Fernehirst (fer-nee-hurst) n. lands and tower just south of Jedburgh, built in the 1470s by Sir Thomas Kerr following his marriage to Margaret Kerr of Kersheugh. The tower there is sometimes referred to as 'Fernehirst Castle'. The land was valued (along with Limekilnwood) in 1538 at £4

6s 8d. It was stormed by Dacre's men in 1523, recaptured by Sir John Kerr and his men in 1549, when they butchered all the French garrison. It was destroyed soon afterwards by James VI and rebuilt in 1598. Disused in the 18th century, it was renovated in the late 19th for the son of the Marquis of Lothian, but work was stopped in 1892 when that son was killed in a shooting accident. The castle lay unused until 1934 when taken over as a youth hostel until 1985. In 1988 it was restored again by the Marquis of Lothian, and is now a Kerr family home, also containing the Kerr Museum. It is said to be haunted by the 'Green Lady'. The castle features in Jedburgh's Callants' Festival – 'Hermitage wistfully lifts her head, Where the mists on the lone moors fall: Ferniehurst, lulled by the crooning of Jed, Lies wrapped in her sylvan shawl' [WL] (also spelled 'Fernehurst', as well as variants such as 'Fairnyhirst', 'Farneherst', 'Farnihirst', 'Farnyherst', 'Farnyhirst', 'Farnyhyrst', 'Fernyherst', 'Phairnehirst', 'Phairnihirst', 'Phairnyhirst', 'Pharniherst', 'Pharnihirst', 'Pharnyherst', 'Pharnyhirst' etc.; the origin of the name is probably the Old English 'fearnig hyrst' meaning 'the ferny wood'; it first appears in 1493 as 'Fairny hirst'; there is a place of the same name in Cadonfoot and Stow Parish).

feucht (fewcht) pp., arch. fought (the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ū and oo; cf. focht).

Feu-Rule (few-rool) n., arch. former barony within Rulewater, once stretching the entire breadth of Hobkirk. It was also sometimes referred to as the Barony of Hallrule. The lands were formerly part of the Barony of Cavers and later became a barony on its own. The existence of this barony probably explains why there was never any barony of 'Hobkirk'. The entire barony was once 'thirled' to Hallrule Mill. In 1453 there was a letter of reversion of the lands from Andrew Ker of Altonburn to Sir Robert Colville of Oxnam. In 1479 they were still held by the Kers of Cessford when Margaret Ker renounced all rights to her uncle Walter. In 1495 the superiority was granted by James IV to Janet, daughter of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. About that time the lands consisted of Town o' Rule, Hallrule, Hallrule Mill, Deanside, Appotside and Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish, along with Holm, Middle and Hangingside in the Parishes of Cavers and Kirkton. In 1499 half the lands were resigned by Sir William Colville in favour of Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing, but the 'reversion' of the lands was granted by Elizabeth, Lady Pedmont (Sir William Colville's daughter) to her son-in-law Robert Colville of Cleish in 1541; however, the Colvilles appear not to have repaid the long-standing debt. In 1509/10 the lands were listed among the holdings of Douglas of Cavers, dating back to the time of King David; however, this may have explicitly meant Hallrule and it is called 'Fewhawroull' in 1511, when the 'mill thereof' is also mentioned. It was owned by Lord Herries of Terregles and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst jointly, then in 1562 there was a 'decreet of division' of the lands between Agnes (4th Lady Herries) and Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 it was in the hands of the King through forfeiture by Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, although he held it again from 1581. John Maxwell, Lord Herries and Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam were in dispute over the lands in the 1610s. In 1629 the superiority was transferred to Sir Andrew Kerr of Jedburgh from his deceased son, but then passed to Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth in 1632 and William, Earl of Lothian in 1649. The bulk of the lands were owned by Lord Balmerino in 1643, valued at more than £4800 and by Eliott of Stobs in 1678, when Stonedge and Fairnieles had been disjoined and the value was roughly halved. The Mains of Feu-Rule were inherited in 1632 by Margaret and Isobella from her brother Walter Turnbull of Rawflat. The Barony passed from William, Earl of Lothian to William Eliott of Stobs later in the 17th century. In the 1690s it passed from Sir Gilbert Eliott to his son Sir William. The Common for the barony lay on the farm of Hallrule, and is referred to in a retour of 1610 for Appotside. Before 1722 the Lairds of Weens had the right to graze on the Common, but in that year it was arranged that 1/15th of the land be given to Weens in exchange to yielding the pasturage rights, although retaining the right to cast peats on the Common (also written 'Few-rule', 'the feu of Roull', 'Feureul', 'Fewaruell', 'Farroule', etc.; it is 'Feoroule' and 'the Fewroule' in 1453, 'the Feu of Roule' in 1479, 'Fewroule' in 1499, 'Fewrouell' in 1500, 'fee of Roul' in 1501/2, 'Fewroule' in 1509/10, 'Farroule' in 1541, 'Fewroull' in 1562, 'Fewroulie' in 1574, 'Fewroull' in 1581/2, 'Fewalroull' and 'Fewrewlie' in 1602, 'Fewrowll' in 1603, 'Fewrewell' and 'Fewruill' in 1610, 'Fewerule' in 1629, 'Feualroull' in 1632, 'Fewalroull' in 1637, 'Few of Roull' in 1647, 'Fowroule' and 'Feuaroull' in 1656, 'Fewaroull' in 1659 and 'Feweroull' in 1703).

the Fever Hospital (thu-fee-vur-hos-pi'-ul) n. hospital built at Burnfoot, off Burnfoot Road, as an isolation hospital for victims of infectious disease, particularly scarlet fever. Formally called the Hawick and District Joint Fever Hospital, or the Hawick and District Infectious Diseases Hospital, it was funded jointly by the Town and County, but in fact saw little use. The hospital was designed by Alexander Inglis and built around 1902. It had 24 beds and also had an adjoining wooden smallpox hospital. The name 'Fever Hospital' was also sometimes used as an alternative name for the Anderson Sanatorium, built on the site of a former dilapidated building at Howdenburn in the last few years of the 19th century. The former Fever Hospital became an annex of Burnfoot Primary School in the 1960s and was converted into a Social Work Outreach Centre in the 1990s.

fey (fi) adj., arch. predestined, fated to die soon, behaving in an excited way, crazy – 'I play'd wi' siccan hearty glee, The neibours vowed that I was fey' [JoHa], 'Na, but ye maun surely be fey! Wad ye degrade yoursel' in the sight o' a' your kin?' [JTe] (note the pronunciation).

Fiddleton (fi-dul'-in, -dul-tin) n. lands around the modern Fiddleton Toll by the A7 in Ewesdale. They were possessed by the Lindsays of Wauchope in the 15th century, with the Homes as superior, then was owned by Simon Armstrong (along with other lands in Ewesdale) in the early 16th century, and was later that century occupied by the Elliots. Gavin Elliot of Fiddleton was accused of murder in 1606. The superiority of the lands (and others in Ewesdale) was held by the Homes, forfeited about 1516, but recovered by George, Lord Home, certainly by 1535. John Elliot is recorded there in 1569. William Elliot fit-weshin (fi'-we-shin) n., arch. traditional good-luck ceremony, performed before weddings in the 18th and early 19th centuries. The washing was done by a female friend of the bride-to-be, usually on the Tuesday before the wedding. A tub of warm water was prepared, containing a ring from a married woman present (the finding of which in the tub being considered lucky). All those present washed the bride’s feet, and there were often pranks involving soot etc.

‘of Fidilton’ signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, along with several other Elliots of Ewesdale. He was still recorded in 1602. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. For a while the lands were split into ‘Nether Fiddleton’ and ‘Over Fiddleton’. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it was combined with Unthank and consisted of 1843 acres, bounded by Twislehope, Mosspeebles, Tarras, Arkleton, Eweslees and Blackhall. The farmhouse shown in 1718 was further south than Unthank, near Fiddleton Brae. There are also two old settlements to the west of the A7 near Fiddleton Bankend Cottage. A cist was excavated at Camp Knowes near here and found to contain human bones, flints and stone artefacts (the name occurs as ‘Fediltoun’ in 1506, ‘Fiddiltoun’ in 1509/10, ‘Fiddaltoun’ in 1525, ‘Fiddiltoun’ in 1535, 1569, 1586 and 1602, ‘Fiddeltoun’ in 1606, ‘Fiddletoun’ in 1608, ‘Fiddiltoun’ around 1610, ‘Fiddeltoun’ in 1622 and ‘Fidletoun’ in 1663; it is ‘Fiddiltoun’ on Gordon’s map of c. 1650, while ‘O. the 1514 Club (thu-fif-teen-för-teen-klub) n. local organisation founded around 1962 in a meeting within the Queen's Head by Dod Robson, Ronnie Murphy, Ronnie Tait, Moosie Arries and Tam Underwood. This followed their desire to hold a separate dinner, following the difficulty of obtaining Common Riding event tickets that year, particularly for those who did not follow on horseback; it was also partly founded as a result of the limited membership of the Callants' Club. The Club slowly came together, with the first dinner at Mossypaul in 1963 attended by about 30 members. The annual dinner has been on the Friday before the Denholm Ride-out ever since. The Club had its own tie designed in 1964. A formal constitution drawn up in 1977, with the Club's object being 'to protect and support the interests of Hawick Common Riding and its ancient rights'. The Club was informally run by J.T. Blakie for almost 2 decades before the first formal President, Ronnie Murphy, was appointed. The club organises many events and activities revolving around the Common Riding, including the annual primary school art competition (from 1977). It has also been responsible for erecting several memorial plaques around the town and its boundaries, e.g. 10 cairns erected around the Common in 1991. The 'Hawick Sings' tape and CD was produced by the Club in 1986, with a second produced in 1987. The Club produced a video in 2012 to mark its 50th anniversary.

Fitz Alan (fitz-aw-lin) n. Edmund 9th Earl of Arundel (1285–1326) son of Richard, 8th Earl. He took part on the war against Scotland in 1306 and was appointed Warden of the English Marches in 1316. He organised an expedition against Scotland in 1317 and part of his force was ambushed by Sir James Douglas’ men at Lintalee. He went in and out of favour with the English King and was eventually executed. However, his estates were restored to his eldest son Richard. Hawise (13th C.) daughter of Alexander, 4th High Steward of Scotland and sister of Sir James, 5th High Steward, she was heiress of Old Roxburgh. She married John de Soulis, and so became Lady Liddesdale. Her daughter Muriel married Sir Richard Lovel. Walter (b. bef. 1115–77) first High Steward of Scotland under David I. He helped encourage Norman families to settle in Scotland. He owned large amounts of land in western Scotland, but also Birchenside on the Leader Water in Berwickshire and Hassendean in Teviotdale. He witnessed the renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. In the late 1160s he was witness to the confirmation of the gifts of lands to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1166 he witnessed a charter by King William to Robert de Brus. After his death there was a document confirming the lands he had given to the monks of Paisley Priory, including a ploughgate in Hassendean (called Huntlaw). He married Eschina de Molle, heiress of Molle (or Mow) and Huntlaw. Their son was Alan, 2nd High Steward. The Stewartship was thereafter hereditary and led to the Stewart Kings several generations later. His seal shows a knight on horseback, holding a sword and shield and with the words ‘SIGILL. WAL-TERI FILII ALANI’ (also written ‘Fitzalan’).

Fitz Malger (fitz-mal-gur) n. Race (12th C.) granter of half the lands of Shortbutts to Jedburgh Abbey. This took place in the late 1100s, and the lands were in Liddesdale, described as being in the territory of Sorbie. Presumably his father was ‘Malger’, a name that occurs among some Norman families south of the Border.

Fitz-Scott (fitz-sko) n. Uchtred (12th C.) first known ancestor of the noble Scotts, with some indication that his family came from Galloway, and that they had held the barony of Scotstoun in Peeblesshire. Although, there is no definite information about his parentage or earlier ancestors, his designation as ‘son of Scot’ distinguished him from others of the same name. He lived during the reigns of Alexander I and David I. Around 1116 he witnessed an inquest made by David (then Prince of Cumbria) regarding the foundation of the church at Glasgow, and also witnessed the foundation charter for the monastery at Selkirk (where he was ‘Uchtredo filio Scot’). He was among the courtiers of King David I. About 1145 he witnessed the charter of King David’s son Henry to the church of Melrose. His son was probably Richard. The Dukes of Buccleuch and many other local branches of the Scotts can trace themselves directly back to him (also written ‘Uchtred Filius Scot’, i.e. the son of Scot).

five-an- (fiv-an) adj., arch. five minutes after, as in phrases such as ‘five-an-twenty past’ – ‘Blenkie’s ... thy had a five-an-twenty past yin whussle, an it went at five-an-twenty past’ [DaS].

five ell o wund (flv-el-ō-wund,-a-) adv., arch. very quickly, at great speed, like lightning – ‘No that lang, aether – it was nae teime owregane or oo war birlin owre the Trow Burn leik five ell o wund’ [ECS], ‘... Syne we wad scamper off, five ell a wund, To be the first to grab her han’ [WL] (also written ‘five ell a wund’, ‘five ells o blue wund’ and other variants).

Five O’clock (fiv-ō-klok) n. former peculiar local nickname – ‘Dan Narry and Kit i’ the Bar, The Cud and Coulter and Five O’clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock’ [HI].

fivver (fi-vur) n., arch. fever – ‘An’ he tuchet hir han’, an’ the fiver left hir’ [HSR], ‘Thay’ve been ti smuik the hoose efter the fivver (fever)’ [ECS] (also written ‘fiver’ and sometimes ‘the fivver’).

fizzen (fi-zin) n., arch. essence, pith, vitality, force.

fizzless (fiz-lis) adj., arch. lacking in pith or substance, ineffectual – ‘Thae coals o’ fun are fizzless embers, Sin’ Davie’s dead’ [JoHa] (also fizzenless).

flach (flawch) v., arch. to shake, tremble – ‘Their legs flauchen like the jams of a waulk-mill’ [HAST1875] (also written ‘flauch’; cf. flaff).

flacht (flacht) n., poet. a burst, gust of wind – ‘The snaw is fein’ by in flauchts’ [JAHM], ‘A flaucht cam doon the lum’ [GW], a flash – ‘... With fiery pride-flaucht flashing from his eye’ [JoHa], ‘Why blazes yon beacon, with flame flaring high – Why mixes its flaughts with the clouds of the sky?’ [JoHa], ‘But mark ye the fire-flauchts that stream on the sky! Like red flashing flags on the brow of the night’ [Fi], ‘... An’ mirth, and fun, and flaughts o’ wit, Were flashin’ roun’ an’ roun’ [JT] (also ‘flaucht’ and ‘flaught’).

flachter (flawch-tur) v., arch. to flutter, flap, n. a fluttering, flicker – ‘... would in a moment consume them, with a ‘flachter o’ brunstane’ [EM1820] (cf. flaffer).

flachter-spade (flawch-tur-spād) n., arch. a two-handled, long-shafter, sharp spade used for cutting sods or peats – ‘And four spademen with flaughter spades to go along with them ...’ [BR1755] (also ‘flaughter’ and other variants).

the Flachter Spade (thu-flawch-tur-spād) n. name given to the ceremonial spade used for the ‘cutting of the sod’ at the Common Riding. Ian Cook has carried the spade for over 40 years. In 2001 and 2020, with the Common Riding cancelled, the spade was still used to cut the sod, and also dipped in Teviot in lieu of the Flag (also written ‘the Flaughter Spade’).

flae (flā) n., arch. a flea – ‘At Corstorphine A roared an leuch whan A saw the monkeys lookin yin another for flaes’ [ECS], ‘The flae’s luppen away’ [ECS].

flaffer (flaw-fur) v., arch. to flap, flutter.

flag (flawg) n., arch. a piece of turf, sod.

the Flag (thu-flawg) n. Hawick’s colour, standard, pennon, pennant, or pensil, also known as ‘the Banner Blue’. It is meant to be a copy of the original flag captured at Hornshole, which is believed to have originally belonged to a group of English soldiers attached to the Priory of Hexham. The oldest surviving flag dates from 1707, sometimes called 'the Union Flag', since it contains the date 1707 (but the connection with the Union of the Kingdoms is probably just a coincidence) and is in the Museum; it was ordered by Bailie Ruecastle at a cost of £10 14 shillings, and was ready for the end of May that year. It was a replacement for a much older flag, which was so decrepit in 1706 that the Cornet-Elect refused to carry it, causing near riots. The result was that the Bailies took the responsibility of carrying the Flag that year, while the young men of the town appointed their own unofficial Cornet (whose name is not recorded) to carry another Colour. The Hawick flag is 'A Banner Azure with Saltire Or' with the date 1514 also in gold, and should be pennon-shaped (with the date read correctly when held like a lance). The vertical line may have simply hidden a seam. The letters 'HC' (for 'Hawick Colour' or 'Hawick Common' or perhaps even 'Hawick Callants', no one is entirely sure) were probably added later, perhaps to the original after its capture. The 1707 flag, of much lighter material than later version, was probably not the first replacement (although some have suggested that it might have been). A flag from around the end of the 18th century still had the correct colours, but with '1514' in red and the cross in yellow; this was repeated for the replacement of 1832. A new flag made in 1865, and carried by the Cornet in the procession for the opening of the Allan Water supply and the opening of the Carlisle railway, was mistakenly given a red (or crimson) cross, and was square-shaped ('... They love the banner that leads them on – the banner of red and blue' [JEDM]). New flags were purchased in 1865, 1877 and 1892, still with the wrong colours. The error was probably made around 1850 (or 1845 and again around 1855 if 2 flags were purchased between 1832 and 1865), presumably because of indifference by the Town Council and citizens to the details of the ceremonial side. At the end of the 19th century it was established (by Craig & Laing, although the yellow colour had been suggested a few years earlier by J.E.D. Murray) that the flag should be pennon-shaped and with a golden cross, and this was implemented for the new flag of 1903, with subsequent copies retaining this design. The old coloured Flag was last used at the Thursday morning Chase of 1903 (and can be seen outside the Town Hall in an 1893 painting by Frank Wood). A replica flag was made by the ladies at Pringle's and sent to the K.O.S.B. troops in Germany during WWII, then returned with the names of places where local men had fell embroidered on it. Flags of schools and guilds were also carried in earlier Common Ridings, but since the mid-18th century only the Town's Colour has been allowed. In 1851 the Flag was stolen when flying at the Tower Hotel overnight, but recovered a week later in Silver Street. Until 1861 the flag used to fly from the Chief Magistrate's (sometimes the Junior Magistrate's) house until it was bussed on the Thursday evening. After that year this happened at an inn selected by the Cornet, until the Colour Bussing was moved to the Town Hall in 1887. Now the unbussed Flag first appears at the Thursday morning Chase and is bussed on the Thursday evening, after being displayed from the Town Hall balcony all day. After being bussed inside the Town Hall it is waved from the balcony and left on display there. On the Friday the Cornet carries it at the Chase, then the Acting Father takes it to St. Leonard's, where it is displayed outside the farmhouse. It is then taken by the Cornet on the Ride around the Marches. After the Cutting of the Sod it is carried by the Acting Father, and handed again to the Cornet at the gate from pilmuir Field onto the Mair. The Cornet rides proudly round the course with the Flag and later it is displayed from the roof of the committee room. Leaving the Mair, it is dipped in the Teviot and is returned to the Council Chambers for the night. On the Saturday it again goes to the Mair, and is returned on the Saturday afternoon at the Hanging Back ceremony. The Flag was loaned to Hexham Abbey for the procession for the consecration of a new nave in 1908, with a copy presented to the Abbey by the Callants' Club in 1914 and a replacement presented by the Provost in 1972 (the one last carried by the Cornet in 1971); this now hangs in the abbey's north nave, with the 1914 copy returned to Hawick. There was a new flag in 1972, which was used until 1991. The flag was bussed by the Queen at a special Golden Jubilee ceremony in Melrose in 2002. It is rarely brought out except at the Common Riding, but formerly was used in local processions, e.g. at the opening of the Allan Water supply in 1865 (when a new Flag was provided) and the Dod Burn water supply in 1882. The Flag is also draped over the coffins of ex-Cornets, the practice beginning with James Smith in 1904. A practice flag (green, with the words 'Aye Defend' in yellow, donated by the Mosstroopers' Club) is used by the Cornet and the Acting Father at the Mair after the Wednesday morning Chase. A new flag was provided in 2014 – 'Hail to the banner that proudly floats o'er us, Hail to the brave hearts that bear it along' [JT], 'Then rally around the good old flag – let the slogan ring out again!' [JEDM], 'Guid sake, Jamie', replied Mr. Hunter 'Just here's our Flag. It's our Flag. We're prood o't. Gather round it. Set it up. Up wi' the Flag. That's the idea – up wi' the Flag!' [BM1898], '... And blue as my wee lad's wondering eye Watching the Flag go fluttering by' [JYH], 'The flag is oor emblem, an' stands for a' that wei cherish an' haud dear' [BW1939], 'The flag for which oor fithers died At Hornshole be Teviotside' [IWL].

flaik (flāk) n., arch. a piece of frame-work, frame – '... for ane ryott with each other, and the said Janet Holywell in ane provocation for taking of her stand, ane flaick being laid there before' [BR1676], a hurdle used as a barricade or gate – '... my faither sprang ower the bucht flake to be near the lasses' [LHTB].

flain (flān) n., poet. an arrow – 'The swallow-tail frae teckles flew, Five hundred flain into the flight ...' [CPM].

flaip (flāp) n., arch. a flop, thud, a clean or unbroken fall – 'I've gotten mony flaiaps an' fa's, Baith cleek and cross ...' [JoHa], a dull, heavy sound caused by a fall.

flair (flār) n. floor – 'hey, there's nae coat hooks on a flair!', '... tellt her no ti weer her best evenin dress ti the Ball because the Toon Hall flair wad be awfi dirty' [IWL], 'Ye scrubbed the flair until it shone' [IJ], 'Ma auldest sisters washed the close, The other yin's dune the flair' [AY], '... it shattered into a hunder pieces, it disappeared aa ower the flair and the table an hing' [IA] (see fluir for the earlier pronunciation).

Flake Hill (flāk-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, opposite the farm of Eilrig. It reaches a height of 318 m.

flam (flam) n., arch. a flame, flare, glare – 'Thon burnin' Zeppelin made a grand flam i' the lift' [GW], '... een as the flaam o the waathergleam skails afore'd the cluds threh the owrecuisen lift' [ECS].

flaneerin (flawn-eer-in) n., arch. fancy-work, embroidery, decorative trimming.

flang (flawng) pp., arch. flung, did fling – 'Salome flang like a wanton, free, A lunt, the flash o' her witchin' ee' [WL] kicked out the legs, danced – '... an laap an flaang as yauld as a wuddie' [ECS] (also written 'flaang'; this is the past tense, while the past participle is usually 'flung').

flanker (flang-kur) n. one of the 2 wing forwards in rugby, playing at numbers 6 and 7, and forming part of the back row in scrums.

flankit (flang-kee, -ki) pp., arch. flanked – 'An' by ill fortune's forces flankit, I will be laith, To quat the muse, while ae auld blanket, Can hap us baith' [JR].

flannen (fla-nen, neen) n., adj., arch. flannel – 'Ma flaanen serk's aa up ma back an' 's hard as buckram' [ECS], 'A can mind when tredsman wore Flannen serks wi a navy blue stripe' [DH] (also written 'flaanen' and variants).

flapper (flaw-pur) n. one who owns or trains horses for 'flapping' meetings, also a horse that races at such meetings.

flappin (flaw-pin) n. amateur horse-racing in the Borders, not under the Jockey Club or National Hunt rules. The word has been used elsewhere in Britain (and also for greyhound racing), but the Borderers have been the most enthusiastic supporters of unofficial racing. The main locations are at Hawick Moor, Langholm and Selkirk (at the Rig). Those at Hawick Moor that are not associated with the Common Riding are organised by 'Hawick Horse'. There were also races on Flatt farm near Newcastleton until the early years of the 21st century. There were formerly meetings across much of Scotland, although support waned in most places, with the last meeting in the Aberdeen area around the 1990s. The only other place in Scotland to now have such race meetings is Irvine. Among places known to have meetings in the past are Inch (Aberdeenshire), the Black Isle, Bogside, Lanark, Canonbie, Dumfriesshire (near Newton Stewart) and Galashiels (once). Historically, flapping has a reputation as a hot-bed of swindlers and ruffians, and the exclusive Jockey Club still gives a 'warning off' penalty for participants. The Common Riding of 1946 was the first flapping meeting to be held in Scotland. The Tradesmen's Handicap, run on Common Riding Friday is the flappers equivalent of the Derby – '... daein a pickle flappin tae on his Uncle Elec's Nell' [IWL], '... Till hei got intae flappin', racin', no under orders' [MB] (the origin and antiquity of the word is uncertain, but there is a claim it comes from an old slang word for a loose woman; however, it seems more likely it is related to 'flap', recorded as 'a sudden happening' in Aberdeenshire).

flappit (flaw-pi', -pee') pp. flapped – 'He crawled and flappit ower the dyke, An' roosed the bees ayont the bike' [WFC].

flare (flār) v., poet. to flatter, cajole, brag – 'He ever shunn'd the wheedlin' pack, Wha flare ane up wi' fulsome crack' [JoHa] – 'I'm no come here To seich and sab and flare and row' [HSR] (also written 'flair').

Flask (flawsk) n. former lands on the east side of the Ewes valley, between Hoghill and Terrona. Flask Wood is still marked on the Ordnance Survey map. It was also formerly called 'Flaskholme', although in some periods the 2 names may have referred to distinct neighbouring lands. Along with Howgill and Glendivan it was described as a 10-merk land when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1550, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604 and by Robert Maxwell in 1619. Archibald Armstrong 'in Flascholme' is recorded in 1607. It may be the 'Flocksteid alias Flasket' possessed by John Scott 'balie in Liddisaill' recorded in 1632. Both Flask and Flaskholme are listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was 'Flask alias Flaskholme' when the superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. There were Armstrongs there in the 17th century. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 540 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Cooms, Howgill, Nether Wrae and Terrona. It is also stated that 'the water hath done it much damage by altering its course'. John Anderson was there in 1783. Robert Beattie, James Johnston and their families lived there in 1841 (it is 'Flaskhoome' on Blaeu's 1654 map and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Flasket Sike (flaws-ki'-sik) n. small stream on the west side of Whitrope Burn in upper Liddesdale, just north of Buckstone Moss.

Flaskwud (flawsk-wud) n. Flaskwood, former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, listed as vacant at that time. A document of 1529/30 states that Robert Elliot 'alias Flaskvod' is to be brought in to answer crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. It was probably the 'Flaskett' included along with Over Closs, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. The farm was presumably on the Flasket Sike, off the Whitrope Burn in upper Liddesdale.

flat (fla') n. a storey in a mill, or an area defined for specific factory production, e.g. 'the Back Flat' or 'the Middle Flat' – '... one day while going through one of the spinners' flats there he noticed a piecer lounging about' [JHH].

flat (fla') n., arch. a cow-plat, cake of cow dung (Jamieson says this is 'apparently from its flat form').

flate (flā) pp., arch. scolded, chided (also 'flaet'; this is the past tense of flyte, noted by E.C. Smith, but also see fleet; the past participle is fitten).

flatlins (fla'-linz) adv., poet. flatly, at full length – 'Ane other thro' the breeks him bare, While flatlins to the grund he fell ...' [CPM].

Flatt (flaw', flat) n. farm just north of Kershopefoot, on the Scottish side of the Border. It is already 'Flatt' in 1541 when valued at 5 merks and tenanted by Simon Armstrong. 'Young Sim' was recorded as residing there in 1583. Will Elliot 'called Blakheid' had 4 cows stolen from the lands there in about 1610. Lencie Armstrong of Flat was recorded in 1611. It was possessed by Francis Robson in 1632. Elspeth Scott was tenant there in 1694, and paid tax on 3 hearths. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, extending to 442 acres, bounded by the Kershope Burn, Liddel Water and Sorbietrees; the map shows the house in the same place as today's farmhouse and some old trees corresponding to the modern Sorbiholm Strip. Henry Elliot paid tax on 11 windows there in 1748. Elliots were tenants in the later 18th and early 19th centuries. Henry Elliot was there in at least the period 1785–91. John Elliot was farmer there in 1797. Walter Armstrong was a servant there in 1799. Servants James Elliot and Francis Nichol were there in 1801. Another John Elliot was farmer in the 1860s. There was a mill pond to the east. A mineral spring on the farm was once considered to have healing properties, and is marked 'Stinking Well (Chalybeate)' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The farm was used for 'flapping' race meetings in the latter part of the 20th century. It is also a former name for lands to the east of Smailholm Crag (also 'The Flatt', it is 'the Flates' in 1583; it is 'Flett' on Blaeu's c.1654 map and 'Flat' on Stobie's 1770 map).

flatty (fla-tee) n., poet. an ignorant person – 'What mak's ye spae o' caul' an' want, To gliff puir corky-noddl'd flatties?' [JoHa].

flauch see flach

flauchter see flachter

flaught see flacht

flaw (flaw) n., arch. a piece of ground used for drying peats – ‘A flaw o’ peats, the spot of ground occupied by an individual, on the edge of a moss, on which his peats are spread for being dried, in the summer season’ [JoJ], a quantity of peats (also flowe).

Fleck (flek) n. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. He paid the Horse Tax at ‘over Chesterhall’ in 1797; this was probably a temporary name for Over Bonchester. His children included: Betty (b.1789); and James (b.1791).

Flecks see the Flex

fleece (flees) n., arch. a supply of stock, a flock or company of people, humorous term for an outfit of clothes – ‘A’ve bocht a new fleece o warm claes for the wunter months’ [ECS].

the Fleece see the Fleece Inn

Fleece Close (flees-klōs) n. passageway at 6 High Street, named after the Fleece Inn, the ballroom of which it led to. In the mid-19th century there was the sign of a golden fleece at the entrance.

the Fleece Inn (thu-flees-in) n. inn formerly at 6 High Steet, also known as ‘the Golden Fleece’. It was reached by the long passageway there, behind what was for a long time Davies the saddler’s. The attached ballroom was further up the close, with access from an outside staircase (seen in an old sketch). In the middle of the 19th century it was used for many purposes, including weddings, dances, theatrical performances and concerts in the winter, as well as ‘Blinnd Wull’s’ dance classes. At one point there were 3 separate dance instructors using the ballroom. It was a popular place for raffles to raise money for distressed workers. There were performances of all kinds there, including the exhibition of a supposed mermaid and performances by Borders clown Billy Purves. One of the last performances there was a recital of selections from Shakespeare by a father and daughter. It was also used for many years for the monthly business meetings of Allars Kirk, with the upper room (No. 5) used for this purpose known jokingly as ‘the Manse’. Thomas Easton ran a school here for a while and in 1838 it was the location for the meeting that organised the opening of the Chartist Store (i.e. the Co-op). George Hunter was the proprietor in 1825 and 1837, Margaret Best is listed there in 1852, then James Hay, followed by James Scott, with the last tenant being town bellman Samuel Lawrence. The licence was reduced from that of a hotel to a public house in 1871 and lost altogether in 1875 for a ‘breach of certificate’. There are 2 sketches made by T.H. Laidlaw in 1899. The ballroom was demolished in 1948 – ‘Jock Buckingham to the Fleece is gane To sleep among his rags ...’ [WE].

fleech (fleech) v., poet. to cajole, coax, beseech, flatter – ‘But what are a’ their fleeching tales to me? Colin I loo, but them I downa see’ [CPM], ‘An’ that in nae most awfu’ gracious manner; I’m plainly blunt – nor kens the way to fleech’ [JoHa], ‘Nae fleeching an’ fondness, but glunching an’ strife, Bestridles the way o’ a man wi’ a wife’ [JoHa], ‘I’ve fleech’d an’ foughten a’ in vain – Jock disna seem to care; I’ve thrashed him o’er and o’er again Until my airm was sair’ [JT].

fleet (flee) v., poet. to float, to flow, flood – ‘... blow apon my gairden that its spices may fleet owt’ [HSR], ‘Where the weet comes frae the flowe, And fleets, ye mind, on yon bit lea’ [HSR], arch. to be awash with water – ‘... and boggy ground on the other which fleets water all the winter season’ [GT].

Fleety Wud (flee-ee-wud) n. wood on the east side of the Slitrig, to the south of North Berryfell farm. The cottage there is Fleety Cottage or Fleety Haugh, formerly called Elliotfield (the name presumably relates to propensity for flooding in the area).

fleg (fleg) v., arch. to frighten, scare, drive away by scaring – ‘... But stuff my wame wi’ guid kail brose, To fleg the caul’ Syne strutting in guid plaidin’ hose, I look fu’ baul’ [JR], ‘... An’ scripture anathema’s gather, To fleg the faithless’ [JR], to fling (as a horse, from a fright), n. a fright, scare – ‘An’ if ye meet wi’ Whisky Meg, That honest hearted carlin, Gude faith your cares will get a fleg ...’ [JR], ‘... She threw doon a guinea, and thought it weel waired, For he, to her ailment, had given a fleg’ [TCh].

fleggar (fle-gur) n., arch., poet. someone who flinches, one who frightens – ‘Even in the Tranties, wi’ their beggars, The spoilers had found fearfu’ fleggars’ [AD], a horse that is prone to flinging off its rider (the meaning of Agnes Douglas’ line may possibly instead be ‘an exaggerator, liar’ just be ‘scarer’).

flei (fli) n. a fly, any general flying insect – ‘is that flei a cleg or jist a hoose-flei?’, ‘shut yer mooth or the fleis’ll get in’, ‘Dirty white-wesh, deid-rot treis, Baked bean tins and mawky fleis ...’ [DH], v. to fly – ‘she’s gliffed stiff ti flei’, ‘But hei took iz roond the Haugh – Oh, how the time did flei' [DH], '...it's sixteen eer sin oor Queen an Prince Philip last veesiteet the toon. How time fleis' [BW1978] (also spelled 'fley'; see also hooose-flei, mauky-flei and shairny-flei).

flei ceemetry (fli-see-mi'-ree) n. humorous term for fly paper – 'They came to a horrible, fascinating end on revolting 'fly cemetery's' ...' [BB], humorous term for a fruit slice made of pastry and currants.

fleich (fli-ch) v., poet. to cajole, flatter – '...wi' fleichin' lipps, an' wi' ane duuble hairt do thaye speik' [HSR].

flei-hauf (fli-hawf) n. fly-half in rugby, playing at no. 10, and being effectively the leader of the backs.

flei-hook (fli-hook) n. a fishing fly, especially in the phrase 'dressed like a flei-hook', meaning overdressed.

flei-in adder (fli-in-aw-dur) n., arch. the dragon-fly (also 'fleein adder', 'fleein ether', etc.).

flei-in bent (fli-in-ben) n., arch. a rough grass, purple melic, Molinia caerulea.

flei-in oot (fli-in-oo) adj., arch. sticking-out – 'Yet there was a Hawick wumman used to take a flyin-oot lip whenever the train got to Reston Junction ...' [DH].

flei in the air (fli-in-thu-ār) interj. used to express doubt – 'that's nae mair gold is flei in the air'.

Fleming (fle-min) n. Sir David of Biggar (d.1405/6) eldest son of Sir Malcolm. He distinguished himself at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388. Being in royal favour he gained several properties and titles, including being (briefly) given the Barony of Cavers and Sherifffdom of Roxburgh by King Robert III on being forfeited by the Earl of Douglas in 1405. In 1404 he was a Commissioner for negotiating a truce with England. In 1405 he was one of those ensuring (unsuccessfully, for he was captured by the English) the safe passage of Prince James of Scotland by ship to France, to escape the plottings of the Douglasses. However, the Royal force was met at Long Hermiston Moor and he was killed there by James Douglas of Balveny, son of Archibald Earl of Douglas. As a result Cavers (and the Sherifffdom) returned to Douglas hands, and later Douglas of Balveny became the 7th Earl of Douglas. He married Jean, daughter of Sir David Barclay of Brechin and secondly married Isabel, heiress of Monycabow. He had a daughter Marrion (who married William Maule of Panmure) and 2 sons, Sir Malcolm and David. He was ancestor of the Earls of Wigtown. Hugh (12th C.) landowner at Malton in Yorkshire. He is recorded in Reginald of Durham's collection of miracles of St. Cuthbert, probably written in the 1170s. He was said to have fled Malton due to the incursions of the army of William the Lion, and sought refuge in the chapel of St. Cuthbert in the Slitrig valley. A vision of the saint told him to take moss from the stone basin that was outside the chapel and place some under his hood. He was thereby able to pass his enemies undetected and return to Malton. James (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. He was probably from the west side. His surname appears to be 'Fliming'. He is probably the James 'Fleemin', married to Agnes 'Putrie', whose children born in Hawick included William (b.1685), Margaret (b.1687) and Isobel (b.1692). John (14th C.) chaplain at Hawick in the mid-1300s. He may be the same as 'John de Hawick' mentioned in 1356. All that is really known about him is recorded in an action brought against him by John Leche, secretary of the Bishop of Glasgow in 1363, asking for confirmation that he held the Hawick benefice 'although John Fleming, a younger man than himself and not a priest, held the Church and contested it, saying the patronage belonged to him'. John (18th/19th C.) cabinet-maker in Castleton listed among the subscribers to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is listed as a joiner among heads of households in 1835. He was listed as a wright in Newcastle in Pigot's 1837 directory. He does not occur on the 1841 census. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Roan, near Newcastle. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Ruecastle. He was taxed in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. Robert (b.c.1810) tailor who lived on Kiryard in 1841. He was there along with shoemaker Walter, probably his older brother, as well as Elizabeth, probably their mother, and children Janet and James. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Robert (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1793). Thomas (b.c.1780) recorded at Bedrule on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He is 'late Roxbr. Light Dragoons', suggesting that this excepted him from selection. Thomas (19th C.) married Christina Fraser in Wilton in 1851. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as a teacher on Melgund Place in Pigot's 1837 directory. He is probably the young schoolmaster called William who was residing in Kelso in 1841. He died in about 1846.

Flemington (flem-ing-tin) n. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cauldmill in 1720, 1723 and 1731 and Deanbrae in 1738. He married Ann Turnbull in 1720 and their children included: Margaret (b.1721); Thomas (b.1723); Robert (b.1726); Robert (again, b.1728); Archibald (b.1731); and Margaret (b.1738). His name is sometimes written 'Flemingtoun'; it is a rare surname in the area.

flenders (flen-durz) n., pl., poet. splinters, fragments – '... Now ye your barrels into flenders May ding wi' speed' [JoHa], '... thou salt basch thame inti flendirs like ane patter's vesshel' [HSR], 'Thou didist smatter the heæds o' leviathan intil flenders ...' [HSR].

flesh (flesh) n., arch. a general term for butcher meat – 'A made a faiasable mael oot o pie-soop, ... caald flesh, picklt ingans ...' [ECS], '... for aw've the pot on the day, an' aw henna the flesh in yet' [JTul].

flesher (fle-shur) n., arch. a butcher. There were formerly strict laws attached to the treatment of meat, which the Town Council enforced, e.g. in 1713 a flesher was fined for bringing a carcase into the Town that had already died in the country. In Hawick the 'fleshers' were one of the 7 incorporated trades, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They obtained their 'Seal of Cause' in 1720, when there were 7 of them, but had ceased to exist by the end of the 19th century. In Selkirk the 'Fleshers', a remnant of the former trade incorporation there, are still an active group with their own reception etc. during the Common Riding. The amount of business done locally was at a fairly low level until the latter part of the 18th century. Cutting the hamstrings of escaped cattle in the public street was one of the barbaric practices of the 18th century mentioned by Robert Wilson. An 1860 photograph (of George Davies' shop) shows the once common sight (before being banned in 1862) of carcasses hanging up outside the shop – 'Item, to Adam Lidderdale, flescheour in Hawik, for flesche to the place, tuentie pundis' [SB1574], 'The said day, Bessie Henderson, spouse to Cuthbert Henderson, fleshour, being accused ...' [BR1638], 'Item, that all flescheris present the hale flesh slaine by them at the mercat place ...' [BR1640], 'The fleshers are ordained by the council not to sell skins until they shall first be exposed in the market place ...' [BR1663], 'The incorporations are 7, viz. weavers, tailors, hammermen, skinners, fleshers, shoemakers, and baxters' [RRG], '... Past fletcher, wabster, hind' [DH] (also sometimes 'fletcher'; several spelling variants exist, such as 'fleshour').

the Flesh Mercat (thu-flesh-mer-ki) n., arch. former name for a market held in Hawick to sell meat. In 1755 it is recorded that 'The Flesh Mercate' was finished at the cost of £20, suggesting there was a building constructed especially for this purpose. It is specifically recorded that a 'cross-tree' was put up there in 1755 and there was a 'roup' for it that year (presumably it was rented by butchers). However, in 1762 the Council resolved to 'take down the Flesh Market and Cross', and to dispose of the stones and timber; this suggests that it may have been located close to the foot of the Cross Wynd.

flet (fle) pp., arch. scolded, chided – 'The tongues o' wives wha never flet, The picture o' a mither's pet' [JoHa] (cf. flate).

Fletcher (fle-chur) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included William (b.1689). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Borthwickshiels in 1718, 1722 and 1724. He may have married Margaret Tait in 1715. His children included: Janet (b.1718); Margaret (b.1720); James (b.1722); and Adam (b.1724). He was surely related to William who was at Borthwickshiels about the same time. Alexander (b.c.1780) saddler in Newcastleton according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was also listed as a saddler in Newcastleton on Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He was at about 48 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Elizabeth ('Betty'). Probably the same Alexander was listed as a tailor in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as miller in Synton Mill in 1689 and 1698. In 1689 he had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk in the name of his wife Margaret Smail. He witnessed baptisms in 1689 for John Turnbull and for William Balmer, in 1691 for George Robison and for Robert Gledstains, and in 1694 for James Rutherford and for William Palmer. Also in 1694 he and William witnessed a baptism for John Cuthbertson and Isobel (who was surely related). He married Margaret Smail and their children included George (b.1688), Isobel (b.1692), William (b.1696), Janet (b.1698), Helen (b.1701) and Andrew (b.1704). Andrew (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to

Janet Kedie. Their children included: Janet (b.1737); Mary (b.1740); and Walter (b.1741). He was probably related to Betty Fletcher, who was married to Thomas Kedie at about the same time. He is probably the Andrew who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1760. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitfield in 1759. He married Mary Henderson in 1756. Their son James was baptised in 1759, with witnesses William and Robert Scott. George (d.c.1558) son of Thomas, from whom he was given the lands of Ruecastle in 1519. His son was John. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son John was born in 1636. Perhaps the same George married Isobel Veitch and has a son Andrew baptised in 1653. He also witnessed a baptism in 1652 for Thomas, who was probably a brother or other close relative. George (17th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £12. He is probably related to the George who was recorded in Bedrule Parish in 1694. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate and is probably related to James and John, who are also listed. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1690 he (along with William) witnessed a baptism for John and Isobel Brydon. He married Agnes Veitch and their children included James (b.1705). George (18th C.) witnessed a baptism for James Henderson in Branhholme in 1728. George (18th C.) tenant farmer at Turn near Stobs. He was there in the 1750s when his servant Robert Thomson got into a violent altercation with the Hawick Town Herd over his flock being hounded off the Common. He could be the George, son of James, born in Bedrule Parish in 1730. James (16th C.) recorded in Huntly in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement between the tenants in Dodhead and Singlie. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Reid, whose surname is written 'Red'. Their children included: William (b.1670); Thomas (b.1672); James (b.1675); and Helen (b.1676). James Haining states that 'in some notes of James Wilson, Town Clerk, appears a famous Fletcher m. to Isobel Reid or Rae', but it is unclear what was famous about him. He is probably the James, son of Thomas, born in Ashkirk in 1644. James (17th C.) tenant in Bel-lendean. Along with several other men from the upper Borthwick, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the 'Test' and promised not to frequent conventicles.

His name is given as 'Flesher'. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His name is recorded as 'Flatcher'. His wife was Janet Scott and they had a son George (b.1662). James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, included William (b.1693) and George (b.1698). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He may have been son of the earlier James. His children included Mary (b.1726), Margaret (b.1728) and George (b.1730). Andrew (b.1732) and William (b.1735), baptised in Ashkirk Parish, may also have been his children. Rev. James (1725/6–1803) from Dalkeith, he became the first minister of the Newcastle-ton Burgher Kirk in 1762. He was one of 6 students who entered the divinity hall in 1758, only 2 of whom became ministers. His appointment to Castleton came after a long delay, caused by difficulty in finding a suitable man. He was said to be skilled at optics and keen on astronomy, and a friend of James Veitch of Inchbonny. He is also said to have built a 'wooden horse' which he used to get around the Parish; it is unclear whether or not this was an early predecessor of the bicycle. There were also stories of how he had second sight and predicted things about the next 3 ministers of the parish. He was said to be 'a man of singularly primitive manners' and was not a successful minister, being a strict disciplinarian and having an off-putting manner. A new Kirk was built around 1773, but it was said that the congregation was in decline by 1793. Around this time there was also the establishment of Newcastle-ton, dramatically altering the parish. A complaint was made to the Selkirk Presbytery in 1801 that he was preaching against accepted doctrine, which led to discussions of his dismissal, during which he announced his resignation; he had apparently come to a new but unorthodox understanding of the Trinity, and written of this in a preface to an edition of Dr. Watts on 'The Sonship of Christ'. He moved back to Dalkeith and shortly before his death published 'The orthodox scheme freed from the remains of Arianism . . .', largely a commentary on the works of Rev. Isaac Watts. He married Christian Beattie in 1769 and had a daughter, also Christian (d.1835). The family are buried in Castleton churchyard John (15th C.) resident of Hartwood. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford in Phaup was allowed to compone for several crimes, including stealing sheep from him and Robert Nichol. His surname is recorded as ‘flegiar’. John (16th C.) son of George, he inherited the lands of Ruecastle in 1558/9. Then he immediately sold the lands to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Perhaps the same John was recorded in 1563 leasing part of the lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish and in 1580 witnessing a transaction involving the Johnstones of Hermiston. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. He married Isobel Brydon and their children included: Janet (b.1680), baptised in Hawick; and Isobel (b.1690), baptised in Ashkirk. The witnesses in 1690 were William and George, who were probably related to him. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. He may be the John whose children baptised in Bedrule included: Helen (b.1693); Thomas (b.1696); Margaret (b.1698); Isabel (b.1701); Janet (b.1704); Jean (b.1708); John (b.1706); and possibly Jean (b.1718). John (18th C.) tenant in Branhholme. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included Margaret (b.1726). John (18th/19th C.) saddler in Hawick with Andrew Aitchison. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia, in place of John Henderson, who had been declared a deserter. He asked for more time in order to find a substitute. However, since there appears to be no record of a substitute being found, he presumably served. Peter (18th/19th C.) weaver in the West-end. Along with Robert Leithead, he walked to Selkirk to secure the services of the drummer and fifer there for the ‘rebel’ party during the 1809 Common Riding. He is probably the Peter who had a child John with Jane Paterson in Wilton in 1794. The death of his illegitimate grandchild was recorded in 1816. Robert (15th C.) owner of the lands of Ruecastle. He had a sasine for the lands according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1471, with his name given as ‘Roberto Flesware’. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. Robert (d.c.1492) son of Thomas. He inherited the lands of Ruecastle (in Bedrule) in 1470/1. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1561 when Robert, son of Walter Scott of Synton, promised to produce him at the next truce day at Coldstream. This was to answer the charge that he stole 3 horses from Steven Simpson in Berwick. He is recorded as ‘Hob Flescheour’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1717 he was recorded as tenant in Huntly. He married Agnes Renaldson and their children included Andrew (b.1706), William (b.1708), Andrew (again, b.1717) and

Andrew (again, b.1723). The 1717 baptism took place in the Manse ‘there being Examination that day’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Hosscote in 1710. He probably married Bessie Scott in Robertson in 1708. His children included: Isobel (b.1710); and Helen (b.1714). Robert (d.bef. 1800) recorded as Robert ‘Flecker’ in 1800 when his wife Annie Scott died in Hawick. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as a herd in 1796. His children included William (b.1794) and James (b.1796). Thomas (d.c.1470) inherited the lands of Ruecastle from his father Robert in the 5th year of the King’s reign (i.e. either 1441 or 1464), 8 years after his father’s death. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Robert, from whom he inherited the lands of Ruecastle. In 1497 he retained Ruecastle after having them held ‘in wadset’ to Janet Moscrop. He gave the lands to his son George in 1519, except for ‘liferent’. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Minto and their son Walter was baptised in 1652. The witnesses were George (presumably a relative) and Robert Mathieson. Thomas (d.1680) from Bedrule parish, where he has one of the earliest surviving grave-stones. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Kedie in 1692 and their children included William (b.1696) and Janet (b.1698). William (15th C.) tenant in ‘le crug’, which could be ‘Crook’ near Hawick. His name is given as ‘William flegiar’ when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; he appears right after 4 Routledges who are connected with the lands of Trows near Crook. He was also called in 1494/5 and again failed to appear. William (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be the William who (along with George) witnessed a baptism for John in 1690. He is probably the William who in 1694 (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism for John Cuthbertson and Isobel (who was surely related). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickshiels in 1721, 1723, 1725, 1727 and 1729. He may have married Isobel Smail in Robertson in 1722. His children included: Walter (b.1721); Margaret (b.1723); Mary (b.1725); Andrew (b.1727); William (b.1729); and Margaret (b.1731). He may have been brother of Adam who was at Borthwickshiels at the same time (formerly spelled ‘Flechar’, ‘Fleggear’, ‘Flegiar’, ‘Fleigar’, ‘Fleschar’, etc.).

the Fletcher (thu-fle-chur) n. reputedly the sole survivor of Selkirk's men, who returned from Flodden with an English flag and cast it down. The 'Casting of the Colours' is the ceremonial re-enactment of this at Selkirk Common Riding every year. Whether there is any veracity to the story is unclear, and there is a contradictory version involving a Town Clerk called Brydon.

flewn (floon) pp. flown – 'she's never been abroad or flewn onywhere', 'It has flewn away' [GW], 'The nest's flewn' (= young ones have taken wing' [GW] (cf. the older flown).

the Flex (thu-fleks) n. farm on the northern side of the road between St. Leonard's and the Slitrig, and a name for that general area. The name is old, with a 'Richard de Flex' of Roxburghshire signing the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and Alexander of Flex witnessing a charter in 1357/8. It was included in a list of lands claimed by the English Crown in c.1380. Alexander Gledstains held the lands in the early 15th century, with a confirming charter in 1458, but had to yield them to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1464/5 following a case before the Justiciary South of the Forth. William Douglas had a sasine for these lands (along with Kirkton Mains) immediately following; this was done at the 'principale messuagium', i.e. main dwelling. In the charter for the Barony of Hawick in 1511 these lands were listed among those held by the Baron 'in property'. James Scott of Flex is recorded in 1556. The lands were among those inherited by James Douglas in 1572 along with the Barony of Hawick and listed among the property of the Baron in 1594. In a land valuation of 1627 it is listed as 'estimat to 100 merks in stok, parsonage 2 bolls, vicarage 5 lbs'. A charter for the land was given to John Gledstains in 1653, when it was described as 'extending to five merks, old extent', and it was probably the main residence for the Gledstains of Whitlaw. It was still valued at 5 merks (of old extent) when inherited by Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw in 1672. John Stoddart was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694 and Robert Stoddart was there in 1695. William Lillico was herd there in 1700. Walter Martin was there in at least 1700–02. William Henderson was smith there in at least 1702–09 and Francis was also smith in at least 1702–04. John Davidson was tenant there in at least 1718–22 and Archibald Paterson in 1716–19. William Hill was a weaver there in 1720. Anne Stothart was there in 1723. John Thomson was there in 1726. John Irvine was tenant in 1741, with John Cavers and John Goodfellow also there.

James Reid and William Scott were there in 1743. Robert Boyd purchased the farm in 1751 and in 1753 march stones were laid out along the burn-side to mark the boundary with the Common. John Laing lived there in the late 18th century, and William Elliott Lockhart in the late 19th. By 1788 the lands of Flex had been disjoined from those of Whitlaw, were valued at £144 10s 9d and were owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae; it had the same value and owner in 1811. William Scott was there from at least 1799 and was also recorded 'at Flex' in 1811. Henry Scott Riddell also lived here for several years, walking 9 miles to preach at Teviothead. In about 1874 it was recorded being owned by Allan Elliott Lockhart. The Cornet and followers come back to Hawick this way after the 'Orderin o the Curds an Cream'. A fanciful tradition states that an underground passage led from the farmhouse to Goldielands Tower. J.P. Alison designed a house (or alterations perhaps) in 1896. An oval-shaped hollowed stone found there is in the Museum – 'To Flex and Wulliestruther, St. Leeonards, Haggisha', And Hawick there in the middle, The centre o' them a' [WL] (note that it is usually referred to as 'the Flex', rather than just 'Flex'; also spelled 'Flecks', 'Flexis' and other variants; it is 'Flex' in 1296, 'Fleokes' in 1304, 'Flexis' in 1458, 'Flekis' in 1464/5 and 1511, 'Flex' in 1514, 'Flekis' in 1559 and 1572, 'Flekis' in 1594 and 1615, 'Flexs' in 1700, 1707 and 1709 and 'Flexes' in 1717; it is marked 'Flecks' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Flax' on the Buccleuch survey of in 1718; the origin of the name is obscure, but 'fleck' is a Scots word for a cattle pen made of hurdles).

Flex (fleks) n. Alexander (14th C.) recorded in 1356 when ordered by Edward III to be released from the Tower of London. This was because he had promised not to communicate with 'the enemy in Scotland'; he was recorded as 'Alexander de Flex a Scotsman'. In 1357 he was 'Alexander Fleokes' on a panel of inquisition held in Roxburgh. He was witness to a charter granting the lands of Altonburn to the Kers in 1357/8; all of the other men were from Roxburghshire, and so presumably these were the lands near Hawick. Probably the same 'Alexandro de ffleckys' witnessed a charter for lands in Lessuden being granted to Melrose Abbey in about 1370. A document of c.1380, listing lands claimed by England (following the truce), includes 'the lands of Flex which were Alexander Flex's, with his lands in Hawyk'. In 1361 he was on another panel of inquest in Roxburgh, relating to Nether Crailing.

He must have been related to the earlier Richard. Richard (13th C.) recorded as being ‘de Flex’ in Roxburghshire when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows a crescent enclosing a star (suggesting a connection with the Scotts perhaps) and the name ‘S’RICARDI DE FLECHIS’. He was also on a jury in 1304 at Dumfries (made up of men from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire) to decide on the privileges claimed by Robert Bruce, Earl of Carrick (later King); he was there ‘Richard del Fleckes’. His lands were presumably those at the Flex, near Hawick.

Flex Back Burn (fleks-bawk-burn) n. another name for Acreknowe Burn (it is so described in the 1767 description of the Common).

the Flex Brae (thū-fleks-brā) n. another name for the road leading from St. Leonard’s past Flex farm down to the Slitrig.

Flex Burn (fleks-burn) n. stream running from Williestruther down to the Slitrig.

Flex Lodge Park (fleks-loj-pawrk) n. name of the field on Hawick Common to the north-west of the Flex farm.

Flex Mairch East (fleks-mārch-eest) n. enclosure on Hawick Common Moor to the east of Williestruther cottage.

Flex Mairch West (fleks-mārch-west) n. field on Hawick Common to the east of Williestruther Loch and south of the field called ‘Flex Mairch East’.

the Flex Stakes (thū-fleks-stāks) n. race run at the Common Riding. An amount of £500 was left by James Elliot (d.1923), farmer of the Flex, with the interest to be run for yearly.

fley (flā, flī) v., poet. to scare, frighten, put to flight, make flee – ‘Peur man! silly man! thou’s sic a fleyed thing! Wey, what is thou so fleyed o’, Jack?’ [JTe], ‘And whiles a wee bit prayer began, To fley away the ghaists and witches’ [JT], ‘He was fley’d oot o’ his wuts’ [GW] (cf. flei).

fley see flei

flicher (flī-chur) n., arch. a flake (also flicht and flichter).

flicht (flīcht) n., arch., poet. flight – ‘... The gems that whirl in crazy flicht Maun end in draiglin’ lifeless mud’ [WP].

flicht (flīcht) n., arch. a flake (of soot or snow), a small speck (e.g. in porridge or other food), a mote of dust – ‘... where yin braiths God’s air clear an no suddlt wui suitty flicht’ [ECS] (also flicher and flichter).

Flicht (flīcht) n. former name for an area in Liddesdale, south-east of Castleton, close to the Border. It is now marked by ‘Flight’s Moss’ on the Ordnance Survey map, although the area around the farm ‘The Flatt’ near Kershopefoot may also be meant. It is recorded as ‘Flygh’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 20 shillings. The farm of ‘Hieflycht’ is listed in 1541, with a value of 3 pounds and tenanted by Martin Nixon. Matthew and John Nixon were there in 1544. Hob Elliot of Thorlieshope was ‘in Flicht’ in 1587/8 when held in ward with the Laird of Balwearie. The eastern part was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre in 1667 (and apparently again in 1691), having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. John Wilson was tenant there in 1694 and James Lamb also a resident. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands it appears to be combined with Kirndeane and Clintwood. Robert Robertson was shepherd there in 1797. It is marked on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland as ‘Flightes cha.’ and on other roughly contemporary maps as ‘Flightes cast’, suggesting there was confusion over whether there was a chapel or a castle there. It is probably the ‘Flygh superior’ listed as a 36-shilling land. The remains of a farmstead are located near the head of the Boghall Burn. The New Statistical Account mentions 2 ‘camps’ on the farm, one round and the other square (it is ‘Flycht’ in 1516, ‘Flecht’ in 1544 and ‘Flight’ in 1694; Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘East Flicht’ and ‘West Flicht’, with ‘Flicht’s Fell’ above, while it is still marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and is labelled as a ruin on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

flichter (flīch-tur) v., arch., poet. to flutter, to fly about lightly (as snow) – ‘He little ken’d my heart was flight’ring fain. My winsome lad! O gin ye war my ain!’ [CPM], ‘... an the flichterin burdies daibbelt an dookeet’ [ECS], ‘The broun leaves flichtered crinklin’ Wi’ the first soft flecks o’ snaw’ [WL].

flichty (flīch-tee) adj., arch. flighty – ‘... proving yet again that it’s no’ the weemen-folk that’s flichty!’ [DH].

green Moat' [TK], v. to flood – 'A says 'What er oo gaun ti dae now?', cos it was fliddin virtually the whole road ...' [IA] (also spelled 'fluid' and 'flude' and probably formerly pronounced flūd).

fliddin (fli-din) n. a flooding – 'The fluidin's gey bad aa the watergate lang, – I've a fine pair o' towels, as cheap as they're strang!' [WL].

the Flid Merk (thū-flid-merk) n. name sometimes used for the plaque at Towerdykeside, marking the level of the Slitrig flood of 1846. The level was marked annually by James Smith, Cornet that year, and a painter to trade. The plaque was placed there by him and his friends in 1902, with the inscription 'Flood Mark July 1846'.

flids (flidz) n., pl. the Teviot floods every few years, with significant floods in 1796, 1806, 1846, 1926, 1938, 1948, 1953, 1955, 1963, 1977, 2005 (twice, the October one being the worst in living memory), 2015 (with 600 people being evacuated from their homes), 2020 (with the collapse of the Bridge Hotel), etc. A record of 1782 notes damage to the bridges along the Moss paul to Hare Moss Turnpike (essentially the A7). Dramatic floods at Minto are reported in 1783 and 1789, and a torrential rain-storm in 1806. The flood of November 1938 swept away the Victoria Bridge and the Mansfield Bridge. The Slitrig can also rise rapidly, and perhaps even more dramatically. The most infamous such event was the Great Flid of August 1767, when the river rapidly rose 22 feet (about 6.5 m) above its normal level, sweeping away many houses, as well as the old Corn Mill, and drowning 2 people. The Teviot flood of early 1796 carried away part of the burial ground at Hassendean. Sir Walter Scott describes the flood of 1806, when the lower floor of Minto House was filled with water and trees and livestock sailed past his own house. This flood also devastated Rulewater, particularly at Bonchester Brigend. The 1806 flood was also bad around Denholm, sweeping away the bridge over the Dean Burn, and removing the remains of the burial ground at Hassendean. The high flood of 29th July 1846 (the Slitrig Flig, sometimes also called the Great Flood) swept away Slitrig Crescent footbridge and its level is marked by a brass plaque in Towerdykeside about 1.5 m (5 feet) above pavement level. This flood followed a tremendous thunder storm starting between 7 and 8 o'clock, with the water level rising steadily, the town bells being rung at midnight, and the level peaking at 14 feet above normal shortly afterwards. The Auld Brig was again blocked by debris and effectively dammed the Slitrig. Lynnwood Cauld and

2 bridges over the Slitrig were swept away. Walls, cauld, carts, trees, cattle, etc. were carried off. Silver Street became part of the river, water ran over the Tower Knowe and down the Mill Port and water flowed down the High Street as far as the Round Close, forming streams to the Teviot down several closes. The worst damage was to the businesses on the Sandbed. The Teviot also overflowed, causing great damage over a wider area, and sweeping away iron railings at the Haugh. There was similar damage in Teviotdale, Rulewater (where the river was said to be 10–12 feet higher than normal and Hobsburn bridge was lost), the Slitrig valley Liddesdale (where some cottages were washed away) and elsewhere, with a rider drowning while returning from Langholm Common Riding. There was another severe flood in Liddesdale in July 1849, with Whitrope Toll House and stable washed away and water pouring down the main street in Newcastleton. A stone in Newcastleton commemorates the flood there. In 1862 part of the Haugh flooded overnight on the Friday of the Common Riding, making conditions extremely wet for the Saturday races and games. In August 1901 flooding in some parts of the town was caused by intense rain following an unprecedented hailstorm, with hailstones larger than an inch in diameter, which caused damage to windows, crops and trees and killed many birds. The year 1948 also saw a major flood throughout the Borders, about which there is a book, 'The Great Borders Flood of 1948' by Lawson Wood. The Teviot's highest flow rate (since recording began in 1963) was 142.4 m³/s on 17th February 1997. The floods of early 2020 washed away part of Bridge House and devastated Newcastleton – 'On Hawick burst the flood's resistless sway, Plough'd the paved streets, and tore the walls away, Floated high roofs, from whelming fabricks torn; While pillar'd arches down the wave were borne' [JL].

Flight see Flicht

flinders (flin-durz) n., pl., poet. splinters, smithereens – '... The next chain'd dore that they came at, They gard it a' in flinders flee. With my fa ding, &c.' [CPM], '... he sall saufe the childer o' the needie, an' sall brik in flinders the oppresser' [HSR].

fling (fling) v., arch. to kick up the heels, dance, caper, n. a dance, act of kicking.

Flintoff (flin-tof) n. Butler (18th C.) dance-master, who must have travelled around the Borders towns. In 1785 he is 'Mr Flintiff (teacher of dancing)' who paid the Hawick Council for renting the Town House for 2 months. In 1769 in Oxnam Parish he married Ann Rutherford and they had children John, Walter, Mary, Archibald, Susanna and Thomas Winterup.

fliird (fliird) n., arch. a flimsy and poor piece of fancy dress, anything insubstantial – 'A thin fliird' [JoJ], pl., poet. vanities, vain finery – 'Let manly worth doff the flyrds of folly' [HSR] (also written 'flyrd').

fliird (fliird) v., poet. to flirt, move about restlessly (use by James Ruickbie).

fliisk (fliisk) v., arch., poet. to frolic, caper, frisk – 'There, often seen in other days, The fairies fliisked a thousand ways ...' [AD], n., arch. a caper, flick, whisk.

flit (fli', flit) v. to move house, remove from one place to another, change one's dwelling place – '...did wairne him ...to flit and remove fra the haill foirsidis landis ...' [SB1624], 'He must not sell any of the straw, hay or dung from the farm and his servants must flit on the agreed date' [SPB1773], 'The Prince of Wales, he Regent is, his father's throne to sit, For that's the way the world goes, – the aged they must flit' [BY], 'Oo'll beide i this hooose ti Whussenday, an than oo'll flit' [ECS], '...But they cam' and condemned it, and garred mei flit' [DH], 'There's flitting east, there's flitting west, Their rents are raised anew' [WH], '... And she shortly efter flitted Frae the Vertish Hill' [IWL].

flittin (fli'-in) n. a house removal, formerly applied to the moving of farm workers at Whitsuntide – '...the spinning wheel, ...was an indispensable top-piece to the bride's home-going flitting' [JAHM], 'There's flittings east, there's flittings west, Their rents are rais'd anew ...' [WH], 'A sei there's a flittin next door', 'At the fit o the brae a flitteen was gaun on' [ECS].

float-whey (flō'-whā) n., arch. a dish made by boiling whey, particularly from ewe's milk – 'Flot quhaye, a common dish in the pastoral districts of Scotland, formed by boiling the whey after it is expressed from the cheese curds, with a little meal and milk, when a species of very soft curd floats at the top' [JL].

flocks (floks) n., arch. waste wool or cotton used for stuffing mattresses and furniture – 'Lift the tyke, that's filled wi' flocks ...' [IJ].

Flodden (flo-din) n. battle of 9th September 1513, the Scots being led by King James IV, and Henry VIII's English by Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey. The motivation was to divert some of the English troops away from their French campaign. However, the battle was disastrous for the Scots, with Surrey bringing his forces in behind them, making retreat back to Scotland nearly impossible once things started to go badly. The battle commenced about 4p.m. and went on into the night. Eventually James was dead, along with 1 archbishop, 4 abbots, 12 earls, 17 lairds, perhaps 400 knights and as many as 10,000 others. Borderers under Huntly and Hume played a significant role and suffered huge losses. Sir William Douglas and most of the Hawick men were also killed. One exception was John Chisholme, who returned with the family pennon, although his brother was killed. In the wake of Flodden the Borders was left with almost no defence against the ravages of Surrey and Dacre – 'Sons of heroes slain at Flodden! Met to ride and trace our common' [JH], 'Scotia felt thine ire, O Oden! On the bloody field of Flodden ...' [JH], 'Green Flodden! on thy blood-stain'd head Descend no rain nor vernal dew; But still thou charnel of the dead, May whitening bones they surface strew!' [JL], 'In days of yore at Flodden's fatal field, The Hawick heroes cried they would not yield' [MP], '...I knew I had stayed from Flodden, and I wish that I were dead' [RSC], 'When the grief that flowed from Flodden Had assuaged its keenest pain ...' [TK], 'When our life looks at its Floddens, where cherished dreams lie low, And big, brave hopes, like burghers dead, are smitten by the foe' [JYH]. Among the noblemen and landowners with local connections who were slain at the battle are: William, Lord Borthwick (possibly); Robert, son of Robert Chisholme of that ilk; George Douglas, Master of Angus; Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig; Robert Elliot of Redheugh; Robert Erskine of Synton, Earl of Mar; John Hay, 2nd Lord Yester; Adam Hepburn, 2nd Earl of Bothwell; Sir David Home of Wedderburn; John Murray of Blackbarony; Sir Alexander Scott of Hassendean (possibly); John Scott of Haining; Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley; James Stewart of Traquair; and John Stewart of Minto (perhaps).

Flodden Field (flo-din-feeld) n. site of the Battle of Flodden, west of the River Till, near Branxton, about 6 miles from Coldstream, in Northumberland. The site was known as ‘Flodden’ in Scottish records, but was often Twiselhaugh in early English documents. The precise locations of the encampments and engagements are not certain. Many of those killed were buried at St. Paul’s church in Branxton. A large memorial cross was erected at the battle site in 1910 – ‘At Flodden field our fathers fought it ...’ [AB], ‘With dauntless hearts, unknown to yield; In slow procession round the pile Of heaving corpses moves each shadowy file, And chaunts in solemn strain the dirge of Flodden field’ [JL], ‘Iron wills that nane can turn, Hearts that canna yield, Victory at Otterburn! Death on Flodden field!’ [JBS], ‘O Flodden Field, O Flodden Field, Ma heart is wae for thee’ [JEDM], ‘To him whose patriot pride is stirred By memories of the past revealed, Though long resigned to fox and bird What spot so sad as Flodden Field!’ [WHO], ‘From those who fought on Flodden Field we shall not turn away’ [DJ].

Flodden Field (flo-din-feeld) n. verses written by James Hogg in 1819, along with the song ‘the Colour’, both having the identical ‘Teribus’ chorus. ‘Flodden Field’ consists of 15 verses about the Battle of Flodden, and it thus effectively forms the first part of the Hornshole-inspired song. However, it has been seldom sung, in comparison to the familiar ‘Teribus’. The first edition was published in Kelso, and the 2nd by Robert Armstrong in 1824, with several changes. The 3rd was also printed by Armstrong in 1829, but does not bear Hogg’s name, while the 4th was printed by John Elder in 1836, and another by Kennedy’s in 1837, the last before Hogg’s death. The first 3 editions are all quite rare, and there may be no existing copy of the 1st. The song was revived for the 2013 Flodden quincentenary, sung by Michael Aitken.

the Flodden Memorial (thu-flo-din-me-mō-ree-ul) n. memorial on Flodden Field, erected in 1910. The Flodden Memorial Committee, representing both sides of the Border, was chaired by Sir George Douglas. The monument consists of a celtic cross of grey Aberdeen granite, 12 feet 6 inches high on a rough-hewn granite and concrete cairn. The inscription reads simply ‘Flodden 1513. To the brave of both nations. Erected 1910’. It is located on Piper’s Hill near Branxton.

floer (floor) n. a flower – ‘And they may tell o’ valleys fair Bedeck’d wi’ gorgeous floo’ers’ [JEDM], ‘Gie me the heather floer ...’ [JoHa], ‘But ye canna see a’ that list o floo’ers on the photograph, says I’ [DH], ‘... For he’ll find nae ither sae leal and true As the flouer o’ aa the glen’ [WL], ‘On Flodden’s field oor floo’ers they died ...’ [IWS], v. to flower, arch. to sew trimming into muslin or other cloth (also spelled ‘floo’er’, ‘floor’ and ‘flower’).

floored (floo-urd) adj., arch. scabby, losing wool (of sheep) – ‘Flower’d, flour’d, adj. A term applied to sheep, when they begin to become scabby, and to lose their wool, Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

the Floer o Rankleburn (thu-floor-ō-rang-kul-burn) n. nickname of Mary Scott.

The Floers o the Forest (thu-floo-urz-ō-thu-fo-rist, -flow-) n. ancient song whose words exists in 3 separate versions, written by Mrs. Patrick Cockburn (Alison Rutherford), Jean Elliot (of Minto) and Mrs. John Hunter. The tune is recorded in the early 17th century and may not originally have had words. It is also unclear whether the song originally had a connection with the battle of Flodden. Jean Elliot’s version of the words made the song a lament for the death of James IV and other Scotsmen at Flodden. It was published anonymously, and only identified with Elliot later. In Selkirk this version is known as ‘the Liltin’, and the tune is played after the Casting of the Colours. Alison Cockburn’s lyrics appear to be about a financial crisis, and were probably written earlier than Elliot’s (although not published until 1765). The song was immensely popular in the 19th century, being regularly sung in Hawick at the Colour Bussing and similar events. The tune is played internationally at funerals and remembrance ceremonies, where it is often referred to simply as ‘the Lament’ – ‘I’ve heard the liltin, at the yowe-milking, Lassies a-lilting before dawn o’ day; But now they are moaning on ilka green loaning; ‘The Flowers of the Forest are a’ wede away’ [T].

the Floer o Yarrow (thu-floor-ō-yaw-rō, -flowr-) n. nickname for Mary Scott, popularised in a ballad of the same name. She was from Dryhope Tower and married Walter Scott of Harden about 1576. She was mother of 6 sons and at least 4 daughters. It is also said that she raised another boy who was found in the spoil from a Cumberland raid (like ‘Whaup o the Rede), and grew to be a poet, composing some of the Border ballads – ‘Tis Yarrow’s fairest flower, who through the gloom Looks wistful for her lover’s dancing plume’ [JL], ‘... Amang them aa there was nane to marrow Auld Harden’s leddy, the ‘Floer o’ Yarrow’ [WL].

floery (floo-ree, floo-u-ree) adj. flowery – ‘And yonder is the Lover’s Lane And Lynnwood’s floo'ry braes' [GD], 'Fornent iz, athort the fer seide o Teiot's flooery vale ...' [ECS], 'Now a'm no yin for floory talk, Or prone ti airs n' graces. A'll no pretend ti suffer fools, A' say it ti their faces' [IHS/GoM].

flooery (floo-ree) n., arch. the ace of spades – 'Flowerie, fleurie, s. The ace of spades, Teviotd.; perhaps from the ornaments which appear on this card' [JoJ].

Floors (floorz??) n. former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish on what became the B6357, between Wolfelee and Wolfhopelee (marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Floors Castle (flōrz-kaw-sul) n. castle near Kelso, built by John, 1st Duke of Roxburghe, between 1718 and 1740. It was designed by William Adam, and extended around 1839 by William Playfair. It is the home of the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe, and the largest inhabited house in Scotland. It includes collections of art, porcelain, taxidermy and tapestries. James II was killed here when a cannon exploded in 1460, and it was 'Greystoke' in the Tarzan film of 1984. The entire estate is enclosed by a continuous high wall, with a few lodge houses, and contains terraced woodland and open parkland (also formerly 'Fleurs'; the origin of the name is probably just Old English for 'floor' or 'ground' and first appears as 'le fluris' in 1516).

floory docken (floo-ree-do-kin) n., arch. goosefoot, Chenopodium Bonus Henricus or Chenopodium album (named for the apparently powdery leaves).

Florence (flo-rins) n. (d.1210) nobleman and cleric, known as 'Florentius', he was son of the Count of Holland, and also nephew of both King Malcolm IV and William I. He became Bishop of Glasgow in 1202, but resigned in 1207 before he was consecrated. He was also Chancellor of Scotland. He died in Zeeland. His seal bore the figure of a young man seated at a lectern with a book, with a rod of office in one hand, and has the words 'SIGIL. FLOREN[TII] GLAS]GUENSIS ELECTI'.

Florida (flo-ri-da) n. farm in Liddesdale, situated just before Old Castleton on the B6357. Between the house and the river lies an earthwork, possibly a homestead of mediæval date, which lies partially in woods and has been partly eroded by the river. The old house of Dykeraw lay somewhere to the east in what is now forest. John Turnbull and family were there in at least 1841–68. William Hislop was there in 1841 and John Scott and his family in 1851.

Flosh Burn (flosh-burn) n. stream joining the Leap Burn to form the Lang Burn near Langburnshiels, which then becomes the Slitrig. It is joined by Kiln Sike below Robert's Linn and had several other waterfalls on burns that join it from the east. It marks the start (or end) of the Catrail ('flosh' is an old Scots word for boggy ground).

Fodderlee (fo-dur-lee) n. farms and general area on the east side of the Rule valley between Hallrule and Billerwell. David Shiel was tenant there in 1567. The lands there were acquired by Adam French from Jedburgh Abbey in 1569 and were split into the East and West farms in the 17th century. The lands were recorded as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. John Shiel was there in 1586/7. In 1643 Helen Turnbull held lands there valued at £80 and James Turnbull £180. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. In 1678 the land tax on £100 was paid by Mark Turnbull and on £80 by ‘the widow in fotherlie’. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Robert Kerr of Fodderlee was first recorded in 1685, and appears to have owned half of the lands. Mark Turnbull was tenant in the late 1600s. John Turnbull, John Kerr and George Scott were recorded as tenants there in 1694. The east lands passed to Robert Kerr’s daughter Mary (who also married a Kerr) and then grandson Andrew. In 1757 it passed to Robert Thomson, whose mother was Margaret Kerr. Andrew Oliver, ‘Fodderleebirks’, is recorded in 1784. ‘Fodderlee, Fodderlee-bank head, and Fodderlee-birks’ are recorded in 1795 as parts of Hobkirk that are closer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk; these same lands were among those moved to Hobkirk when Abbotrule was suppressed. James Davidson was tenant there in 1797 and Thomas Davidson lived there in 1799. Andrew and Henry Halliday were there in 1801. The modern map shows Old Fodderlee, Easter Fodderlee and Wester Fodderlee, this last being closest to where the Fodderlee Burn joins the Rule Water. A report in 1836 describes how a cairn was removed near there ‘near to a place where tradition says a battle had been fought’ (it is ‘Fodderlie’ in 1567, ‘Foderly’ in 1569, ‘Fodderley’ in 1587 and 1588, ‘Fodderlie’ in 1643, ‘Fotherlie’ 1670, ‘fotherlie’ in 1678, transcribed ‘Foderlae’ in 1680, ‘Fotherlie’ in 1690, 1694 and 1707 and ‘Fatherlee’ in 1797; it is marked as just ‘Fodderlie’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map; also written Fotherlie, see also Auld Fodderlee, Easter Fodderlee and Wester Fodderlee).

Fodderleebankheid (fo-dur-lee-bawngk-heed) n. former farm near the modern Easter Fodderlee. It is shown on Stobie’s 1770 map. William Hall was living there in 1774 when it is ‘Foderly bank head’.

Fodderleebirks (fo-dur-lee-birks) n. former farm near Fodderlee in Abbotrule Parish. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map near the site of the present Wester Fodderlee. Andrew Oliver was recorded there in 1784.

Fodderlee Burn (fo-dur-lee-burn) n. stream flowing into the Rule Water from the south, past Abbotrule. A memorial plaque by the road marks the site of the Sclaterford, where there was a skirmish between a large English raiding party and some local forces in 1513 (also spelled ‘Fodderlie’ etc.; the origin is probably simply ‘the fodder meadow’).

fog (fōg) n., arch. moss, particularly as used for thatching or for packing between slates – ‘Item for leading the sclates . . . Item for fogg gathering and carrying’ [PR1713], ‘. . . shall not be allowed either fog or fuel, neither to cast, win, or lead peats, turfs, or divots, or lead clay or mortar out of the Common . . .’ [JW1719], ‘The fog or moss, which grows on the edge of the spring, and is sprinkled with the water, is about eight inches high’ [RAB] (also written ‘fogg’; cf. foggit).

foggage (fo-gee) n., arch. winter grazing, the second growth after the hay has been cut – ‘They are supported during the winter by the foggage and coarse hay . . .’ [RAB], ‘. . . then the lambs were put to the charge of the Town Herd of Hawick . . . and continued on the muir until the stubble foggage’ [C&L1767], ‘. . . a body can find the pracious scents o field an foggege’ [ECS].

foggie (fo-gee) adj., arch. mossy, covered in moss or lichen ‘We’ve speel’d upon its foggie stem, an’ dern’d amang its green . . .’ [JoHa], – ‘. . . an clappeet masel doon a meenint on ov a foggie bank’ [ECS] (also ‘foggy’; cf. foggit).

foir (foir) adj., arch. word of unknown meaning, possibly an error for ‘feir’, meaning in good health – ‘The quhilk day, Adam Gowanlocke in Hoitt, having apprehendit ane foir meir, quhyt mainet and quhyt taillet . . .’ [BR1641].

fold (fōld) adj., arch. made of turf, earthen – ‘. . . there was a fold dyke built on the Common by the possessors of Fenwick, which dyke was levelled by order of the Magistrates and rendered useless’ [C&L1767] (probably an anglicised version of fail).

Folepul (fōl-pul) n. former lands in Liddesdale recorded on a rental roll from about 1376, and listed under the ‘Foresta’ section. They are valued at 40 pence. Their location is unknown (this could be a transcription error, although it is unclear for what). It could be the same place listed as ‘Fopillis’ in the 1541 roll, when it was valued at 2 shillings, but vacant. It was possibly related to Fawhope Knowe.

folk (fōk) n. people, mankind, inhabitants, one’s family – ‘Thou hauds folk doon that weel might rise . . .’ [JoHa], ‘Some folk think a’ other folk gowks . . .’ [FL], ‘Ee canna pass keind – it belangs eer foak, man!’ [ECS], ‘. . . an gliffin auld folk an bairns, baith’ [ECS]. The population in 1851 was about 9000. Hawick's present population is around 16,000, and the recorded peak was in 1891, with a total of 19,204 people – 'But I like auld Hawick, and her folks I like, Her men and maidens free' [FH], 'Hear me, ye Folk o' Teviotdale, I'm here ti tell nae flatterin' tale' [WP] (sometimes written 'foak'; cf. the older fouk and the poetic fock).

foontain (foon'-in) n. a fountain. Fountains in Hawick include: 'the Fountain' in Wilton Lodge Park (1896); the MacNee Fountain (1906); the Brown Fountain (1910); and the 6 public drinking fountains that were on the High Street through much of the mid-20th century (also pronounced as in English; cf. the older funtain).

foost (foost) n. a mouldy condition or smell, mildew, fustiness, rot, mould – 'the breids civered wi foost', also an eccentric person.

foostie (foos-tee) adj. mouldy, rotten – 'deh eat that, it's foostie' (also spelled 'foosty').

Foostie Broon (foos-tee-broon) n. proprietor of a general store at the corner of Wilton Path and Wellington Street in the early-to-mid 20th century. It was well known for being a place where everything from a haircut to a gramophone record could be purchased (including mouldy sweets, hence the name). The shop window also contained hand-written epithets such as 'you are doomed' and 'the end of the world is at hand'

– ‘It’s an awfu’ lot mair than fifty year But aw’ll never forget ‘Foosty Broon’ [AY].

foosty see foostie

foot an mouth (foot-an-mowth) n. an acute, highly contagious viral disease of cloven-hoofed animals, which caused a major agricultural disaster in Britain in 1967 and even worse one in 2001. This led to the cancellation of the Common Riding that year, although about 400 people walked round the Common in November, led by the previous year’s Cornet (note that ‘fit an mooth’ is rarely used).

footerie (foo’-ur-ee) adj. fiddly, awkward – ‘it’s an awfi footerie wee hing’.

Forbes (fōrbz) n. Archibald (1869–1937) son of John, he was born at Wilton Lodge. He took over the running of the nurseries business from his father in 1909. He was also President of the Hawick Horticultural Society. He married Eleanor Snowdon Currie and their children included John (1900–61). Sir Arthur (1623–95) 1st Earl of Granard, son of Sir Arthur of Castle Forbes in Ireland. He commanded a Royalist Scottish force in the 1650s. In December 1653 he came down from the north with 80–100 men and with Andrew Kerr of Sunlaws and Chatto as prisoner, and stopped at Borthwickbrae. Pursued by an English Commonwealth force, they were easy to follow in the snow and there was a skirmish at Philip in the upper Borthwick valley. The English were victorious, but Forbes managed to escape, apparently recuperating in a cottage near Glasgow. He later fought for the loyalist cause in the north in 1654, and was captured at Glenlyon. He returned to Ireland, was made Earl and joined the cause of William III. He is buried in Sligo. John (1841/2–1909) proprietor of the Buccleuch Nurseries on Slitrig Crescent. Born in Aberfeldy, Perthshire, he came to Hawick in 1867 as gardener at Wilton Lodge for David Pringle, later becoming tenant of the gardens. He started up his own business in 1870 at the Dovemount Nurseries, then after about ten years moved into larger premises on Slitrig Crescent, the land granted by the Duke of Buccleuch. Named the Buccleuch Nurseries, they became famous throughout Britain, and were a prominent sight from the railway. The gardens received a royal warrant and the name was changed to the Royal Nurseries in 1907. It then became a private limited company in 1908. He won many awards for his floral displays. He was Councillor for Slitrig Ward for 3 years, and long involved with the running of St. Andrew's Church. John (1900–61) son of Archibald and grandson of John, who founded Forbes Nursery. He married Maggie Toshack (1897–1980) and Lizzie Addison McEwan (1898–1940). His children included Archibald ('Archie', 1928–87). He was Master of Lodge 111 in 1929/30 and President of the Callants' Club in 1938. Lillias Magdalene nee Scott (1918–2013) daughter of composer Francis George Scott, she was born in Glasgow. She was known as a singer, and published poetry over about a 75 year period, some of it in Scots. An autobiographical collection, 'View from the Bench: My Life in Poetry', appeared in 2011. She firstly married composer Erik Chisholm, and after his death married clarinettist John Forbes. William (19th/20th C.) Schoolmaster at Hermitage. He wrote 'Hermitage Castle: its ruins and historical and traditional associations' (1899), which was published in Hawick.

Forbes' Nursery (fōrbz-nur-sur-ee, fōrb-zeez-nur-sur-ee) n. another name for the Buccleuch Nurseries.

[ECS], 'What the devil mair wad ye hae forbye a gude wage and the Common-Riding' [DMW] (also spelled 'forbye' and 'for-bye').

forbye see forby

Ford (fōrd) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as tenant in Lilliesleaf Mill in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Brian (1936/7–) raised in Teviot Road, he attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools. First working as a plumber and frameworker, he did National Service with the Queen's Own Irish Hussars, where he excelled at rugby, shooting and boxing. He then worked in local knitwear mills, moving to a job in York in 1959, but soon returned to Hawick, working at several mills, including 20 years at Lyle & Scotts, then opening his own knitwear shops and finishing with a job at Hawick Hosiery. He married Helen Murray in 1960 and they had 3 children, Beverly, Brian and Graham. They mostly lived at Slitrig Crescent. In 1983 he won the veterans' sprint at the New Year meeting at Meadowbank. He and his wife celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary in 2020. Mary Helen 'Helen' nee Murray (1941/2–2020) brought up in Allars Crescent, she attended Drumlanrig and Hawick High Schools. She started working as a collar linker at Turner & Rutherford's in 1957 and in 1960 married Brian. Their children are Beverly (b.1966), Brian (b.1968) and Graham (b.1970). After raising her family she returned to work at Glenhowe, retiring in 2004. She was involved with the Wilton Dean W.R.I. and the Bright-Eyed Daughters' Association, and was a great Common Riding supporter. She served for many years as a Community Councillor and took up running at the age of 55. She and Brian celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary in 2020, but she succumbed to the coronavirus shortly afterwards. Her features are captured on the 'Return' statue at the Tower Knowe. W. Inglis (20th C.) 6th Secretary of the Congregational Kirk.

Fordel (for-dul) n. ancient name of Melrose ('Acres of Little Fordell' is still recorded in the early 1600s).

forder (for-dur) adv., arch. furthermore, in addition – ‘... and forder, vnder the payne of perurie, diffamatioun, and neuer to haiff fayth nor credit in the law ...’ [SB1585], ‘... and forder gif ony persone or personis allegis or acclames ony rycht of the said tenement of land ...’ [SPB1579], ‘I will dosyre yow to spare me and nocht to trubill your self and me farder’ [SPB1629] (also written ‘farder’; see the later furder).

fords (fōrdz) n. before the erection of the Teviot Bridge in 1741, the river had to be forded, or when unfordable it was crossed by ferry at the Coble Pool. The main fords were at the foot of Walter’s Wynd to enter town through the North Port or near Parkdaill (sometimes called the Howe Ford) connecting to a footpath which went uphill to join the main road at Longbaulk. There are still fords at the bottom of Burnfoot, Newmill, Priestthaugh and on many local farms, which can be used when the water is low.

fordweblit (for-dwe-blee’, -bli’) adj., poet. enfeebled, very weak – ‘I am fordweblit an’ sair brokin; I hae rairet bie reesen o’ the wanrest o’ my hairt’ [HSR].

Fordyce (for-dīs) n. Elizabeth Fordyce ‘Lizzie’ (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at the corner of Trinty Street and Earl Street in the mid-20th century. The shope later became J. Wood’s. Rev. Robert (1836–93) born in Unst in the Shetland Isles. He studied at Edinburgh University, after working in business and saving so he could study. Licensed in 1868, he served as a probationer at several places before coming to Hawick in 1872, as second minister of West Port Free Church; he served until his death. He also helped fill the vacancy at St. George’s 1879–80. In 1874 he married Mary, daughter of blacksmith Thomas Ker and she died in Edinburgh in 1901. Their children were: Mary Ker (b.1875); Bruce (1876–82); Margaret Suneva (1878–1966), who died in Worthing; Euphemia Ker (1882–1969), also died in Worthing; and Thomas Ker (b.1884).

forepairt (fōr-pār’) n., arch. the earlier portion of a period of time (noted by E.C. Smith).

the Foreraw see the Fore Raw

the Fore Raw (thu-fōr-row) n. row of pended tenements that stood on the south-east side (i.e. left hand side on the way up the hill) of what is now Drumlanrig Square. The entrance to William Lockie’s Mill was there. It also once held the Teribus Arms and the West-end Mission (it is ‘Front row’ in Pigot’s 1837 directory; presumably it was ‘Fore’ relative to St. Mary’s Kirk, with the Back Row being further away).

Fore Raw (fōr-row) n. Fore Row, name used for a row of houses in Wilton Dean on the 1841 census. By 1851 it was known as ‘Front Row’, and was numbered from 1 to 6. This referred to a block of houses on the north side of the Dean Road, where it meets the Overhall Road. The name distinguished it from Burn Row, which was lower down, and Upper Row, which was up the small track above the green. The names were probably never in general use and disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.

foresait (fōr-sā') n., arch. the front seating area, front part of a pew or gallery – ‘... anent ye precedence in ye samen in ye foresait of ye loft att the head thereof’ [PR1715].

forest (fo-rist) n., arch. a preserve, a tract of land, often bare and hilly, upon which deer were traditionally hunted – ‘... ‘Trees’, retorted the gillie; ‘wha ever heard o’ trees in a forest?’’ [RB] (note, the former use of this word did not imply trees!).

Forest see Forrest

forestair (fōr-stār) n., arch. an outside staircase at the front of a building – ‘A conspicuous feature of many of the dwellings was the ‘out’ or ‘forestairs’ projecting onto the streets’ [V&M]. Many of the examples on the High Street were removed around 1781 when the streets were paved, and more were removed by order of the road trustees, with the Council paying more than £50 to have the work done. One of last sets in Hawick was removed in 1884 when the old Town Hall was demolished. Perhaps the last example is in St. Mary’s Place – ‘Paid expense of fore stairs, taken away by order of trustees, 55 18 1’ [BR1792] (also ootstair).

forestall (fōr-stawl) v., arch. to buy goods before they reach market in order to resell them at a higher price – ‘Thomas Howison, merchant, is fined for forestalling two bolis of beir from the Lady Newtoun, and ane from Gladstanes’ [1699], ‘Four Hawick fleshers are fined £40 Scots each for forestalling the sheep market, by buying of sheep and lambs, and instantly, for gain, reselling them to the butchers of Jedburgh’ [BR1700].

forestaller (fōr-staw-lur) n., arch. someone who profits by buying up goods before they get to market in order to increase the price and resell them – ‘Various persons are fined ‘for breach of the proclamation of His Majesty’s Privy Council, against regrating of victuals and forestallers’ [JW1699].

the Forest Club (thū-fo-rist-klub) n. dining and coursing club, based around Selkirk, also sometimes known as the ‘Ettrick Forest Club’. It was established in 1788 by 13 lairds of the Ettrick Forest, modelled on similar clubs in Edinburgh. Members met once a month (outside winter) in the County Hotel, Selkirk. Coursing was introduced in 1794 and lasted for 60 years. Sir Walter Scott (of Abbotsford) was a member. Michaela Reid wrote a history of the club in 2000.

Forester (fo-rees-tur) n. Alan (16th C.) tenant of ‘Syskett’ in 1541. This was probably in the far south of Roxburghshire and he was probably related to the Foresters who possessed neighbouring lands. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as the tenant of Ryleknowe, near the southern tip of Roxburghshire. Probably the same Andrew was also tenant of ‘Avirholme’ along with Lancelot. He was probably related to Simon, who was tenant of the nearby Burnfoot. Henry (18th C.) farmer at Langraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1788–94 Horse Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in a 1510 list of associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh who received respite for their crimes. His name appears as ‘Forestare’. In 1515/6 he was recorded in another remission to Robert Elliot of Redheugh and others, where he is listed as ‘in Grenehauche’. This could be Greenhaugh in Northumberland, but seems more likely to be Greena in Liddesdale. In 1516 he was also part of the remission given to William Elliot of Larriston and his associates. James ‘Rowie’s Jamie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 among a gang of Elliots, Armstrongs and others who had raided ‘Sewingdene’ in 1601, stealing livestock and goods and injuring several people. He is listed being ‘called Row’s Jame’ and may be related to Simon Elliot of Binks, whose servant was leader of the gang. John (14th/15th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was Archdeacon of Glasgow 1409–14 and is recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1418. John (16th C.) recorded in 1532 as ‘Johny Forestar’. He is listed along with Sym (to whom he was surely related), Croziers and Elliots, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John ‘Shake Buckler’ (16th C.) listed among the Liddesdale men denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on the farm at Craik. His name is given as ‘John Forrestare, called Schaik-buklar’. His servant Ninian Gray is also listed, so he must have been a man of fair substance. John (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Greenhaughshaw. It seems reasonable to assume he was related to James in Greenhaugh (his son perhaps), and that he was related to the tenants of nearby farms with the same surname, namely Alan, Andrew, Lancelot, Simon and William. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1602 as ‘good-son’ to Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh. This means he was either son-in-law or step-son of Simon, suggesting that either Simon has married a Forester or his daughter had. He was part of a group of about 20 Armstrongs and Elliots who attacked Hallrule, killing a shepherd there and stealing about 120 sheep. John (17th C.) resident at Hudshouse in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John of Stanegarthside (17th/18th C.) nephew of Nicholas, from whom he inherited 'Greina, Purviven and Burnemouth' in Liddesdale in 1693. Lancelot (16th C.) joint tenant of 'Avirholme', along with Andrew, in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert of Stanegarthside (d.1598) buried at Staplegordon Church in Cumbria. He may be the 'Forster' of Stanegarthside who killed William Armstrong near where the Kershope Burn meets the Liddel. Simon 'Sim' (16th C.) recorded in 1532 as 'Symme Forestar'. He is listed along with Johnnie (to whom he was surely related), Croziers and Elliots, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He may be the same as the tenant in Burnfoot in 1541. Simon (16th C.) tenant of Burnfoot (on the Tinnis Water) in southern Liddesdale, according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was probably related to Andrew and Lancelot, who possessed neighbouring farms. William (15th C.) held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1450. He could have been from the Torwood or perhaps Corstorphine branches of that family. He resigned Cavers in 1467, with the Pope issuing an edict for the appointment of the new priest, previous appointments (including presumably his) being made by the monks of Melrose. William (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Bennetholm. He was probably related to the other contemporary Foresters. William (17th C.) listed at Harwood among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (also written 'Forrester'; once interchangeable with 'Foster').

the Foresters (thu-fo-rees-turz) n. mutual aid society, once very active in Hawick. The Ancient Order of Foresters has its origins in the 18th century, and was established in its modern form in 1834. As an example of a 'friendly society'; it was very important in providing a form of insurance for workers. Individual branches were known as 'courts', the Hawick one being 'Flower of Teviotdale', No. 5771. Office bearers would wear a sash and the organisation used to turn out in local parades. The Roll of Honour of local members who fell in the wars was formerly in Orrock Church Halls and is now in the Museum. John Halliday wrote an address to be spoken at the Annual Anniversary of Court Teviotdale – 'For arms, let them have friendship, love, and truth; And in the cause be eloquent each mouth, As advocates of peace, and exil'd mercy's barristers, And thus let them be call'd – The Order of Foresters' [JoHa].

the Foresters' Hall (thu-fo-rees-turz-hal) n. hall on O'Connell Street, run by the Hawick branch of the Foresters, occupying the lower floor beneath the British Legion, formerly being part of Johnstone's tea rooms. It was used for dance lessons, prayer meetings and other social functions, and closed around 1992.

fore-supertime (fōr-su-pur-tim) n., arch. evening, literally meaning the period between teatime and supertime (E.C. Smith describes this as 'probably now obsolete' and 'one of the few Scottish instances of identifying a period of the day by reference to a meal').

foretsome (fo-ri'-sum) adv., arch. forward, eager, bold, lacking restraint – '... the Ettrick Shepherd ... was much rather blate than foretsome ...' [HSR] (cf. forrit).

forker (for-kur) n. an earwig – 'A forker gaed inti ma lug, i herrst, an it's aye been sair sin-seine' [ECS] (called after the insect's forked tail).

forkie-tailie (for-kee-tā-lee) n. diminutive term for an earwig.

forkin (for-kin) n., arch. a forking, splitting, division – 'Now may we p-ss for evermore, An' never dry our forkin' [JR], 'We've ... watch'd the gooldie bring the doon to big her nestie wee, Atween the cosie forkins o' the auld aik tree' [JoHa], the junction of two streams – 'The Forkings of the water' [JoJ].

Forkins (for-kinz) n. farm south of Hobkirk, near where the Wauchope, Harwood and Catlee Burns meet to form the Rule Water, on the west side of the bridge. It was also formerly known as 'Forkins of Unthank'. There was once a blacksmith's there, and in the 17th century there was an inn at this location, in use until the early 19th century; its remains lie among trees on the east side of the bridge, near the entrance lodge to Wolfelee. It was formerly on the main route from Hawick to Newcastle, until the new road was built via Bonchester Bridge in about the 1820s; this was also part of a drove road. There was also a local police station there in the latter part of the 19th century. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Stonedge to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757. Thomas Mathieson was smith there in at least 1751–59. Walter Amos was wright there in the late 18th century and Richard Renwick was a labourer there in 1797. Andrew Amos was blacksmith there in 1851 (also called 'the Forkins' and sometimes written 'Forkings'; it was 'Forkens' on Stobie's 1770 map; the origin of the name is probably from the division in the river, rather than the road, but there are no early records of the name).

the Forkins (thu-for-kinz) n. name used for the area where the Hermitage Water meets the Liddel Water in Liddesdale.

Forkins (for-kinz) n. former farmstead in the upper Borthwick valley. It is marked on Ainslie's

forlane (for-lān) pp., poet. forgotten, set aside – ‘The Lord redeims the saul o’ his servents; an’ nane o’ thame that trust in him sall be for-laine’ [HSR].

Forman (fōr-min) n. Sir John of Davine (d.bef. 1516) son of Nicholas. His brother Andrew held the Archbishopric and Primacy of Scotland, and was said to be one of the instigators for the Battle of Flodden. In 1502 he and his brother were granted the ward of the lands of Rutherford by James IV and he was one of the ‘tutors’ appointed to Helen, heiress of Rutherford. He was Sergeant Porter to James IV, and was knighted in 1503. In fact he married Helen Rutherford, who inherited the lands of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston after the death of her brother Richard. Along with his wife, he was infeft in these lands by the King in 1505 and 1506. In 1504 he (when referred to as ‘of Ruthirfurde’) was pardoned for being an accessory to the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. The lands of Rutherford, Wells and others were confirmed to him and his wife by James IV in 1511. He was one of the few Scots taken prisoner at the Battle of Flodden. He probably had a daughter who married William Gouraly of Kin-craig. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1699 and 1702 for tailor Walter Riddell (both along with baxter John ‘Weelands’). In 1705 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Michael Scot. In 1706 he married Margaret ‘Weelands’, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their son John was baptised in 1707, with witnesses William Aitkin and William Laing. It is recorded in 1711 that the ‘half Ducatoon and twentie shillings Scots piece’ that he ‘pawnded’ to guarantee his marriage had not been claimed and so was given to the poor fund. It is unclear whether this donation was simply the intent, or whether something happened to the couple in the intervening years. They had a son John in 1707. Nicholas (d.1478/9) succeeded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale on the death of Patrick Hume in 1478. However, he died within only a few months, before he could be confirmed. Patrick (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Oliver. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included: Patrick (b.1702); Agnes (b.1707); and Janet (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were glover John Scott and Patrick Angus. Robert B. (19th/20th C.). His wife funded the Forman Hall in Robertson, dedicated to his memory and that of her great-nephew, who was killed in WWI. The Trust established in his name gave money to Hawick Cottage Hospital in 1945, eventually resulting in a new outpatient unit being built, with the 1952 opening by his nephew Campbell Forman (also written ‘Foreman’).

Forman Hall (fōr-min-hal) n. community hall in Robertson, situated approximately opposite the church. It was designed by J.P. Alison and built in 1922/3. It was funded by Mrs. Forman of Borthwickshiels in memory of her husband Robert, and also her great-nephew, Lt. Campbell Ross, who was killed at Flanders in 1917. It also contains a roll of honour for locals who fell in the Great War (sometimes incorrectly written ‘Foreman Hall’).

formit (fōr-mee’, -mi’) pp. formed – ‘The se is his, an’ he mæde it; an’ his han’ formet the drye lan’ ’ [HSR].

forienst (for-nenst) adv. opposite, against, in front of – ‘Up yon cundy that opens forienst tae the Plum’ [??], ‘Come wi mei ti Hobkirk kirkyaird and juist forienst – guid auld Hawick word meanin opposite or in front o – the kirk door ee’ll come on a heidstane ...’ [IWL], ‘The cadger whoa’d his powny cairt Forienst the ‘Pig and Sty’ ’ [WL] (also forient).

forient (for-nent, for-nen’) adv., arch. in front of, opposite to, over against – ‘Use in a singular sense, in relation to marriage. ‘Such a one is to be married’. ‘Ay! wha forient?’ i.e. to whom’ [JoJ], ‘...beeking forient the sun’ [??], ‘...croonin the braeheads hich abuin Tweed an forenent bielly Dryburgh’ [ECS], ‘Come up – the Well o’ Verter seems the pump forient the station’ [VW], ‘An’ forient a bonny laburnum I ken o’ a cosy fauld Where twae wee twin lambs trot oot an’ in, Weel bielled frae heat an’ cauld’ [FL] (also written ‘forenent’; see also forienst).

foroutin (fo-row-tin) prep., arch. without – ‘...the said landis of Quhitchester to be haldin of the said William ... foroutyn ony langer delay ...’ [SB1470].

Forrest (fo-rist) n. Rev. Alexander of Huntlaw (d.c.1658) minister at Hassendean. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1603 and was ordained at Kailzie in 1613, then translated to Hassendean later in the same year. He was rebuked by the Presbytery in 1615 for ‘receiving the gudwife of Sintoun to the communion, notwithstanding he understood she was ane contemner both of her awin min. (Mr Alex. Hog, Ashkirk) and of the Word out of his mouth’ (whether this was an indication of religious dissent or a purely personal matter is unclear). He was one of the 55 ministers who signed the 'Liberties of the Kirk' protest to Parliament in 1617 and gave £20 towards building the library at the University of Glasgow in 1636. In 1626 there is a 'letter of deliverance' against him in favour of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and Walter Scott of Ancrum, probably relating to a debt or disputed teinds. In 1633 he was owed £333 6s 8d for his stipend in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch, as well as £9 12s for the communion. In 1649 he was 'invaded with a drawn sword' by one of his parishioners, Robert Hislop. In 1655 (although this date may be an error) his son was served heir to his lands of Huntlaw. He appears to have continued as minister at Hassendean until 1658 and died before 1665, when the Presbytery met to decide what payment was due to his son. He was recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (although probably deceased by then), among owners of lands that were then in Hassendean Parish, when he paid for lands valued at £66 13s 4d; this was Huntlaw, which remained with his family for another couple of generations. He married Margaret Clerk and their children included William of Huntlaw, and Alexander, who became minister at Kirkton. In 1665 his son William was served heir to his lands of Huntlaw. Archibald of Huntlaw (who rented Huntlaw to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1703) was probably his grandson and Agnes, who married George Minto, was his great-granddaughter.

Rev. Alexander (c.1622–83) son of Alexander, minister at Hassendean. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1642 and became minister at Kirkton in 1664. He remained minister there until his death, and sat on the local (Jedburgh Presbytery) at least in 1666. He is recorded in 1665 repaying the money owed by William Forrest (possibly his brother) to Walter Clerk. He paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d for Huntlaw in 1678. His 'insicht and plenishing, with librarie, and abulziments of bodie' were estimated to be about £200. He married Anna Douglas (d.1681), whose will is recorded in 1682. Their children were: Archibald; Richard; William (became a tailor's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1691); Margaret (married James Mirrielies in Edinburgh in 1702); and Anna. His will is recorded in 1683. James (17th C.) one of the tenants in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. His name was given as 'fforsett' (which could feasibly be another surname, such as Forsyth). Jean (17th/18th C.) Hawick woman who ran an inn in the late 1600s and early 1700s. She was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. She was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. In 1702 she was fined for allowing people to be drinking in her house after 10 o'clock at night. Her name is written 'Jeane Forrest' and 'Jane Forrest'. Julie (1968–) lawn and indoor bowler from Hawick, who took up bowls from a young age, and won the Teviotdale Indoor Ladies Singles 10 times between 1990 and 2007. Outdoors she won the Scottish Triples in 1997, the British Isles Triples in 1998 and the Scottish Pairs in 1998. But she has excelled mostly indoors. She won the Scottish Indoor Pairs in 1992, 1994 and 2008, the Triples in 1993 and 2010, and the Singles in 2001, 2003, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2013, 2019 and 2020. She was also Scottish Masters champion 3 years in a row, 2001–2003, and British Isles Singles champion in 2004, 2010, 2011 and 2019. She represented Scotland in the 1998 Commonwealth Games. She won the Mixed Pairs World Championship in 2002 2003 and 2013 and the World Indoor Singles title in 2004, 2010, 2013 and 2014. She was named Senior Sports Personality of the Year by Roxburgh Sports Council in 2004 and presented with a silver quaich at a special ceremony in the Town Hall the same year. She was also voted Hawick's Citizen of the Year in 2004. In 2007 she was inducted into the Scottish Borders Hall of Fame and is an Honorary Life Member of the Scottish Indoor Bowling Association. In 2021 he received a lifetime achievement award from Future Hawick. She has worked as an early-years practitioner at Burnfoot Community School. Thomas (14th/15th C.) recorded as being 'de Foresta' in 1404 when he witnessed the confirmation of the grant of the Church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey. He was licentiate in decrees and Rector of the Parish of Southdean. Walter Torrie 'Wattie' (1880–1917) born in Kelso, son of a fishing tackle maker. He was a gifted sportsman, playing rugby and being ambidextrous at cricket. He moved from Kelso R.F.C. to Hawick R.F.C. and was first capped for Scotland along with Hawick's Willie Kyle in 1903. He was full-back for Scotland for a couple of years until he broke his collar bone in a Hawick versus Gala match. During WWI he served at Gallipoli, was awarded the Military Cross, and was promoted to Major. He died leading his men in an attack during the Second Battle of Gaza. William of Huntlaw (17th C.) son of Rev. Alexander, minister at Hassendean. In 1665 he was served heir to his father's 10-shilling land of Huntlaw in Hassendean Parish. He is recorded as 'in Huntlaw' in a record of 1666 listing landowners in Hassendean Parish. William (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Easter Alemoor, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. Probably the same William married Jane Wilson and had children baptised in Robertson, including Jane (b.1812), William (b.1813) and Walter (b.1815) (sometimes spelled 'Fforest' in earlier records).

Forrester see Forester

Forrester-Paton (fo-ris-tur-pā'-in) n. Rev. Colin (1918–2004) born in Alloa, nephew of Ernest, an Indian missionary. He was educated in Moffat, Norfolk, Oxford University and London University. Ordained by the United Free Presbytery in 1944, he left for missionary work in Ghana. There he was involved with literature and translation, as well as ecumenical work. Both he and his wife became heavily involved in the Christian Council of Ghana. They returned to Britain in 1972 and the following year he became an associate minister in Hawick, connected with Wilton and Burnfoot. He retired in 1983, but was appointed Chaplain to the Queen in 1981 and Extra Chaplain to the Queen in Scotland in 1988. He married Jean Lorimer Crichton Miller in 1943 and they raised 3 children while in Ghana.

forrit (for-i') adj., adv. forward – 'can ee stand a wee bit ferther forrit?', 'hei's lookin' forrit ti the Trades', '...in kase the richteous pit foret thair han's untill iniquitie' [HSR], '...so will Maister Melrose o' Hopehill please come forrit at aince tae assist in gettin' the dammed horse oot o' the dam' [JEDM], 'At yeh shop-door a motor stuid, an forrit A gaed ti finnd oot whae was ocht eet' [ECS], 'To kill or free I forrit ran – Whan on my shooder was his han'' [DH], '...and I steppit forrit to gie him the sad news' [DH], 'It's the week, tae, when oo look forret teh readin aboot the different ceremonies ...' Forster (for-stur) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 among the men accused by the Countess of Bothwell of raiding her lands at Eilrig. He is described as 'Andro Forster, callit Craikcrop, baneist Englishman', and was an accomplice of the Armstrongs of Whithaugh. He was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. He could be related to the 'Andro Forster' who was recorded in 1541, accused of being involved in raids into England in which men were killed. George (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 for a document relating to the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Like the others, he was probably from Liddesdale. Sir John (d.1602) younger son of Thomas of Adderstone. He became Constable of Bamburgh Castle and later held lands around Alnwick. He was part of an English force that sacked southern Scotland in 1557 and was Warden of the English Middle March by 1559/60. He was Deputy Governor of Berwick and also Deputy Warden of the East Marches in 1563. He escorted Mary Queen of Scots to Berwick. He was also Keeper of Tynedale and Redesdale. He and George Heron of Chipchase supported the Regent Moray on attacks on Liddesdale in 1569. He accompanied Sussex and Hunsdon on the raid into Teviotdale in 1570, when the Hawick folk burned the thatch themselves; he personally led the 'horsmen too burne the townes and vyllages adjoynynge' He was the Warden of the Middle March during the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575 (with his name being recorded as 'Sir George Foster' in the ballad), when he was taken prisoner and held for a few days in Dalkeith. There are several letters from him in 1576 to the Deputy Warden for West Teviotdale,

William Douglas of Bonjedward. He was still English Warden in 1584 when he and Lord Scrope led a raiding force of 7,000 men that invaded Liddesdale, taking the tower at Larriston and capturing 18 prisoners. After harrying the valley, he received a bond of assurance from the chiefs of Liddesdale (who spoke for most of the Elliots, Armstrongs and others). In 1595/6 he got the heads of several families to sign a bond of assurance to try to end the feuds existing between 25 English families and 'the Ellotes, Armestrongs, Crosers, Nixsons, Nobles, Larences, Hendersons, Batysons, Sympsons and Lyttles' in Scotland. It is said that he was challenged by a laird of Rulewater to a jousting match, which took place at the 'Justin Haugh'; he was badly injured and laid under a bush to recover, this field being known as 'Foster's Bush'. He married Jane Radclyffe, heiress of Blanchland. He had several daughters and was succeeded by his (probably illegitimate) son Nicholas. Robert 'Hob's Robin' (16th C.) English fugitive from Bewcastle who fled to the Scottish side. He was described in a letter from Thomas Wharton in 1541, along with Adam, as 'grete offenders agaynst Inglishmen and Scottishmen'. In 1542 his men burned 'the Cassillhill, Reyhilles in West Tevedall', stealing livestock and taking 2 prisoners; this may be one of the nearby Castlehills, although it is unclear where 'Reyhilles' may have been. A few days later his men burned 'Cromokhilles' in West Teviotdale, which is surely Crumhaughhill. Their father 'Hob' was warded in Cockermouth Castle in 1541, but the Captain of Carlisle Castle would not take him. Roland (16th C.) probably a brother of Sir John. He was one of the assistants to the English Warden and served as Captain of Wark Castle. In 1565 he wrote to Bedford, describing the ambush of the Scotts by the Elliots at Ewes Doors. He is probably the 'Rowie Forester' recorded in 1569, when Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton, Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Lencie Armstrong of Whithaugh gave assurances to him 'that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cuntre' (see also Foster).

Forster's Buss (for-sturz-bus) n. former name for a field between Bonchester Bridge and Bonchester Hill, a little above the flat ground once known as 'Jeistins'-haugh'. The name is said to have been because this is where an Englishman, Forster, was killed in combat.

forsuik (for-sik, -sūk) pp., arch. forsook – 'Than a' the discipels forsuik him, an' fled' [HSR] (this

forsuth (for-sooth) adv., arch. truly, in truth – '... be twa ewynly porcionis, off the quhilk forsuth nynetene yerris male I graunt me wele content ...' [DoR1445].

Forsyth (fōr-sīth) n. Andrew (1949–2007) from Edinburgh, he came to Hawick as a police officer. He also became involved with the Scouts, the Duke of Edinburgh's Award Scheme and Hawick R.F.C. Christian (18th C.) chambermaid at Wilton Lodge in 1791, when she was working for Lord Napier. George (b.1810/1) from Oxnam, he was farmer at Ashybank in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farming 283 acres and employed 10 people. He married Oreina Loff Hall and their children included James R. and Agnes H. Gideon (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Blackcleuch near Teviothead on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was a labourer at Bowanhill in at least the period 1781–88. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Christian (b.1781); Agnes (b.1783); Ann (b.1783); Isabel (b.1786); and Walter (b.1788). James (b.c.1780) recorded at Adderstoneshiel on the 1801 Militia ballot. He was probably younger brother to Robert, who was at Adderstoneshiel on the same list (as well as in 1799) and William, who was there in 1799. Janet (18th C.) chambermaid at Stobs in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Francis Elliot. John B. (20th C.) Burgh Chamberlain of Hawick in the 1940s. Mr. ?? (18th/19th C.) schoolmaster at Castleton in the early 1800s. He married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot in Hillhouse. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Adderstoneshiel according to the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. He was surely related to William, who was also at Adderstoneshiel in 1799 and James, who was there in 1801. He may be the Robert, married to Janet Turnbull, whose children included Robert (b.1807), baptised in Cavers Parish. Robert (b.1807/8) born in Denholm, he was a hosiery manufacturer. He was living around Main Street in Denholm in 1841, with his wife and a young weaver called Thomas Turnbull. In 1851 he was in Galashiels as a hosier master, employing one man. His wife was Catherine. Thomas (18th C.) cottar at Salenside in Ashkirk Parish. His children included Agnes (b.1762). Walter (19th C.) flesher in Hawick, recorded in 1873 when he was a Commissioner for the estate of flesher James Rodger. His shop was at 40 High Street. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Hutton and their children included: Jean (b.1785); and Agnes (b.1788). William (18th C.) hind at Hassendeanbank. He married Margaret Gray and their children, baptised in Minto Parish, included: Thomas (b.1784); Peter (b.1785); Betty (b.1787), who married carrier William Tait; John (b.1790); and Peggy (b.1794). William (b.c.1770s) resident of 'Ingram' in Cavers Parish. In 1997 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia, with his surname written as 'Falsyth'. In 1799 he was 'Falsyth (or Forsyth)' at 'Ingerhope' listed among those whose names had not been drawn in 1797, but were no longer living in the area. Perhaps the same William was a servant at Adderstoneshiel according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. He was surely related to Robert, who was also at Adderstoneshile on the same list. He could be the William, married to Janet Turnbull, whose daughter Janet (b.1799) was baptised in Castleton in 1799. William (b.c.1780) servant at Newton in Bedrule Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William W. (b.c.1870) born in Midlothian, he was Maths master at the Buccleuch School. He served as acting Headmaster during 1906–08 when the school was remodelled. He may be the same W.W. Forsyth who was made an Honorary Teri at the Tuesday morning 'Hut' of 1894 (also written 'Forsyde' and 'Forsythe').

for't (for', fort) contr. for it – 'Ay faith tho' they should get their skin For't soundly drubbed' [JR], '...Not yet that for't they'll hae to pay, When shoon comes to need solein'' [JoHa], '...it is sae gude an' sae kind o' you to be at the pains to look after sic a puir, dying creature. fortnit (for'-ni) adj., arch. fortunate – 'She's been gey fortnit' [ECS].

Fortun (for-tun) n., arch. Fortune, chance personified – 'An so it is that A heh thae thochts ti faa back on gin Fortun takes a pick at iz ...' [ECS].

the Forty Fits (thu-for'-ee-fits) n. popular name for the track leading from Calaburn farm to Whitehaughmoor etc., off the road north of Whitehaugh. A continuation of this road leads towards Shielswood Loch. It is marked 'drove road' on the Ordnance Survey map, and may well have been such, although the nearby drove road of which we have a description passed more directly from Whitehaugh to the 'Fower Road Ends'. The name probably derives from the dykes on either side being about 40 feet apart.

the Forty Thiefs Bus (thu-for'-ee-theefz-bus) n. humorous name sometimes used for the minibus used at the Common Riding to transport the Committee members from the Hut to the Moor.

the Forty Thiefs o Redfordgreen (thu-for'-ee-theefz-ō-red-furd-green) n. popular name around the 1830s for a group of 'faggot voters' arranged by local Tories to swamp the local elections.

foryeild (for-yeeld) v., poet. to repay, recompense – 'The Lord rewairdet me akordin' til my richteousniss; akordin' til the cleenniss o' my han's he heth foryeildet me' [HSR].

Foster (fos-tur) n. Abraham 'Abie' (16th/17th C.) tenant in Greena who was accused in 1623 along with Hob of stealing sheep belonging to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Kershope. He was ordered to be banished. He may be the same 'Abraham Foster in Grenehall' listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; Sim 'in Grenehall' was also listed and hence presumably related. Elizabeth 'Betty' (18th C.) housemaid at Branhholme in 1791, when she worked for Adam Ogilvie. Sir George see Sir John Forster. Gilbert 'Gib' of Foulshiels (16th C.) named in 1590 along John Elliot of Heuchhouse and Martin's Clem Crozier.

They were accused of stealing livestock and a detailed list of items from a servant of Sir John Forster. He was surely related to John of Foulshiels. Helen (19th C.) charged with the murder of her daughter Betsy at the Slitrig in 1867. They lived at Catherine Scott's boarding house on the Loan. Henry (17th C.) recorded as 'Harie forrester' when he paid the land tax on £420 for Greena in Castleton Parish in 1678. He was probably descended from earlier Fosters in Greena. James (15th/16th C.) accused in 1502, along with William Elliot, of stealing a horse from David Brown, out of Edinburgh. Their surety was William Turnbull 'de lahope' (possibly Langhope). Jean (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. John (16th C.) listed as 'younger, of Fouleschelis' in 1581, among Elliots and Armstrongs complaining about crimes committed by the Scotts and their allies. He could be related to the John 'Forster' recorded in 1541, accused of being involved with raids in which Englishmen were killed. John (16th C.) son of 'Meikle Rowie' of Greenhaugh. He is recorded in 1583 among a large group of men led by William of Kynmont into Tynedale. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1647. John (b.1771/2) horse-trainer from England. He lived at Kirkgate and Kirkyard (i.e. St. Mary's Place) in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Mary, and their children included John and Jean. Law (16th/17th C.) resident of Greena. In 1611 he is listed as 'in Greneha' among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh. It is unclear what the forename 'Law' might be. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'callit Foulscheillis' in 1623 when he and Abie Foster in Greena were accused of stealing sheep belonging to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Kershope. He was ordered to be banished. His lands were probably Foulshiels in Liddesdale. He was probably related to the earlier Gib and John of Foulshiels. Robert (17th/18th C.) miller in Synton Mill. He married Agnes Donaldson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Andrew (b.1701); and Margaret (b.1703). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Leahaugh in 1836 when he was head of household in Castleton Parish for the first time. He was still there in 1837, but disappeared after that. He was perhaps son of the labourer recorded in Bygate and Upper-raw 1835-41. Roland 'Meikle Rowie', (16th C.) tenant in Greenhaugh. In 1583 his son John was listed as part of a large group under William of Kinmont who raided Tynedale. Roland 'Rowie', 'Ower the Moss' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when he was found guilty of stealing from several farms. He stole 20 sheep from Myredykes, 20 sheep from 'Callshiels' and a horse from Chapelhill. He was ordered to be hanged for these crimes. Simon 'Sim' (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as 'Sym Foster in Grenehall' and listed along with men from Liddesdale and Eskdale. Abraham 'in Grenehall' was also listed. Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Liddelbank according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He was a labourer at Greena on the 1801 ballot, with his surname written 'Forster'. William of Greena (16th C.) recorded in 1583 when it was said he had a daughter who had married Englishman Hob Foster of Kershope. William of Foulshiels (16th C.) signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, on behalf of his 'bairnes and servands'. His name is listed along with many Elliots of Liddesdale, and is recorded as 'larde of Fowlesheils'. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in Langhaugh in 1611 when Roger Scott, Captain of Hermitage, was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. William (17th C.) recorded in 1642 as brother of the deceased James in Greena. This was on a long list of thieves of the Border who were to be tried. He may be the same man as 'Weilliam Foster, called Rossis Will' on a list of 'mosstroopers' (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. William (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1683 for Thomas Briggs and Jane Foster. William (b.c.1780) servant of John Oliver at Langburnshiels according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hobkirk Parish. William Air (1801-62) from Coldstream, he worked as a shoemaker, later moving to Glasgow. He is remembered for the verse that he published, especially those relating to angling contributed to 'Whistle-Binkie'. He was a friend of the Ettrick Shepherd, and shared with him a love of country sports (see also Forster).

Foster's Bush (fos-turz-bush) n. popular name for a field lying near the Justin Haugh, perhaps now part of Bonchester village. It is said that the English Warden Sir John Forster took part in a jousting challenge there and was unhorsed and wounded by one of the lairds of Rulewater. His supporters laid him under a bush to recover, hence the name of the field. Tancred states that it was still known by this name in the early 20th century.

fot (fō) n., arch. a footless sock used in wet or snowy weather – ‘A chaamp that turns foats an cuittiekins soappin-wat’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘foat’; usually plural; cf. fottie).

fother (fo-thur) n., arch. fodder, food for live-stock, v., arch. to feed cattle or horses, humorously applied to feeding people, to cater – ‘... a richt toon an big eneuch ti fother an fend for fremd folk an gangrels’ [ECS].

Fotherlie (fo-thur-lee) n. variant of Fodderlee.

fottie (fo-tee, fo'-ee) n., arch. a child's stocking or woollen boot, booties – ‘And ye'se get fotties for yer feet At the Big Bazaar’ [JT], someone whose trousers, stockings or boots are too wide (cf. fot).

fou see fow

foucht (fowcht) pp., arch. fought – ‘Thaye cam roun' aboot me alsua wi' wurd's o' hætret; an' foucht agayne me wuthoutten ane caus' [HSR] (focht is more common).

foughten (foch-tin) pp., poet. fought – ‘And with this lade I've sprawl'd and foughten Hail ten lang mile' [JoHa], ‘I've fleech'd an' foughten a' in vain – Jock disna seem to care ...’ [JT] (cf. the more common feuchen).

fouk (fowk) n., pl., arch. people – ‘But ye are happy, and I'm glad it's sae, And may rejoice whan ither fouk are wae' [CPM], ‘Od! there's some fowk has a face for onything' [JoHa], ‘And curs'd be ambition, the plague o' this land, That sets fouk a-langing for things that are grand' [JoHa], ‘Ah, dear Sir, it's no a' goud that glitters, and at ony rate the rich fouk gie aye least away' [RW], ‘For thou wult saufe the aaflicket fouk ...’ [HSR], ‘Thou sellist thy fowk for naucht ...’ [HSR], ‘Pretensic fowk gaed primpin' by, Snirkin' at sic a din ...’ [DH] (also written ‘fowk’; cf. the more modern folk).

Foulbrae (fowl-brā) n. former name for lands in Robertson Parish. Gavin Dryden was living there in 1723. The location is unknown. Perhaps the same location is where labourer James Hall was living in 1800 when he had a child baptised in Cavers Parish.

Foulden (fowl-din) n. Matthew (18th C.) incomer to Hawick around 1733, when he was asked by the Council to produce testimonials from his former residence, Jedburgh. Having failed to produce them by 1738 he was banished from Hawick along with his wife and family. A ‘Matthew Foulden’ was born at Stobo in Peeblesshire in 1674 and could be related (possibly the same as ‘Fulton’).

Fouledge (fowl-eej) n. farmstead to the west of Skelfhill farm (the name could refer to birds or dirty; marked on the c.1860 Ordnance Survey map)).

Fouledge Park (fowl-eej-pawrk) n. name for a piece of land on Minto estate. In 1779 (and 1811) ‘Fowledge Park, and one north of it’ was valued at £45 10s 11d.

Fouledge Sike (fowl-eej-sik) n. stream that rises near Fouledge runs past Alderybar and joins the Southdean Burn, to run into the Northhouse Burn and then the Teviot (G. Watson suggests that the name is ‘foul leche’, meaning ‘smelly ditch’).

Foulis see Fowls

Foulmire Heights (fowl-mīr-hīts) n. high ground on the Border, roughly between Saughtree and Kielder. It reaches a height of 396 m, is the site of a triangulation pillar, and is the source of the Larriston Burn.

Foul Mooth (fowl-mooth) n. nickname for Robert Robson.

the Foul Raid (thu-fowl-rād) n. popular name for the failed attempt by a Scots army under Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas, to take Roxburgh and Berwick from the English in 1416. Hearing of a large English force, the Scots retreated ignominiously. In retaliation the English army attacked Teviotdale and Liddesdale, including the burning of Hawick, Jedburgh and Selkirk.

Foulshiels (fowl-sheelz) n. former hamlet west of Selkirk along the Yarrow, opposite Newark Castle. It was once a seat of the Scotts, and now a farm. Mungo Park was born here in 1771. An ornamental piece of grate found in the ruins there was donated to the Museum in 1900 (it is ‘Foul-sheels’ on Blaeu's 1654 map and ‘Foullsheills’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Foulshiels (fowl-sheelz) n. farm about 2 miles north of Newcastleton, to the right off the B6399, above Redheugh. A bridle path once connected this with the upper Hermitage valley, via Harstgarth Fell and Twislehope. It was formerly split into Nether and Over Foulshiels. South of the farmstead, on a terrace on the slopes of Foulshiels Rig are the remains of a settlement. And on a ridge just to the west is another ruined building, along with field-banks, and extensive boundary banks and signs of cultivation along the Well Sike. About 470 yards (420 m) north of the present farmstead is the probably site of the tower-house of Foulshiels (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map), with 2 enclosures, remains of a farmstead, boundary dykes and ‘lazy-beds’. The tower is about 12m by 8.5m and has been robbed of stone. John Elliot was recorded there in 1502. Its location is probably the ‘Foulschellmoore’ in a rental record of 1541 and possibly the Nether Foulshiels mapped by Pont. In 1541 it was valued at 6 shillings and at that time the lease was vacant. ‘Johnne Forster, younger’ is recorded as proprietor in 1581, William Foster in 1584 and Gib Foster in 1590. Archibald Elliot was there in 1611. The farm was once owned by the Elliots of Redheugh, but was part of the ongoing dispute with Scott of Buccleuch in the early 17th century. John Scott in Newark was tenant of the 33-shilling land there in 1618 when he complained that a group of about 100 Elliots and others had tried to attack his workers and servants, but not finding them there had removed all the hay and fodder, then returned to bind and beat Wat Dickson, subtenant there. Hob Foster was associated with the farm there in 1623 when he was accused of stealing sheep from Kershope. The farm was owned by the Bishop of Caithness in 1632. Walter Turnbull was tenant there in 1694. Further to the west on the north side of Ewes Knowes are the remains of 7 or 8 turf buildings, probably the township of Over Foulshiels. Along the track to the north of the modern farmstead are the remains of a turf sheepfold and closer to Foulshiels Wood there are 2 or 3 others. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 1729 acres and was bounded by Roan, Tarras, lands held by the Laird of Hoscote and the Hermitage Water. James Elliot was shepherd there in 1835 (the origin is probably from Old English ‘ful’ and Middle English ‘schele’, meaning ‘the dirty huts’; the name appears as ‘foulschelis’ in 1502, ‘Fouleschelis’ in 1581, ‘Foulscheillis’ in 1611, ‘Foulscheillis’ in 1618, ‘Foulschellis’ in 1632 and ‘Foulsheills’ in 1694; it is on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Foulsheels’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘O. Foul-sheels’ and ‘N. Foul-sheels’, on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Foulsheills’ and has its modern name on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Foulton see Fulton

the Foul Well (thu-fowl-wel) n. former spring on Braidhaugh farm in Rulewater. It was located near the modern farmhouse, and said to have once been the cause of much sickness on the farm. It was eventually disused on account of its supposed harmful effects on the residents (mentioned by Tancred, it is also written ‘the Ffoull Well’).

Foulwud (fowl-wud) n. Foulwood, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376. ‘Foulwod superior’ and ‘Foulwod inferior’ were both valued at 10 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 ‘Ovir Foulwod’ was leased to Alexander Armstrong (probably son of ‘Ill Will’) and ‘Nethir Foulwod’ to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn). The lands of ‘Fowlwoodis’ are also listed separately, but with no additional information. ‘Foulwodles’ is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1632, and ‘Fawhead alias Foulwod’ among possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. Nether Foulwood became the modern Gillside. The stream to the west is Foulwood Sike (it is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map; ‘Ouerfoulwod’ and ‘Netherfoulwood’ are recorded in 1541).

Foulwud Sike (fowl-wud-sik) n. Foulwood Sike, stream in southern Liddesdale, rising on Sufficient Hill and running roughly eastwards to join the Liddel near Gillside.

foumart (fow-mar’) n., poet. the pole-cat, Mustela putorius – ‘The waizle dunne frae the auld grey cairn, The theiffe foulmart came nighe’ [JTe], ‘...an assemblage of hares, hedgehogs, ferrets, foulmarts, badgers, tom-cats, and such-like unsightly creatures’ [JTe], an offensive person or object – ‘...in case it had played the foumart wi him durin’ the forenoon ...’ [DH] (also written ‘foulmart’).

founert (foo-nur’, foo-nurt) pp., arch. foundered, collapsed (usually with drunkenness) – ‘He stottit oot wi’ founert look, Syne at the sky he spiert ...’ [WL] (also spelled ‘foonert’; cf. foondert).

the Fountain (thu-fown’-in, -foon’-in) n. ornamental fountain in Wilton Lodge Park, in front of the Museum. It was installed as a result of money left to the town by Gilbert Davidson in 1896 and erected in the following year. Unlike the Brown Fountain and the MacNee Fountain, it does not usually have the name ‘Davidson’ attached to it, but is commonly referred to as simply ‘the Fountain’. The main cast-iron part of the fountain came from McDowell, Steven & Co., Milton Ironworks in Glasgow. It was painted silver through most of the 20th century and has decorations including dolphins and turtles. During renovations it was discovered that the original colour was probably blue and gold, and it was returned to this condition in 2018.

Fountainhall (fown'-in-hal) n. village on the A7 towards Edinburgh and former station on the Waverley Line, at the junction with the Lauder Light Railway.

the Fountainheid (thu-fown'-in-heed) n. former name for an area near the Vertish, perhaps related to the spring there.

Fountainheid Plantin (fown'-in-heed-plawn'-in) n. wood at the Vertish, across from Woodend cottage.

fout (fowt) n., arch. a spoilt child, especially a fussy one – ‘Mam’s-fout, a spoiled child, Teviotd.’ [JoJ], ‘A mammie’s or mother’s fout’ [GW].

foutsome (fowt-sum) adj., arch. forward, interfering, officious – ‘A foutsome little brat’ [GW] (noted by J. Jamieson).

Fouty Sike (fow-tee-sik) n. stream in southern Liddesdale, running westwards to join the Liddel near the cottage of Clerkleap. The wood near its foot is known as Foutysike Wood and is shown as old trees on both sides of the stream on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties.

fow (fow) adj., arch. full, sated – ‘And O, my friend! wi’ me he’ll share a heart, As fow o’ kindness, as its free o’ art’ [CPM], ‘...for it’s ill speakin atween a fow man and a fastin’ [ECS] (Scottish proverb), ‘An what A’d ti haud-sae, A Wasna boass, – if the truth be telld, A was riftin-fowe!’ [ECS], comfortable, well-off – ‘A fow body’ [JoJ], ‘The per had a guid fow life thegether’ [GW], drunk, inebriated – ‘It was his habit tae get ‘fow’ as early on the Friday as hei could, an’ keep hissel’ mair or less in that condection durin’ the twae days at least, if no’ gey weel intae the next week’ [BW1939], adv., arch. very, rather – ‘The war lestit fow long’ [GW], n., arch. a firloft of dry measure, a vessel full with this amount – ‘Payd John Aitken for 2 girds he laid on the town’s foue’ [BR1732], ‘Paid John Elliot, tanner, for lime to the East Port Cross, being 6½ fous, ... 0 2 0’ [BR1748] (also written ‘fou’ and ‘fowe’; cf. the now more common ful; elsewhere in Scotland this is ‘foo’ or fu; see also fow-hauden).

fower (fow-ur) n. four – ‘A was feerd A’d be owre lang, for it was better as a quarter efter fowr be the toon’s clock’ [ECS], ‘When ee came back fower oors later Eer mother asked whair ‘hev ee been’ [AY], ‘And I saw a bull-dozer Bashin at a fower-fit gable O’ whun ...’ [DH], ‘They tell mei it’ll take aboot fower meenits tae read ...’ [JCo], ‘At fower o’clock we’d oot wi’ top or gird ...’ [WL], ‘...clumsily stringing twae, threi, Or fower ...’ [DH], ‘The built in bed where fowre bairns slept The oothoose where the coal was kept ...’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘fowr’ and ‘fowre’; the double syllable pronunciation is much more distinct than in most other parts of Scotland).

fower-oors (fow-ur-oorz) n., arch. a meal taken at 4 o’clock or 4 hours before bedtime, particularly by farm-workers – ‘...an’ sae, efter gettin’ there, and gettin’ some four-’oors an’ supper, they made faimily wurship ...’ [BCM1880].

the fower posts o misery (thu-fow-ur-pōsts-ō-mi-zu-ree) n. popular name for the narrow stocking frame used around the mid-19th century during a time when the hosiery workers made very poor wages.

the Fower Road Ends (thu-fow-ur-rōd-endz) n. cross-roads at the top of Stirches Road, past the Convent, a popular area for country walks. The road ahead leads to Tandlaw and Drinkstone farms, to the left is Stouslie and to the right the Boonraws and the A7. A drove road used to come from Boghall to here, and then follow towards Stouslie on its way to the Borthwick valley. The name is also sometimes used to refer to the crossroads at the top of the Nipknowes – ‘Sirches Mains and the fower road ends Drinkstone, or Boonraw West Ma feet turn left gaun on tae Stouslie That’s the road aw like the best’ [AY].

fowerteen (fow-ur-teen) n. fourteen, arch. a fourteen-shilling piece – ‘There was left in a bagg within the box ... , ane old fourteen, two seven shilling pieces, two old three shilling pieces ...’ [PR1712] (used only sparingly compared with ‘fourteen’; see also foarten).

fow-hauden (fow-haw-din) pp., adj., arch. full-handed, lavishly supplied, well-stocked – ‘Yih saucy sorrih! ee’r owre fow-hauden’ [ECS] (cf. fow).

fowie (fow-ee) adj., arch. comfortably independent – ‘Possessing a comfortable inpdence, Roxb. It is never used like Bene, as a term of respect; but always in such connection as to suggest a different idea; as ‘He’s a fowie body’, expl. as equivalent to ‘an old hunks’. It is derived from Fow, full’ [JoJ].

Fowler (fow-lur) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is recorded in 1798 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia, but John Malcolm acted as substitute for him. Perhaps the same Alexander married Elizabeth (or 'Betty' Scott and had children: James (b.1810), baptised in Wilton Parish; John (b.1812), baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish. Auntie (d.1781) recorded in Hawick's death records as 'old Auntie Fowler'. It is unclear what her full name might have been. David (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1739), Adam (b.1743), George (b.1745), Margaret (again, b.1748), Joseph (b.1755) and Jean (b.1758). Isobel (17th C.) listed at Slacks among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Her surname is recorded as 'fouller'. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Christian was baptised in 1740. John (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Jean Thomson in 1750 and their children included Anne (b.1752) and James (b.1754). John (b.1732) may also have been his child. John (d.1795) tailor in Hawick, son of Robert. He died in Hawick. John (b.c.1770) labourer in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Later in 1799 he was balloted to serve in the Militia, in place of John Scott (or Young) who had deserted; however, he produced a certificate to show that he was too old and Adam Leyden was drawn in his place. John, F.E.I.S. (b.1844) taught in Hawick for more than 40 years. Born in Ross-shire, he came to Hawick as Headmaster at the West Port Free Church School, transferring to Drumlanrig in 1872. Probably the same Fowler, of Longview, made a sketch of the 'Chamberlain's Hoose' about 1870. He married Elizabeth Sinton in 1872 and she died in 1920. Their children included William, Elizabeth, Robert, Annie, John, Margaret (a teacher in Kerikeri, New Zealand), James and George (who may have married Margaret Hamilton and moved to Brooks, Alberta). John (19th C.) first Secretary of the Hawick Home Mission when it was founded in 1873. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1652), Helen (b.1654) and an unnamed child (b.1655). The witnesses in 1652 were William (surely a relative) and Hector Paisley. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'Fouller' when he was paid to be Hawick's Town Piper in 1721. He probably took over from James Oliver and continued until about 1732. His name may also have been written 'Foulier'. Perhaps the same Robert 'in Sea Croft' married Margaret Elliot and had children Elizabeth (b.1743) and Isobel (b.1745); the witnesses in 1743 were merchant John Cavers and shoemaker John Scott.

His marriage with Margaret Elliot is probably the one recorded in Bowden in 1730. Robert (18th/19th C.) forester to the Duke of Buccleuch at least in the period 1798–1807. He worked at Hassendean Common and probably elsewhere. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1791), baptised in Bowden; Betty (b.1795), also baptised in Bowden; Samuel (b.1804), baptised in Minto; and Agnes (b.1806), baptised in East Bank Kirk. Thomas (16th C.) servant to Robert, son of John Langlands of that Ilk. He is recorded in 1581 as witness to the sasine for half the Barony of Wilton being transferred from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert. Walter (17th C.) named on a list of 'idle and masterless men' suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found 'not fit for the wars' and dismissed. Perhaps the same Walter married Helen Langlands and had a son James (b.1634) baptised in Hawick. Walter (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hassendean (officially Robertson Parish) in 1683 for Robert Scott and Isobel Turnbull. Rev. William (c.1560–1612) poet and scholar who was Parson of Hawick in the reign of King James VI. He was son of William, a merchant of Edinburgh, with his mother possibly being Janet Fokart. His sister Anne married Sir John Drummond. He graduated from St. Leonard's College, St. Andrews in 1573/4 and received his M.A. in 1578. He then studied in Europe, but apparently suffered at the hands of some Catholic Scotsmen and returned to Britain, acting as a spy to the Duke of Lennox in London 1583–84. He was appointed Rector of Hawick in 1585, being presented by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He apparently received $\frac{2}{3}$ of the salary, while the Reader (and actual minister), William Auchmowtie received the other $\frac{1}{3}$. In 1587/8 he assigned the 'tack' of Hawick Kirk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch for 5 years. He was still described as 'Rector of Hawick' when he was witness to a 1595 land document of Walter Scott of Branxholme. And later in 1595 when he witnessed another document of Sir Walter's, he is described as 'secretary to the Queen'. He accompanied Sir Peter Young to Denmark in 1589 to take part in the negotiations of the marriage of James VI with the Princess Anne. He became Master of Requests and Secretary-Depute to Queen Anne in 1589, and later her Secretary. He must have been at Holyroodhouse during much of this time; there is no reason to believe he ever visited Hawick, and he probably ceased to be Rector in 1601. However, there are papers of the period 1602–07 relating to an action with the feuars and others over payment of the Parish teinds. In 1606 he gave a feu charter to Walter, son of Walter Scott of Buccleuch, for the Kirklands of Hawick, except for the Manse and Glebe. And in 1608 he is still described as ‘parson of Hawick’ in a ‘tack’ whereby Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank received the teinds of Hawick Kirk. In 1603 he accompanied the Queen to London and never returned. He was apparently known as a great anagram maker. He wrote ‘An Answer to the Calumnious Letter and Erroneous Propositions of an Apostat named M. Jo. Hammiltoun’ (1581), dedicated to Francis, Earl of Bothwell, as well as a commendatory sonnet for James VI’s ‘Essayes of A Prentise’ (1584). His better known poetic works were published posthumously by his nephew, the poet William Drummond of Hawthornden, namely ‘The Tarantula of Love’ and a translation of Patrarck’s ‘Tri-onfi’. In perhaps his most famous work, the ‘The Triumphs of the most famous Poet, Mr. Francis Petrarke, translated out of Italian into English’ (published 1587), he refers to himself as ‘P. of Hauicke’. Several other pieces exist in manuscript form, including an almost complete translation of Machiavelli’s ‘Prince’, as well as some unfinished verses, anagrams and scrolls of official letters in French, Italian and Latin. Some of these manuscripts are still in Edinburgh University library. He married (although his wife’s name is unknown) and had 4 surviving children, with his eldest son, Ludovic being recorded as portioner of Restalrig. After his death he was succeeded as minister of Hawick by Thomas Abernethy. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Bessie Scott. Their children included: Robert (b.1644); Helen (b.1657); Bessie (b.1648); Manie (b.1650); Heln (again, b.1652); Walter (b.1654); and Agnes (b.1656). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for Robert in Hawick in 1652. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1744. William (18th C.) recorded in New Woll in 1788 when he was accused of non-payment of a bill by William Thomson in Yair (formerly spelled ‘Ffoular’, ‘Foullar’, ‘Fouler’, ‘Fouller’, ‘Fowler’, etc.).

Fowlerawe (fow-lu-law) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of the Laird of Gledstains, along with ‘Torne’ (probably Turn) and ‘Wener-ton’. The exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Fowlerslands (fow-lurz-lawnds) n. former place name in Cavers, probably near Denholm. There was a confirming charter for these lands ‘in Denum’ to Thomas Cranston in about 1380. It was among the lands held by Thomas Cranston of that Ilk in 1458/9. It was referred to in 1483 when William Douglas of Cavers renounced these lands to John Cranston of that Ilk, as well as part of Denholm Mains. It was listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1511. It was regranted to Sir William Cranston in 1512 (where it is referred to as being ‘near the town of Dennom’), and listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1509/10. In 1636 it was referred to as ‘the land called the foul-leris lands’ when passed from John, Lord Crnston to his nephew William Cranston. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was then described as lands in Denholm (it is ‘Foullerysland’ in c.1380, ‘Fowlaris lande’ in 1458/9, ‘Fowlaris landis’ in 1509/10, ‘Foularis landis’ in 1511, ‘Fowlersland’ in 1512, ‘Foullars lands’ in 1574 and ‘Foullerlands’ in 1687 and ‘Foulerslands’ in 1698).

Fowlertoun (fow-lur-tin) n. Alexander (d.c.1423) cleric who was a servant of the captive James I. He held some rights of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, probably in succession to John Lyon. His surname is written ‘de Fouler-toun’.

Fowls (fowlz) n. Rev. David (17th C.) presented to Bedrule Parish by Lord Stewart of Traquair in 1633 and ordained there the same year. However, he was translated to Oxnam (probably a more valuable living) in 1634. He was deposed in 1639 for contempt of the Acts of the General Assembly. He thereafter lived in England, abandoning his 7 children. But in 1662 he petitioned Parliament along with his son John, claiming he had been deprived simply for refusing to sign the Covenant, and was then given a stipend. He appears to have spent much of the intervening time in England and was described being in Paddington, Middlesex in 1663. He married and had 7 children, including James (who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648) and John. James (18th C.) footman at Stobs in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Francis Eliott (also written ‘Foulis’ and other variants).

fowrpit (fowr-pi) n., arch. the fourth part of a peck – ‘... John Scott, Wyndheads, and Robert Taylor’s half-peacke near ane half-fourpitt short’ [BR1676] (also written ‘fourpitt’ and variants).

fowrt (fow-ur) n., adj., arch. fourth (cf. fowrth).

fowrth (fow-urth) n., adj. fourth – ‘At the fowrth A’m often in the treis ...’ [IWL].

Fox (foks) n. James (b.1811/2) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a cattle dealer at Wolfelee Glen in 1851. His wife was Margaret (from Innerwick, East Lothian) and their children included George, Margaret and James. John (18th C.) married Janet Ormiston in Wilton in 1822. Patrick (b.1822/2) labourer in Hawick, born in Cavan, Ireland. In 1851 he was living on the Mid Row. In 1857 he married Rosa Bergland and their children included Mary and John. Peter (19th C.) married Margaret Scott in 1830, the marriage recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Jedhead in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire, with the annotation ‘Subst.’, suggesting there was a substitute for him serving in the Militia. However, his name appears again in 1798 and later that year he was sworn into the Militia. He could be the roughly 60-year-old William recorded at Wauchope Common in 1841, living with Agnes (b.c.1795) and Marion (b.1832/3). In 1851 his widow was at ‘2 Wauchope New house’, along with their daughter Sarah (b.1822/3) and her husband George Rutherford. He is probably the William who married Agnes Cameron in Hobkirk Parish in 1816.

the Fox and Hounds (thu-foks-in-howndz) n. public house on Main Street in Denholm, built as a coaching inn in 1741. It was run by William Leyden in the 1850s and 60s, Mr. Brodie in the late 19th century and Mr. Sanderson in the early 20th. It still has some guest rooms today, and also hosts occasional folk music events (it is incorrectly the ‘Hare & Hounds’ in 1852).

foy (foi) n. a farewell dinner or party, often before a wedding – ‘May’e plenty hae o’ gospel gear, Braw godly foy, An’, odsake, Jamie, aye beware O’ drucken plays’ [JoHa], ‘Did the deed-raap soond ... i the nicht efter guid King Alisaunder’s waddeen-foy’ [ECS], ‘Oo’ll get ratten’s rest

Fraiter (frā-tur) n. John (17th C.) married Bessie (or Isobel) Wood in Ashkirk Parish in 1646. Their children included: Robert (b.1650); James (b.1652); William (b.1655); and John (b.1659). Probably the same John witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1652 for Robert Brown and another in 1656 for George Tait. John (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (17th C.) resident of ‘ye wood’ in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was listed right after the householders at Gatehousecote, but it is unclear where precisely his house was. John (18th C.) weaver in Denholm. He married Margaret Smith and their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1747); Helen (b.1750); Helen (again, b.1753); and John (b.1755). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1770. John (18th/19th C.) joiner living at Bedrule in 1797 when his name appeared in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. The annotation says ‘Serving’ and his name appears again in 1798; later that year he was sworn into the Militia. John (b.c.1780) servant at Galalaw according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1801. Richard (17th/18th C.) hired as schoolmaster in Castleton Parish in 1707. He was probably previously schoolmaster at Westruther, from 1691. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (16th C.) listed in 1540 among the tenants who were warned to remove themselves from Todrig when Alexander Lauder succeeded to the lands. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1640 he and 2 others had to make public repentance for playing at ‘nineholes’ (i.e. nine men’s morris) on Sunday. His name is probably written ‘Frater’. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1777. His children included Ann (b.1777) and Margaret (b.1788). (also formerly written ‘ffrater’ and ‘Frater’; this could be a variant of Fraser).

frame (frām) n. a knitting frame, formerly a hand-knitting machine built into a wooden frame, but in the modern era being a machine making many garment bodies or sleeves at once – ‘There’s a blithe kin’ o’ music In the whushin’ o’ the frames’ [WL].

frame flat (frām-flaw) n. the floor in a mill on which the knitting frame were housed (see flat).

frame-worker (frām-wur-kur) n. a person who works the knitting frames in a mill, traditionally a male job – ‘Aw yon frame workers and knitters Shaded frae the sun bleezin’ doon ...’ [AY].

Framysden (fra-mis-din) n. John (d.1418) appointed as Bishop of Glasgow by Pope Boniface IX in 1391. This was as a result of a dispute in the church at the time, since Matthew de Glendonwyn was already Bishop. He was never recognised within Scotland.

France (frawns) n. country in Europe, across the English channel from England. The Lovels and many other Norman families originated in northern France. The ‘Auld Alliance’ between France and Scotland started formally in 1295 and united the two countries against their common foe, England (although the details of the alliance over the centuries are extremely complex). A treaty of 1512 made all citizens of Scotland citizens of France and vice versa. The alliance effectively ended with the death of Mary of Guise, the wife of James V, in 1560. Britain formally declared war on France in 1756 (as part of the Seven Years War), the event being marked by drinking (as recorded in the Town books). The French Revolution had a dramatic polarising effect on Britain in the latter years of the 18th century. In Hawick there was a meeting of pro-war, anti-reform supporters in 1792, chaired by Lord Napier, leading to the following years being extremely politically charged, with animosity and suspicion between the 2 groups. The ‘loyalist’, pro-war group consisted mainly of wealthier men, while the ‘reformist’, anti-war group was mainly from the working classes. There were several specific incidents, such as 2 reformist publicans being denied licenses by the local J.Ps. Sympathisers of the Revolution were referred to as ‘black-nebs’. There were official illuminations in Hawick following the victory in the Battle of the Nile in 1798. There was a great enlisting into volunteer army units, prompted by a concern about French invasion, culminating locally in the ‘False Alarm’ of 1804. During the Napoleonic Wars there were French prisoners of war in Hawick. Huge numbers of local men fell in France during WWI and again during WWII, many still lying in unmarked graves. Hawick became twinned with the French town of Bailleul in 1973.

France (frawns) n. James (18th/19th C.) Supervisor of Excise in Hawick recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory.

the Franchise Agitation (thu-fran-chIz-aw-ji-tā-shin) n. name generally given to a series of political demonstrations during the summer and autumn of 1884, demanding equally voting rights for a much larger fraction of working men, particular in rural districts. In Hawick there was a march of approximately 6000 people along the High Street, the procession being 2½ miles long, with 10 bands, along with many flags and banners. Several banners are preserved in the Museum, particularly from Dicksons and Laings. The Representation of the People Act (also known as the Third Reform Act), introduced by William Gladstone, was passed at the end of 1884.

Francis Hole (fran-sis-hōl) n. popular name for a pool in the Teviot, to the east of Denholm (mentioned by James Murray in 1863).

Francis' Well (fran-si-seez-wel) n. spring at the left-hand side of the main A7 just after Newton, to the north of Hawick. The origin of the name is uncertain, but could be related to St. Francis if connected with the nearby 'Hallywell Hill', which has its own 'Hally Well'. John Cavers was farmer at the steading there in 1797, when it is recorded as 'Franciswell'.

Frankie's (frawng-keez) n. Frankie's the Inn Place, bar at 14 Bourtree Place.

Frankie o the Stobs (frawng-kee-ō-thu-stōbz) n. nickname for Sir Francis Eliott.

Frank Place (frangk-plis) n. street near Loch Park that had tenements constructed on it in 1881 and demolished in 1977. The location was the southern end of Lothian and Garfield Streets, directly opposite the top end of Allars Bank. It was named for Frank Hogg, who lived near there at the time of his death.

Frank Place Brig (frangk-plis-brig) n. occasional name for the road bridge over the railway at the top of Allars Bank and adjacent to the former Frank Place, also sometimes called the Wellogate Brig.

Frank Scott Court (frangk-sko'-kōr') n. sheltered housing development off Buccleuch Street, built 2001/2 and named after ex-Provost Frank Scott. The bell from the Old Parish Church is displayed at the front of the building, having been cast at the Whitechapel Foundry in 1841.

Fraser (frā-zur) n. Alexander of Ewesdale (14th C.) recorded in 1348 when he was reported to have recently been Sheriff of Aberdeen. Although his family was based in the North and he was 'de Ewnysedale' in the Exchequer Rolls, his designation was probably Ewesdale and he was a descendant of John who acquired these lands through marriage. Alexander of Ewesdale (14th/15th C.) resigned his lands in Ewesdale sometime before 1426, when they were granted to Simon Little. This included Meikledale, Kirkton, Sorbie, etc. Alexander (b.c.1790) from Tinwald in Dumfriesshire, he was a stocking-maker in Hawick. He was living at 12 O'Connell Street in 1851. His wife was Janet (or Jane) Ainslie and their children included James, Andrew, Anne (b.1822), Joan and Robert. Alexander (b.1830/1) from Cockburnspath, he was a railway porter in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at the Railway Stables. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Elizabeth Elliot. Andrew (b.1814/5) from Midlothian, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living up the Dean. In 1843 he married Isabel (or Isabella) Rodget, who was from Hawick. Christian 'Christie' nee Clyde (b.c.1805) resident of Highchesters Cottages already a widow in 1841. In 1851 she was living at about 4 Mill Port. Her children included Christian, Jane, John, Rachel, Hugh and Isabella. David 'Davie' (1949/50–) local boxer, coached by Jock Thorburn. He had 80 victories from around 100 bouts, including 3 schoolboy championships and 2 at youth level. He represented Scotland in an international tournament at the age of 16. After injury and disappointment he chose not to follow the professional route, but instead coached with Hawick Amateur Boxing Club. He also set up his own club, based at the Royal Albert for several years from 1994. George (b.1809/10) from Sanquhar in Dumfriesshire. In 1851 he was an artillery pensioner living on Ladylaw Place. His wife was Barbara and their children (born in Trinidad, England and Ireland) included John, Thomas, Mary Ann, Janet and Helen. George Hardie (1823–81) second son of Bailie Robert Fraser and great-grandson of Bailie John Hardie. He was a draper by trade, succeeding his father in 'John Hislop & Co.', 51 High Street. First elected to the Council in 1853, he was twice a Magistrate, as well as a J.P., and continued on the reconstituted Council, for North High Street Ward. He was made Provost in 1868, serving until 1871. He was a Whig Liberal in politics. He was a member of the first School Board and of the Parochial Board. He also led the resignations from the 4th Roxburghshire Volunteers and became Lieutenant in the new 5th Roxburgh (Hawick Volunteer Corps). However, in 1863 he was involved in the argument between the two corps, which led to his dismissal and the disbanding of the 5th Roxburgh. The song 'Hawick Volunteers' was composed and first sung for him in 1860. He was a keen Common Riding supporter and said to have had a fine tenor voice. He was also a leading light in the Masons, and involved in the formation of the Lodge St. James. In addition he was an early Trustee of St. George's Kirk. He was living at 15 High Street in 1851, partner in a draper's firm employing 10 men. He was living at 13 Teviot Crescent in 1861 and at 7 Teviot Crescent in 1875. In 1845 he married Mary Anne Stewart, from Blair Atholl. Their children (some baptised in Hawick Free Kirk) included: Helen (or 'Ellen', b.1846); Robert (b.1849); John Stewart (b.1850); and Colin Arthur Campbell (b.1854). On his retiral he was presented with an inscribed tea set, later became landlord of the Imperial Hotel, and was buried in St. Mary's (note, his name is also sometimes 'Hardie'). George (19th C.) married Margaret Deans in Wilton in 1847. George (b.1830/1) frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at No. 21 Loan with his wife Isabella and 3 children. He married Isabella Maxwell (or Chambers) in 1852 and their children included Jessie (b.1853), Betsey and John. George, J.P. (d.1962) came to Hawick as Excise Officer in 1936. He served for 18 years on the Town Council starting in 1940 and was Provost 1945–58. He gave his name to Fraser Avenue. He died at his home in Edinburgh. George Watson reporter who covered rugby for the Hawick Express. He could be the George Watson who married Wilhelmina Glendinning (1891–1961). Ian Acting Father in 1994 and Common-Riding Committee Secretary since 2017. Jack (20th C.) well-known local 'fixer-upper'. Brought up in Cavers, he worked as a joiner in Mansfield most of his life, and was famous for renovating old cars and bikes. He also rescued and restored the whistle from Blenkie's mill and the Willie Leggat statue. He took part in the John o' Groats to Land's End rally of Austin 7 enthusiasts in 1982 and 1992. He was an elder at Cavers Kirk. His son Kenny is a champion canoeist. James (b.1817/8) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at Silverbuthall Cottage. His children included Eliabeth and Alexander. He could be the James who married Marianne Renwick in 1852. John (13th C.) married Alicia, daughter of William of Conisbrough, Lord of Staplegordon, in about 1245. He and his wife were granted the land of 'Rig', which were presumably somewhere in Dumfriesshire, and through her also gained lands in Ewesdale. He was presumably ancestor of the later Frasers of Ewesdale. John (17th/18th C.) preacher at Hassendean Kirk the last 2 Sundays before it was demolished. He went on to become the minister at Glencorse in 1691, and was transferred to Alness in 1695. There is an assignation against him in 1692 from Thomas Shiels (minister at Robertson), claiming the stipend of Hassendean to which he believed he had the right. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Darling and their daughter Jane was baptised in 1810. John (19th C.) baker and flour dealer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. John Hislop (1818–65) merchant in Hawick, son of Robert. Like his father, he was a draper. He was recorded in Jedburgh Jail in 1848. In 1849 he was one of the trustees appointed to manage the business affairs of William Lindsay Watson. In 1851 he was a draper living with his father at 7 Teviot Crescent and in 1861 was a 'Linen & Woollen Draper', living at 15 High Street and employing 1 man and 3 apprentices. He appears to have died unmarried. John (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christina Rutherford and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1852. Kenneth 'Kenny' (1953/4–) son of Jack, he is known as a champion canoeist. For decades he could be seen regularly training on the Teviot and Alemoor Loch. He was part of the U.K. racing team in the 1980s and regularly toured Europe to compete. He was Scottish White Water Champion 7 times. He has continued to win events in the senior age categories. He worked as a motor vehicle lecturer at Henderson Technical College. Lesley daughter of Ian and Nancy. She studied at the Edinburgh College of Art. She has worked as a local photographer who produced 'Hawick Common Riding, An Illustrated Guide' along with Judith Murray in 2009. Her imaging and photography company is 'ILF Imaging', known for its extensive coverage of the Common Riding, as well as providing general photographic services. Along with her father she opened a photography shop at No. 2 Sandbed in 2009, moving to 1 Howegate in 2018. She designed the junior Mosstroopers' Club tie in 1995. She has been Treasurer of the Common Riding Committee since 2017. She proposed the toast to the Common Riding at the 2018 Dinner. Mrs. ?? (d.1840) midwife in Hawick. Her death is recorded in 1840. Neil (19th C.) married Jane Stewart in Hawick in 1838. Peter (b.1793/4) from Tranent in East Lothian, he was a frameworker in Hawick. He was living on Ladylaw Place in 1851 and in 1861 was a widower living with his daughter Elizabeth on Wilton Terrace. His wife was Catherine (from Rhynie in Aberdeenshire) and their children included Elizabeth (who married Lewis H.J. Thornton), Jemima and at least one son. Bailie Robert (b.c.1795) from Selkirk, he was father of Provost George Hardie and a draper by trade. He took over the business of John Hislop, who may have been his uncle. His premises were at 7 Teviot Crescent. He is recorded as a merchant on Teviot Crescent on the electoral roll of 1832 and the censuses of 1841 and 1851 (when he was a widower). He was a good friend of William Laidlaw. Although his family joined the Free Kirk after the Disruption, he remained a staunch 'Auld Kirker'. He was listed as a Steward at the 1836 Common Riding Races. He was mentioned in the 1837 Commons inquiry into 'fictitious voters'; he swapped a liferent in Roxburghshire with one in Selkirkshire belonging to William Muir. In 1847 he was given the tack of the Waulk Mill in Selkirk. In 1849 he was appointed as one of the trustees to manage the business affairs of the deceased William Lindsay Watson. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Rebecca Crosby and their children included: Janet (b.1816), who married William Lindsay Watson; John Hislop (b.1818); Margaret (b.1821); George Hardie (1823–81), who became Provost; and Rebecca. A portrait of him exists. Robert (19th C.) resident of Robertson. He married Janet Lindsay and their children (baptised in Robertson United Kirk) included: Jane (b.1846); Robert (b.1848); and James (b.1851). Robert (b.1832/3) son of William, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 35 Loan. He married Margaret Miller (daughter of William Miller and Robina Scott) in Hawick in 1860 and their children included Janet. He also had step-sons Robert and John Oliver. He may be the Hawick stockingmaker who was recorded in Hawick Jail in 1850 and Jedburgh Jail in 1849, 1850, 1860 and 1864. Roderick (18th/19th C.) married Janet Hart in Robertson in 1812. Sir Simon of Olivercastle (d.c.1291) from Peeblesshire, son of Sir Simon. He held extensive lands in Scotland, and was Keeper of Ettrick Forest, as well as Sheriff of Traquair and Peebles. In about the 1280s he was witness to a resignation of lands by Richard of Rule. In 1291 King Edward I ordered him to deliver harts to the Bishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow. His son, also Sir Simon, led the Scots to victory at the Battle of Roslin in 1303, refused to swear fealty to Edward, fought with Robert the Bruce, was captured by the English and was executed in London. Simon Lord Lovat (c.1667–1747) Chief of the Fraser Clan, he was famous for his belligerent nature and for changing allegiance, being a supporter of the House of Hanover in 1715 and of the Stuarts in 1745. He supposedly passed through Hawick along with the Jacobite army in 1745. There is a story told about a local man who acted as a guide and met him, later becoming a barber in Newcastle, and slitting the throat of one of the men who testified against Lovat. Defeated at Culloden, he was beheaded at the Tower of London, the last man to be executed in this way in Britain. Simon (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabella Martin in 1852 and their daughter Jane was baptised in 1854. William (d.1760) supposed Jacobite deserter who settled in the district and is buried in Teviothead churchyard, apparently at the age of 107. His name was written 'Fraser'. William (b.1806/7) from Lasswade, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Loan, in 1851 was at about 6 Kirkwynd and in 1861 was a 21 Loan. He married Janet Howison and their children (some baptised in Hawick Free Kirk) included: George (b.1829); Robert (b.1832); John (b.1835); Adam; Isabella (b.1843) and Jessie (b.1846) (also spelled 'Fraisier' and 'Fraser').

fratch (frawch) v., poet. to argue, wrangle – 'My curse light on the awkward sot, Who . . . breeds a fratch about his shot' [JR].

fray (frā) n., poet. a fight, skirmish, conflict, brawl – 'As her sons were ever foremost In the foray and the fray' [TC], warning of an attack – 'And whan he cam to the fair tower yate, He shouted loud, and cried weel hie, Till out bespak auld Gibby Elliot – 'Whae's this that brings the fraye to me?'' [T], 'While o'er my mind come thoughts of former days When ruthless feuds and fierce and bloody frays . . . [JCG], arch. a commotion, stir, fuss, especially in the phrase 'ti make a fray' – 'They were makin' a fray' [GW], 'Slips away the day, unbroken By strife or fray' [??].

the Fray of Suport (thū-frā-ov-su-pōr) n. Border ballad from the English side of the Kershope area, describing the raising of a pursuit after stolen goods. It has been described as one of the most uncouth and savage of the Border ballads and a version was recorded by Scocha in 2004.

the Free Church see the Free Kirk

Free Church Lane (free-church-lān) n. popular name for St. George’s Lane, running from Buccleuch Street to the Teviot and named after what was Hawick Free Church. At one time it was also known as Johnman’s Opening. It was the scene of a murder in 1861. After Teviot Lodge was taken over it became the eastern boundary of the High School grounds. The Post Office sorting office has been there since 1972 (also called ‘Free Kirk Lane’).

freedom (free-dum) n., arch. liberty to engage in the rights of a member of a community, especially a burgh – ‘Item, whatsoever person committis the said theft ...sal be banyshit the town, and lose their freedom for ever’ [BR1640], the boundaries within which the laws of a burgh apply – ‘Impr. whatsoever person sal commit blud upon utheris within the freedom of Hawick ...’ [BR1640].

the Free Gairdeners (thu-free-gār-di-nurz) n. the British Order of Ancient Free Gardeners, a friendly society with Lodge No. 3465 operating in Hawick from the 1880s until the early 20th century. Dr. Barrie was the first and most enthusiastic member. There were 2 separate branches at one point, ‘Flower of the Border’, Hawick, No. 146 Border District, and ‘Lily of the Border’, Hawick, No. 6 Border District. There was also briefly a junior branch ‘The Flowerbud of the Border’ (Juvenile), No. 23 Border District. The National Archives have some of their records.

the Free Kirk (thu-free-kirk) n. the Free Church, established after the Disruption in 1843, when hundreds of Church of Scotland ministers left to form the Free Protestant Church. In Hawick Rev. John Wallace left as minister of the Parish Church along with about 600 of the congregation of 800. They met originally in the East Bank Meeting House, then built their own church in 1844. The site was purchased from Mr. Anderson, with Mr. Nixon of Lynnwood laying the foundation stone. This became St. George’s Church, which was long afterwards known as the Free Church or Free Kirk, and is now renamed Teviot Church. A second congregation started meeting in the West-end in 1855, leading to the construction of the West Port Kirk in 1866. Another Free Church congregation, St. Andrew’s, was founded in 1866, with the church itself constructed in 1868, to serve the northern part of town. There was also a Free Kirk started about the same time in the Borthwick (the Snoot), another in Denholm in 1844 and one at Wolfelee about 1849.

Free Kirk Lane see Free Church Lane

the Free Kirk Manse (thu-free-kirk-mans) n. manse for St. George’s Church, built on Wilton path in 1846. The land had previously been a garden belonging to Francis Ballantyne. The house was designed by Smith of Darnick and can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races. It was occupied continuously by the Free Kirk minister until Rev. Johnman died in 1923, then sold the following year. The junior minister had lived at Broomieknowe, and this house was gifted by Sir Thomas Henderson in 1925 to become the new Manse. This house may have been the ‘U.P. Manse’ and ‘Wilton Manse’ recorded on Ordnance Survey maps, which was demolished about 1969.

Freeland (free-lind) n. Rev. John (20th C.) minister at Ashkirk Church from 1953 until about 1961.

the Free Library (thu-free-II-bru-ree) n. an early name in use for the Library.

freeman (free-mun) n. another name for a Burgess – ‘Item, that ilk freeman’s eldest son and heir that is to be admitted freeman and burgess, his father being in life, sall pay forty shillings with the wyne and pertinents’ [BR1640].

Freeman (free-mun) n. Patrick (17th/18th C.) charged in 1701 with going over the Border into England to get married. He is recorded giving evidence that the Burgh Officer was the first person to arrest him (i.e. that it was not done on the authority of any other court). Walter (18th C.) clockmaker in Hawick. He was engaged by the Council in 1747 to fix and upkeep the clock on St. Mary’s, with an annual salary of £1 5s. This included providing iron work for a dial-plate on the west side and alterations to the dial-plate on the east side. He is also recorded making 420 communion tokens and a stamp for Hawick Parish Kirk in 1751. In 1752 he was paid the remains of his salary for upkeep of the clock for a year. He may be the same as the Walter who led the ‘Patriots’

(or was at least related to him). He married Margaret Falside and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1758; the witnesses were William Dyce and Walter Ruecastle. He is probably the 'Walter Freemans, Watchmaker', whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1781. Walter (18th C.) leader of a secession movement in Hawick Kirk. He also led the 'Patriots', a group of 205 Burgesses and others who took the Town Council to court 1778–81, claiming they had improperly managed the Common on behalf of the Burgesses and questioning their authority. They particularly complained about the Bailies, stating that they were 'generally a set of poor low men' and that 'he that drunk most in the Baillies' house had most interest in the decision'. In 1778 he and James Dryden were jailed in Hawick over the weekend and then taken off to Jedburgh Jail for another 2 days before being bailed (he is probably the one described as being 'in bad health' at the time). The Court of Session ruled in favour of the Magistrates and Council, but the outcome also led to the Council being fixed at 31 members. He was probably the same watchmaker Walter whose daughter Isobel married John Clark in Edinburgh in 1780. He may be the Walter, married to Margaret Falside, whose daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick in 1758. He is probably the Walter who was recorded renting the 'mortcloth' in Hawick in 1773 and also in 1774 for his 'goadsister'. He could be the Walter 'Freedom' who witnessed a baptism for George Nicholson in Hawick in 1799. William (18th C.0 resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Jean (b.1728) and Janet (b.1730). Dr. William (1751/2–1821) surgeon and liberal politics leader in Hawick in the latter part of the 18th century. He was said to be a 'blackneb' and had a portrait of Napoleon in his house. He was an early friend of Robert Wilson, apparently influencing his political and religious views; it was said that 'Dr. Freeman had made Rob Wilson a' but the soul'. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1789–97. He is probably the William who married Helen Scott in Hawick in 1788. He seems likely to be related to Walter, perhaps his son. He was buried at St. Mary's, his gravestone reading 'A man of sterling honour, integrity, and benevolence. A warm friend and affectionalte Relative. His talents as a professional man were of the highest order and were ever at the service of the poor' (also written 'Freman').

French (french) n. Adam (d.c.1578) 8th Laird of Thornydykes in Berwickshire. He was son of Robert and Anne Home and grandson of Adam (who in 1502 was on the panel for Sir David Home of Wedderburn inheriting some of his father's lands around Lauder). He was a minor at the death of his father and had a charter from Thornydykes in 1555/6. He was involved in a contract relating to lands in Gordon in 1563 and in 1567 he had an action involving lands at 'Pet-cokkis'. In 1569 he acquired from Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh Abbey, the lands of Ulston, Nether Crailing, Auld Jedburgh, Rue-castle, Abbotrule, 'Bowatsyde', Grange, Fodder-lee, Over Bonchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Belses, Ancrum and others. This was for the sum of 30 hundred merks. In 1574/5 he was involved in a dispute over teinds in the Parish of Gordon. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Hoppringle of Blindlee, and she died in 1582. His children were: Robert, who succeeded; James, executor of his mother's will, who led an action against the Abbot of Jedburgh in 1583; and John, tutor of Thornydykes after his brother James died; Alexander, who was mixed up with the Earl of Bothwell; Thomas, who was in the King's service; Margaret; Christine; Jonet; and Eupham. Adam of Thornydykes (1599–1617) only son of Robert, he was 10th Laird of Thornydykes. He was also Laird of Abbotrule and other lands that had been purchased by his grandfather from Jedburgh Abbey. His uncle John was appointed as his tutor in 1604. It is said that at the age of 14 he was attending school in Haddington when he was kidnapped from the care of his guardian Sir John Home, by William Home of Hardiesmill,

John Cranston of Moriston and Sir Patrick Chirnside of East Nisbet, taken to Berwick and married to Sir Patrick's daughter, Jane. This led to a trial before the Supreme Court of Scotland. However, the King finally allowed the marriage, but he died before there were any children. His 3 sisters, Jean, Alison and Margaret were served as his heirs in 1625. George (16th C.) 4th son of Adam, 6th Laird of Thornydykes. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. James (d.c.1604) 2nd son of Adam and Margaret Hoppringle. He acted as executor for his mother. In 1583 he instituted proceedings against the Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1588 his brother-in-law John Baillie of St. John's Kirk had a letter of reversion to him for the annual rents of the former lands of Jedburgh Abbey, including Abbotrule, Nisbet, Ruecastle, Over Bonchester, Mackside, Belses, Over Ancrum, etc. He died soon after his older brother Robert and his younger brother John became his heir. Robert (d.1603) son of Adam and Margaret Pringle, he was 9th Laird of Thornydykes and 2nd of Abbotrule. In 1582/3 he and his mother had an action against a number of men for spoliation of their lands of Jordanhill and East Gordon. He was part of a feud that resulted in the death of Ninian Spottiswood in 1588. He was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for helping the Earl of Bothwell. In 1589 he married Margaret, said to be only daughter and heiress of William Turnbull, younger of Bedrule (who pre-deceased his father), with her mother being Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes; she died in 1593, leaving no children. He secondly married Margaret, daughter of Mark Home of Hardiesmill. Their children were: Adam, who succeeded; Jean, who married John, brother of William, Lord Cranston; Alison, who married Thomas Cranston of Huntliewood and secondly William Marjoribanks of Stainerig; and Margaret, who married Robert Brownfield of Todrig in Berwickshire. His brother John was appointed tutor to his son Adam in 1604. Robert of Frenchland (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, with his mother probably being sister of Christopher Halyday of Raehill in Annandale. He was served heir to his father in 1610. In 1613 he was a cautioner for John Johnstone of Westerraw to infest Andrew, son of William Scott of Bowhill in some lands. He may be the French of Frenchland appointed to assist Walter Scott of Buccleuch to administer justice in the Middle Shires in 1622. In 1598 he married Isabell Scott, who was from the Bowhill Scotts. They had 9 children, including William (who succeeded), Adam (who later acquired Frenchland and Thornydykes), Margaret (who became co-heir and married her kinsman William French) and Marian (also co-heir, who married David French, her sister's brother-in-law). William (18th/19th C.) local man who got stuck in the cleuch on Toon-o-Rule farm one night while riding from Hawick to Abbotrule. It is said that he managed to pull himself out, but that his horse drowned, and the horse-shoes were found many years later when someone was casting peats.

frenfi (fren-fi) adj., poet. furious, wrathful – '...an' let thy frenfu' angir tak' haud o' thame' [HSR].

frennishin (fre-ni-sin) n., poet. a state of extreme agitation, rage, fury – 'He castet apoun thame the frennishin o' his angir, wræth, an' indignatione ...' [HSR], 'Ye ruul the frennisin' o' the se; whan the waves o't ræise up, thou quashist thame' [HSR], a state of distraction, such as when a child is woken from sleep – 'He is ... in a frenishen' [JoJ] (there are spelling variants; also frainishin).

Fresall see Frissell

fresh (fresh) n., arch. a thaw, the breaking of a spell of frost – 'Atween a frost an a fresh = the setting-in of a thaw' [ECS].

fri (fri, fre, frā) prep. from – 'where div ee come fri?', 'Then can I be glad when sae far I am frae thee ...' [JoHa], '...A day frae Hawick's a day wasted!' [DH], '...frae ma hoose upon the rock' [JEDM], '...And keep oor dear hames frae disorders' [WS], 'I'll sing the test a Callant tries When far frae hame and weary' [RH], '...An' at his voice the deid folk leapt Frae oot their graves' [WP], also sometimes meaning 'of' – 'hei deid fri a hert attack', conj. from the time that – 'Frae she cam in, her tongue never devauldit' [GW] (the pronunciation varies, and can often be between the examples given; also spelled 'frae'; cf. the less common fra and the older threh).

Friarshaw (frI-ur-, fre-shaw) n. farm on the north side of the Ale Water, roughly between Riddell and Lilliesleaf. It was the seat of a branch of the Douglasses, descended from the Cavers line (but with a genealogy that is not well established in detail). In 1563 William Gourlay warned

George and Ralph Douglas to remove themselves from a husbandland there belonging to Andrew Douglas. William Douglas (d.1575) was probably the first Laird of these lands, followed by Andrew. It was valued at £5 12s 6d in 1592. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. James Shiel was there in 1628. It was valued at £285 13s 4d in 1643, 1663 and 1678 (including feu-duty of £13 6s 8d to the Earl of Haddington). It was still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. In 1678 the feu duties were valued at £13 6s 8d, and held by the Earl of Haddington. Walter Riddell of Friarshaw is recorded in 1695. There were Turnbulls there in the late 18th century. In 1788 it was owned by Rev. William Campbell. Andrew Wilson was servant there in at least 1799–1801 and James Redford and William Riddell in 1801. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists the owner as William Scott of Friarshaw, with a value of £286 (plus £60 in teinds). There were Scott-Douglas owners in the 19th century, but by the 1870s it was part of the estate of the Sprots of Riddell. It was called ‘Jerusalem’ by the locals, and was once monastic property. Another farm to the north-west is called Friarshawmuir. The Douglasses of Friarshaw were cadets of the Douglasses of Cavers, differences by making the bordure nebuly – ‘We’d cross the brig and thread the wood, And climb to Friarshaw, Where we can see the Minto Hills And rugged Ruberslaw’ [FL] (the name probably comes from Middle and Old English ‘frere sceagga’, meaning ‘friar’s wood’; it first appears in 1563 as ‘Freirschawe’ and continues with similar spelling for the next century, being ‘Freirschaw’ in 1581, ‘Freirshaw’ in 1618, ‘Friershawe’ and ‘friershaw’ in 1678 and ‘Frier-shaw’ in 1695; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Freershaw’).

fricht (fricht) n., arch. a fright – ‘...an’ ane fricht til mine acquaintance; thame that did see me owtbodye fiede frae me’ [HSR], ‘I was ane reproch amang a’ mine enimies ...an’ ane fricht til mine acquaintance’ [HSR], ‘Bairnies wi’ it get sic frichts, There’s no ane that sleeps soun’ ...’ [TCH], ‘...Advisin’ Jimmie not ti dee Wi’ useless fricht’ [WP], v. to frighten ‘...eneuch to fricht the verra whaups frae their haunts’ [BM1907].

frichtfi (fricht-fi, -fu) adj., arch. frightful – ‘There’s whiles a wee thing that wags uncontrolled, And causes a frichtfu’ skaith ...’ [WFC] (spelled ‘frichtfu’ etc.).

fri’d (frid, fred) contr. from it – ‘the trouble wi Gala is, oo’re no fer enough fri’d’, ‘A was guy fer fri’d it the time’, ‘The water that cam’ frae’d was caller and clear ...’ [JCG] (see also thrih’d).

Fridi (frī-di) n. Friday (also spelled ‘Fridih’; note the pronunciation with ī rather than I).

the Fridi (thu-frī-di) n. Common Riding Friday, being the Friday after the first Monday in June and the main day in the traditional celebrations, lasting almost a full 24 hours for the principals. The earliest it can be is 5th June and the latest is 11th June. It starts with the Drums & Fifes assembling at 6 a.m. in the Kirkwynd, traditionally playing ‘Teribus’ and ‘John Paiter-son’s Mare Rides Foremaist’. It proceeds with the Snuffing and the Cornet’s Breakfast, with the Drums and Fifes continuing on a route round the old parts of the Town. The Cornet then gets the Flag and walks with it to the Tower, where the ‘Auld Sang’ is sung. The Procession of the officials’ motorcade plus riders then starts, going through Wilton then along the High Street and up the Loan for the Chase. The married riders go to the front as usual, this being the only time anyone rides past the Flag. After the Chase up the Nip Knowes the Acting Father takes the Flag to St. Leonard’s, where the main ‘Hut’ takes place. Here the curds and cream are served, which were ordered on the Thursday of the previous week. After the Hut, the mounted procession proceeds round part of the Common for the actual Riding of the Marches, with the Cornet performing the Cutting of the Sod. They then make their way to the Mair, with the Flag being placed on the roof of the committee room during the Races, and the Cornet being presented with a race-crop. After the events at the Moor, the riders proceed via Crumhaughhill and Myreslawgreen, where they receive refreshments. The Principals then go to the Coble Pool for the Dipping of the Flag, then the Song Singing, before returning the Flag to the Town Hall for the night. Then there is the Cornet’s Dinner and finally the Ball, ending with the climb to the summit of the Mote at dawn. Before 1752 it was fixed as the last Friday in May, but since then (largely because of the 11 day shift to the Gregorian calendar) it has been in June. In the early 19th century the Magistrates and retinue left town at 10 a.m. and then the cavalcade returned to town after the Races, 3-abreast, led by the Town Clerk and the band. They would then march the Burgh boundaries and adjourn to the Town Hall for dinner. The modern schedule was essentially set down in the 1880s.

Friend (frend) n. Edmund (19th C.) native of somewhere along the Malay Archipelago. He was given as a gift to Gilbert Elliot, Lord Minto by one of the Rajahs of the kingdoms there in about 1811, as part of negotiations for support against the Dutch and French. Lord Minto emancipated these slaves, but kept the two eldest boys as domestic servants; he chose the surnames ‘of Homo [man] and Amicus [friend], that I may always be put in mind to treat my humble property like men and friends instead of cattle’, based on a quotation from Seneca. Along with Francis Man he became part of the household staff at Minto, one of them being groom. However, it is unclear what became of them. Gilbert (1825–1911) son of John and Mary Scott. He was baptised in Minto Parish and in 1841 and 1851 was living with his mother and siblings in Denholm. In 1861 and 1871 he was a gardner living at Milnthorpe, Westmorland. He married Elizabeth (Betsy) Wilson and their children included: George (b.1847/8); Elizabeth (b.1855/6); Mary (b.1857/8); Margaret (b.1863/4); Gilbert (1865–1930); Catherine (b.1867/8); and Jane (b.1871). He died in Clitheroe, Lancashire. John (19th C.) married Mary Scott in Ancrum Parish in 1824. They had 3 children baptised in Minto Parish: Gilbert Elliot (b.1825); Adam (b.1827); and Agnes (b.1830). Given the name of the first child, it seems very likely that John was in fact the same man called ‘Edmund’ in a letter from Lord Minto, i.e. that he was originally from Bali or one of the neighbouring regions of what is now Indonesia. His wife (presumably widow) was living in Denholm (probably Sunnyside) in 1841, along with children Gilbert and Mary and working as a dressmaker. In 1851 the family were probably on Eastgate in Denholm, his wife then a widow, his sons both being gardeners and his daughter Agnes a baker’s wife with a grand-daughter Mary Beattie also living with them. His son Gilbert married Betsy Wilson and lived in Heversham, Westmorland and his grandson, also Gilbert lived in Clitheroe, Lancashire.

frig (frig) v., arch. to potter, to indulge in trifles, to dress showily, primp – ‘Set ee up wui eer feiky mollups an eer friggeen an falderals! Soem folk heh sic a tredd wui thersels, – primpin!’ [ECS].

frisel (fri-sel) n., arch. metal used for striking a flint – ‘The donations to the Museum during the month comprised the following: 6 frisels, Border district ...’ [HAST1900].

Frissell (fri-sel) n. Andrew (16th C.) son of the Laird of Overton and brother of William. Along with his brother he was accused of being involved in 2 raids on English farms in 1589. David (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators of Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when Mangerton passed to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as ‘Dauid Fresell’. Jean (17th C.) listed at Mervinslaw among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem Fresell de Vuer-tone’ (probably Overton) when he was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He may be the Laird of Overton fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. John of Overton (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of the lower Borthwick valley belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as ‘senior in Smailholm’ in 1494/5 when he was found to be infirm at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1509 as part of the inquest panel for ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburghshire by James Douglas. In 1517 he was ‘Robertum Fresal de Buntoune’ when he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Thomas (16th C.) tenant at ‘Efflesche’, i.e. Effledge in Cavers Parish. In 1535 along with Arthur Douglas he had 13 cows and oxen stolen, with William Scott ‘in Layk’ being accused. They are described as ‘common thieves of Liddesdale. He is probably related to the previous Robert. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Fresal’ in 1424 when he was on a ‘retour of inquest’ in Hawick for settling claims to lands on Hownam. Most of the other men were Teviotdale Lairds. William of Overton (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he and his brother Andrew were named along with Rutherfords, accused of a raid into England. They were both also among a group of Teviotdale men accused of rieving from Woodburn in 1589, and were there said to be ‘sons to the Laird of Overton’ (formerly ‘Fresal, ‘Fresale’, ‘Fresel’, ‘Fressell’, etc.; note that the name may have been an early variant of Fraser).

frit (fri) n. fruit – ‘For aw hae hed a taste o’ the frit o’ knowledge trei ...’ [MB] (also spelled ‘fruit’ in analogy with other ‘ui’ words, even when pronounced with an i).

frizzle (fr-zul) n., arch. the steel used to make a spark from a flint – ‘The donations to the Museum during the month comprised the following: 6 frisels, Border district ...’ [HAST1900] (there are spelling variants).

A’ve only gotten a sook o froa – A hehna gotten a drink!’ [ECS], ‘... wui the weeks o eis mooth aa froe, an riftin gas till eis een grat’ [ECS], a suck of froth from ‘sugarallie witter’ – ‘Gie’s a froe!’ [GW], v., arch. to froth, come up like froth – ‘... an the pluiffin ter froes up atween the causastanes’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘froa’ and ‘froe’).

frock-tail (frok-tāl) n., arch. the hem of a dress, lower part of a skirt, used particularly in phrases of ridicule for being over-coddled – ‘Hei’s an awfih mammie’s gull thon! – hingin on be hei’s mother’s frock-tail’ [ECS].

froe see fro

Frogden (frog-din) n. village south of Kelso on the back road to Linton, in the former Linton Parish. A stone circle near there was called ‘the Tryste’ and used as a place of muster during the days of Border warfare. William Dawson, who farmed there, was a leading introducer of modern farming methods to the Borders in the late 18th century, particularly turnip husbandry (also written ‘Frogdean’; the name derives from Old English ‘throc’, being a peice of wood attached to a ploughshare; it first occurs as ‘Throcdean’ in 1550 and has its modern form by the 17th century).

front-breist (frun’-breest) n., arch. the front row of seats in the gallery of a church – ‘The front-breist o’ the kirk loft’ [GW] (also fore-breist).

the Frostlie Burn (thu-frost-lee-burn) n. stream that rises as the Linhope Burn and runs roughly north along the A7 to reach the Teviot near Teviothead, and name for the general area – ‘Where rising Teviot joins the Frostylee, Stands the huge trunk of many a leafless tree ... Since that bold chief who Henry’s power defied, True to his country, as a traitor died’ [JL] (it first appears as ‘Frosterlie’ in 1604, then ‘Frostelie’ in 1610; it is ‘Frostanly B.’ and ‘Frostalie b.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 maps, but is actually the Mossypaul Burn labelled incorrectly on the Ewesdale map; the origin is probably ‘the forester’s clearing’ in Old English).

Frostylee (fros-tee-lee) n. an old name for the Frostlie Burn and for the steading there. This was part of the extensive lands of Ringwoodfield as part of the Buccleuch estates in 1660. It was listed in 1653 and 1663 among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch, being a 10 shilling land along with Linhope and Phaup; these were united with lands in Wilton and others into ‘the tenement of Blackgraine’ – ‘The gear was driven the Frostylee up, Frae the Frostylee unto the plain, Whan Willie has looked his men before, And saw the kye right fast driving’ [T], ‘Richt ower frae Frostylee To Kersop in Siccan Stour, We garr’d the Southrons flee Wi’ mony a clash and clure’ [TK] (also written ‘Frostlie’; it is ‘Frosterlie’ in 1653 and ‘Frostlie’ and ‘Frosterlie’ in 1661 and 1663; ‘Frostalie b.’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

Froud (frowd) n. Terence former Hawick R.F.C. player who later was manager of the team. In 1998 he did the Snuffin in place of the injured Sang Singer.

Fulton (ful’-, fool’-in-) n. lands between Bedrule and Fodderlee, once the site of a small village. There is a ruined 15th century pele tower there. Adam Turnbull is recorded there in 1390. John Turnbull of ‘Foultoun’ took part in 1426 in the inquiry into the leprosy of John Turnbull of Minto. Thomas and Roland Turnbull were recorded there in 1493 and Cock Turnbull, William White and Robert White in 1494/5. Thomas Turnbull was tenant there in 1501 and George Russell in 1502. In 1502 some Olivers were allowed to compone for stealing 100 of the Laird of Bedrule’s sheep from there at different times. In 1516 James V granted remission to several Turnbells, including Adam, George and Andrew in Fulton. The tower is recorded being burned the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. It was the home of Margaret Home of Cowdenknowes in the 1570s, before her marriage to William Turnbull of Bedrule, and then was a Turnbull stronghold. In the 1580s it was the seat of Walter, heir apparent of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. A letter of 1602 from William Turnbull to his father-in-law Thomas Ker of Cavers describes how he took possession of the lands and lists the tenants there at that time. In 1619 John Stewart of Traquair accused several Turnbells of stealing wood from his lands at Huntliehill; this included Walter in Fulton and his son Thomas, as well as Robert, Mungo and Robert ‘Fendie’ Turnbull and James Ainslie, who were also there. In 1623 Andrew Paterson, tenant there, was accused of stealing an ox and a cow, but found not guilty. The Kers were granted the lands in 1623, along with other Turnbull possessions (probably on default of loans). It was among lands owned by Sir Thomas Ker in 1643, valued at £440. William Turnbull was there in 1690 and George White was tenant in 1694. It was owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788. William Elliot of Wells bought the lands from the Cavers-Carre family in 1801. It was among lands owned by William Elliot of Bedrule in 1811. The minister of Bedrule formerly had the right to cut turf annually on the moor here. A Roman coin, specifically a denarius of Augustus, was found to the west of the tower.

Further to the south-east is a possible ancient enclosure (the name occurs in 1296 as ‘Fougheltona’, is ‘Foultoun’ in 1390, ‘Foultone’ in about 1390, ‘Foultounne’ in 1426, ‘foultounne’ in 1493, ‘foultoun’ in 1494/5, ‘Fowlton’ in 1501, ‘foultoun’ in 1502, ‘Foultoun’ in 1516, ‘Folton’ in 1545, ‘Foultoun’ in 1583/4, ‘Fultounne’ in 1643 and 1678, ‘Faltounne’ in 1684, ‘ffoultoun’ in 1690 and ‘Foultin’ in 1694; it is still marked as ‘Foultoun’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Foultounne’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is probably Old English ‘fugol tun’, meaning ‘bird farm’).

Fulton (fool’-in) n. Alexander (b.c.1780) servant at Mackside according to the ballot for the Militia in Southdean Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, living at Skelfhill in 1736, when his son Robert was baptised. He is probably related to his contemporary John. James (18th/19th C.) stocking needle maker on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son William was baptised in 1715. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Denholm in 1736. His children included: Margaret (b.1736); William (b.1740); and Janet (b.1747). Perhaps the same John was married to Janet Hogg and had an unnamed child baptised in Cavers in 1751. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1743 and 1744 and Burnhead in 1747. He married Margaret Amos in 1737 and their children included: Isobel (b.1740); Janet (b.1743); Gideon (b.1744); Bessie (b.1746); John (b.1747); Thomas (b.1750); Isabel (b.1753); Margaret (b.1755); Mary (b.1757); and Gideon (again, b.1760). The witnesses in 1743 were James Dryden and Walter Scott and in 1744 were James Dryden and Adam Armstrong. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, perhaps son of John. He was living in Denholm in 1777 and Denholm Dean in 1779 and 1783. His children included: John (b.1768); Janet (b.1770); Robert (b.1777); William (b.1779); Alexander (b.1783); Margaret (b.1786); James (b.1789). William (1794–1875) first (and possibly only) Governor of Hawick Jail. He was born in Jedburgh, son of John and Rachel Watson. He was wounded in Holland in the 1st (Foot) Regiment, being struck in the face and chest by a bullet, and being pensioned out of the army. He was then a roadman at Castleweary for about 25 years (where he is recorded in 1841), before becoming farmer at Mertin’s House (recorded in 1851). He is said to have been ruined as a farmer on account of his stackyard being burned down 2 or 3 years in a row, and was succeeded at Martin's House by the Knoxes. He then became Governor of Hawick Jail (on Allars Bank), but it is said that his wife did not enjoy the situation and he instead became a forester at Eildon Hall, farmed at Mertoun House and moved to Denholm. He married Margaret, daughter of John Cairns and Elizabeth Louisa Thorburn, and she died at Martin's House in 1859, aged 63. His children were: John (1815–1903), who emigrated to Ontario, Canada; Elizabeth (1818–1904), who died in Appleby; James (1820–86), born at Alton, died in Manitoba; Mary (b.1824), who married Walter Riddell and live in Hawick; Anne (1827–1909), who married John Scott and lived at Castleweary; William Scott (1831–91), a banker in Appleby. He died at 4 O'Connell Street and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery (formerly written 'Foultain', 'Foulton', 'Fultan', etc.).

Fulton Toor (ful', fool'-in-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined peel tower dating from the 16th century, about 1½ miles south of the village of Bedrule, on the side road between Bedrule and Fodderlee. It was long a stronghold of the Turnbells. The tower is recorded being burned the Earl of Hertford's men in 1545. Tradition holds that the last occupant of the tower was a strong Turnbull who was overcome by the Kers of Ferniehirst, pouncing upon him while he was singing to his infant child on his knee: 'Little wat ye wha's coming, Jock and Tam and a's coming'. The remains of the tower are one storey high and surrounded by turf covered foundations of out-buildings. The dimensions are about 7 m by 9 m, and oblong in plan, with a circular stair-tower on the east. The walls of the tower were repaired around 1880 to preserve the ruin.

the Fyre Brigade (thu-fir-bree-gād) n. municipal fire service within Hawick, in early days operating out of the old Town House. The Council first resolved to purchase a fire engine in 1809, and it arrived from London in 1812. Prior to that the Burgh had a few leather buckets, a couple of ladders and several iron hooks on poles for dealing with burning thatch. The new ‘engine’ consisted of a carriage on a swivel, several lengths of pipe and many leather bags for carrying water. A force of about 50 volunteers was established in 1814, but at first were only paid with ale! The engine was adapted several times an additional one purchased in 1847. By the late 1800s the engine was pulled by 3 horses yoked together; pictures exist from this period, as well as a short film of about 1900. The engine acquired in 1894 was a Merryweather Greenwich Gem, pulled by horses until a motorised engine replaced them in 1918; a second engine was purchased in 1931. The first uniforms were simply white jackets. The uniform issued in 1882 consisted of a blue coat, white linen trousers and helmet. Hawick’s first actual fire station was constructed in 1857 at Slitrig Hall, 2–6 Old Manse Lane (at the end of Slitrig Bank), where some evidence of the original building’s use can still be seen. This station served the town through the rest of the 19th century and into the early 20th. A new Fire Station was constructed on Commercial Road in 1914, which in turn was replaced with the new headquarters on Wilton Hill in 1971. The Hawick Fire Brigade became part of the National Fire Service in 1941. A full time brigade started in 1963, along with the purchase of a new engine. It was later incorporated into the Lothian and Borders Fire Brigade and in 2013 the local brigade became part of the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service.

the Fyre Station (thu-fir-stā-shin) n. Hawick’s initial fire station was in part of the old Town House. A new station was built at the end of Slitrig Bank in 1857, perhaps including parts of an earlier house. This had an arched entranceway for the vehicles and roundel windows above. The location was presumably chosen for its proximity to water in the centre of the Town; however, it later proved too inconvenient for the larger fire engines to negotiate the narrow streets there. So a specially built Fire Station was constructed on Commercial Road, designed by Alex Ingles and completed in 1914. The old station was converted into a meeting house by the Christian Brethren, renamed Slitrig Hall. The arch was bricked up and a stage was included in the interior. This was converted into a residential property in 2016, with the arch turned into a large window; additionally the baptismal pit (perhaps once a maintenance pit for the fire engines) was retained. The new station on Wilton Hill was opened in 1971. The old Commercial Road building became part of the Town yards, but being largely derelict was a victim of arson, and demolished in 2002.

gab-stick (gawb-stik) n., arch. a wooden spoon (a Teviotdale and Lothian word noted by J. Jamieson).

Gadd (gawd) n. Job (1786–1869) English-born stocking-maker of the mid-19th century. He was born in Derbyshire, son of Thomas and Ann Follows. He came to Hawick some time in the 1830s, moving from Shepshed, Leicestershire. He was fond of giving speeches, and for a time was known as 'the Dumb Precentor' because he took over the Precentor's seat in the Parish Church when the Precentor occupied a seat in the choir, even although he never himself sang a note. The family were living on Walter's Wynd in 1841, at about 62 High Street in 1851 and at 1 Teviot Place in 1861. He married Catherine Foreman (1789–1850) in 1810. Their children, baptised in Shepshed, included: Ann (1812–28); Sarah (b.1815), who married Thomas Beresford in Leicestershire; Job (b.1817), also a stocking-maker in Hawick; Mary (b.1820), who married Alexander Mitchell in Melrose in 1841; Catherine (b.1823), who married John Gordon in Kelso in 1844; Martha (b.1825), who married stocking-maker James Harkness in Hawick in 1851; Jane (b.1827); Ann (again, b.c.1830), who married Peter Butler in Hawick in 1849 and died in Molong, New South Wales; and James (b.c.1832). He appears to have secondly married Margaret Halliday (from Lochmaben) in Hawick in 1854. Job (b.1817) son of Job, he was a stockingmaker like his father. He was born in Leicestershire and moved to Hawick as a child. He married Jane Scott in Hawick in 1842 and their children included Job (b.1843/4) and Elizabeth (b.1844/5). In 1856 he secondly married Ann Pringle, and with her had further children Robert (b.1857), Catherine (b.1861) and James (b.1863). The family were living at 12 Sandbed in 1861 (also written 'Gad' and 'Gedd').

Gadeni (gaw-de-nee) n. an ancient tribe that lived south of the Forth, including present-day Lothian and Tweeddale, according to Roman geographers. The central town is supposed to have been near Jedburgh, but has also fancifully been suggested to have been nearer to Hawick (e.g. at Chapelhill).

gadger (gaw-jur) n., arch. a gauger, exciseman – '...at the instance of Alexander Buchan, surveyor, gadger of the ale within the town of Hawick ...' [JW1713] (also gauger).

I hunted lovely Teviotdale. I even gaed as far as Kale ...’ [WP] (sometimes written ‘gade’; this is the past tense form, while gane is the past participle).

gaed awa (gād-a-waw) pp., adj., arch. died, dead, departed – ‘On the Sabbath before his death I got a message from him in homely phrase ‘that he would like to have a crack with me before he gaed awa’ [HAST1949].

gaein (gā-in) n., arch. going, act of leaving – ‘Thaye hae seen thy gaeings, O God;

een the gaeings o’ my God, my King, in the sanctuarie’ [HSR], ...preserfe me frae the violent man, wha hae determinet til owerthrow my gaein’s’ [HSR], pres. part., poet. going – ‘Oor lads they are gaeing mad, Oor lasses we grief they do piney’ [JoHa].

Gaelic (gaw-, gā-lik) n. language of northern Scotland, widespread until the middle of the 18th century, but never reaching as far south as Hawick. Nevertheless there are a number of local words of Gaelic influence. It is a Celtic language related to Irish Gaelic, Breton and Welsh, the latter being closest to the form of Northumbrian Celtic (also known as Brythonic) which was once spoken in the Borders.

Gaelic (gā-leek) n. unintelligible jargon, ‘Greek’ – ‘That’s Gaelic (ti me), = I don’t understand what you mean (or say)’ [GW] (also Gallic).

gaen (gān) pp., arch. gone – ‘Look at yer raggit bairns gaen yet unshod’ [JoHa], ... An’ tellt them. Some leugh, others thought him gaen mad’ [JoHa] ‘A faand the guid o that denner as suin as A’d gaen wui’d’ [ECS], ‘Oo’ve gaen wui the whole o thon bannih’ [ECS] (it is unclear whether this is from the verb ‘gaun’ or the verb ‘gie’).

gae owre (gā-ow-ur) v., poet. to be beyond, refrain – ‘Gae ower frae angir, an’ forsak wræth; wurpna thysel’ in onie wayes til do ill’ [HSR].

gaes (gāz) v., arch., poet. goes – ‘...that gaes doun sweitlie, garrin’ the lipps o’ thae that ar asleepe speek’ [HSR], ‘This life is but a shiftin’ scene The world gaes circlin’ roon’ [JT], ‘... ane o’ the lads ... at Minto Rocks cries – ‘There gaes oor signal!’ [BCM1881].

gae ’way (gā-wā) contr., arch. go away – ‘Walth canna souther a heart when it’s broken – Stay, then, my laddie, and dinna gae ’way’ [JoHa] ‘Gaw-way! g’way = go away!’ [ECS] (see also g’way and ’way).

gaff (gawf) v., arch. to talk loudly and merrily (noted by J. Jamieson).

gaffin (gaw-fin) adj., arch. light-headed, foolish, thoughtless, giddy (noted by J. Jamieson).

gaffol-land (gaw-fol-lawnd) n., arch. land liable to taxation, rented land (noted by J. Jamieson, but otherwise unknown).

ga’i (gaw’-i) contr. going to – ‘ir ee ga’i eat eet?’, ‘ee’ll ga’i jail yow’, ‘ir ee ga’i the picters the night’, ‘oo’re ga’i gaun onyway’ – ‘... ‘what way er ee ga’i gaun?’, ‘A’d be bad for gaun that way’ [IWL] (cf. heh’i, wa’i and we’i).

gaibie-lippit (gā-bee-li-pee', -pi') adj., arch. having a projecting under-lip, and hence a stupid expression.

gaible (gā-bul) v., arch. to gabble – ‘... An’ heard the gossips gaible owre their clatters fu’ o’ blame’ [JoHa].

gaif (gāf) v., arch. to give – ‘... and our Lord of the landis off the Hepe, gayffe heritabelle stat and possessioun off all the landis off the sayde Hepe ...’ [SB1431].

gainage (gā-neej) n., arch. the instruments of tillage, the lands held by base tenure (noted by J. Jamieson as an old Roxburghshire word).

gainer (gā-nur) n., arch. a gander, a stupid person – ‘Ye’ll maybe haud me but a cacklin’ gainer’ [JoHa], v. to wander, go about aimlessly.

gainit (gā-nee', -ni') pp., arch. gained – ‘... his richt han’ an’ his haly ærm heth gainet him the victerie’ [HSR], ‘... gif he sall hear thee, thou hest gainet thy brither’ [HSR].

gair (gār) adj., poet. greedy, covetous – ‘Hark! how gair Cumclutch, ’mid his satellites, Wi’ brazen lungs and trumpet-roaring throat’ [JoHa] (also ‘gare’).

gair (gār) n., arch. a strip of green grass on a hillside, patch of fertile land among heather or barren land, hence a strip in general – ‘Gair, Gare. The term is used to denote any thing resembling a strip or streak; as, a blue gair in a clouded sky, (synon. bore,) a red gair in a clear sky, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (the word survives in some place names, such as ‘Cat Gair’ in the upper Borthwick).

Gair (gār) n. former farmstead in the Borthwick valley, mentioned in records from the mid-17th century. It lay in the part of Robertson that was previously in Hawick Parish, on the south side of the valley, probably near Todshawhaugh. John Pringle was recorded there in 1755 and Robert Scott in 1769 (probably related to the Scots for a strip of green on a hillside; it is ‘Gare’ in 1769).

Gair (gār) n. farm by the Tima Water in the Ettrick Forest. The house was built around 1760. Andrew Laidlaw was tenant there in the mid-18th century and Walter Laidlaw later in the 18th century.

gaird see guaird

gairden (gār-din, -deen) n. a garden – ‘Ane gairden fenset in is my tittie, my spuuse ...’ [HSR], ‘My! Sic a floors ee heh in eer gairdeen’ [ECS], ‘... And the blackies whusslin owre a’ the braes and gairdens’ [DH], ‘somebody telt Wullie there wuz a big Hogmanay pairty in the gairdens at Princes St.’ [JCo], ‘... That it ended in ablow the swing In the gairden at Wudend’ [IWL], v. to garden (also sometimes ‘gairdeen’).

gairdener (gār-din-nur) n. a gardener – ‘... she’s still an active gairdener, though now approachin 90’ [IWL] (also written ‘gaird’ner’).

gairdener’s gonial (gār-di-nurz-go-nee-ul) n., arch. a gardener’s apprentice (cf. gonial).

Gairdener’s Haughs (gār-di-nurz-hawchs) n. Gardener’s Haughs, a former name for the Playing Fields off Buccleuch Road. This is recorded in a boundary dispute of the late 18th century between Elliot of Langlands and the Duke of Buccleuch (also written ‘Gardenershaugh’).

gairdenin (gār-de-nin) n. gardening – ‘Hab says it’s a game played against the wather, the same as gairdenin ...’ [DH].

Gairden Knowe Park (gār-din-now-pawrk) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Garden Know Park’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

gairden-rake (gār-din-, -deen-rāk) n. a garden rake – ‘Examples of raik, rake, to raik, to rake, etc.: – Gairdeen-raik, muck-raik, beier-raik’ [ECS].

Gairdner (gārd-nur) n. (Gardner) George (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the George, son of James, baptised in Hawick in 1716. His wife was Mary Porteous (or ‘Partis’) and their children included: Walter (b.1742); James (b.1743); Janet (b.1744); George (b.1746); Andrew (b.1756); Mary (b.1758); Isabel (b.1762); and Margaret (b.1765). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie William Tudhope and mason Andrew Turnbull, in 1744 were glover John Scott and merchant William Oliver, and in 1762 were tanner John Elliot and Church Officer Alexander Bunyan. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Rae and Margaret Gardner (perhaps his sister) and another in 1760 for shoemaker James Porteous. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Charles Scott and his wife Janet Porteous (who may have been his sister-in-law). He may be the shoemaker of that name who witnessed a baptism in 1786 for fellow shoemaker John Wiens. Gideon (d.1702) gardener in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1701 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Scott, along with miller James Paterson. He married Margaret Davidson and their children included: James (b.1686). Probably the same Gideon later married Margaret Paterson (unless there is an error in surnames and there was only one wife). Their children included: Margaret (b.1700), who in 1719 married William Turnbull, weaver near the Westport; and Isobel (b.1702). The witnesses in 1700 were merchant George Martin and glover John Harrt. The baptism in 1702 was posthumous, with James Paterson, the child's uncle, making 'faith for her education'; the witnesses included Robert Thomson in Newmill and James Scott 'Ormiston'. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1721 for merchant John Johnston in Hawick and in 1723 for workman James Dickson. In 1713 he married Isobel Renwick. Their children included: John (b.1714); George (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); and Mary (b.1722). In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Johnston in Hawick. The witnesses in 1718 were Thomas Hardie and David Miller and in 1722 were gardener John (surely a relative) and Beadle John Scott. He may be the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1730, 1733 and 1736 (along with John) for Robert Renwick, who lived at the Sandbed (and may have been related to his wife). John (17th C.) resident of 'oest the water' (i.e. west of the Slitrig) on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is probably the gardener listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the gardener who witnessed baptisms for gardener Thomas Boyd in 1699, George Andrew (servant to Douglas of Cavers), Robert (Lord) Oliver in 1704 and for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1706. He is probably the John who, along with William (perhaps his brother or son) witnessed a baptism in 1709 for carrier John Hardie. He may be the John who was fined £10 in 1691 because he tried to run away down the Tolbooth stairs when cited by the Bailies. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, probably the second son of John who got married in 1716. In 1718 he was 'in Sandbed' when he and flesher Robert Renwick (also at the Sandbed) witnessed a baptism for innkeeper Adam Richardson. He may also be the John 'Gardner' (apparently written as 'Glendinnen' in one record) who witnessed a baptism in 1718 for flesher George Renwick. He was living at the Sandbed in 1721. In 1730 and 1736 (along with James) he witnessed baptisms for Robert Renwick, who also lived at the Sandbed. He married Isobel Wilson (or 'Wilkison') in 1716; he was recorded as 2nd son to John in Wilton Parish and she was servant to Mr. James Innes.

Their children included: John (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1717), baptised in Hawick; and James (b.1719), Janet (b.1721) and Isobel (b.1723), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1721 were another John and William Gardner (who were surely relatives). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at the Sandbed in 1725. He appears to be distinct from the John who was married to Isobel Wilkie and lived at the Sandbed at the same time (and whose child's baptism he witnessed in 1721). He married Mary Simpson in 1721, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: an unnamed child (b.1723); and Walter (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. John Waldie (19th/20th C.) farm steward for the Earl of Minto at Hassendeanbank. In 1892 he married Helen Dickson, daughter of William Elliot and Christina Pow. His son Andrew (born before their marriage) took over as farm steward after him. The other children emigrated and were William, Christina Elliot, John, Betsy Waldie, Mary Helen McCreddie and James ('Jim'). Robert (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was recorded at the Sandbed in 1697. He married Agnes Scott and their children, born in Wilton, included: William (b.1697); and Agnes (b.1699), who married gardener Walter Scott in 1722. The witnesses in 1697 were John and Robert Scott. William (17th/18th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as a gardener among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for John Tait (whose wife may have been a relative) in 1696. He could be the William, married to Agnes Scott, whose son Robert was born in Wilton in 1697. He is probably the gardener who witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine, younger, in 1703, 1711 and 1713. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for fellow gardener John Vair and in 1717 another for James Richardson. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isobell Morton in Hawick in 1702. Their children included Agnes (b.1705), with witnesses Michael Bridges and Adam Jardine. William (b.1683) born in Hawick, son of Robert. He may be the William who, along with John (perhaps his brother) witnessed a baptism in 1709 for carrier John Hardie. He is probably the merchant who witnessed baptisms in 1710 for carrier David Wilson and in 1712 for carrier John Hardie. He is probably the merchant William who was elected as Cornet in 1710;

if so he cannot be the William who married Isobell Morton in Hawick in 1702, but could be the William who married Agnes Aitkin in August of 1710. Their children included: Margaret (b.1711); William (b.1713); and John (b.1716). He is probably the William, merchant of Hawick recorded in 1721 when his servant Thomas Weddell was rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath (spelled ‘Gardiner’, ‘Gardner’, ‘Garner’ and variants).

Gairie Gill (gā-ree-gil) n. stream that rises fairly close to the Nine Stane Rig and runs south to join the Roughley Burn.

gaizlin (gāz-lin) n., arch. a gosling.

Gala (gaw-lu, gaw-la, gaw-li) n. Galashiels, the traditional rival town of Hawick. It is built in the narrow valley of the Gala Water near the confluence with the Tweed on the A7 and a former station on the Waverley Line. It was known as a producer of a kind of coarse grey (or sometimes blue) cloth in the 17th and 18th centuries, and there were early waulk mills there, used by weavers throughout the district. The town developed along with the textile industry, and the Scottish College of Textiles is here, part of Heriot-Watt University since 1998. The Braw Lad’s Gathering in June celebrates the town’s 1599 charter and was established as long ago as 1930. It includes a ride to the Raid Stane, where supposedly some English soldiers were killed while picking plums in 1337, an event also commemorated on the town’s coat of arms. The betrothal of Margaret Tudor to James IV occurred at the Market Cross in 1503. The lands were owned by the Crown in the early 16th century. If the town has a jewel it is Old Gala House, with parts dating from 1583. Now a museum, it was the former home of the Lairds of Galashiels, who were first Pringles and then Scotts. The Scotts of Gala burial aisle dates from 1636, although both the original church and the gothic replacement were demolished. New Gala House was home to ‘St. Trinian’s’ School during WWII, but was also demolished. The ‘Hunters’ Haa’ was an old peel tower that stood till the late 18th century, while the town’s Tolbooth was demolished in 1880. The Cornmill Fountain is a converted mill lade. The ‘Border Reiver’ equestrian statue is by Thomas Clapperton, a Gala native, outside the 1867 Burgh Chambers, which have an imposing clock tower by Robert Lorimer (added 1924–27). The main road from Hawick to Edinburgh only went through Gala from 1818, previously being via Fairnielee and Clovenfords. The town did not become a municipal burgh until 1864, although it had possessed burgh of barony status since 1599. The origin of the rivalry with Hawick is a mystery, but dates back at least to the time of the Carterhaugh Baa, when the Gala men switched sides. Population (1991) 13,753. It is said that if Gala didn’t exist, then Hawick and Selkirk folk would have invented it in order to have something to agree on – ‘’Bout forest trees let Gala brag, We carena what belang them’ [JT], ‘...The Hawick team tae play fower games And oo’ve picked twae Gala reserves’ [AY] (note that the pronunciation of the final vowel sound can vary, and hence it is colloquially spelled ‘Gali’ etc.; the meaning of the name is ‘huts on the Gala Water’; Teries often talk about going ‘ower ti Gala’ rather than using another preposition; it is ‘Galowaschelis’ in 1456, ‘Galloschelis’ in 1512 1525 and 1549, ‘Galloscheillis’ in 1574, ‘Gallowshiellis’ in 1598, ‘Gallascheilles’ in 1633 and ‘Gallowschiells’ in 1651).

the Gala Bell (thu-gaw-lu-bel) n. former bell from Gala that for some time hung in the Bell House at Watson’s Dangerfield Mills in Hawick. The bell bears the inscription ‘JOHN MEIKLE, FECIT, EDINBURGH: FOR GALASHIELS, 1695’ and although it was rumoured to be from the Kirk in Gala, was probably actually from the Tolbooth there. After a new building was constructed, the bell lay unwanted in a builder’s yard, where John Paterson (manager at Watson’s) brought it to Hawick to install as the factory bell at Dangerfield Mills. It was rung in celebration in 1859 when word was received in Hawick about the extension of the Waverley Line to Carlisle. At the New Year’s celebrations in 1861, James Goodfellow read ‘Address to the Factory Bell’. It was the subject of banter in the local press in the 1880s, with a humorous suggestion that Gala men should liberate it from Hawick! When exactly it returned to Gala is unknown, but the bell now resides in Old Gala House.

Galabrae (gaw-lu-brā) n. home of Peter Laidlaw in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This may either be ‘Galalaw Braefit’ or one of the houses at Howdenburn.

Gala Law (gaw-lu-law) n. hill on the northern outskirts of Hawick, 221 m high, with a white concrete triangulation point, and also the name for the surrounding area. Foxhounds used to meet there in the mid-19th century. The hillside was set on fire to commemorate victory in the Crimean war in 1856 and took decades to recover. Whins later took over the hill. Behind is the Galalaw Business Park – ‘For I like auld Hawick Wi’ a’ her kindly folk Frae Galalaw tae Haggisha’ And auld St. Mary’s Clock’ [RMC], ‘Gala Law ablaze wi’ colour Wi’ golden broom and whins ...’ [AY] (the origin is possibly from Old English for ‘gallows hill’, like the similar names near Biggar, Kelso and Gullane, and certainly having no connection with Galashiels; it seems an unlikely place for a public gallows to be situated, although it is possible that it served this purpose in the old Barony of Chamberlain Newton).

Galalaw (gaw-lu-law) n. farm above Guthrie Drive, on the slopes of Gala Law. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts from at least 1494 until 1762. In 1494 James Scott of Kirkurd granted the lands to his son David (later of Hassendean); at that time it was valued at 6 merks annually, and was held for the annual payment of 3 silver pennies at the Feast of the Pentecost, if asked. David was further recorded in 1507/8 and 1510. John Scott of Hassendean owned the lands in 1528/9. In 1534 Gavin Elliot sold the 40-shilling lands of ‘Neder Gallelaw’ to William Scott, the sealing of the letter of reversion being done at Hassendean Kirk. James Renwick was tenant there in 1628. It is probably the land (valued at £156) owned by a Scott (first name not recorded) lifrenter of Newton in 1643. William Scott of Galalaw paid tax on £156 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1681. The land there was part of Hassendean Parish until being assigned to Wilton in 1690. Tax was paid on 5 hearths in 1694 for ‘Gallalaw his hous and cottars’. William Turnbull was there in 1697, Robert Elliot in 1704, John Easton in 1723, Walter Veitch in 1724, Walter Riddell in 1732, Thomas Scott in 1744, John Scott in 1746, Adam Laidlaw in 1747 and Thomas Scott in 1751. Alexander Scott of Galalaw is recorded in 1718. Alexander and Robert Pott were owners in 1788. James Aitkin is recorded there in 1797, when he owned 3 horses. George Aitkin was a servant there in 1799 and John Fraiter and William Hall in 1801. The lands (or at least part of the lands) were owned by William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’ when he died in 1808; in his will they were described as ‘the six merks lands of Galalaw ... lying within the old parish of Hassendean now annexed to the Parish of Wilton, Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Shire of Roxburgh. Robert Pott was recorded as owner in 1811, when it was valued at £156. Robert Turnbull was owner from at least 1821 and later sold a small part to Chisholme of Stirches. In 1851 Robert Turnbull farmed 150 acres there and James Elliot farmed 250 acres. The hill has been taken over by whins and has a triangulation pillar on top (it is ‘Gallowlaw’ in 1494, ‘Gallolau’ in 1501, ‘Gallolaw’ in 1507/8 and 1510, ‘Gallowlaw’ in 1511 and 1581, ‘Gallolaw’ in 1528/9, ‘Gallalaw’ in 1663 and 1681, ‘Gallow Law’ and ‘Gallalau’ in 1690, ‘Gallalaw’ in 1718 and 1770, ‘Galolaw’ in 1786 and ‘Gallawlaw’ in 1821; the origin may related to ‘gallows’, as for similarly named places elsewhere, although there is no known connection to hangings).

Galalaw Braefit (gaw-lu-law-brā-fi) n. former farmstead at the foot of Galalaw hill, possibly also the same as ‘Galabrae’. James Turnbull was there in 1841.

Galalaw Business Park (gaw-lu-law-biz-nis-pawrk) n. industrial park near Galalaw, developed in the early 1990s through funding by Scottish Enterprise. Largely empty a decade later, it received further funding and expansion in 2017 and 2021.

Galalaw Cottages (gaw-lu-law-ko’-ee-jeez) n. Cottages near Galalaw farm ??.

Galalaw Knowes (gaw-lu-law-nowz) n. former alternative name for the Miller’s Knowes (the origin is probably the same as for ‘Gala Law’, but there is no obvious relation between them).

Galalaw Road (gaw-lu-law-rōd) n. street in the Burnfoot area, named after the hill on the other side of the A7.

Galalean (gaw-lu-lee-in) n. someone from the town of Galashiels, not to be confused with ‘Galilean’ or ‘Galileean’, both of which suggest a certain nobility.

Galashiels (gaw-lu-sheelz) n. full name of Gala, an unattractive town that has to be passed through on the A7 to Edinburgh (in early records it is ‘Gallow-shiels’ etc.).

Galashiels grey (gaw-lu-sheelz-grā) n. course, grey cloth, formerly manufactured in Galashiels – ‘It is interesting to find him next year writing to a business correspondent in the ‘old country’ to send ‘Galacheils Gray at 6d or 7d per ell, to be here in September or October for winter only’ [HAST1921] (the cloth was probably made from a combination of white wool and black wool; it is recorded in 1736 that ‘at Gallowshiels are made a few coarse Kerseys, called Gallowshiels Grays, for Home-consumption’).

Gala Witter (gaw-lu-wi’-ur) n. Gala Water, a river that joins the Tweed from the north-west at Galashiels. The river is about 21 miles long. The Waverley Line crossed it no less than 15 times, with most of the bridges still existing – ‘Tho’ the Esk has pearly sprays, And the Gala windin’ ways; The’re some bonnie banks and braes Aboot Hawick’ [TK] (it is ‘Galu’ in 1268).

Galbraith (gawl-brāth) n. John G. (19th/20th C.) native of Hawick, he moved to Glasgow and wrote the romantic rieving book ‘Rough-Riding Scots’ in 1910. Michael John priest at S.S. Mary and David from 2008. He was previously assistant at St. John the Baptist in Corstorphine. Rev. Robert (1866–1937) educated at Glasgow University, he was licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1891. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk for a few months in 1892. He was then assistant at Linlithgow, ordained at Buckie in 1898 and was later minister of Fordoun. William (16th/17th C.) mentioned as minister of Bedrule in 1599, having previously been at Penicuik. He had a son called John.

gale (gāl) n., arch. collective noun for geese – ‘A gale of geese, a flock of geese, Teviotd. This is said to be a very ancient phrase’ [JoJ].

Galfrid (gal-frid) n. recorded as Vicar of Southdean in 1260. Galfrid or Galfridus was the latinised form of Jeffrey.

Gali see Gala

Gall (gawl) n. George (19th/20th C.) joiner in Hawick. He married Margaret, daughter of tailor John Riddle; she died in 1896, aged 39. Their son Robert was a collector with the Gas Company in Hawick.

Gallaslande (gaw-lis-lawnd) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of Clement Crozier, along with ‘Hoble Knowes’ (probably Hummelknowes). It seems likely that this is the same place as Hilliesland.

gallayniel (gaw-lā-neel) n., arch. a big, glutinous, ruthless man – ‘Wae be to them for a pack o’ greedy gallayniels – they haena the mence of a miller’s yaud’ [ES] (noted in Roxburghshire by J. Jamieson).

Gallic (gaw-leek) n. unintelligible speech (also Gaelic).

Gallipoli (gaw-li-po-lee) n. Turkish peninsula that was the site of a disastrous military campaign of 1915. The 1st Battalion K.O.S.B. were there from the beginning, late April 1915, with the 1/4th K.O.S.B. (Territorials) arriving in June. Many local soldiers of the 1/4th K.O.S.B. were involved in a particular offensive on 12th July; with the benefit of hindsight it is clear that many strategic mistakes were made, in particular the instructions to take the 3rd Turkish trench led to confusion when the trench turned out not to exist, and the soldiers were caught in fire from all sides when they overshot and then tried to turn back. More than 80 men from Hawick and district lost their lives on that day, most remaining under the fields where they fell. The whole campaign was a disaster, with the peninsula with over 120 local men buried or lost there. The peninsular was evacuated by January 1916 after the futility of the whole military campaign became clear to the commanders. A memorial wreath has been laid at the Horse by the Callants Club (first in 1916, then annually from 1930) 'In remembrance of the Hawick Territorials of the 1/4th Kings Own Scottish Borderers who fell bravely charging the Turkish trenches, Gallipoli, 12th July 1915. The ancient spirit of our fathers hath not gone.' A commemoration at the War Memorial was later added to the events to mark that day. In 1926 several locals were able to travel to visit the place where their loved ones had fallen, and a marble plaque from the town was installed at the Helles Memorial. In 1933 the 1/4th K.O.S.B. Gallipoli Comrades Association was formed, based in Hawick and holding an annual dinner on 12th July. The Callants' Club raised money to send 6 veterans back for the 50th anniversary; a special memorial service was held in Trinity Church and 2 cypress trees, grown from Gallipoli seeds were planted at either side of the War Memorial (although they succumbed to the Scottish winter). In 1974 the Callants' Club took over the financial responsibility of the 12th July commemoration and an oak tree was planted to replace the cedars. The last Comrade died in 1992, and thereafter the Callants' Club have continued to lay wreaths at the Horse and the War Memorial. To mark the centenary, a group of 20 Teries visited the peninsula, marking the resting places of all known local men there – 'A tear dims my eye as I view the memorial, Head bowed, I remember how callants like me Laid down their lives to ensure us our freedom And lie now at Ypres and Gallipoli' [IWL].

gallivant (ga-li-van) v. to go about idly (particularly noted in Teviotdale by J. Jamieson, suggesting the local usage may be more common than in standard English).

the Gallopin Chairger (thu-gaw-lo-pin-chār-jur) n. nickname for James Hislop, also known as the 'Gallopin' Cadger' – 'Black Andra' and the Birsin' Badger, Tammy Robertson, Deevil Bell; The Blue Laird and the Gallopin' Cadger, Baillie Birsleton and the Mell' [HI].

the Gallops (thu-gaw-lo-ps) n. name for a group of houses beuilt at Hassendeanbank after the old mill pond was filled in in the 1970s.

Galloway (ga-lō-wā) n. Rev. Alexander (1847–1926) born in Tillicoultry, son of William and Isabella Dawson. He received his B.D. from Edinburgh University in 1872, was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery that year and became assistant at Bowden, Lasswade and St. Mary's, Partick. In 1876 he became minister at Milton of Balgonie and was admitted as assistant and successor to Minto Kirk in 1878, taking over fully from Rev. J.P. Macmorland in 1893. He was Lecturer on Church Music to the Divinity Students of the Scottish Universities 1912–14. In 1885 he married Margaret Rankin, daughter of William Smith, minister of Douglas. Their children were: William G., merchant in Japan, died in New York 1936; Isabella Dawson; Elizabeth Eleanor; and Alexander, Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B., later Instructor at Camberley Staff College. He was one of the compilers of the 'Scottish Hymnal' (1885), 'The Scottish Anthem Book' (1892), 'The Church Hymnary' (1898) and the 'Scottish Mission Hymnbook' (1912), as well as helping with 'Hymns, Ancient and Modern' (1889). Sir Alexander (1895–1977) born at Minto manse, youngest child of Rev. Alexander. He was educated on the Isle of Man, and volunteered when war broke out in 1914, joining the Cameronians, then seeing active service with the K.O.S.B. at Gallipoli, being one of the last to leave the Peninsula. He received the M.C. in 1918. He remained in the army after WWI, eventually becoming an instructor at Camberley Staff College, then commanding the 1st Cameronians and the Staff College at Haifa. He served as chief staff officer for the 8th Army in Egypt. He then had a series of posts, including after WWII being Commander-in-Chief of British forces in Austria. He was knighted in 1949, retired in 1950 and died at Norham, Northumberland. He married Dorothy Hadden, daughter of Frank Hadden White from Northumberland, and they had 3 sons. William (19th/20th C.) manufacturer of William Galloway & Sons. He had a boiler-house and dyeworks built on Commercial Road in 1888. This lay opposite the Victoria Laundry and was later occupied by Renwick's. His firm only occupied this building for about 5 years.

the Gallops (thu-gaw-lups) n. name for relatively new houses near Hassendeanbank. They were built on the pond for the former water wheel, which was filled in in the 1970s. The name comes from the popular name for some nearby fields.

galloway (ga-lō-wā) n. a small, study breed of horse, originally from Galloway, often used as a pack animal – '... a party of Tynedale men passed the window in tattered clothes, driving lean galloways laden with coals' [WSB].

the Galloway Road (thu-ga-lō-wā-rōd) n. former name for the road used for carrying coal from the Kielder area to Hawick, i.e. the 'Note o the Gate' or B6357. The name came from the Galloway ponies that were used to make the trips.

Gall Sike (gawl-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising to the south of Dykecrofts farm and running roughly north-west to join Whithaugh Burn. The original house on Hillhouse farm appears to be shown on this stream on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch lands.

gallus (ga-lus) adj., poet. bold, daring, self-confident, rash, reckless – '... Ready to roar away in the gloaming Wi' gallus young lads that think lightly o' scaith' [DH], '... Airchie o' the Reuch Sike, gallus auld Airchie, The lang nicht afore him, now' [DH].

galore (ga-lōr) n., poet. plenty, superabundance – 'An' he gæfe thame galore for thair greed ...' [HSR].

Galoshins (ga-lō-shinz) n. traditional folk play, common in many parts of Scotland, a variant of the 'resurrection' drama found in many parts of Britain (e.g. in England, where it is an example of a 'mummers play'). The words of the play were passed down orally, and involve a hero called 'Galoshin', sometimes St. George, a doctor, and other characters. The height of popularity may have been the mid-19th century. It was typically performed for money by groups of 'guisers', usually young boys, visiting inns or private houses. Its timing was connected with either Halloween or Hogmanay (like other 'guising'). It may be that this is the longest surviving example of a richer tradition dating back to Mediæval times. It is unclear how prevalent this play was in the Hawick area, but Robert Murray wrote an article (published in 1903) about how a version was introduced to Hawick by a family of stocking-makers from Ancrum called Turnbull. There were still some recollections in the early 21st century, from families connected to Bowden and Bonchester – 'Here comes in Galoshuns. Galoshuns is my name; My sword and pistol by my side, I hope to win the game' [RM].

galt (gawlt) n., arch. a castrated boar (noted by J. Jamieson as a Roxburghshire word, but perhaps in error).

Galt (gawlt) n. former name for a town in Ontario, Canada, which was a common destination for Hawick emigrants in the 19th century. The settlement in an area along the Grand River was promoted by William Dickson, who sold lots to predominantly Scottish settlers. The town was originally called Shade's Mill and was renamed Galt in 1825, after John Galt, Scottish novelist and Commissioner of the Canada Company. The town grew as an agricultural hub, with industry developing from the 1830s and the town becoming known as 'the Manchester of Canada'. It was said that in the late 19th century it was a place where 'broader Scotch is spoken than in Galashiels, yet only five per cent. of the inhabitants are native born Scots'. Originally the largest town in the area, it was eventually eclipsed by Berlin, which was later renamed Kitchener. The city of Galt continued to exist as a separate entity until 1973, when it became part of the new city of Cambridge, adjacent to Waterloo. Many street names in the area reveal the early Scottish influence. Local families with connections to this area include Aitkin, Amos, Cavers, Dryden, Kersel, Lamb, Lee (including James Paris Lee), Murray, Scott and Spalding.

game (gām) n., arch. sport, amusement – '... none did resort to his house for game but such as were of a good age' [PR1724].

game (gām) adj., arch. lame – 'A game leg, a leg hurt by accident, so as to make the person lame, Roxb.; also Northumb.' [JoJ] (compare the English 'gammy').

Gamel (ga-mel) n. clerk of the 12th century, during the reign of David I. With the permission of his sons Osulf and Ughtred, he granted the lands of 'Caverum' to Jedburgh Abbey probably around 1138. This gift was confirmed in charters by Earl Henry and by King William (in the period 1165–70), and reconfirmed in 1229. This was probably part of the Barony of Cavers (although Cavers Carre is a possibility).

the Games (thu-gāmz) n. the Common Riding Games, held at Volunteer Park, also sometimes called 'the Sports'. Amateur games, now long abandoned, were held on the Friday, with professional games on the Saturday, now moved to the Sunday. Until the early 19th century the Games were entirely amateur, with professional sportsmen only appearing later. In earlier times there was less of a distinction between the Games and the Races. In the 19th century there were Games on the Friday afternoon (after the Dinner) and on the Saturday morning, which were held at the Common Haugh, and included sprints and middle-distance running, hurdles, walking, jumping of several varieties, quoiting, shot-putt, wrestling, Highland dancing and costume contests. There were also special races for boys and for old men. Professional cycling races were a feature in the very late 1800s. They were held on the Saturday morning at the Haugh from about 1855–67 and moved to the afternoon in 1868. The ‘Shows’ would also accompany the Games on the Haugh, and this must have been true from early times. The Games were moved to the Volunteer in 1893. The Amateur and Professional Games were switched back and forth between the Friday and Saturday in the early 20th century. The Amateur Games ending up on the Friday by 1913 and were discontinued in 1961. The Cornet stopped attending the Saturday Games from 1964. It became a tradition for the ‘Big Fower’ to engage in a pillow-fight balanced on a beam, and for this to take place at the Games. The Games were held on the Saturday before Common Riding week in 2005.

Gamescleuch (gāmz-klooch) n. ruined 16th century tower near Ettrick village, on the opposite side of the valley to Thirlestane. It is said to have been built for Simon Scott (2nd son of Sir John of Thirlestane), who may have been poisoned by his step-mother on the eve of his wedding. The lands there were also referred to as Thornhill and Ettrickside and were formerly referred to as a steading of Mount Common. They were once Crown property, in the King’s hands in the 1480s, but granted to Adam Scott in 1490 ‘without grassum owing to its sterility’, and again in 1492. Alexander Lauder was recorded there in 1502. The lands were again assigned to Adam Scott of Tushielaw in 1510. William Scott in Sundhope was tenant in 1541, paying £14. William Scott in Hartwoodmyres assigned his steading there (‘callit Eittriksyde’) to his son John, acknowledging an arrangement already made with Simon Scott in Thirlestane; the superior at that time was William Cranston of that Ilk. They were held by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1573, but shortly afterwards passed to the Scotts of Tushielaw and then back again, following a ‘decreit arbitrall’ by Sir Walter of Braxholme in 1603. ‘Mr’ Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch was Laird in the 1590s. The dispute over these lands grew into a feud between the Thirlestane and Tushielaw branches. The murder of Walter Scott of Gamescleuch by John Scott of Tushielaw in 1609 may have been the inspiration for the ‘Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. The lands were also known as ‘Thorniehill’, and in 1621 and 1667 were described having an ‘outset called Eittriksyd’. James Easton was there in 1716 when he had a child baptised in Robertson and Alexander Laidlaw was herd there in 1726. James and Thomas Dodds were there in 1784 and James Tod in 1791. It seems that an exchange of land was made in about 1812 with the farm of Annelshope. There is now a caravan site there – ‘Gae warn the lads of Thirlstone, Gamescleugh, and Newburgh fair, With Tushielaw, and Midgehope, in armour to appear’ [WSB], ‘When the magic wing of the midnight hour Stoops low to the worn old Gamescleuch walls ...’ [WHO] (it is ‘Gammilliscleuch’ in 1479, ‘Gamliscleuch’ in 1486, ‘Gilmynscleuch’ in 1490, ‘Gammylliscleuch’ and ‘Gemmyscleucht’ in 1492, ‘gammillischluch’ in 1502, ‘Gamilliscleuch’ in 1510, ‘Gammiscleuch’ in 1541, ‘Gammilsclucht’ in 1562, ‘Gemmillsheuch’ in 1573, ‘Gamiscleucht’ in 1579/80, ‘Gemyllisclleich’ and ‘Gammescleucht’ in 1581, ‘Gammiscleucht’ in 1585, ‘Galmelliscleuch’ in 1591/2, ‘Gammilsheuche’ in 1592, ‘Gemmilliscleuch’ in 1593, ‘Gilmuirsclucht’ in 1597/8, ‘Glemmilsclucht’ in 1602, ‘Gemilsclucht’ in 1603, ‘Gamellsclucht’ in 1605, ‘Gemmilsclucht’ in 1608, ‘Gemmilscluchte’ in 1621, ‘Gemmeltsclucht’ in 1667 and ‘Gamescleugh’ in 1784; it is marked ‘Gemmillsclucht’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; not to be confused with Gilmansclucht, also on Ettrick Water).

gammonts (gaw-monts) n., pl., arch. the feet of an animal, particular the pig (also ‘gammons’; noted by J. Jamieson).

gamp (gawmp) n., arch. mouth, throat – ‘Shut eer gamp!’ [GW], v., arch. to gape, eat voraciously, swallow greedily, gulp – ‘Gaump. Expl. ‘to sup very greedily, as if in danger of swallowing the spoon’, Roxburgh’ [JoJ], ‘Gamp it doon’ [GW] (also written ‘gaump’).

gamphrel (gawm-frul) n., arch., poet. a foolish person – ‘Heigh me! is thus the gamfrel gane? What will they yet come to O’ [HSR] (noted by J. Jamieson as a Roxburghshire word; cf. gomeril).

gampy (gawm-pee) adj., arch. gaping, wide open, excessively roomy – ‘Oors is sic a gampy kirk it’s no easy ti heat or fill’ [GW], ‘What a different shapes ... Jethart Casle saw ... Did the deed-raap soond throwe its gampy ends, A wunder, i the nicht efter guid King Alisaunder’s waddeen-foy?’ [ECS].

Gandiesknowe (gawn-deez-now) n. hill to the south of the ‘Hill Road to Robertson’.

Gandon (gawn-din) n. John (d.bef. 1376) cleric connected with Cavers Parish in 1372. His name is given in 1376 as ‘Ganon’ when Matthew Glendonwyn was gifted Cavers after his death.

gane (gān) pp., arch. gone – ‘...eitten by his guids and geir in harvest gane ane yeir ...’ [BR1642], ‘John Scott, Beddell, having gane to the Fare of Selkirk ...and returned not until ye Monday nixt ...’ [PR1720], ‘But now, alas! the days are gane, Aye, fled ne’er to return again’ [JoHa], ‘Ye’re a’ gane mad, the like I ne’er yet saw ...’ [JoHa], ‘...Had some been here that now are gane, Nane daured o’ me to touch a stane’ [AD], ‘Ilk ane o’ thame is gane bak ...’ [HSR], ‘Is his mercie foraye cleen gane?’ [HSR], ‘My grannie’s gane, her cat an’ a’!’ [JJ], ‘...And what is gane forgot’ [JEDM], ‘Just a snatched kiss and a heart’nin’ smile, and the echoing hooves are gane’ [JYH], ‘... Garfield Street (gawr-feeld-stree') n. housing south-east of the High Street, built in 1882. There was a grocer's shop at the corner with Lothian Street, run by Madge & Bell Elliot in the mid-1900s. The houses were demolished in 1977 to make way for a car park, with only part of a factory remaining. Note that on the west side of the street the addresses of the bottom houses were Lothian Street, while the upstairs ones were Garfield Street. It was named after U.S. President James Garfield, who was assassinated in 1881, causing sympathetic feelings across the Atlantic.

Garland (gawr-lind) n. David (b.c.1815) Hawick character of the mid-1800s. He married Mary Haig in Hawick in 1837. He worked as a stocking-maker, living at Kirkton in 1841 and appears to be deceased 10 years later, when his family lived at the Loan. His children included David, Janet and Agnes – 'Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van' [HI].

Garlawcleuch (gawr-law-klooch) n. former name for lands near Blackhouse in the Yarrow valley. They were Crown lands leased along with Blackhouse from at least 1456 until 1502. The lease was held by James Alemoor of that Ilk in 1479, James Oliver and his son in 1488, then Robert, Lord Lyle and then again the family of Alemoor of that Ilk. Patrick Alemoor was recorded there in 1494/5. The land was feued by David Pringle to James Stewart of Traquair in 1512. William Stewart was tenant in 1541 (spelled 'Gairlacleuch', 'Garlacleuch', 'Garlacleuch', 'Garlawcleuch', 'Garriochcluch', etc.).

Garnet (gar-ni') n. David (18th C.) groom at Minto in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot.

the Garrison (thu-gaw-ree-sin) n. popular name for a former tenement at the corner of the Howegate and Silver Street. 'Hab o' Hawick' was supposed to have lived there in the 16th century. It was a 3-storey building, pended on the ground floor and with a corner turnpike stair. It was demolished in about 1799, and was apparently so well built that it had to be undermined and fell into a mass that blocked the street. The site was rebuilt in 1801 and was later the location for a printer's, a post office, a library and a shop.

garron-nail (gaw-rin-nāl) n., arch. a large nail – '...with eighteen garron nails for sarking and sclating the house of Woelie' [GT] (from Old Scots 'garron', a beam).

Garthside (gawrth-sīd) n. farm just to the east of Denholm. An ancient burial cist was discovered near here in 1902 (perhaps just across the A698), consisting of several red freestone slabs containing a few pieces of bone.

gas (gas) n. Hawick's gas lighting first appeared on the High Street in 1831, being the first among Border towns (and replacing the 60 oil lamps of 1813). The lighting ceremony was celebrated with a banquet. Electric lighting arrived in the early 20th century and one of the last lamps (from Elm Grove) is preserved in the Museum. Hawick Gaslight Company started in 1830 on part of the old Under Haugh (now Commercial Road), moving to Mansfield Road around 1882. In the early years the company was run by a manager with a single assistant. The manager's house was formerly at the other side of the ford at the foot of Walter's Wynd. The company also had a showroom at 66 High Street. Nationalised as part of Scottish Gas in 1948, the main works were dismantled in 1968 after conversion from coal gas to natural gas in 1964. The town was converted around 1970, with new pipes etc., to use the North Sea supply. However, the gasometers on Mansfield Road continued to be used as holders for the high pressure gas delivered from Granton in the Lothians.

Gascoin (gas-koin) n. George (18th C.) listed as footman at Wilton Lodge in 1791–93, when he was working for Lord Napier. In 1794 and 1797 he was listed as footman and gamekeeper at Wilton Lodge; in 1797 he was recorded as 'William'. Helen (18th C.) housekeeper at Wilton Lodge in 1791, when she was working for Lord Napier. She may have been wife of George (also written 'Gascoing').

gash (gawsh) adj., poet. smart, shrewd – 'But see the wean a towmount aul', He looks baith gash, an' spruce, an' baul' And 'gins to try to gang' [JR].

the Gas Hoose (thu-gaws-hoos) n. the gas works, originally at the north end of Teviot Bridge from 1830, moving to Mansfield Road around 1882 – '...As we sailed from the Gas-hoose bar' [WE] (also sometimes hyphenated).

Gaskin (gas-kin) n. Benjamin Thomas of Tushielaw (d.1818) son of Col. Gaskin of the Barbados. In 1818 he married Anne Verona Simmons, who succeeded to the estates of her mother, Barbara Anderson. This included Tushielaw and Hislop. He may have taken the surname Anderson when gaining the lands, but died shortly after the marriage. His posthumously born son Benjamin was listed as 'Benjamin T.G. Anderson, Esq. of Tushielaw' in 1838, among the major landowners in Hawick Parish. His widow secondly married Rev. Thomas Gordon Torry.

Gass (gaws) n. Colin Windram (1953–) born in Gala, where he grew up and played for the rugby team in the 1970s. In 1981 he played for Hawick Trades and then for Hawick R.F.C. He was in the Greens side that won the championship 5 times in the 1980s. He also played for the South of Scotland and the Scotland B team. He lives in Selkirk. George (??–??) Burgh Treasurer and Callants' Club President 1930. He was also a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert's and organist there. William (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. His wife Ann Wilson died in 1811.

the Gas Works (thu-gaws-wurks) n. the gas works, near the present Burns Club from about 1830, moving to Mansfield Road from about 1882. The three gasometers there were familiar sights to generations of Teries – ‘... ‘Juist haud strecht doon bye the Gas Works, And ye’re there’, says Robbie Dye’ [DH].

gate (gā, gāt) v., arch. to get – ‘Aw’ll be hanged if aw gang a fit past yonder till aw gate a weetin’, onyway’ [WKN] (this is not a common form, cf. git and geet).

Gate Burn (gā’-burn) n. stream running in the area just beyond the Caa Knowe. It rises in several streamlets and runs in a roughly southwestern direction, joining the Thieveshole Sike and crossing the road at the Troutlawford before joining the Allan Water. Its course once formed part of the boundary of the old Common (it is probably named after ‘Southfieldgate’, a former farmstead near there).

gate end (gā’-end) n. part of town, neighbourhood, immediate surroundings of one’s residence – ‘git back ti yer ain gate end’, ‘A was in that gate-end, so A thowt A’d just drop in an sei ee’, ‘The whole gate-end kens = all the neighbours know’ [ECS], ‘It’s mony a month sin oo last saw ye in this gate-end’ [JEDM], ‘But Wat o’ Harden this nicht will ken To keep his neb in his ain gate en’ [WL] (also written ‘gate en’ and sometimes hyphenated ‘gate-end’).

Gatehousecote (gā’-tees-, gā’-ees-kō’, gā’-hoos-ko’) n. Gatehousecote, farm between Abbotrule and Hallrule Mill on the Foderlee Burn. John Turnbull was recorded there in 1493. John, Andrew and Thomas Turnbull were recorded there in 1502. In 1516 the tenants were Andrew Turnbull, William his brother, Thomas, Patrick and David. The lands were acquired in 1569 (along with several others) by Adam French and were described as being ‘with woods’ in 1588. Jock Turnbull was tenant there in 1575. There were Lorraines there in the early 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670, when it was described as having a mill. This was probably a small threshing mill, powered by water from a pond. The lands (or their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. John Shiel was a tenant there in 1684 when he was listed as a fugitive who had attended conventicles. In 1694 there were 3 householders (probably tenants) listed, Margaret Lorraine, Thomas Pringle and William Turnbull, as well as 3 cottars. It was long part of the Abbotrule estate, although almost sold off in the 1790s after being combined with Over Bonchester. It was a major farm on Abbotrule, having its own entrance lodge. Andrew Murray was there in 1801. It was listed among the properties of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1811, and valued at £298. William Brodie was farmer in the early part of the 19th century. Henry Elliot was tenant in the 1840s, followed by David Henderson, John Usher, Peter Mackinnon and Donald Teacher into the 20th century. Around 1875 it was owned by David Henderson of Abbotrule and valued at about £300. Tom Douglas was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £223. It may also have been known as 'Yetthouse' (the origin of the name is probably the Old English 'gat hus cote', meaning 'cottage beside the goat shed'; it is first recorded as 'Gait-houscot' in 1493 and 1494/5, is 'gaithous coit' in 1502, 'Gaittuscott' in 1550, 'Gatthouscott' in 1569, 'Gaithous Cott' in 1575, 'Gaithouscott' in 1588, 'Gatascot' in 1595, 'Gaithouslok' in 1616, 'Gattascot' in 1619, 'Gatascott' in 1670, transcribed 'Goatsorecoattis' in 1680, 'Gattascot' in 1684, 'Gaithous scott' in 1694, 'Gatehouse Scott' in 1801 and 'Gatehouse-Scott' in 1811; it appears as 'Gathouscot' on Gordon's c. 1650 map and 'Gatehouscott' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it is 'Gatehaughscot' on a 1788 gravestone).

Gateshaw (gā'-shaw) n. hamlet south of Morebattle, on the Kale Water. It was formerly a seat of a branch of the Kers, starting with Thomas Ker in 1451. The former tower there may also have been known as Corbethouse, this being a nearby estate (although this is debated). A newer house referred to as 'New Gateshaugh' was built in about 1522 and also burned by the English in 1545. The estate was sold by John Ker to Sir William Scott of Ancrum in 1749. In 1758 Scott sold the estate to William Kerr, Chamberlain to the Duke of Roxburghe (the origin is probably from Old English for 'goat's wood'; it is first recorded in the mid-15th century as 'Gaitschaw').

gatewards (gā'-wurdz) adv., prep., poet. in the direction of, directly towards – 'I wull cum intil thy hous in the multetud o' thy mercie; an' in thy feær wull I wurship gaitwards thy haly temple' [HSR], 'I am my beloefet's, an' his desæyre is gaitwards me' [HSR] (also written 'gaitwards' and sometimes 'gaitwaird').

Gatliehill (gawt-lee-hil) n. former house on the Hermitage Water, roughly opposite Braidlie. It is probably the 'Catle...' listed on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale alongside Gorrenberry and Dinlees and the 'Catlie' on the rental roll of 1541 between Braidlie and Dinlees. The name seems to have disappeared (it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map; it is 'Catle' in 1376 and 'Catlie' in 1541).

Gatton (ga'-in) n. Frances (18th C.) His Majesty's Engineer for Scotland, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1740, probably while passing through during work on canals and tunnels near Pinkie and Inveresk.

Gattonside (ga'-in-sīd, ga-tin-sīd) n. village on the north bank of the Tweed across from Melrose, with a mediæval plan and many old orchards. The village was burned by Hertford's army in 1545. There are remains of a pre-Reformation chapel. Gattonside House is an 1826 Georgian mansion. The suspension bridge to Melrose was built about 1830. The area was formerly known for its orchards (it appears as 'Galtunesside' in the early 12 century; the origin of the first part of the name is unclear).

Gaylor (gā-lur) n. David (1846/7–1924) from the Dunbar area, he came to Hawick as a young man to learn the watchmaking trade with Mr. Gowans and Mr. Rutherford. He then went briefly to Bishop Auckland before returning to Hawick in 1875 to set up his own watchmaker's and jeweller's business. This was originally based at 14 Howegate, moving to 59 High Street about 1877, where he worked for 47 years. He was an early photographer around Hawick and would put on shows in the Exchange Hall and elsewhere, with his son William assisting, and his niece Dorothy providing piano accompaniment. The showing of local slideshows was continued by his son William and lasted until the 1950s; his early 'magic lantern slides' collection is still in the Museum. His Border Kinematograph business (with partner local manufacturer Sime) made films in the period 1899–1903 and they at one point considered buying the 'Wee Thea', but wound up due to lack of financing. Their films represent the earliest moving images of Hawick Common Riding and other local events, and are only a few years later than the first known films in Scotland. He was for a long time a Deacon in the Congregational Kirk and is said to have identified with the 'Psychic Movement' in later life. He married Jeanie (or Jane), daughter of blacksmith William Pow, and she died in 1919, aged 70. Their children were: David William, who became a Congregational minister at the East E.U. Church in Greenock; Elizabeth S., also known as 'Bessie'; William Pow, who followed his father as an optician; and Margaret Jean, who married Andrew Dalgleish and had 2 sons who were Galashiels builders. William Pow 'W.P.' (1880/1–1963) son of David, whose jewellers business he carried on at 59 High Street. He was known locally as a sportsman (e.g. in the Cycling Club), amateur actor and singer, who made Adam Grant's 'Three Humorous Songs' his own in the first quarter of the 20th century. He served as the 5th Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk. He continued his father's interest in photography, continuing 'lantern slide' shows until the 1950s. After WWI he also became an optician, giving up the jewellery side of the business. He married Helen Scott Clark, who died in 1964, aged 78. David William Pow was their son.

George (jōrj) n. name of 4 British Kings, George I (1660–1727) King from 1714, first of the house of Hanover. He was nominated as King by Queen Anne, under political pressure to bypass James Stewart. In 1714 the Council and Burgesses of Hawick had to swear an oath of allegiance to the new King. In opposition to his rule the Jacobite rebellion occurred in 1715, although with little support in the Borders. The King spent much of his life in Hanover, and never learned to speak much English – ‘Your Geordie was a German laird, That used to delve his ain kail yard!’ [T]. George II (1683–1760) King from 1727, son of George I. George III (1738–1820) King from 1760, grandson of George II. He initially took an active role in government (losing America for example). However, he had a nervous breakdown, suffered from the hereditary disease porphyria, and was declared insane in 1810. His domestic life was uncharacteristically tranquil, with his devoted wife Charlotte Sophia. It is recorded that a fiddler was paid for playing before the Bailies and Justices of the Peace in Hawick when he was proclaimed as King in 1760 and further money was paid for liquor at his accession to the throne in 1761. Hawick officials used to regularly celebrate his June 4th birthday with the ‘King’s Rantin’. Half-pennies of his reign were often counterfeit, merchants in Jedburgh refusing to accept them, leading to a legal battle in 1785, which went all the way to the Lords. George IV (1762–1830) King from 1820. He was appointed as Regent in 1811, with his father being unfit to rule. In Hawick there was a festive meeting to mark the occasion, with Bailie James Oliver proposing the toast ‘The Mucking o’ Geordie’s byre’. In 1822 he became the first reigning monarch to visit Scotland since 1650. He stayed for 2 weeks at Dalkeith House as a guest of the Duke of Buccleuch. In Edinburgh, George IV Bridge was named after him. Obsese and unpopular, it was hoped his visit would calm

the rising Radical moevement in Scotland. The visit was partly organised by Sir Walter Scott, and led to an upsurge in the use of tartan for formal occasions. He has been portrayed on film by Rupert Everett, Peter Ustinov and Hugh Laurie, among others. George V King of Hanover (1819–78) son of Ernest Augustus, born 3 days after his cousin, Queen Victoria. His full name was George Frederick Alexander Charles Ernest Augustus, and like other members of his family, was usually considered to have no surname. He became blind in a childhood accident. He acceded to the Hanoverian throne in 1851, when he also became the 2nd Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. He escaped to Austria when Hanover was annexed by Prussia in 1866. He married Princess Marie Alexandrina, daughter of Joseph, Duke of Saxe-Altenburg. He had one son, Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick, who became the 3rd and last Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. He spent most of his last years in Paris, where he died. George V (1865–1936) King from 1911. For his coronation celebrations in Hawick there was a procession from the Town Hall to the Old Parish Church, and then a parade up to the Mote for a ceremony in which the Duke of Buccleuch handed over that land to the town. George VI (1895–1952) King from 1936. He made a ‘secret’ visit to Hawick in 1943 to inspect the troops and returned in 1947 with Queen Elizabeth (the Queen Mother) and other members of the Royal Family, including the future Queen. His coronation in 1937 was marked in Hawick with a great parade of bands and floats, some of which exists on film. Trees were also planted in the Park, and a miniature silver spade used on this occasion (presented to Provost Fisher’s wife) is in the Museum.

Gib (gib) n. short form of Gilbert.

Gibb (gib) n. David Scobbie, M.B.E. (1933–2007) born in Hawick, he was an apprentice at Braemar before doing National Service in the Air Force. He was later a traveller for Braemar before joining accountants John J. Welch & Co. in 1976, where he remained until retirement. He was well known locally as a singer, with a strong bass voice. He sung regularly at the Common Riding, particularly 'Up Wi' the Banner', 'Pawkie Paiterson' and 'Clinty'. He was a founder member of the Hawick Music Club, and heavily involved with the Hawick Amateur Operatic Society and P.S.A. Choir. He also sung with Carlisle's Abbey Singers and the Border Television Choir. A committed churchman, he was Elder and Treasurer of Trinity Church. He received the M.B.E. for service to entertainment in 2002. He added music to James Y. Hunter's poem 'Hawick Lasses – 1514' in about 2001 and sings the song on the 2006 CD 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry'.

Gibbie wi' the Gowden Gartins (gi-bee-wi-thu-gow-din-gar-tinz) n. literally 'Gilbert with the Golden Garters', a familiar name for Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (many spelling variants exist).

gibble-gabble (gi-bul-gaw-bul) n., arch. idle, babbling talk (an example of 'rhyming reduplication').

Gibby's Sike (gi-beez-sīk) n. stream that rises near Penchrise farm and runs in a north-easterly direction, through Gibby's Cleuch Culvert on the Waverley Line, to join the Slitrig Water (it is marked 'Back Sike' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

giblich (gib-lich) n., arch. an unfledged crow (noted by J. Jamieson).

Gib Nose (gib-nōz) n. formerly an area near Princes Street, explicitly referring to a small piece of land bounded by Albion Place (now Princes Street), Wilton Crescent and the former Wilton Crescent Lane. Owned by the Langlands family, it was first feued to James Davidson in 1768. William Nichol is recorded as farmer there in 1797. It is marked on Wood's map of 1824, with 'Mrs. Davidson' as owner. There were 6 separate households recorded there on the 1841 census (named probably for the triangular shape of the land and possibly an early association with someone called Gilbert; also spelled 'Gibsnose' and 'Gib's Nose').

Gib o Drythropple (gib-ō-drI-thro-pul) n. nickname for Gilbert Aitken.

Gib o Holmsteed (gib-ō-hōm-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as 'Gib of Holme Steid'. It is unclear where

Gibson (gib-sin) n. Adam (18th C.) married Betty Scott in Wilton Parish in 1767. Their children included: Robert (b.1770); Janet (b.1774); Agnes (b.1776); James (b.1778); and Christian (b.1781). Adam ‘Yeddie’ (19th C.) Hawick man, famous for his angling skills, for whom the song ‘Lean Yeddie Gibson’ was written after his death while fishing the Teviot in the 1850s. He is buried in the old Kirkyard. Andrew (18th C.) married Janet Scott in Wilton Parish in 1735. He may be the Andrew whose funeral is recorded in Wilton in 1751. George (18th C.) witnessed a baptism for John Thomson in the Flex in Hawick in 1726. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Has-sendean in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. John (1774–1814) born in Ayr. He was a soldier with the 94th Regiment of Foot. Posted to Hawick in 1795 (probably related to the French prisoners of war), he married Janet, daughter of Hawick butcher Gideon Renwick. Posted elsewhere, the couple returned to Hawick around 1802 and he worked as a nailer. He then re-enlisted, deserted, was press ganged into the navy, jumped ship, worked in Langholm and Kelso, and was acquitted for desertion. He was back in Hawick by 1810, and the family had 11 children. He is recorded as a nailer in 1810 when 2 of his unnamed children died. In late 1813 he murdered his wife at their home in the Mill Port, apparently accusing her 12th child of being fathered by a Frenchman, and of poisoning him. He was the last person to be hung in Hawick, the event taking place in the Haugh; this was unusual, and may in fact never have previously happened in the Town. He wrote ‘Some particulars of the life of John Gibson’ while awaiting execution. It is basically a screed on the evils of drink. Perhaps the only child to survive was Gideon, who was a witness to the murder, but at 10 years old too young to give evidence. John, W.S. (19th C.) solicitor who was an agent for the Buccleuch estates, in at least the period 1822–78. He was originally called ‘younger’. He was present at Branhholme at the banquet held in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1839. Miss (19th C.) teacher at the girl’s school at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. She could be inspiration for the poem ‘The Flower of Rule’ by Robert Allan. Rev. Mungo (c.1660–1735/6) graduating from Glasgow University in the early 1690s, he was ordained as minister of Abbotrule Parish in 1698. He was translated to Sanquhar in 1713, and remained there until his death (brought on by a stroke suffered in the pulpit). He had 2 sons, George and William, and 1 daughter, Janet. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1730 and 1736. He married Janet Dryden in 1728 and their children included: Margaret (b.1730); Helen (b.1733); Helen (again, b.1735); James (b.1736); Adam (b.1739); Robert (b.1743); and Agnes (b.1746). The witnesses in 1736 were Thomas Dodds and ‘Rober’ Gibson (perhaps his father). Robert (d.1810) stocking-maker in Hawick, son of Walter. His unnamed child died in 1810. He may be the Robert who married Henrietta Murray in Wilton in 1796. Ronald ‘Ronnie’ (1947/8–2003) Cornet in 1970. His Lass was Vivienne Young (sister of the 1963 Lass) and his Acting Father was Wattie Scott. Ross A. Cornet in 2014, the Quincentenary year. He had the Hornshole Monument incorporated into his Cornet’s Tie. Walter (18th C.) mason in Hawick. His son William died in 1798. He may be the Walter who married Janet Miller in Wilton in 1755. He could be the Walter, son of mason William, born in Wilton in 1723. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1766 he married Janet Laidlaw, who was from Hawick Parish. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Armstrong and their son Walter was baptised in 1778. William (18th C.) mason in Wilton. He was at Tandlaw in 1708. In 1707 he married Helen Rodger (or Roger). Their children included: Robert (b.1708); Margaret (b.1713); Bessie (b.1715); Agnes (b.1719); Walter (b.1723); and William (b.1725). He may be the William who witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for James Dodds in Clarilaw in 1744. William (d.1798) mason in Hawick, son of Walter. He had an unnamed child who died in 1798. He is probably the William born to Walter and Janet Miller in Wilton in 1756 (also spelled ‘Gibsone’ etc.).

Gibson’s (gib-sinz) n. temperance hotel of the early 20th century situated on North Bridge Street. It became the Kings Hotel sometime after WWII. Gibson’s moved to West Stewart Place, which later became Kirlands Hotel.

Gid (gid) n. short form of Gideon.

Giddenscleuch (gi-dinz-klooch) n. Gideon-scleuch, farmstead near the of the side road from Teviothead, just before Merrylaw. The stream Giddens Cleuch joins the Teviot just there. 4 archaeological features, perhaps hut bases, were found on a broad terrace about 600 m south-west of the farm. The lands were listed in the early 16th century as part of those held by John Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk. It was among lands purchased by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. It was 'Guiddigscluch' among lands owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron (i.e. superior of these lands) in 1687 and when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. The lands were included among those of Lymiecleuch (along with Corriesike and Langbyre) when sold by William Eliott of Stobs to a group of Eliotts in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. They were among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott from his father in 1692. John Thomson was there in 1724, David Scott in 1727, '[blank] Moor' in 1741 and John Scott in 1749. There were Armstrongs there in 1841 (the name means 'the ravine belonging to Gideon'; it first appeared as 'Guidwyniscleuch' in 1509/10, is 'Guddisclucht' in 1519/20, 'Guidingiscleuche' in the early 17th century, and later is 'Guidinscleughe', transcribed 'Gudduscleuch' in 1620, 'Gandinscleuch' in 1687, 'Guiddingscleuch' in 1692, 'Gidinscleugh' in 1694, 'Guidinscleugh' in 1698 and 'giddens Cleugh' in 1724; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Guiddinscleuch'; there is presumably a connection with a local family that used Gideon as a first name, e.g. the Scotts of Harden).

Gideon Scott & Sons (gi-dee-in-sko'-insonz) n. Hawick millwrights, set up by Gideon Scott in the latter part of the 18th century. The premises were on the Cross Wynd. Gideon's sons Gilbert and James were also millwrights. The firm's assets were sequestered in 1842.

Gigson's Flat (gig-sinz-flaw) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as being vacant in the 1541 rental roll, where it is ‘Gigsonis Flatt’ or perhaps ‘Gibsonisflatt’. The location is uncertain, but it is listed after Kilgarth.

Gilboa Wud (gil-bō-u-wud) n. name given to a large plantation to the north-east of Ruberslaw (the origin of the name is unclear, but may not be very old and is presumably connected with the mountain in Israel; it is marked ‘Gilbo Wood’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Gilchrist (gil-krist, -krīst) n. Rev. John (d.1746) from Dumfriesshire, he was son of Mungo in Holm of Dalgarno. He was presented to Bedrule Parish in late 1713 and ordained there in early 1714, succeeding James Borland. In 1714 he officiated the marriage in Minto of Andrew Ogilvie (of Branhholme) with the sister of the minister of Minto. In 1716 he was recorded in a ‘Lybell’ in Selkirk, against John and Andrew Riddell. He was a substitute preacher in Hawick in 1721, when the minister was ill. He dissented from the Act of Assembly of 1740 which deposed 8 seceding ministers. He remained at Bedrule until his death, and was succeeded by George Dickson. His only daughter married John Cranstoun the minister of Ancrum.

the Gilded Chamber (thū-gil-deed-chām-bur) n. a series of get togethers taking place initially in a golden decorated room at the Gretel bar in 1966, which grew into an annual event. The event later moved to the Volunteer. It is a sing-song for men only, and traditionally accompanied by potted-meat sandwiches.

Gildhouse (gild-hows) n. former name for lands near the Ettrick valley, probably associated with the later farm of Gildiesgreen, between Hellmoor

Loch and Upper Shaws Loch. They were formerly Crown lands, split into the Weststead, Middlestead and Eaststead. In 1479 Thomas Scott had remission for a fine for these lands. David, son of Walter Scott in Headshaw leased part of the lands in 1486. John Cranston of that Ilk leased part of the lands in 1492. Robert Scott of Stirches was leasing the Weststead in 1501, when that was referred to as 'alias Dodbank'. In 1502 the eastern part was said to be known as Bailielee and was leased to Peter Turnbull in 1510. In 1510 the west steading was feued by Walter, son of Robert Scott.

Gildshaw (gild-shaw) n. lands in Liddesdale, precise location uncertain. They are recorded as 'Gildschaw' in a rental roll of 1376, with a value of 6 shillings and 8 pence. This may be the same as the place recorded as Gillshaw in the 16th century.

He was minister of Ashkirk Free Kirk 1866–97. In 1878 he married Cecilia, daughter of John Dudgeon from Kensington-gate. He secondly married Catherine Macnaughton, daughter of Rev. Alexander Griereson. His children included: John dudgeon (1880–1940), a medical superintendent, who was killed in an air raid; and Alexander Falconer (1881–1963), a historian. He died in Edinburgh.

gill (jil) n. a unit of measurement equal to one quarter of a pint or about 142 millilitres for Imperial measures. Note that Scots gills were at one time about one third greater in quantity. Scottish bars generally served spirits in shots of one fifth of a gill, but some used one quarter. A metric measure of 25 millilitres is now more common. A 'Hawick Gill' was once a term for half an imperial pint – 'Till gills intae half mutchkins turned, Half mutchkins intae bottles, An' mair the wit an' fancy burned The mair we wat oor throttles' [VW], 'To bide man, I had man, Though sair against my will, For fear that, owre dear that, I might buy the wedding gill' [JoHa], 'Ilk ane that came in they bid e'en hae a gill, To heighten their speerits to glee, man' [JoHa], 'When I look back on time that's past, On siller spent sae ill, I mourn that I, to mend the warst, Took aye anither gill' [DA], 'A gill inside his serk and a glint on his powe, Nin-nid-noddin', and the merry fit tappin' ...' [DH].

gill (gil) n., arch. a gully, narrow valley, ravine – 'Gil, ('g' hard). A steep narrow glen ... It is generally applied to a gully whose sides have resumed a verdant appearance in consequence of the grass growing, Roxb.' [JoJ] (also written 'gil'; the word survives in place names, generally for streams in higher areas, e.g. Hog Gill, Long Gill and Rough Gill to the west of Newcastleton, as well as the lands of Lodgegill, Ramsiegill, etc.).

Gill (gil) n. Peter (16th .) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branhholme, when he died in 1552. Several of the people listed before him were from the Hawick area.

the Gill (thu-gil) n. popular name for area around Gillside and Gillbraehead, south of Newcastleton – 'The fields along the waterside; The fire abune the Gill; Auld Clintoch where the hoolets hide; The loanin' up the hill' [ECB].

Gillan (gi-lin) n. Rev. James (c.1629–68) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1650, he became Minister at Cavers in 1657 or perhaps 1658. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to conform to Episcopacy, and forced to leave the Presbytery of Jedburgh. He moved to Edinburgh, and then out to Currie for his health (and because outed ministers were then banned from the city). However, one night in 1668 he was seized by a group of soldiers, who claimed to be searching for the person who had tried to assassinate Bishop Sharp (actually James Mitchell, after whom Mitchell's Slack was named). They forced him to run back to Edinburgh at midnight and stand outside waiting for the West Port to open, after which he was imprisoned. The next day he was taken before the Privy Council, but dismissed by them when they realised the mistake. He died 2 days later, probably as a result of the harsh treatment he had received. His name was often spelled 'Gillon'. His sister Elizabeth married William Forrest of Norserk. It is unclear whether he was related to the later ministers of St. Boswells and Hawick, but he was unmarried. He may be buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh. Mary (d.1800) local whose death is in the Hawick register for 1800. She was 'Miss Mary Gullon' and died at 'Dumfries Correction house'. Rev. Robert (1761–1824) born in St. Boswells, son of Robert who was minister there. He had a sisters Mary Anne and Margaret (who married the minister of Melrose) and a brother Joseph (possibly the 'Joseph Gillon, Esq. Edinr.' who subscribed to Jamieson's Scots dictionary in 1808). He was educated at St. Mary's College and Edinburgh University, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and ordained at Ettrick in 1787, where he was presented by Lord

Napier. He was translated to Hawick in 1789, being presented by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. However, there is an existing letter from the Magistrates and Town Council to the Duke of Buccleuch, protesting the appointment, so he was presumably not a popular choice. Despite this, he remained until 1800, when he was accused of an irregularity of some sort and demitted his charge, moving to Edinburgh. Nevertheless, he remained one of the Orrock Trustees. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1790–97. There is a letter from him in 1791, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. About 1799 he contributed to the local subscription to support the war against France. In 1793 he wrote an account of the town for the Old Statistical Account of Scotland, which contains valuable tidbits of information (including details of the beginnings of manufacturing in the town). He also wrote several books, including ‘An abridgement of acts of General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland from the year 1638 to 1802 inclusive’ (1803) printed in Hawick, ‘A short view of modern astronomy, for the use of schools and private classes’ (1814) and ‘A compendium of ancient and modern geography’ (1823). He also edited ‘The Scottish pulpit, a collection of sermons’ (1823). In 1798 he married Mannie (or Marion), daughter of William Campbell, minister of Lilliesleaf, and she died in 1845 at the age of 63. Their son Robert was born in Hawick and became an eminent minister of Inchinnan, Glasgow. Their other children were William, Margaret, Alexander Murray, Cauvin and Agnes Farquharson. Rev. Dr. Robert (1799–1879) born in Hawick, son of minister Robert. He studied at Edinburgh High School and University, was licensed in Selkirk in 1829 and ordained in Stamfordham, Northumberland in 1830. He was minister at South Shiels, Holytown (Lanarkshire), Wishaw, Abbotshall (Fife) and then St. John’s (Glasgow) for 14 years. When a thunderstorm broke out during a fiery sermon he preached at Hawick during his early days, it is said that one parishioner remarked ‘Yon was grand scenery for Dr Gillan’s sermon’. He was active in social and political movements in Glasgow and was conferred with a doctorate of divinity by Glasgow University in 1853. He moved to the small parish church of Inchinnan, Renfrewshire in 1861, but continued to lecture broadly. He was presented with his portrait in 1870 and was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1873. He published many of his sermons, including ‘A General Fast Sermon’ (1832) and ‘The Decalogue’ (1856). In 1833 he married Anne, daughter of George Green, minister at Carmunnock. She died in 1847 and he secondly married Laura, daughter of John Buttery of Woodville. His son George Green was chaplain in the East India Company. He died in Inchinnan Manse (also written ‘Gillon’).

Gillbeck (gil-bek) n. possible name for a farmstead in Liddesdale. It is transcribed as ‘Guilbeck’ in the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it was combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads. It might be associated with the nearby Gill Sike.

Gillbraeheid (gil-brā-heed) n. Gillbraehead, farmstead in Liddesdale, of the B6357 between Gillside and Demainholm. It was formerly ‘Geilbraehead’. This was where the minister of the Castleton Burgher Kirk lived in the 1760s to the end of the 18th century, and where their first meeting house was built. Thomas Turnbull was smith John Turnbull a mason there in 1799. Thomas Turnbull was still there in 1821 and James Armstrong in 1841. Thomas Chapman was carter there in 1861 and Richard Telfer was there in 1868 (it is marked as ‘Guilbraehead’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Geelbraehead’ in 1799).

Gillespie (gi-les-pee) n. John (b.c.1780) miller in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. This was probably at Hawick Mill. Marion (17th C.) recorded in the Council records of 1665 when she confessed to pulling the hair out of the head of Walter Lorraine. She was also accused of harassing another man at about the same time. She may be the Marion, daughter of Robert, born in Hawick in Hawick in 1639. Robert (17th C.) smith in Hawick. He was a Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’ and was recorded being elected to the Council in 1648. Also in 1648 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott and Isobel (probably a relative). He is probably the Robert who married Marion Stoddart and whose children born in Hawick included: John (b.1636); Marion (b.1639); Patrick (b.1641); and Stephen (b.1642). The witnesses to the 1640 baptism were William Wilson and James Paisley.

Gillfit (gil-fi) n. Gillfoot, former farm in Castleton Parish near the modern Gillfoot Moss. The farm of ‘Guylefoot’ is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1632, and also ‘Guyldfoot’ among the lands of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. James Scott was tenant there in 1694, with John Little and William Elliot also listed as householders. It is shown on a survey carried out for Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 266 acres and was bounded by the Liddel Water, Demainholm, Whisgills, Side and Millholm. William Stewart was farmer there in the mid-18th century. Robert Elliot and family were there in 1835. John Armstrong was shepherd at 'Guilfoot Upper' in 1851 and William Little a labourer at 'Guilfoot Under'. William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1861 (it is 'Guylefoot' in 1632, 'Geillfoot' in 1694, 'Guillfoot' in 1718 and 'Geelfoot' in 1760; 'Guilfoot' is marked on Stobie's 1770 map; the name is surely just the foot of the gully).

Gillfit Moss (gil-fi'-mos) n. Gillfoot Moss, boggy area in Castleton Parish, on the west side of the Liddel valley, opposite Mangerton. There is the remains of a farmstead there, including foundations of 2 buildings, as well as enclosures and rig lines visible from aerial photography. This is surely the old farm of Gillfit.

Gillheed (gil-heed) n. farmstead in Liddesdale, situated on Foulwood Sike, south-west of Mangerton. The name presumably derives from being at the head of the gully ('Guilhead' is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Gillhoose (gil-hoos) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed as 'Gillhouse' (after 'Gillestede') in a rental roll of c.1376. It was valued at 4 shillings.

gillie (gi-lee) n., poet. a male servant – 'Wha sendet tokins an' ferlies intil the middle o' thee, O Egypt, apon Pharaoh an' a' his gillies' [HSR].

gilliegawkie (gi-lee-gaw-kee) n., poet. a foolish or silly young man (used by John Hogg in 1806).

Gillies (gi-leez) n. Brian (1957–) son of George, he grew up in Burnfoot. At the age of 10 he joined the Hawick Legion Pipe Band. He was an apprentice knitter at Barrie & Kersel and then worked at Hogg's. On the spur of the moment he signed up for the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards, where he spent 9 years as a gunner and joined the regimental band, eventually becoming Pipe Major. He returned to Hawick to be a knitter, but later served as Pipe Major with the Oman Army Pipe Band. On returning to Scotland again he joined the Annan Ex-Serviceman's Pipe Band. He later worked at Johnstons of Elgin in Hawick. He has played pipe solos at many events, including the Edinburgh Tattoo in 1985. He scored 'Highland Cathedral' for pipes, based on a tune written by German musicians Ulrich Roever and Michael Korb in 1982 (originally intended for a military band, rather than pipe band). He wrote the song 'Wauchope Cairn' which the Burns Club sing on their annual visit to Wauchope, as well as 'The James Thomson Bridge' to commemorate that opening. James (b.c.1780) carrier in Hawick according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia.

Rev. James Wardrop (b.1862) trained at Glasgow Evangelical Union Hall, he was placed in India with the London Missionary Society. In 1899 he became minister of Newcastleton Congregational Church, remaining until 1905. He was then minister at Muirkirk, Ayrshire and at Manse Street, Fraserburgh. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Catherine Gillies and their son Thomas was baptised in 1687. John (18th C.) married Euphan Thomson in Wilton in 1832. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1736 he was a witness for a baptism for Robert Riddell, who lived at the Sandbed. His name is written 'Gillas'. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant of 'Crack know' in Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Brown and their children included: unnamed (b.1698); and Margaret (b.1701). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Mary Henderson in Hawick and she died in Hawick in 1800 (also written 'Gillis').

Gilligan (gi-lee-gin) n. James (b.1805/6) born in Sicily, he was a clothes and furniture merchant in Hawick, at 8 Howegate. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as a 'broker'. In 1861 he was at 2 Howegate, listed as a clothier employing 11 men and 3 women. His wife was Elizabeth and they had children: Sarah; James; Robert; Charles; and John. In the 1841 census he is a pedlar at about No. 18 Howgate.

Gillis (gi-lis) n. David (19th/20th C.) schoolmaster at St. Cuthbert's School from early 1894 until he retired in 1915. He was also heavily involved in local musical activities and the Volunteer movement. He moved to Greenlaw after he left Hawick.

gillore (gi-lōr) n., arch. galore, plenty, wealth (noted by J. Jamieson).

gill-maw (gil-maw) n., arch. a gourmand of coarse manners, guzzler – '...as 'a greedy gilmaw', one who is not nice in his taste, but devours by wholesale, Roxb.' [JoJ] (also gull-maw and cf. gollimer).

Gillon (gi-lin) n. Fr. Thomas (19th/20th C.) priest at S.S. Mary & David's 1918–24. He was said to have been quiet, but well-respected in the Town. He moved to Linlithgow. His time as priest saw the introduction of the 1918 Education Act and the return of the survivors from the War (see also Gillan).

Gillshaw (gil-shaw) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Gilschaw et Burnhous’. It is unclear where these lands were, but possibly related to ‘Gillfoot’, ‘Gillhead’, etc. (see also Gildshaw).

Gillside (gil-sīd) n. farm in Liddesdale, on the west bank of the river to the south of Manger-ton. A carved stone found over the fireplace in the old cottage there is described in ‘Chronicle of the Armstrongs’. The area was formerly known as Nether Foulwood, and the stream to the west is still called Foulwood Sike. William Dalgleish lived there in the 1830s and 40s. The name may also be related to the lands of ‘Side’, which are marked to the west on Stobie’s 1770 map (probably the ‘Geelside’ where William Elliot and family lived in the early 1800s).

Gill Sike (gil-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises near Snaberlee Rig and runs roughly westwards to join the Hermitage Water near Leahaugh.

Gillsteed (gil-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Gillested’, with a value of 2 shillings. This could be the same place as ‘Gillside’ or ‘Gillshaw’.

gill-stowp (gil-stowp) n., arch. a tankard of about a ‘gill’ capacity – ‘The yill-cup, the gill-stoup, Flee, like a sticking bull’ [JoHa], ‘... While you do revel, rant, and roar, Owre gill-stoups, wi’ the rambling core’ [JoHa].

Gilmanscleuch (gil-munz-klooch) n. hamlet in the Ettrick valley, just north of the farms of Deloraine, and near where the Gilmanscleuch Burn meets the Ettrick. The farm was once a Crown property, from at least the 1456. It was assigned to James and Roger Alemoor in 1484, Steven Lockhart in 1486, Patrick Home of Fastcastle and Robert Lyle in 1490, Alexander, Lord Home in 1492, George Home in 1501 and Adam Scott of Tushielaw in 1510. John Scott in Thirlestane claimed the tenancy there in 1541. A tower here was once home of a branch of the Scotts, with the land passing from the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch to Walter Scott of Harden in the late 16th century, when ‘Auld Wat’s’ youngest son (possibly John) was slain in a hunting match; he apparently said that the lands were worth a dead son. Robert Scott from here was killed by Elphinstones sometime before 1621 (and so the 2 murders may sometimes be compounded). The lands (or perhaps the superiority) were later sold by John Scott of Harden to Anne, Duches of Buccleuch and passed to Francis, Duke of Buccleuch along with other lands in the Lordship of Ettrick Forest in 1735. The Scotts of Gilmanscleuch started with James in at least 1589, with William being the last in the early-to-mid 18th century. When Francis Scott inherited the lands from his father John in 1686 the lands were valued at £20 6s 8d (‘feudi-firmae’). Adam Scott was tenant in 1737 and James Borthwick was a cottar there in 1752. James Scott was there in 1797. In 1802 it was valued at £67, when part of the Buccleuch estates. Adam and James Scott were joint tenants in the 1820s and 1830s. ‘Daft Jock Gray’ came from there; he was a singing beggar in the early 1800s. Henry Scott was farmer in the 1860s – ‘There’s Daft Jock Grey o’ Gilmanscleugh, And Davie o’ the Inch, And when ye come to Singley, They’ll help ye in a pinch’ [DJG], ‘Warn Wat o’ Harden, and his sons, Wi’ them will Borthwick water ride; Warn Gaudilands, and Allanhaugh, And Gilmanscleugh, and Commonsides’ [T], ‘In Gilmanscleuch, beneath the heuch, My fathers lang did dwell; Ay formost, under bauld Buccleuch, A foreign fae to quell’ [ES] (the origin is probably from ‘Gillemon’s ravine’; also formerly written ‘Gilmerscleugh’ etc., it was ‘Gilmyiscluche’ in 1456, ‘Gilmynniscluech’ in 1467, ‘Gilmynnisclueche’ in 1468, ‘Gilmynniscluech’ in 1477, ‘Gilmynscluech’ in 1484, 1488, 1501, 1502 and 1510, ‘Gylmynniscluech’ in 1541, ‘Gilmynniscluecht’ in 1580, ‘Gylmynniscluecht’ in 1581 and 1585, ‘Gilminiscluech’ in 1593, ‘Gilmen-scleugh’ in 1602, ‘Gilmescleuch’ in 1609, ‘Gillmischleuch’ in 1644, ‘Gilmelsclueche’ in 1647, ‘Gillmenscleugh’ in 1656 ‘Gilmenscleuch’ in the late 1660s, ‘Gillminiscluegh’ in 1678, ‘Gillmenscleugh’ in 1690 and ‘Gillmenscluch’ in 1693; it is ‘Gilminschuech’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Gilnockie (gil-no-kee) n. tower of the Armstrongs, near the confluence of the Liddel and the Esk, i.e. in the ‘debatable lands’. The original tower stood at the east end of Gilnockie Bridge (over the Esk), and now consists only of earthworks, the centre having been extensively quarried (including for use in Gilnockie Bridge) and later crossed by the A7. This is possibly the tower burned by the English in 1528. Another (or later) tower is on the west bank and further north, at Hollows. It was restored in 1978–80, and now houses the Clan Armstrong centre. This second tower is famous for being the home of Johnnie Armstrong (usually called ‘of Gilnockie’ to confuse things!), who was killed at Caerlenrig in 1530; it is also known as ‘Johnnie Armstrong’s Tower’ or ‘Hollows Tower’. This restored tower also contains an ancient stone, with carved spiral symbols, reused as a door sill. The name was also used for a nearby station on the Langholm branch of the railway – ‘The Elliots and Armstrongs did convene; They were a gallant company: We’ll ride and meet our lawful king, And bring him safe to Gilnockie’ [CPM], ‘But when Johnny went from Giltnock-Hall, The wind it blew hard, and full fast it did rain; ‘Now fare thee well, thou Giltnock-Hall, I fear I shall never see thee again.’ [T].

Gilpin (gil-pin) n. Rev. William (1724–1804) from a well-known English family, he was educated at Oxford, where he trained as a minister. He set up his own school, became a biographer of religious reformers and published illustrated volumes of his British travels, which revolutionised travel writing and attitudes. He was later Prebendary at Salisbury. During one tour, he visited Hawick in 1776, making a sketch of the Auld Brig as seen from below the bridge. This is the oldest known sketch of any part of the town of Hawick. It shows 2 arches and the wooden parapet erected to replace the stone one washed away in the 1767 flood. It also unfortunately omits any of the surrounding buildings.

Gilpin Horner (gil-pin-hōr-nur) n. character of Scottish legend, said to be an evil goblin. He was the basis for the goblin page in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, and said to be the inspiration for the whole work, when the future Lady of Buccleuch urged Scott to write a poem based on him.

gilravage (gil-raw-veej) v., arch. to create an uproar – ‘Gilravage ... To raise a tumult, or to make much noise, Roxb. To rove about; to be unsteady; to act hastily and without consideration, Roxb.’ [JoJ], n., arch., poet. noisy merry-making, uproar – ‘Wi’ hypicritikil mokirs in thair gilravages, thaye naschet apon me wi’ their teeth’ [HSR], a disturbance, state of confusion – ‘Gilravage, Gilraivitch, ... confusion, conjoined with destruction; as that of a sow, &c., destroying a garden, by rooting up the plants, Roxburgh’ [JoJ].

Gilrig (gil-rig) n. place name in Robertson Parish, referred to in papers of the Buccleuch estates in the 1750s.

Gilroy (gil-roi) n. John (b.1820/1) from Jedburgh, he worked as a dyer in Hawick. He was father of Councillor John. He hailed the first Hawick Baa in 1842. In 1851 he married Margaret, daughter of John Amos Hogg. In 1861 the family are recorded living at 7 Sandbed. His children included John, Andrew, Agnes, Janet, Beatrix and Margaret. Bailie John (19th C.) grandson of John Hogg the poet, he was a Magistrate in the late 1880s, as well as Chairman of Hawick School Board and Treasurer of the Co-operative Society. He ran a newsagent’s shop at 7 Howegate. He married Margaret (‘Maggie’), daughter of shoemaker John Rutherford in 1869. William (1810/1–72) mail-coach driver and uncle to Bailie John. He married Isabella Harkness, who died near Dublin in 1896, aged 87. Their children included Margaret, who married Mr. Watson of Mooney’s Brewery, Dublin. He died at Belfast and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery.

Gilroy’s (gil-roiz) n. shop on the Howegate from the late 19th century. It was a booksellers, toy shop and now mainly a newsagents.

Gilsland (gilz-lind) n. village in northern Cumberland, on the Irthing River, and near Hadrian’s Wall. It was the seat of the Dacres and also near the once strategically important Gilsland Gap. In former times the area was a popular holiday destination, and was known in the 18th and 19th centuries for its healing waters, e.g. the poet Leyden’s father went there to recover his health in 1800 – ‘’Mong the beauty spots of England I have rambled far and near, By the northern lakes at Gilsland, Derwentwater, Windermere’ [TK].

Gilsland see Guyslands

Gilson (gil-son) n. Thomas (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Anrton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. ‘Locus Thome Gilson’ is listed there with a value of 8 shillings.

giltit (gil-tee, -ti) pp., poet. gilded – ‘But never think to dit my shameless een, Wi’ stoury hopes o’ richly giltit fame’ [JoHa].

gimmer (gi-mur) n., arch. a young ewe, usually between its first and second shearings, or between weaning and first shearing – ‘... wedderis, gymmir et Dynmont octingenta’ [SB1492], ‘Item, vpoun the landis of Glenpoyt, in pasturing with James Brewhouse, fourtene scoir and xvij gymmeris, quharof thair is xl gymmeris hes lambes ...’ [SB1574], ‘A lamb is smeared at the end of Harvest when it is denominated a hog; hence the phrase harvest-hog. After being smeared the second time, a ewe-hog is denominated a gimmer, and a wedder-hog a dymond’ [JL], ‘For either gimmer, hogg, or croak, By George, I’ll g’ye a cowin’ [JoHa], ‘A gimmer licked a muckle Cheviot, big enough tae loup the Teviot’ [TD].

gimmer (gi-mur) n., poet. a gossip, contemptuous term for a woman – ‘Or may I ne’er mair taste peat reek, I’ll bang ye for a gimmer’ [JoHa].

gin (gin) conj., arch. if, whether – ‘Says – ‘What would you do, young Branhholm, Gin ye had me, as I have thee?’ [JL], ‘But gin you’ll come wi’ me, my sark I will sell ...’ [WE], ‘Gin ye be ought like other cattle, Ye’ll sometimes like to weet yer throttle ...’ [JoHa], ‘And gin I live, my dainty cock, Until she hae a waen, Gin I be near, I’ll buy’t a frock, For auld langsyne’ [JoHa], ‘... And gin ye want to reach her heart, It’s there noo never fear ye’ [RH], ‘Were ye ever in Hawick toun: Gin ye hae, then fill your glasses! [GWe], ‘... An’ gin the fair set Muir allures, The air’s sae fresh an’ sweet’ [WFC], ‘Gin I’d a bit mair O’ wordly riches, And needna work a’ day ...’ [DH], ‘And gin I’d to wale but the yin ...’ [DH], ‘Gin we grant that he’s richt He’ll pit up for the nicht ...’ [WL], that, oh that – ‘O! gin I but could gain her heart, How smooth the stream o’ life would run’ [JoHa], by that time, when – ‘An so it is that A heh thae thochts ti faa back on gin Fortun takes a pick at iz ...’ [ECS].

ginger (jin-jur) n. a fizzy soft drink of any flavour – ‘When A was wee the kids would ask for ginger when they played For that’s the name they gave to every drink they ever made’ [Sco] (this usage common around Glasgow).

ginger breed (jin-jur-breed) n. ginger bread – ‘Losh, Ah’ve forgotten the ginger breed men an’ the ha’penny whistles ...’ [JEDM].

ginger wine (jin-jur-wīn) n. a dark, spicy cordial drink made with ‘ginger wine essence’, which derives from a secret recipe of Kennedy’s (now Crosby) the chemists. There were probably other variants of this, such as the ‘black betty’ sold in Denholm.

Gingills (ging-gilz) n. former lands in Ewesdale, a little north of Langholm, once a seat of the Armstrongs. The spelling is variable, and it is also possible it is sometimes confused with Chingills, near Mangerton in Liddesdale. In 1579 the Privy Council ordered that several of the principle ‘Armstrangis of the Gyngillis’ should give assurance about the behaviour of the others. In 1583 an English account of the number of men in various parts of the Middle Marches listed ‘Ewesdale, Gingles, 300’. Thomas Armstrong ‘of the Gyngils’ signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. Ringan Armstrong ‘of the Gyngills’ is recorded in 1590. Towers of ‘Eckigingles’ and ‘Tho. of ye Jingles’ are recorded on opposite sides of the Ewes valley on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Deabateable Land. It may be the place transcribed as ‘Creingills’ in the Lordship of Melrose, among lands inherited by Sir John Riddell of that Ilk in 1669 (also written ‘Gingles’ and variants; it is ‘Gyngillis’ in 1573; see also Chingills).

Ginglenwells (ging-lin-welz) n. former house on the Hermitage Water, roughly opposite Gorrenberry. William Armstrong was tenant in 1694, with John Elliot also residing there. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it was combined with Dinlees, consisting of 1067 acres and bounded by Greystonehaugh, the Lord of Hoscote’s lands, Twislehope, Rispylaw and Gorrenberry. The lands there were rented by William Elliot of Tarras from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. There is possibly an association with ‘Chingills’ or ‘Gingills’, although they were near Mangerton and in Ewesdale, respectively (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Ginglanwalls’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is ‘Ginglenuals’ in 1694, ‘Ginglenwalls’ in 1722 and ‘Ginglanwalls’ in 1736).

ginnle (gi-nul) v., arch. to catch trout (or other fish) by tickling (noted by J. Jamieson; cf. the more common guddle).

The Girl I Left Behind Me (thu-gi-rul-I-left-bee-hīnd-mee) n. tune that the Drums and Fifes play at certain times, popularised in the 1949 John Ford/John Wayne film 'She Wore a Yellow Ribbon'. The song is known by many different names and is claimed to have either Irish or English origins. It is known to have been played by military drum and fife bands in the early 1800s and dates back to at least the late 18th century. It is one of the tunes specifically played on the Saturday, when the band march the Cornet and mounted supporters down the Loan.

the Girls' Brigade (thu-gi-rulz-bri-gād) n. international Christian organisation for girls, founded in 1893. 1st Hawick meets at Burnfoot Kirk, 2nd Hawick at St. Mary's Kirk and 3rd Hawick at Wilton Kirk (formed in 1969). A pipe band was founded in 1972.

girn (girn) v. to show the teeth in pain or effort, grimace, distort the face, complain peevishly, grumble, whine, cry – 'stop yer girnin, wull ee?', 'John, whan he play'd, ne'er threw his face, Like a' the girning piper race' [CPM], 'I'm no acquaint wi' mealy pows; I was brought up wi' tups and ewes, High up among the heather cowes, Where winter girns' [JR], 'The hurcheon raxed his scory chafts, And gepit wi' girning joye' [JTe], '...And nickering, girnit with their muckle-rake teeth, Uncouthsome to the view' [JTe], '...An' girns, an' sings, an' thinks it vera fine' [JoHa], '...Nought's seen but girnin' gabs an' scoolin'' [JoHa], '...Juist gang an' look ye girnin' fools, And see the big anes splashin'' [TCh], '...whan the grewsome gaishener ov a geizart, i the girnin Daith's Heed ...' Girnside Bog (girn-sīd-bog) n. former name for Greenside Moss, a formerly marshy part of the Common. This name was used in the 1788 Council records when the area was largely drained.

Girnside Hill (girn-sīd-hil) n. hill on the north side of the Todrig Burn, between Wester and Easter Essenside, reaching a height of 266 m. Just north of the hill is Old Essenside, possible site of a former village, and on the southern slopes are the remains of a settlement.

Girnwud (girn-wud, -wood) n. Girnwood, a farm at the end of the road through Deanburnhaugh in the Borthwick valley. The estate here was formerly connected with 'Lyne', so that 'Girnwood and the Lyne' was its name in the earliest records. It was formerly included within the Parish of Hassendean, transferring to the new Robertson Parish in 1689/90. The lands passed from Walter Dalglish 'of Greenwood' to Adam Turnbull in 1439. Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood and Lyne leased the lands to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh in 1488, but keeping 1 acre in the north parts of both Greenwood and Lyne for himself. Alexander, 2nd Lord Home was granted these lands in 1492/3, after being resigned by Sir Thomas Turnbull. Alexander, 3rd Lord Home succeeded to these and other lands in 1506. James Turnbull was recorded there in 1503. In 1506 'the lands of Greenwood were valued at £3 Scots and in time of peace at 2 merks old extent, and were held of William Turnbull of Minto as superior, for one penny blench'. In 1522 there is a letter from James V requiring William Turnbull of Minto to receive George, Lord Home as tenant on his lands there. William, son of William Turnbull of Minto sold the lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1532/3. In 1535 George, Lord Home regained the lands through royal revocation of the previous charter. The lands were held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the late 16th century, and were stated in 1574 to be in the Barony of Minto; they were at that time valued at £10 and held of the King by service of ward and relief. The Scotts of Girnwood were tenants for about 200 years. James Chisholme of Girnwood is recorded in 1605. The lands of 'Grenwode et Lyne' were inherited in 1634 by Francis Earl of Buccleuch from his father, then passed to his daughters Mary and Anne, and 'Girnwood and the Lyne with thair pertinentis' were listed among the possessions of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in her 1663 marriage contract. There were 9 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Andrew Clerk, John Govenlock, Marion Stoddart, Isobel Nivison, Bessie Renwick, Margaret Brown, Robert Hislop, Margaret Laidlaw and Janet Hislop. It was listed among properties of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1678. Adam Elliot was tenant in 1688. Adam Scott was tenant there in 1694, and James Aitchison was also a resident at that time. Francis Beattie and James Aitchison were there in 1703, Thomas Chisholme in at least 1710–16 and Robert Scott and John Laurie in at least 1716–18. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it covered 603 acres (with 100 acres of 'corn land meadow and pasture'), bounded by Outersiderig, Henwoodie common and Hoscote. Walter Scott was there in 1726. John Tait was there in 1735 and Henry Paterson in 1742. The tenant reported flood damage to the crops there in 1745. Robert Mitchellhill was there in 1757 and Andrew Goodfellow in 1766. Walter Scott is recorded there in 1797 and was tenant until his death in 1818. James Glendinning was shepherd there in at least 1808–1812. Another Walter Scott was farmer there in the 1860s. Provost William Scott Nichol farmed there for a time, and there are memorial cairns there for him and his brother. The western-most section of the Catrail is near here, with part to the north now planted over, and reaching towards a tributary of the Dean Burn, while a long shallow section is also visible to the south; however, there have been debates about precisely which sections might have been part of the Catrail, and which might have been later boundary ditches. There is also another similar linear earthwork above the farm to the west, on the southern slopes of Girnwood Hill. There is a waterfall to the west of the farm, on Girnwood Linn, this probably being the associated place referred to in old documents as 'the Lyne'. Just to the north east is a small unnamed loch, with enclosures nearby, while Girnwood Loch lies much further, behind Girnwood Hill (formerly spelled 'Greenwood' and variants; it first appeared as 'Grenwode' in 1315, becoming 'Grenewod' in 1439, 'Grenwod' in 1488, 'Grenewod' in 1493, 'the grene wod' in 1503, 'Grenewod' in 1535, 'Grenewoid et Lyn' in 1574, 'Grinwood' in 1636, 'Greinwood et Linn' in 1661, 'Girnwood' in 1710 and 'Grinwood' in 1812; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as 'Girnewoode', on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Girnwoode', is 'Girnewood' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is bizarrely shown twice on Roy's c.1750 map; the origin is Old English 'grene wudu', meaning 'the green wood').

Girnwud Linn (girn-wud-lin) n. steep gorge on part of the Hoscote Burn to the west of the farm of Girnwood. It also contains a waterfall. It is probably the place referred to from early times as 'the Lyne'. On the north side of the stream, near the bottom of the gorge is a roughly semi-circular earthwork, consisting of a ditch with a bank on each side. It measures about 75 m by 50 m, there is an entrance at the south-east end and it is best preserved at the north-west end. The interior has been ploughed and so there is no trace of any building foundations. There is a linear earthwork extending from here to more than half-way to Girnwood farm, the eastern end being the best preserved. The same earthwork may also have crossed the Linn, and extend towards Black Sike to the west. It has been suggested to have been related to the Catrail, but is clearly a less substantial boundary line.

Girnwud Loch (girn-wud-loch) n. small loch north-west of Girnwood farm, draining into the Hoscote Burn. North of here are remains of a linear earthwork, consisting of a bank and ditch, and stretching about 170 yards along a dyke to a point near the Ale Water; however, it has been destroyed by forestry plantation. This earthwork may have helped fuel the notion that the Catrail continued beyond Girnwood (it is marked, but not named, on Ainslie's 1773 map).

It is marked near Girnwood Linn on Ainslie's 1773 map.

Givanshaa (gi-vinz-haw) n. Givanshall, farmstead in Ashkirk Parish, marked to the east of Outer Huntly on Ainslie's 1773 map.

Glack (glawk) n. former name used for a local branch of the Scotts, apparently the same as Clack, closely related to the Scotts of Fenwick.

The seat was ‘Glack’ in Peeblesshire, but the family also owned Fenwick and Highchesters in the mid-to-late 17th century. The Laird of ‘Glak’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Roxburgh and Selkirk in about 1590 – ‘...Then he married a wife according to his mind, And betwixt them twa they did procreat Headshaw, Askirk, Sinton, and Glack' [CWS], ‘Oh! the laird of Glack, he must not be omitted, Though he sold the land of Goldieland long e'er he got it' [CWS] (perhaps from Gaelic ‘glac’, a hollow; there are several Glacks elsewhere in Scotland; it is ‘Glak’ in 1581 and 1585, ‘Glæke’ in 1597 and ‘Glak’ and ‘Glake’ in 1609).

gledness (gled-nis) n. gladness – '... Sae grains the warld to gledness frae the deid' [WL].

Gledsnest (gledz-nest) n. farmstead adjacent to Colterscleuch, formerly in Cavers Parish, now in Teviothead. It was locally known as 'the Nest'. John Grieve and family lived there from at least the 1820s to 40s. John Hume was farmer there in the 1860s. It is run as a bed and breakfast guest house (presumably related to gled, although also suggested to have obtained the name from being build by a Gledstains).

Gled's Nest (gledz-nest) n. area at the head of March Sike, in the headwaters of Northhope Burn. Now deep within Craik Forest, it is on the edge of Roxburghshire.

the Gledstain Porch (thū-gled-stin-pōrch)

n. burial aisle of the Gledstains family, forming the southern transept of Cavers Old Kirk. It is referred to in the Exchequer Rolls of 1524, and was probably even older. This once important family had lost almost all its estates and influence by the mid-18th century and the heritors had the aisle demolished.

Gledstains (gled-stānz, gled-stinz, glad-stānz)

n. (Gladstone) former family seat of the Gledstains of that Ilk, situated near Biggar in South Lanarkshire. Herbert 'de Gledestan' of Lanarkshire was recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. The seat moved to Cocklaw just outside Hawick around the early 15th century, after which the chief of the family was 'of that Ilk and Cocklaw'. The lands there passed to the 4th Earl of Angus after the downfall of the Black Douglasses in 1455 (although small parts continued to be held by branches of the family, including Arthurshiel). There were several alternative spellings, e.g. the Laird of 'Gledstanis' was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590 (the name presumably meant 'hawk's stone' originally).

n. (Gladstone) Abraham of Hunthill (17th C.) possibly son of George of Dod. In 1676 he was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Dod in his lands of Hunthill. He was listed paying the land tax in 1678 for land in Cavers Parish valued at £180; this was a combination of Dod and Hunthill (then included within the valuations of Cavers Parish). By 1707 the 2 lands had been disjoined and were later owned by the Potts of Dod and the Duke of Buccleuch, respectively. He could also be the 'Laird dod' who paid tax for land valued at £14 in Eckford Parish in 1678. Adam (15th/16th C.) resident of the Selkirk area. In 1530 he witnessed a transaction between Walter Scott in Ashkirk and his brother William Scott, over Lilliesleaf Mill. In 1532 he was represented by Andrew Shortreed when Thomas Ker, in the name of Walter Scott, requested that he repay his debt. Agnes (b.1677) daughter of Town Clerk Walter. She married Col. William Murray and went with him to Flanders. Her husband witnessed a baptism for her brother Walter in Hawick in 1722. Alexander (15th C.) probably son of Thomas of Roberton and Flex. However, it is also possible he was son of James of that Ilk and father of John of Cocklaw, recorded in the 1480s. In 1458 he had a confirmation by James II of 'terras dominicales de Kirktoune, et molendinum ejusden ac terras de Flexis in Baronia de Hawic'

(i.e. the lands and mill of Kirkton and the lands of Flex). In 1464/5 he was involved in a case of 'mortancestry', where William Douglas of Drumlanrig (and Baron of Hawick) had him removed from the lands of Flex and 'Kirkton Mains', which he claimed were wrongfully possessed. Neighbouring lands of East Mains had been removed for a similar reason from James of Cocklaw's widow Janet Murray in 1437. In 1464/5 Douglas had a sasine for these lands, in which he is also mentioned. Probably the same Alexander is recorded as witness to a sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6, along with Matthew and Cuthbert; he is listed between the Chaplain and Notary, so perhaps he held some official role. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess who witnessed transactions several times in Selkirk in the period 1531–41. He was on an inquest there in 1536/7. In 1540 he bought a tenement in Selkirk from Alexander Lauder and his wife Marion Hay and resolved a dispute with them in 1544. In 1541 he resigned a tenement in favour of his wife Katherine Fairley and in 1543/4 he and Fairley 'his kinsman' made a bond of payment. In 1542 and 1543 he received payment for bolls of barley. In 1561 he promised to pay back the £10 Scots he had borrowed from his son and heir, John. In 1562 he assigned a tenement to George Halliwell. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess in Selkirk, who was probably related to the earlier Alexander. He was 'elder' in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving Marion, widow of William Scott, Burgess of Selkirk and another involving Scott of Haining and Scott of Goldielands. He may be the Burgess of Selkirk of that name who in 1580 gave up an annual rent in Selkirk in favour of John Scott in Whitheope. Also in 1580 he was 'elder burgess' when, with the consent of his wife Katherine Turnbull, he gave a tenement in Selkirk to his daughter and heir Helen. Furthermore, in 1580 he was executor for the will and inventory of Janet, who may have been widow of a man called Dunn; he was left 56 shillings, while his daughters Helen and Margaret were left £6 and £4, respectively. It seems like he was a close relative of Janet, such as her brother. In 1581 his daughter Helen is recorded receiving redemption money from him and he also resigned a tenement to Helen and her husband Thomas Dobie. He witnessed further transactions in Selkirk in 1581. Also in 1581 he was among those chosen to make a 'stent roll' in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he and his daughter Helen declared that they had received money from several people, including from the testament of 'Dony Gledstanis'. Also in 1581/2 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Helen and Gavin 'Gledstanis late of Stobbis' (who sold Stobs to Gavin Eliott); the couple were to receive his tenement in Selkirk (although he reserved the liferent for him and his wife), while the groom would bring 400 merks. Alexander (16th C.) recorded as 'younger' in Selkirk in 1579 and as 'younger burgess' in 1580 and 1580/1. He may have been son or other near relative of the earlier Alexander. Andrew (14th/15th C.) recorded as a Scotsman who was released from prison in Norwich, where he had been committed in violation of the truce with England. Andrew (15th C.) listed as 'And. de Gledstane' in 1451 when he witnessed a charter relating to the Church of Brechin. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other early family members. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed on the 'retour of inquest' performed at Cavers in 1497/8 for Robert Elliot inheriting his grandfather's lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch. John of Winningtonhall is also listed and so possibly a close relative. Ann (c.1780–1850) daughter of John, the Town Clerk. Her and her sister Christian were served heir to their father in 1808 and sold 80 High Street in 1809. However, in 1811 she was probably the 'Miss Gladstanes' listed along with 'Mrs. Richardson' as owners of part of the particulate lands of Hawick. With her sister, she later lodged with Wintrup the tailor in an old house where the Orrock Church was built. They were known locally as 'the last of the Gledstanes'. Her sister was said to have died unmarried, although some accounts say she married Richardson (so perhaps there was another sister). She herself married John Scott, 'Jock the Turk'. In about 1874 her family's former lands (presumably on the High Street) were listed belonging to 'Feuars of Mrs. Richardson and Miss Gladstanes' Lands'. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Archibald of Gledstanis' in the 1500 appraisal of the lands of Whithope. It is unclear how he was related to the other Gledstains. He may be the Archibald who was granted the lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. He may be the 'archibaldo gledstanis' from whom 19 sheep were reported stolen from his church lands near Dumfries in 1504. Probably the same Archibald was on the panel of 'retour' in 1517 for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branhholme. He may be the son of John, who was nephew of John of that Ilk and Cocklaw, mentioned in connection with a raid on the lands of Cademuir and Hundleshope in 1518. Archibald of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.) resident of Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is recorded as 'Mr Archibald Gedstaines' (presumably an error for 'Gledstaines') and he was taxed on 3 hearths. The 'Mr' is probably just suggesting that he was a landowner, rather than being a preacher or teacher. Probably the same 'Mr' Archibald was witness to a baptism for Rev. Patrick Cunningham in 1671 and in 1685 when he (along with James of that Ilk) witnessed a baptism for John of Hilliesland. He was again 'Mr' in 1696 and 1697 when he leased the farm of Northhouse from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He also contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was also in Northhouse when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Scott in Hawick and for Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1698. He was still 'Mr' and 'of whitla' when he (along with James Gray in Whitlaw) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Anderson in 1706. Bartholomew (15th/16th C.) witness in 1500, along with George and William, to a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton. It is possible that they were connected with Kelso Abbey. Christian (d.1816) daughter of Town Clerk John. Her and her sister Ann were served heir to their father in 1808 (their brother James presumably dying before that). Some accounts say that she died unmarried, but she appears to have married manufacturer Walter Richardson. In 1811 she was probably the 'Mrs. Richardson' listed along with 'Miss Glestanes' as owners of part of the particulate lands of Hawick. Cuthbert (15th C.) recorded as 'of Gledstains' when he was witness to a Cranston family sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6. David (15th C.) received 3 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme in 1491/2. He may be the same 'Dauid Gledstanis' who witnessed a document for Scott of Branhholme in 1500. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) resident of the Selkirk area. She was recorded in 1532 as mother of Andrew Brydon, when her son agreed to pay her, with the money related to Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme (perhaps as laird of the associated land). Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) wife of Robert Ker, Burgess of Selkirk, and mother of Mark Ker. In 1534 she donated her liferent of a tenement and orchard in Selkirk to the chapel there. She also produced a charter for her lands 'of Wr...' in Hundleshope before 'bailie James Gledstanis and lord superior of the same'; this may have been James of that Ilk, who was perhaps her brother or father. The witnesses included Richard and John, who were probably also relatives. Probably the same Elizabeth in

1537 promised to follow her letter of assignation to Robert Turnbull regarding wards, reliefs and non-entry of Philiphaugh. Lieut. Francis (d.1645) father of Walter the Town Clerk, and brother of Capt. James. At age 21 (or perhaps 29) he was killed at the Battle of Aulderne, near Nairn, fighting for the Covenanter army alongside Douglas of Cavers and nine other local gentlemen. He married Margaret Stewart, and his son Walter Francis was born in Hawick in 1642. Francis of Whitlaw (17th C.) probably directly related to John of Whitlaw who died in about 1672. He may have been son of an earlier John. He is easy to confuse with the Francis of Whitlaw (son of John) who was born in 1643. He may be the 'Francis Gledstaines' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He managed the Cavers estates when 'the Good Lady Cavers' was in prison for her covenanting principles. He served as Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton in 1657–59, taking over from his father, who was certainly dead by 1660 (according to a document of the Scotts of Buccleuch). In 1661 it is recorded that he owed about £3500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Hassendean and elsewhere, where he and his late father had been Chamberlain. He was recorded in a discharge in 1663. In 1671 he was Bailie of the Regality of Hawick for William Douglas of Drumlanrig when there was a court of Regality held in Hawick. Francis of Whitlaw (b.1643) son of John, with his mother possibly being Anna Scott. He was also referred to as being 'of Flex'. It is unclear how he was related to the Francis who was recorded in the previous few decades. In 1672 he was served heir to his father John of Whitlaw in the lands of the Flex (perhaps suggesting that there is more than one generation here). He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1675. He paid the land tax in Hawick Parish in 1678 for £266 13s 4d. He may be the same Francis of Whitlaw who was recorded several times in the 1690s and until about 1704. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes 'Wiggam' and their daughter Isobell was born in 1670. It is possible he is the Francis 'servitor to Falnesh' who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson (younger in Castlehill) in 1709. Francis of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.) probably a descendant of the earlier Francis of Whitlaw. In 1692 he leased the farm of Meikle Whitlaw (which he held for service for his lifetime) as well as Little Whitlaw. He is recorded providing timber for repairing the town Tolbooth in 1692, as well as timber 'for mounting of the steeple where the bell hinges'; this was valued at £40, making him the first name among the subscribers of the new bell, listed on the enactment of the Council in 1694. Also in 1692 he made a proposal to the Town Council that he be allowed to enclose part of his land, but also including 'a little brae upon our syd of the march betwixt him and us'; he would plant trees there, with the agreement that the Town receive half of the timber, when it was ready to chop down. He seems likely to be the local Gledstains who was taxed for 5 hearths at his house in 1694. His brother may have been Archibald, and although it is unclear if he had any children, it is possible that James and John may have been his sons. He witnessed baptisms for tenants at the Flex in 1700 and 1702, for apothecary Walter Scott in 1703 and for gardener (for Gideon Scott in Fenwick) Walter Paterson in 1704. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, on a list of Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and may be the Francis of Whitlaw who was still a Commissioner in 1704. It is possible he was the Francis in Braidhaugh, servant to the Laird of Falnash, who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1707 (for James Stevenson, tenant in Harwood and for the tenant and shepherd in Slaidhills). Scott of Satchells dedicated a chapter of his history to him. A sundial belonging to him was saved from destruction by William Norman Kennedy and presented to the Museum collection; it bore the initials 'F.G.', the motto 'Fide et Virtute' and the date 1693. Francis (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1683 he was fined for attacking Bailie Thorbrand and for 'violently taking 4 dukes [presumably ducks] on the street, which the baylyea had first caught'. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Andrew Angus. He was listed as a wright among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Francis on the east side of Hawick, who appears on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1702 (or perhaps 1712) he was fined by the Kirk Session for being found drinking in a public house after 10 o'clock; however, he 'protested yt. he was not in drinke'. He could be the Francis in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1711 for carrier William Rae (along with smith John Scott). He witnessed further baptisms in 1712 for Bailie James Burn and for William Sanderson, in 1716 for smith John Scott, in 1718 (along with smith John Scott) for weaver Walter White and in 1719 for gardener John Tait. He married Marion Scott and their children included: William (b.1678); Christian (b.1680); Marion (b.1682); Margaret (b.1682); Helen (b.1684); John (b.1686); and James (b.1689). Witnesses to the 1680 baptism were Mr. John Purdom and tailor Walter Gledstains, in 1682 were 'Mr Walter Gladstains' (probably the Town Clerk, suggesting that they were related), shoemaker Thomas Turnbull and John Riddell and in 1684 were Walter again and 'student' William. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1723 he married Helen Allan, whose surname is given as 'Allan or Bridges'. Their children included: Margaret (b.1725); and John (b.1728). He could be the Francis, son of John and Margaret Harkness, born in 1685. He could be the Francis, innkeeper, who was a Bailie in the 1730s and 1740s and who in 1723 witnessed a baptism for weaver John Weens. He was one of the 'present Bailies' in 1742 (along with Robert Boyd) when he witnessed baptisms for Rev. William Somerville and for merchant John Ruecastle. Francis (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Skelfhill in 1745 when his daughter 'Kathren' was baptised. It is possible he was the same as one of the other Francis. Francis (18th C.) merchant in Hawick who was Cornet in 1744. He may be the Francis, son of Thomas and Bessie Sanderson, born in Hawick in 1718. It was stated in the Town Book that he was 'to go to the moss on Saturday yr. after', this being perhaps the first indication of events taking place on Common Riding Saturday. He is probably the merchant Francis who witnessed baptisms in 1741 for druggist Gideon Scott, in 1742 for gardener Alexander Donald and in 1745 for James Riddell (at Menslaws). He was listed as a merchant in the baptismal record for one of his children in 1746. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children baptised in Hawick included Thomas (b.1746) and Sarah (b.1747). The witnesses in 1746 were merchant Gideon Scott and ex-Bailie Robert Howison and in 1747 were merchants Gideon Scott and Charles Tudhope. Gavin of Stobs (16th C.) recorded in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement in Riddell between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. He is also recorded in 1580 when he sold the lands of Stobs (for 400 merks) to Gavin Eliott, who became the first Eliott Laird there. In 1581 there was a sasine (recorded in Selkirk) for him to inherit the lands of Stobs from his brother George; this was witnessed by Gavin Elliot of Baillielie (to whom he sold Stobs) and other Elliots, as well as 2 tenants in Swinstead.

In 1581/2 he was 'late of Stobbis' (suggesting that the sale of the land to Gavin Eliott had already happened) when there was a marriage contract between him and Helen, daughter of Alexander, Burgess in Selkirk. The couple were to be given a tenement in Selkirk by Alexander, while he was to bring 400 merks as part of the arrangement. It is possible that he was related in some way to the Gledstains of Selkirk. George (15th C.) recorded in 1484/5 as a witness to Walter Ker of Cessford assigning Dolphinston to his son Mark. It is unclear how he was related to other members of the family. Perhaps the same George was recorded in 1489, along with William, as witness to a retour for the Kers of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. Probably the same George (along with William and Bartholomew) was witness to a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caver-ton in 1500. He could be related to the George who had sasines for Craig in Dumfriesshire in 1458 and 1459. He may be the 'Gorgoni de Gledstansys' who leased Hundleshope in Peeblesshire in 1471. George (15th/16th C.) obtained a sasine for the lands of Gladstanes in Roxburghshire in 1503, this being granted by Ninian Glendinning. It is unclear which lands are referred to here. He is probably the 'georg of gledstanis' who witnessed a bond between Turnbells at Caerlenrig in 1505. In 1510 he witnessed a charter for this same Ninian Glendinning, for lands in the Barony of Scraesburgh. He may be the 'George Gledstanis' listed in 1526 as a brother of Adam Scott in Clarilaw and William Scott, when a large number of Borderers had remission for attacking the Earl of Arran; this would suggest he was a step-brother or brother-in-law (i.e. he married a daughter of James of Kirkurd). He may be the George who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531. George (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed separately from another George, but right before Walter, who is probably related. George of Stobs (d.bef. 1581) recorded as deceased in 1581 when his brother Gavin received sasine for his lands of Stobs. It is unclear how he was related to other local Gledstains. George of Dod (17th C.) possibly son of Walter. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. In 1643 he is recorded paying tax for lands valued at £180 in Cavers Parish; these appear to have been Dod and Hunthill, which were disjoined before 1707. He may be the Laird of Dod whose lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £700, and whose mother was listed as liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish, valued at £200. He is recorded as heir to Walter of Dod in 1649 when he was infefted in the lands of Hunthill (in Cavers Parish) by William, Earl of Lothian. He may have been father of Mary who married George Scott of Syn-ton. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He may have been father of Abraham of Hunthill, who was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Dod in 1676. Gorgon (d.1456) probably a son of the Laird of Gledstains. He was described as ‘Gorgon de Gledstans of Hundwellishop’, and must have held the family lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire. After his death the property passed into the King’s ward. He was mentioned in relation to the lands of Hundleshope in a later charter of 1471. It is possible that ‘Gorgon’ should be translated as ‘George’. Herbert ‘de Gledestan’ (13th/14th C.), the earliest recorded Gladstone, from the county of Lanark, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore an 8-leafed flower and the name ‘S’HERB D’GLEDSTAN’. He probably gained the family lands in the Parish of Liberton, about 4 miles north of Biggar. His exact descendants are uncertain, but were known to be in Roxburghshire in 1336. It is likely that he received his Lanarkshire lands from the Douglasses, because of the close connection between the families for many subsequent generations; this may also have been the origin of the move to lands in Roxburghshire. A tradition says that the family shield once bore ‘the bleeding head of a savage or Saracen’, perhaps relating to the Crusades. The name Herbert occurred many times later in the Dumfriesshire and Peeblesshire branches. Herbert (15th C.) rendered the accounts of Annandale in the Exchequer Rolls for 1455. He is referred to as ‘eodem’, i.e. ‘of that Ilk’ in 1456 when he witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell. He was probably the Baillie of Dumfries mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in 1460. Probably the same Herbert also witnessed a charter in Annandale in 1487. Herbert (15th/16th C.) Rector of Dornoch, he held lands in Over Kelwood in Dumfriesshire. He was recorded in several charters in the years 1504–08. Perhaps the same Herbert witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1525. He is probably the Herbert, Burgess of Dumfries, whose great-grandson Mark was served heir in 1610 (as well as to the lands of his son, also Mark). He may have been succeeded by Thomas, who had a charter of Over Kelwood in 1509. Herbert (d.1569) Town Clerk of Dundee. In 1541 he married Mirabella, who was daughter of his cousin (with a dispensation from the Pope) Matthew of Over Kelwood. His first wife died in 1555 and he secondly married Margaret Hepburn. He was succeeded in Over Kelwood and Craigs by his son Walter (also called ‘of that Ilk’) and also had a son George, who was Archbishop of St. Andrews. Herbert (16th/17th C.) schoolmaster in Dumfries, recorded in 1601. In 1606 he was named in a grant by John of Over Kelwood and Craigs (to whom he was presumably a distant relative). Given his forename, he was surely a descendent of earlier Gledstains. Herbert (b.c.1600) born in Dumfries, he joined the army of Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden in about 1640. He received lands in Oestergottland in 1647, with the form of his name being ‘Gladsten’. This branch of the family continued in Sweden until 1761. James (d.bef. 1437) 6th of that Ilk, son of William, and younger brother of John, who he appears to have succeeded. He also had another brother Thomas, although it is unclear who was older. He probably inherited Hundleshope in Peebleshire from his mother (Margaret Turnbull), along with Gledstains in Lanarkshire and Cocklaw in Roxburghshire through his father. He was witness to a charter along with his brother Thomas in 1404 (regarding the rights of Melrose Abbey for the benefits of Cavers Parish), and resided at Cocklaw in Cavers Parish. He was the owner of the tower during the famous siege of Cocklaw (i.e. Ormiston) by the Percys in 1403. Also in 1403 he was probably the ‘James of Gledstanis’ appointed as bailie of the regality of Sprouston for Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1413 he is recorded holding the position of Bailie to the 4th Earl of Douglas, in the Regality of Sprouston, and possibly also in the Barony of Cavers (like his forefathers held for their Douglas superiors) in a sasine for John, son of Sir William of Cranston. In 1424 he was on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick for lands in Hownam; Robert was also listed and so probably related. He married Janet Murray, who was involved in a law-suit against the Baron, Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1437 over ownership of East Mains. The next generation is uncertain, but his grandson was probably John of that Ilk and Cocklaw. He must also have been related to Alexander (perhaps his nephew) who lost the lands of Flex and ‘Kirkton Mains’ to the Baron in another court case of 1464/5. James of Cocklaw (d.bef. 1544) son of John. In 1519 he entered into a marriage contract with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, to marry his son and heir

John to one of Sir Walter's daughters, or failing that any other woman Sir Walter selected; this involved a promise to give lands in Peeblesshire and Cavers to the couple, with Sir Walter promising to try to preserve the lands of Cocklaw intact in future. The Peeblesshire lands were in the barony of Hundleshope and the Cavers lands were 'Gud-disclucht, Vnishop, Binkkis and Langbittis'. He may be the James described as 'lord superior of the same' in 1533 when Elizabeth (wife of Robert Ker, Burgess of Selkirk) produced a charter for her lands in Hundleshope. In 1533/4 he witnessed a bond between Patrick Murray of Falahill and William Stewart of Traquair. He was said to have been in possession of Cocklaw in 1534, when a fresh seal was added to the deed granting Hundleshope to John Turnbull, hence confirming him in those lands. Although the family no longer had the lands of Gledstanes in Lanarkshire, they were still called 'of that Ilk', and Arthurshiel, a neighbouring property was still owned by a branch of the family. He was succeeded by his son John, who is recorded as his heir in a dispute in 1544 with Robert Scott in Howford. James of Cocklaw (1547–c.1615) son of John. He was 12th of that Ilk. In 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle; his surety was Sir William Douglas of Cavers. He was probably the James of Cocklaw who signed the bond uniting against the Liddesdale thieves in 1569. In 1569 he gave surety for Archibald Elliot of Corriesike (along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who was surety for other Elliots) and was found liable when he failed to appear, with his lands and goods to be held if he did not pay the £1000. Along with Walter Scott of Goldielands, he gave security for the appearance of a number of Hawick residents (Allan Deans, John Scott, son to Philip's Jock, and Johnnie Cavers) in a court case in Edinburgh in 1571, possibly connected with a raid. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. According to the register of the Privy Council he was warded in 1571, had 'surety in relief' in 1571 and 1574 and served as surety in 1576. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and the Regent (and not to assist Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst), with his surety being William Ker of Caverton. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573, 'with my hand at the pen'. Also in 1574 he served as surety for a large number of Borderers, specifically residents of Hummelknowes, Coliforthill and Adderstoneshiel; he was found liable to pay 5000 for not removing the thieves (who were mostly Croziers). In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branhholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his father Sir Walter Scott. He was probably the 'little Gladstane, good in need' who led the local contingent at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575; the land near Bonchester known as 'Little Gledstains' may be connected with him in some way. He was a prominent Borderer of his time, his name being mentioned 32 times in the Register of the Privy Council, in connection with either Roxburghshire or Peeblesshire. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains who was on the defence side in the trial of 2 sons of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule in 1577/8. In the 1570s he was one of the 'curators' of the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane. Also in 1576 he was a surety along with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Langlands of that Ilk for tenants in Lairhope and Broadlee, as well as George Elliot, 'the Cleg', and John Stoddart, 'cobilman to the Lard of Langlandis'. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Laids who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned, and was declared liable for the fines associated with the pledges made in 1576. Also in 1578/9 he was cautioner for Robin Elliot of Redheuch, pledging that he would not raid into England. In 1580 he, Walter Scott of Goldielands and Robert Elliot of Redheugh complained to the Privy Council about Muckle Whitlaw being raided; they raised the fray, following the thieves to England. However, on their return through Liddesdale they were attacked by a band of Armstrongs and Elliots near Whithaugh. He was probably in the party that rode off to follow the raiders, and his brother Walter was killed. One of his farms was raided by Elliots and Armstrongs in 1580, as well as the farm tenanted by John Gledstains at Whitlaw. Also in 1580 he complained (along with the Countess of Bothwell and Wat Scott of Harden) of thefts and outrages committed by the Elliots on their farms. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George Scott of Synton and Walter Scott of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he was allied with Walter Scott of Goldielands and Robert Elliot of Redheugh when they had a set of complaints made against them by Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; they were all charged to appear before the Privy Council with assurances for their supporters. He was a cautioner (although with Robert and Mungo, Burgesses of Edinburgh) for Walter Scott of Goldielands being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581. Also in 1581 he witnessed a 'letter of slains' in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. Also in 1583/4 he was involved in a caution for his tenant Thomas Burnet and others in his 3 husbandlands in Hundleshope, that John Scott there would not harm them. He was the Laird of Gledstains who gave assurances in 1584 for himself and other Gledstains, with the Elliot chiefs standing as assurance. In instructions from the King to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus (Lieutenant on the Border) in 1586, he is listed along with the Lairds of Buccleuch, Howpasley, Redheugh, Braidlie, Whithaugh and others as chiefs in upper Teviotdale. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. Also in 1589 he was surety for John Turnbull of Minto. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Also in 1590, Walter Scott of Goldielands acted as cautioner for him. He was probably the Laird of 'Gledstanis' listed on the 1590 'Roll of the Clans' and is also probably the 'James Gledstanis' who was witness in 1595 to the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. In 1592 his cautioner was Charles Geddes of 'Rauchane' that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. In 1594/5 he made a bond that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm Gavin Eliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill; this was signed at Hawick. In 1598 his name was transcribed 'of Atrei of Cocklaw' when he served as surety for John of Craig in a bond registered in Selkirk. In 1599 he was surety for himself and for 'his man' Simon, brother of Philip Scott of Dryhope, that they would 'observe the King's peace'. In 1600 there was a complaint by the Provost and Bailies of Peebles that he had come to 'Caidmure', along with his son and heir James, his natural son Robert and his nephew James, where they slew James Dickson; they were all denounced as rebels for non-appearance. He was 'of Cocklaw' in 1602 when he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1605 he was in court with the family of Thomas Peebles, Burgess of Peebles, who was murdered in 1561, with the family still seeking satisfaction; his sureties were John of Winningtonrig and John Rutherford, Bailie of Jedburgh. His name appears in the Register of the Privy Seal no less than 32 times, in connection with both Roxburghshire and Peeblesshire. He was regularly fined (e.g. in 1608 along with Horsburgh of that Ilk and Halden of that Ilk, binding them to keep the peace), imprisoned and denounced as a troublemaker, although he lived to a reasonably old age. In 1610 he and William Scott of Howpasley had an action against them by James Douglas of Drumlanrig for not paying taxes on their lands of 'Ramseclewis, Howpaisley and Schawis', and on his lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. He signed a bond in 1612 (along with several Scotts) for keeping peace in the Borders. In 1614 he resigned his lands of 'Hundillishope, Acolmfeild, Wodegrevingtoun' and land at the east end of Peebles to his son James, younger, and his wife; this suggests he was quite old by then. He was succeeded by his son James (who was succeeded after only a few years by Walter). His daughter Margaret married David, son of Hector Turnbull of Wauchope according to a marriage contract of 1593 (not 1567 as in one record). Another daughter Liliass married Richard Rutherford 'Dickon Draw-the Sword', who led the Jedburgh contingent at the Raid of the Reidswire. He may also be the James of Cocklaw whose daughter Barbara married John, younger son of John Rutherford of Hunthill. James of Cocklaw (c.1584-c.1620) son of James, he was the 13th of that Ilk. He led a similar life to that of his father, committing theft, murder, etc. In 1600 he was son and heir of his father when the pair, along with his brother Robert and cousin James, went to 'Caidmure', where they slew James Dickson; this was a continuation of the family's dispute over lands adjacent to their possession of Hundleshope. However, he was Laird of Cocklaw for only a few years. In 1606 he was 'appeirand of Coklaw' when he served as cautioner for Thomas Turnbull (younger of Wauchope) who was accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood. He was still 'apparent of Cocklaw' in 1608 when he appeared for Archibald Douglas and others, swearing not to harm anyone in Peebles. In 1614 he was granted the lands of 'Hundillishope, Acolmfeild, Wodegrevingtoun' which had been resigned by his father James, elder, together with his wife Beatrice Ker. In 1616 he (or perhaps his father) was on the jury for the trial of the ruffians hired by Jean Scott of Satchells and Lady Scott of Howpasley to mutilate the sheep and cattle belonging to Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1618 he was said to be son and heir of James, and former owner of the lands of Hundleshope and others in Peebleshire, when John Scott had a charter from James VI. He may be the James who was a Hawick Bailie in the 1620s. He married Beatrix Ker in about 1607, and hence Beatrix, who married James Grieve of Commonsides, may have been his daughter. He was succeeded by Walter of Cocklaw and may have also had sons Robert and James. In 1620 Beatrix Ker, Lady Gledstanes (presumably his widow by then) and her 3 sons William, Robert and James, led an assault on the old lands of Cademuir near Peebles that the family had disputed for generations; they were charged with being armed with 'swerdis, gantillatis, plaitislevis, halbertis, lances, speiris, Jedburgh stauffisi'. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600 as 'brother-son' to James of Cocklaw. Along with his uncle and his cousins James and Robert, they were accused of killing James Dickson near Peebles. It is unclear who his father was. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. Bailie James (16th/17th C.) Magistrate of Hawick recorded in 1627, along with Robert Scott. They were the Town's Bailies when 16 men from Hawick were listed as being 'idle and masterless' and appropriate for sending to the wars in Germany. When the men were not produced he said that 'he had not power, force nor friendship within the town of Hawick to apprehend the persons abovementioned or to exhibit thame'; it is unclear exactly what that meant (since it also states that the other Bailie did have 'both power and friendship within the town'). He is probably the James who acted as witness to the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627. Capt. James (d.1645) grandfather of Walter the Town Clerk, he must have been a near relative of the Lairds of Cocklaw. He was part of Sir William Douglas' Covenanter force, and was killed at the Battle of Aulderne along with his brother Francis. James (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish. He married Marion Tudhope about 1668 and her will is recorded in 1682. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Forrest and their children included: Alexander (b.1670); and Gavin (b.1673). Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Councillor and Magistrate in the 1660s and Magistrate in the 1670s. He was on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He was also recorded as Bailie in Hawick in a deed of 1673. He may be the 'Baylyea Gladstaines' recorded in 1675 among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He is probably the 'late baylyea' in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the 'Bailyea Gladstaines' who paid tax on 2 hearths in the east-side of Hawick in 1694. He may be the James, married to Isobel 'Whyllance' (i.e. Whullans), whose children baptised in Hawick included: William (b.1673); Isobell (b.1675); John (b.1677); James (b.1678); and Christian (b.1680). Probably Rachel (b.1683), with the mother's name given as 'Helen Whillance' was also his daughter. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Scott in 1688 and another for John Aitchison in 1682. He was 'balyie' when he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Turnbull in 1685. James (17th C.) of Hummelknowes. Recorded in a letter to Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1692. James (17th C.) listed as a resident of Effledge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Laing in 1700. James (b.1701), Janet (b.1703), Euphan (b.1706) and Bessie (b.1710) could have been his children. For the 1703 baptism he was recorded being in Whitehaugh and the witnesses were James Gray in Whitlaw and Francis Henderson in Flex. James (d.bef. 1734) 16th of that Ilk and Laird of Cocklaw, probably son of William. Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his Scott history to him in 1686. He registered arms in the period 1672-78. He was probably the Laird in 1678 who paid the land tax on £1240 in Cavers Parish. His brother John became a tailor's apprentice in 1681. He may be the Gladstains of 'Ormistoun' who was among the local lairds who were taken off to Edinburgh Castle as supporters of the Covenanters in 1683. He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He (along with 'Mr Archibald') witnessed a baptism in 1685 for John of Hilliesland. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for doctor William Scott in Hawick in 1687, along with Town Clerk Walter. He was 'of Cocklaw' in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. In 1695 and 1700 he witnessed baptisms for John Scott of Gorrenberry. He was certainly still living in 1707, when he is recorded as gaining permission to cart divots off the Common. However, a Robert 'of that Ilk' is recorded on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704, so the succession is unclear around this time. He supposedly died unmarried, perhaps shortly before 1734 when his property was divided among his heirs; however, it is possible he died earlier and was succeeded by Robert (perhaps a younger brother). Cocklaw passed to Janet Gledstains, who was either his daughter or perhaps the daughter of Robert. James (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1714 for William Sanderson, in 1717 for Bailie James Burn and Christian Gledstains (who may have been related) and in 1719 for William Bulloch. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Dodburn. His son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1718. William (b.1731), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, may also have been his son. It is possible he is the same man as the blacksmith in Hawick in the 1720s. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish. In 1735 he was paid by the Council 'for making ye coulter' (presumably for using on the Common). He married Janet Moscrop and their children included: Bessie (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); and Walter (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Nixon and John Scott 'in Hawick'. He could be the James, son of Walter and Janet Scott, baptised in Hawick in 1688. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1715. His children were probably Margaret (b.1712), Marion (b.1715), Isabel (b.1718) and Margaret (b.1722). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was son of Walter and in 1718 married Marion Gledstains, daughter of another Walter. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hobkirk and their children included Janet (b.1703), Euphan (b.1706), Bessie (b.1710) and Margaret (b.1728). The gap in births make it possible there are 2 separate families here. The witnesses in 1728 appear to have been John Scott and John Paterson. James (18th C.) outdoor servant working on the Wells estate in about 1730. He is mentioned in the estate book of factor Archibald Jerdan, described as a sort of handy-man. James (18th C.) possibly brother of Bailie Gledstains, they were together given responsibility about 1740 for collecting subscriptions 'west the water' for paying for the Teviot Bridge. He would be the tailor who witnessed a baptism for wright Walter Scott in Hawick in 1725. He could be the James described as a tailor in Hawick in 1735. He may be the tailor James who witnessed a baptism for weaver William Crozier in Hawick in 1718. He may be the James (along with another John) who witnessed an Episcopal baptism for John of Whitlaw in 1753. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in 1753. James (18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Jean Bulloch and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1759. James (d.bef. 1808) only surviving son of Town Clerk John. He owned the property at 80 High Street that was later the Liberal Club. However, he did not long outlive his father, since his sisters Christian and Ann were served heirs to their father in 1808 and sold the property in 1809. He could be the James, son of John and Ann Weir baptised in Hawick in 1766. James (b.c.1780s) labourer at Deanburnhaugh, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. James (b.c.1795) farm labourer and gamekeeper who lived at Branhholme Town and later at Stintyknowe. He was probably related to the earlier Gledstains who were at Chapelhill. His wife was Barbara and their children included Betty, Agnes and Margaret. In 1861 he was 'Formerly Gamekeeper' at 'Stintyknows Far House'. Janet nee Murray (15th C.) wife of James of that Ilk. In 1437, after the death of her husband, she was involved in a dispute with the Baron of Hawick, Sir William Douglas, over the lands of the East Mains of Hawick; the 'retour' decided in favour of Douglas. Her name is given as 'Joneta de Murrauia'. Janet (16th C.) owner of 1½ particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. She may have been widow of a local Gledstains. Janet (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when her will and inventory was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books, 'made by her own mouth in her own house'. She was 'alias Done', suggesting that she may have been a widow, with her husband being a Mr. Down or Dunn. Her executors were Alexander, elder Burgess of Selkirk (who may have been a close relation, such as a brother) and William Curren. The list is given of those who owed money to her, and those to whom she owed money (including Katherine Scott, widow of Ninian Scott and Marion Gledstains, widow of William Scott). She left money to Margaret, wif of Thomas Dunn (who were surely related to either her or her husband), her son-in-law Thomas Brydon, her executor William Curren and Alexander, and Alexander's daughters Helen and Margaret. Janet (d.1737) probably the daughter of James, the 16th of that Ilk (although he is also said to have died unmarried, but perhaps this is confused and he merely died with no male heirs); however, she is also said to have been daughter of Robert of that Ilk. She died unmarried and in 1738 the lands of Dod were divided among her 'heirs-portioners', who were John of Whitlaw, Robert Rutherford and Robert's wife Esther, sister of Robert of that Ilk (and hence presumably her aunt). Cocklaw was eventually sold in about 1741. John (d.1412) 5th Gladstains of that Ilk, eldest son of William and Margaret Turnbull. He was probably called after his maternal grandfather. His mother transferred her properties to him when William died, some time in the reign of Robert III (probably the late 1390s). This included Hundleshope in Peeblesshire and Roberton in Selkirkshire (perhaps the first record of the name 'Roberton'), as well as land in the town of Selkirk. It is also possible that the lands of Ormiston (or Cocklaw), Orchard, Hummelknowes, etc. near Hawick were acquired by the Gledstains through this Turnbull connection; Margaret's father John was surely related to the Turnbells of the Borthwick Water and Selkirkshire. This was the start of the family of Gledstains of that Ilk moving their centre of activity to Roxburghshire. He was probably succeeded by his brother James, or possibly by Thomas and then James. John (15th C.) possibly 7th of that Ilk, perhaps succeeding James, who may have been his father. However, the information is uncertain, partly because of the decline of the Earls of Douglas, their overlords. He was referred to as 'Johanni de Gledstanys de eisdem' in 1456 in the Exchequer Rolls for Peeblesshire. On the fall of the house of Douglas, Gledstanys in Lanarkshire had been forfeited to the Crown, and was granted to the Earl of Angus in 1457. However, John also still held Hundleshope (in Peeblesshire) in 1482. Around this time the Dumfriesshire branch of the family separated off. In 1463 he was on the panel of retour for the 5th Earl of Angus 'Bell the Cat' as heir to his father. He is probably the John Gledstains who acted as one of the Earl of Angus' Bailies for infefting David Scott of Branhholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. He was probably the John of Cocklaw who was witness to a 1483 document dealing with Denholm Mains. He may have been the 'John Gestanis' who witnessed a 1487 sasine for the lands of Boonraw and the 'Johannem Gledstanis' who was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the lands and titles of Branhholme and Buccleuch. In 1484/5 there is a record of a dispute between the Burgh of Peebles and him (together with Thomas Lowes of Manor) over lands at Cademuir (bordering Hundleshope); the decree that he and Lowes refrain from encroaching on Peebles Common was ratified by James IV in 1505/6. However, there was a further complaint that he sent 'his houshald men and servandis, and cruelly dang and hurt thair hirdis and servandis that were keptand thair corne and gudis within thair said propir landis, and left twa of thame liand on the feild for deid', after which he sent his nephew and son, with 26 of their accomplices to drive the people off their own lands. In 1492 there was a decree from the Privy Council against him, as well as William and Archibald Douglas of Cavers, to pay to John Rutherford of Hundalee the 100 merks due to his grandfather, Nicholas Rutherford. He may be the Laird of Gledstains who was surety for John Young in Deanbrae in 1494/5. Either he or the next generation would have been the Laird of Gledstains who was fined at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502 for failure to 'give suit' for his lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. John of Winningtonhall (15th C.) recorded as 'of Wyndetounhall' in 1463 when he acted as Sheriff of Roxburghshire for the sasine infefting David Scott in the Barony of Branhholme. He is as 'of Wyndytourhall' when witness to a document of 1483 dealing with Denholm Mains. John of Cocklaw was also a signatory, so he was probably a relative, possibly even his son. In 1484/5 he was 'Gledstanis of Wynditonehall' when he was first witness to the transfer of the lands of Whitchesters to Robert (of Allahaugh), son of Sir David Scott of Branhholme. He was probably the John 'Gledstanis' who was one of the witnesses for a sasine of lands in Denholm and Cavers in 1491/2. He may be the John 'gledstanys' who acted as surety for the sons of Matthew in Hassendean in 1494/5. In 1497/8 he was on the panel at Cavers to rule on the inheritance of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch by Robert Elliot; he is there 'of Winditonhaw'. He may be the John recorded in 1502 when 40 geese were stolen from him from out of 'aquam de teviot' by Adam Grahamslaw. He was probably an ancestor of the later John of Winningtonhall. John (1482–1518) 8th of that Ilk and Cocklaw, probably the grandson of James who suffered the famous Siege of Cocklaw. He still appears to have owned lands in Peeblesshire; He may be the John who presented Thomas Linton as suitor for his lands of Melvilleslands at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1502 and William Dickson for his lands of 'Wodgrewington' in 1502/3. In 1509 he leased lands at Cademuir to John Murray. In 1509 he was also on the 'retour of inquest' (listed first, in fact) for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas.

He is named in a Douglas of Cavers document in 1509/10, verifying their lands and Barony, except for the lands held by him, as shown by a charter of David II (although it is unclear whether this also refers to the Gledstains lands). He allied himself with the Scotts of Braxholme and Buccleuch. In 1517 he was on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his father's barony of Braxholme. His lands at that time included Coliford, Ormiston, Dod and Giddenscleuch. He was apparently quite unscrupulous, trying to gain possession of part of the common lands of Cademuir (adjacent to Hundleshope), and being involved in a raid there in 1518. He was succeeded by his nephew John, who was mentioned in connection with the 1518 raid. John of Cocklaw (d.1519) nephew of John, the 8th Laird. He was the 9th Gledstains of that Ilk, although only for a year. He was probably already an old man in 1518 when there was a raid, involving him and his son Archibald, on the common lands of Peebles. It is described that the Laird of Gledstains sent forth 'John of Gledstanes his nevy and apperand air, Archibald Gledstanes, his sone, and others to the number of twenty-six men'. He was succeeded by his son James, who contracted in 1519 to marry his son John to a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme. In 1517 his daughter Helen was infefted in 'liferent' of the lands of 'Langhawcht' in the Barony of Manor in Peeblesshire. He may be the John of that Ilk whose widow Margaret 'Jardane' is recorded in 1542 requesting from the Court of Session that Lord Somerville pay her the rents on the lands of Libberton (in Lanarkshire). John of Craig and Over Kelwood (d.bef. 1537) son of Thomas, who held Over Kelwood in Dumfriesshire. He was confusingly referred to as being 'of that Ilk and Craigs', even although there were others 'of that Ilk' in Roxburghshire at the same time. He had a sasine of Over Kelwood in 1525, married Margaret Jardine, who brought a case as a widow in 1537. He was probably succeeded by his brother Matthew. John (d.1574) probably a son of Gledstains of that Ilk, but his parentage is not known. He held the lands of 'Quothquan', which extended to 26 acres of the former larger estate of Gledstains in Lanarkshire. He attended St. Andrews University 1505-8, then studied in France. In 1534 he became an advocate, appointed 'Advocatus Pauperum' and was a Lord of Sessions from 1542. He was also Procurator of Judges, Member of the Privy Council and became Doctor of Laws. He was recorded in Edinburgh in 1550, on a panel ruling for the Privy Council. His property was inherited by his nephew, also John, who was Ormond Pursuivant for Scotland. He must have lived to a great old age, or else two men are compounded here. John (1519-64) 11th of that Ilk, son of James. He probably married a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme (Janet or Christian), to whom he had been betrothed by a marriage contract of 1519/20 (which must have been shortly after he was born). This demonstrates the close links between the Scott and Gledstains families at this time. In 1537/8 there was an assurance by several Croziers that they would not harm him, his friends or servants, with Elliots acting as cautioners. In 1542 he had a sasine for the lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. He was recorded in 1544 as heir of the deceased James of Cocklaw in a dispute with Robert Scott in Howford; he complained that Robert Scott and his tutor William Scott had made an arrangement for 6 1/2 husbandlands in Cocklaw and owed him 200 merks in redemption money. Philip was a witness, and hence may have been related. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains mentioned as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1552. He is mentioned in connection with exploits of the Scotts after 1553. In 1553/4 he was 'de Coklaw' when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme inheriting from his grandfather. He was charged with the murder of Thomas Peebles and William Bell at 'Kaidmuir' near Peebles in 1561, probably a continuation of the claim on those lands made by his family for generations; his name is given as 'Jhone Gledstanis of Coklaw'. Although the trial was deferred indefinitely, his son James was pursued for damages by the descendants of the victims. Also in 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563/4 he gave the tenancy of lands in Hundleshope (in Peeblesshire) to 2 men after they renounced their former 'kindenes' agreement. Also in 1563/4 he promised to enter 3 Elliots and 2 Croziers for crimes against an Englishman, with Sir William Cranston as his surety. He is probably the 'Lard of Coklaw' listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he 'and his barnis' are described as supporters of Buccleuch in the bond signed between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He was succeeded by his son James, 'little Gledstane'.

His other sons were: William of Cocklaw; Walter, killed by raiders from Liddesdale; and (probably) John of Whitlaw. A document of 1561 (for the rental of Corrie Sike) states that his son and heir apparent was John, which appears to contradict other information (and is perhaps an error, unless there were 2 confounded generations here). John (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John (16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He was son and heir of Selkirk Burgess Alexander in 1561 when his father promised to pay him back for the £10 Scots he had borrowed. John of Whitlaw (16th C.) probably son of John, 11th of that Ilk. He was the founder of the Whitlaw and Flex branch of the family. He is mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme as being left something unspecified. In 1580 he is recorded as 'servand' to the Countess of Bothwell, owner of Whitlaw, when the farm was raided by a group of Elliots and Armstrongs, who stole 100 sheep. He was in the party that followed the raiders, and one of his brothers was killed in a skirmish. John of Winningtonhall (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1579 when he witnessed the transfer of Roughope and Philhope from John Turnbull to Martin Elliot. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving lands in Langnewton; his servant John Elliot was also a witness. In 1582 he witnessed a transaction involving the Scotts of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branhholme. He is probably the John 'of Wydeton hall' in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Wardens, his name appearing alongside other local Gledstains. He is recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Probably the same John 'of Woudingtoun Hall' was witness to a marriage contract between the Gledstains of Cocklaw and the Turnbulls of Wauchope in 1593. In 1598 he was one of the signatories for the registration of a bond for John of Craig not to harm certain Maxwells, with James of Cocklaw as the surety. He resigned his lands in 1605 (presumably for the purposes of a new infeftment), and is there styled 'Joanni Gledstanis de Windintounhall'. He is named as surety for James of Cocklaw and that Ilk in a trial of 1605 (relating to reparations for John of Cocklaw's murder of Thomas Peebles in 1561). His location is there recorded as 'Wynningtoun-hauch' and 'Wyndingtoun Haugh'. In 1607 he was chancellor of the 'assyse' which found George Henderson in Winnington to be not guilty of chopping down trees belonging to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It seems likely that he was a close relative of James of that Ilk and related to the John of the same place a century earlier. John of Over Kelwood and Craigs (16th/17th C.) son of Walter. His lands were in Dumfriesshire and he was the last of his line to be referred to as 'of that Ilk'. In 1595 he was served heir to his father in the superiority of the family's original Lanarkshire lands. He was recorded in 1598 when James of Cocklaw was his surety not to harm certain Maxwells; the papers were signed in Selkirk, with John of Winningtonhall as one of the witnesses (showing that there were still connections between the separate branches of this family). In 1606 he settled Over Kelwood on his cousin Alexander, Archdeacon of St. Andrews; the grant also named Herbert, Schoolmaster of Dumfries and John, son of William, Burgess of Dumfries (both probably distant relatives). He married Agnes Maxwell, who died in 1628. His heiresses were: Margaret, who married James Watson, Burgess of St. Andrews; Elizabeth, who married Matthew Hairstanes and acquired Over Kelwood; and Agnes, who married John Hairstanes, Burgess of Dumfries, in 1622. John of Whitlaw (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter. He stood in for his father as Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Hassendean and Wilton Parishes in the period 1641–47 and was Chamberlain in his own right by 1647–48. He remained Chamberlain until at least 1656, and in the last couple of years also acted for Eckford, Hawick and Clarilaw. He was the Chamberlain who gave an account of the personal property and debts of Earl Francis Scott of Buccleuch when he died in 1651. In 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1652 for Robert Scott of Harwood and Beatrix Gledstains (probably a relative). He was granted the lands of Flex by James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry in 1653. He is probably the John of Whitlaw recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when £133 6s 8d was paid for Flex in Hawick Parish and £266 13s 4d paid for Whitlaw; he also paid the teind of Eckford on behalf of the Countess of Buccleuch. He married Anna Scott (probably daughter of Walter Scott of Synton) and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1639); Walter (b.1640); Francis (b.1643), who succeeded; an unnamed son (b.1645); and Helen (b.1646). His son Francis was served as his heir in the lands of Flex in 1672. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wilson and their children included: John (b.1670); James (b.1672); John (again, b.1678); and Jane (b.1679). John of Hilliesland (17th C.) recorded in 1678 when he paid the land tax on land valued at £66 13s 4d in Hawick Parish. He was surely related to Walter of Hilliesland, who paid the land tax in 1643 and 1663 (perhaps he was son of Walter). He may have been father of the John admitted as a Burgess in 1692 and an ancestor of the Town Clerks who owned Hilliesland. He was recorded being 'hillhousland' in 1685 when one of his children was baptised. He married Margaret Harkness and their children included Walter (b.1676), James (b.1677), Thomas (b.1679); Archibald (b.1681), John (b.1683), Francis (b.1685) and Bessie (b.1687). The witnesses in 1685 were 'Mr Archibald' (surely a relative) and James of that ilk. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel (or Bessie) Liddell and their children included Jane (b.1682) and William (b.1685). John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was listed separately from the carrier. It is possible he was the same as the Hilliesland Laird. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and paid tax on 2 hearths according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His son was William. In 1717 he and his son and daughter-in-law were all rebuked by the Session for fighting with one another on the street. He is probably the John 'at the East Port', who, along with his son William, were in 1700 'found guilty of stealing peats and strae, are sentenced to stand at the crosse for a season, and be banished the town'. They stole 3 loads of peat from Galalaw and oat straw from the stack yard of Rev. Cunningham; this was said to be 'out of his extreme necessity', probably related to the great famine that spread over the country at that time. John of Hilliesland (17th/18th C.) admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1692. He may have been son of the earlier John of Hilliesland (if not the same man) and perhaps father of the later John of Hilliesland; he was surely related to the Town Clerks of Hawick. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. The baptism of his son William with Isobell Burn is recorded in 1707; this is marked 'fornic:'. The witnesses were Thomas Turnbull and

William Glendinning. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Jean, daughter of Adam Glendinning and their children included John (b.1718). John of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.). It is unclear how he was related to earlier Gledstains of Whitlaw. He witnessed a baptism for William Henderson in the Flex in 1709. He witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson 'Casier in whitla' in 1716 and 2 others in 1717 (along with his brother William) for Archibald Paterson in Flex and for John Hobkirk in Whitchesters. He also witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk Walter in 1722. He was recorded as being a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718. He witnessed further baptisms in 1718 for John Davidson (tenant in Flex), with the other witness being his brother William, and in 1719 and 1720 for Archibald Paterson, tenant in the Flex. His brother James became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1719. He is probably the same man as John of Flex who was recorded in a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, when his lands of 'Flex and Meikle and Little Whitlaw' were valued at 400 merks. He probably succeeded Francis of Whitlaw, but it is unclear if he was his son or brother. He was probably succeeded by the next (and last) John of Whitlaw. John (d.1754) tenant of 'Hilliesland Walls' and presumably related to the Town Clerks' family. He witnessed a sasine made by Town Clerk Walter in 1728. He was described as being 'of Hilliesland' when admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1733 (and was presumably a descendant of the John of Hilliesland who became a Burgess in 1692). He may be the John who witnessed an Episcopal baptism for John of Whitlaw in 1753. He may have been the last Laird of Hilliesland to live there, and was probably the Laird who was described (in 1767) as having earlier driven his herd to Hawick Common, down the Iver Burn. John of Whitlaw (c.1710–bef. 83) one of the last of the family to own land locally. He may have been son of the previous John of Whitlaw. In 1738 he was one of 'heirs-portioners' of Janet, daughter of Robert of that ilk and Cocklaw, when she died unmarried; he thus received part of the lands of Dod that Janet had still possessed. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He was stated to be tenant of Whitlaw in the 1750s when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd. He witnessed a baptism in 1759 for tailor James (possibly a relative). He was interested in genealogy and prepared a pedigree of the Scotts of Synton (through whom he was related on his mother's side), Whitslade, etc. in 1769; this was used as the basis for much of the booklet on the pedigree of the Scotts of Stokoe, Todrig, etc., which was printed privately in 1783 (by which time he was deceased). He was witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1764. He was said to have been an officer under Prince Charles and remained a Jacobite sympathiser (as described by Robert Wilson). He went about on crutches in later life, and blamed his rheumatism on the house of Hanover! He was also known for having a large feast every Christmas. His daughter Mira was baptised in 1753, by Episcopal Minister Rev. Findlay McLennan, making it clear that the family continued to follow that particular faith; the witnesses were Dr. Robert Scott of Whitslade, as well as John and James Gledstains from Hawick (who were probably his brothers, cousins, or other near relatives). The name of his wife is unknown, and it is not clear what happened to Mira, or whether he had other children. John (d.1781) has his death recorded in Hawick. He is listed as 'Elder in the Green meeting', presumably meaning the Green Kirk. It is not impossible he was the same man as John of Whitlaw. John (1724–83) son of the second Walter, writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick. He was recorded as a writer in 1762 and 1765 when he witnessed baptisms for baker Robert Scott. He was Town Clerk from about 1763 until 1783, with a short gap in 1768–70 (precise dates uncertain), when he was deprived of office for being a Jacobite supporter and refusing to take the oath of government (although Robert Wilson's account of this is confused). He was assisted by Thomas Wintrobe for several years, perhaps until 1768. He was also tenant of Meikle and Little Whitlaws, and had the farms as aliment from the Duke of Buccleuch (although this could be confusion with his namesake, John of Whitlaw). He kept a public house in town (like his predecessors as Town Clerk), where it was said that most of Hawick's civic business was carried out. He was apparently liked to avoid litigation and was fond of resolving disputes by inviting both parties to his house in the evening to discuss things amicably. He wrote a detailed account of the great flood of 1767. In 1767 he one of the representatives of Hawick at the perambulation of the Common made as part of the court case for its division. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He married Ann Weir, who died in 1805; she was probably daughter of the earlier Town Clerk James Weir, born in 1738. Their children included: Walter (b.1765);

James (b.1766), who owned 80 High Street; William (b.1768); Christian, who married manufacturer Walter Richardson Elizabeth (b.1776); and Ann (b.1781), who may have married John 'the Turk' Scott. The witnesses to the 1768 baptism were writer James Weir (probably his brother-in-law) and Schoolmaster James Inglis, in 1776 were surgeon James Wilson and Schoolmaster James Inglis, and in 1781 were ex-Bailie John Wilson and James Inglis again. He appears to have been the last male of the direct family of Gledstains in Teviotdale. His 2 daughters were served as heiresses to him in 1808 and sold 80 High Street in 1809 (so his sons must have been deceased by then); they are probably the 'Mrs. Richardson and Miss Gladstanes' listed in 1811 as owners of part of the particulate lands of Hawick. He was succeeded as Town Clerk by his nephew, John Inglis. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Margaret Beattie in 1770. They had a daughter Joanna baptised in Wilton in 1778. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Katherine Riddell in 1775. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Stevenson and their son William was baptised in the East Bank Kirk in 1818. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Matthew (15th C.) witness to a sasine of the Cranstons of that Ilk for Denholm Mains in 1465/6. Matthew and Cuthbert were also witnesses. Perhaps the same 'Matho Gledstanis' was witness to a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope, directed by William Douglas of Cavers, in 1500. Matthew of Over Kelwood (d.c.1554) son of Thomas and brother of John, who he succeeded. He lived in Dumfriesshire and was referred to as being 'of that Ilk', even though the Roxburghshire branch were probably the superior line. He had a sasine of Over Kelwood in 1536. He married Elizabeth Livingstone and their daughter Mirabella married a relative, Herbert of Dundee, to whom he gave Over Kelwood in 1541. He was recorded in connection with the lands in Lanarkshire in 1542 and 1543. His grandson Walter was also referred to as being 'of that Ilk'. Mira (b.1753) daughter of John of Whitlaw. There is an entry in the Hawick Parish Kirk baptismal records that she was baptised by Episcopalian minister Rev. Findlay McLennan, with witnesses Robert Scott of Whitslade, and John and James Gledstains (who were probably uncles or other close relatives). This was one of the few pieces of evidence that there was a continuing Episcopal Kirk in Hawick through the 18th century. Patrick (14th C.) juror in Roxburgh in 1335/6, for an English inquisition regarding expenses at Jedburgh Castle. He swore fealty to Edward III in 1346 following the Battle of Durham (Neville's Cross). He may have been a son of Herbert and was surely related to William, who was also recorded in 1346. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was 'Patricius gledstanis in coklaw'; he must surely have been related to the Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk, although appears to have been a tenant rather than a laird. He was allowed to 'compone' for multiple thefts: 12 cows from John Anderson; 58 sheep from William Knight; 120 score sheep from James Sinclair and Robert Knight; 80 sheep from James Crays; 100 sheep and 50 cows from Hartshaw; plundering from the tenants of Glengelt; and stealing horses and other things from Robert Walderston, William Allan, John Hutchison and their neighbours. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. Patrick (15th C.) tenant in Hummelknowes, recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was allowed to 'compone' for the theft of 4 sheep from Yairi, with James Pringle of Smailholm as his surety. It seems that he was a different man from Patrick in Cocklaw. Philip (16th C.) witness in Selkirk to a document involving a dispute between John of Cocklaw and Robert Scott in Howford. Robert (15th C.) on the 'retour of inquest' made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam. James of that Ilk was also listed and so perhaps related. In 1434 he witnessed a charter where Archibald, Earl of Douglas granted Nether Crailing to William Cranston. Probably the same Robert 'de Gledstanis' was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that Ilk, when he infefted Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in Grahamslaw in 1439. And he appeared as witness along with Crichton and others on a charter by Archibald, Earl of Douglas to the Kers of Altonburn in 1439. Probably the same Robert witnessed a charter for William Cranston of Crailing in 1443. Probably the same man is 'Roberto Gledistanys de le Crag' in 1446 when he witnessed a charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch; his lairdship was probably Craig in Dumfriesshire. He is probably the same 'Roberto de Gledstanis' (an esquire) in 1452 when he is the first witness listed on the sasine for the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1454/5 he is

'Robert of Gledstanys' when he witnessed a document for Ker of Altonburn. And in 1463/4 he was 'Roberto de Gledstanys' among the men who received a reward from the King for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. Probably the same man is recorded as 'Glendstanys' when he witnessed a charter of 1468 dealing with the Scotts of Buccleuch and lands of Lempitlaw. Robert (15th C.) recorded as 'Robertum Gledstanis' in 1484 when he was on the inquest panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. Robert (15th/16th C.) described as being from Annan when he witnessed a charter at Caerlaverock in 1492/3. Probably the same Robert is described as 'scutiferis' (i.e. shield-bearer) when he witnessed a charter for John, Lord Maxwell, in 1505. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600 as 'son natural' to James of Cocklaw. Along with his father, brother James and cousin James, he was accused of killing James Dickson near Peebles; they were all denounced as rebels for non-appearance. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'pr Todschahauch' when he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He was proprietor of Todshawhaugh in a 1650 list of communicants of the Borthwick valley. His wife may have been Agnes Rule, with their daughter Margaret baptised in Hawick in 1639. In 1648 he was listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire (along with Walter of Cocklaw and John of Whitlaw, who must have been closely related). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Scott in 1652. Either he or a son of the same name was listed in 1686 as tenant of the lands of Whames in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident who was on a 1684 list of men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret and their children included: Walter (b.1688); and Agnes (b.1691). The witnesses in 1691 were Andrew Fletcher and Thomas Wallace. Robert (17th C.) tailor in Raesknowe. In 1719 and 1725 he witnessed baptisms for William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Margaret (b.1693) and Margaret (again, b.1700). In the 1700 record his wife's forename is given as Janet and the witnesses are David Graham and John Armstrong, tenants in Raesknowe. In 1714 he married Isobel Hobkirk, who was described as 'widow in whitchesters'; perhaps she is the woman of that name who married Whitlaw tailor Robert Cairns in 1703. There is no evidence of any children from this second marriage. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was listed as 'ane hyred servant in hawick' in 1700 and as a workman in 1708. He married Janet Brown and their children (although the mother's name is not always given) probably included: Anna (b.1690); Walter (b.1693); Robert (b.1696); John (b.1700); Janet (b.1703); Robert (b.1705), who lived in Robertson Parish; Marion (b.1708); and Margaret (b.1709). The witnesses in 1693 were John Stuart and John Black, in 1700 were weaver Thomas Turnbull and 'officer' James Lethem, in 1705 were Bailie Patrick Richardson and weaver Andrew Brown (probably his wife's father or brother) and in 1708 were merchant Robert Robson and flesher Walter Anderson. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he is recorded (twice) being given money from the Session poor box. Robert (17th/18th C.) listed as 'of that Ilk' in 1704 as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. Also in 1704 he petitioned the Bailies of Hawick to let him 'cast divots in the Common of Havicke', this was to thatch his stable at Hummelknowes. It is unclear who he was, since the Laird of Cocklaw at the time was James; but perhaps he was a brother of James, and hence son of William. Probably the same Robert of that Ilk married Janet, daughter of Robert Elliot of Lariston in 1706 (and she secondly married John Scott of Gorrenberry in 1716, so he was presumably dead by then). He may be the Gledstains in Hummelknowes recorded in an account in Selkirk in 1707. Robert (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. In 1721 he married Marion 'Lun or Douglas' (suggesting his wife had previously been married). Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1742 and Harden Burnfoot in 1753. His children (assuming these are all the same father Robert) included Magdalen (b.1742), Thomas (b.1747), Thomas (again, b.1747), Kathrine (b.1753) and Robert (b.1756). Robert (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident. He married Jean (or Jane) Scott in 1780 and she died in 1805. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Branxholme. He was recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) labourer at Bowanhill in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia, with the annotation 'Serving' and his name appearing again in 1798. In 1798 it was explicitly recorded that he volunteered to serve in place of John Henderson (labourer in Hawick), who at that point had not been located. Later in 1798 he was reported to 'have joined the Regiment', as confirmed in the amended list of 1799. Robert (b.c.1763) perhaps son of William, resident of Chapelhill. He married Mary Scott in Wilton Parish in 1788. This means he was probably different from the Robert who married Jean Scott 8 years earlier. Their children included: Peggy (b.1789); William (b.1792); and James (b.1794). When Peggy was baptised the family were at Overhall. The 1792 and 1794 baptisms were recorded in Hawick with witnesses the 'Associate Congregation'. Perhaps the same Robert was a 78 year old agricultural labourer living with the Anderson family at Whitehaugh Cottages in 1841. Robert (b.1812) eldest son of William. He married Mina Nichol. In 1840 he and his wife emigrated to Canada along with his parents and siblings. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1535 when he witnessed a bond between Mark Ker in Kippielaw, John Scott in Thirlestane and others. In 1539 he witnessed another transaction for Elizabeth, mother of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Thomas (14th/15th C.) son of Sir William and brother of John and James. It seems that John was the eldest brother and succeeded to their father's lands, while their mother's lands were divided among the brothers. He was probably the youngest son, but that is uncertain. He may have owned the lands of Flex. He acquired Robertson (in Selkirkshire) from his mother in 1412, confirmed by a charter of James I in 1430. It is possible he is the same Thomas 'Gleddistanis' appointed (along with Stephen Scott and others) as a procurator by Ellen Rule of Primside when she resigned her lands to their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1439. Probably the same Thomas had a charter from the Duke of Albany (around 1410) for the lands of 'Withnyhope' in Selkirkshire. He could be the same Thomas who witnessed a confirmation of the Church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1404. His wife was Margaret and he was succeeded by their son Alexander. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1511 when he witnessed a charter for Margaret Colville relating to lands in Oxnam. It is unclear how he was related to the Roxburghshire Gledstains. He could be the Thomas who had a charter for 'Overkeldvod' (i.e. Over Kelwood, in Dumfriesshire) in 1509, and hence was probably a son of Herbert, Rector of Dornoch. This Thomas was 'of that Ilk' in Lanarkshire in 1508.

He could also be the Laird of 'crag gledstanis' who was fined at the Justice-aire in Dumfries in 1504, for failing to give suit for his lands of Craig. He was father of John and Matthew, who were both of Over Kelwood and that Ilk. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1706 he married Bessie Sanderson and their children included Janet (b.1707), John (b.1710) and Janet (b.1712), Bessie (b.1716) and Francis (b.1718). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailies Robert Ruecastle and George Martin. He could be the son of John and Margaret Harkness who was born in 1679. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1723 and 1725. His children, baptised in Cavers, included Bessie (b.1717), William (b.1721), Janet (b.1723) and Walter (b.1725). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Leithhead and their daughter Helen (b.1796/7) married poet John Halliday. Thomas (b.c.1780) resident of Harwood in Hawick Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He may have been son of William, who was farmer at Harwood in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Lunn and their children included: Agnes (b.1811); Walter (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); and Thomas (b.1821). Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1816. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betsy Michie and their children included: Thomas (b.1843); Elizabeth (b.1846); Eliza (b.1847); Helen (b.1848); Jane (b.1851); and Margaret (b.1853). Some of the children were baptised in the Hawick Free Kirk. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Miller and their son John was baptised in 1872. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Isabella Fox, daughter of Gilbert Amos, who was joiner at Chesters. He died in an accident at Southdean sawmill. Walter (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1470 relating to the lands of Grahamslaw and the Scotts of Buccleuch. The same Walter may have witnessed a Buccleuch document of 1464/5 relating to Ladyurd, and hence be from the Peebles area. Probably the same Walter also witnessed a document relating to Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1475/6. Walter (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. He comes right after George in the list, suggesting they were related. Walter (d.1580) probably son of John, 11th of that Ilk, he was brother of James of Cocklaw. He may be the same 'Walter Gledstanis' (location not given) who is recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being owed about £13 'for his fie' (he may thus have acted as some kind of factor or chamberlain, as his descendants did). He was killed by men of Liddesdale, led by Lencie Armstrong, when a party of Scotts and Gladstains followed those who had raided Meikle Whitlaw, but were ambushed on their way back home through Liddesdale (probably the morning after the raid on Whitlaw). After complaints to the Privy Council none of those implicated in the ambush appeared, and hence they were declared rebels. Walter of Over Kelwood and Craigs (d.c.1593) son of Herbert and Mirabella. He had a sasine for Over Kelwood in 1570 and was also referred to as being 'of that Ilk' (complicating the issue with the Gledstains of Cocklaw), being superior of the Larnarkshire lands. He was succeeded by his son John in 1593/4. Walter (16th/17th C.) 'servitor to the Guidman of Hayning' in 1607 when he gave evidence in the court case when Robert Scott of Oakwood accused Rev. Shaw of Selkirk of swearing. He is recorded being 'in Haining' in 1608 when he was part of a group of Scotts and others who attacked Selkirk Mill. James Gledstains was also listed. Walter of Dod (17th C.) recorded in 1627 as holding, along with Walter Scott of Buccleuch, the Trinitylands in Hawick. He may be the same Walter of Dod who was recorded in the 1640s. He (or perhaps his son) may have been Laird of Dod in 1643 when he held the lands of Adderstoneshiel, with his mother having the liferent of Adderstonelee. He may be the Walter of Dod whose daughter Eupham married John Rutherford of Littleleheugh. Walter of Whitlaw (d.c.1643) part of the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was also part of the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott, 'the Suckler', of sheep stealing. He is recorded as a 'personne of assyse' in the local Circuit Court of 1622. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick; he was one of the men who refused to accept some of the items in the valuation, presumably because of a dispute over either the Kirland, Ladyland or Trinitylands. He was also recorded in a county valuation of lands in Hawick Parish in 1643, his lands being valued at £266 13s 4d. He also appears as Chamberlain (or Factor) to the Earl of Buccleuch in existing records of rents and teinds for the period 1631–40 for Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton Parishes, also including Denholm. He was probably ill by the next year when his son John stood in for him, and was deceased by the time of the 1642–43 accounts. In one document he is transcribed as ‘Walter Gledstones in Whitehall’, presumably an error. He may be the Walter of Whitlaw who is listed by Scott of Satchells as being one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch (the only one not called Scott), who was a close cousin to the Scotts and was given the lands of Whitlaw for this service; however, this may have been an earlier generation. He is probably the Walter of Whitlaw whose daughter Margaret married Walter Scott, Laird of Galalaw. Walter (17th C.) possessor of the farm of Blackburn in Liddesdale in 1632. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wood and their children included Marion (b.1640) and Agnes (b.1641). Walter of Cocklaw (17th C.) probably the son of James, as recorded in 1648. He may have had brothers William, Robert and James. It is possible he was the Walter of that Ilk listed in 1617 among Border Lairds who renewed their pledge to keep the peace (although it is possible this was an error for James). It is possible he was the Walter of Cocklaw who was recorded as superior of the lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire in 1620 when they were granted to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1620 he was ‘of Coklaw’ when there was a complaint by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs that he had not repaid 3 loans, totalling about 300 merks. He was likely the ‘Laird of Gledstains’ who witnessed a family baptism in 1642, and hence was 14th of that Ilk. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains whose lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £1240 in 1643; this consisted of the farms of Hummelknowes, Ormiston and Orchard. He was ‘of Coklaw’ in 1648 when listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He may have been succeeded by a son (or brother), William, who is recorded in 1663. Walter of Hilliesland (17th C.) recorded in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish (with the spelling ‘of Halysland’). His lands were worth £66 13s. 4d. per year. He is presumably different from Walter of Whitlaw, who was listed separately in 1643. However, it is unclear how he was related to other local Gledstains, but he may have been father of John of Hilliesland who paid the land tax in 1678. Walter of Dod (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when his son and heir George was infefted in the lands of Hunthill (in Cavers Parish) by William Earl of Lothian. He is probably the same Walter of Dod who married Agnes Douglas of Cavers, and whose son Walter was minister at New Abbey. His grandson Abraham was served heir to his lands of Hunthill in 1676. Walter of Flex (17th C.). He married Esther, daughter of Richard Rutherford of Littleheugh and granddaughter of John Rutherford of Capehope. His wife’s mother may have been Eupham, daughter of William Gledstains. It is unclear how he was related to other Gledstains of Flex. Rev. Walter (1624–60) son of Walter of Dod and Agnes Douglas of Cavers. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1645 and in 1650 became minister at New Abbey, Kirkcudbright. He married Margaret, 2nd daughter of John Crichton of Crawfordston, who was widow of William Lawrie in Ingliston. His children included James and Agnes. His widow married James Mair, minister of Troqueer. His gravestone had the following lines (in Latin): ‘Q. Wherefore lies the Gladstone Hidden by the dark stone? A. The bosom of the earth Conceals the gem of gold’. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Turnbull and their children included Marion (b.1639), John (b.1643) and Bessie (b.1649). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Lauder and their children included Helen (b.1646) and Jean (b.1649). Walter (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1676 he and James Liddell were involved in checking the weights used by other traders in Town. He could be the same man as the tailor who witnessed a baptism for Francis in 1680 (suggesting that they were related). He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter Francis of Hilliesland (1642–1718) son of Lieut. Francis and Margaret Stewart, he was born in Hawick, about 3 years before his father was killed. He was Town Clerk 1673–1696, and after a 1 year gap again in c.1696–1710, then sharing the position with his son Walter until his death in 1718. He was Town Clerk on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693. In 1680 he witnessed baptisms for George Young and Janet Purdom, and for John Stewart. He gave evidence in the trial of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe (for being a Covenanter) in 1681. He may be the Walter ‘in Hawicke’ who is listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He is probably the ‘Mr Walter Gladstains’ who witnessed baptisms for George Deans in 1673, for wright Francis in 1682, for Bailie William Scott in 1683, and for schoolmaster John Purdom in 1685. He is probably one of the 2 men of his name who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Hawick in 1671. He may also be the Gledstains whose letter to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1683 told of the imprisonment of several local lairds for trumped up charges relating to supporting the Covenanters; if so he was factor to Douglas of Cavers and wrote several letters that are extant. In 1697 he was one of 4 men who protested against the continuing of Robert Ruecastle as Bailie, through there being a vacancy and on account of an agreement made with the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch, until a new election for Bailie was held. In 1701 he was cited at the Kirk Session for being drunk at a burial and 'using expressions savouring of blasphemy in his drunkenness'; he acknowledged his guilt and being reported again in 1702 promised to endeavour to remain sober. He was 'Mr' when he witnessed a baptism for Patrick Angus in 1704 and for his son Walter in 1708. He also witnessed baptisms in 1709 for schoolmaster John Purdom and for Robert Porteous. Either he or his son was witness for a baptism in 1709 for George Johnston, tenant in Hilliesland. In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands were valued at 100 merks. He was also a heritor of Hawick Parish, recorded in 1711 and 1718. He was listed as 'Mr Walter Gladstains' when he witnessed a baptism in 1687; the other witness was James, who was probably a close relative, and may have been James of that ilk. He was listed in the same way when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Stewart and another for tailor Walter (his namesake and probably relative) in 1688. He was also 'Mr walter Gledstaines' when he paid tax for 4 hearths in Hawick, 'eist the water', in 1694; this suggests he had quite a substantial house. In 1707 'the town clerk's wyf' (presumably his wife) was ordered by the Council to be paid back for expenses incurred at the Queen's birthday in 1706. He translated Rev. Cunninghame's 'Lines written on the situation of the burgh and town of Hawick' (possibly the earliest verse about Hawick) from the Latin. The ancient family bible, now in the Museum, appears to have been largely inscribed by him. He may also have been the Town Clerk who entertained a party of Jacobite officers while their army was encamped in Hawick in 1715 (although Robert Wilson ascribes this to a later Town Clerk in 1745). In 1704 he also provided what was probably the first translation of the 1537 Charter, appearing in print in Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was married to Margaret Sinclair in

Calder. Apart from Walter, their surviving children were William (b.1674) and Agnes (b.1677). Other children baptised in Hawick who could be his were Francis (b.1672), Gideon (b.1678) and Margaret (b.1681). Bailie Walter (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1690s. Probably the same wright is recorded as in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He may be one of the 2 men of this name who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Hawick in 1671. His wife was Janet Scott and their children probably included Agnes (b.1672), Margaret (b.1673), Janet (b.1676) and Marion (b.1678). However, a tailor of the same name was also married a Janet Scott and had children about the same time. The witnesses in 1676 were John Aitkin and James Deans and in 1678 were William Haswell and James Gledstains (who was surely related). Probably the same Walter was recorded as Bailie in 1697. Perhaps the same wright is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694 and among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) recorded in the 1678 valuation roll as portioner of Samieston in Jedburgh Parish. This land was formerly owned by Moir of Otterburn, but sold to the Duke of Roxburghe. It was listed as 'Lands in Samieston, formerly Walter Gladstain's £233 6s 8d' in 1788. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other family members. Walter (d.bef. 1719) tailor in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright Robert Cowan in 1688. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was also listed as a tailor among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Note the possible confusion with 'William', who was a tailor in Hawick at about the same time and also the contemporary wright of the same name (whose wife also had the same name!). He also witnessed baptisms for weaver Walter Greenshields in Branksholme Town in 1703 and for John Davidson and Jean Gledstains in the Flex in the 1716. His wife was Janet Scott and their son James was baptised in Hawick in 1688, with witnesses 'Mr Walter' (presumably his namesake the Town Clerk) and Bailie James Deans. Helen (b.1684) was probably also his child, with witnesses Francis (probably also a relative) and Thomas Bridges. His daughter Marion married William Stoddart ('Casaer in Flexs') in 1719. Walter (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, more specifically probably the Hassendean part. He may be the Walter, married to Janet Scott, whose son James was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1681, with witnesses John Hope and Charles Wood. He is probably the Walter who witnessed Robertson (or Hassendean) baptisms for James Scott in 1680, Robert and Marion Scott in 1683 and Adam Sanderson in 1684. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included: John (b.1695). He may be the same man who later married Helen Sanderson. Walter 'Walter Alison' (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1709 he was recorded as 'distinctio-nis causa called Walt: Alison' (to distinguish him from the Town Clerk of the same name, among others); however, it is unclear what this name may have referred to. He may have been related to Thomas, who married Bessie Sanderson. In 1703 he married Helen Sanderson (who was also from Hawick Parish). Their children included: William (b.1703); John (b.1706); Isobel (b.1709); Robert (b.1713); and Walter (b.1716). John (b.1708) and John (again, b.1711) were probably also their children. The witnesses in 1706 were Bailie James Deans and carrier Robert Aitken, in 1709 were Bailies James Burn and Robert Ruecastle and in 1716 were merchant William Chisholme and gardener William Hope. Walter junior of Hilliesland (d.1739) son of Walter who was Town Clerk. He was recorded being 'of Hilhouland' (i.e. Hilliesland) in 1707 and 1708, even although his father was still alive at that point. He himself was Town Clerk from 1710 probably until his death. However, it appears that James Weir was also acting as Town Clerk for the last few years. It was said that he was a strong supporter of the Town Herd in stopping encroachment on the Common, but that 'since his death there was never one to support the Herd, and the Common had been ten times worse used than it was before'. He is probably the Walter of Hilliesland who was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1704. He was Town Clerk when he witnessed baptisms for smith James Beattie in 1719, for William Hill, weaver in the Flex in 1720, and for merchant James Aitkin and for Simon Miller in 1722. He may have had an inn (like other Town officials in those days); it is recorded in 1724 that £5 8s. Scots was 'spent in the clerk's, being the King's birth-day'. He married Agnes (or Anna) Elliott from Langholm in 1706. Their children included: Janet (b.1707); Bessie (b.1708); and John (b.1711). The witnesses in 1707 were 'Mr Walter' (presumably his father) and Thomas Laik in Billerwell (perhaps the minister in Southdean) and in 1708 were 'Mr Walter' (again) and Bailie Robert Ruecastle. He secondly married Elizabeth ('Bessie' or 'Bettie'), daughter of Hawick tailor John Scott, in an 'irregular marriage' of 1720 (his name being incorrectly given as 'William Gladstains, town clerk' in the Session records); this marriage was carried out by 'James Macubine', possibly an Episcopalian minister. He also witnessed an irregular marriage himself in Hawick in 1724. He was succeeded as Town Clerk by his son John (1724–83). His other children included: Agnes (b.1721); Walter (b.1722); Joanna (b.1726), who married James Inglis; William (again, b.1728); and James. The witnesses in 1722 were Col. William Murray of Bowhill, Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, Archibald Scott of Boonraw and John Gledstains of Whitlaw. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1762 he married Betty Sinton, who was also from Robertson. Walter (18th C.) married Betty Linton in Robertson Parish in 1762. Walter (1817–82) 2nd son of farm worker William. In 1840, along with his parents and siblings, he emigrated to Canada, settling on the banks of the Nith River in southern Ontario. He first made chairs at the Nithsdale Chair Factory, and was then responsible for the construction of the nearby Stanley Street Church and Knox Church. He ran a general store in Ayr Ontario for many years. In 1869 the family moved to a farm near Gentry, Missouri. In 1847 he married Jane, daughter of Alexander Easton and Jeannie Kyle, who had emigrated from Castleton; she died in 1914. Their children were Jane, William R., Eliza, Alexander, Jeannie Kyle, George E., Anna M., Walter and Mary. They are buried at Knox Cemetery, near Gentry. Walter (b.1817/8) frameworkeer who lived at 7 Kirk Wynd. His wife was Helen and their children included Helen, David, Thomas, Mary and Agnes. He is probably the Walter 'Gledstains' whose recollections of James Hogg informed Robert Murray's 1863 article. William of Minto (14th C.) recorded in 1346 along with Patrick when they paid homage to King Edward after the Battle of Neville's Cross. He was described as being of 'Mintowe', which was presumably Minto in Teviotdale. In 1347 he was part of a panel of inquest held at Roxburgh under the English authorities; he was again 'of Mintowe'. It is possible that he was the same as Sir William of that Ilk. Sir William (d.c.1365) probably the grandson of Herbert, and hence 3rd of that Ilk. In 1354 he witnessed a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh; his name also appears on

4 confirming charters. He is probably the 'William de Gledestan chivaler' who was one of 2 men commanded by Edward III to deliver a Scottish prisoner to the Tower of London in 1357. He also witnessed a deed of 1357/8 for the lands of Altonburn. He became a follower of the Earl of Douglas and accompanied the Earl to France in 1356, being made a Knight at the Battle of Poitiers. He was later imprisoned in the Tower of London for 16 months, being released in 1358. To be released he had to swear never to bear arms against the English King, except in the presence of the King of Scotland or in self-defence. In about 1358 he witnessed a grant of the lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch to Melrose Abbey, by William, Earl of Douglas; this is the first record of a connections between the Douglasses and the Gledstains of that Ilk, which would last for several generations. In 1359/60 he is 'William of Gladstanys' when he witnessed a charter by William, Earl of Douglas and Lord of Liddesdale. There is a letter of protection of 1360 from William, 1st Earl of Douglas, referring to Sir William as his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers and charging him to protect the lands of the Abbot and Convent of Melrose within the Barony (specifically Ringwood). At about the same time he witnessed a confirmation of the advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey. In about 1360 he witnessed a charter for lands in Lauderdale and was also recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as a watcher of wool on the marches. In 1363 he was one of a number of Scotsmen given safe conduct into England by King Edward (probably related to a ransom). He was succeeded by his son Sir William who was granted his lands in Peeblesshire. His seal (of 1358) appears to bear a winged lion rampant and the inscription 'S' WILLELMI DE GLEDESTANES'. Sir William (d.c.1400) son of Sir William according to a charter of 1365, when he was granted his father's land of 'Wodgrenyton, Winkiston and Acolmfelde' in Peeblesshire. He witnessed a charter by James, Earl of Douglas in the 1380s. He is probably the William who witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh in 1390. He obtained lands near Peebles from David II, and is referred to in 1396 as 'of Gledstanes and Coklaw'. This 'Coklaw' is believed to have been in Lanarkshire, and gave its name to the tower built later near Hawick. In 1396 Sir William Inglis was granted the Barony of Manor, except for the lands there that he possessed. He married Margaret Turnbull

(said to be daughter and heiress of John Turnbull), acquiring other lands near Peebles (specifically Hundleshope), as well as in Selkirk and at Robertson. His sons were John, James and Thomas. He appears to have been succeeded by John and later by James (although this is uncertain). In 1430 Margaret resigned her lands of Robertson to her son Thomas. William (15th C.) recorded in 1432 as a witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. Although no other designation is given for him, he must have been an important local laird at the time, probably connected with Cocklaw. William (15th C.) one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus in 1489 to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in certain lands. The others were William Ker of Mersington, Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and William Elliot of Gorrenberry. His relationship to other Gledstains is unclear. Perhaps the same George was recorded in 1489, along with George, as witness to a retour for the Kers of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. He may be the William who in 1500, along with Bartholomew and George, witnessed a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton. It is possible that they were connected with Kelso Abbey. William of Arthurshiel (d.bef. 1565) possibly a younger son of James of that Ilk and Cocklaw. He appears to have been the first Laird of Arthurshiel in Peebleshire, and ancestor of Prime Minister W.E. Gladstone. William (16th C.) son of John of Cocklaw, who is recorded in a document of 1576. He may be the William who was a Bailie in Hawick in 1574 when Thomas Short sold a tenement in Hawick to Robert Johnstone. It is possible that he is the 'William of Flecks' who signed the 1584 bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Wardens, his name being listed along with other local Gledstains. William of Dod (16th C.). In 1627 his daughter Eupham married John Rutherford of Capehope. This could be an error for 'Walter of Dod'. William (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter (or perhaps his younger brother), he was 15th of that Ilk. He is recorded as a baptismal witness in 1642 and is also probably the William 'of . . .' who witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Synton in 1661. He was recorded as Laird in 1663, when he was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1663 he also had sheep stolen from his land by John and Walter Glendinning. He was further recorded as Laird of Gledstains in 1663 when he paid Land Tax for £1240 for property in Cavers Parish. Perhaps the same William owned teinds and lands (valued at £130) in Makerstoun Parish in 1643, 1663 and 1678. He was recorded as William of Cocklaw in 2 deeds of 1673. He was succeeded by James, presumably his son. He was probably also the 'deceased Gladstains of that Ilk' whose daughter Margaret married William Murray in Edinburgh in 1693, the ceremony being carried out by John Langlands, former minister at Hawick. He may have married Elizabeth Wishart or Margaret Riddell. It is possible that Robert (mentioned as being 'of that Ilk' in 1704) was a younger son, and that he was also father of Esther, who married Robert, son of James Rutherford, surgeon in Jedburgh. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Stewart and their son William was baptised in 1671. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Wishart and their children included: Isobell (b.1671); William (b.1673); and Margaret (b.1676). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (17th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1673). William (17th C.) resident of Hownam Parish. In 1681 he was imprisoned in Canongate Tolbooth for being a Covenanter. He is probably the same man as the unnamed resident of Hownam who was imprisoned several times, always at his own expense, was fined and had his livestock taken from him. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Gledstains and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1685. William (1674–1703) son of Walter the Town Clerk. He left Hawick at 15, eventually working as overseer in a Barbados plantation, where he died. He may be the William, 'student', who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1682 and 1684 (for Francis, perhaps an uncle or other relative). William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the William listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He witnessed baptisms for tailor James Turnbull in 1705 and 1709 and for merchant Michael Scott in 1709. In 1711 he (along with fellow tailor Alexander Hislop) witnessed a baptism for carrier William Rae. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Douglas in 1698. In 1719 his daughter Sara married James, son to Walter Scott, 'Westport'. In 1730 he witnessed a baptism for this same couple.

William (17th/18th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is separately listed from the tailor, and so presumably was a different man of the same name. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobell Porteous in 1700. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Whitlaw, as recorded in the 1707 baptism of his daughter. He married Marion Henderson and their children included Margaret (b.1707) and Robert (b.1712). The witnesses in 1707 were James Gray in Whitlaw and Bailie George Martin and in 1712 were Walter Elliot and Walter Graham (probably the Bailies). He may be the same as one of the other Williams, but appears to be distinct from the other workman in Whitlaw. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Haliburton and their son John was baptised in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as 'workman' in 1708, 1712 and 1721, 'workman in ye town of Hawick' in 1714 and 'workman in whitla' in 1709. He married Bessie Scott (who was also from Hawick Parish) in 1703. Their children included: John (b.1706); William (b.1708); Walter and Janet (b.1709); Helen (b.1712); Helen (again, b.1714); and William (b.1721). The witnesses in 1708 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel, in 1709 were Dand and James Gray in Whitlaw, in 1712 were Bailie James Deans and James Scott at Colifort, in 1714 were Bailies James Deans and James Scott and in 1721 were weavers David and John Miller. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was a servant in Mabonlaw in 1709, with his wife living in Borthwickhaugh. His children included Jean (b.1709) and Robert (b.1712). There were 5 witnesses recorded in 1709, thee being the tenants in Mabonlaw: Walter Scott; Robert Scott; William Henderson; William Turnbull; and John Riddell. He may be the same William whose wife was Mary Wilson and whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included: Agnes (b.1718); William (b.1720); and James (b.1722). William (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick, son of carrier John. In 1713 he was cited in the Session book for excessive drunkenness, the minister having 'found him vomiting in his drunkenness in ye Churchyard'. He apparently acknowledged his faults on his knees and promised to live temperately thereafter. But the following year he was back before the Session 'rebuked for his frequent drinking and wasting his father's substance by Ryoting and reveling' and was further threatened with imprisonment by the Magistrates. This is one of the earliest records of a habitual drunkard in Hawick! In 1717 he was rebuked for openly fighting in the street with his wife and father, and told that if he did not refrain from drunkenness he would be sent to the Bailie, who would then send him to the Circuit Court for harsher punishment. In 1714 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Purves. Their children included: John (b.1717); Jean (b.1718); Euphan (b.1721); and Helen (b.1724). Marion (b.1715) may also have been his daughter. William (17th/18th C.) brother of John, who was Laird of Whitlaw. In 1717 he and his brother were witnesses for 2 baptisms for Archibald Paterson in Flex for John Hobkirk in Whitchesters, and in 1718 the pair were witnesses for John Davidson, tenant in Flex. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. William (17th/18th C.) described as being 'of Kirklands' in 1721 when his daughter Jean married gardener Robert Ker in Hawick. His lands could have been Kirklands in Wilton Parish, or one of the other local places of the same name. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Ker in 1725. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Brockie in 1726. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Mary Baldie and their children included: John (b.1735); Robert (b.1738); Mary (b.1739); Helen (b.1741); and William (b.1743). The witness in 1743 was smith Thomas Huntly. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Wilson and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1743. William (18th C.) ploughman at Braidlie on Hermitage Water, recorded in 1750. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Nichol in 1754 and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1757, with the whole congregation as witnesses. William (18th C.) married Janet Lillico in Bedrule in 1756. William (18th C.) married Catherine Riddell in Hawick Parish in 1759. He was living at Chapelhill when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762 and 1763. His children included: Henrietta (b.1761); James (b.1762); Robert (b.1763), probably the Robert who married Mary Scott in 1788; and an unnamed daughter (b.1769). The witnesses in 1761 were gardener James Kyle and shoemaker William Riddell (probably related to his wife). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Betty Riddell in 1773. Their children included: Robert (b.1774); John (b.1777); Betty (b.1781); and Jane

(b.1784). William (18th C.) recorded at Teindside Bridge-end in 1784. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Walter (b.1784); and James (b.1787). A second James (b.1788) was probably also his son. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Esther Nichol and their children included: William (b.1774); and Thomas (b.1782). William (18th/19th C.) listed as innkeeper in Hawick in 1791 when he paid the cart tax. It is unclear where his inn might have been. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Hoscoteshiel in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Harwood. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, having 3 working horses. He may have been father of Thomas, who was recorded at Harwood on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bowanhill Roadside (at Teviothead), listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. He is probably the carrier at Bowanhill whose son William was recorded on the 1801 Militia ballot for Cavers Parish. William (b.c.1780) son of William, carrier at Bowanhill. He was listed on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He could be the William who married Ann Rae and whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1805); John (b.1807); Thomas (b.1808); and Walter (b.1810). William (18th/19th C.) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area, son of Robert and Mary Scott. He married Elizabeth Davidson. Their children included: Robert (b.1812), married Mina Nichol; Mary (or Marion, b.1814), who married William Paterson; Walter (b.1817), married Jane Easton; James (b.1821), married Jennie Edgar; Margaret (b.1825), married Robert Hall; Catherine (b.1827), married a Mr. Rose; and William (b.1830), married Helen Pringle. The baptisms were in Roberton Parish, when he was at Vales for the first 2 and at Parkhillhaugh for the next 3. In 1840 the family emigrated to Canada, settling at Nithvale, across the River Nith from Ayr, Ontario. William (19th C.) married Christy Stothart in Roberton Parish in 1828 (note that the spelling varies widely in older records, including 'Gladstain', 'Gladstaines', 'Gladstains', 'Gladstanes', 'Gladstannis', 'Gladston', 'Gladstones', 'Gladstons', 'Gladstone', 'Glairstaan', 'Glairstaan', 'Glairstaines', 'Glairstanes', 'Glairstains', 'Glairstanis', 'Glairstones', 'Gleadsteans', 'Gleddistans', 'Gledstain', 'Gledstaines', 'Gledstainis', 'Gledstane', 'Gledstanes', 'Gledstannis', 'Gledstannis', 'Gledstans', 'Gledstines', 'Gledstons', 'Glestanes', etc.).

the Gledstains (thu-gled-stānz) n. once prominent local family, being the most common former spelling of the name 'Gladstone'. The origin of the name is probably related to the Old Scots 'gled', meaning a kite. The family had its roots in Lanarkshire (the original lands being a few miles north of Biggar), acquired land in Peeblesshire and then moved its main centre to the Hawick area, with lands in Kirkton and Cavers, with principal residence at Cocklaw. Cocklaw Castle (at Ormiston, but never more than a minor tower house) was involved in the 1403 'Siege of Cocklaw'. In 1509/10 the lands of John Gledstains of that Ilk within the Barony of Cavers included Coliford, Ormiston, Dod and Giddenscleuch, and it was said that he had a charter of confirmation from King David (which must have been from the mid-14th century). 'Little Gladstain good at need' led Hawick men at the 1575 Raid of the Redeswire. A member of the family sold Stobs estate to the Eliotts in 1580. A major branch, connected directly to the Gledstains of that Ilk and Cocklaw, was the Gledstains of Whitlaw and later Hilliesland. They provided Town Clerks to Hawick for about 110 years with only minor interruptions (1673–1783). The family also provided Cornets in 1714 and 1744. The Cocklaw estate included Orchard and Hummelknowes, and the family held it until 1734, when the last Gledstains of the Ilk died. The burial aisle of the Gledstains of Cocklaw was pulled down by the heritors sometime in the 18th century. Branches of the family also held lands at Dodd, Coliforthill and Adderstone Shiel. They farmed at the Flex and elsewhere, and had property at 80 High Street, as well as a town house in the Mid Raw. The local Gledstains lost much of their lands in the 18th century, and then the name died out, but descendants undoubtedly remain in Hawick. Another branch, of Craig and Kelwood in Dumfriesshire, also died out in the male line. Meanwhile the Arthursiels branch flourished and produced William Ewart Gladstone, who became Prime Minister. The family aisle in old Cavers church was abandoned, but was located where a set of steps leading to the gallery was built. The family motto is 'Fide et virtue' (with faith and valour), which was engraved on a sundial belonging to Francis of Whitlaw, bearing the date 1693. The original arms feature a savage's head dripping blood, with a bonnet of bay and holly leaves. The papers of the Douglasses of Cavers include many documents relating to the Gledstains of Cocklaw, beginning in the year 1530.

the Gledstane Bible (thu-gled-stin-bī-bul) n. old family bible in the Museum, once belonging to Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland, Town Clerk of Hawick. It is a 'Beza' Bible, Geneva edition, dated 1601. It contains many handwritten entries relating to this once important local family, e.g. 'upon the 4 day of maii 1645, my father Francis Gladstanes and other nyne sister's sons of Sir William Douglas of Cavers killed at the Battle of Aulderne'. The bible came into the hands of Catherine Cheyne, a servant of the family, then passed to her nephew, William Smith (cutlet in Hawick), then to Andrew Irvine (merchant in Hawick), who presented it to the Burgh. James Wilson described it in 1858 and J.A.H. Murray transcribed many of the entries in 1878.

Gledstane's Lands (gled-stinz-lawndz) n. former name for a small piece of land near Hunthill and Lanton. The lands appear to have been held by George Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1466. They formed the dowry of Liliass, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw, when she married Richard Rutherford in the latter part of the 16th century. It was 'Gladstanis-part de Langtoun' in 1510 when Ninian Glendinning had a charter for the Barony of Scraesburgh. In 1536/7 the 'ten merkland of old extent lying in the town and territory of Langtoun called Gledstanislandis' when listed as the exception to the lands in the Barony of Scraesburgh infetted to John Rutherford of Hunthill by Ninian Glendinning of that Ilk. In 1685 the succession to the Rutherfords of Hunthill estates included the Barony of 'Scraisbury alias Hunthill, exceptis 10 mercatis terrarum, antiqui extentus, vocatis Gledstanes Lands'. It seems likely that this was the same piece of land later called Hunthill and owned by the Gledstains of Dod.

Gledstone's (gled-stinz) n. Gladstone's mill at No. 10 Union Street, being adjacent to the corner of Union Street and North Bridge Street. The site had been James Brand's 'New Academy' in the mid-19th century. The mill closed in the late 1970s and was converted to a warehouse, used by N.G. Thomson. It was then converted to Blondettes bar, but was demolished after the concrete house on the corner burned down.

Gledstone Street (gled-stin-stree) n. Gladstone Street in the West End, built in 1878, and named after Prime Minister William Ewart Gladstone. The first buildings were 2 large houses and 2 small cottages on the south side. In 1897 J.P. Alison designed a tenement at No. 20.

Gledswing (gledz-wing) n. said to be the home of Hawick lawyer Adam Laing in 1908. It is unclear where this may have been.

Gled'swing Strip (gledz-wing-strip) n. narrow plantation on the north side of Ruberlaw, between Denholmhill farm and Denholmhill Wood.

Land o' the greenwood, the glen, an' the wild' [HSR], '... And the horses fade as they faced the glen, And the shadows gather the Harden men' [WHO] (the word is much more common further north in Scotland, and locally is used almost exclusively for Harden Glen, with 'cleuch' used commonly instead).

Glen (glen) n. Rev. Alexander (1726–1805) son of James, minister of Dirleton, he studied at Edinburgh University and was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1749. He became minister at Kirkton in 1751, but was translated to Galashiels in 1757. He then became minister of Dirleton (like his father) in 1769. He married Ann Blackadder (who died in 1830) and their children were James (who became a Church of England minister), Katherine, Elizabeth, Barbara (who married John Wilson in Edinburgh), John, Alexander (who became a solicitor), Nisbet (who became a naval commander), Ann and Walter. Jean (18th C.) last person to stand in the pillory at the Mercat Cross. She lived in Needle Street. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Grisel 'Person' and their son James was baptised in 1651. The witnesses were Simon and Robert Nichol.

Glenburn

Glenburn (glen-burn) n. cottages north of Robertson, on the Glen Burn, at the end of the road past the manse.

glence (glens) n., v., arch. glance – '...like a wawkin' stick, wi' a big turned heed that the mune glenced on' [BCM1880].

Glendinning see Glendonwyn

Glendinning (glen-di-nin) n. Adam Fitzhugh of Glendonwyn (13th/14th C.) probably the first of the family to use the designation 'of Glendonwyn' or Glendinning. He was an important man during the reign of Alexander III. He had a charter around 1286 from John Macgill for lands in Clifton and Morebattle. He may have married Agnews, daughter of Sir John Towers. He was succeeded by his son Adam. Adam of Glendonwyn (13th/14th C.) probably a descendant of the Fitzhugh family. He held many lands under the superiority of the house of Douglas. He had a discharge of 1313 from Archibald, Lord of Galloway, for all his past feu-duties. In 1320 he had a charter from King Robert for part of the duties from Roxburgh Castle. In 1325 he was confirmed in the lands of 'Fallhope' in Roxburghshire, these possibly being 'Phaup'. He may have married a daughter of Wauchope of that Ilk and was succeeded by another Adam. Adam of that Ilk (d.1363). He held lands in Ewesdale and elsewhere, with the Earl of Douglas being his superior. These generations are confused, and it is unclear how many separate Adams there were. He may be the Sir

Glendinning

Adam who married Margaret Douglas, daughter of Sir John of Lothian and sister of Sir James of Dalkeith (although accounts differ, and she may have been wife of a different Adam). He is probably the 'Ade Glendonning' (also transcribed as 'Glentoun') who forfeited lands in the town of Roxburgh, which were granted to Henry Ashkirk in about 1362. His children included: Sir Adam, who succeeded; Sir Simon, who died at the Battle of Otterburn; Matthew, who became Bishop of Glasgow; Thomas; a daughter who married a de Mundaville; and another daughter who married Thomas de Moffat. Sir Adam (d.c.1397) son of Adam and Margaret Douglas, daughter of Sir John Douglas of Lothian. His grandfather was probably Adam Fitzhugh of Glendonwyn, who first adopted the 'of Glendonwyn' appellation, and his brother Matthew was Bishop of Glasgow. However, these early generations are unclear. In a rental roll c.1376 (among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton) he is 'Domino Ade de Glendonwyne' and listed as holding the lands of 'Eskdale Mur' and 'Le Baly'. About 1380 he witnessed a charter for Henry of Swinton and everal around the same time for William, Earl of Douglas. He is recorded as 'de Glendonwin' in 1389, in a charter confirming the lands of Wauchope to Alexander of Wauchope. He acted as general receiver for the Earl of Douglas' rents. In 1385 he received a charter for the feu-duties of Scarborough. He was an envoy to the English court and also travelled to Picardy in France. He obtained charters for many lands, including 'Easter Fawhope' (probably 'Phaup', either in Ettrickdale or near Mossypaul) and Breccallow in Dumfriesshire. In 1390 he was a witness of the confirmation of the lands of Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. A 1391 charter of Archibald, Earl of Douglas, dated at Glendonwyn, describes how the Earl was mortifying certain lands in the Barony of Hawick in order to found a chapel in Westerkirk, and directing him to arrange this. He may have married Margaret Douglas, but this could be confusion with an earlier generation. He was married to Wauchope's daughter Margaret and was to succeeded to the lands if there were no other heirs; this appears to have happened. His children probably included: John, who died at Homildon Hill; Sir Simon, who married Mary, daughter of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas; William; Adam; Matthew; and Robert, in Annandale. Adam (15th C.) received a cow in the will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme in 1491/2. He is listed as 'Ade Glendonwyn'. Mark and Margaret were also listed. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Turnbull and their children included William (b.1686). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hume and their children included John (b.1682). Adam (17th C.) listed at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls, although his name is crossed out and he is then listed among the 'deficient'. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Blackburn in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Groundistone in 1698. He married Margaret Preacher in Ashkirk in 1696 and their children (baptised in Wilton) included: John (b.1698); and Margaret (b.1699). The witnesses in 1698 were George Scott and Thomas Preacher (surely related to his wife). He may be the Adam whose daughter Jean married John Gledstains in Hawick in 1717. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1718. His children included: Bessie (b.1704); John and William (b.1715); and Agnes (b.1718). Helen (b.1707), baptised in Hawick, may also be his child. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Ashkirk Parish in 1714. Adam (18th C.) possibly the son of William, born in Robertson in 1734. In 1765 he is recorded as shepherd at Mains in Liddesdale. He married Agnes Crozier. He had 4 sons: the eldest, William (who married Mary Elliot), being a shepherd; and the youngest, Adam (b.1762, who married Elizabeth Crook), a soldier. Adam 'Slow Adam' (d.1808) carter in Hawick. He married Isabel Roger, who died just 3 weeks after him. They had a daughter, Margaret (1770–75), who is buried at Borthwick Waas. Probably the same Adam was recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same Glendinning shown as owner of lands on the south side of the west-end of the High Street on Wood's 1824 map (even although deceased by then). Esther, who married John Rieve in Howcleuch, may have been his sister (since she is buried next to his daughter). Adam (1762–1851) son of Adam and Agnes Crozier, born in Castleton. He was a soldier, although it is not known which regiment he originally served in (but it may have been the Scots Greys). It is said that he served all over Europe, although family tradition also says that he never served abroad. In 1805 he was Cornet with the Royal Wagon Train, becoming Lieutenant to the 9th Royal Veterinary Battalion in 1806. He was in the party for Lord Nelson's funeral. He retired on full pay to settle back in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 5 Langholm Street and listed as 'Lieut. Army R. Vet. Bat. H.P.' His wife was Elizabeth and their children included: Thomas, who served in Canada with the Royal Wagon Train; Mary (b.1804), who married John Grieve of Branhholme Braes; and Isobel (1805–92), who married James Inglis. It is possible that he was the servant at Harden and Myredykes in Castleton Parish, listed among heads of households in 1835–41. Adam (1802–68) eldest son of shepherd William and Mary Elliot. He was born at Cauldronfoot in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd at Potholm in 1841 and at Tweedenhead in 1851 and 1861. He married Margaret Robson (from Ewes) and they had 6 sons and 7 daughters. It is said that all of his sons became shepherds, including the eldest, Adam, whose 4 sons were all shepherds in the Jed and Rule valleys. Their children included: Helen (1829–1915), who married Walter Kitchen; William (1831–1911), who married Anne Kyle and died at Gatehousecote; Peter (1833–1904), who emigrated to Canada, worked as a miner and is buried in Ross Bay Cemetery, Victoria; Adam (1836–1920), who emigrated to Victoria, Canada; Mary (b.1838), who had a daughter, Margaret; Margaret (b.1838), who lived at Shankend; Janet (1840–78), who married James Temple Robson; John (1842–1907), who died at Westshiels; Ninian (c.1844–98), a shepherd in Northumberland; Agnes (1846–90), who died in Oregon, U.S.A.; Walter (1849–1928); Isabella (b.1851); and Elizabeth (b.1852), who married George Rutherford. He died at Tweedenhead. Adam (1806–1865) son of John and Margaret Hatlie, he was baptised in Castleton Parish. He moved to Liverpool, where he was a soap manufacturer. He married Agnes, daughter of William Glendinning and Mary Elliot. Their children were: Mary, John, William, Mary, Robert, Adam, James and Randle. Adam (1855–1935) son of William, he was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Colterscleuch and elsewhere. He married Eliza (1855–1941), daughter of James Scott and Janet Cavers. He is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. They had a daughter Janet (b.1879). Alexander of that Ilk and Parton (d.1616) son of John. In 1562 he inherited the lands in Liddesdale that had belonged to his grandfather Ninian, according to a document from James, Earl of Bothwell. He was a witness to a bond of caution in 1585. He married Alison, daughter of Alexander Gordon of Troquhane and secondly Nicola, daughter of Robert Herries of Mabie. His children included: John, who pre-deceased him; Robert, who succeeded; Simon, who died young; and William, who predeceased his father and had descendants who went to Ireland. Andrew (b.1800) probably son of Walter and Elizabeth Park, he was born at Glendinning, Westerkirk. He became shepherd at Craikhope where he is recorded in 1851. In 1837 he married Jean, daughter of Andrew Anderson, who was for 50 years shepherd at Glendinning. Their children were: Andrew, who emigrated to New Zealand, where he called his farm 'Glendearg'; Thomas, who was in the county police; and William, shepherd at Kid-dem Hill, Eskdalemuir, whose son Andrew was shepherd at Ruletownhead. Andrew (b.c.1815) son of William, he lived at Ashkirk Mill and was a mason. In 1834 he won the foot race at the Common Riding Games. Andrew (19th/20th C.) son of William, who was shepherd at Kiddem Hill, Eskdalemuir, and grandson of Andrew, who was shepherd at Craikhope. He became shepherd at Ruletownhead, and had 3 brothers who were also shepherds. Archibald of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded in the Circuit Court of 1622 when he was cautioner for his brother Andrew. He also appeared, along with John Graham of 'Thicksyd', as caution for 'Lancie Glendinning, now in Dryff' (formerly tenant in Logan), as well as 'Hob and Andro Glendonings in Logane' (also in Riddings and Hudshouse, respectively). Archibald (17th C.) resident at 'Julian' in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was surely related to John, who was also listed there. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He married Margaret Glendinning and their children included: George (b.1689), born in Ashkirk Parish; and John (b.1702), born in Hawick Parish. Archibald (19th C.) joiner in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households in 1838–41. Bartholomew (d.c.1503) eldest son of John of Glendonwyn and Parton. He was witness to Alexander Home becoming Bailie of the Lordship of Eskdale in 1495. He witnessed a charter for Gordon of Lochinvar in 1501. He and his brother Simon were killed by John Lindsay of Wauchope when he was discharging his duties as Sheriff by attempting to arrange for one third of the lands of Wauchope to go to the widow of Lindsay's father. Lindsay was executed for this crime in 1505. He probably died about the same time as his father, and his brother Ninian succeeded. He married Margaret, daughter of

Glendinning

Glendinning

Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar. David (1860–1942) son of William, he was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Hawthornside and elsewhere. In 1883 he married Margaret Martin (1863–1934) from Canonbie; she died at Lurgiescleuch. Their children were: Matthew Martin (1883–1967), who also worked as a shepherd and married Agnes Skilling; Annie (1885–1964), who married John Easton; William (b.1886), who died in infancy; Elizabeth Agnes (1888–1983); William (again, 1891–1975), who married Mary Jane Easton; Robert (1893–1934); Adam (1896–1976); Margaret Jane (b.1899); and David Martin (b.1903). Ellen (17th/18th C.) said to be an elderly member of the Newcastleton Burgher congregation in about the 1810s. She was the last hold-out for the practice of reading each line before singing psalms in church. When the change arrived, she claimed she had gotten the better of the Session by not joining in, but reading and singing the lines later at home. George (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He married Jean Turnbull in 1709 and their son Robert was baptised in 1710, with witnesses Andrew Davidson in Newbigging and Thomas Davidson (perhaps the man recorded at Stobicote in 1716). George (18th C.) married Isobel Lillico in Kirkton in 1733. George (b.c.1770s) carrier at Hummelknowes. He is recorded as a labourer at Hummelknowes on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799; James was also listed there and so probably his brother. In 1801 he was a servant at Hummelknowes. He is recorded in a list of men volunteering in 1803 to fight against the French. He could be the George who was living at Lower Calaburn in 1841, aged about 65, and listed as 'Independent'. Henry (18th C.) hired at Braidlie (on Hermitage) in 1750, probably as an assistant shepherd. James (17th C.) recorded as being 'in Burgh, in Cavers parish' in 1684 when he was listed as a fugitive among many others for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was presumably tenant at Brugh and probably related to shepherd John, who was recorded at Brugh in 1694. He may be the 'John in Brough' whose will is recorded in 1684 (although the first name is incorrect, the match of the dates is probably not a coincidence). James (17th C.) recorded as being 'in South-field' in 1684 on a long list of men declared as rebels for refusing to take 'the Test'. James (17th C.) tenant in Stobicote on the 1684 list of men declared rebels for being Covenanters.

Glendinning

He was listed separately from James in Southfield and James in Brugh. James (17th C.) shepherd at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Robert Stewart in Wilton in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1700. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as herd at Hawick Shiels in 1703. His children included Christian (b.1703), with baptismal witnesses Bailies George Martin and Robert Wright. Margaret (b.1701) was probably also his child. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Birneyknowe in 1716. He probably married Bessie Glendinning in Cavers in 1711 and had children Ann (b.1713), Isabel (b.1716), Thomas (b.1718) and James (b.1720). James (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Falnash. His son John was baptised in Hawick Parish (probably at Caerlenrig) in 1720. James (b.c.1704) farm worker, born at Whitchesters, probably son of John. He lived there for 41 years and later moved to Hawick. In 1761 he was one of 3 men chosen to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft in order to regularise it. He could be the James who married Bessie Rule (or 'Rowl') in Hawick in 1721, both of them being described as 'in whitchesters'; their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included Janet (b.1724), James (b.1727), John (b.1731), Robert (b.1735), Betty (b.1737) and Walter (b.1743). The witnesses in 1731 were William 'Willieson' and John Hobkirk and in 1743 were the 'whole congregation'. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for James Dodds (in Whitchesters) and Jean Glendinning (perhaps his daughter) in 1758. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Bowanhill in 1729 when he married Jane Turnbull. James (18th C.) resident at Broadleeshiel in 1729 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Telfer and their children included: Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Jardine and their son James was baptised in 1776. James (18th C.) resident at Outersideshiel in 1775 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Laidlaw and their children included: Betty (b.1757); Margaret (b.1761); and Adam (b.1766). The witnesses in 1766 were Charles Rutherford and John Richardson. Elizabeth (b.1760), with mother's name given as 'Margaret' Laidlaw, was probably also his child. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier John Richardson in 1764. Adam is probably the son of wright James who died in Hawick in 1787. He could be the son of James and Bessie Rule baptised in Hawick in 1727. James (1749/50–1823) married Margaret Brydon, who died in 1839, aged 83. She may have been daughter of William Brydon, born in Ettrick in 1756. His wife died at Gair (probably the one on Tima Water) and he died at Glendinning. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. He could be the James, son of Thomas, baptised in Robertson in 1748. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Hendry and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1772. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1769 he married Jane Telfer and their children included: Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). He may be the James, junior, whose unnamed child died in 1781. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at 'Callendridge' (probably Caerlenrig) in 1772 when his son Robert was baptised in Cavers. Perhaps he was the same man as James in Hawick Parish (if Robert was baptised twice). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Headshaw Mill, recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (b.1775/6) from Nichol Forest in Cumberland, he was a tailor in Newcastleton. He was recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 10 South Hermitage Street, He married Esther Kyle and they had children William (also a tailor), Margaret and Esther. James (b.c.1770s) recorded as a labourer at Hummelknowes on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. George was also listed there and so probably his brother. He was listed as a labourer at Hummelknowe Mill on the 1801 Militia ballot. James (b.c.1770s) weaver at Firknow according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Perhaps the same James was a labourer at New Woll on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He could be the James who married Bell Watson in Ashkirk in 1794. Alternatively he could be the James who married Janet Hislop and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: James (b.1813); Margaret (b.1815); Isabel (b.1816); Hannah (b.1817); Agnes (b.1818); Janet (b.1819); Janet (again, b.1822); Helen (b.1823); and Mary (b.1826). James (b.c.1780) hind at Belses according to the Militia ballot in Ancrum Parish in 1801. James (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Girnwood. He was recorded on the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. In 1808 his child was baptised at Deanburnhaugh. He married Margaret Scott and their children (mostly baptised in Robertson) included: John (b.1808); Mary (b.1810); Robert (b.1813); and James (b.1815), baptised in Lyne and Megget Parish. James (19th/20th C.) son of William, who was shepherd at Kiddem Hill, Eskdalemuir. His grandfather Andrew had been shepherd at Craikhope, where he also worked as shepherd. James (19th/20th C.) law clerk in Hawick who was Cornet in 1909 and Secretary of the Common Riding Committee in 1925. He served for many years as Master of Ceremonies for the Common Riding. He was also Callants' Club President in 1934 and Club Treasurer for 20 years. John (14th/15th C.) listed in 1398 among the 'borowis' for establishing the Earl of Douglas' bounds on the West March. Simon was listed after him, and they were surely related. John of Glendonwyn and Parton (d.1503) son of Sir Simon. He possessed large amounts of land, including Glendinning, Clifton, Scraesburgh, Breccallow, Wauchope, Westerkirk and Langholm. He is probably the Laird of Gledinning who was fined in 1494/5 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1495 he was superior of Scraesburgh when the west half of the town there was inherited by George Rutherford. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert, Lord Maxwell of Caerlaverock. He secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of William, Lord Sinclair. His children included: Bartholomew, the eldest, who was killed by John Lindsay of Wauchope; Ninian, who succeeded; Simon, also killed by Lindsay; Adam, father of John of Bishopton; and Janet, who married Gilbert Grierson, 2nd of Lag. He may be the Laird of 'Glendunwin' for whose murder Patrick 'Dunwedy' in Eskdale was hanged in 1508/9. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1502. Along with William Waugh, he had 4 cows stolen from him, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole having remission for the theft. John (15th/16th C.) described as Coroner of Eskdale in 1507/8 when he gave licence for Robert Erskine to be infefted in the lands of Dalgleish. He was probably father of Simon, who was Coroner in 1540. John of Glendonwyn and Parton (c.1510-c.60) son of Ninian, from whom he inherited lands in Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbright and elsewhere. He may be the 'Domino de Glendynwyn' who heritably held the lands of Riddelstead in Liddesdale according to a rental roll of 1541. In 1554 he and his mother agreed to take it in turns to provide for his food and clothing 'considering his poverty'; he was then described being 'of Drumrith'. He married Elizabeth (or Isabel), daughter of Sir Robert Gordon of Lochinvar. Their sons were: Alexander, who succeeded; William of Garquhinye, progenitor of the Glendinnings of Mochrum; Simon, whose son was George of Laggan. John (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as 'Johnne Glendonynge'. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Byreholm. In 1623 he and Sandy Armstrong in Harden entered John Armstrong (called 'of Powsholme') to the Justice Court in Jedburgh. John of that Ilk and Parton (17th C.) son of John. He was confirmed in the family lands in 1630. In 1644 he was part of Montrose's army, setting up the King's standard in Dumfries, as a result of which he was denounced as a traitor. His goods were forfeited and he fled abroad until the Restoration. He married Isabel, daughter of George Seton, 2nd Earl of Winton. His children included: George, who married Elizabeth Glendoning of Gilston, but predeceased his father; James, who succeeded his father, but died soon afterwards without children; William who died unmarried soon after his elder brother; and Robert, who succeeded. By this time the family was focussed on their estate at Parton and all local connections appear to have been severed. John 'Sowtail' (17th C.) recorded in the Hawick Burgh Records in 1644. His wife, 'Jenet Scott, alleged witch', had William Elliot in Harwood, acting as her cautioner, promise that she would appear before the Justice-General or the Bailies of the Regality of Dumfries. John (17th C.) along with Walter (probably a brother or son) he was charged with stealing sheep from the Laird of Gledstains in 1663. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Riddell and their children included: Margaret (b.1671); John (b.1674); and Helen (b.1678). The witnesses in 1678 were Robert Hardie and Robert Cowan. John (1665/6-1748) resident at Lodgegill in Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1755, aged 81. John (17th C.) shepherd in Brugh listed among the 'deficient' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to James, who was declared a fugitive in 1684. John (17th C.) resident at 'Julian' in Castleton Parish according to the 1694

Glendinning

Hearth Tax records. He was surely related to Archibald, who was also listed there. John (17th C.) tenant at Westburnflat in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) cooper in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the 'deficients' of the Parish. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Whitchesters in 1704, 1716, 1722 and 1723. In 1716, 1722 and 1725 he witnessed baptisms for William Williamson, shepherd in Whitchesters. He is probably the elder of Hawick Kirk recorded in 1717, along with Andrew (presumably also Glendinning), when charged with collecting monies from Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Croft and Closses, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He was recorded as an Elder in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters. He and William Williamson witnessed a baptism for John Hobkirk in Whitchesters in 1720. He is probably the John who was tenant in Whitchesters when he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1723 and another for Robert Scott, weaver in Hawick Shiel. He is probably the 'Elder' who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for John Wilson ('Eggman'). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Wilkie in 1731. He married Helen Scott in 1701 and their children included James (b.1704) and Esther (b.1707). The witnesses in 1704 were William Bell in Whitchesters and Robert Rodger. He is probably the elder of Hawick Kirk recorded in 1717, along with Andrew (presumably also Glendinning), when charged with collecting monies from Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Croft and Closses, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He was recorded as an Elder in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters. John (18th C.) resident of Whitchesters. He was 'younger' in 1722, suggesting he may have been son of the earlier John in Whitchesters. He is probably the John who was tenant in Whitchesters when he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1723. He is probably also the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging in 1731. He married Bessie Rule and their son John was baptised in 1722, with witnesses Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and flesher Robert Deans. John (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. His wife's name was also Glendinning (although no forename is recorded for her) and they married in 1753. Their children included: William (b.1754);

Glendinning

Margaret (b.1756); an unnamed son (b.1759); Helen (b.1765). Andrew (b.1759) was probably also his son. The witness in 1759 was John Laidlaw. John (1747–1819) born in Cavers Parish, son of Robert. He was a shepherd, who died at Commonbrae and is buried at Teviothead. In 1783 and 1786 he is recorded at Caerlenrig Righead. He married Isabel Miller and their children included: John (b.1783); and James (b.1786). John (18th C.) recorded at Todrig Mill in 1781. He married Beatrix (or 'Beattie') Scott in Robertson in 1780 and their children included: James (b.1781), baptised in Robertson; Katherine (b.1785), baptised in Bowden; and Janet (b.1788), baptised in Bowden. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Headshaw according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He may be the John who married Janet Scott and whose daughter Euphan was baptised in Ashkirk in 1812. John (b.c.1780) servant at Deanfoot in Minto Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Perhaps the same John married Margaret Scott and had children James (b.1819) and Andrew (b.1821) baptised in Minto. John (b.c.1780) agricultural labourer at Apple-treehall. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–41. His wife was Agnes. John (18th/19th C.) carter in Newcastleton. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. He could be the resident of Castleton of that name who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. John (b.1810/1) son of William, he was a mason in Ashkirk. In 1851 he was living at Haughhead Cottage in Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Eliza (from Edinburgh) and their children included: William; John; Mary Ann; and Andrew. John (b.1858) son of William and Helen Jackson, he was born in Teviothead Parish. He worked as a shepherd at Wellhaugh in Northumberland and in Robertson Parish. He married Margaret (1867–1909), daughter of Mary Glendinning (with the father's name unknown), and granddaughter of shepherd Adam. Their children were: Helen (b.1891); William (b.1895); Mary (b.1897); Margaret (b.1901); John (b.1902); and Walter (b.1905). Margaret (15th C.) bequeathed a cow in the last will of Sir David Scott of Braxholme in 1491/2. She is recorded as 'Margarete Glendonwyn' and Adam and Mark are also listed. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as liferenter of Stouslie and another farm (probably Boonraw) in Hassendean Parish, valued at £291. She was probably the 'Mary' of Dod and Whitlaw (possibly daughter of George of Dod) who married George of Synton and Boonraw. She was probably also the 'Lyfrenter of Boonraw' recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. It is unclear when she died, but her son George Scott of Boonraw was owner of the same lands in 1678. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Outerside, recorded among the poor of Wilton Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mark (15th C.) received a cow and 2 bolls of victuals in the will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme in 1491/2. He is listed as 'Marco de Glendonwyn' and Adam and Margaret are also named. Matthew (d.1408) 2nd son of Adam de Glendonwyn of Glendonwyn. His mother was grand-niece of Sir William Douglas, 'the Flower of Chivalry' and his brother Sir Simon was killed at Otterburn. His name was recorded as 'de Glendonwyn'. He held the benefice of Cavers Parish from 1376, which was void by the death of John Ganon. At this time he was said to also hold a Canonry of Glasgow, with the expectation of a Prebend. He was appointed Bishop of Glasgow by Pope Clement VII in 1387, succeeding Walter Wardlaw, and serving until his death. He also served as ambassador to England. In 1401 he introduced a new tax in the Diocese of Glasgow. He died at his manor of Lochwood near Glasgow. Note that there was dispute in the church at the time, with an alternative Bishop (John de Framysden) appointed by Pope Boniface IX in 1391, but never recognised in Scotland. Matthew (14th/15th C.) recorded as 'Matheo de Glendonwin' when he witnessed the 1420 charter for the half barony of Branhholme, passing from the Inglis's to the Scotts. Perhaps the same Matthew was a Commissioner for the West Marches in 1429. Ninian of Glendonwyn and Parton (d.1541) son of John of Parton. He succeeded after his brothers Bartholomew and Simon were murdered by John Lindsay of Wauchope. In 1503 he granted a precept of sasine for George Gledstains in the lands of Gladstanes in Roxburghshire. He was confirmed in the Barony of Scraesburgh in 1510, and other lands in Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire in the following years. In 1528 he resigned Clifton and Scraesburgh to the King, in favour of himself and his wife. In 1530 he was superior of Scraesburgh, when John Rutherford resigned his lands into his hands, and then he regranted them. He married Janet, daughter of Sir John Dunbar of Mochrum, and possibly also Katherine, daughter of John Maxwell, Lord of Caerlaverock. He was succeeded by his son John. He had another son Simon, who was reduced to poverty by 1554, with his son John and wife Janet Dunbar, 'lady of liferent of Partoun', agreed to provide for him by turns.

Glendinning

Ninian (1806–84) son of William and Mary Elliot, he was born at Shaws in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd at Plashetts in Northumberland. In 1836–38 he was listed as shepherd at Willowbog, England, among heads of households in Castleton Parish. In 1840 and 1841 he was at Kidd's Linn. In 1827 he married Margaret Little (1797–1841) in Westerkirk and their children were Helen (b.1827), William (b.1828), Mary (b.1830), John (b.1831), Janet (b.1833), Mina (b.1835), John (again, b.1837) and Agnes (b.1840). He secondly married Mina Turnbull (1810–93) and their children were Isabella (b.1847), Agnes (b.1847), Margaret (b.1848), Joan (b.1850), Adam (b.1853) and Robert (b.1856). He died in Bellingham. Ninian (1855–1941) son of shepherd William, he was born in Teviothead Parish. He worked as a shepherd in Northumberland. In 1879 he married Hannah Robson, daughter of Richard Brown and their children were Richard Brown, William and Annie Brown. Peter (1863–1956) son of William and Ann Kyle. He was a shepherd, like his father and brothers. He was at Wormscleuch in 1881. Richard (15th/16th C.) Sheriff in Edinburgh who confirmed in 1505/6 the summons served to George, Master of Angus for payment to Sir William Douglas of Cavers for breaking their marriage agreement. He is recorded as 'Richard Glendunwyne'. It is unclear how he was related to the other Glendinnings. Robert of that Ilk and Parton (b.1585) son of Alexander. He became heir in 1606 after his older half-brother died. He had extensive lands in Ewesdale and Eskdale. He married Margaret, daughter of William Maxwell, Lord of Terregles and was succeeded by his son John. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622 as tenant in 'Logane' and also Hudshouse. Archibald in Fiddleton and John Graham in Thickside acted as cautioners for him, Lencie in Dryff and Andrew in Riddings. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen 'Hotson' and their son Thomas was baptised in 1645. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Deans. Robert (18th C.) married Violet Laidlaw in Robertson in 1729. Robert (18th C.) married Mary Helm in Robertson in 1744. Their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: John (b.1747); Margaret (b.1750); and James (b.1756). Robert (18th/19th C.) son of William from Howashiel in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Orchard Cottage according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He could be the Robert who married Isabel Murray in Cavers in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded at Stonedg on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. His children probably included Walter and Janet (b.1800) and Agnes (b.1802). Robert (19th C.) recorded as 'residential' in Newcastleton in 1835, on a list of male heads of families. Robert Scott 'Scott' (1800–1900) born at Stintieknowe in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Boghall. His father was Robert and his mother was Isabella Murray, who lived to the age of 96. He was listed among heads of households as a mason at Boghall in 1835 and then had his entry deleted in 1840, but was added as 'Glendinning Scott' in 1840 and 1841. He married Elizabeth Liddell (from Inveresk) in 1832, but they had no surviving children. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 55 acres, employing 2 men and in 1861 was still farming 55 acres, employing 1 labourer and with a female servant. He was still recorded at Boghall in 1868 and died at his farm. He was still visiting markets in Hawick within a few weeks of his death. When he died he was the oldest farmer on the Buccleuch estates, almost becoming a centenarian. He was said to have recalled the arrival of the news about Britain's victory at Waterloo in 1815 and told stories about French prisoners of war in Hawick. He also possessed a silver-mounted stick that was said to have come from Nelson's 'Victory' after the Battle of Trafalgar. Robert (19th C.) married Christian Scott in 1843, the marriage recorded in Hawick Parish. Their children, baptised in Roberton, included: James (b.1844); and Francis (b.1848). Scott (1967/8–) son of Rob, he also played for the Greens. He went to Trinity and Hawick High Schools and played for the P.S.A. and Y.M. He then played for Hawick R.F.C., as well as for the Borders and Edinburgh professional teams. He was additionally called up to represent the South and Scotland 'A'. His sons Glen, Gareth and Charlie also played rugby. Sir Simon (d.1388) son of Sir Adam of Glendonwyn. He was younger brother of the next Sir Adam, and older brother of Matthew, who became Bishop of Glasgow. In 1368 he witnessed a charter at Cavers for lands being resigned by Thomas Baliol. He died at the Battle of Otterburn, fighting alongside his superior, the Earl of Douglas. Sir Simon (c.1378–1437) of that Ilk, son of Sir Adam and nephew of Matthew, bishop of Glasgow. He succeeded after his elder brother

John was killed at Homildon Hill. He held considerable lands, including those of Wauchope and parts of Ewesdale. He also held the hereditary office of Bailie of the Regality of Eskdale. In 1398 he was one of the 'borowis' listed for establishing the Earl of Douglas' bounds on the West March. He was said to be a strong ally of the house of Douglas, helping to keep peace on the Border in the Earl's lands. He travelled to England several times in the early 1400s, and was a hostage for the Earl of Douglas in 1405. In 1406 he had a charter of the lands of Wythyn, Glencross and others in Roxburghshire. In 1407 he was witness to the charter for the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1418 he was Bailie to Archibald, Earl of Angus, infested Melrose Abbey in the lands of Eskdalemuir. He was one of the witnesses to the charter of 1435 transferring lands within the Barony of Hawick from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He married Mary, daughter of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas and Margaret Stewart, daughter of King Robert III. He was succeeded by his son Sir Simon. Other children included: John, who settled in England; Bartholomew, who was Chaplain at Westerkirk, but deprived for non-residence; Janet, who married Gilbert Grierson, 1st of Lag; and Hawise. Sir Simon of that Ilk (15th C.) son of Sir Simon and Mary Douglas. He was said to be greatly esteemed by James II. He was hereditary Bailie of Dumfriesshire. In 1442 he witnessed a charter for lands in Ettrick held by Melrose Abbey. In 1443 he witnessed a confirming charter for William Cranston of Crailing. He witnessed a charter relating to lands in Ettrick in 1446. In 1449 he was one of the guarantors of the peace treaty with Henry VI of England, and he also guaranteed peace several times in the 1450s. He had a charter of income from Auld Roxburgh in 1450 and another charter of lands in Kirkcudbright in 1458. He witnessed a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1449, another for James II in 1451 and was on an assize for the Douglasses in Dumfries in 1451/2. In 1452 he witnessed the creation of the Barony of Kilmaurs for Alexander Cunningham, while on an expedition into England left by James II. In 1454/5 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn. In 1455 he was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls for Roxburghshire. In 1456 he witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell and in 1458/9 had a charter for the Barony of Parton in Kirkcudbrightshire. He also served as Bailie of Eskdale in the late 1450s. In 1459 he was one of the witnesses to the regranting of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig, made in Perth. By 1464 he was designated 'of Parton' when he was again a guarantor of a treaty with England. In 1465, as Lord of the Barony of Scraesburgh, he granted the west half of Scraesburgh and all of Hunthill to Robert Rutherford of Chatto and his wife Margaret. He married Agnes Hepburn and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Alexander Lindsay, Earl of Crawford. He may also have married Marjory Johnstone. His children included: Simon, who predeceased him; John, who succeeded; Alexander, probably progenitor of the Drumrask branch; Archibald; Matthew, who held the lands of Whit-slade, Glenkirk, etc.; and Margaret, who married Robert Rutherford of Chatto. Simon (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. It is unclear how he was related to the other Glendinnings. He may be the same Simon who produced a remission (along with William Grahamslaw) at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Simon of Megdale and Dalgleish (16th C.) recorded in 1540 as 'crownar' (i.e. Coroner) of Eskdale. He acknowledged that he had received payment for Dalgleish (then in the Barony of Synton, through annexation) from his tenant John Scott of Thirlestane. He was probably son of John of Dalgleish. Simon (16th C.) resident of Selkirk. In 1579/70 it was stated by John Synton that William Scott 'alias William with the teyth' 'come furth' of his house in Shaws and stole 5 sheep belonging to '[blank] Coltarte'. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as witness to an instrument for the Hospital at Polmadie in about 1391. He was a 'scutifero' for Glasgow Diocese. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Glendynwyn' when he witnessed a letter of acquittance for George Scott of Whames in 1510/1. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Glendynnyng in Harrot' (i.e. Harwood) when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1631. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their son John was baptised in 1652. The witnesses were 2 William Scotts. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Hoscoteshiel in 1756 and Outersideshiel in 1763 and 1766. He married Jean Heatlie in Roberton in 1747. His children included James (b.1748), Andrew (b.1750), Margaret (b.1752), Janet (b.1754), Thomas (b.1756), Walter (b.1759), Isobel (b.1761), Jean (b.1763), Agnes (b.1766) and Christian (b.1768). Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded at Outersideshiel on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (1751/2–1831) shepherd at Blackcleugh. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Helm in 1802. In 1786 he married Mary Weir (d.1848). Their children included: Mary (b.1787); Robert (b.1789), who died aged 19; William (b.1795); Christian (1798–1881), who married Jessie Purdom; and Betty (b.1800). The witnesses in 1800 were Mr. George Pott and Thomas Elliot. He is buried at Teviothead. Thomas (b.1795) son of Adam, who came from near Newcastleton. His father served in the Royal Wagon Train, and obtained for him a cornetcy in the same corps when he was 18. He fought at the Battle of Waterloo. He became Lieutenant, and was transferred to the American (or 60th) Regiment, serving in Canada. Thomas (b.1845) son of Andrew and Jane Anderson. His father was shepherd at Craikhope, where he was born. He became a member of the county police force. Thomas (b.1853) son of shepherd William, he was born at Redmoss in Castleton Parish. He worked as a shepherd at various farms in Northumberland. In 1877 in Ewes he married Nicholas (1858–1930), daughter of William Murray and Agnes Bell. Their children were Ellen, William, Thomas and John James. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their son James was baptised in 1669. Walter (17th C.) resident of Colforthill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William was listed right after him and so surely related. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His unnamed child was baptised in 1690. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Janet Irvine in Hawick Parish in 1707. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Catherine Corbet in Hawick Parish in 1710. Their daughter Jean was baptised in 1712, with witnesses Walter Scott and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Goldielands in 1712. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included Jean (b.1732). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Lunn in 1771 (the surname transcribed as 'Sim'). Their children included: Helen (b.1772); and James (b.1773). The witnesses in 1772 were James (surely related to him) and William Elliot. He could be the Walter recorded as farmer at Hummelknowes Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, and hence perhaps father of James, who was at Hummelknowes Mill on the 1801 Militia ballot. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Murray and their son Walter was baptised in 1784. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Janet (b.1783), an unnamed child (b.1790), Henry (b.1792) and Isabel (b.1798). Walter (b.c.1785) roadman and labourer living at Lees in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–1841. His wife was Elizabeth. Walter (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Christian Paisley and their son Thomas Paisley was baptised in 1825. Walter (1849–1928) son of Adam, he was born at Tweedenhead in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd like his father and several brothers. He lived in Northumberland, Langholm, Southdean, etc. In 1885 he married Jane (b.1859), daughter of James Turnbull and Margaret Ewart. He died at Hobkirk Manse Cottage. Their children were: Margaret (b.1885); Adam (1887–1917), who served with the K.O.S.B. and died in Israel; and James (b.1889), who died in infancy. William (14th/15th C.) Archdeacon of Glasgow 1409–13. He was also recorded as Subdean of Glasgow in 1413/4. He was probably related to the noble Glendinnings. Perhaps the same William ‘of Glendonwyne’ was an executor of Sir William of Douglas, Lord Lugton, in 1421. He could be the brother of Sir Simon who had a passport for safe conduct in England in 1408. William (14th/15th C.) witness to a document for the Diocese of Glasgow in about 1465. He must have been associated with the Diocese, and was probably the William, Rector of Crawfordjohn, who witnessed other records about the same time. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded being ‘called Lord in the Cruikis’ among men of Liddesdale and neighbouring areas. William (17th C.) resident of Coliforthill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, probably related to Walter who was also listed there. It is possible he was the William who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Gledstains in Hawick Parish in 1707. William (17th C.) resident at Blackhope in Castleton Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William ‘Will’ (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. In 1778 he was at Nether Stanegarthside. He married Agnes (or ‘Aggie’) Johnson and their children included: James (b.1776); Robert (b.1778); Adam (b.1780); and William (b.1783). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Howashiel in Hobkirk Parish. His son Robert is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. William (1760–1840) son of Adam and Agnes

Glendinning

Crozier and brother of Lieut. Adam. He was shepherd at Thorlieshope and lived at Cauldronfoot. He then moved to Cooms in Tarras Water and died at Tweedenhead. He was at Cooms in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He married Mary, daughter of Ninian Elliot and Janet Douglas. Their children include: Janet (1801–94), who married John Armstrong and died at Hermitage Cottage; Adam (1802–68), who married Margaret Robson and died at Tweedenhead; Agnes (1804–88), who married Adam Glendinning and died in Liverpool; Ninian (1806–84), who married Mina Turnbull; and William (1810–37), who married Judith Armstrong. William (b.c.1780) road contractor living at Ashkirk Mill in 1841. His wife was Elspeth and their children included John and Andrew, who were both masons. He could be the labourer at New Woll according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He could be the William who married Euphan Brown and had children Walter (b.1827) and Nancy (b.1828) baptised in Ashkirk. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Toftholm. He was recorded as a head of household for the first (and only) time in 1836. William (b.1809/10) son of William, he was a tailor in Newcastleton, like his father. He was recorded in 1841 and 1851 at about 10 South Hermitage Street. He was absent from the 1861 census. William (1830–1911) eldest son of Adam and Margaret Robson, he was born at Boghall in Liddesdale. He worked as a shepherd, like his father and many other family members before him. He was described as ‘the intelligent shepherd’ at Wormsleuch in 1889 when the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club visited the area and he described the local flora. He married Anne (1830–1918), daughter of David Kyle, farmer at Broadlee in the Borthwick. Their children, born at Boghall, Wormsleuch and elsewhere in the Parish were: Adam (1855–1935), shepherd at Coltersleuch; David (b.1857), who died in infancy; David (1860–1942), shepherd at Hawthornside; William (b.1862), shepherd at Hundalee in Jedwater; Peter (1864–1956), shepherd at Wormsleuch and Gatehousecote; and Margaret (1867–1939). He died at Gatehousecote and his wife at Cleughhead, Southdean, and they are buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (b.1862) son of William and Ann Kyle. Like many of his family members before him, he worked as a shepherd. He lived in Castleton, Morebattle and Southdean Parishes. In 1897 he married Agnes (b.1871), daughter of William Hardie. Their children were: Hardie Bain (1900–54); William (b.1902); Margaret (b.1905.6); and Ann Kyle (1909–32), who married Robert Cromarty. William (1847–1921) resident of Teviothead. He married Mary Scott Anderson (1856–1938). Their daughter Wilhelmina (1891–1961) married George Watson Fraser. (formerly ‘Glendonwyn’ and variants, such as ‘Glendennan’, ‘Glendevin’, ‘Glendinen’, ‘Glendinenn’, ‘Glendining’, ‘Glendinnyn’, ‘Glendinwin’, ‘Glend-inwyn’, ‘Glendonewyn’, ‘Glendonewyn’, ‘Glendonnyng’, ‘Glendonowyn’, ‘Glendonwyne’, ‘Glendonynng’, ‘Glendunning’, ‘Glendunvin’, ‘Glendunwyn’, ‘Glendynwyn’ and ‘Glendynwyne’).

Glendivan (glen-di-vin) n. former lands in Ewesdale, near where the Glendivan Burn meets the Ewes Water. Along with Flask and Howgill it was described as a 10-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It is probably the ‘Glendorane’ (likely a transcription error) and ‘Glendovan’ listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 368 acres, bounded by Howgill, Sorbie, Kirkton and lands of the Laird of Arkleton. The map shows farmhouses on both sides of the burn, some parts of the farm on the other side of the Ewes Water and a small area of the farm owned by the Laird of Arkleton. John Irving and Robert Armstrong were there in 1797. William Irvine was farmer there in 1841, his son John taking over later. There were also Eastons living there in 1841. A little further up the burn from the farmhouse are remains of 2 settlements (not to be confused with Glendonwyn in Meggatdale; also sometimes ‘Glendiven’; it is ‘Glendowane’ in 1550 and ‘Glendovane’ in about 1610; it is ‘Glen-douin’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Glendovein’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, ‘Glendoven’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and confusingly ‘Glendonwyne’ on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Glendonwyn (glen-don-win) n. old form of Glendinning, the family name coming from lands in the upper Meggat valley. There was formerly a tower there, with remains still visible in the mid-19th century, on the south side of the Poldovick Burn, a few hundred metres south of the modern farmhouse. There was once an antimony mine here. There are several nearby earthworks and enclosures. In 1669 Walter, son of Robert Scott of Harwood, was served heir to his father’s 7½ merkland of ‘Glendonning’ in the Parish of Westerkirk (it is ‘Glendinning’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Glendouglas (glen-dug-lis) n. lands in the Jed valley, off the A68 south of Jedburgh, at the northern extremity of Southdean Parish. The big house was once home of the factor for the Home family. There was formerly a private school there, which eventually became a state primary school and closed in 2005 (also written ‘Glen Douglas’).

Glenhowe (glen-how) n. knitwear manufacturers at Buccleuch Mills on Green Lane in the 20th century.

Glenkerry (glen-ke-ree) n. farm on the Tima Water, where it is joined by the Glenkerry Burn, on the B709 south of Ettrick village. In 1415 the lands were swapped for those of Bellendean, between Scott of Buccleuch and the monks of Melrose. The lands are specifically referred to as ‘Wynzehope called Glenkery, west of the water of Temay’. Scott of Tushielaw paid rental to Melrose Abbey for these lands in 1557 and the half-land there was still held by Scott of Tushielaw in 1620, when the reversion was resigned to him by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. The lands were part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. Robert Grieve was there in 1724 when he married Jean Black from Hawick Parish. John Rutherford of Edgerston owned the lands in 1802 (it is ‘Glenkery’ in 1235/6 and 1415, ‘Glenkeyrie’ in 1564 and ‘Glen-carie’ in 1620; ‘Glenkyrry’ and ‘Glenkirry’ are both marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Glenmac (glen-mak) n. knitwear company with a factory up the Cross Wynd and another part on Teviot Road, which had been Walter Wilson’s. The factories closed in the 1980s when taken over by Dawson International. A smaller cashmere-based factory remained at Burnfoot, associated with Barrie, but carrying on the Glenmac brand.

Glennie (gle-nee) n. George (19th C.) resident engineer of the Hawick branch of the North British Railway, living in Melrose. In 1849 he was charged, along with an Edinburgh contractor, with culpable homicide in the deaths of 8 railway workers who died when the Roxburgh viaduct collapsed.

Glenny (gle-nee) n. Arthur Philip (1904–67) eldest son of Charles James. He took flying lessons, like his brother Charles James. The pair partnered with Lieut.-Col. G.L.P. Henderson to manufacture the ‘Henderson-Glenny Gad-fly’, but eventually he withdrew his financial support in the project. The plane was designed by

K.N. Pearson and manufactured at Byfleet, Surrey in 1929. Charles James (1871–1961) second son of James. He was born at Deanfield in Hawick. He worked with the family firm of Wilson & Glenny, and for many years was Managing Director, retiring in 1936. He was known as a tennis player, recorded 1891–1908. He was Border Champion on more than one occasion, won the Scottish Northern Championship in 1894 and was runner-up in the Scottish Championship in 1904. He married Ilfra Showell and they had 4 children: Elsie Ilfra Muriel (1899–1989); Arthur Philip (1904–67); James Esme (1905–80), who was Cornet; and Eileen Ilfra Wilson. He died on his 90th birthday. Elizabeth nee Pringle (20th C.) daughter of John Douglas Pringle and Susan Roberts. She was Cornet's Lass to Riddell Innes in 1931, married him the following year. They moved to London to work for Pringle's, but her husband died in 1963 and she emigrated to New Zealand in the late 1960s, where she married Jim Glenny (who died in 1983) in 1970. George Crosfield (b.1878) youngest son of James and Georgina Waterhouse. He trained as a lawyer, and practiced for a while in Carlisle, in partnership with a Mr. Mawson. He later emigrated to New Zealand, where he became a successful sheep farmer. He married Catherine Anne ('Cathy') Pringle, daughter of Walter. Their children were James Douglas, Mary Catherine and Margaret. James (1836–1914) partner in Wilson & Glenny's, who gave the Town its Public Baths in 1912. He was born in Mill of Lethenty, Aberdeenshire, only son of John and Katherine Wilson. Like his parents he was a Quaker. He was the last private owner of the corn mill and farm of Lethenty in Aberdeenshire. In 1865 he moved to Blackburn in Lancashire, where he went into business as a cotton spinner, with his cousin, John William Cruickshank. Health problems forced him to sell his business and move abroad for the winter of 1873. He returned to England, to start a cement business in Chester. He was consequently briefly in a partnership with London concrete pioneer Charles Drake (who was responsible for the Congregational Manse), although the business, based at Thorlieshope, folded in 1875. But also in 1875 he was invited to become a partner in a tweed business with his uncle George Wilson and 2 cousins, Charles John and George Murray Wilson; thus was born Wilsons & Glenny. In 1891 it became a limited company under the name Wilson & Glenny, Ltd. In 1867 he married Georgina Waterhouse (1844–1923). They had 4 children: John (1868–1919), who worked for the family firm; Charles James (b.1871), who was for a long time Director at Wilson & Glenny; Elizabeth (1875–90), who died while still at school; and George Crosfield (b.1878), who became a lawyer and moved to New Zealand. He had the house at Bucklands extended in the latter part of the 19th century and died there. James Esme 'Jimmy' (1905–80) son of Charles James. He was educated at St. Bees in Cumbria. He was Cornet in 1927 and lived at Deanfield. An early car enthusiast, his 1926 Delage still exists. He also flew aeroplanes, first taking lessons just months after being Cornet. Along with his brother Arthur and Lieut.-Col. G.L.P. Henderson they developed a low-cost nonoplane called the 'Henderson-Glenny Gadfly', but only 3 were ever built. He flew from Cramlington to Hawick in 1930 in a de Havilland DH60 Moth, with repairs in Hawick being carried out by Jimmie Guthrie. Also in 1930 he survived a crash after engine failure at R.A.F. Turnhouse in Edinburgh, his fellow crewman being killed. He had a small aircraft hangar built at Groundstone Heights and later moved to Ravenslea on Sunnyside Road. He served in R.A.F. during WWII and afterwards worked for British South American Airways. He married in 1936 and died at his home in Portugal. John (1799–1844) from Kinmuck, Aberdeenshire, son of James and Elizabeth Wigham. The family can be traced back to John, who was born in 1641 at Mill of Colihill (also Aberdeenshire). In 1833 he married Katherine (1798–1863), daughter of William Wilson, Hawick manufacturer, and must have been a regular visitor to Hawick. Their children were: Elizabeth (1835–45); James (1836–1914), who became partner in Wilson & Glenny's; and Mary Ann (1838–1917), who married John Charles Wilson. John (1868–1919) eldest son of James. After leaving school he entered the family firm of Wilson & Glenny. However, he retired from the business while still quite young. He married Helen Borthwick and their children were: Barbara (b.1899); Katherine (b.1903); Phyllis Mary (b.1905); and Evelyn Georgina Wilson. Mary Ann (1838–1917) sister of manufacturer James, and son of John and Katherine Wilson, she was born in Mill of Lethenty, Aberdeenshire. She married Charles John Wilson, partner of her brother. Her children included Hawick Provost George Heron Wilson. She died at Deanfield.

Glenny's (gle-nee-z) n. former textile mill on Bath Street, which had previously been Wulson an Glenny's. The main factory suffered a massive fire in 1959, the work of an arsonist, exacerbated by the preceding hot summer and a century of oil and grease. 350 people were put out of work, the Town's electricity supply was temporarily cut off and it was said that the heat could be felt a mile away. The factory was rebuilt a couple of years later. A carved stone was saved from the old factory and inscribed with the dates '1795–1959' by Gordon Scott. After the newer building was also demolished the stone ended up in a skip in Galashiels, but was eventually returned and installed in the Old Baths in 2012.

Glen Penango Burn (glen-pe-nang-gō-burn)

n. stream forming the upper part of the MossPaul Burn, rising on Carlin Tooth and flowing through Penangus Hope.

Glenpyet (glen-pI-i) n. former name for lands in the Yarrow valley. They were Crown lands in the late 15th century, split into 3 steadings, the middle one being leased to Thomas Dickson of Ormiston in 1479. In the 1480s they were leased by Robert Lauder, William Inglis and Thomas Dickson. The Middlestead of Glenpyet was referred to as 'Wallacehil' in 1486. They were still Crown lands in 1502 when half was held by David Inglis. They were feued by the Murrays in the early and late 16th century. In 1541 they were valued at £24. They belonged to the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the 16th century. They are recorded as 'Glenpoyt' in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when James Brewhouse was tenant. Sir Walter owed 'males' for these lands to his half-brother Gideon Murray. Chistian Gray, widow of James Brewhouse was removed as tenant in 1581. 'Jedion Murray of Glenpint' is among the 180 or so followers of Sir James Johnstone who had a 'respite' in 1594 for their role at Dryfe Sands the year before; he is the same man later referred to as Sir Gideon of Elibank (it is 'Glenpoyte' in 1456, 'Glenpiot' in 1468, 'Glenpoite' in 1479 and 1489, 'Glenpot' in 1541, 'Glenpoit' in 1575/6, 'Glenpoyt' in 1581 and 'Glenpoytte' in 1594).

Glenrauchan (glen-raw-chin) n. former name for lands in Ewesdale. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10. Archie Scott from there was declared a fugitive in 1606. It was listed among the lands in the Lordship confirmed to Alexander Earl of Home in about 1610. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It may correspond to the modern Glenrief (it is 'Glenrauchane' in 1506 and 1509/10, 'Glenrauchan' in about 1610 and 'Glenrichen' in 1663; it is probably the 'Glegachan' marked near Eweslees on Blaeu's 1654 map).

glent (glen', glent) v., arch. to glint, gleam – 'Twas but a sternie glentin' On a pool that night' [JoHa], 'And though ambition whiles may glent On us a wee ...' Glenteviot Park Lodge (glen-teev-yi'pawrk-loj) n. house south of Hasendeanburn, hear the Teviot. It operated as a small hotel until 2007 and then became a private house.

glenty (glen'-ee) adj., arch. having erect, alert-looking ears, particularly applied to Cheviot sheep.

glenty-luggit (glen'-ee-lu-gee', -gi') adj., arch. having 'glenty' ears.

Glenvoran (glen-vō-rin) n. former lands within Ewesdale, between Eweslees and Fiddleton. The lands held the special feudal status of 'free tenandrie' and may have been connected with the lands at 'Ewes Doors'. There was once a fortified house there, with 'Hobbie of Glenvore' marked on Sandison's c.1590 map and also marked on Gordon's c. 1650 map just north of Fiddleton. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10. It was among a set of lands in the Ewes valley that were transferred from Simon Armstrong to George, Lord Home in 1525. This was confirmed when the King revoked a set of charters relating to lands of the Homes in 1535, including this and several other parts of Ewesdale. 'Hobbe of Glenvorane', an Elliot, is also recorded. 'Archie Elliot, sone to Ringanis Will Elliot the portar in Glenvoren' is recorded in 1579. Probably the same Archie Elliot 'of Glenworren' signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens; his name was first among the Elliots of Ewesdale, suggesting some prominence of Glenvoran at that time. Robert Elliot from there was recorded in 1590 and declared a fugitive in 1606. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It may have been near the modern cottage of Fiddleton Bankend where sometime around 1900 a ‘piece of very substantial masonry’ was found while digging a little to the west. There was formerly a mill there (also written ‘Glenvorane’, ‘Glenvoren’, etc.; it is ‘Glenvorane’ in 1506, 1535 and 1588/9 and ‘Glenvorrane’ about 1610; it is ‘Glenvorann’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Glesci (glez-ki) n. a variant of Glesgi – ‘Well, Aw got back ti the auld country right enough after a favourable passage and landed in Glesgae’ [JEDM], ‘Some ministers in Glesca thocht it was a ‘subtle peril’. Hab can hardly wait’ [DH] (also spelled ‘Glesca’ and ‘Glescae’).

Glesgi (glez-gi) n. Glasgow, Scotland’s largest city, approximately 80 miles from Hawick. Population (1991) 662,954. Hawick, and the rest of Peeblesshire, Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire belonged to the Episcopal Church Diocese of Glasgow from sometime around 1100 until transferred to Edinburgh in 1888. For a long time Teviotdale was one of the rural deaneries of the Diocese. In the 1960s Hawick (like many other towns) made an agreement to build housing for families from the Glasgow area, to solve a problem with the over-expansion of Glasgow, known as the ‘Overspill Programme’ – ‘Next hail thee, Glasgow! Three times hail! To flourish may’st thou never fail, But ever nobly cock thy crest As the metropolis of the West’ [AS] (also spelled ‘Glesgae’; see also Glesci; Teries often speak about going ‘throwe ti Glesgi’).

Glesgi (glez-gi) n. (Glasgow) John (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys, which killed about 200 men. William (17th C.) presumably related to John, he was also a banished Covenanter who escaped from the 1679 shipwreck. However, most of those who survived were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica or New Jersey. William (17th C.) tenant in Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

Glesgi Border Coonties Association (glez-gi-bōr-der-koon-teez-aw-sō-see-ā-shun) n. organisation founded in Glasgow to encourage interaction among and offer help to former Borderers, and to give education prizes. It was formed in 1872 when the Roxburghshire and Berwickshire organisations merged. An earlier model was the Tweedside Society, started in 1813, while the Roxburghshire Association was formed in 1857. The association gained new life in about 1885 and was most active in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, with 2 meetings per week. As well as a Literary Society, there were also Cricket, Fishing, Whist and Draughts Clubs. A bursary, named after John Leyden, was established at Glasgow University.

Glesgi Jimmie (glez-gi-ji-mee) n. itinerant street performer of the mid-19th century. He used to sing Scottish songs in a tenor voice on the High Street, sometimes visiting for several weeks at a time. He is also referred to as ‘Gleska Jamie’ – ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie lilt a sang Tae Shauchles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI].

Goldielands (gōl-dee-lindz) n. farm with tower, set in a prominent position overlooking the confluence of the Borthwick with the Teviot. The lands were possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch since 1446, when they exchanged half of Branhholme and neighbouring lands with Inglis of Manor for some in Lanarkshire. William, son of William Scott of Goldielands was recorded in 1493 and George Scott in Goldielands in 1510. The 'ditch of Goldielands' formed part of the northern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter. In late 1548 the 'manis of the landis of Goldland' are among those that were raided and burned by a group of Kers, Englishmen and others, complained about in a summons by Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme; 200 'thraves' of barley, along with corn cattle and other goods were lost. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 254 acres, bounded by Crumhaugh, Hawick Common, Alton Croft, Fenwick and the River Teviot, and with a small part on the north side of the Teviot. The Scotts of Goldielands were an offshoot of the Scotts of Branhholme, who were important in the Hawick area for several generations. The tower was probably built mostly in the 16th century, and is now a ruin on the farm. Probably its most famous resident was the first Laird, Walter Scott 'the Laird's Wat', who took part in the Raid of the Redeswire and whose son

Walter was probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 and was a powerful leader of the whole Scott clan during times of minority or absence of the Laird of Buccleuch; his tombstone is preserved in the Museum, and was part of a family vault located below the steeple in the northern aisle of the present St. Mary's Kirk (later used as the furnace chamber). Tradition says that the last Laird was hanged from his own gateway for stealing cattle; however, there is no evidence of this. Walter Scott of Goldielands' lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £566 13s 4d in 1643. The family history in the 17th century is murky, but we are helped through the existence of a complaint made in 1672, preserved in the Melrose Regality records. The Scotts of Goldielands eventually failed to have a male heir, and their lands were inherited by the Scotts of Crumhaugh, except for the estate of Goldielands itself, which returned to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1627 the farm is described as a 'neuer payit ferme' (i.e. never having been rented to a tenant), estimated to pay '100 lbs. in stok, parsonage 3 bolls, vicarage 7 lbs. 10 sh.' It has been a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch since the mid-1600s. William Lyne was a tenant there in 1642. There were Elliots living there in the 18th and 19th centuries. Andrew Riddell was there in at least 1702–08. John Elliot was tenant there in 1713. In 1706 the title Baron of Goldielands was created (among others) for Henry, son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. A plantation to the west of the tower is probably quite old, and is shown clearly on the 1718 drawing. Andrew Leithead was a workman there in 1723. John Elliot was still recorded there in 1742. In 1788 the estate of Scott of Goldielands was recorded as having been valued at £400, and by then owned by the Duke of Buccleuch – 'He pass'd the Peel of Goldiland, And cross'd old Borthwick's roaring strand' [SWS], 'Does the blaze rise on Goldielands? Walter of Branhholm grasps his brand, And calls upon his gallant band – 'For Hawick ride' ...' [WiS], 'But to the story that's afloat, I'll tell it while 'tis green: Near Goldielands, within the wood, A heidless man was seen' [TCh], 'O, I maun gang doon by Gowdlands To'er, Where the Teviot wails i' the wintry rain ...' [FGS], 'Ever more dear were the echoes are ringing Out through the green glades by Goldilands' wall; Where the sheep bleat to the sound of your going, In the lush pastures by fair Branhholm hall' [WL], 'And bursting ranks of doves rise heavenward From Goldielands' high tow'ring stone' [IWS] (also spelled variously 'Gaudilands', 'Goldiland', 'Goldilands', 'Goudielands', 'Gowdilands', 'Gowdielands', etc.; the name first appears in the mid-15th century, being 'Goldilandis' in 1435 and 'Goldyländis' in 1446 and 1493; it is 'Goldelandis' in 1510, 'Goldland' in 1549, 'Gordelandis', 'Gorlandis' and 'Goldelandis' in 1574, 'Goldelands' in 1574 and 1575, 'Gowdelandis' in 1577, 'Goldelandis' in 1574, 1580 and 1581, 'Goldelande' in 1579, 'Goldelandis' in 1583/4, 'Gaudelandis' in 1586, 'Gouldielandis' in 1592, 'Goldielandis' in 1593 and 'Gaudylandis' in 1594, and from 1596 tends to begin with the Scots 'Gowd' rather than 'Gold', e.g. 'Goudilandis' in 1596, 'Gouldielandis' in 1610, 'Gowldilands' and 'Goudilands' in 1627, 'Gowdielands' in 1643, 'Gowdilandis' in 1646, 'Goldielandis' in 1648, 'Gawdilands' in 1649, 'Gaudilands' in 1650, 'Gowdielaw' in 1655, 'Gowdilands' in 1673, 'Gowddielands' in 1682, 'Goudilands' in 1690 and 'Goudilans' in 1698; it is on Gordon's c. 1650 map as 'Gaudielands', Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Gaudylands', de Wit's c. 1680 map as 'Gaudylands' and Roy's c.1750 map as 'Gold Lands'; the origin might be either from yellow flowers once growing there, perhaps from the richness of the soil or from the Old English personal name 'Golda'; there is no reason to believe the Victorian view that it was once the residence of the 'Goldie' family).

Goldielands Cottage (gōl-dee-lindz-ko'-eej) n. cottage on the farm of Goldielands. There were Armstrongs there in the latter part of the 19th century.

Goldielands Toor (gōl-dee-lindz-toor) n. tower on the farm of Goldielands. It is a typical 16th century peel tower, built in a useful location as a watch-tower to protect Branhholme. The tower is approximately 10 × 7 m, with 5 stories, and formerly had a parapet walkway. In lay-out and construction, it is similar to Burnhead Tower, and was the model for Westburnflat Tower in Sir Walter Scott's 'Black Dwarf'. There is a view in Grose's 'Antiquities of Scotland' from 1789, showing the tower in good condition and with an adjacent barmkin, although the details may not be factually accurate; it shows a walled enclosure with the large tower (along with a couple of small outbuildings) in the south-west corner, and another tower in the south-east corner. There is now no evidence of the wall, although a mound may indicate where the second tower stood. The towers may have once been called 'Speed o fit' and 'Tranty fit', who were also said to be 2 witches who lived there. The main tower is now a fairly well preserved ruin on the farm of the same name, attached to more modern farm buildings. Many original features survive, such as fireplaces, doorways, corbels and an aumbry. Tom Scott's painting of the tower is in the Museum. It is a grade B listed building.

goldilocks (gōl-dee-loks) n. the wood crowfoot, Ranunculus auricomus – '... appears its sister species the Galdilocks (R. Auricomus) with tender stem, elegant leaves, and large golden blossoms' [JAHM] ('galdilocks' is probably a misprint).

Golf Course Park (g/=olf-k/=ors-pawrk) n. name for the field lying adjacent to the golf course, just to the east of St. Leonards farm. It is part of Hawick Common.

goller (go-lur) n., arch. a deep, loud growl, a stifled howl, suppressed yell, v., arch. to emit a gurgling noise, to speak passionately and inarticulately, (of a dog) to growl violently.

gollerin (go-lur-in) n., arch. a gurgling sound, particularly that made by a strangled animal (noted by J. Jamieson).

gollimer (go-l-mur) n., arch. a guzzler, voracious eater (noted by J. Jamieson; cf. gull-maw).

gomeril (go-me-rul) n., arch. a stupid person, bumptious person, fool (also spelled 'gomerel'; cf. gamphrel).

go'n (gōn) interj., contr. go on, used to express disbelief or encouragement – 'G'on! = go on!' [ECS] (also written 'g'on').

gonial (gō-nee-ul, gōn-yul) n., arch. a sheep that has died of disease or other reason other than slaughter, 'braxy' mutton – 'I do not mean the best of you to want meal a week ot twa, you have plenty of gonyell and green kail ...' [WSB], a dolt, a loud, empty-headed person (also spelled 'gonyel', 'gonyell' and variants).

the Gonial Blast (thu-gō-nee-ul-blawst) n. severe snowstorm in southern Scotland in early 1794, described by the Ettrick Shepherd (although there is some confusion over whether this is 1794 or 1795). Thousands of sheep were killed, particularly in Eskdale, but also in many other areas. Around 20 shepherds also perished, including William Scott at Priestthaughshiel and one at Sorbietrees. There is also a detailed description by Rev. William Brown of Eskdalemuir, including the progression of the weather from 23rd January onwards, with the fatal day being the 25th;

he lists shepherds who perished in neighbouring parishes, and tallies the dead sheep in Eskdalemuir to over 4,000. It was said that many sheep were also drowned in the sudden thaw that followed the massive amounts of snow (the name derives from gonial, because of the amount of mutton available afterwards; also spelled 'Goniel').

Gonnella (go-ne-lu) n. Giocondo 'George', 'Telio' (19th/20th C.) from Barga in Lucca Province, Tuscany, Italy. His nickname may have come from 'Tiglio', which is just to the east of Barga. He lived at 6 Dickson Street and ran Telio's chip shop. His wife was Mary and their children were: Anna Leah, who married Andrew Wilkinson; and Giovanni 'Jock', who married Olive Graham. He died while on a return visit to Barga – 'A cannie fella, real name Gonnella, The chips he made were nice, Tae gaun wi a haggis slice' [IWL].

gonterniblicks (gon-tur-ni-bliks) interj., arch. an exclamation of gladness (noted by J. Jamieson, who also gives 'gonternickles').

gontrins (gon-trinz) interj., arch. exclamation of joyous admiration – 'My gontrans, lass, ye soon will fin' A wilfu' man maun hae his way' [HSR] (also 'gontrans'; specifically used in Lilliesleaf).

Goodbrand (good-brawnd) n. Rev. Stephen (1921–97) graduated from Aberdeen University in 1949. He was minister at Southdean Kirk (linked with Hobkirk) 1966–72.

Goodfellow (good-fe-lō, -li) n. Adam (18th C.) married Janet Kersel in 1788, the marriage recorded in both Wilton and Roberton Parishes. Adam (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His children included: Robert (b.1795) and Robert (again, b.1796). Alexander (b.c.1770s) servant at Dykes according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Perhaps the same Alexander was servant at Mackside in Southdean Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot. He could be the son of George and Elspeth Scott. He succeeded his father as tenant at Trow Mill and was later farmer at Headshaw. He was listed as miller at Trow Mills in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1835 he married Isabella, daughter of Alexander Forrest. Their children were: Margaret (b.1836); Hugh (b.1838), who died in Argentina; Alexander Forrest (b.1840), Mill Master at Trow Mill; John (b.1842), who emigrated to Canada and then Washington State; William Forrest (b.1844), perhaps also died in Argentina; Elspeth Scott (b.1846), who married Thomas Laidlaw; Archibald; and Andrew, who died in infancy. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1721, 1723, 1725, 1728 and 1733. His children included: John (b.1719); George (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); Helen (b.1725); an unnamed son (b.1728); Bessie (b.1730); and an unnamed daughter (b.1733). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Milsington in 1764 and Girnwood in 1766. He married Ann Scott in Roberton in 1760. Their children included Andrew (b.1764), Gideon (b.1766) and John (b.1769). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Jane was baptised in 1772. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1793. He married Euphan Cavers and their children included Janet (b.1793); and Andrew (b.1796). He may be the same Andrew who married Mary Hobkirk in 1799. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Greenbank in 1800. He married Mary Hobkirk in 1799 and their children included: Margaret (b.1800); William (b.1802); and John (b.1804). Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong and their children included James (b.1822). Andrew (c.1794–1852) probably son of Robert and Helen Lies. In 1818 he married Isobel Young. Their children born in Lilliesleaf include Robert (b.1819), William (b.1821) and Archibald (b.1823). He emigrated to Ontario, Canada. Andrew (1807–85) son of Thomas and Isabella Renwick. He started his working life making sheep drains for Mr. Pringle at Hyndlee. He then moved to the Bairnkine, farmed Swinnie Bar briefly, then worked under James Weaver, forester to the Marquis of Lothian. In 1841 he was recorded as a wood forester, living at Stewartfield Lodge. He became forester at Hartridge in 1846, living at the Wildcatgate. In 1846 he married Jane Mitchell, from Lanton and she died in 1892. Their children included: Jean; John; Jane and Andrew, who became forester at Abbotrule. He was known for his collection of curiously shaped stones (which after his death were largely bought by Mr. Scott of Queen Mary's House, Jedburgh). Andrew (b.1849) son of Andrew and Jane Mitchell. He was forester on the Abbotrule estate from 1878. He married Janet Smail from Morebattle in 1873. Archibald (17th C.) tenant in 'Tuilshope' (presumably Twislehope) in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Archibald (17th/18th C.) from Cumberland, he was probably son of Hector, the family home being at Redsyke farm in Bewcastle Parish. He was a shepherd at Skelfhill. He may have married Mary Scott, daughter of the farmer at Falnash. His son was William, farmer at Adderstonelee. He may have returned to the Bewcastle area as an old man to live with his eldest son Hector, whose family lived there for several more generations. He also had a daughter (probably Jean) who married a Scott and had sons William (mason at Falnash Mill) and Robert (shepherd at Merrylaw). Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Burnfoot Mill in 1744 and Wester Burnfoot in 1747. He married Euphan Minto in Minto Parish in 1737. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: Janet (b.1737); William (b.1741); Elizabeth (b.1744); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1744 were John and William Scott and in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. Archibald (b.1727) born in Hawick, son of William and Helen (or Isobel) Scott. He married Elizabeth 'Betty' Irvine. Their children included: baker Hugh (1767–1847); William (b.1752), baptised in Cavers; and Isabel, who died in Hawick in 1804. He may be the Archibald who, along with John, witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas and Christian Goodfellow in 1762. George (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son William was baptised in 1743. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Dryden in 1759 and their children included: James (b.1760); Adam (b.1764); George (b.1766); Alison (b.1769); Robert (b.1772); William (b.1774); and Alexander (b.1779). In 1787 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Irvine of Newton. George (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk Parishes. He married Christian Stoddart and their children included: Agnes (b.1800); Ann (b.1802); Walter (b.1805); Jess (b.1808); James (b.1812); and Robert (b.1816). The first 4 children were baptised in Lilliesleaf and the later 2 in Ashkirk. George (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Betty Marton and their children included: Catherine (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); and George (b.1836). George (19th C.) married Margaret Noble in Cavers Parish in 1834. Rev. George (19th C.) from Hawick, he became minister of Newarthill Church, in the Anti-burgher Presbytery of Hamilton, in 1891. George Lamont (1951–) local songwriter and musician, great-grandson of John Cumming. Born in Hawick and brought up at the Prefabs, he works as a gas engineer. He is the front man for the 'G.L.G. band', and was previously in the bands 'Nemesis' and 'Bogard'. An acoustic guitar player, he is also a member of the Tennessee Songwriter's Association. He wrote the songs 'Hawick Stands Alone', and 'We are the Heart of Hawick'. Gideon (18th/19th C.) originally from Robertson Parish, he is recorded living at Greenbank in 1793 and Whithope in 1795 and 1798. He married Betty Elliot in Robertson Parish in 1790. Their children included: Andrew (b.1792); Jane (b.1795), who married John Elliot; James (b.1798); and Gideon (b.1801). Hector (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1719. Hugh (1767–1847) prominent baker in Hawick. He was son of Archibald and Elizabeth Irvine. His baker's shop was at the bottom corner of the Howegate (No. 1, on the Silver Street corner). He also milled flour for a while at Trow Mill and farmed at Greensidehall and Broomiebrae. He was said to be known for his intellect and conversation, and was a keen attender of Wilton Kirk. He remarked about the new minister (Rev. Stevenson) 'Oh, he has plenty o' guid rough stuff in him, and when he comes to a difficulty he dashes in a trowelfu' o' lime, and goes on again'. The death of his siste Isabel is recorded in Hawick in 1804. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. In Ashkirk Parish in 1793 he married Elizabeth (or Elspeth or Euphemia or 'Epie'), daughter of John Scott. Their children were: John (1798–1869), Cornet, Bailie and grocer; William (1806–90), baker; Alexander, miller at Trow Mill; Betty and Hugh (d.1805), who died in infancy; Archibald (d.1811); and Andrew (d.1811). Hugh (b.1838/9) born in Ashkirk Parish, eldest son of Alexander. He was farmer at Trow Mill. He is listed there in 1861 (at the age of 22) as mill master, farmer of 50 acres and employer of 7 people. He was living with his brothers Alexander, William and Archibald and his sister Elspeth. He was there later in the 1860s, but must have emigrated, since he died in Argentina, and his brother Alexander took over at Trow Mill. Isabel (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Wright and their children included: Margaret (b.1680). James (17th C.) resident of 'Dodburne in Kirkton Parioch' according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Effledge in 1710. He was surely related to the earlier James from Dodburn. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Janet (b.1708) and James (b.1710). He could also be the James whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included John (b.1703) and William (b.1705). James (18th C.) servant in Goldielands when he married Janet Hogg in Wilton in 1728, the proclamations also being made in Hawick Parish. Their son George was born in Hawick in 1731. James (18th C.) farmer at Bedrule according to the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls. Bailie James (18th/19th C.) son of Robert and brother of Robert and John. He was a joiner in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1810s and served as Senior Bailie in 1821; thereafter he was always known as ‘Bailie Goodfellow’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was chairman of the meeting when Lord Brougham visited Hawick in 1833. His niece Agnes (daughter of Robert) married Walter Haddon. He married Magdalene (or Margaret) Scott. Their children included: Margaret (1792–1826), who married George Buckham; and Agnes (b.1796), who married Thomas Young, but died aged 20. The witnesses in 1792 and 1796 were the whole congregation. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Christian Hobart and their children included Walter (b.1805) and Jess (a son, b.1808). James (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (18th/19th C.) wright on the Back Row, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map in about the middle of the right side of Drumlanrig Square. He could be the same man as the Bailie. James (b.1802/3) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was living at Muirhouselaw in 1841 and in Lilliesleaf in 1851 and 1861. In 1861 he was described as ‘Agricultural Labourer and Grocer’. He married Jessie, daughter of John Fairgrieve, carrier from Selkirk. Their children (baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish) included: George (b.1839); Elizabeth (b.1842); John (b.1845); Christina (b.1849); Helen (b.1851); Janet (b.c.1855); and James (b.c.1859). James (b.1824/5) born in Edinburgh, he was a ‘Woollen cloth Dresser’ on Wilton Place in 1851 and a ‘Woollen Cloth Finisher’ on Dickson Street in 1861. His wife was Isabella from Stow and their children included Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’), Mary, Isabella and George. Perhaps the same James from Hawick had 2 poems published in ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859), namely ‘The Sister Slaves’ and ‘Flowers’. Janet (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In about 1784 she was removed from the Poor Roll after refusing to allow an inventory of her possessions to be made. Janet (19th C.) listed as a milliner or dressmaker at Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. John (17th C.) shepherd at Milsington according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John whose daughter Jean was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1686. John (17th C.) resident of Briery Yards according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) tenant at Southfield. He was fined in 1677 for ‘abusseing of the marches of Hawicke marching betuixt John Hardie and him’. He rented half the farm of Over Southfield from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–96. He was also tenant farmer at Over Southfield, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms in 1696 for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for James Story. He and his son William were joint tenants of Southfield around 1710 (as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767). He was listed as being at ‘Southside’ [probably a transcription error] in 1713 when he witnessed a birth at Braxholmtown. Also in 1713 he and his son William ‘in over Southfield’ witnessed a baptism for William Martin (who was farm servant there). He married Margaret Cook in 1713; he was said to have taken a wife when he was 90 years old, and this may have been that time. He was deceased by 1721 when his widow married tailor William Oliver; they were both at ‘Over Southfield’. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for John Beattie and Helen Goodfellow (presumably a relative) in Hawick in 1673. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: Thomas (b.1754); and Jean (b.1756). John (18th C.) married Christian Cavers in Wilton Parish in 1730. He may be the John whose daughter Christian was baptised in Kirkton in 1735. He could be the John at the Flex, who (along with John Cavers) witnessed a baptism for John Irvine (tenant at the Flex) in 1741. He may also be the John who along with Archibald, witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas and Christian Goodfellow in 1762. He could also be the John who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. John (b.1756) wright in Hawick, probably son of Robert and Margaret Scott. In 1782 he married Janet Deans, daughter of flesher George Deans. Their children included: Agnes (1784–1872), who married Walter Haddon, father of Andrew Haddon of Honeyburn; and Robert (b.1786). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Jane Jardine and their children included: Helen (b.1809); and Andrew (b.1811). Perhaps the same John was a labourer at Milsingtonhaugh on the ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish in 1812. Bailie John (1798–1869) son of baker Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He was Cornet in 1822 and was also a Magistrate in Hawick. He had a grocer's and candlemaker's business at 1 Buccleuch Street. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably the merchant in Hawick listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840. He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory at the Sandbed, in 1837 on Buccleuch Street and in Slater's 1852 directory (as a 'tallow chandler') on Teviot Square. He is probably the Mr. Goodfellow whose property is marked there on Wood's 1824 map. He opened the first public baths and wash-house in Hawick, by the river-side, where Orrock Church was later built. In 1837 he was involved in a dispute with the 'Trades and Operatives' over expenses for the celebration (i.e. the drinks bill) and parade for the proclamation of the new Queen. He was listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as proprietor of the Public Baths at Teviot Square and also listed there as insurance agent for Scottish Provident. He ran the grocer's until 1857, when it had ceased to be successful and he then emigrated to New Zealand. He married Margaret, daughter of John Mercer and Euphemia Scott, and she died in 1838. Their children were: Euphemia (b.1828), who emigrated to New Zealand with her father; Archibald (b.1830), who died young; Margaret (b.1832), who married Walter Hume and later emigrated to New Zealand; Jane (b.1835), who died young; and John (b.1838), who also emigrated with his father. A portrait of him exists. John (b.1808/9) born in Jedburgh, in 1860 he was living at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish. His wife was Beatrix from Hawick. Their children included: Thomas, Oliver, James, Peter, Robert and William. John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Ann Swanstone and their children included Jean (b.1844). John (1825–1900) son of Robert and Elizabeth Kedzie. He emigrated to Canada, where he was a pioneer in Innisfil Township, Ontario. He married Margaret Cross and secondly Esther McCullough. John Cumming (1834–1917) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Helen Cumming. The family spent some time in Glasgow but moved to Hawick when he was young. He became a publisher at 63 High Street. He was an early member and regular contributor to the Archæological Society, and a keen temperance supporter. He gave a speech at the 1891 Colour Bussing, including some Common Riding reminiscences. He wrote a memoir of his early life about 1901, which was published in the 1997 Transactions. He also wrote historical articles for the Border Magazine. In 1899 he wrote a preface for a reprint volume from 'Origines Parochiales Scotiæ' of 'The Antiquities, Ecclesiastical and Territorial of the Parishes of Hawick and Wilton'. He married Martha Hain in 1865 and Andrew Hain was their son. He wrote 'Border Biography' (1890, based on articles from the 'Hawick News'), 'Occasional Poems and Verses' (1893) and 'Hawick's Annual Festival and Other Verses' (1911), as well as producing the 'Illustrated Guide to Hawick and Vicinity' (1898) and the updated edition 'Goodfellow's Guide to Hawick' (1914). He also wrote many articles on local history, specifically 'Hawick myths: No. 1 Gawyn Douglas' (1983), 'Hawick and Gavin Douglas' (1987), 'Reminiscences of the Hawick Archæological Society' (1891), 'Satchells (A Review) and the Riddell Monument' (1894), 'The Common Riding' (1894), 'The Bibliography of Hawick' (1896) and 'John Casper Leyden: An Historical Retrospective – Explanatory and Critical' (1903). In addition he published articles on wider topics, namely 'The Early History of Scotland, from an Archæological Point of View' (1881), 'The Archæology of Books' (1882), 'The Egyptian Question' (1882), 'The Present Aspects and Position of the Radical Movement' (1883) and 'The Social Life of the People, Politically Considered' (1892). John (1842–1912) son of Alexander Scott, tenant at Trow Mill. He was born in Hawick and emigrated to Victoria, Canada, then moved to Seattle. He married Florence Agassiz and they had 11 children. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included John (b.1637), Marion (b.1640), James (b.1643), Bessie (b.1645), Janet (b.1650) and Robert (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were John Scott and William Nichol. Robert (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included James (b.1696) and Robert (b.1713). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Beattie and their children included William (b.1729). The witnesses in 1729 were William and Robert Thomson. Other children (baptised in Hawick) who could be his include Bessie and an unnamed son (b.1719). Robert (1715–79) son of William. He married Margaret Scott (1721/2–87). Their children included: Agnes (1748/9–66); John (1756–86), who married Janet Deans in 1782; Robert (b.1759); and James, joiner and Bailie in Hawick. The witnesses in 1759 were the whole congregation. His wife may be the ‘Widow Goodfallow’ who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760; she is probably also the ‘Widow Goodfellow spouse to Decd. Robert’ whose death is recorded in 1787. They are buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Kedzie in 1768. John (d.1809), son of the deceased Robert, whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish, may also have been his son. Robert (18th C.) farm-worker at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1789 he was recorded at Kirklands. He could be the son of Robert and Margaret Scott baptised in Hawick in 1759; however, based on family names it seems likely his father was James, perhaps from the Bowden area. He married Helen Leis (or Lies) in Selkirk in 1782. Their offspring probably included these children baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish: James (b.1783); Thomas (b.1785); William (1787–1848), who died in North Monaghan, Upper Canada; John (b.1789); Robert (c.1791–1866), who emigrated to Quebec in about 1821; Andrew (c.1794–1852), who married Isobel Young and emigrated to Canada, along with his family and mother; Helen (b.1795), who married John Turnbull; and George (b.1800). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as labourer at East Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Jenny Biggar and their children included Elizabeth (b.1802). Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Dodds and their children included Margaret (b.1807). Robert (1790–1880) born at Merry-law, son of William and Rachel Easton. He farmed at Merrylaw, Gilliestongues and Croslie (near Stow). He later worked on estates in Devonshire, Argyllshire and Midlothian and was Land Steward at Inch Estates, Liberton. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kedie (or Kedzie) of Hawick. They had 6 children: Isabella, who married Andrew Forgie and lived at Newbattle Abbey; Rachel; William, who married Mary Whitaker and farmed in North Wales; Margaret Elliot (b.1823); John, who emigrated to Innisfill, Canada in 1844; and Archibald, who died in infancy. Robert (b.c.1805) joiner on Teviot Crescent. His wife was Grace, and their children included Adam C., Janet, Joshua,

Robert, Jane and Elliot. Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Mary Dodds and their children included Helen (b.1842) and George (b.1845). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. Most of his children were born in Midlothian. He married Isabella Renwick, who was from Forkins in Rulewater. He was probably a gentleman’s servant, and spent the latter part of his life at Penrith. His son Andrew was forester around Jedburgh. This branch of the family is not directly connected with the Hawick family of J.C. Goodfellow etc. He is probably the Thomas, son of Robert, who was born in Robertson Parish in 1785. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Isobel Renwick (from Jedburgh) and their children included: Andrew (b.1807); James (b.1809); Helen (b.1811), who married Thomas Lunn; and Oliver (b.1813). He is probably the Thomas, son of Robert, born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785. Thomas (c.1790–1849) miller at Roughheugh Corn Mill. He was listed as miller there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He is also described as tacksman (i.e. tenant) there on the 1841 census. His wife was Mary and their children included: Mary; Robert; Jane; Janet; and Elizabeth. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Denholm in 1773 and 1775. His children included Margaret (b.1773) and Archibald (b.1775). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Pott and their children included Marion (b.1636), Isabel (b.1639), Janet (b.1642), Janet (again, b.1646) and John (b.1650). William (17th C.) tenant for the Duchess of Buccleuch in Phaup on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th/18th C.) servant to Francis Scott, miller at Wester Burnfoot, he lived at Leaheads in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1707 (and having lately come to the area) when he was called to report to the Kirk Session. He was also at Leaheads in 1708 and in 1711. His children, baptised in Wilton, probably included: John (b.1708); William (b.1711); and Archibald (b.1713). Perhaps the same William had a second marriage in Wilton in 1718 (with no wife’s name recorded). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Over Southfield along with his father John in about 1710. This was attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1713 he and his father John ‘in over Southfield’ witnessed a baptism for William Martin (who was their farm servant). He is probably the William who in 1720 witnessed a baptism for William Martin in Over Southfield. He may be the William who married Helen (or Bessie) Gledstains in 1711, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Kirkton Parishes. Probably the same William married Agnes Wright and is recorded in Hilliesland in 1719. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, probably included John (b.1714), Robert (b.1715), Marie (b.1716), James (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1719). The witness in 1714 was Gideon Chisholme and the witnesses in 1719 were merchant William Dickson and gardener James Falsyde. William (1692/3–1740) son of Archibald, who came from Cumberland to Teviothead, with his mother being a Scott. He was tenant farmer at Adderstonelee. He also had half the farm of Bowanhill, Teviothead, with Archibald Elliot having the other half. He married Isobel Scott (1697–1773) at Skelfhill (listed in Cavers Parish records); she is recorded re-leasing the lands of Bowanhill in 1744. Their children were: Archibald; Andrew, who died at sea; Isabel; John, wine merchant in London and later Berwick; Robert, whose son William emigrated to Ontario; Hugh, who died young; and William, farmer at Merrylaw. He is buried with his wife in Teviothead cemetery. William (18th C.) married Isabel Scott in Cavers Parish in 1725. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Boghall in 1727 and Heap in 1733. He married Agnes Wight. Their children included: Agnes (b.1727); Bessie (b.1728); Esther (b.1731); Robert (b.1733); and William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1727 were Robert and Francis Scott and in 1733 were Robert Easton and Thomas Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Hummelknowes. His children included: John (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); Janet (b.1766); William (b.1767); Christian (b.1769); Betty (b.1771); Jean (b.1776); Nelly (b.1778); and Margaret (b.1781). He is separate from William, tenant in Merrylaw (but may have been related to him). William (1738–1821) son of William and Isobel Scott. He was tenant at Merrylaw for about 50 years. He is recorded there in at least 1788–90. He was also at Merrylaw on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1773 he married Rachel (1747–1809), daughter of John Easton, from the Damside family in Hawick. Their children were: Euphan, or ‘Euphy’, who went to London and married John Smith; Elspeth (b.1778); Isabel (b.1778), who married Adam Scott in Westerkirk; Rachel

(b.1780), who married Thomas Proudfoot, shepherd at Headshaw; William (b.1782), stocking-maker in Hawick; Margaret (b.1784), who married shepherd William Helm; John (b.1788), who died young; and Robert (b.1790), who married Elizabeth Kedzie. He is buried with his wife in Teviothead cemetery. William (1782–1849) son of William, farmer at Merrylaw and Rachel Easton. He is probably the William ‘Junr.’ recorded at Merrylaw in the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He was later a stocking-maker in Wilton, listed at Damside among heads of households in 1840. He was on Lower Damside on the 1841 census. He married Helen Cumming in Jedburgh in 1830. Their children were: William, who married Isabella Amour Own and was Schoolmaster in Haddington; John Cumming, bookseller and local historian; Rachel Easton, who married John B. Miles; and Jessie, who died young. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Dodds and their children included Jessie (b.1808), John (b.1809) and Thomas (b.1811). William (b.1799/1800) born in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer, in 1851 was a ‘Roadmaker’ and in 1861 was farmer, all at Curcarwood in Yarrow. His wife was Isabella and their children included Mary, Janet, Andrew, John, James, George and William. William (1806–90) son of Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He took over his father’s bakery business. He was listed as a baker at the Sandbed on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1837 he is recorded on the electoral roll as tenant of lands of James Douglas of Cavers. He was also listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. In 1839 he decided to emigrate to Australia, but a delay in his ship’s passage led him to enroll as a colonist of Port Nicholson (to become Wellington) in New Zealand. He travelled to Adelaide, spent time in Melbourne and finally made his way to Wellington, returning to Australia to bring his family in 1840 and purchasing land in Auckland in 1841. There he opened a bakery and flour mill. He later purchased land in Otara, where an oak tree he planted in 1850 is still standing. He married Ann, daughter of John Scott and she died in 1882. Their children were: Helen (b.1836), who married Samuel C. Baird; Ann (b.1838), who married William Macky; Hugh; John; Euphemia, who married David Scott Robertson; Margaret, who died in infancy; Jane, also died in infancy; William, who died in Oakland, California; Thomas; and James Alexander. He and his wife are buried at St. John’s Presbyterian Church Cemetery in Papatoetoe, Auckland. William (19th C.) lived at Kirkhope and Dodhead in Ettrick Parish. He was probably son of William and Isabel. He married Margaret Forest and their children included: John (1891–1917), who was killed in action in France; and 2 daughters who lived at 16 Wellogate Place, Hawick, one of them married to a Tucker (also written ‘Goodfala’, ‘Goodfala’, ‘Goodfalo’, ‘Goodfalow’, ‘Goodfallow’, ‘Goodfelew’, ‘Goodfelu’ and variants; note never locally pronounced gid-fe-li).

the Good Samaritans (thu-gid-saw-ma-ri-inz) n. abstinence group which seceded from the Good Templars in Hawick, objecting to paying money into central coffers. They lasted for many years in the latter part of the 19th century.

Gordon (gor-din) n. town and parish on the western side of Berwickshire. There was once a branch line of the Berwickshire Railway here. The 'de Gordon' family took their name from the associated barony. It is also the name of the surrounding parish. Greenknowe Tower is nearby.

Gordon (gor-din) n. Alexander (d.1575) brother of George, 4th Earl of Huntly, and nephew of James IV. He was a servant of the Queen Dowager, Mary of Guise and spent some time in France. In 1549 he sent a detailed report of the capture of Ferniehirst Castle by the English from the French. He was Postulate of Caithness and then appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1550. But in the following year the see was resigned to the Pope, following a request from the Scottish Crown. Hence he was Hawick's Archbishop for about a year. He was then pensioned and given the title of Archbishop of Athens, later becoming Archbishop of the Isles and then of Galloway. He became a Protestant. In 1566 he preached at the wedding of the Earl of Bothwell and his niece, Jean Gordon, and in 1567 he signed the bond agreeing to the marriage of Bothwell with Mary Queen of Scots. Rev. Alexander (d.1785) son of Alexander of Blairtown, he was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen 1748–52. Licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1768, was presented to Kirkton Parish in late 1774 and ordained there the following year. In 1758 he married Joan Perrie (or Pirrie), who died in 1793. They had no surviving children. Alexander (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. The death of his child is recorded in 1815. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish. As a Covenanter he had to flee the region. He was captured in Bewcastle and, along with Robert Cameron, was banished to America. Rev. Charles (c.1656–1710) from Aberdeenshire, brother of John, the Provost of Aberdeen. He graduated from Aberdeen University in 1676 and became minister at Campvere in 1686. He returned to Scotland to answer calls to Dumfries and Dalmeny, the latter of which he took up in 1691. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish at the end of 1694 and became minister there the following year. He was offered the Chair of Divinity at Aberdeen University in 1697/8, and the Assembly suggested to translate him in 1698, but he refused to accept it. He was described as 'a learned and holy man of uncommon integrity'. In 1690 he married Rosina Campbell, daughter of the minister of Dumfries. Their surviving children included 2 sons, George and James, and a daughter, Christian. They had children in Edinburgh, including George (b.1691). Their children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: Alexander (b.1697); Rosina (b.1698); Isobel (b.1700); Margaret (b.1701); Daniel (b.1702); Janet (b.1703); Jean (b.1704); John (b.1705); James (b.1707); and Anne (b.1708). Charles (18th C.) house servant at Cavers in 1791, when he was working for George Douglas. Eric (20th C.) assistant priest at S.S. Mary & David's from 1942, having previously been at Portobello. Rev. James Drummond (1870–1944) son of Rev. William and Helen Drummond. He graduated M.A. from Aberdeen University in 1891, B.D. in 1894 and B.Sc. in 1895, when he was licensed to preach. He was assistant at St. Machar's, Aberdeen, then at Errol. He became Acting-Chaplain to the forces at Aldershot in 1900 and was then Chaplain with His Majesty's Indian Ecclesiastical Establishment, becoming Senior Chaplain in Bengal in 1921. He was translated to become minister at Bedrule in 1923 and remained until his death. He married Annie Sutherland Gunn (who died in 1955, aged 82), and their children were Nannie Drummond, William Lindsay Drummond, John Gunn Drummond and James Forrest Drummond. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. John (18th C.) house servant at Branhholme in 1794, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie. John (18th/19th C.) Sheriff-officer and constable of Hawick. He is mentioned in the murder case in 1814 which resulted in Hawick's last hanging. He could be the Sergeant John who was living at Howdenburn in 1841, at about age 80, and described as 'Army H.P.' His wife is probably the 'Mrs. Gordon spouse to Sergt. Gordon' who died in Hawick in 1811. John (b.1806/7) sawyer who lived at Howdenburn. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1861 his occupation was listed as 'Colporteur'. His wife was Ann and their children included Margaret, Thomas and John. Rev. John (19th/20th C.) assistant to Rev. John MacRae at Hawick Parish Church towards the end of his ministry (around 1890). He was a guest at the 1888 Colour Bussing. He married Alison, sister of J.E.D. Murray. He became a minister in Aberdeen and retired to Edinburgh. Rev. John (b.1878) son of John, the minister of Glasserton and Margaret Bryce. He also had 2 maternal uncles who were ministers. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1902. He was licensed by Wigtown Presbytery in 1905, was assistant at Galston and then ordained as minister of Hobkirk in 1907. He demitted his charge in 1919, later becoming a teacher in North Berwick and obtaining a Ph.D. at Edinburgh University in 1928. He then became minister at Channelkirk in 1927, was translated to Kirkinner in 1931 and retired for a second time in 1943. He married Mary Jane Turnbull in 1923. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1549 as 'Patricius Gordon' when he was listed as a tenant, along with Hector and David Turnbull, of the lands of Appletreehall. Ross (1941–) born in Croft Road, he has long been a Common Riding supporter. He went to his first Ride-out in 1959, completing more than 400, including following 51 times consecutively to MossPaul, as well as attending more than 150 huts. He was President of the Mosstroopers' Club in 1985. He married Jean, daughter of ex-Cornet Bill Brydon and sister of ex-Cornet Rob Brydon. Their children are Ally and Kirsty. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Moffat and their children included: Helen (b.1755); John and Thomas (b.1757); James (b.1760); William (b.1762); and Agnes (b.1765). Rev. Thomas (1844–1917) son of the minister of Twynholm, he was educated at the University of Glasgow, graduating M.A. in 1864. He was assistant minister at Bothwell, Scone, Twynholm, Balmaghie and Fenwick. He served as minister at the 'mission' church at Saughtree 1877–86. Afterwards he was assistant at Edgerston, where he was minister from 1892. He married Adelaide Dobie. He wrote 'The Scottish Reformation Movement in the Sixteenth Century' (1883) and 'Creed and Civilisation – their Alliance in the Experience of History' (1905). Walter (??–??) watchman at Innes-Henderson in the early part of the 20th century. He was well-known for his pieces of babble, e.g. 'A liner burnt ti the grund in mid-ocean', 'A'm brikin up ma iron bedstead for fire-wud' and 'When the man's deid, hei'll be made for life'.

the Gordon Airms (thu-gor-din-ärmz) n. hostelry west of Yarrow, at the crossroads where the B709 road from Ettrick meets the A708 Yarrow road. Sir Walter Scott last met the Ettrick Shepherd here in 1830, and it is now run as a hotel. George Turnbull was the proprietor in the early 19th century, followed by John Leigh and then James Douglas.

gore (gōr) interj., arch. exclamation of surprise, used as a mild oath – 'By (the) gore! or My gore' [GW] (euphemism for 'God').

gore (gōr) n. a textile frame formerly used to make fully-fashioned ladies silk underwear, also known by the epithets 'papper' or 'bosomer' (the word is used elsewhere to mean a triangular or tapering piece of material inserted to shape a garment).

gormaw (gor-maw) n., arch. the cormorant, Phalacrocorax carbo (noted by J. Leyden).

Gorrenberry (go-rin-bu-ree) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, home to a branch of the Elliots in the 15th and 16th century and the Scotts in the 17th and 18th. It is recorded as a 10 merk land in a rental list of c.1376 among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton. It has been suggested that this branch was one of the 'twelve great families' of Elliots who moved to Liddesdale in the early 14th century. The earliest recorded Laird is 'Willielmo Elwado de goranberry' in 1484, and in 1489 he was 'Wilielmo elwad de gouinbery'. The connection between this early Laird and other Elliots is not known. However, the lands appear to then passed to the Elliots of Redheugh. In 1541 Archibald Elliot, 3rd son of Robert of Redheugh was designated 'of Gorrenberrie' (and was later Laird of Falnash), and the lands were then valued at 10 merks. Archibald's son William was also Laird, and the last Elliot Laird on record was another William in 1613. The lands then passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch, with Walter, Lord Scott, complaining in 1618 that men from several farms in upper Teviotdale had chopped down many of his trees there. John, illegitimate son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch was given the lands in 1629. John Scott held the lands in 1643, when they were valued at £1600; they still had the same value in 1678 and 1707. A payment for the ringing of the bells of Hawick Kirk for 'Gorenberie's boril' is recorded in 1722. The lands were sold by John Scott of Gorrenberry to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. In 1788 the lands were still valued at £1600 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. Robert Laidlaw was farmer there in 1792–97. Michael Anderson was farmer there in the 1820s to 40s, James Anderson was shepherd in 1835 and David Anderson farmer in 1851. William Hislop was farmer in 1868. The motto of the Gorrenberry Scotts was 'Sperandum'. There was once a tower here, but its precise location is unknown. According to Jeffrey this earlier house was located to the west of the present farm, closer to Bught Shank; however, the rectangular mound there may have been a farmstead. Tradition connects the place with a brownie, called

'the Cowie', and John Leyden also invented the beauty 'May of Goranberry' – 'O May she came, and May she gaed, By Goranberry tower; And who was it but cruel Lord Soulis That carried her from her bower?' [JL] (also spelled 'Gorranberry', 'Gorrenberrie', 'Gorrenberrie', 'Gorrinberrie', 'Gorrinberry', 'Gorronberrie', 'Goringberrie', etc.; it first occurs as 'Goranberry' in about 1376, is 'goranberry' in 1484, 'gouinberry' in 1489, 'Gorumbarry' in 1541, 'Gorranberry' in 1548, 'Gorinberry', 'Gorymberrie' and 'Gorynberry' in 1554, 'Gorumberry' in 1557, 1567 and 1569, 'Gorumberry' and 'Gorrumberrie' in 1569, 'Gorumberry' in 1573 and 1575, 'Gorinberrie' in 1580, 'Gorrumberrie' in 1581, 'Gorumberry' in 1583/4, 'Goramberrie' in 1584, 'Gorrumberrie' and 'Gorromeberrie' in 1599 and 'Gorumberrie' in the 16th century, 'Gorrumberrie' in 1613 and 1618, 'Gorimberrie' in 1648, 'Gorrinberrie' in 1650, 'Gowrinberry' in 1650, 'Gorrumberrie' in 1654, 'Gorumberrie' in 1660, 'Gorinberrie' in 1670, 'gorrenberrie' and 'Gorrinberrie' in 1678, 'Gorrenberrie' in 1692, 'Gorrenberrie' in 1695, 'Gorenberrie' in 1716; 'Gorenberrie' in 1722, 'Gorremberrie' about 1760, 'Gorenberrie' in 1763 and 'Gorrinberry' in 1797; it occurs as 'Gorramburie' on Sandison's c.1590 map, 'Goranberry' on de Wit's c. 1680 map, 'Gorenberrie' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and the modern spelling on Stobie's 1770 map; the name probably derives from the Old English 'gor ham burh', meaning 'dirty settlement at the tower' and is probably unrelated to berries, as has been fancifully suggested).

Gorrenberry Cottage (go-rin-bu-ree-ko'-eej) n. cottage by the main road to the west of Gorrenberry farm. Labourer John Armstrong and family lived there in 1851.

Gorrie (go-ree) n. William (1744/5–1816) resident of Roberton Parish. He died at Woodburn and is buried at Borthwick Waas along with Margaret (1750/1–1822) and Charles (1755/6–1834), who both died at Whithope.

Gorthon Scott (gor-thin-sko') n. area that is mentioned 'with woods' among Rulewater lands in the Lordship of Jedforest in 1587 (spelling, pronunciation and identification are uncertain).

Gospatric (gos-pat-rik) n. (11th/12th C.) first known Sheriff of Roxburghshire, and perhaps the first known person holding such an office anywhere in Scotland. He may have been son of Uhtred, who was son of Ulfkill. He owned the lands of Nether Crailing and his grant of the Chapel of Crailing was confirmed in about 1150 (probably after he was deceased). He was also listed as Sheriff when he gave a ploughgate of land in Crailing around the foundation of Jedburgh Abbey, as confirmed in later charters. He is mentioned in the charter for the foundation of Selkirk Abbey around 1120, when he was 'Cospatrico vicecomite'. He also witnessed a grant to Durham Cathedral around 1126 and witnessed another grant to the church attached to Roxburgh Castle about the same time. There were several other contemporary men of the same forename, and it is not known to what later family he may have been related. One suggestion is that he is the same as Gospatric of Swinton, brother of Colban. Given that he was Sheriff of Roxburghshire, he was probably related to John, son of Orm, who held the same office later in the 12th century.

Gospel Haa (gos-pul-haw) n. former name for a building on Ruecastle farm (presumably a jocular term, from a resemblance to a place of worship).

got (go', gō) pp. had, especially as a teacher or similar – 'A got Ned for Maths', got called, was named – 'hei aye got 'Faggy' when hei was younger'.

go ti Hawick (gō-ti-hIk) interj. mild oath, used to express disbelief or dismay (euphemism for 'go to Hell').

gotten (go'-in, go-tin) pp. got – '...freelie ye hae gottan, freelie gie' [HSR], '...or thance A nicht never heh gotten off the bit aa day' [ECS] (this participle form is more common than in standard English).

Gotterson (go-tur-sin, go'-ur-sin) n. George (16th C.) listed among associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers in a court cse of 1541. There were also 2 Johns listed, who were probably related to him. John (16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branhholme. They were probably related to George, who was also listed. John (17th C.) listed at Old Jedburgh among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Matthew writer of 'The Callant', this probably being James Smail from Jedburgh, and not a pen-name for J.E.D. Murray as once suggested. Thomas (18th C.) resident of the Roberton and Ashkirk areas. He could be the Thomas, son of William, baptised in Roberton in 1713. He married Agnes Murray. Their children included: William (b.1746), baptised in Roberton; and Thomas (b.1748), baptised in Ashkirk. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area. He married Violet Laidlaw. Their son William was born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1800 and baptised in Maxton. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Chapelhill in 1710. His surname is recorded in 1710 and 1713 as 'Guthrison'. His children included: Agnes (b.1703); Helen (b.1705); James (b.1710); and Thomas (b.1713). William 'Wullie' (b.c.1770) well-known Hawick character of the early 19th century. He farmed near Crumhaughhill, the area sometimes known as Gotterson's Knowes. He also kept an inn (or perhaps an 'innerie') in the 'Back Row'. This was a cluster of buildings with a cess pool in the middle that he referred to as the 'silver lake'. Once when he refused to accepted a new tenant on the grounds that there were bugs in his furniture, the Bailie asked him if there were no bugs already at his inn and he replied 'Aw dinna mean to say onything of the kind. Aw've ower mony already, and aw dinna want ony mair!'. He was known for his skill at curing horses and cows and volunteered as a driver in the local Militia in 1803. He was mentioned in a story told about beggar John Brown, occurring about 1820. He was a farmer living alone on the Back Row on the 1841 census; Mary, who lived next door, was about the right age to be his daughter. He married Janet Irvine in 1794, the marriages being recorded in both Bedrule and Ancrum Parishes. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: Mary (b.1795); and Thomas (b.1797). When asked why he turned up to his wife's funeral in blue, rather than the traditional black, he replied 'Aw got her in blue and aw'll pairt wi'r in blue'. His 'Sunday ootsteeks' were donated to the Museum collection in 1863 - 'Weel he wad ken Wull Gotterson Wi' his strampin' ootsteek shoon' [DH] (formerly spelled 'Gottersonne', 'Gottersoun' and other variants, as well as 'Guthrison').

Gotterson's Innery (go'-ur-sinz-i-nu-ree) n. inn kept by Wullie Gotterson in the Back Row, where the Stag's Head is now. Martin Dechan grew up there.

Gotterson's Knowes (go'-ur-sinz-nowz) n. former name for the area around a small farm on the summit by Crumhaughhill, farmed by Wullie Gotterson, and containing the Watch Knowe.

Gouinlock (goo-in-lok) n. Walter (1855-1907), J.P., born in Ashkirk, son of John. He was educated at Selkirk Grammar School. His father moved to Traquair Knowe in 1869, and he himself managed that farm for 20 years. He was also a cattle breeder. He was heavily involved in the Parish Council and School Board in Innerleithen. He married and had a son and a daughter (see also Govenlock).

Gould (goold) n. John (1780/1-1857) Hawick framesmith and frameworker, originally from Glasgow. He was involved in an 1834 improvement of the broad stocking frame, whereby two stockings could be made at once. He moved into the basement of 7 Brougham Place when blacksmith Murray vacated his smithy. By 1837 he was listed as a framesmith on the Round Close and by 1851 he was employing 4 men and 2 boys there. He was listed as a framesmith on the Round Close in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Elizabeth Taylor. His children included: Alex, whose wife Isabella Smith, sister-in-law Janet Smith and child John all died of cholera at Allars Crescent; William, who also worked as a framesmith; and Elizabeth. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery (also written 'Gold' and 'Goold').

Gourlay (goor-lee) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 paying homage to Edward I of England. His location is only given as Roxburghshire. However, he (along with Alan de Gourlay) served on a jury in 1303/4 to decide on the succession to Sir Thomas Chartres, Baron of Wilton. So it seems reasonable to suppose that he held lands fairly locally. Other men of the same surname who also paid homage to Edward I in 1296 were from Edinburgh, Berwickshire and Forfarshire. He could be the 'Ede Gurlay' whose lands of Rutherford and Maxton were granted by Robert the Bruce to John de Lindsay in 1321. Rev. Adam (1800-81) born at Chesters, near Ancrum, son of James and Margaret Redford. He graduated from Edinburgh University and was licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1825. He became assistant minister at Bedrule and at Lilliesleaf. In 1842 he was presented as minister of Lilliesleaf by James Henry Robert, Duke of Roxburghe. He was Clerk of the Presbytery in 1843 and Clerk of the Synod in 1853. In Slater's 1852 directory his name appears as 'Gonrlay'. He married Margaret Campbell Baxter (1813-1900), daughter of his predecessor. Their children were: James (1836-99), insurance clerk; Anne Campbell (1837-85), married George Alexander, farmer; David Baxter (1839-1913), farmer; Margaret Redford (1846-1925); Maria Nicolina (1848-93); Adamina Harriet (1852-1924); Adam (1854-88), banker; and

Jane Charles Russell Currie (b.1856), married Walter Robert Brodie. Alan (13th/14th C.) served along with Adam on the jury to decide on who inherited the Barony of Wilton in 1303/4. He is recorded as 'Alain de Gourlay' and was likely related to Adam. He is probably the man transcribed as 'Aleyne Gurnay' on the Ragman Rolls of 1296, where his seal shows a squirrel feeding within two interlaced squares, with the name 'S'ALANI GORLEY'. Archibald (14th C.) father of John, who was served heir to the lands of Rulewood in 1387. Since John, son of Henry had been granted the lands in 1380, as confirmed in 1390, there may be confusion with dates. These charters are held by the Stewarts of Traquair. Arnulf (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Denholm Mains in 1465/6, when he is recorded as 'Arnulf Gurlay'. He is probably the 'Arnald Gorlay' who was part of an action (along with several other Border lairds) registered with Parliament by John, Lord Somerville in 1476. He is probably the 'Arnou' who married Katherine, the daughter and heiress of Alexander Inglis, and hence inherited lands near Braxholme. John of Rulewood was probably his son or grandson. David B. (b.1838/9) farmer at Bewlie Hill. He was listed there in 1861, farming 184 acres and employing 8 people. He was there with his brother James. He was also recorded there in a directory of 1868. Henry (14th C.) granted the lands of Rulewood to his son John in 1380. In 1390 the grant was confirmed by Malcolm of Drummond, Lord of Mar and Garrioch, who was Baron of Cavers. James (15th C.) recorded as 'Jacobum Gurlaw' when he was on the inquest panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick in 1484. John was also on the panel. John (15th C.) recorded in 1432 as a witness to the instrument of sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. He was also on the 'retour of inquest' for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. He must have been related to the later John of Rulewood and Arnulf. John (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. James was also on the panel. He may be the same as John of Rulewood. John of Rulewood (15th/16th C.) holder of the lands of 'Kyrktoun' in the Barony of Braxholme. He was named on an inquest in 1497/8 (as John Gourlay of Roulwod) and was probably also the John on the inquest for succession to the Home lands in 1506. He is probably the 'Jhon Gowrlay' who was among the men chosen to value the lands of Whithope in 1500. In 1508 he was 'Johannem Gourlay in Roullwoide' on the panel for Adam Hepburne inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was probably the John 'Gourlaw' who was on the panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1509. In 1509 he was granted the lands of Rulewood by William, Lord Herries of Terregles. He was already deceased in 1521 when the lands passed to his son John. He was probably son or grandson of Arnulf. John (16th C.) son of John of Rulewood. He is recorded in a sasine of 1521 granted by Walter Scott of Braxholme, for the '6 merkland of Kyrktoun' in the Barony of Braxholme. These lands had passed to the family through 'Arnou Gourlau' who married Katherine, daughter and heiress of Alexander Inglis. In 1525 he was served heir to the lands of Rulewood. In 1528 he was probably the John listed among supporters of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus who were called to appear before the King. He is also 'John Gourlaw of Roulwood' in 1533 when part of an inquest at Jedburgh. He may be the John of Rulewood who had a contract with William Turnbull in Hassendeanbank in 1540 (probably not 1640 as recorded in one source). Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Braxholme. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1582 when he witnessed an agreement in Hawick for Alan Deans and Alexander Weens. William (14th C.) granted '10 merks of lands' in Chamberlain Newton (probably Groundistone) by William Lindsay of the Byres. The charter is undated, but probably around 1390. William (16th C.) recorded in 1563 as official representing Andrew Douglas of Friarshaw. He warned George and Ralph Douglas to remove themselves from Andrew's lands in Cavers (formerly spelled 'Gorlay', 'Gourlau', 'Gourlaw', 'Gurlaw', 'Gurlay' and other variants).

Gourlay Bog (goor-lee-bōg) n. former name for lands in Bedrule. In the c.1795 Old Statistical Account it is recorded that there was 'a small common near the church called Gourlay Bog, on which the minister of Bedrule was also in use to pasture'. The common was divided some time in the 18th century. It was 'Gourlaybog' in 1801, when listed as part of the estates (valued at £14) bought by William Elliot of Wells (presumably related to a former owner called Gourlay).

Goushill (gows-hil) n. area between Todrig Burn and Blindhaugh Burn, to the north of Todrig farm (it is amrked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Govan (go-vin) n. Joseph (18th C.) recorded as 'indweller in Hawick' in 1751 when he had a libel case for non-payment of a bill in Selkirk. However, there was also a complaint against him in 1751 by William Hall from Selkirk, claiming that he had been beaten in his own house and had his furniture damaged by him. He is probably the Joseph who married Margaret Dunn and whose children (baptised in Hawick), included: Mary (b.1756); and Joseph (b.1759). Joseph (d.bef. 1816) resident of Hawick. He married Elizabeth Laidlaw in 1771 and their daughter Christian was baptised in Hawick in 1772. The witnesses were John Hume and John Grieve. His wife died in 1816, when his surname was given as 'Gibbons'. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Rae in 1778. Lawrence of Cardrono (14th C.) Sheriff of Peeblesshire in 1358/9 and probably longer. He was recorded as Warden of Roxburgh in 1373, when King Robert II granted him 100 shillings for ward of the Castle of Roxburgh; the money came out of the rents of Whitchesters, Adderstone, Wilton, Chamberlain Newton and Minto. William of Hermiston (18th/19th C.) he was a glazier in Edinburgh, but was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788. He owned the lands of both Wester Hermiston and Easter Hermiston in 1788. He was further listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 he was listed as owner of Easter Hermiston (whose 2 parts had previously belonged to 'Sinton' and 'Johnson') as well as Wester Hermiston. He was still owner of Hermiston in 1817 (also written 'Govane' and 'Goven').

gove (gōv) v., arch. to wander aimlessly, to stare in a vacant manner – 'Confoondit by philosophy, I gove't at him, he glowert at me, And, Ah, he had an eller eel' [DH] (also written 'goave'; see also gover).

Govenlock (go-vin-lok, gow-in-lok) n. Adam 'Adie' (16th C.) recorded in Eilrig in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Adam (17th C.) local man, referred to as 'in Hoitt' in 1641 when he claimed a white mare that he had found on his lands. Probably the same Adam was witness in 1651 to a baptism in Hawick for James Scott and Mary Davidson and another in 1656 for Archibald

Paterson. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Manie Beattie and their son Adam was baptised in 1661, with witnesses James Sinton and John Gray. Adam (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Northhouse. He was recorded paying tax on 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Perhaps the same Adam was recorded at Hislop on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1799. Adam (b.c.1780) farmer at Childknowe in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded in 1841. Adam (b.c.1795) born in Cavers Parish. He was a wool spinner, living on Fore Row in Wilton Dean in 1841. In 1851 his address was 'Front Row No. 2'. He lived there with his brother William and niece Isabella Scott and her family. Andrew (17th C.) married to 'Menie Bettie', their son Adam was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1661. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married 'Grizell Hadden' in Ashkirk in 1691. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Chisholme in Robertson Parish in 1704. Andrew (18th C.) married to Isabel Porteous. His children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included Christian (b.1745), Adam (b.1747) and John (b.1750). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son James was baptised in 1754. Andrew (18th C.) married to Margaret Riddell. Their children baptised in Hawick Parish included Margaret (b.1763), Agnes (b.1765), Janet (b.1767), Jane (b.1770) and Andrew (b.1773). The witnesses in 1773 were William and James, with the surnames unreadable. Andrew (b.c.1780) resident of Falnash in Hawick Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Andrew (b.1789) eldest son of Robert. He married Elizabeth Kidd. He emigrated to Canada (like his brother William), settling at Stratford, Ontario. Among his descendants are Jennie Kidd Trout (Canada's first licensed female medical practitioner) and John Gowanlock (of the Frog Lake Massacre). Andrew (1788/9–1877) born in Yarrow Parish. In 1861 he was 'Retired Farmer Fundholder' at Birkwood on Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as farmer at Calaburn in 1868. He married Beanston Broomfield. Their children George, Robina (or Beanston, b.1837/8), Alice (b.1839/40, who married Robert Campbell) and Margaret (b.1841/2) were born in Poland. He died in Wilton in 1877, aged 89. Andrew (19th C.) married Grace Scott in Wilton in 1846. David (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Elizabeth Stewart in 1867 and their children included Elizabeth (b.1868). Duncan William (19th C.) married Isabella Nichol in Wilton in 1880. Francis (b.1781) son of James and Isabel Cumming, he was born in Hawick Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Branhholme Park in 1841. He married Sally Sharp in Robertson Parish in 1800. Their children (born in Robertson Parish) included: James (b.1801); John (1803–68), a mason; Elizabeth (b.1805), perhaps the servant to the Robertson schoolmaster in 1841; Francis (b.1808), also a mason; Isabella (b.1810); William (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); and Walter (b.1825). Francis (1808–86) son of Francis. He was a mason living at Howcleuchshiel in 1841 and at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he married Agnes, daughter of John Lunn; she died in 1890, aged 83. Their children (born at Howcleuchshiel) were: Isabella (1842–64); and Francis (1843–64). The family are buried in Robertson Cemetery. George (b.c.1813) mail-coach driver living at the Plough Inn in 1841. George (d.1916) son of farmer Andrew, he was born in Poland. In 1891 he was farmer at Whitehaugh Moor, living with his sister Robina and in 1911 he was at Gala Rigg with sisters Robina and Alice. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Alemoor in 1711, 1713, 1716, 1718 and 1720, Borthwickshiels in 1714 and Easter Alemoor in 1715. His children probably included: Christian (b.1703); William (b.1705); Andrew (b.1707); Helen (b.1709); Walter (b.1711); Walter (again, b.1713); Walter (again, b.1714); Thomas (b.1715); John (b.1716); Elspeth (b.1716); Helen (b.1718); and Isobel (b.1720). James (17th/18th C.) married an unnamed woman in Ashkirk Parish in 1713. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isabel Cumming and their children included Francis (b.1781). His wife died in 1809. James (1754–1819) born in Robertson Parish, son of Andrew. He was tenant in Calaburn. His children included Adam (1775/6–1847), who died at Childknow. They are buried in Borthwick Waas. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Sutherland who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably related to the local Govenlocks. James 'Jamie' (b.c.1820) son of Robert, he also worked as one of the mail-coach drivers in the mid-1800s. In 1843 he was listed as a 'Horse keeper' when he gave evidence regarding the overturning of the coach 'Defiant'. He was a lodger at the Crown Inn for the 1851 census. He married Minnie (or Elizabeth) Beattie, and their children were Thomas (who married Christina Shankie) and Margaret (who married Thomas McVittie). John (16th/17th C.) acted as caution (along with several others) for Mungo

Scott from Castleside in 1623. He is described as 'in Heidshaw'. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jean Glendinning and their son Thomas was baptised in 1645. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Malie Nichol and their daughter Margaret was born in 1648. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Appletreehall in 1706. His children included: John (b.1702); Bessie (b.1703); William (b.1706); and Janet (b.1708). John (18th C.) married Margaret Renalson in Wilton Parish in 1745. John (c.1755–1819) recorded as innkeeper of 'Harriot House' (probably 'Heriot House' on what became the A7). He was the father of Robert (innkeeper of Mossypaul), married Isabella Scott in 1780 and had earlier been a shepherd at Phaup in Selkirkshire. He could be the John who was a shepherd at Hislop in 1797, according to the Dog Tax Rolls (and recorded as 'James' on the Horse Tax Rolls). John (b.c.1780) resident of Allanhaugh Mill according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Forrest in Robertson Parish in 1835. John (1815–1904) born at Greenhill in Ashkirk Parish, where his father was farmer. He was a cousin of the poet Thomas Aird. He succeeded his father as tenant at Greenhill, and then was tenant at Ashkirk town. In 1841 he was farmer at Haremooss in Ashkirk, living there with his brother Walter and mother Mary. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Ashkirk town. In 1869 he moved to the farm of Traquair Knowe. He married Mary Grieve from Bowden and their children were: Christina (1846–1920); Walter (b.1848), who died young; Mary (b.1849); Jessie (1851–1938); Walter (1855–1907), who succeeded as tenant of Traquair Knowe; and Isabella (b.1857), who married Walter Sturrock from New Belses. In 1869 he became tenant of Traquair Knowe and remained there until his death. He was an elder of the original Secession Church at Midlem for 65 years. He attended the inaugural St. Roman's Border Games in 1827. He and his wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1902. His name was usually spelled 'Gouinlock'. He is buried at Traquair. John (b.1817/8) born in Teviothead Parish, he was listed as farmer's son and farm manager at Blackhall in Ewesdale in 1861. He married Isabella Nichol, and their children included: Annie Burnet (1846/7–1926), who married William Vincent Shaw; Robert; Margaret (1854/5–1921); George Nichol (1856–64); Isabella Nichol (1859/60–1935); and John (b.1864). John (b.c.1828) son of Robert. He ran Mossypaul after his father's death, probably up until it closed. He then resumed work as a coach driver. He (or another John) was also the proprietor of the Subscription Rooms in the early-to-mid-1800s. He married Isabella Nichol in 1864 and she died in 1884. His daughter was Margaret Ruickbie Govenlock who married William Turnbull Riddle Graham and was mother of the 1902 Cornet. John Nichol (19th/20th C.) married Nelly Scott in Robertson Parish in 1904. Margaret nee Ruickbie (1792–1863) daughter of James Ruickbie, she married Robert, landlord of the Moss-paul Inn. She was born somewhere near Lilliesleaf. She was apparently widely known for her hospitality and kindness, and was quite tall. At Moss-paul she was often to be found in a seat by the open fireplace in the kitchen. Not very widely travelled, she was once quizzed about how far she had been when she replied 'Hoots, aye, aw was yince at Denholm'. Her children were Margaret, Elizabeth, James, Robert, John and Helen. She was buried at Teviothead. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as 'Paitt Gavinlok in Quhyn-incleuch', which could be Whinney Cleuch in the Borthwick valley. Robert (17th C.) married to Isobel Cowan, his son Adam was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1651. Robert (18th C.) married Agnes 'Wholence' in Robertson in 1726, both being from that Parish. He was recorded at Todshawhaugh in 1727, perhaps Harden in 1732 (it is hard to read) and Parkhill in 1734 and 1742. His children, baptised in Robertson, included Andrew (b.1727), Margaret (b.1730), Jean (b.1732), John (b.1734), John (again, b.1738), Bessie (b.1740), Robert (b.1742) and Agnes (b.1744). Robert (18th C.) married Isabel Park in Robertson Parish in 1747. Robert (18th C.) recorded as 'present tacksman at Crosslee Toll Bar' in 1785 when he was involved in a dispute over a bill in Selkirk. He may be related to the other Govenlocks who were toll-keepers. Robert (1762–1825) lived in Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. He is probably the Robert who was married in Southdean Parish in 1787 (no wife's name given). He married Betty, daughter of John Oliver and Isabell Scott of Hawick. Their children were Andrew (b.1789), James (b.1791), Robert (b.1794), Jennet (b.1795), William (b.1798) and Walter (b.1802). Robert (18th/19th C.) servant of carrier John Hardie. He was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797. He was listed as a carrier in 1799 and among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'; in 1801 he was listed as a tanner in Hawick on the new ballot list. He may be the Robert who married Janet Hogg in 1800, the marriage recorded in Kirkton and Hawick Parishes. Robert 'Gloomy Wunter' (1787/8–1861) son of John (a shepherd at Phaup and later inn-keeper) and Isabella Scott. He was landlord of the Moss-paul Inn for about 45 years, from 1816. His tenure there saw many improvements to the hotel, although the coming of the railway led to its later closure. He also worked as a guard on the Edinburgh to Carlisle mail coach. He was said to have a commanding appearance and distinctive personality. He was additionally one of the founder members of the Wisp Club, and acted as the first Treasurer, returning thanks to the Club at their annual dinners 'with his usual simplicity and readiness of manner'. In 1821 he subscribed for 6 copies to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' and in 1825 he did the same things for Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He was listed at Moss-paul in the 1841 census. In 1811 he married Margaret, a daughter of James Ruickbie. They had several children, including: Margaret, who married Mark Turnbull; James, who married Minnie Beattie; Elizabeth, who married gamekeeper Alexander Robertson; Robert; John, who married Isabella Nichol, and was grandfather of Cornet William N. Graham; and Helen (1831/2–74). He died shortly before the last coach run from Hawick to Carlisle. There is a portrait of him in the Museum, by an unknown artist. He could be the Robert to whom a debt was due according to a record in Selkirk in 1814, when he was Selkirk Toll. Robert (b.1821/2) son of Robert. He was farmer at Teindside and also involved with the Archæological Society in the late 1800s. In 1861 he was farmer of about 4000 acres at Teindside, employing 12 people. He took part in the last ceremonial running of the stage-coach from Hawick in 1862. He was still recorded at Teindside in 1868. He was probably also the tenant farmer at Wolfcleuchhead recorded in the 1870s. He probably died unmarried. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1847. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Helen Turnbull and their children included William (b.1672). Thomas (18th C.) married Helen Douglas in Wilton Parish in 1749. He was living at Robertson Burnfoot in 1752. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, include Christian (b.1751) and

Helen (b.1752). Thomas (18th/19th C.) married to Betty Oliver. Their children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included Thomas (b.1814), John (b.1820) and William (b.1822), a farm labourer at St. Boswells. Thomas (18th/19th C.) innkeeper in Jedburgh, recorded in a letter in Selkirk in 1826. Thomas (1841/2–1923) born at Mossypaul, son of James. He was a blacksmith in Stow. He married Christina Shankie. He was killed by a runaway horse. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Branhholme Park. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Walter (b.c.1780) servant at Belses Mill according to the ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish in 1801. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Mary Armstrong in Wilton Parish in 1810. Walter (19th C.) married to Mary Tait, their son Robert was baptised in Southdean Parish in 1828. Walter (1812/3–57) farmer at Dryden near Ashkirk. He was living at Hare-moss with his older brother John and mother Mary in 1841. In 1851 he was farmer at Greenhill of 80 arable acres and 520 acres of hill-land, employing 7 people. In 1848 he married Jessie Redford (from Lilliesleaf) and they had daughters Isabella S. (b.1849/50), Mary A. (b.1850/1), Jessie (b.1856) and Margaret Walteria (b.1857). In 1861 his widow was a 'Farmeress' of 600 acres at Greenhill, employing 8 people. William (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may be related to Adie in Eilrig and Patie in Whinney Cleuch, who are also on the same list. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1651 he witnessed a baptism for John Renwick. He could be the William whose account is recorded in Selkirk in 1660. William Pater-son (1789/90–1856) born in Cavers Parish. He was a shepherd, and was recorded living with his brother Adam in Wilton Dean in 1851. William (1798–1888) born at Chesters, son of Robert. He worked as a day labourer in Rule Water. In 1842 he emigrated with his family to Bruce County, Ontario, Canada. In 1824 he married Christian (1801–91), daughter of William Laidlaw and Helen Douglas. Their children were: Robert (1825–1906), who married Jane Armstrong and lived at Brant; Helen (1827–1906), who married and had 1 daughter; Elizabeth Oliver (1829–1907), who married James Rowand, one of the first pioneer residents of Saugeen, Ontario and M.P. for West Bruce, Ontario; Christian (b.1831) unmarried; William (b.1833), born at Yethouse, who married Jane Shanks; Andrew (b.1834), who married Betsy Laidlaw; James (b.1836), who married Mary Hendry; Janet (b.1838), who married Archibald Armstrong and had 6 children; Walter Douglas (b.1839), married Mary Rogan; and John, born in Canada, married Janet Stewart. All except the last child were born in Hobkirk Parish. The family emigrated to Ontario in 1842, where he purchased some land near Brampton, Ontario. They then moved to the Saugeen area in 1851, arriving there by crossing the Saugeen River on a raft, before there were any roads. His offspring are still living in Canada. He died aged 90, when he had about 120 living descendants. William (18th/19th C.) married Anne Crozier in Wilton in 1842 (also spelled 'Gavinlok', 'Goinlock', 'Gouinlock', 'Govanlock', 'Govinlok', 'Gowanloch', 'Gowanlock', 'Gowanlocke', 'Gowanlok', 'Gowenloch', 'Gowenlock', 'Gowenloke', 'Gowinlok', etc.).

Gow (gow) n. Alexander (1785/6–1836) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Pringle (possibly daughter of Andrew Pringle, farmer at Orchard), who was born in Ashkirk Parish and died at Old Borthaugh in 1872, aged 79. His widow and children Thomas and Anne were at Robertson Woodfoot in 1841 and at Borthaugh Cottages in 1851. His widow was visiting their daughter Ann's family in Dovemount Street at the time of the 1861 census. Their children included: Janet (1815–82), who married James Turnbull and died in Paisley; Thomas (1817/8–92), who died at Appletreehall; and Ann (b.1821/2), who married Alexander Wemyss. He died at Philhope Burnfoot and the family are buried at Borthwick Waas. It is also possible that he was the Alexander, married to Margaret Barry, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Hobkirk in 1814. Peter ‘Pete’ (20th C.) proprietor of a greengrocer’s shop at 2 Howegate in the 1950s.

He married Elizabeth Carter and their children were: Agnes (b.1857), who married John Scott; John (b.1859), who married Isabella Scott in Hawick; Isabella (b.1861), who was a midwife who married John Aitkin; Alexander (b.1863); Elizabeth (1865–1953), who married John Brochie Brown; Mary (b.1867), who married John Alfred Scarborough in Wilton; Bryce (b.1869), who married Rachel Cairns in Hawick; William James (b.1871); Janet (b.1873), who married Archibald Aimers; Jessie (b.1876), who married John Stanton; and Margaret (b.1880), who died in infancy. The youngest 3 children were born in Hawick. Bryce (1892–1939) son of William and grandson of the earlier Bryce. He was a tailor in Hawick. He served during WWI. He later emigrated to California. William James (1871–1937) born in Maxwelltown, just before his family moved to Hawick. He married Isabella Richardson (1872–1932). Their children were: Mary (b.1895), who died in infancy; William Paul (1897–1917); and Bryce (1892–1939), tailor.

Graden (grā-din) n. former lands and tower in the northn part of Linton Parish. It was home of a branch of the Ker family. The tower was demolished in the mid-18th century. There is another place of the same name near Coldstream in Berwickshire.

Graham (grā-um) n. Adam (19th/20th C.) undertaker in Hawick. His firm also ran taxis and rented out charabancs, based at 20 Drumlanrig Square. They transported soldiers between Stobs and Hawick. He hired his nephew David Peacock as a motor engineer and driver. The bus part of the company was taken over by S.M.T. in 1935. Alexander (19th C.) along with John, presumably his brother or son, he was listed in

Pigot's 1837 directory as an ironmonger on the High Street. Andrew 'Little Andro' (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 along with 'Reid Andro' Armstrong. A man in Selkirk complained that if the Bailies there had apprehended the 2 men and subsequently released them, then the Bailies would be responsible if he came to harm. He was recorded in 1586/7 as 'Andro Grahame, callit Litle Andro', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties; his brother Ninian is also listed. Andrew (b.1784/5) born in Canonbie, he was a draper at 3 Sandbed. He was listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was Junior Magistrate in the 1820s, recorded in 1828 when the Slitrig (Drumlanrig) Bridge was extended. In 1851 he was a retired draper on Teviot Square, and was listed among the local gentry on a directry of 1852. In 1852 No. 3 Sandbed was sold to George Drummond. In Leith in 1821 he married Christian, youngest daughter of John Nixon. Their children included: George (b.1824); Mary (b.1826); Jane Elliot (b.1827); and John (b.1830). Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. He was witness in 1707 to a baptism in Hawick for weaver John Briggs. He is designated 'Mr' and the other witness was Andrew Riddell, tenant in Goldielands. Charles (18th/19th C.) described as 'Yeomanry Trumper' in 1882 when the death of his infant son is recorded. He presumably played the trumpet for the local volunteers. David (17th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. He rented part of the farm of Raesknowe from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–98. He was also resident at Raesknowe according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Gledstains in Raesknowe. He could be the David, married to Marion Bell, whose children born in Hawick Parish included: twins Bessie and William (b.1671); Robert (b.1675); and Archibald (b.1678). The witnesses in 1671 were John Elliot and John Bell (probably related to his wife). In 1682 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Bell, who was also a tenant at Raesknowe. David (1677/8–1718) preacher at Teviothead 'chapel of ease' in 1715, when the church was started for people in the outlying parts of Cavers and Wilton Parishes. This is probably the same as the minister of Langholm from 1705, who was translated to Kirkmahoe in 1716 and died 2 years later. He may have simply travelled from Langholm to Teviothead periodically. He is already recorded in 1714 as ‘preacher in ye meeting house in Carlangridge Chapel’ when recorded as substitute for Hawick’s absent minister. David (b.1807/8) from Selkirk, he was a grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he is recorded on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Mary and their children included John and Mary. Rev. David J. (1955–) son of Frank, who worked for the Post Office, and Jean Dodds. He grew up in Hawick, moving with his family to the Glasgow area in 1963. He was lecturer in Biblical Studies at Glasgow Bible College and served as assistant minister at several congregations before being ordained in 1982. In 1998 he became minister of the linked charges of Dirleton Kirk, Dirleton and Abbey Church, North Berwick. Mrs. Elizabeth (19th C.) recorded as owner of part of Howlands, along with Mrs. Agnes Bowie, in the mid-1800s. It is unclear who her husband might have been. Fergus (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been related to Robert of Ewesdale. His name is written ‘Fergus the Grame’. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Lees in 1744 and 1747. He married Elizabeth Noble and their children included Helen (b.1744) and Agnes (b.1747). The witnesses in 1744 were Robert Graham (surely a close relative) and James Scott and in 1747 were James Dryden and Adam Armstrong. He may be the George who in 1737 witnessed a baptism for William Nichol, who lived at Stouslie and another for Robert (probably a relative), who was living at Brieryyards. George (d.bef. 1790) resident of Hawick. His daughter Helen died in 1790. He could be the George who married Helen Fletcher in Wilton in 1754. George Rome (b.1835) son of John, farmer at Hollows Mill, near Canonbie. His older brother Simon trained as a draper in Hawick, with his younger brother John also in the same business, and their older sister Mary having married Hawick draper Walter Armstrong. In 1861 he was a draper’s assistant with Wood, Graham & Co., 6 Tower Knowe. From 1871 he moved to live with his mother’s family, the Dicksons. Hugh (1966–) from Stirling, he played as prop forward in rugby. He was capped 25 times for Scotland and also played professionally in both rugby union and rugby league teams. He coached the Scottish national team forwards, later being coach for Gala R.F.C. In the period 2017–20 he was coach for Hawick, being credited for turning the ‘Great Escape’ and turning around the team’s fortunes. Hugh ‘Hughie the Graeme’ (16th C.) subject of a Border ballad, it is unclear if he was a historical figure or not. The story is that the Bishop of Carlisle seduced Graeme’s wife, and so he carried out a raid in which he stole the Bishop’s finest mare, was then captured by Lord Scroope and hanged at Carlisle Castle. There are several different versions – ‘Here Johnie Armstrang, take thou my sword, That is made o’ the metal sae fine; And when thou comest tae the English side, Remember the death of Hughie the Graeme’ [T]. Hutchin ‘Richie’s Hutchin’ (16th/17th C.) Englishman who was declared an outlaw for the murder of Thomas Graham (son of ‘Richie’s Will’) and John ‘Orfeur’ around the end of the 16th century. He was also indicted in England for helping Scott of Buccleuch in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 from Carlisle Castle (being ‘the third man that entered the same’), as well as for theft and raiding (particularly during the ‘Ill Week’) and for speaking against the Queen and King. His brothers William (‘Mickle Will’), George (‘Richie’s Geordie’), William (alias ‘Carlisle’) and Richard (alias ‘Lenox’) were also convicted. In about 1605 he obtained remission for helping in the capture of ‘Sandy’s Ringan’ Armstrong. There are also mentions of ‘Young Hutchin’ around 1606, who may have been his son. He is probably the ‘Hutchon Grame’ listed in a letter from Captain Musgrave in 1583, listing his children as Andrew, Robbie, Arthur and Richie. James (17th C.) footman to Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. James (1612–50) Marquess of Montrose. He was a leader of the Covenanter forces after 1639, leading the army (including the Teviotdale Regiment) which invaded England and captured Newcastle in 1640. He opposed the Solemn League and Covenant and became the main leader of Royalist forces in Scotland from 1644, including at the Battle of Auldearn, where several local Gladstains and Douglasses fell. However, his men were massacred at Philiphaugh in 1645. He fled to Norway, but was later made Captain-General of Scotland by Charles II. Landing in the Orkneys in 1650 he raised a small army, but was betrayed and handed over to the Covenanters. He was hanged in Edinburgh, his head fixed on a spike and his body quartered and distributed among the Scottish cities. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included: Helen (b.1677); an unnamed child (b.1683); and Christian (b.1686). In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Cook. In 1689 he was recorded 'in Altoncrofts' when he (along with Robert Cook) witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for Walter Scott of Altoncroft. James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Scott in 1706. The marriage was proclaimed in Wilton in July and in Cavers in August. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1737. He married Bessie Lamb and their children included Walter (b.1737) and John (b.1739). The witnesses in 1737 were John and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Falnash. His wife was Jane Graham and their children included Mary (b.1757) and Betty (b.1758). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation. Sir James R.G. of Netherby (1792–1861) eldest son of Sir James, the first Baronet of Netherby Hall in Cumberland. He served as 1st Lord of the Admiralty. He was M.P. for several different parts of England, including Carlisle 1826–29 and East Cumberland 1830–37. He switched from being a Whig to a Tory in 1835. In 1838 he proposed a motion in the House of Commons to disqualify Hawick from being a polling station for future elections after the Radicals had been harassing Tory supporters at elections. The motion was defeated by only 22 votes. He was present at the banquet held at Branxholme in 1839 in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch. James (1838–97) son of coal-agent William and Janet Turnbull. He was a frame-worker in Hawick. However, he also started his own small hosiery manufacturers 'James Graham & Son' (according to his obituary). In 1866 he married Ann Little, daughter of James Kennedy. Their children included: Elizabeth Patterson (b.1866); William (b.1868); James Kennedy (b.1870); Janet (b.1871); Walter Warwick (b.1872); and John (b.1874). James (19th C.) farmer at Braidlie on the Hermitage Water. He is recorded there in 1868. He won cattle prizes in agricultural shows. His daughter Ann Twentyman married Dr. David Somerville Doughty in 1891. He was probably the 'Graham of Broadlee' listed among local 'Hard-riding Dick's' in H.H. Dixon's 'Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)' (1865). James E. 'Jimmie' Cornet in 1933, worked as a dyer. He assisted Bill Brydon as Left-Hand Man again after WWII. Jane 'Jean' (b.c.1785) grocer on Brougham Place in 1841 and the Round Close in 1851. Her children included: John (b.1807/8), a frameworker, born in Hawick; Thomas (b.c.1815), a watchmaker, born in England; and Elizabeth (b.1816/7), also born in England. She could be the Jean listed as a grocer on Silver Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. It is unclear who her husband was. Jean Cunninghame (??–) Lady Polwarth, who wrote 'Sailor's daughter: 1928–1946' (1993). Sir John of Abercorn (d.c.1337) said to have been granted the Soulis family lands in Liddesdale around the time of Robert the Bruce. He had a son, also Sir John, who died without issue. His heiress (perhaps Mary, Margaret or Elizabeth) may have married Sir William Douglas, the Knight of Liddesdale, to whom Liddesdale passed. However, this is all unclear. John (15th/16th C.) probably from Liddesdale. In 1497 he was one of the witnesses for a document dealing with the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He could be he John, brother of Matthew who was listed in the Exchequer Rolls among men of the area around Hawick who were fined in 1501. That John was brother of Matthew in Howpasley, who was surety for himself at the Justice-aire in 1502 and was fined for non-appearance. John (16th C.) witness in 1550 to a lease granted by the curators of the young James Cranston to his mother Janet Beaton, who was wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as 'Johnne the Grahame'. Probably the same John witnessed a bond in 1548 when some Elliots had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) son of Rob. In 1594/5 he was offered as a pledge for William of Larriston, but was deemed to 'not worth the sum'. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Whithaugh Mill in 1642 he is on a long list of Border 'notorious criminalls, thieves and ressetters of thift' who were to be captured and tried. John of Claverhouse (1648–89) soldier, from a family who were staunchly loyal to the throne. He was 'Bonnie Dundee' to those who considered him a hero and 'Bluidy Clavers' to his detractors; his reputation has certainly been coloured by propaganda. The song 'Bonnie Dundee' was popularised by Sir Walter Scott. He served in France and Holland, returning to Scotland in 1677, where he rose through the ranks, eventually becoming a member of the Privy Council. He was employed by Charles II to enforce Episcopacy upon Scotland, and to persecute the Covenanters, being given special powers as head of a military commission to seek out conventicles. One of the first such expeditions was to Galashiels in 1679, where a field meeting was held by Thomas Wilkie perhaps (although there are several men of similar name) deposed minister of Lilliesleaf. In 1681 he passed through Hawick, Selkirk, Buccleuch, Craik and Wolfcleuch-head with his dragoons, in search of conventicles.

George Deans refused to take him to Galashiels, defying the Bailies. His troop mustered in Hawick in 1685 and he wrote a letter from Thorlieshope in the same year. Later he was made Viscount Dundee and became a Jacobite supporter, and raised the standard of James in the north. He married Jean Cochrane, from a Presbyterian family. He was killed at the Battle of Killiecrankie. John (17th C.) servant in Newton, probably the one in Bedrule. He was recorded there in 1684 on a list of Covenanter fugitives, among men from the Southdean area. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, son of merchant Walter. He is probably the John born to Walter and Janet Briggs in 1688. He was among the group of young men who were fined in 1706 for being involved in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year, including carrying their own flag and defying the Bailies. He and James Scott ('of Westport') were briefly imprisoned and then fined, with his father Walter, as well as Francis Elliot, acting as their cautioners. In 1709 he was recorded as a merchant when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Porteous. Also in 1709 he married Helen Culbertson 'in Saltpreston'. Their children included Helen (b.1711). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. In 1704 he was witness to a baptism for Robert Tudhope, who also lived at Raesknowe. He was there in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick's Common in 1767. He could be the same John as the later tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was recorded as a merchant in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat. In 1720 after not appearing on 3 occasions at Hawick Kirk for some sin, he was threatened with excommunication. Eventually he 'satisfied in sackcloth' 11 times before he was 'received into the society of the kirk as a lively member thereof'. It is possible he is the son of merchant Walter, who was part of the rebel party at the Common Riding of 1706. He may be the John who, along with Bailie Walter, witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1729 for merchant Walter Tudhope and Janet (perhaps his sister). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He is probably the John who in 1725 witnessed a baptism for William Riddell. He married Margaret Helm in 1724; she was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Christian (b.1725); and David (b.1728). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by John Scott in Over Southfield and Andrew Turnbull in Drydenburn; on the same day he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull. He may be the John who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1759. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Philhopeshiel in 1774 and Broadlee in 1785 and 1793. He may be son of the Thomas recorded at Philhope a generation or so earlier. He married Jane Gray in Roberton in 1773 and their children included: Thomas (b.1774), perhaps the man recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1794; Janet (b.1783); John (b.1785); and an unnamed child (b.1793). John (1747/8–1820) schoolmaster in Eskdalemuir. He married Elizabeth Turner, whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1804. They are buried at Watcarrick. John (18th/19th C.) brewer of Hawick who was one of the first members of the Curling Club (so recorded in 1812). He may have been related to (or feasibly the same as) the later proprietor of the Holland House. John (b.c.1770) inn-keeper and spirit dealer at Dove-mount. He is thus recorded in 1841, when he was living with Anne (probably his daughter) and another Anne (probably his grand-daughter). His inn was one of the earliest buildings in the Dove-mount area. Perhaps the same John was a merchant in Hawick on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Braidlee in Castleton Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. John (b.1785/6) from Langholm, he was a clockmaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was listed at about 17 High Street, and in 1851 and 1861 was at No. 29. In 1842 he was in jail in Dumfries. He was listed as a clockmaker on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory; note that there was also a separate 'Jonathan' who was a clockmaker in Hawick at the same time. His wife was Margaret. He had grand-daughters Margaret Taggart and Margaret Bell. He may be the 'Mr. Graham, clockmaker', who donated coins to the Museum in 1857. John (b.1791/2) farmer at Hollows Mill near Canonbie. He married Elizabeth Dickson. They had 4 sons and 4 daughters: Mary (b.1827), who married Walter Armstrong, draper in Hawick; Robert (b.1828); Sybella Rome (b.1828, twin of Robert); Helen (b.1830); Margaret (b.1831); Simon Dickson (b.1833); George Rome (b.1835); and John (b.1838). His sons Simon and John became drapers in Hawick (with George being a draper's assistant there), establishing Wood, Graham & Co., at the Tower Knowe in the 1850s, and then forming S. & J. Graham, silk merchants, in London in 1860 or 1861. John (b.1792/3) from England, he was a grocer and meal-dealer in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was at about 46 North Hermitage Street, and he was recorded on a directory of 1852. He may be the same John who ran a weekly cart to Brampton and another to Hawick (returning from the Bull & Butcher in Hawick on Thursdays). His wife was Jane and their children included Richard and Jane. John (b.1831) proprietor of 'Graham's Hotel' at 6 Back Row from 1869. He was son of coal agent William and Janet Turnbull. The family were at 8 Back Row in 1871 and 1881. In 1852 he married Helen Riddle (b.1831). Their children included: Isabella Richardson Riddle (b.1852); William Turnbull Riddle (b.1853), who married Margaret Govenlock; John (b.1855), who moved to Dublin as a coach painter; George Turnbull (b.1857), who died young; James Melrose (b.1868); Walter (1860–64); Thomas (b.1862), who married Isabella Haldane and joined the Black Watch; Martin (b.1864); Helen (or 'Nellie', b.1865), married John Murray; Agnes (b.1867), who died young; Walter (again, b.1868), who emigrated to America; George Turnbull (b.1869), also emigrated to America; Mary Christie (b.1872); Agnes Martin (b.1873); and Jessie Isabella (b.1875). John (b.c.1835) from Middlebie, he was a road contractor at Upper Glendivan in Ewes Parish in 1861. In 1857 he married Elizabeth (1832–1906), daughter of Robert McVittie, road contractor at Fiddleton. Their children included: James (b.1857); Robert (b.1859); Jane (b.1860); Michael (b.1862); John (b.1864); Elizabeth First (b.1866); Mary Scott (b.1868); Elizabeth Little (b.1870), who married James Hislop; Helen (b.1872); Janet (b.1874); and Barbara (b.1876). Several of his children were born in Teviothead Parish. John (b.1837/8) youngest son of John, farmer at Hollows Mill near Canonbie. The family had been farmers and millers on the Esk and Liddel since the time of Mary Queen of Scots. He probably moved to Hawick to apprentice as a draper, and in about 1860/1 with his brother John he founded S. & J. Graham, silk merchants of London. After 1875 (the Collie Failure) he became traveller on the Continent for Wilsons & Glennys. Retiring in 1892, he lived at Huntingstile, Grasmere, and then in France, where he died at Mentone. He married Jane Murray Wilson, daughter of Hawick Provost George Wilson and his brother Simon married his wife's cousin, Annie, daughter of John G. Wilson of Ladylaw. Their children were: Walter (b.1868); Elizabeth Richardson Dickson (b.1870); Katherine Glenly (b.1871);

Madge (b.1875); Michael George (b.1879); and Jean (d.1936), who married artist Frank Bramley. John Hart (19th/20th C.) undertaker in Hawick. He was partner in the firm J. & A. Graham, which also hired out cars and charbancs, based at 20 Drumlanrig Square. The firm was dissolved when he retired in 1914, with Adam continuing. John 'Jock the Dog' (??–) larger than life Hawick man, known for tales of his huge appetite. He has worked in the mills. Jonathan (b.1802/3) from Langholm, he was a master watch and clockmaker at about 32 High Street. Note that there was another clockmaker called 'John' in Hawick at the same time. They are both listed in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Jane and their children included Thomas and Jane. Joseph (b.c.1790) tailor living at Ryeleahead, at the southern end of Castleton Parish, in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included John, Robert, Ann and Jane. Mandy (??–) one of two women who attempted to join Ride-outs in 1996. Matthew (15th/16th C.) tenant in Howpasley. His brother John was recorded at the Justice-aire in 1502, when he was fined for non-appearance. Probably the same John was listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined, with his brother John's name appearing after his. Matthew (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502; he was stated to have once been in Branhholme and now in Hislop, was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. It seems unlikely that he was the same man as Matthew in Howpasley (whose brother was recorded at the Justice-aire shortly after him). Matthew (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Nelly Oliver and they had a son Matthew (b.1783). He may be the Matthew who was a subscriber to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). Nicholas (13th/14th C.) petitioned Edward I in 1304 for return of his lands of 'Halsyngton' (probably Hassendean). These had belonged to Earl Patrick and leased to Sir William de Denum for a term. Also in 1304 there was a writ from Edward I to the Sheriff of Edinburgh to deliver to him the fees from the Barony of Dalkeith, which he had held before the war in Scotland. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 when he is recorded with his brother 'Little Andro', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Paid but not listed in Hauick Toun'. He was probably from the west side. Robert of Ewesdale (15th C.) recorded in 1456 when his former hereditably held lands of Ewesdale were granted by King James II to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. In another charter of 1456 he was 'of Auldmontrose' and 'uncle by the father's side' of George Douglas, Earl of Angus; his lands of Ewesdale were swapped with the Earl's lands of 'Strathechty' in Forfarshire). In 1457 the Earl of Angus granted lands of 'Widdyrryshalch' to his uncle Robert Graham of Auld Montrose, who was probably also him. Robert (15th C.) witness to a charter of 1489, signed at the monastery of Paisley. Robert (17th C.) listed among the 'Cottars in Hassanden' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Robertson for James Thomson in 1680 and for both Robert Scott and Thomas Graham in 1681. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Raesknowe. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Craw in Branhholme Town. He may be the Robert, son of David, baptised in 1675. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Lees in 1729 and Brieryyards in 1737. He witnessed a baptism in 1735 for James Dryden, resident of Clarilaw and another in 1744 for George in Less (probably a close relative). In 1726 he married Jean Henderson, the marriage being proclaimed in Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included William (b.1727), Agnes (b.1729), Robert (b.1737) and Alison (b.1743). The witnesses in 1729 were John Scott and John Dryden and in 1737 were George (probably related) and John Lockie. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen (or 'Nelly') Simpson and their children included Margaret (b.1779) and Robert (b.1780). Robert (b.1801/2) joiner on the Cross Wynd. In 1841 he was living there, but had moved to 1 High Street by 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included John, Thomas, Isabella, Margaret, William, Alexander and Janet. Robert (b.1814/5) carter living at 69 High Street in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jean (who married William McDougall), Elizabeth, Thomas, John Robert, George and James. Robert M. (b.1880) born in Hawick, he moved to Edinburgh in about 1898, where he was a tailor. An accident in his youth prevented him from achieving his sporting ambitions, although he remained an enthusiastic supporter of sports, particularly rugby. Simon 'Sim' (16th C.) recorded as 'Sym of Logane' in 1590 when part of a complaint against several Armstrongs and others by Alexander Jardine of Applegirth. Others listed include Kinmont Willie and Sandy's Ringan Armstrong. Simon Dickson (b.1833) from Canonbie, son of farmer John and Elizabeth Dickson. He moved to Hawick to become an apprentice with draper Walter Armstrong at the Tower Knowe. Walter was his brother-in-law, having married Mary Graham in Hawick. Along with William Wood he formed the drapers firm Wood, Graham & Co., Tower Knowe. Then in 1860/1 he and his brother John founded S. & J. Graham, silk merchants, London. He married Annie, daughter of John G. Wilson of Ladylaw. She was a cousin of his brother John's wife, Jane Murray Wilson. His caricature appears in the book 'Noctes Hawickianæ'. Thomas (15th C.) witness to a charter signed at 'Wester Torban' in 1450, relating to lands in the Edinburgh area. Perhaps the same Thomas was a Bailie of Linlithgow in a charter of 1487. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Philhopesiel in 1743 and Philhope in 1762. He married Elspeth Reid in 1742. his children, baptised in Robertson, included Janet (b.1743), Thomas (b.1751), Andrew (b.1758) and Elspeth (b.1762). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Isabel Little and their children included: John (b.1771); Elizabeth (b.1773); Thomas (b.1780); and Robert (b.1783). His earlier children were baptised in Langholm, but in 1783 he was at Fiddleton Bar. The witnesses in 1783 were Gavin Elliot and Charles Aitchison. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Knox and their children included Margaret (b.1781). The witnesses were Thomas Knox and Robert Graham, who were probably related to him and his wife. He could be the Thomas, son of Thomas, baptised in Robertson Parish in 1751. He could be the Thomas recorded at Branhholme on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Broadlee in Robertson Parish on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas, son of John, who was baptised in 1774. Thomas (b.1779/80) from Canonbie, he was farmer at Harden. He was recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 was there farming 500 acres and employing 7 people. He married Margaret Scott in 1829. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Borthwick Mains. He was recorded as tenant there on the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had a local connection. Thomas (b.1814/5) born in Maryport, England, son of John and Mary. He was a watchmaker on Brougham Place and then at 16 High Street. He was listed as a clockmaker and engraver on Buccleuch Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he was living at Brougham Place with grocer Jane Graham, possibly his mother (if the name was wrong). He was at about 16 High Street in 1851 and appears on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Isabella Wilson in 1848 and they had a son John. He may be the 'Tammy Graham' mentioned in these lines – 'Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame' [HI]. A portrait of him exists. Thomas (1861/2–1935) son of John, he was proprietor of the Holland House, like his father. He served for 25 years in the Black Watch and was killed in a motorbike accident at Clarilaw. His wife was Isabella. His sons James Haldane (d.1918), John and Thomas all served in WWI in the Black Watch. Bailie Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant who was a Bailie in the 1690s, and also recorded as Bailie (or ex-Bailie) in 1701, 1702, 1703, 1706, 1708, 1709 and 1712. He appears to have served as some kind of treasurer in 1701, after already being a Bailie. He is probably the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and may be the Walter resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1695. He is probably the Bailie Graham who was charged by the Council to appear before the 'commissioners of unfree traders' to complain about the sum levied on Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1700 for carrier David Minto and for merchant William Elliot, in 1701 for fellow merchant and Bailie, George Martin, for others in 1702, for Bailie George Martin in 1706, for John Laidlaw (servant at Harwood) and Bailie George Martin in 1708 and for weaver William Hill in 1709. His 'servitrix' Isobel Beattie got married in 1709. He is probably the Walter who in 1712 (along with Walter Elliot) witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains and another for shoemaker Robert Elliot and the Bailie Walter who witnessed a baptism for carrier Gideon Amos in 1720. In 1706 his son John was among the young men fined for the disturbances at the Common Riding that year; he was there described as a merchant and ex-Bailie and acted as cautioner for the accused men. This John was probably the son of Walter and Janet Briggs born in Hawick in 1688, meaning that his wife would have been Janet Briggs. Perhaps the same Walter, merchant, is recorded as becoming a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1706, by right of his father Archibald, merchant, being a Burgess there. He was still on the Town Council in 1707 (when a fine was imposed on the 2 acting Bailies). He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. Probably the same Walter is recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. He may also be the Bailie Graham whose daughter Elizabeth married Thomas Huggan of Hawick in an 'irregular marriage' in Longtown. He is likely to be the Bailie Graham who was an elder of the Kirk, appointed in 1717 for collecting monies 'westward from the bridge to the foot of the play la', suggesting that he lived around this area; he was similarly appointed in 1722. In the 1718 survey of the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch he is stated to be owner of a small piece of land within the East Mains of Hawick, extending to 2 acres and 12 perches. A great falling out with Bailie Ruecastle (one of the sitting Magistrates) in 1718 had to be resolved by the intervention of the Session and the Minister; he was at that time a councillor, and is said to have accused Ruecastle of 'Sacridege, Thift' and other transgressions, the nature of which are unclear. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Wilkie and Janet Graham (probably his daughter) along with John (probably his son). He witnessed baptisms for weaver James Weens in 1730, for thatcher Gideon Scott in 1740 and for carrier George Richardson in 1741. He married Janet Bridges (or Briggs) and their children included John, Margaret (b.1692), Janet (b.1695), Archibald (b.1701), Jean (b.1702), Anna (b.1705) and Walter (b.1707). His wife's name is recorded in 1702 as 'Bessie'. The witnesses in 1695 were George Martin and John Turnbull, in 1702 were Bailie George Martin and innkeeper Francis Elliot, and in 1705 were Bailie George Martin and baker John Whillans. Janet, who married Walter Tudhope in Hawick in 1722, may have been his daughter. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1716. He probably married Margaret Lockie in Cavers in 1708. His children included Helen (b.1708), Margaret (b.1710), William (b.1712), James (b.1714) and Walter (b.1716). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Effledge. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Malie (b.1718) and Mary (b.1720). Dr. Walter (1762–1829) Hawick doctor of the early 1800s, born in Arthuret, Cumberland, son of Walter and Mary Johnson. He may have had a brother, Andrew, who was a doctor in Dalkeith. His premises were in Buccleuch Street. In about 1799 he was one of the local men contributing to support the war against France. His assistant Nichol Mather is listed in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. He was probably the Dr. Graham with whom Sir Andrew Smith served an apprenticeship. He was one of the doctors called in the trial for the murder case of 1814, resulting in Hawick's last hanging. He is recorded as Walter 'sen.' at Buccleuch Street on Pigot's 1825/6 directory and his house is marked on Wood's 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. A portrait of him exists. He married Margaret Scott in Westerkirk in 1787, and their children (born in Arthuret, Cumberland) were: Mary (b.1790); Walter (b.1792), who was also a doctor in Hawick; and James (d.1799), who died in Hawick. Dr. Walter (c.1792–1858) son of Walter and Margaret Scott, he was born in Arthuret, Cumberland, and became a doctor in Hawick, like his father. His premises were on Buccleuch Street, probably at No. 10. He is recorded as Walter 'jun. M.D.' on Pigot's 1825/6 directory, and his house is marked on Wood's 1824 map. In Pigot's 1837 directory he was a physician on Buccleuch Street. He gave evidence in 1844 regarding the poor laws in Scotland, describing how diseases could spread unchecked in the Town's poorest lodging houses, where itinerant workers stayed. In Slater's 1852 directory 'Graham & Thompson' are listed as physicians on Buccleuch Street; he must therefore have been in partnership with George William Thomson. In 1857 he donated copper coins to the Museum. Later in life he lived at Borthaugh. In 1831 in Kelso he married Alison Brown, who was from Eskdalemuir. Their children included: Walter (b.1832); Margaret Moffat (1834–63); Mary Elizabeth (b.1842), who married William Rodgie; and William Brown (b.1843). By 1861 his widow was living at Borthaugh along with her sisters Janet Brown and Margaret Scott, as well as 3 of their children. He died at Borthaugh. An obituary was written by Dr. John Douglas. William 'William of the Mote' (16th C.) prominent member of the family who lived at 'the Mote', otherwise known as Liddel Strength, on the English side near where the Liddel joins the Esk. He should not be confused with William Scott of the Mote in Hawick. He is 'William of the Mote' in a letter by Lord Scrope in 1601, accusing him of resetting some of those responsible for killing Sir John Carmichael. William 'Richie's Will' (16th C.) 2nd son of Richard of Netherby. He is mentioned by Lord Scrope in 1595/6, when Scott of Buccleuch was said to have been on a raid with him. In 1596 he complained about a raid on his lands by the Lairds of Edgerton and Bedrule, with 20 men stealing 24 horses and £100 of goods. In 1594/5 it is written that 'Hobbie of the Belsies turned 'man' to Richies Will' and was to be entered to trial by the Wardens. He was also said to have been among Englishmen who (along with several other Grahams) met with Scott of Buccleuch before the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He first married a daughter of Armstrong of Mangerton and secondly married a daughter of Robert Elliot, 15th of Redheugh. He had at least 9 sons. In 1605 'Ritchie's Hutchin' was found guilty of his son Thomas. Rev. William (d.aft. 1638) graduated from the University of St. Andrews in 1611. He is recorded as minister at Ewes Kirk from 1627. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1695. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Mervinslaw in 1705. His children probably included William (b.1704), Thomas (b.1705), William (b.1707), Agnes (b.1711) and Thomas (b.1713). William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Nichol in Wilton Parish in 1720. William (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He is recorded as a 'Day labourer' in 1746. He married Isobel Nichol and their children included: Margaret (b.1741); and Margaret (again, b.1746). The witnesses in 1741 were Mr. Alexander Lithgow and writer Andrew Haliburton and in 1746 were merchant Robert Oliver and John Telfer. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Euphan Redford and their children included: Ann (b.1754); and Janet (b.1758). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Borthwickshiels, recorded on the 1790–97 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Borthwickshiels in 1797. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He could be the 'Mr William Graham' from Roberton Parish who in Roberton in 1791 married Agnes Turnbull, from Minto Parish. Agnes (b.1792), baptised in Roberton, was probably their daughter. William (18th/19th C.) baker in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. William (18th C.) mason in Newcastleton. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in the parish of Castle-toun'. William (b.c.1770s) recorded as 'Hostler Cross Keys' in Hawick in the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. William (b.c.1770s) resident of Newton in wilton Parish, according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Rigfoot in Ewesdale. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. William (18th/19th C.) resident at 'Holstaine' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Grahams. William (18th/19th C.) labourer at Harden in Castleton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835, when he had just left for America. William (b.1795/6) from England, he was farmer at Lawston in southern Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was recorded as head of his household in 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was farming 500 acres and employing 8 labourers. His wife was Mary and their children included Mary, Thomas, Elizabeth, Robert, John, William, Christopher, James and Ann. William (b.c.1800) stocking weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on Mather's Close. His wife was Agnes and their children included James, Helen, Mary, Agnes and Janet. William (b.1809) born at Fairnleyhaugh (or Fairnileehaugh) near Yair in Selkirkshire, he was a coal agent in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the Howgate working as an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was living at 'Leafy House' (probably Ivy House) on Weensland Road and working as a mason's labourer. He was recorded as 'Carman' (i.e. coach-driver) in 1861, when he was living on Weensland Road. In 1829 in Stow he married Janet, daughter of Hawick shoemaker James Turnbull. Their children included: Margaret (b.1829), who married John Combe; John (b.1831), who was proprietor of 'Graham's Hotel' in Hawick; Agnes (or Ann, b.1835), who married Robert Halliday; James (b.1838), who married Ann Little Kennedy; Janet Turnbull (b.1841), who married baker William McCallum; and Helen (b.1844), who married Robert Jardine. He could be the William, son of John and Ann Dixon, born in Selkirkshire in 1803. Sgt. William (19th C.) veteran soldier who served in the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny. He probably lived in Hawick. He can be seen in an early photograph, in the uniform of the 4th Roxburghshire Volunteers. William (19th C.) married Joan (or Jean) Walker. Their children included: James (b.1843), baptised in Hawick Parish; and Jean (b.1846), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. William Turnbull Riddle (b.1853) eldest son of John and Helen Riddle. In 1875 he married Margaret Ruickbie Govenlock, descendant of James Ruickbie. Their son William Nichol was Cornet in 1902. The family lived at 14 Howegate. William Nichol (b.1881) Cornet in 1902 and one of the founder members of the Callants' Club. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and worked as a plumber. His father was William Turnbull Riddle and his mother was Margaret Ruickbie Govenlock, great-grand-daughter of poet James Ruickbie (also spelled 'Graeme' and formerly 'Ghram', 'Ghrame', 'Grahm', 'Grame', 'Grayme', etc.).

the Grahams (thu-grāmz, grā-umz) n. family with origins in Midlothian, with a cadet branch moving to Eskdale in the late 14th century and becoming a large clan in northern Cumbria. They were a powerful force in that area, holding at least 13 towers, until the early 17th century when they were targeted by the Earl of Cumberland and others in an attempt to pacify the Borders. They were a scourge of the English wardens, with a reputation for riding with the Scots when it suited them. 150 of the family were rounded up in about 1605 and mostly executed or deported to Ireland or to fight in the wars in Holland. The clan motto is 'Ne oublie' (forget not) and the crest shows a falcon killing a stork – 'For it's hey the Graems! and Ho the Graems! The gallant Graems are a' frien's to me; And if I had them a' here this nicht, Ane foot o' ground I never wad flee!' [T] (also spelled 'Graeme' and other variants).

Graham's Close (grā-umz-klōs) n. former name for a passageway near the foot of the Howegate. The name was used in the 18th century. Immediately below here is where a large hole opened up during the great flood of 1767.

Graham's Hotel (grā-umz-hō-tel) n. hostelry run by John Graham from 1869 at 6 Back Row. It was where the inaugural meeting of the Hawick Burns Club took place in 1878. In 1885 it was renamed Holland House.

Grahamslaw (grā-umz-law) n. area to the north-east of Eckford, the hill there containing 9 caves. The lands were owned by the family of Grahamslaw of that Ilk, with 'Johan de Grimmeslawe' signing the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and Christian 'Grymislaw' resigning the lands into the hands of the King in 1429. The Barony was long held by the Crichtons of that Ilk. The lands were granted by William Crichton of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1436/7, with a 'precept' in 1439, and are described as '8 husband-lands' in 1528/9 when still owned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. A separate '6 husband lands' called 'Portaris Landis' or 'Porterlandis' are also mentioned as a Scott possession in 1517, 1553/4, 1574, 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1454 an 'instrument' dealing with 'Burrell lands' in Eckford (witnessed in John Waugh's tenement in Hawick) describes how Robert 'of Grimslaw' was the former laird. A precept of sasine in 1500 grants the lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme. The former estate there contains a beehive-shaped dovecote (the origin is probably 'Grim's hill', combining the Old English 'hlaw' with Old Norse 'Grimr', where this was a nickname for Odin, perhaps relating to the caves; the name appears as 'Grymislaw' in 1429, 'Grymyslaw' in 1500, 'Grimmislaw' and 'Grymmislaw' in 1574 and 'Greameslaw' in 1663).

Grahamslaw (grā-umz-, grimz-law) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) had sasine for the lands of Newton in Bedrule Parish in 1504, with his name given as 'Ade Grenislaw'. Probably the same Adam was a member of the panel for deciding on the inherticance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509; his surname is given there as 'Grymislaw'. He may have been father of the later Adam of Newton. It is possible he is the Adam, brother of Thomas (heir of John of Newton) who came in the King's will in 1494/5 for the theft of 60 sheep from Stouslie. He was already deceased in 1530/1 when his widow Agnes Davidson and heir Elizabeth received money from their cousin Ralph Davidson for a third of 'Chames' within the Lordship of Minto. James was granted the non-entry of 'Chames' in 1531, by William Turnbull of Minto. Adam of Newton (16th C.) probably the Adam, son of the Laird of Little Newton, who had remission for crimes in 1502. This was for the theft of a cow from Craigend, sheep and geese from Rutherford of Longnewton, geese from John Gledstains, pigs from Spittal, sheaves of barley from George Rutherford, grain from Menslaws and for common theft before his previous 1488 remission. He was one of the Border Lairds who submitted to James V in 1530 to keep better order. He resigned his lands of Newton (in Bedrule Parish) to the King in 1531, then gained a crown charter to the lands, along with his wife in the same year. He married Janet Rutherford and was succeeded by his son John. He is also mentioned in a sasine of 1585 (by which time he was deceased). Andrew (15th/16th C.) probably related to Thomas, the 2 being named in a case involving David Oliver 'in Stryndis' in 1502. Oliver was charged with resetting them, as well as assisting them in raiding farms. His surname is given as 'grymislaw'. Christian of that Ilk (14th/15th C.) resigned the lands of Grahamslaw in a letter of 1429, as recorded in an 'instrument of transumpt' requested by Stephen Scott of Castlelaw in 1445. Her name is written 'Cristiane de Grimislaw'. George (16th C.) brother of Harry and nephew of the Moscrops of Jedburgh. In a court case in 1585/6 it was stated that the Bailies of Jedburgh blamed the murder of him and his brother on Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and his associates. Harry (16th C.) brother of George. He and his brother were murdered some time before 1585/6 by associates of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Helen (16th/17th C.) Lady Newton, daughter of John of Newton. Her father sold the family lands to Robert Ker in 1586 and she married him around the same time. Her 6 brothers were killed by a group of Turnbells before 1586, the trial being in 1604. She had a daughter who married John Scott of Huntly. She owed her son-in-law 'for his tochergood' and eventually arranged to pay him in the form of an 'assignation' of 1000 merks owed to her by Walter Turnbull of Rawflat. However, she then arranged to enter his house on the pretext of visiting her daughter, and removed the papers while the residents were at church, taking off on horseback. John Scott caught up with her at Scott of Synton's house, where she denied that she had the paper and later tore it up and 'kaist the revin assignatioun unto the said complener with such disgracefull and vickyiid speicheis as wes moist unseameing in the persone of a moder to so kynd and loveing a sone'. She was let off with a rebuke by the Privy Council. She was also recorded (as 'Helen Granislaw') in a decree of rebellion with William Douglas in 1604. Henry 'Harry' of Little Newton (d.bef. 1606) recorded in 1606 when his sons William and George were held by the Hawick Balies for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Hallrule. They were then transferred to Edinburgh Tolbooth at the direction of the Lords of the Privy Council, and there was a complaint that the family of the murdered man wanted to ruin them and keep them in prison forever, rather than prosecute them. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 'Camys' (probably Minto Kames) in 1502 when Archibald Douglas in Effledge had remission for stealing barley from him. Additionally both Archibald and William Douglas in Effledge had remission for stealing 48 sheep from him. John was also recorded in 'Camys' in 1502 and surely related, as was probably the later James of the same place. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1531 when he was granted the non-entry of the 10 merkland of 'Chames' by William Turnbull of Minto and his son William. These are the same lands that Adam formerly held (with his widow Agnes Davidson recorded receiving money for the lands in 1530/1); it seems like that Adam was therefore a close relation. John (14th C.) recorded in 1361 on a panel of inquest in Roxburgh, relating to Makerstoun. John of Newton (15th/16th C.) witness to the 'retour' for the Kers in the lands of Borthwickshiels in 1471. He was also a member of the panel for Walter Scott inheriting Branhholme and Buccleuch in 1492. In 1493 he had remission for being with Alexander, former Duke of Albany. In 1494/5 Thomas, brother of Lord Cranston, had remission for the (unspecified) crime done to him at Denholm. He is recorded in 1498 along with Adam, when he had remission for communing with 'the tratouris if Levin, Ruthirfurdis, and Turnebullis'. In 1500 he was one of the men selected to value the lands of Whitheope. In 1501 he was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to the administration of some fines in Roxburghshire. He may be the 'Johannem Grimyslaw' who in 1482 was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. His son Thomas was listed in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. John (15th/16th C.) tenant at 'the Place of Camys', probably Minto Kames. In 1502 Peter Turnbull in Bonchester had remission for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows and 5 horses from his farm, with the help of some rebel Turnbolls. James was also recorded in 'Camys' in 1502 and surely related. John of Newton (16th/17th C.) son and heir of Adam. He could be the John who had a sasine for Newton in 1541/2. He could be the 'Johnne Grymislaw' who signed the bond to act against Borders thieves in 1571/2. He also swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with William Ker of Caverton as his surety. In 1586 he sold Newton to Robert Kerr of Ancrum (later Newton), who married his daughter Helen. He is probably the 'Johnne Grimsalaw of Litill Newtoun' who was among the men accused of helping the English raid lands belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme in 1548.

He is probably the same 'Johnne Grameslaw of Lytill Newtoun' whose 6 sons William, James, Robert, John, Andrew and Thomas were said to have been killed by a group of Turnbolls from Stanedge, Barnhills and Minto. In 1589 John Turnbull of Minto and Walter Turnbull of Bedrule were cited for resetting a group of Turnbolls and Douglasses who were in 1586 denounced as rebels for the murders of 'Johnne Grymmislaw, younger of Newtoun, Williame, James, Andro, Robter and Thomas Grymmislawis, brothers and sons of Johnne Grymmisla of Newtoun'; the trial for restitution did not take place until 1604. John (d.c.1586) son and heir of John of Newton. Along with his brothers and uncles William, James, Andrew, Robert and Thomas, all servants of Thomas Kerr of Crailinghall, he were killed by a group of Turnbolls, Douglasses and Davidsons from the Minto area. Specifically the men declared rebels in 1586 for the murders were William Douglas (son of William of Cavers), James Douglas (son of John of Whitriggs), Hector Turnbull in Barnhills and his brother George, William Douglas (son of the Laird of Earlside), Robert Turnbull (son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule), Robert Turnbull ('tutor of Barnhills) and his brothers Hector and Gavin, plus 'certain other rebels'. In 1610 a commission was appointed by the Privy Council to apprehend the accused, since they had still not found caution for the crimes. His sister, Helen Grahamslaw, Lady Newton (who had married Robert Kerr), was mentioned as one of the pursuers in the case, as well as Robert Kerr of Newton 'as sister's son'. Robert (14th/15th C.) laird of the 'Burrell lands' in Eckford Parish, as described in a document of 1454 signed in John Waugh's tenement in Hawick. He was succeeded by his only daughter Helen, who married Simon Burrell and was succeeded by their only daughter Janet, whose John Burrell resigned the lands in 1448. He may be the 'Roberto grynlaw' listed in a document for lands in Morebattle in 1445. Thomas of Newton (15th C.) member of the 1464/5 panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas and also the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. He was thus a prominent Roxburghshire landowner of the time and is listed as 'Thomas Grymislaw of Newtoun'. Thomas (15th C.) son and heir of John of Newton. In 1492/3 he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. He is probably the Thomas of Newton, 'Junior', who was surety for William Falsyde in Ancrum at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 he was ‘Junior dominus de newtoun’ when he and his brother Adam came in the King’s will for stealing 60 sheep from Walter Scott of Howpasley and Walter Turnbull of Stouslie, from the lands of Stouslie; these sheep appeared to belong to the King. His goods were escheated and his sureties were John Rutherford of Edgerston and Ralph Ker. Thomas (15th/16th C.) accomplice of David Oliver ‘in Stryndis’ (probably Strange in Rulewater), recorded in a remission Oliver had in 1502. Along with Andrew he was involved in ‘theftuous deeds’ and was already ‘at the horn’. Perhaps this same Thomas was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. He was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him and the Rutherfords, as well as when John Fawlaw in Littledean had remission for associating with him and William Rutherford in Maxton was convicted of associating with him. He was also listed along with Gilbert Rutherford and Thomas Scott as rebels who Robert Rutherford had remission for associating with. He may be the same man as the son of John of Newton. Walter (17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster at Tushielaw in a deed of 1629. William (13th/14th C.) juror in Roxburgh for an English inquisition in 1335/6 regarding expenses at Jedburgh Castle. His designation was given as ‘de Grymeslawe’. William (15th C.) witness to the sasine for the Kers in the lands of Borthwickshiels and Harden Wood in 1471. In 1488/9 he witnessed an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. Probably the same William had remission (along with Simon Glendinning) in 1493 for common theft happening before the time of his current remission. He is recorded as being ‘at the kirk of Hassindene’ in 1493 when he had remission for helping some men of Tynedale to steal cattle, sheep, horses and goods from Minto; Walter Scott of Howpasley served as surety for him. In 1494 he was ‘William Grymyslaw’ when he was a witness for the transfer of lands in the Barony of Hassendean (formerly spelled ‘Greymyslaw’, ‘Grimsley’, ‘Grimyslaw’, ‘Grinyslaw’, ‘Grymislaw’, ‘Grymmislaw’, ‘Grymmislaw’, ‘Grymmislawis’, ‘Grymmyslaw’, ‘Grymyslaw’, etc.).

grain (grān) v., arch. to groan – ‘I’ll sigh, an’ whinge, an’ cant, an’ grane, An’ mak the godly unco fain’ [JR], ‘... Young first-time communicants, A’ greenin’, grainin’, to be saunts’ [JoHa], ‘The muse is like to spleet her jaws, Wi’ gauntin’, grain (grān) v., arch. a branch of a stream or valley – ‘The clouds sail doon Teviotdale Owre every hope and grain, The road and river wanly glint And the hills are derk wi’ rain’ [DH] (used as a suffix in some local place names, e.g. ‘Alliegrain’, ‘Blackgrain’, ‘Haregrain’, ‘Rashiegrain’, and in the name of several small streams in the upper Teviot, Borthwick and Liddel valleys, e.g. Black Grain, Caulker Grain, Chapel Grain, Corse Grain, Cow Grain, Duncan’s Grain, East Grain, Ely Grain, Fauch Grain, Hare Grain, Lang Grain, Linhope Grain, Master Grain, Mid Grain, Ralph-tree Grain, Rashie Grain, Rough Grain, Saughtree Grain, Stock Grain and Todhunter Grain; the word came from Old Norse through Middle English).

I’d sit and mourn ower bygone joys wi’ mony a weary grane’ [JCG], ‘... They fill him fou o’ hollow granes T’ express his dismal pleasures’ [WP] (also spelled ‘grane’, ‘grean’, etc.).

grain (grān) n., arch. small quantity, tiny amount, bit, speck – ‘A didna ken a grain o odds o’d for aa A hedna seen’t threh kens-whan’ [ECS].

grainary (grān-u-ree) n., arch. a granary – ‘It wis in what we ca’d the grainary the part o the steedin where they kept the grain. The sheaves wis built intae round stacks outside and thatched, an the grainary wis empty’ [TH].

Grainfit (grān-fi) n. Grainfoot, former farmstead on the Tinnis Burn in Castleton Parish. Archibald Beattie was there in the 1770s. Walter Armstrong lived there in the late 1700s and Adam Telfer was there in 1797. On Stobie’s 1770 map it is marked to the east of Reidmoss. It may have been at the foot of Todhunter Grain.

Grain Hill (grān-hil) n. hill in the north part of Ashkirk Parish, on the right-hand side of the Woll Rig road, with Wollrig Grain passing nearby. The farm of ‘Greenshill’ recorded in 1797 in Ashkirk Parish was probably near there.

grainin (grān-in) adj., arch. groaning, grumbling, complaining – ‘At the grey grainin’ ranks o’ poles that leaned ...’ [DH].

graip (grāp) n., arch. an iron-pronged fork used for gardening or farming – ‘We Wullie, the cowherd, sae hardy and crouse, He raise, seiz’d a graip, and syne made for the house’ [JoHa], ‘... as he just went out with graip and creel to his father’s tata field ...’ [RM], ‘Wull ee gie’z a len o eer graip (farm or garden pronged-fork)’ [ECS].

gralloch (gra-loch) v., poet. to disembowel – ‘... And the soreichspurtled slaisterbags Wad gralloch my guts!’ [DH].

gramarie (graw-ma-ree) n., poet. witchcraft, magic – ‘Until he did his ain men see, With witches’ hazel in each steel cap, In scorn of Soulis’ gramarye; Then shoulder-high for glee he lap’ [JL], ‘Dark was the vaulted room of gramarye, To which the wizard led the gallant knight’ [SWS] (there are spelling variants).

gramercy (graw-mer-see) interj., poet. thanks – ‘Now Dickie has feld fair Johnie Armstrong, Fala, &c. The prettiest man in the south countrie. Gramercy, then can Dickie say, I had but twa horse thou has made me three. Fala, &c.’ [CPM] (from the French).

the Grammar Schuil (thu-graw-mur-skil) n. Hawick Grammar School, founded in 1710, following a meeting of the Parish Heritors organised by Rev. Alexander Orrock, and bolstered through the Orrock Bequest of 1711 (hence the confusion about the date of its foundation). There was probably a school from about the time of the Reformation, but it may not have had a continuous existence. Andrew Sword was recorded as schoolmaster in c.1592 and in 1616, William Hay in 1606 and Adam Scott in 1622. In the Parish valuation of 1627 it is stated that there ‘is no provision for ane schole, bot thair is verie great necessitie for a schole’. James Carmure was recorded as schoolmaster in 1631. However, it is unclear how well supported education was in the town through the rest of the 17th century and before there had long been calls to establish such a school. The Burgesses were taxed in 1710 (probably for the first time), to support this school and its master. It existed alongside the Parish School (often called the English School), which was for elementary education, with lessons in English. The Grammar School was a secondary school for the wealthier classes, which to begin with would have charged fees and had lessons in Latin. The first schoolmaster was James Innes. It is unclear where the school started, since the land at Orrock Place was obtained (from Andrew Rodger) only about 1724. At that time it contained 2 ruinous houses, plus sheds and a yard. The school seems to have been rebuilt from these buildings soon after 1724. But a new building was completed on the site in 1732, constructed by John Turnbull, mason, and Walter Scott, wright. This building was damaged in the 1767 flood. The school used the Town Hall as overflow from 1821, and the schoolhouse in Orrock Place was abandoned in some years as being too small. By 1825 the school was run by a Rector with 2 assistants. The school was rebuilt in 1825–26, designed by Smith of Darnick, when it was merged (actually a joint master was appointed in 1824) with the Parish School to become the United Schools. In 1839 it was written that the subjects taught were reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, mathematics, Latin, Greek and French. A new room was added to the school in 1846, but then it still only contained 4 rooms. It was then in use until Buccleuch School (now Hawick High School) was built in 1860. The old building became the property of the Duke of Buccleuch, but was given to the Archæological Society as a Museum from 1862–86. Thereafter it was sold as a joiners workshop (Walter Scott & Son), and then became Chisholme Antiques, etc. It still exists beside the old Orrock Church, with high-silled windows suggesting its earlier function. The head boy of the school used to carry its flag during the Common Riding, the practice ending in 1777; the 1744 flag is preserved in the Museum.

grampus (grawn-pis) n., arch. an ignoramus, fool (noted by J. Jamieson).

grand (gawnd) adj. great, fine, splendid – ‘that’s a grand hat ee’ve on’, ‘...For we’re grand at tellin’ stories at our ain fireside’ [JJ], ‘Now there’s a new coat feenished! Is it no grand?’ [JEDM], ‘...a grocer body gaun eis yirrints, gien iz the weel-wurn hail: ‘It’s a grand-day!’ [ECS], ‘...A gaed an got masel cleaned an spruisht wui a grand swaibble o waeter’ [ECS], ‘There was’na graun new blouses every other Setturday, an’ white gloves for whust pairties’ [HEX1919], ‘...eis no only a grand singer but a nice laddie tae’ [MB], ‘The fremmit freends ye neebor there Are neebor-like and grand’ [WL].

grand-dowter (gawnd-dow-tur) n. a granddaughter – ‘Ma great-grandfither’s sister was mairried ti Robbie Burns’s granddowter’s husband’s brother which makes mei a tremendous close relation ti oor National Bard’ [IWL].

grander (gawn-dur) adj. finer, more splendid – ‘Though there may be grander toons Still a Teri hert aye turns Tae the Teviot and the bonnie Border burns’ [RMC].

grandest (gawn-dist) adj. greatest, finest – ‘that’s the grandest hing’, ‘Man it’s the grandest place aw’ve ever seen And no a bit like Hawick’ [AY], ‘And Jess McVeetie offered, up the Wynd, The grandest sticky taffee in the toun’ [WL], ‘For in yon Bridge Street queue A

grandfither (gawnd-fith-ur) n. grandfather – ‘Gie me a guid-gaun grandfaither clock’ [DH], ‘...Pop’s grandfither George and his brother Billy were Cornets’ [IWL], ‘Well, ma fither an ma grandfither were baith in it, it seemed a natural progression’ [IA] (also written ‘grandfaither’).

the Grand Mairch (thu-gawnd-mārch) n. traditional march at the Common Riding Ball, led off by the Cornet and his Lass.

Grange (grānj) n. area just to the west of Chesters, south-east of Ancrum. ‘Chesters’ Grange’ and ‘Grange Banks’ are shown on today’s Ordnance Survey maps. Perhaps the lands were formerly separated into east and west; if so Adam Thomson was recorded at the east part in 1494/5. Lands there valued at about £1460 were owned by Rev. William Bennet in 1643, and another part owned by Gavin Elliot, valued at £260. In 1678 part was owned by William Elliot of Grange, valued at about £350. Mr. Hair paid tax for 13 windows there in 1753. The farm there was developed around 1790 by Thomas Ogilvie, who had purchased Chesters a few years before. Richard Hair was owner in 1788 and Henry Hair is recorded as farmer there in 1797. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls listed ‘Part of the Lands of Grange, formerly possessed by John Elliot’, valued at £108 (‘Gronge’/‘Grange’ are marked on Baleu’s 1654 map).

Grange (grānj) n. former name for lands in Ringwoodfield, somewhere near Northhouse or Teviothead. Around 1557 Simon Scott of ‘Fernili’ and Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry rented these lands, along with Bowanhill, from the monks of Melrose. The name is recorded as ‘Grangia alias Stanyhetoun’ and the value was £4. In 1564 it was recorded simply as ‘Grange’. It is possible that this was a grange of the Abbey, located perhaps near Staney Hill. This could be the Grange in Castleton Parish listed in 1797 when John Turnbull was there.

Grange (grānj) n. Robert (13th/14th C.) referred to as ‘de la Graunge’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His lands could have been the Grange near Ancrum, or possibly the one at Abbotrule. He was on a jury an inquest for the inheritance of Wilton and other lands of William de Chartres in 1303/4.

house. The lands transferred to Southdean Parish and later to Hobkirk Parish. Thomas Rutherford was recorded there in 1494/5. It was among the lands purchased by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh in 1569 and later passed to the Kers. 'Dand' Rutherford of Grange was recorded in 1581/2. The lands (with mill) were recorded as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. In 1629 Walter Scott, son of William, who was son of Walter of Todrig, was served heir to the lands; they were at that time described as 'a 32 shilling land of old extent'. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by Bessie and Anna, daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670, when it was described as also having a mill. Rev. James Ker, minister of Abbotrule, was also Laird of Grange in the mid-to-late 17th century; he preached a field conventicle in the house in 1679, with about 500 people listening from the lawn outside. In 1680 it was listed among lands whose superiority was held by the Kerrs of Abbotrule. In 1707 'Grange's lands' were held by 'Airs of R. Watson' and valued at £396; it must have therefore been included in a large set of farms at that time. Grange afterwards formed part of the farm of Ruletownhead. In 1788 the farm was owned by Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule and valued at £396. Part was listed in 1811 being owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, formerly possessed by John Elliot, and valued at about £34. Alexander Wight was farmer there in 1797. Around 1875 it was owned by David Henderson of Abbotrule and valued at about £43 (it is 'Grayng' in 1581/2; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map and was 'Grainge' in 1670 and 1680).

Grant (gawn', gawnt) n. Adam (1859–1938) composer of the music for several Hawick songs and compiler of others. Born in St. Andrews, he spent his early years in Edinburgh, and at the age of 12 was apprenticed as an organ builder and piano tuner. He came to Hawick at 19 to be organist at St. Cuthbert's. He moved to St. John's in 1991 and remained there until 1936, serving the same church for 45 years. He also set himself up as a piano tutor and tuner and in 1882 opened a shop (which he shared with 3 other businesses at No. 2 High Street), selling sheet music. He moved to larger premises at 10 North Bridge Street in 1885, and lived above the shop. This became the main musical business in Hawick, selling instruments as well as music (and later gramophone records), and acting as a booking agent, as well as publisher of local music. He was official Common-Riding accompanist for more than 40 years (at least 1896 until 1937), and Callants' Club accompanist for over 30 years. He also wrote non-Hawick music, sometimes under the name 'Rosenberg'. He also helped James Sinton with the musical part of his Hawick-related bibliography. His music shop finally closed in 1933. He was also a keen Volunteer, served as Captain of the Teviotdale Amateur Cycling Club and was a member of the Archæological Society and Golf Club. A member of Lodge St. John 111, he was Grand Organist to the Provincial Grand Chapter of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. His musical output included composition or significant arrangement of 'Up wi' Auld Hawick', 'Hawick', 'Oor Ain Auld Toon', 'The Anvil Crew', 'Clinty's Song', 'Bonnie Teviotdale', 'Meda's Song', 'Invocation' and 'The Wail of Flodden'. He also provided arrangement and acted as publisher for many others. His most serious piece of piano music was 'The Branhholm Waltz' and he also wrote music for plays in collaboration with J.E.D. Murray, specifically 'The Witch o' The Wisp Hill', 'The Caddie's Ghost', 'Kirsty o' Cocklaw Castle', 'Turning Back the Clock' and 'The Gutterbludes', as well as the Quater-Centenary Pageant. He probably contributed more than anyone else to Hawick's musical heritage, his publication of compilations of local songs perhaps being his lasting legacy, since this saved many songs and popularised others. He married Bessie Briggs Hall and their son Adam R. carried on the family business. His daughter Agnes Wight Hall ('Nan') died in 1912, aged 25. There is a commemorative plaque for him at 2 High Street, the site of his first music shop, designed by Willie Landles, and unveiled in 1999. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, and since he lived to a good age and fell on hard times, there were apparently only 35 mourners at his funeral; however, traffic was stopped on the High Street at the unveiling of the plaque. Adam Rutherford (1983–1952) son of Adam, he carried on the family music business. In 1948 he arranged the music for 'The Fairest Spot o' A'', piecing together the music from his memory and some notes left by his father and Tom Ker. He also resurrected Ker's song 'Where Slit-rig and Teviot Meet' in 1949. He was organist at Southdean Kirk and then Bedrule Kirk. He also ran a dance orchestra. He married into the Wallace family who farmed at Roundabouts and they moved to Hillview, Southdean. He worked in the music shop until it closed in 1938. Afterwards he continued to be accompanist at Common Riding and other events in Hawick. He took ill suddenly when attending a Glasgow Hawick Association meeting and died a few days later. Andrew farmer at Riddell, descendant of the Sprots. In 2015 he presented a talk to the Archaeological Society on the history of the Riddell estate. Derrick (??-) Hawick born and bred, he worked in the knitwear industry, and was known for his abilities on the rugby field. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. at age 16. He went on to gain 14 caps and to play for the Lions, then coach for Hawick, the South and Scotland. George (17th/18th C.) factor to Douglas of Cavers in the early-to-mid 18th century. Probably the same George was the Duke of Buccleuch's Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest, Hassendean, Burnfoot and Melrose at least in the period 1748–56. He was factor for Scott of Harden 1734–55 and was also factor to Francis Scott of Gorrenberry when Adderstone was purchased in 1750. George (18th/19th C.) surgeon in the Royal Navy. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 and must have had a local connection. George (18th C.) factor of Cavers estate. He was appointed Sheriff-Depute of Roxburghshire by Archibald Douglas in 1742. He may be the 'Mr. Grant', factor to Douglas of Cavers, recorded in the Hawick Session book of 1723. John Alexander William (1886–1959) born in Inverness, he was an architect in Edinburgh. His firm, J.A.W. Grant, continued after his death. They were responsible for much of the local authority housing developments in Hawick, including Burnfoot, Howdenbank and Silverbuthall. John (18th C.) factor to Archibald Douglas of Cavers, he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1751 (presumably related to George). He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland' (1752). Dr. John (1823–76) from Knockando in Moray, he was a 5th generation descendant of Patrick, 2nd son of James, Laird of Grant. He served as a doctor in Hawick, and was listed as a physician on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was listed as a general practitioner, living at about 21 High Street, with an 'M.D's Messenger' and a servant. For most of his time in Hawick he lived at the top of Walter's Wynd, 47 High Street. He was listed there in 1861, with his housekeeper and stable boy. He was well known for keeping otter hounds, Dandie Dinmonts, horses, badgers, ferrets and other animals in the back of the property in the mid-19th century. His prowess as a hunter of otters and badgers is described in H.H. Dixon's 'Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)' (1865); this also contains a photograph of him with some of his dogs. His costume consisted of 'boots, Tweed breeches, and thin pink Shetland shirt over a woollen one, and his is armed simply with a pole'. The Border Magazine of 1904 contains a grizzly account of 'A Day on Teviot with the Otter Hounds' which he led in 1863, with his dogs ('Caledonia', 'Royal', 'Ringwood' and 'Pibroch') chasing an otter from Burnfoot to Spittal, and his young hound 'Bobby' being brought in to dispatch the otter. Another account published in 1904 described a hunt on the Ale Water, when he succeeded in a long-held ambition to personally capture an otter alive, but not without being seriously bitten. John (19th C.) worked at Wells sawmill around the 1850s. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as tenant of 'Ashkirkmiln' in 1714 when his son James became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh. Thomas (18th C.) house servant at Teviotbank in 1793, when he was working for David Simpson. Rev. William (1811–53) born in Jedburgh, son of Lewis of the Auchernack family, and Isabella Veitch of Inchbonny. His father was a saddler in Jedburgh and his sister Isabella married James Guthrie, Hawick plumber and slater. He was educated at George Watson's Hospital and Edinburgh University and became a schoolmaster at Minto, probably in the 1820s. Under his direction it is said that the school achieved a very high reputation, with several boarders coming there from outside the Parish. He was still recorded as master at Minto in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and ordained as assistant at Cavers in May 1840, taking over as minister from James Strachan only a month or so later. He was then minister of Cavers until his death. He remained with the establishment after the Disruption, although part of his congregation left to form the Denholm Free Kirk in the autumn of 1843. In 1847 he and his wife were hosts to Jane Elgee, an Irish Nationalist who would be mother of Oscar Wilde. In his day the Sunday service started at noon (to allow the country folk to see to their animals before setting out), lasted for 2 hours, with a break and then another 2 hours. Like all ministers of the time, he was known for rebuking the congregation. In later life he had a long white beard. In 1840 he married Jane, daughter of James Dickson of Mauricewood. Their son William (1849–1911) became a wealthy timber merchant in Leith

(and was Master of the Merchant Company of Edinburgh 1905–07), and his this William's son also became minister of Cavers. Their other children were: Isabella (1841–1904), who married the minister of Coltness; Lewis (b.1842), who died young; Lewis (1844–1916), Kirkcaldy engineer; Jane Dickson (1846–1924), who married Robert Michael Ballantyne, children's author; and James (1849–1911), who became a doctor and died in Tasmania. He died of cholera after visiting sick parishioners. His name is recorded on the family gravestone in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. Rev. William Kenneth 'Ken' (1883–1971) minister of Cavers 1924–54, before it merged with Kirkton. He was the son of William and Eliza Mary Usher of Edinburgh (daughter of brewer Thomas), and grandson of Rev. William Grant who had been minister of Cavers himself. He was educated at George Watson's College and Edinburgh University, where he graduated M.A. in 1905. He was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1908 and became assistant at St. Bernard's in Edinburgh. He was then minister at Edrom and of the 'Second Charge' of St. Andrew's from 1916. In 1918 he was Chaplain to the Forces serving in Salonika. In 1924 he was translated to Cavers Parish. He married Evelyn Maud Mary Urquhart in 1914 and they had one son, Alan (1916–2010). Fr. William (20th C.) Chaplain at St. Margaret's Convent in Hawick in the period 1948–60. William Alan Kenneth (1916–2010) son of Rev. Ken, he was born in St. Andrews and raised at Cavers Manse. He became an aeronautical engineer at Boscombe Down and worked on the V Bombers. He married Eleanor Wray Sandford in 1942 and they had children Clive Roger, Colin William and John Alexander.

grap (grawp) pp., arch. gripped – 'An ilk lad grap the lass that he liked the best, An' they took the road hame by theirsels', man' [JoHa], 'But she ...roared and grat, an' grap ma airms' [HAST1868], '...She grap at it, muttering, I should hae had mair, But yet I will tak' it at Copshawholm Fair' [AD] (also written 'graap'; this is the past tense form, while gruppen is the past participle).

grape (grāp) v., poet. to grope – 'But it slip't away frae him, nane kens how or where, And he looked, and graped, and wonder sair' [JoHa], '...And belike they graped whaur they couldna see, And the nits were sweir to faa' [WL] (also spelled 'graip'; cf. greap).

the Grapes (thu-grāps) n. the Grapes Inn, previously at 16 Buccleuch Street, which was the main centre in Hawick for the carrying trade, before the coming of the railway. It once had a private well, which others were sometimes allowed to use. The inn was erected by a carrier named John Hargreaves, after he acquired the property in 1820. John Beck was the proprietor in 1825, Robert Hobkirk in 1837 and Margaret Best in 1855. Most of the buildings have been greatly altered, but a turretted staircase and workshop survive.

Grapes Close (grāps-klōs) n. also known as Grapes Inn Close, the pend between 16 and 18 Buccleuch Street, named after the Grapes Inn, which once occupied that area. The name continued in use long after the inn itself closed. The Drums and Fifes march out to here on the Thursday night, since it is close to the site of one of the town's tolls. It is also on the route of the Cornet's Walk.

Grapes Hotel (grāps-hō-tel) n. hotel in Newcastleton at 16 Douglas Square, also known as the Grapes Inn and just 'the Grapes'. Jane Kyle was proprietor there on Pigot's 1825 directory and still in 1851 and in Slater's 1852 directory. John Elliot was inn-keeper in the 1860s.

the Gravelly Haugh (thū-graw-vu-lee-hawch) n. former descriptive name for an area on the south side of the Slitrig near Lynnwood, where the old Common boundary briefly crossed to the other side of the river. This could be what was meant in an entry from the Parish Records of the early 18th century – ‘To a poore lad’s cofine yt dyed in the Gravel, £2’.

gravit (graw-vi) n., arch. a scarf, especially a warm woollen one – ‘pit yer gravit on’, ‘...Till they’ve a’ gotten gravats made oot o’ gude rope’ [UB] (also spelled ‘gravat’; accent on the 2nd syllable).

graw (graw) v. to grow – ‘Gala grows on ee efter a while, a bit like cancer’, ‘...for which yin year hei’d ti graw a beard ...’ [IWL] (cf. the more common growe).

grawn (grawn) pp. grown – ‘The wand’rin’ Burnfoot path is graun’, Lang by the river’s side ...’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘graun’).

gray (grā) n., arch. an arithmetic book (so-called from the book written by James Gray, schoolmaster in Peebles, which was heavily used in schools in the 19th century).

Gray (grā) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Headshaw Mill in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with George Gray and Thomas Allan. He was probably related to George, as well as to William, who leased another part of Raperlaw. Andrew ‘Dandie’ (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘fraitier’ (perhaps Fraser) and their son John was baptised in 1651. The witnesses were Andrew Scott and John (who was probably related). Andrew (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His is probably an ancestor of the later Andrew who owned lands in Lilliesleaf. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, specifically the Hassendean part. In 1680 when he witnessed a baptism for Alexander Muir, along with Walter Paisley. He married Isobel Ormiston in 1679 and their children included: Helen (b.1680), baptised in Hawick; and Bessie (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1688), baptised in Robertson. The witnesses in 1688 were Robert and George Ormiston (perhaps brothers to his wife). He may be the same man as the later Dand in Weensland, or else perhaps his father. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitlaw and later tenant in Weensland.

Note that his forename is sometimes transcribed as ‘David’ rather than ‘Dand’. He must have been closely related to James, who was in Whitlaw at the same time. He was tenant in Whitlaw in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for James Colwort, also in Whitlaw. He was recorded in Whitlaw in 1706 along with James (presumably his father or brother) when they witnessed a baptism for Robert Cairns in Whitlaw. He was also in Whitlaw in 1708 when one of his children was baptised in Hawick, in 1709 when he witnessed baptisms for Adam Scott in Kirkton, for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, for Walter Scott in Nether Southfield and for William Gledstains at Whitlaw (both along with James), in 1711 for John Scott ‘Wyndhead’, and in 1713 for James Craw in Branhholme Town. He was listed as an Elder in 1713. He was recorded as tenant at Weensland in 1718 and also in 1723 when he was considered as an elder of Hawick Kirk. He was also tenant in Weensland in 1719 when his servant William Stoddart got married. He was also so labelled when he witnessed baptisms in 1723 for miller James Stot and in 1725 for carrier Thomas Porteous, for William Hislop and for tenant Robert Scott. In 1726 he witnessed baptisms for carrier John Tait and for Robert Nichol in Weensland and in 1728 another for Alexander Purdom. He was described as tenant in Weensland in 1728 when his daughter Margaret married Walter Scott from Hawick-shiels. He married Janet Buckham (or ‘Buchan’, from Bedrule Parish) in Hawick in 1706 and their children included: Margaret (b.1708); James (b.1710); John (b.1712); Francis (b.1714); Beatrice (b.1716); George (b.1718); Mary (b.1721); and Janet (b.1723). The witnesses in 1708 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and gardener James Falsyde, in 1710 were Archibald Elliot in Horsleyhill and Archibald Paterson in Flex, in 1712 were William Shiel and Archibald Paterson in the Flex, in 1718 was ‘Mr’ James Innes and in 1721 were Bailies Walter Purdom and James Scott. He was in Weensland in 1720 when (along with merchant John Johnston) he witnessed a baptism for workman William Stoddart. He may be the Dand who witnessed a baptism for James in Whitlaw in 1728 and another (the same day) for John Anderson. He could be the Dand whose daughter Margaret married Walter Scott in 1728. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1740), Margaret (b.1741), an unnamed child (b.1746), James (b.1750), Janet (b.1752) and John (b.1754). Andrew (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1764 when he was paid for 'the wind-pointer, fen, and hands, in church steeple'. He was presumably a clockmaker or other merchant. Perhaps the same Andrew in Cavers Parish married Helen Glendinning in Hawick Parish in 1762 and had a daughter Helen (b.1770). He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Thomas Welsh in 1797. Andrew (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf (valued at £86 13s 4d). He could be the Andrew from whom the Riddells of that ilk purchased the lands of 'Hoglaire-burn' in Lilliesleaf Parish, according to the 1813 Tax Rolls. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Andrew from Lilliesleaf. He may be the Andrew who married Janet Fowler and whose children included Benjamin (b.1781). Thomas (b.1780), with no mother's name given, may also have been his son. This Andrew was said to have been a surgeon, married 2 women who were both called Janet Fowler, had 12 children, and was father of Andrew of Linhead (in Dumfriesshire). Andrew (18th C.) son of surgeon Andrew and Janet Fowler. Although not the eldest son, he was effectively his father's heir. He married Isabella Anderson, who was from a Roxburghshire family and had several brothers. His wife was an accomplished rider, once winning the race at a wedding 'broose'; she was also a strict keeper of the Sabbath and apparently a friend of Thomas Carlyle's mother. He rented the farm of Linhead from his cousin Katrine Gray; they had an agreement that she would leave him the farm on her death, but she changed her will after religious arguments with his wife. He contested the will, but lost, and had to sell the small farm of Hillhead near Lilliesleaf, to pay the legal bills. He was probably father of Andrew and grandfather of Isabella ('Free Lance'), who wrote about the family in the Border Magazine of 1899. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In 1788 in Cavers he married Christian Hunter. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. Andrew (19th C.) noted local jumper from Hawick, also associated with the early years of Hawick Baa. He won the running hop-step-and-leap at the St. Ronan's Games in 1830. At the Saturday Games of the 1834 Common Riding he won the 'running high leap' and the 'hop, step and leap', bringing to 23 his total of local prizes. He is probably the handloom weaver of that name living with the Crosier family at about 30 Loan in 1841. Andrew (b.1784/5) resident of Lilliesleaf. He was probably the Andrew who is recorded as owner of 'Hungry-hills, Four Rigs and Tenement and Yard in Lilliesleaf' according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was listed as an agricultural labourer in 1841 and as a 'Landed Proprietor (of 7 acres)' on Main Street in 1851. His wife was Jean from Gretna. Their children included: James; Catherine; and Isabella (b.1831), who wrote poetry under the pseudonym 'Free Lance'. Charles (18th/19th C.) first (and only) minister of the Independent Kirk in Hawick. He arrived in November 1805, having previously been a stone mason, and being trained by the Haldane's in Edinburgh. After only a few years he apparently became more of a convert to baptist views than much of his congregation, leading to the entire church folding by 1813. He left Hawick, since there were not enough baptist followers to support him at that time. David (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. David (17th C.) resident at Stouslie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Dand see Andrew Gray, 'Dand'. Duncan (15th C.) witness to Hawick's earliest known sasine in 1453, where he is described as an esquire. Presumably the same Duncan 'Grave' was also witness to a charter of William Douglas of Cavers in 1450, in which James was also a witness. Francis (18th C.) resident of Weensland. He married Isobel Douglas and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Janet (b.1759); an unnamed child (b.1761); and Robert (b.1762). The witnesses in 1761 were Bailie Robert Howison of Orchard and 'student' John Laurie, and in 1762 were John Laurie (again) and George Gray (who was probably related). Francis 'Frank' (1839–1922) from Yeadon in Yorkshire, where he was bandmaster from the age of 17. He came to Hawick in 1860 with his brother Barnabas, to work as a weaver. In 1861 they were lodging at 21 High Street. He was made bandmaster for the local detachment of the Border Rifles, and remained in this position for 43 years. Since the volunteers had no instruments, he travelled to Edinburgh with Capt. Chisholme of Stirches to purchase them. He can be seen in an early photograph and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. George (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with Andrew Gray and Thomas Allan. He was probably related to Andrew, as well as to William, who leased another part of Raperlaw. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, he married Margaret Scott and their son George was baptised in 1653. George (17th C.) recorded as being in 'Rupertlaw' (probably Raperlaw, but possibly Ruberslaw) in 1684 when his sevrant George Young was listed as a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. George (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Moscrop in Kirkton in 1707. George (18th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Minto in 1730. George (18th C.) resident of Weensland. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for Francis in Weensland (who was surely related). He is recorded being in 'Wiensland' in 1764 when his son's baptism was witnessed by gardener James Scott and Walter Scott (probably related to his wife). He was also listed being in Weensland in 1766 when baptismal witnesses were Adam Scott and William Elliot. He married Helen Scott in 1756 and their children included: Margaret (b.1758); David (b.1759); John (b.1762); James (b.1764); Esther (b.1766); George (b.1769); and Francis (b.1771). He could be the miller who in 1757 witnessed a baptism for miller Alexander Heatley. George (18th C.) married Helen Young in Bedrule in 1786. George (18th C.) recorded in Wiltonburn in 1794 when he was in dispute with Basil Wood (in Dangerfield) according to a document in Selkirk. He could be the George who married Agnes Turnbull and whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: William (b.1791); John (b.1793); and George (b.1795). George (1770s–1808) merchant in Hawick, son of James, who was from Ashieburn. He was listed as a merchant on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and also on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. On the 1801 list he was 'Mercht. An Extra peace officer'. He is probably the George who witnessed baptisms for baker John Wilson in 1803, 1805 and 1807. He may be the George, married to Jane Potts, whose daughter Jane was baptised in Hawick in 1796. He died in Hawick. George (b.c.1780) labourer at Hudshouse according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. George (19th C.) resident of 'Peatihouses', i.e. Burnhead Cottages, in 1857, when he donated coins to the Archæological Society. He was surely related to William, who was listed as a lambswool stocking maker at 'Parkhouses' on the 1851 and 1861 censuses. George (1914/15–1991) born in Hawick, he started work with Walter Wilson's and was a 'Bevin Boy' during WWII. He then worked on the railway before becoming a personnel officer with Turner & Rutherfords. He was a member of the Labour Party, was on the Town Council 1955–61 and served as a Bailie. He was also a keen amateur dramatist and singer. Gilbert

(18th/19th C.) ploughman at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Perhaps the same Gilbert was a farm servant to William Stevenson at Langburnshiels in Hobkirk Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick. The death of his daughter Janet is recorded in 1810. Probably the same Gilbert married Margaret Gray and had a son James baptised in Hawick in 1803. Cardinal Gordon Joseph (1910–93), born in Leith, son of mechanical engineer Francis William. He was ordained as a priest in Edinburgh in 1935, then assisted his uncle, who was priest at St. Andrews, while taking a degree there. In 1941 he was appointed priest of S.S. Mary & David's in Hawick, and remained there until 1947. One of his tasks was to put together the centenary booklet. During the War years he also served nearby German and Italian prisoners of war. He also became Dean of the Borders and served on the Roxburgh education committee. He left to become Rector at St. Mary's College, Blairs (near Aberdeen) and became Archbishop of St. Andrews and Edinburgh in 1951 (at only the age of 40). He founded St. Andrew's College, Drygrange in 1953. He was made a Cardinal in 1969, the first Scottish Cardinal since the Reformation. He returned to Hawick to open St. Margaret's School in 1965 and to be principal guest of the 1974 Common Riding. He retired in 1985 and died in Edinburgh. Helen (18th/19th C.) grocer at the Mid Row in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Isabella Anderson (1831–1909) resident of Lilliesleaf, daughter of Andrew and Jean Gray. She worked as a dressmaker. She wrote pseudonymously using the name 'Free Lance'. Her volume 'Border Rhymes' was published in Hawick in 1899. It contains a mixture of English and local dialect poems, many with a religious flavour. James (15th C.) local man recorded in 1432 when he witnessed the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. Also listed was John, who was surely related. He may be the same James who witnessed a charter for William Douglas of Cavers in 1450, along with Duncan, who may have been related. And he is probably the James listed as deputy to Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1455 and Sheriff-Depute of Roxburghshire in 1456 when he gave sasine of Ewesdale at 'Mallano'. James (17th C.) son of William. In 1676 he was 'of Lislie' (probably Lilliesleaf) when he and his mother Isabel Turnbull had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk. His brother John is recorded in 1678.

James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Murray and their children included: Dand (b.1676); Helen (b.1679); and Marion (b.1684). The witnesses in 1684 were Walter Paisley and William Taylor. In 1685 he witnessed a baptism for William Taylor. He could be the James who in 1696 witnessed (along with Walter Paisley) a baptism for William Scott in Weensland. James (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is probably the James, married to Bessie Dunlop, whose children included Agnes (b.1688), Eupham (b.1689), Robert (b.1691), William (b.1693), Janet (b.1696), Walter (b.1701), Janet (again, b.1703) and an unnamed son (b.1707). The witnesses in 1690 were William (probably his father or brother) and James Henderson. In 1691 he (and James Dunlop) witnessed a baptism for William Dunlop. Probably the same James was listed among those collecting money for the Parish in 1724. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitlaw. He was an elder of Hawick Kirk. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism in 1687. He was recorded as tenant in Whitlaw in 1703, 1706, 1707, 1709, 1713 and 1720. He witnessed baptisms in 1703 for James Gledstains in Whitehaugh, in 1704 for Robert Cairns (tailor in Whitlaw), in 1706 for James Irvine, tenant in Hawick Shiel, for Robert Cairns in Whitlaw (along with Dand, presumably his son or brother) and for weaver Thomas Anderson, in 1707 for weaver Andrew Jardine and William Gledstains, workman in Whitlaw, in 1708 for Thomas Penman and James Borthwick, in 1709 for William Lillico (herd at the Flex), for Walter Scott in Nether Southfield and for William Gledstains at Whitlaw (both along with Dand), in 1713 for James Crow in Branxholme Town (when he was listed as an Elder), and in 1720 for an Anderson in Burnflat. Probably the same James was in Whitchesters in 1708 when he witnessed another baptism. In 1717 (along with John Scott, candlemaker) he was appointed to collect monies from 'Whitla, Whitlahaugh, Flexes, and Burnflat', and in 1718 he was described as 'in Whitla' and already quite aged. In 1722 he was 'older in whitla' when he witnessed a baptism for John Laidlaw in Hawick Shiel. He must have been closely related to Dand, who was also in Whitlaw. James (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitlaw, perhaps son of the earlier James. In Hawick in 1727 he married Helen Elliott, daughter of Walter in Brugh. Their children included: James (b.1728); and an unnamed son (b.1730). It seems likely he was son (or grandson) of the earlier James, who was elder of Hawick Kirk and related to David who was in Whitlaw in 1702. The witnesses to the 1728 baptism were David Gray and John Scott. James (18th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Jean Lamb and their children included: Agnes (b.1745), baptised in Wilton; and John (b.1765), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1765 were Walter Scott and William Robertson. He may be the James Grae' who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. James (18th C.) resident of the Allars area. He was already deceased in 1805 when the death of his son James is recorded. James 'Jamie' (b.c.1793) Hawick man who was born crippled. He famously told a story about meeting the lame Sir Walter Scott at the head of the Loan as a boy. He could be the weaver 'James Grey' recorded at about 41 Loan on the 1841 census. James (d.bef. 1808) from Ashieburn. The death of his son, merchant George, is recorded in Hawick in 1808. James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Rutherford in Wilton Parish in 1810. Their children, baptised in Lilliesleaf, included: Isabel (b.1822) and Thomas Rutherford (b.1824). Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hasendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Horsleyhill. John (15th C.) recorded as one of the 'nobles' on the witness list for the 1432 sasine for William Douglas being given the Barony of Cavers and Sherifffdom of Roxburghshire. It took place at Cavers house and the other men were all local. He must have been related to James Gray, who is also listed. John 'Wi Yin Ei' (16th C.) servant to the young Laird of Mangerton. He was listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. His nickname is recorded as 'with on ee', presumably meaning that he has an injury to one eye. He could be one of 'John Gray thelder, John Gray yonger', who were listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of the murder of Englishmen during several raids along with Armstrongs, Fosters and others. John (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. John (17th C.) described as 'in Lilsle' (i.e. Lilliesleaf) in 1632 when, along with 3 other men, he feued Westbarns from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. In 1642 his son, also John, married Janet, daughter of William Wood in Raperlaw. John (17th C.) son of John, tenant in Lilliesleaf. In 1642 he married Janet, daughter of William Wood in Raperlaw. The couple received lands belonging to Wood in Lessuden and near Barnhills. They sold the lands in Lessuden to Walter Scott of Raeburn in 1671. John (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk in 1661 when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Govenlock. Perhaps the same resident in Ashkirk Parish was listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) recorded in 1678 as son of the deceased William, indweller in Lilliesleaf. In that year his tutors Andrew Riddell and Andrew Davidson had a discharge over annual rents with the treasurer of Selkirk. His brother James is also recorded in 1676. In 1683 Andrew Riddell is describes as his uncle. John (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to the earlier Johns from Lilliesleaf. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, he was a weaver in Langton. He married Margaret Cumming and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1717 and their children included Margaret (b.1701), Elspeth (b.1702), Alexander (b.1704), Thomas (b.1706), John (b.1708), Patrick (b.1713) and Margaret (b.1717). John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Helen Paterson and their children included Thomas (b.1735), John (b.1739) and Walter (b.1744). The witnesses in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. He is probably the weaver of that name who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Laidlaw and their children included: Thomas (b.1771). John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Barbara was baptised in 1776. John (18th C.) listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in 1793, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. He could be the John who married Agnes Scott (from Hawick) in Roberton Parish in 1789 and was living at Harden in 1793. Their children included: Thomas (b.1790), John (b.1792) and James (b.1793), baptised in Roberton; and Margaret (b.1795), John (b.1796), William (b.1798) and Andrew (b.1801), baptised in Hawick. It is possible he is the John, stocking-maker in Hawick, whose son Andrew died in Hawick in 1805. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wiltonburn Epps, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ashkirk Bridgend, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Heuchhouse in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was the Mr. Gray of Castleton who He subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. John (18th/19th C.) servant living at Bedrule in 1797

when his name appeared in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Knowe in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Winnington Rig in Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 and 1798 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. He eventually paid £10 in early 1799 to avoid serving, as confirmed in the amended list of 1799. In 1801 he was recorded as a servant at Nether Tofts on the 1801 Militia ballot for Kirkton Parish. John 'Daft Jock', 'Jock the Ladle' (1776/7–1837) wandering beggar and simpleton, who travelled around Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Peeblesshire in the early-to-mid 1800s. A native of Ettrick, he later moved to Selkirk with his packman father, Johnnie. He was also referred to as 'Daft Jock Gray of Gilmanscleuch'. His nickname 'the Ladle' came from a version of 'And he played upon a ladle ...' that he used to sing, along with a ladle as prop. He was also known for imitating ministers and for bawdy songs. He would make up his own songs by throwing together rhymes from elsewhere. He usually wore knee-breeches, bright red garters, enormous buttons and a tall hat. He is mentioned in William Chambers 'Memoir of Robert Chambers'. One of his songs was a popular one with the chorus 'Rob Rodger, he ca's up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum' [RM], with a different version in the Chambers book, with chorus 'And the laddie he's but young, And the laddie he's but young, And Robbie Scott ca's up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum' [DJG]. He would mimic the older local preachers and was sometimes disruptive during services. He was also known for singing bawdy songs. He sang rhyming couplets of Wullie Craw's, and verses attributed to him refer to people and places around Wilton and Hassendean, as well as other places. He was said to be the inspiration for 'Davie Gallatley' in Sir Walter Scott's novel 'Waverley'. A portrait of him was painted by William Smellie Watson. He is said to have been very attached to his father, and took to bed after his father's death, dying within a week. An article 'Reminiscences of Jock the Ladle' (1867) was written by Alexander A. Hogg. John (b.c.1780) labourer at Clarilaw according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801 in Wilton Parish. John (b.c.1780) servant at Newhouses according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801 in Wilton Parish. John (b.c.1780) son of William in Craggs according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Lilliesleaf Parish. Rev. John (1780/1–1828) said to have been a pupil of George Scott in Lilliesleaf. He was ordained as minister at Falstone in Northumberland. He died on his way home after preaching at Kielder. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Collier in 1796. Their children included: James (b.1796); Jane (b.1802); and Christian (b.1802). The witnesses in 1796 were the whole Associate Congregation. John (b.1790/1) born in Crailing, he was a carrier and grocer in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was living at 'North Town O' Rule', which is the cottage known locally as 'Drythropple'. His neighbour was the poet John Halliday. His wife was Isabella and their children included Andrew, Eliza and Agnes. John (19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Mary Waldie and their children included John (b.1832), Mary (b.1833), Janet (b.1835) and Peter (b.1837). John 'Jock' (1812–83) born in Wilton, he lived in the West-end and was known as a cheerful simpleton. He stayed at the Corner of the Green Wynd and the Loan with his sister Lizzie and her husband James Anderson, and helped his brother-in-law with his dairy. He was a common sight on the streets, driving a donkey cart and having a pet starling. He later became bald, apparently as the result of a hair tonic, and is buried in the Wellogate – 'Jock, the cuddie's tail's off' [RM]. John Y. (19th/20th C.) left money to establish the John Y. Gray Prize Fund at the High School. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when she had the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder removed and placed her own livestock there. This was done legally in front of Thomas Scott in Todrig and others. In 1540 she was among the tenants who were warned to remove themselves from Todrig when Alexander Lauder succeeded to the lands. She may be the same woman as Katherine Lauder recorded in 1538. She may also be the Katherine, wife of Herbert Maxwell, recorded in 1540, related to the lands of Haining. Margaret (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1720 being made to stand 'upon the usual place of repentance in sackcloth' in St. Mary's Kirk for 7 Sundays. This was for 'her sin of drunkenness and baseness'. Patrick (c.1518–84) 4th Lord Gray, Sheriff of Angus, he was nephew of 3rd Lord Gray. He played an important role in the Borders during the Rough Wooing, when he sided with the English. He was captured at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542 and pledged himself to Edward VI in 1547. He led a party in 1547/8, along with many Kers and others to burn Ale Water, then Yarrow and Ettrick, then Hawick, together with the valleys of the Teviot, Slitrig and Borthwick, particularly the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his friends. In 1548 he was captured by French troops and narrowly avoided execution. He was again taken prisoner by the English at the Raid of Swinton in 1562. He married firstly Marion Ogilvie and secondly Margaret, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford. He was succeeded by his eldest son Patrick. Peter (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Robert (b.1780), Margaret (b.1782), Isabel (b.1784), Jen (b.1786), John (b.1788), Mary (b.1790) and James (b.1798). Peter (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the Peter from Wilton who married Jane Leithead in Robertson in 1790. Their daughter Agnes was baptised in Wilton in 1802. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Redford in 1722 and their children included Agnes (b.1723), James (b.1725) and Bessie (b.1729). It seems likely he and his wife were related to Helen Gray and William Redford, respectively, who had children a little earlier in Ashkirk Parish. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included John (b.1738), Jean (b.1741), Jean (again, b.1743) and Robert (b.1745). Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Glendinning in 1830 and their children included Helen (b.1835) and Walter (b.1838). Robert (19th/20th C.) baker at 10 High Street around the 1890s. Thomas (16th C.) probably from Liddesdale, he was listed in 1535 among a number of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for stealing cattle and taking prisoners from Craik. Ninian Gray, servant to John Forester 'Shake Buckler' is also listed, and so may have been a relative. Thomas (16th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He held a tenement there from the Bishop of Glasgow and in 1563 leased it to his neighbour Thomas Smail for 19 years. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married Alison Riddell and their children included: Agnes (b.1680); Walter (b.1681); Christian (b.1684); Agnes (again, b.1688); and Agnes (again, b.1690). The witnesses in 1681 were Walter Riddell (probably related to his wife) and Alexander ... (perhaps Riddell) and in 1688 were Walter Riddell and Robert Hume. He is probably the Thomas Gray who witnessed baptisms in Robertson Parish for Robert Scott in 1681 and for Rev. Francis Scott in 1684 and 1688. Thomas of Townhead (17th C.) had an 'instrument' brought against him, along with Rev. Francis Scott in 1689, by 2 of the Hassendean heritors. This suggests that he was associated with Hassendean Kirk and also refused to give up Episcopalianism. He may be the same Thomas who has an 'instrument' in his favour in 1675 'on the appearance of his wife, Bessie Scott, within the parish Kirk of Hassindene'. He paid the land tax on £214 for lands previous held by Scott of Alton and 'Now called Know Townhead' in 1678. In 1692 he 'peyed formerly for the viccorage of Hassindeane alias Tounhead'. He was recorded at Hassendean Townhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls there is a record of 'Thomas Gray of Alton's Lands, now called Know Townhead'; it is unclear where his lands of Alton were. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of 'Crackuooll' (or Cracknooll) in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He could be the Thomas, married to Helen Scott, who was recorded as a weaver at Shielswoodhaugh in 1709; their children included John (b.1705), Helen (b.1707) and Robert (b.1709). Perhaps the same Thomas was listed in 1724 and 1727 among those collecting money for the Parish, suggesting he was a Kirk Elder. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1714 he witnessed (along with Thomas Huntly) a baptism for John Little. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Aitkin and their son John was baptised in 1738. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isabel Scott and their children included: Thomas (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1758). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation and in 1758 were Walter Wilson and Francis Paterson. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Grierson and their children included John (b.1771) and Walter (b.1776). Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Dimpleknow according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Thomas (b.c.1780) tailor at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Thomas (18th/19th C.) first definitively known proprietor of the MossPaul Inn. He is thus recorded on an 1803 list of members of the 1st Battalion of the Roxburghshire Volunteers. He was probably landlord at MossPaul until 1816. He was a friend of James Ruickbie, who wrote a poem about the improvements that had been carried out at the hotel – 'Tam, the storm baith loud and fierce is, Ever since I left MossPaul, Yet accept my two-three verses, Now I'm in a tift tae scrawl' [JR].

Thomas (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Reid and their children included: John (b.1823); Thomas (b.1824); and James (b.1830). Thomas (19th C.) married Helen Linton in Kirkton in 1835. Walter (b.c.1780) ploughman at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Walter (19th C.) married Hannah Mellinson in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1837. William 'Will' (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with William Redford. This was specifically the quarter belonging to George Turnbull. He was probably related to Andrew and George, who leased other parts. William (d.bef. 1676) recorded in 1676 being 'of Lislie' (probably Lilliesleaf) when his widow Isobel Turnbull had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk. This was probably for some annual rent, with his son James also recorded in the same year. His son John is also recorded in 1678. William (17th C.) resident at Castleside near Branxholme according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1694 he was recorded as the Duchess of Buccleuch's tenant of the farm of Castleside. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Murray in 1671. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He witnessed a baptism for James Thomson in 1680. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at West Groundstone in 1732 and Clarilaw in 1738. He is probably the William who in 1737 witnessed a baptism for Robert Easton, who lived at Clarilaw. He married Grisel Nixon and their children included Bessie (b.1727), Margaret (b.1730), Helen (b.1732), Andrew (b.1735) and Patrick (b.1738). The witnesses in 1732 were Robert and George Scott, and in 1738 were James Dryden and William Anderson. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Scott in 1745 and their children included: Thomas (b.1763); Helen, Isabel and Margaret (b.1765); and Isabel (b.1769). William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1760. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Harden in 1787. He married Helen (or 'Nelly') Smith and their children included: Thomas (b.1779) and John (b.1781), baptised in Wilton; and William (b.1787) and James (b.1791), baptised in Robertson. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Craggs in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Craggs in 1797. His son John is recorded at Craggs on the 1801 Militia ballot. He could be the William whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Lilliesleaf in 1760. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included William (b.1810), James (b.1811) and John Smith (b.1813). William (b.1796/7) born in Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Ormiston in the 1860s, having previously lived in Chan-nelkirk. In 1861 he was farmer of 210 acres at Ormiston and employing 7 people. His wife was Marion and their children included John, Janet, Violet, Christina and Marion. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Scott in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1853 (sometimes written 'Grey').

Gray Coat (grā-kō) n. hill south of Dodburn Filters and to the east of Priesthaugh. It contains the remains of several different homesteads and earthworks and its southern slopes are crossed by the Catrail. To the north-east of the summit is an ancient cairn, about 6 m in diameter, but surrounded by 3 grass-covered bankso; it is said to resemble the Rounds of Tivla (in the Shetlands), and probably a Bronze Age burial mound. The homestead is on the northern slopes, measuring 47 m by 37 m, perhaps defined by a twin palisade and with a house about 50 m diameter house inside. There are signs of cord rig on the northern and southern sides of the summit, as well as the souther-eastern slopes. Close to the summit are the remains of a settlement surrounded by a wall about 105 m by 60 m, with entrances in the south-west and north-east. The interior contains evidence of at least 8 houses. On the south-eastern side, beside the grassy track, are the remains of a small pele-house, possibly Peelbrae or Dodrig. The pele-house was 8 m by 4 m, with some rybats discovered in an excavation. To the south-east and north-west of these ruins are the foundations of 2 other buildings.

gray-daylicht (grā-dā-licht) n., arch. dawn, the light of dawn – '...whan the slogan waekent the waller an sterteet the fray i the gray-daylicht' [ECS].

Gray Hill (grā-hil) n. hill above Old North-house, reaching a height of 317 m and with a triangulation pillar on top. There are 2 ancient settlements on its slopes, as well as a portion of the Catrail on the other side of the road. On the far eastern slopes there is an area of rig-and-furrow cultivation.

graylin (grā-lin) n. grayling, Thymallus thymallus, a fish with a small mouth and large dorsal fin, introduced locally from the south of England to a

gray row (grā-row) n., arch. a bread roll made of rye or oats – 'Something ti serr as an off-pit ... a gowpeenfi berries or a penny gray rowe' [ECS].

Graystane see Greystane

greap (greep) v., poet. to grope – 'But gin they saw him when they trow he's sleepin', They'd fin' him fou, an', for ye ken what, greapin'' [JoHa] (cf. grape).

greap (greep) pp., poet. groped – 'There isna in't, for thrice I've greapit: O greatest curse, that e'er for man was sew'd or shapit, 'S an empty purse' [JoHa].

the Great Bell (thu-grā'-bel) n. term used to refer to the new bell of St. Mary's, recast in 1694 after 'it was rent, anno 1693, and was of new founded'. A subscription was taken around the Parish, and an Act of the Bailies and Council was passed stipulating that only the families of those who had contributed (at least 12 shillings) were entitled to use the bell to announce burials, with the same restriction applying to the hand or 'Deed' bell. These 'Havers of the Bell' still had to pay a small fee for its use, however. The list contains 180 names, including some identifying information (occupations, nicknames, etc.), and hence is an invaluable record of Hawick's wealthier citizens at the end of the 17th century. In 1718 the Bailie Depute contributed 'as much oak as was ane axtree to the great church bell', meaning it got a new 'axle-tree' to swing on. In 1723 it was ordained that anyone who contributed to the rebuilding of the bellhouse should have the same rights as those listed in 1694. The bell was taken down (and presumably replaced again) in 1747 when work was done on the steeple. Repairs to the old bell contributed to the Town's debts mentioned in 1612. The bell was replaced by a new one in 1763, when the Kirk was rebuilt. The new bell weighed 560 pounds and the exchange was arranged through ex-Bailie Thomas Turnbull in London.

the Great Border Games (thu-grā'-bōr-dur-gāmz) n. name used in the mid-19th century for the Games on the Saturday of the Common Riding, held at the Haugh.

the Great Flid (thu-grā'-flid) n. popular name for the flood of the Slitrig in 1767, also known as 'Hawick Flood' or 'Hawick Spate'. This occurred on 5th August 1767, beginning about 4 p.m., and lasting until after 6 p.m. There was no great rainfall in Hawick and the flood only affected the Slitrig, with the Teviot above Hawick being easily fordable that day. The Slitrig rose 22 feet (about 6.5m) above its normal level, as many as 15 houses were swept away, along with the Corn Mill, the garden wall of the Manse and the Parish school room. The smaller arch (at the east end) and part of the northern parapet of the Auld Brig were also swept away, and from there 2 men, trapped by the rushing waters, were carried off and drowned. Mrs. Aitkin narrowly escaped by crawling over a ladder laid between upper windows across the waters rushing down Silver Street, before the house was carried away. Four people trying to save belongings from Eckron's house were swept down to the Sandbed and rescued there. Two other men were rescued after climbing on top of the kiln. A servant girl waded into her master's house to rescue the £300 in gold that he had there, only to be carried away, and she narrowly escaped drowning, being cast onto a green downriver, still clutching the bag of money. It is also said that the flood carried off most of the records of the Town's incorporated trades. The waters poured up the Backdamgate and filled the closes along both sides of the High Street as far as the Cross Wynd. Part of the Tower was undermined and in danger of falling. The flood was probably exacerbated by the arches of the Auld Brig becoming blocked with debris. There is a tradition that it started when a shepherd threw a stone into a loch at Winburgh Hill, disturbing the fairy folk! It is also stated to have been started by 'the fall of a Water-spout' (whatever that means!). The Hawick minister, Rev. Laurie gathered some parishioners together in the kirk-yard to pray during the flood, afterwards claiming to have helped abate the waters; although apparently the flood had already much receded by then. Another incident later recounted is that a baby was carried off in its cradle, but rescued without injury; similarly, it is said that a bedstead was carried off with a cat on it, which landed safely on a sandbank in the Common Haugh. It is also said that a Hawick shoemaker, who was several miles further down the Teviot and, unaware of the flood, noticed a board on the river bank, and discovered it was his own shop sign and that James Aitkin, returning from Kelso, noticed some of his own merchandise washed up on the haugh at Menslaws. There are several accounts of the events in Hawick that day, the most detailed being by Town Clerk John Gledstains. The loss of property was estimated to be £4000. The flood of 1846 is also sometimes referred to as 'the Great Flood and also the Slitrig Flid'; there is debate about which one had the higher water or was the more devastating (see also flids).

Greathill (grā'-hil) n. former name for a farm in Jedforest. It was described as 2 steadings valued at 50 shillings according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In the rental roll of 1541 the tenant was Archibald Oliver, paying 25s (it is 'Greithill' in 1538 and 'Greithil' in 1541).

Greatlaws (grā'-laws) n. place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, south of Clerklands and close to a hill-fort. The tenants there in 1562 were Walter Veitch, John Henderson, John Kedicie and William Thorbrand. William Riddell was there in 1595/6. It was part of the lands whose superiority was inherited by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk from his father in 1636. 'Bessie Stoddart gudewife of Greatlaws' was owner in 1643, when the lands were valued at £104. It passed from Riddells of Greatlaws to ministers of the name Duncanson through marriage. Andrew Duncanson paid £104 for the land tax there in 1663 and 1678. It was probably among lands inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1694. In 1788 it was owned by Sir John Riddell. William Laidlaw was farmer there in at least 1797–99. It was owned by Sir John Buchanan Riddell in 1813 and valued at £287. Hedger Peter Stoddart and his family were there in 1851 and 1861 (it is 'Grett Law' in 1562, 'Greitlaw' in 1595/6, 'Graitlawes' in 1630, 'Greitlawes' in 1636 and 1669, 'Greatlawes' in 1670 and 'Gridlaws' in 1799; it is marked 'Greeklawes' on Blaeu's 1654 map, but with the modern spelling on Stobie's 1770 map).

Greatmoor (grā'-moor) n. hill about 10 miles south of Hawick, between the Maidens and Cauldcleuch and reaching 599 m (1,964 ft). It is marked on the Ordnance Survey maps as 'Greatmoor Hill'. The summit contains a large man-made cairn as well as a triangulation pillar – 'Her hair, the raven's glossiest hue, That skims o'er Greatmoor's top sae high' [JoHa], 'Was there never a maid on Ettrick side Who waved to her love on his last long ride? Came never a steed over Greatmoor moss With the corpse of his rider bound across?' [WHO], '... Then Greatmoor and Windburgh against a purple sky' [WHO], 'Penchrise and Gritmuir, Ruberslaw, dark wi waist-high heather, And the slant, green, edge o' the Cairter Bar' [DH]. Also the name of another hill just west

great pipe (grā'-pīp) n., arch. the Highland bagpipe – 'The town's piper, for his nicht revelling, on going on the fair nicht playing with the great pipe thro the haill toun, is fined £100 Scots' [BR].

the Great Riot (thū-grā'-rI-i') n. popular name for a public disturbance at the Boswells Fair of 1849. A young shepherd was killed by a railway navvy, and the suspect escaped from the police. The dragoons were called in, finding someone (probably innocent) to hang for the murder.

great teind (grā'-tīnd) n., arch. the tithe due from grain – 'All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toun are estimat to pay nyne scoir 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great teynd, laik ane firloft, and 20 libs of vicarage' [PR1627].

the Great War (thū-grā'-wawr) n. the First World War, WWI, in which there were almost 1,000,000 dead on the Allied side, with over 3,000,000 casualties. Around 1,000 local men lost their lives between 1914 and 1918, i.e. about one for each day of the war. The K.O.S.B. were involved in the Gallipoli campaign of 1915, and there more than 120 men of Hawick and district died (over half on a single day). For Hawick it was also a time when the Stobs army camp was a significant part of local life. Soldiers were billeted in Hawick, and trained in several open spaces around the town. Women were employed on knitting frames, a job previously reserved for men, and many tweed manufacturers turned to filling military orders. The Common Riding was cancelled for the years 1914–18, with the Council resolving to do nothing while the war continued. However, J.E.D. Murray rode the marches on his own, and the Common Riding of 1919 was a special occasion. In 1918 the Common Riding Weekend was used for Red Cross benefit events and the Vertish Hill Sports were held on the Saturday. 19th July 1919 was declared 'Peace Day' with bonfires lit around Britain. The Vertish Hill Sports were held on that day, with about 2,800 children each being given a bag of cakes. On 30th August that year there was a 'Welcome Home' parade in Hawick, starting at the Drill Hall and continuing to the Volunteer Park, where there was a fete and sports day. The Hawick War Memorial was erected in 1921 next to the Museum, and there are other memorials in many of the local villages. A book 'Hawick and the Great War, A Pictorial Record' was published in 1919 and a history, 'All These Fine Fellows', was written by Derek Robertson in 1999.

Great Warrington Sike (grā'-waw-rin'-in-sīk) n. stream in Castleton Parish, which rises on Larriston Fells and joins Storff Sike and then runs into Larriston Burn. There is a boundary bank and old enclosures near where it joins Storff Sike. Little Warrington Sike is to the north.

greazy (gree-zee) adj. greasy – 'A'm away ti a greazy spot' (i.e. very hot and sweaty; note the pronunciation).

greazy-binnder (gree-zee-bin-dur) n. properly called a linker, a worker in the knitwear industry who joined up the fronts and backs (across the shoulders) and sleeves of garments before they were washed (note the pronunciation).

Greazy Lizzy's (gree-zee-li-zeez) n. nickname sometimes used for the chip shop otherwise known as Telio's.

greazy-mender (gree-zee-men-dur) n. worker in a knitwear factory who mends garments before they are washed.

gree (gree) n., poet. honour, prize, good will, rank, superiority, pre-eminence – 'They shone as bright as diamonds in every degree, The Dumfries-shire Militia that day they bore the gree' [BY], 'If, in a land that aye was free, And o'er a stream that bears the gree ...' [AD], '... gif I dinna gie the gree til Jerusalem aboone my joye' [HSR], '... she bears the gree, the Queen o' a' the Border' [JT], 'There are the Taits o' Caberston, The Taits o' Holylee, The ladies o' the Juniper Bank, They carry a' the gree' [DJG] (from Old French; see also bear the gree).

'gree (gree) v., arch. to agree – 'Shame speed a' your jesting, my lord, quo' Dickie, Fala, &c. For nae sic jesting grees wi' me' [CPM], '... Whilk dang puir Yeddie's head agee, Till drunk he tumilt, An', as oor sacred authors gree, Life's garden bumilt' [JoHa], '... my advice t'ye is take a bottle o' yill an' 'gree; and as a Bailie o' this guid town and Brugh, ye'se hae my countenance and help' [RW], 'Ye see ma faither and me canna 'gree about the fishin' ...' [WNK] (also written 'gree'; cf. grei and see also gree't).

green (green) n. a grassy area attached to a house or group of houses – 'take they claes oot ti the dryin green'.

green (green) v., arch., poet. to desire, yearn – 'Nae company e'er green'd to skail, If John was by; Alas! that sic a man was frail, And born to die' [CPM], 'Alas! that day I'll ne'er forget, Was sure sae fear'd, and then sae fain; They came there, justice for to get, That ne'er will grein to come again' [CPM], 'Young first-time communicants, A' greenin', grainin', to be saunts' [JoHa], 'Gang down to Madge o' Miryfaulds – I ken, for her, ye grien' [JTe] (there are spelling variants).

greenit (gree-nee', -ni') pp., poet. desired, lusted – 'But greinet excessivlie in the wuldinriss, an' tempet God in the desart' [HSR].

Green (green) n. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Buccleuch according to the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls.

the Green (thu-green) n. name used to refer to Myreslawgreen – 'Aw was born at the 'Green' and she was brocht up at the Kirkstyle' [JEDM].

the Green (thu-green) n. former short form for the Green Kirk – '... the East-bank assemblage was inferior to that of the Green, both as regards the number of adherents and means at their disposal ...' [WNK].

Greena (green-u) n. former fortified house in the lower Liddel valley, south of Greena Hill, south-west of Kershope. It is located on the west side of the Liddel Water, roughly opposite the remains of Stonehouse Tower. From the remains it probably measured about 10 m by 7 m, and there is also evidence for 2 adjacent buildings in an enclosure. The name was probably 'Greenhaugh' in earlier times. It is probably the lands owned by Richard 'de Grenehau' recorded in an English record of 1281/2. James in Greenhaugh is mentioned in 1510 and 1515/6. In 1541 the lands of Greenhaughshaw were valued at 30 shillings and tenanted by John Forester. 'Will o Greena' was a well-known resident, possibly an Armstrong, who was killed in a duel with Foster of Stanegarthside, the site said to be marked with a stone. Will Foster of Greena is recorded in 1583 (and could be the same man). John Foster, son of 'Meikle Rowie of Greenhawgh' is recorded in 1583. A map dated 1590 shows a tower of 'Lard o' Jockes Grenehag' near the confluence of the Tinnis Burn with the Liddel Water. There could have been two separate farms of Over Greena and Nether Greena. Robbie Armstrong and James 'Dittone' were there in 1623, as well as Abie Foster. It is probably the 'Porterleyne Greina' possessed by Archibald Douglas in 1632; he was some kind of servant of William, Earl of Angus, and his lands were inherited by his daughter Margaret in 1634. William, brother to the deceased James Foster in Greena is listed as a wanted thief in 1642. Also in 1642 John Douglas of Gervald was granted the lands of 'Greina' and others. Sir William Douglas of Cavers was owner in 1643 when the lands were valued at £420. 'Harie forrester' paid the land tax (on £420) there in 1678. The residents there in 1694 were James Steel, James Robison, John Oliver, 2 James Armstrongs, 'Arck' Armstrong, John Armstrong and John Hall. In 1707 the lands were owned by Forester of Stanegarthside and by Oliver of Dinlabyre by the 1780s. The farm was valued at £420 in 1788 and in 1811, when owned by William Oliver of Dinlabyre. William Armstrong was a collier there and John Cairns a wright in 1799. Thomas Foster was a servant there in 1801. Labourer George Turnbull and his family lived there in 1841. Robert Jardine of Liddelbank paid the land tax there in 1874, with his home being on part of the former lands there (it is 'Grenehauche' in 1515/6, 'Grenehauchschaw' in 1541, 'Greina' and 'Greanay' in 1623, 'grinach' in 1678 and 'Grinna' in 1694; it is marked 'Grenehag' on Sandison's c.1590 map of the Deabateable Land, while 'N. Grina' and 'O. Grina' are marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map and it is 'Greena' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Greena Hill (green-u-hil) n. hill in the southern part of Castleside Parish, just west of Dinwoodie and the B6357. It reaches a height of 222 m and its summit has an 11 m diameter cairn, with a triangulation pillar on top. To the north-east is a quarry, as well as a disused lime kiln, and 2 further lime kilns by the Tinley Cleuch. To the south-west, by the Muir Burn, are the remains of a lime quarry, 2 lime kilns and another building. There are also several sheepfolds, as well as boundary banks and traces of rig lines all round the hill.

Greenbank (green-bawngk) n. another name for Greenbank Toll or the farmstead that was there before the tollhouse was built. John Balantyne was living there in 1766, Walter Cavers in 1767–71, John Hume in 1773, Charles Wilson in 1779, Walter Stewart in 1780, George Turnbull in 1781, John Muir in 1785–88, John Thomson was living there in 1795 and Walter Murray and James Scott in 1798. Adam Nichol was farmer there in 1797. Andrew Goodfellow was there in 1800. George Paterson was farmer there in the 1840s and 1850s (also sometimes 'Greenbanks'; it is on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Greenbankhaugh (green-bawngk-hawch) n. former name for a cottage to the south of the lower Borthwick road, next to the turn-off for the Snoot. Walter Scott and family were there in 1841, when it was 'Greenbanks haugh'.

Greenbank Hill (green-bawngk-hil) n. hill to the north-west of Greenbank and east of Alemoor Loch. It reaches a height of 336 m and there are signs of cord rig on its slopes.

Greenbank Plantin (green-bawngk-plawn'-in) n. plantation just to the east of Greenbank Toll.

Greenbank Toll (green-bawngk-tōl) n. former toll house at the sharp bend in the B711 about a mile west of Robertson. It was built in 1826 as an annex to the existing farmhouse when the new B711 was developed as a toll road. The small hatch for operating the tollbar can still be seen. A pond behind (to the north of) the house fed a former threshing mill and sawmill there. It is marked on the map as 'Greenbank' and was known locally as 'Greenbanks'. The farm was once part of the Borthwickbrae estate. With a plantation about 300 m to the west is a circular mound, about 22 m in diameter, which may be a burial cairn.

Greenbraeheids (green-brā-heedz) n. Greenbraeheads, a farm in the Slitrig valley just south of Hawick, reached over the Hummelknowes Bridge, or via a track off the top of Wellogate Brae. Robert Shiel and John Cairns were tenants there in 1797. James, John and Robert Shiel were farmers there in 1841 – '...While Greenbraehead (in older times Priestcrown) To meet Crowbyres send the signal down' [WNK].

Greenbraeheids Brig (green-brā-heedz-brig) n. another name for Hummelknowes Brig.

Green Burn (green-burn) n. stream to the west of Newcastleton, behind Kirk Hill. It runs south, joining Black Grain and flowing into the Tinnis Burn. The old farmstead of Greenburn lies along its banks, as well as grouse butts and old sheepfolds nearby. To the east are the remains of 2 huts.

the Green Cafe (thu-green-kaw-fee) n. cafe that stood at 80 High Street, at the bottom of Brougham Place, leading to the nickname for that street. It was established in 1838, and existed until around 1999. Latterly it has been painted red, and was for a while a confectioner's shop.

the Green Cafe Brae (thu-green-kaw-fee-brā) n. popular name for Brougham Place, also known as 'the Cafe Brae'.

the Green Cafe Brig (thu-green-kaw-fee-brig) n. occasional name for the road bridge across the former railway at the top of Brougham Place.

Green Cleuch (green-klooch) n. small stream on the south side of the Hermitage Water, between Gorrenberry and Twislehope.

green coat (green-kō') n. the long-tailed dress jacket in deep green, traditionally worn by the Principals during the Common Riding. The origin of this tradition is unknown. In the late 19th century it was stated that the form of the trousers had changed, but the green coat had long been used. The first record of a Cornet being fitted for a suit was in 1815, but it is unclear if this was green. Ex-Cornet's traditionally don their old jackets each year at the Dinner and Ball, the only other time it is worn being at the Mosstroopers' ball – '...privileged ti weer baith the green jersey and the green coat' [IWL].

Greenend Sidin (green-end-sī-din) n. siding on the Waverley Line by Greenend farm, between Belses and St. Boswells stations.

Greenfield (green-feeld) n. Marion (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Her name appears as 'old marioun grenfeild'. She was probably related to Thomas and William, who were also listed. John (b.1834/5) from Berwick, he was a teacher at Cavers School in the 1860s. He also served as Kirk Treasurer and Session Clerk. In 1861 he was a boarder, living at 20 Buccleuch Street in Hawick. Thomas (16th C.) recorded on a list of associates of Douglas of Cavers in 1541. William (16th C.) recorded on a list of associates of Douglas of Cavers in 1541.

the Green Gairdens (thu-green-gār-dinz) n. popular name in the 19th century for the area near Myreslawgreen before it was developed for the Convent and other buildings.

the Green Gress (thu-green-gres) n. the Green Grass, being an old West End name for the Loaning or Tryst ground. This was 1 acre and 34 poles in area and extended to both sides of what is now Rosebank Road. It was much used as a leisure area by West Enders, and as a gathering place for youths, leading to its other popular name the Sweerin Green.

Greenhaugh (green-hawch) n. lands in southern Liddesdale, probably an older name for Greena.

Greenheids Terrace (green-heedz-te-ris) n. Greenheads Terrace, street built in 1938 in the West End, named for being at the ‘head of the green’.

Greenhill (green-hil) n. farm to the north of North Synton, now known as Dryden Greenhill. Robert Scott of Greenhill was recorded as witness to a baptism in Hawick in 1685. George Henderson was a servant there in 1797 and Robert Douglas in 1799. Walter Inglis was a labourer in 1799 and William Inglis in 1801. Mrs. Govanlock was recorded as farmer there in 1868. The Ian Stark Equestrian Centre has been based here since 2013.

Greenhill (green-hil) n. Rev. Charles Kinnear (1817–86) born at Cash, Strathmiglo, Fife, son of Charles Kinnear and Christian Baxter. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1840 and was ordained to Garelochhead in 1844. The following year he was translated to Robertson Parish, where he was minister until his death. In 1851 and 1861 he was recorded at the Robertson Manse, living with his mother Christiana and sister Margaret, as well as 3 servants. He married Isabella, daughter of Horatius Blair of Glasgow, and she died in 1907. He wrote ‘Sermon on the Death of Allan Elliott Lockhart of Borthwickbrae’ (published in Hawick, 1878).

Greenholm (green-hōm) n. farm in Liddesdale, on the east side of the Hermitage valley near Snaberlee, opposite Redheugh. South Greenholm is marked on today’s Ordnance Survey map, with North Greenholm gone. Aerial photography has shown rig lines and an enclosure to the north-east. It should not be confused with the lands of ‘Greena’ further to the south (where the Tinnis Burn meets the Liddel Water). It may be the ‘Grenhowe’ recorded in 1365 when Edward III bestowed protection on John Thirlwall and his tenants there and in Roughley, and also the ‘Grenehew’, valued at 20 merks, in Liddesdale recorded in a rental list for Douglas of Morton in the 1370s. It was owned by Elliot of Redheugh in at least the late 15th and early 16th centuries. It was one of 3 farms that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. It was one of 3 farms given by the last Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his daughter Esther in about the 1640s. ‘Gulenflatt & Greeholme’ is listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Francis Elliot, Arthur Beattie and Archibald Armstrong recorded there. It was owned by William Manderson according to the 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, and valued (along with Leahaugh) at £136 15s 8d. John Rutherford was there in 1797, William Kyle in at least 1799–1801 and James Cavers in 1801. Walter Elliot was farmer there in 1840. William Dodd of Greenholm lived in Newcastleton in the 1860s and John Routledge was farmer there in 1868 (marked ‘Greenehoome’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and also on Stobie’s 1770 map; it may be ‘Greenholles’ in 1612, ‘grenehoilis’ in 1613, ‘Greinhollies’ in 1624, ‘Greinhoillis’ in 1637 and ‘Greenhollis’ in 1675).

Greenhouse (green-hoos) n. Greenhouse, farm between Hassendean and Belses. It was once in Minto Parish, being part of the Hassendeanburn estate. However, in most records it was in Lilliesleaf Parish and was part of the lands of Raperlaw in the 1643 Land Tax Rolls, owned by Turnbells and Davidsons. In 1678 it was partly owned by Ralph Davidson of Greenhouse (valued at £104) and part by Andrew Davidson (valued at £65). John Stewart and Walter Davidson were recorded there in 1694. Andrew Davidson paid tax for 13 windows there in 1748. In 1769 it was bought by Walter Turnbull of Firth from Andrew Davidson. In 1788 it was recorded as belonging to Robert Laidlaw in Kingledoors, valued at £210 5s 6d. In 1797 James Turnbull was farmer there, when it was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish. Tailor William Turnbull was there in 1799. In 1811 it is recorded that ‘Part of Davidson of Grenhouse’s Lands in Lilliesleaf’ had been acquired by Edgar Hunter and was then owned by William Riddell of Camieston; at the same time, Ralph Davidson’s part was valued at £104 and Andrew Davidson’s part at £65, both owned by Robert Laidlaw in Kingledoors, as well as part of Davidson’s lands valued at about £37. Alexander Horsburgh was there in the 1860s.

the Green Hut (thu-green-hu) n. name given to several small shops in Hawick over the years, particularly one near the top of the Loan on the right (once a chip shop, now closed), one built off Weensland Road near the top of Trinity Steps (also once a chip shop, and still flourishing as a convenience store), and one that sold ice-cream and other refreshments up the Park. Some of them have also been known as the ‘Wee Shop’. The general grocer’s on Weensland Road was run by the Whillans family in the mid-20th century and by Hunter & Logan in the latter part of the 20th century.

green jersey (green-jer-zee) n. the dark green shirt worn by Hawick Rugby club since 1885 and considered a badge of honour.

green kail (green-kāl) n. the curly variety of kail, Brassica oleracea acephala, kail generally – ‘Item, whatsomever person that steillis any of their neighbours peittis, turffis, green-kail, corn ...’ [BR1640], ‘... or steills their neighbours peats, green kail, or other goods, under the pain of fining ...’ [BR1696], ‘There’s naething i’ Hielants but green kail and leeks, And lang-leggit Hielantmen wantin’ the breeks; Wantin’ the breeks, and withoot hose or shoon, They’ll a’ get the breeks when Jamie comes hame’, ‘I do not mean the best of you to want meal a week ot twa, you have plenty of gonyell and green kail ...’ [WSB].

the Green Kirk (thu-green-kirk) n. popular name for the Hawick secession church at Myreslawgreen, also known as the West End Meeting House. It was established by the Anti-Burgher congregation after they had feued a piece of ground in Myreslawgreen in 1765 or 1766. Its roots went back to 1741, from which time several secessionists from in and around Hawick had attended the congregation at Midlem, and the minister there preached every third Sunday at Hutleburn farm near Ettrickbridge. This continued until the Hawick congregation was established in 1763, led by James Scott, farmer at Boonraw. The manse was not built until 1768. The church later become the West United Secession Church, after the breach in the Associate Synod had been healed, and was also described as the United Presbyterian Chapel. The first building of 1763 was replaced in 1823 (and a stone plaque bearing that date still survives). It was plain and unassuming and ceased to be used as a church in the 1870s, becoming a Masonic Hall until about 1923. It was also used for dances in the 1930s and the War years, when it was affectionately known as ‘the Rabble’. Afterwards it became a saleroom run by Bert Leishman and was finally demolished in 1969 and is now the site of Myreslaw Court. The congregation meanwhile moved to Orrock Church, which was built 1872/4 (probably on ‘particate’ lands once owned by shoemaker Robert Oliver). The Museum has 2 old collection ladles from the church and a communion token exists from 1768, as well as a communion cup and flagon inscribed ‘United Associate Church, Hawick, 1769’. A roll of the ministry is: Dr. John Young 1767–1806; Andrew Rodgie 1807–60; James Parlane 1857–69;

Thomas Cockburn 1869– (the name derives from Myreslawgreen rather than being any reference to colour).

Greenknowe Toor (green-now-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 16th tower just west of Gordon, between Earlston and Greenlaw. The area was originally home of the Gordons, with the L-shaped tower built in 1581 by the Setons and later sold to the Pringles. It has a famous clock-wise spiral staircase to give advantage to defenders.

Greenland Hill (green-lind-hil) n. site of a suicidal advance during the Battle of Arras in May 1917. 6th Battalion K.O.S.B. managed to advance, but were cut off. Few made it back alive and at least 14 local men are buried in unknown graves.

Green Lane (green-lān) n. street behind the old Parish Church location, above Buccleuch Street, named after the Green Wynd (Beaconsfield Terrace) which it leads off.

Greenlaw (green-law) n. town on the Blackadder Water, built in the 17th century and functioning as the county town of Berwickshire for 207 years until 1903. The Market Cross and Kirk are the oldest structures, with Hume Castle nearby. The last public hanging in Scotland took place here in 1834. The town contains the restored New Palace Theatre, home of the National Institute for Theatre Organ Studies, and the old Town Hall, built in a Greek Revivalist style in 1829. A polished jade axe-head found near here in about 1840 is a rare example of this type of neolithic artefact in Scotland. ‘An Old Berwickshire Town: History of the Town and Parish of Greenlaw, From the Earliest Times to the Present Day’ (1905) was written by Robert Gibson. Population (1991) 589 (the origin of the name is simply ‘green mound’).

Greenlaw (green-law) n. John (14th/15th C.) attendant of James Glesdstane of Cocklaw (Ormiston) who is said to have defied the Percys when they besieged the tower in 1403. He declared that he would give up the tower if not relieved by 1st August. But before then, the English army had already moved south towards Shrewsbury. He is depicted as the owner of the castle in Wilson’s ‘Tales of the Borders’. John (16th C.) presented to Wilton Kirk in 1549, following the death of Peter Langlands (also written ‘Girnelaw’, ‘Grenelaw’, etc.).

Green Law (green-law) n. hill in the southern part of Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 368 m. It is north of the much higher Carlin Tooth, and now lies within Wauchope Forest. The ridge to the north-east is called Tamshiel Rig, and has the remains of an Iron Age fort. To the north-west, near what was called Coblaw Plantation are the remains of a settlement, consisting of an enclosure and foundations of 2 buildings. The site has been mutilated by forestry activity. To the west of this settlement was an old cairn, about 10 m across, now destroyed by a forestry road.

green meat (green-mee) n., arch. vegetables in general, green ones in particular – ‘... in Scotland the tyranny of the kail-pot has so firm a hold on the national stomach, that our countrymen can scarcely understand any ‘green meat’ which will not submit to the all-receiving domestic crucible’ [JAHM].

Greenriver (gree-ri-vur) n. house and lands just west of Bonchester, formerly called Hobsburn and recently reverted to the original name. The 3-storey T-plan house was built about 1770, probably incorporating an older house of the early 1600s. The house was the main mansion of the Stonedge estate in the 18th century. It was renamed by James Chisholme after his Jamaican plantation in about 1793. He is recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797, when he owned 3 horses. William Easton was a gardener there in 1801. The Elliot family lived there in the 19th century. Robert Kerr Elliot is said to have left in a hurry in 1835 (when his father died) after being told by a builder that the house was unsafe; it still stands to this day. After that it was let out as rooms, and tenanted by Henry Elliot in the mid-1800s. The farm was tenanted by James Armstrong around 1900 (it is ‘Green River’ in 1797).

Greens (greenz) n. farm just south of Newcastleton and north of Mangerton, on the same side of the Liddel. It is probably the ‘Grenys’ listed as a 3-shilling land in c.1376 rentals around Mangerton among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton. In 1541 it was valued at 10 shillings, with tenant Thomas Armstrong, ‘the Bul’. ‘Abie’ Armstrong from there was hung for murdering a blind man on Ancrum Bridge in 1623. Andrew Crozier ‘Jeans Andro’ was also there in 1623. It was possessed by Jock and Ninian Armstrong in 1632. In 1667 Walter Lorraine was tenant there, and also Walter Lorraine (possibly son of the previous Walter) in 1682. Hugh Beattie was tenant in 1682. In 1694 William Armstrong was tenant, with Simon Armstrong also listed there. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 164 acres, bounded by a common to the east, Tweeden Burn to the south, the Liddel Water to the west and the lands of the Laird of Whithaugh to the north. The farm also had 22 acres of land on the other side of the Liddel Water, bounding on Millholm and it shared a common of 116 acres with the farms of Yethouse and Chingills. Robert Thomson was there in the early 18th century, followed by William Thomson. William Ogilvie was farmer there in 1797 and William Grieve was a servant there in 1799. William Scott was farmer in the first half of the 19th century. Little Ogilvie was stone mason there in 1851 and George Douglas a woodman in 1861 (note that this is easily confused with Greena near Kershope; it was ‘Grenys’ in 1541, ‘Greinis’ in 1623, ‘Greenesse’ in 1632 and ‘Greins’ in 1667 and 1694; it is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Greens (thu-greenz) n. popular name for Hawick R.F.C. after the dark green jerseys they have worn since 1885. Also used to refer to Mansfield Park as a location or the team’s clubrooms – ‘... Lost your bonnet, and a’ that was left o’ your voice, As the Greens got the wunnin’ try’ [DH].

Greenshields (green-sheeldz) n. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Deans and their children included: Janet (b.1684); and James (b.1687). Along with Stephen (who was quartermaster of the weavers) he witnessed a baptism in 1685 for John Scott and Jane Bell. James (17th C.) tenant in Birneyknow. He was recorded in 1684 on a long list of people declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. His name is recorded as ‘Greenshiels’. He was probably related to the Covenanter John. James (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is probably the James recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men (including Steven, to whom he was surely related), for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He may be the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose son James was baptised in Hawick in 1684. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Whithope in Robertson Parish. His children included: John (b.1717); an unnamed son (b.1719); and James (b.1721). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1677. John (d.1679) from Cavers Parish. He drowned on the 'Crown of London' when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys when carrying a cargo of Covenanters captured at Bothwell Bridge and bound for America. Robert (17th C.) resident in Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name is written as 'Greinsields' and he is listed 'with an kilne', suggesting he was an artisan of some sort. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1703 for weaver Walter in Branhholme Town and in 1705 for weaver Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the Robert who married Margaret Henry and whose child Christian was baptised in 1703. Robert (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. In 1702 he married Margaret Henry, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included Christian (b.1703). Steven (17th/18th C.) quartermaster of the weavers in Hawick in 1693. In that year John Hardie was fined for pushing him out of his seat in the balcony of St. Mary's Kirk, as well as pulling at his bonnet. Along with James (who was surely a relative) he witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1685 for John Scott and Jane Bell. He also witnessed a baptism for John Thomson in Hawick in 1687. He is probably the Steven recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men (including James, to whom he was surely related), for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town's flock, without paying the Town Herd. He was listed as a weaver among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. In 1694 he was 'Steivan Greinsheils' among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He is probably the Steven, son of Thomas and Janet Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1647. He is probably the Steven, married to Bessie Bridges, whose son Thomas was baptised in 1683, and perhaps also the Steven, married to a Rule, whose daughter Janet was baptised in 1687. The witnesses in 1683 were Francis Scott and William Swan. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Smith and their children included: William (b.1640). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Scott and their children included Robert (b.1643); Steven (b.1647); and George (b.1651). Walter was one of the witnesses in 1647, and surely related. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the son of Steven who was born in 1683. In 1707 he was a witness for a baptism for fellow weaver Adam Scott. He is recorded as 'Greenshells' in 1714 when he (with John Swan as cautioner) pleaded with the Session to allow his weak child to be baptised, although he and his wife were 'under scandal'. In 1720 he witnessed baptisms for weaver James Scott and (with weaver James Scott) for weaver John Stevenson. He married Janet Scott and their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included Robert (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were shoemakers John Scott and William Riddell. Perhaps the same weaver Thomas also married Bessie Telfer (from Hobkirk Parish) in Hawick in 1724. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Elliot and their children included Isobel (b.1646); and Robert (b.1649). William (b.1652) may also have been his son. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: John (b.1653); Bessie (b.1655); and Janet (b.1657). Walter (17th/18th C.) weaver in Branhholme Town. He married Bessie Mitchellhill and their daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1703, with witnesses tailor Walter Gledstains and weaver Robert in Hawick (who was surely related). William (17th C.) resident of Ormiston (although it is unclear if this was the local one or not). His testament was recorded in 1687. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1710 he was fined for fighting with William Hill (another weaver) in St. Mary's Kirk. They apparently scuffled before the service (probably over seating) then struck at each other during the sermon. He could be the William whose daughter Marion was baptised in Hawick in 1692 (also written 'Greensheils', 'Greenshells', 'Greenshels', 'Greenshiells', 'Greensheils', 'Greenshells', 'Greinsheills', 'Greinsheils' and variants).

Greenshiels (green-sheelz) n. former lands in Castleton Parish, south-west of Foulshiels and west of Redheugh. It was listed on a rental roll of c.1376 in the 'Quarterium de Ludne'. Thomas Armstrong was tenant there in 1535 when he was denounced as a rebel along with other Armstrongs. There are remains of a farmstead and related structures on both sides of the banks of Greenshiels Sike. There are old boundary dykes defining the lands, including a field system and some rig lines. The farmstead consisted of at least 4 separate buildings, plus turf huts. The farm appears to have been abandoned during the 17th century. Further up the burn, on the eastern side there are 3 shieling-huts and an enclosure (it is 'Greneschelis' in c.1376 and 1535 and marked 'Greensheels' on Blaeu's 1654 map; note that it is easy to confused with Greens, south of New-castleton).

Greenshill

Greenshill (greenz-hil) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Rolls, when James Johnstone was farmer. It is probably related to Grain Hill.

Greenside (green-sīd) n. house on Main Street in Denholm, which held the Post Office in the 20th century, until 1966.

Greenside Bog see Greenside Moss

Greensidehaa (green-sīd-haw, -hal) n. farm in the northern part of Wilton, reached along Greensidehall Road. Walter Cook was there in 1708 and Adam Easton was tenant in 1709. Robert Easton was there in 1725. Bessie Sanderson died there in 1750. John Cook was there in 1797. It was owned by the Scotts of Whitehaugh in the early 19th century. John Ferguson is recorded there in 1797 and James Davidson in 1841. Robert and David Campbell were farmers in the 1860s (it is 'Greensydehall' in 1725; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map of Roxburghshire).

Greensidehall Road (green-sīd-hal-rōd) n. road connecting Stirches Road with Greensidehall farm and the Heap Hills, the name being unofficial.

Greenside Moss (green-sīd-mos) n. former name for a boggy area near the eastern edge of the Common, roughly corresponding to where Acreknowe Reservoir was later formed. In 1734 it was one of the parts of the Common where the Town complained that the tenants of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs were encroaching. It was largely drained in 1788 (also called 'Greenside Bog', a name that appears in the 1767 description of the Common, and 'Girnside Bog', which is recorded in the 1788 Council records).

Green Sike (green-sīk) n. stream that joins the Hermitage Water to the east of the Castle. The White Dyke follows part of its course. There are also other boundary dykes, rig lines and remains of a mill-lade there.

Green Sike (green-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on the eastern slopes of Millstone Edge. Near where it joins the Hartsgarth Burn there are the remains of a shepherd's bothy, 2 or 3 shieling huts, a couple of sheep shelters and an enclosure.

Green Terrace (green-te-ris) n. street in the West End, very steep at its higher part. It was built in 1866, and named after Myreslawgreen. It contains the High Level Bar, and once also had a fish and chip shop.

Greenwud (green-wud) n. Greenwood, former name for Girnwood, described as the lands of 'Greenwood and the Lyne' in several documents from the 15th to 17th centuries.

the Greenwud (thu-green-wud) n. the Greenwood, former name for a wood on the Wells estate. As factor of the estate, Archibald Jerdan described how 206 ash trees from there were cut and the timber sold in the second quarter of the 18th century.

Greenwud (green-wud, -wood) n. (Greenwood) C.J. (19th C.) made a drawing of the Tower Knowe and High Street around 1850. Luke (b.c.1844) manufacturer who resided at Howlands. He was Acting Father in 1891. He married Euphemia Cranston. Their eldest daughter Mary married Dr. George Bannerman. Another daughter, Jessie, married William Oliver of Thornwood. Robert (1811–86) born in England, probably son of Luke and Betty of Rochdale. He was a textile designer and manufacturer in Hawick, partner in Greenwood, Watt & Co., with factory at Howland Mills. He came to Hawick in about 1833 (perhaps after making the acquaintance of John Wilson, who went to the Rochdale area to learn the trade of flannel weaving), later setting up his own business at Weensland Mill. He was said to be one of the first people to introduce power-looms to the mills of Hawick. He was also the first to use looms with 'rising boxes' (it is said that he solved one of the mechanical difficulties through the inspiration of a dream). In 1841 and 1851 he was recorded on the census as a woollen power-loom weaver, living at Weensland Mill Houses. He married Mary McBurnie, who was born in Cavers Parish. They had 9 children, including: Ann; Janet, who was mother of composer Francis George Scott; Elizabeth; Mary, who married Andrew Hall; Luke, tweed manufacturer; Grace; Jane Maria, mother of painter William Johnstone; Isabella (b.1855); and Robert Thomas (b.1858), draper. Robert (19th/20th C.) commission agent in Hawick. Greenwud, Watt & Co. (green-wud, waw'-in-kō) n. Messrs. Greenwood, Watt & Co., tweed manufacturers. This partnership built Teviotdale Mills (Commercial Road) in 1877 and extended to build Howlands Mill on Victoria Road in the early 1880s. They moved out of Teviotdale Mills in 1888, and suffered during the manufacturing decline in the 1910s, eventually selling Howlands Mill to Sime, Williamson & Co.

the Green Wynd (thu-green-wīnd) n. former name for the road that led from the Loan towards Myreslawgreen and turned through what is now Morrison Place to join the river at the Coble Entry. It was originally part of the boundary of the area known as 'the Acre'. The land there was owned by Bailie Turnbull in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It is clearly drawn on Wood's 1824 map. It was mistakenly labelled as what had been 'Westport Road' (Beaconsfield Terrace) on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map, and hence there is later confusion about whether Beaconsfield Terrace or Morrison Place is the 'Green Wynd' – 'There's just ae road to Heaven, and that's up the Green Wynd' [JD].

Greenwynd Fit (green-wīnd-fi) n. former name for the bottom of the Green Wynd, corresponding roughly to the modern Buccleuch Place. The name is used on the 1841 census.

the Greetin Denner (thu-gree'-in-de-nur) n. informal dinner of the Cornet and guests, taking place on the Saturday evening after the Flag has been returned. Prizes are presented to supporters who were successful in the races, and the attendees select a 'Hornet' who carries a 'besom'. It is a particularly poignant occasion for the Left-Hand Man, who is wearing the uniform for the last time. After the dinner the Principals and guests usually visit the Shows or go back up to the Moor to listen to the live bands. The last such dinner was held in the early 2000s, and now there is a more low-key gathering of the Big Eight and friends.

His uncle was Walter from Hawick. He was an actuary with the Hawick Savings Bank and manager of the Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, Ltd. He died unmarried and left several gifts to the town. Andrew (b.1821/2) seed merchant in the Cross Wynd in 1851. His wife was Janet and their children included James. Archibald (16th/17th C.) resident of Caerlenrig in 1618. Walter Scott of Buccleuch complained that he had cut down 60 alder trees from his lands of Gorrenberry, with other men from upper Teviotdale (including Robert in Lymiecleuch) also being accused of stealing timber. He was ordered by the Privy Council to pay the Laird of Buccleuch £40. Archibald (c.1775–1852) son of Walter and Janet Grieve. His father farmed at Easter Alemoor, Hangingshaw and also Perthshire, where he was born. He married Agnes Stephenson in Yarrow Parish in 1811. He died in Ohio, U.S.A. Arthur Charles (1876–93) 3rd son of Charles John of Braxholme Park. He served as a midshipman in the Royal Navy. He was on the H.M.S. Victoria off Tripoli when it collided with H.M.S. Camperdown during manoeuvres. Only 202 of the 718 men were rescued, and he himself drowned, with his older brother William Herbert on the nearby 'Nile' witnessing the whole thing. He and his brother have a memorial plaque in St. Cuthbert's Church. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He could be the labourer who married Margaret Oliver and whose son William died in 1872. Charles John (1841–1915) farmer at Branhholme Park, like his father. His twin brother James Alexander died at a young age. He was son of William and Eliza Anne Gordon. He received an LL.B. from Cambridge University in 1866. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1878. He was a church warden at St. Cuthbert's and became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1898. In 1870 he married Elizabeth (1842–1914), 2nd daughter of Charles Alleyne Willing. Their children were: Amy Francis (b.1871); James Wyndham Alleyne (1872–1939); Mary Evelyn (1873–1923); William Herbert (1874–1908), who died in a naval explosion in Queensferry; Arthur Charles (1875–93), who went down with the flag-ship 'Victoria' aged 17; Betha Helen (1877–1937); Marion Catherine (b.1878); Christina (1879–1945); Dorothy Forster (b.1881); Charles Walter (1882–1929); Alexander Norman (1884–1920); Margaret Bruce (b.1885); and Nigel Gordon (b.1889). Charles Walter (1882–1929) farmer of Branhholme Park, son of Charles John, he was educated at Glenalmond School. He was President of Teviotdale Farmers' Club and served in WWI as Squadron Sergeant-Major in the Lothians and Borders Horse. He was also a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert's. He later lived at Westerdykes. He married a daughter of Thomas Anderson Laing. He was Acting Father in 1919, the first Common Riding after the war. Christian nee Brydon (1784/5–1854) from Ettrick Parish, she married Walter J. of Langwell. After his death she moved into Hawick. In 1851 she was an 'Annuitant' living at about 12 Buccleuch Street, and in Slater's 1852 directory she is listed among the local gentry there. Christopher (18th/19th C.) resident at Slaidhills in about 1822. His son William was born in Teviothead Parish in 1804. Probably the same Christopher was servant at Shankend according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish and shepherd at Shankend on the 1801 Militia ballot. Christopher Murray real name of Hugh MacDiarmid. David (1788–1856) son of shepherd Robert and brother of Hawick slater Walter. He was born when his parents were living at Green-sidehall. In 1820 he married Maragret Murray in Selkirk. He had his own slater's and glazier's business in Selkirk. He died of cancer of the ear and was buried at Ashkirk. Elliot (c.1777–1858) born in Fortingall, Perth son of local farmer Walter and Janet Grieve. He was thus related to both the Colterscleuch and Deanburnhaugh branches of the family. He farmed at Huntly in Yarrow. In 1826 he married Harriet Turnbull (d.1857), recorded in Yarrow Parish; she died in 1857, aged 67. Their children included: Walter (b.1828/9); and Janet (of Jessie, 1832–77), who married Robert Grieve, tenant in Over Huntly. He was at Lower Huntly in 1841 and Outer Huntly in 1851. He died at Over Huntly and is buried at Borthwick Waas, where the gravestone appeared to say he died in 1852, aged 75. Elliot (c.1784–1874) son of John and Elizabeth Paisley. His children were born in Castleton parish, some of them at Blinkbonny. He married Janet Elliot (c.1777–1825) and their children were: Elizabeth (Lizzie, 1812–1907), who married Edward Dun; John (1806–38); Janet (1808–1906), who married Ninian Elliot; Sameul (b.1808), who probably died young; William Elliot (1810–80); Christian (or Catherine, b.1814), who married George Laidlaw; and Elliot (b.1816) and Ninian (b.1818), who died in infancy. The family emigrated to Canada, and lived in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario. He secondly married Jane Baty. George of Easter Swanshiel (b.1731) buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. He probably acquired his farm from the Turnbells who had owned it earlier, perhaps through being related. The session register says his funeral had use of the 'new plush moar-cloth'. He was succeeded by James, probably his brother. George (1779–1841) eldest son of John and Isabella Turnbull. His father farmed at Craik and Hoscote. He was christened in Robertson Parish. He inherited Craik, as well as Outer-side and Meadshaw. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 work horses at 'Creak', as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Craik in 1797. He farmed along with his brother Walter until the collapse of the wool market around 1817. He is also said to have farmed as Creich in Sutherland, but it is unclear if this is an error for 'Craik'. He moved to Edinburgh and in 1832 emigrated to Quebec, Canada with his family. In about 1809 he married Minto (b.1790), daughter of William Bell and Markie Minto. His children were: Marky Minto (1810–46), who married Charles M. Murray; Isabella (1812–1901), who married John William Schneider; Jessie (b.1814); John, who died young after wandering off in the winter; William Bell (1818–85), who married Elizabeth Fairbairn; and another John (b.1820), who married Nancy Sweet. He is buried in Montreal. George (1805/6–49) toll-keeper at Hawick's Eastern Toll at the time of the 1841 census, moving to the North (or Dove-mount) Toll Bar later. He married Margaret Lambert in 1828, and she was the sole toll-keeper by the 1851 census. Their children included William (b.1831), James (b.1833), Isabella (b.1835) and Jane (b.c.1838). He was probably the George born to William and Jean Manuel in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1801. George (b.1818/9) from Ettrick Parish, he was farmer at West Buccleuch. He was listed as a 'Stock Farmer' there in 1861. In 1868 he was recorded as farmer at Buccleuch and Ramseycleuch. George (1868–1960) son of James, farmer at West Buccleuch, where he himself was farmer later. He was born in Innerleithen and his mother was Christina Glendinning. He married Violet Glendinning, who died at Drinkstone farm in 1962, aged 76. They had daughters Williamena Mary Forster and Jean. He is buried at Ettrick. Gideon (18th C.) son of Walter in Colterscleuch. He married Isabel Laidlaw. Their children were: Walter (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1744). Gideon (18th C.) married Betty Ruecastle in Hawick in 1761. He may be the Gideon, son of Walter, who was one of 2 young men carried off from the Auld Brig during the great flood of 1767. Gilbert (b.c.1770s) labourer at Castleweary according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. William was also listed in the same place and so probably his brother. Hugh (18th C.) 'gauger' or exciseman in Hawick. In a baptismal record of 1789 he is recorded as 'Officer of Excise'. His son William died in Hawick in 1797. He is probably the Hugh who witnessed a baptism for Joseph Henderson in 1794. He married Helen Walker and their children, mostly baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1779); Elizabeth (b.1780), baptised in Kelso; John (b.1787); Walter (b.1789); James (b.1791); and Helen (b.1796). In 1789 the witnesses were tanner John Elliot and merchant James Dickson. Isabella nee Laidlaw (1764–1857) daughter of David Laidlaw from Highchesters. In 1785 she married Robert, shepherd at Harden, Heap, Todshaw, Greensidehall, etc. She had at least 7 children and died aged almost 93. James (16th C.) possibly from the Selkirk area. Along with Patrick Murray of Falahill and 'Sanders' Murray, he owed payment to the King, which in 1539 resulted in these 3 men giving 289 sheep to Robert Scott of Howpasley and Ninian Anderson. described about 1580 as factor to the Countess of James (16th C.) described about 1580 as factor to the Countess of Bothwell, i.e. Margaret Douglas, widow of Walter Scott of Branxholme. This may have been at Milsington. He is said to have been the ancestor of Walter, first known Grieve tenant of Branxholme Park, as well as the Grieves who farmed Commonsides. It is unclear if he was an original 'grieve', however, a family tradition says that the local family was descended from the McGregor Clan. James (d.bef. 1621) recorded as 'in Bowmanehill', which may be 'Bowanhill' near Teviothead. He was foreman of the jury in 1612 which heard the case involving the death of Jock Elliot while imprisoned in the steeple of Hawick Kirk. His son William inherited his lands of Brotherton in 1619, when he was 'in Bowinhill'. He was deceased by 1621 when his son William complained that Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst had broken an agreement with his father and owed him £40. James (17th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Hawick in 1648. Their son James was born the following year, and could have been James of Commonsides. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1650. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Telfer and their son Archibald was baptised in 1655. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Beatrix Gledstains and their son John was born in 1670. James (17th C.) tenant in Hyndhope (but it is unclear which one). The will of his wife Isobel Anderson is recorded in 1681. James (17th C.) tenant in Buccleuch farm. In about 1785 he was summoned before the Circuit Court in Peebles for being a Covenanter. Threatened with the loss of his farm and livelihood he weakened and agreed to take 'the Test'. However, later a group of Covenanters met secretly near his farm, as a result of which he was arrested and fined 12,000 merks. After the Revolution he returned as tenant at Buccleuch and his descendants farmed there for long afterwards. He could be the James whose children, baptised in Ettrick Parish, included an unnamed child (b.1695), Adam (b.1697), Thomas (b.1698) and John (b.1701). James (17th C.) tenant for the Duchess of Buccleuch at Linhope in the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (17th C.) shepherd at Priestthaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Ruletown in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 4 hearths there 'for himself & cottars'. James (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Hassendean Mains. James 'Wester James' (17th/18th C.) tenant in Commonsides. He was listed at Commonsides on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax for 2 hearths. He witnessed baptisms in 1699 for James Anderson in Ramsaycleuchbun and in 1704 for Robert Rodger in Whitchesters. He may also be the James in Commonsides who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Dryden in 1706. Note there are (at least) 2 contemporary James Grieves associated with Commonsides, making it difficult to distinguish him. They were 'the two James Grieves tenants in Commonsides' who witnessed a baptism in 1711 for John Nichol, herd in Lairhope. He married Janet Elliot in Hawick Parish. Their children included: Helen (b.1700), who married John Anderson in 1723; Elspeth (b.1701), who in 1720 married William Grieve, probably a cousin, and had a daughter Joan, who married Dr. James Mounsey; James (b.1703), who became a doctor in Russia; and John (b.1705), who appears to have died young. The witnesses in 1700 were a different James (perhaps 'Easter') and William Waugh. In the 1705 baptism record he is 'distincionis causa called Wester James', and the witnesses were Adam Elliot in Lymiecleuch and Thomas Pringle in Cavers. He could be the same as the James in Commonsides who died in 1712. James (1669–1712) younger son of William, farmer in Commonsides. If he really died in 1712 (as appears on the gravestone in Borthwick Waas), then another James Grieve must have taken over from him as tenant of Commonsides. His son William was farmer at Colterscleuch and Southfield. He could be the James 'easter in Commonsides' who in 1708 (along with Walter in Branhholme Park) witnessed a baptism for James Laidlaw, cottar in Branhholme Park; he was probably 'Easter' to distinguish him from 'Wester James'. They were 'the two James Grieves tenants in Commonsides' who witnessed a baptism in 1711 for John Nichol, herd in Lairhope. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their son James was baptised in 1700. James (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Grieve in Hawick in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Commonsides. His family had farmed there for many years. However, he appears to be different from the earlier James, who died in 1712. The rental records for 'Teviotdale Head' mention James senior and junior in Commonsides in the period 1715–18. He is mentioned in a marriage record of 1720 for his servant at Commonsides, Agnes Falside. He retired about 1724, after which the lease of Commonsides was taken by Walter Scott, later of Wauchope. He became an elder of Hawick Kirk in 1723. In 1723 he also informed the Session about the 'Fiftie merks, left in legacie by Margaret Grieve, his aunt' (this may suggest that they were both children of Walter of Branhholme Park). Either he or perhaps his father was the James who 'mortified' 100 'merks' for the poor of Hawick Parish, this being given out (mainly to those from the country parts) in 1715. He could be James who witnessed baptisms for William Hislop in 1721 and for Walter Scott in Newbigging and for William Coltart, servant in Commonsides, in 1722. He could have been the James who married Beatrix Gledstains in Hawick in about 1669. He could have been the James born to James and Margaret in Hawick in 1649 or the son of John and Beatrix Gledstains born in Hawick in 1646. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Jackson and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1714. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism for John Robison in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Armstrong and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Helen (b.1701), with witnesses smith John Scott and glover John Hart. He may be the tenant at Drinkstone in 1711 whose son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish, with witnesses Robert Scott in Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He may be the James in Drinkstone who witnessed a baptism for Robert in Fenwick in 1714. He may be the James who witnessed a Wilton baptism in 1721. James (b.1713) may also have been his child. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Teindside, where he was recorded in 1700 and 1710. He married Isobel Grieve and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: James (b.1700); and Isobel (b.1710). The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Scott in Drinkstone and in 1709 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Adam Elliot of Arkleton. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Grieve and their children included: Margaret (b.1709); and Jean and Elspeth (b.1724). It is possible this is the same man as the tenant in Commonsides married to Isobel Grieve. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Todshawhaugh in 1714, 1716, 1718 and 1723. In 1714 his servant James Leithead got married. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for John Dickson, workman at Branhholme. Also in 1718 his servant Marion Laidlaw got married in Hawick. Perhaps the same James was at Outerside in 1718 and Eilrig in 1722. His children probably included (although there could be 2 families here): William (b.1711); Robert (b.1713); Helen (b.1716); William (again, b.1718); Agnes (b.1719); James (b.1722); Janet (b.1723); and James (again, b.1726). James of Easter Swanshiel (d.1733) probably brother of George, who was Laird before him. However, he only held the lands for a couple of years after his brother. He is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. After his death Easter Swanshiel was sold and annexed to Wolfelee. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in 'Ridge', i.e. Caerlenrig. He married Janet Wilson and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1720. He could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (1684–1781) son of Walter and Blanche Borthwick. Like his father, he was tenant farmer at Branhholme Park, as well as Todshawhaugh. He is probably the James who is recorded being in arrears for the rent of Todshawhaugh in the period 1712–18. The 'servitrix' to his children, Dorothy MacVittie, was married in 1721. In 1734 he is probably the James who witnessed the baptism of Gilbert Elliot (his grandson) in Hawick. He is recorded as tenant at Todshawhaugh in 1735. He re-leased Todshawhaugh from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744, but was recorded being in arrears shortly afterwards. He is recorded in a farming record of Robert Elliot (in Hermitage) in 1749. In 1751 he was renting 'Whelmes' as well as Todshawhaugh. There are letters of his to Scott of Harden in the 1760s in the National Archives. He was probably the James in 'Branhholm-Park' listed as a subscriber to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784), presumably signing up years before it was published. In 1707 he married Helen, daughter of John Laing of Westerkirk. His children included: Walter (1710–99), baptised in Robertson, the eldest son, who succeeded as tenant in Branhholme Park; Robert (1725–83), who married Jean Curle; William (1726–86), tenant in Southfield; James (1737–73), who married Janet, daughter of William Scott of Woll; Jane, who married Capt. John Elliot of Southfield and Brugh, probably baptised in Robertson in 1708; Anne (b.1721), baptised in Robertson; Margaret; and Fanny. James (b.1726), son of James in Todshawhaugh, baptised in Robertson Parish, also seems likely to be his child (even if the dates clash with those of other children). If James really was born in 1737, then this suggests he was married twice. He and several of his family are buried at Borthwick Waas. His wife is probably the 'Mrs Grieve Todziehaugh' who witnessed a baptism in 1757 for a child of Walter in Branhholme Park (her son). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish.

His daughter Janet was baptised in 1712. James in Commonsideside (c.1694–1772) eldest son of Walter in Colterscleuch. In 1722 he could be the James of Commonsideside who, along with Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig and Robert Scott of Skelfhill petitioned the Presbytery for a preacher and meeting house in their district. In 1722 he married Helen (1702–84), daughter of Gilbert Elliot of Brugh and Agnes Turnbull, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Kirkton Parishes; she died at Broadlee in 1784, aged 84, and is buried at Borthwick Waas. As well as Commonsideside, he also farmed at Soudenrig and Over Huntly. In 1723 he was at Soudenrig and in 1724 was recorded being in Braidhaugh. He was at Southdeanrig again in 1726, 1733 and 1735. The following children (baptised in Cavers Parish) are probably mostly his: Helen (b.1720); Janet, who died young; Isabel (b.1723); twins Robert (b.1724) and William (b.1724); Walter (again, b.1725); Agnes (b.1726); Gilbert (b.1728); James (b.1729); William (again, b.1729); Walter (b.1729); William (again, b.1731); Walter (again, b.1733); John (b.1735); Janet (again, 1737–1816), who married Walter Grieve, son of Robert in Deanburnhaugh; Thomas (b.1739); William (again, b.1741); Margaret (b.1743); and possibly an unnamed son (b.1743). He is buried in Borthwick Waas cemetery, where the headstone said he was 78 years old. His children James (d.1751, transcribed as 2 years old, but it would make more sense if this was 22) and Agnes are also commemorated on the same stone, as well as John and 'brethren and 1 sister died while children'. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Shiel, as recorded in 1722. He married Janet Nixon in Robertson in 1720. Their daughter Elspeth was baptised in Hawick in 1722, with witnesses Thomas Watson (Clerk to the Regality) and Bailie George Martin. James (18th C.) married Helen 'Shortridge' in Robertson in 1727. Janet (b.1737) could be their child. James (18th C.) married Marion Riddell in Hobkirk in 1729. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish whose daughter Agnes was baptised in 1739. Dr. James (1703–63) son of tenant farmer James (possibly called 'Wester James') and Janet Eliot, he was born in Hawick Parish. He also had an older sister, Elspeth (b.1701), who married William Grieve, and whose daughter Joan married Dr. James Mounsey. It is unclear how he was related to other local branches of the Grieve family, but it is possible they were descended from Grieves in Commonsense. Note that secondary sources describing his life are often contradictory. He studied medicine at Edinburgh University, graduating with an M.D. in 1733. His first position was in Russia, as a doctor at the Kazan and Siberian factories. By 1744 he was physician to the St. Petersburg land hospital, as well as to a guard's hospital. In 1743 he married Elizabeth Tamesz (1725–58), said to be either Dutch or German. He then became St. Petersburg city physician, Deputy Director of the Russian Medical Chancery and physician to Empress Elizabeth, before transferring to Moscow as its city physician. In 1751 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in Edinburgh. He returned to Britain in 1757 to arrange the education of his son James Tamesz (1744–87), practised medicine in London, but returned to Russia in 1761. He then appears to have been working for John Hobart, Earl of Buckinghamshire, the British Ambassador. He is said to have received a snuff-box inscribed 'Presented by the Empress Catherine to her body physician James Grieve' in French. He translated 'The History of Kamtschatka, and the Kurilski Islands' (1764, facsimile editions 1963 and 1973). His only son, James Tamesz inherited his mother's fortune, became a Moscow businessman, purchased property in Scotland and Surrey and is buried at Bath Abbey. He himself died in Moscow, although some sources suggest he was the physician at Charterhouse Square who died there in 1773. James (1713/14–1801) gardener at Newton. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son James was baptised in 1764. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Easter Ale Moor in 1765 when his son Robert was baptised. He could be the James who married Jean Scott in Robertson in 1762. James (b.1772 and William (b.1773) could also be his children. James (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included William (b.1763), Thomas (b.1766), Christian (b.1771) and James (b.1773). James (1737–73) son of James and brother of Walter, tenant at Branhholme Park. In 1771 he married Janet, daughter of William Scott of Woll; this is probably the marriage recorded in Robertson Parish. There is a James and Janet Scott to whom several children were born in Yarrow in the 1770s and 1780s; if this is him, then he died after 1790. He is probably the James 'Junior' who witnessed a baptism for William in Southfield (presumably his brother) in 1763. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish whose son Thomas was baptised in 1766. James (18th C.) married Margaret Halliday in Hawick Parish in 1770. James (18th C.) recorded in Harden in 1772 when his son James was baptised. Probably the same man is described as 'the now deceased Mr. James Grieve' in 1773 when his son William was baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (1751–1838) son of Walter, from whom he succeeded as tenant of Branhholme Park. He is probably the 'James Grieve, Hawick' who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784), with his grandfather James in Branhholme Park listed separately. He subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the James recorded at Todshawhaugh on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as at Branhholme Park in 1788 and 1782–94. He described the flood of early 1796, which swept away most of the ruins of Hassendean Kirk, and he had the remains of his relatives the Ogilvies re-interred at Ashkirk. He is recorded in 1797 as tenant at Branhholme Park, with 11 farm horses. He farmed on a large scale, also being tenant of Riccarton, Braidlie and Sundhope (in Liddesdale), Todshawhaugh and Harden (on the Borthwick), Buccleuch (in Ettrick) and Smale (in Northumberland). He was one of the trustees for the estate of William Oliver 'Auld Cash' (who died in 1808). Extracts from his diary were published in the Transactions in 1950. In 1821 he made some notes relating to the characters in the song 'The Bonnie Lass o' Branhholm'. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In the 1832 electoral roll he was listed as a joint tenant (with William) of the Duke of Buccleuch's lands at Branhholme Park. He is said to have told his son that in the past Branhholme was so heavily wooded that a man could ride on a white horse from Todshawhaugh to the Castle Hill without anyone being able to see the horse. He married Agnes Hall (and not Ann Sibbald, who married his cousin James), and she died in 1836. Their children were: William Oliver, tenant in Branhholme Park; and Thomas of Skelfhill. Note that he should not be confused with his cousin James, who farmed at Bramxholme Braes at about the same time. James (18th C.) postilion (i.e. carriage driver) at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. It is possible he is the James whose son William was baptised in Cavers in 1789. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Cecil Liddel and their son John was baptised in 1787. James (18th C.)

recorded at Howpasley in 1787 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Betty (b.1788) and Margaret (b.1794). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Moorfarm' (in Wilton Parish) according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. James (b.1763) son of William, farmer in Southfield. He was tenant at Roan in Castleton Parish, being recorded there on the 1788–97 Horse Tax Rolls, and in 1797 when he owned 4 farm horses. He was also taxed for having a greyhound in 1797. He was also said to be of 'Roandead'. In 1795 his child 'Elliot', with Isabel 'Whotson', was baptised in Castleton; the mother may be the woman of the same name who was the 2nd wife of Robert Jardine, farmer at Harwood on Teviot. James (c.1771–1862) son of Walter, farmer at Easter Ale Moor, Hangingshaw, etc. In 1803 he married Janet Brodie in Yarrow. Their children included Jessie, who married Dr. William Buchan Lorraine (who was born in Selkirk). James, J.P. (1773–1855) son of Robert, farmer at Stonedge, and Jean Curle. He was grandson of James, tenant in Todshawhaugh and Branhholme Park, and cousin of James who was contemporary tenant in Branhholme Park. He himself was farmer at Branhholme Braes. He is probably the James who was renting Branhholme Town and Castlehill farms in 1792 and who was renting Branhholme Town in the period 1834–43. He was recorded at Flex on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1792–94. In 1797 he is recorded in the Farm Horse Tax list as tenant of Branhholme Braes and Flex, with 7 horses for farm use. He also paid tax in 1797 on 3 non-working dogs. He was one of the trustees for the estate of William Oliver 'Auld Cash' (who died in 1808). He was among the first to be listed on the 'Donations' page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1841 he is listed with 2 servants and in 1851 he was farmer of 2790 acres, with 10 farm labourers and 6 servants in his house. In 1797 he married Ann Sibbald (1779/80–1840); she may have been daughter of John Sibbald, younger of Pinnacle. Their children were: Ann (1798/9–1832); Jean (1801–22); Robert (1802–94); John (1803–92); William (1805–51), who worked in Liverpool; James (1807–62); Charlotte (1810–27); Margaret (c.1812–64), who died in Canada; Walter (b.1814/5); and Charles (1815/6–36). He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas.

James (b.1775/6) farmer at Wollrig. In 1861 he was there farming 480 acres and employing 4 labourers. His wife was Margaret and their children included James, Jane and Helen. James (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Craik, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. James (d.1859) shepherd at Birneyknowe. He married Janet Renwick, who was sister of Benjie, a well-known mole-catcher and poacher. Their children included: Thomas (b.1820); James (b.1821), tailor at Bonchester Bridge; and Robert (b.1836/7). He and his wife later rented a cottage on Gatehousecote farm (where they are recorded in 1851) and both died in the same year at a farm at Hawthornside. James (1807–62) born in Hawick Parish, son of James, farmer in Branhholme Braes and Ann Sibbald. He became a doctor in Dumfries. He married Charlotte Sylvester Train. Their children were James and William (partners in Bullock Brothers in Rangoon), Henry Stewart and Arthur Sibbald. James (b.c.1817) born in Bowden. He was a farm worker at Midholm, then Howden, moving to Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, where 2 of his children were born. In 1861 he was farmer of 600 acres, employing 5 people, at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1873. He married Margaret Tullie, and their children were Mary Scott, James (who married Margaret Robb), Christian, George, John and Margaret Douglas. James (19th C.) married Isabella Scott in 1831, the marriage recorded in both Bedrule and Ancrum Parishes. James (b.1810/1) resident of Castleton Parish. He was a 'Male Servant' in Castleton village in 1841, a 'Labourer' there in 1851 and an agricultural labourer living on Doncaster Street in Newcastleton in 1861. He married Janet Ingles in 1837 and their children included: Walter (b.1838); Elizabeth (b.1840); William (b.1842); Walter (b.1844); Thomas (b.1847); and Thomas (again, b.1849). James (b.1817/8) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish, originally from Langholm. He was living at about 11 South Hermitage Street in Newcastleton in 1851 and at 2 South Liddell Street in 1861. He married Margaret Scott in 1839 and their children included: John (b.1840); Jessie (b.1841); Jane (b.1844); Isabella (b.1846); Elizabeth (b.1848); Helen (b.1850); Alexander (b.1852); Agnes (b.1854); Mary (b.1856/7); and Margaret (b.1859/60). James (19th C.) married Margaret Moore (or 'More') in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1840. Their children included: Adam (b.1841); Robert (b.1844); Margaret (b.1846); John Sprot

(b.1850); and William (b.1854). James (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Elizabeth Weir and their son Robert was baptised in 1839. James (19th C.) married Agnes Sinton in Castleton Parish in 1848. James (1821–1900) son of James, shepherd at Birneyknowe, he was born in Cavers Parish. He was an apprentice tailor in Hawick with Mr. Mitchell, working with him 1837–46. He was a journeyman tailor in Newcastle and elsewhere, settling down as a tailor at Bonchester Bridge about the time he got married. It is said that about this time he resolved to become a teetotaler and struggled to overcome his earlier craving for drink. He was appointed to the Hobkirk Parish Council when it was first formed, and remained on it until his death. He also served as officer to the Hobkirk Heritors. He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Hall in Hobkirk in 1852; she was daughter of a shepherd at Gatehousecote. They had 7 daughters and 1 son: Helen (or ‘Ellen’, b.1852), who married W. Minto, cab proprietor in Hawick; Janet (b.1855), who married Walter Turnbull, carpenter in Bonchester Bridge; Isabella (b.1858), who married T. McGowan; Margaret (b.1860), a dressmaker, who worked for the Post Office; Mary Telfer (b.1863), who died young; Wilhelmina Elliot (b.1865), married Thomas Hogg from Selkirk; Agnes Rutherford (b.1868), married A. Bruce from Musselburgh; and James (b.1871), who was also a tailor. James (1833/4–1904) farmer at West Buccleuch. He married Christina Glendinning, daughter of Archibald and Violet Beattie. Their son Thomas died in the South African War in 1902. They also had daughters Agnes Margaret and Violet and sons William (who farmed at Stobswood, near Duns), George (who also farmed West Buccleuch) and Andrew (of Flass, Westruther). James (c.1843–80) only son of Robert and grandson of James, farmer in Branhholme Braes. He married Mary Turnbull (c.1846–90). Their children were: Thomas, who died young; Robert (1865–1920); and Mary Turnbull Pott (d.1903). James Wyndham Alleyne (1872–1939) eldest son of Charles John, farmer at Branhholme Park. He was born in Robertson Parish. He served with the Indian Forestry Service. In 1938 he was fined 10 shillings after his dog ‘arrested itself’ by walking into the police station, after being picked up 2 times earlier for not having a collar and tag. He lived at Beechwood Beech, Alton, Hants. He firstly, in 1910, married Isabel MacLeod MacDonald (from Skye, 1882–1913), who died in Calcutta. He secondly, in 1931, married Marjorie Patmore. There were no surviving children from either marriage. Jane Little nee Hay (b.1825/6) daughter of Robert Hay and Ann Little. She married Robert Grieve (d.1853), who was a solicitor’s clerk. She took over the running of the Crown Inn in 1848 after the deaths of her father and then her mother. She continued there after the death of her husband, moving later to a smaller hotel at 8 Bridge Street, where she lived with her daughter Annie Little. In 1863 she presented the Museum with a toddy ladle that had been used at the Common Riding dinner for 130 years. She appears to have gone bankrupt in 1864, her assets being sequestered. Janet (17th C.) resident of Colterscleuch on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Janet (17th C.) listed at Lairhope among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Horsleyhill. Joan (b.1738) daughter of William and sister of Dr. John, she was born in Hawick. She was also known as Joanna. She was sent to live with her uncle, Dr. James, in Russia (although some sources mistakenly suggest she was his daughter). In 1754 she married Dr. James Mounsey (1710–73), who was a surgeon in Russia, became known as a naturalist and was elected to the Royal Society. Her husband returned to Scotland in 1762, buying the estate of Rammerscales in Dumfriesshire (and being one of the first to raise crops of rhubarb there). He long believed that the agents of Empress Catherine were out to get him, and is said to have faked his own death. His last Russian descendant died during the siege of Leningrad in 1942 (although these may be from an earlier family of his). She remarried after his death. John (15th C.) recorded at Ferniehirst in 1494/5. John Hervey in Fairnilee had remission for several crimes, including stealing 30 sheep from him. His name is written ‘Johanne greiff’. John (17th C.) married ‘Jenet English’. Their son James was born in Hawick in 1644. This could have been James of Commonsides, although there are other possibilities. John (17th C.) tenant in Eilrig. He is recorded being ‘in Eleridge’ in the baptismal record of 1680, when the witnesses were James Hutton and Walter Grieve. His will is recorded in 1684. He was surely related to Robert, who was at Eilrig at the same time. He married Margaret Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Margaret (b.1680); and Walter (b.1682). The witnesses in 1682 were Robert and Walter Grieve (who were surely relatives).

John (17th/18th C.) tenant of Crurie near Eskdalemuir. He married Helen, daughter of Walter Grieve in Colterscleuch, who was said to be his cousin. He was thus presumably directly related to the Grieves of the Branhholme and Borthwick areas. His son Walter farmed at Airstwood, and he had another son, John, from whom descended farmers at Deloraine and Bowhill. John (b.c.1741) son of Walter and Janet Anderson. He lived in Castleton Parish, specifically at Park, where most of his children were born. In 1767 he married Elizabeth Alexandra (b.1741), daughter of Walter Paisley and Margaret Dalgleish. Their children included: Margaret (b.1768), who may have married John Kyle; Mary (b.1769); Walter (b.1772), who married Eleanor Elliot and probably moved to Ontario; Janet (b.1774), who married James Elliot; James (b.1774); William (1777–1824), who married Mary Elliot; Jean (b.1779), who married James Beattie; John (1781–1850), who died in Westminster Township, Ontario; and Elliot (1784–1874), who emigrated to Ontario. Dr. John (1744–1805) probably born in Hawick, son of William Grieve and Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Grieve (who appear to have been married 24 years before he was born). His mother's brother was Dr. James, physician in Russia and he was a good friend of Dr. James' only son, James Tamesz (who would have been his cousin). His sister Joan (b.1738) married physician and naturalist James Mounsey (who served the Russian royal family, but returned to Scotland after Tsar Peter III's death, and convinced that agents were out to get him, faked his own funeral). He studied at Edinburgh and Glasgow Universities and in the period 1778–83 served as a military doctor at Voronezh in Russia. He then returned to Britain because of his health. He had a broad interest in science, publishing a paper in the first volume of the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh on fermented mare's milk. He practised medicine in London, and was elected to 15 separate medical, scientific and antiquarian societies, including the Royal Society. He returned to Russia with his family in 1798, acting as court physician to Emperor Paul I. He (and 2 other Scots) performed the autopsy on Paul's body after his assassination in 1801. He was then physician to the family of Emperor Alexander I. In 1792 he married Rebecca Kinnersley (1771–1811). Their daughter Eliza Emma married Guy Lennox Prendergast and they had at least one other child, Maria Augusta. He died of a stroke in St. Petersburg and was buried there. John (d.bef. 1791) resident of Hawick who married Helen Thomson in 1769. Their children included: Walter (b.1770); Agnes (b.1773); and John (b.1784). His son Walter died in Hawick in 1791. John (18th C.) married Helen Cathrae. Their children Janet (b.1775) and Alexander (or perhaps Alexandra, b.1778) were baptised in Hawick Parish. John (1754–95) from Westerkirk in Dumfriesshire, son of Walter and Jean Pott. His grandmother was from the Grieves of the Branhholme area. Sometime about 1780 he and his cousin George Stavert inherited the lands of Hoscoate from their uncle George Pott, and he also inherited Craik. He lived at Craik and sold his share of Hoscoate to his cousin Adam Stavert in 1781. In the baptismal records for 1781 and 1785 he is described as 'Mr. Grieve of Hoscoat att Craick'. However, he appears to have still been tenant farmer at Hoscoate in 1785 and paid the land tax there in that year. He was again 'Mr. John Grieve in Craick' in 1787. He was farmer at Craik according to the 1787–94 Horse Tax Rolls. In Robertson in 1778 he married Isabella or 'Bell' (1757–1835), daughter of Walter Turnbull and Dorothea Chisholme; she was born at Firth and died at Meadshaw. Their children were: Margaret (b.1777); George (1779–1841), who was a schoolmaster; Walter J. (1781–1861); Dolly (1783–1806); Jane (1785–1835), who married William Moffat of Garwald; John (b.1787), who died in infancy; and Isabella (c.1789–c.1831), who married David Ballantyne. He died at Craik and is buried along with several family members, commemorated on the same gravestone as the Potts of Hoscoate. John (18th C.) married Isabel Pott in Hawick Parish in 1785. John (18th C.) farmer at Hartwoodmyres according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785–91. In 1787 his servant Jean Dunlop was mentioned in a legal case in Selkirk. John (18th C.) wright in Hawick. His wife Isobel Little died in Hawick in 1799. His son William died in 1798 and an unnamed child in 1805. In 1809 his son John died in Hawick Parish; either he or his son was 'lang John'. John (18th/19th C.) from Stow, he married Janet Stavert in Robertson Parish in 1791. Their children included James (b.1795) and Mary (b.1796), baptised in Selkirk. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Blackburnfoot in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the John from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. John (b.c.1770) son of Robert, who farmed at Easter Alemoor and elsewhere. He had a twin brother Walter. He married Helen Watson in 1812 and Helen Grieve in 1822. He lived in Edinburgh. His children were: Jessie (b.1814); Walter (b.1816); John (b.1819); Helen; Thomas; and Robert. John (b.1775/6) corn dealer who lived at Gledsneet. He was there from at least the 1820s. He was probably the John at Colterscleugh who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was recorded there on the 1841 census. He married Jean Hume and their children included: Robert (b.1819); Peter (b.1821); John (b.1823); Walter (b.1827), Betsy (b.1829); William; Isabella; Jean; and Mary. Most of his children were born in Cavers Parish. He may be the John who was recorded at Newmill in Hawick Parish on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. John (b.c.1780) labourer in Newcastleton on the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. John (1800–80) wright of (Stobs) Woodfoot, son of shepherd Robert and brother of Walter. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Birkwood Foot (presumably Stobs Woodfoot) and was described in 1851 as a master carpenter. Along with his son Robert he started a coach-building business in Havelock Street. He was a member of Allars Kirk in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Glendinning in 1820 and after her death married Janet, daughter of James Cranstoun and Margaret Mitchellhill, in 1838. Together they had 14 children, many of whom lived long lives in the Hawick area. They were: Isabella, who married Kirkton joiner Andrew Scott; Agnes; Robert, who married Elizabeth Turnbull in Hobkirk; Helen; Elizabeth ('Betsy' or 'Betty'), who married John Lewis and later John Fleming, both joiners, and later in life had a grocer's shop on the Howegate; Margaret, who married James Christie in Hawick; John, who died of consumption; Catherine, who possibly married David Ballantyne in Hawick; James; Walter, emigrated to Victoria, Australia, married Elizabeth miller and lived to the age of 91; Helen or 'Ellen', named after her recently deceased half-sister, married gamekeeper Thomas Simpson; and William, who was a joiner in Havelock Street, but died aged 23; David, also a joiner in Havelock Street, died age 22; and Christina, who died in infancy. John (19th C.) married Agnes Hardie in Castleton Parish in 1837. John (1803–92) 2nd son of James, farmer at Branhholme Braes. He was farm overseer at Howpasley. He married Mary (b.1804), daughter of Adam Glendinning. Their children were: Elizabeth (1827–96), who married William Beattie; James (b.1828), who married Mary Brown; Ann (b.1832); Robert (1833–1913), who emigrated to New Zealand;

Margaret (b.1846/7); William (b.1839/40); John (b.1841); Adam (b.1845); Charlotte Mary Ann (b.1848); and Helen (b.1851). Katherine (1837–1916) daughter of Thomas and Marion Margaret Dickson. She helped plan the planting of shrubs at the Borthwick Waas cemetery, along with their sister Marion. She married David Ballantyne in Hawick in 1853. Lewis (b.c.1770s) servant at Whitslade according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Lindsay local butcher. He started in 1960, running his shop at 29 High Street since 1988. In 1992 he was Scottish Champion maker of haggis and in 2020 was given a royal appointment. Margaret (b.1810/11) born in Galashiels, she was married to George, toll-keeper at the Eastern Toll in Hawick at the 1841 census. Her husband died in 1849 and by the 1851 census she was toll-keeper at Wilton Place North Bar. She lived there with her daughters Isabella and Jane and servant Betsy Waugh. She could have been the Margaret Lambert who married George Grieve in Lilliesleaf in 1828. Marion Fisher (1831–1921) daughter of Thomas, farmer at Skelfhill, and Marion Margaret Dickson. Along with her sister Katherine and Robert Noble of Borthwickbrae, she planned the shrubbery around Borthwick Waas Cemetery in 1895. She also left money in her will for the upkeep of the cemetery. She could be the Miss Grieve of Skelfhill who donated Roman artefacts from Cologne to the Museum in 1863, in addition to a shrike. Michael (b.c.1775) wool-spinner in Hawick. He may be the son of John and Helen Cathrae baptised in Hawick in 1780. He was recorded as a weaver in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and on the 1801 list was a 'Carpet Weaver'. He was living on the Fore Row in 1841 and at about 16 Howegate in 1851. He married Rachel Scott, and she died in 1851, aged 64. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1814), who married shoemaker Peter Fairbairn; Elizabeth (c.1815–88), who died in Hawick Poorhouse; Walter (b.c.1816), who married Mary Oliver; John (b.c.1817), also a woollen spinner; Rachel (b.c.1822); Mary (b.c.1824–56), who died unmarried; Alexander (b.1826), mill foreman in Galashiels; Margaret (b.1829), who probably died young; and Christina (b.1830), who married tailor William Milner. Michael (c.1842–1912) son of Walter. He left Hawick in 1874 to work in hosiery manufacturing in Leicester and retired to Queensborough. He married Isabella Scott in Hawick in 1866. Their children were: Walter (b.1867);

Maggie Scott (b.1869); Thomas Scott, who became senior partner of T. Grieve & Co., Ltd., hosiery latch needle manufacturers of Leicester, inventing the fashioning needle; Adam (b.1872); William Helm (b.1874); Mary (b.1875); Janet (b.1877); Herbert (b.1878); Isabella (b.1879); Agnes (b.1882); and John (b.1886). Michael Anderson (1858–1919) son of Adam and Jane Anderson, he was a joiner in Newcastleton. In 1887 he married Margaret (1865–1930), daughter of Adam Nichol and Esther Hardie. Their children were Adam Nichol (b.1887) and Christina (b.1891). Nancy (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1801 her illegitimate daughter Nancy (born the previous year) was baptised in Cavers, the father being Robert Bain, servant at Tower farm. Norman William (1852–1936) youngest son of William Oliver, farmer at Braxholme Park, from his 2nd marriage with Sarah (or Elisa) Clarke (nee Wagstaff). He was ‘formerly of Eskdale and Liddesdale’, then was on the boards of several tea and rubber companies in what was at that time Ceylon. He was later described as ‘Tropical Agriculturalist & Director of Public Companies’. He was living in East Grinstead in 1891, Tunbridge Wells in 1901 and Kensington in 1911. He compiled some information about his family history in 1893. In the years before WWI he appears to have taken the shootings in several Borders farms, namely East and West Buccleuch, East and West Deloraine and Whitehillshiels. In 1928 he gave £2,000 for a maternity home in Hawick, with the stipulation that it be named after Earl Haig. He married Charlotte Adelaide, daughter of George Hamilton Verity. Their children were William Robert, Christina Verite, Ruth Marion and Elsie Wagstaff. He died at West Heath in Surrey and is commemorated at Borthwick Waas Cemetery. His name was taken as the middle names of rugby and cricket internationalist James Norman Grieve Davidson, said to be the first person born in the Haig Maternity Home. Peter (18th C.) miller at Headshaw Mill. He married Margaret Thomson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Elizabeth (b.1740); William (b.1742); Margaret (b.1745); and Margaret (agin, b.1747). iMargaret (b.1745); Robert (16th/17th C.) farmer in 1609 when he was one of a large number of tenants of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane and others who were bound not to reset Walter Scott of Headshaw and others. It is unclear where he was farmer, or if he was the same as Robert in Commonsides. Robert (16th/17th C.) resident of Lymiecleuch in 1618. Walter Scott of Buccleuch complained that he had cut down 16 alder trees from his lands of Gorrenberry, with other men from upper Teviotdale (including Archibald in Caerlenrig) also being accused of stealing timber. Not appearing before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘in Commonsides’ in 1632 when he and several others feued the lands of Westbarns from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He may have been father of Walter in Braxholme Park and William in Commonsides. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1656. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Robert (b.1683) and Walter (b.1686). The witnesses in 1683 were James and William, who were surely related to him. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Commonsides. In the 1686 confirmation of lands to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, it is described how the lands of Wester Winds were ‘sometimes possess’ by him, and he also occupied Dryden, Easter Winds, Commonsides, Nether Croft and Hoghill. He was presumably related to the earlier Robert in Commonsides. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Eilrig. His will is recorded in 1686. He was surely related to John, who was there at the same time. He may be the Robert who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for John in Hawick Parish in 1682. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Teindside, whose testament was listed at Peebles Commissariat in 1686. He may be the Robert who (along with Thomas Borthwick, suggesting the countryside south of the Town) witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Hawick Parish in 1676. He may be the Robert in Teindside who in 1710 witnessed a baptism for James in Teindside and Isobel Grieve (suggesting he was related to at least one of them). Robert (17th/18th C.) married Janet Little in Cavers Parish in 1699. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Fenwick in 1714. His wife was an Elliot (with no first name given) and their children included Margaret (b.1712) and William (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were James in Drinkstone (perhaps a relative) and John Elliot in Penchrise. Probably the same Robert was recorded in Fenwick in 1725 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Dalgleish, wright in Alton Croft. He was probably related to William, who was tenant in Fenwick in 1723. Robert (c.1690–1782) tenant in Deanburnhaugh. It is unclear how he was related to the other local Grieves.

It is possible his father was James. His children were: James; Walter (d.1822) of Over Huntly; and Janet (b.1737). He died at Alemoor. Robert (18th C.) recorded in Glenkerry in Ettrick Parish in 1724 when he married Jean 'Bleak' from Fenwick in Hawick Parish. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1749 he married Jean Hutton, who was from Cavers. His children (baptised in Robertson, but with no mothers' name given) probably included Jean (b.1751) and William (b.1758). Robert (1725–85) son of James, farmer in Todshawhaugh and Branhholme Park. He was tenant farmer at Stonedge. It is possible he was the Robert who witnessed a Hawick baptism for William Grieve in Southfield (perhaps his brother). He married Jean Curle in Robertson Parish in 1772 and she died in 1814, aged 76. James (1773–1855), farmer in Branhholme Braes, was their son. They are buried in Borthwick Waas. It is unclear if they had any other children. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Scott and their son Walter was baptised in 1763. The witnesses were Thomas Miller and George Kedie. Robert (18th C.) leather-dresser in Hawick. He was a subscriber to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (1741–1829) son of William. He succeeded his father as tenant in Southfield and also tenanted Hawick Shiel. He paid the Horse Tax at Southfield in 1794 and 1797 and the Dog Tax in 1797. He married Jane Huggan (1754/5–1830), who died in Lilliesleaf. Their children included: Mary (b.1765); James (b.1773); Agnes (b.1780), who married Thomas Oliver, farmer in Lilliesleaf; and Walter John (b.1787), tenant in Southfield and Hawick Shiel. Robert (18th C.) recorded at Skelfhill in 1777 and 1778 when his children were baptised in Cavers Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1777); and Nelly (b.1778). He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) recorded as farmer at Harwood in Hobkirk Parish on the 1789–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He was succeeded at Harwood by Walter, who was probably his son or brother. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–89. Robert (b.1764) son of William, farmer in Southfield and Margaret Elliot. He was a merchant in Leith. He may be the Robert who in 1783 and 1784 witnessed baptisms for John Nixon and Mary Grieve (perhaps his sister). He may be the resident of Leith who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Robert (d.1814) shepherd at Harden, Heap, Todshaw, Greensidehall and elsewhere. In 1785 he married Isabella, daughter of David Laidlaw from Highchesters; she died in 1857, aged 92. Their children were: Walter (b.1786), baptised in Robertson, who was a successful slater and plumber in Hawick; Robert (b.1790), also a shepherd; Margaret (b.1792), born at Heap; Isabel (b.1794), born at Todshaw, who married shepherd Robert Anderson; David (b.1788), born at Greensidehall; Agnes, who married slater William Scott; and John, who was a wright at Stobs Woodfoot. He died at Alton and was buried in Wilton Kirkyard. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. The annotation 'Serving' suggests that he was signed up into the army, with his name appearing on another list in 1798. He was confirmed to be serving according to the amended list of 1799. Robert (1790–1862) 2nd son of shepherd Robert. He also worked as a shepherd. He married Janet, daughter of Robert Glendinning and Isabella Murray in Yarrow in 1817 (although she had been born in Hobkirk Parish). Their children included Robert, who married Margaret Allan and then Sarah Cunningham and died in Hawick Poorhouse. In 1861 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Old Belses, with wife Janet and children Jean, Margaret and David. Robert (19th C.) Clerk of the Course at the Common Riding Races in the 1840s. He may be the same as one of the other local Roberts. Robert (b.1801/2) shepherd at Slaidhills, above Teindside. He had earlier lived in Bedrule Parish. In 1861 he was a retired shepherd, living at Elliotsfield. His wife was Elizabeth ('Betty') and their children included Margaret (b.1827), John (b.1832), Ann H., Esther, Walter, Archibald, Elizabeth and Margaret (again). By 1861 he was a retired shepherd living with his wife at Elliotsfield. He could have been the Robert who married Elizabeth Cavers in 1822/3. Robert (1802–85) eldest son of James, farmer at Branhholme Braes. He farmed at Whitchesters and later took over Branhholme Braes. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is recorded at Whitchesters in 1841 and 1851 (when he farmed 1000 acres and employed 9 labourers) and at Branhholme Braes in 1861 (when he farmed 1200 acres and employed 8 men) and 1868. In 1833 he married Mary Pott (1804–94). Their only child was James (c.1843–80), who married Mary Turnbull. Robert (1818/9–1853) of the Crown Inn in Hawick. Born at Teviot-head. He trained as a solicitor's clerk, but was recorded as keeper of the Crown Inn in 1851 and in Slaters' 1852 directory. He married Janet Hay, daughter of the former proprietor of the Crown. Their children included: Robert Hay; and Ann Little, who was a governess. He died aged about 34 and his wife carried on at the Crown Hotel until 1866. Robert (1818–72) son of Walter John, farmer at Southfield. He spent about 12 years in Australia, returning to Scotland about 1851. He took over as tenant of Southfield when his father died in 1861. In 1863 he married Christina Gray (1844–80). Their children were: Walter John (1865–1948), who also farmed Southfield; William Gray (b.1866), who emigrated to Denver, Colorado; Robert Elliot (b.1868), who went to New Zealand; John Wright (b.1869), who also went to New Zealand; and James Christian (b.1872), also New Zealand. It appears there were no descendants of the 3 brothers who went to the southern hemisphere. The family are commemorated at Borthwick Waas. Robert (1826–1907) son of John, elder in Allars Kirk for 50 years, and grandson of Robert, who lived at several farms in Wilton. His mother was Elizabeth Glendinning, and he was born in Wilton. He worked for several years as an estate steward for Sir William Elliott of Stobs and Wells. He was recorded as land steward at Stobs Cottage in 1861. Along with his father he then started a coach-building business in Havelock Street in 1867. In 1853 he married Elizabeth ('Betty'), daughter of James Turnbull, who may have been farmer at Billerwell (and died in 1858, aged 85), and she died in 1861, aged 34. In 1865 he secondly married Isabella Ballantyne in Hawick. His children were: Margaret (b.1854/5); John (b.1859), who married Wilhelmina Balmer and secondly Mary Gavin; Henry; Robert Ballantyne; William Henry; Annie Mary Jane; Annie Mary Jane (again); and Elizabeth, 'Lizzie'. He kept a diary (from 1857 to 1865, when he was working on the Stobs estate), which has been transcribed by one of his descendants. Robert (1825/6–1900) born in Bowden, he was farmer at Huntly in Kirkhope Parish (including land in Ashkirk Parish) from 1857. He took over the tenancy from Elliot Grieve, and married Elliot's daughter Jessie (also known as Janet). He was at Over Huntly in the 1860s and 70s and recorded at 'Outer Huntly' in 1861. His children included James (eldest son, who died at Carbon, Alberta), Henry (died at Saltcoats, Saskatoon), Elliot (died at Tweedmouth), Walter (4th son, who died aged 12), John Robert (youngest son, who died young) and Christina (joint tenant in Over Huntly until 1921). The family are commemorated on a gravestone in Borthwick Waas. Robert (1865–1920) only surviving son of James, farmed at Whitchesters and Branhholme Braes. His children included: James; and Robert Archibald Vivian (1907–42), who was killed in action in the Middle East. Robert (1868–1945) younger son of Robert, tenant in Southfield. He married Isabella Lillies, and had no descendants. Robert (1901–77) son of Walter John, farmer at Southfield. He took over the tenancy when his father retired in 1937. His son Walter carried on with the farm until 1988, by which time the same family had held the tenancy for more than 230 years. Robert Archibald Vivian 'Vivian' (1907–42) son of Robert and grandson of James, farmer at Branhholme Braes. He played rugby for Hawick and was Cornet in 1929. He was a Lieutenant in the Gordon Highlanders and was killed in action at El Alamein. He married Nora, youngest daughter of Charles James Glenney. He is commemorated at Borthwick Waas. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name was recorded as 'Thome Greif' and he was probably related to Will, who was also listed. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wigg in Hobkirk Parish when his daughter Helen was baptised in 1788. He is probably the Thomas who married Helen Stevenson in Hawick in 1774. Their other children included: Thomas (b.1778), baptised in Hawick; Betty (b.1782), also baptised in Hawick; and John Stevenson (b.1790), baptised in Hobkirk. He may be the Thomas who in 1772 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Scott and Janet Dryden. Thomas (1738/9–1828) farmer at Glendinning and at Muselee. He is recorded at Muselee on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and also paid the dog tax there in 1797. He is probably the Thomas who (along with Charles Scott at Commonsideside) witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot in 1782. He married Jane, daughter of James Stevenson and Jane Scott; she died at Muselee in 1797, aged 43. He himself died at Glendinning and they are commemorated on a gravestone in Borthwick Waas. He may be the James, son of James, baptised in 1739 in Cavers Parish, probably son of James in Commonsideside. John Stevenson Grieve, baptised in Hobkirk in 1790, may have been his son. Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area.

Thomas (18th/19th C.) labourer at Castleweary in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish'. He is probably the labourer recorded at Henderson's Knowe on the 1801 Militia ballot; William was also there and perhaps related. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farm servant of Phaup in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish', but by then residing at Penchrise. He may have been son of William, who was shepherd at Phaup at the same time. Thomas (b.c.1780) shepherd at Larriston according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Thomas (1797–1848) farmer at Branxholme Park and later tenant at Skelfhill. He was the younger son of James, farmer at Branxholme Park, and brother of William Oliver. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was wealthy enough to be employing a governess in 1841. In Hawick in 1822 he married Marion Margaret, youngest daughter of Archibald Dickson of Housebyres, and she died in 1860, aged 56. Their children were: James (1825–44); Archibald (1827–1921); William (1829–85), who farmed Skelfhill after his father died; Marion Fisher (1831–1921); Catherine (1833/4–35); Thomas (1834–79), who was a sailor and died at Valparaiso; Walter (1836–82); Katherine (1837–1916), who married David Ballantyne in Hawick; John Scott (1840–93); and Margaret (1843–1903). Thomas Gordon (b.1844) 3rd son of William Oliver, tenant of Branxholme Park. He was a Lieutenant in the 6th Dragoon Guards. He married Fanny Strickland and their children were Marion Alison and Lillian de Alvarada. He could be the Thomas who presented photographs of an Australian chief to the Museum in 1863. Thomas (1873–1902) born in Innerleithen, son of James. His father was later farmer at West Buccleuch. He was killed at Bloemfontein in the Boer War, and his name is commemorated on the Hawick Boer War Memorial. Walter (1646–1721) possibly son of Robert and descendant of the James recorded about 1580. He was also likely to have been brother of William, tenant in Commonsides. He was tenant of Branxholme Park, signing the lease in 1691. He was recorded as a householder at Branxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. He was 'in Park' when he witnessed baptisms in 1705 for Robert Nixon in Dodburn, in 1708 for James Laidlaw, a cottar in Branxholme Park, in 1709 for Robert Laidlaw in Haregrain, in 1710 for James in Teindside and Isobel Grieve (suggesting he was related to at least one of them) and in 1713 for Walter Scott of Merrylaw (whose wife Margaret Grieve may have been related to him) and for John Elliot in Goldielands. In 1714 his servant Margaret Grieve got married in Hawick. He married Blanche (or 'Blench', 1661–1716), daughter of William Borthwick of Reashaw. Their children included: James (1684–1781), tenant of Branxholme Park and Todshawhaugh; Margaret (b.1671); Robert (b.1676); and 3 unnamed children christened in the 1670s. Walter in Colterscleuch may also have been a son. The witnesses in 1676 were William Grieve (perhaps his brother) and John Bell. He was buried at Borthwick Waas, along with his wife and descendants. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptisms for John Blake in 1674 and for John in Eilrig (probably a relative) in 1680 and 1682. Walter (d.1688) son of William in Commonsides and brother of James, who was also tenant there. He died along with his son William and daughter Jean, all within a few months of each other, and are buried at Borthwick Waas. His will is recorded in 1688. Walter (c.1670–1710) farmer in Colterscleuch. He was said to be brother of James, tenant in Branxholme Park, and hence a son of Walter (they are commemorated together at Borthwick Waas). In 1708 he was described as 'tenent in Colterscluch in Cavers parish' when his son was baptised in Hawick. His wife was probably Katherine Ogilvie (d.1759). His children were: James (b.c.1694), tenant in Commonsides and Over Huntly; Walter, who married Janet Anderson from Tushielaw; William (perhaps the William baptised in Hawick in 1698), who had at least 1 son; Hugh (b.1708), baptised in Hawick, who is said to have had a son; Gideon, who married Isabel Laidlaw; and at least one daughter, possibly Helen, who married John Grieve of Crurie, said to be a cousin. The witnesses in 1708 were Walter Scott in Crumhaugh and William Clerk in Southdeanrig. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded at Hoscode in 1721 when his son Robert was baptised. It is unclear how he is related to other Gieves. Walter (b.c.1700) son of Walter in Colterscleuch. He was recorded as tenant in Tushielaw in 1728. In 1727 he married Janet Anderson from the Tushielaw family. Their children, mostly baptised in Ettrick Parish, included: John (b.1728); Walter (b.1730); Michael (b.1732); Christian (b.1734); Margaret (b.1736), baptised in Selkirk; and James (b.1740), also baptised in Selkirk. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiels in 1737. He married Jean Murray and their children included: William (b.1734); Gideon (b.1737); and Walter (b.1739). The witnesses in 1737 were Robert Scott and John Pringle. Walter (d.1781) recorded as 'Kirk Officer' when he died in Hawick Parish in 1781. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (1710–99) son of James. Like his father he was tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch at Branhholme Park. He was recorded renting Branhholme Park from at least 1745. Along with John Elliot (younger of Borthwickbrae) he leased the lands of Linhope from the Buccleuch estates in 1744. He paid the window tax for Branhholme Park in 1748. He was involved in loans with the Elliots of Harwood in the 1750s. He may be the Walter who in 1765 witnessed a baptism for William in Southfield (probably his brother). He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1777. He rented Todshawhaugh and Whames in 1792. He held the lease for Todshawhaugh, where he was recorded in 1796 when there was a bond between William Elliot of Harwood and others with him. He was also farmer at Todshawhaugh on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 1 saddle horse and 3 farm horses in 1797, as well as paying the dog tax in 1797. His first wife was Katherine (1718–59), daughter of Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, and the couple had children relatively late in life. He secondly married Magdaline, daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. His surviving children were: James (1751–1838), the only son; Helen (or Eleanor), who married Alexander Scott of Synton; Margaret (1755–86), who married John Balfour in Pilrig; Catherine (1757–86), who married William Sibbald of South Leith; and Jane (1762–87). The witnesses to the 1757 appear to be Mrs. Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres (probably his mother-in-law) and Mrs. Grieve of Todshawhaugh (probably his mother James). He died at Todshawhaugh. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Murray, and their children included James (b.1744). Walter (c.1724–90) son of John, farmer in Crurie. He may have been born in Moffat and was farmer at Crooks and Airstwood, also in Dumfriesshire. He also worked as an architect. In 1744 in Robertson Parish he married Jean (1727–77), daughter of Adam Pott and Betty Elliot. The marriage was in 1744, with his wife's sister Betty marrying Thomas Stavert at the same time. Their children were: John and Elizabeth, who died in infancy; Adam (b.1748), who may also have died young; Helen (1750–63); Nathaniel (b.1751), also died in infancy; John (1754–95), who was Laird (or perhaps tenant) of Hoscote and Craik; Betty (b.1756); Helen (b.1764); and Nathaniel (again, b.1770). Walter (1736/7–1822) son of Robert in Deanburnhaugh. He farmed at Hungryhill, Easter Alemoor and Hangingshaw, and also spent time in Perthshire. In Robertson in 1762 he married Janet Grieve (1737–1816), daughter of James in Commonsides. Their children were: Robert (1762/3–87), who died unmarried; twins Walter and John (b.c.1770); James (c.1771–1862); Archibald Campbell (b.c.1775); Elliot (c.1777–1858), who married Harriet Turnbull and was tenant at Over Huntly; and Jannet (1779–1858), who married Andrew Aitchison. He died at Over Huntly and was buried at Borthwick Waas. Walter (b.1767) farmer at Southfield, son of William and Mary Elliot. He is easily confused with the slightly later Walter John of Southfield (and the marriages are very similar, so they may be confounded in family histories). He is recorded on the 1790–91 Horse Tax Rolls at Southfield. He is probably the Walter recorded as tenant at Howpasley in 1794 and 1797, as owner of 3 horses, and who also paid the dog tax at Howpasley in 1797. He is probably also the Walter who died unmarried in 1801. Walter (c.1770–1851) son of Walter and Janet Grieve. He was thus descended from Grieves in Colterscleuch and Deanburnhaugh. He was born at Broadlee in the Borthwick and had a twin brother John. He farmed at Craiglands in Dumfriesshire. He married Janet Campbell Veitch (who was christened in Lilliesleaf) and had 9 children: Robert (b.1797), who married Janet Murray; Elizabeth (b.1798), who married John Hogg; Jannet (b.1800), who married Andrew Watherston; Helen (b.1803), who married Francis Scott; Margaret (b.1805), who married David Brydon; John (b.1808), who married Mary Burns; Jane (b.1811), who died young; Walter (b.1813), who was also born at Broadlee, emigrated to Queensland and married Ann Gordon; and James (b.1818), who was born at Hartwoodmyres. Walter (b.1781) son of John and Isabella Turnbull. He is sometimes referred to as 'Walter J.' and is easy to confuse with Walter John. His father farmed at Hoscote and Craik, and he was born at Hoscote. He is referred to as being of Langwell. He married Christian Brydon. His wife is recorded as 'Annuitant' at about 12 Buccleuch Street in 1851 and is listed among the local gentry in a directory of 1852. He may thus be the 'Mr. Grieve' whose property is shown on Wood's 1824 map at about No. 12 Buccleuch Street. His children included: Isabella; and Helen. Walter (18th/19th C.) described as 'late of Langwell' on his gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. He married Christian Brydon, who died in Hawick in 1854, aged 70. Walter (d.bef. 1800) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his son William, a tailor, is recorded in 1800. Walter (18th/19th C.) labourer at Westerhouses in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Walter 'Wat' (1786–1856) slater of 23 Buccleuch Street, son of Robert (a shepherd in Roberton) and Isabella Laidlaw. He learned his trade with Thomas Cathrae, and started his own plumbing and slating business about 1805. He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater's 1852 directory as a slater and glazier. He married Janet Scott in Wilton, and she died in 1821, aged 27. Their only surviving child was Agnes (b.1817), who married engineer Adam Melrose. He later married Agnes Scott of Milsington, who died in 1865, aged 80. On the 1841 census he was living on Buccleuch Street with wife Agnes and daughter Agnes. A portrait of him exists. Walter John (1787–1861) farmer at Southfield and Hawick Shiel. Born in Hobkirk Parish, he was son of Robert; he was surely also related to the earlier Walter of Southfield. He was recorded being at Southfield in 1803 when volunteered to join the forces to resist the expected French invasion, even although under age. He was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826. He was probably the 'W.J. Oliver' to whom John Halliday dedicated his poem 'Address to my purse, on finding it empty' in 1847. In 1861 he was farming 650 acres at Southfield and employed 3 men. He married Christian (1786–1880), daughter of William Elliot and Margaret Anderson from Winningtonrig; this was in Cavers Parish in 1812. Their children were: Margaret (1813–19); Jean or Jane (1814–81), who married builder James Harkness; Mary Christian (1816–45), who died unmarried; Robert (1818–72), who also tenanted Southfield; Wilmina or Wilhelmina (1820–78), who married draper James Turnbull; Agnes (1822–47), who married Walter Purdom and died at Ormiston; William (1824–78), who emigrated to Keppel, Ontario, Canada; and Helen Margaret (1826–85), who died in Hawick, unmarried. He is buried at Borthwick Waas, along with several of his family. Walter (b.1805/6) agricultural labourer at Hallrule Porter Lodge according to the 1841 census. His wife was Jean and their children Robert, Helen, John, James and Isabella. Walter (1813–96) son of Walter, he was born at Broadlee in the Borthwick valley and christened in Ashkirk Parish. He emigrated to Queensland, Australia, where he married Ann Gordon and had 10 children. Walter (19th C.) plumber of W. Grieve & Son, 20 Buccleuch Street. Although he was no relation of the Walter Grieve of the plumbers and slaters business at 23 Buccleuch Street, he nevertheless worked for the older Walter and eventually took over the business. He may be the Walter recorded in about 1875 owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Walter (c.1816–48) probably son of Michael and Rachel Scott. He was a wool-spinner in Hawick. In 1841 he married Mary Oliver, who died in 1902, aged 82. His wife was sister of William Oliver, the blind fiddler. Their children were: Michael (b.c.1842), who worked in hosiery manufacturing in Leicester, and had a son Thomas who invented a fashioning needle; Adam (b.c.1845), who was a mason in Edinburgh; and Agnes (b.c.1847), who married Crimean War veteran Andrew Butler. Walter (b.1827) born in Teviothead Parish, son of John and Jean Hume. He was a plumber, slater and glazier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 5 Slitrig Bank with his widowed mother (then called 'Janet'), and he was then an employer of 8 men and 3 boys. He married Elizabeth Rogers and their children included: Mary (b.1862); John (b.1864); Walter Thomas (b.1865), who was Cornet in 1895; George Glen Rogers (b.1868); William Rogers (b.1871); and Jane Hume Rogers (b.1873). Walter (b.1838) son of James and Janet Inglis. He lived at Southfield, where most of his children were born. In 1864 he married Joanna Jardine (b.1846). Their children included: James (b.1867); Abraham (b.1868); Jane (b.1872); Janet (b.1874); Isabella (b.1878); Christina (b.1881); and Adam (b.1884). Walter John (1865–1948) son of Robert and Christina Gray. He took over the tenancy of Southfield while still a minor after the deaths of his father in 1872 and mother in 1880. He was known locally as a keen cyclist in the early days of that sport. He served as factor to the Duke of Buccleuch at Bowhill about 1902–12, living at Carterhaugh. He was a member of the Hawick Archæological Society and local farming organisations. He married Isabella Elizabeth (1873/4–1953), daughter of Andrew Easton of Todrig, and secondly married Jane Scott in 1900. Their children were: Robert Elliot (b.1901), who took over the tenancy of Southfield; Jane Scott (1903–77); and Christina Gray (1904–70). He retired in 1937 and died at 29 Orchard Terrace. Walter Thomas (b.1865) son of Walter and Elizabeth Rogers. He was a plumber and served as Cornet in 1895. He was the first Cornet to be presented with the Cornet's Medal by the Provost. William 'Will' (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Telfer and their children included Elizabeth (b.1644). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marie or Marion Elliot and their children included Margaret (b.1646) and Helen (b.1649). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot and their children included Bessie (b.1656). William (1631/2–1701) tenant in Commonsideside. He was presumably related to other local Grieves. He was listed as tenant (along with James, as well as John Waugh) at Commonsideside on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may have been brother of Walter, tenant in Braxholme Park; he may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1676. His children included: Walter, who had 2 children William and Jean who died with him in 1688; and James, who succeeded as tenant in Commonsideside. He is buried in Borthwick Waas. It is possible he was the William, who along with James, witnessed a baptism for Robert in Hawick in 1683. William (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. William (17th C.) shepherd at Priesthaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) probably descended from the Grieves in Commonsideside. He was tenant in Fenwick in 1723 and 1728. He is probably the William who in 1728 witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson, tenant in Fenwick and another on the same day for James Sanderson, tenant in Braxholmtown. In 1720 in Hawick he married Elspeth (or Elizabeth or 'Eppy'), daughter of 'Wester James' Grieve; she may have been his cousin. Their children included: James (b.1723); Margaret (b.1724);

Robert (b.1728); William (b.1731); another William (b.1733); Joan (b.1738), who married Dr. James Mounsey; Thomas (b.1739); and John (b.1744). The witnesses in 1723 were Gideon Elliot of Harwood and Thomas Shiel in Todshawhill and in 1728 were the Lairds of Falnash and Harwood. Isobel (b.1726), with the mother's name given as 'Euphem' and Michael (b.1736), with no mother's name given, may also have been his children. He may be the former tenant of Allanhaugh Mill described as being deceased in 1767. William (1707–1800) son of James, farmer at Commonsideside. He was tenant at Colterscleuch and Southfield. He was at Colterscleuch from at least 1741. In 1744 he is recorded as tenant of Colterscleuch and Westcoterig, along with Gideon Grieve, leasing from the Buccleuch Estates. Shortly after that he moved to Southfield. He was probably the tenant in Nether Southfield for whom James Rutherford was shepherd. In 1757 he was tenant at Southfield, and was found (along with other neighbouring tenant farmers) to be making 'bakes' at Black Grain Moss, against the explicit orders of the Town Council. As a result a group led by Bailie Robert Scott mustered in Hawick at 4 a.m. and went up to the Common, to break up the peats. He paid the Horse Tax at Southfield in 1785–89. He married Betty Grieve (1708/9–85). Their children included: Walter (b.1733); Hugh (b.1738); Robert (b.1741), who also tenanted Southfield; Mary (1744–89), who married Alexander Baptie, tenant in Southdean; and James (b.1748). He was 93 when he died and is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (18th C.) recorded getting married in Wilton Parish in 1730, but with no wife's name recorded. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1729 for Thomas Stoddart, resident of Stouslie and another in 1735 for William Nichol, also resident of Stouslie. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Robert (b.1741), Mary (b.1744) and James (b.1748). William (1726–86) 2nd son of James, tenant of Braxholme Park and Todshawhaugh. He was involved in a bond with Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1759. He was himself tenant farmer at Southfield, recorded there as early as 1759. It is also possible that he was one of the 2 William Grieves who tenanted Allanhaugh Mill in the early-to-mid 18th century. In 1751 he married Margaret Mary, daughter of Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig (who later farmed at Winnington Rig). Their children were: Jean (1757–1810); Isabel (b.1759), who married John Kedie in Hawick in 1785; Mary (1760–91), who married hosier John Nixon in Hawick in 1782; Ann (1761–1834), who married Rev. John Laurie in Hawick in 1786; James (b.1763), tenant in Roan; Christian or Catherine (1763–83), who may have married John Elliot farmer at Millburn, in Hawick in 1783; Robert (b.1764), who worked as a merchant in Leith; Helen; Tibbie, who married teacher Christopher Armstrong; Margaret (b.1765), who may also have married an Armstrong; Walter (1767–1801), who married Christina Elliot and continued to farm at Southfield as well as at Howpasley; Janet (b.1768), who married William Robertson, carpet manufacturer in Hawick in 1789; and William (b.1772). The witnesses in 1757 were Robert Elliot in Winningtonrig (his father-in-law) and Thomas Elliot in Stobicote, in 1759 were ‘Mr’ Robert Elliot (again) and Robert Grieve (perhaps his brother), in 1763 were Robert Elliot, ‘Ridge’ (his father-in-law) and James Grieve ‘Junior’ (probably his brother), in 1764 were ‘Mr Robert Elliot’ (presumably his father-in-law again) and William Elliot, ‘Winnington ridge’ and in 1765 were Robert Elliot (again) and Walter (probably his brother). He may be the ‘William Grieve, Hawick’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). William (18th C.) recorded at Priestthaug in 1761 when his unnamed child was baptised in Cavers Parish. He could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Grieve and their children included James (b.1765), Charles (b.1767), John (b.1769) and Helen (b.1771). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Ruecastle in 1758 and their children included Jane (b.1761), Walter (b.1763), John (b.1766), Walter (b.1770) and Ann (b.1772). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Janet (b.1777) and Hannah (b.1778). William (d.1800) tailor in Hawick, son of Walter. He married Henrietta Scott in Hawick in 1784, and she died in 1809. His son Walter died in Hawick in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Linhope, recorded as owner of a horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other local Grieves. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Phaup, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is presumably not the same man as the shepherd at Linhope, who is listed separately. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs at ‘Phaap’ in 1797. He may have been brother of Thomas, who was also at Phaup in 1797. Probably the same William was ‘Herd’ at Phaup on the 1801 Militia ballot.

William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) resident of ‘Lawburnfoot’ (probably Lochburnfoot) in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. William (b.c.1770s) labourer at Castleweary according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Gilbert was also listed in the same place and so probably his brother. He may also be the William recorded as a labourer at Henderson’s Knowe on the 1801 Militia ballot; Thomas was also labourer there at that time and perhaps related. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Greens according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) tenant at Henwoodie in the 1820s and 30s. William Oliver (1796–1875) son of James and Agnes Hall. He succeeded his father as tenant farmer of Branhholme Park, East Buccleuch and Sundhope. He was President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club and was heavily involved in all local agricultural matters, being known as a great breeder of hill stock. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1839. He was a member of the Photographic Society of Scotland from 1855. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1840 in Elgin he married Eliza Ann (1821–46), daughter of Charles Gordon. They had 3 sons (twins James and Charles, plus Thomas) and 1 daughter. In 1851 he is listed as farmer of 4000 acres, employing 20 farm workers and with 5 servant in his house. He was still farmer at Branhholme Park in 1868. He was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 as owner of Dinlabyre and Greena. In 1851 he secondly married Sarah Clarke (nee Wagstaff), daughter of James of Bilby, and they had 1 son. He thirdly married Mary Gordon, from Heckington. His children included: twins James Alexander (1841–46) and Charles John (1841–1915); Christina Mary (b.1843), who married Wheatley Robertson of the Indian Army; Thomas Gordon (b.1844); and Norman William (1852–1936). William (b.1797/8) joiner and cartwright in Newcastleton. He was probably at about 2 Walter Street in 1861. His wife was Mary and their children included Elliot (a daughter), Charles, Walter and Robert. William (b.c.1804) married Margaret Dalgleish in 1837. His son Robert was born at Ettrick, moved to Queensland in 1883 and still has descendants there. William (1805–51) younger son of James, tenant in Branhholme Braes, and descended from the Grieves of Branhholme Park. He was born in Hawick and became a grocer on the High Street. He is probably the grocer and spirit dealer living on Silver Street in 1841. In 1851 he was living at about 6 High Street. He is listed as a High Street grocer in Slater's 1852 directory, and may also be the corn dealer listed there, as well as the William recorded on the High Street serving as insurance agent for National and seedsman. Additionally he may have been the William serving as 'sub-distributor of stamps' at the Stamp and Tax Office on the High Street. In 1840 he married Christian (or Christina) Graham (1814–88). They had a son, James (b.1841). He and his wife are commemorated on the family gravestone in Borthwick Waas. William (1818–85) son of George and Minto Bell. He was probably born at Craik, where his father farmed. However, the family moved to Edinburgh and then emigrated to Canada in 1832. In 1846 he bought land in Richmond township in Ontario and operated a tavern at Grieve's Corners, which still bears the family name. He married Eliza Fairbairn and their children were Esther, George, Robert, Minto, Georgina and William. William (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Minto and their son William was baptised in 1849. William (1825–78) younger son of Walter John, farmer at Southfield. He emigrated to Canada in the early 1850s, married Agnes Fairbairn from Berwickshire and had a large family. William (1829–82) 3rd son of Thomas and Marion Dickson. He took over the farm of Skelfhill after his father's death, also having tenancy of Stobicote. He was known for being a judge of Cheviot sheep and was President of the Teviotdale Farmers' Club. He was at Skelfhill in 1861, farming 3084 acres and employing 12 people, with his brother Walter also farming 2000 acres and employing 3 people. His sisters Catherine and Margaret were also living there, as well as 6 domestic and farm servants. He died unmarried. William Gray (1866–1914) younger son of Robert, tenant in Southfield. He emigrated to Denver, Colorado. He married Lilliam Kirschbaum and they had 1 daughter and 3 sons. William Herbert (1874–1908) 2nd son of Charles John of Branhholme Park. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy. In 1893 he was on board the 'Nile' off Tripoli, when he witnessed the collision that caused the sinking of H.M.S. Victoria, with the loss of hundreds of lives, including his brother Arthur. Later he himself was killed in another naval disaster, this time involving an explosion in Queensferry. There is a memorial brass to him and his brother in St. Cuthbert's Church (formerly written 'Greave', 'Greaves', 'Greif', 'Griefe', 'Greiff', 'Greive', 'Grive' and variants).

the Grieve (thu-greev) n. name of a place in the lower Ewes valley which was used by the people of the Langholm area for drowning witches. Its precise location is uncertain, but possibly at the confluence of the Ewes with the Esk.

Grieve's (greevz) n. plumbers firm formerly located between the Roman Catholic Chapel and Green Wynd. They had a private water pump there in the mid-19th century. Also the name of a coach-builders in Havelock Street in the 19th century.

grievous (gree-vee-is) adj., arch. grievous – 'His wayes ar alwæies greifious; thy juudgemints ar fer aboone owt o' his sicht' [HSR], 'An' sayin', Lord, my servant lieth at hame sick o' the paralsie, grievouslie tormented' [HSR] (there are spelling variations; note the extra syllable).

Griffith (gri-fith) n. Sir Richard Waldie (1850–1933) officer in charge of the Border Rifles. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge and served with the 2nd Dragoon Guards, retiring with the rank of Captain. He succeeded to the baronetcy and family estates near Kelso on the death of his father in 1889. In 1891 he became Colonel of the local volunteer regiment, the Border Rifles. Under his command the Border Rifles became the 4th battalion of the K.O.S.B., with him as Honorary Colonel. He was Chairman of the Roxburghshire Unionist Association, Chairman of the Tweed Commission and a member of the Border Union Agricultural Society. He stood unsuccessfully in the 1906 general election for Roxburghshire. However he served as a member of Roxburghshire County Council and was also a J.P. He was Lord-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, as well as being a Brigadier in the Royal Company of Archers. A keen sportsman, he was known as a rower at university, later as a curler, yaughtsman and particularly as a breeder of racehorses. He made his fortune through mines in Bohemia and lived for a while in Australia. He married 3 times, but had no children. He wrote the foreword to the book 'With the Border Volunteers to Pretoria'.

Griffiths (gri-fiths) n. Nigel (1955–) politician. Son of a High School English teacher, he was educated there, as well as at Edinburgh University. He became Edinburgh councillor 1980–87 and Labour M.P. for South Edinburgh from 1987, being at one time Opposition Whip and spokesman on Trade and Industry.

grime (grīm) v., arch. to sprinkle, fleck – ‘The sun was na up, but the moon was down, It was the gryming of a new fa’n snaw, Jamie Telfer has run ten myles a-foot, Between the Dodhead and the Stobs’s Ha’ [T], n. a flake, particularly of soot (also written ‘gryme’, ‘greim’, etc.).

grimin (grī-min, -meen) n., arch. a sprinkling – ‘Old people invariably talked of ... a gryming o’ snaw’ [HAST1902], ‘The sunny blinks, keekin throwe atween the leafs, spurtelt the road wui greimeens o licht’ [ECS], ‘The mune she shines sae bricht, Till a’ the yirth is marlt wi’ The grymins o’ her licht’ [DH] (also written ‘grymins’).

the Grindin Burn (thu-grīn-din-burn) n. the Grinding Burn, a stream that follows the Minto to Denholm road and joins the Teviot just beyond Denholm. In 1780 ‘Grinden Burn’ is listed as part of the southern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘grene dun’, meaning ‘the stream running from the green hill’, named after the Mintos; it is clearly shown on Pont’s 1590s manuscript map, and may be labelled ‘Grindoun’, this being interpreted as the name given to the hills; Blaeu’s 1654 map intriguing shows it linking to the Jordan Burn, hence linking the Ale and Teviot valleys directly!; it is ‘Grydone Burn’ in c.1537; James Murray calls it ‘Grindon Burn’ in 1863).

Grindin Hills (grīn-din-burn) n. possible former name for the Minto Hills. Pont’s manuscript map from the 1590s indicates the word ‘Grindoun’ with ‘hills’ written below. This was transferred to Blaeu’s 1654 published map as ‘Grindoun h.’, hence leading to some speculation that the hills gave their name to the Grinding Burn running below them. However, this name for the hills is otherwise unknown, and it seems unlikely that the Mintos ever had this alternative name, with the origin simply being misinterpretation of what was written by Pont.

Grindstane Law (grīnd-stān-law) n. hill near the head of the Kale Water, just on the Scottish side of the Border, reaching a height of 468 m. It was near here in 1598 where one of the last skirmishes occurred between the Scottish and English. Accounts differ as to the numbers involved, with the group of Scotsmen being from 60 to 200 and the English group perhaps being as large as

400. The Scots claimed they were simply out hunting, going into England on 1st August and again the following day, after which they retired to dinner ‘Grindisdame law in Scotland’. They were then chased by the larger English party (led by Woodrington and Fenwick), as far as Plenderleith, with fighting occurring ‘neir ane pairt callit Knowpark’. Some Scotsmen were killed, including Andrew Rutherford, brother of the Laird of Hundalee, Robert Pringle, servant to the Laird of Bonjedward and James Robson, servant to the Laird of Greenhead. The Laird of Bonjedward was also injured and several prisoners were taken, including the younger men of Bonjedward, Hunthill and Greenhead, the Laids of Tower and Billerwell, 2 Burgesses of Jedburgh and others, the total being as many as 12. The English also took about 50 horses. The prisoners were released, but had to appear to answer charges a few days later. The English claimed the Scots were out raiding, or at least cutting and stealing wood (which may well have been true), nevertheless, the English pursuit of the Scots was ferocious (although common for the times).

grip (grip) v., poet. to catch, seize – ‘My lord may grip my vassal-lands, For there again main I never be!’ [T], ‘... an’ grippith awa that whilk was sawn in his hairt’ [HSR].

the Gripknowe (thu-grip-now) n. name for an area either in or bordering on Hawick Common Moor, the precise position being now uncertain. It was mentioned in 1766 in the description of 9 small pieces of land that were let in order to try to prevent encroachment on the Common by neighbouring tenants. John Scott was living there in 1784. Alexander Miller was recorded on a farm there when his son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1786.

grippit (gri-pi’, -pee’) pp. gripped – ‘... and he fell off his seat where he was sitting, and grippet at James Chisholme’s fingers with his staffe ...’ [BR1666], ‘And then he grippet the bedrel’s spade, Ane pye therewith to seeke ...’ [JTe], ‘An’ they grippet him, an’ castet him out o’ the vinyaird, an’ sleyet him’ [HSR], ‘My hazel staff I gripit fast, My hat upon my head did tether ...’ [JT], ‘Eh, but he look’d angry! Grundi see Grundy

Grundistone (grun-dee-stin) n. Groundistone, former farm to the west of the A7 at ‘the Heights’. The name probably relates to the ‘de Grundi’ family, who are recorded in the area in the early 1200s. An undated charter (probably around 1390) in which ‘the five merk lands in the town of Grundiston’ are granted by William Lindsay of the Byres to his son Andrew. Easter and Wester Groundistone were known as homes of the Scotts in the 16th century. In the 16th century it was part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. In 1535 the King revoked a former charter, and so the superiority passed from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to George, Lord Home. In 1580/1 an agreement was made there regarding a dispute between George Scott of Synton and Walter Scott of Stirches over Synton Mill. Later the lands became part of the Buccleuch estates. The farms of Easter and Wester Groundistone and Drinkstone (along with Drinkstone and perhaps other lands) were valued at £2440 in 1643. William Taylor was tenant there in 1635 and Hector Turnbull in 1683. ‘The two Grundistones’ were transferred from Hassendean Parish to Wilton in 1690. Adam Glendinning was there in 1698. There was a dispute over the boundaries with Synton and Ashkirk around 1707. George Scott was recorded there in 1724, Robert Scott in 1725–29, George Stewart in 1729, Thomas Kyle in 1737, John Miller in 1751 and Robert Waugh in 1759. ‘Easter and Wester Groundiston and Drinkston’ were valued together at £2440 in 1778 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. Residents in 1801 included George Scott and George Stewart. There was a marl pit there around 1800. Janet Scott (probably a widow) was head of the household there in 1841, and William Potts was farmer in 1851. The area was used as a meeting place for hunting by the Duke of Buccleuch’s hounds in the 19th century. There is a tradition (described by James Wilson) that an ancient stone there bore the inscription ‘Remember to pray’, but this had not existed in living memory by the mid-1800s, if indeed it was ever more than a fantasy (the name is first recorded in 1380 as ‘Grundiestoun’; it is ‘Grundiston’ about 1390, ‘Grandiston’ and ‘Groundiston’ in 1525, ‘Grundiston’ in 1526/7 and 1551, ‘Groundeston’ in 1535, ‘Grundingstoun’ in 1580/1, ‘Grundistone’ in 1635, ‘Grundiston’ in 1643, ‘Grundestoune’ in 1683, ‘Grundeston’ in 1698, ‘Easter and Wester Groundistounes’ in 1707, ‘Grundistoun’ in 1725, ‘Groundston’ in 1737, ‘Grundiston’ in 1744, ‘Grundiston’ in 1759 and ‘Groundestone’ in 1841; the origin is possibly ‘Grundi’s farm’ with the Middle English personal name Grundi, and may refer to ‘Robert Grundi de Neuton’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and his ancestors).

Grundistone (grun-dee-stin) n. David (15th C.) Burgess of Cupar. He had a charter of the lands of ‘Bangall’ in Fife in 1458, with his surname written ‘Grundistoun’. He is recorded as deceased in 1481 when his son Thomas had a charter for lands in Fife. It is unclear whether his name relates to the farm near Hawick. David (15th/16th C.) listed as a witness to a charter in Edinburgh in 1511. He may have been son of Thomas. Henry (13th/14th C.) English Clerk recorded in 1301. This was for delivering messages and to hasten the workers constructing the tower at Linlithgow. His name is written ‘de Graundeston’ and it is unclear if he is from the locally-connected family. James (15th C.) tenant of Ferny in the Edinburgh area in 1481. In 1485 he was recorded as tenant of ‘Luthry’ along with his son John. John (d.bef. 1490) tenant of the lands of ‘Luthre’ in Fife in 1490. His widow was also recorded, as well as his father James. Margaret (15th C.) recorded in 1470 as wife of Robert de Foret, when he had a charter for the lands of Foret in Fife. She was presumably related to David and Thomas. Thomas of Kingask (15th/16th C.) son of David, as recorded in a charter of 1481 when he was granted lands in Fife. He was Bailie in Cupar and also referred to as ‘custumar’. He is recorded in several charters in the period 1495–1513, signed in Edinburgh or Fife, with his name spelled ‘Grundestoun’, ‘Grundistoun’ and variants. His wife was Isobel Seton. Probably the same ‘Thoma Grundystoun’ was witness to the charters made by Lord Lindsay of the Byres to James Scott of Kirkurd in 1484 for the lands of Over and Nether Newhall in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. The charters were made in Edinburgh, so he may not have had a direct connection with the Hawick area; it may be a coincidence that his surname is the same as the neighbouring lands of Groundistone. Walter of Glaslie (15th/16th C.) witnessed a charter in 1504/5 for Thomas of Kingask, to whom he was presumably related (also written ‘Grundiston’).

Groundistone Heights, the area of high ground adjacent to the A7 north of Hawick, more commonly known as ‘the Heights’. The highest point on the road is 942 ft, and marks the boundary between Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. The view from here, particularly south to the Cheviot Hills is magnificent. A former drove road used to cross the main road near here (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map), passing over Bewlie Moor and Chapel Moor on its way to the Borthwick valley. It has been claimed that a similar route shows evidence of having been a Roman road, with traces between here and Woo Law, connecting Raeburnfoot with Newstead, via Craik Cross and Harelaw; however, this is not firmly established.

Grundistone Edge (grun-dee-stin-ej) n. former name for Groundistone Heights (the name is used by James A.H. Murray in the 1863 Transactions).

grunds (grundz) n., pl., arch. the bottom, last bit, dregs, sediment – ‘The callant was bebbin an taain oot ov a bottle, an whummlin’t ti geet the verrih grunds’ [ECS].

grundstane (grund-stān) n., arch. a grindstone.

Grundy (grun-dee) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Grondy’ on the 1303/4 inquest for the half barony of Wilton. It seems likely that he was related to Robert and held lands near Groundistone. Benedict (12th/13th C.) father of Robert, who witnessed a charter in Hassendean in about the 1220s. His name is given as ‘Benedicto Grundi’. He is the earliest known member of the family who gave their name to Groundistone. Robert (13th C.) son of Benedict. He witnessed a charter for Christina of Hassendean in the period 1214–49, probably the late 1220s. His name is given as ‘Roberto filius eius’ after that of his father Benedict. He was probably father or grandfather of the later Robert. Robert ‘de Neuton’ (13th C.) mentioned in 1291–96, he may have been the owner of what became ‘Grundistone’, with ‘Neuton’ presumably being the neighbouring farm now called ‘the Nitton’. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and on the attached seal, which may bear a rose, his name is ‘S’ROBERTI GRVNDY’.

gruntle (grun-tul) n., arch. the snout of a pig or other large mammal – ‘And the stinkan brokke, wi’ his lange howe loone, Shote up his gruntle to see’ [JTe].

Gubbislie (gu-biz-lee) n. former lands in Liddesdale. 'Gubisley maior' (valued at 22 shillings and 8 pence) and 'Gusbysley minor' (valued at 8 shillings) are listed on a rental roll of c.1376. 'Gopishalch' was also listed (with a value of 4 merks) and possibly related. In a rental roll of 1541 the lands of 'Ouergubbislie' (valued at 16 shillings) were let to Thomas Armstrong of Merianton, along with Cuthbert (probably his brother), and the lands of 'Nethergubbislie' to William and Robert (possibly the same man as Cuthbert) Armstrong, brother of the Laird of Merianton (or Mangerton). From their position in this list it seems like the lands were close to Copshaw.

Gubbisteed (gu-bee-steed) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded in the c.1376 rental roll as 'Gubacstede' in the area known as Ermildon. It had a value of 10 shillings. It is possible it is related to the lands of Gubbislie recorded later.

Gum's Boddum (gumz-bo-dum) n. recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as 'Gummis-boddum'. It was a 7-shilling land and vacant at that time. The location is unknown, but perhaps near Gumersteed.

Gundase (gun-dis) n. John (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He may have been a factor or similar for the Scotts of Branxholme. It is unclear whether there is a modern equivalent for this surname.

gundie (gun-dee) n., arch. candy, sweet confection of various sorts.

Gunion (gun-yin) n. Rev. Andrew Jeffrey (1822–73) from Calton in Glasgow. He was minister of Allars Church from late 1846. He remained until early 1857, when he moved to Strathaven (West), having previously resisted a call to Dalkeith. He later moved to St. Andrews Square, Greenock. He was said to have been supported by his wife, who acted effectively as his secretary. It is also said that he was happier 'among the literary and political activities of Hawick than he ever was elsewhere'. In 1868 he obtained an LL.D. from Tusculum in Tennessee. He wrote 'The Uses of History' (1849) and 'The Culture of the Imagination' (1853). A photograph of him exists.

gun-mou'd (gun-mood) adj., poet. (probably) shaped like the mouth of a gun – 'To keep them hale frae cramps an' cleeks, They sheath'd their thighs in gun-mou'd breeks' [JR] (this is obscure).

Gusbank (gus-bawngk) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll along with the other lands of 'Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Gusbank, Hucklebuss', with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew

gust (gust) n., arch. taste, relish – ‘... The bait they catch wi’ greedy gust, The clairts give them a cravin’ As great for food as they’ve gi’en me An appetite for ravin’ [TCh].

Gusto’s (goo-stōz) n. another name for Nardini’s cafe on the Howegate, run by Augustino Nardini in the mid-20th century. It was reputed to have the best ice-cream in Hawick. They also sold ice cream from the ‘green hut’ in the Park – ‘Now Gusto’s was a place tae gang – but hei’s no din oo ony favours, Hei’s packed in selling fish and chips – it’s now an ice cream parlour’ [GM].

gutcher (gu-chur) n., poet. grandfather – ‘While other Barons a’ their land Gat frae their gutchers free’ [JR].

Guthrie (guth-ree) n. James (1806–72) from Selkirk, he was plumber, slater and glazier at 61 High Street in the mid-19th century. This led to the adjacent Tannage Close sometimes being called Guthrie’s Close. He is listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Isabella (1803–71), daughter of Jedburgh saddler Lewis Grant and sister of Rev. William Grant of Cavers. Their children were: John (b.1832), builder and architect; James (b.1836), who was a slater in Newcastleton; Lewis Veitch (b.1834); Isabella (b.1837), who died young; Isabella Ann (b.1839); Margaret Jane (b.1841); William Grant (b.1843), naturalist; and Janet (b.1845), also died young. His daughter Margaret is listed as being ‘2 hours’ old on the 1841 census! James (b.1835/6) born in Jedburgh, son of Hawick plumber James. He was a slater, plumber and glazier in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Annie and their children included James and William Armstrong. He may be the ‘James Guthrie (junior)’ who presented several articles to the Archæological Society in 1857, including ‘a flesh fork given to Christian Jackson by Lady Johnstone of Westerhall in 1590’. James ‘Jimmie’ (d.1940) father of the other Jimmie, he was official bugler for the Teviotdale Cycling Club, and one of the first people in Hawick to have a motor-cycle, in 1909. He established Guthrie Motors by Tannage Close on the High Street, which closed around 1989. James ‘Jimmie’ (1897–1937) champion motor-cyclist from Hawick, born at 5

Rosevale Cottage. He served an engineering apprenticeship with Wilson & Glenny, then joined the K.O.S.B., becoming a motorcycle dispatcher for the Royal Engineering Signals in WWI. After the war he entered a partnership with brother Archie in the family motor engineering firm. He started winning Scottish speed events from about 1926, and then began an astonishing run at the Isle of Man T.T. races, where for 10 years he only ever finished first or second. He rode for several companies, but became best known as a rider for Norton, which dominated the European circuits in the early to mid-1930s. He set many world records over 50km to 100 mile distances. His final record included finishing first 30 times out of 50 placings. He died following a crash at the 1937 German Grand Prix at the Sachsenring in Hohenstein-Ernstthal. His body was given a military escort out of Germany and his funeral in Hawick was attended by thousands. Memorials were erected on the Isle of Man (at ‘the Cutting’) and in Saxony. He was buried at the Wellogate, and a bronze statue, by Thomas Clapperton was erected in Wilton Lodge Park in 1939. A memorial bed was installed in his honour at the Cottage Hospital. A plaque was placed in 2011 at Tannage Close, near to his former workplace. A book ‘Jimmie Guthrie (1897–1937): Hawick’s Racing Legend’ by John Rogerson and Gordon Small was published in 1997, and the Museum contains much memorabilia of his life and achievements. A new book ‘Jimmy G.’ by Paul Guthrie was published in 2019. John (18th/19th C.) from Selkirk, in 1796 he married Margaret Whitrope from Hawick. Their son John was baptised in Selkirk in 1796. John (1832–1903) local businessman and architect. Born in Jedburgh, he came to Hawick when his father founded the slating and plumbing firm James Guthrie & Sons in the 1850s. He took over running this firm with his 2 brothers, but also trained as an architect. He supervised the feuing of Sunnyhill and designed Linden Park, the Buccleuch Memorial, houses for the Working Men’s Building & Investment Company, and many villas, including Deanfield, Hazelwood, Kilmeny, Lindesfarne, Langlands, Westwood and Woodnorton (originally Craigmere). He was heavily involved with the Archæological Society, being a founding member and later President, and was also involved with the Buccleuch Memorial Institute. In 1861 he presented to the Museum part of a quern from Deanburnhaugh. He was also a painter and art lover, and contributed travel accounts to the local press. He painted a view of the High Street from the East End in 1858, another in 1893, one called 'View of Rachel Anderson's House, High Street' and a view of the Auld Brig painted in 1869. He also painted a portrait of William Norman Kennedy, Alexander Michie and Robert Michie (3 of the founders of the Archæological Society). Another example is a portrait of Thomas Brown. He designed the decorations and paintings for the centenary Burns night in the Commercial Inn and spoke there on 'Burns the Pioneer'. He is also credited with bringing the 'nosey wundis' to Hawick, after he saw similar devices on a tour of the continent and built one for his house at 61 High Street. He married Elizabeth Purdom Borthwick, who died in 1908, aged 67. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William Grant (b.1843) son of plumber James. He was a local naturalist, who noted species of insects, mosses etc. in the area around Hawick. His name was usually written 'W. Grant' (also formerly 'Gutrie' and 'Guthery').

Guthrie Drive (guth-ree-driv) n. road bracketing the north of Stirches, built in 1977 and named after Jimmie Guthrie.

the Guthrie Memorial (thu-guth-ree-me-mō-ree-ul) n. bronze statue in Wilton Lodge Park, erected by public subscription in 1939 to commemorate Jimmie Guthrie. The statue was sculpted by Thomas Clapperton. There is film of the unveiling ceremony. There is also a memorial on an S-bend of the A18 on the Isle of Man, where he retired from his last TT Race, usually called 'Guthrie's Memorial'. A further memorial in Germany, at the site of his fatal crash, is called 'Guthrie's Stone'.

Guthrie's Close (guth-reez-klōs) n. mid-19th century name for a passageway off the High Street, probably referring to Tannage Close, and named after the plumber and slater's business of James Guthrie, which was at the west side (No. 61 High Street). This was later the site of A. & J. Guthrie Motor Engineers, the same family as motorbike champion Jimmy Guthrie.

guttet (gu'-eed) adj. extremely disappointed, choked up – 'hei was gutted tae find oot that hei wasni Cornet again'.

The Gutterbludes (thu-gi'-er-blidz) n. musical play about local characters written by J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant, and subtitled 'Hawick Callants Abroad and at Hame'. It was originally performed in the Town Hall on December 30th 1905, and January 1st–3rd 1906. Electric lighting was hired especially for the performances and props were borrowed from the Earl of Minto. The play is described as 'A Drama of Hawick in 1835 in two acts and four scenes', these being: 'Teri Lodge', a shanty (interior) in the Toronto forest; 'The Haugh' at Hawick Common-Riding; 'Round the Ramparts'; and 'The Auld Mid Raw', Cow Jean's lodging house. The play introduced the well-loved 'Meda's Song' and 'Clinty's Song', and also included 'The Buccaneers' (the Old Sailor's Song), 'The Funny Old Fellow' (Maxwell's Song), 'D'ye think I'm an Irishman' (Danny's Song), 'Oor Gutterblude' (Cow Jean's Oration) and 'Westward Ho!' The script is one of only 2 of Jed Murray's plays to survive. It was preserved by his son Melgund, given to Jim Peacock, and then a new production organised by Jean Wintroppe in 2000, with incidental music and some new tunes arranged by Ian Seeley. The 2000 and 2005 productions were put on by the Two Rivers Theatre Company, again in the Town Hall (also spelled 'The Gutterbluids' etc.).

guttie (gu'-ee) n. a paunchy person, adj. corpulent, pot-bellied – 'The auldest was a gutty blade, A thriving Grocer to his trade' [RDW] (also written 'guty').

Guttie (gu'-ee) n. nickname of John Turnbull and possibly other family members before him.

Guttriehaa (gu-tree-haw) n. near Hawick??.

Guy (gI) n. George (20th C.) bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band. In 1935 he arranged several Hawick songs for the band, including 'The Border Queen' and the polka from 'The Witch o' the Wisp Hill'. Many Hawick songs are included in his 'Memoirs of Hawick' brass arrangement, with the tunes being faithful to the versions published by Adam Grant, with some additional thematic material added.

Guyslands (gIz-lundz) n. former name for Orchard. It occurs as 'Gilisland' (possibly in error) in a list of lands within the Barony of Cavers in 1509/10 (referring to charters from the time of King David) and is 'Gyislandis' in a charter for Douglas of Cavers in 1511. Variants of the name occur until the late 17th century and it was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 (it is possible these lands were related to 'Guy de Denum'; it is transcribed 'Graeslands' in 1687 and wrongly as 'Embslands' in 1698).

eersel'! [JEDM], 'Gae-'way! g'way = go away!' [ECS] (see also gae-'way and 'way).

Gy (gI) n. nickname for Henry Turnbull in Cavers in 1503. The word may have meant 'guide'.

gypsies (jip-seez) n., pl. people living a nomadic lifestyle, who originally came from northern India around the 14th century and are spread around the world in small groups, maintaining the Roman language and some elements of their traditional culture. Also called 'travelling people', 'tinkers', etc., although sometimes a distinction is made between genuine gypsies and travellers of more recent Irish origin. Local gypsy families include the Blyths, Douglasses and Youngs, and they are recorded as settling in the Yetholm area since the 16th century. The Yetholm royal family was the Faas, with one of the earliest being Johnne Faa, then King Patrick Faa and Queen Jean Gordon being well known in the 17th century, and the last of the family being Queen Esther Faa Blyth who died in 1883. They also traditionally gathered at St. Boswells Fair and other local fairs. There has long been animosity against them, e.g. there was an order in 1573 that all 'vagabound and counterfaitit people calland thame selfis Egiptianis' were to be banished from the Borders. Ashkirk Session ordained in 1643 that 'no person shall reset any Egyptians, and if they insist on staying, then to come and tell the Minister, and he, with the assistance of the gentlemen that he shall choose, shall go and out them out of the Parish'. In the years following the Act of Parliament of 1609 there were several groups (mostly of the name Faa) who were found guilty of being 'Egiptianis' and hanged in Edinburgh. In 1674 William Hall and his family were banished from Hawick for attacking the Bailie and for being 'vagabond Egyptians'. In Jedburgh in 1704 11 men were found guilty of being 'Egyptians' and transported to America, while a woman was scourged through the town and then nailed to a post by her ear for half an hour. In Hawick they have been regular visitors for centuries, often setting up on the Haugh. Some of their words have entered into the Borders vocabulary. There was a large battle between groups from Lochmaben and Yetholm at Hawick Winter Fair in the early 18th century (as recounted by Robert Wilson). It apparently started over possession of a young lady, and was finally broken up by the Burgh officers. 2 of the combatants died of their wounds while several others were put in the stocks or sent to Jedburgh Jail – '... The Gypsies frae Yetholm then topped up the lot Bie chucken some Hindi words intae the pot' [WaE] (the name derives from a romantic notion that they originated in Egypt).

gyte (gī, gīt) adj., arch., poet. crazy, mad – 'Red-wud wi' spleen, pang fu' o' spite, For ilka thing is now gaen gite' [JoHa], 'Deed it's ma opeenion Tam Weens is gane clean gyte ...' A was in a habble’ [ECS].

habile (ha-bil) adj., arch. competent, able, qualified, admissible – ‘...the Pursuers object that he is not a habile Witness’ [C&L] (Scots law term).

Hab o Hawick (hawb-ō-hlk) n. nickname for Robert Oliver, as dramatised by Capt. Erskine of Dryburgh in 1829 in the play ‘James V; or, the Warlike Days of Hab o’ Hawick’, published in 1830 by John Anderson, Edinburgh. The basic story was first set out in Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. Erskine’s version is a fanciful one, with Hab being rich and daring. An old chair in the Museum is said to have belonged to Hab – ‘Tell your master that here sits Hab o’ Hawick at his ain fireside and a fig for King James and a’ his kin!’ [RW], ‘Hab, honest man! how oft thy feet Hae paced me o’er frae Silver Street’ [AD], ‘There’s Drumlanrig first av’a Jamie Thamson (‘Auld Mid Raw’), Balbirnie, Inglis, Hogg an’ a’, Hab o’ Hawick’ [TK].

hack (hawk) v. to cut, graze, particularly damage to the skin caused by cold weather, chap – ‘...whan aathing’s dinnellin an cruppen-thegither wui the nurlin hackin clap o Jock Nipneb’s nitherin neeve’ [ECS], n. a crackied patch of skin, particularly around the hands, a chap (also written ‘hawk’; cf. hackit).

hack (hawk) v., arch. to harry a bird, rob a bird’s nest – ‘Hack, hack, herry-nest, The bonnie bird ti build its nest, An’ yow ti gang an herry’t!’ [T], ‘Ti hawk (hawk, hack) = ...to harry (as a bird’s nest), presumably from the ravage caused, as by a hawk’ [ECS].

hackberry (hawk-be-ree) n., arch. the bird cherry, Prunus padus – ‘...much of Nether Bonchester would be glad with the old forest relics, principally birch, hazel, sloethorn and ‘hackberry’ [WaD] (also hag-berry).

Hackford (hak-furd) n. John (18th/19th C.) wright in Denholm in Pigot’s 1837 directory.

hackit (haw-kee’, -ki’) adj. cut up, hacked – ‘...Till the last was hackit doon’ [??], ‘The slightest wound might caused his deid, And they hae gi’en him thirty three. They hackit off his hands and feet And left him lying on the lee’ [LHTB], chapped – ‘this could weather’s made ma nose aa hackit’ (see also hack).

Hackman’s Dub (hak-munz-dub) n. location of a bridge built in the early 18th century, mentioned in the Burgh Records since the Town contributed to its construction. It is referred to as being within a mile or so of Hawick, but its location is uncertain.

hackum-plackum (haw-kum-plaw-kum) adv., arch. in equal shares, equally (of payment, reward, etc.) – ‘He’ll ...get her goods and gear and all, And share them with her hackim plackim’ [HSR] (also ‘hackim-plackim’).

had (had) pp., arch. took, conveyed – ‘...and I fand bot fowr oxin, quhilkis I had to the merkat ...’ [SB1500].

hadda (haw-du) n., arch. a haddock (also haddo).

Hadden (haw-din) n. village to the east of Sprouston and Kelso, in the extreme north-east of Roxburghshire. The Elliots of Wells held the Barony from at least 1729, and it was later part of the possessions of the Eliotts of Stobs, then the Elliots of Wells. Hadden Rigg, the site of a 1542 battle of the Scots and the English is adjacent (also written ‘Haddon’, the origin of the name is probably the Old English ‘haga dun’, meaning ‘the hill with the fenced enclosure’, and hence it has something in common with Hawick; the name is first recorded as ‘Hawedun’ around 1200).

Hadden (haw-din) n. Bernard (12th/13th C.) nephew of Bernard, who was son of Brian, Lord of Hadden. He made grants to Soutra Hospital and Kelso Abbey in the late 1100s. He is recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh in about 1203 (as ‘Bernardo de Hawedane’) and again in 1227/8. In 1223/4 he is recorded being allowed to commute his responsibilities as ward of Roxburgh Castle, and John Maxwell was listed as Sheriff at that time. In 1246 a perambulation of knights from both sides of the Border was arranged for the disputed lands between him and the canons of Carham. He had a son, also Bernard.

Hadden Rig (haw-din-rig) n. site near Kelso of a battle in 1542, where the Scottish forces of the Earl of Huntly routed those of Sir Robert Bowes

and the Earl of Angus (also spelled 'Haddon' and 'Rigg').

haddin see haudin

haddo (haw-dō) n., arch. a haddock (also hadda).

Haddon (ha-din) n. Andrew (d.bef. 1737) deacon of the fleshers in Selkirk. He is probably the Andrew recorded in a 'libel' for fighting in Selkirk in 1718. He was recorded in a dispute in Selkirk in 1723, involving a clothing allowance given to his former servant. He married Janet Turner and their children included James (b.1719). In 1737 his son James was named in a court case involving removal of a door to a common close, with a group of fleshers accused of threatening to break him out of jail afterwards; he was also charged with fighting with fellow flesher John Henderson. Andrew (b.1742) from Selkirk, son of James and Margaret Hall. He is probably the flesher recorded in cases in Selkirk in 1762 and 1763. He came to Hawick in the late 1700s and married Christian, daughter of Bailie Walter Ruecastle. She was apparently due to marry Robert Howison, the banns having even been read. Their marriage was an irregular one in 1772, the coupled being rebuked by the Hawick Kirk Session and later by the Selkirk Session. He was also rebuked for having a child with Helen Hunter from Philiphaugh Mill. He lived with Christian Ruecastle in Selkirk, then Edinburgh (where their sons John and Andrew were baptised in 1784 and 1785, respectively) and finally Paisley (where they had an unnamed daughter). Their children who were baptised in Selkirk were: Betty (b.1772); Betty (again, b.1773); James (b.1775); James (again, b.1778); Walter (b.1780), who returned to Hawick and married Agnes Goodfellow, niece of the Bailie; Margaret (b.1782); and Henry (b.1783). His grandfather may be the Andrew who was Deacon of the Selkirk fleshers in the early 1700s. Andrew (1818–94) son of Walter and Agnes Goodfellow. He was a manufacturer and farmer of the 19th century. He trained in the office of Town Clerk James Wilson. In 1841 he was recorded on the Back Row. He started with a stocking shop up the Loan, but moved his family to Honeyburn in 1848, where he was a farmer (and where several generations of the family subsequently stayed). In 1861 he was farmer of 205 acres there, and employed 9 labourers. He became a Councillor and Bailie in Hawick (being on the 'Eternal Cooncil') and served on the first Roxburghshire County Council, where he was known for only speaking English when forced to! He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1857. In 1859 he joined the Jedburgh Company of Volunteers and commanded the Denholm section. He married Anne, daughter of John White the manufacturer. Their children included: Walter (b.1841); Isabella; John; Agnes G.; Ann (or Annie), who married Rev. Robert Borland; and Andrew (b.1863), who was Cornet in 1891. He may be the 'John Hadden' listed in 1852 as a farmer in Denholm. Andrew, O.B.E. (1863–1936) of Deansyde, son of Andrew, brother of Walter and John. He was a solicitor in Hawick and farmer at Honeyburn. He trained in Edinburgh and started in Hawick with the firm of Haddon & Turnbull. He was Cornet in 1891. He became Lieutenant in the Selkirk Detachment of the Border Volunteers in 1884, became Captain in 1889 and Captain-commandant in 1895. He went to the Boer War with the Border Rifles (volunteers), many of the men being from Denholm; he published some of his war diaries anonymously as 'A Hawick Man'. On his return he set up as a solicitor at 7 Tower Knowe. He became Lieut.-Col. in the Volunteers, received an O.B.E. and served on the Hawick Military Tribunal during WWI. Along with his son Andrew he was heavily involved with setting up the Milk Marketing Board. He married May Laing Brown (1864–1954) and their children included Andrew (1904–93) and Marjorie (1905–95). He is buried at Denholm. Andrew Douglas 'Douglas' (1886–1952) son of Walter and brother of Ross, he was a partner in the family law firm. He became Cornet in 1910, and was heavily involved with the Callants' Club, being President in 1928, and Treasurer and Secretary for about 40 years. He married Jane Martin and their children included Walter Andrew, Jean Douglas and Agnes. Andrew, O.B.E. (1904–93) son of Andrew and May Laing Brown. He was farmer at Honeyburn and also a solicitor. He moved his firm, Andrew Haddon to 3 Oliver Place and went into partnership with David Crowe as Andrew Haddon & Crowe, solicitors. He was Burgh Prosecutor for Hawick prior to Reorganisation in 1974, was a member of the first Borders Regional Council, was involved with local Liberal election campaigns and was awarded the O.B.E. for political and public service. He was also involved (with his father Andrew) in Teviotdale Dairy and the Milk Marketing Board and was an elder in Denholm Kirk. He married Dorothy Blanche Hall in 1939. Dr. David Alexander Ross 'Ross' (1890–1978) son of Walter and brother of Douglas, he was a long time doctor in Hawick at 19

Buccleuch Street. He was born in Hawick and educated at Fettes and Edinburgh University, graduating in 1913 and gaining his M.D. in 1919. In WWI he went to France with the 9th Royal Scots, being wounded and becoming Regimental Medical Officer. He later served with the 19th Field Ambulance and 14th General Hospital and was awarded the Military Cross. Back in Hawick, he went into partnership with Dr. Barrie and continued in that practice for 46 years. He travelled far and wide to visit his patients, in the early days by motorbike. He was involved with ex-servicemen's associations and the Red Cross and served as police surgeon and doctor to local factories. He was a member of the Borders Hospital Board for 19 years and took a keen interest in the Hawick Cottage Hospital. He had a son and 3 daughters. Jamas (1719–45) son of Andrew, he was a flesher in Selkirk. He and his mother Janet Turner were involved in a dispute in Selkirk in 1737, the fleshers were accused of trying to break him out of jail and he was also accused of fighting with others near the churchyard. He married Margaret Hall and their children included: Helen (b.1741); Andrew (b.1742), who married Christian Ruecastle from Hawick; and Janet (b.1745). His widow later married John Dunn and ran the County Hotel in Selkirk. Janet (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1706 she was one of the people (presumably living near St. Mary's) who were disturbed at night by a group who were involved in drunken revelry. They delivered to her house a cripple that they had picked up from another house. John (19th C.) farmer in Cavers or Minto Parishes. He is recorded in a directory of 1852, with his surname given as 'Hadden'. Dr. John (1845–1920s) doctor from Denholm, son of Andrew and brother of Walter and Andrew. He was born in the West End and educated at Minto school and Edinburgh University, where he was not allowed to graduate as an M.A. because he was too young, so he went on to win most of the prizes in medicine. He practised for many years as a dietician in Manchester. He also travelled the world, some of his journals being published in the Hawick News. He lived for a while in Canonbie (the house now being a hotel). He became known as an eccentric, with peculiar views on diet, such as suggesting that patients cut out their favourite foods and go on 24 hour fasts; he even suggested that a man could live on 2 gooseberries a day (but this may have been a joke)! He had the Text House built for him on Main Street in Denholm. He also bought up some properties and left them to be let rent-free to elderly residents of the village. He was one of the people present at the excavation of the cairn at Belvedere on the Cavers estate in 1895. Later in life he travelled extensively. He wrote 'A Trip to Rangoon' (1901), 'Impressions and Lessons from Burma' (1901), 'The Father's Will and How to Know it' (1901), 'A Trip to Central America' (1903), 'Mr. Chamberlain's Proposals' (1903), 'A Trip to South Wales' (1905), 'Diary of a Tour in the West Indies in 1901' and 'A Tour in England'. Marjorie (1905–95) daughter of Andrew and sister of Andrew. She won the Medway Challenge Cup (Cornet's Race) riding 'Rufus' on Common Riding Saturday 1927, being possibly the first lady rider seen on Hawick racecourse. She was Cornet's Lass in 1926 and did the Mossbail Rideout that year. She married Donald Laing of Balcary. Walter (1780–1826) son of Andrew from Selkirk and father of Andrew. He was one of the early manufacturers in Hawick, his stocking-shop being where the Baptist Church was later located. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was also a skilled cabinet-maker and was apparently killed while felling a tree. He married Agnes (b.1784), daughter of wright John Goodfellow. It is said that her family did not approve of him and she was sent to Manchester for a couple of years, but married him on her return. They had one son, Andrew (b.1818), who carried on with a stocking-shop on the Fore Row, but became tenant of Honeyburn in 1848. His wife Agnes gave up the stocking-shop in 1855, when the property became the West Port Mission; she also kept house for their grandson Walter. He was killed by a falling tree. Walter (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the Fore Row, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. His house is marked on Wood's 1824 map, near the top left side of Drumlanrig Square. Walter (1841–1907) solicitor and banker. Born in the West-End, his father was Andrew of Honeyburn and his brothers were John and Andrew. He attended Minto School along with J.A.H. Murray. He apprenticed with Thomas Purdom, received further legal training in Edinburgh and returned to Hawick in 1864. He worked for the partnership Kirk & Haddon, with the partnership of Haddon & Turnbull (with Thomas Turnbull) starting in 1880, with him as senior partner. In his early days, his grandmother Agnes (nee Goodfellow) kept house for him. He acted as Police Treasurer and Collector for the Burgh from 1864 until his death. He was also agent for the Royal Bank of Scotland and associated with Kirkton and Lilliesleaf School Boards. He was Secretary of Hawick Working Men's Building & Investment Co. from 1878. In addition he acted as clerk or secretary for a large number of other local concerns, including the Exchange Buildings and the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association, and also as factor of Cavers estate. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1880. He was assessor for Hawick for a number of years, and Sheriff-Clerk Depute until about 1895. He was a member of the Hawick District Committee of Roxburgh County Council, and of Cavers Parish Council, a Director of Teviotdale Dairy Company and a member of the Border Mounted Rifles. He was an enthusiastic Common Riding supporter and Acting Father for J.E.D. Murray in 1890. In politics he was a Liberal Unionist. He married a daughter of Provost Ross of Dingwall. He built the house at Colislinn and also acquired the estate of Firth near Lilliesleaf. His son Douglas continued the family legal tradition, while Ross was a long-time doctor in Hawick (formerly written 'Hadden', 'Haddin', 'Hadon' and 'Haldon').

Haddon an Turnbull (ha-din-an-turn-bul)

n. law partnership between Walter Haddon and Thomas Turnbull, established in Hawick in 1880.

hade (hād) pp., arch. hid – '...atween the treis that skuggeet Barnhill's staney bed an hade Mintih Hoose threh sicht' [ECS] (also written 'haed').

Hadrian's Waa (hā-dree-inz-waw) n. Hadrian's Wall, ordered to be built by Roman Emperor Hadrian in the year 122, taking 6 years to complete. It snakes its way across England from the Tyne to the Solway, with many forts, temples and now museums along the way. It is 73 miles long and was up to 5 metres high, although only a few good sections remain. Colloquially it is used as a way of referring to the Border, although in fact is far south of the modern boundary. Nevertheless, its existence probably had a lasting influence on Border history.

hae (hā, he) v., arch. have – 'Oft hae I kiss'd, oft hae I caress'd her' [JoHa], 'Hae dune, ye say. hag see hagg hag (hawg) v., poet. to chop wood – 'Our banes ar skatteret at the mooth o' the graffe, as whan ane hags an' cleefes wud apoun the yirth' [HSR].

Hagawic (ha-ga-wik) n. possible original name for Hawick, being the Old English for 'hedged town' – '... Naught but a hamlet amongst the hills. 'Haga-wic' was its name in that day' [JWTH].

hag-berry (hawg-be-ree) n., arch. the fruit of the bird-cherry, Prunus padus (also hackberry).

Hagburn (hawg-burn) n. a deep wooded glen on the western slopes of Ruberslaw, one of the places where Covenanting ministers are said to have preached in secret. Robert Tait was tenant at a farmstead there in 1684, when he was declared as a fugitive for attending conventicles. Denholm Dean effectively rises near here. There is a place of the same name in Melrose Parish.

hagbut (hawg-but) n., arch. a harquebus, an early, long-barrelled hand-gun, with the but bent down to help in taking aim, also a soldier armed with such a weapon – 'Gae fetch, gae fetch my hagbuts five', With flashing eye he said ...' [JTe], 'He girt his broadsword to his side – That friend of proven worth; He raught his hagbut from the wall, – Preparing to go forth' [JTe], '... put a number of Hagbuts (men armed with hand guns) into Hawick' [RM].

hagg (hawg) n., arch. a ledge of turf or earth overhanging the side of a stream, a turf-clad projecting river bank – 'Few could wend their way along the brae hagg of the Teviot as well as he (Blinnd Wull)' [RM], 'Where the hounds run trooping is a tired fox stooping By the hagg at her water's edge; When the dew lies soaking, there's a brown toad croaking To her song in the marshy sedge' [WL], 'Thinks I, 'The troots maun leeve on air, That haunt the hags up Eskdalemuir' Fishers? – hech!' [DH], a piece of soft bog, quagmire – '... and boggy ground ... The Hag is computed to be at least eight ... rood in circumference ...' [GT], 'On Cauldcleugh's wild hagg roun' the coome o' the steep' [HSR], 'With staff on high, he waves an arch adieu, Clears a peat-hag, and gives a grand haloo!' [HNo], ' 'Twas now my bride that made the hurry. Ower mony hags an' braes we scurry ...' [WP], 'The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o' The Roan Scartit in wi' a pencil' [DH] (also spelled 'hag'; cf. haggie and brae-hag).

Haggawick (haw-gaw-wik) n. possible early Saxon name for Hawick, meaning 'settlement hedged around with hills' (see also Hagawic).

haggie (haw-gee) n., arch. a small hagg – '... And wondered wha my bouk wad find, Deep laired within some mossy haggie' [JT].

Haggie (haw-gee) n. William (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as 'Willelmus Hagyn notarius publicus' when he wrote a 'letter of slains' in Hawick. This was for Robert and James Scott, forgiving a group of other Scotts from Allanhaugh and Over Southfield in the murder of their brother George. He was probably a cleric of Glasgow, and may have been a minister at one of the local churches. It is possible that his surname was 'Haig' or 'Heggie'.

Haggiehaugh (haw-gee-hawch) n. former farmstead in the Liddel valley, just north of the present Larriston farm. It was known in earlier times as Larriston Rig. Charles Edward Stewart's army marched this way in 1745 (probably 7th November), and he spent the night there. John Oliver paid tax on 38 windows there in 1748 (suggesting that at that time the name was used for the main farmhouse of Larriston). The lands were purchased in 1790 by Maj.-Gen. William Elliot from William Oliver of Dinlabyre for £1,900 sterling, and joined to those of Larriston. Elliot had 6 horses there according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Alexander Walker and William Miller were servants there in 1797. James Rutherford and Gifford Thomson were living there in 1801. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists 'Laristonrig, now called Haggiehaugh' among the properties of George Scott-Elliot of Larriston (marked on Stobie's 1770 map as 'Haggihaugh'; it is 'Haggishhaugh' and 'Haggyhaugh' in 1797 and 1821; not to be confused with Haggishaa).

haggis (haw-gees, -gis) n. a traditional Scottish winter dish. Hawick butcher Lindsay Grieve was the 1992 Scottish Champion haggis maker – 'A good fat haggies, if purse can spare it; If not, he's forced to be content, And to observe an annual lent' [JR], 'An' that's as true as I'm a Scot, A redshank, Norland haggis eater' [JoHa], 'Last thochts o' a haggis (glow'rin a' roond, while bein'

Haggishaa (haw-gees-haw) n. area around the foot of the Vertish Hill, also known as Burnflat, being the edge of the Common. The Common Riding cavalcade used to ride this way, up until 1803, when the Cornet was thrown from his horse and injured, recovering in a house there. Until 1991 there was a row of dilapidated cottages here, one being the birthplace of ‘Old Mortality’. They were demolished following a fire. The same area was fancifully said to be home of a Michael Paiter-son, who entertained the local priests to dinner twice a year, on one occasion the haggis being so large that its skewer pin was used to mend the Corn Mill, inspiring Robert Burns lines ‘Your pin wad help ti mend a mill In time o’ need’ (R.E. Scott wrote about this in the Burns Chronicle of 1964). Walter Scott of Haggishaugh was recorded as owner of part of Burnflat in about 1874 – ‘At the Haggisha’ we rank up, Weaver Will’s auld bonnet clank up’ [AB] (there are several spellings, including ‘Hangmanshaa’; it appears to be ‘Hagushall’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the name probably derives from Old English or Old Scots for ‘a copse by the waterside’, although more fanciful origins, sometimes involving haggis, have also been suggested; note that ‘Haggiehaugh’ was an old name for Larriston in Liddesdale).

Haggishaa Brae (haw-gees-haw-brā) n. name formerly given to Burnflat Brae. In former times it was when the Procession reached here that the Riding of the Marches really began.

Haggis Haa see Haggishaa

Haichwik (hāch-wik) n. transcription of ‘Hawick’ from a charter of 1494 relating to Teindside and Harwood.

haick (hīk, hāk) n. a garment worn in Morocco, consisting of a large a piece of cotton, wool or silk cloth (a variant of ‘haik’, not to be confused with a town in the Borders).

Haick (hIk) n. another former spelling for Hawick (recorded as such in a Church of Scotland register of 1586, on Pont’s manuscript of the 1590s, Robert Gordon’s map of the Clyde and Tweed basins, c. 1636–52, Blaeu’s map of 1654 and Nicolaes Visscher’s map of 1689; following Pont it is often written ‘Haïck’).

haif see hafe

haiflin (hāf-lin) n., poet. a halfling, stripling, young lad – ‘When lowsed at een be it hairst or plooin’, The thought o’ the haiflin turns to wooin’’ [WL] (also haufflin).

Haig (hāg) n. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Belses. His wife was Isobel, heir of James Riddell, portioner of Lilliesleaf. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Jamieson and their children included William (b.1756), Adam (b.1758) and Mary (b.1761). Andrew (17th C.) listed as ‘cottar’ at Abbotrule Townhead in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Anthony (17th/18th C.) resident of Maxton Parish. In 1706 he was recorded as ‘sevitour to Mr Edgar minister of Maxton’ when he had a ‘bastard’ child baptised in Hawick. He married Margaret Hart earlier in 1706 in Maxton. Their only recorded child is Jean (b.1706), baptised in Hawick, with witnesses Bailie Patrick Richardson and merchant William Oliver. Anthony (1736–1801) weaver from Hawick, son of David. He could be the stocking-maker Anthony whose son Thomas died in 1819. He is probably the resident of Hawick who married Margaret Gibson in 1759 and had children including: Janet (b.1761); David (b.1763); William (b.1765); Margaret (b.1766); Jane (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); David (again, b.1772); Janet (again, b.1774); and Margaret (b.1776). All these children were baptised in Hawick, but the 1770 one was also recorded in Wilton, with witnesses William Simpson and Gavin Wallace. The 1772 witnesses were David Haig (his father) and John Brown (perhaps an uncle) and the 1774 witnesses were the whole congregation. Anthony (b.1812/3) provision merchant on the High Street, at about No. 17 in 1851. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He presented at least 3 papers to the Archaeological Society in its first few years, on topics like ‘Mediæval History’. His wife was Isabella and their children included Thomas, George, Anthony, Margaret, John, Charles and William. He moved to Philadelphia and in 1863 made a donation to the Museum, when he is described as ‘an old member of the Society’. Anthony (b.1823/4) weaver in Hawick. He was living at 52 Loan in 1861. His wife was Euphemia and they had a son John. David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Brown and their children included: Anthony (b.1736); Isobel (b.1738); Margaret (b.1741); and James (b.1744). The witnesses in 1741 were wright James Roger and baker John Kedie. He is probably the David who (along with John Brown) witnessed a baptism in 1772 for Anthony (probably his son). Earl Douglas (1861–1928) soldier, born in Edinburgh. He worked his way through the ranks, serving in the Sudan, in the Boer War and in India. He was the youngest Major-General of his time and became Director of Military Training at the War Office in 1906. He established a general staff and a territorial army and organised the British Expeditionary Force. In WWI he commanded forces in France and Belgium, becoming Commander-in-Chief of the B.E.F. in December 1915. Although successful, his tactics at Somme and Passchendaele have been much debated. After his retirement in 1921 he devoted his efforts to the Royal British Legion. He was made Earl Haig in 1919 and given £100,000 by a ‘grateful nation’. He became Baron Haig in 1921. In Hawick he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1925 when he attended the Callants’ Club dinner. The Haig Maternity Hospital was named after him in 1930 and Douglas Haig Court in 1976. Bemersyde House near St. Boswells, was bought for him by the Government in 1921, and he was also given £100,000 by a ‘grateful public’. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘cottar’ at Hartshaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His name is listed as ‘Haigh’. James (19th/20th C.) local sportsman who played scrum-half for the Greens, hockey at international level, was Scottish 10-mile championship runner, bowling cup-winner, etc. Additionally he led the cycling team that challenged and beat the rest of Scotland in 1901, after being annoyed that no Borderers were selected to represent the nation against England. He was Scottish 10 mile champion 3 years in a row. In 1904 he was a member of the 4-man Scottish cycling team at the British Empire Championships. He worked as a painter and decorator. He was bugler for the Boy Scouts, seen in photographs of the 1910 visit by Beden-Powell. He may be the James born in Hawick in 1879. James (20th C.) Hawick man who executed the 1939–45 Roll of Honour for local soldiers who fell in WWII, displayed in the Museum. The design was the same as for the WWI Roll. He may be the same man as the painter and decorator. John (18th C.) recorded in a Hawick sasine of 1764 as ‘John Haig, in Whitfield, bailie in that part’. He may have been acting as a bailiff for the deed, or was a Hawick Bailie. Patrick (15th C.) part of a ‘re-tour of inquest’ held in Hawick in 1424 to decide on the inheritance of part of the Barony of Hownam. His name is recorded as ‘Hage’, and most of the other men were local lairds. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. he married Christian Scott and their children included Anthony (b.1811), Charles (b.1814), Margaret (b.1816), John (b.1818), Christian (b.1820), Mary (b.1823), Thomas (b.1826), Walter (b.1828) and Jane (b.1832). William (16th C.) apparent name of the notary in 1582 for a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. His surname is recorded as ‘Hagye’ (formerly ‘Hague’, ‘Haige’ and variants).

the Haig (thu-hāg) n. Haig Maternity Home, attached to the Springbank Clinic on Princes Street, and built in 1930, through the generosity of Norman W. Grieve. It was locally sometimes known as simple ‘the Home’. It was developed by the Town Council and handed over to the County. It was occupied by the Jubilee Nursing Association, Maternity Service, and Child Welfare Schemes. The labour and public wards were on the ground floor, with the nursery on the first floor. It was officially renamed the Haig Maternity Hospital when taken over by the N.H.S. in 1948 (with many subsequently pointing out the irony of naming a maternity hospital after someone associated with the deaths of so many soldiers). It delivered about 12,000 babies in Hawick from 1931 until 1988 when the B.G.H. was opened. The last baby born there was Claire White. The buildings were sold off for private housing in the mid-1990s. A history of the Haig was written by Dr. Suttie in 1999.

haigle (hā-gul) v., arch. to carry, haul, trudge, struggle forward – ‘Everly, whan A haiggle on alang streets chowky wui cluds o shairny stoor ...’ [ECS], ‘Now ee must hev luitten’t faa, nih! haigglin thae poaks an that nibbie an umbrellih an thing’ [ECS].

haigled (hā-guld) adj., pp. harassed, harried.

Haig Maternity Clinic (hāg-mu-tern-i’-ee-kli-neek) n. another name for the Haig.

Haig Maternity Home (hāg-mu-tern-i’-ee-hōm) n. original official name for the Haig, where most Teries were born from the 1930s to the 1980s.

the Haigs (thu-hāgz) n. family that appeared in the Borders in the 12th century, being based at Bemersyde, near St. Boswells, from 1412. Claims of origins of the family going back to Pictish Kings are fantasy and their origins are Norman, like other Scottish feudal landowners. The local family died out in 1857, but Bemersyde estate was gifted to Field-Marshal Earl Haig by the nation, and is still held by his family (derived from the old English ‘haga’, which is probably the same root as in ‘Hawick’).

Haik (hIk) n. former spelling for Hawick, appearing on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas and on Robert Morden’s 1687 map of Scotland.

hail see hale

hail (hāl) n., arch. the goal in ‘baa’ (annual handball) games – ‘The hail at the toon-fit’ [GW], an instance of scoring a goal in a ‘baa’ game – ‘Fowr hails an’ a cut’ [GW], v., arch. to strike the goal with a handball.

hail (hāl) v., arch. to heal – ‘Hælin’ a’ kinkind o’ ailment’ [HSR], ‘He sendet his wurd an’ hælet thame ...’ [HSR] (also ‘hale’).

hail (hāl) v., arch. to flow copiously, pour, usually referring to perspiration or precipitation – ‘The sweet was duist hailin off iz till A was nerrhand swutten ti deed’ [ECS], ‘The sweet was fair hailin’ off iz’ [GW] (also written ‘hale’).

Hail Great and Glorious Power! (hāl-grā’-awnd-glō-ree-is-pow-ur) n. another name for the Invocation.

hailscart (hāl-scawr’) adj., arch. unscathed, without harm – ‘... the young chield with the beggar on his back having made the round of the kirkyard ‘hailscart’, was on the point of returning ...’ [WaD] (also ‘halescart’).

hainch (hānch) n., arch. the haunch – ‘Jist as the terror reached my hainch, I jumpit high an’ grabb’d a brainch’ [WP], a jerking throw of a stone, a limp in one’s walk, a leg-up (to a horse), a help-up with a heavy object, v. to throw a stone by swinging down the hand as far as the thigh, to walk with a limp (also hench).

haincher (hān-chur) n., arch. one who throws a stone by ‘hainching’ – ‘Jock’s a guid haincher, but Tam’s a better hawker’ [GW] (see hainch).

the Hainin (thu-hān-in) n. the Haining, a house dating from 1794, in a walled estate on the left on the way into Selkirk from Hawick. Some of the decoration is by Archibald Elliot and the statuary by Canova. It served as a military headquarters during WWII, and partly burned down in 1944. The lakeside setting is impressive, and the grounds contain the site of Selkirk Castle on Peel Hill, as well as the stable block, former bear and wolf enclosures and the remains of a lectern-shaped dovecote. The estate was once granted to the Constable of Selkirk Castle. It was part of the Crown lands in Ettrick Forest from about 1456 until about 1507. It later became the home of a branch of the Scotts, said by Scott of Satchells to be descended from the Scotts of Has-sendean. They held the lands from at least 1477. Robert Scott of the Haining witnessed several local charters in the late 15th century. It appears to have been held by the Murrays of Philiphaugh (recorded in 1491), before passing back to the Scotts in 1492. Sheep were stolen from Robert Scott there in 1494/5. John Murray gave permission in about 1499 for John Scott (and his son John) to hold the lease. John Scott had a charter for the lands in 1507, when it was described as a land of 7 pounds and 2 shillings of old extent. Thomas Scott of Haining held a sasine for the lands in 1538. Walter Scott was tenant there in 1541, paying £24 yearly. Andrew Riddell bought it from the Scotts in about 1625. John Langlands, minister of Wilton, had a sasine of lands there in 1664. In 1678 the lands were valued at almost £2000. Early in the 18th century the estate was bought by the Pringles of Clifton. In 1785 the lands were valued at about £1440. In 1842 it passed to John Pringle’s sister, Margaret Violet, and her husband Archibald Pringle Douglas of Adderstone and Midshiels. The grounds once held exotic animals, including a bear and a large monkey; the monkey shivered in cold weather, leading to the local phrase ‘Chitterin’ to death, like the Hainin’ Puggy’ – ‘Ca’ up young Hob, of Gilminscleugh, Oakwood, and the Bowhill, Brave Haining (hān-in) n. James (19th C.) proprietor of the Hawick Advertiser, taking over from James Dalgleish about 6 months after the newspaper started. He took Dalgleish back as a partner when he returned to Hawick in 1857, but bought him out in 1870 after disagreement about taking his son William Dalgleish into partnership. He then sold the paper to William Morrison in 1876. His premises were at 9 High Street. He married Agnes Robson, and James H. was their son. A portrait exists of him. James Halliday (1870–1946) son of James and Agnes Robson. He was long involved with the Archæological Society, he was Treasurer 1907–11, Assistant Secretary 1917–18, Joint Secretary 1920–25 and 1929, Secretary 1930–35 and Vice-President 1936. He wrote many articles for the Transactions. His series of monumental inscriptions in Hawick's cemeteries, with extensive notes, are an extraordinary achievement, leaving a huge legacy of local family history. He married Isabella Christina, daughter of coal merchant Thomas Rutherford.

hainit (hā-nee', -ni') pp., arch. preserved, set aside, protected by an enclosure, refrained – '...either in his nichbour's corn, meadow, or haynit gers, sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings ...' [BR1640], 'Item, that na persone nor personnis scheir medowis, balkis, or haynit gers thifteouslie ...' [BR1640] '...lo, I haena hainet my lips, O Lord, thou kennist' [HSR] (also written 'haynit').

Hair (hār) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was at Tythehouse in 1739. His children included: Jean (b.1726), who probably married Adam Beattie in 1759; Robert (b.1728); John (b.1731); Marion (b.1735); and Andrew (b.1739). Ralph (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as being 'in Wodburne', which may have been the lands in the Borthwick valley. He was accused of stealing 17 sheep from George Chisholme of Woodburn, but was acquitted (also written 'Haire').

halberd (hal-burd, ber') n. a pike fitted with an axe-head, a weapon consisting of an axe-head and steel spike, or other arrangement of several sharp edges, mounted on a long pole, used in the 15th and 16th centuries. Those carried by the Burgh Officers at the Common Riding are traditionally said to be exact copies of those taken from the English at Hornshole; James Wilson in 'Annals of Hawick' states that there were people then living (around 1850) who claimed to have seen the original halberds. In 1908 the artist Tom Scott donated an old halberd head that he said belonged to Hawick – 'Her line o' males shall pass away Wi' the halbert, brand and spear ...' [T], 'Paid Robert Tinlin for mending his halbard, ... 0 0 6' [BR1771], '... Hauberk and Halberd in gallant array' [JT], 'When drum and fife went through the town On Common Riding morn, Wi' deadly halberts in the van, By burgh beagles borne' [??], 'Here is the glitter of halbert, There the bright flash of a spear: Caught in the spell of the Border, Shades of her story appear' [WL], 'Stout tower and halberd and sword thwart the thieving invader ...' [IWS] (from Old French, also spelled 'halbert').

halberdier (hal-bur-deer) n. a soldier armed with a halberd, a guard carrying a halberd as a sign of his duty – 'See how the Saxon plumes bob in the sky – Yeoman and carbineer, Billman and halberdier, Fierce is the foray, and far is the cry' [ES], 'The halberdiers wi' buttons clear, Like sunbeams brightly glancin'' [JT].

the Halberdier (thū-hal-burd-eer) n. one of two official at the Common Riding who carry halberds. One of them delivers the Council's invitation to the Cornet-elect, receiving a new shilling in return. They also perform other official duties during the Common Riding, such as reading the Proclamations and leading various processions, such as the Drums and Fifes on the Thursday night. It is unclear when halberdiers began to lead these processions, but there are records in the early 19th century, and by the end of the century the present traditions were well established. They were originally Burgh Officers, appointed by the Council along with the town drummer and piper (or fifer), and would lead the parades in front of the musicians. Earlier records suggest that they received payment for decorating their coats at Common Riding time. In 1712 cloth was ordered to make 4 coats 'for the tuo officers, pyper, and drummer'. And more cloth was bought in May of 1732. The present uniform is a long brown coat and trousers, with yellow trim (and 16 buttons) and a top hat. Previously it is recorded as consisting of grey coats with mulberry-coloured collar and cuffs, long shoulder-knots of coloured ribbon, knee-breeks and Sunday hat. In 1875 it is recorded that one of the Halberdiers appeared in the 'much disputed new suit'. Through most of the 20th century he was a Council employee with the official title of 'Burgh Officer', and the other Halberdier was the 'Assistant'. He would usually read the Proclamation and deliver the letter to the Cornet Elect. This changed with Reorganisation in 1974/5, with the title changed to 'District Officer'. And with the Scottish Borders Council taking over in 1996 the job has ceased to be part of the official duties of a Council employee, with the 2 Halberdiers receiving token payment from the Common Riding Committee. Both Halberdiers attended the official ceremony in Langholm in 1972 when Neil Armstrong received the freedom of that town. A new uniform was gifted by Lovet Mill in 2006. A bench commemorating present and past halberdiers was unveiled at the Town Hall in 2019 (see also Burgh Officer).

Halberdiers (hal-burd-eer) n. the men who have carried the halberds during the Common Riding generally perform the duty for many years, and in former times also served as town criers and policemen. Tracking them over the centuries is complicated by their changing roles, being sometimes 'Burgh Officer', 'bellman' or just 'officer'. A partial list includes: 'Jok Scott, belman in Hawik' in 1610; Walter Stewart and James Kinnaird in 1638; Wull 'the Bellman' Scott, late 1600s; John Stewart until about 1696; Alexander Scott from 1696; Alexander Young, at least 1696–1707; James Oliver, recorded in 1718; James Cowan, recorded in 1723; John Stewart, recorded from at least 1723 to around 1743; Francis Turnbull, from 1734 until at least 1767; 'Wull Lepie', early 1800s; Rob 'the Naig' Tinlin, until about 1815; Sandy Bryson, from at least 1815; Caleb Rutherford, 1820s; John 'Tufty' Wilson, 1830s; William Turnbull, 1820s to 1840s; Tom Wells, 1850s; Thomas 'Tam-a-Linkin' Turnbull till about 1860; James Smith, 1860s; Michael Wintrobe, from 1860s; Fraser Richardson, late 1800s; Tom Cook, 1880s; Walter Lawson, 1880s; Mssrs. Beattie and Harkness, around 1899; John Waldie, early 1900s; Robert Naylor 1928–57; Alec Dobbie 1929–58; Bill Allan 1958–84; 'Dimmer' Anderson 1959–2008; George Milligan 1985–96; Robert Payne 1997–2019; 'Eck' Barclay 2009–; Keith Douglas-Hogg 2020– (also called Burgh Officer).

Haldane (hawl-dān) n. James (18th C.) Hawick resident. His occupation in 1775 is 'Stocking weaver' (perhaps the first time this is recorded in the Hawick Parish Records). He married Helen Bryson in 1774. Their children included: Helen (b.1775); Ann (b.1778); and James (b.1781). The witnesses in 1775 were the present Bailie Andrew Scott and shoemaker John Scott. An unnamed child of his died in 1776. He is probably the 'James Halden' who is stated to have had 2 stocking frames in Hawick in an account of local industry written by David Loch in about 1777. James Alexander (1768–1851) younger brother of Robert, he had a naval career, but left to pursue an evangelical calling. Along with his brother and possibly John Aikman and Rowland Hill, he visited Hawick in 1798. It is said that they 'preached from a heap of stones – the debris of the old Tower of Hawick', which could have been the demolished Garrison at the bottom of the Howegate. The men they inspired in Hawick became known as 'Haldanites' and within a few years had started the congregation that met in the Tabernacle. James (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick, recorded on the 1799 list for the Militia ballot. He is also listed in 1801, right after weaver Walter, who was probably related. James (b.c.1790) born at Chancelkirk, he was miller at Riddell Mill. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 60 acres, employing 2 labourers. He was listed as miller at Riddell Mill in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife Helen was from Selkirk. His children included: William; James, corn merchant in Hawick; Helen; Euphemia; and Janet. James (1823/4–98) born at Standhill farm where his father worked before moving to Riddell Mill. He came to Hawick where he set up as a corn merchant at 4 Howegate, building up the business as the railway opened to Carlisle. He ran the farm at Sinton Parkhead for a while, while his nephew ran the business. Overall he ran his corn merchant's for about 40 years. It is said he was a very strong man, who could carry a sack of oats under each arm, and once assisted the police by literally 'lifting' the culprit to the police station. He was an elder in Allars Kirk, a Liberal in politics and a keen bowler. In 1851 he married Isabella Aitken (who died in 1894, aged 60). Their children included James, Agnes (who married butcher John Davies), Isabella (who married Thomas Graham), Lizzie (who married Peter Rutherford, farmer of Clifton Hill), Jessie, Phemie, Ellen (who died aged 23), Annie Aitken (who died aged 22) and 2 Johns (who both died young). He was buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. James (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabella Laidlaw and their children included Agnes (b.1860) and William (b.1862). James (1857/8–1930) son of corn merchant James. He was a simpleton with a 'palley' arm, who assisted his father. He also used to regularly drop in on Robert Purdom, Town Clerk, until presented with a bill for his time! James (1840/1–1884) nephew of corn merchant James, he helped run the business. He married Elizabeth Jackson (who died in 1913, aged 75). Their children were Bella, Lizzie and Jane. John (16th C.) mentioned as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. His name is recorded as 'Johne Haldene of the Ilk'. In 1569 he was a surety along with Rutherfords, for Robert Ker of Lochtour. Also in 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. John (18th C.) mason of Galashiels, who possibly worked on the Slitrig Bridge and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776. John (b.1814/15) born in Bowden Parish. He was miller at Riddell Mill in 1841 and at Highchesters Mill in 1851. He was listed as miller at Highchesters Mill in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Isabella, and their children included James, Isabella, Robert, Helen and John. Robert (1764–1842) Scottish evangelical preacher, elder brother of James Alexander. He inherited the family estate of Airthey House (now part of Stirling University), but later sold it to fund his missionary work. The preaching meetings of him and his brother in Hawick in 1798 (and not 1789, as sometimes stated) led to the formation of the Independent Church and the later construction of the Tabernacle on the Kirk Wynd, this being effectively the seed for the later formation of the Congregational and Baptist Kirks. He helped fund the construction of the Tabernacle in Hawick and supported Mr. Paton, who was the first preacher of the new Hawick congregation. The first (and only) permanent minister of the Independent Kirk in Hawick, Charles Gray, was trained at the Haldane brothers' academy in Edinburgh. Walter (b.c.1780) weaver in Hawick according to the 1801 list for the Militia ballot. He is listed right before weaver James, who was probably related (also written 'Halden').

haldin (hal-din) pp., arch. held – '...of the said landis of Quhitchester to be haldin of the said William and his aieris in myn or thair defaltis' [SB1470] (cf. the later hauden).

hale (hāl) adj., arch. whole, entire, complete – '...publicly whipped and scurged thro the haill toune ...' [BR1697], '...and after that a stent to be made through the haill town ...' [DH], healthy, unhurt, sound – 'On till the derkeneen rowed its hap roon deed and dei-in, an gaard the hyill yins devall an take a barley' [ECS], adv., arch. wholly, completely – 'And with this lade I've sprawl'd and foughten Hail ten lang mile' [JoHa], n., arch. the whole, entirety – 'Oo've gaen wui the whole o thon sheivs o bannih' [ECS], v., arch. to heal, make whole – 'Hælin' a kinkind o' ailment' [HSR] (also spelled 'hail' and 'haill'; cf. the rarer hyale and hyill).

halesome (hāl-sum) adj., arch. wholesome – 'Wi' halesome fair my brod You've set ...' [WL].

the Half Moon Hotel (thu-hawf-moon-hō-tel) n. hotel and pub situated at 64 High Street, which held popular dances in its ballroom in the 19th century. Common Riding events were often held there. The ballroom was also regularly used for weddings and other events, and held the Episcopal school and church meetings from about 1847–50. In the early part of that century the hotel was known simply as 'Mrs. Inglis' and was a favoured place for factory workers to meet on Saturdays to have their pay distributed. It was taken over by Anthony Boiston, who changed the name. It is recorded as the Cornet's headquarters, where the Flag was displayed from the Thursday night in 1875 and as the location for the more informal Colour Bussing of 1881. Although the inn is long gone, the adjacent passageway is still known as Half Moon Yard. Previous to the existence of the hotel there was a pended house on the site (also written 'Hauf').

Half Moon Yaird (hawf-moon-yārd) n. passageway off O'Connell Street, behind where the Half Moon Hotel used to be, off the south side of the street. There was a blacksmith's there, which closed in the late 1950s.

Halfpenny (hawf-pe-nee) n. Cameron 'Cam' (1964–) moved to Hawick from Glasgow with his parents at the age of 3. He attended Wilton and Hawick High Schools. He left Hawick in 1982 to attend college in Wales, later living in Australia and the Bahamas and returning to Scotland in 1994. He has lectured in social science and business research, developed curriculum and exam materials, contributed to research on dyslexia, and has written for BBC TV and Radio Scotland. He was also Poet in Residence for Queen of the South. In 2016 he wrote 'Ahlice's Adventuurs in Wunderlannt', a translation of Lewis Carroll's book into Borders dialect. Colin (1966/7–) younger brother of Graham and Davie, all of them being local football players. He played for Hawick United, Hawick Waverley, Hawick Royal Albert, Peebles Rovers, Selkirk and Coldstream. David 'Davie' (1963/4–) played football for Hawick Hotspur, Hawick Waverley and Hawick United. After recovering from a broken leg he played for Hawick Royal Albert, Peebles Rovers, Coldstream and Lauder. He was also managed of the Albert for 1½ seasons. Graham (1960/1–) older brother of Davie and Colin. He played for Hawick Hotspur, Legion Rovers, the Waverley, Hawick Royal Albert, Hawick Legion and Hawick United. He was player-manager of the Albert at the age of 23. After 6 seasons there, he also managed at Selkirk and Coldstream.

Haliburton (ha-lee-bur'-in) n. Agnes 'Nanny' (18th C.) housemaid at Stobs in 1789 when she was working for Sir Francis Eliott. Andrew of Muirhouselaw (16th C.) son of John, whom he succeeded, his brother George dying before that.

He is recorded in 1581 when he paid Walter in Ancrum for the lease of lands in Ancrum Spittal for 19 years. This included land on 'the Westside of the hill callit Paynyelheucht'. His wife Helen Pringle also gave her consent to an annual rent of grain to Walter Haliburton. He married a daughter of John Pringle of Galashiels. They had 3 sons and a daughter Jean, who married Steven Douglas of Timpendean. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife was Helen Brown and they had an unnamed son in 1670. Andrew, W.S. (1673–1738) 3rd son of Thomas of Newmains, Berwickshire. His sister Mary married Gideon Elliot of Harwood-on-Teviot. He served as factor to Scott of Harden in at least the years 1711–24. He was probably the Andrew, 'writer in Edinburgh' who acted for William Elliot of Harwood in at least the period 1705–08, and probably later for William's son Gideon Elliot of Harwood. In 1700 he married Marion, 2nd daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill. He may be the 'Mr Haliburton' who, along with the Laird of Harwood (Gideon Elliot, his brother-in-law), witnessed a baptism for weaver James Roger in 1729. Probably the same writer Andrew witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1741, suggesting that the death year of 1738 is incorrect. David of Mertoun (16th C.) son of William and younger brother of Walter. In 1504 he married Euphane, daughter of the Laird of Gledstains, and whose marriage required permission from the Cardinal on account of them being too closely related. He was assigned by his father the teind sheaves of Mertoun and all the tacks of the Abbey of Dryburgh. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, including Goldielands and others near Hawick. He had sons Walter, Thomas, James, Archibald and Henry. George of Pinnacle (16th/17th C.) married Dorothy, who was probably a daughter of Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1608 his wife was one of the heirs of Stobs who complained about a raid by the Scotts of Northhouse and others. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council. This was because he had failed to pay Rev. Walter Scott of Castleton as assignee to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1619 he was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. In 1620 there was a complain against him by John of Muirhouselaw for not removing himself and his family from Pinnacle; his wife 'Dorathie Ellote' and their sons George, John and Robert, are also mentioned. He is probably the George referred to as 'called of Pendicle' in 1621 when, along with his son George, John Ker of Langnewton and others, they were accused of attacking John of Muirhouselaw and associates; despite having the same surname, he appears to have been feuding with the Haliburtons of Muirhouselaw. Along with some of his associates he was declared a rebel in 1621. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Gledstains and their children included Janet (b.1635) and Henry (b.1640). Walter (b.1642), with the mother's name given as 'Manie Gledstains', was probably also his son. George (17th/18th C.) Burgess of Hawick, recorded in 1694 when he had to pay his Burgess fee, suggesting that he had just become a full member of one of the Trades. Probably the same George was a wright who married Margaret Scott. Their children included: Walter (b.1703); Benjamin (b.1704); and probably Mary (b.1701), Bessie (b.1707) and Henry (b.1708). The witnesses in 1704 were carrier Andrew Clerk and merchant Adam Turnbull. He may be the George who is recorded supplying liquor to Wells House in the second quarter of the 18th century. George (18th C.) local merchant who took possession of the lands of Dovemount in 1770 from Robert Langlands and subsequently sold off various parts. He is recorded at Dovemount in a baptismal record of 1780. He is listed as 'George Hallyburton, Dovemount' when he subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum', (1784). He could be the George whose house near Hawick Mill was severely damaged in the flood of 1767. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of 'William Tudhope's lands, purchased from Langlands' in Wilton Parish, valued at £25; this is probably Dovemount. In the 1811 Land Tax records he is listed as owner of Dovemount (although he may have already been deceased), 'acquired from Langlands'. Later in the 19th century the lands were owned by Thomas Laidlaw. He married Betty Wilson in 1766 and their children included: Isobel (b.1767), baptised in Hawick; and Andrew (b.1771), James (b.1772), Robert (b.1774), Jean (b.1776), John (b.1778) and Thomas (b.1780), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1780 were Dr. James Wilson and Bailie John Wilson (who were surely related to his wife). He is probably the George whose daughter Jean died in Hawick in 1797. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newton in Wilton Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Henry of Muirhouselaw (14th/15th C.) descendent of the Lords of Halyburton. In 1407 he was granted the lands of Muirhouselaw in Berwickshire by Archibald, Earl of Angus. His son married the heiress of Mertoun, so that his grandson William became the first Haliburton of Mertoun. Henry (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Gledstains. Their son George was baptised in 1670. He may be the Henry who witnessed a baptism for John Beattie in Hawick Parish in 1676. Henry (17th C.) wright of Hawick, listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is listed as 'Hendrie Hallaburtone', living on the west-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Henry who had a son Henry baptised in Hawick in 1696, with witnesses John and William Elliot. Henry (18th C.) wright in Hawick, probably related to the earlier wright. He married Jean (or Janet) Deans and their children included: George (b.1740); George (again, b.1742); James (b.1744); Thomas (b.1747); and Henry (b.1759). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant John Cavers and baker Robert Scott and in 1747 were saddler Francis Ruecastle and carrier John Ruecastle. Henry (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish, living at Roughley in 1778. He married Helen Henderson their children included: John (b.1778); Mary (b.1780); and William (b.1782). They may also be the parents of Malie (b.1792), baptised in Robertson Parish. Henry (c.1780–1832) cattle-dealer in Hawick. He was probably the son of Thomas who was listed on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick in 1801. He was Cornet in 1807 and was also selected as the 'rebel' Cornet of 1809 (the dispute being at least partly because the Council selected someone from the east side of the Slitrig), but declined for (unspecified) domestic reasons. However, he still played an important part in the Common Riding that year, being describes as 'fearless, and, at the same time, a fear-inspiring man', who rode to the front of the 'rebel' cavalcade as it re-entered the Town, swinging his whip to clear a path. He was the first person to die of cholera in the outbreak of early 1832. He contracted the disease while taking his stock to market in Morpeth and died a few days later in Hawick, on 18th January. His brother James and nephew Thomas both contracted cholera, but recovered. However, a neighbour, John Murray died 9 days after him, and several other neighbours followed. He lived on the Back Row, adjacent to Rob Young the blacksmiths. The field marked 'Mr. Haliburton' behind the Back Row on Wood's 1824 map was probably his. James (b.c.1782) cattle dealer from Hawick, son of Thomas and brother of Henry. He was listed as son of Thomas on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He contracted cholera from his brother, who was the first person to die in the Hawick outbreak of early 1832. However, he and his son Thomas both recovered. He later lived at Hopehouse in Ettrick Parish. He had another son, James He may be the James in Hawick who subscribed to 10 copies of Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. John of Muirhouselaw (17th C.) possibly son of Adam of Muirhouselaw. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. In 1620 he complained that George of Pinnacle and his family were still at large despite a 'horning' for not removing themselves from his lands of Pinnacle. In 1621 there was a complaint that he was attacked at Pinnacle by supporters of Ker of Langnewton; his 2nd son 'Mr' Andrew and Robert Buckholm in Belses Mill are also mentioned. He was also later attacked along with his sons John, Andrew and George and his 'sister sone' was recorded being the Laird of Fairnington. He also complained to the Privy Council that the men who attacked him were still at large. He held lands in the Baronies of Belses and Pinnacle according to the tax roll for the Abbey of Jedburgh in 1626. He was probably the Laird of 'Morislaw' who represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1625. He may be the same John who was on the 'retour' for Ker of Cessford in 1600, and who had a charter for Friarshaw in 1606. He was one of the minor barons of Roxburghshire convened to try to elect representatives to Parliament in 1628. He held lands in Maxton Parish in 1643. He may be the John of Muirhouselaw who married Margaret, daughter and heiress of David Boswell of Bowhill. His son John (b.1634) succeeded to Muirhouselaw, as well as to Bowhill. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Hope and their son Andrew was baptised in 1642. John (1634–1704) son of John and Margaret Boswell. He probably also held land at Belses. He married Jean (d.1703), daughter of Mark Pringle of Clifton and had sons John (who succeeded) and Patrick (who became Dean of Guild in Edinburgh). John (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is listed as owner of 4 hearths along with William Cunningham, but it is unclear who they were or why they were listed together. It is possible he was the same as John of Muirhouselaw. John (17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf Mill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1717 he married Isobel Lermonth, who was from Selkirk. Their children included Margaret (b.1718). John of Howcleuch (d.1750s) doctor from Jedburgh. In 1714 he married Christian, daughter of Simon Elliot of Swinside. He became Laird of Howcleuch and also owned Borthwick Mains, these perhaps being inherited through his wife. His son Simon became minister of Newcastleton. His daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1798. He may have been sister of Mary, who married Gideon Elliot of Harwood-on-Teviot; he is probably the 'Doctor Halyburton' who witnessed a baptism for Mary and her husband in Hawick in 1719. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Margaret Turnbull, who was also from Hawick. John (b.c.1780) shepherd at Twislehope according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. Nichol (16th C.) recorded in Pinnacle in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between Walter in Ancrum and Andrew of Muirhouselaw. Rev. Simon (1720–1797) son of John, a doctor in Jedburgh, and Christian Elliot of Swinside. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1745. In 1749 he was presented to Castleton Parish by the Duke of Buccleuch and became minister there in 1751. The delay was because of an objection by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, one of the Lords of Session at the time, in part because he used notes while preaching. Regarding using notes, the Presbytery stated that 'there was no law of the Church against that, and that it was practised by several ministers of the best character'. However, the objections appeared to run deeper than this, since he also had threatening letters sent to him and was insulted by a mob in Castleton, with 3 men and 1 woman imprisoned in Edinburgh for riotous conduct following the reading of his appointment; the congregation objected to having no say in the appointment of their minister and locked up the church and filled the lock with stones. Some of the members of his church left in 1751 to start a secession church (later to become the Newcastleton United Presbyterian Church). He employed a preacher to help him in 1759 and later an assistant minister, John Campbell. In 1762 he was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Sir Gilbert Elliot, and ordained there in 1763, apparently to the great delight of the Castleton parishioners. There is no record of whether he was as popular at Ashkirk! However, he did have the new church built for him there in 1791. He inherited the lands of Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains from his father, but in 1755 sold them to Walter Scott, farmer at Commonsideside. In 1779 he was granted liferent of Elliot of Minto's lands of Shielswood (valued at £260) and the west and north-west parts of Headshaw (valued at £149 14s 2d). This grant of lands was just so that he could be added to the Roxburghshire voters' roll; in 1788 he was listed under 'Votes of Sir Gilbert Elliot' among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was recorded at Ashkirk in the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. 1794/5 he was listed in the Carriage Tax Rolls. He held the superiority of part of Headshaw in life-rent. He was described as 'simple-minded' (by Rev. Russell of Ettrick). During his bachelor days his housekeeper was his sister Peggy. He became senile in his old age. He married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill (and probably widow of Charles Paterson of Drygrange) in 1749. Their children included: Katherine; John, who was a Captain with the East India Company, died in India and was the last male representative of the family of Newmains and Mertoun; and Robert and Thomas, who both died young. 'Miss Haliburton sister to Mr. Halliburton Ashkirk' whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1798, was his sister. He wrote a description of the Parish for Sinclair's Statistical Account. Thomas of Muirhouselaw (1692–1716) son of John and grandson of John and Jean Pringle. In 1708 he married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of George Rutherford of Fairnington. He was killed by his brother-in-law George Rutherford in a fight which flared up over a boundary dispute. His cousin George (Lord Provost of Edinburgh) married his widow and succeeded to Muirhouselaw. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1791 he paid the cart tax in Hawick. He was owner of 2 work horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas, whose father-in-law James Deans died in 1794. He may be the Thomas whose sons Henry and James were on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick in 1801 (and who were both involved in the cholera outbreak of 1832). Thomas (18th/19th C.) helped compile a 'New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick' in 1814. He could be the Thomas, farmer at Tushielaw, who, along with James (also farmer there) was listed in the 1835 electoral roll as joint proprietor of a house in Hawick, succeeding their father. Walter of Mertoun (15th/16th C.) son of William and brother of David. He witnessed a bond between Turnbolls at Caerlenrig in 1505. Walter (16th C.) tenant in Ancrum. In 1581 he was son of the deceased Walter when he received payment from Andrew of Muirhouselaw for the lease of land in Ancrum Spittal and also land 'on the the Westside of the hill callit Paynyel-heucht or Downalddisknow'. This suggests an early version of 'Penielheugh' that is closer to the local pronunciation than the modern spelling would indicate. Several other Haliburtons acted as witnesses, namely George in Dryburgh, Nichol in Pinnacle and John in St. Boswell's, as well as George Buckham at Belses Mill. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He is recorded at Borthwickbrae in 1714, Eilrig in 1718 and Phillhope in 1721. In 1703 he married 'Maly Eliot' from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Margaret (b.1709); Andrew (b.1712); Isobel (b.1714); Mary (b.1718); and Janet (b.1721). William of Mertoun (15th C.) became the first Haliburton of Mertoun through his mother Isabel de Mertoun. He had sons: Walter, who succeeded to Mertoun; David, who succeeded to lands in Dryburgh; George, who received Muirhouselaw; and John. William (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Howpasley, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. He could be the William who married Elizabeth Oliver and whose children, baptised in Robertson, included: Robert (b.1801); John (b.1803); John (again, b.1803); Henry (b.1805); and William (b.1807) (see also Halliburton; formerly spelled 'Haliburtonn', 'Haliburton', 'Haliburtone', 'Haliebourton', 'Hallyburton', 'Halybortone', 'Halyburton', 'Heliebourton', 'Helliborten', 'Helliborton', 'Helybourton', etc.).

Haliburton's Wynd (ha-lee-bur'-inz-wind) n. another name for Walter's Wynd, in use in the 18th and perhaps 19th centuries.

Halidon Hill (ha-li-din-hil) n. battle in 1333, the site being about 2 miles north-west of Berwick. It followed Edward III deciding to take back the port from the Scots. The siege of Berwick lasted months, with Edwards men ravaging the Scottish Borders while they waited. To relieve the siege Lord Archibald Douglas finally led his forces to engage the English at Halidon Hill, the Scots becoming bogged down and being slaughtered by English archers. Part of the English force was commanded by Edward Baliol. The other Scots commanders were Robert Stewart (the future king) and John Randolph, 3rd

Earl of Moray. English casualties were light, but the Scots lost thousands of men, including the Guardian, at least 5 other Earls and perhaps 90 knights. Sir Michael Scott of Rankilburn was one of the few local men who survived. It is said that the battle was preceeded by hand to hand combat involving Turnbull of Rule and Sir Robert Benhale, with Turnbull being slain. A block of stone was placed there in 1933 by the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club.

haliness (hā-lee-nis) n., poet. holiness – '...wurship the Lord in the beutie o' haliness' [HSR], 'Sing untill the Lord, O ye saunts o' his, an' gie thanks at the remembirence o' his haliniss' [HSR] (also written 'haliniss').

Halifax (haw-lee-fawks) n. type of British bomber that crashed near Craik village in 1944, killing all 8 crew members. A memorial plaque in Craik commemorates the event.

Halket (hal-ki') n. John (c.1780–1828) studied at St. Andrews University 1794–8 and Edinburgh University 1801/2. He spent some time as a tutor in the family of George Douglas of Cavers. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and was minister at Coupar from 1807 until he died.

Halkyn (hal-kin) n. alternative name of Ashkirk Manse, situated just beside the church. This replaced a manse that was built in the 18th century. It contains 3 chimney-pieces saved from George Square in Edinburgh and incorporated in 1964.

Hall (hal, haw) n. Agnes (18th C.) chambermaid at Cavers in 1785, when she was working for Capt. John Douglas. Agnes (b.1799/1800) widow of Thomas. She was a draper in Newcastle-on-Tyne from at least 1837 until the 1860s. She had children George, Thomas and John. They lived at about 35 North Hermitage Street. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Heap on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He owned 8 horses, and so must have had a fair sized farm, and he also had a greyhound. He was presumably the 'Mr Hall' whose servant at Heap, Robert Reid' was listed on the 1801 Militia ballot. He could be the Andrew, married to Betty Laidlaw, whose son Benjamin was baptised in Wilton in 1809. Andrew (b.1822/3) born in Edrom, he was a farmer at Horsleyhill. He is recorded there in 1861 as farmer of 395 acres, employing 10 people. His wife was Helen and their children included Anna and Margaret L. Andrew (19th/20th C.) son of Benjamin and Margaret Wilson, he was a tweed foreman. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Greenwood. Benjamin (b.1809/10) spinner at Nixon's Mill. He was living at Lynnwood in 1841 and 1851. He married Margaret, daughter of spinner Robert Wilson. Their children included Jessie, Betsy, Andrew, Isabel, Robert and Benjamin. Charles (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Currer and their daughter Jane was baptised in 1759. In 1758 he hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth. David (17th C.) recorded as tenant of 'Oldsteson' in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear precisely where this farm was, but probably near Roughlee. David (1826/7–86) from Batley in Yorkshire, he settled in Hawick in 1849 to work in the woollen trade. He became the best local cricket batsman, inspiring the game within Hawick. He helped as instructor for the Hawick team when it formed in 1849. His brother Joseph came to Hawick later. He worked as a woollen waste merchant for about 30 years. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as a partner with Joseph as an earthenware and glass dealer, as well as rag dealers, on Backdamgate (incorrectly listed as 'Hill'). The brothers were lodgers on the Cross Wynd in 1851, working as wool dealers, employing 4 women and 2 boys. He was at 15 Backdamgate in 1861 and later lived at Hopehill. He may be the David listed as owner of 'Part of Roughheugh in about 1874, acquired from Langlands', which had been owned by Hector Blaikie according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married Mary Day, who remarried George White of Dudley, and died in 1904, aged 72. Their children were Rowland Carr and Lucy (who married Dr. Adam Frederick Hunter Dryden and emigrated to the U.S.A.) as well as several children who did not survive past infancy. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. George (17th C.) Hawick resident. In 1679 he was convicted of 'ane blood' on Robert Scott, and ordered to pay him 5 shillings Scots per day on account that his arm was swollen and he could not reap. Rev. George (c.1680–1740) son of Robert and grandson of the famous Covenanter Henry of Haughhead. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1699, became Chaplain to the Laird of Torsonce (near Stow), was licensed by the Presbytery of Earlston in 1706, and became Chaplain to Thomas, Earl of Haddington. He was ordained as minister of Abbotrule in 1714 and remained there until translated to Linton in 1728. He was also presented to Lochmaben in 1722, but appears not to have gone there. He preached in Hawick at least once, in 1721. He is recorded in 1726 along with Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk in a bond with Robert Pringle, writer in Edinburgh. And in 1733 part of a debt to Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk was repaid. But a court action by John Horsburgh of that Ilk followed in 1735, presumably to recover the rest of the loan. In 1716 in Edinburgh he married Emelia (d.1768), daughter of Andrew Duncan in Scone. Their children were Patrick, Gilbert and Jean (who married Colin Campbell in Edinburgh). He published 'Practical Sermons on several subjects' (1732). George (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Oliver in Hawick in 1792, both being from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Thomas (b.1793), said to have been a sailor in the American War of 1812; and Agnes (b.1800), who married Jacob Evans and died in Philadelphia in 1884. It is claimed in some genealogies that he was born in Duns in 1763, also had children John (b.1796) and George (b.1798), both born in Duns, and emigrated to Philadelphia, dying of yellow fever shortly afterwards; however, it seems possible that two completely different Georges are being conflated here. It seems reasonable to assume that his wife was daughter of John Oliver and Agnes Ekron (based on his daughter Agnes' descendants in America having possession of Agnes Akron's book of the catechism), but any connection to Halls from Duns is much less clear. George (b.1789/90) born in Northumberland, he was a sheep and cattle dealer in Newcastleton. He was listed as a Castleton drover in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at about 19 Douglas Square. His first wife was Sarah and he secondly married Christina, daughter of joiner John Douglas; she worked as an assistant post-mistress in Newcastleton. His children included Helen and John. George (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was shepherd at Ruletownhead in 1861. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Andrew, Arcilla, Helen and James. George (1822/3–90) fish monger, game and poultry dealer in Hawick. His business at 40 High St. was established in 1866 and later moved to No. 66. In 1861 he was a forester at Bowmont Forest Cottages, and so must have moved to Hawick after that. His shop can be seen in a photograph of 1903, probably shortly after it moved to these new premises. He married Agnes Wright, and she died in Leeds in 1908, aged 83. His children included Cecilia, John, Betsy Briggs, Margaret, John Wright, Alison and Robert. He is buried at Oxnam. Gilbert (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1469 for the lands of Wolfelee for Home of Wedderburn. Robert was listed before him and so presumably related. Gilbert (1771–1842) son of William and Isabel Best, he was born in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Gilbert who was a servant at Dimpleknow according to the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He is recorded as ‘Ind.’ at Greensidehall Cottage in 1841. He was probably a retired farmer from that area. He married Agnes Robertson, who died at Ashkirk in 1835, aged 65. He died at Greensidehall and was buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Henry of Haughhead (d.1680) son of Hobbie, he owned land on the Kale Water in Eckford Parish. He was known as a man of strong religious principles, leaving his local church in 1651 and attending Ancrum instead. He refused to accept Episcopacy and took refuge over the Border. As a Covenanting elder, the local meeting place for field conventicles was on his lands, and it was here that Richard Cameron obtained his license to preach. He was said to be a close friend of Ringan Oliver of Smailcleuchfoot. He was an officer in the forces at Drumclog and Bothwell Bridge. After this battle he escaped to the Netherlands, returning after a few months, but being involved in an altercation at South Queensferry, he received a serious headwound, was captured and died on the way to Edinburgh. He had a son Robert, whose son George was minister at Abbotrule. Henry (18th C.) herd in Weens. His son Henry was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1752. Isabella ‘Tibbie o Wigg’ (19th C.) married George Scott, shepherd at Hardlee and Hyndlee. One of her sons was Overhall farmer James. James (d.1570s) described as ‘in Wollie’ (presumably Wolfelee) when Will Robson ‘in Rochthewchmylne’ was charged with his murder. Robson failed to appear and so his surety, James Langlands of that Ilk, was ordered to pay 20 merks to his daughter Malie. James (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. James (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when accused by the English Warden of being part of a raid into England 3 years earlier. John Scott ‘the Tinckler’ led the group of what was claimed to be 500 men on a day-long foray. He had sons Jamie and Hob, who are listed with him in an accusation of 1590 for a raid on ‘Wartoun’. His son ‘Jamy Hall of Heavysyde, younger’ is recorded in another complaints of 1590. They may have been descended from William and David, who were recorded as tenants in Heavyside in 1494/5. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Burnmouth. In 1699 he was sent by the Castleton Session to

Leith to obtain ‘twelve flagons of claret wine, and bring it for the sacrament’. James (1719/20–88) ‘dweller at Gatehaughscot’ according to his gravestone in Bedrule kirkyard. He married Agnes Thomson, who died in 1786, aged 71. Their son died in Bedrule in 1794, aged 32, and was married to Margaret McKenzie. James (b.c.1770s) clogger at Foulbrae on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He was also recorded as a labourer at Foulbrae in 1800 when his son John was baptised in Cavers Parish. It is unclear where Foulbrae was. James (b.1819/20) born in Morebattle Parish, he was a shepherd at Fairloans in Bedrule Parish in 1861. He married Helen Hobkirk and their children included Margaret, Helen and James. Janet (b.1774/5) listed as ‘Ind.’ in the 1841 census at Ewes Old Toll Bar. She was living with Mary, who was probably her daughter, and had other residents in the house, probably lodgers. In 1851 she was listed as a widow at the Old Tollbar. Jean (18th/19th C.) local character, brought up at Dodburn, she later lived at ‘the Yett’, near Hawick Moor. She had a reputation as a witch, with many stories told of her apparent powers. She was certainly an imposing woman, with masculine features, a hirple and a strong personality. John (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby, including Thomas, who was presumably related. John (16th C.) one of the King’s shepherds, who, along with John Hope, had sheep stolen from him by a group of Armstrongs and others in 1535. This was at ‘Braidlee in the Forest’, which was probably the farm in the Borthwick valley. The same 2 men were recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 in ‘Braidlie and Filop’ when they were paid £6 13s 4d for 10 bolls of grain. John (16th C.) tenant of ‘Newbegyne’ who was witness in 1557 to the bond in which Turnbulls and others promised to bring William Nixon to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. The others involved were from Rulewater and neighbouring areas, and so this was probably a local Newbigging, but perhaps the one near Oxnam. He may be the same John ‘of Newbigging thelder’ listed first in 1544 among Halls who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John (17th C.) servant of Andrew Turnbull, who was tenant at Wolfelee Mill. In 1684 he appeared on a long list of men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. John (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (18th C.) shepherd at Carewoodrig. His wife Mary Elliot died in 1784 and is buried in Teviothead cemetery. He may have been son of Robert (d.1789), also buried there. John (18th C.) married Violet Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1773. Their children included Isabel (b.1775) and Violet (b.1777). John (b.1814/5) born in Hawick, he was a wool spinner. In 1861 he was living at 3 West Port (but he does not appear to have been in the Hawick area in 1841 or 1851). His cousin Annie Ekron was also living with him in 1861 (although the relationship between them is not clear). He married Henrietta (or 'Henny') Hume in 1840; she was from Selkirk. John (b.1817/1) born in Morebattle, he was a shepherd at Spittal-on-Rule in 1851. His wife was Alison and their children included James. John (19th C.) from Hawick, he is recorded winning 2 leaping events at the 1835 Common Riding Games. Joseph (b.1829/30) from England, he was younger brother of David, and came to Hawick later. The pair set themselves up as woollen and rag dealers on Backdamgate. In 1851 they were employing 4 women and 2 boys and they were listed as rag dealers in Slater's 1852 directory. Kitty (18th/19th C.) originally from Northumberland, she lived at Fairloans near the head of the Kale. She recited for James Telfer (the poetic schoolmaster of Saughtree) a version of the ballad 'The Death of Parcy Reed', which he transcribed and presented to Sir Walter Scott and was published in 'Local Historian's Table Book' in 1844. She said that 'she never liked to sing the verses, as she knew them to be perfectly true, and consequently could not bear to think there had been, of her own surname, such wretches as the betrayers of Parcy Reed'. Malie (16th C.) only lawful daughter of James in Woollie. She was given 20 merks in compensation by James Langlands of that Ilk, when William Robson failed to appear to answer to the charge of murdering her father. Rev. Mercer (1855–1927) born in Galashiels, 5th son of builder John and Isabella Matthew. He attended St. Andrews and Edinburgh Universities and was licensed by Selkirk Presbytery. He became assistant at St. Mark's in Dundee and was ordained minister at Careston, Forfarshire in 1886. The next year he was translated to Robertson Parish where he was minister until his death, although he was assisted by Æneas McInnes from 1894. Peter (1847–1928) printer and reporter, he was brother of Anthony, who modelled for the 'Golden Boy' on the dome of Edinburgh University's Old College, and was a great athlete in his youth. He worked for a while for the Hawick Advertiser and later had a florist's shop in Edinburgh. Robert (15th C.) witness to the 1469 and 1479 sasines for Wolfelee. Gilbert was listed after him in 1469 and probably a close relative. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) tenant of the farms of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed on a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. Robert (1692/3–1789) probably shepherd at Carewoodrig, where he died. He was recorded in Priestthaugh in 1724 when he married Janet Scott, who died at Linhope in 1738. Their children (mostly baptised in Cavers) probably included: Margaret (b.1725); John (b.1727), probably shepherd at Carewoodrig; an unnamed child (b.1729), baptised in Hawick; and Mary (b.1731). He lived to the age of 96. Robert (18th C.) recorded as 'Robt. Ha, Dodburn' in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common). Along with several other neighbouring farmers he paid a penny per 50 divots. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Mains (in Cavers Parish), recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) footman at Minto according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (19th C.) saddler at 6 High Street along with Thomas, probably in about the 1870s. George Davies took over the business from him. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of Benjamin and Margaret Wilson. He was foreman at William Laidlaw & Son's. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as 'Thome de Hall' in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfhopelee. John is also listed, and so probably related. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Haw' when he was on the panel which met at Cavers to decide on inheritance of certain Elliot lands in 1497/8. Thomas of Thorlieshope (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear how long he held the lands of Thorlieshope or where he was from. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at High Tofts in Kirkton Parish according to the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Silverbuthall, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. In 1797 he was a servant at 'Mainholm' (presumably Demainholm) when listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. The annotation 'Subst.' suggests he was substituted; however, his name appears again in 1798 and in 1797 he was listed among men whose names had been drawn in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded as journeyman mason in the Parish of Lilliesleaf on the 1798 list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. Mason William (perhaps a brother) served as his substitute. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant at Birneyknowe in Cavers Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Janet Scoon in 1819, the marriage recorded in both Wilton and Robertson Parishes. Thomas (d.1837) Newcastleton linen and woollen draper and spirit dealer listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He may be the same Thomas, resident of Newcastleton, who was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax rolls. He married Agnes Inglis, who died in 1865, aged 65. His widow was a draper on North Hermitage Street from at least 1841 until the 1860s. His children included George, Thomas and John. Thomas (b.1793) son of George and Elizabeth Oliver, he was born in Hawick. It is said that he was emigrated to America, became a sailor, was captured by the British in the War of 1812 and died in Dartmoor Prison. Thomas (b.1799/1800) carter in Denholm from at least 1841. In 1851 he was listed as a coal agent, living at Hassendean Station House, and in 1861 was a carter somewhere near Leyden Road in Denholm. His wife was Isabella, from Kirkton Parish. He had daughter Jane (or 'Jeany') and Helen. Thomas (19th C.) Precentor in Cavers Parish Kirk. He also ran a singing class associated with the Kirk. In 1893, when the organ was installed, he was presented with a marble clock for his many years of service and was organist for several years afterwards. T. Brian (20th C.) from Cumberland. His sister married Andrew Haddon. He was married in 1946 and started farming at Ashybank about that time. He lived for a few years in Riverside Drive in Denholm, moving to Ashybank in about 1949. He suffered a serious accident with a barn door in 1976. The family gave up farming at Ashybank after that. His children included Mike, Colin and Nigel. Walter (17th/18th C.) from Jedburgh, he married Agnes Easton in Wilton in 1713. His wife was from Heap, daughter of William Easton. Walter (1778-1863) warehouseman of Brougham Place who was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. In 1841 he was recorded at about 13 Brougham Place, living with his wife

Agnes and children Mary and Ann. William (16th C.) recorded in 1549 as 'Williame Haw' when he was a resident of Whames and listed among the men complaining about their farms being ravaged in the previous year by a group of Englishmen, assisted by Kers and others. William (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1674 when he and his family were banished from the Town for running at the Bailie with a sword and threatening to shoot him, 'and because they are vagabond Egyptians'. He could be the William who married Janet Aitchison and whose children baptised in Hawick included Bessie (b.1652), John (b.1654) and James (b.1657). The witnesses in 1652 were William Briggs and Robert Ruecastle and in 1654 were David Beattie and William Brown. William (17th/18th C.) married Helen Anderson in Kirkton Parish in 1709. William (b.1679/80) shepherd in lands adjacent to Hawick Common. He was shepherd at Winnington Rig for 24 years, then 2 years later moved to Langflat, where he worked for 8 years, until about 1751, thereafter living at Dodburn and Acreknowe. He gave evidence in 1767 regarding the previous use of the Common, and was a widower at that time. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son Gilbert was baptised in 1707. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children Anna (b.1719), Thomas (b.1721), Robert (b.1723), Walter (b.1724) and James (b.1732) were baptised in Kirkton Parish and Gilbert (b.1733) in Cavers Parish. In 1719 and 1721 he was recorded being 'in Rige' (perhaps Winningtonrig, but more likely Caerlenrig) and was herd in Ashybank in 1733. It is possible he is the same man as the shepherd on lands near Hawick Common. William (18th C.) tenant in Hyndhope in Oxnam Parish. He paid the window tax there in 1748. In 1730 he married Cecile, younger daughter of William Elliot of Thorlieshope and Ove. William (1733/4-1803) married Isabel Best in Wilton Parish in 1770. Their children included: Gilbert (b.1771); Agnes (b.1776); and Magdalen (b.1779). He died at Damhead and is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. William (18th C.) resident of 'Foderly bank head' in 1774. In that year his daughter Peggy was baptised. His surname appears to have been sometimes transcribed as 'Hatt'. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Ker. Their children included: Robert (b.1778); and Mary (b.1784). The witnesses in 1778 were John Ker (presumably a relative of his wife) and James Douglas. He may be the flesher whose housekeeper's death is recorded in Hawick in 1799. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth (or 'Lissie') Liddle and their children included: Margaret (b.1783); Isabel (b.1785); Thomas (b.1787); John (b.1790); Nelly (b.1792); and Thomas (again, b.1795). William (18th/19th C.) mason in Lilliesleaf. In 1798 he is recorded as substitute for mason Thomas (surely a close relative) in the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. William (b.c.1770s) butcher in Hawick, recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. He was still listed as a 'flesher' on the 1801 ballot. He may be the William who married Helen Paterson and whose children included: Margaret (b.1806); and Thomas (b.1808). William (b.c.1780) resident of Rashiegrain according to the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1801. He may be the William who married Ann Scott in Hawick Parish in 1800. William (b.c.1780) tenant in Galalaw according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1801. William (d.1854) student of divinity and assistant teacher at the Academy in the Subscription Rooms who drowned in the Borthwick on the Friday of the Common Riding. William, J.P. (19th/20th C.) foreman dyer in Hawick. He was a Director of the Working Men's Building Society, Chairman of the School Board and later of the School Management Committee, as well as a prominent local Liberal politician. He was also President of the Hawick Co-op in the 1880s and involved with the I.O.U.S. Mechanics. He was Sunday School Superintendent at St. George's Kirk 1895–1908. William, M.I.C.E. (19th/20th C.) writer of 'Liddesdale, Roxburghshire' (1903), 'Newcastleton, Roxburghshire: a border village' (1905) and 'Border village (Roxburghshire): a plea for the people: with some remarks on the Liddle and Solway fisheries' (1907). Probably the same William left money for the William Hall Day School Prize Fund in Newcastleton (formerly written 'Haw').

Halldykes (hal-diks) n. former lands attached to the estate of Mangerton. They are recorded as 'Haldykis' in a rental roll c.1376, with value 6 shillings and 8 pence.

Halley (ha-lee) n. Joseph (1896–1915) born in Wilton, eldest son of Librarian Richard. He worked for Turner & Rutherford and played for Hawick R.F.C. He also took part in the Pageant of 1914. He served in the K.O.S.B. during WWI and was killed in Gallipoli on that fateful day, 12th July 1915. He was buried at the Helles Memorial. Richard L. (d.1928) warper in one of the local tweed mills. He became assistant in the Library when the new building opened in 1904 and succeeded George McNairn as Librarian in 1906. He was a member of the Committee of Management of the Hawick Cooperative Society as well as the Vertish Hill Sports Committee and the Prisoners of War Committee during WWI. His children included Joseph (1896–1915). He died suddenly.

Halliburton (haw-lee-bur'-in) n. James (b.1792/3) from Jedburgh, he was a shoemaker in Denholm. He is recorded as a shoemaker in Denholm in 1837 and in 1841 was at about the Canongate. In 1833 he married Mary (1804–72) daughter of Thomas Colledge. Their children included: Janet (b.1835); James (b.1837); Jean (b.1839); Thomas (b.1842); Agnes (b.1845); and Grace (b.1850). By 1851 he was 'Proprietor of Houses' at 10 Bongate in Jedburgh. He could be the James who was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836 (see also Haliburton).

Halliburton (ha-lee-bur'-in) n. name given to the westernmost field on Hawick Common, west of the racecourse, lying between the fields called Jennie Stott and Devil's Shin.

Halliday (haw-li-, -lee- di) n. Agnes Davidson see Agnes Davidson Hamilton. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Southdean. His children included Andrew (b.1769) and Jean (b.1772). Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Fodderlee. His son Henry was listed on the Militia ballot for Hobkirk Parish in 1801. Barbara (b.1827/8) daughter of James and Helen Gledstains, born in Cavers Parish. She was sister of the poet John. In 1841 she was living with her mother at Hawickshiels and in 1851 she was a cook at Hallrule House. She may be the Barbara who married George Scott in Hobkirk in 1851; they were living at Stichilhill in Castleton in 1861. David (b.c.1823) from Coldingham, he was an agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. In 1851 he was living at 'Dykenook No. 2' with his wife Betsy (from Castleton) and son David. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1779. He could be the Francis whose mother 'Widow Haliday' died in Hawick in 1800. George (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as owner of a tenement in Hawick. This was a piece of land on the north side of the High Street, adjacent to the tenement of David, brother to Walter Scott in Chamberlain Newton.

The same tenement was owned by John in 1560. George (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Robson in Southdean in 1809. George (19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Mary Chisholme in East Bank Kirk in 1818. Their children (most born in Wilton and some baptised at the East Bank Kirk), included: Andrew (b.1823/3); Walter (b.1827/8); Isobel (b.1830); John (b.1833); and Agnes (b.1836/7). His widow Mary and 5 children were living at 1 Brougham Place in 1851. Helen nee Gledstains (1796/7–1866) mother of poet John and wife of James, who she married in 1817. Her parents were Thomas Gledstains and Helen Leithead and she came from Hawick Parish. In 1841 she was recorded at Hawickshiels with Barbara, probably her daughter. She was ‘independent’ at that time, suggesting that she was a widow, with enough money to live on. By 1851 she was at Easter Langbaulk (where John also lived for a while), with her grandson James (born in Langholm and working as a stable-boy in Bowden in 1861, although it is unclear who his parents were). In 1861 she was a pauper (formerly farm servant) at Myreslawgreen. It is said that her son John inherited from her a love of Scottish ballads. She died at Myreslawgreen, with another son Walter being a witness to her death certificate. Henry (b.c.1780) son to Andrew at Fodderlee on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hobkirk Parish. James (17th C.) flesher in Hawick. He was recorded in 1692 ‘for publicly selling up and down the town ane carcass of swyne which was leprous, and consequently dangerous to be made use of’. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the James listed as a resident of Hawick ‘uest the water’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed a baptism for baker Adam Richardson in 1709. He may be the James who married Margaret Dickson, and whose children baptised in Hawick included: William (b.1669); Agnes (b.1671); Margaret (b.1675); and Isobel (b.1681). The witnesses in 1675 were Robert Wright and John Tinlin. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1683 for George Murray, resident of Wilton Parish. James (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Cessford in Bedrule Parish in 1691. John (b.1693), baptised in Bedrule, was probably their son. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Helen Turnbull in 1709 and his son Thomas was baptised in 1710. He was probably related to John, who also had children baptised in Bedrule. James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Scott in 1714, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Bedrule Parishes. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Whitthope in 1716 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Janet Dodds in 1758 and his son John was baptised in 1761. He may have been related to the earlier James who lived in Bedrule. James (18th/19th C.) cooper in Denholm. He was recorded there on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Irvine in 1795. Their son John was baptised in 1796 (with the mother’s name transcribed as Margaret ‘Heron’). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Birkwoodfoot in Kirkton Parish. In 1817 he married Helen Gledstains, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included: John (b.1821), writer of ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’; Walter (b.1823/4); and Barbara (b.c.1825). He probably lived at Hawickshiels, where his son John was born. On his wife’s death certificate he is listed as ‘Road Labourer’ and on his son John’s he is listed as a blacksmith. James (b.c.1825) born in Kirkton or Cavers Parish, he was a local ploughman. He married Elizabeth Hogg (from Ashkirk) in Hawick in 1847. In 1851 the couple were living in Lilliesleaf and in 1861 at Branhholme Cottage. He may have been father of George (b.1855), born in Lilliesleaf. It is possible he was closely related to poet John. Janet (18th C.) wife of Robert Scott of Scotsbank. She was recorded several times in her own right in Selkirk documents and was already a widow by 1719. She was ‘Lady Scotsbank’ in 1724 when a man was sentenced for breaking her garden. She was still alive in 1734. John (16th C.) recorded in 1560 as owner of a tenement on the north side of the High Street, to the west of the one owned by John Short. By 1679 this same tenement was owned by George, who was surely either his son or brother. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was ‘Ellisoun’ and their son Adam was baptised in 1656. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Helen Turnbull in 1714 and their children included: Anne (b.1715); James (b.1715); Alexander (b.1718); John (b.1720); and Archibald (b.1729). He was surely related to James, who lived in Bedrule at the same time. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Janet Renwick and their children included: Jean (b.1778); and Robert (b.1781).

John (1804/5–65) son of Robert and Mary Stewart, he was a sawyer in Jedburgh, originally from Eccles. In 1826 he married Alison Thomson and their son John was a blacksmith in Hawick. It seems reasonable to guess that he was related to the Hawick poet of the same name. John (1821–1902) born at Hawickshiels, a few miles south of Hawick. His parents were James and Helen Gledstains and he appears to have had siblings Barbara and Walter. He was writer of the song ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’, as well as many poems, collected in the book ‘The Rustic Bard’. He only had about 2 years of formal schooling and at the age of 10 was hired as an assistant shepherd by one of the local farmers. He was recorded as a labourer at Skelfhill stables in 1841. Sometime before 1845 he moved to Longbaulk (probably at the bottom end of the ‘Lumback’) where he lived for a few years before moving to Hobkirk in 1849, where he worked as a hedger, ditcher, harvester, etc. He lived for a while at Drythropple, and developed a reputation as a skilled horticulturalist. Along with Sandy and James Mathieson (gardeners at Weens and Wauchope, respectively), he founded the Hobkirk Flower Show. In 1851 he reported to a local newspaper a story of the appearance of a ‘Brocken spectre’ (i.e. mirage of a shadow); at that point he was living at ‘North Town of Rule’. In 1854 he moved to Bridge of Allan (a different one from where he grew up!), where he was a landscape gardener and florist. He was also said to be an expert angler. He published ‘The Rustic Bard: or, A voice from the People’ (1847) when living at Longbaulk; this book of verse contains many pieces in local dialect, which are invaluable early published examples of the language. Other contributions include a poem in praise of Henry Scott Riddell, an ‘Epistle to W.D.’ (whose first name was ‘Wattie’), a description of the collection of curiosities of Andrew Jamieson and verses to William Oliver of Hallrule. He also features in Dr. Rodgers’ ‘Scottish Minstrel’ (1856). In 1859 he donated a silver coin of Alexander II to the Archæological Society. It is unclear whether he had any local connections after this date, although he will always be remembered for ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’. He married Margaret Carruthers in 1847, the marriage being listed in both Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes (she is probably the ‘Peggy’ in his poems ‘O! Dinna Be Wae, Peggie’, ‘’Tis Not Her Eyes So Beaming Black’ and ‘The Gloamin’ Stars O’er Whithop Hill’); she was daughter of William Carruthers and Agnes Davidson. He is recorded living with her at North Town o’ Rule in 1851. They had a daughter Agnes Davidson in Hobkirk Parish in 1851/2; she married Thomas Hamilton in Logie in 1873, had 3 children (George William Hamilton, Margaret Carruthers Hamilton and John Halliday Hamilton), died in 1908 and is buried in Logie. He is probably the man mentioned at the centenary celebrations for Burns in Bridge of Allan in 1859 when ‘a song, composed for the occasion by Mr. John Halliday, and entitled ‘The Scottish Folk’, was sung by Mr. Dow of Keirfield’. He was certainly in Bridge of Allan in 1861, was a lodging house keeper and vintner at ‘Allan Vale’ in 1866 and in 1871 was a hotel keeper at the Lady of the Lake Hotel. Also in 1871 he was recorded as secretary of the Workman’s Club and Reading Room in Bridge of Allan and in 1872 he was ‘a keen angler’ of Bridge of Allan when he gave evidence in a legal case involving disputes over fishing for parr. In the 1881 census he was recorded as a nurseryman living with his daughter and her family at Springfield Cottage in Bridge of Allan. He is also recorded as proprietor of the ‘Lady of the Lake’ in a Bridge of Allan directory in 1870. His wife died in 1877 and he moved to Stirling in 1893, where he stayed with relatives in the Castle Hotel (now housing the gift shop of the Castle). In the Border Magazine for 1896 he is described as maintaining a ‘vigorous and hearty old age, his interest in literature, especially poetry, being unabated’. It was also said that he had been urged to issue a revised and extended collection of his poetry, but that never happened. He died in Stirling, being listed as a ‘Hotelkeeper’ on his death certificate, and is buried at Logie. Biographies of him are included in Rogers’ ‘The Modern Scottish Minstrel’ (1856) and Goodfellow’s ‘Border Biography’ (1890). George Watson gave a talk on him to the Archæological Society in 1917. John (b.1835/6) blacksmith in Hawick, son of John and Alison Thomson. His father was a sawyer in Jedburgh. In 1861 he was a ‘Coachwork Journeyman’ blacksmith living at 1 Brougham Place (home of other Hallidays, who must have been related) when he married Janet, daughter of postman Archibald Douglas and Barbara Scott. They were married in the Free Kirk, with witnesses Andrew Telfer and Thomas Morrison. His children included: William; Barbara (b.1855), who married James Waldie; Mary (b.1864); John (b.1867); Alison (b.1869); and Archibald (b.1871). The family were living on Teviot Crescent in 1871 and Oliver Crescent in 1883. John (b.1832/3) from Coldingham, in 1861 he was a ploughman at Westerhouses. His wife was Agnes and their children included Agnes and Isabella. Peter (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He was recorded being in Jedburgh Jail in 1832. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Jant (b.1760), Robert (b.1762) and William (b.1767). He could be the Robert whose marriage to Bettie Bell is recorded in Kirkton in 1753. Robert (18th/19th C.) chaise-driver at Teviotbank in 1797, when he was working for David Simpson. He may be the Robert who married Mary Dickson in Minto Parish in 1788. Robert (19th C.) from Langholm, he was a handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on Ladylaw Place with his wife Ann and children Janet, William and Elizabeth. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1689 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for Adam Elliot and Margaret Halliday (who was probably related). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Beatrix Elliot in 1743 and his daughter Helen was baptised in 1746. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Mary Scott in Bedrule in 1817. Walter (b.1823/4) born at Southfield, he was son of James and Helen Gledstains and hence brother of the poet John. In 1841 he was a labourer at Huttlerburn farm in Yarrow, in 1851 was working with John Matheson at Ashkirk Smithy and in 1861 he was a journeyman blacksmith in Jedburgh. He married Margaret Oliver and they had a daughter Helen (b.1858). He was witness on his mother Helen's death certificate in Hawick in 1866 and was then living at 5 Abbey Close, Jedburgh. It is possible he was father of James (b.1845/6 in Langholm), recorded as grandson of Helen, living with her at Easter Longbaulk in 1851. Walter (b.1825/6) son of George and Mary Chisholme. In 1854 in Hawick he married Mary, daughter of market-gardener Thomas Leithead. Their children included Mary M.C. (b.c.1854), Barbara (b.c.1856) and George (b.c.1858). In 1861 he was living at Myrselawgreen with his father-in-law and his own family. He was recorded as a market gardener of Myrselawgreen when his daughter Isabella was involved in a paternity suit with mason William Tait in 1880. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Aitchison and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1724. William (b.c.1768) hemp roper maker on the Back Row, recorded in 1841. His wife was Janet, and their daughter Margaret was also there. Margaret probably married Job Gadd in Hawick in 1854 and was living with her mother Janet on the Loan in 1861. William (19th/20th

C.) resident of Hawick. He married Jane Wilson and their children were William, George and Frank. William 'Wull Ha' (1917–85) son of William and brother of Frank and George. He was captured in France and spent much of the WWII in prisoner of war camps in Germany and Poland. Most of his working life was spent in Braemar, where he had a reputation for being a fast knitter and was on the social committee. He was also a member of the Legion and golfed at the Vertish. His children were Sandy and Jean (also written 'Haliday', 'Halieday', 'Halladay', 'Halleday', 'Hallyday', 'Hallyday', 'Halyday', 'Helliday', 'Holyday', etc.).

hallin (haw-lin) n., poet. a cottage, dwelling, inner wall between door and fireplace – 'Hallans, sleekit owre wi' plaister, Glintin' a' as white as snaw, Worthy o' its noble maister, Kitchen, passage, rooms, an' a' '[JR], 'There's few hearts to pity the wee cowerin' form That sits at your hallin a bield frae the storm' [JT], 'Men bound together in run-rig commonty And in the old unity of hall and hallan, tholing together ...' [DH] (also spelled 'hallan').

hallin-shaker (haw-lin-shā-kur) n., arch. a beggar, tramp, sorry creature – 'A met a doiterin, duddy, auld hallanshaker as A laampeet doon that lang brae' [ECS] (literally a partition-shaker).

Halliwell (haw-lee-wel) n. James (17th C.) gardener at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name is written 'Helliuell'. He is probably the James 'helliwall' who witnessed a baptism for William Telfer in Stirches in 1683 and another for George Scott in 1687. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was fined along with Isabel Stuart for fighting over the placement of their market stalls. Her surname is given as 'Holywell'. Robert (13th/14th C.) presented as Prebend of Southdean by Edward II in 1319. His name is written 'Robert de Haliwell' and the church is 'Suthdon'. He was probably English and held the 'living' of the church, but never went there. He is likely the Clerk of this name who petitioned the English King in 1318 and 1321/2 claiming that he had served his King since about 1290, in the Chancery and in several places overseas (crossing the Irish Sea 18 times), and needed support. He was made to resign a church in Wales and asked for an additional church following illness in 1324/5. William (17th C.) resident at Newlands on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. His name is written 'Halliuall'. He was probably related to James. William (17th/18th

C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Mary Watson and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: George (b.1704); and Isobel (b.1708). The 1704 baptism was witnessed by fellow shoemaker George Allan and weaver John Swan and the 1708 baptism by Robert and George Allan (also written 'Haliwell' and 'Holywell').

Hallmoss (hal-mos) n. boggy area between Drinkstone Hill and the main A7, just north of Groundistone farm. The nearby wood is called Hallmoss Plantation. There has been a claim that part of a Roman road was visible here, as well as an ancient enclosure of some sort.

hallow (ha-low) v., arch. to halloo, make a loud call of derision – '...by cryeing themselfe and hounding others to cry publickly and loudly to hallow out at windows and too hout the baylyeas when passing by ...' [BR1706].

Hallrule (haw-, hawl-rool) n. hamlet about 8 miles east of Hawick, between Bonchester and Bedrule. It was formerly a major estate of Hobkirk Parish. Much of the land of the farm there had been the Common of the barony of Feu-Rule and the farm may also have been known as the Mains of Feu-Rule. James White was a resident there in 1493. The lands are recorded being held by George Turnbull in 1493 and 1502, and in 1516 the tenants were Robert, William and Thomas Turnbull. The town there was burned by the Marquis of Dorset's men in 1523 and the tower burned by the English in 1545. The lands passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. In the late 16th and early 17th centuries the Laird of half the lands was George Turnbull, and through his daughter Isobel they appear to have passed to the Turnbulls of Barnhills. Hector Turnbull of Barnhill was decalred a rebel and lost his lands to Alexander, Lord Home before 1602. In that year a gang of Armstrongs and Elliots attacked the farm, killed the shepherd John Wilson, and drove off about 120 sheep. It may be among the lands in Feu-Rule granted to Gilbert Elliott by Andrew Kerr, Lord Jedburgh in 1629. It is said that the Elliots of Stobs gained the lands through some underhand method. The 'town' is mentioned in 1632 along with the Mains of Feu-Rule 'alias Fewroule vocatis Halroule' when the superiority was inherited by Robert, son of Andrew Ker of Faldonside. In 1649 parts of the Barony of Feu-Rule were erected into the Barony of Hallrule, and held by William Elliott of Stobs in the mid-17th century. By 1678 Elliott of Stobs owned lands there valued at £2142, and were merged with 2 pieces of land of Hawthornside valued at £211. The farms of 'Over and Nether Hallrule with mill thereof' are listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the late 17th century. The farm was still in the Barony of Cavers when that was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687, when transcribed 'Dowallrowl', and by his brother Archibald in 1698, when transcribed 'Dewallroull'. William Buckham was there in 1694, paying for 4 hearths, while George Brown and Walter Brown were also householders on the lands (and 3 other poor householders were additionally listed). In 1709 the Barony of Hallrule was transcribed as consisting of 'Helme, midle with mill, Hangingside, Burrel [probably Billerwell], Roulweens [perhaps Bedrule and Weens], Hathernsyde, Seasewholhous, Pleulandhill, Bonhouse, Appdsyde with mill, Harrot with mill, Tithous with 4 parts of Riddmaburne'. In 1725 Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs gave the east side (valued at £414) to his son John. John Laik was there in 1739. In 1779 the Barony had been broken down into parts, including: 'Inner-Halrule, consisting of six inclosures', valued at £493 17s 8d; 'Over-Halrule', valued at £832 12s 5d; 'Mill and mill lands of Halrule', valued at £136 9s 10d; Billerwell; and Hawthornside. Andrew Currie and then George Currie were tenants there in the 18th century, as well as Barries. William Scott was there in 1788. In the 1788 county valuation the farm (including Billerwell) was valued at £2144 16s 8d and owned by Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs. George Rae and John Scott were servants there in 1797. The residents in 1799 included John Wilson, James Amos, William Scott and George Hope. William Turnbull, Thomas Dalgleigh, John Wilson and Andrew Currie were all servants there in 1801. The farm was sold to John Wilson in about 1803, and he had the modern house built there. The farms of Inner and Outer Hallrule are described in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, with the part to the west belonging to Sir William Elliott (valued at £428 11s 6d) and the part to the east belonging to John Wilson of Hallrule (valued at £404 11d). John Wilson's part lay 'on the north-side of the public road to Weens, bounded by Billerwell march on the east; by the top of Ruberslaw, where march stones are placed, on the nort; by the said public road on the south, and on the west, forty-four yards west from the west-side of the gate next Halrule, leading to Town-o'-Rule in a straight line to the top of Ruberslaw, passing close by the Clump of Firs, the east fence of which is the march'. Wilson also owned 5 of the 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule (valued at £427 4s 2d), purchasing them from Sir William Elliot and disposing the north-east one to Thomas Cleghorn of Weens. James and then Daniel Mather were tenants from the early 1800s; Daniel had a large cairn removed, inside of which was found an 'urn' with a herringbone-type pattern (now lost). The mansion there was occupied by Peter Pennycook in the 1860s and was a home of the Ushers of Norton and Wells. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The farm contains part of Ruberslaw, and 2 Roman coins were once found here. The former farmhouse had a couple of good rooms in it known as 'the Laird's Rooms', where the Eliotts would stay sometimes when they visited the farm. There is a tradition that Lord Heathfield was born there during one such visit. The farm is fairly well-wooded and contains a walled garden, as well as a new pond (formerly written 'Haroull', etc., it is 'Haw of Roull' in 1484/5, 'aula de Roull' in 1493, 'Aula de Rule' in 1494/5, 'Hawroull' in 1502, 'Hawroull' in 1508, 'Fewhawroull' in 1511, 'Halroule' in 1516, 'Halrowle' in 1526, 'Halrowll' in 1527, 'Hallrewll' in 1557, 'Halroule' in 1561, 'Halroull' in 1562, 'Halrowll' in 1574, 'Halrowle' in 1576, 'Halrowll' and 'Halroule' in 1581, 'Halrowll' in 1581/2, 'Halroull' in 1595, 'Hall Roull' in 1602, 'Halrowll' in 1603, 'Halroule' and 'Hallroull' in 1606, 'Halroull' in 1686, 'Hallroull' and 'Harroull' in 1694 and 'Harule' in 1760 and 1797; it is 'Hall of Roull' on Gordon's c. 1650 map and 'Hall of Roull' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it has its modern spelling by Stobie's 1770 map).

Hallrule Common (hawl-rool-ko-min) n. former name for lands in the southern part of the farm of Hallrule. It is recorded in a charter of 1606 when Hobsburn and Weens were sold to John Scott. It marked the northern boundary of these lands, and is stated to be 'the lands called the Common of Halroule'.

Hallrule Mill (hawl-rool-mil) n. former corn mill and farm at Hallrule, long tenanted by the Turnbulls. The mill lands (and 1/6th of the multure) were assigned to Agnes Herries, following the Baronial dispute over Feu-Rule in 1562. In 1574 it was recorded that the whole of the Barony of Feu-Rule 'is thirlit to the mylne'. The mill passed to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. The earliest named tenant on record is 'Walter Ammous' in 1685. 'Walter Almes' was still there in 1694, when he paid tax on 3 hearths 'for himself and cottar'. In the following centuries it was often let along with the farm of Hallrule. It was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in the 18th and early 19th centuries. In 1779 it was valued at £136 9s 10d. Robert Turnbull was tenant there in at least 1797-1801. It was purchased by Thomas Cleghorn in 1805 and added to his Weens estate. In 1811 it was valued at £136 9s 10d. It is recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and Slater's 1852 directories, when the miller was James Laidlaw. He remained until 1855 when William Bell purchased the farm from Eliott of Stobs (it recorded as 'mylne of Habroule' in 1574, 'Ha roul Miln' in a charter of 1649, 'Harroulmylne' in 1694 and 'Harulemiln' in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map and Stobie's 1770 map).

Hall's (hawlz) n. fishmonger's shop next to the Town Hall in the mid-20th century, which also used to have game hanging on hooks outside the windows.

Hally Well (haw-lee-wel) n. former spring to the south-east of Hallywell Hill, between Newton and Groundstone Heights on the A7. Francis Well is right beside the road, further south (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hallywell Hill (haw-lee-wel-hil) n. small hill just to the east of the A7 after the turn for Boonraw. The name comes from the nearby spring, although any connection to anything holy is unknown.

halse (hals) v., poet. to hug, embrace – 'Nell Cameron is a woe woman; Nae blythsume wean has she, To halse hir necke, to pat hir brieste, Or fondle atte hir knee' [WiSp] (cf. hass).

Halswelle (hals-wel) n. Keeley (1831–91) English artist. He was known for book illustrations and later as an oil painter. He lived in Edinburgh in about the period 1854–63. In 1856 he came to Hawick as part of a theatre troupe, designing the sets and also taking part as a performer for their 9-day engagement. Under the pseudonym Charles K. Tynte he prepared a series of sketches based on the troupe's time in Hawick, which was published as 'Notes Hawikianæ'.

Haltwhistle (haw-l'-whi-sul) n. town in north-eastern Cumbria, important in rieving days, having several existing towers and strongholds. It was a seat of the Ridley family.

haly (hā-lee) adj., arch. holy – '...that on the Wednysday next efter the Feest offe the Inuencioun off the Haly Cros ...' [SB1431], '...And nane dare charge wi' imperfections, The haly hamewards (hām-wurdz) adv. homewards – 'Wi' giddy pates an' yill-stain'd claes, A' hamewards they gae stammin'' [JoHa], '... As hamewards cunningly they slink, Unken'd to been thegither Ava that day' [JoHa], '... And, lifting cattle and sheep, Gang hamewards afore we ken' [TK].

homework (hām-wurk) n. homework – '... Henry finally gittin sent hame ti Howahill wi homework frae the teacher!' [IHS].

Hamilton (hawm-ul-tin) n. Agnes Davidson nee Halliday (1851/2–1908) only known child of local poet John Halliday and his wife Margaret Carruthers. She was born in Hobkirk Parish and moved with her parents to Bridge of Allan just a couple of years later. She married Thomas Hamilton in Logie in 1873; he was born in 1841 in Lesmahagow and in 1881 was recorded as a 'Commercial Traveller (Wine)'. Their children were: George William (1874–1930); Margaret Carruthers (1877–97); and John Halliday (1879–83). Her husband probably died in the 1880s. She was living with her father in Bridge of Allan in 1861 and in 1871 when he was a hotel keeper at the Lady of the Lake Hotel there. In 1881 she was living with her family at Springfield Cottage in Bridge of Allan. They moved to Stirling in 1893 and in 1897 she is recorded living on the Esplanade there, probably working at Stirling Castle Hotel, where Thomas Low was proprietor; she herself was proprietor in directories of 1903 and 1907. This building now houses the gift shop of the Castle. She is buried in Logie Parish Cemetery. Andrew (d.bef. 1637) probably son of Andrew of St. John's Chapel and grandson of James of St. John's Chapel and Sprouston. He was described as 'in Harret' (i.e. Harwood in the Rule valley) in 1609 when Margaret Turnbull brought a court action against him for intrusion onto the lands of Tythehouse. He was also witness to the succession of his Francis (probably his cousin) and served as his 'curator'. Capt. Archibald C. (1881–1915) son of Dr. John R. and brother of Dr. James O. He worked in Burma and was killed at Gallipoli. Charles (c.1650–85) 5th Earl of Haddington, son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1670 in many lands, including those once belonging to Melrose Abbey. The local lands were Hassendeanbank, Brieryyards, Clerkcroft, Cresswell, Hornshole and Crook, as well as Rodono, Thirlestane and others in Etrick. He also held the feu duties of Friarshaw, as well as owning most of the lands in Melrose Parish and others in Maxton and Lessuden according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1678. Della nee Oliver (1938/9–2016) she was Cornet's Lass to Billy Cavers in 1949 and was Diamond Jubilee Lass in 2009. She married Dr. Rory and they lived at Bucklands. She had children Peter and Susan. Elizabeth (1758–1816) born in Belfast of Scottish parents, she became a writer, particularly of essays. She is best known for her novel 'The Cottagers of Glenburnie' (1808), which is seen as a forerunner of the 'Kailyard' style. It was supposedly based around Wilton Dean, and written during a visit with James Anderson in Wilton Lodge. Francis (16th/17th C.) son of James of St. John's Chapel, from whom he succeeded to the lands of Appotside and Tythehouse in the Rule valley in 1610. In 1630 he granted a sasine of Appotside and Tythehouse to the minister William Weir, who was his brother-in-law. He is recorded as a witness to the 1632 sale of Harwood to Gilbert Elliott by Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir and gave his permission for the sale of Appotside and Tythehouse to Edward Lorraine. He could be the 'Mr. Francis Hamilton' who wrote to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1624 regarding the plot by Robert Elliot to murder Scott; he was clearly a friend of John Murray (the Earl of Annandale), Elliot's brother-in-law, and stated that Elliot should be saved for the sake of Murray. He may have moved to Baillieborough in Ireland. Rev. Gavin James (1777–1837) son of Gavin from Blackwood, Douglas. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Lanark in 1799 and ordained as minister at Harbottle in Northumberland in 1809. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish in late 1810 (by Lady Minto and her son Gilbert Elliot, Commissioners of Lord Minto, who was in Bengal) and became the new minister there in 1811. He served as Presbytery Clerk. In 1809 he was preparing essays on agricultural topics, under the patronage of the Board of Agriculture, but this never appeared in publication. He had a debt to Mr. Pringle, in letters preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in 1814 and 1815. There is an existing letter from him in 1823, regarding Captain Napier's commission to the General Assembly and there are other surviving letters involving business with Selkirk in 1818 and 1831. He compiled the entry on Ashkirk Parish for the 'New Statistical Account of Scotland'; this was prepared for publication by Walter Todd, since he died before it was due to appear. He suffered from ill health and had an assistant for the last 5 years. In 1809 at Hawick Manse (suggesting a previous connection with the area) he married Mary, only daughter of James Walker of Antigua, and they had children. Their daughter Joanna married Thomas Thorburn. Helen (20th C.) Hawick's first female plumber, working for the Gas Company in the 1940s. James (c.1415–79) son of James of Cadzow. He was closely connected with the Douglasses. He became 1st Lord Hamilton in 1445. In 1471/2 he presented the marriage contract between Archibald, Earl of Angus, and Sir David Scott of Buccleuch. He leased the lands of Craig Douglas in 1459, Winterburgh, Altrieve and Berrybush in Yarrow in 1469 and Craig Douglas in 1478. He married Euphemia Graham, widow of Archibald, 5th Earl of Douglas. He was thus step-father of William, 6th Earl of Douglas and Margaret, the 'Fair Maid of Galloway'. He secondly married Mary, daughter of King James II. He was succeeded by his son James, 1st Earl of

Arran. James (c.1475–1529) Earl of Arran, son of James, 1st Lord Hamilton. He helped negotiate the marriage James IV with Margaret Tudor and was created Earl of Arran on their wedding day. He was appointed Lieutenant General of Scotland, and commanded the Scottish fleet in 1513. He opposed Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in the power struggles during the minority of King James V, and was defeated by Angus' men in the 'Cleanse the Causeway' riot in Edinburgh in 1520. In 1522 he became Lieutenant of the South. Sometime before 1526 there was an attempt to capture him, made by a force headed by George, Lord Home, and David Home of Wedderburn. This force included about 160 Borderers, many of them Scotts, Turnbells, Pringles, etc., and all of whom received remission for their crimes; the list is useful in containing family relationships among some local families. He eventually received the lands of Bothwell from the forfeited estates of the Earl of Angus. He was listed in 1526/7 among prominent men charged by James V not to attack the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton while those men were in 'respite' for the charge of treason. He firstly married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander, 2nd Lord Home; this wedding was annulled when it was discovered that his wife's first husband had still been alive. He secondly married Janet, daughter of David Bethune of Creich. He was succeeded as 2nd Earl of Arran by his son James and also had many other children, including Joanna (who married Alexander Cunningham, 5th Earl of Glencairn) and at least 14 who were illegitimate. There were several called after him: Sir James of Finnart, Lord of Session; James, Bishop of Argyll and Lismore; and James of St. John's Chapel and Sprouston, whose daughter Marion married Robert Elliot of Redheugh. James (c.1516–75) 2nd Earl of Arran, son of James, 1st Earl. He was next in line to the throne after James V's only child, Mary Queen of Scots and was Regent of Scotland during Mary's minority. He became a Catholic and consented to the marriage of Mary to the French Dauphin, this leading to the Rough Wooing. He may have been present at the Battle of Ancrum Moor in 1545. He remained involved in Scottish politics, until 1565 when he moved to France, but returned to imprisonment in Scotland in 1569. He married Margaret, daughter of James Douglas, 3rd Earl of Morton. He was succeeded by his son James, who he tried at one point to marry to Elizabeth I of England and to

Queen Mary. James (d.1580) illegitimate son of James, 1st Earl of Arran and brother of John, Archbishop of St. Andrews. He was nominated as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1547, but rejected the following year, largely due to his illegitimacy. Hence he was almost Hawick's Archbishop. However, he later received papal dispensation and was appointed Bishop of Argyll. He later became a Protestant. James of St. John's Chapel and Sprouston (d.1585) younger illegitimate son of James, 1st Earl of Arran. He married Marie, daughter of Patrick Hepburn of Fairnington. His children included: John of St. John's Chapel (d.1587), who married a Cairncross of Colmslie; Patrick (d.1598); James of Harwood (d.c.1610); Andrew of St. John's Chapel; Thomas of Telstane; and also probably Alexander, Marion, Margaret, Nicholas and Jane. James (d.c.1610) son of James of St. John's Chapel and Sprouston. He was sometimes referred to as being 'of Harwood'. A contract of 1598 with Hector Lorraine describes how he loaned money to the Loraines, with the reversion of Harwood and Appotside residing with him. The amount was increased to almost £1200 by 1600. By 1602 he had a feu charter of the lands of Tythehouse and Appotside, as well as having confirmation from the superior, William Maxwell, Lord Herries, that he held the right of marriage of Hector Lorraine, as well as the reversion of Harwood and Hawthornside. He probably arranged the marriage between Hector Lorraine and his niece, daughter of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and his sister Marion Hamilton. However, the Lorraines were unable to repay the 'wadset' to him, and the lands legally changed hands some time in the early 17th century, confirmed by a disposition of 1630 and 'charter of alienation' in 1632 (where he is referred to as the 'deceased James Hamiltoun of Harwood'). His son Francis inherited Appotside and Tythehouse from him in 1610. In 1619 it is recorded that Edward Lorraine was required to marry Margaret Hamilton, sister to his heir Francis. He married Jean, sister of William Cairncross of Colmslie; she was sister of his brother John's wife. His children included: Francis of Harwood; Andrew of Killenover, Donegal; Jean, who married James Chisholm of Gornewood and secondly Patrick Kincaid of Edinburgh; a daughter who married John Ballyboe of Mullenard; John; and William. James (17th C.) Hawick resident, mentioned in a court case of 1673. He was found guilty of cutting the 'goune-tail' of John Scott's wife. He could be the James who was married to

Bessie Scott, and whose son Robert was born in Hawick in 1673 (with witnesses William Paterson and William Laing). James (b.c.1800) stocking-maker of the West End. He may be the man of that name who was listed among people to have contracted cholera, but recovered, in 1832. In 1841 he was at about 17 Loan with his wife Jean and their children Robert, Charles, James, John, Ann, Margaret and Thomas. Dr. James Oliver 'Oliver' (1886–1938) son of John R. and father of Rory. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1908. In Hawick he went into partnership with his father and continued the practice after his death. He joined the R.A.M.C. Reserve of Officers in 1910 and served with them when war broke out. He was in charge of No. 4 Ambulance Train, B.E.F., France when he was discharged due to ill-health in 1917. He then became Commandant of the Hawick Military Hospital. He was a keen rugby supporter and was President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1914. He was also one of the early local car owners. In 1919 he moved to the South of England, performing bacteriological research in Bournemouth. He then took up a position in the Barbados and travelled extensively. In 1916 he married Sara Chisholm (who died in 1938). Their son Rory was also a doctor in Hawick. He died at his home in Edinburgh at the age of 52, effectively as a result of his war disability. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Jean (16th/17th C.) daughter of John of St. John's Chapel and sister of Marion and Margaret, who jointly inherited the Lordship of Winnington in 1610. The lands consisted of Winningtonhall and mill there, Swinstead, Over and Nether Kirkwoodhead, Brandside and Horselee, as well as some land in Jedburgh. She married Walter Bellenden, brother of the Laird of Auchmuill. John of St. John's Chapel (d.1587) son of James of St. John's Chapel and Sprouston. He married Margaret Cairncross, sister of the Laird of Colmslie, and secondly married Margaret Nichol. His daughters and co-heiresses were Margaret, Marion and Jean, who are mentioned in 1593, by which time he was deceased. In 1610 his 3 daughters inherited the lands of Winnington as heirs to their great-grandfather Patrick Hepburn. Their names were listed as 'Maria', 'Jeanna' and 'Margareta' and the lands consisted specifically of Winningtonhall and mill there, Swinstead, Over and Nether Kirkwoodhead, Brandside and Horselee. Rev. John (16th C.) minister at Ashkirk from 1570, being presented to the parsonage on the death of John

Murie. He was thus the first parish minister after the Reformation. John Scott was recorded as Reader in 1574, but they may have overlapped. John (1626–69) 4th Earl of Haddington, younger brother of Thomas, 3rd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1645. He also had the titles of Lord Byres and Binning and succeeded to the superiority of lands previously held by Melrose Abbey, including Hassendeanbank, Brieryyards, Clerkcroft, Cresswell, etc. In 1655 he must have held the superiority of the Barony of Hassendean when he gave a 'precept of clare constat' to Thomas Turnbull for the lands of Cockerheugh. He is probably the Earl of Haddington recorded paying tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in about 1663. He married Christian, daughter of John Lindsay, 17th Earl of Crawford. He was succeeded by his son Charles. John Rankine (b.1822/3) born in Bathgate, he was teacher at Minto School in the 1850s and 1860s. One of his pupils was James 'Dictionary' Murray. He was listed there on Slater's 1852 directory. He also served as Heritors' Clerk, Session Clerk, Kirk Treasurer, Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish. In 1851 his sister Margaret was acting as housekeeper. In 1854 he married Jane Tait, eldest daughter of Alexander Robertson. Their children included Isabella, Robert and Alexander R. Dr. John Rogerson (d.1916) born in Dumfriesshire, he was grandfather of Rory. He was a local doctor who was the main instigator for the setting up of the Cottage Hospital. He lived at Elm House, which he had built for him. He was also known for showing Irish Terriers, and was President of the Ornithological Society. He was Chairman of the Scottish Committee of the British Medical Association when war broke out in 1914, and helped coordinate medical services in Scotland during WWI. J.C. Goodfellow dedicated his 1911 collection of verses to him. He married Alice Mary, eldest daughter of the second marriage of James Oliver of Thornwood. Their sons were: Archibald (1881–1915), who died at Gallipoli; and Dr. James Oliver (b.1886), who continued his practice. He wrote 'Medical Morality as Influenced by Education' (1899). Margaret (16th/17th C.) daughter of John of St. John's Chapel and grand-daughter of James. She was sister of Marion and Jean, who jointly inherited the Lordship of Winnington on 1610. She married Robert Home of Carronsyde. Marion (d.1619) daughter of John of St. John's Chapel and sister of Jean and Margaret. Her name is transcribed as 'Mania Hammiltoune' in 1610 when she and her sisters inherited their great-grandfather Patrick Hepburn's Lordship of Winnington. Patrick

(17th C.) recorded in 1651 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Hawrwood in Hawick. Richard (15th C.) listed as a witness to the sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. His name is recorded as ‘Ricardo Hammyltoune’. Robert (16th C.) recorded as Reader at Minto in 1579. Dr. Roderick ‘Rory’ (1920–1999) born in Torquay, both his father and grandfather being Hawick doctors, he was a doctor himself in Hawick for 38 years. He served on the Town Council from 1966, the Regional Council from 1975 and the District Council from 1985–88. Sometimes referred to as ‘Rory the Tory’, he was known for his magnanimous gestures (e.g. opening a local swimming gala by jumping in fully clothed). He also wrote the ‘Golfer’s Guide to Wee Places’ (1980). He married Della Oliver. Steven (1982/3–) motor racing engineer from Hawick. He attended St. Margaret’s and the High School, then completed a computer science degree at St. Andrew’s University. He later earned a Masters degree in engineering, eventually moving into the world of Formula-1 racing, where he worked for Ferrari in 2012, Mercedes 2013–17 and Force India from 2018, later called Racinf Point F1 and then Aston Martin. Sir Thomas ‘Tam o the Cowgate’ (1563–1637) son of Thomas of Priestfield, he was a lawyer in Edinburgh who served as an Avocate, Senator of the College of Justice, Lord President of the Court of Session, Lord Clerk Register, Principle Secretary of State and Lord Privy Seal. In 1612, as Lord Advocate, he obtained a decree before the Lords of Council and Session against people in the Hawick area who had charged more than 10 percent interest. Also in 1612, when he was Lord Clerk Register, he made an index of royal charters and other ancient Scottish documents. This was described in 1798 in a book edited by William Robertson and usually referred to as ‘Robertson’s Index’. Since many of these charters were lost, the index forms an invaluable record of early Scottish history. He became Lord of Session as Lord Duncairn, was raised to the peerage as Lord Binning in 1616, then created Earl of Melrose in 1619 and finally 1st Earl of Haddington in 1627. He gained the superiority of lands that had been held by Melrose Abbey (and latterly by John Ramsay, Earl of Holderness), including those in upper Teviotdale. He is recorded in a charter of 1619 granting the lands of ‘Horneshoill’ to Thomas, 2nd son of Thomas Turnbull of Minto. In 1621 the Earl of Buccleuch resigned the lands in Ringwoodfield to him. He also held lands in Belses that he leased in 1632 and that same year he feued Firth to Hector Turnbull and also feued lands in Ruecastle and Raperlaw. He probably sold the superiority of Melrose to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He married Margaret, daughter of James Borthwick of Newbyres and secondly Margaret Foulis and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas Lord Binning (1600–40) son of 1st Earl of Haddington, he became 2nd Earl. This included inheriting his father’s lands in Roxburghshire and elsewhere, including superiority of lands formerly held by Melrose Abbey. There is a charter of Charles I to him for lands in the Borders, including ‘Hassindenbank, Breiryairdis, Clerkcroft, Kerswell in Hassingtoun, Hornishoill, Craighous’ and others. He signed the National Covenant in 1638 and served as a Major under Gen. Leslie. He was killed in a massive explosion in the powder magazine at Dunglass Castle only 3 years after succeeding. He married Catherine, daughter of John Erskine, 18th Earl of Mar. He was succeeded by his son, also Thomas. Thomas of Binning and the Byres (1626–45) son of Thomas, he became 3rd Earl of Haddington. In 1640 he was served heir to the extensive lands of his father, including the superiority of lands formerly held by Melrose Abbey. This included Hassendeanbank, Brieryards, Clerkcroft, Kerswell and Hornshole. He is listed as owner of most of the lands in Melrose Parish in 1643. He also held feu-duty for Riddell and Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. William (19th/20th C.) resident of Earlside. In 1906 he and his wife contributed to the fund for renovating Kirkton Kirk. W.F. (20th C.) Burgh Surveyor in the 1940s.

Hamilton Road (haw-mul’-in-rōd) n. street linking Mansfield with Burnfoot, built in 1971 and named after Dr. Rory Hamilton.

hammermen (haw-mur-men) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were incorporated by an Act of the Town Council in 1686, giving them the right to test workmanship at fairs and markets, and fine and punish accordingly. They consisted of smiths, coopers, millwrights, engineers, joiners, masons, etc. In some processions they wore white trousers trimmed with a black stripe down the side. In 1715 there was a dispute between them and the weavers over precedence in seats in the gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk – ‘... the elders convened to take

hamp (hawp) v., poet. to stammer, stutter – 'If ye 'bout it hamp and hay My gontrans, lass, ye soon will fin' A wilfu' man maun hae his way' [HSR].

Hampden (hawm-din) n., arch. a radical, defender of rights – 'On reaching Denholm the company was greatly augmented by the village Hampdens' [RM] (inspired by a quotation from Grey's 'Elegy in a Country Churchyard', deriving from radical 17th century parliamentarian John Hampden).

hancefurth (hans-furth) adv., poet. henceforth – 'For I say untill yow, Ye sallna see me hancefurth, til ye sall say, Blisset is he that comith in the name o' the Lord' [HSR], 'But I say untill yow, I wullna drink hancefurth o' the frut o' the vine' [HSR].

hanch (hansh) v., arch. to snap, bite, particularly said of a dog when food is thrown at it, – 'May ye ne'er want a freen', gin need Should show his ganchin, snackin head Nor ill health gie you a screed, Wi's hanchin' teeth' [JoHa], to eat greedily, chomp – '...a stane-nappin injin gaed-on leike a tuim mill, – skrunshin – chaampin – haanshin' [ECS], to show the teeth, snarl (also written 'hansh').

handiconeive (hawn-dee-ko-niv) adv., arch. conjointly, with joint action and sharing, especially in a secretive enterprise – 'We'se gae handiconeive about' [JoJ].

Hand Sike (hawnd-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, adjacent to the farm of Mangerton.

Handyside (hawn-dee-sid) n. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name, written 'Handiside', is not common in the region.

hang (hawng) n. euphemism for 'hell' – '...A henni seen the forecast for the next ride-oots bit A hope ti hang hei gits nice weather' [We] (note that this is never hing).

hang (hawng) pp., arch. hung – '...an, ferrer up ...hang another caal, leike a bruch roond a muin' [ECS] (also written 'haang'; this was once a past tense for hing, with the past participle being 'hung', as in English).

hangit (hawng-ee', -i') pp., poet. hanged – '...an' left them, an' gaed an' hanget himsel' [HSR].

Hangingshaw Hill

Hanganay (hawng-ga-nā) n., arch. last day of the year, Hogmanay, also a gift given to children on this day – 'As long as Allars House existed, the bairns got their 'hanganay' every Old Year's Day' [JTU] (also written 'Hanginay'; cf. Hogmanay and Hangmanay).

Hangerhope (hawng-ur-hōp) n. former farmstead situated on the slopes of Whiteacres Hill, to the south-east of Kaimend. The ruin is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. Hangerhope Plantation is marked on current maps.

Hangingshaw (hawng-in-shaw) n. site of 15th century house in the Yarrow valley, near Yarrowford, stronghold of 'the Outlaw Murray'. These were Crown lands in the late 15th century, leased by John and Patrick Murray. The lands remained with the Murray family for about 300 years. It was raided by 'traitors of Leven' brought in by Philip Turnbull in Whithope and David Turnbull in Carlinpool, who had remission for these crimes in 1502. John Murray held the lease until at least 1513. In 1527 Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme paid 500 merks to James Murray of Falahill for slaughter and spoliation at these lands. And in 1535 the lands were named among those claimed to have been raided by Robert Scott of Allahaugh. In 1541 the lands were owned by Patrick Murray of Hanigingshaw (also of Falahill), with a rental of £50. The 18th century mansion built there burned down in about 1769, and the present house dates from 1846, after the estate was purchased by Sir James Johnstone of Westerhall. Tradition states that the custom of the Murrays was to make visitors drink an intoxicating amount of ale from the 'Hangingshaw Ladle' – 'Auld Juden he strayed by the side of a river, When the watcher on Hanginshaw-law loud did cry, – 'Ho, Juden, take care! or ye're ruined for ever, The bugle of Aekwood has thrice sounded high'' [ES] (it is 'Hangandschaw' in 1456, 1468, 1484, 1494 and 1501, 'Hangingschaw' in 1502, 'Hangandschau' in 1507 and 1527 and, 'Hangynschaw' in 1535 and 'Hangitschaw' in 1541; it is 'Hanginshaw' on Blaeu's 1654 map; there are places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. opposite Heriot).

Hangingshaw Hill (hawng-in-shaw-hil) n. hill in the upper Ale valley, to the west of Borthwickshiels. It reaches a height of 319 m. There are signs of an unenclosed settlement on the southern slopes. There is an old enclosure on the western side. Gilbert 'de Hanguydeschawe' in the county of Roxburgh, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 may have been connected with these lands (there is a hill of the same name near Woden Law in Hownam Parish).

Hangingside (hawng-in-sīd) n. former name for Hawthornside or perhaps adjacent or overlapping lands, in use in the 16th century. The lands were given to Richard of Hangingside after William Lorraine transferred his allegiance to the English King. 'Jock o the Park' Elliot held the lands in the late 16th century. The existence of a tower house there is suggested by the Peel Knowe just north-west of Hawthornside, and it is said that stone from the tower were used to build the new farmhouse. Gilbert Elliott of Stobs received a charter of the lands from the King in 1621 and his son William was served as his heir to the lands in 1645. In early times the farm may have been part of the Barony of Feu-Rule. It was incorporated into the Barony of Hallrule in 1649 (when both 'Hangingside' and 'Hathernsyde' were listed). Douglas of Cavers held the superiority until at least 1698. William Elliott of Stobs was served heir to his father in the lands of 'Hangansyde' in 1645 and it was listed in the late 17th century among the Elliott of Stobs properties in the Barony of Feu-Rule. It must have been soon after that the modern name of 'Hawthornside' was adopted. The land appears to have given rise to a surname (or vice versa), since the land was owned by Hangingside of that Ilk, but only for about half a century. This surname may have later been confounded with Handyside. The naming situation is more complicated, however, since the Hanganside family existed earlier, owning lands at Newton Don from the late 14th century (it was 'Hangansyde' in 1621 and 'Hanginsyde' in 1687 and 1698).

Hangingside (hawng-in-sīd) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as 'Adam de Hangaldside' in 1426 when he was on an inquest for Walter Scott of Rankilburn inheriting his father's lands of Eilrig. A man of the same name was recorded as a monk of Melrose Abbey in Scott of Buccleuch document of 1519 and 1524. Alexander of that Ilk (16th C.) son of Richard. There is a confirmation in 1563 of a charter from his father of a third of the lands of Little Newton in Lauderdale. In 1595 his heirs were Helen and Barbara, presumably his daughters. He may thus have been the last in the male line. Alexander (16th/17th C.) probably son of John. He was a skinner in Edinburgh. In 1617 he married Margaret Symington in Edinburgh. Helen (16th/17th C.) probably daughter of Alexander of that Ilk. She and her sister Barbara, were 'heirs portioner' of Alexander. In 1595 they resigned the lands of Little Newton in Lauderdale to her and her husband Alexander Weddell. And in a crown charter of 1598 the 2 sisters resigned the lands of Hangansyde (probably the same as Hawthornside) to Alexander 'Woddell'. She still held Little Newton in 1615, along with her 2nd husband Alexander McDowall. She also had a son, Alexander. John (d.bef. 1604) referred to as 'in Nydrie Marchell' in 1596 when his son John became a baker's apprentice in Edinburgh, and his son Alexander became a skinner's apprentice in 1604. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine (of the lands of 'Silwynislandis') in 1436. He is referred to as 'Patrick Hangatsyd'. Richard (14th C.) recorded in 1388 when he gave Kaimflat in the territory of Little Newton (in Lauderdale) to Kelso Abbey, for masses to be said for the soul of his superiors, William and James of Douglas. It seems that he held lands in the eastern part of what would be called Newton. Probably the same Richard was Bailie of the Earls of Douglas in the Barony of Dunbar, as recorded in 1407. Richard (15th/16th C.) granted the lands of 'Hangetsyd' (i.e. what would become Hawthornside) by James, Earl of Douglas. Since this was granted by James, Earl of Douglas, it was probably before 1488. The transfer may have been because William Lorraine had been the former owner and transferred his allegiance to England. There was a sasine confirming the lands to his son Richard in 1543. He is probably the 'Ric. de Hangandside, scutifero' who witnessed a charter in 1432. Richard of that Ilk (16th C.) son of Richard. There was a sasine in his name for the lands of Hangingside in 1543. He was recorded among Border Lairds paying homage to the Duke of Somerset in about 1547. He was a juror for a retour in 1558. It appears he may have sold the lands to Jock Elliot of the Park in 1562, except that they were still held by his descendants Helen and Barbara in 1598. He is recorded as 'Richard Hangitsyde of Littlnewtown' when he was part of a panel of 1562, deciding on a dispute in the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1563 there is a confirmation of his charter to his son Alexander of a third part of the lands of Little Newton. Robert (17th C.) merchant in Edinburgh. George son of William (and presumably a relative) is recorded becoming his apprentice in 1643. Probably the same Robert married Agnes Garden in Edinburgh in 1642 and remarried in 1644 to Catherine Kinbli. Walter (16th/17th C.) cordiner in Edinburgh. In 1618 he married Alison Ewieson. William (15th C.) witness to a charter in 1432, along with several Wardlaws and others. William (15th C.) recorded as 'Willelmus Hangitsyde' in a Glasgow Diocese record of 1494. He could have been related to the earlier William. William (16th C.) recorded in Hartwoodburn in 1581 when he promised to repay money he owed to James Fairgrieve in Carterhaugh. William (17th C.) merchant in Kelso. In 1643 his son George became a merchant's apprentice to Robert in Edinburgh, who was presumably relative. (written 'Hangandside', 'Hangansyde', 'Hangetsyde', 'Hanginsyde', etc.).

Hangmanay (hawng-mun-ā) n., arch. the last day of the year (also Hanganay and Hogmanay).

Hangman's Acre (hawng-munz-ā-kur) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, of uncertain location, but probably near Castleton or Riccarton. It is recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as 'Hangmanis Aiker', with value 30 pence and tenanted by Thomas Armstrong (it is possible that it is related to Hagiehaugh).

[BCM1881], n. a skein of yarn, coil of rope, a tangle, entanglement, catch, a hesitancy in speech, stutter, an advantage over someone, hold, influence (several of the noun meanings noted by E.C. Smith; see also hankit).

hanker (hawng-kur) v., arch. to linger, loiter – 'Syne at the stile she wd hanker a wee, Till the lads came up: but nane cou'd see' [JoHa].

hankie (hawng-kee) n. a handkerchief.

hankit (hawng-kee', -ki') pp. entangled, caught – 'ma breeks er hankit on the wyre' (see also hank).

Hankumshaugh (hawng-kumz-hawch) n. farm in the Slitrig valley, opposite the foot of the Flex Brae. Crops were swept away from there in the flood of 1846. It is referred to as 'Hankholm Haugh' in 1890. It is probably the same as Hummelknoweshaugh.

hanlawhile (han-la-whīl) n., arch. a short time, little while – 'He wunna bide still a hanlawhile' [GW].

Hannah (haw-hu) n. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son James was baptised in 1825. William (b.c.1810) clogger in Hawick. In Pigot's 1837 directory he is listed on Silver Street. In 1841 he was recorded at about No. 23 High Street. In 1836 he married Catherine McMorrine and their children included Nicholas, William and Walter. An unnamed child of his died in 1840. Probably the same William married Catherine McMerrell and had a son John baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1846.

hansel (han-sul) v., arch. to inaugurate, give money to mark a special occasion – 'She followed the orthodox habit of hanselling all her gifts at church' [RM], 'On one of these rounds a tea-equipage was hanseled' [RJR], n. a gift given for luck in a new undertaking.

happit (haw-pee', -pi') adj., pp., arch. wrapped, covered – 'it's ower warm ti be si happit up', 'Happit cosy, trig and sweet, Fifty bairns are waur ...' [JT], 'An' where are a' my playmates noo that shared their sports wi' me, Some's lang been happit owre the heid frae earthly troubles free' [VW], '... Mintih Craigs (haappeet an rowed in their leafy maud)' [ECS], '... And soothin' Bliss out-stretch'd her wings, And happit every creature On Young Year's Day' [TCh] (see also hap; cf. waupit and wrappit).

the Happy Buildins (thu-haw=pee-bil-dinz) n. popular name for the buildings around the Ewe & Lamb pub before being rebuilt in the 1950s. The name was said to be because the residents all knew and supported each other.

har' (hawr) v., arch. heard, did hear – 'This eez the saicant sic column, A've haar' tell ...' [ECS] (also written 'haar') [ECS].

Harang see Herring

Harbottle Castle (hawr-bo'-ul-kaw-sul) n. ruined castle on the Coquet River near Holystone village in Northumberland. First built by the Umfraville family in the 12th century, it was an important centre of power in the English Middle March. It was taken by Robert the Bruce in 1318, passed into the hands of Henry IV, and was ruined by the 17th century.

hard (hard) pp., arch. heard – '...wi' some murder ance committed there. Aw hae hard sin' syne that it was a Papish priest or bishop ...' [BCM1880].

harden (har-din) n., arch. a coarse, grey cloth, sack-cloth, originally made from 'hards', adj., arch. made of course, grey, woollen cloth – 'wi a bit harden seck roond um', 'Yon kitchen lass at Wulton Ludge Lilts bonny in her harden daidle' [DH] (this is probably also confused with hodden and was formerly shortened to harn).

Harden (har-din) n. Harden House and the area surrounding it. This could be the Harden in Roxburghshire that was possessed by 'Johan de Harden' when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. The estate was owned by a branch of the Turnbells in the 15th century, at least as early as 1431, and was resigned to the Baron of Wilton in 1468. In 1482 it was granted to John, son of Walter Turnbull of Harden, the symbolic payment being one silver penny at the principle manor of Wilton on the feast of the Nativity. By 1491 the 'superiority' of the lands lay with John Scott, Baron of the half Barony of Wilton, and the tenancy was given by the King to Alexander, Lord Home. This remained the case until 1501/2 when he had a 'bond of reversion' to Robert Scott of Stirches for £100 Scots for the lands of Harden. In 1506 it was part of the lands inherited by Alexander Home, at that time 'was valued at 10 merks, in time of peace at 5 merks and held of the Earl of Bothwell as baron of the half barony of Wilton for one penny blench', but at that time also said to be 'held for ward and relief'. It was confirmed to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1516 when Home's estates were forfeited, but George, Lord Home had most of these reinstated in 1522, with the charter from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme being revoked by the King in 1535. The Homes retained the superiority of the lands until well into the 16th century. In 1559 (perhaps 1550) Alexander Lord Home sold to William Scott of Todrig and his son Walter the lands of Harden, with tower, mains, etc., except for an acre of lands on the east side. The old house was destroyed around 1590, and the new one dates from the 17th century, with later additions. Tradition says that a child was brought here from England by mistake, wrapped among the plunder of a raid, and raised by a daughter of the Laird; he is claimed as the author of many of the Border ballads. There were 21 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Gideon Scott, Margaret Hamilton, William Fisher, William Riddell, Gilbert Gray, Thomas Gray, William Knox, James Scott, John Murray, Jean Shiel, Helen Scott, Margaret Wright, Alison Fairgrieve, Euphan Davidson, James, Scott, Thomas Govenlock, Chistian Govenlock, Janet Curren, Bessie Rule, Helen Scott and William Govenlock. In the 17th century there were separate farms at West Harden and East Harden (also called 'Easter' and 'Wester'). The area was part of Wilton Parish until Robertson was formed in 1689/90. In 1694 there were 4 separate households recorded there (as well as the main house itself). The farm was still occupied by several households in the early 18th century. John Ker, Walter Noble and William Stewart were recorded there in 1694, Thomas Hunter in 1716 and Andrew Chisholme in 1721. Part was sold to the Buccleuch estates in 1727. James Hume was living there in 1752, James Cavers in the 1760s, James Watson in 1771, John Hobkirk in 1784, Robert Grieve and Robert Laidlaw in 1786, William Gray in 1787, John Turnbull in 1787-94, John Scott in 1788-89, James Miller in 1793, James Crow in 1798-1800 and Thomas Jackson in 1798. In 1788 it was valued along with West Highchesters at £486 6s 8d and in 1811 it was valued at £463 9s (along with Highesters Mill and Dunbush). Robert Elliot was tenant in 1812 and Thomas Elliot was shepherd. Thomas Graham was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. A spindle whorl from the area was in Tom Scott's collection, and a flint arrow-head was also found there - 'As I came over the Harden hill A whaup on the moor was whistling shrill ...' [WHO] (formerly also 'the Harden'; it is 'Hardane' in 1482, 'Hardene' in 1501/2, 'Hardane' in 1526, 1535 and 1557, 'Hardenn' in 1550, 'Hardyn' in 1568, 'hardon' in 1713 and 'Hardon' in 1733; it appears on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Hardenn' and Adair's c. 1688 map in its modern form, and is also on Gordon's manuscript map c.1650, where it is wrongly placed to the east of Hawick; the origin of the name is probably Old English 'hara denu', meaning 'the valley frequented by hares'; there are several other Hardens in Scotland and Northern England, e.g. in Castleton and Oxnam Parishes, probably most with similar origins).

Harden (har-din) n. area to the east of Castleton, once with a tower house. 'Hardenbank' is listed on the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. 'Seme Elliot of Hardin' is listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. Sandy Armstrong was there in 1623 and 'Neather Harden' was possessed by Sandy Armstrong and 'Will in the Mylne' in 1632. David Stark was tenant there in 1694, with George Scott also listed as a resident. Abraham Watson was farmer there in 1797 and William Lillico was labourer there in 1801. James Knox was there in 1868. It was still indicated on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but is now marked only as Harden Moss, Harden Burn and Harden Hill (further to the south-east). The location suggested for the former house is at the edge of a plantation on the left-hand side of the B6357 between Florida and Old Castleton. Confusingly, it appears to be combined with Highhouse, Hightrees, Howden and Burnmouth on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, although these other farmsteads are not very close in location, and so this may be an error (the tower is indicated on Gordon's c. 1650 map, while Blaeu's 1654 map shows 'O. Hardenn' and 'N. Hardenn' and Stobie's 1770 map shows simply 'Harden').

Harden (har-din) n. John (13th C.) recorded as 'Johan de Harden' in the county of Roxburgh when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. This seems likely to be the lands in the Borthwick valley, but his relationship to later owners is unknown.

Harden Anna (har-din-aw-na) n. former name for a farmstead near Harden in the Borthwick valley. James Hendry was living there in 1720 and 1723. John Storie in 1762, Ebenezer Clerk in 1781 and John Hobkirk in 1787 (the name presumably derives from the meaning of 'anna' or 'ana' as a 'holm'; see also the Annai).

Hardenbank (har-din-bawngk) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll, and presumably part of Harden. At that time they were valued at 1 merk and tenanted by John Armstrong.

Harden Brig (har-din-brig) n. small stone road-bridge across the Harden Burn on the B711 Borthwick Road.

Harden Burn

Harden Burn (har-din-burn) n. stream that joins the Borthwick just below Harden.

Harden Burn (har-din-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near the Border and running roughly westward to join the Liddel opposite the farm of Mains. It contains some waterfalls and was traditionally said to be the haunt of fairy folk.

Hardenburn (har-din-burn) n. place in Lilliesleaf Parish, where?? – ‘We’ve wandered up by Hardenburn, And to the muckle tree, Or through the fairy-haunted glen And ower the daisied lea’ [FL].

Hardenburnfit (har-din-burnfi) n. former farmstead near the foot of the Harden Burn in Robertson Parish. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map near where the Merchelyton burn joins the Harden Burn. It is ‘Hardon burn’ in 1710 when James Scott was there. William Miller lived there in at least 1717–27. Robert Gledstains was there in 1753, Michael Johnston and Walter Coltart in 1771 and Thomas Stavert in 1781–84. Robert Linton was a drover there in 1812. Peter Deans and family were there in 1841 (it was ‘Hardon burnfoot’ in 1720 and ‘Harden burnfoot’ in 1781).

Harden Cottage (har-din-ko’-eej) n. former cottage near Harden. Mason William Clerk and family were living there in 1841 and 1851.

Harden Gill (har-din-gil) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, on the south side of the valley, between old Castleton and Mains, and distinct from Harden Burn, which lies a little further north.

Harden Glen (har-din-glen) n. deep ravine in front of Harden House, where the rieving Scotts are said to have hidden stolen cattle, sometimes also called the ‘Beef Tub’. An early sketch was made by J.C. Schetky in 1808. Flakes of flint were found here in about 1938 – ‘High over Borthwick’s mountain flood; His wood embosomed mansion stood; In the dark glen, so deep below The herds of plundered England low’ [SWS], ‘And if your heart’s a Border heart, look down to Harden Glen, And hear the blue hills ringing with the restless hoofs again’ [WHO], ‘Anon, the raiding troop I spy, With low of cattle, shouts of men, And victor pennon waving high, Their stronghold seek in Harden glen’ [AEM], ‘Can you see them in the moonlight as they ride thro’ Harden Glen, Spurred and booted, wild and fearless, to invade the English fen?’ [GHB].

Harden Glen Cottage (har-din-glen-ko’-eej) n. cottage near the cattle grid on the side road along the Harden Burn.

Harden Hoose

Harden Hill (har-din-hil) n. hill between Castleton village and Black Knowe in Liddesdale. It reaches a height of 288 m and has the Harden Burn to the north and Harden Moss to its north-west.

Hardenhoo (har-din-hoo) n. house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map in Liddesdale near the modern Hartsgarth. The notation on the map may indicate an abbreviation, perhaps for ‘Hardenholm’. It is probably the same as ‘Hardenkaul’ listed on a rental roll c.1376 as being a 15-shilling land attached to Mangerton estate.

Harden Hoose (har-din-hoos) n. ancient seat of the Scotts, about 3 miles west of Hawick, home of Lord and Lady Polwarth, and famous as the former home of Border rieviers such as Auld Wat of Harden. It is set dramatically above a deep ravine of a stream which joins the Borthwick, ideal for hiding stolen cattle, and planted with a surrounding woodland. The Scotts gained Harden from Lord Home in 1501. The earliest residence there was further down at ‘Auld Harden’ (although it is unclear whether this was the tower destroyed near the end of the 16th century or another). The present house dates from about 1630, with extensions around 1680–90, but may incorporate parts of an earlier one that was destroyed about 1592 (possibly by Walter Scott of Goldielands, following a royal order, because of Walter Scott of Harden’s part in the Falkland Raid). There were also major renovations to the north side in the 19th century. The earliest house was oblong, with 2 storeys and an attic, extended to the south in the 1680s. The house has a steep roof with dormers and thick walls. In 1694 the house is listed as having 17 hearths. There is also a 17th century sundial from Dryburgh House just to the east, about 4 feet high and with a square dial-stone. To the west is a bowling green, which may date from the 17th century. The building became a farmhouse from the 18th century, while the seat of the Scotts of Harden was at Mertoun, and it fell into disrepair in the early 19th century, before being restored. However, the family returned in 1913, after major renovations and some alterations were made. It was the location of some Common Riding Ride-outs in the 1930s. Hawick Museum has the lock from the garret door of the house, as well as a door knocker. Other artefacts associated with the house include a powder flask engraved ‘Judean Scoot of Heychesters’, a set of spurs and a bugle horn scratched with many letters. A family tree of the Scotts, drawn up by Sir Walter Scott, is displayed in the house. The arms of Scott of Harden is a variant on that of Buccleuch, with 2 stars and a crescent, supported by 2 mermaids. Their motto is ‘Reparabit Cornua Phoebe’, usually translated as ‘There will be moonlight again’, referring to the habits of reiving days – ‘Ho! For the blades of Harden! Ho! For the driven kye’ [WHO], ‘Tell of danger, warn the ranger, Harden rides again’ [WL].

Harden Knowe (har-din-now) n. hill to the west and north of Harden House containing an ancient earthwork. It is the eastern spur of Mainshiel Head. The lands of Harden Knowes were in dispute in 1739 between Walter Scott of Harden and Pringle of Whitbank. The earthwork is situated on the high western side of the ravine, about 200 m from Harden House. It measures about 65 m by 50 m, and consists of 3 sides, with the ravine completing the rectangle. There are no traces of internal buildings, but the plan would suggest a mediæval date. It has been obliterated to some extent by ploughing and is now partly covered by trees.

Hardenlees (har-din-leez) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the c.1376 rental roll as ‘Hardenlys’, with a value of 6 shillings and 8 pence. It is listed under the ‘Foresta’ section, which is to the north, and probably associated with Harden near Castleton (see Harden).

Harden Mains (har-din-mānz) n. farm just north of Oxnam (with no direct connection with the more local Harden). It was owned by the Rutherfords of Ruecastle and Knowesouth in the 17th century.

Harden Moss (har-din-mos) n. marshy region containing a small body of water to the north of Harden House and just south of Smasha Hill.

Harden Moss (har-din-mos) n. hilly region to the south-east of old Castleton, with Harden Hill further to the south-east.

Harden Place (har-din-plis) n. part of the Howdenbank development, built in 1967 and named after Harden House.

Harden Wud (har-din-wud) n. former lands that were part of the estate of Borthwickshiels. In 1445 ‘Henry of Wod chaplane’ leased his tenantry of these lands to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. The lands were valued at 20 shillings per year. In 1471 these lands, along with Borthwickshiels were passed to Walter, heir of Andrew Ker of Cessford. It is unclear precisely where the lands were, but presumably near to Harden (it is ‘Hardenwod’ in 1445 and ‘Hardenwode’ in 1471).

hard gaun (hawrd-gawn) adj. tough going, arduous, demanding – ‘... which eez hard gaun on the Setterday morning o Hawick Common Ridin ...’ [CT].

Hardie (hawr-dee) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded at Mabonlaw in 1709–13. His children included: James (b.1709), baptised in Wilton; Thomas (b.1711), baptised in Wilton; and Adam (b.1713), baptised in Robertson. Perhaps the same Adam had a son James (b.1720) baptised in Minto. Agnes ‘the Crocodile’ (d.1776) Hawick resident whose death is recorded with this unusual nickname. She could be the Agnes born to Patrick and Agnes Hardie in 1720 or the Agnes born to James and Janet Little in 1722. It is possible she is the Agnes who married John Gowans in Robertson in 1740. Alexander (19th C.) married Isabel Beattie in 1842, the marriage recorded in Wilton and Robertson Parishes. Cochrane (19th C.) married Elizabeth Riddell in Wilton Parish in 1844. David (19th C.) farmer at Priestthaugh. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1870. He could be the David who was farmer at Sorbie in 1861. David T. (19th/20th C.) secretary at Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co., Ltd. He served as Treasurer of Hawick Free Kirk 1889–95. His mother was Elizabeth Taylor. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Crozier and their children included Andrew (b.1671). George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Renwick and their children included Margaret (b.1686). George (d.bef. 1721) tenant in Acreknowe. He is listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1721 his widow Elspeth Reid married smith John Scott. George (18th C.) married Margaret Douglas in Hawick in 1765. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Joan was baptised in 1798. George (b.c.1785) hosiery manufacturer in Denholm. At one time he employed 20 workers. He was listed as a stocking maker in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living on Westside with his wife Nelly. He appears to have been dead by 1851. George (b.c.1790) stockingmaker in Hawick. He is probably the George who was listed in trial papers in 1823 and whose family requested to be on the Hawick Poor Roll in 1827 when he was in prison. In 1841 he was living on the Kirk Wynd with his family in 1851 and 1861 was a widower there. His wife was Isabel (from Cavers Parish) and their children included: Agnes, who married a Thomson; Helen; Robert; Isabel; James; Alison; and Elizabeth. George (19th C.) married Nelly King in Cavers Parish in 1836. George C. (b.1822/3) farm labourer. In 1851 he was living at Woll Cottages and in 1861 at Dearlyburn. His wife was Elizabeth Riddle and their children included: Agnes; Catherine; Margaret; Robert; and Thomas. Helen (18th C.) recorded as mother of Samuel, baptised in Hawick in 1738. Probably the same Helen, married to Samuel had a child Thomas baptised in 1735. Henry (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He was listed 'eist the water' among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He is probably the 'Harie' who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. In 1702 he was fined for being found drinking during the time of the Sunday sermon at George Renwick's inn. He may be the Henry who was married to Isobell Newbie (and had child Nichol baptised in 1688 and William in 1701), or Grizell Young (and had an unnamed child baptised in 1686). He is probably the Henry who witnessed a baptism for James Hardie in 1682 (with Walter Hardie as the other witness). Perhaps the same Henry (along with William, possibly his brother) was recorded in 1683 when he was among a group of men fined for throwing stones across the Teviot at night; they were fined for causing injury and ordered to pay for the clothes being bleached there that they damaged. Isabel (17th C.) daughter of cooper Robert. In 1683 she was struck by stones thrown across the Teviot by a group of men, wounding her, when she and Elspeth Scott (servant to Bailie Scott of Ormiston) were watching linen clothing that was being bleached there. James (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. James (17th C.) Hawick Councillor in 1668. Perhaps the same James is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Huntly and their son William was baptised in 1657. Perhaps Richard (b.1673), with the mother's name given as 'Helen' Huntly, was also his children. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hardie and their children included: Walter (b.1682); William (b.1684); Henry (b.1685); James (b.1687); and John (b.1689). The witnesses in 1682 were Walter Hardie and Henry Hardie, who may be related to him and his wife. John (b.1683), with the mother's name given as 'Jane' Hardie, may also have been his child. James (17th C.) listed among the 'Cottars in Hassanden' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is surely related to the 'John Hardis', who is also listed there. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Isabel Jackson in 1703 and his daughter Malie was baptised in 1706. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Isobel was baptised in 1712. James (17th/18th C.) described as 'at ye Wester Kirkstyle' in 1723 when the Hawick Session gave him money 'to buy a beast for carrying heather, leading of fuel, and carrying to anie who would employ him' to help him support his wife and several small children. Probably the same James 'Hardye' was paid by the Council in 1739 for 'liding 600 difeits to tol-booth' (i.e. transporting 600 divots for the roof of the Tolbooth). It is possible he is the same James as the pedlar described by Robert Wilson. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Janet Hawick in Little in 1713 and their children included: Agnes (b.1722); Mary (b.1724); and Janet (b.1727). Margaret (b.1715), with no mother's name given, could also be his child. The witnesses in 1722 were shoemaker John Scott and Robert Scoon in Branholtmtown (both of whom had children baptised on the same day). James (18th C.) weaver in Cavers Parish. His children included: Agnes (b.1724); Alison (b.1725); Hugh (b.1727); Isabel (b.1729); and Agnes (again, b.1731). He could be the James who got married in Minto in 1720, with no bride's name recorded. James (18th C.) merchant in Hawick Parish. In 1746 (along with flesher Robert) he witnessed a baptism for weaver Joseph Caruthers and Bessy Hardie. It seems likely he was related to both Robert and Bessy. He could be the James who married Christian Scott and whose daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick in 1744. Perhaps the same merchant in Hawick witnessed a baptism for merchant Adam Elliot in 1722. James (18th C.) pedlar from Hawick. It is said (by Robert Wilson) that he was involved in the riot at the Winter Fair when the Commissioners of the Duke of Buccleuch tried to extract a duty. He apparently felled 5 Sheriff Officers with an oak club, which was afterwards held as a family relic. At the end of the scuffle he apparently shattered the sword of the leading Officer, and this was later recounted in a song (which does not survive). He may be the 'Hardie' recorded being paid by the Council in 1767 along with 'Tinlin' for watching the Auld Brig during th flood. A deceased James is described as a labouring man in Hawick in 1774 when his daughter Elizabeth married James Little in Edinburgh; whether this is the same man is unclear. A James, son of William and Bessie Scott was born in Hawick in 1720. James (18th C.) married Isabel Scott in Hawick in 1785. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Doverford' in Southdean Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Thomas (b.1795), Janet (b.1797), Betty (b.1802) and Helen (b.1807). James (d.1808) weaver in Hawick, son of Robert. He married Betty Waugh in 1754 and their children included: John (b.1757); Helen (b.1760); John (again, b.1761); and Barbara (b.1764). The witnesses in 1757 were the same as those for another on the same day. James (b.18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Turnbull and their children included George (b.1804) and John (b.1825). James (b.c.1785) stocking weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on O'Connell Street. His wife was Janet, from England and their children included Robert, Charles, Walter, Thomas, George and James. James (b.1803) son of Rev. Thomas Samuel and grand-nephew of Rev. Charters of Wilton. He was listed as a surgeon living at Wilton Manse in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. James (b.1805/6) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed on the Kirk Wynd in Pigot's 1837 directory and also on the 1841, living with his mother Jean. His wife was also Jean, and she died before 1851. Their children were Helen and Elizabeth. In 1851 in Hawick he married Helen Kersel, who was from Jedburgh. By 1861 he was at 16 Buccleuch Street. James (b.1811/2) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was living at Larriston House (or Haggiehaugh) and recorded as 'Gameguard' at Bygate in Castleton Parish in 1851 and farm labourer at the same place in 1861. He married Janet Cook in Robertson in 1837 and their children included: Janet (b.1837); Agnes (b.1839); Jane (b.1841); John (b.1844); Margaret (b.1846); Esther (b.1848); and Robert. James (1813–91) born at Bridgehouse, Castleton, son of William and Violet Douglas. He was an agricultural labourer, living at Hartsgarth Burnside in 1851 and on South Liddel Street in Newcastleton in 1861. He may be the James who was elder of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk in the latter part of the 19th century. In 1841 he married Jane (or Jean 1814–97), daughter of Andrew Thomson and Janet Scott. Their children included: Janet (b.1841); Violet (b.1843), who married William Cowan; Helen (b.1845), who had a son, James; Elizabeth Margaret (1848–57); William (b.1850); and Andrew (1853–1902), who married Jane Murray and worked as a groom and caretaker in Northumberland. The unnamed child baptised to a James in 1838 could be his. James (19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Jean Marr and their daughter Jane was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1844. James (19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Jane Miller in 1839, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes; their daughter Elizabeth (b.1842) was baptised in Hawick. James (19th C.) married Margaret Miller in Hawick in 1842. Their son Thomas (b.1844) was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. James (b.1827/8) recorded as farm overseer at Deanbrae in 1851. James (d.1874) Church Officer for Hawick Free Kirk from 1855 until his death. He may be the James whose version of 'Pawkie Paiterson' was recorded in 1873 in Frank Hogg's Transactions article on old songs. John (15th/16th C.) Chaplain of Hawick, who was witness to the 1519/20 marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and James Gledstains. He is recorded as 'Schir Johnne Hardy, chaplane' and was listed after the Chaplain, William Cunningham. Since he was designated 'sir', he must not have had a Masters degree, and was presumably an assistant to Cunningham. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet 'English' (probably Inglis) and their children included: William (b.1650); John (b.1653); and Jean (b.1656). The witnesses in 1656 were William and Adam Elliot. John (17th C.) maltman in Hawick. In 1666 his servant George Irvine was fined for cutting divots at Myreslawgreen. He was recorded as a maltman in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for John Simpson in 1673. John (17th C.) farmer of lands adjacent to Southfield. In 1677 John Scott at Southfield was fined 'for abusing the marches of Hawicke marching betuixt' his lands and Southfield. He is mentioned in the Burgh Records in 1686 when 2 new marchers of the boundaries within the town were appointed; he was stated to have been a former marcher, along with William Purdom and William Paisley. He may be the same John who was resident on the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694, paying tax for 3 hearths. He may be the John whose son was the 'younger' recorded in the 1690s. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for

John Elliot of Brugh in 1675. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Brown and their children included William (b.1672) and Agnes (b.1675). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Wright and their children included Margaret (b.1673), Helen (b.1674), Isobel (b.1677), Marion (b.1679), Jane (b.1685) and Agnes (b.1686). John (b.1690) may also have been his child. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as a 'student' in 1680 when he witnessed a baptism for William Hardie. John (17th/18th C.) listed among the 'Cottars in Hassanden' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is surely related to the 'James Hardis', who is also listed there. He may be the John who witnessed baptisms for Dand Elliot in Robertson in 1681, another for George Davidson in 1687 and one for Adam Craig in 1688. John (1668/9–1731) carrier in Hawick, son of carrier Walter. In 1693 he was fined for 'ane most egregious ryott committ by him upon the Sabbathday on Steven Greenshiells' by pushing him out of his seat in the Loft of St. Mary's, as well as pulling on his bonnet. He was recorded as a carrier when he witnessed baptisms in 1707 for fellow carrier William Aitken, younger, in 1708 for Robert Lamb (along with carrier James Aitken) and in 1718 for carrier William Aitken. He was listed as a 'Tenent' in 1725. He married Isabel Aitken, who died in 1739, aged 53; she was probably the eldest daughter of carrier William Aitken. Their children included: Bessie (b.1707); Margaret (b.1709); Agnes (b.1712); Helen (b.1713); John (again, b.1716); Robert (b.1719); William (b.1722); John (b.1725); and 2 unnamed children (according to the gravestone). The witnesses in 1709 were John and William Gardner, in 1712 were merchant William Gardner and James Aitken 'duke younger' and in 1725 were mason Andrew Turnbull (married to Margaret Aitken) and tenant James Richardson (married Bessie Aitken). The family are buried in St. Mary's along with the family of Bailie Robert, who must have been closely related (perhaps his brother). John (17th/18th C.) 'younger, maltman' in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was 'John Hardie younger' of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Since he was John younger, he was probably son of the maltman John recorded in the 1660s and 70s. He may have been the John Hardie, junior, maltman, who was uncle of Mary, wife of William Wilson ('Whusky Wullie'), and hence had an only daughter, Agnes. He was 'maltman' in 1718 when he witnessed a baptism for flesher George Renwick. John (b.1679) son of Patrick and Janet Scott. He was a tailor in Hawick. Probably the same John was involved in some financial dealings with Walter Ruecastle in 1693, in connection with which Ruecastle assaulted the Bailie of Regality, William Scott. He may be the merchant who (along with meal-maker William, who was probably related) witnessed a baptism for fisher John Chain in Hawick in 1703. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for tailor James Cowan in 1707. In 1722 he was listed as 'tenent in Hawick'. In 1706 he married Isobel, daughter of William Aitkin. Along with his new father-in-law he was fined for holding a 'supernumerary marriage', i.e. having more guests than allowed by law. In fact the guests included the 2 Bailies, the Town Clerk, Scott of Horsleyhill and Dr. Scott. His children probably included: Bessie (b.1707); Agnes (b.1712); Helen (b.1713), who could be the Helen whose son Samuel was born in 1738, with 'Father Dead', or the Helen married to shoemaker Andrew Scott; Agnes (again, b.1716); Robert (b.1719); William (b.1722); and John (b.1725). In the record for the 1707 baptism he is stated to be brother to 'Bailie Hardie', which presumably meant Robert; the witnesses were tailor James Cowan and James 'Duke' Aitken (who may have been related to his wife). The witnesses in 1722 were 'Tacksman' George Scott and James Aitkin 'Duke younger'. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son Adam was baptised in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1710 and 1711, but was not elected. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptism in 1710 for Robert Clerk. He is recorded as merchant of Hawick in 1712 when he married Helen Cowan, servant to Widow Bell in Edinburgh. He was fined by the Hawick Bailies for his 'irregular marriage', which was performed in the Canon-gate by 'W. Selkirke'; this may have been William Selkirk, who was ousted in 1690 for being an Episcopalian, suggesting that either the bride or groom (or both) subscribed to this church. There are several Johns born in Hawick in the relevant period who could have been him, e.g. son of James and Jane in 1683, son of James and Bessie in 1689 or son of John in 1690. John (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1716. Bailie John (1722–1800) councillor and manufacturer. He was grandson of Bailie Robert, although it is unclear who his parents were. It is also said that he had a brother nicknamed 'Whether or No'. He is probably the weaver John who witnessed a baptism for gardener Alexander Donald in Hawick in 1757. He introduced stocking frames to Hawick in 1771, bringing 4 of them back from a business trip to Glasgow, and setting them up at 37 High Street (the screw of the first one in use is in the Museum's collection). This is usually considered as the beginning of hosiery manufacturing in the town. As a result Hardie is sometimes referred to as 'Father of the Hawick Knitwear Industry', although he only worked in the hosiery business for a few years. However, it is said that people taught in his stocking-shop were transplanted to Wooler, Kelso, Jedburgh, Langholm, Melrose, Selkirk and elsewhere. There is a single example of his business records in the Museum. He was listed as a merchant when he witnessed baptisms in 1766 for Adam Pott and in 1767 for George Waldie. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was later accused of accepting a bribe in order to facilitate the Division of the Common. In 1771 he was paid by the Council for a bottle of wine when he carried out business with agents of the Duke of Buccleuch. In a description of Hawick's trade in about 1777 he is said to have had 4 frames for making stockings, with James Halden being the only other stocking manufacturer in Town, with 2 frames. He made on average 2400 pairs of stockings per year, but gave up 'in consequence of family distress', with John Nixon effectively taking over from him. In 1781, 1785, 1787 and 1789 he witnessed baptisms for William Roger. He is probably the John who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick most years in the period 1785–92 (listed as 'Merchant' some years). In 1787 and 1789–91 he paid tax for having a female servant. He owned land in several places around the town, for example being described as 'portioner of Weensland' in 1787; he was listed as owner of land valued at £36 5s 8d (purchased from the Scotts of Horsleyhill) in 1788 and still listed as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although deceased by then); this land was later split between Mrs. Watson of Wilton Bank and Thomas Lindsay Watson. He was Bailie almost continuously from 1771–1800, being chosen more often as Magistrate than anyone else of his time (although at the end of 1772 and in 1774 he was 'late Bailie'). In 1790 he stopped the rebel Cornet's cavalcade from going out past the West Port (immortalised in the unofficial 'shairny paidle' verse of 'Teribus'), felling the first of the rebel cavalcade. This allowed the elected Cornet and his party to proceed unmoled to the Moor, and hence the Common Riding passed without violence. He was known for his quick temper and for his upstanding and fearless manner. It is said that boys used to detour around the Cross so as to avoid his castigation as he leaned over his shop half-door. A story is told (by Robert Wilson) of how he was instructed by his doctor to go to Berwick to bathe in the sea a dozen or so times, which he did over only a couple of days, returning to his shop 3 days later and saying to his physician 'And did ye imagine, Doctor, that I was to stay in Berwick ten or twal days? – ye ken that was impossible'. Another story tells how he surprised a supposedly dumb 'spaeman' in order to make him cry out and expose himself as a swindler; he was thereafter said to be able to make the dumb speak! Part of the dialogue from one of his court cases is preserved. He married Janet Elliot, and she died in 1760, aged 34. Their children included Margaret (b.1757). He secondly, in 1762, married Rebecca, daughter of George Swan; she died in 1809, aged 68. He had further children, including: John (b.1763); Rebecca (b.1764); Janet (b.1765); George (b.1766); Robert (b.1767); Rebecca (again, b.1768); John (again, 1769–82); Janet (again, b.1772); George Ann (perhaps 2 separate children, b.1774); and William (b.1776). It is worth noting that his wife had her first 7 babies at roughly yearly intervals, which is an unusually high rate. The witnesses in 1763 were James Henderson and William Elliot, in 1764 were weaver George Swan (probably his father-in-law) and Church Officer Alexander Bunnan, in 1772 were Bailie (probably William again) Elliot and George Turnbull (perhaps his brother-in-law), and in 1774 were John Scott of Whitehaugh and George Turnbull (again). He was sitting Bailie in 1777 when he witnessed a baptism for George Turnbull and Isobel Hardie (perhaps his daughter) and another for Betty Hardie (perhaps also his daughter) and a man called Little. He witnessed a baptism for John Crosbie and Janet Hardie (probably his daughter) in 1796. His death in Hawick is recorded in 1800, where he is 'late merchant'. The family gravestone records that 16 children in all are interred there (presumably they mostly died young). He is buried in St. Mary's Cemetery, and in 1933 the Callants' Club erected a bronze plaque at 37 High Street (near the Cross), where he lived. He was the last local male descendant of a long line of Hardies. John (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. He was listed along with Robert as a carrier in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls when he had 5 work horses. Both he and Robert paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–1791. His servant Robert Govenlock was listed among men balloted for the Militia in 1797. His son James died in 1804, an unnamed child of his in 1808 and his son John in 1809 (unless these are from a later generation); in 1804 he is described as ‘Edinr. Carrier’. He is probably the John, who married Helen Scott in 1751, the marriage being recorded in Bedrule Parish, and whose children included: James (b.1759); Elizabeth (b.1761); John (b.1763); and an unnamed child (b.1768). The witnesses in 1763 were Robert Hardie (perhaps his brother) and George Scott (probably related to his wife), and in 1768 were carrier Thomas Thomson and weaver George Turnbull. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Knox and their children included: John (b.1796); and James (b.1798). The witnesses in 1798 were Robert Hardie (presumably a relative) and James Kyle. John (b.c.1775) shoemaker at Netherrow according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. On the 1801 ballot he was a shoemaker at Bellshields. Probably the same John was a boot and shoe maker in Newcastle-ton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was at about 22 North Hermitage Street. His wife was Agnes and they had a son, Robert. By 1851 he was receiving parish relief. He is probably the John who married Agnes Swan, and whose children, baptised in Castleton Parish, included Margaret (b.1800), Thomas (b.1802), William (b.1805), John (b.1809), James (b.1811), Esther (b.1813) and Agnes (b.1815). John (1815–91) son of William and Violet Douglas. He was teacher at the small school at Burnmouth, south of Newcastle-ton in the 1860s. In 1849 he married Mary Fleming in Castleton; she died in 1850, aged 28. By 1861 he was a widower at ‘Under Burnmouth School House’, living with his father William and his daughter Janet. John (19th C.) married Fanny Scott in Hawick in 1837. John (19th C.) married Deborah Butler in Hawick in 1843. John Mungo Wilson (1920–98) descendant of Bailie Robert, he presented the Drums and Fifes with 3 new drums in 1980 in commemoration of his great-grandfather Oliver’s Cornetship 150 years earlier. He was presented with one of the old drums in return. He worked in the oil industry, and was a life member of the Archæological Society. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Margaret Hunter (1801–44) daughter of Rev. Thomas Samuel and grand-niece of Rev. Charters of Wilton. She was ‘Miss Hardie, Wilton Manse’ in 1825 when she subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. She married Rev. Joseph Thomson of Ednam. Mary (1717–96) wife of William Wilson, ‘Whusky Wullie’ (1713–91). She was one of 8 children, her siblings being: Janet (b.1712); Robert (b.1714); John (b.1719); Agnes (b.1720); John (again, b.1723); Christian (b.1725); and Janet (again, b.1729). When she married in 1737 she may have been the only surviving child. Her uncle was John, junior, maltman, and she was distantly related to Bailie John Hardie. Ninion (19th C.) married Jessie Cairns in Hawick in 1853. Oliver (b.1800/1) Cornet in 1830, he lived at the foot of the Kirk Wynd and farmed at the Wellogate. In 1861 he was at 13 Kirkwynd and recorded as a farmer of 44 acres. He was also a church warden at St. Cuthbert’s. He married Margaret Hogg and their children included Mary (b.1833), John (b.1835), James (b.1839), Robert (b.1841) and John H. He was probably related to shoemaker James, who lived next door. Oliver (19th/20th C.) grocer on Silver Street, along with his brother Thomas Mason. They acquired the business of James Laing after his death. Along with his brother ‘T.M.’ they presented a new set of drums and fifes to the town in 1930, in commemoration of their grandfather’s Cornetship of 1830. He lived at 10 Wilton Hill Terrace. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Ormiston (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Cummings in Hawick in 1852 and their children included Agnes Ritchie (b.1854). Patrick (15th C.) resident of Linton. In 1493, along with James in Grahamslaw, he had remission for several crimes, including theft of 60 sheep from Wilton and arson there, as well as theft of 2 oxen from Robert Elliot. His surety was Andrew, son of James Ker. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Patrick Harde’ as a witness to a charter of David Scott of Hassendean in 1510/11. Patrick (17th C.) carrier in Hawick listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He may be the same resident of the west-side of Hawick recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Parish. He married Janet Scott, who was served in 1667 as heir to her great-grandfather, Patrick Scott, surgeon in Hawick. Their children included: Robert (b.1670), who probably died young; Robert (again, 1672–c.1738), carrier in Hawick; James (b.1675); John (b.1679); and

Patrick (b.1682), cordiner in Hawick. It is said that the only sons who survived were Robert and Patrick (but this cannot be true if tailor John was also his son). Patrick (1682–c.1755) son of Patrick and Janet Scott. He was a cordiner (also referred to as shoemaker) in Hawick. His brother Robert was a carrier (but this may be meant for ‘cordiner’) in Hawick and died in about 1738. In 1735 he purchased a property on the west side of the Howegate that had previously belonged to Robert Scott of Falnash. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for carrier John Simpson. In 1711 he married Agnes Hardie, only daughter of maltman John, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes; it is unclear if they were cousins or otherwise distantly related. Their only surviving child was Mary (1717–96), who married William Wilson, ‘Whusky Wullie’, Burgh Procurator Fiascal. They also had children Janet (b.1712), Robert (b.1714), John (b.1719), Agnes (b.1720), John (again, b.1723), Christian (b.1725) and Janet (b.1729). The witnesses in 1712 were fleshers Robert and George Renwick, in 1714 were carrier John Simpson and shoemaker Robert Allan, in 1725 were Robert Hardie (probably his brother) and James Simpson, and in 1729 were Robert Hardie (again) and John Telfer. Peter (18th C.) married Mary Rutherford in Bedrule Parish in 1722. Peter (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His unnamed child was baptised in 1742. Richard (17th C.) wright recorded as ‘Ritchie Hardie’ in 1644 when he was one of the men who appraised horses in Hawick for the Covenanter army. He is probably the Richard, married to Margaret Leyden, whose daughter Isabel was baptised in Hawick in 1636. Richard (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, probably the son of Samuel baptised in 1731. He married Jean Beattie in 1756. Their children included: Helen (b.1760); Janet (b.1762); Betty (b.1766); Janet (again, b.1770); and Jane (b.1772–81). The witnesses in 1766 were smiths James and Robert Beattie (who were surely related to his wife) and in 1772 were the whole congregation. Robert (17th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1683 his daughter Isabel was injured when she was watching linen clothing that were bleaching and a group of men threw stones across the Teviot. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Margaret (b.1670); Bessie (b.1676); and Agnes (b.1681). The witnesses in 1676 were Walter Purdom and James Scott (perhaps the Bailies with those names). He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Brydon in 1676 and another for John Glendinning and Janet Riddell in 1678. He may be the Robert who was fined in 1657 for insulting Walter Purdom and James Thorbrand, Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso, as well as calling the Burgh Officers ‘men-sworn lowns’. Bailie Robert (1661/2–1718) Hawick merchant, who was Magistrate in at least 1701 and 1702. In 1699 he and Patrick Richardson petitioned for Hawick to be relieved from the ‘freedom of trade’ tax. In 1702 he and George Martin were listed as Bailies when they witnessed a baptism for tailor John Scott. In 1703 he and his wife were rebuked by the Kirk Session for making a disturbance at the wedding of his wife’s brother William Oliver (to Christian Hart). In 1704 he witnessed baptisms for tailor John Scott and for baxter Walter Boyd. He is recorded in 1705 as intermediary in a disputed bill between Gideon Scott of Highchester, William Little of Hassendean Townhead and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was Senior Bailie in 1706 when the Cornet-Elect (Thomas Hardie, presumably not a close relative) refused to carry the decrepit flag; he took over the duties, carrying it out of town, while the Junior Bailie carried it back, and they appointed others to carry it at the Moor. Also in 1706 he was severely insulted by John Binnie, previous Bailie, who was then fined and barred from being on the Council in future. In 1707 his brother John had a child baptised; this suggests he was son of Patrick. He was still on the Town Council in 1707 (when a fine was imposed on the 2 acting Bailies) and was Bailie at the 1709 Common Riding. Along with Bailie James Burn he witnessed a baptism in 1709 for wigmaker John Scott. In 1710 he was stated to be one of the men given a key to the Charter Chest. He was also one of the Bailies in 1710, when the weavers resolved to settle their arguments over seating order in their loft in St. Mary’s. Also in 1710 he was witness for baptisms for wright Andrew Winthrop and fleshier Robert Leadhouse. He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed further baptisms for shoemaker Robert Porteous in 1711 and for Town Herd Adam Hobkirk and for John Chisholme ‘Laird’ and for candlemaker George Turnbull and for shoemaker Robert Porteous in 1713. He was described as ‘present Bailie’ in a marriage record in Edinburgh in 1716. He is probably the Robert who was listed ‘eist the water' in Hawick in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 and the merchant listed among those who subscribed to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He married Margaret Oliver, who was sister of merchant William Oliver, and related to 'Auld Cash'; one of their grandsons was Bailie John. Their children included: Walter (b.1689); Margaret, who married baker Robert Simpson in Edinburgh in 1716; John (b.1701); Marion (b.1703); Archibald (b.1704); Elizabeth (b.1706); Alison (b.1707); Christian (b.1709); and Ann (b.1711). William (b.1717), with no mother's name given, may also be his child. His wife apparently died in 1719, aged 61 (but this would surely have made her too old to have still been having children in 1711). The witnesses in 1689 were schoolmaster John Purdom and Walter Hume, in 1706 were Bailie John Binnie and baxter John Whillans and in 1709 were merchant William Oliver and baxter John Whillans. He was buried in St. Mary's, where the family tombstone has been kept. Robert (17th/18th C.) cordiner in Hawick. He could be the son of Patrick baptised in 1672, if 'carrier' is an error for 'cordiner'. In 1702 he was fined 'for being in drinke, and rambling under cloud of night, in company with ane vagabond woman'. A couple of months later he was fined again for 'going through the town, under the cloud of night, being in drinke, disguised in women's apparell, qrbly he terrified and afrighted sevearl persons'. He is probably the son of Patrick and only brother of cordiner Patrick, who died in about 1738 without issue. He may be the Robert recorded in 1698 when court proceedings were continued against him, while it was established whether the arrest was made by 'the town or regall officer'. He is probably the 'tenant' Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1725 and 1728 for shoemaker Patrick (probably his brother). He could be the Robert whose daughter Mary married Michael Jolly in 1728. He is probably the shoemaker who married Barbara Brown and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Gideon (b.1703); the baptismal witnesses were merchant Walter Oliver and glover John Hart. Mary (b.1701) may also have been his child. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Storie in Bedrule Parish in 1694. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Janet Armstrong in 1703, both being from Hawick Parish. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. He may be related to the earlier cooper of the same name. In 1712 he witnessed a baptism for weaver George Wight and in 1720 another for Robert Rutherford. Robert (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Adam Kersel. In 1746 (along with merchant James) he witnessed a baptism for weaver Joseph Carruthers and Bessy Hardie; it seems likely that he was related to both James and Bessie. In 1721 he married Isobel, daughter of gardener John Tait. Their children included: Isobell (b.1723), who probably married carrier Thomas Thomson; Robert (b.1725); John (b.1726); Barbara (b.1728); James (b.1730); and Janet (b.1735). The witnesses in 1723 were weavers Andrew Jardine and Robert Turnbull, in 1726 were mason John Turnbull and weaver Andrew Jardine and in 1728 were James Anderson (Rector of the Grammar School) and Bailie John Scott. In 1759 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Thomson and Isabel Hardie (probably his daughter). Robert (18th C.) listed as a house servant at Midshiels in 1791, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. Robert (18th/19th C.) listed along with John as a carrier in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. The same 2 men paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785-91. They may have both been sons of the earlier flesher Robert. His daughter Nellie died in 1819. They are probably the Robert and John (in that order) who witnessed baptisms for John Douglas and Isobel Hardie (perhaps his daughter) in 1793 and 1795. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John in 1763. He could be the Robert who married Christian Lyon in Kirkton Parish in 1749 and whose children (baptised in Hawick) included Agnes (b.1756), Robert (b.1759), James (b.1761) and Robert (again, b.1765). Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Betty Wilson. Their daughter Euphan was baptised in 1782. Robert (18th C.) married Helen Kerr in Hawick in 1781. Their children included: Helen (b.1784); John (b.1786); George (b.1788); Robert (b.1791); Isabel (b.1794); and James (b.1798). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John in Hawick in 1798. Robert (d.bef. 1808) Hawick resident. His son James was a weaver whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1808. He could be the Robert who, along with James, witnessed a baptism for William in 1764. Robert (d.bef. 1809) flesher in Hawick, possibly son of the earlier Robert. In 1809 his son William died. Robert (b.c.1775) handloom weaver, born outside Roxburghshire. In 1841 he was living at Lynnwood Cottages with Barbara, probably his daughter. Robert (b.1791/2) farmer at Sorbie in Ewesdale. He was there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included David (who was later overseer of the farm), Henry, Margaret, Walter, James, Janet, Isabella, Robert and John. Robert (b.c.1795) labourer in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Round Close, in 1851 at Haysike and in 1861 at Newmill (by which time he was 'Pauper Formerly Ag. Lab. and Blind'). He married Joan (or Jean) Lunn in 1839, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Robertson Parishes. Their children included Robert (b.1820/1), Betty (b.1828/9), Catherine (b.1833/4) and James (b.1841/2). Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Miller and their children included Jane (b.1825) and Catherine (b.1833). Rev. Dr. Robert (1808–37) born in Hawick, son of farmer John. He attended St. Andrews University 1822–3, then Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. He became Professor of Rhetoric at Anderson's College, Glasgow. He is probably the same Rev. Robert, LL.D. whose letter written on a voyage from Glasgow to Georgetown in 1837 has been published and is in the National Archives. He was appointed minister of St. Catherine's, British Guiana, but must have died shortly afterwards. A portrait of him exists. Robert (19th C.) framework knitter in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at 3 Melgund Place and in 1861 at 6 O'Connell Street. He married Elizabeth Taylor (from Wilton), the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Bedrule Parishes. Their children, at least 3 baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: Helen (b.1841), baptised in Bedrule; Janet (b.1843); James (b.1845); Margaret Taylor (b.1847); Agnes Scott (b.1850); Jane Brodie (b.1853); and David T. (b.1858/9). Robert (19th C.) married Jane Davidson in 1848, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Samuel (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Helen Hardie. Their children included Richard (b.1731) and Thomas (b.1735). In 1738 Helen's son Samuel was baptised, with his name not given, with one possibility being that he was deceased by then. Samuel (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He could be the Samuel baptised in Hawick in 1738, son of Helen. Thomas (17th C.) married Bessie Runciman in Robertson Parish in 1687, probably in the former Hassendean Parish. She was probably sister of Helen and Walter, who were married shortly before her in Robertson. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Runciman (probably his brother-in-law). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the

1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Thomas whose daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers in 1694. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Janet Buckholm in Bedrule Parish in 1691. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is listed as a merchant among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He (or perhaps his son) was probably the Thomas who was elected Cornet in 1706, but refused to carry the flag due to its decrepit condition. This led to near riots, with the Bailies taking over the responsibility, and the Council supplying a new flag for the following year. He was fined ten groats for his absence from the Common Riding and £20 for refusing to carry the Colour. He witnessed baptisms in 1707 for wigmaker Richard Miles, in 1711 for workman Adam Sanderson, in 1712 for William Miller and in 1714 for James Dickson. He is probably the Thomas who was an elder of Hawick Kirk, recorded in 1717 being appointed to collect monies from 'Hilhouland, Weensland, and Weensland milne', suggesting he lived in this area. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Gardner in 1718. In 1722 he was still an Elder, assigned to collect monies from the east end of the Town. He witnessed a baptism for workman James Dickson in 1723. He could be the Thomas, described as tenant in Hawick, who married Jean Irwin (or 'Virran') in 1711, and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Helen (b.1712); Janet (b.1715); James (b.1718); Bessie (b.1721); and Barbara (b.1725), who was born posthumously. The witnesses in 1725 were Robert Huntly and Bailie Walter Purdom. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Calfield in Wilton Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1709. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish who married Esther Armstrong. Their children included: James (b.1770); Helen (b.1773); John (b.1774); 'Johan' (b.1775); William (b.1779); and Helen (again, b.1782). Rev. Dr. Thomas Samuel (d.1810) son of James of the Customs House in Leith, and nephew of Dr. Charters of Wilton (his mother being Jean). He was educated at Edinburgh University, was licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1794 and ordained in 1796 as the Chaplain to the 7th Fencibles. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish in late 1797 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto and became minister at Ashkirk in 1798. He obtained a doctorate from Edinburgh University in 1805. He was described as knowledgeable, compassionate, charitable and modest. His voice was apparently rather feeble, but he was nevertheless said to be 'in the first class of Scottish preachers'. He could be the Rev. Hardie who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1797 and 1803. He was recorded making efforts to distribute cheap grain to parishioners in 1799. In 1800 he married Jean (or Jane) Colville (who died in 1816), daughter of the minister of Ormiston. Their children included: Margaret Hunter (1801–44), who married Rev. Joseph Thomson of Ednam, previously of Teviothead; James (b.1803); Jane Charters (1805–21); and Thomas Samuel (b.1810). In 1805 in Hawick he published a collection of exercises for schools, 'Extracts for the use of parish schools', which ran to 3 editions. His 'Sermons' were also published in Hawick in 1811 (edited by his uncle, Dr. Charters), and a manuscript copy was presented to the Museum by John Scott of Rodono in 1863. Thomas (19th C.) married Janet Ritchie. Their son Ormiston was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1830. Walter see Wat Hardie. Walter (17th C.) described in 1686 as a 'traveller' (i.e. a 'carrier') when he was fined for 'speiking reprochfullie of the Minister of the toune before William Layng one of the present Baylyeas'. This was Rev. John Langlands, who was an Episcopalian, this being just before the Revolution. His son John was fined in 1693 for fighting in the Kirk. His wife was probably Janet Grieve, and their son John was baptised in Hawick in 1671. He may be the Walter who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He may be the Walter who Falnash (probably Gideon Scott) confessed to striking in 1677, when he was punished by the Hawick Bailies. He is probably also the Walter for was fined in 1678 for saying that Walter Scott of West Port 'would be hanged'. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for James Hardie in 1682. Walter (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for wright John Pringle. William (17th C.) described as a 'cowpar' (i.e. cooper) in a case in the Burgh Court of 1642 when he was fined, along with James Tudhope and Adam Martin on account of their livestock eating Gilbert Watt's oats. He may be the William who married Bessie Scott in Hawick in 1638 and whose children included Thomas (b.1638). However, there are several alternative Williams at about the same time. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Inglis and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1641. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Manie Leyden and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1648. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Rennaldson and their children included: John (b.1644); Janet (b.1646); George (b.1651); and George (again, b.1654). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Hardie. Their children included: Isobel (b.1648); William (b.1654); and James (b.1657). William (17th C.) 'tacksman of the customs' for the Earl of Queensberry in Hawick in 1673. That year there was a major disturbance when the agents of the Early tried to 'ride the fair', with him being imprisoned in the Tolbooth. The Hawick Bailies claimed that he had tried to extract 'more than the usual custom' from the market and refused to discuss this with them. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Scroggie. Their daughter isobel was baptised in 1680. William (17th C.) listed among the 'Deficients in Hauick Parich' in 1694. He appears to be at 'The Tour of Hauick'. Perhaps the same William (along with Henry, perhaps his brother) is recorded in 1683 when he was among a group of men fined for throwing stones across the Teviot at night, injuring a couple of women who were watching their linens, and damaging the clothes being bleached there by James Brydon. William (17th/18th C.) mealmaker in Hawick. He was probably a member of the Hawick Council; in 1701 he was one of those appointed to collect the 'stent' in the area 'east the water'. Presumably the same William is described as 'mealmaker' in 1703 when (along with merchant John) he witnessed a baptism for John Chain and in 1705 when he was appointed to collect another 'stent' for putting lead on the steeple of St. Mary's. He could have been one of the farmers of the West-end. He could be the William who married Janet Scroggie and whose daughter Isobel was baptised in 1680 (with student John as one of the witnesses). He may be the same William mentioned in a case of 1685 when William Purdom was charged with abusing him and one of the Bailies. He may be the William, son of John and 'Jenet English' born in Hawick in 1654 (their second son of that name) or the William born to James and Isobel Huntly in 1657. He may be father of the Janet baptised to William in Hawick in 1692. William (17th/18th C.) maltman in Hawick. He married Bessie Scott in 1713 and their children included: John (b.1714); an unnamed child (b.1716); and James (b.1720). The witnesses in 1720 were cooper John Aitken and Beadle John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Acreknowe. His daughter Janet was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1718. He is probably the William who got married in 1717 in Kirkton, with no bride's name recorded. Perhaps the same William had sons George (b.1720) and Hugh (b.1727) baptised in Cavers Parish. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel 'Howtson' and their son Robert was baptised in 1720. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Janet (b.1718) and George (b.1723). William (17th/18th C.) maltman in Hawick. In 1724 he married Christian Lookup, who was also from Hawick. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Somerville and their son Patrick was baptised in 1743. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Elizabeth Turnbull. Their children included: Betty (b.1745); Ann (b.1759); John (b.1761); and Christian (b.1769), although this was 24 years after the first child. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1760 he witnessed a baptism for blacksmith Robert Young. He could also be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1777 for Betty Hardie and a man named Little; Bailie John Hardie was the other witness, suggesting they were brothers or some other close relation. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Janet Scott. Their children included: Agnes (b.1764). William (18th/19th C.) Hawick butcher. He is listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, before carriers Robert and John, and so may have been closely related. He married Janet Scott in 1763 and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1764. The witnesses were Robert and James, who were surely closely related. He could be the William 'Caddan' (the meaning of which is unclear) who died in 1809, son of flesher Robert. He could be the William, son of John, who was born in about 1722 and had brothers Robert and John. William (18th C.) married Jane Storey in Hawick in 1789. William (b.c.1770s) tailor at Hartsgarth according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. William (1779–1861) son of Thomas and Esther Armstrong, he was an agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He was a labourer at Shaws on the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. He was listed among heads of households 1835–41, living at Brighouse and Dinlabyre; there was also a younger William in the Parish at that time, at Hudshouse. In 1851 he was at about 9 Doncaster Street in Newcastleton and in 1861 he was living with his son John at Burnmouth Schoolhouse. He married Violet, daughter of James Douglas, who died in 1856, aged 69. Their children included: Thomas (b.1811); James (1813–91), also a labourer in Castleton; John (1815–91), schoolmaster; Walter (1817–82), a labourer in Newcastleton; Christian (b.1819), who died young; Esther (b.1822), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (or Betty, 1822–1900), who married William Telfer, grocer in Edinburgh; Christian (1826–54); William (1829–1916), who moved to Edinburgh; Kitty, who married Walter Ketchin; Esther (b.1831); and Matthew (b.1834). He died at Burnmouth Schoolhouse, where his son John was teacher. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Jean (or Jane) Purdom in Southdean in 1820 and their children included: Isabella (b.1820); Mary (b.1825); Anne (b.1828); and William (b.1830). William (19th C.) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish, perhaps the son of John and Agnes Swan baptised in 1805. In 1841 he was living at Hudshouse. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Inglis and their children included: John (b.1829); Betty (b.1831); Matthew (b.1834); Agnes (b.1835); William (b.1837); Thomas (b.1839); Archibald Scott (b.1842); Margaret (b.1844); Janet Stavert (b.1846); and James (b.1847). William (1829–1916) son of William and Violet Douglas, he was born in Castleton Parish. He moved to Edinburgh and worked as a railway porter. In 1870 he married Mary Knox and their children were Isabella and Violet (often spelled 'Hardy' in older records).

Hardie's Byre

Hardie's Hill

Hardie's Byre (hawr-deez-bī-ur) n. barn once near the top of the Loan, where the Hardie family farmed – 'Up the Loan they went like fire, Till they came to Hardie's byre ...' [T].

Hardie's Hill (hawr-deez-hil) n. hilly area near Crowbyres, named after the Hardie family who farmed there for generations. It reaches a height of 211 m and has a triangulation pillar. It is sometimes known in the plural as 'Hardie's Hills'. The hollow (presumably to the south-west of the summit) was said to be where Hawick's inhabitants hid when the English attacked the town. It was sometimes called 'Auld Hawick' (although how much this idea was invented in the era of Victorian romance is unclear). Its slopes were the scene of the ceremonial sod-cutting for the Hawick-Carlisle railway in 1859. A stone ball found there is in the Museum – '... O' Hardie's high and rugged hill An auld historic spot' [GD], 'Tis sweet to see the gloamin' grey Creep o'er the grassy fell, And mark the sunbeams gowden ray Light up old Hardie's Hill' [JT], 'Here Hardie's Hills in rugged beauty rise, With knowes and hollows interspersed between ...' [JCG], 'And saw the sun o' Easter Heeze up and lowe until It kinnled till a burnin' buss The thorns on Hardie's Hill' [DH].

Hardie's Knowes (hawr-deez-nowz) n. hilly area near Chesters. An ancient kiln was discovered there, perhaps in the mid-19th century.

hardiess (har-dee-es) n., arch. boldness, temerity – '...I haue taine the hardiess heirby till visy zou in my auin absence ...' [SB1584].

Hardisike (har-dee-sik) n. Thomas (18th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for James Douglas. His name may be an error for some other surname.

Hardlee (hawrd-lee) n. former farmstead near the head of the Hyndlee Burn to the east of the Note o the Gate. Some of the sheppfolds there are said to have been made from the stones of the Hare Cairn. Francis Cavers was shepherd there in 1861. 'Hardlee Flow' is marked there on the modern Ordnance Survey map, in the depths of Wauchope Forest.

hards (hawrdz) n., pl., arch. coarse fibres of flax left over from 'heckling' and often used to make sack-cloth.

hard up (hawrd-up) adj. in poor health – 'Then, take my word, ye're 'gey-hard-up', For the symptons never lie ...' [DH], 'Aw veesited her in the Cottage, bit she was guy hard up', '...An hard up means oo erni weel, An no josit short o cash' [IWL] (also written 'hard-up'; not usually used to indicate lack of money, E.C. Smith describes it as 'a misleading idiom').

hard-up gentry (hawrd-up-jen-tree) n., arch. the poor upper class – 'Hard-up gentry = impecunious snobs' [ECS].

Hardway (hawrd-wā) n. former name for lands in the Ewes valley. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1506 and 1509/10. It is recorded along with Mossypaul, Fiddleton and other lands in 1535 when superiority of parts of Ewesdale were confirmed to George, Lord Home. It is also listed as part of the Lordship of Ewesdale in about 1610. The lands were listed as 'Hordway' in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale (it is 'Hardvy' in 1506).

Hardy see Hardie

the Hare Cairn (thu-hār-kārn) n. former ancient cairn which stood on the farm of Hyndlee in the headwaters of the Rule, now deep within the forest. It was close to the Wheel Causeway, near the shepherd's cottage that was built later, the area called Swirefoot. The cairn was quite extensive, and said to have covered about an eighth of an acre. It was dismantled to build some sheepfolds and walls, and there was already no sign of it by 1859, although 2 burial cists were found beneath it. It is said that there was a slab bearing a carving of a leaf-shaped sword and cavities, which was sent to Abbotsford (also called 'Haer Cairn').

the Hare an Hoonds (thu-hār-an-hoondz) n. hostelry at 60 High Street in the mid-19th century.

Harecairn Sike (hār-kārn-sik) n. small stream in the southern part of Hobkirk Parish, which runs into the Hyndlee Burn. Near the head of the burn used to be Hare Cairn. The Ordnance Survey Name Book (in 1859) notes that although no trace of it survived, 2 cists had been found there. It lay on the path of part of an old road identified with the Wheel Causeway.

Hare Cleuch (hār-klooch) n. small stream to the west of Penchrise farm. There was a rifle range near here for Stobs Camp.

Harecleuchheid (hār-klooch-heed) n. Harecleuchhead, former farmstead between Troutlawford and Penchrise, near the head of the Hare Cleuch. Labourer Thomas Douglas and family were there in 1841 and Edward Barton was shepherd there in 1861. A drove road used to pass near here (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hare Grain (hār-grān) n. small stream that rise on Pike Hill and flows roughly to the east to join the Lairhope Burn to the west of Lairhope.

Haregrain (hār-grān) n. former farmstead on the Hare Grain, to the north of Hislop, near the boundary between Teviothead and Robertson Parishes. Robert Laidlaw was there in 1709. When Margaret Scott married William Scott (in Hislop) in Hawick in 1728, she was said to be from 'Hairgrain'. By 1788 it was valued along with Falnash at £684, part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. The value was still the same in 1811. Hairgrain Edge is the south-eastern extension of Pike Hill near there (it is 'Hairgrain' in 1788).

Hareheid Hill (hār-heed-hil) n. Harehead Hill, north of Philiphaugh. It reaches a height of 324 m and contains a triangulation pillar.

Hare Hill (hār-hil) n. hill to the east of the B6399 just after Berryfell farm, being the southwestern spur of Berryfell Hill. On its western slopes, crossed by the road, are 2 linear earthworks of fairly narrow proportions. One of them may have had a drainage function, leading down into Carlin Hole. The area to the north is known as Little Hare Hill.

Harehope Sike (hā-rup-sīk) n. small stream that rises between Threep Head and Esdale Law and runs roughly northwards to join the Ale Water.

Harekamb (hār-kawm) n. former name for lands in the southern part of Lilliesleaf Parish. In the early 13th century a piece of Walter of Riddell's demesne lands below there were among those granted to Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how to pronounce the name, or what its modern equivalent might be (although it might be connected with Harelaw and Kames).

Harelaw (hār-law) n. farm between Lilliesleaf and Hassendean. A drove road used to pass here on its way to Groundstone and the Borthwick. This may also have shared part of its route with a Roman road, probably connecting Newstead with Raeburnfoot (although this is more speculative). James Turnbull was farmer there in 1851.

Harelaw (hār-law) n. name of an area right on the Border, east of Canonbie, site of the tower of Hector Armstrong in the late 16th century. There were also Grahams in this area in the 16th century. 'Andro Armstrang, callit Lang Andro, in the Hairlaw' is recorded in 1578/9. There was also a mill there. 'Harlaw' and 'Harlawwood' are listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663 (also 'Hairlaw', it is 'Harlawe' in 1583 and 'Harlaw' in 1663).

Harelawcleuch (hawr-law-klooch) n. name for a former farm in Jedforest. It is described as 3 steadings valued at £3 6 shillings in 1538 and 1539. In the Exchequer Rolls the comptroller was allowed the 'fermes' from 'Harlawcleuch Vestir' for the year of 1538. In 1541 Patrick Laidlaw, John Oliver and Richard Oliver were tenants in part of the farm, paying 33s 4d and John Laidlaw tenant in the other part, paying 11s 6d (it is 'Hairlawcleuch' in 1538 and 1539 and 'Harlawcleuch' in 1541).

Haremos (hār-mos) n. end of the main turnpike road through Hawick in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, established by the 'Scots-Dyke to Hare-moss Road Act' of 1764 (published 1770). It is on the A7 between Ashkirk and Selkirk, and marks the boundary of Roxburghshire with Selkirkshire. James Ruickbie was a toll-keeper here for a while. Haremos Loch is on the right-hand side of the A7, and the area is known as Hare and Dunhog Moss Nature Reserve.

Several arrow-heads, flint scrapers and other prehistoric implements have been found in the area. A television and radio mast was built here in the 1960s – 'Where ye will get a whisky soss To moistify your middle, For now nae langer at Haremos You'll hear auld Ruickbie's fiddle. By night or day' [JR] (also written 'Hare-moss').

hareshal-lippit (hār-shul-li-pee', -pi') adj., arch. hare-lipped, having a cleft lip (also hyirshal-lippit).

Hare Sike (hār-sīk) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley, running roughly to the south to meet the Borthwick just beyond Craik village. In the headwaters is a sheepfold, as well as another old enclosure, visible on aerial photographs.

Harestanes (hār-stānz) n. Regional Countryside Centre off the A68 near Ancrum. The mediaeval hospital known as Ancrum Spittal stood nearby, and was burned in 1545. The farm was developed as the Home Farm of Monteviot Estate in the early 19th century, with the present farmhouse being built in 1877, and converted to a visitor centre and craft workshops in 1979–80. It provides a centre for wildlife interpretation and a starting point for several nearby walks (the name is reputedly from ancient standing stones that once existed here).

Hargrave (hawr-grāv) n. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Nether Dykeraw according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. James (1798–1865) born at Chesters (in Southdean), son of Joseph and Jane Melrose. He was educated at the old school at Stouslie and also at Gala Academy. Upon graduation he was a schoolmaster himself at Midlem for a couple of years. In 1819 he emigrated to join other family members in Quebec, Canada and worked as a fur-trader for the Hudson's Bay Company for over 40 years. He started as a clerk in 1821 and finished as Chief Factor at the isolated York factory in Rupert's Land (in modern Manitoba) on Hudson Bay, retiring to Ontario. He married Letitia Mactavish and their children included Joseph James, Letitia Lockhart, Mary Jane and Dugald John. Much early correspondence of his still survives, some published in 'The Hargrave Correspondence' (1938) and others in 'The Letters of Letitia Hargrave' (1947).

Hargreaves (har-greevz) n. John (18th/19th C.) carrier who purchased premises at 16 Buccleuch Street in 1820, developing stables and a warehouse there. The property is labelled 'Mr. Hargreave' on Wood's 1824 map, and would later become the Grapes Inn. He is listed in 1825/6 running a service to 'Edinburgh and all part of the North', with Walter Jardine as agent. In about 1830 he was responsible for transporting 4 steam-powered looms from Manchester to Hawick. He is listed in Pigot's 1837 register with service to Carlisle, Edinburgh and the English north-west on Tuesdays and Fridays. He is probably the John whose heirs are recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick in about 1874.

Hargreaves' (har-greevz) n. firm of carriers in the 19th century. Before the coming of the railway, their wagon passed through Hawick twice a week each way, carrying goods between Edinburgh and London. They brought the first 4 power looms to Hawick from Manchester in 1830, the trip taking 3 weeks. They are listed as 'John Hargreaves, agent Walter Jardine' in Pigot's 1825 directory.

harigals (ha-ri-gulz) n., pl., arch. the entrails of a fowl, pluck, the intestines of a human, innerds, guts – 'Scots an Ingleesh in a fraineeshin, fidgin mad-keen ti teer the harrigals oot o other' [ECS] (also written 'harrigals').

Harkness see Herkness

harl (haw-rul) v., arch. to drag, haul, scrape, rake – 'While girnin' messins fought an' snarl'd, An' through the dirt their fellows harl'd' [JR], n., arch. the act of dragging, a tug – 'Then, with a harl, Out o' baith house and hal' they pack them, To the wide warl' [JR], a slattern, coarse person – 'Thou breeds baith mony a slut and harl, O' slander's nurse!' [JoHa].

harl (haw-rul) v. to roughcast, cover the walls of a building with a mixture of cement and gravel – 'the Howegate re-development involved harlin aa the hooses it the back', '... texture of harled walls accented by shadows cast by pebbles from oblique sunlight' [DH], n. the mixture applied during harling.

harl (haw-rul) n., poet. a slattern, slovenly person, particularly a woman – 'Thou art a scandal-raising carl, As e'er set foot into the warl'; Thou breeds baith mony a slut and harl ...' [JoHa].

the Harlequins (thu-hawr-lu-kwinz) n. full name of the Quins.

Harley (har-lee) n. Walter (b.1814/5) from Dalkeith, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1849 he married Joan Kersel, from Jedburgh. Their children included Robert, Adam and Joseph. In 1861 the family were living on Mather's Close.

harly (har-lee) adv. hardly – 'ee'd harly ken eet', 'she's harly the belle o the ball', '... an forbye, it was harly the waather for stressin' [ECS], 'Similarly, mang (= among), harly (= hardly), dwinglt (= lingered or tarried), etc., are preferred to 'mang', 'har'ly', 'dwing'lt', etc.' [ECS].

harn (hawrn) n., arch. a course form of course cloth – 'Given for Seven Ells of Harn for Little Joly's Serks, 18s' [PR] (short form of harden or hodden).

harness (hawr-nis) n., poet. gear, armour – 'But little harness had we there But auld Badrule had on a jack ...' [CPM].

harns (hawrnz) n., pl., arch. brains, intelligence – 'Was ne'er ane droon'd in Tarras, Nor yet in doot, For ere the heid can win doon, The harns are oot' [T].

Harper (har-pur) n. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Fletcher and their son John was baptised in 1728. Alexander (b.c.1770s) farmer at New Woll according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. In 1801 he was still at New Woll and listed as a son of John. Francis (b.c.1780) son of John, tenant at New Woll, according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was brother of Alexander and perhaps also John. John (17th C.) tenant in Fenwick who in 1684 appeared before the Privy Council for being a Covenanter and was banished. This was along with William Laing. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at New Woll. His sons Alexander and Francis were recorded at New Woll on the ballot for the Militia in 1801; slater John was also listed there and may have been another son. John (b.c.1780) slater at New Woll according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He was probably related to Alexander and Francis, who were also at New Woll at that time, and hence he may also have been a son of John. Perhaps the same John married Jane Hart and had children: Helen (b.1810) and Francis (b.1811) baptised in both Ashkirk and Ancrum; George (b.1813), Margaret (b.1815), John (b.1817), John (again, b.1819), Jane (b.1821), Alexander (b.1823), Mary (b.1825), James (b.1828) and Thomas (b.1830), baptised in Ancrum; and George (again, b.1814), baptised in Melrose (also written 'Harpur').

Harperhill (har-pur-hil) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers that once belonged to the 'hospitale de Rowle' (i.e. Spittal-on-Rule). An acre of arable land there was granted to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry (probably the same as Archibald of Falnash) by James Douglas of Cavers in 1554, along with the advowson of the chapel at Caerlenrig. In a following letter of reversion, Elliot agreed to pay 86 pounds Scots for the holding the land and patronage for 13 years. This acre was said to be 'super lie Harparhill' and be then occupied by William Storie. It is unclear whether the land was near Spittal-on-Rule or near Caerlenrig or elsewhere.

Harrison (haw-ree-sin) n. John (19th C.) resident of Teviothead Parish. In 1858 he married Joanna, daughter of Henry Elliot, tenant in Colterscleuch. Their children were: Ettie (b.1860); Margaret Charlton (1865–1935); John (b.1867); Henry (b.1869); Janette (b.1873); Walter Scott (1876–1944); and Elliot (b.1879). After the death of his sister-in-law Margaret in 1920, Margaret and Walter became joint tenants in Colterscleuch. Robert (18th C.) along with Robert Elliot of Fenwick, William Ogilvie of Hoscot and Thomas Watson ('writer' in Hawick) he proposed setting up a stillhouse and brewery in 1737. This may have become Hawick's first distillery and brewery on Slitrig Crescent, and he was probably one of the partners in the business. Since his surname is not locally common, he may have been brought in from elsewhere as an expert in this business. Walter Scott (19th/20th C.) joint tenant in Colterscleuch along with his sister Margaret Charlton. In 1920 they succeeded their aunt Margaret in the tenancy.

Harrot (haw-ri) n. former local pronunciation of Harwood, also used to refer to the Laird of Harwood in the Rule valley (it is marked thus on Stobie's 1770 map; also spelled 'Harret' and other variants).

Harrow (haw-rō) n. George (d.2011) baker in Hawick, proprietor of the Home Bakery on the Howegate.

the Harrow Inn (thū-haw-rō-in) n. inn run by James Ruickbie in the early part of the 19th century, on the ground floor of 12 High Street. It was a haunt of the local literati, including the Ettrick Shepherd among others. The motto on its signboard was 'Sow in Hope'. The neighbouring property was for a while the Ordnance Arms, and it may be that the name was for a period used for both. It may sometimes be confused with the 'Plough Inn', which was on the Sandbed. The site was redeveloped as part of the Royal Bank in 1857.

Harry's Well (haw-reez-wel) n. popular name for a well at Burnhead, so named because 'Harry o Burnheid' used to sit there.

Hart (har', her') n. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Jean Armstrong in Wilton in 1704. Their son Adam was baptised in 1704. Perhaps Bessie (b.1707) and Isabel (b.1710), baptised in Cavers Parish, were also his children. Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1733 he was in Deanbrae and in 1737 in Ormiston. He married Bessie Robson in Wilton in 1731. His children included: Christine (b.1733); George (b.1737); and James (b.1740). Adam (18th C.) married Mary Helm in Cavers Parish in 1752. Adam (18th C.) witnessed a baptism for James Dalglish (resident of Goldielands) in 1778. Perhaps the same Adam witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1772 for James Nichol and Christian Hart. He could be the Adam who married Janet Hislop in Wilton in 1770, with children Jean (b.1771) and Bessie (b.1774). Perhaps the same Adam married Margaret Tait in Wilton in 1775. Adam (b.1774) son of James and Helen Riddell, he was born in Wilton Parish. He may be the Adam, weaver at Lockiesedge recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; in 1799 he was still at Lockiesedge among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish'. He was still a weaver there in 1801. In 1841 he was farmer at 'Lower Lockies hedge'. He married Alison Turnbull in 1800. Their children included: James (b.1801), weaver; Walter (b.1805), also a weaver; Adam (b.1808); John (b.1813), coal merchant; and Helen (b.1816/7), who kept house for her unmarried brothers James and Walter at Lockiesedge. Adam (b.1808) son of Adam and Alison Turnbull. He was living at Greensidehall in 1851, with his wife Isabella and children Adam, William and Isabella. Adam (19th C.) Cornet in 1863 and Acting Father in 1889. He worked as a carter. He was a Town Councillor and strong supporter of the Common Riding and was Master of Ceremonies at Common Riding events through the 1890s. He was one of the Councillors who turned out at Common Ridings from the late 1880s, encouraging others to do the same. He can be seen riding near the head of the Procession in the 1899 film clip. He may be the Adam of Lockiesedge whose son George Turnbull was killed in the Boer War in 1900. In 1898 he was involved in a dispute with the Hawick Police Commissioners over payment for work at Wilton Hill and Bridge Street, which was settled in the Court of Session.

Later that year he was fined for threatening the Burgh Surveyor John Manuel on the Street, complaining that he had ruined him. Andrew (17th C.) maltman in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Andrew listed 'eist the water' among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He may be the Andrew who married Margaret Yule in Jedburgh in 1679 and whose children, born in Hawick, included: George (b.1681); Andrew (b.1684); and James (b.1686). The witnesses in 1684 were William Douglas and Robert Scott. He witnessed a baptism for William Taylor in 1682. Andrew (17th/18th C.) maltman in Hawick. He is probably son of the earlier Andrew (unless the same man married for a second time late in life). In 1723 he married Agnes Rule, who was also from Hawick Parish. Charles (b.c.1780) resident of Commonsides according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. He may be the Charles who married Margaret Corbet and had a son Alexander (b.1802) baptised in Hawick Parish. Fr. Dominic (??-??) priest at S.S. Mary & David's 1930-38. He oversaw the opening of the new Halls shortly after he arrived. He was transferred to Lochgelly. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1681. George (17th C.) blacksmith in Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Janet Stewart in 1752. Their children included: Isabel (b.1753); James (b.1754); George (b.1756); Janet (b.1758); William (b.1760); Isabel (b.1763); and Mary (b.1765). Probably the same George witnessed baptisms for for Robert Easton (in Borthaugh) in 1742, for George Scott in 1747, for James Beattie and William Telfer (both in Borthaugh) in 1758 and for William Riddell in 1759. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Margaret Elliot in 1771. John (b.1758) was probably his son. George (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at East Highchesters, when he owned 2 horses. He was also recorded living at Highchesters in 1799. He married Helen Knox in Hawick Parish in 1785 and had children George (b.1787), Jean (b.1788), James (b.1789), Janet (b.1792), Nelly (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796), Elizabeth (b.1798), George (b.1799) and George (again, b.1800). The first 6 children were baptised in Wilton Parish and the others in Hawick and Robertson. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Agnes Stot. Their son John was baptised in 1778. He may be the father of an unnamed son (b.1779) and Thomas (b.1787). George (b.1800) born in Robertson Parish, son of George and Helen Knox. He was probably related to the earlier George and William who were at Highchesters. He was farmer at Highchesters in 1841, was shepherd at the Malt Steep in Wilton in 1851 and was 'Farm Steward, Game Keeper & Shepherd' at Pilmuir in 1861. His wife was Jane (from Dundee) and their children included: John; Isabel; George; and William. Hector McBean (1890-1972) born in Hawick, he played for Hawick Waverley Rugby Club and became a teacher. He served in the K.O.S.B. during WWI. He spent 27 years teaching Latin and coaching American football at Greenwich Country Day School in Connecticut, U.S.A. (from its foundation). Here he was said to be very popular with his pupils and was apparently the most inspirational teacher President George Bush (Senior) ever had! He retired back to the Hawick area in 1952, living at Midlem, Lilliesleaf, Hawick and finally North Berwick. He taught Latin at Hawick High School for a couple of years and became active in St. Cuthbert's Kirk. He wrote 'St. Cuthbert's Scottish Episcopal Church, Hawick, A Centenary Chronicle, 1858-1958'. It is unclear if he was related to Rev. James William Tasker Hart. James (17th/18th C.) tenant at Appletreehall. He married Isobel Moore in 1703 and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1705. George (b.1709) was probably also his son. In 1711 he was recorded as tenant in Easter Burnfoot when his daughter Jean was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen (or 'Nelly') Riddell and their children included: Adam (b.1774); John (b.1776); James (b.1779); Jean (b.1781); and Betty (b.1784). James 'Hart of Harts' (c.1753-1818) farmer at Wilton Burn. It is said that at the age of 25 he stood 6 feet 3 inches tall, weighted 33 stones and was the strongest man in Scotland. He may be the son of George and Janet Stuart, born in Wilton in 1754, with siblings George, William, Isabel, Mary and another brother. He is probably the James recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £10 6s 8d) in 1788, and still recorded there in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Martha Elliot and their children included James (b.1785). John (b.1789) son of George, tenant farmer at East Highchesters. He was at East Highchesters according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. Rev.

James William Tasker (19th/20th C.) rector of St. Cuthbert's 1892–1903. He had been minister at Barnes (Surrey), Teddington (Middlesex), St. Paul's (Bristol), St. George's (Bristol), Leckhampton (Gloucester) and St. Paul's (Swindon), but exchanged with Rev. Douglas Powell Ware of Hawick. He wrote the poem 'The Birth of the Moat'. He had to terminate his incumbency in 1903 due to the threat of losing his eyesight. He wrote 'The Autobiography of Judas Iscariot, A Character Study' (1884). Jason great-great-grandson of Adam, Cornet in 1863. He followed the Cornet as a youth. He became a professional jockey and has had over 500 winners. He lives in Yorkshire. Jean (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who possibly kept a boarding house, or took in orphans perhaps. In 1725 she was given money and grain for keeping Bettie Hay and someone else with the surname Jolly. She could be the Jean who was married to William Bruntfield and had 6 children baptised in Hawick Parish in the period 1712–21. John (17th/18th C.) glover and innkeeper in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms in 1696 for William Swan, in 1699 for James 'Colwort' in Whitlaw, in 1700 for gardener Gideon Gardner and for flesher Thomas Wilson, in 1701 for tailor William Scott, merchant George Martin and James Grieve from Wilton, in 1702 for James Robson's illegitimate child and for Bailie George Martin, in 1703 for shoemaker Robert Hardie, in 1704 for tailor Robert Wilson and for shoemaker Robert Allan, and in 1705 for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel. In 1702, along with ex-Bailie John Binnie and merchant Patrick Angus, he was fined for drinking after the ringing of the 10 o'clock bell. In 1702 he complained about 25 people (including the 2 Bailies), being illegally involved with dealing in foreign cloth, woollen garments etc.; his name is written 'Heart'. Also in 1702 he witnessed a couple of baptisms in Hawick. In 1703 he was fined for the 'penny-bridal' at the wedding of his daughter Christian to William Oliver; he was also temporarily removed as an Elder. In 1704 he witnessed baptisms for Bailie George Martin and for tailor Thomas Wilson. He may be the John whose daughter Mary married James Weens in Hawick in 1717. He could be the John listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. John (b.1813) son of Adam and Alison Turnbull. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841 as a ploughman at Silverbuthall. He was listed as an agricultural labourer at Silverbuthall in 1841 and 1851 and a coal merchant at Lockiesedge in 1861. His wife was Betsy and their children included Margaret, Adam, Alison T. and James K. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Whitfield in 1790. He married Margaret (or 'Peggy') Scott and their children included: Christian (b.1788); Janet (b.1790); Margaret (b.1792); and Mary (b.1796). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Highchester. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 along with 'G. Hart, Haychesters'. He could be the William, son of George and Janet Stewart born in Wilton Parish in 1760 and the William married to Margaret Scott, whose children born in Wilton included Mary Christian (b.1788), Margaret (b.1792) and Mary (b.1796). He may also have had a son George born in Cavers Parish in 1802. William 'Billy' (20th C.) known for singing 'The Mosstrooper's Song' and 'The Callant'. He sings the former song on 'Songs of Hawick, Volume Two' (also formerly written 'Heart' and 'Hert').

Hartop (har-top) n. Benny (1936/7–) well-known in Hawick for his success on both the cricket and rugby fields. He grew up in Green Terrace and apprenticed at Woodcock's. He played cricket in the Parks League, later joining the Hawick & Wilton club and becoming Captain. The team won the Border League in 1964 and the Border Knockout Cup in 1967. He also played football as a wing-half for the Legion (later serving as Captain), as well as for the Albert. His sons are Benny and Graeme. Benny son of Benny and elder brother of Graeme. He played for Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club, holding a club record of scoring 204 not out in 1984. He also played football for the Legion. Graeme Thomas (1964–) son of Benny, he was born in Hawick, and educated at the High School. He trained as an accountant and in 1994 became Managing Director of Scottish Widows Bank. He played rugby for Hawick R.F.C. and Edinburgh Accies. Kerr (1996–) born in Melrose, from a Hawick family. He wrote the words for 'The Best O' A' when still in school, with teacher James Letham setting it to music.

Hartrigge (hart-rig) n. farm about a mile north-east of Jedburgh. It was owned by the Kirktons of Stewartfield in the early 17th century, passed to Francis Scott of Mangerton and then to Capt. James Stewart of Stewartfield, when the name was changed. Thereafter it passed to the Davidsons and the Millers and Lord Campbell (nephew of the minister of Ancrum) had a new mansion built there in the 19th century. The 1788 county valuation lists 24 parcels of lands composing 'the Estate now known by the name of Stewartfield, but was formerly called Hartrig, Thire-side, and the lands in Ulston', together valued at £1077 6s. James Elliot of Wolfelee was living there in 1837. In the latter part of the 19th century it was owned by Lord Stratheden and Campbell. Much of the original planted landscape survives, although with modern intrusions (also written 'Hartrigg'; the origin is probably from Old English 'heorot' and Old Norse 'hyrygge', meaning 'the river frequented by stags'; this name appeared in 1730, having previously been known as 'Stewartfield' and once the property of the steward of Jedburgh Abbey).

Harts (harts) n. former lands in Liddesdale, valued at 12 shillings in a rental roll of c.1376. It seems likely this was related to Hartsgarth and Hartside, which are also listed.

Hartsgarth (harts-gawrth) n. farm on the Hartsgarth Burn, between Hermitage and Newcastleton. It occurs in a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 3 shillings. It was home to a branch of the Elliots in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. There was formerly a tower-house there, but its precise location is unknown (although marked next to the modern farmhouse on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map). Jeffrey suggests that 3 large stones from the old house were built into the garden gate at Redheugh. It was granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in 1479. 'Rowie Croser in Harthskarthburnfute' is recorded in 1611. In about 1622 the wadset of the farm was purchased by William (for 3,800 merks), brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Through marriage to his niece the lands became owned by James Elliott, 6th son of Gibbie of Stobs by 1639. Rowie Crozier was tenant there in 1622 and 1623. It is traditionally said that Margaret Kidd lived there, providing several illegitimate children to Elliot of Larriston, including perhaps 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters'. The lands were valued (along with Langhaugh) at £466 13s 4d in 1678. Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt and sold the lands to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688. Irving's daughter married Adam Beattie who became the next Laird. It was sold by Adam Beattie to John Oliver of Dinlabyre in about 1700, and sold by William Oliver to William Sharp in 1773, who was there until at least 1789; he was recorded as owner in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when it was valued (along with Langhaugh) at about £466 13s 4d. John Douglas was farmer there in 1797 and James Douglas was shepherd. Tailor William Hardie was there in 1799 and John Bower, Walter Dalgleish and James Turnbull in 1801. The Beatties were owners in the early 19th century. John Barrie was farmer there in 1868. South of the farm was formerly the steading of Hartsgarthburnside. Hartsgarth Fell, to the west, and on the border with Dumfriesshire, reaches a height of 551 m (the name probably derives from Old English 'heorot' and Old Norse 'skarth', meaning 'stag's pass'; it first occurs as 'Hyrtisgarth' around 1376 and is 'hartsgarth et le faulde' in 1479, is 'Hartstarth' in 1557, 'Harskarth' in 1583, 'Hartstarth' in 1584, 'Hartscarth' in 1586, 'Harthscarth' in about 1590, 'hairtisgirth' in 1613, 'Hairtisgarth' in 1618, 'Hartsgarthe' in about 1624, 'Hartisgarth' in 1637, 'Hartiscarthe' in 1642, 'Hearts-garth' in about 1720 and 'Hargath' in 1797; it appears as 'Herskerth' on Sandison's c.1590 map and 'Harsketth' on Blaeu's 1654 map and has its modern spelling on Stobie's 1770 map).

Hartsgarth Burn (harts-gawrth-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale. It rises in a number of smaller streams, including the Routing Burn, Back Sike, Green Sike, Trough Sike and Cuttit Sike on Dinley Moss, Hartsgarth Fell and Roan Fell, on the border off Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire. It runs down past Hartsgarth to join the Hermitage Water at Leahaugh. There are many old sheepfolds, shepherd's bothies and cairns in the higher parts, as well as the former steading of Hatsgarthburnside just south of Hartsgarth.

Hartsgarthburnside (harts-gawrth-burn-sīd) n. former farmstead on the opposite bank of Hartsgarth Burn from the main farm of Hartsgarth. John Elliot and family lived there in 1835 (marked on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map).

Hartsgarth Flow (harts-gawrth-flō) n. boggy area to the north of Hartsgarth (see flowe).

Hartshaugh (harts-uch) n. farm just south of Bonchester, on the opposite side of the Rule Water from Hobkirk Kirk. It used to have an adjacent have a corn mill. In 1569 the superiority was acquired by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey, along with several other lands, and this passed to Alexander Lord Home in 1587. It was once part of the Barony of Abbotrule, but later became part of the Wolfelee estate. Thomas Turnbull, son of Eckie, was recorded there in 1579. A branch of the Turnbulls held charters for the lands from at least 1604, but had been ‘kindly tenants’ of Jedburgh Abbey there for many generations before; this same branch also owned Wester Swanshiel until 1778. Hector Turnbull, Adam Turnbull and William Rutherford were there in 1619. Lyle Turnbull was there in 1623. Gilbert Elliott acquired the land through ‘non-entry’ in 1630 and it was owned by William Elliot (formerly of Rigg and Hartsgarth) from about 1640. Lawrie Turnbull was owner in 1643, when it was valued at £15 (although Gilbert Elliott of Craigend and Hartshaugh also owned lands in Abbotrule valued at £65, so perhaps the whole farm was valued at £80). It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. It was again farmed by Turnbells in the 17th century. In 1694 Walter Riddell was tenant there, with Andrew Dodds the blacksmith and James Haig, Andrew Turnbull, Adam Scott and John ‘Hinge’ also resident there. Later ownership passed to the Elphinstones, with William Elphinstone being recorded as owner in 1707, when it was valued £60 (including the mill and mill lands). It was sold to William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1713. In the 18th century there was an annual horse race on a haugh near here. It was part of the lands sold off by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1751. In 1788 it was part of the estate of Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and valued (along with Hartshaugh Mill) at £60. 2 spindle whorls from the farm are in Hawick Museum (spelled ‘Hartishauch’ in 1567, ‘Hairtishauch’ in 1588 and also ‘Hartishauch’, ‘Hartisheuch’, ‘Hartisheugh’, ‘Hartishaugh’, ‘Hartishaugh’, ‘Hartishauche’, ‘Hartshauche’, ‘Hart’s-haugh’, ‘Harty’s-haugh’, ‘Hartshaughe’, ‘Heartshaugh’, etc.; it is marked as ‘Hartshauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map; the name presumably derives from deer).

Hartshaugh Mill (hert-suf-mil) n. former separate farm just south of Hartshaugh, containing a corn mill. The extensive mill lade (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and the 1863 Ordnance Survey map) had its cauld about half way between Forkins and the mill. Adam Turnbull was there in 1623. William Elphinstone was tenant there in 1694. Janet Wilkie from there died in 1760. Thomas Smith was tenant from at least 1788 and is still listed as miller there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It was listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1788 (and still in 1811); along with the mill lands, Braidhaugh, Mackside and Blackcleughmouth it was valued at £355 2s. John Short was listed as miller there in 1837 and 1852. James Laidlaw was farmer there in the 1860s and a Mr. Waugh about the 1780s. Part of the lands of Unthank were incorporated within the farm around the early 19th century. The lands were once part of the Barony of Abbotrule, and were sold by William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. Behind the stable door used to hang a perforated stone, used as a charm to stop witches from using horses at night (sometimes written ‘Hartsheugh’; it is ‘Hartshauche Mill’ in 1623, ‘hartschaugh milne’ in 1681, ‘hartshaughmilne’ in 1694, ‘Hartshaughmiln’ in 1751 and ‘Hartsheughmiln’ in 1797).

Hartside (hart-sīd) n. former farm in Liddesdale, to the north of Cleuchhead. Hartside Sike is still on the map there. It may be related to the lands of ‘Hyrtistede’ listed on a c.1376 rental roll (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hartside Sike (hart-sīd-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on the southern slopes of Arnton Fell and running roughly south-easterly to join the Liddel Water to the east of Steelreoad-end.

Hartsteed (harts-steed) n. former lands in the upper Liddesdale valley, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376, under the section called ‘Ermyldoune’. They are listed as ‘Hyrtistede’, with a value of 2 shillings. It is possible this is the same place as Hartsgarth or associated with Hartside Sike, which flows east off Arnton Fell. ‘Hyrtystede et Perysynocstede’ are listed under the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ in the same c.1376 rental roll, with a valued of 5 shillings.

Hartwud (har’-, her’-wud) n. former name for lands between Ashkirk and Selkirk. They are mentioned in a list of lands forfeited by the Earl of Douglas to the Crown in 1455. They were split into 3 steadings, the ‘Eststede’, ‘Myddilstede’ and ‘Weststede’ of ‘Hertwode’. The ‘stede of Hartwod’ was leased by the Crown to Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, in 1483. The western part was leased by William Turnbull in 1479 and 1486, and this seems to have been what was later called Hartwoodburn. Probably the same William ‘White’ Turnbull is recorded there in 1494/5 when the farm was burned. The steadings were leased to the Earl of Bothwell, Rutherfords and Homes at the end of the 15th century and remained Crown property until at least 1502. Robert Nichol and John Fletcher had sheep stolen from there according to a record in 1494/5. Lawrence Rutherford was recorded being now there in 1502. The Middlestead was tenanted by Andrew Ker of Greenhead in 1541 (it is ‘hartwod’ in 1494/5, ‘Hertwod’ in 1502 and ‘Hartwod’

Hartwudburn (har'-, her'-wud-burn) n. Hartwoodburn, farm off to the left of the A7 just before Selkirk. It was formerly a home of a branch of the Scotts and thirled to Oakwood. It is perhaps the Eaststead of Hartwood mentioned in the latter part of the 15th century. William Turnbull leased these Crown lands in 1479. In 1502 it is recorded that Walter Scott had 100 sheep stolen from there. It was feued to Alexander, Lord Home, in 1510. In 1531 Philip Scott of Headshaw held the lands in tack from Queen Margaret, and assigned the lands to his 2nd son Robert on his death. Alan Mithag was there in 1539/40. The lands were occupied by Walter Scott in Headshaw in 1541, paying £26 yearly. William Hangingside was there in 1581. In 1621 it was still valued at £26. In 1627 a band of Scotts, from Whithaugh, Headshaw, Huntly and elsewhere harassed the tenant of the Earl of Home there. The lands were valued at £416 13s 4d in 1678. Lands there were held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. It was owned by John Pringle of Clifton in 1785, when valued at £208. James Laidlaw was tenant there in 1785. It was owned by Mark Pringle of Clifton in 1802 and still valued at £208 (it is 'Hartwodburne' in 1468, 1474 and 1542, 'hartwod burne' in 1502, 'Hartvodburn' in 1531 and 'Hartwoodburne' in 1621 and 1678).

Hartwudmyres (har'-wud-mirz) n. Hartwoodmyres, farm on the road over Woll Rig towards the Ettrick valley. John Wilson was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5. It was seat of a branch (or branches) of the Scotts from at least 1539/40 until 1695. Elizabeth Stewart held the lands in 1512. Thomas Scott in Aikwood (on behalf of other tenants there) paid £10 Scots to the Crown for occupying the lands here. William Scott was tenant there in 1539/40. In 1541 the tenancy was claimed by John Home of Cowdenknowes. Walter Scott, younger of Tushielaw, was there in the 1570s. A family called Clerk were there in 1581. Scott of Hartwoodmyres held lands valued at £26 13s 4d in Wilton Parish in 1643. A 10-merk land (of old extent) there was inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden in 1676. The lands were valued at £566 13s 4d in 1678. Later it was home to the Ogilvies. Michael Renwick was recorded there in 1772. John Grieve was there in 1785-91 and Archibald Park 1792-97. It was valued at about £460 in 1785 and 1802. In the mid-to-late 19th century it was farmed by brothers Richard, William and John Elliot. A Roman fort and site of a Roman camp are between here and Oakwood (it is marked 'Hartwoodmyrs' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'heartwoofmyrs' on Adair's c. 1688 map; it is 'hartwodmyris' in 1494/5, 'Hertwodmyris' in 1512, 'le Hartwod myris' in 1533/4, 'Hartwod Myris' in 1541, 'Hartvodmyris' in 1562, 'Hartwodmyris' in 1573, 'Hartwodmyries' in 1578/9, 'Hartwodmyris' in 1581 and 1592, 'Hartwodmyris' in 1602, 'Hartwodmyres' in 1612, 'Hertwoidmyres' in 1618, 'Hartwodmyre' in 1628, 'Hartwoodmyers' in 1638, 'Hartwodmyre' in 1648 and 'Hartwoodmyres' in 1692).

Harvey (hawr-vee) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son George was baptised in 1747. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son George was baptised in 1790. Hugh (1841-1914) station master at Belses 1874-1906. In 1864 he married Margaret Burns, who died in 1915. Their children Margaret ('Love') and Nellie both continued to work at the station after their father retired. The family also ran a gig as a taxi service. After he retired he moved to Firview above the station. He is buried at Ancrum Kirkyard. Documents relating to this time have been published in 'Backtrack' magazine. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Sword and their son John was baptised in 1706. James (18th C.) tenant in Unionhall. He is recorded in 1731 when he had a libel case for debt against Walter Henderson in Selkirk. Rev. James see Rev. James Hervey. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nelly Weir and their children included Andrew (b.1795), Thomas (b.1797), Betty (b.1799) and John (b.1801). Robert (b.1782) son of tailor Thomas. He was recorded at Sandhaugh on the ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish in 1801. Robert (b.1819/20) born in Hawick, he was a farm-worker in Robertson Parish. In 1851 he was living at Highchesters Cottages and in 1861 was a ploughman at Robertson Glebe-foot. He married Barbara Deans in 1845 and their children included Andrew, Margaret, Mary, Jane, Helen, Agnes, Janet, Robina Deans (b.1855) and Robert (b.1856). Rev. Thomas (c.1645-1717) graduating from Glasgow University in 1665, he was a minister in Ireland for 13 years, and then spent some time in England. He attended the first meeting of the Synod of Lothian in 1687 after the 'Toleration' and became the first post-Revolution minister at Abbotrule in 1689 (although it is unclear in these troubled times when he actually took over from Robert Spottiswood, since it is also claimed that Abbotrule was one of the few local parishes where the minister was not 'outed'). It is also unclear exactly how many years he remained, since it is recorded that that James Ker was formally reappointed in 1690, but was probably too elderly to take up the position; he may have assisted Ker for some time. In 1692 he was translated to Auchterderran in Fife, but suspended in 1699 for profaning the Lord's Day. He then went to Ireland and settled at Donoch, near Londonderry. He married a daughter of this same James Ker Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Stavert and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1737. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tailor at Sandyhaugh in Ashkirk Parish. In 1801 his son Robert was listed on the Militia ballot in Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Elliot and their children included Isabel (b.1776) and Robert (b.1782). Thomas (b.c.1800) tailor at Kippielaw in Wilton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He was also recorded there in 1841, along with his wife Agnes and children James, Andrew, Agnes, William and Thomas (also spelled 'Harvie' and 'Hervey').

Harwick (har-wik) n. city in Pennsylvania, U.S.A., village in Cambridgeshire, name of small towns elsewhere in the world and also sometimes a surname (not to be confused with a similar, but more illustrious word).

Harwud (har-wud, har-wood, haw-ri') n. Harwood, a seat of the Elliots, near the head of the Rule Water, locally known as 'Harrot'. The lands were said to be among those (along with Commonsides and Dryden) gained by the Muirs of Rowallan through marriage with an heiress of the Comyns in about 1260; there is no original document to confirm this, but it is stated in a 17th century family history by poet and politician Sir William Muir. This has long been a major estate of Hobkirk Parish, existing since before the Reformation. It was held by Eustace of Lorraine in the early part of the 14th century, being forfeited to the Blairs of that Ilk some time before 1357. However, the Lorraines were restored to the lands at some point, certainly by the middle of the 15th century. 'John Lorane of Harwod' is recorded in 1464/5, and the lands continued to be held by the Lorraines until the early 17th century. The farm was burned by the English in 1542. The estate was attacked over a period of years by some of the Turnbells, part of a feud between Lady Margaret Lorraine (nee Turnbull) and some of the rest of her Clan. Edward Lorraine had sold the lands partly in wadset to Rev. William Weir and then in 1632 the pair had a further wadset to Gilbert Elliott, with the reversion of the lands to Edward Lorraine (for 6500 merks) if he repaid the amount within 5 years. However, in 1637 it was sold outright to William 'Ellot', son of Simon of the Binks, who became the first Elliot Laird of Harwood. The Cranstons were superiors around this time, with those rights passing to the Elliots of Stobs. It was 'Harrot, or Harwood' in 1643, when valued at £433 6s 8d and owned by Simon Elliot. 'Harrat with mill thereof' was listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. It was valued at £633 6s 8d in 1678 (including what used to be Appotside). Francis and Thomas Elliot were recorded there in 1746 and Walter Heatley in 1765. Henry Elliot paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748. By 1788 it was 'Harwood, or Harrot', valued at £433 6s 8d. Walter Amos and Archibald Elliot were there in 1799. It is said that one of the early Elliot Laids were engaged in (illegally) driving cattle across the Border. J.P. Alison designed servants quarters as an addition to the house in 1906. The 8th Elliot Laird sold the estate to William Elliot (from Lanarkshire) in 1924, and it later passed to his son, Walter, who was an M.P. and cabinet minister. His wife would become Baroness Katharine Elliot of Harwood. 5 flints discovered there are in Hawick Museum, as well as a piece of green pottery. There are several other places of the same name, including those in the Teviot and Slitrig valleys (the origin of the name is probably just 'hare's wood'; it is 'Harwod' in 1464/5, 'Harwode' in 1562 and 1631, 'Harrat' in 1598, 1648 and 1649, 'Harwoid' in 1606, 'Harrit' in 1643, 'Harret' in 1655, 'Harrett' in 1678, 'Hared' and 'Harit' in 1694, 'Harrit' in 1699, 'Harrot' in 1700, 'Harrote' in 1728, 'Harriot' in 1748 and 'Harrot' in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Harewood', with 'Woode of Harewood' just to the north, however, it is 'Harrot' on Stobie's 1770 map, reflecting the contemporary pronunciation).

Harwud (har-wud) n. Harwood, area in the upper Slitrig valley containing Harwood Knowe (crossed to the south by the Catrail) and Harwood Burn, which runs north to join the Langside Burn and then the Slitrig. Remains of an 18th–19th century farmstead were investigated in the mid-1980s before the area was ploughed for forestation.

Harwud

Harwud (har-wud, har-wood) n. William (15th C.) Chaplain who witnessed an instrument for lands in Morebattle relating to Melrose Abbey in 1444. He also witnessed another instrument for the Abbey in 1445.

Harwud Burn (har-wud-burn) n. Harwood Burn, stream that passes Harwood (in Hobkirk Parish) to join the Rule Water at Forkins (marked 'Harrot Burn' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Harwud Burn (har-wud-burn) n. Harwood Burn, stream in the upper Slitrig valley. It rises with the King's Sike and Drowning Sike and joins Langside Burn between Stanishope and Shank-end. The Catrail crosses its headwaters. The farm of the same name was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. being listed in the Land Tax Rolls for 1678 and inherited by Sir William Eliott in 1692 (it is 'Harrotburn' in 1678 and 'Herretburn' in 1692).

Harwud Cottage (har-wud-ko'-eej) n. Harwood Cottage, former house on the Harwood Burn, to the south-west of the main estate in Hobkirk Parish (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Harwude (haw-wud) n. former name for a stream recorded in the royal charter for the lands of Whitslade in about 1170. It is referred to as 'rivulo de Haruude', but the identification with a modern location is unclear (the pronunciation is uncertain, but it is assumed that this is the same word as the other local 'Harwoods').

Harwudhill (har-wud-hil) n. Harwoodhill, lands that were once owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh, and possibly the Scotts of Howpasley before that. This was presumably land near Harwood-on-Teviot. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Hawick held 'in tenandry' by the Baron in 1511, 1572, 1594, 1615 and again in 1686, where it is 'sometimes called Lant'. Patrick Scott and Adam Scott were both recorded there in 1502. There is a sasine of 1722 giving these lands and others 'in liferent' to Beatrix Scott, wife of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh (in 1502 it is 'Hardwodhill' and 'harrothill', in 1572 and 1594 is 'Hardwodhill' and is 'Hartwodhill' in 1511).

Harwud Hoose (har-wud-hoos) n. Harwood House, in Rule Water. The old house was built in the 17th century and had 1665 carved over its lintel. In the 1694 Hearth Tax roll, 7 hearths were listed at 'Harits hous and office houses'. The new house was built in 1834/5 for Maj. William Elliot. The stables were altered by Dick, Peddie & MacKay in 1901 (see also Harwud).

Harwud on Teviot

Harwud Knowe (har-wud-now) n. Harwood Knowe, hill in the headwaters of the Slitrig Water, to the east of the Harwood Burn, between Shank-end and the Maidens. It reaches a height of 333 m. There may have been a farmstead near here, with James Elliot in 'Harrotknow' being recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1760 and John Elliot in 1775 and 1780.

Harwud Lake (har-wud-lāk) n. pond to the south-west of Harwood House in Hobkirk Parish. It was part of the former mill lade system.

Harwud Mill (har-wud-mil) n. Harwood Mill, farm and former corn mill in Hobkirk Parish, just south of Forkins, on the Harwood Burn. It may be the same mill that was known as 'Appotside Mill' in the 17th century. It was the location for the 'hail' for the 'uppies' in the game of Hobkirk Baa in the 19th century. The Hearth Tax rolls lists 4 hearths there in 1694. James Turnbull was miller there in 1758, with Thomas Scott also living there. Walter Turnbull was tenant there in at least 1797–1801, William Rutherford was there in 1799 and George Waugh in 1801. It is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory, with Walter Cavers as the miller. James Smith was farmer there in 1868 (also written 'Harwoodmill', it is 'Haratmilne' in 1694, 'Harrotmiln' in 1758 and 1797 and 'Harrot mill' in 1799; it is marked 'Harrot Mill' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Harwud on Teviot (har-wud-, haw-ri'-ōn-tee-vee-i') n. farm on the west bank of the Teviot, south of Newmill. Called 'Harwood on Teviot' to distinguish it from Harwood in the Rule valley (as well as Harwood in the Slitrig valley, and others throughout the U.K.). It was once split into 'Nether Harwood' and 'Over Harwood'. The lands were owned by the Abernethy family from at least 1393 until 1494, passing then to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. In 1580 it was held by Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell in liferent, and in heritage by her son Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; they complained about a gang of about 18 Elliots attacking the farm and stealing 40 cows and oxen and leaving 14 lying dead, all at the instigation of Martin Elliot of Braidlie. It is possible this was the home of 'Martine Elliott, callit the Blak Baird, in Harwode', recorded in 1586/7. It was the seat of a branch of the Scotts in the 17th and 18th centuries (formerly at Broadhaugh and descended from the Scotts of Newark). The arms of the Scotts of Harwood has a band with 2 crescents and a star on the background of an oak tree, and motto 'Ardenter Amo'. The lands were listed in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663 among those held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Walter Scott of Harwood is recorded on the 1678 Land Tax Rolls; along with Falnash it was valued at £1550 13s 4d. In 1681 Thomas, son of Thomas Crawford, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to the lands of Over and Nether Harwood. William Forester is listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. James Stevenson was tenant there in at least 1705–08, with the lands owned by Adam Elliot of Arkleton. The estate was sold by Robert Scott of Harwood to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1738. By 1788 it was valued at £440. William Gladstone was farmer there in 1797, when he is recorded having 3 work horses and Thomas Gledstains was there in 1801. In 1811 it was valued at £440 as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. John Beattie was farmer there in the 1860s. There are also several others Harwoods in Britain (it appears as ‘Harwode’ in 1393, ‘Harwod’ in 1435, ‘Harewode’ in 1446/7, ‘Herwod’ in 1477, ‘Herwode’ in 1494, ‘Harwode’ in 1510/1, ‘Harrett’ in 1581/2 and ‘Harwode’ in 1634 and 1652; it is marked ‘Harrwod’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Herrot’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Harwud Park (har-wud-pawrk) n. former shepherd’s cottage near Harwood. It was ‘Harrot Park’ in 1788 when Alexander Lillico was herd there.

Harwud Rig (har-wud-rig) n. ridge to the north of Skelfhill Pen, reaching a height of 393 m.

Harwud Sike (har-wud-sīk) n. small stream that joins the north side of the Teviot near Harwood.

Harwudsikefit (har-wud-, ha-ri’-sīk-fi) n. Harwoodsikefoot, former farmstead at the foot of the Harwood Sike, in Teviothead Parish. James Miller lived there in about 1680. James Elliot is recorded as farmer there in 1797, and several of his children died there. Shepherd William Oliver was there in 1851 (also written ‘Harwoodsike-foot’).

Harwudtoon (har-wud-toon, haw-ri’-toon) n. Harwoodtown, a former farm and settlement adjacent to Harwood in the Rule valley. Thomas Turnbull was from there in 1567. It was owned by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge in 1609 and Andrew Turnbull in 1610. The old houses there were pulled down by Henry Elliot, who was Laird in the latter part of the 18th century. There is now no sign there was once a hamlet there (it is ‘Harwoodtoun’ and ‘Harwodtoun’ in 1562 and 1567, and ‘Harrottoun’ about 1605).

hash (hawsh) v., arch. to cut, particularly with a scythe, slice, hack, chop, slash – ‘...and how

hash (hawsh) n. a mess, a clumsy failure – ‘hei made a right hash o eet’, a confused mass, a confused crowd of people, a haver, blether, person clumsy in speech, general term of contempt – ‘He’s a wundy hash’ [GW], ‘Ye muckle, careless, thoughtless, thriftless hash, To spend yer siller ona siccan trash’ [JoHa], ‘O yin that speaks an awfi h lot, Oo say that hei’s a hash, And hard up means oo irni weel, And no juist short o cash’ [IWL], v. to speak emptily or a lot – ‘Yince an thon wumman sterts, she hashes an blethers for a guid everlesteen’ [ECS].

hask (hawsk) n., arch. the throat, a short, dry cough – ‘...and complained that there was a fly in his hask ...’ [RM].

Hasliehirst (hāz-lee-hurst) n. former cottage on Stonedge farm (presumably from ‘hirst’, a hillock or unproductive piece of ground; see also Hazely Hirst).

Haslo Brae (has-lō-brā) n. former name for a hill near Wauchope, indicated on a map of 1772.

hasna see hasni

hasni (haz-, has-ni, -ne, -na) contr. hasn’t, has not – ‘Wha hasna heard how I withstood That whilk they ca’t ‘The Great Hawick Flood’?’ [AD], ‘He hasna got a copper so he daurna’ ring the bell’ [WE], ‘The care o life she hasna een to see ...’ [WL] (also spelled ‘hasna’ and ‘hasnae’).

hass (has) n., arch. the neck, throat – ‘Then deep in her hass she mutter’d a word, And proddit him in the flanke’ [JTe], ‘The master’s heartie raise to his hass, His stamach vow’d to flynych’ [JTe], ‘And Eb sent it over his hawse in a crack, Then lay on his lunzie and routit and spak’ [JTe], ‘He laid hans on him, an’ tuik him bie the hass, sayin’, Paye me that thou awest’ [HSR], ‘I am wearie o’ my cryin’; my hass is dryet, mine eyne fæil while I waite for my God’ [HSR], the neck of a glen, head of a pass – ‘A gigantic castle to guard the ‘hass of the hope’ [WaD] (also written ‘hawse’ and cf. halse; the word occurs as a suffix in several local place names. e.g. ‘Hawkhass’, ‘Sorbie Hass’ and ‘Whitrope Hass’).

Hass (has) n. farm on the A7, south of the Carter Bar, between Huntford and Edgerston. There are signs of old fields banks and rig lines there. A quarry nearby contains basaltic rocks from the Hawick-Acklington Dyke (also called 'the Hass').

the Hassely Cleuch (thu-ha-ssu-lee-clooch)
n. former cottage in the west corner of Stonedge farm. 'Hobbie' Elliot lived there in the late 18th century.

Hassendean (has-in-deen) n. hamlet and surrounding district about 6 miles north-east of Hawick at the foot of Minto hills, and once the site of the first station north of Hawick on the Waverley Line. This was also once a separate parish, having a link with the monks of Melrose Abbey from early times. After decades of debate over the distant parts of the Parish (particularly those in the Borthwick valley, with a new church built there in 1658), the Parish was suppressed in 1689, with the area redistributed among to Minto, Robertson and Wilton. There are stories of near riots during the de-roofing of the Kirk in 1690. The Barony of Hassendean was presumably once a single estate, but became 2 separate parts, with the western and eastern half baronies having separate Barons. Walter Fitz Alan was granted land there by Malcolm IV about 1155. A ploughgate of land here was given to Paisley Priory in the 1180s by Alan Stewart (son of Walter). The lands were included in a dowry granted to Joan of England (sister of the English King) when she married King Alexander in 1221. In 1304/5 there is a record of the rentals from the farms there, 'by the hands of Sir Alexander de Balliol'. In about 1320 James Cunningham was granted lands there by Robert the Bruce, this being the eastern half barony, and the Cunninghams held the superiority of these lands for perhaps 300 years. Bruce also granted lands there to Sir James Douglas in 1320 (perhaps the other half of the barony). Lands there were temporarily given to Henry Percy in 1334 (although the English never really had control over southern Scotland) and in 1341/2 the 'vills of Jeddeworth, Bonjedworthe, and Hassyndene' were granted to Henry Percy. There were further mentions by the English King in 1356, 1397 and 1408. William Livingstone of Drumry was baron of 'Lang Hassendean' (presumably the eastern half barony) in a document of 1470 and it passed to Alexander, Lord Home in 1493/4. In 1482 Elizabeth Cunningham inherited the eastern part from her father; it was 'then waste', but valued at £10 Scots in times of peace and was held of the superior the Lord of Kilmaurs (another Cunningham). In 1493 a man was charged with bringing Englishmen to the area where they stole 100 cows, as many sheep and other gear. Walter Taylor was recorded there in 1493 and Matthew Turnbull in 1494/5. It is recorded that Alexander Lord Home was owner of lands there in 1502. The area was long a seat of the Scotts of Hassendean, the first being David in the mid-15th century, and Sir Alexander Scott of Hassendean reported to have fallen at Flodden. This branch of the Scotts held the lands until about the end of the 17th century (when the lands became part of the Buccleuch estates); their motto was 'Trusty and True'. The lands were burned by the Earl of Hertford's men in 1545 (and recorded by the English as 'Hessington'). The superiority of the lands was confirmed to Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10 and James, Earl of Home in 1621. The Laird of Hassendean was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. Hassendean Moor was said to be a place for Covenanter meetings around 1680. In 1718 the farm of 'Hasindeane & Marlside' was part of the estates of the Scotts of Buccleuch, covering 583 acres ('besides two pieces of land which are intermixed with it') and bounded by Kames, Minto, Hassendeanbank, Knowe, Townhead, Horsleyhill, Hassendean Common, Newlands and Huntlaw. The farmhouses (together with trees) are shown clustered about the modern location, on the eastern side of the Hassendean Burn, with a corn mill also there. The central estate of Hassendean was at some point split into Hassendean-bank, Hassendean-burn and Teviot-bank. It was home of Dickson's nurseries from 1728 until the early 19th century. The tenant farmers were the Turnbells through the 18th century. Robert Dickson is recorded owning 8 horses there in 1797 and Adam Turnbull was a farmer there at the same time. The lands were listed in the 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 as owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and valued at £533 6s 8d. Residents in 1799 included weaver John Turnbull, weaver Robert Scott, shepherd John Laidlaw, joiner Adam Trotter, labourer Thomas Hood, miller Andrew Hood, labourer Thomas Hill, labourer John Hood and servant James Gibson. There were 9 young men listed there on the 1801 Militia ballot. The Shiel family farmed there in the early-to-mid 19th century. It is also famous from the ballad 'Jock o' Hazeldean' and the tune 'Hazeldean' – '...They are a' away to Hassendean burn, And left both wheel and cards' [T], 'Hassenden came without a call, The antientest House among them all' [CWS], '...Then came Alton; And the wives of Briddieyards, They're a' away to Hassendean, And left their woo and cairds' [CWS] (it occurs in the late 12th century as ‘Atstanesdene’, ‘Hadestandena’, ‘Hastensden’ and ‘Hatstanesdena’; many different spellings are known in earlier records, e.g. ‘Assindane’, ‘Astenesdene’, ‘Essenden’, ‘Hal-syndene’, ‘Hasanden’, ‘Hasendane’, ‘Hasendene’, ‘Hasindane’, ‘Hasindaine’, ‘Hasinedane’, ‘Has-sandean’, ‘Hassanden’, ‘Hassendain’, ‘Hassendane’, ‘Hassendein’, ‘Hassenden’, ‘Hassendene’, ‘Hassindan’, ‘Hassindane’, ‘Hassindean’, ‘Hassindeane’, ‘Hassindein’, ‘Hassinden’, ‘Hassindene’, ‘Hassindin’, ‘Hassindine’, ‘Hassingdane’, ‘Hassingdeane’, ‘Hassingden’, ‘Hassingdon’, ‘Hassingtone’, ‘Hassyndan’, ‘Hassynden’, ‘Hassyndene’ and ‘Hassyndene’, with the modern spelling not gaining prominence until the 18th century; it is marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, de Wit’s c. 1680 map as ‘Hasinden’ and Visscher’s 1689 map as ‘Hasindein’; Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘Hasindein Tour’, ‘Burnfoote’, ‘K. of Hasindein’ and ‘Banck’; the origin of the name is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Heathustan’ plus ‘denu’ for valley).

Hassendean

Hassendean (has-in-deen) n. sometime version of ‘Hassington’ in Eccles Parish, Berwickshire, long owned by the Broomfield family. Probably this version of the name derives from an error, but makes for possible confusion with the local Hassendean.

Hassendean (has-in-deen) n. Adam (12th C.) recorded as ‘Ada de Astenesdene’ in about the 1220s when Christina, daughter of his son William granted lands of Cresswell to Hugh the brewer. The document therefore gives us 3 generations of this local family. Christina (12th/13th C.) daughter of William, who was son of Adam. Some time in the period 1214–49, probably the late 1220s, she granted her lands of Cresswell to Hugh, brewer of Hassendean. It is possible this was the same as the later Cresswell family. Elias (12th C.) witnessed a charter some time in the period 1153–82 for Waltheof, son of Cospatrick for lands in West Lothian. His name is given as ‘Helia de Hadestandena’. Richard (12th C.) recorded as ‘Richard dean of Hassendean’, within the Diocese of Glasgow, as witness to several charters in the period between about 1175 and 1195. Probably the same person is Richard ‘de Hassendean’ about 1170 and referred to as Chaplain in Hassendean when listed as previous possessor of a ploughgate of land in Hassendean when it was gifted to Paisley Abbey by King William in the period 1179–90. He is probably the ‘Radulpho decano de hastaindene’ who witnessed the grant of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey in the late 12th century (as stated in a confirmation of 1454, with ‘Ralph’ perhaps being a simple error). He was Dean of Teviotdale in documents of the late 1170s and early 1180s. His name occurs at least 10 times. He is probably the ‘R., Archdeacon’ (an error for ‘Dean’) in a now missing charter (originally in the period 1183–91) in which Robert the Bruce confirmed the grant of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey. Robert (15th C.) tenant of the Mains of ‘Bothkenner’ in Stirlingshire in 1492. Thomas (13th/14th C.) Warden of the Monastery of Kelso. He is recorded in about 1330 as ‘Domino Thoma de Hassynden’ when he witnessed a charter relating to the Church of Roxburgh. Walter (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is recorded as ‘Walter Hassindan’ and owed about £13 for some service, possibly as a factor or similar, like Walter Scott of Hassendean and others who are named. His name was presumably related to the former parish. William (12th/13th C.) son of Adam. Around the 1220s his daughter Christina granted lands of Cresswell (in Hassendean Parish) to Hugh, the brewer of Hassendean.

Hassendean Bake (has-in-deen-bāk) n. recorded in a 1536 charter when William Scott of Hassendean granted ‘two husbandlands in demesne lands in le Easter Hassenden ... inter le merche bake ex occidentali et le passage gait ex orientali inter turrem de Hassindene et dicti le Hassindene bake’. It is possible that this is simply an early variant of Hassendeanbank.

Hassendeanbank (has-in-deen-bawngk) n. farm at Hassendean, previously part of the lands of the Barony of Hassendean, along with Hassendeanburn and Teviotbank. It is recorded at least as early as 1409 when lands there were confirmed to John Turnbull, son of Adam of Whithope. In 1432 William Turnbull was Laird there. In 1492 Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock gave a charter of the lands to Andrew Douglas and in that same year Cuthbert Cunningham had sasine for superiority of the lands. Walter’s daughters Margaret and Janet had a sasine in 1501. William Cunningham of Kilmaurs was recorded as superior in 1502. In 1510 William and Thomas Elphinstone (probably the Chancellor of Scotland and his son) received the rights of the land through ‘non-entry’, and Thomas married Elizabeth Turnbull, heir of half the lands, for which they had a charter in 1512. David and Robert Turnbull were tenants in 1516. Andrew Ker of Cessford had a sasine in 1519, and his son

Hassendeanbank Cottages

Walter Ker in 1531 (granted by William Cunningham, Laird of Glencairn), again in 1543, and confirmed in 1576. Isabel, wife of Walter Ker of Cessford complained in 1563 that Thomas and John Young were occupying her quarter of the lands without paying her 'maill ferme mail or entress'. Meanwhile William Turnbull held a piece of the land in 1536 (probably Cockerheugh), and in 1540 reference is made to the deceased John Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. The farm was burned by the Earl of Hertford's men in 1545. George Turnbull from here was recorded in 1573. Robert Ker, 1st Earl of Roxburghe, inherited the lands in 1610. Thomas Turnbull was infetted in these lands by the Commendator of Melrose in about 1622; they were valued at 13s 4d at that time. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. By 1643 the lands were held by the Earl of Roxburghe (as also recorded in 1678, 1684 and 1694) and valued at £550. Lands here were still listed as being part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1680 (a vestige of the connection with Melrose Abbey). Sir William Douglas of Cavers inherited 6 acres of land here in 1687, followed by his brother Archibald in 1698. William Redford was tenant in 1688. The lands passed to Minto Parish in 1690. Adam Young was there in at least 1690–94. Addiotnally John Redford, William Turnbull and Richard Turnbull were there in 1694, with Margaret Renwick, Janet Henderson and Mungo 'Modrell' listed among the poor. James Turnbull was there in 1785. The Duke of Roxburghe (perhaps just as superior) exchanged his lands here with those of George Douglas of Cavers at Denholm Haugh in 1797. It was listed under the Duke of Roxburghe in the county valuation of 1788 and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, and the Earl of Minto in about 1874, with a value of £550. The Dickson family held the estate through most of the 18th and 19th centuries and had nurseries nearby. Andrew Bruce was farmer there in 1797, when he owned 12 horses. The residents in 1801 included William Hills, Walter Scott and Alexander Walker. Ephraim Selby was farmer there until the 1860s, when his son Robert too over. Col. Archibald Dickson had the house rebuilt in the late 1870s. In the latter part of the 20th century it was the home of Ken Oliver. The course of the Teviot used to change after floods and ice-storms, and sometimes in the 18th century would pass by the foot of Hassendeanbank brae. To the north-west lie the faint remains of a double-ditched settlement, about 160 m by 75 m, with another possible settlement adjacent. To the south, by the Teviot, are cropmarks indicating a roughly oval fort, 60 m by 30 m, and there is also an old enclosure just south of the farm. In 2014 a Roman copper-bronze vessel was found here and in 2016 a Romano-British enamelled trumpet brooch (also written 'Hassendean Bank'; this is probably what is labelled 'Banck' on Blaeu's 1654 map on the opposite side of the Hassendean Burn from the Kirk; it is 'hassyndene bank' in 1409, 'Hassindenbank' in about 1410, 'Hasindenbank' in 1432, 'Hassindenbank' in 1492, 'hassindeane bank' in 1502, 'Hassindenbank' in 1510, 'Hassindanebank' in 1512, 'Hassindeanbank' in 1516, 'Bank-hessington' in 1545, 'Hassinbank' in 1573, 'Hassindanebank' in 1579, 'Hassindenbank' in 1634, 'Hassendenbank' in 1684, 'Hassindanebank' in 1607, 'Hassindenbank' in about 1622 and 1640, 'Hassindinbank' in 1670 and 'Hassendeanebank' in 1680).

Hassendeanbank Cottages (has-in-deen-bawngk-ko'-ee-jeez) n. cottages built near Hassendeanbank farm, built for the Minto estate and altered to the designs of Sir Robert Lorimer in 1911.

Hassendeanburn (has-in-deen-burn) n. farm and estate at Hassendean, previously part of the lands of the Barony of Hassendean, on the north bank of the Teviot, about 3½ miles from Hawick. James Redford was recorded there in 1579. Robert Scott of Alton held lands there in 1580, with William Taylor, David Young and John Swan all living there; Scott of Alan wadset the lands of 'Over Maines of Hassindaneburne' in 1580. Hector Turnbull was there in 1581. Gavin Elliot from here was murdered in about 1618, probably by Hector Turnbull in Clarilaw. John Hope and James Shiel were listed there among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694. It was home of the Dicksons who made the area famous for establishing the first and largest nursery and seeds business in Britain, starting in 1729 and expanding to Hawick by 1766 (and being the progenitor for nurseries in Edinburgh, Chester and Perth). Archibald Dickson was there in the 1780s. Residents there in 1799 included 'yeoman' Archibald Dickson, servant Henry Duncan, servant William Tait and gardener John Thomson and in 1801 were Archibald Dickson, servants Robert Lawson, Robert Miller and Adam Leyden, Gardeners George Brydon and David McLeod and apprentice Archibald Scott. Christian Dickson was living there in 1861 and George Mack was farmer later in the 1860s. A new house was constructed in 1876, with designs by Wardrop and Reid and there were alterations in the 1890s to designs by J.P. Alison. Hawick Provost Robert Fraser Watson lived there in later life. At one time the house contained the writing desk of Napoleon Bonaparte, purchased by Watson. The mansion was demolished in the 1950s, but some of the trees planted in the area may survive from the days of the Dicksons. There is still a farm there. Just south of the farm buildings there is a road bridge over the railway (it is 'Hassendenburn' in 1566, 'Hassindaneburne' in 1579 and 1581, 'Hassindane burne' in 1580 and 'Hasandenburne' in 1694; it is probably what is marked 'Burnefoote' on Blaeu's 1654 map, between the Kirk and Tower of Hassendean).

Hassendean Burn (has-in-deen-burn) n. stream that passes through the former Parish of Hassendean. It effectively rises on the eastern slopes of Drinkstone Hill, running roughly to the east and being joined by the Dearly Burn and Huntlaw Burn. It turns roughly south at Hassendean village, with a rail bridge over it at a culvert, then joining the Teviot near Hassendeanburn.

Hassendean Burnfit (has-in-deen-burn-fi) n. former name for lands near where the Hassendeanburn meets the Teviot, presumably lower down than Hassendeanburn farm itself. This is probably the 'Burnfoott' listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish, with John Veitch and William Liddell listed there among the poor of the Parish. It may be the 'Burnfoote' marked near to Hassendean on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Hassendean Common (has-in-deen-ko-min) n. former Common of Hassendean Parish, to the west of Hassendean. It bordered on the lands of Wester Groundstone, Drinkstone and Clarilaw. Its division was discussed at least as early as 1757, when it was part of the Parishes of Minto and Wilton. It was divided in 1763 and subsequently enclosed into fields (a detailed map exists from 1762), at the instigation of the Buccleuch estates; an action was brought in 1762 against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch by Capt. John Douglas of Midshiels, John Chisholme of Stirches, Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and others. As well as those men William Scott of Burnhead also received a share. The name survives in the farm in that area. A drove road used to cross the area.

Hassendean Court (has-in-deen-kōr) n. part of Stirches, off Hazelwood Road, built in 1975 and named after the Hassendean district.

Hassendean Kirk

Hassendean Hill (has-in-deen-hil) n. small hill between Horsleyhill and Hassendean farms. It reaches a height of 171 m.

Hassendean Kirk (has-in-deen-kirk) n. church of the ancient parish of Hassendean. It originally belonged to the Bishop of Glasgow, being granted by David I, confirmed in 1170. However, it was granted by the Bishop of Glasgow to Melrose Abbey, for the sustenance for poor pilgrims coming to Melrose, as confirmed in about 1195, 1206, 1220 and 1231/2. It was dedicated to St. Mungo (or Kentigern) in the reign of William the Lion and then in 1193/4 patronage was given to the monks of Melrose Abbey, who built a house there, the Monk's Tower, as a hospital for wayfarers and pilgrims. In 1315 the profits from the church were re-assigned to Melrose Abbey, with a confirmation in 1326. In 1488 the Vicar was bound not to interfere with the Abbey's right to the 'erde silver of the quer', i.e. the money charged for burials in the kirk choir. William Grahamslaw was recorded being 'apud ecclesiam de hassinden' in 1493, suggesting that he was farmer of lands there. Melrose Abbey held the church essentially until the Reformation; there was still a rental for the 'kirkland of Hassinden' recorded in about 1564. These kirklands were probably the 'Hassindenkirk' farmed by John Turnbull of Hassendeanbank in 1564. The patronage of the church and rentals were granted to Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in about 1560, and went to William, Earl of Morton in 1608. The churchyard there must have held local burials for many centuries. In 1670 it was declared that Turnbull of Knowe owned the burial place within the bell house. There were still marriages taking place there in 1687. The parish was suppressed in 1689 and the church roof removed to Roberton, amid scenes of great hostility in 1690 (not in 1687, as suggested by the verse). This followed several decades of uncertainty over the status of the parish. A crowd gathered to try to prevent the unroofing, and the first man to climb a ladder was said to have been killed falling after being struck by a stone. Sheriff Douglas was called and was supposedly cursed by an old woman. There was also said to have been a scuffle near Hornshole, with the church bell thrown in the river (and either left there or retrieved to be the bell for Roberton). The historical record of events indicate that it was indeed a serious riot and that workmen were injured (but not killed), with several of the heritors accused of instigating the riot. The last incumbent was Francis Scott, who was removed in 1689 after the Revolution; other local ministers filled in for a few years, the last being Samuel Johnstone in 1693 (perhaps preceded by James Borland). In 1716 the widow of Francis Scott returned the church paraphernalia to Roberton, including bible, pulpit cloth, pewter vessels and session books. The ruined church can be seen in a sketch of 1788 (by Adam de Cardonnel, based on a drawing in red chalk by Archibald Rutherford in 1776), showing decorated arches. It was largely swept away, along with some of the graveyard, in a flood of the Teviot in January 1796, the destruction completed by the 1806 flood, so that now no sign of it remains. The exposed coffins and headstones of the Ogilvies were removed to Ashkirk kirkyard. The site of the church is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and since the Teviot has changed its course somewhat, the location now corresponds to a bank on the south side. Several pieces of sculpted stone, said to have been from the church, were discovered in the rock garden of Teviot Bank, including a 'cresset' (mediaeval lamp stand) described in 1918. There is additionally part of a carved tombstone built into the garden wall at Minto House. And a piece of sculpted stone, the capital of an Ionic wall pillar, was found in a field beside Roberton Kirk in 1963, which may also be a piece of the old Kirk at Hassendean. The old bell in Roberton Kirk, inscribed 'For the Tolbuith of Melrose – 1649' may have hung at Hassendean for a while before being removed to Roberton, and possibly being thrown into Hornshole by angry parishioners according to tradition. It is recorded in 1716 that the widow of the last minister gave some church items to Roberton Parish, namely a large bible, pulpit cloth, pewter vessels and session books. There is an existing communion token that is plain and square, bearing the letters 'H.K.' A roll of the ministers is: Richard, Dean around 1170s to 1190s; William, Vicar around 1280; John Aikenhead, Vicar in 1474; David 'Hugonis', Vicar in 1478; probably John Cavers in the 1480s; Walter Douglas in at least 1488/9–1500; John Duncan, Vicar until 1538; George Scott, Vicar from 1539; Kentigern Reid, 1539; John Duncan (again), Vicar until 1544; John Anderson, Vicar from 1544; Patrick Crawford, Chaplain in 1549; Thomas Weston, Vicar c.1568–76; William Auchmowtie (Minister, along with several neighbouring parishes), from 1574; John Scott, Reader in 1575; Thomas Newbie, Reader 1576–82; John Bonar 1594–c.95; Simon Scott, from 1595; John Mather 1602–09; Robert Collace, Reader in 1606;

Hassendean Mill

Allan Lundie 1610–11; James Mitchelson 1611–13; Alexander Forrest 1613–58; William Mushet 1664–78; Francis Scott 1678–89 – 'It was in the year o' aughty-sev'n Highchesters ca'd oot a' his men To meet the Shirra of Tividale At the Kirk o' Hassendean' [T] ('K. of Hasindein' is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Hassendeankirk (has-in-deen-kirk) n. former name for lands associated with the church of Hassendean. 'William Trumbill of Hassindane Kirk' is recorded in 1553/4. It is 'Hassindenkirck' in 1564 when John Turnbull of Hassendeanbank complained that he had 80 sheep stolen from there. These lands were formerly associated with Melrose Abbey.

Hassendean Ladylands (has-in-deen-lā-dee-landz) n. another name for Ladyland.

Hassendean Mains (has-in-deen-mānz) n. former name for a farm in Hassendean Parish, presumably being the 'home farm' for the Baron of Hassendean. A charter of 1516 records Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme gaining the lands of 'Nether Mains of Hassendean' and the 'Mains of Hassendean' from the forfeiture Alexander, Lord Home. In 1535 there was a revocation of a charter James Lundy had for 'Ouir and Nethir Manys of Hassindene', and also a charter Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme had for 'Estir Manys of Hassendene'. In 1550/1 Robert, son and heir of Adam Scott of 'Nethirmanis of Hassinden' is recorded being infested in the lands of Little Drinkstone (this is probably the same as Adam and Robert Scott of Clarilaw and Alton). The 'Middle Mains' and the 'East Mains' were described in the 16th century. The Middle Mains was granted to Gavin Elliot by Alexander, Lord Home (superior of Hassendean) in 1555, along with Horsleyhill. This may be the 'Hassinden-manis' where Robert Dickson was recorded in 1591. In 1616 the 'Middle Mains of Hassendean' was sold by the Earl of Home to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. The Earl of Tarras held the lands in 1694, when the residents recorded there were George Scott, Walter Riddell, Margaret Riddell, Thomas Turnbull, Walter Turnbull, Robert Learmonth and Robert Brown, with James Grieve listed among the poor.

Hassendean Mill (has-in-deen-mil) n. former corn mill at Hassendean farm. It is clearly marked, on the east side of the Hassendean Burn, on the 1718 Buccleuch survey. The mill dam and mill lade are marked on the 1841 Ordnance Survey map. It is recorded being repaired in 1744 and in 1752 its 'cauld and dam' suffered great damage from a flood in July. Andrew Hood was miller there in 1797.

the Hassendean Oak (thū-has-in-deen-ōk)

n. outstanding example of an ancient oak tree (Quercus petraea) near Hassendean. It has a short, squat trunk, with an extensive crown, suggesting it was once pollarded. The trunk has a circumference of about 20 ft (194 cm) and it reaches a height of 26 m.

Hassendean Pairish (has-in-deen-pā-reesh)

n. old parish of Hassendean, centred around the farms of Hassendean, but extending into the modern Wilton area, and also containing a detached part in the Borthwick valley. It existed from at least 1155, when Malcolm IV granted the land to Walter, son of Alan the Steward. The chapel belonged to the monks of Melrose from the end of the 12th century, when they were given its lands and tithes in order to build a hospital for pilgrims to Melrose. This building was referred to as the Monk's Tower, and the lands connected with it were called the Monk's Croft. The church itself was situated near where the Hassendean Burn meets the Teviot. The main part of the Parish was burned along with much of Teviotdale by Hertfords men in 1545. The Cunningham's were superiors of the eastern half Barony from the early 14th century, for about 300 years. In 1598 some of the 'non-entries' in the Barony were gifted to the Diocese of St. Andrews by James IV. By the 17th century most of the land was owned by Scott of Buccleuch. In 1643 the total valuation of the lands in the Parish was £6326 and in 1678 was £7704. The Parish teinds were valued at £232 6s 8d in 1643; this valuation continued in 1707 and in 1788, when transferred to Wilton, and still held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £4200 in Roxburghshire and £1200 in Selkirkshire. In 1678 the rents in the parish were valued at £7793 10s 8d in Roxburghshire and £1133 6s 8d in Selkirkshire. The Parish long had an isolated part in the Borthwick valley, roughly between the Harden and Robertson Burns; this part may have been served by the chapel at Chapelhill (just across the Borthwick), with a priest supplied by the Parish, and lasting until about the Reformation. A series of petitions and inquiries finally led to the whole of Hassendean being joined to the newly created Robertson Parish in 1658, but reinstated in 1666, only to be finally suppressed in 1689 and redistributed to Minto, Robertson and Wilton. Most of the lands went to Minto, while the vicarage tiends etc. were given to the new parish of Robertson. The church roof was removed to Robertson in 1690 amid scenes of violence, resulting in a workman being killed and apparently a curse being placed on the Douglasses of Cavers. The graveyard continued to be used until partially swept away in a Teviot flood of 1796, which also removed the remaining ruins of the old church. A register of births and marriages from the parish has been preserved, covering the period 1679–89 and included within the records of Robertson Parish.

pond at Hassendean, probably formerly used for curling. The 1812 minutes of Hawick Curling Club notes that 'R. Wilson bet Jas. Millar that the Dove Mount Well is 20 feet higher than Hassendean Pond. R.W. lost. Thereafter Millar bet Wilson that the Dove Mount Well is no higher than Hassendean Pond, but Mr Thomson (who decided the former bet offhand) could not decide this without a great deal of trouble'.

Hassendean Schuil (has-in-deen-skil) n. former school in Hassendean Parish. The only known schoomaster there is Robert Collace, recorded in 1613 and 1631.Hassendean Station (has-in-deen-stā-shin)

n. railway station on the Waverley Line situated at Hassendean. Built in 1849, it was in active service from 1850. This was the main station for the area around Denholm, and the first station on the line to the north of Hawick. Denholm Bridge was opened in 1865, to connect the village with its nearest station. The station still has a footbridge connecting the platforms (which was restored in 2016), while the main station building has been renovated for domestic use. The section of railway nearby had a couple of railway bridges and a road bridge. A cart ran every day between Denholm and the Station in the latter part of the 19th and early 20th centuries. Stationmasters included: Robert Watson, c.1854–c.81; George Watson, c.1881–1906; Andrew Dickson, until 1929; Mr. Alexander, 1930s; Mr. Stewart, until 1934; George Black, 1939–66. Goods services ceased in 1964, it was downgraded to an unstaffed halt in 1967 and closed permanently in 1969. In 1989 it was purchased by architect Tom Pyemount and converted into a private residence, retaining much of the station ambience.

Hassendean Toon (has-in-deen-toon) n. former farm, probably an alternative name for the main farm at Hassendean itself, which was also referred to as 'Toonheid' or 'Knowetoonheid'. Like much of the area the lands there became part of Minto Parish in 1690 (it is 'Hassyndane toune' in 1548/9).

Hassendean Toor (has-in-deen-toor, -tow-ur)

n. former tower in Hassendean, also known as ‘the Monk’s Tower’. It is referred to as the ‘Castle of Hassendene’ in a charter of about 1537. It could be the same as the ‘tower and fortalice’ at Easter Hassendean, mentioned in a sasine of 1532. It passed from Melrose Abbey to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1546/7. It is referred to in a confirming charter of 1574 as ‘Hassindean alias Munkis Tower’, 1653 as ‘Hasendene-tour alias Munkisture’ and similarly in 1661. In 1663 ‘all and hail the toure and fortalice callit Hassendein Tour alias Monckis Tour, with the barne, yairdis, girnallis, meidowis, croftis, housis, and bigingis thair of’ is listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch. ‘Scott of Satchells refers to ‘John Scot of Monks-tower, brother to old William Scot of Altoun’. The Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1862 describes that the remains were removed about 15 years earlier and the stones used to build the farmhouse at Hassendean.

Hassington (has-inng-tin) n. hamlet in Eccles Parish, Berwickshire, with Hassington West Mains and Hassington East Mains nearby. There were Dicksons here in the late 16th and early 17th centuries and with variable spellings, this makes it easy to confuse with the later Dicksons of Hassendean.

haste (hāst) v., arch. to hasten, make haste – ‘...he has seen the Town’s Herd scare and haste them out of the way with his dogs’ [C&L1767].

Hastie (hās-tee) n. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1752 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Little. He married Margaret Cairns and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1650.

John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1690, with witnesses Walter Scott and Andrew Mark. John (c.1680–c.1730) member of a family that had been pipers in Jedburgh for generations. His death was lamented in a poem published in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), but dating from decades earlier. It was also reprinted by John Leyden in ‘The Complaynt of Scotland’, referring to it as ‘this excellent Dirge, which elucidates so much the manners of the Border Pipers’. From the poem we learn that he was also a fiddler; it ends with ‘Here lies dear John, whase pipe and drone, And fiddle aft has made us glad; Whase cheerfu’ face our feasts did grace – A sweet and merry lad’. He was said to be a player of the Lowland bagpipe (rather than a bellows-driven pipe of the Northumberland form) and to be the first piper to introduce several tunes that became common among Teviotdale pipers. He was succeeded in about 1731 by his nephew Robin (or Robert), who was last of the Hasties to be piper in Jedburgh. Robert (16th C.) acted as factor in Lilliesleaf in 1562. Probably the same lawyer also acted for Isabel, Lasy Ker of Cessford in the same year. In 1560, along with John, he held lands in Maxpoffle and in 1562 is described being in Bowden. Robert (18th/19th C.) mason at Dovesford in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. Robert (b.c.1780) dyer in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jean Gledstains and their children included Alexander (b.1646). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Templehall in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797 (formerly written ‘Haistie’ and variants).

Hastings (hās-tinz) n. Sir Robert (13th/14th C.) Englishman who was Sheriff of Constable of Roxburgh at least 1298–1304. In 1302 he, along with Sir Alexander Baliol was appointed to superintend the construction of a fortress in Selkirk. In 1301 he pursued some men who had stolen cattle from England, and along with Sir Hugh de Audley and others captured the 12 men, including 2 of the appellation ‘del Hepe’. This was part of an agreement between himself, his brother Sir Richard and Sir Hugh de Audley for pursuing robbers in Roxburghshire. Also in 1301 he wrote to King Edward describing actions that had been taken against John de Soulis. In 1301/2 he was one of 2 men appointed by Edward I to oversee the construction of a new castle at Selkirk. In 1303/4 he was Sheriff at the inquest to decide on the inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. Warren (1732–1818) East India Company civil servant who went on to become Governor-General of India, but was impeached for corruption (although acquitted on his return to Britain). After his trial he stayed at the Mossaul Inn and visited Hawick as a guest of James Anderson at Wilton lodge, being famously ordered off Thomas Turnbull’s lands at Wilton Glebe when out hunting – ‘Ye’re that damned Indian rubber (robber) Warren Hastings; get off the ground at yince’ [RM].

Haswell (has-wel) n. James (1714/5–82) probably son of John, who was Provost of Jedburgh. He himself served as Provost of Jedburgh in 1766. He was Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire in 1780.

He married May Paterson and had a son, John. He was buried at Jdburgh Abbey. John (17th C.) taxed for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Margaret (17th C.) described as ‘liferenter of Uttersiderigg’ in a 1643 evaluation of Wilton Parish lands, where she is listed as the 5th largest landowner. She is probably from the family of later Provosts of Jedburgh. She could be the Margaret, daughter of Archibald Maxwell of Cowhill, who married William Elliot, younger of Falnash in 1635, and was granted liferent of Outerside; Elliot died in 1637 and it seems reasonable to suppose that she remarried. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. He was surety for John Buckham, who was also in Belses. William (17th C.) on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He could be the William, married to Marion Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Agnes (b.1679); Isobel (b.1681); Margaret (b.1685); and Janet (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Robert Scott and John Mark. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for wright Walter Gledstains and his wife Janet Scott in 1678 and another for William Taylor in 1680 (also written ‘Hasuell’ and ‘Hasswell’; cf. Hessel).

hat (ha’) pp., arch. hit – ‘An’ they spat upon him, an’ tuik the reed an’ hatt him on the heæd’ [HSR] (also written ‘haat’ and ‘hatt’; a form of the past tense noted by E.C. Smith; cf. hat and the past participle form hutten).

hatefi (hā’-fi) adj. hateful – ‘For he whytewasches himsel in his ain eyne untill his inequitie be fuund til be hætefu’ [HSR] (also spelled ‘hatefu’).

the Hates (thu-hāts) n. name for a field near Berryfell, formerly part of the Cavers estate, associated with Haits Hill (mentioned by Walter Deans in 1890).

Hat Knowe (ha’-now) n. ridge on the north side of the Maidens. There is a relatively well-preserved section of the Catrail here.

hats (hawts) n., pl. fashionable headwear has changed over the ages. In the 17th and 18th centuries the ‘blue bonnet’ was most common, with only wealthier citizens wearing three-cornered hats and the like. In 1716 the public raffle of a hat was the cause for a large late-night meeting, which degenerated into a drunken brawl. The manufacture of hats in Hawick started in the 1780s, but only lasted a few years. It was revived in the 1820s by 2 of the Wilson brothers (James and William) who were very successful, but moved the business to London after only a few years.

hatter (ha’-ur) v. to bother, trouble, vex, worry – ‘deh hatter yersel’, ‘ee’re lookin awfi hattered’, ‘Wi’ the porridge stick nabbed frae a sair-hattered mother’ [??], work in a laborious or careless way – ‘A heh thae thochts ti faa back on ... whan A hatter on, maist deaved an daivert an donnert wui the rummellin dunner o an eend-on bizz’ [ECS], n. bother, trouble, difficulty, struggle, fluster – ‘what a hatter hei’s hevin ti climm they stair’, ‘it’s ower much o a hatter’, ‘Sic a hatter! hatterin (ha’-ur-in) n., arch. a wearying with worry, tiredness with overwork – ‘Hei got a sair hatterin’ wi’ a’ thae fasshes’ [GW].

hattert (ha’-ur) pp., arch. troubled, hassled, wearied with worry or overwork – ‘He was awfully hatter’t wi’ thae by-hoors’ [GW] (also ‘hattered’, see hatter).

the Hattery (thu-ha’-u-ree, -ha-tu-ree) n. former hat manufacturers situated near the bottom of the east side of Wilton Path in the early years of the 19th century. It can be seen on Andrew Kennedy’s painting of the 1846 Common Riding Races and on the 1810 sketch of Wilton (although it is unclear which building it is precisely). The house behind it was referred to as ‘Naeplace’. This is probably the same business that was run by James Wilson in the latter part of the 18th century. It may also have been taken over by Mr. McCaskie, came from Edinburgh in about 1815 and was in about 1820 purchased by manufacturer William Wilson William, for his sons William and James Wilson (no direct relation to the earlier hatter). This business wound up in about 1824 when James Wilson moved to join his brother in London.

Hatton (ha-tin) n. Tim (1958/9–) born in London, he studied engineering at Loughborough University. He trained for the ministry late in life and was historic church building officer for the Diocese of Manchester. In 2020 he became the Church Army Pioneer Evangelist of St. Cuthbert’s Church in Hawick, as well as for Selkirk and Galashiels.

haugh (hawf, hawch) n., arch. an area of grass or meadow beside a river, level ground in a valley – ‘The haughs, or vallies, are composed of loam, gravel and sand, in different proportions’ [RRG], ‘... You’re the pride of our land, On Tiviot’s fair strand, You’re [sic] palace our haughs does adorn, &c’ [BY], ‘The timid sheep, distracted, ran From haugh and grassy dale ...’ [JTe], ‘... Wi’ its howes and haughs an’ a’ [TK], ‘Fareweel! ye balmy haughs an’ knows, Where love an’ freedom aye forgather’ [JS], ‘On the green of the bank the primrose grew, And Spring tripped over the haughs anew’ [WHO], ‘... The hills and the haughs and the burns and the lochs, are caressed by a warm healing hand’ [TD], ‘This haugh, this dale, yea all this glorious land, Is home to me, God’s given, guarded home, My Borderland’ [WL], ‘River of dreams, you are dear to us ever, Dear where the broad haughs invite you to Tweed ...’ [WL], ‘... As bye his haugh the Tei’ot rummle’t’ [DH], ‘Green now the haughs where peaceful the Teviot flows ...’ [IWS] (also spelled ‘hauch’; the word is used in many local place-names, see haughs).

Haugh (thu-hawch) n. former farmstead in the upper Jed valley, just south of Roughlee, on the north side of the river. There were Laidlaws there in the late 16th century. The tenant there in 1669 and 1694 was Thomas Laidlaw (marked ‘Hauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and also on Stobie’s 1770 map; it could be the same place marked ‘The Hass’ on today’s maps).

the Haugh (thu-hawf, thu-hawch) n. the Big Haugh or Common Haugh, being once the main central part of Hawick’s common land – ‘... Till round the Haugh our flag is flying’ [AB], ‘Hear him tell the weel-kenn’d story, When the Haugh was in its glory ...’ [RH], ‘... An’ the end o’ a Haugh ceegar!’ [RM], ‘Here’s much good cheer, join in the fun, There’s laughter in the air, The Haugh goes smiling once a year, At Common-Riding Fair’ [WFC], ‘The Haugh was aye oor haunt for wilder ploys, Games that we never lairned at schule ...’ [WL].

Haughheid (hawch-heed) n. former name for an area near where the Boonraw Burn flows into the Teviot, below Bucklands, but more explicitly on the south side of the Teviot. Walter Scott ‘in the Hauchheid’ recorded in 1526 may be the earliest known resident (unless this was a different Haughheid). The land there was owned by the Douglasses of Cavers. James Oliver was there in 1778. George Douglas of Cavers was recorded in 1788 and 1811 as owner of ‘Part of Weensland, called Haughheid’ (which was valued at £27 6s 8d). The house near the junction of the A698 and A6088 is Haughheid House, and for a long time has been the northern extremity of Hawick Parish. The road over to Bonchester (and on to the Carter Bar) was only opened around 1830. The flat area at the big bend in the A698 was formerly the Town Dump, before being developed as the Mainetti factory in 1999. There are places of the same namer Synton and in Eckford Parish, once a seat of the Scotts – ‘... Or down where the croonin’ Teviot Slips quaetly by Haughheid?’ [WL] (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Haughheid (hawch-heed) n. farm to the west of North Synton, located between the B6400 and the Ale Water. William Murray was farmer there in

Haughheid see Heugh Heid

Haughheid (hawch-heed) n. former lands on the Kale Water, near Eckford Mill, seat of the Halls. There were Scotts here in the early 17th century. It was here in 1678 that Richard Cameron (founder of the ‘Cameronians’) was licensed as a non-conformist minister in Castleton. The house at that time was home to the Covenanter martyr Henry Hall, and the preachers present were John Welch and John Semple.

Havelock Bank (hav-lok-plis) n. group of houses built around 1974 at the top left-hand side of Havelock Street, after which it was named. They were originally constructed as teachers housing at the time the new Wilton School was built, but were later sold off privately.

Havelock Court (hav-lok-kōr) n. group of houses adjacent to Havelock Street, named in 2006.

Havelock Nurseries (hav-lok-nur-se-reez) n. another name for Dovemount Nurseries. It was also known as ‘the Havvie’. The Youth Centre was built on the last piece of nursery lands.

Havelock Place (hav-lok-plis) n. curving street off Havelock Street, built in 1947 and named after Sir Henry Havelock. The footpath at the end is sometimes called ‘Havelock Place Lane’.

Havelock Street (hav-lok-stree) n. street in Wilton, named in 1864, previously part of the road being called Dovemount. It was also referred to as Sawmill Street in the 1859 Ordnance Survey map. The top of the street used to end with the entrance to Silverbuthall (or ‘Sillerbithall’) estate, with the gate lodge for the estate still being there at No. 23. The name comes from Sir Henry Havelock (1795–1857), an army general who fought in Asia, who had an enormous state funeral and after whom streets in most large towns were named (as well as giving his name to the cloth covering worn over a cap to protect the back of the neck from the sun) – ‘...Its streets tae me are golden paved, Frae Havelock Street tae Haggis Ha’ [JRE].

haver (hā-vur) v. to talk nonsense, babble – ‘stop yer haverin’, – ‘Or folks will be haiverin’ There’s some lad ye like ...’ [GWe], ‘Daft Jamie was a well known lad, He wouldna harm a fly, He wandered through the streets at night And havered tae the sky’ [Sco], n. nonsense, gossip, piece of nonsense – ‘He’d mony a queer, funny haver, But neither a cow nor a yowe’ [JoHa], ‘There’s deil a heid o’ your braw beas’s missin’, Gie owre your havers, sit doon and listen!’ [WL], someone who habitually talks nonsense – ‘ee can be a right haver sometimes’ (also spelled ‘haiver’; origin uncertain).

Havic (ha-vik) n. former spelling of Hawick, e.g. in the 1431 document transferring the lands of Heap from James Langlands of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch.

Havician (haw-vik-ee-in) n. name occasionally used to refer to an inhabitant of Hawick – ‘The Havicians, with the rest, were left ‘To feed the crow on Floddiana’s plain, And vegetate the soil that each had sought to gain’ [JW], ‘...but to a Havician, the sport round the Haugh, ..., had something in them of a peculiarly interesting nature’ [WNK], ‘...That words must ever fail to make it clear To those in whose veins no Havician blood Has ever found a course in which to run, While Hawick triumphs over flame and flood’ [JCG].

Havick (ha-vik) n. H.M.S. Havick was a 365 ton sloop, which sank in a storm off Jersey in 1800, and was recently excavated. The word is also an occasional surname.

Haviko (ha-vi-kō) n. Esperanto for Hawick.

havins (hā-vinz) n., pl., poet. behaviour, manners, sense – ‘...Although the sinner, I wot, Has neither heart, havins, nor brain’ [FL], ‘Ane Psalm o’ David, whan he changet his havins afore Abimelach’ [HSR], ‘My havins sall be oordiret wyselie in ane perfite waye’ [HSR].

the Havvie (thu-haw-vee) n. former popular name for Havelock Nurseries.

haw (haw) n., poet. the hawthorn or its red berry – ‘... And thick on ilk hedge hung the red polish’d haw’ [JoHa], ‘... An’ sweet blaws the breeze thro’ the haw-blossom’d dean’ [JoHa], ‘What’s wrong wi the world? We hed mony haws – and nae snaws ...’ [DH], ‘Sombre hedges crimson lit by haw-heavy twigs and boughs’ [DH].

Haweik (haw-wik) n. spelling of Hawick in Bagimond’s Roll of 1275.

Hawewyk (haw-wik) n. another of the early variants of Hawick.

Haw Gill (haw-gil) n. small stream that forms part of the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, running into Muir Burn and eventually the Liddel Water. It is shown on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as part of the bounds of the farm of Nether Whisgills.

Hawhic (haw-wik) n. one more of the early variants of Hawick.

Hawic (haw-wik) n. an early spelling variant of Hawick, being one of the more common. It is recorded, for example, in the Roll of Expenses of King John of England in 1209, confirmation of a grant by the Lovels in 1246 and 1248, the Scottish Rolls of 1347, the sasine for the Cousinlands in 1447, the charter for Whitchesters in 1455, the Exchequer Rolls in 1455, an indenture between the Douglasses of Drumlanrig and Scotts of Buccleuch in 1470 and in some entries of the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493.

Hawich (ha-vich, ha-wich) n. common misspelling for Hawick, as well as one of the known earlier spellings. This is a German surname and a place name, including East and West Hawich in Massachusetts, U.S.A.

Ha Wick (ha-wik) n. small inlet on Hoy in the Orkneys (the origin is 'high bay' in Gaelic).

Hawick (hIk, hoik) n. oor ain auld toon, population (1991) 15,812, at the confluence of the River Teviot and the Slitrig Water, in the old county of Roxburghshire, where it is the largest town. It is one of the furthest towns from the sea (about 69 km) in Scotland. One of Scotland's leading textile centres, it is also famous for its Common Riding, rugby, and long tradition of civic independence. It is first recorded in the 12th century, and built up around the Tower and St. Mary's Church. It has been a Burgh of Barony since some time in the 15th century, with the earliest existing Charter being from Sir James Douglas in 1537. It was burned by the English in 1418, 1548 and 1565, and the inhabitants burned it themselves in 1570 so as to not to provide food or shelter to the invaders. Almost all records before the 1630s were lost through incursions of 'Englishmen and thieves' – 'Up wi' Hawick, its rights and common ...' [AB], '... That while we hold in memory the warrior days of old, Hawick's trade shall prosper more and more, her sons be more extolled' [JEDM], 'But this I ken for certain shair – A day frae Hawick's a day wasted' [DH], '... And Hawick there in the middle, The centre o' them a' ' [WL] (through the 12th and 13th centuries there are spellings like 'Hawhic', 'Hawyk', etc., which continued until the 17th century, with the modern spelling first appearing in the early 14th century; the origin of the name is uncertain, with 'hedged houses' from the Old English 'haga wic' being the most popular, although there are no early enough examples with the 'g' to prove this, and other ideas, such as 'town on the low pasture' or 'high dwelling' have also been suggested).

Hawick (haw-wik, hoik) n. the other one, population 536, in Kandiyohi County, Minnesota, U.S.A., Zip code 56246. It is on the Burlington Northern Railroad and MN highway 23, close to the city of Willmar (and coincidentally to the slightly larger town of Melrose) and 68 miles from Minneapolis. The site was first settled in 1857, officially incorporated in 1866 and named 'Roseville'. A station was built there when the St. Cloud and Willmar branch of what was the 'St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway' reached the town in 1886. The station was originally named 'Russell', but said to have been renamed Hawick by railway manager Robert Manuel (son of a Hawick Burgh Surveyor) when it was realised there was another Russell elsewhere. There is a separate Roseville nearer to Minneapolis, and the name 'Hawick' stuck for this little township. The usual pronunciation is of course different, with the w pronounced and the accent on the first syllable (note that details of the naming are unclear, it is unclear who exactly Robert Manuel was, and there is a separate story of a Norwegian name 'Harvig' which became Hawick).

Hawick (haw-wik) n. the third one, a deserted mediæval village in Northumberland, near where Hawick Farm and Hawick Craggs are on the modern Ordnance Survey maps. In the 12th century the village of Hawick was part of the Lordship of Bolbec, and held by the Lords of Bolam in the 13th century. Thomas of Woodstock, 6th and youngest son of Edward III of England, was created Duke of Gloucester there by his brother Richard II in 1385 on an expedition to Scotland. There is reference to a 'Bastell House' there in 1541 and a record of 1584 records that 4 'decays' had taken place since 1535, although it is unclear precisely what this refers to. It is absent from the hearth tax list of 1666, there are only 6 families recorded there in 1734 and 4 buildings in a map of 1769. The township was transferred from Kirkharle to Kirkwhelpington parish in 1847, by which time it must have been already little more than a farm. Much of the earlier earthworks have been put under the plough, but the boundaries of the former village can still partially be seen in ridge and furrow. The nearby Chapel Hill probably contained the chapel near its summit; St. Katherin's chapel at Hawick is recorded in the 13th century, and a font plus bones were dug up there in the 18th century. Nearby there is a neolithic site, consisting of a small area of sandstone containing at least a dozen cup-shaped marks, some of which are apparently arranged along the rim of a circle (the origin is suggested to be the Old English 'haga wic', i.e. the same as for our town, although there is no indication of any direct connection).

Hawick (ha-wik) n. name of a former parish in Queensland, Australia, near the town of Blackall, approximate Latitude 24°29' South, Longitude 145°46' East.

Hawick (ha-wik) n. homestead in South Australia, north of the town of Borderland, approximate location is Latitude 35°52' South, Longitude 140°53' East.

Hawick (ha-wik) n. fictional district in the video game 'Grand Theft Auto'. In 2013 the text at the Grant Theft Auto V' web-site describes the shopping experiences of the town of Los Santos, including 'the disheveled and disaffected drug addict hipster vibe in Hawick'. This caused much offence when reported in the press, although 'hipster' seems quite complementary.

Hawick (hIk) n. the dialect spoken in and around Hawick – 'ee're no allowed ti speak Hawick it the skuil, ee heh'i speak posh', 'Braid Haaick' [ECS].

Hawick (hIk) n. song with words by J.L. Hercus and music by Adam Grant. The words come from a poem penned by James Hercus, sometime before his death in 1885, with the music coming later. Since the words describe many of the Hawick traditions, it is somewhat mysterious that it should have been written by an Orkadian, who, although living in the Borders, appears to have had no strong ties to Hawick. It is recorded being sung as a new song at the 1898 Colour Bussing by R.T. Paterson. The music was said to be by 'M. Rosenberg', which was a pseudonym for Adam Grant. It was then sung regularly at Colour Bussings, and there is a suggestion that the tune may have changed, with the modern one first sung at the 1910 Colour Bussing by George Scott. It was popular with singers John Campbell and Robert T. Roddan.

Hawick (ha-wik) n. A.P. (20th C.) Guizer Jarl in the 1921 Shetland Up-Helly-Aa festival, so a 'Hawick' man has been the Shetland Cornet (in a festival that, incidentally, is only about 200 years old). Andrew of 'Skatsta' (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Victor, he is recorded in Shetland documents of 1575, 1580, 1586. In 1575 he was 'of Stratsa' in the Register of the Privy Seal when one of those listed as having been falsely accused by Lord Robert Stewart, tyrannical Earl of Orkney and Shetland. In 1578 he was a debtor to the burgesses of Dysart. Then in 1590, along with his brother Daniel and others, he was accused of attacking Robert Cheyne of Ury, who was Bailie of 'Tingwall' and had come to Zetland to hear a case brought against him by 'ane pure wedow, callit Marione Johnesdochter'; not appearing before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. He is also mentioned in a charter of 1613, although that may be his son.

Andrew Hugh (1905–62) son of Gideon Anderson Smith and Jane Hawick (so he took his mother's name). He was born at Leith and married Barbara Nicolson Malcolmson. He is buried at Knab Side Cemetery, Lerwick.

Andrina Isbister (1891–1963) daughter of Thomas and Anderina Smith. She is buried at Hisswick, Northmavine. Bartholomew (16th/17th C.) possibly the same as the son of Vincent, he married Catherine Sinclair in Orkney in 1612. His wife left a testament in 1630 when he is described as 'Bartilimo Hawick of Nescheoun, parish of Delting'.

Daniel (16th C.) brother of Andrew. In 1590 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to answer charges of attacking one of the administrators of justice in Zetland.

Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) married William Lamb in Jedburgh in 1698. Elizabeth (18th/19th C.) married Magnus Stove in 1811.

Elizabeth Mary (1896–1989) daughter of Thomas and Anderina Smith. She married John Tulloch in 1931. She is buried in Knab Side Cemetery.

Edmund (b.c.1630) farmer in Pulburgh, West Sussex. He is recorded in 1690 in a list of seatings at Sidlesham Church.

George (16th C.) recorded as Reader at Kirkbuddo in 1574. Gideon Smith (1832–1909) born at Sandvoe, Northmavine, Shetland. He married Louisa Ratter and died at Pund of Mangaster.

Gilbert (b.1863–1941) born at Tington, Sullon, Northmavine. He married Barbara Henderson Tulloch in 1892.

Isabella Ann 'Bella' (1910–90) musically talented Shetland woman, whose married name was Hunter. She restarted the Lerwick Girl Guides, arranged musicals and operettas and gave Scottish country dancing lessons.

A book of reminiscences of her life was written by Ann Hill in 1993. James (17th C.) Jedburgh resident, who is recorded having several children christened there in the 1640s and 1650s, including James in 1647, who was probably the eldest son and father of a later generation of Jedburgh Hawicks.

It is unclear whether he was related to the Shetland branch, or descended from one of the earlier 'de Hawick's. James Cheyne (1855–1927) born at Houbans, Northmavine in Shetland. He married Margaret Henderson. James (1893–1976) son of Thomas and Anderina Smith. He was born at Nibon and is buried at Hillswick. Jane (1858–1931) born at Gruna, Gunnister, Northmavine. She married Gideon Anderson Smith and is buried at Mid Yell. John (13th C.) recorded in the Boldon Book of 1183, a listing of the Bishop of Durham's lands. Under the village of Whickham he is 'John Hawyk', holding 2 cottages and 6 acres. John (16th C.) recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk in 1545. John (d.c.1568) servitor to John Gledstains, who was Senator of the College of Justice. A record of his testament is recorded in Edinburgh in 1568/9. John (18th C.) married Isobell Scollay in Delting in 1753. Katherine (16th/17th C.) of the Shetland family. She married Laurence Sinclair of Ustaness (who was born in 1575). Her husband was found guilty in 1602 of being part of the murder of Mathew Sinclair of Ness (a cousin of some sort) and was denounced as a rebel in 1611 for failing to appear. Their children were William, Robert and Matthew. Kenneth Arthur (??–) computer scientist. He obtained his Ph.D. from Edinburgh in 1991 and held positions at the Edinburgh University Parallel Computing Centre, the Northeast Parallel Architectures Centre in Syracuse, New York, the University of Adelaide, (where he worked with Hawick-born David Wallace), and as Chair of Computer Science at the University of Wales, Bangor. He was Professor and Chair of Computer Science in the Institute of Information and Mathematical Science at Massey University, New Zealand from 2003. Since 2013 he has been Professor at the Digital Centre, University of Hull. Margaret (13th/14th C.) from Northumberland, she was admitted as a taxpayer in London in 1309/10, where she is referred to as 'Margareta Hawyk, no doubt a widow'. Margaret (15th C.) first recorded in 1428 as a nun at Neasham, in the Parish of Hurworth on the Rivot Tees. She was elected as Prioress there in 1429, her surname being written as 'Hawyk'. In 1436 the Bishop of Durham ordered an investigation into whether the rules and morals of the nunnery were being kept up. A further commission in 1437 found several defects and excesses and this led to her resignation as Prioress. However, she was allowed to remain there, with the use of a private room. There is no information about how she was related to anyone else of the same surname. Margaret (17th/18th

C.) of the 'Scatsta' family, she married Alexander Dunbar of Hardwell, probably in the early 1700s. Margaret (17th/18th C.) married John Aitkin. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included William Aitkin (b.1702) and Agnes Aitkin (b.1704). Margaret Robb (1928–97) daughter of Robert Laurence. She was a primary school teacher. She married Gerald Kingsley Greening. Matthew (d.1645) one of the earliest members of the Shetland family, he was tenant in Southladiel in Yell. One of his children had the curious name 'Matches'. His wife was Ingagarth Gregorins-dochter, and died in 1648. Robert (d.c.1587) Burgess of Dumfries whose testament is recorded in Edinburgh in 1587. Robert (d.1648) tenant in Firth in Delting. His testament is recorded in Shetland. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Scollay in Delting in 1757. Thus he probably married his brother's sister-in-law. Robert Laurence (1898–1963) born in Lerwick in the Shetland Isles, son of a fishing skipper. He served in WWI and in 1931 emigrated to New Zealand, where he was a rubber factory worker, chauffeur, grocery assistant and farmer. He married Elizabeth Halcrow in Lerwick in 1926. Their daughter was Patricia Margaret Robb. Vincent (16th C.) first of the Shetland Hawicks of whom we have record. He is mentioned in a deed of 1573 (in the Melby charter chest) as 'umple Vincentius Hawick of Scatstay', so he was presumably already dead by then. His family members are also listed there, namely Robert, Andrew, Daniel, Matthew, Bartholomew, James, Thomas, John, Christian, Samuel, Margaret, Catherine, Janet, Agnes, Elspeth, and Sarah. This Andrew may well be the same as the one noted above. Whether Vincent was the original settler from the Hawick area is unknown ('Hawick' is fairly rare as a surname, but 'K.A. Hawick' comes up frequently in web-based searches, because of his computing connection; see the Hawicks and de Hawick).

Hawick Academy (hIk-aw-ka-du-mee) n. private school set up for James Murray in Buccleuch Street in 1857. Murray started as Headmaster there when he was only 19. The building had formerly been the Subscription Rooms, and a school there had been known as 'the Subscription School'. It moved to a building a few doors down, which had previously been the Quaker Meeting House and also a temporary cholera hospital. It closed in 1866 a few years after Murray had moved to London, and the building was demolished in 1868.

the Hawick Advertiser (thu-hIk-ad-ver-tI-zur) n. newspaper established in 1854, with full name ‘the Hawick Advertiser and Roxburghshire Gazette’, published by James Dalgleish. It was originally published every other Saturday and cost 1½ d. It was shortly afterwards taken over by James Haining, with Thomas Cathrae being editor 1857–74. From 1857 it was published weekly and in 1876 it was taken over by William Morrison. Reports of the Hawick Archæological Society were printed in the Advertiser for several years. The newspaper became becoming monthly towards the end, when it was renamed ‘the Hawick Monthly Advertiser’, and eventually merged with the Hawick Express in 1914.

Hawick Albion (hIk-awl-bee-in) n. rugby team for 12 to 16 year olds. Their strip is a green and white quartered shirt, with green socks, or sometimes a plain green shirt. They play at Mansfield Park, next to the Hawick R.F.C. ground.

Hawick Amateur Operatic Society (hIk-am-ee'-ur-o-pe-raw'-eek-su-sI-i'-ee) n. musical organisation founded in 1910, with the first performance being H.M.S. Pinafore in 1911. It has mounted an annual musical production most years since then. Ian Seeley wrote a history of the society in 2010, ‘On With the Show’.

Hawick Amateur Swimming Club (hIk-am-ee'-ur-soo-min-klub) n. swimming club based in Hawick, established shortly after the Corporation Baths were gifted to the town by the owners of Wilson & Glenny in 1912. It was also known as the Hawick Amateur Swimming Association. Local swimmers Ronnie Murphy, Tom Robson and Brian McConnell has particular success in the 1950s and 60s. The Club disbanded when ‘the Baths’ closed in 1982, but re-established in 1995 by Alison Bruce and Jean Amos, now based in the Teviotdale Leisure Centre.

Hawick Among the Hills (hIk-u-mung-thu-hilz) n. song written by John Inglis in the 1870s to the tune of ‘Scotland Yet’, and dedicated to James Winthrop (his friend who had emigrated to Canada). It is recorded being sung by Inglis himself at a farewell function for a Mr. Routledge in 1878. New music was written by William Inglis Robson in 1887, perhaps influenced by Balfe’s ‘Killarney’. It was first sung at the 1887 Colour Cussing (in the Council Chambers) by Nellie Anderson and then at the 1889 Colour Bussing by Miss McGregor. Addie Ingles changed the arrangement, removing some of the more ornamental Victorian parts. The original second verse is now rarely sung.

Hawick an Area (hIk-an-ā-ree-a) n. Ordnance Survey Pathfinder map number 485, 1:25,000 scale, useful for detailed roads around Hawick.

Hawick an Border Car Club (hIk-an-bōr-dur-kawr-klub) n. main local automobile racing club. Its aims are to further the interest of motor-ing and motor sport, including organising events and promoting competitions.

Hawick an Borders Motorbike Club (hIk-an-bōr-durz-mo'-ur-bīk-klub) n. Hawick & Borders Motorcycle Club, which organises the annual Jimmie Guthrie Memorial Run of old motor-bikes at Denholm Green, started in 1962. Often shortened to ‘Hawick & Borders M.C.C.’.

Hawick an Buccleuch Boolin Club (hIk-an-bu-kloo-boo-lin-klub) n. erroneous name sometimes given for a local bowling club. There are neighbouring, but separate, Hawick and Buccleuch Clubs.

Hawick and its Old Memories (hIk-and-its-ōld-me-mo-reez) n. book compiled by James Wilson and published in 1858 as an addendum to his ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850). It is also known as ‘Memories of Hawick’. It contains additional notices of the Town, further extracts from the Burgh Records, transcripts from the Parish Records and Treasurer’s Book, and extensive appendices. These include early documents relating to the Town, as well as biographical information on several prominent residents of Hawick and neighbourhood. These include several items published for the first time, e.g. the genealogy of the Douglasses of Cavers.

Hawick an Eskdale (hIk-an-esk-dāl) n. Ordnance Survey Landranger map number 79, 1:50,000 scale. This is the most common map of the roads around Hawick, although in fact Hawick is awkwardly placed in the north-east corner.

Hawick Anglin Club see the Anglin Club
Hawick an Teviotdale in Sang an Poetry (hIk-an-tee-vee-yi'-dāl-in-sawng-in-pō-i'-ree) n. compact disk released by the Callants’ Club in 2006, incorporating a dozen pieces.

Hawick an Wulton Cricket Club (hIk-an-wul'-in-kri-ki'-klub) n. Hawick’s cricket club, playing in the Border League, with grounds and clubhouse at Buccleuch Park since 1860. Cricket was introduced to Hawick around 1844, with several teams being formed in 1849. Hawick & Wilton formed by later amalgamation and was the only one to survive. The original members of the Hawick and Wilton club were John Scott, William Dryden, Thomas Scott, John Waugh, Martin Pott, William Ainslie, William Howieson, James Scott, William Turner, Charles Paisley, Robert and Dandy Mather, James Fiddes and George Wilson (secretary), all of whom lived in Wilton. They played on the Upper Haugh and then the Under Haugh, and practised at Galalaw, before being gifted Buccleuch Park by the Duke of Buccleuch. It was this club that introduced the 'handling code' in 1872, after they had purchased a football to keep the players fit in the winter months, this leading to the formation of Hawick R.F.C. A pavilion was built, along with new fencing, following a 3 day 'Charles Dickens' bazaar in 1889. The ground was developed in the 1970s, with a new brick pavillion built to replace the wooden one. The team is amateur, but has often had a single professional player.

Hawick an Wulton Fitbaa Club (hIk-an-wul'-in-fi'-baw-klub) n. rugby football club connected with Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club. It was formed separately from 'Hawick Football Club' in 1885 and folded in 1890. For a few years there were these two teams existing, as well as St. Cuthbert's. They played their matches on the cricket field. A booklet 'Football Correspondence (with Songs)' was published in Hawick in about 1899 and dealt with the Hawick & Wilton and Hawick Football Clubs.

Hawick Archæological Society (hIk-ar-kee-u-lo-jee-kul-su-sI-i'-ee) n. Hawick's club devoted to local history, founded in 1856, organising lectures, outings, and publishing the annual 'Transactions' since 1863 (with a gap 1886-87). The Society was officially started on 16th September 1856, with the founders including William Norman Kennedy, Robert Michie, J.A.H. Murray, Alexander Michie, James Thom, George Webster and Robert Murray. The first lectures were given on 27th September 1856 by George Webster and Robert Michie and the first of the regular monthly meetings was on 8th October that year. The basic organisation of monthly meetings and an annual outing was quickly established. However, the Society was reconstituted in 1888 after meetings had lapsed for a couple of years (there were no meetings in 1886 and 1887, and only a few in 1888 and 1889, partly because the Society was engaged in moving its collection to the new Museum in the Buccleuch Memorial). A handbook was printed for 'Grand Bazaar and Fancy Fair' held in the Exchange Hall in 1895 and the Constitution and Rules were published in 1895. It celebrated its jubilee in 1906, with the freedom of the Burgh given to J.A.H. Murray at a banquet attended by 260 people. It received its own coat of arms in 1992. Objects of interest were donated to the Society at regular monthly meetings, resulting in the need to rent premises to store them, with the first Museum being opened in 1858 at the eastern end of the High Street. After several moves the society offered its collection to the Town Council on the condition that Wilton Lodge be converted to a Museum, the move happening in 1910. Monthly lectures have been organised annually since the club began, with the season now concentrating on the winter months, and talks usually held in the Town Hall on Tuesday evenings. The society has done a great deal to preserve and commemorate the history of the Hawick area.

Hawick Art Club (hIk-ar'-klub) n. the main art organisation in Hawick since being established in 1930. The Club holds weekly meetings, as well as regular art tutorials and talks. It also holds an annual open art competition. The Club at one time held an extensive collection of local paintings, which were handed over to the Council, eventually finding a home in the Scott Gallery. An earlier organisation, called the Hawick Fine Art Association, held an exhibition in 1883 and in 1884/5.

Hawick Athletic Club (hIk-awth-le'-eek-klub) n. name used around the 1940s for the boxing club run by Frank Finney at Stonefield.

Hawick Baa (hIk-baw) n. handball game, played on the day before the game in Jedburgh (which was on Shrove Tuesday), or in earlier years the Monday after Shrove Tuesday, the last time being in 1939. Hawick's game is probably not as ancient as that of Jedburgh, or even those of Denholm and Hobkirk. Although its origin is unclear, it took place regularly until about 1780, and then restarted in 1842. In the intervening years Hawick players used to attend the Denholm and Hobkirk games. The first 'baa' of 1842 was 'hailed' by John Gilroy. In 1893 it apparently was played a week early due to an error in Oliver & Boyd's Almanac. The game ran annually, with a break during WWI until 1919, and then continued until the outbreak of WWII, and was not revived afterwards. The main game was known as the 'men's baa', with the 'callents' baa' played on the Saturday before. It took place mainly in and around Commercial Road and the Teviot, with much activity in the river itself. The two sides were the West Enders and the East Enders. In the 18th century there were battles between the ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ gangs, mainly youths under about 16 that formed into regiments, with drums, flags, halberds, clubs, etc., in the 2 or 3 weeks before Fastern’s Eve. The hails in the 1840s were the toll-bar at the Haugh end of Commercial Road, and opposite Dickson & Laings, where the town boundary crossed the river (the area between these hails being open ground at that time). By the 1850s the hails were moved to the Coble Cauld and the arches of the railway bridge over the Teviot. Balls were sponsored, often by local businesses, with about 6 or 7 per year, each having a prize or money going to the hailer. One ball in 1866 took 3 hours, but normally balls were much shorter. One year the game reached the Sandbed, with players scrambling over a roof, and in 1902 much of the activity took place on the frozen Teviot. Many injuries were noted, and there may also have been one or two drownings. One of the balls is in the Museum.

Hawick bake (hIk-bāk) n., arch. an occasional name for a sort of hard-baked scone seasoned with all-spice – ‘There’s a sugar bool an taffy, tipenny pies, curney scones an’ Hawick bakes ...’ [JEDM] (possibly named in competition with ‘Selkirk banni’).

Hawick Balls (hIk-bawlz) n. local confection, consisting of a ball-shaped boiled sweet with a mint flavour. It was said to have been invented by ‘Bonnie Aggie Lamb’ and manufactured by Hills since around 1900. The recipe was later bought by Smiths and then by Buchanan’s of Scotland, based in Greenock – ‘Sookin a Hawick Ball as A gaun throwe Gala ...’ [IWL] (note, typically pronounced bawlz not bawz).

Hawick Benefit Building Society (hIk-be-ni-fi’-bil-din-su-sI-i’-ee) n. mutual improvement society in Hawick, which probably did not last very long. The National Archives have some records from 1851.

Hawick Bicycle Club (hIk-bī-see-kul-klub) n. cycling club formed in Hawick in 1881, eventually becoming Hawick Cycling Club.

Hawick Biliard Club (hIk-bi-lee-urd-klub) n. club set up in 1877, based in a building erected at the corner of Beaconsfield Terrace and Green Lane, also known as the Teviotdale Club.

Hawick Boolin Club (hIk-boo-lin-klub, -bō-lin-klub) n. lawn bowling organisation, formed in 1854, and possibly the oldest bowling club in the Borders. There were 42 original members when it was founded, and the first President was John Laing. The club green was originally at Allars Crescent (before the houses were built there) and then between North Bridge Street and Bourtree Place (where the Baptist Church was built). The club organised the first Border open tournament in 1872. The green and clubrooms are on Buccleuch Street to the west of the Old Parish Church, the site being granted by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1873, and opened the following summer. The Duke was gifted with a pair of gold-mounted bowls by the Hawick and Buccleuch clubs in 1882. J.P. Alison designed a new pavilion, built in mock-timbered style in 1892. A special 150th anniversary badge was produced in 2004.

Hawick Brae (hIk-brā) n. local name for the steep hill that rises from Bonchester in the direction of Hawick.

the Hawick Burghs (thu-hIk-bu-ruz) n. parliamentary constituency, created after the Representation of the People (Scotland) Act of 1868, which lowered franchise and redistributed seats. It was composed of Hawick, Selkirk and Galashiels, being separate from the counties of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. George Trevelyan was the first M.P. in 1868, and the constituency was dissolved in 1918. The M.Ps. who won elections were as follows: 1868 G.O. Trevelyan; 1869 (bye-election) G.O. Trevelyan; 1874 G.O. Trevelyan; 1880 G.O. Trevelyan; 1882 (bye-election) G.O. Trevelyan; 1885 G.O. Trevelyan; 1886 (bye-election) G.O. Trevelyan; 1886 A.L. Brown; 1892 T. Shaw; 1894 (bye-election) T. Shaw; 1909 Sir J.N. Barran; ?? (sometimes also called ‘the Border Burghs’).

Hawick Buskers (hIk-bus-kurz) n. group of local retirees who play old-time music.

The Hawick Callant see The Callant

Hawick Camera Club (hIk-kaw-mu-ru-klub) n. amateur photographic association within Hawick, with clubrooms at 78 High Street. They co-sponsored the publication of ‘Hawick as it was’ and have been involved with the annual ‘Hawick in Pictures’. The club’s first meeting was at 1 O’Connell Street in 1873.

Hawick Carpet Company (hIk-kawr-pi’-kum-pi-nee) n. former main carpet factory in Hawick, operating in Orrock Place 1752–1806.

Hawick Cashmere Company (hIk-kash-meer-kum-pi-nee) n. knitwear company based at Trinity Mills, also known as ‘Hawico’. It was essentially a rebranding of Hawick Hosiery Co. in 1990.

Hawick Castle

Hawick Castle (hIk-kaw-sul) n. motte and bailey castle built by the Lovels in the early 12th century on high ground above the town. At first it was probably a wooden tower and palisade. The site was abandoned by the mid-16th century, in favour of the Tower, and now only the ‘Mote’ remains.

Hawick Ceemetry (hIk-see-mi'-ree) n. former name for the Wellogate Ceemetry.

Hawick Characters (hIk-kaw-reek-turz) n. book edited and published by Robert Murray in 1901. It contains short chapters on several ‘weel-kent’ people from Hawick’s streets around the early 19th century. Although the idea was no doubt Murray’s, in fact most of the entries were much from much earlier articles for the Archæological Society written by William Norman Kennedy. Illustrations were based on Adam Brown paintings or were provided by T.H. Laidlaw. A second series of characters was presented in 1910.

Hawick Chess Congress (hIk-ches-kong-gres) n. annual chess meeting held in Hawick since 1992 (with a gap in 1997), first organised by Stephen Palmer-Douglas and Jim Taylor.

Hawick Choral Society (hIk-kō-rul-su-sI'-ee) n. organisation which staged choral performances, formed perhaps around 1860 and lasting for several decades. It was also known as the Hawick Choral Union. Charles Taylor was conductor around the 1870s and David B. Simpson in the 1920 and 30s, when Isabella Baillie was invited to sing with them. It was reconstituted in the years immediately after WWII, but did not last long.

Hawick Christmas Parade (hIk-kris-mis-pu-rād) n. community-based parade, started in 1986 by the Evelyn and Gilbert Sangster. It consists of floats walking groups and Santa, running between Mart Street and the Big Haugh. Money raised is donated to local charities and youth organisations.

Hawick Clothin Society (hIk-klō-thin-su-sI'-ee) n. former organisation in Hawick, which distributed clothing to poor women in the Parish. It was set up in 1821 and managed by a committee of ladies.

Hawick Colporteur Mission (hIk-kol-pōrtur-mi-shin) n. local evangelical mission, lasting at least through the 1860s to 1880s, run by Adam Scott.

Hawick Commemorative Quilt (hIk-kome-mō-rā'-eev-kwil') n. quilt made between 1983 and 1990, sponsored by Adam Armstrong and planned by Hester Appleby. Work was carried out in a basement room of the Library. It is blue with yellow trimmings, with some design elements similar to the ‘Hawick hearts’ that were popular in local quilts of around the 1920s. Six yellow leaves bear the names of some of its makers, namely Isa Anderson, Chris Edmondson, Robina Mather, Amy Emms, Nellie Renatick, Hester Appleby, Merle Oddy and Aileen Collins. It was exhibited in the Textiles Towerhouse.

Hawick Common see the Common

Hawick Common Riding (hIk-ko-min-rī-ding) n. booklet first published by the Callants’ Club in 1983, written by Ron Taylor, but with input from a large number of people. Although originally meant for school children, it is the definitive description of the Common Riding tradition. It was revised in 1998 by Frank Scott.

Hawick Common Riding (hIk-ko-min-rī-ding) n. booklet published in 2009, full title ‘Hawick Common Riding, An Illustrated Guide’. It was written by Lesley Fraser and Judith Murray. A ‘Kidz Guide’ was also produced at the same time, telling the story of the Common Riding from the point of view of Rupert the horse.

The Hawick Common Riding (thu-hIk-ko-min-rī-ding) n. 78 r.p.m. recording released by the Beltona label in the 1930s. It features a medley of Hawick songs in 2 parts. The songs covered are ‘The Border Queen’, ‘Up wi’ Auld Hawick’, ‘Clinty’, ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, ‘Pawkie Paiterson’, ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’ and ?? This is probably the first time these songs had been recorded. The singer was ‘Allan Ramsey’, probably a pseudonym for James Dalgleish. Accompaniment is by a small band, including strings.

Hawick Common Ridin, 1846 (hIk-ko-min-rī-din-ī-teen-for'-ee-siks) n. painting by Andrew Kennedy, being the earliest known visual representation of the festival. It is a view from near the foot of Walter’s Wynd showing the Cornet and the Right- and Left-Hand Men crossing the Teviot on horseback near Laidlaw’s Cauld, while the games are in progress on the Under Haugh (i.e. Commercial Road area), with stalls, tents and a stand erected for spectators. It also shows the sparse houses in Wilton at that time. The painting now hangs in the Museum. The painting was restored in 2014.

Hawick Community Hospital (hIk-kome-ni'-ee-hos-pi'-ul) n. local hospital, replacing the Cottage Hospital and opening in 2005 on Victoria Road. The hospital consists of a single-storey building, built by Border Construction.

Hawick Constitutional Club (hIk-kon-sti-tew-shi-nul-klub) n. official name for the Con Club before it was changed in 1970.

Hawick Cottage Hospital see the Cottage Hospital

Hawick Craggs (ha-wik-kragz) n. hill near Hawick Farm in Northumberland. There is a Romano-British settlement near here (about 440m south of Hawick Farm) at the north-east end of the crags.

Hawick Cronies (ha-wik-krō-nee) n. song recorded on a 78 r.p.m. record in the 1930s, with 'Hawick' on the flip-side. It was sung by 'Allan Ramsey', who was probably James Dalglish. The song starts with a humorous dialogue between a Teri man and an English woman. The writer of the lyrics and origin of the tune are unknown. It was on the Beltona label, catalogue number 1838.

Hawick Curlin Club (hIk-kur-lin-klub) n. organisation established in 1803, being one of the first organised sports clubs in Town. It had 59 members when it formed, including Archibald Dickson (seedsman), Dr. Robert Douglas, John Graham (brewer), Rev. James Henderson, Thomas Hill (saddler), David Laing (hosier), John Oliver (Town Clerk), Bailie Oliver (baker), Francis Rutherford (watchmaker), Charles Scott (glover), James Scott (tobacconist), Rev. W. Williamson, Robert Wilson (historian), and Rev. Dr. Young. Games were played at various times on Hilliesland Moss, the Coble Pool and Laidlaw's Cauld. The club was re-constituted in 1854, with the Duke of Buccleuch as Patron, after giving his permission for the club to use Loch Park. The curling pond near St. Leonard's was used from 1866 until 1890, when a new pond at Crowbyres was opened. Competitions with other local clubs were held in the late 1800s, these clubs including Branhholme and Borthwickbrae, Teviothead, Rulewater, Hassendean and Minto. The Hawick club seems to have folded before WWI.

Hawick Cyclin Club (hIk-sī-klin-klub) n. Hawick Cycling Club, which formed in 1881 as the Hawick Bicycle Club, becoming the Hawick Amateur Bicycle Club in 1889 and then adopting its present name in 1901. The inaugural meeting was held in the Crown Hotel. The Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club already existed, and it is now not known why a second organisation was started. Members on penny farthings can be seen outside Wilton Lodge in a photograph from 1881. Through the 1880s the club existed alongside the slightly older Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club, and there were some competitive events held between the 2 organisations. In the late 19th century the club's uniform consisted of grey outfits with maroon caps. A ladies section was formed in 1898. In 1901 a team was raised by James Haig (apparently annoyed at no Terries being picked for Scotland), which challenged and beat a rest of Scotland team. The membership hit a peak of 176 in the early 1900s, but then interest began to wane. The club folded in 1911, but reformed under new rules in 1925, at a meeting chaired by W.P. Gaylor. Disputes over Sunday runs led to many members resigning, with the issue being resolved with an annual run that included attendance at a church service. Grass track races were popular in the 1920s and 30s, with R. Scott winning the Scottish half-mile title in 1927. Activities of the club were suspended during WWII. Nan Robson became the first female club captain in 1954. The club was sponsored by Bantel from 1981 until the mid-1990s. Members compete in races as well as riding in leisure events, and has produced several successful competitive cyclists. The clubrooms have been in Teviot Crescent since 1982. A history of the club from 1881–2010 was published in 2020, written by Denis Devlin.

Hawick Dramatic Club (hIk-dra-ma-teek-klub) n. organisation set up in about 1853. It grew out of regular (but informal) meetings by a group of men in the Commercial Inn, which included songs and recitals. The audience grew until the group decided they needed larger premises and used the old school-room on Orrock Place. 2 of the main instigators were James Henderson and Adam Murray.

Hawick Draughts Club (hIk-drafts-klub) n. society existing in the late 19th century, with Bailie Morrison as President for a while.

Hawicke (hIk) n. occasion early spelling of Hawick, e.g. in an English letter of 1543/4 – '... has sett att liberty out of the tolbuith of Hawicke ...' [BR].

Hawicker (hI-kur) n. word occasionally used to refer to a native or resident of Hawick, particularly in the 19th century, e.g. in a speech by Provost Milligan in 1888 and by the Kelso Mail in 1834, which stated '... town's flag, said to have been taken by the Hawickers at the Battle of Flodden Field', '... now Hawickers can communicate in a few minutes with almost any part of the world' [WiS].

Hawick Eventide Hames

Hawick Eventide Hames (hIk-ee-vin-tīd-hāmz) n. Hawick & District Eventides Homes, Ltd., an organisation that runs Weens House as an elderly care facility.

Hawick Exchange Company (hIk-eks-chānj-kum-pi-nee) n. company formed to raise money to construct the Exchange Buildings. It was formed in 1861 and dissolved in 1881, and its records are in the National Archive.

the Hawick Exiles Club (thū-hIk-ek-sīlz-klub) n. club that thrived in the Manchester area in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. It grew out of the large number of Teris who were drawn to that area by textile work. The club met in ‘the Crown’ in Salford, with the first Chairman being John Smith.

the Hawick Express (thū-hIk-eks-pres) n. weekly newspaper, established in October 1870 by James Dalgleish as the ‘Hawick Express and Scottish Border News’. For many years John Rule was editor and part proprietor, then Mr. Craw took over the business, followed by James Edgar, who was editor as well as proprietor. It was originally priced at 1 penny, and in competition with the Advertiser. It merged with the Advertiser in 1915 to become the ‘Hawick Express & Advertiser and Roxburghshire Gazette’, then the ‘Hawick Express and Roxburghshire Advertiser’ from 1930 and simply the ‘Hawick Express’ from 1964. It finally merged into the ‘Southern Reporter’ in 1983.

Hawick Farm (ha-wik-farm) n. farm in Northumberland, near Great Bavington. There was a deserted mediæval village near here called ‘Hawick’.

Hawick Ferm (hIk-ferm) n. name formerly given to a farm on Hawick Moor. This was where the Town Herd lived in the mid-19th century, and is so called on the 1851 census (probably the same as Hawickmoor).

Hawick Farmers’ Club (hIk-fer-murz-klub) n. local agricultural body, existing from 1776 (although perhaps existing informally shortly before then) until 1868. It was possibly the earliest farmers’ club in Scotland (although the ‘Honest Country Club’ was a sort of short-lived nearby predecessor). The founders were Adam Ogilvie, Rev. James Erskine (Roberton), John Lawrie (Hawick), James Wilson (Hawick) and William Turnbull of Burnfoot, who was the first President. It formed for ‘the improvement of farming’, meeting on the first Thursday (i.e. market day) of each month, and discussing many topics. The membership soon expanded, being 25–60 in its first

Hawick Free Kirk

50 years. The Club established the corn market in 1778 (occurring from noon until 1 p.m. at the Cross on market days). It was also largely responsible for starting an annual fair at Rink in October of 1779, which became the biggest fair for the sale of draft ewes and ‘wedders’ in the South of Scotland. The Hawick hiring fair on the 1st, and and 3rd Thursdays of April was recommended by the Club and started on the 3rd Thursday in April 1780. The October cattle Tryst was also suggested by the Club and started in 1785. There was ploughing contests organised by the Club for several years, as well as prizes for the best livestock (until 1814 when this was superseded by the prizes of the Border Agricultural Society). The Club recommended starting a market for cattle and horses on the May Fair day in 1826. A letter to the Kelso Mail about markets led to a dispute with the Burgh of Hawick, resulting in the publication ‘Answers by the Magistrates of Hawick to the Notice of the Hawick Farmers’ Club, respecting the May Market and Tup Fair’ (1836). Th Club was also was instrumental in planning the Corn Exchange in Hawick during the 1850s. The organisational was generally important in representing local farmers for almost a century, and was effectively superseded by the Teviotdale Farmers Club, which formed in 1859. Lists of members and minute books from 1776 are in the Scottish Borders Archive (also known as the ‘Hawick Farmer Club’).

Hawick Film an Video Group (hIk-fī-lum-an-vi-dee-ō-groop) n. established in 1964 as Hawick Film Group, it meets fortnightly in Croft Road, putting on film shows and organising competitions. They were responsible for the film ‘Sons of Heroes’ shortly after forming, and several more recent local videos.

Hawick Fitbaa Club (hIk-fī-baw-klub) n. name used in the 19th and early 20th centuries for what would become Hawick R.F.C.

Hawick Framework Knitters Association (hIk-frām-work-nī’-urz-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. Hawick’s first legal labour organisation, set up in 1840. It was also known as the Hawick Stockingmakers’ Association and may have been the same as (or allied with) the Hawick Hosiery Trade Society.

Hawick Free Kirk (hIk-free-kirk) n. original name for the Free or Protesting Church, founded in Hawick in 1843, following the Disruption. The church was erected in 1844 in Free Church (later St. George’s) Lane and changed its name formally from ‘Hawick Free Church’ to ‘St. George’s

Hawick Free Press

United Free Church' in 1900. The last sermon in the old building was in August 1914, and the new larger church was opened in 1916. The church is now known as 'Teviot Kirk'.

Hawick Free Press (hIk-free-pres) n. local newspaper, published 1897–1908 by William Henderson. It was an advertising and news sheet, published free every Wednesday.

Hawick Freendly Society (hIk-freend-lee-su-sI-i'-ee) n. mutual aid society existing in Hawick from the late 18th century, probably about 1779. George Caw printed their rules in 1791. It formed to provide a fund for sick and injured workers, and along with a second similar society it was dissolved by its members some time before 1838. Another such society was set up in 1802 and was also dissolved by 1838; this organisation published 'Regulations of the Friendly Society No. II' in 1803.

Hawick fri Wulton Lodge, 1800 (hIk-fri-wul'-in-loj-i-teen-hun-dur) n. usual title given to what is probably the first picture of Hawick, hanging in the Museum. It is a water-colour by an unknown artist, being a view from about the gates of the Avenue looking towards the town. It is also referred to as 'Hawick Old Bridge and Cobble Pool in 1800'.

Hawickgate (hIk-gā') n. former name for an area in Jedburgh. In 1643 the 'feued acres of Jedburghside and Hawickgate' were valued at £10 per acre for a total of £620. By the late 18th century the teinds of the lands were held by Douglas of Adderstone. The bulk of the lands (still valued at £220 along with Jedburghside) were owned by the 'Acerers of Jedburghside and Hawickgate' in 1788; at the same time Thomas Waugh of Hawkburn held 13 acres in Hawickgate that had belonged to the Marquis of Lothian (valued at £130), 6 acres in Jedburghside and Hawickgate that had belonged to James Riddell (valued at £60) and 2½ acres in Jedburghside and Hawickgate that had belonged to James Chisholme (valued at £25). The name is also recorded in 1804 in a set of surveying exercises, the title being 'Ferinbrae and Brown's lands at Hawickgate'. It is written 'Hawick-gate' in the 1813 Land Tax Rolls for Jedburgh Parish, when Archibald Douglas of Adderstone had part of the teinds there; additionally Thomas Waugh paid tax on 2½ acres there that had belonged to James Chisholme and 6 acres that had belonged to James Riddell (presumably the name comes from being on the road out of Jedburgh towards Hawick).

Hawick Gas Light Company

Hawick gill (hIk-jil) n., arch. a somewhat jocular term for half an imperial pint, i.e. twice the size of a standard gill. It occurs in the traditional song (printed in Ramsay's collection of 1724) often called 'Andro and his Cutty Gun' – 'Blyth, blyth, blyth, was she, Blyth was she but and ben; Weel she lo'ed a Hawick gill, And leugh to see a tappit-hen' (this being a quart jug), the verse also being referred to in a note in Sir Walter Scott's 'Guy Mannering'. Note that the same song appeared in Robert Burns' 'Merry Muses of Caledonia' in a bawdier version, without the reference to Hawick. The phrase occurs in Scott's 'Carle, Now the King's Come', written in 1822 – 'A Hawick gill of mountain dew, Heised up Auld Reekie's heart, I trow' [SWS], 'Here mechanics on the miller's mill, Say they'll drink your health in Hawick gill' [MP], 'Then, Fenwick, bring's a Hawick gill, An' here's to Hawick's bonnie lassies!' [GWe]. The lines 'Come, hostess, bring's a Hawick gill, An' to his health I'll fill' are from 1813, while 'If her ye'd gien a Hawick gill, She might been leal' from about the same time and '... bring's a Hawick gill, An' here's to Hawick's bonnie lassies!' are from 1859. The phrase was certainly known in the Edinburgh area, but it is unclear if it was in common use outside poetry, and there are no physical examples of the measure known in Hawick. However, this entry appears in the Hawick Treasurer's books – 'Mor payed at traying ye wine – 2 double gilles, 12s.' in 1732. This suggests that the measure was in use locally, even if the phrase was not. Despite this, it certainly entered the vocabulary of later local poets – 'The Tipp was obedient, and quickly cam' back, A Hawick-gill full brimming he brought him' [JTe], 'Ye'er sides are retcht an' I'm gey ill, Come let us hae a Hawick gill For auld lang syne, or aiblins twa, This air is damp an' unco raw' [WNK], '... gie um a gude Hawick gill; it'll dae um nae herm' [JEDM], 'The auld Miser has cost me three guid Hawick gills already this mornin' and he's no fu' yet' [JEDM], 'Then Fenwick, bring's a Hawick gill, An' here's to Hawick's bonnie lasses!' [GWe], 'A Hawick gill was in my e'e, – My heart as light as ony feather, – When warm wi' love and barley bree, I crossed the moor amang the heather' [JT].

Hawick Gas Light Company (hIk-gaws-lī'-kum-pi-nee) n. private company set up to provide gas lighting (and later gas for cooking and heating). Founded in 1830, with 12 directors, it only became part of Scottish Gas in 1948. The company installed gas lights in the main streets in 1831. Its main premises were at the southern corner of Commercial Road and Bath Street until about 1882, when they moved to Mansfield Road.

Hawick Girls' Patriotic Club (hIk-gir-ulz-pā'-ree-o'-eek-klub) n. organisation founded in 1915 in Hawick to organise fund-raising events during WWI.

Hawick Glebe (hIk-gleeb) n. area formerly owned by the Parish Church, from which the minister could receive additional income. The location of the lands changed over time, as the Town developed. In 1447 a description of the parish states that the vicar has 'for his mansion four acres of arable land of its ecclesiastical glebe'. In about 1738 it is described that there were 7 acres, and these were situated off the Loan, to the west of Myreslawgreen. These lands were later exchanged for land where Slitrig Crescent was built, and then exchanged again for land in the Wellogate. It is marked on Wood's map of 1824 around the area of Wellogate Place. In 1839 it was stated to consist of about 16 acres and was let at an annual rent of £62.

Hawick Golf Club (hIk-gōlf-klub) n. founded in 1877 by Robert Purdom, John Manuel and Charles Taylor, it was fully formed by early the following year, with a committee of 7. This was after a first meeting at which only 2 people showed up and a second meeting with the 3 founders. The Club received permission from the Town Council to use part of the Vertish Hill, provided no damage was done. General Scott of Hoscote was the first Honorary Captain, with ex-Provost R.F. Watson the Captain, and Robert Purdom the Secretary and Treasurer. It was the first such club in the Borders. The Ladies Club was started at least as early as 1893. The course is on the Vertish Hill, being part of the Common, rented from the Council, but maintained by the club. There were originally 11 holes, with one more added in 1879 and the last 6 completed by 1894. The first Clubhouse was a house at the foot of Burnflat Brae adapted for use about 1880. The present Clubhouse was built in 1894/5, on land gifted by the Duke of Buccleuch, and with funds from a bazaar, which included the performance of J.E.D. Murray's 'The Caddie's Ghost'. The design of the clubhouse was by J.P. Alison and is described as both Swiss style and Tudoresque. It was extensively refurbished in 1996. The course has 18 holes, is 5,933 yards, par 68 (5,239 yards, par 69 for the ladies course), and with stunning views from several holes. The following is a list of the holes in order: Road; Thorntree; Nipknowes; Well; Terrace; Hunter; St. Leonards; Quarry; Alcohol; Whitlaw;

Hawick High Schuil

High; The Corner; Herds; Wood; Gallery; Pit; Burgess; and Home. The course record is 61 and the longest hole is the 7th. Famous golfers to have played there include Tony Jacklin and Nick Faldo in 1989. An early history was published by James Barrie in 1898 – 'I have climbed the Loan a hundred times On the way to Vertish Hill; The caddies I've met by St. Mary's chimes, And engaged them with right goodwill, But now. alas! 'tis a hope that is past, The game's a perfect bore; The strain on my brain can no longer last – I'll never play golf any more' [RGD].

Hawick Group (hIk-groop) n. name sometimes given by geologists to particular Silurian shales of the Southern Uplands accretionary terrane, found near Hawick. It is of particular interest because of the so-called Llandovery-Wenlock extinction event, involving graptolites, as described by the work of Charles Lapworth.

Hawick Guide (hIk-gīd) n. 'Hawick Guide: Directory and Yearbook' published by James Edgar in the early 1900s. As well as being a tourist guide, it contained private addresses of local gentlemen, farmers and societies, as well as a death roll.

Hawick Harlequins see the Quins

Hawick Heritable Investment Bank

(hIk-her-it-a-bul-in-vest-min'-bawngk) n. local bank that was a limited company, founded in 1876. J. Murray was the agent in the 1880s. It lasted into the early 20th century and some records are in the National Archive. It may have merged with the Standard Property Investment Co. of Edinburgh in the mid-1930s.

Hawick herts (hIk-hertz) n., pl. name sometimes given to a distinctive quilting motif popular in Hawick in the early part of the 20th century. These hearts, with spiky leaves inside, were quite distinctive (and perhaps inspired by the Douglas heart on the Burgh coat of arms). Other characteristics of quilts made locally around that time are thistles and gowans, with clamshell infills. At least 20 such quilts have been identified, mostly made for church sales of work. The most prominent local quilter was Janet Pow.

Hawick High Schuil (hIk-hI-skil) n. Hawick's secondary school, on Buccleuch Road. Also the name of a private tutor's school that was in the Subscription Rooms at 13 Buccleuch Street, in the second half of the 19th century, when the present High School was still named the Buccleuch School. This private school lasted until about 1874. The first appearance of 'Hawick High School' as a secondary school was when it was started by the School Board as a fee-paying school for senior students, following a petition by ratepayers. It was situated in roughly 1874–76 in the Masonic Hall at Myrselawgreen. It was effectively replaced by Teviot Grove Academy, which became the senior part of Buccleuch School (although based at the east end of town). This became ‘Buccleuch Higher Grade School’ in 1908, and eventually ‘Hawick High School’ in 1915. A web-site listing illustrious former pupils was started as a school project in about 2011. There is film of a school sports day at the cricket field in 1909/10.

Hawick Hill (ha-wik-hil) n. homestead in Western Australia, south-east of the town of Wagin at Latitude 33°24′ South, Longitude 117°29′ East (there is also a ‘Mount Hawick’ and ‘Hawick Island’ in Western Australia).

Hawick Home Mission (hIk-hōm-mi-shin) n. evangelical group set up in 1873, interdenominational, but intimately related with the Baptist Church. The instigators were John Beattie, Willie Miller and Tammie Bell, who convinced the gospellers J.G. Scroggie and W.D. Dunn to come to the town from Galashiels at the end of 1872. They carried on gatherings for 17 weeks. A meeting was then held, overseen by Lord Polwarth, which resulted in the founding of the Mission, with 46 members enrolled and Willie Miller as the first President. 2,000 people attended a ‘camp meeting’ at Netherhall, with Scroggie and Dunn in attendance. In 1873 and for many years afterwards, Lord Polwarth invited the members to spend Common Riding Saturday at Mertoun House; later the venue was changed to Harden Glen. The organisation strongly opposed the Common Riding. In 1875 a ‘Hawick Home Mission Hymnal’ was published. In 1879 the Mission agreed to contribute to the Baptist Church’s appointment of a new pastor. There was also a choir formed. The group purchased and converted Oliver’s former auction house in Bourtree Terrace in 1883. The main services were on Sunday evenings and were packed during their most popular period. Meetings were also held in a house on Baker Street, on the Miller’s Knowes in the summer, at Drumlanrig Home, and in some of the surrounding hamlets, particularly Newmill. In 1887 there was disagreement over the rules and most of the committee resigned, to be replaced by a new committee. They also ran services for the troops out at Stobs. The organisation was also involved with the Christian Endeavour youth movement. Originally having members who were also in other local congregations, by 1907 it was effectively a church in its own right; however, numbers were by then starting to decline from the high of 210 members. In 1923 a building at the corner of Allars Crescent and the Mill Path (formerly used as the Teviotdale Rifle Corps drill hall) was converted to be the Home Mission Building and used by the Salvation Army. A Superintendent (i.e. resident pastor), Mr. Conneley, was appointed in 1928, but stayed only a few months. After WWII there were also open air meetings at the Horse. In 1952 the Mission started to celebrate Communion, it joined the Fellowship of Independent Evangelical Churches in 1955 and appointed P.D. Chisnell to be Superintendent in 1957. In 1963 they withdrew from the F.E.I.C., sold off their main hall in 1967, sold more in 1974, and allowed Youth With A Mission to use their space in 1977. Some former members eventually joined the Y.W.A.M. offshoot, the Abundant Life Church. In 1985 the Mission finally closed, handing over its remaining property and records to the Baptist Church across the street.

Hawick Horse (hIk-hors) n. Hawick Horse Racing Association, a body that organises local ‘flapping’ meetings. It has its origins in the decision to break away from the National Hunt and Jocky Club Rules for the Common Riding races of 1883. Local races have been run under a variety of rules since then. The Border Horse Racing Association was set up in 1972 with founding members Donald Fairgrieve (Gala), Charles McCrerie and Murray Richardson. When many of the Border towns broke away from the B.H.R.A. in 1987 the H.H.R.A. or ‘Hawick Horse’ was formed.

Hawickhorst (ha-vik-horst) n. surname originating in Germany, dating to the 13th century, with descendants in the U.S.A. and elsewhere. It is unrelated to our town, probably being a corruption of the German ‘Habicht horst’ meaning ‘hawk’s nest’.

Hawick Horticultural Society (hIk-hor-tee-kul-tew-rul-su-sI-i’-ee) n. local gardening society, founded in 1849, shortly after Hawick’s first allotments were started. John Forbes was President for many years. Highlights of the society’s calendar were the twice yearly shows. It survived until the 1970s.

Hawick Hosiery (hIk-hō-shu-ree) n. hosiery company, which later became a knitwear manufacturers, with factory at Trinity Mills on Earl and Duke Streets. The company began in 1874 and ran for over a century until about 1990, effectively transforming into Hawick Cashmere Company Ltd.

Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers Association (hIk-hō-shu-ree-maw-new-fak-chururz-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. business organisation representing the interests of local knitwear manufacturers, formed at a meeting in 1909, with 9 companies represented. It was constituted as ‘Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers’ Association’ a year later, with 7 more companies joining. It started as effectively a cartel for fixing prices (i.e. to avoid local companies undercutting each other) and evolved to focus more on setting wages. In 1966 the word ‘Hosiery’ was replaced with ‘Knitwear’. The Association disbanded in 1999.

Hawick Hosiery Trade Society (hIk-hō-shu-ree-trād-su-sI-i’-ee) n. former workers’ organisation in Hawick. It was formed out of the disputes between employees and employers, relating to wages and working conditions. In about 1868 a new arbitration body, formed of 9 employers and 9 workers was formed, and this resolved to abolish the Society, except in its purely charitable role.

Hawick Hosts (hIk-hōsts) n. local tourism guides, consisting of blue-jacketed hosts out on the streets to assist tourists in the summer months since 1998. The original idea came from Scottish Enterprise Borders, but its implementation involved the Scottish Borders Council, Scottish Borders Tourist Board, Hawick Chamber of Trade and local businesses. It is now organised by the Hawick Welcome Initiative. The Hosts welcome visitors at the main car parks and pedestrian areas, handing out brochures and encouraging them to ‘stop, shop and explore’.

Hawick hug (hIk-hug) n., arch. a tight embrace in wrestling, mentioned in Wilson’s ‘Tales of the Borders’ – ‘He therefore threw his arms round the back of his opponent ... with the intention of giving him a ‘Hawick hug’, but he found he could not join his hands together so as to effect his purpose, and his strength could not accomplish it’ (probably related to the ‘Cornish hug’, but the connection with Hawick is uncertain).

Hawickify (hI-kee-fl) v. to make something more Hawick-based, particularly to convert to Hawick dialect – ‘... it’s been on the back burner a’ this time waitin on iz gettin roon ti hevin a go at Hawickifyin eet’ [IWL], ‘This is an Edinburgh sang, bit oo’ve Hawickified eet’ [DC].

Hawick Immortals (hIk-i-mor’-ulz) n. poem published privately some time in the early 20th century (and at least before 1959), listing many Hawick nicknames of the past. It is anonymous, and the writer takes pains in an introduction to explain that no offence is meant, and in no case is the nickname associated with the actual name of the person. It may have been written by R. Jamieson. Most of the nicknames come from a period around the mid-19th century.

Hawick in Bygone Days (hIk-in-bl-gōn-dāz) n. book written by James Turnbull in 1927, when he was in his 70s. It contains many stories of his youth and a description of essentially every shop in the town in the 1850s and 60s.

the Hawick Inkle Company (thu-hIk-ing-kul-kum-pi-nee) n. ‘inkle’ loom weaving company that existed from at least 1782. In that year it leased from the Burgh part of the Common Haugh, as well as the Easter Common Haugh (now Teviot Crescent) and Myreslawgreen, to use as bleachfields; in fact that part of the Under Haugh became known as the Bleachfield. The partners in the company were Dickson, Turnbull and Robertson, 2 of whom were also involved in carpet manufacturing. It is stated (by James Wilson) that the Duke of Buccleuch gave land ‘with a water-fall, for an inkle manufactory, and for bleaching; but this trade, after thriving for a good many years, was discontinued’. However, it is unclear if the same company was referred to here, and if so if it was the land in Wilton. There is a record (from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of aid being given to Dickson, Turnbull and Robertson in 1765 and in 1785. The company bought the Rough Heugh waulk mill from John and William Thomline (dyers and finishers) in 1797. The company did not last long into the 1800s, and inkle manufacturing in general was only important in Hawick for a few decades.

Hawick in Scene an Song (hIk-in-seen-an-sawng) n. video created by Madge Elliot and Cameron Robson in 2002, with support from Hawick Tourist Association and Hawick Millennium Group. It features film scenes from 1999–2001, along with Hawick songs performed by local singers.

Hawick in Song an Poetry (hIk-in-sawng-an-pō-i’-ree) n. book first published by the Callants’ Club in 1930 (the Red Book), re-issued in 1945, revised in 1978 (the Blue Book), and again for a third edition in 2001. The first edition was essentially a revised version of ‘The Book of Hawick Songs and Verse’ published by James Edgar (1902 and 1914). Before the Caalants’

Hawick Instrumental Band

Club took over the task of providing official versions of the songs, there were several related book published. Perhaps the first such publication was the 15-page unattribute booklet 'A Hawick Song Book' (1893), with 'Hawick Songs and Recitations' following in 1900.

Hawick Instrumental Band (hIk-in-stru-men'-ul-bawnd) n. forerunner of the Saxhorn Band, it was active in Hawick in the middle part of the 19th century, before the Saxhorn Band was formed in 1855.

Hawick in the 20th Century (hIk-in-thu-too'-ee-ith-sen-chu-ree) n. publication of the Callants' Club in 2004, representing several aspects of the town during the first hundred years of the history of the Club.

Hawick Invicta (hIk-in-vik-ta) n. junior football team based in Hawick, which existed somewhere around the years 1922–24.

Hawick Island (ha-wik-I-lind) n. small island in Montague Sound, Western Australia. This is one Hawick that is not far from the sea! Its approximate location is Latitude 14°20' South, Longitude 125°22' East.

Hawick Jail (hIk-jāl) n. the town prison. This was formerly in the Tolbooth and then the old Town House. There it was apparently partly below ground, about 16 ft by 12 ft, and apparently not too hard to escape from! Because of this, people were sometimes imprisoned in the steeple of St. Mary's. The jail was referred to as 'the Thieves' Hole' or 'the Rogues' Hole' or 'the Saut Box'. In 1778 it was described in the Town book as the 'loathsome, wretched Jail of Hawick'. Towards the end of the 18th century it was described as being partly used as a blacksmith's shop and sometimes as a prison, where men were held for a night or two before being sent to the county prison; it was also too cold in the winter for the Magistrates to meet in the upstairs room, and so they would meet in an inn. The county jail was in Jedburgh, and was often used for local prisoners, because of the inadequacy of the cell in Hawick. A new jail was built on Allars Bank (later Nos. 5 and 6), perhaps around 1840. This was overseen by Michael Anderson, until the Police Act came in, about 1861. A register for 1844–62 has been published by Graham Maxwell.

Hawick Jock (hIk-jok) n. nickname for a character from the 19th century – 'Goold Ballantyne and auld Hawick Jock, Wattie Moudie, Jock Gray and a'; Jenny's Penny wi' plaid o' check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law' [HI].

Hawick Legion

Hawick Kirk (hIk-kirk) n. usually referring to St. Mary's, which was for many centuries the parish church of Hawick. The first mention of a church in Hawick is in 1183, when 'Henry the parson' was witness to a charter. The church was dedicated to St. Mary in 1214. The 'Auld Pairish Kirk' was the parish church of Hawick in the period 1844–1987.

Hawick Knitwear (hIk-ni'-wār) n. local knitwear company, based on Liddesdale Road, with a history dating back to 1874. At one point it employed more than 200 people. The company went into administration in 2016, but was partly purchased by a Hong Kong based business soon afterwards.

Hawick Knitwear Manufacturer's Association (hIk-ni'-wār-maw-new-fawk-chururz-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. local employer's association. They conceded to a guaranteed 4 day working week following the general mill strike of 1972. The association wound up in 1999, with Ray Chlopas as the last Director/Secretary.

Hawick Lasses (hIk-law-seez) n. reel composed by Robert Pringle.

Hawick Lasses – 1514 (hIk-law-seez-fif-teen-fōr-teen) n. song by James Y. Hunter, published in 1928. Music was added later by David S. Gibb and presented to the Callants' Club Song and Poetry Committee in 2001, with piano arrangement added by Ian Seeley. The song appears on 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry' (2006), sung by Gibb.

Hawick Lau (ha-wik-low) n. (1974–) Hong Kong actor and singer, with Chinese name Lau Hoi-Wai. For a teenage heart-throb, his English stage name seems somewhat peculiar to say the least. Presumably the anglicised name 'Hawick' was chosen because it is similar to 'Hoi-Wai', but there does not appear to be any direct connection with the Town (it could be simply that the Chinese characters for 'Hawick' are similar to those of his name). He grew up in Hong Kong, but also spent some time at High School in Canada. His TV roles include the series 'A Kindred Spirit' (1995), 'Virtues of Harmony' (2001) and 'My Family' (2005) in Hong Kong and 'Sealed with a Kiss' (2011), 'A Clear Midsummer Night' (2013), 'The Wife's Secret' (2014), 'Lady & Liar' (2015) and 'Chronicle of Life' (2016) on mainland China. His albums are 'A Boy's Story' (1998) in Cantonese, and 'La La La' (2000) in Mandarin.

Hawick Legion (hIk-lee-jin) n. football team founded in 1953 with the help of Hawick Royal British Legion Club. The team was started by

Hawick Linden

Ronnie Telfer. They play in the Border Amateur League.

Hawick Linden see the Linden

Hawick Literary and Scientific Institution (hIk-li'-er-u-ree-an-sI-in-ti-feek-ins-ti-chew-shin) n. early discussion society, disbanded in January 1856 and effectively replaced by the Archæological Society in September of that year. A separate Literary Society was formed around 1860, being run by Adam Paterson and meeting in the back room of Ellen Riddle's shop at 24 High Street. In the late 19th century there were several Literary Associations connected with the various churches in Hawick. The 'Hawick and District Literary Society' organised lectures well into the 20th century.

Hawick Loan (hIk-lō) n. name formerly used for the Loan – 'As Aw was gaun up Hawick Loan ...' [JSB], 'And my heart is up the Hawick Loan, on the trail that exiles ken ...' [JYH].

Hawick Loanin (hIk-lō-nin) n. the tryst ground at Thorterdikes, also known as 'the Green Gress', site of an annual horse fair in the Autumn (for a while the third Tuesday in October), as well as other public activities before it was built on.

Hawick marle (hIk-maw-rul) n., arch. name occasionally given to a sort of clay once used for whitening fireplaces, doorsteps etc., also called haa-clay.

Hawick Manse see the Auld Manse

Hawick Mary (hIk-mā-ree) n. nickname for a resident of Jedburgh in the early part of the 19th century. It was said that she was 'not too strict in regard to morals', and 'was sometimes called on by the Rev. Andrew Bonar in the usual discharge of his ministerial duty' [HAST1873]. She may have kept a boarding house, where Wull Ainslie stayed. Her full name is unrecorded.

Hawick Medico Relief Society (hIk-me-dee-kō-ree-leef-su-sI-i'-ee) n. benevolent society in Hawick in the early 19th century. It was a medical insurance club, led by Robert 'Lurgie' Wilson. It arranged for payment of the members' medical bills, with a monthly contribution. It is described as still existing in 1839.

Hawick Military Association (hIk-mi-li-ti-ree-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. local Volunteer unit, which commenced in 1798 after the perceived threat from the French army of the Revolution. It was formally disbanded in early 1801 (perhaps to have a new grant to put it on a firmer footing) and re-embodied later in 1801. However, it was disbanded again in 1802 after the Treaty of Amiens. The original name, 'The Volunteer Loyal Armed Association of Infantry, was quickly abandoned. The Captain Commandant was Gilbert Chisholme of Stirches. A ceremonial standard, presented to the Volunteers in 1799 (by Mrs. Chisholme) is in the Museum. The men presented Chisholme with a silver cup in 1802 when they disbanded. They consisted of about 60 men, and were the main volunteer infantry corps at the time (with the Roxburghshire Yeomanry being the local Cavalry unit). They had a highly decorative uniform, consisting of scarlet coats with long swallow-tails, green facings and lapels, together with black stock and white frills, white waistcoat and breeches, short black gaiters and heavy cross-belts of white leather with a brass badge in the centre bearing the words 'Hawick Volunteers', as well as 62 brass buttons, and a tall bear-skin shako with a white feather plume and white epaulettes. The men also would all have had powdered hair at that time. Another volunteer unit, the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers, formed in 1803 after war broke out again with France. The Roxburghshire Local Militia was formed in 1809, with the 1st Regiment based in Jedburgh and the 2nd Regiment based in Kelso.

Hawick Mill

Hawick Mill (hIk-mil) n. the old town corn mill, once the property of the Baron of Hawick, with a fraction of the grain going to the superior according to the ancient feudal system. There is mention of a mill in Hawick as early as 1412. The valuation of the Parish in 1627 describes 'the Myll land, estimat to pay 3 bolls in stok, and 3 firlotts teynd'. The 1686 ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch includes 'all and heal the Milne of Hawick, with the milne lands, multures, sucken, knaveship, and pertinents of the samen whatsoever'. The land at the Miller's Knowes was once farmed by the miller. Originally the mill was in the Mill Port, with the lade going through Backdamgate, behind the Tower and crossing under the Tower Knowe. There is a record of repairs in 1744. This mill was partly washed away in the 1767 flood, and demolished soon afterwards. The new mill was built in the early 1800s on the Mill Path and had associated fields in the Wellogate area; it was powered by 2 water wheels, using Slitrig Dam. 'Husband Lands of Hawick with Mill and Customs' was valued at £2626 13s 4d in 1707, when part of the holdings of the Scotts of Buccleuch, and still valued at the same amount in 1811. Wood's 1824 map shows a corn mill on Backdamgate and a flour mill on Mill Path. The mill weir was damaged in the 1846 flood. The Mill Path buildings survive and were renovated as flats in 2002 – ‘The miller o’ Hawick Mill fed mei Wi’ mony a kind o’ corn’ [JSB].

the Hawick Missal Fragment (thu-hIk-mi-sul-frawg-min) n. name often used to describe a section of a mediæval missal, discovered in the Heritage Hub in 2009. Dating from around the 1180s, the 4-page fragment was found within uncatalogued papers originally from the family of Rutherford of Knowesouth. It was intensively studied by Dr. Matthew Cheung Salisbury of Oxford University. It was first sung in Oxford and inspired musical events held at the Abbeys of Jedburgh, Kelso and Melrose, as well as Glasgow Cathedral, including compositions by Sean Dougherty, Michael Nyman, Grayston Ives and Goldie.

Hawickmoor (hIk-moor, mewr) n. former cottage on Hawick Common, the site lying in the field known as Upper Acreknowe, which is to the south-west of the Reservoir. It was written ‘Hawick Muir’ in 1841, when the tenants were James Cairns and his sons James and William. The younger James was there in 1851 when it was called ‘Hawick Farm’ and was Town Herd in 1861 when it was ‘Hawick Moor, Herd’s House’. There is now no evidence of former habitation at the site (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, south of Pilmuir Rig and is marked on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777).

Hawick Moss (hIk-mos) n. name given specifically to the boggy area around the old curling pond, opposite the entrance road to St. Leonard’s, and to the field to the west of there, the ‘Moss Brow’, i.e. to the left of the road, after the Nip Knowes, on the way to the racecourse. The name is sometimes also applied to a wider area – ‘... It’s aw gaed into Hawick Moss, An’ ’twas like to swally mei’ [JSB].

Hawick Mossbrow (hIk-mos-brow) n. top of the hill near the original race-course gate. The name was explicitly used for the field there, lying to the left of the road after the crossroads on the way to the racecourse. This was essentially the centre of the old Common – ‘Take a glass o’ cheerin’ whisky, Then down o’er Hawick Mossbrow fu’ frisky’ [AB] (also ‘Hawick Moss-brow’ and ‘Hawick Moss Brow’).

Hawick Moss Plantin (hIk-mos-plawn-in) n. tree plantation west of the road between St. Leonards farm and Williestruther cottage. It contains the former curling pond and the site of a cottage.

Hawick Muir (hIk-moor, mewr) n. another name for the Mair. Also sometimes the address formerly given to tenants of various farmsteads on the Moor, or particularly to the former cottage to the south-west of Acreknowe Reservoir. Robert Scott was there in 1801.

Hawick Music Club (hIk-mew-zeek-klub) n. club based in Hawick that organises classical music concerts. It was founded in 1951.

Hawick Mutual Improvement Society (hIk-mew-chew-ul-im-proov-min-su-sI-i-ee) n. local improvement society existing around the end of the 19th century, peaking around the 1870s. It was also called the ‘Hawick Young Men’s Mutual Improvement Society’.

the Hawick News (thu-hIk-newz) n. newspaper founded in 1882 by printers John McNairn and James Vair. It was the first local paper to cost only a halfpenny. It was originally published weekly on Fridays, and quickly rose to be the highest circulation local paper. The original premises were at 24 High Street, later moving its offices to the Crown Close, and the printing works to Loch Park. John McNairn junior took over the business in 1925, joined by brother Robert, with the grandson Robert (Bobby) taking over in 1946. The full title was ‘Hawick News and Border Chronicle’ until 1953 when it became the ‘Hawick News and Scottish Border Chronicle’. It was the first Borders newspaper to have news instead of advertising on the cover, one of the first to use illustrations, and moved from the broadsheet to smaller format in 1980. It was taken over by Scottish Borders Press in 1998, then became part of the Tweeddale Press Group in 2000, which is part of the larger Johnston Press, which was in turn acquired by the Scotsman Group in 2006. The Loch Park print works closed around 2000, and from then it was printed in Newcastle. Jason Marshall became editor in 2007. However, he left in 2016 as it decreased its original content.

the Hawick Newsletter (thu-hIk-newz-le-ur) n. newspaper published by Robert Black for a short period in about 1846. It mainly consisted of material extracted from the Galashiels publication the ‘Border Watch’.

the Hawick Observer (thu-hIk-ob-zer-vur) n. newspaper with full name ‘the Hawick Observer and Scottish Border Intelligencer’. Published by J.D. Kennedy in 1842, it was Hawick’s first newspaper. It consisted of a quarto sheet of 8 pages, and its circulation quickly rose to 2,000.

However, it only ran for 6 issues, being stopped by legal issues of the time, restricting publication and taxation of newspapers.

Hawick Oil Refinery (hIk-oi-ul-ree-fī-nu-ree)

n. former business operating briefly in the mid-19th century near where the Burns Club is now situated, adjacent to the gas works. It was started by John Wield from Blacketlees, Annan in about 1866, producing paraffin for lighting and heating, probably using coal or shale. Wield was bankrupt by 1868 and all of the physical plant sold off.

Hawick on the Net (hIk-on-thu-ne)

n. one of the first Hawick-based web-sites, set up in 1999 by David Henderson.

Hawick Orchestral and Choral Society

(hIk-or-kes-trul-in-kō-rul-su-sI-i'-ee) n. local musical organisation, also known as Hawick Amateur Orchestral Society. It held its first concert in 1891, conducted by Walter Fiddes-Wilson, and the programme included 'Rend Your Hearts' by Hawick's own Joshua Taylor. The orchestra performed at the Overseas Night in at least 1939.

Hawick Ornithological Society (hIk-or-ni-tho-lo-jee-kul-su-sI-i'-ee)

n. local bird-watching club, existing in the latter part of the 19th century.

Hawick Pairish (hIk-pā-reesh)

n. Parish of Hawick, approximately 16 miles long and 4½ miles wide. It lies south of the river Teviot from Wilton Parish, which also lies within the modern town of Hawick, the detailed boundary between the two parishes being complicated (with Orrock Place previously lying in Wilton and the Common Haugh, including Albert Mills, Commercial Road etc., previously being in Hawick). From early times the parish was associated with the Diocese of Glasgow, and had by far the highest value of all the Rectories in the Deaconry of Teviotdale (e.g. £16 in 1275 and £14 12s in 1376). The Parish Kirk was St. Mary's until 1844, when the title moved to the Old Parish Church on Buccleuch Street, reverting again to St. Mary's in 1987. The Parish borders on the parishes of Robertson, Wilton, Cavers, Kirkton and Teviothead. The narrowest part is roughly opposite Bucklands, and the widest part at the western extremity, stretching from near Southfield to near Chapelhill. At one time it reached all the way to the border with Dumfriesshire, including Stock Hill and Whithope Edge, and going almost to Moodlaw Loch when it still contained parts of Robertson. The Parish once extended all the way to Craikhope, Wolfcleuchhead and Howpasley, but lost most of the Borthwick valley to Robertson Parish in 1682. It also extended all the way to Mossypaul until Teviothead Parish was created in 1850. The northern corner has long been near where the B6399 meets the A698 around Haughhead. A valuation of the lands in the Parish was made in 1627, when there were about 800 communicants. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £15,500 (with an extra £400 in the Sheriffdom of Selkirkshire); in 1678 the rents were valued at £15,545 10s in Roxburghshire and £460 in Selkirkshire. The first description of the Parish with any detail is around 1738, and describes how, besides the Burgh, it contained 31 'steads or hamlets' and 1800 'catechisable persons', 2/3 being in the town itself. The Parish is described again in the 2 'Statistical Surveys' of Scotland (firstly by Rev. R. Gillan in 1793) and there is a further description of the parish from a gazetteer of 1868. In 1793 the land was valued at £11,591 11s, but the real rent was about £2800 sterling. J.J. Vernon wrote 'Parish and Kirk of Hawick' in 1900. Heritors records exist for the period 1710–1934, and financial records for the Parish begin in 1724. The register of births starts in 1634 and is fairly complete, except for gaps in 1657–69 and 1747–56. The marriage register covers 1699–1730, 1751–1800 and from 1834 on. The death register was started in 1755. The population of the Parish was estimated to be about 2700 in 1755, 1928 in 1791 and 3688 in 1811. It remained fairly stable until the beginning of the 19th century and then exploded, doubling in the first 40 years of that century and being about 8700 by 1861, with the vast majority in the town itself.

Hawick Pairish Coouncil (hIk-pā-reesh-koon-sul)

n. the Parish Council and Poorhouse Committee, which in 1894 took over much of the work of administering local welfare, which had previously been carried out by the Parochial Board.

the Hawick Pairtnership (thu-hIk-pār'-nur-ship)

n. organisation set up in 2001 as a community-led partnership to support the local economy, improve the fabric and appearance of the Town and build local confidence and pride.

Hawick Panto (hIk-pan-tō)

n. Hawick Pantomime Group, who have produced their annual locally-flavoured performance before Christmas in the Town Hall since 1980, when they presented 'Babes in the Wood'.

the Hawick Paper (thu-hIk-pā-pur)

n. local newspaper, established in 2016 by Jason Marshall, essentially in response to the Hawick News losing most of its original content. Published weekly, on Fridays, it prides itself on being a genuinely Hawick-based new source.

Hawick Parliamentary Debating Society (hIk-par-li-men'-a-ree-dee-bā'-in-su-sI-i'-ee)

n. local debating club that existed in the latter part of the 19th century, peaking in popularity in the 1880s.

Hawick Past & Present (hIk-pawst-in-prā-zin')

n. project on DVD put together by Eric Scotland and Gordon Gilfether. It compares old images of Hawick with new photographs taken from the same location. Produced in 2012, a second volume came out in 2013.

Hawick Pictorial (hIk-pik-tō-ree-ul)

n. one of a number of annual booklets, containing photographs of events from the previous year. Hawick Legion published pictorials from 1939, continuing until 1959. Local newspapers also continued with annuals into the 1960s. The idea was resurrected by F.W. Scott in 2002.

Hawick Pictur Theatre (hIk-pik-tur-thee-i'-ur)

n. formal name for the Wee Thea.

Hawick Pipe Band (hIk-pīp-bawnd)

n. started as the Hawick Boys Brigade Pipe Band, founded by Bob Short in 1937, with the adult band formally established in 1965. The Band has gone on several international tours, as well as an annual visit to Bailleul. The band recorded an album of 8 medleys in 1975. Band leaders have included Bruce Slorance, Bob Short, Allan Smith and Cameron Renwick.

Hawick Place Names (hIk-plās-, -plis-nāmz)

n. book describing the origin of the names of streets and other geographical features in Hawick, written by William S. Robson and published in 1947. The material in the book had been published in the Archaeological Society Transactions in the previous 2 years. It contains a 'Auld Hawick, A Series of Pictorial Reconstructions', drawn by Allan Watt Robson, showing how the town may have looked in the 9th, 12th, 15th and 18th centuries, as well as a detailed view of Hawick at the time of the 1537 Charter. The book was essentially updated by Harry Nivet in his article 'Some Changes since the Second World War' and more recently in 'Street Names of Hawick' by Liliias Britton.

Hawick Political Union (hIk-po-li'-ee-kul- yoonyin) n. organisation in Hawick in the early part of the 19th century. The 'Objects and Rules of Hawick Political Union' were published in 1831. It may have been connected with other later societies.

Hawick Racecourse (hIk-rās-kōrs) n. also known as 'St. Leonard's Park', it was built at Hawick Moor for the Common Riding races, being first used in 1854. At about 240 m it may be one of the highest race courses in the country.

Hawick was once famous for revolutionary political zeal, particularly in the late 18th and early 19th century, when there was great excitement about the revolution in France and about the possibility of increasing political franchise through the Reform Bill. The leading 'blackneb' of the late 18th century was Dr. Freeman, whose main disciple was Robert 'Lurgie' Wilson. Many Hawick Liberals were prominent in discussions in the early 19th century, and important organisers of the local Reformers included James Edgar and James Duncan. The 5 elections of the time were focal points for political demonstration, namely those of 1831, 1832, 1835, 1837 and 1841. In 1831 about 1,000 workers from Hawick (including 'Wat the Drummer') marched to Jedburgh to protest the election, their numbers being swelled at Denholm, Spittal and Jedburgh to about 2,000. Local accounts have them being loud and boisterous, but orderly, while other accounts state that they jostled the carriage of Sir Walter Scott and were nearly riotous. An engraving of the 'Election Riot at Hawick' is in Cassell's 'Illustrated History of England', showing a pitched battle on the Auld Brig during one of the elections of the 1830s. A troop of dragoons was called out to Hawick during the elections of both 1835 and 1841. Each side claimed unfairness by the other, the Liberal-supporters of Hawick claiming that the Sheriff and County Officers were all Tory supporters (underscored when the Sheriff read the Riot Act from the window of the Conservative Party committee room in the Tower Hotel!), while the Bailies and Constables of Hawick were said (although this is disputed) to have publicly sported the blue ribbons of the Whigs. Treatment of Tory supporters was often quite rough in these times, particularly in 1837, when ‘winging’ and ‘Tully’s Mill’ were common. This led to 4 men being imprisoned after an enquiry by a special commission, as well as a motion in the House of Commons to disenfranchise the Hawick voters, which was defeated by only 26 votes! These episodes left Conservative vs. Liberal politics at a high level of animosity for many decades. The debate over whether the railway line should proceed via Langholm or Newcastleton turned effectively into a political contest between the Tories and the Whigs. There was also great commotion at the election of 1880, with youths daubing passers-by with coloured dye-stuff. In 1884 there was a huge demonstration in favour of extending the household franchise from the Burghs to the counties – with the slogan ‘In ’84 I’m found as true As I was found in ’32’. The march was said to be a mile long and a crowd of about 10,000 gathered at Loch Park to hear speeches. This radicalism was considered to have its roots in the Borderer’s spirit of independence – ‘That changed as the form or the time may be, Hawick may be brave, Hawick may be free’ [JoR], ‘So bad was the conduct of the Hawick Radicals alleged to have been at this particular election ...’ [JTU].

Hawick Rangers (hIk-rān-jurz) n. one of the earliest Association Football teams in Hawick, doing well for several seasons in the late 19th century.

Hawick Reading Room (hIk-ree-ding-room) n. reading room listed at the Tower Knowe in 1837, with Charles Williamson as Secretary (note that the Conservative Reading Room was separate).

Hawick Reivers (hIk-ree-vurz) n. song written by Ian Seeley in 1995. It was dedicated to J. Elliot Renwick who had arranged for previous songs of Seeley’s to be published at the Buccleuch Printers. It was recorded by Elliot Goldie and first sung in public by Iain Scott at the Callants’ Club ‘New Book’ concert in 2002.

Hawick R.F.C. (hIk-ar-ef-see) n. Hawick Rugby Football Club, popularly known as ‘the Greens’, formed by members of Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club in 1873. They initially played at Buccleuch Park, moving to the Volunteer Park in 1885 and to Mansfield Park in 1888. The club was the only one in Scotland to play the visiting New Zealanders in 1889. The original strip consisted of blue and white striped jerseys and stockings, with navy shorts and caps; the dark green jerseys were adopted in 1885. A victory at Gala gave Hawick the Border championship in 1893, and an away victory over Watsonians in 1994 was seen as a turning point for the team. Hawick won its first Scottish Championship in 1896, beating Watsonians at home. They also won the very first Border League in 1901–02. The team has been consistently among the leaders in Scottish rugby since the War, and has maintained a place in Division One of the Scottish championship since it began in 1972. They have won that league 12 times, as well as the Scottish Cup twice (1995–6 and 2001–2). ‘Fifty years’ football in Hawick, 1873–1923’ was published in 1923, ‘100 Years of Hawick Rugby’ in 1972, ‘The Green Machine: 125 years of Hawick Rugby’ in 1998, and ‘Glimpses of Green’ in 2002.

Hawick Royal Albert (hoik-roi-ul-al-bur’) n. Hawick Royal Albert Football Club, an Association football team that plays in the East of Scotland League. It formed in 1946 as a splinter from the main Hawick team before the war, the Railway Sports Club. The founding meeting took place in the old Labour Party rooms above the Queen’s Head, with the main instigators being William Bunton and Harry Wear, and the funds started with the raffling of half a dozen eggs. The name comes from a Larkhall team that Bunton had played for (founded 1928 and still in existence). Early games were played at Wilton Lodge Park, with the changing hut doubling as an ice-cream kiosk. They moved to Albert Park in 1963, where the steel framework of the stand was salvaged from Wilson & Glenney’s. Fortunes of the team have been mixed, with probably their most successful period being the mid-1960s. In 1980 Celtic came to play in a game to raise funds for floodlights. In 2019 the club merged with Hawick United, becoming Hawick Royal Albert United. Their strip is royal blue with red and white trim.

Hawicks (hIks) n., pl. as well as the town in Teviotdale, there is a township in Minnesota, U.S.A., a former village in Northumberland, a parish in Queensland, Australia, and a homestead in South Australia, as well as hills, islands and many streets named after our town. There are a great number of spellings of the modern Hawick that are to be found in older documents, including: Awyke; Haik; Hauewyk; Hauc; Hauic; Hauwic; Hauwick; Hauwyc; Hauwycke; Hauwyk; Hauyc; Hauyke; Havicke; Havwic;

Havyk; Hawewyk; Hawhic; Hawic; Hawich; Hawicke; Hawik; Hawike; Hawyc; Hawyk; Hawyke; and Hayck.

Hawicks (ha-viks) n. occasional surname in Germany, e.g. Heike Hawicks, researcher at Duisberg University in Germany.

the Hawicks (thū-hlks, ha-wiks) n. ‘Hawick’ is a fairly rare surname, with the known examples probably all being traceable to the parish of Delt-ing in the Shetlands. The tradition is that someone called Scott was forced to flee the Hawick area in the 16th century, probably for rieving or political reasons. A deed of 1573 (in the Melby charter chest) refers to ‘umqle Vincentius Hawick of Scatstay’ (now called ‘Scatsta’). The Christian names of this Vincent’s family include Robert, Andrew, Daniel, Matthew, Bartholomew, James, Thomas, John, Christian, Samuel, Margaret, Catherine, Janet, Agnes, Elspeth, and Sarah. There is also a record in the parish of Dysart of an Andrew Hawick of Zetland. There are also people of this surname in Jedburgh in the 17th and 18th centuries, but it is unclear if they were related to the Shetland branch. In addition to people with ‘Hawick’ as their actual surname, there are also a number of examples in the 12th to early 16th centuries of the appellation ‘de Hawick’ or sometimes ‘of Hawick’ (see de Hawick).

Hawick Savins Bank (hIk-sā-vinz-bawngk) n. another name for the Hawick Bank for the Savings of Industry, also known as the Savins Bank. It was the forerunner of the Trustee Savings Bank in Hawick, claiming continual existence since 1815 (or perhaps 1814). From 1835 it was officially called the National Security Savings Bank of Hawick and was for a while located at 2 Oliver Place. The purpose-built construction at 11 High Street replaced an old house there with small windows, containing a booksellers and drapers, and was opened in 1915, to designs by J.P. Alison (echoing the classical style of the other High Street banks). Minute books and other records covering 1815–1971 are stored at Glasgow University. A plaque on the building commemorates the history of the bank.

Hawick Schuil Board (hIk-skil-bōrd) n. Hawick School Board, set up in 1873 to oversee education in the Burgh, which it did for about 50 years before responsibility was taken over by the Council.

Hawick Schuil o Airts (hIk-skil-ō-ārts) n. Hawick School of Arts, established following a public meeting in May 1824 instigated by James Douglas of Cavers. It was opened in August 1824 by Mr. Wilson of the Edinburgh School of Arts (which became Heriot-Watt). This was probably Hawick’s first adult educational organisation, holding regular classes and lectures in arts and sciences over the following years. It led to the establishment of the Buccleuch Memorial.

Hawick Scientific an Philosophical Sociery (hIk-sI-in-ti-feek-an-fi-la-so-fee-kul-su-sI-i’-ee) n. organisation of the latter part of the 19th century.

Hawick Scout Pipe Band (hIk-skow’-pīp-bawnd) n. pipe band associated with the Hawick Boy Scouts. The band are believed to be leading recruits in a photograph taken at the Station in 1914 and the first recorded mention of the ‘Hawick Boy Scout Pipe Band’ was in 1917. It was reformed in 1936 by Willie Johnstone. In 1953 the band adopted the Sutherland tartan (in honour of District Commissioner Norman J. Sutherland). The band regularly plays on Remembrance Day, as well as local agricultural shows, the Summer Festival, the Christmas Parade, Burnfoot Carnival, at the Vertish Hill Sports and at the Denholm and Mossypaul Ride-outs. Pipe Majors have included Jock Laidlaw, Jock Rae, John Robson, Charlie Turnbull and Michael Bruce. The band meets in Union Street and is open to children and adults.

Hawick Sheriff Court (hIk-she-rif-kōr’) n. sheriff court that met in Hawick (rather than Jedburgh) during the middle part of the 20th century. Records for the court from 1838–1975 are in the National Archives.

Hawickshiel (hIk-sheel) n. farmstead between Earlston and Lauder, located to the south of Nether Blainslie. There were formerly several cottages there. It lies close to the course of the Southern Upland Way. It is recorded in records of Melrose Abbey, and other than the name, had no connection with Hawick.

Hawick Shiel (hIk-sheel) n. former farm on the Allan Water, to the south of Southfield, at one point a small but thriving village. It was bounded on the west by the Allan Water and on the east approximately by the Dodburn road. It lay just beyond the boundary of the old Common and was a tenanted farm long owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, consisting of 124 acres, bounded by Hawick Common, Dodburn, Stobicote and Nether Southfield. Nothing remains of the main cottage, although its location is close to where the corners of 4 fields meet, about 300 m west of the Troutlawford. Its site is recorded in several old maps. In 1718 the house is marked on the north side of the Gate Burn, about midway between the road and the Allan. The location of this farm, lying beyond the 18th century boundaries of the Common, but with the name 'Hawick Shiel', may support the idea (as suggested by Craig & Laing) that the Hawick Common originally extended over an even larger area. The farm was also sometimes referred to as 'Hawickshielsgate'. It is said that some residents of the village were formerly weavers. The lands here are probably those referred to as 'Uverhawikschelis' and 'Netherhawikschelis' in a 'letter of reversion' of 1482 between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme. It was described in a 1627 parish valuation as being similar in value to Upper and Nether Southfield, producing 4 lbs. in vicarage teinds. Robert Thomson was recorded as tenant there in 1679 and James Davidson in 1687 and 1698. The householders recorded in 1694 were James Stinson, George Nichol, John Jackson (weaver), James Craw, Simon Miller, James Scott, William Douglas, Robert Riddell, John Irvine, James Davidson, William Henderson and William Rodger (shepherd). John Irvine was still there in 1696. Archibald Glendinning and Robert Stevenson were tenants there in 1702. Robert Scott, Simon Miller and Walter Scott were living there in 1704. John Irvine was tenant in at least 1704–06. James Davidson was tenant in 1706 and Simon Miller in at least 1704–25. Walter Scott was tenant in at least 1706–18 and Walter Nixon in 1708–25. James Borthwick was shepherd there in 1716, when William Hislop was also there. In 1721 the tenant was John Scott, another John Scott also lived there and John Laidlaw was tailor there. Robert Scott was weaver there in 1723. Perhaps a different Walter Scott was there in 1728–41. John Scott was still tenant in 1738, James Hume in 1743 and Patrick Hume in 1757. John Ker was blacksmith there in at least the period 1758–60. James Anderson 'in Hawickshead' was recorded on a gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery and probably a tenant there. Walter Scott was tenant there in 1797. The local poet John Halliday was born there in 1821; Helen and Barbara Halliday are recorded there in 1841, probably his mother and sister. The Murray and Scott families were also there in 1841. Thomas Douglas was shepherd in 1851, with Andrew Scott living there as a labourer. The Ordnance Survey Name Book of c.1860 states that it is 'A cottage on the farm of Southfield. There formerly was a small village here through which the old Packhorse Road to Carlisle passed'. Near the crest of the hill to the north were the remains of an ancient burial cairn (also known as 'Hawick Shiels', 'Hawickshiel', and 'Hawickshiels', it is 'Hawick Scheills' in 1627, 'Hawicksheels' in 1704, 'Hawick Sheels' in 1721 and 'Hawick Shiels' in 1841; it is marked 'Hawick Sheils' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, is marked on Stobie's 1770 map of the county, is marked on J.P. Alison's map of the Common and on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hawickshiel Burn (hIk-sheel-burn) n. stream near the farm of Hawick Shiel in Lauder Parish. It rises near the farm of Bluecairn and flows eastward past a plantation called 'Hawickshiel Strip' and the farms of Hawick Shiel and Chapel Mains, to join the Leader Water opposite Birkhill. It is 'Hawikischeilburne' in 1550 and 'Hauiksceilburn' in 1579.

Hawickshiels see Hawick Shiel

Hawick Shiels Yett (hIk-sheelz-ye) n. former cottage near Hawick Shiel. It may have been distinct from the main farmhouse (the name is used on the 1841 census, but absent by 1851).

Hawick Sings (hIk-singz) n. local talent night taking place weekly during the summer months. It was started around 2000 in Thorterdykes, and has been located in several other places since, including the Burns Club and the Bandstand. The name is also sometimes used to refer to the concert organised by the 1514 Club, started by Bert Armstrong, Henry Douglas, Davie Gibb and Adie Ingles, the first event being in Trinity Kirk Hall.

the Hawick Songs (hIk-sawngz) n. book of words and music, published by the Callants' Club in 1957, revised and enlarged in 2001 and again 2109. This anthology grew out of the compilation of songs published by Adam Grant before WWI. The 1957 collection was largely the work of Adie Ingles, who changed some of the original keys of the songs and altered (usually simplifying) many accompaniments. Some of these changes were controversial at the time. The set of words published in booklet form at the same time was familiarly known as the 'Reid Book' and the 1978 version as the 'Blue Book'. The 2001 edition, largely the work of Ian Seeley, who led the editorial committee, includes several new songs, but only a few changes to the older ones; it was dedicated to Frank T. Scott. A reprint of the booklet in 2009 included words to 2 newer songs. A fully new edition in 2019 included 8 new songs; it was dedicated to Bert Armstrong and Ian Seeley.

Hawick Songs and Recitations (hIk-sawngz-awnd-re-si-tā-shinz) n. booklet published by James Edgar in 1892, with a second (shorter) edition in 1901. It collected together the words for several Hawick songs and poems, and had an introductory article written by J.E.D. Murray.

Hawick Songs and Song Writers (hIk-sawngz-awnd-song-rī-urz) n. book compiled by Robert Murray and first published in 1881 by J. & W. McNairn. A 2nd edition was published by W. & J. Kennedy in 1889 and a 3rd edition, with portraits, in 1897.

the Hawick Spate (thu-hIk-spā) n. name sometimes used to refer to the Slitrig flood of 1767.

Hawick Speaks (hIk-speeks) n. tape published by the Hawick Camera Club and 1514 Club in 1993, featuring three parts of George Shankie's 'Speak Teri', Ian Landles song 'Hawick's the Best' and 15 poems in the Hawick tongue.

Hawick Stands Alone (hIk-standz-u-lōn) n. song written by George Goodfellow around 1995. It is a retelling of the 1514 story, in a style with country music overtones. Ian Seeley provided the piano accompaniment for the 2001 Hawick Songs anthology.

Hawick Street (hIk-stree) n. there is a Hawick Street in Carlisle, Clydebank (or Glasgow), Wishaw (Lanarkshire), Karori (Wellington, New Zealand), Roxburgh (New Zealand), Tokoroa (New Zealand), Valley View (Adelaide, South Australia), Ashgrove (Queensland), Beloit (Wisconsin), Berkeley County (West Virginia), Los Angeles (California), Perry Township (Ohio) and Rockton (Illinois). In addition there is: a Hawick Avenue in Paisley and Topeka (Kansas); a Hawick Close in Little Sutton (Elsemere Port) and Melling Mount (Liverpool); a Hawick Commons Drive in Concord (North Carolina); a Hawick Court in Greenock, Stanley (County Durham), Greenvale (Victoria), Kellyville (New South Wales), Warwick (Western Australia), Belmont (Michigan), Chapel Hill (North Carolina), Dublin (Ohio), Kensington (Maryland), Owings Mills (Maryland) and Severna Park (Maryland); a Hawick Crescent in Larkhall (Lanarkshire) and Newcastle-upon-Tyne (also an industrial estate); a Hawick Drive in Coatbridge, Dundee, Atlanta (Georgia), Austin (Texas), El Cajon (California), Round Rock (Texas), Severna Park (Maryland) and Valparaiso (Indiana); a Hawick Grove in Heywood (Lancashire); a Hawick Lane in Bella Vista Hawick Subscription Library (hIk-subskrip-shin-II-bru-ree) n. founded in 1762, members paid an annual fee for the privilege of borrowing from the collection. It was located at 6 Buccleuch Street and lasted until the end of the 19th century. There are existing subscription books from 1810 and 1878. In 1846 the library has some 3500 volumes.

Hawick Summer Festival (hIk-su-mur-festi-vul) n. festival coordinating community events and promoting tourism in August. It was started in 1984 by the Sangsters.

Hawick Telegraph (hIk-te-la-grawf) n. newspaper, published by W. Morrison & Co. in the latter 19th century. It was launched in 1882 at a cost of a halfpenny in direct competition with the Hawick News, but was never as successful. It was incorporated into the Standard, Border Times and Hawick Telegraph which was printed 1887–90.

Hawick Teviotdale (hIk-teev-yi'-dāl) n. cricket club formed in 1850 when the Hawick team amalgamated with the immigrant English cricketers. They won a game in Selkirk in 1851, probably the first game played by a Hawick team in another town. Thomas Rawlinson played for them as a professional in the late 1850s.

Hawick Thistle (hIk-thi-sul) n. local amateur football team.

Hawick Times (hIk-tīmz) n. local newspaper, published by Robert Black in 1857 and printed in Edinburgh. It only lasted for 12 issues.

Hawick Toonheid (hIk-toon-heed) n. former name used for St. Leonard's farm. It is recorded on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but it is unclear how widespread its use was.

Hawick Toon Trail (hIk-toon-trāl) n. project funded by the Scottish Borders Council, the Scottish Borders Tourist Board and the European Regional Development Fund, which laid out a series of historic trails in 1998/9. The trail is in 3 sections and covers approximately 6.5 km (4.5 miles).

the Hawick Torch

There is a leaflet guide together with information panels at the old Exchange car park and numbered plaques attached to buildings at points along the trail.

the Hawick Torch (thu-hlk-torch) n. Hawick version of the 2012 Olympic torch, made by jeweller Hamisg Smith after learning that the official torch would miss the Town on its journey through the south of Scotland. It was used as a focal point for several events in Hawicks ‘Year of Sport’, including the parade of about 3,000 schoolchildren down the High Street to the Opening Ceremony in the Volunteer Park.

Hawick Total Abstinence Society (hlk-tō’-al-awb-stin-ins-su-cl-i’-ee) n. organisation founded in Hawick in 1838, which was part of the Temperance Movement that was then sweeping the nation. The first abstinence society in Hawick was formed in 1832 (or perhaps 1835), but this new society had members swear off all intoxicating beverages. Over 300 members had taken the pledge in the first week, following the preaching of a Mr. Mason, methodist from England, this causing much consternation in the town. Their soirees, usually held in the Subscription Rooms, were popular events through the latter half of the 19th century, with lectures, speeches and tea service. The New Year soiree of 1865 attracted over 1,000 people. A publication appeared in 1888 for their ‘Jubilee Services’. There was also a Juvenile branch of the society, which met in Miss Riddle’s rooms.

Hawick Trades see the Trades

Hawick Trades Library (hlk-trādz-ll-bru-ree) n. library established in 1802 to provide for the reading interests of members of Hawick society not catered for by the Subscription Library, which had much higher subscription rates. A catalogue exists from 1833. Richard Wilson is listed as librarian in 1837. At its height (around 1850) the library boasted 1400 volumes.

The Hawick Tradition (thu-hlk-tra-di-shin) n. local history book written by R.S. Craig and A. Laing, with illustrations by Tom Scott, published in 1898, and having full title ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514: The Town’s Common, Flag, and Seal’. This remains one of the most significant studies of local history, with a detailed discussion of the common and arguments supporting the veracity of the Hornshole story.

Hawick Tribunal (hlk-trI-bew-nul) n. Military Service Tribunal in WWI, consisting on Provost Melrose, Bailies Lyon and Wilson, James Conn, R.H. Dickso, Alex Johnstone and Andrew

Hawick Waverley

Haddon. It heard appeals for avoiding conscription based on various criteria.

Hawick Turnpike (hlk-turn-pīk) n. name for the toll road through Hawick, used in the late 18th century. The specific road went from Moss-paulgreen to Hare Moss (i.e. the Dumfriesshire Border to just outside Selkirk) and was part of what became the A7. Papers relating to the road, over the period 1762–69 are in the National Archives of Scotland.

Hawick United (hlk-yoo-nī’-eed) n. local football team, formed in 1962 by players from Hawick Royal Albert reserves. Six weeks later they had already formed their 2nd team, Hawick United Colts.

the Hawick Volunteer Corps (thu-hlk-vo-lun-teer-kōr) n. Volunteer unit formed in 1861 after a group resigned from the newly formed Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps in a dispute over the appointment of officers. It was the 5th corps in Roxburghshire and had Provost George Wilson as Captain, with Bailie George Hardie Fraser as Lieutenant and Robert Fraser Watson as Ensign. The Corps disbanded in 1863 after an unfortunate argument at an event in the Tower Hotel that led to Bailie George Hardie Fraser being removed as Lieutenant. The ‘Hawick Volunteers’ Bazaar Handbook’ was published in 1902.

Hawick Volunteers (hlk-vo-lun-teerz) n. song written by James Thomson in 1860 and sung to the tune of ‘The Red Cross Banner’ (possibly composed by Sydney Nelson in about 1841), although later re-arranged for the song by Adie Ingles. It was composed in connection with the volunteer company of soldiers, of the same name, organised in 1860 to meet the perceived threat from France. The song was written for George Hardie Fraser and first sung by him at a function held for the Volunteers in Dangerfield Mill. It was the first ‘new’ Hawick song for about 40 years, since James Hogg’s setting of ‘Teribus’. The song is also known by the title ‘The Rifle Volunteers’. It appears on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Michael Aitken.

Hawick Wanderers see the Wanderers

Hawick War Hospital (hlk-wawr-hos-pi’-ul) n. another name for the Military Hospital.

Hawick Wattie (hlk-waw’-ee) n. nickname of homeless wanderer Walter Scott.

Hawick Waverley (hlk-wā-vur-lee) n. Hawick Waverley Association Football Club, an amateur fcsd in Hawick. They started in the Hawick and District Pub League in 1976, sponsored by the Waverley Bar. For the 1980/1 season they joined the Border Amateur League as Hawick Waverley. They won the League in 1993/4 and have also won several local cups. In 2001/2 they stepped in to split their pool of players with the Royal Albert, to allow that team to survive. In 2004/5 they won the Border Cup, the Waddell Cup and the League title (the name, like that of ‘Heart of Midlothian’, ultimately comes from Sir Walter Scott’s novels).

Hawick Waverley (hIk-wā-vur-lee) n. a junior rugby club of the early 20th century, with full name Hawick Waverley Union Football Club, not to be confused with the Association Football side.

Hawick Weekend Advertiser (hIk-week-end-ad-vur-tI-zur) n. local newspaper, published 1932–47. It was printed by R. Deans & Co., after the earlier ‘Deans Weekly’ had failed because of complaints by newsagents over free advertising sheets. From 1935 it was printed by W. Simpson, was abandoned during WWII, but revived in 1946.

Hawick Welcome Initiative (hIk-wel-kum-i-ni-shya-teev) n. voluntary organisation that promotes Hawick by enhancing the experiences of visitors, particularly through the Hawick Hosts scheme.

Hawick Woollen Manufacturin (hIk-wur-wu-lin-ma-new-fak-tewr-in) n. Hawick Woollen Manufacturing Co. Ltd., operated in the old Hunter and Young factory on Commercial Road from about 1922. The firm went into liquidation in 1925.

Hawick Workers’ Mill (hIk-wur-kurz-mil) n. woollen factory set up as a workers’ collective to supply gloves, hats and scarves for the republican effort fighting Fascism in Spain, as well as a commercial concern to support to help with local unemployment. It was set up in late 1936 when local members of the National Unemployed Workers’ Movement took over a disused mill on Mansfield Road to produce clothing for anti-Fascist forces in Spain, as proposed earlier by Councillor Willie Stoddart. Production started in early 1937, with some national fund-raising to subsidise the work, as well as private orders later, and the workforce grew to 20. However, the end of the Civil War and the harsh economics at the start of WWII led to its closure in 1939. An article was written on the subject by Don Watson in 1999.

Hawick Wullie (hIk-wu-lee) n. (18th C.) nickname of a simple-minded character who was born in Hawick, but used to frequent the court house in Kelso in the latter part of the 18th century.

He is described in William Jerdan’s autobiography and is said to have been the original of Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Goose Gibby’ (also referred to as ‘Wullie Hawick’).

Hawick Workin Men’s Buildin an Investment Co. (hIk-wur-kin-menz-bil-din-an-in-vest-min’-kum-pi-nee) n. company formed in 1864, to build better houses for the working classes, and to encourage home ownership. Originally a ‘society’, it became a limited company and assumed this name in 1888. The President for a long time was David Pringle, with Walter Haddon as Secretary for almost 30 years. This building society did much to improve living conditions in the town in the later part of the 19th century, particularly through developing the Terraces in the Wellogate. The streets built there include Dalkeith Place, Elm Grove, Ettrick Terrace, Glebe View, Lockhart Place, Minto Place, Park Street, Park Terrace, Rinkvale Cottages, Waverley Cottages, Waverly Terrace, Wellogate Place and Yarrow Terrace. The society provided more than 300 houses and about 100 cottages to its members. The Library has a book of rules from the company and the National Archive has records covering 1888–1981.

Hawick Wunter Fair see the Wunter Fair hawicky (hI-kee) adj. relating to Hawick, redolent of the traditions or language of Hawick – ‘Yon story be Elliot Cowan Smith is aboot is hawicky is ee can git’ (note that this essentially rhymes with ‘psyche’).

Hawick Y.M. see the Y.M.

Hawico (hI-ko) n. name used by Hawick Cashmere Company.

Hawik (hIk) n. another of the known early spelling variants of Hawick. It is recorded, for example, in the charter of 1446 for Branxholme and neighbouring lands and recorded in the Jedburgh Justice-aire of 1510, in the charter to Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511 and in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1535. The spelling was common throughout the 16th century. It is also on Mercator’s map of 1595 (where it is intriguingly marked right on top of the Slitrig, slightly south of the confluence with the Teviot) and is also spelled this way on Coronelli’s 1696 map).

Hawike (hIk) n. one more of the early spellings of Hawick, e.g. in the regranting of the Barony in 1459, and in an English letter of 1544 when it is said that ‘the warden of the West Marchies shuld burne Hawike’.

Hawikuh

Hawikuh (ha-wee-koo) n. ancient native American pueblo near Zuni, New Mexico, which was excavated 1917–23. It was the location of the Battle of Hawikuh at Cibola in 1540 (only 26 years after Hornshole!), being the first battle between native peoples and Europeans (led by Coronado) in the Southwestern United States.

hawk see hack

the Hawk (thu-hawk) n. nickname of Walter Scott of Whitslade.

hawkathraw (hawk-a-thraw) n., arch. a country carpenter or other wright (noted by J. Jamieson).

Hawk Burn (hawk-burn) n. small stream rising on the western slopes of Ruberslaw and flowing into the Dean Burn, to eventually join the Teviot. In the woods near the head of the stream is a ‘burnt mound’.

Hawkhass (hak-haws) n. former farm about 10 miles south of Hawick, in the headwaters of the Langside Burn, roughly between Priestthaugh and Whitrope. William Hobkirk was there in 1779–80. Robert Baptie was shepherd there in 1801. W. Little was there in 1868. It is now a ruin – ‘...And o’er high hill, and hollow glen, Round Liddle-head, and Penchrise-pen, The Carter, Windbrough, and Hawkhause, The dark cluds wad themsel’s amass’ [AD] (also written ‘Hackhass’, ‘Hawk Hass’, ‘Hawkhause’, etc., it is ‘Hawkhouse’ in 1779; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hawkhass Linn (hak-haws-lin) n. waterfall in the upper part of the Langside Burn in the Slitrig valley, to the east of the farmstead of Hawkhass. There is an earthwork here, on a narrow promontory between the Fore and Mid Burns, with ramparts and ditches blocking the main approach from the south-west. Although the age is unknown, it has been suggested it is mediæval.

Hawk Hill (hak-hil) n. hill to the west of the Maidens, near the farmstead of Hawkhass. It reaches a height of 439 m.

Hawkins (haw-kinz) n. Rev. John C. (19th C.) 3rd pastor of Hawick Baptist Kirk. He served 1862–71, resigning for unknown reasons. However he resumed again in 1874, taking over from Mr. Hewson and remained until 1880.

Hawklaw (hak-law) n. area to the east of Windburgh Hill, now in Wauchope Forest, about 15 miles from Hawick. There is Hawklaw Plantation, Hawklaw Bog, the farmstead of Hawklawtongues and the former cottage Hawklawshope. Douglas Lillico lived there in the 1820s. John Wilson was shepherd there in the mid-1800s. Bob Hobkirk (the fiddler) was the last tenant there.

Hawklawtongues (hak-law-tungz) n. former farmstead and shepherd’s cottage in the headwaters of the Wauchope Burn, to the west of Wigg Knowe. It was also known as Wauchope-head. In 1811 it was ‘Hawkleytongues’ when listed among the lands owned by Walter Scott of Wauchope. William Elliot may have been shepherd there in the mid-18th century. George Scott and family were there in 1841 (it is ‘Hawclay’ in 1841).

Hawk Sike (hak-sik) n. small stream that rises near Hawk Hass and joins the Dod Burn (also written ‘Syke’).

Hawthorn (haw-thörn) n. steading on the Glenkinnon Burn, between the Yarrow and Tweed valleys, to the south-west of Ashiestiel. In 1541 the lands were ‘occupiit with the kingis gudis and the mail thairof pait be his hirdis, extending to £30’. The farm was claimed in feu by William Scott (of Kirkurd), 2nd son of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch (it is ‘Hawtherne’ in 1541).

Hawthorndene (haw-thörn-deen) n. small hill to the south of the A68 in St. Boswells. It contains a triangulation pillar, which is also referred to by the name of the nearby farm, the Holmes.

Hawthorn Park (haw-thörn-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. In 1779 it is listed as being valued at £43 16s. In 1811 ‘Hathorn Park’ was owned by Lord Minto, and with liferent held by the late Lord Westhall.

Hawthornrig (haw-thörn-rig) n. former lands within the farm of Belses. It is ‘Hathornerig’ in 1618 when the curators of the young Andrew Scott of Aikwood complained that George and Andrew Turnbull had not paid the profits of the lands there for the previous 2 years.

Hawthornside (haw-thörn-sīd) n. farm on the A6088 shortly before Bonchester. The lands were originally called ‘Hangingside’ and owned by Richard ‘Hangandside of that Ilk’ until 1562, when sold to John Elliot of the Park. The name change was complete soon after it came into the hands of the Eliotts of Stobs, in the mid-17th century. However, it may be that originally the names ‘Hawthornside’ and ‘Hangingside’ referred to adjacent farms, since both are listed among the properties of Sir William Eliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century and early 18th centuries. It was formerly one of the major estates of Hobkirk Parish (and the Barony of ‘Feu-Rule’). ‘The town of Hathornesyde callit the newtoun’ was recorded in 1562. The lands were involved in (difficult to follow!) deals in the late 16th and early 17th centuries involving the Hamiltons, Lorraines and Rev. William Weir. Part of the lands may be those ‘under the name of Hawthorn’ valued at £171 belonging to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1643, which were later acquired by the Eliotts of Stobs; the £40 lands belonging to Thomas Turnbull in 1643 may also have been part of Hawthornside. There were certainly Turnbolls of Hawthornside for several generations; William Turnbull was there in 1612, Robert and William Turnbull in 1682 and Adam Turnbull in 1688. Archibald Douglas paid the land tax on £171 there in 1678 and Adam Turnbull for £40. John Reid and Thomas Reid were listed as residents there in 1694. Thomas Reid was there in 1739. The lands there were valued at £610 9s 7d in 1779. In the 1788 county valuation the parts previously held by Thomas Turnbull and Sir William Douglas were valued at £40 and £171, respectively, and part of the estate of Sir Francis Eliott of Stobs. Thomas Scott was there in 1788–91 and George Scott was tenant there in 1792–97. In 1811 the farm was valued at £610 9s 7d and owned by Sir William Eliott of Stobs. Robert and Walter Barrie were there in the 1860s and Mrs. Renwick in 1868. The nearby Peelknowe probably indicates that there was once a peel tower there; this may be what was burned by the English in 1545. The farmhouse is said to have been built using its stones, including some large door rybats (one of which was removed to a builders’ yard in Hawick in the 19th century). There may also have been a mill on the lands in the 17th century, perhaps a threshing mill powered by water from a pond. Roads here branch off towards Denholm and to the Slitrig valley. Hawthornside Hill to the west reaches 935 ft (287 m) and has a triangulation pillar. There was an observation post near here during WWII; remnants of the VHF ‘fixer station’ also survive on the hill. A pear-shaped stone with a hole through it, which was found on the farm, is in the Museum (formerly written ‘Halthornside’, ‘Hathronside’ and variants; it is referred to as ‘Hawtreinsyde’ in 1561, ‘Hathornesyde’ and ‘Hathronsyde’ in 1562, ‘Halthornsyde’ in 1602, ‘Halthornsyde’ in 1612, ‘Hawthornsyde’ in 1630, ‘Hangingside’ in 1645, ‘hathoursyde’ in 1678, ‘Halthornsyde’ in 1682, ‘Haltthornsyde’ in 1688, ‘Hatranside’ in 1694 and ‘Hathornside’ in 1797; it is ‘Hathronsyde’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hawthornside (haw-thōrn-sīd) n. former farm in Liddesdale, recorded on the c.1376 rental roll, with a value of 5 shillings. It was listed under the ‘Foresta’ section, although the precise location is unknown. In 1541 it was valued at 6 shillings and 8 pence and said to pertain to the Laird of Mangerton heritably (it is ‘Hawthornsyde’ in c.1376 and ‘Howthornsyde’ in 1541; it seems unlikely it is the same place as the land in Hobkirk Parish).

Hawthornside Heights (haw-thōrn-sīd-hīts) n. high ground through which the A6088 passes near Hawthornside farm, reaching a height of 254 m (834 ft) (also ‘Hawthornside Height’).

Hawthornside Hill (haw-thōrn-sīd-hil) n. hill to the south-west of Hawthornside farm, between Birneyknowe and Midburn. It reaches a height of 287 m and contains a triangulation pillar. A large cross-shaped mark on the ground there is the remains of a former plantation.

Hawyc (ha-wik) n. another early variant of the spelling of Hawick, recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1264, in a letter of ‘attestation’ for William Turnbull, Parson of Hawick and in a Glasgow Diocese document of about 1447.

Hawyck (ha-wik) n. spelling for Hawick on Gordon’s manuscript map of Ettrick Forest and adjoining provinces, c.1650. It is ‘Hawÿck’ on the 1570 ‘Theatrum orbis terrarum’ of Ortelius.

Hawycke (ha-wik) n. spelling variant used in an English document of 1544/5, when it was said that they should ‘doo summe exployte abowte Hawycke, or summe other place where he maye doo most annoyance’.

Hawyk (ha-wik) n. one of the more common early spellings of Hawick, appearing in records of 1279–80 mentioning ‘Geoffrey de Hawyk’ and many other times in records of the 13th–15th centuries. It is the spelling given in the Ragman Rolls of 1296, the spelling in the 1393 charter for Teindside and Harwood, as well as the c.1406 charter of the Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and the 1484 and 1511/2 sasines for the Barony. The spelling was used often in the 16th century. Abraham Ortelius’ c.1580 map is marked ‘Hawÿk’.

Hawyke (ha-wik) n. spelling recorded in the confirming charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1412, well as as in letters of 1543/4 and 1565, and the bond for suppressing thieves in 1569.

Broadlee, Cottlaw or 'Burnside' in 1562/3 when Lord Alexander Home tried to remove his 'pretended tenants'. It is possible that the same Alexander was notary public for the 'Band of Teviotdale' in 1564 and for the retour of 1574, where the young Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was served heir to his great-grandfather. Rev. Alexander James (d.1957) born in Aberden, he was educated at Edinburgh University and Theological College. He served as Episcopalian minister in Glasgow, becoming Rector at St. John the Evangelist in Glasgow. He moved to St. Cuthbert's Kirk in Hawick 1911–55. His incumbency spanned both World Wars, and he was heavily involved in the life of the Town during these troubled times. Along with his wife he took on the extra duties of teaching the School during WWI and for several years afterwards. He also served as Chaplain at Stobs Camp 1911–45. He was appointed Canon of St. Mary's Cathedral in Edinburgh in 1937 and served as Diocesan Inspector of School in Edinburgh. After he retired he became Honorary Canon attached to St. Mary's Cathedral. His son Charles was also an Episcopalian minister and Canon. He is buried in St. Cuthbert's churchyard. Andrew, W.S. (17th C.) 'writer' (i.e. lawyer) who purchased the estate of Whitehaugh from Robert Scott of Headshaw's son in 1623. He in turn sold it to Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1656. He also bought Headshaw, Dryden, Crawknowe and Clewes in 1623. He drew up an important document in Hawick in 1641, dealing with succession to the Thirlestane estates. He is probably the clerk of the same name mentioned in the charter for the lands of Goldielands in 1620. He is probably the same man as Andrew of Haytoun, son of John of Kingsmeadows, Peeblesshire, who signed the Acts of the Writers of the Signet in 1612 and died in about 1655. Ann nee Little (1795–48) born in Langholm, daughter of flesher John and Jean Armstrong. She married Robert, who kept the Crown Inn on the High Street. She was publican there in Pigot's 1837 directory. She was listed as publican at the Crown in the 1841 census, living with her children Jane and Thomas. Beatrix (18th/19th C.) daughter of Rev. James of Robertson. In 1825 she was on the subscription list for Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. She married John Jamieson. Rev. Charles (1910/11–89) son of the minister at St. Cuthbert's Church. He was born in Glasgow, but raised in Hawick and educated at the High School, where he was head boy and captain of the rugby team. He also turned out for Hawick R.F.C. a few times. He studied at Edinburgh and Cambridge and was inducted as a minister in 1934. He assisted as Whitley Bay, taught in the Royal Grammar School, and had appointments at Windermere, Newcastle, Healy and Heddon-on-the-Wall. He was appointed Honorary Canon of Newcastle Cathedral in 1970 and Rector of Glendale in 1973 and retired to Wooler in 1980. He was heavily involved with rugby, particularly at school level, as well as the Scouting movement and school camps. He had 1 son and 4 daughters. James (d.1609) 7th Lord Hay of Yester, brother of William, 6th Lord. He was Sheriff of Peeblesshire. In 1607 he gave a charter to Walter Scott of Todrig. He married Margaret, daughter of Mark Kerr, 1st Earl of Lothian. His children included: Sir William; Margaret; and John, 8th Lord of Yester and 1st Earl of Tweeddale. Rev. James (1751/2–1825) a native of Banffshire, he graduated from King's College Aberdeen in 1772. He became minister of Ettrick in 1785, but was translated to Kirkton later the same year and then to Robertson in 1786. He paid the Horse Tax at Robertson in 1789–97. He retired in 1801 because of his health, and was assisted by William Berry Shaw. But his health improved, and he resumed again as minister in 1812, serving until his death. In 1785 he married Arabella Douglas (who died in 1793), daughter of the minister of Jedburgh. Their children were: Beatrix, who married John Jamieson; William (b.1787); Janet; and John (b.1791). He wrote a description of Robertson Parish for Sinclair's Statistical Account of 1794. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Janet Hume and their children included John (b.1811), Thomas (b.1813) and Robert (b.1814). James (b.c.1780) mason journeyman listed at 'Allers' on the 1841 census. He probably lived on the Mill Path. His wife Janet came from Kirkton Parish, and was a widow in 1851. Their children included James, Ann and Rachel. He may be the mason of the same name listed on Teviot Crescent in Pigot's 1837 directory. He is probably the mason James, whose child died in Hawick in 1808. He may be the labourer of that name recorded in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia; he may have been related to Robert, who was also listed. He may also be the mason listed at 'Broughshankfoot' (near Brugh) on the 1801 Militia ballot for Cavers Parish. James (1846–1918) from Hawick, he moved to Edinburgh and was a noted amateur photographer. There is a photograph taken in the early 1900s showing him with his son and grandson, both also called James. He died at Bargrennan, Dumfries and Galloway. James 'Jim' (1964–) son of Jim, who played for the Greens. He was educated at Drumlanrig and the High School, he was a keen rugby player. He played hooker for the High School, then briefly for the Wanderers, before joining the Linden. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. at the age of 16, getting into the team more regularly when Colin Deans retired. He played for the South and toured with Scotland several times, gaining a single cap in 1995. He also played for the Barbarians and signed a professional contract with the Border Reivers. He coached at Preston, Gala and Edinburgh, then at Hawick 2004–08. He runs Jim Hay Estate Agents. John (d.1508) 1st Lord Hay of Yester, son of Sir David of Locherworth and Yester, Sheriff of Peebles. He was on the 1492 inquest deciding on who should inherit the lands of Richard Rutherford. In 1501 he was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to fines for James Scott in Hassendean. He married Mary, daughter of John Lindsay, 1st Lord of the Byres (who was Baron of Chamberlain Newton). In 1468 he remarried Elizabeth, daughter of Sir George Cunningham of Belton, and through her inherited several local lands. This included Appletreehall, Easter Hassendean and Todrig. He was succeeded by his 2nd son John, 2nd Lord Yester, who died at Flodden. Other children included: Sir Thomas, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander, Lord Home; Isabel, who married Sir Walter Ker of Cessford; George of Menzion; Isabella, who married Sir Robert Lauder of the Bass; and Margaret, who married William, 3rd Lord Borthwick. He may be the 'Johanni Haw' mentioned in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. John (d.1513) 2nd Lord of Yester, son of the 1st Lord. In 1511/2 he had a charter for the lands of Todrig in Selkirkshire and other lands in Peeblesshire. In 1512 he granted the lands of Todrig 'with the manor and dwelling house thereto and pertinents lying in the said barony of Olivercastell' to Stephen Lauder. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Crichton of Sanquhar and was succeeded by his eldest son, also John. He was killed at Flodden. John (d.bef. 1543) 3rd Lord of Yester, son of Sir John, 2nd Lord, who died at Flodden. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted to James V to keep better order. And he also 'came in the King's will' for his brother (also) John allowing thieves Adam Nixon and Robert Elliot to go free. A charter of

1532 grants him the lands of Easter Hassendean 'with tower and fortalice thereof', as heir to his grandmother Elizabeth Cunningham. In 1539 he is recorded as superior of the lands of Todrig when they were inherited by Alexander Lauder. He married Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of George, Master of Angus, and secondly married a Dickson of Smithfield. He was succeeded by his son John. John (d.1557) 4th Lord Hay of Yester, son of John. In 1553 he issued a charter that refers to William Scott of Harden and his wife Elizabeth Ker. He was probably superior for some local lands. He fought at the Battle of Pinkie in 1547, was taken prisoner and held in the Tower of London for 3 years. In 1650 he was named one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his eldest son, William. His seal showed a quartered shield, with Gifford and Fraser, together with the Hay coat of arms, a crest on a helmet, with a goat's head and the words 'S' JO[HANNES DOMIN]US DE [YES]TER QUARRTU'. John (b.1595) 8th Lord Hay of Yester, son of James, who he succeeded in 1610. In 1619 appointed as a Commissioner for Tweeddale, for dealing with idle and incorrigible persons. In 1635 he gave a charter of the lands of Todrig to Thomas Scott and his wife. He was made 1st Earl of Tweeddale in 1640. He was succeeded by John, 1st Marquess of Tweeddale, who married Jane, daughter of the 1st Earl of Buccleuch. John (b.1626) 1st Marquess of Tweeddale, son of John, 8th Lord Yester. In 1666 he gave a charter for Todrig, showing that he was still superior for some local lands. He switched allegiance several times during the Civil War, and served as Lord President of the Scottish Council and Extraordinary Lord of Session under Charles II. He was later Lord Chancellor of Scotland. In 1654 he acted along with Gideon Scott of Highchester on behalf of the Countess Mary Scott of Buccleuch, to attempt to reduce the huge fine imposed by Cromwell. In 1644 he married Jane, daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch and was succeeded by John, 2nd Marquess. Robert (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was recorded at Pathhead in 1777. He married Marion Crozier and their son John was baptised in 1777. Robert (c.1781–1832) proprietor of the Crown Hotel in the mid-1800s. He was 'innkeeper, Hawick' in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and was at the Crown Inn in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. His brother was James. He married Ann Little (d.1848) from Langholm, who carried on at the Crown after his death. Their children were: Jane, who married Robert Grieve, and took over at the Crown after her mother's death; and Thomas, who was Cornet in 1847. The family are buried in St. Mary's. He may be the labourer of that name recorded in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia; he may have been related to James, who was also listed. Robert (b.1816/7) hostler listed at about 21 High Street in 1841. By 1851 he was a mason, living on Allars Crescent. His wife was Margaret and their children included Ann, Jessie, James, Betsy, Robert and William. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Moor and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1728. Thomas (d.1815) resident of Allars. His death is recorded in Hawick, as 'father to Robert'. He is probably the Thomas whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1787. Thomas (1827/8–51) son of Robert and Ann Little, who ran the Crown Inn. He was Cornet in 1847, his occupation being listed as millwright. He died only 4 years later. Walter (18th C.) resident of Harwood when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1734. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 2 deeds of 1606. He was also a notary. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Nelly Turnbull and their son William was baptised in 1793.

Hayck (hIk) n. spelling for Hawick on Nicolas Sanson's c. 1665 map of Scotland, as well as Frederik de Wit's c. 1680 map and Vincenzo Coronelli's 1689 map.

Haycorse (hī-kōrs) n. former name for an area near Branxholme, precise location uncertain. There was once a ford across the river near here, where the road from the Borthwick valley crossed to join the main road into Hawick via Haysike and Crumhaughhill ('Hay' here is probably 'high' and 'corse' could be 'cross', with a connection to Chapelhill).

hayē (hī) n. hay – 'When a' the rest's set tae the hayē ...' [JSB], 'Wei'll suin wun the hai-ee wui this graand dryin wund' [ECS], '... And mony a wainch in hey tummlē't' [DH] (also spelled 'hey'; note that there are variations in the diphthong, going from 'ā-ee' to 'u-ee').

Hayick (hā-ik) n. occasional surname, not to be confused with a town in the Borders.

Hayknowe (hī-now) n. former cottage near the river close to Harwood-on-Teviot. John Armstrong was there in 1799. John Scott, Adam Kyle and their families lived there in 1841, with residents being William Robson and Henry Jackson in 1851. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, on the west side of the road just north of Teindside Cottage. The name was still in use in the early 20th century – 'Yeddie Kyle o' Hayknowe, wha can han'le the bow, Was trysted to play on the fiddle' [JoHa] (also written 'Hayknow').

Hayside (hī-sīd) n. old steading on the south side of Drinkstone Hill. John Cavers and his family were living there in 1841, as well as the McGregors. Robert Michie was shepherd there in 1861. It has long been a ruin (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; it is 'Highside' on the 1841 census).

Haysike see Heysike

Hazelbanksteed (hā-zul-bawngk-steed) n. former lands in the upper part of Liddesdale, listed in a rental roll of c.1376 as part of the 'Ermyldoune' section. The lands are recorded as 'Hesylbankstede' and with a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence. They could be connected with Hazelyside, to the west.

Hazeldean (hā-zul-deen) n. romanticised name for Hassendean. It may have first been used by John Leyden and is also connected with Sir Walter Scott's ballad 'Jock o' Hazeldean'. However, the beginning of this song was based on the much older 'John of Hazelgreen', and hence the word was essentially invented by Scott for his version. It is also the name of one of the tunes traditionally played by the Drums and Fifes, which is a Strathspey reel in A Major; note that this is different from the ballad 'Jock o' Hazeldean' – '... By which a mouldering pile is faintly seen, The old deserted church of Hazel-dean, Where slept my fathers in their natal clay, Till Teviot's waters roll'd their bones away' [JL], '... To fade, unblest'd, since on the church-yard green Its lord o'erthrew the spires of Hazel-dean' [JL], 'In Hawick twinkled many a light, Behind him soon they set in night; And soon he spurred his courser keen Beneath the tower of Hazeldean' [SWS], 'Though foreign sangs we'll no debar, That's no to say, I ween, That we forget 'Young Lochinvar', Or 'Jock o' Hazeldean' [JBS] (a note by Sir Walter Scott claims that Hassendean is a corruption of this older name, although there is no evidence to support this).

Hazeldean

Hazeldean (hā-zul-deen) n. house on Eastgate in Denholm.

the Hazel Dog o the Toor (thū-hā-zul-dōg-ō-thū-toor) n. nickname for Andrew Murray of Spittal Tower.

Hazelhaugh (hā-zul-hawch) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish, location uncertain. John Sword was recorded there in 1799.

Hazelhope (hā-zul-hōp, hiz-lup) n. another name for Hislop farm and surrounding area.

Hazelwud Hoose (hā-zul-wud-hoos) n. Hazelwood House, a large Victorian villa in the Stirches area, designed by John Guthrie and named after the hazel trees that used to stand there. It gave its name to Hazelwood Road, Lane and Court. The Laidlaw family lived there in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Hazelwud Court (hā-zul-wud-kōr) n. Hazelwood Court, part of Stirches off Hazelwood Road, built in 1974 and named after Hazelwood House.

Hazelwud Lane (hā-zul-wud-lān) n. Hazelwood Lane, small lane in Stirches beside Hazelwood Court.

Hazelwud Road (hā-zul-wud-rōd) n. Hazelwood Road, a street originally giving access to the Anderson Sanatorium from Stirches Road, now connecting Stirches Road with a large part of the housing estate. It was named after Hazelwood House.

the Hazely Cleugh (thū-hā-zu-lee-klooch) n. small stream on the north side of Berryfell Hill, which eventually joins the Cogsmill Burn and the Slitrig.

Hazely Hirst (hā-zu-lee-hurst) n. area to the north of Berryfell Hill, east of Black Bog and west of Stonedge Hill (see Hasliehirst).

Hazely Muir (hā-zu-lee-mewr) n. former name for land in Liddesdale, south of Kirndeane, between Powet Sike and Harden Burn (it is marked ‘Eizallie Muir’ on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Hazelyside (hā-zu-lee-sīd) n. farmstead in the hills about 4 miles north of Newcastleton, with Hazelyside Rig above reaching 328 m. The shepherd’s cottage is till roofed, and stands inside a field system, including a large area of rig, shieling-huts, a sheepfold and a bothy. There are also the remains of 2 shieling huts on a terrace about half-way up Hazelyside Rig, possibly the farm of ‘Estirhesilsyde’ listed in rental records of c.1376 (valued at 5 merks) and 1541. ‘Westirhesilsyde’ is also listed there (with a value of 24 shillings), and was presumably to the west. To the south of the shepherd’s cottage there are 2 water-filled holes that are probably bomb craters, presumably from army practice (the origin is simply the Old English for ‘slope with hazels’; it first occurs in 1376 and is ‘Islsyde’ in 1624).

Hazelyside Hill (hā-zu-lee-sīd-hil) n. hill in Castleton Parish, a mile or so to the west of Newcastleton. There is no obvious relationship with the farm of Hazelyside and the hill Hazelyside Rig, which are a few miles further north. On the eastern slope there are the remains of a cottage, at least 8 huts, a kiln, a quarry and sheepfolds and enclosures.

Hazely Sike (hā-zu-lee-sīk) n. small stream in Craik Forest, which feeds Craikhope Burn, to the west of Comb. There are old enclosures there.

the Health Centre (thū-helth-sen’-ur) n. centre for health care in Hawick, built on Teviot Road in 1989 on part of the site of the former Rodono Mill. The architects were Scott & McIntosh. It was opened by Lord Sanderson of Bowden, Minister of State.

healit (hee-lee’, -li’) pp., poet. healed – ‘...an’ he hælet him, insaemeikle that the blin’ an’ dumb spak an’ saw’ [HSR] (also written ‘hælet’).

Heap (heep) n. former name for the estate that included Easter Heap (roughly Siverbuthall) and Wester Heap (East Whitehaugh). It was also known as ‘the Heaps’ and spelled ‘Heip’ or ‘Hepe’. The older spelling is preserved in Heip Hill House on Greensidehall Road. In the 17th century it is also referred to as ‘Hoip’ and ‘Keip’. Adam ‘de Hep’ and Robert Walgh ‘de Hep’ signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1431 (sometimes erroneously written as 1413) James Langlands gave heritable possession of the lands of Heap to Walter Scott and his heirs. They had previously belonged to Robert of Hepe. The document of 1431 (among the Buccleuch papers) is one of the oldest pieces of local writing in Scots (rather than Latin). In 1451 (confirmed in 1453) the lands were swapped by Sir Walter Scott for those at Milsington owned by John of Langlands. Walter Scott of Heap is recorded in the 1490s, and may be the same as Walter Scott of Whitehaugh. In 1534 the Laird was John Waugh and another John Waugh was there in 1580. The Scotts of Heap also held teinds of lands in Ashkirk Parish (which were still mentioned in 1788, when in the hands of Elliot of Minto). For centuries the eastern lands were part of the Langlands estate. Andrew Scott was tenant in 1628. In 1643 Mrs. Donaldson was liferenter of ‘an merk land of Heap’, but by 1678 this piece of land was owned by the Langlands of that ilk. The combined farms of Easter and Wester Heap had 47 communicants recorded in 1650 (with surnames Aitchison, Aitken, Almond, Brydon, Davidson, Easton, Elliot, Fletcher, Fowler, Gray, Johnstone, Learmonth, Lorraine, Mitchell, Percival, Rule, Scott, Sheen, Stevinson, Stewart, Waugh, Welsh and White). In 1694 the tenants were John Waugh, William Anderson and William Scott, with William Easton also resident there. In 1711 tailor John Cairns, shepherd William Aitkin and weaver William Stewart were all there. It is marked on a 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties, indicated being to the south of Stouslie. John Blyth was tenant there in 1719. James Easton was there in 1725, William Sanderson in 1727, William Easton and William Goodfellow in 1733, Thomas Scott in 1751, John Russell in 1772 and George Ainslie in 1780. Andrew Hall was tenant there in 1797 along with William Jackson, and Robert Reid was a servant there in at least 1799–1801. Robert Oliver was farmer in 1841 (the origin of the name is uncertain, perhaps being simply ‘a heap’ or from the Old English ‘heah hop’, meaning ‘high valley’; the name first occurs as ‘Hep’ in 1296 and is ‘Hepe’ in 1451, ‘Hepe’ in 1492, ‘Hep’ in 1494, ‘Hoip’ in 1616, ‘the Haip’ in 1628 and ‘Hepe’ in 1727; it is incorrectly marked ‘Heane’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, while ‘Heape’ is also marked way over the Teviot, roughly near West Cote).

Heap (heap) n. Adam (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He is recorded as ‘Adam de Hep ... del counte de Rokesburgh’, and he is the first named on one particular document. His seal shows what is possibly a rose bush with the words ‘S’ADE DE HEPE’. This is probably Heap in Wilton Parish (and not ‘Hepburn’, as has been suggested), although it is unclear what surname his descendants might have had. Robert ‘Walgh de Hepe’ also swore fealty to Edward at the same time, so they may have held the east and west portions separately. His seal is attached to the Ragman Rolls, perhaps showing a rose-bush. Henry (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Henry del Hepe’ in 1301 when he was the first named of a group of 12 ‘common and notorious thieves’ who were captured by Hugh de Audley, the Sheriff of Roxburgh, Sir Alexander Baliol and others at ‘the moor of Alkirk’ in Roxburghshire; it is unclear where this was, but it is possibly Ashkirk. The others named were ‘Thomas le fitz Margarete’ and ‘John del Hepe’. The cattle and other goods they had taken from England were taken back, and they were imprisoned in England. John (13th/14th C.) one of a group of men captured in a wood near ‘Alkirk’ in 1301 and taken to either Berwick or Bamburgh Castle. He was probably related to Henry ‘del Hepe’, who was also captured. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Robertus de Hepe’ in 1427 when he was on the inquest panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick by William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He no longer held the lands of Heap in 1431 when they passed to the Scotts, but he was one of the witnesses to the document.

the Heap (thu-heap) n. former house on the Heap estate, to the west of Stirches Road, which disappeared about the end of the 19th century.

Heap Burnfit (heap-burn-fi) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, presumably at the foot of the Heap Hills. James Smith is recorded living there in 1725, as well as in 1736 when it is ‘Heapburn’.

the Heap Cross (thu-heap-kros) n. monument said to have been placed in Stirches (at Crosshall) to mark the murder of George Fairneylaw, sometimes referred to as Abbot of Melrose (although he was a cleric attached to Glasgow Cathedral). It was demolished sometime after the middle of the 18th century, with the stone trough that formed its base being destroyed later. The remains of the cross (if it ever existed) became lost; it has been suggested that they form part of the reconstructed Market Cross by the Museum (although that cross head is the one found at Abbey Sike in Castleton). A more mundane suggestion for its purpose is that it was a mediæval wayside cross, pre-dating the murder. It was supposed to have borne the inscription: ‘This is the place where Langlands slew The holy priest of Melrose; And Langlands shall be of that ilk nae mair When time has levelled this cross’. The story was first related by Robert Wilson, although he connects it with James (not Robert or Roger) Langlands.

Heape (heap) n. farm marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map (probably in error), roughly at the position of West Cote, about 2 miles north-east of Hawick (it also appears on the original Pont manuscript from the 1590s).

Heap Ford (heap-fōrd) n. former name for a farmstead in Wilton Parish. It is ‘Heap foord’ in 1747 when John Smith was living there. Presumably it was near a ford of some sort, perhaps over the Stirches Burn.

the Heap Hills (thu-heap-hilz) n. hills in the area behind Mayfield and Stirches, specifically Heip (or Heap) Hill, which rises to 256 m and the neighbouring hilly area – ‘Wi’ haltin’ step by Stirches brae To roam the Heap Hills ower ...' [WFC].

Heap Inn (heep-in) n. former placename in Wilton. It is recorded in parish records in 1747 when David Scott lived there. It is presumably the name for an inn on the main road to Selkirk (and beyond to Edinburgh) passing through the Stirches area, but its precise location is uncertain.

heapit (hee-pee', -pi') pp., adj. heaped – '...for serveing the cure at the said kirk of Wiltoun the said year, tuelve bolles victuall, half beir half heipit aitt meill ...' [SB1633], 'And straight they went to the tything pocke, 'Twas heapit to the heade ...' [JTe], 'A measure high heapit, wi' joys overflowin', Fu' kindly she's dealt to my lassie and me' [JoHa], 'Athort the air it swirlin' sweepit; – At ilka nook snaw wreaths lay heapit' [RDW], '... He hands it oot as 'twere a boon, In heapit, generous measure' [WP].

the Heaps (thu-heeps) n. farms of Wester Heap and Easter Heap and surrounding region, located in Stirches. It is traditionally infamous as the area where Sir George Fairneylaw, 'Abbot of Melrose' (actually a Glasgow Diocese cleric), was beheaded by Roger Langlands in 1493. The name is also used for the 'Heap Hills' – 'The Vertish, Heaps and lovely hills Are balm tae sooth the exiles ills' [JCa] (also spelled 'Hepe' and 'Heip').

the Hearse Hoose (thu-hers-hoos) n. name for a former house on the Loaning in Denholm, presumably where the local horse-drawn hearse was once kept.

heather-bleat (he-thur-blee') n., arch. the snipe, Capella gallinago – 'I wander'd forth along the green, To list the heather-bleeter's cry' [JTe], 'Among other terrors she told me about the 'heather-bleat' as being the most fearsome of all, believing, as she did, that it was a ghost pure and simple' [RB] (sometimes 'heather-bleater', also mossbluitter and bleater).

heather-claw (he-thur-klaw) n., arch. a dog's dew-claw, named because of its tendency to catch in the heather, and hence often being cut off.

heather-cock (he-thur-kok) n., poet. the black grouse, Lyrurus tetrix or the red grouse, Lagopus scoticus – 'Glad is the note o' the heather-cock calling, Bright waves the heath wi' its purpeline glow' [JoHa].

heather-cow (he-thur-kow) n., poet. a tuft or twig od heather – 'Where they'd get ere they came back A rive among the heather-cowes' [HSR].

Heather Jock (he-thur-jok) n. nickname of John Mitchell, featured in William Easton's songs 'Kinly Stick' and 'Run Them In', and a poem by Thomas Chapman, as well as being mentioned in 'Hawick Immortals' – 'Scottie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam'l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grim' [HI], 'O come, my muse, with sorrow come, And view the grave o' Heather Jock; His faults and failings let us fling Into oblivion's mighty pock' [TCh].

heather lintie (he-thur-lin-tee) n., arch. the mountain linnet, Linota flavirostris.

heathery (he-thu-ree) adj. covered with heather – 'A hantle heh the twaesome [hills] seen sin the beacons war kuitelt on ther heathery pows' [ECS].

Heathfield (heeth-feeld) n. temporary name for the shepherd's cottage on Town-o-Rule farm, just north of Weensmoor, otherwise known as 'Drythropple'. The name change was attempted about 1850 by Sir William Elliott, is marked as such on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map and continues on modern maps, but the name was never adopted by the locals.

Heathfield Cottage (heeth-feeld-ko'-eej) n. cottage in the north-eastern part of Cavers Parish, just to the south of the Dykes and north of Blawearie. It is not located particularly close to the cottage formerly known as Heathfield, and so the connection with the name is unclear.

Heatley (heet-lee) n. Adam (b.c.1770s) servant at Millburnholm according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He may be the 'A. Hateley', resident at Gillside (probably in Castleton Parish) when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included Mary (b.1709) and Isobel (b.1712). Alexander (18th C.) miller in Hawick Parish. He married Jean Turnbull and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1757, with witnesses miller George Gray and workman Adam Douglas. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1767 and Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1772 when his son John was born. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: John (b.1767); Betty (b.1768); Andrew (b.1769); Agnes (b.1770); and John (b.1772). Alexander (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Christian Robson and their son Alexander was baptised in 1778. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isobel Leyden in 1790. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, perhaps son of the earlier Alexander. He is probably the ploughman recorded at Lilliesleaf on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He married Nelly Redford and their children included: Alexander (b.1802); and William (b.1804). John (b.1792), William (b.1794) and Elspeth (b.1796), with no parents' names given, may also be his children. Alexander (b.c.1770s) recorded as 'Junr. Labourer' at Birkwood according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the Alexander who married Isabel Leyden and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: Jane (b.1798); Betty (b.1801); Isabel (b.1804); and James (b.1808). George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Allan and their children included Alexander (b.1656). The witnesses in 1656 were Robert and William Paterson. Perhaps the same George was married to Janet 'Walker' in 1653 when their son James was baptised. George (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1730 he married Bessie Miller, who was from Cavers Parish. He was at Muselee in 1732 and 1734 and Howcleuch in 1736. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Isobel (b.1732); Mary (b.1734); Alexander (b.1736); and Elizabeth (b.1739). George (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included William (b.1773), George (b.1776) and Margaret (b.1781). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Kirkton. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Kirkton Parish'. Perhaps the same George was recorded at Raesknowe in Hawick Parish on the 1801 ballot. James (17th/18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1698 for John Scott of Gorrenberry. James (18th/19th C.) grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He appears to have been living at Woodburn in 1727, 1732, 1734 and 1737. In 1726 he married Margaret Thomson, who was from Galashiels. His children, baptised in Robert, included: Jean (b.1727); Alexander (b.1730); Isobel (b.1732); Christian (b.1734); Elizabeth (b.1737); Andrew (b.1739); and John (b.1741). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1757. He may be the Thomas who married Katherine Cowan in Robertson in 1754. He was surely related to (or perhaps even the same as) the earlier Thomas in Woodburn. His children included William (b.1757), Margaret (b.1759) and Thomas and Robert (b.1761). He may be the Thomas who was guilty of fornication with Jean Douglas in Robertson Parish in 1749. Thomas (1826/7–1905) born at Attonburn, he was ploughman at Lanton Mill. He died at Broadhaugh, Teviot. His wife, Margaret Hobkirk died at Hartshaugh Mill in 1898, aged 64. Their children included Thomas and Margaret. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1726, 1728 and 1736 he was in Robertson itself. His children included: Alexander (b.1724); Margaret (b.1726); Isobel (b.1728); Ann (b.1732); and James (b.1736). Walter (18th C.) resident at Harwood in 1765 at 'Wester Loach' in 1771 at 'Wester loch house' (presumably by Braxholme West Loch) in 1774. His children, baptised in Robertson, included William (b.1765), James (b.1769), Christian (b.1771), Janet (b.1774) and Walter (b.1777). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1722, 1724, 1726 and 1729, Chisholme in 1736 and Woodburn again in 1742. In 1720 he married Janet Young, who was also from Robertson. His children included: Margaret (b.1722); Alexander (b.1724); George (b.1726); William (b.1729); Magdalen (b.1736); Walter (b.1739); and Thomas (b.1742). William (b.c.1770s) recorded at Newbigging in Hawick Parish in the Lieutenant Book for 1799. His name appears to be written 'Heally'. He is still at Newbigging on the 1801 list, when his surname is 'Hately' (also written 'Haitlie', 'Hately' and 'Heatlie', 'Hetlie', etc.).

the Heelanders’ Knowe (thu-hee-lun-durz-now) n. the Highlanders’ Knowe, a field near Spittal-on-Rule said to be where part of the Jacobite army camped on their way to England. It is said that their paymaster’s money-bag went missing and the Highlanders threatened to burn Denholm, which led to the bag turning up again. The location is to the right of the A698, between Denholm and Spittal-on-Rule, just after the side road to Bedrule. In a field between the A698 and the river there are the remains of a D-shaped settlement, about 60 m by 50 m, visible in aerial photography.

the Heelandman’s Grave (thu-hee-lind-munz-gräv) n. name of a site on Hudshouse Rig in upper Liddesdale, said to be the burial site of a Highlander of the Jacobite army who died there in 1745. One version of the story says that he gorged on sheep that the soldiers killed, and another version says he died as a result of boiling the mutton in a pot that previously contained tar. Local shepherd Ringan Armstrong was said to have been given money to conduct a proper burial.

the Heelands (thu-hee-lindz) n. the Highlands, the upper part of the countryside or parish – ‘And seeing this day the waters were great and none upon the Highlands could pass ye water, ye collectors were not nominate till another time’ [PR1717].

the Heeland Show (thu-heeI-lind-shō) n. the Royal Highland and Agricultural Show was held in Hawick in 1914, lasting 4 days in July, about a month after the Town’s Quater-Centenary celebrations. It was staged in Wilton Lodge Park, with 37 acres of the Park given over to the Show, including building a temporary bridge to connect with the ‘Playing Fields’ across the Teviot. Local farmers took many of the sheep prizes. The first 2 days had good weather, but it rained almost continuously on the last 2 days. Since 1960 the Show has had a permanent home at Ingliston, and so it will never visit Hawick again.

heeler (hee-lur) n., arch. a young man fond of dancing.

heid-band (heed-bawngd) n., arch. waist-band of a skirt or other garment.

heid-banger (heed-bawng-ur) n. a head-banger, a crazy or out of control person.

heid-case (heed-kās) n. a head-case, lunatic, madman, madwoman – ‘...To mei, the hail o’ them’s heid-cases, But that’s their ploy, If they’ve a mind to burst their braces, Aa wush them joy’ [DH].

heid-dyke (heed-dik) n. a wall separating lower-lying arable land from higher moorland. Older such dykes were usually linear earthworks, formed of a bank and a ditch, often running across rather than along a ridge.

Heidfaulds (heed-fawldz) n. former farmstead on the slopes of Black Law, west of Lintalee (this is probably the ‘Foldhead’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and is ‘Headfaulds’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Heidhooose (heed-hoos) n. nickname for 2 Hawick weavers called Adam Broon in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. This may have been the name of a place in Hawick.

Heidlaw (heed-law) n. former name for lands that were part of Bewlie, described in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as a 2 merk land. It may be the same place as Heidfaulds.

heidit (hee-dee’, -di’) adj., pp. headed – ‘Nowe alsua whan I am auld an’ grey-heædet ...’ [HSR], ‘There’s a twae-heidit mavis in Westmorland heidline (heed-līn) n. headline – ‘...whan Aw hed been readin the heidlines an lissenin tae the wireless’ [BW1961].

heidmaister (heed-mās-tur) n. head-master – ‘...that’s when Mr. Burns was heid-maister o Trinity’ [IWL] (also sometimes hyphenated; cf. rector).

heidmistress (heed-mis-tris) n. head-mistress.

heidroom (heed-room, -rowm) n., arch. outermost piece of arable land on a farm, usually adjacent to the common land, the outer part of a croft – ‘Item, that ilk nichbour big his heid room dyck yeirly, for uphawlding of nichbourheid with uthers ...’ [BR1640], ‘Drinkston has what the neighbourhood call a head-room, but he calls it several ground, and he uses it in the same manner as he does the rest of his farm’ [HAST1916].

heids (heedz) n., pl., arch. top pupil, most scholarly student in a class – ‘A’m heids o the cless this week, and ee ken Tam Broon? – aweel, hei’s fits’ [ECS] (also written ‘heids’).

heids an thraws (heedz-in-thrawz) adv., arch. heads and tails, arranged with hops and bottoms alternating, head to tail – ‘...war cowpeet inti ilka seike, heids an thraws’ [ECS].

Heidshaw (heed-shaw) n. Headshaw, farm just north of Ashkirk, near Headshaw Loch, once home of a branch of the Scotts and later of the Elliots. There are Shortreeds recorded there in the 15th century. The Scotts owned the lands from at least 1484/5 and held them for about the next 150 years, with Robert Scott of Headshaw selling the lands to Andrew Hay in 1623. John Thomson and Richard Brown are recorded there in 1580. In 1581 a group of Elliots complained to the Privy Council of ‘cumand by the yett of Eidschaw, in thair lefeull bissyness’ when they were attacked by Walter Scott and his servants, one of the Elliots having his hand cut off in the fight. George ‘Vauch’ was there in 1586/7. The Laird of ‘Eidschaw’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. In 1623 Alexander Steven was recorded as master of a school there. Andrew Allan, John Govenlock and James ‘Coutart’ were there in 1623. They were purchased in 1629 by John Scott of Yorkston, 2nd son of George, 12th Laird of Synton. In 1643 the lands of Headshaw, 'Crawknows, and Cleuches' were valued together at £760 10s; at the same time the Duke of Lennox held the feu-duties, valued at £18 5s. William Scott of Headshaw paid tax on £1028 for the estate on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £1160 18s 4d in 1678. The main house is listed with 6 hearths on the Hearth Tax roll of 1694, with the estate having 6 tenants listed, as well as 6 of 'ye poor'. When the last male heir, John Scott of Headshaw, died in 1691, then the heiress was his sister Mary, who had married Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles. Mary Scott and her husband sold the lands to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1696, and they were erected into a Barony about 1698, with ratification to Sir Gilbert and his son Gilbert in 1705, and then combined into Sir Gilbert's Barony of Minto and Craigend. George Walker was smith there in 1698. James Redford was tenant there in 1703 and John Scott was cottar in 1715. Tax was paid on 18 windows there in 1748. William Scott was recorded there in 1773 and William Simpson was farmer in at least the period 1785–97. In 1779 it was liferented by George Pott, except for parts liferented by Dr. William Elliot (roughly the southern part, valued at £116 19s 6d) and Rev. Simon Haliburton (parts to the west and north-west, valued at £149 14s 2d); the total was valued at £870 (including additional teinds). In 1780 the lands of Dryden and Clews (within the Barony of Headshaw) liferented to Elliot were described as including 'Longhaugh and Strawbrae [probably Shawbrae], Infield Crawknows, and the half of the Kirkrig', as well as a piece of land on the south side of the Ale. In 1811 it is recorded that land had the superiority formerly life-rented by Pott, Haliburton and Elliot. The feu-duty of Headshaw was still owned by the 'College of Glasgow' in 1788 (and still so recorded in 1811), valued at £18 5s. William Simson junior was there in at least 1797–1801 and Francis Coltart and John Glendinning were servants there in 1799 and Robert Paterson was servant there in 1801. Mungo Thorburn was farmer there in the 1860s. The arms of the Scotts of Headshaw consisted of a band with 2 crescents and a star, with a quartered border (note there are several places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland; it is 'Eidschaw' in 1484/5, 'Edschaw' in 1487, 1493 and 1494/5, 'Edschau' in 1501, 'edschaw' in 1502, 'Aidschaw' in 1510, 'Edschaw' again in 1517, 1530, 1564 and 1609, 'Eadschaw' in 1519/20, 'Eidschaw' in 1526, 'Eidschaw' in 1527, 'Edschaw' in 1531, 'Edschawe' in 1532, 'Eteschaw' in 1533, 'Edschawe' in 1535, 'Edschaw' in 1542, 1550 and 1553/4, 'Eidschaw' in 1567, 1573, 1581 and 1585, 'Eidshaw' in 1571, 'Erdshaw' in 1572/3, 'Hindscha' in 1585/6, 'Eydshaw' in 1597, 'Eidschaw' in 1610; 'Heidschaw' in 1609, 1619, 1623, 1637, 1638 and 1660, 'Heidshaw' in 1632 and 1643, 'Heidsha' in 1640 and 1645 and 'Heidschaw' in 1648 and 1661; the origin is probably the personal name 'Eada' plus 'shaw' for wood; Blaeu's 1654 map records this as 'Ittsha' and 'Ittsha L.', while Stobie's 1770 map has 'Headshaw', 'Headshawmill', 'Headshaw Loch' and 'New Headshaw').

Heidshaw Loch (heed-shaw-loch) n. Headshaw Loch, small body of water just to the north-west of Headshaw farm, near Ashkirk. It is 17 acres in extent, and is stocked with rainbow trout for fishing. Aerial photographs show an enclosure just to the southwest, approximately 20 m in diameter, perhaps within a larger rectilinear enclosure. To the west of the loch are signs of rig and furrow.

Heidshaw Mill (heed-shaw-mill) n. Headshaw Mill, former corn mill situated on the Headshaw Burn south of the present Headshaw farm and just north of Ashkirk. It was owned by the Scotts of Headshaw, until probably sold to the Elliots of Minto in 1696 along with rest of the estate. William Scott was there in 1640. John Riddell was there in 1694 when he was 'deficient' on the Hearth Tax roll, and there were 3 other poor people listed there (presumably without a hearth). George Smail was cottar there in 1717. Peter Grieve was miller there in 1745. James Glendinning was farmer there in 1797 and in 1801 mason John Scott was living there (separate from Ashkirk Mill, which was on the Ale Water; it is written 'Heidshawmilne' in 1694 'Headshawmyln' in 1717 and is 'Headshawmill' by 1770; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Ittsha Mill').

heidstane (heed-stān) n. a headstone – '...on a battlefields tour led be Derek Robertson and masel fifty Hawick folk sought oot his heidstane ...' [IWL], 'So if you should unearh ma banes Among Bedrule heidstanes ...' [IHS].

heidstrang (heed-strawng) adj., arch. headstrong – '...o' muckle snaw-drifts, twal fit deep, o' heidstrang dugs, and donnert sheep' [TD] (also heidstrong).

heidstrong (heed-strōng) adj. headstrong – 'And noo, in the schule o' the warld, A hantle o' heidstrong loons ...' [WL] (also heidstrang).

hei'd've (hī-duv) contr. he'd've, he would have – 'hei'd've been a hunder this year'.

heid-yin (heed-yin) n. a leader, boss, person in authority – 'There's some o' th' heid yins – th' agitators – wantin' tae keep up th' strife' [HE1921], 'If only I could, juist yince', he pled Wi every 'heid-yin' nigh ...' [DH].

heigh (hī, hīch) n., arch. a height, high ground – '... And naething seen but heighs and howes, And bent and birns' [JR].

heigh (hī) interj., arch. exclamation of sorrow, fatigue or contempt – 'Heigh me! is thus the gam-frel gane? What will they yet come to O' [HSR] (cf. hech).

heigh-howe (hī-how) inter., arch. exclamation of weariness or regret – 'Yon auld clock o mine, says heigh, howe, heigh, howe, as if it was commiseratin wi mankind for the passage of time' [DH], n. former condition, routine – 'In Hawick, an expression practically synonymous to bat is heigh-howe' [ECS] (also written 'hey-how', this is 'hech-how' elsewhere; see hech).

the Heights (thu-hīts) n. high part of the road on the A7 just north of Hawick, properly called Groundistone Heights. The lay-by near here offers a spectacular view of the Teviot valley and hills to the south.

Heiland see Heeland

hei'll (hīl) contr. he'll, he will – 'hei'll no listen', 'Oh aye, hei'll never fetch her into the woods in this wather ...' [JEDM], 'Hei'll heh putten't kens where' [ECS], 'Hei was a Pringle-ite since hei left schill an plenty o support hei'll get frae the mill' [GM].

hei'll've (hīl-uv) contr. he'll've, he will have – 'hei'll've hed a guid lie in this morneen thin'.

Heip see Heap

heipalt (hī-pul') n., arch. a hobbled animal, especially a lame horse – 'A was nae hippeet heipalt, hirplin on' [ECS].

heir (ār) n., poet. to become heir – 'The rustler's cunning, th raider's fire, Young Wull had heired frae his dauntless sire' [WL].

heir see hire

heirseip (ār-seep) n., poet. heirship, heritage – 'For thou, O God, hest heārd my voves: thou hest gien me the heirseep o' thame that feær thy næme' [HSR].

heirskip (ār-skip) n., arch., poet. heirship, inheritance – 'An' gaefe thair lan' for ane heirskep ...' [HSR], 'Ax o' me, an' I sall gie thee the heæthin for thine heirskep' [HSR] (also written 'heirskep').

heis (hīz) pron., arch. his – 'That meant that hei hed teh leave heis pulpit in the Pairish Kirk an anither was appointeet in heis place' [BW], 'Heis faither, Wullie, was the landlord o' the To'er Hotel for 40 eer ...' [BW1979] (also eis, hes and His).

hei's (hī) contr. he's, he is – 'hei's an awfi man', he has – 'hei's hed eet, him', 'hei's a half share in a horse an a leg o a greyhoond', 'hei's an awfi cheek', '... but hei's gowpin full o' gold now and can weel afford ti pit her up in Toronto ...' [JEDM], 'Hei's gaun a bonnie length' [ECS].

heisel (hīz-sel, hī-sel) pron. himself – 'Can hei no gaun heisel?', '... whae din jist aboot half o that heisel – 73 years' [CT], '... this Cranston hed got heisel that weel in wi' the King that hei was raised teh the peerage' [BW], 'Aw felt like the felleh that bowt the pub an kept it tae izsel' [MB] (cf. umsel, hissel; whether the h is pronounced depends on the preceeding sound and the context, cf. 'eisel).

Heiton (hee'-in) n. straggling village between Jedburgh and Kelso, on the A698. It formerly had 2 ale houses, and was in the 18th and 19th centuries the main stopping place for travellers between the 2 towns. Population 140 (1991). 'The High Toun on the Hill' (1985) by Ian Abernethy is a local history (the name is first recorded in 1152 and its origin is probably the Old English 'heah tun', meaning 'the high farm').

Heiton (hee'-in) n. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 as 'Andro Hietoun, sumtymer undir the Laird of Bedroull', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Andrew (16th/17th C.) servant 'in the Nutoun' recorded in 1606. This was in relation to an action between the Grahamslaws of Little Newton and Turnbolls in Rulewater, and hence this is likely to have been the Newton near Bedrule. It is possible he is the same man as the Andrew recorded 20 years earlier.

Helcaldenburne see Hellcaddrounburn

Helen Kid's Curse (he-lin-kidz-kurs) n. traditionally Liddesdale story about Helen (or Maggie) Kid (or Kidd), daughter of one of the retainers of Elliot of Larriston. The young Elliot fell in love with her, but the marriage was against the wishes of his family, particularly the female members, who lured his intended on some pretence and had her poisoned. As she lay dying she cursed the family to remain unloved, either single or miserable in marriage.

Helen's Plantin (he-linz-plawn'-in) n. wooded area to the north-west of the location of the farm at Synton.

Hellcaddrounburn (hel-kaw-drin-burn) n. former farm in upper Liddesdale, somewhere on the Caddroun Burn. The ‘Helcaudron burne’ is recorded on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Deabateable Land, branching off the main river in the upper Liddel valley. It is ‘Helcaddrounburne’ in 1632, when listed among the Earl of Buccleuch’s lands in Liddesdale. It could be related to ‘Holcaldrumhill’, which is recorded in 1628.

Helles Memorial (he-lis-mu-mō-ree-ul) n. main British and Commonwealth war memorial at the end of the Gallipoli Peninsula in Turkey. It serves as a memorial for the entire Gallipoli campaign and place of commemoration particularly for those who have no known grave. Almost 21,000 names are listed on the walls surrounding the 30 m obelisk. It was unveiled in 1924 and the Burgh of Hawick sent a marble plaque in 1926, which can still be seen on the grounds (the only town specifically to do so).

Hellmoor (hel-moor) n. Loch of about 60 acres, stocked for fishing, off the B711 west of Robertson and north of Alemoor. Before the damming of Alemoor, this was the larger of the lakes in Robertson Parish. A local legend has it that the Devil lived here, and created the Catrail – ‘He was lithe as the willow whose wands in spring Dance to the tune that the winds have taught her, His hair was black as the corbie’s wing, His dark eyes deep as the Hellmuir water’ [WHO] (also called ‘Hellmuir’; it is probably the body of water labelled ‘Hardemoore L.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘hardmoor Loch’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map).

Hell’s Hole (helz-hōl) n. former name for a pool in the Catlee Burn in Rulewater, marked on a map of 1772. It appears to have been adjacent to the ‘Boglehole Haugh’. The area is still marked on the modern Ordnance Survey maps.

Helm (helm) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, whose location is not known. It could be the ‘helmys’ where Matthew Elliot was recorded in 1494/5 as being former tenant. It was listed in the 1511 confirmation of the Barony to James Douglas, along with Middle, when they are described as having a corn mill and a waulk mill attached. It is probably the ‘Helme, midle with mill’ that was incorporated into the Barony of Hallrule in 1649. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698 (it is ‘le Helm’ in 1511 and ‘Helme’ in 1687).

Helm (he-lum, helm) n. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, who in 1651 witnessed a baptism for James and another in 1652 for John Shiel. Perhaps the same George had a son William baptised in Robertson Parish. George (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He appears along with James, to whom he was presumably related. He married Marion Dicks and they had an unnamed child baptised in 1694. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son William was baptised in 1701. George (18th C.) cottar in Ashkirk Mill. He married Helen Chatto and their children included James (b.1755), John (b.1756), Janet (b.1760) and Margaret (b.1762). George (18th/19th C.) servant in Synton. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in Ashkirk Parish and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Perhaps the same George was servant at Bedrule according to the 1799 Militia ballot and servant at Effledge on the 1801 ballot for Kirkton Parish. George (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1800, 1803 and 1805 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Tait. He married Janet Grieve and their children included Isabel (b.1801), Janet (b.1803), Robert (b.1805), Mary (b.1807) and John (b.1810). George (19th C.) married Helen Linton in Robertson in 1836. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Brown and their children included Agnes (b.1751). George (b.1646), with no mother’s name given, is probably also his child. The witnesses in 1651 were George (surely related) and Robert ‘freir’. James (17th C.) listed at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. George was also listed and their name was written ‘Helme’. James (b.c.1812) farm worker living at Borthwick Mains in 1841. In 1851 he was living at Hassendean. He married Hannah Hewitson in Hawick in 1838 and their children (baptised in Jedburgh) included: George (b.1838); Robert (b.1840); Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1843); and William (b.1845). He may be the James, son of Thomas, baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1810. John (18th/19th C.) listed as coachman at Wilton Lodge in 1791–97, when he was working for Lord Napier. His surname appears to be ‘Helem’ in 1791. Probably the same John married Janet Anderson and had the following children baptised in Hawick: Mary (b.1791); Thomas (b.1796); William (b.1799); and Agnes (b.1802). The witnesses in 1802 were Thomas Glendinning and James Veitch. Robert (18th C.) married Isabel

Oliver in Kirkton in 1764. Their children included William (b.1764) and Isabel (b.1767). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included George (b.1769), Thomas (b.1772), Janet (b.1773), Thomas (again, b.1776), Margaret (b.1778) and Robert (b.1783). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Outerside. He married Margaret Renwick in Robertson in 1702 and their children included: Agnes (b.1704); William (b.1705); John (b.1706); Margaret (b.1709); Margaret (again, b.1713); and John (b.1715). Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Scott in Bedrule in 1707. Thomas (b.c.1770s) living at Branhholme Park in 1799, according to the ballot list for the Militia. He was still on the list in 1801. Perhaps the same Thomas had sons William (b.1812) and James (b.1815) baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Thomas (19th C.) married Isabel Ballantyne in Cavers in 1832. Thomas 'Tom' (b.c.1886) from Hawick, son of James and Jane Ogilvie. He was a professional rugby league player. He was a forward for Oldham, and also played for Great Britain. His 1910 cap for the Australian tour is in the Museum. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Isobel Renwick and their children included: Margaret (b.1683); and Janet (b.1684). William (b.1688) was probably also his child. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for William Cairncross. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Borthaugh, recorded in 1729. He married Margaret Falside in Hawick in 1715. Their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: William (b.1718); Thomas (b.1726); and Thomas (again, b.1729). The witnesses in 1729 were William and Robert Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1723 he was a servant at Over Southfield when he married Mary, daughter of the deceased Walter Riddell ('sometimes in Allan-haugh mill'). Their children included: an unnamed child (b.1725); Agnes (b.1727); George (b.1731); and James (b.1739). The witnesses in 1731 were William Reid (probably the tenant in Raesknowe) and John Telfer. He may be the William who in 1773 witnessed a baptism for John Scoon and Rachel Riddell. William (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1735), Isobel (b.1736), Thomas (b.1738) and George (b.1744). William (18th C.) married Agnes Pott in Kirkton Parish in 1750. Their children probably included (although with no mother's name given) William (b.1749), Margaret (b.1751), William (b.1752), John (b.1755) and an unnamed child (b.1761). William (18th C.) resident of

Cavers Parish. His daughter Mary was baptised in 1764. William (18th C.) married Christian Redford in Hawick Parish in 1767. William (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included William (b.1780), Robert (b.1781) and Janet (b.1784). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Huggan in 1770 and their children included: Robert (b.1772); Mary (b.1776); William (b.1781); and Walter (b.1785). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Easton and their children included William (b.1796) and Margaret (b.1799). William (1781–1868) son of William and Helen Huggan. He could be the servant of that name at Broadhaugh on the 1801 Militia ballot in Cavers Parish. Described as a 'residentifier' in Hawick, he was one of the 18 founders of the Relief (Allars) Church. In 1841 was an agricultural labourer living at Newmill on Teviot and by 1851 described as a former agricultural labourer. He married Margaret Graham (1778/9–1858) from Canonbie. Their children included: Isabella (1805/6–1856); Helen (1809/10–75); and Robina (1814/5–1858). The family are buried in Borthwick Waas; the William buried next to them is probably his father. William (b.c.1780) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a shepherd at Shiplaw Corse in 1851. His wife Margaret was from Cavers Parish. He could be the agricultural labourer listed with Margaret at Linfoot in Tweedsmuir in the 1841 census. He could also be the William who paid tax for having 3 non-working dogs at Birneyknowe in 1797. It is possible he was the William recorded as shepherd at Loanside in Cavers Parish on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. William (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Shanks and their children included: Mary (b.1816); William (b.1818); David (b.1825); James (b.1827); Margaret (b.1830); Robert (b.1832); and Janet (b.1840). William (b.1811/2) shepherd at Birney Knowe. He may have been son of the shepherd at Shiplaw Corse. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret, William, Alexander, Robert, John, Janet, Mary and Thomas. William (19th C.) married Janet Beattie in 1854, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes (also written 'Helam', 'Helem', 'Helme' and 'Helmne').

Helmburn (helm-burn) n. farm just south of Ettrickbridge. William Cranston of that ilk had sheep stolen from there sometime before 1502. It was part of the estate of Scott of Harden until

Helton (hel-tin) n. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘Willie Heltoun, stewart’ in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme. It is unclear whether or not he came from close to the Hawick area, like a large fraction of others listed.

Hemlaw Knowes (hem-law-nowz) n. hills to the west of the B6357 (Note o the Gate road), south-west of Hyndlee and essentially the north part of Wauchope Rig. They reach a height of 334 m (1099 ft).

Hemmers (hem-urz) n. William (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His surname is given as ‘hēmers’, which does not seem to be like any familiar names in the area.

hempie (hem-pee) n., poet. a rogue, literally a person deserving of a hempen rope, a wild, boisterous or silly girl – ‘... quo Bessie Elliot, a free-spoken Liddesdale hempy’ [LHTB], ‘... The hempies, too, when young and glaickit, And strung in bands, like gems colleckit’ [AD].

hen (hen) v., arch. to hedge, give an undertaking, to dare (someone) to perform some bold feat – ‘And jury courts to haud when some coward laddie henn’d, And gat his buttons scartit at the Auld Smiddy end’ [JT], particularly in the phrase ‘ti hen on’, meaning to give up something that was commenced – ‘Hei hennd on ei’s prenti’ship an listed for a sojer’ [ECS].

Hendawick (hen-du-wik) n. name given in 1918 to the aeroplane funded by War Bonds raised by the employees of James Henderson & Co.

Henderland (hen-dur-lind) n. settlement on the Megget Water just west of St. Mary’s Loch. William Cockburn had a sasine for the lands in 1457. Henderland Tower was here, where James V is said to have had Cockburn of Henderland hanged on his own tower door, as celebrated in the ballad ‘The Border Widow’s Lament’; in fact Cockburn was hanged in Edinburgh in 1530 as an example to other thieves (also formerly ‘Hinderland’, ‘Hendirland’, ‘Henryland’, etc.).

Henderson (hen-dur-sin) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Side. In 1706 his 2 servants, Robert Elliot and John Robson, were rebuked by the Castleton Kirk Session for fighting on the Sabbath. Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1717. He may be the ‘Tenent’ who in Hawick in 1725 witnessed a baptism for Robert, ‘Coater in hilliesland’. He probably married Margaret Gledstains in 1706 and had children: Elspeth (b.1707); Margaret (b.1709); James (b.1712); Helen (b.1714); and James (again, b.1717). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1736); Marion (b.1741); and Walter (b.1744). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Crook in 1773 when his son James was baptised. Adam (18th C.) groom at Synton in 1778, when he was working for Alexander Scott. It is possible he was the coach-drive of the same name (no location given) who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Adam (d.bef. 1811) weaver in Hawick. His son James was a smith who died in Hawick in 1811. He could be the Adam whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included James (b.1773). Adam (b.c.1780) servant at Synton-shiel according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Adam (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret (or 'Peggy') Cairns and their children included Jean (b.1818), Margaret (b.1820), Mary (b.1822), Margaret (again, b.1823), Elizabeth Lillico (b.1827) and Thomas (b.1828). Perhaps the same Adam also married Margaret Govan and had a son Adam baptised in 1831. Ainslie (1979–) born in Edinburgh and grew up in Denholm. He was in a local band called 'Sunshine'. He was an unsuccessful contestant (coming 4th) in the first season of the TV show 'Fame Academy', but went on to have a hit single 'Keep Me A Secret' in 2003. He released an album 'Growing Flowers By Candlelight' in 2006. However, failing to find further success in music, he trained in animation, receiving a BAFTA New Talent Award in 2012. In 2013 he won a BAFTA as co-writer of 'The Making of Longbird'. Andrew (16th C.) listed in 1580 among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. In 1581/2 he was described as servant to Lencie Armstrong of Whithaugh and named in connection with accusations of raids on farms around Hawick. He was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. Perhaps the same Andrew was listed in a complaint about a raid into England in 1595, along with John of Hoghill, 'Auld Wat' Scott of Harden, Armstrongs and Elliots. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he (along with John) witnessed a baptism for George and he also witnessed a baptism for James Rathie. He married Margaret Rathie and their children included James (b.1656) and Janet (b.1660). Andrew (17th C.) married Jean Runciman and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1686. This was in the Hassendean part of Robertson Parish, although his entry is labelled 'in Ancrom P.' Andrew (18th C.) farmer in Todshawhill recorded in 1771. He could be the Andrew, married to Betty Thomson, whose children included: William (b.1763), baptised in Ashkirk; Margaret (b.1766), baptised in Hawick; and John (b.1771), baptised in Robertson. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as servant at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Andrew (b.c.1780) servant at Bedrule Manse according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Probably the same Andrew had a son George who was baptised in Bedrule in 1805. Archibald (16th/17th C.) servant to the Laird of Mangerton. In 1606 he was accused, along with Ninian Armstrong of Tweeden and 'Fair Airchie' Armstrong, of the murder of Andrew Smith and cutting the nose off Thomas Tweedie. Archibald 'Airchie' or 'Watshod' (16th/17th C.) accused at the 1622 Circuit Court of stealing 4 sheep belonging to Mungo Dalgleish in Winnington Rig. He was found guilty and sentence to be hanged. It is unclear where he came from. His nickname may refer to an old word for a kind of cloth, which was often blue. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) tenant at Riccartonfoot along with John Robison around Hallowe'en 1623 when they had sheep stolen by Adie and Will Usher. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as 'in Kirktoune' in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when he was listed among men accused of stealing the wallet of a servant of the Laird of Cavers. Archibald (17th C.) tenant in Dinley in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1742 and Eilrig in 1743. Bettie (b.1742), Margaret (b.1743), Adam (b.1744) and John (b.1745) were probably all his children. He is probably the Archibald, recorded at 'Eskdiell syke House' in 1753 when his son Archibald was baptised in Robertson. Archibald (18th C.) married Mary Little in 1743, as recorded in Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Binks in 1749 when his daughter Jane was baptised in Cavers Parish. He later had children baptised in Hawick, including: Mary (b.1759); Walter (b.1760); and Thomas (b.1764). He is probably the Archibald who witnessed a baptism (along with Walter Burn) for John Scott in Hawick in 1765. He is probably also the Archibald who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Sanderson and their children included Helen (b.1749). Archibald (b.c.1780) resident of Pyat Knowe according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He may be the Robert, baptised in 1782, who was son of the John recorded at Pyat Knowe in 1787. Bessie (17th C.) wife of Cuthbert, who was a butcher in Hawick. She has the distinction of being the first person recorded in the Town Book (in 1638) being sentenced to the stocks, 48 hours in this case, for stealing peats from Bailie William Scott. She also afterwards had to stand at the Mercat Cross with the peats on her shoulders and a sign declaring her crime. Archibald (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Thomson and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1822. Christian (b.1770) listed as 'Independent' and living with 2 female servants at the East end of Hawick in the 1841 census. She was probably the widow of someone wealthy enough to provide for her. Cuddy (16th C.) recorded in 1566 among men who were to be entered with the Warden of the Middle Marches. He is listed along with Simon Oliver and Mathew Douglas, and was to be entered by John Rutherford of Hunthill. His first name may have been short for 'Cuthbert' or otherwise could be a nickname. Cuthbert (17th C.) 'fleshour' in Hawick recorded in 1638. His wife Bessie was accused of stealing peat from Bailie William Scott. Daniel (19th C.) proprietor of the Bonchester Bridge Inn. He was also a grocer there. He had a sister who married John Malcolm, schoolmaster at Hobkirk. Dandy (19th C.) one of the first 2 Hawick natives (the other being Jim Fiddes) to play cricket in town, after returning from working in England. He was apparently small and knock-kneed and played at short-stop. His proper name may have been Andrew. David of Wester Essenside (18th C.) recorded as 'Henderside' among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was probably son of Matthew, who was owner of Wester Essenside in 1758. David, J.P. (1826–87) younger son of Robert. He was tenant of the Gatehousecote farm on the Abbotrule estate, owned by his father. He eventually inherited Abbotrule from his brother John, and was listed there in 1868. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Gatehousecote, Wester Fodderlee, Doorpool and Midquarter, as well as parts of the lands of Grange, Ruletownhead, 'Bossithill' and Burnkinford, which had previously been possessed by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. Additionally, he owned lands in Jedburgh Parish. Like his brothers, he was keen on hunting and kept a stable of horses. He was also said to be very shy of female company. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He died unmarried and was buried at Ashkirk kirkyard. The estate was left to his cousin James Cunningham. Elizabeth (d.1797) recorded as 'a widow died in Silverstreet'. It is possible she is the Elizabeth who married James Storie in Bedrule in 1755 (perhaps the same James who died earlier in the year in Hawick). Francis (17th/18th C.) smith who lived at the Flex. Along with William, also smith at the Flex, he witnessed baptisms in 1695 for Robert Stoddart in the Flex and in 1700 for William Lillico, herd at the Flex. He is recorded in 1702 as the son of Thomas, smith at the Flex, who fixed the clock in 1701–2. In that year the Council agreed that he should be hired to keep the clock (in St. Mary's) in good working order, with an annual payment of £6 Scots. Also in 1702 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin, tenant at the Flex and another for Archibald Glendinning in Hawick Shiel. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for James Gledstains in Whitehaugh. In 1704 he and William (both smiths at the Flex) witnessed a baptism for George Scott, smith in Hawick and in 1705 the pair witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin in the Flex. In 1706 he was charged with the responsibility of keeping the clock of St. Mary's Kirk in working order, agreeing to be paid 6 shillings yearly to keep it working. In 1708 he witnessed baptisms for Thomas Boyd, gardener at the Flex (along with Francis Paterson, who was also in the Flex) and for Thomas Penman in Whitchesters. In 1710 his son William, smith at Denholm, complained that the Burgh owed £10 in arrears for his father's salary, suggesting he was deceased by then. Francis (1798–1835) son of Joseph and Isabel Tudhope. He was brother of ship-maker John and Nancy, who married shoemaker Richard Wilson. He was a stocking-maker in Hawick and later joined the 76th Regiment of Infantry. He died in Dominica, West Indies. He may also have used the name 'Hardy'. Francis 'Frank' (1820–1900) born in Lynnwood, son of John and Elizabeth Mortlock. He is said to have gone off to the gold rush and returned with sufficient wealth to set up his sons in business. In 1851 he was a wool spinner at 9 Teviot Crescent and in 1861 was living on Havelock Street. In 1878 he served as Acting Father to his son James. He married Agnes Aitkin (from an old Hawick family) in Wilton Parish in 1842. Their children included: John, took over the business of grocer and merchant George T. Pringle; Elizabeth; Christina Scott; Louisa; Jane; and James Aitkin (b.1859), who was Cornet. He died at 5 Loan. Francis (b.1894) son of James Aitkin and Margaret Parker. He served in the Lothians & Border Horse. He was Cornet in 1922. He had a grocer's business on Buccleuch Street (or perhaps 1 Sandbed) and lived at Langbaulk farm. He was Jubilee Cornet in 1972. George (16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 as the King's shepherd in the lands of Brugh. He was paid £3 6s 8d for 5 bolls of grain. He was surely related to William and Richard who were recorded in neighbouring lands that were all part of Ringwoodfield. George (16th/17th C.) tenant in Winnington. In 1607 he was accused of leading a group of men who cut down trees on the lands of Birkwood belonging to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. The claim was that in 1605

they had cut down 100 birches, 300 alders, 300 hazels and 400 willows. However, he was acquitted, the as announced by 'the Assyse, be the mouth of Johnne Gledstones of Winningtounlaw' (who could hardly have been impartial!). George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included James (b.1632) and George (again, b.1734). George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Shiel and their children included John (b.1650), Andrew (b.1652) and William (b.1661). The witnesses in 1650 were John and James (who were surely relatives), in 1652 were John (again) and John Wilson, and in 1661 were John and Andrew. George (17th C.) schoolmaster at Hobkirk, recorded in a discharge of 1657 for his fee for 'service at the kirk of Hopkirk'. He must have served as Clerk for the Parish, since he wrote up discharges for the vicarage teinds. He also served as Reader at the Kirk. He served until at least 1660. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was related to smith James. George (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid out of the Wilton poor box in 1705. George (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Scott in Roberton Parish in 1707. George (18th C.) hand-loom weaver who lived at Kilknowe in Hobkirk Parish. As well as blankets, he also wove a coarse tweed cloth, which was much used locally. His grandson George lived at Weens West Lodge. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Geo Wat [or War] Henderson' on his inscribed curling stone, which is in the Museum. It is unclear who this gentleman was, but he was presumably local. George (18th/19th C.) servant at Greenhill. In 1797 he was on a list of men of Ashkirk Parish who were on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. George (b.c.1803) mason who lived in the Round Close. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Helen and their children included George, William and John. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bush in Ewesdale in at least the period 1794–97 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He was recorded as 'George Henderson Esq'. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Helen (17th C.) listed as cottar at 'Bridiholl' (probably Brieryhill) in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in Lilliesleaf in 1580 when he witnessed a marriage contract between Isabel, daughter of George Riddell in Lilliesleaf and George Rutherford in Bewlie. Perhaps the same James was granted a cottage-land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being in 'Catheuch' in 1611. Robert Scott, Bailie of Hawick acted as cautioner for him in court in Jedburgh. He was then acquitted of the charges. James 'Jamie' (16th/17th C.) recorded being in 'Noltlawis' in 1611 when his son Hob was cited for non-appearance at court in Jedburgh. The lands were probably Nolt-lair in Liddesdale. James (17th C.) married Margaret Rutherford in Ashkirk Parish in 1634. His children (although with no mother's name given) are probably Jean (b.1635), James (b.1637) and John (b.1640). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their son Robert was baptised in 1636. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Grieve and their children included: Isobel (b.1639); and Margaret (b.1641). The witnesses in 1639 were Thomas (probably a relative) and James 'Wems'. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Douglas and their son John was baptised in 1648. James (17th C.) recorded in 1652 when his twins ('gem:') Thomas and William were baptised in Ashkirk. The witnesses were Francis Scott and Thomas Johnston. Probably the same James was married to Margaret Vogan in 1660 when their daughter Bessie was baptised in Ashkirk. He may be the John who witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk in 1650 for George (along with John, probably all of them related) and in 1651 for James Vogan. James (17th C.) resident of 'Langsyntowne'. In 1676 he and his son James in Borthwickshiels were found guilty of breaking his son out of the prison, where he was being held for striking Margaret, wife of Scott of Coldhouse. They were also found guilty of 'committing of ane ryott upon above twenty persons, whereof the baylyea and clarke wer a part'. It is unclear where 'Langsyntowne' might have been. James (17th C.) resident of Borthwickshiels recorded in 1676 when he was found guilty of striking Margaret, wife of Scott of Coldhouse. He was imprisoned in the Tolbooth and then his father (resident in 'Langsyntowne') tried to break him out of jail; they were charged with fighting with more than 20 people in this incident. James (17th C.) resident at Wester Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He is recorded as herd in Burnfoot in 1698 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Ashkirk (with no mother's name given). He may be the same James who married Janet Laing and had children Andrew (b.1689) and John (b.1696) baptised in Ashkirk. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk for James Gray in 1689. James (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (1655/6–1728) smith at Bedrule Newton, who is buried in Bedrule churchyard. His wife may have been Elizabeth Dodds (who died in 1705, aged 27), wife of James, 'smith and porshoner in Lantone', who is buried nearby. He is listed under the Laird of Newton's farms in Bedrule Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be closely related to George, who appeared on the same list. He may have earlier married Margaret Bruntfield, who is listed as 'spouse to James Henderson, smith in Newtoun' when her will is recorded in 1684. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Blaikie and their son John was baptised in 1709. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Mein and their children included: John (b.1707); Sarah (b.1710); Isobel (b.1713); and an unnamed child (b.1716). James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Weensland. He married Marie Graham and their children included: Daniel (b.1705); and John (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were merchant Patrick Angus and smith John Scott. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in 'Smithsfield' in Kirkton Parish in the early 1700s. His children included Thomas (b.1708) and Margaret (b.1710). Perhaps the same James was at Effledge in 1716 when his son William was born. Magdalen (b.1720) may also have been his daughter. He may have been related to Robert, whose children were baptised in Kirkton Parish in the 1720s and 30s and the James whose children were baptised in Kirkton Parish in the 1750s and 60s. James (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Lumsden. Their son John was baptised in 1720, with witnesses merchant Robert Robson and smith Thomas Huntly. Note that there are several contemporary men of the same name, who are difficult to distinguish. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Esther (or Elspeth) Riddell in 1720 and their children included Bessie (b.1724). James (18th C.) resident of Branhholme. He married Janet Rae in 1725 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1726); Walter (b.1728); and Jean (b.1730). Elizabeth (b.1738), with the mother's name give as 'Helen' Rae, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1728 were Andrew Ogilvie and George Fletcher and in 1730 were Andrew Ogilvie and John Tait. James (18th C.) carter in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms for Robert Young and Margaret Henderson (probably his sister) in 1757, 1762 and 1766. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for merchant John Hardie in 1763. He also witnessed a baptism in 1766 for William Richardson and Isobel Henderson (probably his daughter) and in 1767 (along with merchant John Hardie) for George Waldie and Betty Henderson (perhaps another daughter). He may be the James whose name is recorded as part of the invoice for a new church bell for Hawick (coming from London) in 1763. Probably the same James married Bessy Hardie and had children Isobel (b.1733), Margaret (b.1735), Marion (b.1737), Walter (b.1739), John (b.1741), James (b.1743), Betty (b.1745) and Marion (b.1756). In 1745 his wife is recorded as 'Hardie or Aitkin' and her death is recorded in Hawick in 1781. James (18th C.) possibly the son of Robert, baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1733, and part of the family of farmers and carters who later lived at 53 High Street. He may be the James whose children, baptised in Kirkton Parish, included: Robert (b.1757); Thomas (b.1758); James (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Janet (b.1764); George (b.1765); and Rebecca (b.1765). Rev. James (1761–1840) born in Jedburgh, he trained as a tailor, but changed course and re-educated himself for the ministry in the Burgher secession church. He became minister of the East End (Burgher) Church in 1791, following several years without a minister, and at least 2 other men being called unsuccessfully. His own 'call' was signed by 214 of the congregation in that year, and he had also been called to Airdrie and Kirkintilloch. Known as an enthusiastic and effective preacher in his early days, after several years he suffered some kind of fever, which gave him relapses during which his physical and mental faculties failed him. It is said that in later years his longer sermons thereby suffered from a lack of clarity. However, his running commentary on the metrical psalms remained popular. He was said to have preached against people attending the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was noted for establishing some of the earliest Sunday Schools around 1817 (although Hawick had 2 as early as 1786), and also a Thursday afternoon bible class, which attracted students from a wide area. His Sunday School was open to all denominations, and was the sole source of education for many local children. He was described as a popular preacher, held in awe by his congregation. He was also one of the first members of Hawick Curling Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's

'History of Hawick' in 1825. He gave a speech at the 1832 celebratory dinner for the Reform Bill, held on the Haugh. He served as minister for almost half a century, but was eventually talked into finding an assistant, since his sermons were by then seen by some as old-fashioned. There is also a reference to a 'constitutional malady' which prevented him from fully carrying out his work, and so in 1833 Adam Thomson was appointed as his assistant and successor. He then suffered from a stroke and was nearly paralysed for the last year of his life. A portrait of him exists, and a communion token of 1791 is stamped with his initials. James (d.bef. 1808) listed as 'Craigie' in 1808 when his son John is recorded dying in Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who married Betty Hardie in 1788. Their children included: John (b.1793); and Betty (b.1796). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Doveshaughmill according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (1770s-1811) smith in Hawick, son of weaver Adam. He was recorded as a smith in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia and still on the list in 1801. He could be the James, son of Adam, baptised in Cavers in 1773. James, W.S. (18th/19th C.) lawyer in Jedburgh. He was clerk to the Justices of the Peace for Roxburghshire and was one of the original members of the Jedforest Club. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1804 he married Jane, daughter of William Cruickshank; she was immortalised as 'Rosebud' in some lines by the poet Burns. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Winningtonrig. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. James (b.1784) son of Walter and Janet Armstrong. He lived in the pend at 53 High Street. He was a carrier operating between Hawick and Kelso, listed in Pigot's 1825 directory. He travelled every Tuesday and Friday to Kelso, returning on Wednesdays and Saturdays. In 1837 he was still listed travelling to Kelso every Tuesday and Friday. In 1837 he was one of the Tory supporters who was said to have had his coat torn off his back at the election in Hawick. He was also a Hilliesland 'Laird' and was recorded as a farmer, living at about 53 High Street, on the 1841 census. He married Janet, 3rd surviving child of linen manufacturer Charles Scott (and he was thus an uncle of Sir James Murray). His business was located at 'the Pend', 53 High Street (probably the last pended house on the High Street itself), which in those days had no

shop in front. His property is shown on Wood's 1824 map. His children were: Margaret (b.1819), who married Hawick jailor Michael Anderson; Walter (1821-91), 'Wattie Ernyetts', farmer; an unnamed infant (d.1823); Charles (b.1825); Janet (b.1827); James (b.c.1830), who emigrated to Canada; John (b.c.1832), who was in the 72nd Highlanders and married Jane Johnstone; and George (b.1842), who became an estate agent in New York. He is presumably the same carrier who was Cornet in 1815, and whose expenses are discussed in detail in an article for the Transactions by Mr. Winning. James (18th/19th C.) listed in Pigot's 1837 directory as a slater and glazier on the High Street. Probably the same James is also listed as a plumber. He was probably also a partner in Chesser & Henderson, who were listed as slaters, plumbers and glaziers in 1852. He may be the same man as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (b.c.1804) green-grocer in Hawick, born in Kirkton Parish. In 1841 he was living on the Round Close, with occupation given as 'Post'. By 1851 he was a green-grocer on the Cross Wynd. He married Mary Hill, from Bedrule. Their children included: George (b.1828/9); Peter (b.1830/1); Margaret (b.1832/3); James (b.1834/5); Euphemia (b.1837); and John (b.1839), who probably died young. James (b.1815/6) farmer at Netherraw in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was recorded there in 1861, farming 295 acres and employing 6 people. He could be the farmer at Minto Kames who became a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland in 1863. He married Elizabeth Minto and their children included Janet D. and Robert. James (19th C.) married Anne Scott in Hawick in 1845. James (b.1834/5) baker in Hawick, son of green-grocer James. In 1861 he was at 9 Cross Wynd. His wife was Ann and their children included Mary and Margaret. He is probably the James who was one of the main people to start the Hawick Dramatic Club. James (1840-1901) hosiery manufacturer. He was in partnership with A.P. Innes from 1868, and built Victoria Mills on Victoria Road in 1875. The firms split in 1885, when James Henderson & Co. took over the front part of Victoria Mills and focussed on the retail market. He was one of the earliest members of the Golf Club Committee in 1878 and later Club Captain. He lived at Woodside and was father of Sir Thomas. He was heavily involved in Hawick Free Kirk, presiding over the jubilee celebrations in 1893 and giving gas lamps for outside the front door in 1900, as well as being an elder and Sunday School teacher. He is probably the James who married Elizabeth Jane Cruickshank in Edinburgh in 1869. The James Henderson Memorial Building was opened at the Hawick Cottage Hospital in 1933, paid for with funds from his son Sir Thomas and named in his memory. Bailie James Aitkin (1859–1916) son of Francis and Agnes Aitkin. He was a Councillor and Bailie in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1878 when he was listed as being a grocer. His own father Francis served as his Acting Father. He did duty as Left-Hand Man both in 1880 and 1881. He was Acting Father in 1899 (for his nephew, the year of the first film clips of the Common Riding) and also in 1908. In 1892 he married Margaret, daughter of Roger Parker, gamekeeper at Branxholme. Their children included: Francis (b.1894), grocer; and James Aitken (b.1905), Provost. James (d.1924) son of farmer Walter. He farmed at Broadhaugh and Wilton Burn. He married Margaret Cleghorn, who died in 1904, aged 45, and later married Jane Turnbull Beattie, daughter of the farmer at Todshawhaugh. His children (by the second marriage) were Margaret Turnbull (who married a Moffat solicitor), Walter (who became a doctor) and John Beattie (who was a farmer). James (19th/20th C.) younger son of carrier James. He emigrated to be a farmer near Vancouver, Canada. His children were James and Margaret (who married Isaac Miller and had a family of 8). James Aitkin, J.P. (1905–93) son of Bailie James. He was a licensed grocer at 5 Loan, and later farmer at Crumelknowes. He produced aerater waters, as well as his own ale and stout. He was on Hawick Town Council from 1949 for Slitrig Ward, then Provost for 1962–68, and was also an Honorary Sheriff Substitute. He was first selected as Provost in 1958, but declined, feeling that he did not have enough support. In 1968 he lost the Provostship after Davey Atkinson was selected by lot, and he resigned from the Council 3 days later. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, being President of the Mosstroopers' Club and Acting Father in 1949. He orchestrated the visit to Hawick by the Queen and Duke of Edinburgh, and fought against the closure of the Waverley Line. Several improvements happened during his term as Provost, including construction of the Coble Cauld and salmon run, and council housing at Burnfoot, Silverbuthall and the Loan. He also worked to diversify the local economy by encouraging new companies to come to the Town, such as Bantel and Slumberdown. He was known as a very private man. He married Jean Norman and they had 3 sons. He sold his farm in 1977, moving to London, then Hampshire, then Tarraby (near Carlisle), and finally Kirkintilloch. Henderson Road was named after him. Sir James son of Sir Thomas, he opened the new Henderson Technical College on Commercial Road in 1971. James (19th/20th C.) first organist at St. George's Kirk when instrumental music was introduced there in 1910. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1679 when she was cited by the Council for publicly accusing John Moore (servant of Walter Scott of Westport) of 'stealing of ane pair of plaiding hose off some thorns, which she could not make out'. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Has-sendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Has-sendeanbank. Jean (17th/18th C.) resident at Brox in Castleton Parish. In 1699 she was rebuked by the Kirk Session for cutting kale at the Roan garden on the Sabbath. Jenkin (16th C.) listed among Borderers by Monipennie in about the 1580s. He is recorded as 'Jenkyne Henderson in Kartley' in the section under Liddesdale, and listed along with Ringan Henderson (possibly from Caddroun Burn). It is unclear where 'Kartley' may have been. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. John (d.1564) convicted and hanged for sheep-stealing and related crimes. Also hung for the same crimes were Hob Scott 'callit of Colyford', John Scott 'the Clerk' and Mark Elliot 'callit of the Hill'. His own name is recorded as 'callit Johnne the Falser', meaning a forger. It is unclear where precisely he came from. John 'Jock' (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Greatlaws. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of 'Grett Law' and Clerklands. His name is listed as 'Jok Hendersone'. John (16th C.) recorded as a 'foular' in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably from Hawick, given that those he was listed beside were Hawick merchants. He was owed £8 'for wyld foulis'. John (16th C.) recorded as 'John Henderson of Hethersheils' in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Warden. It is unclear where he was from, but his name appears along with the Gledstains from around Hawick. John of the Hoghill (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among men complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is listed after 'Auld Wat' of Harden (for 2 separate raids) and along with Elliots of Falnash and Burnhead, as well as Andrew Henderson and Armstrongs. His lands were likely to be Hoghill in upper Teviotdale. He may be one of the 2 Johns who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. John (16th/17th C.) cordiner of Hawick, accused by the Lord Advocate in 1612, along with many others, of over-charging interest on loans. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) tenant in Whitchesters recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Helen Forest. Their children included: William (b.1646); Bessie (b.1650); and Malie (b.1656). The witnesses in 1656 were Walter Bell and John Bell. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Bessie Goodfellow. Their children included: Helen (b.1636); Margaret (b.1638); Janet (b.1640); and Bessie (b.1643). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1650, 1652 and 1661 for George (who was probably a close relative), in 1656 for Archibald Stewart, and in 1661 (along with Robert) for William Stewart and Marion (probably another relative). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Elizabeth Brown. Their children included: William (b.1671); Margaret (b.1674); and James (b.1675). John (17th C.) living at Stouslie according to a baptismal record of 1682. He married Janet Aitkin and their children included William (b.1682). The witnesses were William Aitkin (perhaps father of his wife) and Charles Wood. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1683 for George Murray, resident of Wilton Parish. John (17th C.) listed as tenant at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths. John (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Oliver in Hawick in 1712. John (17th/18th C.) servant to Thomas Pringle (although it is unclear who this was). His children, baptised in Kirkton Parish, included: John (b.1716); Magdalen (b.1720); and Janet (b.1723). John (18th C.) recorded in Stobs in 1726 and 1730 when his sons Adam and James were baptised in Cavers Parish. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who may be his, include John (b.1719) and Agnes (b.1721). John (18th C.) resident of Denholm, recorded in 1726 when his daughter Jane was baptised in

Cavers Parish. John (18th C.) miller in Hawick. He married Mary Cowan. Their children included: Isobel (b.1725); Helen (b.1727); and Mary (b.1729). The witnesses in 1725 were shoemaker George Oliver and cooper John Aitkin and in 1729 were Bailie James Scott and Benjamin Thomson. John (18th C.) resident at 'Todrigg' in 1764 when his daughter Jean was baptised in Robertson Parish. Perhaps the same John was recorded at Todrig on the 1791-94 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the John who married Jean Learmonth in Robertson in 1761. John (18th C.) married Margaret Hood in Wilton in 1769. John (18th C.) married Margaret Learmonth in Hawick in 1774. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1773 and 1775, at Mabonlaw in 1780, at Hoscote in 1781, 1785 and 1787 and at Outerside in 1788. His children (although it is possible there are 2 families here) included Janet (b.1773), twins Joan and Agnes (b.1775), William (b.1777), Nelly (b.1780), Helen (b.1781), John (b.1783), Janet (b.1785), Walter (b.1787) and Isabel (b.1788). He is probably either the John who married Bessie Glendinning in Robertson in 1767 or the Robert who married Helen Cowan in Robertson in 1768. John (18th C.) resident of Crumhaugh. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick around the 1760s. He married Betty Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1764); James (b.1766), perhaps the carrier of that name; and Isabel (b.1770). He could be the John whose daughter's death is recorded in Hawick in 1787. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at 'Pyetknow' in 1787 when his son Robert was baptised. Archibald (b.1782) and James (b.1790) were probably also his children. The same Archibald was probably recorded at Pyat Knowe in 1801. John (18th/19th C.) from Minto Parish, in 1791 he married Betty Stavert from Cavers Parish. Their children included: John (b.1801), baptised in Bowden; and Christian (b.1809), baptised in Lilliesleaf and Maxton. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Penchrise. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. His occupation is not stated, but he owned 2 horses. He could be the carter whose child is recorded being buried in Hawick in 1829. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Turlenbrae' in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. The farm was in Wilton Parish, probably near Coldhouse. He could be the John who married Betty

Laidlaw in Wilton in 1802. John (18th/19th C.) from the Berwick area. He married Betty Gray, who died at Woll in 1798 and he then remarried. His children (baptised in Galashiels) included: John Gray (b.1757), surgeon with the East India Company; Margaret (b.1759); Robert (b.1760), who became Laird of Abbotrule; Mary (b.1762); Agnes (b.1764); Jane (b.1766); Charlotte (b.1768); and Elizabeth (b.1770). His son John Gray purchased the farm of Chapelhope (near St. Mary's loch) for him. John Gray (1757–1814) born in Galashiels, he was brought up at Brownmuir farm near Berwick, son of John and Betty Gray. He joined the East India Company as a surgeon in 1778, and was based in Bengal. In 1813 he became a member of the Medical Board, which came with a large salary. He was buried overseas with military honours, and left a sum of more than £80,000 to his family back in Scotland. His father John died in about 1816, and most of the money went to his brother Robert (who purchased Abbotrule). John (18th/19th C.) labourer in Hawick. In 1797 he was selected to serve in the Militia, his name appearing again in 1797; in 1798 it is recorded that Robert Gledstains was acting as substitute for him. However, he failed to appear and was later considered to be a deserter, with a reward of 1 guinea for his apprehension; William Little was balloted in his place and then John Fletcher. John (b.c.1778) farmer recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls at Longbaulk. Also in 1797 he was listed at 'Longback' among the Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia, and recorded again on the 1799 and 1801 lists. In 1841 he was at 'Longbalk' along with Margaret, probably his daughter. He could be the John from Hawick who in 1822 married Margaret Michie, who was also from Hawick. John (1789–1863) born at Lynnwood, he became a factory manager. In 1841 he was living on Damside and working as a spinner. In 1861 he was a wool carder in Wooler. In 1809 he married Elizabeth ('Betsy') Mortlock (b.1789), who was from London. Their children included: William (b.1810); Francis (b.1820); Jane (b.1824); Thomas (b.1826); and John. He secondly married Jane Harkness in Wilton in 1837. He died at Wooler and his wife died the following day. John (b.1789/90) from Hawick, he was a handloom weaver. In 1841 he was living near the Crown Close and in 1851 was at about 39 High Street. His wife was Janet (b.1797/8) and their children included: Euphemia (b.1824/5); Helen (b.1828/9); Walter (b.1830/1); and John (b.1833/4). John (b.c.1795) woollen spinner in Hawick. He was living at Weensland Mill in 1841. He married Elizabeth Riddell and their children included: Margaret (b.c.1820); Elizabeth (b.c.1820); James (b.c.1825); William (b.1826/7); John (b.1829/30); Robert (b.1831/2); George (b.1835); and Isabel (b.1839/40) John (19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Betty Robson and their children included Walter (b.1831) and Andrew (b.1833). John Gray (1820–61) son of Robert, from whom he inherited Abbotrule. He had previously farmed Ruletownhead. In 1851 he was still living with his elderly father, and several siblings, at Abbotrule House, and listed as farmer of 500 acres, employing 12 men and 8 women. He was a keen hunter and kept his own pack of harriers. He was said to be the most sociable of the Henderson brothers William, Robert and David. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He had an accident one day near Cavers Lodge while driving with his carriage to Hawick, when the carriage went over the parapet, leading to the death of both horses, although he and his driver were thrown clear. About 1854 he sold the farm of Chapelhope (by St. Mary's Loch) to John Scott, W.S. John (19th C.) licensed grocer of 3 Drumlanrig Square. He married Mary, daughter of Provost Robert Milligan. John Graham (b.c.1865) supposed tweed manufacturer in Hawick, who appears to have been something of a con-man. He claimed his factory was at 'Weensforth'. He made a splash at the 1893 World's Fair, presenting himself as a Hawick tweed manufactutrer. He lectured in the Town Hall after returning from this trip. In 1899 he was convicted of fraud in Aberdeen, having advertised his tweeds in a Dundee newspaper, but simply collected money sent to him (at his Hawick address) and never delivered the goods. He was arrested in Glasgow and found to have carried out this fraudulent scheme throughout Britain, with Hawick's Chief-Constable Macdonald speaking at the trial about all the complaints against him. He may have had premises in part of Weensland Mill, and a warehouse on Dovecote Street. He was the 'J. Graham Henderson', tweed manufacturer of Hawick, who was subject of 2 separate poems by notorious poet William McGonagall. Joseph (18th/19th C.) brewer in Hawick. In 1797 his employee Walter Tudhope was listed among the Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. He is probably the Joseph recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick; the record states that 'Joseph Henderson & Co.' owned 2 horses.

He married Isabel Tudhope in 1794. Their children included: Betty (b.1794); Agnes (b.1796), who married shoemaker Richard Wilson; Francis (1798–1835), who died in the West Indies; Josina (b.1801); and John, who became ship-builder in Liverpool and then Stockport. The witnesses in 1794 were Hugh Grieve and John Tudhope (probably related to his wife). The witnesses in 1798 and 1801 were John and Walter Tudhope. Matthew (15th/16th C.) listed in 1510 among the associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh who received respite from the Privy Council for their crimes. He is listed as ‘Matho Hendesone’ and ‘Hendersoun’. John is also listed, so presumably a brother or son. Matthew (16th C.) Hawick resident who had 2 particates of land confirmed to him on the south side of the public street in the 1537 Charter. This is probably the same land known as ‘Matthew Henderson’s Croft’, later later called Nichol’s Croft and now known as the Village. Matthew of Tunnochside (18th C.) owner of Wester Essenside, recorded in 1758 when the boundaries with his neighbour George Pott of Todrig were straightened. David (recorded there in 1761) was probably his son. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Rinzian Henderson in Armil-tonburne’ on Monipennie’s list of Borderers in the 1580s. He is listed under Liddesdale, and so his lands were either ‘Halcaldenburne’ (probably the Caddroun Burn) or perhaps Arkleton in Ewesdale. Richard (16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1540 as shepherd to the King in the lands of Westcoterig, Southcoterig and ‘Bolburg’. These were surely part of the lands of Ringwoodfield. He was paid £7 10s for 11 bolls and 1 firloft of oats. He was probably closely related to William, who was the King’s shepherd at ‘Northous, Stobbe-Tait, et Cokburn’ and George, who was at Brugh. Richard (1945–) born in Edinburgh, his family moved to the Borders when he was young and he attended primary school in Newcastleton. He was one of only 4 pupils to be selected to attend Hawick High School in 1957. There, he was in the same class as Sir David Wallace. He later attended Boroughmuir High School and graduated from Edinburgh University in Physics in 1966 before receiving a Ph.D. from Cambridge University in 1969. He became a molecular biologist, working at Yale and then in the Medical Research Council Laboratory of Molecular Biology in Cambridge from 1973. He has received many awards and honours, including sharing the Nobel Prize for Chemistry in 2017. He returned to visit Hawick High School (along with fellow Nobel Laureate Sir Angus Deaton) in 2022. Robert ‘Cheese-wame’ (16th C.) one of a group of Armstrongs and others involved in a raid in which the farm of Howpasley was burned and 60 cattle stolen from it in 1535. His name is given as ‘Robert Hendersoun alias Cheys-wame’, presumably meaning ‘cheese-belly’. Robert ‘Hab’ or ‘Hob’ (17th C.) listed in 1611 as son of Jamie in ‘Noltlawis’ when he was cited for non-appearance at court in Jedburgh. He was also listed in 1632 as possessor of lands in Liddesdale. These were ‘Noltlares’, Hightrees, Burnmouth, Dawstonburn and Prickinghaugh. Presumably the same ‘Hab’ is also listed as possessor of the lands of Toddsleuch, Fairside, Tailside and Cleuchside (probably all close to the modern Steeleroad-end). Robert (16th/17th C.) resident of Penchrise in 1618. Walter Scott of Buccleuch complained that he had cut down 24 alder trees from his lands of Gorrenberry, with other men from upper Teviotdale also being accused of stealing timber. He was absolved of the crime, after denying it on oath. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed a baptism in 1661 (along with Robert) for William Stewart and Marion (probably a relative). Robert (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Shaws in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Jean Falside and their children included Robert (b.1701), Margaret (b.1703) and Marion (b.1706). The witnesses in 1701 were carrier William Aitken and tailor Alexander Hislop, in 1703 were Bailie Patrick Richardson and merchant Patrick Angus and in 1706 were Robert Thomson from Newmill and Andrew Riddell from Goldielands. Robert (17th/18th C.) servant of Rev. Robert Cunningham. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron. He could be the ‘Robin’ who witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull (in Broadhaugh) in Hawick in 1729. Robert (17th/18th C.) cottar in Hilliesland. He is recorded being in Hilliesland in 1721 and ‘Coater in hilliesland’ in 1725. He married Janet Phaup in Kirkton in 1720, and their children included: John (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); Margaret (b.1725), who may have married blacksmith Robert Young; Christian (b.1729); Agnes (b.1731); Thomas (b.1731); James (b.1733); and Isobel (b.1735), who probably married manufacturer William Richardson.

Their children were baptised in a mixture of Hawick and Kirkton Parishes. The witnesses in 1725 were Rev. Charles Telfer and tenant Adam Henderson (who was probably related). He was probably ancestor of the farmers who lived at 53 High Street. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1727 and Denholm in 1730. His children, baptised in Cavers, include: John (b.1724); Bessie (b.1727); Robert (b.1730); Thomas (b.1733); and Helen (b.1739). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1774. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Perhaps the same Robert was listed as owner of a 'House and Yard' in Minto Parish in 1779, which in 1811 was owned by Lord Minto and valued at £1 16s 7d. Robert (b.1760) born in Galashiels, son of John and Betty Gray. He was brother of surgeon John Gray, who left a considerable fortune when he died in 1814. With this he purchased the Abbotrule estate in 1818, and also inherited the more distant farm of Chapelhope (near St. Mary's Loch), which had been purchased for his father. He was listed as a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. He may be the Robert, writer in Selkirk, recorded in letters relating to Ettrick Kirk Committee and other local matters in 1825–29. He was said to have been a shy man, and only thought of marriage when he inherited these farms, writing to Isabella, daughter of William Scott, farmer at Singlie, and marrying her soon afterwards. His spinster sister Jean lived with him for many years. He was also a brother-in-law of Rev. Scott, the Secession minister of Bonkle and also related to Rev. Adam Cunningham, minister of Crailing. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot's 1837 directory, and along with his son John in Slater's 1852 directory. It is said that when his son James died aged 20, he arranged for his surviving sons (John, William, Robert, David and Charles) to be placed at Abbotrule farms at nominal rent, but with Henry Elliot running the farms, since they were more interested in hunting. He had 6 sons (all of whom died unmarried) and 2 daughters: Margaret Pott, who died unmarried; John Gray, who succeeded; William Scott (b.1821), a lawyer; Robert (b.1823); Betty Gray, who married William Thomas Ormiston of Glenburnhall; David, who succeeded his brother John; James, who died aged 20; and Charles, who farmed at Doorpool. He lived until at least 90, being still recorded in the 1851 census, when he was farmer of 150 acres, employing 10 men and 6 women. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Douglasfield (in Wilton Parish) in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.c.1795) farmer at Barnes in Kirkton Parish in 1841. His wife was Agnes and their children included Isobal, Catherine and Janet. Robert (b.1823) younger son of Robert of Abbotrule. He farmed at West Fodderlee and was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1851 he was living with his father and other siblings at Abbotrule House and listed as farmer of 200 acres, employing 4 men and 2 women. He died unmarried. Sebastian (b.c.1780) gardener in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. This must have been an unusual forename at the time. Thomas (16th C.) servant of the Laird of Mangerton. There was a bond in 1548/9 to enter him as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for James in 1639. He married Bessie Ruecastle and their children included: Isobel (b.1646); Marion (b.1648); George (b.1651); and Bessie (b.1657). The witnesses in 1651 were John and James Nichol. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Adderstonelee on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish. He was listed among the 'deficient' on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. In 1692 he was renting half the Duchess of Buccleuch's lands of Clarilaw (with James Dryden holding the other half). He is probably the Thomas who (along with James Dryden) witnessed a baptism in Robertson Parish in 1682 for James Douglas and Janet Henderson (probably related to him). He also witnessed Robertson Parish baptisms for Andrew Rodger in 1683, for George Hill and Walter Clerk in 1687 and for John Turnbull and William Scott in Clarilaw in 1688. He could be the Thomas who married Margaret Turnbull and whose children included: Helen (b.1680); Margaret (b.1685); and Thomas (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were James Douglas and John Armstrong. Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded in 1689 having an illegitimate child (with Margaret Douglas) baptised in Hawick, with students James and William Oliver as witnesses. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Briery Yards according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Thomas who married Isobel Sanderson in 1687 in Robertson Parish. He could be the Thomas whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1692. Thomas (17th/18th C.) smith at the Flex. In 1701 he made a contract with the Hawick Council to fix the kirk clock, which had 'stood dumb and mute for about twelve yeirs tyme', this job taking about a year to complete. In 1706 another smith, Francis was charged with keeping the clock in working order; this may well have been his son. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, he was at Clarilaw in 1724, 1727 and 1729. He could be related to the earlier Thomas at Clarilaw. He married Jean Sinton in Wilton Parish in 1713. Their children included: Elspeth (b.1719); John (b.1722); Jean (b.1724); Margaret (b.1727); and Margaret (again, b.1729). His wife's name is transcribed 'Sintoun', 'Syston', 'Wintoun' and 'Wintown'. The witnesses in 1724 were John and Walter Scott and in 1729 were John Scott and John Dryden. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ashkirk Mill, recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the Thomas recorded in a letter of 1814, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. Thomas (b.c.1780) labourer at Birneyknowe in Cavers Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. William was also there in 1801 and hence perhaps his brother. Thomas (b.1782/3) saddler on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater's 1852 directory. His shop near the Tower Inn was mentioned in the court proceedings for the election riot of 1837. He was living with his sister Janet at about 10 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was retired on the Cross Wynd, living with his sister, together with niece Janet Turnbull and nephew William Douglas. Thomas P. (18th/19th C.) evangelist from the Baptist Union. He visited Hawick in 1845 and 1846, during which 3 people were baptised. Soon after this there was a meeting to discuss the formation of proper church in Hawick. Thomas W. 'Waugh' (b.1817/8) son of Robert and Janet Broomfield. He was listed in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory as a baker in Lilliesleaf, and referred to as 'Waugh Henderson'. He probably lived on the south side of Main Street. His wife Mary was from Crailing. Their children included Robert, Jessie and John. Sir Thomas, J.P. (1874–1951) of Langlands. Son of James and Elizabeth Jane Cruickshank. He was Member of Parliament for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire for 1922/23, and a partner in the company that later became Braemar. He was Chairman of Hawick's War Bonds fund-raising committee during WWI. He was also on Hawick Town Council and was Honorary Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. He was donor of the original Henderson Technical College (opened in 1928) as well as the Henderson Memorial X-Ray Department at the Cottage Hospital (named in honour of his father). He also funded an extension to the Library in 1939. He also served as President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1933, and was also President of the Coalition Liberal Association. Along with Mrs. George Scott of Langlee, he gifted a glass screen to St. George's Kirk, and he later gifted collection plates and then the new Manse at Broomieknowe. His workers sometimes referred to him as 'the Wheenge'. In 1900 he married Helen Scott Thyne; they had 2 sons and 1 daughter. Thomas 'Tom' (1941/2–2002) from Selkirk, he was a Director of Turnbull the Dyers in Hawick, retiring in 1998. He became a Selkirk Town Councillor in 1973 and was Provost there from 1979 to 1997. He was a local rugby and cricket enthusiast, and supported charities with fund-raising walks. He died while walking the Mich Moor. Walter (16th/17th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area. He gave evidence at the 1628 trial for witchcraft of Isobel Howison. He stated that he came to the house of Mungo Young in Lilliesleaf, whose wife Meg Smail was being examined by Howison, and since he was afraid at this sight, he turned back. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Forrest and their children included: John (b.1677); William (b.1680); and Walter (b.1683). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Craw and their children included Bessie (b.1682), Janet (b.1685) and James (b.1688). The witnesses to the 1682 baptism were Robert Cunningham and John Hardie, listed as 'students'. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1678. Walter (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Ormiston in 1708 when his son Adam was baptised in Cavers Parish. Other children included: James (b.1706); Bessie (b.1711); and Marion (b.1715). Walter (17th/18th C.) 'cassayer', i.e. a road-layer, said to be the only one in Hawick in his day. He was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He was probably the Walter recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun', from the west side. He became a Burgess in 1695, paying his fee by 'cassaing the meikle gutter stone cas'. He could be the Walter married to Janet Craw or the Walter married to Agnes Forest. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. In Hawick in 1714 he married Margaret Laidlaw, who was a servant of Walter Grieve of Branhholme Park. Their daughter Janet was baptised in 1720, with witnesses William, son to Rev. Cunningham, and Walter Scott, the Minister's servant. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick. He married Margaret Tudhope and their children included Walter (b.1718) and Bessie (b.1723). The witnesses in 1723 were wright Robert Scott and John Scott 'Wyndhead'. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Milsingtonshiel in 1726 when his son John was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Stobicote in 1729 when his daughter Helen was baptised. Walter (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1761 and 1766 he witnessed baptisms for Bailie Walter Ruecastle, who may have been his brother-in-law. He married Margaret, probably daughter of Bailie John Ruecastle. Their children included: John (b.1744); Walter (b.1746); John (b.1757); Margaret (b.1761); Beatrix (b.1763); and Adam (b.1768). The witnesses in 1757 were Bailie James Scott and Walter Ruescastle (his brother-in-law). Walter (18th C.) merchant of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1771) and Alice (b.1772). The witnesses in 1771 were Andrew Scott (probably related to his wife) and another Walter (probably a cousin or other relative) and in 1772 were merchant Andrew Scott and another Walter Henderson. He is probably the merchant Walter who witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson in 1775. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Armstrong and their children included Janet (b.1780), Betty (b.1782), James (b.1784) and unnamed (b.1786). He could be the Walter who had an unnamed child baptised in 1789. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for merchant Walter in 1772. Walter (d.1799) son of James, he was an 'Egglar' in Hawick. His death is recorded in Hawick, when he was recorded as son to the deceased James. Walter (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785-91 (although in 1790 his name was given as 'William'). He was also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick, where he had 2 work horses. He could be the father of James, and farmer at 53 High Street. Walter (b.c.1780) servant at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Walter 'Wattie Ernyetts' (1820-91) eldest son of carrier and farmer James. He also lived at 53 High Street. He is probably the farmer listed on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Margaret Scoon, who died in 1898, aged 77. Their children were: Elizabeth, who married butcher William Nisbet; James, farmer at Broadhaugh and Wilton Burn; Janet, who married tweed merchant Mark Currie, and gifted the Chinese Shelter to the Town; Agnes, who married bank manager William Park; and Margaret. Walter see Thomas W. William (16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1540 as shepherd to the King in the lands of 'Northous, Stobbe-Tait, et Cokburn'. These were surely part of the lands of Ringwoodfield. He was paid £10 for 50 bolls of oats. He was probably closely related to Richard, who was the King's shepherd at Westcoterig, Southcoterig and 'Bolburg' and George who was at Brugh. William 'Will' (16th C.) tenant of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as 'Will Hendirsoun'. It is not inconceivable that he was an ancestor of the 'Rattlin Roarin Willie'. He could be the same man as the King's shepherd recorded in 1540. William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddesdale men who did not appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was listed as 'callit Harrilsuord', but it is unclear where he was from or what his nickname meant. William (d.1627) 'parichoner' in Priesthaugh, reputedly a noted local ballad-maker and brawler. He supposedly slew Robert Rule in a duel near Allanhaugh, as immortalised in the ballad 'Rattlin Roarin Willie'. In fact he killed William Elliot, who was nicknamed 'Sweet Milk', and may have come from the Rule valley. The Presbytery records describe how he was called to appear on several Sundays and eventually excommunicated for the murder. It is said that he hid after the murder, but reappeared at Jedburgh Rood Fair and was seized in Oxnam Water by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs and young Elliot of Falnash, being subsequently executed. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1655. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Douglas and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1669. William (17th C.) tenant in Flex, recorded in 1674 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Stoddart, also in Flex. He is probably the father of the William in Flex recorded 3 decades later. He may be the William who, along with

Francis, witnessed a baptism for (a later) Robert Stoddart, also in the Flex, in 1695. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Falsyde and their children included Bessie (b.1682) and Helen (b.1685). William (17th C.) tenant in Millburnholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the 'deficients' of the Parish. William (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the William whose daughter Anna married Robert Thomson in 1700. His is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for James Davidson (in Hawick Shiel) in 1698. William (17th/18th C.) smith at the Flex. He was 'younger in Flex' in 1707 and 1708, suggesting that his father was also William. Along with Francis, also smith at the Flex (and perhaps his brother), he witnessed a baptism in 1700 for William Lillico, herd at the Flex. He also witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1700 for Walter Paterson of Burnflat, in 1702 for Robert Scott in Goldielands, for smith George Scott, for merchant Thomas Hotson, for Robert Stevenson in Hawick Shiel and for others, in 1704 for Robert Cairns (tailor in Whitlaw), for Robert Scott, tenant in the Flex and for George Scott (along with Francis), smith in Hawick, in 1705 (along with Francis Paterson) for Walter Martin, tenant in the Flex, for Robert Nickson in Dodburn and in 1706 for Walter Paterson in Burnflat and for Adam Scott in Kirkton in 1709. He is probably the William, 'younger' at the Flex who witnessed a baptism for William Lillico, herd at the flex, in 1709. He may also be the William who witnessed a baptism for Town Herd Mungo Armstrong in 1720. He married Janet Turnbull and their children included: William (b.1707); Margaret (b.1708); and Francis (b.1709). The witnesses in 1707 were Francis Paterson (tenant in Flex) and Walter Scott in Crumhaugh, in 1708 were Francis Paterson and Robert Stoddart in the Flex and in 1709 were John Gledstains of Whitlaw and Archibald Paterson 'Casier'. Perhaps the same William is recorded as a smith in Denholm in 1710 when he complained to the Sheriff of Teviotdale that the Burgh of Hawick owed him £10 for payment of salary owed to his father Francis for keeping the clock of St. Mary's in working order; he was made a Burgess of Hawick in lieu of payment. William (17th/18th C.) recorded in Acreknowe when he had children baptised in Kirkton Parish. He appears to be distinct from William, smith at the Flex. His children included Andrew (b.1708), Walter (b.1710), Janet (b.1715) and Isobel (b.1722). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Stouslie in 1706 when his son John was baptised. He could be the same man as the resident of Clarilaw. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Clarilaw. His servant George Easton had a child baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. His daughter Isabel was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1704. He is probably the William who in 1704 witnessed baptisms for Archibald Riddell in Borthaugh and for Robert Elliot in Galalaw. He is probably the William appointed by the Wilton Session in 1703 to collect the poor money. He could be the William recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. William (17th/18th C.) miller in Synton Mill. He married Mary Elliot and their children included Isobel (b.1715). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish. In Hawick in 1714 he married Margaret Telfer, who was from Whitchesters in Hawick Parish. Their daughter Manie was baptised in Hawick in 1717, with witnesses Bailie James Deans and Walter Scott (servant to the minister). He was living in Newbigging in 1717. William (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1719 he was recorded as 'workman'. In 1719 he married Elizabeth Lumsden, who was also from Hawick. Their children included William (b.1719), Helen (b.1723), Adam (b.1725) and Jean (b.1727). The witnesses in 1725 were Francis Ruecastle and smith John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'Shiref officer in Hawick' in 1722. He married Janet Best and their son William was baptised in 1722, with witnesses shoemaker Walter 'Lithen' and merchant Francis Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Isabel Dryden, who was also from Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) labourer at Wauchope in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. Perhaps the same William was a servant at Wolfelee in 1799. William (b.1780/1) born in Cavers Parish, he was farm overseer at Netherhall. He is recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 was listed as Overseer of Parks. He married Betty Hope (from Southdean) and their children, baptised in the East Bank Kirk, included: Adam (b.1805); Elizabeth ('Betty', b.1808); Thomas (b.1810); John (b.1812); William (b.1815); an unnamed child (b.1817); Alexander (b.1822); and Isabel (b.1826). Perhaps the same William was a labourer at Birneyknowe on the 1801 Militia ballot in Cavers Parish; Thomas was also there and hence possibly his brother. William (18th/19th C.) married Betty Smith in Hobkirk in 1814. William (b.c.1805) carter at Wilton Pathhead. He was living there in 1841, along with his wife Margaret and children Agnes, Jane, William, Euphemia and John. He could be the same William as the coach-driver who was an early member of Allars Kirk. William (19th C.) coach-driver who was an early member of Allars Kirk. William (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Susan Murdie and their daughter Susan was baptised in 1852. William Scott, W.S. (1821–59) 2nd son of Robert of Abbotrule. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to William Charles Balderston and John Scott. He became Writer to the Signet in 1845. He died unmarried. William (19th/20th C.) publisher of the ‘Hawick Free Press’ (formerly spelled ‘Hendersone’, ‘Hendersonne’, ‘Hendersoun’, ‘Hendersoune’, ‘Hendirsoun’, etc., as well as sometimes ‘Henrison’ and similar).

the Henderson Gairden (thu-hen-dur-sin-gār-din) n. public flower beds and seating area next to the bowling greens on Buccleuch Street. It was converted from the former Quoiting Club pitches.

the Henderson Memorial (thu-hen-dur-sin-me-mō-ree-ul) n. the James Henderson Memorial X-ray building at the Cottage Hospital, which was opened in 1933 through the generosity of Sir Thomas and Lady Henderson, and named after Sir Thomas’ father. It was designed by local architects Alison & Hobkirk.

Henderson Road (hen-dur-sin-rōd) n. part of Burnfoot, a short street connecting Galalaw Road with Appletreehall Road, built in 1960 and named after Provost James Henderson.

Henderson’s (hen-dur-sinz) n. James Henderson & Co. Ltd., hosiery manufacturers of the late 19th and early 20th centuries, occupying the front part of Victoria Mills and focussing on the retail side of the market. Their line of underwear used the trade name ‘Hendawick’. The firm split from Innes, Henderson & Co. in 1885, and reamalgamated again in 1920. J.P. Alison designe a yarn store for the company in 1902. Balance sheets from the company exist from 1896 and the Museum has minutes and other papers from 1920–46. This was also the name of a grocer’s shop in the Sandbed in the mid-20th century and later a travel agent’s at 18 High Street.

Henderson’s Close see Henderson’s Pend
the Henderson Shelter (thu-hen-dur-sin-shel-tur) n. official name for the Chinese Shelter.

Henderson’s Knowe (hen-dur-sinz-now) n. former name for the farm of Bowanhill at Teviothead, also known simply as ‘the Knowe’. It is located on the right-hand side of the A7 just before the turn-off for Teviothead Church. The older farm of Bowanhill was on the hill on the left-hand side of the A7. John Noble ‘of Hendersonisknow’ was recorded in 1590. Walter Elliot was there in 1778. Henry and Francis Scott were labourers there in 1799. In 1801 the residents included labourers Henry Scott, William Grieve and Thomas Grieve, and smith Robert Sewell. Thomas Hume farmed there in the 1820s and Walter Scott was farmer in 1841 (the name presumably comes from a former resident called Henderson, who must have lived there before the late 16th century).

Henderson’s Pend (hen-dur-sinz-pend) n. also known as Henderson’s Close, a passageway off the High Street that was removed around 1860, probably to the north-east of Walter’s Wynd. The ancient ‘bastel-house’ there was once owned by Walter Henderson.

the Henderson Tech (thu-hen-dur-sin-tek) n. Henderson Technical College, built in 1926 on Buccleuch Road through the beneficence of Sir Thomas Henderson, and used for further education in technology, science and art. It was formally opened in 1928, when the High School, rebuilt after the devastating fire 3 years earlier, was also reopened. Taken over as part of the High School, a new building was opened in 1971 on Commercial Road, used for vocational and other educational courses. In 1984 it became part of the Borders Colleges of Further Education and was known as the Henderson Building. This closed in 2009 and was replaced with a smaller building on Buccleuch Road (below the old Cottage Hospital). The 1971 building was demolished in 2010 to make way for a supermarket. The original Henderson building is part of the High School, used for Art and Business Studies.

Hendersyde (hen-dur-sīd) n. area in Ednam Parish, just to the north-east of Kelso, containing the village Hendersyde Park, the farm of the same name and a large estate, once the seat of the Waldie family. The mansion was built in 1803 (the origin of the name may be ‘Henry’s slope’ and is not recorded until the early 18th century).

Hendry (hen-dree) n. Adam (17th C.) recorded as ‘Hendrie’, tenant at Wauchope, when he witnessed a sasine for lands at Harwood in 1664. His brothers Adam and Thomas were also witnesses. It is possible that this is a mistranscription for another name, e.g. Kedzie. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Harden Anna in 1720 and 1723. He is probably the James who married Margaret Scott in Robertson in 1718. His children included: John (b.1720); James (b.1721); and William (b.1723). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Todrig in 1710 and 1714. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included Bessie (b.1710) and Margaret (b.1714). Probably the same John married Agnes Riddell in Wilton in 1708 and their children baptised there included Anna (b.1709), Helen (b.1716) and John (b.1719). With Agnes Riddell he also had a daughter Janet (b.1712), baptised in Selkirk. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was gardener at Whitfield in 1709 and was still living there in 1721. His wife was a Brown and their children included Anna (b.1709) and James (b.1721). The 1721 witnesses were Thomas ‘hontlie’ and Robert ‘shortridg’. Robert (18th C.) house servant at Midshiels in 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Anne, daughter of blacksmith George Stevenson, in 1771. William (1708/9–79) cooper in Denholm. He is listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. He married Helen Lamb, who died in 1797, aged 73. Their children included: James (b.1754); Agnes (b.1756), who died aged 22; John (b.1758), who died in infancy; William (b.1760), probably the later cooper; and Nelly (b.1766), who also died in infancy. William (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included James (b.1760), an unnamed child (b.1771), Jean (b.1775), Thomas (b.1777), Helen (b.1777), Anne (b.1779) and Margaret (b.1784). He could be the William ‘Henry’ who married Anne Stevenson in Hobkirk in 1771. William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Thomas (b.1764), Margaret (b.1766), William (b.1768), William (again, b.1772), Robert (b.1775), and Betty (b.1782) and Janet (b.1787). William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son George was baptised in 1785. William (d.1815) cooper and merchant in Denholm. He was probably related to the earlier William. His death is recorded in Hawick in 1815. William (18th/19th C.) grocer and earthenware dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married James (b.1834) and Margaret (b.1835) (also written ‘Hendery’).

Henhaugh (hen-hawch) n. former farmstead near Branhholme Park. In 1672 it was leased along with Branhholme Mains and Park to Walter Scott of Harwood. In 1673 it was referred to as ‘with the Steill and Henhaugh’ when Branhholme Muir and Park were leased along with it.

hen-hertit (hen-her-tee’, -ti’) adj., arch. chicken-hearted, cowardly – ‘Hei’d little need be hen-herteet that hed ti beer the ramstam onfaa ...’ [ECS].

Henlawshiel (hen-law-sheel) n. former cottage between Nether Tofts and the A6088, on the former farm of Upper Tofts. John Whillans lived there in at least 1769–74. This was where John Leyden spent his youth. The Leyden family moved there in about 1776, Leyden’s father being a shepherd and then overseer. It can be seen in a sketch of 1817 by T.J. Scott (from the Scots Magazine). The house was of very simple construction, and no sign of it survives. A wayside granite obelisk marks its site near Nether Tofts, on the side road off the A6088 from Hawthornside Heights. This marker was placed there in 1895. A polished stone axe found there is in the Museum – ‘At nicht-time by the hamely hearth O’ theekit Henlawshiel He’d hear sic tales o’ Border ploys That garr’d his een to reel’ [WL].

henni (he-ni, -nu) contr. haven’t, have not – ‘A henni ony’, ‘ee henni got room ti speak’, ‘oo henni changed muckle’, ‘how div ee ken ee deh like eet if ee henni even tried eet?’, ‘This day my fast I haena broken ...’ [JoHa], ‘... but my ain vyneyaird I haena keepet’ [HSR], ‘I haena gane agley frae thy juudgemints ...’ [HSR], ‘A’ true Jean, ma wummin, a’ true, thank gude-ness, and here’s another o’ us yet ee hae’na met ...’ [JEDM], ‘A hehna spoken ti a body keind aa day’ [ECS], ‘Oo hehna heard ochts o um threh kens whan’ [ECS], ‘There’s a moral there for somebody, but I henna time to tell ye what it is, the now’ [DH], ‘Altho’ Aw hennah met Her Majesty personally ...’ [BW1978], ‘... bit Aw hennah fund oot muckle aboot him sae fer except hei was a grocer’ [BW1979], ‘Ee git ti everythin ... ee henni ti queue for a Hut ticket’ [HD] (also written ‘haena’, ‘hae’na’, ‘hehna’, ‘hennae’, ‘hennah’ and variants; cf. the less common hevni).

Henrison (hen-ree-sin) n. Archibald (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is probably related to Gilbert, David and William, who are also listed along with him. David (15th C.) one of the men who did not attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined. Quentin, Archibald, Gilbert and William were also listed. Perhaps the same David was killed at Maxton Kirk, with John Fawlaw in Littledean having remission for his murder. Gilbert (15th C.) listed along with Archibald, David and William, among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Henry (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Burnmouth in Liddesdale in 1541, along with James. James (16th C.) listed among the tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. He may be related to some of Archibald, Gilbert, David and William, who are recorded in 1494/5. James (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, along with Henry, as tenant of Burnmouth. Henry was presumably his brother or son. John (15th C.) listed as 'John Henryson' among the Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. Perhaps the same John in Lintalee is recorded in 1493 when Patrick Hall in Newbigging has remission for his murder; he may have been related to Thomas 'dwelling in Jedforest' who is also mentioned in 1493. John (16th C.) tenant of Saughtree listed, after Robert, in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Ninian (16th C.) one of the tenants of the lands of 'Falset' listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert and 2 Williams were also listed. Since the same place was tenanted by Hab Henderson in 1632, it may be that 'Henrison' was really 'Henderson'. Quentin (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name appears as 'quintini henrison'. Richard (15th C.) witness to the 1469 and 1479 sasines for Wolfelee. It seems likely that he was local to Rulewater and probably related to the later James. Robert (16th C.) recorded as tenant of Saughtree on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. John is also listed, and so they were probably related. Perhaps the same Robert, along with William, Ninian and another William, was tenant of the nearby lands of 'Falset'. Thomas (d.bef. 1493) recorded as 'dwelling in Jedforest' according to the 1493 Justice-aire. He had sheep stolen from him by Patrick Hall in Newbigging and Hall also had remission for his murder. He was probably related to John in Lintalee who was also killed by Hall. Thomas (16th C.) tenant of Howletcrook (somewhere near Saughtree), according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. William (15th C.) listed along with Archibald, Gilbert and David, among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. William (16th C.) name of 2 men who were tenants of the lands of 'Falset' as recorded in 1541, along with Robert and Ninian. It is possible this is the same as William Henderson, who was the King's shepherd in Northhouse and neighbouring lands in 1540. William (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given as 'William Henrysoun, callit Strymare', although the meaning of the nickname is unclear. He must have been a supporter of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh (formerly 'Henrisone' and 'Henrisoun'; it may have formerly been the same as Henderson).

Henry (hen-ree) n. parson ('persona') recorded as witness to a land transaction confirmed by Pope Lucius III in 1183, where Henry Lovel gave lands at Branhholme to the canons of St. Andrews. 2 chaplains, Algar and William, were also witnesses. These are the 3 first known clergymen associated with Hawick, although whether any of them may have lived locally is unknown.

Henry (hen-ree) n. name of 8 Kings of England. Henry I (c.1068–1135) 4th son of William I, the Conqueror, he was the first English King after the Norman Conquest. He married Edith, daughter of Malcolm II of Scotland. Henry II (1133–89) first English Plantagenet King, he was nephew of David I, who knighted him at Carlisle in 1149. He occupied Southern Scotland following a decisive victory at Alnwick. In 1157 he forced William 'the Lion' to yield the title of Earl of Northumbria. Henry III (1207–72) son of John 'Lackland', he reigned from 1216. Although he was considered a failure personally, England flourished under his reign. In 1237 he signed the Treaty of York along with Alexander II, this possibly happening at Cavers. It was also signed by Hugh de Baliol (among others), who may have been Laird of Cavers at the time.

His sister Joanna married Alexander II of Scotland and his daughter Margaret married Alexander III. Henry IV (1367–1413) King of England from 1399, he was son of John of Gaunt and grandson of Edward III. In 1400 his army entered Scotland and declarations of his feudal superiority were read at market crosses of Kelso, Dryburgh and Jedburgh. He spent much of his reign suppressing rebellions, such as that led by Henry 'Hotspur' in 1403 (effectively begun at Cocklaw near Hawick). In 1405 he claimed the town and castle and territory of Jedburgh as his personal property. He suffered from a serious skin condition (possibly leprosy) as well as acute attacks of some unspecified form. Henry VIII (1491–1547) King of England from 1509 until his death. He was son of Henry VII and 2nd monarch of the Tudor dynasty. As a young Duke of York he was made English Lord Warden General about 1495. His reign included the time of Flodden, and it was his troops that razed Hawick and surrounding towns during the Rough Wooing of 1544/45. Famous for his 6 wives, he died grossly overweight, suffering from gout and possibly from syphilis – 'Tell King Henry! Reach him speedy, Men of Hawick, though poor and needy' [RSC], 'We saw King Henry's raiders, We had until the dawn to turn the tide of battle, And show Hawick stands alone' [GLG].

Henry (hen-ree) n. Francis (19th C.) married Helen Hardie in Hawick in 1853. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Dykes in 1736 when his son Thomas was baptised. Isobel (17th/18th C.) wife of James Turnbull, candlemaker. She acted as a teacher for poor children in Hawick Parish, recorded in the Session records of 1721. And in 1724 she was allowed 'eightpence a quarter to teach poor children'. James (17th C.) recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He may be the James, married to Elizabeth Elliot, whose children included: an unnamed child (b.1671); and Bessie (b.1679). The witnesses in 1671 were John (perhaps his father) and James Martin. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Easton in 1705 and their children included Isobel (b.1706) and William (b.1708). James (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'Woodkeeper' in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Little (in Branhholme Park). Probably the same James married Bessie Henry and had children: Bessie (b.1710); Elizabeth (b.1713); and Margaret (b.1715). James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Common in Cavers Parish in 1793. James (b.1811/2) from St. Boswells, he was a grocer and carrier in Lilliesleaf. He was listed as a grocer in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1852 he also ran a cart to Edinburgh from Lilliesleaf. In 1861 he was listed on the north side of Main Street, but was not there in 1851. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Mary Murray. Their children included Agnes (b.1754) and John (b.1756). John (b.c.1780) servant at Spittal according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1801. Rev. Matthew (1662–1714) English non-conformist minister, known particularly for his 6-volume commentary on the Bible. His book 'A Discourse concerning Meekness and Quietness of Spirit' was reprinted in Hawick in 1813 (also written 'Hendry' and 'Henrie'; see also Hendry).

Henry Mullens (hen-ree-mu-linz) n. Hawick resident of the 1900s. Whether this was his proper name or a nickname is unclear – 'Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird' [HI] (also written 'Mullins').

Henry of Cranstoun (hen-ree-ov-kran-stin) n. character in Sir Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel', presumably inspired by the Cranstons of 16th century Denholm (and perhaps by Henry Cranstoun who married Margaret Wauchope around 1653). In the poem he finally succeeds in marrying Margaret Scott, although their families are sworn enemies. A stained glass representation of him was made for Silverbuthall House, and now hangs in Drumlanrig's Tower – 'He was stately, young and tall dreaded in battle and love in hall Henry of Cranstoun, and only he, Margaret of Branksomes choice should be' [SWS].

the Henry Scott Riddell Cairn (th-hen-ree-sko'-ri-dul-kārn) n. monument at Dryden Fell on the farm of Commonsides to commemorate the poet Henry Scott Riddell. It was erected in 1874 by John Marshall & Co. of Hawick, funded by the Archæological Society and Lodge 111. It is 50 ft (13 m) high and 50 ft round the base. It has been visited annually by Lodge 111 and Edinburgh Lodge 36 since 1908. It was repaired in 1926 and renovated in 1999. Its plaque reads 'Sleep on, gentle bard, for though silent for ever, Thy harp in the hall of the chieftan is hung; No tune from the memory of mankind shall sever The tales that it told, and the strains that it sung'.

Henry's hurl (hen-reez-hu-rul) n., arch. a great hurry – 'A hurried job was often given ‘Henry’s hurl’, though who the Henry was I am not able to say’ [WL].

Henry Street

Henry Street (hen-ree-stree) n. street in Newcastleton, off North Hermitage Street, opposite Moss Road (presumably named after Henry Scott, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch).

Henry the Hadda Man (hen-ree-thu-ha-du-mawn) n. nickname for Henry Milne (see hadda).

Henry the Wolfing (hen-ree-thu-wool-fing) n. nickname probably referring to Henry Lovel.

hen’s maich ti the midden (henz-mārch-ti-thu-mi-din) n., arch. a pompous procession – ‘The element of scorn in the local phraseology perhaps reaches its peak in the summing up of an over pompous procession as ‘The hen’s maich to the midden’’ [WL].

Hensmeat (henz-mee) n. nickname for one of the men called Robert Scott in mid-1800s Hawick.

Hen’s Nest (henz-nest) n. popular name for a house built in the Village by Adam Irvine of Breweryhouses and his wife Henny around 1824–28, the name deriving from a remark by Irvine that he was building a ‘nest for oor Henny’. The name was also used for the whole of the Village area for many decades. The house itself was officially named ‘Woodlands’, although the nickname was preferentially used. James, Eliza and Robert Hogg (children of the author of ‘Teribus’) were living there in 1851.

Hinton (hin’in) n. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Milsingtonshiel in 1716 and 1717. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Helen (b.1716), Adam (b.1717) and Jean (b.1722) (formerly written ‘Henton’).

Henwuddie (hen-wu-dee) n. Henwoodie, former herd’s cottage, situated behind Girnwood in the upper Borthwick valley. An area is referred to as ‘Henwoodie common’ on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties, while Henwoodie itself was listed as part of the farm of Bellendean. Robert Inglis was recorded there in 1728. ‘Henwoody’ was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. William Sinton was there in 1764–66. James Grieve was tenant there in the years around 1800, when it was united with East Buccleuch. William Grieve was tenant there in the 1820s and 30s. Francis Armstrong and family lived there in 1841. The ruin was still standing until about 1970 (it is marked ‘Henwoody’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; the same name is used for a place on Oxnam Water, which was the place of rendezvous for the Cranstouns).

hep (hep) n., arch. a hip, fruit of the wild rose – ‘... the Rose-tribe (Roseæ), whose fruit is an urceolate, or bottle-shaped fleshy calyx, containing hard or chaffy seeds – well represented in the hep or joop of the rose’ [JAHM], ‘... the Burnet-leaved Rose (R. spinosissima), with a small yellowish cup-like flower, appearing first of the family about the time of the Common-riding, and bearing a black hepp’ [JAHM] (also written ‘hepp’).

Hepburn (hep-burn) n. Adam (15th C.) brother of the Master of Hailes. He was leasing the Crown lands of Altrieve, but yielded them up to James and John Alemoor in 1488. He is probably the Adam, brother of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, who witnessed a resignation of lands by Haig of Bemersyde in 1490. Adam (c.1492–1513) 2nd Earl of Bothwell, son of Patrick. He succeeded to his father’s titles and lands in 1508, these including the Lordship of Liddesdale and Castle of Hermitage, as well as all the associated churches and benefices, and some lands in Longnewton and Ancrum (Sandystanes). He held the patronage of Hawick Parish, and several of his relatives are recorded in connection with Hawick Kirk. He also held the Barony of Chamberlain Newton and the half Barony of Wilton. The ‘retour’ and sasine relating to him in 1508 have many local lairds as witnesses. In 1505 he obtained a ‘precept’ for lands, including ‘Elmer’ (Alemoor, confirmed in 1509), and in 1511 there was a confirming charter for lands, including some local areas, such as Wester Alemoor, as well as the Baronies of Wilton and Chamberlain Newton. He may have been appointed Warden General of the Scottish Marches about 1513. He also served as Lord High Admiral of Scotland. He married Agnes Stewart, illegitimate daughter of James, Earl of Buchan (she had also already had an illegitimate daughter with James IV, and went on to marry 3 more times) and was succeeded by his son Patrick. He died at Flodden along with at least 2 uncles and a brother-in-law. George (15th/16th C.) along with David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley and William Middlemas, he held lands at Boonraw, which passed to Robert Scott of Stirches in 1504/5. Probably the same ‘Georgio Hepburne’ witnessed the charter of Boonraw granted to Robert Scott of Stirches by Patrick,

Earl of Bothwell in 1505. George (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Hawick about 1560 or earlier. He is mentioned in 1562 when the General Assembly 'ordained the Superintendent of the Lothians to summoun' him 'to answer such things as should be laid to his charge'; this probably indicates that he was not conforming to the changes brought through the Reformation. He was described as a kinsman of the patron (at that time James, the 4th Earl), and hence probably appointed to the 'living' of Hawick without actually ministering to the congregation. Although the precise dates are unknown, he must have been the last incumbent before the Reformation. Note that there was a minister of the same name, son of Patrick of Waughton, who was recorded at Prestonhaugh from 1562, dying in 1585; this parish was also known as 'Hauch' and hence easily confused with Hawick, e.g. 'George Hepburn, parson of Hauch' is recorded in an inventory for the Earl of Bothwell in 1563/4. James (16th C.) priest mentioned in the Hawick Charter of 1537, along with several others. He is designated 'Mr.', indicating that he already had his 'M.A.' degree. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. He was probably a distant relative of the Earl of Bothwell, and possibly one of the 2 kinsmen mentioned in a letter of Dacre's in 1532 as going from Hawick to help protect Hermitage Castle. He may be the 'Sir James Hepburne, chaplain' who was witness to a discharge relating to Scott lands by Patrick Earl of Bothwell in 1528/9. James 4th Earl of Bothwell (c.1536–78) son of Patrick, he was usually referred to as simply 'Bothwell'. The family had owned lands in Liddesdale since 1492, and he was served heir to his father in 1556. He was made Lieutenant of the Scottish Marches (unusually all 3 of them) in 1558 and took over Hermitage Castle. He was allied with Mary, Queen of Scots, and the Catholic cause. In 1559 he was charged (along with Ker of Cessford and Lethington) with keeping peace on the Border. In 1560 he was appointed as one of 7 commissioners to prepare for the Queen's return from France. Accused of plotting against the Queen's brother Lord James Stewart (the Earl Moray), he was imprisoned in 1562, escaped from Edinburgh Castle, hid at Hermitage and escaped to France, where he remained for 3 years. On his return (after Mary had split with her brother) he rose in favour and regained control of Liddesdale and the Wardenship of the Marches. In 1563/4 there was an inventory of reversions for his lands belonging to his relative

Jane Hepburn, widow of George Home of Wedderburn. He was present in the palace on the night when Rizzio was murdered, apparently escaping through a window. He married Jean Gordon, daughter of the Earl of Huntly in 1566, but the marriage lasted barely a year. Also in 1566 he tried to suppress the Border clans, summoning the leaders of the Elliots to Hermitage, and holding them there; but Jock Elliot of the Park failed to appear, and so he rode out to find him. He was seriously wounded in attempting to capture Jock Elliot, apparently being hit in the head, body and hand with a short sword, and almost not getting access to Hermitage when his servants carried him back there. Mary Queen of Scots visited him 8 days later, while he lay wounded in Hermitage Castle on her famous ride from Jedburgh that year. He married her the following year, having participated in the murder of her previous husband, Lord Darnley. In 1567 he gave a charter of East Craik to John Cockburn of Ormiston, returning lands that had been forfeited to Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He soon became unpopular with other Scottish nobles and was forced to flee, being captured off Norway, where he was imprisoned, partly because of breaking an engagement (or perhaps marriage under local law) to a Norwegian lady in 1559. He was imprisoned in Dragsholm Castle in Denmark, chained to a pillar under appalling conditions, where he died insane. His body was exhumed in 1858 and was said to be 'Bothwell's Mummy' that was exhibited in the Edinburgh Wax Museum. He was succeeded by his nephew Francis Stewart – 'Fierce Bothwell I vanquished clean, Gar'd troopers an' fitmen flee; By my faith I dumfoondert the Queen, An' wha daur meddle wi' me?' [T]. John (16th C.) priest of Hawick, recorded in the 1537 Charter, along with James Hepburn and 4 others. From his designation 'Mr.' it is likely he already had his 'M.A.' and was a fully qualified priest, although his status in Hawick is unknown. He may also have been one of the 2 kinsmen of the Earl of Bothwell mentioned in connection with Hawick in 1532. Also in 1532 he was referred to in the Selkirk Protocol Books as the 'pretended rector of Hawyk'; Sir Walter Scott (probably of Buccleuch) and Robert Scott (it is unclear who this was) complained that he had tried to have them excommunicated after they failed to pay 'certain teind sheaves' in what they called a 'false writ' and referred to him as 'false rector of Hawyk'. In the 1540 Exchequer Rolls he was recorded receiving payment for the teind-lambs and wool.

It is also possible he was the John, brother of Sir Patrick of Waughton who was accused (along with his brothers Adam and Alexander and other Hepburns) of the murder of Gilbert Wauchope in 1534/5. And in 1526 he could be the 'Mr John Hepburne' who had a remission along with Sir Patrick of Waughton, John of West Fortoun, William of Crag, Patrick Whitlaw of that Ilk and others for assisting David Home of Wedderburn. He may be the 'Johanne Hepburne' who witnessed a sasine for Scott of Branhholme in 1500 and witnessed the sasine for Adam inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1508. John (d.bef.1561) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1544, when the office was resigned by John Lauder. However, Lauder retained most of the benefices until 1551. It is possible this was the same man who had earlier been a priest in Hawick. Patrick (d.1483) 1st Lord of Hailes, son of Adam of Hailes. His mother was Janet, daughter of Sir William Borthwick. He had brothers William and George. His main lands were in Lanarkshire, but he also held lands in Berwickshire. He was a Conservator of the truces with England in 1449, 1451–7 and 1459. He was also the last Scottish Keeper of Berwick Castle. He was predeceased by his son Adam and succeeded by his grandson Patrick, who became the 1st Earl of Bothwell. His daughter Euphemia married Andrew McDougall of Makerstoun. Patrick (bef. 1466–1508) 1st Earl of Bothwell, son of Adam and Helen Home. He was also Lord Hailes, Sheriff of Berwick, fought against James III at Sauchieburn, and rose to great power under James IV. He gained considerable power on the death of James III and crowning of the young James IV, including having control over Lothian and the Merse (jointly with Alexander Home). He was Master of the King's Household, Custodian of Edinburgh Castle, Sheriff-Principal of Edinburgh and Haddington and Admiral of the Kingdom. He had a Crown Charter for the Lordships of Crichton and Bothwell in 1488, and the Bothwell title was raised into an Earldom later the same year. He was Warden of the Western Marches 1489–1503. He leased the Crown lands of the Eaststead of Hartwood in 1490. In 1491 he gained leases of the Crown lands of Deloraine, Warleshope and Eldinhope, following the death of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch. He also held a great deal of land, and essentially exchanged Bothwell Castle with Hermitage in 1491/2 (after the Douglasses of Angus were forced to resign the Lordship of Liddesdale). He does not seem to have resided for any length of time at Hermitage or had much personal involvement in the district. In 1493 he was surety for many Elliots and others who were involved in cases at the Itinerant Court of the Judiciary held in Liddesdale. In 1494/5 he was the Lord of Liddesdale who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for many men of Liddesdale, in particular Elliots, Armstrongs, Wigholms and Croziers. Also in 1494/5 David, son of James Scott in Hassendean, obtained remission for stealing livestock several times from his farms. In 1498 he was fined at a Justice-aire held in Jedburgh as pledge for men dwelling in Liddesdale. In 1500 there is a record in the Register of the Privy Seal of the pledges he received for good behaviour for a large number (56) of Borderers; the list is valuable for naming many early members of the Armstrong, Crozier, Elliot, Nixon and Turnbull families in particular. In 1493 and 1494 he was fined for not appearing at the Judiciary Court as Lord of Liddesdale, and in 1494/5 he was fined for not appearing as surety for 85 Borderers whose conduct he was responsible for. There were similar fines in the 1490s, which the King forgave him on account of his good service. In 1494 he gained the lands of Teindside and Harwood. He had the patronage of Hawick Church, presumably through its connection with the Collegiate Church of Bothwell at that time. In 1494/5 David, son of James Scott in Hassendean, had remission for stealing cows, oxen and horses from him. In 1500 he gave a precept of sasine to Walter Scott of Branhholme for the lands of Grahamslaw; he was there described as Lord of Hailes and Crichton. He was involved with the treaty of marriage of James IV with Margaret Tudor of England in 1501. In 1501 he was granted ward of the lands of Branhholme, Eckford and Lanton. In 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh to 'give suit' for his lands of Wilton; it is unclear how much earlier he gained the western half-Barony of Wilton. In 1504 he had a gift of the lands and barony of Kirkurd through non-entry following the death of David Scott of Buccleuch. In 1504 he was superior who infefted Walter Scott of Buccleuch in his father's lands in Annandale. He is recorded as Baron of Chamberlain Newton in 1504/5 and of the half Barony of Wilton in 1506. In 1505/6 he argued that George, son of Robert Scott of Whames had no legal right to inherit his father's lands of Muirhouse. He married Janet Douglas and later Margaret Gordon. His children were: Janet, who married George Seton; Adam, who succeeded as 2nd Earl; Patrick, who married Nichola Home; William of Rollanston; John, Bishop of Brechin; and Margaret, married Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus. Patrick of Boltoun (c.1494–1576) Sheriff of Haddingtonshire and Master of Hailes, he was the 2nd son of Patrick, the 1st Earl of Bothwell. He served as one of the tutors during his nephew Patrick's minority. He was appointed to govern Liddesdale during this time, but was not generally present there; after complaints were made, and the tutors threatened with action, he travelled to Hermitage in 1518 and sent back a report to the Bishop on the wild state of the Borders at that time. He stated that he had pledges 'for the Elwandes of Reidheugh and their band like as I had before and for the Ellots of the other gang of Gorremberry, except so many as win in Teviotdale'. Around 1540 he was involved in a dispute with Margaret Haliburton over lands in Dirleton. He married Nichola, daughter of Alexander Lord Home, and was succeeded by his son Patrick of Fairnington. Patrick (1512–56) 3rd Earl of Bothwell, son of Adam. He was also Lord of Hailes and Crichton and served as the King's Lieutenant. He was a minor for many years after succeeding to his father's titles and estates after Flodden. His tutors were his uncle Patrick, Master of Hailes (later Sheriff of Haddingtonshire) as well as other relatives who were Prior of St. Andrews and Bishop of Moray; his uncle (as next in line) probably served as governor of Liddesdale during his minority. He may have held the patronage of Hawick Church, like previous Earls of Bothwell. In 1525/6 he appears to be superior (perhaps Baron) of the lands of Stouslie, Groundistone and Harden, when he granted the tenancy to George, Lord Home (this is confirmed in 1538, and in another document with date probably incorrectly transcribed as 1552). The transfer of 'Truslye' (probably Stouslie) and 'Groundeston' in Chamberlain Newton were confirmed passing from him to George, Lord Home in 1535 when previous charters relating to Home lands were revoked; and he was still superior of Stouslie, Groundistone and Harden when Alexander, 5th Lord Home inherited in 1551. In 1528/9 he gave a discharge for 'non-entries' of lands held by Walter Scott of Branxholme and several other Scotts. In 1529 he entered a bond to keep the peace in his Lordship of Liddesdale. But he was imprisoned for about 6 months in 1530 when there was no real improvement, following the execution of the Lairds of Henderland and Tushielaw. This encouraged him into a potentially treasonous correspondence with the English in 1531 and 1532; the Earl of Northumberland describes a secret meeting between them, and 3 of his attendants in 1531, in which he promised 1000 gentlemen and 6000 commoners to serve on the English side. This led to further imprisonment (all of this activity up to 1532, makes it seem unlikely he was really born in 1512). However, he must have been partially rehabilitated, since he was granted lands near Lilliesleaf in 1534. But had to resign his estates in 1538, seeking exile and only returning to Scotland following the King's death in 1542. In 1543 he signed the 'Secret Bond' with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English influence over the young Queen Mary. In 1544 he and Lord Home headed a force that made some attempt to defend Edinburgh against the English invaders under the Earl of Hertford. In about 1540 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme promised that if the King allowed him to return to Hermitage, then Scott would help him keep peace on the Border, 'to oist, birn, sla and distroy ilk XV dayis' until any of the King's enemies give sufficient pledges. Another scheme (in about 1547) to yield up Hermitage to the English and marry the Duchess of Suffolk in return, were foiled, causing him to seek exile again, where he remained until pardoned by Mary of Guise in 1554. He again acted as Lieutenant of the Scottish Marches. In 1556 he was involved in expeditions against the Armstrongs, accompanied by the Laird of Drumlanrig, but 'the banditti had the advantage in two encounters'. He married Agnes Sinclair and their children were: James, the 4th Earl; Jane, who married John Stewart, Lord Darnley, and twice later; and Margaret. Patrick of Fairnington (c.1517–c.45) son of Patrick of Hailes and Boltoun. He was Sheriff of Lothian. He probably held the lands of the Lordship of Winnington, since in 1610 they were inherited by his great-granddaughters Marion, Jean and Margaret Hamilton. He married Agnes, daughter of George Hoppringle of St. John's Chapel. Their only child was Marion, who married James Hamilton of Sprouston (who took the designation 'of St. John's Chapel'), whose sons included John Hamilton, father of Marion, Jean and Margaret. Robert (15th C.) recorded as 'Robert of Hepburn' in 1424 when he was part of a 'retour of inquest' held in Hawick to decide on the inheritance of part of the Barony of Hownam. Most of the other men were quite local. Sir Robert of Alderston (16th C.) recorded in 1587 as Lieutenant of his Majesty's Guard, stationed in the West Marches to keep order there.

They were attacked by a group of rebels, including Christie and Andrew of Langholm (probably Armstrongs). Probably the same man was implicated in forcibly taking away the daughter of a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1600. In 1608 he was charged with going into the 'West cuntrie' to apprehend the rebels Ninian and William Elliot, resulting in one of his men being shot. William (15th C.) member of the panel of 1456 which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of the charge of helping the English to burn lands around Jedburgh. His name is recorded as 'Wylyam of Hepburne'. He was also witness to a charter for Ker of Altonburn in 1443 (also spelled 'Hepburne', 'Heborne', etc., in earlier records).

Hepburne-Scott (hep-burn-sko') n. Andrew (1947–) only son of Henry, he became the 11th Lord Polwarth and Laird of Harden. In 1971 he married Anna, daughter of Maj. John Feville Henry Surtees. Their children are: William Henry, Master of Polwarth (b.1971); Robert Mungo (b.1974); Georgina May (b.1979); and Caroline Rose (b.1983). Elsa Margaret (d.1961) daughter of David Berry Hart, a prominent Edinburgh gynaecologist. She married Robert (1873–1950), brother of Lord Polworth. She was living at 9 West Stewart Place in 1939 and served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Francis (1806–84), youngest son of the 6th Lord Polwarth, and brother of the 7th Lord Polwarth, Henry Francis, who was Roxburghshire M.P. 1826–32. He was trained a barrister and was also a J.P. in Roxburghshire. When he visited Hawick in the lead up to the election of 1835 it is said that his group were surrounded by a mob, who jostled and spat on them, and they had to seek refuge in the Tower Hotel. He himself stood again in the 1837 county election, but lost to John Elliot of Minto, contesting the election results (unsuccessfully) partly because of the riots in Hawick. However, he was successfully elected 1841–47 in Roxburghshire and was M.P. for Berwickshire 1847–63. From the Scotts of Harden, he himself was usually referred to as 'of Mertoun House'. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1835 he married Julia Frances Laura, last surviving child of Rev. Charles Boulton and Laura, sister and heir of George, 4th Earl of Egremont. Their children were: Georgina Laura; and Frances Margaret Julia, who married Joseph William Baxendale. Henry Francis of Harden, 7th Lord Polwarth (1800–67) son of Hugh, the 6th Lord. He was listed as a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Harden. He was appointed Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1826. As well as Harden and other estates, he inherited Mabonlaw and Highchesters in 1843. He was Tory M.P. for Roxburghshire from 1826, being re-elected in 1831 by 57 votes to 14 against Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the last election under the pre-Reform system (with a vote at a meeting of the freeholders of the county). During that election about 1,000 Hawick men marched to Jedburgh to demonstrate. He was also selected to be one of Scotland's Representative Peers in Parliament 1843–67. In 1845 he was appointed Sheriff Principal of Selkirkshire and in 1861 he became Lieut.-Col. in the Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire Rifle Volunteer Corps. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and member of the Police and Prison Boards for Roxburghshire. He was also Lord-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and a Lord-in-waiting to the Queen. He was known as a great student of agricultural matters and a prize breeder of Leicester sheep. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He was an elder of the Church of Scotland and several times a member of the General Assembly. In 1835 he married Georgina, daughter of George Baillie of Jerviswood and Mellerstain, who was sister of the Earl of Haddington; she died in 1859. His children were: Walter Hugh Hepburne-Scott, who succeeded; Henry Robert, who married Ada Douglas-Home; Mary Lilies; Helen Georgina; Katherine; and Harriet Frances, who married Cmdr. Henry Baillie-Hamilton. He is also sometimes referred to with just the surname 'Scott', although his son was very definitely Hepburne-Scott; he can also be confused with his brother Francis, who was Roxburghshire M.P. 1841–47. Henry Alexander 10th Lord Polwarth and Baron of Harden (1916–2005), son of Walter Thomas, he was born in Edinburgh and brought up in Bridge of Allan and at Harden. He was Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire from 1962, Vice-Lord-Lieutenant of the Borders Region from 1975, and member of the Royal Company of Archers. Educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, he served in WWII as Captain of the Lothians and Borders Horse. He succeeded his grandfather in 1944, since his father had died 2 years earlier. He was selected as one of Scotland's 12 representative Peers in Parliament 1945–63. Qualified as a Chartered Accountant, he served as Governor of the Bank of Scotland, Chairman and President of the Scottish Council for Development and Industry, Minister of State for the Scottish Office (in Edward Heath's government), Chairman of the Scottish National Orchestra, Chancellor of Aberdeen University, and on the Board of Directors of many companies. As an accountant he worked for Chiene & Tait and he was a Director of Haliburton. He was an avid photographer in his spare time. He was a member of the Hawick Archæological Society from 1946. He married Caroline Margaret Hay of Marlefield and they had one son (Andrew, who succeeded) and secondly married Jean, daughter of Adm. Sir Angus Graham of Gartmore and Ardroch. He died at his home in Devon. Walter George 13th (or 15th) Laird of Harden and 9th Lord Polwarth (1864–1944), son of Walter Hugh. He was Deputy Lieutenant of the counties of Haddington, Berwick, Selkirk and Roxburgh. He also served as a Justice of the Peace. He was Lieutenant-Colonel in the Territorial force and Hon. Colonel in the 8th Battalion Royal Scots. He was selected to be one of Scotland's Representative Peers in Parliament 1929–44. In 1888 he married Edith Frances, eldest daughter of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton. Their children were: Walter Thomas (1890–1942); Alexander Noel (b.1892), killed in WWI; Patrick John (b.1899); Helen Victoria; Margaret Mary; Edith Christian; Grizel Frances Katherine. He was succeeded by his grandson Henry Alexander. Walter Hugh 12th (or 14th) Laird of Harden and 8th Lord Polwarth (1838–1920). He was son of Henry Francis Scott (M.P. for Roxburghshire) and Georgina Baillie. He adopted the extra surname 'Hepburne' after the estates of the Hepburnes of Humbie descended to him. He also assumed chieftanship of the Scotts (owing to the failure of the direct male line on the death of Francis 2nd Earl of Buccleuch). He inherited Bewlie Mains in 1860 and Mabonlaw and Highchesters in 1868. He also held estates in the parishes of Maxton, Merton, St. Boswells, Smailholm, Kirkhope and Selkirk. He was Lord-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire. He was Convenor of Roxburghshire County Council and served as a Justice of the Peace in the county. He was also selected as one of Scotland's Representative Peers in Parliament 1882–1900. He was Captain in the Roxburgh Rifle Volunteers from 1868. In 1873 he presided over a meeting to set up the Hawick Home Mission, and for many years invited the members to spend Common Riding Saturday at Mertoun House. In 1863 he married his cousin Lady Mary Gordon, daughter of George, 5th Earl of Aberdeen. In 1915 he secondly married Katherine Grizel Baillie (a cousin), daughter of the Canon of York. His children were: Walter George, who succeeded; Henry James (b.1866); George (b.1871); Robert (1873–1950); Charles Francis (b.1874); Georgina Mary; Lillas; Mary Harriet; Grisell Katherine; and Katherine Grace. Walter Thomas (1890–1942) Master of Polwarth, eldest son of Walter George, 9th Baron Polwarth and also Laird of Harden. He was a Captain in the Lothian and Border Horse Yeomanry, and also Commanding Officer of the local battalion of the Home Guard. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1914 he married Elspeth Glencairn Campbell, daughter of the Bishop of Glasgow. Their children included: Henry Alexander (b.1916), who succeeded his grandfather; and Francis Michael (b.1920).

Hepe see Heap

her (her, hur) pron. her – 'She wad speak the hint legs off a cuddy, her' [WL] (often added for emphasis after a phrase; note usual pronunciation with a long e vowel, and that sometimes the h is dropped).

Herbert see Herbert de Selkirk

Herbertson (her-burt-sin) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Eupham (b.1702), John (b.1704), Margaret (b.1707), Agnes (b.1708), Margaret (again, b.1711), George (b.1718) and Jean (b.1722). Andrew (18th C.) married Margaret Smith in Ashkirk in 1744. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hungryhill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 2 horses. Probably the same Andrew had children Christian (b.1794), Robert (b.1796) and William (b.1798), baptised in Lilliesleaf. William (19th C.) married Mary Stoddart in 1837, the marriage being recorded in both Castleton and Southdean Parishes (also written 'Herberson' and 'Herbertsone').

herbour (her-bur) n. a harbour – 'A herbour for auld muillins O' lang-forgotten pieces ...' [DH], v. to harbour – '...there was that mony beggars that the toon got a bad name for herborning thum a' ...' [BW1961].

Hercus (her-kis) n. James Logie (1846/7–1885) writer of the words of 'Hawick'. Born in Kirkwall (Hercus or 'Harcus' is a fairly common name there), he may have worked as a house painter with his father. He was listed in the Kirkwall censuses of 1851 and 1861. He was living in Stockbridge in 1868 when he married Joan Jamieson Laidlaw. Their children included

James Mack, John, Margaret Jamieson and William Laidlaw. In 1871 he was working as a clerk in Glasgow. There is no evidence he ever lived in Hawick, and no clue why he produced his poem of that name. Other poems he wrote with a local connection were 'Minto Craggs' and 'Dr. John Leyden'. His work was collected in 'Songs of the Borderland and other Verses' (1888). In 1898 Adam Grant (using the pseudonym 'M. Rosenberg') set 'Hawick' to music. He died at the age of 38 in Glasgow and was buried in Morebattle.

Herd (herd) n. nickname of John Scott in the early 18th century.

Herd (herd) n. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Hermitage in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Eilrig in 1710 when his son Walter was baptised. He is probably the Walter who married Bessie Grieve in Robertson in 1708. William (d.1679) from Ashkirk Parish. He is recorded as one of the men banished to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and dying at Moul Head of Deerness, in Orkney, when their ship wrecked and they were ordered shut up beneath the hatches. William (17th C.) resident in Dykecroft in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694.

herdit (her-dde, -di) pp. herded – 'The hills where he herdit are bonnie and green, The hirsle he tendit is white i' the glen' [JoHa] (also hirdit).

the Herd's Hoose (thu-herdz-hoos) n. popular name for a former shepherd's cottage located on Hawick Moor, probably near Pilmuir Rig. It may be the 'herd's house' recorded when payments were made for building it in the Town Treasurer's book of 1755, and which cost £4 12 0 when paid for in 1766. It was the location for the 'Curds and Cream' (meaning the Friday morning 'Hut') in the years 1872–76 (probably the same place as Hawickmoor).

hereaway (heer-a-wā) adv., arch. hereabouts, in this neighbourhood – 'I can tell you about the vera last fairy that ever was seen here-away' [LHTB], 'Thay're scheiran' aa roond heir-away,' reaping is going on all around in this direction' [JAHM].

herefore (heer-for) adv., arch. therefore, on this account, in payment of this – '...owr wil is heir-for, and we charg zou stratlie, and commandis that ze incontinent ...' [SB1500].

Heriot (her-ee-i) n. small town on the A7 and former station on the Waverley Line, about 30 miles north of Hawick.

Heriot (her-ee-i) n. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as Captain of Ancrum. He was surety at the Justice-aire for Robert Taylor, once in Longnewton, then in Sansystanes. He was fined later for failing to enter Robert Taylor. Archibald (16th C.) Rector of the Parish of Kirkton. He resigned the Rectory in 1550, when it was presented to William Cranston. Euphemia nee Lawrence (b.1820/1) from Midlothian, she was wife of John, landlord of the Black Bull at the Sandbed. In 1861 she was a widow described as 'Inn Keeper', living with her 2 children, mother Agnes Lawrence, brother Samuel Lawrence and another Agnes Lawrence, who was described as a servant. James (15th/16th C.) appointed Rector of Ashkirk in 1505. This was about the same time that Richard Bothwell became Prebendar, so presumably he was actually the minister. He probably only lasted a couple of years, since William Watson is described as the late Vicar in 1508. James (b.1825/6) from Legerwood in Berwickshire, he was a coachman, living at Howdenburn in 1851. By 1861 he had moved to Coldstream. His wife was Agnes and their children included Walter, John Stavert, William T. and Margaret. John (b.1820/1) from Greenlaw, he was innkeeper at the Black Bull on the Sandbed. He was there in 1851, and listed as vintner there in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Euphemia Lawrence, and their children included Euphemia and John. By 1861 his wife was a widow, listed as innkeeper of the Black Bull. William (b.1802/3) from England, he was a framesmith in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 3 Tannage Close, with his wife Catherine and their nephew Robert Scott (also written 'Herriot').

Heriot Hoose (he-ree-i'-hoos) n. Heriot House, former toll-house on the road to Edinburgh, located shortly after the road crossed the Heriot Water, later a post office. John Govenlock was innkeeper there, probably in the late 18th century (also spelled 'Herriot').

heritage (her-i'-eej) n., arch. property ‘...for our hole house of Readhewghe, men and servants dwelling on our heritage and steading within Liddesdale and Tevidale ...’ [CBP1584].

the Heritage Hub (thu-her-i'-eej-hub) n. home of the Scottish Borders Archive (covering Berwickshire, Peeblesshire, Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire) and Local History Centre, based in the renovated Exchange Buildings from 2007.

heritor (her-i'-ur, her-i-tor) n., arch. a landowner in a parish, responsible for the financial burdens of the parish, as well as having some collective responsibilities for appointments, but without the power of the local feudal baron. Heritors were jointly liable (in proportion to the value of their land) for paying the schoolmaster and similar public burdens. In some documents heritors would be distinguished from tenants by being referred to ‘of’ their residence, rather than ‘in’. It was the practice at least until the mid-18th century for the minister to pay respects to each heritor in order of precedence, each man rising to bow. The heritors were allocated particular seats in the Kirk, as recorded for example on a register of 1683, with the seating being ‘in the body of the church below the lofts’. Hawick Parish Heritors records exist for the period 1710–1934.

herken (her-kin) v. to harken – ‘Herken untill the voyce o’ my crye ...’ [HSR], ‘Herken, O douchter, an’ considdir, an inclæine thine eer ...’ [HSR], ‘Expected mei tae herken tae tidin’s hei hed brung ...’ [MB].

Herkes (hur-kes) n. Rev. Moira first local female minister. She was minister at Denholm and Bedrule, linked with Minto, 1985–88. She then went to Prestongrange Church, in 1998 went to St. Andrew’s-Erskine Parish Church, Dunfermline, and later moved to Gardner Memorial Church, Brechin. She was also assistant at Dunblane Cathedral in 1996 at the time of the school shootings.

Herkness (herk-nis) n. (Harkness) Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Rutherford and their children included: Isobel (b.1731); and Mary (b.1732). The witnesses in 1732 were Robert Scott and John Dryden. He could be the son of John baptised in 1707. Adam (18th C.) married Isobel Porteous in Hobkirk in 1761. Their children, baptised in the Associate Congregation in Jedburgh, included: Andrew (b.1762); Helen (b.1764); Walter (b.1767); and William (b.1772). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Denholm. His children, baptised in Cavers, included: John (b.1703); and Esther (b.1704). Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Helen Hobkirk in Bedrule Parish in 1717. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Clarilaw in 1727 and 1729. He married Helen Hunlty in Cavers Parish in 1715. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: Helen (b.1727); and Helen (again, b.1729). The witnesses in 1727 were John and Francis Scott and in 1729 were William Douglas and Robert Liddell. Andrew (b.1829/30) labourer of 9 Loan who was charged with the culpable homicide of Elizabeth Young (of the same address) in 1888. George (17th C.) resident of Acreknowe on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Gideon (19th C.) married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1842. Hannah ‘Nellie’ (d.1849) daughter of Nellie Paterson, who was a sister of Robert. She was thus the niece of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson, as immortalised in the verse of the song; however, there is some confusion over whether ‘Nellie’ was ‘Pawky’s’ sister or niece, since Robert’s father Archibald was also ‘Pawkie’, and additionally she had a sister, who was also Helen (and hence ‘Nellie’). She married Charles Gray Laidlaw and lived up the Loan. She was also mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’ – ‘Peggy Duncan and Jenny Din, Nellie Herkness and Mensie Mein; The Wilton Priest wi’ his coat o’ skin, Staney Stewart and Candy Jean’ [HI]. Helen (b.c.1795) tollkeeper at the North Toll Bar in 1841. It is possible that she was the Helen, daughter of Robert, born in Hawick about 1803/4. James (17th C.) tenant on the Cavers estate. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants who complained at having to pay a year’s rent as part of the authorities attempts to extract the fines imposed on ‘the Guid Leddy Cavers’ for being a Covenanter supporter. He could be the James listed at Kirkton on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. James (17th C.) recorded ‘in Worchit’ when his will was listed in 1686. If this is ‘Orchard’, then he could be the same as the tenant from Cavers recorded in 1684. James (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1731. Perhaps the same James had a daughter Marion baptised in Bedrule Parish in 1735. James (18th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Joseph Lothian. He married Betty Dickson in 1730 and their children included: Helen (b.1737); James (b.1740); Betty (b.1742); and William (b.1746). The witnesses in 1742 were mason David Laing and wright Thomas Winthrope. James (1740–1823) mason at the West Port, son of mason James and Betty Dickson. His son was Thomas, mason in Hawick. He may be the James who (along with Robert) in 1771 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Scott and Helen (perhaps his sister or other close relative). James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His son James was baptised in 1771. James (18th/19th C.) married Isabella Smith in Hobkirk in 1810. James (1816–1903) son of Thomas and Helen Scott, he was born in Hawick and became a well-known local builder. He lived later at 13 Allars Crescent. He is listed as a builder on Allars Crescent in Slaters' 1852 directory, being recorded in 1861 as employer of 30 men and 6 boys. Some of his best work can be seen at the banks his firm built at 4 Tower Knowe and 12 High Street. In 1847 he married Jane, daughter of Walter John Grieve, tenant in Southfield, and she died in 1881. Their children included: Christian (Kitty) Agnes (b.c.1851), who married Glasgow traveller John Anderson; and James (b.1855). James (b.c.1818) son of Thomas and Helen Paterson. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He was living with his mother Helen at the West Port in 1841. He appears to have been in Jedburgh Jail in 1843, 1849 and 1859. In 1851 he was a boarder with George and Agnes (related to him through marriage) Robson on the Kirkwynd, where his is described as a widower. He probably had children Helen (b.c.1846) and Thomas (b.c.1848). In 1861 he was a boarder with Jean McDonald at 5 Mid Raw. He married Martha Gadd in 1851 and she died in 1902. Their children included: Job (b.c.1852), who was Sheriff Officer; Edward (b.c.1853); Catherine (b.1855); Hannah (b.1856), who probably died in infancy; James (b.1857); Elizabeth (b.1860); John (b.1862); Archibald (b.1865); and Mary (b.1868). Job (b.c.1852) Sheriff Officer who lived at Wilton Dean. His paternal grandmother was the sister of 'Pawkie' Paterson. In 1881 he was listed as a Prison Keeper. In 1872 he married Agnes Jardine in Wilton Parish. Their daughter Elizabeth was born in 1873. John (17th C.) married Margaret Aitchison in Bedrule in 1693. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed there. He may be the John whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1693. He may also be the John who was living at Borthwickhaugh in 1707 when his son Adam was baptised in Wilton; he was surely related to William who was tenant in Borthwickhaugh. John (17th/18th C.) recorded at Winningtonrig in the early 1700s. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Lancelot (b.1708) and Janet (b.1710). Perhaps the same John also had children baptised in Cavers: Jean (b.1694); Helen (b.1697); Margaret (b.1700); and an unnamed child (b.1703). John (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His son John was baptised in 1771. Robert (d.bef. 1813) resident of Hawick. In 1811 his heirs are recorded as owners of 'Part of Particot Lands of Hawick'. These lands were later owned by William Munro. He could be the Robert who married Agnes Small in Hawick in 1771. He could also be the mason whose child died in 1790. Thomas 'Tam' (1787–1855) born in Middlebie, Annan, son of Thomas and Hannah Murray. He was a spinner in Hawick. In 1841 his wife Helen and son James were at West Port (while he must have been absent). He was living at 7 Loan (probably the same place) in 1851 and described as 'Pauper (road labourer)'. He married Helen, daughter of Archibald Paterson and sister of Robert 'Pawkie'; either she or her daughter was the 'Nelly Herkness' of the song. Their children were: Helen (b.1803/4); Archibald (b.1806/7); Hannah (1807/8–55); James (b.1820/1), who married Martha Gadd; Betsy, who died aged 6; and Edward, who died aged 12. He died just a month after his wife. Thomas (b.c.1787) mason recorded at 'New Glebe' in 1841. This was likely at Rockvale on Liddesdale Road. In 1851 he was at 'Rockville' (i.e. Rockvale) and listed as a farmer of 16 acres. He was probably the mason who was recorded on the short-list for Cornet in 1817. He married Helen Scott. Their children included: James (b.1816), also a builder; Gideon (b.1820); John (b.1825); Elizabeth (b.1827); Agnes (b.1830); and Helen (b.1832). He may be the Thomas who was buried at St. Mary's in 1858. Walter (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to John. William (17th C.) tenant in Borthaugh in Wilton Parish. In 1716 his daughter Janet married George, youngest son of shoemaker Andrew Porteous. He may be the William who in 1726 witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Commonsideside. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Borthwickhaugh. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Isabel (b.1704); Helen (b.1709); and Mary (b.1712). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He was living at Stouslie in 1730. In 1728 he married Isobel 'Blake' (or Black) in Cavers Parish. Their daughter Jean was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1730 (with his surname transcribed as ‘Herness’), with witnesses Robert Scott and George Stavert. He was probably related to Adam Harkness, who was at Stouslie at the same time. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Tandlaw in 1730.

William (18th C.) tenant of Birkhill farm, just south of Billerwell. He had a daughter called Marion, who visited Prince Charlie’s camp when the army spent the night nearby, and apparently made a fool of herself trying to follow them as far as Wauchope Rigg, until brought back by her friends William (19th/20th C.) assistant Burgh Officer from 1893. (also written ‘Harknesse’, ‘Harkness’, ‘Herkenesse’ and ‘Herkness’).

herlin (her-lin) n., arch. an immature sea-trout – ‘Whiles hei saw a herlin soom, And whiles killt a troot – Niver o’ his awnership Had hei a meenit’s doot’ [DH].

herm (herm) n., v. harm – ‘it wunni dae ee muckle herm’, ‘He kept the kirk an’ a’ around, He said it was his ‘ferm’, An’ a’ within the kirk yaird dyke He vowed to keep frae herm’ [AO], ‘... gie um a gude Hawick gill; it’ll dae um nae herm’ [JEDM] (cf. the less common hairm).

Herman Law (her-min-law) n. hill south of St. Mary’s Loch, reaching 614 m. The Town possesses a Tom Scott painting of the area.

Hermiston (her-mee-stin) n. farm just south of Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is probably where ‘Alex’ de Hirmannist’ was from, witness of a document for lands in Lilliesleaf in the early 13th century. Probably from the same family was ‘Alisaundre de Hirdemaneston’, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. The Stewarts of Hermiston have a burial aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard. It should not be confused with (although the name has the same origin as) ‘Herdmanstoun’, near the site of Herriot-Watt University in Edinburgh; that was the location for R.L. Stevenson’s unfinished novel ‘The Weir of Hermiston’, and home of the Sinclairs, who nevertheless have some location connections. The one in Lilliesleaf Parish may be the place where Quentin Crozier was recorded in 1494/5. It was farmed by Adam Rutherford and was raided and burned about 1502 by David Scott, called ‘Lady, in Stirkschawis’, along with several Englishmen. Adam Scott of Hermiston was on inquest panels in 1494 and 1509 and also a witness to a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. John Scott was also recorded there in 1502, as well as John Glendinning and William Waugh. Patrick Johnstone inherited half the lands from his father Quentin in 1510. Walter Scott of Robertson sold ‘all the stane houss callit the peill and cloiss with the [toure?] and the pertinenchis of the samyn’ to Michael Scott of Aikwood in 1536. In 1538 Thomas Scott in Todrig received half of the lands (except the tower and 2 acres) from Michael Scott of Aikwood to fulfil a debt of service. In 1563 the lands were leased by John, son of George Ker of Faldonside, to John Johnstone, David Tudhope, John Fletcher and John Murray. In 1580 John Johnstone of Hermiston gave sasine of 3 husbandlands there, with houses, etc., to Patrick Johnstone. Andrew Scott was portioner there in 1638. In 1643 Robert Scott of Whitslade held lands there valued at £156 (Wester Hermiston), while Andrew Scott and William Johnstone held lands valued at £130 (Easter Hermiston). In 1663 the lands were owned by Andrew Scott and William Johnstone. In 1678 Thomas Scott of Whitslade, John Scott of Synton and John Johnstone were the owners. James and George Davidson and Robert Cairns were there in 1694. The Western and Eastern parts were combined by 1743. George Johnstone sold his part of Hermiston to James Shortreed in 1758, these lands being valued at £260. Robert Moffat and Francis Blaikie were (at least formally) part owners in 1761. George Brydon was tenant in 1762. Capt. (later Adm.) John Elliot owned 3 husband-lands there, purchased from James Shortreed in 1778. James Trotter was farmer there 1787–88. William Govan was owner in 1788, having purchased both the Easter (formerly belonging half each to ‘Sinton’ and ‘Johnson’) and Wester parts. John Chisholme was there in 1789. In 1799 William Amos was tenant, David Wilson was ‘Hynd’ and James Thomson was servant. Residents in 1801 included ploughman James Thomson and tailor Thomas Gray. John Stewart was owner in the mid-19th century and Andrew Stewart later (the origin is probably Old English ‘hierde mann tun’, meaning ‘the herdsman’s farm’; it first appears as ‘Hirdmannestoun’ from about 1165, is ‘Hirdemaneston’ in 1296, ‘Hirdmanstoun’ in 1494, ‘hirdmanstoun’ in 1494/5, ‘Hirdmanstoune’ and ‘hirdmanstoun’ in 1502, ‘Hyrdmanstoun’ in 1510, ‘Hirdmenstoun’ in 1536, ‘Hirdmanstoun’ in 1563, ‘Hyrdmestoun’ in 1580 and 1581 and ‘Hermieston’ in 1797; it is still ‘Herdmistoun’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Herdmistoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but ‘Easter Hermiston’ and ‘Wester Hermiston’ are on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Hermiston

Hermiston (her-mee-stin) n. Alexander (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Alex’ de hirdmaneston’ when he was witness to a grant by Hugh de Normanville to Melrose Abbey in the period 1200–02. He is also listed as ‘Alex’ de Hirmanist’ in the period 1214–49, when he witnessed the sale of lands in West Lillieasleaf to Melrose Abbey. Alexander (13th C.) recorded as ‘Alisaundre de Hirdmaneston’ in Roxburghshire in 1296 when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. He was ‘Alexander of Hirdmanstone’ when he was on a jury in 1305. His lands were probably Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, and it seems likely he was a descendant of the earlier Alexander.

Hermiston Burn (her-mee-stin-burn) n. stream that flows to the east of Satchells and the west of Hermiston farm, running northward to join the Ale Water.

Hermitage (her-mi’-eej, her-mi-tāj, ern-tij) n. popular name for Hermitage Castle and also the name of the nearby hamlet at the confluence of the Whitrope Burn with the Hermitage Water. The local pronunciation was formerly ‘Erntage’. There was once a schoolhouse here, now a craft shop. The farm around the Castle was owned by William Elliot in 1632. Walter Herd was tenant in 1694, with William Armstrong also recorded there. To the east of the Castle there are the ruins of a farmstead, which is depicted on a 1718 estate plan, as well as several turf-walled stock enclosures. In the 1718 survey the farm covered 548 acres, bounded by Millburnholm, Toftholm, Greystonehaugh, Dinlees and Rispylaw, with a part on the south side of the Hermitage Water. Walter Elliot is recorded as farmer there in 1794–97 and John Park was a servant in at least 1799–1801. Robert Elliot was farmer in 1841 and 1851, and Walter Elliot in 1861. Also in the area around Green Sike there are remains of boundary dykes, rig lines and a mill-lade running to the north of the farm buildings. A charter of 1508 refers to the castle, fortalice and manor of Hermitage – ‘... Rush from brown ruins, scarr’d with age, That frown o’er haunted Hermitage; Where, long by spells mysterious bound, They pace their round, with lifeless smile, And shake, with restless foot, the guilty pile, Till sink the mouldering towers beneath the burden’d ground’ [JL], ‘From the old, rude walls of Hermitage I’ll look back to the days of old; And steal a glance at the thrilling page, Where the wondrous deeds are told’ [JBB], ‘Hermitage wistfully lifts her head, Where the mists on the lone moors fall: Ferniehurst, lulled by the crooning of Jed, Lies wrapped in her sylvan shawl’ [WL] (the origin of the name is probably via the Old French ‘ermitage’, there being a local tradition that a hermit’s cell existed here before the castle was built; the name dates back to at least the mid-14th century, with the castle first referred to in 1244; it is ‘Terram vocatum l’Ermytage’ in 1352, ‘Hermitaig’ and ‘Hermitagis’ in 1508, ‘Armytage’ in about 1540, ‘Armytage’ in 1583, ‘Armetage’ in 1594 and 1632 and ‘Armitage’ in 1653).

Hermitage Castle

Hermitage Brig (her-mi’-eej-brig) n. two-arched road bridge over the Hermitage Water, built by Smith of Darnick for the Duke of Buccleuch in 1832.

Hermitage Brigend (her-mi’-eej-brig-end) n. Hermitage Bridgend, cottages near Hermitage Bridge. In 1861 the families of blacksmith Walter Beattie and shepherd Peter Robson were there.

Hermitage Castle (her-mi’-eej-kaw-sul) n. one of the best preserved strongholds in the Borders, located on the Hermitage Water north of Newcastleton. Replacing an earlier castle at Castleton, it was probably originally built by Sir Nicholas de Soulis around 1240 (the first record of it is 1244), and was held by that family until about 1320. However, during the invasion of Scotland by Edward I the castle was held by Sir Simon Lindsay, who was directed to repair ‘the walls, houses, and others in said castle’. It has also been suggested that it was first built by the Comyns, or even by the earlier Bolbeck family, but this is less clear. The oldest surviving parts date from the early-to-mid 14th century. There were 4 main building periods, the current shape taking form in the 3rd period, around 1400, with the final major phase being the oblong wing on the south-west corner, and a continuous wooden hoarding below the battlements. The blocking up of all but the southern entrance happened later. It was retaken from the English by Sir William Douglas (the Knight of Liddesdale) in 1338, and probably had the corner towers built soon after. Douglas had Ramsay starved to death there in 1342 after capturing him in Hawick. The Castle was taken by the English after the Battle of Durham in 1346, but was recovered in the late 1350s. It was further extended by the Douglases in the 14th and 15th centuries. The large 13 × 22 m keep has been in existence since about 1388. Small square towers may have been added about 1400 and the extra wing and wooden superstructure about a century later. The Castle also has extensive fortified earthworks, including a large enclosure to the west and north, which may be the remains of a settlement. To the west the defences are bounded by Lady's Sike and to the east by Castle Sike (streams that have been partly diverted). An old wall further out called the White Dyke was probably the boundary of the deer park. The castle passed from the Black Douglasses to the Red Douglasses, although with complications because the Lord of Liddesdale sometimes appointed a separate Keeper of Hermitage. It was later given to the Hepburns of Bothwell (exchanged by Patrick Hepburn in 1492 for Bothwell Castle on the Clyde). The castle appears to have played little role during the troubling times of the early 16th century, but Boswell continued to govern it. Hence Mary Queen of Scots famous ride there to visit the wounded Earl of Bothwell in 1566. Bothwell's estates were forfeited to the Crown in 1567, although granted to his nephew Francis Stewart in 1587, from whom they passed to his stepson, Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and remained with the Scotts of Buccleuch for more than 3 centuries. It is last referred to as an active castle in 1612, when 'Roger Scott, capitaine of the Airmitage' is recorded in A Hawick court case. 'The castell, toure, and fortalice of Hermitage with frie forest and regalitie thair of' are listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. Abandoned in the middle of the 17th century, it is shown in an 1802 sketch by Williams, another by H. Weber and a third by William Scott from Newcastleton. In order to preserve the stonework, it was much restored around 1820 by the Duke of Buccleuch, although it is uncertain how much this changed the castle's appearance. It was taken over by Historic Scotland in 1930. Several artefacts have been found here, including a silver ring with a Douglas heart, which was worn by Sir Walter Scott. There is a tradition of a gold ring being unearthed by a mole, suggested to be the lost signet ring of Mary, Queen of Scots; another story says the gold ring bore the words 'In Broderlie Amite'. There have been a few Common Riding Ride-outs to here, probably being the longest ride. Some of the old iron work is in the Museum (e.g. a door handle, donated in 1900, a door key and an old mini-cannon). As well as the adjacent chapel, there are many surrounding earthworks and the defensive ditches of the Castle, suggestive of field systems and enclosures. Since its ruin the castle has been a place of mystery and dark legend. It was said by locals to have sunk into the ground due to the weight of the guilt of the blood spilled there, with 30 feet being toppled,

Hermitage Green

30 feet sinking down, and 30 feet left standing. Stories of the deeds of Soulis and other former residents also abound – 'As we gaze on its massive walls and tread its courts, what a host of apparitions leave their enchanted stations in the cells of memory, and pass in motley array before the mental vision!' [JAHM], 'The Castle of Hermitage, mould'ring and grey, Where Soulis and Douglas held merciless sway' [DA], 'I'll keek throwe the mist to an age O' glamourie roun' Hermitage' [WL] (it is 'Armetage', 'Armitage', 'Ermitage', 'Ermtag', 'Ermtage', 'Ermytage', etc. in the 14th to 16th centuries, e.g. 'Castell of the Ermitage' in 1469/70, 'caustro de Hermitaigh' in 1508, 'castrum de Armtage' in 1541, 'Harmytag Castle' in 1584 and 'castro de Armitage' in 1634).

Hermitage Chaipel (her-mi'-eej-chā-pul) n. remains of a probably early 13th century chapel and graveyard about 400 m to the west of Hermitage Castle. It was dedicated to St. Mary and connected with Kelso Abbey. It is referred to in the Kelso Chartulary as the 'hermitage called Mercheleye' on the 'Merchingburn', and was established by the Bolbeck family (of Northumbria) for 2 monks, Roger and William, and to be staffed by exactly 2 monks thereafter. In 1222 the monks asked to be placed under the direct protection of the Pope. It was later endowed with 26 acres by Eustace de Baliol. It measures about 5.5 m by 14 m, with walls almost 1 m thick. Some of the stonework appears to be 14th century, but after that the chapel does not appear to have been rebuilt or much altered, but was simply allowed to fall into decay once it was disused. However, this 'hermitage' gave its name to the river and also the castle. It was excavated in 1900 under the direction of J.P. Alison and more thoroughly in 1926 by H.M. Office of Works. A low mound outside is traditionally said to be the burial place of 'Cout o Kielder'. The Chapel and burial ground must have been used by the lords of the Castle. There are more modern graves there from local families in the 18th and 19th centuries, particularly the Elliots of Hermitage. It is said that the old font was still in existence until the end of the 18th century, but then disappeared. Some pieces of carved stonework are in the Hawick Museum, including a small head – 'And next they pass'd the chapel there; The holy ground was by, Where many a stone is sculptured fair, To mark where warriors lie' [JL].

Hermitage Green (her-mi'-eej-green) n. former name for an area near Hermitage Castle. In 1578 the appointment of a new Keeper of Liddesdale was to be made ‘at the Armytage Green’.

Hermitage Hill

Hermitage Hill (her-mi’-eej-hil) n. hill to the north of the Hermitage, reaching a height of 405 m (1321 ft).

Hermitage Park (her-mi’-eej-pawrk) n. former lands listed on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale as ‘Park de Ermetag’. It was valued at 7 merks 6 shillings and 8 pence. It may have been associated with the deer park at Hermitage Castle.

Hermitage Schuil (her-mi’-eej-skil) n. former school in Hermitage village. It is the same school referred to as Millburn in 1841. It was opened in 1809 and had about 40 pupils in the 1830s. James Elliot was master there in 1837, James Scott in the 1850s and 60s, and William Forbes around 1900. Agnes Grieve was running a grocer’s shop in the schoolhouse in 1861. The building is now a private house and craft shop. The Borders Archive has registers for 1873–1952 and log books for 1937–52.

Hermitage Viaduct (her-mi’-eej-vI-a-dukt) n. former railway viaduct across the Hermitage Water, just before it joins the Liddel Water. It has been demolished.

Hermitage Witter (her-mi’-eej-wi’-ur) n. minor river that passes near Hermitage Castle to join the Liddel Water. ‘Cout o Kielder’ is supposed to have been drowned in a pool of the river near the Castle around 1290. It may originally have been called the ‘Merchingburn’ with its name changed to that of the Castle in the mid-13th century (it appears to be incorrectly labelled ‘Riddall flu.’, presumably in confusion with the ‘Liddel’, on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

herns (hernz) n., pl., arch. brains – ‘...E’en sail amang the sleepless sterns, Aye, steal their rays, to grace yer herns Wi’ heavenly light’ [JoHa], ‘Wui breezes threh the Border hills ti blow away the ooder an the speeder-wobs threh a body’s herns’ [ECS], ‘... an rowl owre an owre amang ma herns are fit ti gar aa the trauchles an the fashes gang’ [ECS].

hernseugh see heronsheuw

Heron (he-rin) n. Sir George of Chipchase (d.1575) son of Sir John. He was Keeper of Tynedale and Redesdale. In 1542 he led a group of Tynedale and Redesdale men in an attack on the Teviot, where they burned Abbotrule and Harwood, taking 3 prisoners, 140 head of cattle, 240 sheep and 30 horses. In the same year, he and 3 of his brothers led a raid into Teviotdale, burning Dolphinston and taking cattle and 11 prisoners. He was accused of March treason in 1543 (perhaps to do with ransoming prisoners). He and Sir John Forster (the English Warden of the Middle March) supported the Regent Moray on attacks on Liddesdale in 1569. He was probably the ‘Sir John Hinrome of Shipyde house’ who is named in the manuscript version of the ballad ‘The Raid of the Reidswire’. He was killed in the fray in July 1575. Robert Fraser of Overton was accused by John Edmonson of that ilk of stealing 3 horses belonging to him; but in 1575 a number of local men gave evidence that Fraser was not guilty. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Honeytown and other farms in Cavers Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 6 horses at that time and his surname is recorded as ‘Heron’. John of Ford (d.1498) son of Sir Roger. He was English Warden of the Middle and East Marches in 1494 when he served as a Commissioner for an indenture at Coldstream. He died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Sir William. Sir John of Chipchase (d.1562) son of John, he was Keeper of Tynedale and Redesdale. In 1541 he led a group of Tynedale men on a retaliatory raid into Liddesdale, burning Thorlieshope, as well as 13 other houses. He wrote that he was concerned about starting a deadly feud if reprisals were taken in Liddesdale and that he feared betrayal by the Tynedale and Redesdale men. He led other raids into Scotland in 1542, but was taken prisoner by a servant of the Laird of Edmonson and held near Edinburgh. He and his son George were accused of ‘March treason’ (i.e. collaborating with the Scots) in 1543, but were not convicted. He married Jane daughter of Sir Nicholas Ridley. He was succeeded by his son Sir George. Another son, Roger, was taken prisoner by the Elliots and Croziers of Liddesdale in 1556. Robert (18th C.) married Christian Stevenson in Hobkirk in 1775.

Heronhaa

Heronhaa (her-in-haw) n. Heronhall, a cottage near Southfield that was the birthplace of Sir Andrew Smith. It was located about 100m to the east of the road south through Hawick’s Common, after the turn-off for Southfield and just before the Troutlawford. Although nothing can now be seen of the building, it was excavated by the Archæological Society in 1968 and a commemorative cairn built by the roadside (on the opposite side) to mark it. In 1856 it was recorded that about 50 years earlier a large cairn was removed from here, requiring 600 cart-loads of stones, and in which a 'cist-vaen' with bones of a 'primeval giant' and a piece of flint were found; it is unclear if this is the same as the cairn removed from the Auld Caa Knowe at about the same time.

Heron Hill (her-in-hil) n. hilly area south of Weensland, where the right of way from Orchard Road to Ormiston Parkhead passes. It has been suggested that herons may have been bred here for use as prey in falconry. It reaches a height of 239 m (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Heronhill Crescent (her-in-hil-kre-sin) n. loop on the grounds of the old Heronhill estate, built in 1948. Some of the early concrete Cruden-type buildings were rebuilt in 1983.

Heronhill Hoose (her-in-hil-hoos) n. house and estate off Weensland Road, built in 1864/5 for George Wilson, first provost of Hawick, and prominent mill owner. The Italianate design was by Glasgow-based architect John T. Rothead. The land had previously been part of the farm of Orchard. James Wilson was recorded there in 1868 and the land was valued at £57 in about 1874. The house was later the town residence of Robert Noble of Borthwickbrae. During and after WWII it was used as a private girls school, called St. Helens. It also saw use by knitwear companies Ann Howard, Lyle & Scott and John Spencer, after modern extensions on the ground floor. Along with the surrounding estate, it was purchased by the Council for development after the War. Most of the land was cleared and bungalows built there. The house itself was in poor condition for some time and the upper floor was destroyed in a fire. The rest of the building survived for many years, but was demolished in 2005. Now only the Gate Lodge on Weensland Road survives.

Heronhill Lodge (her-in-hil-luj) n. gatehouse for the former villa at Heronhill. It is situated at 152 Weensland Road. It was built in 1865 to designs by Jont Thomas Rothead, at the same time as the main house, with an extension in the mid-20th century. It is a single-storey, octagonal plan lodge house, built in an Italianate style, with prominent ornamental stacks. It is a grade C listed building.

Heronhill Pond (her-in-hil-pōnd) n. name of the pond on the hill behind Heronhill House, reputedly so-called because of the herons that used to nest there. This was formerly a wetland, which was dammed to create a pond for the villa built there.

Heronhill Schuil (her-in-hil-skil) n. private school based at Heronhill House in the mid-to-late 20th century. It was moved from St. Helen's, Bridge of Allan.

Heronhill Terrace (her-in-hil-te-ris) n. housing built in 1866, previously called part of Weensland Road, renamed in 1875 after Heronhill House. The area was demolished and grassed over in 1966.

Heron-Maxwell (he-rin-maks-wul, -wel) n. Edward of Teviotbank (1821–90) youngest child of Sir John Heron-Maxwell of Springkell in Dumfriesshire. He spent time in Ceylon. In 1847 he married Elizabeth Ellen, only daughter of Col. William Henry Stopford-Blair of Penninghame, Wigtownshire. He may have adopted the surname 'Heron-Maxwell-Blair' when he succeeded to the lands of his father-in-law. He purchased Teviot Bank in 1860, and thereafter lived in Roxburghshire. He was recorded there in a directory of 1868. He was one of the original members of the Border Mounted Rifles and was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He was also a Deputy-Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire. He is recorded joining an otter hunt on the Teviot near Denholm, led by Dr. Grant of Hawick in about 1865. He is listed as owner of the lands of Knowe in Minto Parish in about 1874. His children included: John Shaw; Capt. William Henry Stopford; Elizabeth Ellen; Mira; and Louisa Susan Marlborough. John Shaw of Teviot Bank (1850–99) eldest son of Edward. He served with the 14th Hussars and retired in 1880. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1889. He was succeeded by his brother William H.S.

Heron-Maxwell-Blair see Heron-Maxwell
heronshew (he-rin-, hern-shoo, -shewch) n., arch. a heron – 'The hernseugh fisht the swawin' pule In blew days and grey, And niver cam' a thing ava To gliff the lad away' [DH] (there are spelling variants cf. huirn).

Heron Wud (he-rin-wud) n. wood in the Rule valley, just south of the location of Wells house. There is an earthwork about 360 ft south of the house, in the north-west part of the wood, with a stream running through it. There are at least 3 banks associated with the structure, but its full size is hard to tell because of cultivation.

the Hero o Quebec (thu-hee-rō-ō-kwe-bek)

the Hero's Grave (thu-hee-rōz-grāv) n. former name for the Caa Knowe, also called 'the Giant's Grave'. A cairn long stood there, being removed about 1809 or 1811. A crude stone coffin was said to have been unearthed, about 6 to 8 feet from the surface. As described in the New Statistical Account in 1839 this enclosed 'a human skull, with several bones of more than ordinary size'. Hence it was perhaps the burial mound of some ancient chieftain, and selected as the site of the calling of the Burgess Roll for this reason. On the other hand, it may have been simply one example of a Bronze Age burial cist and associated mound, which happened to be near the southern extremity of the Common. A bronze spearhead found near here was once in the Museum, but may have been lost. '26 artefacts of flint and other forms of chalcedony possibly found near the Giant's Grave on Southfield farm' were also once catalogued in the Museum's collection (see also the Auld Caa Knowe).

herp (herp) v. to harp, play the harp, dwell on – 'stop herpin on aboot eet, an A might gie yin', 'But if ever a body keeps herpin' on The way that folk takes him in ...' [FL], n., arch. a harp – 'Prayse the Lord wi' herp; sing untill him wi' the psaltrie, an ane instrument o' ten strings' [HSR], 'Sing untill the Lord wi' the herp; wi' the herp an' the voyce o' ane psalm' [HSR] (cf. the less common hairp).

Herr Cut (her-ku) n. epithet for a German barber in Hawick in the 1960s and 70s.

the Herriers (thu-her-ee-urs) n. popular name for the Teviotdale Herriers running club.

Herries (he-reez) n. Agnes see Agnes Maxwell. Andrew (d.1513) son of Herbert, he was 2nd Lord of Terregles. In 1499/1500 he had a charter for the family estate, which included the lands of Feu-Rule. In 1510 he had another charter for the Barony of Terregles, including 'terras de Fewroull, cum tenentibus', infesting William as his heir. He married Beatrice Herries (but this was annulled), then Janet, daughter of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, and lastly Nichole Home. He was killed at Flodden and succeeded by his son William. Herbert (d.c.1505) son of David and Margaret Crichton, he was 1st Lord of Terregles. He probably held Feu-Rule, along with other territories. His sons Andrew, Mugo and John were all killed at Flodden. Nigel (c.1195–c.1240) son of William, he held the post of Ranger of Ettrick Forest, which included the lands of Rankilburn. His name was usually written 'Heriz'. He was succeeded by his son Henry. William (d.1543) 3rd Lord of Terregles, son of Andrew. Among the titles he held was the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1509 he granted the lands of Rulewood to John Gourlay. He gave a charter of Harwood and Hawthornside to Hector Lorraine in 1531, witnessed by Robert and John, who must have been relatives. He married Catherine Kennedy and was succeeded by their only surviving child Agnes (who married Sir John Maxwell). Thereafter the Barony of Feu-Rule was held by Maxwells (see also Maxwell).

Herring (he-rin) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) recorded as 'Adam Hereng' when he witnessed a charter of Coldingham Priory in the reign of William I. In about 1193 he witnessed a gift of land in Mow to Kelso Abbey. He was probably father of Petronella, and may have had a connection with the Borthwick area; she is referred to as daughter of 'Adam Harang of Meinichoch', which is probably Minto. This same family became Barons of Glascuine and owned lands around Dunkeld and Blairgowrie. Petronella (13th C.) daughter of 'Adam Harang of Meinichoch', which is probably Minto. In the reign of Alexander II she granted 'to God, St. Mary, St. Benedict and the port of Melrose, for the sustenance of poor pilgrims arriving there ... that toft in the town of Borthwick next the house of Hugh Selechirch, and those 2½ acres of land and meadow in the territory of Borthwick, which, in her widowhood, she had given to Robert Poydras for his homage and service, remitting the annual rent Robert had been in the habit of paying, to wit – a pair of white gloves.' Whether she held these lands through her dead husband or from her own family is unclear, and nothing else is known about her. The date is also unknown, but probably in the period 1230–60. It seems likely that this is the Borthwick near Hawick rather than the one in Mid-Lothian.

Herriot see Heriot

Herrodd (he-rid) n. William (b.1807/8) from England, he was listed as a framesmith on Moncrieff's Close in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was also listed as a High Street framesmith in Slater's 1852 directory. In the 1841 census he is 'Harrott'. In the 1851 census (where he is 'Harrot') he is a framesmith at about 48 High Street, employing 4 men. His wife was Catherine.

herry (he-ree) v., arch. to harry, plunder, pilage – ‘Ma castle is aye ma ain, An’ herried it never shall be, For I maun fa’ ere it’s taen, An’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T], ‘... Yince an affair o stern duty; but now an affair o the hert ... And there’s owre little hert, nowadays, mair’s the peety ...’ [DH], ‘A man suirely deservin o a hert o gold ...’ [IWL], ‘But ye’re hame now, and oor herts cry A welcome to your ain’ [WL], ‘For where the hert is, there’s the hame; It’s love that builds the nest ...’ [FL], ‘But there’s naethin’ can light up an auld mither’s hert ...’ [WAP], ‘The place ma hert aye longs ti be, Auld Hawick, ma Border hame’ [IWL] (cf. the less common hairt; see also hertit).

hert-crop (her’-krop) n., arch. the wood-rush, Luzula pilosa – ‘Liddesdale and Kidland coincide in naming Luzula pilosa, Heart or Hart-crops. This is one of the firstlings of the year, and if it springs early, it announces a year of grass’ [BNC1889].

herten (her’-in, her-tin) v. to hearten – ‘... He speired yon needfu thing A cigarette, wi its hertenin licht, Solace to bring’ [DH].

Hertford (her’-furd) n. Edward Seymour, Earl of Hertford (c.1506–1552). He was appointed Lord Warden of the Marches in October 1542 and was Lieutenant General in 1544 when he was in the north for a second time. In 1542 he wrote to Henry VIII, describing the farms his men had burned in the Scottish Borders. He and his forces carried out a vindictive Border raid in 1545, burning many towns and destroying towers, houses and abbeys as part of what became know as the ‘Rough Wooing’. He had already led the burning of Edinburgh in 1544 (which included razing Haddington and Hawick), and been defeated at Ancrum earlier in 1545. The laying waste of the Scottish Borders covered 15 terrible days in September 1545, and is detailed in an account to King Henry VIII. He was later raised to be the Duke of Somerset. He was Jane Seymour’s brother and uncle of Edward VI, for whom he served as Lord Protector until falling out of favour and being executed.

herthstane (herth-stān) n. a hearthstone – ‘... An’ faund oor freends an’ cronies gane, oor happy herthstane cauld’ [JoHa], ‘For my dayes ar consumet like reek, an’ my banes ar brunt as ane herthstane’ [HSR].

the Herth Tax (thu-herth-tawks) n. tax imposed on fireplaces in 1690 and collected over the subsequent years. The amount charged was 14 shillings per hearth (a hefty sum for the less well-off) and was levied to support the army. Because it was based on fireplaces in houses, it was essentially a tax on family units. The poor did not have to pay (but were in some cases listed by name), as well as hospitals being exempt. The list of those responsible for the tax, drawn up in Roxburghshire in 1694 (although probably representing the state of the parishes a year or so earlier), is an invaluable record of the residents in the county at that time. It is the closest thing we have to a census at the end of the 17th century.

hert-hungry (her’-hung-u-ree) adj., arch. ravenous, famished – ‘No that A was hert-hungry nih, aether; or thance A micht heh been gaun pookin ‘cheese-an-breed’ off the hedges ti nattle at’ [ECS], ‘A’m fair heart-hungry; A could eat the deil an’ sup his mother!’ [GW].

hertit (her-tee', her-ti') pp., adj. hearted, usually in compound adjectives – ‘hei’s awfi chicken-hertit him’, ‘A feelin-herteet yallih-yorleen ...’ [ECS], ‘... Ma warm-hertet Treasure, O, wad A lo’e yow mair’ [WFC], ‘Hei was a kind-herteet sowl, weel likeet in the toon, an prood o’ bein a gitterblude’ [BW1978], arch. ‘ti be hertit’ is to be winded or knocked out by a blow (also spelled ‘hertet’ and ‘herteet’; see hert).

the Hert o Hawick (thu-her'-ō-hlk) n. the Heart of Hawick Townscape Heritage Initiative, an urban regeneration project for the centre of Hawick in the early years of the 21st century, partly funded by the Heritage Lottery Fund. Projects included redevelopment of Tower Mills, the construction of the James Thomson Bridge and development of the area around Drumlanrig’s Tower and the old Exchange Buildings – ‘We are the heart of Hawick, We are the heart of Hawick, It’s in our body, it’s in our soul, These are feelings we can’t control, ‘Cos we are the heart of Hawick’ [GLG].

Herts o Liddesdale (herts-ō-li-diz-dāl) n. football club established in Newcastleton in 1880. For their 125th anniversary they arranged a match with Heart of Midlothian. The club ceased playing in 2015, but resumed in 2021.

hertsome (her'-, hert-sum) adj., arch., poet. heart-warming, encouraging, cheerful, hearty – ‘I’m prood to think yer a credit To the guides ye’ve had sae lang – That cheered yer journey through life Wi’ mony a hertsome sang’ [FL], ‘I took my gate in the cool nicht air, And quaetly breathed oot a hertsome prayer ...’ [WL].

herty (her'-ee, her-tee) adj. hearty – ‘Frae the grey auld city it started oot Wi’ an unco herty will; But it hirpled alang like a sair dune man Or it breested Fala-hill’ [WL], ‘... And the second Cornet o ma life-time is here Among us a’, and hale and herty ... and lang may he be!’ [DH], ‘The tother morning, efter a herty supper o young ingans and lettuce ...’ [DH] (also spelled ‘hertie’).

hervest (her-vist) n., arch. a harvest – ‘The hervest sun shines through the trees An’ lichtens the stooks an’ the stan’in corn ...’ [FGS], ‘... The hervest’s won and the feck hae had their fill’ [WL], the time of harvest – ‘A fine hervest monrin’ saw me take the coach frae Auld Reekie ...’ [JEDM], v. to harvest.

Hervey (her-vee) n. Rev. James (1714–58) English minister and devotional writer. His ‘A display of genuine Christianity, and Christian love

...’ (1784), was one of the first books published by George Caw, perhaps being the 2nd book published in Hawick. The full title is ‘A display of genuine Christianity, and Christian love recommended to young and old. Or, A collection of select tracts, sentences, and choice hints, on divine and moral subjects taken from the best authors. Wherein are shown, The advantages of Piety and Virtue, and the destructive Consequences of Sin and Vice. To which are added, Some Hints concerning the means of promoting Religion in ourselves or others. It is not a page turner! The reason is unclear why his compilation of Christian writings was published in Hawick 16 years after his death.

hes (hez) v. has (i.e. third person singular, present tense) – ‘she hes, ee ken’, ‘... the two present bayleas hes confirmed the kirke bell ringing at even and morning’ [BR1696], ‘... the King hes brung me intil his chammers’ [HSR], ‘... the puir alsua an’ him that hæs nae helpir’ [HSR], ‘... an the preidfi h blustereen that a body offen hes ti thole’ [ECS], ‘O’ a’body he hes suspecians, Par-teec’larly the politeecians’ [IJ], ‘... it hez tae be Teribus of course’ [CT], ‘It hez a history prood and grand ...’ [IWL], ‘When the world hez a’ gone still’ (also spelled ‘hez’).

hesni (hez-, hes-ni) contr. hasn’t, has not – ‘hei hesni got a leg ti stand on’ (hasni is also occasionally used).

Hessel (he-sul) n. Charles (1788–1859) born in England, he was a whip and thong-maker of the High Street, as well as a baker. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about No. 25. In 1851 he was listed as a whip-maker and master baker, employing 4 men and 2 boys. He was also listed as both baker and whip-maker in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was a member of Allars Kirk and served as Preses of the Relief Kirk Session. He married Isabel (or Isabella) Kennedy, daughter of Margaret (from Cavers); she died in Stirling in 1873. Their children included: Thomas (b.1822); Margaret (b.1823), who probably died young; James (b.1825), who married Elizabeth Milligan in 1848; Charles (b.1827), who married Margaret Kersel in 1853; Elizabeth (b.1829), who married John Todd in 1849; Francis Ralph Oliver (b.1832); John Harrison (b.1834); and William Dickson (b.1839). Members of his family later moved to Stirling.

Charles (1827–60) son of Charles, the whip-maker. He was a tinsmith in Hawick. In 1853 he married Margaret (c.1826–96), daughter of Adam Kersel. Their children were: Isabella, who married James Miles; Elizabeth, who married Charles Hogg; and Charles (b.1859), who died in infancy. Charles (b.1851/2) son of baker James, and grandson of Charles the whip-maker. He was probably the Common Riding ‘Sang Singer’, being recorded leading the singing of the ‘Old Song’ in 1881. He was probably the Charles from Hawick recorded winning a sack race for teenagers at the 1869 Border Games. James (b.1825/6) baker in Hawick. In 1861 he was a journeyman baker living in a back house at 29 High Street. He married Elizabeth Milligan and their children included Margaret (b.c.1850) and Charles (b.c.1852). John (b.1833/4) secretary of the Artisans Reading Room on Market Place, according to Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was a writer’s apprentice clerk, living with his brother-in-law John Todd, at Lynnwood (also spelled ‘Hassell’, ‘Hazell’ and ‘Hessell’; cf. Haswell).

Hesseldale (he-sul-dāl) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed on the 1541 rental roll, valued at 12 shillings and tenanted by John Nixon. The precise location is unclear, but it is listed among other lands that are in the general area of Larriston.

Hessel’s Close (he-sulz-klōs) n. former name for a passageway at 25 High Street, named for the baker and whip-makers there.

hessen (he-zin, he-sin) contr. hasn’t, has not (short form of hesn’t).

hesn’t (he-zin’) contr. hasn’t, has not – ‘she hes, hesn’t she?’ (sometimes shortened to hes-sen; this form is used interrogatively and occurs before the noun, cf. hesni).

hest (hest) v., poet. hast – ‘...behold, thou art fair; thou hest dows’ eyne’ [HSR], ‘...for thou hest liftet me up, an’ hestna mæde mine enimes til rejoyce ower me’ [HSR].

hes’t (hest) contr. has it – ‘hes’t the same colour is the other yin?’.

het (he’, het) pp. heated – ‘div ee want this soup het up?’, ‘Gang coole i’ the same creesh ye hette, Or haith, ye’sæ rue youre raide’ [JTe], ‘...where Teelio ...fed um on yesterday’s het up chips’ [MB], adj., arch. hot – ‘that got um inti het witter’, ‘Sir George was gentle, meek and douse, But he was hail, and het as fire ...’ [CPM], ‘...a near-do-weel cowherd callant made as if he wad grip it by the nose wi’ a pair o’ reid het tangs’ [LHTB], ‘...Butte many

heth (heth) v., poet. hath – ‘...but whasae-vir hethna, frae him sall be taen awa een that he heth’ [HSR], ‘An’ he heth putten an new sang intill my mooth ...’ [HSR].

hetter (he’-ur) adj., arch. hotter – ‘I’m bevering and growzing wi’ terror and cauld – And I’m doubtful I sune will be better’ [JTe], ‘...Mind and gie him nae hetter kail Than ye can sup yersel’ [FL].

heuch (hewch, chewch) n., arch. a precipitous slope, steep hill, bank, crag, precipice – ‘...And at the brae aboon the heugh The clerk sat down to ca’ the rows’ [CPM], ‘The lands, baith hill and heugh Belang a’ to the guid Buccleuch’ [HSR], ‘...And we hurried ower haugh and heuch Wi’ the pick o’ the country side’ [TK] (also written ‘heugh’; note the variation in the pronunciation of the beginning consonant; the word is found in several local placenames, e.g. Cockerheugh, Heuchhooose, Pipewellheugh, Reidheugh and Roughheugh).

Heuchhooose (hewch-hoos) n. Heuchhooose, former lands in the Liddel valley, roughly opposite Dinlabyre, near the modern Steele Road. It is probably the place listed as ‘Hoghouse’, with a value of 15 shillings, on a rental roll of Liddesdale around 1376. It was a seat of a branch of the Elliots in the early 16th century. In 1541

the tenant was William Elliot, and it was still valued at 15 shillings. Martin Elliot of Heuchhouse was among the thieves captured at Hawick in 1567 and drowned. ‘Johnne Elliot’ of Heuchhouse is recorded in 1570. ‘Rid Marteine of the Heuchhous’ is recorded in 1579/80, Hob Elliot of Heuchhouse in 1583, Martin and John Elliot ‘of the Hewghehowse’ in 1584, John Elliot in 1586, Will Elliott ‘of the Hewghehouse’ in 1590 and ‘Johnne Elliot of the Heuchhous’ in 1611. Over Heuchhouse was possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632. John Gray was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘Heuchous’ in 1516, 1541 and 1567, ‘Heuchhous’ in 1576/7, ‘Heughhouse’ in 1581, ‘Haugh-house’ in the 1580s, ‘Heuchous’ in 1586, ‘Hewghhouse’ in 1595 and ‘Hookhouse’ in 1797).

Heuchhosehill (hewch-hoos-hil) n. lands in Liddesdale, near to Heuchhouse on the opposite bank of the Liddel from Dinlabyre. It is valued at 15 shillings in 1541 and tenanted by John ‘Kel-lelee’ and John Nixon. It is probably the ‘Heuchhousbrae’ inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre in 1667 (and apparently again in 1691 as ‘Hughousebrae’) from his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. It is possible this is the same as the modern Hews Hill (it is ‘Heuchoushill’ in 1541; ‘Heuckhoushil’ appears on Blaeu’s c.1651 map, between Brighouse and Tailleycleuch).

Heugh Heid (hewch-heed) n. former farmstead in southern Liddesdale, just south of Tinnis Burn, to the west of Under Burnmouth. It is sometimes also recorded as ‘Haughhead’. Archibald and James Armstrong were there in 1697 when they were summoned by the Kirk Session to answer charges of not observing the Sabbath. Archibald Armstrong was tenant farmer until about 1757. There were Kyles there in 1794 and 1797 and Francis Nichol was there in 1801. According to William Scott (in the 1821 ‘Beauties of the Border’) the farm stood on a rocky precipice, and the farmer there lost his stock to a bad winter, tumbling them off a high rock, after which he told a cattle-dealer that he had ‘met with a Mr. Linn, who has taken all I had at one price’ (it is marked ‘Heughhead’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; it is listed as ‘Heugheads’ in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls).

hev (hev) v. to have – ‘ee hev so’, ‘how mony days hev ee worn they socks?’, ‘what hev ee been up ti?’, ‘Hev ee Mysie wi’ ee Col? Hev ee brocht her tae the city?’ [JEDM], ‘It micht hev been less – bit no’ muckle’ [RM], ‘... Eer mother asked whair hev a slate off (hev-a-slä'-of) v., arch. to have a screw loose, be not quite right in the head – ‘Jamie if anything had what was called ‘a slate off’ [RM].

hevin (he-vin) v. having – ‘oor hevin a pairty this Seturdi’, ‘hevin fund oot there was nae Common Ridin there, hei came hyim’.

hevni (hev-ni) contr. haven’t, have not – ‘A hevni got ony’, ‘...an it’s worse if ee hevni got a lot turned up at the bottom’ [CT], ‘Eer no a cool granny if ee hevni got a mobile phone a’m telt’ [We] (cf. huvni and the more common henni).

hevn’t (he-vin) contr. haven’t, have not – ‘A’ve got een in ma heid, hevn’t A?’, ‘ee’ve aye got an answer, hevn’t ee?’, hevn’t ee hed enough yit?’ (hivn’t and huvn’t also exist, note that this form always precedes the noun or pronoun).

hevven (he-vin) contr. haven’t, have not – ‘aye, hevven they jist’ (short form of hevn’t; also hivven).

hev yin’s chips (hev-yinz-chips) v. to be defeated or in trouble – ‘Dodie’s hed his chips’.

Hewie (hew-ee) n. Isobell (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1724 being given 8 pence per quarter by the Hawick Session for teaching poor children. She could be the wife of James Turnbull whose daughter Bessie was born in 1695.

Hewick (hew-ik) n. historic plantation in Virginia, U.S.A. Ripon has the villages of Copt Hewick and Bridge Hewick. It is also an occasional surname.

Hewisbridge see Hewsbridge

Hewitson (hew-it-sin) n. Agnes ‘Nancy Whutson’, ‘Auld Nancy’ (1810/1–88) familiar sight in Hawick of the mid-19th century, along with her donkey ‘Jess’. She was daughter of John, a mole-catcher, and Agnes Reid. A resident of Wilton, she was unmarried and worked much of her life as a coal carter. With her little cart she supplied coal to the working classes in small loads. Ill health forced her to give up her trade a few years before her death. George (17th C.) resident at Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His surname is written ‘Houetsone’. John (b.c.1780) born in England, he was a mole-catcher in Wilton, living at Dovemount. He married Agnes (or Jane), sister of Wull Reid, bedlar at Wilton. His children included: Agnes was later known as 'Auld Nancy'; Jane; Archibald, who worked as a skinner; and John. John (b.1812/3) born in Kirkton Parish, he was educated in Wilton School. He became schoolmaster at Clarilaw in about 1839. He is listed as teacher at Clarilaw among heads of households in 1840 and 1841 and also on the 1841 census. By 1851 he had moved to be schoolmaster at Hadden in Sprouston Parish. His wife was Martha and their children included Eliza, William, Janet O. and Martha. Manie (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her surname was written 'Houitsone'. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'Howitson' in 1657, when he was ordained to pay Hawick schoolmaster for past wages 'for teaching of his sons in the schole several quarters bygane'. He must have been a relatively prominent man in the Parish, to be able to afford such fees (see also Howieson, Howison and Whutson).

Hewitt (hew-i') n. Rev. George Burrill (20th C.) attended Cheshunt College, he became minister at Elmwood Avenue, Warrington in 1939. He was minister of the Hawick Congregational Kirk from 1942. He wrote '1848-1948 - Hawick Congregational Church - Centenary Commemoration' in 1948.

Hewsbridge (hewz-brij) n. cottages and area around a bridge over the Liddel Water just to the south of Steeleroad-end. A new bridge was built there in the late 19th century, to replace the dangerous older one. The area to the west of the river is called Hews Hill or Hewis Hill and could be associated with the older 'Heuchhouse'. It is possible this is the place recorded in 1632 as 'Hoillis in the gait with the pertinents perteaning to Robert Elliot of Dinlabyre'. Robert Douglas was farmer at 'Huisbridgend' in 1851 and William Minto was blacksmith there in the 1860s (also 'Hewisbridge', it is 'Hewessbridge' in 1821).

Hewson (hew-sin) n. Rev. J. (19th C.) 3rd official pastor of Hawick Baptist Kirk. He served for the years 1871-74. He is probably the Mr. Hewson who served at Coatbridge 1875-78.

Hexham (heks-um) n. town in Tynedale in Northumberland with a nearby Priory. It once constituted its own shire and was an important administrative centre in the English Middle March. The Moothall is the ancient palace of the Bishops of Hexham, first built around 1100, rebuilt in the 14th century. The town also contains the Border History Museum. It was formerly connected with Hawick (via Riccarton) through the Border Counties Railway Line. It was a band of men from this area who were ambushed at Hornshole in 1514. Population 11,300. The town was formerly used in exclamations, such as 'Gang ti Hexham!', which meant the same as go to blazes.

Hexham Abbey (hek-sum-aw-bee) n. Abbey at Hexham, the Priory of St. Andrew, dating mainly from about 1170-1250, being built on a site that held a church since 674. It is now the Parish Church of St. Andrew, with ancient arms being a yellow saltire on a blue background. Lord Dacre was Bailiff of Hexham and some of his men were known to be involved in raids on the Scottish Borderland land in 1514. It is believed it was their flag that was captured at Hornshole. The Hawick Provost took part in the consecration of the new nave of Hexham Priory in 1908, with the Hawick Flag loaned for the procession (and of which there is a photograph). A copy of the Hawick flag was presented to Hexham Abbey by the Callant's Club in 1914, and a replacement presented by the Provost in 1972 - 'And I watch their lads' eyes light with pride and their spears lift once again To Hexham's pennon blue and gold above their leader's rein' [JYH].

Hexham-birnie (heks-um-bir-nee) n. a very remote place, 'Hei leev'd in Hexham-birnie' was part of a once popular rhyme (cf. ti Hexham).

Hextilda (heks-til-da) n. (12th C.) daughter of Bethoc and Uchtred FitzWaldeve. She was grand-daughter of King Donald III. Through her mother she inherited the Barony of Bedrule, among other lands. She married Malcolm, 2nd Earl of Atholl and was thereafter known as Countess of Atholl. In about 1145 she secondly married Richard Comyn, Lord of Tynedale. Her children included Henry, 3rd Earl of Atholl and William Comyn, Earl of Buchan. Her son William inherited the Barony of Bedrule. Note that 'Huwe de Hextildespeth', from Roxburghshire, signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and may have been owner of lands named after her. In the 1150s her husband Richard Comyn gifted the Church of West Linton to Kelso Abbey; there she is listed as Countess of Atholl, with her son Odinel Comyn and Roger, Parson of Rule as witnesses. In about 1170 she gave her consent to a gift of land in West Lothian and in the mid-1180s witnessed the gift of a church in Perthshire.

Heylands (hī-lindz) n. fomer name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376, in the area then known as Ermildon. The lands are recorded as ‘Heylandys’, with a value of 15 shillings.

hey-ma-nannie (hī-ma-naw-nee) n., arch. a very quick thing, especially in the phrase ‘Hei ran off like hey-ma-nannie!’.

Heysike (hī-sīk) n. Haysike, a farm and cluster of houses on the side road off the A7 about 3 miles south of Hawick. It takes its name from the stream that joins the Teviot near there – ‘So for toonty fowre year horse-drawn traps wad clim Heysike, the Flex and the Nipknowes, bringin teams frae neebourin clubs ...’ [IWL] (‘Hey’ here is probably ‘high’, as in ‘Highchesters’ and the nearby ‘Haycorse’ and ‘Hayknowe’).

Hey Sike (hī-sīk) n. stream running into the Teviot, from the east, at Haysike. The head of the stream lies on the boundary of the Common – ‘... from whence the march runs eastward along the march with Alton Crofts to the march with Gowdielands at the Hay Syke head, and thence east by the march dyke betwixt Gowdielands and the Common to the march with Crumhaugh’ [C&L1767] (also written ‘Hay Sike’ and ‘Hay Syke’).

Hey Sike (hī-sīk) n. Hay Sike, small stream that forms part of the headwaters of the Rankle Burn, to the west of Wolfcleuchhead. It once formed part of the distant boundary of Robertson Parish (it is marked ‘Haysike’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Heysike Hoose (hī-sīk-hoos) n. large house at Haysike.

Higgins (hi-ginz) n. Fr. Peter (??-??) priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1956–86. He was instrumental in founding the new chapel at Burnfoot, holding evening services there. He retired in 1986.

Higgins Phill (hi-ginz-fil) n. local nickname, probably of the 19th century – ‘Eppy Sootie and Wullie Pairk, Geordie the Buck and Higgins Phill, Jamie Nichol the Hawick band clairk, The Duddy Laird and Shallow Bill’ [HI].

Higgs (higz) n. Sir John (1923–86) studied agriculture at Cambridge University and went on to be a lecturer at Reading and Fellow in Oxford. He was President of the British Agricultural History Society and Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. He purchased the farm of Arkleton in Ewesdale and in 1977 established the Arkleton Trust to promote agriculture and rural development.

Highchester see Highchesters

Highchesters (hI-, hī, hā-ches-turz) n. farm along the Borthwick, opposite Todshawhaugh. The earliest known resident was ‘Bellit’ Andrew Turnbull in 1503. It was afterwards the seat of the Scotts of Highchester, who are the direct ancestors of the Scotts of Harden and was sometimes used as the dower house for Harden. In the 17th century it consisted of the separate West Highchesters and East Highchesters, with the former being the main estate. There were 21 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650 (with surnames Adam, Allan, Brash, Brown, Cowan, Gavin, Gledstains, Heatlie, Napier, Noble, Renwick, Riddell, Robson, Scott, White and Wilson). The lands were transferred from Wilton Parish to Robertson in 1690. There were 4 separate households listed there in 1694. There are records of 1700–04 of a dispute over ‘Haychester’s loft’ in Wilton Kirk, the right of these sittings having passed to Robertson Kirk. At Robertson in 1701 the Laird’s seats consisted of 9½ feet either side of the East end. The lands were associated with the Harden estates in the 18th and 19th centuries. James Learmonth, Adam Scott, Robert Neil and James Laidlaw were recorded there in 1710, James Robson in 1711, Robert Riddell in 1716–22, Adam Glendinning and John Wilson in 1718, Robert Scott and William Beattie in 1720, James Scott in 1721, William Scott in 1721–23, Walter Turnbull in 1723–24, William Hume in 1725, James Scott in 1727 and William Brown in 1731. George Tait was living there in 1742, Robert Scott in 1743, James Stot in 1753, Alexander Scott in 1756, Andrew Watson in 1757, James Hume in 1762, William Scott in 1763–66, David Laidlaw in 1764, John Scott in 1766, William Miller in 1781, Robert Hobkirk in 1781–86, James Hobkirk in 1784, Walter Scott in 1786, Peter Waldie in 1795–98 and James Turnbull is recorded as tenant in 1797. In 1788 the lands were recorded along with Harden and Dunbush valued at £486 6s 8d. Thomas Miller lived there in 1801, William Hart in 1821, George Hart in 1841 and Robert Brydon was farm steward there in 1868. A perforated stone disc from here is in the Museum (also written ‘Highchester’ and formerly ‘Haychesters’, ‘heychesters’, etc.; the name occurs in 1502 as ‘hawchesteris’, is ‘haychesteris’ in 1503, ‘Haychesteris’ in 1643, ‘Hiechester’ and ‘Heychester’ in 1648, ‘Haychester’ in 1650, ‘Heigh Chester’ in 1657, and ‘Haychester’ and ‘Haychasters’ in 1694, ‘Haychesters’ in 1710, was regularly ‘Heychester’ in the 17th century and becomes the modern form by the late 18th century; it is ‘Eister & Wester Heychesters’ on a parish map of 1650, ‘Haychester’ in de Wit’s c. 1680 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘W. Haychester’ and ‘E. Haychester’ and it is ‘High Chesters’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; the origin is probably Old English ‘haga ceaster’, meaning ‘the fort with the hedge around it’, with the connection to the nearby hill-fort; ‘Underchesteris’ is recorded in 1482, perhaps suggesting that the lands were split into ‘Under’ and ‘High’ chesters at that time).

Highchesters Mill

Highchesters Cottages (hI-ches-turz-ko’-ee-jeez) n. former name for cottages on the right hand side of the Borthwick road, before coming to the main farm of Highchesters (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Highchesters Hill (hI-ches-turz-hil) n. hill of the Borthwick valley, just above Highchesters, reaching 258m and containing a hill-fort at its southern end. It measures about 70m by 50m and has 3 fragmentary ramparts, with the entrance probably at the north-east. It is described as a ridge fort, and may be from the early Iron Age.

Highchesters Loft (hI-ches-turz-loft) n. gallery in the older Wilton Kirk, the sittings on which were owned by the Laird of Highchesters, i.e. Scott of Harden. After 1690 the right was transferred to the new Robertson Kirk, but disputed by Highchesters, since some of his property remained in Wilton. The former heritors of Hassendean complained in the period 1700–04 that they wanted sittings in this loft or would not pay for repairs. This old building was finally replaced in the 1760s. It is unclear whether the loft received a new popular name before its demise.

Highchesters Mill (hI-ches-turz-mil) n. mill attached to the Highchesters estate, mentioned in 1732. It was on the south side of the main road just after the Highchesters farmhouse, and once had a mill lade, connecting across the loop in the Borthwick Water there. Robert Thomson was there in 1733. John Hume was living there in 1748, John Scott was tenant there in at least 1762–72 and John Haldane was tenant in the 1850s. In 1788 and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it is listed along with Harden and Dunbush, as part of the estate of Walter Scott of Harden. The farmer there in 1841 was Peter Pennycuik and there were also Deans and others there (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Highend (hI-end) n. farm in Hobkirk Parish on the side road between Hawthornside and Forkins. The main road from Hawick to Newcastle used to pass this way before the early 1800s when the new road via Bonchester Bridge was made. It was once a small cottage containing two rooms, which was used as a public house, and had another small adjacent cottage called ‘the Highend of Langraw’. The last proprietor of the inn was Robert Douglas. Around 1778 the attached lands were combined with those of Little Gledstains and the Sneep and farmed by John Common. Thomas, son of John Common, was recorded there in 1799–1801 and Adam in 1801. Mrs. Taylor was recorded there in at least 1841–68.

Higher (hI-ur) n. advanced level of the Scottish Certificate of Education, taken in a number of subjects, usually in the 5th year of High School. Not as advanced as the English A Level, but Scottish students generally take a wider range of subjects – ‘she failed her Higher Latin, bit got threi O Grades’.

Highflicht (hI-flīcht) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541, and presumably part of the lands of Flicht.

high heid yin (hI-heed-yin) n. a leader, person in authority, big cheese – ‘... teh Amairiceh where hei met a lot o’ the high heid yins at the White Hoose’ [BW].

Highhoos (hI-hoos) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale. It appears to be combined with Hightrees, Howden, Harden and Burnmouth on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It may correspond to the farmhouse shown on the map at about the location of Upper Larriston. It is possible this is the ‘Hie-Eshies’ inherited among other Liddesdale lands in 1667 by William Elliot of Dinlabyre, and transcribed ‘Hydashes’ in 1691.

Highland see Heeland

Highlee (hI-lee) n. former farmstead near Highlee Hill, south of Lustruther in Southdean Parish. John Oliver was tenant there in 1669 and William Oliver in 1694 (it is ‘Hielie’ in 1669 and ‘heylie’ in 1694).

Highlee Hill (hI-lee-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, lying to the south-west of Lustruther and east of Wolfelee, reaching a height of 307 m. The gentle peak lies in an open area of moorland, and contains the remains of an ancient settlement, perhaps Iron Age. It is about 60 m across, and has been denuded by cultivation and quarrying.

There are also old sheepfolds, boundary dykes, enclosures, lazy beds and rig and furrow lines in the area. A track across the hill towards Lustruther may be one of the alternative routes of the Wheel Causeway.

the High Level (thū-hI-le-vul) n. pub at 11 Green Terrace, since at least the late 19th century, sometimes called ‘the Level’.

the High Loft (thū-hI-loft) n. former balcony in St. Mary’s Kirk, before it was rebuilt about 1763. It was also known as ‘the Common Loft’, and sometimes referred to as ‘the Rowly-Powly Loft’, suggesting that it was not very stable. It was one of two such lofts reached from the steeple side, the lower one being called ‘the Middle Loft’ or ‘the Steeple Loft’.

High Mangerton (hI-mān-jer-tin) n. former name for part of what was once Mangerton farm, presumably the higher part. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties it was included as part of Sorbietrees.

the High Road (thū-hI-rōd) n. popular local name for the road leading north-east out of Robertson, up the B711 and through the Borthwickbrae estate to join ‘the Low Road’ at Borthwickbrae Burnfit.

High Sate (hI-sā’) n. High Seat, hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, between Commonsides Moor and Broadlee Moss, north of Dryden Fell and south of Broadlee Loch. It reaches a height of 347 m.

the High Schuil (thū-hI-skil) n. Hawick High School, on the north side of Buccleuch Road, Nos. 26–28. It was originally started as the Buccleuch Public School in 1860 to replace the Grammar School, which had been founded in 1710, and merged with the parish school in 1824. The new School Board took over responsibility for it in 1872 and there were enlargements soon afterwards. After major renovations in 1908 (with designs by Joseph Blaikie) the name was changed to Buccleuch Higher Grade School, and became ‘Hawick High School’ in 1915. There was a serious fire there in 1925, with pupils being taught in church halls until the school was reopened in 1928. The architect for the new building was John Alexander Carfrae. Note that the High School was not free for everyone until about WWII. The land of Teviot Lodge was gifted to the school in 1933, with science buildings and gymnasium built there around 1960. The Extension building, the new Technical building, the Games Hall and the Dining Block were all built in the 1970s. There were extensive modernisations in the 1990s, at a cost of around £6 million, including new link corridors, Library, Music and Special Educational Needs Department. The buildings have multiplied and it is now the largest secondary school in the Scottish Borders, with about 1,000 pupils. School Inspectors' Reports for 1915–39 are in the National Archives, as are Leaving Exam results 1940–45.

Highsidelees (hI-sīd-leez) n. possible name of a farmstead near Teviothead, near Falnash and Lairhope (marked 'Hiesyidlies' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

the High Street (thū-hI-stree) n. the main public road or highway through the centre of Hawick, once forming a large fraction of the inhabited part of the town. Earlier names include the 'public striet', 'the hei gate', 'the common gait', 'the King's High Street' and 'the common Heigh Street', with the modern name appearing by the end of the 18th century. The street has seen many changes, being renovated in 1715 and repaved in 1721, and having the gates removed in the latter part of the 18th century. It was repaved (along with the Howegate etc.) in the late 1780s, and many of the outside staircases were removed in 1791. In the late 18th century almost all the houses were still roofed with either thatch or turf. Lighting appeared first in the 1830s and the granite setts were only lifted in 1962. Some of the last thatched houses (roughly opposite the Town Hall, and sticking out into the pavement) were demolished in 1879. The street was made one-way in 2007. House numbering probably happened in Hawick first on the High Street, but not formally until the mid-19th century; there were no numbers given in the first census of 1841, while the numbering in the 1851 census started at the other end of the Street and without the odd/even split! The sides are normally referred to as the 'north' and 'south' sides, even although they are closer to being 'west' and 'east'. In the 1537 there were 80 'particates' on the south side and 48 on the north side. The north (or west) side has odd numbers, while the south (or east) side has even numbers. One of the earliest surviving buildings is the pended house at No. 51, while Nos. 24–26 are late 18th century, and parts of many early houses surely survive within the mainly 19th century buildings. The Town Hall dominates the centre of the Street, built 1884–86 to replace an earlier 'Town House' and even earlier Tolbooth. The centre of the street is the foot of the Cross Wynd where the Market Cross stood until 1762. The bulk of the buildings date from the second half of the 19th century, with several of the particularly elaborate ones being originally built to be banks. Prominent unifying design features are the eaves course linking the upper windows, as well as the continuous hoodmoulds above the first floor windows; the original designer of these features is unknown. The High Street remains the focus for shopping and other activity in the town, and is usually referred to simply as 'the Street'. A bronze ring-brooch from around 1400 was found in 1956 during building work at No. 48. Many of the buildings on the High Street are listed (it is 'Heigh Street of Hawicke' in 1688).

High Tofts Quarry (hI-tofts-kwa-ree) n. former quarry near the farm of Upper Tofts. It was around here that geologist David Milne-Home used to illustrate his theory of lava filling up a crack in the rock, to explain the basaltic dyke crossing part of Roxburghshire.

Hightreis (hI-trīz) n. Hightrees, former name for lands in Liddesdale, connected with Manger-ton estate. They are listed on a rental roll of c.1376 as 'Hetryes' associated with Mangerton, with a value of 18 shillings, and also as 'Hetreis' associated with Ermildon, with a value of 15 shillings; this suggests the lands were in 2 parts. On the 1541 rental roll 'The Hie Treis' were valued at 16 shillings, with tenants Robert and David Elliot. 'Neather Hietreis' was listed among the farms possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632 and 'Hietreip' (presumably a transcription error) among the possessions of Hab Henderson. It is probably the same place as 'Hietrels' marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map west of Thorlieshope. It is presumably the same as the farm of 'Hightree', where there were Armstrongs in the 18th century. It was presumably close to Hightrees Cleuch. It was combined with Highhouse, Howden, Harden and Burnmouth on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, although its precise location is not shown.

Hightreis Cleuch (hI-trīz-klooch) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Hietrecleuchis' on the 1541 rental roll. The tenant was Matthew Nixon and they were valued at 15 shillings. It is probably the 'Hetherclewes' listed in 1544, when Matthew Nixon from there was among Scotsmen giving support to the English Crown. In 1586 it is described as 'the fyftene schilling land of Hietrie Clewis' when occupied by Martin Elliot of Braidlie and re-leased to him by Francis, Earl of Bothwell.

highwaye (hI-wI) n., poet. a highway – 'Gang ye therfor intil the hiewayes, an' as mony as ye sall fin', bid them til the bridal' [HSR].

Hi-I-Obby (hI-I-o-bee) n. nickname of Robert Aitken – 'Anon Jock Bewlie shuffles by, And Hie Hi hobbles ahint pell-mell; There's Jamie Jolly watchin' a skly, And Daft Jamie ringin' St. Mary's bell' [HI] (there are various spellings).

hilch (hilch) v., poet. to limp, hobble – 'I mind ye were barefoot and hirpled ahint – As along the hard road ye were hilching ...' [JTe].

Hill (hil) n. former farmstead in Jedforest, probably near Mervinslaw and Cleithaugh. Thomas Oliver was the tenant there in 1669.

Hill (hil) n. Alexander (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Scott in Minto Parish in 1716. Alexander (17th/18th C.) married Elizabeth Sharp in Minto Parish in 1736. David (1755–1836) carrier who lived at the Mid Raw. He ran his cart to the Newcastleton area once a week. He is mentioned in the poem 'At Easter' by David Hill (his descendant). He married Agnes Waugh, who died in 1832, aged 75. Their children included: Isabel (1776–1832), baptised in Southdean Parish; and Thomas (1787–1824), baptised in Ancrum Parish, who was a minister in Montreal. He and his family are buried at St. Mary's. He was surely related to James (son of Thomas) who was a carrier from at least 1841. David Octavius (18th/19th C.) described as a 'Supervisor' in Hawick in 1815. He married Elizabeth Scott and their son Alexander was born in 1815, the witnesses being excise officer Robert Turnbull and his wife, Ann Scott. David Octavius (1802–70) painter and pioneering photographer. His enormous painting of the Disruption of 1843, the First General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, is well-known, and its execution introduced him to Robert Adamson and the technique of photography. The pair established a partnership that revolutionised photography as an artistic medium. In 1835 he painted a landscape view of Hawick, taken from around Wilton Hill. David 'Davie' (1911–1977) prolific local poet, born in the Westend, and educated at Drumlanrig and the High School. He worked in advertising for one of the local mills, then volunteered for the R.A.F., returning after the War to work in the family firm making Hawick Balls. He befriended poet Hugh MacDiarmid, and contributed regularly to the Hawick News and Hawick Express. He wrote the well known poems 'The Vertish', 'Shundert', 'The Spetchman's Sang', 'Robbie Dye', 'The Bleach', and many more, as well as some fiction and a play, 'The Sow's Lug'. A short-story, 'Thirty Six Hours', about a young soldier from the Borders, was published in 1944 and he had several pieces broadcast on the radio. He was a founder member of the Camera Club and active in the Callants' Club and Archæological Society. A collection of his poetry finally appeared in 2011, called 'Ain Gait', on the 100th anniversary of his birth. He married Robertina ('Ina') Scott Morrison, from Langholm and she died in 2004. They had a son, David Andrew and a daughter Christine Morrison. David 'Dave' (1931–2020) Born in Hawick, he grew up in O'Connell Street, Lothian Street and Weensland Park. He played the pipes with the Hawick Scout Pipe Band and played rugby for the Harlequins, later serving as President and Match Secretary. He worked as an electrician and did National Service in the R.A.F. Starting from the age of 19 he made 70 appearances for Hawick R.F.C., usually as full back. At the age of 26 he became a referee on the Border League circuit and was linesman for a Scotland international match in 1964. He married Molly Hardie in 1954 and they had children Derek, Karen and David. They lived in Leishman Place, later moving to Girvan, where he worked as an electrical engineer, and he retired to Jedburgh. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Janet Jackson and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1687, with witnesses Thomas Henderson and George Ormiston. James (16th/17th C.) granted a half husband-land of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. James (17th C.) resident at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (18th C.) married Betty Storie in Minto Parish in 1739. James (18th C.) married Agnes Clerk in Minto Parish in 1755. James (18th C.) gardener at Knowesouth in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Thomas Rutherford. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1797 as tenant in Burnfoot. He married Bessie Helm and their children included Janet (b.1797). James (b.1799/1800) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a carpenter at Borthwickbrae Cottages. His wife was Margaret and their children included Euphemia, David, John, Margaret, William, Mary, George and Helen. He may be the James, son of Peter, baptised in Hobkirk in 1796. Rev. James minister of Teviothead Kirk 1940–63. During his first year he acted as junior minister to James Livingston. James (b.1816) son of Thomas, he was a carrier on the Mid Row. He is recorded there in 1841, with wife Agnes and children David and Jane. In Pigot's 1837 directory he is recorded running a weekly service between Newcastleton and Hawick, leaving from the Mid Row every Tuesday. In 1851 his wife was a widow, living at about 7 Mid Row with her mother and siblings. He married Agnes, daughter of cabinet-maker John Scott. Their children were David (ancestor of the Hawick Balls family), Jane, Jemima and Robert. John (16th/17th C.) listed after several Armstrongs of the house of Whithaugh in a 1601 list of men who were said by the English to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. He thus presumably lived in Liddesdale and was an associate of the Armstrongs. John (17th C.) listed as tenant at Mervinslaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John appointed by the Wilton Session in 1703 to collect the poor money. Robert (18th/19th C.) servant at Ashybank, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Rev. Rowland (1744–1833) English evangelist, who did much to establish Sunday Schools in Scotland, against the will of the established church. He visited Scotland in 1798 and described a Hawick funeral in his diary. Sir Rowland (1795–1879) English educator and postal reformer. He invented a rotary printing press and developed a system of pre-paid penny postage that revolutionised communications, and for which Hawick made him an Honorary Burgess in 1844. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Isobel (b.1708), Elspeth (b.1711), James (b.1713), Thomas (b.1715), Walter (b.1717), Helen (b.1719) and William (b.1721). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included William (b.1751), Helen (b.1754) and James (b.1756). He may be the Thomas who married Margaret Hume in Minto in 1752. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Hassendeanburn. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Probably the same Thomas was a labourer at Hessendean on the 1799 ballot for the Militia and was recorded as servant to Mr. Turnbull at Hassendean on the 1801 ballot. Thomas (b.1774/5) from Langholm, he was a saddler on the High Street. He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater's 1852 directory. His shop was at about No. 28 in 1851. He married Mary Nichol and their children included Robert, James (b.1816) and Annie. Thomas (18th/19th C.) labourer at Hassendean in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenantancy Book in 1799. Thomas (1787–1824) baptised in Ancrum Parish, he was son of David, who was a carrier in Hawick. He was ordained in 1818 as minister of the Burgher congregation in Glenluce. However, there was soon a dispute over his behaviour, ending with him being rebuked by his Presbytery and he demitted in 1820. He then spent some time in Hawick, before appealing to the Burgher Synod in 1822 to be reinstated. This was agreed to about a year later. He then emigrated to Canada, acting as assistant to Rev. Easton in Montreal, where he died suddenly. William (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William who witnessed a Hassendean baptism for Robert Ormiston and Marion Hill (who may have been his daughter). William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1710 he was found guilty of 'egregious ryotts' in St. Mary's Kirk. The witnesses saw him 'stryke twyce Wm. Greenshiels with ane staff and thereafter Wm. Greenshiels stroke at him with his bonnet', this during the reading of the scriptures. He was recorded as 'weaver in Flex' in 1720. He married Janet Sanderson and their children included John (b.1709) and Thomas (b.1720). The witnesses in 1709 were Bailies Walter Graham and George Martin and in 1720 were Town Clerk Walter Gledstains and Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiels. William (18th C.) married Janet Gray in Hawick Parish in 1760. William (18th/19th C.) servant to 'Mrs Drinkwater Minto' according to the Lieutenantancy Book in 1799. He seems likely to have worked at Minto House. William 'Bill' (1941–) born in Hawick, he was educated at Trinity, Burnfoot and the High School. In Hawick he was in the Cycling Club and the Saxhorn Band. Moving to Edinburgh in 1959, he worked in local government and education. He formed a folk trio there with Tom Smith and Jean Brooks, called The Caern, with him on vocals, banjo and guitar. They released 'Introducing The Caern, a Collection of Scotch Folk' in 1969 (which included a version of 'Kinly Stick'), as well as 'Irish Folk Favourites' (1971) and 'Welcome to Ireland' with The Bards (1997). They toured with Jimmy Shand and appeared on television. As a solo artist he recorded ‘Miscellaneous Dross’ (1974) and ‘Bill Hill’s Police Record’ (1978). Several of his songs, such as ‘The Portree Kid’, ‘The Scottish Holiday’ and ‘The Sunday Driver’ were regularly in the repertoire of bands such as the Corries. He presented ‘Folkspun’ on Radio Forth for a couple of years and has been a popular after dinner speaker as well as Edinburgh tour guide.

the Hill (thu-hil) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, seat of a branch of the Elliots. ‘Joanni de lie Hill’ is recorded in 1541, Mark callit of the Hill’ in 1564, and Archie and Jock of the Hill in the 1580s. They were related to the Elliots of Ramsiegill according to the letter of 1583 from the English wardens. Archie Elliot ‘in the Hill’ is recorded in 1586 and Archie Elliot of the Hill and ‘Johne Elliot of the Hill’ in 1611. It is listed among the lands in Liddesdale held by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1632 (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). It is unclear where this place was located, but one possibility is that it is the same as Laws Hill, which was formerly the lands of Laws.

Hill Burn (hil-burn) n. small stream in Minto Parish, rising on the west side of the Minto Hills and running south to join the Grinding Burn. There are remains of rig and furrow lines on both sides of the burn (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hillend (hil-end) n. former name for lands near Commonsides in upper Teviotdale. In 1591 these lands, along with Commonsides, Northcroft and ‘Stoghill’ were already occupied by Gilbert Elliot when leased to him by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch.

Hillend Drive (hil-end-driv) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1953, with gap sites filled in around 1963. It was named after ‘Hillend Plantin’, a popular name for the plantation there. During WWII the area was trenched for army training.

Hillend Parks (hil-end-pawrks) n. former name for lands on Minto estate. They were listed in 1779 and 1811 along with Coach Park, with a value of £72 17s 6d. Several small pieces are also listed as ‘House and Yard at Hill-end’, suggesting that there were cottages there. It was also listed in 1779 as ‘Hill-ends-park’ in a description of the boundaries of Minto Townhead. William Temple was a mason at ‘Hillend’ in Minto Parish in 1799 and was at ‘Wester hillend’ in 1801.

hill-forts (hil-förts) n., pl. archaeological sites generally composed of ramparts and ditches around an enclosure, often with signs of buildings on the insides. Usually they have not been excavated, and so the designation is based on morphology only. They date back to the Iron Age, peaking not long before Roman occupation, although some may have been inhabited as far back as the Bronze Age and some well into the Middle Ages. The smallest probably contained a single dwelling, while the largest housed whole communities, although whether they were used permanently or only during periods of perceived danger is unknown. The bulk of them are near the summits of hills, which peaked up above the forests in the valleys below. There are more than 300 such sites identified in the Scottish Borders and over 100 in Roxburghshire alone, with many more designated as ‘earthworks’, ‘settlements’ or ‘enclosures’. The hills around Hawick, particularly to the south, have many of these fortified settlements. The Slitrig valley alone has had about a dozen identified, the first list of 13 being made by Sir James Murray in 1863.

Hill Heid (hil-heed) n. hill in the region east of where the Teviot and the Allan meet. There are the remains of a fort between here and the old farmstead of Newbigging.

Hillheid (hil-heed) n. Hillhead, farm to the east of Lilliesleaf, between Chapel farm and Craggs farm. John Leithead was a servant there in 1799. John Young was farmer there in 1841 and Robert and John Smail in the 1850s and 60s. A nearby enclosure was excavated in 1998, discovering it to be a complicated multi-epoch settlement, including evidence of habitation in the Iron Age and Roman times.

the Hillheid (thu-hil-heed) n. local name for the area around Denholmhill. In the late 19th century it was said to be still possible to see stones that had been placed there to mark individual Denholm Feuar’s portions of the Common – ‘... and the ridge between Denholm and Ruberslaw known as the Hillhead (where this rock is quarried as road metal)’ [JAHM].

Hillhoose (hil-hoos) n. Hillhouse, farmstead in Liddesdale, to the east of Newcastleton, on the Tweeden Burn. A tower is marked on Blaeu’s

c.1654 map, and it may correspond to the position of 'Louselaw' on Stobie's 1770 map; it is said that the foundations existed in 1795 and the location was pointed out to the Ordnance Survey in 1858. This site (where no solid evidence has been found) is in the forest of Hillhouse Wood near Castle Hill. This may be the main house shown on the farm on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, on Gall Sike to the east of Dykecrofts Cottage on modern maps. In 1718 the farm was combined with Baxtongill, consisting of 383 acres, bounded by Potterlamport, Whithaugh, Nolt-lair and Chingills. The southern boundary was the Tweeden Burn and Whithaugh Burn was to the north. It also shared a common of 37 acres with Potterlamport. William Scott, was described as 'in Hilhous' in 1528 when he was one of the arbitrators for deciding on succession to the Borthaugh lands. Ninian Teviot 'of the Hilhous' was among Liddesdale men accused of stealing horses from near Hexham in 1579. Hector Armstrong 'of the Hilhouse' was accused of rieving in 1587/8. 'Hob of Whithawghe son to John Eamont of Hilhouse' (presumably an Armstrong) is recorded in 1590. This is probably the 'Hilhous' where Thomas Crozier was in 1623. Gavin Elliot of Hillhouse is one of 3 men who were meant to have planned the murder of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in a foiled plot of 1624, part of a feud between the Elliots and the Scotts. Elizabeth Elliott, daughter of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters' married John Turnbull of Minto in 1641, and after her husband died lived at Hillhouse. 'Geordie Rackesse of the Hillhouse' is recorded as a cattle thief in about 1645. William, son of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, was tenant there in the late 18th century. Peter Scott was living there in 1861. It may be the same place that was known as Tweedenbank (formerly 'Hilhouse' and variants such as 'Halhouse' and 'Hilhous'; it is indicated near the head of what looks like the Tweeden Burn on Pont's original 1608 map; it may be that some of the references are to other places with the same name).

Hillhouse (hil-hoos) n. possible name for lands in Rulewater. It may be that this is the same place as the lands in Liddesdale, or that there are 2 different places that are confused. In a pardon of 1516 for a large number of Turnbells for any part in assisting the Homes in plotting against the King, we find 'James Turnbull in Hillhouse' and 'Fergus Turnbull there'. They are listed among the Turnbells of Hallrule, but it is unclear where these lands might have been (see also Hoilhouse).

Hillhouse (hil-hoos) n. Hillhouse, cottage on the former Minto estate, situated to the east of the old churchyard. In 1788 (and repeated in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) 'Hillhouse park' was valued at £32 15s 10d.

Hillhouse Wud (hil-hoos-wud) n. Hillhouse Wood, plantation near the farm of Hillhouse in Liddesdale. It is marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, shown on the north side of the Tweeden Burn, and still shown in essentially the same place on modern maps.

Hillieside (hi-lee-sīd) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as 'Heliesyde'. The lands were valued at 5 merks and were vacant at that time. It is unclear exactly where these lands were.

Hilliesland (hil-eez-lind) n. home of a branch of the Gladstains family in the 17th and 18th centuries. The proprietors were Town Clerks for about 110 years, with only short intervals. It was once a separate hamlet, with several cottages, although there is now no sign of its former population. In 1627 it was described as a land 'paying 12 bolls, estimat to 8 in stok, 2 in teynd' annually. The land corresponds roughly to the area immediately west of Kaimed farm, i.e. the land beyond what would be called the Wellogate. Walter Gladstains of Hilliesland paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d in 1643 and John Gladstains in 1678. Thomas Scott was servant there in 1684. It is shown in a survey of the lands belonging to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, as an enclave within the East Mains of Hawick, covering 37 acres, including the modern Mosshills Loch on the north and extending to the Wellogate Brae on the south. The main house was situated near Hilliesland Moss (or Loch, a marshy area to the north of Ewen's Loch), and the garden wall was still visible in the early 19th century. It is said that until about the mid-18th century the Laird's herd was pastured along with the Hawick Town Herd (presumably because the Laird was a Burgess of Hawick, owning several houses in the Town). George Johnston was tenant there in 1709. Robert Henderson was a cottar there in at least 1721–25. The land was later owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, and up until the early 20th century had fields rented by farmers, known jocularly as 'Hilliesland Lairds', who had their barns and stables in town. In 1788 it was 'Haly's land, or Hill's land' when valued at £66 13s 4d as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. It still had the same value in 1811

– ‘I see again each knowe and knoll, Each memory spot, each gable end, Frae Lynnwood doon tae Horns-Hole – Frae Stirches ower tae Hilliesland’ [HI] (also written ‘Halysland’, ‘Hillhouse-land’, etc., it is ‘Hillisland’ in 1627, ‘Hillieslands’ in 1678, ‘Hill-house-land’ in 1684, ‘hillhousland’ in 1685, and ‘Hilhousland’ in 1708 and 1717; it is probably the ‘Gallaslande’ mentioned by the English in 1548/9).

the Hilliesland Lairds (thu-hil-eez-lind-lārdz) n. former nickname for a group of minor landowners in the area above the Wellogate. This included the Aitkens of the Kirk Wynd, the Kyles, the Purdoms and the Hendersons. Some of the local ‘Laird’ nicknames may have been epithets applied to men who had such lands (see also bonnet-laird).

Hilliesland Loch (hil-eez-lind-loch) n. small body of water out beyond the Wellogate Brae by Kaimend, formerly referring to a lake which is now filled in, which lay on the town side of the Kaimend Hills, north of the smaller Ewen’s Loch. It still has a farm track running along its south side, and a boundary following the contours along its irregular north side. It was used as a skating pond in the latter part of the 19th century, at a nominal rent from the Duke of Buccleuch, and earlier had been used for curling matches (it is clearly marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as ‘Hillsland Loch’).

the Hillock (thu-hil-ok) n. former name for an area on the Wells estate. As factor of the estate, Archibald Jerdan described how timber cut from ‘the Hillock’ was sold. It is unclear exactly where this was.

Hill Park (hil-pawrk) n. name for the field on Hawick Common, between St. Leonard’s and Flex farms, bounded by Golf Course Park and Flex Lodge Park.

Hill Pond (hil-pōnd) n. small pond east of Bedrule, near the northern boundary of Southdean Parish. It drains into Fulton Burn. To its east is a linear earthwork, which could be part of a boundary line linking streams between the Rule and Jed Waters (like another feature crossing the north of Black Law); its age is unknown.

the Hill Road ti Robertson (thu-hil-rōd-ti-ro-bur’in) n. road from Ashkirk over towards Robertson, connecting the Ale valley with the Borthwick valley, made famous in Will Ogilvie’s poem of the same name – ‘The hill road to Robertson, Ale Water at our feet, And grey hills and blue hills that melt away and meet, With cotton-flowers that wave to us and lone whaups that call, And over all the Border mist – the soft mist over all’ [WHO].

Hills (hilz) n. George (d.1931) son of William and Mary Miller. He wrote ‘Amor Patriæ and other verses’, published by W. & J. Kennedy in 1929. William (b.c.1780) shepherd at Hassendeanbank according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. William (19th/20th C.) saddler of 4 Oliver Place. He married Mary, daughter of shoemaker John Miller. Their children were Agnes, Mary and George.

Hillshaugh (hilz-hawch) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, just north of Tythehouse. It was the residence of the Dalkeith family through much of the 18th and all of the 19th centuries. James Scott was there in 1786, mason Alexander Dalglish in 1790 and George Adamson is recorded as tenant there in 1797 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hillside (hil-sīd) n. former name for a private school in the latter part of the 19th century run by Miss A. Scott, possibly the same as Heron Hill.

Hillslap (hil-slawp) n. ‘L-plan’ tower 2 miles west of Melrose, where the Allan Water joins the Tweed, built around 1585, but ruined until restored in the 1980s as a home (during which excavations were also carried out). It has been suggested it was the model for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Glendearg’ (in ‘the Monastery’), to which its name was changed, and has also known been known as ‘Calfhill’. The original Laird was Nichol Cairncross, from a family that also owned land near Belses. It is very close to Colmslie and Langshaw towers.

Hill Terrace (hil-te-ris) n. original name for Wilton Hill Terrace when built in 1879, renamed in 1882.

Hillum (hi-lum) n. William (13th/14th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale, known as ‘de Hillum’. He was appointed by Edward II in 1312 and nothing else is known about him.

the Hill Walkin’ Club (thu-hil-waw-kin-klub) n. the Scottish Borders Hill Walking Club was formed in the mid-1970s, and organises regular walks and social events.

Hilly Linn (hi-lee-lin) n. waterfall in Southdean Parish, on the Shaw Burn, which flows into the Jed Water. Near the falls are the remains of a small tower (11.5 m × 7 m) and 3 farmsteads, probably the settlement of Blackchester; some of the turf remains appear to predate the tower. There are also other archæological remains in the surrounding area, which was clearly once more populous than today, with Northbank Tower to the south, a tower and possible chapel at Lethem, etc.

Hilson (hil-sin) n. Adam (b.c.1770s) wright in Hassendean according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He was an apprentice to James Trotter. It is possible that the name written was 'Kelson', which may mean he was the same man as wright Adam Kersel, who was a wright at Horsleyhill on the 1797 and 1799 Militia ballots. Gavin (1788–1847) son of William and Miss Anderson of Teviotbank. He was born in St. Boswells Parish, attended Edinburgh University and became a surgeon in Jedburgh. He was Assistant-Surgeon with the 4th Dragoons, serving in the Peninsular War and tending to the wounded at Waterloo. In 1825 he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He married Elizabeth Pringle, eldest daughter of Peter Brown of Rawflatt. Only 2 of his 5 sons survived past childhood, one being Archibald Hamilton, who served in the Army Medical Department in India. He died suddenly after performing an operation on a farmer at Upper Tofts. He was presumably from the family of woollen manufacturers in Jedburgh. James (18th/19th C.) joiner at Knowetownhead, listed on the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. Perhaps the same James was a journeyman wright in Lilliesleaf in 1799. James Lindsay (1855–1928) Jedburgh local historian who wrote many articles about Border history in the early part of the 20th century. John (19th C.) native of the Hawick area. He emigrated to the U.S.A. in the 1850s and settled in Bovina, New York. He could be the John, originally from Ayton, recorded as a journeyman plasterer in Hawick in 1851 (note the possibility of this being an error for 'Wilson' in some records).

the Hilton (thu-hil'-in) n. former name for lands in 'Wester Hassingden' (i.e. Hassendean), as transcribed from a document of 1588, where Robert Douglas of Nether Hassendean and 'Robert Scot there' were ordered to turn over to the Lords of Council and Session all documents related to this place. The location of these lands is unknown.

Hiltson (hilt-sin) n. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Braxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as 'Hiltson', although it is unclear if it corresponds to a different modern name. Thomas is listed right after him and so surely related. Thomas (15th/16th C.) one of the men given remission in 1526 for their part in attacking the Earl of Arran. He must be related to Robert.

himsel (him-sel) pron. himself – 'Lor', luck! wha's that sittin' by himsel', All heedless o' the bizz and fyke aroon' him' [JoHa], 'Then Heather he did quaff the half-gill to himsel' ...' [WE], 'Nor wot I, if to hear me mourn, Sir Walter e'en wad hae himsel' Forborne to blaw his forest-horn, And wag his hazel cudgel well' [AD], 'He saufet ithers; himsel he canna saufe.' [HSR], 'Syne aff frae his shouther'll tummle his pack, As he gets himsel' settin doon' [WL] (also 'imsel and umsel).

hind (hīnd) n., arch. a farm worker, peasant, skilled labourer on a farm, particularly a man in charge of ploughing, usually married and supplied with a cottage. In 1836 in Hobkirk Parish it is stated that a hind was paid through 'A free house worth probably £2; 10 bolls oats; 2 do. barley; 1 do. of pease; 4 carts of coals; 1000 yards of potatoes, a capful of lint-seed or a bushel of barley sown, the master ploughing and manuring the ground'. The details may have varied between parishes and among farmers, but this was probably a fairly typical arrangement for the time – 'Now married men forget their wives, An' hinds forget their horses' [JoHa], 'Past spinster, spouse, and relict, Past flesher, wabster, hind ...' [DH], v. to work as a hind (also formerly 'hynd'; from Old English).

hindberry (hīnd-be-ree) n., poet. the wild raspberry, Rubus idæus – 'An' bauld wi' hindberries frae the syke, I lap an' ran a turn Alang the divots on the dyke, Doon to the Tweeden burn' [ECB].

hindin (hīnd-in) n., arch. the act of being a hind – 'Jock's hindin'' [GW], 'He's at the hindin'' [GW].

Hindemers (hīn-de-murz) n. James (16th C.) listed as a servant to Clement Crozier on a document giving the names of local Olivers, Nixons, Croziers and Halls who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. It is unclear whether his surname may be mis-transcribed.

hinder (hin-dur) adj. behind, further to the rear – '... A fox that sits upon its hinder quarters' [JT], 'God gar us look to the hinder end O' oor earthly day or the sun descend' [WL] (also the less common hinner).

hingins (hing-inz) n., pl. hangings. Hawick’s last public execution was a hanging in the Common Haugh in 1814, John Gibson had murdered his wife in Mill Port. The trial was in Jedburgh, and in the jail there the convicted man wrote a pamphlet about the evils of drink. Executions typically took place close to the scene of the crime, the site chosen in 1814 being near the old tollhouse at the Haugh. The prisoner was brought from Jedburgh, stopped at the Town Hall to meet with the local clergy and was escorted by a troop of the yeomanry cavalry. A large crowd gathered at the Haugh, which joined in a hymn and prayer. The prisoner addressed the crowd, warning them of excessive drink, and was then hung on a gibbet. It is likely that many more hangings took place in Jedburgh, the county town than in Hawick. A hangman is recorded in Selkirk in 1743. It is unclear if someone in Hawick held such a position.

hirdit (hir-dde’, -di’) pp. herded – ‘Dirlin daized casements, still, wi the roll O’ Dunnottar’s hirdit deid ...’ [DH] (also herdit).

hirds (hirdz) n., pl. shepherds, herdsman. It is estimated that at one point perhaps as much as a quarter of the able-bodied men in the Borders worked as shepherds. This fraction decreased dramatically when fences and dykes were built at the end of the 17th century. Before the 20th century the occupation was usually hereditary, and shepherd’s families were often better educated than those of most farm servants; Tancred suggests this is because they were descended from younger sons of Lairds. The size of a flock in the Border hills was typically around 40, with free cottage and peats as well as a quantity of grains given in exchange for the labour. Until the mid-19th century the blue bonnet and plaid were widely worn.

hire (hīr) v., arch. to season food with richer ingredients, add butter, cream or other rich ingredients – ‘Thae scones ir weel heirt; A pat a guid fairkeesheen o butter inti thum’ [ECS] (also written ‘heir’ and variants).

hirin fair (hī-rin-fār) n. a fair or market held for the purpose of engaging farm servants and labourers, but also as a focus for general entertainments. These were traditionally around the Whitsunday and Martinmas ‘term days’, corresponding to the May and November Hiring Fairs in Hawick. The practice was formally abolished in Scotland in 1939 – ‘Reels and schottisches till the reid sun’s sinkin’, Syne in the cool nicht air, Lads and lasses in their pairs gang linkin’ Hame frae the Hiring Fair’ [WL].

hirple (hir-pul) v. to hobble, limp – ‘there hei is hirpling along the Street as usual’, ‘...puss had ‘hirpled thrice withershins’ round house, and then suddenly made a spring to the riggin ...’ [EM1820], ‘This self-same chuckie had been nought uncommon, But joost a hirplin, hod-dlin, hamely woman’ [JoHa], ‘When hoary Eild comes hirplin’ roon’, And death’s cold wintry breezes blaw ...’ [JoHa], ‘I mind ye were bare-foot and hirpled ahint – As alang the hard road ye were hilching ...’ [JTe], ‘A was nae hippeet heipalt, hirplin on ...’ [ECS], ‘...For hers was a spirit proud and high, And free as the Rule that hirpled by’ [WHO], ‘When wabbit, He revives my spunk, And helps the hirplin lame’ [WL], ‘He hirpled slowly to his rest, Nae luck when he was born’ [WFC], ‘...The wanin’ mune Came hirplin’ through the cloudy frieze High, high abune’ [WP].

hirsle (hir-sul) n. a flock (particularly of sheep) – ‘...depones he gave way to the hirsle under the charge of their Herd because it was a weighty hirsle or a meikle hirsle, and he (the Deponent) had no will to mairg or mix his charge with the Hawick hirsle’ [C&L1767], ‘...Oor hirsels gane, past a’ repairin’, Lambs lie thick as new netted herrin’ [JoHa], ‘But now a saut tear dims ilk look I let fa’ On the hill an’ the hirsle, sin Willie’s awa’ [JoHa], ‘Acquant me ...wi’ whare thou mak’st thy hirsle til rest at nuun’ [HSR], ‘Like ane hirsle o’ sheepe ye led the peepie ...’ [HSR], ‘...and this system of management went on under the sagacious and pawkie herd until the minister’s wife had a scattered hirsle of sixteen ewes’ [WNK], ‘Childhood revels on the levels Where my hirsels graze’ [WL], land allotted to a shepherd, area of pasture under control of one shepherd – ‘The bleat o’ sheep on hirsels green ...’ [WL], v., arch. to arrange in a flock – ‘Store-farming has been improved. Summer hirsling is given up, and ewe-milking done away’ [RJS].

the Hirsle (thū-hir-sul) n. country residence of Lord Home, near Coldstream, dating from the 17th century, but with many alterations. The grounds are open to the public, and contain the lake (constructed in 1786), as well as an extensive collection of well-preserved estate buildings, lodges, gates, bridges and follies (including a dove-cote). Just to the north-west is the best-preserved motte hill in Berwickshire – ‘... Shall ever homage with thee lay, – The Hirsle yet for me! Elysian spot! while lasts a string, My lyre I’ll tune to thee’ [AS] (also spelled ‘Hirsell’).

hirst (hirst) n., arch. a hillock, unproductive piece of ground (the word survives in place names, e.g. Hasliehirst and Rouchhirst).

his (hiz) possessive, arch. formerly used in place of the possessive, in a peculiar sentence structure – ‘... William Douglas was onlawed and ammercate for ane exhorbitant mariage wt. Thomas Lune his daughter ...’ [BR1689], ‘... while the sd. baylyea was sittand in William Elliot his houss ...’ [1693] (see also eis, heis, hes).

Hislop (hiz-, hāz-lop) n. farm at the end of where the Falnash road branches off at Teviot-head. It was formerly also called ‘Hazelhope’ and is on the Hazelhope Burn and at the foot of Hazelhope Hill. In the earliest documents it is recorded separately as Easter and Wester Hislop, e.g. in a list of the lands that the Baron of Hawick held ‘in tenandry’ in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615. Matthew Graham is recorded there in 1502. James Nichol was there in 1618. In 1624 the lands were purchased from the Earl of Douglas by Robert Elliot of Falnash. In a 1627 Hawick Parish valuation it is stated to have ‘no corn growing thereon; estimat in stok to 100 lb., in teynd to 16’. In 1647 Archibald Elliot of Falnash was served heir to his father's 10 merk land there. The lands were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh from 1674. The Easter and Wester farms were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. William Hislop was there in 1698. By 1707 it was valued along with Ramsaycleuch at £549 4s. Michael Anderson of Tushielaw owned 'the lands of Hislops, Easter and Wester' in the early 18th century, passing them in 1714 to his son, also Michael. Archibald Scott was tenant in at least 1709–11. By 1788 it was owned by Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw. The herds recorded there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls were John Scott and John (or perhaps James) Govenlock. Adam Govenlock was there in 1799. In 1811 the lands were valued along with Ramsaycleuchburn at £549 4s, when owned by the Andersons of Tushielaw. B.T.G. Anderson was recorded as owner in about 1874. A coin from the reign of Alexander III was unearthed from there in the 19th century, along with several others said (in 1839) to have been found there, with a couple in the possession of John Grieve of Branhholme Braes. It is possible that the place gave rise to the surname, but this is unknown – 'The lasses o' Lin'op are braw, An' them o' Moss-paul they are bonnie; There's Haz'lop an' Fa'nash an' a', Aul' Commonsides yields na to mony' [JoHa] (the name first appeared in 1502 as 'hesliop', is 'Heslyhope' and 'Heslihop' in 1511, 'Hislehoip' in 1547, 'Heslyhope' in 1572, 'Hessilhoip' in 1594, 'Heissilhoip' in 1615, 'Heislop' in 1618, 'Heislope' in 1627 and 1674, 'Hissilhoipes' in 1647, 'Heislopes' in 1695 and 'Hieslop' in 1761; the origin is Old English 'haesel hop', meaning 'the valley of the hazels').

Hislop (hiz-lup, hiz-lop) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1581/2 as former occupier of lands in Ashkirk that James, son of John Scott in Kirkhouses leased from Walter Scott in Ashkirk. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Elliot and their children included Margaret (b.1649), Jean (b.1650) and Thomas (b.1652). Perhaps the same Adam witnessed a baptism in Hawick for George Nichol and Helen Hislop. Adam (17th C.) resident at Newton (near Stobs) in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed right after John, and hence presumably related. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1690 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott and Jean Hislop (perhaps his daughter or sister). Alexander (17th/18th C.) tailor and Burgess in Hawick. In 1684 he had a charter of disposition for a piece of land in the East Mains of Hawick, which he gained from Patrick Cunningham. He disposed this to his wife Bessie Ruecastle in 1688. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was probably a member of the Hawick Council and in 1701 was one of those appointed to collect the 'stent' money 'east the water'. He is probably the Alexander who witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom in 1676 and another for John Aitkin in 1699. He is recorded as a tailor when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Henderson in Hawick in 1701 and another for James Laidlaw (in Branhholme Town) in 1702. In 1711 he (along with fellow tailor William Gledstains) witnessed a baptism for carrier William Rae. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Robert (b.1670); and Bessie (b.1672). He may be the Alexander who in 1676, along with Adam Young, was found guilty of using a 'half-pecke ane inch short or thereby'. Alexander (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick, probably son of the earlier Alexander. He married Alison McLellan and their children included: Marion (b.1694); Janet (b.1696); Margaret (b.1697); Alison (b.1700); Marion (again, b.1703); John (b.1705); and James (b.1707). The witnesses in 1696 were Walter Oliver and Walter Howison and in 1700 were Patrick McLellan, merchant Walter Oliver and Henry Orrock, and in 1705 were Burgh Officer Alexander Scott and tailor James Turnbull. Alexander (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1709 he married Christian Wright, who was 'in whitla'. Their son John was baptised in Hawick in 1710, with witnesses Bailie Walter Elliot and Henry Orrock. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Howcleuch in 1710. His children included: John (b.1702); Margaret (b.1703); Helen (b.1705); and Margaret (again, b.1710). Alexander (19th C.) married Helen Richardson in Wilton in 1852. Andrew (16th/17th C.) resident of Binks in 1618. Walter Scott of Buccleuch complained that he had cut down 120 alder trees from his lands of Gorrenberry, with other men from upper Teviotdale also being accused of stealing timber. Not appearing before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. Andrew (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Headshaw. He married Isobel Brown and their son John was baptised in Ashkirk in 1703. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Chisholme. His daughter Isabel was baptised in Roberton parish in 1703. He could be the Andrew whose daughter Jean married William Scott in Selkirk in 1726. Andrew (18th C.) married Isobel Baptie in Roberton in 1726. Andrew

(b.c.1780) stocking-maker in Hawick, recorded on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Andrew (19th C.) married Joan Jackson in Hawick in 1847. Andrew (19th C.) married Margaret Oliver in Hawick in 1850. Andrew James (19th/20th C.) lived at 60 High Street. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1501/2 as 'Archibald Heslihop, vtherwais callit Schir Suythe' when he had remission for resetting some Rutherfords, who were rebels at the time. It is unclear where he was from. A.J. (19th/20th C.) Bailie who was involved with setting up the P.S.A. rugby team. Christian (17th C.) cottar in Midlem. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. Christopher (b.c.1795) farmer at Teviothaugh in 1841. His wife was Ann and their children included Peter, George and Christopher. Rev. David (c.1833–1904) born in Leadhills, he graduated B.A. from Glasgow University in 1858, then attended the Glasgow Evangelical Union Hall, becoming Evangelical Union minister at Montrose and then Leith. He served as minister at the Evangelical Union Church (later the Congregational Church) in Hawick in the late 19th century. He was the first officially E.U. minister to preach there, visiting for about 5 Sundays in 1858, and turning down a 'call' to Hawick the following year. In 1862 he became minister in Leith, and accepted a new call from Hawick in 1864, following Robert Mitchell's sudden departure. His 'Sermon on the Death of Richard Purdom' was published in 1890. He remained until 1902, increasing the membership to 400. Since some of the congregation came from far afield, he would travel out to Bedrule, Ettrick, etc. in a gig. In his day Sundays consisted of a Morning Fellowship, followed by 2 sermons, the Sabbath School in the afternoon and an evening bible class. He was seriously ill for the first half of 1880, but recovered. He was friendly with Rev. Dr. Macrae and other Established Kirk ministers, unlike some of his E.U. predecessors. He became ill again in 1902, and a trip to the Canary Islands being of little help, he resigned that year and was made Honorary Pastor. Following his death 2 years later, a memorial plaque was placed on the east side of the former apse of the church. His brother Robert, minister in Glasgow, married Susan, daughter of Walter Wilson of Orchard. He appears to have married Jane Borthwick Holdway and their children included: Isabell C. (b.c.1864); Christina Grace (b.1871), born in Hawick; and David (b.1873), born in Hawick. Elizabeth 'Bessie' nee Ruecastle (17th C.) wife of tailor Alexander. In 1688 her husband transferred a croft of land in East Mains to her. She could be the Elizabeth who was born to Robert Ruecastle and Janet Scott in Hawick in 1650. Emma nee Elliot (d.1866) daughter of Hugh Elliot, her uncle was the 1st Earl of Minto. She is recorded as 'Mrs. Hislop, Minto-House in 1825 when she subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. She married Sir Thomas, Baronet Hislop. Her daughter Emma Eleanor Elizabeth (b.1824) married William Hugh Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 3rd Earl of Minto (with the couple being first cousins). George (16th C.) farmer at Town-o-Rule. His dwelling house and yard are listed in the Baronial dispute over Feu-Rule in 1562. George (16th C.) listed at Swinside among men accused of raiding a farm in England in 1587. 'Dande Heslopp' was also listed. He was also accused of raiding another farm in 1588. George (18th/19th C.) servant at Newton in Bedrule Parish. He is listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797, with the annotation saying 'Serving' and his name appearing again in 1798. George (b.1801/2) carter at Hassendeanburn in 1861. He married Margaret Notman in Minto in 1842 and their children included Jane and Elizabeth. Helen (17th/18th C.) recorded at Mervisnawl in the Wilton session book for 1707. She confessed to being 'with Child', the father being an Oliver, servant to the Laird of Langlands, who had fled the area. James (17th C.) resident of Colterscleuch on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident at Lairhope in 1698 when his son William was baptised. The witnesses were William (whose own child had been baptised the day before) and James Laidlaw. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as journeyman mason at 'Lilliesleaf loanside' in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. James (b.c.1780) wright at Saughtree according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. James (b.c.1795) from England, he worked as a 'Lime quarry man' at Larriston Rigg. In 1841 he was living there with his wife Mary and children John, James and Annie. James (b.1831/2) baker on the High Street. He was tried in 1857 for the murder of his wife Isabella on the High Street. James 'the Gallopin Chairger' (d.1902) cadger (i.e. carrier) who moved to Hawick and lived beside the 'Cadger's Well' for about 40 years. He regularly carried his goods to Riccarton. His nickname came from the snail-like pace of his working horse. Janet (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. John 'Jock' (16th C.) recorded in 1562 when he leased an acre of land in Lilliesleaf from William Middlemas. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married 'Malli Hesti' (presumably Hastie) in 1654 and their daughter Janet was baptised in the same year. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Turnbull and their son Robert was baptised in 1656. The witnesses were George Turnbull (probably related to his wife) and John Scott. Perhaps the same John married Isobel Veitch and also had a daughter Agnes baptised in 1661, with witnesses Walter Coltart and Thomas (who was probably related to his wife). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen 'Lazon' and their son Robert was baptised in 1681. John (17th C.) resident at Newton (near Stobs) in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably related to the Adam who was also listed there. John (17th C.) resident at Chapelhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Redford in Bedrule Parish in 1702. John (18th C.) married Jean Rutherford in Minto Parish in 1734. John (18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Minto Parish in 1740. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son John was baptised in 1741. John (18th C.) shepherd at Gorrenberry in about 1750. He must have been related to Walter and Jean, who were hired about the same time, and also Jean. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1767, Deanburnhaugh in 1769 and 1772 and Woodburn in 1774. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Margaret (b.1767), Agnes (b.1769), John (b.1772) and William (b.1774). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the resident of Lilliesleaf who married Margaret Turnbull. In 1790 his wife and daughter 'Edgar' were involved in a dispute with James Anderson, younger weaver in Lilliesleaf. John (18th C.) married Jane Anderson in 1788. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. John (1770–1842) hosiery manufacturer and draper on the High Street. He is probably the merchant of Hawick recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. He is recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and John & Co. is listed in the 1837 and 1852 directories. He is probably the John from Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was listed among a group of 10 men who
