mathei Meryng', 'Willelmi Nycson' and 'Philippi de Fausyde'); the lands are divided into 4 'quarterium', the 1st unnamed, the others being 'Ludne', 'Ermyldoune' and 'Mangertoune', with an additional area being 'Foresta', and a several other lands being listed as free tenandries or church properties. 'The Valley of Lydel entirely' is among lands claimed by the English Crown c.1380 after the truce with Scotland. The lands were a Lordship, held by the Douglasses in the 15th century (along with Ewesdale and Eskdale), with a Bailie appointed to administer the lands. In 1491 the Lordship was swapped by Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, for Kilmarnock and was then granted by the King to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. When the area was laid waste by the English in 1514 it was described as '12 miles of Lienth, within the Middill Marche of Scotland, whereupon was 100 pleughes'. Another rental roll of 1541 (transcribed in the Exchequer Rolls as well as the Buccleuch Muniments) lists more than 140 farms and their values and tenants at that time, mostly Elliots in the north and Armstrongs in the south, with a few Nixons, Croziers and others. An English record of 1592 describes that 'the cheif surnames in Liddesdale standes upon Arme-stronges and Elwoodes' and 'is the most offensive countrie against both West and Middle Marches'. The area was long a Lordship, possessed by the Soulises and Douglasses, and later the Earls of Bothwell, forfeited by Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell and passing to the Earls of Buccleuch and Roxburgh in 1632; the document describing this lists the owners of all the farms at that time. The Lordship is listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1663. The area was surveyed in 1718, when most of the farms were possessed by Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch. These maps forma valuable record of the farm boundaries at that time, as well as the location of farmhouses and woods 300 years ago. It is said that Sir Walter Scott's carriage was the first wheeled vehicle seen in the area in 1798 – 'The Armestronges, that aye hae been A hardy house, but not a hail, The Elliots' honours to maintaine, Brought down the lave o' Liddesdale' [T], 'Of Liddesdale the common thieves Sae pertly steals now and reaves, That nane may keep Horse, nolt, or sheep, For their mischieves' [SRM], 'The outlaws come frae Liddesdale, They herry Redesdale far and near; The rich man's gelding it maun gang, They canna pass the puir man's mear' [LHTB], 'The Teviot lads are frank and free, The Ettrick chaps are fu' o' glee, But far aboon them a' to me Are the merry lads o' Liddesdale' [DA], 'Oh, Liddesdale, thou land of mist, I lo'e thy benty bogs and rushes ...' [TCh], '... Then swung to their saddles and followed the trail Where the sun leaned over to Liddesdale' [WHO], '... And what to me fresher eenow Than the seep o' a Liddesdale drowe?' [WL] (formerly spelled 'Liddeisdail', etc., it is 'Valle Lid[el]' about 1150, 'Lidelesdale' in the early 1200s, 'Lydellisdale' in 1353/4, 'Lydelysdale' in 1389, 'Lydallisdale' in 1397, 'Ledalisdale' in 1428/9, 'Lyddalysdale' in 1456, 'Liddalisdale' in 1470, 'Lidalsdale' in 1472, 'ledesdale' in 1479, 'Lyddalisdale' in 1489, 'Liddalisdale' in 1494/5 and 1502, 'Ledellisdaill' and 'Leddallisdaill' in 1508 and 'Liddalisdaill' in 1508, 'Ledalisdale' in 1526, 'Liddesdaill' in 1530, 'Liddisdaile' in 1535, 'Liddersdell' in 1541, 'Liddisdaill' and 'Liddisdaile' in 1551, 'Liddisdaill' in 1569, 1586, 1599, 1632, 1653, 1661 and 1663 and 'Lidesdaill' in 1661; note there is a small place with the same name in the Highlands).

Liddesdale (li-diz-dāl) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) son of Thomas of Liddesdale. He was recorded along with his son Adam in 1307/8 when they are reported to have sworn to 'Monsire John de Wygeton and Monsire Simon de Lyndeseye' that they would keep the King's peace in Liddesdale.

Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English record of 1307/8. Despite swearing to some Englishmen to keep the peace, he captured Chaplain John 'of Laysingby' at 'Quele' (presumably near the Wheel Kirk) in Liddesdale, beat and wounded him, took him to 'Caversmore' in Scotland and ransomed him for 54 marks. The ransomed man complained to the English King and Council. Thomas (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'Thomas of Lydelsdale' in an English case involving his grandson Adam. It is unclear where he lived, but likely on the Scottish side.
