Dimpleknowe (dim-pul-now) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish, on the south side of the Ale Water, north of Satchells and east of Synton Mill. It is also spelled ‘Dimpleknow’. James Jackson was cottar there in 1698. Thomas Hunter was tenant there in 1709. John Simson was farmer there in at least the period 1787–97, with 4 work horses. Thomas Gray was a servant there in 1799 and Gilbert Hall in at least 1799–1801. Robert and Peter Dickson were tenants there in 1818. James King and W. Douglas were farmers in the 1860s (also written ‘Dimpleknow’, ‘Dimple know’ and ‘Dimple knowe’).

the Dimples (thu-dim-pulz) n. name for an area to the east of Burnflat, on the boundary of the Common, above Lynnwood Scar. It is marked on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common, lying in a clearing between the plantation at the top of the golf course and the Whitlaw Wood. In about 1784 a suicide, John Webster, was buried there, where 3 lairds’ lands meet (the name occurs in a description of the Common in 1767; it is unclear if it relates to the Scots for ‘dibble’, i.e. a tool for making holes for planting seeds or to the English word ‘dimple’ or something else entirely).

din (din) pp. done – ‘er ee no din in there yit?’, ‘A’m ower an din wi’d’, ‘...An’ syne to think we might hae dune some better’ [JoHa], ‘... When the daily toil was dune’ [JT], ‘Aw’m dune wi’ the stuff forever ...’ [RM], ‘... And chowed your programme to bits instead, Till the Final was a’ but dune’ [DH], did, was employed – ‘she din canteen work for a few year’ [IWL], ‘... what a joab hei duin, his self confessed swan song for the love o’ Hawick n’ its folk’ [IHS], arch. made – ‘Hei’s duine eis-sel ill’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘duin’ and ‘dune’).

din (din) adj., poet. dun, of a dingy colour – ‘...Till Providence cam clatterin wi a pail, And then streekit them safe i their din hoose’ [DH], ‘... but they’re din, boogly enchantments ...’ [DH].

Din Fell (din-fel) n. hill on the south side of the Hermitage Water, between Dinley and Twislehope. It reaches a height of 529 m and has a triangulation pillar.

Din Hill (din-hil) n. small hill to the east of Mossaul, lying between Bye Hill and Watch Knowe.

ding (ding) v., arch. to strike heavily, knock down, beat, drive – ‘...but whenever I’m to be at the same ‘ocassion’ with ony o’ them, I e’en mount the white horse in the Revelations, and he dings them a’ [RWC], ‘For ilka wau’f o’ wund that blaws dings dauds o’t on the lea ...’ [JoHa], ‘...Now ye your barrels into flenders May ding wi’ speed’ [JoHa], ‘...an’, therefore, the object that’s i’ the sight dings out the object that’s i’ the memory’ [JTe], ‘Ræise up, O Lord; disappoynt him, ding him down ...’ [HSR], ‘The Lord lifts up the meik: he dings the wicket down til the grund’ [HSR], ‘But the Deil is in’t when the jaud’s a hizzie Wad thirl your thouchts and ding them dizzy’ [WL], to defeat, wear out, get the better off – ‘It yaised tae be dinged intae oo at the Sunday schule a aboot turnin’ the other cheek’ [BW1961] (the past tense is dang and past participle dung).

dinger (ding-ur) n. a vigorous course of action, to ‘go one’s dinger’ or ‘go a dinger’ is to do something enthusiastically, boisterously or vigorously, to go the whole hog or to lose one’s temper – ‘ee went a bonnie dinger’, ‘Oo must hev been gaun a dinger Baith at the Haugh and the Muir’ [RM], ‘When oo picked oot oor sides Oo wad gang a real dinger’ [??], ‘Dice men an rogues o’ every description hed went a dinger an hed reapeet a bountifeh hervest’ [BW1974].

Dingleton (ding-ul’-in, ding-gul’-in) n. psychiatric hospital on Bowden Moor just outside Melrose, built as an insane asylum in 1870–72. The land was north of the original boundary of the Abbotsford estate, and previously undeveloped. It was originally constructed to house about 150 patients from the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick. For a long time it was the local mental health facility, closing in 2000 when its services were dispersed through several Border towns. In its early days it was referred to as ‘Bowden Moor’ or even just ‘Bowden’. Always spoken of locally in slightly hushed tones, the hospital was internationally known for some of its innovations, including the Therapeutic Community (i.e. the open-doors policy and involvement of the surrounding community). The name applied to a former estate there, which was burned by Hertford's army in 1545 (formerly spelled 'Danyelton' etc.; the name first appears as 'Danielstoun' in the late 13th century, and may derive from Daniel who was recorded as a prior of Melrose in 1139).

ding-on (ding-ōn) n., poet. a torrent, downpour – 'Last nicht a guid ding-on o' rain, Wi' deid leaves sotterin' under fit ...' [WFC].

dink (dingk) v., arch. to dress smartly, deck out – '...Ruberslaw's mighty noal, wui plewed rigs an planteens – reed-land an greenery – dinkin its merly-merkeet braes' [ECS].

dinkit (ding-ki', -kee') adj., pp., poet. dressed up, adorned, spruced – 'My humour's coarse; I ken its naething dinkit' [JoHa], 'The dinkit touns dandies around me cam' bizzin ...' [JT].

dinkly (dingk-lee) adj., arch. sprucely, smartly – 'Dinkly dress't up for the Common Ridin' [GW].

Dinlabyre (din-lee-bīr) n. farm in the Liddel valley, north of Castleton, once a seat of the Elliots. William Nixon was there in 1544. Edward Nixon was Laird there in 1579/80 and in 1584, when he signed a bond of assurance for the behaviour of all of his branch of Nixons. Another Edward Nixon was there in 1638. 'William Ellwald of Duneleabyre' was among Scotsmen delivered to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. There were Elliots of Dinlabyre in the 17th century, with William Elliot recorded in the 1643 valuation when it was valued at £400 and also in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls. William of Dinlabyre, who died in 1693, probably rebuilt the main house and then extended it, these being marked by the lintels there with the dates 1668 and 1682, along with the initials of William Elliot. The Hearth Tax was paid for 3 hearths at 'Dinlibrs house' in 1694. It was purchased by John Oliver in about 1698. The present farmhouse was modernised in the late 19th century, but probably incorporating parts of the former structure. It is also said that there was an ancient chapel on the site. John Oliver paid tax on 23 windows for the house there in 1748. The nearby Dinlabyre Aisle, built in 1749, is a Georgian burial enclosure for the Oliviers of Dinlabyre and Liddelbank. Gilbert Jardine was there in 1786, James Telfer was shepherd in 1797 and Thomas and James Common were there in 1801. The farm was valued at £400 in 1788 and 1811. James Moor was shepherd there in 1841. Andrew Kyle farmed there in 1851.

Robert Douglas was farmer there in the mid-19th century, and was the oldest member of the Associate Kirk in Newcastleton in 1879. William Jackson was also there in 1868 (the name first appears as 'Donlebyer' in 1544, is 'Dunleybire' in 1584/5, 'Dunlybyir' in 1579/80, 'Duneleabyre' in 1597, 'Dunliebyre' and 'Dinlybire' in 1599, 'Dunlabyre' in 1612, 'Dunlibyre' in 1623, 'Dinleybyre' in 1676, 'Dunlabyre' in 1691, 'Dunliebire' in 1761 and has its modern spelling in 1797; it is on de Wit's c. 1680 map of Scotland as 'Dunleyoyre', is 'Denlybyre' on a Buccleuch survey of 1718 and is on Stobie's 1770 map; its origin is probably Old English 'dun leah byre', meaning 'cowshed at the clearing by the hill').

Dinlabyre Aisle (din-lee-bīr-I-ul) n. mausoleum on the Dinlabyre farm in Liddesdale, built in 1749 for the Oliviers of Dinlabyre and Liddelbank. It is shown clearly on the 1857 Ordnance Survey map.

Dinlabyre Burn (din-lee-bīr-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Hurklewinter Knowe and flows roughly westwards to join the Liddel near the farm of Dinlabyre. Side streams include Hog Sike and Boghall Burn. It contains some waterfalls.

Dinlabyre Chaipel (din-lee-bīr-chā-pul) n. reputed chapel near Dinlabyre farm in Liddesdale. A turf-covered structure, about 35 ft by 20 ft was described in the 1958 Transactions as being consistent with a chapel, but the evidence was far from conclusive. It is also said that gravestones were visible in the adjoining churchyard into the 19th century. The area is located near the Chapel Well, which is also circumstantial evidence. However, it is now buried in an area of forestation. It is also sometimes called 'Killoley Chapel', after a farm of that name mentioned in the 13th to 16th centuries; however, that name is probably associated with Kelly Cleuch about 1 km to the north.

Dinlabyre Mill (din-lee-bīr-mil) n. former corn mill on the farm of Dinlabyre. It was labelled on Stobie's 1770 map, a little up the Boghall Burn from the main farm.

Dinlayback Yetts (din-lā-bawk-yets) n. former name for an area on the road to Orchard farm. It is unknown precisely where this was located (mentioned in 1863 by Sir James Murray).

Dinlees (dn-leez) n. older form of 'Dinley', a farm on the Hermitage Water, just to the west of the Castle, with Dinley Burn, Fell and Moss nearby. It is probably the 'Dunle...' which appears on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. On the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is valued at 5 merks and the tenant was Archibald Elliot. Adam Elliot, son of Davie 'of Dunlies' is recorded in 1590. George Scott possessed the lands in 1632, but it may also be the 'Dynla' listed among the possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in the same document. Archibald Henderson was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it was combined with Gingenwalls, consisting of 1067 acres and bounded by Grey-stonehaugh, the Lord of Hoscote's lands, Twislehope, Rispylaw and Gorrenberry. The house in 1718 was in the same place as today's farmhouse. It was once split into the separate 'Over Dinley' and 'Nether Dinley'. William Elliot was farmer there in 1785–97 and William Thomson was servant there in 1801. Robert Dickson was farmer in 1861 – 'But he's tane aff his gude steel cap, And thrice he's wav'd it in the air – The Dinlay snaw was ne'er mair white, Nor the lyart locks of Harden's hair' [SWS] (also referred to as 'the Dinlees'; the name probably derives from the Old English 'dun leah', meaning 'clearing by the hill'; it first appears in 1508 as 'Dunley', is 'Dunle' in 1510, 'Denly' in 1516, 'Dunlie' in 1541, 'Dunlie' in 1656, 'Dinlay' in 1632, 'Dunly' in 1694, 'Dinlaw' in 1786 and 'Dinly' in 1797; the house is marked as 'Dunlyhil' on Gordon's c. 1650 map, both 'N. Dunlay' and 'Dunlyhill' appear on Blaeu's 1654 map, it is 'Denley' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, 'Dunlay' on Moll's 1745 map and 'Dunlee' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Dinley (din-lee) n. modern form of Dinlees on Hermitage Water.

Dinley Burn (din-lee-burn) n. stream in the Hermitage valley, which rises around Hartsgarth Fell and flows roughly north-east to join the Hermitage Water near the farm of Dinlees. There are waterfalls in its headwaters, called Dinley Linns and its smaller tributaries include Hare Grain, Scarry Cleuch and Long Grain. Note that Dinley Sike is a smaller separate stream to the east, while a little further down the Hermitage Water is Dinley Cleuch – 'And a merk, heich abune Hermitage, For the Dinlay Spoot' [DH].

Dinley Cleuch (din-lee-klooch) n. stream on the southern side of the Hermitage valley, just to the east of Dinlees. There is an old sheepfold shown on the Ordnance Survey maps.

Dinley Fell (din-lee-fel) n. high ground to the south of Dinlees farm, reaching a height of 399 m. It is essentially a shoulder on the higher hills to the south-west, including Hartsgarth Fell and Roan Fell.

Dinleyhaughfit (din-lee-hawf-fi) n. Dinleyhaughfoot, former name for an area on the Hermitage Water to the east of Dinlees farm, once having a farmstead of the same name. There is a footbridge over the river there. Labourer John Scott was there in 1835 and farm worker Walter Elliot and his family were there in 1851 ('Dinleahaugh' in 1851).

Dinley Moss (din-lee-mos) n. high, marshy ground to the south of Dinley Fell, in the headwaters of Hartsgarth Burn in Liddesdale.

Dinley Sike (din-lee-sik) n. small stream south of the farm of Dinlees, which flows into the Hermitage Water. Note that it is separate from Dinley Burn to the west and Dinley Cleuch to the east.

dinmont (din-mon) n., arch. a castrated male sheep after its first shearing – '... wedderis, gymmir et Dymont octingenta' [SB1492], 'Item, tuintie scoir tua dynmonthis and tupes, price of the scoir ourheid, xiiij £' [SB1574], '... mylk yhawis with their lambs, 21d.; dynmonthis and tupes, 14d.' [JW], 'A lamb is smeared at the end of Harvest when it is denominated a hog; hence the phrase harvest-hog. After being smeared the second time, a ewe-hog is denominated a gimmer, and a wedder-hog a dymond' [JL] (also 'dymond' and variants).

Dinmontlair Knowe (din-mon'-lār-now) n. hill in southern Castleton, between Old Castleton and the Border, to the south-west of Wilson's Pike. It reaches a height of 395 m and the region immediately to the north-east is called Dinmont Lair.

the Dippin o the Flag (thu-di-pin-ō-thu-flawg) n. ceremony on the Friday afternoon of the Common Riding, following the races at the Moor. After the mounted procession has ridden by Crumhaughhill Road, via Cheviot Road and Bright Street to Myreslawgreen, the Principals proceed to the Coble Pool, via Beaconsfield Terrace, St. George's Lane and the path along behind the High School. There they mark the old Burgh boundary with Wilton according to an ancient custom. The main 3 riders enter the water, while the Acting Father watches from the bank as the Cornet plunges the staff of the Flag into the Teviot 3 times. The Lassies and other townsfolk gather on the opposite bank to watch. After the Dipping, the principles return up Beaconsfield Terrace to rejoin the cavalcade. The earliest descriptions suggest that the boundary at the Coble was once marked by throwing stones and divots into the river there. The ceremony was first filmed in 1927, with other clips in 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934 and 1937 – 'Then ride the mairches; cut the sod, An' dip the flag in Teviot water' [IJ].

dispone (dis-pōn) v. to convey land or something else – ‘...and be the tennour heirof gevis, grantis and disponis to my cousing, Robert Scott, oy and air of vmquhill Robert Scott of Allanehauch ...’ [SB1569], ‘...his foirfaultrie being disponit to the Erle of Buccleughe, his Lordship sufferit the said Robert Elliot peacibillie to posses the saidis landis ...’ [SB1624], ‘...James Pursell, the Deponent’s uncle, disponded a house in Hawick to James Richardson, the Deponent’s son ...’ [C&L1767] (Scottish legal term).

the Disputit Common Ridin (thū-dis-pew’-ee’-ko-min-rī-din) n. the Common Riding of 1809, in which there was a serious dispute over the Council’s attempts to regulate the invitation of Common Riding supporters to the official events. An alternative Cornet, John Tully, was set up by the ‘Wesla Lads’, in opposition to the Council’s choice of James Kyle. Two brothers called Gillies were brought in from Selkirk to be drummer and fifer. The ‘rebel’ flag is preserved in the Museum.

disregaird (dis-ree-gārd) n., v. disregard – ‘For doon i the dungeons Gleg Reid-cap still lurks, In plain disregaird For the Office o Works!’ [DH].

the Disruption (thū-dis-rup-shin) n. historic event of 1843 in Scottish church history in which 474 ministers signed the Deed of Demission, forming the Protestant Church of Scotland, which became the Free Church. The dispute centred on a number of factors, including the appointment of ministers without consultation with the congregation. This split was partially healed when the United Presbyterian Churches united with the Free Churches in 1900, with the Highland Free churches remaining separate. These churches in turn re-joined the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1929. In Hawick Rev. J.A. Wallace along with 6 elders (George Blaikie, John Johnstone, James Smith, William Nisbet, John Routledge and William Butler) and about 600 of the congregation left St. Mary’s in June 1843 to meet in the East End Meeting House until the Free Church (St. George’s) was built in 1844. West Port Free Church, St. Andrew’s Free Church and Wilton South followed later.

division (di-vi-shin) n., arch. formal partition of land, allocation of seating in a church – ‘Mr John Purdom presented ane register, in which, at the division of the church, anno 1683, the brethren of the presbytery mett and did allocate to the heritors their seats in the body of the church below the lofts ...’ [PR1714].

the Division (thu-di-vi-shin, -di-vee-shin) n. controversial arrangement to divide and enclose the Common in 1777. Originally the dispute arose between the people of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners, particularly the Duke of Buccleuch, over the precise rights and ownership of the Common; this may go back to a proposal from about a century earlier to split the Common evenly between the Town and the Baron (then Douglas of Queensberry), with a Commission struck by the Town to bring the case to the Court of Session. In the 18th century court proceedings lasted about a decade and resulted in Hawick losing 30% of the Common to Buccleuch and others, including the site of the Caa Knowe. In 1765 the Town wanted to know if it could lease or enclose parts of the Common and sought the legal of advocate James Montgomery, who suggested that the Common was effectively owned by the successors of the particate owners named in the 1537 Charter. As a result in 1766 the Town let 9 small pieces of the Common, adjacent to the lands of the neighbouring tenants, in an attempt to prevent encroachment onto the Moor. This led to clashes with the tenants of the Duke of Buccleuch, and a second legal opinion in 1766 suggested that the Duke's tenants may in fact have pasturage rights on the Common and that the matter needed to go to court to settle once and for all. In 1767 the agents of the Duke of Buccleuch (then a minor) raised an 'action of declarator and division of the Commonty' at the Court of Session. There followed depositions by many witnesses, regarding the former use of the Common. The Town's lawyer, Robert MacQueen, gave an opinion in 1768 that the situation was unclear. In 1769 the Town appointed 9 men to act as commissioners to negotiate on their behalf with the Duke of Buccleuch's managers. In 1774 Robert MacQueen offered his revised opinion that the neighbouring landowners had a claim to part of the Common, and suggested that the Town might concede $\frac{1}{3}$ of the land. It then went to arbitration, with the final decision made in 1776 and the Division happening physically in 1777. In reading the dispositions of witnesses given in 1767, and considering the established nature of the Town's rights to the Common, it is hard to escape the conclusion that there was a travesty of justice in 1777. On the positive side, after that time the Town was allowed to enclose the land with dykes and fences, ending the practical need for riding the Marches. It also enabled the Town Council to raise rents, enabling it to make several improvements, including erecting a Town House, paving roads and building wells. However, many saw this as a treacherous move against the traditional rights of the townspeople. To mark the bicentenary in 1977 the 'Big Fower' rode to the Caa Knowe after the cutting of the sod and there briefly met the Provost and Bailies – 'Our marches rode, our landmarks planted, But ah! not those that Douglas granted' [AB], 'Magistrates! be faithful trustees, Equal poise the scales of justice, See our Common rightly guidit, Quirky lairds nae mair divide it' [JH].

divni (div-ni, -na) contr. don't, do not – 'mibbe ee div, bit A divni' (used for emphasis, cf. the more common dinni).

divot (di-vi) n. a thin oblong piece of sod used as roofing or fuel – '...make in and away take of your Commone Muire of Havicke als many divots as will thatch his said stable ...' [BR1704], 'An' divots an' rough-heads gotten where the modern's now ca' Teviot Square' [WKNK], turf in general –

'But I'll up throwe thir divots Afore him, massy, his lane, Ablow thon lee'in' hunderwechts O' marble stane!' [DH], a thick slice of bread (diviot and other variants exist as older spellings).

divoty (di-vi'-ee) adj. covered in tufts of grass, rough and lumpy.

the Divoty Plantin (thu-di-vi'-ee-plawn'-in) n. plantation near Hummelknowes Moss. Just to the north-east is an earthwork on top of a slight ridge. It is an oval enclosure, about 65 m by 30 m in size, surrounded by an earthen bank, with the original entrance probably being at the south-west, and any internal structures being destroyed by ploughing.

divven (di-vin, -ven) contr. don't, do not – 'ee div, divven ee?', 'divven they bide up the Loan?' (shorter form of divvent; cf. divni).

divvent (di-vin, di-ven, di-vent) contr. don't, do not – 'divvent ee no?', 'aye, divvent they jist', 'Ee dinna mean Tam, divn't ee no?' [ECS], '...then it's off ti the Games at the Volunteer, divvent they make a lovely couple?' [IWL] (also written 'divn't'; this form used interrogatively and always precedes the pronoun, cf. dinni or divni, which always follow the pronoun).

the Dixie Seeven (thu-dik-see-see-vin) n. local dance band, which played regularly for a very extended period, peaking in popularity in the 1950s and early 1960s. Members included Wallace Currie, Dick Embrey on trombone, Jim Hogarth on percussion, Johnnie McDuff on trombone, Charlie Scott on bass, Rob Telford on clarinet and Dave Young on trumpet.

Dixon (dik-sin) n. Dr. Charles James Whitehead (19th/20th C.) from England, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1890 and became a doctor in Hawick. His practice was at 25 Bridge Street. He wrote poetry under the pseudonym 'James Whitehead', publishing 'Love's tribute: a sonnet-sequence' in 1904. Dr. Simpson took over his surgery in about 1924.

‘My grandfaither clock ticks twae to an alairm-clock’s dizzen ...’ [DH], ‘A dizzen hands gaed up, And mine amang them tae ...’ [WL], ‘... But the hinner end, it was Murray’s day And the price o’ a dizzen raids to pay’ [WL].

Dobbie (do-bee) n. Alexander (19th C.) lived at Eskbank. In about 1874 he was listed as owner of Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish. Alexander ‘Alec’ Hawick Halberdier 1929–58. Rev. Andrew (19th C.) owner of part of the lands of Hungry-hills and others listed in the Land Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish in about 1874, having previously belonged to Andrew Gray. He was also listed at Hillhead in 1874. Rev. John (d.c.1832) minister at Teviothead until about 1832. It was after his death that Henry Scott Riddell was appointed minister there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1716 he was servant to the Laird of Whitslade. He married Jean Grieve and their children included Marion (b.1716) and Helen (b.1723).

Dobie (dō-bee) n. former name for a well near Town-o-Rule (possibly ‘Dubbie’).

Dob’s Linn (dōbz-lin) n. quarry off the A708 south of St. Mary’s Loch, famous for graptolite fossils. The nearby Birkhill Cottage has a plaque commemorating the geological work of Charles Lapworth here in the 1870s – ‘For Hab Dob and Davie Din, Dang the deil owre Dob’s Linn’ [T] (also called ‘Dob Linn’ and ‘Dobb’s Linn’).

Dobson (dob-sin) n. John (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction involving land in Melrose. Also in 1581 his son Patrick purchased a husbandland in Langnewton from John Young. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1693 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. Patrick (16th C.) son of John. In 1581 he purchased a husbandland in Langnewton from John, son of Andrew Young in Langnewton. The cost was £27 Scots, and he held the lands of the Laird of Lochleven. William (b.c.1810) spinner in Hawick, living besdide Nixon’s Mill (i.e. at Lynnwood) in 1841. His wife was Mary, and their children included Adam, Thomas and Agnes. He became an elder in Allars Kirk in 1837. He later left Hawick and became a minister in the Congregational Union of Scotland. He returned in 1843 to preach at Allars Kirk while the minister was out of town, but was prevented by one of the elders withholding the key. He was minister of the 2nd Congregational Church in Hawick for a year or two about this time, then became the first Congregational minister at Innerleithen. Mr. ??

(19th C.) inn-keeper at the Station Hotel. He had drink tents at the Moor and Haugh at the Common Riding of 1881 (at least).

docht (docht) n., poet. power, strength – ‘...ane michtie man isna deliferet bie meikle doucht’ [HSR] (also written ‘doucht’).

dochter (doch-tur, dōch-tur) n., arch. daughter – ‘...for the marriage and tochir of James of Douglas, my sone and apperand are, wyth Jonet, the dochter of the said David ...’ [SB1470], ‘Item, that whosover sal marie ane freeman’s dochter sal pay for their freedom £4 money, with the wyne and pertinents’ [BR1640], ‘C’away and slacken yer drouth and we’ll drink tae the best o’ dochters ...’ [JEDM], ‘And when I take her dochter Away to be my wife She thinks she’ll come and stay with me In comfort all her life’ [JCa], ‘And there was Madge, the auld man’s dochter, fat and forty, man-less and nane owre gleg’ [DH] (cf. the more common dowter and the older douchter).

dochty (dōch-tee) adj., arch. doughty, powerful – ‘Door an dochty, framin the view, war rankeet Naeter’s Wardens o the Mairches’ [ECS].

dock (dok) n., arch. the buttocks, a push, hoist, v., arch. to push, hoist, particularly when climbing a wall (also dook).

dock-up (dok-up) n., arch. a push up by the buttocks, a help (also the more common dook-up or dooks).

docken (do-kin) n. dock plant, Rumex, especially its leaves – ‘... Or find a midge ’mang dockens tynd, An’ darkness fa’in’ [JoHa], ‘dis eet really help a nettle sting if ee rub docken leaves on eet?’, ‘As soople as a docken’ [GW], ‘A dinna care a docken’ [GW], anything of little value, especially in phrases like ‘no gie a docken’ – ‘The clubs and pubs pursued their way, and never cared a docken; At last the scandal settled down, and then no more was spoken’ [JCG].

the Doctor (thu-dok-tur) n. nickname for James Scott in the early 18th century. Later it was a popular name for Dr. W.T. Barrie. Additionally in the early part of the 19th century the name was used for the Rector’s assistant at the Grammar School.

Doctor H’Yiggs (dok-tur-hyigz) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the 19th century – ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI] (the origin is obscure).

Doctor Jaickets (dok-tur-jā-kitz) n. nickname for James Aitkin.

the Doctor's Pend (thu-dok-turz-pend) n. former name for a pend in Denholm.

dod (dōd) n., arch. a hill, generally with a rounded top. The word survives in the name of several local hills, e.g. Black Dod, Little Dod and Muckle Dod, as well as possibly Dod Burn.

Dod (dōd) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of George.

Dod (dōd) interj. exclamation of surprise or affirmation – ‘Dod, man, that’s it! Banner – banner. Up wi’ the Banner!’ [BM1898], ‘Dod, will Ah, puir fella, for ee’re no like yin o’ thae imposters that come sae muckle aboot ma lodgin’ hoose’ [JEDM], ‘Dod, the snirtin body!’ [ECS], ‘He sometimes would say ‘Dod deld!’. Sometimes ‘Deverr desht’. And if he was very upset, he descended to ‘Dod deld devert desht!’ [JeC] (euphemism for ‘God’).

Dod (dōd) n. farm on the Dod Burn, reached by the track beside the Dodburn Filter Works. There is also a 6 m diameter round-house nearby, as well as signs of cultivation rigs. The recently excavated foundations of a peel tower (possibly Peelbrae or Dodrig) is beside the grassy track beyond the farm. On the south-eastern spur of White Hill, overlooking the farm, are the remains of a hill-fort, measuring about 205 ft by 150 ft, with a double rampart; it is covered by a later homestead (or perhaps this is 2 phases of single settlement), with at least one hut circle. The lands here were once owned by a branch of the Gledstains family, under Gledstains of Cocklaw, since at least 1509/10 (in a document for Douglas of Cavers, referring to much earlier charters). In 1643 the lands were valued (along with Hunthill) at £180. When the last Gledstains of Dod died, the lands went to a distant female of that name who married Capt. Vetch (brother of Lord Bowhill). He sold it to James Pott, who became the first Pott of Dod. By 1707 the lands had been disjoined from Hunthill and valued at £130. Gideon Pott was listed as owner of ‘Dod or Dodrig’ in 1788 (and still recorded in 1811), when it was valued £130 (sometimes written ‘Dodd’; it was ‘Doed’ in 1509/10).

the Dod (thu-dōd) n. hill just north of Aker-moor Loch, in the headwaters of the Ale, reaching a height of 364 m. A former farmstead near here may have been the home of ‘Jamie Telfer of the Fair Dodhead’ (there is a house marked ‘Dod-head’ in roughly this location on Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Dodbank (dōd-bawngk) n. name for a former farm at ‘Dodhead’ above the Ettrick valley. This may have been the location for the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer of the Fair Dodheid’ (although there is no evidence there was ever a Telfer there, or indeed that the ballad is anything other than fiction). It was possessed by a branch of the Scotts, Walter, son of Robert having the lease in 1510. Walter Scott in Synton was tenant in 1541, paying £18 yearly. James, 4th son of John, younger of Synton had a lease on it in the late 16th century. Robert of Satchells, son of James, had a charter for the lands in 1609. The lands may have been known as the west steading of ‘Glidhouse’ or ‘Gildhouse’ in the 15th century (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Dod Burn (dōd-burn) n. stream flowing into the Allan Water from the south, joining near Dodburn farm. It was mentioned as early as the 1160s, when ‘Brunemore super Dod’ was part of the description of the boundaries of Ringwood when granted to Melrose Abbey. The area is rich in prehistoric remains and part of the stream may have formed a section of the boundary line of the Catrail. A flint arrow-head was found up the burn in the 1970s. In a clearing near the head of the stream there is the remains of a settlement, including foundations of longhouses, enclosures and signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation.

Dodburn (dōd-burn) n. farm near where the Dod Burn joins the Allan Water. ‘Sym Elliot of Dodburne’ is recorded in 1569 and 1573. Will Elliot and his brothers Archie and Sim were tenants there in 1586. ‘Johnne Niksoun in Dodburne’ is recorded in 1586/7 and ‘Rynion Elliott of Dodborne’ in 1589. It was once split into the lands of Over and Nether Dodburn. In 1621 these were granted by Robert Elliot of Redheugh to Gavin Elliot of Brugh. In 1631 Gavin’s widow sold the lands to William Eliott, younger of Stobs. However, Gilbert of Stobs had purchased 5 merks of land there in 1622 (without prejudice to Gavin of Brugh’s infertment) from Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with the rest of the lands of Winnington. ‘Over and Nether Dodburns’ were listed among the lands held by Eliott of Stobs in 1657 and was part of the Lordship of Winnington in the late 17th century. It was listed as ‘Dodburne in Kirkton Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (although probably in Cavers Parish at that time); Robert Moscrop, James Goodfellow and John Pott were there. Robert Nixon was there in 1705. John Leyden was there in 1709 and Samuel Leyden in 1730. Robert Hall was there in 1771, Thomas Turnbull in 1789 and William Reid was farmer there in 1797. Upper and Nether Dodburn were valued at £132 14s 7d in 1788, as part of the estate of Eliott of Stobs. They had the same value in the Land Tax Rolls of 1813. A perforated stone disc from there is in the Museum (note that this is about a mile north of the farm called Dod; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Dodburne' and is 'Dodburne Ovir et Nethir' in 1670).

Dodburn (dōd-burn) n. name used for the water supply system at Dodburn Filters, generating part of Hawick's drinking water since 1882.

Dodburn (dōd-burn) n. humorous name for local tap water, so-called because of the supply coming from Dod Burn – 'Can A hev a whusky an Dodburn?'.

Dodburn Filters (dōd-burn-fil'-urz) n. Hawick water supply system on the Dod Burn, with facilities originally gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, and opened in 1882. This consisted of a reservoir that was constructed to hold the water. Two hill burns (Priesthaugh and Skelfhill) supply the water, which is gravel-filtered before being fed to the town. At the opening ceremony the Town was decorated with banners, flags and floral displays. A huge procession met the Duke of Buccleuch, including the Cornet with the Flag, Freemasons with their aprons and sashes and many other representatives of organisations within Hawick. This was followed by dinner for about 500 people in the Exchange Buildings, followed by a ball. The Duke of Buccleuch was presented with an engraved jug. The house at the filters is called Dodburn Filter Cottage, and is on the east side of the road roughly opposite a complex of ancient earthworks. About 30 m north-east of the filters themselves are the remains of a round-house, 6 m in diameter, with associated signs of cultivation.

Dodburn Hill (dōd-burn-hil) n. small hill to the east of Dodburn. It reaches a height of 292 m (963 ft). There are a group of archaeological remains on its summit, similar to those to the east on White Knowe, but more complex. It consists of a roughly oval enclosure, composed of double ramparts and ditches (now ill-defined). There is also a hut circle inside the eastern side of the earthwork, about 11 m in diameter, contained within a roughly triangular enclosure. There used to be a military firing range (for Stobs Camp) on its eastern side.

Dodd (dōd) n. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Janet (b.1671); Robert (b.1675); Bessie (b.1677); Thomas (b.1682); and Isobel (b.1687). Witnesses in 1671 were Robert Jolly and William Swan. Andrew (1682/3–1717) precentor of Jedburgh Kirk and assistant schoolmaster at Jedburgh Grammar School, who is buried in Bedrule (although the reason for this is not known). His gravestone contains 28 lines of Latin, including 'A Theology candidate, and not unskilled in the art of Medicine. He excelled in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, as well as in the vernacular. He was a strenuous upholder of the Reformed religion and the discipline of the suffering church oh his native land'. George (18th/19th C.) labourer at Turnpikeside in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John 'Jack' (19th C.) maternal grandfather of J.E.D. Murray. He fought at the Battle of Waterloo. For many years in the early 1800s was the chief drummer in the Drums and Fifes, 1848 being his last Common Riding. His drum and stick were later possessed by Andrew Ballantyne. John Thomas (19th/20th C.) farmer at Riccarton. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. William (18th/19th C.) flesher in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. William of Greenholm (b.1792/3) mason in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was living at about 1 Douglas Square. In 1852 he was listed as 'Dodds' among Newcastleton masons. By 1861 he was 'Land Proprietor' at the same address. His wife Elizabeth was from England, and may be the hat-maker listed in Newcastleton in 1852. Their children included Elizabeth, John, Jane and Margaret. His name is 'Dodds' in a directory of 1852 (formerly also spelled 'Dod'; cf. Dodds).

Dodds

doddie (do-dee) n., arch. a hornless bull, cow or sometimes sheep – '...doddies an stirks an queys an stots an gimmers an hoggies an grumphies an guissies' [ECS].

Dodds (dōdz) n. Adam 'Ade' (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when Robert Scott of Thirlestane was charged to enter him at the Tolbooth in Edinburgh. He was listed as 'Ade Doddiss, callit Pais Polk in Ramseclewis'. He probably lived at Ramseycleuch in the Ettrick valley, but it is unclear what his nickname meant. Andrew (17th C.) blacksmith at Minto according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (d.c.1682) tenant in Bedrule whose will is recorded in 1682. He could be the same man as the Andrew recorded in 1694, or perhaps his father. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be related to John who is listed in the same Parish. He is probably the Andrew whose children baptised in Bedrule

Parish included: Walter (b.1691); John (b.1695); and Margaret (b.1698). He is surely related to John and Thomas, who are recorded in Bedrule at about the same time. Andrew (17th C.) blacksmith at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. It seems likely that he was related to the blacksmith in Minto. Andrew (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Isobel Turnbull, and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Janet (b.1671); Robert (b.1675); Bessie (b.1677); Thomas (b.1682); Isobel (b.1687); and Janet (again, b.1689). He was a weaver on the 1689 baptismal record, with witnesses wright John Purcell and cooper John Turnbull. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Glack in Hawick in 1680. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Denholm. His children included: Andrew (b.1728); Margaret (b.1730); William (b.1732); and William (again, b.1735). Andrew (18th C.) married Heln Hardie in Kirkton Parish in 1755. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hassendean. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Rev. Andrew (1809–76) from Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and Margaret Thomson. He was ordained as minister of Avonbridge Burgher Kirk in 1846. He owned the farm of Hillhead. He married Christian Anderson. Anthony (1818–87) schoolmaster of the Grammar School and then Buccleuch School in the late 19th century, and probably one of the most highly respected townsmen of his day. The youngest son of a shepherd, Robert, and Isabella Hume, he was born in Linton and educated at Eckford. He went to Edinburgh University, became a private tutor and then was appointed Mathematics teacher and assistant to James Murray in Hawick in 1840. He originally lived in the schoolhouse with the Murrys and taught the junior boys. He took over as Headmaster of the Grammar School in 1853, and retired in 1880. James A.H. Murray joined him as an assistant teacher in 1854 when only 17. He referred to himself as 'Rector', and lived in the house adjoining the school. A presentation tea service, clock, etc. were given to him by former pupils in 1878, at a dinner arranged in his honour. He was also Parish Session Clerk from about 1851 until his death, and served as Hawick's first Registrar 1854–87, helping to locally implement the 1854 Registration Act. He married Helen Scott of Hawick in 1850 and later Elizabeth Armstrong (daughter of the Sandbed baker). His children were Isabella, Robert, John and Annetta, and they lived at 15 Allars Crescent, and in later years at 11 Slitrig Crescent. His 2 sons moved to America, while Isabella became an infant teacher in Hawick. Although he retired as Rector, he remained as Registrar for many more years, carefully recording locally marriages, births and deaths. He is buried in the Wellogate Ceemetery and a portrait of him exists. Elizabeth (19th C.) milliner in Newcastleton, recorded in 1852. She may be the wife of mason William, listed on Douglas Square in the 1851 census. George W. (19th/20th C.) helped James H. Haining with transcriptions of the monumental inscriptions in St. Mary's Kirkyard. Probably the same George was involved with the Borders Music Festival. Isobel (17th C.) resident in Bewlie. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. James (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John and William, who were also listed there. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1744 and 1751. He witnessed a baptism in 1744 for Robert Easton and Jean Dodds (probably a close relative) in Clarilaw. In 1744 his son Andrew ('in fornication') with Marion Borth[...] was baptised in Wilton, with witnesses John Anderson and William Gibson. He married Margaret Dryden in 1749 and their son James was baptised in 1751, with witnesses James Scott and Thomas Cathrae. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded at Whitchesters in 1758. He married Jane (or 'Jean') Glendinning in 1756 and their children included: Walter (b.1758); twins John and Robert (b.1766); and Helen (b.1771). The witnesses in 1758 were Andrew Turnbull and James Glendinning (probably a relative). Thomas Miller and Alexander Bunyon witnessed the baptism in 1766. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Templehall in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Carlisle who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had a local connection. John (15th C.) mentioned in the 1479 resignation of the lands of Broadlee in the Barony of Hawick. It was signed at Broadlee, and so he was probably a local man. His name is recorded as 'Johannem Doddis'. John (17th C.) tenant of John Riddell of Muselee. In 1665 he made an agreement with the tenants of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) over boundaries between them. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name is written 'Doods'. He could be the John whose children baptised in Bedrule Parish included: Jean (b.1693); Thomas (b.1694); Andrew (b.1697); and Isobel (b.1697). He is probably related to other Dodds' in Bedrule. John (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to James and William, who were also listed there. He may be the same as the John recorded in 1665. He could be the John who witnessed baptisms in the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish in 1687 and 1688. He could be the John who (along with Patrick) witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull and Margaret Dodds (surely a relative) in 1688. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Betty Bryson, who was also from Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and merchant in Newcastleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–38. John (b.c.1790) from England, he was recorded as an Army Pensioner on Teviot Crescent in 1841. His wife was Isabel, and they had a daughter Helen. By 1851 his wife was keeping a lodging house on O'Connell Street, and he was presumably deceased. John 'Jock' (1886–1959) joined Innes-Henderson in 1918 (before they re-merged) and remained with them through the Braemar years, ending as managed of the printing office until he retired in 1958. He also edited the Braemar Bulletin during WWII. He was known as a concert entertainer and also wrote the 'Betty Whutson' column for a while. Les 'Doddsy' (1945/6–2021) born in Newcastle, he spent most of his life in the Hawick area. He worked for horse trainer Harry Bell and rode for Ken Oliver. Later he worked for the council as a roads officer. He was a stalwart of the local flapping scene and a founder member of the Hawick Horse Riding Association. His horses won 5 Buccleuch Handicaps and 3 Trandesmen's Handicaps. He also had some winners under Jockey Club rules. His sons Kevin and Eric died young. He married Cathy and they had a daughter Michelle. Patrick (17th C.) resident of 'the netherend' of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish for Thomas Scott in Hassendean in 1683, for William Scott in 1686 and for George Davidson and

Walter Young in 1687. Additionally in 1686 and 1688 he witnessed baptisms for John Turnbull and Margaret Dodds (who may have been his sister or other close relative). Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott in 1771 and their children included Barbara (b.1772), Jane (b.1774) and Agnes (b.1777). Robert (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at Belses, recorded on the ballots for the Militia in 1797. He was 'Rob Dods' at Barnhills on the list in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799 and also listed on the 1801 ballot. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nelly Turnbull and their children included John (b.1795) and William (b.1799). Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Wester Essenside according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He was a farm labourer living at Burnfoot on Ale in 1841 and 1851 with his wife Helen (from Wilton); his widow was living at Headshaw in 1861 with the family of her son-in-law Robert Hewitson. Probably the same Robert married Helen (or 'Nelly') Lamb and had children, baptised in Ashkirk, including: George (b.1808); John (b.1810); James (b.1812); and Isabel (b.1815). Robert (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife's name was Christian and their son Robert was baptised in 1830. Thomas (15th C.) resident of the Bedrule area mentioned in 1494/5. George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 40 silver shillings from him, as well as a stone of butter and other goods and 'flammeis sue uxoris' (which may mean that he burned his wife). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married 'Heilling Wauche' in 1648. Note that Robert 'Veatche' married 'Heilling Dods' in Ashkirk in 1644, with either or both perhaps being related to this couple. Thomas (17th C.) tenant 'in Newtoun' (probably in Bedrule Parish). The will of his wife, Margaret Henderson, was recorded in 1685. He may be Thomas whose children baptised in Bedrule Parish included: Andrew (b.1694); Walter (b.1696); and Thomas (b.1699). He was surely related to Andrew and John, who lived in Bedrule at the same time. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Veitch and their children included: Agnes (b.1717); and Andrew (b.1720). He witnessed baptisms in 1724 for John Lamb in Clarilaw, in 1728 for Adam Armstrong in Burnhead and in 1736 for Archibald Scott in Burnhead and Robert Gibson in Clarilaw. His wife could be the Helen Veitch who died at Clarilaw in 1752. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Ashkirk Parish, in 1793 he married Jane Scott of Cavers Parish. Their son Peter was born in Selkirk in 1794. Thomas (18th/19th C.) 'Barnman' at Bedrule according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Thomas (18th/19th C.) smith at Newton in Bedrule Parish according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He may be the Thomas whose children Charles (b.1797) and Robert (b.1799) were baptised in Bedrule Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Stevenson in Hobkirk in 1810. Thomas (b.c.1780s) labourer at 'Mains Park' in Robertson Parish, according to the ballot for the Militia. Probably the same Thomas married Elizabeth Stevenson and had a son John baptised in Robeton in 1811. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Kirkton Parish, in 1792 he married Margaret Anderson from Cavers Parish. William (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to James and John, who were also listed there. William (18th C.) resident at Earlside in 1726. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: John (b.1723); William (b.1724); and John (again, b.1726) (also written 'Dods'; cf. Dodd).

Dodds' Schuil (dōdz-skil) n. popular name for the Grammar School in the mid-19th century or Buccleuch School in the later 19th century. This was when Anthony Dodds was schoolmaster, and the name still in use slightly later – 'Sic thochts bring back my boyhood's days: The schule in Orrock Place, Auld Dodds, his Buirdly form I mind, And Webster's smiling face' [WLu].

Dodds's whulps (dōd-zeez-whulps) n., arch nickname for the pupils at the Grammar School, used insultingly by the pupils from the Academy in the Subscription Rooms ('Mudie's Monkeys') in the mid-19th century.

Dod Fell (dōd-fel) n. hill to the east of the 'Note o the Gate' road, just south of Singdean. It reaches a height of 433 m. This is probably the 'Dod' listed among the highest hills in Castleton Parish in 1839 – '... No tae speak o' Meg's Shank or Catcleuch Shin, Phenzhopehaugh, Tushielae, Faw Side An for a richt dowie dollop o glaur For gettin yer gruntles intae ... Muckle Dod Fell' [LSF] (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Dod Filter Cottage (dōd-fil'-ur-ko'-eej) n. cottage at the Dodburn Filter Works, just north of Dod farm, also referred to as 'Dodburn Filter Cottage'.

Dodgson (doj-sin) n. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797

Horse Tax Rolls. He married Mary Wilson and their children included: Thomas (b.1795); Robert (b.1797); Anne (b.1799); and Margaret (b.1809).

Dodheid (dōd-heed) n. Dodhead, possibly a farm near the head of the Dodburn. This has been claimed by some as the location for the ballad 'Jamie Telfer o' the Fair Dodheid'. However, there is no evidence there was ever a farm of that name in this location, and if there is any historical truth to the ballad, it is much more likely to have been set at the place of that name in the Ettrick valley.

Dodheid (dōd-heed) n. Dodhead, farm above the Ettrick valley, which seems the most probable location for the ballad 'Jamie Telfer o' the Fair Dodheid'. It is recorded in 1455 as one of the 'four stedes of Redefurd'. It (or perhaps a neighbouring farm) was also known as 'Dodbank' and belonged to a branch of the Scotts, being tenanted by them in the late 17th centuries, and then in 1609 Robert Scott of Satchells had a crown charter for the lands. By 1628 it belonged to Scott of Harden. William Hogg lived there in 1720 when he got married in Hawick. John Nichol was recorded at 'Dodheadsheals' in 1726 and John Shiel in 1728. James Mercer of Scotsbank was owner in the 1802 Land Tax Rolls. There is no evidence there was ever a tenant there called Telfer, although there was a Simpspon farming there in 1510 (it is marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map).

Dod Hill (dōd-hil) n. hill on the north side of the Hermitage valley, north-west of Gorrenberry farmhouse. It reaches a height of 432 m.

Dodimead (do-dee-meed) n. Henry (b.1812/3) from England, he was a carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was at 10 Allars Crescent. His wife was Agnes. He is probably the Henry, married to Agnes Fox, whose daughter Agnes was born in Bristol in 1841.

Dodlands Cottage (dōd-lindz-ko'-eej) n. cottage on the road to Bonchester, between Beechurst and Woodburn. It was birthplace of John Daykins, who was awarded the Victoria Cross. It is probably the place referred to in the 19th century as 'the Dodlins'.

the Dodlins (thu-dōd-liz) n. former name for an area off the Bonchester road, near where Beechurst was built and where Dodlands Cottage is now.

Dodrig (dōd-rig) n. former home of a branch of the Elliots, somewhere on the Dod Burn. It probably lay not as far south as the hill called Dod Rig, which is above the Priesthaugh Burn, to the west of the headwaters of the Dod Burn. This is probably the ‘dodrik’ where Alexander Turnbull had sheep stolen in 1502. Robert Elliot held the lands in 1583, and his father Archibald before him, going back to about 1547. In 1574 Robert Elliot of Redheugh served as surety for the residents there. In 1583 there was a complaint that the men of Robert Elliot of Redheugh came to the farm repeatedly and ‘thair cruellie strak and dang his servandis and put thame fra occupying and labouring thair of, invading thame for thair slaughter’. The lands of ‘Dodrig or Dod’ were owned by Gideon Pott in 1788, when valued at £130. The pele house from that time may be the one whose remains are on the south-eastern side of Gray Coat, beside the grassy track leading south from Dod farm (marked ‘Doddrigg’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but appears to be located in the upper valley of the Langside Burn).

Dod Rig (dōd-rig) n. ridge lying between the Prieststhaugh and Dod Burns, to the east of Prieststhaugh-hill steading. It reaches a height of 410 m, with a second peak to the south reaching 416 m.

Dod Witter Scheme (dōd-wi’-ur-skeem) n. name sometimes used for the public water supply from the Dod Burn, opened in 1882 (see also Dodburn Filters).

Doecleuch (dō-klooch) n. former steading between Old Northhouse and Prieststhaugh, east of Doecleuch Hill. Archie Elliot was there in 1588/9. It is described in 1660 as a ‘pendicle’ of Stobicote. In 1694 David Minto was there, as well as shepherd Andrew Irvine and also Margaret Scott ‘in Brugh’. It was probably farmed by Robert Scott, ‘Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill’ in the late 17th century. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 328 acres and was bounded by Brugh, Skelfhill, Northhouse and Stobicote. John Scott was there in at least 1726–29 and William Thomson in 1749. In 1788 (and still recorded in 1811) the lands were listed among those in Cavers Parish belonging to Scott of Buccleuch, but which had been acquired since 1643 and were then valued at £140. The hill to the east contains a stone circle and several settlements, and the Catrail passes close by. One of these earthworks was sometimes referred to as ‘Dogcleugh Castle’, although it is not clear which one. The small stream there is the ‘Doe Cleuch’ and forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail (also written ‘Doecleugh’, ‘Dogcleugh’, ‘Dogsleugh’, ‘Dockcleuch’, etc.; it is ‘Dogcleuch’ in 1588/9, ‘Dokcleuch’ in 1590, appears to be ‘Dobcleuch’ in 1599, is ‘Docleugh’ in 1694, ‘Doccleugh’ in 1729 and ‘Dockcleugh’ in 1811; it is marked ‘Dockcleuch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Dockeycleugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name may be the obvious ‘doe’ for female deer, but that seems to be rarely used in placenames).

Doecleuch Hill (dō-klooch-hil) n. hill to the west of the road between Prieststhaugh and Old Northhouse, rising to 316 m. The Catrail crosses its northern slopes, while to the south-east aerial photography shows a possible settlement.

Doecleuchshiel (dō-klooch-sheel) n. former farmstead just to the south of Old Northhouse (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Dockeycleughshiel’).

Doesgate (dōz-gā) n. former name of a geographic feature on Essenside farm, near Leap Hill.

Dogbank Hill (ōg-bawngk-hil) n. hill just to the west of the Note o the Gate, being the southern shoulder of Dog Knowe.

the dog dish (thu-dōg-dish) n. water dish for dogs to drink out of, fixed to the pavement outside 4 Tower Knowe. It was there through much of the 20th century.

dog-hip (dōg-hip) n. rose-hip, the fruit of the dog rose, Rosa canina.

the Dog Hoose (thu-dōg-hoos) n. popular name for a former house on the left of the present entrance to Rosalee. It was possibly named for being the place where dogs of the Langlands estate were once kept. The house itself was used as a women’s school and for several other purposes, and existed well into the 20th century.

the Dog Knowe (thu-dōg-now) n. hill just to the west of the Note o the Gate, reaching a height of 459 m.

Dog Knowe (dōg-now) n. hill of 365 m to the west of Twislehope farm, in the upper reaches of the Hermitage valley (it is marked ‘Dog Know’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

dog-luggit (dōg-lu-gee, -gi) adj. dog-eared – ‘...dog-luggit ... tide-merked Wi mony a drowe and drookin’ [DH].

Dog Pintle (dōg-pin’-ul) n. nickname for Archibald Elliot.

Dogsleugh see Doecleuch

Dogsrabbit it (dōgz-raw-bi’-ee) exclam., arch. indeed, really – ‘Dogsrabbit it, what’s keepit ye, ye lazy molehead?’ [WNK].

doit (doi, doit) n., arch. a small Dutch copper coin, worth about half a farthing or one penny Scots, used in the 18th century to describe small, foreign or worthless coins in general – ‘The session desire the bailies to take the doys put up in a bag and sell them to the best advantage, and return the price thereof to the poor box again' [PR1711], 'Besides also much money now in his hands that he has made up of Doyts and other bad money' [PR], '4s 0d Recd. for Doits' [Hob1760] (also written 'doyt'; cf. dite and doitit).

doiter (doi'-ur, doi-tur) v., arch. to walk unsteadily, totter, dodder, potter about – 'We totter through the birkie bank, an' doiter owre the brae ...' [JoHa], 'A met a doiterin, duddy, auld hallan-shaker as A lampeet doon that lang brae' [ECS].

doitard (doi-turd) n., poet. a dotard – 'What ails the orpit doyderd stycke', The kerlyn loudly said' [JTe].

doitit (doi'-ee', doi-tee') adj., arch. stupid, bewildered, muddled – '... Her line o' males shall pass away Wi' the halbert, brand and spear, Ane doitit race the distaff ply, an' petticoats shall wear' [T].

dolefi (dōl-fi, -fe, -fu) adj., poet. doleful, sorrowful – 'With a yirlish skraik, with a squelch and a groan, And wi' cries that were dulefu' and awfu' [JTe].

Doles (dōlz) n. James (15th C.) proposed as Archdeacon of Glasgow in 1478, on the death of Patrick Hume. Nicholas Forman also appears to have been proposed, but neither were confirmed.

Dolfinus (dōl-fin-is) n. parson of Cavers recorded in about the 1170s. Reginald of Durham mentions him in a couple of his stories about the life of St. Cuthbert. He was responsible for the chapel devoted to St. Cuthbert, which has been identified with a site at Cogsmill, and said to be associated with several miracles. He probably told these stories to Reginald, including how travellers were protected from a storm in the roofless chapel, how Rosfritha and Seigiva (from Hawick) had a candle appear when their own candles had gone out, and the tale of a poor widow, unable to hire a shepherd, but her flock was protected from the wolves near the chapel. His mother (or perhaps his clerk's mother) had a disease that made her swollen for 17 years, but apparently cured by appealing to St. Cuthbert, whereupon a vision of him appeared, piercing her belly with the point of his staff and releasing the poison; she was a domestic servant in the household of Osbert, Abbot of Jedburgh (also written 'Dolfinius').

dolly dumper (do-lee-dum-pur) n. a machine used in the knitwear industry to strengthen and soften a garment through pounding between wooden blocks in a vat of soapy water (cf. waulk mill for tweeds).

Dolly Rig (do-lee-rig) n. ridge to the north-west of Hoscote on the north side of the Borthwick valley. This must be the land of 'Dualyrig' stated to be to the west of Milsington in a charter of 1451. There is a linear earthwork on the lower slopes, running from near Girnwood to the woods above Hoscote. It has been suggested that this is part of the Catrail, but it seems more likely to be a more recent agricultural boundary.

Dolphinsonstead (dol-fin-sin-steed) n. former lands in the northern part of Liddesdale, listed under the 'Ermyldoune' section in a rental roll of c.1376. The precise location is uncertain. It is recorded as 'Dolfynesonstede', with a value of 10 shillings.

Dolphinston (dol-fin-stin) n. farm and moor south-east of Mossburnford in Jedburgh Parish. In early times it was associated with the Ainslie and Ker families. There is a triangulation pillar there, at a height of 234 m (the origin is probably the Old Norse name 'Dolgfinnr' or 'Dolphin', which was common in Northern England; the name first appears as 'Dolfineston' in 1296; it is 'Dolphington' in 1454, 'Dolphinstoun' in 1502 and 'Dolphinstoun' and 'Dolphingstoun' in 1525; it is on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Dolphinstoun', while Stobie's 1770 map also marks the mill by the Jed).

domeenion (dom-enn-yin) n., arch. dominion – 'An' oo've seen little cause for tae change oor opeenion, There's naething e'er thrives under whisky's domeenion' [BM1900].

domiciles (do-mi-seels) n., pl., arch. household effects – 'Item, in vtencilis and domicilis by the airship, estimat to the somme of ane hundreth pundis' [SB1574].

the Dominican Convent (thu-do-mi-nee-kin-kon-vin') n. original name for the Convent established by the Dominican nuns, firstly at 14 Buccleuch Street and then at Myreslawgreen.

dominie (do-mi-nee) n., arch. schoolmaster – 'hei often got the tawse frae his dominie', 'After the witches had accomplished their diabolical purposes with the poor dominie, they joined the party of fairies on the highest pinnacle of the Abbey ...' [EM1820], 'Wi' dominie Davie, wha's fash'd wi' the spavie, His helper, sae funny an' friskie' [JoHa], 'She had twined the dominie o' the ket On whilk he had thrie times dyned' [WiSp], 'The grassy green where Leyden passed Still welcomes with a smile, For here the Dominie of yore Would sit and rest awhile' [WFC], '... As the dominie glowered oot owre his specs – I wot they'd be better weans!' [WL].

Domingo (do-ming-go) n. Robert (1828/9–98) born in Selkirk, he was a woollen spinner in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 5 Tannage Close. He married Isabella Ripley in 1854, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Robert (b.1855), Williamina Leithead (b.1858), Isabella Thorburn (b.1861) and Elizabeth (b.1864). Robert (b.1855) son of Robert. He was an apprentice journalist with the Hawick Advertiser, later becoming editor and manager. He also became local correspondent for The Scotsman and The Evening Dispatch, making him one of the best known reporters in the area. He retired in 1935 after 42 years in journalism. He married Mary Knox of Martin's House in 1900 and their only child was Robert Knox (b.1903).

Don (don) n. Sir Alexander (1751–1815) eldest son of Sir Alexander, he was the 7th Baronet. He had a strathspey named after him, which is said to have been a forerunner of 'Auld Lang Syne'. He played a prominent part in the formation of the Border Union Agricultural Society and was one of the first Vice-Presidents. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1780 and both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788. He may have planned the house and estate at Newton. He was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (although already deceased), along with his son Alexander. He married Henrietta (or Harriet) Cunningham, sister of a patron of Burns and eventual heiress of the 13th Earl of Glencairn. He subscribed to 4 copies of Burns 'Edinburgh Edition' in 1787, with his wife subscribing for another 4. Their children were: Alexander, who succeeded; Mary; and Elizabeth. Both daughters drowned in the Eden in 1795. Sir Alexander of Newton-Don (b.1779–1826) son of Sir Alexander and Henrietta Cunningham. He was the 6th Baronet. His 2 sisters both drowned while trying to save a companion in crossing the swollen River Eden. He was in Paris when Napoleon issued an edict against foreigners leaving France, and so was stuck there until 1810. He was present at the meeting led by his father in 1812 at which the 'Border Society' (to become the 'Bordern Union Agricultural Society'. He succeeded to the estates when his father died in 1815 and had a new house built at Newton Don in 1817–19. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was defeated by Gilbert Elliot (later Earl of Minto) in the Roxburghshire election of 1812, the margin being 6 votes (although some accounts differ). However, he was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1814–26. He was said to be 'the model of a cavalier in all courteous and elegant accomplishments', but had expensive habits (particularly horse-racing), and had to sell off his estate at Ochiltree. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He married Lucretia, daughter of G. Montgomerie from Norfolk and secondly married Grace, eldest daughter of John Stein, M.P. His children were: Sir William Henry; and Alexina Harriet, who married Frederick Accolm Milbank. Peter (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. Sir William Henry (1825–62) son of Sir Alexander, he was 7th Baronet. His father died in his 1st year, and parts of the estate and furnishings of Newton Don were sold off to pay debts. When he reached age 21 he sold off the remains of the family estate to Charles Balfour. He joined the 5th Dragoon Guards and was aide-de-camp to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, was soon promoted, but then left the army in great debt. He took to acting, appearing on Broadway and living in America for a few years, where he married. He then toured Britain in the mid-1850s. He lived at Borthwickbrae for a while in this period. He used to organise cricket teams to play against the men of Hawick in the Haugh, before there were formal competitions. He was said to have 'some pretensions to theatrical talent', which he took on a tour of the goldfields of Australia, where a successful racehorse was named after him. He died in Hobart, Tasmania, ending the family line. An 1856 portrait of him exists.

Donald (do-nuld) n. name of 3 Kings of Scotland. Donald I (c.812–863) and Donald II (d.900) ruled over a kingdom which did not extend as far south as Hawick. Donald III (c.1033–99) King of Scotland 1093–4 and 1094–7, also known as Donald Bane. He was son of Duncan I and brother of Malcolm III. After Malcolm died he took the crown, expelling the English from the court. He was deposed by his nephew Duncan II in 1094, but resumed power after Duncan's death, with another nephew Edmund being his heir and ruling the southern part of the kingdom. It is not known how he died, although there are several conflicting stories. He appears to have had no sons, but had at least one daughter, Bethoc. It is possible she was the person of that name who once owned the lands of Bedrule. He was succeeded as King by Edgar, eldest son of his brother Malcolm.

Donald (do-nuld) n. Alexander (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He married Betty Johnston in Robertson Parish in 1740, with his name recorded as 'Donaldson'. Their son Thomas was baptised in 1742, with witnesses merchant Francis Gledstains and tailor Thomas Wilkie. He may be the same Alexander who later married Agnes Hardie. Alexander (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. It is possible he is the same man who earlier married Betty Johnson. He married Agnes Hardie and their children included: Isobel (1744–1822), who firstly married William Aitkin and had a son William, and secondly married Robert Hotson from Langholm, and had 10 children; Elizabeth (1746–1818), who married shoemaker William Purdom; Margaret, who married Walter 'the Buck' Wilson in 1772; Marjory, who married William Roger in 1776; Agnes (b.1757), who married John Laing and had 9 children; and Jane (b.1760). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by weaver John Hardie and carrier James Oliver. In 1764 he witnessed the baptism of his grandson William Aitkin. In 1772 he is probably the 'Alxr. Donaldson' who was the witness for the bride at the wedding of his daughter Margaret in Selkirk. Andrew (17th C.) resident at 'milnmaue' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish; this may have been the farm of Moormaw. He may be the tailor Andrew who witnessed a baptism in Robertson (the Hassendean part) in 1681 and another for James Dryden in 1684. Perhaps the same Andrew married Jean Coltart and had children (baptised in Robertson) including Marion (b.1680), Jean (b.1682) and Margaret (b.1684). The witnesses in 1682 were John Armstrong and James Johnstone. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1694 he was recorded as owing his Burgess fee, suggesting he had just become a Burgess. He could be the Andrew whose son Andrew was born in HAWICK IN 1703. Rev. George Henry (19th/20th C.) became minister at Southdean in 1902 and was translated to First Charge, Haddington in 1906. He received a doctorate from Edinburgh University on 1948. Isabel (16th C.) married Andrew Shortreed and had children James and Margaret. She secondly married Robert Scott of Palace. She was a widow in 1579 when her inventory was recorded in Selkirk. Her executors, 'oversearis to her bairnes' were Walter Scott of Headshaw and George Shortreed of Essenside. Her daughter Marion 'alias Mane' Scott was left with George of Synton. James (16th C.) recorded at 'Syntoun Place' in 1580 when he was listed as a debtor to John Hall, webster in Selkirk. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Manie Jackson and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1652, with witnesses William Cochran and James 'Coutherd'. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Minto in 1502. He was indicted and failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with his surety William Turnbull of Minto being fined. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Newcastleton. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. Probably the same John married Helen Rutherford in Lilliesleaf in 1838. Patrick (15th/16th C.) listed last on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme in 1517. He must have been a prominent man in Roxburghshire, like the others. His name is recorded as 'Patricium Douald'. Rev. Thomas W. minister of Lilliesleaf Kirk, linked with Bowden and Ashkirk, 1977–87. William (16th C.) recorded in 1542/3 as 'Villiam Downland schirjeand to Valter Scot of Edschaw'. He was some kind of officer serving Walter Scott of Headshaw when he had 2 of his master's horses appraised in Selkirk. William 'Nimble' (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a trial of 1612 for a claimed murder of 1610 (stated by the Hawick officials to have been a suicide). He may have been a Burgh Officer. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed a baptism in 1652 for William Boa. His son James was baptised in 1643. He could be the William 'Donaldsoun' who in 1656 witnessed a baptism for John Stewart. William (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1689 for William Allan. He is probably the William, married to Malie Johnstone, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included Thomas (b.1690) and William (b.1692). The witnesses in 1690 were John Riddell and James Kennedy. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Jean Ronaldson (or Rennaldson) in 1704, with his surname recorded sometimes as 'Donaldson' in Hawick Parish (but 'Donald' in Wilton Parish). Their children included: Andrew (b.1707); James (b.1709); William (b.1713); and George (b.1715). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailies Robert Ruecastle and Robert Brown. He could be the same man as the Burgh Officer 'Donaldson' recorded in the early 1700s. William (19th/20th C.) resident of Sunnyside.

In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk (also formerly written ‘Donnald’, ‘Downald’, etc.; in some early documents it is confounded with Donaldson).

Donaldson (do-nuld-sin) n. Rev. A. (20th C.) minister of St. John’s Church in the 1940s. Charles Edward McArthur (d.1964) Conservative M.P. for Roxburghshire & Selkirkshire 1951–55 and for Roxburgh, Selkirk & Peebles 1955–64. He originally defeated A.J.F. MacDonald by only 829 votes. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (17th C.) daughter of a weaver in of Lilliesleaf. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. James (16th/17th C.) tenant in Cavers. He was recorded in 1628 among Hawick men who were accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands at Branxholme or Trinitylands. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included: George (b.1707); Hector (b.1709). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1720 and 1723 and Mossbrae in 1725 and 1728. His children included: Janet (b.1720); and Helen (b.1723). Grisel (b.1725); Jidn ames (b.1728). John (16th C.) listed as ‘Dounaldsone’ in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). It is possible he is the John recorded as heir to Ninian, inheriting a tenement in Selkirk in 1530; he sold a rig of land to Thomas Minto in 1532 and other lands in 1533, 1534 and 1536. John ‘Maltman’ (16th C.) recorded in an agreement of 1580 for him to become tenant of 6 acres of land in Lilliesleaf that belonged to William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf. He was to pay £24 per year, with William Riddell warranting these lands called ‘Portus Croft Heid’ during his (John’s) lifetime. John (1741/2–1811) son of John, who was tenant farmer somewhere in Rulewater. Both were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. He was tenant at Swanshiel on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed as owner of 2 horses. His servant George was recorded at Swanshiel on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He died at Highend. He is probably the Donaldson tenant of Wester Swanshiel whose wife was Peggy Duncan, said to have ‘shure a hairst’ (i.e. reaped during the harvest) at the age of 77. John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Smith in Hobkirk Parish in 1822. Margaret (17th C.) recorded as liferenter of ‘an Merk of land of Heap’ in the valuation for Wilton Parish in 1643. Her name appears there as just ‘M. Donaldson’, but it seems clear this was the Margaret listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. Then Robert Langlands of that ilk paid tax on £89 for lands in Wilton ‘sometime pertaining’ to her. It is possible that she was his wife or mother. William (17th/18th C.) Burgh Officer of some sort. In 1726 the Council allowed him a pair of shoes, at the same time that the officers and drummer got ribbons for the Common Riding. He is probably the William ‘Donald’ given money in 1727 to fetch the cup for the Races. He is also recorded as an ‘officer’ when he witnessed a sasine in 1728. He could be the William who married Jean Rennaldson in Hawick in 1704 and whose children baptised in Hawick included Andrew (b.1707), James (b.1709), William (b.1713) and George (b.1715), with his surname given as ‘Donald’. William (19th C.) married Agnes Hobkirk in Castleton Parish in 1863 (also formerly ‘Donaldsoun’ and ‘Donalson’; see also Donald).

Doncaster Street (dong-kas-tur-stree) n. street in Newcastleton, off the east side of North Hermitage Street, opposite Langholm Street.

Doniere Portussis (do-nee-er-pōr-tu-sis) n. term used in Hawick’s first existing sasine with a detailed description (from 1558). It is the designation used for the area to the east of the ‘tenement’ of land sold by Alexander Scott to James Scott, which from its description, with the Common Vennel to the west, sounds similar to what was later called ‘Wylie’s Dub’ or ‘Bridgehaugh’ (the identification of this phrase is very unclear, but perhaps it relates to the minor port near the foot of the Howegate).

donner (do-nur) v., arch. to daze, stun, stupefy.

donnert (do-nur) adj., pp. stupid, stupefied – ‘is hei deif or juist donnart?’, ‘But dear me, Alice ... are ye donart? ye have forgot to gie Babie her letter’ [JTe], ‘Gudeness, here’s the Jumpin Jecks tae, Ah think Ah’m getting donnert’ [JEDM], ‘...o’ muckle snaw-drifts, twal fit deep, o’ heidstrang dugs, and donnert sheep’ [TD], ‘So this man gets nearer. dook (dook) v. to duck, dip, bathe, swim, get wet – 'The sun began to douk i' the main, The merle drappit singing ...' [JTe], 'As 'Robbie' and I strolled towards the town by the banks of the Teviot, we envied the boys who were dookin' in its clear waters' [BM1900], '...we would spend a happy afternoon 'dooking' there, making valiant attempts to learn to swim ...' [BM1905], '...Tae see Delaney in the Haugh, Or dook in Cobble Pool' [WLu], '...Or hear the mavis lift her sang, Or dook in Teviot's cool' [WL], '...Dookin in the Spetch was braw Divin in off the Dunk wa'' [IWL], n. a duck, dip, bathe – 'let's gaun for a dook it the Spetch', '...a 'dook' at the Pate's Plum or the Coble Pool' [WRW], '...A cood heh fund eet i ma hert ti heh stoppeet an gane in for a dook' [ECS], 'When yalla-girdit beis Gar yin turn an look To see whae's conversin' – Jamie hes a douk' [DH], 'The dinner hour was just long enough for a quick trip down to the Borthwick and a 'dook' before the afternoon session' [GOW] (also written 'douk'; see also dookin for aiples and dookit).

dook (dook) n. a wooden peg driven into a wall to hold a nail, v. to fix up a shelf by means of dooks.

dook (dook) n., arch. the buttocks, fundament, v. to push or help up, particularly in climbing a wall by stooping and placing the head or shoulders under the climber's buttocks and gently rising? (see also dooks; from Mediaeval English; cf. the less local dock).

dooker (doo-kur) n. swimming trunks – 'A hope ee brout yer dookers', 'Ma dooker and ma sandshoes And no a speck o' dirt' [AY] (sometimes plural 'dookers').

dookin chisel (doo-kin-chi-sul) n. a tool for making holes in a wall for dooks, also called a 'dooking ern'.

dookin ern (doo-kin-ern) n. a kind of cold chisel used for cutting holes for holding 'dooks' – '...in it was that hei'd hed ti get a dookin ern to get i'ti the sausages, no hei's fork' [IA] (also called a 'dookin chisel').

dookin for aiples (doo-kin-for-ā-pulz) v. ducking for apples with the teeth, usual a children's party game, particularly at Hallowe'en – '...O' dookin blind-fauld in a basin For aipples, reid cheekit or green' [WL], 'Dookin for aipples at Halloween Coats for goalposts in oor back green ...' [IWL].

dookit (doo-kee, -ki) pp., arch. ducked, bathed – ‘...to the valley of the Ale – (where I doukit and played langsyne)’ [BM1898].

dooks (dooks) n. a lift, boost, particularly to help climb a wall – ‘gie’s a dooks up ti this windi’, ‘A ca’ git up masel, A’ll need a dooks’ (from ‘dock’ or ‘dook’ meaning the buttocks, but perhaps also related to douk, a wooden peg fitted into a hole used to fix up shelves etc.).

dook-up (dook-up) v., arch. to push or hoist up, n. assistance in climbing a wall etc. (also ‘dooks-up’, cf. the shorter form dooks and the less common dock-up, which is the form elsewhere in Scotland).

Doorpool (dōr-pool, -pil) n. farmstead and former boggy region on the Abbotrule estate, about a mile south of Abbotrule House, and shortly before coming to Chesters on the A6088. There were Turnbells there in the late 17th and through much of the 18th century. James Turnbull is recorded as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Walter Scott as another householder. Andrew Oliver is recorded there in 1794 and George Elliot in 1797. Walter Lawson was a servant there in 1797. William Elliot was tenant in at least 1799–1801, Andrew Scott was servant there in 1799 and George White was servant in 1801. It was listed (along with Midquarter) among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1811, with a value of about £210. William Inglis was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £210. When the area was drained around the 1870s the skull and horns of an elk and several stag’s skulls were discovered. Some bronze implements were found near here in the 19th century and preserved in Jedburgh Museum. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond (it is ‘Douerpool’ in 1694; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Doorpool Hill (dōr-pool-hil) n. hill just to the north of Chesters, reaching a height of 270 m. On the south-east side are the remains of a hill-fort, circular and about 200 ft in diameter. It has been much denuded by cultivation, but is still visible as a circular depression, with traces of 3 ramparts. A stone cist was turned up by the plough in 1952, near the summit of the hill.

the doors (thū-dōrz) n., pl. equivalent of ‘the street’ for a row of country cottages, the residents talking about ‘up the doors’, ‘down the doors’, ‘along the doors’, etc. – ‘There on the road, before the doors Wi’ grand professional attitude ...’ [WP].

dootfi (doot-fi, doo’-fi) adj. doubtful – ‘His kindly heart was a’ his wealth, Thegither wi’ a doobtfu’ health’ [WP] (also spelled ‘doobtfu’ etc.).

doothfi (dooth-fi) adj., arch. gloomy – ‘But ilk ane’s rinning raving, doothfu’ – Guid weather’s dead’ [JoHa] (also written ‘doothfu’; cf. dowth).

doric (dō-reek) adj., poet. broad and rural (applied to Scots dialects from outside the central cities, particularly used for the dialect of the north-east, but also other parts of Scotland; origin probably in analogy with Edinburgh being ‘the Athens of the North’).

Dorothy Sike (do-ri-thee-ik) n. stream in Castleton Parish, to the west of the B6357, between Singdean and Saughtree. It is joined by Alison Sike and then runs into Cliffhope Burn, which becomes part of the the Dawston Burn. (it is marked ‘Doroty Grain’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is unclear who Alison and Dorothy were).

dort (dort, dor) n., poet. the pet, the sulks – ‘Nae wonder that I’m in the dort, And wae to see them’ [RF].

dorty (dor-tee) adj., poet. sulky, haughty – ‘For dorty Madge o’ Miryfaulds I dinna care a preen’ [JTe].

dottle (dō-tul) n., poet. a plug of tobacco left in a pipe – ‘And mind this, says Hab, knockin oot his dottle ...’ [DH].

dou see doo

douce (doos) adj., arch. gentle, quiet, sedate, sweet – ‘O dool! an’ what will douce fouk say, When this I tell – Death’s stown away’ [JoHa], ‘My grannie had an auld white cat, As douce an’ settled as hersel’ [JJ], ‘The auld sae decent and sae douce The young sae fu’ o’ glee’ [JT], ‘She’s a douse kind o’ body, auld Eppy M’Gee,

A crouse kind o' body, auld Eppy M'Gee' [JT], '... On a dooce-lookin' callant, where for a dowsor, Engaged tae look after the beast for an hoor' [BM1900], '... She reaches douce, mature July, An' Wattie finds he's far frae hame' [WP], 'Even my douce auld neebor the Moat ...' [DH] (also spelled 'douse' and 'dooce'; from French).

doucely (doos-lee) adv., arch. quietly, sedately, gently, sweetly – 'Down the Loan we come fu' doucely And ride to Mycelaw Green sae crouselly' [AB], 'Whilst round and round our beaux do spatter, Others doucely cross the water' [AB], 'Shurelie I hae dune douselie, an' quæietet mysel' ...' [HSR], 'Though doucely and eidently mending her claes ...' [JJ].

dought (dowcht) n., poet. dought, power – '...ane nichtie man isna deliferet bie meikle dought' [HSR], 'The Lord is my dought an' sanf, an' is becum my salvatione' [HSR].

doughter (dowch-tur) n., arch., poet. daughter – '... Jonet Scot, doughter to the said Waltyr Scot of Branxhelm ...' [SB1519], 'I am blak but bonnie, O ye doughters o' Jerusalem ...' [HSR], 'Kings' doughters wer amang the honorable weemen ...' [HSR], '... She might be aa that ye aye hae thought her, But – nae rash vows to your neebor's doughter!' [WL] (also written 'doughter'; cf. dochter and the more common dowter).

doughtily (dowch-ti-lee) n., poet. doughtily, valiantly – 'Throwe God we wull do doughtielie: for he it is that sall ramp down our enimes' [HSR].

Dougal (doo-gul) n. one of the guards (the other well-known one being Hope) on the Royal Mail coach in the early part of the 19th century, having a livery of scarlet and gold, and armed with blunderbuss and pistols.

Dougal (doo-gul) n. George (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, who had been in Calcutta. He married Marion Scott Elliot (1823–1908) and their daughter Charlotte Guise was baptised in Robertson in 1854. Other children included Marion Anne and Amy. After his death, his widow secondly married Rev. George Colville, minister of Canonbie.

dough-banni (dō-baw-ni) n., arch. a bannock made with prepared dough (also 'banna').

dough-boy (dō-boi) n. a dough-ball, dumpling, particularly when cooked with mince (the commonly used term for this varies regionally throughout Britain).

dought (dowcht) v., poet. was doubtful, dreaded, feared – 'But Dickie's heart it grew sae great,

Fala, &c. That ne'er a bit o't he dought to eat ...' [CPM].

Douglas (du-, doo-glis) n. Adam (15th C.) witness in 1492/3 for the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. His name is listed right after Walter, Vicar of Hassendean and many of the other witnesses were also local. Perhaps the same Adam was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 15 of his ewes from Bedrule. Adam (15th/16th C.) brother of William of Cavers. In 1502 he was called on to enter into the Justice-aire Thomas Rufy, who was partly responsible for the slaughter of John and James Jackson. Adam (15th/16th C.) brother of George in Swinside. In 1502, along with his other brothers Robert, Henry and Simon, he had remission for several crimes. This included kidnapping William Colville of Ravenscraig, Robert Boyd and John Kennedy and holding them for ransom in 'Leven', as well as destroying 3 horses from the same men, stealing a sword, a shield and a purse from them and planning to murder William Colville of Ochiltree. Ralph Ker of Primsidloch was their surety. Probably the same Adam, brother of James in Swinside was listed along with 2 other brothers called John in 1502 when they were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree; Douglasses of Bonjedward and Davidsons were also listed. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded at West Cote in 1718 when his daughter Jane was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who are probably also his included William (b.1721), Hugh (b.1724) and Elspeth (b.1732). Adam (18th C.) workman in Hawick. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for miller Alexander Heatley. Agnes (17th C.) sister of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire. She was probably daughter of Sir William of Cavers and sister of Sir Archibald. In 1663 she paid tax on £180 of land in Cavers Parish. Agnes (1783–1858) often referred to as 'Miss Douglas', she wrote 'Auld Brig o' Slittrick's Last Address to the Magistrates, Town-Council and Inhabitants of Hawick', which was the silver medal winning prize poem in the Auld Brig poetry competition of 1851. Her poem 'Address to the Teviot' was also published in 'Living Bards of the Border' in 1859. She was eldest daughter of Robert, surgeon at Damside, and Margaret Aitchison. She was sister of Dr. John and Robert (also a surgeon in Hawick), as well as Mary. She was known for her paintings as well as her literary abilities. Her portrait of Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton is in the Museum. In 1832 she had relatively mild symptoms of cholera while attending her sister Mary, who had a violent bout of the disease, but recovered. She is probably the 'Miss Douglas' who donated to the Archæological Society the family seal of Langlands of that Ilk in 1856. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Trows in 1791, East Mains in 1795 and Trows again in 1796 and 1800. He married Janet Douglas and their children probably included: Janet (b.1791); William (b.1793); Isabel (b.1794); Esther (b.1795); Betty (b.1796); Walter (b.1798); Peggy (b.1800); and James (b.1803). It is possible there are 2 different Alexanders here. Alexander (d.bef. 1841) farm worker in the Hawick area. He was a member of the Relief Kirk. He married Isabella Scott (b.1796/7, from Cavers Parish) and their children (born in Hawick and Cavers Parishes) included: William Douglas (b.1815); James (b.1817); Elizabeth (b.c.1819); Thomas (b.c.1821); Robert (b.c.1830); Henry (b.c.1832); and Agnes (b.c.1835). In 1841 and 1851 his widow and several children were living at 'Wester Branxholm Loch'. Andrew (13th C.) son of Archibald and brother of William. He may have been known as 'of Hermiston'. His son was William of Midlothian, who was grandfather of Sir William of Liddesdale, 'the Flower of Chivalry'. Frisken, ancestor of the Douglasses of Pumpherston, may also have been his son. He may be the 'Andrea de Douglas' who witnessed an indenture in 1259 between Sir William and Sir Hugh of Abernethy. Andrew of Timpendean (15th/16th C.) first Laird of Timpendean, which he inherited in 1479 from his father George of Bonjedward. He was probably 3rd son of George, 4th Laird of Bonjedward. He is recorded in 1492 when he had a charter of the lands of Hassendeanbank from Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock. He is probably the Andrew who was on the panel of 1492 for Walter Scott inheriting Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is also listed in a sasine of 1499/1500, along with Andrew McDougall of Makerstoun, George Ormiston and Archibald Heriot. He was probably the Andrew who was among a long list of men who had remission in 1504 for any involvement in the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey; he is listed right after George of Bonjedward and before John, Robert, William and Master Steven, some of whom may have been closely related to him. In a separate list Robert is recorded as his brother. He is also listed on the 1506 remission for the same crime (perhaps suggesting he was directly implicated in these events), with his brother Robert listed after him. In 1504 he appears to have been acting as an official for the

sasine of Maxton Craig granted to William Turnbull. He may have died about 1527, when Archibald of Timpendean (his son) was infefted in these same lands. He may also have had a son called Steven. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as 'andro dowglas'. This was on a list of associates of James of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. His name appears first on the list, perhaps suggesting some importance. Andrew of Timpendean (16th C.) son of Archibald. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. He is probably the Andrew who acted as bailie in 1555 in a sasine for the Haliburtons of Muirhouse, preserved in the Melrose Chartulary; the associated instrument of sasine was in 1557. He was also recorded as bailie for a sasine of Colmslie in 1557. He married Katharine, daughter and co-heiress of William Gledstains of Lanton. He was succeeded by his son Andrew. Patrick or 'Patie' may also have been his son (mentioned as Andrew's brother in 1584/5). Andrew 'Dand' of Timpendean (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew, he was the 4th Laird. He is mentioned in the Register of the Great Seal in 1574 and 1575 and in the Privy Council Register in 1576, 1584/5, 1591 and 1592. In 1584/5 he was one of the Border Laids asked to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they had helped in 'quieting of the countrie'; his brother 'Patie' is also listed. In 1591/2 William of Bonjedward is recorded acting as surety for him and in 1592 William Stewart of Traquair was surety for both him and George of Bonjedward. In 1600 he was on the 'retour' for the Kers of Cessford. He was recorded in 1610 when he was part of an inquest for lands in Rulewater. He may have been Laird in the 'Roll of the Clans' in 1590. He married Margaret, daughter of Gavin Turnbull of Ancrum Mill in 1562. He was succeeded by his son Stephen who married Jean, daughter of Andrew Haliburton of Muirhouselaw. Andrew of Friarshaw (d.bef. 1607) probably son of William, and hence 2nd Laird of Friarshaw, in Lilliesleaf Parish. However, the succession between him and his brothers John and George is unclear. He may be the Andrew of 'Freirschawe' recorded in 1563 as heritable owner of lands in Cavers; William Gourlay (presumably his legal appointee) ordered George and Ralph Douglas to remove themselves from a husbandland lying in Cavers. In 1581 he received money (probably a loan) from Thomas Ker of Kippielaw, and assigned to Ker some crops sown at Friarshaw, as well as livestock there and money owed to him by Andrew Ker in Midlem. In 1592 he is recorded as joint occupier, along with his brother John, of 'Freirschaw', when he and his son George had a regranting of the charter of the lands from Melrose Abbey. He was thus probably Laird between William and George (but these first generations of Douglasses of Friarshaw are unclear). He may be the 'Archibald' of Friarshaw (if the transcription is in error) recorded being granted the lands in 1595/6. In 1606 there was a charter of Friarshaw to John Haliburton of Muirhouseslaw; the lands had fallen back to the Commendator of Melrose because he and his son George had alienated the lands without the granter's consent. In 1607 James in Friarshaw (presumably his son, or possibly brother) was in a court case with Haliburton over an obligation of a debt to James Douglas of Cavers. He married Marion Douglas (from an unknown branch of the family) and was probably succeeded by his son George. William and Robert were recorded as brothers of George of Friarshaw in 1617 (and Robert as son of William was his nephew), and hence William and Robert may have been other sons, but alternatively could have been his brothers (if this was a different George). Rev. Andrew (d.1607) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1595, he became minister of Southdean in 1595 and was translated to Hownam in 1605. Perhaps the same 'Doctor' Andrew was recorded as a schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1603 and 1612. Andrew of Friarshaw (d.bef. 1645) son of George, he was the said to be the 4th Laird. He and his father made a petition to the Privy Council in 1618, complaining about attacks by their neighbours the Riddells. He was probably the 'Andro Douglas, appearand of Frierschaw' who was on the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1623. He was probably the 'Andro of Friarshaw and Priestoun' who was at the Assizes of Edinburgh in 1624. Either he or his son was listed as 'A. Douglas of Friarshaw' in the 1643 valuation for Lilliesleaf Parish, with his lands being valued at £285 13s 4d. He conveyed the lands of Friarshaw to his son Andrew when he got married in 1640. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, while other children may have included: William, who married Janet Scott before 1649 and had 3 sons; and Janet, who in 1623 married Robert, son and heir apparent of Andrew Davidson of Samieston. Andrew (17th C.) listed at 'Roule' in 1632. He was one of the witnesses to the sasine for Appotside and Tythehouse, sold by Rev. William Weir to Edward Lorraine. Andrew (17th C.) listed as tenant in Southdean Law in the 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He could be the same Andrew listed in Southdean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (d.c.1685) tenant in East Middle. His will is recorded in 1685. He was surely related to William, who was recorded at the same farm in 1687. Andrew of Friarshaw (d.1698) son of Andrew, he was said to be 5th Laird. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. In 1640 he married Jean Home, who came from the Polwarth family, and at that time his father conveyed Friarshaw to him. His children include: Thomas, who was a doctor in London (d.1686); Henry, who succeeded; and possibly George. Andrew (18th C.) son of Thomas, who was 5th son of Sir William of Cavers, with his mother being Jean Pringle of the Haining. He was described as a merchant of Suffolk Street in London. A letter (probably) of his from Suffolk Street in 1761 is in the archives of the Hotham family of Scarborough and South Dalton. He appears to have married Mary Mercer in Wimbledon in 1752. His 2 sons were: George, who succeeded to Cavers; and Archibald, who succeeded to Adderstone and Midshiels. His wife died in London in 1813. Andrew (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. Dr. Andrew (1772–1826) youngest surviving son of Archibald of Timpendean. He was Physician in the Royal Navy and died in London. He is easily confused with another Dr. Andrew who lived at Ancrum Mill and died in 1852. Andrew (b.c.1775) tenant at Ancrum Mill. He married Jane Buckham, who died in 1850, aged 70. His children included: Margaret (d.1822), who died aged 15; Janet (or Jessie) (b.1816), who married George Cranston in Jedburgh; William (1821–75), who married Annie Binnie, died at Cleikim Inn and had a son Andrew who died at Bonjedward, and another, George Binnie; and 3 children who died in infancy. The family are buried in Jedburgh Abbey graveyard. He seems likely to be connected with the Timpendean and Bonjedward Douglasses. Andrew (b.1813/4) from Berwick, he was a toy dealer and hardware dealer on the High Street, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 12–14 High Street and listed as a hardware merchant. His wife was Sarah and their children included Thomas, Andrew and John. Andrew of Saughtree (1865–1948), son of George and Isabella Turnbull, he was born in Oxnam Parish. He farmed Riccalton, Doorpool, Philogar and Saughtree (where he was living in the 1930s). He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He firstly married Sybil Dodd, who died in 1912, aged 44. He secondly married Jessie D. MacKay, who died in 1938, aged 67. His eldest son George Lawson died infancy at Roccalton in 1903. They are buried at Oxnam Cemetery. Ann also 'Anna' (b.c.1702) daughter of Archibald, 13th Laird of Cavers. All of her 4 brothers died without male issue, and the succession went to George, the son of her cousin Andrew. cousin Thomas. She married William Campbell in Fife about 1721. Anna Elizabeth (d.1898) only child of Archibald of Adderstone and Margaret Violet Pringle, who inherited Clifton and Haining. She married John Pattison in Melrose. She was recorded as 'Mrs. Anne Elizabeth Pringle or Pattison' who paid the land tax on Adderstone and North Synton in about 1874. In her 1875 will she nominated her husband to succeeded to the lands and baronies of Fairnilee and Haining, failing which Andrew Seth, son of Smith K. Seth and Margaret Little, from Edinburgh. Sir Archibald (d.c.1240) one of the earliest known Douglasses, probably son of William. He is the first recorded Archibald in the family. He signed charters in 1190 and 1232, and other undated ones. He also witnessed a charter for the Earl of Menteith in 1213 (recorded when it was inspected in 1261), along with William. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Crawford of Crawfordjohn, and his sons probably included: Sir William, who succeeded; and Sir Andrew of Hermiston, ancestor of the Earls of Morton. Sir Archibald (c.1294–1333) son of Sir William Lord Douglas 'le Hardi' and brother of 'the Good Sir James'. He is referred to as 'of Liddesdale, Cavers, etc.' as well as 'of Douglas'. In the 1320s he received estates at Morebattle and Kirkandrews. He was tutor to Sir James's son after his death in 1330. He is said to have engineered Edward Baliol's defeat at Annan in 1332. He became Regent of Scotland after the capture of Sir Andrew Murray in early 1333. He then (probably illegally) occupied Liddesdale and other Border lands. He led a force that devastated northern England and then travelled to relieve the siege at Berwick. He was killed at the ensuing Battle of Halidon Hill. He was sometimes later referred to as 'Tyneman' (i.e. 'loser') like a later Archibald. He married Beatrix, daughter of Alexander Lindsay of Crawford (and after his death she secondly married Sir Robert Erskine of Erskine). Their children included: William, who became 1st Earl of Douglas; James who was killed by the English in 1333; possibly John, a knight recorded in the retinue of David II; Eleanor, who apparently married 5 times, to Alexander Bruce, Earl of Carrick, Sir James Sandilands of West Calder, Sir William Tours of Dalry, Sir Duncan Wallace of Sundrum and Sir Patrick Hepburn of Hailes; and Elizabeth (although this could be confusion with a later generation), who married Alexander Stewart of Garlieston. Sir Archibald 'The Grim' or 'Black Douglas' (c.1328–c.1400) Lord of Galloway and 3rd Earl of Douglas, illegitimate son of James 'The Good'. He was also related to Sir William, Knight of Liddesdale, whose legitimate male line had died out. He witnessed a Douglas charter in 1351. He may be the Lord Archibald who witnessed a confirmation of the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the 1360s by Earl William of Douglas. He was appointed Warden of the Western Marches in 1364 and held the position from 1368 until his death. He held lands in Liddesdale and was also later appointed Warden of the East March. He became Sheriff and Constable of Edinburgh and later Lord of Galloway and Bothwell. In the period 1384–88 he witnessed the granting of Drumlanrig to William, illegitimate son of James, Earl of Douglas. He succeeded to the Earldom of Douglas and other estates on the death of his father in 1388. In 1389 several lands were confirmed to him, including Bedrule and Selkirk Forest and he also inherited lands from his cousin, James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, who fell at Otterburn; this included Cavers. He witnessed charters during the reigns of Robert II and Robert III. In 1393 he was already Baron of Hawick, according to a charter of the lands of Teindside and Harwood. He was involved in many campaigns, being captured at the battle of Poitiers in 1356 and helping include Scotland in the 1391 peace negotiations between England and France. He also prepared a special code of law for the governing of the Marches. His death came possibly during a siege by Henry IV. In 1362 he married Joan Murray (or Moray), who was probably grand-daughter of Maurice, Earl of Strathearn, and daughter of Sir Thomas Murray, Lord of Bothwell. Note that some accounts say he married Sir Thomas' widow, but this seems likely to be a confounding of mother and daughters of the same name; however, it is possible that he has contracted to marry the mother, who then died in the plague and instead he married the daughter. In any case, his wife was heiress of the Bothwell titles, which included the Barony of Hawick. Their children were: Archibald, who succeeded and also held the Barony of Hawick for a few years; James, who succeeded his great-nephew as 7th Earl; Marjory, who married David Stewart, Duke of Rothesay, son of Robert III, and secondly married Walter Halyburton of Dirleton; Eleanor, who married Sir Alexander Fraser of Philorth; and an illegitimate son, Sir William of Nithsdale, who married Lady Egidia Stewart, daughter of Robert II. Archibald 'The Tyneman' (c.1372–1424) 4th Earl of Douglas, eldest son of Sir Archibald, the 3rd Earl and Johanna Moray. He was also Duke of Torraine. He witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. In 1400 he was made Lord General of the Marches, defeating the force of the Earl of March and Henry 'Hotspur' Percy at Preston in 1400. In 1400/1 he succeeded his father as Earl of Douglas, including the Regalities of the Forest of Ettrick, Lauderdale and Romanno. He lost an eye in the Battle of Homildon Hill, but fought with the Percys at Shrewsbury in 1403. In a 1403 sasine for Sprouston his bailie in that part was James Gledstains (probably of that Ilk and Cocklaw) and John Cranston (son of sir William of that Ilk) was described as his squire. He was reconciled with the Earl of March while in captivity, returned to Scotland in 1409, but later went to France with a Scottish army. Sometime around 1406 or 1407 (while a prisoner in England) he granted Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig the lands and Barony of Hawick, 'for his service'. It was possibly he who took possession of the lands around Hawick from the Lovels in a charter of 1412, with the support of James I, and may have began building the first part of the Tower in Hawick (this is complicated by the lands having been given to the Murrays by an earlier Scottish King, and passing to the Drumlanrig branch of the Douglasses at a similar time). In 1413 there is a 'letter of precept' recording how James Gledstains of that Ilk was serving as his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers. Charles VII, King of France made him Duc de Touraine in 1424. Sometime before 1390 he married Margaret Stewart, daughter of King Robert III. They had 2 known children: Archibald, who succeeded; and Elizabeth, who married John Stewart, Earl of Buchan, secondly married Thomas Stewart, Lord Badenoch, and thirdly married William Sinclair, Earl of Orkney. Dogged by apparent bad luck in battle, he earned his nickname the 'Tyneman', i.e. 'loser'. He was killed at Verneuil along with his 2nd son James, fighting against the Duke of Bedford. Archibald (1373–c.1435) 1st Laird of Cavers, illegitimate son of James Earl of Mar, he is said to have borne the Douglas banner at the Battle of Otterburn where his father fell (but must have been quite young at the time). He was granted the Lordship of Cavers and the heritable Sheriffship of Roxburghshire by his aunt Isabella, Countess of Mar, but this was not confirmed at the time by King Robert III, and hence followed many years of confusion over the Barony of Cavers. He finally took up his inheritance after the death of his aunt, the confirmation of her original charter being granted by James I in 1412. He had Cavers House was built for him. He was a hostage in England for the Earl of Douglas in 1405. Note that some sources suggest he did not die until 1456, but this must surely have been a later Archibald. He was Sheriff in 1415 when he witnessed the swap of lands between Robert Scott of Rankleburn and Melrose Abbey. He was Sheriff in 1424 when a 'retour of inquest' for lands of Hownam was made in Hawick. And he was probably the Archibald who was Sheriff in 1424 in a document for lands of 'Swynset'. He was Sheriff of Teviotdale when he witnessed a charter of for Patrick Lindsay in 1425. In 1428/9 he was given sasine of the lands of 'Mal Patrikhope', 'Bradele' and 'Le Schewis' in Liddesdale by William, Earl of Angus. He was Sheriff in 1429/30 at a 'retour of inquest' for the lands of Caverton. In 1430 he is designated 'Lord of Cavers' when he witnessed a charter between Andrew Rule of Primside and Andrew Ker of Altonburn. In 1431 he witnessed the 'letter of transumpt' of the earlier charter where the Inglis's granted half of Branhholme to the Scotts and the same year was 'Archibaldo de Douglas vicecomite de Roxburgh' when he witnessed the document transferring Heap from the Langlands to the Scotts. In his attestation to the same transfer he was 'Archibald Dowglas, lord of Cauerys and Scherraffe off Teuidaylle'. In an existing sasine of 1432 his son William was given the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire, but with a 'frank tenement of the lands and exercise of the office of sheriff ... for all the days of his life'. It therefore seems reasonable to assume that he was becoming aged or infirm at that time, and it is said that he died during the reign of James I (i.e. before 1437). He witnessed charters for Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1430 and 1433/4. A feu charter of 1433 (regarding the lands of 'Byrkwode', near the present Duke's Wood) was witnessed by him. His wife was Margaret (from an unknown family) and he was succeeded by his son William; although some genealogies suggest he was succeeded by Archibald, this was more likely his grandson. He may also have had a daughter, Eleanor. Archibald (c.1390–1438) grandson of Archibald ‘the Grim’ and son of Archibald ‘the Tyneman’. He became 5th Earl of Douglas, as well as Earl of Wigtown, 2nd Duke of Touraine and 1st Count of Longueville. He was a hostage in England for his father, the Earl of Douglas, in 1405. In 1407 he witnessed the confirming charter from his father to William of Drumlanrig for the Barony of Hawick. A charter he granted in 1423 contains the first mention of Newark Castle. In 1427 he granted the Barony of Hawick to William, son of Sir William of Drumlanrig. In 1435 he granted the lands of ‘Brankishelme, Goldilandis, Quitlaw, Quitrig, Todschawhillis, Harwood and Kirkton Tofts. He was Lord of the Regality of Jedwood Forest, and in that capacity in 1436 he bestowed the lands of ‘Wolle and Wolhopelee’ (i.e. Wolfelee) to his esquire David Hume. He also held the superiority of Ettrick Forest, but gave up part of his rights there to James I. He may also have founded the Collegiate Church of Bothwell, to which Hawick was attached as a canonry and prebend in 1447 (although this could have been his son). He married Matilda, daughter of David Lindsay, 1st Earl Crawford. He secondly married Euphemia, daughter of Sir Patrick Graham, Earl of Strathearn; she married James, Lord Hamilton after his death, and continued to receive income from the farms of Winterburgh, Altrieve, Berrybush and Craig Douglas. His children (all by his 2nd marriage) were: William, who succeeded; David; and Margaret, the ‘Fair Maid of Galloway’, who married both the 8th and 9th Earls of Douglas. Sir Archibald (1410–c.58) probably 3rd Laird of Cavers, and likely the son of William. However, there is some confusion over these generations, no general agreement among published genealogies, and the years of his birth and death are unconfirmed. He is easily confused with the earlier Archibald (1st of Cavers). He was one of the Conservators of the truce with England in 1438 and again in 1451. In 1445 he was witness for a lease for the lands of Harden Wood in Borthwickshiels. He witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castlelaw in 1448. In 1450 he witnessed the ‘retour’ of William Douglas for the Barony of Hawick and in 1451 witnessed the charter for exchanging Milsington with Heap. In 1452 he and his son William were appointed as Bailies of Liddesdale and Keepers of Hermitage Castle by George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus and Lord of Liddesdale; this came with income from lands in Liddesdale. In 1454/5 his seal was attached to a document for Walter Ker of Altonburn, since

Ker did not have one of his own. He was Sheriff in 1455 when he gave in the accounts for Roxburghshire. In 1456 he was ‘Archbaldo de Douglas, milite, domino de Cauers ac vicecomite de Roxburgh’ when he witnessed a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Buccleuch; his son Archibald was also mentioned. In 1457 he was Sheriff of Roxburgh when he was appointed as one of the conservators of the truce with England. In 1458/9 he had a discharge with Thomas Cranston of that ilk over rents for Denholm Mains and other lands. In 1464/5 he appears to be still Sheriff of Roxburghshire in the sasine granting Kirkton Mains and Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig, but perhaps this is probably the next Sir Archibald (his grandson). He was succeeded by his son William. Archibald (1426–55) son of James, 7th Earl of Douglas. He was the slightly younger twin brother of James, who became the 9th Earl after their older brother William. He became Earl of Moray by marrying the Countess. He was one of 5 Black Douglas brothers who challenged the authority of the King. He died fighting the King’s forces at the Battle of Arkinholm, where his brother Hugh, Earl of Ormond was captured, to be executed later. For their help in this battle the Scotts of Buccleuch gained many of the Douglas’ lands in Roxburghshire. Archibald (15th C.) son of Sir Archibald of Cavers. In 1456 he and his father witnessed a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch, relating to Whitchesters. The next Laird appears to have been William, who was presumably his elder brother (but this is far from certain). Archibald (15th C.) on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. His name appears as simply ‘Archbald of Douglas’, but it is unclear where he came from. Sir Archibald (d.1486) 3rd of Cavers (although sometimes referred to as the 4th, with all subsequent numberings also ambiguous), son of William. He was said to have been a Commissioner for settling a truce with England in 1457 and a Warden of the Marches in 1459. In 1461 he was witness to a sasine for lands near Branhholme given by Sir Walter Scott to Katherine Inglis; at this time he was son and heir apparent of William of Cavers. He was granted the Barony of Cavers in February 1464/5, according to a surviving sassine (and a ‘retour of service’ in the previous month). Also in 1464/5 he was Sheriff of Roxburghshire in the sasine granting Kirkton Mains and Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1469/70 the Governorship of Hermitage

Castle was granted to Sir David Scott of Buccleuch (and his son Walter), taking over from him and previously his father William. He may be the Archibald of Douglas mentioned in a document relating to the lands of Broadlee in the Barony of Hawick in 1479 and the man of the same name who acted as a bailie for Archibald, Earl of Angus to give sasine for Wolfelee in the same year. Also in 1479 a feud was mentioned in Parliament between his part of Teviotdale and his uncle and the Laird of Cranston. He was succeeded by his son Sir William and also had a son Adam, who is mentioned in 1502. His daughter Elizabeth married Sir Alexander Stewart of Garlies. It is possible there are 2 generations being confounded here; in 1470 William Douglas of Cavers was granted certain lands on Hermitage Water (with the sasine being given in 1472), and these were to go to his 'brother-german' Archibald if William had no male heirs. Archibald (c.1449–1514) 5th Earl of Angus, called 'The Great Earl' or 'Bell the Cat', he was son of George, the 4th Earl. He inherited many titles and estates from his father, including the Lordship of Liddesdale and Ewesdale. He had a sasine for Liddesdale and Jedforest in 1464. Also in 1464 he (or someone in his name) bestowed the lands of Stonedge on David Home of Wedderburn. In 1469/70 he assigned David Scott of Buccleuch and his son Walter as Keepers of Hermitage Castle. In 1470 he gave a charter of certain lands on Hermitage Water to 'his kinsman', William of Cavers, with David Scott mentioned as his kinsman. And in 1471/2, after Walter had died, he arranged for David's 2nd son David to marry his sister Jean, renewing the arrangement of the Scotts as Bailies of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale. In 1474 it is recorded that one of the King's courriers was paid to send him and David Scott a message about a day of truce on the Border. In 1476 he granted lands to Robert Elliot of Redheugh 'for his guid and faithful servis', with further Liddesdale grants in 1479 and 1484. In 1478 he granted a 'tack' of lands in Selkirk to David Scott, heir of David of Branhholme. In 1474 and 1479 he was superior of the lands of Wolfelee when they passed from George to David Home. He was appointed Warden of the East Marches in 1481. In 1482 he was Lord of Douglas, Jedworth forest and Liddesdale when Thomas Armstrong resigned Mangerton to him and he granted the lands to David Scott of Branhholme. In 1483 he was leased parts of Hartwood and Berrybush from the Crown and also given the lease on other nearby lands as Keeper of Newark Castle. He also served as Justiciar for Lothian in about 1483. He led the mutiny of nobles against Cochrane, who had been governing for King James III. When the fable of the mice tying a bell round the cat's neck was related to the nobles he apparently said 'I will bell the cat!' (hence his nickname). He was also involved in other intrigues with England. During the minority of James IV, around 1488, he became Sheriff of Roxburgh, as well as 3 other counties, and in 1488/9 resigned the Lordships of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale to his son and heir George. In 1491 he made some deal with the English King over conditions under which Hermitage would be surrendered, and word of this reaching the Scottish King caused him and his son to surrender their Liddesdale estates and Hermitage Castle. Thus he exchanged Liddesdale and Hermitage with Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, for the lands and castle of Bothwell and there was a charter from King James IV in 1491 for the exchange of Liddesdale with Kilmarnock. In 1493 he was retoured as heir to his father George, in the Lordship of Eskdale. In 1502 he resigned the Lordship of Eskdale into the hands of the King. Too old to fight at Flodden, he died the following year, but 2 of his sons (George and William) and perhaps 200 other Douglasses fell at Flodden. It is also said that he did accompany the expedition into England, but argued with the King about accepting Surrey's challenge and stood out the battle. He was said to have had a liaison with Joan, daughter of John, Lord Kennedy, who was later a mistress of James V. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Boyd, Lord of Kilmarnock. He also later married Katherine, daughter of Sir William Stirling of Keir, but divorced her. His sons were: George, who died at Flodden; Sir William, who also died at Flodden; Sir Archibald of Kilspindie, who became High Treasurer of Scotland and Provost of Edinburgh; and Gavin, Bishop of Dunkeld. A stirrup said to belong to him was donated to Hawick Museum in 1864. Archibald (15th C.) brother of William. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; given that he was 'fratrem Wilhelmi', who was mentioned in the next case, it seems likely that they were both related to the Douglasses of Cavers, but the exact connection is not known. He was also called in 1494/5, when stated to be brother of William, and the Sheriff was fined for his non-appearance (as well as that of his brother). Archibald (15th/16th C.)

recorded in Effledge in 1502. He had remission for his part in the murder of John Laidlaw in Lilliesleaf, with George in the Trows as his surety. He and his brother William also had remission in the same year for stealing sheep from James Grahamslaw in 'Camys' (probably Minto Kames). Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded in Caveling in 1502. He had remission for stealing cattle and horses from John Ale Moor of that Ilk, as well as capturing and ransoming him, accompanied by William Forrester and Alan Forrester, traitors of Leven. George in the Trows acted as his surety. Archibald (1489–1557) 6th Earl of Angus, son of George, Master of Angus, who was killed at Flodden, and grandson of the 5th Earl. His sister Alison married Robert Blackadder (killed at Flodden) and later David Home of Wedderburn, who was 4th Laird of Wolfelee. In 1509 he married Margaret, daughter of Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. He later married Margaret Tudor, widow of James IV. This marriage contributed to civil war, with Margaret losing her regency to the Duke of Albany. He was retoured in his father's lands in 1513 (after Flodden), including the Barony of Jedforest. He was accused of treason in 1521 and deported to France. However, he soon returned to Scotland with the support of Henry VIII. In 1524/5 he was sworn in as Warden and Lieutenant of the Borders, with the Kerrs, Scotts, Ruthersfords and others promising to help him keep order. In 1525, as Warden of Middle and East Marches, he suppressed trouble in the Borders. He also led raids that captured many men, destroying their houses and goods, including at Borthwickshiels in 1526, aided by Lord Fleming and others. In 1526 he led a surprise raid on Liddesdale that carried off 600 oxen, 3,000 sheep, 500 goats and a large number of horses. In 1526 Scott of Buccleuch and others tried to wrest control of the young King James V from him at Skirmish Field, near Melrose. He was listed in 1526/7 among prominent men charged by James V not to attack the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton while those men were in 'respite' for the charge of treason. After James V gained control over his own destiny, he was forced to flee south of the Border, and assisted the English in attacks on his countrymen. A summons for him in 1528 also contained a list of his supporters, including John Langlands and John Gourlay (both probably local Lairds). In 1529 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was granted his Lordship of Jedforest. He returned to Scotland in 1542, attempting to gain the hand of Mary Stuart for Henry's son Edward. He himself married a third Margaret, daughter of Robert, Lord Maxwell, also in 1542. After Lord Hertford's rampage through southern Scotland he turned against his former English supporters, was appointed Lieutenant of the South of Scotland in 1544 and the following year fought at the Battle of Ancrum Moor. He was also involved with the Battle of Pinkie, and narrowly escaped capture by the English in 1548. Finally resigning his Earldom in 1547, he was succeeded by his nephew David Douglas, while his only surviving legitimate child, Margaret was the mother of Lord Darnley. His son James, Master of Angus died young, and he also had a natural son George (d.1590), Bishop of Moray. Archibald of Timpendean (16th C.) son of Andrew, he was 2nd Laird. In 1527 he had a gift of lands in 'Langton' in Roxburghshire. He also had a 'precept of clare constat' for the lands of Hassendeanbank. These had belonged to Andrew his father. In 1517 he married Ann, daughter of Peter Marshall from Lanton, and was succeeded by his son Andrew. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Archibald 8th Earl of Angus (1556–88) son of David, the 7th Earl. He succeeded to his titles in 1558. He was one of the executors of the will of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1574. In 1574 there was a 'bond of manrent' with him from several Ruthersfords and another with several Turnbells. In 1576 there was another bond with 'certain Gentlemen of the Border' from East Teviotdale and one with the Kers of Primsidloch. In 1573 he was appointed a Privy Councillor and Sheriff of Berwick, in 1574 Lieutenant-General over all the Borders, in 1577 Warden of the West Marches and Steward of Fife and in 1578 re-appointed Lieutenant-General of the Western Marches of Scotland. Following his support of Morton he was declared guilty of high treason in 1581 and fled to England. He then lost his estates, baronies and lordships, including Feu-Rule, Wells and Hallrule. Along with other banished Lords he captured Stirling Castle in 1585 and secured an agreement from the King to restore their estates. In 1586 he became Earl of Morton and was again appointed Warden of the Marches and Lieutenant-General of the Border, with special instructions from the King about how to deal with the Borderers; however, he died 2 years later. He held justice courts at Jedburgh in January and April of 1586/7 and was then stated to be Lieutenant of the East and Middle Marches; a long list of criminals who did not appear was given (valuable as a historical record of Borderers). In 1587 he served as cautioner for William of Cavers, George, younger of Bonjedward, John Turnbull of Minto, John Edmonston of that Ilk, Gavin Elliott of Stobs, Walter Ker of Littledean, Richard Rutherford of Edgerston and Hector Turnbull of Wauchope. He married Mary Erskine (daughter of the Earl of Mar, who held lands at Synton), Margaret Leslie (daughter of the Earl of Rothes) and Jean Lyon daughter of Lord Glamis). However, he had no sons by any of his wives and was succeeded by his cousin William. Archibald (d.1610) son of William of Cavers, he became Chaplain of the Archdeaconry of Glasgow in 1573, holding the Parsonage and Vicarage of Peebles. In 1603 he and Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk were sureties for Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw. There was a feud between the Douglasses around Peebles and the Horsburghs in which he was involved. In 1607 he made assurance that he and his kinsmen would not harm William Horsburgh in Sarogis; his named kinsmen were his sons John and James, his nephews William Elliot in Peebles, James Elliot and Thomas Douglas and William, son of James Douglas of Cavers. His son John was Parson of Kilbucho, and was served heir to him in 1611. A second son was killed by William Horsburgh of that Ilk in 1610 and his daughter Agnes married John Galloway, an Edinburgh lawyer. In 1653 his granddaughters Margaret and Jean were served heirs to his tenement of land in Peebles. Archibald (d.c.1602) recorded in 1602 when his son William was served heir to him in a cottage-land of land within the town of Lilliesleaf. Perhaps the same Archibald in Friarshaw is recorded being granted a cottage-land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. Archibald of Tofts (16th/17th C.) said to be one of 4 natural sons of the Regent James, 4th Earl of Morton, who was executed in 1581 after being captured by a Stewart. There could be confusion between Archibald of Pittendreich and Archibald of Tofts, although it seems that they may have been the same man. He was one of the associates of Sir James of Parkhead and Torthorwald (perhaps his nephew), who was killed on Edinburgh High Street by one of Stewarts in 1608. Also in 1608 his lands (of Tofts presumably) were served to his nephew Martin of Tofts (son of his brother William of Crook); this establishes a connection between the Douglasses of Crook and Tofts, even if these families are still confusing. He was Commissioner for Berwick at the 1617 Scottish Parliament; he may have been the first of Tofts and also Laird of Fastcastle (although this may be a different Tofts and hence a different man). Also in 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. His brother James is recorded in a complaint of 1618. In 1619 appointed as a Commissioner for the Merse, for dealing with idle and incorrigible persons and was also appointed as Sheriff of Berwickshire. Also in 1619 he had a charter for the lands of 'Pittlisheuche' and in an undated charter the lands of Hartsyde. In 1620 he was part of a Commission to appoint Robert Swinton of that Ilk as Sheriff of Berwick. His wife may have been Alison Home. His children included William of Tofts and Archibald of Lumsden. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1607 as master of an 'adventure school' in Hawick. He was thus one of the earliest Hawick teachers that we know about, even although there is no other information about him. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as possessor of 'Porterleyne Greina' in Liddesdale in 1632. This is Greina in the very south of Roxburghshire. He was a servant of William, Earl of Morton. In 1634 his daughter Margaret was served heir to his lands of Greina, Purvinen and Burnmouth. Archibald (1609–55) eldest son of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas, from whom he inherited the title Earl of Angus. He signed the National Covenant, but appears to have been unwilling to take up arms in its defence. Among his titles was the superiority of Jedforest (i.e. Southdean). He married firstly Anne, daughter of Esmé Stewart, 3rd Duke of Lennox, and secondly Jane, daughter of David, 2nd Earl of Wemyss. His eldest son James succeeded to the Lordship of Jedforest and would become 2nd Marquess of Douglas. Rev. Archibald (c.1641–96) youngest son of Douglas of Tilwhilly, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1661. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Kelso in 1663 and ordained that year at Douglas. He was translated to Cavers in 1664, where he was minister for about 9 years. He moved to Newton in 1673 and then Newbattle in 1681, but was deprived later that year for refusing to take the Test. He was re-admitted in 1683 in Saltoun, where he remained until his death. He married Janet Carmichael (daughter of the minister of Ewes) in 1694. Their son Archibald became Wagon-master General to the British Forces, and his son John became Bishop of Salisbury. They also had 2 daughters, Helen and Janet. Archibald of Hawthornside (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He paid the land tax for Hawthornside in 1678 when it was valued at £171. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglasses. Sir Archibald (d.1669) 10th Laird of Cavers, son of Sir William, he was also 'of Denholm and Spittal'. In 1634 he and his wife Rachel Skene had a charter from Charles I for several lands, including the town of Denholm. He was one of the signatories of the Covenant of 1638 in Hawick. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was 'feared of Cavers' when listed among the members of the Committee of War for Roxburghshire; father and son served as Convenor in 1649. In 1640 he was sent from the Scots army, 'with a trumpeter, and only two gentlemen', to assure the mayor and aldermen of Newcastle that they would be unharmed by the passage of the army. He may have commanded part of the Parliamentary Army in the 1640s. In 1648 he (along with his father) was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He bought the lands of Kirkton from Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1655. He is probably the Sir Archibald who in 1656 witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish for Thomas Scott of Whitslaid. He succeeded on the death of his father in about 1658. In 1658 he bought Denholm and Spittal from William, Lord Cranston (whose family had held them in feu for generations), uniting these lands with the Cavers estate. In 1660 he was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire, serving until 1663. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was fined £3,600. This is partly because he took the side of the ministers who were ejected from their livings in that year, declining to approve of the appointment of the replacement for Rev. Gillan. Also in 1662 he resigned his lands and titles in favour of his eldest son William, and William's wife Katherine Rigg, following an agreement made as part of their 1659 marriage contract. He was probably the Sheriff who paid the land tax on £5344 for lands in Cavers Parish and £4480 in Kirkton Parish in 1663. He married Rachel, daughter of Sir James Skene of Halyards, who was President of the Court of Session; their initials (S.A.D. and D.R.S.) appear over the fireplace in Westgate Hall, which they had built in 1663. He was only Laird for a few years, and was succeeded by his son Sir William. He also had a son James (1633–74), who was murdered by Andrew Rutherford. Capt. Thomas, described as brother of the deceased Laird in the 1680s was probably also a son of his; he was a soldier known for killing Covenanters. He also had daughters Anne (b.1636), who married Robert Bennet of Chesters in 1652 and Elizabeth (b.1637), who married Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh, Archibald (17th C.) described as 'tutor of Cavers' when he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678. It is unclear who this refers to, perhaps an uncle of the 12th Laird, William, who was in his minority. Archibald (17th C.) listed at Whithope among 'The poor in Hauick Paroch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Archibald (17th/18th C.) weaver in Nether Southfield. His son Francis was baptised in 1706, with the witnesses being Bailies Walter Graham and George Martin. Archibald (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1706 he married Marion Wright and their children included: Marion (b.1707); Archibald (b.1709); and John (b.1722). The witnesses in 1707 were weavers James Lunn and John Swan, and in 1709 were James Scott 'Doctor' and Robert Elliot. It is possible he is the weaver called Douglas (with no first name given) whose son Thomas was baptised in Hawick in 1713; the witnesses were Thomas Shiel (probably in Todshawhill, who may have given his name to the child) and 'drover' James Scott. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of 'Rige' in Kirkton Parish. This is perhaps Winningtonrig. His children included William (b.1716), Robert (b.1718) and Agnes (b.1720). Archibald of Cavers (c.1668–1741), 13th Laird, son of Sir William and younger brother of Sir William the 12th Laird. In 1695 he was the 'brother to Cavers' who was appointed as a Commissioner of Supply to Roxburghshire. He was also described as brother to Sir William of Cavers when he contributed £500 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. Additionally in 1695 he was probably the 'Mr' Archibald who witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry (probably his brother-in-law). In 1696 he rented Minto from Helen, Countess of Tarras for 3 years. He succeeded to the Cavers Lairdship from his brother William in 1698. He was also Sheriff Principal of Roxburghshire. He was listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. He became a Privy Councillor in 1703. He was Commissioner for Roxburghshire to the Scottish Parliament (i.e. M.P.) 1700–07. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for George Douglas of Friarshaw. He voted for the Union in the last Scottish Parliament of 1707. He then represented Roxburghshire in the first Parliament of Great Britain 1707–08. He also represented the Dumfries Burghs as M.P. 1727–34. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £7263 in 1707. A letter to him (from the Duke of Argyll) as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1716 complains about the local men who have apparently deserted from the King's service. He was Reciever General for Scotland 1705–18 (it is said the appointment was due to his strong Hanoverian leanings). He complained that his dismissal was part of an intrigue by pro-Jacobites, but he was granted a £400 pension in 1721 and in 1725 was appointed Paymaster (or Postmaster) General for Scotland. He was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1707. He was a curator for the Dukes of Douglas and Queensberry when they were minors. He was said to have been a great supporter of the loyalist cause in the Jacobite uprising of 1715, advancing money to the Scottish exchequer and raising forces in Roxburghshire. He also supported Andrew Murray (ancestor of James 'Dictionary' Murray), a loyalist who had been persecuted in the north, settling him in the lands at Spittal Tower. In 1723 he complained to the Bailies of Selkirk that a shoemaker there had accused him of theft and threatened to throw stones at him. He was also one of the main instigators for setting up a spinning school in Hawick in 1734. Also in 1734 he witnessed the marriage of his niece Violet Douglas with John Oliver of Dinlabyre. In 1738 he sold Over Hassendean to Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch and in 1739 sold 'Ladylands' to John, Duke of Roxburghe. In 1739 he and his son were among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. He married Anna, daughter of Francis Scott of Gorrenberry (in Edinburgh in 1693) and possibly later Elizabeth Scott of Gala (although this may be confusion with his son Archibald); he may also have been the Douglas of Cavers who secretly married Mary Houston in 1708. His sons William, Archibald, James and John all became Laird in turn. His daughter Ann married William Campbell of Fife. He also had daughters Catharine and Euphane (who later lived with their brother James at Cavers). The bells of Hawick Kirk recorded being rung for 'Lady Douglas' in 1728 are probably for his wife. Archibald (1694–1761) son of the 3rd Marquis of Douglas. He succeeded at the age of 6 and was made Duke of Douglas at age 9. He had several titles restored to his family, including Viscount of Jedburgh Forest. He was superior of extensive lands, including in the Jed valley and Southdean Parish. His wife Margaret ('Peggy') was known for her intelligence and wit. Having no heirs, he settled his estates on his nephew Archibald James Edward. He had Douglas Castle rebuilt to plans by Robert Adam, but died before it was completed. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at the Trows in 1747 when his son Thomas was baptised. Archibald of Cavers (d.1774) 15th Laird, son of Archibald and younger brother of William. He was the first Laird in the 18th century to focus attention on the Cavers estate. He was Postmaster General for Scotland from 1739, and was made a Burgess of Edinburgh in right of his father in 1736. He took over the Lairdship on the death of his brother William in 1748, but had been given the Sheriffship of Roxburghshire when his brother became M.P. for the county in 1742. In 1747 he received £20,000 Scots compensation when the heritable sheriffships were removed by the Crown; at that time he was described as being 'of Deanbrae'. He paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748 and 1753. He sold part of Oakwood to Walter Scott of Harden in 1755. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is probably the Laird who had the Cameronian Chapel and Manse built in Denholm, perhaps in the 1740s. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Hugh Scott of Gala (and she died in 1808 in Edinburgh), but they had no surviving children. He lived at Deanbrae, and was succeeded by his brother Rev. James. He died after several years of illness. Archibald (18th C.) tenant of Berryfell. A notice is recorded in 1778 regarding the creditors of his estate, so he must have died shortly before. Archibald (18th C.) gardener recorded at Midshiels in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. Archibald James Edward (1748–1827) son of Sir John Stewart of Grandtully and Lady Jane Douglas. After a protracted legal battle ('the Douglas Case') he was served heir to his uncle, the 3rd Marquess of Douglas. He was created 1st Baron Douglas of Douglas in 1790 and was M.P. for Forfarshire. He also held lands in Southdean Parish, stretching essentially from Jedburgh to the Border. He could be the Archibald of Douglas who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780 and Selkirkshire in 1788, and who was recorded holding the Lordship of Jedforest in 1788 (valued at more than £4000). In the 1788 county valuation he is also reorded as owner of Peel in Castleton Parish. He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1810. He married Lucy, daughter of William Graham, 2nd Duke of Montrose. He secondly married Frances, daughter of Francis, Earl of Dalkeith (and sister of Henry, Duke of Buccleuch). His children were: Archibald, 2nd Baron Douglas; Charles, 3rd Baron; Jane Margaret, who married Henry James, son of Sir Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, and who later inherited the estates; Caroline Lucy, who married Adm. Sir George Scott; Frances Elizabeth, married William Moray Stirling; Mary Sidney, who married Robert Douglas; Sholto Scott; Rev. James, 4th Baron, who married Wilhelmina Murray, and after whom the title became extinct and the estates went to Lady Montagu; and George. Capt. Archibald (18th C.) probably 2nd son of Thomas, and grandson of Sir William of Cavers. He was Inspector of Works at Berwick. He was named in the will of his cousin Rev. Dr. James Douglas of Cavers, and would have succeeded if Andrew (probably his older brother) had not had male issue. Archibald of Timpendean (1725–81) son of William, he was the 10th Laird. He appears to have taken on the Bonjedward title as well, following the death of the last of that line (although this is not proven). In 1739 he became an apprentice with merchant Archibald Angus in Edinburgh. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was taxed in 1778 for having a male servant. In 1765 he married Helen, daughter of Andrew Bennet of Chesters, and she died in 1808. His children included: William (b.1770), who succeeded; Andrew (1772–1827), Physician in the Royal Navy, who died in London; Robert (b.1774); and Archibald (b.1778). Archibald (d.1814) weaver of Hawick Parish. In 1783 he witnessed a baptism for Peter Wilson and Joan Kedie (his sister-in-law) and in 1784 he and Peter Wilson witnessed a baptism for Thomas Kedie. He may be the Archibald who witnessed baptisms for John ekron in 1784 and 1786. In 1768 he married Janet (1745–1811), daughter of baker John Kedie. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1769); Janet (b.1771), who married shoemaker George Deans; Robert (b.1774), hosier, who married Sally Beck; John (b.1780), stockingmaker, who married J. Aitchison. The witnesses in 1771 were the whole congregation. In 1774 the witnesses were Robert (surely a close relative, perhaps his father or brother) and weaver David Miller; the next baptismal entry was for a child of David Miller, with witnesses weavers Robert and himself. He may be the Archibald who witnessed baptisms for children of Dr. Robert in 1782, 1785, 1787, 1788 and 1790; if so then perhaps they were brothers and both sons of weaver Robert. Archibald of Adderstone (1755–1825) younger son of Andrew, grandson of Thomas and great-grandson of Sir William of Cavers. He was christened at St. Martin in the Field, Westminster. On the death of Capt. James of Cavers in 1786 his brother George succeeded to Cavers, while he inherited the lands of Adderstone (consisting of Adderstonelee and Adderstoneshiel) and Midshiels and lived at the latter. He held the lands of Midshiels and Coliforthill by 1788 and also held Bankend, as well as teinds of lands in Jedburgh Parish (including Hawickgate). He was at Midshiels in the period 1788–95 when taxed for owning a carriage and was taxed for having up to 5 carriage or saddle horses at Midshiels in the period 1787–97. He paid tax on 3 female servants at Midshiels in 1787, 2 in 1788, 1 in 1789 and 2 in 1790 and 1791. He also had 4 male servants at Midshiels in 1790, 3 in 1791–92, 2 in 1793 and 4 in 1794 and 1797. He also had 2 farm horses in 1797 and also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs in the same year. He was probably the Douglas of Midshiels who subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He was recorded as owner of Midshiels in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, as well as lands in Jedburgh Parish (including Bankend and part of the teinds of 'Hawick-gate') and Adderstone plus Adderstonelee. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in at least the period 1797–1801 and was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He married Jane Gale from Whitehaven. Their children were: Anne Mary (b.1787); Jane (b.1789); Katherine Rachel (b.1790), who married James Dove of Wexham House near Windsor; Elizabeth (b.1792), who married Ensign Aaron Reid of the 72nd Highlanders; Grace Thomasina (b.1793); Andrew John (b.1795), who died at Midshiels in 1806, before his father; Archibald Pringle (b.1796), who succeeded; and Thomas (b.1798). Archibald (18th C.) resident of 'Kirkton' in 1791 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He is probably the Archibald who married Janet Laidlaw in Kirkton Parish in 1789. Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded at Raesknowe in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was the Archibald, married to Janet Kedie, who had several children baptised in Hawick Parish about the 1770s. Archibald (1773–1844) 2nd Baron Douglas, son of Archibald, 1st Baron. He was educated at Eton and his main residence was at Bothwell Castle, Lanarkshire. He inherited his father's lands in Southdean Parish, where he was the major heritor. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, while still younger of Douglas. Archibald Pringle of Adderstone (1798/9–1860) eldest surviving son of Archibald, from whom he inherited the lands of Adderstone and Midshiels. He was 'Jun. Esq. of Adderstone' in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was a reform politician and M.P., who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1834. He owned the lands of Adderstoneshiel and Adderstonelee and lived for a while at Midshiels (being listed there in Pigot's 1837 directory). He was one of the 4 heritors of Kirkton Parish. He was Captain in the local (Dumfries) Militia 1820–25. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1851 he was recorded as 'Landed Proprietor Justice of the Peace' at Midshiels. He married Margaret Violet, daughter of Mark Pringle of Haining and Clifton, and she died in 1868; she is recorded as proprietor of the Haining in a directory of 1868. They had one child, Anne Elizabeth, who succeeded to Fairnilee and Haining, married John Pattison in Melrose and was eventually succeeded by Andrew Seth Pringle Pattison, Professor of Logic and Metaphysics at Edinburgh University. Archibald (b.1803) son of Robert and Catherine Beck. He was a frameworker and later postman, living in the Round Close. In 1841 he was living at about 7 Sandbed and was at the Round Close by 1851. He is recorded in the 1860s as postal messenger for Cavers Parish. He married Barbara (or 'Barbary') Scott in 1834. Their children included: John (b.1835); Janet (b.1837); James (b.1839); Catherine (b.1841); Robert; Ninian; Mary; Barbara; and Helen. His daughter Janet married blacksmith John Halliday. Archibald William (1818–58) 8th Marquess of Queensberry and also Baron of Hawick, among other titles. He married Caroline Clayton and was succeeded by his famous son John. Arthur (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as 'in Efflesche' when, along with Thomas 'Fresall', he had 13 cows and oxen stolen by William Scott 'in Layk'. He was presumably a tenant farmer at Effledge. Arthur (16th C.) recorded as being 'in Kirkton' when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Crook in 1569. He is presumably the same Arthur who was one of the agents to whom the precept of sasine was directed for the same lands in the previous year, suggesting that he was related to the Douglasses of Crook. He may be related to (or the same man as) Arthur in Effledge. William in Kirkton was also a witness in 1569, and so probably a son or brother. Charles (1663–1739) 2nd Earl of Selkirk. He was 3rd son of William, who was Duke of Hamilton and Earl of Selkirk, among other titles. His father resigned the Earldom to him in 1688. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother John. Rev. Charles (d.1745) son of Andrew, he was minister of Cavers. Licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in early 1738, he was presented by Archibald Douglas of Cavers later that year and remained minister until his death. In 1735 in Bedrule Parish he married Isabel Douglas (who died in 1748), daughter of Walter, minister of Linton. Their children were: Andrew (b.1735); Walter (b.1737); Archibald (b.1739); Isobel (b.1740, or Isabella), who married James Newgigging in Edinburgh in 1759; William (b.1742); and Charles (b.1744). Charles 3rd Duke of Queensberry (1698–1778), 3rd son of James, the 2nd Duke. He inherited the Dukedom, since his elder brother James (who was allowed to inherit the Marquesate and Earldom) was criminally insane and kept locked up. He was created Viscount Tibbers and Earl of Solway, and retained several Scottish titles, including Lord Douglas of Hawick. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Dumfries and Kirkcudbright. He was a patron of the poet John Gay. He married Catherine, daughter of Henry, Earl of Clarendon. His wife was a friend of many of the writers of the day, and she apparently died from eating too many cherries. Since he was predeceased by his 2 sons, upon his death the English titles expired, while the Scottish ones went to a cousin William, grandson of William, Earl of March. Charles of Kelhead (1777–1837) son of Sir William Douglas and Grace Johnstone. He was the 6th Marquess of Queensberry, succeeding on the death of his cousin William in 1810, although the Dukedom passed to Henry Scott of Buccleuch. He acquired the Marquessate through marrying Caroline Scott, daughter of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. This made him also Viscount Drumlanrig and Lord Douglas of Hawick. He may be the 'Honourable Charles Douglas' to whom the superiority of Wauchope was conveyed by Charles Scott in the early 1800s. He was one of Scotland's representative peers 1812–32. He served as Lord Lieutenant of Dumfries 1819–37. Having no male issue, the titles passed to his younger brother John. Charles 'Charlie' wrote 'Happy memories of Gatehousecote and Rulewater'. Christian (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. Christine of Trows (16th C.) recorded in 1574 in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when she still owed grain for her share of the teinds of Cavers Parish. Her name is recorded as 'Cristiane Douglas, Lady Trowis'. It is unclear who her husband had been and how she was connected with the Douglasses of Cavers. Craig one of Hawick's most successful athletes, winning many middle distance races in the 1960s and early 1970s. He was Scottish 880 yards champion in 1963 and champion over 1500 m in 1969 and 1971. David (15th C.) witness to a 1483 sasine given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, relating to lands in Hassendean. Since he was listed immediately after William, then he may have been his son or brother. Either the same man or a different David was on the inquest panel for James Douglas of Cavers inheriting the Barony from his father. Probably the same David was on the 1482 panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean; George of Bonjedward, James and Patrick are also listed, and possibly closely related. He may be the David, son of William, for whom the Sheriff (William of Cavers) was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; it seems unlikely that his father was the same William as the Sheriff. He could be the 'Dauid Dowglas' who was among the bailies appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, for giving a sasine of the lands of Grahamslaw to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1500. He may be the same 'Dauid Dawgles' who witnessed a sasine for Scott of Buccleuch in 1500. David 7th Earl of Angus (c.1515–57) son of Sir George of Pittendreich and grandson of Archibald, 6th Earl. He married Margaret, daughter of John Hamilton of Samuelton, who was widow of James Johnstone, younger of that ilk. He was succeeded by Archibald, 8th Earl. David (16th C.) recorded as 'Davie Dowgles' in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Warden. His name is listed along with local Gledstains, suggesting that he was from somewhere around Hawick. Perhaps the same man was 'David Douglas of Yarlside' in 1586 when his son William was declared a rebel for his part in the murder of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton. David Harrington Angus (1929–) 12th Marquess of Queensberry, also holding the title of Baron of Hawick. He was educated at Eton and served in the Royal Horse Guards. A noted pottery designer, he was Professor of Ceramics at the Royal College of Art 1976–78. He married firstly Ann Jones, secondly Alexandra Mary

Clare Wyndham Sich and thirdly Hseuh-Chun Liao. He had 4 daughters and 3 sons, the eldest being Sholto Francis Guy Douglas, Viscount of Drumlanrig, who will succeed to the titles. He also had an illegitimate son, Ambrose Jonathan Carey, head of a security and intelligence firm, whose half-sister married Salem bin Laden. Dunbar (1722–99) 4th Earl of Selkirk. He was son of Basil and grandson of Basil (who had the surname Hamilton), who was a younger son of the 1st Earl. He succeeded his granduncle in 1744. He attended Glasgow University, was granted an honorary Doctorate of Civil Law and was Rector there. In 1778 the American John Paul Jones attempted to kidnap him near the Isle of Man. He was a member of the Royal Society. In 1758 he married Helen, daughter of John Hamilton, son of the Earl of Haddington. He had 7 sons (6 of whom predeceased him) and 3 daughters. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. He died at his residence in George Street, Edinburgh. Dunbar James (1809–85) 6th Earl of Selkirk. He was son of Thomas, 5th Earl, born in London. He succeeded when still a minor and there were later disputes over his Canadian holdings. He graduated from Oxford with first-class honours in Mathematics. He was a Conservative Representative Peer from 1830. He married Cecily Louisa Grey-Egerton, but the couple had no issue. He died and was buried in Kirkcudbrightshire. On his death the Earldom of Selkirk was assumed by his relative the Duke of Hamilton. It is unclear if he ever visited Selkirk. Elizabeth nee Graham (14th C.) wife of William Douglas 'the Knight of Liddesdale'. After her husband's was killed in 1353 she sought protection from England, retaining rights to Hermitage and Liddesdale from Edward III, provided she married an Englishman. She did so, marrying Hugh, brother of William, Lord Dacre, and together they were granted Hermitage Castle and Liddesdale in 1355. This arrangement allowed her daughter and nephew, who had been kept as English hostages, to be released. However, by 1358 the Castle was in possession of William, Earl of Douglas (the same relative who had killed her husband). Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) recorded in the Council records of 1665 when dyer James Scott swore that she reproached Bailie Deans. She specifically said 'that Bailie Deans was made bailie out of pity, and that the yard pertaining to John Pasley was not truelie marched' [BR1665]. Elizabeth (b.1678) daughter of John Douglas, she married Sir William, 12th Laird of Cavers about 1690. He died about 8 years later and in 1700 she remarried Sir Andrew Home, Lord Kimmerghame, son of the Earl of Marchmont. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (18th C.) recorded in 1758 when she hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth. Elizabeth 'Lizzy' (18th/19th C.) married to James. In 1835 she became the first letter-carrier of the Rule valley, going with her donkey and cart twice a week to Jedburgh; her husband was almost blind by then. She lived at Hoddleswoodie. Her children included Mary (b.1797), James (b.1799), Charles (b.1800) and Nelly (b.1808). Elizabeth nee Beattie (1779–1858) from Langholm, she married joiner John Douglas (1778–1838). She was post-mistress in Newcastleton in 1851, living around Langholm Street. Her daughter Christina assisted her. She was also listed as postmistress in a directory of 1851. Francis Archibald Kelhead (1896–1954) 11th Marquess of Queensberry, also holding the title of Baron of Hawick. He served with the Black Watch and was wounded twice during WWI. He was succeeded by his son David. Gavin (c.1474–1522) 3rd son of Archibald 'Bell the Cat', who was traditionally said to have been Rector of Hawick for a short time from 1496 before becoming Provost of St. Giles, Edinburgh and then Bishop of Dunkeld. However, it seems more likely that he was in fact Parson at 'Haugh', which was an old name for Prestonkirk parish, and not at Hawick (although things are further confused by both churches being attached to the College of Bothwell around that time, and by a claim that there was an oral tradition going back to the mid-18th century that he was associated with Hawick, independent of the documentary reference to the word 'Haugh'). In 1503 he was procurator for his brother George in a financial agreement with Ralph Ker of Primsidloch made in Jedburgh. He wrote poetry in the vernacular and translated Virgil into Scots, later fleeing to England and seeking the protection of Henry VIII because of political intrigues and rivalries. He died of the plague in London while in exile and is buried in Savoy Church. He may have had an illegitimate daughter, but left no heirs. His fame is as a poet and translator, although probably nothing was published during his lifetime. His most noteworthy contribution was a translation of Virgil's 'Æneid' into Scots. He was possibly the first person to refer to his language as 'Scottish' – 'Here Gawin Douglas took his way, On Sabbath morn and holy day When vested priests in cope and stole Said masses for Drumlanrig's soul' [WNK] (also spelled 'Gawin' or 'Gawain').

George (c.1378–c.1403) 1st Earl of Angus, illegitimate son of William, 1st Earl of Douglas with Margaret Stewart, Countess of Angus and of Mar (who was his father's brother-in-law's wife!). He was granted his mother's Angus title in 1389. Sir William 1st of Drumlanrig and Archibald 1st of Cavers were his nephews. Confusion over the lack of confirmation of the charter of Cavers to Archibald led to James Sandilands gaining the lands (as well others). Sandilands passed them to him, according to a 1397 charter confirmed by Robert III; this included the Barony of Cavers, Sheriffdom of Roxburgh, Lordships of Jedburgh and Liddesdale, town of Selkirk, lands of Bonjedward and many other titles and estates, following the death of Isabella Countess of Mar (his half sister). However, this never transpired, since the right was given back to James Sandilands (the King's brother-in-law) in 1404/5, after his own death (although some lands were later recovered by his son William). There is also an agreement of 1400 in which Sir Malcolm Drummond, Lord of Mar, agrees to give him the rights to lands in Liddesdale, including recovering the rents and other dues from Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith, in return for rights to lands in Angus. Attempts to recover Liddesdale and other lands led to a feud with Sir James of Dalkeith. He married Mary Stewart, daughter of King Robert III. His children included William (2nd Earl and the first of the 'Red' Douglasses), George and Elizabeth (or perhaps Mary). His wife remarried 3 times after his death. He was captured by the English at the Battle of Holidon Hill and probably died in English captivity, possibly during an outbreak of the plague. George (c.1427–63) 4th Earl of Angus, probably the younger son of William the 2nd Earl (although some sources suggest he was a 2nd son of George, the 1st Earl). He was Lord of Liddesdale and Jedburgh Forest, as well as holding many other lands. He had a sasine for Jedforest and Liddesdale in 1447. He served as Warden of the East Marches and also the Middle Marches. He was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. In 1453 he appointed Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers, Sheriff of Roxburgh, and his son William, as Bailies of Liddesdale and Keepers of the Castle. In the power struggles of the mid-16th century he was head of the 'Red Douglasses' and probably led the royalists at the Battle of Arkinholm in 1455. In 1456 he was granted Ewesdale by the King, previously possessed by Robert Graham; his attorney for the sasine was Hector of Lauder. For services against the English he was also made Lord of Douglas in 1457. In 1458/9 he was granted superiority of Eskdale, which had been held by James, Earl of Douglas. In 1462 he had an indenture with Henry VI of England to make him a Duke of England, in return for his assistance; however, he died before becoming an English Duke. He married Isobel, daughter of John Sibbald of Balgony in Fife. In 1471 his wife Isobel, countess of Angus and her children (John of Douglas, Isobel Douglas, Elizabeth of Douglas, Margaret Douglas, Giles Douglas and Alison Douglas) against her brother-in-law William of Douglas of Cluny for withholding grain and other goods and rentals from several lands, including Hawick. His children included: Archibald, 'Bell the cat', who succeeded as 5th Earl of Angus; John, who probably died young; Anne, who married William, 2nd Lord Graham; Isobella, who married Sir Alexander Ramsay of Dalhousie; Elizabeth, who married Sir Robert Graham of Fintry; Margaret, who married Duncan Campbell of Glenorchy; Jane, who married David Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1472; Giles (or Egidia); and Alison. George of Bonjedward (d.c.1452) 3rd Laird, son of John. He was retoured as heir to his father in the demesne lands of Bonjedward in 1439. He was succeeded by his son George. Another son, William, is mentioned in 1476, and John may also possibly have been a 3rd son. George (15th C.) witness in 1433 to a feu charter between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Simon of Routledge for Birkwood, just outside Hawick. The other witness was Archibald of Cavers, and so he may have been his son or other close relative. He may be the same 'Georgio de Douglas' (esquire) who witnessed (at Hawick) the sasine for the Barony of Hawick going to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452. And perhaps the George who witnessed a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456, where he was listed after Sir Archibald of Cavers, and Archibald's son, also Archibald, suggesting he may have been a son or brother to the Laird at that time. George of Bonjedward (15th C.) son of George, whom he succeeded in 1452 as 4th Laird. He renounced some lands to Jedburgh Abbey in 1458. He was a member of the panel in 1464/5 ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburgh to Archibald of Cavers; he is recorded as 'of Bone Jedworth'. Probably the same George (recorded as an esquire) was witness to the sasine made at Cavers for the same purpose. He may have been a relative of the Cavers branch, as well as related to James, who was also a witness. In 1464/5 he was also on the panel to rule on the dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains; he is there 'of Buniedwort'. In 1468 he was witness to a charter for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk, in 1471 for James Rutherford of that Ilk and in 1475 for Walter Ker of Caverton. William 'brodir to George of Dowglass of Bonegedworth' was recorded in 1476. He was a witness to the 'tack' granting lands in Selkirk to David, younger of Branxholme, in 1478. He was probably the George who was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting Appletreehall in 1482. He may also be the George who witnessed the sasine for the Barony of Hawick at the Mote in 1484. In 1485/6 he witnessed a charter for Robert Ramsay of Cockpen. In 1488 he witnessed the grant of Auld Roxburgh to Walter Ker of Cessford. In addition he could be the George who was mentioned in a document relating to Ruecastle in 1491 and who was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. Either he or a later George was the George of 'Bwnjedworth' who witnessed the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale in 1499. He may be the 'Gorgis of Dowglas' who was one of the assessors of the lands of Whithope in 1500 and the 'Georgio Dowglas' who was appointed Sheriff Depute of Roxburghshire in 1500 in order to give sasine of lands to Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1479 he granted the lands of Timpendean to his son Andrew, with the consent of his oldest son, James; this separated the family line into 2 (although they would merge again later). However, James does not appear to have inherited Bonjedward, and so presumably predeceased him. John and William, brothers of the Laird of Bonjedward, were convicted of attacking Sir William Colville in 1502; this seems unlikely for men in their 60s, supporting the idea that there are 2 generations compounded into 1 man here. The 1504 list of men associated with the Archbishop of Glasgow who had remission for the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey includes George of Bonjedward, who is either him or his son; the list follows with Andrew, John, Robert, William and Master Steven. George of Bonjedward (15th/16th C.) probably son of the earlier George or possibly son of William. He could be the Laird in 1502 whose uncle Robert acted as surety at the Justiceaire in Jedburgh. In 1503 he was 'de Bonjedworth' when he witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primsideloch; John was the next witness and so possibly his brother. He was 'bailie in that part' in 1504 when sasine was given to William Turnbull for the lands of Maxton Craig. Additionally in he was listed among those associated with Robert Blackadder, Archbishop of Glasgow, who had a royal letter of protection for his tenants and others while he travelled to Rome in 1504, as well as remission for certain crimes; this included involvement in the killing of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey, with Andrew, John, Robert, William and Master Steven listed immediately after him, and so perhaps his close relatives. In a separate list John is recorded as his brother, while Robert was brother of Andrew of Timpendean (and certainly also related). He was also listed on the 1506 remission for the same crime (suggesting he was more closely involved perhaps); there his brother John is listed after him. In 1508 he was fined by the High Court of the Judiciary. He served on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1508. He is probably the Laird of 'bone Jedworthe' on an assize in 1508/9 for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. He was appointed as temporary Sheriff of Roxburghshire (along with John Rutherford of Hundalee) in 1509 to hear the inquest for James Douglas inheriting Cavers from his father William. Also in 1509 he witnessed a sasine for lands in Linton. He would have been the Laird of Bonjedward who is recorded as one of the leaders of the men who had a skirmish with superior English forces at Sclaterford in 1513. He is probably the George (with no affiliation given) who was appointed as temporary Sheriff to oversee the sasine for the Barony of Hawick in 1514. He witnessed a document for Ker of Linton in 1516. He was 'of Bunjedward' in 1523 when he was on a panel in Jedburgh for the Homes. He may be the George who was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill in 1525 and the George of 'Boonjedward' who witnessed the indenture between the Scotts and the Kers in 1529/30. Note that these generations are rather confused, with the possibility that several Georges are compounded. He may have had brothers John, William and Hugh, and a sister Jane who married Sir Archibald Rutherford. His children may have included William (who succeeded), Isobelle, Hugh and possibly John. William, son of the Laird of Bonjedward in 1502, was probably his son. The witnesses John and James Douglas listed in the sasine for Maxton Craig in 1504 (for which he acted as bailie) may have been his brothers or sons. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as tenant of Trows when David Oliver 'in Stryndis' had remission for stealing 20 sheep from his lands, as well as several other similar crimes. Also in 1502 he was surety for Archibald in Effledge, who had remission for crimes. In 1517 he was 'Georgum Douglas de Trowis' when he was on the panel for deciding on the inheritance of Scott of Branhholme. He may have been the uncle of Sir William of Cavers recorded in 1500 and the George who served as depute for the Sheriff of Roxburghshire (Sir William) in a 1501 retour for Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He may also have been the George who was listed (third, after Douglas of Cavers and Douglas 'of Denbray') in the 1488/9 list of Roxburghshire men given remission for their support of the former King, James III. He may additionally be the George for whom William of Cavers was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493 and again in 1494/5. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as tenant in Swinside, when his brothers Adam, Robert, Henry and Simon had remission for kidnap, theft and attempted murder. Ralph Ker of Primsideloch acted as surety. Also in 1502 he was recorded among other Douglasses and some Davidsons who were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Georges. George (c.1469–1513) Master of Angus, he was eldest son of Archibald, 'Bell the Cat'. In 1488/9 he was appointed to the Lordship of Liddesdale and other titles, after they were resigned by his father; this included Hermitage Castle, as well as Lordships of Eskdale, Ewesdale, Jedforest and Selkirk. The family were forced to give these lands up entirely in 1491, probably after a deal they made with the English (although he may have retained Eskdale and Ewesdale). Following this, his father handed him over as surety to King James. Patrick, Earl of Bothwell got the lands of Liddesdale, and he received the Barony of Bothwell in return. However, it appears that he was confirmed in the Lordships of Douglas, Jedforest, Liddesdale, Selkirk, Ewesdale, Eskdale, etc. in a sasine of 1499. In 1493 he was surety for Robert Turnbull 'in laris' (possible Lairhope) and in 1494/5 he was surety for John Young in Roughlee. In 1499 he had an indenture with the Royal Treasurer for keeping good order on the Border. In 1501 he was liable for the pledges imposed upon Adam, David and Robert Turnbull. In 1502 he had to concede the lands of Falside in Jedforest to Ralph Ker of Primside

Loch; this was for failing to deliver 'Sym Scott of Arkyn'. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. He was also fined in 1502 for not arresting a reiver named Davidson, 'Grace-behind-him', and the King deprived him of the Lordship of Eskdale. Additionally in 1502 he was fined for failure to arrest 3 Olivers, as well as John Turnbull 'de france' and others. In 1505/6 there was a summons for him from James IV, for failing to pay the dowry of 250 merks promised to Sir William Douglas of Cavers for the marriage of his daughter Alison and Sir William's son and heir; he also had to pay £500 Scots for loss and interest. In 1506 his lands of Ewesdale, including Fiddleton were granted to Alexander, Lord Home. In 1507/8 he had licence from the King to wadset some land in Jedforest and also a charter for the recognosced Lordship of Selkirk and lands of Philiphaugh. In 1509 he had a discharge over the marriage of his daughter Elizabeth with George, son of John, Lord Hay of Yester and an agreement with Ralph Ker of Primsideloch involving Philiphaugh. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John, 1st Lord Drummond, and their children included: Archibald, who succeeded; Sir George of Pittendreich; William, who was Prior of Condingham and Abbot of Holyroodhouse; Elizabeth, who married John Hay, 3rd Lord of Yester, owner of land at Hassendean; Alison, who was contracted to marry William Douglas of Cavers, but married Robert Blackadder, who died at Flodden, and secondly married Sir David Home of Wedderburn; Janet, who was burned at the stake, but had earlier married John Lyon, 6th Lord Glamis, and secondly Archibald Campbell of Skipnish; and Margaret, who married Sir James Douglas, 7th Baron of Drumlanrig and Hawick. He died at Flodden along with his brother Sir William, and the titles went to his eldest son Archibald. Sir George of Pittendreich (d.1552) son of George, Master of Angus and brother of Archibald, 6th Earl of Angus. He was an important member of the Red Douglasses in their attempts to control the young James V in 1528, after which he lived in exile in England. Around 1541 and 1542 he is mentioned many times in letters from the English March Wardens. Having his lands restored in 1543, he was involved in negotiations of peace with England, which failed and effectively led to the Rough Wooing. He was later a supporter of Mary of Guise. In 1547 he represented the Douglasses, with George Lord Home representing the Homes in a case before the Privy Council regarding a feud between the families. He narrowly escaped capture by the English at Dalkeith Palace in 1548. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of David Douglas of Pittendreich. His children included: David, who became 7th Earl of Angus, and whose daughter Margaret would marry Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, as well as Francis, Earl of Bothwell; James, who married the Earl of Morton's youngest daughter Elizabeth; and an illegitimate son George, who became George of Parkhead. George (16th C.) recorded along with Ralph in 1563 when William Gourlay ordered them to remove themselves from lands in Cavers owned by Andrew of Friarshaw. He said that he sold the half husbandland and still wanted to be a tenant to Andrew. He could be the same as one of the other Georges. George of Bonjedward (16th/17th C.) son of William. In 1560 he was 'of Abone-jedburgh yownger' when he witnessed the bond between the Rutherfods and the Kers at Ancrum Spittal. He was still 'younger and fear' in 1562 when he served as surety for George Turnbull of Barnhills. In 1566 he was 'younger of Bonjedward' when he married Isobel Ker. In the register of the Privy Council he was surety in 1571, for William Kirkton of Stewartfield in 1572/3, for Englishmen in 1575, separately for Gavin Elliot Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and John Turnbull of Minto in 1576 and for others in 1577. He was still 'younger of Bane Jedburgh' when listed among the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles in 1575. In 1576 he witnessed the 'bond of manrent' between several Borderers and Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus; the other witnesses were his father William and Malcolm of Mains. He was also witness at Jedburgh in 1576 to another bond between the Kers of Primsideloch and the Earl of Angus. In 1576/7 he was charged with paying the fine of £1000 for a supporter of John Turnbull of Minto breaking the bond between factions among the Turnbells and violently attacking a servant. He signed an agreement with Rutherfords and Turnbells in 1578, annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop a feud between him (along with several Rutherfords and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford; there was also separately a feud between him and Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. He was still 'younger' in 1580 when named in a transaction in Selkirk. In 1580 Archibald, Earl of Angus, made a promise to the Privy Council on his behalf for the behaviour of the men of Teviotdale. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes and also listed among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was still 'younger' on a list of men charged to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 and on a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, about the same time. In 1586 he and William of Cavers were cautioners for the Turnbolls of Bedrule. In 1587 Archibald, Earl of Angus, acted as cautioner for him, when he was still 'younger'. He was a Commissioner appointed by Parliament in about 1588. Also in 1589 he was fined for not re-entering Wat Turnbull of Bedrule into ward in Edinburgh Castle. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. He is listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1591/2 he acted as surety for Andrew of Timpendean and in 1592 William Stewart of Traquair was surety for both him and Andrew of Timpendean. He was probably the Laird referred to in 1597 in an English letter listing Scotsmen who had reset English fugitives. He is probably the Laird in 1598 who was wounded when a group of Scotsmen out hunting were attacked by a larger English group, and his son taken prisoner. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602, for keeping the King's peace. He is probably the George who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire in 1610 and may have been the Laird of Bonjedward from whom 10 cows were stolen in 1611. He married Margaret Stewart of Traquair in 1573. He appears to have been succeeded by William, presumably his son. He may also have been the father of Hugh and Hobbe (recorded in 1540/1, unless that was an earlier generation). George (16th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire, referred to in a case of 1601 as having been deceased for several years. Robert Turnbull took over the office after his death. He is probably the 'Maister George Dowglas, notar publict' who witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and Kers, signed in Melrose. He is also probably the same 'Magistrum Georgium Dowglas clericum vicecomitis' and notary public for the brief of 1569 where Grizel Borthwick inherited the syperiority of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall. George 'Pealman' (16th C.) recorded in Swinside in 1578/9. He is listed in 1586/7 being 'callit Peilman, in Swinsyde', among Borders accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is also recorded as 'Pealman' in 1590, along with Thomas and Thomas Ainslie of Swinside, when they were accused of a raid into England 3 years previously. It is unclear what his nickname meant or how he was related to other Douglasses. George (d.c.1597) obtained a gift of the parsonage and vicarage of Kirkton from James VI in 1567/8, following the death of William Cranston. He is also recorded as Reader there in 1575, when William Auchmowtie was Minister for several parishes. In 1576 he was 'non-resident' and an unnamed Reader was paid the Rectory and Vicarage revenues. He was also mentioned as Minister in 1585. He is recorded as deceased in late 1597 when the parsonage and vicarage was given to John Douglas. He is clearly distinct from the slightly later minister of the same name of Southdean and Hobkirk, although it is not impossible they were related. George (16th C.) recorded in 1595 as 'servant to the Laird of Cessfurde'. His son Andrew was among a group of schoolboys who were imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth for being part of the 'Royal High School Riot' of 1595. It seems likely he was the same man as another George. Rev. George (c.1579–1609) local minister. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1599. He held the vicarage of Hobkirk from 1602, then was presented to Southdean by William Earl of Angus in 1607 and translated to Hobkirk in 1608; however, it is unclear for what period he held these simultaneously. He also had the intake from the lands 'callit the Vicarie-Hill' probably in Hobkirk. George of Friarshaw (d.c.1623) said to have been son of William and brother of John in some genealogies. However, he may instead have been the George, son of Andrew in Friarshaw recorded in 1592 when the pair had a charter from Melrose Abbey for the lands of Friarshaw (in Lilliesleaf Parish). He was said to be the 3rd Douglas Laird of Friarshaw and to have succeeded in 1603. He is recorded in 1610 as 'George Dowglas of Freirschaw' when he was part of an inquest into lands in Rulewater. He is probably the George 'called of Freirschaw in Lillisleif' who in 1616 was accused of attacking William Allan in Lilliesleaf, his wife Janet Henderson and clerk Gilbert Watt, and of harassing the tenants of Riddells of Riddell and Woodhouse; his accomplices were his brothers William and Robert and William's son Robert and not appearing he was to be denounced as a rebel. In 1617 he and George in Lilliesleaf complained about attacks on their houses at Lilliesleaf and Friarshaw by John Rutherford 'Provost's Jock', James Middlemas (brother of William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf) and Patrick Brotherstanes. In 1618 he and his son Andrew complained about attacks on them and their lands by Andrew Riddell of that ilk, Andrew Riddell of Lilliesleaf and Simon Riddell of Riddell Mill. Specifically it was claimed that: the Riddells put about 500 sheep on a field of their wheat, keeping them there for 8 nights; the Laird of Riddell attacked him and his son when they approached him at the Parish Kirk, calling them 'notorious and commoun thevis', pursuing them 'with a drawne quhinyear [whinger], shoir-ing and avowing with mony horrible aithis that he sould haif tayne the said Georg lyfee as he tooke my brotheris', and being stopped by others gathered in the kirkyard; and their farmers called Hill and Smail had their ploughshares removed so that they could not plough. It is unclear if the claim that one of his brothers had been murdered by the Riddells was true. In 1576 he married Margaret, daughter of Hugh Middlemas in Midlem and was succeeded by their son Andrew. In 1615, he secondly married, Agnes, daughter of John Douglas, Provost of Haddington. In 1619 he and Agnes complained about non-payment by a flesher in Selkirk; his son Andrew represented him in court. The year of his death is unclear, since he appears to have been listed in 1628 among the major landowners of Roxburghshire who met to elect M.Ps. George (16th/17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf. In 1617 he and George of Friarshaw complained about attacks on their houses at Lilliesleaf and Friarshaw by John Rutherford 'Provost's Jock', James Middlemas (brother of William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf) and Patrick Brotherstanes. This was part of an series of incidents and complaints between the Douglasses, Middlemases and Riddell. He was probably a close relative of George of Friarshaw. George (16th/17th C.) servant of William Turnbull, younger of Bedrule. In 1619, with William Turnbull and his son Thomas Turnbull, there was a declaration to capture them, having been denounced as rebels in 1616 for carrying guns. George of Bonjedward (d.1682) probably son of William. His sister Mary married John Douglas of Timpendean. He may be the 'appeirand of Bonjedburgh' who was appointed as a new Commissioner for the Middle Shires in 1618. In 1631 he was recorded as 'appearand of

Bonjedburgh sheriff of Teviotdale'. In 1632 he made a discharge of 20,000 merks to Sir Patrick Murray of Elibank. In 1636 he had a tack for mills in Jedburgh. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He is probably the George of Bonjedward mentioned in 2 Parliamentary documents in 1643 and he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in that year. In 1643 his estate was valued at about £5000; this included the Town, Mains and Mill of Bonjedward, the 'Herd's House', the Mains of 'Tour' and lands in Ulston and associated teinds, as well as Philogar in Hownam Parish and Cuzierton in Oxnam Parish. Also in 1643 he made arrangements to provide for his sister Mary, who had become widowed. The tutors of his children are mentioned in 1658. He is recorded in a deed of 1665 obtaining the teinds on Bonjedward from the Earl of Lothian. He was also recorded in bonds in 1673. He paid tax on his estate valued at £4000 in 1678. In 1678 he was 'fined 27,500 merks for irregularities and was George 'of Bonjedburgh' when fined 6,000 pounds Scots in about 1680 for being a Covenanter. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Patrick Murray of Elibank; she was recorded as 'Lady Bonjedburgh' in 1641 and again in about 1677. Their children included: George, who succeeded; John; Alexander; and Henry. George of Bonjedward (d.1695) son of George. He was mentioned in 1641 in the 'Commission for receiving of the brotherly assistance from the Parliament of England'. He inherited Bonjedward from his father in 1682. He was also served heir to lands in the Barony of Ulston in 1682, which had been owned by his father George and great-great-grandfather William. In 1683 he was fined for him and his wife not attending their parish church. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh as a Covenanter in 1685, 'having now lien in prison three months, being sickly'. He was probably Laird when 'Boon Jethert his hous' had tax paid on it for 17 hearths (a huge number at that time). He was succeeded by William, presumably his son. Another son was probably Gilbert, 'brother-german to the Laird of Beansedbrugh', who became an apprentice to John 'Weier', wigmaker in Edinburgh in 1699. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissariat in 1695. George (17th/18th C.) described as 'in Whitfield' in 1705 when he leased Todshaw from Gideon Scott of Highchester for 11 years. It is possible he was th George whose son William was baptised in Wilton in 1707. George of Friarshaw (1673–1753) son of Henry and Martha Lockhart, he became 7th Laird in 1701. He was an advocate based in Edinburgh and was His Majesty's Solicitor for Tythes in Scotland. In 1717 his servant Margaret Ker married Robert Bunyan (son to Thomas Bunyan mason in Cavers Parish) in Edinburgh. In 1747 he matriculated arms, these being the arms of Douglas of Cavers with minor differences. In 1702 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum. Their children included: Henry (1703–78), who succeeded to Friarshaw, but had no male heirs; Sir James of Springwood (b.1704), who was a Rear Admiral and succeeded his brother; Peter (1714–35); Agnes (b.1720), who married Col. Robert Scott of Horsleyhill; Margaret (1706–41), who died unmarried; Andrew (1725–72); Elizabeth (1726–51), who also died unmarried; Robert (b.1727), who was a Lieut.-Gen.; Jean (1729–58), who married John Patoun of Inveresk; and 11 children who died young. The witnesses in 1703 were Sir John Scott of Ancrum (his brother-in-law), Sir Gilbert Elliot of Headshaw and George Baillie of Jerviswood and the witnesses in 1704 included his brother Andrew, Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum (his father-in-law), Sir Gilbert Elliot of Headshaw (by then of Minto) and Archibald Douglas of Cavers. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1712), Margaret (b.1720) and George (b.1722). George of Bonjedward (d.c.1750) son of William. He probably sold part of the family lands to Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston in the period 1710–15. The rest may have been sold by his creditors, Lord Cranston, Lord Cassilis, the Master of Ross and Mr. Wauchope in the 1730s and 40s. He is probably the Douglas of Bonjedward who witnessed a marriage in Melrose in 1711. He was on a list of prominent local lairds in 1713. He was succeeded by his son John in 1754 and may also have had a daughter, Christian, who was mentioned to be included on the charity roll after his death. George (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Gilbert (b.1736), Bessie (b.1738) and John (b.1744). Perhaps the same George had a son James (b.1740) baptised in Cavers and a son Gilbert (b.1749), baptised in Kirkton. George (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Janet Douglas and their son John was baptised in 1781. George of Cavers (1754–1814) eldest son of Andrew, merchant of London and grandson of Thomas, who was the 5th son of Sir William of Cavers. He was christened at St. Martin in the Fields, Westminster.

He became the 18th Laird of Cavers on the death of his father's cousin Capt. John in 1786 (some accounts of an intervening Thomas seem confused). He was previously a paymaster for the Royal Navy. His younger brother Archibald inherited the lands of Adderstone and Midshiels; however, he was also listed on the 1787 tax roll as being 'of Midsheels', where he employed 4 male servants. In 1788 his lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £7350, including lands previously owned by Lord Cranston, William Douglas, Turnbull of Toor, Lady Symington and William McGill. As well as Cavers estate, in 1788 he was listed as owner of Kirkton, Effledge, Whitriggs and East Middle in Kirkton Parish (valued at £1480), Haughhead (in Hawick, which was listed as formerly part of Scott of Horsleyhill's lands of Weensland) and Cunzier-ton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish. He was probably the Laird of Cavers who subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He paid tax on 3–5 female servants in the period 1786–91, 4–5 male servants in 1786–93, 6 in 1794 and 5 in 1797 (in 1788 his servants were entered elsewhere). He was also taxed for owning a carriage in the years 1786–98, and for having 7 carriage horses in 1786 and 3 in 1787. In 1788 all his horse tax was recorded in Lothian, then he had 4 carriage horses 1789–94. Also in 1797 he is recorded as owner of 6 farm horses at Cavers on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as 5 carriage or saddle horses. Additionally he was taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire and was described at this time as having 'a good estate' and 'inclined to Opposition'. In 1797 he exchanged his lands at Denholm Haugh with those of the Duke of Roxburghe at Hassendeanbank. He was a keen Mason, being Provincial Grand Master from 1801 until his death. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. In 1808 he famously rode to the top of Ruberslaw in a coach-and-four, to meet the Laird of Wells to settle a boundary issue over dinner. In 1811 he became a member of the Caledonian Horticultural Society. Also in about 1811 he was listed as owner of the Barony of Cavers (valued at £7250) in the Land Tax Rolls, and the part of Weensland called Haughhead, as well as Kirkton, Effledge, Whitriggs and East Middle. In 1812 he petitioned, along with his trustee Archibald Tod of Drygrange for exemption on the land-tax on Cavers estate. He married Lady Grace Stewart (also known as Jane Stuart), daughter of Francis, 8th Earl of Moray, in Edinburgh in 1789, and she died in 1846. Their children were: James (b.1790), who succeeded; Jane (b.1793); Francis James (1796–1821), a Lieutenant in the Coldstream Guards; and Jane (again, d.1809), who died unmarried. Sir George of Friarshaw and Springwood (1754–1821) son of Adm. Sir James of Friarshaw. He was the second Baronet. He was a Captain in the 25th Regiment of Foot and also commanded the Kelso Volunteers. He sold off Friarshaw in 1788, the year after he succeeded. He is probably the Sir George who owned the lands of Longnewton in 1788, as well as other lands in Ancrum Parish. He was taxed from 1791 for having a housekeeper and 3 male servants at Springwood and 4 female servants in London. In the period 1789–98 he was taxed for owning a carriage and horses. In 1784 he became M.P. for Roxburghshire, retaining his seat until 1806. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in at least 1797–1801. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811; he paid the land tax in 1811 for lands in Ancrum Parish, Roxburgh Parish and elsewhere. He was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (although deceased by then). In 1786 he married Elizabeth (d.1801), daughter of John Boyle, Earl of Glasgow (who was the niece of his step-mother). His children were: Elizabeth Georgina (d.1795); Helen (d.1791); and Sir John James, who succeeded. George (b.c.1780) cottar in Southdean Parish, living at Chesters in 1841. His wife's name was Margaret. George (b.c.1780) resident of Southfield in Hawick Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. George (18th/19th C.) tenant at Belses Mill, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish whose daughter Betty was baptised in 1818. George (b.1789/90) gamekeeper in Newcastleton. He was listed as a labourer in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835, and was listed as a 'game watcher' from 1836. He was living at around 11 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and was 'Wood Man' at Greens in 1861. He married Margaret Ingles and their children included: John (b.1819); John (b.1821); James (b.1824); Margaret (b.1827); Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1829); Janet (b.1831); Jessie (b.1832); and Agnes Armstrong (b.1835). He could be the 'G. Douglas, Castleton' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. George (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Ferguson and their son James was baptised in 1834. George (19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son James was baptised in 1839.

George (b.1810/1) farm servant at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish in 1851. He was unmarried at that time. George (19th C.) sawyer in Hobkirk Parish. In 1841 he was at Doveshaugh Braehead. He married Helen White and their children included James (b.1839), Margaret (b.1842) and Jessie (b.1844). George (b.1814/5) from Edinburgh, he was a railway guard in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on Wilton Place. His wife was Ann and their children included Helen, Ann and Margaret. Capt. George of Timpendean (1819–65) son of William, he was the 12th and last Laird to hold the family lands. He sold the estate in 1843 to the Marquis of Lothian. When stationed in the Channel Islands he was accused by a local farmer of killing a bullock, exonerated in the civil court, but found guilty by court martial. He was Chief Commissioner of Western Gold District in Australia. He married Mary Beevor Carver. Their children included: Emma (b.c.1844); and Sholto George (b.c.1846), who died aged 13. He died at Bathurst, New South Wales. His brother Henry Sholto succeeded as head of the Timpendean line. George (b.1818/9) born in Minto Parish, he was miller at Roxburgh Mill in 1861. His wife was Agnes and their children included John, George, James, Elizabeth and Henry. George (1825–94) born in Ashkirk of humble stock, youngest of 3 sons of John and Mary Hood. His family emigrated to Canada in 1832 after his father's failing fortunes as a miller. After trying a succession of jobs he became a Methodist, and eventually became President of the Wesleyan Theological College of Montreal. He was made LL. D. by McGill University in 1869. He married Maria Bolton Pearson in 1855 and they had 4 daughters. Sir George Henry Scott see Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas George (1840/1–1913) farmer in Oxnam Parish. He became tenant at Ruletownhead in the late 1800s when Tom Brown retired from farming. He later held several separate farms, including Hindhope, Plenderleith and Mainside, plus Campvale in Northumberland. He married Isabella (1842/3–1907), daughter of Andrew Turnbull, farmer at Redlees in Northumberland. His children included: Andrew (b.1865), who farmed Riccalton, Doorpool, Philogar and Saughtree; Mary (b.1867); Thomas (b.1869), who took over at Ruletownhead; John (b.1870); Alice (b.1872); and John (again, b.1874). He hunted with the Jedforest Hounds. He and his wife are buried at Oxnam. Sir George Brisbane Scott (1856–1935) poet, writer and critic, born in Gibraltar, but with a long connection to Kelso, where he lived at Springwood Park (and descended from the Douglasses of Cavers through the Friarshaw branch). He was son of Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas and inherited the family estates after his elder brother had died in the Zulu wars. He was also the 4th Baronet of Friarshaw. He was a Justice of the Peace and Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He wrote a novel 'Caerlenrig', serialised in the Border Magazine in 1896/7, 'History of the border counties, Roxburgh, Selkirk, Peebles' (1899), and edited many books of Scottish poetry, fairy tales, etc., e.g. 'Scottish Fairy and Folk Tales' (1894, 2000). He helped manage the 'Scott Bequest Fund' in the latter part of the 19th century, which was used for educational and charitable purposes in Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He never married and was succeeded by his nephew Sir James who squandered the family fortunes. Rev. G.H. (19th/20th C.) from East Bank congregation in Hawick, he was ordained as minister of Patna in Ayrshire. Probably the same man was Presbyterian minister in Singapore, retiring in 1929. Sir Henry of Lugton and Lochleven (c.1340–96) son of Sir John of Lothian. In 1377 his relative Sir Alan Stewart of Ochiltree (in Ayrshire) granted him the Barony of Langnewton. In 1390 he had a charter from King Robert II for the lands of Langnewton. In 1392 William Cochrane resigned 2 tenements in Langnewton to him. He married Marjory, daughter of Sir Walter Stewart of Ralston and their children included: Margaret, who married Sir John Wallace of Craigie; Sir William of Lochleven; and Helen, daughter of Walter Hamilton of Darnagaber. Henry (15th/16th C.) recorded in Oxnam Mains in 1502. Along with his brother Robert, he had remission for stealing cattle from William Colville, with Ralph Ker of Primsidloch as their surety. Henry (15th/16th C.) brother of George in Swinside. In 1502, along with his other brothers Adam, Robert and Simon, he had remission for several crimes. This included kidnapping William Colville of Ravenscraig, Robert Boyd and John Kennedy and holding them for ransom in 'Leven', as well as destroying 3 horses from the same men, stealing a sword, a shield and a purse from them and planning to murder William Colville of Ochiltree. Ralph Ker of Primsidloch was their surety. Also in 1502, along with his brother Robert, he separately had remission for stealing cattle from William Colville from Sunlaws, as well as occupying his lands of 'farnesy'. Henry (17th C.) son of William and grandson of Andrew of Friarshaw. He was 'in Nether Priestoun' in 1665. In 1680 he was 'Old Henry' when recorded along with his brothers George and William. His sons were: William of Nether Prieston; and George of Burlands, Crofts and other lands in Midlem. Henry of Friarshaw and Belses (d.1701) son of Andrew and Jean Home of Polwarth. He was said to be 6th Laird of Friarshaw and also held the Lordship of 'Belches' called Pinnacle and 'Burlands'. He was a writer, probably in Edinburgh. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1700 he was listed in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose. He married Martha, only child of Samuel Lockhart of Castlehill in 1672. His children included: George (b.1673), who succeeded, with the witnesses to his baptism in Edinburgh being advocate George Lockhart, John Lockhart of Castlehill, merchant James Inglis and writer James Galbraith; James (1674–1757), whose son James was M.P. for Malmesbury; Thomas (1676–1730), a Colonel in the Army; Sarah (b.1678); Henry (b.1679), who died young; Martha, who married John Murray of Corstorphine; Elizabeth (b.1681); Samuel (b.1682); Henry (1684–1753), who had a plantation on Antigua; Andrew (d.1732), who in 1704 witnessed a baptism for his brother George and died in India; William (d.1741) Commander of H.M.S. 'Falmouth', who lived at Chiselhurst, Kent; and Jean, who married a Fordice. Henry of Friarshaw (1703–78) son and heir of George of Friarshaw, he became 8th Laird in 1755. He also held the lands of Pinnacle as well as lands in Langlands. He was recorded (incorrectly as 'of Triershaw') as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He left a daughter Mary, who married Sir James Cockburn and died in 1766. Maj. Henry George Sholto of Moorlands (1820–1892) son of Maj.-Gen. William. He succeeded his brother Maj. George as 13th Douglas of Timpendean, although the family estate had been sold by then. He was a Deputy Lieutenant of Leicestershire and held the Lordship of Fowlmere Manor. He married Mary Mitchell and had 13 children, including Lt.-Col. Henry Mitchell Sholto, who succeeded as head of the family line. Lt.-Col. Henry Mitchell Sholto (1847–1931) son of Henry Sholto. He married Georgina Ethel Gilbard and was succeeded by their son Maj. Henry James Sholto. Maj. Henry James Sholto (b.1903) son of Lt. Col. Henry Mitchell Sholto. He was the great-grandson of

Maj.-Gen. William of Bonjedward and Tmipendean. He matriculated arms in 1952 as the representative of Douglas of Timpendean. He married Cynthia Armored Emily Fyers and their son James Alastair Sholto was born in 1939. Henry Scott (1935–) local farmer and official Common Riding Song Singer 1985–1999. He was born at Catslackburn in Yarrow and attended school at Yarrow and Philiphaugh, and then attended Hawick High School when his father moved to Craik. They then moved to Hyndlee and finally Howahill (near Bonchester) in 1949, where he took over and farmed for about 50 years. He was Acting Father in 1978 and has been involved in many other aspects of the Common Riding. He was President of each of the Callants' Club, the Ancient Order of Mosstroopers and the 1514 Club. He also long represented the Uppies in the Hobkirk Baa and threw up a single baa to uphold the tradition in 2021. He sings regularly in the Borders and beyond and has released 2 tapes, 'Singing for Fun' in 1988 and 'The Border Way' in 1998, which include some of his own compositions. He sings 'The Lasie That Works In The Mill' on the 2006 CD 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry', having partly adapted the more minimal tune sung by Walter Peden. He chaired the Callants' Club sub-committee which brought out the 2001 edition of 'The Hawick Songs'. His 'Hosie's Whistle' features on 'Sounds of the Borders' (2012). His son John was Cornet in 1989 and his daughter Jill was Chief Guest in 2002. He himself was the 'quintenary' Chief Guest in 2014. He was awarded an M.B.E. for services to the community of Bonchester in 2014. Hugh 'the Dull' (1294–c.1345) Lord of Douglas, he was 2nd son of William 'the Hardy' and younger brother of Sir James 'the Good'. In 1325 he is recorded as a Canon of Glasgow and Priest of Roxburgh and in 1329 witnessed a confirming charter relating to the Church at Roxburgh. He succeeded to the Douglas titles in 1333 after the death of his brother Sir Archibald and his nephew William, Lord Douglas. He probably fled to France during the time that England controlled southern Scotland. In 1342 he resigned his estates and titles (including the Lordship of Jedforest and Selkirk Forest, and several Baronies, such as Bedrule, Eskdale and Westerkirk) into the King's hands, to be regranted to his nephew William, who became 1st Earl Douglas. Hugh (b.c.1431) recorded as Prebendary of Hawick in 1460. He was also Rector of Carnismule (or Kirkymur) in Whithorn, Treasurer of

Glasgow, Canon of Aberdeen, Brechin and Bothwell and held the prebends of Kincardine and Guthrie. He was Treasurer of Glasgow from about 1457 until at least 1460. These were clearly financial and titular positions, and he is unlikely to have ever set foot in Hawick. He held the office through its connection with the Collegiate Church of Bothwell, and the patronage of the Douglasses. He was nephew of James, Bishop of St. Andrews and directly related to King James II. He was probably a younger son of William, 2nd Earl of Angus. Hugh (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as 'Hew of Douglace' when, along with 'Rinzeane of Rutherford' he took George Young from Minto, for whom Walter Scott of Buccleuch acted as surety. He could be the same 'Hugonin Douglas' who was one of the bailies appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell for the 1500 sasine giving Grahamslaw to Walter Scott of Branksholme. He could be the same man as Hugh, Dean of Brechin, who in 1493 had an indenture with Archibald, 5th Earl of Angus (his cousin) over the lands of Avendale and in 1496 had another indenture over lands that included Gledstains in Lanarkshire. Hugh (d.c.1547) murdered, according to accusations at least, by Gavin Elliot in Horsleyhill and his sons Robert, William and Andrew. It is unclear to which branch of the Douglasses he belonged. Hugh (16th C.) recorded in 1558/9 as 'Magsitro Hugone Dowglas', when he was Rector of 'Sowdown' and Chamberlain of Melrose Abbey. He was still in possession of Southdean in 1563. He may have been related to George of Bonjedward, who held the fruits of the rectory of Southdean from 1566. Hugh (17th C.) recorded as 'Hew Douglas' residing at Blackleemouth in Hobkirk Parish when he witnessed a sasine in 1637. Hugh (b.1825) probably son of James and Mina Henderson. He was a flour miller in Rulewater who later became a warehouseman. He married Agnes, daughter of William Laidlaw. Their daughter Mary married Police Judge James McMorren. Isabel (15th/16th C.) wife of John Scott of Robertson. It is unclear which branch of the Douglasses she came from. In 1532/3 there was a process started in Selkirk to decide on the succession for her husband's lands to their son Walter. Her procurator, Stephen Scott, protested that any sasines for Walter should include her rights to certain lands during her lifetime. Isabella Countess of Mar (1360–1408) daughter of Margaret, Countess of Mar, and William, 1st Earl of Douglas. She firstly married Sir Malcolm Drummond. She was also known as 'Isabel'. She inherited several of the Mar titles (including Cavers)

when her brother James was killed at Otterburne. She granted the lands of Cavers to her (illegitimate) nephew, Archibald Douglas, but the confirmation of Robert III was not obtained, and the lands were 'recognosed' to the King. According to a ratification of 1397 the lands of Cavers were given by James Sandilands (the King's brother-in-law) to George Douglas, Earl of Angus (her half-brother and the King's son-in-law). However, she outlived both Sandilands and the Earl of Angus, and the lands may have returned to her. In 1405 Robert III granted Cavers and the Sheriffdom of Roxburgh to Sir David Fleming, who was killed a few months later. In 1412 her charter was confirmed by James I and her nephew Archibald finally succeeded to become 1st of Cavers. In a similar way her lands of Drumlanrig went to her other nephew, Sir William, 1st of Drumlanrig. And in 1404 she granted the lands of Bonjedward to her (half) sister Margaret, who became the 1st Laird there. She secondly married Alexander Stewart, son of the 'Wolf of Badenoch'. Her seal bore an image of a lady holding the Douglas and Marr shields. Isabella (1630–73) daughter of William, 7th Earl of Morton. She married James Graham, 2nd Marquess of Montrose. Her husband died in 1669 and in the following year she purchased the Glasgow house of the Stewarts of Minto from Sir Ludovic Stewart. Isobel see Isobel Scott. J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Stonedgie in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. Sir James of Lothian or Laudoun (d.1330) probably son of William of Midlothian. He had 4 children: Sir William of Liddesdale, 'the Flower of Chivalry'; Sir John, ancestor of the Earls of Morton; Andrew; and William, perhaps illegitimate. Sir James Lord of Douglas (c.1286–1330) known variously as 'The Good' or 'The Good Sir James', 'The Black Douglas' and 'The Brave Douglas'. He was son of Sir William 'le Hardi', his mother being Elizabeth Stewart. He was brother of Sir Archibald of Liddesdale and Cavers. He fought alongside King Robert the Bruce and after the death of John Comyn (in 1305/6), who was branded a traitor, Bruce gave him all of Comyn's lands, which included the Barony of 'Bethocroul', i.e. Bedrule. He recaptured Roxburgh Castle, 1314, apparently disguising his men as oxen. He commanded the left wing at Bannockburn, probably including thousands of Borderers. After the battle he chased the young Edward II and his men all the way to Dunbar Castle, where he escaped to England by ship. He was believed by the English to have almost supernatural power. In 1316 he killed Edmond of Caillou of Bordeaux, English Governor of Berwick, after a foray into Teviotdale. He was also involved with some other engagements with the English around Berwick in 1316. And in 1317 he ambushed an English force near Lintalee, using birch branches woven together to prevent escape; a wreath of stakes was added to his arms in 1325, possibly to commemorate this incident. He was also one of the signatories of the Declaration of Arbroath in 1320. In 1320 he was also granted the town, castle and forest of Jedburgh, including the lands of Hassendean, Newland, Lessuden and Alton. He is also recorded being granted (probably around 1320) the lands of 'Sonderland, in the barony of Hawick' and 'Lintonrothbrekis' (this was in 'Robertson's Index', and probably corresponded to Sunderland in Selkirkshire along with lands connected with Lintalee or Linton in Roxburghshire), as well as the forests of Selkirk, Ettrick and Traquair. He was made Warden of the West Marches about this time, when the Scottish army went to Ireland. His local residence was at Lintalee. He may have been granted the Forest of Ettrick in 1322. In the Douglas 'Emerald Charter' of 1324 there are many lands listed as being conferred upon him by the King, without some of the usual feudal obligations; this was at least partly in lieu of a large ransom payment that he could have collected for 3 French knights who surrendered to him at the Battle of Biland. These lands included the Barony of Douglas, Forest of Selkirk, Constabulary of Lauder, Forest of Jedburgh, with Bonjedward, Barony of Bedrule, and Baronies of Westerkie, Staplegordon and Romanno. Other lands were confirmed to him at that time, probably including Cavers, and Ringwood. The grant of Jedburgh and its Castle to him was renewed in 1325. He died in Spain, at the Battle of Teba, while returning the Bruce's heart to the Holy Land. He had 2 children by unknown mothers: William, Lord Douglas, who incorporated the 'bloody heart' into his arms and died at Halidon Hill; and Archibald 'the Grim', who was illegitimate, but later became Earl of Douglas – 'There was a man so dark and true, What Scotland loved so dear, There was a king whose lang will rue, The Scot what fled him here' [T]. James (c.1358–88) 2nd Earl of Douglas and of Mar, son of William, the 1st Earl and Margaret, Countess of Mar. He held the Lordship of Liddesdale after his father's death in 1384 (and possibly a few years before), as well as succeeding to extensive Douglas estates in southern Scotland. He witnessed several charters during the reign of Robert II. He had French assistance in the war with England in 1385. In the period 1384–88 he granted his Barony of Drumlanrig to his son William. He had a confirmation of rights in the Barony of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1388. In 1388 he assembled an army under the Douglas banner, which marched into England. He captured Percy's pennon near Newcastle and was killed at the Battle of Otterburn, as told in the ballads, where 'a dead man won the field'. He held several local pieces of land, including Cavers estate (although these may have been formally held by his mother Margaret, Countess of Mar in her own right). He married Isabella (also known as Eupheme) Stewart (daughter of Robert II), possibly at the age of only 15. However, since he left no legitimate heirs, was succeeded by his cousin Archibald 'the Grim', Lord of Galloway; his widow secondly married Sir John Edmondstone of Dunreath. His illegitimate sons William and Archibald eventually became heads of the Drumlanrig and Cavers branches, respectively. He also had daughters Eleanor and Joan (who married William, 5th Lord Dacre). His wife Isabella kept the Lordship of Liddesdale in her own right after his death and his sister (also Isabella) inherited many of his lands. He is buried in Melrose. Stories are told of his armour being kept at Cavers House, but these are merely legends. James 'the Gross' (d.1443) 7th Earl of Douglas, he was 2nd son of Archibald the 3rd Earl and succeeded his great-nephew, William (who was beheaded in 1423). Before becoming Earl he was referred to as 'of Balveny'. He was a hostage in England for his father, the Earl of Douglas, in 1405. In 1405/6 he killed Sir David Fleming, who held the lands of Cavers at the time. In 1427 he was one of the witnesses to the charter granting the Barony of Hawick to William, son of Sir William of Drumlanrig; he is listed there as 'Jacobo de Douglas de Balvany'. In about 1432 he was superior of the Barony of Cavers when the grant of the Kirk to Melrose Abbey was confirmed. In 1432 he witnessed a charter of Sprouston for his nephew, Archibald, 5th Earl of Douglas. He was also made Earl of Avondale in 1437. He served as Justiciar for the South of Scotland. As such he ruled on a legal dispute regarding the ownership of East Mains in a retour of 1437, siding with the Baron of Hawick, his relative! He also served as Warden of the Marches. He married Beatrice, daughter of Robert Stewart, Duke of Albany. In 1424 he secondly married Beatrix Sinclair, daughter of the Earl of Orkney, and with her had 11 children: William, who succeeded; James, who succeeded his brother, and was a twin with Archibald; Archibald, who became Earl of Moray, and was killed at the Battle of Arkinholm; Hugh, who was executed after capture at Arkinholm in 1455; Sir John, Lord of Balveny, executed in 1463; Henry, who was a priest; George, who died young; Margaret, who married Sir Henry Douglas of Borg; Beatrice, who married Sir William Hay of Erroll and secondly Arthur Forbes; Janet, who married Robert Fleming; and Elizabeth, who married William Wallace of Craigie. James (d.1446/7) 3rd Earl of Angus, eldest son of William, the 2nd Earl. He was served heir to his father in 1439, and this probably included the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1439 he was superior for Jed Forest on a document for the Douglasses of Bonjedward. He died without issue and was succeeded by his brother George. James (15th C.) part of the panel for the 'retour' of William Douglas inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1450, done in the presence of Archibald of Cavers. All the panel members were prominent Roxburghshire landowners, but it is unclear who he was exactly. Probably the same James was witness to a charter for William of Cavers (for the lands of Blackpool) in 1450. He may be the same as James, Captain of Drumlanrig, who was the Earl's Bailie, recorded in the 1452 in the sasine for the Barony of Hawick to William of Drumlanrig. James (15th C.) recorded as 'Jacobo de Dowglas' when he was the first witness of the sasine made at Cavers in 1464/5 for Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers and Sherifffdom of Roxburghshire. This suggests he was a relative of the new Baron, perhaps an uncle. George was also a witness, so probably related. He may also be the James who was mentioned in 1476 in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville. James (1425–1491) 9th Earl of Douglas, 2nd son of James the 7th Earl, he succeeded his brother William. There was a decree in 1447 (confirmed in 1449/50) that he was older than his twin brother Archibald. He had sasine in 1452 for superiority of the Baronies of Sprouston, Smailholm, Hawick, Bedrule and 'Broundoun'. As superior of the Barony of Hawick, he gave the 'precept of sasine' for the barony for William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452. He headed a revolt against the King that appeared to have ended in 1452, but resumed in 1454, with the King's force destroying many of his towers, including lands in Ettrick Forest. He forfeited many of his titles in 1455, including Lord Warden of the Marches, after which this ceased to be hereditary.

In 1462 his lands in Roxburghshire were granted to George, 4th Earl of Angus. In 1463 the Scotts of Buccleuch received new charters from the King for assisting on the King's side in the rebellion he led. In 1453 he married Margaret 'the Fair Maid of Galloway', daughter of Archibald Douglas, the 5th Earl, and widow of his brother William (hence she had been his sister-in-law). He secondly married Anne Holland, daughter of the Duke of Exeter. James (15th C.) recorded as deputy to the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, William Douglas, in 1471. He was also listed in regard to extracting fines from the courts of Ettrick Forest in 1471. It is unclear who the William was (probably a Douglas of Cavers, but perhaps William of Cluny); his identity is a mystery, but he may have been a brother of the Laird of Cavers, possibly a younger son of Sir Archibald, 3rd Laird. James (d.1498) 5th Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He was son of Sir William, who he succeeded in 1484. He had a brother, Archibald, who was ancestor of the Cashogle branch. He married Janet (probably eldest) daughter of Sir David Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, the marriage contract being signed between the fathers in 1470. When he inherited the Drumlanrig and Hawick Baronies, he and his wife already held the demesne lands of East Mains and Kirkton. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Drumlanrig by Grierson of Kepanoch in 1490. In 1492 he granted the Barony and Castle of Drumlanrig to his son William, retaining the liferent for himself. In 1494 he gave the lands of West Mains and Crumhaugh to his son and heir William. His Bailies appointed for the purposes of this sasine were George, William and James Douglas (probably relatives of some sort) and Gilbert 'M'Cawill'. His children were: William, who succeeded; Gavin; and Janet, who married Roger Grierson of Windiehill (who died at Flodden). He appears as Baron in a charter of 1502 for Whithope (the dates perhaps being in error). James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Swinside. His brothers Adam and 2 Johns were listed along with him in 1502 when they were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. Douglasses of Bonjedward, Davidsons and the junior Laird of Riddell were also listed. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being 'in onstoun', which could perhaps be a transcription error for 'Ormiston' or a variant of 'Ulston'. He was among Douglasses from Bonjedward and Swinside, as well as Davidsons, who were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. Sir James (d.1545)

5th (or 6th) of Cavers, son of Sir William, who he succeeded in 1506. In 1508 he had a charter for the churches of Spittal and Caerlenrig. He was already Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1508 in the 'retour' for Adam Hepburn as heir to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, in the Lordship of Hermitage. In 1509 he received special consideration from the King as his father's heir because of 'the gude and thankful service done to the Kingis hienes ... quhilk deit in defens of his realme and resisting of his inimies of Ingland and rebellis'. This included the lands and Barony of Cavers, with free disposition of his marriage and other rights. He was 'in the King's ward' before this, suggesting he was a minor until 1509. In 1509/10 the lands and Barony of Cavers were 'recognosed' in the King's hands to be regranted; this finally resolved the issue of inheritance that arose a century earlier. In 1511 he had a royal charter of 'novodamus' from James IV, for the town of Cavers, with the lands, castle, manor and mill; the charter lists the lands within the Barony of Cavers at that time. Also in 1511 he resigned his superiority of the lands of Rutherford and Wells, into the King's hands, to be given to Helen Rutherford. In 1512, along with his wife Elizabeth Murray, he had a charter for the lands of 'Zarlside' (presumably Earlside) and 'Pencrise'. He would have been Sheriff of Teviotdale at the time of Hornshole, as well as the earlier Sclaterford skirmish. In 1515 he is recorded as Baron of Hawick giving a charter of Whithope to William Scott, brother of Walter of Branxholme. He was Sheriff in 1517 for the 'retour' of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was on an inquest for the succession of the lands of John Home in 1523. In 1529 he served as surety that James of Drumlanrig would not attempt to escape from ward in Edinburgh Castle. In 1530 he was one of the Laids who submitted themselves to the 'King's will' to keep peace on the Border. He is recorded in 1529/30 when William Routledge resigned his half of the lands of Crook to him; the resignation was to 'an honourable man, James Douglas of Caueris, in name and on behalf of Martin Douglas' (whose relationship is unknown). He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1534/5 (but mis-transcribed as 'John') as Sheriff of Roxburghshire when he gave sasine for lands in Rutherford. In 1538 he was involved in a dispute with Thomas Ker of Sunderlandhall over the lands of Ashybank. In 1538 he was convicted (along with Kers and Rutherfords) of allowing several rebels to live on their land etc. In 1541 he complained to the Lords of Council that Walter Scott of Branxholme had burned his farm of Whitriggs; 41 of his associates (probably mainly tenants) are listed in the case. Also in 1541 he was involved in a dispute over a sum of money with William 'Familtounne', with William as a witness. In 1537 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Murray of Falahill, who was probably 'the Outlaw Murray'. His known children are: Sir James, who succeeded; William, 1st Laird of Friarshaw; and Robert of Todholes.

Sir James (d.1558) 6th (or 7th) of Cavers and Sheriff of Teviotdale, son of Sir James and Elizabeth Murray. In 1545 he succeeded his father as Baron of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburgh, as well as succeeding to the lands of Kirkton Mains in the Barony of Hawick. In late 1545 a Parliamentary decree arranging 500 horsemen to be mustered in Teviotdale stated that 25 of them could be chosen among his followers and friends and captained by either him or his brother. In 1546 he is recorded in a bond along with several other Borderers presenting Elliots of Thorlieshope as prisoners to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Around 1547 he was among the Border Lairds who paid homage to the Duke of Somerset. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh', 'with my hand at the pen' (suggesting that he could not write). He was indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1553/4 he was Sheriff for the 'retour' of the young Sir Walter Scott as heir to his grandfather. In 1554 he gave a notorial instrument for an acre of land in the Barony of Cavers to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry. He married Christian, daughter of Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, and her testament is recorded in 1581. His children included: Sir William, who succeeded; James, mentioned in 1584/5; and Robert, mentioned in 1585. After his death his wife kept the 'liferent' of Effledge, Cote and Kirkton Mains. Sir James (1498–1578) 7th Baron of Drumlanrig and also Baron of Hawick, son of William. He re-granted the town its charter in 1537 when he was 39. It is traditionally said that he was born in the Tower in Hawick, but there is no evidence for this. In 1514 he inherited the Barony of Hawick, with special dispensation from the King because of his age (this would have been shortly after the Hornshole incident). 'Bonds of manrent' to him are recorded in 1518 (with Lord Robert Maxwell), 1526 (involving Ninian Crichton of 'Bellibocht'), 1527 (involving John Menzies of the 'Castalbyll'), 1544/5 (involving Andrew Rorrison of 'Bardanocht'), 1545

(involving John Cunningham of 'Byrkschaw') and 1550 (involving John and George 'Carrydderis of Holmendis'). In 1545 he was among Border lairds who gave assurance to 'have na intelligence with England' and also among lairds of Teviotdale who signed an assurance to end feuds. In 1526 he had a 'respite', along with James Gordon of Lochinvar and 37 of their kinsmen and associates for communing with Alexander Forester (and others dwelling upon 'Levin') and for the murder of Thomas McClellan in Edinburgh. He helped in the attempt to rescue the young James V from his step-father the Earl of Angus in 1526, along with Scott of Branxholme. Also in 1526 he protested that what was done against the Scotts of Howpasley, Allanhaugh and Borthaugh, who all held lands of him, should do him no prejudice. In 1529 he was held in Edinburgh Castle, with James of Cavers serving as surety that he would not attempt to escape. However he was later engaged by the King in many battles. In 1532 he was accused of treason by Robert Charteris of Amisfield (with the reasons not being recorded) and the challenge was settled in single combat at Hollyrood, but ended without injury on either side; in one description of the combat he is described as 'sumquhat sand-blind' (i.e. short-sighted). In 1535 the King revoked several charters relating to the superiority of lands formerly held by the Homes, including Broadlee in the Borthwick valley that had involved him. In 1536/7 he had a gift from the King of all the non-entries, taxes, etc. due from his lands in Dumfriesshire, while they were in the King's hands after his father's death at Flodden; this was confirmed by another grant by Queen Mary in 1541/2 and charters of 1544/5. In 1538 he had a marriage contract for his daughter Janet to marry William, son of Archibald in Cashogle (probably a first or second cousin). He was in England in 1541, apparently having been accused as accessory to murder, and having fallen out of favour with the Scottish Crown. He was taken prisoner after the battle of Solway Moss in 1542. In 1542/3 he witnessed the marriage contract between Archibald, 6th Earl of Angus and Margaret, daughter of Robert, Lord Maxwell. In 1543 he joined the Earl of Angus in warlike movements against the Earl of Lennox and others. He also appears to have given his support to the English about that time. In 1543/4 he was charged with the murder of the Rector of Kilbride. He was appointed as a 'justiciary' to apprehend criminals in his area in 1546. He and other Douglasses had a 'bond of manrent' with the Earl of Arran in 1546. In 1549 his lands at Drumlanrig were plundered by Lord Wharton. An inventory and will was drawn up for him in 1550. In 1551 he was recorded as superior of the lands of Broadlee in the Borthwick. In 1552 he was appointed as one of the Queen's Commissioners to meet the English Commissioners. In 1553 (or perhaps earlier) he was knighted by the Regent, the Duke of Chatelherault and appointed Warden of the Western Marches, with the use of the Castle of Lochmaben during his wardentry. He was continued as Warden according to a Commission of Queen Mary in 1555. In 1556 he accompanied the Earl of Bothwell on expeditions against the Armstrongs. In 1558 there was an agreement between him and Charles Murray of Cockpool to submit to the decision of James, Lord Somerville. In 1559 he infefted his son William as his heir in the lands of Drumlanrig, Sheriffdom of Dumfries and other lands including the Barony of Hawick; this consisted of 'the town of Hawik with mill, lands of Eist Manis, West Manis, Crunach and Kirkton Mannis, Flekkis, Carlinpile, &c., and in tenantry Howpaslet, Chesholme, Quhitechestir, Edgaristoun, &c.'. He was present in Parliament in 1560 when the Confessions of Faith were ratified and in 1561 at Edinburgh Tolbooth he signed the first Book of Discipline of the Convention of Estates. It has been stated that his support for the Protestant cause at that time would have virtually exonerated the people of Hawick from maintaining the lamp before the altar of St. Mary's. In 1563/4 he had a marriage contract between his daughter Janet and William, eldest son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. In 1564 he and his son Sir William of Hawick were given remission for associating with James, Earl of Moray and others. In 1564/5 he witnessed the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs to end their feud. He was in great favour with Queen Mary, but acted against her in 1567 when she was captured at Carberry. He was at the Battle of Langside in 1568 (although quite an old man by then), fighting on the side of the Regent Moray. In 1569 he served as surety for Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton. He is recorded several times entering accused men before the Privy Council in the years around 1570. He was himself taken prisoner in 1571 by David Spence, Laird of Ormiston, probably on the orders of the government; his son narrowly escaped and not knowing if he was alive or dead he had his captors let him send this letter: 'Willie, Thou sall wit that I am haill and feare. Send me word thairfor how thou art hwther deid or livand? Gif thou be deid, I doubt not but friendis will let me know the treuth, and gif thou be weid, I desyre na mair'. He visited John Knox on his death bed in 1572. In 1573 he was liable to a fine when the man he was cautioner for failed to appear. Also in 1573 he signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. Also in 1574 there was a deed where he agreed to infeft his lands to his grandson James, son of the late Sir William of Hawick. There is a bond of 1575 relating to offences against him by friends or servants of John Johnstone. Also in 1575 he was 'surety in relief' according to the register of the Privy Council. In 1578 he appended to his will a statement of concern that his grandson and heir should not be influenced by the 'wickit nature' of his mother. Called 'Old Drumlanrig' towards the end of his life, he was succeeded by his grandson Sir James. He is known locally as 'the Generous Donor' because of the 1537 charter (although there is some ambiguity about whether his father is meant). He was responsible for building the 'L-shaped' main part of Drumlanrig's Tower, probably around the 1550s. It has also been fancifully suggested that he may have been the one to carry the flag back from Hornshole, but this seems highly unlikely. He married Margaret, daughter of George Douglas, Master of Angus, and sister to Archibald, 6th Earl of Angus. They had at least 3 daughters: Janet, who married Sir William Douglas of Cashogle, and secondly John Charteris of Amisfield (possibly a descendant of the Charteris family of Langlands, and son of the man who had accused him of treason); Margaret, who married John Jardine of Applegirth; and Nicholas, who married James Johnstone of Johnstone. Things did not go well with this marriage, a notorial instrument of 1530 legally recording that he 'required her earnestly to go with him to his place and dwelling of Dumlanrig, and adhere to him as spouse ought to spouse', which she had previously refused to do. The couple divorced, and they were still arguing in court about the financial settlement in 1539. He secondly married Christian, daughter of John Montgomery, Master of Eglinton, whose testament is recorded in Edinburgh in 1581. In 1540 he resigned his lands of Drumlanrig and others into the hands of his superior, in order to regrant them to his heirs and to his wife Christain Montgomery 'in liferent'. In about 1540 the couple had a letter of dispensation from a Cardinal in Rome, allowing them to marry, although they were 'within the simple third and quadruple fourth degrees of affinity'. With her he had 1 son, Sir William of Hawick (who predeceased him), along with 4 daughters: Margaret, who married 3 times, to the Lord of Sanquhar, the Earl of Menteith and Wauchope of Niddrie; Helen, who married Roger Grierson of Lag and Rock Hall; Janet, who married James Tweedie of Drumelzier, and secondly William Ker of Cessford (with a daughter Mary Ker marrying Sir Walter Scott, 'the Bold' Buccleuch); and Christian, who married Sir Alexander Stewart of Garlies. He also had a son John (perhaps illegitimate) who was described as 'in Steppis' when he was denounced as a rebel in 1556 for murdering a Dalryell; a natural son, John 'in Erschemortoun' is recorded in 1564 (presumably the same one mentioned in 1556). Another son Robert was Provost of Lincluden. 5 more children are also recorded (including 'bastard dochter' Janet, Alison and Agnes, and 'bastard son' Thomas, all recorded in the 1550 testament), there being in all 3 Janets and 2 Margarets! A natural son, John 'in Erschemortoun' is recorded in 1564 (presumably also the one mentioned in 1556). Elizabeth, who had a marriage contract with Andrew Ker of Caverton, may also have been his daughter (with the marriage perhaps not going ahead, suggesting she may have died). Being predeceased by his only legitimate son, he was succeeded by his grandson (i.e. William's son) Sir James. When his grandson succeeded him in 1578, there was an inventory of his possessions drawn up, stating that he had 'beildit the haill hous and pallice of Drumlanrig', held the 'hous and toure of Hawik, and conquest [i.e. acquired] the Sowtre landis in Hawik'. His wife's testament was drawn up in 1581. His seal showed 3 mullets (i.e. stars) in the 1st and 4th quarters, a heart in the second and third and 3 crosses on a band across the top – 'Then Douglas of Drumlanrig, He helped to ease the pain, By granting lands his charter Made Hawick's heart beat again' [GLG]. James 4th Earl of Morton (c.1516–81) 2nd son of George of Pittendreich, who was Master of Angus. In 1553 he succeeded to his father-in-law's titles and estates, including Dalkeith House. He was involved in politics and warfare during the Rough Wooing, and was held prisoner in England. He was appointed Lord Chancellor of Scotland in 1563. He was also heavily involved in national affairs during the Reformation and led the army that defeated the forces loyal to Mary, Queen of Scots in 1568. In 1572 he became Regent of Scotland (the last of the 4 men to hold this position), eventually being forced to resign in 1578. In 1574 he was the main executor named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He served as 'tutor' to the young Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch during his minority, among other things appointing Sir Walter Scott of Goldielands as Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose. After being found guilty for taking part in the murder of Darnley, he was executed in 1581, using the 'maiden' that he had helped introduce to Scotland. He was succeeded in the Earldom by his nephew Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Douglas, 3rd Earl of Morton; she was said to be long insane and died in 1574. Although he had no children with his wife, he is said to have had around 7 illegitimate children, including: Sir James of Spott, lay Prior of Pluscarden, exiled in 1583/4; Archibald of Pittendreich, also exiled in 1583/4; George, who was crippled; and William. His capture was instigated by accusations from Capt. William Stewart, which led to a reprisal, with Stewart being killed by James of Parkhead in 1596, and then James being killed by a Stewart in 1608. James (16th C.) probably son of Sir James of Cavers and brother of Sir William. In 1565 he (along with William of the Crook) was fined for the non-appearance of William Elliot of Larriston and William Elliot of Falnash at the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He is listed as brother of the Sheriff in 1584/5 among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. James (16th C.) son of John of Whitriggs. In 1586 he was denounced as a rebel for his part in the slaughter of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton; the others named included sons of Douglas of Cavers and Douglas of Earlside, as well as several Turnbells. James of Earlside (16th C.) recorded as 'goodman of Yerlesyde' in 1590 when he was among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott's of Carrick. Others listed include Elliots of the Hill, Martin's Clem Crozier, Thomas Laidlaw of the Haugh and John Henderson of Plenderleith. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Douglases. James (16th C.) listed as 'James Douglas called of Deynebray' when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for Crook in 1592. He must have had an association with Deanbrae, and may be the brother of Sir William of Cavers recorded in 1565. James of Todholes (16th C.) recorded as surety with the Privy Council in 1572 for a man in Edinburgh. He is probably the James 'of Todholes' who was listed among the men implicated in the murder of David Rizzio in 1565. He may be the Douglas of 'Todheils' whose heiress Helena married Robert, 3rd son of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. He is surely related to the later James, recorded as 'apperand of Todhoill' in 1601. Sir James (d.1612) 8th of Cavers, son of Sir William and Euphemia Ker. In 1576/7 his father resigned his lands, Barony and Sheriffship to him, reserving 'liferent' for himself. It thus appear that he took over running the Cavers estates during his father's lifetime. In 1579 he was 'younger of Cavers' when he witnessed a sasine for Midshiels and Appletreehall. In 1588 he was Sheriff of Roxburghshire (but still 'younger' of Cavers). In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels; his name appeared along with that of his father William. About 1590 he was listed among landed men of the Borders. In 1590/1 James Douglas of Spott acted as caution for him that he would pay the appropriate fees when released from the Tolbooth of Edinburgh. In 1591 he served as surety for Walter Turnbull of Bedrule. Also in 1591 he subscribed to a bond of allegiance to the King against Bothwell, Home and others. In 1593 he (along with the Warden, William Ker of Cessford) was granted a warrant to apprehend Sir John Ker of the Hirsell. In 1597 he signed a bond with William, 10th Earl of Angus, long with Douglasses and others. In 1599 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to explain why he had not turned over the Lorraines who were outlawed for killing David Turnbull, younger of Wauchope. He was also denounced, along with his deputy 'Hob of Bedroule' Turnbull, for not paying the collected taxes to Mark, Lord of Newbattle. There was a further general complaint by the Privy Council that as Sheriff he had failed to hold head courts (since 1586), administer the law and particularly allowed several men to go free who had been denounced as rebels; he and his Depute were ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1600 he was accused, along with the Cranstons of that Ilk, with resetting Thomas Cranston of Morriston. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1601 when he appeared at the trial over the Kerr-Turnbull feud in Jedburgh. Also in 1601 he was one of the Scotsmen (along with Turnbull of Minto) accused by several Englishmen of stealing their livestock from the Stobs and the Crag, as well as being in another group accused by Henry Woodrington of stealing cattle from him; in the same year he accused some of the same people of stealing 2 horses from him. In 1602 he signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds. In 1604 he served as surety for the Turnbells of Stanedge and Barnhills, who were tried for killing 6 sons of Grahamslaw of Newton. About the same time he bought the lands of 'Nuke' from Andrew Friarshaw, the related financial obligation being the focus of a court case of 1607. In 1610 he was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire. Also in 1610 he and his son William had a bond (with Thomas Turnbull of Minto acting as cautioner) not to harm Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk or his colleagues; the nature of this dispute is unclear. He married Margaret (or perhaps Janet) Cranstoun in 1580, having a son Sir William, who succeeded; she could be the Margaret, connected with the Sheriff of Roxburgh, recorded in the Register of Testaments in Lauder in 1632. He later married a daughter of Sir James McGill and had 2 sons who took the surname McGill: James, probably related to the later minister of Cavers, Walter McGill; and Thomas, who became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1634. The 1643 valuation of Cavers Parish lists both 'Anna McGill, Lady Summington' and 'Mr Walter McGill' as landowners, suggesting that they may both connected to his family, perhaps his children, or otherwise siblings of his 2nd wife. His daughter Elizabeth married William Elliott of Stobs, and later Sir William Douglas of Kelhead. Another daughter, Margaret, married John, son of Archibald Douglas, Archdeacon of Glasgow in 1607. The James of Cavers who wrote a letter to the Privy Council in February 1613 is presumably his son, since he was deceased by then. Sir James (d.1615) 8th Baron of Drumlanrig and also Baron of Hawick. In 1572 he was served as heir to his father, Sir William Douglas of Hawick and grandfather Sir James of Drumlanrig. This included the town of Hawick, with its mill, together with the lands of 'Eist Manis, West Manis, Crumhauch et Kirk-toun Manis, Flekkis et Murynes, Ramsay Clewis, Braid Ley, Tenesyde, Carlingpule et Almonslan-dis' and in tenandry the lands of 'Howpaslet, Chesholme, Quhitehoip, Drydame, Commoun-side, Ovir Harwod, Emetscheilis, Nethir Harwod, Wyndislandis, Eister et Wester Heislehoip, Langhauch, Lairis Toftis, Kirkwod, Harwodhill, Quhitechestir, Fynn timer, Edgaristoun, Edgaristounschelis et Quhomis'. There was a further deed of 1574 where his grandfather declared him to be his heir. He succeeded to Drumlanrig in 1578 on the death of his grandfather James (his father having already died). At that time an inventory of his possessions was drawn up, showing that he owned many pieces of land. In 1581/2 he was ordered to enter a number of Bells, Grahams and others before the Privy Council. In 1582 he was cautioner (along with Robert, Provost of Lincluden) for William Bell for rieving, the pair were committed to ward in 1583 for gathering 50 or so men and raiding the farm of Bonshaw, and in 1585 was surety for Robert himself. In a court case of 1592 his cautioners were listed as Robert, Provost of Lincluden, Robert of Cashogle and 'Mr' John. He had a confirming charter of his lands granted by James VI in 1591/2 and ratified by Parliament in 1594. This listed the Barony of Hawick as including the lands transcribed as 'East Manys, West Manys, Cruhauch and Kirtoun of Manys, Flekis, Maisterayneis, Ramsay Clewis, Braidley, Teindside, Carling Pule and Almouslandis' and in tenandry the lands of 'Howpasley, Chisholme, Whitehope, Dryden, Commonsides, Over Harwood, Emeschellis, Nether Harwood, Weyndislandis, Easter and Wester Hessilhoip, Langhaugh, Laws, Tofts, Kirkwood, Harwoodhill, Whitchester, Fynnrik, Edgerston, Edgerston Scheillis and Quhawmes'. In 1593 he signed a bond of co-operation with Maxwell of Castlemilk and Kirkpatrick of Closeburn against Sir James Johnstone of Dunskeillie. In 1595 he accompanied Lord Hay on a foray into Annandale. A bond of 1601 between the Bailies and Burgesses of Hawick and him led to a dispute that lasted for many years after his death. In 1603 he was cautioner for John Douglas, in lands of Glencairn. Also in 1603 he was cautioner for many people in a dispute with Sir James Johnstone, Warden of the West Marches. In 1607 there was a complaint made against him and others by Adam Menzies of Enoch; this mentions his son and heir William, 2nd son (probably James) and his natural son John. He was served heir to his grandfather James' lands in Dalswinton in 1608. He sat in Parliament as a minor baron in 1608 and 1609. He had a remission in 1609 from the King, for any killing or other acts committed by him during his time as Warden of the West Marches of Scotland, before the union of the crowns. In 1609 many of his lands were united into the Barony and Regality of Drumlarig by Crown charter. He sat in the General Assembly in 1610. About 1610 there was a dispute between him and Walter Scott, Lord of Buccleuch over the lands of Whitehope. Also in 1610 he brought an action against William of

Howpasley and James Gledstains of that ilk to remove from lands of his (including Howpasley), as well as for taxes he claimed they owed him as superior. In 1610 he was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace of Dumfriesshire and in 1612 was appointed a commissioner for keeping the peace in that county. In 1612 the Bailies of Hawick made a legal challenge to Drumlanrig's hereditary authority by imposing a stent on householders within the Burgh and also a tax at the market (in order to pay off debts the town had contracted) without the permission of the Baron; he complained to the Privy Council, also alleging that they were refusing to allow his own men to collect the traditional market dues and confined his 'tacksman' to the steeple of St. Mary's! In 1615, sometime after gaining the lands of Howpasley, about 60 of his sheep were slaughtered by a band of men collected by Lady Scott of Howpasley and Jean Scott of Satchells. It is clear from all of this that he (or perhaps his local officers) was far from popular locally. He married Mary Fleming, sister of John, 5th Lord Flemming, the marriage contract being in 1581; his wife was granted liferent of the demesne lands of Hawick in 1616. In later life his affairs were taken over by his son William, who eventually succeeded and became 1st Earl of Queensberry. Another son was Sir James of Mouswald (or 'Mousell'), who was an M.P. His natural son John married Isobella, daughter of John Douglas of 'Killivarrand' in 1607. Other children may have included: David of Airdoch; George of Pinzerie; Janet, who married William Livingstone of Jerviswood; and Helen, who married John Menzies of Castlehill. His natural son John married Isobella, daughter of John Douglas of 'Killivarrand' in 1607. He may also have had a natural daughter, who was also Janet and married John Carruthers, 8th of Holmains. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'apperand of Todhoill' in a 1601, when he was described as being shot 'with twa bullettis in the wambe' when listed among the wounded in the skirmish between the Turnbolls and Kers in Jedburgh. He appears to have been an ally of the Turnbolls of Minto. He is also recorded as surety in a trial of 1612. He was presumably related to earlier Douglasses of Todholes (or Todhills) and was possibly son of Robert of Todholes. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 as 'in Cruik' in the court case dealing with the skirmish between Turnbolls and Kers (and their supporters) on Jedburgh Fair Day. He was wounded 'in the neife' (i.e. fist) and dismembered

‘of ane pairt thair of’. Several others in the Turnbull party were killed and others maimed, while 2 on the Kerr side were killed. He was probably related to the earlier William of Crook and Martin in Crook. He is probably the same James who was granted lands within Crook by his father William in 1581. James (d.bef. 1603) son of William 1st of Friarshaw. He appears to have died before his elder brother John, and hence the Lairdship went to the next brother, George. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1607 as being ‘in Freirschaw’ in a court case with John Haliburton of Muirhouse law. The case centred on an obligation of £1,000 that James Douglas of Cavers had paid to Andrew of Friarshaw for the lands of ‘Nuke’. He must therefore have been a close relative of Andrew, although the connection is not clear. He could be the same man as James, son of William (1st of Friarshaw), except that James appears to have died before 1603. James (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Cavers’ in a 1612 document listing people convicted of charging too much interest on loans. Along with John (also in Cavers, and probably a relative) he failed to appear and was denounced as a rebel. Sir James (c.1591–1656) 1st Lord Mordington. He was brother of William, who was 10th Earl of Angus and 1st Marquess of Douglas. He held lands in the Rule valley, being granted Templehall and Brewlands in 1627. He married Ann, daughter of Laurence, 5th Lord Oliphant and was succeeded by his son William. James of Lochleven (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William, 6th Earl of Morton. He was Commendator of Melrose Abbey in about the years 1569–1606. He thus held the superiority of some local lands, including the kirklands of Hassendean and Cavers. In 1573 he led a court case against Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for the ‘wraungis violent and masterfull casting down demolitioun . . . of the principale abbay and kirk of Melrose. He is recorded as Laird of Lochleven in 1581 when he was superior of some lands in Langnewton. In 1586 he complained that Kers, Rutherfords and others had stopped him from collecting his teinds in Langnewton. In 1592 he was surety for Robert Kerr of Newton and for Hector Turnbull of Wauchope. He eventually resigned the Melrose lands into the hands of his nephew, William, Earl of Morton. He married Mary Kerr, then Helen (or Eleanor) Scott and finally Jean Anstruther. Rev. James (d.c.1658) minister of Cavers. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1637, became the assistant to Walter McGill at Cavers in 1647, and succeeded after his death 4 years later. He is recorded as still being minister in April 1658 and probably continued until his death (with James Gillan taking over later that year). Note that the minister of Hobkirk at about the same time had the same name. He may have been closely related to the Douglasses of Cavers, and/or the previous incumbent Walter McGill (this being the surname of the 2nd wife of Sir James of Cavers who died in 1612). However, the precise relationship is uncertain. James (c.1646–1700) son of Archibald, Earl of Angus and 1st Earl of Ormond. He succeeded his grandfather William as 2nd Marquess of Douglas. He is probably the Marquess of Douglas for whom Thomas Laidlaw paid the Land Tax in Southdean Parish in 1663. In 1668 he was served heir to his father in several titles, including Lordship of the Barony of Jedforest and of Selkirk; he thus held the superiority of Southdean Parish. He paid tax on land valued at £4475 in Southdean Parish in 1678, as well as lands in Jedburgh and in Selkirkshire. He contributed £500 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was a Privy Councillor under Charles II and James VII. He married Barbara, daughter of John Erskine, Earl of Mar and secondly married Mary, daughter of Robert Kerr, 1st Marquess of Lothian. The end of his marriage with his first wife is immortalised in the ballad ‘Waly Waly’. His children included: James, Earl of Angus, who died at the Battle of Steinkirk, aged 20; William, who died in infancy; and Archibald, who became 3rd Marquess. Rev. James (1624/5–65) younger son of William Douglas of Bonjedward and brother of John, who was minister of Yetholm and Crailing. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1645 and became minister at Hobkirk in 1652, where he remained until his death. There is a discharge of 1657 for vicarage teinds of Harwood in the National Archives involving him. He was one of the few conformist ministers in the district who were not expelled in the early 1660s, i.e. he accepted Episcopacy. He married Jean Martin and their children included: William, who succeeded to the lands at Newhall and Plewlands in 1669; and Robert, who became an apprentice apothecary in Edinburgh in 1679. Thomas, lawful son of James, witnessed a document for Hobkirk teinds in 1657, but would have been too young to be this James’ son. He was buried in Hobkirk graveyard, on ‘Cowdie’s Knowe’, his gravestone (a through-stone) being marked ‘MAISTER IAMES DOWGLAS SONE TO THE LAIRD OF BOONIEDB(VR)GH LATE MINISTER OF HOBKIRK’. James (d.1671) 2nd Earl of Queensberry and also Baron of Hawick, son of William, the 1st Earl. He succeeded his father in 1640 and acquired many additional lands (particularly in Dumfriesshire) to add to the family estate. In 1640 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Rev. Robert Cunningham. In 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being 'notorious criminalls, thieves and ressetters of thift'. In a county valuation of 1643 he is recorded having land equal to about $\frac{1}{3}$ of the total yearly value of land in the Parish of Hawick (amounting to £5424 16s 8d). He was firmly a supporter of the Royalist cause during the time of the Civil War. He was intercepted on his way to join Montrose, imprisoned and forced to pay a huge fine in 1645, but was pardoned by Cromwell in 1654. In 1650 Drumlanrig Castle was attacked by Col. Gilbert Kerr and a group of men who objected to his Royalist stance, including Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead, William Kerr of Newton and many others; these men were later compelled to pay damages to him. In 1653 he was the superior who granted Weensland, Shaws and Burnflat to William Scott of Horsleyhill. In 1661 he and his son (William, Lord Drumlanrig) was listed as owing £907 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for the teind duties for their lands within the Barony of Hawick. In 1663 he is recorded paying the Land Tax of £6140 for his property in Hawick Parish, this included £1080 for the 'Milne and Customes'. In 1669 he complained to Parliament about the high valuation placed on his lands in the Barony of Hawick. Around 1670 he disputed Hawick's rights to the Common (this battle being taken up by his son William after he succeeded as Baron of Hawick). He firstly married Mary, 3rd daughter of James, 2nd Marquis of Hamilton, the marriage contract being in 1630; they had no issue. In 1635 he married his second wife Margaret, eldest daughter of John Stewart, 1st Earl of Traquair (she died in about 1673). They had 9 children: William (b.1637), who succeeded and became 1st Duke of Queensberry; Lt.-Gen. James (d.1691), who was at Bothwell Bridge and the Battle of the Boyne; John (d.1675) who died in the Siege of Treves (or Trier); Robert (d.1676), who died in the Siege of Maastricht; Mary, who married Alexander Stewart, 3rd Earl of Galloway; Catherine, who married Sir James Douglas of Kellhead; Henrietta, who married Sir Robert Grierson of Lag; Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth; and Isobel, who married Sir William Lockhart of Carstairs.

James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Brown and their children included: Bessie (b.1640); Agnes (b.1644); John and Isobel (b.1647); and Janet (b.1651). James (d.1674) brother of Sir William of Cavers and son of Sir Archibald. He was stabbed by Andrew Rutherford of Townhead when they were returning from dining at Swanside near Jedburgh, and died from the wounds. Rutherford was caught, tried and beheaded in Edinburgh. Robert Scott of Horsleyhill gave evidence, being one of the fellow diners, along with Charles Kerr of Abbotrule and William Ker of Newton. James (17th C.) son and heir of William, who was described as an advocate in 1672 when he inherited his father's Lordship and Barony of Jedforest (i.e. the superiority of lands in Southdean). They were probably related to the Marquesses of Douglas, who had held this Barony in the decades before. He was probably dead by 1684, when his sisters Margaret and Jean were served as joint heirs to this same Lordship. James (17th C.) tailor in Robertson Parish. He married Janet Henderson and their children included: James (b.1682); and Thomas (b.1686). The witnesses in 1682 were Thomas Henderson (probably related to his wife) and James Dryden, and in 1686 were James Dryden and John Armstrong. James (17th C.) recorded as a 'student' in 1678. He witnessed (along with another student, Walter Laing) the baptism for Andrew Angus in Hawick Parish. James (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He was probably related to Jean and John, who were also listed. James (17th C.) listed in the 1694 Horse Tax rolls at Cavers. James 2nd Duke of Queensberry (1672–1711), eldest son of William the 1st Duke. He was served heir to his father in 1695. He was created Baron Rippon, Marquis of Beverley and Duke of Dover in the British peerage, and still held several Scottish titles, including Lord Douglas of Hawick. While Earl of Drumlanrig he was appointed Colonel of the 6th Horse Guards Regiment, and 'Drumlanrig's troop' mustered in Hawick in 1687. He was made a Privy Councillor in 1690 and was one of Scotland's representative peers in Parliament 1707–08. He served as Lord High Treasurer of Scotland as well as Secretary of State and Lord High Commissioner and is credited with drafting the 'Act of Union' of 1707 (hence being sometimes known as the 'Union Duke'). In 1706 he resigned his titles into the hands of the Queen, to be regranted to himself and his heirs. He married Mary, daughter of Charles, Lord Clifford. One of his daughters married Francis, Duke of Buccleuch. The titles of Marquess and Earl passed to his insane son James, while the Dukedom passed to a younger son, Charles. James (17th/18th C.) resident of 'Kirkton' farm. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Betty (b.1718), John (b.1720) and Robert (b.1725). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at East Mains in 1716 when his daughter Elspeth was baptised. Elspeth (again, b.1720) may also have been his child. James of the Trows (17th/18th C.) related to the Cavers family, the connection said to be through an illegitimate son. He may also at one point have been Laird of Earlside. In 1720 he was tenant at the Trows when he made a loan to Archibald Douglas of Cavers. His children included: Thomas (b.1705); Margaret (b.1709), who married James Oliver; and Esther (b.1715), who married Thomas Turnbull (of the Hawick carpet factory). He is probably the same James who was listed at Trows on the 1694 Horse Tax records. His son-in-law James Oliver is said to have taken over the farm of Earlside from him. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children may have included William (b.1697), Robert (b.1697), James (b.1698), William (b.1700), Margaret (b.1700); Rachel (b.1701), Archibald (b.1702), Agnes (b.1703), George (b.1704), Marion (b.1705), James (b.1706), Walter (b.1707), Bessie (b.1707), Margaret (b.1707), Jane (b.1710), Andrew (b.1710), Isabel (b.1712), Helen (b.1713), John (b.1714), James (b.1716), James (b.1717), Isabel (b.1719) and Robert (b.1722). There are surely at least 2 families here. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Clarilaw in 1709 when he married Agnes Scott, the marriage being registered in Cavers. He may be the James whose children, baptised in Wilton, included William (b.1710) and Thomas (b.1713). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at 'brodlee's' in 1721 and 1724. It is unclear whether this is the Broadlee in Ashkirk or in the Borthwick valley. He married Agnes Davidson in 1708 and their children included: Jean (b.1716); Janet (b.1718); Margaret (b.1721); and Agnes (b.1724). The witnesses in 1721 were William and James Douglas (who were surely related) and in 1724 were William Douglas and James Dryden. He is surely related to the man of the same name who was living at 'Broadlees' a generation later. Sir James of Friarshaw and Springwood (1704–87) 2nd son of George and brother of Henry of Friarshaw. He was the 8th

Laird of Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish, and the 1st Baronet. In 1750 he purchased the lands of Bridgend near Kelso and changed the name to Springwood Park (although it was also known as 'Springfield Park'). He became a Rear Admiral. In 1759 he carried back to Britain the news of Gen. Wolfe's victory at Quebec. He later served as M.P. for Orkney. He is probably the James of Bridgend listed among the Commissioneris for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1775 he entailed Springwood Park along with his other estates. He succeeded to Friarshaw after the death of his brother in 1778. He is listed being taxed for having several male servants from 1778. He is also recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls, Horse Tax Rolls and for having female servants tax roll (with as many as 6 servants) at Springwood Park in the 1780s. He was a Knight of the Order of Bath and was created a Baronet in 1786. In 1753 he married Helen (1727/8–66), daughter of Thomas Brisbane of Brisbane. In 1768 he secondly married Helen (d.1793), daughter of John Boyle, Earl of Glasgow. His children included: Sir George, who succeeded; James (1755–1840), also an Admiral, who was among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and married Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. Robert Scott of the Royal Navy; Thomas (1756–85); Henry (1758–1839), a judge at Patna; and Mary Isabella, who married Sir H.H. Macdougall. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anna Pott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1732. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Denholm in 1733 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same James was at Ormiston in 1737 when his son Archibald was baptised. Other children baptised in Cavers who could be his include John (b.1729), an unnamed child (b.1732), James (b.1732), William (b.1733), Thomas (b.1734), Janet (b.1735), Archibald (b.1737), another unnamed child (b.1738) and Archibald (b.1740). He may be the James who married Ann Pott in Cavers in 1731. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Burnhead in 1742 and 'Broadlees' in 1747 and 1748. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Stuart and Janet Douglas (perhaps a relative) in Langlands in 1742 and another for Thomas Scott in Galalaw in 1744. He married Janet Turnbull in Wilton in 1738 and their children included: Rachel (b.1739); James (b.1740); William (b.1742); Agnes (b.1744); Gavin (b.1747); and Jean and Martha (b.1748). The witnesses in 1742 were Robert Scott and James Dryden, in

1747 were John and Walter Scott and in 1748 were James Dryden and William Scott. He is surely related to the man of the same name who was at 'brodleys' 2 decades earlier. James (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. In 1742 (along with gardener Robert Turnbull) he witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Taylor and Margaret Douglas (perhaps his sister). In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for gardener Walter Irvine and another for gardener Robert Turnbull and Euphan Douglas (who may have been related). Based on these witnesses it seems feasible that Margaret (wife of merchant Robert Taylor) and Euphan (wife of gardener Robert Turnbull) were his sisters. He may be the man of this name who paid tax for 14 windows in Hawick in 1748. He married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1739 and their children (baptised in Hawick) included: William (b.1740); Betty (b.1742); John (b.1744); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1742 were druggist Gideon Scott and tobacconist Robert Taylor. He may be the James whose son Alexander died in Hawick in 1781 and the deceased merchant whose daughter Janet died in Hawick in 1809. Rev. Dr. James (d.1780) 16th Laird of Cavers. He was 3rd son of Archibald, and became heir and executor for his brother Archibald in 1774. He was Prebendary of Durham and received a Doctorate in Divinity. It is said that he had a road built by which a coach and 6 could ascend to the top of Ruberslaw; he was said to have made a journey as far up as he could go, accompanied by Sir James Graham of Netherby. He was taxed for having 5 male servants in 1778 (a butler, a footman, a coachman and 2 gardeners) and 6 in 1779. In Edinburgh in 1750 he married Jean Halyburton (or 'Peggy Haliburton'), sister of Col. Hailburton of Pitcur, but they had no surviving children. He was in turn succeeded by his brother John. His will stated that if his brother John failed to have male heirs he was to be succeeded by his cousins Andrew, then Capt. Archibald, then Robert, and 'whom failing, to my lawful heirs whatsoever'. His sisters Catharine and Euphane were also provided for at Cavers. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1781. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, who was at Appletreehall in 1748. He married Bessie Dryden in 1747 and their son William was baptised in 1748, with witnesses Walter Scott and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Alison Hendry in 1752 and their children included James (b.1754). James (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Wilton in 1761. James

(18th C.) butler at Cavers in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for James of Cavers. He could be the James whose daughter Margaret was baptised in 1772 and the James in Cavers whose son Alexander was baptised in 1779. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at 'Berryfellhouse' in 1787 when his son James was baptised. He could be the James whose son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1786. Other children baptised in Cavers who may have been his include Betty (b.1766), John (b.1768), James (b.1774), Jean (b.1776) and Katherine (b.1777). James (18th C.) married Betty Veitch in Cavers Parish in 1782. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hoddleswoodie in 1790 when his son Hugh was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He is probably the James whose wife Elizabeth became the first letter-carrier of the Rule valley in 1835, by which time he was said to be almost blind. Their other children included Mary (b.1797), James (b.1799), Charles (b.1800) and Nelly (b.1808). Other children, baptised in Hobkirk around the same time, who may have been his, include Francis (b.1792), Isabel (b.1794), William (b.1795) and Wilhelmina (b.1806). James (d.1829) tenant at Corbyhall. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Over Southfield in 1792. He was listed as tenant at 'Upper' Southfield according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Margaret Douglas and their son Robert was baptised in 1792. The witnesses were James and Robert, who seem likely to be related to him and to his wife; the entry occurs right after the baptisms for all the children of Dr. Robert, suggesting a possible link. He may be the James whose illegitimate child (with Janet Wilson) was buried in Hawick in 1799; this may be the James born to those parents in Wilton in 1795. James (1743–1827) born at Braidlie in Castleton Parish, he was son of John and Christian Nichol. He married Christian Scott (1745–1825) in Dykeraw. Their children included: Christian (b.1770); Jane (1771–1855), who married John Cavers; Helen (b.1775); John (1778–1838), a joiner in Castleton; Walter (b.1780), who kept the Douglas Hotel on St. Andrew Square in Edinburgh; and Violet (1788–1856), who married William Hardie, and died at Burnmouth Schoolhouse. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Ainslie in 1781 and their children included Thomas (b.1782). James (b.1764/5–1840) shepherd, probably at Meadshaw. He married Margaret Warwick, who died at Meadshaw in 1829, aged 48. Their 4th son John was shepherd at

Craik and died at Meadshaw in 1840, aged 20. He himself died of smallpox in Kedzlee in Melrose Parish. The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. James (b.c.1770s) brewer at Whisky-houses in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Bowanhill according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He was listed as a shepherd at Bowanhill on the 1801 Militia ballot. James of Cavers (1790–1861) son of George and Lady Grace Stuart, he succeeded on the death of his father in 1815. He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. In 1824 he established a School for the Arts in Hawick, and instituted popular educational lectures, as well as being instrumental in setting up an Agricultural Society. For acts such as these he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1825. He also supplied books to libraries in the outlying areas (e.g. to Ashkirk Parish, as described in 1837). About 1824 he also offered to support a preacher to visit among people in the Hawick district, being turned down by the Secession Kirk, but being accepted by the Congregational Union of Scotland, from whom he engaged Francis Dick to preach in the area over the next 19 summers. Apparently a group of such travelling preachers that he supported were referred to as the ‘Cavers missionaries’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He served as Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was a heritor of Cavers and Kirkton Parishes, and also listed in 1839 among the major landowners of Hawick Parish. In 1841 he was living at Cavers House with his wife, 7 children, 9 female servants and 1 male servant. In 1851 he was still there, with 3 children, 5 female servants and 1 male servant. He may have been the James of Cavers who wrote words for the song ‘Hollin, Green Hollin’. He was said to be well read in many fields, and contributed articles on religious topics, publishing booklets such as ‘The Advancement of Society’ (1825), ‘Errors Regarding Religion’ (1830), ‘The Structure of Prophecy’ (1850), ‘Popery and Infidelity’ (1852), ‘Rome and Maynooth’ (1852), ‘The Truths of Religion’ (1830), ‘An Address on Slavery, Sabbath Protection, and Church Reform’ (1838), ‘The Philosophy of the Mind’ (1839), etc. In 1820 he married Emma (d.1882), daughter of Sir David Carnegie, 4th Baronet of Pittarron. Their children were: James (b.1822), who succeeded; Agnes (b.c.1825), died unmarried; Mary (b.1825/6–59), who married William Elphinstone Malcolm of Burnfoot (Dumfriesshire); Emma (b.c.1829–70), who married Capt. Robert Erskine Anderson; Ellen (1830–1911), who married Rear-Adm. George Palmer; Stuart (1833/4–50s); and Lucy (b.1840/1), also died unmarried. His widow stayed at Midgard after his death. James (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Telfer in 1816 and their children included: William (b.1816); Betty (b.1818); and Thomas (b.1821). James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Douglas and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1821. James (1806–82) born in Edinburgh, but baptised in Castleton, son of John and Betty Beattie. He was a carpenter in Newcastleton and farmer at Roan. He was listed as a joiner in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1851 he was at about 6 Langholm Street and employed 5 men. He also ran a saw mill, according to an 1852 directory. By 1861 he is recorded as farmer at Roan (and a widower), employing 2 shepherds and 3 labourers. He was listed at Roan in a directory of 1868. In 1881 he was a master carpenter employing 5 men and a farmer of more than 3000 acres, employing 7 people. He firstly married Charlotte (1809–57), daughter of Adam Glendinning. In 1863 he secondly married his cousin Elizabeth (1819–87), daughter of Edinburgh hotel keeper Walter Douglas. James (19th C.) married a Wilson. Their daughter Margaret Scott was baptised in Wilton in 1839. James of Cavers (1822–1878) son of James and Emma Carnegie, he succeeded in 1861. He was either the 20th or 21st Laird in descent from Archibald, son of the Earl of Douglas. Margaret Park wrote a poem commemorating his birth (published in Bet Young’s book of verse in 1823). He was interested in local antiquities and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. James Wilson dedicated ‘Memories of Hawick’ (1858) to him. He chaired the ceremonies for the opening of the Teviot Bridge at Denholm in 1865. He held the lands of Haughhead, formerly part of Weensland, as recorded in about 1874. He wrote an article about John Leyden in 1875. In 1858 he married Mary Graham, daughter of Sir Andrew Agnew, 7th Baronet of Lochnaw in Wigtonshire. He died without a male heir and was succeeded as Laird by his niece, Mary (who was daughter of his sister Mary and William Malcolm and who became Mrs. Palmer Douglas). He was buried in a new vault attached to old Cavers churchyard. Bailie James (1826–1885) born at Horsleyhill the year of the ‘Droothy Summer’, he was 3rd son of farmer John of Easter Essenside. He was an apprentice with John & George Oliver, writers, then was cashier with William Wilson & Sons and Wilson & Armstrongs before becoming Actuary of Hawick Savings Bank (also known as the National Security Savings Bank of Hawick). He was the first Manager of the Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, Ltd., later being their Actuary, and was a Director of Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Co. He was also a member of the Total Abstinence Society, becoming their President and a keen speaker on temperance subjects. He was additionally a member of the Hawick Literary and Scientific Society about 1850. He first became a Councillor in 1868 and returned again in 1883, when he was made a Magistrate. He was long remembered for his integrity and honesty. He married Isabella Cochrane (related to Andrew the tailor), who died in 1857, aged 27. They had at least one child, John, who died in infancy. Douglas Road was named after him, and for a time also Douglas Terrace. James (19th/20th C.) member of the Drums and Fifes band who received a presentation for 50 years' service at the 1921 Colour Bussing. James 'Jimmy' (d.2019) engineer from Hawick. He was an apprentice motor mechanic at Guthrie's during WWII, then moving to Woodcock's. He then moved to Thurso where he was project engineer at Dounreay, the Atomic Energy Authority's experimental reactor and was transferred to Sellafield in 1968. In Hawick he was Captain of the Trades and played a few times for Hawick R.F.C. James 'Jim', son of Jimmy. He lived in Hawick until about the age of 10 when his father moved to work at Dounreay. He attended Aberdeen University and worked as a soil scientist in Oxfordshire and then Penicuik. Jane (d.c.1494) daughter of George, 4th Earl of Angus. In 1472 she married David Scott, younger of Buccleuch, who died in 1484. In 1484 she made a claim for 8 years worth of rent for lands held by Walter Scott of Howpasley. Before 1492 she married George, Earl of Rother. Her brother Archibald, Earl of Angus, was her executor. Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter of Archibald, 5th Earl of Angus. In 1495 the Barony of Terregles was granted to her by James IV; this included the lands of Feu-Rule. She married Andrew, son of Herbert, Lord Herries of Terregles in 1495. Janet (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as 'jonet douglass'. This was on a list of associates of James of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branhholme.

Janet (16th/17th C.) daughter of Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick. She married William Ker of Cessford, and their daughter Mary married to Sir Walter Scott, 'the Bold Buccleuch'. Janet (19th C.) worked at the British Linen Bank and was involved with Allars Kirk in the 1820s. Jean (17th C.) daughter of advocate William Douglas. In 1684 she and her sister Margaret were served as joint heirs to the Lordship and Barony of Jedforest, as well as the Barony of Chirnside, after reversion from their brother James about a decade earlier. Jean (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Jean (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1749 she 'compeared in the publick place of Repentance for he relapse in the sin of fornication with Thomas Heatlie'. After repentance for several Sundays and paying a fine, she was absolved. Tax Rolls. She was probably related to James and John, who were also listed. Jill (1969–) daughter of Henry, television rugby commentator, married name Hogg. She was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2002. John of Bonjedward (d.1438) son of Margaret Douglas and Thomas Johnstone, who took the surname Douglas. He succeeded his mother to the lands of Bonjedward and was succeeded by his son George in 1439. John of Balveny (d.1463) son of James, 7th Earl and brother of William and James, the next 2 Earls. Along with his brothers and others, he was part of a force that tried to wrest power from the King in 1455. The Scotts of Buccleuch led a force that met them at Arkinholm (Langholm); this battle must have included a great many Borderers. He was later captured and executed. Robert Scott of Todshaw and others received a reward from the King for his capture. John (15th/16th C.) brother of the Laird of Bonjedward, probably George. In 1502 he and his brother William (as well as Douglasses in Swinside, Davidsons and the junior Laird of Riddell) were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree at his lands of 'hardanehed'. John (15th/16th C.) listed as the name of 2 brothers of James in Swinside in 1502 when they had remission for certain crimes. Pitcairn, in his 'Criminal Trials' book, notes that it was not unusual at that time for more than one son to be given the same forename. Adam was another brother mentioned and George in Swinside was also listed. John (16th C.) younger son of William of Drumlanrig, who was killed at Flodden. He was brother of Sir James of Drumlanrig and Hawick. He was described as brother of James of Drumlanrig in a respite of 1526, as well as when he witnessed a charter in 1530/1, and when he witnessed his brother resigning his lands of Drumlanrig and others in 1540 in order to be regranted. In 1544 he had a notorial instrument for accepting money from his brother James on the condition that he no 'play at cartis, dyse, tabblis, or lay by hand at the said playis wytth any man'. John (d.1574) son of Robert and cousin of Hugh, who was son of William of Bonjedward. He was born in Longnewton, and his precise connection to the Douglasses of Bonjedward and Timpendean is unclear. He matriculated as St. Leonard's College, St. Andrews in 1515 at the same time as some future reformers, and graduated in 1517. His subsequent movements are unclear, although he spent some time in Paris. He eventually became the first Protestant Archbishop of St. Andrews in the years 1572-74 and was Chancellor of the University there. He was one of the 'six Johns' who wrote the 'Scots Confession' and 'First Book of Discipline' of 1560. He was claimed to be uncle of George, who was martyred as a catholic priest in England in 1587. John (16th C.) recorded as minister of Bedrule in February 1563/4. He must have just taken over from John Stewart or William Kerr, and was only minister himself for a short time. Whether he was the same as the later minister of Hobkirk and Southdean is unclear. He was designated 'Sir', meaning that he was a priest with only a Bachelor's degree. John (16th C.) presented by James VI to the vicarage of Hobkirk in 1576/7 on the death of Sir David Turnbull. Probably the same John was Reader of Southdean 1574-87 (although this last date may be an error, since John Scott was also Reader during that time); he was certainly recorded as Reader there in 1575. It is possible that the same John had the parsonage and vicarage of Kirkton bestowed upon him in 1597, on the death of George Douglas. John of Whitriggs (16th C.) recorded in 1585 when William Douglas of Cavers and Edward Lorraine of Harwood were cautioners for him. His location is recorded as 'Quhyterig'. He is probably the 'Johnne Douglas of Quhytekirk' whose son James was declared a rebel in 1586 for his part in the murder of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton. He is also listed in about 1590 among 'Landit Men' of Scotland. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglasses of Whitriggs. John (16th C.) recorded in 1583 when he was among men charged to appear before the Privy Council. His designation was given as 'of Welles or Todhoillis'. He may have been father of James of Todholes, who was recorded slightly later. John (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Martin in Crook. In 1592 he received a 'letter of pension' from the Commendator of Melrose, with 7 merks to be taken from the kirkland of Hassendean and 3 merks from the lands of Crook. John of Brieryyairds (d.bef. 1606) recorded when his son Robert was served as his heir in 1606. The lands he inherited were Easter and Wester 'Rouchlie', 'Rowchlienwik', 'Breirbuss', the 20-shilling lands of 'Quhitysyde' and a 4-pound land in 'Fawsyde', all lying in Jedforest. John of Friarshaw (d.bef. 1603) eldest son of William of Friarshaw. He was the 2nd Laird of Friarshaw. He is listed in 1579 as a debtor to the deceased James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. He is probably the 'Joannis Dowglas in Freirschaw' whose son William was granted $\frac{1}{2}$ husbandlands in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He may also be the 'Joannis Dowglas in Freirschaw' whose son William was granted $\frac{1}{2}$ husbandlands in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He is said to have died without male issue and been succeeded by his younger brother George. However, he may be the brother of Andrew 'in Freirschaw' mentioned as joint occupier of Friarshaw in 1592, when his son George, along with Andrew (his brother) had a charter for the lands from Melrose Abbey. He may have been succeeded by his brother George. John 'Johnnie' (16th/17th C.) from Cavers, he was on a 1612 list of men convicted of charging more than the allowed rate of interest on loans. Along with James (also in Cavers, and probably a relative) he failed to appear and was denounced as a rebel. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Wattie's Spindles before becoming the Earl of Angus' tenant in Lintalee in 1617. George Ker complained that he had been unfairly removed from Lintalee, but it was found that the write were in order. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglasses. John (16th/17th C.) witness in 1619 to a bond signed in Hawick between Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded as being 'called of Toftis', presumably meaning he had been associated with the lands of Tofts in Kirkton Parish. John 'Hallas' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 among a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands near Hawick. It is unclear what his nickname might have meant. John (17th C.) 'in Cavers, called of Piehill' recorded in a 'summons of reduction' (i.e. court case to nullify illegal deeds) brought by William Bennet in 1630. His son was William. John of Timpendean (d.bef. 1643) recorded in the 1643 valuation roll when his heirs had their '6 husbandlands' in Jedburgh Parish valued at £158 and his widow's land at £260. His wife was the 'John Douglas's Widow' who had liferent of Timpendean in 1643. It seems likely he was son of Stephen and that this is an extra generation compared with some family trees. John of Timpendean (d.1671) he was said to be 6th Laird and son of Stephen, but may have been son of the earlier John. In 1632 he married Mary Douglas of Bonjedward and she was still alive in 1661. He was succeeded by his son William. John (17th C.) landowner in Castleton Parish. In 1663 he paid the land tax of £420 for his lands in Castleton and £200 for his lands 'in Kirktoune' (although it is unclear if this meant Kirkton Parish or lands in Castleton). John of Gervald (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir William of Cavers. He was Sheriff-Depute in 1637 when giving sasine of lands in Maxton to David Erskine. He could be the 'John Douglas' (no designation given) who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he was granted lands of Burnmouth, 'Greina' (Greena) and 'Purvinen' in Liddesdale 'in fee', with his father having the 'liferent'. He was probably the John 'of Garvart' who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. Archibald 'of Garvat' was probably his son; he was involved with court action in the 1690s to recover debts from Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. One of his daughters married George Scott of Boonraw, Bailie-depute of Hawick. John (17th C.) tenant in Bedrule Mill. In 1674 he was fined by the Hawick Magistrates 'for forestalling the market by his selling meal at twa prices in ane market day'. John of Timpendean (b.1656) 8th Laird, he was retoured as heir to his father William in 1688. He paid tax on 3 hearths at his house in 1694. He is probably the Douglas of Timpendean who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695 and 1704. He was probably the Laird who acquired Lanton sometime between 1678 and 1707. In 1679 he married Euphan, daughter of William Turnbull of Sharplaw and Christian Ker (and descended from Douglas of Cavers). Their children were: Christian, who must have died young; William, who succeeded; Alison; John; Euphan, who married William Grey in Jedburgh; Mary, Christian (again), who married William Smeal in Jedburgh; George; and Archibald, who became an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1714. He and his wife were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism, and his father-in-law gave a bond of caution for the couple. John (17th C.)

resident of Robertson Parish. He married Janet Henderson and their children included: James (b.1682); and Thomas (b.1686). In 1681 he witnessed a baptism in Robertson for William Scott and in 1688 another baptism for Thomas Henderson and Margaret Turnbull. John (17th C.) married Helen Runciman in Robertson Parish in 1687. She was probably brother of Walter Runciman who was married the previous year. John (17th C.) 'workman' listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. Probably the same Workman is recorded in 1705 when his son James was baptised, with witnesses tailor David Miller and gardener Patrick McLellan. John (17th C.) listed as a resident at Nether Tofts in Kirkton on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He may be related to the John recorded in Nether Tofts in 1720. John (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He was probably related to James and Jean, who were also listed. John (17th C.) pedlar in Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident of Crook who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) recorded at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. The later John of Catshawhill may have been his son. It is possible he was the John who paid the land tax for part of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1678. John (1665–1744) 3rd Earl of Selkirk. He was 4th son of William, who was Duke of Hamilton and Earl of Selkirk, among other titles. He succeeded to the Earldom of Selkirk from his brother Charles. He was also Earl of Ruglen, Viscount of Riccarton and Lord Hillhouse. He may have had the surname Hamilton-Douglas. He was succeeded as Earl of Selkirk by his brother Basil's grandson Dunbar. John (b.1673/4) 'indweller in Hawick' who in 1767 gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common. He was said to be 93 years old, married, and had lived within a mile of Hawick for the previous 70 years. He gave many details relating to the Common, particularly from around 1710. He stated that he was a Burgess of Hawick, although possessing no property in the Town, and since his sight had failed him about 10 years previously, he had been on the Poor Roll, with also some support from his son. There was a John born to John Douglas in Jedburgh in 1673 and another born to George in Jedburgh in 1674; one of these may well be him. It was said that he was blind for his last 10 years. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. He is recorded there in 1711 and 1718. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: John (b.1710); Grizell (b.1711); and John (b.1718). Rev. John (c.1679–1750) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1699, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1705. He was presented to Kirkton Parish in 1706 and became minister there at the beginning of the following year. In 1711 he carried out a marriage in Hawick Parish (after the death of the minister, Alexander Orrock). In 1718 he was one of those appointed to examine the candidate for Schoolmaster in Hawick, and preached at least twice in Hawick, in 1721 and 1722. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Scott of Crumhaugh. In 1726 and 1737 he officiated at the baptisms of sons of his colleague Rev. Hugh Kennedy of Cavers. He paid the window tax at 'the mance' in Kirkton Parish in 1748. He died unmarried. A heart-shaped communion token inscribed 'K.K. 1734' (the earliest in existence from the Parish) dates from his ministry. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Landglands in Cavers in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Whitriggs in 1716 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. There were several marriages in Cavers that could be his. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Nether Tofts. His son Archibald was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. Other children baptised in Kirkton who were probably also his included: Archibald (b.1720); Thomas (b.1722); Robert (b.1724); Archibald (again, b.1725); John (b.1726); William (b.1728); Jean (b.1730); Walter (b.1731); Jean (again, b.1733); Isobel (b.1734); Janet (b.1736); and George (b.1738). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlside in 1728 when he married Margaret Douglas and also there in 1729 when their son John was baptised. He could be the John who was in Eastcote in 1731 when his daughter Esther was baptised. There are several other children, baptised in Cavers, who could also be his. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Denholm in 1733 when his son John was baptised. He may have been related to James, who lived in Denholm at the same time. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cavers itself in 1741 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at West Middle in 1744 when his daughter Margaret was baptised and in Cavers again in 1747 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised. John (b.c.1712) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Christian

Nichol and their children included: James (1743–1827); Janet (1743–1834), who married shepherd Ninian Elliot; Isabel (b.1748); Margaret (b.1751); Robert (b.1753); and Christian (b.1758). John (18th C.) piper who is recorded being paid in the Kirk Session records of the early 1700s. He may be related to the later piper of the same name. John (18th C.) merchant who was tenant at Braidhaugh in the Rule valley in 1740. It is unclear what his profession really was. John of Bonjedward (d.1760s) retoured as heir to his father George and grandfather William in 1754. He is already recorded paying the window tax at Bonjedward in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was the last Douglas 'of Bonjedward', although the family lands had already been lost (but he may have sold the last part to Archibald Jerdan in 1751). It is possible that he had a son Andrew who was factor at Bonjedward for the Lothian Estates in 1733. This branch of the family appears to have at some point failed in the male line. Lieut. John (18th C.) of H.M.S. Speedwell, made an Honorary Burgess in 1778. He may have been related to the local Douglasses. Capt. John (d.1786) 17th Laird of Cavers, and also of Midshiels. He was the 4th son of Archibald to succeed to the Lairdship. He served with the Royal Navy, commanding H.M.S. 'Greyhound' in 1745, when he captured 2 heavily-armed privateers, and later commanded H.M.S. 'Unicorn', which helped take the privateer 'Marshal Broglie', belonging to Brest. He retired from the Navy about 1750 and then purchased Adderstonelee and Adderstoneshiel from Francis Scott of Gorrenberry (possibly his cousin). About the same time he also bought Midshiels from Scott of Crumhaugh, and was therefore sometimes known as 'of Midshiels'. He was also known as 'of Ederton' (presumably meaning 'Adderstone'). He may be the John 'of Adderstoun' listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is recorded in 1762 as one of the men raising an action against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch over the division of Hassendean Common. In 1775 he was involved with Turnbull of Knowe in arranging the repair of the road leading to Hawick 'by the back of Meadshiels' and the road leading by Clarilaw and Newton to the main Turnpike road. He was listed (as 'of Adderstone') on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He succeeded to Cavers on the death of his brother Rev. Dr. James in 1780, but was already an old man by then. He was taxed for having 3 male servants in Wilton Parish in 1778 and 1779 and

4 in 1785. He was also taxed for having 5 female servants and 7 carriage horses in 1785, as well as for a carriage in 1786. He married Ann, younger daughter of Hugh Scott of Gala, who may have been the sister of his brother Archibald's wife. Having no male issue, he was succeeded by George, son of his cousin Andrew. John of Catshawhill (18th C.) recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may have been son of the previous John associated with these lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. John (18th C.) postillion (i.e. assistant coachman) at Cavers in 1779, when he was working for James Douglas. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Northhouse in 1784. He married Margaret Douglas and their children included Margaret (b.1784). John (18th/19th C.) servant at Longnewton, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was later described as a stockingmaker in Hawick and was on the ballot again in 1801. Unnamed children of his died in 1811 and 1816. He could be the John who married Isobel Douglas and whose daughter Mary was baptised in 1793, with witnesses Robert and John Hardie. John 'Johnnie' (18th/19th C.) itinerant beggar known throughout the valleys of Yarrow, Ettrick, Eskdale and Liddesdale, his parish of origin being unknown. It is said that he never let his clothing go to rags, but replaced each item as necessary. He slept over winter in the barn of some kind farmer, then started his wanderings again each Spring. Communion services at the rural churches were his special pleasure. He died after a very short illness. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hartsgarth in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the shepherd 'James' taxed for having 3 non-working dogs at Hartsgarth in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Bewlie, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Belses, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797 and 1798, when he was balloted. He had not signed up by the end of 1798, but paid £10 in early 1799 to avoid serving. He was a hind at Belses on the 1801 Militia ballot. John (b.c.1770s) wright at Nether Burnmouth according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. John (d.bef. 1810) one of the last pipers in Hawick. He may have been related to the piper John who was mentioned in the early 1700s. The death of his daughter Betty is recorded in 1810; she may have been the Betty born to John and Isabel Hardie in Hawick in 1783. He may thus have been the John who married Isobel Hardie and whose children included: William (b.1777); Helen (b.1779); Betty (b.1783); John (b.1785); Margaret (b.1793); and Janet (b.1795). The witnesses in 1793 and 1795 were Robert and John Hardie (who were probably related to his wife). John (1778–1838) born at 'Greenna' in Castleton Parish, son of James. He was a joiner and cabinet-maker in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was also an elder in the Parish. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–38. In 1837 he was listed as a wright 'and saw mill'. He married Elizabeth ('Betty', 1779–1858), daughter of William Beattie, from Langholm. His wife worked as post-mistress in Newcastleton. In 1841 his widow (along with Christina and 2 joiner's apprentices) was living at about 6 Langholm Street. Their children were: Helen (1804–80), who married farmer James Elliot; James (1806–82), carpenter; Christina (1808–79), who married George Hall; William (1810–23); Janet (1815–47), who married farmer Thomas Elliot; Mary (1817–91), who married Langholm ironmonger Archibald Glendinning; Margaret (1819–97), who married shepherd William Robson; Walter (1822–99), who died in Santiago de Cuba; and John (1822–92), who emigrated to Mobile, Alabama. John (c.1780–bef. 1851) farmer in Cavers and then Minto Parishes before becoming tenant at East Essenside, where he is recorded in the 1841 census. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in Cavers Parish in 1819. Their children (mostly baptised in East Bank Kirk) included: John (b.1820); Elizabeth ('Betsy', b.1822); William (b.1824); James (b.1826), who probably died young; Helen (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); Agnes (b.1831); Robert (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); and Thomas (b.1837). In 1851 his widow was living at Easter Essenside with his eldest son and several of his children. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at Ashkirk Mill, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He married Mary Hood and they had 3 sons: James (b.1821); John (b.1823); and George (b.1825), who became a Methodist minister. He emigrated to Montreal in 1831, after failing fortunes as a miller, with his family following in the next year. John (1779–1856) 7th Marquess of Queensberry, inheriting the titles (including Baron of Hawick) from his elder brother Sir Charles. He married Sarah, daughter of James Sholto Douglas, and was succeeded by their son Archibald. John (1786–1851) shoemaker of Hawick, who was Treasurer for the Relief Kirk. He was recorded as a Howegate shoemaker on Pigot's 1837 directory. He was listed at about 13 Howegate in 1841. His widow Elizabeth (b.1788/9) was still there in 1851, along with her brother John Kedie, tobacconist. He was also listed in Slater's 1852 directory (although deceased by then). Dr. John (1788–1861) local doctor and philanthropist, who was younger brother to Agnes, Mary and Robert. He was born in Hawick, son of Robert (also a doctor), with his mother being Margaret Aitchison, niece of William Oliver, 'Auld Cash'. Note that there is an earlier doctor of the same name recorded in Selkirk in 1733, who could possibly have been related. Athletic in his youth, he excelled at several sports, and retained an interest in gymnastics throughout his life; he boasted of his ability to jump across Wilton Dam when he was young. He was also known for his literary interests and his writing and speaking abilities. He appears to have studied medicine in Edinburgh in 1809, and then served in the army, joining the 46th Regiment of Foot as a Surgeon's Mate in 1810, after receiving a medical diploma in London. He sailed for the West Indies and was promoted to Assistant Surgeon in 1811. In 1813 he transferred to the 8th Regiment of Foot and served during the American War, being based in Niagara in the campaigns of 1813–15. By 1814 he was in charge of the hospital in York (near Toronto), which treated the wounded shipped back from the front. He completed his medical degree in Edinburgh in 1815 and 1816, and he received a pension of half-pay after 8 years in the army, when he returned to Scotland. He then joined his father's medical practice in Hawick, being also joined by his brother Robert. As the most active doctor in the dominant medical practice in Hawick, he grew to be a much respected member of the community, known for his generosity. In 1819 he published 'Medical Topography of Upper Canada', which was one of the only first person accounts by a surgeon in the War of 1812; the book also describes the topography of the region where he was stationed in Canada, as well as the standard of living of the Canadians and a description of the native peoples. He also wrote a detailed account of the cholera outbreak of early 1832, including details of his own bout with the disease (although propriety forbade him from discussing in detail the case of his sister Mary). And he is said to have fought valiantly in the 1849 cholera epidemic. Working with his brother Robert, the Douglas practice had the bulk of Hawick's medical business in the early-to-mid 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is recorded as a physician on Damside on Pigot's 1825/6 directory and on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He became a member of the Wisp Club in its second year. From 1831 he lived at 52 High Street (where the Victoria Hotel was built). He chaired the Coronation Dinner held in Hawick in 1831. In 1841 he was there with his siblings Robert, Agnes and Mary, as well as his wife Jane (from Teviothead) and daughter Margaret. His brother Robert contributed less to the practice in his later years, and died in 1845. He then continued with Dr. McLeod as a partner, and left the practice entirely in his hands by the mid-1850s. He published several medical articles were said to be held in high esteem for the soundness of his views and clarity of his writing. In Hawick he helped edit books for publisher Robert Armstrong, and was particularly fastidious about punctuation. He also contributed to the Hawick Advertiser, writing obituaries of Elliot Aitchison, Capt. Thomas Scott of Shielswood and Hawick's Dr. Walter Graham. He donated items to the Archæological Society Museum, including a 'cluster of marine zoophytes' in 1857. He could be the John who was listed as a Steward at the 1836 Common Riding Races. In politics he was a Liberal, and strong supporter of the Reform Bill. In 1851 his children were Margaret, Mary and Robert, and his sisters Agnes and Mary still lived with them. In 1861 his widow Jane and children Margaret and Mary are recorded at 52 High Street. He appears to have married late in life, his wife probably being Jane Aitchison (who may thus have been a cousin of some sort), daughter of William Aitchison, farmer at Linhope. Their children were: Margaret (b.1840); Mary (b.1841–1915), who married Walter Pringle (son of manufacturing founder Robert); and Robert (1845–61), who died of consumption only a couple of weeks before his father. Three young children of his also died within a few weeks of each other. A portrait of him exists (although its whereabouts are unknown). He was well-known for his literary interests, and believed to be the author of some anonymous 'jeux d'esprit'; it has even been suggested that he wrote the words for 'Pawkie Paiter-son' (although it is more generally attributed to 'Soapy' Ballantyne). He was also a supporter of the local literati, sharing the hospitality of his home with Thomas Pringle, William Knox and

Henry Scott Riddell. The only surviving poem of his is 'The Sunflower', which was taken down in shorthand by James Jamieson and later published in the Hawick Advertiser (and in 'Living Bards of the Border'). He was a sought-after speaker, the last such occasion being at the centenary event for Burns' birth, held in Hawick in 1859. He was said to have often treated people without fee or reward, and to attend to patients irrespective of their social status. At his funeral, all the shops on the High Street closed as a mark of respect. Partly as a result of his efforts during the cholera outbreak, he had a Memorial erected in his memory in Wellogate Cemetery, in what was once an ornamental annex. This was constructed in 1879 in the form of a decorative drinking fountain, sculpted by Mr. Beveridge of Edinburgh, and probably the most grandiose monument in the entire cemetery. It (unusually) contains a likeness of him, and the inscription reads 'A skilful physician. An accomplished scholar. A public spirited citizen. A wise counsellor, and a charitable and sympathising friend to the poor & suffering during a lengthened professional career in this town and district.' John (b.c.1790) agricultural labourer in Southdean Parish. In 1841 he was living at Bairnkine with his wife Janet and children George, Margaret, Janet and Adam. John 'Douglas the Brave' (b.1800) Selkirk mason, known for casting the colours for the hammermen for 55 years in succession, lastly in 1887. He met both Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd and was said to be the last surviving participant in the Carterhaugh Baa, saying that after Gala switched sides 'Nae wonder that Selkirk and Hawick even yet canna get on wi' Gala'. The Hammermen pay a visit to his grave each Selkirk Common Riding. John (b.c.1800) born in Jedburgh Parish, he was a shepherd in Southdean. In 1841 he was a labourer at Ashtrees and in 1851 and 1861 was shepherd at Doorpool. He married Agnes Oliver in 1835 and their children included: Robert (b.1836); Eliza Robert (b.1837); George (b.1840); William (b.1842); Thomas (b.1845); and James (b.1847). In 1841 their household also contained: Adam (b.c.1827); John (b.c.1829); and Elizabeth (b.c.1831). John (19th C.) married Mary Linton in Hawick in 1835. John (b.1814/5) joiner living on the High Street. He was at about the top of the Millport in 1841 and 1851. He was listed on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory, and was also listed as a 'turner'. His wife was Agnes, and their children included Andrew, John, James and

William. John (b.1820) son of John and Elizabeth Turnbull, he was born at Stobs in Cavers Parish. He was tenant at East Essenside like his father. He had 2 bronze 'celts' that were found on the farm in the 1880s, and also in 1856 presented to the Archæological Society an 'ancient mill' found on Castleside Hill. In 1851 he was recorded at Easter Essenside as farmer of 120 arable acres and 380 acres of pasture, as well as employing 3 labourers. In 1854 in Hawick he married Alison Munro Scott (1828–97), daughter of Charles Scott; she was a cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. Their children included: Margaret Scott (b.1855); Eliza (b.1857); Alice (b.1859), who probably died young; Ellen Mary (b.1860), who married Robertson schoolmaster Thomas Wilson; Agnes McEwen (b.1862); John (b.1864); Charles (b.1866); Alice (again, b.1868); and Elizabeth Williamina (b.1871). Sir John James see Sir John James Scott-Douglas John Sholto (1844–1900) 9th Marquess of Queensberry, with other titles including Baron of Hawick. He married Sibyl Montgomery and later Ethel Weedon. He served as a representative peer for Scotland at the House of Lords 1872–80. He is best known for introducing the 'Queensberry Rules' for boxing. He is also remembered for the libel suit brought against him by Oscar Wilde after he had publically objected to the liaison between Wilde and his son Lord Alfred Douglas, the suit eventually leading to Wilde's conviction for immoral conduct. His first son Francis pre-deceasing him and he was succeeded by his second son Percy. An absurd caricature of his ghost appeared in the animated series 'Mike Tyson Mysteries'. John (1903–65) born in Hawick, son of John and Barbara Handyside. In 1931 he married Jemima ('Mina', 1902–93), daughter of John Ekron. Their children were: Mina (b.1935), who married John Caruthers; and Charles (b.1940), who married Margaret Wilson. John (20th C.) served as 4th Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk. John member of Hawick Saxhorn Band for more than 60 years. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Braxholme. Lady Katherine nee Rigg (17th C.) wife of Sir William the 11th Laird of Cavers. She was daughter of Thomas Rigg of Atherne and Euphemia Monipennie. Her aunt Janet Rigg married Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk, and she was descended from John Row of Perth, a colleague of John Knox. Known as 'The Good Lady Cavers' (or 'the Guid Leddy o Cavers'), she turned Cavers house into a Covenanting centre, sheltering the famous preachers Peden and Cargill. She also had her own private chaplain, Adam Abercorn. Along with her husband, she was an ardent supporter of the Covenanters. As a result her eldest son William was removed from her and placed in the care of tutors appointed by the Privy Council. Widowed in 1676, 3 years later she was ordered to hand over her infant sons as punishment, but refused to do so; this was on account of her having her children educated at home, instead of in the way prescribed by the men appointed as their tutors. She was pursued by the King's advocates Sir John Nisbet and Sir George Mackenzie and the infamous commissioner Urquhart of Meldrum. Although no real evidence could be produced against her, she refused to swear an oath and was declared guilty. She was imprisoned first in Edinburgh Tolbooth, and then spent 2 years in Stirling Castle. The fines imposed on her were several times larger than her estates could support, and as a result her tenants were expected to pay additional rent, to which they tried to appeal. She is said to have encouraged Covenanter preachers to hold meetings on her estate, this including Samuel Arnot, Donald Cargill, Thomas Douglas, Alexander Peden, Archibald Riddell, Matthew Selkirk, Gabriel Semple, John Welsh, David Williamson and the former tutor to her children, James Osborne. After her son William returned from abroad he paid the fines and presented a bond that she would either conform within 14 days or leave the country; she chose the latter, spending her last years in exile in England. However, she appears to have returned to Cavers after the Restoration and died there. Her story is described in the book 'The Ladies of the Covenant' (1851) and there is a chapter dedicated to her in 'The Covenanters of Teviotdale' (1908). Malcolm of Mains (16th C.) witness in Jedburgh in 1576 to the 'bond of manrent' between several Borderers and Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. The other witnesses were William of Bonjedward and his son George. He was recorded as 'Malcolme Dowglas of Manys'. In 1580 he was the keeper of 'Scot's Hob's Gavin' Elliot and others held in Blackness Castle, who presented the prisoners to the Privy Council. Margaret (b.c.1376) illegitimate daughter of William, 1st Earl of Douglas. She was gifted the unentailed lands of Bonjedward by her half-sister Isabel Douglas (while George Douglas obtained the entailed lands), and thus she was the first Laird of this line of Douglasses. This was in 1404 (although it is possible it was a confirmation of an earlier grant). She married Thomas, son of John of Johnstone (but it is unclear who exactly he was), who changed his name to Douglas in order to inherit. They were succeeded by their son John. She was still alive in 1425. Margaret 'Dame Margaret', Countess of Bothwell, see Margaret Scott. Margaret (17th C.) sister of Sir William of Cavers. She married John Douglas (who died in 1616), minister of Kilbucho and later Robert Livingstone, minister of Skirling in 1631. Her children with her first husband were William and James. Margaret (17th C.) daughter of Archibald of Greena. In 1634 she was served heir to her father's lands. This included Greena, Purvinen and Burnmouth in Liddesdale as well as lands near Duns Kirk. Her father was described as a servant to the Earl of Morton. Margaret (17th C.) daughter of advocate William Douglas. In 1684 she and her sister Jean were served as joint heirs to the Lordship and Barony of Jedforest, as well as the Barony of Chirnside, after reversion from their brother James about a decade earlier. Margaret Violet nee Pringle (1800–68) only daughter of Mark Pringle of Fairnilee, Clifton and Haining. Her brothers John and Robert were M.Ps. in Selkirkshire and each in turn succeeded to the family estates. She succeeded to Haining and Clifton on the death of her brother Robert in 1842. However, after litigation, Clifton went to Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood in 1845. She also held the lands of Easter Alemoor in 1845. She married Archibald Douglas of Adderstone, and after her husband's death in 1860 she was one of the principle landowners in Kirkton Parish. Their only child was a daughter, Anna Elizabeth, who married John Pattison; she was the 'Mrs. Anne Elizabeth Pringle or Pattison' who paid the land tax on Adderstone and North Synton in about 1874. Mark (16th/17th C.) clerk of Glasgow Diocese. He was notary in 1606 for the sasine of the lands of Hobsburn and Weens, sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott. He may thus have been attached to Hobkirk Parish or one of the other neighbouring parishes. Mark Building Conservation Officer with Borders Regional Council since 1993. He is an enthusiast for the building designs of J.P. Alison. Martin (15th C.) recorded in 1529/30 in an instrument of resignation by William Routledge, tenant of half of the lands of Crook. The resignation was to 'an honourable man, James Douglas of Caueris, in name and on behalf of Martin Douglas'. It is unclear who he was or how he was related to James, who was Laird of

Cavers at the time. Martin (16th C.) listed in 1566 among men who were to be entered with the Warden of the Middle Marches. The record states that Richard Rutherford of Edgerston was to enter 'Martine Dowglas at Howanturk' (but it is unclear where this might be). Martin of Tofts (16th C.) witnessed a sasine of 1579 for the lands of Midshiels and Appletreehall. William of Cavers 'gave sasine' and James 'younger of Cavers' was a witness, so he may have been a near relative. It is unclear how he was related to the later Martin. Martin of Crook (16th/17th C.) son of William of the Crook. He is recorded in the 1581 document whereby William granted lands within Crook to his son James, this being part of a promise made before the marriage contract between his son Martin and his wife. This suggests that he was the elder son and heir (although this is unclear). His wife's surname was Hoppringle, but curiously her first name was left blank. In 1592 he was son and heir of the deceased William when he had the disposition of the 'mails' of Crook (extending to 40 shillings and 7 merks), as well as the kirk lands of Hassendean and Cavers, given by Melrose Abbey. He had a precept of 'clare constat' for inheriting his father's land of Crook, with his agent being William Scott 'in Hawik'. In 1592 his 2nd son John received a 'letter of pension' from the Commendator of Melrose. In 1608 he is 'of Toftis' when he was served heir to his uncle Archibald, brother of his deceased father William of Crook; he thus seems to have held both the lands of Crook and Tofts. In 1615 there was a confirmation of the tack of the teinds, patronage and vicarage of Kirkton received earlier from George Douglas; his son William is also mentioned. Mary (d.1859) daughter of James of Cavers and sister of James. In 1857 she married William Elphinstone Malcolm of Burnfoot in Dumfriesshire. Her only child Mary was born soon afterwards and would succeed to the Cavers estate on the death of her uncle James in 1878, later marrying Capt. Palmer. Mary see Mary Palmer-Douglas. Matthew (16th C.) listed in 1566 among men who were to be entered with the Warden of the Middle Marches. The record states that John Rutherford of Hunthill was to enter 'Mathow Dowglas'. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Douglasses. Matthew (d.bef. 1759) apparent minister of Cavers. His daughter Isobel is recorded marrying James Newbigging in Edinburgh in 1759. However, this would appear to be an error for Charles. Mungo (15th/16th C.)

recorded as 'Kentigernum Douglas' in 1517 when he was on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme. Mungo (16th C.) name of two men recorded in 1541 as 'mongo dowglass', presumably one was senior and the other was junior. This was on a list of associates of James of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branhholme. Oliver son of Tim. He is Assistant Curator of the Museum of English Rural Life in Reading. Percy Sholto (1868–1920) 10th Marquess of Queensberry, also Baron of Hawick. He was 2nd son of John, the 9th Marquess, his brother Francis Archibald having predeceased their father. Peter (18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1745. He was imprisoned for not paying a bill, for drinking the health of Charles Stewart and for assuming to himself extraordinary names, such as Prince Charles'. Ralph (16th C.) recorded along with George in 1563 when William Gourlay ordered them to remove themselves from lands in Cavers owned by Andrew of Friarshaw. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as uncle of the Laird of Bonjedward. He was surety (twice) for James, brother of John Oliver in Strynds (Strange). It is unclear which Douglas of Bonjedward may have been his father. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in Oxnam Mains in 1502. Along with his other brothers Adam, Henry, Simon and George, he had remission for several crimes. This included kidnapping William Colville of Ravenscraig, Robert Boyd and John Kennedy and holding them for ransom in 'Leven', as well as destroying 3 horses from the same men, stealing a sword, a shield and a purse from them and planning to murder William Colville of Ochiltree. Ralph Ker of Primsideloch was their surety. Along with his brother Henry, he separately had remission in 1502 for stealing cattle from William Colville from Sunlaws, as well as occupying his lands of 'farnesynd'. Robert of Lochleven (d.1513) son of Sir Henry of Lochleven Robert and Elizabeth Erskine. In 1508 he was recorded as former superior of the Lordship of Liddesdale and other lands, which were inherited by Adam Hepburn. He married Elizabeth, daughter of David Boswell. He is probably the Robert who is recorded being 'in Langnewtone' in 1508 when he was on the panel of 'retour' for Adam Hepburn in the Lordship of Liddesdale. He could be the same Robert who had a sasine for Longnewton in 1476. An illegitimate son of his, John, became Archbishop of St. Andrews. He died at the Battle of Flodden, along with (it is said) his oldest son, Sir Robert. However, his son Robert inherited Lugton in 1514. In 1522 his grandson Robert had a sasine for Lugton, as well as a precept for the Barony of Langnewton. A later descendant was jailer to Mary, Queen of Scots. Robert (16th C.) grandson of Robert and heir apparent of Robert of Lochleven in 1522 when he had a sasine for the lands of Lugton. He also had a precept from Chancery for the Barony of Langnewton. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) recorded in 1540/1 when he was among a list of Scottish rebels who were 'reset' in England. His name is given as 'Hobbe Douglas of Bunjedward', and he was further stated to have been delivered to the Scottish Wardens at Coldstream. He may have been a son of George of Bonjedward. He is probably the same 'Robert Douglas, brother to the Laird of Bone-Jedburghe' (William at that time) who was 'found caution' in 1537 for the burning of Cunzierton and the slaughter of William and Andrew Hall. Robert of Todholes (16th C.) 3rd known son of Sir James of Cavers and Elizabeth Murray. He was younger brother of the next Sir James of Cavers, as well as William of Friarshaw. He could be the Robert of Cavers who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk (involving land in Hassendeanbank). He married Helen Douglas, who was heiress of 'Todheils' (also written 'Todalía', 'Todholes' and variants). Perhaps the same Robert of Todholes was Master of the Horse of the Earl of Angus in 1583 and had his lands forfeited at the Scottish Parliament in 1584. In 1604 he was surety for a burgess of Edinburgh. Robert (16th C.) son of Sir James and brother of William of Cavers. He was explicitly recorded in a list of 1585 of men who had been supporters of the King and had forfeitures and other legal processes on them lifted. However, he may already have been dead by then, the service being much earlier (since his brother William was already succeeded by his son James). He could also be the Robert of Cavers who was among men complained about by George Oliphant of Bachiltoun in 1607. Robert of Nether Hassendean (16th C.) recorded in a decree of 1588, along with Robert Scott, where they were ordered to turn over all documents concerning the lands of 'the Hilton' of Wester Hassendean. Robert of Brieryyards (16th/17th C.) recorded in a loan document of 1588, involving the lands of Roughlee and Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is also included on a long list of local men whom the Baron of Hassendean issued with a 'summons of removal' from their lands in 1603. He is probably the Robert who was served as heir to his father John of Brieryyards in 1606. The lands he inherited were Easter and Wester 'Rouchlie', 'Rowchlienwik', 'Breirbuss' and the 20-shilling lands of 'Quhitsyde'. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) servant to Martin Elliot. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Robert (16th/17th C.) member of the court of James VI, who was rewarded in 1605, along with James Maxwell, with the former Debatable Lands. These were erected into the Barony of Tarras. However, in 1607 the two men brought a case against many Armstrongs and others who had tried to prevent them from possessing the lands. He was explicitly stated to be an equiry of the son of James VI. A second Act of 1609 mentions Maxwell, but not him. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Whitriggs. In 1612 he, along his brother and William Stewart, all servants of James of Cavers, was accused by Gavin Elliot of Brugh of attacking his family on their way home from Cavers Kirk. However, the group were acquitted after swearing that the claim was untrue. It is possible that the was the 'Hob Douglas in Quhytrig' who was captured as a fugitive in Dysart in Fife in 1610 (along with a servant of William Middlemas of Chapel and others). Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as brother of George of Friarshaw and also brother of William. He was thus a younger son of William, 1st of Friarshaw. He and William (along with William's son Robert) were accused of attacking some residents of Lilliesleaf and harassing tenants of the Riddells. Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He was married to Helen Somerville. Their children included Isabel (b.1640), Bessie (b.1647) and Robert (b.1651). Witnesses to the 1640 baptism were James Scott and William Douglas. Robert (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He is probably the shoemaker listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th C.) carrier in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed separately from the shoemaker of the same name. He could be the Robert who was fined in 1687, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town's flock, without paying the Town Herd. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son John was baptised in 1699, with witnesses William (who was probably related to him) and William Gledstains. Robert (17th/18th C.)

from the Trows family. His daughter Janet married Walter Deans from Wilton, who farmed at Howahill. It is possible he was the Robert son of James born in Cavers Parish in 1697. He could be the Robert in Earlside whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included Janet (b.1726) and Esther (b.1728). Robert (18th C.) last proprietor of the small inn at Highend in Rulewater. He had 3 daughters who were probably: Janet (b.1726); Easther (b.1728); and Agnes (b.1732). Each daughter married a farmer in Hobkirk Parish. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife was called Nicholas Scott and their children included: Archibald (b.1743); James (b.1745); and Janet (b.1747). Merchant George Scott witnessed the baptism in 1743 and so may have been related to his wife. In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for weaver James Roger. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Archibald (likely his son) in 1774 and along with Archibald witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller in 1773. It is possible that he was father of both Dr. Robert (whose father was probably also Robert) and Archibald (who may be the Archibald who witnessed baptisms for Dr. Robert). He may be the Robert who rented Hawick's best mortcloth in 1772. Robert (18th C.) probably a younger son of Thomas, and grandson of Sir William of Cavers. He was a planter in Jamaica, and was named in the will of his cousin Rev. Dr. James Douglas as being next in succession after Andrew and Archibald (probably his older brothers). Gen. Robert (1727–1809) younger son of advocate George of Friarshaw. In 1745 he was Captain in a regiment of the Duke of Ancaster and in 1747 was Captain in a Scottish regiment raised by the Earl of Drumlanrig for the Dutch service. He rose to Lieutenant-General in 1794. In 1754 he married Helen, daughter of Lieut.-Gen. de Brauw and died at Zirikzee. He had 4 sons and 4 daughters, with descendants who served in the Dutch Army. Dr. Robert (d.1829) doctor in Hawick, whose connection with earlier local Douglasses is not known. However, he is probably the 'Dr. Douglas', whose father Robert's death is recorded in Hawick in 1781. He may be the Robert who was recorded as a medical student in Edinburgh in 1769. He was a surgeon in the navy, and later established a medical practice in Hawick, being based at Damside. He was one of the local people who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–97. He married Margaret Aitchison in Hawick in 1781; she is just 'Mrs Douglas' in the baptismal records of their children, which all appeared together in 1792 (suggesting they belonged to another congregation, perhaps the East Bank Kirk). She was niece of William Oliver, 'Auld Cash', and named in Oliver's will. Their children were: Robert (1782–1845), doctor in Hawick; Agnes (1785–1858), who wrote the 'Auld Brig' poem; Henrietta (1787–87), who died young, her name being recorded in Hawick's death records as 'Henny'; Dr. John (1788–1861), also a surgeon in Hawick; and Mary (1790–1850s). The witnesses to the baptisms were William Oliver (probably 'Auld Cash') and Archibald (who was surely related). Rev. Robert (1747–1820) son of Rev. John of Jedburgh. He was licensed to preach by Haddington presbytery in 1769 and ordained as minister of Galashiels in 1770. He is sometimes called 'the father of Galashiels', being a great promoter (and financial supporter) of the manufacturing industry in the town and establishing the Galashiels Library. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott and sold him part of the estate that became Abbotsford. In 1797 he obtained a D.D. from Aberdeen. He married Robina Lothian from Edinburgh. Their children were: George, a Glasgow merchant; Helen, who married Rev. John Thomson of Maxton; Arabella; and Beatrice. He wrote 'General View of the Agriculture in the Counties of Roxburgh and Selkirk' in 1798, which is a useful early record. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Haddon and their children included Laurie (b.1775) and Andrew (b.1776). Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Dunn and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1777. Robert (b.1774) son of Archibald and Janet Kedie. He was a hosier in Hawick and also a commission agent, perhaps leaving the area. He is probably the weaver of this name recorded in the ballot for the Militia in 1799, and still on the list in 1801. In 1800 he married Catherine (perhaps also known as 'Sally'), daughter of manufacturer William Beck; she died in Edinburgh in 1829. Their children included: Margaret or 'Peggy' (b.1801); Archibald (b.1803); Janet (b.1806); Catherine (b.1807); Catherine (again, b.1810); Elizabeth (b.1812); William (b.1814); and Sarah (b.1817). Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Greenhill according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Robert (b.c.1780) shepherd at Northbank in Southdean Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Dr. Robert (1782–1845) elder brother of Dr. John, and son of Robert and Margaret Aitchison. He was born in Hawick and was engaged as a medical officer, seeing active service through the entire Peninsular War. After this he returned to Hawick as a surgeon, joining his father's practice at Damside, and later helping his younger brother, Dr. John. He was probably the Robert who matriculated in Edinburgh as a medical student in 1798, but only studied there for a year, joining the Royal Army Medical Corps in 1802. He was recorded as one of the first members of the Hawick Curling Club in 1803. He was one of the doctors involved in the murder case in 1814, resulting in Hawick's last hanging. He apparently liked to tell stories of his time in the war, one example being a recounting of a dangerous retreat, when the men would lie flat to avoid injury from bomb blasts, and he lay too long; one of the men spoke out that their doctor was dead and he would have his nice boots, to which he replied 'I'm not quite gone yet'. His premises were on Damside (i.e. Victoria Road). He is recorded at Damside in Pigot's 1825/6 directory, but unlike his brother John was not listed as having an M.D. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1830. He and John are listed as physicians on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded as 'independent' at the home of surgeon John on the High Street. He was said to be of 'enfeebled health in his latter years', resulting in him being a less active doctor in Hawick than his brother. Robert (18th/19th C.) ploughman at Chapelhill, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish in 1812. He could be the Robert, son of Robert, baptised in Robertson in 1779. Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Abigail Armstrong and their children included John (b.1817) and Robert Armstrong (b.1822). Robert (1794/5–1880) Liddesdale farmer. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. In 1851 he was farming 40 acres and employing 4 labourers at Hewsbridge. In 1861 he was at Dinlabyre, farming 2,000 acres and employing 5 men. In 1879 he occupied the chair at the celebration of the jubilee of Rev. John Black, since he was the oldest member of the congregation at that time. His wife was Janet and their children included Elizabeth, James, George, Agnes, Jane, Robert and Archibald. Robert (1819/20–95) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Robson, who died in 1888, aged 55. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He could be the shepherd from Traquair who was at Old Larriston in 1861. Samuel (d.1679) from Cavers Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on 'the Crown of London' when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. Simon (15th/16th C.) recorded in Swinside in 1502. In 1502, along with his other brothers Adam, Robert, Henry and George, he had remission for several crimes. This included kidnapping William Colville of Ravenscraig, Robert Boyd and John Kennedy and holding them for ransom in 'Leven', as well as destroying 3 horses from the same men, stealing a sword, a shield and a purse from them and planning to murder William Colville of Ochiltree. Ralph Ker of Primsideloch was their surety. He also separately had remission in 1502 for stealing oxen from William Colville. Stephen (15th/16th C.) Commissioner of the Archdiocese of Glasgow. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502 it is recorded that he repledged William Watson and John Beirhope as chaplains. He was 'master stevin' when listed in 1504 among tenants, dependents and associates of the Archbishop of Glasgow who were given remission for certain crimes; he is listed after George of Bonjedward, along with Andrew, John, Robert and William, some of whom may have been relatives. In 1516 he is recorded as Commissary of Teviotdale in a document for George Ker, Prebendary of Auld Roxburgh. It is unclear if he was related to local Douglasses. Stephen of Timpendean (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew, he was the 5th Laird. In 1611 Robert, Burgess of Jedburgh (possibly a relative) was caution for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. In 1595 he married Jean, daughter of Andrew Haliburton of Muirhouselaw. Their children included: John, who succeeded; and Andrew, probably indweller in Edinburgh, who was deceased in 1656 when his son John became a cordiner's apprentice there. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with George 'Pealman' and Thomas Ainslie of Swinside when they were accused of a raid into England 3 years previously. His surname is written 'Dugles', which seems likely to be Douglas; he was presumably related to George and they were probably relatively local. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Dowglas of Cavers' when he was witness to a letter of assurance of the Turnbolls in 1595. He could have been a younger son of Sir James, 8th of Cavers. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as heir apparent to Whitrig in 1637 when he witnessed a sasine for lands in Maxton. This is presumably Whitriggs in Cavers Parish. He was probably son of William of 'Quhitrig', recorded in 1622. Thomas (1615/6–86) buried in Greyfriars churchyard, with a lengthy inscription on his gravestone. He is described as a 'son of the ancient and noble family of Cavers, citizen and merchant in Edinburgh'. He was 'twice city baillie, and twice suburban baillie, and with the greatest applause of justice and integrity'. The monument was erected by his cousins Richard Douglas and Robert Bennet, advocates, and Robert Blackwood, merchant in Edinburgh. Dr. Thomas (d.1686) descended from the Douglasses of Friarshaw. He was a son of Andrew of Friarshaw and Jean Home of Polwarth. He was a doctor in London and married the daughter of a Lord Mayor of London. He died in Dublin without issue and his brother Henry succeeded. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Waterside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He could be the same Thomas listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Southdean Parish. Capt. Thomas (17th/18th C.) described as 'brother-german' of the deceased Laird of Cavers in about the 1680s. He was thus presumably brother (or half-brother) of Sir William of Cavers and son of Sir Archibald. He was commissioned as a Captain in the Earl of Mar's Regiment of Foot in 1679, replacing James Murray of Philiphaugh. During the Killing Times he was on the side of the government and was said to have 'committed much outrage and spoil' in Galloway. He is specifically associated with the murders of William Hunter and Robert Smith at Kirkcudbright in 1684 and of Robert McWhae in Borgue Parish in 1685. After the Revolution he switched sides and served in Flanders, where he reached the rank of Lieut.-Col. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son William was baptised in 1695. Thomas (b.1677) 5th son of Sir William Douglas, 11th Laird of Cavers. He was born posthumously. He is probably the 'Mr. Thomas Douglas Brother German to Cavers' who appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He was recorded as 'Mr Thomas Douglass brother to Cavers' in 1716 when he witnessed a baptism for cooper John Turnbull in Hawick in 1716. He may have been a teacher or preacher of some sort (or 'Mr' was just in deference to his status). He married Jean, daughter of Andrew Pringle of Clifton and Haining, possibly in Selkirk in 1706. His children included Andrew, merchant of Suffolk Street, London, whose son George succeeded to Cavers. Capt. Archibald and Robert were probably younger sons. Some accounts give him a son Thomas, which is incorrect. He was also probably the father of Violet, who married John Oliver of Dinlabyre. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His daughter Isobel was baptised in 1704. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1708. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Earlside. His daughter Violet was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1708. It is hard to separate his children from those of Thomas in Denholm; possible children included John (b.1700), William (b.1702), James (b.1706), William (b.1707), Katherine (b.1710), Thomas (b.1711), Jane (b.1713) and Thomas (b.1715). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Crook in 1741 when his son Robert was baptised in Cavers Parish. Other children of his probably included: William (b.1739); and William (again, b.1743). He may also be the Thomas described as tenant in Kennel in 1744 when his twins Elspeth and Bessie were baptised in Cavers. He may have been related to earlier Douglasses who lived at Crook. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Burnhead in Wilton Parish. He married Euphan Douglas (from Cavers Parish) in 1749. Their children included: Peter (b.1750); Thomas (b.1752); Margaret (b.1754); John (b.1757); Agnes (b.1759); Euphan (b.1761); and Archibald (b.1765). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and James Dryden. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included an unnamed child (b.1745), Archibald (b.1748), Isabel (b.1750), Janet (b.1752) Margaret (b.1755), John (b.1759) and Thomas (b.1761). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Clarilaw in 1772. He was probably related to William, who also lived at Clarilaw. He married Jean Harvey in 1770 and their son James was baptised in 1773. The witnesses were James Dryden and James Martin. Thomas (18th C.) recorded in Cavers in 1780 when his unnamed child was baptised. Perhaps the same Thomas was at West Middle in 1788 and 1790, with children including Thomas (b.1788) and Alexander (b.1790). It is possible he is the Thomas whose children, baptised in Cavers, Betty (b.1778), an unnamed child (b.1782), included Martha (b.1791), Euphan (b.1793) and an unnamed child (b.1796). Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Wilton Parish, in 1787 he married Nelly Ferguson from Cavers Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Cavers

Parish, in 1791 he married Sarah Winthrope, who was from Lilliesleaf. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1794. Thomas (1771–1820) 5th Earl of Selkirk, youngest son of Dunbar, 4th Earl. He was Lord Daer after the death of his brother and became Earl of Selkirk on the death of his father in 1799. He was a Fellow of the Royal Societies of Edinburgh and London. He used some of his fortune to settle poor Scottish families in Canada, particularly in the Red River valley. He was partly an owner of the Hudson's Bay Company and was involved in confrontations with the Métis people, who already occupied these lands. He spent much of his money defending himself in court and died in France. He married Jean Wedderburn-Colville and was succeeded by his son Dunbar. There are many places (towns, mountains, streets, etc.) named 'Selkirk' after him in Canada. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant at Penchrise according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant at Horsleyhill in Minto Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Thomas (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Broadlie according to the ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish in 1812. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Reid and their children included Robert (b.1807) and Betty (b.1807). The baptisms were recorded in both Cavers Parish and East Bank Kirk. William (b.1801), Jean (b.1803) and Nelly (b.1805), baptised in Cavers, may also have been his children. Thomas (18th/19th C.) innkeeper in Lilliesleaf. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. Thomas (b.c.1805) agricultural labourer. He was living at Harecleuchhead in Kirkton Parish in 1841 and was shepherd at Hawick Shiel in 1851. He married Wilhelmina ('Mina', 1810–92), daughter of John Amos. Their children were: Isabella (b.1833); William (b.1834); John (b.1836); Mary (or Marion, b.1839); Thomas (b.1842); Robert (b.1846); James (b.1849); and Alexander Hogg (b.1852). Thomas (b.1809/10) born in Hobkirk Parish. He was an agricultural labourer at Tythehouse in 1841. In 1861 he was a carter at Bairnkine Tollbar, recorded as 'Carrier & Hawker of Groceries'. His wife was Ursula and their children included Isabella, Elizabeth, James, John, William and Jane. Thomas 'the King' (19th C.) one of the last residents of the hamlet of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish. He is mentioned by Walter Deans in his history of Unthank. Thomas 'Tom' (b.1869) son of George, who farmed at Wester Hyndhope. He was tenant farmer at Ruletownhead and a keen supporter of the Jedforest Hounds. He may be the Thomas who was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 as owner of the farms of Ruletownhead and Gatehousecote. He was also recorded as owner of Gatehousecote in the Land Tax Rolls from about the end of the 19th century. Timothy G.O. 'Tim', 'Timmy' (1943–) born in Hawick, from a well-known local farming family, he was brought up at Gatehousecote near Bonchester, and later took over the farm there. He began to write poetry while in Australia in 1969/70 and resumed 10 years later following a back injury. 'The Lambing Man' was his first published poem and he had several broadcast on Radio Scotland. His poetry features countryside themes, as well as rugby verses, several of which are published in 'Country Places' (1983) and others in 'Borderline Ballads'. He also lyrics for some Henry Douglas songs, e.g. 'A Glorious Gloat' about the 1984 rugby Grand Slam. He has 4 children, including Oliver. Walter (15th/16th C.) uncle of Sir William Douglas of Cavers and so presumably a brother of Sir Archibald of Cavers. In 1488/9 he was Vicar of Hassendean when he was bound not to interfere with the rights of the Abbot of Melrose to the 'erde siluer of ye quer of ye said kirk of hassinden' (i.e. the fees charged for burials in the kirk choir). In 1491/2 he was recorded as Vicar of Hassendean when he witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers. In 1492/3 he was Vicar of Hassendean when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. In 1500 he was a witness to the grant of the lands of Feu-Rule by their superior, Sir William of Cavers, to Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing (possibly later of Ferniehirst). He is recorded along with George as 'Sir Walter Douglas vicar of Hassendean my uncles', with Archibald also mentioned. He is thus the earliest known minister of Hassendean. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1648. The witnesses were James Riddell and Andrew Murray. Rev. Walter (1674–1727) son of William of Bonjedward. He was minister of Linton from 1698. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1724. He may be the Walter who married Jane Weir in Roxburgh Parish in 1699. Their children included: Elizabeth; Isobel, who married Rev. Charles, minister of Cavers; and Wilhelmina, who married a Dalkeith doctor. Elizabeth may have been baptised in Oxnam Parish in 1703. The pediment of his tombstone, bearing the Bonjedward family arms and motto ('Honor et Amor') are over the door of the church vestry at Linton. A sermon notebook of his is held in New Collage Library. Walter (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1717 he married Bessie Gray, who was from Easter Burnfoot Mill. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); Susanna (b.1722); and Mary (b.1727). The witnesses in 1720 were Walter Purdom and Michael Scott and in 1722 were John and Robert Wilson (both in Wilton). Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Christian Goodfellow and their children included: Christian (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); Christian (again, b.1767); Walter (b.1769); Walter (again, b.1773); Janet (b.1777). The witnesses in 1762 were John and Archibald and in 1765 and 1767 were the whole congregation. He may be the Walter whose marriage (with no wife's name given) is recorded in Kirkton Parish in 1759. His wife may be the Christian, daughter of John Goodfellow, baptised in Kirkton in 1735. Walter (1780–1850) son of James and Christian Scott, he was born in Castleton Parish. He is probably the Walter listed as a stable servant at Liddel Bank in 1797, when he was working for William Oliver, and also listed at Liddel Bank on the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. It is said that his sister Helen was a great favourite of William Oliver of Dinlabyre, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, and it was through the Sheriff's influence that he became established as an innkeeper in Edinburgh. In 1841 he is listed as hotel keeper and spirit dealer at the Douglas Hotel on St. Andrew Square in Edinburgh. He married Elizabeth Hardie in Edinburgh in 1803 and their children were James, Janet, Harriot, Christina, Janet, David Hardie, Elizabeth Hardie (who married her cousin Newcastle joiner James Douglas), Col. Walter and Robert Hardie. Walter (18th/19th C.) tailor on the Sandbed, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He may be related to the earlier tailor of the same name. Walter (19th C.) married Barbara Halliday in Hawick in 1849. Their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included Mary (b.1852) and Walter Paisley (b.1852). Walter (1839/40–1911) Hawick born, he was apprentice at Weensland Mills and then cashier for William Elliot & Sons. He was an early player of cricket in Hawick, being secretary of the Albert Club in the late 1850s. He was also involved with Hawick Bowling Club (being Secretary from 1865) and was Treasurer of the Common Riding Committee. He married a sister of Provost Hogg, and they had 4 daughters and 5 sons. William (1174–1213) perhaps the earliest known Douglas in the family pedigree. This was before there is any known connection with the Borders. However, in 1174 he witnessed a charter of the chapel and castle of Peebles to Kelso Abbey. In 1213 he witnessed a charter to the Earl of Menteith (which was inspected by the English King in 1261). His children probably included: Sir Archibald; Brice or Bruce, Bishop of Moray; Hugh; Freskin; Henry, who witnessed a charter for Kelso Abbey; Alexander; and Margaret. Sir William (d.bef. 1274) probably son of Sir Archibald (although these early generations are confused) and brother of Andrew. He married Constance of Batailm and their children probably included: Hugh, who married Marjory Abernethy; Sir William 'le Hardi'; and Willelma, who married William of Galbraith. He is probably the William recorded in a Newcastle court case in 1256, in which his underage son William is also mentioned. In 1259 he had an agreement with Sir Hugh of Abernethy, over the marriage of his son Hugh to Abernethy's sister Margerie; the dowry included lands in Chamberlain Newton. He denied being at the siege of Alnwick Castle, against the English. He and his wife 'Custancia' are mentioned in 1269 in relation to their lands of Fawdon in England. William of Midlothian (13th C.) son of Andrew. He had at least one child: Sir James of Laudoun. Sir William 'le Hardi' or 'the Hardy' (d.1298) probably the Douglas starting with whom the family pedigree is secure. He was either: son of Sir William and brother of Hugh, with his grandfather being Sir Andrew (or Sir William) and his great-grandfather Sir Archibald; or he was son of Sir Archibald. He swore fealty to Edward I in 1291. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander Stewart, 4th High Steward of Scotland. He secondly married Eleanor, daughter of Matthew de Louvaine and widow of Sir William de Ferrers; Edward I complained to the Guardians of Scotland that she had been abducted. In fact he spent some time imprisoned for this and was fined £100. His sons were: Sir James 'the Good'; Hugh 'the Dull'; and Archibald of Liddesdale, Cavers, etc. He died in prison in London. William Lord Douglas (d.1333) eldest son of Sir James 'the Good'. He incorporated the 'bloody heart' into his arms, representing the heart of Robert the Bruce that his father had died in taking it to Jerusalem. He died accompanying his uncle Sir Archibald to the Battle of Halidon Hill. He was still a minor when he died and his titles passed to another uncle, Hugh 'the Dull' who was a Canon of Glasgow and Parson of Roxburgh. Sir William 'the Flower of Chivalry' or 'the Knight of Liddesdale' (c.1300–53) natural son of Sir James of Lothian. He helped expel Baliol and his followers from Scotland, was captured at Lochmaben in 1332, and spent 2 years in captivity. He may have gained lands in Liddesdale through marrying Elizabeth (or Margaret) Graham of Abercorn, this being around 1338. In that year he marched to take possession of Hermitage, gathering provisions from an English convoy intercepted at Melrose on the way, and recovered all of Teviotdale from the English (apart from Jedburgh and Roxburgh). He probably had the square towers built at the corners of Hermitage Castle. He later continued to fight against English raiding parties, expelling them from most of southern Scotland and recovering Edinburgh Castle. He is probably the Sir William of Douglas who in 1341 received a crown charter of the lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale, which had belonged to Sir James Lovel (probably son of the Baron of Hawick) and William de Soulis. He was confirmed as Lord of Liddesdale in 1341/2, against a claim on the lands by Robert, the Steward of Scotland. He was referred to as 'Dominus Vallis de Lydel' in 1346, 1347 and 1351. He was probably also Sheriff of Teviotdale (or at least desirous of the position) before the post was given to Sir Alexander Ramsay (along with the Keepership of Roxburgh Castle) for retaking Roxburgh Castle from the English. Thus he had Ramsay captured while holding court in Hawick Kirk in June 1342, and then had him murdered in Hermitage Castle. He was disgraced for this and spent 3 years in hiding, but was ultimately pardoned, apparently at a court in Hawick, shortly before the Battle of Durham. There he was given all his lands and the Sherifdom of Teviotdale and Governorship of Roxburgh Castle. Sometime between 1342 and 1349 he is recorded as Lord of Liddesdale when he gave a grant of land in Little 'Nudref'. He was also Warden of the Middle Marches some time during this period. He commanded part of the Scottish force at Durham (also known as Neville's Cross) and was taken prisoner there. He was freed only after making a deal with Edward (to allow his men free passage through Liddesdale); in 1352 he made a specific agreement to serve Edward III in all future wars, except against Scotland and received Hermitage Castle in return. He further agreed to allow his daughter and nearest male heir to be kept as hostages in England, while at the same time swearing allegiance to the Scottish King. However, shortly after returning to Scotland he was killed in Ettrick Forest by his kinsman (actually his Godson and chieftan, with whom he is sometimes confused) William, 1st Earl of Douglas, as told in a ballad – 'The Countess of Douglas out of her bower she came, And loudly then did she call: It is for the lord of Liddesdale That I let the tears down fall' [T]. The location on Minchmoor was called Galsewood (or Galford) and renamed Williamshope, and a cross stood there for several centuries. His body was taken to Lindean Church near Selkirk and buried at Melrose Abbey. After his death his widow retained rights to Hermitage and Liddesdale and married Hugh Dacre. Their daughter Mary married Reginald More of Abercorn and later Sir Thomas Erskine of that Ilk. Sir William (c.1327–1384) 1st Earl of Douglas and Mar and Earl of Angus, son of Sir Archibald. He was grandfather of Sir William, 1st of Drumlanrig, and Archibald, 1st of Cavers. Raised in France, he was known as a cruel noble. He is easily confused with his kinsman (and originally Guardian) William, 'the Flower of Chivalry', whom he killed. Indeed he is sometimes also referred to as the 'Knight of Liddesdale' later in life. In 1342 he was granted several lands that had been resigned by his uncle Hugh Douglas, including the lands of Douglasdale, the Lordship of the Forest of Selkirk and the Baronies of Bedrule and Eskdale. He killed the previous Knight of Liddesdale in Ettrick Forest in 1353 (at a place called Galford or Galsewood, near the Glenkinning Burn). In 1354/5 David II also granted him the lands previously belonging to his uncle James and father Archibald; this included Liddesdale (although still considered by the English to be held by Percy), the town, castle and forest of Jedburgh, Eskdale, Ettrick Forest (including Selkirk, Yarrow and Tweed), Bedrule, Cavers, Drumlanrig and many other lands. In 1356 he was at the Battle of Poitiers. That year he was also made Justiciar for southern Scotland and Warden of the East Marches. He witnessed charters during the reigns of David II and Robert II. He was made an Earl in 1356/7 and soon afterwards captured Hermitage Castle from Dacre and was made Lord of Liddesdale. In 1357 he had a confirming charter for all the lands that had previously belonged to his father Archibald and his uncle James, including Drumlanrig, which had been granted to him by Thomas, Earl of Mar (his brother-in-law). In 1358 he granted the 'advowson' of Cavers Kirk to the monks of Melrose

Abbey, as well as giving them Penangushope and Cauldcleuch. In about 1360 he gave a confirming charter of the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey. Sir William of Gledstains was then referred to as his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers, thus marks a connection between the Douglasses and the Gledstains of that Ilk that lasted several generations. He was appointed Justiciar of Lothian from sometime before 1360 until 1374. In about 1361 he had a confirming charter for the Lordship of Liddesdale and other lands. He spent his last years repelling Border raids, and in 1378 he commanded the Scottish troops who defeated Musgrave (then Governor of Berwick) near Melrose. He married Lady Margaret, sister and heir to the Earl of Mar in about 1340. Through her he inherited several estates, including Cavers. After his death she secondly married Sir John Swinton of Swinton. He was succeeded by his son James, who fell at Otterburn. His daughter Isobel became countess of Mar in her own right, while his illegitimate son (with Margaret Stewart, Countess of Angus) George later became Earl of Angus. He also had an illegitimate daughter, Margaret, who married Thomas Johnstone and became the first Laird of Bonjedward. He is said to have died of a fever and is buried at Melrose. His seal bore a heart and 3 stars. Sir William (d.1421) 1st Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He was the illegitimate son of James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, who granted him the Barony of Drumlanrig sometime in the period 1384–88 (the charter still surviving). However, he could only hope to claim other Douglas titles after the death of his aunt, Isabella, Countess of Mar. In 1389 there is a charter confirming that his mother and her second husband (Sir John Swinton of Swinton) would not molest him in the lands of Drumlanrig. He may be the Sir William given safe conduct to ‘tilt’ in London in 1390. He was knighted sometime before 1405 and had a passport of safe conduct to ‘tilt’ in England in 1405. He was granted the lands and Barony of Hawick sometime after the middle of 1406 by his cousin Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas, ‘for his service’ (while the Earl was a prisoner in England); this was confirmed in a charter of 1407 by Robert, Duke of Albany. He witnessed a charter for Archibald, Earl of Douglas in about 1410. He was said to have taken and plundered Roxburgh Castle (then in the hands of the English) in 1411. Also in 1411 he was one of the Commissioners for truce with England and was given a grant of safe passage in England in 1413. In 1412 he received a confirming charter of the Baronies of Drumlanrig, Hawick and Selkirk from James I (written in the King’s own hand, while he was a prisoner in England). Also in 1412 he was appointed one of the Commissioners to negotiate a truce with England. He was appointed by the Duke of Albany as an ambassador to negotiate with Henry IV for the release of James I and in 1414 he was among a few Scotsmen who had passports to visit England to negotiate for the King’s return. Also in 1414 he witnessed charters for Michael Ramsay at Lochmaben and for Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1415 he was among a group of supporters of the Earl of Douglas who refused to pay customs to the King. In 1416 he and the Earl of Athole were involved (unsuccessfully) in negotiations with the English over the release of King James I, and he was an attendant of the King when taken to France by the English. In 1416/7 he was alleged to have been approached by the English party that wanted the Scots to attack while the English King was in France, with the ‘Foul Raid’ happening as a consequence. He visited King James in France in 1420. He died in France (perhaps at the Battle of Beaugé) and was succeeded by his son, also Sir William (whose ‘retour’ of 1427 states that his father had been dead for 6 years); this means that he cannot have died at Agincourt in 1427 as some have claimed. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Robert Stewart of Durisdeer and Rosyth, and was succeeded by his only known son, Sir William. It was probably his daughter Marion who married Robert Chisholme of that Ilk. His daughter Margaret may have been mother of the illegitimate son of William Elphinstone, also William, who founded Aberdeen University. Sir William (d.1444) 2nd Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick, son of Sir William. Note that these generations are confused, since there were several consecutive Williams (and he is sometimes stated to have died in 1458). In 1425 he witnessed a charter for Margaret, Duchess of Touraine and Countess of Douglas. In 1426 he witnessed a charter for Michael Ramsay at Lochmaben. He is recorded in a ‘retour’ of 1427 for his father’s lands and titles, 6 years after his father’s death. And the Baronies of Drumlanrig and Hawick were confirmed by his superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas, in 1428/9. This suggests that he was a minor when his father died (and so may have been born in 1405/6). He may have been one of the hostages held in England in exchanged for James I in the 1420s. In 1429 there was an indenture between him and William Douglas, Lord of Leswalt, in which the Lord of Leswalt was to deliver to him the Castle of Drumlanrig, which he had held for 10 years. He is recorded in a local feu charter of 1433 granting lands at 'Byrkwode' (possibly the 'Duke's Wud') to Simon of Routledge, who was a Burgess of Hawick. It is therefore possible that he was the Baron who granted Hawick its original burgh of barony status, during his first few years as Baron. In 1437 he recovered the lands of East Mains near Hawick from Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains; the panel decided that the lands had been held by his father Sir William. In 1450 his son William inherited his lands, and he was said to have been deceased for 6 years at that time. He was certainly already deceased in 1446, when a charter for the Scotts of Buccleuch was confirmed by the Earl of Douglas as superior of the Barony. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of Sir Herbert Maxwell of Carlaverock, and was succeeded by his son, also William. He also had a daughter, Angelica, who married Sir Robert Innes of Innes. Sir William of Strathbrock (14th/15th C.) son of John and grandson of Sir John, who was younger brother of William, Knight of Liddesdale. He appears to have acquired the lands of Borthwickshiels from Sir Laurence Abernethy, probably through marriage. He is said to have been nephew of Helen Abernethy. He had a daughter who married George Crichton of Cairns, who was later Earl of Caithness. He granted the lands of Borthwickshiels to his son-in-law in about 1425. William (c.1398–1437) 2nd Earl of Angus, eldest son of George the 1st Earl and Mary Stewart. He succeeded his father around 1403, although only some of the lands and titles went to him (including eventually Liddesdale and Jedburgh), the rest going to Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. In 1406 he is recorded as Baron of Cavers, when the Church was confirmed to Melrose Abbey. In 1409 he had a precept of sasine from the Regent for the Barony of Liddesdale. He was a strong ally of his uncle, James I from 1424, becoming extremely powerful in south-eastern Scotland in the following decade. He was described as 'of Liddell' in 1427, although it is unclear if he ever had possession of Hermitage. In 1428/9 he directed his Bailie in Liddesdale to grant certain lands to his kinsman Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1433 or 1434, but died only 3 years later. In 1433/4 he witnessed an ecclesiastic gift by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1436 he granted the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee to David Home of Wedderburn. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Hay of Locherworth and Yester and was succeeded by his sons James and then George, also having sons William of Cluny and Archibald. However, after his death the reigns of power were taken by the Black Douglases. William 6th Earl of Douglas (1423–40) eldest son of Archibald, the 5th Earl. He seems to have been superior of the Barony of Cavers, as recorded in a document of about 1432, when Cavers Kirk was confirmed to Melrose Abbey. He also held the Regality of Ettrick Forest. In 1437 he granted the lands of Primside to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He married Janet, daughter of David Lindsay, 3rd Earl of Crawford. He was beheaded, along with his brother David, at Edinburgh Castle. He was succeeded by his grand-uncle, James. William 8th Earl of Douglas (c.1425–51/2) eldest son of James, the 7th Earl, and twin brother of James. He was also Earl of Avondale and Lord of Galloway. He had a sasine for the Barony of Hawick and other lands in 1446 (probably during the minority of Douglas of Drumlanrig). As superior of the Barony of Hawick, he confirmed the transfer of Branhholme and other lands in the Barony from Thomas Inglis of Manor to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1446. It was also on his authority that Hawick Kirk became a canonry and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell in 1447. He was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. Also in 1449 he was regranted the lands of Ettrick Forest and Selkirk by James II. He was Lord Warden of all the Marches of Scotland in 1450. In 1451 he was confirmed by James II in all of his lands and superiorities, including the Baronies of Sprouston, Hawick, Bedrule and Smailholm in Roxburghshire (which at that time were incorporated into the Barony of Sprouston). In 1451 he refused to grant a sasine to Sir William of Drumlanrig (and Hawick), since he was 'in the King's respite'. In 1444 he married Margaret 'the Fair Maid of Galloway', daughter of Archibald the 5th Earl of Douglas, who was his cousin. He died without an heir, possibly killed by James II in Stirling Castle (and it is said that Bishop William Turnbull was involved in his downfall). He was succeeded by his twin brother James, who married his widow! William of Cavers (d.bef. 1440) son of Archibald and Margaret, he was the 2nd Laird as well as hereditary Sheriff of Roxburghshire. An existing sasine of 1432 records how he was given the Barony of Cavers and Sherifffdom of Roxburghshire, but with certain rights to his father, including the sheriffdom for the rest of his life. Despite conflicting accounts in some existing genealogies, it seems clear that there are additional Lairds in the mid-1400s, and that this William is distinct from the one recorded 2 decades later. He was succeeded by Archibald, who was Laird by at least 1448.

William (d.1464) 3rd Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He succeeded his father in 1450, after 6 years, suggesting he reached majority then (and so was born in 1428/9). He was probably the William of Drumlanrig who fought at the Battle of Sark in 1448. He also held the Baronies of Sprouston, Bedrule and Smailholm according to a charter of 1451. In 1451 he was also in dispute with his superior William, Earl of Douglas, who refused to grant him a sasine since he was 'in the King's respite'. In a charter of 1452 he resigned the Barony of Hawick into the King's hands in order to receive a new infeftment, and the associated sasine was confirmed to him, probably in an outdoor ceremony at the Mote ('super solum dictarum terrarum de Hawik'). He may have been the 'William of Douglas, younger', who witnessed one of Hawick's earliest known sasines in 1453. In 1456 he granted the lands of Whithope to Philip Turnbull. In 1459 he was regranted his lands in the Barony of Hawick, which had been in the hands of King James II 'for certain causes'. He was present at the 1460 siege of Roxburgh Castle (where James II was killed) and at the Battle of Alnwick in 1462. In 1463 he witnessed charters for Robert Charters of Amisfield, for Andrew Crichton and for Robert Crichton, all signed in Edinburgh. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Carlyle of Torthorwald. He was succeeded by his son, also William. He may also have had another son, James, who was witness to a sasine of 1489, where he is described as uncle of James of Drumlanrig. William of Cavers (d.1464) son of Archibald (and distinct from the William of 2 decades earlier). He witnessed a lease in 1445 (for lands in Borthwickshiels) along with his father Archibald and others. In 1450 he is Laird of Cavers in a letter of reversion from Walter, son of Andrew Ker of Altonburn for the lands of Blackpool in the Barony of Cavers, as well as a charter granting these lands to Walter (who was probably his nephew). He was listed as son and heir of Archibald when he witnessed the charter for exchanging Milsington and Heap in 1451. Along with his father he was created a Bailie of Liddesdale and Keeper of Hermitage Castle in 1452 by George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus (and Lord of Liddesdale), and was given the lands of Whitefield along with these responsibilities. Also in 1452 he was recorded as son and heir of Sir Archibald when he was granted the 40 merk land of 'Luthre' in Fife by James II. In 1456 he was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1456/7 he was witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert Graham to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. In 1461 he was witness to a sasine of lands in the Barony of Branhholme, along with Archibald, his son and heir. In 1469/70 he was deceased when the Governorship of Hermitage Castle was given to Sir David Scott of Buccleuch; it is said that he and his son Archibald, 'schirafis', had certain lands for keeping the castle for 6 years. He was succeeded by his son Sir Archibald in 1464/5. His daughter Janet married John Ainslie of Dolphinton and another married Andrew Ker of Cessford. He may have had 2 other sons, George and Walter (vicar of Hassendean), who are recorded in 1500 as uncles to his grandson Sir William of Cavers. Note that another William was Laird of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1470 when granted Mosspatrickhope, Braidlie and the Shaws, with the 'precept of sasine' following in 1472; it is thus unclear if there was one extra William in the line of Barons. William of Cluny (d.1475) 3rd son of William, 2nd Earl of Angus, and brother of the 3rd and 4th Earls. He was made Warden of the Middle Marches in 1464. In 1471 Isobel (Sibbald), Countess of Angus, brought an action against him for withholding and spoiling grain, goods and rent from the lands of Tantallon, Abernethy and Bonkle, Pinnacle and Hawick. He may be the William who was recorded as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1471, but that seems more likely to have been a Douglas of Cavers. In 1471-74 he was recorded as Master Ranger of the Ward of Tweed when given Torwoodlee for his fee. In 1473 he also leased Galashiels, Blindlee and Mossielee. He died without an heir. William of Cavers (15th C.) recorded as Laird of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1470. He was at that time granted Mosspatrickhope, Braidlie and the Shaws, with the 'precept of sasine' following in 1472. However, Sir Archibald was Laird at that time, and so it is unclear who he was, suggesting perhaps another generation of Douglasses of Cavers, or perhaps that a brother inherited (or similar). Perhaps the same William was recorded as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1471 in the Exchequer Rolls, with James as his deputy (although this could be William of Cluny, who was Ranger of Tweed, but there is no proof of this); in 1471 and 1473 probably this same William was given the lease of the Haining near Selkirk. Sir William (d.1484) 4th Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He succeeded his father William in 1464. In 1464/5 he (or perhaps his guardians, if he was a minor) was involved in a dispute over the lands of Kirkton and Flex in the Barony of Hawick, against Alexander Gledstains, winning right to the lands; this probably followed the earlier William (his grandfather) of Drumlanrig's successful reclaiming of East Mains from Janet Murray (widow of James Gledstains). In 1470 he had an agreement with David Scott of Buccleuch over a sum of 200 merks, with the lands of Whitchesters as guarantee. In 1470 he had a marriage contract for his son and heir James with Janet, daughter of David Scott of Buccleuch; the dowry was 500 merks, and he agreed to infest the couple in the East Mains of Kirkton as well as lands in Drumlanrig, while David Scott agreed to give the lands of Whitchesters to him 'in ward and relief'. In 1482 he was recorded along with his wife gaining a crown charter of lands in the Barony of Drumlanrig that he had previously resigned to the crown; these were 'then held in chief of the Crown, not of Earl Douglas, as formerly', an arrangement which may also have applied to his Barony of Hawick. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar. His children included: James, who succeeded; Archibald, ancestor of the 'Coscholgil' (or Cashogle) branch; Robert; John (perhaps the 'Dene Johne Dowglas' who signed the marriage contract for Elizabeth in 1496/7); Margaret, who married John, 2nd Lord Cathcart; Janet, who married William Somerville of Carnwarth; and Elizabeth, who married John Campbell, younger, of West Loudon. George, ancestor of the Douglasses of Penzerie, may also have been his son. He was killed at the Battle of Kirtle (also called Kirkconnel), near Lochmaben, fighting for the Crown against his cousin the 9th Earl of Douglas and the Duke of Albany. William (15th C.) brother of George of Bonjedward. He was recorded in a document of 1476 recording a lawsuit between the Somervilles and Ormiston over the lands of Blacklaw near Linton. William (15th C.) recorded as being 'of Denbray' when he was the second man listed (after William of Cavers) on the list of men being forgiven in 1488/9 by James IV for their support of the former King. It seems likely that his lands were at Deanbrae. Probably the same William 'in denebraa' was recorded in 1494/5 when he was charged to enter John Edmondson for the murder of Thomas Hoggarth. William (15th C.) uncle of Archibald, recorded in 1493 when William of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was once more cited in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was again his surety. It is unclear if he was uncle of the same Archibald (brother of another William) who was also listed in 1493 and in 1494/5. William (15th C.) brother of Archibald. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; given that he was 'fratrem archibaldi', who was mentioned in the next case, it seems likely that they were both related to the Douglasses of Cavers, but the exact connection is not known. He was also called in 1494/5, when stated to be brother of Archibald, and the Sheriff was fined for his non-appearance (as well as that of his brother). William of Hornshole (15th C.) listed among the 24 Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 for their support of the former King, James III, particularly on the field of battle at Stirling. In 1491/2 he witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers. He acted as surety in 1494 for the case of Walter Scott of Buccleuch trying to get damages from the Routledges who burned and pillaged Buccleuch. It seems likely he was closely related to the Douglasses of Cavers, and is recorded as being 'of hornysheole' (and hence not the same as Sir William of Cavers, who may be the other 'William of Douglas' mentioned in the same 1494 decree). He may be one of the Williams on the inquest panel for Robert Elliot inheriting lands in Cavers in 1497/8. He may also be one of the 2 Williams on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. William (15th/16th C.) referred to as being 'of Caverismilne' when he witnessed a document relating to George, Master of Angus inheriting titles and lands in 1499. It is unclear where this 'Cavers Mill' was. It is possible he was George's bother. Sir William (d.1506) 4th (or 5th) Laird of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburghshire. He was son of Sir Archibald. It seems unlikely he is the William of Cavers recorded in 1470 (but these generations may still be confused). In 1482 he was Sheriff of Teviotdale when he protested against Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock, who had summoned him but not appeared. He gave a sasine for lands in Hassendean in 1483 and may have been the William who was first witness for a sasine of the lands of Boonraw in 1487. In 1484

he was sheriff of Roxburghshire when he gave sasine for the Barony of Hawick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was said to have been a Warden of the Marches in his father's lifetime and was at the Scottish Parliament in Edinburgh in 1487. In 1488 he resigned his Barony in order to get a new charter from the King, James III. This was after he had promised to be faithful to the King and to defend him 'against all that live or die shall'; however, the King was assassinated only a few days later after Sauchieburn. It is said that he supported the King following a letter from the aged Earl of Douglas, who was imprisoned in Lindores. He had a remission (along with 24 other residents of Roxburghshire, including several tenants of nearby farms, and many Douglasses) from James IV only a few months later for their 'treasonably being present against him in the field and battle near Strivelin, on St. Barnabas Day last by past' (i.e. Sauchieburn). In 1491/2 he gained from George Muirhead for his lands in Denholm and Cavers. In 1492 he was Sheriff for the retour of Walter Scott to Branxholme and Buccleuch and in 1494 for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. He gave a charter to Rutherford of that ilk in 1493. In the earliest surviving Justiciary Court book, starting in 1493, he is recorded several times as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, being called to enter many men before the court (including the brothers William and Archibald, who were probably related to him); he appears to have been absent for reasons not given and was fined £310. He also served as surety for several people at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1497/8 there was an inquest before him to rule on the inheritance of the lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch by Robert Elliot; the Douglasses on the panel were William, Archibald, Adam and (another) William. In 1498 he had remission (along with William and Archibald, surely his near relations) for communing 'with the rebels and traitors of 'Levin'. Also in 1498 he was involved in declaring a number of Rutherfords and others as rebels for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. In 1499 he witnessed the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. Also in 1499 he was superior of the lands of Feu-rule when they were resigned by the Colvilles and he granted them to the Kerrs in the following year; the witnesses were his uncles George and Walter, as well as Archibald (possibly his brother). He was Sheriff in 1500 in an appraisal of the goods of Philip Turnbull of Whitthope; this document survives as an early example of local Scots. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. In 1502 he also was fined for the non-appearance of Robert, son of John Scott in Deloraine, for whom he had been surety. Additionally in 1502 he dealt with the escheated goods of James Morrison and Patrick Rufy. His brother Adam was also recorded in 1502 and also there was a document of 'respite and protection' to William, his son and heir, plus a group of Rutherfords and their kin, friends and tenants during the time he was in Denmark. In 1505 he was witness to the signing of a bond among Turnbells at Caerlenrig. In 1505/6 he had an acquittance of 1000 crowns 'for all soumez of money or gudis restand awand apoun hym in the chekker rollis before 13 Dec. 1503'. He was on an inquest in Jedburgh for lands owned by the Homes in October 1506 and died before the end of that month. He was succeeded by his son Sir James, who received special consideration from the King in 1509 (probably when he came of age), where it was said that his father 'deit in defens of his realme and resisting the inimeis of England and rebellis'. His elder son, William, had died earlier. Either he or his son William had a marriage contract in 1506 with Alison, son of George Douglas, Master of Angus (but he may have died before it was carried out). William (d.bef. 1506) eldest son of William of Cavers. He is recorded in 1502 as son and heir of Cavers. However, he died before his father and his brother James succeeded to the titles. It is possible he is the same man as William of Hornshole, recorded earlier, or the other William (with no designation) listed on the 1488/9 remission. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in Effledge in 1502. He and his brother Archibald had remission for stealing sheep from James Grahamslaw in Kames, with George in the Trows as their surety. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Wilelmo Douglas in Pencress' when he was a Sheriff of Roxburghshire who gave sasine in 1508 to Adam Hepburn, inheriting his father's Lordship of Hermitage and other lands. He was presumably tenant at Penchrise, which was connected with the Douglasses of Cavers around then. He was likely to be a close relative of James, who was Laird of Cavers at that time (possibly James' son William, later of Friarshaw). The sasine was carried out at Hermitage Castle and he was said to have 'took a black ox for the execution of his office'. William (15th/16th C.) brother of the Laird of Bonjedward, probably George. In 1502 he and his brother John (as well as Douglasses in Swinside, Davidsons and the junior Laird of Riddell) were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree at his lands of 'hardanehed'. He may be the William, son of the Laird of Bonjedward, recorded in 1502 when he was found to be too infirm to appear before the court in Jedburgh. William of Bonjedward (15th/16th C.) suggested to have been the son of George of Bonjedward who inherited instead of his brother James. However these generations seem quite confused, and it is not clear that he existed at all. His son may have been George, 6th Laird. He may also have had children John, Jane, William and Hugh, who were siblings of this George. Hugh was separately referred to as son of William of Bonjedward and cousin of Archbishop John. Sir William (bef. 1480–1513) 6th Baron of Drumlanrig, son of Sir James, he was also Baron of Dalgarnock, Tibbers and Hawick. He is also occasionally known as 'the generous donor', although that title is more musually applied to his son Sir James. He is probably the 'filie domini de Drumlangryk' who was bequeathed 2 cows in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. In 1492 he had a charter of Drumlanrig, as son and heir of James. In 1494 he was given the lands of West Mains and Crumhaugh by his father. His father died in 1498, but it is unclear if he succeeded right away. He was witness to a sasine in Dumfriesshire in 1489, when he was still heir apparent to his father William. In 1497 he held a letter of exemption from the jurisdiction of the Sheriff of Dumfries because of the enmity between them (he is already 'of Drumlanrig', although his father died in the following year, so there is some confusion here). In 1500 he had a charter for lands in Dalgarnock. In 1501 he had an agreement with George Scott over the lands of Laris, for which his father was superior. In 1502 he was fined for not appearing at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh (both for not 'giving presence' and not 'giving suit') for his lands of Hawick, as well as for Chisholme and Teindside. He is probably also the 'domino hawic' who at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1502 served as surety for Alexander Horsburgh of that ilk. He also served as a surety at the Justice-aire in Dumfries in 1504. In 1507 he confirmed a charter of the 'Soltrelands' in Hawick to the Church of the Holy Trinity in Edinburgh. He had an alliance with the Maxwells and in 1508 helped Lord Maxwell drive Lord Sanguhar from Dumfries; he was present at the Battle of Dumfries Sands, where he was responsible for the killing of Robert Crichton of Kirkpatrick. In 1508/9 he had a charter for the Barony of Tibbers and documents record him repaying the money owed to the former Maitland owners. In 1508/9 he was on an assize for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. In 1509 he was witness to a marriage contract between Archibald, son of George, Master of Angus, and Margaret Hepburn. Also in 1509 he signed a marriage contract between his daughter Janet and Sir Robert Maxwell. Hawick was reaffirmed in its 'burgh of barony' status through his charter of 1511, granted by James IV. This charter renewed Douglas' right to the Hawick lands granted in 1412 (while enacting the rights of the town), which had been removed by the King in 1510. In 1512 he was involved in a court case with Robert, Lord Crichton, in which he and his associates were exonerated for the murder of Robert Crichton of Kirkpatrick because he was an outlaw at the time. In 1512/3 he sold Broadlee (in the Borthwick valley) to Alexander, Lord Home. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar. Their children included: James, who succeeded; Robert, ancestor of the Douglasses of Burford, and possibly the same Robert who was the last Provost of Lincluden; Janet, who married Robert Maxwell, Lord of Carlaverock; and Agnes, who married Andrew Cunningham of Kirkshaw. Another son may have been John, who was described as brother of James of Drumlanrig in a respite of 1526, as well as when he witnessed a charter in 1530/1, and when he witnessed his brother resigning his lands of Drumlanrig and others in 1540 in order to be regranted. He was killed at Flodden, perhaps dying the day after, since it is recorded that he 'died in Northumberland, in the field of war, 10 September 1513'. An inventory of his goods was drawn up by his widow, including 3500 sheep, with a total value of more than £1000 in goods. William of Brieryyards (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Wilelmum Douglas de Brerezardis' in 1517 when he was on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is surely related to the later William. William (16th C.) owner of 3 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. It is unclear how he was related to any other Douglasses. William of Bonjedward (16th C.) probably son of George. In 1534 he was required by Patick Murray of Falahill, Sheriff of Selkirkshire, to appear at an inquest in his court; he 'declared he was superior to the sheriff' and refused to give service. He was also cautioned in 1536 and 1537.

He may be the William who was given the 'fermes' of Falside and Roughlee in 1538 for his roll in the accounts for Jedforest. He was probably the Laird of Bonjedward who gave his pledge to England (along with Kerr Lairds) in 1544; however, it also appears from English documents that he switched to the Scottish side at Ancrum Moor. He acted as chief of council for Sir George Douglas. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. Also in 1545 he was appointed as one of the temporary Sheriffs of Roxburghshire in order to deal with the inheriting of Cavers by James Douglas. He was therefore presumably the 'Lard of Bune Jedworth' whose house was burned by Hertford's men in 1545. In late 1545 he was to have 16 of the 500 horsemen mustered in Teviotdale by Parliamentary decree. He was probably the 'lard of Bouniedworth' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1549 he was among the supporters of Walter Ker of Cessford who was accused by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in assisting the English in raiding and burning his farms in the previous year. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. He is probably the Laird of Bonjedward who was appointed as a deputy warden in 1553. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he was among landowners summoned before the Privy Council to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and the people of Jedburgh. From 1566 he held the fruits of the Rectory of Southdean (suggesting that Hugh, who was minister there at the time of the Reformation, was possibly a close relative). He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. Also in 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle, with his surety being James Heriot of Trabroun; at the same time he himself was surety for James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. In 1571/2 he joined other lairds in signing a bond to act against Borders thieves and he signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1576 he witnessed the 'bond of manrent' between several Borderers and Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus; the other witnesses were his son George and Malcolm of Mains. He was Deputy Warden of the Middle Marches in 1576 when there were communications with Sir John Forster regarding 'outrages committed by the inhabitants of West Teviotdale'. He could be the Douglas of Bonjedward who was at the Raid of the Redeswire. He is probably the William of Bonjedward who wrongfully occupied lands belonging to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. He may also be the William who was listed among the landed men of the Borders about 1590. His children probably included: George, who succeeded, and was 'younger' of Bonjedward since the 1560s; John, possibly the brewer in Edinburgh, whose son George was martyred for adhering to the Catholic faith at York in 1587; Archibald; and Elizabeth, who married Alexander Laurie of Gosford. Robert, son of William 'in Bonjedward', who witnessed a sasine near Melrose in 1582, may have been another son. Additional sons might be Patrick, Donald and James, who are described as 'in Banejedward' when they witnessed a 1568 charter, as well as Andrew who was 'in Bonajedburgh' when he witnessed a Calffhill charter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Perhaps the same William witnessed a dispute in 1541 over a sum of money involving James of Cavers and William 'Familtounne'. William of Brieryyards (16th C.) witness in 1551 to a sasine confirming Alexander Cunningham as Baron of Hassendean. Also in 1551 he witnessed the regranting of Wauchope to David Turnbull by the Earl of Angus. He was probably related to the William of Brieryyards recorded in 1517, and Robert must have been his direct descendant. William of Crook (d.1584) recorded in 1553/4 as 'Wilelmum Dowglas in Crowk' when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch by Sir Walter Scott. In 1565 he was 'William Dowglass of the Cruke' when he and James of Cavers (probably son of Sir James) were fined for the non-appearance of 2 Elliots to answer for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He had a charter in 1568 from the Commendator of Melrose Abbey for 'their three merk lands of Cruik . . . to be held . . . in feu farm and heritage for ever' for a payment of 40 shillings yearly, plus an augmentation of 3s and 4d. In 1569 he signed the bond to suppress thieves in the Borders. According to the register of the Privy Council he was warded in 1571 and served as surety in 1576. In 1574 he served as surety for a number of Borderers, specifically the residents of Earlside, Penchrise and Kirkton. He is also named in the 1574 last testament of

Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme; he is listed as being 'of Cruik' and along with Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill and Robert Elliot ('Young Robin') is listed 'for the wrangus spoliatioun and awaytaking of thair teindis'. Note that Christine Douglas, Lady of Trows, is also named in the same document (and must have been a close neighbour). In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. A document of 1581 (among the Cavers papers) records his wife as 'Eliza Scot', when he granted his son James several pieces of land within Crook (including a herb garden called 'Taillyard' and a barn called 'Trone et Troneland'); this was part of a promise made before the marriage between his son Martin and a Hoppringle. This suggests that Martin was probably the elder son and James the younger (although this is far from clear). His will, where he is recorded as 'in the Cruiks', is also among the Douglas of Cavers papers. It seems likely that he is closely related to the Baron of Cavers, perhaps son of Sir James of Cavers. His son and heir, Martin, is recorded in 1592 and 1608. He had a brother, Archibald, possibly the same man as Archibald of Tofts, as recorded in 1608, when his lands were inherited by Martin (his son, Archibald's nephew). Sir William of Hawick (d.1572) son of Sir James the 7th Baron of Drumlanrig. In 1559 his father promised to infest him as his son and heir, in all his lands, including the Barony of Hawick. In 1564 he and several other Douglasses were given remission for the murder of High Douglas of Dalveen. He long fought beside his father and is listed along with him in a declaration by an extensive list of noblemen in 1570. In 1568 he commanded 200 horsemen at the Battle of Langside, fighting against Queen Mary. He was 'youngar of Drumlanrig' in 1569 when obliged to enter certain men to the court in Dumfries and was 'Sir Williame Dowglas of Hawik knyght' in the same year in a case involving Grahams. He gained the lands of 'Bagbie' (probably Begbie) in Lothian. He narrowly escaped when his father was captured in 1571, but his father wrote 'Willie, Thow sall wit that I am haill and feare. Send me word thairfor how thow art, whether deid or livand?' Nevertheless, he pre-deceased his father, the Barony of Hawick (as well as Drumlanrig later) going to his son Sir James; this was in March 1572/3, with the Barony and lands being in the hands of the Crown since his death about 6 months earlier. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar. Their other children were: Margaret, who married Sir

Robert Montgomery of Skelmorlie; Janet, who married Sir James Murray of Cockpool; Helen; Christian; Jean; and William. There is a 'letter of reversion' of 1594 relating to lands held by his daughters Janet and Christian, and another of 1606. His father clearly did not get along with his wife, writing an amendement to his will in 1578, calling on his son (Sir James) to 'not receive her in household with him'. William of Friarshaw (d.1575) younger son of Sir James, 5th Laird of Cavers. He became the 1st Douglas Laird of Friarshaw. He married 'Eufame' Davidson (whose testament is recorded in 1580) and was said to have been succeeded in turn by his sons John and George. However, in 1592 the lands of Friarshaw were held by Andrew (probably his son) and John (also his son), with a regranting of the charter to Andrew and Andrew's son George; hence the succession is complicated. It is possible he was the William who in 1536 allowed David Tudhope to raise oats and pasture cattle on his land of Friarshaw. It seems likely he was succeeded by Andrew. Other children were probably John, James and Alison. William (16th C.) recorded as 'in Kirkton' when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1569. Arthur in Kirkton was also mentioned, and so they were presumably related. William (16th C.) tenant in Ferniehirst. In 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. Sir William (d.c.1589) 7th of Cavers. He may be the William 'in Cawaris' who witnessed a notorial instrument for Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1550. He succeeded his father Sir James in 1558, with the 'retour' signed by Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch, Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun, Robert Kerr of Woodhead, and others. He was stated to be 'of lawful age by reason of the Queen's letters of dispensation', suggesting that he was somewhat younger than 21 at the time. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may be the William who witnessed a document relating to Andrew in Friarshaw in 1563. In 1563 he sold the lands of the Mains of Spittal-on-Rule to Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch. Also in 1563 he served as security for Robert Elliot of Redheugh being appointed Deputy Keeper of Hermitage Castle. In 1564 he was listed as proprietor of part of the lands of Caveling (with Gavin Elliot holding the other part) and was ordered to present their tenant David Elliot before the Privy Council. In 1564 he was probably the 'Sheref of Teviotdail' when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He is recorded in a bond of 1567 to present 'Richie Thomsoun' to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, the Warden. In 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and Regent, probably in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. Also in 1573 he tried to have Robert Elliot of Redheugh removed from the lands of Langside and Gavin Eliott removed from the lands of Caveling; he appears to have later lost this legal battle. In 1574 he had a discharge with John Cranston of that Ilk for rentals of Denholm and other lands. In 1574 he was involved in a dispute with William Elliot of Gorrenberry over lands at Caerlenrig (which his father had wadset to Archibald Elliot) and with Gavin Eliott of Bailielee (later Stobs) over lands of Caveling. Additionally in 1574 he was surety for a number of Croziers at Earlside, Penchrise and Kirkton, and was found liable to pay 5000 merks for not replacing those claimed to be thieves with 'trew men to dwell thairin'. Also in 1574 he is 'vmquhile' when named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as still owing on a bond, with sureties being Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch, his son Andrew Ker and the deceased William Ker of Yair. However, he appears to be still alive in 1579 as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in a sasine relating to Midshiels and Appletreehall, in which James, younger of Cavers, was witness. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. In 1576/7 he resigned his lands and Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to his son James, but reserving the 'liferent' to himself. This suggests that perhaps he was not in good health by that point. He signed a bond with Rutherfords and Turnbells in 1578. He also signed a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably in the early 1580s. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. Also in 1581 he was' among men who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was denounced as a rebel again in 1583 for non-appearance. He appears to still be alive in 1583/4 and 1584/5, when he was listed among Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1586 his son William was declared a rebel for his involvement in the murder of 6 Gramslaws of Newton. Also in 1586 he was the 'Schiref of Teviotdale' listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. In 1587 Archibald, Earl of Angus, acted as cautioner for him to appear. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels; his name appeared along with that of his son and heir James. Also in 1589 he was fined for not re-entering Wat Turnbull of Bedrule into ward in Edinburgh Castle. He married Euphemia, daughter of Sir William Ker of Cessford (although it has also been suggested that he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Cranston of that Ilk). He was succeeded by his son Sir James and had at least one other child, William. Rev. William (16th C.) recorded as minister at Southdean in 1585. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1580. William (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Laidlaws, Turnbells, Shiels and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton Hall in 1589. He is recorded being 'of Yerneside' and 'Yarnside', which is probably Earlside, given that some of the other men were from Rulewater. William (c.1533–91) 9th Earl of Angus, son of Sir Archibald of Glenbervie, he succeeded his distant cousin Archibald, 8th Earl in 1588. He presumably also held the superiority over lands in the Borders, but probably not for long enough to have any influence there. He was a strong support of Mary, Queen of Scots. He was succeeded as Earl of Angus by his son William. William (c.1540–1606) 6th Earl of Morton, son of Robert of Lochleven, with his mother being Margaret Erskine, a former mistress of James V. He was half brother of James Stewart, Earl of Moray, Regent of Scotland. He succeeded to the Earldom of Morton in 1588 on the death of Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He held many lands, including church lands in Hassendean and Cavers that were part of the Lordship of Melrose. He owned the island castle where Mary, Queen of Scots was imprisoned. In 1595 he complained that the Kers were harassing his tenants in Longnewton. He married Agnes, daughter of George Leslie, 4th Earl of Rothes. They had 11 children, and he was succeeded by his grandson William, son of Robert. James, Commendator of Melrose was another son. He also had a daughter who married Alexander, 1st Earl of Home. William (1552–1611) 10th Earl of Angus, son of William, 9th Earl. He became a Catholic while visiting the French court, being disinherited on his return. But he succeeded to his father in 1591 and in 1592 was appointed Warden of the West Marches. Embroiled in plot with the English and Spanish, he was imprisoned for treason in 1593, lived as a rebel, and had his titles and lands forfeited to Ludovic Stewart, Duke of Lennox (including the Lordships of Selkirk and Jedforest and various lands in Ettrick Forest). However, he eventually renounced his religion and had his estates restored in 1597. The following year he was appointed Lieutenant of the Border, orchestrating the ‘Raid of Dumfries’ against the Johnstones. There are surviving documents describing his efforts to gather pledges the different clans to keep peace on the Border in about 1599. In 1605 he sold off his lands in Rulewater, including the superiority that his family had held for many generations. However in 1606 he was still ‘Lord of the Regalitie of Jedburghfforrest’ when he was in court to represent his subjects, a group of Turnbolls of Wauchope and others, charged with murder, theft and fire-raising at Harwood and Appotside. He was later excommunicated again and died in exile in France. He married Elizabeth Oliphant and his children included: William, 1st Marquess of Douglas; James, 1st Lord Mordington; Francis; Catherine, who married Sir Andrew Ker; Mary, who married Alexander Livingstone, 2nd Earl of Linlithgow; and Elizabeth, who married Sir John Campbell. William (16th C.) son of William of Cavers. In 1586 he was denounced as a rebel for his part in the slaughter of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton; the others named included sons of Douglas of Whitriggs and Douglas of Earlside, as well as several Turnbolls. William (16th C.) son of David of Earlside. In 1586 he was declared a rebel for involvement in the slaughter of 6 men called Grahamslaw. William (1582–1648) son of Robert and grandson of William 6th Earl of Morton, whom he succeeded as 7th Earl. He was served heir to his grandfather in 1606. Among the many lands he inherited were church lands of Hassendean and Cavers that were part of the Lordship of Melrose. He was Lord High Treasurer of Scotland. He raised money for the Royalist cause by selling his Dalkeith estate to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1642. He married Anne, daughter of George Keith, 5th Earl of Marischal. He was succeeded by his son Robert. William (16th/17th C.) granted 1½ husbandlands in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as son of John in Friarshaw, although how they were related to other Douglasses of Friarshaw is unclear (since the first John of Friarshaw is meant to have died without issue). William (16th/17th C.) son of Archibald. He was served heir to his father in a cottage-land in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1602. He could be related to the Douglasses of Friarshaw. William (16th/17th C.) brother of George of Friarshaw and also Robert. He was thus a younger son of William, 1st of Friarshaw. In 1616 he and his son Robert are mentioned in the Privy Council Register, They were accused of attacking some residents of Lilliesleaf and harassing tenants of the Riddells. William of Whitriggs (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601, along with James of Cavers and Robert Turnbull of Barhills, when Henry Woodrington accused them of stealing his cattle. He is also mentioned being ‘of Quhitrig’ in the Dumfries Circuit Court of 1622, when John Ainslie (Baillie of Jedburgh) and James Haswell (surgeon) were caution for him. Probably the same William ‘of Whytrig’ was recorded in 1612 when Gavin Elliot of Brugh complained that he and several other servants of James Douglas of Cavers had attacked his family; his brother Robert was also involved. He is probably related to the John ‘of Quhitrig’ listed among the landed men of the Borders in about 1590. His son may be Thomas, recorded as heir apparent to Whitriggs in 1637. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Harwood’ in 1599 when his son James became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This may be Harwood on Rule. But more likely he is the William, son of John of Little Harwood (in the Barony of Calder in Edinburghshire) who had sasine for Little Harwood in 1583. William (c.1582–1640) 1st Earl of Queensberry, son of Sir James of Drumlanrig and great grandson of the Sir James who granted Hawick its 1537 Charter. He is probably the ‘Drumlanrig, younger’ who signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He took over running his father’s affairs before becoming Baron on his death in 1615. In 1611 he was accused of imprisoning William Kirkpatrick in Drumlanrig Castle. He is probably the Sir William who had an action against the Bailies of Hawick in 1612. In 1612, while still ‘younger of Drumlanrig’, he was accused of kidnapping William Kirkpatrick of Kirkmichael and of illegally carrying guns, but was let off on technicalities. In 1615 he was served heir to his father's lands, including the Barony and Regality of Drumlanrig, as well as the Barony of Hawick, along with the mill and several specific lands. In 1616, as Provost of Lincluden College, he resigned his lands in Kirkcudbrightshire. In 1616 and the following years he aggressively pursued those who were responsible for the attack on his father's sheep at Howpasley (and court records suggest that several people favourable to him were on the jury). He entertained King James VI at Drumlanrig in 1617. He was appointed as a Commissioner for the Middle Shires in 1618. He acquired the lands of Sanquhar and the Barony of Morton. In 1621 he was involved with a feud with the Douglasses of Caschogill and others. He was made Viscount Drumlanrig, as well as Lord Douglas of Hawick and Tibbers in 1628 by Charles I and was created Earl of Queensberry in 1633; that title came from a high hill in Closeburn Parish, Dumfriesshire. He must have been Baron of Hawick in 1627 when it is stated that several men conscripted into the army were his 'men and servants' and so should perhaps be sent to join his brother, Sir James Douglas of Mouswald. He is recorded paying the vicarage and parsonage teinds of Teviotdalehead to the Earl of Buccleuch for 1627–33. He married Isabel Kerr, daughter of Mark, Earl of Lothian (the marriage contract being in 1603) and was succeeded by his eldest son James. Another son, Sir William of Kelhead had descendants who would take over the Queensberry line later. He also had children: Archibald of Dornock; George, who died unmarried; Margaret, who married James, Earl of Hartfell; and Janet, who married Thomas, Lord Kirkcudbright. The funeral of his wife Isabel Kerr, was an elaborate affair, the procession going from St. Giles in Edinburgh down to Holyrood House. William (1589–1660) 1st Marquess of Douglas, he was eldest son of William, 10th Earl of Angus, and became 11th Earl of Angus in 1611. He was a Catholic, like his father, and was deeply embroiled in the politics of Scotland in the 17th century. In 1616 he had permission from James VI to leave the Kingdom for his health. In 1617 his Bailies were Douglas of Bonjedward and Douglas of Cavers, when they promised on his behalf to be answerable for the inhabitants of Jedforest. In 1630 he had a retour as full heir to Archibald, 8th Earl. He was created Marquess of Douglas in 1638 and was a Lieutenant on the Borders. He was recorded as owner of Swinnie, Old Jedburgh, Lintalee, etc., as well as 'his lands of Jed Forrest, being four-score steids', according to the 1643 valuation rolls. He escaped from the Battle of Philiphaugh in 1645 and was later fined by Cromwell. He was probably the Marquess of Douglas recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 paying £366 13s 4d in Southdean Parish. He married Margaret Hamilton, daughter of Lord Paisley, and secondly married Mary, daughter of George Gordon, Marquess of Huntly. His children included: Archibald, 1st Earl of Ormond, whose son James became 2nd Marquess of Douglas; William; James; William, 1st Earl of Selkirk; George, 1st Earl of Dumbarton; James; Margaret, who married William, Lord Alexander; Jean, who married John Hamilton, 1st Lord Bargany; Grizel, who married Sir William Carmichael of that Ilk; Henrietta, who married James Johnstone, 1st Earl of Annandale; Catherine, who married Sir William Ruthven of Dunglas; Isabel, who married William Douglas, 1st Duke of Queensberry; Jane, who married James Drummond, 4th Earl of Perth; Lucy, who married Robert Maxwell, 4th Earl of Nithsdale; and Mary. William (16th/17th C.) son of Martin of Tofts. He is recorded in 1617 (along with his father) in letters confirming their earlier receipt of the teinds, parsonage and vicarage of Kirkton. In about 1621 he was infetted in the lands of 'Pit-tilesheuche' by the Commendator of Melrose. He may be the William of Tofts who wrote a eulogic poem about Robert Kerr, 2nd Earl of Lothian in about 1624, and who was said to be involved with Kerr's wife, Annabella, Countess of Lothian. He is probably the Douglas of Tofts mentioned in a document of the Bishop of Aberdeen in 1622, also relating to Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was also recorded in about the same time as brother of Archibald of Lumsden. He may be the unnamed Laird of Tofts whose lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £300 in 1643. It is unclear how this branch is connected with local Douglasses. William of Bonjedward (d.c.1636) probably son of George, it is unclear exactly when he succeeded his father. In 1597 he was 'of Boun Jedward, youngar' when he signed a bond with William, 10th Earl of Angus. He was 'Fiar of Bonjedward' in 1597. He was probably the 'lard of Bonejedburgh younger' who was among some Scottish prisoners taken from a large group who went into England to go hunting; he was released soon afterwards. He was 'fear of Bonejedburgh' in 1602 when he signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace; he was probably also the Laird of Bonjedward who was a Bailie for William Douglas, Earl of Angus, promising to be answerable for the inhabitants of Jedforest. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to apprehend Andrew and Cuthbert McDougall in Stanedge for the murder of Fergus Lorraine and to try them in Jedburgh; however, Andrew Ker asked for him to be replaced, since there was 'no speeches nor freindship betuixt' them. Also in 1618 he was probably the Douglas of Bonjedward listed among commissioners appointed by the King to keep law and order in the 'Middle Schyires'. He served as Justice Convener for Roxburghshire, and was charged in 1628 with holding courts in Jedburgh and elsewhere. He was listed in 1628 as one of the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for the county. In 1632 he was Convenor of the Sub-commissioners for the Presbytery of Jedburgh. He may be the William ('of blank') listed as owner of lands valued at £195 in Cavers Parish in 1643. He appears in a document of 1633 relating to Sir John Auchmuty of Gosford. He married Rebecca, daughter of Sir John Drummond of Hawthornden in 1600. He may also have married her sister, Elizabeth. His children included: George, who succeeded; Rev. John (d.1671), minister of Yetholm and Crailing; Thomas (d.1672); Rev. James (d.1665), minister of Hobkirk; and Mary, who married John of Timpendean in 1632. Sir William (d.c.1658) 9th of Cavers, son of Sir James. He was 'fiar of Cavers' in 1612 when he served as cautioner for John Rutherford in Jedburgh and Richard Rutherford in Littleheuch not to harm Lord Roxburghe and others. He is probably the William, feuar of Cavers, who received the teinds of Kirkton from the minister in 1617. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to try 2 murderers in Jedburgh. Also in 1618 he was probably the Douglas of Cavers listed among commissioners appointed to keep law and order in Teviotdale. In 1619 he was appointed as a Commissioner 'within the boundis of Jedburgh Forrest', for dealing with idle and incorrigible persons. He is probably the Douglas of Cavers who sold Corrisike, Langbyre, Giddenscleuch and part of Caerlenrig to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1620. He may be the Douglas of Cavers who in 1621 was directed to answer 'for some irreverent wordis against Sir William Seatoun'. He is probably the 'fear of Cavers' recorded in 1622 when sheep were stolen from his lands of 'Hairlesyd' and Langside. He acted as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for the Parliaments of 1612 (when still 'younger'),

1617, 1621, 1628–33, 1639–40, 1644, 1645–46 and 1650. He was also a member of the Privy Council of Scotland in the 1640s. In 1617 he entered into a negotiation with James VI over surrender of the Sheriffship of Cavers to the Crown, but nothing was resolved at that time. Following a decree of 1620 he arranged to give up the Sheriffship and the tiends of Cavers Kirk for the sum of £20,000 Scots. However, he complained in 1633 that he had only been paid £4,000, and Parliament agreed to let him keep the office until full payment had been made (and in fact the family were Sheriffs until the final abolition of such offices in 1747). The record he made still exists of the proceedings for the 1628 election of M.Ps. (or 'Commissioners') for Roxburghshire, including a list of all the major landowners of the county. In 1629 he was served heir to his maternal great-grandfather William Cranston of that Ilk (although it is unclear what lands he thereby gained). He became a Burgess of Edinburgh 'gratis' in 1630. He was a cautioner for Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and was recorded as cautioner for George Douglas of Bonjedward in a marriage contract with the Murrays of Elibank in 1632. In early 1638 he was one of the local men given special powers to attempt to stop the spread of the plague. In 1638, as a Kirk Elder, he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the 'Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union' (i.e. the 'Covenant'), and as Sheriff of Teviotdale he led the Hawick signing of the document that was afterwards preserved at Cavers. In 1639 he was one of the Commissioners of the Scottish army sent to negotiate with Charles I. In late 1640 he commanded the advance guard of the Covenanters army that was sent to Newcastle, where they were surprised to be welcomed as friends. In 1640–41 he was in England on state business, missing 2 sessions of the Scottish Parliament. In 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being 'notorious criminalls, theeves and ressetters of thift', and was appointed one of the assessors to the Justice General for these courts. Also in 1642 he gained Burnmouth, 'Greina' (Greenholm perhaps) and 'Puriven' in Liddesdale from Douglas of Spott. In 1643 he was appointed to a 'commissioner for the establishment of manufactories'. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £5344 6s 8d, in Kirkton at £1480 (for Kirkton, Effledge, Whitriggs and East Middle), in Hobkirk £171 and in Castleton at £420. In 1643 he was one of the 2 Convenors of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire, and he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644, 1646 and 1648. He commanded a regiment of horse, who defeated a force from the north of England on their march to join James Graham, Marquess of Montrose in 1646 and was also one of the Commissioners for trying the followers of Montrose. In 1647 he and his son Archibald were confirmed by Charles I in the office of Sheriff for their natural lives. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1650 he was named one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He married Ann (or Anne), daughter of William Douglas of Whittinghame and was succeeded (briefly) by his son Sir Archibald. His other children were: John of Gervald; and Helen, who married Sir William Bruce of Stenhouse. Agnes, recorded in 1663 as sister of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, was probably also his daughter (and may have been the same as Helen). William (17th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Friarshaw. He married Janet Scott before 1649 and had 3 sons: Henry in Nether Prieston; George, living in 1680; and William, also recorded in 1680. William (d.c.1672) described as an advocate in 1672 when his son James was served heir to his Lordship and Barony of Jedforest (i.e. he was superior of lands in Southdean). He was probably related to the Marquesses of Douglas, who had held this Barony shortly before him. However, he may have died by 1684 when his sisters Margaret and Jean inherited the same Lordship and Barony. Sir William (d.1676) 11th of Cavers, son of Sir Archibald. He may have been the Sir William, 'younger of Cavers' who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1649 (but his brother Sir Archibald would have been the heir apparent at that time). He was removed as Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1662 when he refused to take the Test, thereafter encouraging and protecting Covenanters. He was also cited for appointing a private chaplain and tutor who was not licensed by the Bishop. In 1659 he married Katherine, daughter of Thomas Rigg of Atherne and Eupham Money Penny (who remarried to Sir John Scott of Scotstarvit); she was 'the Good Lady Cavers', who was indicted for similar crimes after his death and imprisoned for several years (as described in the 1851 book 'The Ladies of the Covenant'). According to the marriage contract his father resigned his lands and titles to him, this being confirmed in an 'instrument of resignation' of 1662. In 1676 he was fined for having a chaplain who was not licensed by the Bishop. He was declared an outlaw, but died before any actions were taken against him. He was succeeded by his sons Sir William and then Archibald. His younger sons were John, James and Thomas (who was born after his death, and whose grandson George continued the family line). His son William was not served as his heir until 1687. William of Coliforthill (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He paid the land tax on £266 13s 4d in Cavers Parish in 1678. This was the same land owned by William Gledstains of Coliforthill in 1643 and that would be owned by Archibald Douglas of Adderstone by 1688. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglasses. William (17th C.) tenant of the Cavers estate. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers (also William Douglas), returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He may be the same man as William in East Middle. William (d.c.1687) tenant in East Middle. His will is recorded in 1687. He was surely related to Andrew, who was recorded at the same farm in 1685. William recorded in Middle in 1720 may be related to him. William of Timpendean (d.c.1688) son of John and Mary Douglas, he was the 7th Laird. In 1655 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Lanton. He is recorded on the Land Tax Rolls for Timpendean in 1663. In 1655 he married Alison, daughter of John Turnbull of Minto and Elizabeth Eliott of Stobs. Their children were: John, who succeeded; Elisabeth; Andrew, who married Helen Scott in Jedburgh; William; Robert John; George; and Alison. His wife may be the Lady Timpendean who was fined £1400 as a Covenanter, for refusing to attend her parish church. William (17th C.) son of Rev. James, minister of Hobkirk and grandson of William of Bonjedward. In 1669 he was served heir to his father's lands of Newhall in the parish of 'Boldoun' (perhaps Soudon). He also succeeded to Plewlands, which are probably the lands of that name in Hobkirk Parish. William (17th C.) listed as 'carrier in Kirkwynd' among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the William listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He may be the William who was fined by the Magistrates in 1689 for his 'exorbitant' wedding with the daughter of Thomas Lunn. This was against the new Act of Parliament, limiting the cost of the marriage feast. He would be the deceased William, 'sometimes carier in Hawick' whose daughter Margaret married William Martin (servant at Winningtonrig) in 1719. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Hart in 1684 and another for John Scott 'Wyndheid' in 1685. Sir William of Cavers (d.1698) 12th Laird, eldest son of Sir William. He was removed from the care of his mother, Katherine Rigg, after she was cited for supporting the Covenanters. He was then placed under the care of tutors appointed by the Privy Council, these including Sir William Elliott of Stobs, his uncle Thomas and 2 other Douglasses. There is an undated bill (c.1670s) brought by him and his tutors William and Thomas Elliot against Adam Urquhart of Meldrum. In 1678 he is probably the William of Cavers who paid the Land Tax (along with his grandmother, presumably wife of Sir Archibald, Rachel Skene) on £7694 in Cavers Parish and £1480 in Kirkton Parish. He was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters (despite his family's loyalties). He must have been the William who was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1684. He was not served heir to his father until 1687 (presumably because of the changing political situation), this including extensive lands in Cavers Parish and the Rule valley, as well as a few elsewhere (e.g. Carlaverock Kirk). He was an officer in the Scots Greys, being Captain in 1689 (when the regiment was commanded by another Sir William Douglas). In 1689 he was also appointed Lieutenant Colonel in the local Militia regiment. He was Sheriff Principal of Roxburghshire and was appointed as an additional Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1690, serving until his death. He was also Convenor of the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and was a Commissioner in 1690. He may be the Sir William mentioned in Dalrymple's 'Memoirs' when his French Protestant wife was forbidden from leaving France by Louis XIV in 1685. He left the army in 1694 when his regiment went to Flanders. In about 1690 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Douglas of Newcastle. Dying without an heir, he was succeeded by his brother Archibald. His widow later married Sir A. Home. William (1635–94) 4th son of William, 11th Earl of Angus. In 1646 he was created Earl of Selkirk, as well as Lord Daer and Shortcleuch. In 1656 he married Anne, Duchess of Hamilton, eldest daughter of James, 1st Duke of Hamilton. In 1660 he was created, for his life only, Duke of Hamilton. He resigned the Earldom of Selkirk to his son Charles in 1688. He was succeeded as Duke of Hamilton by his eldest son James (1658–1712), who was killed in a duel. His other sons were: William, who died in France; Charles (1663–1739); John (1665–1744); George (1666–1737); Basil (1671–1701); and Archibald (1673–1754). William 1st Duke of Queensberry (1637–95), eldest son of James the 2nd Earl. He succeeded his father as 3rd Earl in 1611. In 1665 he is recorded as William, Lord Drumlanrig, when the Scottish Parliament agreed to his request to allow 2 additional yearly fairs in Hawick, and also to grant him remission for the valuation of his Barony of Hawick. By 1667 it is clear that he was already seeking legal opinion over his powers as a superior in the Barony of Hawick. In 1669 there was an Act in his favour for 2 additional yearly fairs at Hawick. In about 1672 (i.e. shortly after he succeeded his father) it appears that he or his agents proposed that the Common of Hawick be divided between him and the Burgh, but this came to nothing, and so presumably was resisted by the Town (although the surviving draft of the Hawick Commission leaves it unclear who started the proposal). In 1673 he brought an extraordinary (and frivolous) case against the Bailies and inhabitants of the Town (with 32 men named), complaining to the Privy Council that his Bailie in Hawick was attacked when he was trying to 'set the fair'; the Hawick Bailies countered by stating that this was a 'groundless libel' brought because of an ongoing dispute between the 2 parties. It is clear that the relationship between the Town and its Baron had completely broken down at that time. However, in 1675 he lost the Barony and lands (although he kept the title of Baron of Hawick), which were granted to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in 1675, ending about a century and a half of control of the Barony of Hawick by the Douglas family. He was appointed Justice General of Scotland in 1680, made Extraordinary Lord of Session in 1681 and in 1682 was raised to the Marquisate, made High Treasurer and appointed Constable and Governor of Edinburgh Castle. His titles already included Earl of Drumlanrig and Sanchar, Viscount of Nith, Torthorwald and Ross, as well as Lord Douglas of Kinmont, Middlebie and Dornoch, and the family additionally held the title of Baron of Hawick and Tibbers. In 1684 he was made Duke of Queensberry. James II appointed him High Commissioner in 1685. But soon afterwards he argued with the crown over the repeal of laws against Catholicism and was deprived of his offices. He then retired and focussed on re-building Drumlanrig Castle, most of the work there being in the period 1679–91. Back in favour, he became Lord of Session again in 1693. He introduced a set of instructions for Scottish High Commissioners, which mostly became Acts of Parliament; this included the Act ‘declaring all preaching at Conventicles in houses (as well as in fields) to be death in the preacher, and banishment and great fines in the hearers and landlords’. Additionally he introduced an instruction that prisoners being sent to the colonies who did not recognise the King’s authority were to have an ear cut off, and he was also said to have brought into use a steel thumbscrew that was used to extract confessions. He is probably the Duke of Queensberry who contributed £3000 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He married Isabel, daughter of the Marquess of Douglas and was succeeded by his son James, the 2nd Duke. His other children were: William, Earl of March; Lord George (d.1693); and Anne, who married David, Earl of Wemyss. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Kirkton on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Probably the same William was listed among the tenants of Douglas of Cavers who complained about punitive rental demands in 1684, part of punishment against Lady Douglas and her support of Covenanters. William of Cunzier-ton (17th/18th C.) paid the land tax on £440 in Oxnam Parish in 1678. He was Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. In that same year there is a marriage contract between his sister Christian and Hugh Scott of Gala, preserved among the papers of the Douglasses of Cavers. It seems likely he was a near relation of the Cavers branch. Cunzier-ton lies between Oxnam and Hownam. William of Bonjedward (d.aft. 1705) probably son of George. He is mentioned as Laird in 1685, 1695 and 1704. He was probably the Douglas of ‘Bonjedburgh’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. In 1670 in Jedburgh he married Margaret Scott, and in 1699 in Jedburgh (perhaps also recorded in Ashkirk Parish) he secondly married Beatrix Scott. His children with Margaret Scott included: George, who succeeded; Rev. Walter (b.1674), minister of Linton and member of the General Assembly; and probably Isobell (b.1677), Charles (b.c.1679) and Marion (b.1683). His children with Beatrix Scott included: John (b.1705), who was baptised in Hawick Parish; and Isabella (b.1703), also baptised in Hawick. His connection with Hawick is not clear, but perhaps his wife was from there, and possibly the ‘Auld Wat’ Scott who witnessed the baptism in 1705 could have been his father-in-law. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Scott. Their children included: Helen (b.1687); and James (b.1702). The witnesses to Helen’s baptism were James Scott and James Douglas, who may have been related to the parents. William (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for John Irvine in Hawickshiel in 1696. William of Nether Prieston (17th/18th C.) elder son of Henry and descended from the Douglasses of Friarshaw. His lands were in Midlem Parish. In 1691 he married Mary, daughter of Simon Halliday from Selkirk and before 1707 he secondly married Janet Bonnington. His children included: George (b.1700); Andrew (b.1707); and Robert (b.1710). William ‘Skail the Mercat’ (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘merchant in Hawick distinctionis causa called Scail the mercat’ in a baptismal record of 1706. His nickname presumably meant ‘disperse the market’, but it is unclear what its origin might have been. He is perhaps the same merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the William listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He married Marion Lunn and their children included: Helen (b.1701); John (b.1703); and Bessie (b.1706). The witnesses in 1706 were Walter Wilson and Walter Oliver (both fellow merchants). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1694), John (b.1696), James (b.1699), Walter (b.1701), Margaret (b.1703), William (b.1706), Agnes (b.1707), and Thomas (b.1707). 2 families may be represented here. Some of Andrew (b.1708), Bessie (b.1709), Janet (b.1709), an unnamed son (b.1712), Robert (b.1712), Elspeth (b.1713), Elspeth (again, b.1718) and Archibald (b.1718) could also be his children. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Glendinning in Hawick in 1705. William (17th/18th C.) married Jean ‘Irwin’ in Hawick Parish in 1710. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at ‘new mains’ in 1716 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. William (17th/18th

C.) described as 'packman' in 1716 when there were complaints made against him and John Ruecastle for sitting in seats in Hawick Kirk that were meant to be assigned to the incorporated trades. Apparently they even broke open the door to the 'Weaver's Loft' when it was locked. William (17th/18th C.) Sheriff Officer in Hawick. He married Bessie Scott. This happened shortly before the death of Rev. Alexander Orrock. There is a record in late 1711 of him receiving back the 'consignation money' which had been 'panded' for his marriage, having been distributed to the poor by Rev. Orrock on hearing that 'some women in ye toun did drink their quarts of Ale apiece at ye making of ye Bed'. He was 'officer' in 1714 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Elliot. William (17th/18th C.) married Helen Redford in Wilton in 1713. William of Timpendean (1684-c.1730) son of John, he was the 9th Laird. He was Bailie of the Baron Court of Nisbet in 1715. He was present during the drunken meeting in the Black Bull in Jedburgh after the election of 1726 in which Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs killed Col. Stewart of Stewartfield. In 1718 he married Jean, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston (as her 2nd husband), and she died in 1748. His children included: Archibald (b.1718), who succeeded; Susanna (b.1718), eldest daughter, who married Robert, son of Sir John Clerk of Penicuik in 1740; John; Euphan or Euphemia, who married George Balderstone in 1737; and William. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He was 'in Middle' in 1720 when his daughter Janet was baptised. William (b.1723) may also have been his son. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in 'Rig', i.e. Winningtonrig. His son Gilbert was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. William (17th/18th C.) recorded being 'in Denholm' in 1721 when his son John was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Presumably he used to live in Kirkton Parish, and may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (d.bef. 1744) tenant in Minto Kames. He had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1743. He was deceased by 1744 when John (Burgess of Selkirk) and John (tenant in Minto Kames) acted as tutors for his youngest son William. They were still acting as tutors in 1749 in another discharge with Selkirk. William of Cavers (d.1748) 14th Laird of Cavers, eldest son of Archibald. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire, elected in 1715, 1727, and again in 1742, remaining as M.P. until 1747. There were gaps in the years 1722-27 (when Sir Gilbert Elliott was Roxburghshire M.P.

and he was M.P. for Dumfries Burghs) and 1734-42 (when John Rutherford was M.P.). He became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1715, by right of his father Archibald. He was Keeper of the General Register of Hornings in 1728 and Storekeeper of the Customs House, Ireland. In 1739 he and his father were among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. He had to yield up the hereditary Sheriffship to his brother Archibald, in order to remain an M.P. for the county. He died unmarried. William (18th C.) married Janet Harkness in Cavers Parish in 1720. William (18th C.) married Catherine Gilroy in Kirkton Parish in 1726. William (18th C.) married Bettie Scott in Bedrule Parish in 1732. William (18th C.) married Janet Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1733. William (18th C.) resident of Spittal in 1733 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. Perhaps the same William was in Spittal in 1744 when his daughter Helen was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Eastcote in 1733 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th C.) married Helen Middlemas in Wilton Parish in 1734. William (18th C.) resident of Earlside in 1741 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th C.) tenant in West Mains in 1745 and 1747. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish included Archibald (b.1745) and Alexander (b.1747). This was probably the West Mains in Cavers, although it is possible it was the one associated with Hawick. William (18th C.) recorded in 1761 as 'sometimes tenant in Crook'. In that year his daughter Margaret and Martha, daughter of William Douglas, late baker in Selkirk, had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. William 4th (and last) Duke of Queensberry, 'Old Q' (1725-1810). He was 3rd Earl of March, until inheriting the Queensberry titles (and huge estates), including the Lordship of Hawick, on the death of his cousin Charles. He was also created Baron of Amesbury and was Lord Lieutenant of Dumfries. In his earlier years he served as an M.P. He was known as an eccentric and for his pleasurable pursuits, which involved extravagant spending of his vast fortune. He was a patron of horse-racing, and famous for indulging in various luxuries. He lived at Neidpath Castle and was criticised for cutting down the adjacent woods (as commemorated in a sonnet by Wordsworth). He died unmarried, and his estates were the subject of litigation after his death, the titles eventually being split between 3 distant cousins: the Marquess and Earl of Queensberry, Viscount Drumlanrig, and Lord Douglas of Hawick and Tibbers descended to Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead; the Earl of March, Viscount of Peebles, Lord Douglas of Neidpath and others descended to the Earl of Wemyss; and the Duke of Queensberry, Marquess of Dumfriesshire, Earl of Drumlanrig and Sanquhar, Viscount of Nith, Torthorwald and Ross, Lord Douglas of Kinmont, Middlebie and Dornock devolved to Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. William (18th C.) youngest son of William, who was tenant at Minto Kames. He must have been a minor when his father died, since in 1744 John (Burgess of Selkirk) and another John (tenant in Minto Kames) acted as his tutors. They were still acting as his tutors in 1749 in another discharge with Selkirk. William (18th C.) resident of Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. He married Alison Thomson in 1770 and their children included: Isabel (b.1772); and Janet (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were Thomas Blyth and James Dryden. William (18th C.) resident of Moorfield in Wilton Parish. He married Mary Thomson and their children included Margaret (b.1772). The witnesses were Robert Fairbairn and Robert Thomson. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Common (or perhaps Cumming) and their children included Betty (b.1775), James (b.1777) and John (b.1780). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Nelly Redpath and their children included Elizabeth (b.1778) and Margaret (b.1780). William (18th C.) married Margaret Rae in 1781, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Cavers Parishes. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1782 when his son Robert was baptised. There are other Douglasses born around the same time who could be his children. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1795). William (b.c.1770s) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Ann Kersel, who died in 1797. Their children included William (b.1794). In the description of the ballot for the Militia in 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'. He was still on the Militia ballot in 1801. William (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Betty Tait and their children included Jean (b.1807), Helen (b.1809), Margaret (b.1811), Betty (b.1813) and Betty (again, b.1815). William (18th/19th

C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was surely from one of the local families. Sir William of Timpendean (1770–1834) son of Archibald, he was 11th Laird. He entered the army in 1786 as an ensign in the 1st Battalion of Foot, becoming a Lieutenant in 1789 and serving in the West Indies. He raised an independent company in 1793 and moved to the 6th Battalion, serving during the Irish Rebellion and becoming Assistant Quartermaster General. He helped form the 98th Regiment, was appointed Lieutenant Colonel and served in Canada, Bermuda and the coast of America. He was promoted to Colonel in 1813 and Major General in 1819. His estate of Timpendean (including parts of what had been Lanton) was valued at £866 in 1788. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1813 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls at Timpendean. He married Marianne Tattershall in 1810 in Liverpool, and she died in 1835. They had 9 children: William (c.1811–26), who died at Harrow; Helen (c.1814–74), who married Rev. Thomas Boyles Murray; Marianne (b.c.1815), who married Rev. George William Murray; Thomas (c.1816–36), who died in Edinburgh; Capt. George (1819–65), who succeeded, but sold Timpendean; Maj. Henry George Sholto (1820–1892), who was 13th of Timpendean; Frederick (1823–73), Surgeon with the rank of Major, who died in Nova Scotia; Emma (b.c.1824), who married Col. Thomas Mauborg Baillie in 1843; and William Archibald (c.1827–84), who died in Melbourne, his home there being named Timpendean. In 1843 his trustees (presumably with the agreement of his son George) sold Timpendean, Broomhall and part of Lanton to the Marquess of Lothian. William (b.1777/8) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the Fore Raw and in 1851 he was living at Kirkgate. His wife was Mary. He could be the same man as the shoemaker whose wife Ann Kersel died in 1797. He could be the shoemaker of this name recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. William (b.c.1780) servant at Courthill according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. William (18th/19th C.) glover on the Sandbed, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. William (b.c.1800) shepherd living at Leahead in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Leahead. The family seem to have disappeared after that and so perhaps emigrated. His wife was Christian and their children included William, Walter, Margaret, Mary and Elizabeth. William Scott (1815–83) born in Hawick, he was son of accountant Alexander and Isabella Scott. He was educated at Heriot's in Edinburgh and worked as a mercantile accountant. In his spare time he became an expert on the life and works of Burns. He edited 'The Complete Poetical Works of Robert Burns with Memoir' (1871, revised 1876) and the 6 volume 'Works of Robert Burns' (1877–79). He became secretary of the Edinburgh Burns Club in 1877. The widow of Robert 'Lurgie' Wilson presented to him the edition of Burns that the Ettrick Shepherd had given her husband. He married Isabella Forbes and their children included: William; Daniel; David Gordon; Isabella Scott; and Jessie Irving. He drowned off the East Pier at Leith. William (b.1882) born at Ploughlands near Jedburgh. His father was William and his mother was Margaret Waldie, sister of the tenant in Braidhaugh. He worked on the Weens estate. In 1903 he married Jane, daughter of Andrew Thomson and they had a son William (b.1806). His great-grandparents were farm servant Thomas and his wife Janet Moscrop. His grandfather was ploughman William, who died at Nisbet Mill (occasionally spelled 'Douglass' and formerly 'Douglass', 'Douglass', 'Douglass', 'Douglass', 'Dowglass', 'Dowglass', 'Dowglass', 'Dowglass', 'Dowglass', 'Dowglass', 'Dowglass', 'Dowglass', 'Duneglass', etc.).

the Douglas Airms (thu-dug-lis-ārmz) n. former name for the public house at the end of Drumlanrig Bridge, later known as the Office. It was the Douglas Arms in the early years of the 20th century, and until at least the 1930s.

the Douglas Banner (thu-dug-lis-baw-nur) n. pennon held for centuries in Cavers House, after being taken from the field of Otterburn. It is about 13 feet long, and has on it a lion passant, St. Andrews cross, 2 hearts, a mullet and the words 'Jamais arryere'. It was said to have been the standard of James, Earl of Douglas, and carried from battle by his illegitimate son Archibald, 1st of Cavers. It is now in the Museum of Antiquities in Edinburgh.

Douglas Burn (dug-lis-burn) n. stream that flows roughly south-east from Blackhouse Heights to join the Yarrow Water at Craig Douglas – 'Tarras and Dod and Douglas, Tinnis Water and Trow; To the drone of bees On the clovered leas, Would sing me a welcome now' [WL].

Douglas Court (dug-lis-kōr) n. street in Denholm where there were new houses built around 1966.

the Douglas Crypt (thu-dug-lis-kript) n. burial aisle at Cavers Old Kirk. This was formerly the altar end of the church in Pre-Reformation days. It was converted into a burial chamber for the Douglasses of Cavers in the middle of the 17th century, about the same time the church was largely reconstructed, and a Laird's Loft was added above the crypt.

Douglas Drive (dug-lis-driv) n. street in Denholm, parallel and to the south of Main Street, where new houses were built around 1966.

the Douglasses (thu-dug-li-seez) n. local landowning family, which gave Hawick its burgh status as well as its existing charter, and supplied Sheriffs of Teviotdale for generations. The 2 branches of the most importance locally are derived from 2 illegitimate sons of James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, namely William, 1st Baron of Drumlanrig and Archibald of Cavers. The Douglasses held the Barony of Hawick from the late 14th century, confirmed to Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1412. The lands remained in Douglas of Drumlanrig hands until passing to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1675. However, the title of Baron (or Lord) of Hawick remains with the family unto this day. The Douglasses held the patronage of St. Mary's Kirk in Hawick from 1447 until 1448 and again in the 17th century until 1675. The Douglasses of Cavers were there from the 14th century, with the male line dying out with the 20th Laird, although the local Palmer-Douglasses still have a connection. Almost all the Laids of Cavers were called Archibald, James or William. The Douglasses of Douglas and of Angus were significant nationally, although they had little local influence after the early 16th century. Other minor branches with local influence include the Douglasses of Bonjedward, Timpendean and Friarshaw. There were also Douglasses in early times at Hornshole, Brieryyards and the Trows. The Douglas heart represents the heart of Robert the Bruce, which was taken to the Crusades by Sir James Douglas. The family motto is 'Jamais Arrière' (never behind) – 'There circles many a legendary tale, Of Douglas' race, foredoom'd without a male, To fade, unblest'd, since on the churchyard green, Its lord o'erthrew the spires of Hassel-dean' [JL].

Douglasfield

Douglasfield (dug-lis-feeld) n. former farmstead just south of the Dearly Burn, east of Muirfield. Robert Henderson was farmer there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Douglas Haig Court (dug-lis-hāg-kōr) n. accommodation built on the site of the former abattoir, or 'Killin Hoose', at Eskdail Bank in 1976 by the Royal British Legion to provide accommodation for ex-servicemen and their dependants.

Douglashaugh Plantin (dug-lis-hawf-plawn'-in) n. plantation in the Borthwick valley, between Hoscote and Outerside.

Douglas-Hogg (dug-lis-hōg) n. Keith (1976/7–) Halberdier from 2020, his great-great grandfather was 'Elec the Bellman'. Brought up in Longcroft Crescent, he attended Drumlanrig school and the High School. He served in the Blues and Royals and then the Royal Military Police. After 22 years in the military he has worked as a social care manager with mental-health charity Penumbra. He married Claire Douglas and their children are Elie, Douglas and Hugh.

the Douglas Hotel (thū-dug-lis-hō-tel) n. former temperance hotel on the Tower Knowe, where the Office Bar is now located, also known as 'the Douglas Temperance Hotel'. In the latter part of the 19th and early 20th centuries the proprietors were Cecilia and Bessie Wight (cousins of Adam Grant's wife).

Douglas' Loup (dug-lis-eez-lowp) n. former name for a part of the Wauchope Burn to the west of old Wauchope House (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Douglas o Scotland (dug-lis-ō-sko'-lind) n. knitwear firm based at the corner of Lothian Street and Allars Bank, formerly Scott & Telfer's mill, built about 1874. The firm specialised in cashmere and other luxury garments. It started in the 1950s and went through liquidation at the end of 2005.

Douglas Road (dug-lis-rōd) n. street of private houses in the Wellogate area, built in 1903, and named after Bailie James Douglas. J.P. Alison designed one of the original houses there, a double cottage.

Douglas Road East (dug-lis-rōd-eest) n. extension of Douglas Road, joining Twirless Terrace round the hairpin bends to Weensland Road, built in 1906.

Douglass (dug-lis) n. Frederick (c.1818–95) African American social reformer. He escaped from slavery and became a leader in the abolitionist movement, noted as an orator and serving as a dramatic counter-example to slavery proponents' views on black people. He travelled through Britain and Ireland for 2 years, 1845–6, and lectured in Hawick in November 1846, his only speaking engagement in the Borders. A story was told by abolitionist George Thompson (apparently when later visiting Hawick, as recounted in the Hawick Advertiser and also in the Border Counties' Magazine of 1881) that he and Douglass had stopped off in Jedburgh around midnight on a carriage ride from Newcastle to Edinburgh, and described the comical sight of the innkeeper of the Spread Eagle there, scared to his wits end that he has seen 'the very deevil himself' when he caught sight of Douglass by the light of his candle. In Hawick he was met by the coach of Walter Wilson and spent the evening at Orchard. The Relief Kirk rescinded their offer of the use of their premises for his meeting and the Green Kirk hosted him instead, with Rev. Rodgie acting as chairman. He talked for nearly 2 hours (apparently the same speech he had previously given in Edinburgh), followed by his companion Rev. James Robertson talking for a further hour. He left Hawick the following morning, but Robertson spoke again for the following 2 nights, particularly on the issue of the Free Church supporting slaveholding churches in America. It was said that in Hawick 'Mr. Douglas was again and again cheered with an enthusiasm such as has rarely been witnessed here'. It is worth adding that his surname was picked by him after he escaped from slavery, the suggestion coming from a friend who had been reading Sir Walter Scott's 'Lady of the Lake', with the extra 's' being added as a deliberate decision to spell it differently. Although he had several editions of Scott's epic poem in his personal library, and was well acquainted with the work and its author, there is no evidence that he visited Abbotsford while he was in the Borders.

Douglas Square (dug-lis-skwār) n. main square in Newcastleton. North and South Hermitage Street runs to the north and south off the square. The Grapes Hotel is at Nos. 16 and the Liddesdale Hotel at No. 17 are also on the square. The square contains a war memorial, consisting of a granite plinth topped with the figure of a soldier in K.O.S.B. uniform. No. 8 was formerly the Crown Inn. There was also an old public pump well there.

Douglas Terrace (dug-lis-te-ris) n. name originally given to the lower houses in Wellogate

the Douglas Tragedy (thu-dug-lis-traw-jidee) n. traditional ballad telling of the death (in one version at least) of the 7 Douglas brothers. This followed the elopement of their sister Lady Margaret with Lord William, having a tragic ending near Craig Douglas farm, east of St. Mary's Loch. It was further popularised in the 1755 play by John Home – 'Lord William was buried in St Mary's kirk, Lady Margaret in Mary's choir, And from Lord William's breast there grew a red rose, And from Lady Margaret's a sweet brier' [T].

the Douglas Trei (thu-dug-lis-tri) n. chestnut tree that stood by Cavers Church until 2000. Legend said it was planted in the reign of James VI, and that if ever a limb fell a family member would die. For the last part of its roughly 600 years it was supported by wooden beams and iron chains. Another tree of perhaps the same age is still standing nearby. A local legend tells of a tunnel leading from the Warden's Tower to near here.

douk see dook

doun see doon

doup see dowp

dour (door) adj. sullen, sour in aspect, stern, severe, bleak, gloomy, obstinate, stubborn, barren – 'hei could try ti be a wee bit less dour', 'it's lookin gei dour oot there', 'Yet up he raise, the truth to tell, And laid about him dunts fu' dour ...' [CPM], 'Survey yon doure and rugged rocks, Where builds the ern, where hides the fox' [JTe], 'The winter had been driebh and dour' [HSR], 'Door an dochty, framin the view, war rankeet Naeter's Wardens o the Mairches ...' [ECS], 'In this dour job that he maun dae On land an' sea an' welkin ...' [WP], 'When Robbie first went to the schule At sums he was richt dour' [DH], 'He will wairn us o' dour dowie days, When we aa will be gled To be coosily cled In the coorsest o' hoddan grays' [WL] (also spelled 'door'; J. Telfer notes that 'Doure is a term, for any sterile rocky ground').

dour-lookin (door-loo-kin) adj., arch. having a stubborn appearance.

dourly (door-lee) adv. sullenly, glumly – '... As callants and candidates rive divots frae opposite banks And daub them dourly at yin another ...!' [DH].

dout see doot

Dove (duv) n. Henry (b.1814/5) from Edinburgh, he was listed in the 1841 and 1851 censuses as a frameworker. However, he is probably the proprietor of 'Henry Dove & Co.' listed in Slater's 1852 directory as grocers on the High Street and at Teviot Square.

Dovecot (duv-ko') n. area lying to the Hawick side of Teviothead village. The farmstead of Dovecot is on the left-hand side of the A7, where it crosses the Dovecot Burn. The area of Dovecot Brig lies on the opposite side of the Teviot.

Dovecote Croft (duv-ko'-kroft) n. name for piece of land near the head of what became Dovecote Street. This is where St. Andrew's Kirk was built in the late 19th century, on land at the corner of North Bridge Street and Union Street.

Dovecote Knowe (duv-ko'-now) n. small hill just to the south-east of Stobs Castle, with a circular plantation on it (there was presumably once a dovecote near here).

Dovecote Knowe (duv-ko'-now) n. former name for a small hill on the south side of the Teviot east of Denholm, roughly opposite Deanfoot. It is unclear precisely what hill is meant.

Dovecote Mews (duv-ko'-mewz) n. private development built on the site of the former Drill Hall at the foot of Dovecote Street in 1986.

Dovecote Park (duv-ko'-pawrk) n. former name for a field immediately west of Kilmeny, once part of Langlands estate and probably the site of a Dovecote. It was also a name used to refer to the area around and east of Dovecote Street, before it was developed into Union Street.

Dovecote Park (duv-ko'-pawrk) n. former name for a field just south-west of Timpendean Tower. No sign of the former dovecote remains.

Dovecote Street (duv-ko'-stree) n. street off North Bridge Street, with the main housing built in 1862. It is named after a Dovecote that stood there from early times and is marked on Wood's map of 1824. The bus garage was for a long time near the top of the street, and the area at the foot was known as the Drill Hall until recently, with the Evergreen Hall on the opposite side (also formerly spelled 'Dovecot').

Dovehaugh see Doveshaugh

Dove Knowe (duv-now) n. hill above Overhall Wood, reaching a height of 168 m. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Dovemount (duv-mown) n. name for the eastern part of Wilton which was previously called Easter Howlands, bounded by Wilton Crescent Lane on the west, the Heaps on the north and the lands of Wilton glebe (i.e. Mansfield) on the east and south. Presumably the name derives from this being locally up a hill frequented by doves (perhaps from a nearby dovecote) – but how it could be both a ‘mount’ and ‘howlands’ is interesting! George Haliburton acquired the lands from Robert Langlands in about 1770. In 1788 the lands were probably those listed as ‘W. Tudhope’s lands’ belonging to George Haliburton and valued at £25. Thomas Cook was living there in 1790. The lands were sold off in parts by George Haliburton and his heirs from the late 18th century. In about 1810 ‘Auld Dovemount’ was built, along with John Graham’s inn. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls George Haliburton is listed as owner, with the lands valued at £25; by about 1874 Thomas Laidlaw was owner. Sections were renamed Havelock Street and Wilton Place in 1864. Dovemount Place was named simply ‘Dovemount’ until 1874 (note also sometimes ‘the Dovemount’ and occasionally ‘Dovesmount’).

Dovemount Gairden (duv-mown’-gār-din) n. another name for Dovemount Nurseries and perhaps also applied to the gardens at the end of Princes Street. Part of the site became the location for the Youth Centre.

Dovemount Nurseries (duv-mown’-nur-sureez) n. plant nursery at Wellfield, run by John Forbes in the 1870s, before he moved to Buccleuch Nurseries.

Dovemount Park (duv-mown’-pawrk) n. name used to refer to a piece of ground used for a competition between brass bands, held in Hawick in 1875, including several from England for the first time. It is unclear where exactly the location was, but the press reported a crowd of about 6,000.

Dovemount Place (duv-mown’-plis) n. street between North Bridge Street and Wilton Hill, originally called ‘Dovemount’ after the area through which it passed and officially renamed Dovemount Place in 1874. The road was built in 1832 to connect the east end of Hawick with Wilton across the new North Bridge. A well was by the roadside for more than a century, and one of Hawick’s tolls was situated nearby. A post office at the corner with Havelcok Street closed in 1966. Note that because of the old railway station there are no houses on the east side of the street. A plaque there records improvements to the station and widening of the street.

Dovemount Toll (duv-mown’-tōl) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses. It was probably built around 1832, when the new road was built to connect Hawick and Wilton across the North Bridge. A plaque is near the site by the Leisure Centre, at the junction of Dovemount Place with Princes Street. It was also known as the ‘North Toll’ or ‘Wilton Toll’ and sometimes ‘Wilton Place North Bar’. Mary Beattie was the toll-keeper in 1841.

Dovemount Well (duv-mown’-wel) n. well just off Dovemount Place, which was one of the main sources of water in Wilton until shortly after 1855, when it was condemned after sickness and fever broke out. An inscribed stone on the grassy bank marks its site, and the outflow from its source can still be seen entering the river near the new Waverley Bridge. The water was once regarded as having medicinal properties. It collected into a trough fed by 2 pipes, which was on the north side of the turnpike road through the 18th century until 1832. In that year the North Bridge Street/Dovemount road was built, the street level was raised and the well moved to the south side of the road. It was moved again a few times as the road was altered and closed off for good when its water was blamed for sickness (also called the ‘Auld Dovemount Well’).

dover (dō-vur) v. to doze, sleep lightly, be in a daze – ‘A was juist doverin’, ‘Dissipation is a rogue, Is sometimes a dovering, At other times when cups are full, Annihilates a sovereign’ [BY], ‘O I gatte him in a dovering sta’, He will be ill to beate’ [JTe], ‘He wullna thole my feet til be muvet: he that keepes thee wullna dover’ [HSR], ‘... there’s the ancient toon o Hawick, steeple and lum an a’, doverin, already in a kind o sunny dwam ...’ [DH].

dovert (dō-vur) pp. dozed – ‘While the bridegroom taigglet, they a’ doveret an’ sleepet’ [HSR], ‘Aathings whufft an dovert bar the midges an mei’ [ECS].

Dovesford (dō-vur-furd) n. farmstead in Southdean Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as ‘Doverford’, when the farmer was James Hardie. Robert Hastie was a mason there in 1797. It is located near Camptown, and may actually be in Edgerston Parish.

Doveshaugh (duvz-hawf) n. former farmstead in Rulewater, a little to the south of Spittal Tower and west of Dykes. It was referred to in 1634 when inherited by James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh from his father; it was associated with Holm and Middle and was a 3 merkland. It was formerly within the Barony of Cavers, being on the west side of the Rule Water, but in the 18th century was listed among parts of Hobkirk Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. George Turnbull was tenant there in 1686. The farms of Doveshaughbraehead and Doveshaughmill are recorded on 18th and 19th century grave-stones. The lands were formerly part of the extensive Wells estate. James Scott was living there in 1739. Simon Armstrong was there in 1779 and John Neil was tailor there in 1799. In the 19th century there was a single farm there, by the Bedrule Bridge. Robert Elliot was there in 1851 (it first appears as ‘Dowishauch’ in 1634, and is ‘Doushaugh’ in 1739 and ‘Dovishaugh’ in 1799; its origin is probably Middle English ‘doue’ and Old English ‘healh’, simply meaning ‘the dove haugh’; it is marked ‘Dovehaugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and the same on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; it is unclear if it is related to ‘the Doocot Haugh’ near Spittal-on-Rule).

Doveshaughbraeheid (duvz-hawf-brāheed) n. former farmstead that was later part of Doveshaugh. John Fiddes was a wright there in 1788.

Doveshaughmill (duvz-hawf-mil) n. former farm on the Tower Burn, south of Spittal Tower and north-west of the main Wells estate. There was a mill there since at least the 16th century, when it belonged to the Douglasses of Cavers, was referred to as ‘Helme et Middill’ and had a fuller’s mill as well as a grain mill. Walter Cockburn and James Henderson were tenants there in 1797, when it was recorded on the list for Hobkirk Parish. It is still recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, with miller William Swanston (the mill is marked without a label on Blaeu’s c.1654 map; it is ‘Doveshaughmiln’ in 1797).

dow (dow) n., arch. a dove – ‘...behalde, thou art fair; thou hest dows’ eyne’ [HSR], ‘An’ I said, Oh that I had wings like ane dow!’ [HSR], ‘But the dow aye seeks the doocot ...’ [WL], a dear one (cf. doe, which is more common elsewhere in Scotland).

dow (dow) v., arch. to be able, ‘A downa ...’ meant ‘I cannot be bothered to ...’ – ‘...With as meikle gude English gilt, As four o’ their braid backs dow bear’ [CPM], ‘E’en crune your sang as lang’s ye dow, Let grief an’ care, Be by the neck strung in a tow, To wam’le there’ [JR], ‘...I am sae trublet that I downa speik’ [HSR] (from Mediæval English; see also downi).

Dow (dow) n. George (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1479 for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. It is unclear if his surname may be something else (since this is otherwise unknown in the area at that time). Rev. John (1785/6–1865) from Dunkeld, he was a Master at George Watson’s Hospital in Edinburgh and tutor to the family of Sir James Montgomerie

Cunningham of Corsehill. He was licensed by Ayrshire Presbytery in 1818 and ordained as minister of Largs in 1831. However, he left the Established Church at the Disruption of 1843. He remained in Largs for a few months, preaching to those who had left with him. In 1845 he became first minister of Robertson Free Kirk (‘the Snoot Kirk’), serving until 1852. He was living at Harden Cottage in 1852. He died in Edinburgh. Sheila educated in Hawick, where she was a keen debater. She then moved to the Universities of St. Andrews, Manitoba, McMaster and Glasgow, before becoming Professor of Economics at Stirling University. She was also Director of the Stirling Centre for Economic Methodology. Her research focusses on the history and methodology of economic thought, as well as on money and banking. She has also advised the House of Commons Treasury Select Committee.

dowble (dow-bul) n., v., arch. double – ‘...gif ewer he do the lyik he sall pay the dowble of the penaltie, conforme to the act, and dowble punishment’ [BR1645] (see the more modern dooble).

dowf (dowf) adj., poet dull, listless, sad, melancholy – ‘Weel, bide ye lass, but dinna die sae soon; The thought o’t maks me dowff, and out o’ tune’ [CPM] (see duiff for the local version).

dowg (dowg) n., arch. a dog – ‘...there was a man wawkin’ on afore me, wi’ a doug at his fit!’ [BCM1880], ‘...an’ wi’ a peculiar whus’le an’ cry ... he used to gather a’ the dowgs o’ the village to him’ [BCM1881] (also written ‘doug’; cf. dog).

dowie (dow-ee) adj., arch., poet. sad, melancholy, dejected, dismal, miserable, dreary, ailing – ‘Weel, lassie, nane has sic a pleasing art To cheer my thoughts, and raise my dowie heart’ [CPM], ‘It makes me dowie, sad an’ fearie, To hear them preach; While I am hearty, blythe, and cheery, When out o’ reach’ [JR], ‘But her answer aye was a dowie nay, When her friends would keenly press ...’ [JTe], ‘Ye maunna put on the black, the black, The black nor yet the dowie brown’ [JTe], ‘Ilk creature now is heartless shoolin’, Wi’ dowie tread’ [JoHa], ‘Mairatour whan ye fast, bina as the hypocrites o’ ane dowie luik’ [HSR], ‘Oh! come ye to the woodlands, For duil an’ dowie care’ [JJ], ‘In the green vale o’ Teviot, baith half-bred and Cheviot Are downcast and dowie, nae mair dae they play' [TCh], '...As dowie I gang for the Burnfit bus' [DH], '...in juist the same way as we dae in dowie November' [DH], 'There's a balm for the heart that is dowie wi' care In the sweet soothing music that floats through the air' [JJ], '...When a bobby I met looking dowie and wae' [UB], '...But the wee dowie laddie has nae hame ava' [JT] (origin uncertain; also sometimes 'dowy').

Dowie (dow-ee) n. William (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick according to the Lieutenantcy Book for 1799.

The Dowie Dens o Yarrow (thu-dow-ee-denz-ō-ya-ri) n. Border ballad, existing in several versions. Sir Walter Scott claimed that it was about the duel between John, son of Sir Walter Scott of Tushielaw, and Walter, brother of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. However, this seems less clear from other versions. Another theory is that it is about the slaying of John, son of Sir Walter Scott of Harden by the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch. It is also said to be connected with a standing stone near Yarrow Kirk. William Hamilton of Bangour wrote a poem 'The Braes of Yarrow', which is based on the ballad.

dowiest (dow-ee-ist) adj., arch. saddest, dreariest, most dismal – 'Her Callants ha'e been true in her dowiest o' days' [JEDM].

Dowswud (dowz-wud) n. former area in Hassendean Parish, precise position uncertain. It is recorded as '2 merklands of Dowiswod' in 1510/11 when given by David Scott of Hassendean to his brother Robert (probably of the Burnfoot line). In 1592 a 2 merk land there was disputed between Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill and Robert Scott of Hassendean (it is 'Dowiswod' in 1581 and 1592).

dowt (dow) n. a cigarette butt (dowp is more common locally).

dowter (dow'-ur) n. a daughter – 'there were nae dooters among her dowters', '...and she sent her dowter Lady Sybil Scott to dae'd insteid ...' [IWL] (cf. the older dochter).

Doyle (doi-ul) n. Sir Arthur Conan (1859–1930), famous Scottish writer. In 1904 he captained an M.C.C. cricket team that visited Hawick. In 1905 he gave the 'Immortal Memory' at the Con Club Burns Supper in Hawick and donated to the Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club (not the Hawick Cycling Club as sometimes reported), thereby becoming a patron. He ran unsuccessfully as a Unionist candidate for the Border Burghs in the 1906 election, giving an address to an audience of about 1800 in the Town Hall. He was also presented with Tom Scott's painting of Goldielands (now back in the Museum) as a wedding present by the local Unionists, and was officially a member of the Cycling Club in 1905. His 1911 short story 'Through the Veil' is a supernatural tale set at Trimontium and featuring some Borders accents.

drift (drift) n., poet. a drove, flock – 'And Anton Shiel he loves not me; For twa drifts of his sheep I gat ...' [CPM].

Drileth (dri-lith) n. former lands in the Barony of Cavers. The name is listed in a charter of 1511, along with 'Murelaw, Elrechill, and Denum-mains'. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. However, it is unclear where these lands were or how the name is pronounced (it is separately transcribed in 1511 as 'Driloch' and was 'Drylough' in 1687 and 1698).

the Drill Hall (thu-dril-hawl) n. former red brick building, constructed in 1889, to designs by J.P. Alsion, at the bottom of Dovecote Street for the local 4th Battalion Kings Own Scottish Borderers territorial units and used as a training centre. It was also used for other occasional purposes, such as during the Annual Congress of the Textile Institute held in Hawick in 1912. Later it saw use as a spacious dance hall in promotions organised by Stan Reid, and for other events, such as the New Year carpet bowling tournament. It was leased to the Post Office in 1971 as a sorting area and finally demolished in 1983, being replaced by the houses of Dovecote Mews. The Army also had temporary buildings to the west of there, including the Cadet Hall.

Drinkstone (dringk-stin) n. farm to the north of Hawick, reached by going straight at the 'Fower Road Ends'. It was known at least as early as the 16th century, when it was home of a branch of the Scotts. There was a dispute over possession of the lands between John Scott in Drinkstone and Robert Scott in Howford in 1535. John Scott of Drinkstone is recorded in the 1550s to 1570s. John Scott 'in Drinkston' was listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch (probably some time around 1600). Robert Scott paid land tax there for £66 13s 4d in 1663. It was part of the Buccleuch estates by 1678. The tenant there in 1694 was Robert Scott, along with James Learmonth and Robert Shortreed, with Walter Scott as shepherd. The lands became part of Wilton Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1696, John Easton in 1698, Many Scott in 1703 and Walter Scott in 1704. William Scott was tenant in 1709 and James Grieve in at least 1711–14. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 206 acres and was bounded by Easter Groundstone, Boonraw, Tandlaw, Coldhouse and Wilton Common. John Thomson was living there in 1722 and John Kersel in 1729. The farm was released from the Buccleuch Estates by John Lamb in 1744, along with a declaration about what to do if the adjacent Hassendean Common was divided. Adam Ormiston was farmer there in at least the period 1780–97. Walter Scott was a servant there in 1797 and David Scott in 1799. William Anderson was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. A ride-out to there took place in 1899 (the name is first recorded as 'Dryngstoun' in 1528/9 and 1550, 'Dringstoun' in 1535, 'Dringistoun' in 1556, 'Dringston' in 1559 'Dringgestoun' in 1574, ‘Drunkston’ in 1603, ‘Deringstoun’ in 1616 and ‘Drinkston’ in 1643; it is commonly ‘Drinkstoun’ in the 17th and early 18th centuries and is still ‘Drinkston’ in 1744; the origin is probably ‘the dreng’s or freeman’s farm’ and may imply a feudal relationship with the adjacent Boonraw).

Drinkstone Cleuch (drɪŋk-stɪn-klooʃ) n. small stream to the north-east of Drinkstone farm.

Drinkstone Cottage (drɪŋk-stɪn-koʻeej) n. cottage near Drinkstone farm. The Hogg family were living there in 1841.

Drinkstone Hill (drɪŋk-stɪn-hil) n. hill just north-west of Hawick, height 318 m, with a triangulation pillar. Before about the middle of the 18th century there was an old road that came from Teviothead over into the Borthwick valley, past Harden and behind Drinkstone Hill to Groundstone Height, avoiding Hawick. A drove road also used to follow a similar route.

Drinkwater (drɪnk-wa-tur) n. Mrs. (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish, possibly housekeeper at Minto House. In 1799 William Hill is recorded as her servant in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire.

drive a prey (drɪv-a-prā) v., arch. to drive off stolen cattle – ‘In Coquetdale, Reed and Tyne We drive a prey wi’ glee, And lunder the lubberts like swine, And wha daur meddle i’ me?’ [T], ‘The Captain of Bewcastle hath bound him to ryde, And he’s ower to Tevidale to drive a prey ...’ [T].

Dr. Mark’s Little Men (dok-tur-mawrks-liʻul-men) n. travelling orchestra of child performers from Manchester, who were very popular in the 1850s and 60s, playing at the Subscription Rooms.

drong (drɔŋ) n., arch. a droning sound – ‘Ma lang Dander ... cam ti an end ... ti the droang o the Toons clock’ [ECS] (also written ‘droang’).

drook (drook) v. to drench, soak – ‘What heaps our hearts wi’ heavy wae, An’ wi’ saut drappin’s drouks our pellit’ [JoHa], ‘Ae lambin’ nicht o’ drookin’ weather a flock o’ lambin’ men did gather ...’ [TD] (cf. drack; see also drooked and drookit).

drooked (drookd) pp., adj. drenched, soaked – ‘the Friday was aaright, bit oo aa got drooked on the Seterdi’, ‘In the simmer oo get birsled, Oo get drooked bei autumn’s rain, An then the wund turns snell yince mair, An the wunter comes again’ [IWL] (cf. drookit).

drookin (drookin) n. a drenching or soaking, often one given to a person by surprise or against their will – ‘they ganged up an gave him a drookin in the river’, ‘aabody got a drookin it the Common Ridin o 1971’, ‘... dog-luggit ... tide-merked Wi mony a drowe and drookin’ [DH], adj. soaking, wet through, drenched – ‘the terrible drookin’ wet Common Ridin’ o’ 1923’.

drookit (droo-keeʻ, -kiʻ) pp., adj. drenched, soaked – ‘the Heavens opened an oo got drookit’, ‘The riven claes, an’ droukit skins, That mony gat ...’ [RDW], ‘... for my heæd is drouket wi’ dew, an’ my loks wi’ the draps o’ the nicht’ [HSR], ‘... He soon was unca droukit craw’ [WFC], ‘... But drookit to the verra sark I couldna raise a froon’ [WL], ‘The Landlord’s poker face seems dour. He tells the tourist ‘It’s drookit stour’ ...’ [TD] (also spelled ‘droukit’, ‘drookeet’, etc.; cf. drooked).

droon (droon) v. to drown – ‘carefi it the river, A deh wa’ ee comin hyim drooned’, ‘deh droon that whusky wi witter’, ‘When a’ the lave to bed are gane, And weary toil lies droon’d in sleep ...’ [JoHa], ‘Mony waters canna slocken loefe, næther can the fluuds droon it’ [HSR], ‘Minglin’ wi’ the notes of wailin’ Droon’d by base degenerate railin’ [RK], ‘... Which Tam, puir cratur’, couldna bide, Mair like his sorrows droon’ [WFC], ‘... It’s droonin’ tae, that sets mei frettin’, In drams and yill’ [DH] (see also droonit).

Droonin Sike (droon-in-sik) n. Drowning Sike, small stream just to the east of the Maidean, which flows into Harwood Burn to eventually join the Slitrig. It is crossed by a section of the Catrail.

droonit (droo-neeʻ, -niʻ) pp., arch. drowned – ‘... promeist be him to bring haill, saif and sound to Hawick, quhilk he brak, drownit, and lossit be the way’ [BR1652], ‘... an’ that he wer drownit in the deip o’ the se’ [HSR].

droon the miller (droon-thu-mi-lur) v., arch. to add too much water to an alcoholic drink or to in cooking.

droot (drooʻ) n. a drought. There was a severe drought in Hawick (and elsewhere) in 1826, sometimes called the ‘Droothy Simmer’, and another in 1844 which brought the Town’s mills to a standstill – ‘... And brunt broon in the lang droot Are the neep shaws’ [WL].

drooth (drooth) n. thirst, dry mouth, drought, prolonged period of dry weather – ‘they sautty peanuts hev gien is a right drooth’, ‘Let drouth hae drink her dry to weet, And hungry wames hae rowth o’ meat’ [JoHa], ‘This day my fast I haena broken, I late last night my drouth did slocken’ [JoHa], ‘Ilk Oliver a drouth inherits, Leevin or dead we stick by spirits’ [WNK], ‘For daye an’ nicht thy han’ was hivie apon me:

my moustir is turnet intil the drouth o' simmer' [HSR], '... the untæmet cuddies slocken their drouth' [HSR], 'Sin' that ane that slocked Samson's drooth I' the jawbone o' the cuddie' [VW], 'C'away and slacken yer drouth and we'll drink tae the best o' dochters ...' [JEDM], 'In mony a toun I've quenched my drouth And gi'en for mony a toast the order' [GWe], 'There's mony ane that talk o' drouth When drouth they never fin', And mony a ane creates a drouth Wi' drinking late at e'en' [DA], '...an than A gaed inti a bit an slokent ma drooth' [ECS], '...Wi' the 'Paul as a bieldy Limbo Where the lost drooths Dwell' [DH], '...His is nae mealy-mooth, He's a suttendoon drooth, But his crack is aye herty and free' [WL] (also spelled 'drouth'; cf. the less common drowth).

drooths (drooths) n., pl. droughts, dry years. Probably the worst local drought in recorded history was in the summer of 1826, 'the Droothy Simmer'. 1800, 'the Dear year' also had a drought, following on a winter of heavy rains. There was another serious drought in 1723, with the Hawick Parish records stating there was to be a fast day so 'that God may be pleased in His mercy to put a stop to ye great drought ...'.

droothy (droo-thee) adj., arch. thirsty, craving alcohol – 'Hout lod! the hirin's no' begun At a'!' cries drouthy Wullie' [JoHa], 'Long fashed wi' a thriftless and drouthy guidman – Wad ha'e drucken the ocean when ance he began' [JT], extremely dry – '...the drouthy summer of 1826 brought about a change ...' [WSR], '...no least Ronnie Tait, his ancient trusty droothy crony' [IWL] (also spelled 'drouthy' and 'drouthie').

the Droothy Simmer (thu-droo-thee-simur) n. popular name for the summer of 1826, which was hot and rainless. Whitsunday (May 15th) had a downpour, then the drought set in until the first week of August. Wheat increased in yield, while oats were very stunted and the oatmeal was full of soil and sand. Water power to some mills stopped altogether, while moorland and forest fires raged throughout Britain. Hawick's rivers (as well as the Rule) almost entirely dried up, bringing the water-powered mills to a standstill (and encouraging the introduction of steam power, starting 5 years later). It caused commercial havoc, resulting in several hosiery firms going out of business. The Common Riding that year was held very late, on 16th and 17th June. Local events were dated from this year for many decades.

drop (drop) n., arch. a disappointment – 'Now that's exactly where I got a drop that raether taen iz ti the fair!' [ECS].

drope (drōp) n., arch. a measure of some kind, probably corresponding to a 'drop wecht', which corresponded to a 16th of an ounce – '...James Scott Laird's quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop, his twa unce wanted half a drop and more' [BR1676], 'Item, for six drope of Silke ...00 12 00' [BR1707].

droppit (dro-pee', -pi') pp., poet. dropped – 'but soon as he saw him, doon droppit the gun, And up stairs like lightning away he has run' [JoHa] (also drappit).

drop-scone (drop-skōn) n. a small round flat cake cooked on a griddle, called a 'Scotch pancake' in England (see also scone).

dross (dros) n. coal or peat dust, formerly used to damp down a fire – 'The power my grandeur to destroy No yellow dross from him could buy' [WNK].

drossy (dro-see) adj., poet. gross – '...where were deposited the drossy and decaying remains of a treasure the most valued by him of anything in this sublunary world' [JTe].

drove roads (drōv-rōdz) n., pl. routes used for driving sheep and cattle. There were formerly several of these passing near to Hawick, which were particularly used for driving cattle from the Highlands to the markets of northern England. They typically avoided difficult river crossings (e.g. the one passing north of Hawick into the Borthwick valley), as well as major towns and tolls. These routes became well established after the Union of the Crowns in 1603, and were well used until about the first quarter of the 19th century, when there was increased carrying trade on the improved toll roads. Hawick was a major stopping point for droves travelling between markets such as Falkirk and those around Newcastle and Carlisle. The Council forbade droves from using the Common after the Division of 1777, but in 1785 agreed to let them stop for 3 days at the Moor as part of a cattle fair held around Thorterdikes and Haggishaa in November (or perhaps October). The exact routes of the drove routes presumably changed with time, and several of them had overlapping sections. Most of the local examples can hardly be traced any more, although there are some sections that are still quite visible, e.g. at Muselee. There were at least 5 distinct drove roads that passed near Hawick: one via the Loan, the Nipknowes, Pilmuir, Pilmuir Rig, the Caa Knowe, Troutlawford, Harecleuch-head, Penchrise and over a ford near Shankend; a second came across the old 'Thief's Road' from Liddesdale (the 'Maiden's Way' may be essentially the same route) joining the existing road near Dod farm and hence up towards Hawick; a third came from Harelaw (between Lilliesleaf and Hassendean), along the north side of Bewlie Moor and Chapel Moor to Groundistone Heights, then crossing the Hawick-to-Selkirk road, passing behind Drinkstone Hill to Harden Cottage, then along the back of Borthwickshiels to Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, Milsington, Deanburnhaugh, Craik, Howpasley and over the hills into Eskdalemuir; a fourth road went from Newlands (on the Hassendean-Lilliesleaf road), passing Hassendean Common to Moorfield, then following the Hawick-to-Selkirk road until Boghall, then the 'Fower Road Ends', Stouslie, Dykeneuk, towards the Cala Burn, past Whitehaugh, Wilton Dean, turning right to Brieryhill, connecting with Overhall-Wiltonburn road, behind Highchesters Hill and by Harden Burnfoot to Borthwick Mains and on to the upper Borthwick valley; and a fifth road came over the Limekilnedge and up the Slitrig valley, crossed a ford at Newmill-on-Slitrig, passed behind Coliforthill (still marked as a drove road on the Ordnance Survey map) to join the Lover's Lane, merging with the old high road to Newcastle at Ormiston, and hence via Birneyknowe, Appotside, the Forkins and on to the Carter Bar to Newcastle or via the Note-o-the-Gate to Liddesdale. Another choice was to leave the road at Cleuch Head, passing between Wolfelee Hill and Mackside Hill to join part of the Wheel Causeway and hence via Wheelkirk and Deadwater into Northumberland. The route through the Borthwick valley could also pass through Deanburnhaugh past Girnwood, over to East Buccleuch, and on towards Eskdalemuir (partly marked on Mitchell's 1851 map of Selkirkshire), and there was another route past Muselee and over to Teviothead or Commonsides (following part of the Catrail), connecting to Hawick via Old Northhouse. There was also a piece of drove road between Spittal Tower and Dykes. The names Kinnelcuttie (in the Borthwick) and Lightpipe (on Hawick Common) may have related to places where drovers stopped for a smoke. Note that some parts of drove roads were not marked in any way, but just represented an understood right of

drowe (drow) n., arch. a cold, damp mist, drizzle – 'And the lofty hills that stand serene 'Mid sunshine, and storm, and drow, Looked down with a calm and tranquil mien, And stamped the peace of the restful scene On the townsman's toil-worn brow' [TK], 'The daggy drowe comes drifflin on' [ECS], '... dog-luggit ... tide-merked Wi mony a drowe and drookin'' [DH], 'Ah weel, my man, I dinna doobt You'll meet a canny drowe ...' [WL], particularly occurring in the phrase 'a Liddesdale drowe' – 'I have heard an old lady remark, quoting a local saw: A Liddesdul drow Weets a Tibidull [Teviotdale] man Throw and throw' [BM1933], v., arch. to drizzle – '...Into shabby broun in the rain's drowin' weet' [WL] (also written 'drow'; this was once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong).

drowth (drowth) n., arch. a drought, thirst – 'Where wi' herry and spulzie, wi' raif and wi' stouth, We stammached our hunger and quenched our drouth' [JTe] (also written 'drouth'; cf. the more common drooth).

drucken (dru-kin) adj., arch. drunken, addicted to alcohol – 'May'e plenty hae o' gospel gear, Braw godly foyes, An', odsake, Jamie, aye beware O' drucken ploys' [JoHa], 'Take my advice, though but a brute: Leave off ilk drucken, rantin' rout' [JoHa], 'Moo indeed, ye drucken auld thief that ocht tae be ashamed o' yersel' [JEDM], 'She'll ca' mei a drucken auld deevil An' try an' look roosed a' day!' [RM], 'Bousie wi flourish, My rowan beams Like a drucken bride ...' [DH], 'The wine was flowin', the haa was ringin' Wi' drucken lauchs, and the soun' o' singing' [WL], '...the bust o' Thomson which was ti be crooned as the culmination o' the ceremony bein smashed in a drucken frolic afore its erection' [IWL], 'The day is treated like a big picnic, even if for some it's a gei drucken yin' [IWL], pp., arch. drank, drunken – 'I haw druken my wyne wi' my milk ...' [HSR], 'I dinna ken how much whisky they took, mem, but they've drucken sax gang o' watter!' [V&M], '...Wad ha'e drucken the ocean when ance he began' [JT], 'A felt A cood heh drucken waeter ...till ma lugs played crack!' [ECS], n., arch. drunken people – 'An' sall begin sall begin til toober his fella-servents, an' til eet an' drink wi' the druken' [HSR].

drugget (dru-gi) n., arch. a coarse cloth made of worsted and hemp woven together. It was manufactured locally on the hand-loom in the late 18th century.

the Druids (thu-droo-idz) n., pl. ancient mystical British priest class, supposed to have been associated with the Mote and other local places. Whether they ever existed at all is debated, but certainly there is nothing to link them with Hawick. There is also sometimes claimed to be a connection between the wearing of oak leaves on Common Riding Friday and the Druids. Their supposed connection with the Mote may be entirely the fault of Sir Walter Scott – ‘Dimly he view’d the Moat-hill’s mound, Where Druid shades still flitted round’ [SWS], ‘Hawick shall triumph ’mid destruction’ Was a Druids dark prediction’ [JH], ‘It first be torn not by the plough The ancient bonny green Moat-Knowe; For sair I fear it, too, maun fall, Though reared by hands Druidical’ [AD], ‘And this snug little town that nestles down Where druid and pagan prayed ...’ [TK].

druil (dril) v., arch. to cry mournfully.

Drumbeck see Dumbreck

Drumlanrig (drum-lan-reeg, drum-lan-rig, drum-lan-dreeg) n. title of the house of Douglas, particularly applied to refer to James Douglas, who granted Hawick its 1537 charter. The lands are in Nithsdale, Dumfriesshire, about 15 miles north of Dumfries. They were owned by Douglasses since at least the early 14th century and the Barony was granted by James, Earl of Douglas, to his illegitimate son William some time in the period 1384–88; this started the line of Douglasses of Drumlanrig. The lands reverted to their superior (the Crown) several times in the 15th century and also for 32 years after the death of William of Drumlanrig at Flodden. The arms of the Douglasses of Drumlanrig was the quartered arms of Douglas and Mar, with a red bordure added, later changed to gold, on which was the red royal treasure, and their motto is ‘Forward’. The present version of the castle was constructed in the late 17th century and is owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch – ‘We’ll a’ hie to the muir a-riding; Drumlanrig gave it for providing’ [AB], ‘’Twas then Drumlanrig, generous donor, Gave (immortal be his honour!)’ ... [JH] (the origin of the name is uncertain, but possibly ‘ridge long ridge’, with the first element either Cumbric or Gaelic; note the variety of pronunciations and the huge variety of former spellings; it is ‘Drumlangrig’ in 1353/4, ‘Drumlangryg’ in 1357, ‘Drumlangrig’ in 1407 and 1412, ‘Drumlangryg’ in 1415, ‘Drumlangryge’ and ‘Dromlangryg’ in 1427, ‘Drumlangrige’ and ‘Drumlangryk’ in 1452, ‘Drumlangryg’ in 1459, ‘Drumlangrig’ in 1464/5, 1479 and 1484, ‘Drumlangryk’ in 1491/2, ‘Drumlanrik’ in 1494, ‘Drumlangrig’ in 1501 and 1502, ‘Drumlanark’ in 1511, ‘Drumlangrig’ and ‘Drumlanryk’ in 1514, ‘Drumlanerk’ in 1536/7, ‘Drumlanark’ in 1557, ‘Drumlangrig’ in 1615 and ‘Drumlenrick’ in 1661).

Drumlanrig (drum-lan-reeg, drum-lan-dreeg) n. popular name for Drumlanrig School and surrounding area (many different pronunciations exist).

the Drumlanrig Bar (thu-drum-lan-reeg-bawr) n. pub at 29–31 Drumlanrig Square.

Drumlanrig Brig (drum-lan-reeg-brig) n. Drumlanrig Bridge, the main bridge over the Slitrig, originally called Slitrig Bridge. It was built by public subscription in 1776–77, with stone from a Bedrule quarry, and formed of two flat arches. It made a dramatic improvement to the town, giving greater accessibility between the eastern and western parts than had been possible with the neighbouring Auld Brig and the route through Silver Street. On completion there was a public procession of the town’s piper, the drums and fifes, the Magistrates, Council etc., with a speech on the bridge made by Bailie Hardy while the Cornet James Richardson waved the Flag on top of the bridge. Although a great improvement, it was still quite narrow, being the width of a cart, with a recess on either side. It was widened in 1828 to facilitate the market which met there. Then it was further widened to a triple width structure in 1900, with the stone parapet replaced by ornamental ironwork. This was redesigned after structural strengthening in 1978. The 50th mile-stone from Edinburgh used to stand on the northern parapet.

Drumlanrig Castle (drum-lan-reeg-kaw-sul) n. castle in Upper Nithsdale in what was formerly Dumfriesshire, this was originally the home of the ‘Black’ Douglas family, with the present castle being built in 1679–1691 by William Douglas, the first Duke of Drumlanrig and 3rd Earl of Queensberry. On the death of the 4th Duke of Queensberry the Castle and the Queensberry title passed to the Dukes of Buccleuch, becoming one of the four major Scottish houses they owned (the name comes from the spur of a ‘drum’ or ‘long ridge’ on which the castle is built).

Drumlanrig Court (drum-lan-reeg-kōr) n. development off the left-hand side of Drumlanrig Square, constructed in 2001.

Drumlanrig Home

Drumlanrig Home (drum-lan-reeg-hōm) n. another name for Drumlanrig Hospital.

Drumlanrig Hospital (drum-lan-reeg-hos-pi'-ul) n. the poor-house, turned into an old-folks hospital, situated off a drive at the top left-hand corner of Drumlanrig Square. The building was constructed in 1856/7. It is a 2-storey, 11-bay construction on a rectangular plan, built with whinstone, with red sandstone dressings. It was built to hold 133 inmates, at a cost of £4,000. In WWI it was used as an army hospital. In the 1930s it was renamed Drumlanrig Poor Law Institution and later became a geriatric hospital. It closed in 1994, with many of the residents moving to St. Margaret's or Crumhaugh House. It was converted into flats in 2009/10. A gable contained stonework saved from the Buccleuch Memorial, which was removed during the latest renovations. It is a grade B listed building.

Drumlanrig Place (drum-lan-reeg-plis) n. street in the West End, joining the north side of the Loan a little higher up than the Mote. It was built in 1850–55 and named after the Douglasses of Drumlanrig. The corner of the street used to have a public well with water coming from Haggishaa and Dodburn. On the Saturday of the Common Riding the Drums and Fifes stop here after leading the mounted procession up the Loan, and they play Teribus as the riders pass.

Drumlanrig Quadrilles (drum-lan-reeg-kwad-reelz) n. piano tunes written by William Laidlaw and arranged by R.W. Manning, published in 1886 by Adam Grant.

Drumlanrig Schuil (drum-lan-reeg-skil) n. Drumlanrig and St. Cuthbert's Primary School, on the Loan. It started as the Hawick and Wilton Industrial School, built in the West-End around 1855. It was supported by the Duke of Buccleuch at the suggestion of Rev. Dr. MacRae. It was taken over by the new School Board in 1872 and a new school was built in 1873 by public subscription in a field behind Nos. 13 and 15 Loan, being renamed Drumlanrig. The small school associated with West Port Church merged with it in 1875. The pupils from St. Cuthbert's School joined in 1956, when the name was extended. The school was entirely rebuilt starting in 1960, with several more recent additions. School Inspectors' Reports for 1874–1953 are in the National Archives. The earliest known photograph of the school is from about 1906. James Ker was Headmaster from 1860, John Fowler from 1860 and Basil Wilson in the mid-1900s.

Drumlanrig's Toor

Drumlanrig's March (drum-lan-reeg-mawrch) n. name used for the song or tune 'Teriodin' in the 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson).

Drumlanrig Square (drum-lan-reeg-skwār) n. open area between the Howegate and the Loan, known as 'the Raws' prior to 1886 when it was the site of the Fore Raw, the Back Raw and the Mid Raw. J.P. Alison designed some houses there, particularly at Nos. 26 and 31 in about 1891 and No. 16 in 1901. It changed considerably with demolition at the end of the 19th century and with the construction of the gardens, clock and Brown Fountain in the centre in 1910. Since then it has popularly been known as 'the Square'. Eildon Housing carried out extensive renovations on the south side of the Square in 1997. It has housed several pubs, including the Drumlanrig Bar and Barclay's currently, as well as other businesses (named after Douglas of Drumlanrig, the 'generous donor').

Drumlanrig's Toor (drum-lan-reegz-toor, -tow-ur) n. the oldest building in Hawick, being a fortified 'L'-shaped tower dating mainly to the 1550s, surrounded by later building work, particularly from the 18th century. There is also some evidence of an earlier building on the site, which probably replaced the Baron's wooden tower on the Mote, perhaps in the 14th century. Depending on the age of the first construction, it was probably built for either the Lovels or the Douglasses. It is possible this was the 'tower between the bridges' referred to in 1507/8 as a property of the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Whitchesters (in which case that would be the earliest specific record). It may also be the same as the tower belonging to the Laird of Buccleuch that was burned in the English raid on Hawick in 1547/8. It is sometimes also referred to as 'the Black Tower', which may be connected to it surviving one of the times that Hawick was burned (however, there may be other explanations). As the most prominent Hawick building, it has served many purposes. In 1562 the King arranged for a court to be set up in the Tower which sentenced 20 'criminals' to be drowned in the Teviot. The Scotts of Branxholme took up residence there temporarily from 1570, after Branxholme was blown up by the English. The tower was then used as a holding place for criminals, the prison later being converted to the wine cellar of the inn. The Scotts of Buccleuch took over the tower (and the lands around Hawick) in 1671. Covenanters (led by Thomas Turnbull of Stnadhill) successfully laid siege to it in 1679, in order to take the militia arms stored within. It was then derelict until about 1701. Anne Duchess of Buccleuch had the Tower renovated, particularly in 1702–04, turning it into a major residence. It was extended to its present proportions and used as a country retreat from the main family seat at Dalkeith. It was used by troops during the Jacobite rebellions of 1715 and 1745 when they passed through the town. It was repaired in 1730–32, and when the Duke of Buccleuch paid tax for 42 windows in Hawick in 1748 that was probably for the Tower. By about 1750, with the Scotts moving to Bowhill, it was abandoned as a town house; there is an inventory of the Duke's furniture and pictures there in that year and again in 1756. In 1773 (or perhaps 1771) it was converted into an inn, with Michael Stevenson as the first landlord, running successfully for two centuries. Probably around this time the additional stables and other buildings were added in the back. Robert Armstrong was landlord in the 1790s, followed by Billy Brown. In the early 19th century the walls were thinned as part of renovations, the material being used to build part of a spinning mill. From about 1760 until 1862 it was the staging post for the main stagecoach from Carlisle to Edinburgh. The Tower was also the focus of unrest associated with the county elections of 1832, 1835 and 1841, when it was the main polling station in Hawick. It was sold by the Buccleuch family in 1935 and run as a private hotel, later becoming part of the North British Hotels chain. A plaque was unveiled by the Dowager Duchess of Buccleuch in 1951, stating that 'Incorporated within these walls is the Black Tower of Drumlanrig'. The stabling area became Croall Bryson's garage and was also used for a while by the ambulance service. By the 1970s it had fallen into a state of disrepair and was closed as a hotel in 1981, being purchased by the local authority in 1985. It was renovated from 1991 by Gray Marshall Associates for the Scottish Historic Buildings Trust and reopened in 1995 as a visitor attraction. 'Drumlanrig's Tower Tourist and Information Centre' contained displays focussing on the history of Hawick, the area and the tower, as well as a gift shop. Parts of the earlier building are now uncovered, including a vaulted cellar and the baronial hall. Much of the garage area was redeveloped to make Lovel Court in the early 1990s. In 2010 the tower was renovated again as the 'Borders Textile Towerhouse', with a focus on textiles history. A plaque outside marks the visit of Sir Walter Scott with the Wordsworths in 1803, and the iron door knocker bears the date 1677. It was in former times extensively used for events during the Common Riding, and some of those uses have been resumed – 'The grey old walls of Drumlanrig's tower Rang out with a heartening cheer' [JBB], '... Enduring as her ancient moat Or dark Drumlanrig's tow'r' [JI], '... To share the gen'rous feast and quaff the goblet bright, Within the storied walls of old Drumlanrig's Tower' [JEDM].

Drumlenrig (drum-len-reeg) n. Drumlanrig, often referring to Drumlanrig School and surrounding area (note that multiple pronunciation variants exist).

drumlie (drum-lee) adj., arch. muddy, turbid, cloudy, discoloured (especially of a river in spate) – 'But we must wade the ford repentance, Tho' deep and drumly it should be' [BY], 'Eh whow! Bit ma een are drumlie ...' [RM], 'Before the sheep had made the water 'drumly , or again after it had cleared ...' [BM1905], 'Guid ale keeps the heart aboon, Better far than drumlie water' [GWe], 'Thro'we drumly foreign dub and clairt ...' [DH], 'The waters o' the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill ...' [WL], also of the weather, dark, gloomy (also spelled 'drumly').

drummer (dru-mur) n. in former times the duty of one of the Burgh Officers was to beat the drum around the town to announce proclamations, to 'drum out' criminals, etc. Specifically he would parade the town daily at 5 a.m. and 10 p.m. (the times being recorded as 4 a.m. and 8 p.m. in 1729). In 1672 the Bailies requested that the Bailie of Regality use the Town's own drummer and piper to 'set the fair' (rather than those from another town). He would also lead processions at the Common Riding, with the town supplying ribbons to decorate his coat. He would additionally announce public sales at the church door. At Christmas it was traditional for the drummer and bellman to go round the town collecting money for themselves for ringing the bells (with it being recorded in 1721 that the 'drummer is allowed ten shillings yearly and his Yuill wages'). All of these duties ended in the early 19th century, with the last 'drumming out of town' happening in 1824. However, town drummers continued as part of the Drums and Fifes band. Note that in 1703 payment for coats was due to 'the officers, pyper, and drumer', suggesting that at that time the positions of Town Piper and Town Drummer were separate from those of the Burgh Officers, although this distinction is less clear at other times. Thomas Boyd is described as a drummer in Hawick in 1713. Robert Wilson is described as a drummer in 1781 and 1791 – ‘And list again th’ inspiring strain Led on by ‘Wat the Drummer’ [JT].

Drummond (dru-mind) n. Agnes (17th C.) mother of 2 illegitimate children of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch; one of these was John Scott of Gorrenberry. She later married Patrick Graham. In 1635 she petitioned the 2nd Earl, pointing out that she had received nothing since the late Earl’s decease 2 years earlier; she was given a small sum under the condition that she asked for nothing more. Alexander (b.1808/9) originally from Gordon in Berwickshire, he was farmer at Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farming 349 acres there and employing 8 people. He was also listed there in 1868. His wife was Ann and their children included Agnes and Robert. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1733 he witnessed a baptism for William Easton, resident of Heap. He married Helen Scott and their children included James (b.1726). Archibald Hamilton ‘Airchie’ (1868–1915) 2nd son of George, corn merchant of the Sandbed, he also became a corn merchant. He was Cornet in 1888, his horse being called ‘Lady Oliver’, after his Lass, and he won one of his own Cornet’s Races on it. He was well known as a cyclist, winning many races on grass tracks, and was generally an all-round athlete. He was one of the founding members of the Callants’ Club in 1903 and President in 1906. He was also President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1912. It has been said that the face of the callant on the Horse Monument was modelled after his. He married Elizabeth (1872–1966), daughter of Andrew Ekron. Their children included Jessie, Anne, Elizabeth, Margaret Ekron (1899–1988) and Archibald Ekron (1905–62). George (b.1832/3) from Greenlaw, he was a corn merchant in Hawick. He probably purchased the property at No. 3 Sandbed from Andrew Graham in 1852. In 1861 he was living a 3 Sandbed. He married Annie Hamilton, who was from Melrose. Their children included: Isabella Hendry (b.1860); Annie (b.1862); Annie Ovens (again, b.1864); Jessie Hamilton (b.1866); Archibald Hamilton (b.1868), who was Cornet; George Ovens (b.1870); John William (b.1872); and Annie Hamilton (again, b.1874). James (c.1615–75) 3rd Earl of Perth. He was son of John, 2nd Earl of Drummond and Jean Ker, who was daughter of Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburghe. In 1634 he inherited one third of the properties of his uncle William, Master of Roxburghe, with the other parts going to his aunts, Maria and Isabella. This included many lands around Kelso, but also Alton near Hawick. His brother William later became 2nd Earl of Roxburghe. He married Anne Gordon, daughter of the Marquess of Huntly. John of Stobshall (c.1438–1519) son of Sir Malcolm and Mariota Murray. He was 1st Lord Drummond. He was appointed a Lord of Session in 1471 and later was made Justiciary General of Scotland. He acted as Depute Justiciar at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh and Selkirk in 1494. He was a Scottish Commissioner to negotiate Border grievances with England in 1495, 1511, 1513 and 1514. Sir Malcolm (d.1403) eldest son of Sir John, 11th of Lennox and Mary Montifex. He was head of a powerful, land-owning family. He married Isabel, only daughter of William, 1st Earl of Douglas; she was Countess of Mar in her own right. He was present at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, where the death of his brother-in-law James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, led to him succeeding to the Earldom of Mar. His wife also held the Barony of Cavers, and he is recorded in 1390 as superior of Cavers when the Gourlays were confirmed in their lands of Rulewood. He may have acted as Sheriff of Roxburghshire from about 1389. In an English document of 1389 he has special protection for half a year for all his lands and possessions, including Liddesdale, Jedforest, the Barony of Cavers, the town and Lorship of Selkirk, the Barony of Bedrule and many more distant baronies and castles, including Drumlanrig. He died in captivity after being captured by some opponents, perhaps related to Alexander Stewart, ‘the Wolf of Badenoch’, who later married his widow and acquired the Mar titles. He had no children. Margaret (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who was convicted in 1697 of stealing several items of clothing and a large loaf.

Drummond an Laing’s (dru-mind-an-lāngz) n. hosiery firm on Wilton path (near the top of the ‘Hunder Steps’) in the early 20th century. It was formed as a partnership in 1908 by John Laing and his son Ivan, but taken over by Henderson’s in 1913. This amalgamated into Innes & Henderson in 1919, which later became Braemar Knitwear.

drum oot (drum-oo’-o-toon) v. to forcefully reject, overwhelm – ‘A thought oo should cairry on, bit A was drummed oot’. This expression derives from the expression ‘drum out of town’ a form of banishment from a town and frequently a county, which in Hawick continued well into the 19th century, with the last recorded occasion being 1824.

The drummer in the last years was Caleb Rutherford, assisted by Burgh officers Sandy Bryson and ‘Tufty’ Wilson. The ‘Rogue’s March’ would be played on the drum throughout the procession from the old jail to the toll-bar.

drums and fifes (drumz-in-fifs) n. the combination of drums and flutes began to be used as military marching bands in the 16th century, reaching its peak of popularity in the 17th century. A fifer is first mentioned in Hawick town records in 1797. In 1798 the town gave a donation for the Volunteers to purchase drums and fifes. Selkirk and Langholm both have drum and fife bands, and other towns like Edinburgh used to – ‘I hear the drums and fifes gang by and clatter o’ horse and folk’ [JEDM], ‘... For the drums and fifes are calling, and the Cornet’s riding by’ [JYH], ‘... Like the drums and fifes oot airly, And the jowe o’ St. Mary’s bell’ [WL], ‘That wakens again the auld mem’ries tae life – The jubilant strain o’ the drum and the fife!’ [CB].

the Drums an Fifes (thu-drumz-in-fifs) n. the band that plays a significant role at many of the ceremonies associated with the Common Riding. They are often referred to as ‘the Cornet’s Band’, and do not play officially outside Common Riding season. The first record of a fifer at the Common Riding is in 1797, and individual drummers were employed much earlier than that (from at least 1672). The band itself (with 2 drummers and 2 fifers) can be traced back to at least 1823. The tunics or uniforms date from 1907, and by the early 1900s the complement was 3 drummers and 5 fifers. Their official duties begin with the Picking, and they are usually considered to start the Common Riding proper (although opinions differ on whether this is on the Thursday night or Friday morning). At the Colour Bussing procession, they start from the Kirk Wynd at 6 p.m. on the Thursday night, visiting the approximate sites of the old tolls to mark the boundaries of the old town, playing ‘Teribus’ the whole time. They also accompany the Cornet on his walk round town, playing specific tunes at specific locations. On the Friday morning they begin at 6 a.m. (with ‘Teribus’) in the Kirkwynd, proceed to the Snuffin, and follow the same route around the old tolls to wake up the Town. Having received their rum and milk refreshments, they start again at the Kirkwynd (with ‘Dumbarton Drums’), walking to the old Loan Toll, then along the High Street to the Horse. At about 7.30 a.m. (playing ‘John Paiterson’s Mare Rides Foremost’) they walk from the Kirkwynd to the Tower Know, via Drumlarig Square and the Howegate. They join the Cornet’s Breakfast, and later join the Procession, leading the Cornet and his supporters. From the top of the Loan to Thorterdikes they play ‘Teribus’ and ‘Jockey to the Fair’ in preparation for the Friday Chase. They also lead the march from Drumlanrig Square to the Mill Path for the Song Singing and on to the Town Hall and Tower. On the Saturday they start at 8 a.m., marching from West Port to the Horse, and later play at Drumlanrig Place as the riders pass. After the Moor they lead the Cornet to the Town Hall for the Handing-Back, playing ‘Teribus’ twice through when he emerges with the Flag. Finally they lead the procession to the Tower, with the Principals carried on others’ shoulders, where the Bull Reel is danced. In all they march about 12 miles each Common Riding. The band’s complement varies, but now consists of 3 drummers and about 10 fifers. Their most characteristic tunes are ‘Rumblin’ Brig’, ‘Teribus’ and ‘Dumbarton Drums’, and at specific times they also play ‘Pawkie Paiterson’, ‘Hazeldean’, ‘Jockey to the Fair’ and ‘John Paiterson’s Meir Rides Foremaist’. Their repertoire has also included ‘Auld Brig’, ‘This is no my ain Hoose’, ‘The Girl I Left Behind Me’, ‘Cock of the North’, ‘Stumpy’ and ‘Kate Dalrymple’ – ‘Our standard is reared once more, my lads, and its folds are flaunting free, The drums and fifes bestir the air in their summons to you and me’ [JEDM], ‘Anon the drums and fifes send forth their strains Of martial music, rousing old and young, And many a glance from friend reveals The pleasane thoughts unspoken by the tongue’ [JCG], ‘Callants whom fate or fortune allured, And led beyond the range of ‘Drums and Fifes’, To new environments become inured, And mingle with the world’s ignoble strifes’ [TK].

dry-bowk (drI-bowk) n. a retch, attempt to vomit without substance.

Dryburgh (drI-bu-ru) n. area around Dryburgh Abbey, once a thriving town, linked to Jedburgh and Melrose by fords across the Tweed. It was razed by the English in 1545. The estate was held by the Erskines in the 18th century.

Dryburgh Abbey (drI-bu-ru-aw-bee) n. picturesque abbey on a loop in the Tweed between St. Boswells and Newtown St. Boswells. It was built around 1150 by the Order of Premonstratensians (also known as the White Canons) from Alnwick. The site is only a few miles from Melrose Abbey and not much further from Jedburgh. Like the other local abbeys, it was dedicated to Mary. The abbey was ruined by Hertford's men in 1545. The Abbey was purchased in 1780 by David Erskine, the Earl of Buchan, who carried out improvements and preservation. It has some remarkably complete ruins, including a rose window and the Chapter House. The grounds contain a very old yew tree, which tradition says was planted by the monks in 1136, before the foundation of the abbey. This was also the central location for David Erskine's planned 'Temple of Caledonian Fame', which helped preserve the structure and explains the elaborate historical Erskine Obelisk. The Abbey is the burial place of Sir Walter Scott and Field Marshal Earl Haig – 'Praise to the bard, immortal Scott, Who sleeps in 'Dryburgh Bowers' ...' [JT] (the name derives from the Old English for 'dry burgh'!).

Dryburgh Abbey Hoose (drI-bu-ru-aw-bee-hoos) n. mansion house near Dryburgh Abbey, substantially rebuilt in 1877, and home of the Erskines. It is now run as Dryburgh Abbey Country House Hotel. The Temple of the Muses near there is topped by a bust of James Thomson, author of 'The Seasons'. There is also a dovecote nearby.

Drycleuchlea (drI-kloooh-lee) n. farmstead just to the north-west of Redfordgreen. This is the steading of 'Drycleuchschele' mentioned along with Hindhope and Redford in 1501. It had been occupied for the 6 previous years by Robert Scott. In 1510 it was 'Dricleuschell' when feued by Alexander, Lord Home. In 1621 it was valued at £15 13s 4d. It was inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade from his brother Sir Walter in 1655. The superiority was still held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. Adam Scott was tenant there (and in Easter Redfordgreen) in 1716. It was listed along with Redfordgreen in the 1785 and 1802 Land Tax Rolls. John Anderson was tenant in 'Drycleugh' around 1800 (it is 'Drycleuchscheill' in 1621, 'Drycleughsheill' in 1655 and 1693 and 'Drycleughshiels' in 1802).

Drycleuchshiel (drI-kloooh-sheel) n. former name for Drycleuchlea.

the Dry Dean (thu-drI-deen) n. stream that follows the A7 down from the TV mast past Ashkirk, passing the farm of Dryden and joining the Ale Water. The name is particularly applied to the lower, wooded end (it seems reasonable to assume that the stream was sometimes dry and gave its name to the neighbouring farm).

Dryden (drI-din) n. valley just before Teviothead, with Dryden Fell and Drydenhope nearby. There was formerly a fortified house here. The lands of 'draden' were said to be among those (along with Commonsides and Harwood) gained by the Muirs of Rowallan through marriage with an heiress of the Comyns in about 1260; there is no original document to confirm this, but it is stated in a 17th century family history by poet and politician Sir William Muir. Philip of Dryden, who signed the Ragman Roll in 1296, may have held these lands. In 1462 the lands were given (along with Commonsides and Over Harwood) by Stephen Scott of Muirhouse to Robert Muir of Rowallan in security for a loan. They were returned to Robert Scott of 'Dogehauch' on full payment of the loan in 1477. This could be the Dryden where Turnbells were recorded in 1493 and 1494/5. John Turnbull and William Anderson were there in 1502. Stephen Scott's son George of Whames, had the lands confirmed to him in a grant of 'warrandice' in 1508/9. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick, this continuing in the list of 1572 for the retour of James Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands were sold by Alan Mossman to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1532. James Cessford was shepherd of the King's lands there in 1540 when he was paid for grain. In 1574 they were listed among the lands of Scott of Buccleuch, but held 'in chief' of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig (for payment of a red rose), and valued at £5 'in time of peace'. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands were listed in 1663 (and confirmed in 1686) among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. John Scott was shepherd there in 1738 and 1739. Robert Nichol was shepherd there in the mid-19th century. Running from here over Hunt Law to the north is a linear earthwork, running about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (the origin is probably Old English 'dryge denu' meaning 'the dry valley', appropriate since this valley is noticeably dry compared with the surrounding land; the name appears in 1456 as 'Driden', is 'Dridane' in 1462, 'Drydane' in 1447, 'dridane' in 1502, 'Dridane' in 1508/9, transcribed 'Dry Dam' in 1540 and later 'Draiden', 'Dridane', 'Drydane', 'Drydean', 'Drydon', etc.; it is marked on Gordon's c. 1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Drydenn').

Dryden (drI-din) n. farm just north of Ashkirk, off the A7. Along with Headshaw, it was owned by a branch of the Scotts, being sold by Robert of Headshaw to Andrew Hay in 1605. However, John Scott of Headshaw had a charter again for the lands in 1636 and in 1691 they were inherited by Mary Scott from her brother John of Headshaw. The lands were valued in 1643 and 1678 at £290. They were probably sold along with Headshaw in 1696 to the Elliots of Minto. In 1694 there were 5 people resident there who were taxed for having a house with a hearth, as well as 6 poor people who were unassessed. In 1705 they were included among Sir Gilbert Elliot's lands as part of a new Barony of Headshaw. Thomas Kedie was tenant there in 1717. Most of the lands there were liferented to Dr. William Elliot in 1779. They were listed among the properties of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1788, with the same value of £290. William Huntly is recorded as farmer there in 1797 and Walter Laidlaw was a labourer there in 1801. In the 1830s the farm was still owned by the Earl of Minto. James Young was farmer in the 1860s. The Dryden Riding Centre has been here since about 1980, started by Jenny Stark, and home of the Stable Life charity. Into the south wall of the stable yard has been built a disc quern, said to have been found when clearing an old water mill. Additionally, pieces of flint have been found here, as well as a pitchstone core (perhaps of Neolithic age, from Arran) and a Bronze Age axe-head. About 400m north-east of the farm there are traces of rig lines (it appears as 'Drydenn' on Gordon's c. 1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map and is 'Dry dean' on Ainslie's 1773 map; it is 'Drydden' in 1694 and 'Drydon' in 1797).

Dryden (drI-din) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1704. He witnessed a baptism for William Armstrong in Clarilaw in 1703. Adam (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish who married 'Catron' Scott in Robertson Parish in 1722. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Rutherford and their son William was baptised in 1741. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Betty Pringle in 1761. Their children included Alison (b.1762). Adam (b.c.1780) skinner in Hawick according to the 1801 ballot list for the Militia. Adam (b.1820/1) spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on O'Connell Street. His wife was Agnes and their children included Isabella. Alexander (19th C.) married Margaret Neilson in Hawick in 1845. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Alexander (b.1856); Helen (b.1859); Adam (b.1867). He could be the weaver of Wilton who was recorded in Jedburgh Jail in 1864 and 1867. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who married Isabel Best in 1693. His children included Andrew (b.1694) and James (b.1697). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1728); John (b.1733); Thomas (b.1736); and George (b.1743). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Euphan (b.1762); Andrew (b.1757); Charles (b.1767); Charles (again, b.1769); John (b.1770); and Margaret (b.1773). Andrew (1779–1848) son of Thomas and Jean Thomson. His father was blacksmith in St. Boswells, where he was born. He lived at Wilton Dean, then in 1810 moved to Lees and in 1818 to Branhholme Park Woodfoot. In 1803 he married Janet (1785–1864), daughter of John Cairns. Their children were: Mary Ann ('Annie', b.1803), who married William Rae; Thomas (b.1806), who married Agnes Kennedy; John (b.1808), married Margaret Shiel; Robert (b.1811), married Mary Clerk; Jane (b.1813), married James Brown; Andrew (b.1817), married Elizabeth Kennedy; William (b.1820); James (b.1822), married Mary Swan from Lilliesleaf; and Walter Kerr (b.1827). The witnesses in 1803 were Thomas Cairns and James Kerr. The family emigrated to Galt, Canada in 1834 when cholera was visiting the area. They established a home there near North Dumfries known as 'the Dryden Settlement'. Andrew (b.1817) son of Andrew. He was a wright of Everhall and also a member of Allars Kirk. Archibald (15th C.) listed along with John and William among the Roxburghshire men who had remission from James IV in 1488/9 for their support of James III at Stirling. It may be that the 3 men were brothers. It is claimed that he stayed in Roxburghshire, while John and William moved to England (although there is no proof of this); he may therefore be an ancestor of local Drydens. It is also suggested that he was a son of Henry, recorded on the council of James Kennedy, Bishop of St. Andrews in about 1452. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the 'Gawin' who married Janet Miller in 1695 and whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included: Margaret (b.1697); James (b.1699); Janet (b.1702); John (b.1704); George (b.1706); John (again, b.1708); Margaret (again, b.1711); and Euphan (b.1714). He may be the Gavin whose daughter Margaret married Adam Turnbull in Minto Parish in 1739. Gavin (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Adderstoneshiel. His daughter Margaret was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1718. Gavin (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1723. His forename appears to be written 'Gain' and he was living at 'Foulbrae' (although it is unclear where this was). Gavin (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: John (b.1776); Robert (b.1778); and Isabel (b.1781), who may have married John Tudhope. Gavin (18th/19th C.) farmer at Cavers Knowes, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. He could be the Gavin whose children baptised in Cavers included William (b.1784), who was a millwright in Wilton. His sons Walter and Robert were at Cavers Knowes on the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia. George (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Braxholme. He was probably related to John and Thomas, who were also listed. George (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as a resident at Cavers. He is listed after Gavin, to whom he was presumably related. He could be the George whose children baptised in Cavers included Alison (b.1694) and Janet (b.1697). George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who is recorded as tenant in East Mains in 1748. Probably the same George married Ann Turnbull. Their children probably included Janet (b.1745), Gavin (b.1747), Mary (b.1748) and Gavin (again, b.1752). George (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1771); John (b.1776); and Euphy (b.1780). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Ann Ferguson in 1818. His wife may be the widow living at about Turk's Close in 1861, with her children Helen, Betsy, Jean and William. George (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Christian Elliot in 1828. George (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Ann Gordon and their children included: Alexander (b.1858). Isabel (d.1729) resident of Wilton Parish whose death was recorded at Clarilaw. Isobel (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was 'deficient' on the tax roll. Perhaps the same James had a daughter Margaret baptised in 1693. James (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. James (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. In 1692 he was renting half the Duchess of Buccleuch's lands of Clarilaw (with Thomas Henderson having the other half). He may be a descendant of the later James in Clarilaw. He is probably the James who (along with Thomas Henderson) witnessed a baptism in Robertson Parish in 1682 for James Douglas and Janet Henderson and another (along with John Armstrong) for the same couple in 1686. He is probably the James who married 'Manie' Henderson and their children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included Helen (b.1680) and Adam (b.1684). The witnesses in 1684 were Robert Scott and Andrew Donald. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1692. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, who married Janet Mack in 1697. He may be the James whose son William was baptised in 1703. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Newmill. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Braxholme Town. He married Margaret Riddell in 1715. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); William (b.1723); Walter (again, b.1726); and Margaret (b.1729). An unnamed son baptised in 1716 was probably also his child as well as Margaret (b.1730), with mother's name given as 'Ann Riddel'. The witnesses in 1718 were the older and younger William Thomsons from Newmill, in 1720 were Robert Scott in Braxholme Town and William Thomson in Newmill, in 1723 were William and Robert Thomson in Newmill and in 1725 were William Thomson and John Riddell. In 1724 he was witness to a baptism at Newmill. In 1740 the witnesses to a baptism for William Thomson at Newmill (and also for Walter Hume, carrier at Braxholme Town, who married Helen Dryden) were 'James Drydens Elder & Younger Smiths'; this suggests that he had an older son who was also James. He was probably related to the later Drydens in that area. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1723. He married Isobel, daughter of Andrew Rodger, in Wilton Parish in 1712. Their children included: Bessie (b.1716); and Helen (b.1723). The witnesses in 1723 were John Dryden (surely related) and John Scott. He is probably the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for James Leithead in Boonraw, in 1725 for John Waugh in Appletreehall, in 1728 for John Blyth in Stirches, in 1729 for James Easton in Alton and John Miller in Appletreehall, in 1732 for William Lunn in Appletreehall and for others in the 1730s (sometimes with John). He may also have been the James who witnessed the 1730 baptism for Adam Armstrong in Burnhead and 3 baptisms for Adam Armstrong in Appletreehall (possible the same Adam). However, it is hard to tell which of these were him and which were the contemporary James at Clarilaw, who married Alison Irvine in 1721. It is also possible he is the James, married to 'Isobel Gibson' (if this was an error, or the name from a previous marriage) whose daughter Isobel was baptised in 1719. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He is recorded at Denholm in 1719 and Birneyknowe in 1725 and 1726. His children included: James (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); George (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1726). Robert (b.1729), baptised in Kirkton Parish, may also have been his child. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, who married Margaret Turnbull in 1732. He may be the James who was at Ashybank in 1733 and 1741. His children included William (b.1733) and Bessie (b.1741). John (b.1736) and Margaret (b.1738) may also have been his children. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, who was recorded at Middle in 1736 when his son Walter was baptised. It is possible that Helen (b.1733) and Marion (b.1740) were also his children. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Clarilaw in 1724, 1735 and 1737. He is probably the James who (along with John) witnessed baptisms for Thomas Liddell, resident of Clarilaw, in 1727 and 1729. He may also be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Gray, resident of Clarilaw, in 1738. He may also be the James who witnessed baptisms for John Blaikie in 1737, for James Douglas in Burnhead in 1742 and for Robert Scott in Marvinslaw and William Fulton in Appletreehall in 1743, as well as several others in 1744. Isabel, who died at Clarilaw in 1729, was probably related to him. He married Alison Irvine in 1721 and their children included: Adam (b.1722); Many (b.1724); Margaret (b.1725); Many (again, b.1728); Anna (b.1730); James (b.1732); Mary (b.1734); Elizabeth (b.1735); and Alexander (b.1737). The witnesses in 1724 were James Irvine and John Dryden (who were surely related to his wife and him), in 1735 were Robert Graham and William Nichol and in 1737 were Andrew Martin and James Turnbull. He may be the same as the farmer at Clarilaw recorded in 1744 and later. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Smith (resident of the Stirches area) and Margaret Dryden (perhaps his daughter) in 1747. Note there are several men of the same name living in this and neighbouring parishes at this time. James (18th C.) farmer at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish, tenant of the Buccleuch Estates. A record of 1744 discusses what he would do in the event of a division of Hassendean Common, which adjoined his land. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Laidlaw at Stirches in 1747. He is probably also the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton Parish for James Lorraine in 1753. He is then probably the James who witnessed several baptisms in Wilton (e.g. at Stouslie, Appletreehall, Heap and Clarilaw) in 1758, 1759, 1769, 1770, 1771, 1772 and 1773 (suggesting that he may have been an Elder in the Kirk). He may be the same man as the James who married Alison Irvine. James (18th C.) married Barbara Scott in Hawick Parish in 1754. James (18th C.) married Mary Gray in Hawick Parish in 1760. James (18th C.) married Agnes Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1766. James (18th/19th C.) smith in Hawick, who was Cornet in 1772. He was referred to as 'Deacon Dryden', suggesting that he was Deacon in the Hammermen's Guild. He is likely to be the James who, along with Walter Freeman, was leader of the 'Patriots' who opposed the Council and Bailies in the period 1778–81. In 1778 he and Freeman were jailed in Hawick over the weekend and then taken off to Jedburgh Jail for another 2 days before being bailed. He is mentioned as 'Deacon Dryden' in the story of the 'rebel' Common Riding of 1809, as one of the men on the Westenders side who helped keep order to avoid bloodshed. He was grandfather of Cornet James Smith and great-grandfather of Cornet John Smith. His Common-Riding cuff-links are still in the Watt family. He is probably the smith who married Agnes Pott (or Potts) in Hawick Parish in 1780; her death is recorded in 1795. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lurgiescleuch in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He could be the James, son of William, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1783. James (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His could be the property marked 'Dryden' on the Howgate on Wood's 1824 map. He could be the smith who married Agnes Potts (d.1795) in 1780 and who was Cornet in 1772. If so, he married again and was father of Elizabeth (b.c.1800), who married John Smith. James (1746/7–1820) shepherd at Merrylaw. His wife was Jane Pott (d.1838). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1795 he married Christian Scott. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James

(18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Scott and their children included Barbara (b.1799) and Jean (b.1801). John (15th C.) listed as 'John Drydane' among the Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. William and Archibald are also listed, so presumably close relatives. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. He was probably related to George and Thomas, who were also listed. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married 'Marie Mure' in Robertson Parish in 1684. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Clerk in Robertson in 1687. John (17th C.) recorded in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks as a debtor 'for a part of Fairnelies' in 1662. John (17th C.) blacksmith at Newmill on Teviot. He was probably related to the James and John who were blacksmiths there a little later (perhaps father of both of them). He was recorded at Newmill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He witnessed a baptism for John Beattie in 1673. He is probably the John, married to Agnes Hope, whose children included: John (b.1675); Adam (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1685). Gideon (b.1694), with no mother's name given, may also be his son. The witnesses in 1675 and 1683 were Robert Thomson and Alexander Riddell. John (17th/18th C.) smith at Newmill, probably son of the earlier smith at Newmill. He is probably the smith in Newmill who witnessed baptisms for Robert Thomson in Newmill in 1698 and for William Thomson (servant to Gideon Scott of Falnash) in 1702. He is probably also the John who witnessed a baptism for John Nichol in Newmill in 1710 and for William Allan in 'Park' and for Thomas Penman in 1712. He married Isobel Thomson and their children included: William (b.1700); Adam (b.1703); Helen (b.1705), who married Walter Hume; and Isobell (b.1708). The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Thomson in Newmill (who was probably related to his wife), in 1705 were Robert Manuel and William Thomson (also probably an in-law) and in 1708 were Walter Scott at Nether Southfield and John Wilson, tailor in Newbigging. He may be the John, son of blacksmith John, born in Hawick Parish in 1675. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Robert Thomson in Newmill in 1698. He is surely related to James who was blacksmith in Newmill a little later (perhaps his brother). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1721 for James Lees in Clarilaw, in 1723 for James (surely a relative) in Appletreehall, in 1724 for James in Clarilaw, for John Lamb in Clarilaw and for Thomas Liddell in Clarilaw, in 1727 and 1729 (along with James) for Thomas Liddell in Clarilaw, also in 1727 for James Scott in Borthaugh, in 1729 for Robert Graham in Lees, James Scott in Wester Mill, John Miller in Appletreehall and Thomas Henderson in Appletreehall, in 1730 for Walter Rutherford in Langlands Boathouse and Adam Armstrong in Burnhead, in 1731 for Adam Scott in Lees and James Muir in Hornshole and in 1732 for Walter Scott in Wiltonburn, Adam Harkness in Stouslie, James Scott in Overhall, James Blyth in Clarilaw and William Lunn in Appletreehall. He is probably also the John who witnessed several baptisms in Wilton in 1733. Based on all these baptisms it is possible that he was an elder of Wilton Kirk. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son John was baptised in Maxton Parish in 1728. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Mary Davidson in 1745. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Helen Riddle and their children included: Gavin (b.1754); and Margaret (b.1755). Other children who may be his are Janet (b.1746), Gavin (b.1748), Magdalen (b.1759), John (b.1764), John (again, b.1766) and George (b.1769). John (18th C.) married Betty, daughter of Walter Amos, in Hobkirk Parish in 1767. He may be the John whose daughters 'Euphy' and Janet were baptised in Bedrule Parish in 1769. John (18th C.) married Betty Waugh in Hawick in 1789. John (b.1786/7) blacksmith at Brieryshaw in the Ewes valley. He was listed there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included Andrew, George and Janet. John (b.c.1800) recorded as 'Software Pedlar' in 1841, when he was living on the Loan. His wife was Mary. John (1808-78) 2nd son of Andrew and Janet Cairns. He was born at Lees, near Appletreehall. In 1831, like the rest of his family he emigrated to Canada. Several letters he wrote back to Scotland still survive. He married Margaret Shiel from Kelso and they had 8 children. John (19th C.) married Agnes Nichol in Hawick in 1841. John (19th C.) married Susan Ritchie in Hawick in 1852. John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Isabella Muir. Their children included John (b.1855). John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Fraser in Hawick in 1874. Their children included John (b.1874), whose baptism was recorded in both Hawick and Minto Parishes. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. Philip (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'Phelip de Dryden' when he swore fealty to Edward I of England in 1296. His lands may have been those near Teviothead. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1737. Robert (b.c.1785) farmer in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was living at Firth with the slightly older Walter, who was probably his brother. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1826 he and William Thomson were put in charge of the Parish mort-safes. He may be the Robert, son of Gavin recorded at Cavers Knowes on the ballots for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801. Robert (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Dagleish in 1828 and their children included: George (b.1829); and James (b.1835). Robert (19th C.) married Mary Pringle in Hawick in 1834. Robert (1811-75) 3rd son of Andrew and Janet Dryden. He may be the Robert listed at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He married Mary Clerk. Like the rest of his family he emigrated to Ontario. He had a tavern and blacksmith's shop in Eramosa Township there. He had 6 children. Robert R. (19th C.) married Isabella Preston in Southdean Parish in 1858. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. He was probably related to George and John, who were also listed. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to James, who was also listed there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included William (b.1712). Perhaps the same Thomas also married Isabel Dryden in Cavers in 1725. Thomas (b.1744) son of Andrew, he was born in Crailing Parish. He worked as a wheelwright at Nisbet and was then a blacksmith at St. Boswells. In 1771 he married Jean, daughter of John Thomson. They had 6 children, Ann, Janet, Andrew (who lived at Wilton Dean), Thomas, Robert and Jean. He secondly married Janet, daughter of Robert Fletcher and had 4 more children, William, Walter, Margaret and Thomas. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant at Mossypaul according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Thomas (18th/19th

C.) married Betty Paterson in Hobkirk Parish in 1817. Thomas (b.1792/3) from Selkirk, he was spinner at a woollen factory in Hawick. He was a member of Allars Kirk. In 1841 he was living at Gibsnose in Wilton. He married Janet Reid in 1816 and their children included: John (b.c.1820); William (b.1820), who became an engineer in Preston; Jane (b.c.1825); Elizabeth ('Betsy', b.1824/5); Jessie (b.1828/9); Margaret (b.1830/1); Robert (b.1832/3); Mary; and Thomas (b.1837/8). Thomas L. (b.1806) son of Andrew, he was a wright at Everhall. Like the rest of the family he was involved with Allars Kirk and emigrated to Ontario. He married Agnes Kennedy in 1828. They settled in North Dumfries Township, near Galt in Ontario. He worked as a joiner and then an innkeeper. They had 9 children. Thomas (19th C.) house factor and yarn agent. In 1863 he married Agnes, daughter of baker Walter Wilson. Thomas (19th C.) married Helen Anderson in Wilton Parish in 1866. He may be the Thomas, 'Engine Smith', living at Wilton Kirkhouse in 1861. Walter (15th C.) father of William. His son William was recorded in 1493, when the Sheriff of Roxburghshire was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter (18th/19th C.) elder of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded on the heritors council in 1803. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He is probably the Gavin recorded at Cavers Knowes on the ballots for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801. He married Isabel Douglas and their children included: Nelly (b.1807); Gavin (b.1809); Isabella (b.1813); John (b.1814); Robert (b.1819); and Margaret (b.1821). Walter (b.c.1780) farmer at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was at Firth with Robert (probably his brother), plus Gavin, John, Robert and Helen (probably his children), as well as a female servant. William (15th C.) son of Walter. He was listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Other men listed were local and so he was probably from the Cavers or Rulwater areas. Perhaps the same Walter is recorded in 1502 being 'super aquam de slit-trik' (i.e. on Slitrig Water) when he had remission for stealing sheep from Bowhill; his surety was George Douglas in the Trows. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included Thomas (b.1680). William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who married Rachel Turnbull in

Drydenburn

1694. His children included: James (b.1696); and Isabel (b.1698). William (17th C.) resident of Muckle Cote who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William who married Margaret Huntly in Cavers Parish in 1697 and whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included Helen (b.1698), Isabel (b.1699), William (b.1700), Adam (b.1700), James (b.1702), William (again, b.1703) and Margaret (b.1704). When Margaret was baptised he was living at West Middle. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1707. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Helen Lunn in 1725. He was in Denholm in 1727 and was recorded as herd in Denholm in 1730 and 1733 and also there in 1742. His children (baptised in Cavers) probably included Isabel (b.1727), Janet (b.1730), John (b.1733) and Isabel (again, b.1742). William (18th C.) married Bessie Knox in Wilton Parish in 1749. Their children included: probably Helen (b.1753); Margaret (b.1756), baptised in Cavers Parish; David (b.1759, Hawick), mother's name 'Margaret Knocks'; Robert (b.1761, Hawick); and Isabel (b.1766, Hawick), mother's forename 'Isabel'; Mary (b.1768, Hawick); Margaret (b.1770, Hawick), with mother's name given as just 'Knox'. The witnesses in 1766 were the whole congregation. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Fal-side and their children included Mary (b.1746). William (18th C.) from Bedrule Parish. His children included: William (b.1781); and an unnamed son (b.1792). Perhaps the same William had a son James baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1783. William (18th C.) married Margaret Black in Hawick in 1783. William (d.1794) smith whose death is recorded in Hawick. He may be related to James and John who were contemporary blacksmiths. William (b.1784) from Cavers Parish, son of Gavin. He was a millwright in Wilton. He was listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Wilton Place, probably corresponding to about 30–32 Princes Street and in 1861 he was at about 24 Princes Street. He married Agnes Dobson (from Galashiels) and their children included: Jean (b.1819); Walter (b.1821); Isabel (b.1823); Elizabeth (b.1825); Agnes (b.1830/1); Margaret (b.1832/3); and William (b.1837/8). William (b.1820) born at Branhholme, son of spinner Thomas. He left around the 1840s and founded an engineering business in Preston, which eventually became the world-renowned Thomas Dryden & Sons. He is said to have eloped with Margaret Weens, daughter of Sandy (although the marriage is recorded in Hawick in 1846). He was a guest at the 1888 Colour Bussing. William (19th C.) Hawick resident who married Mary Leyden. Their daughter Jane was baptised in 1857. William (19th C.) married Jane Dalgleish in Hawick in 1868. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1869. William (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Mary Grant and their children included: James (b.1862); and Mary (b.1864). Perhaps the same William also married Jane Dalgleish and had children Margaret (b.1869), William (b.1870) and William (again, b.1872). William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Richardson in Hawick in 1872. Their daughter Margaret Kerr was baptised in 1874 (formerly written 'Draydone', 'Dreden', 'Dreiden', 'Dridane', 'Driden', 'Dryddon', 'Drydon', 'Drydone' and variants).

Drydenburn (drI-din-burn) n. former name for a farmstead near Dryden in what became Teviothead Parish. John Scott was there in 1713. Andrew Turnbull was tenant there in 1725 (it is 'Dryden-burn' in 1713).

Dryden Burnfit (drI-din-burn-fi) n. former name for Teviothead Cottage, used in the 1851 census. The cottage there is listed as 'drydden-burnfoott' in 1694 when John Scott was shepherd.

Dryden Cottage see Teviothead Cottage

Dryden Fell (drI-din-fel) n. hill north of Teviothead, reaching a height of 351 m. On its lower slopes the Henry Scott Riddell monument can easily be seen from the A7. On the north side, between Cauldron Hole (at the head of the Back Burn) and Cat Cleuch (at the head of the Philhope Burn) is a linear earthwork, about 500 m long. It is probably an ancient boundary ditch.

Dryden Greenhill (drI-din-gren-hil) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish, east of the television mast, between North Synton and New Greenhill farms. It was previously known as simply 'Greenhill' and was recorded as 'Greenshill' in 1797. James Johnstone was tenant there in 1797. Gowanlocks were tenants there through much of the 19th century. An axe, possibly early Bronze Age, found on the farm is in Selkirk Museum. Several flint arrowheads and other implements picked up in the surrounding area were described in 1927 by J.B. Mason.

Drydenhope (drI-din-hōp) n. hill and former farmstead, to the right of the main A7 after Ashkirk, topped by a B.B.C. television mast, and reaching a height of 303 m (994 ft).

Dryden Linn (drI-din-lin) n. steep, wooded part of the Dryden Burn, with waterfalls, just north of Teviothead.

Dryden Quarry (drI-din-kwa-ree) n. small quarry by the side of the A7 just after Dryden farm. This gives an exposure of rock where folding of Silurian strata can be seen.

Dryfe Sands (drif-sawndz) n. area where the Dryfe Water joins the Annan, west of Lockerbie. It was the site of a conflict in 1593, between the Maxwells and the Johnstones and their supporters. Often stated to be part of a family feud, it was more likely to be part of a struggle for political control of the Western Marches. The Maxwells under John, 7th Lord Maxwell, assembled about 2,000 men to invade Annandale; this included contingents led by Douglas of Drumlanrig, Charters of Amisfield and others. But Sir James Johnstone of Dunskeillie had advanced warning and gathered the support of several local families, including Scotts and Elliots from Liddesdale and Teviotdale. Although outnumbered, the Johnstone side used surprise to rout the Maxwells, killing perhaps as many as 700, including their chief. Some accounts state that it was the intervention of Scott of Buccleuch and the his followers that swung the battle in favour of Johnstone. It is said that the wounds inflicted during the pursuit of the fleeing Maxwell supporters gave rise to the term ‘Lockerbie Lick’. A ‘respice’ was given in 1594 to Sir James Johnstone and 160 others for the killing of Lord Maxwell; this included Armstrongs of Liddesdale, Scotts and Chisholmes from near Hawick. A reconciliation meeting was arranged in 1608 between Sir James Johnstone and the young Lord Maxwell (who had escaped the battle); Maxwell shot Johnstone with a pistol and escaped to France, but was later beheaded in Edinburgh.

Drygrange (drī-grānj) n. hamlet on the A68 just to the north of Newtown St. Boswells, once the principal farmstead associated with Dryburgh Abbey. The estate there was owned by the Tod’s of Drygrange, inherited by Sir George Leith through a daughter and sold to Edward Sproul in 1867, when a new mansion was built (the origin of the name is ‘the grange of Dryburgh’ and it first occurs as ‘Grangiam’ in the early 13th century).

Dryhope (drI-up) n. ruined tower in the Yarrow valley, famous as the home of Mary Scott, the ‘Flower of Yarrow’. It was a property of a branch of the Scotts of for several generations; they were closely connected with the Scotts of Harden and Headshaw. The arms of this branch are the same as for the Scotts of Headshaw, with an extra border. George Middlemas and Matthew Paterson had cattle and goods stolen from here as recorded in 1502. In 1541 Philip Scott occupied the farm (along with ‘Farmynhop’). In 1589 the Scott clan bond was signed by John, Philip and Simon Scott of Dryhope. The tower may have been razed in 1592 by royal order, because of Walter Scott of Harden’s role in the Falkland Raid. The superiority over the lands was held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1661. The present building dates from the rebuilding of 1613, and the renovations of 1788. It measures 33 feet by 22 feet, and was 4 storeys high. There are earlier sites nearby. The balloonist Lundari attempted to come down on the hill here in 1785, losing his anchor, and not descending until he reached Ale-moor. It was farmed by Milnes in the 19th century. With the aid of Heritage Lottery funding in 2003 it was renovated, as a visitor centre, with a new spiral staircase allowing visitors to enjoy the view from the roof. A carved panel has been built into the neighbouring farm building, bearing the date 1613 and the initials ‘P.S.’ and ‘M.S.’ (for Philip Scott and Mary Scott). It is possible that the tower was also home of ‘Dickie’ Armstrong of ‘Dryupp’, a notorious riever of the late 16th century – ‘Now Dickie of Dryhope led that band, And nevir a word o lear had he’ [T], ‘Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me’ [WSB] (written ‘Drihoip’, ‘Drihouip’, ‘Dryhoip’, ‘Dryhop’, ‘Dryop’ and variants).

dryin green (drI-in-green) n. a communal lawn used for drying clothes on washing lines, often behind a tenement. Hawick formerly had many communal drying greens with poles set up for clothes lines; a few still exist, e.g. at the Little Haugh and Mote Park. There were formerly greens at Lothian Street and Garfield Street – ‘A dryin’ green? Aye man, it’s no afore time! Yon’s a sicht that I canna weel thole ...’ [WL].

dry-killit (drI-ki-lee’, -li’) pp., arch. kiln-dried – ‘... for horsing of him from Edinburgh to Hawick, and in 9s. Scots for ane dry killit fische’ [BR1655].

dry-stane dyke (drI-stān-dīk) n. a wall made of fitted together stones, used to divide lands and enclose livestock. The main building phase locally was roughly 1750–1850, with a peak perhaps in the 1820s. It was stated that as recently as the 1920s there were 22 dykers who would leave Hawick every morning to go out to fix dykes.

drystraiks (drI-strāks) n., pl., arch. blows that do not lead to bloodshed – ‘Item, whatsoever person that committs ryottis, in giving of dry cuffs and straiks ...’ [BR1640], ‘Some of these names ... arose from ... a brawling disposition, or a proneness to drystraiks’ [WNK] (see also straiks).

Drythropple (drI-thro-pul) n. former farmstead in Hobkirk parish, just north of Weensmoor. The house was built as a shepherd’s cottage for Town-o-Rule farm in 1815 by George Cleghorn of Weens (the owner at the time). He was a teetotaller, and refusing to give the masons their traditional drink, it was given the nickname, which stuck. There was a later attempt to rename it ‘Heathfield’, but the locals always used the nickname. For a while it was the location for one of the hails in Hobkirk Baa. Tenants included Gilbert Aitken (‘Gib o Drythropple’) and John Halliday (‘the Rustic Bard’). Dyker William Armstrong was there in 1861.

Drythropple (drI-thro-pul) n. former place name to the north-east of Denholm, on the north side of the Teviot, south of Minto Glen. A track there is so marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. ‘Drythropple and Ground’ was listed as part of the Minto estate in 1779, 1788 and 1811, when valued at £3 12s 6d. Old river courses there can be made out in aerial photographs (also ‘Drythrappl’).

du (du, doo) v., arch. do – ‘And that Aw du weel ken’ (the vowel sound can be somewhere between oo and ā).

dub (dub) n., arch. a puddle, small pond, pool, particularly of marshy water – ‘Ilk step they redouble their haste, As through dirt an’ dubs they spatter’ [JoHa], ‘... An’ yetts play jairg, and dubs play plash’ [JoHa], ‘On Winter nights when Johnnie Frost Hath sealed baith dub and mire’ [JT], ‘... Throwe drumly foreign dub and clairt ...’ [DH] (possibly from Low German or Dutch; the word occurs in place names, such as ‘Wylie’s Dub’ and ‘Hackman’s Dub’).

the Dub (thū-dub) n. former name for the area east of ‘the Vennel’ (roughly Morrison Place), also known as ‘Wylie’s Dub’ and also called ‘Bridgehaugh’, once a boggy area between the Howegate and the modern Buccleuch Street (also spelled ‘Dubb’ and sometimes ‘Dubs’ and ‘Dubbs’).

the Dubbs (thū-dubz) n., pl. former name, from around the 17th century for the marshy region between the Howegate and the Teviot (also known as ‘the Dub’, although that may have been a more specific area).

dubby (du-bee) adj., arch. muddy, miry.

ducatoon (du-ki-toon) n., arch. an old silver coin, possibly referring to several types, but most usually one from the Netherlands – ‘Likewise there was found among the consignment money before marriages and half Ducatoon and twenty shillings Scots piece pawnded by Jo. Forman merchant in Hawick ...’ [PR1711].

the Duchess o Gloucester (thū-du-chis-ō-glos-tur) n. (1901–2004) Princess Alice, born Lady Alice Christabel Montagu-Douglas-Scott, 3rd daughter of John, 7th Duke of Buccleuch. She was born on Christmas Day in London, Princess She married Henry William Frederick Albert Windsor, 1st Duke of Gloucester, who was son of George V. She was thus an aunt of Queen Elizabeth II. She was Colonel-in-Chief of the K.O.S.B., and during WWII worked with the Red Cross, the Order of St. John and the W.A.A.F. In 1946 she had a vacation at Branxholme with her mother the dowager Duchess of Buccleuch, and inspected the K.O.S.B. in Hawick. Her sons were Prince William and Prince Richard (who succeeded as Duke of Gloucester). After her husband’s death in 1972 she was allowed to be known as Princess Alice as a courtesy from the Queen. She ceased to carry out public functions in 1999, and lived to be 102.

the Duchess’s Room (thū-du-chi-seez-room) n. name of a room in the former Tower Hotel, overlooking Towerdykeside, which had been the apartment of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. The room was decorated in a royal style, with a gold-mounted bed and footstool, which had been a marriage present from her father-in-law Charles II. She apparently visited many times with some of her 6 children. The room retained the name long after the Tower had been sold as a hotel.

Duckenfield (du-kin-feeld) n. George (19th C.) dramatist who staged a production with ‘Hi-I-Obby’ as the hero, the part being played by the man himself. He was a frequent visitor to Hawick, staging theatrical performances, often in the Upper Haugh, and playing many of the parts himself.

duck huntin (duk-hun-tin) n. a former cruel sport, which locally took place until the mid-19th century at the Coble Pool. Ducks would have their wings clipped and be chased in the pool by dogs.

dud (dud) n., arch. a wretched person, someone easily injured by the cold or wet – ‘He’s a saft dud’ [JoJ], ‘...you poor half starved creatures, with faces as pale as clay, and ilka dud bidding another good day!’ [WSB] (see also duds).

duddie (du-dee) adj., arch. ragged, tattered – ‘The poor man’s case is nae disgrace, Though he be rough and duddy; His hands and health are greater wealth Than a’ their heaps o’ money’ [DA], ‘A gruesome auld carle ance cam’ to our door, Wi’ a bairnie baith barefit an’ dud-die’ [JT], ‘A met a doiterin, duddy, auld hallan-shaker as A lampeet doon that lang brae’ [ECS], (of a bone or joint) not picked clean, having fragments of meat remaining (also spelled ‘duddy’).

the Duddie Laird (thu-du-dee-lārd) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century – ‘Eppy Sootie and Wullie Pairk, Geordie the Buck and Higgins Phill, Jamie Nichol the Hawick band clairk, The Duddy Laird and Shallow Bill’ [HI] (also spelled ‘Duddy’, this presumably meant ‘ragged’).

He was created 1st Duke of Northumberland in 1551. That year he was also appointed Lord Warden General of the English Marches, succeeding to his son’s father-in-law, Lord Dorset. He was later Warden of the Middle and East Marches. His elder son Guilford married Lady Jane Grey and like the other co-conspirators was beheaded after she was deposed.

duds (dudz) n., pl. clothes, articles of clothing, rags – ‘The skulls o’ elk-deer, bisons, tups, Fund i’ the mosses, Worm-eaten dudds, auld cheens, an’ raips, Fossils o’ fishes’ [JoHa], ‘Thou hides the might o’ mony a manly mind, By happin’t up wi’ duds an’ pouches toom’ [JoHa] (formerly more common than in standard English; see also dud).

the Duds (thu-dudz) n. nickname for George Turnbull in the latter part of the 16th century. The name could refer to ragged clothes.

Duff (duf) n. Rev. Archibald (1810–85) born in Aberdeen, he was first minister of the Congregational Church in Hawick, at that time called the Evangelical Union Kirk. He arrived in late 1848, but was not inducted until early 1849. He had been a minister in Fraserburgh for the previous 7 years, and was also briefly in Liverpool. He first preached in the Subscription Rooms until the new premises on O’Connell Street were opened in March 1849. He was a strong advocate of Total Abstinence. As well as 3 sermons each Sunday, and prayer meetings during the week, he also preached in the open air at places such as Borthaugh Woodfoot, Stobs Woodfoot, Newmill-on-Teviot and Newmill-on-Slitrigh, as well as occasionally on Hawick stret corners. This kind of activity met a hostile reception from the Town’s other ministers. He left for Canada in 1856 and became minister of Cowansville Church, Montreal, where he was known as an accomplished Highland dancer and named his house Teviot Cottage. In the period 1862–80 he was minister at Sherbrooke, Quebec. He returned to Hawick, in 1883, it is said as Dr. Duff in 1883. Note that his name is sometimes given as ‘Alexander’, perhaps in confusion with a nearly contemporary missionary of that name (or possibly he was genuinely known by both names). He married Catherine Hamilton in 1841. They had 4 children in Fraserburgh: Margaret Elizabeth (b.1842); John Morell Mackenzie (b.1844); and Charles (b.1847). They then had 3 children who were born in Hawick: Catherine Hamilton (b.1850); Edward Hamilton (b.1852); and Joseph Wilson (b.1854). He died suddenly in Putney, London. Bert (1948/9–) brought up at the Pre-fabs and Havelock Place, he attended Wilton and Hawick High Schools. He worked at Deanbrae and Pesco’s, then as a handyman for the N.H.S. A keen runner, he won the Teviotdale Harriers’ Senior Cup in 1985. In 1970 he married Olive Johnston, who worked at Braemar. The couple were selected as Acting Father and Mother in 1990 and celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020.

duffie (du-fee) n. a toilet, particularly an outside one – ‘the duffie was threi flairs doon’ (also spelled ‘duffy’).

Duffy (du-fee) n. William ‘Willie’ (19th C.) tramp who was a regular visitor to Liddesdale in the mid-19th century. His wife was Jean McLusky. They sold smallwares and chap-books and were a source of the spreading of news in the countryside.

emphatic negative. The corresponding affirmative is: ‘A wull duist!’ [ECS] (formerly the word was commonly placed at the end of a sentence; cf. the more common juist).

Duke (jook) n. nickname for 2 men called James Aitken in the years around 1700.

the Duke o Albany see Robert Stewart

the Duke o Buccleuch (thu-jook-ō-bu-kloo)

n. head of the Scott family, and the most powerful local nobleman for centuries, as well as being one of the largest landowners in Britain. The first Duke was James Scott, Duke of Monmouth, after he married Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. The 2nd to 8th Dukes were Francis Scott on the death of his grandmother in 1732, Henry Scott after the death of his grandfather in 1751, Charles William Henry Montagu-Scott from 1812, Walter Francis Montagu-Douglas-Scott from 1819, William Henry Walter Montagu-Douglas-Scott from 1884, John Charles Montagu-Douglas-Scott from 1914, Walter John Montagu-Douglas-Scott from 1935 and Walter Francis John Montagu-Douglas-Scott from 1973. The present 10th Duke, Richard Walter John Montagu-Douglas-Scott, acceded in 2007. The family homes are at Bowhill, Branxholme Castle, Drumlanrig and Dalkeith House. Historically the Duke has been a great benefactor to the town, and the present Duke retains several ties, including being patron of the Archæological Society – ‘For there’s mony landlords i’ the land, And guid anes not a few, But ne’er a ane o’ them stand compar’d wi’ our Buccleuch’ [WH].

the Duke o Cumberland (thu-jook-ō-kum-bur-lind) n. (1721–65) son of George II, he was William Augustus. He was a career soldier, and defeated the Jacobites at Culloden in 1746, ordering that no quarter be given. As a result he earned the nickname ‘the Butcher’ and Robert Wilson says that afterwards ferocious bulls or dogs were often locally given the name ‘Will’ or ‘Cumberland’.

the Duke o Queensberry (thu-jook-ō-kweenz-bu-ree) n. title in the Scottish peerage, connected with both the Douglasses of Drumlanrig and the Scotts of Buccleuch, also spelled ‘Queensbury’. An associated title is the Lordship of Hawick and Tibbers, formerly held by the Douglasses of Drumlanrig. The 1st Duke was William Douglas, who had been Marquess of Queensberry until 1684, and was a direct descendant of the Douglasses of Drumlanrig (and Hawick). His son James became 2nd Duke and he passed the title to his own 3rd son Charles (the 1st dying in infancy and the 2nd, James, being disinherited), after which the 4th Duke was William, great-grandson of the 1st Duke. With the 5th Duke, Henry Scott (3rd Duke of Buccleuch) the title transferred to the Scotts, while the Marquessate of Queensberry was inherited by Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead.

the Duke o Roxburgh (thu-jook-ō-roks-bu-ru) n. title created in 1707 for John Ker, 5th Earl of Roxburghe and now held by the Innes-Kers, with their seat at Floors Castle. The name comes from an old spelling of Roxburgh. The eldest son of the Duke is called Marquess of Bowmont and Cessford.

the Duke o Teviotdale (thu-jook-ō-teev-yi'-dāl) n. suspended royal title. It was granted (along with the Dukedom of Cumberland and the Earldom of Armagh) to Prince Ernest Augustus, 5th son of King George III, in 1799. Ernest became King of Hanover in 1837 and died in 1851. The 2nd Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale was Prince George Frederick Alexander Charles Ernest Augustus, who married Princess Marie Alexandrine Wilhelmine Katherine Charlotte Therese Henriette Louise Pauline Elisabeth Friedrike Georgine, daughter of the Duke of Saxe-Altenburg, and was later deposed as King of Hanover in 1866. He was succeeded by his son Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick, who was also Duke of Brunswick-Lüneburg. Being associated with the enemy during WWI he was deprived of his titles and the peerages were removed from the Roll of Peers in 1919.

the Duke o the Dean (thu-jook-ō-thu-deen) n. nickname in use around the mid-19th century, presumably for someone from Wilton Dean – ‘The Duke o’ the Dean comes staggerin’ doon; O’ the ring i’ the Haugh auld Broughton’s boss, And Michael Wintrup gangs roond the toon, Cryin’ siller that’s squandered at Pitch and Toss’ [HI].

Duke Rodger (jook-ro-jur) n. nickname of Robert Rodger.

the Duke’s Airch (thu-jooks-ārch) n. arch in the south wall of St. Mary’s Kirk, put there during rebuilding in 1763 when it was found that the wall would interfere with the Buccleuch Vaults. It marks the probable site of the burial place of the early Scotts of Buccleuch.

the Duke’s Loft (thu-jooks-loft) n. eastern gallery, over the choir in St. Mary’s Church, also known as ‘the Buccleuch Loft’. The site of the Buccleuch Vault is said to be under the stairs leading to this loft.

Duke Street (jook-stree) n. street running along the east side of the Teviot, constructed in 1887, involving building up of the road to the bridge level. The area was previously undeveloped, being marked ‘Nursery Grounds’ on Wood’s 1824 map. It was named after Walter Francis Montagu-Douglas-Scott, the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It used to have the Buccleuch Memorial at the top, built in honour of the 5th Duke, now the site of the tax and social security offices. J.P. Alison designed the tenements at Nos. 1 and 2 in 1902. The street also used to run under the railway viaduct until that was removed in the 1970s. The Trinity Bar is at No. 18, and at the bottom of the street a footpath continues along the river bank. A decorated spindle whorl from there is in the Museum.

the Duke’s Wud (thu-jooks-wud, -diks-) n. popular name for Whitlaw wood, south and south-west of the Slitrig, and behind the Vertish. It can be reached from the lane that skirts the left-hand side of the golf course. The wood was formerly on the Duke of Buccleuch’s land, and presumably was given the name to distinguish it from the town’s woods at the Vertish. The wood is now managed as a nature conservancy area by Scottish Wildlife Trust – ‘And yonder is the Duke’s green wood And Whitlaw’s flowery braes’ [GD] (see also the Duik’s Wud).

dule (dool) n., poet. grief, sorrow, misery, suffering, dolour, state of lassitude – ‘Then, think what dule an’ muckle strife, To marry sic a strumpet ...’ [JR], ‘O dool! an’ what will douce fouk say, When this I tell – Death’s stown away’ [JoHa], ‘O wae to the day that I first cardit woo’, O dool to the weary beginning o’t’ [JoHa], ‘In Rama was ther ane voyce heard o’ waefu’ dool ...’ [HSR], ‘... mine ee is waistet wi’ dool, yis, my saul an’ my bellie’ [HSR], ‘When news o’ Flodden’s day o’ dule Made dark baith hut and ha’ ’ [JT], ‘In dule or disappointment, praise or blame, Teviot ran liting on its rippling way ...’ [JYH], ‘... Its dule I woudna dreed’ [WL], ‘Can we forget those olden days, The dool their evils wrought?’ [JEDM] (also spelled ‘dool’; cf. duil).

the Dule Trei (thu-dool-trī) n. ancient ash tree near Braxholme Tower, said to have been used for hangings. It can be seen in a painting from the mid-19th century, which is in the Museum. The tree was probably not as old as traditionally claimed, perhaps dating from the mid-17th century. It was said to once be part of a large rookery. It was largely blown down about 1880.

dull (dul) adj., arch. slow on the uptake – ‘Gutterblude? Hoots, Aw’m awfi’ dull o’ the uptake, ee’r a’ Gutterbludes – the best o’ Hawick’s Gutterblude’ [JEDM].

Dumbarton Drums

Dumbarton Drums (dum-bawr'-in-drumz)

n. one of the tunes traditionally played by the Drums and Fifes. The tune is similar to the traditional bagpipe tune 'The Haughs of Cromdale'. It is entirely different from the regimental tune of the Royal Scots (who were once known as 'Dumbarton's Regiment'), which dates back to the early 18th century, with suggestions it was the 'Scots March' referred to by Samuel Pepys in 1667. It is uncertain when or why the local tune was given this name. The tune is played during Picking Night on the march to the Cornet's house, if the route takes the band to the north. It is also played at other specific times, for example when the band lead the mounted cavalcade from Drumlanrig Square and along the High Street after the Dipping of the Flag, and to rouse the Town on the Saturday morning. The tune was combined with 'Rumblin Brig' in the Scocha song 'Bottles at Dawn'.

Dumb Nell (dum-nel) n. nickname for a resident of Lilliesleaf in the 19th century. It is said that Thomas Turnbull would 'read' to her the letters she received from her son in America, using 'signs that she understood as well as if she had heard the words'.

the Dumb Precentor (thu-dumb-pree-sen-tur) n. sometimes nickname of Job Gadd.

Dumbreck (dum-brek) n. Mrs. Euphemia nee Kinnear (1810–79) born in Rhynd, Perthshire, daughter of Charles Kinnear and Euphan Ritchie, she married John Dumbreck in 1830. She had daughters Euphemia Ritchie (b.1835) and Catherine Elizabeth (b.1837). She came to Hawick in 1865 with her husband and 2 daughters, setting up a boarding and day school for girls on North Bridge Street, named Teviot-side House (and now 1 Teviot-side Terrace). The school taught English, French, German, Italian, Music, Singing, Drawing and Painting. She is remembered in Hawick as composer of the music for 'I Like Auld Hawick'. Her husband died only about a year after the family's arrival in Hawick, but the school was continued by her and her daughters until 1885. She died at the District Asylum, Melrose and is buried at St. Cuthbert's in Edinburgh. Euphemia Ritchie (b.1835) daughter of John and Euphemia. In 1861 she is recorded as governess for the family of Walter Wilson of Orchard. Since this family were Quakers, then this may also have been true of the Dumbrecks. This was 4 years before the Dumbreck family moved to Hawick to start a school for girls. She and her sister Katherine probably continued to run the school after their mother's death in 1879. It is said that they retired to Colinton in Edinburgh. Kate (19th C.) presumably a daughter of John and Euphemia. She wrote 'A Seasonable Bouquet. Songs and Verses for Little Singers', which was published in Hawick (sometimes erroneously 'Drumbeck').

dumfoonder (dum-foon-dur) v. to dumbfounder, nonplus – 'Fierce Bothwell I vanquished clean, Gar'd troopers an' fitmen flee; By my faith I dumfoondert the Queen, An' wha daur meddle wi' me?' [T].

dumfoondert (dum-foon-dur) pp., adj. dumbfoundered, nonplused – '...he schot owt lichtenin's, an' dumfunderet thame' [HSR], '...how camest thou in hidder, nat haein' ane waddin' garmint? An' he was dumfoun'eret' [HSR], 'The twa' dumfoundert, stood appall'd, An' trembling, swat – their blood ran cauld' [RDW], 'Tae my noddle and wame bees and butterflies came, Sae entranced and dumfoonert was I' [DJ].

Dumfries (dum-frees) n. main town of Dumfriesshire, and later of Dumfries & Galloway Region, lying in Nithsdale, about 70 miles from Hawick. Although well to the west of Carlisle, it still retains a flavour of the Borders, and was the major metropolis of the Scottish West March. It has been a Royal Burgh since 1186, and a bridge there is recorded as early as 1283. Long a market town it also developed significant hosiery and tweed mills from the 18th century. The town was a major centre during centuries of strife on the Border, being burned by the English many times. It was also a haunt of Robert Burns, where he spent the last 5 years of his life, and where he is buried. The town was known as a manufacturer of textiles, rivalling Hawick in the 19th century. The 'Guid Nychburris Festival' is the local version of the Common Riding, taking place on the third Saturday in June. The town is sometimes called 'The Queen of the South' and has as its slogan 'A Loreburn!'. Population 32,136 (1991).

Dumfries an Galloway (dum-frees-in-ga-lu-wā) n. neighbouring region to the west of the Borders Region. It kept its name after the local government changes of 1995.

Dumfries Militia (dum-frees-mi-li-sha) n. the Royal Dumfries Volunteers were raised in 1795 as a local force of gentlemen. A second corps, begun in 1797, became the Dumfries Militia and recruited extensively across the Borders, including in Roxburghshire. Recruitment was initially by balloting eligible men in each parish (with the possibility of claiming exemptions or paying oneself out), with men serving for 5-year periods. This '4th Regiment of Militia of North Britain' was raised in 1798 to meet the perceived threat from France, with men from across the Border counties, including Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire; the regiment stood down in 1802, then reformed again in the period 1803–14. Bet Young wrote a couple of poems to celebrate them in the early 19th century. In the later 19th century many poor people in Hawick would sign up for spells in this regiment. When in Hawick they used the under flat of a house next to the old Town Hall as a guardroom, and during the Crimean War they used the Brewery Haugh for drilling. They were also known as the 'Dumfries, Roxburgh and Selkirk Militia' and the 'Scottish Borderers Regiment of Militia', and they essentially evolved into part of the King's Own Scottish Borderers – 'So we will end as we began, with Britain to succeed, As the Dumfries-shire Militia keeps our country well indeed' [BY].

Dumfriesshire (dum-frees-shīr) n. county to the south-west of Roxburghshire, entered on the A7 just after Mossbail. Parts of the parishes of Staplegordon, Wauchope, Ewes, Canonbie and Westerkirk belonging to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch were moved to Roxburghshire according to an Act of Parliament of 1672, but most returned to Dumfriesshire later. In the early 19th century there were many people living in this county who were working on frames for Hawick manufacturers, particularly in Dumfries, Langholm, Lochmaben and Lockerbie. Some of them settled in Hawick in the mid-19th century.

Dummy (du-mee) n. formerly a local nickname for someone who is unable to speak. Note that this was descriptive rather than disparaging. 'Dumbie in Braxholmtoun' is entered in the Session records receiving poor payments in the early 18th century.

the Dump (thū-dump) n. town rubbish tip, near the 'Fower Road Ends', above Stirches, adjacent to Stouslie. The earliest recorded dump (in the 18th century) was between the Slitrig and the modern Slitrig Crescent. For a while the location was in the middle of Hawick Moor (where it is said that a circus elephant is buried, after dying while performing at a circus in town, as well as the fever hospital beds). There was later a location off a road at the top of the Wellogate Brae and then the main site was near Haughhead, between the A698 and the Teviot.

dumple (dum-pul) n., arch. a quantity, bundle – 'And some brought dumplings o' woo' And some brought flitches o' bacon' [ES].

dumplin (dum-plin) n. a spicy fruit pudding, often boiled in a cloth – 'A feeneeshd ma denner wui twae rake o curny-dumpleen' [ECS] (see also cloutie-dumplin).

the Dumplin (thū-dum-plin) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

the dumps (thū-dumps) n. called 'the bumps' in England, a mild beating traditionally given to a child by school mates on birthdays, often one thump on the back for each year – 'hei hed ti rin hame efter schuil ti avoid the dumps'.

Dunbar (dun-bawr) n. Gavin (c.1490–1547) 3rd son of John of Mochrum and Janet Stewart. In 1518 he became Dean of Moray, succeeding his uncle, also Gavin Dunbar. By 1520 he was also Prior of Whithorn (although not after some dispute), and was also Preceptor to James V. In 1524 he was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow, thus becoming the superior of the church in Teviotdale. In 1531 he was the Archbishop who was renting lands in Lilliesleaf to Scotts. Although he had been given exemption to the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of St. Andrews (as Primate of All Scotland), there was a long running feud with his fellow archbishop David Beaton, including a brawl between the attendants of the 2 archbishops in Glasgow Cathedral in 1545, in which both processional crosses were broken! He was Chancellor of Scotland 1528–43. He fought against early reformers of the Church and was known for his 'Monition of Cursing' against the Border Rievers, issued in 1525, an astonishing curse, running to about 1500 words, which all parish priests were required to read out, including 'I curse thair heid and all the haris of thair heid . . . I curse them gangand, and I curse them rydand . . . 'I curse thair wiffis, thair barnis, and thair servandis participand with thaim in thair deides . . . thair catales, thair woll, thair scheip, thair horse, thair swyne, thair geise, thair hennys . . . and the gudis and housis that is necessair for their sustentatioun and weifair', and condemning the rievvers to 'all the vengeance that evir was takin sen the warlde began for oppin synnys, and all the plagis and pestilence that ever fell on man or beist'. He was a witness to several charters relating to the Scotts of Buccleuch around the 1520s. He attended the trials and signed the death sentences of several early Protestants, who were later considered as martyrs. He was buried in an elaborate tomb he had constructed for himself in Glasgow Cathedral, which was destroyed by reformers 13 years later. His seal showed an elaborate image of St. Kentigern and the words 'SIGILLUM GAVINI ARCHIEPI. GLASGUENSIS'. Patrick (16th C.) Reader at Cavers Church from 1576–78. Thomas (15th/16th C.) resident of Wauchope in Rulewater. In 1502 David Turnbull of Wauchope was his surety at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh.

Dunbush (dun-bush) n. former name for a piece of land owned by Scott of Harden. In the 1788 assessment of the county valuation it is 'Dunsbush' and valued (along with Harden and Highchesters Mill) at £463 9s. In the 1788 county valuation (and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it was listed along with Harden and Highchesters Mill as 'Dunsbush' (or 'Dunbush'). This was clearly the name for a piece of land near Harden, but the precise location is not clear.

Duncan (dung-kin) n. name of 2 Kings of Scotland. Duncan I (d.1040) King from 1034, succeeding his maternal grandfather Malcolm II. He was son of Bethoc, who was daughter of Malcolm. He was previously ruler of Strathclyde. He was slain by Macbeth, and his sons Malcolm III and Donald were both Kings afterwards. Duncan II (c.1060–94) King of Scotland from 1093, when he drove out his uncle Donald (Bane) III. He was a Canmore, son of Malcolm III and his first wife Ingibjorg and spent much of his life in the English court. He was killed, probably by a supporter of Donald.

Duncan (dung-kin) n. George 'the Admiral' (19th C.) Hawick character of the mid-19th century. Having been in the navy he would always turn out on special occasions wearing a blue coat with brass buttons, hence his nickname. He could be the George (b.1796/7) living on the Loan in 1841 and 1851, widower of Janet Thorburn and with children Agnes, Sarah, Martha, George and William. Henry (18th/19th C.) servant at Hassendeanburn in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. James (16th C.) resident of one of the farms in the lower Borthwick whose residents complained in 1549 about a raid by the English, assisted by Kers and others. He may have been at Wilton Green, and was probably related to William, who stayed at Wiltonburn and John, who was at Borthaugh. James (19th C.) one of the main organisers of the Hawick Reformers of the early 1800s. He is probably the man of the same name who was listed at Hawick in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. Rev. James (1754/5–1830) born in Kirkcaldy, he was minister of the

Cameronian Chapel in Denholm from 1774, taking over from John Arnot. He complained in 1787 that the congregation was unable to support him and he left Denholm for Edinburgh, but he must have returned at least some of the time, since he submitted a similar complaint in 1796. Said to be a great linguist, he also taught Latin and Greek to eke out his living. One of his pupils was the young John Leyden, who was said to have walked several miles every day across the moors to his classes 'when a poor barefooted boy'. He was described as a plain preacher who 'possessed none of the grandiloquent embellishments in delivery'. He was a strict disciplinarian with his congregation, regularly rebuking people from the pulpit. He had a 'Black List' detailing all the sins that would stop people from taking communion; this included 'All those persons who carry any sticks from Cavers plantations without authority', for which the Laird of Cavers granted him an annual pension. He managed to keep the congregation united through his time in Denholm, but after his death they ceased to worship together and were effectively absorbed by the Independents. He left Denholm in 1809 to go to Linktown in Fife, where he was minister without being formally inducted. He retired before 1816. He married Isabella Scott and their son James was the first minister of Teviothead Parish, as well as being known as an entomologist. His gravestone, erected by the congregation, said that they cherished 'the sincerity and exemplary piety of his character, his faithfulness in the discharge of his ministerial duties, and unwearied solicitude for their best interests'. Leyden's father presented him with a copy of 'The Poetical Remains', which is now in the Museum. Rev. James (1804/5–61) born in Denholm, son of the minister of the Cameronian Chapel there and Isabella Scott. He was educated at Edinburgh University, spending a few years afterwards as a private tutor and in studying botany and entomology. He helped Rev. David Aitken of Minto compile a list of the rarer insects and plants seen in the Parish of Minto for the New Statistical Account in 1838. In 1850, at the urging of friends and family, he became minister at Teviothead, being the first incumbent of the newly created Parish. However, this was said to be against his own judgement, and a struggle because of his nervous temperament in public. He was deprived in 1853 and published a 'Letter to Members of the Church and Inhabitants of the Parish of Teviothead' in Hawick that year. However, he flourished as an entomologist, publishing a 'Catalogue of Coleoptera' in 1834, 'The Natural History of Foreign Butterflies' (1837), 'Introduction to Entomology' (1840), and 'The Natural History of Exotic Moths' (1841), as well as writing the chapters on Geology, Botany and Natural History for Jeffrey's 'The History and Antiquities of Roxburghshire', which included a list of indigenous plants. He also indexed the entire 'Encyclopædia Britannica' for the publishers. He was preparing a biography of John Leyden when he died in Denholm, and was a primary instigator for the erection of the Leyden Monument. His interest in nature and other topics were an early influence on James 'Dictionary' Murray. He made a catalogue of plants observed in the area around Jedburgh, including many species listed as being found at Denholm Dean, Minto Hill, Ruberslaw, etc. These were to have formed a chapter in Jeffrey's 'History of Roxburghshire'. James 'Jim' (19th/20th C.) from Aberdeen originally, he married one of the daughters of Appletreehall blacksmith Robert Davidson. The couple lived at Deanbrae and then he became joiner at Appletreehall. He was known for his prize gooseberries. He had a son Hector. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. John (16th C.) recorded as holder of the vicarage of Hassendean in 1538. In that year he was 'escheated for barratry' (i.e. negligence and trade in the sale of church appointments) and the fruits of the benefice were granted to George Scott. In 1544 he resigned Hassendean in favour of John Anderson. In 1553 he resigned from the Clerkship of Melrose. James V described him as a worthless old man, and he is also stated to have been 'a notorious character of the period and one of the most typical of the band of Scots who at this time were hangers-on at the papal court and agents in the purchase of benefices'. John (16th C.) resident of Borthaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He was probably related to William who was a resident at Wiltonburn at the same time, as well as James. John (17th C.) described as a 'traveller' in 1685 when he was charged, along with other local men, with being a Covenanter. All the men took the 'Test' in Hawick and promised not to frequent conventicles, the letter being signed by Sir William Eliott of Stobs. John (17th/18th C.) surgeon who arrived in Hawick around 1714. He is recorded in the Hawick Parish records, with the minister questioning the testimonial he had from his former parish.

He was married to Anne Munroe. Rev. J.W. minister at Burnfoot until 1966 when he was translated to Aberdeen. Margaret 'Peggie' or 'Peggy' (19th C.) cock-eyed character in the song 'Pawkie Paiterson'. It was said that 'she could not be characterised as a beauty', but the extent to which the song was accurate is unknown. She is listed as an agricultural labourer on the Kirkwynd in the 1841 census, living there with her son William (and next door to Thomas Duncan and his family, probably her brother). In 1851 she was a hosiery seamstress on the Back Row. She was probably the daughter of William and Betty Duncan born in Hawick in 1800 – 'Peggy Duncan and Jenny Din, Nellie Herkness and Mensie Mein; The Wilton Priest wi' his coat o' skin, Staney Stewart and Candy Jean' [HI]. Rev. Thomas (see Duncanson). Thomas (b.1793/4) weaver living on the Kirk Wynd in 1841 and 1851 with his wife Ann and children Margaret, Betty, Mary, Kirsty, William and James. He is probably the Thomas who was one of the men in the vanguard of the Hawick band at the Carthaugh Baa in 1815. W.F. (19th/20th C.) schoolmaster at Teviot Grove Academy. He married Jane Fisher, daughter of Peter Laidlaw. They moved to Vancouver, Canada. Walter (18th/19th C.) thong-maker in Hawick. The death of a child of his is recorded in 1819. Walter (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. William (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. It seems likely he was related to John who was a resident of Borthaugh at the same time and also James. William (18th C.) servant at Midshiels in 1788, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. His name appears to be written 'Duncion'. William (d.1797) wright from Eskdale who died in Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son William was baptised in 1782. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Whithope Mill in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He married Margaret Miller in 1779 and their son Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1787. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Turnbull in 1780 and she died in Hawick in 1815. Their children included: William (b.1781); Christian (b.1782); John (b.1784); Helen (b.1786); Thomas (b.1788); Betty (b.1790);

Thomas (again, b.1793); and James (b.1795). Margaret (b.1800), with the mother's name given as 'Betty Duncan', may also be his child. The witnesses in 1793 were Robert Wilson and Walter Inglis. William (18th/19th C.) baker and publican in Hawick. He is 'Junr. Baker' in 1801, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Hawick. His daughter Janet died in Hawick in 1808. In 1816, along with butcher Francis Deans, he was found guilty of unspecified fraudulent activities. He may be the William born to William and Betty Turnbull in Hawick in 1781 (also formerly 'Duncane' and 'Duncan').

Duncan's Grain (dung-kinz-grān) n. small stream forming part of the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn. It rises on Millstone Edge and Tudhope Hill.

Duncan's Hole (dung-kinz-hōl) n. earthwork along the south side (right bank) of Hob's Burn, between Bonchester Bridge village and Hobsburn house. It is on a narrow tongue of land between the burn and an old channel for the Rule Water. It consists of a rampart and external ditch, possibly of mediæval date.

Duncanson (dung-kin-sin) n. Rev. Andrew (17th C.) son of Rev. Thomas, who he assisted as minister of Bowden briefly. He moved to St. Boswell's in 1618 and was still there in 1654. He married Margaret, brother of William Riddell of Greatlaws (in Lilliesleaf Parish). In 1630 his wife was served heir to her brother. Their children included: Andrew, who was minister at Maxton; and Thomas. Rev. Andrew (d.bef. 1672) son of Andrew. In 1631 he was served heir to his mother Margaret Riddell. He was minister at Maxton from 1640 and confined to his Parish in 1662 for not conforming to Episcopacy. He succeeded to his mother's lands of Greatlaws. He was recorded in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when he paid £104 for Greatlaws. He was also listed at Greatlaws in 1678 (although probably already deceased). He additionally paid the land tax at Maxpoffle in 1678. Rev. Thomas (d.1621) probably son or grandson of Thomas of Maxpoffle and Janet Oliphant. He was presented to the vicarage of Bowden in 1567 and admitted there early the following year. In 1568 he was also Minister of Lilliesleaf. In 1571 he was presented to the Rectory of Lilliesleaf. It is recorded in 1575 (when he was 'Dunkesoun') that Bowden, Lilliesleaf, Longnewton and Melrose were all in his care, although he had the assistance of two readers, with also individual readers at each of the 4 parishes. When he died he was 'father of the church', i.e. the oldest surviving minister. His son was Andrew, who succeeded him as minister of Bowden. He may be the Thomas 'Duncan' who is recorded in a deed of 1612 as schoolmaster at Yair (also formerly 'Duncason'; it was interchangeable with 'Duncan' in early times).

dunch (dunch, dunsh) v., arch. to strike, knock – 'Wha' mischief's that, what, deil. d'ye mean by dunchin?' [JoHa], 'Cairts an hurlbarrihs an yirrint-vans an thing, that every-wee-bittie dunsht other i the strooshie' [ECS], n., arch. a knock, blow, bump – 'But yet, what reck? we downa jook, We'll staun' a dunch, nor think o' fa'in'' [JoHa], '...wui a yerck an a dunsh an a stech an a 'Parp!'' [ECS], 'Oor Jock hed ti gie's a dunsh for ti waken iz even than' [ECS] (also spelled 'dunsh').

duncht (duncht, dunsht) pp., arch. struck, knocked, bumped – '... whan A'm owther geetin jaappeet an splairggeat wui dirrt, or dunsht wui folk' [ECS] (also 'dunsht').

Dundas (dun-das) n. Jean (b.1773/4) born in Bombay, she was ia dealer in small wares, listed at about 19 Howegate in 1841. In 1851 she was there as a servant with retired mason Peter Taylor. William Pitt (1801–83) son of Robert of Arniston, he was an advocate, who became the first Register General for Scotland, from 1854. There is some suggestion that he was not particularly assiduous in his post. He was assisted by his Superintendent of Statistics, Dr. James Stark, who may have done most of the work. His name appears at the foot of several local parish records (e.g. for Cavers in the late 18th century and Hawick in the early 19th century), suggesting that these were copied out from deteriorating originals.

Dundas-Buchan (dun-das-bu-kin) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) married Janet Turnbull. Their son Henry was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1803.

dundrum (dun-drum) n., poet. a blockhead, dolt – 'My bluid flies up whene'er I think, How brainless dundrums sneer an' wink, An' shan' an' shile, and leering blink, At povertie' [JoHa].

dune see din

dung (dung) pp., arch. knocked over, smote, overcame – 'But I hae claught a newer creed, An' dung the auld ane a' abreed ...' [JoHa], 'As wae an' sair dung doon i' mooth, She through the dirt gaed wadin'' [JoHa] (past participle of ding, with dang being the usual past tense).

Dungell (dung-ul) n. John (16th C.) recorded in Whithope in 1580, with his surname appearing as 'Dwngell'. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk between John Scott in Whithope and Robert Scott of Haining.

Dungeon Plantin (dung-jin-plawn'-in) n. plantation of trees by the main entrance to Weens House, lying south of the house, and east of the B6357. There are 2 small hills there surrounded by a turf bank. It has been suggested that one of them was the site of the original Weens peel house, but there is no physical evidence for this. There is also a nearby linear earthwork, of unknown age or function.

Dunhog Moss (dun-hōg-mos) n. marshy area to the right of the A7 shortly before coming to Selkirk, lying further to the east than Hare Moss. It now forms part of the Hare & Dunhog Moss Nature Reserve. There are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation on a field to the south-east.

the Dunion (thu-dun-yin) n. hill on the backroad from Denholm to Jedburgh, formerly reaching a height of 1,092 ft (333 m). The hill lay entirely within the bounds of Bedrule Parish, but part of it may once have been in Jedburgh Parish. It was the site of an Iron Age settlement, and the summit was used as a beacon during the times of perceived threat of French invasion. More recently the contours of its peak have been changed by extensive quarrying for road metalling. The fort had a massive drystone wall surrounding the summit, enclosing an area about 170 m by 55 m, separated by a dyke into 2 enclosures. There were also external ramparts, as well as 7 hut circles, which are probably later in age, and the foundations of 2 rectangular buildings, which could have been mediæval look-out posts. The fort was excavated in 1961 and 1962, but mostly destroyed over the next decade or so. However, further excavation in the 1980s revealed that the fort covered an area much larger than just the summit. On the north-east side are 14 roughly circular scoops, corresponding to a settlement associated with the fort, with carbon dating giving an age around 100 B.C.E. A cinerary urn was found on the northern slopes by Mr. Pott of Dodd in 1885, and later donated to the National Museum of Antiquities. A stone axe-head, and 2 flint arrow-heads have also been collected from the hill. Before quarrying removed much of the summit, it was said to command one of the most glorious views in the Borders. The summit formerly hosted a triangulation pillar – ‘See the Dunion grey mark the Eildon’s rise Like sentinel watch towers to greet the skies’ [TC], ‘When Ruberslaw puts on his cowl, The Dunion on his hood, Then a’ the wives o’ Teviotside Ken there will be a flood’ [T] (the name appears in a 1513 report by Lord Dacre as ‘the Dungenyon’; it is ‘Dvnzone’ in 1576, ‘Dunzeon’ in the 1650s, ‘Dunyon’ in 1662 and ‘Dunian’ in 1795 and 1839; it is ‘Hill of Dunionn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and has its modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map; its origin may be ‘hill with the dungenyon’).

Dunion Hill see the Dunion

Dunira (dun-I-ru) n. Victorian mansion on Buccleuch Road, being the last house inside the town boundaries on the New Road. It was probably designed by J.P. Alison and erected around 1892. It was built for tweed merchant William Laidlaw Stevenson and manufacturer James Boyd Sime later lived there. More recently it became a guest house and when the owners moved further along Buccleuch Road to the old manse house, they (confusingly) moved the name with it.

the Dunk (thu-dungk) n. deep pool at a bend in the Teviot at the southern end of the Park, often used for swimming in the summer months – ‘Heavy wi’ denners And heat, the scholars dreamed o’ the Dunk And Coble ...’ [DH], ‘Aa want naething else adae Wi money Except to sit at the Dunk And watch the auld currency Floatin’ bye’ [DH], ‘... Or by the Dunk to Goldilands Ayont where waters meet’ [WFC], ‘We don’t go swimming in the Park, In the Dunk oo hev a dook’ [IWL] (possibly from mediæval Scots ‘donk’ meaning ‘damp, moist’).

Dun Law (dun-law) n. hill in the Borders to the south of Soutra at the western end of the Lammernmuirs, reaching 393 m (1,289 ft). It is the site of a large wind farm built in 2000, consisting of 26 turbines on 40 m high towers, and easily visible from the A68.

Dunlop (dun-lop) n. Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in Selkirk Parish according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He was surely related to Walter, who farmed at Whitmuirhall. He was listed as owner of parts of Silverbuthall in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Archibald of Whitmuir was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he witnessed a baptism for William Stewart. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1644. He is probably the James who married Isobel Paterson in Ashkirk in 1643. James (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. William was also listed at Birkwood and so surely related. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for William in 1691. Along with William he witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull in 1694.

James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Johnstone and their children included Agnes (b.1708), Walter (b.1714), George (b.1720) and John (b.1724). James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Rutherford and they had an unnamed daughter in 1738. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included George (b.1780), John (b.1781) and Janet (b.1783). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1772 for James Scott and Marjory Irvine. James (18th C.) probably son of Walter of Whitmuir, he was a doctor in Rochdale and also in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He is probably the 'Dr Dunlap of Rochdale' who married Miss Fisher in Hawick in 1797. His daughter Nancy died in Rochdale in 1806 and his wife Margaret in 1820, aged 50. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Eastcote recorded on the ballots for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801. John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1718 he was recorded as tenant in Clerklands and in 1724 was tenant in Langton. It seems likely he was closely related (perhaps brother) of Walter, who was previously tenant in Langton. He married Isobel Taylor and their children included Margaret (b.1716), James (b.1718), Walter (b.1720), Robert (b.1722) and Marion (b.1724). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Archibald and their children included John (b.1726), Janet (b.1728) and Andrew (b.1733). John (b.1710) son of Walter. He was probably also tenant of local lands. In 1760 he purchased Whitmuir Hall (east of Selkirk) from John Goudie (Divinity Professor in Edinburgh). He was succeeded by his son Walter, while another son was John. He may be the John who married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk Parish in 1745. John (18th C.) younger son of John. He was tenant of Chisholme farm. In 1779 William Stoddart had a discharge of a bill with him. His children (born in Roberton Parish, but with no mother's name given) included: James (b.1770); George (b.1771); John (b.1773); Rev. Walter (b.1775), minister at Newcastleton and Dumfries; and William (b.1777). He is probably the John 'late in Chisholme now in Selkirk Common' who was complained about in Selkirk in 1790 by Hawick carrier Archibald Paterson for non-payment of a bill. John of Whitmuir Hall (18th/19th C.) recorded in documents in Selkirk in 1821 and

1822, related to road trustees and improvements. Margaret (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Her surname is written 'Dilape'. Patrick (15th C.) probably name of a presbyter of Glasgow Diocese who was a witness to the 1464/5 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. His name appears as '[a]trio de Dunlop' (with the first letter illegible). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant of Ashkirk Town and Synton Parkhead in the early 1700s. He and his brother John also between them held the farms of Chisholme, Whitslade and others. His son was John. Probably the same John was tenant in 'Longtoun' in Ashkirk Parish in 1716; He married Jean Halliday and their children included Agnes (b.1703), Janet (b.1706), John (b.1714) and Jean (b.1716). He is probably the Walter who was tenant in Ashkirk in 1753. Walter of Whitmuirhall (1738–1808) eldest son of John and brother of John. He was recorded at Whitmuirhall on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1788 he was listed as owner of both Whitmuir and Whitmuirhall, valued at £673 13s 4d. He was recorded as owner of 7 horses in the 1797 Horse Tax Roll for Selkirk Parish and also paid the dog tax there in the same year. In 1761 in Ashkirk Parish he married Agnes, eldest daughter of Robert Dickson of Hassendeanburn. He had 7 sons and 5 daughters, including: James (b.1766), who was a physician in Rochdale; Katherine (b.1768); Archibald (b.1770), who succeeded his father and sold the farm of Whitmuir in 1818; Isabel (b.1772); Walter (b.1774); John (b.1776), 4th son, who lived in Ayrshire and died unmarried; Janet (b.1778); Jean (b.1780); Robert, cloth merchant in Huddersfield; William (b.1785), 6th son, who became Quartermaster-General of the Bengal army; and Charles, who purchased Whitmuir Hall from the trustees of his brother William. The earlier children were baptised in Ashkirk and the later ones in Selkirk. Rev. Walter 'Wattie' (1774–1846) son of John, who was a younger son of Walter of Whitmuir Hall. His father was tenant of Chisholme and he was born in Roberton Parish. His mother was Agnes Hunter. He was in Prof. Lawson's junior class at Selkirk. The family attended the East Bank Kirk in Hawick. He was apprenticed to a baker in Leith, but switched careers to train for the ministry in Edinburgh and at the Burgher Theological Hall in Selkirk. He was ordained at Newcastleton Burgher Kirk in 1804 (the first minister in the new building). He was said to be known for his 'ready and pungent wit' and 'famous among South country humorists for the jokes he made himself or was the subject of among others'; however, no stories survive relating to his time in Liddesdale. It is said that he baked the pie for his own ordination dinner. He lived in a manse that was built next to the new church in Newcastleton. He greatly increased the congregation during his time in Newcastleton, but was called to Dumfries in 1809, moving there in 1810. In Dumfries he became the first minister of the new Secession Kirk on Buccleuch Street there, where he served until about 2 years before his death. He married Isabella Scott, who died in 1814. He secondly married Janet Jessie McLean, who died in 1828. Their son Archibald emigrated to Australia, while his oldest daughter Catherine (or 'Kitty') died in 1838. William (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He was presumably related to James, who was also listed at Birkwood. Along with James he witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull in 1694. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray and Bessie Dunlop in 1689 and others for John Murray, William Scott and William Allan in 1690. He married Jean Cuthbertson and their children included Euphan (b.1691) and Jean (b.1692). The witnesses in 1691 were James Gray and James Dunlop. Perhaps the same William had earlier married Janet Hislop, with their daughter Margaret baptised in 1688 (formerly written 'Dilape', 'Dinlap', 'Dinlop', 'Dunlap', 'Dunlape' and variants).

Dunlop see Wullie Dunlop

Dunn (dun) n. Eling (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for all of his tenants, appearing in Hawick to assure that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. It is unclear what this forename corresponds to, and whether this might be a woman's name. James (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1708 for gardener William Riddell (along with gardener James Falsyde), in 1712 for William Riddell and in 1725 (along with Robert Ker) for weaver Walter White and Jean Ker. He married Margaret Ker and their children included: Jean (b.1707); Janet (b.1707); Robert (b.1708); John (b.1708); Helen (b.1710); Mary (b.1713); Margaret (b.1716); James (b.1719); and Adam (b.1721). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailie George Martin and tailor Henry Orrock, in 1713 were gardener William Riddell and Robert Ker (probably related to his wife) and in 1719 were gardener William Riddell (again) and carrier James Simpson. James (b.c.1780) wright at Chesters according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Southden Parish. James B., A.R.S.A. (19th/20th C.) Edinburgh architect famous for deigning the Scotsman Building with James Leslie Findlay. In Hawick he was commissioned to design the Hawick War Memorial. Jean (17th/18th C.) born in Selkirk, she was a servant to Andrew Jerdon in Hawick, being put out of the Town twice for failing to produce a testimonial from her former Parish. She was also servant to Mrs. Fraser (although whether this was Hawick is unclear) and travelled between the parishes of Hawick, Galashiels and Prestonpans. John (1780/1–1807) from Ruletownhead, he died of fever and was buried at Byrness in Northumberland. Margaret (b.1811/2) from Jedburgh, she was a grocer and spirit merchant at Bonchester Bridge in 1851. Marilyn (??–) from Hawick, she graduated from Edinburgh University and is Senior Lecturer in Medieval History at the University of Glasgow. She has published books on Byzantine and monastic history. Thomas (15th C.) probably from the Rule valley. In 1493 Archibald Plenderleith in Bedrule was charged with stealing a cow and an ox from him. Perhaps the same 'Thomas dwn de Jedworth' was also mentioned in 1493 when Walter Ker of Cessford served as surety for the Laird of Bedrule not harming him. It is possible he was the same Thomas for whose murder John Robson in Auld Roxburgh was declared a fugitive in 1502. Thomas (19th C.) gardener at Stobs. He married Ann Henderson. Their son Robert died of consumption in 1857, aged 36. William (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas Turnbull to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary's Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as 'Willelmo Dun'. Probably the same William is recorded in 1494/5 when Thomas Turnbull of Phaup was fined for his non-appearance in Selkirk. William (19th C.) said to have been one of only 2 residents of Bonchester Brigend who stayed in their houses during the devastating flood of 1846. William (19th C.) carrier, listed in 1852 leaving the Black Bull in Hawick on Thursday's, travelling to Canonbie and Annan (formerly written 'Dun').

Dunnan

Dunnan (du-nin) n. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Braxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Dunnand’, which might correspond to some other modern name. He is actually the last man named.

dunner (du-nur) v., arch. to make a noise suggestive of thunder, rumble, clatter – ‘Thunners dunnered o’er ye’, ‘...and though it gard the divots stour off the house riggins and every caber dunner ...’ [EM1820], ‘... When fell on her ear a dunnering sound, Mix’d with a boisterous cry’ [JTe], ‘... She tuk along the road hersel’, As fast as she could dunner’ [JoHa], ‘But dunneran tyres And poisoned reek Chowk her till she Can hardly speak’ [DH], n., arch. a noise like thunder – ‘... maist deaved an daivert an donnert wui the rummellin dunner o an eend-on bizz’ [ECS].

Dunnerine Haa (du-ne-rin-haw) n. an old cottage that stood near Barnes in the early 19th century. It was the home of James Cavers, known as ‘Auld Dunnerum’, who reached the age of 98.

Dunnett (du-ni) n. Rev. Arthur Henry (1882–1940) son of William, minister in Kilmarnock, he was educated in Kilmarnock and at Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. He was licensed by Irvine Presbytery in 1910, assisted at Dalziel and St. Mungo’s in Glasgow and was ordained as minister of St. John’s in Hawick near the end of 1913. He was translated to Teviothead in 1920. He demitted in 1924 when he was appointed as Depute Home Mission Secretary. After the Union of 1929 he became one of the Secretaries of the Home Board for the Church of Scotland. He married Jessie, daughter of John Lamb, the West Kilbride minister. Their children were Fiona and William Gavin (b.1919). He published ‘The Child’s Prayer Book’ (1920), ‘Book of Prayers’ (1925) and an article ‘For Christ or Congregation’ in ‘The Church in Changing Scotland’ (1934).

Duns (dunz) n. small market and former county town in Berwickshire. Originally called Dunse and built on the dun (Iron Age fort), it became a burgh of barony in 1490. Duns Castle includes part of a 14th century tower, and Duns Law is the site of the Covenanters’ Stone. Nearby stands Manderston House, as well as Nisbet House and Wedderburn Castle. It was the birthplace of Duns Scotus (who indirectly gave us the word ‘dunce’) and also has the Jim Clark Museum. Duns summer festival was started in 1949, and takes place in July. It includes a ride to the summit of Duns

Duntersdales

Law by the Reiver and his supporters. The town motto is ‘Duns Dings A’!’, relating to a rout of the Earl of Northumberland’s men there in 1377. The town handball game was carried out until 1886 and revived recently as part of the Summer Festival. Population (1991) 2,444 (formerly spelled ‘Dunse’).

Duns (dunz) n. Patrick (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. His name is written ‘Dunce’. Also in 1694 he witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk for James Brown.

Dunside Rig (dun-sīd-rig) n. hill to the south-west of Buccleuch and north of Phenzhopehaugh, reaching a height of 367 m.

Dunsmuir (dunz-mewr) n. Robert (15th C.) witness to a charter of 1453, the first known relating to lands in Hawick. His name was written ‘Dunsmyre’.

Dunstone (dun-stān) n. area just to the south-west of Lillieasleaf village. The hill immediately west of the village was formerly called Dunstone Height and is now marked ‘Dunstone Roundle’, reaching a height of 169 m. Dunstone Mill is probably an old name for Riddell Mill (although it is possible it was a separate mill). Some of the lands of Riddell of that Ilk in Lillieasleaf are described in 1595/6 as being called ‘the West-Maynis alias Dunstone or Myris’. Adam Young was farmer there in the 1860s (also written ‘Dunston’).

dunt (dun) n. a blow, thump – ‘A gien eet a right guid dunt’, ‘Yet up he raise, the truth to tell, And laid about him dunts fu’ dour ...’ [CPM], ‘... for it wad be a gey sair pliskie ti rin dunt up again’ the braw moniment at the fit’ [ECS], ‘But nought will scare him frae his neuk, Or gar him rair, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fervent prayer’ [DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule and pain, A wheen o’ oor neebors Maun thole alane’ [WL], v. to strike, bump, knock – ‘hei fairly dunted his heid on the lintel’, ‘Poor Johny’s heart began to dunt, He though the ghaist incivil ...’ [JR], ‘... And he duntit and knockit to waken the lass’ [JoHa], ‘... But he dunted the banes o’ the bodie’ [JoHa], ‘My hairt dunts, my strenth fæils me; as for the licht o’ mine eyne, it alsua is gane frae me’ [HSR] (see also duntit).

Duntersdales (dun-turz-dālz) n. former name for land lying south of the Slitrig, between and uphill from Usuch Haugh and Deidhaugh. In 1892 it was feued by the Duke of Buccleuch to John Laing & Sons and James Melrose & Sons, both of Slitrig Crescent (the origin is uncertain, perhaps relating to ‘dunters’, the spirits that inhabited old castles, or alternatively a combination of Old English and Gaelic for ‘hill fort athwart the valley’).

Dun Tae (dun-tā) n. hill between Carlin Tooth and Carter Fell. It may be the ‘Dun’ listed among the highest hills in Castleton Parish in 1839.

duntit (dun-tee’, -ti’) pp., arch. beaten, struck – ‘But he tirl’d fu’ lood at the window glass, And he duntit and knockit to waken the lass’ [JoHa].

Dupligs (doo-pligz) n. place name listed as ‘Dupligis’ among the farms and towers that were burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. It is listed under places on the Rule Water, but beside ‘Tronnyhill’ (which is probably Troneyhill near Belses). The name may be an error for some other place.

dure see duir

Durham (du-rum) n. small city in north-eastern England, centre of the Anglican Diocese of Durham. This traces its history to the Kingdom of Northumbria in the 7th century, the headquarters shifting from Lindisfarne to Chester-Le-Street and then the cathedral built in the loop of the River Wear from the late 10th century (and the present building started in 1093). The Cathedral still contains the remains and relics of St. Cuthbert. Teviotdale may have been part of this diocese until transferred to Glasgow sometime around 1100. Reginald of Durham, in his description of miracles attributed to St. Cuthbert, makes the first mention of Hawick in the 12th century. The town was also the location for the Battle of Neville’s Cross in 1346, also sometimes known as the Battle of Durham.

Durham (du-rum) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) holder of lands in West Lilliesleaf. His son Adam sold their lands to Melrose Abbey. Adam (13th C.) son of Adam. Some time in the period 1214–49 he sold to the monks of Melrose his lands of ‘Thodholesid’ and ‘Standestanerig’ which he held of Sir William Riddell in the territory of West Lilliesleaf. This was ‘out of great need for himself, his wife and his children. His name is recorded as ‘Adam filius Ade de Dunelmo. The precise location of the lands is unclear, but they were adjacent to Clerklands.

Durie (joo-ree) n. Andrew (d.1558) son of John of Durie in Fife, and brother of George, who was Archdeacon of St. Andrews. He became Bishop of Galloway and Abbot of Melrose, under very dubious circumstances, it is said. He is meant to have been a very poor Abbot. In 1524 he was recorded as Postulate of the Abbey when he re-granted Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme the office of bailiary of the Abbey’s lands. In 1529 he witnessed the indenture to keep the peace between the Kerrs and the Scotts. He is said to have died of shock after Protestant rioters attacked St. Giles Cathedral. His shield bore the figure of Mary, together with a kneeling bishop, the arms of Durie and the words ‘S’ ANDREE ABBATIS DE MEL-ROS’ (also spelled ‘Dury’).

durk (durk) n., arch. a drik, short dagger – ‘Assaults were common; the weapons ... ‘an durke’ ...’ [JW1649] (also written ‘durk’).

Durnsteids (durn-steedz) n. Durnsteads, former name for lands in the Lordship of Winnington, once owned by the Eliotts of Stobs. It was recorded in the late 17th century.

Durrough (du-roch) n. Mr. ?? (17th/18th C.) described as ‘dancing-master’ in the Hawick Parish records. He was in Hawick for part of 1715 and 1716, presumably teaching dance, and received a certificate for good deportment to carry to his next abode (possibly the same as ‘Darrow’ or ‘Darrow’, a family well-represented in Berwickshire).

dursent (dur-sin’) pp., arch. dared not – ‘... the Doctor would again have to prefer his celebrated request to be allowed to crawl under a mill-wheel after an otter, because ‘I’m smaller than a dog; and I dursn’t let then go there’ [HHD] (also written ‘dursn’t’; see also dursni and durstni).

durst (durst) pp., arch. dared, ventured, challenged – ‘...and none of the tenants’ hirsels durst stand before the Town’s hirsels for mixing’ [C&L1767], ‘Ha! dar’st thou point thy blood-stain’d hand at her’ [JoHa], ‘We’ve lis’ent to the fearfu’ tale till we durst nae gae hame ...’ [JoHa], ‘...it was some time before either durst show their face on the streets’ [AM], ‘...ye durst not crook ye’re mooth tae whustle on a Fast-day, but now ye may whustle or sing or anything ye like on a Sabbath day’ [WiS], ‘Our land had given heroes birth, That durst the boldest brave, And taught above tyrannic dust The thistle tufts to wave’ [HSR], ‘... Whom I durst scarcely welcome, yet could na wish away’ [HSR], ‘Such was its force in the Market Place that no man, even with a horse, durst attempt to pass’ [BM1897], ‘A hained that view an taen the guid o’d as lang’s A durst an cood’ [ECS] (the past tense of daur; also written ‘darst’).

durstni (durst-ni) pp., arch. dared not – ‘... An’ for his saul to strike them Durstna that day’ [JoHa], ‘I’d fain to Harden gie’n my vote, But for my life I durstna do’t’ [RDW], ‘A cood fain heh dwinglt, ... bit A fair durstna’ [ECS], ‘He durstna even whistle For fear it raised a rustle ...' [FL] (also dursent and dursni).

Dustybaa (dus-tee-baw) n. nickname for John Scott in Aikwood in the 16th century.

Dustyfit (dus-tee-fi) n. Dustyfoot, nickname for Walter Riddell of Allanhaugh Mill in the early 18th century.

Dutchburn (duch-burn) n. John (b.1788/9) from the Sunderland area, he was a tailor in the West-end. In 1841 he is recorded on the Back Row, and was on the Loan in 1851. His wife Jane was from Gatehouse-of-Fleet.

the Dutch Companies (thu-duch-kom-pa-neeze) n. 4 companies of Col. Amerongen's regiment, which were quartered upon the inhabitants of Hawick for several weeks in 1719 – 'This day ye minister acquainted ye elders that seeing the Dutch companies are now removed to England, he would distribute among ye poor ...ye money thereat collected' [PR1719].

dux (duks) n. a top pupil in school – 'Lugs Tait was the dux in his year' – 'I should like to be a High School dux, with medals and books galore, Or swerve like Sutherland down the line to a rattling Mansfield score' [JYH] (from Latin).

dwall (dwawl) v., arch., poet. to dwell – '...O Lord, onlie makist me til dwall in sauftie' [HSR], 'Blisset ar thaye wha dwall in thy hous ...' [HSR], 'An' through the sermon Dan wad sit Wi' a sanctimonious grin, As if in him there couldna' dwall A particle o' sin' [AO], '...Till in His hame I dwall for evermair ...' [WL], 'They're dirty craws that dwall i' the Dean, The coorsest craws that ever war seen' [DH].

dwallin (dwaw-lin) n., arch., poet. a dwelling – '...an' thair beutie sall waiste in the graffe frae thair dwallin'' [HSR], 'The Lord loes the yettes o' Zion mair nor a' the dwallin's o' Jacob' [HSR].

dwalt (dwawlt) pp., poet. dwelt – 'Thy congregatione has dwalt therin ...' [HSR], '...my saul had amaist dwalt in seelince' [HSR], 'Dauvit had dwalt i' the Mid Raw And plied wi' his cairrier cairt Jinglin' raig'lar ilk a week Owre-bye the Copshaw airt' [DH].

dwam (dwawm) n., v., arch., poet. faint, swoon, doze – '...so that eis beiceecle steitert aneth um, an A thoct the sowl wad take a dwam, an kilt owre' [ECS], '...ee're hover-doverin or ee're in a dwam' [IWL], 'But a happy hearty man was Dan, An' dearly lo'ed a dram; Though weird an' awe-some was his wark He seldom had a dwam' [AO], 'A sick dwam as his boot cam' off, Each nicht it was the same ...' [WFC], '...there's the ancient

dwang (dwawng) n., arch. a tap-wrench, large iron lever used by blacksmiths, a strut used between joists to strengthen them.

dwine (dwīn) v., poet. dwindle, gradually disappear, wane, waste away, decline in health – 'Though the years may come and dwine ...', 'Yet she grew sweeter as she dwined, And dearer to our bosom ...' [JT], 'Dyach!' says the Deil. Time nickers and says nocht; The sands in his gless dwine doon' [DH], '... The sair-dwined corpse o' a brammle worm!' [DH], 'The sap o' life drains wi' the dwinin' year awa' [WL].

dwingle (dwīng-ul) v., arch. to linger, tarry, loiter.

dwinglt (dwīng-ul) pp., arch. lingered, tarried – 'A cood fain heh dwinglt, an daikert about in sleepy Bosells' [ECS].

Dyce (dīs) n. Isobel nee Gordon 'Mem Dyce' (1769/70–1859) wife of 'Lang Tam'. She ran a school for girls in Hawick, and was apparently the first such teacher to insist on being called 'Mem', hence her nickname. She is said to have been a Catholic and died at an advanced age. Rev. Thomas 'Lang Tam Dyce' (1740–1809) son of William, Rector of Hawick Grammar School. He was educated at St. Andrews University and became preacher at Teviothead 'chapel-of-ease' in 1792. He also sometimes substituted at St. Mary's. He rode a pony, called Donald. His nickname suggests that he must have been tall. He was described as 'a man of some learning, talent, and a vast amount of eccentricity'. Several stories are told of him, e.g. on one occasion he set the congregation to sing the 179 verses of the 119th Psalm, saying to them 'chow on that the now till A gaun throwe to Falnesh for ma denner!' On another occasion, impatient at shepherd's dogs fighting in the church, he quipped 'A'll hev a shillin on the black yin!' He is recorded signing up for the Volunteers, 'above age,yet willing to serve'. He apparently went insane (possibly around 1804 when Robert Shaw took over at Teviothead) and retired to Hawick, living at the Sandbed, where his wife kept a shop. He got married in 1792; his wife Isobel, daughter of Alexander Gordon of Fochabers, was a Roman Catholic and died in Aberdeen in 1859 at the age of 90. William Norman Kennedy wrote an account of his life and character in the 1868 Transactions. His death in Hawick is recorded in 1809 as 'Mr. Dice son to Decd. Mr. Dice latin schoolmaster'. William (b.1706) father of Rev. Thomas. He was son of James in Belheric, Aberdeenshire. He was schoolmaster in Selkirk before moving to Hawick. He began teaching in Selkirk in 1730, with a licence to teach English, Writing and Accountancy. He is recorded in a legal case against debtors in Selkirk in 1737. He is the 'Mr. Dyce' whose houses in Selkirk are recorded being thatched in 1742 and repaired in 1743, and who had receipts for his salary as master of Selkirk Grammar School in the years 1731–46. He was schoolmaster at Hawick Grammar School approximately 1746–73 (although differing dates are given). In 1751 he was one of 4 men appointed by the Hawick Session to deal with the affairs of the deceased Bailie Gideon Ruecastle. He is listed among the subscribers to the 1752 reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland'. He witnessed baptisms for clockmaker Walter Freeman in 1758, for wright John Kay in 1759 and for weaver John Elder in 1760. He was also witness for merchant Walter Turnbull and Katherine Dyce (who was probably his daughter) in 1764 and 1766. He married Katherine Forbes and their children, baptised in Selkirk Parish, included: Janet (b.1733); Isobel (b.1734); Katherine (b.1737), who probably married Walter Turnbull; William (1739–44); and Thomas (b.1740) (also formerly 'Dice').

dydie (dI-dee) adj. dyed – '...deidy (dyed) paips ...' [ECS] (also written 'deidy').

dydie-egg (dI-dee-eg) n. a dyed hard-boiled egg, especially one prepared for rolling down a hill at Easter – '... Golfers and sledgers and dydie-eggs' [DH], '... Crying 'Shairly it must be time, now, To trinlle my dydie egg!' [DH] 'At Easter A've trinlled dydie eggs ...' [IWL].

Dydie-egg Day (dI-dee-eg-dā) n. Easter Saturday, when 'dydie-eggs' were traditionally rolled.

dye-hoose (dI-hoos) n. a part of a textile factory where dyeing is carried out, either the yarn hanks or garments being dyed in huge vats.

dyein (dI-in) n. the process of dyeing fibres, particularly cotton or wool. The Hawick dyeing industry grew up in support of textile manufacturers. Turnbull the Dyers was an offshoot of the original Hawick Carpet Company, the dyeing department being started by Thomas Turnbull in the late 18th century and located where the Bridge Hotel is now. In the early 19th century there were 2 main businesses operating in town. John Turnbull & Sons became a large operation through much of the 19th and 20th centuries, with factories on Victoria Road and Slitrig Crescent, but went into liquidation in 2000.

dyester (dI-stur) n., arch. a dyer – 'John and William Tomlins, dyesters in Reughheugh ...' [BR], 'Paid Thomas Turnbull, dyster, for dyeing and dressing officer's clothes ... 0 12 0' [BR1757] (also written 'dyster').

dyke (dIk) n. wall, especially a 'dry-stane dyke' on a farm, formerly referring to a turf or ditch boundary – 'Item, whatsoever person that monds tp big ane stane dyck betwixt his nichbour and him ... to big the hale dyck upon his neighbour's ground that refuses, and to pay the hale expense thereof' [BR1640], '... there was a fold dyke built on the Common by the possessors of Fenwick, which dyke was levelled by order of the Magistrates and rendered useless' [C&L1767], 'But first kneel down at the dike side, And pray for heaven's blessin ...' [JR], 'Auld Ringan stood against the dyke, And levell'd weel his gun' [JTe], 'The big garden dike's carried off, every stane ...' [JoHa], 'Dinna sit claiverin' Doon at the dyke' [GWe], 'The bairns ... gaed lowpin an rinin aboot deike an gerss' [ECS], '... bye seike an deike an waeter; bye burn an brig an haa' [ECS], 'He crawed and flappit ower the dyke ...' [WFC], '... and a glimpse o yon auld battered dyke that rins at intervals up the hill' [DH], v. to build a dyke (sometimes written 'dike' or 'dyck'; the word appears in several place names, e.g. Dykeback, Dykecroft, Dykehead, Dykeneuk and Dykeraw).

the Dyke (thu-dik) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed between Killoley and Hietreis on the 1541 rental roll. The lands were valued at 10 shillings and the tenant were George and Edward Nixon. Thomas Nixon and 'Fargathe Nixson' were there in 1544. The precise location is uncertain (and is not Dykeraw, which is listed separately). The land of 'Stellis, within the Dyk' is also listed on the rental roll. This was probably the home of 'Ekkie Nixsoun in Dyk', recorded in 1611. In 1632 it is 'Dyke' when listed among Gavin Elliot's lands in Liddesdale, along with Ower Heuchhoose, Nether Hightreis, Kilford and Byrestead (suggesting it was somewhere near Saughtree).

dyke-back (dIk-bawk) n. the back of a wall, used as an epithet for something lowly – 'I was a dyke-back gett: A bondager's wean, Wi' never ocht but the bothy-cat To ca my ain' [DH].

Dykeback (dIk-bak) n. former name for land beyond the splitting of the road at the Loanhead, lying between Longbaulk Road and Rosebank, and being separated into Easter Dykeback and Wester Dykeback. Presumably it was originally the back of the area known as Thorterdykes.

Dykecroft (dīk-kroft) n. field in the West End, near the Langbaulk, which was divided into allotments around 1854.

Dykecroft (dīk-kroft) n. house marked on Blaeu's 1654 map in Liddesdale, up the stream from Burnmouth and south of Pinglehole and Dawstonburn. It seems clearly distinct from the farm of essentially the same name further south in Castleton Parish. It is unclear what it might correspond to on modern maps, perhaps near Whitehillshiel (labelled as 'Dýkcrot' in c.1654 and 'Dykrafts' in 1694; it is not marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Dykecrofts (dīk-krofts) n. farm in Castleton Parish on Gall Sike, to the east of Newcastleton. 'Albine' Armstrong was tenant there in 1694 and William Herd was also listed as a resident there. William Elliot was farmer there in 1794–97 and Thomas Beattie was a servant in 1801. Andrew Stavert was farmer in 1841 and until at least 1868 (it is 'Dykescroft' in 1801 and is marked 'Dykecroft' on Stobie's 1770 map).

dyked (dīkd) pp., adj. surrounded by a dry-stone wall – 'A dyked fold and a herd's dwelling Are set snug in the glen together' [WL].

dyke-fit (dīk-fī) n., arch. the base of a wall – 'A wheen folk oot picnickin at a dei-ke-fit on Dunionseide ...' [ECS].

Dykeheeds (dīk-heedz) n. Dykeheads, farm in the upper Rule valley, south of Wauchope farm. South-east of the farm, on the gentle slopes of Wauchope Rig, are the remains of a settlement, about 55 m by 50 m. Its interior contains the foundation of a small cottage, and it is recorded in 1892 that it was surrounded by a stone wall. The remains were once described as a 'homestead moat', but now seem more likely to be from the Iron Age, with a later cottage. Nearby there are also field boundaries and rig and furrow lines.

dyke-louper (dīk-low-pur) n., arch. an animal that jumps over walls, a person of immoral habits – 'I am informed, that the old Session records of the parish of Hobkirk take notice of a female who was commonly known by the soubriquet of Bessy Loup-the-Dykes; and who is said to have been brought before the Session for having been guilty of dyke-loupin' [JoJ].

Dykeneuk (dīk-nook) n. small loch, out past Stirches, near the side of the road between Stouslie and Calaburn farm. It is known for its bird life, and also called Leahead Loch. There was formerly a farmstead there, where Robert and Isabella Scott lived in 1841. In 1851, Robert Scott and family were in one cottage and David Halliday and family in another – 'There's Lockie o' the Stinty Knowes, There's Nicol o' Dick-neuk, And Bryson o' the Priestrig, And Hall into the Heap' [DJG] (also spelled 'Dykenook' and variants).

dyker (dī-kur) n., arch. a person who makes dykes – '...at which the Common riders made a sprawl and brought in the dyker, whose name was Archibald Elliot' [C&L1767], '...Was wringin' oot his socks and sark Wi' wry thochts o' the dyker!' [WL].

Dykeraw (dīk-raw) n. farm in Southdean Parish, located along a track south of Southdean Cottages. The former tower of the same name is about 1/3 of the way along this track. After the area was burnt by Dacre's men in late 1513 it was where the detachments met on their way back to England, with Sir Christopher Dacre leading 2000 horsemen and 400 footmen. It was once split into neighbouring farmsteads called Nether Dykeraw and Over Dykeraw. It was described being 2 steadings valued at 50 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. The tenants of the farm in the 17th and early 18th centuries were Olivers, ancestors of the Hawick lawyers; those recorded in 1669 are Robert, Gilbert, Thomas, elder and Thomas, younger. Andrew Jardine was a tenant there in 1684 when listed as a fugitive for being a Covenanter. Isobel Oliver was listed among the poor of the Parish there in 1694. George Oliver is recorded as tenant in 1797 and in 1801 John Oliver was 'Husbandman' and Thomas Oliver shepherd there. A farmstead is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map just to the east of the old tower (see also Dykeraw Toor; the origin of the name is probably Old English and Old Scots 'dic raw', meaning 'the row by the ditch'; the name is at least as old as the 16th century; 'N. Dykra' and 'O. Dykra' appear on Blaeu's 1654 map; it is 'Dykrav' in 1538 and 1539, 'Dykeraw' in 1571/2, 'Dykrae' in 1669 and 'Dikerow' in 1797).

Dykeraw (dīk-raw) n. former house in upper Liddesdale, between old Castleton and Kirndeane. It is valued at one merk and let to William and Hector Armstrong according to a rental roll of 1541. 'Geordy Armstrang of Dykrav' was tried for resetting cattle in 1633. Adam Elliot was tenant there in the late 17th century. William Waugh and John Scott were recorded there in 1694. It is shown on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties, covering 420 acres, bounded by Kirndeane, James Robson was there in 1778. lands owned by the Laird of Whithaugh, Nether

Harden, Cocklaik and Whitehaugh. The location of the farmhouse is indicated, near the 176 m spot height shown on the Ordnance Survey map, but with no evidence of habitation there now. William Sharp was farmer there in 1797 and in 1801 John Inglis was a 'Driver' there and William Lillico a labourer. The whole of the former farm is now within an area of forest to the east of Florida (it is 'Dykraw' in 1541, 'Dykrae' in 1694 and 'Dikerow' in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Dýkra', and 'Dykraw' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, is still on Stobie's 1770 map and is 'Dikeraw' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Dykeraw Toor (dik-raw-toor) n. tower in Southdean Parish. It was burned by Dacre's men in late 1513, 'both roof and floor', with Dacre adding in his correspondence 'and so smoked them out'. It was burned again by the English in 1544. The remains can still be seen on the track leading towards Dykeraw farm, which is further to the south-east. The tower was oblong in shape. Part of the south-west side still exist, but not all of this is contemporary with the tower (it is 'Dyker' in 1513, 'Dycray' in 1544).

Dykes (diks) n. farm in the Rule valley, just to the west of Bedrule and east of Spittal Tower. It may have previously been known as 'Middle' and 'Holm'. It was farmed by Turnbolls in the late 17th and 18th centuries. William Murray was there in 1724–31, Thomas Veitch in 1728 and James Murray in 1730. John Leyden was a cooper there in 1730, George Henry was living there in 1736, James Murray in 1738, James Turnbull in 1742, James Scott in 1772, Robert Scott in 1784 and Walter Scott in 1786. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. Thomas Turnbull is recorded as farmer there in 1797, Alexander Goodfellow was servant there in 1799 and James Richardson was a servant in 1801. Henry Litster was hind there in at least 1818–22. Walter Cavers was there in 1841 and 1851 and William Veitch in the mid-19th century. It became part of the estate and Barony of Wells, despite being in the Parish of Cavers. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was 'That part of the barony of Wells, called Dykes', owned by William Elliot of Wells and valued at £214 10s. By the 1870s it was held by the trustees of the late Sir William F. Elliott of Stobs and Wells. 'Dykes Moor Cottage' was a small cottage there in the 19th century (also called 'the Dykes'; it is marked as 'Dýks' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Dykes (diks) n. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Redford in 1646 and their children included Agnes (b.1653), Isobel (b.1656), Janet (b.1658) and Marion (b.1661). In 1658 his name is transcribed 'Thomas', but that is surely an error. The witnesses in 1661 were George ... and Walter Coltart. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Hislop and their son William was baptised in 1688. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Baptie and their son Francis was baptised in 1699 (also written 'Dickes', 'Dicks', 'Dikes', 'Dyke' and 'Dyckes').

Dykes Burn (diks-burn) n. stream that rises on the north side of Ruberslaw and run in a roughly northern direction, passing the Dykes, to join the Rule Water at Fastcastle.

Dykesmuir (diks-mewr) n. former farmstead in Cavers Parish, south of Dykes and just to the north-west of Blawearie. George Ormiston and his family were there in 1851 (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

dymont (dI-min) n., arch. a diamond.

eachie-peachie (ee-chee-pee-chee) adj. not much to decide between two alternatives, six of one half a dozen of the other (cf. eeksie-peeksie).

ear-board (eer-bōrd) n., arch. the front board of a cart (probably from 'a near-board'; cf. erse-brod).

eariewig (ee-ree-wig) n. an earwig.

Earl o Bothwell (e-rul-ō-both-wel) n. title of members of the Hepburn and then Stewart families. All 5 of the men to bear this title had some local involvement or influence (formerly 'Bothuel', 'Bothuile', 'Boithvile', 'Bothvile' and other variants).

Earl o Buccleuch (e-rul-ō-bu-kloo) n. former title of the head of the House of Buccleuch. Walter Scott was created 1st Earl in 1619, while the 2nd and last Earl died in 1651. The full list of the Earlship is therefore: Walter 1619–33; and Francis 1626–51.

Earl o Dalkeith (e-rul-ō-dawl-keeth) n. one of the titles of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It has been used in the last few generations by the eldest son before he becomes Duke.

Earl o Glencairn (e-rul-ō-glen-kārn) n. title for heads of the Cunningham family, who held the Barony of Hassendean in the 15th and 16th centuries.

the Earl o Hell (thu-e-rul-ō-hel) n. nickname of ‘Little’ Wull Ruthven, leader of one of the local gypsy groups in the early 19th century. He was involved in the ‘Battle o the Brig’ in Hawick.

Earl o Mar see Mar

Earl o Mar see Earl o Murray

Earl o Minti (e-rul-ō-min’-i) n. title of the Lords of the Minto estate, beginning with Sir Gilbert, the 4th Baronet who was created Earl in 1813. The family also have the titles of Viscount Melgund and Baronet of Nova Scotia. They have been the most important landowners in the area around Denholm for the last 300 years. The full list of Earls is: Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound 1813–14; Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1814–59; William Hugh Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1859–91; Gilbert John Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1891–1914; Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1914–75; Gilbert Edward George Lariston once Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1975–2005; Gilbert Timothy George Lariston Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 2005– (see Elliot and Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound).

Earl o Moray see Earl o Murray

Earl o Murray (e-rul-ō-mu-ri) n. one of the titles of James Stewart (spellings can also be ‘Stuart’ and ‘Moray’).

Earl o Strathearn (e-rul-ō-straw-thern) n. title of Maurice Murray (or Moray), who was Baron of Hawick and Branhholme in the early 14th century.

the Earl o Tarras (thu-e-rul-ō-ta-ris) n. title often used for Walter Scott of Highchester and Harden.

Earlside (e-rul-, yi-rul-sīd) n. farm off the side road leading from near Cogsmill to Hawthornside, south of Hawick. It was among lands resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘the demeinz of Charles-set’ with the park in a description of Cavers Barony in an English document c.1380. It was formerly part of the Cavers estate, having been acquired by Douglas of Cavers at least as early as 1511. In that years the ‘mains thereof’ are also mentioned, and these ‘dominicales earundem’ are still mentioned in 1687 and 1698. This is probably the place transcribed as ‘Yarsaye’ where Martin Crozier resided in 1544; he appears to have been a prominent member of the clan at that time. In 1574 this was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty

‘for the cryme of thift in tyme bigane’, this including ‘Cock’s Clem’ Crozier, his brothers John and Rowie, ‘Kate’s Adie’, ‘Kate’s Jock’, ‘Megat’s Adie’, Airchie and also ‘Mark’s Airchie’. David Douglas of Earlside was recorded in 1589. James Douglas was ‘goodman of Yerlesyde’ in 1590. It was listed among the lands of Stobs purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. Adam Scott was tenant in 1641. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters’ sermons in the latter part of the 17th century; a thorn tree near there was long pointed out as the spot. James Stavert was tenant in 1682 and James Leyden in 1688. Part of the lands here were among those inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. In the 1694 Hearth Tax roll there is an entry for 3 hearths there. Thomas Douglas and Richard Main were there in 1708. Robert Douglas in at least 1726–28, Walter Nichol and William Dodds in 1726, John Nivison in 1727 and John Douglas in 1728–29. John Lorrain was there in 1732, Thomas Telfer in 1733, Thomas Anderson and William Douglas in 1741, John Rule in 1742, William Inglis in 1772 and Thomas Scott in 1784. John Huggan was recorded as farmer there in 1794–97 and James Lunn as shepherd. Alexander Brown and John Lunn were servants there in 1799. Labourer Thomas Scott was living there in 1800. It was farmed by Peter Amos in the early 19th century, followed by his sons Thomas and then Gilbert. There is a story of some mysterious fires being set there when the Amoses were tenants; the culprit could not be found and so they procured a savage dog, which they paraded through Hawick, then let it be known how a nephew of Mr. Amos narrowly escaped being savaged by the dog, after which there were no more fires. William Telfer was there in the early 1900s. There was formerly a mill pond just to the north of the farm buildings. There is an ancient earthwork on the slopes of nearby White Hill (spelled ‘Yarlside’, ‘Yairlside’, ‘Yarlsyde’ and other variants from 1329 until the mid-17th century; it is ‘yarlside’ in 1368, ‘Yarlsid’ in 1511, ‘Zarlside’ in 1511 and 1558, ‘Zarlesyde’ in 1562, transcribed ‘Yairdsyde’ in 1569, ‘Yarldsye’ in 1574, ‘Yarlsyde’ in 1589, ‘Yairlesyd’ in 1608, ‘Hairlesyd’ in 1622, ‘Yairliside’ in 1641, ‘Yearlsyde’ in 1652, ‘Zarlsyde’ in 1662, ‘Earlesyde’ in 1687, ‘Earlsyde’ in 1688 and 1692, ‘Earelsyde’ in 1694 and ‘Earlesyde’ in 1698; the name probably means simply ‘the nobleman’s slope’, ‘eorles-side’ in Old English).

Earlsideshiels (e-rul-, yi-rul-sīd-sheelz) n. former farmstead near Earlside. John Elliot was shepherd there in the 1750s.

Earlston (e-rul-stin) n. town on the Leader Water, about 3 miles up from the Tweed, and about 25 miles from Hawick. It contains the ruined tower where ‘Thomas the Rhymer’ was born, and has the site of the castle of the former Earls of March. The old Earlston Bridge, a thatched cottage and the Rhymer’s Mill are other historic attractions. Post Office Close has a house with a lintel bearing the date 1581. Earlston Civic Week is at the beginning of July. Population (1991) 1,629 (the origin is possibly ‘Ercil’s fort’).

Earl Street (e-rul-stree) n. road between Duke Street and Trinity Street, with houses built in 1887, and named after the 6th Duke of Buccleuch (Henry Walter Scott), who had been Earl of Dalkeith.

Earn Hope (ern-hōp) n. small stream that rises on Bye Hill and runs to the north to feed the Frostlie Burn.

earnest (ern-ist) n., arch. an amount of money paid to guarantee a contract – ‘Paid Andrew Turnbull, Bailie Walter, and David Laing, earnest, for the herd’s house building’ [BR1755].

eassel (ees-la) prep., arch. to the east of (also eastle).

easla (ees-la) adj., arch. eastern, easterly – ‘We have also East-le and Wast-le, lying to the East and West respectively. The town of Hawick is divided by the northward-running Slitrig into two parts, known as Eastle-the-waitter and Wastle-the-waitter, commonly contracted into Eis’la-waitter and Was’la-waitter, or simply Eis’la and Was’la’ [JAHM], ‘The eassla-waiter ba’ players’ [GW], prep. to the east of, n. the eastern side, particularly used to describe the part of the town of Hawick east of the Slitrig in the 18th and 19th centuries (also written ‘eassla’; see also Eastla and cf. wasla).

easla-wesla (ees-la-wes-la) adj., arch. east and west, oriented in an east-west direction – ‘An another ribbon, – verder-cled, rinnin eassla-wassla – telld the coorse o bonnie Teviot’ [ECS].

Eastbank see East Bank

East Bank (eest-bawngk) n. former name for the area near where Trinity Church now stands, which formed the eastern extremity of the town boundary. This was the site of the East Bank Kirk, and the lower ground was once called the Wheathole.

East Bank Hoose (eest-bawngk-hoos) n. Manse of East Bank Church, beside Trinity Gardens at the start of Bourtree Place. Once the building was turned over to secular use it became a shop, run by A. Kyle then Fred W. Robertson as a souvenir and art supplies retailer in the early 20th century. Later it was a Scottish Power showroom. From 1991 it has been Hamish Smith’s jewellery shop, Nos. 2 and 4 Bourtree Place, and is a grade C listed building. Local joiner Tosh Scott designed the new frontage in mahogany, and it contains custom cabinets to Hamish Smith’s designs, as well as the Teribus Clock outside.

the East Bank Kirk (thu-eest-bawngk-kirk) n. church formerly built at the Wheathole, being the lower part of the current Trinity Gardens. It was originally erected in 1780 as the East End Meeting House of the East End Burgher Congregation, which had been founded in Hawick in 1773 by the ‘dissenting seceders’, and previous to that members of this congregation had travelled to Selkirk for services. The first minister was George Williamson, but he left after disagreements with his congregation, and it was 8 years before James Henderson was appointed. He significantly increased the numbers, placing the congregation on a firm footing. Many worshippers came from the neighbouring Parishes of Wilton, Cavers, Kirkton and Hobkirk. There were 673 members in 1806. From 1847 it became part of the United Presbyterian Church, and formed an offshoot in 1886, which became Wilton South Church. The original structure was an unpretentious, square, 2-storey building with an attached church hall. An adjacent manse was built in 1793. In 1837 a dispute over whether to build a manse for the assistant minister caused a schism in the congregation. The church was enlarged in 1877. Members of the Free Church worshipped there for about a year, before St. George’s was built. The old meeting house was converted for use as a private school for a few years (the forerunner of St. Mary’s and Trinity schools), and was last used by a joiner’s firm in the early 20th century. Photographs of it exist from the late 19th century. The present building was constructed in 1843 higher up than the original, was officially called the East Bank United Free Church, and later became part of the Church of Scotland again. In the 1890s a Church Hall was built to designs by J.P. Alison. In 1958 the church merged with the nearby congregations of St. Andrew’s and St. John’s to become Trinity Church. An entrance pillar from the former gates by the Horse was dumped in the Teviot at Mansfield, but rescued to form the base of the Frank Scott Memorial Seat on the Miller's Knowes. The oldest existing communion token is marked 'Rev. J.H. 1791' and 'Ass-o-c-Hk.' on the other side. A history was written by Stewart Richmond Scott in 1923. A roll of the ministers is: George Williamson 1774–83; James Henderson 1791–1840; Adam Thomson 1833–60; James McEwen 1862–72; James Orr 1874–91; Charles Allan 1892–99; James Brand Scott 1900–.

the East Bleachin Green

the East Bleachin Green (thu-eest-bleechin-green) n. former public drying green off the Loaning in Denholm. Comrades Hall was built on the lower part in the 1920s, while the upper part continued to have clothes poles until about 1960, when it was turned into a children's playground.

East Boonraw (eest-boon-raw) n. farm reached by taking the right hand road at the 'Fower Road Ends', just next to West Boonraw, on the Boonraw Burn. It probably corresponds to the location of the main farm of Boonraw. Robert Scott was farmer there in at least the period 1841–72 (see also West Boonraw).

East Buccleuch (eest-bu-kloo) n. farm in the Rankle Burn valley off the B711 and near West Buccleuch. This area gave its name to the Scotts of Buccleuch. The present house stands on the site of a much older manor house, near where the Clear Burn joins the Rankle Burn. This was probably the first local seat of the Scotts of Buccleuch (or 'Rankilburn', as it was originally). The modern farmhouse was built in 1832, during the construction of which the foundation walls of the castle were discovered (at the western end). The house incorporates a freestone door-rybat from the earlier mansion, as well as a stone above the door bearing the crescent moon of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is said that an old spur, a bridle bit and other relics were once dug up there. It is also said that when a fireplace was replaced in 1921 that the floor gave way, revealing the vault of the old house. The original 'castle' there was probably a fortified house and may have been ruined in an attack by the Routledges and accomplices in about 1490, although it has also been speculated that it was destroyed by the Earl of Hertford's men in 1544. There are nearby signs of possible other buildings and rig field systems. The farm also once contained the lands of Gair and Ropelawshiel. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it extended to 2265 acres, with the farmhouse in roughly the present location. 'Easter Buccleuch, and a fourth of Wester Buccleuch' were listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup

in Hawick in 1755. The 'East side of Buccleugh' stock and teind was valued at about £1145 in 1785. David Park was tenant there until about 1800, when it was taken over by James Grieve of Branhholme Park (also sometimes 'Easter Buccleuch').

East Burnfit (eest-burn-fi) n. East Burnfoot, former farmstead in the Ale valley, corresponding approximately with the modern Burnfit on Ale, with the 'West' farm actually to the south east. James Hart was tenant there in 1711 and Robert Riddell in 1721 (it is 'eister burnfoot' in 1688).

East Burn Park (eest-burn-pawrk) n. name for the field on the Common to the east of West Burn Park and to the west of Williestruther cottage.

East Castle (eest-kaw-sul) n. fortified house said to have been at the east end of Denholm village, so-called to distinguish it from Westgate Hall, at the other end of the village.

East Cavers (eest-kā-vurz) n. former farm on the Cavers estate, also known as Easter Cavers.

Eastcote (eest-ko) n. farmhouse just outside Hawick, about half-way between Weensland and Denholm, lying on the left between the A698 and the Teviot. It was formerly part of Cavers estate and is now the 'Eastcote House Archery Centre'. Andrew Rodger was there in 1727, John Douglas in 1731 and William Douglas in 1733. William Blyth was there in 1772. John Johnstone was farmer there in at least 1794–97. Archibald Whillans and Charles Allan were servants there in 1797, James Brown and James Dunlop in 1799 and James Dunlop, Robert Rae and Thomas Hope in 1801. Thomas Scott was farmer there in 1841. Thomas Armstrong was farmer in the early 20th century. Aerial photography revealed the outlines of what appears to be a Roman temporary marching camp in the nearby fields. The name was used to distinguish it from West Cote and it is essentially the same as the earlier Little Cote (also spelled 'East Cote', 'East Coat', 'Eastcoat', etc.; it is marked 'Eastcot' on Stobie's 1770 map).

East Cote see Eastcote

eastle (ees-tul) prep., arch. on the east of (also eassel).

the East End (thu-eest-end) n. former name for the area around the High Street, to distinguish it from the 'West End'. This was the commercial part of Hawick, where the merchants etc. lived. The name came later to refer to the eastern boundary of Hawick, around where the Horse now is. In 1770 there were 96 houses there owned by Burgesses, with a value of over £17,000.

the East End Kirk

On the 1841 census it was used as an explicit address (also written ‘Eastend’).

the East End Kirk (thū-ees-end-kirk) n. the East End Church, also known as the East End Meeting House, the original name for what became known as the East Bank Church. The name distinguished it from the other Secessionist church, the West End (or Green) Kirk.

Easter Ale Moor (ees-tur-āl-moor) n. farm beyond the dam at Ale Moor Loch, on the Easter Burn, and actually to the north of the modern Wester Ale Moor. It appears to have existed as a separate estate from at least the mid-16th century. David Armstrong ‘of Ailmure’, recorded in 1573, may be the first known owner. It was owned (along with Wester Ale Moor) by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 17th century, but by the late 18th century was the property of Pringle of Haining. Alexander Pringle, a prominent Scottish Judge, became ‘Lord Ale Moor’. The farm was in Selkirk Parish until incorporated into Robertson in 1689. William Lamb was there in 1714, Walter Scott in 1716, James Govenlock in 1715, Walter Scott in 1716, George Sinton in 1720, William Scott in 1725, James Anderson in 1753, John Storie in 1757 and James Grieve in 1765. John Pringle of Clifton paid the Land Tax of £308 there in 1785 and Mark Pringle in 1802. Residents in 1812 included tenant George Easton and shepherd William Forrest. There are signs of rig and furrow cultivation nearby and former buildings to the north-west (it is ‘Easter Ealmuir’ in 1725; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Easter Barnhills (ees-tur-barn-hilz) n. former name for part of the lands of Barnhills. It was sold by John Turnbull of Barnhills to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1613. In 1678 it was combined with Wester Barnhills when both were owned by Sir William Bennet. By 1788 the lands were valued at about £450 and held by the Miss Stewarts. Thomas Balmer and Henry Carruthers were servants there in 1801.

Easter Boonraw (ees-tur-boon-law) n. another name for East Boonraw.

Easter Buccleuch see East Buccleuch

Easter Burnfit (ees-tur-burn-fi) n. former farm bordering on Midshiels and Appletreehall, all tenanted farms of the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the late 17th century. It was part of the lands of Burnfoot, distinct from Wester Burnfoot. The mill there is recorded from 1574, when William Scott ‘in Harden’ and James Scott ‘in Quhit-slaid’ paid back Sir Walter Scott of Birkenhead for a loan on the lands. James Shiel was living there in 1682. Robert Wright was a shoemaker there in 1690. The residents there in 1694 were Alexander ‘Hymers’ and Robert Wright. William Scott was tenant there in 1709. Bessie Gray was from there in 1717. There is still mention of ‘easter Burnfoot mylne’ in 1718 and in the survey of Buccleuch properties in that year it was not owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, unlike the adjacent Wester lands. Robert Riddell was recorded there 1721–29, Alexander Moore in 1723, Walter Riddell in 1725 and James Scott in 1733–35 (it is ‘Easter Burnfoott’ in 1694 and ‘E: burnfoot’ in 1725).

Easter Cavers (ees-tur-kā-vurz) n. former farm on Cavers estate, also known as ‘East Cavers’. John Miller and William Nichol are listed there in 1694. Walter Lorraine was there in 1714. It is possible it was the same as Little Cavers.

Easter Clarilaw (ees-tur-klā-ree-law) n. former name for the eastern half of Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. It was included in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it covered 146 acres and was bounded by Midshiels, Wester Clarilaw and Hassendean Common. It was also stated that 6 acres of land belonging to Wester Clarilaw were mixed with it, while one acre mixed with Wester Clarilaw belonged to it.

Easter Clerklands (ees-tur-klerk-lindz) n. former name for part of Clerklands.

Easter Common Haugh (ees-tur-ko-min-hawf) n. former name for the Wee Haugh, including the extended area now occupied by Teviot Crescent.

Easter Craik (ees-tur-krāk) n. formerly half of the lands of Craik. In 1548/9 these lands were granted by Mary, Queen of Scots, to Sir Walter Scott and his wife Janet Betoun, having been forfeited by John Cockburn of Ormiston. The lands were re-granted to John Cockburn by James, Earl of Bothwell in 1567. It was inherited by Simon Scott in Newton in 1618, from his brother Walter. It is probably the ‘Easter Craig’ listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch according to the 1653 and 1661 services of heirs and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The lands were also described as having a mill (it is ‘Eistir Craik’ in 1548/9, ‘Eister Craik’ in 1567 and ‘Eister Craick’ in 1661).

Easter Dykeback

Easter Dykeback (ees-tur-dik-bak) n. former name for land lying on the north side of Rosebank Road, probably once part of the area known as Thorterdykes, and distinguished from Wester Dykeback, which lay further to the south-west.

Easter Essenside (ees-tur-e-sin-sīd) n. farm west of Ashkirk, adjacent to Wester Essenside. It was part of the estate of the Scotts of Headshaw in the late 16th century. In 1643 it was owned by Francis Scott of Synton and valued at £200, with the teinds being valued at £60. There were 6 tenants listed there on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William Redford was tenant there in at least 1709–17 and James Nichol was living there in 1710. The Shortreeds were there in the 18th century, with James Shortreed being the owner in 1759. In 1778 it was purchased by John Elliot, younger son of the 2nd Lord Minto (who would become an Admiral and settle at Monteviot); when he died in 1808 it passed to his nephew, the next Lord Minto. In 1788 it was valued at £365 (and had a value of 10s more in 1811). John Scott was a servant there in 1801. In 1820 it may have been sold to Miss Ann Carnegie (perhaps a relative of the Elliots by marriage). John Scott was farmer there in at least 1789–99. John Miller was servant there in 1797. It was farmed in the 19th century by John Douglas (father of Bailie James) and his son, who was also John. 2 small bronze axe-heads (or ‘celts’) were discovered on the farm, in 1882 and in 1887, as well as a bronze armlet, possibly loaned to the National Museum of Antiquities by Tom Scott and subsequently lost.

Easter Fodderlee (ees-tur-fo-dur-lee) n. alternative name for East Fodderlee.

Easter Grundistone (ees-tur-grun-dee-stin) n. former house and farm, on the lands of Grundistone, just north of Hawick. It was ‘le Estpart of Grundieston within th barony of Chamberlein-Newton’ in a document c.1380 describing lands claimed by the English. It became home to a branch of the Scotts in the 16th century. ‘Robert Scot of Easter-groundiston, brother-son to Robert Scot of Headshaw’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. George Scott was there in at least 1682–88. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. George Scott and Robert Stewart were there in 1694, with William Bell as shepherd and James Young there among the poor of the Parish. George Scott was farmer there in 1709. William Miller was there in 1711. In the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties it covered 371 acres, bounded by Hassendean, Newton, Boonraw, Wester Grundistone and Synton. A stream separated it from Wester Grundistone, and in 1718 farmhouses are shown on either side of this stream. The small farmstead of Boghall was also included within its limits. John Armstrong was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘Easter Grundiston’ in 1643, ‘eister groundiston’ in 1688 and ‘Easter Groundiestone’ in 1718).

Easter Heap

Easter Hassendean (ees-tur-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for the eastern half barony of Hassendean, the name being used from at least the 15th century to refer to the part with barons being the Cunninghams. This is distinct from the western part, which included some of the northern Borthwick valley. In 1510/1 the lands were granted to David, son of James Scott of Hassendean. In 1514 Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glancairn granted the lands to Elizabeth Cunningham, widow of John, Lord Hay of Yester. And in a charter of 1529, John, Lord Hay of Yester takes possession of the ‘ten merkis landis of ald extent’ of ‘estir hassindane’, previously belonging to his grandmother Elizabeth Cunningham. This was confirmed to the Hays of Yester in 1617, when the daughters and heirs of another John, Lord Hay of Yester disposed the lands to him. Although the Cunninghams and Hays held the superiority, the lands were possessed by the Scotts of Hassendean, with a confirmation to William Scott of Hassendean in 1532. In 1606 Walter Scott of Alton was served as heir to his grandfather Robert in half the lands of ‘orientalium de Hassinden’ with the mill there. The lands, including ‘the toure, fortalice, and mylne thairrof’ were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1661 and 1663 (it is ‘Eister Hassindene’ in 1514, ‘Estir Hassindene’ in 1532 and ‘Easter Hassindean’ in 1663).

Easter Heap (ees-tur-heap) n. former name for an estate roughly corresponding to the modern Silverbuthall, and being part of ‘the Heaps’. In 1635/6 James Waugh was served heir to the lands there belonging to his grandfather, John Waugh ‘de Heip’; this was explicitly land valued at 5 merks. In a 1650 list of ‘communicants’ there are 39 people listed on the estate, namely (using modern spellings) Adam Welsh, Margaret Davidson, Marion Waugh, Janet Percival, Margaret Sheen, John Percival, Walter Scott, Bessie Scott, James Aitchison, Gavin Elliot, Janet Percival, Robert Easton, James Easton, Margaret Fletcher, William Easton, Isobel

Easter Hermiston

Fowler, John Scott, James Scott, James Stevenson, Bessie Easton, Bessie Stewart, William Easton, Janet Gray, Helen Johnstone, James Stewart, Agnes Scott, Patrick Lorraine, William Lorraine, Marion Rule, Robert Scott, Margaret Percival, Robert Aitkin, James Aitkin, David Aitkin, Bessie Brydon, Adam Aitchison, Robert Mitchell, James Learmonth and Isobel White. In 1788 it was 'Easterheap or Silverbuthall' when valued at £80 and owned by James Scott. The 1808 will of William Oliver 'Auld Cash' mentions 'Easter Heap or Heip now commonly called Silverboothall'. 'Three Inclosures and Stackyard, part of Easter Heap, or Silverbuthall, formerly belonging to James Scott, and possessed by Robert Smith, acquired from James and Walter Knox' are listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, with the owner being Archibald Dunlop of Whitmuir and the value being £13 (also spelled 'Heip' or 'Hepe'; it is 'Eister Heip' in 1636 and 'Eister heape' on a parish map of 1650).

Easter Hermiston (ees-tur-her-mis-tin) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were owned by Andrew Scott and William Johnstone, both valued at £130, along with teinds valued at £51 10s 2d. John Scott of Synton and John Johnstone owned the lands in 1678 and they were combined with Wester Hermiston by 1743. They were all owned by William Govan in 1788.

Easter Highchesters see East Highchesters

Easter Hill (ees-tur-hil) n. hill just south of the western part of Alemoor Loch, reaching a height of 344 m.

Easter Hislop (ees-tur-hiz-lop) n. former part of the farm of Hislop, mentioned in the 16th century and early 17th century (it is 'Eister Heislehoip' in 1572 and 'Eister Heissilhoip' in 1615).

Easter Hoose (ees-tur-hoos) n. house in Robertson that used to be the local manse.

Easter Howlands (ees-tur-how-lindz) n. old name for the area that was later called Dovemount (mentioned as early as 1511), making up a large part of Wilton east of Roughheugh, or today east of Wilton Crescent and Stirches Road. Note that the name does not signify that it is east of Howlands, but rather that it is the eastern lands (of the Langlands estate) which lie in the hollow. A 1726 charter granted Easter Howlands to William and Charles Tudhope, then it passed to John and William Sharp of Mackside in 1763 and George Haliburton in 1770, by which time it was known as Dovemount and subsequently parcelled off.

Easter Kirkstile (ees-tur-kirk-stīl) n. former name for the Kirkstile, to distinguish it from the formerly existing Wester Kirkstyle – 'John Bridges weaver att the easter kirkstyle had a child baptized ...' [PR1713].

Easter Langbaulk (ees-tur-lum-bawk) n. former farm on the 'Lumback' road. Archibald Scott was farmer there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

Easter Lees (ees-tur-leez) n. ??.

Easter Lilliesleaf (ees-tur-li-leez-leaf) n. farm near Lilliesleaf. The mill, lands and town of 'Easter Lillislie' were listed in the service of heirs for Sir John Riddell in 1669. The farmer there in 1851 and 1861 was George Alexander.

Easter Loch (ees-tur-loch) n. name sometimes used for Branxholme Easter Loch.

eastermaist (ees-tur-māst, -mest) adj., arch. furthest east (variant of eastmaist, also written 'eastermest').

Easter Mertin's Hill (ees-tur-mer'-inz-hil) n. hill to the north of Crumhaugh Hill farm. It was the location for a view of Hawick painted by Andrew Richardson about 1835.

Easter Middle see East Middle

Easter Moormaw see Moormaw

Eastern Star (ees-tern-stawr) n. the Order of the Eastern Star, effectively a women's version of the Masons, although men can also be members. The Hawick branch started in 1911 and closed in 2002, being the last one in the Borders. The leaders were called Worthy Matron and Worthy Patron, and were typically appointed for 2 years.

Easter Parkhill (ees-tur-pawrk-hil) n. former name for a farm in the southern Bortwick valley, adjacent to Easter Park Hill. The former farm of Parkhill was at some point split into west and east parts. Andrew Chisholme paid the land tax there in 1678, when it was valued at £100. John Hume was recorded there in 1717 and Walter Scott in 1718. John Scoon was recorded as farmer in 1797, James Aitkin in 1800, Andrew Pringle in 1812 and William Miller in 1819. In the 1788 county valuation (and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued at £100. In about 1874 it (as well as Easter Parkhill) is recorded being owned by William Richardson Dickson of Alton (see also Parkhill).

Easter Perk Hill (ees-tur-perk-hil) n. Easter Park Hill, hill in the southern Borthwick valley, south of Robertson village, reaching a height of 295 m, and with a peak to the north-west reaching 276 m. Nearby was the farm of Easter Parkhill.

Easter Sike

Easter Sike (ees-tur-sīk) n. small stream that rises on Saughtree Fell and runs roughly south-easterly to join Dawston Burn to the north of Ashtree Cottage.

Easter Swanshiel (ees-tur-swan-sheel) n. former part of the farm of Swanshiel in Hobkirk Parish. It was situated on a promontory jutting into the Swanshiel Cleugh. In 1643 it was the larger part of Swanshiel, and valued at £66 13s. 4d. It was owned by a branch of the Turnbells, then acquired by the Grieves of Easter Swanshiel in the early 18th century, before being sold and annexed to Wolfelee. Adam Turnbull was there in about 1663, when it was still valued at £66 13s 4d. James Turnbull was there in 1694. The last occupant of the steading there was a pauper by the name of Loraine. By 1788 it was owned by Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and still owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 (it is 'eister Swanshell' in 1663 and 'Easter Suansheall' in 1694).

Easter Toll (ees-tur-tōl) n. one of Hawick's 4 toll houses, a plaque marks the site on Bourtree Place near the Conservative Club. The toll house is marked on Wood's 1824 map. George Grieve was tollkeeper in 1841.

Easter Weens (ees-tur-weenz) n. former stables on the Weens estate, located north of the main house.

Easter Wells (ees-tur-welz) n. former name for farm that was part of the Wells estate in Rulewater, distinct from Wester Wells.

Easter Whitehaugh (ees-tur-whī-uf) n. former name for the lands also known as Wester Heap.

Easter Winds (ees-tur-wīndz) n. former name for lands somewhere near Dryden, Commonsides etc. Distinct from 'Wester Winds', this may have been an early form of 'Weensland'. It is listed in 1686 among lands tenanted by Robert Grieve in Commonsides in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch.

Eastfield Mills (eest-feeld-milz) n. main premises of Blenkhorn Richardson & Co. Ltd. on Mansfield Road, opposite the footbridge. The main building, along with an engine room and a huge single-storey weaving shed, was erected in 1882/3 by Bell & Hill, Builders, with Melrose's planning most of the engineering. The frontage is in the style of a French Renaissance chateau. The main warehouse, fronting the Teviot, was 120 feet long, with free-stone from Woodburn Quarry.

Eastgate

It was extended in 1886 to incorporate the spinning of worsted yarn, with the addition of 2 extra 2-storey structures, as well as a matching gatehouse. There was further expansion in the period 1895–1921, with enlargement of the weaving sheds and an additional office block on Rosevale Street. The mill carried on through troubled times, until it sounded its whistle for the last time in 1976. Since 1981 it has been home to a knitwear mill for Johnstons of Elgin. The large octagonal chimney, spinning sheds and engine house were all demolished. The mill is a grade B listed building. There is a piece of film of workers leaving the factory in 1909/10.

Eastfield Road (eest-feeld-rōd) n. built in 1962 in an area where Waverley Mills and part of Blenkhorn and Richardson's, Eastfield Mills had been. Some of the council flats there were demolished in 1998.

East Fodderlee (eest-fo-dur-lee) n. eastern part of the lands of Fodderlee in the lower Rule valley, lying east of West Fodderlee, and also Old Fodderlee. It was also known as 'Easter Fodderlee'. Near the bend in the road to the south are Easter Fodderlee Cottages, and a little further south is Easter Fodderlee March Wood. The owner in 1707 was Mary Kerr, when the value was £80. The lands were disposed by James Thomson to William Riddell in 1784 and then granted to John Thomson 3 years later. However, the lands are recorded being owned by George Thomson in 1788, and still in 1811 (so there may be some confusion with names). John sold them to Thomas Gregson in 1802, who sold them to Charles Kerr of Abbotrule 4 years after that. Kerr sold them to William Walker in 1815, and they passed to Walker's nephew James in 1832. However, in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls the farm is recorded being owned by George Thomson and valued at £80. In 1864 the farm was purchased by Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs, who had plans to encourage the railway to pass through the land. James Fairbairn was farmer there in 1861 and his widow was recorded as farmer in 1868. The farm was bought by John Usher of Norton and Wells in 1895. There was probably a small threshing mill here, powered by water from a pond. A polished stone axe found there is in the Museum (formerly written 'Fotherlie' and variants; see also Fodderlee).

Eastgate (eest-gā) n. street running through the middle of Denholm, being part of the A698. It is also known as Main Street.

Eastgate Hoose

Eastgate Hoose (eest-gā'-hoos) n. house on the Loaning in Denholm. It was the home of the local master joiner around 1900.

East Grain (eest-grān) n. small stream in the headwaters of Twislehope Burn in the upper Hermitage valley, south of Twislehope Hope. It rises near Mid Hill joining Muckle Sike to become Deep Gill.

East Highchesters (eest-hI-ches-turz) n. former name for a smaller part of the main Highchesters estate, distinguished from West Highchesters. There were 9 'communicants' there in 1650, namely John White, Bessie Allan, Adam Noble, George Heatlie, Janet Adam, John Gavin, Robert Renwick, Helen Napier and James Scott. It was within Wilton Parish until the Parish of Robertson was formed in 1689/90. It was probably the farm within Wilton Parish owned by Robert Scott of Glack in 1678. In 1694 there were 5 separate householders recorded there. John Wilson was there in 1714–20. John Hume was there in 1736, John Scott in 1742 and Robert Scott in 1763. It was purchased from Elliot of Fenwick by the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1756. George Hart was farmer there in 1797. In 1788 and 1811 it was part of the Buccleuch estates and valued at £130. George Hart was tenant there in at least 1797–1812 and James Hart was also living there in 1812 (also called 'Easter Highchesters', it is 'Easterhaychasters' in 1694 and 'Easter Heichester' in 1718).

East Hill (eest-hil) n. hill just to the south-east of the Note o the Gate. It reaches over 420 m (it is marked 'Easter Hill' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Easthope (eest-hōp) n. John (d.c.1899) son of a soldier, his widowed mother and sister came to the Hawick area, where they slept in the barn at Branxholme Braes. The mother died overnight and the children were taken charge of by Mr. Grieve, then raised by Nancy Ewart. He attended school in Newmill, was apprenticed as a stone mason, and taught the herds' children at Penchrise, later starting a school in Hawick. In Pigot's 1837 directory he is listed as a teacher on the Back Row, but it was also said that his private school was on the Mid Row. He wrote some articles for the Kelso Chronicle, which helped secure him a Civil Service job in London, where he rose to a high position.

eastin (ees-tin) adj., poet. east, eastern (noted by J. Leyden).

Eastla (eest-la, ees-la) adj., n., arch. the eastern part of Hawick, as opposed to the 'Wesla',

East Mains

i.e. the part to the East of the Slitrig, also known as 'Eastla Water'. The rivalry between the two parts of town used to be quite strong, with, for example, competing bonfires at the 'King's Ranting' in the 18th century, and a tradition for the Cornet to be elected from alternate sides. In the 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson) there used to be gangs from each side, made of youths under about 16 years old, which formed 'regiments' with drums, flags, halberds, clubs and even swords. They would battle in the 2 or 3 weeks before and after 'Fastern's Eve' (the time of the 'Baa' game), when injuries were common. They also used to have competing bonfires on July 4th, with material collected over the preceding month, and regular raids on each other's store of fuel. The rivalry survived into the Baa game of the 19th and early 20th centuries – '... a total of 86 deaths ... 34 were in Eastla water, and 52 in Westla water' [JE] (cf. eašla).

Eastla Witter see Eastla

Eastlea Drive (eest-lee-drīv) n. street in Denholm, off the main road after the Ashloaning, with construction began in the 1930s and finished after WWII. The local police station was on the corner with the Jedburgh road until it closed in 1971.

East Langlands Ludge (eest-lawng-lindz-luj, -loj) n. former gatehouse for Langlands House, now a separate dwelling, situated on Sunnyhill Road. It is dated 1880 and has picturesque detailing, including deep overhanging eaves. It was probably designed by the Edinburgh firm Kinnear & Peddie. It is a grade C listed building.

East Lees (eest-leez) n. former farm adjacent to West Lees, between Newton and Appletreehall. James Cranston was farmer there in the mid-19th century (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

East Mains (eest-mānz) n. former name for a set of lands to the east of Hawick, distinct from West Mains. The boundaries probably changed over time, but it consisted of essentially all the land to the east of the Burgh. Together these were originally part of the 'demesne' lands of the Baron. The detailed outline is shown in a survey of the lands held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718. At that time it consisted of 572 acres, bounded by the Slitrig, Meikle Whitlaw, Hummelkows, Weensland and the eastern limits of the Burgh; the enclave of Hilliesland and some smaller portions of lands were not included and the land was described as 'corn land which is indifferent good, but it lyeth very inconvenient by reason that there is so many hills and valleys in it'. A great deal of what is currently the eastern part of the town (including the Terraces, the Wellogate, Slitrig Crescent, etc.) was once part of these lands. Over time various parts were sold to the Burgh and other landowners, or incorporated into neighbouring farms, so that eventually the name 'East Mains' ceased to be used. There was a court case of 1437 where William Douglas of Drumlanrig recovered part of these lands from Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains; they were there said to be in the demesne lands of Hawick 'commonly called le Estmaynis' and rightfully owned by the previous Sir William of Drumlanrig, including the mill with appurtenances. The lands of 'Est Manis of the Kirkton' recorded in 1470 are probably the same as Kirkton Mains, and not the East Mains of Hawick. These are probably the 'easter dominical lands' which James Douglas, together with his wife, held in 1484 before he inherited the Barony of Hawick. They are listed as part of the lands held 'in property' by the Baron in the 1511 charter. Part of these lands are referred to as being to the north of the Trinitylands in a charter of 1557 (assuming that 'Vest manis de Hawik' is meant for 'East Mains'). The lands were included in the Baron's property in a promise of infeftment in 1559, the retour of 1572 and in the Parliamentary ratification for Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1594. It was listed among the lands of the Earl of Queensberry in Hawick Parish on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, valued at £1120. The lands were described as having a mill, although it is unclear where this was simply Hawick Mill, or referred to another, perhaps on the Slitrig, would have been, and whether on the Teviot or Slitrig. In 1630 Drumlanrig gave a quarter of the lands to Thomas Lidderdale of the Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire). They are described as 'extending to 19³/₄ husband lands' in 1675. In 1684 a piece of land called Cramptlands Croft, within East Mains, was sold by Patrick Cunningham to Alexander Hislop. In the 1686 ratification of the Barony to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch it is listed first (supporting the idea of this as part of the demesne lands) as being 'nineteen husband lands and three fourth parts'. Rentals for the lands are included in the Buccleuch archives from 1690. However, it appears that some of the lands were purchased in the 1740s by the Duke of Buccleuch from John Scott and Thomas Turnbull (ex-Bailies of Hawick) and Patrick Cunningham. Improvements to the lands are mentioned in 1764. The lands of Crowbyreshaugh are recorded in a dispute of 1822 as being part of East Mains (it is 'Est Manys' in 1511 and 1514, 'Eist Manis' in 1514 and 1559, 'lie Eist-manis' in 1565/6, 'Eist Manis' in 1572, 'Eist Manys' in 1594, 'Eist Maynes' in 1615 and 'East Maynes' in 1686).

East Mains (eest-mānz) n. former name for a farm in Cavers Parish. It was presumably to the east of West Mains, and once formed part of the demesne lands of the Baron. James Douglas was there in 1716, George Dryden in 1748 and William Turnbull in 1782. George and John Dryden were there in 1784. John Ferguson was tenant in 1801, with his sons William, Thomas and Robert all on the ballot for the Militia (it is 'Cavers eastmains' in 1794).

East Mains (eest-mānz) n. former name for Knowetoonheid in Hassendean. It is referred to by this name in a 'letter of reversion' by Walter Turnbull, when it was assigned to the new Baron of Hassendean, Alexander, Lord Home in 1493/4 (and hence was originally the 'home farm' for the Baron). The name distinguished it from 'Middle Mains', which was also referred to in early times as part of Hassendean.

the East Mairch (thu-eest-mārch) n. the East Marches of Scotland coincided with the area known as the Merse, with wardenship often held by the Home family. It was also more or less the same thing as the Sherifdom of Berwick. The English East March, more or less Northumberland, often had wardenship by the Percy's.

East Middle (eest-mi-dul) n. farm by the Honey Burn, east of Cavers. The name distinguishes it from West Middle. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers, but in the Parish of Kirkton. It was owned by Douglas of Cavers in the 1643 and 1678 valuations. Andrew and William Douglas were there in the 1680s. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. It was farmed by James Turnbull in 1785, Alexander Douglas was there in 1795, Thomas Blyth was tenant in 1797, John Blyth was also living there in 1799 and Thomas Armstrong and John Hislop were servants there in 1801. The farm was a major local supplier of Leicester rams in the 19th century, with Thomas Scott Turnbull being the only local breeder of Border Leicesters in the 1840s. There were Turnbuls there in the 19th century and R. Ballantyne farmed there around 1900 (it is 'Easter Midle' in 1685; it is marked 'Easter Middle' on Stobie's 1770 map and is 'Easter Middles' in 1797).

East Middles (east-mi-dulz) n. former farm to the south-east of Lilliesleaf. Labourers John Murray and Robert Goodfellow were there in 1799. It is only marked on maps today through the plantation East Middles Strip ('Eastermiddles' and 'Westermiddles' are marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Easton (ees-tin) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Greensidehall. His son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. Margaret (b.1715) may also be his child. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Overhall in 1723 and 1725. He married Mary Turnbull and their children included: Anna (b.1720); Jean (b.1723); Beatrix (b.1725); Agnes (b.1728); Gideon (b.1731); and William (b.1734). The witnesses in 1723 were William and Robert Easton (possibly his father and brother) and in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He may be the Adam who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for Robert Wilson and in 1729 for Adam Wright in Dean Mill. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, perhaps living at Wiltonburn. He married Isabel Renwick and their children included: Agnes (b.1770); and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas (perhaps his father) and Thomas Hoy. He could be the Adam who (along with George) was recorded owning part of Roughheugh in 1788 (valued at £11 8s 8d), and still recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Oxnam Parish. In 1791 he married Isobel Helm, who was from Cavers. In 1792 he was at Shiplaw Corse when his son Robert was baptised in Cavers Parish. Adam (b.1783) son of Andrew and Margaret Kedie, he was farmer at Overhall. In 1851 he was farming 62 acres and in 1861 he was a widower farming 60 acres. In 1814 he married Janet, daughter of John Michie from Old Northhouse. Their children included: Isabella (b.1815); Margaret (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); William (b.1821); Robert (b.1824); John (b.1826); George (b.1828); Christian (b.1830); and Helen (b.1833). Agnes (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who received poor money from the Session in 1706. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Twislehope in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He is probably the shepherd at Broadleehope listed among heads of households in 1835–37 and Broadlee 1838–40. He may be the Alexander, married to Jean Kyle (daughter of Andrew Kyle and Jean Murray), whose children, born in Castleton Parish, included: William (b.1822); Andrew (b.1824); Jane

(b.1826), who married Walter Gledstains; Alex (b.1828); Robert (b.1834); James (b.1835); Isabel (b.1836); and Elizabeth (b.1838). This family emigrated to Ontario, Canada in 1840. He left around the same time as the other Alexander, who was surely related. Alexander (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1836, when he was at Whithaugh. He was at Bellshields in 1838 and 1840, and emigrated to America about that time. He was surely related to the other shepherd Alexander. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He could be the Andrew, married to Helen Swan, whose son Stephen was born in 1671. Andrew (18th C.) mason in Hawick. The death of one of his children is recorded in 1782. He could be the Andrew who married Margaret Kedzie in 1771, with children including Robert (b.1773), George (b.1775), Thomas (b.1777), Agnes (b.1779), an unnamed child (b.1782), Adam (b.1783), Christian (b.1786) and Andrew (b.1789). Andrew (1743–1820s) tenant farmer at Overhall, son of Robert and Christian Murray. He was recorded as farmer at Overhall in 1797, with Thomas also listed there. He owned some property in Edinburgh and would go there for a couple of days a year to collect the rent. On one such occasion he returned early to find his daughter Christian holding a party. Being a strict and disapproving man, he said nothing until leaving the next time, when he told her 'Kirsten, if you're going to again have a party, you'd better have it a day earlier', and so no party was held again. In 1771 he married Mary (or Margaret) Kedzie, who died in 1809, aged 63. Their children included: Robert (b.1773), who became a minister in Montreal; an unnamed child (b.1782); Adam (b.1783); Christian (b.1786); and Andrew (b.1789). It is said that his wife was excommunicated from East Bank Kirk for attending the service of a minister she knew who was preaching at a neighbouring church, and so the family moved to the Green (Anti-Burgher) Kirk. Andrew (b.1805/6) born in Robertson Parish, son of George. He was farmer at Easter Ale Moor and then Todrig. He was farmer at Ale Moor, according to an electoral roll of 1837. In 1841 he was at Easter Ale Moor. In 1851 he was at Todrig, farming 1376 acres, 46 of which were arable and in 1861 he was farming 1400 acres and employing 3 labourers. His wife was Isabella. Colin (1956/7–) attended Burnfoot and the high Schools, where he started playing rugby, settling after a while into the position of full back. After school he played for the P.S.A., being Captain in 1974/5, before moving to the Trades. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. at the age of 18 and eventually played 199 games for the Greens. He was a regular member of the team that won 4 titles in the early 1980s. He was Captain in 1986/7. He worked for the Fire Brigade. He married Elaine and they live in Hawick. Francis (1758/9–1829) gardener in Hawick. He was probably son of Overhall farmer Thomas (since they were recorded on the same headstone). He is probably the Francis who was recorded as a gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, as well as at Roberton (for the minister James Erskine) in 1779. He may be the same Francis who was gardener at Stobs in 1794 and 1797. He married Elizabeth Ormiston, who died in Hawick in 1833, aged 53. George (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to John and Peter, who were also listed. George (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as former occupier (along with Richard Brown) of Salenside Croft and ‘Skakriggis’. These same lands were then assigned to John Scott in Kirkhouses by Walter Scott of Ashkirk. George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He came right after William, to whom he was presumably related. George (17th/18th C.) servant to William Henderson in Clarilaw. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Margaret (b.1702); and Helen (b.1709). George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded s tenant in Woll in 1715 and 1717. He married Bessie Murray and their children included William (b.1705), James (b.1708), John (b.1713), Agnes (b.1715) and Margaret (b.1717). George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Tait and their children included John (b.1733). George (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787. He may be the ‘younger mason’ recorded in Lilliesleaf in 1790 when he was involved in a dispute over an unpaid bill in Selkirk. Probably the same George is recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. George (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of part of Roughheugh, along with Adam. They were still recorded as owners on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to Adam, or the other Eastons. George (1785–1875) born at Upper Glendivan in the Ewes valley. He was recorded as a roadman at Glendivan in the 1841 census. He moved to Edinburgh and became an agent of the Scottish Temperance League, who talked all over Scotland about abstinence and sobriety. In 1834 he married Mary Hetherington. Their children included James, Douglas and Margaret. His autobiography was published in 1869. George (b.c.1775) tenant farmer at Easter Alemoor, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1841 with his son Andrew. He is probably the resident at Borthwickshiels who subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He married Elizabeth Brack and their children included: Andrew (b.1805); George (b.1809); and Margaret (b.c.1810). George (b.c.1810) son of William. He was a hairdresser in Hawick, who was an early Trustee and deacon of St. George’s Kirk. On the 1861 census he is listed at 1 High Street. He married Elizabeth Jane (b.c.1828), daughter of William Scott, and sister of Sir James A.H. Murray’s first wife. Their children included: William, local song-writer; Robina Ann; James D.; and Elizabeth D. George (19th C.) farmer at Fenwick, recorded on the 1834 electoral roll as a tenant, with lands acquired from William Turnbull of Fenwick. Gideon (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1765 he witnessed a baptism for Gideon Scott in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Irvine in Hawick in 1763 and their children included: Margaret (b.1766); Elizabeth (b.1768); and Janet (b.1771). Witnesses to the 1766 baptism were butcher Thomas Waugh and smith Robert Telfer. He could be the Gideon, son of Adam and Mary Turnbull, born in Wilton in 1731. He may have earlier married Margaret Laidlaw in 1758. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included Isobel (b.1632), Margaret (b.1633), Robert (b.1635) and Marion (b.1639). The witnesses in 1652 were M...Scott and William James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: George (b.1650); John (b.1652), William (b.1657); Thomas (b.1658); and Robert (b.1661). Agnes (b.1647) and Bessie (b.1648), with no mother’s name given, are probably also his children. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Johnstone in 1656. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was tenant at Westerhouses in 1709. His children included: Margaret (b.1707); William (b.1709); Janet (b.1711); John (b.1714). It is possible he is the same man as James in West Burnfoot. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at West Burnfoot in 1722 and Alton in 1729. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: Jean (b.1716); Helen (b.1719); Robert (b.1722); and Adam (b.1729). The witnesses in 1722 were William and Walter Scott (who may have been related to his wife) and in 1729 were James Dryden and Thomas Irvine. He could be the James recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Heap in 1725. He married Isobel Aitken (probably in 1714, although no wife's name is given) and their children included: Anne (b.1716); Isobel (b.1720); Agnes (b.1723); and Robert (b.1725). He is probably the James who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism in 1725 for James Smith, also resident at Heap. James (17th/18th C.) resident of 'Geamscleugh' (i.e. Gamescleuch) in Ettrick Parish in 1716 when his son William was baptised in Robertson Parish. He may be the William who married Helen Stavert in Robertson in 1716. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Scott and their son James was baptised in 1764, with witnesses John Anderson and James Hogg. He may be the James who in 1765 witnessed a baptism for Robert (perhaps his brother). James (1739/40–95) tenant at Broom, which must have been in Rulewater or nearby. He was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard, along with his son William and an unnamed daughter. James (18th C.) married Agnes Sanderson in Hawick in 1758. It is possible that they had a son James in the 1770s (the entry being hard to read). James (18th C.) resident of Braxholme. He married Betty Cook and their children, baptised in Hawick, were Isabel (b.1774) and Mary (b.1779). The witnesses in 1774 were James Roger and William Mitchellhill. James (18th/19th C.) carter in Lilliesleaf. He married Agnes Thomson and their children included: George (b.1790); Isobel (b.1792); James (b.1794); Maney and Agnes (b.1796); and Thomas (b.1799). He is also recorded in Selkirk (in the Walter Mason Collection) in a dispute over an unpaid bill. Probably the same James, resident of Lilliesleaf, is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the James who owned land in Lilliesleaf in 1788 (still recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £26 13s 4d, which was among those owned by Sprot of Riddell in about 1874. James (18th/19th C.) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. James (18th/19th C.)

listed as a wright in Wilton on Pigot's 1837 directory. He could be the James born to Andrew and Margaret Kedie in Wilton in 1782. James (19th C.) married Harriet Rutherford in Lilliesleaf in 1823. James (19th C.) married Margaret Henderson in Southdean in 1829. John (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to George and Peter, who were also listed. John (17th C.) recorded in 1581 as former occupier of a 'husbandland with onset, toft and croft' in Ashkirk, later wadset by Walter Scott of Ashkirk to John Scott in Kirkhouses. John (17th C.) tenant at Salenside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Drinkstone in 1698 when his daughter Helen was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Scott in Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Tandlaw. John (d.bef. 1691) resident of Ashkirk. He married Blanch Bell and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1691. His wife was recorded as his widow at the baptism, with witnesses Robert and John Easton (who were probably related to him). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk who married Isobel Helm and had children Isabel (b.1690), William (b.1692) and Elizabeth (b.1696). The witnesses in 1690 were William and John Scott. He may be the John who (along with Robert, also married to a Helm) witnessed a posthumous baptism for another John in 1691. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694, distinct from the James in Salenside. In 1698 he was recorded as tenant in Ashkirk. He married Janet Easton and had children Agnes (b.1695), Robert (b.1698), George (b.1699), Isobel (b.1702), William (b.1704), John (b.1707), Thomas (b.1709) and Robert (b.1715), all baptised in Ashkirk. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish. In 1710 he was 'Elder tenant in Askirk'. He married Bessie Leithead and their children included Janet (b.1706) and Agnes (b.1709). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Galalaw in 1723. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Veitch in Galalaw. He married Isobel Learmonth, recorded in Robertson Parish in 1713 (and perhaps the same marriage recorded in Wilton in 1714, with no wife's name given. Their children included John (b.1718), Isobel (b.1720), Margaret (b.1723) and Agnes (b.1726). William (b.1715), with no mother's name given, may also be his child. The witnesses in 1723 were Robert Taylor and John Scott. John (18th C.) married Margaret Easton in Wilton in 1741. John

(18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Dunn and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1746. John (18th C.) married Agnes Brown in Wilton in 1769. John (18th C.) from the Damside family. He married Euphan Douglas. Their daughter Rachel married Merrylaw farmer William Goodfellow in 1773. The 84 year old Euphan who was recorded as 'Independent' on Underdamside in 1841 could be his daughter. John (18th C.) recorded as a hairdresser in Hawick on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He was a barber in Hawick when the death of his wife (name not given) was recorded in 1805. He is probably the John who married Jane Hutton and had children William (b.1798) and George (b.1802). John (18th/19th C.) probable name for labourer at Hobkirkstile according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799 (the name is hard to read). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He had children William (b.1806) and Ann (b.1808) baptised in Hobkirk. John (18th/19th C.) wright on Damside, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He could be the John who married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton in 1797. John (19th C.) married Janet Henry in Wilton in 1832. Peter (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to George and John, who were also listed. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be the Robert who married Isobel Helm and had a son James (b.1690), with witnesses Robert Scott and John He may also be the Robert who married Margaret Henderson and had a daughter Margaret (b.1698). He could be the Robert who (along with John) witnessed a posthumous baptism in 1691 for another John. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Teindside. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, but some of the dates were unreadable. Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th/18th C.) described as 'in Todshaw' in 1696 when he leased the lands of Todshaw for 5 years from Gideon Scott of Highchester. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Anna 'Kair' in Wilton in 1708. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes 'Steward' and their children included Robert (b.1708). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Cavers and their children included Robert (b.1717) and William (b.1719). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Greensidehall in 1725. He may be the

Robert who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1722 (along with William) for Thomas Liddell, in 1723 (along with William) for Adam Easton and in 1733 for William Goodfellow. He married Margaret Scott, the marriage probably being the one recorded in 1715 (with no wife's name given). Their children included Margaret (b.1718), Helen (b.1720), Anna (b.1725), Isobel (b.1728) and Francie (b.1730). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He may be the Robert who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for James smith in Wilton in 1725. He may also be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William, resident of Heap, in 1733. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1737, Borthaugh in 1742 and Clarilaw again in 1744. He married Jean Dodds in 1736 and their children included: William (b.1737); Helen (b.1739); Thomas (b.1742); and Mary (b.1744). The witnesses in 1737 were Andrew Martin and William Gray, in 1742 were George Hart and William Turnbull and in 1744 were James Dodds (probably related to his wife) and James Dryden. Robert (1702/3-91) farmer at Overhall, probably older brother of Thomas, who also farmed there. In 1746 he was living at Calaburn. He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Adam Cuthbert (in Langlands) in 1742, William Scott (in Whitfield) in 1743, Archibald Turnbull in 1759, for John Scott (in Lees) in 1764 and for Robert Oliver in 1770. He married Christian Murray (who was from Galashiels) in Wilton in 1734, and she died at Pathhead, aged 82. Their children included: Isobel (b.1736); Andrew (b.1739); Mary (b.1740); Andrew (again, b.1743), who also farmed at Overhall; Adam (b.1746); Thomas (b.1748); and Christian (b.1750). The witnesses in 1746 were James Robertson and John Murray and in 1748 were Walter Scott and George Lamb. Robert (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Margaret Dickson and their children included an unnamed child (b.1755), John (b.1757) and Andrew (b.1758). Robert (d.1778) resident of Hawick Parish. His death record lists him as 'An old Man', suggesting he had no family at that time. Robert (18th C.) builder who was paid in 1751, along with Robert Oliver and their workmen, for work on the new Teviot Brig. This was explicitly for 'helping the far pillar of the bridgem and 12 drains'. He may be the Robert who married Christian Scott in Hawick in 1752. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dickson and their children included: James

(1763); and James (again, b.1765). The witnesses in 1763 were cooper Alexander Scott and church officer Alexander Bunyan, and in 1765 were James (probably his father or brother) and Alex Bunyan. Elizabeth (b.1760), with no mother's name given, was probably also his child. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Adam (b.1767); and William (b.1768). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Easton and their children included Helen (b.1771). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Tibby was baptised in 1773. Robert (1749–1823) land surveyor of Jedburgh, only son of William of Rankend and Isobel Bridges of Maxton. He was said to be a 'self taught student of natural science, chiefly astronomy and mathematics'. He was a regular visitor of James Veitch at Inchbonny. He married Mary, elder daughter of George Douglas (from the Timpendean family), tenant of Howden, and Agnes Oliver from Dykeraw. His wife survived 'nearly all their family'. Their children were: William, who died in childhood; Jane, who died young; Betty, also died young; Agnes (1784/5–1856), who died unmarried; Isabella, who married William Matthewson and died in Greenlaw; Mary, last of the family, who died in Edinburgh, aged 84; Esther (1789/90–1839), who married John Tintlin; Jean (1793/4–1865), unmarried. A memorial stone was erected to the family in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Easton and their children included Francis (b.1790). Rev. Robert (1773–1831) son of William and Nelly Thomson, he was baptised in Selkirk. His father was a gardener and he was the eldest of 4 children. However, there is an alternative suggestion that he was eldest son of Andrew, farmer at Overhall. He attended Hawick grammar school, then Edinburgh University. He was licensed as a Burgher minister in 1793 and ordained at Morpeth in 1798. Along with 5 other clergymen he emigrated to New York in 1802 and moved to Montreal in 1804. He ministered privately to Presbyterians there and then helped found St. Peter's Street Presbyterian Church (also known as St. Andrew's), Montreal. In 1818 he helped set up the Presbytery of the Canadas. He also worked with the British and Foreign Bible Society. With his eyesight failing, he retired in 1824. He married Mary Beattie and they had 4 children, 2 of whom died in infancy. He had sermons published in 1815 and 1816. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Ashybank according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He may be the Robert, son of Robert, baptised in Cavers in 1777. Robert (b.1797/8) weaver in Hawick, son of William, who was from Southdean Parish. He was living with his father on Bourtree Place in 1841 and 1851. On the 1861 census he was at 2 Bourtree Place, living with his sister Isabella and described as 'Woollen Weaver & Chelsea Pens'. This suggests that he spent some time in the army. Stuart (1983–) born and educated in Hawick, he became a motorbike racer. He was British Supersport Champion in 2002. He has ridden for Ducati, Kawasaki and Honda. He suffered a serious crash during practice in 2011. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anne Easton and their son Adam was baptised in 1745. Thomas (d.1800) farmer at Overhall, probably younger brother of Robert, who also farmed there. He appears to be at Crumhaugh in 1742. He was recorded at Overhall in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; Andrew is also listed there, who was probably his nephew. His wife Margaret Easton (apparently the same surname) died in 1777, aged 50; this was at Whitehillbrae (part of Dodburn farm), suggesting he earlier farmed there. Their children included: Margaret (1742–67); Mary (1746/7–65); Robert (1762/3–98); and Gideon, who died in infancy. The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. Hawick gardener Francis may have been another son (since he was recorded on the back of the same headstone). The witnesses to the 1742 baptism were Walter Scott and another Thomas Easton. Thomas (b.c.1770s) stockingmaker recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and he was still listed in 1801. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Groundistone. His daughter Mary died in 1811. Thomas (1780/1–1846) precentor of the West-end Church, who ran a school for teaching English and Music on Silver Street in the early 19th century. He is recorded there in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. His school later moved to the Fleece Inn Ballroom (presumably the High Street location where he was recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory), and it was here in 1838 that the meeting took place to organise the opening of the Chartist Store. He only taught reading, writing and counting, with Saturday morning lessons consisting entirely of reading the Bible and the Shorter Catechism. On Saturday afternoons he went round the district cleaning clocks, often accompanied by a pupil of mechanical bent. He also held singing classes in the evenings. He is listed on Tannage Close in 1841, with his wife Margaret. Thomas (b.1787/8) born in Selkirk, he was gardener at Chisholme. He was listed at Chisholme in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Anne Lumsden in Robertson Parish in 1917 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1818); Helen (b.1820); Robert (b.1822); Charles (b.1823); Isabella (b.1826); William (b.1827); and John (b.1839). Thomas (b.1817/8) from Minto Parish, he was a 'Dresser of Woollen Hosiery' on the Back Row in 1851. In 1861 he was a hosiery warehouseman living at 1 Teviot Place. He married Jessie Linton in Hawick in 1842. Their children included Margaret (b.1843), James (b.1845) and Thomas (b.1854). William (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. George appears right after him on the list, and so was probably closely related. He is probably the William who married Isobel Dodds and whose children (baptised in Ashkirk) include a son 'Betreck' (b.1697) and another son William (b.1690). The witnesses in 1690 were James Veitch and George Scott. In 1690 he (along with George Scott) in turn witnessed a baptism for James Veitch. He also witnessed baptisms (along with James Veitch) in 1691 for John Tait and for Robert Turnbull. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His daughter Agnes married Walter Hall (from Jedburgh) in 1713. He may be the William who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for Thomas Liddell and for Adam Easton (perhaps his son) and in 1724 for Andrew Martin at Clarilaw and James Young at West Burnfoot. William (18th C.) cottar in Castleside in Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Smail and their children included: Margaret (b.1719); Isobel (b.1722); Helen (b.1724); George (b.1726); and Isobel (again, b.1728). William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1727 he married Jean Scott and their children included an unnamed son (b.1727) and William (b.1731). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1732 he married Margaret Scott, the marriage being recorded in both Robertson and Wilton Parishes. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Heap in 1733. He was probably related to the earlier William who was at Heap. He married Margaret Scott in 1732 and their children included: James (b.1733); Robert (b.1735); and Bessie (b.1736). The witnesses in 1733 were Andrew Drummond and Robert Easton (who was surely related). William (18th C.) schoolmaster in Ewes Parish. In Edinburgh in 1739 he married Margaret, daughter of Walter Turnbull, schoolmaster at Hawick. Their children, baptised in Ewes, included: Christian (b.1740); William (b.1742); Walter (b.1743); Elizabeth (b.1748); and Margaret (b.1751). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1759. He married Janet Scott in 1758 and their children included Jean (b.1759) and Elizabeth (b.1762). The witnesses in 1759 were Walter and Robert Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1773); and Joanna (b.1777). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1769 he married Violet Lorraine. Perhaps the same Violet Lorraine married Walter Turnbull in Hawick Parish in 1771 (in which case he must have been deceased). William (18th C.) married Elspeth Rutherford in Bedrule Parish in 1782. William (b.1768) son of Robert, he was born in Southdean Parish. He was probably the William recorded as gardener at Greenriver (working for James Chisholme) in 1797. He was a gardener at Greenriver in 1801 when his son John was listed on the Militia ballot (unless there is another generation, he must have been quite young when he had this son). He later lived in Hawick, where he worked as an agricultural labourer. He lived on Bourtree Place in 1841 and was described as a retired gardener in 1851. His children included: John (b.c.1780); Robert (b.1807/8), weaver and 'Chelsea Pensioner'; Margaret; and Isabel (b.1818/9). William (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Smith. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included: Janet (b.1795); Joseph (b.1797); Margaret (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1800); George (b.1804); and Adam (b.1806). The witnesses in 1795 were James Winthroppe and Thomas Huggan, and in 1797 were Joseph Caverhill and James Scott. William (b.1783/4) barber in Hawick. He is recorded as a hairdresser on the High Street on Pigot's 1825/6 directory, as well as a fishing tackle maker. He is listed in the 1834 electoral roll along with his son George as a joint proprietor. In 1837 he was listed as a High Street hairdresser, as well as a fishing-tackle maker. He is still listed as a High Street hairdresser in Slater's 1852 directory, as well as a toy dealer and fishing-tackle maker. He lived at about 2 High Street according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He married Elizabeth Richardson and their children included: an unnamed child (d.1809); George (b.c.1810), who took over the business;

Catherine (b.1815); John; William (b.1822); and James (b.1824). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Mary (b.1818), James (b.1820), William (b.1823), Christian (b.1824), Margaret (b.1826), Euphemia (b.1828) and Robert (b.1830). William (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he is recorded as simply a 'dealer' on the High Street. This could be the same man as the hairdresser. William Scott (1853–1877) son of hairdresser George and Elizabeth Jane Scott. He was related on his mother's side to local poet William Scott. He was well known for writing satirical rhymes and doggerel, leaving us with the familiar 'Kinly Stick' and 'The Anvil Crew', as well as 'Run Them In'. Robert Murray says that 'his best pieces are now lost, never having been committed to paper'. He was Bard of Masonic Lodge St. John 111, but could not have lived long in that position. He died tragically at age 23 in a shooting accident when training with the Volunteers. He had apparently stood in to replace someone else as a marker during practice at the Whitlaw Range near Hummelknowes. A poem 'Alane', found in his private notebook, was published after his death, but essentially nothing else survives (formerly spelled 'Easten', 'Eastoun', 'Eastoun', 'Eiston', 'Eistone', 'Eistonne', 'Eistoun', 'Esten', etc.).

east o the gate (eest-ō-thu-gā) adv., arch. in an easterly direction, eastwards – 'Here's Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here's baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o' the gate, While Dunnerum danders ower the knowe' [HI] (also 'east the gate').

East Port (eest-pōr) n. old entrance to the town, situated roughly opposite Baker Street, corresponding to the modern 74 High Street, removed in the mid-18th century. An entry in the Town Treasurer's Book for 1751 states that a tanner is paid 'for lime to the East Port Cross', which is the only mention of the possibility of a 'cross' being there (but may be an error). The port is marked on Wood's 1824 map. This once marked the beginning of the road out of town along Bourtree Place towards Jedburgh. A plaque was erected by the Callants' Club beside the Waverley Bar (78 High Street) in 1964. The place was formerly used to distinguish among families of the same name that lived in different parts of the Town, e.g. 'Walter Scott at the Eist-port, Robert Deannes, thair' in 1638 – '... Bailie Scott and Thomas Hardie from Wm. Dickson's house to ye East Port on both sides of ye town' [PR1722].

East Spittal Road (eest-spi'-ul-rōd) n. former name for a road in Minto Parish. A 'Haugh be-East Spittal Road' was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

East Stewart Place (eest-stew-ur'-plis) n. street off Wilton Hill in the area known as Stewartfield, built in 1886, and named after Rev. James Stewart.

East Teviotdale (eest-teev-yi'-dāl) n. name used to refer to lands owned by Melrose Abbey in the 15th and 16th century. They were among a list of lands to which the Scotts of Buccleuch were appointed as bailie. It is unclear precisely the location and extent of the lands so-named (it is 'Esttywidail' in 1519, 'Esttywidail' in 1524, 'Esteywidail' in 1524 and 'Est Teuidail land' in 1553/4).

east the (eest-thu) adv., arch. towards the east, 'east of the' – '... differing ten minutes or so from its modern sister east the street' [WNK] (this was formerly a common expression).

East-the-witter (eest-thu-wi'-ur) adj., arch. another form of Easla or Eastla water, i.e. referring to the part of Hawick on the eastern side of the Slitrig – 'By cash for stent collected east the Water of Slitrig, ... 3 8 8' [BR1761], 'As soon as public worship began, the elders started on their quest, two being appointed for 'east-the-water' and two for 'west-the-water' [JJV] (cf. West-the-witter).

East Whitehaugh (eest-whi'-af) n. former farm in the hills behind Wilton, once also known as Wester Heap.

easy (ee-zee) adv. easily – 'We were that easy pleased when we were bairns ...' [WL].

easy-osie (ee-zee-ō-zee) adj. easy-going, flexible, insouciant, unconcerned about a choice – 'A'll take either yin, A'm easy-ozie' (also written 'easy-osy' and 'easy-ozie'; an example of 'rhyming reduplication').

eatche (eech) n., arch. an adze.

eatin-hoose (ee'-in-hoos) n. an eating-house – 'There was a snod bit leikely-leike eateen-hoose, nerr bye ...' [ECS].

eave (n., arch.) n., arch. a nave, hub of a cart-wheel (noted by J. Jamieson).

ebber (e-bur) adj., poet. shallower – 'The good apostle's whisky cask, Would grow but little ebber' [JR].

ebbit (e-bi) interj., arch. yes but, literally 'aye, but' or 'ah, but' – 'Ehhbit NA!! Nehh!' [ECS], 'Eh, bit gaun back teh 1707 an oo find that yin o' the toon's twae bailies was a Rob Broon

...’ [BW1979] (also written ‘eh, bit’ and variants).

Eben (e-bin) n. short form of ‘Ebenezer’, occasionally used in Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries.

Ecclefechan (e-kul-fe-kin) n. town in Annandale, off the M74, birthplace of Thomas Carlyle at the Arched House, built by his father and uncle in 1795. The nearby Hoddum Castle was a Maxwell stronghold. Population 857 (1991) (named after the church of St. Fechin).

Eccles (e-kulz) n. village north-east of Kelso, in Berwickshire, also being the name for the associated parish. The village contains the ruins of St. Mary’s Priory, burned by Hertford in 1545. The mansion house there dates from 1898, replacing an earlier house. Surviving estate buildings include a clock tower, dovecote and lodged gateway (the origin is probably from ‘church’, since there are the remains of a Cistercian Convent there; it is ‘Ekkils’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Eccles Hoose (e-kulz-hoos) n. large house near Kelso, built 1895–8 in a Scottish 17th century revival style.

ech (ech) interj., arch. exclamation of disgust, surprise or sympathy – ‘Eh, ech, preserve us a’. What now?’ [JEDM].

echi (e-ki) n., v. echo (also spelled ‘echih’).

echt (echt, ech) n., arch. eight – ‘Hoo sic bits o’ eggshells could haud echt full-grown men, Is a thing that aw never can yet comprehend’ [BM1900], ‘A gaed ti bed at neine an A sleepeet on till echt, gey nerr the clock roond ...’ [ECS], ‘The daily wumman had arrived at Sharp’s hoose as usual, at echt in the morning ...’ [DH], ‘Is my clock an echt-day or a thirty-hour movement?’ [DH], ‘Echt days, ech’ days, a week (ago): ‘this time (or day) echt days’ [GW], an eighth (this was once the common pronunciation; cf. aicht, aucht, aeight and eit).

echty (ech-tee) n., arch. eighty – ‘He throve frae seeventeen-fifty-five And leaved to be echty-yin’ [DH] (also eity, echty and aeighty).

Eckford (ek-furd) n. village about 5 miles east of Jedburgh, and also the name for the surrounding parish, containing the villages of Eckford, Cessford and Caverton. The lands were granted to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1450 and erected into a barony in the following year. They remained part of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch through the 17th century. The lands were valued at £20 in 1574, and along with Lanton were held ‘by the service of ward and relief’. The lands were given in liferent to Margaret Ker when she married Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1586. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branhholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The Barony was coupled with the lands of Hawick and Lempitlaw in the rental records of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1692, when set to Sir Patrick Scott. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties. The village was burned during the ‘Rough Wooing’ of 1544/5. The church dates from 1771, with some earlier fragments; it closed in 2006 and is now privately owned. There is an existing communion token from 1696. The graveyard contains a Mort-house for guards to look out for grave robbers. The parish united with Crailing in 1977 and became part of Ale and Teviot United Church in 2004. The village has a community hall, built in 1930. The bridge at Eckford Mill was built in the 1690s (the origin of the name is probably ‘Ecça’s Ford’, from the Old English personal name; it first appears as ‘Eckeford’ about 1200 and was ‘Eckfoord’, ‘Ekfurd’, ‘Ekfurde’, ‘Eskfuird’, ‘Hecfurd’, and other variants).

Eckford (ek-furd) n. Andrew George John Nichol ‘A.N.’ (b.1851), son of John. He carried on his father’s grocer and spirit merchant business at 21 High Street, which lasted until at least the 1950s. The Museum has a stone bottle labelled ‘Andrew Eckford’s celebrated nourishing stout, 21 High Street, est. 1838’. John ‘Johnny’ (c.1770–1843) stocking-maker in Hawick. He was described thus: ‘a quiet inoffensive man of plodding habits and taciturn disposition. Dressed in a short tailed blue coat and knee breeches, his legs encased in coarse blue stockings, a low crowned broad brimmed hat on his head, his short thick body bent forward as if pressing in advance of his legs, while the firm way he planted his feet on the ground bespoke of a decided determination of character indicative of the man’. He married Jean, daughter of John Anderson, tenant at Newton in Wilton Parish, and she died in 1829. His wife was descended from Helen Lithgow, sister of Rev. Robert, minister of Ashkirk. Through her he claimed the residue of the estate of John Lithgow, who had made a fortune while serving in India. He devoted his life to trying to prove his right to the fortune, travelling widely to see headstones and interview people, and becoming known to the law courts in London, as well as Sir Walter Scott, the Earl of Minto and others. He died in London, still pursuing his cause, and although he was ultimately not successful, he apparently had his expenses paid in the form of 'discovery moeny'. However, the people of Hawick who supported his labours as 'cent per cent callants' presumably never saw any money. His marriage to Jean Anderson (or 'Andisone') was in Wilton in 1802. Their children included: Jean (b.1802); Archibald (b.1804); Agnes (b.1806); John (b.1808); and Michael (b.1811). John (1804–88) born in Cavers Parish, son of William and Jean Nichol. He was a grocer at 24 High Street, establishing his business in 1838. He is recorded at about 38 High Street in 1841, No. 35 in 1851 and Melgund Place in 1861. He was listed as a High Street grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. He was registered as a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish in the 1860s. He married Janet Kerr, who died in 1876, aged 72. They had several children who died young, including Andrew (b.1842), George (b.1844), John Nichol (b.1847) and James (b.1848); 3 of them died in the cholera outbreak of 1849. Surviving children included: William Kerr (b.1839), who became a merchant in Leeds and married Anne Gaitskell; Euphemia (b.1840), who married George Somerville; Elizabeth Wood Fordie; and Andrew George John Nichol ('A.N.', b.1851), who was also a grocer. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. A stout bottle from his firm is in the Museum. John (b.1818/9) born in Bedrule Parish. In 1861 he was farm steward at Stichill. His wife was Mary and their children included John and James. John (19th C.) builder in Hawick. He is said to have gone out to the gold rush in New Zealand with Andrew Thorburn (son of George Thorburn, farmer at Stonedge). This would have been in about 1861. He could be the joiner from Bowden listed as a boarder on Brougham Place in the 1861 census. William (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Blackley-mouth in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in 1709. William (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer in Denholm in the early 19th century. He is said to have been the last such independent manufacturer in the village. He is listed as a stocking-maker in Denholm in 1852. It is possible he is the same as the farm servant living at Honeytown in 1851, with sons John, Thomas and George. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. William (b.c.1780) born in Ancrum Parish, he was a slater in Denholm. In 1851 he was a widower, living at around 21 Main Street; Jean was living there in 1841 and so possibly his wife.

Eckford's (ek-furdz) n. grocer's shop at 21 High Street in the mid-19th to early 20th centuries. It was run by John Eckford and later by his son A.N. Eckford. It was also the name of a kind of 'nourishing stout' that was made there.

ecky-pecky wine (e-kee-pe-kee-wīn) n. a kind of medicinal wine??.

the Eclectic Club (thu-ee-klek-teek-klub) n. society existing in Hawick in the middle of the 19th century, which met in Miss Riddle's room on the High Street and discussed literary topics.

eddart (ed-ar') n., poet. the adder – '...thaye ar like the deaf eddart that stapps hir lug' [HSR], 'Thaye hae sherpenet thair tungs like ane serpent; eddarts' venim is anunder thair lipps' [HSR].

Edderstoun see Adderstone

Eddie (e-dee) n. John (b.1792/3) originally from Glasgow, he was a woollen framework knitter in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at about 3 Walter's Wynd, running a boarding house, with 20 boarders. He married Jean Knox, who had previously been married to William Thomson and Francis Wilison, and so he had several step-children.

Edgar (ed-gur) n. (c.1072–1107) King of Scotland from 1097, he was the son of Malcolm III and succeeded his brother Duncan II. He died unmarried and the nation was split between his brothers Alexander and David.

Edgar (ed-gur) n. James (17th C.) served as 'procurator' to Walter Scott of Goldielands in 1670. This was when Scott of Goldielands brought an action in Melrose against Andrew Tunno to make copies of instruments of sasine far Goldielands, which Tunno had in the previous Hawick Town Clerk's 'protocol book'. It is unclear if he was a Hawick or Melrose lawyer. James (b.1780/1) born in Kirkcudbrightshire he was a teacher pupil, but gave up due to ill health and took up work as a stockingmaker, becoming an apprentice in Hawick in 1801. He was one of the main organisers of the Hawick Reformers of the early 19th century. He married Jean, a daughter of shoemaker Robert Oliver. In 1841 he is recorded on the Cross Wynd with his wife Jean, as well as Robert and John, probably his sons. He died in his 80s, after working about 60 years as a stockingmaker in Hawick. James (b.1827/8) from Canonbie, he was a merchant in Newcastleton. He was at about 18 Douglas Square in 1861. He married Elizabeth, daughter of shepherd Walter Jackson. Their children included Jane, Helen, Isabella, William and James (1860–1920, who died at 11 Oliver Crescent, Hawick). James (19th/20th C.) eldest son of Robert and cousin of editor James. He worked for Pringle's and was known for his lay preaching. It is said that when given some lily of the valley he planted it within a biscuit tin in the ground, saying 'Aw'm no gaun to have a weed in ma gairden'. He married Mary Scott. James (1862–1940) son of John and Isabella Richardson. He was proprietor and editor of the Hawick Express, who wrote several local books, including 'Hawick Common-Riding' (1886), 'Hawick Guide: Directory and Yearbook' (1903), 'Hawick in the Early Sixties' (1913), 'History of Lodge St. James' (1932) and 'The Provosts of Hawick' (1933). He was also responsible for promoting the songs of the Town in many publications, such as 'Hawick Songs and Recitations' (1892, 1901), 'The book of Hawick songs and verse' (1902) and 'Hawick Songs' (1914). A keen Common Riding supporter, he was Secretary of the Committee from 1887 until around 1908, and acted as Clerk of the Course at the Races. His letter to the Hawick Express on 2nd April 1887 suggesting changes to the Common Riding ceremonies led to the resuscitation of the festival in the following years. In 1928 he was gifted a grandfather clock for 32 years of service on the Common Riding Committee (and this is now in the Museum). He was also one of the founders of the Callants' Club, being the first Honorary Secretary and President in 1924. He was a Town Councillor for several years. He was the initiator of the 'Betty Whutson' column in the Hawick Express. He was also Honorary Secretary of the Cricket Club. He married Janet, daughter of Bailie John Richardson, and she died in 1930, aged 65. Their son John was a banker in Edinburgh. John (c.1826–1909) son of the first Hawick James. He was a warehouseman in Teviot Crescent, lived at 3 Village and was father of newspaper proprietor James. He was a prominent Common Riding supporter of the mid-1800s. He married Isabella, daughter of James Richardson of 'Saut Haa', and she died in 1909, aged 78. Their children were Margaret (who married baker James Scott) and James (who became editor of the Hawick Express). Jock (1920–2016) brother of Rob and Wull, he worked at Wilson & Glenney's, Mactaggart's, Lyle & Scott and Turnbull the Dyers. He played rugby for the Quins, the Y.M. and the Linden, where he was President and became a life member. He gained his Mosstroopers' badge at the aged of 57. He was known as a singer, particularly of 'Oor Ain Auld Toon'. There is a bench to his memory at the Vertish. Rev. Nicol (1658–1724) minister at Hobkirk, he was a son of John and Elspeth of Wedderlie. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1677 and was licensed by Earlston Presbytery in 1693. He was ordained as minister at Hobkirk in 1694 and served there until his death. There is a story of how one night about midnight in the church, he confronted a ghost that had been haunting the churchyard, finding it to be the spirit of a murdered cattle-dealer, and an arrangement was made that it be allowed instead to roam freely between Hoddleswoodie and Howabank. Whatever the basis of this story, he was apparently thereafter looked on with suspicion by some of the parishioners. He preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. He married Susanna, daughter of John Veitch, minister of Westruther, and she died in 1713, aged 52. Their children were Susanna, Elizabeth (who married Robert Blyth in Edinburgh in 1739) and John (who died age 17). He was buried in Hobkirk kirkyard, but it is said he was dug up shortly afterwards to be buried in some lonely spot, but his arms coming free and striking one of these superstitious men, they dropped him in the ditch and fled, so that he had to be reburied the following day. The inscription for his burial was carved into the same stone as that of Rev. James Douglas. Robert (1815/6–99) son of the first James and brother of John. He was a hosiery worker in Hawick. He was one of the first members of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, joining in 1838. He married Helen Armstrong, who died in 1888, aged 75. Their sons were James (who worked for Pringle's), Robert (who married Mary Robson, sister of the joiners, and became a baker in Inverness) and John (who married Jessie Anderson and became a mill cashier in Inverness). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Wilson and their children included Robert (b.1845), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. Walter H. (1885/6–1933) grocer in Newcastleton. He married Betty Nichol, who died in 1900, aged 31. He secondly married Jane Elliot, who died in 1910, aged 41. He thirdly married Margaret Nichol, who died in 1935, aged 60. William (d.1907) heavily involved with the Vertish Hill Sports and St. George's Kirk. He held the position of Church Officer for the 2 years before his death. He was also Clerk of the Scales at the Common Riding Races.

edge (ej) n., arch. a watershed that does not have a prominent ridge, the word being used in several hill names, e.g. Firestone Edge, Grundistane Edge, Lamblair Edge, Limekilnedge, Millstone Edge, Reidcleuch Edge, Whisgills Edge, Whithope Edge and Wundy Edge.

the Edge (thū-ej) n. former popular name used in Liddesdale to refer to the pass over into Teviotdale, perhaps named after the Limekilnedge and Sandy Edge.

Edgerston (e-jur-stin) n. estate about 7 miles south-east of Jedburgh, home of the Rutherfords of Edgerston. It was a detached part of Jedburgh Parish, with its own church. There was probably a fortified house there from at least the 15th century. In 1544 it was stormed by a group of Olivers, Halls, Croziers and Turnbells, who had entered into a bond with the English. Thomas ‘the Black Laird’ was possessor at the end of the 16th century; his arrival at the Raid of the Redswire is meant to have turned the tide. Tax was paid on 7 hearths at the main house in 1694. The present mansion house dates from the 1720s, with major renovations in the 1830s. The house is surrounded by an area of diverse woodland and contains an octagonal dovecote from about 1800. Nearby farms include Edgerston Rig and Edgerston Tofts. Records of the Rutherfords and Olivers of Edgerston are in the National Library of Scotland, including estate account books and charters (the name probably derives from the Old English ‘Ecgheard tun’, i.e. ‘Ecgheard’s town’; it first appears as ‘Edyarston’ in the late 15th century, is ‘Edyarstoun’ in 1553/4, ‘Edgaristoun’ in 1561, ‘Edgarstoun’ in 1567, ‘Edyarston’ in 1571, ‘Edyerstoun’ in 1581, ‘Edzarstoun’ in 1597 and still ‘Edgerstown’ in 1780; it is probably the place marked as ‘Iedgerton’ on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland; note that it is easy to confuse with early spellings of ‘Adderstone’).

edgie (e-jee) v., arch. to be quick in doing something (noted by J. Jamieson).

edgy (e-jee) adj., arch. sharp, smart, quick – ‘Be edgy’ [GW], ‘Look edgy’ (= hurry up) [GW].

Edie (e-dee) n. William (1865–1936) son of Robert, joiner in Hawick, and Christian Miller. He attended school in Robertson and was educated at St. Andrews University from 1882 and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1892. He was minister at King Edward 1893–1905, Dumfries Greyfriars 1905–1910 and Inveresk from 1910 until he died. He translated ‘Textual Criticism of the Greek New Testament’ by Eberhard Nestle (1901).

Edinburgh Border Counties Association

Edina (e-dee-, -dī-na) n., poet. romantic name for Edinburgh, popularised by Fergusson and Burns – ‘Ye sons of stately Edina, with page and pen, Come, buckle on your armour bright, up, grasp your swords like men’ [JoHa].

Edina Place (e-dee-na-plis, e-dī-na-plis) n. street in the Terraces of the Wellogate, with houses built in 1885, and called after a poetic name for Edinburgh, e.g. Burns: ‘Edina! Scotia’s darling seat!’.

Edinburri (e-din-bu-ri, -ru) n. Scotland’s capital since the 15th century, now seat of the Scottish Parliament, lying between the Firth of Forth and the Pentland Hills, approximately 51 miles north of Hawick by road. Linked to Hawick by rail from 1849–1969 and by road via the A7, it has been the most important city for Hawick people for many centuries. The main A7 was dramatically improved locally as the Scotch-Dyke to Haremosse Turnpike in the late 18th century. In Hawick the main road north went up Wilton Path (after crossing the ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd or the Teviot Bridge after 1741) and then up Stirches road towards Ashkirk. In the early 18th century the road to Edinburgh then proceeded to Selkirk, followed by Darnick, and then by way of a ferry, ford and bridge to Lauder, Oxtoun, Channelkirk, Fala and via Dere Street to Dalkeith. The new road from Selkirk to Edinburgh was built in 1755 and went via Fairmile and Clovenfords and along the west bank of the Gala Water. The modern route via Galashiels, Stow, Heriot and Fushiebridge was not laid out until 1833. The city had its own Riding of the Marches from 1579 until 1718. Population (1991) 401,910 – ‘Did ee gang ti sei eer freends the teime ee was in Edinburrih?’ [ECS] (Teries often talk about going ‘inti Edinburgh’ rather than using another preposition).

Edinburgh an Hawick Railway (e-din-bu-ru-an-hlk-rāl-wi) n. line operating between Hawick and Edinburgh, owned by the North British Railway. It began as the Edinburgh and Dalkeith Railway, in 1831, incorporating the Marquess of Lothian’s Waggonway in 1845, extended to Gorebridge in 1847 and reaching Hawick in 1849. After being extended to Carlisle the route was renamed the Waverley Line.

Edinburgh Border Counties Association (e-din-bu-ru-bōr-der-koon-teez-aw-sō-see-ā-shun) n. organisation formed in Edinburgh in 1865 by gentlemen in the capital city who had a connection to the Scottish Borders. The association promoted the arts and culture of the Borders, being responsible for erecting monuments etc. At one point they owned Leyden's Cottage in Denholm and Rhymer's Tower in Earlston. A similar organisation was formed in Glasgow in 1875 and there were shorter-lived organisations in London and Sydney.

Edinburgh Borderers' Union (e-din-bu-ru-bōr-der-urz-yoon-yin) n. former club in Edinburgh, with rooms at 22 Forth Street. It was founded in 1874, with an annual dinner where both sexes were welcomed. The organisation gave prizes for essays and offered aid to Borderers who were in difficulty. They also published an edition of Leyden's poetry and a life of Sir David Brewster, as well as having their own reading room. From 1890 they instituted an annual excursion and a choir was formed in 1894, followed by a Literary and Debating Society, a Cycling Club, a Whist Club, a Golf Club and a Cricket Club.

the Edinburgh Cup (thū-e-din-bu-ru-kup) n. presented by Teries in Edinburgh, it was competed for at the Common Riding Games in the late 1800s, the event being the 250 yards foot race on the Saturday.

Edinburgh Road (e-din-bu-ru-rōd) n. popular name for the 'new road to Selkirk' leading north out of town. It was used as a street name up until the mid-20th century for that part of the road beyond Wilton Hill, but still within the Burgh.

Edin's Hall (ee-dinz-hal) n. remains of an Iron Age broch and several other contemporary walls and earthworks on the hills above the Whiteadder outside Duns. This is the best preserved example of a broch anywhere near Hawick (also called 'Edwin's Hall', 'Edenhall' and other variants).

Edmonds (ed-mindz) n. Rev. Donald Kinloch (b.1941) born in Hawick, son of Alexander McDonald and Catherine Maria Balfour Kinloch. He was educated at George Watson's, Dalkeith High and Edinburgh University.

Edmondson (ed-mind-, -mee-, sin-, -stin) n. George (c.1842–1900) son of Isaac, he was a butcher in Hawick. The family were members of the 'English Kirk'. In 1871 he married Joan Bowie, who appears to have been the aunt of his brother Isaac's wife, Jane Bowie. Their children included: Isaac (b.1870), who died young; Isaac (b.1872), also died young; Isabella (b.c.1874); Isaac (1876–1959), who died in Galashiels; Richard (b.c.1878); Elizabeth (b.c.1880); Janet (1883–1971), who married George Henry Cairncross; and George (b.c.1887). They also had 2 children who were illegitimate from Joan: Cathrine (b.1863), whose name is also given as Oliver and married Robert Anderson; and John (b.1868). Isaac (b.c.1785) from England, he came to Hawick probably in the 1830s, and worked as a dyer. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on the Round Close. He was listed as a dyer on the Round Close in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Johannah Lewarne, who was still alive (on Allars Crescent) in 1861. Their children included: George; Isaac (b.c.1820); Richard; and Johanna. Isaac (c.1820–55) from Coldbeck, Cumberland, he came to Hawick with his parents Isaac and Johanna. He worked as a skinner. He married Isabella Montgomery. Their children included: George (c.1842–1900); Richard (b.c.1843), who married Elizabeth Pattison Kennedy; Johanna (or Hannah, b.c.1848); and Isaac (1855–1924), who married Jane Bowie. He died in Hawick. Isaac (1855–1924) 3rd generation of Isaacs. He was born in Hawick, but died in Edinburgh. In 1876 he married Jane Bowie, who was the niece of his brother George's wife, Joan Bowie. His son was also Isaac (1876–1942), who died in Hawick. Isaac (1876–1942) 4th generation of Isaacs in Hawick. He married Margaret Little in Hawick in 1897. James (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. His name is recorded as 'James Edmestone'. James (1872/3–1947) married Mary Murray, who died in 1955, aged 81. They are buried in Wilton Cemetery. They had a son John Murray (1903/4–88). John (15th C.) recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. William Douglas in Deanbrae was charged to enter him for the slaughter of Thomas Hoggarth; Oswald Mason was also accused of the same crime, with Ralph Ker charged to enter him. Failing to appear he was denounced a rebel and his goods escheated to the King. Given that his surety was a Douglas from Deanbrae, then he may have been local. John of that Ilk and Ednam (16th C.) son of James of that Ilk and Katherine, daughter of George Home of Wedderburn. In 1530 he was charged (along with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John, Abbot of Jedburgh) with disisting from his claim to the lands of Ednam. He was probably the John of that Ilk who was on a panel of 'retour' in 1551 for David Home of Wedderburn. In 1567 he was cautioner for 'Dand Elliot' of Caveling. Either he or his son was listed among the men who signed a bond in 1569 to suppress thieves on the Border. In the same year Robert Kerr of Woodhead promised to relieve him of a bond to make payment to an Englishman. In 1529 he married Euphemia, daughter of Gilbert Wauchope of Niddrie-Marischal. He was succeeded by his son Sir John. Sir John of that Ilk and Ednam (d.c.1595) son of John, he was Sheriff of Lauder. He may be the same Sir John who in 1569 signed the bond to suppress thieves in the Border and he signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1574 he was on the retours for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott and his father Sir Walter. In 1575 he was found to have falsely accused Robert Fraser in Overton of stealing horses belonging to Englishman Sir George Heron. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1590 he was cautioner for Walter Scott of Goldielands. He is listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1591/2 he was surety for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when there was an accusation that he had led 200 Scotts and others to steal livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva. In 1593 he resigned his lands at Synton and Synton Mill to John, Earl of Mar. In 1595 he was listed among leaders ordered to appear in court to resolve feuds. He married Agnes, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford and was succeeded by his son Andrew. He may be the John of that Ilk whose daughter Margaret married George Scott of Synton. Rev. John (1801–1865) son of Thomas, an Edinburgh ironmonger and Isobel Howden. He was dux at Edinburgh High School in 1815, graduated from Edinburgh University, and was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1825. He was presented to the Parish of Ashkirk by Gilbert, Earl of Minto and became minister there in 1837. He may have been assistant there previous to the death of Rev. Hamilton in 1837. He walked out during the Disruption of 1843 and became minister of Ashkirk Free Kirk. It is said that he suffered great hardship as a result, for example sheltering in a small house 4 miles from the church, and then having to move to a dilapidated farmhouse 3 miles further away, before in 1845 finding a residence in Selkirk, 6 miles from his congregation (a distance that he would walk every week). He married Janet (or Jane) Waddell in 1842, and she died in 1895. Their children were Jessie Traill, Thomas William (farmer), Isabella Howden (who married William Ross), Wilhelmina Euphemia, Elizabeth, and Mary Margaret (who married William Ebenezer White). In 1854 he edited an edition of 'Paradise Lost' and 'Paradise Regained' for schools and was assistant editor on 'Works of John Owen, D.D.' (1850–54). His surname is sometimes given as 'Edmonstone'. Richard (b.c.1843) 2nd son of Isaac. He was a hand-loom weaver in the 1861 census. He married Elizabeth Pattison Kennedy (b.c.1849) in Hawick in 1868. Their children included: Isaac (b.1869); Elizabeth Pattison (1871–1918); James (b.1872); Isabella Montgomery (b.1874), who married Bailie Francis Scott; Ann; Janet; Mary; Joanne; Richard (1884/5–1915); George; and John (b.1891), who married Jessie Hogg Wilkinson (who may have been his father's half-sister) and emigrated to Canada. Richard (1884/5–1915) son of Richard and Elizabeth Kennedy. He served in the 5th Battalion Cameron Highlanders and was killed in action. He is commemorated on the Loos Memorial in France. He married Elizabeth Robertson, who lived in South Shields. William (18th C.) recorded at Stobicote in 1727 when his daughter Martha was baptised in Cavers Parish (formerly 'Edmondston', also written 'Edmestoun', 'Edmestone', 'Edmonston', 'Edmonstone', 'Edmonstoun', 'Edmestoun', etc.).

Ednam (ed-num) n. village a few miles north of Kelso. Birthplace of James Thomson, who wrote 'Rule Britannia' and Henry Lyte, who wrote 'Abide With Me'. This is also the name of the surrounding parish, which is claimed to be the first named parish. It borders Sprouston, Kelso and Stichell, as well as part of Berwickshire. The Eden Water crosses the parish and the Tweed forms its south-east boundary. The church has communion tokens from the late 17th century. A book 'Ednam and its indwellers' was written by John Burleigh in 1912 (the origin is 'town on the Eden Water'; it first occurs as 'Ednaham' in the early 12th century).

educat (e-joo-kaw', -kat) pp., arch. educated – '...ane of the chief causes thair of being this, for want of scholes qr children may be educat' [PR1627], '...ye mortcloth latelie sentt by Mr Elliot in London (born and educat in Nether Southfield) ...' [PR1721].

Edward (ed-wurd) n. name of eight Kings of England. Edward I 'Longshanks' (1272–1307) English King who invaded Scotland in 1296, removing the 'Stone of Destiny' and historical records, and beginning the War of Independence. He was thus partly responsible for the unrest that plagued the Borders for the next three centuries. After dispute over succession of the Scottish crown, he gained overlordship of Scotland and chose Baliol as the King. Later many Scottish nobles swore fealty to him rather than to Robert the Bruce. In 1307 for example, the Lovels lost their lands around Hawick as a result. After invading in 1296 he also called a 'parliament' at Berwick and forced about 2,000 Scottish landowners and clergymen to sign the 'Ragman Rolls', this becoming a valuable historical document (partially making up for those he destroyed!). In 1297 he made a presentation to Cavers Kirk, since the former Baron's lands were now in his hands. It is also said that he visited Bedrule Castle in 1298.

Edward II (1284–1327) English King from 1307, son of Edward I. He was never very popular as a King, partly because he was heavily influenced by Piers Gaveston (who was possibly his lover) and later Hugh Despenser. In 1319 he appointed unnamed men to many Scottish churches, including Hawick and Cavers. He tried to continue his father's subjugation the Scots, including his disastrous expedition in 1314 to relieve Stirling Castle, which led to the Battle of Bannockburn. He was forced to flee from Bannockburn, pursued by James Douglas. He was denied entrance to Stirling Castle, but made it to Dunbar, where he escaped to England by ship. Forced to abdicate in favour of his infant son Edward, he died in a dungeon, possibly the result of a red hot poker up the backside – 'Gang cry the hounds of Douglas vale, Gang scream the Ettrick wall, Gang warn the spears of Lidiesdale, That Edward leads the foe' [T]. Edward III English King from 1327–77, including a time of much war and the Black Death. He renounced the Scottish throne in the 1328 Treaty of Northampton, accepting Scotland's right to independence. But he continued to battle the Scots and was victorious at the Battle of Halidon Hill in 1333. He was given much of southern Scotland by the puppet King Edward Baliol in 1334. And he took full possession of the Borderland in the 1340s, restoring lands to families who had supported England. The Lovels regained (at least on paper) their lands of Hawick in 1347. Edward was the self-appointed patron of St. Mary's Kirk in 1355, presenting it to 'John de Hawyk'. Edward VIII (1894–1972) British King who abdicated in favour of his brother. He visited Hawick in 1924 when he was Prince of Wales, opening the Laurie Bridge, laying a foundation stone for wards at the Cottage Hospital and giving an address in the Town Hall. The avenue from the new bridge to the Park gates were lined with school children to see the Prince, escorted by the Provost – 'The Prince was resplendent with his Chain and Ermine Robes, escorted by a Wee Soldier'.

Edwards (ed-wurdz) n. Thomas (18th C.) coachman at Riddell in 1794, when he was working for Lady Riddell. William (19th C.) dentist of Edinburgh who visited Hawick every Saturday in the latter part of the 19th century. He was based on Queen Street in Edinburgh, and set up at the Tower Knowe on his visits to Hawick. He gave a silver cup for the Cornet's Races in the 1880s and also donated a gold-mounted whip to be competed for by married supporters on several occasions through to the mid-1890s.

Edwin (ed-win) n. (585–633) King of Northumbria. He was the son of Ælla, who had been King of Deira, before it was united with Bernicia by Æthelfrith. He was expelled by Æthelfrith around 605, but was part of the force that defeated him and reclaimed the kingdom around 617. He is also supposed to have brought Christianity to the region. He was killed by Cadwallon and his allies near Doncaster (also called 'St. Edwin').

ee (ee) n., poet. eye – 'An' felt the tears o' anguish fa' in torrents frae oor ee' [JoHa], '... That aye maist filled oor ee' [JF], 'Ane ee for ane ee, an' ane tuth for ane tuth' [HSR], '... Or where quaiet rest to the ee ...' [WL] (not characteristic Hawick pronunciation, cf. ei).

ee (ee) pron. you – 'so ee say', 'what er ee daein?', 'ee ken fine', 'grab haud o this, wull ee?', 'course ee can', 'A bet ee a fiver', 'how div ee ken ee deh like eet if ee henni even tried eet?', 'Hev ee Mysie wi' ee Col? [AY], 'So come and A wull show ti ee, A spot that means the world ti me' [IWL] (sometimes written 'ye' even when the 'y' is unpronounced; this is the common second person pronoun, both singular and plural; cf. yow, which is mainly used to indicate a particular person, in the imperative and for emphasis; 'ee' is always used as the nominative of a verb in the past tense, and 'ee' is always used in the conditional and subjunctive tenses, never 'yow'; 'ee' is used before most auxiliary verbs, as well as before parts of the verb to be, such as 'ir' and 'war').

ee-bree (ee-bree) n., poet. eye-brow – 'The blinks o' the heaven's eebree' [HSR] (variant of ei-bree).

ee'd (eed) contr. you'd, you would – 'ee'd forget yer heid if it wasni screwed on', '... Ee'd think A'd hev hed ma fill' [IWL], you had – 'In thae days ee'd ti pack in nursin when ee got mairried' [IWL], eedit (ee-dee-in) adj., arch. diligent, industrious (variant of eident).

eedit (ee-dee-i) n. an idiot – ‘deh be sic an eedit’, ‘A can think o aeight right away off the top o ma heid ... – which yins the eedit?’ [IWL], also used to refer to someone who is difficult or whose behaviour is disapproved of – ‘yon’s an eedit, an ee’re better off stein away fri um’ (often spelled ‘idiot’ as in English; cf. eejit).

ee’d’ve (ee-duv) contr. you’d’ve, you would have – ‘ee’d’ve thowt si, wudn’t ee?’.

eejit (eeji) n. an idiot (cf. eedit).

ee ken (ee-ken) interj. conversational phrase often used in place of punctuation – ‘aye, ee ken, it was they, ee ken, folk fri Lynnwud, an no us, ee ken’, ‘But Aw’m no gaun tae tell ee a’ aboot oor meetin’ ee ken’ [JEDM].

eeksie-peeksie (eeek-see-peek-see) adj. even, balanced, equal, even-steven, six of one and half a dozen of the other (this is an example of ‘rhyming reduplication’; see also eachie-peachie).

eel-drooner (eel-droo-nur) n., arch. someone who is not clever or capable – ‘Atweel, he’s nae eel-drowner mair than me’ [JoJ].

eeleven (ee-lee-vin) n. eleven – ‘it’s eeleven mile to Jethart’, ‘...eeleven folk, no ti mention the fowre dogs, a guid few cats and a horse in the coalhouse!’ [IWL] (cf. eleven).

eeleventh (ee-lee-vinth) n., adj. eleventh – ‘The eeleventh’s an uphill struggle And the twalth can be a vex’ [IWL] (cf. the former elevint).

eelestitic (ee-les-teek) n., adj. elastic (also written ‘elestitic’; cf. lestitic).

eelie (ee-lee) v., arch., poet. to vanish, disappear gradually – ‘The strangirs sall eelie awa, an be afearet owt o thair clos pleges’ [HSR], ‘My dayes ar as ane skaddaw that eelys awa ...’ [HSR] (also yillee and ellie).

eelit (ee-li, -lee) pp., poet. vanished, diminished – ‘Winter eeliet frae our land’ [HSR].

ee’ll (eel) contr. you’ll, you will – ‘ee’ll be comin the morn’, ‘if ee eat yer crusts ee’ll git curly hair’, ‘ee’ll be the daith o mei’, ‘ee’ll eat mei oot o hoose an hame!’, ‘Ee’ll excuse me, but burnt bairns dreed the fire’ [JEDM], ‘... ee’ll need a licht ti finnd eet, A’se warren’ [ECS], ‘But there’s some whae make an impact In a verra spaicial way And A’ll tell ee now aboot yin If ee’ll hear what A’ve ti say’ [IWL].

ee’ll’ve (ee-luv) contr. you’ll’ve, you will have – ‘Ee’ll’ve been ti sei yer granny the day, hev ee?’.

eemage (ee-meej) n. image – ‘That callant keinds ti eis faither’s seide o the hoose; ei’s eis faither’s sputten eemeedge’ [ECS] (also written ‘eemeedge’).

een (een) n. pl. eyes, organs of sight – ‘... eendy-teendy (een-dee-teen-dee) n. a children’s counting game often used for selecting players, ‘eenie-meanie-minie-mo’ being more common in England. The full version is something like ‘eendy-teendy, tithery-mithery, amba-zooka, over-dover, dick-ma-lamb, tam-toosh, ee’re oot’. Another version (ascribed to joiner Walter Wilson in the early 19th century) is ‘Zeendy, teendy, tethery, methery, Bomba, zitory, over, Dover, Dick Milan, Tan toosh, eir are oir out’. Variants on this are to be found throughout southern Scotland and northern England, and the obvious connection to Welsh counting suggests that this is a remnant of the ancient p-Celtic language once spoken here.

e’enin (ee-nin) n., poet. evening – ‘But eenin’ now, wi’ gloomy face, Sets country folk a-ganging’ [JoHa], ‘...thou makist the owt-gangin’ o’ the moornin’ an’ the e’enin’ til rejoyce’ [HSR], ‘In the moornin’ it growes up an’ flurishes; in the e’enin’ it is shurn down an’ wuthirs’ [HSR] (also written ‘eenin’).

Effie (e-fee) n. pet name for Euphemia.

Effledge (ef-lij, ef-leej) n. farm to the east of Cavers, between Nether Tofts and Whitriggs, in Kirkton Parish. Effledge Cottage is just off the road to the north-east. Archibald Douglas was there in 1502. It was once part of Cavers estate, listed among the lands belonging to the Barony of Cavers in charters of 1511 and 1558. There is a 1535 record of William Scott ‘in Layk’ being charged with stealing 13 cows and oxen from Arthur Douglas and Thomas ‘Fresall’ (possibly Fraser) and 7 cows and oxen from Marion Davidson, all from the lands there. Walter Noble was tailor there in 1686 when declared a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It was still held by Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and 1698. William Turnbull, widow Marion Turnbull and James Gledstains were all there in 1697. James Goodfellow was there in 1710, James Henderson in 1716, Walter Graham and Robert Scott in 1720 and Robert Stavert in 1794. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. James and Thomas Bunyan were tenant farmers there in 1797 and James Bunyan in 1799. George Helm was a servant there in 1801. It was farmed by William and then Thomas Grierson in the 19th century. William Blyth was farmer there in 1868. Robert Kerr was there in the early 1900s (also spelled ‘Efflidge’; the name first occurs as ‘esflage’ in 1502, then ‘Elflesche’ in 1511, and is ‘Efflesche’ in 1535, ‘Effleche’ in 1558, ‘Efladge’ in 1684, ‘Efletch’ in 1687, transcribed ‘Affleth’ in 1698 and ‘Eflitch’ in 1710 and 1716; it is ‘Efflidge’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is possibly from the Old English personal name ‘Ælf’, plus the Middle English ‘leche’, meaning ‘a bog’, but ‘the elf-swamp’ has also been suggested).

efremmit (e-fre-mee’, -mi’) adj., poet. estranged – ‘The wicket ar efremet frae the wome; thaye gang astraye sune as thaye be born, speiken’ lees’ [HSR] (perhaps only used once).

Eildon Hoosin Association (eel-din-hoo-sin-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. based in Melrose, this agency develops and manages about 1,400 sheltered and other types of housing units across the Borders, including many in Hawick.

Eildon Knowe (eel-din-now) n. small hill in the headwaters of the Ale Water, south of Crooked Loch, being the north-eastern spur of Mid Rig (it is unclear if there is a connection with the Eildon Hills).

Eildon Quaw (eel-din-kwaw) n. boggy area near the head of Byrelee Burn, west of Eildon Knowe.

Eildon Road (eel-din-rōd) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1953 and named after the Eildon Hills, which can be clearly seen from here.

the Eildons (thu-eel-dinz) n. the Eildon Hills, between Melrose and St. Boswells. They are somewhat peculiarly known as Eildon Mid Hill, Eildon Hill North and Eildon Wester Hill, with heights of 422 m (1,385 ft), 404 m (1,327 ft) and 371 m (1,216 ft), respectively. Eildon Mid Hill contains a triangulation pillar. The northernmost summit held the largest Iron Age fort in Scotland, constructed around the 10th century B.C.E. The Romans built a signal station there in the 2nd century, as well as an extensive fort and settlement nearby, and called the hills Trimontium. By local legend they were separated by Michael Scot the wizard, and also Arthur and his knights supposedly sleep here, waiting to return. There was a scare in about 1903, when people spotted smoke coming from the summit (caused by burning peat) of one of the hills and imagined that an extinct volcano was about to erupt – ‘From Eildon’s cairns no more the watch-fire’s blaze, Red as a comet, darts portentous rays’ [JL], ‘Gaze where Eildon’s triple height Guards the secret dread’ [RSC], ‘A mist of tenderness so lightly folds the Eildons in her mantling love ...’ [WFC] (they occur on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Heeldoun Hills’).

the Eildon Trei (thu-eel-din-trī) n. a tree on the slopes of the Eildons where Thomas the Rhymer supposedly met the Queen of the Fairies and was spirited away for 7 years. The site is marked by the Eildon Tree Stone, which is modern (1929), but replaces an older one – ‘Mysterious Rymour! doom’d by fate’s decree Still to revisit Eildon’s lonely tree’ [JL].

Eildrig (eeld-rig) n. older name for the area around Eilrig and still used for the hill and stream there. There was a building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map at Eildrigburnfoot, of which there are now no visible remains.

ei-lid (ī-lid) n. an eye-lid – ‘she didni bat an ei-lid when A telt her’, ‘I wullna gie sleepe til mine eyne, or sloom til mine eelyds’ [HSR].

Eilrig (eel-rig) n. farm on the ‘Eild Rig’, south of the Borthwick Water about a mile before Craik. Before 1689 (when Robertson was formed) it was part of Hawick Parish. The lands were held by

Robert Scott of Rankilburn from the early 15th century. In 1426/7 Robert’s son and heir Walter, was granted the lands by the Baron of Hawick. They were then valued at 10 merks and given ‘by the service of one penny’, due at the feast of St. John the Baptist. The lands were included in those resigned in 1463 and re-granted by James III in 1464 to Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. Robert Scott of Eilrig is recorded in 1477 renting the lands of Craik. In 1492 the lands were described as being then waste, but normally valued at £10 Scots. In 1501 the tenant was Simon Scott. In 1517 the lands were part of the estate of the Scotts of Buccleuch and said to be then ‘waste’, but valued at 10 pounds in times of peace; they had the same value in 1553/4. This is probably the ‘Elreg’ where David Armstrong was in 1533, the ‘Elryg’ where John Armstrong was recorded in 1561 and also the residence in 1576 of ‘Andro Armstrang, callit Reid Andro in Eilrig’. The lands were included in a list of those formally inherited by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch from his great-uncle David Scott in 1574; they were at that time annexed to the Barony of Branksholme and valued at £10. In 1581/2 the lands were held by Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell, when she complained that a gang led by the Armstrongs of Whithaugh and Braidlie had raided the farm; they came ‘bodin in feir of weir, with jakkis, steilbonettis, speris, swordis and utheris wappinis invasive’, stealing 24 cows, a horse and some goods. Adam Govenlock was there in 1586/7. The lands were listed (along with Philhope) as a ‘pendicle’ of Broadlee among lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. ‘Rowie of Huttikill, furth of the Lyn beside Eilrig’ is recorded in 1616. The lands were estimated to pay ‘200 lb., in vicarage to 32 lb.’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branksholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. There were 7 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Walter Grieve, Margaret Hall, Janet Grieve, Janet Murray, Robert Grieve, Margaret Scott and Maly Laing. It was still valued at £10 in 1653. Sir William Scott was recorded paying the land tax on £500 in 1663. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls it was still valued at £500 and listed as ‘Ilerig’ or ‘Flerig’ under Walter Scott of Raeburn. John and Robert Grieve were there in the 1680s. Walter Herd was there in 1710, John Johnston and William Black in 1712, John Nichol in 1716, John Shortreed in 1718 and James Rutherford in Eilrig. In 1719 it was leased by John Chisholme of Stirches from William Scott of Raeburn, then James Home of Eccles and in 1730 Walter Scott of Merrylaw. Robert Welch and James Grieve were living there in 1722, James Rutherford in 1728, Walter Laidlaw in 1733–36, John Nichol in 1735, William Scott in 1736 and Archibald Henderson in 1743. In 1759 it was sold to the Duke of Buccleuch by Rev. John Clunie of Whitekirk, when the lands are still described as being in the Barony of Branxholme. John Mitchellhill was there in 1764, William Lawson in the 1770s, Andrew Geddes in 1781 and Francis Elliot in 1786. James Tait was tenant farmer there in at least 1787–1815. In 1788 and 1811 it was valued at £500. Ninian Scott and Thomas Elliot were there in 1812. James Scott was shepherd there in the 1840s and 1850s – ‘Have you along the lonely road When the storm was raging near, Down by the old stone bridge At Eilrigg?’ [WFC] (the name first appears in 1426 as ‘Elerig’, with several later spelling variants, including ‘Ealrig’, ‘Ealrigg’, ‘Ealrigge’, ‘Eelridge’, ‘Eildridge’, ‘Eildrig’, ‘Eildrigg’, ‘Eilridge’, ‘Eilrige’, ‘Eilrigg’, ‘Eldridge’, ‘Eldrige’, ‘Eldrigg’, ‘Elrig’, ‘Elryg’, ‘Eylrig’ and ‘Ileridge’, as well as ‘Yealrig’, ‘Yeilrig’ and ‘Yield Rigg’; it is marked ‘Eilrigge’ and ‘Ealrigge’ on parish maps of 1650, ‘Ilick’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Eildrigg’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; the origin is probably simply ‘ridge’ with an Old English personal name Ælla, Ella or Illa).

Eilrig Burn (eel-rig-burn) n. stream that runs near the farm of Eilrig, flowing roughly north to join the Borthwick Water opposite Meadshaw. A building was shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map near the confluence with the Rough-hope Burn (marked ‘Eildrig Burn’ on the modern Ordnance Survey maps).

Eilrigburnfoot (eel-rig-burn-fi) n. Eildrigburnfoot, former cottage by the road near where the Eildrig Burn meets the Borthwick Water. A building is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, on the south side of the road. It is recorded in 1616 that ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott and William Scott of Satchells met Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ at ‘Eilrig-burne-fute’ after riding at night from Hawick, before meeting further accomplices and continuing to Howpasley, where they slaughtered the sheep belonging to the Laird of Drumlanrig. The Lamb family and 3 other people were living there in 1841 and just ‘annuitant’ Georgina Tait in 1861.

Eilrig Shank (eel-rig-shawngk) n. another name for Eilrigburnfoot (it is ‘Eildrige Shank’ in 1841).

Eimond (ee-mond) n. James (17th C.) probable name of a resident of Ashkirk Parish (but hard to read). He married Isobel Thomson and their son William was baptised in 1661, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and John Tudhope. Steven (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Murray and their children included William (b.1652) and ‘Andira’ (b.1662). The surname may be the same as that of the earlier ‘John Eamont of Hilhouse’ in Liddesdale.

eiry see eerie

eis (īz) pron. his – ‘... eis chuffy chowks aa fairnytickles, an eis airm up ti shade eis een ...’ [ECS], ‘Ei turned tae eis freendly neebour And gien um the nicest smile’ [AY] (also heis and hes).

eisel (ī-sel) pron. himself – ‘... an away ei birrlt, still buffin an smudgin inti eis sel’ [ECS], ‘Hei hes a guid ruice o eis-sel’ [ECS], ‘Ei treats me juist like eis sel But hei’s the yin wi’ the brain’ [AY] (variant of heisel, depending on the preceeding consonant; also spelled ‘eisel’, eis sel’, ‘eis-sel’ etc.).

ei-stern (ī-stern) n., poet. the eye muscle – ‘The eye-stern of his gallant grey Fell trickling down his nose; The pricker was a bruised wight, Full hardly up he rose’ [JTe] (this can also be ‘eye-string’).

eit (ī, īt) n. eight – ‘ir ee comin oot the night it eit?’ (note the other pronunciations in aeight, as well as echt and eicht; also sometimes spelled ‘eight’ even when pronounced properly).

eiteen (ī-teen) n. eighteen – ‘Hawick was a hotbed o radicalism in the eiteen hunders’ (also aichteen, aughteen, echteen and aeighteen).

eithly (īth-lee) adv., poet. easily, without difficulty – ‘An’ watch that chap wha bears the paper bundle, Aye, eithly watch the way he wears his castor’ [JoHa], ‘I threw by my crook, an’ wi’ thrawin’ the wuddie, Fu’ eithly I aided to forrit the fray’ [JoHa].

eity (ī-ee, ī-tee) n. eighty (also echty, eichty and aeichty).

ei-wink (ī) n., arch. an eyelash, eyelid (also ‘ei-winker’).

eke (EEK) v., poet. to increase, supplement, add – ‘... an’ destna eke til thy walth bie the pryce’ [HSR], ‘Eek punishmint til thair eniquitie, an’ let thame nat cum until thy richteousniss’ [HSR].

eke (EEK) adv., poet. also – ‘Myself, and eke your brothers three, Took ev’ry man his brand ...’ [JTe], ‘... An’ bringe the cruke, an’ eke the lynkis Doon frae the rannel trie’ [WiSp].

Ekron (āk-, ek-ron) n. Agnes (b.1788) daughter of John and Ann Johnson. In 1841 she was a grocer on the Loan, probably at about No. 17, and was at about 8–10 in 1851. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He erected a stone in St. Mary's Cemetery to commemorate his children: Agnes (1814/5–20); Ann (1816/7–20); Agnes (again, 1819/20–23); John, Mary and Eliza, who died in infancy; and James (1828/9–30). Given that all these children died young, it is possible he is the same Andrew as the son of John, who had several surviving children with Elizabeth. Andrew (b.1792) Hawick framework knitter, son of John and Ann Johnstone. His wife was Elizabeth (surname unknown). In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Walter's Wynd. His children include: Margaret (b.1826/7), who married George Pringle in 1851; Helen (b.1828/9); Mary (b.1831/2), who married Alexander Scott; Agnes (b.1834/5), who may have married Allan Stewart in 1857; and Ann Johnstone (b.1838/9), who was living with her cousin John Hall in 1861 and married Robert B. Wilson in 1862. His daughters Helen and Mary were lodging with Jane Turnbull on the High Street in 1851. Andrew (b.1829) frameworker in Hawick, son of James and Margaret Thomson. He lived at 48 Loan, 7 Back Row and 13 Drumlanrig Square. He married Elizabeth Stewart in Hawick in 1850. Their children include: Jane (b.1851/2); John (b.1856); Margaret (b.1858); James (b.1861); Janet (b.1862); James Stuart (b.1864), who married Nettie E. Blodgett in Michigan in 1895 and died in Indianapolis; Walter (1866–1909), married Grace Thwaites, but had no children; Robert (b.1868), who lived in Philadelphia and Chicago; Elizabeth (1872–1966), who married Archibald Drummond and died in Jedburgh; and Helen (1875–78). Family stories said that James and Robert emigrated to America, with one of them being an opera singer in Boston and the other one having a wooden leg! He was still alive in 1891. Andrew (1894–c.1952) son of John and Jemima Baxter, he was born in Hawick. He changed his name to Arthur Stewart Scott, apparently due to some mix-up during WWI (because he deserted or got separated from his unit and needed a new name in order to get back into the army). He married Althea Theadora ('Dora') Jones (1895–1973). They had a son, Arthur Frederick 'Fred' Scott (b.1920). He probably died in Wales. Ann (b.1790) daughter of John and Ann Johnson. She was a grocer on the Mid Row, recorded there in 1841. She had an illegitimate daughter, Adeline

(or Adelina, d.1897) with French prisoner of war Adam Bellom. Apparently she lived with Bellom for several years, but they never married. She appears to have died before 1851. James (1721–87) son of William and Mary Graham. He was a merchant in Hawick, presumably a bookseller, since he is recorded on the subscribers list for the reprinted Buchanan's History of Scotland (1752, 2 volumes), ordering 13 sets. He was also on the subscriber's list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784), for 12 copies, and listed there as 'merchant, Hawick'. His business is recorded as 'Messrs James Ekron, Hawick' when listed as one of the sellers of 'A Display of Genuine Christianity and Christian Love' (1784), Caw's second book published in Hawick; a copy of the book bears the inscription 'When this you see, Remember me, James Ekron'. He appears to have operated as a bookseller in about the period 1757–84. He owned property in Silver Street and in the Crescent. In 1780 he was one of 6 trustees for the East Bank Meeting House who had a bond with them for erecting the building. He is probably the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Adam Ormiston (at Drinkstone) in 1780 and James Black (at Packhouses) in 1781. He was recorded as a merchant in 1784 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for what appears to be a Hume. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was probably owner (and not James Aitkin, as suggested in notes) of a book, 'The Duty and Advantage of Religious Conferences, Proved from Scripture and Reason' (1743) by Rev. John Wilson; this book (which survives and is in the Museum collection) passed to his direct descendant, Sir James A.H. Murray, who wrote on 3 pages at the beginning, describing the book's provenance. He was at Kelso Fair during the great Slitrig flood of 1767 and on returning was surprised to see some of his own goods left lying on the haugh at Menslaws. His house was one of those carried away by the flood waters, his wife escaping just in time by crawling along a ladder laid horizontally to an upper window of a house on the other side of Silver Street, across the rushing water (their house must have therefore been between Silver Street and the river). His bed was found stranded on the Common Haugh after the flood, with the cat still sleeping on it. He may be the 'Joseph Eckron' (written in error) whose 'whole onstead of houses' were stripped of furniture etc. during the great flood of 1767, and several people helping save items had to be rescued themselves; these houses were close to John Kedie's house and it said that the damage to them amounted to £1000. He married Isobel Betty Richardson, who was probably daughter of merchant James Richardson and died in 1764. Their children included: Elizabeth ('Betty', 1746–85), who married merchant Walter Scott in 1765; Agnes (1748–80), who married John Oliver in 1766, was mother of Margaret Oliver who married Charles Scott, and was maternal grandmother of Sir James Murray; and William (1758–60). He had another daughter, who married a Mr. Adams and emigrated to America; she gained his Silver Street property after his death, with the Crescent property going to his daughter, Agnes Oliver. Mary, who married John Thomline in 1772 may also have been his daughter (based on the names of her children). The witnesses in 1746 were shoemaker Robert Oliver and maltman John Moss and in 1758 were James Beattie and George Telfer. He also had young children who died in 1759, 1760 and 1764. He may be the James who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He witnessed baptisms for his daughter and merchant Walter Scott in 1766, 1768 and 1771. He secondly married Margaret Brown in Hawick in 1766; she was traditionally said to be his former maidservant and died in 1802. 'Mrs Eckron Mercht in Hawick', listed on the 1789 female servant tax roll, was probably his widow; she also paid the same tax in 1790. In 1790 there was a case on his behalf in Selkirk for non-payment of a bill by William Cranston formerly in Mackside, now in Clarilaw on Ale, for '5 yards Bleu cloth intrist one it for laying out'. Additionally his widow Margaret Brown had cases for non-payment against James Stoddart, tailor in Shielshaughand in 1790, against a servant of Andrew Thomson in Oakwood Mill in 1791 and against John Campbell in Fauldshope, now in Whitehillbrae in 1793. His death is recorded in Hawick in 1787. James 'The Blast' (b.1757) son of William and Elizabeth Dobbie. He was said to be a merchant and bookseller in Hawick in the latter part of the 18th century; however, it is possible he is being confused here with the man of the same name born a quarter of a century earlier. The origin of his nickname is uncertain, perhaps related to smoking. He was probably a member of the Masons. He was Cornet in 1779 and also wrote some poetry. He married Helen Turnbull (from Kirkton Parish) in Hawick in 1781. They had a daughter Janet (b.1782), possibly the 'Jane' who married Benjamin Hooven. He could be the James who is recorded as recently deceased in a letter of 1794 between Hawick men living in Pennsylvania. James (b.1793) South African settler, born in Hawick. He is sometimes said to be son of John and Ann Johnson, but that may be confusion with another James (based on the names of his children, it is possible that he was a son of James 'The Blast'). He worked as a ploughman. He was in the party of settlers of Robert Pringle (farmer at Blakelaw) who went to South Africa in 1820, and worked as a ploughman. He is mentioned in John (son of Robert) Pringle's 'Narrative of a residence in South Africa' (1834) in connection with a lion hunt. In 1832 he was sentenced to 2 years hard labour for the murder of a 'Hottentot' with whom he was living. He firstly married Elizabeth Keen (1796–1870), but they seem to have had no children. He secondly married Mary Ann Moffat (from Gloucestershire) and their children were: James (1835–1916); Margaret (b.1836) and Matthew (b.1837), who died in infancy; William Moffat (b.1838); Janet Margaret (b.1840); John (b.1842); Mary Anne (b.1844); Mathew Charles Linton (1849–1915); and Thomas Edward (1852–1925). James (b.1794) Hawick frameworker, son of John and Ann Johnson. He was living somewhere on the Back Row in 1841 and 1851 and was at 7 Back Row in 1861. He married Margaret Thomson in Ettick in 1821. Their children include: John (b.1822); Elizabeth Anne (b.1824), who married John Rae; Andrew (b.1827); Andrew (again, b.1829); Helen (or 'Nelly', b.1831), who was a servant with grocer Adam Turnbull in 1851 and later that year married Alexander Ballantyne; Janet (b.1834), probably the Janet who married John Little in 1866; and Johnson or Johnstone (b.1839), who is said to have emigrated to America and worked as a lady's maid. A photograph of him exists. Jane (18th C.) recorded in Hawick Parish in 1787 when her daughter Janet was born. Perhaps the same 'Janet' had a child who died in Hawick in 1795 and a 'bastard child' who died in 1802. It is unclear who her parents were. John (18th C.) waulker, dyer and tenant in Hawick. He was brother of William, but the identity of their parents has not been established. The surname seems to be peculiarly Hawick and has not been found any earlier than the early 18th century; given that the local pronunciation was 'Aikren', it seems possible that it may be a corruption of another name, e.g. 'Aiken'. He was 'John Aikron in Hawick' in 1716, 'John Ekron Tenent in Hawick' in 1723 and 'Aikren' in 1725. He was 'John Aicron Tenent' in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker

William Wright in Hawick. In 1714 he married Jean 'Dinlap' (presumably Dunlop), who was also from Hawick, this being the first known record of the surname; his name was written 'Akrin' and he was described as a 'walker'. Their children included: William (1714–80), who married Elizabeth Dobbie; John (b.1715), probably died young; Janet (b.1716); John (again, 1718–1801); Jean (1721–75), who married Robert Tudhope in 1767; Helen (b.1723); and George (b.1725). Witnesses to the 1714 baptism were Robert Henderson and Andrew Turnbull, servants to Rev. Robert Cunningham. Witnesses in 1716 were Bailies William Laing and George Martin, in 1718 were William Laing and flesher George Renwick, in 1721 were William Laing and Robert Renwick, in 1723 were George Martin and John Glendinning, and in 1725 were Robert Scott of Falnash and Hugh Somerville. In 1721 he is recorded as 'John Aikron Tenant in Hawick'. John (1718–1801) mason in Hawick, son of John and Jean Dinlap and uncle of James 'The Blast'. He may be the John who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–88. He may also be the carrier in Hawick recorded in a dispute over a bill in Selkirk in 1787. He married Agnes Douglas in 1752. Their children include: John (1754–1816), apparently known as 'Esau'; Mary; and Agnes (b.1762), who died young. The witnesses in 1762 were William (probably his brother) and John Scott. In 1784 and 1786 he witnessed baptisms for another John, presumably his son. John (1754–1816) probably son of John and Agnes Douglas. He was said to be known as 'Esau' (for reasons that are not clear). He married Ann Johnston (or 'Johnston', 1759–1820). Their children include: Janet (b.1782), who died young; Janet (again, b.1784), probably the 66 year old seamstress 'Jane' living at Kirkgate in 1851, and the seamer living at Kirkyard in 1841; John (b.1786); Agnes (b.1788), grocer; Ann (b.1790), probably the grocer on the Mid Row recorded on the 1841 census; Andrew (b.1792); James (b.1794), who may have moved to South Africa or have been a weaver in Hawick; Margaret (b.1796), perhaps the Margaret who married Andrew Anderson; Helen (1800–30), who married William Davidson in 1823; and Elizabeth (b.1807), who may have married John Brown in 1835. The witnesses in 1784 and 1786 were Archibald Douglas and another John (probably his father). He may be the 'John Ekron Junr.' who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. He and his wife are buried at St. Mary's. John (b.c.1790) army pensioner. He was living on the Loan in 1841, along with Agnes (about 40 years old) and James Oliver (about 15). He is probably the son of John and Ann Johnson, born in Hawick in 1786. John (d.1854) son of James and Margaret Thomson. He was listed as a framework knitter at about 28 High Street in 1851. He may also have helped his aunt as a grocer on the Fore Raw. In 1844 he married Margaret (d.1858), daughter of stocking-maker Thomas Anderson and Isabella Scott. John (1856–1916) son of Andrew and Elizabeth Stewart, he was a frame-worker who lived on O'Connell Street. In 1881 he was living at 50 O'Connell Street, in 1891 was a stockingmaker at 17 Loan and later lived at 35 Loan. He firstly married Agnes Carruthers (d.1883) in Hawick in 1875. In 1887 he secondly married Jemima Baxter (1865–1935), but separated from her after the death of their son James. His children were: Mary (b.1875), who married Andrew Wilson; Elizabeth (b.1876), who married Andrew Elliot; Andrew (b.1878), who died in infancy; Helen (or 'Nellie', 1879–1943), who married twice, had no children, and died in Edinburgh; Jane (b.1881) and John (b.1882), who died in infancy; an unnamed child (b.1883); Jane (b.1887), died in infancy; Andrew (1888–91); James (1890–1906); Margaret (b.1891), died in infancy; Janet (1892–1971), who married Hugh Gilroy and died in Glasgow; Andrew (1894–1952), who changed his name to Arthur Stewart Scott and died in Wales; Mary Jane (1897–1913); Isabella (1899–1935), who married Wilson Hogg and died in Hawick; and Jemima (b.1902), who married John Douglas also died in Hawick. Walter (1866–1909) son of Andrew and Elizabeth Stewart. He worked as a lorryman. He married Grace Thwaites, but had no children. He died in Edinburgh and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick, probably brother of John and great-uncle of James 'The Blast'. Where he came from, or the identity of his parents, have not been established. He firstly married Mary Graham and their children included: James (1721–87); and George (b.1725). In 1726 he secondly married Margaret Douglas and their children included Marion (b.1727), who may be the Mary who married Walter Ballantyne in 1760. Witnesses to the 1721 baptism were shoemaker Robert Allan and Robert Hardie, tenant. The witnesses in 1727 were Bailie Purdom and candlemaker John Scott. William (1714–80) son of John and Jean Dunlop, he was a mason in Hawick. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1762 for John (likely his brother).

He married Elizabeth ('Betty') Dobbie in Hawick and their children include: James (b.1757), 'The Blast'; plus William (b.1762), Elizabeth (b.1766) and another William (b.1768), who all died young. The witnesses in 1768 were George Swan and Robert Tudhope (also spelled 'Ackren', 'Aickren', 'Aicron', 'Aikren', 'Aikrin', 'Eckrom', 'Eckron', 'Ekorn' and 'Ekrin'; this family seems to have been almost entirely based in Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries; the origin of the name is unknown).

elbi (el-bi) n. an elbow – 'hei got an elbih in the face frae yin o' his brothers'.

elbi chair (el-bi-chār) n., arch. an armchair – 'Frae the wean to the granny in auld elbow chair' [JJ].

Elborn (el-börn) n. Barbara Louise, B.E.M., received the British Empire Medal for services to the community in Newcastle-on-Tyne in 2019.

elder (el-dur) n. a lay church officer elected by the local congregation to have official duties in the Presbyterian Church, and who, with the minister, compose the church session. In 1717 the Hawick Parish Session records lists 19 elders, each (mostly in pairs) assigned a specific area to collect monies from; together with elders from the further part of the Parish, plus the Bailie of the Regality, the total number must have been about 2 dozen.

Elder (el-dur) n. Alexander 'Sandy' (d.1836) bookseller, printer and publisher of Peebles. His brother Walter was a bookbinder in Hawick at about the same time. Indeed, he spent some time working in the same trade in Hawick, as indicated by him being listed as 'bookbinder, Hawick' in the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). It is possible he was the son of John and Mary Brown born in Wilton in 1764 (and that he was thus half-brother of Walter). He is probably the Alexander who in Hawick in 1786 (along with John 'Senior', probably his father) witnessed a baptism for merchant John (presumably his brother). He gave Peebles its first lending library, where the young Robert Chambers would borrow books (Chambers later became a successful publisher and anonymously wrote a book in 1844 which contained ideas about the origin of the Earth and life). He also brought the first printing press there in 1814 (later used to produce that town's first newspaper). He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Elizabeth ('Betty') Oliver of Hawick in 1788 and they had 8 children. His daughter Agnes (b.1811) married Alexander 'Booky' Scott from Peebles, who took over the business on the High Street there. Alexander 'Sandy' (1820–1904) possibly a son of Walter by an earlier marriage. He was one of the last 2 coach drivers between Carlisle and Hawick (along with William Crozier). He started as a postboy at the Tower Hotel in Hawick and was recorded as 'postillion' there in 1851. When driving he would dress in a top-coat. He took over the Cross Keys Hotel in Canonbie in about 1860. In his old age he drove a 'four-in-hand' from Canonbie to the opening of the new Mossbail Inn. David (18th C.) gardener at Borthwickbrae in 1794. He was listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in 1793, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. He married Helen Jardine and their children included Thomas (b.1794) and an unnamed son (b.1798). George (19th C.) married Elizabeth Rutherford in 1843, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes. John (1728–1816) weaver in Hawick. In 1786 he was John 'Senior' when (along with Alexander) he witnessed a baptism for merchant John (presumably his son). In 1788 both he and his son John 'Junr' witnessed a baptism for weaver John Brown. He may have witnessed a baptism for Margaret (presumably his daughter) and Alexander Inglis in 1791. He married Jean Stewart (b.1729) in 1769. It seems likely that this was his second marriage and that he had first married Mary Brown in 1756, with children: Mary (b.1757); John (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Alexander (b.1764), publisher in Peebles, and said to be brother to Walter; and Thomas (b.1766). In 1764 this John was living at the Sandbed, in Wilton Parish. The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation, in 1760 were schoolmaster William Dyce and shoemaker John Scott and in 1764 were Thomas Scott and Robert Ormiston. His children with Jean Stewart included: Walter (b.1770); Ann (b.1771), who married Robert Henry; and Jane (b.1773). He is probably the John whose unnamed granddaughter died in Hawick in 1778. John (18th C.) book-seller in Hawick, probably the son of John born in Hawick in 1760. He was recorded as a merchant in 1786 when his daughter Janet was baptised, with witnesses John senior (probably his father) and Alexander (probably his brother). In 1788 both he and his father John 'Senr' witnessed a baptism for weaver John Brown. His daughter Peggy died in 1795. He is probably the John who married Margaret Lamb and also had a son Walter (b.1784) in Hawick. Robert (b.1797/8) frame-work knitter, originally from

Peebles. He is recorded at about 41 High Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Margaret O., Robert, Susan and John McRae. Robert (19th/20th C.) resident of Howahill. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Turnbull (b.1822/3) from Jedburgh, he was a tailor at Kilnknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. He married Agnes Tait in 1847 and their children included Margaret, Rachel and John. Walter 'Watty' (1770–1849) bookbinder in the Fore Row and Howegate in the early 19th century. He was son of John and Jean Stewart. He was listed as a bookbinder in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. He subscribed to 12 copies of William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and 2 copies of Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. His brother Alexander was a bookseller and printer in Peebles (and also subscribed to Wilson's book). He was the seller for the 1836 edition of James Hogg's words for 'Teribus'. This was printed by John Elder of Edinburgh High Street, who was surely a relative of some sort. He was listed as a bookbinder on the Howegate in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded on the Kirk Wynd, still as a 'book binder', aged 70. In 1790 he married Isabel Lamb (d.1831), who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Mary (b.1791), who was 2nd wife of hairdresser James Brisbane; Jean (b.1792); John (1796–1844); Janet (b.1800); Walter (b.1802); Alexander (1804–22); and Ann (1806–31). The witnesses in 1791 were Robert Oliver and James Rae and in 1796 were John (probably his father) and James Hume. Walter (b.1802) son of Walter and Isabelle Lamb. He was a stocking frame-worker, recorded on the Fore Row in 1841, on the Kirk Wynd in 1851, at 69 High Street in 1861 and 11 Teviot Crescent in 1871. In 1835 he married Margaret (1818–1901), daughter of hardresser James Brisbane. Their children include: Walter (b.1835); Christine (b.1837); Isabella (b.1839); Janet (b.1841–65), the first to survive past infancy; James (b.1843); Sarah (b.1845); Walter (b.1847); Isabelle (b.1849); John (b.1851); John (again, b.1853), who married Ellen Turnbull; Mary Ann (1856–63); William Brisbane (b.1857); and Margaret (b.1860). Alexander (b.c.1822), coachman at the Tower Hotel, was possibly a son from an earlier marriage. Walter (1847–1926) son of Walter and Margaret Brisbane, he was born in Hawick. He married Jane Johnstone. Their son William Johnstone was born in Monkton, Ayrshire.

elderin (el-dur-in) adj., arch. growing old, advanced in years, elderly – 'An eldrin' lad' [JoHo], '... But a five-bar fence I sprang in a glance, And ran like an elderin' hare' [WaD] (also 'eldern' and 'eldrin').

Elder Knowes (el-dur-nowz) n. small hilly area to the south-west of where the Eildrig Burn meets the Borthwick Water. Here there are remains of an earthwork, about 40m across (the name presumably derives from 'Eildrig Knowes').

elderman (el-dur-mun) n., arch. a councillor, bailie or head of a guild – '... quhilk being considered be the said bailie, and eldremen and council of the said bruche ...' [BR1641] (it is uncertain precisely who this term applied to; the same as an 'alderman' in England; not locally in use since the 17th century).

eldership (el-dur-ship) n. a body of elders, the office of being an elder – '... a new silver Bason for ye Baptisms, almost containing a pynt, qch the said Bailies present to ye sight of ye Eldership, and were well satisfied therewith' [PR1711].

elding (el-ding) n., arch. fuel of any kind, particularly peat or turf – '... the Deponent, got elding off the Common for the use of his ffamily, and he was never interrupted' [C&L1767].

Eldinhope (el-din-hōp) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, on the B709, before the Gordon Arms Hotel, with Eldinhope Knowe to the east. It was a Crown property from 1456, mentioned many times in the exchequer Rolls. It was assigned to Sir Walter Scott in at least the period 1460–67, Alexander Scott in 1469 and Sir David Scott in the period 1475–90, transferring to the Earl of Bothwell in 1491 and remaining with him until at least 1496. In 1499 it was assigned to John Murray of Falahill and David Pringle, with sheep for the King's flocks there being mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1501 it was again assigned to Walter Scott. In 1502 it is recorded that the farm was pillaged by Adam Scott of Tushielaw and the Littles of Eskdale. It remained Crown property until at least 1510, when it was leased by John Murray and David Pringle. In 1539 William Scott complained that James Stoddart took violent possession of the lands. In 1541 the tenants were Andrew Brydon, John Blackstock, William Tait, John Hislop and Margaret Melroe, paying £92 yearly. The former tower there was built by the Scotts. John Chisholme was in Eldinhope-know in 1579. The farm later became part of the Buccleuch estates, being mentioned in services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661. Walter Scott was tenant in 1737. Over and Nether Eldinhope were valued at about £900 in 1785, with Eldinhopeknow valued at a further £370. Francis Scott was farmer there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries; he lived to the age of 94 and still travelled to church on a pony when he was 90. It is said that it suffered some of the heaviest losses of sheep during the harsh winter of 1794, around 120 animals. Note that it is easy to confuse with the ‘Aldanehop’ also referred to in the Exchequer Rolls of the late 15th century, this being ‘Auldshope’, whose name became the modern Annelshope in the Ettrick valley (it is ‘Eldanehope’ in 1456, ‘Aldanehop’ in 1468, ‘Eldashop’ in 1469, ‘Eldainhope’ in 1477, ‘Aldanishop’ in 1479, ‘Auldanehop’ in 1480, ‘Aldanhop’ in 1481, ‘Aldanehope’ in 1486, ‘Auldanehoip’ and ‘Eldanhoip’ in 1487, ‘Eldanehop’ in 1490 and 1491, ‘eldanhop’ in 1494/5, ‘Eldinhop’ in 1499, ‘Eldanehop’ in 1501 and 1507, ‘Eldanhop’ in 1502, ‘Eldinhoup’ in 1539, ‘Eldinhope’ in 1541, ‘Eldinghope’ in 1576, ‘Eldinghop’ in 1581, ‘Elhoip’ in 1634, ‘Eldingshope’ in 1653 and ‘Eldingeshope’ in 1661; the origin of the first part may be Old English personal name ‘Aldwine’; ‘Eldinhopeknow’, ‘Middle Eldinhope’ and ‘Over Eldinhope’ are on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

eldrin (eld-rin) n., arch. a freshwater fish – ‘How out of that pool there we drew many a fine young ‘eldering’ with the bait!’ [BM1905].

Elec see Elick

eleck (e-lek) v., n., poet. elect – ‘...but for the eleck’s sak’ thae days sall be shortenet’ [HSR].

Elec the Bellman (e-leek-thu-bel-mawn) n. nickname for Alexander Stainton, immortalised in a poem by William Peffers.

the Election Denner (thu-ee-lek-shin-de-nur) n. celebratory dinner of the old and new Town Councils in the 18th and early 19th centuries. It was held during October, and was at the town’s expense up until about 1817.

Election Night (ee-lek-shin-nī) n. phrase sometimes used for the night of the Pickin.

Election Riot at Hawick (ee-lek-shin-rī-i’-i’-hIk) n. engraving by ‘D.H. Tristam’ of the supposed riot at Hawick during one of the elections of the 1830s. It appears in Cassell’s ‘Illustrated History of England’ (c.1860). The engraving depicts a pitched battle between a crowd of men on the Auld Brig.

electit (ee-lek-tee, -ti) pp., arch. elected – ‘...quhilk council and communitie, all in ane vois, electit the said Gilbert Watt, notar, clark for ane yeir to cum ...’ [BR1638].

electricity (e-lek-tri-si’-ee) n. first introduced publicly into Hawick by the Urban Electric Supply Company in 1901. The first electricity in town had been generated using the water wheel under Tower Mill some years earlier, this being constructed by William Melrose and William Elliot used to provide light in Mr. Elliot’s house at Teviot Lodge.

ele’en (e-lee-in) n., poet. eleven – ‘Than the ele’en discipels gaed awa intill Galilee ...’ [HSR].

eleeven (e-lee-vin, a-lee-vin, u-lee-vin) n. eleven – ‘At yin-and-eleevinpence-hap’ny a bag Ee dau-rna pit eet higher’ [AY] (also spelled ‘eleevin’ etc.; cf. eeleeven).

eleeven hoors (e-lee-vin-oorz) n., arch. a light meal taken at 11 a.m. (see also ’le-en hoor).

eleevin see eleeven elements (e-lu-mintz) n., pl., arch. the bread and wine used at communion – ‘James Gray in Whitla, James Davidson in Newbigging, with James Scott in Branhholm, by reason of their old age to wait upon the Elements’ [PR1718].

the Elephant’s Back (thu-e-lee-fintz-bawk) n. common name for a rock at ‘the Dunk’ from which diving is popular.

elevint (e-le-vint) adj., arch. eleventh – ‘...ffaithfullie maid and gevin vp be his awne mouth vpoun the ellevint day of Aprile, the zeir of God foirsaid ...’ [SB1574], ‘An’ about the elevent hoor he gaed out, an’ fand ithers stannin’ idill ...’ [HSR] (also written ‘elevent’; cf. eeleevinth).

Elfhaugh (elf-hawch) n. former farm in the Rule valley, to the south of Braidhaugh, probably close to Cleuch Head. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Elscheuch’ in 1612 when John Turnbull was tenant there. It is marked on Pont’s manuscript as ‘Elphheuch’ (which has become ‘Elffhauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map) and close to the moden Mackside (although Mackside itself is marked much further to the north). Adam Turnbull was tenant there at the time of the 1694 Hearth Tax records. There is no obvious incidence of a similar name later (it appears to be ‘Elpheust’ in 1694; it is also marked as ‘Elfcleuch’ on Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650).

elf-shot (elf-sho) adj., arch. said of diseased cattle, with the supposition that they have been bewitched by fairies – ‘...with any sudden disease, (the cause of which was usually ascribed to the malignant machinations of the fairies,) she was said to be elf-shot ...’ [EM1820].

Elgee (el-jee) n. Jane Francesca Agnes (1821–96) granddaughter of a Church of Ireland Rector, she was an Irish Nationalist and poet, using the pseudonym 'Speranza'. In 1847 she visited Rev. William Grant and his wife Jane Dickson at Cavers Manse and may have written the poem 'Vanitas' when there, some verses from it appearing in the visitors' book there. While in the Borders she met Jedburgh tweed manufacturer John Hilson and started corresponding with him. She married Sir William Wilde and their children included the poet and playwright Oscar Wilde.

Elibank (e-lee-bawngk) n. ruined 16th century tower overlooking the Tweed, between Galashiels and Walkerburn. It was home of Sir Gideon Murray from 1594, who married off his daughter 'Muckle-mou'd Meg' to William Scott of Harden in 1611. The ballad version of the story was popularised in Hogg's 'Fray at Elibank'. Sir Patrick Murray (sister of 'Muckle Mou'd Meg') became the 1st Lord of Elibank in the 17th century, and his great-great-grandson was Gen. James, first Governor-General of Canada. A more modern house was built there in the 1840s – 'But when they arrived on the Elibank green, The yett was shut, and the east grew pale; They slinkit away, wi' the tears i' their een, To tell to Auld Harden their sorrowfu' tale' [ES] (also called 'Elibank Castle' and formerly 'Eliburn').

Elick (e-leek, -lik) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Alexander (also spelled 'Elec').

elieven see eleeven

Eliott (e-li', e-lee-i', el-yi') n. (see also Elliott) Alexander (1805–83) youngest son of Sir William of Stobs, christened in Cavers Parish. He was a naval storekeeper at Devonport. He was appointed as a trustee of his brother's Wells and Haddon estates in 1863. He died unmarried. Alexander Boswell (1830–82) 2nd son of Sir William Francis of Stobs. He was christened at Cavers. He was in the Royal Navy for a short period. In 1855 he married Katharine Wigrane, daughter of John Craigie, a builder in Portobello. This was apparently just 5 days after they met, with her being just 16, and the couple eloping to Lamberton Toll Bar near Berwick. With his wife pregnant, neither family approving and him not having a job, he enlisted in the 17th Regiment of Foot and was sent to India, while his wife and son went off to America with his brother-in-law James and settled in Chicago. He later obtained a divorce and secondly married Annabella, daughter of Neil Carmichael. His children were Arthur Boswell (only child with his first wife, who inherited Stobs from his uncle William Francis), Alexander Boswell Vassal (who married Hannah Josephina Kavanagh and settled in Australia), Charles James (who settled in Alaska), and Rawdon Popham Vassal (who married Nellie Thompson and died in Alaska). Archibald of Middlestead (17th C.) 3rd son of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartens'. He inherited the lands of Middlestead and Blackmiddings in Ettrick from his father, according to a charter of 1637. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638 (along with his brothers Gavin and Gilbert). In 1662 he was fined £ for supporting the Commonwealth and then his lands were 'appraised from him' to pay his debts. There are no records of him after that. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Learmonth of Birkhill. Archibald of Craigend and Deanfoot (d.c.1683) 2nd son of William of Stobs. He inherited Craigend from his uncle Gilbert. In 1656 he witnessed the resignation by Edward Lorraine of the lands of Appotside and Tythehouse in Rulewater (in favour of William Elliot of the Binks and Harwood) and another contract in which the Lorraines reserved a small piece of land for themselves. He had at least 2 children, Gilbert and John. His son Gilbert was served as heir in 1683 to his lands of Craigend, Deanfoot and Minto. Archibald (1710–59) younger son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. He was born at Stobs and baptised in Cavers Parish. He was a merchant in London, being Secretary to Ramsgate Harbour. He married Frances Seer in 1737. He had an only child, Vernon (who was left a legacy by his uncle William). Sir Arthur Boswell of Stobs (1856–1926) 9th Baronet and Chief of the Eliotts. Born at Portobello, he was the only son of Alexander Boswell and his first wife Catherine Craigie. He never really knew his father, being taken by his mother to join his uncle James Craigie in Chicago when only a few months old. He returned to Britain to attend school, but his mother's condition was that he not see his father. He spent the holidays with his aunt Blanche, but also was not allowed to see his uncle Sir William (due to the dispute between his aunt and uncle). After school he moved to Australia, where there were several Eliott relatives. There he purchased a sheep farm, but was forced to return to Britain after several droughts. He then tried dairy farming in the United States. He succeeded his uncle Sir William in 1910, but by then Stobs and Wells had both been sold. He received some compensation for these sales, and invested it in his father-in-law's business in Burbank, which failed. After difficult years, he made a career as a stockbroker in Boston and then New York. In 1884 he married Lilla, daughter of John Burbank of Boston and had 3 children: Sir Gilbert Alexander Boswell, who succeeded; Marie Vera Margaret Emily Boswell, who married Edward Bois Cowles and secondly John Francis Barry and died in the Bahamas; and Beatrice Maud Boswell, who married Frank V. Burton. He died while visiting his son near New York and was brought to Scotland to be buried in Cavers Kirkyard. His wife was also buried there in 1945. Sir Arthur Francis Augustus Boswell of Stobs and Redheugh (1915–89) 11th Baronet and 28th Chief of the Elliots. He was elder son of Sir Gilbert and Flourney Hopkins. Born in New York, he was educated at Harrow and Cambridge, where he studied economics. He joined his father in the City, and became a Member of the London Stock Exchange before WWII. He served in the K.O.S.B. and King's African Rifles during WWII. After the War he returned to the city, becoming a member of the Stock Exchange Council in 1965 and retiring in 1968. He then spent more time in Scotland. He was therefore able to move the family seat back to Redheugh after many generations. Along with Lady Elliott he started the Elliott Clan Society. He was a member of the Royal Company of Archers. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1978. In 1947 he married Frances Aileen, elder daughter of Lt.-Col. Sir Francis Kennedy McClean (a British flight pioneer). They had a single child, Margaret Frances Boswell. Charles (1709–56) son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs, he was born in London. He trained as a lawyer. He was a member of the 3rd Provincial Council of Charleston, South Carolina and served as Attorney General for North Carolina for a few months before he died. He is buried at the Episcopal Church, New Bern, Craven County, North Carolina. His gravestone is inscribed 'An honest lawyer indeed'. Charles (18th C.) son of the 2nd Gilbert of Stanedge. He was Master of a ship in the Lisbon trade. Charles (1800–19) 6th son of Sir William, 4th Baronet of Stobs. He served with the East India Company. He was killed during the siege of the fort at Capaul-droog. Charles Joseph Alexander (1937–) 12th Baronet of Stobs, distant cousin of the 11th Baronet. He married Wendy Baily in 1959 and had 5 children. Sir Daniel (1798–1872) christened in Cavers, a younger son of Sir William of Stobs. He was at school at Houghton-le-Spring in Durham, along with his 3 brothers, and he was later at Edinburgh Academy. He joined the East India Company at the age of 19 and sailed to Madras. He showed an aptitude for Indian languages and law. He was appointed deputy Tamil translator to the Madras Government in 1822 and Maráthá translator in 1823. In 1838 was appointed as the Madras member of the Indian Law Commission, helping to draw up the Indian codes. By 1848 he was a member of the Council of Madras and in 1850 became President of the Revenue, Marine and College Board of the Madras Government. He returned to Britain in 1853, but returned a year later to be Madras representative of a new sepreme legislative council for India, and remained there until 1860. In 1867 he received the order of the Star of India. In 1818 he married Georgina, daughter of Gen. George Russell of the Bengal Army. Their children were William Russell (who became a Major-General and married Jessie McIntosh and Frances Helen Cloete), Henry Manning (also a Major-General, married Jessie Fennell), Edward Frederick (married Rykie Sophia Cloete), George Augustus Robertson, Georgina Mary (married John Hutcheson Fergusson), Caroline Mary (married Col. Charles Colville Young), Emma (married Richard Stuart Palmer), Mary Bethia (married Maj.-Gen. W.C. Russell), Cecilia Wheatley (married Maj.-Gen. Eustace Hill) and Claudine Francis Leonora (married Rev. T.D. Gray). He died at The Boltons, West Brompton, London. Dora Flournoy nee Hopkins (20th C.) wife of Sir Gilbert of Stobs. She carried out 40 years of research into the family history. Dorothy (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gavin of Stobs. She was served as heir (along with her sister Esther and niece Jean) in 1607. Shortly afterwards her half-brother Gilbert purchased Stobs, although it took him until 1614 to pay the amount in full and became sole owner of Stobs. She married George Haliburton of Pinnacle before 1608 and had children. Elizabeth (17th C.) daughter of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters'. She married John Turnbull of Minto in 1641 (although Turnbull was technically too young), and their son John became Laird of Minto. She long survived her husband and lived at Hillhouse. It is possible she was the 'Lady Minto' recorded paying £200 in Southdean Parish on the Land Tax Rolls of 1643. Her nephew, Gilbert Elliot, would later purchase the estate and become Lord Minto. Ellinor Jane Augusta (1829–34) daughter of Sir William Francis of Stobs and Wells. There is a memorial plaque to her in Bedrule Kirk stating that she 'died after a lingering illness born with the most exemplary patience, aged 4 years 11 months'. Capt. Elliot (1712–45) younger son of Gilbert, 3rd Baronet, brother of John, William, Gilbert, Anne, Charles, Archibald, Gavin and George. He was born at Stobs a few weeks before a major fire there and was christened at Cavers. His first name was spelled like the non-Stobs branches of the family. He served in the Royal Navy, being 3rd Lieutenant on H.M.S. Argyll, then spending some time in the West Indies and in the merchant service. He was a Lieutenant on the St. George in 1742 and a year later was Captain on the H.M.S. Lively, on which he died at sea. He also captained the fireship Aetna, on which his young distant cousin John Elliot (son of Capt. John Elliot and Jean Grieve) served. In his will he left money to his nephew Vernon and nieces Anne and Eleanor. Esther (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gavin, 1st Laird of Stobs. In 1607 she and her sister Dorothy, along with their niece Jean, were served heirs to Stobs. Shortly afterwards she sold her share to her half-brother Gilbert, 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins'. She married Gilbert Ker of Lochtour, eldest son of John of Hirsell, and had children with him. Sir Francis of Stobs (d.1791) eldest son of Sir John, he was named after his aunt, Lady Frances de Nassau d'Averquerque, who was wife of Col. William Elliot of Wells, and a close friend of his parents. When young he served with the 3rd Regiment of Foot Guards. He was still 'younger' in 1761, when listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He succeeded in 1768 as the 5th Baronet, having already been favoured by his grandfather, who changed his will to leave all his personal estate to him (under the condition that he lived continuously at Stobs). He was known locally as 'Frankie o the Stobs' and was said not to have kept up his position in society and to have made a poor marriage (i.e. he mixed with common people!). He planned the new mansion at Stobs, but died before building work commenced. He was on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was taxed for having 2 saddle or carriage horses in 1785, then 3 or 4 in the years 1786-91. He was also taxed for having a 4-wheeled carriage in the years 1785-91 and also for having 2 male servants from 1778-91 and 2 female servants in the period 1785-91. He was said to be in ill-health in 1788 when listed on the roll of voters in Roxburghshire. In 1788 his lands of Stobs and Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish, together with teinds acquired from Douglas of Cavers, were valued at about £3000; at the same time his lands in Kirkton Parish (including Acreknowe, Barnes, Birkwood, Dodburn, Horselee, Newton, Smithfieldhaugh, Turn, Whitehillbrae, Winnington and Winningtonrig) were valued at £1846 13s 4d, and in Hobkirk Parish he held Hallrule, Billerwell and part of Hawthornside valued at £2355 16s 8d. It is unclear where he lived after inheriting the Stobs estates, since the mansion has burned down. However, he may have been involved with plans for a new house before he died. He was probably also the Eliott of Stobs who was one of the trustees for the Langlands estate during its last years. He was said to have been the only heritor who did not share in the spoils of the Division of Hawick's Common. In Edinburgh in 1767 he married Euphan (or Euphemia) Dickson (or Dixon), daughter of the Galashiels piper. They had 4 children: William (b.1767), who succeeded; Capt. John (d.1795), who died at sea; Anne (b.1771), who was baptised at Cavers; and Mary (d.1826), who married a Mr. Guy. He had a stroke in 1784 (after dining at Sinton with James Grieve of Branhholm Park, Gilbert Chisholme, and Mr. Riddell) and never fully recovered. Francis Willoughby (1832-82) younger son of Gilbert, who was Speaker of the Queensland Parliament. He was born in Scotland, and baptised in Melrose Parish. He emigrated to Australia when he was 7 years old. He married Sarah Jane Richards and they had 6 sons and 2 daughters. Gavin or 'Gawain', 'Gawin', etc. (d.1606/7) Laird of Stobs, also 'of Bailielee' and 'of Horsleyhill'. He was probably the 5th son of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill (with his 2nd wife) and was descended from the Elliots of Redheugh. It is sometimes claimed incorrectly that he was a son of William Elliot of Larriston and Mary Scott (daughter of Sir Walter of Buccleuch). He gained Bailielee after the death of his brother Andrew in 1563/4 and execution of his brother Robert in 1564. He was acquitted of any involvement in the 1564 murder of David Scott of Has-sendean, and gained the escheat of his 3 relatives who were executed for the crime. He is probably the 'Gawin Elliott in Skelfhill' recorded in 1569 when he signed a bond of security in Hawick for his tenants, with the 'young Laird of Greneheid' (probably a Ker) acting as surety for him; he had 9 tenants at that time, including on farms at Skelfhill and Priesthaugh. In 1569 he was managing the lands of Skelfhill, Peelbrae and Penagushope for the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh (probably his stepson) when he signed the 'Band of Teviotdale' promising the Regent Moray to suppress rebels. He was 'of Skelfhill' when he was one of the designated relief pledges for Gavin Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Also in 1569 he was

'Gawin Elliot of Skelfhill' when there was an order from the Privy Council that he should enter into the Regent's custody on 8 days warning, wherever he should be. Also in 1569 he was surety for 9 men, who were presumably his tenants. His plege in 1569 was 'young Greneheid' and his son (actually step-son) Robert promised to enter if his father required it. He was sold Horsleyhill by his nephew William in 1569, but it seems that young William had also sold the same lands to his brother William, who won the court case to keep them in 1573/4. In 1573 a complaint is recorded against him before the Privy Council (when he was listed as brother of William of Horsleyhill); William Douglas of Cavers complained that he had no right to occupy his lands of Caveling. He is listed as 'of Bailielee' in 1573, when, along with his wife Jean Scott, he complained that his servant James Storie was attacked on his newly purchased 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton; the attackers were Walter and John Scott, possessors of the other half of Chamberlain Newton (they were step sons of Margaret Turnbull, widow of David Elliot, who was also from the Horsleyhill Elliots). Later in 1573 Margaret Turnbull and Walter Scott promised not to harm him, his wife, their children and servants. In 1575 he is probably the Gavin, brother of William Elliot of Horsleyhill who was ordered to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He is 'in Skelfhill' in 1575/6 when he complained that he was owed the 'mails' for his steading of Bailielee. He is probably the Gavin who Walter Scott found surety not to molest in 1576. In 1581 he was 'of Baillielie' when he James McDougall of Makerstoun gave sasine of an annual rent in Makerstoun to him and his wife Janet Scott. In 1581 he was witness to the sasine whereby Gavin Gledstains inherited the land of Stobs from his deceased brother George Gledstains of Stobs. He was first to gain the lands at Stobs, purchasing them before 1584 from Gavin Gledstains of Stobs. Thereafter he was referred to as being 'of Stobs'. In 1584/5 he was 'Gawin Elliot of the Stobbis' when listed among the Border Lairds who had to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they were helping to keep peace on the Border. In 1586 he was listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale in instructions from the King to his Lieutenant on the Border. In 1587 Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, acted as cautioner for him to appear. In 1587/8 he had Home and Cairncross cautioners for presenting Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. Also in 1590 he was listed as one of the sureties for the entry of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and he was mentioned in a case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain 'bills' of English complainant. In 1591 he promised not to harm Marjorie Hamilton, widow of Robert Elliot of Redheugh (probably his step-son), with Gilbert of Kirkton as his cautioner. In 1592 he was a tutor to William of Horsleyhill, his grand-nephew (although he had to fight a court case to win this right over William's father's half-brother, also William). Also in 1592 his cautioner was Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. There is a bond of 1594/5 in which James Gledstains of Cocklaw pledges that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw shall not harm him or William Elliot of Horsleyhill; presumably there was a feud at the time between the two families. Also in 1494/5 he as surety for Gilbert Elliot of the Mains that he would pay taxes for lands in Teviotdale to James Douglas of Cavers. He is probably the Gavin among the Elliots who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He is probably the 'Gawen Elliot who said he was Buccleuch's depity' recorded in an English letter in 1597 giving excuses for not delivering up Scottish prisoners. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss 'the present disorderis of the Bourdours'. Also in 1600 he was on the 'retour' for the Kers of Cessford. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602 for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 he was 'of Horsliehill' when he and Walter Scott of Harden were cautioners for Kinmont Willie Armstrong. In 1603 he is on a long list of local landowners to whom the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn) issued a 'summons of removing' to vacate their lands. He married Jean (or Janet) Scott, sister of Buccleuch (but it is unclear which one) and widow of Robert of Redheugh; it has been suggested that the marriage was part of attempts to end the feud between the Elliots and Scotts in the 1560s. His surviving children were: Jean, who married Thomas

Rutherford of Edgerston, and pre-deceased her father; Dorothy, who married George Haliburton of Pinnacle; and Esther, who married Gilbert Ker of Lochtour. His wife brought him 5 step-sons, including the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh (who acted as surety for him on several occasions). There is a suggestion that he may have been father of Gilbert, 'Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins', although information about these early generations are unclear (and there are claims that the pair were entirely unrelated). Having no sons of his own, he appointed his stepson Gilbert along with Gilbert Ker of Lochtour (his son-in-law) as executors, shortly before his death, and they were also appointed as factors and attorneys by his widow in 1608. When he died he held no fewer than 19 farms (which he had run with his stepson Gilbert's help). His daughters Dorothy, and Esther and grand-daughter Jean Rutherford inherited Stobs in 1607. There was another service of heirs in 1619, to Dorothy and Esther and also his great-grandson Robert, with a further service to these 3 in 1621. Gavin or 'Gawin' (c.1625–bef. 1678) of Grange, ancestor of the family of Midlem Mill, and also of the Elliots of Minto. He was probably born at Stobs, 4th son of 'Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins'. He was 'of Grange' in 1640 when he and his wife had a charter of North Prieston and Sunderland Hall. He is recorded in 1643 being in possession of Midlem Mill as well as North Prieston in Bowden Parish and part of Grange in Ancrum Parish (valued at £260). He was apparently a royalist, his actions on behalf of the King in 1645 and 1646 were enough to grant his son Gilbert remission in 1685 for being involved in the Argyll rising. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. He was appointed Commissioner of Excise in 1661 and was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663. He settled Midlem on his son Robert in 1653, followed by 'Graystainhauch' in 1671. He also appears to have sold Grange before he died. He paid tax for Midlem on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He firstly married Mary Bennett, probably in Jedburgh (and she died without children); given the connection between the Bennetts of Chesters and the lands of Grange, his first wife was probably from that family. In 1646 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Hay of Haystoun, Principal Clerk of Sessions. His sons were Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and Gilbert Elliot, the first Lord Minto (note the change of surname spelling). However, these early generations are somewhat uncertain, and so the exact connection between the Elliots of Stobs and the Elliots of Minto may never be known. His eldest daughter was Margaret, who was the mother of Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk. Gavin (17th C.) 2nd (or perhaps 3rd) son of William of Stobs. He had a will registered in 1684. He married Jean Nicolson (perhaps related to his sister-in-law, Magdalen Nicolson), receiving a dowry of £20,000 Scots. She transferred all her effects to him in a document of 1687 in which their son Gavin is mentioned. He may have earlier married Barbara Creighton. Along with his nephew Gilbert of Stonedge, he had a bond with John Turnbull in 1691. Gavin (b.1713) younger son of Sir William of Stobs. Like several of his brothers he served in the East India Company. He captained a large trading ship. He died in India before 1756. Gen. George Augustus (1717–90), Lord Heathfield and Baron Gibraltar, he was 9th and youngest son of the 3rd Baronet of Stobs, Sir Gilbert. He was born at Wells House where the family were living after Stobs House burned down (although there is also a tradition that he was born while his parents were visiting their farm at Hallrule). He was educated by private tutor at Stobs, then in Leyden and at the École Royale du génie militaire in Picardy. He returned to Scotland at the age of 18 and obtained his warrant at Woolwich in 1739. He worked his way through the ranks in different regiments and was wounded at the Battle of Dettingen in Germany, serving with the Horse Grenadier Guards. In 1759 he left to raise a new regiment called the 15th or Light Regiment of Dragoons, commonly called 'Elliot's Horse'. He was well known for strict discipline among his troops. They fought in the War of Austrian Succession, the Seven Years' War and the War of American Independence. He was involved in the capture of Havana in 1762, the spoils from which meant that he could purchase the estate of Bailey Park in Heathfield Parish, Eastbourne in 1766. He spent about a decade back in Britain during times of peace. However, he is probably best known for his stint as Commander of Gibraltar, successfully defending the rock against a 3½ year siege by the Spanish. After the victory he was made a Knight Bachelor by George III, and in 1787 was made Lord Heathfield, Baron Heathfield of Gibraltar. He retired to London, recovering from a stroke. However, he asked to be reappointed as Governor of Gibraltar, essentially desiring to end his days there, but died when visiting Aachen (now in Germany) on the way. He was said to have been extremely disciplined, setting an example for the men on Gibraltar, where he was 'perhaps, the most abstemious man of the age. His food is vegetarian and he drinks water. He never sleeps more than four hours at a time ... He has so inured himself to habits of hardiness that the things that are difficult and painful to other men are to him daily practice'. Robert Burns was referring to him when he wrote 'Yet let my country need me, with Elliot to head me, I'd clatter on my stumps at the sound of a drum'. He married Anne Pollexfen Drake, a distant relative of Sir Francis Drake, and she died in 1772. Their children were: Francis Augustus (1750–1813), 2nd and last Lord Heathfield; and Anne Pollexfen, who married John Trayton Fuller of Brightling, Sussex. He built a mansion on the Heathfield estate, called Ashdown House, designed by Benjamin Latrobe, which became a boys' school. The Museum has one of his walking sticks, presented by Thomas Turnbull in 1856. There is a portrait of him by Joshua Reynolds in the National Gallery, he is depicted in the huge painting 'The Defeat of the Floating Batteries at Gibraltar', which is the centrepiece of the London Guildhall Gallery, and a statue of him is in the Alameda Gardens at Gibraltar – 'Brave Elliot, as you all well know, Gibraltar's rock protected: And well he beat the Spanish foe, Tho' by a Duke directed. A scene like this you soon will see In Roxburghshire repeated: And Dukes and Dons again will be By Elliot's name defeated' [T].

Adm. George Augustus (1799–1872) 5th son of Sir William of Stobs, he was born in Cavers Parish and named after his great uncle, Lord Heathfield. He served in the Royal Navy, entering the Royal Naval College in 1812, being Midshipman from 1816, Lieutenant in 1818. He received the order of the Redeemer of Greece for defending a siege at Patras. He became Commander in 1835, Captain in 1838, Rear Admiral and 1857 and rose to the rank of Admiral in 1869. In 1837 he married Alice Anne, only daughter of Thomas N. Jeffrey, Collector of Customs at Halifax, Nova Scotia. He secondly married Harriett Sophia West, daughter of the Admiral of the Fleet. His children were: George Augustus (1838–84), a Major, who married Helen Jane Gallen and Mary Anna Crampton; and Francis John Jeffrey (1844–1903), Naval Captain, who married Florence Caroline Schmidt. He had descendants in South Africa. Gideon (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Haliburton and their children baptised in Hawick were: Jean

(b.1719); Barbara (b.1720); and Simon (b.1722). Gilbert 'Gibbie wi the Golden Gartins' (d.1634) of Stobs and of Horsleyhill. From his seal it seems clear he was directly related to the Elliots of Redheugh. His parentage is uncertain, some accounts (e.g. Scott of Satchells) saying he was the son of Elliot of Larriston and a Scott of Buccleuch, while a Liddesdale tradition states that he was an illegitimate child of William (or Robert) Elliot of Larriston (or Redheugh) with Maggie (or Helen) Kidd. However, it seems most likely that he was a younger son of Robert, the 16th Chief and Jean Scott, and step-son of Gavin of Stobs (who was the 2nd husband of Jean Scott). He helped Gavin run his farms and shortly before Gavin's death in 1606/7 was appointed as one of his executors and trustees. He may also be the Gilbert 'of the Kirktoon' who in 1591 was cautioner for Gavin of Stobs in a promise not to harm Marjorie Hamilton, widow of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. There are many variants on his nickname ('Gowden', 'Garties', 'Garters', etc.), which presumably arose from his choice of colour of device for keeping his socks up! He may be the Gilbert who, along with several other Elliots, signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He is probably the 'Gebbe Elliot his brother', named after Robert, chief of the Elliots in a letter written by English Border officials in 1583. He is said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 and may have acted as a hostage for one of the Scotts after when they were captured after a raid on Gilsland in 1597. He is probably the 'Gybb Elwood alias Robes Gibb' who, along with Scott of Buccleuch and Scott of Harden, met with Englishmen a few days before to plan details of the raid; if this was him, then it would verify that he was a son of Robert. He may be the Gilbert of 'Hardlisdale' (possibly Horsleyhill) who was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England in 1599. In 1600 he gained the lands of 'Elinburn, Schawis alias Middelsteid of Gield in Ettrick forest' from William Cranston (as registered in 1608). He may be the 'Gilbert Elliot' who signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds in 1602. He is probably the 'Gilbert Elliot of Horsliehill' coming after Gavin of Stobs in the list of local men served a 'summons of removing' by the Baron of Hassendean in 1603; and he may be the Gilbert of 'Horsbiehill' who was on the 'retour' panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He was clearly a man of local importance and wealth, since in 1607

he bought Stobs from the heirs of Gavin Elliot (probably his step-father), paying off the full amount of 15,000 merks and being formally infefted by the superior Sir John Cranston of that Ilk in 1614. In 1607 he purchased Baxtonlees from John Home, as well as 'Carlinghall, Lailsell, Brounishall, Brumesclewis and Roberthill' from Hector Turnbull of Stanedge. In 1608 he purchased 'Danzeltoun' from James MacDowgall of Makerstoun. In 1609 he purchased 'Harwood in Fairnileyes and Stenletch' from Hector Turnbull. In 1610 he was recorded as 'of Horsliehill' when he stood as cautioner for Walter Scott of Harden and his sons Walter, Francis and Hugh, that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, George his son, Thomas Scott, called of Ormiston, and his brother Alexander. Also in 1610 he complained to the Privy Council that Will Scott of Northhouse and his brother Hob 'assaulted him in the town of Hawik with drawn swords, and would have slain him but for his own better defence and help of certain inhabitants of the said town'; this was presumably related to a dispute over land, with the same William Scott being accused in 1608 of attacking Stobs (just before he took over ownership), threatening to burn 'all the evidents and writs of the said lands' unless they got what they wanted. In 1611 he purchased lands in Ettrick from his sister's father-in-law Gilbert Ker of Lochtour and bought further lands from him in 1628. In 1616 he bought the lands of Middle Mains of Hassendean and Horsleyhill from the Earl of Home; in 1630, along with his eldest son William, he resigned the lands on receipt of the agreed 8,000 merks from James, Earl of Home. In 1617 he (and his son Gilbert) had a 'wadset' with John Turnbull of Barnhills and purchased Wester Barnhills from Turnbull in 1618. Also in 1617 he appeared before the Privy Council with a number of other Border lairds to renew the bond for the good behaviour of his supporters and tenants. In 1620 he resigned the reversion on half of Glenkerry and Midgehope to Walter Scott of Tushielaw. Also in 1620 he complained about Walter Gledstains of Cocklaw not repaying him for a series of loans. In 1622 he was fined for not being on a jury in Edinburgh. Also in 1620 he purchased Corriesike, Langbyre, Giddenscleuch and part of Caerlenrig from Douglas of Cavers. In 1621 he had a charter for Hangingside and he also purchased the lands of Winnington and Winningtonhall from Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He is recorded in the Commissioners' Court of 1622 as having some sheep stolen from his land at Kershope in 1621 and again in 1623. And in 1623 William Wilson (of Carlisle) was hanged after being found guilty of stealing 6 sheep and 13 goats from his lands at Stobs and Teviothead, while Adam Turnbull, miller in Harts-garth, was acquitted of stealing cows from his lands of 'Leisburne'. Also in 1623 he was on the commission (representing Roxburghshire) to discuss the export of Scottish wool to England. He is supposed to have been a great hunter of deer, and at one point angered King James by hunting on his land. He was probably the 'Sir Gilbert' mentioned in the song 'Rattlin Roarin Willie', who captured William Henderson. In 1628 he is listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. In 1628 he received the lands of Middlestead and Blackmiddings (in Ettrick), in 1630 he gained the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Kirkton and in 1632 he received a charter of the lands of 'Town o Rule' and was involved in a 'wadset' for the lands of Harwood (although this may have been another Gilbert). Also in 1632, he is recorded as owner of the lands of 'the Hill, Streuchehill alias Stichelhill, Laidhop and Qhithop' (probably Laws Hill, Stichel Hill, Laidlehope and Whitrope) in Liddesdale. He is sometimes referred to as the earliest ancestor of the Eliotts of Stobs, although the family history around this time is uncertain (and his relationship to the previous Gavin of Stobs is unclear). He married Margaret Scott ('Maggy Fendy'), and had 11 children. His wife's parents were 'Auld Wat' of Harden and Margaret Scott, 'the Flower of Yarrow'. A story is told about how he stayed under his father-in-law's roof after his marriage, with Auld Wat making the condition for his board being the plunder of the first harvest moon. His children were: William (d.1654), who succeeded him; Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh (d.1680); Archibald of Middlestead; Gavin of Grange and Midlem Mill, father of the 1st Lord Minto; John (d.1639), advocate in Edinburgh; James (d.bef. 1661), married Margaret Elliot of Redheugh, heiress of Larriston; Elizabeth, married John Turnbull of Minto; Jean, married Robert Pringle of Blindlee; Margaret, married Andrew Scott of Fawside; Esther, who married Andrew Ker, ancestor of the Scott-Plummers of Sunderland Hall; and Anne, married Andrew Bell of Colross, Kelso. He is also said to have had an illegitimate daughter who married Simon Elliot of Binks. His wife was listed as liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish in 1643; she may also have been the 'Mar. Scott, gudewife of Horsliehill' who was owner of lands in Hassendean Parish in 1643. Since he is said to have died in 1634, he is probably not the 'G. Elliot of Stobbes' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638; this was more likely to be his son Gavin, who signed it along with his brothers Gilbert of Craigend and Archibald of Middlestead. Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh (d.1680) 2nd son of 'Gibbie wi' the Golden Gartins'. In earlier records he was Laird of Hartshaugh. He is mentioned in the 1623 Circuit Court records (along with 'Archie Elliott of Bowholme') as cautioner for 'Will Elliott of Hiesches'. In 1630 he was witness to his father Gilbert and brother William redeeming the lands of Hassendean and Horsleyhill for payment from James, Earl of Home. A contract of 1632 (between Rev. William Weir, Francis Hamilton and Edward Lorraine) records that he was given certain lands of Harwood. He held a 'wadset' from Edward Lorraine in 1633 in exchange for the lands of Tythehouse. And in 1638 he had an agreement with William, son of Simon Elliott of the Binks over teinds of Harwood and Tythehouse. In 1637 he witnessed a deed of Robert of Redheugh to his daughter and son-in-law. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. Both he and his wife were described as 'zealous Presbyterians'. There is a crown charter of 1638 in the name of him and his wife for the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot, and where he is described as 'of Hartisheuche'. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of land in Minto Parish (specifically Craigend and Deanfoot), valued at £660 and land in Abbotrule Parish, valued at £65 (this probably being part of Hartshaugh). In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and also the Committee of War for the county in 1643, 1644 and 1649. In 1649 he gave a discharge of 52 merks Scots to William Elliot of Harwood, as the part owed to him for the lands of Harwood, Tythehouse and Tythehousefield. He was recorded in a document relating to the lands of Appotside in 1656. He may be the Gilbert who in 1661 witnessed a baptism for Archibald (perhaps his brother) in Ashkirk Parish. He was fined £1200 in 1662, after the Restoration. He paid tax on £660 in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 and 1678 in Minto Parish. He may also be the Gilbert whose land of 'Killnow' in Hobkirk Parish was valued at £80 in 1678. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire to raise money for the King. He married Alison Ker (from an unknown branch of the Kers), but died without issue. He was succeeded in the lands of Craigend by Archibald, 2nd son of his brother William. His wife, Lady Craigend leased the lands to Edinburgh 'writer' Thomas Porteous in 1686; she is mentioned by Rev. John Livingstone of Ancrum as one of the Covenanter supporters in Teviotdale and was fined in 1684 for refusing to give up her religious principles. Sir Gilbert of Stobs (d.c.1683) eldest son of William of Stobs and grandson of 'Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins'. In 1648 he was 'fiar thair of' listed after his father on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the Borders. In 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire along with his father. He was an ardent royalist and served in the army, commanding a troop in Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade's regiment of horse. In 1650 he was named (along with his father and several Scotts) as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis. In 1651, along with his father, he bought Stonedge and Woollee (later Wolfelee) from Lord Cranstoun, his brother-in-law. However, due to Cranstoun's imprisonment, he did not claim the properties until 1659. He was Sir Gilbert 'fiar of Stobbis' who witnessed contracts relating to Appotside in 1654 and 1656. He succeeded his father in 1654, and immediately had to contend with the fine of £1000 sterling imposed by Cromwell on royalist supporters. In 1655 he sold Kirkton to his uncle Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers. In 1656 he was the superior of the lands who confirmed the charters of William Elliot of Harwood for Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside. In 1657 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Winnington and Winningtonhall, as well as 'Portheid', 'Horslie', 'Turie', 'Arkendknow', Winningtonrig, Over and Nether 'Swynsteid', Over and Nether Dodburn, Birkwood, Birkwoodhead, 'Bromsydbrae', 'Bromsyke', 'Huntishill', 'Abbotis-aiker', Baxtonlees, 'Ellinburne', Shaws, Middlestead, 'Gildhous' and Bailielee. He was one of the trustees for Mary Scott of Buccleuch during her minority. In 1658 he was among 20 'gentlemen and heritors' of Roxburghshire who signed a commission to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1659 he sold Peel (or Baxtonlees) to William Elliot of Binks and Swinside and his son John. Also in 1659 he had a charter of Over and Nether Wells and Macksideshaw. In 1660, after the restoration of the monarchy, he was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.Ps.) for Roxburghshire, and reappointed in 1669, serving until 1674. In 1662

he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers), an appointment that was renewed ten years later. He was involved in a libel action with Robert Scott of Harwood in 1663. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663, and was still one of her curators at that time. He was reappointed as a Justice of the Peace in 1663, and nominated as the convenor for Roxburghshire. According to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 his rentals amounted to £10,226 13s 4d, including lands in Hobkirk, Cavers, Kirkton, Castleton and Abbotrule Parishes; this also included £666 13s 4d from his mother's rentals. He was also recorded in 3 bonds and discharges in 1663. He was knighted by Charles II in 1651 on Largo sands, and was made 1st Baronet (of Nova Scotia) in 1666. In 1671 he had the lands of Stonedge separated from the Barony of Hallrule, so that he could give it to the eldest of his 2nd family. In 1673 he succeeded his cousin Robert the 17th of Redheugh as Chief of the Elliots. He is probably the Gilbert 'of woolie' recorded being taxed for £1000 in Southdean Parish in 1678. He married first Isabella (or Isobel) Cranstoun (daughter of James, Master of Cranstoun and Lady Elizabeth Stewart, who was daughter of the Earl of Bothwell) and secondly in 1661 Magdalen (or Magdaline), daughter of Sir John Nicolson of Lasswade. He had 10 children, including: Sir William, who succeeded him (and was the 2nd born son); James, recorded in 1679; John, excise collector, still alive in 1704; Elizabeth (d.1662), buried in Greyfriars Cemetery; Esther, who married William Douglas of Morton; Thomas (d.1671), who would have inherited Wolfelee and Stonedge, but died young; Gilbert (1669–1706), eldest surviving son of his 2nd marriage, to whom he gave the estate of Stonedge; another William (d.1699), merchant of Edinburgh and later of London, who married a daughter of Sir George Hume; Janet (d.bef. 1694); and Magdalene (d.1739), who married John Pringle of Stichel. There seems to be some confusion over the year of his death, but he certainly signed a bond of provision for his wife and children in April 1677. And his son Sir William was served as his heir in 1692, perhaps a while after his death. His widow occupied old Wolfelee House, until that fell into disrepair, afterwards moving to Hobsburn. Gilbert of Craigend and Deanfoot (17th C.) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He was a grandson of 'Gibbie' of the Gowden Garters' and son of Archibald (and hence cousin of the 1st Baronet of Stobs). He may be partly confused with Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh, who was probably his uncle, and he is also easy to confuse with the later Gilbert of Minto. In 1683 he was served heir to his father's lands of Craigend, Deanfield and Minto, as well as 'Grassland', Ladyland, 'Viccars land' in Hobkirk Parish, Wester Swanshiel and Clerksbank. He inherited the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot from his father, but in 1687 sold the land to Lord Taras. He was already deceased by 1696 when his brother John was married in Edinburgh. Gilbert of Stanedge (1669–1705) eldest surviving son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs with his 2nd wife, Magdalen Nicolson. He was served heir to his brother Thomas in 1671 and succeeded to the Stanedge lands in 1682, while still a minor. The lands had been separated from the Barony of Hallrule in 1671 and originally disposed to his brother Thomas, who died shortly afterwards. As part of the arrangements for his inheritance he had to provide the sum of 20,000 for his 3 younger siblings. During his minority his 'curators' were his mother Lady Stobs, William Elliot of Grange (his uncle), Gavin Elliot in Dalkeith and John Elliott (brother of Sir William of Stobs, and his half-brother). In 1678 he is recorded as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish; he was also 'of Stenhouse-edge' when listed as owner of Woollee in Southdean Parish. His 'brother-german' William became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1691. He became first Laird of Stonedge and also of Woollee in 1671, the lands being given by his father after an older brother died. In 1691 he had a bond with James Scott, Bailie of Hawick; this was later mentioned in 1708 a procuratory document for the deceased Adam Ruecastle. He witnessed the marriage contract of the daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692. A sasine of 1693 shows him in a bond with Sir John Pringle of Stichell over the lands of Fairnieles, Unthank, Howa, Hobsburn, Snipe and Little Gledstains. That year he also had a bond with Patrick Johnston, Edinburgh merchant and had an action raised against him and his curators by Archibald Douglas of 'Garvat' (Gervald perhaps) for non-payment; this was followed by a letter of horning' against him and Walter Scott of Wauchope by Archibald Douglas of 'Garvat' in 1695. Henry Elliot of Harwood appears to have paid off several of his debts about 1694, so it is clear he was in financial difficulties. In 1694 he sold the 3 eastern quarters of Fairnieles (part of the Harwood estate) to Henry Elliot of Harwood. He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. From 1698

he started on extensive alterations to Woollee, to turn the tower into a home; however, this placed him further into debt. A stone formerly built into the house (but later destroyed) was inscribed 'D.M.E. G.E. E.S.' In 1704 he was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1693 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Scott of Harwood-on-Teviot. Their children were: Magdalen (b.1694), who married Robert Ainslie; Gilbert (b.1695), who succeeded; Walter (b.1696), unmarried; Christian (b.1697), who married a Mr. Dawson, a Kelso surgeon; Helen (b.1698), who married John Haswell, Provost of Jedburgh; Elizabeth (b.1699), who married a Mr. Ogilvie of Ayrshire; William (b.1701), unmarried; John, also unmarried; Robert (b.1704), who became an apprentice in 1721 and died unmarried; Isobel (b.1705), who married Alexander Jerdon of Newcastle; and Margaret (b.1706), who married John Angus, an Edinburgh lawyer. He died suddenly aged 37, leaving a large family of children. His widow stayed in Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) after his death and married James Campbell, minister at Legerwood. Sir Gilbert of Stobs (c.1680–1764) 3rd Baronet and Chief of the Elliots, eldest son of Sir William. He was served heir to his father in 1699. Soon after getting married he moved from London to Edinburgh, where his house was on the north side of the High Street at the top of Trunks Close (and was demolished in 1873); this was in the Canongate, where several other Roxburghshire families lived. In 1704 he was among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also lived at Stobs, but resided at Wells for a few years after Stobs House was burned down in 1712. It is possible he was the 'Gilbert Elliott of Midlamiln younger' (the family having previously held Midlem Mill) listed in 1708 as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1713 by right of his father Sir William. Following the rebellion of 1715 he bought up the 'wadsets' of Adam Turnbull of Denesyde (who had been a Jacobite supporter) and forced him to leave, thereby gaining a local reputation as a high-handed Laird. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1708–15 and again 1726–27 (taking over from his distant cousin Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto) in a bye-election. In 1718 he drew up a bond of entail (at the insistence of his father-in-law), ensuring that none of the estate (except for Haddon) could be sold off; despite the best of intentions, this agreement led to financial trouble for later generations. After 1723 the family began to regularly spell their name with the double 't' and single 'l'. In 1722 a letter was sent to Winningtonrig, warning his tenants there not to pasture their animals on Hawick Common, and in 1723 one of the Hawick Bailies was paid for 'taking instruments' against him. In 1725 he gave the east side of Hallrule, valued at £414, to his son John, retaining the other £1939. In 1726, following a court meeting in Jedburgh, the drinking party he was with discussed the recent election (and particularly who did not vote for him) and he got into an argument with Col. Stewart of Stewartfield (now Hartrigge) in the Black Bull in Jedburgh and stabbed him to death with his sword. He apparently sobered up in Jedburgh Abbey churchyard, hid out in Wauchope Forest and fled by boat to Holland. He was declared an outlaw, but was later pardoned and allowed to return, partly through the influence of Lord Minto and his father-in-law, William Elliot. The sword that he had used later came into the possession of the Marquess of Lothian. It is said that he led a sober and quiet life after his return. He added the farms of Lymiecleuch and Penchrise to the family estates. The Bailies and Council of Hawick complained about his tenants' encroachment onto the Common in a notorial instrument of 1734. On the other hand, in 1736 he applied to the Board of Trade for Manufactures for a grant of £40 to purchase some looms for the manufacture of coarse tarred wool, which was probably a significant moment in the development of Hawick as a knitwear centre. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. He leased Peelbraehope from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. He paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748 and 1753. In 1750, after the death of Gilbert Elliot, son of Robert Elliot of Larriston, he arranged for the education at Stobs of Robert's grandson, William (who would later buy back Larriston and become a Major-General). In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Tandlaw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Shortly before his death he changed his will to favour his grandson Francis over his eldest son John, stipulating that Francis should live constantly at Stobs. In London in 1702 he married Eleanor (or Eleanora), daughter of William Elliot, who was a tailor in London (and later of Wells), and was a distant cousin from the Brugh branch of the family. She died in 1728 and it is unclear if he also married another Eleanor later. He had 11 children: William (1703–05), who died in infancy; Gilbert (1704–06), who also died in infancy; Sir John (b.1705), who succeeded him; another William (b.1706), who became a merchant with the East India Company; Gilbert (b.1707), also with the East India Company; Anne or Eleanor (b.1708), the only daughter, who probably died young; Charles (1709–56), who became Attorney General of North Carolina; Archibald (1710–59), who was born at Stobs and became a London merchant, being secretary to Ramsgate Harbour; Elliot (1712–45), who was born at Stobs and became a Captain in the Royal Navy; Gavin (b.1713), who was born at Wells and became Captain of a ship in the East India Company; and George Augustus (1717–90), who was born at Wells and became Lord Heathfield. His wife's dowry was said to be £15,000, which was a fortune at the time. He bestowed on her the lands of Langside, Shankend and Hawthornside, and the rentals from Penchrise. Gilbert of Stanedge and Howa (1695–1727) son of Gilbert, he was the 2nd (and last) Elliott Laird of Stonedge and also owned Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) as well as several neighbouring farms, all of which were part of the Stonedge lands. He was said to have been a delicate child who was mainly kept at home. He succeeded at age 11, to an estate that was heavily in debt, and so the management was in the hands of his curators. In 1718 he sold Stonedge and Howa to Adam Scott, tenant of Wauchope, but retaining lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £676 14s 8d. In 1722 he succeeded to his uncle's lands of Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee). He died while still in debt, but arranged a Deed of Provision for his younger children. In 1715 he married Cecily (or Cecilia), daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule, having known her for many years. Their children were: Elizabeth, who married William Kerr of Gateshaw, Town Clerk of Kelso; Gilbert, who married Margaret Ainslie and was designated 'of Otterburn'; and Charles, who was a merchant Captain in the Lisbon trade. Gilbert (1707–bef. 56) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs. He was born at the family home at Trunk's Close in Edinburgh. He served with the East India Company, serving for a while on the Heathcote. He died unmarried in India. Gilbert of Otterburn and Wells (1717–1801) eldest son of Gilbert of Stonedge. While a minor his 'tutor' was William Kerr of Abbotrule. He trained as a surgeon and in 1739 became surgeon to the regiment raised by his cousin Gen. George Augustus Elliott (later Lord Heathfield), who was born in the same Parish in the same year. He received money after the death of his uncle William and purchased Otterburn estate from Thomas Moir; however, he held Otterburn for only a few years, selling it in 1765. After retiring from the army he served as factor of Wells for his distant relative William Elliot, taking over from Archibald Jerdan, probably in the late 1760s. Sometime before leaving the country for the last time Lord Heathfield entrusted him with the key of the main gate of Gibraltar, and it later passed to his nephew when he retired. A great admirer of James Thomson (of 'The Seasons'), he acquired the armchair the poet used when composing the 'Castle of Indolence', said to have been sent to him from London by the Liddesdale-born Dr. John Armstrong). In 1787 he invited Robert Burns to dine at Wells (described in Burns diary as breakfast) during the poet's Border Tour; he insisted that Burns sit in the chair, making such a fuss over it that Burns grew confused, the situation became very awkward and the whole visit was not the great success that he had planned. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of 'Otterburn' in Morebattle Parish, valued at £224 13s 4d (and the teinds valued at £40). He was 'in Walls' in the period 1785–98 when taxed for having a carriage. He was also taxed for having 1 or 2 male servants in the period 1785–97, and a female servant in 1785–90. He was 'in Walls' on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 3 carriage horses; he is probably also the Gilbert recorded paying the horse tax at Stonedge in 1791. He is recorded in the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls as 'Gilbert Elliot Esq. at Wells', when he owned 2 farm horses and 2 carriage or saddle horses. He also paid tax on 2 dogs in 1797. In 1764 he married Margaret, daughter of Jedburgh Bailie and apothecary William Ainslie. He died without issue and the male line of Elliott of Stanedge therefore became extinct. Gilbert (b.1707) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs and Eleanor Elliot. He was born in his father's house at Trunk's Close in Edinburgh. He became a merchant with the East India Company, like his brother William. He died before 1756, unmarried. Gilbert (1796–1871) 3rd son of Sir William of Stobs and Mary Russell. He was baptised in Cavers Parish and schooled at Houghton-le-Spring. In 1812 he became a 'gentleman-cadet' in the Royal Corps of Artillery and served in the Peninsular War in 1815 just after Waterloo, leaving as 1st Lieutenant in 1821. He then returned to Scotland and stayed with his mother at Wells (which his elder brother William had inherited). He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1822, but resigned in

1834 along with other Whig supporters. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1830 he married Isabella Lucy, daughter of Rev. Robert Elliot of Wheldrake (son of Sir Gilbert Elliot, 3rd Baronet of Minto), after meeting her the year before when she was visiting Weens; the couple were married at Minto. In 1839, along with his brother-in-law Dr. Grant of Jedburgh, he emigrated to Australia. There he prospered, and was appointed Police Magistrate in Parramatta, then moved to Wide Bay (north of Brisbane), where he bought a sheep station called 'Yenda'. He became Member of Parliament for Wide Bay and was appointed first Speaker of the Queensland Parliament (serving for 11 years). He apparently refused to be given a knighthood, but agreed to have his portrait painted (which hangs in Parliament House in Brisbane). His children were: Gilbert William (b.1831), who was a police magistrate and married Jane Penelope Thomson; Francis Willoughby, who married Sarah Jane Richards; Henry Alexander (b.1834); and 2 daughters. There are many descendants now living in Australia. Gilbert William (1831–93) son of Gilbert, 3rd son of Sir William of Stobs. He was born in Scotland and baptised in Jedburgh Parish. He moved to Australia with his father at the age of 8. He kept in touch with his family back in Scotland, and welcomed their kinsman Arthur (later 9th Baronet of Stobs) when he came to Australia in 1875. He married Jane Penelope Thomson and they had 2 sons and 4 daughters. Sir Gilbert Alexander Boswell of Stobs (1885–1958) 10th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was born in Massachusetts, only son of Sir Arthur and Lilla Burbank. He left school at 16, worked for a bank and started his own firm on Wall Street at the age of 20. On the outbreak of WWI he joined the McGill University Battery in Canada and after training served with the Royal Artillery in England. After the War he was an apple farmer in California for a while, then returned to Wall Street. When his father died in 1926 he remaining in the U.S.A., but sent his 2 sons to be educated in England. In 1932 he retired from his partnership, bought Wolfelee and moved there himself. He also joined his cousin's firm in London, later setting up under his own name. Before he died he was able to purchase Redheugh, the ancient seat of the Elliots. In 1912 he married Dora Flournoy, only child of Alexander Stephens Hopkins of Atlanta, Georgia; she carried out extensive research on the family. They had 4 children: Charlotte Elgitha

Veronica Boswell, who married Landon Thorn, secondly Capt. Andrew Burk and thirdly Stanley Maxted; Jean Cecilia Constance Boswell, who married Maj. Alwyn Nigel Parker and secondly Maj. Alan Edward Seton Jackson, K.O.S.B.; Arthur Francis Augustus Boswell (b.1915), who succeeded; and Fl.-Lieut. John Livingston Hopkins Boswell (1916–42), who was killed in action in WWII. James (d.bef. 1661) 6th and youngest son of 'Gibbie wi the Golden Gairters' and Margaret Scott of Harden. He was a lawyer based in Edinburgh. In 1620 his father gave him the half-lands of 'Glencarie' and Midgehope that were help in wadset from Robert Scott of Tushielaw. He witnessed the document whereby Edward Lorraine sold Harwood outright to William Elliot in 1537. In 1637 he married Margaret, daughter and heiress of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Larriston, and the lands of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston were given to them by his father; this included Hartsgarth, 'Layfauld', 'Carriescheill', Langhaugh, Over and Nether Larriston, Blackhope, 'Greinhoillis' and 'Dowmaynholme'. The lands of Hartsgarth, Carrieshiels, Langhaugh and Bankhead were held in wadset, but he was able to pay the reversion of 3,800 merks by 1639. He may have been the 'James Elliot appeirand of Redhaugh' whose lands in Castleton were valued at £600 in 1643. His wife died in 1697 (probably in Edinburgh) and is buried in the Henderson tomb in Greyfriars cemetery. Their children (whose surnames are usually spelled 'Elliot') were: Robert, of Larriston, who married Elizabeth Maxwell, and secondly married Janet Scott of Todrig; William, who 'went away to be a horner'; and a daughter, who married William Scott of Milsington. James (d.1908) married Mary Kennedy in Hawick in 1872. His wife was daughter of James Kennedy and Elizabeth Pattison and died in 1919. They are buried in Wilton Cemetery. Jean nee Scott (d.aft. 1608) sister of Scott of Buccleuch (although it is unclear which one). She married Gavin of Stobs, probably around 1550. She was still alive in 1608 when she complained (along with her daughters Dorothy and Esther, and grand-daughter Jean Rutherford) about William Scott of Northhouse and others coming to Stobs and taking 'all the evidents and writs', threatening to burn them if they did not have their demands met. Jean (d.bef. 1608) daughter of Gavin, the first Elliott owner of Stobs. She married Thomas Rutherford the Black Laird of Edgerston and died before her father. Her only child was Jean, who married William Elliot, brother of Robert of Redheugh; she inherited the Stobs estate, along with her aunts, after the death of her grandfather. Jessie Blanche Adelaide 'Blanche' (c.1830s–98) daughter of Sir William Francis, 7th Baronet of Stobs. In 1868 she married Capt. James Wood, who was brother of her own brother's wife, Charlotte Wood of Quebec. She was appointed by her father in 1863 as one of the trustees of the estates of Wells and Haddon (essentially to exclude her brother, Sir William, from his inheritance). She was said to be unhappy at how quickly her brother remarried after his first wife (her husband's sister) died in 1878, and was then involved in about 20 years of legal battles with him over rights to the rents at Wells. John of Goodtrees (d.1639) 5th son of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters'. He became an advocate in Edinburgh. In 1632 he was described as 'baillie in that part' for a charter where his brother Gilbert purchased the lands of Harwood from Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir, as well as for a sasine where Rev. Weir sold Appotside and Tythelhouse to Edward Lorraine. He married Marion, daughter and heiress of David McCulloch of Goodtrees (and whose wife was Margaret Elliot, a cousin). Their only child was Margaret, who married Sir Thomas Stewart of Coltness. After his death his wife remarried, to her daughter's father-in-law. John (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert, 1st Baronet of Stobs and Isabella Cranston. He was brother of Sir William and uncle of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. In 1681 he was a witness for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Wauchope. In the 1680s he was one of the 'curators' for Gilbert of Stonedge (his half brother). He was made collector of excise for Roxburgh and Selkirk in 1686. In 1687 he had a charter from his brother William for the lands of Lymiecleuch (this being obtained by adjudication from Adam Elliot of Mosspeebles and his brothers when they were unable to repay their loan); however, owing to the Revolution, he only took possession of the farm in 1695. He was cautioner for a bond by Gilbert of Stonedge in 1691 and witnessed a disposition between Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1694. In 1702 he witnessed the marriage arrangement by his nephew Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs to Eleabor Elliot. In 1704 (along with shoemaker John Elliot) he witnessed a baptism for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield; he was recorded there as 'Collector'. Sir John of Stobs (1705–1768) 4th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was born in Edinburgh, son of Sir

Gilbert, and said to be named after the Duke of Argyll. He was probably educated at home, like his brothers. He received liferent of 'East-side' when he reached 21. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Jedburgh in 1713 (when still a boy) and became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1748, 'gratis'. In 1725 his father gave him lands in the east side of Hallrule, valued at £414. He was 'of Stobs, junior' when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. His father disinherited him as much as possible in favour of his son Francis (perhaps a result of his marriage and the fact that he moved to England), and in fact he was only Baronet for 3 years before he died and was succeeded by Francis. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. He married Mary Andrews of London (about whom nothing else appears to be known). His children were: Francis (d.1791), who became 5th Baronet; John (d.1769), who was Captain with the Inniskilling Dragoons; Anne (1735–1803), who died in Bath, unmarried; and Eleanor (d.bef. 1767). He died on New Year's day in 1768 at his house in New Portugal Street in London. He left everything to his wife and daughter Anne. John (d.1769) son of Sir John of Stobs and brother of Sir Francis. He was a subaltern officer in the Inniskilling Dragoons for many years and died as a senior Lieutenant in the regiment. Capt. John (d.1795) younger son of Sir Francis of Stobs. He was a Captain in the 20th (or Jamaica) regiment of Light Dragoons. He died on the Princess Royal packet on his journey home from Jamaica. He was unmarried and his brother William was his executor. Maj. John (1793–1837) 2nd son of Sir William, 6th Baronet of Stobs. Born at Stobs, in 1812 he was gazetted to the 8th Hussars as a Cornet. By 1824 he was a Captain in the 4th Dragoons and was later promoted to Major. He died unmarried. Dame Magdalen nee Nicolson (d.1699) wife and later widow of Sir Gilbert, 1st baronet of Stobs. She was daughter of Sir John Nicolson of Lasswade. She is recorded borrowing '40 Punds Scots' for her share in building the new Hobkirk church of 1690–92. She stayed at Wolfelee and kept an account book that survives. Margaret Frances Boswell of Stobs (1948–) heir of the Chieftanship of the Elliots, only child of Arthur Francis Augustus, 11th Baronet of Stobs. She published 'The Elliots, The Story of a Border Clan' (1974). Richard of Fallahill (17th C.) younger son of

William of Stobs. He witnessed a sasine in 1669 and received a charter for Falahill in 1677. He had sons Gilbert and William who were both witnesses to a bond of caution at Dumfries in 1684. Sir Robert of Stobs (17th/18th C.) recorded becoming a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1713 in right of his father Sir William. Adm. Russell (1802–81) christened at Cavers, younger son of Sir William of Stobs and Mary Russell. He was presumably named after his mother's family, the Russell's of Roseburn. He entered the Royal Navy as a volunteer in 1814, becoming a Midshipman by 1817, by which time he had been to St. Helena, Brazil and Newfoundland. He was promoted to Lieutenant in 1825, served in the West Indies and became Captain of the Espiegle in 1929. He does not appear to have served on any ships in the period 1830–36. He was a Royal Navy Captain living in Jedburgh in 1831, when (despite being a Whig) he sheltered Sir Walter Scott in his house while the mob at the election calmed down enough for the famous writer to get out of the area. He became Captain of H.M.S. Fly in 1836; after his ship arrived on Pitcairn Island in 1838 he wrote a constitution for the 100 or so inhabitants, specifically describing how everyone should have a vote (including any man or woman over the age of 18) annually to elect a Magistrate, making the Pitcairn Islanders one of the first communities in the world to have universal suffrage. A canon belonging to the mutineers of H.M.S. Bounty was recovered by him in deep water off Pitcairn Island and was once held at Fatlips Castle. His naval service ended in 1839. In 1841 he was living at Easter Langlee, but seems to have moved away from the Borders shortly after that. He lived in Westmorland, where he devoted his time to Liberal politics and railway companies. He was appointed as Rear Admiral in 1857, Vice Admiral in 1864 and full Admiral in 1869. By 1861 he was living at Appleby Castle in Westmorland. In 1830 he married Bethia, daughter of Sir William Russell, who was his cousin (and hence had the same surname as his first name), and she died in 1843. In 1852 he secondly married Henrietta, widow of John Ward and daughter of Sir John Kaye, and she died in 1878. His children were Capt. John Francis (b.1820), Capt. Charles Francis (b.1830), Sophia Mary (b.1832), George Gilbert (b.1834), Claud William (b.1836), Georgina Katherine Grisell Billie (b.1840), Gilbert Henry John of the Royal Navy (b.1842) and Bethia Russell (b.1843). It seems that all of them died without surviving children. He died at Appleby Castle and there is a memorial to him in St. Lawrence Church, Appleby. His surname is often given as 'Elliot', although he signed it as 'Elliott'. Theresa Janet nee Boswell (d.1836) eldest daughter of Sir Alexander Boswell of Auchinleck, who had the distinction of being the last man killed in a duel in Scotland. Her grandfather was James Boswell, biographer of lexicographer Samuel Johnson. In 1826 she married Sir William, 7th Baronet of Stobs. She had 8 children and died in childbirth. She was buried in the family vault in Cavers Kirk and her hatchment is preserved there. Thomas (d.1671) younger son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs, with his 2nd wife, Magdalen Nicolson. It is said that his mother convinced his father to settle lands on his 2nd family. So proceedings were started to transfer Wolfelee and Stonedge to him, even although he was still just a boy; hence he is referred to as being 'of Woollee'. However, he died before the charter was obtained in 1671, and so the lands went instead to his brother Gilbert, who was served as his heir in 1671. William of Stobs (d.1654) eldest son of 'Gibbie wi the Golden Garties'. He was probably the first member of his family to spell his name 'Elliott' rather than 'Ellot' (as recorded in a letter of 1641). He was a strong supporter of the Covenant. He was a Commissioner to Parliament for Roxburghshire in 1641 (in place of Sir William Douglas of Cavers, who was absent in England), this being the Second Parliament of Charles I. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. Also in 1642 he had a charter of Borthwickshiels. He was also recorded as Convenor of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1643. In 1643 his lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £160, those in Cavers Parish at more than £3400, Kirkton about £1200, Wilton at £260 and Hobkirk at £80. Also in 1643 his mother Margaret Scott was recorded as liferenter of lands in Kirkton valued at about £670. In 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire and for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1649. It appears that he switched from supporting Cromwell to supporting the King. In 1645 he was served heir to his father in the lands of 'Hangansyde' and Baxtonlees and he had a charter for Town o' Rule in 1649. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1649 he wrote a description of Selkirkshire with Walter Scott of Arkleton. In 1650 he was named as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis. He added Hallrule (it is said, through some underhand means) to the family possessions, adjoining the estate of 'Toon-o-Rule'. He bought Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) from Lord Cranstoun in 1651. In 1621 he married Elisabeth, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Cavers (and she appears to have been a supporter of the Covenant, like the rest of her family). Their children were: Sir Gilbert, 1st Baronet; Archibald of Craigend and Deanfoot (dead by 1683); Gavin, who married Barbara Creighton and Jean Nicolson; William, probably of Grange, who had no male heir (and is sometimes confused with the Provost of Peebles who was son of Gavin Elliot of Brugh); Margaret, who married William Bennet, minister of Ancrum, and secondly James Scott of Bonnington (in Lothian); Richard of Falahill; John, who witnessed a charter in 1657; Anna, who married John Maxwell of Cowhill in 1641; Marie, who married John Young of Gulyhill; Isobel, who married Francis Scott of Arkleton in 1664; and Elspeth, who is mentioned in 1658 when her mother assigned a bond to her. It is said that he was concerned about having his lands confiscated by his mortal enemies Lord Balmerino and Lord Colvin, this eventually leading to him hanging himself. His last testament is in the National Archives.

William of Grange (17th C.) probably 4th son of William of Stobs. He witnessed a charter in 1659. In 1678 he was recorded as owner of part of Grange in Ancrum Parish, valued at about £350. In the 1680s and early 1690s he was one of the 'curators' for Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge during his minority. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He appears to have had no surviving male heir, since a pedigree of about 1704 states that the Elliott of Grange line was now extinct. Note that he is sometimes confused with the Provost of Peebles who was son of Gavin Elliot of Brugh. Sir William of Stobs (d.1699) 2nd Baronet and Chief of the Elliots, son of Sir Gilbert (by his first wife, Isabella Cranston). He was the 2nd but oldest surviving son and was served heir to his father in 1692. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending moststroopers), along with his father and others. In 1676 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Laing. Also in 1676 he was one of the men charged with seizing 5 women who were accused of attacking the minister of Abbotrule. In 1677 he inherited the Barony of Winnington and was served heir to his father in the lands of Stobs in 1692 (which, for some reason, was probably several years after his father's death). His estate included Stobs itself, as well as several lands in Cavers Parish. In 1678 he and his brother Gilbert paid the land tax on £4642 in Hobkirk Parish. He also paid for Stobs, Langside, Penchrise, Stanishope, Singley, Harwoodburn and Williamrig, valued at £1633, for half of Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish, valued at £500, as well as £1846 13s 4d in Kirkton Parish (for Winnington, Winningtonhall, Winnington Mill, Winnington Rig, Horselee, Turn, Smithfieldhaugh, Acreknowe, Hunthill, Abbot's Acre, Birkwood, Dodburn, Newton, Whitehillbrae and Barnes). In 1684 he was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in right of his father-in-law Charles Murray of Haddon; he eventually took complete possession of the Haddon estate (near Kelso). He was appointed one of the tutors of the children of Sir William Douglas of Cavers. In 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King, and again in 1685. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. About 1685 he was made Lieutenant in a troop raised by the Earl of Lothian for the purpose of rounding up local Covenanters. In 1685 he was in Hawick to oversee 9 local farmers swearing against the Covenanters by repeating 'the test'. In 1689 he was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.Ps.) for Roxburghshire. However, he was replaced in 1693 for not taking the oath of allegiance. He was also on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. In 1690 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He witnessed a disposition for Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1694. Also in 1694 he was served heir to his deceased sister Janet. He married Elizabeth Scott of Langshaw (d.1680, daughter of John Scott, 1st Baronet of Ancrum); he had no children with his first wife and secondly married Margaret, daughter and heiress of Charles Murray of Haddon. His 2nd wife survived him until 1739 and they had 8 children, including: Gilbert (d.1764), who succeeded his father; William, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1700; Margaret (perhaps the Margaret born in 1682 in Jedburgh Parish), who married John Paterson of Granton, later Baronet of Eccles; Magdalene, who married Alexander Scott of Syn-ton; Janet, who married Capt. Alexander Corbet;

Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Bonnington and possibly John Forrest of Edinburgh; Christian (d.1775), who married Rev. Thomas Blair of Edinburgh; and possibly John, who was in the Army. His testament is recorded in 1684. William (b.1670s) 2nd (perhaps originally 3rd) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs with his 2nd wife Magdalen Nicolson. He was apprenticed as a merchant to Patrick Johnstone in Edinburgh in 1691. He was a merchant in Edinburgh and then London. He was left half of his sister Janet's share of the money left to his sister Janet when she died before 1694. He is said to have married a daughter of Sir G. Hume, Baronet (possibly Sir Gustavus Hume of Hume Castle, Ireland). Their children were: Jean, who married Mr. Ker of Littledean (perhaps Walter); Helen, who married Captain Wilkinson; Gilbert, Customs Officer at Gravesend and chief clerk at the War Office; and George, Deputy Searcher of the Customs at Gravesend, who married Mary Fortrey of Woomble Hall. He was probably the brother of Gilbert of Stanedge who became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1691 and who witnessed a bond of 1694. In 1694 he was also served 'retour' to the provision given to his deceased sister Janet by his father. William (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir William of Stobs and Margaret Murray. In 1700 he was apprenticed to merchant John Hepburn. William (b.1701) 3rd son of the 1st Gilbert of Stonedge and Margaret Scott. He witnessed a sasine in 1722, when he is described as 'brother-german to Gilbert now of Stonedge'. He died unmarried. William (1706-79) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs and Eleanor Elliot. He was born in his father's house at Trunk's Close in Edinburgh. He became a merchant with the East India Company and died in London, unmarried. He had property in East Florida and on the Island of Barbados. He left a large amount of money to several family members, appointing his brother Lt.-Gen. George Augustus and nephew Capt. Francis Augustus as joint executors. His house in London was left to the Countess Dowager of Chioza. Sir William of Stobs (1767-1812) eldest son of Sir Francis, he was 6th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was christened in Cavers and died at Stobs. He succeeded his father in 1791 and had the new mansion built at Stobs around 1793, to plans started by his father. The construction apparently strained his resources to the limits, already stretched by his father. This meant he had to re-lease some of his farms for a lump sum, rather than yearly rent. It is said that he also borrowed from Gideon Pott of Penchrise (his son breaking the deal he made with Pott). He also managed to make money by being allowed by the Court to sell off some of his land, but buying it himself and reselling (Hallrule, Hallrule Mill and Town-o-Rule) at a much higher price. This broke the entail made on the estate in 1725, giving his son legal problems later. In the 1790s he complained to the county Justices about the circuitous route taken by local mail and the cost according to actual distance travelled, thus helping introduce the local mail coaches. He paid tax for having 3 male servants in 1792, 4 in 1793 and 3 in 1794 and 1797. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1792-97, owning up to 6 carriage horses and 3 farm horses. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in the same year. He was additionally taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1792-95. He served as President of the Heritors of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He is listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of Billerwell, Hawthornside and the west part of Outer Hallrule; he was also listed as owner of several farms in Kirkton Parish. In the early 19th century he sold 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule to John Wilson. In 1790 he married Mary, youngest daughter of John Russell of Roseburn, Clerk to the Signet; she died in 1850. They had 10 children (all but the first 2 baptised in Cavers Parish): Bethia Mary (1791-1854), who died unmarried; Sir William Francis (b.1792), who succeeded; John (1793-1838), who became a Major in the 4th Dragoons and died unmarried; Gilbert (1796-1871), who eventually emigrated to Australia; Sir Daniel (1798-1872) of the Madras Civil Service, who married Georgina, daughter of Gen. George Russell; George Augustus (b.1799), who became an Admiral; Charles (b.1800), who was killed in action at 19; Russell (b.1802), who also became an Admiral and married Bethia, daughter of Sir William Russell; Alexander (1805-99), naval storekeeper at Devonport; and Euphemia Elizabeth Anne (1809-99), who married Rev. David Bagot. He died suddenly at Stobs aged 44. Sir William Francis of Stobs and Wells (1792-1864), son of Sir William, he was 7th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was christened at Cavers in 1793. He was gazetted to the Queen's Bays at the age of 16 and left when his father died, with the rank of Lieutenant. It is said that during this time he once lost money to the Prince of Wales at cards. He succeeded on the death of his father in 1812, before he had reached majority, and was faced with an estate that was heavily in debt. Bored with rural life he joined the Roxburgh troop of Yeomanry Cavalry as a Lieutenant, later becoming Captain. In 1817 he was appointed a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. His financial situation improved when he gained the estate of Wells in 1818 on the death of a cousin (William Elliot, M.P.), although there was further litigation involved there for many years. He embarked upon a costly lawsuit over his father's sale of Hallrule, which lasted almost 20 years. His finances were in such dire straits that in 1828 he had to put them in the care of trustees. He also eventually gained back the estate of Haddon, near Kelso. He purchased East Fodderlee, and had plans for encouraging the railway to pass through his property. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He subscribed to 6 copies of Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He stood as a Liberal candidate in the 1831 Roxburghshire election, losing to Francis Scott of Harden, but as the populist candidate he was still being carried around the streets of Jedburgh shoulder-high. It was said that on election day a procession set out from Hawick at 5 a.m., roused by the drums and fifes and set out for Jedburgh, picking up his carriage at Spittal, and numbering about 2,000 when they reached the county town. He took part in the Reform Bill celebrations in Hawick in 1832. He was also made an Honorary Burgess in 1825. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. During a trip to the north he was made a Free Burgess and Guild Brother of Wick, Banff and Elgin. He was said to have taken a keen interest in the baa game in Bonchester. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot's 1837 directory, and was a heritor in Kirkton Parish. Following his wife's death he sent the children to live with their grandmother, the Dowager Lady Boswell, while he lived at Mortlake near London. However, he extended Wells House around 1862, and spent his last few summers there, as well as this being the residence of his mother. In 1826 he married Theresa Janet, eldest daughter of Sir Alexander Boswell of Auchinleck, and she died in 1836 during childbirth (her hatchment is in Cavers Kirk). His wife's father had the distinction of being the last man killed in a duel in Scotland, and her grandfather was James Boswell, biographer of Johnson. They had 8 children: Eleanor Jane Ann Augusta (b.1825), who died in infancy; Sir William Francis Augustus (b.1827), who succeeded; Grace Theresa Emmeline (1828–52), who died unmarried; Alexander Boswell (b.1830), who married Katherine Craigie and Annabella Carmichael, and whose son Arthur Boswell succeeded to Stobs; Charles James John (1832–49), who died aged 16; Jessie Blanche Adelaide (d.1898), who married Capt. James Wood, and died at Hyde Park; George Augustus Leslie (1833–54), who married Mary Rat-tray; and Frances Elizabeth (d.1869), who married Edmund Forrest. He was said to be furious at his eldest son marrying without his consent, and effectively dispossessed him, assigning as trustees for Wells and Haddon his brothers Daniel and Alexander, as well as his brother-in-law Gen. Vassal, Allan Elliott-Lockhart of Borthwickbrae and his daughter Blanche. He died in London and was buried in the family vault in Cavers Old Kirk. On the day of his funeral a large beech tree fell across the road near the House, making it hard for the carriages to approach. The procession was well attended when it neared the old church. His funeral 'hatchment' is in the Museum. Sir William Francis Augustus Boswell of Stobs (1827–1910), 8th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots, eldest son of Sir William Francis, he was born at Stobs. At the age of 9 his mother Theresa Boswell died and he (along with his other siblings) was put into the care of his grandmother, Lady Boswell, at Ochiltree. He served for many years in the 93rd Highlanders, going with the regiment to Canada and reaching the rank of Lieutenant before he left at the age of 26. In Canada he married without the knowledge of his father, and this caused him to be dispossessed of much of his inheritance. He succeeded to the estates at the age of 37, but with much of it under the control of his sister Blanche and the other trustees appointed by his father. In fact he had a protracted legal battle with his sister over the rent on Wells (this was said to be due to her unhappiness at how quickly he had remarried after the death of his first wife, who was her own husband's sister). He lived much of his life at Stobs, and also lived at Wells in the late 1800s, but had to sell off that estate in 1896 to clear debts on it. He had the family arms regranted to him in 1869. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as Deputy-Lieutenant for the county. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1869. He was known as a keen sportsman, being a good shot and fine horseman, and was elected Master of Foxhounds. He was the (honorary) President of Hawick Curling Club. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire from before his father's death. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Hallrule, as well as Billerwell, Hawthornside and the Stobs estate. He also owned a house in Crieff (Rubserlaw House), where his first wife died in 1878. Largely due to falling rents he was forced to sell off his lands, with Stobs itself going to the Military in 1903. He then moved to Crieff. In 1846 he firstly married Charlotte Maria, daughter of Robert Wood of Quebec, and she died in 1878 (although not an heiress, she was great-granddaughter of the Duke of Kent); however, she was rumoured by some to be the real identity of Henrietta Robinson, the ‘Veiled Murderess’, who was found guilty of murder in Troy, New York in 1854. In 1879 he secondly married Hannah Grizel, daughter of H.T. Birkett; she was the (rich) widow of Henry Kellsall. He only had one child, Theresa, who was brain-damaged from birth; it is said that this was owing to a fall down a flight of stairs that his wife had when seeing him carried in from a hunting trip on a gate and thinking the worst. He died at Crieff and was succeeded by his nephew Sir Arthur (note this spelling, and the common local pronunciation).

Elliott-Lockhart see Lockhart

the Eliotts (thu-e-lits, -e-lee-its) n. normal spelling of the Stobs branch of the family, adopted formally after 1723 in preference to the previous form ‘Eliot’, probably to distinguish the leading branch of the clan from the others (see the Eliots).

Elizabeth (ee-liz-u-bith) n. name of 1 Queen of England and 1 Queen of the United Kingdom. Elizabeth I (1533–1603) last of the Tudors, she was known in Scotland for her treatment of her cousin Queen Mary and for the involvement of England in Scottish political and religious affairs during her reign. There was a period of greater unrest on the Borders immediately after her death. Elizabeth II Elizabeth Alexandra Mary Windsor (1926–2022) longest-reigning monarch, daughter of George VI. She visited Hawick, while still Princess in October 1945, inspecting troops at the cricket field and attending a rally of women’s organisations in the Pavillion Theatre. She also visited Hawick with her family in 1947. In 1952 she was proclaimed as Queen in Hawick by the Provost from a platform erected in front of the Town Hall. She came back as Queen in 1962, with a welcome organised in the Town Hall and a reception in the Crown Hotel, along with a private showing of local knitwear. and returned to Hawick in her 1978, visiting Pesco’s, Volunteer Park and the Katharine Elliot Centre amongst other places. And in her golden jubilee year, 2002, she bussed the Hawick Flag at a ceremony in Melrose. Pringle of Scotland was long the official manufacturers of knitted garments to the Queen.

ell (el) n., arch. a Scots length, corresponding to about 37 inches, used to refer to lengths of cloth etc., or 45 inches for yarn, using the English convention – ‘... for art and part of theft and concealment ... six ells of melley, twenty-four ells of white cloth ...’ [RBA1537], ‘Imprimis, for three ells of silk at 44s. per ell, £6 12 0’ [BR1707], ‘... Ellice (el-is) n. Edward (1781–1863) Liberal M.P. for Coventry, known as a reformer, he was also Secretary of War and Director of the Hudson’s Bay Company. His sister Helena Anne married Charles Chisholme of Chisholme. During a visit to Chisholme in 1823 he was made an Honorary Burgess. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825.

ellie (e-lee) v., arch. to disappear, vanish gradually – 'Now this is the fashion; they thus pass the day, Till night comes at last and they ellie away' [DA] (also eellie and yillie; probably from French 'aller' and piked up from Napoleonic prisoners).

Elliot (e-li', e-lee-i', el-yi') n. (see also Elliott)

Adam (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been an Elliot of Ewesdale, and is listed as 'Elwald', along with 'Law' and 'Robyn'. Adam 'Adie' (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman 'John Makrobyn' was killed. His name is recorded as 'Edy Elwald', and his brother Ingram was also listed, as well as Airchie. Perhaps the same man was 'Edde Ellwalld, son to Gaytspalldes' listed in 1541 among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs, Croziers, Nixons and others accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton; it is unclear what his father's nickname may have meant. Adam 'Ade' of Leyes (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants of 'Streichelhope'. He is recorded as 'Ade Elwald de Leyis' and is probably related to 'Jock o the Lies' recorded in 1587 and 'Hob o the Leyes' recorded in the 1590s. Adam of the Shaws (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574. He was also recorded in 1578/9 when his sureties swore that they had previously presented him to the Privy Council. He is listed as 'Adie Elliot, callit Adie of the Schawis' and his sureties were Robert of Redheugh, Martin of Braidlie and Gavin 'in Swinsteis', then in Newbigging; since he was said to have not been entered, then his cautioners were fined. He was also listed in 1583 among the close kin of Robert of Redheugh in a letter from the English wardens. He was 'Adie Elliott in the Schaw' in 1586 when his master Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He was 'Adie Elliott of the Shawes' in 1587/8 when listed among Armstrongs and others accused of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandy Hall in 1584. He may have been brother of Gib, who is also recorded in 1583, and perhaps son of Hob, who is recorded in 1566. In 1590/1 he was 'Adie Elliot of the Schawis' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. Adam (16th

C.) listed as 'Ade Elliot callit Cowdais' in 1569, when he was pledge for 'himself and the haill branches of the Burnheidis and Weschaw'. Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule was his surety. He was also listed in 1569 among Borderers held in Blackness Castle. He was 'Ade Elliot callit the Cowdais' and was pledge for 'Wilcokis Hob' and Gavin's Jock of Ramsiegill. He is also recorded as 'Adie Elliot, called Cawdais' in 1578/9 among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He was 'callit Cowdais' there, when it was reported that he had previously been a joint surety for John of Heuch-house and Hobbie, son of Elder Will. He was also listed as 'Adie Elliott, called Cawdes', in 1581 when he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1583 he was recorded as 'Con-dus' in a letter from Thomas Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth's Chancellor, where he is listed among the Elliots of Burnhead. He is 'Ade Cowdais' when recorded along with 'Gawins Jok' under the heading 'Burnhead' in Monipennie's c.1594 list of Border chiefs. The other man was probably an Elliot, and the lands of Burnhead were probably those in Liddesdale. It is possible that 'Cowdais' is 'Cowdhouse', i.e. 'Coldhouse' (although not the one in Wilton). It is unclear what his nickname means, or even how it should be spelled. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (16th C.) recorded as 'Eddie Elliott son to Davie the Carling' among Borderers complained about for a raid on Woodburn in England in 1589. He is also recorded in 1590 as 'Eddie Elliott sonne to Davye Calinge' when he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of 'Gersomfeeld' and the tenants of 'Dortres'. In 1590 he is recorded as 'Edward Elloit son to Davye' (but this could be an English error assuming that 'Adie' was short for 'Edward') when accused along with Robert Armstrong 'the Tailor' of stealing horses from John Heron of Chipchase. Adam (16th C.) son of Davie of Dinlees, who was accused in 1590 of being in a group who were accused by William 'Loren' of stealing from 'Trewhit' and taking Robert Storie prisoner. The other men named were all Armstrongs, 'Robin the Tailor', Ringan of Tweeden, Matthew and 'Alexander's Airchie'. It is possible he is the same man as the son of Davie the Carlin. Adam of Philhope (17th C.) recorded as being of 'Fillip' (presumably Philhope) in 1643, when he became an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk, along with a number of Scotts. In 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He may have been succeeded by his son Andrew. It is unclear how he was related to the contemporary Archibald Elliot of Philhope. Adam of Meikledale (1598/9–1682) son of the 4th son of William of Falnash (whose name is unknown), who was probably of Unthank. He was recorded as tenant at Gorrenberry in 1656, when he witnessed a document relating to Harwood and was again so recorded in 1662. He was fined £1800 for backing the wrong side in the Civil War. He was also listed as indweller at Gorrenberry in 1657 when he purchased the lands of Isgill, Midgehow and Newbigging for his eldest son John, reserving the liferent for himself. He was described as ‘in Gorrinberrie’ about 1665, when he was listed (along with many other Elliots) as a creditor for William Elliot of Binks for the rent of ‘Wolfebeilder’ (and this was ‘in Woolfhoilder’ in 1662). He also was a witness to the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks in 1662. In 1669 received a charter of the lands of Meikledale, held in fee for his son Andrew. He is additionally said to have acquired Arkleton, but this may have been his son. He also held Burngrains and Carrot Rigs (i.e. Carewoodrig). He paid tax on £900 of land for Meikledale in 1671. He was grantee on a bond in 1673. He is said to have married a daughter of Glendinning of that Ilk, and secondly married Janet, daughter of John Scott of Rennaldburn. His children were: John of Thorlieshope (b.1621); Walter of Arkleton (b.1634); Andrew of Meikledale; William of Meikledale; and one daughter, said to have received a dowry of 8,000 merks. He was known as a very successful as a farmer, he left separate lands to 3 of his sons; Meikledale went to Andrew, eldest son from his 2nd marriage, but afterwards was inherited by William. He is buried in the Overkirk churchyard near Unthank, the stone being inscribed with the date of his death and also having an armorial carving of a man holding a tree in one hand (for Armstrong), with a shield in the other. He could be the basis for the tradition that the last Elliot of Gorrenberry, Adam, whose family for generations had known a friendly fairy called ‘the Cowie’, was said to have frozen to death by Hermitage Chapel after falling off his horse when fording the river, with the fairy giving loud lamentations at Gorrenberry, for the last time. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Girnwood. The will of his wife, Bessie Murray, is recorded in 1688. Adam of Lymiecleuch (17th/18th C.) probably 2nd son of William of Unthank. He received a lease of Mosspebble in 1643. Along with his father and Simon of the Binks and Swinside, he purchased Lymiecleuch in 1670, from William Eliott, younger of Stobs. He had a charter for his share of Lymiecleuch in 1673, but lost everything in 1687. Along with his 2 brothers, they were guarantors for someone in 1681 (probably a tenant) who failed to appear and so they had to pay the 5000 merks fine. They could only do so by seeking an advance on Lymiecleuch from Sir William Eliott of Stobs, but were unable to repay the loan. Eventually, in 1687, Lymiecleuch was settled on John Eliott, brother of the Laird of Stobs. He was still called ‘of Lymiecleuch’ when involved in legal proceedings with Anna, Duches of Buccleuch, in the period 1698–1703. His children were: John in Dinlees (1650–1728), who married Margaret Scott of Falnash; and Adam in Dykeraw, who may also have been associated with Lymiecleuch. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Whitchesters in 1704. He married Margaret Halliday. Their children included: Thomas (b.1689); and Isobel (b.1704). The witnesses in 1689 were Thomas Halliday (presumably related to his wife) and John Stewart and in 1704 were Thomas Falside and ‘student’ John Thorbrand. Adam of Beirhope (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Simon of the Binks and Swinside. In 1704 he purchased Beirhope in Hownam Parish, which he had partly owned before that. In 1702 he married Isabelle Ainslie in Jedburgh and their children were: Simon (b.1703), mentioned in his grandfather’s entail of 1714; Robert (b.1705); William (b.1707); Thomas (b.1711); Elspeth (b.1713); and John (b.1714). Adam of Teindside (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Walter of Arkleton. He was also recorded being ‘of Tyndside’, but the lands were clearly Teindside in upper Teviotdale. He was referred to as ‘younger of Arkletoun’ when he and his cousin Walter Elliot gave a bond of 2,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest for Hawick Grammar School. This presumably means he was a heritor of Hawick Parish. He was ‘of Arkleton’ in 1698 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Scott in Hawick and for Gideon Scott of Falnash, and in 1700 for smith John Dryden and for James Laidlaw in Harwood. He was also ‘of Arkleton’ in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for James Grieve in Teindside. He witnessed further baptisms in Hawick in 1702 (when listed as ‘of Arkleton’ and along with his servant John Bell) for William Davidson in Holt, in 1706 for Hawick apothecary Walter Scott and in 1707 and 1708 for

James Stevenson in Harwood. In 1708 Stevenson was described as '(in Harwood) tenent to arcle-ton', making it clear that he was owner of Harwood at that time, as well as Teindside. Also in 1708 his 'servitor' John Laidlaw had a child baptised in Hawick, with him as a witness; he is described there as 'of Arcleton In Harwood'. In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for James Grieve, tenant in Teindside. He also owned the land on which the Grammar School would be built from 1713, selling it to James Rodger of Cavers in 1722 (although whether this is a coincidence or connected with the Orrock Bequest is unclear). He is said to have fallen out with his father over wasting the price of a drove of cattle his father had given him to sell in England, and also because he brought back an English woman for a wife. He was left only £200 by his father, but he did not receive the money until 1714, following an extended legal battle. Arkleton went to his younger brother William, after he and his brother Arthur of Harwood were disinherited by their father. In 1700 in Hawick he married Ann Drury (with both being described as parishioners). 1700) and had 3 children who were christened in Hawick: Katherine (b.1701), who married Robert of Midlem Mill; Walter (1705–bef. 1721); and Anne (b.1707). He may also have been father of Isobell (b.1704) and Thomas (b.1717), also baptised in Hawick. In the 1707 baptism he is recorded as 'of Arkleton at Harwood-on-Teviot' and the witnesses were Gideon Scott of Falnash and William of Arkleton (his brother). Adam in Dykeraw (17th/18th C.) younger son of Adam, who was associated with Mosspeeble and Lymiecleuch. He may be the Adam 'in Lymiecleuch' who witnessed a baptism for 'Wester' James Grieve in Commonsides in 1705 and another for James Veitch, blacksmith in Falnash Mill, in 1707. His children included: Robert in Know, who married Helen Grieve; John in Harden; Adam in Tweedside, who married Isobel Glendinning; and William in Millburnholm. Adam (18th C.) tenant in Dykeraw. According to a family history he was younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. However, this might be confusion with Adam in Dykeraw son of Adam of Lymiecleuch. Adam of Arkleton (b.1702) eldest son of William and Anne Ainslie, he was baptised in Ewes Parish. In 1722 he was confirmed in his father's testament as his oldest son. In 1725 he was forced by his father's cousin William of Thorlieshope to sell Meikledale in order to pay debts. In 1744 he disposed of Arkleton to his eldest son

William, reserving liferent for himself and 600 merks a year for his wife. In 1733 he married Christina, daughter of William Elliot of Thorlieshope. Their children were: Arthur (1734–42); William (1735–91), physician in Jedburgh; Anne (1736–42); Margaret (b.1737); Robert (1738–40); Walter (b.1740), died young; John (b.1742); and Christian (b.1744). Most of the family were baptised and buried at Ewes. He may have died in about 1744, when his son William of Arkleton had tutors appointed. Adam (17th/18th C.) descended from the Elliots of Thorlieshope (although the details seem unclear). He married a daughter of Christopher Irving, 'Kick-maleerie'. His children were: Christopher, who became a smuggler; George, described as 'a great pugilist'; and several daughters. He is included in a family tree given in the History of the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club in 1889; there it is said that his father William died when he was young and in 1725 he was forced by his father's cousin William of Thorlieshope to sell Meikledale. He was also said to have had a daughter who inherited Hartsgarth, Langhaugh, Greenholm and 'Redhaugh' and another daughter who married Adam Elliot and inherited Catlowdie in Cumberland. It is clear that this history is at least somewhat muddled. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is probably the merchant in Hawick who witnessed baptisms in 1718 (along with tailor James 'Bowwston') for candlemaker George Turnbull, in 1720 for merchant John Little, in 1722 for Robert Scoon in Branholtmtown (with Scoon witnessing a baptism for him on the same day), and in 1723 for wright Richard Turnbull. He married Margaret Boston (or 'Bowston') in Ashkirk Parish in 1713. Their children included: William (b.1714); Thomas (b.1717); Isobell (b.1719); Sarah (b.1721); Sarah (again, b.1722); and Elizabeth (b.1723). The witnesses in 1722 were Robert Scoon in Branholtmtown and merchant James Hardie. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Alison Hislop in Wilton in 1723. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Hart in Wilton in 1729. Adam (1715/6–60) son of William of Meikledale. He died at Hartside and is buried at Castleton Cemetery. He is likely to be related to the Adam who married Mary Pott, but these families seem confused. Adam (18th C.) son of Walter in Brugh and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He was tenant in Hartside, and was surely related to the earlier Adam, who died there in 1760. He married Mary Pott. Their son Walter (b.1762) was born in Castleton Parish and was probably the farmer and cooper at Dinlabyre. Helen, born to Adam and Mary Pott in Castleton in 1772, may also have been their child. Adam (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. According to a family pedigree he was 'in Tweedside', but this could have mean Tweedenside. He married Isabel Glendinning and had a daughter Helen, who married James Elliot. Adam (18th C.) younger son of Henry of Lodgegill. He was tenant in Flatt. He married Elisabeth, daughter of Henry in Sorbietrees and Christian Scott of Falnash. Their children included Christian (b.1761); Jean (b.1762); and Henry in Canonbie, who married Helen Little. Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Kirn dean in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he is related to other contemporary Elliots, or other Elliots connected with Kirn dean. Adam (d.1815) shoemaker in Hawick. He was the only known son of Robert and Elizabeth Scott from Doorpool, and perhaps grandson of Walter in Brugh. His wife Peggy Scott died in 1797; theirs is probably the 1760 marriage of Adam with Margaret Scott. Their children included: Robert (1761–1810); Walter (b.1766); James in Goldielands (b.1769), schoolmaster at Wilton; and Helen (b.1773), whose baptism was witnessed by John Elliot, tanner. He is probably the shoemaker Adam who witnessed the birth of William Elliot, son of Wilton schoolmaster James, in 1801; this was presumably his grandson. His death in Hawick is recorded in 1815, when he is clearly listed as father of James in Goldielands. Adam (1740–1804) younger son of William, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. He was a merchant in Danzig. He married Rose Leonardi and they had a daughter Charlotte, who inherited the estate of Pinnaclehill from her uncle Robert. He died on the Isle of Wight. Adam (18th/19th C.) said to be a printer in Hawick. His wife was Margaret Wilson and they had a son Adam born in Hawick in 1812. Adam (18th/19th C.) member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Adams. Adam (1765–1852) son of shepherd Ninian. He was a carter in Newcastleton. He married Margaret Little (1763–1851). Their children included: Ninian (1786–1800); Margaret (1795–1816); Esther (b.1797), who married Robert of Powisholm; and Adam (b.1806), mason. Adam (1774–94) oldest son of William of Arkleton. He was a Lieutenant in the 72nd Regiment of Foot and was said to be present at the taking of San Domingo (presumably modern Haiti). He died of wounds in the West Indies and was unmarried. Adam of Arkleton see Adam Scott-Elliot. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was probably son of James and Helen Elliot. He married Margaret Oliver and lived at 'Burntshields' (although it is unclear where this is). Their children included: Lizzy (b.1800); James (b.1801); Daniel (b.1803); Helen (b.1805); Isabella (b.1808); Jean (b.1811); Margaret (1813–16); and Jane (1813–36). Dr. Adam (b.1797) eldest son of James of Goldielands, former schoolmaster of Wilton. He was born in Wilton Parish and became a surgeon with the East India Company. He is probably the Adam who was a medical student at Edinburgh University 1813–18, receiving an M.D. in 1819. He was recorded at Goldielands in the 1837 electoral roll, and was listed there on the 1841 census. He was described as 'in Goldielands' in about 1850 when he was one of the men charged with arranging the 'Coutard Fund' for the poor in Hobkirk Parish, bequeathed by John and William Dalglish. In 1851 he was at Goldielands (listed as a former maritime surgeon with the H.E.I.C.), living with his sister Helen, cousin William, a shepherd and 3 servants. He was 'Dr. Elliott, Goldielands' when listed as an informant to the Ordnance Survey Name Books in about 1859. In 1861 he was listed as 'Graduate of the University of Edinburgh, Not practising recevg. compensation annually as Surgeon in the Ex Maritime Service of the Honl. E.I. Company., Farmer of 200 acres Employing 5 men'. He was still at Goldielands in 1868. He donated many items to the Museum in the 1860s, and was consequently made an honorary member of the Archaeological Society. Adam (b.c.1800) listed as a tailor in Newcastleton in 1841. He was then at about 28 Langholm Street, with a younger tailor, Henry, as well as Jean (perhaps his siblings) and young baker John. Probably the same Adam is still recorded as a tailor in Newcastleton in the 1860s. Adam (1806–89) son of Newcastleton carter Adam. He was a mason in Newcastleton on the 1841 and 1851 census and listed as a 'Feuar' on South Hermitage Street in 1861. He married Elizabeth Murray (1818–1901). He was blind by the 1881 census. Adam Scott (1807/8–99) born in Hawick Parish, son of miller William and Margaret Scott. Along with his parents and siblings he emigrated to Canada in 1816. He worked in farming and milling and built a saw and grist mill in Sullivan township. In 1858 he moved to Bruce County, Ontario, where he is credited as the founder of the settlement of Chesley. He married Janet Halliday and had a family of 10 children. Adam (1827–80) son of Robert in Powisholm, Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was living in Wilton Kirkstyle and working as a journeyman baker. He later was a bread and biscuit baker in Dumfries. He married Euphemia Oliver (b.1830) in Wilton in 1851. Their children included: Mary (b.1854), who probably died young; Esther (b.1856); Mary Oliver (b.1863); Euphemia Oliver (b.1866); and Margaret Law (b.1871). Adam (19th C.) resident of Slitrig Crescent. In 1861 he donated a heron to the Museum. Adam of Caverton (d.c.1900) brother of Col. William of Teviot Lodge and James of Mosstower. In 1901 his extensive natural history collection was presented to the Hawick Museum. This included mounted butterflies and moths, as well as stuffed mammals and birds. Adam (d.1938) said to be the last of the hand-frame knitters in Hawick when he died. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Brighous’ in 1662 among people who owed money to the deceased William Elliot of Harwood. Then she was ‘in Brighouce’, i.e. tenant farmer in the Liddel valley in 1665 in a record relating to William Elliot of Binks. Agnes (17th C.) recorded in the Town Book in June 1698, when she was said to be due £6 Scots. The reason is not given, but it was along with money due to the Burgh Officer for his Common Riding coat, and so it may be that this was a charge for providing refreshments or similar at the Common Riding that year. Agnes (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Wester Mill in 1749. She was fined by the Wilton Kirk Session for ‘fornication with James Elliot in Liddisdale’. Agnes ‘Little Auld Nany’ (d.1776) resident of Hawick whose death is recorded. Alexander (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-are in 1494/5. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1533 as husband to Isabel Murray. His wife assigned her lands in Kershop (in Ettrick Forest) to her ‘brother german’ Michael Scott (suggesting that she was a Scott, who first married a Murray, probably James). In 1539 his wife was ‘Esebell Scott’ when she discharged a loan from Michael Scott. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘Elwald’ in Borthwick was recorded in 1539 when accused (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) of stealing a large number of sheep belonging to the Elliots in Cranston. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Alexander Elwald’ in 1535 when his son William was one of a large group of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for a raid on Craik. Alexander (16th C.) witness in 1550 to a lease granted by the curators of the young James Crichton to his mother, Janet Beaton, wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (where it was witnessed). Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 along with Will in Adderstoneshiel, Will ‘of the Burnmouthis’ and 2 Croziers. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. He was probably associated with lands owned by Gledstains of that ilk. Alexander (16th C.) younger son of Gavin of Falnash. He is probably the Alexander ‘of Fallon’ (likely an error for ‘Falnash’) complained about by the English for a raid of 1589. Along with many of the same men he is ‘of Fallenesche’ later that same year for a raid on farms of the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’, when they are said to have slewn 2 men and taken 2 prisoners. He was listed in 1598/9 as brother of Archie of Muselee when a number of ‘brother, tenants and servants’ of William of Falnash were cited for reiving. Alexander ‘Mill’ (16th C.) resident of Priestthaugh. He was recorded in 1574 as being ‘alias Myll thair’, listed after ‘Law’s Jock’ in Priestthaugh, among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. It is unclear what his nickname meant or how he was related to other Elliots. Alexander (18th C.) from Southdean Parish. He married Christian Scott in 1766, announced in Southdean and Ancrum Parishes. They had children Betty (b.1766) and Jean (b.1769). Alexander Kynynmound (1754–78) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet, and brother of Gilbert, the 1st Earl of Minto. He served with the East India Company and died (unmarried) of fever while on a mission to Nagport. Alexander (b.1809) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John. He was a shoemaker on the High Street. He was a shoemaker journeyman living at 48 High Street on the 1841 census and 23 High Street in 1851 and 1861. He married Mary Tait (b.1806) in Cavers Parish in 1833. Their children included: Rachel (b.1836); John (b.1838); William (b.1838); David (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); Margaret (b.1847); Walter (b.1849); Mary (b.1854); and Agnes (b.1857). Alexander ‘Sandy’ (19th/20th C.) shoemaker of Wilton. He had a shop on Victoria Road, which for a long time was thatched, and later became the property of John Rae. He was connected with Allars Kirk and was also well-known for having a family of 17! He could be the same as the High Street shoemaker. Alexandra Pringle 'Zandra' nee Hogg (1940–2014) born in Hawick, she worked in the office of Pringle's after leaving school, but quickly became a model for the company. She married builder Ian in 1962, and after his death ran the firm of J. & R. Elliot on Commercial Road. She was elected Chair of the Community Council in 1999. She was Honorary Provost 2003–05 and was voted Citizen of the Year in 2005. She became a Scottish Borders Councillor in 2007 and was voted in as Honorary Provost again, serving until early 2011. A new bandstand was erected in her memory in the Park in 2015. Alison (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Her name appears to be written 'alisaun Ilwand' and she was probably related to John and Margaret, who are also listed. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 to the sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh. Other witnesses were Ninian, Robert, William and John 'Elwald', as well as others. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew 'Dand the Man' (15th/16th C.) son of William, recorded in 1502, along with his brother 'Hob the King'. Patrick Gray from Greenhead, James Elliot in 'Quhitmere' and Ralph Ker of Primside Loch had a respite for helping them, specifically in the theft of 180 sheep from Tweeddale and Lauderdale. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1516 as witness to a document for George Ker prebendary of Auld Roxburgh, done at Fairnilee. Perhaps the same Andrew acted as a bailie for Margaret Haliburton and George Ker in Faldonside in 1539/40. Andrew (d.1531) recorded as 'Elwald' when he was hanged for theft along with Patrick 'Dowglass' and David 'Blyn-skale', as given in Pitcairn's 'Criminal Trials'. It is unclear which area this involved, or how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as 'Andree Elwald' when he and others held the lease on Braidlie on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1544 as agent in Sekirk for Margaret Haliburton, Lady of Dirleton. He was probably the same man as (or closely related to) the Andrew who purchased a tenement in Selkirk in 1579. Andrew 'Dand' (d.bef. 1564) third son of Gavin, 1st Laird of Horsleyhill. He was involved in the murder of Hugh Douglas in about 1547. His father gave him the lands of Bailielee in 1551. He was dead in 1563/4 when there was a case before the Privy Council involving his brothers William and Robert, and sheep that had been stolen from his lands by the Scotts of Tushielaw. He is referred to as 'umquhile Andro, alias Dand Elliot' when his brother Robert in Horsleyhill appeared on his behalf and the Scotts of Tushielaw were ordered to replace the stolen sheep. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. His name is recorded as 'Dande Elliot' and he may have been related to Will, Jock and Hob, other Elliots also listed as tenants. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) recorded as 'callit of the Heuchhous' in 1576/7 when he was convicted for theft, including stealing 80 sheep from the Laird of Cessford. He was surely related to the slightly earlier Martin of the same location and the slightly later Hob. His son John is mentioned in 1579/80. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as 'Andro Elliot, callit the Wowaris Andro' in 1578/9, when it was stated to the Privy Council that he was supposed to have been presented to the King and his Regent, but had not been. This was along with John 'callit of the Dewisleis', with sureties John Carmichael, younger of that ilk and William Scott of Montbenger. It is unclear what his nickname meant (perhaps his father was 'the Wooer'). Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1579 when he purchased a tenement in Selkirk. He is also recorded in 1579/80 as Burgess of Selkirk in a dispute with another Burgess, John Watson. In 1581 he loaned money to William Hogg in Melrose, receiving an annual rent of tenements in Melrose. He was a Burgess in 1581 when he was asked for the key to Selkirk Tolbooth. Also in 1581 he loaned money to John Murray in Lindean. Andrew 'Dandie' (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie. He was recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. It is unclear who his father was, and whether he is the same as one of the contemporary Andrews. The 'Dand Elliot of Braydley' complained about in 1590 (about a raid in 1588) is either him or his cousin Andrew (son of Martin of Braidlie). In 1590 he was recorded as 'Dande Elliott brother's son to said Martinge' on a list of Elliots (including Martin's sons Airchie and John), Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of 'Allerweshe'. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) son of Clement's Hob. He is listed in 1581 among many Elliots and Armstrongs complaining about the actions of the Scotts and their followers. It is possible that he is the same man as one of the contemporary Andrews. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He is easily confused with his cousin, who was nephew of Martin, and sometimes also just called 'of Braidlie'. He is probably the 'Dand of Braidley' listed along with Clement's Hob when 'Archie Kene' was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He is probably the 'Dand of Braidley' whose son Hob is recorded in 1574 when he was to remain in ward. Martin complained to the Privy Council in 1581 of an attack on him and his brother Hob while they were riding near Headshaw. The pair were attacked by Walter Scott of Headshaw and others, with one of them losing a hand and the other also being injured. His son Hob was warded in Edinburgh in 1580. He was probably 'Dand Elliott of Braidley, fugitive' listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580 (but his name occurs after 4 sons of Martin of Braidlie, so perhaps this was a brother or some different man). He was also listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583, his name appearing as 'Dand Elliot of the Brandley', along with 'John Elliot of the same'. He is probably the 'Dand Elliot of Braydley' recorded in 1590 when there was a complaint by Englishmen about a raid made on their livestock in 1588. He is probably the 'Martin's Dande' listed in 1590 along with Will of the Steele and other Elliots and Armstrongs, accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. He is also 'Martins Dande' when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of 'Trogwen' and Hedley of 'the Garret sheills'. He is probably the 'Dand of Braidley' listed along with Clement's Hob when 'Archie Kene' was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He is probably the 'Dand of Braidley' whose son Hob is recorded in 1574 when he was to remain in ward. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 as 'younger, in Borthuikmanis' when he was a fugitive from trial. Presumably his father was also Andrew from Borthwick Mains. Andrew of Blackhall (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was presumably from Blackhall in Ewesdale, since other Elliots of Ewes were also listed. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) brother of Hob of Bowholm. He was recorded in 1590 when he, his brother Robert and 'Willie's Airchie' of Stitchillhill were accused of stealing from Englishman Richard Thurlwall. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew 'Dand', 'Dandie', 'Sweet Milk' (16th C.) recorded in 1598 when there were complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and 'slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray'; in a court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch's agent denied responsibility for him and his crimes. His nickname was given as 'Sweet Milk'. He was probably related to Hob (recorded in 1569) and Gib (recorded in 1586/7), who shared the same nickname. It seems likely he was related to the slightly later William who was also called 'Sweet Milk' and whose death is supposed to have been the inspiration for the song 'Rattlin Roarin Willie'. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Wower's Andro' in 1605. His son Jock was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Dandie of Bowholmes'. In 1611 his brother Will was listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh; however, he was acquitted of the charges. Andrew of Philhope (17th C.) possibly son of Archibald. After the restoration of the monarchy in 1662 he was fined £1,000. Andrew of Meikledale (d.1682) eldest son of Adam of Meikledale with his 2nd wife, Janet Scott. He succeeded to Meikledale on the death of his father, but died himself later in the same year. The lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope then went to his 'brother german' William. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as Treasurer of the Burgh of Selkirk in 1676. He gave a discharge to Thomas in Borthwickshiels (who may have been related) for some payments. Perhaps the same Andrew, maltman and Burgess of Selkirk, was deceased in 1683 when his wife Agnes Scott had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as 'sone to Langsyde' in 1677 when there was a petition to grant him freedom of the Burgh of Selkirk. Andrew 'Dand' (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Craig. He married 'Beatie' Wilson and their children included Thomas (b.1684) and Helen (b.1689). Probably the same 'Dand' had a daughter Elizabeth baptised in Robertson in 1681, with no mother's name given and witnesses John Hardie and Walter Elliot (who may have been related). Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1719 and 1720. He probably succeeded

Robert Chisholme. Andrew (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Thomas in Oakwood Mill and grandson of Thomas of Bewlie. His brothers were Thomas of Oakwood Mill and William of Wolfelee. He could be the Andrew recorded in a legal claim in Selkirk in 1736. He firstly married Agnes Shortreed and their children were: Thomas (b.1727), probably died in infancy; James (b.1728); Margaret (b.1730); Jean (b.1732); Agnes (b.1734), probably died young; and Thomas (again, b.1736). All of his children were baptised in Selkirk Parish. He secondly married Mary Simpson and their children were: Agnes (b.1746); Margaret, who married David Hagie and also Thomas Hay, both from Kirkcaldy; and Charles (1748–bef. 90), who was a Burgess of Selkirk and bookseller in Edinburgh. Andrew (1728–97) 3rd son of the 2nd Lord Minto. He was named after his grandfather, Sir Andrew Kerr of Cavers Carre. It was said that his father was a strict disciplinarian and when he once complained that he disliked boiled mutton his father said ‘Let Mr Andrew have boiled mutton for breakfast, boiled mutton for dinner, and boiled mutton for supper, till he has learned to like it’. In 1746 he sailed for America, setting up as a merchant in Philadelphia. He returned to Scotland in 1761, but returned to America 2 years later when appointed Collector of Customs for New York. He was there during the American Revolution, although he fled when the city was taken, but returned as Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of New York when it was reoccupied by the British. After independence was declared he returned to Scotland and purchased Greenwells in Bowden Parish. He also had a house in George Square in Edinburgh. In America he married Eleanor McCall and later Elizabeth Plumstead (whom George Washington was enamoured with, according to family tradition) and had 9 children (including Capt. John, William and Andrew). He died at his brother John’s house at Monteviot and was buried at Minto. Andrew (18th C.) groom and house servant at Woll in 1794, when he was working for Charles Scott. Perhaps the same Andrew was recorded as a servant to Rev. Thomas Sharp when he witnessed a baptism for John Lamb in Hawick in about 1789 and another for Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth in Hawick in 1789. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded at Teindside Burn in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Andrew (b.1771/2)

joiner in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 16 South Hermitage Street, living with Helen and Thomas (probably his children) and Thomas Simpson (probably a grandson). Andrew (1772–1850) blacksmith in Newcastleton. He is recorded as such in the 1841 census, probably at about 8 Doncaster Street. He married Janet (or Jane) Wilson and she died in 1851, aged 74. They had a son, John (1834/5–1907), who married Elizabeth Scott. They are buried at Ettleton. Andrew (1787–1866) farmer at Twislehope, son of John, who also farmed there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He was farmer there in 1841 and in 1861 was farming 2300 acres and employed 3 people. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He married Eliza Armstrong and their children included: Agnes (b.1835); John (b.1836), who emigrated to New Zealand and Canada; Janet (b.1838); Walter (1840–99), whose family emigrated to Canada after his death; Eliza Murray (b.1843), who died unmarried; Robert (1845–1918), who emigrated to New Zealand; Archibald (1847–1900), emigrated to Canada; Margaret (b.1847), twin of Archibald, who regularly corresponded with her nephews in New Zealand; Andrew (b.1849), emigrated to America; Mary (b.1849); and Thomas (1852–1906). Andrew (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish. He was listed at Mount in 1851 and was based at Stobs Limery in the 1850s. By 1861 he was farming 186 acres and employing 3 people at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was still recorded at Boosmill in 1868. He married Janet Thomson in 1843 and they had a son James (b.1844). He was probably the ‘Elliot of Twisselhope’ listed among local ‘Hard-riding Dick’s’ in H.H. Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865). Andrew (1844/5–1930) born in Castleton Parish, son of Thomas and Hannah Storey. He firstly married Agnes Telfer, who died in 1880, aged 29. He secondly married Margaret (1851–1940), daughter of shepherd William Glendinning. Their children were: Thomas (b.1883); Helen (b.1885); Hannah (b.1886); John (b.1889); Mary Jane (b.1891); Maggie (b.1892); and Bessie (b.1895). He is buried at Ettleton along with his wives and 4 children. Andrew (d.1961) married Elizabeth Ekron. His wife Elizabeth (b.1876) was daughter of John Ekron and Agnes Carruthers. Their children included John Burns, who married Margaret Butler. Anna Mary (19th/20th C.) daughter of Thomas of Redheugh and sister of Robert. Her brother inherited Redheugh, but died in 1915. In 1918 she sold Redheugh to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. She was described as a widow at that time. Anthony of the Binks (16th/17th C.) probably eldest son of William of the Binks. He was 'Anthony of the benks' in 1590, when accused along with James of the Hill, James 'Half Lug', Hobbie 'the Tailor' and 60 others, of raiding 'Windgates', taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. He is mentioned in 1590/1 being 'of the Benkis' and 'brother-son of Martine'; this suggests he was a nephew of Martin of Braidlie, while the standard genealogy makes him a grand-nephew. He was 'Anthony of the Benks' in 1596 when there was a complaint that he and others (including Will Elliot of the Steele and Geordie Simpson) had raided lands in England at King Water. He was described as 'Antone Elliott in Rouchlie' in 1622 when he was on a Jedburgh jury with his brother Simon. His forename is uncommon among Elliot and so probably came from his mother's family. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1529/30 as brother of Gavin. With Gavin, along with Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh and Ninian Armstrong, he pledged to bring Robert Elliot 'Flaskvod' to Fairnilee to answer for crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. He must have been a prominent Liddesdale Elliot of the time, but it is unclear where he resided. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman 'John Makrobyn' was killed. He was listed along with brothers Adie and Ingram, who may have been related to him. He may be the same as Archibald of Gorrenberry. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as 'Archibald Aillat, vicar of Kassilltone' in 1557 when he wrote a bond involving Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It is thus possible that he was a relative of the Elliot Chief. He must have been one of the last priests in Castleton before the Reformation. Archibald 'Airchie' 1st Laird of Falnash (d.bef. 1566) third son of Robert, 13th Chief (who was probably killed at Flodden). His brothers were Robert of Redheugh, perhaps Martin of Braidlie and probably John of Copshaw. He was probably the Archibald, brother of Robert of Redheugh who served as surety for William, James and Simon 'Elwald' in 1537/8; he was also one of the Elliot sureties for several Croziers, that they would not harm John Gledstains of that ilk. In 1541 he was designated 'of Gorrenberrie', and was probably the Archibald 'Elwald' who was tenant of 'Gorrumbarry' on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was probably the Archibald, uncle of 'Robert Elwand, sone to Robyne of the Redhwych' who signed a bond to enter prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst in 1546 (and then had to have the notary help him sign). In bonds for re-entry of the same men he was recorded as of 'Northows' (i.e. Northhouse) in 1547 and 'of Gorranberry' in 1548. He is also probably the Archibald (along with Robert of Redheugh and William of Larriston) who had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner in 1548. In 1554 he was 'in Gorinberry' when he was granted an acre of arable land in Spittal-on-Rule ('Harparhill') and the advowson of the chapel at Caerlenrig; he there signed 'with my hand at the pen' led by the notary. In the following letter of reversion he agreed to hold the land and patronage of the chapel for 13 years for 86 pounds Scots. He was probably the 'Arche Elwald' who, along with 'Robyn' (probably of Thorlieshope) went 'to lord Maxwell at Gedforthe' to seek pardon for the English rebels that they were resetting. He had a Crown charter for Falnash in 1556. In about 1557 he and Simon Scott of 'Fernelil' rented Bowanhill and 'Grangia alias Stanyhetoun' from Melrose Abbey; he was there listed as 'Arche Elliot of Gorumberry'. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders and later that year appeared before a Justice Court to answer for his tenants. As 'Arche Elliot of the Fawnyche' he signed a bond in 1561/2 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst to enter Thomas Routledge as a prisoner (the other Elliots were his son and heir Gavin, John of Copshaw and 'Elder Will'); he may thus have been serving as Captain of Hermitage Castle. In 1562 he had another bond, along with his son Gavin, to enter John, son of Mungo Routledge to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. His wife's name is not known. He had 3 children: Gavin of Falnash, who succeeded by at least 1566; William, 'Archie's Will', of Gorrenberry; and Robert, 'Archie's Hob'. In 1647 his great-great-grandson Archibald was served heir to his lands, thus confirming the succession over 5 generations. His descendants held Falnash until about 1675. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Dinlees. He may be the same as Archibald of Falnash. Archibald 'Airchie' of Thorlieshope (16th C.) said in 1541 to be one of the main ringleaders of the Elliots of Liddesdale who were raiding into England. He was specifically believed to be responsible for the 'burnynge of William Carnabyes corne at Halton'; he was referred to as 'brother and son to Robert Ellwald of Thorryshope'. Sir John Heron led a party of men from Tynedale who burned 'the saide Arche Elwodes house' at 'Thirleshope'. In 1557 probably the same man rented, along with Scott of Synton, the lands of Southdeanrig and Cauldcleuch, from Melrose Abbey; he is there recorded as 'Arche Elot of Thirlishoup'. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) younger son of Gavin of Horsleyhill and brother of the next Laird, William. He is recorded as 'Arche' in 1564, along with William of Horsleyhill, Robert and Gavin, and other Elliots and Scotts, tried for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He was acquitted, along with Gavin, partly because he was a 'puer' (i.e. a boy under 16 at the time). In 1596/7 he was witness to a sasine and was there described as brother of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He may be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald 'Airchie Keen' (16th C.) one of 10 Liddesdale rieviers captured in Hawick in October 1567 and afterwards held in Edinburgh tolbooth. In 1569 he was pledge for himself 'and the haill branche of Gorrumberry'. Also in 1569 he and 'Clement's Hob' escaped from imprisonment in the Castle of Doune. Also in 1569 he is listed being held in Blackness Castle as pledge for Clement's Hob and 'Dand of Braidley'. In 1578/9 it was restated that Walter Scott, younger of Tushielaw had pledged to the Privy Council that he been entered into ward in Castle Doune (in Monteith); since this did not happen, then his cautioner was fined. He is probably the same as 'Archie Keene' in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs, published about 1594 (but prepared much earlier) under the heading 'Gorumberie'. It is possible that he was a younger son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1561 renting the farm of Corrie Sike for 17 years from Gledstains of Cocklaw. The transcription of his surname is uncertain, but is given as 'Willat'. He is recorded more clearly as 'Arche Elliott in Corresik' in the bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569 by several Elliots, Scotts and others; the Laird of Gledstains there served as surety for him for 1000 merks. In 1569 the Privy Council ruled that Gledstains was liable for the £1000 when he failed to appear and additionally Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme became surety for him. Archibald 'Airchie', 'Possets' (16th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae. He was recorded in 1574 as 'Archie Elliot callit Possettis in Quheittilbray' among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. He is probably related to some of the other Elliots of the Priestthaugh area who are also named in 1574, particularly James 'Dobson', who was also in Whitehillbrae. It is unclear what his nickname meant (but perhaps the hot drink). He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 when it was stated to the Privy Council that Martin of Braidlie and Robert of Redheugh had already entered him in ward with George Ramsay of Dalhousie. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds (but not 'Archie Kene', who is listed separately). Archibald 'Archie' (16th C.) listed in 1578/9 as 'sone to Ringanis Wil' when John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him (and others) not to raid into England. He was also recorded in 1579 as 'Archie Elliot, sone to Ringanis Will the portar', when he was among the 'Armstrangis of the Gyngillis and thair complices' who gave in to the demands of Lord Maxwell and agreed to end the feud between the Elliots of Ewesdale and the Armstrongs. His name was also given as 'sone to Ringanis Will Elliot the portar in Glenvoren'. He appeared personally before the Lord's of Secret Council later in 1579 and hence John Carmichael was relieved from his surety. From his name he was presumably son of Will and grandson of Ringan; this could be Ninian the same man as the 'porter' of Ewesdoors. He may be the 'Arche Elliot at Ellis Durris' (probably 'Ewis' mistranscribed) listed in 1586 among 'principallis of the brokin men of the west marche' in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. It is possible he is the same man as 'Will's Airchie' recorded a little later. Archibald 'Archie' (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie. He was recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote. It is unclear who his father was. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald (d.bef. 1583) tenant in Dodrig. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged. He farmed at Dodrig from about 1547, and built a house there; 'he hes peceablie bruikit and josit thrie quarteris of the landis of Dodrig, pertening to the chaipplanrie of the parochie kirk of Caveris, as kyndlie tennentis thair of'. In 1583 his son Robert complained that men sent by Robert Elliot of Redheugh had attacked the workers on the farm. Archibald

(16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between James in Yair and John Gray in Lindean. He was probably related to James, as well as Thomas, who were both in Yair at the same time. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1581. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as brother of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between James McDougall of Makerstoun and Gavin Elliot of Bailielee (later of Stobs). His brother Gavin also witnessed the same transaction (and may have been Gavin of Brugh). He was also listed as one of the brothers of Robert of Redheugh according to a 1583 letter from the English wardens; he is listed separately from Archie 'Fyre the Braes', but it is unclear if he was the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. He may be the same as Archibald, son of Robert, 15th of Reidheugh. Archibald 'Fyre the Braes' of the Shaws (16th C.) listed in 1569 along with his brother 'Hob of the Schawis', when John of Thorlieshope was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. It is possible that all 3 men were brothers. He is also recorded as 'Arche Elliot' in an 1583 letter from Musgrave to Burleigh, Queen Elizabeth's Chancellor. He was probably a close relative of Robert of Redheugh, since his name appears shortly after the Laird's brothers. In 1584 he was listed among the Elliots of Thorlieshope, giving assurances to the English Wardens for the following year; there he is 'Arche Elliot called Fyrebreaies'. He was recorded as 'Arche Elliott of the Shawes called 'Fye the braes'' in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He is also recorded on Monipennie's c.1594 list of Border chiefs, where he is appears as Arthur and is listed beside Rob of Thorlieshope. He could be the brother of Robert of Redheugh listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He could also be the same as Archibald of Thorlieshope, recorded in 1557. Archibald of the Park (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. Others listed there are Hob of the Park and John of the Park. He was also listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes. His name appears after 'James Rowe of the Park', who was probably 'Jamie's Rowe' and possibly his brother. He is probably the 'Arche Elliot, called Symmis Arche' listed as one of the cautioners for 'Symmis Rowie' and others in 1581 and 1582/3; this would make him son of Simon of the Park. His name comes first among those giving assurance for the Elliots of Park in the 1584 bond signed with the English Wardens at Hermitage. He is presumably not the same as 'young Archie of the Park' recorded in 1599. Archibald 'Airchie o the Hill' (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 when it was stated to the Privy Council that Martin of Braidlie and Robert of Redheugh had previously entered him in ward with George Ramsay of Dalhousie, but he escaped. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds (but not 'Archie Kene', who is listed separately in 1578/9). He was also listed as one of the Elliots accused in 1581 of stealing cattle and goods from James Foster of 'Symwhaite'. In 1581 William Turnbull in Bonchester was declared a rebel after failing to appear to answer the charge of stealing a horse from him. He was further listed in 1583 as 'Arche of Hill', when listed among the Elliots of the Burnhead branch; Jock of the Hill is also listed. He was probably from Liddesdale, although it is unclear where his seat was. He signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with several Elliots of Ramsiegill, making it clear he was closely related to them. In 1586 his master Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. In 1587/8 he was accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond for 'Willie's Hob' in 1587. There was a complaint by Leonard Corbet of the Orchard that (along with Archie 'Dog Pintle' and Archie's 2 brothers) he had stolen 12 cows, 2 horses and £100 of goods, and burned 4 houses. In 1587/8 he was recorded being held in ward (by the Laird of Lochleven) as part of an attempt to quell unrest on the Border; however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He is listed in 1590 among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott's of Carrick; James of the Hill is also listed, as well as a Crozier, Douglas, Laidlaw and Henderson. Also in 1590 he, his brother James, Martin Crozier and others were accused of rieving from 'Borne' in Redesdale. Furthermore, in 1590 he was accused, along with several Croziers, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbells, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Trogghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'. In 1590/1 he listed among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. In 1591 he was accused of leading a group of men to plunder from Jeffrey Tailor and stole livestock and goods from the tenants of Scaleby; others included his brother James and his nephew Jock. Probably the same man signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599, along with 'Willie's Archie', 'Cull with the Shaid' and 'Jock o the Hill' (possibly his son). In 1602 he was among a group of mostly Armstrongs who killed a shepherd at Hallrule and stole about 120 sheep; his son Mark was also listed. He was probably related to 'Joanni de lie Hill', who is recorded in 1541. He may be the 'Archie Elliot of the Hill, callit Gleyit Archie' who was acquitted of crimes in Jedburgh in 1611. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) servant to James Kerr, son of the Laird of Greenhead. In 1586 his master was instructed to enter him and another servant into court. Archibald 'Will's Airchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 among a large number of Elliots and others accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585. Others listed include Hob of Burnhead, Hob of Ramsiegill, Airchie o the hill, Jamie's Geordie and Reid Martin of Heuchhouse, which may be clues to his family connections. It is possible he is the same man as the Airchie son of 'Ringan's Will' recorded in the 1570s or the 'Will's Airchie' of Stichillhill recorded in the 1590s. Archibald (16th C.) brother of Will, tenant in Dodburn. In 1586, along with his brother, he was accused of 'a great strough at the Eschelles in England', with William of Falnash standing as surety for them. In 1602 the Crown was still trying to recover the penalties for him, Will and their brother Sim. They all 'has become at his Majesty's will' in a court held at Jedburgh. Archibald 'the Flail' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'callit the Flail', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Archibald (16th C.) tenant in Westcoterig. He is recorded as 'Archie Elliot of Westercot' in 1590 in a case where Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Walter Scott of Goldielands were ordered to enter certain of their tenants to answer some English complaints. Archie in Doecleuch was also listed and hence a separate man; however, he may be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald of Muselee (16th/17th C.) son of Gavin of Falnash and brother of William of Falnash. He was mentioned several times regarding raids on England. In 1587 he was named in relation to compensation for raids, the issue being raised with the Earl of Bothwell, Keeper of Liddesdale. His elder brother William, along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, was guarantor for his payment. In 1586/7 he was 'in Muselit' under the Laird of Chisholme (and hence presumably Chisholme's tenant) when he failed to find surety in relation to raids into England. In 1590/1 he was 'brother of Will of Fallinesche' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. Additionally his brother Will and Walter Chisholme of that Ilk were also ordered to present him to the court. In 1598/9 he is 'Archie Elliott of Mouslie' listed among the 'brothers, tenants and servants of Will of Fallinesche'; his brother Alexander is also listed, as well as 'Stottan Gib' and his brother John, who may also have been his own brothers. Probably the same Archibald 'of Mewslie' is recorded in 1628 in proceedings of the Privy Council. He was stated to be a 'notorious thief and fugitive', who was 'committed to waird within the pitt of Cavers', but escaped and fled to England. However, he was recaptured and imprisoned in Jedburgh. He could be the same as the earlier Archibald of Muselee. Archibald 'Airchie' of Ramsiegill (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) listed along with 'Hob's Davie' of Ewesless and many other Elliots in 1590. They were accused by a group of Englishmen of taking 8 horses and well as prisoners that they ransomed. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is listed as 'alias Ibells Arche' (and separately as 'Ibbels Arche'), but it is unclear if this was 'Abell's' or 'Isobel's' or something else. Archibald 'Willie's Airchie' of Stichillhill (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he, Robert Elliot of Bowholm and his son Dand were accused of stealing from Englishman Richard Thurlwall. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) described as 'young Archie of the Park' in 1599 when he was one of a large number of Liddesdale Elliots to sign bonds with Scott of Buccleuch. He may have been a son of Jock of the Park or Robin. The Archibald of the Park recorded in 1581 is presumably too old to be the same man. Archibald (16th/17th C.) younger son of William of Falnash. He was mentioned in complaints about 2 raids into England in 1595, along with Wat Scott of Harden and several Elliots, including his brother Robert and uncle Gilbert. Archibald 'Dog Pintle' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for 2 raids into England. There were also explicit complaints by John Hetherston of 'the Cairns' that he had stolen 20 cows, and by Leonard Corbet of the Orchard that (along with his 2 brothers and other Elliots) he had stolen 12 cows, 2 horses and £100 of goods, and burned 4 houses. He is recorded as 'Arche Elliott called dogpyntle' and 'Arche Elliott alias doge pintle', and he was brother of George 'Buggerback'. Other Elliots named along with him include those of the Hill and of Bowholm. His nickname was clearly not complimentary. Archibald of Clintwood (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie. He is referred to as 'Martin's Arche of Clintwood'. He is listed in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Gavin and Hobbie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscot; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. He was also among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He is probably the 'Arche Elliot', brother of Gavin and Hobbie (and probably Simon) who was listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. He may be the 'Archie Elliot' who, along with Gibbie (perhaps his brother) was accused of a raid into England in 1587. He was also 'Arche Elliott of Clyntwood called Martins Arche' when accused of being on a raid on the tenants of Featherstonehaugh in 1587; William of Hartsgarth was also there, as well as 160 others, and it is claimed that they burned 23 houses and took 3 prisoners. In 1588 he was among several Elliots and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid. He is 'Martin's Arche' in 1590 when, along with his brother Gib and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Also in 1590 he was 'Martin's Arche' when, along with Will of Heuchhouse he was accused of rieving from 'Haldiden'. In the same year he may be the Martin's Airchie accused of further rieving along with Hob of Bowhome and William 'Rydlie'. He was probably the son of Martin recorded in 1590 along with his brother John, as well as 'Martin's Gib' and Martin of Prickinghaugh, when they were accused of stealing from Englishman Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall. Additionally he was accused in 1590 of taking cattle and goods from 'Stealie' and was 'Martin's Arche', who, along with 'Martin's Dande' and other Elliots and Armstrongs, was accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. Also in 1590 he was first on a list of men, including James ('Martin's man'), the elder and younger Will of the Steele, Airchie 'Cowfowle' and 2 shiels, accused of stealing from 'Dotland'. He was further accused in 1590 at the head of a list of Elliots and others said to have stolen from the 'Hewrde' family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher 'of the Whithall'. He could be the 'Arche Elliott' further listed along with elder Will of the Steele, 'Lang' John and Martin's Gib 'the cousin' in 1590, accused of rieving from the tenants of 'Greinridge'. Also in 1590 he was explicitly recorded as son of Martin on a list of Elliots (including his brother John and cousin Dand), Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of 'Allerweshe'. He is 'Arche Elliott of Clentwood' listed in 1590 among Armstrongs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. In 1590/1 he was 'called Marten's Archie' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. He is on a list of Elliots (including his father Martin and brother Hob) accused of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year. He may be the Archie who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He was referred to as 'Archy Elliot called Martins Arche' in 1597 in an English letter listing Scotsmen who had reset English fugitives. Also in 1597 he is 'Arche Elliott son to Martin' among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges and he was warded in Carlisle Castle. His son William is listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. In 1597 Lord Evers describes him as 'Arche the son of Martin a great rider'. In 1611 he acted as cautioner in Jedburgh for 'Andro Armestrang, called the Lord', as well as 'Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie'. He was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. In 1613 he was a witness to the infetment of Robert of Redheugh in his lands. In 1615 he was banished from the Kingdoms of England and Scotland, and no more is known about him. He had at least one child, William, who was imprisoned in York Castle in 1598 at age 12, with Scott of Buccleuch appealing for his release. It is possible that either he or a son was 'Archie Ellote in Clintoun' who was accused along with Middlemases and others of harassing and attacking George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers. Archibald 'Burnt Hand'

(16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 among defendants in cases brought by the English Wardens involving raids by men of Liddesdale. His name is given as 'Arche Elliott 'brunt hand''. Presumably he had an injured hand. Archibald of Merry Naze (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598 when there were complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and 'slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray'. He was 'of Mirrieneis', and other Elliots listed were William of Falnash and Dandie 'Sweet Milk'. It is possible he was the same man as Archibald of Muselee (given that the Elliots of Falnash also held Merry Naze). In a court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch's agent denied responsibility for him and his crimes. Archibald 'Airchie' of Thorlieshope (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Thorlieshope Elliots. Archibald 'Airchie', 'Blackheid' (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. He may have been related to Jock and William, who had the same nickname. Archibald 'Airchie' of Brugh (d.bef. 1621) eldest son of Gavin, the first Elliot of Brugh. He may be the 'Archie Elliott of Dogcleuch' recorded in 1588/9 in relation to a payment for the release of 'Vicar's Hob' from Edinburgh Tolbooth. He was 'Archie Elliot of Dokcleuch, the said Sir Walter's man' recorded in a Privy Council case related to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1590; also in 1590 he was mentioned in a case where Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Walter Scott of Goldielands were ordered to enter certain of their tenants to answer some English complaints. He was probably the Archie 'of the Dobcleuch' (i.e. Doeceleuch) who signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch along with Gavin of Brugh in 1599. He is also mentioned in 1621 (after his death) having previously loaned money to Chisholme of that Ilk (probably the family of his mother). His brother Gilbert succeeded to the estate. Note that he is sometimes confused with a later Archibald (who died at the Battle of Dunbar in 1650). Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) tenant in Foulshiels. In 1611 George Pringle in Newhall was cautioner for him in court in Jedburgh. In the same year John Ainslie, Burgess of Jedburgh was cautioner for his son John. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) eldest son of William 'called of Cowshaw' (possibly Copshaw), recorded in 1617. Along with his father and 2 other men, he was arrested for stealing sheep and held in Jedburgh Jail. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'of Bowholme' in 1623 when he and Gilbert Eliott of Craigend were cautioners for Will 'in Hiesches'. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'in Burnclughsyde' in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners' Court in Jedburgh. Archibald (17th C.) possessor of the farm of 'Overraw' (i.e. Upper Raw) in Castleton Parish in 1632. Archibald of Arkleton (17th C.) son of John and Ester Armstrong, he was grandson of William of Falnash. He is mentioned in 1623 and was served heir to his father in 1631. In 1626 he was described as 'Archibald son of the late John Elliot of Arkleton'. Nothing else appears to be known about him. Archibald of Brugh (d.1650) eldest lawful son of Gilbert of Brugh. In 1648 he received a 'precept clare constant' from William Eliott of Stobs (as heir to his grandfather Gavin of Brugh) of the 10 merk lands of Over and Nether Dodburn and 'Brandsyde Bray'. He was Corporal in John Rutherford of Edgerston's troop, fighting for the King in the Civil War. There is a record in 1642 from him 'for a sufficient horseman and arms for the haill lands of Edgerston'. He died at the Battle of Dunbar, when Rutherford's troop was essentially wiped out. His wife's name is not recorded. His children were: John, who farmed at Southfield; Gavin, mentioned in 1665 as brother of John; and Gilbert in Carlops, also mentioned in 1665. Note that he is sometimes confused with his uncle Archibald. Archibald of Philhope (17th C.) made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1642. It is unclear what branch of the Elliots he was from. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1646 (although incorrectly written 'Scott' in the manuscript version), probably again in 1648 (when the place is transcribed 'Phillone') and in 1649. He appears to have married Elizabeth Chisholme, who was widow of Simon of Philhope. In 1644 he and his wife were granted half the lands of Philhope from his step-daughter Grizell. There is some confusion over his wives, since later he was certainly married to Marion Nichol; in 1651 she was granted 8 bolls of grain yearly during her lifetime in the will of Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed first under the 'communicants' at Philhope in 1650, followed by 'Maly Nicoll' (presumably his wife), then Helen and Maly Elliot (probably his daughters) and 8 others (likely to be farm workers). He was also recorded in 1663

when his eldest son William married Margaret of the Binks. Andrew of Philhope, recorded in 1662, may have been another son. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Johnstone in 1656. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Fisher in Melrose in 1649. Their children included: Gilbert (b.1650); William (b.1652); Gavin (b.1658); and George (b.1661). The witnesses in 1652 were William ...and Gavin 'Ellot' (who was probably a relative) and in 1661 were Gilbert (likely another relative) and George Scott. It is possible he is the same man as Archibald of Middlestead, younger son of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartens', with is brothers including Gavin of Grange and Midlem Mill and Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh. Archibald of Falnash (d.bef. 1675) succeeded his father Robert, since his elder brother William had died. He was 'younger of Falnash' at the time of his sister Jean's sasine in 1637. He is probably the 'young Falnash' mentioned in the song 'Rattlin Roarin Willie', who (along with Gilbert Elliott of Stobs) apprehended William Henderson for the murder of William Elliot. In 1647 he was served heir to his father's lands of Falnash and his 10 merk lands of Hislop (in the Barony of Hawick and Regality of Drumlanrig), as well as his 5 merk land of Langhaugh. In the same year he was separately served heir to his great-great-grandfather Archibald's lands of Falnash, 'Cawsya' and 'Tandilnes' (probably Tanlaw Naze). James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry then exercised his right of reversion of Broadlee, Langhaugh and Hislop, paying 10,500 merks for them in 1650. In 1644, 1646 and 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Elliot of Falnash who paid the land tax in 1663; the lands redeemed by Queensberry from 'Ffalmash' were valued at £716, and he separately paid tax on £360. In 1667 he paid 9,000 merks to Francis Scott for what was effectively a mortgage on Falnash, and almost immediately sold the property to Gavin of Caerlenrig, his brother. Before 1645 he married Esther Scott (probably a daughter of 'Auld Wat o Harden') and by 1660 secondly married Isobel Scott (who died by 1668). His children probably included: Archibald, who succeeded and may have married a widow of Gledstains of that Ilk; Grizell (b.1642), born in Hawick Parish; and Robert (b.1645), also born in Hawick Parish. Archibald 'Superior of Falnash' (17th C.) elder son of Archibald. He succeeded to the estate in 1675, this including

'Cawsya' and Tanlaw Naze as well as Falnash itself. He probably married a widow of Gledstains (perhaps William of that Ilk), since Walter Gledstains is mentioned as his son in 1677. He probably had no male children, since the Lairdship went to his cousin Ninian. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as being 'in Middlester, (Midlem-mill)' in the 1643 valuation for Castleton Parish. His lands were valued at £36. He was transcribed as 'in Midlesteed' in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, and hence the earlier record perhaps was an error for Middlestead. He was recorded among local landowners of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He may have been Archibald of Middlestead, son of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins'. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Bowanhill on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may have been father of the later tenant of Bowanhill. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he is recorded paying for the use of the mortcloth. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1697 he married Helen 'Broun' (or perhaps 'Burn'). Their children included: Robert (b.1704); and Francis (b.1706). Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is surely related to (or the same as) the slightly later Archibald in Minto. Archibald (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Brown and their children included: William (b.1704) and Francis (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were weavers James Wight and John Swan and in 1706 were Bailies Walter Graham and George Martin. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is probably the resident of Minto who married Helen Gray in Hawick in 1706. His children included: William (b.1707); Margaret (b.1710); James (b.1712); Archibald (b.1715); Archibald (again, b.1719); John (b.1721); Archibald (again, b.1723); Marion (b.1726); and Helen (b.1729). It is possible that these are children of more than one family, since no mother's name is listed. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Horsleyhill. In 1710 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray in Whitlaw. He may be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald (1679/80-1757) recorded at Bowanhill in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism for James Veitch in Falnash Mill. In 1722 he was recorded as farmer at Bowanhill (near Teviothead), renting from the Duke of Buccleuch. The following year he rented half of the farm, with James Elliot in the other half (probably a close relative). He re-leased the lands in 1744. He was surely related to the Archibald recorded at Bowanhill in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for Robert 'Hutson' at Blackcleugh in 1741. His wife was Christian Elliot (c.1692–1779). Their children included: Archibald (b.1717/8), who succeeded as tenant of Bowanhill; Thomas (1722/3–1791), who died at Bowanhill; Walter (1726–1813), who died at Binks; John (b.1729); and Isabel (b.1731). His grandson John died at Falnashburnfoot in 1832, aged 72. Archibald (18th C.) smith in Bewlie in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Archibald (1717/8–1812) son of Archibald, he succeeded to the tenancy of Bowanhill. He is listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 2 farm horses. He also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs there in 1797. He is probably the Archibald of Henderson's whose son Walter was born in 1791. He lived to be 94 and was buried at Teviothead. Archibald (18th C.) cotter at Falnash. He married Margaret Scott and their son Robert was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1740. The witnesses were Walter Scott at Commonsides and Walter Jackson at Falnash. Archibald 'Archie' (18th C.) dyker in the Hawick area. One year in the earlier part of the 18th century he was hired by the tenant of Fenwick to build a dyke that was inside the bounds of Hawick Common. At the Common Riding the riders accosted him and brought him in; he was arrested and had to give a bond for £100 Scots as a promise not to do so again. This was described by George Richardson in 1767. Archibald (18th C.) born in Robertson Parish, he lived at Boonraw. In 1759 he married Elizabeth Cunningham, who was also from Wilton Parish. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1759); Jean (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); John (b.1767); and Alexander (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Scott and Thomas Reid. Archibald (d.1803) weaver in Hawick, son of William. He married Janet Aitkin in 1760 and she died in 1805. Their children included: Mary (b.1761); Helen (b.1769); William (d.1805); and Robert (d.1775). He may be the son of William and Margaret Balmer born in Hawick in 1729. He could be the Archibald who witnessed a baptism for wig-maker Robert Miles in 1766. Archibald (1761–1823) son of Archibald, a carrier from Ancrum. He became an architect along with his younger brother James. They designed some of the most imposing late 18th century and early 19th century houses in Scotland. His designs included Stobo Castle, Calton Prison (Edinburgh), Midlothian County Hall (Edinburgh), Penielheugh monument, Jethart Castle Jail and renovations at Minto House and the Haining. He married Sarah Shiells, and they had a son Archibald, who was also an architect. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Wilson. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1782. The witnesses were Charles Scott at Commonsides and Thomas Grieve. He could be the Archibald living at Bowanhill who in 1791 witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell in Commonsides. Archibald (18th/19th C.) son of Robert from Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. He was recorded as a labourer at Harwood in the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. It is unclear if he was related to the Elliots of Harwood. Archibald (b.1800) son of John, he was born at Bowanhill in Cavers Parish. In 1825 he married Isabel, daughter of Thomas Oliver and Christina Elliot. Their children included: John (b.1827); Thomas (b.1828); and Kitty (1830–1902). In about 1830 he emigrated with his family to Delaware County, New York. There 4 more children were born: Walter (1832–1907); Margaret (1835–1901); William (b.1837); and Elizabeth. Archibald (b.c.1795) stockingmaker in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. In 1841 he was living on Brougham Place. His wife was Euphemia (or Euphan), and their children included: Janet (b.c.821); Margaret (b.c.1827); Mary (b.1829); Peter (b.c.1832); Isabel (b.c.1834); and Euphan (b.c.1837). Archibald (1847–1900) son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. He had a twin sister, Margaret, who lived in Newcastle. He married Margaret Scott and emigrated to Canada. Their children were Andrew, John, Helen (who married Wallace Hood), Eliza, Agnes (married a Dunlop), Isabella (who married Robert Laidlaw) and Marianne (who married John Hobson). Arthur of Harwood (d.1698) son of Walter of Arkleton and grandson of Adam of Meikledale. His lands were at Harwood-on-Teviot, for which he received a Crown Charter in 1698 (shortly before his death). He married Anne Disney and they had a daughter (his heiress), Margaret, who married William Elliot of Thorlieshope. Arthur (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Walter of Arkleton. It is said that after his father had fallen out with his older brother Adam, he refused to accept the family estate, and so the lands went to his younger brother, William. Arthur (18th C.) first schoolmaster at Caerlenrig, being appointed in 1755 and resigning 2 years later. Bramche of the Burnhead

(16th C.) recorded in the 1580s accusing Englishmen Thomas Carleton and 'Riche of the Moat' of stealing 200 cattle and 40 horses from Burnhead. It is unclear whether his name is a transcription error or a nickname of some sort. He must have been related to 'Hobbie' who was Laird of Burnhead only a few years earlier. Bruce started playing rugby at Denholm School, joining the P.S.A. at the age of 15, then the Harlequins and Y.M. He played full back for Hawick R.F.C., starting in the late 1960s and was part of the team that won the league title 5 times in a row in 1973–78. He also played sevens, sometimes as scrum-half. With his wife Isobel he had children Alistair and Tracy and they live at East Middle. Charles Edward (1693–1763) eldest son of Gilbert of Nethermill, who was a merchant in Hawick. It is likely that his grandfather was Robert of Larriston. Along with his (unnamed) brother, he is said to have taken part in the 1715 Jacobite rebellion and was wounded at Preston. He escaped to Holland, where he married a Dutch lady. He then worked for the Dutch East India Company, living for a while in Java (where his brother also lived) before settling in Essex (after he was no longer considered an outlaw in Britain). There he was appointed Searcher and Tidewaiter in H.M. Customs at Burnham-on-Crouch, where he also owned a mill. He had 12 children, although only 1 son (Charles, b.1752, who wrote his name 'Elliott' and became a wealthy cabinet-maker in London) and 2 daughters survived; the first 9 were born on Java and died young. Sir Charles Gilbert John Brydone (1810–95) 3rd son of Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto. He was Admiral of the Fleet 1870–73. He was recorded living at Bonjedward House in a directory of 1868. He firstly married Louisa, daughter of Sir Edward Blackett and secondly married Harriette Emily Liddell, daughter of the 1st Earl of Ravensworth. They had one surviving son, Bertram Charles. Rev. Charles, D.D. (b.1815) son of shepherd John, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1818 the family emigrated to America. By about 1840 he had moved to Easton, Pennsylvania, where he became a Presbyterian minister. He was Professor of Hebrew Language and New Testament Exegesis in Chicago. There are other ministers of the same name with whom he is easily confused. A portrait of him exists. Col. Charles (1824–88) son of James, the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He was Colonel in the Royal Artillery and died in London. In 1859 he married Christina, daughter of Sir Alexander Ramsay of Balmain, and

she died in 1873. In 1877 he secondly married Mary, daughter of Henry Davidson of Muirhouse. His children were Lieut. Walter, George Ramsay, Elizabeth Maule and Mabel. Charlotte 'Black Charlotte' (18th/19th C.) only daughter of Adam and grand-daughter of William, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. Her father was a merchant in Danzig, who married Rosa Leonardi there. She inherited the estate of Pinnaclehill near Kelso from her uncle Robert (who had tried to leave it to his nephew James, but the will was insufficiently stamped). Christopher 'Kirstie' (16th/17th C.) only known child of Robert, 'Martin's Hob of Prickenhaugh'. He is recorded in 1611 when he took part in a raid on Robsons in England. Later that year he was afterwards sentenced to banishment with his wife and children by the Jedburgh court. He is recorded as 'Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie' in 1611 when Robert of Redheugh and several others were cautioners for him and his wife. In 1618 he is recorded as a fugitive. He had at least one child, Robert. This is probably the Robert 'sone to Hobbeis Chrystie' recorded as a fugitive in 1642. Cornelius 'Auld Corrie' (1732–1821), W.S., 2nd Laird of Wolfelee, eldest son of William, the 1st Elliot Laird. He succeeded to the Lairdship after his older brother Thomas had died. He also followed in his father's legal business in Edinburgh's Lawnmarket, becoming Writer to the Signet. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761, when 'of Woollie junior'. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. He was also one of the trustees for Dr. Robert Langlands when he sold off his estate to satisfy creditors in about 1780. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. Also in 1780 he was the lawyer for the legal aspects of several new voters being added to the county roll after being granted liferent of lands by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto and others. He was himself on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is probably the Cornelius who purchased Barnhills from Matthew Stewart in 1780 (and appears to have sold it back). Also in 1780 he matriculated arms, proving descent from the Elliots of Horsleyhill. By 1788 his estate included Mackside, Broadhaugh, Blackcleughmouth, Catlee, Easter Swanshiel, Hartshaugh, Hartshaugh Mill and Wolfelee, as well as parts of Stonedge and Kilnknowe. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, privately described as probably a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot and also as 'Brother-in-law to Adam Ogilvie, factor to the Duke of

Buccleuch' (although that appears to be an error for another Elliot branch). He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in both 1805 and 1819, along with his son James. In 1811 he was listed as owner of 'Woollee', as well as Catlee, Catleeshaw, Easter Swanshiel, 'Shiel's Lands', part of Kirknowe, lands that were formerly part of Stonedge, Hartshaugh Mill, Broadhaugh, Mackside and Blackcleughmouth. In 1765 in Leith he married Margaret, daughter of James Rannie, and she died in 1796. They had at least 6 children: William (1766–1807), a Major who died in Vellore, Madras, and had his portrait painted by Raeburn; Mary (b.1767), who married Gen. Sir Thomas Dallas in Madrid, and in later life lived with her sister Margaret; Eleanor (or Eleanora), who married Robert Anderson, merchant in Leith; Margaret Jane, who was unmarried; James (1772–1855), who succeeded; and Janet Hyndford, who married Sir John Gibson-Carmichael of Castlecraig and later John, 12th Lord Elphinstone from Edinburgh. He lived in Queen Street, Edinburgh, but also held several country residences. His will is in the Peebles Commissary Court Records in 1823. Cuthbert (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1560. His wife Christine Robertson, widow of John Hogg of Corsehill in Bowden, gave lands to his daughter Bess Hogg, with 'Vatte Elwand' also being named. David (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5 to answer for their crimes. It is unclear which William was his father, but William (also son of William) was probably his brother. David (16th C.) recorded as witness in Selkirk in 1562. David (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of the steadings of 'Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss' in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. William and David Elliot are also listed. David (d.bef. 1570) son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He was a tenant in his father's lands of Caveling in Cavers Parish. In 1564 John Turnbull of Hassendeanbank accused him of stealing 80 sheep from his farm at Hassendeanbank. William of Horsleyhill and William Douglas of Cavers (proprietors of the lands of Caveling) were ordered to present him before the Privy Council. In 1567 he was given notice to remove himself as tenant from the 6 merk lands of Chamberlain Newton by George Turnbull of 'Wowlie'. He was probably the 'Dand Elliot of Cavilling' for whom John Edmonson of that ilk was cautioner in 1567/8 for him to remain in ward on this side of the Tweed. The Laird of Edmonson was also surety for him in 1569. A decree of removal was given against his widow Margaret Turnbull in 1570/1. In 1573 his widow was said to have encouraged her 2 sons, Walter and John Scott, to attack James Storie, who had been placed on the other half of the farm (sold by George Turnbull to Gavin Elliott of Bailielee and Stobs, who was coincidentally also from the Elliots of Horsleyhill). His wife must therefore have remarried to a Scott. David (16th C.) son of 'Elder Will'. Along with his brother Martin he signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, on behalf of their whole part of the clan. It seems likely they were closely related to the Elliots of Heuchhouse, but a different Martin from there, along with his brother John of Heuchhouse, were listed separately in 1584. David of Braidlie (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when his son Hob was released from ward, but promised to meet again to help suppress lawlessness on the Border. However, it is possible that 'David' is an error for 'Dand'. Probably the same man is recorded as 'Davie Elliot of Bracley' in 1584, when he was one of the signatories of the band of assurance with the English Wardens; he was one of 3 men to give surety for the Elliots of Gorrenberry, suggesting that 'Bracley' was an error for Braidlie. He is recorded being 'of Braidley' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. David (16th C.) listed as 'Davie Elliot of Hongrige' in 1584. Along with David of 'Bracley' (probably Braidlie) and Will of Mosspatrickhope, he gave assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. His designation is probably a misunderstanding of some sort, but it is unclear where he was from. David (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'in the Manis' among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may have lived at the Mains in Liddesdale. David 'Davie' of Dinlees (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when his son Adam was part of a group of Armstrongs and others accused of rieving. David 'Davie, 'the Carlin' (d.1598) probably a son of 'Elder Will'. He was listed in 1569 as 'David Carling his brother' along with Elder Will's eldest son, when 'Elder Will the Tod' was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for their behaviour. He is listed in 1574 along with his son, among Scots rebels who were reset in England. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584, along with Croziers, Armstrongs and about 300 others, accused of stealing 800 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men; he is there recorded as 'Davye Elliot called the Carlinge'. He was also recorded in 1588, when James Dagleish and Nichol Brydon (from the Edinburgh area) were convicted of helping bring in him and his accomplices to steal cattle. This took place in 1588, the accomplices being 'Hob Billie' Elliot and 2 Armstrongs, suggesting they were from Liddesdale. He was 'Davye the Carlinge' among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England in 1589. His son 'Eddie Elliott' (probably Adam) was listed among Borderers complained about for another raid on a farm in England in 1589 and further recorded in 1590, among Elliots accused of a raid. He was 'Davie the Carlinge' listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbells, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'. In 1590/1 he was 'called the Carling' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. He may be the David who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1598 he was 'Davyd Elliott alias Carlyne' who killed William Ogle on a raid in Gilsland, and was in turn killed by a group of Ogles and Shaftoes. David 'Hob's Davie' of Eweslees (16th C.) presumably son of Robert. He is listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. His name appears as 'Hobs Davie of Dewes leases'. David (16th/17th C.) son of John of Bowholm. He was listed in 1605 among men of Liddesdale declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. David (17th C.) Treasurer of Selkirk in the 1650s and 1660s. He is probably the 'elder merchant burges of Selkirk' recorded in discharges for annual rent in 1666, 1668 and 1679. An undated account from him to the Burgh of Selkirk relates to the town coble and other matters. He may be the deceased David whose house rental is referred to in Selkirk in 1709. He was 'elder, merchant' in a deed of 1663, while his son was 'younger, burges of Selkirk'. His son David was witness to a discharge for him in 1664. David (17th/18th C.) merchant and Burgess in Selkirk. He is recorded as 'younger' in 1708, and hence probably son of the earlier David. Probably the same merchant David was recorded in Selkirk in 1723 and 1737. David (18th/19th C.) gardener at Borthwickbrae in 1797, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. Dorothea Helen

(d.1925) daughter of Sir Walter. In 1866 she married William Elliott-Lockhart, heir to the Lairdships of Borthwickbrae and Cleghorn. The marriage was held in Hobkirk Kirk, but officiated by her uncle, Rev. John Elliot-Bates, who was an English clergyman (this event causing much local consternation at the time). On the death of her brother Edward she became heir in line to the Elliots of Wolfelee, and also of Borthwickbrae, following her marriage to William Elliott-Lockhart in 1866. She was succeeded by her daughter Mary Charlotte Elliot-Lockhart of Cleghorn. Edmund (13th C.) recorded as 'Edmundus de Elaund' in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. He complained about the actions of 'Johanne de Crammelyngton' in the town of 'Corburg'. He could be an early member of the Elliot family. Edmund (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name is given as 'enmundi elwald'. Lt.-Col. Edmund James (1813-54) son of John Edmund. He was born in Calcutta and died at Varna, Bulgaria. He served with the 79th Regiment. He married Matilda Inglis. Their son Edmund Halbert was born posthumously and baptised in Wilton in 1854. Edward Hay Mackenzie 6th Laird of Wolfelee (1852-1920) 3rd son of Sir Walter. He was born in Vizagapatam, Madras and came to Britain at age 3, growing up mainly in Ayrshire and Wigtownshire. He attended Harrow, where he excelled at sports. After leaving school he played for Harrow Chequers Football Club and then Wanderers F.C., where he was part of the team that won the first 2 F.A. Cups. In 1871 and 1872 he was selected to play for a Scottish side against England in what were only the 4th and 5th international matches, and the last not to be officially recognised. He tried unsuccessfully for the Indian Civil Service and spent 3 months in a commission with the Scottish Borders Militia, then became a Lieutenant with the 82nd Regiment from 1874-88 before transferring to the 40th Regiment, the South Lancashire Regiment, where he became a Major. He also served as Private Secretary to Lord Glasgow, serving under him in New Zealand. He succeeded his eldest brother James T.S. in 1892, another elder brother Walter Blair having died in 1869. He retired early, in 1899, to attend to the family estates. He served again in the Boer War (going there at his own expense), but was invalided home, and lived for a while in London. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and a Vice-President of Rulewater

Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. In 1905 he married Edith Margaret, daughter of John Charles Crawford, minister of Canehill, Couldson, Surrey. On the couple's home-coming to Wolfelee after the wedding a huge bonfire was litten on Wolfelee Hill. He made his home more permanently at Wolfelee about 1908, but sold the estate in 1912 (to Sir Robert Laidlaw) and died without issue. The heir of the line then became his sister, Dorothea Helen. He died at Middlesex Hospital, Marylebone, but it is unclear where he was buried. Elizabeth (16th C.) married Robert Waugh in Ashkirk. She became a widow and secondly married John 'Wynterhop' (i.e. Winthrope) according to a marriage contract of 1580. This was a double arrangement, where her daughter Janet Waugh was also to marry Robert, eldest son of John Winthrope. Additionally the young couple were to live 'in houshold' with her and her new husband, being servants to them, but inheriting their lands and property when they died. Her son James Waugh was also to live with them until he reached the age of majority. The contract, witnessed in Selkirk, also contained a brief list of her property, including livestock and grain from Ashkirk and annual rent on a tenement in Selkirk. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (16th/17th C.) wife of John in Redden, 'callit Johnne of Rynsiegill', a riever who was caught plundering from a Hawick Burgess in 1610, and imprisoned in the church steeple, where he apparently hanged himself, leaving her with 'ffyve fatherless bairns'. Elizabeth (17th/18th C.) daughter of Henry of Harwood. She married Robert of Midlem Mill and they had 1 son and 8 daughters. After her husband's death in 1724 the lands of Midlem Mill were sold and she moved to Berwick with 3 of her daughters. They had a small income, which they supplemented by 'washing and dressing cambrics'. Elizabeth 'Betty' (d.1811) teacher in Hawick. Her death record states she was 'Late Schoolmistress', but it is unclear where her school was. Esmond (1895–1917) full name Gavin William Esmond, he was son of the 4th Earl of Minto and elder brother of the 5th Earl. He was a Lieutenant in the Scots Guards in WWI, was killed at Ypres and is commemorated at Mendinghem Military Cemetery. His sister, Lady Violet Astor gave money to establish a memorial ward at the Cottage Hospital, which was opened by the Prince of Wales in 1924. The face of the Minto War Memorial statue (by Thomas J. Clapperton) is supposed to have been modelled on his. Esther (d.1664) younger daughter of the last Robert of Redheugh. In 1653

she married Alexander Clerk, Minister of Lether-ton. Her father left her the lands of Leahaugh, Greenholm and Gullyflat. She died in Inverness, where she was buried. Here gravestone was engraved 'Here lies the bodie of ane pious and vertuous gentlewoman called Hester Elliot spouse to Master Alex. Clerk minister of Inverness and 2nd lawful daughter to the very honourable Robert Elliot of Larriston in Liddesdale and Lady Jane Stuart ...'. They had no children and her husband died in 1683. Frances Anna Maria 'Lady Elliot', 'Countess Russell', 'Fanny' (1815–98) 2nd daughter of Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto. She was born at Minto House, spent much of her youth there, then 2 years in Berlin with her family, before they moved to London in 1835. The leading Whig politician of the day, Lord John Russell proposed to her in 1840. He was a widower, 20 years older than her, and she refused. After persistence she changed her mind the following year and they were married, meaning she was step-mother to 6 children. She appears to have had a keen interest in political issues of the day. She is said to have disliked London life and missed her life in rural Scotland. Her husband was created Earl Russell in 1861 and finally retired from active politics in 1868. She had 4 children, including John (Lord Amberley) and Rollo, as well as several miscarriages. Lord Amberley died in 1876 and so her 2 grandsons, Frank and Bertrand (the philosopher) came to live with them; she probably had more influence on Bertrand than anyone else. Her husband died in 1878 and she survived him by 20 years, dying in their home at Pmbroke Lodge. Francis 'Copshaw' (16th/17th C.) accused of stealing 2 horses belonging to 'Jock Storrie in Lewin' and 'Antone of the Scub'. He was tried by the Commissioners' Court in 1622, cleared of the theft, but found guilty of reset and sentenced to be hanged. He was probably related to the John of Copshaw who was denounced as a rebel in 1607 and may be the brother of Robert of Copshaw who was listed among Elliots and Armstrongs declared as rebels in 1611 for illegally hunting and also failing to show up for a jury in 1612. He is probably also the Francis son of 'Thom of Copschaw' who was listed among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. Francis (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Rig and Jean Rutherford, heiress of Stobs. He was described as the eldest lawful son and heir of William 'called of Hartisheugh' in 1637 when he was served heir to his brother Robert. In 1642 he was served heir to his mother

Jean in the Mill of Edgerston, the lands of 'Rigg, Renshead, etc.' However, Robert Rutherford of Edgerston purchased these lands from him a few years later. It is said that his line became extinct, but it is also claimed that he might be the ancestor of the Elliots of Dinlabyre. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hogg and their children included: Francis (b.1671); and Gilbert (b.1675). Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Laing and their children included: Janet (b.1688). William (b.1707) could also be his child. Francis (17th C.) listed as resident at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. This was probably Tinnis Burnfoot. Francis (17th C.) resident at the farms of 'Gulenflatt & Greeholme' in Castleton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of 'Crackuooll' in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. In 1698 he is recorded as cottar in Kirkhouses. He married Bessie Stoddart in Robertson in 1681 and their children included: Isobel (b.1689); Francis (b.1692); and Thomas (b.1698). Francis (17th/18th C.) listed as tenant at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. This was probably the same place as Tinnis Burnfoot. Francis (17th/18th C.) listed as being 'in Hawick' in 1701 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter, who was Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick. He may thus have been related to Walter. Also in 1701 he witnessed a baptism for smith George Scott. He was probably the innkeeper who witnessed baptisms in 1702 for Bailie Walter Graham and in 1704 for merchant Adam Turnbull (who was at the Westport, suggesting that he himself lived in that area). Probably the same Francis was 'Vintner' in Hawick when he witnessed baptisms in 1704 for James Leithead and in 1706 for carrier David Minto. He was 'in Hawick' when he witnessed a baptism for James Scott 'Laird' in 1708 (his step-son James Scott 'Doctor' was also witness to a baptism for the same man). In 1709 he was recorded as a merchant in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Jasper Richardson. He could be the Francis whose son William was born in Hawick in 1707. He may be the Francis who witnessed a baptism (along with Bailie Walter) for merchant Walter in 1713. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptisms for weaver Robert Wight and for wright John Pringle in 1716. Perhaps the same Francis paid tax for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694 and was listed among the contributors to the Hawick

Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the Francis who acted as a cautioner in 1706 to James Scott and John Graham, when they were imprisoned and fined for being the main instigators in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year. Francis (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Bewlie and Borthwickbrae. He was apprenticed to merchant John Turnbull in Edinburgh in 1710. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Mervinslaw in 1721. His wife was Helen Anderson. Their son Walter was baptised in 1721, with witnesses Walter Scott and James Irvine. Francis of Fenwick (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Gavin of Caerlenrig. He bought Outer-siderig in 1719. He married Rachel Langlands (who was probably a cousin or other relative of his brother Robert of Caerlenrig's wife Agnes Langlands). They had 2 sons: Robert, Burgess of Galasgow, who married Jean Scott and Catherine Elliot from Arkleton; and William, about whom nothing is known. He may also have had a daughter Rachel who married Walter Scott of Howcleuch and Wauchope. Francis (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isobel Murray, and their children included: Helen (b.1741); Ann (b.1746); Isabel (b.1751); Jean (b.1754); and John (b.1756). Francis (18th C.) resident at Harwood on Teviot, brother of Thomas, who was also there. In 1740 he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for Robert Elliot, tenant in Slaidhills (who may also have been related to them). In 1746 he and Thomas (also at Harwood) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Reid at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). It is unclear how he and his brother Thomas were connected to other Elliots. Francis 'Frank' (1733–79) son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He was a skinner in Hawick. He is probably the Francis who in 1766, along with John (his brother), witnessed a baptism for merchant James Oliver and his wife Christian (their sister). He witnessed another baptism for merchant John Oliver and Christian (his sister) in 1772. He died unmarried. Francis (b.1758) resident of Robertson Parish, son of James and Margaret Scott. He was living at Eilrig in 1786 and Craikburn in 1788. In 1785 he married Mary Hislop (b.1754). Their children included: James (1786–1859); John (1788–1851); Margaret (c.1790–1859), who died on Albion Place; and William (1792–1861), who died in Hawick. Francis (b.c.1770s) recorded as apprentice to merchant John Nixon in the Lieutenantancy Book in 1799. He is probably the merchant also listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Francis (b.c.1800) from England, he was a farm labourer living at Ryeleahead in southern Castleton Parish in 1841. His wife was Betty and their children included Matthew, Walter, John, Helen and Katherine. Francis (1819–94) son of John, labourer and dyker at Parkhill. In 1851 he was a labourer at Parkhillhaugh. By 1861 he was a mason at Deanburnhaugh. He first married Christine Wintrup (1825–53) from Lilliesleaf in 1840; she died at Robertson Burnfoot. Their children were Andrew, James and Frank, who all died in infancy, as well as John (b.1841), Douglas (b.1843), Jane (b.1845) and Robert (b.1848). He secondly married Mary Burnet (1827–64) from Drumelzier, who died at Deanburnhaugh; they had Marion (1854–79), James Proctor (b.1857), born at Branhholme Town and perhaps Francis. He thirdly married Elizabeth Paterson (1832–98) in Hawick in 1870, and she died in Hawick. Their children were: William (b.1870); James (b.1871), blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge; and Francis (b.1874). He died at Damfoot and the family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Gabriel of the Park (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with John of the Park, as well as Elliots of the Steele, Thorlieshope and others, who were accused of raiding into England. Since ‘Gabriel’ is an unfamiliar first name, it may be that the English report confused the name. Gavin (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1526/7 as ‘Gavin Elwald’ the Earl of Bothwell’s Bailie in a document relating to the lands of Harden. Perhaps the same Gavin was witness to documents for Ker of Primside relating to the lands of Softlaw in 1530/1. Probably the same Gavin was recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for about 1532, marrying Margaret, daughter of Andrew ‘Makduell’ (i.e. McDougall) of Makerstoun; he received 200 merks from Andrew Ker in Primside and gave to Margaret his lands of ‘Toftlawe’ and ‘Boucherflat’ in the Barony of Hassendean. The same Gavin probably witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1534. Also in that year had a letter of reversion to William Scott regarding the lands of Nether Galalaw, with Thomas acting as his procurator. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots, but it is possible he was the same man as Gavin of Horsleyhill. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1529/30 as brother of Archibald. With Archibald, along with Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh and Ninian Armstrong, he pledged to bring Robert Elliot ‘Flaskvod’ to Fairnilee to answer for crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. He must have been a prominent Liddesdale Elliot of the time, but it is unclear where he resided. Gavin (16th C.)

recorded in 1543 in English documents as ‘Gawen Elwald Scotisman’. Along with a large group of other Elliots they attacked Over Howden in Lauderdale, taking a prisoner, along with 30 oxen and cows. He also led a group of Elliots who took 27 head of cattle, 40 sheep and other goods from the Laird of Cessford’s farm of Newton. He may be the same man as Gavin of Ramsiehill or Gavin of Horsleyhill. Gavin of Ramsiehill (d.c.1563) chief of a branch of the Elliots of Liddesdale, with the seat being near Riccarton. The connection between this branch and other branches is unknown. In 1563 he and others from Liddesdale entered into a bond with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in William Nixon ‘Grey Will of the Kyll Fuir’. Later in 1563 his son ‘Jock Elliot’ was subject of a bond by Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie, to enter him before Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, in which he is described as deceased. The Gavin of Ramsiehill recorded soon afterwards was presumably another son. Gavin of Horsleyhill (d.bef. 1562) probably a grandson of William of Larriston, who married the daughter and heiress of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. However, the names of his mother and father are not known. In 1543 he is ‘of Hoslaw hill’ when he was involved in a transaction with Ninian Cranston over a place called ‘Schawes’ in Ettrick Forest. In about 1547 he and his 3 sons, Robert, William and Andrew, were charged with killing Hugh Douglas; no details of this event are known. He was one of the signatories of the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551, when he was a tenant in Horsleyhill. Also in 1551 he purchased Bailielee (in Selkirkshire) and Caveling (in Cavers Parish) from Gilbert Ker of Primside. He was granted a Charter by Lord Home in 1555, making him 1st Laird of Horsleyhill, as well as other lands. He married twice, the name of his first wife being unknown and the second being a sister of McDougall of Makerstoun. Around the late 1550s there was a dispute over the lands of Newbigging (part of the Middle Mains of Hassendean) between his children by his first wife and those by his second wife. This was resolved through a panel consisting of Gilbert Ker of Primside, David Turnbull of Wauchope, William Elliot in Larriston (probably a relative) and Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He had 6 sons: Robert, 2nd Laird; William, who later became the 5th Laird; Andrew, also called ‘Dan’; David, tenant at Caveling; Gavin, who was the first of the family to own Stobs; and Archibald (possibly ‘Archie Keen’). Note that the family name was often spelled ‘Ellot’ at that time.

He may be the same as 'Gilbert of Horsliehill' (perhaps an error in transcription) who witnessed the marriage contract between William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murray, 'Muckle Mou'd Meg', in 1544. He may be the Gavin who in 1534 sold the 40-shilling lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott of Hassendean, with Thomas acting as his procurator. He was already deceased in 1561/2 when his son Robert was involved with a land transaction in Selkirk. Gavin (16th C.) brother of Archie's Will. He is listed in 1561 among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of thieves. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Gavins. Gavin (d.1565) 3rd Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert, who was executed only a year before he died. He was succeeded by his brother William. In 1564 he was 'Gawine Elliot, sone to umquhile Robert Elliot of Horsliehill' who was heritable owner of part of the lands of Caveling; his 'fadir bruther' (i.e. uncle) and tutor at that time was William in Horsleyhill. He may be the 'Gawane' who was listed along with William of Horsleyhill, Robert and Archibald (as well as other Elliots and Scotts) in the trial over the murder of David Scott of Hassendean in 1564, for which he was acquitted along with Archibald. He may be the 'Guidman of Horsliehill' listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he was listed along with William of Larriston and 'Gavin's Willie' of Falnash in a follow-up of the same case of the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He may be the 'Gawine Elliot of Hosliehill' who was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme as one of the men who owed him for the teinds for several years earlier; if so then he probably owned Skelfhill and Peelbrae. However, this could well be Gavin Eliott of Stobs, since it is hard to separate these nearly contemporary Gavins. Gavin in Skelfhill (see Gavin Eliott of Stobs). Gavin of Ramsiegill (16th C.) possibly son of the previous Gavin. He was one of the 10 Liddesdale thieves held in Edinburgh tolbooth after being captured in Hawick in 1567. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond for 'Willie's Hob' in 1587. 'Hob Elliot of the Ramsigill' is also listed, so they must have been either brothers or father and son. Also in the 1580s, along with John of Heuchhouse he accused a band of Englishmen from raiding his lands. His seat was probably somewhere near Riccarton. Gavin of Hoscote (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1579/80 of committing raids into England. He was 'Gawen Elliot of Hostcoit', accused along with Robert of Redheugh and Walter Scott of Harden of a raid on Coquet Water. William of Hoscote was also among those listed, and hence it is unclear which of the two was the Laird at the time, or whether they were the same men as other Elliots, with other designations. Gavin 2nd Laird of Falnash (d.c.1584) son of Archibald. He appears to have avoided being involved in many disputes, which is unusual for the time. He is listed in 1561 (as brother of Archie's Will) among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of thieves. He is among Elliots who had a bond in 1561/2 with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, to enter Thomas Routledge into prison at Ferniehirst (the others were his father Archie of Falnash, John of Copshaw and 'Elder Will'). In a bond of 1562 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst he is described as 'of the Merynes' (i.e. 'Merry Naze'). He is first recorded as Laird of Falnash in 1566 in an altercation with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig 'concerning violent profits from certain lands'. In 1569 he signed a bond of security in Hawick, with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch acting as surety for him; he is recorded as 'Gawin Elliot in Fallinesche' and 14 tenants of his are also listed. When he failed to appear in 1569, Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. He was to be sent to St. Andrews as a pledge, with Will of Gorrenberry, Gavin Eliott of Skelfhill (later of Stobs) and Sim of Dodburn designated as his relief pledges. Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He was entered into ward in St. Andrews in 1573. In 1575 he was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council to resolve the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. He was listed in 1576 among local Lairds who acted jointly as sureties for Hob Elliot, 'Mirk Hob' in Penchrise as well as 'Vicar's Hob' Elliot, pledging that they would refrain from theft, but in default of the pledge by 1578/9. In 1583/4 he was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. He was dead by the end of 1584. He had at least 4 children: William, who succeeded; Archibald of Muselee; Gilbert; and Alexander 'of Fallon'. In 1598/9 there were complaints against brothers, tenants and servants of William of Falnash, including 'Stottan Gib' and his brother John and Archie of Muselee and his brother Alexander; they may all have been his sons. Gavin 'Scot's Hob's Gavin' (16th C.) son of 'Scottis Hob', hence his father was clearly Robert, and he was related to the Elliots of Park.

In 1578 there was a dispute between John Cunningham of Glengarnock, who had held him as a pledge for about three years, and John Hamilton of Stonehouse, who was supposed to receive him, but let him go. He was listed in 1578 among pledges who were to meet again to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1580 he was among a number of Borderers held in Blackness Castle and presented to the Privy Council by their keeper, Malcolm Douglas of Mains. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for several crimes of theft, along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. In 1581 Martin of Braidlie and others were cautioned for his not appearing and fined in 1582/3; he is recorded there as 'Scottis Hobbis Gawin' and 'Hobbis Jok' was one of the cautioners, who may have been his brother. He is 'Scotes Hobbe' when recorded among the Elliots of Park in 1583. Gavin (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He is listed in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Hobbie and Archie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscode; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. They were also implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He is probably the 'Gowan Elliot called the clarke' listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. It is unclear why his nickname should be the 'Clerk' (perhaps jocularly for cleric, scholar or scribe). It is possible he was the 'Gawine Elliott of []' (with the designation blank) listed first in 1590 among other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. Gavin of Swinstead (16th C.) recorded 'in Swinsteis' in 1576 when he was 'surety found not to molest' with the Privy Council. He was also recorded as 'sometime in Newbigging, and now in Swinsteis' in 1578/9; presumably he was also the Gavin in Newbigging recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574. He was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. However, he was among the sureties who swore that they had earlier presented 'Adie of the Schawis'. He was also listed similarly in 1581, among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was also listed in 1583/4 among Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council to discuss keeping peace on the Border, where he is recorded as 'Gawin Elliot of Swinsteidis'. It seems probable he was the same man as Gavin of Brugh, brother of Robert of Redheugh, who held the lands of Swinstead (and not the same as the contemporary son of Martin of Braidlie or the Laird of Baillielie and Stobs). In 1581 he is probably the Gavin, listed along with William as brothers of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when they witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs (with Gavin of Baillielie, Robert of Redheugh and 2 tenants of Swinstead also acting as witnesses). Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is given as 'Wilcox' Gawen Elliott; it is unclear what this means, but one possibility is that he was 'Will Cock's Gavin', and perhaps son of Will who was related to 'Cock' Crozier. 'Wilkoke Elwald', recorded in 1541, could have been his father. Gavin 'John's Gavin' of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 when he was accused of cutting off the nose of Thomas Tweedie 'in Dunsyre'. A group of Armstrongs were separately charged. Robert Elliot, younger of Falnash, acted as cautioner for him. Given his nickname, his father was presumably John. He must have been related to Ninian, son of William of Fiddleton, who was executed in 1608. Gavin (d.1606/7) son of Gavin of Horsleyhill, see Gavin Elliott of Stobs. Gavin of Hillhouse (16th/17th C.) one of 3 men who were meant to have plotted the murder of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in a foiled plot of 1624, part of a feud between the Elliots and the Scotts. He was listed as 'Gawane Elliott of Hilhouse' and 'Gawine Elliott in Halhouse'. Gavin of Braidlie (16th/17th C.) younger son of William of Dinlabyre and Braidlie. He is probably the Gavin, brother of Robert 'of Drumlybyre' who was denounced as a rebel in 1611, along with several other Elliots and Armstrongs, for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. Gavin (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'of Coklek' in 1611 when Robert of Falnash was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. Gavin (d.bef. 1618) described as 'Gawane Elliott in Hassindeane Burne' in 1619 when his wife Helen Elliot raised an action to try Hector Turnbull in Clarilaw for his murder. Their children Gavin, Samuel and Elizabeth are also mentioned. Gilbert, son of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, appeared on their behalf (and so may have been a relative). Gavin of Brugh (d.bef. 1631) youngest son of Robert of Redheugh and Jean Scott, and brother of Robert the 16th chief. He was probably raised partly by his step-father, Gavin Elliott of Stobs. He may be the Gavin, who, along with his brother Archibald (brother of Robert of Redheugh) in 1581 witnessed a transaction between Gavin of Bailielee (later of Stobs) and James McDougall of Makerstoun. He may be the 'Gawan Elliot his brother' recorded along with Robert of Redheugh and other Elliots in 1583. He is 'of Brugh' when he witnessed a deed in 1597 and is recorded as 'in the Burgh' in 1599 when he had a bond with the Laird of Buccleuch. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. He was among Elliots who raided into England in 1603 and later had remission for this crime. In 1612 he complained to the Privy Council about being attacked by servants of Douglas of Cavers, specifically that William Douglas of Whitriggs and others confronted his family and servants on their way home from the Kirk, 'threw thame af thair horssis, pullit thame in myris, struck them with horse wands about thair lugeis and upoun thair face', and violently took his sons sword; however, the men were acquitted. He helped his nephew Robert of Redheugh in his dipute with Buccleuch, thus putting himself in debt. In 1621 Robert granted him Over and Nether Dodburn and Branhholmebrae, as well as discharging him from all previous bonds. In 1625 he was one of the men who broke out of Selkirk jail (the others being Robert Scott of Thirlestane, George Davidson of Kames, Thomas Little of Meikledale and John 'Skaillis'). He married Margaret Chisholme (who may have been a daughter of Chisholme of that Ilk) and they had 4 children: Archibald, who died before him; Gilbert, who succeeded; Robert, mentioned in 1621; and William, who became Provost of Peebles. However, the first couple of generations of this family are quite uncertain, and it has been suggested that 2 of his sons were illegitimate. He was certainly the first of the Elliots of Brugh, a family that was well represented in the Hawick area for at least the next 200 years. In 1631 his widow sold Over and Nether Dodburn and Branhholmebrae to William Eliott, younger of Stobs. Gavin (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'of the Schawis' in 1611 when William of Falnash was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. He was further 'callit of ye Schawis' in 1623; Rowie Foster stole sheep from 'Callshiels' owned by him and John Nixon in Lawshill. He was probably related to the earlier Elliots of Shaws. Gavin (17th C.) recorded as possessor of the lands of Burnmouth, Over Heuchhouse, Nether Hightrees, Dyke, Kilford and Byrestead in 1632. Given the lands

he owned, he was probably of some significance among local Elliots. Perhaps the same Gavin is recorded in the same 1632 document as joint tenant, along with John Scott, of the lands of Over and Nether 'Closse alias Welshaw' in Liddesdale. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Bessie Veitch. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1635. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Marion Elliot. Their daughter Marion was baptised in 1636. as Gavin of Caerlenrig, who had a daughter Mary. Gavin of Caerlenrig (17th C.), 4th son of Robert of Falnash. He was mentioned as early as 1635, when he witnessed the marriage of his brother William. He had a charter of Caerlenrig from Sir Gilbert of Stobs in 1668. In about 1668 he purchased Falnash from his brother Archibald, and settled it on his son Ninian. He was 'in Carlenrick rige' in 1678 when he paid the land tax in Cavers Parish. He was ancestor of the Elliots of Caerlenrig. He married Janet Elliot by 1655 and their children included: Ninian, who succeeded as Laird of Falnash; Robert 'of Carlenrickrig' (b.1655), baptised in Hawick Parish; Francis of Fenwick; and Mary. Rev. Gavin (d.bef. 1678) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1645, he became minister at Kirkton in 1652. However, he was deprived in 1662 (for refusing to conform to Episcopacy), and forced to leave not only his manse, but the bounds of the Presbytery. His sons were Robert and William both 'in Borthwickbrae'. He was presumably related to the Elliots of Horsleyhill, Borthwickbrae, Borthwickshiels, etc., but the precise relationship is unclear. The name of his wife and date of his death are both unknown. Gavin of Outerside Rig (17th C.) recorded in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. Ninian of Eweslees was his grandfather, and appointed his guardian. His brothers were William of Unthank and James in Harwood. In 1662 he was among a long list of men fined and given a pardon by the King after the Restoration. In 1678 he paid the land tax for lands in Wilton Parish valued at £360. Gavin (17th C.) described as 'in Stob' in 1668 when his son Gilbert became a baker's apprentice in Edinburgh. This is unlikely to have been the same man as Gavin Eliott of Grange, since his son Gilbert was the 1st Lord Minto. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in 1673 as 'collector of customs and excise at Surone (Sowrone)' when he had 3 separate bonds. This may have been 'Souden', i.e. Southdean. Gavin 4th Laird of Midlem Mill (1727–86) eldest surviving son of Robert and Katherine Elliot. He was born in Old Langholm Castle. He left a sort of diary in the family bible.

He was educated at Hawick Grammar School and then went to college in Edinburgh for 3 years, lived at Midlem Mill for 18 months and moved to London in 1743. There he joined the counting house of Alexander Coutts, before sailing to Virginia in 1745 where he opened a store. Returning to Britain in 1747, he lived in London and then in 1752 moved to Danzig as a clerk with Gibson & Hogg. He succeeded his father in 1753, but there was a large debt owed to Col. William of Wells, and the family estate was sold by the trustees in about 1756. He subsequently lived in London. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Anna Catharine Clemens in Danzig in 1758 (and he received a large dowry). They had 7 children, including Robert (who died aged 11), Catherine Elizabeth (who married Rev. William Lance), Helena Constantia (who died young), Clemens (also died young), Anna Renata (who married Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, and received money in the will of her relative William, son of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), Gilbert (died aged 12) and William (the only surviving son, who became Rector of Simonburn). He died in London and was buried in Greenwich Church. Gavin of Fenwick (18th C.) last Elliot of Fenwick. He was son of Robert and Katherine, daughter of William of Arkleton. He may have also had a brother James, for whom he witnessed a baptism in 1758. In a pedigree of 1811 (by J.W. Henderson) he is said to have lived with 'a loose woman' and had a son (who went abroad in about 1796 and died), as well as several daughters. He eventually acknowledged her as his wife, in England, so his children could succeed to Arkleton. Gavin (b.c.1800) born in Channelkirk, Berwickshire, he was a stockingmaker in Denholm. In 1841 and 1851 he was probably on Sunnyside and in 1861 was on Westside. He married Isabella Best, from Cavers and their children included: Agnes (b.1824), baptised in Minto; Jane (or Jeany, b.1826), baptised in Cavers; and Henry (b.1828), who was a mason. Gedwin (18th/19th C.) listed at Haggiehaugh in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. It is unclear if his forename was an error or how he could have been related to other Elliots. George (15th/16th C.) chaplain who is recorded as witness to a document for Thomas Ker of Sunderland Hall, done at Fairnilee in 1526. His surname is 'Elwand' and John was also a witness. Probably the same 'sir George Elliot' was witness to a document for David Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm in 1529. Also in 1529 he was recorded as 'curate in Lyndene' when he solemnized the marriage of John Rutherford of Hunthill and Christian Pringle. Probably the same 'George Elwand chaplain' witnessed a transaction related to lands at Bowhill in 1539/40 and another for the Pringles of Blindlee in 1541. Either he or a different George 'Elwand' was recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of 'Lyndene' in the Barony of Bowden, along with other Elliots. George (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as 'Georgii Elwald' when he had remission for associating with 'Jacobi Elwald'. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. George (16th C.) recorded in 1550 as curator to the sister of Janet Chapman in Selkirk. He was directed to deliver money to his mother Bessie, which was to go to Margaret Chapman, who was in England. The agreement was signed in his house in Selkirk. George (16th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. In 1563/4 he was listed along with Will 'of the Burnmouthis', Alexander and 2 Croziers who were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. George 'the Cleg' (16th C.) named in a pledge of 1576 by James Langlands of that Ilk, along with the 'cobilman to the lard of Langlands'. In 1578/9 the pledge to the Privy Council for the same pair of men was considered broken with the joint cautioners being liable, namely Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. George 'Jamie's Geordie' (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is recorded as 'George Elliott called James Geordie', but it is unclear which James his father was. George (d.bef. 1580) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1580 his first-born son Thomas resigned all rights to his lands in Lindean. George 'Buggerback' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid on 'Haslegyll', as well as separately for stealing 12 ewes and a ram. Others named included servants of William of Larriston, suggesting that he was from this part of Liddesdale. He was listed in another complaint in the same year, and said to be brother of Archie 'called dogpyn-tle'. Rev. George (1676-1748) younger son of John of Brugh, who farmed at Southfield. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1701. Also in 1701 he and his father witnessed the baptism of the twin daughters of his brother Gilbert. In 1711

he was ordained as Minister of Hownam and remained there until his death. He paid the window tax for Hownam Manse in 1748. In 1710 he married Sarah, daughter of Hugh Lind, Bailie of Edinburgh. Their children were Arabella (baptised in Kirkton, b.1712), Margaret, John, George Augustus, Robert, Sara, Jane, Janet and James. All but the first child were baptised in Hownam Parish. George (18th C.) younger son of Walter in Brugh. He is said to have lived in Cuba, but nothing else is known about him. George (18th C.) farmer at Burnmouth in Liddesdale, recorded in 1748. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots in Burnmouth. George (1729/30–1805) tenant farmer at Doorpool in Rulewater. He was probably brother of William, tenant at Lanton Mains. He may be the George at Ruletownhead on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Doorpool on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Doorpool in the same year. He may also be the George who owned parts of Ruletownhead, ‘Bossithill’ and Burnkinford that were among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule by 1811. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1807, aged 71. Their children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, included: William (b.1767), who died in infancy; Mabel (b.1768); Mary (b.1770); George (b.1770); and William (1772–1855), who farmed at Doorpool. The family are recorded on a tombstone at old Abbotrule Kirk. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1786); Gilbert (b.1789); Janet (b.1791); Mary (b.1793); James (b.1795); William (b.1797); and John (b.1800). George of Larriston (18th/19th C.) see George Fraser Scott-Elliot. Adm. Sir George (1784–1863) 2nd son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He joined the Navy and at a young age took part in the capture of the Danish Fleet in Copenhagen Harbour, led by Lord Nelson. He accompanied his father (then Governor-General of Bengal) out to Java, and on the trip made one of the only known sketches of John Leyden. He captained H.M.S. Victory 1827–32, and was later promoted to Admiral, as well as Lord of the Admiralty. He was also General of the Mint in Scotland. A Whig in politics, he became the first M.P. for Roxburghshire after the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832, defeating Lord John Scott. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the passing of the Bill and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1833. In 1834 many of the Whig members of the Jedforest Club resigned when the Chairman refused to toast his health. He was defeated by Scott in the 1835 election. It is said that he helped get John Ewen appointed as minister at Hobkirk. In 1810 in Calcutta he married Eliza Cecilia, daughter of James Ness of Osgodly, Yorkshire and they had 9 children, one of whom, George, was also an Admiral and M.P. He may be the ‘Hon. Captain Elliot, Teviotbank’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. George Mackenzie (1822–56) 5th son of James, 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He went to Australia with his brother Thomas. A stone was erected to his memory, with an inscription describing that he died at Gracemore Fitzroy River. Gideon of Horsleyhill (16th/17th C.) along with ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden and Gideon Murray, he was responsible for burning West Burnflat (in Liddesdale) in 1599, for which they obtained remission in 1604. He (probably wrongly transcribed as ‘Gilbert’) was one of the landowners of Hassendean who the Baron, James Cunningham, tried to evict in 1603. He was also recorded in 1611 as witness to a marriage contract of William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murray. Dr. Gideon (d.bef. 1712) third son of Robert of Bewlie, tenant in Borthwickshiels. He became an apprentice surgeon in Edinburgh in 1681. He became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1689 and was Chair in 1693/4 and 1699/1700. In 1695 he and Thomas Burnet were employed by the Council of King William to visit the Earl of Home, then a prisoner in the Hirsle, and report whether his health would allow him to be transferred to Edinburgh Castle. In 1691 he married Margaret Cunningham, heiress of North Sinton and was then designated ‘of North Sinton’. In 1705 he secondly married Jean, daughter of James Loch of Drylaw. In 1695 and 1704 he was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. His children all died young. His portrait hangs in Surgeons’ Hall in Edinburgh. Gideon of Harwood-on-Teviot (d.1735), 3rd or 4th son of Simon of Swinside and grandson of William of the Binks. He was recorded as a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718 and became an elder in 1723. In 1723 he witnessed baptisms for William Grieve, tenant in Fenwick, and for Francis Scott, ploughman in Harwood. In 1724 he purchased Teindside from his brother Robert. He is probably the Laird of Harwood who witnessed baptism in 1728 for William Grieve in Fenwick and in 1729 (along with ‘Mr’ Haliburton, probably his factor) for weaver James Roger. He was probably the uncle of Rev. Simon Haliburton, minister of Castleton and Ashkirk. He married Mary Haliburton in 1715; she was sister of Thomas Haliburton of Newmains, John Haliburton, doctor in Jedburgh and Andrew, W.S., and she died in 1735. Their children (all baptised in Hawick) included: Jean (b.1719); Barbara (b.1720); Simon (b.1722); Christian (b.1723), who married Rev. Isaac Davidson, minister at Sorbie, Wigtonshire; Elizabeth (b.1726), who married Isaac Davidson, minister of Sorbie; and Mary (b.1728). Only Christian and Elizabeth survived their mother. In the 1719 baptism in Hawick he is recorded in error as 'Simeon Eliot of Harwood', with his wife being a 'Halyborton', and the witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash and 'Doctor Halyburton' (probably his wife's brother). The witnesses in 1720 were Robert Scott of Falnash and Walter Turnbull, cottar in Harwood. In 1726 he was 'of harwod' and the witnesses were Robert Scott of Falnash and Andrew Scott The 1728 baptism was witnessed by Robert Scott of 'F...' (probably Falnash) and 'Mr. Shiel in Todja...'. Gideon (b.c.1793) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. In 1835 and 1841 he was at Bellshiels. He married Agnes Anderson (b.1795) and their children were: Jean (b.1819); Betty (b.1821); Gideon (b.1824); Helen (b.1827); Mary (b.1830); Agnes (b.1832); Anne (b.1835); and Janet (b.1840). He could be the Gideon, son of John and Betty Crozier, born in Castleton in 1791. Gideon (1833–1913) son of John and Jane Goodfellow. In 1861 he was a dyker living at Muselee. In Robertson Parish in 1853 he married Margaret Wilson. Their children included: Agnes E.; Jane (b.1856); John (b.1859); Thomas (b.1861); James (b.1864); Archibald Hoy (b.1866); William (b.1868); Francis (b.1870); and Thomas (b.1873). Gilbert (15th C.) recorded as 'Gilbert Elwald' in 1453 when he witnessed a 'letter of reversion' between Andrew Ker of Altonburn and Sir Robert Colville of Oxnam for the lands of Feu-rule. It is unclear how he is related to other Elliots, but he may have a connection to John who witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1436. Perhaps the same Gilbert is mentioned in 1493 when his son Robert produced a remission at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for the crime of stealing a grey horse from William Scott of Tushielaw. Gilbert (15th C.) son of Nicholas, listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Perhaps the same Gilbert was accused in 1502 of the theft of

8 oxen from Newhall, with William of 'lahope' serving as his surety. He may also be the Gilbert who is 1502 was surety for John in Foulshiels. Gilbert 'Gib' of the Shaws (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when he was held by Pater Hay of Megginch, with a pledge to the King for good behaviour. Later in 1578 he was 'Gib Elliot of the Schawis' when he was released from being warded with the Provost and Bailies of Perth, but requested to meet with other Border Lairds to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1580 he was held in ward in Falkland Castle when his keeper was ordered to present him to the Privy Council. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. He is probably the 'Gib of the Schawis' listed in 1580 when his procurator explained to the Privy Council that he had 'departit hame to his awin cuntrie and sensyne wes slayne'. In 1583 he is 'Gybbe Elliot of the Shauies' in a letter from English wardens; he is listed among the close kin of Robert of Redheugh, and surely related to Adam of the Shaws, who is also listed. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded among merchants of Edinburgh in a case before the Privy Council in 1565/6. His surname is given as 'Elwand'. Gilbert 'Gib' (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie. In 1569 he was recorded as 'Martin's Gib the Cousin' when he was among a number of pledges to support Martin of Braidlie with the Regent Moray. He was recorded being 'left with my Lord Regentis Grace to the returning of Martine Elliot'. He was also recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. In 1584 he was 'Gyb the cousin', who defended the tower at Larriston, which was taken by an English raiding force under Sir John Forster; he was said to have been trained as a soldier in the wars in Flanders and France. He is 'Martin's Gib being Martins cosen', recorded in 1590, along with 'Martin's Airchie' and Martin's brother Gib and others, when accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Also in 1590 he and William, younger of the Steele, were accused of stealing cattle 2 years earlier. Additionally he was 'Martins Gib being Martins cossen' when accused of further rieving in 1590, along with elder Airchie, Will of the Steele and 'Lang' John. It is unclear who his father was, or whether he was the same as one of the contemporary Gibs. His killing by men of Tynedale is recorded in 1597, with the description that he was 'a notorious offender in England, and besides, being a soldier and trained in war, was a captain and principal leader'. Gilbert 'Gib', 'Sweet Milk' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as 'Gib Elliott, callit Sweit Milk'. It seems likely he was related to the earlier Hob and the later Dand, who had the same nickname, as well as William, supposedly commemorated in the song 'Ranton Roarin Willie'. Gilbert 'Gib' (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert of Redheugh. In 1578 he was listed among Border Lairds who were directed to meet in order to pledge to suppress lawlessness; he was then 'Gibbie Elliot, broder to Robert Elliot of Reidheuch'. In 1583 a letter from Musgrave to Burleigh describes him as 'Gibbe Elliot' among the most important Elliots of Liddesdale, along with his brothers Robert of Redheugh, William of Hartsgarth and Archibald. He may be the Gib, 'son to Robine Elliott' who was among a number of Elliots (along with servants of Robert of Redheugh), Croziers and others accused in 1590 of stealing livestock from Middleton Hall in England in 1589; he is recorded as 'Gib Elliott son to Robin', and his servant John Noble and 'his man' 'John Shevell' were also listed. In 1591 he was described as 'louit freind and seruitour' of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme when he rented Commonsideside, Northcroft, Hillend and 'Stoghill' from him, being given this lease for service performed for the Laird of Braxholme. In 1595 he was also servitor of Sir Walter Scott Braxholme when he witnessed a charter. He is probably the Gybb Elwood alias Robes Gibb' who, according to an English account, along with Scott of Buccleuch and Scott of Harden met with some Englishmen to get help in the plan to rescue Kinmont Willie. He is probably the 'Gyb Elliot brother to Robert Elliot of Reidheuch' who was held as a prisoner in England in 1597. In 1599 he had a remission, along with Gideon Murray of Elibank and Walter Scott of Harden, for burning Westburnflat in Liddesdale. In 1603 he was probably 'my louit Gilbert Elliot of the Kirktoon' to whom Sir Walter Scott leased the lands of Wester Commonsideside and Northcroft. He may have been an illegitimate son of Robert the 16th Chief, with his mother possibly being Helen Kidd (unless this story is complete fabrication); he would then be the 'bastard brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh' recorded in 1603. It is not impossible that he is the same man as 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins'. Gilbert 'Gib' (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie. He may be the 'Gibbie' who, along with Archie and their accomplices, was accused of taking part in a raid into England in 1587. He is probably also the 'Martins Gib' in a group complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. He is recorded as brother of 'Martin's Arche' in 1590 when, along with Gib, cousin of Martin, and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. He was probably the 'Martin's Gib' who, along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse and 'Adie's John' Crozier were accused of stealing from William Henderson of 'Fallofeeld' in 1590. Also in 1590 he was accused of stealing from Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall (in England), along with Martin's sons (and so presumably his brothers) Airchie and John, as well as Martin of Prickinghaugh. He was probably the 'Martin's Gib' accused in 1590 along with a list of Elliots and others said to have stolen from the 'Hewrde' family, as well as maiming and taking prisoner Christopher 'of the Whithall'. He was probably the 'Martinges Gib' listed in 1590 among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He was probably the Gib, son of Martin, who (along with his brother John) was part of a complaint about a raid into Gilsland in 1596, led by Sir Walter Scott of Harden. He is probably the 'Martin's Gibbe' who Lord Evers described being killed by English raiders in 1597; the slayer was a Dodd, it is said in retaliation for an earlier raid. He was described as 'brought up in the wars in Flanders and France, and has since been a leader to that wicked race'. Note that he may be confused with 'Martin's Gib the Cousin', who is recorded at about the same time. Gilbert 'Gib' (16th/17th C.) younger son of Gavin of Falnash. In 1595 he was mentioned along with Wat Scott of Harden and 2 of his nephews (sons of William of Falnash), Archie and Hob in a list of English complaints against Liddesdale men. His name is recorded as 'Gibbe Elliott brother to Will E. of the Fawenesh'. He may be the 'Gilbert Elliot in Fallinasche Mill' recorded in 1618 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch complained that he had cut down 60 alder trees from his lands of Gorrenberry; William 'Ellote, called of Fallinasche in Braidlie' was also accused of cutting trees and may have been his brother. Not appearing before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. Gilbert 'Stottin Gib' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598/9 as 'Gib Elliot, called Stottan Gib', along with his brother John and other 'brothers, tenants and servants' of William of Falnash. There were complaints against them by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsbridge, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn. His brother John was also listed; it is possible they were both brothers of William of Falnash and hence sons of Gavin of Falnash.

Gilbert of the Mains (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1594/5 when Gavin Elliott of Stobs was his surety for a promise to pay taxes owed to James Douglas of Cavers for some of his lands in Teviotdale. He was there recorded being 'of the Manis'. In 1599 he witnessed bonds (signed at Branhholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. His name is recorded as 'Gilbert Elliot of the Maynis'; it is unclear where 'the Mains' might have been, but it seems likely he was a prominent Elliot of the time, and perhaps the same as one of the contemporary family members noted by another designation. He was also 'of the Mains' in 1602 when he signed the bond among Border lairds to keep the peace. Gilbert 'Gib the Galyart' (16th/17th C.) convicted in 1618 of stealing the purse of John Armstrong of Holm when they were in the house of Alexander Young of Selkirk. He was sentenced to be scourged through Edinburgh and then banished from the Kingdom. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged. His nickname referred to a lively dance, and was apparently a common nickname for someone who was smart in dress or lively in spirit. Gilbert 'Gib the Tutor' (17th C.) described as a servant of Robert of Redheugh. He was involved in stealing cattle from Englishmen at 'Chipsies' and 'Islsyde' in about 1623. He was one of the men who had planned to murder Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1624, as part of the feud between the Scotts and the Elliots. He is listed as 'Gib Elliott, callit the Tutour', along with Gavin of Hillhouse and 'Will Elliot, callit Gibbis Will', who may have been his son. They were meant to kill the Earl in Jedburgh at the time of a Justice Court, and then followed him to Edinburgh, but after failing they confessed. Robert of Redheugh stated that the idea for the murder originally came from him, but Gavin of Hillhouse said that 'Gib wes bot a feible couter and wald never do the turne'. Gilbert (17th C.) married Janet Richardson in Kelso in 1635. They had a daughter Elizabeth in 1636. Janet (b.1639) and Margaret (b.1642), both baptised in Hawick Parish, were probably also his children. He may be the same as one of the other Gilberts. Gilbert (17th C.) signatory of the National Covenant in

Hawick in 1638. He is recorded as being 'now in Quhithauche', which could be Whithaugh in Liddesdale. Gilbert of Brugh (d.bef. 1648) 2nd son of Gavin, he gained the Lairdship since his elder brother Archibald died before 1621. In 1621 he is recorded as witness to a contract for money due by the Chisholmes to his deceased brother. He is recorded in the Circuit Court of 1623 when he acted as caution (along with several others) for Mungo Scott in Castleside (who may have been his tenant). His wife's name is unknown and his only son was Archibald (d.1650), who was served heir to his grandfather in 1648. However, details of these generations of the Elliots of Brugh seem quite uncertain. Gilbert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Falnash. In 1637 he was apprenticed to John Nichol, merchant in Edinburgh. Gilbert (17th C.) younger son of Archibald of Brugh. He was mentioned being 'in Carlops' and brother of John in Southfield (who succeeded to Brugh) in 1665. Nothing else is known about him. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) referred to as 'of the Park' in 1699. He and his son William 'in Castletoun' were subject of a complaint of non-payment by William of Bewlie, recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books. It is unclear how he might have been related to earlier Elliots associated with Park. Sir Gilbert 'Gibbie' (1651–1718) of Headshaw and of Minto, 1st Baronet and Lord Minto. He was younger son of Gavin Elliott of Grange and Midlem Mill, and grandson of 'Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins' (although these early generations are somewhat uncertain). His sister Margaret was the mother of Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk. He may have purchased part of the land of Minto (perhaps Craigend and Deanfoot) from John Turnbull in about 1674. He may be the 'Minto' who acted as an agent for renting some of the Duchess of Buccleuch's farms in 1675. He may be the Laird of Minto who paid the Land Tax on more than £2100 in 1678. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, and a zealous Presbyterian. In 1679 he acted to have the preacher William Veitch's sentence commuted from execution to banishment, and it is said that this established him as a capable lawyer. In 1681 he is reported to have ridden from London, beating the King's messenger, and allowing the Earl of Argyll to escape from Edinburgh Castle before the capital sentence was imposed. He later took part in Argyll's disastrous expedition to Scotland from Holland (perhaps helping to raise funds, along with the Lairds of Torwoodlee and Polwarth). In 1685 he was among the rebels (under Sir Patrick Home and Sir John Cochrane) who engaged the Royalist force at Muirdykes in Renfrewshire, and afterwards fled to Holland. He is probably the 'wryter in Edinburgh' listed among others in 1685 as fugitive rebels. He was convicted of high treason for plotting against the King, hid out in the Border hills and fled to Holland. He was pardoned in 1687; it was stated this was because of the service to the Crown offered by his father. He became an advocate in 1687 and was fully back in favour when William of Orange acceded in 1689, when he was appointed Clerk to the Privy Council in 1689 (until 1692). He was knighted in 1692. In 1694 he was listed as one of the creditors of Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge. In 1696 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1698 for Selkirkshire. In 1696 he bought the Headshaw estate (from the female heiress Mary and her husband Patrick Porteous) and in 1697 purchased Langhope (probably the one near Ashkirk). He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia (for Headshaw) in 1700 and became a Judge. He was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1702 and hence was a member of the last Scottish Parliament, voting against the Union. In 1703 he purchased the Minto estate (which had been combined with Craigend and Deanfoot) from Gideon Scott of Highchester; his aunt Elizabeth had been wife of John Turnbull of Minto and so he may have spent time on the estate as a child. He witnessed baptisms for George Douglas of Friarshaw in 1703 and 1704. In 1704 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. In 1705 he was appointed Deputy Keeper of the Signet and shortly afterwards was created a Lord of Session, taking the title of first Lord Minto; this means that he served as a judge on the same court that had sentenced him to death about 20 years earlier. Also in 1705 he had a royal charter for the lands of Headshaw, Dryden, Crawknowe and 'Clews' in Ashkirk Parish, which included the erection of these lands into the Barony of Headshaw, as well as the patronage and teinds of Ashkirk Parish. In 1706 he combined the Barony of Headshaw and his lands of Langhope and Minto into the Barony of Minto and Craigend. In 1705 he was one of the members of the Scottish Parliament to vote against having a single Parliament for the whole of the United Kingdom. He is recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1717. His portrait was painted in about 1715. On the frieze of the pulpit in Ashkirk Kirk are the initials 'S / GE' and 'D / (I)C' for 'Sir Gilbert Elliott' and 'Dame

Jean Carre', his second wife. He married first Mary (or Helen) Stevenson, daughter of an Edinburgh Burgess, who was his cousin, and they had one daughter, Mary, who married Sir John Elphinstone of Logie; his first wife died in 1689 after 9 years of marriage. In 1692 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Cavers Carre. Their children were: Sir Gilbert (b.1693), who succeeded; and Andrew, who drowned at age 16 on his way to Holland. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Robert of Larriston and grandson of James Elliott of Stobs. He was a merchant in Hawick, was said to be 'of Nethermill' (which was probably the place of that name in Dumfriesshire, adjacent to lands owned by his grandfather, John Maxwell of Cowhill), and is described in 1696 as 'brother german to Robert Elliot of Larriston'. His son Charles Edward was born in 1693, and settled in Essex, while another (unnamed) son eventually emigrated to California, where he is said to have descendants. It is claimed that both sons fought in the 1715 Jacobite uprising and later lived in Java for a while (but like other family legends, this may be confusing generations and individuals). Gilbert (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. He was 'at Mount', which may have been the farmstead near Whitropefoot. He died without issue. Gilbert (c.1670–aft. 1727) second son of John of Brugh, who farmed at Southfield, and younger brother of William 'the Laceman'. He lived for many years at Nether Southfield and took over the tenancy at Winningtonrig in 1710. He was also factor for his cousin, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He is probably the Gilbert who leased the farm of Over Southfield (perhaps an error for Nether Southfield) from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1698. He was at Nether Southfield in 1698 when he witnessed a baptism for James 'Colwort' in Whitlaw. Both he and John (his father) witnessed Hawick baptisms in 1700 for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for William Scott (from wilton Parish). He witnessed a baptism for Glendinnings in 1702, and both he and John 'in Nether Southfield' witnessed a baptism in 1704. In 1705 he witnessed baptisms for James Stevenson in Harwood, for Southfield shoemaker John Elliot and for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, and in 1706 another for William Cowan, herd in Southfield. He was stated in 1767 to have been tenant in Nether Southfield like his father before him and in about 1710 he 'broke Hawick Common by plowing a part of it', for which he got no protection from the Duchess' Chamberlain, 'Auld Falnash'; during the riding of the Common that year his flock was hounded more than those of the other neighbouring farmers and he was fined by the Hawick Bailies. In 1717 there was a complaint that one of his servants had encroached upon the Hawick Common at Winnington Moss. He witnessed the baptism of children of Walter Scott in Newbigging in 1722 and 1725; he was then 'in Winnintounridge'. In 1727 his brother William of Wells left him money in his will. He is probably the Gilbert who witnessed the baptism of his grandson Gilbert in Hawick in 1734. He married Agnes Turnbull of Southfield in 1698; she was daughter of Walter Turnbull (from Jedburgh) and Helen Elliot (from Hawick). Their children were: Jean and Barbara, twins (b.1701); 'Helenora' (b.1702), who married James Grieve, farmer at Commonsides; Jane (or 'Jannet', b.1704); John (b.1708), who became a Captain and married Jean, daughter of James Grieve in Todshawhaugh; Agnes (b.1710), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (Arabella, b.1712); James; and another Agnes (b.1718). They were all christened locally (in Hawick, Cavers and Kirkton Parishes). The 1701 baptism was witnessed by his father John and brother George, the 1702 baptism by Robert Thomson in Newmill and James Ogilvie in Branhholme and the 1704 baptism by John Elliott (uncle of Sir Gilbert of Stobs) and shoemaker John Elliot. He was referred to as 'Mr. Elliot in Rig' in the 1712 baptism and as being 'in Rige' in 1718. The year of his death is not known. Gilbert (d.bef. 1752) son of Robert of Larriston. It is unclear if he was the oldest son, but he appears to have been the only one who had issue. He settled in Newcastle and married Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. He had 2 children: Jane Stewart, who married John Williams of Kensington; and Maj.-Gen. William (b.1741), who bought back the family lands of Larriston, but died unmarried. Sir Gilbert (1693–1766) 2nd Baronet and Lord Minto, eldest son of 'Gibbie'. He was educated in law at Utrecht University in the Netherlands, and became an advocate in 1715. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1722–26. He reached the bench as a Lord of Session in 1726, assuming the title of Lord Minto, later becoming a Judge and eventually Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland in 1763. It is said that it was partly through his influence that his relative Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs was eventually pardoned for the murder of Colonel Stewart. In 1727 and 1731 he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk. He purchased Raperlaw (which had once belonged to an Elliott of Stobs), followed by Fallahill in 1727, Newlands in 1734 and part of Langhaugh in 1743. He was responsible for the extensive alterations carried out at Minto House in 1744 and 1745, including the addition of 68 new windows, and building up a library. He also improved the grounds, with a pond-head being built across the glen in 1735, an avenue of larches added in about 1736, and most of the houses moved to Minto Green. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. An anti-Jacobite, he reputedly hid among the crags when part of the Jacobite force stopped at Minto House in 1745. He paid the window tax for Minto House in 1748. He was said to have been interested in agriculture and dramatically changed the layout of the estate at Minto. However, he also spent much of the year in Edinburgh, where his house was on Horse-wynd. He was known as a music-lover and supposedly introduced the German flute into Scotland in 1726. He wrote verses in Italian, but none were published; his only publication was a pamphlet about improving the city of Edinburgh. When appointed Lord Justice Clerk, he had a house built in Edinburgh, on Argyll Square. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1718 he married Helen (d.1774), daughter of Sir Robert Stuart (or Stewart) of Allankbank; she was a leader of society in Edinburgh, serving for a while as Directress of the Assemblies. The couple had 13 children: Eleanor (b.1719), who married John Rutherford of Edgerston; Jean (b.1720), who died in infancy; Sir Gilbert (1722–77), who succeeded; Mary (b.1724), who probably died young; Robert (1725–57), Captain in the Royals; Jean (or Jane, 1727–1805), who was author of 'Flowers of the Forest'; Andrew (b.1728), who became Lieutenant-Governor of New York, married Elizabeth Plumstead and lived at Greenwells; Marianne (1730–1811), who died unmarried in Edinburgh; John (1732–1808), became an Admiral and died at Monteviot; twins Margaret (b.1734), who died in infancy and Ann (or Anne, b.1734), who married Charles Congleton of Congleton in Edinburgh in 1762; Grizell (b.1737), who probably died young; and Archibald (1743–59), who died in Antigua, aged 16. He was said to have been a strict disciplinarian with his children. He died suddenly at Minto. Sir Gilbert of Minto (1722–77) 3rd Baronet, son of Sir Gilbert. Born at Minto, he was educated for the Scottish bar, becoming an advocate in 1743. He went to Holland in 1744 and married 2 years later. He was said to be a great public speaker and a formidable debating opponent. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1753–65 and for Roxburghshire 1765–77 (when he died, but was succeeded as M.P. by his son). He was appointed one of the Lords of the Admiralty, as well as being Keeper of the Signet in Scotland. He was conspicuous as a parliamentary orator, being said to have almost single-handedly argued the successful case for making the office of Sheriffs in Scotland independent of the Crown. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761 (when still ‘junior’ of Minto). In 1761 he became Lord of the Treasury, in 1762 Treasurer of the House of Commons and from 1771 he was Treasurer of the Navy. He was also known as a man of philosophical interests and literary talent, with his song ‘Amynta’ being popular in its day; it begins ‘My sheep I neglected, I broke my sheep-crook, And all the gay haunts of my youth I forsook’ (or alternatively ‘My sheep I’ve forsaken, and left my sheep-hook, And all the gay haunts of my youth I’ve forsook’). He also had poems published on the death of Col. James Gardiner and the Earl and Countess of Sutherland. In addition he wrote a letter to David Hume, which was later published. Before inheriting Minto he lived in London and later Twickenham. In 1767 he started the first experimental postal service in Hawick. He is probably the Sir Gilbert who is recorded as owner of the lands of Dryden, Headshaw, Crawknowe and Clews in about 1788. In 1746 he married Agnes Murray-Kynynmound, only daughter of Hugh Dalrymple; she was heiress (from Sir Alexander Murray) of Melgund in Forfarshire and of Kynynmound in Fife, and died in 1778. He was succeeded by his son Sir Gilbert (b.1751), who became 1st Earl of Minto and adopted the Murray-Kynynmound extension to his surname when inheriting his mother’s lands. His other children were: Isabella (b.1749), who died unmarried; Hugh (1752–1830), Governor of Madras and the Leeward Islands; Alexander (1754–78) of the East India Company; Rev. Robert (1755–1824), Rector of Wheldrake; David (b.1757), who died aged 5; an unnamed son; Eleanor (1758–1818), who married William Eden, 1st Baron Auckland; and Marianne, who died in Edinburgh in 1811. He died when visiting Marseilles for his health and is buried at Minto. Gilbert (b.1725) born in Cavers Parish, son of Walter in Brugh. He became tenant farmer at Blackburnfoot in Castleton Parish. He married Betty Forbes and their children included: George, who lived in Castleton; Gilbert, tenant in Glenzier, who married a Miss Davidson; William; and Margaret, who married Adam Scott from Langhaugh. Gilbert (b.1731) younger son of the 2nd William of Borthwickbrae. He had one child, Thomas (probably illegitimate, by Sarah Growesmith), who purchased Wilton Lodge. He paid the Horse Tax at Langlands in 1785–86. He is recorded as ‘Gilbert Elliot of Longlands’ or Langlands when he was taxed for having a footman in 1785 and 1786 and a carriage in 1786 and 1787. He was also taxed for having 2 female servants in 1785 and 1786; his son Thomas is listed on the tax roll from 1787, suggesting he may have died or moved. Gilbert (1734–59) eldest son of Capt. John of the Elliots of Brugh. He was baptised in Hawick, the witnesses being his grandfathers Gilbert Elliot and James Grieve. He joined the Navy when no more than 10 years old, and served under Capt. Elliot Elliot (his distant cousin from the Stobs Eliotts) on the fireship Aetna. In 1759 he was on the Tyger, commanded by Capt. Brereton, ‘who deserted his post for a slight wound in the head and tied a white napkin on his face and went below’. Elliot took over command of the vessel ‘till a cannon shot carried away his bowels, and he dropped on the deck’. Apparently the Captain was court-martialed, and although acquitted was afterwards known in the Navy as the ‘white-faced Captain’ because of this incident. In his will, made a week before his death, he left most of his possessions to his shipmates, but his sword and belt to ‘William Elliot of the Honourable Company’s Military of Madras’ (whose identity is unclear). He died unmarried. Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound (1751–1814) 4th Baronet and 1st Earl of Minto. Son of Sir Gilbert and Agnes Murray Kynynmound, he was educated largely in England and in Paris and travelled widely in Europe. He studied for the bar, but followed his father into politics. He became M.P. for Morpeth, Helston and Berwick in 1774 and was known for his debating skills. He was then M.P. for Roxburgh 1777–84 (following in his father’s footsteps), Berwick 1786–90 and Helston 1790–95. He was served heir to his father in 1778, in the Barony of Minto and Headshaw, and the lands of Shielswood. He paid the land tax for Langhope in Ettrick Parish in 1785. In 1780 he held Craigend, but had liferented much of the rest of Minto to 6 other gentlemen (surely for the sole purpose of allowing them to vote in Roxburghshire, where he was standing as a candidate), each of them having just a little more than the required £400 of land: Alexander Alison; David Dalrymple, Lord Westhall; Sir John Dalrymple, Baron Dalrymple; Rev. Robert Elliot, his brother; Sir John Stewart of Allanbank; and Robert Trotter of Bush. At the same time he disposed the liferent of Dryden to 3 other men: Dr. William Elliot; George Potts, younger of Todrig; and Rev. Simon Haliburton. He was listed as a voter in Selkirkshire in 1788. In 1788 he was listed as owner of most of the Parish of Minto, valued at £2108 13s 4d and Newlands (which had formerly been in Hassendean Parish), valued at £80, as well as Raperlaw (valued at £416) and Willie's Peel (valued at £104) in Lilliesleaf Parish and the associated teinds (valued at £129 12s 4d), and Shielswood, Dryden, parts of Headshaw and associated teinds (valued at £1420 18s 4d) in Ashkirk Parish. He was taxed for having 4 servants (gardeners) in 1778 and 1779 and 3 gardeners in 1785 and 1786, with 5 (including butler, footman and groom) in 1787–92 and 6 in 1793, 1794 and 1797. He paid tax on 3 female servants in 1785 and 1786, 6 servants in 1787, 7 in 1788, 6 in 1789, 5 in 1790 and 4 in 1791. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–86, when he had 2 carriage horses, 4 in 1787–89 and 6 in 1790–94. In 1797 he was taxed for having 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at Minto. He was also taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1787–98. In 1791 he gave a speech in the House of Commons proposing the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts (a popular cause in Hawick at the time). He was appointed Commissioner in Toulon in 1793, then went to Corsica as Viceroy. In 1796 the Duke of Buccleuch and others tried to convince him to remain in Corsica rather than contest the election. He was present at the Battle of St. Vincent in 1797, and a sword taken there from the Captain of the 'San Josef' was presented to him by Adm. Nelson. On his return in 1797 he was made Earl of Minto for his services attempting to secure Corsica against the French Republic. He served on the Militia committee in Roxburghshire in 1797. His estate added the lands of Barnhills in 1797 and Hassendeanbank in about 1799. He was Lieut.-Col. of the 1st Battalion of Roxburghshire volunteers in the early 1800s. At the False Alarm of 1804 he swam the flooded Teviot on his horse in order to reach the muster at Jedburgh. In 1806 he resigned the lands of Barnhills, Hassendeanbank, Standhill and Lantonhall in his own favour. He was appointed Governor General of Bengal (which effectively meant India at that time) in 1807, holding the post until 1813. There he annexed Amboyna and the Molucca Islands, took Bourbon and Mauritius from the French and subdued the pirates in Borneo. He also helped quell an army mutiny and personally led the expedition to take Java (where John Leyden died) from the Dutch. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson's Scots dictionary in 1808. Returning to Britain in 1814 where he was created Earl of Minto, and Viscount Melgund. Much of the improvements to the Minto estate were carried out under the supervision of his wife, since he spent so much time away; Minto House was extensively altered, with the work completed in 1814, and the plantations were added to; this included doubling the width, adding to both wings and covering the entrance hall with a cupola. Unfortunately he died on his way back to Scotland, the sad news being brought to people preparing to draw his carriage through the streets of Hawick and light bonfires in celebration. Many locals apparently refused to believe he was dead, and there grew a tradition that he lived in secret rooms in the House and wandered the Craggs at night. A life-size portrait of him by George Chinnery was donated to Hawick in 1893 and used to hang in the Town Hall; in 1975 it was loaned to the Scottish National Portrait Gallery and donated permanently in 2020. In 1777 he married Anna Maria, daughter of Sir George Amyand and she died in 1829. They had 3 daughters and 4 sons: Gilbert Elliot (b.1782), who became the 2nd Earl; Adm. Sir George (b.1784); Anna Maria (1785–1855), who married Lt.-Gen. Sir Rufane Shawe Donkin; John Edmund (b.1788), M.P. for Roxburghshire; Harriet Mary Frances (1790–1825), who died unmarried; William (1792–1811), who died returning from Bengal; and Catherine Sarah (1797–1862), who married Sir John Peter Boileau. He is buried in Westminster Abbey. He adopted the addition of 'Murray-Kynynmound' to his surname by royal licence in 1797 (the surname becomes confusing at this point; see Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound). His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1815. His portrait, by George Chinnery, is in the Museum. His wife's portrait was painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, but was stolen from Minto House in 1930. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) son of Gilbert in Blackburnoot and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He was tenant in Glenzier, near Canonbie and married a Miss Davidson according to a family pedigree. He is probably the Gilbert, married to Isobel Davidson, whose children, baptised in Canonbie Parish, included Elizabeth (b.1786), Margaret

(b.1790), John (b.1792), Margaret (again, b.1794) and Matthew (b.1797). Gilbert (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Gilbert (b.1807); Mary Elizabeth (b.1811); and Frederick William (b.1812). It is unclear how he is related to other Gilberts. Gilbert (b.1809) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of Jesse and Margaret Smith, he was a millwright in Hawick. He was listed as a journeyman millwright on Melgund Place in 1841, by 1851 was a millwright at the Coach House on Langlands Place in Wilton, but in 1851 was still listed as a journeyman millwright at Langlands Place. In 1832 he married Cecily (or Cecilia) Robson (b.c.1811) and their children included: Walter (b.1834); Helen (b.1837); George (b.c.1839); and Margaret (b.1841). Lt.-Col. Gilbert (1826–65) 5th and youngest son of Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 2nd Earl of Minto. He served with the Rifle Brigade. In 1858 he married Katherine Anne, daughter of Rev. Dr. Gilbert, Bishop of Chichester. Gilbert John of Brugh (1864–1945) 2nd son of Rev. William of Hereford, from whom he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh. He married Bessie Clark Davidson in 1895 and their children were Air Chief Marsh. Sir William and Brig. James. Grizel (17th C.) only child of Simon ‘in Philhope’. She was the heiress of the lands at Philhope (in the Borthwick). When her father died she was given as ward to Robert of Falnash, and later (sometime before 1644) married his son John. In 1642 she was served heir to her great-grandfather Simon of Philhope in the 10-pound land of Philhope. In 1644, with the consent of her husband, she resigned half the lands of Philhope to her mother Elizabeth Chisholme and step-father Archibald in Philhope. Rev. Harold ‘Harry of Peebles’ (c.1611–53) recorded as ‘Hairie Elliot’ and also ‘Henry Eliott’. He was son of William of Peebles, and grandson of Gavin of Brugh (near Dodburn). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1631, taught for a while in Jedburgh, was presented to Bedrule Parish in late 1639 and ordained there in 1640. He replaced Henry Pearson, who was ousted for his connections to Episcopalianism. However, he was himself ousted from his position in 1649 for being on the side of the King. He may have remained in Bedrule until his death about 4 years later, and ‘lived in a most dejected and miserable and cast down tradition’. After that the church of Bedrule was vacant for another 5 years. He married Elizabeth Douglas and also earlier Helen MacGhie (daughter of John of Balmaghie) and had at least 3 children. In

1650 he had a discharge of a debt with Robert Pringle, ‘tutor’ to Will Bennet of Grubet. It is recorded in 1662 that Elizabeth Douglas and 7 fatherless children petitioned Parliament, claiming persecution (presumably for not supporting the Covenants) of her husband and family for publicly supporting his Majesty’s interests, for example during the expedition of 1648, and that he had been forced out of his charge, and they had lived from hand to mouth since then. They were allowed £100 out of vacant stipends (although 10 years later she had received none of it). His children include Christian, John (possibly son of his first wife, who married Elizabeth Fithie) and Adam (who may have been a minister in London). John’s elder son was Thomas, who was Solicitor to the Prince of Wales, and his elder son was Sir John of Peebles (d.1786), who lived in London and was a famous physician. Hector (16th/17th C.) appeared before the Judiciary Court in Dumfries in 1622. He was recorded being ‘in Rig’, so that he might have been related to the Elliots of Rig; however, it seems likely to be a different Rig. Hector (18th C.) lived at Southdean, where he married Christian Oliver in 1736. Their children included: Robert (b.1738); John (b.1740); and Mary (b.1741). Hector (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He is surely related to the earlier Hector, as well as Robert from the same parish, whose children were born about a decade later. His children included: William (b.1753); Susan (b.1754); and Christian (b.1756). Helen ‘the Wutch’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘callit the Witche, in Jedburgh’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It was quite unusual for women to be named as criminals in this way, and she is one of only 2 such names on this particular list. It is unclear if her supposed crime was witchcraft or if this was just a nickname. Helen of Binks (b.1796) daughter of John, she was known as ‘the White Rose o Liddesdale’ and married Archibald Blake in Liverpool in 1820. Henry (16th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. He was probably related to some of the others Elliots who were listed. Henry (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to a document of 1520 for George Ker of Auld Roxburgh, done at Fairnilee. Henry (17th C.) recorded as ‘Harie Elliot, son-in-law’ when he was overseer of William Elliot of Binks in 1665. Assuming that the date is correct, it is unclear who he might have been. Henry (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Henry (d.bef. 1715) farmer at 'Sorbey-trees' (i.e. Sorbietrees) near Newcastleton. In 1715 Henry Elliot of Bells in Northumberland and John Elliot of Larriston in Roxburghshire were appointed 'tutors' for his children Jane, Elizabeth, Margaret, Gilbert, Christine, Henry and Adam. Based on the names and the date, it seems this may be the same man as Henry of Lodgegill. Henry 'Harry' (17th/18th C.) 2nd (or 3rd) Laird of Harwood, son of William and grandson of Simon of the Binks. His father left him the lands of Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside. He built a new house at Harwood and also purchased Chapelknowe in 1675. He paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678. He was Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1690. He is recorded in 1676 as 'Harie Elliott' when he was cautioner to a 'letter of horning' against William Elliot of Philhope, brought by Walter Scott, called 'Westport'. He witnessed Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs 'bond of provision' in 1677. In 1681 he was a witness for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Wauchope. He is recorded in a bond of 1683 with Robert, Lord Jedburgh, with Simon Elliot of Swinside as cautioner, and in 1688 he was a cautioner for Gilbert Elliott of Stonedged. He also feued the lands of 'Caephope and Calahope' from Sir John Scott of Ancrum in 1692. He had a bond with William Elliot of Bewlie in 1692, another in 1694 with John Kerr of Cavers, and one in 1696 with Rev. John Goudie of Sprouston. He appears to have paid off some of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedged's debts in the mid-1690s. He was the Laird of Harwood in 1694 when the tax on 7 hearths was paid on 'Harits hous and ofice houses'. In 1694 he purchased Fairnielees for his eldest son William, reserving liferent for himself. However, in 1699 he gave up the liferent on the condition that William paid off some of his debts and provided for the 2 youngest sons, John and Henry. He married Mary, daughter of John Scott of Dryhope and had at least 6 children. He had 3 sons who married sisters, all of them daughters of the Laird of Todrig, Walter Scott: William (who succeeded) married Jean; John married Nelly; and Henry of Peel married Elizabeth. He had another son, Walter of Ormiston, who is said to have married the eldest daughter of Andrew Kerr of Lindean. He also had a daughter Elizabeth, who married Robert Elliot,

2nd Laird of Midlem Mill, and another daughter Anne (or Anna) who married William Currier, tenant in Hyndhope. In 1699 he gave his eldest son William the lands of Harwood, Appotside and Tythehouse in agreement for paying his debts and granting him a yearly allowance (the implication is that he was infirm by this time, his son already being mentioned in all the documents relating to Harwood for several years previously). The dates of his birth and death are unknown, but he was certainly alive in 1701, and in 1707 his heir William was still described as 'younger of Harwood'. Henry of Lodgegill (1672–1714) 2nd son of John of Thorlieshope, Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His brothers were John of the Binks and William of Thorlieshope. He succeeded his father in Hudshouse. In 1708 he had a Crown Charter of the lands of Lodgegill in Ewesdale (part of what had been known as Black Tarras), this being settled on him by his brother William, after Simon of Lodgegill became bankrupt. He was 'of Tarras' when listed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He married Margaret (1680–1768), daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill; she survived him for more than 50 years. Their children were: William of Lodgegill, who married Jane, daughter of William Elliot of Harwood-on-Rule; John and Robert, who probably died young; Adam in Flatt, who married Elizabeth Elliot of Sorbietrees; Margaret, who married Charles, brother of Scott of Gorrenberry; Catherine, who married Edmund Atchison in Mosspebble; Elizabeth, who married Robert Scott in Singlie; Jean, who married John Armstrong in Sorbie; and Henry (1712–94), who farmed at Flatt and married Janet Little. Henry (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve, he was tenant in Riccarton. He married Isobel, daughter of John Elliot in Dinlees, and sister of John in Park (mentioned in 1730). Their children included: William, a baker in Hawick; Catherine, married Thomas Armstrong of Riccarton Mill; and Jean. Henry of Peel (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood and Mary Scott of Dryhope. He may be the Henry 'in Hudshouse' recorded as one of the witnesses to the 1700 marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood (his brother) and Jean, daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. He was tenant farmer at Bells in Northumberland and was later at Deadwater. He purchased the lands of Peel (which had been called Baxtonlees) from his cousins (heirs of his uncle John Elliot) sometime after 1731. He was a tenant at Deadwater; one story is recounted (in 'Beauties of the Border') where after a harsh winter he reported to the Duke of Northumberland that unlike on the neighbouring farms he instructed his shepherds not to skin any of the dead sheep until the warm weather came, 'when, to my great joy, the most part of them came to life again!'. He is said to have been well known as a 'toper', with his standing toast being 'Here's to all Elliots and Elliots' bairns, And them that lie in the Elliots' airms'. He married Elizabeth Scott of Todrig (probably the sister of 2 of his brothers' wives). He had many children, but only 3 are recorded: Henry of Peel, who married Jean, daughter of John Elliot of the Binks and sold Peel; Walter (d.1741), surgeon on H.M.S. Wager, who died following a shipwreck off Patagonia; and William, who was a Captain and tenant in Rowanburnfoot. Henry (1700–84) Laird of Harwood, successor to William. In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood (this being before he succeeded to Harwood). He did not get along with his father, particularly after much of Harwood was let for an extended period to the Pott brothers. He appealed to the Court of Session about his father's behaviour and finally managed the estate for his father's trustees. He was keen to improve the lands, in particular to enclose the fields, but he cared nothing for antiquities, and had all the old buildings pulled down (including the old town of Harwood). He did, however, build an edifice thatched with heather ('Elliot's Folly') on a small hill, from which he could watch his workers. He paid the window tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was said to be a good-looking, broad-shouldered youth and stood over 6 feet tall. His normal dress was a three-cocked hat, a long coat, top-boots and a huge necktie, which was wrapped thrice round his neck. In his old age he became quite deaf and then blind, but kept up an interest in the estate; he was led about by an Elliot who lived at Hasliehirst and became known as 'Blinnd Harrot'. Born at Harwood, he lived on the estate all his life and also dropped down dead there in the garden, aged 84, and was buried in Hobkirk churchyard. He never married and was succeeded by his nephew William; the succession was set out in a 'deed of tailzie' in 1769, and formalised in a disposition of 1783. Henry (18th C.) younger son of John, farmer in Cooms. He farmed at Sorbietrees. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Henry in Sorbietrees. He married Christian

Scott, from Falnash. Their children were: William in Sorbietrees; Catherine; and Elizabeth, who married Adam Elliot in Flatt. Henry (1712–91) younger son of Henry of Lodgegill, he was farmer at Flatt. He is probably the 'Henry Eliot in Flatt' who paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. He was recorded at Flatt on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was a witness in 1788 at the court proceedings to establish Maj.-Gen. William Elliot as head of the clan. Also in 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, specifically under 'Votes of Mr. Thomas Waugh'. He married Janet Little (c.1730–99). Their children were: Margaret (b.1760), who died young; Catherine (b.1762), who married Dr. Andrew Graham from Dalkeith, probably related to Dr. Walter Graham of Hawick; Henry (1763–93), who died unmarried; and John (1769–1823), who married Jean Scott and farmed at Flatt. Henry of Peel (d.1780) son of Henry of Peel and Elizabeth Scott from Todrig. He paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He sold Peel, and afterwards farmed at Rowanburnfoot in Dumfriesshire. He married Jean, daughter of John Elliot of Binks. Their children included: Jean, William and Thomas, who all died unmarried; Capt. John (d.1782) of the 28th Foot Regiment, died at St. Kitts; George (c.1753–1807), who had a lumber business in North Carolina; Col. Henry of the Royal Marines, who emigrated to Canada; and Catherine, who married Joseph Jackson in Harlaw Mill. His executors were: his brother Capt. William; Henry in Flatt; John of Binks; advocate Adam Ogilvie; Cornelius Elliot, W.S.; Lieut. John; Robert, brother of Henry of Harwood; and John in Burnmouth. Henry (1731–90) son of William of Tarras, he was tenant in Dinlees. He is recorded at Dinlees in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry. Henry (b.c.1740) son of William of Bush and Binks. He was tenant farmer in Stanniswater, Wester Kirk. He married Jean Laidlaw from Gorrenberry and their children included: Henry, who died young; William in Stanniswater (b.1774), who moved to Fauldshope; Margaret (c.1776–1842), who married Walter Anderson of Broom; and Catherine, who married James Graham at Irving. Maj.-Gen. Henry of Rosebank, Kelso (1763–1841) younger son of Robert of Harwood. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He was served as heir of provision to his uncle Henry of Harwood in 1787. He married Jean (or Janet, 1780–1863), daughter of Rev. Dr. Thomas Somerville. He died without issue. Henry (c.1765–1860) tenant at West Fodderlee and Westerhouses. He could be the son of William, shepherd in Templehallshiels, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1764. He was at West Fodderlee in 1841. In 1851 he was a widower at Westerhouses, farming 200 arable acres and 870 acres of moor and pasture, employing 13 people. He married Robina Burnett (c.1722–1844) in Robertson Parish in 1790. Their children included: William (b.1790), baptised in Robertson; James (b.1794), baptised in Yarrow; Henry (1802–73), baptised in Yarrow, tenant at Greenriver; and Robert (1805–45), baptised in Robertson. He died at Westerhouses. Henry (1769–1841) son of Capt. Robert and Elizabeth Pringle. He became an ensign in the 70th Regiment, serving in Ireland and the West Indies. He was then an officer with the 60th and 96th Regiments, and ended up as Lieut.-Col. He retired from the Army and settle at Rosebank, near Kelso. He became a member of the Jedforest Club and was the chairman at the 1834 dinner when refusal to toast the sitting M.P. led to most of the Whigs to leave the club. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. He died at Rosebank, Kelso, and is buried in Jedburgh Kirkyard. Henry (b.c.1770) servant at Penchrise according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Henry (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Robina Burnet and their son Robert was baptised in 1805. Henry (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Elliots. He may be the Henry who was a servant at Wauchope on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. His children included: Henry (b.1812); Betty (b.1815); an unnamed child (b.1817); and Robert (b.1819). Henry (1792–1874) son of William in Dinlees. He was a tenant farmer in Colterscleuch and Dinlees. He leased Colterscleuch in 1816 and gave up the lease of Dinlees in 1842. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was listed at Colterscleuch in 1841 and in 1851 and 1861 was farmer of 1700 acres there, employing 5 labourers. He was still listed there in 1868. He married Janet (b.1793), daughter of Walter Elliot in Hermitage. Their children (baptised in Cavers and Castleton Parishes) included: William (b.1813), tenant in Colterscleuch; Janet (b.1815); Helen (b.1815), twin of Janet; William (again, 1817–98) tenant in Colterscleuch; Agnes (b.1820); Agnes (again, b.1823); Margaret (1825–1905); Betsy (b.c.1829); Walter (1827–49); Esther (1833–56); Mary (b.c.1835) and Joanna (1837–1920), who married John Harrison, and had children who later farmed at Colterscleuch. He is buried at Castleton. Henry (1793–1818) eldest son of John, tenant in Flatt, he was born in Castleton Parish. He had a son William (b.1817) in Cumberland with Esther Glendinning of Newcastleton. He died in Jamaica Henry (1802–73) son of Henry, farmer at West Fodderlee and Westerhouses. He was born at Rawflat and baptised in Yarrow Parish. He was tenant of Greenriver (i.e. Hobsburn). In the 1830s he farmed at West Fodderlee, and at Gatehousecote in the 1840s. In the flood of 1846 he lost 28 sheep from the lands he farmed at Weens Haugh. In 1851 he was at Gatehousecote, farming 1300 acres of pasture and employing 35 people. By 1861 he was at Greenriver, as farmer of 4300 acres, employing 30 labourers. He lived there for the rest of his life. He also ran the various farms of the Abbotrule estate for the 4 Henderson brothers. He also had the farms of Dalgleish, Westerhouses (where he was recorded in a directory of 1868) and Dykeraw. Additionally he ran the financial arrangements for Charles Scott, who farmed at Tythehouse and Dykeraw. He is said to have been a good judge of cattle and familiar at Newcastle market. He always carried a lucky half-crown in his pocket, which was worn down to a blank piece of silver by the time of this death. He married Agnes Taylor in 1833 and she died in 1878, aged 71. Their children included: John (1831–78), a surgeon in Calcutta; Janet (b.1833), who died in infancy; Janet (1835–48); Robina (1836–1907), who married Peter Pennycook of New Hall in 1855; Agnes (1837–1906), who married William Scott and died in Edinburgh; Henry (1839–91), who succeeded on the farms; Jane (1840–56); Margaret (b.1843), who died young; and Margaret (again, 1851–83). He is buried in Hobkirk churchyard. Sir Henry George (1817–1907) 2nd son of Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 2nd Earl of Minto. He had a career in the Diplomatic Service, holding posts in many capitals of Europe, ending as Ambassador in Vienna 1877–84. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Edmund Antrobus. Their children were Gertrude (who died unmarried) and Sir Francis Edmund Hugh. Henry (b.c.1819) son of James, farmer at Lymiecleuch. In 1851 he was listed as head of the family, with the 3700 acre farm of Lymiecleuch held in trust for his siblings

Scott, William, Walter, Mary and Janet. Henry (b.1821–63) son of Thomas and Helen Scott. In 1851 he was farmer of ‘a large store farm’ employing 9 labourers at Kirndeane. He lived with his sisters Ann and Christian. In 1861 he was farmer at Lanton in Jedburgh Parish, where he died. Henry (b.1823/4) from Canonbie, he was a baker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was at about 46 North Hermitage Street. His wife was Ann and their children included Robert, John, William and Helen. Henry Erskine (b.1829/30) joiner in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was journeyman carpenter with James Douglas in Newcastleton, and listed there as ‘Cousin’s Son’. He was living at about 6 Langholm Street in 1861, and employing 7 men. In 1859 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott and Isabel Grieve. Their children included: James Douglas (b.c.1860); Beatrice Cavers (b.1861); Isabella (b.1863); William Thomas (b.1866); and Jane (b.1868). Henry (1839–91) son of Henry, from whom he took over as farmer at Greenriver in Rulewater. Shortly after his mother’s death in 1878 he became ill himself, eventually becoming paralysed. He was looked after by his sister Robina Pennycook and the farm was run by his nephew James Lindsay Oliver. Herman F. (1854–95) 4th son of Sir Walter of Wolfelee. He was born in India, was educated at Harrow and joined the Black Watch, rising to the rank of Major. He was apparently very stout. He was decorated in Egypt and the Sudan and died in Mauritius. Hugh (14th C.) son of William ‘Eliot of Upton in ye Clay’. He was pardoned in 1333 by Edward III for the death of Thomas ‘Coppille of Hedon’, on account of his service at the siege of Berwick. Hugh (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for John ‘Bleak’ in Hawick in 1639. This was along with William, who may have been related. He is also described as ‘Hew Elliot, smith’ when he was a witness in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642. ‘John Elliot, wag’ was also a witness, so may have been his brother or other relation. He is probably the Hugh, married to Margaret Dickson, whose children born in Hawick included Helen (b.1640), William (b.1643) and Hugh (b.1644). Hugh (17th C.) recorded as ‘Hewgo Elliot, smith’ in 1685 when he was fined by the Hawick Magistrates for throwing off Adam Young’s bonnet in the church, to which Adam Young retaliated and was also fined; Adam was also a smith, so this may have been a professional rivalry. He is probably the Hugh, son of Hugh and Margaret Dickson, who was born in Hawick in 1644. He was listed as a smith in 1685 when he witnessed a baptism for James Aitchison in 1685 (along with Lancelot Aitchison, who lived at Newmill), in 1687 when he witnessed a baptism for James Davidson and another for James Atkinson in 1687. He is probably the ‘Hew Elliott, smythe in Newmylnes, in Slit-trig’ in 1672 when he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick, gratis, ‘by the importunity of ane person of quality’. Hugh (1752–1830) 2nd son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Minto. He was brother of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was educated along with his elder brother and the pair were mentored by David Hume. He attended Oxford University and finished his military training at Metz. He fought with the Russian Army and then became a British diplomat in Bavaria before being appointed Ambassador to Prussia. In 1780 he married his first wife, Charlotte von Kraut and fought a duel with her lover (a scandal that, it is said, followed him for the rest of his life). After he moved to Copenhagen he abducted his daughter Isabella from his wife’s influence in Berlin, and the couple divorced. He then served in Dresden and Naples and was Governor of the Leeward Islands 1809–14. He was a strong abolitionist and was reported to be the force behind the conviction of a man for the murder of a slave in the British Virgin Islands. In the period 1814–20 he served as Governor of Madras. He secondly married Margaret Jones, after whom Lady Elliot Island in Queensland was named. His children were: Isabella (d.1826), who married George Payne; Theodore Henry (d.1842); Emma (d.1866), who married Sir Thomas Hislop; Edward Francis (1796–1866); Caroline; Harriet Agnes; Gilbert (1800–91), Dean of Bristol; Adm. Sir Charles (1801–75), who was Governor of Bermuda, of Trinidad and of St. Helena; Hugh Maximillian (1802–26); and Sir Thomas Frederick (1808–80). He died in London and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Ingram (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was listed after Edmund and before Martin, who he may have been closely related to. Ingram (15th/16th C.) given a dispensation to marry, within the usually prohibited bounds of consanguinity (in the 4th degree), with Elizabeth Scott. This was granted by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale and recorded in Selkirk. The witnesses included Thomas and Alexander Scott. Ingram (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman ‘John Makrobyn’ was killed. His brother Adie was also listed, as well as Airchie. Isabel (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish (probably at Yethouse) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John, who was listed before her must have been closely related. Isabella (19th C.) listed as grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Slater's 1852 directory. She could be the Isabella from Nicol Forest in Cumberland, who was listed in 1851 at about 7 Douglas Square, with her daughters Agnes and Violet; she was wife of shepherd William. James (15th C.) listed along with Laurence, Simon and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalglish, when they were said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles, in 1482/3. His name was listed first, and so he was presumably head of some Borders branch. For his service Dickson received a grant from the King for the following 19 years. He is probably the 'Jacobi elwald' recorded at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1498 when Thomas Middlemas had remission for resetting him after he and his accomplices had burned a 'pele in bothil'. James (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. Thomas Brown in Minto and George Davidson in Raperlaw were given remission for several crimes, including helping him in thefts occurring before the date of their existing remission. Probably the same James was mentioned in 1494/5 when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including stealing livestock from Synton, with his help. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Elliots. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Jacobus elwald' in Whitmuir in 1502, along with William Ker (in the same place) and Alexander Gray in Greenbank, when they had remission for the murder of John Ford in Selkirk. The same men also had remission for resetting the sons of William (called 'Hob the King' and 'Dand the Man') and stealing from Fairnington, with James Ker acting as surety. Also in 1502, along with John Lauder and Janet Ker, he had 7 cows stolen from him from Whitmuir, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. Perhaps the same James 'Elwand' was recorded in 1514 when he was a witness to George Ker appointing Thomas Ker as Archdeacon of Glasgow. James (d.1526) recorded as 'James Elwald' when he was convicted and hanged in Edinburgh for his part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. This was an event where Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme, along with other Scotts, Elliots and their followers tried to wrest control of the young James V

from the Earl of Angus, this being part of ongoing power struggles within Scotland. His crimes also included 'common Theft and Reset of theft'. However, it seems clear that he was simply a scapegoat, being probably the most important Elliot that was captured (perhaps a son of Robert of Redheugh, for example). He could be the 'Jacobi Elwald' recorded in 1535 when 'Georgii Elwald' had a remission from the crime of associating with him. James (16th C.) entered in 1537/8 for crimes along with his brother Simon 'Elwald' and William in Leahaug, with sureties being Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald. They were accused of breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk. How he was related to other Elliots is unclear. James (16th C.) tenant in Skelfhill in 1569 when he was listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick. He may have been related to 'Gawin Elliott in Skelfhill' (later of Stobs) who was the proprietor of the lands. His name is listed as 'Jame Elliot in Skelshill'. James (16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1579 when he loaned money to John Gray in Lindean. The transaction was done in Selkirk and Thomas in Yair was one of the witnesses. In 1580 Gray confessed that he owed him more for the crops they had jointly sown at Lindean. In 1581 he paid the same John Gray £40 and was assigned half his grain; Archibald in Yair was a witness. James 'Jamie' (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding Harwood on Teviot in 1581/2. He was brother of 'Rowans Hobbe'. They were declared rebels after not appearing to answer the charge. James 'Jamie' of the Park (16th C.) recorded having a pledge before the Privy Council in 1573. He was also recorded in 1583 in a list of Elliots compiled by the English wardens. He must have been related to Jock Elliot of the Park, and may also have been descended from Simon. He was surely related to 'James Rowe of the Park' recorded in 1581. He is probably the James of the Park for whom there was surety before the Privy Council in 1573. However, there may be 2 men here, since in 1573 James of the Park was deceased when his son Hob was interchanged with John of the Park as ward with Sir William Scott of Balwearie. His son Hob was also recorded in a pledge by Border Lairds in 1578. He may be the 'James Elliott of the Park' listed in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court; Simon of the Park is listed just before him and Robert of the Park just after him, hence presumably close relatives. James 'Dobson' (16th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae. He was recorded in 1574 as 'James Elliott alias Dobsoun thair', after Archie in 'Quheittilbray', among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. He may have been related to other man of this area who were also listed, e.g. the Elliots in Priesthaugh and 'Vicar's Hob'. It is unclear what his nickname meant. James 'Grey Will's Jamie' (16th C.) recorded in 1578 as 'Jame Elliot, sone to Gray Will Elliot. He was listed among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with George Crawford of 'Lefnoreis') and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1583 he is recorded as 'Jeme Elliot called gray Wills Jeme' when listed among the Elliots of Park (separately from Jamie of the Park). He was presumably son of 'Grey Willie'. James 'the Gyde' (16th C.) recorded as 'James Elliott, called the Gyde' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He was presumably related to John who was recorded at about the same time with the same nickname (or else 'James' was an error for 'John'). James (16th C.) recorded in 1586 being 'of the Steill' when Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He is presumably related to other Elliots of the Steele. James 'Jamie' of Millburnholm (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name was listed as 'Jame of Milbourne home', and seems highly likely to have been an Elliot, perhaps the same as one of the other Jameses. James (16th C.) son of William of Mossparthickhope. In 1587/8 he is recorded being warded with the Laird of Balmuto (John Boswell); however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James 'Airchie's Jamie' (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1590 of raiding Middleton Hall in England in the previous year. He was named as 'Arches Jamye' along with 'Gib Elliott son to Robin', 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses. James of the Binks (16th C.) recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. On a later record of the same case he is 'of the Byrks', so there could be confusion over where he was from. In 1590 he was 'of the Bynckes' when accused of stealing a gelding and furniture from Englishmen John Heron and Henry Charlton. It is unclear how he might have been related to later Elliots of Binks. James (16th C.) recorded as

'Martin's man' in 1590 when he was on a list of men, including Martin's Airchie, the elder and younger Will of the Steele, Airchie 'Cowfowle' and 2 Shiels, accused of stealing from 'Dotland' a couple of years earlier. He was presumably a servant of Martin of Braidlie, and could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James see James Elliott. James of the Hill (16th/17th C.) brother of Airchie of the Hill. He is listed among a large group of Elliots and others who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was additionally listed in 1590 along with Airchie of the Hill among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott's of Carrick, and along with his brother Archie of the Hill among a group accused of rieving from 'Borne' in Redesdale. He was 'James on the hill', also in 1590, when named first along with Anthony of the Binks, James 'Half Lug', Hobbie 'the Tailor' and 60 others, accused of raiding 'Windgates', taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. He was also listed as brother of Airchie of the Hill among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbills, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'. In 1591 he was part of a group (along with his brother Airchie of the Hill) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Tailor and the tenants of Scaleby. Probably the same man is listed along with John and Mark of the Hill among men of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England in 1595. James 'Tod' (16th/17th C.) recorded as being 'alias 'todde'' in 1596 when he was among men complained about for a raid on 'Allergarthe' in England, along with Willie and Geordie 'Kange'. He was also 'Jamy Elliott 'todde'' when accused of raiding 'Dormontstead' in the same year. James (16th/17th C.) merchant in Selkirk. He was recorded in 1629 as brother of William, who was a Bailie there. James (17th C.) possessor of the farm of Clintwood in Liddesdale in 1632. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Archibald in Clintwood. James (17th C.) son of John 'wag (soldier) in Hawick' recorded in 1642. He was named as one of the men accused of stealing the wallet of the servant of the Laird of Cavers in Hawick. He gave evidence, saying that he never saw the wallet. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Davidson and their children included: William (b.1650); Jean (b.1652);

and Archibald (b.1655). James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Bessie Knox and their son James was born in 1651. The witnesses were William Mark and Robert Mathieson. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism for Thomas Mark in 1651. James (17th C.) tenant in Snaberlee, one of the executors or overseers for William Elliot of Binks in the mid-1660s. James (17th C.) recorded being 'of Bridgheuche' in a set of deeds in 1673. This may be Bridgehouse in Liddesdale or Bridgehaugh elsewhere. He was probably the cousin of William, 1st of Borthwickbrae, who was said not to be such a good farmer. James (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear if he is connected to the later Elliots of Ormiston. He could be the same as the James who was later in Hummelknowe Mill. James (17th C.) recorded as resident at Byreholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) listed as tenant at 'bour' (possibly near Bower Rig) in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He paid tax on 2 hearths, since he was tenant 'wt an kilne'. James (17th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hummelknowe Mill. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Thomas Howison, along with Robert Huntly in Ormiston. His children probably (with no mother's name give) included: Marion (b.1698); Jean (b.1700); Janet (b.1702); Martin (b.1707); Isabel (b.1709); James (b.1710); John (b.1715); Walter (b.1718); and an unnamed child (b.1719). James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bowanhill. In 1723 he halved the lease of the farm with Archibald Elliot. In 1725 it is recorded that he was 'trysted with a long continued sickness'. Isobel Beattie was assisting him, which she used as an excuse to postpone appearing to be publicly rebuked in Hawick. James (18th C.) shepherd in Stobicote. His son James was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1733; this could be the James who married Betty Goodfellow and lived at Newcastleton. James (18th C.) younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet Elliot. He was tenant in Millholm in Castleton Parish. He had a son, who was also James, and who died without children. James (18th C.) tenant at Meikle Whitlaw, recorded in 1753. He was probably son of Robert of Larriston, and brother of Robert who was a senior clerk at the Pay Office in London. Helen, who married Rulewater joiner Walter Amos, may have been his sister. He died unmarried. James (18th C.) recorded as being 'Fenwick' in 1758 when his daughter Magdalene was baptised in Hawick Parish. Gavin was witness to the baptism, this presumably being the Gavin who was known as last Elliot of Fenwick. He may have been brother of Gavin and another son of Robert of Fenwick. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Young. Their children included: John (b.1760); and Charles (b.1764). James (18th C.) son of James in Millholm and descended from the Elliots of Unthank. He was 'in Castleton' (although it is unclear whether he was tenant in the farm of Castleton, or just lived in the Parish). He died without issue. James (18th C.) recorded being 'in Harrotknow' (i.e. Harwoodknowe) in 1760 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He must have been related to John in the same place, who had children baptised in 1775 and 1780. James (b.1728) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Milsington in 1756. He married Margaret Scott in 1753 and their children included: John (1754–1817); Margaret (b.1756); William (b.1757); Francis (b.1758); Andrew (b.1760); James (1761–1850); and Betty (b.1768). James (1729/30–1819) tenant at Harwood-sike-foot and then Little Whitlaw. He was at Sykefoot in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 farm horses and 2 non-working dogs. He married Christian Blyth, who died at Harwood-sike-foot in 1796, aged 61; she was daughter of John Blyth, Deacon of the shoemakers of Jedburgh, and his second wife, Janet Scott. Their children included: William (b.1764), who died in Jamaica; Janet (b.1766); John (b.1768); Isabella (b.1773), who married farmer John Angus; and Peggy (b.1776). The family are buried in St. Mary's Kirkyard. James (1733–94) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth (or Betty, 1729–1817) Goodfellow, and they both died in Newcastleton. Their children included: James (1762–1851), who married Christian Fletcher; probably Eupham; Elizabeth (b.1766); and Elspeth (b.1770). He could be the James, son of James, shepherd at Stobicote, born in Cavers Parish in 1733. James (18th C.) listed as innkeeper at 'Harrot' in 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Hawick Parish. He was probably based at Harwood-on-Teviot. James (c.1733–1816) son of John of Whithaugh and Margaret Scott. He was a shepherd in Twislehope. He married Elizabeth Jackson (c.1744–1806) Their children included: Rolland (c.1766–99), who married Katherine Little; Barbara (c.1774–92); and James (b.1783). James of Ormiston (1736–82) son of

Walter of Ormiston. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Oliver and Helen Curren. In 1778 he married Isabel Rule in Hawick; she was presumably his 2nd wife and the couple were fined by Cavers Session in 1779 for their irregular marriage. An entry in the diary of James Sibbald states 'Heard at the fair James Elliot of Ormiston was married to his own servant'. His children included: Simon (b.1770); James (b.1776); and Andrew (b.1777), who may have been shepherd at Cocklawfoot and emigrated. All 3 of these children were baptised in Cavers in 1778. It seems that his children were unable to inherit and hence Ormiston went to his sister Helen and her husband Thomas Curren. James (1748–1828) shepherd in Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen Elliot, who died in 1809 at Cleuchhead. They are easy to confuse with a contemporary Castleton couple with the same names. Their children probably included: William (b.1773); Isabel (b.1779); Jean (b.1781); James (b.1783); John (1785–1854), who married Helen Murray and emigrated to Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario; and Walter (b.1787), who may be the Walter who lived at Dinleyhaughfoot. He died at Burngrains and is buried in Castleton. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen Elliot. They are easy to confuse with a contemporary couple of the same names. He was recorded in Tweedenside in at least the period 1774–79. His children included: Isabel (b.1774); Adam (b.1777); and Helen (b.1779). Other children probably included: Helen (b.1775); Mary (b.1780); and Thomas (b.1791). James (18th C.) resident of Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. He had sons Charles (b.1784) and George (b.1786). James (b.c.1765) joiner in Newcastleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 he was at about 3 Walter Street. James (b.1765) son of shoemaker Robert. In 1798 he married Janet Renwick, announced in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. His wife died in 1835. James (1769–1824) youngest son of William of Whithaugh. He was born in Castleton Parish and became a merchant in Hawick. He worked as a clerk for William Oliver 'Auld Cash', who was the most prominent general merchant and banker in Hawick at the time. He was listed in Oliver's 1808 will as 'my clerk, brother of John Elliot Esq of Whithaugh'. He is probably the merchant James who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1799, 1801, 1805, 1806 and 1808 for Joseph Peacock and Jean Miller. He is probably the James, merchant in Hawick, who was declared bankrupt in 1815, and who was listed as 'late Merchant in Hawick' in 1824 when his outstanding debts were to be sold. James (1770–1855) son of Ninian. His mother's name is not given on the baptism record, but it seems likely it was Janet Douglas. He was a shepherd in the Teviothead area; most of his children were born at Sundhope. He is probably the shepherd at Sundhope recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. In 1798 he married Janet (1774/5–1843), daughter of John Grieve and Elizabeth Paisley; she died at Broadhaugh. Their children included: Ninian (1799–1885), who died in Ontario; Elizabeth (b.1801); Janet (b.1803); John (b.1806), who died young; Jean (or Jane, b.1809), who married James Riddell, who lived at Lochburnfoot; John (again, b.1811), probably the carrier in Rober-ton; James (1814–80), who died at Northhouse; and William (b.1816). In 1851 he was a retired shepherd living with his daughter Jane. He died at Valesburn. James 'Jamie' (1772–1855) 3rd Laird of Wolfelee, younger son of Cornelius, the 2nd Laird, his brother William dying during their father's lifetime. He became Writer to the Signet in 1798. Trained in his father's Edinburgh law office, it is said he did not enjoy the sedentary job, but he did attend to much of his father's country business. However, from the early 1800s he improved the Wolfelee estate by planting trees and hedges, repaired dykes, cottages, etc. He was still 'junior of Woollee' listed along with his father as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1810 he became a Major in the 1st Roxburghshire Volunteers. He was also 'younger of Woolee' in 1811 when recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh. He succeeded to the estate in 1821, and for a few years lived at Mackside; he also lived at Teviotbank, Fairnington and Stewartfield. He built the mansion at Wolfelee in 1825–27 (although probably retaining some of the previous house) and it was him who changed the name from 'Woollie' to 'Wolfelee'. He was a Justice of the Peace and in 1823 fined some shepherds for playing Hobkirk Baa on the wrong day. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the Reform Bill in 1832. He was also a founder member of the Jedforest Club, but left after a political dispute in 1834. He was also one of the Magistrates of the county who were present in Hawick during the election troubles of 1837. He was living at Stewartfield in 1837. About 1849 he gave land for Wolfelee Free Kirk and Manse to be built. He had 12 children, many of whom were born at at Stewartfield (later called Hartrigge), near Jedburgh. Although personally attached to the Established Church, he gave land to establish a Free Church and manse. In 1799 he married Caroline, daughter of Walter Hunter of Polmood and Lady Caroline Mackenzie, and she died in 1824. In 1827 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Robert Davidson of Pinnaclehill, Kelso, his cousin, who died in 1856 (and is buried in Kensal Green, London). His children were: William (who died in infancy); Sir Walter (1803–87), who succeeded; James Forbes (1807–41), a Lieutenant with the 5th Madras Infantry, who died in Nellore; Robert (1807–96), twin of James, who reached the age of 89; John Elphinstone (b.1810), Rector of Whalton, Morpeth, who married Georgina Bates of Milburn and changed his surname to Elliot-Bates; William Thomas (1812–90), who died in Australia; George Mackenzie (1822–56), who also died in Australia; Charles (1824–88), Royal Artillery Colonel, who married Christina Ramsay of Balmain and later Mary, daughter of Henry Davidson of Muirhouse and the Archbishop of Canterbury's sister; Caroline (b.1805), who died at the age of 13; Elizabeth Margaret (d.1889), who died unmarried; Eleanor Mary (1815–1915), who married Herman Freyherr von Poellnitz and reached the age of 100; and another child (with his 2nd wife), who died young. He helped 2 of his sisters out of debt. He was known as a Liberal in politics. He was said to be still riding his horse into his eighties. Bailie James (18th/19th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in the early 1800s, both before and after 1810. He witnessed a baptisms for baker John Wilson and printer Robert Armstrong in 1809. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Young and their children included: John (b.1796); Isabell (b.1798); Daniel (b.1800); James (b.1802); and Elizabeth (b.1804). James of Goldielands (1769–1848), son of shoemaker Adam and descended from the Elliots in Brugh, he became a teacher in Wilton. He wrote 'A Scripture Catechism, with references instead of answers', running to 4 editions (the last 3 being 1798, 1803 and 1808). He retired as schoolmaster at Wilton in about 1810 and was replaced by James Turnbull. Around the same year he was put in charge of supervising the cutting that had to be done to create the Avenue leading to Wilton Lodge. He was overseer of works (or factor) for the Duke of Buccleuch, serving from about 1810 into at least the late 1830s, and living at Goldielands; he was there on the 1841 census. Baron Von Holbein lodged with him as a prisoner during the Napoleonic Wars. He was recorded as 'Mr. Js.át Goldielands when his father died in 1815. He was a prominent Hawick Tory, taking an active part in local politics in the early 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 and may be the 'J. Elliot, Hawick' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. A letter to him from 1825, relating to the Duke of Buccleuch's share of the assessment for Ettrick Kirk is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was also one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826. He provided the minister with details of the agricultural state of Hawick Parish for the 1839 entry in the New Statistical Account. He married Agnes Pirrie (d.1840) in Wilton in 1794; it is suggested that she was born in 1758, but that is surely too early. All their children were baptised in Wilton Parish: Margaret (b.1795), the eldest daughter, who married John Wilson, 'the Dip'; Adam (b.1797), a medical doctor, who later lived at Goldielands; Agnes (1799–1863); William (b.1801), hosiery manufacturer; Helen or Nelly (b.1803); James (b.1805), mathematics and physics professor in Liverpool; and Robert (1807–88) of Laighwood, Dunkeld. Letters of his for the period 1810–37 are in the National Archives. His will in Jedburgh Sheriff Court Records is dated 1849. His portrait is in the Museum, painted by an unknown artist. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is presumably the same as another James. He could be the James recorded as driver in Newcastleton in 1835 or the other James recorded as joiner. James (18th/19th C.) recorded being 'with John Stratton' (i.e. currier John Straiton) in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed as 'now Currier in Jedburgh' among men who were balloted in 1797, but 'absent accountable for'. It therefore seems that he did not serve in the Militia for some reason. James (b.1772) son of Thomas and Helen Douglas. He was recorded as a mason at 'Brough Shankfoot' on the ballots for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801. His brother Walter was also on both lists, with another mason Robert on the list in 1801 (and hence perhaps another brother). James (b.c.1770s) nailer in Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. James (b.c.1780) servant at Flatt according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801.

James (18th/19th C.) blacksmith, probably in Castleton Parish. He married Janet Robson and their children included James (b.1818/9), who was an agricultural labourer in Newcastleton. His wife secondly married William Cowan, who she is recorded with in 1841. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Glendinning and their children included: William (b.1827); John (b.1829); Thomas (b.1832); Adam (b.1834); and Jane (b.1837). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Bella Armstrong and their children included: Betty (b.1826); George (b.1828); and Janet (b.1831). These 3 were all baptised in 1835. His widow, son George and daughter Janet (or 'Jenny') were living at about 11 South Liddle Street in 1841. James of Cooms (18th/19th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1822. James (18th/19th C.) listed as shepherd at 'Waterside, Castleton' among heads of household in 1836–41. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Foulshiels in Castleton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–40. He emigrated to America in about 1840. James (18th/19th C.) teacher at Hermitage School. He was listed there among heads of households in the Parish in 1835–38 and recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 the schoolhouse there was occupied by labourer Robert (and family), who may have been his son. James (b.1783/4) from England, he served with the 2nd Dragoon Guards. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at about 54 High Street with his wife Mary. In 1851 he was a lodger with the Bells on Turk's Close and recorded as a Chelsea Pensioner. In 1861 he was living with his daughter Agnes and her husband Thomas Crosbie. James 'Lymie' (c.1785–1850) farmer at Lymiecleuch in 1841. He may have been son of James, shepherd in Twislehope. He was at Lymiecleuch in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' and in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He was known as a breeder of Cheviot sheep and liked to argue on topics such as free trade and sailors' rights. As a member of the Wisp Club it was said that each year he had increasingly 'blenched locks, and did not decrease his waist-band', with Robert Govenlock eventually exclaiming that 'If I had a stable full of horses, with that man's constitution, in these days of opposition coaching, I'd run Croall and the whole lot of them clean off the road'. He married Betty Scott (c.1789–1835). Their children included:

Elizabeth (1810–35); James (1814–27); Rolland (b.1815), tenant in Mackside; Henry (b.c.1819); Scott (b.1824); Mary (b.c.1826); James (again, 1828–43); William (b.1830); Janet (b.1834); and Walter (b.1835). In 1851 the head of the family was Henry, with the 3700 acre farm held in trust for his siblings Scott, William, Walter, Mary and Janet. His daughters may be among the 'Lasses o' Limey' that John Halliday wrote about in a poem of the same name. James (b.1787/8) agricultural labourer in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was at Robertson Woodfoot and in 1851 was farmer of 6 acres there. In 1861 his wife and 2 sons were living at Riddell Mill. His wife was Jane (b.1799/1800) and their children included: John (b.c.1823); James (b.c.1825), a dyker; Janet (b.c.1826); William (b.c.1828); Adam (b.c.1830); and Alexander (b.c.1832). James (1792/3–1873) carter and sheep dealer in Newcastleton. He could be the 'J. Elliot, N. Castleton' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is probably the cattle dealer of that name listed as male head of his family in Newcastleton in 1835. In 1851 and 1861 he lived at about 29 North Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Shiel (1808–87). Their children included: Rolland E. (1832–88), who died in New Westminster, British Columbia; Robert (b.1834); Thomas (b.1836); James (1839–47); Katherine (1841–47); Charles Scott (b.1843); William (b.1846); and James (b.1849). He died at Kershopebrae, and his wife died in Hawick. James (1794–1884) born in Robertson Parish, son of John and Elizabeth Scott. He was long-time proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb, being a spirit merchant at 3 Orrock Place. He may be the same James recorded as proprietor of a public house on 'High St.' in Pigot's 1825 directory (and this could be the Punch Bowl at No. 27, marked 'Elliot' on Wood's 1824 map), and listed as a vintner on the Round Close in Pigot's 1837 directory; this same James was proprietor of the Royal Oak in 1832. On the 1841 census he was an innkeeper and spirit dealer on the Sandbed. In 1851 he is listed as a vintner on Orrock Place, in Slater's 1852 directory he is a vintner at the Ewe and Lamb and in 1861 he was innkeeper at 3 Orrock Place. He may have ceased to be proprietor of the Ewe & Lamb in the late 1860s. He married Helen Paterson (1806/7–54). Their children included: John (1835–58), who was Cornet in 1855; Helen (b.1838); William (b.1841), who died in infancy; Elizabeth or 'Betsy' (b.1843); Ann Scoon ('Annie', 1844–92); Margaret (b.1846), who died young; and James.

A portrait exists of him. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. James (b.c.1797) grocer and spirit dealer on Needle Street. He is recorded there in 1841, along with wife Agnes and children Agnes, Margaret and Benjamin. Probably the same James is listed as a grocer on the Mid Row in Pigot's 1837 directory. James (1797–1866) son of Robert and Wilhelmina Hislop, he was born in Castleton Parish, where most of his children were baptised. He became farmer at Middleholm, near Langholm. He married Helen (1804–80), daughter of joiner John Douglas. Their children included: Robert (1824–50), who died in Liverpool; Elizabeth Beattie (1825–94), who married Langholm clogger Thomas Hounam; John (1828–56), who worked as a joiner with his uncle James Douglas; Anne (1830–95); Christian Douglas (1833–89), who married shepherd William Elliot Pringle; Janet Douglas (1835–92), who married forester Adam Inglis; William Douglas (1837–87), who lived in Langholm; James Douglas (1840–1920), who also farmed at Middleholm and later lived in Ewesdale; Walter Douglas (1843–77), bank clerk, who moved to County Durham; and Douglas (1846–1919), bank cashier in Yorkshire. James (b.c.1800) from Newcastleton, he was a shoemaker on Havelock Street in Wilton, listed in 1861. His children included Andrew, Elizabeth, Helen, James and William. His children were born in Teviothead and Langholm parishes. James (b.1800/1) from Teviothead Parish, he was shepherd at Wauchope Common. In 1851 he was living at Hawthornside Cottages and listed as a shepherd, and was listed as retired at Wauchope Common in 1861. He married Margaret Scott (from Ettrick), and their children included Adam, Isabella and Mary. James (b.1802/3) born in Minto Parish, probably son of William. He was a farmer and then a grocer, wine and spirit dealer at the Crown Inn in Denholm in the 1860s. He may also have been a joiner in Denholm. In 1837 he married Mary, daughter of farmer Robert Bulman. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his father-in-law, probably at Eastgatehall farm. By 1861 he was on Main Street as a grocer, etc. His children were: Alison (b.1838); Janet (b.1840), perhaps also known as Jessie; Elizabeth Simpson ('Eliza', b.1840), probably twin of Janet; William (b.1845); and Mary Ann (b.1850). James (b.1803/4–80) son of John and Jean Scott, he was tenant farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish and later at Westwater. By 1851 he was 'Farmer not now tenant but residing' at Flatt. He was succeeded in the tenancy of Flatt by his nephew John. He married Margaret Little (c.1818–83) in 1847 and their children included: John (1848–66); William (1849–97), also tenant in Westwater; Thomas Scott (1850–1906), who died at Salkend; Jane Scott (1851–1928); James Main (1855–1917); George Thompson (1855–1921), who died at Twickenham; and Henry (1864–1913), an engineer, who died in Barcelona. James (b.c.1805) labourer in Hobkirk Parish. In 1841 he was living at Langburnshiels. He married Margaret Scott in 1838. Their children included: Janet (b.1838); Isabella (b.1845); and Mary (b.1850), born in Kirkton Parish. James (b.1862) may also have been their son. James of Goldielands (b.1805) son of the earlier James, who was teacher at Wilton. Later in life he was also referred to as 'Professor Elliot', while his brother Adam was called 'Dr. Elliot, Goldielands'. In 1841 he was listed as a teacher, living with his father at Goldielands. In 1851 he was a teacher of mathematics, lodging in Duke Street in Edinburgh. He contributed talks to the Archæological Society (e.g. on local birds in 1876), and he described the geology of Upper Teviotdale for the Edinburgh Geological Society in 1870 and the Hawick district for the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club in 1873. In 1880 he gave the land of the former bowling green off Bourtree Place to the Baptist congregation. He is probably the James who was Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy at Queen's College in Liverpool. He wrote 'An Elementary Course of Practical Mathematics' (1850), which ran to several editions, 'Moses and Modern Science', as well as several other books. In 1857 he was described as 'late of Edinburgh, now of Queen's College, Liverpool'. In 1879 he wrote to the Spectator about the extraordinary mental arithmetic powers of his friend (and fellow student at Edinburgh) George Bidder. Adam who wrote to Charles Darwin from Liverpool in 1872 (about the possible offspring of a woman and an ape) may have been his son. James (1807–41) eldest son of James the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee and brother of Walter, 4th Laird. He was a Lieutenant in the 5th Madras Native Infantry and died in Nellore (south-eastern India). He had a twin, Robert, who died in 1896. James (b.1807/8) from England, he was a farmer in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living in North Hermitage Street and farming 4 acres. His wife was Helen and their children included William, Isabel, John, James, Mary, Esther, Jane and Rubina. James (b.1812/3) from Langholm, he was an agricultural labourer living in Castleton

Parish. He could be the 'driver' at 'Wheathaugh' recorded as a head of household in Castleton for the first time in 1837. In 1851 he was residing at Whithaughburn and in 1861 at Whithaugh Cottages (probably the same place). He married Sophia Miller (b.c.1814) from Eskdalemuir. Their children included: George (b.c.1839); Archibald (b.c.1841); Thomas (b.c.1845); Andrew (b.c.1846); Euphemia (b.c.1848); Isabella (b.1849); John (b.1851); and William (b.1854). James (b.1812/3–90) born in Northumberland, son of Robert of Hermitage, who farmed at Moraylees and Haydon Bridge. His mother was Mary Scott from Skelfhill. He farmed at Galalaw. In 1851 and 1861 he was farming 250 acres there, and employing 12 people. At the same time Robert Turnbull farmed the other part of Galalaw. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1853. James (1814–80) son of shepherd James and Janet Grieve. He was recorded as a shepherd at Broadhaugh in Teviothead Parish in 1851 and was a labourer living at Lochburnfoot in 1861. He married Mary Nichol (1818–1901), who died in Hawick. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1841); Margaret (b.1845), who married John Young; and Eliza (b.1847), who married James Inglis. He died at Northhouse. James (b.1818/9) agricultural labourer in Newcastleton, son of blacksmith James and Janet Robson. In 1861 he was living at about 13 South Liddel Street. In Castleton in 1847 he married Ann (or Annie), daughter of Matthew Elliot and Dorothy Purdom. Their children (some of whom were born in Northumberland) included: Janet (b.1847); James (b.1849); Matthew (b.1849); Dorothy (b.1852); Isabella; Thomas; and William. He could be the labourer James who was visiting farmer Henry at Gatehousecote at the time of the 1851 census. James (b.1819/20) born at Wolfcleuchhead, he was a coal carter. In 1851 he was visiting William Mercer in Galashiels. James (b.1825/6) born at Hayeknowe, son of Thomas and Margaret Hume. He was a grocer at 2 Buccleuch Street. In 1861 he was listed as a grocer at 7 Sandbed, with his brother Thomas and George also in his house. He married Jane Peddie Ewen in 1861. Their children included: Thomas; Jane Ewen; and James Oliver. James (1830–77) son of John. He was inn-keeper of the Grapes Hotel in Liddesdale in the 1860s and 1870s and died there. James (19th C.) married Dorothea Liddell in Wilton Parish in 1854. James Thomas Spencer 5th Laird of Wolfelee

(1845–92) eldest son of Sir Walter. He was born in Madras and educated at Harrow. Poor eyesight hampered some of his career prospects (and he also apparently became quite hefty in later life). He spent about 7 years in Argentina, returning in 1872, and living at Wolfelee. He became involved in local and national politics and stood as Conservative candidate for the Hawick Burghs in 1880, and was defeated by Sir George Trevelyan. He then bought some land in Manitoba, but did not live there for long. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1875. He represented the Borders at the Highland and Agricultural Society, and personally managed 2 of the farms on the Wolfelee estate (with the help of Mr. McPherson). He was a J.P. and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He joined the Border Mounted Rifles (volunteers), eventually becoming Quartermaster Sergeant before they were disbanded in 1892. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. In addition he was Vice-President of the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association in the 1880s. He was also a keen Freemason, holding high office locally and nationally. He was a guest of the 1888 Common Riding Dinner. He was a Mason, serving as Deputy Provincial Grand Master. He succeeded his father in 1887, but had no children and hence was succeeded by his brother Edward. In 1888 he married Emily Grace, 2nd daughter of William St. Lawrence Gethin, brother of an Irish Baronet, and the couple resided at Wolfelee. He died suddenly, aged 47 and was buried in Southdean churchyard – 'My name it is J.T.S. Elliot, And I am the laird o' Wolfelee; A fig for the Rosebury Earl, Wha thinks he daur meddle wi' me' [JCG]. James (1848–1928) son of William, shepherd at Scotch Kershope. He worked as a gamekeeper in Liddesdale and was later a farmer over the Border. He married Margaret Murray (1854–1918) and their children were: Davina (1873–96); William (1875–1902); and Catherine (1877–1974), who married Alexander Hunter. James (1859/60–1936) postmaster in Newcastleton. He was grandson of William and Isabella Armstrong, who are buried in the same lair at Ettleton. He married Lizzie Jane, who died in 1919, aged 50. They had a son John who died of wounds in 1918. James 'Jimmy' (d.1923), J.P., farmer at Burnhead and later at the Flex. He was for a long time a member of the Common Riding Race Committee. He was recorded as the starter at the Common Riding Races in 1873 and 1875 and gave several speeches at Common Ridings in the 1890s. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1880. He also acted as Convenor of West Teviotdale for the Highland and Agricultural Society and was invited to be a wool judge when the Agricultural Show came to Hawick in 1914. In 1895 he gained the farms of Meikle and Little Whitlaw from the Scotts of Buccleuch, exchanging them for Fenwick. He was still alive in 1919 when there was a gathering of the Flex photographed. In 1892 he married Isabella Douglas Amos (d.1945), daughter of James Amos. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. He left a sum of £500, the interest to be run for as prize money in the Flex Stakes each year at the Common Riding. James (b.1873) son of Francis, he was born at Parkhill-haugh in Robertson Parish, where his father was a stone dyker. He was educated at Robert School and was an apprentice blacksmith with William Pow at Borthwickbraeburnfoot. He came to Bonchester Bridge as a journeyman blacksmith with Thomas Rutherford, then went to Edinburgh and worked with Mackenzie Brothers there for 8 years. He joined the 4th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots in Edinburgh in 1896. He returned to Bonchester Bridge to take over as blacksmith from the Rutherfords in about 1902. He was Superintendent of Range for Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905 and then Secretary. In 1899 he was married in Edinburgh. Jane see Jean. Jane (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Miss Jane, Burngrains' in 1821 when subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. She could be the Jean (b.1781), daughter of James, who died at Burngrains. Janet (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. Janet (19th C.) listed as grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Slater's 1852 directory. She could be the 'Jeannie' listed in the 1851 census as mother of grocer James Edgar, probably at 28 Langholm Street. Jean nee Rutherford (d.bef. 1621) daughter of Jean and granddaughter of Gavin of Stobs. She inherited Stobs in 1607, along with her aunts Dorothy and Esther. She married William, brother of Robert Elliot, 17th of Redheugh, and they had 3 children: Robert; Francis; and James. Her husband was successively called 'of Hartsgarth', 'of Rig' and 'of Hartshaugh'. Jean (17th C.) listed as resident of Redheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. There were John Elliots listed before and after her, and so she was presumably related to at least one of them. Jean (1709/10–74) daughter of William, Laird of Harwood. In 1731 she married William Elliot of Black Tarras, also called 'of Ludgegill'. The marriage contract is signed by Thomas Scott of Todrig, Charles Scott (brother of the Laird of Gorrenberry), Thomas Scott of Stonedge, George Scott (brother of the Laird of Newton), John Scott of Weens, Henry Elliot (both elder and younger, in Deadwater), Robert and William Elliot (sons of John Elliot in Larriston), Henry Elliot (son of William of Harwood) and Robert Kerr (son of the deceased Andrew Kerr in Roughleenook). Many of these men were her close or distant relatives. Their oldest son was William, tenant of 'Dinlie' (presumably Dinlees). Jean (1727–1805) born at Minto, 3rd daughter of Sir Gilbert, 1st Earl of Minto. In her teens she entertained a group of Jacobites under John Goodwillie at Minto House, while her father (a staunch anti-Jacobite) hid among the crags. She is also known as the writer of a popular version of 'Flowers of the Forest'. This was published anonymously in 1776. It was written in response to a bet by her brother Gilbert (later 3rd Baronet) that she would be unable to produce a good ballad on the subject of Flodden. She must have based her version on parts of a traditional ballad, but nevertheless her interpretation quickly became popular. And although she declined to claim credit for it, she was locally referred to as 'the Flower'. Some of her other verse is published in 'The Border Elliots and the Family of Minto' (1897). She played a strong role in sorting out her father's affairs after his death in 1766. She later moved to Edinburgh, where she was described as 'a prodigious fund of Scottish anecdote', but also that she 'did not appear to have ever been handsome'. She was said to be elegant, fashionable and intelligent, with a liking for French literature. However, she was also said to be the last lady in Edinburgh to use a sedan chair. Returning to Teviotdale in her last year, she died, unmarried, at her brother's house at Monteviot. A portrait of her as an elderly woman was painted by an unknown artist (also sometimes 'Jane'). Jean 'Lucie Lass' or 'Jeanie Luce' (b.1788/9) postmistress in Newcastleton. She was described as 'a crazy female who could neither read nor write', and it later seemed unthinkable that she would ever be entrusted with the mail. She would be dressed in 'a drugget petticoat reaching a little below the knee, a man's coat and shepherd's plaid, with her feet and legs encased in a pair of Wellington boots' and in later years had a weather-beaten face, piercing eyes, shaggy eye-brows and an uncovered head. She was said to be treated well by residents of Liddesdale because she was related to some of the better families in the area, and also because she was such a gossip. She was succeeded as postmaster by Jamie Nichol. She may be the pauper living with carrier Thomas Turnbull's family at about 1 Whitchester Street in 1841. In 1851 she was listed as 'Parish Relief once District Post' on Douglas Square. She could be the pauper living with the Beattie family in 1861. It is unclear what her nickname meant. Jean (b.c.1910) originally from Jedburgh, she also lived in Hawick and later in Stirling. In 1984 she published 'Musings of a Border Grandmother'. Jesse (b.c.1775) from Midlem, he was educated in Ancrum, Jedburgh and Berwick. He was schoolmaster in Ashkirk from 1799 until the 1840s. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He married Margaret Smith. In the 1841 census he is listed at Ashkirk Schoolhouse with his wife Margaret, along with Robert and John, who were probably grandchildren. His children included: James (b.1799); Andrew (b.1800); Charles (b.1803); Margaret (b.1805); John MacKenzie (b.1807); Gilbert (b.1809), a millwright in Hawick; and Robert (b.1815). Jean (18th C.) recorded at Unthank in Ewesdale on the 1787 and 1788 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how she was related to other Elliots. Jean (1792–1864) known popularly as 'Jean Luce', she acted as postal carrier in Newcastleton, particularly to Hermitage Water. In 1851 she is recorded as a receiver of Parish Relief, living on Douglas Square. She could be the grocer Janet recorded in Newcastleton in 1852. She was said to have been reminiscent of Madge Wildfire from Walter Scott's 'Heart of Midlothian'. A local character, she never wore headgear or stockings, kept her hair cropped short, used a shepherd's plaid for warmth and liked her whisky. John (13th C.) recorded as 'Johannes de Elaund' in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He complained that one of his neighbours tried to strangle him. John (14th C.) probably an Englishman, he was recorded in 1379. He went with letters from the English Privy Council to the Earl of Douglas in Scotland and to the Earl of Northumberland and Lords Clifford and Greystoke. His surname is written 'Elyot'. John (15th C.) recorded as 'Johannis Elwald' in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots, and it is even possible he was the clan leader at the time. John (15th C.) recorded as 'Johannis Elwald' in the Exchequer Rolls of 1459 for the Lincluden area when his fine was compounded. Probably a different 'Johannis Elwald de Dauduran' is also listed. John (15th C.) listed along with James, Laurence and Simon Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles, in 1482/3. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as 'Jak elwald', he lived at Newton of Caver-ton. He had remission for several thefts: cattle from John Waddell from 'elinburn'; sheep from John Lamb in Wilton; a horse from Wilton; and sheep from William Martin in Whitchester. He also committed common theft before the time of his previous remission. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. John (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1488 sasine in which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh leased the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne. He is recorded there as 'John Elwalde of Thorleshop' and his brother Patrick is also mentioned as a witness. In 1494/5 he was listed being 'in thornlawishop' among a list of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. Presumably the same man is recorded as 'Johne Elwald in Thorleshope' in 1498 in a document listing many Liddesdale men who pledged themselves to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell for good behaviour. He must have been a close ancestor of Roland, Robert (or 'Hob' or 'Robin') and the later John of Thorlieshope. He may be the John who was one of the Elliots who witnessed a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh in 1497. John (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who did not appear before the court in Jedburgh in 1494/5. His name was given as 'Johannis elwald lawson', with the last part presumably being a nickname. It is possible he is the 'Law's John' recorded 40 years later. John (15th C.) listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was son of 'wrycrag', but it is unclear how to interpret this nickname, or who his father may have been. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Foulshiels, probably in Liddesdale. In 1502 he is 'Johannes elwald in fouschelis' when convicted of stealing 100 sheep from Walter Scott, out of Hartwoodburn. Perhaps the same John (with no location give) was listed at the same court sitting in Jedburgh in 1502, among men who Marjory Turnbull in Hawick was convicted of resetting. John (15th/16th C.) listed as 'Johne Elwald in Sondhope' in a respite of the Register of the Privy Seal of 1510 given to Robert of Redheugh and several others in Liddesdale. Since only a few Elliots are mentioned, it seems likely that he was a close relative of the chief. He is also listed along with William of Larriston and a number of other Liddesdale Elliots in another respite of 1516. He is recorded there as 'John Elwald in Sandop'. He was probably tenant of the lands of Sundhope, near Whitrope. John 'Gret Johnnie' (15th/16th C.) tenant in Priestthaugh. In about 1510 he and Patrick were entered by Robert of Redheugh at a Justice Court in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to a document for Thomas Ker of Sunderland Hall, done at Fairnilee in 1526. His surname is 'Elwand'. Chaplain George was also a witness. John 'Law's John' (16th C.) listed as one of the band of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on the farm at Craik. His name is given as 'John Elwald, called Lawis-Johne'; it is possible that his father was a Lawrence. He may have been a servant of Thomas of Mangerton, along with William, son of Alexander 'Elwald', who is also listed. It is possible he is the same man as (or otherwise related to) 'Law's Jock' mentioned in the 1570s. He could alternatively be the 'lawson' recorded in 1494/5. John 'Jock Unhappy' (d.1536) recorded as 'John Elwald, alias Jok Vnhappy' when he was convicted of theft etc., and hanged. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Joanni Elwald' on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He and his brothers were the tenants of 'Catlie' (probably 'Gatliehill'). John of the Hill (16th C.) recorded as 'Joanni de lie Hill' in 1541 on the rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants of 'Streichelhope'. He may be related to Airchie of the Hill, recorded around the 1580s and others with the same designation. John (16th C.) tenant of Ramsiegill in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. Other men recorded as being 'in Ramsiegill' (but tenants of other farms) were Robert and William. He may also be the John who was a tenant in Stirkshielhope (along with other Elliots associated with Ramsiegill); his son 'Jacobo Elwald' called 'Nelis Jok' was also named (but may be a confusion). He was perhaps related to the earlier Hob and later Gavin of Ramsiegill. John of Thorlieshope (16th C.) son of Robert (or 'Robin'). Along with others he was entered in a bond to John Kerr of Ferniehirst by

James Douglas of Cavers in 1546. He was there recorded as 'John Elwand'. There are other similar bonds involving Robert of Redheugh and him in 1547 and 1548. It is unclear what crimes he was accused of. He may be son of the 'Rolland Elwald in Thorleshop' recorded in 1516 and may be related to the John of Thorlieshope recorded in 1583. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of 'Lyndene' in the Barony of Bowden, along with other 'Elwalds'. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Braxholme. His name appears as 'Johnne Ilwand' and he was probably related to Alison and Margaret, who are also listed. John (16th C.) recorded as son to 'Hob Quhytserk' in 1546 when he was one of the men to be entered as prisoners with John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was recorded as son of 'Quhytserk' in 1548 when there was a further a bond of Robert of Redheugh with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst for him and John of Thorlieshope to be 'entered'. He was probably another Liddesdale Elliot. John 'Nelly's John' (16th C.) recorded in 1548 when, along with Robert of Redheugh and Richard of the Park, he had a bond to enter 2 prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst. He is recorded as 'Jhone Elliott, callit Nelleis Jhone'. He is probably the same man as 'Neillis Jok' (although listed as 'Jacobo Elwald', i.e. James rather than John) recorded in 1541 among the tenants in Stirkshielhope; he appears to have been son of another John, with his mother presumably being Helen. John 'Jock o the Park' or 'Little Jock Elliot' (d.bef. 1578) son of Simon of the Park. He was a notorious riever, and subject of a traditional ballad. His tower may have been located where Newcastle railway station was later built. He is recorded purchasing (or perhaps leasing) Hangingside (i.e. the land later known as Hawthornside) in 1562, confirmed in 1572/3. In October 1566 he was pursued by the Earl of Bothwell, after failing to appear at Hermitage along with the other Elliot leaders. Since he refused to stop, Bothwell shot him and they then fought at close quarters. He apparently struck Bothwell 3 times, while himself being stabbed twice in the chest, and collapsed about a mile away. It is said that he died of his wounds (although this is not clear, since it seems that the same man is documented later) and traditionally this is said to have happened on the Billhope Burn. Meanwhile Bothwell was taken back to Hermitage where he eventually recovered, after being visited by Mary Queen of Scots. In 1569 he was pledge for 'the haill branche of the Park', with William Ker of Cessford, younger, as his surety. In 1569 he was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for 'Gray Will Elliot' and 'Hob Mirk Elliot', who were surely close relatives. In 1570 he signed a bond along with other Elliots, giving pledges for Hob, son of Elder Will and John of Heuchhouse. There was surety for him in 1573, before the Privy Council. He may be the same 'Johnne of the Park' listed among Monipennie's Border chiefs, published about 1594 (but probably compiled earlier). He was 'unquhile Johnne Elliot of the Park' when it was reported that he had previously acted as joint surety for Simmie Elliot of the Park; he also served as surety for 2 other Elliots. Unless he lived to be quite old he is unlikely to be the same John of the Park recorded in the 1580s – 'They leave not spindle, spune nor spit, Bed, bolster, blanket, sark nor sheet, John o' the Park, Rypes kist and ark, For a' sic wark, He is richt meet' [SRM], 'Wha daur meddle i' me? Wha daur meddle wi' me? Oh, ma name it's we Jock Elliot, An' wha daur meddle i' me?' [T]. John 'Jock' (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as 'Jok Elliott'. John (16th C.) tenant of Fiddleton. He is recorded in 1569, along with Hob 'the Lady' and Hob of Unthank, when 'Will Elliot callit the Lord' when held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for them. He may be related to the later John in Fiddleton. John 'Law's Jock' (16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. He is recorded in 1574 as 'Jok Elliott callit Lawis Jok in Preisthauch' among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. 'Lawis Thome' and 'Lawis Richie' were also named and presumably brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Probably the same 'Jokke Elliot in Preisthauch' is listed in 1569 among the tenants that Gavin Elliott in Skelhill was surety for. It is possible he is the same man as 'Lawis-Johne' recorded in 1535. John (16th C.) described as John 'Elwood', brother of Will of the Steel in 1576 when the English Wardens complained to the Deputy Warden for West Teviotdale that he had stolen 100 sheep from Hexhamshire. He could be the same as John 'of the Steill' who was taken prisoner by Johnstone of that Ilk in 1572, with Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie entering into a bond with Johnstone for his return to Johnstone after they had 'borrowit' him. He could be the recorded John of the Steele (unless this was an error for Will of the Steele) recorded in 1590 as first in a list of Elliots of the Park and Binks, and others, accused of a raid into England. John 'Scot's Hob's Jock', 'Rob's John' (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given 'Jok Elliott, callit Scottis Hobbis Jok', and hence he was presumably son of 'Scot's Hob'. In 1581 he was part of a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale; 'Scot's Hob's Gavin' was also listed and presumably his brother. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the 'haill gang of Park'. He was listed in 1582/3 as one of the cautioners for Sim's Rowie of the Park. He is recorded as 'Johnne Elliot, called Robeis Johnne', and his name appears with Sim's Archie, Jamie's Hob and others. His name comes second (after Airchie of the Park) among those giving assurance for the Elliots of Park in the 1584 bond signed with the English Wardens at Hermitage; there he is 'Scotts Hobbs Jock of the Parke'. He was recorded as 'Scotts Hobs' Jocke' in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His father was presumably Robert and his grandfather either a Scott or nicknamed 'Scot'; However, it is otherwise unclear who he was and how he may have been related to the earlier Jock o the Park. John of Bowholm (16th C.) recorded as 'Johnne Elliot of Bewholmis' among cautioners for men accused of crimes against Englishmen in 1579/80. He was recorded as 'John Elliott of Bohomes' in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including Hob of Bowholm. In 1590/1 he was 'called Bowholmes' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. It is unclear how he was related to Hob, but they were probably brothers or father and son. His son David was declared as a fugitive in 1605. John (16th C.) son of 'Elder Will', he was sentenced to imprisonment for rieving in 1580/1, along with several other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons of Liddesdale. In 1581 James Stewart 'of Scherelaw' was cautioned to present him to the Privy Council and in 1582/3 Stewart was found liable to pay a penny for his non-appearance. He was probably brother of Robert, who was captured in Hawick in 1567. Their father was clearly William, but it is unclear to which branch of the Elliots they belonged. It is possible he was 'Johnne Elliot, sone to Will Elliot, callit the Eldar Tod' listed in 1578 among Border Lairds who promised to meet to suppress lawlessness on the Border, after being released from being warded with Alexander Abercrombie of that Ilk and also the man transcribed as 'Johnne Elliot, son of the Elder Tod' who was warded in Edinburgh in 1580. John of Heuchhouse (16th C.) prisoner in Blackness Castle in 1570, along with Hob Elliot, son of 'Elder Will'. The pair were allowed to return to Liddesdale following a bond given by Martin of Braidlie, Elder Will, John of the Park, Adam 'called Cowdas', Hob of Heuchhouse and 'Clementis Hob'; however, they were not produced after 8 days, and the Elliots incurred a penalty of 4000 merks. There was a reminder at the Privy Council in 1578/9 of the pledge to enter him into ward, along with Hob, son of Elder Will; they were supposed to go to the houses of John Cockburn of Ormiston and William Lauder of Halton, but did not go. He was also listed in 1581 along with William of Redheugh, Adam of Shaws, Archie of the Hill and others. They were accused by Englishman James Foster of 'Symwhaite' of stealing cattle and goods. In 1579/80 he was 'Johnne Elliot, son of Dand of Heuchhous' when he was listed among men (including Martin of Heuchhouse) accused of raiding into England. In the 1580s he (and Gavin of Ramsigill) also accused Capt. Carvell and his band 'with the clans of Leven' of stealing 200 cattle and 30 horses from their lands. He must have been related to the earlier Andrew and Martin of the same place. He could be the John who is recorded in 1583 as brother to Hob of Heuchhouse. He is recorded as 'Johnne Elliott of Heuchhous' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. In 1587/8 he was accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including 'Reid' Martin of Heuchhouse, who was surely a close relative. In 1587/8 his son John is recorded being held in ward (with the name not given) as part of an attempt to quell unrest on the Border; however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. In 1590 he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of 'Gersomfeeld' and the tenants of 'Dortres' in England. His name was also given in 1590 along with Croziers, Fosters and others accused of stealing livestock and a detailed list of items from a servant of Sir John Forster. In 1590/1 he was listed among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. 'William Elliott son to John of the Hewghhouse', complained about for a raid into England in 1595, was presumably his son. John 'the Gyde' (16th C.) listed in 1576 when Robert of Redheugh acted as surety for him 'that he sould abstene fra thift and resett of thift in tyme cumming'. His name was given as 'Johnne Elliot, callit Jok the Gyde', and the pledge was stated to have been broken by 1578/9. He was probably related to Jock the Gyde recorded almost 50 years later. John 'Gavin's Jock' of Ramsiegill (16th C.) listed in 1569 as 'Gawins Jok in Ramsygill'. Ade, 'callit the Cowdais' was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for him and 'Wilcokis Hob'. Perhaps the same 'Jock' was listed as tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569; the Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants, and he may have been related to Will, Dand and Hob, other Elliots who were also listed as tenants. He is recorded in 1574 among Scotsmen who were reset in England, where he was 'Gawynniss Jok' (making it clear that his father was Gavin); his brother 'Hobbe' was also mentioned. In 1576 there was a complaint that Neil Montgomery of Langshaw had allowed him to break from ward. In 1581 he was listed along with Martin of Braidlie and Robert Kerr of Ancrum when they were cautioned for the non-appearance of Jock's Willie and 'Ill Hob', both from Ramsiegill, who were possibly his sons; they were fined in 1582/3. In 1581 the notary signed for him because he could not write himself. He was listed in 1583 as 'Joke of Ramsgill' in a letter from the English wardens, where he was the first man listed under the Elliots of Burnhead. He was probably related to the Jock of Ramsiegill recorded in 1612, as well as to other Elliots of Ramsiegill and Burnhead. Probably the same man is recorded as 'Gawins Jok' under the heading 'Burnhead' in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs (published around 1594, but probably compiled earlier). It is possible he is 'Johnne Elliot' brother of 'Stottan Gib' recorded in 1598/9 among brothers, tenants and servants of William of Falnash in complaints about reiving; they could both have been brothers of William of Falnash and hence sons of Gaving of Falnash. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Johnne Elliot, callit of the Dewisleis' in 1578/9, when it was stated to the Privy Council that he was previously meant to have been placed into ward, but in fact had not been. This was along with Andrew 'callit the Wowaris Andro', with sureties John Carmichael, younger of that ilk and William Scott of Montbenger. He was probably from Eweslees. Probably the same John was recorded as being 'of the Dewhowses' in Ewesdale, along with Ringan, when they signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. John 'Jock' of the Hill (16th C.) recorded in 1583 in a list of Elliots of the Burnhead branch. He was surely related to Archie of the Hill, who is also listed. Probably the same 'Jocke Elwood' was 'brothers sonne' to Airchie of the Hill in 1591 when they were accused of plundering from Jeffrey Tailor and the tenants of Scaleby. He is probably the Jock listed along with Mark and James of the Hill among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. Possibly the same 'Johnne Elliot of the Hill' acted as cautioner in 1611 for John of Heuchhouse to appear in court at Jedburgh. John of Burnhead (16th C.) named in 1590 along with 'Gib Elliott son to Robin', 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall in the previous year. He was recorded as 'called the lard of Burneheades'. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Elliots associated with Burnhead. John 'Half Lug' (16th C.) listed among the Elliots of Burnhead in 1583, where his name is given as 'Joke Elliot called Halfe loges'. Probably the same John was 'halfe lug' in 1590, when accused with several other Elliots of leading a raid on 'Windgates' in England. He may be the 'Wyll Ellotts John of Burnheads' recorded in 1595 among Scotsmen accused of raiding into England. He was 'Jok Elliott of Burnheid, called Halfe Lug' when listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in 1605. John 'Jock' of Thorlieshope (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the Elliots of the Braidlie branch, his name appearing as 'John Elliot of Thornesope'. He may be the same as the John of Thorlieshope recorded 4 decades earlier, but is more likely to be his son. Probably the same John was recorded in 1569 when Martin of Braidlie and Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton promised to enter him in ward if requested by the Lord Regent. Probably the same John was pledge in 1569 for 'the haille branche of the Thorlishoip (except Hob of the Shaws and his brother Will of the Steele), with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule as his surety. He was also 'of Thorlishoip' when held in Wester Wemyss in 1569 as pledge for Hob of the Shaws and Archie 'Fyre the Brais'. John 'Jock' (16th C.) listed as 'Hobbis Jok' in 1581 when he was among those cautioned for the non-appearance of 'Symmis Rowie' of the Park.

Others listed were Rob's John (unless this was an error and the same man), Sim's Archie and Jamie's Hob, who may have been related to him; they were fined in 1582/3. He was also referred to as 'Johnne Elliot, called Roweis Johnne'. John 'Sim's John' of the Park (16th C.) presumably son of Simon, and probably related to 'Jock o the Park' from a couple of decades earlier. He is probably the John of the Park for whom surety was recorded in 1573. He was to be warded with Sir William Scott of Balwearie, but was interchanged with Hob, son of the deceased James of the Park; the cautioners were Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, Andrew Ker of Faldonside and Walter Riddell of that ilk. He may be the 'Johnne Elliot of the Park' listed in 1580 among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. An English list of 1583 has him first among the Elliots of Park, giving his name as 'Sims John Elliot of the Parke'; others named (to whom he was probably closely related) are 'Grey Willie', 'Scots Hobbie', Jamie of the Park, 'Grey Will's Jamie' and 'Hob's Hobbie'. Also in 1583 he was 'John Elwet of the Park' when the Halls of 'Haveracres' complained that he had led about 100 men in a raid that resulted in the deaths of 4 Halls. He may be the John of the Park, recorded in 1590 along with Gabriel, as well as Elliots of the Steele, Thorlieshope and others, who were accused of raiding into England. 'He must have been related to 'Rowie' or 'Robin' of the Park, recorded in 1578 and 1581 and 'young Archie of the Park' who was one of the Elliots to sign a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599 John 'Jock' (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire as being 'Jok Ellat in Bowgranis'. This was probably somewhere near Langholm, but could be same as Burngrains. John of Copshaw (16th/17th C.) probably a son of Robert of Redheugh, his brothers being Robert, the 14th Chief, possibly Martin of Braidlie and Archibald of Falnash. In 1561/2 he was among Elliots who had a bond with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst to enter Thomas Routledge; the others were Archie of Falnash, Archie's son Gavin and 'Elder Will'. In 1568 he led a party of Elliots, Armstrongs and others, which burned the house at Torwoodlee, killing George Pringle there. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh; his brother Tom was also listed. Also in 1580 he was said to have joined the group of Elliots and Armstrongs that raided the farm of Slaidhills, stealing cattle and leaving a servant for dead. He was also in the party that attacked some Elliots, Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in Liddesdale in 1580, killing Walter Gledstains. He was listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes, contrary to the bond between them. He may be the 'Jock of Copshawe' (surname not given) who was among a group of men accused in 1582 of taking part on a raid into England in which Martin Taylor and 3 others were killed. He is probably 'Joke Elliot called Copshawe' listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. In 1584 the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, lists him among the 'principallis of the branchis of Liddisdail'. In 1587/8 his brother Hob was held in ward with Lord Sinclair. He is also mentioned in 1588 (although this could have been his son) when Nichol Cairncross was surety for his brother Hob, who was in the Tolbooth. He may be the 'John of Copshawes' whose tower, somewhere near Saughtree, was marked on Sandison's c.1590 map of the Deabateable Land. He was named by an English informed as part of the group that raided Carlisle Castle to free 'Kinmont Willie' (although he is likely to have been too old to take part himself, and so this may have been a son). In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1594/5 he was named in an indenture between the Scottish and English Wardens. He is probably one of the 3 Johns who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In an English letter of 1596 it is stated that he had built a tower at 'Blackstone lee' (which was probably near Mangerton, or may simply have been a misunderstanding for Copshaw). He was one of the trustees for the young Robert (17th) of Redheugh appointed in about 1597. In that year he wrote (along with Robert of Redheugh and William of Hartsgarth) from Lariston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen. In 1599 he was 'Jok Elliot of Copschaw' among Elliots who signed a bond at Branhholme with the Warden of the West March regarding the inhabitants of Liddesdale; he did this with his hand on the notary's pen 'because I can nocht wryte my selff'. He was probably the Laird of Copshaw who in 1599 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'. In 1605 he was accused, along with his son Robert (and servant John Routledge and Adam 'Rakese'), of attacking Wauchope (in Rulewater) with 100 men, stealing cows, sheep, etc., but was acquitted. He was found guilty of the murder of Pringle in 1607 and denounced as a rebel when he did not appear; if this is the same man, then he must have been quite old by then. John 'Rowie's John' (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as part of a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale. Several other Elliots were listed, including Jock and Gavin, sons of 'Scot's Hob'. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the 'haill gang of Park'. He was also listed among the Elliots of the Park who signed for their whole band in the 1584 assurance given to the English Wardens. His name is given there as 'Roweis Johne of the Parke'. His father was presumably Ninian. John 'Jock o the Lies' (16th C.) one of a group of Elliots who signed a bond for 'Willie's Hob' in 1587. It is unclear where his seat was, but presumably in Liddesdale. He may have been closely related to the Elliots of Ramsiegill and of 'the Hill'. He was probably related to 'Ade Elwald de Leyis' who is recorded in 1541. John (16th C.) brother of 'Willie's Hob', he was part of the bond for his brother, made to William Douglas of Lochleven and his son James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose in 1587. His father was probably William. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Johnne Elliot, sone to umquhile Ringane the Portar, or Blasteis Jok' in 1578/9, when John Carmichael, younger of that ilk was caution for him (and others) not to raid into England. He was also 'John the Portars sonne' among Elliots of Ewesdale in Monipennie's c.1594 compilation of Border chiefs. He may have been son of Ninian 'the Porter' from Ewes Doors. John 'Lang Jock' (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding 2 separate raids in 1588. He was also recorded in 1590 as 'longe Jocke Elliot' when, along with relatives of Martin of Braidlie and others was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Probably the same man was 'longe John Elliott', accused in 1590 along with elder Will of the Steele, Archie and Martin's Gib 'the cousin' of stealing from the tenants of 'Greinridge'. He is also 'longe John' listed among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh. He was also named in 1590 on a list of Elliots, Nixons and others who were accused of being on a raid into England in 1588. His nickname presumably means he was tall. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Cowshawes' in 1590 along with other Elliots and

Nixons when there was a complaint from the English side of the Border that in 1588 they had stolen in 'playne dayelight, thir hirdes' and 24 head of cattle. He may be related to Will 'called Cowsauche', who was a fugitive in 1605. John 'Cull the Spade' (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons who were accused of going on a raid into England in 1588. He is listed separately from John 'Cowshawes', along with Gavin's Hob, who may have been close relatives. John 'the Child' (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. It is unclear what his nickname referred to, or whether he is the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) listed among Elliots and others who were accused in 1590 of taking horses and prisoners on a raid into England. He is recorded being 'of the Hillend, but separately from Mark of the Hill (making it seem that he was not directly related to that branch), and just before Elliots of Ewesdale. John 'Jock' of Burngrains (d.bef. 1608) probably from the lands near Meikledale, in Ewesdale. In 1606 his sons Hob and Will were listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. He is recorded as 'vmqle Johnne Ellote of Burnegranes' and also 'Jok of Burgranes' in 1608 when his son William (or possibly Ninian, since the records are confusing) was sentenced to hanging for resisting the King's Guard. He may have been related to Adam of Meikledale, who also held Burngrains later in the 17th century. John (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie, referred to as 'Martin's John of Burnmouth'. He was probably the son of Martin recorded in 1590 along with his brother Airchie, as well as 'Martin's Gib' and Martin of Prickinghaugh, when they were accused of stealing from Englishman Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall. He was probably the John, son of Martin, recorded on a 1590 list of Elliots (including his brother Archie and cousin Dand), Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of 'Allerweshe'. He is probably also the John listed among Elliots (including his brother Gib, as well as Airchie of Clintwood, who was also his brother) and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He was probably the John, son of Martin, who (along with his brother Gib) was part of a complaint about a raid into Gilsland in 1596, led by Sir Walter Scott of Harden. He was denounced as a rebel in 1611 and his lands and goods forfeited to Thomas Cranston. It is possible that he was the 'Johnne Elwode in Barmouth' listed in 1612 among those who supported Sir William Cranston in his commission to keep peace on the Border. John (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was son of Will of Fiddleton and listed along with his father and brother Ringan. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) listed among fugitives who did not appear at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was son of 'Heidheid', but it is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 as son of 'Wower's Andro'. He was listed as a fugitive among Liddesdale and Eskdale men not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Hawick. It is unclear who his father might have been. John 'Jock', 'the Murt' (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was also referred to in 1611 when 'Robert Elliot, called Martenis Hob' was cautioner for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. However, he was acquitted of the charges. It is unclear what his nicknamed meant, but he may have been related to Will in Burnhead, called 'Murth'. John 'Jock', 'Blackheid' (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as 'Jok Elliott, called Blakheid'. His nickname was presumably to distinguish him from other contemporary Johns. He was perhaps related to Archibald and William, who also had the same nickname. John 'Reid Jock' (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. John (16th/17th C.) son of Archie of Foulshiels. In 1611 John Ainslie, Burgess of Jedburgh was cautioner for him to appear in court at Jedburgh; however, he was acquitted of the charges. John of Heuchhouse (16th/17th C.) son of the earlier John. In 1587/8 he was 'Johnne Elliott, son fo Johnne of the Heuchhous' when held in ward (with the name not given) as part of an attempt to quell unrest on the Border; however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. Probably the same John of Heuchhouse was recorded in 1611 when John of the Hill acted as cautioner for him to appear in court at Jedburgh. He was acquitted of the charges. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.)

referred to in 1612 as 'in Braidlie'. He was on the jury for the trial of Hawick Bailies and others over the death of John Elliot 'in Redden' while in custody. He may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John 'Jock of Rynsiegill' (16th/17th C.) from Ridden in Liddesdale, the designation is probably the same as 'Ram-siegill'. He was a thief who was caught pludering from a Hawick Burgess in 1612, and imprisoned in the church steeple. He then apparently committed suicide, and his widow Bessie 'with the ffyve fatherless bairns' brought an action against the Bailies. However, it was proved by witnesses that 'he was fund lying deid ...hangit himself in his aune belt'. He was recorded in Pitcairn's 'Criminal Trials' as 'Johnne Ellote in Redden, callit Johnne of Rynsiegill'. John of Arkleton (d.bef. 1622) 2nd son of William of Falnash and brother of Robert of Falnash (who was Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire). He was also referred to as 'of Falnash'. In 1615 he witnessed a sasine of Kirkton by William Armstrong. In 1616 he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott 'the Suckler' of sheep stealing. In 1617 he appeared before the Privy Council with a number of other Border lairds to renew the bond for the good behaviour of his supporters and tenants. He married Ester Armstrong, who was one of the heirs-portioners of Ninian Armstrong of Arkleton. They had one child, Archibald of Arkleton. John 'the Dod' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1624 when Adie and Will Usher were convicted for stealing sheep from him and others. He is distinguished from John 'callit the Gyde' in the same case. He may have farmed on the Dod Burn. Perhaps the same John 'callit Dods', tenant in Thorlieshope, was recorded in 1623 when he was a cautioner (along with John Turner in Nether Nisbet) for Michael 'Birnie in Fairnylies' at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. He was probably also the 'Jok Elliot, callit Dod' who had 3 cows stolen from his lands of 'Buceburne' in 1623. John 'the Gyde' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1624 along with John 'the Dod' when they had 5 sheep stolen from them by Adie and Will Usher. It is unclear what his nickname meant (but there was also a William Scott 'the Gyde'); he is probably related to the earlier 'Jok the Gyde'. John (17th C.) recorded in 1642 as 'Jock Elliot called Jock a gods name' on a long list of Borderers to be apprehended and tried for various crimes. It is unclear what his peculiar nickname meant. His lands were probably around Liddesdale. John (17th C.) 3rd son of Robert of Falnash. Before 1644 he married

Grizel Elliot, heiress of Philhope, who had been ward of his father since her own father had died. In 1644 Philhope was sold to Archibald Elliot and Elizabeth Chisholme. He started as a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1636, but the entry is deleted 2 years later, presumably meaning that he had changes in his circumstances. This may have been the time of his marriage, when he took over running Philhope. He was probably the John, 'Falnashes brother', recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Hawick Parish in 1663, paying £216 for Broadlee. John (17th C.) described as a 'wag', i.e. soldier, in Hawick in 1642 when he is listed among a large number of people accused of theft (probably wrongly). His son James was also mentioned there. John (17th C.) described as 'in Whitscheill' in 1665 when he was named as a debtor of William Elliot of Binks, along with many other Elliots. John (17th C.) said to have been an illegitimate son of the first Gavin of Brugh, he was hanged for theft at Hexham. However, these generations are quite confused. John (d.1679) from Southdean Parish. He is recorded as one of the men banished to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and dying at Moul Head of Deerness, in Orkney, when their ship wrecked and they were ordered shut up beneath the hatches. John (d.c.1685) tenant in Hyndhope (although it is not clear which one). His will is recorded in 1685. John of Thorlieshope (1621-98) son of Adam of Meikledale. In 1657 his father purchased for him the lands of 'Is-gill' (or Elfgill), 'Midgehop' (or Midgeholm) and Newbigging, retaining the liferent for himself. In 1671 he was 'indweller in Hudshouse' and already possessed Thorlieshope. He purchased Larriston Rig and Hopehead and in 1675 he gave a 'wadsett' for Robert Elliot of Larriston's lands of Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope and 'Greenhollis'. He paid tax on £520 in Castleton Parish in 1678. He probably had the house at Thorlieshope rebuilt in 1682 (since there is a stone there bearing that date). In 1690 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1697 he (along with his 3rd son John) purchased another wadsett on the lands of Larriston Rig and Hopehead. He was a Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire in 1690. It is said that he was conspicuous among the band of local minor Lairds who engaged in smuggling cattle across the Border during the time when such trade was illegal. He was a cautioner for a bond by Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692, and also witnessed the bond between Harwood and Bewlie in 1692.

He was recorded at the Castleton Kirk Session in 1698. He married Jean Elliot of Dinlabyre before 1671. In 1677 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Thomas McDougall of Stodrig. He had 10 children: William of Thorlieshope and Ove, who was also Commissioner of Supply and married Christian Ainslie; Henry of Lodgegill (1672–1714), who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill; John of the Binks (1674–1751), who married Christian, daughter of Robert Elliot, factor to the Duke of Buccleuch; Andrew, who died unmarried; Margaret, who married Sim Elliot of Lodgegill; Janet, who married William Elliot in Penchrise; Helen, who married John Elliot of Cooms (or perhaps William of Cooms); Jean, who married Thomas Armstrong of Sorbie; Christian, who married John, brother of Elliot of Dinlabyre; and Elizabeth, who married Edward Elliot. He is buried at the Nether Kirk of the Ewes. John (17th C.) described as ‘sometimes in Dinlibeir now in Hudshouse’ in 1665 and 1668, when he was named as a creditor for the estate of William Elliot of Binks, who was his father-in-law. In 1662 he was also one of the witnesses to the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks, described as his father-in-law. John of Brugh (1627–1705) eldest son of Archibald of Brugh. He farmed and lived at Nether Southfield. He was recorded as tenant there in at least the period 1690–98, however, he was already at Southfield when his daughter Beatrix was baptised in 1654. In 1665 he borrowed money, with his brothers Gavin and Gilbert as guarantors. In 1667 he was on the panel for William of Dinlabyre being served heir to his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. He is probably the John recorded at Nether Southfield in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths there. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat and both he and Gilbert (his son) witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for William Scott (from Wilton Parish). In 1701 he was witness to the birth of the twin daughters of his son Gilbert. In 1702 he helped arrange the settlement for his grand-daughter Eleanor when she married Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. In 1702 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Robert Scott in Goldielands, for merchant Thomas ‘Hotson’ and another along with his brother Gilbert. In 1704 he and his son Gilbert witnessed a baptism for William Hood in Newbigging. He married Margaret (1630–1706), daughter of Robert Johnstone, who was said to be Minister of Ancrum, although no man of that name held that particular office, and so he was possibly minister elsewhere. she died the year after him. They had at least 9 children: William, merchant in London, later of Brugh and Wells; Gilbert in Winningtonrig and Nether Southfield; Robert, mentioned in his brother William’s will; Thomas of Haydon Bridge or Canonbie Mill, who married a Miss Robinson; an unnamed son (b.1672); George (b.1676), Minister of Hownam; Beatrix (b.1654); a daughter who married Hobbie Scott; Jeanette (b.1672), who was left money in William’s will; and Joan (b.1675), also left money in her brother’s will. Most of their children were christened in Hawick Parish. The witnesses in 1654 were William Douglas (perhaps of Cavers) and Gilbert Eliott (perhaps of Stobs), in 1672 were James Liddell (probably Hawick Town Clerk) and James Scott and in 1675 were John Hardie and schoolmaster John Purdom. His wife died the year after he did and they were buried at St. Mary’s, the tombstone once reading ‘Here lies John Elliot in the Southfield descended from the renowned family of the Elliots of Lariston by his grandschir Gavin Elliot of the Brough ...’ and that his wife was ‘sister of the ancient family of the Halliburtons of Muir-houselaw’. He could be the John in Southfield who in 1680 was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. John (c.1650–1728) son of Adam of Mosspeeble. He was described as being ‘in Dinley’ (i.e. Dinlees). He married Margaret Scott from Falnash (perhaps an older child of Gideon Scott). Their children were: probably Ninian (1697–1724); Adam (1702–24); John (b.1703), who died young; John in Park; William (c.1703–91), who married Helen Scott, from Blackhall; Isobel, who married Henry, 2nd son of William Elliot in Penchrise; Janet; Christian; and Anna. He died at Park. His will is registered in Edinburgh Commissary Court in 1730. John in Leahaug (17th C.) 3rd son of William of Penchrise and Mary Elliot, he was recorded in 1683. He had a son, Archibald, who was an Excise Officer. John (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Harwood’ in 1688 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Corporal James Campbell and Gideon Scott of Outerside. John (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish (probably at Yethouse) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Isobel, who was recorded after him, must have been closely related. John (17th C.) tenant in Saughtree in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John

(17th C.) name of 2 separate men recorded paying the Hearth Tax in 1694 for households near Redheugh in Castleton Parish. John (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish, listed between Sorbietrees and Flatt, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branhholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. It is possible he was the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) resident at Monk's Croft (in Hassendean Parish) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William who was also listed there. John in Harden (17th/18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He had a daughter, Marion, and a son, William in Hole. His lands were Harden in Liddesdale. John (17th/18th C.) described as 'in Tower' in Cavers Parish in 1698 when his daughter Jane was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Langside in Cavers Parish in 1700 when his daughter Elspeth was baptised. He could be the tenant in Langside who is recorded paying tax on 3 hearths in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, where he had 2 children baptised. He married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish in 1701. Their children included: Walter (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1705). John (17th/18th C.) married Christian Grieve in Hawick Parish in 1702. They were both from Hawick Parish. John (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Southfield. In 1704 he witnessed the baptism of a daughter of Gilbert, farmer in Southfield and Winningtonrig, who was probably a relative of some sort; the other witness was John Elliott, 'Collector', who was uncle of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. He married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish in 1701 and their daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1705. The witnesses in 1705 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, where he married Helen Laidlaw in 1705. Their children included: Andrew (b.1705); William (b.1707); Margaret (b.1709); John (b.1711); and Walter (b.1713). In 1709 he was described as a tenant, but the location is missing, and in 1711 he was tenant in Lees. John (17th/18th C.) miller at Appotside Mill who was witness to a sasine for the Elliots of Harwood in 1704. His son James was also a witness. John of Castlehope and Billhope (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Mosspebble, he was descended from the Elliots of Falnash. Castlehope was an earlier name for Twislehope. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert

Elliot of Caerlenrig. Their children were: William in Whithaugh and Braidlie (b.c.1678–1767); Robert of Castlehope and Billhope; and Walter in Brugh. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'in Rig' 1711 when his son Francis was baptised in Cavers Parish. It is unclear if he was related to the other Elliots in Rig. John (17th/18th C.) said in some genealogies to be son of Robert of Lodgegill. In 1711 he married Helen, daughter of John of Thorlieshope. However, this information may be confused, and his name may be an error for William of Cooms. John (17th/18th C.) wig-maker in Hawick. He was brother of Robert of Rigg. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for a child of the deceased William Scott of Brieryhill. John of Larriston (17th/18th C.) appointed in 1715 as one of the legal guardians for the 7 children of Henry, farmer at Sorbietrees. 'John' could be an error, since Robert was the Laird of Larriston at this time. He could also be the John whose sons Robert and William signed the 1731 marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Stobicote, where he is recorded in 1716, 1722 and 1728. He witnessed a baptism in 1720 (along with James Scott in Stobicote) for William Telfer, servant in Stobicote. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Archibald (b.1716); Isabel (b.1722); and James (b.1728). Other children, baptised in Cavers to a John around the same time, could also be his. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1714. Their children (with no mother given) may include John (b.1715), Janet (b.1723) and Helen (b.1725). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Goldielands and Crumhaugh. His brother William was tenant in Crumhaugh. He was already tenant in Goldielands according to a baptismal record of 1713. 2 of his servants (Walter Scott and Helen Turnbull) are recorded in 1721 getting married in Hawick. He is recorded as 'in Goldielands' in 1723 when he was considered as an elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, workman in Goldielands; this was along with Andrew Leithead in Crumhaugh. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1727. He is probably the John who (along with William) witnessed a baptism in 1728 for Andrew Leithead, workman in Goldielands. He is probably the John who (along with Walter Scott) witnessed a baptism for William in Crumhaugh in 1729. He was still tenant in Goldielands in the period 1730–5 when his shepherd, Robert Hobkirk, had a run-in with the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong (as recounted in 1767). And a few years later he had to speak with the Bailies to recover cattle owned by himself and other local tenants, which the Burgh Officers had driven to the West Port after they were found being pastured on the Common. In 1720 he presented for baptism a posthumously born child of his brother William. In 1731 he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Lawson. He married Helen Laidlaw and their son Walter was baptised in 1713, with witnesses Walter Grieve in Branhholme Park and Andrew Riddell (who also lived at Goldielands). John (17th/18th C.) described as being in Earlside in 1724 when his daughter Katherine was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. John of Demainholm (17th/18th C.). Recorded in the period 1695–1726 in papers with the Scotts of Buccleuch dealing with his debts. In 1727 he sold the lands of Demainholm to William of Thorlieshope and Overton. John of Peel (d.bef. 1721) youngest son of William of Harwood. His older brother Simon pre-deceased his father, while his brother Henry succeeded to the main estate of Harwood. He was given the lands of Baxtonlees (also called Peel) by his father. He paid the land tax on £160 in Castleton Parish in 1678, and was recorded then as being ‘in Backestonelyes alias peel’. He married Elizabeth Elliot (from an unknown branch of the family). He had a son John, to whom he conveyed the lands of Peel; however, on John’s death these lands went to his daughters. His children were: John, tenant in Langside in 1723; Christian, who married Adam Elliot of Unthank; Jean, who married Thomas Pringle in Kirkton; and Margaret, who married Robert Dagleish in Fastheugh. His daughters sold Peel to Henry, son of their uncle Henry of Harwood. He appears to have been dead by 1721, when Elizabeth is referred to as his widow (although Tancred suggests that his son John predeceased him and he lived until about 1730). John of Binks (1674–1751) 3rd son of John of Thorlieshope. He was granted a charter of Binks by Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1674. His brother Henry of Lodgegill died in 1714, when he became a curator for his nephew William. In 1718 he was granted a charter for Binks by Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He and his descendants also held the lands of Burnmouth; he is probably the ‘Jo. Eliot in Burnmouth’ who paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. In 1700 he married Christian (c.1682–1726), daughter of Robert Elliot, Factor to the Duke of Buccleuch, and had 9 children, but the only sons who survived to adulthood were Robert of Binks and William of Bush.

His children included: Robert of Binks (1702–66); John (b.1704), who died young; William of Bush (1705–99), who married Margaret Aitcheson; John (again, b.1710), who was a Burgess of Jedburgh and died without issue; James, George, Henry and an unnamed son, who all died young or unmarried; and Jean (b.1726), who married Henry Elliot of Peel. He is buried at Castleton. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children baptised there were: Adam (b.1725); John (b.1727); and Margaret (b.1729). John (17th/18th C.) referred to as being ‘of Langlands’. He married Elizabeth Wilson in Ashkirk in 1723. Their children, born in Ashkirk and Wilton Parishes, included: Isobel (b.1724); James (b.1726); Robert (b.1728); John (b.1731); and Beattie (b.1733). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Park, son of John of Dinlees. He is mentioned in 1730, but nothing else is known about him. His brother William may have taken over the tenancy from him. John (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick Parish. In 1726 he was recorded at Nether Southfield. He married Catherine Elliot in Hawick in 1723. Their children included: Bessie (b.1724); William (b.1726); Katherine (b.1729); and Henry (b.1737). The witnesses in 1726 were James and Walter Scott. John of Whithaugh (c.1702–48) eldest son of William, who purchased Whithaugh for him (as well as Redheugh for his brother Robert) in about 1730. He paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. He married Margaret (c.1704–68), daughter of Robert Scott of Gorenberry. Their children were: William (c.1723–76) of Whithaugh, who married Margaret Shortreed of Essenside and secondly Elizabeth, sister of the Laird of Wolfelee; Robert (1725–70), farmer at Hermitage and Millburnholm, who married Janet Scott from Greenwood; John (1726–1813), farmer at Twislehope, who married Janet Turnbull from Mangerton; Margaret (b.1727), who died young; Mary (b.1728), also died young; Walter (b.1729), died young; Thomas (1730–1807), also tenant in Twislehope; Helen (b.1731), married A. Waddle, purser in the Royal Navy; Isobel (1732–1807); James (c.1733–1816), shepherd in Twislehope; and Elizabeth (c.1734–1807), who died unmarried. He and his wife are buried at Unthank. John (18th C.) rented the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in at least the years 1744–46. Note that his name may have been James rather than John. John (b.1701/2–88) from Castleton Parish. He married Hannah Grieve. Their children included: Robert (b.1761); William (1763–88), a surgeon who died at Cape Coast Castle in Africa; Janet (b.1765);

John (b.1767); and John (again, b.1769). He and his wife are buried at Langholm, but mentioned on the family gravestone in Castleton (although the dates may not be correct, since he would be very old when he had his children). John (18th C.) recorded in Penchrise when his sons William (b.1728) and Thomas (b.1730) were baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the same as another contemporary John. In 1728 he is 'in Penchrise' when his sister Margaret married James Linton (from Ettrick Parish). Perhaps the same James in Penchrise was witness to a baptism for Robert Grieve in Fenwick in 1714. John (18th C.) married Agnes Best in Bedrule Parish in 1726. Their children (with no mothers' name listed) may be Thomas (b.1727), John (b.1728), Helen (b.1729), Agnes (b.1732), James (b.1734), John (b.1737) and Margaret (b.1740). John (18th C.) recorded as 'in Linhope', when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1733. He could be the same as John 'in Southdeanrigg' whose daughter Katherine was baptised in 1741. John (17th/18th C.) from the Black Tarras branch of the family, he was eldest son of William of Cooms. In 1732 he was described as 'now of Cumes', having inherited Cooms from his father. In 1709 he married Agnes, the eldest daughter of Robert Mather of Greenhill. Their children (mostly baptised in Hawick) were: Robert (b.1711), who married Catherine Armstrong from Sorbie; John (b.1715); and an unnamed child (b.1716). John of Brugh (d.bef. 1756) 2nd son of William of Brugh and Wells. He is said to have been settled on a trade in London with £1000. He may be the John, described as tailor of London, who witnessed his sister Eleanor's marriage contract with Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1702 (along with his father William of Wells). In 1735 he was described being 'of Islington'. He married Elizabeth, widow of Sir John Crispe. Nothing much is known about him, except that he died before his brother William. His only child was William Nassau, who inherited Wells from his uncle. Capt. John of Brugh (b.1708) only surviving son of Gilbert, who farmed at Winningtonrig. He was christened in Cavers Parish. William 'the Lace-man' was his uncle. He may have farmed for a while at Over Southfield. He is said to have joined the Army in about 1739 and at Dettingen in 1743 served under Lieut.-Col. William Elliot, who was his cousin, and alongside George Augustus Elliott, who was another relative. In 1749 joined the 2nd Troop of Horse Grenadier Guards and he became a Captain. In 1730 he married Jean, daughter of James Grieve of Branhholme Park. Their children, mostly baptised in Hawick and Kirkton Parishes, were: Helen (b.1731), who probably died young; Gilbert (1734–59); Mary (b.1735); Helen (again, b.1739); Anne (1740–1833), eldest surviving daughter, who married Thomas Hall; and William (d.1817). A portrait shows him on 'Old Crop', the charger that his cousin George Augustus Elliott had ridden at Dettingen and gave to him. John (1710–bef. 54) younger son of John of Binks. He was a Burgess of Jedburgh. He appears to have been given the farm of Binks by his father. In 1754, after his death, his older brother William of Bush was served as his heir. He died without issue. John of Adderstoneshiel (18th C.) son of Walter in Brugh, possibly the eldest son. He was at Falnash in 1740. He married Helen Moffat from Gorvald and they had a son John, who was baptised in Hawick in 1740. John (18th C.) merchant in Castleton. There is a record of Robert, farmer in Braidlie, paying him for 'merchant goods' in 1749. John (1711–92) 3rd Laird of Borthwickbrae, being one of 14 children of William, the 2nd Laird. Probably the same John of Borthwickbrae was apprenticed to a goldsmith in Edinburgh in 1731. He was christened in Robertson and died at Orchard. In 1744, along with Walter Grieve (farmer at Branhholme Park), he leased the lands of Linhope from the Buccleuch Estates. In the period 1743–60 he had a dispute with Sir James Stuart of Coltness over the lands of Branhholme Muir. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1750. His wool manufacturers in Hawick is mentioned as early as 1754 (in records of the Board of Trustees for Manufacturers), although it is unclear precisely what the company made. However, this may well have been the early partnership with Thomas Turnbull and some local men. In 1761 he was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. In 1769 he formed a partnership with others in the main carpet factory in Hawick, receiving the money that was offered by the Government for encouraging initiatives in Scottish industry and agriculture. The partnership was renewed in 1779 and consisted of Walter of Ormiston (his brother-in-law), Thomas Turnbull of Minto and William Robertson from Dunfermline. He may be the Elliot of Borthwickbrae who purchased the liferent of the superiority of the Barony of Stonedged and Howa before 1766, but had renounced this by 1788. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780. It is said that a ewe presented to him by Douglas of Cavers gave birth to a lamb in 1774 which lived until 1796 (a very old age for a sheep). He was taxed for 2 male servants in 1778, and 1 in 1779, 1785, 1787 and 1788 and 2 in 1790 and 1791. He was recorded at Borthwickbrae on the 1785 and 1788–91 Horse Tax Rolls and in 1792 at Orchard. He paid the land tax on part of Borthwickbrae and the west side of Howcleuch in 1785. He also paid tax on 2 female servants at Borthwickbrae in 1785, 3 in 1787 and 2 in 1788–91. He was taxed for owning a carriage at Borthwickbrae in the period 1785–92, and is probably the ‘John Elliot Esqr. in Orchard’ who was taxed in Cavers Parish in the year 1792/3. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788, and probably a supporter of the Duke of Buccleuch’s interests in the county; the privately-printed description is ‘family in good circumstances. The son has a good estate through his mother, and is at the Bar. Second son in the Army’. He was also listed in 1788 among the voters in Selkirkshire. In 1753 he married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Murray of Cringletie. In Edinburgh in 1764 he secondly married Margaret (who died in 1792), daughter of Walter Laing and heiress of the lands of Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot-on-Ale; she was probably the ‘Mrs. Elliot’ listed as owner of the Flex in 1788 and on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although deceased before then), as well as Wester Essenside, part of Leaphill and Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish (valued together at £952). His children were: twins Alexander and William (b.1754), who died young; William (b.1764), baptised in Robertson, who succeeded, but changed his surname to ‘Lockhart’ or ‘Eliott-Lockhart’ (see Lockhart); Walter of Old Melrose (1766–1809), baptised in Robertson; Margaret (b.1767), who married David Simpson of Teviotbank and Knowe (and was mother of Gen. Sir James Simpson), and may secondly have married Walter Grieve, tenant of Branhholme Park; and Janet, who also died young. John (18th C.) tenant in Kershopeburnfoot. His wife Elizabeth died in 1752, aged 36. Their children David Matthew and Agnes died young. They are buried at Ettleton. John (18th C.) shepherd at Earlsideshiels. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1758. He could be related to the earlier John in Earlside. John (18th C.) shepherd in Langburnshiels in Hobkirk Parish. His children included William (b.1764) and Margaret (b.1770). John (18th C.) owner of part of the lands of Grange near Chesters. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he was listed as former owner. John (1725–1801) son of Robert, from the Caerlenrig branch. He was born in Cavers Parish and was a tanner in Hawick. He was listed as a tanner in 1748 when he paid tax on 11 windows in Hawick. He is probably the tanner of that name recorded being paid in 1751 for lime for mending the East Port. He is probably the tanner of that name who witnessed baptisms in 1757 for Hawick distiller and merchant John Aitchison and in 1762 for shoemaker George Gardner. He was appointed as Hawick’s first part-time postmaster in 1767; he was re-appointed, apparently against his better judgement, several years later. He lived down the Punch Bowl Close, which also acted as the post office. Probably the same John, tanner, was one of those appointed in 1763 to oversee the collection of money for a new bell for St. Mary’s. He is probably the John who in 1766, along with Francis (his brother), witnessed a baptism for merchant James Oliver and his wife Christian (their sister); he also witnessed another baptism for them in 1781. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1779 (although the date is uncertain) he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver. In 1787–92 he was recorded as a tanner on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick. In 1789 he witnessed a baptism for exciseman Hugh Grieve. In 1778 he married Margaret Curle, who died in 1807, aged 67. Their children included: Isobel (b.1779), who probably died in infancy; Robert (1780–1851), farmer at Roan; James (b.c.1781), who died in infancy; Christian (1883–1855), who died at Roan; William (1785–1827), also died at Roan; and Isobel (again, 1784/5–1859), who died in Hawick. He was buried, along with most of his family, at Teviothead. In 1773 he witnessed the christening of Helen, daughter of shoemaker Adam Elliot (suggesting they were related). His will is registered with the Peebles Commissary Court in 1802. John (1725–1813) younger son of John of Whithaugh and Margaret Scott of Gorenberry. He farmed at Castlehope, which was a former name for Twislehope. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author; Thomas, also in ‘Tweeslihope’ also subscribed (although it is unclear who this might have been). His wife is probably the ‘Mrs Elliot, Twislehope’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Janet Turnbull from Manger-ton. Their children were: John (b.1781), who died young; William (b.1783), also died young; Robert (b.1785), surgeon in Haltwhistle, married Jane Elliot from Cringledykes, daughter of John and grand-daughter of Robert in Hermitage; Andrew (b.1787), married Elizabeth Armstrong from Newcastleton; Walter (b.1789), who lived in Charleston, U.S.A.; and Margaret (b.1791).

John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Nelly was baptised in 1785. John (18th C.) Hawick bookseller of the late 18th century. A book by Samuel Charters was published by him in 1793. John (1731–1808) eldest son of William in Park. He was tenant in 'Baggot', i.e. Bygate in Liddesdale. He was farmer at 'Bagget' and elsewhere in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 9 horses. He is probably the 'Mr. John Elliot, Park', who subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author in 1786 and who is recorded on the 1786–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He died unmarried. His will was recorded with Peebles Commissary Court in 1808. Adm. John (1732–1808) son of Sir Gilbert, 2nd Lord Minto. He joined the Royal Navy at the age of 13, becoming a Lieutenant in 1756. He was famed as a Captain for capturing a fleet of the French admiral Thurot in 1760, having chased them from Carrickfergus to near the Isle of Man. An 8 ft long cannon captured from the French was long on display outside Fatlips Castle. On being received by the King afterwards he apparently turned down a knighthood, but received cash instead. He was promoted to Commodore, and retired on half-pay in 1765. He then served as M.P. for Cockermouth in 1767 and was appointed General of the Mint in Scotland in 1767. He returned to active duty in 1777, attaining the rank of Rear-Admiral in 1787 and full Admiral in 1795. He was 'Captain John Elliot of his Majesty's ship the Edgar' in 1780 when he was entered into the voters' roll for Roxburghshire, on the basis of his ownership of Easter Essenside and Hermiston. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of Mounthooly and other lands in Jedburgh Parish, as well as Kirklands in Ancrum Parish and Easter Essenside in Ashkirk Parish. He was listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788. He was taxed for owning a carriage, horses and dogs at Monteviot in the 1780s and 1790s, as well as for having several male and female servants. He lived at Monteviot House, where he died, unmarried. He also purchased Easter Essenside, Mounthooly and Woodend, which he left to his nephew Lord Minto. He served on the Lieutenantancy Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798. He was sometimes known locally as being 'of Essenside', e.g. when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 (when he was already deceased). He was also listed on the Land Tax Rolls for 1811 at Mounthooly (although this was after his death). He loaned books on ploughing to James Veitch and arranged a ploughing contest at Timpendean. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1808. John (18th C.) tenant in Wigg. His children included: John (b.1768), tenant in Wauchope Gardens; James (b.1770); and Betty (b.1772). He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident in Shankendshiels. His children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included Agnes (b.1771) and Helen (b.1772). He could be the same as one of the other John from Hobkirk Parish. John (18th C.) resident in 'Harrotknow' (i.e. Harwoodknowe) in Hobkirk Parish, when his children Jean (b.1778) and John (b.1789) were baptised. He must have been related to James in Harwoodknowe, who is recorded in 1760. John (18th C.) resident in 'Hargleclughhead' in Hobkirk Parish. It is unclear where this was, but possibly he was shepherd at Harecleuchhead (near the old boundary of Hawick's Common), which was actually in Kirkton Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1762, and may have been the direct ancestor of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau. He could also be the same as some (although surely not all) of the Johns recorded in these other nearly contemporary baptisms in Hobkirk Parish, with no mother's name given: Elizabeth (b.1758), 'in Earlsideshiels'; William (b.1764), in Langburnshiels; William (b.1766), 'in Hopehead'; John (b.1768) in Wigg; Margaret (b.1770) in Langburnshiels; James (b.1770), in Wigg; Agnes (b.1771) in Shankendshiels; Betty (b.1772) in Wigg; Helen (b.1772) in Shankendshiels; Jean (b.1775) 'in Harrotknow'; and John (b.1780) 'in Harrotknow'. Without knowing which of these children were his it is impossible to guess the names of his parents and hence trace this Elliot line further back. John of Reidheugh (1740/1–1809) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh, whose father had purchased the ancestral farm for him. He himself farmed at Cleughhead and Foulshiels, while his brother (presumably Thomas) was given liferent of Redheugh. He is probably the farmer at 'Cleughhead' or 'Cleughheads' in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. In 1793 he disposed of the stock and household furniture from Redheugh to his brother Thomas

(who also lived at Redheugh and farmed Foulshiels). In 1799 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Rev. John Russell, minister of Canonbie. They had no children and he settled Redheugh on his nephew Robert in 1806. He died at Newlands and is buried in Castleton cemetery. Dr. John (18th C.) surgeon living at Cleuchhead in Liddesdale towards the end of the 18th century. He could be the same as the farmer at Cleuchhead. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784, and it is possible he supplied material for it; indeed he may be the 'Gentleman of taste, in Liddesdale' to which Caw was indebted for providing a manuscript copy of 'Dick o' the Cow' and other verses. He was also 'J. Elliot, M.D. Cleughheads' in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was visited in about 1792 by Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed, on their 'raid' into Liddesdale, to gather material for what would become 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border'. He apparently already had a manuscript copy of ballads that he had collected himself. He presented Scott with an old Border war horn, which still hangs in Abbotsford. And afterwards he sought out other ballads 'among the darker recesses of the mountains'. Rev. John (1749/50–1817) licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1793, he became assistant to Thomas Elliot of Cavers (who was probably his uncle). He was presented to the Parish of Kirkton in late 1800 and ordained there early the next year, remaining as minister until his death. In 1786 he married Jean Armstrong, who died in 1828, aged 75. Their children were: Elizabeth: twins Adam and Mary (b.1794); and Isobel (1797–60), who died at Coliforthill. John (18th C.) Bailie in Hawick in the 1780s. He was one of the local people who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). His son James died in 1782. In 1786 he was recorded as 'late Bailie' when he (and shoemaker Thomas Wallace) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver. This suggests that he may also have been a shoemaker. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (c.1750–1801) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Little (c.1757–1825). Their children included: Christian (b.1792); Robert (b.1794); and Thomas (b.1799). He and his wife died in Newcastleton. John (c.1750–1821) eldest son of Robert, tenant of Hermitage. He farmed at Hermitage, Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater. In some family trees he is confounded with an earlier John. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. In

1783 he married Christian Grieve (b.1753), but she died less than a year later; she was probably daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. He secondly married Margaret Scott from Skelfhill. His children included: Jean (1790–1886); Robert, who married a Miss Maxwell from Langholm and had children who emigrated to the U.S.A.; Janet, who married Robert Elliot from Haltwhistle, son of John who farmed Twislehope; James, who emigrated to the U.S.A.; John (1796–1833) in Nether Hindhope; Thomas (1815/6–87), who married Elizabeth Turnbull and succeeded his brother as farmer at Nether Hindhope; Catherine, married Robert Webster; Mary, married Robert Hall of Doanham in 1846; Elizabeth, married Gideon Yule from Kelso; and Margaret, who married John Dagg from Kidderminster. He is buried at Ettleton Cemetery, the stone being inscribed 'Here lyes John Elliot in Burnmouth and Christian Grieve his spouse'. John of Binks (1754–1820) eldest son of Robert. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. He owned Binks from at least 1788 (when it was valued at £300) and was listed as owner of Binks in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. In 1790 he married Mary Robson (1767–1858) in 1790, who was from Boghall, daughter of Adam Robson and Helen Hume; her sister Janet also married a John Elliot and she must have been related to his mother, who was also a Robson from Boghall. Their children were: Robert (b.1791), who died young; Jane or Jean (b.1792), who married William Nixon of Lynnwood; another Robert (1794–1814); Helen (b.1796), 'the White Rose of Liddesdale', who married Archibald Blake from Liverpool; Elizabeth (d.1798), who died in infancy; John (b.1799), who married Mary, daughter of Thomas Smith of Darnick and farmed at Calaburn; and another Elizabeth, who married William Turnbull of Merrylaw in 1847. In 1851 his widow was listed as an 'Annuitant, Gentlewoman', farming about 610 acres at Binks. He died at Burnmouth and is buried in Castleton Cemetery. He is probably the John who was recorded as farmer at Burnmouth on the 1785–97 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls, and who was of Binks' when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. His will was registered with Peebles Commissary Court in 1821. John (1753/4–1817) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded living at Borthwickbrae in 1794 and Woodburn in 1798. In 1787 in Cavers Parish he married Elizabeth or 'Betsy' Scott (1757/8–1842), who died in Hawick. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1792); James (1794–1884), long-time proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb in Hawick; and Jean (b.1798). The marriage is probably the one recorded between James and Betty Scott in Cavers in 1787. He died at Branhholme and the family are buried at Borthwick Waas. John (18th/19th C.) lived at Bowanhill, near Teviothead. He is probably related to the earlier Archibald who farmed there. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1793. Their children included: Archibald (b.1800); Walter, married Jean Anderson and emigrated to Delaware County, New York; John; Margaret, who married Thomas Thompson and later George Stewart; and Betty, who married a Mr. Thompson. John of Cooms (1740/1–1809) married Margaret Helen (b.1776), daughter of Rev. John Russell, minister at Canonbie. He died at Newlands in Liddesdale. John (1760–1806) son of Ninian and Ester Crozier. He was born at Burnmouth in Liddesdale. A family pedigree describes him being 'in Middlemoss'. He married Janet Robson (1761–1848), daughter of Adam Robson and Helen Hume; her sister Mary married another John Elliot. Their children included: Ninian (1789–1870), who died in Westminster Township, Canada; Adam (1791–1871), who died in Ontario; Helen (b.1794), who joined her brothers in Ontario; Ester (b.1797), who married Robert Elliot in Powisholm; Mary (1801–77), who died in Newcastleton; and Janet (1805–81), who died at Teviothead. He died at Middlemoss, near Langholm. John of Whithaugh (1759–1847) eldest son of William of Whithaugh. He was served heir to his grandfather John in 1777. In 1788 his lands of Whithaugh (half of the former farm) were valued at £200 3s. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784, a theological book by a Carlisle author in 1786 and John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He is recorded as farmer at Whithaugh on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, and also served as a Justice of the Peace. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably the John of Whithaugh listed on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories; Walter was also listed as a farmer there at about the same time. He was listed as head of his household at Whithaugh in 1835–41. He married Jean (1758–87), daughter of Elliot of Binks. They had 1 child, Elizabeth, who married Thomas Keir from Powisholm, and whose son William Keir inherited Whithaugh. He was still alive in 1841, when he was 'Esquire of Whithaugh' and in his 80s. His will is register in the Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1848. John (1769–1823) son of Henry, he was tenant farmer at Flatt in Liddesdale. He was already at Flatt in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry. He is recorded as farmer at Flatt on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls; he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Scott, from Ladhope in Yarrow, who died in 1838, aged 63. Their children included: Henry (1793–1818), who died in Jamaica; Margaret (b.1794–1804); Janet (b.1795), who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh; William (1796–1838); Jean (b.1798), who died in infancy; Jean (again, b.1800); John (1801–40), engineer in Glasgow, who married Helen Elliot of Kirkdean, granddaughter of Elliot of Harwood; James (1803/4–80), who died at Westwater; and Margaret (again, b.1809). This Margaret may have been the 'Miss M. Elliot, Flatt' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. John (b.1767) cooper in Castleton Parish, son of William and Anna Scott, descended from the Elliots of Falnash. Some of his children were born at Byreholm. He married Elizabeth Crozier and their children included: William (b.1790), probably shoemaker in Newcastleton; Gideon (b.1791); Helen (b.1793); Anne (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1803); John (b.1804), who probably died young; and Margaret (b.1808). John (b.1768) labourer at Wauchope Gardens, Blackcleuchmouth and Templehallshiels. He was son of John in Wigg and surely related to William in Templehallshiels. He married Betsy Taylor and their children included: William (b.1798), who lived at Wauchope Cottages; Betty (b.1800); John (b.1802); Walter F. (b.1804); Robert (b.1807); Alexander (b.1809), probably the shoemaker in Hawick; Margaret (b.1813); and Agnes (b.1815). Most of the family emigrated to Otsego County, New York. John (b.1769) son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton. He was born in Castleton Parish and became a merchant in London. He married Miss Robinson in London and they had 13 children, William, Robert, Margaret, John, Mary, Ann, Jane, Eliza, Mary, Thomas, Louisa, George and Walter. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Agnes Inglis, also from Hawick. It is possible they are the couple of the same names who had children in Melrose Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. No occupation or other information is given. He could be the tenant in Denholm whose son John was born in 1804. John (18th/19th C.) labourer at Blackleemouth in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) lawyer who set up a partnership with John Oliver in Hawick around 1790. They became agents for the Commercial Bank around 1820 and are listed as writers in Hawick in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He may be the 'John Elliot, Hawick' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. However, he left for Jedburgh in 1829 to become Sheriff-Substitute, which office he held until 1835. The Hawick firm eventually became Geo. & Jas. Oliver's. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. John (b.c.1780) resident of Rashiegrain according to the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1801. John of Reidheugh (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. It is unclear who this is, since the owner at that time was Robert Elliot; perhaps this is an error. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He had several children baptised there, including John (b.1807), Brown (b.1820), Elizabeth (b.1822), Jane (b.1824) and an unnamed child (b.1826). John Edmund of New Belses (1788–1862), youngest son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was named after the statesman Edmund Burke. He had a successful career in the Bengal civil service. He accompanied his father back from India in 1814 and had to perform the sad duty of carrying the news of his death to the Borderers who were awaiting his triumphal return to Minto (including celebrations for drawing his carriage through Hawick). He is probably the 'Hon. J.E. Elliot, Eildonhall' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was elected Liberal M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1837, when several people in Hawick were prosecuted for rioting. He spoke in the House of Commons in the following year, when Sir James Graham proposed a motion that Hawick be removed as a polling place; he supported the actions of the Bailies and townspeople, and claimed that the situation had been exaggerated by the other side (and perhaps fabricated in order to discredit the election). In 1841 he received a majority in Hawick, but lost to Francis Scott in the County. However, he was re-elected in 1847 and remained M.P. until 1859, being elected unopposed in 1852 and 1857. In a directory of 1852 he was listed as living at Wilton Lodge. He was donor of a silver-mounted hammer for the Chief Magistrate's use in Council meetings (engraved with his initial electoral poll results). He was also made an Honorary Burgess in 1837. He was a keen hunter (despite his weight), keeping his own pack of hounds until 1844. He held lands at Belses, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow, which were sold to the Marquess of Lothian in 1872. In 1809 he married Amelia, 3rd daughter of James Henry Cassamajor of Madras and they had 6 children: Amelia Jane (d.1837), who married Thomas Campbell Robertson; Anna Maria Elizabeth, who married Pierce G.E. Taylor; Lt.-Col. Edmund James (1813–54), who married Matilda Inglis, and died in the Crimean War; William Brownrigg of Benrig (1820–1900), who married Mary Geraldine McCartie; Capt. Amyand Powney Charles of the Bengal Army (1823–69), who married Anna Maria Alexander; and Augustus John (1824–89) of the Bengal Civil Service, who married Helen Lewis and Katherine Mangles. John (b.c.1780) servant at Whithaugh in Castleton Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (1780/1–64) from Castleton Parish, he married Ann Graham, who was from Hartsgarth. Their children were: Ellen (b.1816), who probably died young; and John (1818–1902), who married Agnes Beattie and Elizabeth Nichol in Canada. In 1818 the family emigrated to New Brunswick, with the infant John. His wife died on the voyage and he later married Helen, with whom he had daughters Elizabeth and Ellen. The family settled in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario in 1836. He was a farmer and strong churchman and gave land for the First Presbyterian Church in Westminster Township. There were several Johns born in Castleton Parish around 1781, so he could be son of John and Janet Turnbull, or Walter and Isabel Douglas or a different John entirely. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Hogg and their children included: Margaret (b.1808), who married George Stewart; Matthew (b.1811); Nelly (b.1813); Robert (b.1815); Henry (b.1817); and Janet (b.1819). John (18th/19th C.) labourer at Hartsgarthburnside. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835 and 1836. John (d.1848) perhaps son of John from Morebattle. Some of his children were born in Morebattle Parish, but most in Bedrule Parish. He was associated with Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. He married Isabel Turnbull (1783–1854), who was born in Northumberland. Their children included: John (1806–73); James (1809–85); Andrew (1811–79); William (1813–81); Mary (1815–83); Robert (1818–89); Brown (1820–93); Elizabeth (1822–45); Jane (1822–51); and Isabel (1826–91). The entire family emigrated to Howick, Quebec, where they died. John (c.1785–1854) son of James and Helen Elliot. He was born in Castleton Parish and worked as a shepherd. He married Helen Murray and in 1818 the family emigrated to America, settling in New Brunswick and then in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario. Their children included: James (b.1811); Elizabeth (b.1813), who died young; Rev. Charles, D.D. (b.1815); John (b.1817), who died on the passage to America; John (1819–99); and possibly Helen. John (1788–1878) son of Walter, who farmed at Bowanhill. He lived in Robertson Parish, but emigrated with his family to Bathurst Township, Ontario, then settled in Andes, Delaware County, New York State. In 1809 he married Margaret Oliver in Cavers Parish. Their children included: Janet or Jennie (1811–82); Isabel (b.1812); Walter (1814–91); George (b.1816); Margaret (1820–39). He died in Andes, New York. John (1788/9–1869) son of Andrew, shepherd at Halterburn. He was an agricultural labourer living at Shiplaw Corse in Cavers Parish from about 1830, but before that appears to have lived in Roxburgh, Ashkirk and Ettrick Parishes. In 1815 in Ancrum Parish he married Margaret Hart, who died before 1841, when the family are listed at ‘Sheeplawcross’. In 1851 he was shepherd at Wester Essenside. Their children included: Margaret (b.1816); Andrew (b.1817); Mary (b.1821), who probably married William Irvine, farmer at Cavers Mains; Christina (b.1823); Isabel (b.1827), who probably married Robert Elliot, gamekeeper at Cavers East Lodge; John (b.1832); Janet (b.1833); Elizabeth (b.1836); George (b.1837); and Agnes (b.1837). John (b.1790/1) agricultural labourer living in Parkhillhaugh in 1841 and Deanburnhaugh in 1851. He married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Goodfellow (1795–1860) in Robertson Parish in 1818 and their children included: Francis (b.1818), whose wife was Christina; Elizabeth (b.1820); James (b.1822); William (b.1824); John (b.1827); and Gideon (1833–1913). John (b.1795/5) born in Canonbie, he was an agricultural labourer in Castleton and Southdean Parishes. In 1835–41 he was living at Clerkleap and in 1851 was at Westerhouses. He married Henrietta Carruthers and their children included: Janet (b.c.1821);

Gilbert (b.1831); Henry (b.1833); Mary (b.1836); Matthew (b.1838); and Elizabeth (b.1841). John (1795–1859) 2nd son of William ‘of Carlenrickrig’ (who was an architect in Kelso) and grandson of the minister of Cavers. He was born in Kelso and became a solicitor in Hawick and Jedburgh. In 1841 and 1851 he was a banker in Jedburgh, where he lived at Boundary Bank. However, by 1851 he is described as blind. He married Janet Usher (daughter of Thomas of Courthill). Their children included William (procurator in the Roxburghshire Sheriff Court), Thomas Usher, Isabella, John, Jane Robertson, Charles Scott, Elizabeth Pott and Esther. He should not be confused with the earlier lawyer John who had a partnership with John Oliver in Hawick before moving to Jedburgh. John (1795/6–1834) son of Walter and Helen Crozier. He was tenant in Templehall. John (1796–1833) son of John, who farmed at Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater, and grandson of Robert in Hermitage. He was tenant in Nether Hyndhope in Oxnam Parish. After his death he was succeeded as farmer by his brother Thomas. John (1796/7–1875) shepherd at Blinkbonny in Castleton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1835. In 1841 he was a labourer in Newcastleton, living on North Hermitage Street. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Blinkbonny. He married Jean Armstrong (1809/10–85) from Kirkpatrick. Their children were: Janet (1828–52); Helen (1829–60); Jane (1833–97), who married James Beattie; William (b.1836), also died young; Robert (b.1837), also died young; William (1840/1–60). He must also have lived at Border Rigg, where some of his children died. The family are buried at Ettleton. John of Binks (1799–1875) eldest surviving son of John of Binks and Mary Robson. He purchased Calaburn in Wilton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as owner of Burnmouth. He is probably the farmer at Burnmouth listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He is listed at Upper Burnmouth in 1841, along with Janet, possibly a relative. In 1851 he was farming 2,000 acres there and employed 6 labourers. By 1861 he was farming 5,000 acres and employing 10 people. He was still at Burnmouth in 1868. In 1851 he married Mary, 2nd daughter of Thomas Smith, architect in Darnick. Their children were: John (1853–1909), who married

Jane Pott Oliver; Jane (1855–1939); who married Rev. John C. Martin; and Mary (c.1858–1941). He died at Burnmouth and is probably buried in Castleton Cemetery. His portrait, by an unknown artist, is in the Museum. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and labourer in Newcastle. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–38. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He is listed among heads of households at Newhouses in England in 1836 and perhaps the same shepherd is at Sorbietrees in 1840 and 1841. John (b.1800/1) from Castleton, he was a tailor who lived at Quarrelhaa, near Harwood-on-Teviot. It seems possible he was related to Henry and Adam, who are recorded as tailors in Newcastle in 1841. In 1851 he was a tailor employing 2 men. He married Helen Scott (b.c.1806) from Galashiels. Their children included: Janet (b.1824); Robert (b.1826); John, Mungo (b.1828); William (b.1830); James Rutherford (b.1832); Nenion (note the spelling, b.1834), a lawyer in Edinburgh; Walter (b.1840); Edward (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); and Thomas (b.1846). It seems the family must have moved from the area before the 1861 census. John (1801–40) son of John, tenant in Flatt in Castleton Parish, with his mother being Jean Scott from Ladhope. He was an engineer in Glasgow. He married Helen Elliot (1812/3–82), daughter of Thomas of Kirndeane and grand-daughter of Elliot of Harwood. They had a son, John (1839–97), who was also tenant in Flatt. John (b.1801/2) from England, he was a shoemaker in Newcastle. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1840. He was listed in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Margaret Pott (from Castleton Parish) and their children included: Betty; Andrew; James; John (b.1840); Isabel (b.1844), Esther (b.1844), twin of Isabel; and Margaret (b.1846). He lived at about 2 Whitcheater Lane. John (1801/2–90) from Southdean Parish. In the 1830s he moved to Ross and Cromarty, where he was manager at Tarbot Mains farm, Poinicol, for about 50 years. He married Margaret Dagg from Castleton. Their children were: William (1825–94), who died at Poinicol; and Michael (1827–82), who died in Melbourne. John (1808–89) son of Matthew, who farmed at Netherrow, with his mother being Janet Scott. He worked as a labourer and roadman in Newcastle. He was listed as labourer (and son of Matthew) among heads of households in 1841. In 1841 he was at about 21 North Hermitage Street. In 1861 he was on Douglas Square. Later he was tenant at Sandholm. He was said to be very knowledgeable about the area, and helped the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club on their tour of upper Liddesdale in 1889, shortly before he died. He married Frances (or 'Fanny') Broadfoot Wilson, and she died at the Grapes Inn, Newcastle, in 1860, aged 62. He secondly married Mary Thomson. His children included: William (1826–47); Matthew (1828–65), who died in London; Margaret (1829–1904), who died in Newcastle; James (1830–77), who was innkeeper of the Grapes Inn; Janet (b.1833); Andrew (1835–1905), who died in Birmingham; John (b.1838), road surveyor; and Helen (1842–1908), who died at Brox. John (1809–81) younger son of William of Harwood and Helen Rutherford. He was born at Hundalee and farmed at Primrosehill. He married Jane, daughter of Archibald Jerdan of Bonjedward and they had a son and 2 daughters. Rev. John Elphinstone (1810–90) son of James, 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He trained as a lawyer, apprenticing to William Bell and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1833. He was appointed as Rector of Whalton, Morpeth. In 1843 he married Georgina, daughter of Col. Ralph Bates of Milburn and changed his surname to Elliot-Bates. John (b.1810) son of Ninian and brother of Ninian and James. Like his brothers, he was a road contractor in Newcastle. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square with his son James (probably keeper of the Grapes Inn) and daughter Helen. He was recorded as proprietor of the Grapes Inn in the 1860s. His brother Ninian was also a road contractor. John (1811–88) from Castleton Parish, son of James and Janet Grieve. In 1841 he was a carrier, living at Scaurnook in Robertson. He married Helen, daughter of shepherd William Murray; she died at Oliver Place in Hawick in 1909, aged 86. His children included Helen Grieve (d.1855), who died at the age of 4, and 2 sons who died in infancy. John (b.1816/7) carter in Newcastle, on Doncaster Street. In 1851 he was living with his sister Helen and nephew George Aitchison. By 1861 he had a 2nd wife Betty, and step-children James Scott and David Scott. They also had children Janet and Margaret. John (19th C.) Inspector of Nuisances in Newcastle in the 1860s. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (b.1819/20) born in Castleton, he was an agricultural labourer in Cavers and Teviothead Parishes. In 1851 he was at Castleweary. In 1861 he was farm steward, living at Borthaugh Cottages. He married Jane Murray and their children were: William (b.1839); Matthew (b.1843);

and Gideon (b.1845). John (b.1822/3) born in Castleton Parish, he was a labourer in Hobkirk. In 1851 he was at East Fodderlee Cottages and in 1861 was a ploughman at Bonchester Cottages. He later lived in Southdean Parish and in Denholm. In 1846 he married Christian (or Catherine) Scott Crozier (b.1825), from Ettrick. Their children were: William (b.1846); Jane (b.1848); Thomas (b.1852); Robert (b.c.1854); Patrick (b.c.1855); David (b.1856); Scott (b.1860); Margaret Murray (b.1862); and John (b.c.1863). John (b.1823/4) son of Matthew and Dorothy Purdom, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was a labourer living at Adderstoneshiel Stable in 1841, with his family at Adderstoneshiel in 1851 and a ploughman at Barnes in Kirkton Parish in 1861. He married Sibella Hunter (from Langholm) in Wilton in 1848 and their children included (b.c.1849): Elizabeth; Matthew (b.1851); John (b.1852); James (b.1855); Thomas (b.1858); William (b.1861); Margaret (b.1863); Dorothy (b.1865); and Georgina (b.1867). Some of the family may have emigrated to Huron County, Ontario. John 'Jock' (b.c.1825) son of George and Agnes Beattie. His grandfather drowned, perhaps when he was thrown into Whitehaugh pond near Newcastleton. He lived near Bonchester Bridge since about the 1870s and worked as a dyker. His biography is told by Tancred in 'Rulewater'; if some information was incorrect, he could be the same as one of the Johns from Castleton. John (b.1825/6) shoemaker in Newcastleton, son of William, who was also a shoemaker. In 1851 he was living on North Hermitage Street and in 1861 on Douglas Square. In 1849 he married Jane (or Jean, 1826–1905) daughter of Robert McVittie from Fiddleton in Ewesdale. Their children included: Jane (b.1850); Christian (b.1851); Janet (b.1853); Robert (b.1855); Mary (b.1857); William (b.1860); Helen (b.1863); Elizabeth (b.1866); and Isabella Anne (1869–1927), who married John Nichol and died in Ontario. John Scott (1829–1914) son of Robert and Janet Black. He was Cornet in 1851, when he was a joiner's apprentice. In 1855 he married Mary Scott, from Southdean. They had a daughter Margaret (b.1855). By 1857 he had emigrated to Culross, Ontario, along with his wife and daughter, as well as his brother Thomas. John (1830/1–1915) tenant in West Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1904, aged 73. They had 2 sons called Robert who died young. They are buried at Ettleton. John Davidson

(1834–96) son of Robert and Eleanor Davidson, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1860 he married Mary, daughter of Christopher Foster. Their children were: Margaret (b.1863); Helen (b.1865); Jane (b.1868); Robert (b.1870); Isabella (b.1872); Christopher (b.1875); and Mary (b.1880). He died at Clerkleap, killed by being knocked down by a goods train. John (b.1835) son of James, a spirit dealer at 3 Orrock Place. His mother was Helen Patterson. He worked as a railway clerk and bank clerk. He was Cornet in 1855 and can be seen as Left-hand Man in the first photograph of the Common Riding Principals. John (1836–58) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh. He was baptised in Castleton Parish and died at Cardona, Mexico, predeceasing his father. John (1836–1905) son of Ninian, he was a roadman like his father. In 1864 he married Jane Jackson (1840–1912). Their children were Jane (b.1865), James (b.1866), Eliza Jane (b.1868) and Marion (b.1871). John (1838–1913) son of John. He was District Road Surveyor in Newcastleton. He married Betsy, daughter of innkeeper John Scott; she died in 1889, aged 60. Their children included: Agnes (b.1865), who died in infancy; Archibald (1863/4–90); William (1861/2–1904); Frances Mary (1866/7–1907); and Jane (1872/3–1956). John (1839–97) born in Glasgow, son of John and Helen Elliot. He was farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish, succeeding his uncle James there. He was recorded at Flatt in 1861 and 1868. When another uncle, John Scott-Elliot died, he succeeded to the liferent of Peel, and also carried on the leases on Kirndeane, Myredykes and Singdeane. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was said to have died unmarried, but also that the tenancies of his farms were continued by his son Walter. John (19th C.) partner in the builders firm Aitken & Elliot. He married Christina, daughter of James Wintrup. John (1853–1909) eldest son of John of Binks and Mary Smith. He is recorded as John 'of Binks, Burnmouth' when he became a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland in 1880. He matriculated arms in 1897. He owned Binks and also farmed at Burnmouth, like his father before him. He sold Calaburn, breaking his family's direct ties with the Hawick area. He married Jane Pott Oliver and their children were: Maj. Edward John (1881–1918), who married Dorothy Allen Smith and was killed in action; Sina Gertrude Pott (1882–1965), who married Lieut.-Col. Edwyne Douglas-Jones; Lt.-Com. James Oliver (1883–1965), who married Margaret Hogben; Mary Smith Turnbull (1885–1967); John Stephen (1886–1972), Navy Captain and Surgeon, who married Magda Virginia Salvesen and became a lecturer at Newcastle University; Clement Nixon (1889–1969), who married Katherine Winnifred Penney and moved to Rhodesia; Edward John, who married Dorothy Allen, daughter of Richard Sidney Smith of Clifford Chambers, and was killed in WWI; Lt.-Col. Henry Hawes (1891–1972), who became Surgeon to the Viceroy of India and retired to Springbank, Melrose; Robin Alexander (1891–1969), twin of Henry, he became a banker in Canada; and Jean Oliver (b.1892), who was an Almoner at the Royal Free Hospital, London. Later in life he moved to Edinburgh and then for his health to Southsea, Hampshire, where he died. He was buried in Old Castleton cemetery. John Burns (1906/7–61), J.P., son of Andrew. He was a Councillor and cashier for the Gas Company. He married Margaret Butler, great-grand-daughter of Walter Grieve of Hawick. Joseph (18th/19th C.) coachman at Teviot Bank in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Katherine of Arkleton (b.c.1700) daughter of William of Arkleton and Anne Ainslie of Jedburgh. She was married 3 times. Firstly (about 1720) she married David Laing of Westerkirk. Secondly, in 1727, she married Rev. Charles Telfer, who was minister of Hawick Parish. Thirdly, she married Robert Elliot of Fenwick (son of Francis and Rachel Langlands). Her only child appears to have been Gavin, who succeeded to Arkleton (but is said to have lived with a loose woman who he had to acknowledge as his wife to qualify his daughters to succeed to the estate). Katherine (b.1701) elder daughter of Adam of Teindside, she was baptised in Hawick Parish. In Wilton Parish in 1719 she married Robert, son of Robert of Midlem Mill. When her brother Walter died in 1721 she was served as his heir. Baroness Katharine ‘Kay’ (1903–1994) of Harwood, born Katharine Tennant in Peeblesshire, 7th daughter of Sir Charles Tennant. She died 171 years after her father was born, and her great-grandfather was a witness at Robert Burns’s christening in 1759. As a child she played at 10 Downing Street, where her half-sister Margot was married to Prime Minister Herbert Asquith. She studied politics at the London School of Economics, was an accomplished violinist, played the organ, spoke fluent French, rode until age 80 and boasted that she beat 2 Prime Ministers at golf. In 1934 she married Walter Elliot, Conservative M.P. for Glasgow

Kelvingrove and they made their home at Harwood, near Bonchester. She was a leading public figure in her own right, being active in farming, council and social work. She was made C.B.E. in 1948, D.B.E. in 1952 and was raised to the peerage in 1958 after her husband’s death, becoming Baroness Elliot of Harwood. She became Chairman of the Conservative Party in 1957, serving on several government committees and being on Roxburghshire County Council for 29 years. She worked tirelessly for the Conservative Party, although never abandoned some of her Liberal roots, being strongly against the death penalty and involved with prison reform, for example. In 1973 the Katharine Elliot Centre was named in her honour. She was the first woman, other than the Queen, to speak in the House of Lords and the first woman to get a private bill through the Lords. The Tweeddale Press Group voted her ‘Borders Man of the Year’. She became a Justice of the Peace in 1998. In 1993 she tripped over her parliamentary robes after the opening of Parliament and was rushed off to hospital, still in her robes, suffering a fractured hip. She died at Hawick Cottage Hospital shortly afterwards and was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard (note her name is also spelled ‘Katherine’). Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been an Elliot of Ewesdale, and is listed as ‘Law Elwald’, along with Adam and Robin. Lawrence (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 along with James, Simon and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they were said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. Perhaps the same ‘laurencii elwald’ was recorded at Mossbail in 1494/5 when fined for non-appearance at the Court of the Justiciary, the Earl of Bothwell serving as surety (but 3 other men of the same name were also listed in 1494/5). Lawrence (15th C.) listed among Elliots and other men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-are in 1494/5. He is listed separately from 2 other Laurences, but appears after William and David, sons of William, and before John in Thorlieshope. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-are in 1494/5. He is listed separately from 2 other Laurences, along with Ralph, William, Edmund, Ingram, Martin and Lawrence (son of Martin). Lawrence (15th C.) son of Martin, he is listed among many Liddesdale men who did not appear at the Justice-are in 1494/5.

The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined as a result. Martin, listed just before him, as presumably his father. Len (20th C.) starting as a message boy with Stothart's in 1939, he eventually took over the firm when David Stothart retired in 1971. He ran Hawick's well-known toy emporium until its final closure in 1989. He is also believed to be the last person in Hawick to have gone through the 6-year apprenticeship as a saddler. Leon (16th C.) recorded as 'Leoni Elwald' on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when he and his brothers were the tenants of Sundhope. He was also listed as one of the tenants of Whitrope, along with William in Ramsieggill, John, Robert and another 'Leoni'. Madge Callaghan, M.B.E. (1928–) wife of Bob Known as a campaigner for the Waverley Line, she had a carriage on the new line named after her in 2015. She received an M.B.E. in 1998 for services to lawn tennis. She recited David Hill's poem 'The Bleach' on the 'Hawick Speaks' tape and on the 2006 CD 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry'. She was recorded speaking in dialect as part of the BBC 'Voices' project in 2004. Margaret nee Roger (16th C.) widow of Robert 'Elwand', who was a tenant of Mark Ker at Borthwickshiels. In 1540 she raised an action against 2 Murrays for stealing cattle from Borthwickshiels in 1528, apprehending her and burning her house. The Murrays defence was that their actions were part of a raid by the Earl of Angus (Lieutenant of the Borders) against thieves and traitors in Teviotdale and that she was harbouring such thieves, namely her sons David and Alexander, as well as helping her other sons John and Ringand (Ninian). Margaret (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. She was probably related to Alison and John, who are also listed. Margaret (d.1697) heiress of Reidheugh, elder daughter of Robert. She was recorded paying the land tax (of £500) in 1663. In 1637 she married James Elliott, 6th son of Gilbert of Stobs in 1637. The couple were granted many of the Elliot lands in Liddesdale, excepting 3 farms that were given to her sister Esther and some farms that were held in 'liferent' by their father Robert. Her son Robert succeeded to the Redheugh and Larriston lands, but she retained a dower right to rentals from Larriston. She later reduced her claims in order to help her son's financial difficulties. She further reduced her claims on the family's former lands on Hermitage Water, which helped enable her grandson, Robert of Larriston, to buy back Larriston in 1695. However, right after her death Larriston Rig was sold off, and the rest of the estate was bought by Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1719. Margaret (17th/18th C.) daughter of Arthur of Harwood, who died in 1698. She was recorded as proprietor of Harwood in a 1710 land evaluation of Hawick Parish, with her lands being valued at more than £800, the third highest in the Parish. She was served heir to her father in 1711, probably when she reached the age of majority. She married William Elliot of Thorlieshope and they had 14 children. She is buried at Oxnam. Margaret nee Laing (d.1792) daughter of Walter Laing of Meikledale. She inherited Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot-on-Ale. In 1764 she became the second wife of William of Borthwickbrae. She was recorded as owner of the Flex (valued at £114 10s 9d) in 1788, and also in about 1811 (although she was deceased by then). She also owned Wester Essenside, Leaphill and Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish, which were valued together at £952 in 1788. Her children included William (who succeeded to Borthwickbrae and changed his surname to include 'Lockhart'), Walter of Old Melrose, Margaret (who married David Simpson of Teviotbank) and at least two children who died young. Margaret (1779–1816) daughter of William of Arkleton, she was born in Jedburgh. In 1807 she married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott, Minister at Southdean. In 1810 her brother Robert died, and she succeeded him as the only surviving child of their father. She then assumed the surname Scott-Elliot and her son William succeeded to Arkleton. Margaret (19th C.) recorded as proprietor of a shoemaker's business on the Cross Wynd in Pigot's 1837 directory. Mrs. Marjorie L. nee Laidlaw (19th C.) from Ancrum Mains, daughter of Adam, who had been a builder in Hawick. She is sometimes incorrectly named as 'Margaret' rather than 'Marjorie'. She was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library 1878–94, and possibly only the second female chief librarian in Britain. She was said to be a forceful and dominating lady. She was married to a farmer, but later re-married to D. McBurnie Watson. Another Mrs. Elliot, librarian, is recorded as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, although it is hard to see that this can be the same woman. Mark (d.1564) recorded as being 'callit of the Hill' when he was found guilty of sheep-stealing and reset and hanged. Those convicted along with him were Hob Scott 'of Colyford' and John Scott 'the Clerk'. He may be related to later Elliots of the Hill. Mark of the Hill (d.1611) probably the son of Archibald of the Hill who was recorded in 1602. The pair were listed among Armstrongs who killed a shepherd at Hallrule and stole about 120 sheep. Probably the same Mark of the Hill was listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was probably the Mark listed along with James and Jock of the Hill among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded being 'in the Hill' when he was convicted and executed at Jedburgh court in 1611. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Mark of the Hill. Mark (1776–1854) brother of Maj. William Elliot of Harwood and also Thomas. He served as a private soldier in the Royal Marines and was present at the mutiny of the Nore in 1797. He later served as a Captain in the Roxburghshire Yeomanry, and helped get the Liddesdale men to the muster in Hawick. A story is told of him at an inspection of the troops in Hawick, during which his horse made a bolt forward. When Capt. Elliot of Harwood asked 'Where the devil are you going Mark?', he replied 'Ask my horse'. He was tenant farmer at Lanton, where he died unmarried. A portrait of him hung at Clifton Park. Mark (18th/19th C.) resident of Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. In 1801 he was listed as 'Mr' suggesting a certain status; his servant John Lunn was also on the ballot in 1801. Martin (15th C.) mentioned in 1494/5 when he was listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. His son Lawrence was listed just after him. He may have been related to the later Martins. Martin 'of Abye' and of Braidlie (d.c.1590), possibly second son of Robert of Redheugh who died at Flodden (in which case he must have been born before 1513). However, he could instead have been son of the next Robert of Redheugh (b.c.1505, 14th Chief), and hence born somewhat later. He was first known as 'of Abye', these probably being the Abbey lands in north-eastern Liddesdale that were once owned by Jedburgh Abbey. He acted as the effective leader of the Elliots in roughly the period 1563–73, presumably during the minority of his nephew. He received a Crown Charter to the lands at Braidlie in 1549; although it would seem to make more sense for this to be the lands on the Hermitage Water, in fact it seems that these were the lands on the Borthwick Water (as claimed in the Dowager Elliot's history). He is mentioned in 1556/7 as brother of Robert of Redheugh. He was recorded in 1561 as 'Martine Elwald of Reideuch' among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563 he had a bond with Robert of Redheugh to enter Jock, son of Gavin Elliot of Ramsiehill, to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was probably the Elliot of Braidlie who led the 'Brodies' in the burning of Hawick in 1565, as part of a feud with the Scotts of Braxholme and Buccleuch, perhaps sparked by the murder of David Scott of Hassindean in 1564. A raid by about 300 Elliots resulted in about 10 miles of Scott of Buccleuch's land being burned, and the deaths of many men, women and children. Counter raids followed on Liddesdale and Teviotdale for the next few years. Also in 1565 he had offered to make a deal with Lord Scrope, handing over Hermitage in return for English protection; although the offer was not fully taken up, the Elliots did receive support from the English Wardens. He was probably involved in the ambush of Scotts by Elliots at Ewes Doors in 1565. In 1566 the Elliots were again raiding into England, and the feud with the Scotts appears to have been resolved. His force to have defeated that of the Earl of Bothwell in 1566/7, sent to subdue the Elliots and others. In 1567 he received a pardon for his former crimes, and agreed to keep peace on the Border, being given money by both the English and Scottish authorities. He may have been among the roughly 300 men who raided Torwoodlee in 1568 (perhaps slaying several Pringles), and was one of the men summoned to settle the feud between the Pringles and Elliots in 1575. In 1569 he was said to have met the Black Laird of Ormiston in Liddesdale and forced him to stop giving refuge to the English Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland to return to England (from where they had fled after an uprising in support of Mary, Queen of Scots). He and Archibald Armstrong promised in 1569 to enter into ward John Elliot of Thorlieshope. In 1569 he also served as pledge for 'the hail branch of the Reidheuch that dwellis within the Swyris', with Alexander Home of Manderston as his surety. He was also pledge for the Nixons in the same year. Additionally in 1569 he gave assurances, along with Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton and Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh, to 'Rowie Forester' (who was probably the deputy English Warden), 'that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cuntre'. Also in 1569 he was recorded being held 'with My Lord Regentis Grace' as pledge for his eldest son Simon, as well as 'Archeis Hob'. Furthermore, in 1569 he appeared in Edinburgh to request that he be released from ward to return temporarily to Liddesdale, to be replaced with his nephew Gib and offered to give service 'in keping the hous of Armitage'; he signed 'with his hand at the pen'. In 1570 he wrote to the English Warden, Sir John Forster, making a deal that avoided Liddesdale being ravaged by the English on their way to Teviotdale. Also in 1570 he headed a group of Elliots who signed a bond, giving pledges for Hob, son of Elder Will Elliot and John Elliot of Heuchhouse. In about 1572, Robert of Redheugh came of age, and he ceased to be the leader of the clan; later there would be strife between the two sets of the Elliots that they led. He was probably the 'Martin of Brady' who gave a pledge for the surname of Nixon in 1573. In 1574 he was given 'liferent' of the teinds of Castleton by Scott of Buccleuch. According to the register of the Privy Council he gave a pledge for the Nixons in 1573, was also surety in 1574, was moved from ward in Blackness to St. Andrews and had re-entry in ward in 1577. In 1575 he was summoned to appear to answer for the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. He was said to have built himself a strong tower around 1576, described in an English letter being 'strongly vawted, att the head of Liddell, with open ventes for traynes of powder'; this was distinct from Larriston, but it is unclear where it was situated. In 1578 John Cockburn of Ormiston and John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk promised the Privy Council to apprehend him. In 1578/9 William Ker of Cessford and Andrew Ker of Faldonside were cautioners for him, pledging that he would not raid into England. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned; he had been surety for several different sets of men (mainly Elliots), who had not been entered into ward as promised. He is probably the Martin who in 1579 purchased a 10 poundland of land 'of Reuhop or Philop' in the Barony of Hawick from John Turnbull; he granted a reversion on these lands and then immediately gave sasine to his son Simon (who would become known as Simon of Philhope). His sons 'Sym, Gawin, Arche and Hob' are mentioned in 1580; they were implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh (and it may be that he was the instigator of the raid on Whitlaw that preceeded it). In 1580 there was a complaint by the Countess of Bothwell, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Wat Scott of Harden that he was maintaining Lencie Armstrong of Whithaugh and his family and followers, and that a group of Elliots of the Park and Gorrenberry had attacked Harwood, Whitlaw and Hoscote; this included his own sons Gavin, Hobbie and Archie, as well as his nephews Airchie, Gib and Dandie. In 1580/1 there was caution of £2000 for his entry to the Privy Council 'when warned'. In 1581 he and John Turnbull of Minto were caution for the re-entry of Hob Elliot of Braidlie (who had been released from prison in Edinburgh), as pledge for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. Also in that year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1581 he was allied with Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh when they made a set of complaints against Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh; he specifically complained about a group of Scotts attacking his farm of Northcroft, and of another group of Scotts attacking his sons Hob and Dand as they rode near Headshaw. All the leaders were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters; it is interesting that at that time he appeared to be on sided against Robert of Redheugh. And lastly, in 1581 he had a bond of caution with Lencie Armstrong of Whithaugh and a number of other Elliots, entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale. In 1581/2 he was declared a rebel for the non-appearance of his supporters who had been accused of raiding Eilrig, Bellendean and other farms. Along with Robert of Redheugh and 2 Armstrongs, he was also denounced in 1582/3 by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. The Elliots of Braidlie are listed in an English letter of 1583 as Martin, his son Simon, Gavin 'the Clerk', Hobbie, Archie (all 4 of these probably his sons), Jock 'Copshaw', John of Thorlieshope, Will of the Steele, Dand and John of Braidlie (probably also his sons) and Simon of Harden; they were probably all closely related to him. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 to give their advice regarding the quieting of the troubles in Liddesdale and Teviotdale, and it appears that the feud between factions within the Elliot clan were resolved at this time. In 1584 he was listed second among the Elliots when they gave a bond of assurance to the English Wardens at Hermitage Castle. In 1586 he and Robert of Redheugh were explicitly listed as leaders in Liddesdale in instructions from King James to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1586 he and his eldest son Simon had a lease of lands from the Earl of Bothwell, including Kilford, 'Hietrie Clewis' and 'Ricartoun Cleucht'. In 1589 he was listed among leaders in Liddesdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. There was a 'letter of horning' against him for failing to appear in 1589. He was listed on the roll of 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590 and also listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He was last definitively mentioned at a Wardens' meeting at the Bell Kirk in April 1590. Also in 1590 he was on a list of Elliots accused of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year, stealing 60 cows, 2 horses, taking goods worth £100 and burning 5 houses; others listed include his sons Airchie and Hob, as well as Robert of Redheugh (his nephew); of course he may not have been on this raid himself. In 1591 he had a charter of 'liferent' of 'the ten pund land of auld extent of Phillop' from James VI, confirmed by Parliament the following year; he must have been very old by this time, or this was the later Martin of Braidlie. He is mentioned in one version of the ballad 'Jamie Telfer', where he is referred to as being 'of the Preakin Tower', i.e. Prickinghaugh, which may have been his home for a while. He was among several Elliots who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6 (although, since he was probably deceased by then, this may have been his grandson, also called Martin of Braidlie). He may have married an Armstrong (supported by his first son being called Simon) and their children were: Simon, probably first Elliot of Philhope; William of Braidlie, who married Mary Scott of Buccleuch and was hanged in 1607; Robert of Braidlie, called 'Martin's Hob of Prickenhaugh', whose son and grandson were both declared fugitives; Andrew 'Dand'; Archibald, called 'Martin's Archie of Clintwood', banished from both Kingdoms; Gavin; Gilbert, 'Gib'; John, called 'Martin's John of Burnmouth', denounced a rebel; and a daughter who married Francis Foster of Kershopefoot. Martin 'Martin o Heuchhouse' (16th C.) one of the 10 thieves captured in Hawick in 1567 and held in Edinburgh tolbooth, unlike many of the others who were drowned. He was probably a descendant of the William 'in Heuchous' recorded in 1516. If he was not executed in 1567, then he could be the same man as 'Reid Martin'. Martin (16th C.) presented to the Parsonage and Vicarage of Castleton in 1574. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Martins (or closely related to them). The charge was vacant in the following year. Martin 'Reid Martin' of Heuchhouse (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as 'Rid Marteine Ellot of Heuchhous' on a list of men accused of raiding into England. 'Hob' of Heuchhouse is also listed as his brother. In 1584 he was 'Martinge Ellot of the Hewghehowse' when, along with John of Heuchhouse, he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens at Hermitage. In 1587/8 he is recorded as 'Reade' Martyn Ellott of the Hewghouse' when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots; John of Heuchhouse was also listed, and so presumably closely related. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1584 along with his brother David, as sons of 'Elder Will' on the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. They gave assurance on behalf of their whole part of the clan, but it is unclear where they were from; certainly Martin of Heuchhouse was listed separately. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as 'Rytchis Martyn', on a list of the Elliot chiefs of the time, said to be closely related to the leader of the clan. Presumably his father was Richard. Martin 'Black Baird' (16th C.) resident of Harwood, perhaps the one in on the Teviot. He is recorded in 1586/7 being 'calit the Blak Baird, in Harwode' among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He could be related to men with the same nickname recorded at Braxholme in the 1630s Martin of Braidlie (d.1607) son of Simon of Philhope ('Martin's Sym') and grandson of the earlier Martin of Braidlie. He could be the 'Martyne' listed by Monipennie in about 1594 among the chiefs of the Border, along with the Laird of Redheugh (but this list was probably compiled earlier, and referred to his namesake, who was already deceased by then). He was also sometimes known as 'of Prickenhaugh' and so presumably inherited those lands from his relatives. He was probably the 'Martine Elliott of the Prickinge hawghe' accused in 1590, along with 'Martin's Gib' and Airchie and John (sons of Martin, and hence probably his uncles) of stealing horses from

Englishman Thomas Rutherford. In 1591/2 John Turnbull of Minto acted as surety for him. In 1592 he had a charter of the lands of Philhope, along with his eldest son Simon. This charter also included rights of the Kirk of Castleton. In 1593 he was probably the 'Martyn Elliott of Bradley' who was part of the large raiding party of Elliots and Armstrongs into Tynedale. In 1599 he and Robert of Redheugh made an agreement (on behalf of their relatives and friends) to settle their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Also in 1599 he was part of a bond with the Warden (Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) to be responsible for the behaviour of the inhabitants of Liddesdale. He must thus have been an important Liddesdale Elliot chieftan, and sometimes confused with his grandfather, the more powerful Martin of Braidlie, who died about 15 years earlier; he was described as good old Martin's oye' (i.e. grandson). He may have acquired Braidlie in only 1606, from Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, the cautioners for the payment of 4000 merks being Gilbert of Mains, William of Falnash and Robert Scott of Haining. He was captured in 1606 by the Earl of Dunbar (then Commissioner on the Border) and hanged at the court at Foulden (near Berwick), along with his uncle William as well as the Armstrongs of Manger-ton and Whithaugh. After his death Braidlie (in the Barony of Hawick) went to William of Falnash, who had been one of his guarantors in an arrangement between him and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. The name of his wife is unrecorded, but their children included: Simon of Philhope; and a son, whose name is unknown, but whose son Robert was served heir to his grandfather's great-grandfather, Martin Elliot of Braidley, in 1653. Martin (d.bef. 1618) holder of lands in Lilliesleaf. He married Agnes Lorraine and had a son and William. It has been suggested that he was the same man as Martin of Braidlie; although this seems unlikely, the similarity of names may indicate a relationship with that family. Martin (17th C.) servant of John Letham. In 1656 he was ordered to pay 30 shillings 'for absence from his service for 5 weeks', although he was let off the money claimed 'for the Trooper coming to the said John Lethane'. Martin (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Margaret Stewart in 1821 and their children included: John (b.1723); Adam (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1729). Mary (18th C.) cook at Dinlabyre in 1791, when she worked for William Oliver. Matthew (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Matthew (15th C.) listed as former tenant in 'helmys' among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His lands were possibly Helm in Cavers Parish (or potentially Whames in the Borthwick valley), and he is listed separately from another Matthew. Matthew (16th C.) chaplain who witnessed a document in Selkirk. Walter Scott of Robertson begged for clemency from Robert Hunter, for his part in the killing of Robert's brother John Hunter. Thomas, Burgess of Selkirk was also listed, and perhaps a relative. Matthew (18th/19th C.) from Canonbie, he lived in Castleton Parish. He married Janet (also known as 'Fanny') Wilson. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1782); Andrew (b.1785); John (b.1787); Matthew (1788–1874); Henry (b.1791); and Janet (b.1796). Matthew (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Elliot and their children included Betty, Margaret and William. It is possible this is an earlier marriage of the Matthew who married Dorothy Purdom. Matthew (1788–1874) son of Matthew and Janet Wilson. He was a labourer in Newcastleton, living at about 9 Doncaster Street in 1841 and 26 South Hermitage Street in 1861. He is probably the labourer in Newcastleton listed among male heads of households in 1835. He married Dorothy ('Dolly') Purdom and their children included: Annie (b.1821), who married farm-worker James; Matthew (b.1821); John (b.1823), a ploughman at Barnes, who may have emigrated to Huron County, Ontario; Isabel (b.1825); and Thomas (b.1827), who possibly emigrated to Canada with his brother. His wife is probably the same Dolly Purdom who was previously married to Edward Aitchison, with a son John Douglas Aitchison baptised in Castleton in 1816. Matthew (1788/9–1877) tenant in Netherraw. He was listed as head of household at Netherraw in 1835–41. He was farmer of 20 acres at Netherraw in Castleton Parish in 1841 and 1851. He was the last farmer of Netherraw, with the buildings being demolished after his death, and much of the land planted. He married Janet Scott (c.1788–1875) and their children were: John (b.1808); Betty (b.1811); Matthew (b.1812); Robert (b.1814); Helen (b.1816); Ann (or Annie, 1819–84); William (1820–36); Andrew (b.1821); Isabel (b.1823), who married a Wilson; Margaret (b.1825); Janet (or Jane, b.1827); and Frances (or Fanny, 1829–1914). Matthew (b.1821) resident of Castleton Parish, son of

Matthew and Dorothy Purdom. In 1851 he was a farm servant at Hudshouse. He married Cecilia Turnbull and their children included: Stavert Turnbull (b.1844); and Elizabeth (1850–96), who married James Duncan Helm and died in Hawick. Matthew ‘Mattha’ (c.1871–1945) half-back for Hawick in the 1890s, who also played for Scotland. His 1895 Scotland cap is in the Museum, the first awarded to a Hawick player. Michael (13th C.) recorded as ‘Michaelis de Elaund’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He may have been an early Elliot, living just across the Border. His son Nicholas, who was 7, and Gilbert, son of Thomas, from the same place, seem to have died in an accident ‘in villa de Elaund’. Miss ?? (b.1830s) became famous for knitting about 130 pairs of socks to send to local soldiers during WWI. She lived on Dalkeith Place. Mr. ?? (18th/19th C.) teacher at the ‘Latin School’ in Hawick, i.e. the Grammar School. His son John died in 1798. It is unclear if he was the main master or an assistant at the school. Mrs. ?? (17th C.) listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. She probably ran an inn or shop. She could be the same Mrs. Elliot recorded in 1735 when the Council records show £2 7s being spent in her establishment ‘when the poer was mended’, suggesting that her inn was near one of the town’s ports. Mrs. ?? (20th C.) from Borthaugh. She was heavily involved in the local Women’s Voluntary Service during WWII. Nenion (b.1834) son of John, tailor at Quarrelhall in Castleton Parish, he was born in Teviothead Parish. He trained in law and became an Edinburgh-based solicitor before the Supreme Courts of Scotland and Clerk of the Teind Court. He was involved with the Edinburgh Border Counties Association and contributed several papers to the Hawick Archæological Society Transactions and Border Magazine. He published ‘Teinds as existing in Scotland’ (1874), ‘Teind System of Scotland’ (1874), ‘Teind Law Reform’ (1884) and ‘The Birns of Chapelhill’ (1892), all published in Hawick. Nichol (17th C.) 4th son of Walter of Arkleton. He was farmer at Unthank. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. John Lithgow of Ewes. His children were: Thomas (b.1700), who probably died young; Anna (b.1702); Adam (b.1703); Janet (b.1704) referred to as ‘in Newmill’, who died unmarried; and Margaret (b.1707), who married William Armstrong of Woodhead. In 1704 he was listed being of Ewes Parish when he witnessed a baptisms for William Anderson in Ramsay-cleuchburn. Nichol (17th/18th C.). His son John was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1725. Given the forename, he was probably connected with the farmer at Unthank. Nicholas (14th/15th C.) recorded as deceased in 1408 in a document relating to St. Giles’ lands in Edinburgh, where he is ‘Elwald’. Nicholas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when his son Gilbert was among Liddesdale men cited for non-appearance at the Justice-aire. Ninian (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 to a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh. Other witnesses were Robert, William, John and Andrew ‘Elwald’ (presumably important men of the clan), as well as 2 Croziers, a Graham and a Forster. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as a tenant of the steadings of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’. Another (or the same) Ninian is recorded, along with John, as tenant of Roughley in the same roll. Ninian ‘Ringan the Porter’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant at Ewes Doors about 1567. His nickname could be an epithet from the ‘Doors’. In 1569 he was ‘Niniane Elliot, callit the Portar of Ewis durris’ when order to enter as pledge for ‘haill Ellottis dwelland in Ewisdail’. Possibly the same ‘Renyen’ was recorded as being ‘of the Dewhowses’ in Ewesdale, along with John, when they signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. ‘John the Portars son’, recorded in 1578/9 and also in about 1594, was his son; in 1578/9 he was ‘umquhile Ringane the Portar’ when his son John (or ‘Blasteis Jok’) was cited, and hence he was already deceased by then. ‘Archie Elliot, sone to Ringhais Will Elliot the portar in Glenvoren’ could be his grandson. Ninian and John, who were tenants of Roughley in 1541, may also be related. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in a huge list of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell in 1585, when they had remission for their previous crimes. He is the first named of ‘Niniane, Thome, George and Will Ellattis’, suggesting they all resided in the same place. They are listed among Armstrong, Littles etc. of the area around Eskdale. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Dodburn (16th C.) recorded among a large number of Elliots and others complained about for a raid into England in 1589. His name is listed as ‘Rynion Ellott of Dodborne’ and ‘Renyon Ellott of Dodburne’. He is surely related to the slightly earlier Simon of Dodburn and Will in Dodburn. Ninian (16th C.) tenant in Colterscleuch. He was recorded in 1590 in a case where Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Walter Scott of Goldielands were ordered to enter certain of their tenants to answer some English complaints. Ninian 'Hob's Ringan' (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded as 'Rinyeane Elliott, called Hob's Rinyeane'. Ninian 'Ringan' (d.c.1608) son of William of Fiddleton. He was listed (along with his father and brother John) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. In 1608 he was sentenced along with William, son of John Elliot of Burngrains with resisting the King's Guard. They were also recorded as 'Niniane Ellote, sone to umq^{le} Jok of Burgranes; William Ellote, sone to Will of Fiddeltoun', which is confusing. The pair had been declared rebels some years earlier for theft, murder and other crimes. Hiding in 'the West cuntrie' they were sought out by Sir Robert Hepburn and men of the King's Guard, but they shot at the Guard, killing William Bailie and being captured after the house they were in was set on fire. They were sentenced to be taken to Edinburgh Castle Hill, to have their right hands cut off and then to be hanged. He must have been related to the 'John's Gavin' of Fiddleton who was tried in 1606. Ninian (d.1660) 4th son of Elliot of Unthank (whose name is unknown), he was tenant in Eweslees. His brothers were probably Adam of Meikledale, William of Mosspebble and William of Unthank. He received a lease of Eweslees from the Earl of Buccleuch in 1643. His eldest son appears to have predeceased him, and when he died he left 2 grandsons who were minors, with their appointed guardians being William of Unthank, Gavin of Outersiderig and James in Harwood. He married Margaret 'Acheson' (probably Aitchison). His children included: a son, whose children were Ninian of Eweslees and Robert of Eweslees; Robert in Gorenberry; and William in Lymiecleuch. However, this information is all quite uncertain. Ninian (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son Ninian was baptised in 1694. It is possible he is the same as Ninian of Falnash. Ninian of Falnash (d.bef. 1703) son of Gavin and grandson of Robert. He had a charter of Falnash dated 1667 from Archibald of Falnash, his cousin. He had a son, Walter. He may be the Ninian who leased Todshawhill, Whames and part of Branxholme Muir in 1672 and 1673. Ninian (b.c.1709) born at Shaws in Castleton, he may have been son or grandson of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve. He married Agnes Paterson and they had a son Ninian (b.1735) who lived at Riccarton. His wife's gravestone is in Teviothead cemetery; she died at the age of 58. He could be the shepherd in Commonbrae marked on the same stone, who died at Slatehills in 1762. He may have been father of Adam (1734–60), also marked on the gravestone, who died at Commonbrae. Ninian (18th C.) son of Robert in Know. He was tenant in Priesthill, which was probably the farmstead near Whithaugh. Ninian (1735–1816) son of Ninian and Agnes Paterson. He was a shepherd in Castleton, associated with Riccarton and Dod. He was at Riccarton in 1778. He was also recorded as shepherd at Riccarton on both the 1797 Horse and Dog Tax Rolls and also in the Castleton Parish section of the Roxburghshire Militia in 1797. He appears to have married 3 times, to Margaret Brydon (b.1731) at Riccarton in 1756, then Esther Crozier (1731–66) and lastly to Janet Douglas (1745–1834) at Upper-rar. His children probably included: Margaret (b.1756); John (b.1760) in Middlemoss; Margaret (again, b.1763); Adam (b.1765); Ester (b.1766), who married Robert Ballantyne from Pinglehole; Mary (b.1772); Robert (b.1774); Ninian (b.1776); Catherine (b.1777); Christian (b.1778); William (b.1784); and Walter (b.1789). He died at Shaws. Ninian (1776–1847) son of shepherd Ninian and Janet Douglas, he was born at Riccarton. He was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1797. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in the parish of Castletoun'. In 1801 he was listed as a shepherd at Sundhope. In 1841 he was listed as 'Lab. or Roadman' and living at about 13 North Hermitage Street. He married Margaret (1779–1863), daughter of John Nichol and Elizabeth Riddell. Their children included: Ninian (1808–89); John (b.1810); Helen (b.1812); James (1814–98), road contractor; and Janet (1821–1901), who had a daughter to John Nichol (presumably a cousin of some sort). Ninian (1789–1865) eldest son of John and Janet Robson, he was born in Castleton Parish and may have lived at Blackburnfoot. He emigrated with his family to Middlesex County, Ontario, and all but their first child was born there. He married Agnes Turnbull (b.c.1790). Their children included: Janet (b.1815), born in Castleton; Mary (b.1821); Elizabeth (b.1823); Esther (b.1829); Francis (b.1829); and Agnes (1837–41). Ninian (1799–1885) born at Sundhope in Castleton Parish, son of shepherd James and Janet Grieve. He married Janet, daughter of Elliot Grieve, who was born at Blinkbonny. They emigrated to Canada where their children were born, Janet, James, Elizabeth, Elliot Grieve, Gardner, John, William, James, Catherine, Thomas and Margaret. They lived in North Dorchester Township, Middlesex County, Ontario, where he was a farmer. Ninian (1808–89) son of Ninian and brother of John. He was a road contractor in Newcastleton, living on Douglas Square in 1851 and 1861. He married Jane (1812–65), daughter of John Nichol and Marion Murray. Their children included: John (1836–1905), also a roadman; Margaret (b.1838), who died young; Marion (1840–99). Patrick (15th C.) brother of John of Thorlieshope. He is recorded in 1488, when he was witness to a sasine for the lands of Girnwood. It is possible that the same Patrick was listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Patrick (16th C.) entered at a Justice Court in Jedburgh in about 1510, by Robert of Redheugh, along with ‘Gret Johnnie in Priestthaugh. Patrick ‘Pate’ of Ryleknow (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among men that Sir John Forster served as surety for. This makes it seem like he was from the English side. Peter ‘the Fart’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as ‘Petir Elliott, callit the Fart, in Pencryste’; presumably his nicknames means what it sounds like it means. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in Yair in 1678 when he had a deal about providing timber to the Burgh of Selkirk. Pauline received the B.E.M. in 2021 for service to Newcastleton’s resilience group. Percival (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535. Along with William (probably a relative), Andrew ‘Louche’, Patrick Gourlay and others were accused of taking grain from ‘le Schaw’ belonging to John Hall. They claimed that Hall reaped grain that they had sown themselves. His name is written ‘Parsevell Elliot’. He is probably the ‘Perse’ recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1542 for a transactions involving Burgess Robert. In 1544 he (along with Walter Scott of Branhholme) was a captor of an Englishman who William had a bond to return to them. Phillip (18th/19th C.) saddler of Hawick (probably from the East-end). He was the Council’s elected Cornet in 1790, but after he drew up a narrow list of invitees some of the young men of the town (presumably mainly the West-enders) chose George Wilson as their own Cornet instead. The two cavalcades approached the West Port from different sides of the Raws and Bailie Hardie blocked the rebel cavalcade (felling the first man with an oak stick), allowing the elected Cornet’s party to proceed unmolested to the Moor (as described by Robert Wilson). Ralph (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Two men listed as ‘radulphi elwald’ are there, although this forename is not otherwise common among the Elliots. One of them had a brother, William, who is also listed in 1494/5. Ralph (16th C.) priest who was recorded as witness to 2 documents in Selkirk in 1532. Richard ‘Little’ (14th C.) recorded in Cumberland in 1389, appearing before the justices of gaol delivery. His nickname was recorded as ‘parvus’ and his surname as ‘Elwald’, the same as William ‘One-Eyed’, who was also recorded. Richard (16th C.) recorded in 1548 as ‘Ryche Elliott of the Park’. Along with Robert of Redheugh and ‘Nelly’s John’, he had a bond to enter 2 prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst. He was presumably related to other Elliots of Park. Richard ‘Law’s Richie’ (16th C.) tenant in Swinstead. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘Richie Elliot callit Lawis Richie in Swinteis’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. ‘Lawis Jok’ and ‘Lawis Thome’ in Priestthaugh were also named and presumably his brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Richard (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 as ‘Ritche Elliott, callit Rowanes Willis Ritche’ among Elliots accused of raiding the farm of Harwood on Teviot. He was presumably son of William and grandson of Roland. He is listed after ‘Rowans Hobbe’ and his brother Jamie, who may be related. He was declared a rebel after not appearing. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is written as ‘Riche Elliott, ‘Bessies wifes Riche’’, but it is unclear exactly what this means and who he was related to. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (d.1606) called ‘Richie Elliott of Heuchous’ when he was found guilty of stealing a sheep. The Border Commissioners wished to spare him, but he was nevertheless sentenced to death by the Privy Council. He could be the same man as ‘Ryche Elliott of the Lewlandes’, listed just before William, son of John of Heuchhouse in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid into England. He was also listed along with Will, also of ‘the Hewghhouse’ in relation to another 2 raids in 1595. Richard (17th C.) see Robert. Richard (1817–91) eldest son of William, farmer at Doorpool. Along with his brothers William (1819–91) and John (1823–1910) he was farmer at Hartwoodmyres for about 50 years. In 1861 they were farming 900 acres and were all unmarried. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Roberto Elwald’ in 1481 when he and his mother leased the lands of ‘Glenstokane’ in Galloway. Perhaps the same Robert had a sasine for the lands of ‘Rachane’ in Peeblesshire, also in 1481. It is unclear how this man (or men) may have been related to local Elliots. Robert ‘Robin’ (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been an Elliot of Ewesdale, and is listed as ‘Robyn Elwald’, along with Adam and ‘Law’ (it is also possible he was an early Robert of Redheugh). Robert of Reidheugh (d.1497) first Elliot chief about whom we have documented information. Since it is said that he died as an old man, he may have been born in the 1420s. He is described as 10th Chief of the Elliots, even although the names of the first 9 chiefs are unknown (but it is a safe bet that some of them were Robert!). It is claimed the first chief was granted lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in about 1320; this earlier Robert was probably the first Elliot Laird of Redheugh and Larriston. A record found among papers at Ferniehirst was said to refer to an early Elliot of Redheugh, ‘Chieftan of the South’, who was killed in battle with 3 of his sons (possibly Homildon Hill in 1402), and whose daughter Mary married Cuthbert Blackadder, whose eldest son was alive in 1447; this earlier Elliot may have been his grandfather. He was established at Redheugh from at least 1476, when he was granted lands of ‘Dalman’ (possibly Demainholm), ‘Bluntwood’ and ‘the Crouke’ by Archibald Douglas (‘Bell-the-cat’), Earl of Angus and Lord of Liddesdale; the charter describes him as ‘our velbelufyt fameliar squiar, Robert Elwald of ye Redheuch for his guid and faithful servis to us don and for to be don’, and it is signed at Lintalee. In 1479 he was further granted ‘Layhalcht, Carolschelis, hartsgarth et le faulde’ (i.e. Leahaugh, Corrie’s Shiel and Harts-garth) in the lordship of ‘ledesdale’. In 1484 he was Robert ‘Elwald’ of the Redheuch when the Earl of Angus directed ‘Walter Scot de Edschau, Radulpho Ker, fratri Walteri Ker de Cesfurd et Willielmo Elwaldo de goranbery’ to infest him in the lands of Over and Nether ‘Larrostane’. In 1489 there was a further precept for ‘redehuch’, ‘layhauch’, ‘hartsgarth’, ‘caraschele’, ‘dawmane’ and ‘larostanys superior et inferior’. In 1491 the

Earl of Angus swapped Liddesdale for Bothwell, ending the association of the Elliots with their superiors the Douglasses. He may be the Robert son of Gilbert ‘Elwald’ who produced a remission at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493 for the crime of stealing a grey horse from William Scott of Tushielaw; his surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. He may also be the Robert mentioned in 1493 when Patrick Hardie had remission for stealing oxen from him. It seems likely he was the ‘roberti elwald, senioris’ who was listed among many Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the 1494/5 Justice-aire. He is said to have had one son, Robert, Captain of Hermitage, who died in his lifetime. He was succeeded by his grandson, Robert, according to a ‘retour of inquest’ of 1497/8 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. He is there said to have died ‘about the feast of the Invention of the Holy Cross last bypast’, i.e. in early May, and his grandson inherited his lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c.1491) son of Robert, he was also known as ‘Robin’. He is sometimes listed as 11th Chief of the Elliots, even though he died in his father’s lifetime. He served as Captain of Hermitage Castle (probably Deputy Keeper), perhaps being appointed on the death of David Scott, younger of Buccleuch (in about 1484). In 1491 the Earl of Angus was bound to hand over his son Robert (as well as his own son, the Master of Angus) to King James. He was succeeded by his son Robert (12th) of Redheugh. He may also have been father of William of Larriston, although these early generations are not clear. Robert ‘the King’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among a long list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire. Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, and George Turnbull of Hallrule, Captain of Hermitage, served as their sureties and were fined. His name was given as ‘Roberti elwald vocatus king’ and he is listed second (after William) in a long list, perhaps suggesting his prominence among the Elliots. He was also one of a large number of Elliots (mostly ‘Elwalds’) listed in a 1500 document relating to pledges of good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. In 1502 he is probably the ‘Hob the King’, brother of ‘Dand the Man’ and son of William, who was involved with stealing 180 sheep from Tweeddale and Lauderdale. They were already rebels at that point, with 3 men from around Greenhead producing a ‘respite’ for resetting them. It is unclear which William was his father, and how he was related to any other Elliots. He may be the Robert who witnessed a sasine (along with several Elliots and others) for Robert of Redheugh in 1497. Robert (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. His name is listed as 'roberti elwald comitis', with his nickname perhaps being 'the Count' (to distinguish him from 'the King' and other contemporary men of the same name). Robert of Langhaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. He is listed there as 'Roberti elwald de langhalch'. He is also recorded in the document listing men who pledged themselves to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498 for good behaviour. He is there recorded as 'Robert Elwald of the Langhalch'. This is probably the Longhaugh on the Hermitage Water. Robert 'Young Rider' (15th/16th C.) listed in a large number of men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is also listed among men who pledged their good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He is recorded as 'Robert Elwald, callit zong ridar'. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c.1516) 12th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert and grandson of the previous Laird of Redheugh. In 1491 he is probably the Robert, son of 'Robert Elwolde, of the Hermitage' who was delivered (along with the Master of Angus) as security by the Earl of Angus to King James. He is also probably 'Robert Elwold son to ... Elwold ... the Hermitage [younger] which late [dec]eassid' to be delivered as a surety, as recorded in an agreement between English and Scottish Commissioners in 1491. He was served heir to his grandfather in 1497/8 in the lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch, according to a 'retour' in the Douglas of Cavers papers (where he is 'Robert Elwalde'). 2 other Robert Elliots, and 2 William Elliots were on the panel for this inquest. He had sasine for the Liddesdale estates in 1497 and in 1501 he had another retour (at Jedburgh) for his grandfather's lands, held of the Earl of Bothwell. He additionally inherited Priestthaugh, with the Abbots of Melrose as superiors. In 1502 he was 'Robertus elwald in redheuch' when he and George Turnbull in Hallrule were fined for failing to present David Turnbull in Bonchester at court in Jedburgh. He was witness to a sasine at Hermitage (for Adam, 2nd Earl of Bothwell) in 1508, along with William Elliot and Robert in Dinlees. He may be the Robert 'Elwald' who was on the 1509 panel for deciding on the inheritance of Cavers by James Douglas. He was

'Robert Elwald of Redheuch' when summoned to come before the King to promise to keep good order in 1510. Following this he had a respite in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1510 for all crimes carried out by him and his associates (except for treason) to be unpunished for 19 years to come. Also listed explicitly were Robert of Dinlees and John in Sundhope, suggesting they might have been brothers or sons (other associates were 2 Nixons, 2 Croziers, 2 Hendersons and an Armstrong). His children were Robert (possibly killed at Flodden) and a daughter who may have married David Scott of Howpasley (or possibly Tushielaw), with William of Larriston perhaps being another son. In general it seems difficult to separate him from the next Robert (in deciding how many generations there really were, and who may have been killed at Flodden). It is unclear if he was the 'Robert Elwald of Redheuche' who had a respite for his crimes in 1515/6, along with his brother William of Larriston and some Nixons, Foresters and Croziers, numbering 40 men. If this was him, then he seems likely to have died in 1516 and was succeeded by his grandson Robert in 1526. Robert (15th/16th C.) brother of William. In 1502 he was convicted of stealing 5 cows from John 'spedin' out of Blackhaugh. His brother William was his surety. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Reidheugh (d.1513) referred to as 13th Chief of the Elliots, even although he appears to have died in his father's lifetime. He was son of Robert, although the number of different Roberts in the preceding couple of decades seems quite uncertain. His sons were: Robert, who succeeded his grandfather in 1526; possibly Martin of Braidlie (although he seems more likely to have been his grandson); Archibald of Falnash and Gorrenberry; and probably John of Copshaw. He was probably the 'Master Elliot' said to have been killed at Flodden. However, this may be confusion with his father (since it seems hard to believe he was very old at Flodden), and there is no documentary evidence to separate the various Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Robert Elwald of Dunle' in a 1510 respite to Robert of Redheugh and many others in Liddesdale. It seems likely he was a close relative of the Elliot chief. He is also listed as 'in Denly' in a 1516 'respite' to William of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots. He was presumably tenant farmer at Dinlees on the Hermitage Water. Robert (d.1530) referred to as a 'common thief' in 1530 when he and Adam Nixon were allowed to escape from the custody of John, Lord Hay of Yester, and for which Lord Hay's brother (also John) was imprisoned in Linlithgow. Probably the same Robert 'Elwald' was hanged for theft in Linlithgow that same year, along with Matthew and William Nixon and Robert Noble. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. Robert (d.bef. 1539) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Book in 1539/40 when his widow, Janet Scott, purchased lands in Apple-treehall from Robert Scott of Howpasley. He is recorded as 'Robert Elwand of [Toungtis?]', but could possibly be a deceased Robert of Redheugh. Perhaps the same Robert was described as 'layman' when he witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1535 for Alexander Scott of Palace. Robert (d.bef. 1540) referred to as 'Robert Elwand' in 1540 when his widow Margaret Roger raised an action against 2 Murrays for stealing cattle from Borthwickshiels (where he was a tenant) in 1526. His sons included David, Alexander, John and Ringand (Ninian), all of whom were wanted as thieves. Robert of Ramsiegill (16th C.) recorded as 'Hobbe Elwald of Ramsegill' in 1532 when the King charge a commission with his capture (along with Croziers and Foresters) for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull. In 1541 he was 'antiquo Roberto Elwald de Ramysgill' when listed among the tenants of Stirkshielhope; 'Roberto Elwald in Rammisgill' was also listed and presumably a different man (although it is unclear if they were related). Robert of Reidheugh (c.1505–bef. 1557) 14th Chief of the Elliots, served heir to his grandfather in 1526, with his father probably being killed at Flodden. His grand-uncle (or perhaps uncle) William of Larriston led the clan during his minority. In 1526 he inherited his grandfather's Liddesdale lands of 'Reidheuch, Layhauch, Hartsgarth, Careschel, Dalemane' and 'Over and Nether Larastanis'. In 1531 he was probably the Robert 'Elwolde' of the 'Armytage' who was one of 3 attendants who accompanied the Earl of Bothwell to a secret meeting with the Earl of Northumberland. He was further recorded as Captain of Hermitage in a document of 1532 and another in 1548/9 (when he had a bond to enter John 'Cragill' as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst). In 1537/8 he and his brother Archibald were sureties for William in Leahaugh, plus brothers James and Simon, who had broken open a shop in Selkirk. He may be the 'Robert Elwald seriendo' (i.e. 'sergeant') who was recorded as tenant of Shaws in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale;

he may also be the Robert who was tenant of the lands of Copshaw. He may be the 'Robert Ellwald' listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. In 1546 his son was described as 'sone to Robyne of the Redhwyh'. He was listed as 'Rot. Eluand of Reidheuch' in a 1550 bond signed by him and 10 Scotts in which they promised the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1552/3 he and Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton were appointed by the Privy Council to meet the Governor at Dumfries and accept the charge of keeping the peace in Liddesdale. He was succeeded by his son, Robert. He seems likely to have also been father of Martin of Braidlie (who led the burning of Hawick in 1565), although genealogies often have this Martin as his brother. Jock of Copshaw may have been another son (since he appears to have been Martin of Braidlie's brother). Robert 'Flaskwood' (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1529/30. Archibald and Gavin Elliot, along with Simon and Ninian Armstrong pledged to bring him to Fairnilee to answer for attacks and other crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. He is also recorded as 'Roberto Elwald de Flaswod' in 1535 in a trial in Jedburgh in 1535, where Robert Scott of Allahaugh was accused of bringing him and William 'Mend the caill' from Liddesdale to plunder cattle at Midlem and elsewhere. His lands could be the place of this name in Liddesdale or 'Flask Wood' in Ewesdale. Robert (16th C.) son of Thomas and Helen Rutherford. In 1541/2 he inherited his deceased father's tenement and 2 rigs in Selkirk and then resigned a house to his mother, in liferent. He may be the Burgess of Selkirk recorded in 1542; 'Perse' was one of the witnesses and may have been related. Probably the same Robert witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1543. In 1561 his mother Helen Rutherford assigned the tenement and 4 rigs to Robert, son of the deceased Gavin of Horsleyhill, leaving liferent for herself; Robert of Horsleyhill also assigned to him the 'kindness' of the King's Croft in Selkirk. Robert (16th C.) recorded as being 'in Rammisgill' in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants at Stirkshielhope. Old Robert 'Elwald de Rammisgill' was also listed among the tenants, and is hence presumably a different man. He is surely related to the William in Ramsiegill who is also mentioned in 1541, and is probably related to the Robert in Ramsiegill who is recorded in the 1580s. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) listed in 1544 as 'Hobbe Elwode Clemyt [Crozier's] syster sone', when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. The Clement mentioned here, who was presumably his mother's brother, was a prominent member of the Crozier family at that time, and possibly Clem Crozier of Stobs. It is not impossible that he was the same man as Robert of Horsleyhill (which also had a Stobs connection). It is also possible he was the same man as the 'Clement's Hob' mentioned several times in the 1560s and 1570s. Robert 'Gavin's Hob' (16th C.) witness to the bond in 1546 to enter 3 Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst. One of the other witnesses was a Bailie of Hawick, and hence he was probably fairly local, but it is unclear which Gavin was his father. Robert (d.1564) 2nd Laird of Horsleyhill, eldest son of Gavin, 1st Laird. His brothers were William (who later succeeded to Horsleyhill), Andrew, David, Gavin of Stobs, and Archibald. He was said to have been involved in the murder of Hugh Douglas in about 1547, along with his father Gavin, and brothers William and Andrew. In 1561/2 he was recorded as son of the deceased Gavin of Horsleyhill when he purchased a tenement and 4 rigs in Selkirk from Helen Rutherford, widow of Thomas Elliot; he promised to retain liferent of a house for Helen and gave up the 'kindness' of the King's Croft in Selkirk to Helen's son, who was also called Robert Elliot. In 1563/4 he is 'in Horslehill' when he appeared on behalf of his brother Dand, whose sheep had been stolen from Bailielee by the Scotts of Tushielaw; their cautioner was John Preston, Burgess of Edinburgh. He is probably the Robert who was listed in 1564 along with William of Horsleyhill and Gavin and Archibald (as well as other Elliots and Scotts) in the trial of the murder of David Scott of Hassendean, for which he was said to be the instigator; however, it is confusing that he was not named as Laird at the time, perhaps because he had not formally succeeded his father by then. He had at least 2 children: Gavin (d.1565), who succeeded; and William (b.1547) who succeeded after his brother. He was executed for the murder of David Scott. His uncle Gavin (later of Stobs) was appointed as guardian to his children, although his half-brother William (later Burgess of Peebles) disputed this, but was deemed too young. Robert of Reidheugh (d.bef. 1564) 15th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert, whom he probably succeeded some time before 1557. He may have appeared along with his father at a Judiciary Court held by Lord Maxwell in 1537/8. In 1546/7 he was 'sone to Robyn of the Redhwyh' when he was among several men entering Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst, and in 1548 (referred to as 'younger of the Reidhewcht') had a similar bond for entering John, son of Robin of Thorlieshope. His 'eym' (i.e. uncle) Archibald was also referred to there and he signed with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). He had a bond for entering Nixons in 1557 and in that year his brother Martin is also referred to (confusing, since Martin of Braidlie is sometimes placed in the family tree as his uncle). He was 'of Reidhuche' in about 1557 when he rented Priestthaugh and Penangushope from Melrose Abbey. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. In 1561 he was 'of Reidheuch' when listed (along with his Gavin, brother of Archie's Will) among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of those who were guilty of theft; he was called 'of Redheuch' when later listed (after Martin 'of Reideuch') among men charged by the Privy Council to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563 he was appointed Deputy Keeper of Hermitage Castle, while the Earl of Bothwell was in exile, with William Douglas of Cavers acting as security for him. He had a bond of 1563, along with Martin of Braidlie (his brother) for entering Jock, son of Gavin Elliot to Sir Thomas Ferniehirst. He married Jean Scott, sister of Buccleuch, around 1550 (and after his death she married Gavin Eliott of Stobs). His children were: Robert of Redheugh; William of Hartsgarth; Gilbert of Stobs, 'Gibbie wi' the Golden Garties' (although this is not certain); Archibald; Gavin of Brugh; and a daughter, who was the 2nd wife of Will, 2nd son of Richard Graham of Netherby. A report on the West Marches compiled in the period 1563-66 states that 'oulde Robyn Elliot and young Robyn, his son, are both dead'. Robert 'Reid Hob' (16th C.) listed in 1569 among the tenants that Gavin Eliott in Skelhill was surety for. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert of the Shaws (16th C.) said to have been the Elliot who convinced those who had been rounded up in Hermitage Castle to allow the wounded Earl of Bothwell to enter in 1566, by agreeing to let all of them go. It is said that he was granted the rent of the lands of 'Blackgrave' as a reward. It is possible that 'Shaw' is the same as 'Copshaw', but is more likely to be the lands of that name on the Hermitage Water. In 1569 he and his brother Will of the Steele were excepted from the pledge that John of Thorlieshope had for the whole of that branch of the Elliots. Also in 1569 he was 'Hob of the Schawis', listed along with Airchie 'Fyre the Brais his brother', when John of Thorlieshope was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. In 1572 he was among the Elliots who signed a bond with John Johnstone of that Ilk for returning John of the Steel (who had been broken out of ward). He may be 'Hob Elliott, brother of Johnne of Copshaw' who was recorded in 1587/8 being in ward with Lord Sinclair; however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He is also 'Hobb Elliott of the Shawes' when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'the Garret sheills'. In 1591 he was part of a group (along with Airchie of the Hill and others) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. Either he or his son was probably the 'Hob of the Schawis' who was one of the Liddesdale Elliots to sign bonds with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. He was probably also related to Adam and Gilbert of the Shaws who are recorded in 1583. Robert 'Hob', 'the Lady' (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among Elliots of Ewesdale. 'Will Elliot callit the Lord' was held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge him, as well as John of Fiddleton and Hob of Unthank. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) recorded being 'callit Hob of Unthank' in 1569. This was along with Hob 'the Lady' and John of Fiddleton, when Will 'the Lord' was held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for them. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. He may have been related to Will, Dand and Jock, other Elliots also listed as tenants. Robert 'Hob', 'Sweet Milk', 'Great Legs' (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when Andrew Ker of Faldonside had a bond with him. His name appears in the Register of the Privy Council as 'Hob Elliot callit Sweit Mylk alias Greit Leggis'. It is possible that he was related to William 'Sweet Milk', whose death in a duel at Newmill is immortalised in the song 'Rattlin Roarin Willie'. His second nickname presumably means that he was tall. It seems likely he was related to Gilbert, who had the same nickname recorded in 1586/7 and Dand in 1598. Robert 'Martin's Hob of Prickenhaugh' (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He was also sometimes called 'Hob of Braidlie'. His lands were at Prickinghaugh in Liddesdale. He was one of the band of 300 or so Elliots, Armstrongs and others who plundered Torwoodlee in 1568. He is probably the Robert of Braidlie for whom there was surety before the Privy Council in 1573. He is listed as 'Hobbie' in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Gavin and Archie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charges. He was also implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He was 'Hob' of Braidlie when sentenced to imprisonment in 1580/1 for several crimes of theft, along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. He is probably the 'Hob Elliott of Braidley' for whose re-entry in 1581 Martin of Braidlie (presumably his father) and John Turnbull of Minto served as caution; he was pledge for the 'gang of Gorrumberrie', and was released from ward in the Castle and Tolbooth of Edinburgh. In 1581 his father complained about how he and his brother Dand had been attacked while riding near Headshaw; Walter Scott of Headshaw and 5 or 6 others attacked them and 'struckin the hand from the ane and hurt the uther in perrell of his lyff', although it is unclear whether he or his brother lost his hand. He is listed as 'Hobbe Elliot' among a 1583 list of Elliots of Braidlie and was probably also the 'Robin Elliot of Braidley' listed among the landed men of the Border in about 1590. In 1587/8 he was 'Hobbe Elliott, called Martin's Hobbe' when there was an order for Francis, Earl of Bothwell, to release the Englishman that he had captured. He is on a list of Elliots (including his father Martin and brother Airchie) accused in 1590 of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year. He is probably the Hob listed among Elliots (including his brother Gib, as well as Airchie of Clintwood, who was also his brother) and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. Two of his sons were later denounced as rebels ('Kirstie' and one other). In 1611 he was 'Robert Elliot, called Martenis Hob' when he was cautioner for 'Jok Elliot, called the Murt', for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. He was also one of the cautioners in 1611 for 'Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie', along with Robert of Redheugh, William of Gorrenberry, Archie of Clintwood and William of Prickinghaugh. He may be the same as 'Robert Elliot, called of Braidlie' when witness to the document of 1613 infesting Robert of Redheugh in his lands. Robert 'Hob' of Heuchhouse (16th C.) listed among Elliots who signed a bond in 1570, promising to give pledges for the release of John of Heuchhouse (who was surely a brother or son) and Hob, son of Elder Will. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned; it was reported that he had previously been surety for John of the Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son to Elder Will. In 1579/80 he is recorded along with his brother 'Reid Mertin' on a list of men accused of raiding into England. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He is recorded in an 1583 letter from Musgrave to Burleigh, describing the leaders of the Elliots of Liddesdale. He is described as 'Hobbe Elliot of the Hewghus', and listed along with Robert of Redheugh and 3 of the chief's brothers, so he was presumably closely related. His brother John is also mentioned, and he could be the John of Heuchhouse who is recorded about the same time.

Robert 'Scot's Hob' (16th C.) listed as 'Scottis Hob', along with his 2 unnamed sons, in a 1574 list of Scots rebels who were reset in England. In 1578 he was listed among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with John Carmichael, younger of that ilk) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1578/9 he is 'Hob Elliot, callit Scottis Hob' when it was declared by the Privy Council that he was meant to return to prison with William Cunningham of 'Caprintoun', with cautioner John Carmichael, younger of that ilk. However, he had not re-entered ward with Cunningham, and hence his cautioner defaulted. He is recorded as 'Scotes Hobbe' in 1583 in a list of Elliots of Park. It is unclear whether his nickname meant 'Scottish' or that he was perhaps stepson of a Scott, or his father was nicknamed 'Scott'. It is possible that 'Hobbie's Hob', who is also listed, was his son. Gavin, who was convicted of theft in 1580/1, was probably also his son; he was 'Scottis Hobbis Gawen' in 1581. Another son, 'Scottis Hobbis Jok' is recorded in 1580, 1581 and 1584.

Robert 'Hob' of the Park (16th C.) son of James of the Park. There is a pledge for him before the Privy Council in 1573; he was exchanged for John of the Park, who was to be warded with Sir William Scott of Balwearie, and although he had been freed, was ordered to present himself again to be warded. In 1576 there is a complaint that he had been freed from ward with William Porterfield.

He was listed in a promise by Border Lairds to meet to suppress lawlessness on the Border. He is listed in 1578/9 in a restatement of a promise made to the Privy Council as a 'plege for the gang thair of', that he should stay in ward with William Porterfield of Duchall. His sureties were Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie. However, he was stated to have 'not remanit bot eschaipit fra the said Williame Portarfeild'. He was listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. Also in 1580 he was held in ward by the Earl of Lennox in Dumbarton Castle. In 1581/2 he was declared a rebel after failing to appear to answer charges about farms near Hawick being raided. He was presumably important in the family of Elliots of the Park, and also related to the deceased John of the Park and 'Symmy' of the Park, who were also mentioned in the same 1578/9 document. He is recorded as 'Robert Elliott of the Park' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court; Simon and James of the Park are also listed. Either the same or a different 'Hob Elliot of the Park' was declared a rebel of 1606. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) son of 'Dand of Braidley' and probably grandson of Martin of Braidley. In 1574 it is recorded that he was to remain in ward. In 1576 the man with whom he had been warded, George Maxwell of Newark, was ordered to appear before the Privy Council to explain why he had been freed. He is listed in 1578 as 'Hob Elliot, sone to David Elliot of Braidley' among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with the Provost and Bailies of Edinburgh) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1580 he was warded with the Provost and Bailies of Edinburgh, along with John, son of 'the Elder Tod'. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given as 'Hobbe Elliot, callit Kene'. The meaning of the nickname is unclear, but he may have been closely related with 'Archie Kene', and must have been a supporter of Lencie Armstrong of Whithaugh. Robert 'Hob' of Glenvoran (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 among men (probably of Ewesdale) who William Maxwell, Lord Herries, was ordered to present to the Privy Council. His name is listed as 'Hobbe Elliott, alias Hobby of Glenvorane'. He is also recorded as 'Hobbie of Glenvore' on Sandison's c.1590 map of the Debateable Lands. His lands were in the upper Ewes valley. Probably the same man was 'Robine Ellott the Bastarde of Glenvoren' listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was mentioned in 1590 in a case where Lord Maxwell and Alexander, Lord Home were ordered to enter certain men of Ewesdale to answer some English complaints. In 1590/1 he was listed among men who both Lord Maxwell and Lord Home were to enter before the Privy Council; he was specifically called out with a few others 'to answer for all their other steel-fellows [fellow thieves]'. Probably the same 'Robene Elliot of Glenvorane' was declared a fugitive in 1606. ('Reid Hob Elliot') suggests that he had red hair. He is probably also the Robert of Skelfhill who was one of those summoned by the Privy Council in 1575 to settle the feud between the Elliots and Pringles. Robert 'Hob Billie' (16th C.) recorded in 1588 when James Dalgleish and Nichol Brydon were convicted of helping him, David Elliot, Armstrongs and others steal cattle from near Edinburgh. He is probably the 'Hobbe Elliott 'Hobbe bullie'' listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbills, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'; he is also 'Hobb 'Bullie'' when accused of having been in another group who stole from the same farms earlier. Robert 'Gavin's Hob' (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons when there was a complaint from the English side of the Border that in 1588 they had stolen in 'playne dayelight, thir hirdes' and 24 head of cattle. He is recorded as 'Gawens Hob Elliot', but it is unclear who his father Gavin was. Robert (16th C.) recorded as being 'in Borthuikbra, servant to Wat Scott of Tushelaw' in 1589 when he refused to restore 2 mares and a horse that had been stolen. Along with 'Sandie Wemys in Hawik', Robert Fraser younger of Overton and Andrew Armstrong, he was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He was presumably tenant at Borthwickbrae, but was not obviously related to the later Elliots of Borthwickbrae. Robert (16th C.) recorded as 'Hob bullie' in 1589, among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c. 1591) 16th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert. He was a minor when his father died sometime around 1563, and Martin of Braidlie (probably his uncle or perhaps great-uncle) acted as clan chief, while his new stepfather was Gavin Eliott of Stobs and Skelfhill. In 1569 he was 'Robert Elliot of the Skelfhill' when he promised to enter as surety in place of his stepfather, if required. He became of age in about 1572 and took over as clan chief. He was recorded as Captain of Hermitage in 1573. Also in that year he was among a large group of Border lairds to sign a bond with the Regent Morton. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. Additionally in 1573 there was a decree by Douglas of Cavers for his removal from the lands of Langside (which he fought against, on the basis that his father and grandfather had held these lands). He was the Robert of Redheugh who signed a bond recognising Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst as Warden of the Middle Marches in the 1570s. He is probably the 'Young Robin' recorded 'for the wrangus spoliatioun and awaytaking of thair teindis', along with Gaving of Horsleyhill and William Douglas of Crook, on the 1574 testament of Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1574 he witnessed a discharge between Douglas of Cavers and Cranston of that ilk. Additionally in 1574 he served as surety for a number of Borderers with the Privy Council, specifically for the lands of Priestthaugh, Peelbrae, Swinstead and Dodrig; he was found liable for 5000 merks for not removing the thieves and replacing them with 'trew men'. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned, and was found liable for the fines, because the men he made pledges for had continued their rieving activities (in his case, 'Joke the Gyde' Elliot and Sim, son of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh). In 1579/80 he acted as surety for a group of Elliots and others accused of conducting raids into England; his brother Archie is also named there, and he himself was accused of being part of a raid on Coquet Water. In 1580 he, the Scotts of Buccleuch, Gledstains and others, followed a group of English and Scottish thieves who had raided Meikle Whitlaw; he was wounded in a fray with Armstrongs and Elliots on their return. In 1580/1 he was directed to give up his position as Captain of Hemitage. In 1581 he was allied with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Gledstains of Cocklaw when they made a set of complaints against Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; all were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters. Along with Martin of Braidlie and 2 Armstrongs, he was also denounced in 1582/3 by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants.

He signed a bond of support for the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably in the early 1580s. He is 'Robin Elliot, of the Redheugh' when he complained of an English raid on his lands at the Steele in the 1580s. In a letter of 1583 from Musgrave to Burleigh he is 'Robin Elliot of the Reddhughe, cheife of the El-lotes', along with his brothers William of Harts-garth, Gilbert, Archibald and Gavin, and many other Elliots, including Hob of the Heuchhouse and his brother John, Adam and Gilbert of the Shaws, Archibald 'Fyre the Braes' and 'Richie's Martin', as well as Garth Simson, all of whom were said to be his 'brethren, or his men that are daly at his commandement'. Also in 1583 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to answer the charge brought against him by Robert in Dodrig, that his men had repeatedly attacked the servants there, although he had no legal right to the lands. He was recorded in 1584 as 'Robeine Elliot' in a letter from the King and was temporarily imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle, along with Martin of Braidlie and Armstrong of Whithaugh. He was chief of the Elliots (named first, along with Martin of Braidlie and William of Falnash) in their assurance to the English Wardens to keep the peace in 1584, signed at Hermitage Castle. In 1583/4 and 1584/5 he was among the Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1586 he and Martin of Braidlie were explicitly listed as leaders in Liddesdale in instructions from King James to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1586 he was instructed to enter into court his brother William in Harts-garth, as well as his tenants and servants Adie in the Shaw, Archie in the Hill, Sim of the Park, James of the Park, Robert of the Park, David of Braidlee, James 'the Gyde', James of the Steele, John of Heuchhouse and George Simpson of the Raw; he was also ordered to present himself as surety for 'Jokis Willie' Elliott. In 1587/8 Gavin Elliott of Stobs promised to present him to the Privy Council. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was listed among leaders in Liddesdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. There was a 'letter of horning' against him for failing to appear in 1589. In 1590 he was named first on a list of Elliots accused of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year, stealing 60 cows, 2 horses, taking goods worth £100 and burning 5 houses. Also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In August of 1590 he appeared before the King and Council to answer for some of his men, and this may be the last time he is recorded (he certainly died before June of the following year). He was probably the Laird of Redheugh listed by Monipennie (published around 1594, but compiled earlier) among Border chiefs, along with Robert (probably his son) and Martin (probably of Braidlie). He married Marion (or Marjorie), daughter of James Hamilton of Sprouston in 1572; through this marriage and its Bothwell connection, he became allied with the side of Mary, Queen of Scots. They had 5 children: Robert of Redheugh; William of the Rig and of Harts-garth, who married Jean Rutherford; a daughter, who married Hector Lorraine of Harwood; Nicola, who married Gerard, brother of Sir Thomas Carleton; and Gilbert, illegitimate (possibly by Helen Kidd). His sons were all minors at the time of his death. He may also be the Elliot of Redheugh who is said to have married a daughter of Thomas Carlton of Carlton Hall. He could have been the 'Robert Elliot callit Yhounge Robene' who was recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme in 1574, along with William Douglas of Crook and Gavin Elliott of Horsleyhill, as men who owed him for teinds several years earlier; if so, he probably owned (or leased) Penangushope. He may also be the 'Robin Elliot' who, along with his brother William, George Simpson and their accomplices were accused of raiding into England in 1582. In 1591 Gavin Elliott of Stobs promised that he would not harm his widow Marjorie Hamilton. Robert 'Clement's Hob' (d.bef. 1578) one of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick in October 1567 by the Earl of Moray, in a surprise attack during the Market. He was one of the 10 who were afterwards held in Edinburgh tolbooth, unlike the 18 who were immediately drowned. His father was presumably Clement; although it is also possible that he was the same as the Robert who was nephew of Clement Crozier (and certainly Clement was a prominent name among Croziers and otherwise unknown among Elliots). In 1569 he and Archie Keen escaped from the Castle of Doune and then went on 'a marauding expedition'; he is there listed as being 'in Gorumbery'. Also in 1569 he is listed along with 'Dand of Braidley' when 'Archie

Kene' was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. In 1570 he was one of several Elliots who signed a bond related to the release from ward of John of Heuchhouse and Hob, son of Elder Will. In 1574 he is 'Hob Elliott callit Clemmettis Hob' when listed among a list of mostly Croziers who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Douglas of Cavers; he is listed after Mirk Hob in Penchrise. In 1578/9 there was a reminder at the Privy Council that he had been one of the joint sureties for John of Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son of Elder Will; he is listed as 'umquhile Hob Elliot, callit Clemmentis Hob'. His son Dand is recorded in 1581. Robert 'Mirk Hob' (16th C.) one of the 10 Liddesdale rieviers held in Edinburgh tolbooth after being captured in Hawick in 1567. Surely the same man was 'Hob Mirk Elliot' in 1569 when John of the Park was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for him and 'Gray Will Elliot'. He is probably the same as 'Mirk Hob in Peneryse' recorded in 1574 among a list of Croziers who Douglas of Cavers was supposed to have removed from his lands. His is also 'Hob Elliot, callit Mirk Hob, in Pencryise' recorded in 1576 when several Border Lairds acted as joint sureties for him; they were Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert Elliot of Redheugh, Gavin Elliot of Falnash and Walter Scott of Goldielands. He was thus associated with the farm of Penchrise. By 1578/9 he was among many Borderers state to have 'brokin and contravenit the conditioun abonespecifiit, having committit diverse crymes of thift and resset of thift'; he was thus declared a fugitive. Robert (16th C.) son to 'Elder Will', another of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick in 1567. In 1570 there was a charge brought against several Elliots involving him and John of Heuchhouse, complaining that they had been released from Blackness Castle, but their clan had failed to 'enter the said pledges' on eight days' warning; among those who signed the bond was 'the said Elder Will', as well as Martin of Braidlie. There was a reminder of this pledge in 1578/9, where it was stted that he and John of Heuchhouse had not been imprisoned in the houses of John Cockburn of Ormiston and William Lauder of Haltoun, as pledged. He was probably brother of John, who was convicted of theft in 1580/1. Robert 'Vicar's Hob' (16th C.) one of the outlaws of Liddesdale apprehended in Hawick in 1567, where he is 'Rob'. In 1574 he was listed among men who had been ordered removed from the lands of Priestthaugh and others by Robert Elliot of Redheugh; he is there 'Robert Elliott callit the Vicaris Hob'. In

1576 there was a pledge to the Privy Council that he would refrain from thieving; he was recorded there as 'Hob Elliot, callit the Vicaris Hob', with cautioners being jointly Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert Elliot of Redheugh, Gavin Elliot of Falnash and Walter Scott of Goldielands. He is probably the same 'Hob Elliott, called the Vicar's Hobb' for whom John Turnbull of Minto and Edward Lorraine of Harwood were cautioners in 1588/9, to promise that when he was released from Edinburgh Tolbooth he would re-enter when required, 'under the pain of the payment of the bill filed on Archie Elliot of Dogcleuch'. Robert 'Hob o Thorlieshope' (16th C.) one of the Liddesdale thieves captured at Hawick market by the Earl of Moray in 1567; he is recorded as being 'in Thorlinsope'. In 1569 he was entered before the Regent by Sir Andrew Ker of Hirsell, Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Ker of Faldonside. Probably the same Robert of Thorlieshope was appointed as one of the sergeants for the Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale in 1537/8. He is 'Roberto Elwald officario' who was tenant of Thorlieshope on the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale; 'officiario' suggests he had an official role in the area. He is 'Robyn Elwald of Thorlieshopp' listed in 1541 by the English among Scotsmen who reset English rebels; 'Wilcokes Elwald' is listed along with him, and so possibly a relative, and he is also listed along with Clem Crozier, who may have been a neighbour. He was also mentioned in 1541 when Airchie, 'brother and son to Robert Ellwald of Thorllyshope' was listed among Scotsmen responsible for the burning of the corn of William Carnaby at Halton; this suggests that Airchie was his brother and perhaps that their father was also Robert. He is also probably the 'Robin of Thorlyshop' whose son John was entered in a bond by James Douglas of Cavers in 1546 and in other bonds with Robert of Redheugh in 1547. In 1546 he had to sign with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). He was probably related to (or possibly the same as) the 'Rob of Thoirlishop' recorded in about 1594. Robert 'Will Cock's Hob' (16th C.) listed in 1569 as 'Robert Elliot callit Wilcokis Hob'. He and 'Gawins Jok in Ramsyigill' were the pledges for whom 'Ade Elliot callit the Cowdais' was held in Blackness Castle. It is possible he was the same man as Hob of Thorlieshope. His father was probably 'Will Cock'. Robert 'Airchie's Hob' (16th C.) third son of Archibald of Falnash, he seems to have been a regular supported of Martin of Braidlie on raids. He was mentioned in

1569 among a number of pledges to exchange for Martin of Braidlie when Martin was warded with the Regent Moray. He is probably the 'Arches Hobbes' whose 2 sons were among several Elliots and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding a raid in 1588. His name is recorded as 'Hobbe Elliot of the Sheale', but it is unclear where his lands were. He could be the same as Hob of the Staneshiel recorded in 1590 and 1595. Robert 'Willie's Hob' (16th C.) presumably son of William. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with several Elliots of Ramsiegill, but separately from 'Hobb Elliot of Ramsiegill' (the leader of this branch). He was recorded in 1587 in a bond by several Elliots, including his brother John, when he was imprisoned, probably for rieving; he had to be entered 'as haill man and feir' at Melrose. He was released in 1598, with Adam Tweedie obliged to make good for this theft. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert 'Hob' of Bowholm (d.1595/6) listed as 'Hob of Bowholmes' in a list of Borderers made in about the 1580s. He was listed along with 'Will Colithis Hob' under the area of 'Welshaw'. In 1584/5 he was listed as 'Hobb Bowholms dwellinge in Tevidale' along with other Elliots of Heuchhouse; he was singled out as the only member of the Heuchhouse branch that the leaders would not vouch for. He was recorded as 'Hob Elliott of Bohomes' in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including John of Bowholm. In 1590 he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of 'Gersomfeeld', and also accused of another raid along with Archie (who was probably related). In the same year he is 'Hob of Behomes' who was accused of further rieving along with Martin's Airchie and William 'Rydlie'. Also in 1590 he was accused along with his brother Dand, as well as 'Willie's Airchie' of Stichillhill of stealing from Englishman Richard Thurlwall; he was recorded as 'Robine Elliott Bohomes'. He is 'Hobb Bohomes' when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'the Garret sheills'. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and

Netherhouses in England. He was 'Hobe Elliott of the Bowholmes' listed among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. In 1595/6 he was 'Hob of Bowholme Scotsman', servant of William (possibly the William in Hoscode who was delivered as a prisoner to England about this time), when sentenced to death for several crimes in England and 'taken with the bloody hand' by the Captain of Harbottle. He was executed at Hexham. Robert 'Ill Rob' or 'Ill Hob' of Ramsiegill (16th C.) recorded as 'Yll Hob of Ransygill' in 1578. He was listed among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with the Provost and Bailies of Edinburgh) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. He is 'Yll Hob' in 1580, when he was held in ward in Edinburgh Castle, with Alexander Erskine as his pledge. He was convicted for theft in 1580/1 along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. He was recorded there as 'Hob Elliot, callit Ill Rob of Ramsigill'. In 1580 he was produced at the Privy Council to prove that he was in ward with Erskine of Gogar. In 1581 Martin of Braidlie, Gavin's Jock and Robert Kerr of Ancrum were cautioned for his non-appearance, when he was stated at that time to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle; his brother 'Gavin's Jock' of Ramsiegill was one of his cautioners. The same group were fined in 1582/3 for his non-appearance, as well as that of Jock's Will, his brother; he is recorded there as 'Ill Hob of Ramsygill'. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing first to speak for his branch, with Archie of the Hill, Rowie of Ramsigill and Will's Hob also listed. In 1587/8 he is recorded as 'Hob Elliot of the Ramsgyll' when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond in 1587 for 'Willie's Hob'. Several other Elliots are also mentioned there, in particular 'Gavin Elliot of Ramsigill', who must have been a son or brother. He was also 'Hob Elliot of Ransgill' who complained in the 1580s of an English raid upon his lands, stealing livestock and taking prisoners. Probably the same man is 'yll' Hobb Elwood' recorded in 1591 as part of a group of Elliot and others accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. He was presumably a son of Jock and probably related to the Robert recorded as 'in Rammisgill' in 1541. However, he was probably the 'Hob Elliot, brother of Gawin's Hob (probably a transcription error for Jock) of the Rampsygill' who remained in prison in 1581 for the 'haill gang of the Burnehedis' after Jock's Willie was released; this would make him son of Gavin of Ramsiegill. Robert 'Jamie's Hob' (16th C.) listed in 1581 and 1582/3 among the cautioners for Sim's Rowie of the Park. His name was recorded as 'Hobbe Elliot, called James Hobbe', and he was listed along with Rob's John, Sim's Archie and others. His father was thus presumably James. He was also listed in 1581 along with other Elliots in a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael (who had been Keeper of Liddesdale), relating to the Elliots of Ramsiegill. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the 'haill gang of Park'. Robert (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding Harwood on Teviot in 1581/2. His name is given as 'Rowy Elliott, callit Rowans Hobbe', which is confusing, although it is later 'Hobbe Elliot, callit Rowans Hobbe'. His brother Jamie, as well as 'Rowanes Willis Ritchie' are listed after him; they were declared rebels after not appearing to answer the charge. Robert 'Hobbie' of Burnhead (16th C.) Laird of Burnhead in Liddesdale (and not the one just outside Hawick). In 1584 he was accused of being part of a foray into England. He is perhaps the earliest known resident of Burnhead, and may have had the tower built for him there. In 1587/8 he is recorded as 'Hob Elliott of the Burneheds called 'Fydler's Hob'' when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots; the reference to 'Fydler' may refer to the nickname of his father. He was 'Robin Elliott the laird of Borneheades' in 1589, among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England. He may have been 'Hob Elliot called Hob the larde' listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. Additionally in 1590 he was among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of 'Allenton' and 'Linbriggs', taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbolls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'; there he is 'Hobb Elliott of the Burneheds'. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. He was also 'Hob Elliott called the laird of Burneheds' when complained about for another 2 raids into England in 1595, this time along with Elliots of Falnash, as well as 'Auld Wat' Scott of Harden, Armstrongs and Hendersons. Additionally in 1596 he was 'Hobb Elwood larde of Burnhead', when it was said that along with Scott of Buccleuch he met secretly with Englishmen, presumably to discuss helping each other with raids. It is unclear how he is related to other local Elliots, such as 'Bramche of the Burnhead', also recorded in the 1580s and 'Gawins Jok' recorded in the 1590s. It is possible he is the same man as 'Curst Hobbie'. Robert 'Curst Hobbie' (16th C.) recorded in 1583 (in a letter from the English warden) among the Elliots of Burnhead. It is possible he is the same man as Hobbie of Burnhead, recorded a year later. He is probably related to other Elliots of Burnhead, as well as Elliots of Ramsiegill and of the Hill. Robert 'Rob o Thoirlishop' (16th C.) mentioned in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs, published around 1594 (put probably compiled earlier). 'Arthur fyre the Brays' is listed beside him. He must have been related to the earlier 'Hob' of the same place, Thorlieshope. He could be the son of Robert of Unthank who is listed in a pedigree of the Elliots of Thorlieshope (in the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club transactions of 1889); he was known as 'Bonny Hob', warded in Lochdun in 1569 and died unmarried (although that could be the earlier Hob of Thorlieshope). In 1584 he, 'Fire the Braes' and one other 'assure for the hole branch comenge of the howse of Thorlosope'. In 1587/8 he was 'Hobbe Elliott of Thorwishoip in the Flict' when warded with the Laird of Balwearie (James Scott); however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He was presumably a tenant in the lands of Flicht at that time. He was recorded as 'Hob of Thorlesopp' in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when accused of raiding into England. Additionally, along with Martin's Gib and 'Adie's John' Crozier, he was accused of stealing from William Henderson of 'Fallofeeld' in 1590. In another case in 1590 he was 'Robin Elliott of Thorlesoppe' when listed among Elliots, Nixons, Shiels and others accused of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall in England. He was listed in 1595 as 'the officer alias the laird of Thorlesop' among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid into England; the 'officer' designation suggests that he inherited the position of sergeant of Liddesdale from the earlier Robert of Thorlieshope. In a complaint about another raid in 1595 'young Robyn Elliot of Thorlesop' was probably his son. There was a complaint against him (along with a Nixon and 2 Armstrongs) by the English in 1597; but Scott of Buccleuch stated that he was already in Hexham Jail. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Dodrig, son of Archibald. In 1583 it was stated that he and his father were 'kindlie tennentis' of 'thrie quarteris of the landis of Dodrig, pertening to the chaipplanrie of the parochie kirk of Caveris' for 36 years previously, and had built a house there. This may have been the pele-house whose remains are on the east side of Gray Coat. He complained to the Privy Council that his servants there were attacked by Robert of Redheugh's men on several occasions, trying to dispossess him of the lands. Robert of Redheugh was denounced as a rebel for not appearing to answer the charge. Robert (d.1592) 6th Laird of Horsleyhill, eldest son of William, the 5th Laird. He is recorded in 1564 when he was granted all of his father's property. In 1581 he is listed along with many Armstrongs and Elliots who complained to the Privy Council about the actions of the Scotts. In 1582 he took legal action against Dame Isobel Ker, Widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, for the delivery of his father's charters, specifically for Horsleyhill, 'Dowiswod', Westerhouses (called Little Hassendean), Newbigging (called the Middle Mains of Hassendean), Caveling, Monkscroft and Hassendean. However, the order to deliver these seems never to have been followed, since he died without formally being served heir to these lands. He also had a dispute with Robert Scott of Hassendean over a merk land in 'Dowiswod'; his widow Agnes Scott was served with the letter of removal in late 1592. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts she belonged, but there may have been a connection with Haining (given that their son William was later a retainer of Robert Scott of Haining). He was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. In 1587 Ker of Grange acted as cautioner for him to appear before the Privy Council. He married Agnes Scott, and their children included: Robert, who pre-deceased him; William, who succeeded and sold Horsleyhill to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs; another Robert, who married an illegitimate daughter of Scott of Harden, and from whom the Elliots of Borthwickbrae are descended; and one more son, from whom the Elliots of Selkirk and Newhall probably derive (probably father of James, Burgess of Selkirk in 1635). The existence of these last 2 sons is suggested by Scott of Satchells, but no direct evidence has been uncovered. Robert 'the Tailor' (16th/17th

C.) recorded in 1590 among a large number of Elliots and others who were accused by Ralph Hall of 'Gersomffeld' and others for taking Ralph and other prisoners, then ransoming them. His name was recorded as 'Robine Elliot called the Taillour'. Also in 1590 he was 'Hobbie the taylor' when accused along with James of the Hill, Anthony of the Binks, James 'Half Lug' and 60 others, of raiding 'Windgates', taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. There was an Armstrong of the same name at that time, and it is possible there was confusion and they are the same man (although whether an Armstrong or an Elliot would then be unclear). Robert 'Hob of the Leyes' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1591 in a group of Elliots of the Hill and others accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. He is recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for 2 raids into England. He was also 'alias the troche', although it is unclear what this nickname may have referred to (perhaps a trough). He may have been related to some of the others named in 1595 e.g. Robert of Thorlieshope, Rich 'of the Lewlandes' or William, son of John of Heuchhouse. Robert 'Hob' of Staneshiel (16th/17th C.) part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of 'Gersomffeld' and the tenants of 'Dortres' in 1590. Hob Elliot of Staneshiel, John of Heuchhouse and Davie 'the Carlin' were also named in the same accusation. He was further accused in 1590 by William Hall of 'Gersomffeld' of rieving at 'Steward sheile', along with Quentin's Airchie Crozier and others. He was also recorded in 1595 among men complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is recorded as 'Hob Elliott of the Stanesheale alias bane pryck'. He probably lived at Staneshiel in Liddesdale, and the meaning of his nickname is unclear (but probably not complimentary). Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) listed in 1595 among Scotsmen accused of raiding into England. His name was recorded as 'Hob Elliott alias kyll of the spade', although it is unclear what his nickname meant. He was listed along with John of Burnhead, who may have been related. Robert (16th/17th C.) younger son of Robert, 6th Laird of Horsleyhill and Agnes Scott. According to Scott of Satchells (who confusingly refers to him as William) he became a servant to Scott of Harden (presumably 'Auld Wat') and married Scott's illegitimate daughter (whose name is not recorded). He was recorded as a servant to Scott of Harden in a bond dated

1620. He is the progenitor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae, Oakwood Mill and Wolfelee. His only known child was Robert, who was 'in Borthwickshiels'. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) son of Jock of Burngrains. He was listed (along with this brother Will) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'in Langraw' in 1610 when he was part of an inquest for lands in Rulewater. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded as being 'in Gledstaines' in 1610 when he renounced his possession of this part of Feu-Rule when he was not accepted as a 'kindly tenant' by his superior, Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam. This could have been the land later called 'Little Gledstains'. Robert of Dinlabyre (b.c.1580) son of William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1600 he was said to be about 20 years old when there was a plan to substitute him for his father as a hostage in England. In 1611 he was denounced as a rebel, along with his brother Gavin and several other Elliots and Armstrongs, for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc.; his name is transcribed there as being 'of Drumlybyre'. He is recorded as 'Robene Ellote of Dunlabyre' in 1612 when he failed to appear to serve on the jury for the case of Jock Elliot dying while in custody in Hawick. In 1613 the King granted him all the lands forfeited by his father in 1607. In 1623 he served as cautioner for Robbie Armstrong in 'Greinay' and his brother John. Probably the same 'Robert Elliot of Dinlabyre' is recorded in 1632 in a rental roll of Kelso Abbey when he possessed the lands of 'Hoillis' in Liddesdale, as well as Dinlabyre. His sons probably included William of Dinlabyre (d.bef. 1693) and John in Unthank. Robert of Copshaw (16th/17th C.) listed in 1612 among Elliots and Armstrongs denounced as rebels for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. His brother Francis was also listed. He was also recorded among those fined in 1612 for failing to appear to sit on the jury when the Hawick authorities were accused of the murder of a man who died in the steeple of St. Mary's. His brother Francis was also listed. Robert (d.bef. 1637) eldest son of William of Rig and Jean Rutherford, heiress of Stobs. He was served heir to his mother in 1621 and was in turn succeeded by his brother Francis. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) recorded being called 'Ladd, in Quhythauch' in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners' Court in

Jedburgh. Robert (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and a daughter of Scott of Harden, he was grandson of Robert, the 6th Laird of Horsleyhill and brother of William, the last Elliot Laird there. He is referred to as being 'in Borthwickshiels', and so must have been tenant of that farm. He married Euphemia Haitlie from Mellerstain and had 2 children: Thomas (d.1686), who succeeded him; and William (1617-85), who became minister in Yarrow. He is recorded in a list of 'communicants' of the Borthwick valley in 1650, with his wife being 'Euphemia Hastie' and their son Thomas also listed. Robert 'Hab' (17th C.) possessor of the lands of 'Baggat' (i.e. Bygate) in Liddesdale in 1632. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Falnash (d.1645), J.P., son of William, he was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He was recorded along with his father (and more than 170 others) in a 'respite' of 1594 to Sir James Johnstone and his followers for the killing of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands. In 1595 he was listed among Elliots and others accused by the Lord of Gildland for raids into England; he was explicitly listed with 'Auld Wat' Scott of Harden, as well as his brother Archibald and uncle Gilbert. In 1598 he was recorded as son of William of Falnash when he was witness to a document for the Regality of Melrose. He is probably the Robert 'younger of Fallinesche' who was cautioner for Gavin Elliot of Fiddleton in 1606. In 1610 he was cautioner for James Irving of Cleuchhead and in 1611 for Gavin 'of Coklek'. In 1618 his father is referred to as 'William called of Falnash in Braidley', suggesting Falnash had already been passed to him. In 1620 he was cautioner in 2 cases for Johnstones and Armstrongs in Dumfriesshire. He rebuilt the house at Falnash around 1620, probably replacing the tower with a farmhouse; a stone built into the present house carries the date 1620 and the initials 'R.E.' and 'M.S.'. The family also owned land in Wilton Parish. He is probably the 'gudeman of Fallineshe' from whose lands at Ramsaycleuch 6 head of cattle were stolen in 1621. In 1623 he sold Arkleton to Adam Cunningham, the reason not being known, but Scott of Satchells wrote 'By Maxwell's rage out of their hands it got, And was possess'd by Cunninghame and Scot'. In 1624 he purchased Hislop and Langhaugh in the Barony of Hawick. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He was listed in 1628 among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. Also in 1628 he had a crown charter for the lands of Philhope and the wardship of Grizell Elliot, heiress of Philhope (to whom he would marry his son John). He was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1634. He married Marion Scott (from an unknown branch of the Scotts, but perhaps the Scotts of Harden). They had 7 children: William, who married a Maxwell of Cowhill, but died before his father; Archibald, who succeeded; John, who married Grizel Elliot of Philhope and held the lands of Broadlee; Gavin of Caerlenrig, who married Janet Elliot and was father of Ninian; Gilbert, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1637; Robert, who also became a merchant's apprentice in 1646; and Jean, who married Adam Carleill of Byrdkirk. Robert (d.1663) 4th son of William of the Binks and brother of Simon. He was called 'of the Binks'. In 1630 he was charged as 'ane common and notorious theefe' and fled to Flanders. It is described in the Register of the Privy Seal that 'he is returned again and hes begun his old accustomed trade of theft', stealing 6 cattle from Englishman Sir Arthur Gray. He was convicted of theft and tried in Jedburgh, but the Provost there released him on a bond whereupon he fled. In 1631 he turned up in Carlisle jail, from where the Sheriff of Roxburghshire requested his transfer. He had a son called Simon, who was a minor when he died. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1639 his son Francis with Margaret Douglas was baptised, with the label 'for:', meaning that the child was illegitimate. The witnesses were John Inglis and Lyle Crozier. Robert 'Hob' (17th C.) recorded as being 'called of Thorbishop' (presumably Thorlieshope) in a 1642 list of many Borderers who were to be captured and tried for theft and other crimes. In about 1648 he was recorded as Robert 'of Thorlishoppe' on a list of 'mosstroopers' (i.e. thieves). He may be the 'young Robyn Elliott of Thorlesop' recorded in 1595. Robert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Falnash. In 1646 he was apprenticed to Edinburgh merchant Archibald Graham. Robert (17th C.) listed as a fugitive in 1637. He was also recorded as 'sone to Hobbeis Chrystie' listed among fugitives of the Border in 1642. It may be that he was listed twice, since Robert 'called Chrysteis Hob' also appears. He was probably son of the Christopher who was son of Robert of Braidlie; he was thus a great-grandson of Martin of Braidlie. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, with surname written as 'Al-lott'. His children included 'Heilling' (b.1636) and James (b.1645). Robert (17th C.) resident of

Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Henderson and their children included: John (b.1646); William (b.1650); Bessie (b.1652); and Janet (b.1655). Robert of Black Tarras (d.bef. 1665) 2nd son of Simon of the Binks and younger brother of the William, Laird of Harwood. He was granted the lands of Black Tarras by his father. After the Restoration both he and his brother William were fined £1,200 for supporting the Commonwealth. In 1652 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Riddell 'portioner' of Bewlie. In his wedding contract he is described as 'in Sauchetrie' and was infetted in the lands of Black Tarras. His children were: Simon of Black Tarras; Francis; and William of Cooms (d.1714), who married Helen Elliot of Thorlieshope. He was still alive in 1663, when referred to as 'of Ludgegill indweller in Sauchtrees, Liddesdale'. By 1665 his wife was a widow. Robert 'Robin' of Reidheugh and Larriston (c.1583-c.1644) 17th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert. He was the last of the Elliots of Redheugh in the direct male line. He was still a minor when his father died, with his guardian being his uncle William of Hartsgarth and when he was 14 the additional trustees appointed were William of Falnash, John of Copshaw and his mother's brothers, John and Andrew Hamilton of St. John's Chapel. At the time when Francis, Earl of Bothwell forfeited his lands, he was in possession of Redheugh, Over and Nether Larriston, Hartsgarth, Leafauld, Corrie's Shiel, Langhaugh, Leahaugh and Demainholm. He was said to have been able to ride from Larriston to Hawick on land that was almost entirely in Elliot hands. He is probably the Robert who was the first Elliot name signed on the bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1597 he (along with William of Hartsgarth and John of Copshaw) wrote from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen, and furthermore they offered security for the actions of their followers. In 1599 he, along with Martin Elliot (son of 'Mertin's Sym'), made an agreement to settle their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme. They also promised to the Warden (Sir Walter Scott) to be responsible for the inhabitants of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. There was also a pledge made in his name (and others) in 1599 following the murder of several Englishmen (who had been waiting in hiding to ambush the Scots) near Bewcastle. He was probably the Laird of Redheugh who in 1599 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'. In about 1600 he was ordered to pay £ for theft of horses by Will of Fiddleton. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss 'the present disordouris of the Bourdours'. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 he was declared answerable for Will of Fiddleton. He escaped the convictions and executions that came down on the men of Liddesdale around 1606; it is said that this may have been due to the influence of his brother-in-law John Murray of Lochmaben. In 1607 he brought an action against George Henderson, tenant of Winnington, accusing him of cutting down trees on his land at Birkwood. In 1608 he (and 14 other lairds) were removed from their lands by the Privy Council for being 'ringleaders suspected either of their bygone conversation or for their present disordered courses'; he was sent along with Walter Scott of Goldielands to Cupar in Fife. In 1608 he was charged by Scott of Buccleuch to remove himself from all lands in Liddesdale, but this was not followed through with; however, there was a decret of removal in 1612, after the death of the old Laird of Buccleuch. He was then denounced as a rebel, but through the influence of his brother-in-law John Murray he obtained a new agreement with Buccleuch over these lands in 1613; this included Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope, 'Greenholles', Hartsgarth, Langhaugh, Leahaugh, 'Carriescheill' and 'Downane'. In 1615 Buccleuch accused him of adding the names of 3 properties to the charter, and he went to London to plead with Scott of Buccleuch. A court case was started in 1617, and he was unable to produce the charter, which led to a further order of removal. However, Robert was served heir to his father in 1619, presumably part of the ongoing legal proceedings. His main dwelling around that time was at Demainholm. There were also attempts to remove his tenants; William Scott of Newark complained in 1618 that his tenants at Foulshiels were harried by a large group of Elliots, including him. He and William of Hartsgarth complained afterwards that they should not have been declared as rebels and finding caution the horning was suspended. Over the next few years he failed to collect any rent on his lands, incurred debts and many of the old Elliot lands in Teviotdale were lost. In 1622 he and his brother William sold the lands of Winnington Rig to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1622 and 1623 he served as cautioner for Rowie Crozier from Hartsgarth. He was probably the 'Robert Elliot of Reidheuch, in Larestoun' who was removed as a tenant of Scott of Buccleuch in 1624. His brother-in-law John Murray (Earl of Annandale) apologised to Scott of Buccleuch in 1624 for a dispute over lands with Buccleuch and for stealing from Englishmen. Also in 1624 he was accused of conspiring to murder the Earl of Buccleuch, the 3 would-be assassins (all Elliots) apparently confessing their part. He was at that time prisoner in Edinburgh Tolbooth related to debts. He was also accused of being involved in stealing cattle from Cuthbert Heron, an Englishman; he seems to have escaped punishment, although his servant Adam Usher was hung for that crime. Despite being induced to confess to the crimes, pleas by Francis Hamilton and the Earl of Annandale resulted in Scott of Buccleuch asking for the trial to be postponed. Within a short period of the King's death in 1625 he received a pardon for the theft and other crimes, although it is unclear when he was released from confinement. His wife petitioned the Privy Council because of poverty during his imprisonment. It seems that when his daughter and heiress was married in 1637 he still held his Liddesdale lands, including the 3 farms that had been in dispute, namely 'Blaihope', 'Greenholles' and Langhaugh. He married first a sister of John Murray (later Earl of Annandale) and secondly (after 1618) Lady Jean Stewart, daughter of Francis, Earl of Bothwell and Lady Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He had no children with his first wife, and with his second had no sons, but 2 daughters: Margaret, (or Mary) his heir, who in 1637 married James Elliott (6th son of Gilbert of Stobs); and Esther (d.1664), who married Alexander Clerk, Minister of Letherton, and died in Inverness. He gave all his lands to his daughter Margaret and her husband James, except Leahaugh, Greenholm and Gullyflat, which were given to Esther and her husband, and he retained Larriston, Blakehope and Greenholm 'in liferent' for himself. The year of his death is quite uncertain, but he probably died in the period 1666–73, with his estate heavily encumbered by debt. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet 'Red' (i.e. Reid). Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1651, with witnesses John Elliot (probably related to him) and Thomas Jackson. Robert of Braidlie (17th C.) nephew of Simon in Philhope. In 1653

he was served heir to Braidlie. Robert (17th C.) recorded in several accounts in Selkirk in the 1660s, e.g. one for a Common Riding dinner. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. He could be the Robert, son of Selkirk Burgess William, whose daughter Elizabeth is part of a deed in 1673. Robert (b.c.1645) younger son of Archibald of Falnash, he was christened in Hawick. Robert (17th C.) referred to as 'Robert Elliot, called of the Maynes' in 1659 when he witnessed a document relating to lands of Hobkirk Parish for William Elliot of Harwood. Robert of Larriston (d.bef. 1695) eldest son of James Elliott, and Margaret, heiress of Redheugh. He was thus a grandson of the last Elliot of Redheugh as well as being grandson of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters' of Stobs. He took the 'Elliot' spelling after inheriting the Liddesdale lands through his mother. He was probably the Robert of Larriston whose lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £1334 in 1643. He may have been the 'younger of Laristoune' who was an executor for William Elliot of Binks in the 1660s and when appointed Justice of the Peace in 1663. He was recorded paying the land tax (on £1334) in 1663. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers). He was served heir to his grandfather Robert of Redheugh in 1673, inheriting these lands through his mother. However, the Teviotdale lands had already been sold off and the Liddesdale lands were heavily encumbered by debt. Hence in 1675 he was forced to put Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope and Greenholm into 'wadsett' with John Elliot of Thorlieshope and in 1677 sold outright the land of Demainholm to John Elliot 'in Mainholm'. In 1678 he still paid the land tax on £1934 in Castleton Parish. In 1685 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1692 he had a 'precept of clare constat' from the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch as heir to all the lands of his grandfather, Robert of Redheugh. About 1688 he was forced to sell most of his lands after getting into financial difficulties, his creditors obtaining a 'decree of adjudication'. He managed to hold onto Over and Nether Larriston only. In 1667 he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of John Maxwell of Cowhill, Dumfriesshire, and she had one son with him, but died before 1675. He later married Janet, 2nd daughter of Scott of Todrig (probably Thomsa). His children were: Robert, who succeeded to Larriston; Gilbert of Nethermill, who was a merchant in Hawick; William, who was apprenticed to a barber in 1699; and Janet, who married Robert Gledstains of that Ilk and secondly John Scott of Gorrenberry. His testament is recorded in 1688, but he may have died after that. Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1678 as owner of part of Raperlaw called 'Wyliespeel', or Willie's Peel. This was valued at £104, and corresponded to William Turnbull's lands in Raperlaw in 1643. In another version of the 1678 records he is transcribed as 'Richard' and 'in williespeil'. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'in Blackhall' in 1680 when he was indicted at the Justiciary Commission in Jedburgh for 'reset of theft'. He probably lived in Ewesdale. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'in Stobs' in 1684 when he was on a long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was actually recorded on the list twice. He may be the Robert who was listed as a Covenanter at Langside in government papers from about the same time. It is unclear whether he was related to local Elliots or Eliotts. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Giddenscleuch in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) miller at Hummelknowe Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to the slightly later Robert. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Stitchellhill in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert of Caerlenrig (1655–98) 2nd son of Gavin. He was also known as Robert 'of Rig'. He paid tax on 2 hearths at Caerlenrig in 1694, and 'his herd' is also listed. He firstly married Agnes, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton (as recorded in the will of Agnes' brother George Langlands in 1690); she was related to his brother Francis of Fenwick's wife Rachel Langlands. He secondly married Mary Elliot, who died in 1727, aged 80. His sons were Robert (b.1690s) of Caerlenrig and John. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married John Elliot of Castlehope and Bilhope. His testament is recorded in 1699, when he was 'of Carlenrickrig'. He is buried at Teviothead. Robert 2nd Laird of Midlem Mill (d.1724) elder son of Gavin Elliott of Midlem Mill and Grange, and probably grandson of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters'. His father settled the lands of Midlem Mill on him in 1653. He paid the land tax on £36 in Cavers Parish in 1678; it is unclear what lands these were, but they were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by the late 18th century and listed in Castleton Parish in 1788. Also in 1678 he also paid tax on about £400 for Midlem Mill and other lands in Bowden Parish.

He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690. He is recorded in 1693 as witness to a bond between Elliot of Harwood and Henry Douglas, writer in Edinburgh. In 1694 he was cautioner to a bond between Henry Elliot of Harwood and John Kerr of Cavers. He also witnessed a disposition between Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood, as well as other bonds for the Elliots of Harwood about the same time. He was described as 'sheriff in that part of the sheriffdom of Roxburgh' in 1694. He also served as a Justice of the Peace. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1695 he acquired the lands of 'Clarelaw, called Langsyde' and North Prieston, which he bought from John Elliot of Langsyde. He added Whitmuir in 1702. He may have acted as factor for Gideon Scott of Highchester in the period 1695–99. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig in 1700. He also had a 'tack' for the lands of Stanedge the discharge of which is recorded in 1700. He was factor for his younger brother Sir Gilbert of Headshaw (and Minto) from 1706; it is said that when he was introduced as the brother of Sir Gilbert, he would say 'na, na, Gibbie's my brether'. He rented Easter and Wester Hassendean from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1720. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1678 and had 9 children: Gilbert (d.1709); Robert (d.1753), who succeeded to Midlem Mill; Margaret (c.1680–1768), who married Henry Elliot of Lodgegill; Marion, who married Andrew Haliburton of Newmains; Anny, who married Robert Paterson of Drygrange; Elizabeth, who married lawyer John Gibson and possibly another Paterson of Drygrange; Helen (or 'Nelly'), who married William Elliot of Wolfelee; Magdalen (1694/4–1773), who married John Pasley of Craig; and a 'natural daughter' Elizabeth, who married Richard Paterson, portioner of Midlem. After his death Midlem Mill was sold and his wife and 3 daughters moved to Berwick – 'Dedicated to that Worthy and Generous Gentleman, Robert Elliot Laird of Midliemill' [CWS]. Robert of Penchrise (17th C.) involved in a court case in the 1690s. Along with William of Lymiecleuch he failed to pay a bond due to John Riddell of Haining; when they failed to show up in court the farms went to their guarantor, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was married to Marion Culbertson and in 1694 their son Robert was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Storie and Robert Halliwell and this was one of the earliest entries in the existing records for Wilton Parish. Perhaps the same Robert in Galalaw had a son Alexander baptised in Wilton in 1704; William Henderson and James Jamieson were witnesses. Probably the same Robert was described as servant to Adam Scott of Galalaw when his daughter Bessie was baptised in 1709. Esther (b.1706), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his child. Robert of Larriston (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Robert. His father had sold the family's lands in 1688 after being declared bankrupt. In 1689 his grandfather, John Maxwell of Cowhill, gave him the lands of 'Cullshangan' in the Parish of Crossmichael and the half merkland of Kirkland of Kirkpatrick Irongray. His grandmother further reduced her dower rights, and with this help from his grandparents he was able to in 1695 to buy back (or perhaps redeem the 'wadsett' on) the lands of Over and Nether Larriston (including the mill, mill lands and Larriston Rig) from Christopher Irving of Binks. In 1696 he reinstated his grandmother's 500 merks dower rights from the rents of Larriston. However, after his grandmother died in 1697 he gave a wadsett for the lands of Larriston Rig and Hopehead to John of Thorlieshope and his son John. He formally succeeded his father as heir of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston in 1712. However, he continued to have financial difficulties and in 1719 he sold outright the last of the family's local possessions to John Oliver of Dinlabyre, these being Over and Nether Larriston and Larriston Rig. He then moved to Newcastle, but later returned to Liddesdale, taking up residence in a cottage on the farm of Redheugh, where he died. He married Mary Applebie (or Appleby), and possibly had a 2nd wife. His children included: Robert (d.1752), a clerk in London, who died unmarried; James, farmer at Whitlaw, who died unmarried; Jean; another daughter, probably Helen ('Nelly'), who married Walter Amos, joiner in Rulewater in 1768; and Gilbert, who married Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield, and was father of Maj.-Gen. William. Robert of Dinlabyre (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William of Dinlabyre. He was recorded as 'younger' in 1697 when he married Helen, eldest daughter of Arthur Forrester of Kingfield. In about 1698 he sold Dinlabyre to John Oliver. Nothing else is known about him. Robert (1665/6–1757) resident of Castleton Parish. He was married to Jean ‘Ruan’, who died in 1743, aged 73. Their children included William, merchant in Castleton, who died in 1741. They are buried at Castleton. William, son of John and Hannah Grieve, is also mentioned on the gravestone, and so presumably related. Robert (17th/18th C.) probably resident at Acreknowe. He married Mary Hislop in Cavers Parish in 1703. He is likely to be the father of William, born to a Robert in Cavers in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Brydon in Hawick in 1706. He was probably the Robert whose daughter Bessie was born in Wilton in 1709. Robert (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1705, 1709 and 1721. He also witnessed one in 1716 for Robert Turnbull and Margaret Elliot (who may have been related to him). In 1712 he was described being ‘in Wiltonn par’ when one of his children was baptised. He married Jean Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1710. Their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Mary (b.1712); Agnes (b.1714); Jean (b.1717); Anna (b.1719); and Margaret (b.1720). The witnesses in 1712 were Bailie Walter Graham and mason John Napier, in 1714 were ‘officer’ William Douglas and John Tudhope and in 1717 were Bailie Walter Elliot and weaver Robert Turnbull. Robert (17th/18th C.) farmer in Powisholm. In 1707 he was ‘taken upon tryall as precenter’ in Castleton Parish. Robert of Teindside (17th/18th C.) younger son of Simon of Swinside. He was sometimes referred to as ‘of Tyneside’, although his lands were certainly Teindside in Teviotdale and not in England. His brother Gideon owned Harwood-on-Teviot and in 1724 he sold Teindside to Gideon. In 1718 he married Jean, daughter of Rev. John Simpson of Morebattle. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Hummelknowes or Hummelknows Mill when his children were baptised. They were: James (b.1720); William (b.1732); Robert (b.1735); and Isabel (b.1737). He may be the Robert who married Jane Elliot in 1717 or the Robert who married Margaret Douglas in Cavers and Kirkton in 1719. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. His children included: John (b.1727); and Bessie (b.1729). Robert (d.1752) son of the last Robert of Larriston. His brother James farmed at Whitlaw, and his sister (or perhaps other near relative) Helen married Walter Amos, joiner in Rulewater. He went to London in 1712 was a clerk in the office of Sir John Bernard. He became a senior clerk in the Pay Office, Great Court Yard, St. James’s, London. He lived in the Parish of

St. Peters, Cornhill, London. He loaned money to the Eliotts of Stobs (his distant relations). He died unmarried. He left some silver plate, gold rings, snuff-boxes and a portrait of Lord Heathfield. Robert 3rd Laird of Midlem Mill (d.1753), oldest surviving son of Robert, 2nd Laird. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale from about 1723–27 (although complaints about his conduct are recorded in letters of the 1740s), with Robert Scott of Burnhead replacing him in 1728. In 1728 he took over as Chamberlain for Teviotdalehead from Gideon Scott of Falmash, serving until 1741. During this period he lived at Langholm Castle, Broadhaugh and Branhholme. He must also have lived at Midlem Mill for some of that period and remodelled the house, since a stone built into the mill is inscribed ‘R.E. 1730 K.E.’ In 1734 there was a formal inquiry by the Bailies and Council ‘how he came to take down the Bailies’ seat in the kirk and by whose allowance’, suggesting some disagreement over the authority of the Patron versus the Burgh. In 1735 he rented part of the farm of Branhholme Mains. He was one of the local lairds asked to decide on the position of the new Teviot Bridge in Hawick in 1739. In 1740 a baptism in Hawick was witnessed by ‘Gardiner to Midlamiln at Branhholme’, showing that he was living at Branhholme at that time. He leased the farms of Priesthaugh and Peelbrae from the Buccleuch Estates in 1741. He paid the window tax in Bowden Parish in 1748 (and his widow paid in 1753). In 1719 in Wilton Parish he married Katherine (b.c.1701), only child of Adam Elliot of ‘Tyndeside’ (i.e. Teindside) and grand-daughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton. They had 14 children: Robert (b.1719), who must have died young; Elizabeth (b.1721), who married Simon Haliburton of Howcleuch, minister at Castleton and Ashkirk; Anny and Margaret (b.1722), who were unmarried and lived at Lichfield Street in London; Gilbert (b.1724), died in infancy and buried in Ewes Kirkyard; Gavin (b.1727), 4th and last Laird of Midlem Mill, selling the estate to Prof. George Stewart and moving to London; Henry (b.1729), baptised in Cavers; Robert (b.1730), also baptised in Cavers, served in the Royal Navy; Andrew (d.1779), a Major in the Marines, who died in Rhode Island, U.S.A.; Adam (d.1752) a baker who died in Lisbon; Maisy, who lived in Berwick with her mother; Helen (d.1798), who married James Wilkie, merchant in Marseilles; Jean (b.1738), who was christened in Hawick and lived with her mother in Berwick; and another child who died young. He is buried at Bowden. When he died the estate was in debt and was sold off 3 years later by his trustees. His widow and unmarried daughters then moved to Berwick, where they worked 'washing and dressing cambrics'. Robert (17th/18th C.) miller of Hawick Mill. He was listed as 'Tacksman of the Mill and Lands of Hawick' in the baptism records of some of his children. He was 'milner' in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson (recorded incorrectly as 'Robert Miller' in one version). He was 'Taxman' in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Howison. He married Jean Scott and their children included: Rachel (b.1718); Jean (b.1722); Margaret (b.1724); Beatrix (b.1727); and Janet (b.1728). The witnesses in 1718 were Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and Bailie William Laing and in 1722 were Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and schoolmaste James Anderson. He was probably son of Walter, who was listed as miller in the 1710s. He was also described as 'tacksman of mill and lands of Hawick' in 1722 when he rented Ginglewells and Dinlees (on the Hermitage Water) from the Buccleuch estates. He was probably the Robert listed as 'Tacksman' in 1725 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Tudhope. Robert of Caerlenrig (1694–1777), eldest son of Robert of Caerlenrig, his mother probably being Agnes Langlands. The dates of his birth and death are given elsewhere as (1697–1767), but those on the tombstone in Teviothead are probably correct. He is described as 'of Carlenrickrig' and 'of Rig' in different records. He could be the Robert 'of Ridge' who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1710 (but would have been quite young at the time). In 1718 his 'brother German' John, 'wigg-maker in Hawick' witnessed a baptism in Hawick for a child of the deceased William Scott of Brieryhill. In 1722 he, along with Robert Scott of Skelfhill and James Grieve of Commonsides petitioned the Presbytery for a preacher and meeting house in their district. In 1739 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick Parish for tenant Robert Whutson and for John Scott at Dryden. Due to 'embarrassed circumstances' he was forced to sell Caerlenrig and then farmed at Winningtonrig. He is among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland' (1752), being listed at 'Winnington-bridge'. In 1721 in Robertson he married Christian (b.1697–1767), daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae; she was sister of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae at the time of their marriage. Their children were baptised in Cavers

Parish. They had 6 sons: Robert (1722–1770), writer in Edinburgh, who died unmarried; William (1724–97), farmer at Winningtonrig, who married Margaret Anderson; John (1725–1801), who married Margaret Curle; Thomas (1731–1808), who became minister of Cavers; and Francis, 'Frank' (1733–79), skinner in Hawick, also died unmarried. Another son, Gideon, may have died young. They also had 4 daughters: Mary (b.1727), who married William Grieve, farmer at Southfield; Isobel (b.1729), who married a Kerr; Agnes (b.1729), twin of Isobel, who apparently did not survive; Margaret (b.1735), who married George Pott, the purchaser of Caerlenrig; and Christian (b.1738), who married James Oliver in 1765. He and his son William were witnesses for a baptism for William Grieve (farmer in Southfield) and his daughter Mary in 1764. He and his wife both died at Winningtonrig. Robert of Binks (1702–66) eldest surviving son of John of Binks. He was tenant farmer in Burnmouth. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth Robson (c.1722–93), who was from Boghall. Their children were: John (b.1754), who succeeded; Robert (b.1756), who died young; Jean (1758–87), who married John Elliot of Whitehaugh; Christian (1761–82); and Catherine, who died unmarried. His daughter Jean was probably the 'Miss Jean Elliot, Burnmouth' who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He is buried in Castleton Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills. He was tenant at Slaidhills (along with Patrick Hume) in 1743 who witnessed a baptism for Adam Hogg in 1743. He married Agnes Hardie and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1740. The witnesses were Thomas Elliot at Harwood and Francis Elliot (brother of Robert), who may have been related to him. Robert (18th C.) resident of upper Teviotdale. He was recorded at Braidhaugh in 1747 and 1748 when children of his were baptised in Cavers Parish. He married Bessie Nixon. Their children included: Robert (b.1740) in Falnash Mill; Janet (b.1743), who worked at Falnash; Thomas (b.1747) in Broadhaugh; an unnamed child (b.1748); and Beatrix (b.1750), also lived at Broadhaugh. Robert (1711–82) son of William and Margaret Mather, he was grandson of William of Cooms. He was born in Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Armstrong, from the Sorbie family and their children included: Jean, who married George Graham from Greenknowe; Thomas in Harden; Margaret, who married James Davidson; and Robert in Crookham.

Robert (1720/1–82) youngest son of William, Laird of Harwood. He joined the army as an Ensign in the 1st Regiment of Foot in 1738 and was a Lieutenant on half-pay in Sir William Pepperell's Regiment of Foot by 1757. Although commonly referred to as 'Captain', he appears never to have held that rank. In 1763 he had a bond with his brother Henry for the lands of Fernieles and a sasine in 1763 from William Elliot of Tarras for Blakehope, Lodgegill and other lands. He was also tenant at Stonedge in the late 1700s when it was owned by Robert Lisle. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. In 1766 he married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Robert Pringle of Clifton, and she died in 1820, aged 88. They had 8 children: the eldest son, William (b.1766), succeeded to Harwood after the death of his uncle Henry; Robert (b.1767), married Anne Hilly of Portsmouth and was a Vice-Admiral in the Royal Navy; Pringle (c.1768–88) was apprenticed to a surgeon; Henry (1769–1841) married Janet, 2nd daughter of Rev. Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh and attained the rank of Major-General in the Army; Thomas (b.1771) farmed at Kirndeane and married Helen, daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel; Margaret (b.1773), the only daughter, married Peter Brown of Rawflat; Andrew (1775–1810), was a Captain in the 70th Regiment and died unmarried at St. Thomas, Virgin Islands; and Mark (1776–1854), who was a tenant farmer in Lanton. He died at Hobsburn.

Robert of Fenwick (18th C.) son of Francis and Rachel Langlands. He may be the Laird of Fenwick recorded paying a year's rent for the weight-house in Hawick in 1729. Along with Walter Scott (farmer at Commonsides) he leased Unthank and Fiddleton from the Buccleuch Estates in 1733. In 1737 he and Robert Harrison, William Ogilvie of Hoscote and lawyer Thomas Watson entered into a partnership to establish a stillhouse and brewhouse in Hawick. He is recorded in 1738 receiving the 'tack' from the Buccleuch Estates of a 'stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slitridge, and of ground adjacent; also a malt kiln and barn yet to be built; all lying in parish of Hawick'. This may be the first record of brewing and distilling near Hawick; it may refer to the lands of 'Whusky Hooses' and/or the 'Brewery Haugh' on Slitrig Crescent. In 1747 he witnessed a baptism for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. He became a Burgess of Glasgow in 1753. About 1756 he sold Easter Highchesters and Lairhope to Henry Scott, Duke of Buccleuch; he may have died shortly afterwards, since there are other documents between the Duke of Buccleuch and his trustees in 1756–8. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He firstly married Jean Scott (from an unknown branch of that family), this probably being the irregular marriage of Robert 'eldest lawful son to Francis' to Jean Scott in Carlisle in 1716 that was a matter brought before the Hawick Parish Session in 1717; he must have been fairly young at the time, suggesting this was an elopement or rushed marriage of some kind. He secondly married Katherine (b.1697), daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton; she had previously married David Laing of Westerkirk and Charles Telfer minister of Hawick. It is said that his only child was Gavin, who was the last Elliot of Fenwick; however, 'James Elliot, Fenwick', whose daughter Magdalene was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1758 was probably another son. Robert 'Hobbie' (18th C.) resident of a cottage called Hasely Cleugh on Stonedge farm. A story is told (recounted by Walter Deans) of how he went to the blacksmith's at Unthank to get a 'sling' (perhaps for a sled), but the smith was busy, and by the time it was his turn he had forgotten what he came for. Eventually he decided 'it was time for him ta gang hame, as he had a ferr road ta gang' and the smith said 'Ay Hobbie, it's a lang sling', to which he replied 'a lang sling, that's the verra thing a' wanted made, a gude sling, darsay am donnert'. Robert (b.c.1700) son of Walter in Brugh. He married Elizabeth Scott, who came from Doorpool. He had one known child, Adam, who lived in Hawick and was father of James of Goldielands, schoolmaster at Wilton. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Sundhope farm in the middle of the 1700s. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ewesdale. He married Janet Scott, who was also from there. Their children included: Thomas (b.1741); and Mary (b.1743). Jean (b.1737) and Robert (b.1739), born in Langholm Parish, may also have been their children. Robert of Reidheugh (1705–93) 2nd son of William in Braidlie and Whithaugh. His father purchased Redheugh for him around 1730, thus regaining the home of his ancestors. He was tenant in Cleughhead in 1744 when he had a charter of confirmation for Redheugh in liferent for himself and in fee for his son William. In 1778 he was also tenant in Foulshiels, Kershope and Shaws. In 1786, for reasons unknown, he disinherited his eldest son William in favour of his 2nd son John. He was recorded as Robert of Redheugh on the 1786–92 Horse Tax Rolls. His lands of Reidheugh were valued at £96 11s in 1788. He married Margaret Beattie (d.1767). They had at least 3 children: William, tenant in Hillhouse, who married Margaret Haliburton from Roughley; John of Redheugh (1741–1809), farmer in Cleughhead and Foulshiels, who married Margaret Russell; and Thomas (1745–1800), who married Mary Thomson. Both he and his wife are buried in Castleton Cemetery. Robert (b.c.1715) eldest surviving son of William of Thorlieshope and Overton. He succeeded his father in 1744 and immediately sold Thorlieshope. He is probably the Robert who paid tax at Overton (in Oxnam Parish) in 1748 and also the Robert of Overton recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may then have moved to London. He married Mary Henderson, who died at the age of 25. He also married a second time. His children included: Cassandra, who was 2nd wife of Dr. William of Arkleton; Margaret (1751/2–1842), who died unmarried in Jedburgh; and Rebecca (b.1753), who died in infancy. Robert (1717/8–1816) resident of Roxburghshire, whose death is recorded at the age of 98. The report states that ‘a short period previous to his death, he told Mr John Scott, meal-dealer, Hawick, that about 70 years ago he was sent by his father to Hawick, with one shilling to purchase a stone of barley-meal, a capful of salt, a pound of butter, and a pennyworth of tobacco – all of which he got for the said shilling’. Robert (1722–79) lived at Sorbie in Ewes Parish. He married Janet Wilson (1726–85) and their children included: William (1753–85), who married Jean Davidson; Jean (b.1756); Margaret (b.1758); Walter (b.1764); John (d.1792); and Mary (1778–88). He and his wife are buried at Ewes Churchyard. Robert (1722/3–70) eldest son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He was a writer in Edinburgh and died unmarried. He could be the Robert, writer in Edinburgh, who acted as Proctor for Hawick during the 1767 perambulation of the Common, undertaken as part of the case brought by the Duke of Buccleuch for its division. Robert (1724/5–70) 2nd son of John in Whithaugh. He was tenant farmer at Hermitage and elsewhere from about 1748, farming an area of perhaps 5,000 or 6,000 acres, on the eastern side of the Hermitage Water, including Braidlie, Gorrenberry, Hermitage and Millburnholm. It is said that he was a well organised farm manager, who had little help from the Buccleuch Estates. He married Janet Scott from Greenwood. Their children were: John (1750–1821), tenant in Hermitage, and also farmer at other farms, who married Christian Grieve and then Margaret Scott from Skelfhill; Walter (1754–97), who farmed Millburnholm and married Helen Crozier from Brighthouse; William (1759–1829) in Millburnholm, who married Elizabeth Laidlaw from Falnash; Jean (b.1760), who married William Sharp of Hartsgarth; Robert (b.1760) tenant in Moraylees and Haydon Bridge, who married Mary Scott from Skelfhill; and Philip (b.1862), merchant in America. There are meticulous farm records of his, which survive. Robert (d.bef. 1777) Hawick resident. The death of his wife Betty Scott is recorded in 1777. Robert (1725–57) 2nd son of the 2nd Sir Gilbert of Minto. He was a Captain in the Royals. He died suddenly at the home of his brother Sir Gilbert. Robert (b.1730) younger son to Robert of Midlem Mill, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. In 1744 he was apprenticed as a merchant to John Haliburton of Howcleuch (who was surely related to Rev. Simon Haliburton who married his sister Elizabeth). He later joined the Navy, being an ensign in the Marines. He is also said to have been a clerk on H.M.S. Royal George. He married, but nothing else is known about him. Robert (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He was described as being ‘in Know’, which is probably Priesthill Know in Liddesdale. He married Helen Grieve and their children included: Robert in Know, who married Marion Elliot; and Ninian in Priesthill. Robert (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Edinburgh, who was legal agent for the town, particularly during the protracted case involving the division of the Common. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1761. It is possible he is the same as the descendant of the Elliots of Caerlenrig. Robert (18th C.) married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1756. Robert (18th C.) resident at Howcleuch in 1757 when his son Andrew was baptised in Robertson Parish. Perhaps the same Robert was resident at Woodburn in Robertson Parish in 1763 and 1767 when his children Helen and John were baptised. He may be the Robert who married Janet Scott in Robertson in 1750 or the Robert who married Margaret Rieve in Robertson in 1754. Isobel (b.1760) may also have been his child. Robert (d.1799) shoemaker of the Cross Wynd. He was probably son of Adam, older brother of schoolmaster James (later of Goldielands), and may also have been brother of shoemaker Adam. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for John Nichol. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be the shoemaker Robert who in 1787 witnessed a baptism for stockingmaker Mark Sutherland. In 1761 in

Hawick Parish he married Isobel Scott, who died in 1796. His children included: Walter (b.1762), who carried on his business; James (b.1765), whose wife may have died in 1835; Janet (b.1767); and John (b.1771). The witnesses in 1765 were carrier James Wilson and weaver John Wilson. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He could be the son of Hector born there in 1738. His children included: Hector (b.1765), probably father of Robert (b.1792); Isabel (b.1767); Jean (b.1768); and Margaret (b.1771). He is surely related to the Hector whose children were born in Southdean Parish in the 1750s. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Heap in Wilton Parish. His wife was Janet Russell and their children included: Isabel (b.1776); Robert (b.1777); Betty (b.1779); and Isabel (again, b.1785). Robert (18th C.) resident at Parkhill Wester in 1774 when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish. There are several other children born in Robertson around that time who could also be his. Robert (18th C.) son of Robert in Know, this probably being Priesthill Know in Castleton Parish. He married Marion Elliot and died without issue. Robert (b.c.1745) son of William of Wolfelee with his 2nd wife Margaret Ogilvie. He was a merchant in Amsterdam. He purchased the estate of Pinnaclehill near Kelso. He died without issue and left Pinnaclehill to his niece Charlotte. Robert (1746–1817) tenant at Powisholm and other places in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was son of William in Southdeanrig. He married Wilhelmina Hislop (1763–1836). Their children included: Christian (b.1788); Margaret (1790–95); Ann (b.1793); Robert (b.1796), who also farmed at Powisholm; John (b.1797), who farmed at Middleholm; James (b.1798); Margaret (b.1799); and William (b.1802), who was farmer at Harden in Castleton Parish. Robert (c.1752–1827) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Elliot (c.1755–1828) and their children included: Ann (b.1783); Elizabeth (b.1784); Helen (b.1786); and Robert (1788–1812), who was a teacher. Rev. Robert (1755–1824) younger son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Minto. He was Rector of Wheldrake Church in Yorkshire. In 1779 he was given liferent of a set of small pieces of land formerly called Minto Townhead, consisting of: South Croft; North Croft; Quicksands Park; Notman's Shot; Langlands; Temple Croft; Howden; Whitfield; West South Croft; Minto Town; and the green of Minto. These were valued at £461 1s 10d, enough to put him over the required minimum of £400 to be on the roll. In

1788 he was listed under 'Votes of Sir Gilbert Elliot' among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was still listed as liferenter of lands in Minto Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. In 1788 he married Mary, daughter of Rev. Edmund Garforth of Askham. They had 5 children: Eleanor Maria Anne, who married Dr. James Grant of Jedburgh; Isabella Lucy, who married Gilbert, 3rd son of Sir William Elliott, the 6th Baronet of Stobs; Agnes, who died unmarried; Robert, who was a Captain in the Royal Navy; and Edward Eden, Accountant General in Bombay. Robert (c.1759–1844) cattle dealer in Newcastleton. He may be the son of William who was born in Hobkirk Parish in 1758. In 1841 he was living at about 10 Langholm Street, with Helen and Mary, who were probably his daughters. He is probably the Robert who married Mary Elliot (c.1768–1840) in Castleton and whose children included Isabell (1799–1804); Mary (1804–54); and Robina (1816–42). Robert (c.1760–1824) son of Robert, who farmed at Hermitage. He was tenant in Moraylees and Haydon Bridge. He married Mary Scott (c.1776–1843) from Skelfhill and their children were Robert (1809–44) and James (1813–90), who were both tenants at Galalaw. Capt. Robert (1761–1840) younger son of William of Whithaugh, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was in the Merchant Navy, serving as Captain of the 'Hope', which operated between Calcutta and Canton. He farmed at Glencartholm, near Canonbie. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Alison Grieg (c.1779–1856). Robert (b.1762) son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He emigrated to America, settling in Quebec, where he married Elizabeth Louise Josephpte Savoie in 1788. Their children included: Andre (b.1788); Marie-Louise Allet (b.1790); Simon (1793–1865), who married Rebecca Armstrong and was great-grandfather of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau; Joseph (b.1795); Marie (b.1796); Charlotte (b.1798), who probably died young; Helene Allet (b.1802), also died young; Margaritte (b.1805); twins Helene and Charlotte (b.1807); and Sara-Marie (b.1810). Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Roan in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He died in Trois-Rivières, Quebec. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. His son Archibald is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. It is unclear if they were related to the Elliots of Harwood. Robert 'Little Hobbie o the Castleton' (18th/19th C.) resident of Byreholm in Castleton Parish. In the 'Local Historians Table Book' of 1841 it is described that he was 'a dwarf', 'reputed to be a fairy changeling', who had died less than 20 years previously. He was 'a most irascible creature' who would pull out a knife when insulted, but was too slow to catch people. He also had a run-in with his neighbour William Scott from Kirndeane, threatening the big man to a duel for tarnishing his reputation, causing Scott to flee from his house. Robert (b.1767), W.S., son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a lawyer in Kirkcaldy and died unmarried. Robert (1767–1854) son of Capt. Robert, and grandson of William of Harwood. He was born at Hobsburn in Hobkirk Parish. He joined the Navy in 1781 and rose through the ranks, becoming Commander in 1801 and going on half-pay in 1814. In 1846 he was promoted to the rank of Vice-Admiral. In 1797 he married Ann, daughter of Andrew Hilley of Plymouth. His children were: Elizabeth Pringle (1801–47); Robert Hilley (b.1803), Captain in the Navy, who married Elizabeth Carr; and Helen (or Ann), who married John Paton of Crailing, his 1st wife being her cousin Eleanor Elliot. He stayed at Hundalee and then at Glenbank and was a member of the Jedforest Club. For several years before his death he was completely blind. Robert (1768/9–1856) shepherd at Blinkbonny. He married Elspeth 'Huitson' or 'Hotson' (possibly Whitson), who died in 1815, aged 50; she was probably related to George 'Hotson' (d.1728), who is buried in the adjacent lair at Ettleton. Their children included: Margaret (b.1789); Helen (b.1791); William (b.1794); Christian (b.1799), who may have married shoemaker William Elliot; Elspeth (1803–59); Robert (b.1807); and John, who died in infancy. Robert (18th/19th C.) from Langburnshiels. He was an apprentice baker with Thomas Kedie in Hawick. He produced a sketch entitled 'Wilton Path and Damside, 1810', which is one of the first representations of Wilton. It was reproduced in the Hawick News in 1910 and discussed in the Transactions in 2015. Robert (b.1769) farmer at Lanton Mains, taking over from his father, William. He married Margaret Hall (c.1778–1818) and their children included: Christian (c.1810–27); and Jane (c.1812–31). The family are buried at Abbotrule Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. Probably the same Robert was father of: Mary (b.1783), born at Tythehouse; William (b.1792), born at Harwood; and John (b.1794), born at Robert's Linn. Robert (b.c.1770) born in Bedrule, he was a farmer. In 1841 he is 'Independent' and in 1851 recorded as 'Pauper Formerly Farmer'. His wife was Jessy from Morebattle and their children included Margaret, Mary (who married David Turnbull), Christian and Janet. Robert of Cooms (18th/19th C.) subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was cautioner for a bank in Langholm in 1825. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert of Arkleton (1775–1810) son of William and Cassandra Elliot. He was a Captain in the 5th Bombay Native Infantry, and saw active service at the siege of Seringapatam. He returned home about 1803 to take possession of the family estate. He was then a Major in the 1st Battalion of the Roxburghshire Volunteers. He led some of the men of Liddesdale and the Slitrig valley to Hawick in response to the False Alarm of 1804. He returned to India where he was promoted to Major. He later accompanied the mission to the Isle of France, where he (and many others) were killed on the H.M.S. Africaine when attacked by 2 French frigates. Robert 'Blind Robbie' (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife Margaret Robson's death is recorded in the Hawick Parish records in 1805. It appears that they were married in 1790. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Deadwater who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 and William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had a local connection. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Burnfoot on Ale according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. It is possible that the same Robert was listed as a servant at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot. Robert (1780–1851) son of John, tanner in Hawick. He was probably the tanner in Hawick on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. However, he became a farmer at Roan. He may be the 'R. Elliot, Roan' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was listed among heads of households in the Parish in 1835–41. In 1851 his widow is recorded as farmer of 130 arable acres and more than 4,000 acres of moorland, employing 5 labourers. His wife was Isabel, who was also from Hawick. He is buried at Teviothead. Robert (b.c.1780) resident of Birkwoodfoot according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1801. Robert (b.1780/1) from Ewesdale, he was a farmer in Robertson Parish. He is probably the renant farmer at Harden recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish in 1812. In 1841 he was a gamekeeper at Harden and in 1851 was a retired farmer at Scaurnook. His wife was Janet (from Canonbie). He is probably either the son of Thomas and Isabel Dagleish baptised in Ewes in 1780, or the son of Thomas and Elizabeth Caruthers baptised in 1781. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Ann Matheson (or 'Mather' or 'Mathrew') and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: James (b.1810); Elizabeth (b.1812); and Margaret (b.1817). Robert (b.1785) son of John, farmer at Twislehope. He was a surgeon in Haltwhistle. He married Jane Elliot from Cringledykes, daughter of John and granddaughter of Robert in Hermitage. Their children were Margaret, Jane, John (surgeon in Bellingham), Robert (surgeon in Haltwhistle), William (lived in london), Janet, Jane, Alice, Georgina, Andrew (who married Helen from Hermitage), Kate and Margaret (who married James Hill, Controller General for Scotland). Robert (1790–1872) eldest son of William, and grandson of Robert of Caerlenrig, he was born in Kirkton Parish. He became tenant in Teindside and is recorded there in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. Probably the same Robert 'of Teindside' was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He is recorded there as farmer in 1841, living with William (probably his brother) and Margaret (probably his mother). In 1851 he was recorded there as farmer of 440 acres, employing 6 labourers. He died unmarried. Robert (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Robert (c.1785–1849) son of William and Jean Davidson from Ewes. He was a slater in Hawick, recorded at Townhead in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was at about 2 Loan in 1841. He married Janet 'Bleak' (or Black, c.1789–1831). Their children included: Margaret (1811–79), who married William Miller; William (1814–67), who married Helen Smith; Jane (1816–74), who married John White; Janet (1818–83), who married Thomas Thomson; twins Martha (1822–92) and Robert (b.1822), who probably died young; Thomas (1825–64); and John Scott (1829–1914), who was

Cornet in 1851. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1849. Robert (1791–1858) son of Walter and Helen Crozier. He farmed at Hermitage, like several members of his family before him. He is probably the Elliot from Kirndeane who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. In 1851 he was farming 2,000 acres of moorland and employing 4 labourers. He married Mary (c.1804–35), daughter of Thomas Murray and Janet Inglis, from Whisgills. She was probably already dead in 1841, and he was certainly a widower by 1851. He was wealthy enough to be employing a governess in 1841. His children were: Janet (1826–73), who married Colin Hay; Walter (1828–93), who farmed Hermitage after his father died; Thomas (1830–54), who died on the Isle of Mull; Helen (1832–93); and Mary (b.1834). Robert (1793/4–1858) only son of William, tenant at Millburn. He also farmed at Millburnholm. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1827 he married Helen (or Eleanor), daughter of John Davidson from Bewcastle; she died in 1886, aged 82, and was buried at Ettleton. Their children: included William (1828–91), who emigrated to New Zealand; Anne (b.1829); Elizabeth or Betty Laidlaw (b.1831); and John Davidson (b.1834–96). He died at Toftholm and is buried at Unthank. Robert of Reidheugh (1794–1869) only son of Thomas and Mary Thomson. He inherited the lands of Redheugh from his uncle John. During his time the road to Hawick (B6399) was built adjacent to the farm. He also had the Rede Burn partially diverted and drained the marshy area behind the farm. In 1805 (although this date seems too early) he sold Cooms and Middlemoss to Humble Lamb of Ryton. He was listed for the first time as a head of household in Castleton Parish in 1837. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was also Vice-President of the Liddesdale Curling Club. He was listed at Redheugh in Slater's 1852 directory and in the 1861 census was 'Land Proprietor' there. In 1851 he and his wife settled Redheugh jointly on their 2 sons, reserving the liferent for themselves. He was still at Redheugh in a directory of 1868. In 1820 he married Jessie (or Janet, c.1796–1871) Elliot from Flatt. Their children were: Thomas (1821–69), who married Elizabeth Kyle; Jane (1822/3–67); Mary

(b.1824), who died young; John (1825–58), who died in Mexico; Mary (1827–53); Henry (b.1829), who also died young; and another daughter. He settled Redheugh jointly on his 2 sons in 1851. He and his wife are buried in Castleton cemetery. Robert (b.1794/5–1878) carrier in Newcastleton. He may also have lived at Greens. He was a carter in Newcastleton, listed among heads of households in Newcastleton in 1835–41. He was listed in Pigot's 1837 directory as carrier to Carlisle once a week, and also to Hawick once a week. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was at about 33 North Hermitage Street. In 1861 he was listed as farmer of 26 acres. His wife was Agnes Murray Elliot (c.1794–1876) from Westerkirk. Their children included: Isabella (b.1819); Janet (b.1821); Agnes (b.1823); Agnes (again, 1824–97); Christian (b.1826); John (1828–57); Robert (b.1830); Barton (a daughter, 1831–1920); Robert (again, b.1834); Jane (or Jean, b.1835); and James Douglas (1838–78), who died in London. Robert (b.1795/6) shepherd in Castleton Parish, where he was born. In 1861 he was living at about 1 Langholm Street in Newcastleton. His wife was Isabella and their children included Robert and Violet. His wife was from England, and his children were born there. Robert (1796/7–1865) son of Robert, tenant in Powisholm in Castleton Parish. He farmed at Powisholm, like his father, and is recorded there in the 1840s to 1860s. He is probably the 'R. Elliot, Pouseholm' subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Esther (1798–1889), daughter of carter Adam Elliot from Newcastleton. Their children included: Robert (1821–1908), who live at Bankend and Powisholm; Margaret (1823–1900), who married Andrew Thompson; Wilhelmina (1825–93), married John Robson and died at Teviothead; Adam (1827–80), who worked for a while as a baker in Hawick; John (1829–48); Ann (1831–95); Mary (1833–1906); James Armstrong (1835–1903); Elizabeth (1837–85), married John Glendinning from Liverpool and died in California; Sibella (1839–1911); and William (1843–1921). He is probably related to the Robert who farmed at the same place earlier. Robert (19th C.) recorded as 'Robert, esq. of Leehaugh' on Pigot's 1837 directory. He probably lived at Leehaugh near Newcastleton, and could be the same as Robert of Redheugh. Robert (1802–77) born in Castleton Parish, son of William and Jean Easton. He was an agricultural labourer and shepherd. He was listed among heads of households as labourer at Gillfoot in 1835 and Whitropeburn in 1836–38, and shepherd at Phaupknowe in 1840 and 1841. He is listed as labourer at Phaupknowe in 1841 and Upperraw in 1851. He married Betty Telfer (c.1805–75). Their children included: John (1822–26); Isabella (1827–46); William (b.1829); Jeanie (b.1832); Robert (b.1834); Sarah (b.1839); and John (b.1841). He died at Whitehillbrae. Robert Kerr 6th Laird of Harwood (1805–73) eldest son of William the 5th Laird. Before 1835 he lived at Greenriver on the Stonedge estate. He succeeded to the Harwood estates at the age of 30 and moved into the new house that his father had had built on the estate. He served in the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, reaching the rank of Lieutenant. He is said to have been a keen country sportsman, excelling at riding with the hounds. Along with some friends he started the 'Jedforest Harriers', meeting at Swinnie Toll-bar, Howahill, Chapel of Cross (presumably Shiplaw Corse), Ruletownhead and elsewhere. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1829. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as being Deputy-Lieutenant (from 1848), a Commissioner of Supply for the county, Tax Commissioner and member of the Police Board. In 1845, after a 2 year legal battle, he inherited the Clifton estates from his cousin Robert Pringle; his tenants in Rulewater lit a huge bonfire to mark the occasion, as recounted in a poem by John Halliday. He said 'The name Clifton has been a lucky one with me. When staying at Clifton, near Bristol, I met my wife, a Miss Clifton, and I succeeded to the estate of Clifton'. On the announcement of the legal victory there was a great celebration at Harwood, with a bonfire lit on a nearby hill. He was said to be a keen supporter of the 'uppies' in Hobkirk Baa. In 1833 he married Mary Anne, daughter of Charles Claude Clifton of Twymaur, Brecon, and she died in 1871. His 13 children were: Mary-Anne Frances (1834–1917), said to be the prettiest, who married Sir Edward Cludde Cockburn; William Claude (1835–1922), who succeeded; Charles John (1836/7–1863), who died aged 27, after returning from India; Robert Henry (b.1838) of Clifton Park, who married Anna Maria Louisa, daughter of Lord Trimleston, and whose son Robert would later succeed as Laird of Harwood; Ellen Eliza (b.1839), who married Chetwode Drummond Pringle; Adelaide Catherine (1840–1926), who married Sir Basil Francis Hall; Chandos Frederick (1842–62); Anna Maria Octavia (b.1844), who died young; Caroline Clifton (1845–1923), who married James Moffat of Edenhall; Edward Claude (1846–1913), married Eleanor, daughter of John Jones of Melbourne; Charlotte Elizabeth (1848–93), who married John Dalton of Sleningford Park, Yorkshire; Anna Maria (b.1849), who married Lieut.-Col. James Colquhoun; and Mark Pringle (1851–1924). The family used to spend the winter at Brighton, where he would go hunting. He died there following a hunting accident. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1873. He was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. Robert (b.1804/5) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was an agricultural labourer and gardener in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Slitrig Cottage with his wife and mother-in-law Margaret. By 1851 he was a widower, still at Slitrig Cottage and in 1861 he was a shepherd at Bucklands. He married Janet Crozier in Wilton in 1841. Their children included: Margaret (b.1842); and Robert (b.1844). He could be the son of John born in Hobkirk in 1807. Robert (1808–88) youngest son of James, schoolmaster of Wilton, who lived at Goldielands. He was a sheep farmer in Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Dumfriesshire, before settling at Laighwood, near Dunkeld. He received prizes for his sheep from the Highland and Agricultural Society in the 1850s and 60s. He corresponded with George Cupples, who was gathering data for Charles Darwin, on the subject of the proportions of sheep born of each sex. He was also on that Society's Committee for Land Improvement. Robert (1808/9–44) elder son of Robert, farmer at Hermitage, Haydon Bridge, etc. His mother was Mary Scott from Skelfhill. He probably held the tenancy of Galalaw farm, but died in Madeira (or perhaps Madras, India). After his death his brother James became tenant at Galalaw. Robert (b.1808/9) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farm steward at Westerhouses in 1851 and 1861. He married Mary Renwick and their children included Elizabeth, Margaret, John, William, Francis, Marianne, Henry (b.1851) and Agnes (b.1854). Robert (c.1811–45) agricultural labourer who was living at Fodderlee Cottage in 1841. He married Mary Elliot (b.c.1814) and their children included Elizabeth (b.c.1834), Margaret (b.c.1835) and John (b.c.1839). His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court. He could be the Robert, son of John, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1807. Robert (1807–96) younger son of James of Wolfelee and brother of Sir Walter. He was a twin of James. He was an elder of Wolfelee Free Kirk and also took a keen interest in the Sclenty Schuil. He lived to the age of 89. Robert (b.1812/3) born in Castleton

Parish, he was a shepherd and labourer. In 1861 he was at about 37 South Hermitage Street. He married Mary Armstrong in 1840. Their children included: Christian (b.1842); Robert (b.1845); Jane; and Archibald. Robert (b.1814/5) born in Newcastleton, he was an agricultural labourer living around Sunnyside in Denholm in 1841. The family was living in a cottage at Hundalee in 1851. In 1861 he was a ploughman in Oxnam Parish. In 1836 he married Hannah Whillans from Crailing. Their family included: John (b.c.1837); Archibald; and Walter. His elderly uncle Walter, formerly a mason from Cavers, was also living with them in 1851. The family may have emigrated to Bruce County, Ontario. Robert (b.c.1815) labourer who was living at Hermitage Schoolhouse in 1841. He married Agnes Milligan and their children included: Jessie (or Janet, b.1835); Margaret; and Jane (b.1839); and Matthew (b.1841). He may have been related to James, who was schoolmaster at Hermitage. Robert (b.1818/9) born in Hawick Parish, he was farm steward at Cavers estate in the 1860s. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at Cavers East Lodge (called 'Cavers Garden' in 1861). He was listed as 'gamekeeper' and his wife as 'portress'. He was later farmer at Cavers Mains and was one of the people present at the excavation of the cairn at Belvedere on the Cavers estate in 1895. He was an Elder in East Bank Kirk. His wife was Isabella Elliot, probably daughter of John, who was shepherd at Shiplaw Corse. Their children included: Margaret (b.1850); William (b.1852); Mary (b.1854); Stuart Douglas (b.1856), an Edinburgh solicitor, who became a Colonel in the Volunteers; Elizabeth (b.1858); John (b.1860); Isabella (b.1863); Janet (b.1869); Janet (again, b.1866); Agnes (b.1869); and Robert (b.1872). Robert (1821–1908) son of Robert, who farmed at Powisholm, and Esther Elliot. He was an agricultural labourer living at Bankend in Castleton Parish in 1861. In 1849 he married Christian Elliot (c.1826–1904) and their children included Agnes Murray (1850–1904); Robert (1851–1928); John (1853–1935); Esther; and Adam (1858–1903). He died at Powisholm. Robert Henry of Clifton Park (b.1837) 3rd son of Robert Henry. He inherited the lands of Clifton Park from his father. In about 1874 he also owned lands in Linton Parish. In 1868 he married Anna Maria Louisa Barnewall, only daughter of Thomas, Lord Trimleston. Their son Thomas became the next Laird of Harwood. Robert (1845–1918) younger son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. he emigrated to

New Zealand in 1864 and married Elizabeth Fitt. Their children were Ettie, Eliza, Maud, Agnes and Andrew. Robert (b.1850/1) born in Kirkton Parish. In 1901 he was farm steward at Barnes Cottages. His wife was Annie and their children included Annie, Henry, Thomas, Jane, Edward and Robert. Robert of Reidheugh (d.1915) only son of Thomas and Elizabeth Kyle. He inherited Redheugh, being served heir to his grandfather in 1887. He married Effie McGregor Corbett, but they had no children. In 1918 his sister Anna Mary sold Redheugh to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. Robert (1865–1937) son of Walter, farmer in Hermitage, and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He also farmed at Hermitage, but gave up the lease and retired to Newcastle. He married Isobel, sister of J.G. Wilson, manufacturer in Hawick. He secondly married Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Paisley, ironmonger from Hawick. His only child was Isabella Jane Armstrong. Robert Young Scott ‘Bob’, M.B.E. (1920–2016) born on February 29th, so he celebrated his 21st birthday in 2004! A High School Maths teacher for 28 years, he coached tennis locally and received an M.B.E. in 1998 for services to lawn tennis. He married Madge, who coached tennis along with him, and they had sons Kim and Sean. Roland (15th C.) recorded as ‘Rollando Elwald’ in 1466 when he witnessed a charter at Kirkcudbright for Robert Herries. Roland (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Along with ‘Willot’ and some Armstrongs, Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for bringing them to the area to attack the tenants of Whitmuir. They are described as ‘traitors of Leven’, but are as likely to have been from Liddesdale as England. Roland (15th/16th C.) recorded in a 1516 ‘respite’ to William of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots. He is listed as ‘Rolland Elwald in Thorleshope’. He is surely related to the other Elliots of Thorlieshope, perhaps the generation between the John of the 1480s and 90s and the Robert or Robin of the 1540s to 60s. Roland (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Riccarton, recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Listed after him are William Elliot, along with Martin and Patrick Crozier. He may be related to some of the other nearly contemporary Rolands. Roland of Thorlieshope (16th C.) recorded in 1546 when he was one of the men to be entered as prisoners to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. This was along with John, son of Robert of Thorlieshope (whose relationship to him is unclear), as well as John, son to ‘Hobe Quhytserk’. Roland ‘Rowie’ of the Park (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when he was held by Patrick Houston of that Ilk with a pledge of good behaviour to the King. He is probably the Robin of the Park who was accused (along with Simon and others) by the English in 1581 of stealing cattle and taking Thomas Routledge prisoner. He could be the man transcribed as ‘James Rowe in the Park’, listed along with Sym of the Park and Archibald of the Park in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1581. It is thus possible that he was son of James of the Park. However, he is probably the ‘Rowie Elliot of the Park, called Symmis Rowie’ listed in 1581 as the leader of the gang of Elliots of the Park released from Edinburgh Castle; his father was thus Simon. In 1582/3 his name was transcribed as ‘Robbe’ when several other Elliots were charged for his non-appearance. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1594 as ‘Rowie Elliot of Ramsegill’ when he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Rowe Ellocht of the Hall’ in a huge 1585 remission of crimes for men whose superior was Lord Maxwell; his name appears near those of Ewesdale residents, and it seems likely he was ‘of the Hill’ (rather than ‘Hall’). ‘Hob and Will Elliottis, brether’ are listed after him, so possibly his brothers, or brothers to each other and more distantly related to him. Roland ‘Rollie’ (17th C.) described as ‘called Park’ in the 1660s when he was listed as a debtor of William Elliot of Binks, along with many other Elliots. He may have been a descendant of the earlier Elliots of Park. Roland (1815–41) son of James, tenant at Lymiecleuch. He was tenant farmer at Mackside in 1841. In 1837 he married Beatrice Pott (c.1799–1878), who died at Wilton Hill, Hawick. Russell see Adm. Russell Elliott. Samuel (18th C.) possibly a resident at Wells. He was recorded as a wright in Denholm in 1723. Probably the same man was father of: James (b.1723) in Cavers Parish; Samuel (b.1725) in Cavers; Walter (b.1828) in Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes; Alison (b.1730) in Hobkirk; and William (b.1732) in Bedrule. Samuel (b.c.1750) son of William of Wolfelee with his 2nd wife Margaret Ogilvie. He was a merchant in Antigua. He has 2 daughters: Alicia, who married William Hay Carre and Sir M.A. Crosby; and Eliza, who married Lord Despensier. Simon (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 along with James, Lawrence and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. Simon (16th C.) entered in 1537/8 for crimes along with his brother James 'Elwald' and William in Leahaugh, with sureties being Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald. They were accused of breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk. How he was related to other Elliots is unclear. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as the tenant of Park in Liddesdale. Either the same or a different Simon was also tenant at 'Coklaik'. He was probably an ancestor of the Simon of the Park recorded about 4 decades later. Simon (16th C.) recorded as 'Sym Elwald' in 1546 when he was witness to the bond entering some Elliots as prisoners with John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He signed with the help of the notary (suggesting that he could not write), 'in absens of my brother young William'. He may be the same as one of the other Simons. Simon 'Sim' (16th C.) proprietor of lands at Dodburn and adjacent farms. In 1567 Robert Scott of Thirlestane and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for him and Airchie's Will in Gorrenberry. He is recorded in a bond of security of 1569 signed in Hawick, in which he is given as 'Sym Elliot in Dodburne', with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch serving as surety for him. 5 tenants are listed for whom he was surety himself. He may have been related to the other Elliots in the bond, e.g. Gavin in Skelfhill or Gavin of Falnash. When he failed to appear in 1569 (along with Gavin of Falnash and William of Gorrenberry), Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. Also in 1569 he was one of the relief pledges listed for Gavin in Falnash (the other 2 being William of Gorrenberry and Gavin Elliott of Skelfhill, who were probably close relatives). Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. In 1573 he was to be entered into ward in St. Andrews, according to the register of the Privy Council. It is possible he is the 'Sym Elliot', who with his brother Will in Dodburn and Archie, was found guilty in 1586 of 'a great stouth committed by them at the Eschellis'; the Crown was still trying to recover the penalties from their superior Will of Falnash in 1602. Simon 'Simmie' of the Park (16th C.) probably related to the earlier Simon of the Park. In 1578/9 there was a restatement at the Privy Council of a pledge that he should be placed in ward with the Laird of Corstorphine; his sureties were Martin of Braidlie and the deceased John of the Park, while Hob of the Park was also mentioned in the same document and so surely related. He was said to have escaped from ward, and hence his cautioners were fined. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Simons. He is listed as 'Sym Elliott of the Park' in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies. He was surely father of 'Symmis Rowie' of the Park, recorded in 1582/3, and possibly also father of 'Symmis Arche', who was one of the cautioners for 'Symmis Rowie'. 'Sims John Elliot of the Parke', recorded in 1583, was probably also his son. He was likely related to the other Elliots of the Park who are listed in 1583, namely 'Grey Willie', 'Scots Hobbie', 'Jamie of the Park', 'Grey Will's Jamie' and 'Hob's Hobbie'. He is recorded as 'Sym Elliott of the Park' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court; James of the Park was also listed and presumably closely related. Simon of Philhope, 'Mertins Sym' (d.bef. 1592) eldest son of Martin of Braidlie. He is first mentioned in 1569, when he was among a number of pledges in exchange for Martin of Braidlie with the Regent Moray. In 1579 his father Martin purchased a 10 poundland of 'Reuhop or Philop' from John Turnbull and granted them to him. He is mentioned in 1580 along with his brothers Gavin, Archibald and Robert; in that year they were all implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. He is 'Sime Elliot', son of Martin of 'Bradley' in a letter of 1583. In 1586 he was 'Sym Elliot, sone to the said Martene' when he occupied the farm of Riccarton Cleuch, which was released to him by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was 'Syme Elliott Martin's son' in 1590 when accused of stealing 8 cows from 'Medupp' in England, along with 'Ill-willed Will' Crozier and 'Quentin's Airchie' Crozier. He received a Crown Charter of the lands of Philhope (in the Borthwick valley) in 1591, along with his father. It is unclear if he succeeded to the lands for long after his father's death. There were Elliots at Philhope for several subsequent generations. His wife's name is not recorded, but his children included: Martin of Braidley; William of the Binks; and James 'in Hollis' (Hollow). His son Martin, along with Robert of Redheugh, made an agreement to bury their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1599. Simon of Harden (16th C.) listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. His lands were presumably Harden in Liddesdale. It is possible he is the same man as Simon of Philhope. Simon 'in Philhope' (d.bef. 1628) eldest son of

Martin of Braidlie and grandson of the earlier Simon of Philhope. He is recorded in the charter for the lands of Philhope in 1592. In 1615 his wardship, which had been in the hands of the Crown since his father's execution in 1607, was grnted to Thomas Armstrong of Craig. He married Elizabeth Chisholme (who was presumably from one of the local families), who survived him, and may later have married Archibald of Philhope. They had one child, Grizel, who was given as ward to Robert of Falnash when Simon died; she later married Robert of Falnash's son John and was heiress of Philhope. Simon 'Sim' (16th C.) recorded with a tower in the Debateable Land on Sandison's c.1590 map, to the north of Larriston. This could have been near Burnmouth perhaps. Simon 'Sim' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as 'Syme Elliott, callit Guyd, in Linsburne' when he was accused of stealing 3 cows from Jock, 'callit Dod' from the lands of 'Buceburne'. He was found guilty along with Abie Armstrong, although Archie Armstrong 'Raccas' and Francie Armstrong 'Tueden' were acquitted. He was ordered to be hanged for his crimes. Simon of the Binks (d.bef. 1656) 2nd son of William of the Binks, and great-grandson of Robert, 13th Chief. He is first mentioned in 1599 when accused of theft and then in a marriage suit with an illegitimate daughter of 'Gibbie wi' ye Gowden Garters' of Stobs. It is said that he 'hand-fasted' with her on condition that he pay a considerable dowrie if was unsatisfied with her (which he was, since he married another woman). This led to him selling Binks to Gilbert Elliott (around 1601), although his son William bought it back. In 1603 he was 'Sym Ellot of Bankis' when there was a complaint that he and others had raided 'Sewingdene' in 1601, stealing livestock and goods and injuring several people; 'Cubbie's Archie, Sym's man' (probably Archibald, son of Cuthbert Armstrong from Bankhouse) was also listed, as well as Armstrongs and others. He was forced to admit that his servant was responsible and was denounced as a rebel. He was on the inquest at the Judiciary Court of 1622 and 1623, when listed as 'Sime Elliott, Benkis in Thorlieshoip' and 'callit of Benkis'. He is also referred to as 'Syme Elliot of Binkis in Thorlieshope'. He was tenant at Thorlieshope (from at least 1622), Larriston (around 1627) and Huddishouse (around 1637). He is referred to as 'Symione Ellot called of the Benckis in Huddishous in Liddersdaill' in 1637 when his son William purchased Harwood; William may have 'wadset' the lands to him and hence he himself was listed as owner in 1643, when 'Harrit' was valued at £433 6s 8d. As a result he is occasionally referred to as the 1st Elliot Laird of Harwood. He purchased Lodgegill in 1647 and Cooms in 1650, and together these made up Black Tarras. He is recorded in a contract of 1648 involving the vicarage teinds for Hobkirk Parish, and in a discharge for the teinds in 1649. His sons were: William, more usually called 1st Laird of Harwood; and Robert of Black Tarras, who married Margaret Riddell from Bewlie. His brother Robert is noted in the Register of the Privy Seal as a thief. He also had a daughter who married a Scott, her sons John and William later witnessing a document relating to Harwood (and it is possible this was Rev. John of Hawick). His name is sometimes written 'Simeon' or 'Syme'. In 1656 his charters of Lodgegill and Cooms were confirmed by Cromwell, by which time he was deceased. Simon of Black Tarras (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert of Black Tarras and Margaret Riddell. He inherited half of the lands of Lodgegill. He is mentioned in 1671 when he brought a case of assault and robbery of his lands of Tarras, Skelfhill and 'Longkeipsyde' against Henry in Harwood, Henry's brother James, John in Dinley, Robert of Pingleholes, William of Philhope, John of Brugh and others; this suggests some dispute with his neighbours. He was declared bankrupt in 1690 and the lands of Lodgegill were adjudged to William of Thorlieshope, who settled them on his brother Henry. Simon of Dinlabyre (17th C.) recorded in a letter of 1692 to the Earl of Tarras. He must have been related to William of Dinlabyre, who died around 1693. He may have been the last Elliot Laird of Dinlabyre, who sold the estate to John Oliver in about 1700. Simon of Swinside and the Binks (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William of the Binks and Harwood. In 1670, along with William of Unthank and his son Adam, he purchased Lymiecleuch (including Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch) from William Elliott, younger of Stobs. However, he sold his share to William Elliott of Stobs 3 years later. In 1672 he bought Middleknows in Oxnam Parish and in 1674 he obtained a Crown Charter of the Barony of Swinside, designating his eldest son as heir, but retaining liferent for himself. In 1678 he is recorded as owner of the lands of Swinside and Middleknowes in Oxnam Parish, valued at more than £2000. He is 'Symeon Elliott of Swinsyde' when he signed the 1678 marriage contract between the Elliots of Midlem Mill and Harwood. He is recorded as 'Simeon of Swinesyde' in a bond of 1683. In 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was cautioner for a bond between Henry Elliot of Harwood and William Elliot of Bewlie in 1692, witness to a bond for Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1696 and cautioner for another in 1696. He registered his arms as Baron of Swinside in 1697. In 1699 he witnessed a disposition for Elliot of Harwood. In 1714 he settled various of his lands on his sons and he sold the lands of Binks to John of Thorlieshope, sometime before 1718; however, it has also been suggested that he sold them to Christopher Irving some time before this. He is probably the 'Simeon Eliott of harwood' who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Turnbull, cottar in Harwood, in 1720. He married Jean Elliot (from an unknown branch of the family) before 1672. They had 7 children: William, Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, who succeeded to Swinside; Adam of Beirhope; Gideon of Harwood on Teviot; Simon, mentioned in 1688 (d.bef. 1714); James, also mentioned in 1688 (d.bef. 1714); Robert of 'Tyneside'; and Christian, who married Dr. John Haliburton from Jedburgh and whose son Simon Haliburton married Elizabeth Elliot of Midlem Mill. Simon John of Brugh (1940–) only son of Sir William (Air Chief Marshal). He was educated at Eton and McGill University. He is the present head of the Elliots of Brugh. He married Sonia Annabel Shand in 1972 and their children are Alice Rosalind, Benjamin William and Catherine Camilla. The family live in Dorset. Stuart Douglas (1856–c.1930) born in Cavers Lodge, he was 2nd son and 4th child of Cavers gamekeeper Robert and Isabella. He grew up in Cavers and attended school in Cavers, Kirkton and briefly St. Mary's in Hawick. He started his legal training with Wilson & Anderson in Hawick in 1872 and moved to Edinburgh in 1876. His firm of Kirk Mackie & Elliot was located on George Street and later on Princes Street. He worked in Edinburgh as a Supreme Court Solicitor, and was also a City Councillor there. He was President of the Edinburgh Borderers' Union for 23 years and Secretary of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association for 25 years. He was heavily involved with the volunteer movement, which he joined in 1876; he was an officer of the 4th Battalion of the Royal Scots (Lothian Regiment), rising through the rank to become Lieutenant-Colonel. He wrote frequently to newspapers on various topics that interested him. In 1882 in Hawick he married Agnes, daughter of William Laidlaw, farmer at Bonchester and Fodderlee. Their children were Agnes Laidlaw

Douglas, Isabella, Edith, Constance R., Florence W., Robert A.D. and William Gilbert. Note that his name is also sometimes written 'Stewart'. Thomas (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1310. He was 'Ellot of Repewyk' near Hexham and was hanged for felony, but resuscitated and pardoned. It was also stated that his name was on the roll of the Brethren of St. John of Jerusalem in England. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1528 and 1534 as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. He also witnessed another document in Selkirk in 1528, along with William. Probably the same Thomas was recorded in 1534 as procurator to Gavin in a legal agreement carried out in Hassendean Kirk; Gavin (who may have been related) made a letter of reversion to William Scott for the 40-shilling lands of 'Neder Gallelaw'. He is probably the Thomas, Burgess of Selkirk, who in 1535 witnessed a document, in which Walter Scott of Robertson begged for clemency from Robert Hunter, for his part in the killing of Robert's brother John Hunter; chaplain Matthew was also listed, and perhaps a relative. He may be the Thomas who is recorded in 1535/6 jointly owning 2 rigs of land with his wife Helen Rutherford. He also witnessed another document in Selkirk in 1536. He is probably the Thomas who was listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40 and who witnessed another transaction in 1540/1. He is probably the Thomas who was deceased in 1541/2 when his son and heir Robert inherited his tenement and 2 rigs; Robert resigned a house to his mother Helen Rutherford, in liferent and in 1561/2 she sold her tenement and rigs to Robert, son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of 'Lynedene' in the Barony of Bowden, along with other 'Elwalds'. Thomas 'Law's Tom' (16th C.) tenant in Priestthaugh. He was recorded in 1574 as 'Thome Elliott callit Lawis Thome' among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. 'Lawis Jok' also in Priestthaugh and 'Lawis Richie' in Swinstead were also named and presumably his brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1579 when he witnessed a transaction done in Selkirk. This involved James in Yair, who was probably related. In 1581 he was still in Yair when there was a promise to pay him and James Ker in Yair for the tacks on 'Brigheucht' and Lindean Mill by Thomas Ker in Sunderlandhall. Thomas (16th C.) brother of

Jock of Copshaw. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. He is recorded as 'Thom Elliot of Copshawe' when accused along with William of Gorremberry, the Armstrongs of Whithaugh, and others of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England in 1587. He is probably the 'Thom of Copschaw' whose son Francis was listed among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. Thomas of Bonjedward (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when his son Will was found guilty of stealing a horse from Walter Scott of Burnfoot-on-Ale. Thomas (17th C.) servant of Gilbert of Craigend who witnessed a sasine for Appotside in 1632. Thomas of Bewlie (d.1686) tenant farmer at Borthwickshiels, son of Robert in Borthwickshiels and descended from the Elliots of Horsleyhill. He is recorded along with his parents in a list of communicants in the Borthwick valley in 1650. His only known sibling was William, minister at Yarrow, for whom he became executor (for his debts!) after his death. In 1672 he purchased Bewlie from Walter Turnbull of Bewlie and settled these lands on his eldest son William in 1675. In 1676 he was involved in the redemption of annual rent with Isobel Riddell, wife of David Elliot, Burgess of Selkirk (and widow of George Dunn). He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1682 in Robertson for Patrick Riddell of Muselee and Marie Elliot (his daughter). He is probably the Thomas who (along with William) witnessed a baptism for James Murray, herd at Borthwickshiels in 1683. He is recorded as Thomas 'in Borthwickshiels' in an undertaking of 1685 with Henry Elliot of Harwood. He married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Chamberlain Newton (and she died in 1672). They had 5 children: William, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae (b.1658); Thomas (c.1660–1723), progenitor of the Oakwood Mill Elliots; Dr. Gideon (d.bef. 1723), of North Sinton; Mary (or 'Marie'), who married Patrick Riddell (incorrectly recorded sometimes as Nichol) of Muselee; and Susanna, who married William Scott of Stonedge (and whose daughter married William of Wolfelee). His will is recorded in 1686. Thomas of Haydon Bridge (d.c.1688) 4th son of John of Brugh. He may also have been described as 'of Canonbie Mill'. He married a Robinson. Their children included: George, who was killed in battle; Walter, unmarried; Gilbert, killed at Dettingen; and William, born posthumously, who was a joiner at Haydon Bridge. Thomas (1659/60–1723) tenant of Oakwood Mill, 2nd son of Thomas and Margaret Scott of Chamberlain Newton, and brother of the 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae. In 1719, along with his son Andrew, he witnessed a sasine for Helen, 2nd daughter of James Elliot in Calrous. Also in 1719 he had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. He may additionally be the Thomas who in 1719 was charged with taking divots off Selkirk Common. He served as Treasurer of Selkirk, as attested in 1734 when his widow had a discharge with the Burgh. He married Jean (c.1660–1743), daughter of Cornelius Inglis of Newton (possibly from the same family who once owned Branhholme); she died in Selkirk in 1743, aged 83 (although she is still recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1745). His children were: Thomas in Oakwood Mill, Bailie of Selkirk, who married Bessie Tudhope; William (b.c.1688), 1st Elliot of Wolfelee; Andrew, who married Agnes Shortreed and Mary Simpson; Bessie (b.1697), who died young; Isobel (b.1702); another Bessie (or 'Elizabeth', b.1704), who married Robert Shortreed of Essenside in 1725; and Agnes (d.1801), who married John Sibbald from Whitelaw and Walter Cunningham from Hindhope, and had 20 children in total, with Col. Sibbald of Pinnacle being a grandson of hers. He may also have had a daughter Elizabeth who was the 2nd wife of William of Whithaugh. He is buried in Lindean churchyard, this location suggesting a connection with the family of 'James Elliott of Bridgheugh' mentioned by Scott of Satchells. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded at Whitmuir Hall in 1709. In that year he purchased meal for the use of the Selkirk Town Herd. Thomas (b.c.1685) eldest son of Thomas in Oakwood Mill and related to the Elliots of Borthwickbrae. He was also tenant in Oakwood Mill, was described as a 'malster' (presumably a maker of malt) in Selkirk and was Bailie there from 1721, being mentioned in many records. For example, he was late Bailie when he had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1727, the Bailie whose servant was involved with a debt case in 1737, the Bailie involved in a legal case in Selkirk in 1741 and the ex-Bailie asked about non-payment of annual rent on part of Selkirk Common in 1752. He may also be the Thomas recorded in receipts with Selkirk in 1743. In 1708 he married Bessie, eldest daughter of John Tudhope (also a Bailie in Selkirk). Their children were John, John (again), William, Agnes, Jean, Agnes (again), Andrew, Jen (again), Robert, Elizabeth, Elizabeth (again) and Margaret. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident at Falnash Mill. His wife was Helen and their son John was baptised in Hawick Parish (probably at Caerlenrig) in 1720. His wife was probably Helen Allan, and their other children included Jean (b.1717). Thomas (17th/18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He was recorded in 1727 for work done on the herd's house and dam there. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Redfordgreen. He married Margaret Legerwood in Selkirk in 1736 and their son William was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1738. His wife may have secondly married James Scott in Wilton. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Harwood on Teviot. In 1740 he was 'at Harwood' when he witnessed baptisms for William Nichol, shepherd at Teindside and for Robert Elliot, tenant at Slaidhills; his brother Francis was also witness in 1740. He was described as 'in Harwood' in 1744 when he leased Northhouse and Suddenrig from the Buccleuch Estates. He was recorded in the list of rental arrears for Northhouse in the period 1745–48. In 1745 he was 'in Harwood' when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Lawson (resident of Teindside). In 1746 he and Francis (also at Harwood) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Reid at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Thomas (1723–51) eldest son of William the 1st Laird of Wolfelee. He was a physician. In 1751 he married Helen, daughter of Sir John Elphinstone and whose mother was a daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. He died only about 6 weeks after the marriage. A story is told of his wife being accidentally shut in a secret lower vault of Megginch Castle after being instructed to locate some family valuables and papers there, and being rescued by her cousin through chance circumstances. He predeceased his father, his death coming after catching fever in attending to a sick family. In grief, his wife spent a year living in the dark, but survived her husband by almost 56 years. Thomas (18th C.) purchaser of the Langlands estate (later called Wilton Lodge) in July 1783. His lands were valued at £ 278 12s 8d in 1788 (with much of the former Langlands estate having been sold off to others, but still including Calaburn). He sold the estate again in about 1790 to Lord Napier. He was the probably an illegitimate son of Gilbert, a younger son of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae and Sarah Growesmith. There is a record of a boundary dispute between him and the Duke of Buccleuch over the Pipewellheugh and Gardener's Haugh. His father Gilbert is recorded at Langlands on the female servant tax roll for 1785 and 1786, and he himself in 1787 and 1788. He was also taxed for having a footman and 2 horses in 1787 and 1788. In the 1789–92 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick he was listed as 'late of Langlands'. Thomas (1730–1807) son of John of Whithaugh. He was tenant in Twislehope, along with his elder brother John. He was a subscriber to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. In 1786 along with John (his brother), also in 'Tweeslihope', he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was listed at Twislehope on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797, and his wife was also taxed for 2 dogs. It is said that Sir Walter Scott visited him at Twislehope on his first trip through Liddesdale. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissary Court in 1809. Rev. Thomas (1731–1808) local minister, 6th son of Robert 'of Carlenrickrig' and Christian Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He may be the Thomas in Stobicote who witnessed a baptism in 1757 for William Grieve and Mary Elliot (probably his sister), with the other witness being Robert Elliot in Winningtonrig (his father). He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1757, presented to Kirkton on the last day of that year and ordained in mid-1758. Then he was translated to Cavers in 1763. In 1775 he complained that the Parish had had to pay Wilton to borrow its communion silverware and so in 1776 he arranged for the purchase of 4 silver cups. He paid the Horse Tax in 1785–92. He was said to have gentle manners and great modesty, but also was talented as an astronomer and mathematician. The famous Dr. Thomas Chalmers had his first ministerial duty as his assistant 1799–1800. In 1794 his salary was £83 6s 8d, together with 2½ chalders of grain, his manse and garden and 11 acres of glebe land. In 1760 he married Anne, daughter of William Elliot (2nd Laird) of Borthwickbrae (presumably his cousin). Although she died only a year later they did have a child, William (b.1761), who became an architect in Kelso (designer of the extension to the old Wilton Kirk), and probably the same William became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1775. He published a description of Cavers for Sinclair's Statistical Account and a paper on practical astronomy, 'New and improved Method of taking Observations at Sea' in the Transactions of the Philosophical Society of Edinburgh. A miniature portrait of him exists. A communion token dated 1761 (the second oldest in existence from the Parish) dates from his ministry. He died in Kelso. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1769); James Thomas

(b.1771); Thomas (b.1774); William (b.1777); and Isabel (b.1780). It is possible that he was the Thomas who married Ann Veitch in Southdean in 1762. Thomas (18th C.) mason at Newmill. He married Helen Douglas. Their children, born in Hawick Parish were: Betty (b.1771, with 'Margaret' crossed out); Margaret (b.1772); Walter (b.1772); and James (b.1774). Walter and James were probably the masons recorded at 'Brough Shankfoot' on the ballots for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801; Robert, another mason living at the same place in 1801, may have been a younger son of his. The witnesses in 1771 were Thomas Laidlaw and William Riddell. He could be the Thomas who in 1800 witnessed a baptism for Thomas Glendinning, shepherd at Blackcleugh. Thomas (b.1741) from the Ewes valley, son of Robert and Janet Scott. He married Elizabeth (born in Bowden), daughter of Robert Carruthers and Isobel Balmer. Their children included: William (1770–1824), who married Jean Easton; Robert (1781–1858); Elizabeth ('Betty', 1782–1843), who married farmer James Scott; Mary (b.1786); and Thomas (b.1791), who married Isabella Aitchison and may have died in the U.S.A. Thomas (1744/5–1800) 3rd son of Robert of Redheugh. His brother John farmed at Redheugh, but he also lived there and farmed Foulshiels. He is the Thomas who was recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Redheugh. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. In 1793 his brother John of Redheugh disposed of the stock and household furniture from Redheugh to him 'in order that he may be enabled with more ease and convenience to live upon the lands of Redheugh'. He married Mary Thomson. Their children included: Jean (1794–1867), who married Thomas Jardine; Robert (b.1794), who married Jessie Elliot and inherited Redheugh from his uncle; and Margaret (1797–1823), who married William Nichol. He and his wife are buried in Castleton cemetery. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Wester Parkhill in 1781 and Parkhill in 1784. He married Margaret Elliot in Roberton in 1775 and their children included Margaret (b.1778), William (b.1779), Agnes (b.1781), Janet (b.1783) and Christian (b.1784). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is said to have married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, cooper in Castleton and farmer at Dinlabyre. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th

C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Binks in 1783. His children included: Isabel (b.1783); Archibald (b.1788); and Thomas (b.1791). It is possible he was connected to the Thomas of Colterscleuch who lived at roughly the same time. He could be the Thomas, recorded in the Cavers Parish records being rebuked in 1784 for eloping with his pregnant friend the previous year, with their daughter being baptised in Glasgow; his wife was Isabel Dagleish and their daughter was Elizabeth (b.1783), with Thomas (b.1791), baptised in Roberton, being another child. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Appletrehall according to the 1797 Horse Tax register, when he owned 2 work horses. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Fenzlehope' in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Borthwick Mains, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Borthwick Mains in 1797. Thomas (1771–1850) son of 'Captain' Robert and brother of Capt. William of Harwood. He lived at Kirndeane in Liddesdale. He was a Corporal in the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Volunteers), directing some of the Liddesdale part of the troop, along with his brother Mark. Together with Robert Kerr Elliot (his nephew) he is recorded loaning money in 1805, which was repaid by James Scott in 1845. He is probably the Elliot from Kirndeane who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He was farmer at Kinrdeane listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He is still recorded at Kinrdeane in Slater's 1852 directory (even although he was deceased). In 1802 in Southdean Parish he married Helen (1776/7–1849), elder daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel. They had 5 sons and 6 daughters: Esther (c.1803–27); Robert (1805–24), Ensign in the 16th Madras Native Infantry, who died at Wallajabad in India; Thomas Scott (1806–32), who died at Lanton; Elizabeth Pringle (1808–18); Margaret (b.1809), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1810–39), who married William Boog of Sweethope; William (1811–71), the eldest surviving son, who inherited the lands of Peel from his uncle Thomas Scott (and the lands later descended to John, farmer at the Flatt in Liddesdale), taking the additional surname Scott; Helen (1813–82), who married John Elliot, tenant in Flatt; Ann Jane (1815–92), who died at Friars Mount, Jedburgh; Christian (1817–86); John (b.1819), 2nd surviving son, who inherited Riccalton from his uncle John Scott, and also took the additional surname of Scott; and Henry (b.1821–63), who farmed at Kirndeane for a while. Thomas (b.1766) younger son of William of Whithaugh. He was a doctor in Carlisle. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Eliza, daughter of Robert Batey of Hightown near Haltwhistle and their children were William (doctor in Carlisle), Robert (b.1811), Elizabeth (b.1813), Margaret (b.1814), Sophia (b.1816), Thomas (b.1817, surgeon in Carlisle) and Jane Isabella (b.1819). Thomas (b.1771) son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton. He may have been tenant in Hillhouse for a while, like his father. He died unmarried. Thomas (c.1776–1838) son of Walter, from the Henderson's Knowe branch. He had brothers Archibald and William. He was recorded as a servant at Colterscleuch on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He may be the Thomas who was a servant at 'Rige' (i.e. Caerlenrig) on the 1801 Militia ballot. He lived at Colterscheuch (where he is recorded in 1800) and Bowanhill. He married Magdalene Thomson (1776–1861). The family emigrated to the 'Scotch Settlement' in St. Lawrence County, New York in about 1815 and eventually settled in Andes, New York, where he died. His children were: Mary, who married shepherd Walter Scott in 1822; Walter (1798–1858), who lived at Niagara, Ontario; Betty (b.1800); James (1802–28); William (1809–88), who settled in Bovina; and Robert (1812–18), who died at sea. Letters have survived to him from relatives in Scotland. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married in Hobkirk in 1809, although his wife's name is not recorded. Thomas (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Harden, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. He may have been related to Robert, who was tenant farmer at Harden at the same time. Thomas (b.1791/2) born in Castleton Parish, he lived in Robertson Parish. He was a labourer living at Howcleuch in 1841. He was Land Steward at Borthwick Mains in 1851 and 1861, and still recorded there in 1868. It is possible he is the Thomas who was a labourer at Eilrig on the 1812 Militia ballot in Robertson Parish. He may have been related to Thomas who was at Borthwick Mains a few decades earlier. He married Mary Grieve and their children included: James (b.c.1815); Thomas (b.1818); Esther (b.1819); John (b.1821); Helen (b.c.1825); and William (b.c.1833). Thomas (b.c.1800) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He may be the Thomas, son of John and Janet Little born in 1799. In 1835 he was at Myredykes and in 1837–41 was listed as shepherd there. He married Anne Pott (b.c.1811) and their children included John (b.1829), Betty (b.1832) and Janet (b.1840). Thomas (19th C.) owner of property on Slitrig Crescent, marked in Wood's 1824 map at around No. 10. It is unclear who he was, since he is not listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory or the 1841 census. He could be the Thomas from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Thomas (1804/5–bef. 1861) originally from Ireland, he was a hosiery worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the High Street in Mather's Close. In 1851 he was at Lynnwood Cottages. However, in 1860 he moved to Bonchester, where he was postmaster and letter carrier for the Rule valley. He was first to introduce a spring cart to the district and would carry passengers to and from Hawick. However, the venture was not a great success and he gave up, eventually moving elsewhere. In 1824 he married Margaret Hume, from Cavers Parish. Their children included: James (b.1825), who was a merchant at the Sandbed; Elizabeth (b.1827); Mary (b.1829); Peter (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); Rev. William Hume (1837–1927), minister at Ramsbottom; John Little (1839–60); Thomas (b.1842); Michael (b.1844); George Lewis (b.1846); Michael (again, b.1849); and Betsy (1852–57). Thomas (1807–91) son of William and Jean Easton, he was farmer at Mangerton. He was recorded as shepherd at Mangerton among heads of households in 1835–41; his brother Robert was also listed as a shepherd. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at Mangerton. In 1851 he was farming 115 acres there, and employed 5 labourers. In 1852 he was listed as miller at Mangerton Mill and was listed at Mangerton in a directory of 1868. In 1838 he married Janet (1815–47), daughter of joiner John Douglas. Their children included: William (1839–1923), who died at Gattonside; Elizabeth Beattie (1841–1911); Jean Easton (1842–1910), also died at Gattonside; Helen Douglas (1844–1917), also died at Gattonside; Janet Anne (1846–97); and John (1847–1904), who worked for a bank in London and married Margaret Eliza Middleton. Thomas (1811/2–76) grocer in Newcastleton, probably son of joiner Andrew. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 14 South Hermitage Street. In 1841 he married Hannah Storey, who died in 1882, aged 61. Their children included:

Mary (b.1843); Andrew (1845–1930), who married Margaret Glendinning; Betty (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); Thomasina (b.1853); Arkle; Helen; Hannah Janet (b.1862), who died in infancy; and John James (1865/6–1944), who died in Longtown. The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (1815/6–87) son of John, who farmed at Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater, and grandson of Robert in Hermitage. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1852. In 1861 he was at Under Hindhope in Oxnam Parish. He succeeded his brother John as farmer at Nether Hindhope in Oxnam Parish. He married Elizabeth Turnbull from Redmoss. Their children included: John (1859–1918) in Hyndhope; Thomas of Attonburn, who married Jane Robson from Bellingham; James; Mary; Margaret, who married Dr. J.P. Elliot from Bellingham; Robert Turnbull of Chatto; Jean (d.1913); Elizabeth (d.1870); Susan, married A.O. Rutherford; William Scott (1876–1912); Walter of Toft (b.1878); Arthur of Hindhope (1880–1968); and George of Alnam Moor and Brockdam (1883–1933). Dr. Thomas (1817–59) son of a doctor who came from Whitehaugh in Liddesdale. He was probably born in Carlisle. He studied in Edinburgh and Paris and then took up a surgeon's practice in Carlisle, in partnership with his brother William. He became known as a pioneering ophthalmologist, who had an early understanding of how to cure strabismus (squinting). He was on the Carlisle committee for the proposed railway between Hawick and Carlisle. He died of typhus at the age of 42 and has a plaque to his memory in Carlisle Cathedral. Thomas (19th C.) wright recorded in Newcastleton in Slater's 1852 directory. It is possible he is also the Thomas listed as grocer in the same directory. Thomas (1821–69) elder son of Robert of Redheugh and Jessie Elliot. He was born in Castleton and inherited Redheugh jointly with his brother John. In 1851 (while living at Redheugh with his father) he was already listed as farmer of 90 arable plus 1200 moorland acres, and employer of 4 labourers. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He married Elizabeth Kyle and their children included: Robert, who inherited Redheugh and married Effie McGregor Corbett; and Anna Mary, who sold Redheugh in 1918. He died at Knockton, just a few days after his father. He is buried in Castleton cemetery along with his wife. Arthur (1864/5–93), who died in India and is marked on the same gravestone, was probably another son. Thomas (1825–64) younger son of Robert and Janet Black. He was a grocer in Hawick. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed on the Fore Row as a grocer and spirit dealer, and in 1851 he was also listed as a blacksmith. In 1847 he married Helen Welsh and their children included: Helen Broad (b.1848); Robert (b.1850); Janet Blake (b.1853); and an unnamed child (b.1855). He was buried in the Wellogate (although the inscription is illegible). Thomas (c.1827–89) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong (c.1819–1919), who died at Glendivan. Their children included Mary (b.1851) and probably Maggie (1866–86). He died in Langholm. Thomas Robert Barnewall 8th Laird of Harwood (1871–1924), only child of Robert Henry of Clifton Park. He succeeded his father to Clifton Park and his uncle William (7th Laird) in Harwood. He was also referred to as 'of Clifton'. He sold Harwood to William Elliot of Muir Glen in 1924. He married 3 times: firstly in 1892 to Rose, 3rd daughter and co-heir of Col. John Joicey of Newton Hall, Northumberland, and she died in 1912; secondly in 1915 Dagmar, daughter of C.E. Ahlbom of Landekrona, Sweden, and she died in 1937; and lastly in 1942 to Mrs. Helen Campbell. He had 7 children: Robert Barnewall of Clifton Park, who lived in Carmarthenshire; Liet.-Comdr. James Kerr; Thomas William Henry; Rose Adelaide Maud; Frances Eva; Lieut. Charles Edward of the K.O.S.B.; and Diana Catherine. Walter (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls as William 'Alight' or 'd'Alyth' (in Perthshire) when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It seems likely that he was a direct ancestor of the Elliots of Roxburghshire. He was imprisoned at Tonbridge Castle and his younger brother Thomas was taken to Kenilworth Castle. The family lands at that time were 'Alyth' or 'Eliot' in Perthshire, although they were probably given Redheugh and associated lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in the early 1300s. He further paid homage to Edward in 1304. In 1306 he is listed among the adherents of Bruce who forfeited lands, and it was probably in the few years following that he was granted Redheugh. There are no recorded links between him and the later Roberts of Redheugh; however, it may be that his descendants were called Robert in honour of his patron. His son Thomas is recorded as a witness to a Perthshire charter in 1304. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of owners of crofts and rigs in Selkirk in about 1529. His name appears as 'Watte Elwand' and he owned a rig at 'quhitreig'. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 when his wife Christine Robertson was involved with a transaction for lands in Bowden. Walter (17th C.) Factor and Chamberlain to Robert, Earl of Roxburghe. In 1637 and 1638 he was involved with discharges with the Treasurer of Selkirk. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wilson and their children included Elizabeth (b.1635); Janet (b.1644); Janet (again, b.1646); John (b.1648); James (b.1651); and Marion (b.1655). Walter of Arkleton (1634–1702) second son of Adam Elliot of Meikledale, his mother being a daughter of Glendinning of that Ilk. In 1669 he bought back the lands of Arkleton (from Francis Scott), which had previously belonged to the Elliots; he was described as 'indweller in Arkleton', showing that he already lived there. In 1671 he paid tax on £700 of land for Arkleton. He probably had the old tower rebuilt as a farmhouse, which contains a stone bearing the date 1676 and initials 'W.E.' and 'K.F.' (for him and his wife). He registered arms in 1676 and in 1694 documented how the estate was to be inherited after his death (excluding his eldest 2 sons). He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1670 he married Katherine, daughter of Arthur Foster of Stanegarthiside. Their children were: Adam of 'Tyneside', who married Ann Drury; Arthur of Harwood, who married Anne Disney; William of Arkleton (d.1721), who married Anne Ainslie of Jedburgh; Nichol in Unthank, who married Jane Lithgow; James, who married Miss Chambers; Walter, who died unmarried; Henry, Robert and Gilbert, who all died young; Jeanette, who married Gideon Scott (later of Falnash), brother of Walter of Harwood; Helen, who married Andrew Murray of Tundergarth by contract of 1679; and Mary, who married Robert Graham of Slipperfield. He is buried in Ewes churchyard, along with his wife and several children. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Grieve and their children included: William (b.1671); Margaret (b.1673); and Adam (b.1675). Walter (17th/18th C.) 4th son of William of Unthank. He was described being 'of Carotrig', which was Carewoodrig. He died unmarried. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was at Commonbrae in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Blackcleugh and in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for

Thomas Telfer, workman in Blackcleuch. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller of Hawick Mill. He was recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. He was 'tacksman of ye mill' in 1709 when he witnessed a baptism for undermiller Walter Riddell (along with the other undermiller, James Paterson). He was also 'tacksman if ye milne of Hawick' in 1711 and 1714 when he witnessed baptisms for Archibald Aitkin, undermiller in Hawick (with Walter Riddell as the other undermiller). He was called 'tacksman of ye milne and customer of Hawick' in 1712 when he asked the Session to find him and his family specific seats in the Church 'seeing he was burdensome to others'. It thus appears that he was tenant at Hawick Mill and also a weaver of some sort. Robert, who was 'Tacksman of the Mill and Lands of Hawick' around 1720 was probably his son. Walter of Ormiston (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood. He witnessed his brother's marriage in 1700 and a bond by his brother in 1703. The connection with Ormiston is confusing, since it was probably his son Walter who acquired Ormiston from the Gledstains of Cocklaw. He is said to have married the 1st daughter of Andrew Kerr of Lindean (whose first name is not recorded); however, this may be confusion with later family connections with Currer descendants of Kerr of Lindean and Whitmuir. They are said to have had 4 sons, all of whom died without a male successor. However, it seems likely that he was succeeded by another Walter, who was one of the founders of carpet-making in Hawick. Walter (17th/18th C.) Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick. He is often referred to in Parish records as simply 'Bailie', but held the office of the representative of the Baron, rather than Magistrate of the Town. He is recorded as 'Bailie, substitute of Gideon Scott of Falnash' in 1700/1 when he presided over a criminal court in Hawick, banishing an offender (who had been in irons for 10 days) from the town. He was 'bailie of the regaility of Hawick' in 1703 when he witnessed a baptim for miller Robert Deans. He is recorded as 'bailie' when he witnessed a baptism for Bailie Robert Ruecastle in 1705, for wright John Pringle, for miller Walter Riddell (along with miller James Paterson) and for wright John Dagleish (along with Gideon Scott of Falnash) in 1707, for glover John Scott and for shoemaker John Scott in 1708 and for weaver Alexander Hislop in 1710. In 1709 he was 'bailie deput of the regalitie' when he witnessed a baptism for schoolmaster John Purdom and also 'bailiff' when he witnessed baptisms for wigmaker John Scott, for

Henry Orrock and for tailor John Scott. He was also 'Bailie' when he witnessed baptisms in 1709 for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for John Scott 'Whitegate', in 1711 for Walter Stoddart (herd in Harwood), in 1712 for John Wilson in Braxholme Town, in 1713 for his namesake the merchant Walter Elliot and in 1714 for candlemaker John Scott, for Bailie George Martin, for John Aitkin in Allanhaugh, for cooper John Turnbull and for Andrew Waugh. He was 'bailie of ye Regalitie' in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto. He witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert in 1717. He is described as 'bailie-deput of the regality of Hawick' in 1718, when he witnessed a baptism for merchant William Dickson and also when his servant John Turnbull was rebuked by the Hawick Parish Session. By 1721 he was 'late Baillie Depute of the Regalitie' (probably meaning he had given up the office, rather than being deceased) when he was recorded having provided 'as much oak as was ane axtree to the great church bell in the year 1718' (i.e. the axle for the bell). He may be the same as one of the other Walters. He married Marie Lindsay, and their son Francis was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1701; he was there described as 'bailie', with the witnesses being Francis Elliot 'in Hawick' and James Ogilvie. He may also be the merchant in Hawick whose son Gideon was baptised in 1700, with witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash (after whom the child may have been named) and Bailie Walter Graham. Walter (d.1741) son of Henry of Peel. He was a naval surgeon on H.M.S. Wager, which shipwrecked off Patagonia. This event became infamous because of what followed, with the survivors marooned on an island in the southern winter. There was a mutiny and the crew split into groups. Walter was among officers who were set adrift before regrouping with some of the men and trying to row up the coast of Chile. After suffering several mishaps and enduring horrendous weather Walter became ill and was ashore with 4 officers when the 6 other men rowed off in the boat, never to be seen again. He died of starvation, while the others traded their last possession, a musket, and were taken in a canoe and were imprisoned by the Spanish, eventually to return to Britain. John Byron (later Vice-Admiral and grandfather of the poet Lord Byron) wrote 'he died the death many others had done before him, being quite starved. We scraped a hole for him in the sand and buried him in the best manner we could'. Walter (17th/18th C.) farmer in Brugh. He was 3rd son of William in Whitehaugh and Braidlie (who repurchased Redheugh) and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. It is unclear whether he farmed at Brugh or if the appellation was just to distinguish him from other Walters. The name of his wife is not recorded. He had 7 children (the order of births being unknown): John, farmer at Adderstoneshiel, who married Helen Moffat from Garvald; Robert (b.c.1700), who married Elizabeth Scott from Doorpool, and whose children lived in Hawick; Adam in Hartside, who married Mary Pott; George, who lived in Cuba; Helen, who in 1727 in Hawick Parish married James Gray, tenant in Whitlaw; William (b.1710) who was a cooper and married Hannah Scott; and Gilbert (b.1725) who was tenant in Blackburnfoot and married Betty Forbes. William was baptised in Kirkton Parish and Gilbert in Cavers. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Bessie Scott in 1712. Their children included: Janet (b.1713); Archibald (b.1715); John (b.1717); Margaret (b.1719); Jean (b.1724); Marie (b.1726); Bessie (b.1728); and Agnes (b.1730). The witnesses in 1713 were Bailie Walter Elliot (who was therefore clearly a different man, but perhaps related to him) and Francis Elliot, in 1717 were candlemaker John Scott and glover John Scott (one of whom may have been related to his wife), and in 1728 were Bailie (probably Robert) Ruecastle and Francis Ruecastle. Walter (1702–bef. 21) only son of Adam of Teindside and grandson of Walter of Arkleton. He was baptised in Hawick Parish. He died before marrying and was succeeded by his sister Katherine. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1726 when his son James was baptised. There are several other children baptised in the parish who could be his. Walter of Ormiston (d.1777) probably son of Walter, he was one of the founders of carpet manufacturing in Hawick. He (or perhaps his father) obtained Ormiston after 1734, when the last of the Gledstains of Cocklaw died, and he proceeded to build a mansion house there in 1747. Before that he was tenant in Bellendean and Braidhaugh. He was in Bellendean in 1736 and 1741 when two of his children was baptised in Robertson Parish. He is probably the Walter, tenant in Bellendean, who was recorded as brother of Isobel, when she married Walter Turnbull of Firth in 1738. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1766 he wrote to the Duke of Buccleuch, in response to a suggestion that a woollen factory be developed on one of the Duke's estates, proposing that Hawick would be the perfect place. He formed a partnership with others in 1769 (perhaps earlier), constituting the main Hawick carpet factory. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. In 1735 in Robertson he married Margaret (b.1716), daughter of George Curren of Hartwoodburn. Their children (mostly baptised in Robertson) included: James (1736–1782), who inherited Clerklands; Andrew (b.1739); Simon (b.1741); Walter (1744–80), who died at Bellen-dean; and Helen (b.1747), who married Thomas Curren (perhaps a cousin), Bailie of Selkirk. The first 3 children were baptised at Bellendean and the last 2 at Braidhaugh (in Cavers Parish). The death of his daughter Janet is recorded in Hawick in 1804. He secondly married Isobel or 'Tibbie', (probably youngest, b.1708) daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae, and she died in 1797 (being referred to as 'Mrs. Elliot of Ormiston or Isobel Elliot of Borthbrae'. 'Mrs Elliot of Ormiston in Hawick', who paid the female servant tax in 1789 and 1791, was probably his wife. Walter (18th C.) married Isobel Hogg in 1750, both being from Wilton Parish. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Southdeanrig in 1757. His children included John (b.1757). He was probably related to William, who was at Southdeanrig at about the same time. Walter (b.1731) son of William from Robertson and Bessie Scott from Wilton. He was a resident of Wilton Parish. His children were born at Alton, 'Moortown' (probably Moorfarm or Muirfield) and Wester Groundistone. In 1758 he married Helen (or Elinor or Nelly) Robertson (or perhaps Robison) in Ashkirk Parish. Their children include: Elizabeth (b.1759); Elspeth (b.1761); Janet (b.1765); Violet (b.1773); Nelly (b.1776) and Mary (b.1779). John (b.1771), baptised in Robertson, son to Walter in Mabonlaw, may also have been his child. He may also be father of William (b.1767), also baptised in Robertson, son of Walter at Whithope. Walter (18th C.) farmer at Henderson's Knowe, near Teviothead, where he is recorded in 1778. He married Isabel Grieve and their children included: Thomas (b.1776), farmer at Colterscleuch and Bowenhill; Christian (b.1778); William (b.1780), miller; Margaret (b.1783); John (b.1788), who emigrated to New York State; and Archibald. Walter (18th/19th C.) cooper at Dinlabyre. He is probably the farmer at Dinlabyre, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John is recorded separately as farmer

there (and with more horses), and so presumably a near relative. He married Isabel Douglas and their children included: Christian (b.1777); Adam (b.1779); John (b.1781); Adam (b.1790); and probably Catherine, Margaret, Henry, Elizabeth and Walter. He may be the son of Adam in Hartside born in 1762 (but that would make him too young to have married by 1777). Walter (1753/4–97) younger son of Robert in Hermitage and brother of John. He was probably tenant at Hermitage and also at Millburnholm. He was at Millburnholm in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is probably the Walter listed as a farmer at Hermitage on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; he owned 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Helen Crozier (c.1767–1851) from Brighthouse. Their children were: Robert (1791–1858), who married Mary Murray from Whisgills and farmed at Hermitage; Jean (1792/3–1872), who married Henry Elliot from Colterscleuch; John (1795/6–1834) in Templehall; and Helen (b.1797/8), who married Walter Scott, from Newton near Hawick. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1783 he married Janet Blaikie, who was from Wilton Parish. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1785. Walter (1762–1827) shoemaker of the Cross Wynd, son of Robert and Isobel Scott. He married Margaret (or 'Peggy') Oliver in Kirkton Parish in 1802. Their daughters were Margaret (b.1803) and Isobel (b.1805), of whom Adam Brown painted miniature portraits, as well as Janet (b.1807). He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. His wife Margaret carried on the business and is listed in the 1837 directory. Lt.-Col. Walter of Old Melrose (1766–1809) christened in Robertson, he was a younger son of John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He became Lieutenant Colonel in the 22nd Regiment of Foot (the same rank reached by his elder brother William, who changed his surname to Lockhart). He was recorded among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. In 1788 he was already listed as owner of Old Melrose. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (when already deceased). He was still listed in 1811 as owner of Old Melrose. He died unmarried. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Jane Haig. Their children included: Christian (b.1793); Robert (b.1795); Mary (b.1797); Adam (b.1800); Margaret (b.1802); Walter (b.1804); William (b.1806); and Christian (again, b.1811). Some of these baptisms did not include the wife's name, but seem likely to be the same family. It is possible that Jean, born to Walter and Jean 'Harg' in Ashkirk Parish in 1789 was also their child. Walter (b.1772) son of Thomas and Helen Douglas. He was recorded as a mason at 'Brough Shankfoot' on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. His brother James was also on the list. He was a mason at the same place in 1801, along with James and Robert (probably another brother). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1818 he married Euphemia, daughter of James Laidlaw and Margaret Scott from Hobkirk Parish. They had 3 daughters and 1 son: Anne; James; Janet; and Margaret, who married James Kennedy and had 11 children. He was deceased by 1841, when his wife is listed as a seamstress at Mill Bank along with his daughter Janet. Walter (b.1787) probably son of James and Helen Elliot. In 1851 he was living at 'Dinleahaugh' (i.e. Dinleyhaughfoot). He married Janet Dinwoodie (b.1801), from Dumfriesshire. Their children (some of whom were born in Langholm Parish) included: Walter (b.1833); William (b.1835); James (b.1836); and John (b.1838). Walter (18th/19th C.) toll-keeper in Newcastleton listed among heads of households in 1835. He may be the same as the shepherd at Castleton Townfoot in 1836 and 1837, farmer at Greenholm in 1838 and 1840, and labourer in Newcastleton in 1841. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as a flesher in Denholm in 1837. Sir Walter 4th Laird of Wolfelee (1803–87), collector, Indian archaeologist, naturalist and sportsman. Born at Stewartfield (also known as Hartrigge) and baptised in both Southdean and Edinburgh, he was eldest surviving son of James, the 3rd Laird. He spent his early life at Hartrigge near Jedburgh and was educated at home by a tutor, then at a school near Doncaster. He received a position with the East India Company at the age of 15 spending 2 years at their Haileybury School in Berkshire and then another 2 years in the college of Fort St. George in Madras, where he developed a proficiency in Tamil and Hindustani. He had an illustrious career in the Indian Civil Service 1821–60, working with the Board of Revenue and as private secretary to Lord Elphinstone. He was later Vice-Chancellor of Madras University and a Member of the Council of the Governor of Madras, briefly serving as Provisional Governor. Early in his career he was captured during an uprising at Mahratta, and was imprisoned for 6 weeks. He was a keen sportsman (i.e. hunter), being involved in many hunting trips, some described in Col. Walter Campbell's book 'My Indian Journal'. He was an early contributor to the 'Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal' and helped establish the 'Madras Journal of Literature and Science'. In 1833 he travelled through the Middle East with Robert Pringle of Yair and others, being present at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre when about 500 pilgrims were crushed to death on Good Friday. In 1837 he was appointed private secretary to Lord Elphinstone (a distant cousin), Governor of Madras. He eventually rose to become a Member of the Council of Madras, which was the highest position a civilian could attain. He studied various historical and archaeological sites and became the leading authority on antiquarian subjects in southern India. He was responsible for rescuing the Amaravathi Marbles (now in the British Museum), compiled a history of the coins of southern India, donated his Indian coin collection to the British Museum and wrote an important work of ethnobotany 'Flora Andhirica' (1859). His hunting trophies from India were fixed around the entrance hall and staircase at Wolfelee. He only succeeded to the estates at the age of 52, and appointed William Oliver of Langraw as factor. In 1860 he returned permanently from India and retired to the family home at Wolfelee, where he had the House altered and extended and immersed himself in natural history and other projects. He was a Vice-President of the Archaeological Society. He donated several items to the Museum, including the bronze horde found near the summit of Ruberslaw in 1863. His collections have been the focus of an exhibit in the Museum, these included stuffed animals, Indian weapons and coins, and he also owned several Raeburn paintings. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1861. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1862. He also served as a Justice of the Peace, Commissioner of Supply and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire, as well as Deputy-Lieutenant for the county. He was heavily involved with the construction of the new Hobkirk Kirk in 1863, and was said to have an 'unwavering belief in the truths of Christianity'. In 1867 he contributed a sketch of the history of 'Denholm and its Vicinity' to the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club. In 1868 he also gave land for the erection of a new Wolfelee Free Kirk. In 1871 he published a call for cooperation among regional societies of naturalists. He was listed as owner of Wolfelee on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. By 1875 he also owned part of Kirknowe, Wester Swanshiel and half of Langraw. He was also on the committee for the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He was knighted (as a Knight Commander of the Star of India) in 1866, was a Fellow of the Royal Society, as well as several other learned societies and was awarded an Honorary Doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1878. In 1885 he published a final volume of 'Coins of Southern India', revising the proofs by ear, since he was quite blind by then. His study of the song 'Rattling, Roaring Willie' was published in 1886. In 1839 (in Malta) he married Maria Dorothea (1816–90), daughter of Sir David Hunter-Blair of Blairquhan (granddaughter of Sir James Hunter-Blair, Provost of Edinburgh). They had 6 children: James Thomas Spencer (1845–92), who succeeded; Walter Blair (1847–1869), Navy Lieutenant, who died at sea; Edward Hay Mackenzie (1852–1920), who succeeded his brother; Dorothea Helen, who in 1866 married William Elliott-Lockhart, 6th Laird of Borthwickbrae; Herman F., who served with the Black Watch and died childless in Mauritius; and Caroline Elizabeth, who married his cousin Arthur von Poelnitz. Lady Elliot was known as an outspoken woman, who shared in some of her husband's interests and made Wolfelee an open house for visitors to the district. Sir Walter became blind in old age, but retained his memory to the end, which came suddenly. He is buried in the kirkyard at Chesters and a memorial plaque was placed in hobbkirk Kirk. His collection of the coins of Southern India was gifted to the British Museum. A limited-edition book 'Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee: A Sketch of his Life and a few Extracts from his Notebooks' was written by Robert Sewell in 1896. Walter F. (1804–74) son of John, he was born in Hobbkirk Parish and was a joiner in Chesters. In 1841 he is recorded as farmer at Abbotrule and in 1851 as joiner at 'Abbotrule (penticle)'. In 1827 in Hobbkirk Parish he married Margaret (1803–80), daughter of George Minto. Their children included: Helen (1828–1915); John (1830–1910); George (b.1831); William (b.1835); James (b.1837); Walter Henry (b.1841); Robert Henderson (b.1843); and Margaret (b.1849). He emigrated to the U.S.A. with his family in 1852, joining his brother John, who had gone out about a decade earlier. They settled in Otsego County, New York. Walter (b.1811) son of John and Margaret Forrest, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was a quarryman at Stichehill Quarry. In 1861 he was listed as a blind quarryman, living with his mother on South Hermitage Street.

Walter (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Lairhope in Teviothead Parish in 1851 and 1861. In 1881 and 1891 he was a shepherd living at Singdean. He married Elizabeth (or 'Eliza', b.1819/20) Elliot and their children included: William (b.1843); Jane (b.1845); Thomas (b.1847); Walter (b.1850); James (b.1853), also a shepherd; Margaret (b.1856); Jane (b.1858); and Elizabeth Turnbull ('Betsy', b.1862). Walter (1828–93) son of Robert and Mary Murray. He was farmer at Hermitage in 1861, having taken over from his father. In 1861 he was living there with his sister Mary, a domestic servant and 3 farm workers. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1866. In 1864 he married Agnes, daughter of John Armstrong and Janet Glendinning. Their children were: Robert (b.1865), who also farmed at Hermitage; Mary Murray (b.1867), who married John G. Wilson, manufacturer in Hawick; Janet Glendinning (b.1869), who died aged 14; and Ellen (b.1873), who married Archibald R. Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre. Walter (1840–99) son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. He was recorded as farmer at Twislehope in 1868. He married Anne Brown and their children were: Andrew (b.1874); James (b.1876); Eliza (b.1878), who married Thomas Potts; Elizabeth Jane (b.1880), who married Christopher Hether and Archibald Bridges; John (b.1881), married Anne Gwilliam; Anne (b.1883), married William Broatch; Sarah (b.1885), married Edmund Harvey Thompson and lived in Galt, Ontario; Walter (b.1887), married Gertrude Gwilliam; Agnes (b.1889), married Dennis Rivers Le Deau; Janet, died in infancy; and David (1898–1918), killed in action in France. In 1905, after his death, most of his family emigrated to Canada. Walter Nichol (1846–82) son of William and Christian Crozier, he was born in Liddesdale Parish. He married Mary Cowan, who died at the Golf House, Hawick in 1933, aged 85. Their daughter Jane Tait died in Hawick in 1892, aged 21. He himself died at Millburn. Walter Blair (1847–69) 2nd son of Sir Walter of Wolfelee. He was born in Madras, served in the Royal Navy, became a Lieutenant and died of yellow fever on H.M.S. Racoon. Walter (b.1850) son of Walter, shepherd at Singdean. In 1876 he is recorded winning the steeplechase at Jedburgh Games, running barefoot. Walter (b.1851) eldest son of Thomas in Blackhaugh and descended from the Elliots of Newhall. He worked as a factor in Argyll, but in 1896 purchased Kirn-dean in Liddesdale. Later he also bought Walterhead of Dryfe in Dumfriesshire and was tenant at Glenries. His children were Mary, William (who became tenant of Middletown, Stow), Thomas and Walter. Walter of Harwood (1888–1958) son of auctioneer and farmer, William, he was born in Lanark. He was descended from the Elliots of Newhall, and hence Horsleyhill. His father purchased the estate of Harwood. He studied medicine at Glasgow University, and served with the Scots Greys during WWI, being decorated with the Military Cross and Bar. Early on he developed a centrist stance in politics, as well as an interest in science. He became a Conservative M.P. for Lanark, Kelvingrove, Scottish Universities and Kelvinside again, being Secretary of State for Scotland, Minister of Health, Minister of Agriculture, Financial Secretary to the Treasury and Privy Councillor. He was Rector of Aberdeen and Glasgow Universities, Lord High Commissioner to the Assembly of the Church of Scotland, elected a Fellow of the Royal Society and made a Companion of Honour. He was also made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1933 and also made a Freeman of Edinburgh and Lanark. Late in life he settled in the estate at Harwood that his father had purchased. He suffered a terrible accident at Hawick Station in 1943, trying to catch a moving train on an icy morning, when he fell between the platform and the carriage, breaking his pelvis and other bones. It took him most of the year to recover from his injuries. In 1956 he was appointed Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was described as ‘a big man physically and he was a big man in his mental range and in scholarship and courage ... a Borderer to the very marrow of his bones’. In 1919 he married Helen, daughter of Lt.-Col. Hamilton, but this ended with a tragic accident on the Isle of Skye during their honeymoon. In 1934 he remarried, to Katherine, daughter of Sir Charles Tennant of Peeblesshire, who became Baroness Elliot of Harwood in 1958. He died suddenly and is buried in Hobkirk churchyard. Walter (1934–) Selkirk-based poet and historian. He spent his early life in the Ettrick valley, served in the K.O.S.B., then worked as a fencer and wood-cutter, before a fractured skull led him to change career to being a museum assistant, performer and writer. His books include Clash-ma-clavers chap book (1985), Song for Yarrow (1991) and the series of guide-books ‘Ballads Trail’ (2000), ‘James Hogg Trail’ (2000) and ‘Sir Walter Scott

Trail’ (2000), as well as in ‘Jorum: six poets in Border Scots’ (2000). William (13th/14th C.) Burgess of Perth who signed the Ragman’s Rolls in 1296. His name is recorded as ‘William Alight’. Since there is a strong suggestion that the Border Elliots came via the Perth and Angus areas, it seems possible that he was the direct ancestor of the first Laird of Redheugh, perhaps given lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in the early 14th century. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘Eliot of Upton in ye Clay’ in an English document of 1333. His son Hugh was pardoned by Edward III on account of his service at the siege of Berwick. William ‘One-Eyed’ (14th C.) recorded in Cumberland in 1389, appearing before the justices of gaol delivery. His nickname was recorded as ‘monoculus’ and his surname as ‘Elwald’, the same as Richard ‘parvus’. William of Gorrenberry (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willielmo Elwaldo’ in 1484 when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infest Robert of Redheugh in the lands of Larriston. In 1489 he was one of the men further directed to infest Robert of Redheugh in other lands, there recorded as ‘Wilielmo elwad de gouinbery’. He may also be the William who was witness (along with Ninian, Robert, John and Andrew ‘Elwald’ and others) to a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh in 1497. He was probably closely related to the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston, as were the later Elliots of Gorrenberry. However, it has also been suggested that this branch of the family was one of the ‘twelve great families’ of Elliots who came to Liddesdale in the 14th century. William (15th C.) recorded in the records of the Justice-aire held at Jedburgh in 1493. Hector Lauder was allowed to ‘componer’ for several crimes, including associating with him and ‘alias fures de branxholme’ (i.e. other thieves of Branxholme). In 1494/5 John and Thomas Liddersdale in Hawick were allowed to ‘componer’ for aiding the ‘elwaldis de branxholme’ in their crimes. It thus appears that there was a branch of the Elliots living near Branxholme at that time, although it is unclear how they might have been related to other Elliots. Perhaps the same William ‘elwald’ was recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 when John Hervey in Fairnilee had remission for crimes that included resetting him and Robert Heiton. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmi elwald’ in 1494/5 when he failed to appear along with 85 other Elliots, Armstrongs, Wighholms, Croziers and others. This resulted in fines for the Lord of Liddesdale (Patrick, Earl of Bothwell)

and the Captain of Hermitage (George Turnbull of Hallrule). His name was given first, suggesting he may have been an important member of the clan. Ralph, listed as brother of William in 1494/5 may have been his brother. Perhaps the same William was also described as 'Wilzam Elwald', son-in-law of George Armstrong in a document of 1500, listing pledges of good behaviour made to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. Several other men of the same name are mentioned in that document, e.g. William and David, sons of William (who may have been his sons, but without further designation it is impossible to say). William (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5 to answer for their crimes. It is unclear which William was his father, but David (also son of William) was probably his brother. William 'Siders' (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed as 'Willelmi elwald syders'. He is also recorded in the 1498 pledge to Patrick Earl of Bothwell, along with many other Elliots, Armstrongs and others. He is listed there as 'Wilzam Elwald, Siders'; the designation is possibly the same as 'Side'. William (15th/16th C.) listed in 1501/2 as 'William Elwalh his follower' when Andrew Kerr of Fernihirst received the lands of Feu-Rule from their superior, Sir William Douglas of Cavers. He may have been acting as Kerr's Bailie. He may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Willemno elwald de lahope' in 1502 when he was surety for Gilbert. His lands may have been Langhope (or perhaps Ladhope or Lawhope or somewhere else). Probably the same William was accused in 1502, along with James Foster, of stealing a horse from David Brown, out of Edinburgh, with William Turnbull 'de lahope' as surety. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th/16th C.) brother of Robert. In 1502 he was surety for his brother Robert, who was convicted of stealing 5 cows from John Spedding out of Blackhaugh. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'in Ramsigill' in a list of Elliots and others given respite for their crimes in 1510. Since Robert of Redheugh is listed with only a small number of other Elliots, this might suggest he was closely related to the chief, as well as to Robert of Dinlees and John in Sundhope. He may be the same William 'in Rammilgill' recorded as a tenant of Whitrope in 1541; the other tenants were Leon, John and Robert. He must have been related to Robert who was also 'in Rammisgill' in 1541. William of Larriston (15th/16th C.) second son of Robert of Redheugh, 11th Chief, recorded in 1511. He is listed as brother of Robert of Redheugh in a 'respite' given in 1515/6. In 1516 he had a further respite in the Register of the Privy Seal, where he is 'William Elwald of Larestanis'. A number of other Elliots are also listed, specifically those at Mosspatrick, Dinlees, Thorlieshope, Sundhope and Heuchhouse and 'Bagget', and others bound to them, including men by the name of Forester, Thomson, Gledstains, Turner, 'Leche', Atkinson, Caverhill, Rowill (presumably Rule), Lawson, Wilson, White, Telfer, Nixon, Henderson, Simpson, Hunter, Davidson, 'Billop' (i.e. Billhope), Warwick, Dickson, Noble, Burn and 'Purdoun' (Purdom). He was probably serving as chief of the Elliots in 1516, since Robert of Redheugh (his nephew perhaps) had been killed at Flodden, and the next in line Robert was probably still a minor. He probably led the clan during the minority of the next Robert of Redheugh (probably his grand-nephew). He may be the William of Larriston who is recorded in 1547, along with William 'younger' (so presumably his son). He is said to have married the heiress of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and to have had one son, whose son was Gavin, the first Elliot of Horsleyhill (if this was not William, then perhaps he had another son). He may be the Elliot of Larriston whose daughter married Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'William Elwald in M^cPatrick' in a 'respite' of 1516 to William of Larriston and a large number of neighbouring Elliots and others. He may be related to the William in Mosspatrick recorded in 1541. William (15th/16th C.) listed in a 1516 'respite' to William of Larriston and several other Elliots of Liddesdale. He appears as being 'in Heuchous', this probably being Heuchhouse near Dinlabyre. The later Martin of Heuchhouse is surely his descendant. William (16th C.) witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1528, along with Thomas. Perhaps the same William is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535, along with Percival (probably a relative), Andrew 'Louche', Patrick Gourlay and others, accused of taking grain from 'le Schaw' belonging to John Hall. They claimed that Hall reaped grain that they had sown themselves. He may also be the William who promised to pay James Dunlop for his butter in 1544. In 1544/5 he had a bond to return an Englishman to his captors, Walter Scott of Branhholme and 'Perse Elwand'. He may also be the William who purchased a half tenement from Alison Turnbull in 1545. William (16th C.) son of Alexander. He was a servant to the Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton, listed along with a large number of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on Craik. 'Law's John' was also listed, and so possibly a relative. William 'Mend the caill' (16th C.) named along with Robert 'de Flaswod' in a trial in Jedburgh in 1535. Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused of assisting them in stealing 5 cows from 'Corsle' (probably Corslie on the Gala Water) from John Veitch. They were probably among the thieves of Liddesdale who it is claimed that Scott brought to attack Midlem and other places. His nickname may refer to the vegetable 'kale'. William (16th C.) recorded in 1537/8 as being 'in Layheuch' (i.e. Leahaugh) along with brothers James and Simon. They were entered by Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald for breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk and stealing 100 merks worth of cloth, hides, etc. They were also bound not to harm Thomas Graham or his friends and servants in the future. He was presumably related somehow to the Redheugh branch. William (16th C.) referred to as 'Williame Elliot callit Bruk' in 1540/1 when he had respite for treasonable acts, including not being at the Solway raid and associating with the Douglasses. One possibility is that his name is associated with 'Brugh'. William (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1540/1 when he was given respite for being at the horn. He had been tried in Kelso, but since then had found surety. It is unclear where he was from. William (16th C.) tenant of MossPatrick recorded in the rental roll of Liddesdale in 1541. Williams with no designation are also listed as tenants of several other farms, including 'Pantodene', Singdean, Heuchhouse and the small steadings of Clearlands, etc. It is unclear if some of these were the same men. He was probably related to the William recorded in MossPatrick in 1516. William 'Cock' (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Willie 'White Sark' and Clement Crozier, accused of having killed Englishman Robert Hall at 'Tredermayn'. His name is listed as 'Wilkoke Elwald', which seems likely to be a combination of his forename and nickname. The same 'Wilcokes Elwald' was listed along with Clem Crozier and Robin of Thorlieshope, accused in 1541 of resetting English fugitive Robsons. He may have been related to 'Cock' Crozier and it seems likely he was father of 'Wilcokis Hob' recorded in 1569, as well as 'Wilcox' Gawen Elliott recorded in 1587/8. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William 'White Sark' (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with 'Wilkoke' and Clement Crozier. They were accused of having raided 'Tredermayn' and killed Englishman Robert Hall. His name is given as 'Willy Elwald called 'whitsarke'. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of 'Lyndene' in the Barony of Bowden, along with other 'Elwalds'. William (16th C.) listed in 1544 as 'William Elwode John Crossier sister sone', when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. The John mentioned here, who was presumably his mother's brother, was a prominent member of the Crozier family at that time, possibly the son of 'Cock Crozier', who seemed to be chief of the Slitrig valley branch of the family a generation earlier. William (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. William of Larriston (16th C.) recorded as 'Ellot of Larestanis' in 1556 when he had a bond for entering William Nixon to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He may have been the son of the previous William of Larriston, and the 'younger' mentioned along with William of Larriston in 1547. He is probably the 'yowng Wylliam Elwand' involved with a bond to enter some Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst in 1546; however, his bother Simon was witness on his behalf. He also (along with Robert of Redheugh and Archibald) had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner in 1548; he signed with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He may be the 'Williame Elliot, callit young Williame' listed (after Robert of Redheugh) in 1561 among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He is surely the 'William Elliot of Lamestone' recorded in part of the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean in 1565, along with Gavin of Horsleyhill and William of Falnash. For his non-appearance John Douglas of Cavers and William Douglas of the Crook were fined and he was denounced as a rebel. However, he may be confused with William of Braidlie, who was also described as being

'of Larriston'. William 'Elder Will', 'the Tod' (d.bef. 1586) recorded in 1561/2 in a bond between Elliots and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst to enter a Routledge. The other Elliots were Archie in Falnash, Archie's son Gavin, and John of Copshaw (all of whom may have been relatives). He is also recorded in 1567 when his son John was captured in Hawick for being a Liddesdale thief. In 1569 he was 'elder Will Elliot' when he was pledge 'for himself and his haill branche', with Alexander Home of Manderston as his surety. Also in 1569 he was 'Elder Will the Tod' when held in Blackness Castle as pledge for his eldest son and also 'David Carling his brother'. In 1570 he was among a group of Elliots who signed a bond related to the release from ward of his son Hob, as well as John of Heuchhouse. There was surety for one of his sons (name not given) in 1577, according to the register of the Privy Council. He may be the 'Will Elliot, callit the Eldar Tod' whose son John is recorded in pledges in 1578 and 1580. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Laids who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He had been among the sureties for an earlier assurance for his son Hobbie, as well as John of the Heuchhouse. He is also recorded in 1580/1 when his son John was convicted of rieving. In 1581 he was 'Will Elliott, called Elder Will', among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. His sons David and Martin signed the bond of assurance to the English Wardens, taking 'the burden upon us for ourselves, brethren, and brethren bainres and servants. He is probably the 'Willie the Tod' from Liddesdale who was already deceased in 1586 when his son William was granted a lease of the lands of 'Culgatis'. He may be the Will of Heuchhouse accused along with Martin's Archie in 1590, of stealing from 'Haldiden' and additionally he was named among Elliots, Nixons, Shiels and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them; however, these are probably his son William. The Will of Heuchhouse accused (along with Rich and others) accused of raiding into England in 1595 may have been his son William. William 'Wedder-Neck' (d.1561) hanged in 1561 for the crimes of theft and reset, along with Peter Turnbull ('the Monk') and Henry Black in Softlaw. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. His name is recorded as 'Will Elliot, callit Woddir-nek'. William 'Will' (16th C.) listed in 1563/4 along with George in Adderstoneshiel, Alexander and 2 Croziers. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. His name is recorded as 'Will Elliot of the Burnmouthis', which seems likely to have been Burnmouth near Saughtree (although perhaps there was another place of the same name in the Slitrig valley, where the Gledstains' lands were). William (16th C.) listed as 'bastard sone to vmgle Robert Elliot' in the 1564 trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean, along with Elliots of Horsleyhill and others. His father may have been Robert, 15th of Redheugh. He may be the 'William Elliot of the Redhughe' who was among several Elliots accused by the English in 1581 of stealing cattle and goods from 'Symwhaite'. He may also be the William, brother of 'Robin Elliot' accused of raiding Englishman Andrew Taylor's livestock and goods in 1582. William (d.1580) 5th Laird of Horsleyhill, he was the 2nd son of Gavin, the 1st Laird. He is presumably the William, along with his father Gavin and brothers Andrew and Robert, accused of murdering Hugh Douglas in about 1547. In the late 1550s he was involved in the family dispute over the lands of Newbigging in Hassendean and in 1563 was arguing with John Scott in Catslack. He is probably the William of Horsleyhill who witnessed a bond in 1561/2 between several Elliots and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. He is probably the William of Horsleyhill recorded in the Register of the Privy Council in 1563/4, along with his brother Robert, in a case involving the Scotts of Tushielaw stealing cattle from Bailielee; their cautioner was John Preston, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1564 he was listed as 'fadir bruther and tutour' to Gavin, son of the deceased Robert of Horsleyhill; this was in connection to the complaint by John Turnbull of Hassendean against Dand (who was also his brother). In 1564 it was presumably he (although the Lairdship around this time seems hard to follow) who was found guilty of involvement in the murder of David Scott of Hassendean; also involved were Robert, Gavin and Archibald, who were probably his brothers. He was banished after this, but was pardoned in 1565 by Queen Mary (perhaps because of his marriage to a Kerr). He purchased the lands of Horsleyhill from his nephew William, initially in 1568 for a period of 15 years, finally buying them outright from William's wife Margaret Turnbull in 1570/1. In 1569 he also bought the Middle Mains of Hassendean from his nephew. In 1572/3 he promised the Regent that his family, servants and tenants would continue to be obedient subjects, with Thomas Weir of Kirkton as cautioner (it is unclear what events this was in response to). In 1574/5 he was involved in a court case where Scott of Buccleuch claimed some lands; he was able to prove that he was infested in Westerhouses, Clarilaw and Hassendeanburn, but his superior, William Douglas of Cavers, was instructed to remove him from the lands of Catslack. In 1575 he was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council to settle the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles; his brother Gavin was also summoned. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding 'mails' for his steading of Easter Montbenger. He may be the William 'of Torslyhill' (if this is an error for 'Horsleyhill') on Monipennie's c.1597 (but drawn up earlier) list of Border Lairds. He married Elizabeth Kerr sometime before 1556, and secondly in 1569 married Elizabeth, daughter of James Douglas of Cavers. He had at least 2 children: Robert, who succeeded; and William of Caveling, (b.1572), Burgess of Peebles, who married Christian Chisholme. James in Peebles may have been another son. William 'Will' (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. His name is recorded as 'Wille Ellot' and he may have been related to Dand, Jock and Hob, other Elliots also listed as tenants. William 'Ringan's Will' (16th C.) mentioned in 1579 when his son 'Archie Ellot, sone to Ringhanis Will the portar' was among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell. He is separately recorded in 1579 as 'Ringanis Will Ellot the portar in Glenvoran'. He may have been related to Ninian, tenant in Ewesdoors and Glenvoran (with Will, son of Ringan the Porter also named in the same citation). Possibly the same 'Ringanis Wille Ellot' was listed in 1611 for not appearing at court in Jedburgh. William 'Grey Will' (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when John of the Park was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for him and 'Hob Mirk Ellot'. He was listed in 1574 among Scotsmen who were reset in England. His name there is given as 'Will Elliott, called Gray Will'. He is also listed in 1583 among the Elliots of the Park branch. His name is given as 'Will Ellot, gray Wille'. He is probably father of 'Grey Will's Jamie', who is also listed. He is 'Gray Will' when listed along with Jock of the Park in a list of Borderers in the 1580s. William (16th C.) recorded in Lindean in 1580/1 when he had a marriage contract with Helen, daughter of Robert Fletcher, witnessed in Selkirk. William 'Jock's Willie' (16th C.) listed in 1578 among Border Lairds who promised to meet to suppress lawlessness on the Border, after being released from being warded with George Ramsay of Dalhousie. He was also warded with George Ramsay of Dalhousie in 1580, when ordered to be presented to the Privy Council. He was recorded in 1581 when he was released from being warded as pledge for the 'gang' of Elliots of Burnhead. Hob, brother of Gavin's Hob (this may be an error for Gavin's Jock) of Ramsiegill remained as pledge for these Elliots. Also in 1581 he was 'Will Elliott, called Jokkis Willie, pledge for the hail gang of Rampsygill'. He was also recorded in 1582/3, when Martin of Braidlie, Gavin's Jock and Robert Kerr of Ancrum were fined by the Privy Council for his non-appearance, along with 'Ill Hob'. He was 'plege for the hail gang of Ramsygill, quha wer ressavit be thame out of ward of the tolbuith of Edinburgh'. 'Ill Hob' of Ramsiegill was his brother, and presumably they were both sons of Jock. In 1586 Robert of Redheugh was ordered to appear as surety for him, under penalty of 1000 merks; he is there recorded as 'Will Elliott, called Jokis Willie'. His son may be the 'Wyll Elliotts John of Burnheads' recorded in 1595. William 'Will the Lord' (16th C.) recorded in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs of c.1594. He is listed under Ewesdale along with 'John the Portars Son' and 'Will of the Devisleyes'. In 1569 he is 'Will Ellot callit the Lord' when held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for John of Fiddleton, Hob 'the Lady' and Hob of Unthank, all Elliots of Ewesdale. In 1578/9 he is 'Will Ellot, callit the Lord', when John Carmichael, younger of that ilk was caution for him (and other Elliots of Ewesdale) not to raid into England. It is possible he is the same man as Will of Fiddleton. William (16th C.) merchant recorded in 1580 when he witnessed witness an agreement in Riddell between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. He may have lived near Riddell, or otherwise was from Selkirk. William (16th C.) recorded as 'Will of Devisleyes' in Monipennie's list published about 1594 (although probably compiled earlier). He is listed among the Elliots of Ewesdale. It is possible that the place is a misreading of 'Eweslees'. William (16th C.) son of 'Jock's Willie', although it is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for theft, along with several other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons of Liddesdale. William 'Will' (16th C.) tenant in Mosspatrickhope in 1581 when he appeared on a list of Armstrong, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of various crimes. He and 2 others gave assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry to the English Wardens in 1584. In 1587/8 he was 'Will of Mospatrikhoip' when his son James is recorded being warded with the Laird of Balmuto (John Boswell). He is recorded as being 'of Morspatrikshors' in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs (published around 1594) along with 'Archie Keene' under the heading 'Gorumberie'. He is probably related to the William who was tenant in Mosspatrick in 1541. William 'Airchie's Will' of Gorrenberry (16th C.) 2nd son of Archibald of Falnash and Gorrenberry. He is first mentioned around 1556 and probably still alive in 1596. In about 1556 he is 'Vil Elliot callit Arche Wille' when, along with Walter Scott, he rented 'Westcoit' in Ringwoodfield from the monks of Melrose. He is probably the William 'callit Archeis Will' listed in 1561 among men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. His brother 'Gawin Elwald' also appeared before the Queen in 1561, promising to provide the names of thieves. He was 'of Gorrimberry' when witnessing a bond of his father's in 1561/2, and hence must have acquired Gorrenberry by then. In 1567 Robert Scott of Thirlestane and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme as surety for him and Sim Elliot in Dodburn. He is recorded in 1569 acting as surety for his tenants in a bond of security signed at Hawick (but not listing any tenants explicitly); he is there recorded as 'Will Elliot alias Archeis Will'. When he failed to appear in 1569 (along with Gavin of Falnash and Sim of Dodburn), Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. He was also one of the designated relief pledges for Gavin of Falnash in 1569. Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He is probably the William 'of Gorumberrie' who was to be entered into ward in St. Andrews in 1573. In 1574 he was involved in a dispute with William Douglas of Cavers over the lands of Caerlenrig (which had been held on wadset by his father from Douglas' father). Douglas tried to have him removed from the lands, and in 1576 the case was still not settled, with his sisters having to confirm that he was still alive. He may be the William in Gorrenberry who was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council in 1575 to resolve the feud between the Elliots and the Kerrs and also summoned with other Border Lairds (including Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie) to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He is recorded as 'William Elliott of Goddamburie' when accused along with Tom of Copshaw, the Armstrongs of Whithaugh, and others of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England in 1587. He was said to have been part of the group who raided Carlisle Castle to free 'Kinmont Willie', being named by an English informer as 'Will Elliott goodman of Gorrombye' (although he is likely to have been too old to take part himself). In 1590 he and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh were accused of rieving from the Lord Warden's tenants. In 1590/1 he was 'of Gorrumberrie' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council; he is probably also the 'Will Elliot of Fallinesche' who along with Walter Chisholme of that ilk, was ordered to present his brother Archie. He is probably the William 'of Gorrumberrie' in 1599 (unless this was a son) among Elliots who signed a bond at Branhholme with the Warden of the West March regarding the inhabitants of Liddesdale; along with Robert of Redheugh, Martin of Braidlie and Jock of Copshaw he was listed as one of the 'principallis of oure brenche'. His son may have been the 'Willie's Archie' who, along with many other Elliots, signed bonds with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599; he did this with his hand on the notary's pen 'because I can nocht wryte my selff'. He is the 'doughty Willie o' Gorrenberry' in some versions of the ballad 'Jamie Telfer in the Fair Dodhead'. William 'Will o the Steele' (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when he and his brother Hob of the Shaws were excepted from the pledge that John of Thorlieshope had for the whole of that branch of the Elliots. A letter from Sir John Forster in 1576 complains that his brother John 'Elwood' had stolen 100 sheep from his lands in Hexhamshire. In 1581/2 his son Will was listed among men accused of raiding Harwood-on-Teviot. He was listed among the Elliots of the Braidlie branch in 1583. In 1584 he was among the Elliots of the Thorlieshope branch who gave assurances to the English Wardens at Hermitage. In 1590 there is a complaint by the tenant of Birdoswald about a raid into England made by both old and young 'Will Elliot of the Steill' in 1588, and in 1590 there was a further complaint against 'Will of the Steile the elder, and his son Will'. The younger William is also recorded on his own in a further accusation in 1590, while he was accused in 2 separate cases, where he is 'elder Will of the Steile' (and 'Steill') and in a further complaint of 1590 (for stealing from Englishman John Armstrong 2 years earlier) where his is just 'Will of the Steill'. Both he and his son were among men accused in 1590 of having raided the farm of Dotland a couple of years earlier. Both he and his son are on a 1590 list of Elliots (including from Redheugh and Braidlie) accused of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year. Also in 1590 he is 'old Will Elliot of the Steile' listed among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh. Hence it seems likely that all mentions of Will of the Steele after that date are probably for his son. William (16th C.) recorded as possessor of the fields in 'rindaill' near Hermiston for which in 1580 Patrick Johnstone gave sasine to his father John Johnstone's wife Marion Wilson. William 'Will' of Hartsgarth (16th/17th C.) probably 2nd son of Robert (15th) of Redheugh. He was hence brother of Robert (16th) of Redheugh, as well as 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairties', Archibald and Gavin of Brugh. He was sometimes referred to as 'Robyn's Will' and was recorded as early as 1581. He was said to have ridden with his brother on raids into England and the pair were involved in a dispute with Scott of Buccleuch. In 1581 he is probably the Robert, listed along with Gavin as brothers of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when they witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs (with Gavin of Baillielie, Robert of Redheugh and 2 tenants of Swinstead also acting as witnesses). In a letter from Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth's Chancellor he is 'Wille Elliot of Harskarth', brother of the chief. He was accused of leading a group of Liddesdale and Teviotdale men on an attack into Mindrum in England in 1583/4, in which several men were killed and a number taken prisoner; these being freed by the King and the Warden had orders to get him to repay what was stolen, but that had still not been done by 1590/1. In a letter from the King in 1584 he is described as 'Will Elliot of Hartstarth bry^r to Robene of Reidhwech'. He was 'of Harkescarth, called Robyns Will' when accused of being on a raid on the tenants of Featherstonehaugh in 1587; Martin's Airchie was also there, as well as 160 others, and it is claimed that they burned 23 houses and took 3 prisoners. In 1586 his brother Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He served as a guardian for his nephew Robert (17th) of Redheugh; in about 1590 he was listed as 'Will Elliot of Harthscarth, tutour of Reidheuch' among the landed men of the Borders. In 1590/1 he was 'Will Elliot of Haitscarth' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. In 1591/2 Walter Scott of Goldielands acted as surety for him. In 1593 he was 'of Lariston' when accused of being involved in the death of Charltons in England, along with Scott of Buccleuch. He was also 'William Elliot of Lawreston' when accused in 1593 (along with Martin of Braidlie and Kinmont Willie Armstrong) of leading about 1000 men in a raid on Redesdale, taking 1005 head of cattle, 1000 sheep and 24 horses, as well as burning a mill and stealing £300 worth of goods. In 1593 he was 'of Hartscarth' when accused of killing 2 Tynedale men called Dods. In 1594 there was a complaint against him by Englishman Gilbert Park of 'Warton'. In 1595/6 he complained about men of Tynedale who was stolen cattle from him, and was himself involved on a retaliatory raid into England; he was there 'Will Elliot of Larrestone alias Harskarth'. He was 'of Larestone' in 1594/5 when there was an attempt to deliver Jock Graham as prisoner in his stead. He is probably one of the 2 Williams who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He appears to have held Hartsgarth through wadset until 1595/6, when it was gained by William of Larriston (son of Martin of Braidlie). In 1597 he (along with his nephew Robert of Redheugh and John of Copshaw) wrote from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen. He was also known as William 'of Rigg' until 1622, when Winningtonrig was sold by his brother, and he received 2500 merks for his share. In 1605 he represented his mother, Marion Hamilton, in a complaint against the Douglasses. He was recorded in 1618 among a large group of Elliots and others who John Scott in Newark complained attacked his farm at Foulshiels in Liddesdale, beating up one of his workers there; not appearing, the accused were denounced as rebels, but he and Robert of Redheugh appeared later and the horning was suspended. Some time before 1608 he married his half-cousin Jean, daughter of Robert Rutherford of Edgerston, with her mother being a daughter of Gavin Elliott of Stobs; this may be garbled into him being the 'William called 'Neck of Steel', a son of Robert Elliot of Laristoun', who is said to have married Joan, daughter of Thomas Rutherford, the 'Black Laird' of Edgerston. He may have married a second time, since in 1642 the deceased Jean Rutherford is described as his 1st wife. He probably had children, but this branch of the Elliots was extinct by 1634

(as stated in the matriculation of arms for Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1673). Note that some genealogies suggested he had 3 sons, including William of Roan, but this may be confusion with another William, perhaps the son of Martin of Braidlie. His children probably included: Robert (d.bef. 1637), who succeeded; Francis, who succeeded his brother; and James, who was 'second lawful son' in 1639. William 'Willie' (16th C.) son of William, 'callit the Tod'. He is probably the eldest son (name not given) of 'Elder Will the Tod', who, along with his brother 'David Carling', were the pledges for whom their father was held in Blackness Castle in 1569. In 1586 he was granted a lease of the lands of 'Culgatis' in Liddesdale by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. It is unclear where exactly these lands were. Given a connection with 'Tod', it is probable he was son of 'Elder Will'.

William (16th C.) tenant in Dodburn. In 1586, along with his brother Archie, he was accused of 'a great strough at the Eschelles in England'. William of Falnash (probably their laird) was surety for them at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. By 1602 the Crown was still trying to get William of Falnash to pay the £60 for him and his brothers Archie and Sim, for 'a great stouth committed by them at Eschellis'. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Scottish and English Wardens. His name is written as 'Wille Elliott, called Cowfaughes' when he was delivered as a pledge for the crimes of Hob (who may have been related). Probably the same man was 'Will Elliott, called Cowsauche' listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. He may be related to John 'Cowshawes' who is recorded in 1590. William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) recorded along with 'Riche Elliott of the Hewghhouse' in 1595, as well as another Elliot called Hob. They were accused of stealing horses from a farm in England. William of Braidlie (d.1606/7) 2nd son of Martin, who was probably responsible for the burning of Hawick in 1565. He was known as 'Will o the Dale', as well as being 'of Larriston', 'of Hartsgarth' (although this may be confusion with a different man, brother of Robert of Redheugh) and later 'of Dinlabyre'. He may be the 'Will Elliot of Bradlie' who entered the bond of 1557 to bring 'Robene Pet' to the Warden, John Kerr of Ferniehirst (although that seems too early, and hence may be a different William). Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. In 1574 he was one of the hostages taken by the Regent Morton to ensure the good behaviour of the clan and was held by James Scrimgeour, Constable of Dundee. In 1578, there was a pledge to the King to meet with other Border Lairds to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border, with his cautioner being James Scrimgeour, Constable of Dundee; he was there referred to as 'sone to Martine Elliot of Braidley'. However, within a few months he headed 200 men on a raid into Tynedale. He may have spent time in the wars in Flanders and France, since he is not recorded for more than a decade. He was 'of Larriston' in 1593 and 1594 (making him possibly confused with another family branch). He led the Elliots and Armstrongs in a massive raid on Tynedale in 1593, with as many as 1,000 men taking part; they drove more than 2,000 head of livestock back to Scotland, as well as taking £300 in goods. In 1595 he was 'of Lareston' when his servants John and Clement Nixon were complained about for a raid into England. In 1595/6 he may be the same man as 'William Elliott of Harscat a principal actor in the attempt of Tyndale' delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to Sir John Forster (this is presumably Hoscote, but it is not entirely clear if this is the same or a different William). In 1596 he was 'Wille Elliott of Lairston' when (along with Walter Scott of Harden and the young Laird of Whithaugh) accused of stealing a large number of cattle and horses from 'the Leabecke at Wilkinskarre'. He was 'Will Elliott of Larestane' in 1597 among a list of men the English Warden demanded pledges for. He is probably the 'William Ellwald of Duneleabyre' listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597 as hostages for the general peace on the Border. He remained a prisoner for more than 2 years, despite pleas by several Elliots for his release. In 1598/9 he was 'William Elwood, elder', (to distinguish him from a youngster of the same name) among a group of Scotsmen who tried to escape from their English prison. In 1600 there was an offer to substitute his son Robert, which was rejected; however, he and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh escaped soon afterwards. He may also be the William 'of Eskez' listed in 1600 (along with William of Clintwood and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh) as the men delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to the English Warden as pledges for Liddesdale; after his escape from York he is described as 'Will of Hescottes an Elwood', suggesting he is the same William who was tenant in Hoscote (but then the designations become hopelessly confused!). In 1606/7 he was one of the leaders in Liddesdale who were rounded up and executed by the Earl of Dunbar, then Commissioner on the Border. He married Mary, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and their children were: Robert of Dinlabyre; Gavin of Braidlie; and William of Braidlie. He was hanged at Foulden Justice Court along with his nephew Martin and other Elliot and Armstrong leaders. William (1546/7–aft. 1616) 4th Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert, he succeeded from his brother Gavin when he was 19. In 1566 he was served as heir to Gavin in a Precept of Clare Constat of the Middle Mains of Hassendean and of Horsleyhill, from the superior, Alexander, Lord Home. He then settled the ‘4 merk land’ of Horsleyhill on his wife, Margaert Turnbull. There is no record of children for the couple. In 1569 he gave a charter of the lands to his uncle William and in 1570/1 his wife sold Horsleyhill to his uncle William. However, it appears he also sold Horsleyhill and the Mains of Hassendean to his uncle Gavin in 1572, with his uncle William taking the case to court, with Gavin’s infetment being annulled in 1574/5. In 1573 he also sold Caveling to his uncle William. He may be the William of Horsleyhill who is recorded in a bond of 1594/5, when James Gledstains of Cocklaw pledged that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm him or Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1616 he is recorded acknowledging the redemption of the reversion of the Middle Mains of Hassendean, granted by his grandfather Gavin of Horsleyhill to Lord Home in 1555. He may be the William of Horsleyhill whose son Robert ‘Ellet’ is among those listed in the King’s 1594 ‘respite’ for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands; if so, then he had at least one child. William ‘Will o the Steele’ (16th/17th C.) son of the elder William. In 1588 both old and young ‘Will Elliot of the Steill’ were complained about for a raid. In 1590 he is recorded as ‘William Elliott of the Steile the younger’ among a group of Elliots and others who took livestock and goods from Over Warden in England. Also in 1590 both he and his father were accused of leading a raid on Catton, where they took livestock and prisoners. He was further accused in 1590 (along with Shiels and Nixons) of stealing from Roland Walker. Both he and his father were accused in 1590 of being in a group of Elliots and others who raided Dotland about 2 years earlier. He is listed along with Elliots and others accused in 1590 of stealing from the ‘Hewrde’ family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’. Both he and his father are on a list of Elliots (including from Redheugh and Braidlie) accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year. In 1596 there was a complaint that he and others (including Anthony Elliot of Binks and Geordie Simpson) had raided lands in England at King Water. In 1597 he is listed among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges. In 1597 he was ‘William Ellwald of Steale’ when he was among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch to the English Deputy Warden. However, he was recorded as ‘Will Ellwood alias Will of the Stile’ when released on a bond to return to Scotland; however, he soon led a raid into Tynedale, taking 200 head of cattle and 30 horses in broad daylight, so that the English Wardens called for his execution. He may have escaped punishment, since he is recorded in 1599 as ‘Will of the Steill’ when, along with many other Elliots, he signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch. William of Braidlie (16th/17th C.) son of William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of the Binks (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Simon of Philhope and grandson of Martin of Braidlie. This line of Elliots of Binks is easy to confuse with the slightly later line that came from the Elliots of Fahnash. His wife’s name is not recorded. Their children were: Anthony ‘in Rouchlie’; Simon of the Binks (d.bef. 1656); James; and Robert (d.1663). William ‘Will’ of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded occupying Fiddleton in 1567. In 1578/9 John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him, that he would not raid into England. He was ‘Will Elliot of Fiddiltoun’ listed in 1586 among ‘principalis of the brokin men of the west marche’ in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He was complained about for a raid into England in 1589. He is probably the ‘Will of Fyttington’ listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and other prisoners and ransoming them. Also in 1590 he was listed first in a group of Elliots and about 80 others accused of stealing from ‘Trowhen’ and killing 2 Englishmen in 1589, with the complaint repeated in 1590; he was there ‘Will Elliott of Fydderton’. Additionally in 1590 he was the first in a list of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of ‘Allenton’ and ‘Linbriggs’, taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'; he was also among a group accused of having earlier stolen livestock and goods from the same people. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. In about 1600 Sir James Sandilands complained about the theft of 2 horses by him. He was 'Will Elliot of Fiddiltoun' in 1602 when Robert of Reidheugh was declared to be answerable for him; Sir James Sandilands complained that he had stolen 2 horses from him and hence Elliot of Redheugh was liable for the restitution. He was probably the Will of Fiddleton listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; his sons John and Ringan were also listed as fugitives. He was apparently still alive in 1608 when his son Ninian was sentenced to be executed for killing one of the King's Guards while trying to escape arrest. William, son of John of Burngrains, was also convicted (and the records confusingly also switch the 2 men's fathers in one part, so it is possible that his son was William and not Ninian). He must have been related to the Gavin and John recorded in 1606. William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Will Elliott, sone to Will Elliot of the Steill' in 1581/2, when he was among men accused of raiding the farm of Harwood-on-Teviot. He was declared a rebel after not appearing. William 'Will' of Thorlieshope (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'the Garret sheills'. His name is given as 'Will Elliott of Thorleshoppe 'Renyon Will'', suggesting that his father was Ninian. William 'Will' 3rd Laird of Falnash (d.bef. 1620) son of Gavin. He is first recorded in 1564, when he was 'Gawenis Willie, of Fallinesche' at the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean; he was denounced as rebel for not appearing, but must have been rehabilitated later. In 1566 he was among a group of Elliots cited for attacking the Pringles and killing George Pringle of Torwoodlee; this was part of a feud between the 2 families. He also purchased 'Hoscoit' (i.e. Hoscote). In 1575 he was listed as son of Gavin of Falnash among those summoned to answer for the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. In 1579/80 he was charged by John Carmichael, Keeper of Liddesdale, with raids into England. He is probably the William of Falnash who signed the Assurance of Liddesdale with the English Warden Sir John Forster in 1584; this was along with Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie, making it clear that he was an important Elliot chief at that time. In 1586 he was cited along with 15 other Border lairds for failing to bring their followers to justice. Additionally in 1586 he was 'Will Elliot of Hoistcoitt or Fallinesche' when listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale. He was also surety for 2 of his tenants in 1586, Will in Dodburn and his brother Archie; however, the fines were not paid and by 1590 he was 'put to the horn' (with a follow-up case before the Privy Council in 1602). In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is named in 1590/1 in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. In about 1590 he is listed among the landed men of the Borders. He is probably the 'Williame Ellet in Fellinesche' listed (along with his son Robert and many others) in the King's 'respite' of 1594 for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands. He is mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Wardens, his case (whatever it was) being delayed. He may be one of the 2 Williams who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He was one of the trustees for the young Robert (17th) of Redheugh appointed in about 1597. In 1598 there were complaints to the Privy Council by Sir James of Sandilands about raids on his property in which his name is listed; in a follow-up court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch's agent denied responsibility for him and his crimes. In 1598/9 there were complaints by the widow of James Douglas of Knightsridge against several of his 'brother's, tenants and servants' for reiving from 'Corsetburne' (in Lothian); this included 'Stottan Gib' and his brother John, Will in Falnash Mill, Archie of Muselee and his brother Alexander, and Adie Scott 'the Peck' and his son. He was accused of resetting the stolen cattle and failing to appear in court, was denounced as a rebel. Along with his son Robert, he signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. Also in 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss 'the present disordouris of the Bourdours'. In 1602 he signed the 'New General Band' along with other Border landlords. Also in 1602, he and his eldest son Robert were denounced as rebels for failing to appear before the Privy Council 'to give their advice for keeping good rule in the Borders'. The Crown Treasurer brought a case against him in 1602 for non-payment of £60 in fines as cautioner for Will in Dodburn and his brothers Archie and Sim, for reiving in 1586, with a horning in 1590; he was again denounced as a rebel and his goods escheated. He received 500 merks for redemption on the lands of Outersiderig with Walter Scott of Synton. He then purchased the farms of upper Ewesdale from the Earl of Home, specifically Mosspeebles, Over and Nether Woodend, Unthank, Fiddleton, Blackhall and Mossypaul; he forced out the former tenants. After Martin of Braidlie and Prickenhaugh was executed in 1607, he paid the 4000 reversion money to Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig and acquired the lands of Braidlie in the Barony of Hawick. In 1607 he was cautioner for John Elliot of Copshaw, who was found guilty of the murder of George Pringle of Torwoodlee; he had to pay the fine of 500 marks on the non-appearance of John of Copshaw. He had a charter of the lands of Arkleton (presumably purchased from the Armstrongs) in 1611. Also in 1611 he served as cautioner in Jedburgh for Gavin 'of the Schawis' and for the Laird of Foulshiels. Additionally he was part of an assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. He signed a bond in 1612 (along with several Scotts) for keeping the peace in the Borders. In 1618 he is referred to as 'William El-lote, called of Fallinasche in Braidlie', suggesting he had already passed Falnash to his eldest son; this is when he was accused by Walter Scott of Buccleuch of cutting down 60 alders from Gorrenberry, with Gilbert in Falnash Mill (possibly his brother) also accused of stealing timber. Not appearing before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. He had 4 sons: Robert of Falnash, J.P. in Roxburghshire who married Marion Scott; John of Arkleton, also called 'of Falnash', who married Ester Armstrong; Archibald, who is mentioned in 1595; and probably one other, who owned Unthank, and whose children were the Elliots of Meikledale, Mosspebble, Unthank and Eweslees. William 'Will' (16th C.) tenant in Falnash Mill in 1598/9. He was listed among the 'brothers, tenants and servants' of William of Falnash who were complained about by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsridge, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn.

He was 'Will Elliott in the Miln of Fallinesche'. William (d.c.1608) son of John of Burngrains. Listed (along with his brother Hob) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Along with Ninian, son of William of Fiddleton (although they are also confusingly listed the other way round, with his father being Will of Fiddleton) he was sentenced to execution in 1608 for killing one of the King's Guards while resisting arrest. The pair had been declared rebels some years earlier for crimes including theft and murder. William of Cavelling (b.1572) 2nd son of William, 5th Laird of Horsleyhill. His mother was Elizabeth Douglas of Cavers. In 1592 he was passed over (in favour of Gavin Elliott of Stobs) as tutor to his nephew William of Horsleyhill because he was still too young. In 1599 he was described as indweller and Burgess of Peebles; his connection was through his uncle, Archibald Douglas, who was Parson in Peebles. He was served heir to his father in some lands in 1603, when he was described as a Burgess of Peebles. About this time he sold Cavelling to Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1604 he bought (under wadset and reversion) the lands of Crupton from Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He was listed in 1607 among Douglasses and others who swore not to harm the Horsburghs. He may be the William 'called of Horsliehill' who was among the group of Scotts and others who attacked Selkirk Mill in 1608. Also in 1608 he rescued a man who was chased into his house in Peebles by a gang of his enemies. He was still living in 1610. He married Christian Chisholme. William of Gorrenberry (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611 when he was one of the cautioners for 'Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie'. Other cautioners included Robert of Redheugh, Archie of Clintwood, Martin's Hob and William of Princklinghaugh, some of whom were probably relatives. He was also witness in 1613 to the infetment of the lands of Robert of Redheugh. It is unclear how he was related to the other Elliots of Gorrenberry or of Redheugh. William (16th/17th C.) son of Archie of Clintwood. He is listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. His name is repeated in 1600, when the list of pledges for Liddesdale, delivered to the English Warden by Buccleuch consisted of him, William 'of Eskez' (possibly 'Hoscote', and probably his uncle, William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre) and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh. He was described as 'young Elwood', also called 'the boye' when listed in 1598/9 as one of the Liddesdale prisoners in England. In 1600 (after the other 2 Liddesdale pledges had escaped from prison in York) he is described as son of 'an Ellwood called Martins Archie', making it clear that he was a grandson of Martin of Braidlie. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as 'Will Elliott in Burneheid, called Murth'. He was presumably related to other Elliots of Burnhead and may also have been related to Jock 'the Murt'. William 'Gled Will' (16th/17th C.) listed among men those who were fugitives for not appearing in a Borders Commissioners' court in Hawick in 1605. He is recorded as 'Gleyd Will'. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 being 'called of Cowshaw'. This may have been an error for Copshaw. Along with his eldest son Archie and servants Hob Elliot and a Crosier, he was arrested for stealing sheep and held in Jedburgh Jail. Andrew Riddell of that Ilk, John Riddell, heir apparent of Riddell and John Molle of that Ilk were appointed to a commission to try them. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1619 as brother to Robert of Redheugh when Robert Rutherford of Edgerston complained that he remained at large despite being declared at the horn. He could be the same man as William of Hartsgarth, but it seems more likely he was from the next generation. William (16th/17th C.) son of Martin and Agnes Lorraine. In 1618 his mother granted him her half husbandland of lands in Lilliesleaf. He later deponed this land to Andrew Riddell, as confirmed in a service of heirs to Walter Riddell in 1702. William of Prickinghaugh (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to the 1613 infetment for Robert of Redheugh in his lands. It is unclear how he was related to Christie (son of 'Martin's Hob' of Prickinghaugh) who was declared a rebel in 1611. Also in 1611 he was one of the cautioners for 'Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie', with others including Robert of Redheugh, William of Gorrenberry, Archie of Clintwood and Martin's Hob, some of whom were probably relatives. He was also recorded in 1618 among a large group of Elliots and others who John Scott in Newark complained attacked his farm at Foulshiels in Liddesdale, beating up one of his workers there; not appearing, the accused were denounced as rebels. William of Rig (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh, 16th Chief and brother of Robert. He may have been raised partly by his step-father Gavin Elliott of Stobs. He was probably the brother of Robert of Redheugh who had a bond to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was witness to the infetment of Robert of Redheugh in his lands in 1613. He may also have been known as 'of Hartsgarth'. He married Jean, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston and Jean Elliott, co-heiress of Stobs. Their children were: Robert (d.bef. 1637), who succeeded; Francis (d.bef. 1699), related to the Elliots of Dinlabyre; and James (d.bef. 1699). He may be the William of Hartsgarth who died in 1613 and whose great-grandson William of Dinlabyre was 'Kene'. He was acquitted of charges at court in Jedburgh. He may have been related to Archie and Hob, both called 'Kene', recorded a few decades earlier. William 'Blackheid' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611. 2 Hendersons were accused in Jedburgh of several crimes, including the theft of 4 cows of his from the lands of Flatt. He may have been related to Airchie and Jock, who had the same nickname. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as servitor to William Middlemas, younger of Lilliesleaf. Along with Middlemases and others, he was accused of harassing and attacking George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers and was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Archibald 'of Clintoun' (possibly Clintwood) was also involved. William 'Sweet Milk' (d.1627) from the Rule valley, said to be a minstrel. He is cited for immorality as 'William Sweet Milk' in the Cavers Parish records in 1623 and along with Robert Scott and Helen Langlands in 1624. He was killed at Newmill in a duel by William Henderson from Priestthaugh, as immortalised in the song 'Rattlin Roarin Willie'. Although the basis of the story was traditional, the Jedburgh Presbytery records describe his 'fearful and cruel slaughter' and the excommunication of his assailant. A thorn bush near the spot was called 'Milkswet Willie's Thorn', and was still pointed out in the early 1800s. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged, however, his murderer is said to have been rooted out by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and young Elliot of Falnash (either of whom may have been a distant relative). It is possible he was related to 'Dandie Elliot called Sweet Milk' whose name is recorded in association with complaints about raids into England in 1598. William (16th/17th C.) 7th and last Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert and Agnes Scott. He was a minor when his father died in 1592, with his grand-uncle Gavin of Stobs appointed as his tutor. In 1606 curators were appointed to manage his affairs and in 1607 they requested from the Chancery the writs and charters of Horsleyhill so that he could be served heir to his grandfather William. However, he sold Horsleyhill shortly afterwards to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and was thereafter 'called of Horsleyhill', rather than being the Laird. He became a retainer of Robert Scott of Haining, who may have been related to his mother. In 1617 he was accused of attacking William Mitchellhill, a Burgess of Selkirk, apparently trying to rip his ears off, as well as half his beard, this after 20 days earlier having said he 'avowit to cause cutt the said complenairis luggis out of his head'; however, he was acquitted on assurance of 'his great oath'. In 1619 he was found guilty of attacking and stabbing William Turnbull in Philiphaugh, who had loaned a plough to Sarah Lough in Selkirk to till a piece of land that he had tried to get for himself; he was fined £40 and ordered to remain in Edinburgh until he found caution for 500 merks. He is probably also the 'Wm. Elliott, sometimes in Horslaw' who in 1623 was acquitted of the charge of stealing sheep from Clinthill. William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. His nickname was given as 'Cauldfute'. William 'Laurie's Jock's Willie' (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Teviotdale declared as fugitives for not appearing before a court in Jedburgh in 1606. His name is recorded as 'Willie Elliott in Carlaverok, called Lowrey's Jok's Willie'. His father was therefore John and his grandfather 'Laurie' (or Lawrence). However, the designation 'Carlaverok' is confusing, since this is not in Teviotdale. William (16th/17th C.) brother of 'Dandie of Bowholmes'. In 1611 he was listed among Liddesdale men who did not appear at court in Jedburgh. William 'Dun Wullie' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as 'Dun Willie Elliott in Ailmuir' among fugitives listed at the Privy Council. He presumably lived at Alemoor. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622 and 1623 being in 'Huntlaw'. John Nichol in Craikhope was caution for him at the Judiciary Court in Jedburgh. William 'Gib's Will' (17th C.) one of 3 men who were meant to carry out the murder of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1624, as part of the ongoing feud between the 2 families. The other men were Gavin of Hillhouse and 'Gib Elliott, callit the Tutour', who may have been his father. All 3 later confessed. William (16th/17th C.) Bailie in Selkirk. In about 1618 he was listed among men who witnessed the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols. Probably the same

William William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 among a large group of Elliots and others who John Scott in Newark complained attacked his farm at Foulshiels in Liddesdale. He is described being 'called of the Park', suggesting he was related to earlier Elliots of the Park; others accused of being involved include Elliot of Redheugh, Hartsgarth and Prickinghaugh. Not appearing, the accused were denounced as rebels. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Harden. He was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest in about 1618. In Selkirk was involved in 1619 with a caution not to harm him and his family. He was 'procurator' for James Melrose in a land transaction in 1629. His brother James was one of the witnesses. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jean Murray and their children included: Robert (b.1634); Jean (b.1636); Marie (b.1640); and William (b.1643). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Stoddart and their children included: High (b.1635); Gavin (b.1640); Robert (b.1642); and Bessie (b.1645). William (d.1637) eldest son of Robert, he is described as 'Younger of Falnash'. In 1635 he married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Maxwell of Cowhill. Their daughter Margaret was christened in Hawick 2 years later. His wife was granted the liferent of Outerside and an annual rent of 200 merks from 'Falnesh, Caulschaw and Tandilneir'. He was dead within a few months of the baptism of his daughter. His wife may have remarried a Haswell, since Margaret Haswell held the liferent of Outerside in 1643. Falnash was inherited by his brother Archibald. William (d.bef. 1638) youngest son of Gavin of Brugh. He was probably born locally, but became Provost of Peebles, and founded the Peebles branch of the family. He was served heir to his father in 1603. He was Provost of Peebles in 1620 in a case before the Privy Council and in 1622 when he served on an assize at the Court of Judiciary in Dumfries. He married Mary, daughter of John Ker of Faldonside and their children were: Lillian (d.1638); Gavin, who witnessed a tack for his brother in 1643; and Harry, who was Parson at Bedrule. He is sometimes suggested (e.g. by Tancred) to have instead been son of William Elliott of Stobs. His great-grandson, Sir John was physician to the Prince of Wales and was created a baronet in 1778. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'callit of Peill' in 1622 when 2 men were accused of stealing sheep from his lands at Brighousecleuchhead. William (16th/17th C.)

recorded being 'in Heisches' in 1623, when he was entered at the Judicial Court. His cautioners were Gilbert Eliott of Craigend and Archie of Bowholm. However, it is unclear where 'Heisches' may have been. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 being 'callit of ye Mylne, in Cassiltoune', presumably meaning he was tenant in Castleton Mill. A man was found guilty of stealing a clock from him. William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Bonjedward. In 1623 along with George Johnstone in Essenside he was found guilty of stealing a horse from Walter Scott of Burnfoot-on-Ale. He was probably executed as a result (and may have also been referred to as son of 'Thome of Fawsyde'). William (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Hermitage in 1632. He may have been ancestor of the later Elliots of Hermitage. William (17th C.) recorded as being 'called of the Boulex' when he was listed among a large number of Borderers who were declared fugitives in 1642. It is unclear where the place name might have been, but many of the men he is listed with were from the Liddesdale area. William (17th C.) described as 'William Elliot, tailor in Cavers' in a Hawick magistrates case of 1642, when Douglas of Cavers' servant accused him and several other people of stealing his wallet in Hawick. William (17th C.) from Ashkirk, he married Mary Taylor. Their children included James (b.1651), with baptismal witnesses John and William Welsh. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Agnes Elliot and their son Francis was born in 1653. William of Mosspebble (17th C.) 2nd son of an unknown Elliot, probably owner of Unthank. His grandfather was William of Falnash. He married Mary, daughter of John Carmichael, Laird of Castlehope. They had 2 sons: Robert of Mosspebble, who died unmarried; and John of Castlehope and Billhope. William (17th C.) recorded in 1662/3 as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Canonbie and Morton, and in 1663-70 for Hawick, Hassendean and Eckford. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Binks and Harwood (d.1662) eldest son of Simon of the Binks. In 1637 he bought the lands of Harwood, including Tythehouse and Appotside from Edward Lorraine (with the permission of Gilbert Eliott, who had the lands in wadset). However, his father was listed as owner in 1643. Thus, although he is sometimes referred to as the 1st Elliot Laird of Harwood, this may really have technically been his father Simon. He later sold Binks to John Elliot of Burnmouth. He may be the William 'in Harret' who acted as surety for Janet Scott (wife of John Glendinning, 'Sow-tail') in 1644, when she promised to appear before the Justice-General on a charge of witchcraft. He is listed in a contract for the vicarage teinds of Hobkirk Parish in 1648 and discharge of 1649. He was also the William 'of the Burnmouth, indweller in Liddesdale' who had a loan discharged in 1653. In 1654 he purchased a wadset of Appotside from Edward Lorraine and his son Walter; his signature was written by the notary because he could not write himself. He purchased Appotside outright in 1656 and was confirmed in his charters of Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside by his superior, Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He (along with his son John) purchased lands at Baxtonlees near Peel in 1659 from Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. After the Restoration both he and his brother Robert were fined £1,200 for supporting the Commonwealth. He was recorded paying £433 6s 8d on the Land Tax Rolls in about 1663. He married Christian Greenlaw in 1627 and in 1659 gave her a sasine of 'liferent' of Appotside (presumably as part of the marriage contract); he was then described as 'of Apitsyde'. His children were: Simon of the Binks and Swinside (although there is some confusion between him and his son William); Henry (or 'Harry'), who succeeded to Harwood; Jean, the eldest daughter; Margaret, who married William Elliot of Philhope; Jean (also called 'Jennet'), the youngest daughter; and John of the Binks and later of Baxtonlees or Peel. George may have been another son, who died about 1666. He was 'indweller in Burnmouth', although described as 'of Harwood', when he died. His testament and inventory of goods are in the National Archives. In 1665 'Harie Elliot, son-in-law' is recorded as an overseer of William of Binks, who may have been him (if the date is correct). William of Unthank (d.1670s) probably 3rd son of the 4th son (whose first name is unrecorded) of William of Falnash, his brothers being Adam of Meikledale, William of Mosspebble and Ninian of Eweslees. He 'flitted from Eweshead' in 1642' and probably moved to Gorrenberry. He is recorded in 1660 when he was guardian to the 2 grandsons of his brother Ninian in Eweslees. He is referred to as 'called Unthank' in a list of debtors in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks in 1662. He was also among the men fined (£1800) after the Restoration in 1662, presumably meaning that he acted against the King in the Civil War. In 1670, along with Simon of the Binks and Swinside, and his own son Adam, he purchased Lymiecleuch (including Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch) from William Elliott, younger of Stobs. He is probably the William who paid the land tax for half of Lymiecleuch in 1678 (the other half being paid by Sir William Elliott of Stobs). His children included: Robert, who died unmarried; Adam of Mosspeeble and Lymiecleuch; William of Penchrise; and Walter of Carewoodrig. Rev. William (c.1617–85) from Borthwickshiels, son of Robert. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1637 and became minister at Yarrow in 1641. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He was confined to his parish in 1662 for refusing to conform to Episcopacy. However, he was ‘indulged’ (i.e. allowed to resume his duties) in 1679 for about a year. In 1664 he had a bond with Sir William Scott of Harden (his father and grandfather having had close connections with the Scotts of Harden). When he died he had debts amounting to £8,333 13s 4d (Scots probably), with his brother Thomas in Borthwickshiels becoming his executor. His will is recorded in 1686. William of Lymiecleuch (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He may have been a son of Ninian of Eweslees, or else was son of William of Unthank and the same as William of Penchrise (or perhaps was William of Unthank himself). William of Grange (17th C.) paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He was probably related to other Elliots of Grange. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1685. In 1788 he was listed as a former owner of lands in Nether Ancrum, valued at £20. William of Penchrise (17th C.) son of William of Unthank, he was the first Elliot at Penchrise. In 1680 he was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. Also in 1680 he was charged with being at a conventicle given by the ousted Abbotrule minister James Ker of Grange; he was fined £25 and set free after paying it. He may have been the same William (along with Robert) of Lymiecleuch and Penchrise who was involved in a court case in 1695 over not paying a bond due to John Riddell of Haining; not appearing, their lands were yielded to their guarantor, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He married Bessie Grieve, who died in 1683 (her will being recorded in 1684). Their children included: William of Penchrise, who married Janet Elliot of Thorlieshope; Henry in Riccarton, who married Isobel, daughter of John Elliot in Dinlees; John in Leahaug, who married Mary Elliot; Ninian in Ruecastle, who married Agnes Paterson; Adam in Catlowdie, who married Mary Irving; Jean, who married Robert Grieve in Teindside; and Eupham, mentioned in 1683. William of Straghan (17th C.) said to be a direct descendant of the Elliotts of Stobs, he was the progenitor of County Fermanagh branch. He was a Lieutenant in the army, who defended Ballyshannon and fought under William III at the Battle of the Boyne. He married his cousin, Mary, daughter of William Cairnes of Killyfaddy. William of Bewlie, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae (b.1658), eldest son of Thomas of Bewlie, who was tenant in Borthwickshiels. His mother was Margaret Scott from Chamberlain Newton. He could be the William who (along with Thomas) witnessed a baptism for James Murray, herd at Borthwickshiels in 1683. He is probably also the William who witnessed baptisms for Patrick Riddell of Muselee and Marie Elliot (his sister) in 1682 and 1686. He may be the William who was taxed for 4 hearths at Borthwickshiels in 1694 (assuming he kept his father’s tenancy of the farm there). It is said that he wanted to buy Horsleyhill, but since it was not for sale, he instead purchased Borthwickbrae. He could be the William ‘of Belvie’ who in 1696 directed the Bailies of Selkirk to incarcerate William from Castleton. He received a Crown Charter for Borthwickbrae in 1698. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, 1695 and 1704. He was involved in a bonds with Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692 and with Sir William Scott of Harden in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was one of the ‘curators’ for Alexander Scott of Synton. Scott of Satchells describes him as a good farmer (‘kept the sheep upon the Down’) and a generous supporter of the poor (‘was the Poors relief, for he fed and clad them both with Flesh and Fleece’), in contrast to his cousin James of Bridgehaugh. He was still ‘of Bewlie’ in 1699 when he complained about non-payment by Gilbert ‘of the Park’ and his son William in Castleton. In 1686 he married Isobel, daughter of William Scott of Synton and sister of John Scott of Synton. He may also have married a second time, but her name is unknown. He had 16 children, 9 of whom survived: Thomas (b.1687), who must have died young; Jean (b.1688), who in 1705 married Gideon Scott of Newhouse, brother of the Laird of Woll; William (1689–1756), who succeeded to the Borthwickbrae Lairdship; Francis, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1710; Mary, who in 1715 married Gideon Burnet in Whitehope; Christian (b.1697), who married Robert Elliot of Rig (probably Caerlenrig) in 1721; Anne (b.1704), who married Thomas Elliot, minister of Kirkton and Cavers; Susanna (b.1704); and Margaret, who married William Borthwick in Glendinning. Isobel (or 'Tibby', b.1708) may have been his youngest daughter and married Walter Elliot of Ormiston. William of Philhope (17th C.) eldest son of Archibald of Philhope. He married Margaret Elliot of the Binks and Harwood in 1663. He is recorded in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls as 'William Elliot of philip for braidlie', paying the tax for land valued at £216 in Hawick Parish. He was also listed paying tax on land valued at £400 in Selkirkshire in 1678; he was recorded being 'of phillip' and 'hes bene thretie [although hard to read] yeires bypast resider in the land'. He was 'Wm Elliott of Phillip' on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. In 1700 his wife assigned to him the remainder of the money bequeathed to her by her mother. His son William was a witness to this document of 1700. He was probably succeeded by William, although father and son are hard to separate in records. He may have been the Elliot of Philhope who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. William (17th C.) listed as son of deceased William of Philhope, son-in-law of William of Binks, when he was in the testament for the deceased George, son of William of Binks. He was recorded in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He was one of the heritors in support of the suppression of Hassendean Parish in favour of Robertson. There is a 'letter of horn-ing' against him (and Henry Elliot of Harwood) by Walter Scott, called Westport in 1676. His son Arthur became an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1694. And possibly the same Arthur married Mary Douglas in Edinburgh in 1721, by which time William is recorded as deceased. Another son James became a tanner's apprentice in Edinburgh, also in 1694. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1669 fellow merchant Samuel Newbie was convicted of striking him in the head with his sword and wounding him in the face with a bridle. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick recorded in 1693. The Bailie of Regality, William Scott, was in his house sorting out some financial business between John Hardie and Walter Ruecastle, when he was assaulted by Walter Ruecastle. He must have been an innkeeper, or some prominent townsman. He could be the William of the Sandbed listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the William recorded in the Sandbed in 1702 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for shoemaker George Allan and for Alexander Ogilvie in 1708 and again for shoemaker George Allan in 1709. Probably the same William, married to Agnes Allan had children baptised in Hawick, including: Margaret (b.1685); and William (b.1687). The witnesses in 1685 were Robert Allan and James Deans. William of Dinlabyre (d.1693) son of William of Braidlie and Mary Scott, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. However, he seems to have lived rather late in the century for a man whose grandfather is meant to have died in 1607, suggesting that there may be some confusion here. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, and appears to have been the most prominent Elliot in Liddesdale in the latter half of the 17th century (after the death of the last Robert of Redheugh). He may be the William 'of Dunliebyre' whose lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £400 in 1643; if this was not him it must have been an earlier relative. He was 'of Dunlybyre' in a deed of 1663. In 1667 he was 'now of Dinlabyre' when served heir to his great-grandfather William (who died in 1613), in the lands of Killoley, Bighouse, Heuch-housebrae, Dinlabyre, Easter Flicht, 'Hie-Eshies' and Burnfoot in Liddesdale; in 1691 he appears to have been served again as heir to his great-grandfather William of Hartshaugh in 4 quarters of the lands of Killoley, Brighouse and Heuch-housebrae (called the lands of Dinlabyre), as well as Easter Flicht, 'Hydashes' and Burnfoot. He is probably the William (transcribed as 'of Dunlilerpies') who paid tax on £400 of land in Castleton Parish in 1663. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers). He signed the bond of provision for fulfillment of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs marriage contract in 1677. He paid the land tax on £400 in Castleton Parish in 1678. He was made a Justice of the Peace in 1680. He was said to be one of the local lairds who persecuted Covenanters. A carved stone lintel bearing his initials and the date 1682 is built into a rockery at Dinlabyre and an earlier one dated 1668 might suggest when he had the house rebuilt. In 1691 he was served heir to his grandfather. He firstly married a sister of Archibald, Lord Rutherford and secondly in 1686 married Margaret Scott. His children included: Robert of Dinlabyre, who probably sold Dinlabyre; Thomas; Henry; Gilbert, apprenticed to a periwig-maker in 1692; and Christian. His testament is recorded in 1693. William of Caerlenrig (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. William (17th C.) tenant in Carewoodrig. He is recorded being 'in Carrtridge' in 1685 among local men who were accused of frequenting conventicles and took 'the Test'. William of Meikledale (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Adam of Meikledale. He succeeded on the death of his brother Andrew (who was eldest son of Adam with his 2nd wife, Janet Scott) in 1682. He was served 'heir of tailzie' to his 'brother german' (meaning that they had the same mother as well as father) Andrew's lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope. In 1696 he sold (by 'wadsett and reversion') Meikledale to his nephew William, 3rd son of Walter of Arkleton. He married Barbara Forrester and also possibly a Scott of Merrylaw. His children included Adam (who died at Hartside in 1760) and Lucy. He is said to have died in reduced circumstances, leaving his children unprovided for. He was still alive in 1698. William (17th C.) recorded being '[writer?]' at Casseltoun' when he was incarcerated in Selkirk at the insistence of William 'of Belvie' [possibly Bewlie] for non-payment of annual rents. William (17th C.) recorded as resident at Pinglehole in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Stripshielden in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) tenant in Powisholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Gillfoot in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Westburnflat in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He could be the merchant who witnessed a baptism (along with merchant Robert Brown) for weaver Adam Brown in 1700. William (17th C.) tenant in 'outer slaidhills' according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident at Monk's Croft (in Hassendean Parish) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John who was also listed there. William of Arkleton (1665–1721) 3rd son of Walter of Arkleton, he succeeded to the estate after his father disinherited his older brothers. In 1700 he had a Crown Charter for the lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope, which he purchased from his uncle William of Meikledale. In 1707 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for his brother Adam 'of arcleton att harwood'. In 1692 he married Anne, youngest daughter of Robert (or perhaps Andrew) Ainslie of Jedburgh and she died in 1733; her dowry involved Meikledale. His children included: Katherine (b.1697), who married David Laing of Westerkirk, secondly Charles Telfer minister of Hawick and thirdly Robert Elliot of Fenwick; William (b.1700), who died unmarried; Adam (b.1702), who succeeded and married Christian of Thorlieshope; and Christian (1704–23). He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard. William (17th/18th C.) son of Gilbert 'of the Park'. In 1699 there was a complaint of non-payment by William of Bewlie against him and his father. He was 'in Castletoun' with an additional word that may be 'waiter'. William of Cooms (d.1714) younger son of Robert of Black Tarras (or perhaps the eldest son, it is not clear). He inherited Cooms (half of Black Tarras) from his father. He was declared bankrupt in 1690, but receive a Crown charter of Cooms in 1708 (perhaps being enabled to keep Cooms because his brother-in-law purchased Lodgegill from his brother Simon). He married Helen, sister of William of Thorlieshope. Their children included: John (b.1709), who married Agnes, daughter of Robert Mader of Greenhill; a second son, whose name is unknown; Henry in Sorbietrees, who married Christian Scott of Falnash; and Simon. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in 'Adderstown' (probably Adderstoneshiel) in Cavers Parish. His children included: an unnamed child (b.1698); Jean (b.1701); Frances (b.1704); and Margaret (b.1705). In 1708 he was listed being in 'Etherstonesheils' when his daughter Betty was baptised. William of Wells, 'the Lace-man' (c.1670–1728) descendant of the Elliots of Brugh, he was eldest son of John and Margaret Johnstone, who lived at Southfield and are both buried in Hawick. It is also speculated that he derived from an illegitimate son of Gavin of Brugh, but these generations are quite uncertain. He was an apprentice to merchant Patrick Johnstone, but it is unclear where this was (since there is no record of it in Edinburgh). Johnstone seems likely to have been a relative of his mother and was a Bailie in Edinburgh (perhaps the Patrick who was later Provost of Edinburgh). In 1692 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh and was by that time already a merchant in London.

He was a successful dealer in gold and silver lace, hence his nickname 'the Lace-man', and was also described as the King's tailor in London (but this could be local hyperbole). He owned an estate in Reigate in Surrey. He is referred to as 'of Brugh and Wells', having purchased the estate of Wells in 1706 from Thomas Rutherford; this was on the advice of his son-in-law (Gilbert Elliott), who owned neighbouring farms. He had Wells erected into a barony in 1707 and registered his arms in 1711. He is surely the same Mr. Elliot, born and educated at Nether Southfield, who is recorded as supplying Hawick Parish with a new mort-cloth in 1720. About 1720 he also purchased the estate of Haddon (near Kelso) from Sir Gilbert Elliott (it is said, to help him financially). Further Borders purchases included Ormiston, Hunthill and Scraesburgh. Despite his local lands and importance, he lived mainly in London, visiting the Borders seldom and briefly. He is said to have lost money in the South Sea Bubble around 1720. He worked to have his son-in-law pardoned after he had to flee following the death of Col. Stewart of Stewartfield in 1726. He spent £1000 setting up his son in business in London, and also left 'many thousands of pounds' for the grandchildren of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, his son-in-law. He married Eleanor, whose last name is not known, and she died in 1745; she may be the 'Ellenor Tankard' who married William Elliot in London in 1682. Their children included: William, who succeeded and became a Colonel; John, whose son inherited Wells; Eleanor (d.1728), who married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs; Charlotte (d.1753), who married Maj.-Gen. Roger Eliot (of the St. Germaines family), Governor of Gibraltar, and secondly married a Mr. Burroughs; Arabella, who married John Bishop and had a son Elliot Bishop; and Margaret, who married Jonathan Waggaman. He left a sizeable fortune when he died. When he witnessed his daughter Eleanor's marriage contract in 1702 it was also signed by John Elliot, tailor of London, who must have been a relative, possibly his son. Portraits of him and his wife, and of his daughter Lady Elliott, once hung in Wells House. His will was made at St. Martin in the Fields, and describes his surviving family, as well as mentioning a miniature portrait of his painted by Mr. Harle. He was buried in the Dissenter Burial ground at Bunhill Fields. An inventory of Wells House, drawn up for his son in the second quarter of the 18th century, includes portraits of him and his wife, as well as his daughter,

Eleanor. William of Swinside (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Simon and grandson of William of the Binks and Harwood. He received a charter of Swinside during his father's lifetime in 1674. He was witness to the marriage contract of a daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692. He was 'younger of Swinside' in 1698 when he was on the Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, but just 'of Swinside' when listed as one of the heritors of Roxburghshire who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He was also a Commissioner of Supply in 1704. Sometime before 1702 he married Barbara, eldest daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Wells. She died by 1722 and he remarried, probably to Elizabeth McClean. In 1730 he purchased Sharpitlaw in Kelso Parish, which he conveyed to his son Robert, retaining liferent for himself. He had 9 children: William of Swinside (b.1701); Thomas (b.1703); Sussana (b.1705); John (b.1706); Adam (b.1709); Elizabeth; Walter; George; and Robert of Sharpitlaw. Note that Tancred's history places him as the son of William of the Binks and Harwood, rather than the grandson. A document of 1707 lists William 'younger of Swinsyde', so it is also possible that there was an additional generation. William (1661/2–1731) tenant in Whithaugh and Braidlie. He was eldest son of John of Castlehope and Billhope and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. Around 1730 he bought Whithaugh for his 1st son and Redheugh for his 2nd son. He married Isabella (c.1680–1769), daughter of Scott of Falnash (perhaps Gideon Scott, who would be the right generation, or his brother Robert). Their children included: John of Whithaugh (c.1702–78), who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Gorrenberry; Robert of Redheugh (1709–93), who married Margaret Beattie; and William in Braidlie (1711–71), who died unmarried. Note that the dates of his birth and death are very uncertain, with some sources suggesting he died in 1767, aged 89. He and his wife were buried at Hermitage Chapel. William (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of James of Redheugh and brother of Robert of Larriston. He was grandson of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters'. He will was proved in 1694. According to a family pedigree of about 1704 he 'went away to be a horner'. William of Penchrise (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve. His siblings included Henry in Riccarton, John in Leahaugh, Ninian in Ruecastle, Adam in Catlowdie and Jean (wife of Robert Grieve in Teindside). He is probably the William of Penchrise who was imprisoned and financed for attending a field conventicle at Abbotrule, probably in about 1680. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. Their children included: Gilbert of Mount; John; Walter; James in Millholm; William in Selkirk, who married Marion Elliot; and Adam in Dykeraw. He may also be father of Thomas, who was born in Cavers Parish in 1699. Note that information about this family seems uncertain. William (17th/18th C.) younger son of Adam in Dykeraw, he was tenant farmer in Millbunholm. He is said to have firstly married a Miss Henderson and secondly married Marion Nixon, with whom he had a son William in Dykeraw. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: Beatrix (b.1707); Agnes (b.1710); and Dand (b.1714). William 1st Laird of Wolfelee (1688–1768) second son of Thomas of Oakwood Mill and grandson of Thomas of Borthwickshiels, with his mother being Jean Inglis. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, being sent there by his father, and it is said he did not really settle down to a serious business life until his marriage. He was apprenticed to Andrew Haliburton, W.S. and his own law office was in the Lawnmarket, although later he also had an office in Selkirk (with receipts recorded with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1729, 1733 and probably 1744). He dealt with legal business for Scott of Harden for several decades. He purchased the estate of Wolfelee in 1730 (from his distant relatives, the Eliotts of Stobs), although it is said that he seldom stayed there, except when his legal business took him to the area. He sold off the Stonedged part to his future father-in-law. In 1751 he bought several neighbouring properties from William Kerr of Abbotrule, as well as half of Kirkknowe from Richard Mair. And in 1757 he and his son Cornelius bought 'Forkings of Unthank', 'Eyelee', the 'old Glebe of Hobkirk' and the 'Cleugh or back brae of Unthank' from Thomas Scott of Stonedged. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1722 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and Elizabeth Elliot of Harwood. In 1727 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Stonedged, and she died only 3 years later. In 1732 he lastly married Margaret, daughter of Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, and she died in 1796; there was a portrait painted of her. His children were: Thomas (b.1723, by his 1st marriage), a doctor who pre-deceased his father; Elizabeth (also by his 1st marriage), who married William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, her father's brother-in-law; Cornelius (1733–1821), who succeeded to

Wolfelee; Adam (1740–1804), who married Rose Leonardi, worked in Danzig, and died on the Isle of Wight; Thomas, who died in infancy; Robert, merchant in Amsterdam, who bought Pinnaclehill, Kelso; Samuel, merchant in Antigua; Janet (or Jean), married Maj. Henry Balfour of Pilrig, Leith; and Helen, married Capt. Robert Davidson of Pinnaclehill. Not known as a great land improver, he nevertheless purchased several Border estates, becoming quite wealthy in later life. He was a friend of the Grieves of Braxholme Park, often staying there. He is said to have been tall and handsome. He was healthy and working up until the day he died. William (17th/18th C.) son of John in Harden and grandson of Adam in Dykeraw. He was tenant in 'Hole', which is probably the same as 'Hollows'. His children included William, John and Isabel. William of Harwood (d.c.1736) 3rd Laird (although some say he was 4th), eldest son and successor to his father Henry. He is recorded in bonds of 1693 and 1694 as the eldest lawful son of Henry and in 1697 as 'younger of Harret'. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as 'younger of Harrow'. His father assigned the lands of Harwood, Appotside and Tythehouse to him, suggesting he took over financial control of the family estates, although his father appears to have lived for several years afterwards. He was just 'of Harwood' in 1700 when he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He is listed in 1704 as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Jean (or Jane), eldest daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig by post-nuptial contract in 1700. The witnesses (probably all relatives) were Robert of Midlem Mill, Henry in Hudshouse and his own brothers Walter, John and Henry. They had 10 children: Henry (1700–84), who succeeded; Thomas and John, who died young; Robert, 'Captain', whose son William became Laird of Harwood; Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Milsington; Jean (1709/10–74), who married William Elliot of Lodgegill and Taras; Marion (or 'Mary'), who married John Scott of Weens; and Margaret, Christian and Janet, who all died unmarried (Janet in her 90th year). It is unclear when he succeeded to his father, but certainly by late 1707, when he was involved in the discharge of a bond along with Walter Scott of Todrig (his father-in-law). He had a bond of provision for his children in 1720, updated in 1726. He had a reputation for being eccentric (or perhaps 'of weak intellect') and for not seeing eye to eye with his son and heir, Henry. In

1731 they both ran horses in the annual race held near Hartshaugh, and he tricked his son by buying an old racehorse from Newcastle, which won at a canter; it is said that the cheers could be heard across the Rule valley. He let much of the Harwood estate to James Pott and his brothers, provoking his son into appealing to the Court of Session, and having him placed under trust, with only a small annuity. This 'Bond of Interdiction' was in 1731 and to last 21 years. The appointed trustees were Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill, Thomas Scott of Todrig (his brother-in-law), Henry (his son) and Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. He was essentially forced to resign his lands to his son in 1733. His wife had a contract in 1736 restricting her 'liferent' and handing over the mansion house of Harwood to her son Henry. William of Thorlieshope and Overton (17th/18th C.) eldest son of John of Thorlieshope. His father settled on him several lands, including 'Isgill'. In 1690 Simon of Lodgegill and his brother William of Cooms were declared bankrupt, and he was awarded Lodgegill, which he settled on his own brother Henry. In 1698 he acquired Blackhall and Overton from his father-in-law (Andrew Ainslie), and had a crown charter for these lands. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was appointed Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire in 1704. He could be the Laird of Thorlieshope whose Chaplain, Mr. Tait, was recorded preaching in Hawick in 1721. He forced his cousin's son Adam to sell Meikledale in 1725 to pay off debts. In 1729 he entailed all his lands on his eldest son William. In 1682 he married Christian, eldest daughter of Andrew Ainslie of Blackhall (who had been Provost of Jedburgh). They had at least 10 children, including: William of Thorlieshope and Overton (b.1694), whose 2nd wife was Margaret, daughter and heiress of Arthur Elliot of Harwood; John; Robert; Walter (b.1701); Elizabeth (b.1702); James (b.1704); Walter (again), described as 5th son; Helen, who married William Mather of Greenhill; Christian, who married Adam of Arkleton; Cecile (b.1706), who married William Hall, tenant in Hyndhope; and Andrew (b.1707), tenant in Edgerston Tofts. He moved to Oxnam Parish and is buried there. William (17th/18th C.) cottar in Ashkirk. He married Mary Ker and their son Thomas was baptised in 1715. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1719 he married 'Jesobel' Wilson, who was also from Roberton. Perhaps the same William is recorded at Mabonlaw in 1721 when his son Walter was baptised and in 1726 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be the William at Whitecleughside whose son Walter was baptised in 1727. Either he or a different William was recorded at Alemoor in 1721 when his son James was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) writer in Edinburgh who acted as agent for the Burgh of Selkirk. In 1724 he was paid by Selkirk for researching the town's erection as a regality. In 1733 he was paid for inserting an advertisement for Selkirk Races in an Edinburgh newspaper. He may be the 'younger writer in Edinburgh' in a case with the Burgh of Selkirk. Probably the same writer in Edinburgh had a receipt for salary from the Burgh of Selkirk in 1742 and further receipts for legal work in 1743 (including borrowing the charter of 1449 to establish the establishment of a court of regality in Selkirk), 1745 (including a dispute with Douglas over Selkirk's right to a market). He may be the William also recorded in discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in the 1750s. He is probably from one of the local Elliot families and may be the same as William of Wolfelee. William (1689–1756) 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae, eldest son of William and Isobel Scott. In 1708 he was 'younger' when he was listed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Elliot of Borthwickbrae who in 1715 and 1716 witnessed baptisms for Alexander Scott of Synton (his brother-in-law). In 1721 he leased the west end of Branhholme Muir from the Scotts of Buccleuch for 21 years. Little else is known about him. In 1706 he married Margaret (probably his cousin), daughter of John Scott of Synton, and they had 14 children (mostly baptised in Roberton): William (b.1706), christened at Roberton, but died at sea; Margaret (b.1707), who married Thomas Scott of Wauchope, who later purchased part of the Borthwickbrae estate; John (1711–92), who succeeded to Borthwickbrae; Magdalene (b.1713), who married Walter Grieve of Branhholme Park; Elizabeth (b.1716), who died unmarried in 1809, aged 92 (90 in the Parish Register); Jean (b.1718), who married Thomas Borthwick in Shaws; Alexander (b.1720); Mary (b.1722); Christian (b.1724); Thomas (b.1726); Gilbert (b.1728), who probably died young; Ann (b.1729), who married Thomas Elliot, minister of Kirkton and Cavers in 1760; Gilbert (b.1731), whose son Thomas purchased the Langlands estate; and Isobel (b.1731), who married Walter Elliot of Ormiston, one of the founders of Hawick's carpet-making trade. He must have been quite young when he married. A Robertson Parish record of 1707 relates to Isabel Riddel, who acted as midwife to his wife, the baby being delivered 'before the time'. William of Thorlieshope and Overton (1694–1744) eldest son of William of Thorlieshope. He lived in Oxnam Parish. His father settled on him the lands of Blackhall in 1698, Thorlieshope in 1711 and the remainder were entailed to him in 1729. In 1727 he acquired Demainholm from John of Demainholm and in 1731 he sold Meikledale to William Scott in Meikledale. In 1707 he had an illegitimate child with Isobel Minto, Charles. In 1711 he married his 2nd cousin Margaret, daughter and heiress of Arthur Elliot of Harwood. His wife was recorded as having the third most highly valued lands in Hawick Parish in 1710. They had 8 sons and 6 daughters, including: Robert, who succeeded; James (b.1726); Walter (b.1729); and Andrew (b.1737). Col. William of Brugh and Wells (1696–1764) eldest son of William of Brugh and Wells, 'the Lace-man'. He was guardian for his nephew Granville Elliott (son of his sister Charlotte and the deceased Roger Elliott) around 1720. He joined the Army in 1722 as Coronet in the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards and was then Captain in Churchill's Regiment of Dragoons. He was served as heir to his father in 1730. However, he spent most of his time at his estate near London, with Archibald Jerdan acting as his factor at Wells (and whose surviving rental book from 1728–60 gives a glimpse into the conditions of a Border laird at that time). At Wells he was keen on developing the gardens, had a bowling green, kept dogs and also had fishing and hunting gear. His Border estates included Ormiston (in Eckford Parish) as well as Hadden (near Kelso). In 1737 he became a Major in the Grenadier Guards and was Lieutenant-Colonel by 1741. In 1743 he was at the Battle of Dettingen, where he served as A.D.C. and equerry to King George II. His nephew George Augustus Elliott (later Lord Heathfield) and his cousin Capt. John Elliot (son of Gilbert of Winningtonrig) were officers under him. He resigned his army commission in 1746. He paid the window tax for 'Walls' in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He was elected M.P. for Caine, Wiltshire in 1741 and held the seat until 1754. He went through a long legal battle with Lady Rutherford of Chatto over his father's purchase of Ormiston, this ending in 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is said that he took a keen interest in the well-being of his Elliot relatives. In 1737 he married Lady Frances Nassau d'Auverquerque (apparently against her father's wishes), daughter of Henry, Earl of Grantham, and she died in 1772. They had one child, Henry (b.1741), who died in infancy. The family are buried at St. James', Westminster. He was succeeded by his nephew William Nassau. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick. He married Margaret Balmer (or Bulmer) in Hawick Parish in 1725. Their children included: Helen (b.1728); and Archibald (b.1729), who may be the weaver who married Janet Aitken. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Peelbrae in 1727 and Peelbraehope later. His children included: Janet (b.1727); William (b.1729); and Helen (b.1731). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Crumhaugh, where he is recorded in 1716 and 1718. In 1720 he is 'late tenant in Crumhaugh', but in 1729 was still 'in Crumhaugh'. He is probably the William who (along with John) witnessed a baptism in 1728 for Andrew Leithead, workman in Goldielands. He married Bessie Brown and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Walter (b.1716); Walter (again, b.1718); and William (b.1720), baptised posthumously, presented by his brother John (tenant in Goldielands). The witnesses in 1716 were Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and Andrew Riddell, in 1718 were Andrew Riddell and John Scott, and in 1720 was Beadle John Scott. Probably the same William in Crumhaugh secondly married Margaret Scott in 1726 and their children included John (b.1727) and Christian (b.1729). The witnesses in 1729 were John Elliot (probably his brother) and Walter Scott (perhaps related to his wife). William (1703–91) son of John in Dinlees, he was tenant at Park in Liddesdale. He is mentioned in 1730 as brother of John in Park. He married Miss Scott from Blackhall, probably Helen Scott (1702–74). Their children included: John in Bygate (1731–1808); Margaret (1736–1827), who married Archibald Armstrong in Sorbietrees; and Violet, who married George Dalgleish in Castleton. 'Miss Vilette Elliot, Park' subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. William of Bush (1705–79) 2nd surviving son of John. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Aitcheson, farmer at Eweslees. He inherited Binks from his brother Robert in 1754. He farmed at Arkleton for 20 years, as well as farming Bush and Binks. His children were: John; Henry, who married Jean Laidlaw from Gorrenberry; Christian (b.1738); Jean (b.1740); Robert (b.1742); and Margaret

(b.1745). William (18th C.) younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. He lived in Selkirk. He married Marion Elliot from Linslaw and their children included William, Robert and Mary (who married A. Muir in Whithaugh). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson and Wilton Parishes. He married Bessie Scott from Wilton in 1727. Their children included: Walter (b.1731), born at Whitfield, who is probably the Walter whose children were born at Alton and Wester Groundistone; and Agnes (b.1733), born at Groundistone. The witnesses in 1731 were John and James Scott.

William (b.1706) eldest son of William of Borthwickbrae and Isobel Scott. He died at sea, but the details are not recorded. The farm was inherited by his brother John. William (1707/8–41) son of Robert and Jean ‘Ruan’, he was a merchant in Castleton. He died aged 33 and is buried at Teviothead. John, who married Hannah Grieve, may have been his brother. William (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He was tenant in ‘Hole’ (although it is unclear where this was). His children included William, John and Isobel.

William of Tarras (1708/9–79) son of Henry of Lodgegill and Margaret Elliot of Midlem Mill. His father died in 1714 and his uncle John of Binks was appointed one of his curators. He succeeded to Lodgegill (or Black Tarras) in 1732. He rented Gingenwells from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. He was involved in bonds with Capt. Robert Elliot for Fairnieles in 1761 and Blakehope and Lodgegill in 1763. He was a great breeder of racehorses, and once raced an unknown horse in Newcastle, but was virtually ruined by betting debts when it fell near the post after he had backed it heavily. The financial problems during the American War meant he had to sell Blakehope and Tarras to the Duke of Buccleuch, but he was allowed to lease Dinlees for a modest rent. In 1731 he married Jean Elliot (1709/10–74), daughter of William, Laird of Harwood. Their children included: Henry (1731–90), tenant in Dinlees; Margaret, who married Mr. Haig; Janet, who died unmarried; John (1741–54); Jane (1742–61); William (b.1745), also tenant in Dinlees; and Jean, who married Mr. Crichton. He and his wife are buried at Castleton. William (1711–71) tenant in Braidlie on Hermitage. He was 3rd son of William in Whithaugh and Isobel Scott. He died unmarried and was buried at Unthank, where the stone stated that he died aged 50. However, a family pedigree also suggests he was born in 1694.

William (b.1710) son of Walter in Brugh. He was a cooper (in London according to some sources, but that is surely a transcription error, since his entire family were born and lived locally). He married Hahhah (or Anna) Scott and their children, born in Castleton Parish, were: Elizabeth (b.1755), who married Robert Mathieson from Castleton; Helen (b.1757); Agnes (b.1759), who married William Elliot from Selkirk; Ann (b.1760); James (b.1762); William (b.1764); and John (b.1767), also a cooper. Margaret, who married Thomas Elliot from Hawick, was probably also his daughter. William (18th C.) dyker in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1741 for James Nimmo and in 1742 for shoemaker John Brown. He is recorded as a ‘Diker’ in 1760 when he hired the Hawick mortcloth.

William of Whithaugh (c.1723–76) eldest son of John of Whithaugh. He is probably the William ‘of Whitehaugh’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761, with William ‘junior’ perhaps being his son. He firstly married Margaret Shortreed (c.1735–88) from Essenside (perhaps daughter of Robert) and secondly married Elizabeth Elliot, probably sister of the Laird of Wolfelee; she may be the ‘Betty Elliot of Whithaugh’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1798. His children were: Elizabeth (1754–1815), who married Robert Weir from near Canonbie; Margaret (c.1755–1837), who lived in Kirkcaldy and made a family pedigree in about 1790; Jean (c.1757–1839), who married James Bogle from Kirkcaldy; John (1759–1847), who married Jean Elliot of Binks; Robert (1761–1840), Captain of ‘the Hope’, who married Alison Gregg; William, (1762–1843), W.S., J.P., lived in Hawick; Isobel (1765–1808); Thomas (b.1766) doctor in Carlisle; and James (1769–1824), who was a merchant in Hawick. He is said to have died aged 59, but this seems unlikely given the ages of his parents and siblings. William (18th C.) farmer at Whithaugh in Wilton Parish. In 1756 he married Isabel Jackson and their children included Agnes (b.1757), ‘Ketty’ (b.1759), Helen (b.1761), John (b.1763) and William (b.1766). It is unclear how he might have been related to the contemporary William of Whithaugh. William (18th C.) shepherd at Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. His children included Henry (b.1741), Jean (b.1743) and William (b.1751). Probably the same William was shepherd at ‘Hawkleughlongels’ (which seems likely to be Hawklawtongues) in Hobkirk Parish, having children Jean (b.1745), William (b.1747), Walter (b.1752) and Janet (b.1755). William (18th C.) resident at Southdeanrig in

Cavers Parish. His children included: William (b.1743); Robert (b.1746), possibly the tenant farmer in Powisholm; William (again, b.1748); Janet (b.1750); and Helen (b.1753). William (18th C.) shepherd at the Flex. His wife was Janet Gledstains and their son James was born in 1743. William (18th C.) resident of Toon-o-Rule. He had a daughter Isobel baptised in 1748. William (1722/3–1806) described as ‘portioner in Lanton Mains’ on a tombstone at old Abbotrule Kirk. He must have had a close connection with the Abbotrule area. He may also have been tenant at Knowesouth, recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He married Jean Henderson in Bedrule Parish in 1759, and she died in 1807, aged 79. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Mabel (b.1762); Janet (b.1764); Jean (b.1768); Robert (b.1769), also farmer at Lanton Mains; and William (b.1772). 3 of his children died in infancy. He was probably brother of George, tenant in Doorpool. William Nassau of Brugh (1736–75) only son of John, who was 2nd son of William of Brugh and Wells (‘the Laceman’). In 1764 he was served heir to his uncle Col. William of Wells, and took the additional name of his aunt’s family, Nassau. Also in 1764 he married Martha Tryphena Louisa, daughter of Sir Nathaniel Meade; she died in 1796. Her name was given to a wood on the Wells estate, ‘Mead’s Grove Plantation’. Their only son William, who succeeded, was an M.P. He may have earlier married Mary Scawen of Reigate. In 1775 he purchased West Lees, extending the Wells estate. But he died a few months later at his lodgings in Bath. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Marion or Mary Laidlaw and their children included Adam (b.1750), Henry (b.1753) and Mary (b.1761). Dr. William (18th C.) physician in Jedburgh. He is recorded as liferenter of Dryden and part of Headshaw in 1788. Dryden was then valued at £290 and his part of Headshaw at £116 19s 6d. He was among a group of men to whom Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto granted liferent of part of his lands in order to add them to the Roxburghshire voters’ roll. He may have been related to the Elliots of Minto, William (18th C.) farmer at Nether Stanegarthside, probably son of Thomas. He married Mary (or Marion) Pattison, who died in 1794. Their children included: John (b.1761); Robert (1784–1813); Margaret (1769–1846); an unnamed child (b.1772); and Mary (b.1780). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Dolly, who married Andrew Pattison in Nether Stanegarthside, and died in 1763, aged 64, was probably related to him. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. Probably the same William was father of Gideon (b.1767) and John (b.1777). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, perhaps tenant in ‘Sandridgeshiells’. In 1746 he married Margaret Elliot and they had a daughter Margaret in 1755. William (18th C.) recorded at Cavers in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. William (1723–97) son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He farmed at Winnington Rig and neighbouring farms. He and his father Robert were witnesses for a baptism for William Grieve (farmer in Southfield) and his sister Mary in 1764. He may be the William who was joint possessor (along with Robert Potts) of the farm of Turn in 1779. He was recorded as farmer at ‘Winnington’ on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls and ‘Winningtonridge’ in 1786, continuing there until 1797 when he farmed at ‘Winningtonrigg & c.’ and owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for having 4 non-working dogs at Winningtonrig in 1797. He married Margaret Anderson and she died in 1845, aged 90. Their children were all baptised in Kirkton Parish. Their sons were: Robert (1790–1872), tenant at Teindside; James (b.1791), who died in infancy; and William (1796–1842), tenant at Mangerton. Their daughters probably included: Christian (1786–1880), who married Walter John Grieve, farmer in Southfield; Margaret (b.1788), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1793–1809); and Mary (1795–1837). His will is registered with Peebles Commissary Court in 1798. William (18th C.) tenant farmer at Templehall in Rulewater, recorded in 1751 when the lands were sold. His son William, younger, was also mentioned. His daughter Elizabeth was born in 1750. William (18th C.) Hawick baker, son of Henry in Riccarton and Isobel Elliot. He is probably the William listed as Bailie during the 1760s to 1780s. In 1762 and 1765 he witnessed baptisms for fellow baker Robert Scott, junior. He is recorded as ‘baxter’ in 1763. He is probably the baker who witnessed a baptism for merchant Walter Scott in 1766 and one for shoemaker Peter Wilson in 1777. He was one of the Magistrates during the proceedings for the Division of the Common and in 1769 was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He paid the horse tax in Hawick in the period 1785–90 and 1794. He married Janet (her name sometimes given as ‘H.’) Grieve of the Braxholme Park family. Their children were:

Henry (b.1756); Jean (or Jane, b.1759), who died unmarried; James (b.1761); Walter (b.1763), who died young; and Helen, who married Henry Armstrong from Riccarton Mill (who may have been a cousin). The witnesses in 1763 were Excise Officer Archibald Campbell and merchant Thomas Wilkie. William (c.1714–1806) shepherd at Templehallshiel. He was already herd at Templehallshiel in 1758, when his first child was baptised. In 1757 he married Helen Turnbull (c.1725–95) from Wilton, with the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Hobkirk Parishes. Their likely children are: Robert (b.1758), possibly the cattle dealer in Newcastle; Thomas (b.1761); George (b.1762); Henry (b.1764); and Margaret (b.1770). It also seems likely that he was father of John, labourer around Wauchope. He died in Newcastle and his wife died at Roan. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Betty Wilson in 1756 and they had a son John (b.1760). He witnessed a baptism for James Buckham in 1764. His name also appears to be written in the baptismal records for 1765, but crossed out. William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: John (b.1760); and Helen (b.1761). He is probably the William who married Christian Oliver in Southdean in 1758. William of Arkleton (1735–91) eldest surviving son of Adam and Christina Elliot, he was baptised in Ewes Parish. He succeeded when quite young, and in 1744 had tutors appointed, including Andrew, younger son of William of Thorlieshope. However, the estate was probably heavily encumbered when he succeeded. He became a doctor in Jedburgh, where his children were born. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He paid tax in Jedburgh for having a male servant in the period 1778–85 and a female servant in 1785, as well as the Horse Tax in Jedburgh from 1785. He is probably the Dr. William of Jedburgh who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He may also be the William of Arkleton who was as a voter in Dumfriesshire in the same year. He inherited Thorlieshope through his wife, but sold it to James Jardine, tenant of Arkleton. He firstly married Marie, a sister of Dr. Lindsay, then secondly married Cassandra, daughter of Robert Elliot of Overton, co-heiress of Thorlieshope. His children were: Adam (1774–97), Lieutenant in the 72nd Regiment of Foot, who died unmarried; Robert (1775–1810), Major with the 5th Bombay Native Infantry, who died at sea; William (b.1777), army surgeon, who died unmarried while serving in the West Indies; Margaret ('Peggy', 1779–1816), who married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott of Southdean; John (b.1781); and Gilbert (b.1784). His son Robert succeeded when he returned home in 1803 and his daughter Margaret succeeded in 1810. William (18th C.) farmer at Burnhead and Appletreehall. His wife was Helen Hume and their children included Janet (b.1770), Margaret (b.1773) and Jean (b.1775). William (18th C.) resident of Chisholme in the Borthwick valley. His daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1773. Other children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Alexander (b.1754), William (b.1754), Janet (b.1758), William (b.1764), Walter (b.1766) and Margaret (b.1767). William (18th C.) son of Robert of Redheugh. In 1744 his father had a confirming charter for Redheugh, in which he was assigned the farm in fee. He was later tenant in Hillhouse. He was disinherited by his father in 1786, for reasons that are not recorded. He married Margaret Haliburton from Roughley in 1764. Their children included: William (b.1765), who was a doctor in Newcastle; Robert (b.1767), who was a lawyer in Kirkcaldy; John (b.1769), a merchant in London; Thomas (b.1771) in Hillhouse; and Margaret (b.1774), who married Castleton Schoolmaster Mr. Forsyth. William (c.1745–95) buried in Castleton Kirkyard. His wife was Elizabeth Oliver (c.1759–85) and they had a son James. He was probably related to Walter (1755–77), who died at Tweedenside. He himself died at 'Dedburn'. William (d.bef. 1809) farmer at Myredykes. He was recorded as farmer at Myredykes and other farms on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. His only daughter, Helen, married James Oliver (farmer at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot) in 1797. His wife's death is recorded in Hawick Parish in 1809. Bailie William (d.1795) merchant in Hawick, whose death is recorded. He was Bailie during the 1770s and 80s. It is unclear if he was the same as the baker who was also Magistrate around the same time. He witnessed baptisms for ex-Bailie John Hardie and for Bailie Andrew Scott in 1772 and for George Turnbull and Isobel Hardie in 1777. He could be the William in Hawick recorded in letters preserved in Selkirk in the Walter Mason Collection from the years around 1791. William (c.1740–96) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Crozier (c.1740–82). Their children included: Marion (b.1761); Janet (1765–1838); James (b.1770); and

James (again, b.1772). He died at 'Pigeonhole' and is buried in Castleton Kirkyard. William of Brugh (c.1740–1817) eldest son of Capt. John and Jean Grieve. He was a grandson of Gilbert, who farmed at Winningtonrig, and was descended from the Elliots of Brugh. He is said to have been born in Belgium (presumably where his father was serving), although his siblings were all christened locally. He was given a commission in the Army in 1758, was appointed Cornet in the Inniskilling Dragoons in 1761 and was appointed A.D.C. to Gen. Johnstone (who commanded the forces in Ireland) in 1766, holding that post until 1780, but being transferred to the 11th Dragoons in 1779. He was also Commissary General of Stores for the Army in Ireland. Shortly after being married in 1780 he left the Army and entered the Church. He became Rector of Trim, as well as being Chaplain to Bishop Ossory and also a regimental chaplain. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Nicolas FitzGerald, from Turlough, County Mayo. Their children were John (who died as a young man), Eliza (who married John Mockler from County Meath), Harriet (who married Capt. Elliott Seward, godson of Lord Heathfield), Lt. Col. William (d.1845) and Gilbert (who served in the Army and was Governor of the Island of Paxos). He died in Cheltenham and was buried in St. Mary's Churchyard there. Maj.-Gen. William (1741–1803) only son of Gilbert of Larriston, who was the direct heir of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston. His mother was Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. His father died when he was quite young. He is said to have worked for a while as a tailor's apprentice at Bowanhill (Teviothead), perhaps spent a year at Skelfhill, then entered the service of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs as a stable boy. Being recognised as the head of the clan, Sir Gilbert had him educated and arranged for him to go out as a cadet in the East India Company Artillery in 1761. By 1763 (or perhaps 1764) he obtained a commission and was rapidly promoted, becoming a Lieut.-Col. in 1782. It is said that he distinguished himself in the Carnatic, where he commanded artillery under Sir Eyre Coote. He made a small fortune in the East India Company and was able to resign in 1785, to return home. He repurchased the lands of Larriston (including Nether and Over Larriston and Blackhope) from William Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1786, and added Larriston Rig and (also called Haggiehaugh) in 1790. His lands of Larriston were valued at £834 in 1788. He is recorded at Haggiehaugh on the both the 1797

Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls (when he was a Colonel) and in the same year when taxed for having a male servant. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in at least 1797 and 1798. He was also a Deputy-Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire. He tried to establish his claim to be head of the clan through court proceedings in Jedburgh (presided over by the Sheriff, the same Oliver of Dinlabyre), being formally served heir to his grandfather Robert of Larriston in 1788, and matriculating arms in 1793. Perhaps country life was too quiet for him, because he resumed his commission with the East India Company by 1788. However, it seems unlikely that he returned to India, and may have worked for the company in England, rising to the rank of Major General. He died unmarried and named George Fraser Scott (a son of his cousin) as his heir. A memorial to him in Littleham Church, Exmouth misspells his appellation 'of Larrinton'. He is probably the William from Castleton whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1803. William (1744/5–93) farm worker who lived at Deeburn in the Hermitage valley. His children included Elizabeth (b.c.1770). William (1745–1807) son of William, who farmed at Tarras and Lodgegill. He was tenant in Dinlees on Hermitage Water. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is recorded at Dinlees on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–89 and 1794. He was taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Agnes Amos (c.1753–1842) from Langholm. Their children included: Margaret (b.1781); William (b.1790), who also farmed at Dinlees; and Henry (b.1792) in Colterscleuch. William (1753–1821) son of Robert and Janet Wilson. He was born in Ewes Parish. He married Jean Davidson (1751–1827) from Canonbie and their children were born in New Langholm. He could be the William listed at New Langholm on the subscription list for William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Their children included: Margaret (b.1783); Robert (1785–1849); John (1785–1847), who became a minister in Peebles and married Janet Scott; William (1789–1822), who lived in England; Matthew (b.1791), who died young; Janet (b.1793); and Jane Beatrice (b.1797), who died young. William 'Willie' (c.1750–1827) son of Robert in Hermitage and Janet Scott from Greenwood. He was tenant in Millburnholm. He was the farmer there when Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed visited on their tour around Liddesdale; it seems likely that

Scott took some of the qualities of 'Dandie Dinmont' from him (in addition to James Davidson if Hyndlee). The meeting is described in detail by Scott. He is probably the farmer at Millburnholm who is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1786–1797 and also on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. In 1787 in Hawick he married Elizabeth Laidlaw from Falnash, who died in 1822, aged 72. Their children were: Jean (b.1792); and Robert (1793–1858), who married Mary Scott from Skelfhill and died in Toftholm. One source states he was born in 1759. William (1761–c.1835) son of Rev. Thomas of Kirkton and Cavers. He was an architect in Kelso and may have been the William who became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1775. He built the Teviot Bridge near Kelso 1794–95 (probably to designs by Alexander Stevens). He also designed the extension to the old Wilton Kirk, which was built in 1801. Langholm Town Hall and the houses at Chesters and Crailing were his work, as were renovations at Yair and Drumlanrig Castle. He married Jean Robertson in 1791 and their children included: Esther (b.1792), who married Charles Scott of Knowesouth; Thomas (b.1793), who died in infancy; John (b.1795), W.S. in Hawick and Jedburgh, who married Janet Usher; William (b.1797), surgeon in London; Ann (b.1799) who married Kelso ironmonger Thomas Sibbald; Jean (b.1799); another Thomas (b.1802); Alexander (b.1804); Robert (b.1807); and Walter (b.1810), who carried on the architect's business in Kelso. William Nassau of Brugh and Wells (1766–1818) only son of William Nassau of Brugh and Wells, whom he succeeded in 1775. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having 'a good estate' and supporting Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1778 and 1779 in Hobkirk Parish he was taxed for having 3 male servants. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of the lands of Wells and West Lees (in Hobkirk Parish) and Huntknow (listed in Bedrule Parish), as well as Ormiston (in Eckford Parish) and Hadden (in Sprouston Parish). He was also taxed for having a male servant at Wells in 1794 and 1797 (along with Gilbert Elliott, who was serving as his factor there). Already owner of the Wells estate (which had been erected into a barony by his grandfather), in 1801 he purchased the adjacent Barony of Bedrule from the Kerrs of Cavers Carre. This included the lands of Bedrule, Fulton, Dunionhill, Dunionshank, Bedrule Mill, Gourlaybog and

Poinderhaugh. He became an M.P., for Portarlinton 1801–02 and for Peterborough in 1802–18. He was Chief Secretary for Ireland and was a member of the Privy Council. In Westminster he was called 'the Spectre of the Castle', because he was so thin; however, he was said to be well regarded by his contemporaries. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (when already deceased). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was also recorded as owner of Wells and West Lees, as well as the Barony of Hadden, on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He died unmarried at Minto House. He had named his relative Lord Heathfield (or his son) as his successor to the Wells estate, but outlived them both, so succession fell to Sir William Elliott of Stobs as heir of the line. He left his portrait, plate and library to Lord Minto. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1818. William (1762–88) son of John and Hannah Grieve. He was a surgeon, who died at Cape Coast Castle in Africa. He is mentioned on the family's gravestone in Castleton cemetery. William (1762–1843), W.S., J.P., younger son of William of Whithaugh (descended from Elliot of Mosspebble) and Elizabeth Elliot (probably sister to the Laird of Wolfelee). He was a writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick, where he was also a Justice of the Peace, and he lived in Newcastleton in later life (probably from about 1820). It is also possible he was the writer in Edinburgh who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He was 'Writer in Hawick' in 1789 when he paid tax for having a female servant. He also paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1791–94. He drew up a pedigree of the Eliotts in about 1790 (and made a formal deposition of the document in 1841, when he was living in Newcastleton); this was said to be quite accurate back to the time of his great-grandfather's generation, but incorrect before that. He subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the writer in Castleton who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 and may be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is described as 'Writer Ind.' living in the house of joiner John Cavers in Newcastleton at the time of the 1841 census. He seems to have died without issue. William in Orchard see William Elliot Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1797 he married Janet Gordon from Hawick Parish. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: William (b.1796);

and Frear (b.1798). William (1765–1851) eldest son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton, he was born in Castleton Parish. He may be the William of Liddesdale who studied at Edinburgh University 1784/5. He received a surgeon mate's diploma from the Royal College of Surgeons in Edinburgh in 1794. He was a doctor in Newcastle. In 1808 he received an M.D. from St. Andrews University. He married Jane Grieve, from Newburn. Maj. William (1766–1802) eldest son of Cornelius the 2nd Laird of Wolfelee. He was a Major in the 1st Madras Cavalry and died in Vellore (southern India). His portrait (in a red hunting coat) was painted by Raeburn. Wolfelee was inherited by his younger brother James. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dykecroft, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (d.1816) Town Herd of Hawick. He is 'late Town Herd Hawick' in the record of his death. It is possible he was the same as the William recorded at Whitchesters in 1797. He was already Town Herd in 1800 when the death of his sister Janet is recorded. William (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitchesters in 1797, when he paid tax on 2 non-working dogs. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Hassendeanburn, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. William 5th Laird of Harwood (1766–1835) son of 'Captain' Robert and Elizabeth Pringle of Clifton. He succeeded his uncle Henry, who had considerably improved the estate. Gideon Pott, farmer at Penchrise, was appointed to clear his debts before he succeeded to the estate. Shortly afterwards he joined the recently formed Roxburgh Fencible Dragoons. He was promoted to Major and served under his distant relation Lt.-Col. William Elliot (later Elliot-Lockhart) of Borthwickbrae, repelling the French from Killala Bay in Ireland in 1798. It was claimed that his men were guilty of killing a group of Irishmen who were hiding in a straw barn (this apparently told by a man from an Irish Cavalry regiment who visited Hawick a few years later, whose father and brothers were said to be among the dead). In 1788 his estate consisted of Harwood, Appotside, Fairnielees, Templehall and Kilnknowe, valued at £2143 2s. Also in 1788 he was mentioned as being about to be added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. He subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax in Wells in 1791 and Hundalee in 1792. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses at Borthwickbrae. In 1802 he was made Captain commandant of the western troop of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Volunteers). Every man of the troop assembled (in Jedburgh) at the False Alarm. He was commonly called 'The Major' locally. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1812. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1811 he was recorded on the Land Tax Rolls as owner of Harwood and Appotside, as well as Fairnielees, Templehall and Kilnknowe. In 1819, after troubles over the proposed Reform Act, he suggested forming his own troop of yeomanry to quell the riots, but the offer was declined. He lived for many years at Hundalee (where he paid tax for having a male servant in 1792–94 and the dog tax in 1797), where several of his children were born, and was also tenant at Stonedge. He then leased Weens from 1819 or 1820 for a few years, moving to Greenriver (Stonedge again in 1824) and then Mossburnford. He also had a house in Jedburgh. In 1834/5 he had a new house built at Harwood, but he died before moving into it. In 1804 he married Helen (or Eleanor, c.1783–1846), 2nd daughter of Maj. John Rutherford of Mossburnford. His children were: Robert Kerr (b.1805), who succeeded to Harwood; Eleanor (or 'Ellen', b.1806), who married John Paton of Crailing; and John (b.1809), who married Jane Jerdan of Bonjedward and farmed at Primrosehill. He was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1838. William of Borthwickbrae, see William Elliott Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Wilson in 1791 and their children included Archibald (b.1792), Isabel (b.1794), Janet (b.1796) and Walter (b.1798). William (18th/19th C.) herd to Thomas Oliver in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. His name was entered between those for Longburnshiels and for Stonedge, perhaps giving a clue to the location. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Twislehope according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. William (b.c.1770s) labourer in Newcastleton according to the ballots for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. William (b.c.1780) mason in Hawick. He was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1801, but not before. William (b.c.1780) shepherd at Skelfhill according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Thorlieshope. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots connected with Thorlieshope. William (18th/19th C.) drover in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roan. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Isabel Jackson and their children included William (b.1801) and John (b.1803). They could be the William (aged 65) and Isabela (aged 70) living at Langhaugh in 1841 and recorded as labourer at Langhaugh in 1838–41. William (1770–1824) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Carruthers. He lived at Foulshiels and later Hartsgarth in Castleton Parish. He was probably the 'W. Elliot, Hartsgarth' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Jane Easton and their children included: James (b.1800); Robert (b.1802); George (b.1805); Thomas (b.1807); Ann (1810–92), who married Walter Armstrong; William (b.1812); Betty (b.1815); Walter (1818–99), died a bachelor; Walter (again, b.1819); and Jane (b.1822). He drowned in the Kershope Burn and is buried at Unthank. William (1772–1855) son of George, like his father he was tenant farmer at Doorpool in the Rule valley. He was recorded as tenant in Doorpool on the ballots for the Militia in Southdean Parish in 1799 and 1801. He was a prominent member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. In 1812 he married Isabella Stephenson, who died in 1850, aged 65. Their children included: George (b.1813); Janet (b.1815); Richard (1817–91); William (1819–91); and John (1823–1910), who married Agnes Stevenson Rutherford. His sons Richard, William and John were tenants in Hartwoodmyres for about 50 years. He died at Hartwoodmyres. The family were recorded on a memorial stone at old Abbotrule Kirk. William (c.1778–1843) from Hawick. He married Agnes 'Bone' and they had a son William (c.1800–78), who married Jane Oliver. In about 1833 he emigrated to Canada, settling in Halton, Ontario. William (c.1780–1824) from Castleton Parish, he lived at Gillside. His wife was Mary Murray and their children included: Mary (b.1803); Nelly (b.1811); Betty (b.1815); Christian (b.1818); Eppy (b.1821); and Isabel (b.1824). William (b.1780) son of Walter, who farmed at Henderson's Knowe. He was a miller in Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a miller on the ballot list for the Militia in 1801. In 1816

he emigrated with his family to Smith's Falls, Lanark County, Ontario. In 1802 he married Margaret Scott. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1802); Janet (b.1804); William (b.1806); Adam Scott (1807/8–99), who died in Ontario; Walter; James; Margaret; Janet; John; and Ellen. He is probably the miller whose child is recorded dying in Hawick in 1815. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1800); James (b.1802), probably the grocer in Denholm; Nelly (b.1804); and Betty (b.1806). William (b.1790) son of William, tenant at Dinlees. He was farmer at Dinlees on Hermitage Water, like his father. His children included William, Jessie, Helen and Margaret. He is probably the 'W. Elliot, Dinlee' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. William (c.1790–1853) labourer in Castleton. In 1841 he was at Little Whithaugh with his wife's mother, Jenny Crozier also living with them. In 1851 he was a widower and farm servant at Whithaughburn. He is listed as a farm servant at Whithaughburn in 1835. William (18th/19th C.) labourer listed at 'North Gunholm' (perhaps meant for Greenholm) among male heads of households in 1835. He married Jean Oliver (c.1792–1847). Their children included: Agnes (b.1813); Betty (b.1815); John (b.1817); Jean (b.1819); James (b.1822); George (b.1825); Gideon (b.1828); William Keir (b.1830); and Helen (b.1832). He died at Whithaughburn. William (1789/90–1869) boot and shoe maker in Newcastleton. He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He probably lived at 6 Whitchester Stret. In the 1841 census he is listed with his wife Christian and children Betty, John (also a shoemaker), Ann, Christian and James. His cousin Robert Murray ('Formerly Teacher') was living with him in 1851. He married Christian Elliot (1797/8–1846) and their children included: Betty (b.1819); William (b.1821); Helen (b.1823); John (b.1825); Isabel (b.1827); and Anne (b.1829). He may have been son of cooper John and Betty Crozier, who was born in 1790. William of Brugh (1789/90–1845) eldest surviving son of William, Rector of Trim, and descended from the Eliotts of Brugh and farmers of Southfield. In 1818 he succeeded as head of the Eliotts of Brugh on the death of William of Wells. He became a Lt.-Col. in the Royal Canadian Rifles. He served in the Peninsular Wars and commanded the Niagara frontier, where he died, and where there is a memorial to him in St. Mark's Church. In 1829 he married Mary Ann Charlotte

Moore, daughter of Capt. Moore of the Royal Marines. Their children were: Rev. William, Prebendary of Hereford; and Capt. Henry Sheridan (d.1867). William (1792–1811) youngest son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was 3rd Lieutenant on the H.M.S Fox and died returning from Bengal. William (1794/5–1866) shepherd in Castleton. In 1861 he was on Langholm Street. He married Isabella Armstrong, from Nichol Forest, Cumberland, and she died in 1870, aged 75. Their children included: Walter (1820/1–40); Robert (1825/6–74); Violet; and Agnes (1836/7–90). William (b.1794/5) mason in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was living at Whitecleuchside and in 1851 was at Woodfoot (probably Cleuchfoot). His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Isabella, Francis and William. Perhaps the same William was a widowed dyke builder living at Myrselawgreen with his daughter Jane in 1861. William (b.1795/6) from Selkirk, he was ‘Tacksman, Toll-bar’ at Mackside Toll in 1861. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included James, George and William. William (1796–1842) younger son of William, farmer at Winningtonrig. He farmed at Mangerton and died unmarried. William (1796–1838) son of John and Jean Scott. He was farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish, like his father before him. He was one of the Tory supporters who became a victim during the ‘Tully’s Mill’ mobbings at the 1837 election. He was riding away from the Tower Inn when the mob ‘did attempt violently to seize and stop his horse, and did pursue him with violently jold him down upon the ground, and did tear the greater part of his clothes off his person, and did beat and injure him in his person, particularly in his hand’. William (1797–1869) younger son of William, architect in Kelso and grandson of Rev. Thomas of Cavers. His brother John was a lawyer in Hawick. He was born in Kelso and became a surgeon in London. He married Sarah Georgina Miller and they had 14 children. William (b.c.1800) son of John, labourer at Wauchope Gardens. His children were born at Saughtree in Castleton Parish, although he was living at Wauchope Cottages in 1841 and Tythehouse in 1851 and 1861. He was Farm Steward at Tythehouse in 1861. He married Margaret Murray (who died before 1851) and their children included: Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1822); John (b.1823); Margaret (b.1824); Thomas (b.1826); James (b.1828); Scott (b.1830); Anne (b.1832); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Peter Cairns. William (1801–64) hosiery manufacturer who founded William Elliot & Sons in 1823. He was son of James of Goldielands and brother of Dr. Adam and of Margaret, who married John Wilson, ‘the Dip’. He served his time as a stocking-maker, then built up his own business in Slitrig Crescent (around No. 6). His business is listed as a hosiery manufacturers on the Crescent in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was an executor for the estate of fellow manufacturer John Nixon in 1849. In 1851, essentially as an extension of his nearby factory he built Tower Mill over the Slitrig and paid for a new bridge (now part of the Kirkstile) to be built in place of the Auld Brig (which was demolished, with the approval of the Town Council and Roads Trustees). As a result he obtained possession of the stone from the demolition of the Auld Brig, some of which found its way into other buildings. He was one of the Orrock Trustees. He was also a Town Councillor from 1861, and his portrait hangs in the Museum. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He lived on the Crescent. It was said that the citizens of Hawick, keen to hear about the future fortunes of the hosiery industry, looked forward more to his speech at the New Year’s factory festival than they did to the throne speech! He is also supposed to have said that he preferred hosiery because ‘though it was not so profitable, it gave most employment in proportion to the capital invested’. He was probably the William whose heirs are recorded in about 1874 owning part of the ‘particate lands’ once owned by shoemaker Robert Oliver. He married Isabella Scott (b.c.1806) in 1836. Their children included: Jane Carfin (b.1836); Agnes (b.1838); James (b.1840); William Scott (b.1843); and Adam (b.1844). His 2 sons carried on the firm of Elliot’s. He died at the old family home of Goldielands. William (b.c.1802) son of Robert, tenant in Powisholm. He farmed at Harden in Castleton Parish. He married Jean Pattison (b.c.1811). Their children included: Robert (b.1839); and William (b.1843). William (19th C.) blacksmith and leader of the Jedburgh drum and fife band. He walked to Hawick in 1832 after the Reform Bill was defeated in the House of Lords, calling on Hawick men to follow him to London to overthrow the Lords, a threat he was talked out of. He later left Jedburgh, then emigrated to America, where he set up the Elliot Frog and Switch Company in St. Louis, which helped build the U.S. railroads. William (19th C.) from Hawick, he is recorded as winner of the ‘standing high leap’ at the 1834 Common Riding Games. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William Scott of Peel see William Scott-Elliot. William Scott of Arkleton see William Scott-Elliot. William (1812–c.78) raised by William and Jane Easton, he appears to have actually been the illegitimate son of William's younger brother Thomas (i.e. the man whom he would have called uncle) with Isobel Aitchison (who may have died in childbirth). He was shepherd at Scotch Kershope in at least 1841–1861. In 1841 he married Christian Crozier (1806–77). Their children included: John (1842–79), died at Whithaugh Mill; William (b.1844); Walter Nichol (1846–82), died at Millburn; and James (1848–1928), farmer. William (1814–67) son of Robert and Janet Black. He was a joiner on the Loan. He was listed as a joiner at about 2 Loan in 1851 and as 'House Proprietor' at 2 Loan on the 1861 census. He married Helen Smith, and their children included: Robert (1851–1930), who married Isabella Mitchell; Helen T. (b.1852), who lived in Liverpool; Peter Smith (1854–1915), who married Jane Drinnan; Janet B. (1855–1933), who married Alfred Hannah; Elizabeth (1857–1934); William R. (1859–1934), who was a teacher; and Martha (1863–1945), also lived in Liverpool. His younger brother John Scott Elliot was Cornet. William (1817–98) son of Henry in Colterscleuch and Dinlees. He was tenant in Colterscleuch. He was helping his father with the farm according to the 1851 and 1861 censuses. William (b.1817/8) from Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Arkleton in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Jane, Esther and Henry. William (b.c.1819) agricultural labourer, born in Castleton. In 1851 he was a cattle-feeder at Rule-townhead in Southdean Parish and in 1861 was a ploughman at Broadhaugh in Teviothead Parish. He married Jemima Elliot and their children included Elizabeth (b.1852), Isabella (b.1854), John, Margaret and Matthew. William (1819–91) son of William, tenant at Hartwoodmyres. He farmed at Hartwoodmyres along with his brothers Richard and John. He was recorded at Hartwoodmyres in 1868. William (1820–97) shepherd of the Ewes valley and elsewhere. He married Helen (1821–63), daughter of Robert McVittie from Fiddleton, and secondly married Elizabeth Little. Their children included: Jean (1846–1929); Esther (1846–96); Henry (1850–1940); Janet (1851–62); Helen (b.1854); William (1856–1920); Elizabeth (1859–1933); John Henry (1861–1925), who died in Waimate, New Zealand. He died at Peelbraehope and was buried in Ewes Kirkyard.

William (19th C.) recorded at 'Road End' near Newcastleton in 1868. This could perhaps be the same as Steeleroad-end. William (1828–91) son of Robert and Eleanor Davidson. His father was farmer at Millburn in Castleton Parish. In 1861 at Lochburnfoot near Teviothead he married Helen (1839–1920), daughter of James Miller and Euphemia Winthrope. At that time he was living at Falnash. In 1862 they emigrated to New Zealand, and he died at Nevis, Central Otago. Their children were Euphemia Wintrup, Helen Davidson, Jane, Isabella Douglas and Ann Jemima. Rev. William Hume 'Hume' (1837–1927) from Hawick, son of Thomas and Margaret Hume. He was brother of James, merchant in the Sandbed. He trained as a writer's apprentice in Hawick. He went to Edinburgh University in 1859, and was minister at Haltwhistle in Northumberland. In 1874 he became minister of the St. Andrews Presbyterian (Dundee) Church in Ramsbottom, and served until his retirement in 1907. He wrote 'The Country and Church of the Cheeryble Brothers' (1893), and 'Story of the 'Cheeryble' Grants: from the Spey to the Irwell' (1906), describing the real life counterparts of the Scotsmen used as inspiration for characters in Charles Dickeons 'Nicholas Nickleby'. He also wrote verse, for example 'God and our Country', about the Covenanters, as well as verse in both Scots and Lancashire dialects. He was a keen member of the Bury and District Burns Club as well as the Manchester Branch of the Dickens Club. He was said to have a 'remarkable command of the Scotch language and Scotch dialect, and also of the Lancashire dialect'. He married a daughter of P.L. MacTaggart of Liverpool. He is buried in Wandsworth Cemetery, London. William (19th C.) Hawick's first cabman. His daughter Jessie married Alexander Kyle. William 'Wullie o Gowdlands' (or Goldielands) (19th C.) simple-minded soul who lived at Goldielands, and liked to dress up for special occasions, marching in front of the Saxhorn Band, the Volunteer Band, with the Cornet, etc. He was long remembered for one occasion when he arrived the night before a band event so as not to sleep in. William Claude 7th Laird of Harwood (1835–1922) eldest son of Robert Kerr. He succeeded to Harwood in 1873, with Clifton going to his brother Robert. He was born at Greenriver and baptised at Mossburnford. Educated at Cheltenham College, he entered the army in 1854 and soon became a Lieutenant in the 9th (Norfolk) Regiment. He was decorated in the Crimean War, but had retired from the army after only about 2 years. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was a keen hunter and also proficient in boxing. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of the farms of Harwood, Appotside and others. In 1876 he married Bertha Eliza, daughter of William Charles Blackman of Southsea, and she died in 1895. After his marriage in 1876 he lived mainly in Wales, seldom visiting Harwood, which was let out for the hunting season. He had no children and was succeeded by his nephew Thomas. William (b.1838/9) born in Castleton Parish, he was a cattleman, living at Adderstone Shiels Cottages in 1901. His wife was Christina and their children included ploughman James. Col. William Scott (1841–aft. 1919) son of William Scott, with whom he is easily confused, his mother being Isabella Scott. He had brothers Adam of Caver-ton and James of Mosstower. He ran the factory at Tower Mill and lived at Teviot Lodge. Some time before 1900 he installed electric lighting at his house at Teviot Lodge, using wires running from his factory at Tower Mill. In 1859 he (or perhaps his father) instigated setting up a company of Hawick Volunteers, and he eventually became Colonel of the Battalion. In 1874 he won a shooting competition between Volunteers from around Scotland. He was later Major and Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel of the Battalion's successors, the Border Rifles, serving until 1891. He was also a keen meteorologist, and regularly sent his readings to G.J. Symons who published British Rainfall readings. He donated fossil shells to the Museum. In 1919 he retired from the firm of William Elliot & Sons, and passed ownership to his son, who was also William Scott. He married Margaret Cadenhead, daughter of Dr. George William Thompson. He secondly married Elizabeth MacNee. His second daughter was Isabella. His youngest daughter Margaret (b.1879) married manufacturer William Boyd Sime. Teviot Lodge was gifted to the High School by his daughters in 1933. William (1830/1–1903) eldest son of Lt.-Col. William, he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh in 1845. He was educated at Cambridge and trained as a minister, becoming Prebendary of Hereford Cathedral and Rural Dean of Hereford. He married Anne Louise Bennett in 1829 and their children were Col. William (who wrote 'The Elliots of Brugh and Wells') and Gilbert John. He wrote a study of Ecclesiastical Dilapidations. Lt.-Col. William Fitzwilliam Elliot (1849–1928) 4th son of the 3rd Earl of

Minto. He served with Princess Louise's Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. In 1880 he married Elizabeth Fanny, daughter of John Rutherford of Halifax, Nova Scotia. His children were Mary Adelaide (who married Sir John Hepburn Milne-Home), Margaret Cecil Anne (who married Maj. Frederick Adrian Cathcart) and John Augustus Gilbert (who worked in Kenya). William Scott (19th/20th C.) son of Col. William Scott of Teviot Lodge. He took over the hosiery firm of William & Elliot and Sons when his father retired in 1919. William (b.1859) son of Walter of Hollybush and descended from the Elliots of Newhall, he was an auctioneer in Muirglen, Lanark. He farmed at Langburnshiels on the Harwood (on Rule) estate and in 1924 he bought the whole estate from the 8th Laird, Thomas Robert Barnewall Elliot. He was a prominent auctioneer in his day, who was well known in agricultural circles. In Glasgow in 1866 he married Ellen Elizabeth Shields, daughter of a farmer. Their children were Ellen Elizabeth (who married Lt.-Col. John Craig of the Royal Scots Fusiliers) and Walter, who also farmed at Harwood and was an M.P. William of Brugh (b.1861) elder son of Rev. William, Prebendary of Hereford. He matriculated arms in 1902, establishing his descent from Gavin of the Brugh and Robert of Redheugh. He wrote the book 'The Elliots of Brugh and Wells'. In 1890 he married Mary Frances (d.1919), daughter and co-heiress of Arthir B. Warre of Westfield House, Ramsgate. Their only child was Allison Mary, who married her cousin Lt.-Col. George Augustus Elliot of the Royal Irish Regiment. Sir William of Brugh (1896–1971) born in Wormit, Fife, elder son of Gilbert John of Brugh, he became head of the Elliots of Brugh. He joined the army in 1915, becoming a pilot in 1918 and was shot down and rescued in Russia in 1919. He rose to become Air Chief Mashall and Chief Staff Officer to the Minister of Defence, also receiving a knighthood. He married Elizabeth Rosemary Alice Chancellor and their children were Louise Elizabeth Rosemary and Simon John. Willot (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Along with Roland and some Armstrongs, Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for bringing them to the area to attack the tenants of Whitmuir. They are described as 'traitors of Leven', but are as likely to have been from Liddesdale as England. Lauder's crimes also included resetting Elliots, Armstrongs, Fosters and others who were traitors; this makes it seem likely he and Roland were already declared as rebels before this time. His name is recorded as 'Willot elwald', but this is odd, since 'Willot' was sometimes a variant of 'Elliot'. Zandra see Alexandra (also formerly spelled 'Elot' and permutations including 'Ellat', 'Ellet', 'Elleott', 'Elliot', 'Ellot', 'Ellote', 'Ellott', 'Eliot', etc., as well as variants such as 'Ellwalld', 'Ellwand', 'Eluand', 'Elwalde', 'Elwode', 'Elwolde', 'Elwood', 'Eluat', 'Ilwand' and even 'Willat'; see also Eliott and Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound).

Ellioti (e-lee-o-tee) n. specific name for several species found on or around the Indian subcontinent, which were first described by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. They are specifically: Buceros, hornbill; Dendrocopus, woodpecker; Golunda, groove-toothed mouse; Leopardus, leopard; Pernis, honey buzzard; Platydoris, sea slug; Syrmaticus, pheasant; and Tupaia or Anathana, tree-shrew (also spelled 'Elliotti' and 'Elliottii').

Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound (e-lee-i'-muri-kin-in-mund) n. Arthur Ralph Douglas (1846–1923) son of William Hugh and brother of Gilbert John, the 4th Earl of Minto. He was editor of the Edinburgh Review and Liberal M.P. for Roxburghshire 1880–92. In 1880 he defeated Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas by only 10 votes. He also defeated Charles Barrington Balfour of Newton-Don in 1885 and Mark Francis Napier in 1886, when he had become a Unionist. However, he lost in the rematch of 1892, although he returned as an M.P. for Durham 1898–1906. He was Financial Secretary to the Treasury 1903–06. In 1888 he married Harriet Dagmar Ryan and they had 2 children, Robert Douglas (who died young) and Capt. Hubert William Arthur (of the Wiltshire Regiment). Emma Eleanor Elizabeth nee Hislop (1824–82) daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Hislop and wife of the 3rd Earl of Minto. She wrote several works relating to family history, including 'A Memoir of the Right Hon. Hugh Elliot' (1868), 'Life and Letters of Sir Gilbert Elliot, first Earl of Minto' (1874), 'Lord Minto in India' (1880) and 'Border Sketches' (1870). George Francis Stewart (1822–1901) son of Gilbert, the 2nd Earl of Minto. He wrote 'The Border Elliots and the Family of Minto' (1897) as well as some other works. He was a local M.P., and was given a celebratory dinner in the Exchange Hall in 1868. He died unmarried. Gilbert see Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot. Gilbert (1782–1859) 5th Baronet and 2nd Earl of Minto, born in Lyons. He was son of Gilbert the 1st Earl, who had adopted the extra surname after inheriting titles through marriage. Educated at Edinburgh University and Cambridge. He was Captain of the Roxburgh Militia 1802–05, and later (from about 1808) Lt.-Col. Commandant of the 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia. He became M.P. for Ashburton in Devonshire, and then for Roxburghshire from 1812 (following a long family tradition), defeating Alexander Don by 6 (or perhaps 7) votes. He was only M.P. until 1814, when he succeeded as Earl, taking up his seat in the House of Lords. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was an early member of the Jedforest Club, but resigned in 1834 following a dispute over politics. It was suggested that he intervened during the 'Lang Stand Oot' of 1822/3. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1825 and subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in that year. He was ambassador to Berlin 1832–34, First Lord of the Admiralty 1835–41, and Lord Privy Seal 1846–52. It is said that while he was in charge of the Admiralty there was a complaint raised about the number of Elliots who held positions in the Navy. He was also Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and a member of the Royal Society. He retired to Minto House in 1852. In 1806 he married Mary, daughter of Patrick Brydone (traveller and author) of Lennel House near Coldstream, and she died in 1853. They had 10 children: Mary Elizabeth (d.1874), who married Baron Dunfermline; Francis Anna Maria (d.1898), who married Lord John Russell; Elisabeth Amelia Jane (d.1892), who married Frederick Romily; Charlotte Mary (d.1890), who married Melville Portal; Harriet Anne Gertrude (d.1855); William Hugh (1814–91), who became 3rd Earl; Adm. Sir Charles Gilbert John Brydone (1810–95), who married Loiusa Blackett and Henrietta Emily Liddell; George Francis Stewart, who was also Roxburghshire M.P.; Lt.-Col. Gilbert, who married Katherine Anne Gilbert; and Sir Henry George (1817–1907), who married Anne Antrobus. Gilbert John (1845–1914) 4th Earl of Minto, eldest son of William Hugh. Born in London, he was educated at Eton and Cambridge. He was known as an allround sportsman in his youth, excelling on horseback and running, as well as at rowing, shooting and angling. He served in the Scots guards 1867–70 and in 1871, along with 2 of his brothers, was in Paris during the Commune. He rode in the Grand National 5 times (breaking his neck in 1876) and won the Streeplechase de Paris in 1874. He was newspaper correspondent in a number of wars and an officer in others (serving in the Scots Guards), this taking him to various parts of Europe, Asia and Africa. He was Commandant of the Border mounted volunteers. He first went out to Canada in 1883 as military secretary to the Governor-General, and there helped suppress the rebellion led by Louis Riel, being present at the battle of Fish Creek. Back in Scotland, he was heavily involved with the Border Mounted Rifles and in 1889 became Brigadier-General of the Scottish Border Volunteer Brigade. In 1891 he succeeded to the Earldom of Minto, before which he had the title of Viscount Melgund. In 1898 he was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick at a public banquet held in the Town Hall. He became Governor-General of Canada in 1898, serving until 1904 and then was Viceroy of India (1905–1910), being jointly responsible for the Morley-Minto reforms of 1909. He returned to Scotland in 1910, but did not long enjoy his retirement. In Hawick he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1898, following his appointment as Governor-General of Canada, and Minto Place was named after him. In 1883 he married Mary Caroline, daughter of Gen. Charles Grey. They had 5 children: Eileen Nina Evelyn Sibell (1884–1938), who married Lord Francis George Montagu-Douglas-Scott, 6th son of the Duke of Buccleuch; Ruby Florence Mary (1886–1961), who married the 2nd Earl Cromer; Violet Mary (1889–1965) who firstly married Lord Charles George Francis Mercer Nairne and secondly became Lady Astor; Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet (1891–1975), who succeeded; and Gavin William Esmond (1895–1917), who was killed at Flanders. Photographs of him show a fine handlebar moustache. He died at Minto House and was buried there. Many streets, schools, parks and towns (particularly in Canada and India) were named after him. Sir Gilbert Edward George Lariston ‘Gibbie’, O.B.E., J.P. (1928–2005) 6th Earl of Minto, succeeding his father in 1975. He was baptised in S.S. Mary & David in Hawick. Queen Mary was his Godmother. Educated at Eton and Sandhurst, he was commissioned into the Scots Guards and served as aide-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief in the Far East and then Cyprus. He returned to run the farm at Minto, and played an active part in local affairs. He was elected to the Borders Regional Council, serving Hermitage Ward in 1974–80 and 1980–96, as well as being Convenor for the period 1990–96. In politics he was an independent. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire from 1961 and was Depute Lieutenant for Roxburgh, Ettrick and Lauderdale. He was called ‘Gibbie’ by his friends, the same nickname used generations earlier in his family. He was a Brigadier in the Royal Company of Archers, the Queen’s bodyguard in Scotland. He served on several national committees, including being President of the South Scotland Chamber of Commerce, and was awarded the O.B.E. in 1986. A battle with the Secretary of State for Scotland in 1991, where he objected to the preservation order placed on Minto House, led to its demolition. In 1952 he married Lady Caroline Child-Villiers, and after a divorce married Miss Ballantine of New Jersey, and had 2 children: Gilbert Timothy George Larriston (b.1953), who succeeded; and Laura (b.1956). Gilbert Timothy George Lariston of Minto (1953–) son of Gilbert Edward George Larriston, he became 7th Earl of Minto in 2005. Hugh Frederick Hislop (1848–1932) 3rd son of the 3rd Earl of Minto. Like several members of his immediate family he served as an M.P., for the North Division of Ayr, 1885–92. In 1879 he married Mary Euphemia, daughter of Col. Samuel Long. His children were Nina Emily (who married Sir Charles Lennox Somerville Russell), Mabel Victoria (who married Hugh Munro and secondly married William Stewart McGeorge and Lieut. Hugh Samuel Roger of the Coldstream Guards. Sir Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet (1891–1975) 5th Earl of Minto, son of Gilbert John. He was known as Viscount Melgund until he succeeded his father in 1914. He was educated at Eton, being then commissioned into the Lothian and Border Horse before entering the Scots Guards in 1913, becoming a Captain and serving through WWI. After the war he read the Roll of Honour for the fallen in WWI in St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. He then went to Canada as A.D.C. to the Governor-General. Returning to Scotland, he ran his estate and played an active role in local work, becoming a Justice of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1924. In 1930 a portrait of the 1st Countess Minto by Joshua Reynolds was stolen from his private collection at Minto House and has never been recovered. In 1921 he married Marion, daughter of George William Cook of Westmount, Montreal. They had 4 children: Bridget Elliot (1921–2005), who married Lt.-Col. James Averell Clark and Maj. Henry Claude Lyon Garnett; Willa (b.1924), who married Maj. George David Chetwode; Gilbert Edward George Larriston (b.1928), who succeeded; and Lieut. George Esmond Dominic (b.1931), who married Countess Marie-Anna Esterhazy, ‘Bunny’. William Hugh (1814–91) 3rd Earl of Minto, eldest son of

Gilbert. He was Liberal M.P. for Hythe 1837–41, Greenock 1847–52 and Clackmannanshire 1857–59. In 1859 he succeeded to the Minto titles. In 1860 he had a writ for the lands and Barony of Headshaw, part of Hassendean Common and Langhope. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, served on the Lunacy Board for the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick and chaired the Board of Lunacy Commissioners for Scotland. He was also a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as on the county Prison Board. He was a staunch supporter of the Established Church. He gave the main speech at the inauguration of the Leyden Monument in Denholm in 1861. He was also Patron of Hawick and Wilton Football Club. In 1844 he married his cousin Emma Eleanor Elizabeth, daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Hyslop (or Hislop). They had 4 children: Gilbert John, who succeeded; Arthur Ralph Douglas, barrister, who married Madeleine Harriet Dagmar Ryan; Hugh Frederick Hislop, M.P., who married Mary Euphemia Long; and Lt.-Col. William Fitzwilliam, who married Elisabeth Fanny Rutherford. He died in London. William Brownrigg (1820–1900) eldest son of John Esmond Elliot, M.P. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire and a Commissioner of Supply for the county. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He resided at Benrig, near St. Boswells. In 1858 he married Mary Geraldine, daughter of Justin McCartie of Carrignavar, County Cork. Their children were William Gerald and Cyril Herbert, both of whom died unmarried (whether the extra names are included in the Elliot surname or as middle names is confusing in these generations, with the triple-barrelled surname typically being only adopted by the Earl of Minto; note that ‘Kynynmound’ is also spelled ‘Kynnmond’ etc.).

the Elliot Bandstand (thu-e-lee-it-bawnd-stawnd) n. bandstand constructed in the Park in 2015 on the site of the former structure, named in commemoration of Zandra Elliot (see also the Bandstand).

the Elliots (thu-e-lee-it-z, e-litz) n. important local family since at least the 15th century, thought to have been granted land in Liddesdale sometime in the 12th to 14th centuries, perhaps originally as vasals of the Douglasses. There are theories and legends of how they came originally from Angus or from Eliot (now called Arbirlot) in Forfarshire, or were descended from a Norman soldier named ‘Aliot’. This might be consistent with ‘William Alight, burgois de Seint Johan de Perth’ (who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296) being a direct ancestor of Elliots who were granted land in Liddesdale, perhaps in the time of Robert the Bruce. Another version of the origin of the name is that it derives from the old English personal name Elwold; this is consistent with some of the earliest local recordings of the name as ‘Elwald’, ‘Ellwand’ and variants (although it is possible that this was simply a scribal affectation). Probably the most likely early history has a Breton origin, perhaps ‘Halegouët’ (or Huelgoat), with land (later called ‘Alyth’) being given in Perthshire around the late 12th century, then moving to Liddesdale when given the lands of Redheugh around the early 14th century. There were people of that name close to the Borders from at least the 13th century (e.g. ‘Elewald’ and ‘Helewald’ in England in 1230, and Reginald son of Eliot in Dumfriesshire in the period 1242–95); the close geographic connection makes these people seem like likely ancestors for the Border Elliots, although other branches may have a different origin entirely. The first recorded example in the Borders may date from 1425/6 and there is certainly a ‘Johannis Elwald’ in 1436 and Gilbert in 1453. They grew more powerful and numerous through the 15th century and in the 16th century effectively took over control of Liddesdale from the Armstrongs. In 1494/5, among a list of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justiceaire there were listed 27 Elliots. They then had a reputation as notorious rievvers, e.g. the Master of Hailes brought in ‘the Elwands’ in 1515/6. The clan submitted to England in 1547, with 74 men giving their pledges to Lord Wharton. Under Martin of Braidlie they were particularly powerful in the 1560s, but this led to a deadly feud with the Scotts, which included burning Hawick in 1565! A letter of 1583 lists the leaders of the family in Liddesdale. The clan suffered after the Union of the Crowns and attempts at ‘pacification’ of the Borders. The Elliots of Minto are derived from a grandson of the Eliotts of Stobs (who spelled their name differently), who in turn come from the earlier Chiefs at Redheugh in Liddesdale. The family moved their seat to Stobs for some time, although the chief once more sits at Redheugh. The Elliots of Brugh were also once well represented in Hawick, with other branches such as the Elliots of Horsleyhill and Wolfelee also being locally important. Elliots have been famous as soldiers, administrators and landowners. A pedigree of the family, dated about 1704, was discovered among the papers at Minto. The clan motto is 'Fortiter et recte' (boldly and rightly) – 'The double L and single T Descend from Minto and Wolflee, The double T and single L Mark the old race in Stobs that dwell, The single L and single T The Eliots of St. Germain's be, But double T and double L Who they are, nobody can tell' [T], 'Land of Eliots and of fame, Of every bold and Border name, The Scottish pulse still beats the same Through kindly-hearted Liddesdale' [DA].

Elliot's (e-litz, e-lee-itiz) n. stockingmakers of the mid-19th century, William Elliot & Sons, with their factory in Slitrig Crescent (probably No. 6), as well as at Tower Mill. The firm began around 1820, growing out of Waldie, Elliot & Co. (the Crescent), with Wilson & Elliot (Tower Knowe Mill), being formed in 1823. Elliot went on his own from 1830, later giving up spinning and focussing on hosiery. The firm was still listed at the Crescent in Slater's 1852 directory. It acquired Stonefield Mill and the old Waulk Mill in 1850 and had the new Tower Mill built (also on the site of the Auld Brig) in about 1852. The same firm later built Buccleuch Mills on Green Lane in 1862 (more recently Glenhowe). It had sseparate factories for spinning and knitting. In 1869 it is recorded that the firm employed 617 men, women and children, manufacturing 'Cheviot wool stockings, drawers and undershirts'. In 1871 the 3 locations employed 490 people between them, spinning 70 tons of wool and manufacturing 70 tons of goods. In 1896 J.P. Alison designed a new wool store for the factory.

Elliot's (e-litz) n. building firm of J. & R. Elliot in the 20th century. They purchased land from Watson's at 30 Commercial Road in about 1950. The firm was run by Ian Elliot from the 1960s and then his wife Zandra from 1990.

Elliots Field (e-litz-feeld) n. isolated house by the Slitrig, seen from the Waverley Line between Stobs and Shankend. It is on the east side of the Slitrig, by Fleety Wood and was later called Fleety Cottage. Andrew Beattie appears to have been tenant or shepherd there in the 1820s and 30s. Robert Grieve and his wife were there in 1861, along with a domestic servant and 8 lodgers who were working on the railway. Robert Grieve was there in 1861 and R. McLean in 1868. Some shale from here, part of the Riccarton Beds, were found to contain graptolite fossils, including specimens of the species called 'Monograptus riccartonensis' (marked 'Elliotsfield' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, it was recorded as 'Elliottfield' in 1857 and 'Eliotsfield' in 1860).

Elliot's Folly (e-litz-fo-lee) n. popular name used for a building constructed by Henry Elliot, Laird of Harwood in the mid-1700s. It was built on a small hill near an ancient camp, was thatched with heather and used by the Laird to watch his workers.

Elliotside (e-li'-sīd) n. lands that were formerly part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers, precise location uncertain. There are deeds relating to the lands in 1545, 1566 and 1614.

Elliot's Mill (e-litz-mil) n. former name for Toor Mill.

Elliott (e-lee-i') n. Nichol (b.1835–1904/5) born in Cornhill, Northumberland, near Coldstream, where his father was schoolmaster. He became a joiner, working around the Borders. In the late 1850s he worked at Wilton Lodge, which was then being renovated for David Pringle. His 'Literary Hours of a Working Man' (1862) consists of prose and verse pieces, many from around this time, some having been previously published in the Hawick Advertiser. He also had poetry and prose printed in the Border Treasury (in the 1870s), as well as a longer story 'Nellie Macpherson'. Later he worked as Clerk to Sunderland Police Court and published essays and poems in papers from Sunderland and Newcastle (see also Elliot).

Ellit see Elliot

Ellot (e-li') n. older spelling of 'Elliot' or 'Eliott', common into the mid-17th century. This spelling reflects the common local pronunciation (also written 'Elot' and other variants).

ellwand (el-wawnd) n., arch. a measuring rod one ell (about 37 inches) long, a yardstick – '... for ane elwand after the form of any other standard, vizt., to be made of iron jumpt after the length of the standart elwand of the town and burgh of Jedburgh for tryell of the ellwands' [BR1687], '... the ellwand or yard-stick used in the course of his business by his great-grandfather, who was known by the soubriquet of 'Handless Wat'' [WAPJ] (also written 'elwand').

Ellwand see Elliot

elm (e-lum) n. elm (note normally pronounced as 2 syllables).

Elm Bank (e-lum-bawngk) n. original name of villa-type house at 6 Fenwick Park. It was built for Burgh Surveyor John Manuel in 1884, to designs by Manuel himself. The land was previously owned by Thomas Laidlaw of Sillerbuthall and joiner John Inglis, and before that the Turnbulls of Fenwick and Brieryyards. The access road became known as 'Manuel's Brae'. The house was bought by Robert Scott-Noble about 1900 and renamed ‘the Elms’. It was used as Wilton Manse in the period 1945–90 and then renamed ‘Ellistrin’ when purchased by Ron and Eileen Smith.

Elmbank (e-lum-bawŋk) n. small house in Denholm that used to be the preacher’s house attached to the Cameronian Chapel.

Elm Cottage (e-lum-ko’eej) n. former cottage to the north of Elm House, off the Green in Denholm.

Elm Court (e-lum-kōr) n. housing developed by Eildon Housing in 2000, in the renovated Store Dairy off Orchard Terrace, also incorporating the former Provost’s House. It consists of 30 flats.

Elm Grove (e-lum-grōv) n. street in the Wellogate, built off Orchard Terrace in 1897 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company. It was named after the elm trees that used to grow there. The Hawick Co-operative Society had extensive premises in the street, including stables for the Store horses, as well as a grocer’s shop and a butcher’s. One of the last town gas lamps from this street is preserved in the Museum. Nos. 1–7 are grade C listed buildings.

Elm Hoose (e-lum-hoos) n. villa-style house at 17 North Bridge Street, converted into a hotel. It was built as the residence of Dr. John R. Hamilton in about 1880. After conversion to a hotel the dining room became one of the town’s restaurants. It is grade C listed.

Elm Hoose (e-lum-hoos) n. house in Denholm near the eastern corner of the Green. It held a baker’s shop in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and housed the Co-op store from 1951–85 (not to be confused with the hotel in Hawick).

Elm Hoose Hotel (e-lum-hoos-hō-tel) n. name used for Elm Hoose after it was converted into a hotel.

the Elms (thu-elmz, e-lumz) n. name given in 1901 to the house off Weensland Road known as ‘Elmbank’ (or ‘Elm Bank’), which had been built in 1884. It was purchased in 1945 as a manse for Wilton Parish Church. By the 1990s it was back in private hands and renamed ‘Ellistrin’, with present address 6 Fenwick Park.

eln (eln) n., arch. a unit of length approximately equal to 37 inches, a yard – ‘...ten pennies for weaving of the elne of cloth against their will ...’ [BR1660], ‘...that none who shall cast peats for this year in Whitchesters Moss shall take above twelve yards of measure alongst the Moss side for spreading of the said peats, and that conform to the said twelve elns there must be a bridge left’ [BR1735], ‘...to take no more ground to spread peats next the moss side than the breadth of eight elns ...’ [BR1743] (also ell).

Elphinstone (el-fin-stin) n. Alexander (17th C.) witness in 1652 to the marriage contract between Robert Eliott (2nd son of Simon of the Binks) and Margaret Riddell (eldest daughter of William, portioner of Bewlie), where he is described as ‘in Hopsburne’. In 1653 he is recorded in a sasine as ‘indweller in Hobisburne, baillie in that part to William, Earl of Lothian’. He was presumably related to the later Alexander. Alexander (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William and Margaret Langlands. In 1713 he sold the lands of Hartshaugh and Kirklands of Hobkirk to William Kerr of Abbotrule. John of Henderstoun (16th/17th C.) brother of George, Janet and Agnes. William Turnbull of Rulewood had a ‘letter of apprising’ against him in 1622 for non-payment of several bonds. He then had to yield up the Barony of Henderstoun (in Peeblesshire) and other lands to Turnbull. His son and heir was William. John (d.1649) 2nd Lord Balmerino, son of James, who was tried for supporting catholicism. He was imprisoned for opposition to Charles I, but eventually pardoned. He remained a staunch Covenanter, presiding over the Parliament which met in Edinburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded in the valuation rolls as owner of Over Crailing and the Wester Mains of Hundalee. He also held lands in Hobkirk Parish, valued at £4844 16s 8d. It is said he was a mortal enemy of William Eliott of Stobs. Some of his lands in Rulewater were sold to John Stewart, Earl of Traquair and combined into the Wells estate. However, the bulk of his Rulewater property eventually became part of the estate of Eliott of Stobs. He was succeeded by his son John, and the titles became extinct in 1746 when Arthur, 6th Lord Balmerino was beheaded for supporting the Jacobite cause. Thomas (d.c.1519) received a gift of rights of the lands of Hassendeanbank, along with William (probably his son) in 1510. In 1512 he is also recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal along with his wife Elizabeth (an error for Janet?) Turnbull in a deed for Hassendeanbank. In 1512 he had a charter from Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn for half of the lands of Hassendeanbank, along with his wife Janet Turnbull (daughter and co-heiress of Walter Turnbull of Gargunnoch). William had a ‘precept of clare constat’ in 1519, suggesting he was deceased by then. William (d.c.1486) younger son of Sir William of Pittendreich. He took up an ecclesiastical career. He became a Prebendary Canon of Glasgow and was Rector of Ashkirk by 1437. In 1479 he was stated to be holder of the Prebendary of Ancrum. He probably succeeded to his sons rights as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1481. He may have held the office until he died. He partnered a son, William, with an unknown woman of baronial family. It has been suggested that his was Margaret, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Their (illegitimate) son William became Bishop of Aberdeen and founded the university there. William (1431–1514) Bishop of Aberdeen and Chancellor of Scotland, son of William, Archdeacon of Teviotdale and grandson of Sir William of that ilk. His mother may have been Margaret, daughter of Sir William Douglas, 1st Baron of Drumlanrig and also Baron of Hawick. He was an official at Glasgow University in the 1470s and became a Lord of Council in Parliament by 1478. He appears to have held some of the rights as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in the period 1479–81, with his father taking over from him. He was on the Privy Council in 1508/9 when John Muir of Rowallan was directed to give ‘warrandice’ to George Scott for Dryden, Commonsides and Over Harwood. He was probably the William who (along with Thomas) received a gift of the rights of the lands of Hassendeanbank through ‘non-entry’ in 1510. William (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1519 he had a ‘precept of clare constat’ for half of the lands of Hassendeanbank. This suggests he was son of Thomas, who held the lands in 1512. Almost immediately he gave a charter of the same lands to Andrew Ker of Cessford and Agnes Crichton. William (17th C.) acquired the lands of Hartshaugh in the Rule valley, along with his heir Alexander. The lands were probably bought from Gilbert Elliott of Craigend in the mid-1600s and remained in the family until 1713. It is unclear to which branch of the Elphinstones he belonged. In 1637 he was ‘Willame Elphinstoun in Blacklyemouth, alias Steytheveyage’ (presumably ‘stay the voyge’) when he witnessed a Hobkirk sasine. He married Margaret, daughter of John Langlands, the minister of Wilton. William (17th C.) listed as tenant of Hartshaughmill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely a descendant of the earlier William of Hartshaugh. He was recorded as owner of Hartshaugh (including the mill and mill lands) in 1707, when they were valued at £60 (formerly written ‘Elphingston’, ‘Elphingstoun’ and variants).

Elrickhill (el-rik-hil) n. lands near Denholm, recorded in the Douglas of Cavers deeds around the 16th century. In 1511 it is ‘Elrechill’ when listed (along with ‘Drileth’, ‘Murelaw’ and ‘Dennummains’) as part of the Barony of Cavers. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687, when written ‘Ellrighill’, and by his brother Archibald in 1698, when transcribed ‘Elvighill’. It is unclear exactly where these lands were located, but presumably near Denholm.

else (els) adv., arch. already, ere now – ‘Forbye, A was i the hert’s hyimm, els!’ [ECS], ‘...for it was weel-on o haaf-past five, els!’ [ECS], ‘Have ee come back else!’ [GW] (also written ‘els’).

elshin (el-shin) n., arch. a shoemaker’s awl – ‘...or pinglin’ wi’ an elshin like the souters o’ Selkirk’ [JMW] (also elsin).

elsin box (el-sin-boks) n., arch. a box for holding awls.

Elwald (el-wawl) n. early form of Elliot, e.g. recorded in a in 1497 when several men of that name witnessed a sasine for Redheugh. It is unclear if the Gilbert son of ‘Elewald’, ‘Walter son of ‘Helewald’ and ‘Helewald’ son of Herbert, listed in an assize in Newcastle in 1230, were connected. Perhaps the earliest record is for ‘Johannis Elwald’, who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. Gilbert Elwald is mentioned in 1453, on a document relating to lands in Feu-rule. ‘John Elwalde’ of Thorlieshope is recorded in 1488 and 1498. ‘Robert Elwolde, of the Hermitage’ is recorded in 1491. A letter of remission for Patrick Earl of Bothwell in 1500 names 14 men of that surname in Liddesdale and surrounding areas. The same spelling is used in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1510 and 1516, for families of Redheugh, Larriston, etc., so this is clearly an alternative early spelling (although Pitcairn in his ‘Criminal Trials’ states ‘The Elwalds, notorious Border Thieves. The name is now extinct’). It is unclear whether this spelling was related to the pronunciation of the time, but it seems likely it was only used by scribes as an anglicised version of the name. In 1526/7 we have Gavin recorded, and in 1535 George and James. William and Robert Elwald are recorded as Liddesdale thieves in 1535. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale the name is recorded consistently as Elwald. Letters from English Wardens to their superiors from around this time also consistently use the form ‘Elwald’ (with spelling variants; although one letter of 1542/3 uses the perhaps more phonetic spelling ‘Eylwittes’). James Elwald in Dalkeith is recorded as witness to a document relating to the lands of Pettie in 1555. In a list of Borderers charged to appear before Queen Mary in 1561 we find the names ‘Elwald’ and ‘Ellot’ used interchangeably. By the end of the 16th century the forms ‘Elot’, ‘Ellat’, etc. are certainly more common. It is also possible that some of the earlier references were to an entirely different family, e.g. there were Elwolds in Ellingham Parish, Northumberland in the 12th century, in Newcastle in 1230 and throughout the Border counties of England in the 13th and 14th centuries. A man called ‘Elewald’ was killed in 1278/9 when accidentally struck in the head by a mallet near Alston in Cumbria. There were also people of the designation ‘de Elaund’ recorded in Northumberland in the 1260s and 1270s, which may be the same family (also written ‘Ellwald’, ‘Ellwalld’, ‘Elwalde’ and occasionally ‘Elwand’ and ‘Elwood’; the ‘-wald’ ending suggests a Saxon origin, and there is an ‘Elwoldus’ mentioned as early as 964 in the Melrose Chronicle; the use of this form for members of the Border Elliot family has caused some confusion in accounts of the origins and history of the Elliots, but was probably mostly an affected form used in formal documents).

Elwand see Elwald

Elwood see Elwald

Elygrain see Alliegrain

Ely Grain (e-lee-grān) n. small stream that joins Linhope Burn at the shepherd’s cottage of Elygrain (see also Alliegrain).

emigration (e-mee-grā-shin) n. moving overseas, expatriation. This was common for local people, particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries, with the usual destinations being America, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. Most boats would leave from the western ports, Hawick folk often being ferried from Annan to the ships that left Liverpool. In the early part of the 19th century it was common to see carts leaving along the New Road towards Langholm, loaded with woman and children and modest luggage, with the men walking, and friends following them a mile or so out of town.

em (em) v. am (first person singular, present tense) – ‘A em so’, ‘em A allowed oot the night?’, ‘A em listenin ti ee’ (often used emphatically; also sometimes um as well as occasionally the English am).

Embro (em-brō, -bru) n. familiar for of Edinburgh – ‘When dominie and minister Could offer him nae mair, He took the gate to Embro’ town

To stoke his lairning there’ [WL], ‘... wee bogles, big bogles, auld and young bogles, Embra bogles, Border bogles, Fife bogles ...’ [JuH] (also written ‘Embra’).

Emery (e-mu-ree) n. John Dixon (b.1810/1) from Berwick, he was a ropemaker, living at Howdenburn. He is listed there in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Gordon and their children included Elizabeth G. and John J.S.

emmen (e-, i-min) contr. am not, aren’t – ‘emmen A the biggest bummer ee’ve ever seen?’ (short form of emn’t; could be written ‘Em’n’; note this becomes ‘aren’t’ in standard English).

emmet (e-mi’, -it) n., poet. an ant – ‘... An emmet ran up a blade o’ gress And beis thrae the clover were hingin’ [DH].

Emmett (e-mi’, -mit) n. John T. (1828–98) English architect and architectural critic who designed the new Wilton Church, built 1859–62. He had previously been responsible for Bath Street Independent Church in Glasgow (now called Renfield St. Stephen’s and also referred to as Blythswood), which has the tallest spire in that city. He also designed Sandyford Church, Glasgow. It is said that he was influenced by Gothic revivalist August Welby Pugin, and that his designs (being quite Gothic and Anglican in appearance) heavily influenced later Presbyterian and Episcopalian church designs in Scotland.

Emmettshiels (e-mi’-sheelz) n. former name for lands probably near Harwood-on-Teviot, in the Barony of Hawick. They were held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick from at least 1511, mentioned again in 1572, 1594 and 1615, and recorded again in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. They were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the latter part of the 17th century. Precisely where they were is uncertain, but in 1686 they are ‘the lands of Harwoodhill and Emmetsheels, somtymes called Lant and Emmetsheells’ (it is ‘Emetschelis’ in 1511, ‘Emetscheillis’ and ‘Emetschelis’ in 1572, ‘Emeschellis’ in 1594 and ‘Emetscheillis’ in 1615).

emni (em-, am-, um-ni) contr. am not, literally ‘amn’t’ – ‘A emni din yit’, ‘Mibbe ee’re feenished, bit A emni’, ‘... an’ in the nicht seenen, an’ amna seelent’ [HSR], ‘... whase shoon I amna wurdy til bear’ [HSR] (also spelled ‘amni’ etc.; used for emphasis, cf. emn’t; it is unclear why ‘A emni’ is used sometimes in preference to ‘Am erni’; local dialect fills the gap left in standard English, where ‘amn’t’ doesn’t exist).

emn't (em-in', am-in', um-in') contr. am not – ‘A'm the wunner, emn't A?', ‘emn't A the daftest glaik ee've ever seen?’ (also imn't; usually precedes the first person singular pronoun; cf. emni; emmen is a shortened form).

Emond (e-mind) n. Robert (19th C.) probably son of James and Thomasina Montgomery. He was Cornet in 1876 and flesher to trade. He was arrested along with 7 others after Edward Dear-den was fatally injured at the Thursday Night Chase, but later released. Probably the same Robert was listed as a butcher in Selkirk in 1897. He may be the power-loom tuner who died in Selkirk in 1913, aged 79.

the Empire (thu-em-pIr) n. name for the cinema at the Exchange in the early 20th century.

the Employment Exchange (thu-em-ploi-min'-iks-chānj) n. Hawick's Employment Centre, which opened in 1939 on Teviot Crescent, off the Little Haugh. The building later housed Diesel's nightclub and then the Santa Marina restaurant.

empty (em-pee) adj. empty – ‘A sei ma gless ees emp'y’, ‘it was is emp'y is the High Street on Common Ridin Fridi’, ‘An' gif he cum til see me, he raves owt empie things ...’ [HSR], ‘In A gaed ti fill ma empty keite, for my certies! A was howe!’ [ECS], n. an empty object – ‘did ee pit oot the empies?’ (also written ‘empie’ and ‘emp'y’).

Emtelle (em-tel) n. manufacturer of fibre-optic cable duct, with factories in both Hawick and Jedburgh. Founded in Jedburgh in 1980, the Hawick manufacturing facility was opened in Hawick in 1999. The Hawick premises are located at Haughhead, to the east of the town, on the big bend in the A698 after the junction with the Bonchester road.

-en (in) suffix ending for some strong past participles, of which only a few survive in standard English (e.g. ‘beaten’, ‘eaten’, ‘fallen’ and ‘written’). Several more survive locally (e.g. ‘hutten’, ‘litten’, ‘putten’, ‘stooden’, ‘strucken’ and ‘sutten’), and even more used to be common (e.g. ‘baken’, ‘cuis-sen’, ‘cruppen’, ‘hauden’, ‘setten’ and ‘stunken’).

en' (en) n., poet. end – ‘They're nae ways nice about the means Gif they but gain their selfish en's’ [RDW], ‘... an' let thame ken that God rings in Jacob untill the en's o' the yirth’ [HSR], ‘Och let the wicketniss o' the wicket cum til ane en' ...’ [HSR].

encampit (en-kam-pee', -pi') pp., arch. encamped – ‘...were encampit some ten or twal hunner, or mair, O' oor braw Scottish callants, God bless them, I'm shure’ [BM1900].

end (end) n. a room, specifically in a 2 room house, – ‘The men, an' women, an' bairns, an' swine, a' live thegither, in ae bit end’ [RW], geographical area, part of a building, location – ‘Oh, the Auld Smiddy end, where in youth's happy day ...’ [JT] (see also penny end etc.).

end (end) n., arch. aim, purpose, result – ‘The Minister desire of Bailie Graham and Jo Pur-dom to meet in his chamber ... to the end that a woman ... who hath brought forth a child ... may be examined ...’ [PR1723] (now only common in phrases ‘for his own ends’ etc.).

endaivour (en-dā-vur) n., v., arch. endeavour.

endentour (en-den-toor) n., arch. an indenture – ‘... to be haldin of the said William and his aieris, as is contenit in the endentouris made betuix him and me ...’ [SB1470].

endit (end-ee', i') pp. ended – ‘Dear Grizzly, how shall we get fendit, Whan a' our crop an' kail are endit?’ [JR], ‘The prayers o' David the son o' Jesse ar endet’ [HSR], ‘An' it cam' til pass, whan Jesus had endet a' they sayins ...’ [HSR].

ends (endz) n. uncontrollable state, intense indignation, tantrum – ‘hei didni half gaun his ends when it didni work’, ‘Hei is gaun eis reegs (or ends)’ [ECS].

enduir (en-dūr) v., arch. to endure.

endways (end-wāz) adv., arch. thrivingly, successfully, forward – ‘To get endways’ with any piece of work, to get pretty well through with it, to succeed in any undertaking’ [JoJ], ‘Wark gaes far lighter endways when We joke away or haver’ [JoHo].

eneauch see eneuch

eneaw see enew

eneuch (e-newch) n., arch. enough, a sufficient quantity, sometimes contrasted with enew in number – ‘Oo've eneuch o' tei, but no anew o' cups’ [GW], ‘Hae ee eneuch o' daich?’ [JAHM], ‘eneauch o' waittir/room, but eneaw o' bairns/dogs’ [JAHM], adv., conj., arch. enough – ‘...for I hade allwayes civilitie eneuch of my Lord Lauderdaill, bit litle freind-shipe’ [SB1670], ‘...his Answer thereto was that he was att great eneugh expense anent his marriage ...’ [PR1724], ‘Its true eneugh, us muir-land fouk, Get aye the first o' blasts when blawin’ [JoHa], ‘It is eneuch for the discipel that he be as his maister, an' the servant as his lord’ [HSR], ‘It maunna be sae, in kase ther bena eneuch for us an yow’ [HSR], ‘Faith they may get the Elliots in, We lied eneugh that Scott should win’ [RDW], ‘...she's been croose eneuch taw craw’ [JEDM], ‘‘Guid enuch for Denholm’, said a weaver, ‘but it'll no dae for Hawick’ [RJW],

‘... an big eneuch ti fother an fend for fremd folk an gangerels’ [ECS], ‘Folk’s aye ready eneuch to allow They’re sinners, but wi’ the same braith They will trail their neebour in through ...’ [FL] (also spelled ‘eneauch’ and ‘eneugh’; the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ū and oo).

enew (e-new) n., arch. enough, a sufficient number (sometimes contrasting with eneuch in quantity) – ‘An’ bless the worthy guid Buccleu’, Wi’ rowth o’ grace – he’s lands anew’ [RDW], ‘Ee’ve anew o’ pootches if ee’d eneuch tē fill thum’ [JAHM] (also spelled ‘eneaw’).

enfauld (en-fawld) v., arch. to enfold, embrace – ‘His levyt han’ shud be anunder my hæd, an’ his richt han’ shud inflad me’ [HSR] (also written ‘infald’).

enfeoffment (en-feef-min) n., arch. the act of legally giving possession of land (Scots Law term).

engadge (en-gāj) v., arch. to pledge, undertake – ‘... burgesses and Counsellors of the sd. burgh, faithfully engadge and promitt for themselves ... jointly to concur for the defence of the true liberties and privileges of the sd. burgh ...’ [BR1706].

the Engineer (thu-in-ji-neer) n. name of one of the stagecoaches which regularly ran between Carlisle and Hawick before the railway, the other being ‘the Favourite’. The route started at the Tower and finished at the Grey Goat Hotel (on English Street) in Carlisle. The coach ran from 1825 until 1862. Robert Govenlock was one of the original guards. According to Pigot’s 1825 directory the 2 coaches were called ‘the Mail’ and ‘the Sir Walter Scott’, but it may be that these names were never used locally.

England (ing-glund, -glind) n. country to the south of Hawick, usually entered across the Carter Bar or near Canonbie. The 19th century saw a large immigration to Hawick of people from English hosiery centres around Derby, Leicester and Nottingham – ‘Ours was a land – a free fair land – Ere England had a name; And minstrel’s harp and warrior’s brand Have aye upheld her fame’ [JT], ‘Mong the beauty spots of England I have rambled far and near ... But I like auld Hawick the best’ [TK], ‘Dive ee leike ti beide up England?’ [ECS], ‘Here were the white road from England Drops to the Rule and the Jed, Leaps the proud pulse of the exile, Back to the motherland sped’ [WL] (sometimes written ‘England’; note the pronunciation is always i-, never e-).

Englandshire (ing-glund-shIr) n. humorous name for England – ‘Here, hevin contemplated

the ‘glorious river Tweed – clear and majestic’ Burns, for the first time in his life crossed owre inti Englandshire ...’ [IWL] (a Landlesism).

English (ing-gleesh) adj. coming from south of the Border, n. the people living south of the Border – ‘... in refusing to go as ane gyd to the Inglis to Langholm’ [BR1651], ‘The English love to sip through a stiffened upper lip. They believe they are a race of self-made men; thus relieving the Almighty of the blame for making Blighty, and relieving Him of blame for making them’ [TD], v., arch. to translate into English – ‘And startled up auld liart carlins may be Englished, and transformed themselves into old grey headed witches’ [EM1820].

English (ing-gleesh) n. Adam (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Margaret Thorbrand. Their children included: John (b.1642); Janet (b.1644); William (b.1646); and Janet (again, b.1649). Probably the same Adam is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 (it is possible that this is a variant of ‘Inglis’).

the English Cricket Field (thu-ing-gleesh-kri-ki-feeld) n. former field near St. Cuthbert’s, used for cricket, P.S.A. rugby matches etc., situated where Lyle & Scott’s offices now stand.

the English Grammar Schuil (thu-ing-gleesh-graw-mur-skil) n. another name for Hawick Grammar School, once in Orrock Place. The name possibly came from a combination of the formerly separate ‘English’ and ‘Grammar’ schools, and may only have been used once they were merged (otherwise the name is too confusing!).

the English Kirk (thu-ing-gleesh-kirk) n. informal name for the Episcopal Church, because of its ties with the Anglican Church. In Hawick this was the name given (with no obvious sense of disparagement) to St. Cuthbert’s Church, partly also because of the number of southern incomers who joined its congregation.

the English Schuil (thu-ing-gleesh-skil) n. name formerly used to refer to the ‘Parish’ as opposed to ‘Grammar’ school, i.e. the elementary school, which was taught in English rather than Latin. In the 17th century the school-house was St. Mary’s Kirk, and it is unclear what building was used in the early 18th century. In 1683 there was a plea made for the school to be house elsewhere than the Kirk, partly because ‘the pews had suffered a considerable loss by the scholars breaking the same’. In 1715 it is recorded that 5 merks were appropriated by the Council for the rent of a house for the school, with the other half to be paid by the Kirk Session. In 1722 the master was given 40 merks by the Council for renting a school-house for 4 years ‘when he had not the liberty to teach in the kirk’ and in 1737 he was allowed £8 annually for the rent of a schoolhouse. In 1739 the first purpose-built school was erected, being 30 feet by 16 feet (inside the walls). The school once had its own flag that was carried in the Common Riding procession, behind the Grammar School flag and in front of the apprentices flag, according to the 1747 Council decree. Pupils attended this school for 2 years, learning reading, writing and arithmetic. It united with the Grammar School in 1824/5. The same name was later informally used for St. Cuthbert’s School, which was attached to ‘the English Kirk’ and opened about 1848, with a purpose-built school constructed 1849/50. An Episcopalian school was also opened in Wilton in 1851, and there appears to have been a third one in the town at about the same time.

the English side (thu-ing-gleesh-sīd) n. the other side of the Border into England – ‘Here Johnie Armstrang, take thou my sword, That is made o’ the metal sae fine; And when thou comest tae the English side, Remember the death of Hughie the Graeme’ [T], ‘...James Olifer, toun piper, seeing several immoralities, revellings, drunkenness, frequent cursing, blaspheming ye name of God, ... beside his irregular marriage on the English side ...’ [PR1720], ‘The long line of the Carter, Teviotdale flung wide, And a slight stir in the heather – a wind from the English side’ [WHO].

enlichten (in-lich-tin) v., arch., poet. to enlighten – ‘...the commandment o’ the Lord is pure, enlichtenin’ the eyne’ [HSR], ‘His lichtenin’s enlichtenet the warld; the yirth saw, an’ trimm-let’ [HSR], ‘...an’ was enlightened on the posection as regairds the Common-Ridin’ [BW1939].

enormitie (ee-nor-mi-tee) n., arch. a shocking crime, outrageous wrong – ‘...quhither we or any of oure foirsaidis be the actoris of the enormities, sall be chalenged ...’ [SB1599], ‘...by yr night rambling commit divers and sundrie abominable irregularities, unlawful faults, and enormities and abuses by yr scandalous outrages ...’ [BR1706], ‘...John Binnie, late Baylyea for his miscarriages, egregious enormities and faults ...’ [BR1706].

enow see eenow

enshair (en-shār) adj. to ensure – ‘Enshair for sunshine! That’s what they want tae dae tae make the Common-Riding pay’ [HE1939].

Ensign (en-sīn) n., arch. a standard-bearer in an army unit. This word is used in the 1706 Burgh Records to refer to the Cornet, but does not appear again after that – ‘...and voted Thomas Hardie, merchand, to be ensigne and to carrie the colour’ [BR1706].

enter (en-tur) v., arch. to present oneself or someone else in court, to assume possession of lands or property – ‘...to haue enterit, ressauit and rentallit, and be the tennour heirop enteris, ressauis and retallis the said Gilbert and his airis ...’ [SB1591].

entry (en-tree) n., arch. presentation to a court – ‘...and thair to remane quhill lawfull entre be takin of him be Sir Jhone of Farnehirst, Knycht’ [RBA1561].

epie (e-pee) n., arch. a blow with a sword (noted by J. Jamieson).

Episcopacy (e-, ee-pis-kō-pi-see) n. the government of a church by bishops, also known as ‘prelacy’ in Scottish history. This form of church organisation was thrown out in Scotland during the Reformation, about 1560. However, Episcopalianism was also favoured by the Stewart kings, as well as by most of England, and Charles I tried to forcibly reimpose this form of worship and governance on Scotland in 1637. This led to the signing of the National Covenant in 1638 and the Solemn League and Covenant in 1643, and the resultant complications over Scotland’s role in the English Civil War. Later Episcopacy was forceably re-introduced in Scotland following the restoration of Charles II in 1660. All ministers appointed since 1649 were ordered to resign and ask for reinstatement. Although most accepted, the strongest Covenanters refused, particularly in the south-west of Scotland, where there was a growing rebellion as more bishops were appointed. There then followed 2 decades of persecution of the Covenanters until Presbyterianism was again introduced in the Revolution of 1688–89. Episcopalian ministers were ejected soon after William arrived in Britain, and for the next few years ministers continued to be removed for refusing to ‘pray for William and Mary’. The last Episcopal incumbent of Hawick Parish was John Langlands, ousted in 1689 during the Revolution. Episcopal services apparently continued for a while in a private house. The ideals became mixed with those of the Jacobites through the 18th century. Thomas Somerville, minister at Cavers, apparently refused to take the oath for William and Mary, moving to Hawick to preach to a group of episcopalians including members of the Gledstains and Chisholme families. Along with Francis Scott (ex-minister of Hassendean) they set up a meeting house at the Playlaw (i.e. near the Auld Mid Raw and Kirk Wynd) in 1712, following the passing of the Act of Toleration. A small group continued to meet in a house in the Kirk Wynd until about 1777, with Rev. Findlay McLennan leading the last services. With a lapse of almost 70 years a mission station was started by Rev. W.S. White of Jedburgh in 1846. Rev. Robert Campbell continued in the following year, the first baptism was 1847, the Church Schools were built in 1850 and the new Church itself opened in 1858 (also written ‘episcopacy’).

Episcopalianism (ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in-i-zum) n. the doctrine of governing a church through bishops, prelacy. In Scotland’s history this has tended to mean the opposite of Presbyterianism.

the Episcopalian Kirk (thu-ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in-kirk) n. the Scottish Episcopalian (or Episcopal) Church is essentially a vestige of the Disestablishment of the Church of Scotland in 1689. It is run by bishops, and has much in common with the Church of England. Like the rest of Scotland, Hawick’s parish church was Episcopalian in the period 1662–89. Thereafter local Episcopalians probably met in secret. There is an entry (in the Parish Kirk records of the 1770s) of a baptism performed by Rev. Findlay McLennan ‘Minister of the Episcopal Congregation of Hawick’) in 1753. The church met publicly again in a Kirk Wynd house in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. This building was situated at the western end, opposite the churchyard. A new church was opened in Jedburgh in 1844 and a mission was started in Hawick by the Jedburgh minister in 1846, meeting in the Orrock Place Grammar School, with the school (and possibly the congregation itself) meeting in Inglis’ Ballroom from 1847. The Church Schools were built about 1850 on Slitrig Crescent, with services held there for several years. The purpose-built St. Cuthbert’s Church was erected in 1857/58, with the site and building paid for by the Duke of Buccleuch.

the Episcopal Schuil (thu-ee-pis-kō-pal-skil) n. another name for St. Cuthbert’s Schuil. There was also a private school taught under Episcopal supervision in about 1846 by Thomas Marchbanks in a pended apartment in the Mid Raw; probably the same school operated in the ballroom of the Half-Moon Hotel around a year later. An Episcopalian school opened on Wilton Crescent in 1851, and in 1852 it is recorded that there were 3 such schools operating within Hawick and Wilton, with 180 children registered.

Eppy (e-pee) n. Christian name, a pet form of Euphemia, Elspeth or Elizabeth (also spelled ‘Eppie’).

Eppy Suitty (e-pee-si’-ee, -soo’-) n. local nickname, probably from the late 18th or 19th centuries. Her real name was probably Euphemia Stevenson, and her name came with the darkness (or dirtiness) of her attire. She is described in an Edinburgh Magazine article of 1820 as a modern witch, who wore a mantle that was ‘black as soot (whence probably she derived her title), and of a most aromatic perfume’ and also wore a large hood. Her personal appearance was also said to be striking, with 3 prominent teeth and a long ‘whiskin’ beard’. She was said to be demanding of food and money, promising good luck to those who complied and cursing those who refused. She told fortunes, especially relating to affairs of the heart, and it is said that she was so well connected with the common people, that she could use the information gathered previously to yield apparently impressive readings. Her death is said to have come a few days after convincing her own sister to sever her foot, after the appendage had been giving her so much trouble that she wanted it to be amputated. She may have been married to William Scott, with the death of their daughter Helen recorded in 1805. She was dead by 1820 and was said to have lived into the 90s – ‘...the far-famed Euphemia Stevenson, alias Black Eppy, alias Eppy the Witch, alias Eppy Sooty’ [EM1820], ‘...bar yeh haaflang chaap as black as Eppie Suittie’ [ECS], ‘Black as the yiss o spades; black as Eppie Suittie. – Expressions signifying exceeding blackness’ [ECS], ‘Eppy Sootie and Wullie Pairk, Geordie the Buck and Higgins Phill, Jamie Nichol the Hawick band clairk, The Duddy Laird and Shallow Bill’ [HI] (also written ‘Eppie Suittie’ and variants; the name may have been in more widespread use as a dark-faced 18th century witch).

equal-aqual (ee-kwal-aw-kwal) adv., arch. in equal shares (an example of ‘rhyming reduplication’).

er (er, ur, ir) v. are, specifically the plural and 2nd person singular form of ‘to be’ – ‘er ee shuir about that?’, ‘er they ony guid?’, ‘oo er the Borders’, ‘... and gaun among oor ain folk without them jaloosin whae oo er’ [JEDM], ‘Ma breeks er a’ splattered wi’ glaur’ [RM], ‘... sin maist o’ thum er hidden ahint street fronteeges’ [BW1978], also used for 1st person singular – ‘am er so’, ‘ee might no be fri Hawick, bit am er’, ‘You’ll never hear the words ‘I am’ For Hawick folks say ‘A’m er’ [IWL] (note the pronunciation varies depending on context, stress, etc., this form often used emphatically).

’er (ur, er, ir) pron. her – ‘her mother sin sorted ‘er oot’, ‘... Naiter’s buskeet in er bonniest brows’ [ECS], ‘Nochts ull stoap ir if she’s taen the maggot inti er heed’ [ECS] (also written just ‘er’; note that ‘her’ is probably used more frequently, depending on the preceeding word; E.C. Smith notes that the pronunciation is between er and ir).

erd an stane (erd-an-stān) n., arch. earth and stone, used as a symbol for the legal transfer of land – ‘... with the pertinents as said is, be erd and stane, to the said James Scot and his aeris ...’ [JW1558].

erect (ee-rekt) pp., arch. erected, raised in position – ‘The said day Walter Scott of neather Boonchester ... was admitt and erect Burgess and gave his burgess oath’ [BR1699].

erf (erf) adv., arch. near, approaching to – ‘What time is it?’ ‘It’s erfe twal o’clock’ [JoJ] (cf. ergh).

eritor (e-ri-tur) n., poet. a heritor, heir – ‘... for thou salt be eiriter o’ a’ nationes’ [HSR].

erle (erl, e-rul) v., arch. to engage (an employee etc.) by some initial payment – ‘Hired an’

erles (e-rulz) n., pl., poet. payment for services, earnest-money – ‘She’d gotten sax pun’ but a croon, An’ hauf-a-croon o’ erles’ [JoHa] (cf. arles).

Ermildon (er-mil-din) n. former name for ‘Ernilton’ in Liddesdale, which probably corresponds to the modern Arnton. In the c.1376 rental roll (among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton) ‘Newland de Ermyldoun’ has a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence (see Ernilton).

ern (ern, e-rin) n. iron – ‘it was made o solid ern’, ‘... She’ll raise her cruikit Earn-like gab, An’ gie my feelings sic a stab’ [JoHa], ‘Thou salt brik thame wi’ ane rodd o’ ern’ [HSR], ‘Whase feet thaye hurtet wi’ fetters; he was layde in ern’ [HSR], ‘... whan wud turns geizant an ern lowps abreed’ [ECS], ‘When ma last ern shot’s been shankeet ...’ [IWL], ‘There yaised ti be a lovely bit o cast ern engineerin, the sluice outlet at the fer end ...’ [IWL], adj. made of iron – ‘Ern Yetts! Ern Yetts!’ [RM], v. to iron – ‘ee’ll hev ti ern yer ain claes this week’, ‘it’ll look better when it’s erved’, ‘A’m fair muiteet oot wi wui weshin an ernin, an thing’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘earn’; cf. airn).

ernae see erni

Ern Cleuch (ern-klooch) n. stream that joins the Ettrick Water between Singlie and Ettrick-bridge. The lands there were owned by the Crown from at least 1456. They were associated with a branch of the Turnbells in the 15th century, perhaps the same branch who were also at Whithope and Harden in the Borthwick valley. John Turnbull was Laird there in 1464/5. It is probably the Crown property of ‘Ernheugh’, which was let along with Singlie to Walter Turnbull of Gargun-nock in 1484, Thomas Home of Langshaw in 1490, Patrick Home of Fastcastle in 1492 and Sir Robert Ker in 1499. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. The Laird of Whithope ‘in ernheuch’ was recorded in 1494/5 and Robert Scott was recorded there in the same year. David Pringle was recorded there in 1502. The Laird of Cessford was tenant in 1541, paying £28. It passed to Sir William Scott of Harden about 1605 and was later owned by the Scotts of Bonnington (it is ‘Ernhuche’ in 1456, ‘Ernhuych’ in 1464/5, ‘Erncleuch’ in 1468, ‘Ernheuch’ in 1490 and in 1494/5, ‘Erneheuch’ and ‘erneheuch’ in 1502, ‘erin heuch’ in 1534, ‘Ernheuch’ in 1541, ‘Orneheucht’ in 1580/1, ‘Ernescleugh’ in 1593, ‘Erneheuche’ about 1605 and ‘Ernesheugh’ in 1624).

Erneside Craigs (ern-sīd-krāgz) n. craggy outcrop in southern Castleton, situated between Blinkbonny Height and the Kershope Burn. Nearby are the remains of a settlement, about 70 m by 40 m in size.

Ernest Augustus (er-nist-aw-gus-tis) n. (1771–1851) King of Hannover. He was 5th son of George III, being made to serve with the Hanoverian hussars in 1790, returning to England in 1776. In 1799 he was created Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. Very unpopular in Britain at the time, he was variously accused of murder and incest. Because of the rules of succession he became King of Hanover in 1837 on the death of his brother William IV, and was apparently much more popular there than back home. He married Friederike Caroline Sophia Alexandrina of Solms-Braunfels. He outlived his 8 brothers and was succeeded by his son George V of Hannover.

Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick (1845–1923) only son of George V of Hanover and grandson of Ernest Augustus. After the death of his father he assumed the title of Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale in the British peerage. However, he was an officer in the Austrian army, and since he fought against Britain in WWI he had his titles stripped in 1919. He was thus the 3rd and last Duke.

erni (er-ni) contr. aren't, are not – 'they erni likely ti help', 'looks erni everyhin ee ken', also used to negate 'am' – 'am erni gaun oot the night' (there are spelling variants; cf. arni, erren, ern't and irni).

Ernilton (er-nil'-in) n. former house marked on Blaeu's 1654 map, located in the hills approximately north of Steele Road. The area to the north is marked 'Erniltoun b. fell', corresponding probably to the modern Arnton Fell, suggesting that one of the streams there was the Ernilton Burn. The rental roll for Liddesdale from about 1376 lists 42 separate pieces of land under 'Quarterium de Ermyldoune', which is probably the same place. The name was thus formerly of much greater significance. Owners of land there around 1376 include 'Johannis Raufson', 'Ricardi Broun', 'Thome Gilson', 'Ade de Syde', 'Elie Nobill', 'Dauid Stodhirde', 'Ennie de Lawys', 'Ricardi de Lawis', 'Roberti de Lawis', 'Mathei Meryng' and 'Willelmi Nycson'.

ernit (er-ni) n., arch. an earth-nut, the edible tuber of certain wild plants, particularly Bunium bulbocastanum and Bunium flexuosum (also ern-nit).

the Ern Kirk (thu-ern-kirk) n. iron sheeting structure that existed at the site of Wilton South Church from 1888–1894, having been given to the local United Presbyterian Church by worshippers in Rothesay.

ern-mail (ern-māl) n., arch. a red stain on cloth caused by rust – 'Ern-mail = iron mould; an iron or sodium stain on cloth' [ECS].

ern-nit (ern-ni) n., arch. an earth-nut, particularly Bunium bulbocastanum and Bunium flexuosum – '...we used to go to the wood ...and howk 'ern-nits'' [JTU] (also ernit).

ernt (ernt, ern) pp. ironed – '...Then ernt and weel aired Afore a roarin' fire o coals' [DH].

ern't (e-rin) contr. aren't, are not – 'ern't they the yins fri Lynnwud?' (note that this is used before the noun, where erni tends to be the form used after the noun; also spelled 'errent').

Erntage (ern-tij) n. local variant of Hermitage.

errant (e-rin, -rint) n., arch. an errand – '...that even the Enemy himsel', for a' his pride, is obliged to rin on his Maker's errant whenever he gets the ca'' [JTe] (cf. yirrant).

errent see ern't

erse (ers) n., imp. arse, the fundament, bottom, hinder part of something – 'deh teer the erse oot o'd', a stupid or contemptible person – 'deh mind him, hei's jist an erse', a mess – 'ee made a right erse oot o that, didden ee?'.

erse-brod (ers-brōd) n., arch., imp. a back-board, tail-board of a cart – 'For I was lan'-ward bred, and lang For thick-broon at brig-ends, and speech As blunt's the erse-brod o' a cairt' [DH] (also 'erse-board'; cf. ear-board).

'ersel (ur-sel, er-sel) pron. herself – 'naeb'dy wad gaun wi 'er, so she hed ti gaun 'ersel' (see also hersel).

erselins cowp (ers-linz-kowp) n., arch. a fall onto the buttocks – 'Arselins coup. The act of falling backward on the hams' [JoJ].

Erskine (ers-kin) n. Adam (15th C.) left 3 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Braxholme. He is listed as 'Ade Erskyn'. Alexander (d.bef. 1509) served heir to his father Thomas in 1494, when he became 3rd Lord. He thereby also inherited the estates of Synton and Dalgleish and the office of Sheriff of Selkirk (as well as many other lands and titles), for which he already held a crown charter of 1489. He witnessed a document relating to 'Langhassendean' in 1480/1. He had a sasine for Synton on 1493. He held the lands on formal presentation to the King of a pair of gilt spurs at Whitsunday, if asked. He may be the Laird of Whitslade who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. In 1502 his son and heir Robert had a charter of the lands of Nisbet from him. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar. Their children included Robert (4th Lord), Walter, Christian and Agnes. He later married Ellen, daughter of Alexander, 1st Lord Home. Charles of Shielfield (1771–1825) 2nd son of Rev. James, he succeeded on the death of his brother Lieut.-Col. Henry. He was a lawyer, who was Sheriff-Substitute for Selkirkshire, as well as being Baron Bailie of Melrose, and stayed at the Priory there. He was a good friend of Sir Walter Scott, under whom he worked. He was a founding member of the Jedforest Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1806 at Borthwickshiels he married Barbara, only daughter of George Pott of Todrig. Their children included: James, who succeeded, and married his cousin Barbara Pott; and Col. George Pott, who married Jane, daughter of Rev. G. Coventry. David Stuart (1742–1829) 11th Earl of Buchan. Interested in history and the arts in Scotland, he was a founder member of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland and also founded the Ednam Club to maintain interest in the poetry of James Thomson. He was also instrumental in having the Encyclopædia Britannica published. In 1786 he purchased the Dryburgh estate, saving the abbey from further destruction. He used it as the centrepiece for his planned 'Caledonian Temple of Fame'. The main parts of this vision that were completed were the obelisk in the Abbey grounds, the Wallace statue and the Temple of the Muses. He had Dryburgh House substantially rebuilt and lived there until his death. Sir David (1772–1837) historian and dramatist. His father, the 11th Earl of Buchan, had bought Dryburgh Abbey, saving it for posterity, and he inherited the estate in 1810. He wrote historical plays, among them 'James V; or, The warlike days o' Hab of Hawick: an historical drama' in 1829, published by John Anderson, Edinburgh, 1830 (this being a fanciful version of the old story). He is also described as 'Captain Erskine of Dryburgh'. He died without issue and the Dryburgh estate passed to Henry David, 12th

Earl of Buchan. Rev. Henry 'Harry' (1692/3–1773) son of James of Shielfield in Berwickshire and Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott of Ancrum. He was licensed to preach by Kelso Presbytery in 1722, was presented to Robertson Parish at the end of 1727 and became minister there early the next year. He was recorded in discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1742, 1751, 1754, 1767 and 1772. He married Janet Cunningham (who died aged 64 in 1766), daughter of the minister of Hawick. Their children included James (b.1731), Marjory (b.1734) and Robert (b.1740), baptised in Robertson. He was succeeded in the Robertson ministry by his son James. The memorial tablet to Rev. Robert Scott of Robertson had some lines added to it in his memory also. Note there is a slightly earlier minister of Chirnside of the same name (whose wife Margaret Halcro is famous for being roused from the family mausoleum when the sexton tried to cut the ring from her finger, thereby recovering and living for another 51 years!) and his son Ebenezer, founder of the secession church, who were related to him. James of Grange (1680–1754) 2nd son of Charles, 5th Earl of Mar. He served as Lord of Session. He held the superiority of the lands of Whitslade and Dalgleish, which he sold to James Adam in 1723. He married Rachel, daughter of John Chiesly of Dalry. Rev. James (1731–88) son of Harry, the minister of Robertson, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1757 and became preacher at Caerlenrig 'chapel-of-ease' (i.e. Teviothead) in 1763, remaining for only about a year. He was presented to Kirkton at the end of 1763 and became minister there in 1764. He was then translated to Robertson Parish in 1774, replacing his father. A new Manse was built for him soon afterwards. He was one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers' Club in 1776. In 1777 he succeeded his cousin Patrick as 7th Erskine of Shielfield. In 1779 he was listed as 'Rev. James Askin of Dryburgh' in Robertson Parish when he was taxed for having a male servant. He wanted to transfer to Wilton (according to a letter of 1784 to Hugh Scott of Harden). He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Robertson Parish in 1785. In 1786 he was translated to St. Boswells, but died only about 2 years later. He married Henrietta Scott, daughter of Charles of Goldielands, and she died in 1818 at the age of 79. Their children included: Henry, who was in the army and succeeded, but had no offspring; Charles, who became a lawyer in Melrose, married Barbara, daughter of George Pott of Todrig and succeeded his brother; and William, who was a preacher and tax surveyor in Haddington. James of Shielfield (1809/10–75) son of Charles. In the 1850s he was said to hold the female representation of the female line of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. He married his cousin Barbara Pott and she died in 1886, aged 76. He was succeeded by his son Charles. He and his wife are buried at Dryburgh Abbey. Sir John (d.1552) 5th Lord Erskine, 2nd son of Robert, who died at Flodden. He was also referred to as 'of Nisbet'. He was named along with his father in an indenture of 1510 involving lands within their Barony of Synton, with Kers. He inherited the lands of Synton from his father in 1513 and they passed to his son and heir John in 1557. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll. His 2 eldest sons, Robert and Thomas, died before him. His daughter Margaret was a mistress of James V, and mother of James, Earl of Mar (and later Regent of Scotland). John (d.1572) 6th Lord Erskine and 1st (or 22nd) Earl of Mar. He was a member of the Council of Mary, Queen of Scots, guardian of James V and served as Regent of Scotland in 1571. In 1557 he inherited his father's lands of Synton. He was among the prominent men of the nation who signed the document declaring James as Monarch (in place of Mary) in 1567. He married Annabella, daughter of William Murray of Tullibardine, and was succeeded by his son John, 2nd Earl of Mar. His daughter Mary married Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. John (c.1562–1634) 2nd (or 23rd) Earl of Mar and 1st Lord of Cardross, son of the 6th Lord Erskine. He served as Treasurer of Scotland. He inherited his father's lands of Synton in 1573, but sold them to the Earl of Buccleuch in 1619. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is recorded gaining the lands of Synton and Synton Mill from Sir John Edmondston in 1593. He resigned his lands in 1620, so they could be re-granted to his heir. This included superiority over the local lands of Synton, Whitslade and Dalgleish. He married Anna, daughter of David, Lord Drummond and was succeeded by his son John and had several other children. John (d.1653/4) 3rd or 24th Earl of Mar, descended from the family who formerly held lands at Synton. In 1635 he was served heir to his father's Earldom of Mar, which included superiority over Whitslade and Dalgleish (which was one third of Synton). The Scotts of Whitslade held the main estate at this time, and Synton was held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He married Jean

Hay (daughter of the Earl of Erroll) and was succeeded by his son John, who was Chancellor and married Mary (or Margaret), daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. Sir Robert (d.1452) 1st Lord Erskine, son of Sir Thomas of that Ilk and his 2nd wife, Janet Keith of Synton. Through his mother he probably inherited the Synton estates and possibly the hereditary sheriffdom of Selkirk. He witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. He was captured at Homildon Hill in 1402, but released by 1405 and was again in English captivity in 1427. He claimed the Earldom of Mar in right of his mother in 1435. He passed on his estates (retaining the 'liferent') to his son Thomas in 1448, this including Synton and Dalgleish. He married a Stewart and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of David Lindsay of Glenesk. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, 2nd Lord. Robert (d.1513) son of Alexander, 4th Earl of Mar. He had a charter for the lands of Nisbet, Synton and lands within Selkirk in 1499/1500. He and his heirs had a charter for Nisbet in 1502. He obtained a charter of the lands of Synton and associated lands of Whitslade and Dalgleish in 1507/8 (when he was heir apparent to his father). Part of the deal was that he could infeft Whitslade to John Cockburn of Ormiston and John Glendinning the lands of Dalgleish. He was Baron of Synton, rather than owner of specific lands within it, since Scott of Synton is mentioned as early as 1509, about the time he became 4th Lord. In 1510 there is an indenture of him and his son, with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst involving lands in Synton, as well as Nisbet; this was witnessed by John of Dun, as well as Alexander and Robert, who were probably all closely related. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir George Campbell of Loudon. Their eldest son, Robert, died before him and he was succeeded by his second son Sir John, the 5th Lord. The youngest of his 3 sons was James, who married Christian Stirling, and who was progenitor of the Erskines of Shielfield. He was killed at Flodden. Robert (18th C.) surgeon in Hawick who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Oliver and Helen Currer. Perhaps the same Robert married Katherine Gledstains and their daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick in 1775. She is probably the 'Kate Gladstains Mother to Molly Eskine' whose death is recorded in 1816. Thomas of that Ilk (d.c.1404) son of Sir Robert, Chamberlain of Scotland. He witnessed charters during the reign of Robert III. He was witness to the confirmation of the lands and titles of George Douglas, Earl of Angus. He held many other titles and positions, including Keeper of Edinburgh Castle in 1371. He was recorded as Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1373. In 1383 he is recorded when Peter 'of Koeburn', Lord of Henryland renounced to him the rights to the rentals from the lands of Dalgleish in Selkirkshire. In 1389 he witnessed the charter of Walter Scott to the superiority of Kirkurd; he is there referred to as 'consanguineo nostro', suggesting he was related to King Robert II. He married Mary, daughter and heiress of Sir William Douglas; she died in childbirth and a duel was fought over the right to her titles, the crucial dispute being over whether her child was stillborn or died after birth. He secondly married Joneta Keith, from whom he may have inherited the Synton estates. He was captured at Homildon Hill and may have died while a prisoner. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Thomas (d.1493/4) 2nd Lord Erskine, son of Sir Robert, the 1st Lord. Among other lands he held the estate of Synton and office of Sheriff of Selkirk, which passed to his son Alexander. This may have come through his grandmother Joneta Keith, Lady of Cadzow. He had a crown charter in 1448 for the lands of Erskine, Sheriffdom of Aberdeen, etc., as well as the lands of Dalgleish and Synton; these had been resigned by his father, while retaining 'liferent'. He was 'Thoma, domino Erskin' when witnessing charters for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1451/2 and 1455 and another for the Douglasses in 1456. He is recorded as Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1469. He also served as Justiciar for Lothian in 1474. Along with Alexander, he witnessed an 'instrument' relating to lands in Hassendean in 1480/1. He resigned his lands in the King's hands in 1489, and they were re-granted to his heir, Alexander. He married Janet Douglas, possibly a daughter of the 1st Earl of Morton. His children included Alexander, 3rd Lord; Helen; Isobel; Elizabeth; and Mariotta or Muriella. He may also have been father of Margaret, who married James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells. He died 3 months before his son Alexander succeeded in April 1494. William (16th C.) Parson of Campsie and Commendator of Paisley. He was appointed as titular Archbishop of Glasgow in 1585, but deprived in 1587, when the General Assembly dissolved the archbishopric. He may have continued to be referred to as Archbishop until 1594, but unlike his predecessors, played no important role in affairs in Teviodale. His seal was rather crude compared to those of earlier bishops, showing St. Kentigern and the words 'SIGILLUM GUILIELMI ERSKENE ARCHIEPISCOPI GLASGU.' (formerly written 'Erskyn', 'Erskin' and variants).

es (ez) v. is (third person singular, present tense) – 'she es so', '... how grand a privilege it hez been and still ez ti bide in the West End' [IWL], 'If we are inquiring about a sick friend we might say, 'Is hei bediit?' We would not, however, hear the word 'is' so sounded in the answer. 'Hei ez that, pui fella'' [WL] (often used emphatically, in response to a statement, even if it contained 'is'; note is is also frequently used, depending on context, and eez is sometimes used for emphasis; also spelled 'ez').

Esa (ee-sa) n. (b.c.457) possibly first chief of Bernicia, the Anglian kingdom of north-eastern England and south-eastern Scotland, which included Hawick. He was succeeded by his son Eoppa and grandson Ida who became the first genuine King of Bernicia.

Escape (ees-kāp) n. organisation providing services to support young people, officially known as Escape Youth Services. It was set up in 2004. Drop-in sessions have been held at Have-lock Street, at Burnfoot Hub and in Denholm.

E-scape (ee-skāp) n. Hawick-based electronic band of the late 1980s and early 1990s, mainly Iain Scott on vocals and posing, supported by Keith Middlemas and sometimes others. They were the last band to play at Humphrey's (ex-Marina) before it burned down.

Eschetho (e-she-tō) n. lost place-name in Lilliesleaf Parish, probably replaced with Linto-bank or perhaps being the same as the lands later referred to as 'Riddell' (the name is recorded from about 1150 and likely comes from the Old English 'æsc sceat hoh', meaning 'the corner height with the ash tree').

Es'dale (es-dāl) n. poetic name for Eskdale – 'The braes o' Es'dale's bonnie, Her streams are sweet an' clear ...' [JoHa].

Esdale Law (es-dāl-law) n. hill to the west of Hawick, just north of Blawearie, reaching a height of 357 m. It has been suggested that the line of a Roman road passed here, connecting Craik Cross with Dere Street, via Groundstone Heights and Harelaw.

Esdale Sike (es-dāl-sīk) n. stream that rises near Blawearie and flows in a north-western direction to reach the Ale Water.

esh (esh) n., arch. ash (the tree or wood) – ‘Aa mind yince o’ sei-in a wice-like esh-plant that was growin’ on a steep cley bankin’ ...’ [DH].

Eshiebank see Ashybank

esk (esk) n., arch. the eft or newt – ‘The pert little eskis they curlit their tails, And danced a myrthsome reele’ [JTe] (also ask).

the Esk (thu-esk) n. popular name for the River Esk. It is formed of the Black and White Esk, which merge near Castle O’er Forest. It then runs through Langholm, merges with the Liddel and the Eden and empties into the Solway Firth. Historically it was an important part of the West Marches. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrave described it thus: ‘Eske is a fayre ryver, and cometh throughe Esdall, and is Scottishe, inhabtyed with Battesons of Esdell, untill it come neare a placed called the Langhalme castill and meateth with the water called Use, which waters and dales are bothe my Lorde Maxwells untill it come to Canonby kyrke, and then the Armestronges and Scottishe Graymes have it untill it meete the ryver of Lydall at the Mote skore, where Fargus Grayme his howse stands. Then it taketh the devysyon of the realmes untill it come to a place called Morton rigge where Will of Kinmont dwelleth; then there is a mere dyke that goeth to a ryver called Sarke, then is Eske Englishe on bothe sydes, and Sarke ryver devydes, and there are Graymes on both sydes, the one English, the other Scottishe untill it come to Gretnay, where it meteth Eske and both rune to Bownus, and soe take the sea’ – ‘... Till saddening memory all our haunts restore, The wild-wood walks by Esk’s romantic shore’ [JL], ‘Where Esk sweetly jinks, among hills overhanging, An’ valleys unmatched in verdure sae braw’ [JoHa], ‘From rocks and glens, and lofty peaks, In many purling rills; The Esk rolls on through spangled meads, Adorn’d with verdant hills’ [WSB], ‘Twixt Esk and Till there were maidens fair But none with the sheen of her nut-brown hair ...’ [WHO], ‘But though the men who rode are gone, A ghostly spirit marches on, Frae Langholm’s Esk tae Teviotside, A troupe of phantom Rievers ride’ [Sco] (note there are several other rivers of the same name, including the one running past Dalkeith and Musselburgh, the one in Cumbria, another in Angus, and a fifth in North Yorkshire).

Eskbank (esk-bawngk) n. former station on the Waverley Line, just south of Edinburgh.

Eskdaill (esk-dāl) n. courtesy title of the heir to the heir to the Dukedom of Buccleuch (i.e. first son of the Earl of Dalkeith), which keeps the older spelling. It was written this way in 1619 when Walter Scott was created Lord of Whitchester and Eskdaill, as well as Earl of Buccleuch.

Eskdaill Bank (esk-dāl-bawngk) n. street rising steeply uphill across the roundabout from Mart Street, better known as the ‘Killin Hoose Brae’. It was developed in 1897 and named after a title of the Scotts of Buccleuch.

Eskdaill Terrace (esk-dāl-te-ris) n. street named in 1883, developed in 1885, and incorporated into the west end of Weensland Road in 1955. Since the land was originally purchased from the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, it was named after one of the titles given to Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch in 1619 and more recently borne by heirs to the Earldom of Dalkeith. The main road to Denholm used to pass through this location (i.e. above the present Weensland Road) until re-joining near Bogliebarns (i.e. near the present Little Shop).

Eskdale (esk-dāl) n. valley of the River Esk, running from roughly Canonbie to Eskdalemuir. It was once a Lordship, held by the Avenel family from the late 12th century until it passed to the Grahams through marriage in 1243. In 1309 Robert the Bruce confirmed a charter to Melrose Abbey of lands there (held of Graham) and the superiority was granted to Sir James Douglas. It remained with the Earls of Douglas until they forfeited their lands and it was granted to George, Earl of Angus in 1458/9. Melrose Abbey still held lands there in the 15th century – ‘March! march! Ettrick and Teviot-dale! Why my lads dinna ye march forward in order? March! march! Eskdale and Liddesdale! All the blue bonnets are over the border!’ [T] (it is ‘Eschedale’ in about 1185 and ‘Esckedal’ in 1235/6).

Eskdale an Liddesdale Fermers’ Association (esk-dāl-in-li-diz-dāl-fer-murz-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. farmers club existing from at least the 1830s. It met alternately in Langholm and Newcastleton, with prizes given for the best livestock.

Eskdalemuir (esk-dāl-mewr, -mār) n. town in Eskdale, with the Meteorological Observatory and Seismological Station above, as well as the Girdle Stanes and Loupin Stanes and the Samye Ling Temple nearby. The lands there were long owned by Melrose Abbey, for which the Scotts of Buccleuch held the office of Bailie from around 1484, and it still belonged to the Abbey in 1553/4. The area used to be a centre for sheep farming, but is now heavily forested. An old drove road used to pass by the north of Hawick to the Borthwick valley and then go from Howpasley over towards Eskdalemuir. The parish of Eskdalemuir was created in 1702 from part of Westerkirk – ‘The stag-hounds, weary with the chase, Lay stretched upon the rushy floor, And urged, in dreams, the forest race, From Teviotstone to Eskdale-moor’ [SWS], ‘... And then, ten miles thrae onywhere, We had arrived at Eskdalemuir!’ [DH] (it is ‘Eskdailmur’ in 1524, ‘Esdaill Murr’ in 1553/4 and ‘Eskdaill Mure’ in 1633).

the Esmond Elliot Wards (thu-ez-mind-e-lee-i’-wawrdz) n. wards in the Cottage Hospital, named for the Hon. Esmond Elliot, brother of Lord Minto, who was killed in WWI. His sister Lady Violet Astor gave a sum to build the wards, and the foundation stone was laid by the Prince of Wales in 1924.

esni (ez-ni) contr. isn’t, is not – ‘she esni, is she?’, ‘hei esni gaun ti be the wunner o ony beauty contests’ (sometimes used for emphasis, cf. isni and issen).

espaicially (es-pā-shu-lee) adv. especially – ‘Gali folk er aaright, espaicially thaim thit support the Greens’ (also spaicially).

Esplin (esp-lin) n. Thomas (19th C.) English stockingmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. He helped introduce cricket to the Town. He may be related to (or an error for) John, who was living at about 19 Howegate in 1841.

Essendean (e-sin-deen) n. fictitious town in Robert Louis Stevenson’s 1886 novel ‘Kidnapped’. It lies on the (also fictional) Essen Water, somewhere in Ettrick Forest. The name would appear to be an amalgam of Essenside and Hassendean, both near to Hawick and not really in Ettrick Forest. Given the great care that Stevenson took with the geographical accuracy of the journey of the hero of the book through the Highlands, it is incongruous that he invented a location in the Borders for the start of the journey.

Essenside (e-sin-sīd) n. hamlet to the west of Ashkirk, consisting of Wester and Easter Essenside, with Essenside Head above the former and Essenside Loch above the latter. Old Essenside was a former farmstead between Western Essenside and Essenside Loch. An ancient fort and settlement are in the hills to the west. The lands were owned by branches of the Scotts from the 16th century, and Easter Essenside was later farmed by the Shorttreeds for several generations. Bernard Shortreed was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5. George Shortreed was there in 1579. Residents recorded in 1581 were Walter Chisholme, Robert Waugh, John Johnstone, William Chisholme, Mungo Robson, Thomas Shortreed, David Shortreed there, Thomas Aitchoson and James Hall. In about 1616 a group of Scotts murdered Walter Scott ‘in Essenside’ (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) while he was fishing on the Ettrick. Geordie Johnstone was there in 1623. In 1643 the teinds of the Laird were valued at £60 and held by Robert Scott of Heap. In 1678 John Scott of Synton is recorded as owner of these lands, valued at £365. The ‘Laird of Todrick younger’ was listed there in 1694. Robert Prendergast was herd there in 1698. An oak panel in Ashkirk Kirk bears the arms of the family, the motto ‘non eget arcu’ (he needs not the bow) and the date 1702. William (probably Scott) was a tenant there in 1702, and William Redford also lived there. In 1799 George Ballantyne and John Robson were servants there and Samuel McKain a labourer – ‘Out beyond the Langhope Burn and over Essenside ...’ [WHO] (it is marked as ‘Essinsyd’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘W. Essinsyd’ and ‘E. Essinsyd’ and it is ‘Eastenside’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is ‘eschinsyd’ in 1494/5, ‘eschynesyde’ in 1544, ‘Eschinside’ in 1569, ‘Eschinsid’ in 1581, ‘Ashinsyde’ in 1617, ‘Eschinsyd’ in 1622 and ‘Essinsyde’ in 1623).

Essenside Heid (e-sin-sīd-heed) n. hill above Wester Essenside, reaching a height of 314 m, and now being in a wooded area. The higher hill to the west (which appears to be unnamed) contains the remains of a fort and settlement. The hill-fort is oval, about 75 m by 50 m, with 3 ramparts, and containing 9 hut-circles, some perhaps being from a later settlement. Another hill to the north (also unnamed) contains traces of cord rig.

Essenside Loch (e-sin-sīd-loch) n. body of water lying just above Easter Essenside in the Ale valley. A plan of the Loch was made by John Ainslie in 1774. In 1815 there was a dispute between Archibald Cochrane of Ashkirk and Gilbert Elliot, Ear of Minto, over rights to the marle in the loch. There are rig lines visible to the south of the Loch – ‘But ere they had won where the wandering moon Lit Essenside Loch with her di- amond shoon Red Rowan was galloping free on the heath With his neck outstretched and the bit in his teeth’ [WHO] (marked as ‘Essinsyde L.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

est (est) n., arch., poet. a nest – ‘A bird-est’ [JoJ], ‘Whare the burds mak thair ests: as for the stork, the fir-tries ar hir hame’ [HSR], ‘Yis, the sparra hæs fuund ane hous, an' the swalla ane est for hirsle' ...' [HSR], 'The hen's est' [GW].

et (et) pp. ate – 'oo et oor denner, then oo went oot', 'A hink the dog et eet', 'A et aa that tablet ee made', 'Ei says ei's leike ti bowk. A dinna wonder at eet; ei ett till ei was leike ti burst' [ECS], '...bit A bocht an ett twae cookies an a whank o cheese' [ECS] (also written 'ett'; this is the past tense form, while etten is the common past participle).

Etal Castle (e-tul-kaw-sul) n. ruin dating from the 14th century, near the River Till in Northumberland. Built by the English Manners family to guard the Tweed it was overwhelmed and destroyed by the Scots in 1497.

the Eternal Coouncil (thu-ee-ter-nul-koon-sul) n. popular name for the Town Council before the reorganisation of 1861, named because of the Council members' habit of re-electing each other. The ability of the old council to largely choose the new one goes back to a 1469 Act of the Scottish Parliament and was ratified in a decision by the Court of Session in 1781. There it was stated that the existing Councillors and new Bailies should elect 15 councillors 'who shall continue in their office during life' (also written 'Eternal Coonsul').

ether (e-thur) n., arch. an adder, any species of snake – 'A paddo'-bull frae Kutisgail, An etther wi' a rattlin' tail ...' [JoHa], 'If Mairch comes in wi' an ether's heid, it gangs oot wi' a peacock's tail' [GW] (cf. adderstane).

etten (e'-in, e-tin) pp. eaten – 'Decerns Thomas Oliver to content and pay to James Scott, lorimer, 3 half firlots of aitts eitten by his guids and geir ...' [BR1642], '...no a beite o meat hed a etten threh ma brekfist ti the now' [ECS], 'It's no' sae much juist bein' ett'n, Tho' sic a trial I'm no forgettin' ...' [DH] (also written 'ett'n'; this is the past participle, while et is the usual past tense).

etter (e-tur, e'-ur) n., arch. pus, suppurating matter, v., arch. to exude pus, fester (from Mediæval English).

etty (e-tu-, e'-u-ree) adj., arch. pussy, fester-ing, bad-tempered, angry, hot-headed.

ettle (e-tul) v., arch., poet. to intend, purpose, attempt, endeavour, reckon – 'That thaye may schuut wi' hidden ettle at the perfite ...' [HSR], 'He ettled that he was a great freend

o' the faither's and that the bairn wadnae want ...' [JEDM], 'An' I thought I was ettled to dee an auld maiden ...' [JT], 'Ye see that naked, shameless hizzie, Ettlin' ti make the sodger dizzy ...' [WP], '...And ettled hae' in a hertie try To prove they were true o' ee' [WL], 'Blithe was he as he ettled roamin' Yester een at the faa o' gloamin' ...' [WL], 'Hawick men yince mairched to Jethart, Ettlin to be free ...' [DH], to aim, count on doing something – '...an A ettled at findin' some machine tae serr ma ends' [ECS], 'Ettle at a silk goon an' ee'll yiblin's get a sleeve' [GW].

ettle-earnest (e'-tul-er-nist) adj., arch. dead earnest (cf. nettle-yirnest).

ettelt (e-tul') pp., arch. intended, attempted – 'For thaye ettlet ill agayne thee ...' [HSR] (also written 'ettlet').

Ettleton (e-tul-tin) n. former parish near Newcastle, with a churchyard that still contains mediæval gravestones. It is reached from a short dead-end road leaving the main road south of Newcastle by the Milnholm Cross. Some of the oldest stones have been incorporated into a wall, which is dedicated to the memory of the Armstrongs, and others are behind a railing. The church was in the partonage of the Lords of Liddesdale, but there is no record of any minister serving there. There is now no sign of the church that served the parish until 1604, when it was merged with Castleton; it was located on a terrace to the north and west of the graveyard. There are the remains of a settlement to the north (said to have been a village once), where ancient coins were found in the early 19th century. A more extensive farm and field system is located to the west, possibly being the lands of Side. There was also probably another chapel at Chapelknowe, at the edge of the old parish towards Canonbie. It appears on Bagomond's Roll of 1275 as 'Rectoria cum vicaria de Eddiltoun'. In the Exchequer Rolls for 1540 the teind lambs were paid to the rector there, amounting to £29 12s. The farm there along with Millholm, was possessed by David Goldie and James Mitchelson. The patronage and teinds of the kirk are still mentioned along with Castleton in the 1653 service of heirs for Mary Scott of Buccleuch and in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch, when it is described as a 'pendicle' of Castleton (the name probably derives from the Old English personal name ‘Edla’ or ‘Eadhild’; it first appears as ‘Eddiltoun’ and ‘Eddilstoun’ in the 13th century; it is ‘Edilstoun’ in 1540, ‘Eddiltoun’ in 1575, ‘Eddiltoun’ in 1632 and ‘Edingtoun’ in 1653, ‘Ed-dilton’ and ‘Eddiltoune’ in 1663; it is ‘Ettletown’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; note the potential confusion with the Eddleston near Peebles).

Ettletonside (e-tul-tin-sīd) n. former farmstead near Ettleton. It is listed in 1632 along with Potterlampert, as a possession of Sandy Armstrong (it is ‘Eddiltounside’ in 1632 and ‘Edingtoune’ in 1653).

Ettleton Sike (e-tul-tin-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Kirk Hill and flows past Ettleton cemetery to join the Liddel opposite Mangerton. To the south there is a small terrace with the remains of a rectangular building, and there are field-banks and rig lines in the area, visible on aerial photographs. On a hillside to the north are the remains of another rectangular hut, together with a field system.

Ettleton Spa (e-tul-tin-spaw) n. former spa said to have been located near Ettleton in southern Castleton Parish.

Ettrick (e’-reek, et-reek) n. village on the Ettrick Water, well away from main roads. James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd was born near here and is buried in the parish church graveyard, along with Tibbie Shiel and Thomas Boston. There has been a church there for about 800 years, and the village was once ‘Ettrick Kirkton’. The name is also used for a former parish, and in general for the valley. Lands there that were granted by Alexander II to Melrose Abbey and are described in detail in the charter. The present church was built in 1824. There is also the Boston Memorial Hall. The lands of ‘Ethrik’, Rodono and ‘Carrick’ were erected into a free regality by James I in 1436 (origin uncertain; sometimes formerly spelled ‘Etterick’, it is ‘Ethryč’ and ‘Ethrič’ in c.1236, ‘Etricke’ in 1415 and ‘Ettryk’ in 1519).

the Ettrick (thu-e’-reek) n. popular name for Ettrick Witter – ‘The border lass sings it in strains sweet tho’ sad, On the banks o’ the Ettrick or Yarrow’ [WS], ‘Fareweel, my Ettrick! fare-ye-weel! I own I’m unco laith to leave ye; Nane kens the half o’ what I feel, Nor half the cause I ha’e to grieve me!’ [ES].

Ettrickbank (e’-reek-bawngk) n. cottage in Ettrickbridge, once the home of the Ettrick Shepherd and of the Scott family in the mid-19th century.

Ettrickbrig (e’-reek-brig, et-reek-brig) n. Ettrickbridge, also called ‘Ettrickbridge-end’, a village set out by the 3rd Duke of Buccleuch in the late 18th century in the Ettrick valley, west of Selkirk. The lands there had been held by the Scotts of Harden until about 1746. The original bridge there was built of freestone in 1628 by Auld Wat of Harden and had 3 arches. The romantic version of the story is that the old riever had accidentally killed a child in a cross-Border raid, and at the request of the Abbot of Melrose erected this bridge at a spot where several lives had been lost crossing the river, so that in future many lives would be saved. The bridge was ruined by 1715 and rebuilt in 1739, but washed away in 1777. The replacement came in 1780 about half a mile further up-river, and this had the old stone displaying the Harden coat of arms built into it. It was widened in 1858. The Cross Keys Inn was once a coaching inn and survives as a hotel.

Ettrick Brig-end (et-reek-brig-end) n. the village of Ettrickbridgend, also known as ‘Ettrick-brig’.

Ettrick Forest (e’-reek-for-ist, et-reek-for-ist) n. name formerly used for a large tract of land generally lying to the west of Selkirk, and also sometimes called ‘Selkirk Forest’ or just ‘the Forest’. It formed the last large part of the great Caledonian Forest situated around the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, and now almost entirely gone. It consisted of Scots pine, oak, birch and hazel. However, it should be noted that the word ‘forest’ could also refer to an area of bare, high land, rather than necessarily implying that it was full of trees. It became a royal hunting forest, with royal parties being based at Selkirk and Galashiels. Lands there were granted to Sir James Douglas by Robert the Bruce in 1321, and they remained in the superiority of the Douglasses until forfeited to the Crown in the middle of the 15th century. Rents were paid to the Crown, with a few specific farms where the King or Queen kept their own flocks of sheep. Margaret Tudor received lands there in 1503, which later passed to the Scotts. There was often a Keeper of the Forest, with the Earl of Gloucester being one of the first appointed, by Edward I. It was also used as a sanctuary for fugitives, with Wallace and Bruce hiding there, for example, and known as a lawless place in rieving days. In early times there were special Forest Courts, with jurisdiction over the residents, and the Forest was divided into 3 Wards, known as Ettrick, Tweed and Yarrow. Each Ward was under the charge of 2 rangers, one of whom was referred to as the Master Ranger. The Wards were divided into steadings; in the 15th century there were 45 in Ettrick, 23½ in Yarrow and 17 in Tweed, each paying £6 in rent, as well as payment in livestock – ‘... May hang upon a soor ploom tree, And sleep in Ettrick Forest’ [JT] (it is ‘forestam del Selkirk’ in 1328 and ‘Ettrik-Forest’ in 1525).

Ettrick Haa (et-reek-haw) n. name for a legendary house near Ettrick village. Its existence may have been suggested by stories of the former farm of Ettrickhouse. It was said that in about 1700 James Anderson of Tushielaw evicted the tenants of some of his lands there and built a large house there, which by the early 19th century was already gone. The Ettrick Shepherd stated that the house in which he was born had been used as a stable on this estate – ‘Ettrick Hall stands on yon plain, Right sore exposed to wind and rain; and on it the sun shines never at morn, Because it was built in the widow’s corn; And its foundations can never be sure, Because it was built on the ruin of the poor. And or [ere] an age is come and gane, Or the trees o’er the chimly-taps grow green, We winna ken where the house has been’ [T].

Ettrickheid (et-reek-heed) n. area around the head of the Ettrick Water. The lands there were part of the holdings of Melrose Abbey, for which the Scotts of Buccleuch had the office of Bailie from the late 15th century (it is ‘Ettrikheid’ in 1524 and 1525 and ‘Ettrikheid’ in 1553/4).

Ettrickhill (et-reek-hil) n. village, being the western extension of Ettrick. Here is the monument to the Ettrick Shepherd, marking the site of the cottage he was born in.

Ettrickhouse (et-reek-hoos) n. Ettrickhouse, former farm in the Ettrick valley. In 1557 Scott in Thirlestane paid rent to Melrose Abbey for these lands. The tenants there in 1609 were John Scott, James Amos and Archibald Stewart. Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter for these and other lands in about 1620 and granted them to Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade in about 1622. They were inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade in 1655. The existence of this old farm probably gave rise to the local legend of the large villa of Ettrick Haa being built there around 1700 (it is ‘Ettrikhous’ in 1557, ‘Atrikhous’ in 1564 and ‘Ettrikhous’ in about 1622).

Ettrick Pairish (e’-reek-pā-reesh) n. parish in Selkirkshire, containing the upper reaches of the Ettrick valley, extending to St. Mary’s Loch. It is bounded by Robertson to the south-east. It incorporated the ancient parish of Rankilburn or Buccleuch from 1650. There was a ‘New Kirk’ there from the early 16th century, with the present building dating from 1824 (it is ‘Atrik’ in 1539).

Ettrick Pen (et-reek-pen) n. summit that is the highest point in the headwaters of the Ettrick, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway, reaching a height of 692 m (2,270 ft). It was long referred to as ‘Eskdalemuir Pen’ by those living in Eskdale – ‘... For, swift as the deer on Ettrick Pen Sweep at the sound from scaur to glen, And swift as the towering kestrel stoops When a field mouse moves in the bracken hoops’ [WHO], ‘Away owre i’ the wast, Ettrick Pen, raxin abune his neebors, And the muckle roond shoorders o’ the Mof-fat Hills ...’ [DH] (the name is probably another example of the p-Celtic ‘pen’).

the Ettrick Shepherd (thu-et-reek-she-purd) n. popular name for the other James Hogg.

Ettrickside (et-reek-sīd) n. the side of the Ettrick Water – ‘There are brase on Ettrickside Where the broom and bracken bide; But the’re charmin’ spots that hide Roond auld Hawick’ [TK].

Ettrickside (et-reek-sīd) n. former name for a farm in the Ettrick valley, owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane in the early 17th century, with tenants in 1609 being William ‘Houp’ and Thomas Brydon. It was once part of the parish of Rankilburn. In 1621 it was described as an ‘outset’ of Gamescleuch (it is ‘Ettriksyde’ in 1609 and ‘Ettriksyd’ in 1621; it is marked ‘Ettricksyid’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Ettrick Terrace (e’-reek-te-ris, et-reek-te-ris) n. street in ‘the Terraces’ of the Wellogate, built around 1892 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company, and named after the river.

Ettrick Witter (e’-reek-wi’-ur, et-reek-wi’-ur) n. river that rises at Ettrick Head, east of Mof-fat, and joins the Tweed near Abbotsford. The first bridge across it was built for Alexander II in 1234 and connected Kelso Abbey with a cell of monks at Lesmahagow in Lanarkshire, although it is unclear how long it lasted. The next bridge was built by Auld Wat of Harden at Ettrickbridge in 1628 and replaced in 1780. There was also a ford near here from at least 1647 – ‘... I hear the lintie in the whins Where Ettrick rins’ [JBS], ‘So Ettrick flowed by an elf-heart led With an elf-song sung the while, And the crystal tear that a fairy shed Made a wasted moorland smile’ [WHO] (the river was formerly known as ‘Ethric’, ‘Etryk’, ‘Hetterich’, ‘Etreych’, ‘Atric’, etc., and may be related to the Old Welsh ‘Atre’ meaning ‘playful’).

Eunson (yo-on-sin) n. Paul educated at Hawick High School, he is a pediatric neurologist at the Royal Hospital for Sick Children in Edinburgh. He has worked to train pediatricians in developing countries.

Eure see Evers

the Evangelical Union (thu-ee-vawn-je-lee-kul-yoon-yin) n. evangelical church group in Hawick, formed in 1848 and later renamed the Congregational Kirk (although there were separate, but related, groups with that name at about the same time, the early history being complicated). They met on O’Connell Street, with Rev. Alexander Duff being the first minister. The church was formed on E.U. principles, but only joined the Scottish Evangelical Union in 1859. The building was constructed on O’Connell Street in 1848–9 and finally sold about 1892 when the new church was erected on Bourtree Place. Also called the ‘Evangelistic Union’ and later the ‘E.U. Congregational Church’ when there was a union between the Evangelical and Congregational churches in Scotland. It was finally renamed simply the ‘Congregational Church’, and moved to new premises on Bourtree Place in 1894.

Evans (e-vinz) n. Dr. Rufus Easson (d.1945) general practitioner in Newcastleton. He lived at Northfield, North Hermitage Stree. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Rose Alice Vassie. Their daughter Helen Christina drove ambulances in the London Blitz and wrote fiction under the name ‘Jane Oliver’.

evendoon see eendoon

evendoonness (ee-vin-doon-nis) n., arch. straightforwardness, frankness, honesty, candour – ‘But dinna blame me for my evendoonness, Joost wyte thysel’ for fateing me the sphere O’ rustic life ...’ [JoHa] (cf. eendoon).

even on (ee-vin-ōn) adv., arch. continuously – ‘It rain’d even on’ [GW] (also written ‘even-on’).

the Ever Burn (thu-e-vur-burn) n. former name for a stream near the lands of East Mains, the precise location being uncertain. It is described in a sasine of 1688 as forming the south boundary of Cramptlands Croft.

the Evergreen (thu-e-vur-green) n. common name for the Evergreen Hall.

Evergreen Hall (e-vur-green-hawl) n. the Evergreen Club for the elderly was started in 1960, meeting in church halls until this hall was built at the foot of Dovecote Street by public subscription, and opened in 1965 by Lady Polwarth. The land had previously been the site of the hut used for Pentecostal (or Apostolic) meetings. It is the traditional starting point for the children’s procession to the Vertish Hill Sports.

Everhaa (e-vur-haw) n. another name for Overhall – ‘Here kneels James Langlands o’ that ilk, A Borderer both true and keen; For he’s the Lord of Langlands fair, Of Everhall and Wilton Dean’ [BCM1880].

everlestin (i-vur-les-tin, -teen) adj., poet. everlasting – ‘Blisset be the Lord God o’ Israel, frae evirlestin til evirlestin’ [HSR], ‘Thy kingdom is ane evirlestin’ kingdom, an’ thy dominione induurs throweowt a’ ganæratians’ [HSR], n., arch. a seemingly interminable amount of time, particularly used in the phrase ‘a guid everlestin’, meaning ‘perpetually’ – ‘Yince an thon wumman sterts, she hashes an blethers for a guid everlesteen’ [ECS], ‘Yince an’ she begins, she raims on for a guid everlestin’ [GW].

everly (e-vur-lee) adv., arch. constantly, continually – ‘Oor forebears an ther Southron neebers coodna sit soft ava i thae days: they war everly natterin an fechtin’ [ECS], ‘Everlie the road was thrang wui’ droves o’ nowt’ [ECS] (also ‘everlie’).

evermair (e-, i-vur-mār) adv. evermore – ‘For time’s turning fortune may tum’le oor way, And throw o’er the mirkiness light evermair’ [JoHa], ‘What! risk my life? the deil be there, Ye’se want a kirk for evermair’ [RDW], ‘...at they richt han’ ther ar plesurs for evirmair’ [HSR], ‘Gang awa frae ill, an’ do guid; an’ dwell for evirmair’ [HSR], ‘Oh, oor herts are heavy and sair! A’ things are changed for evermair ...’ [FL], ‘...I’d cherish her, my faultless dove For evermair’ [WP], ‘Till in His hame I dwell for evermair ...’ [WL].

Evers (ee-vurz) n. Sir Ralph (1508–1545) officer of Henry VIII, born in Witton Castle, Yorkshire, son of William the 1st Lord Eure (or Evers). He was married to Margery Bowes (grand-daughter of Sir Richard Bowes, who had been Warden of the English Middle Marches). He was deputy at Berwick and Governor of Scarborough Castle in the siege of 1536. About 1545 he became English Warden of the West Marches, at the same time as his father was Warden of the East March. In 1544 he led a raid on west Teviotdale, when Braxholme tower was burned, 8 Scots slain, 30 taken prisoner and a large amount of livestock carried off. His force met Hertford's force at Edinburgh, after razing Haddington and Hawick on the way from England (although this may be an error, since the two places are hardly on the same route). He was certainly in charge of the force that looted and burned Jedburgh in 1544. He later led an English invasion that devastated the Borders in 1545, being promised lands that he conquered in Teviotdale and the Merse. This invasion followed the raid of Lord Hertford as part of the 'Rough Wooing', in which the Border Abbeys were attacked and tombs were destroyed. It probably included Hawick, although there are no explicit records of this. He was supported by several Kers and other locals, at the siege of Conlingham and the burning of Selkirk. His forces were routed at Ancrum Moor, where he was killed along with his fellow commander Sir Brian Latoun. He was ironically buried at Melrose Abbey, which his own forces had desecrated earlier. Apparently his body was skinned and the skin used to make purses for Scottish officers. An English ballad, 'Lord Ewie', is about him – 'Lord Ewie was as brave a man As ever stood in his degree; The King has sent him a broad letter, All for his courage and loyalty' [T]. Ralph 3rd Lord Eure (1558–1617) son of William. He succeeded Sir John Forster as Warden of the English Middle March in 1595. In February of that year he wrote to Burghley 'Sir Robert Kerr rode to Edinburgh with a number of Kers who are reconciled to him and Fernieherset. It is thought in revenge of the quarrel of the Trumbils which the laird of Buccleuch undetaketh. And so Buccleuch is strengthening the Armitage which lies too near is here – has also drawn most of the Elliots to his house at Hawick, and keeps an extraordinary number in the house there.' He apparently resigned after complaints were made against him. Note that he was the 4th generation of his family to have been a March Warden. He married Mary Dawnay of Sassay and was succeeded by his son William. Sir William 1st Lord Eure (c.1483–1547/8) son of Sir Ralph Eure (or Evers) and Muriel Hastings. He was appointed by the Earl of Surrey to be one of the Marshalls of the English army that attacked Jedburgh in 1523. He was Sheriff of Durham and Northumberland and Warden of the English East March in the 1530s and 1540s. In 1541 he complained about the large flocks of Scottish sheep and other animals that were being pastured on the English side of the Merse. He married Elizabeth Willoughby of Parham. Since his son Sir Ralph died before him, he was succeeded by his grandson William, the 2nd Lord. William 2nd Lord Eure (1529–93/4) son of Sir Ralph and grandson of William, 1st Lord. He was Warden of the English Middle March about 1553–57. He married Margaret Dymoke of Scrivelsby and was succeeded by his son Ralph (also written 'Eure', 'Evre', 'Ewrie', etc.).

every (e-vu-ree) adj., arch. hungry (noted by J. Jamieson; also aiverie and eevenoo).

everyday (iv-ree-dā) n., arch. a week-day, as opposed to Sunday, a working-day, adj. worn on weekdays – 'Everyday claes' [GW] (cf. ilka-day).

everyhin (iv-ree-hin) pron. everything – 'everyhin happens for a reason' (can be spelled 'ivryhin'; see also aathing and aahing).

everyin (iv-ree-yin) pron. everyone – 'It's no everyin that can blaw about a menshion in the Charter!' [BW1979].

evict (e-vikt) v., arch. to obtain or recover by legal right – 'Monks meadow evicted by the min[iste]r for his glybe' [Buc1692].

Evil-willit Sandy (ee-vil-wi-lee'-sawn-dee) n. nickname for Alexander Airmstrong.

evite (e-vee) v., arch. avoid, evade – 'The Treasurer could not attend this day the Session in the Manse by reason of some emergencie he was trysted with and could not evite' [PR1724].

Ewart (yoo-ur') n. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant in 'langhop' in 1502, this probably being Langhope near Ashkirk. He was fined for not appearing at the justice-aire held in Selkirk, and served as his own surety.

the Ewe an Lamb (thu-yoo-an-lawm-in) n. public house on the Sandbed at 3 Orrock Place, previously known as St. Leonard's Vaults, and popularly called 'the Monkeys'. It was rebuilt in the 1950s, the earlier building dating back to around 1860, which replaced an even older building. It may be the location for one of the oldest licensed establishments in Hawick. James Elliot was proprietor from at least 1841 until the late 1860s. Wullie Smith was landlord in the latter part of the 20th century. The pub closed in 2005, becoming the Y.M. clubrooms, but re-opened as Deans' Bar in 2016. During the procession of the Drums and Fifes on the Thursday night of the Common Riding, the band stop here briefly; it is suggested that this is because the rebel Cornet's flag was displayed outside the pub here during one (or both) of the disputed Common Ridings of 1790 and 1809 (sometimes referred to as the 'Ewe & Lamb Inn').

Ewe Hill (yoo-hil) n. hill on the south side of the upper Hermitage valley, located south-east of the farm of Twislehope. It reaches a height of 471 m.

Ewe Knowe (yoo-now) n. small hill in Liddesdale, to the south-east of Dinlabyre, being the northern spur of Hunter's Hill, with Wilson's Pike above them.

Ewe Knowes (yoo-nowz) n. name for a hilly region in Liddesdale, just to the west of Foulshiels Wood, being an eastern extension of North Birny Fell.

Ewelair Hill (yoo-lār-hil) n. hill in Craik Forest, just north-west of Wolfcleuchhead. It lies between Muckle Knowe and Grey Hill, reaching a height of 434 m.

Ewen (yoo-win) n. Andrew (c.1760–1840s) born in Kelso, son of Andrew and Mary Hogherd. He was a skinner and tanner in Hawick. He had the premises in Tannage Close from 1812, moving to Slitrig Crescent by the 1820s. He was listed as Andrew 'sen. Crescent' in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and his tannery on Slitrig Crescent is shown on Wood's 1824 map, around No. 1. He was listed among heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1835. He was listed as a tanner in Pigot's 1837 directory. His business was eventually taken over by John Nichol, who was later Provost. He was a staunch Whig who worked to help elect Capt. Elliot. It is said that Elliot influenced the Whig members of the county to appoint his son as the Minister of Hobkirk the year after the 1832 election. He married Jane Peddie (from Kelso), and their children included: Jean (b.1790), who was living unmarried at Slitrig Crescent in 1851; Andrew (b.1792), a manufacturer in Jedburgh; Mary (b.1794); Helen (b.1796); Rev. John (b.1800), local minister; and Henry (b.1804), also a skinner. He was still alive in 1841 and listed in Slater's 1852 directory (although he was probably deceased by then). His children Jane, Helen and Robert were all living together unmarried on Bridge Street in 1861. One of his daughters was probably the 'Miss Ewen' who donated a 1576 bible to the Museum in 1857. Andrew (b.1792) son of Andrew. He worked in Hawick before moving to Jedburgh, where he was a manufacturer. He was still in Hawick in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He is recorded as 'Andrew Ewen, jun.' as a currier on the Crescent in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. In 1841 he was a manufacturer at Al-lars Mill in Jedburgh, living with his son Robert.

Henry (b.1804) son of Andrew and Jane Peddie. He was also a skinner in Hawick. In the 1837 Commons inquiry into 'fictitious voters' he was mentioned as exchanging property with John Haldane in Selkirk, apparently for the purpose of voting. He is recorded as such in the electoral roll of 1837 and on the 1841 census is living with his elderly father and sister Helen on the Crescent. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer on Slitrig Crescent and in 1861 was at 3 Bridge Street (probably corresponding to the modern No. 20), still unmarried with his mother and sister. In 1857 he donated the skull of an ancient ox to the Museum, found at Synton Moss. Rev. John (1800–75) son of the Hawick skinner Andrew and Jane Peddie, he was born in Hawick. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed to preach in 1822. He became assistant to Rev. James Arkle in Hawick soon afterwards, apparently refusing to accept remuneration for this position. He was then tutor to several notable Roxburghshire families, including travelling in Europe, and also worked as preceptor to the only son of a gentleman in Yorkshire. He was presented as minister of Hobkirk in late 1833 and ordained there in 1834. This was said to be due to the influence of Capt. Elliot (brother to Lord Minto) who his father had supported in the election the year before. There was much dissent among the heritors and some even laid an accusation of simony against him, so it was a year before he was finally ordained. He also acted as Persbytery Clerk. His was appointed by the Crown amid some controversy, the heritors being unable to agree. He remained there until his death. He wrote a statistical account of Hobkirk Parish in 1834. The oldest known communion token from Hobkirk is from 1837 and bears his initials; it is crudely made and probably formed from the material of older tokens. In 1841 he is recorded living at the Manse with Jane and Margaret (presumably his sisters). He married Isabella Yeaman (who died in 1898), daughter of James Fitchie, manufacturer of Deanfield, Meikle. Their children were: Anna Jane, who married George Watson, minister of Hownam; Rosanadra, 'Rose' (1849–1912), who married Col. John Joicey of Newton Hall, Northumberland; John Sangster, stockingmaker (1851–1913); and Charles Henry, engineer (1855–1909). Robert (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. His name is recorded as 'Ewans'. Robert (1823–1900) native of Hawick, son of Jedburgh manufacturer Andrew and grandson of Hawick skinner Andrew. He was educated at Peebles, then briefly worked in the Hawick Town Clerk's office before working with his father in the hosiery trade in Jedburgh. For many years he worked for William Watson & Sons, then about 1860 opened his own tweed and hosiery firm at Millbank, apparently the first firm to make tartan stockings; he sold the firm in the early 1880s and it became Currie's and then Hogg's. He was part of the old 'eternal council', and after reconstitution became a Councillor and Magistrate for 9 years before being Provost 1875–78. His Provostship saw the new sewage works developed, and the purchase of Wilton Manse and Glebe. He was a Libreal who worked locally for the Reform Bill. Although not a Common Riding supporter, he was a member of the Parochial Board, member of the South of Scotland chamber of Commerce, one of the founders of Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, and a deacon in the Hawick Free Church. In 1841 he was living with his father in Jedburgh, but by 1851 was living on Hawick High Street with his widowed mother Elizabeth and sisters Elizabeth and Jane. In 1861 he was recorded as a hosier, employing 40 people. His wife was Blanche, from Edinburgh, and their children included Andrew and Eliza. He wrote several booklets that were published in Hawick: 'The Relief of the Nation' (1869); 'Dull Trade, its Causes and Cure' (1869); 'What is Free Banking?' (1870); 'Foreign Impressions in France, Switzerland, Italy, Austria and Germany' (1873); 'The Life of Trade as Affected by our Monetary Laws' (1873); 'A Modern Ballad on the Reign of Mammon and Social and Economical Reform and People's Banks, with a Glimpse into the Coming Century'; 'American Impressions' (1878); 'Through Canada in 1878'; and 'Industries and Banks' (1885). Long involved in banking, he left Hawick about 1880 to promote the 'People's Bank of Scotland Ltd.' in Glasgow, died in Edinburgh and is buried in the Wellogate (also sometimes 'Ewin').

Ewen's Court (yoo-winz-kōr) n. former name for Tannage Close, after Andrew Ewen, skinner, who ran a tannage business there. It marked the southern end of the Little Haugh on Woods 1824 plan.

Ewen's Loch (yoo-winz-loch) n. small pond in the 'Ewen's Moss' area, to the west of Kaimend.

Ewen's Moss (yoo-winz-mos) n. former name for an area in the hills to the south-east of Hawick, corresponding to the area now centred on Ewen's Loch, west of Kaimend. This is south of the once much larger Hilliesland Loch.

Ewes (yooz) n. settlement on the River Ewes, a few miles north of Langholm, or more generacally the name for the valley. The surrounding parishes of 'Over Ewes' and 'Nether Ewes' were here. The church by the roadside at Ewes, built 1866/7, is famous for its ancient bell hanging in the fork of a tree. It is built on the site of the 13th century Nether Kirk of Ewes, dedicated to St. Cuthbert. There was formerly a school here and a blacksmith's and post office to the north at Brieryshaw – 'Sequestered vale! my loved, my native Ewes, Thy beuty's worthy of a nobler song, Nor can these broken notes express the strong Unuttered thoughts that thrill my rustic muse' [MW].

Ewesdale (yooz-dāl) n. valley of the River Ewes, running north of Langholm. It is familiar to Terries who drive much of the valley between Fiddleton and Lanholm along the A7. Historically it appears never to have been a barony, and to have been separate from the Regality of Eskdale to the south. In 1456 it was granted by the King to George, 4th Earl of Angus, after being resigned by Robert Graham of Ewesdale (actually swapped with lands in Forfarshire); it was stated that it had formerly been in Dumfriesshire, but had been transferred to Roxburghshire. Sassine was given in 1456/7 at the principle manor of 'Mallano', although it is unclear where that was. Through the 15th century it was a Lordship, held by the Douglasses. The upper part (with the 'Ower' Kirk) was once a Lordship of the Homes, while the lower part of the valley belonged to the Lindsays, then the Maxwells; the 2 parts were united in the hands of Alexander, Earl of Home in about 1610. However, the superiority of the lands in the lower part (along with patronage of Nether Ewes Kirk) continued to be held by the Maxwells into at least the 18th century. The valley was burned by the English in 1514, when it was described as '8 myles of Lienth in the said Marchies, wherupon was 27 pleughes'. George, Lord Home, granted lands in 'the vuyr parrochin of Ewisdale' to Ninian and David Armstrong in 1528. Throughout the 16th century it was listed among those places near the Border whose inhabitants were responsible for 'dalie slauchteris, birning, fyre raising, open reffis, thiftis and depredationis'. In 1579 there is a record of a feud between the Elliots of Ewesdale and the Armstrongs of 'the Gyingillis'. Much of the land fell into possession of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1643. The 'lordschip of Ewisdall' was listed among the possessions of the family in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The region was for a time part of Roxburghshire (on account of being part of contiguous lands held by the Duchess of Buccleuch), from at least 1672, and was last restored to Dumfriesshire in 1747. The name formerly applied to parts of Eskdale as well. There were once mills at Meikledale, Sorbie, Arkleton, Bliss, Glenvorane, and Wrae. The main families of the area were the Littles, Armstrongs, Elliots, Scotts (of Ewesdale) and Beatties. An ancient turf dyke ran along the hills on the western side of the valley, and old roads of various vintages can be traced up the hillsides and across the pass at Ewes Doors. There are many signs of ancient habitation in the area, with more than a dozen locations marked as settlements, along with a couple of hill forts. A book 'The Ewes Valley: An Historical Miscellany' was written by Brenda I. Morrison and R. Bruce McCartney in 2000, with a historical article by John Elliot (spelled 'Euesdail', 'Euisdail', 'Euisdale', 'Ewisdail', 'Ewisdale', 'Ewysdale' and variants; it is 'le Vale de Ewithe' in 1296; some sources suggest the origin of the name is 'efts dale' or 'newts dale', but it seems more likely that like other local rivers, the origin of 'Ewes' is obscure).

Ewes Doors (yooz-dōrz) n. pass at the source of the Eweslees Burn, about a mile up the burn from Eweslees farm, off the A7 south of Moss-paul. There is a mound here that may have been a Roman watch tower. The land may also have been known as Glenvorane and was owned by a branch of the Elliots in the 16th century. It was the location for a fight between the Elliots and the Scotts in August 1565, part of the feud between the Lairds of Braidlie and Branxholme, in which several Scotts were killed. It was said that the Elliots raided into Scott territory, then about 400 of them waited in ambush at the pass, killing 6 of the Scott party (2 Scotts, 2 Dalgleishes, a Short and one 'Theffinmis') and capturing 60. Another story tells of how Walter Scott of Branxholme and his men laid in wait here for a gang of Cumbrian raiders, scaring them off and recapturing their booty. There was once a chapel near here (presumably closer to the river), dedicated to St. Paul and connected with Melrose Abbey. The last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1575 records a debt owed 'to the porter of Ewisdy' for the rest of the price of ane horse'; this suggests that there may have been a change-house located at the pass here, with the proprietor known as the 'porter'. Archibald Elliot was there in 1586. There are also several linear earthworks here, crossed by the terrace-way that forms part of the old road from Eweslees to Caerlenrig (which may have been originally Roman). The Parish of Ewes was disjoined from Dumfriesshire and united with Roxburghshire in 1672 (it is 'Ewisdores' in 1565 and transcribed as 'Ellis Durris' in 1586).

Ewesdown Sike (yooz-down-, yowz-doon-sik) n. stream in the headwaters of the Teviot. It joins Worms Cleuch at the steading of Ramsay-cleuchburn, becoming Rams Cleuch.

Ewes Fit (yooz-fi) n. Ewes Foot, former name for an area near the foot of the Ewes Water, or more specifically for the ford near the confluence with the River Esk (just north of Langholm) which was once part of the main route towards Hawick.

Ewe Sike (yoo-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Ewe Knowe and running north to become part of Boghall Burn.

Ewes Kirk (yooz-kirk) n. name of one of 2 churches in the Ewes valley, formerly referred to as the Ower Kirk and the Nether Kirk. The upper one was abandoned after the Reformation and the congregation merged with that of the lower one. The present building was constructed in 1867, with designs by James Burnet of Langholm. A roll of ministers is: Roger Kirkpatrick in 1556; William Graham, from 1627; Mr. Chisholme in about 1642; John Lithgow 1646–64; John Home c.1664–81; John Melville early c.1682–89; John Lithgow 1689–94; Robert Darling 1694–1717; Robert Malcolm 1717–61; Richard Scott 1761–90; John Clunie 1790–91; John Laurie 1791–1817; Robert Shaw 1816–53; Thomas Smith 1853–1901; David Preston 1901–.

Eweslees (yooz-leez) n. farm off the A7 near where the Moss-paul Burn meets the Eweslees Burn. John Elliot 'callit of the Dewisleis' is recorded in 1578/9. Edward Aitchison was tenant there in 1711. Hugh and David Scott were there in the period 1788–97. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1841 until at least the 1860s. Eweslees Knowe is about 7 km to the north-west. Remains of rig-and-furrow cultivation can be seen near the head of the Eweslees Burn, as well as signs of several enclosures. In 1942 an RAF Hurricane aircraft (JS346) crashed into the hillside in poor visibility, narrowly avoiding the farmhouse, and killing the pilot, Prince Suphebat Chirosoakti of Siam (it is 'Dewislyis' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Dewislees' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Eweslees Hope (yooz-leez-hōp) n. farmstead up the Ewesless Burn from the farm of Eweslees. It was occupied in 1841 by Armstrong Scott and Mary Scott (probably his mother).

Ewes Witter (yooz-wi'-ur) n. Ewes Water, small river that rises in the Blackhall and Moss-paul Burns and joins the Esk at Langholm, with a length of about 8 miles (13 km). The A7 road follows the valley of Ewesdale after crossing down into Dumfriesshire near Moss-paul (it is 'Euss fl.' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Ewss Riuer' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

the Exchange Bar (thu-eks-chānj-bawr) n. public house at 9 Kirkstyle or 1 Silver Street, opposite the former Exchange Buildings, and popularly known as 'Dalton's' after an early proprietor, John Dalton. It has been there since the mid-19th century, the building previously being the Chartist Store. It is a grade C listed building.

the Exchange Buildins (thu-eks-chānj-bil-dinz) n. built over the Slitrig beside Towerdyke-side, the foundation stone was laid in 1865 by the Duke of Buccleuch. A photograph of 1860 shows the site before construction commenced. The buildings consisted of a large hall, accommodating about 1500 people (and thus the largest in town), smaller halls, an arcade of shops and a house. It had a dual role as agricultural hall and entertainment centre, but soon came to be used mainly for concerts, shows, etc. It was later used as a dance hall and cinema, with various names, the Empire, the King's, the Odeon, the Classic and finally the Marina. In later years it was a bingo hall, with attached bars, most of which burned down in 1992. The northern section and the Arcade doorway survive, the rest being converted into a car park in 1998. The remaining three level building is designated to house the Border Archives.

the Exchange Hall Congregation (thu-eks-chānj-hawl-kōng-gree-gā-shin) n. name used for the Free Church congregation established in 1866, which met in the Exchange Hall for a few years until St. Andrew's Kirk was built. The named continued in popular use for some years afterwards.

the Ex-Club (thu-eks-klub) n. popular name for Hawick Ex-Servicemen's Club, with premises at 12 Teviot Crescent. They have had an annual dinner since 1928.

excommunication (eks-ko-mew-nee-kā-shin) n. official exclusion from the Church, being the ultimate punishment in former times. Imposition of this order meant that public proclamations were read at all nearby churches ordering all parishioners to shun the offender, and to refuse to offer them food or shelter. Civil rights were also affected, until an Act of 1690. But in general excommunication meant being a social outcast and losing one's livelihood. The Pope excommunicated the whole of Scotland for Robert the Bruce's involvement in the murder of John 'Red' Comyn (who was Baron of Bedrule, among other places). This led to the Declaration of Arbroath, and the eventual lifting of the National excommunication. There are no records of individual Teris suffering this fate. In 1724 2 people from Stow had their Act of Excommunication read at Hawick Kirk and all the churches of the Presbytery of Merse and Teviotdale.

the Ex-Cornets' an Actin Fithers' Association (thu-eks-kōr-nits-an-aw-k-tin-fithurz-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. organisation of past Cornets and Acting Fathers, ?? They keep a book

She was listed as a milliner on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. James (18th/19th C.) tin-plate worker on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was listed as an ironmonger as well as tin-plate worker at the Tower Knowe. In 1841 he was living at Tower Knowe (probably No. 3) with his wife Isabella. Janet (17th C.) listed among the poor householders in Abbotrule who could not pay the Hearth Tax in 1694. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Bruce and their children included: Anna (b.1720); and William (b.1726). His name was transcribed 'Fergue' in 1720. The witnesses were Bailie Martin and candlemaker John Scott. John (b.1789/90) from Galashiels, he was a carrier in Lilliesleaf. He is probably the John from Galashiels who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawik' in 1825. His daughter Jessie married road labourer James Goodfellow. In 1852 he is listed running his cart from Hawick to Lilliesleaf, leaving from the Plough on Thursdays; his name is given in Slater's directory as 'Job' (also written 'Fairgreave', 'Fairgreive', 'Feirgrive' and 'Fergrieve').

Fairhurst Drive (fār-hurst-drīv) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1950 and extended around 1966. The name derived from the fact that the first houses were of the early concrete 'Whitson Fairhurst' style. Later houses built to fill gaps were of a different style.

fairies (fā-reez) n., pl. imaginary mischievous spirits. The exact nature and appearance are ill-defined, this being part of their mystique. However, the picture of small, winged creatures is largely a Victorian English invention, having little in common with the Scottish concept. Local stories often had them as small creatures, sometimes dressed in green. There was great local superstition about fairies until well into the 19th century. People claimed to have seen them cavorting at the Miller's Knowes and the Wellogate. 2 green circular mounds, or 'fairy rings' (now known to be generally caused by a fungus) were once situated on the north bank of the Teviot, but were obliterated when Laidlaw's Cauld was built. Similar rings once existing at Carterhaugh were supposedly related to the fairies in 'Tamlane'. Windburgh Hill was supposed to be a domain of the 'guid folk', and a shepherd disturbing them by throwing a stone into the (non-existent) bottomless loch there is said to have caused the great flood of the Slitrig in 1767. An area in the Borthwick Water was called the Fairy Knowe, apparently where a shepherd was thrown in the flooded burn by the fairies. An article on local fairies, written by 'A.M., Hawick' appeared in the Edinburgh Magazine in 1820. A child of a woman at Minto Craigfoot was said to have been swapped for a changeling and only saved when Rev. Borland of Bedrule administered a concoction made from the foxglove. Another tale is of a changeling baby who became 'an ugly emaciated creature', who demonically played the fiddle and was thrown in the fire by a tailor, when the original baby reappeared. James Ruickbie told a story of a girl in Innerleithen who was taken by the fairies, but returned after prayers. The farm of Winningtonrig was said to have 2 fairies, which often performed favours on the farm, but once were interrupted while piping and dancing, and in retaliation made all the animals call out loudly for the next day. A fairy at Bedrule was said to have been given the farmer's wife's last barley, and in return filled her meal chest. Objects that were meant to offer protection from these spirits include a husband's 'blue bonnet', a hank of red thread, a natural stone with a hole in it, and branches of the rowan tree. Related supernatural phenomena of local lore include 'bogles' and 'spunkies'. Prehistoric tools and other artefacts turned up by the plough were formerly associated with fairies or elves.

fairin (fār-in) n., poet. a gift purchased at a fair – 'Aye, b' my faith! we've got oor fairin' – Oor hirsels gane, past a' repairin' [JoHa], 'But few were the fairings puir Bessie e'er got – Though bearded and beautiless aye had a lot' [JoHa].

fairkishin (fār-ki-shin) n., arch. a good quantity, sometimes implying untidiness – 'Thae scones ir weel heirt; A pat a guid fairkeesheen o butter inti thum' [ECS] (cf. ferkishin).

Fairley (fār-lee) n. John A. (19th/20th C.) wrote the articles 'The Religious Experiences of Catherine Hamilton, 1688–1753' (1906), 'Allan Cunningham' (1907), 'Bailie Smith of Kelso's Account of the Gypsies of Kirk Yetholm in 1815' (1907) and 'Douglas Graham, Skellat Bellman of Glasgow and his Chap Books' (1908), all published in Hawick. Robert (19th/20th C.) weaver from Northumberland, who lived in Selkirk, Innerleithen and elsewhere, but spent much of his life in Hawick. He wrote poetry, being a prize-winner in the Verter Well competition, where he used the pseudonym 'Birkinshaw'. He published 'Poems and Songs' (1881) and a second edition called 'Teviot-side Musings' (1892) (also sometime spelled 'Fairlie').

Fairloans (fār-lōnz) n. farm in Liddesdale, located to the east of Saughtree, near to Myre dykes and very close to the Border. Robert Armstrong was tenant there in 1694. Walter Jardine was farmer there in at least 1794–99, with James Beattie as shepherd in 1797. Robert Bettie was servant there in 1799. Walter Jardine, Percy Hedley and Andrew Thomson were there in 1801. David Jackson was shepherd in the early 19th century. Nearby limestones quarries were developed, this being the ‘Thorlieshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries’. In 1841 the ‘spa’ at Deadwater was also listed as being here (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Fairloans (fār-lōnz) n. farm near the head of the Kale Water, north of the Border at Catcleuch Hill. It should not be confused with a place of the same name in Liddesdale. Around 1800 an old woman lived there called Kitty Hall, a native of Northumberland, who recited for James Telfer a version of the ballad ‘The Death of Parcy Reed’, this being published in 1844.

fairn (fārn) n., arch. a fern – ‘A’ll sort ee, yih little bleckie, for poww-in aa ma fairns (ferns)’ [ECS], ‘Ilk day, I’ll gather soft green fairns For beddin’ for oorsels an’ bairns’ [WP].

Fairneylaw (fār-nee-law) n. George (d.c.1493) priest of the Diocese of Glasgow who is recorded as notary for a sasine relating to Hawick in 1490. He is separately recorded as ‘Sir’, usually indicating that he was a cleric without a Masters degree. He was notary to a sasine of 1484/5 relating to Mangerton, where he is called ‘Priest’ and another sasine for a ‘tenement’ in Hawick in 1484, where he is referred to as ‘Chaplain, Glasgow Diocese’. According to tradition he was a chaplain sent from Melrose Abbey to collect the tithe from Roger (or sometimes Robert) Langlands. When he persisted Langlands supposedly drew his broadsword and cut off Fairneylaw’s head at Wester Hepe. The story further relates how Langlands escaped punishment from the King by apologising for removing the chaplain’s hat, but omitting to add that his head was inside it! How much of the story is true remains unclear, although it is clear that Fairneylaw did have a local connection, and there is a record of Roger Langlands being denounced a rebel in 1494/5 for failure to appear to answer for the slaughter of ‘Sir George Farnylaw, chaplain’. It is also unclear whether there is a connection with the Heap Cross, which probably once existed at Stirches, and which was traditionally said to mark the site of the murder (however, it seems likely its existence as a marker long preceded these events). Fairneylaw Place in Stirches is named after him. Janet (16th C.) listed in the 1552 last testament of William Scott, younger of Branhholme. She is recorded as ‘Jonete Farnielaw’, but it is unclear whether she was from the Hawick area or not. John (16th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. His name is written ‘Farnelaw’. It is conceivable that he was related to the earlier priest. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘William Farnlie’ when witness to a charter between Henry Wardlaw of Wilton and John Scott of Thirlestane in 1483. It is not impossible that he was related to George (the name is also spelled ‘Farnylaw’, ‘Farnelaw’ and other variants).

Fairneylaw Place (fār-nee-law-plis) n. part of Stirches, off Stirches Road, along with Oxnam Court and Maxton Court, built in 1978 and named after Sir George Fairneylaw – ‘Then thinking it time to finish off The story of the bonnet, He said, wi’ a twinkle in his een, ‘The Abbot’s heid was in it’ [FL].

Fairneyside (fār-nee-sīd) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Fairney-side’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Fairnielees (fār-nee-leez) n. Fernieles, part of the former estate of Harwood in the Barony of Feu-Rule. It belonged to Hector Turnbull of Stonedge in 1609, when he sold it to Gibbie Eliott of Stobs by wadset and reversion. It may be the ‘Fairnylies’ where in 1623 Michael Birnie stole sheep belonging to Walter Scott of Todrig and Simon Nichol. It is recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ in 1647 (discharged in 1649) involving Walter Riddell and William, Earl of Lothian. Different quarters of the lands were owned by Sir Walter Riddell, Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers and James Laidlaw. ‘Tithous with 4th part of the lands of Fernilie’ were listed among the properties of Sir William Eliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. In 1694 the 3 east quarters are recorded being sold by Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge to Henry Elliot of Harwood. There were Ogilvies there in 1758. By 1788 it had been disjoined from the estate of Eliott of Stobs and was valued at £1200 (meaning it was a large farm at that time), forming part of the estate of Elliot of Harwood. In 1811 it was listed among those lands owned by William Elliot of Harwood and with the same value. These lands were still being referred to in documents of the late 19th century. The precise extent is uncertain, but Lurgiescleuch was the eastern quarter of the lands. Fernieles Sike rises between Berryfell Hill and Pike Fell and joins Lurgies Burn just north of Lurgiescleuch (it is ‘Phairnilies’ in 1562, ‘Fairneleyis’ in 1609, ‘Fairnileyis’ in 1647, ‘Fernilies’ in 1677,

Fairnilee (fār-nee-lee) n. mansion house in the Tweed valley, near Yair, built 1904–06 by John James Burnett. It was a Crown property from at least the 1460s, leased to Thomas and James Ker in 1480 and by 1501 let to George Ker. John Hervey was recorded there in 1494/5, when he had remission for rieving crimes. In 1541 it was tenanted by George Ker of Linton. The farm remained a property of the Kers until at least the late 17th century and there were Rutherfords of Fairnilee in the 18th century. The grounds contain the ruins of ‘Old Fairnilee’, a 16th century house, where Alison Rutherford wrote her version of ‘The Flowers of the Forest’. It was also the setting for Andrew Lang’s story ‘The Gold of Fairnilee’. Until 1818 the main road from Selkirk to Edinburgh passed here, avoiding Gala. This is probably the ‘Fernleigh’ mentioned in the 1837 inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’, 10 men having been denied their claim to the life-rent there, including John Goodfellow, William Goodfellow, John Hislop, Andrew Ewen, Peter Wilson and Walter Wilson, all of Hawick (also spelled ‘Fairnele’, ‘Farnile’, ‘Farnelee’, ‘Fernilea’, etc.; it is ‘Farnylee’ in 1501 and ‘Fairnalie’ in 1780; the origin is probably Old English for ‘ferny pasture’).

Fairnington (fār-nin-tin) n. hamlet just to the north of Peniel Heugh monument. There was formerly a hospital associated with the place. There is said to have been a stone circle in the nearby Harlaw Plantation, but there is now no sign of it. ‘The entire barony of Farnyndon’ is listed in c.1380 among lands that were claimed by England. There were once Maitlands living there. In 1494/5 Ninian Rutherford in Ancrum was allowed to ‘componer’ for stealing cattle and grain from several tenants there and Walter Rutherford for similar crimes, the victims including men by the name of Hogg, Ormiston, Stenhouse, Purves and Wyat. The Earl of Bothwell was recorded as owner in 1502. Also in 1502, James Rutherford (called ‘Kay’) had remission for stealing cows, sheep, geese and oats from here, the farmers being called Hogg and Ormiston. The lands (including the hospital) were listed among those possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1634. The estate was sold by Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch to George Rutherford in about 1647, and was afterwards a seat of a branch of the Rutherfords. The mansion house dates mainly to the end of the 17th century, but incorporates part of an earlier structure. It is said that there was once a stone circle in a field to the east (the origin of the name is Old English ‘færing dun’, meaning ‘the ferny hill’, and first occurs around 1200 as ‘Faringdun’; it is ‘farnynton’ and ‘farnyntoun’ in 1502, ‘Farnyntoun’ in 1505, ‘Pharnyngtoun’ in 1568/9, ‘Farnyngtoun’ in 1580/1 and ‘Faringtoun’ in 1601; it is ‘Ferntoun’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

fairny-faced (fār-nee-fāsd) adj., arch. freckled.

Fairnyside (fār-nee-sīd) n. former farmstead in the upper part of the Allan Water. It was described as a ‘pendicle’ of Brugh in 1660. It is shown on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands, attached to Skelfill and Langcleuchside. It was leased from Buccleuch Estates in 1744 by Elizabeth Mason, widow of Robert Scott of Harwood, along with the farm of Skelfhill (marked ‘Fairnyside’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, perhaps on the western side of the Skelfhill Burn; it is ‘Fairneside’ in 1718 and ‘Fernside’ in 1744).

fairny-tickled (fār-nee-ti-kuld) adj., arch. freckled.

fairny-tickles (fār-nee-ti-kulz) n., pl., arch. freckles – ‘A bit beekin callant, eis chuffy chowks aa fairnytickles, an eis airm up ti shade eis een ...’ [ECS].

fairs (fārz) n., pl. fairs and markets were once important focal events for towns, involving buying and selling, as well as hiring and entertainment. In Hawick there were several regular fairs, which petered out by the end of the 19th century. The horse- and cattle-related tryst was on the third Tuesday in October, starting in 1785. The main hiring (of servants) and cattle fair was on the 17th of May, with another on the 8th of November (also called the Winter Fair). For a while the May Fair lasted over 2 days, and was one of the most important events in Hawick’s annual calendar. In 1669 there was a request by William Douglas of Drumlanrig for the town to be allowed to hold 2 other fairs and this was allowed by the Crown, these being on the 6th of May and 10th of September, ‘for buying and selling of horse, nolt, sheip, fish, flesh, meill, malt and all sort of grain, cloath, lining and wollen, and all maner of merchant wair’. St. Jude’s Fair was mentioned in 1673, and this may have been another name for the Winter Fair. In 1700 it is recorded that 27th June was a fair day (but it is unclear which one). Herds were hired on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Thursdays in April starting in 1780 and moving to the 1st of March by the late 19th century. A sheep market (also called the Tup Fair) was on the 20th and 21st of September, and a wool fair was held on the first Thursday after the St. Boswells Fair in July (or sometimes the day before, i.e. 17th). Fair days were extremely busy in town, with the High Street, Tower Knowe and Sandbed thronging with people. Into the late 18th century they were also commonly scenes of fighting and riots – ‘The rural Fair! in boy-hood’s days serene, How sweet to fancy was the novel scene, The merry bustle, and mix’d uproar, While every face a jovial aspect wore’ [JL].

Fairside (fār-sīd) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, probably close to Steeleroad-end. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, along with Todsclench, Tailside and Cleuchside.

fair wather (fār-waw-thur) n., arch. flattery, coaxing – ‘Phrase: ‘If he’ll no dae’t be fair wather, he’ll dae’t be foul’ (= by severity)’ [GW].

fairy (fā-ree) n. an imaginary being with mischievous magical powers – ‘Survey yon ring, of lively green, Where fairies, dancing, erst were seen’ [JTe] (see also fairies).

fairyfauld (fā-ree-fawld) n., arch. a fairy ring, nearly circular ring of dark grass (or sometimes mushrooms), said to be where fairies held their meetings, but naturally explained by the outward growth of the mycelium of a fungus as it exhausts the soil nutrients.

the Fairy Faulds (thu-fā-ree-fawldz) n. former name for an area on the Wilton side of the Teviot, next to the ford that was at the foot of Walter’s Wynd (so where Victoria Laundry was later built). The name presumably relates to the 2 ‘fairy rings’ that could once be seen there (due to the growth pattern of a fungus), but were eradicated when Laidlaw’s Cauld was built. A ‘claystone axe’ was found there, and once in the Museum collection.

the Fairyfauld’s Stream (thu-fā-ree-fawldz-stream) n. former name for a stream that entered the Teviot near the ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd, on the opposite bank. It may also have been used as a fanciful name for the Teviot itself before industrialisation – ‘...before Laidlaw’s Cauld was built, the river was a fine stream, which auld folks called the ‘Fairyfauld’s Stream’ ...’ [JTU] (also written ‘Fairy Fauld’s; the name derived from the ‘fairy rings’ which once existed beside the stream).

the Fairy Knowe (thu-fā-ree-now) n. former name given to a hill somewhere in the upper Borthwick valley. It is said that a shepherd was thrown into a flooded burn by the fairies there.

faisible (fā-zi-bul) adj., arch. neat, tidily done, fair, satisfactory, of pleasing appearance, respectable – ‘...A made a faisable mael oot o pei-soop ...wui twae rake o curny-dumpleen owre-an-abuin’ [ECS], ‘She’d mony a hatter, puir craitir, bit she wuddlt an brocht thae bairns up rael faisable, for aa’ [ECS], ‘I dinnae want buriet in Wulton, boys, For although it’s faisable near ...’ [DH], ‘And drucken Airchie swore, life-lang, Wull’s funeral was the best Attendit that he’d ever seen And the maist faisible dressd’ [DH] (also spelled ‘faisable’).

faither see fither

faithfi (fāth-fi, -fe) adj., n. faithful – ‘Wha’s aye been faithfu’ to me when fate blew bleak an’ snell’ [JoHa], ‘Colin will just say what he thinks, that his Mysie was a guid brave hearted lassie tae stand sae faithfu’ tae sic a blackguard’ [JEDM], ‘There was aye a lot o’ religious tolerashion in Haaick an naebody cared how their neebirs worshipped so the door was aye open teh the faithfeh’ [BW] (also written ‘faithfu’ etc.).

faitur (fā’-ur) n., arch. a feature.

faix see faiks

faizen (fā-zin) v., arch. to unravel, fray at the ends – ‘It’s beginnin’ to faizen oot’ [GW].

faizent (fāzin) adj., arch. frayed, unravelled – ‘...a shauchlin, husslin-shoodert keibult wui ...stoory claes aa tairgets an spatches an faizzent-ends’ [ECS], ‘It’s a’ faizen’t oot’ [GW] (also ‘faizzent’).

faizenins (fā-zin-inz) n., pl., arch. frayed edges or ends.

fake (fāk) n., arch. a trick, performance – ‘Thus a clever fake describes a smart act or ‘turn’ at a theatre or elsewhere’ [ECS].

Fake Graham (fāk-grā-um) n. nickname for several male members of the local Graham family.

Fala (faw-la) n. town on the A68 just into Midlothian. Fala Moor stands on the high ground between Fala (on the A68) and Falahill (on the A7). It was there in 1542 that James V tried to organise an attack into England, but the collected nobility refused to follow him.

Falahill (faw-la-hil) n. former seat of a branch of the Murray family. It is a farm just off the A7 before crossing from the Scottish Borders into Midlothian. Franklin D. Roosevelt named his Scottish terrier ‘Murray the Outlaw of Falahill’

(‘Fala’ for short) in recognition of his distant Borders ancestors (also written ‘Fallahill’, ‘Fallohill’, ‘Fallowhill’, ‘Faulehill’, ‘Faulohill’, ‘Fawlahill’, ‘Fawlawhill’, ‘Fawlayhill’, ‘Fawlohill’, etc.).

Falahill (faw-la-hil) n. former farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, just to the north of Greenhouse farm. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. James Riddell was farmer there in 1789–91.

Falahill Summit (faw-la-hil-sum-i) n. highest point on the Waverley line between Hawick and Edinburgh at 880 feet above sea level. The summit itself was level and had extensive sidings. The lands of Falahill were once a seat of the Murays – ‘Frae the grey auld city it started oot Wi’ an unco herty will; But it hirpled along like a sair dune man Or it breested Fala-hill’ [WL].

falchion (fal-chee-in) n., poet. a short sword having a convex edge and sharp point – ‘... Yet, not of warring hosts and faulchion-wounds Again the harp of ancient minstrels sounds’ [JL] (also written ‘faulchion’).

Falconer (fawl-ki-nur) n. Rev. James F. minister of Denholm and Bedrule, linked with Minto, 1976–77. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Robertum Fawconnar’ when he witnessed the 1450 ‘retour’ for the Barony of Hawick. All the other men listed were important locally. He was also ‘Roberto Falconar’ in 1452 when he witnessed the sasine for the Barony of Hawick going to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. His name appears among a list of 4 burgesses. Thomas (15th C.) witness to the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; he is there ‘Thoma Fallconar, presbiter’ (presumably of Glasgow Diocese). He is also recorded as ‘Thoma Falconar capellano’ in 1452 when he was one of the witnesses to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick, signed in Hawick. He was thus a chaplain, presumably of Hawick or Cavers. He was probably related to Robert, who was also listed. And a second Thomas is also listed as a witness. William (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1490 when Robert Scott purchased a ‘tenemeent’ from Robert Cessford in Hawick. He was probably a local resident.

falderal (fawl-du-rawl) n., arch. folderol, trifle, petty matter, fancy but inconsequential thing – ‘They can eat their falderals that like, but recommend mei tae a sonsy bicker o’ guid auld fashioned Scotch porridge ...’ [JEDM] (see also faltheral).

Faldonside (faw-, fal-din-sīd) n. hamlet, house and nearby Loch just south of the Tweed between Selkirk and Melrose. The estate was long owned by the Kers. Part of the lands were owned by the Riddells of that Ilk in the 17th century. Sir Andrew Ker of Faldonside was a prominent Laird in the latter part of the 16th century. Being immediately to the south-west of Abbotsford, the estate here was planted in a similar style to Abbotsford in the early 19th century (formerly written ‘Fadounsye’, ‘Faudounsye’, ‘Fawdonside’, ‘Fawdounside’, ‘Fawdounsye’, etc.).

the Falkland Raid (thu-fawl-klind-rād) n. raid on the Royal Palace at Falkland in 1592, led by the Earl of Bothwell, along with 300 horsemen from the Borders, including Wat of Harden. The raid was unsuccessful in capturing the King, James VI, but Bothwell did take him prisoner at Holyrood the following year. After the raid Walter Scott of Goldielands and Gideon Murray were instructed to destroy the houses of Harden and Dryhope belonging to Walter Scott of Harden (although it is unclear if this was done).

fall (fawl) n., arch. old Scots unit of length, also used for area. As a length unit it corresponded to 6 ells or about 18.6 English feet, with measurements traditionally being made using a rope of this length. A Scots furlong was 40 falls and a Scots mile 320 falls. After unification with England the fall became 6 English ells or 22.5 feet. As a unit of area it was one square fall, i.e. 36 square ells or about 346 square feet. 40 square falls (or just ‘40 falls’) were equivalent to 1 rood or 1/4 of a Scots acre.

Falla (faw-la) n. village in Oxnam Parish, to the east of Camptown off the A68 (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘fag hlaw’, meaning ‘speckled hill’ and first occurs as ‘Falaw’ in 1549).

Falla (faw-la) n. John (17th C.) from Kelso, he was accused of being a Covenanter. He was taken prisoner at Whitsom Fair and tried along with Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1681. His surname is given in the court documents as ‘Ffala’. He was found not guilty of raising arms against the government and being involved in the attack on Drumlanrig’s Tower in Hawick. In 1684 he was charged with supporting and resetting rebels and after being sentenced to transportation, died in prison. John (d.c.1743) wright living at Swanshiel in Hobkirk Parish. He made coffins for those on the poor roll, as recorded in 1725. However, He was also elder and treasurer to the Parish Session during the time of Rev. Riccarton, and so there may be 2 generations here. John (18th/19th C.) joiner recorded in Chesters in Ancrum Parish in the 1797 Lieutenancy Book. John (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1808. Robert (19th C.) son of John, he was a mason who lived at Hassendean Common. In 1851 he is recorded there with Alison (possibly his mother) and Jane, probably a daughter. Letters from him exist dealing with the Smith family who moved to Manchester. William (b.1805/6) born in Wilton, he was a woollen slubber who lived on O'Connell Street in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jean, Margaret, George, Betty, Simon and William. By 1851 the family were in New Abbey, Kirkcudbrightshire, where he was a woollen machine keeper, and soon afterwards they emigrated to America. By 1870 they were in North Andover, Massachusetts and by 1880 their surname appears to have changed to 'Falls'. The house he live in in O'Connell Street was known as 'William Fala's house' on the 1851 census.

Falla Cleuch (faw-la-klooch) n. stream that rises on the northern slopes of Drinkstone Hill and drains into Synton Loch.

falli (fa-li, -lō) n., arch. a fellow – '...a muckle big, bang fallih, braid-shoodert, rash an stuffy, that staapect along the Jethart road wui a taatih-steppin streide' [ECS], 'There are no 'Yauld, bang fallows' or 'Muckle leash fallows' now-a-days' [JTU], '... A dizen near, I'm sure they were, O fallaws in a raw' [WaD], '... A buirdly auld falla wi' muckle to sell, And muckle to gie wi' his crack' [WL] (also written 'fallih'; cf. the now more common felli).

fallship (fa-li-ship) n., poet. fellowship – 'Sall the throne o' inequitie hae fallaschip wi' thee ...?' [HSR].

Falnash (fawl-nash, faw-nesh) n. farm and hamlet near Teviothead, reached by the side road across the Teviot at Bowanhill. It could be 'le Fallyneshe' listed among the lands of Sir James Sandilands in 1389. It is described as a '20 merklands' around 1390 when given to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk and may have been the residence of Dalgleishes in the mid-15th century. In 1456 William Dalgleigh had a sasine for the lands, which had previously been in the hands of the King. Simon Dalgleish had a sasine in 1464. In 1511 it was confirmed to a later Simon Dalgleish, with the consent of his son Kentigern. The Elliots owned the lands from at least 1556. In 1569 a bond of security signed in Hawick lists the following tenants: 'Wille Elliot, Johnne Turnair, Jame Caveris, Georde Armestrang, Georde Turnbull, Andro Turnbull, Jame Billop, Jame Bichat, Dande Elliot, Jok Elliot, Hobbe Elliot, Jok Murray, Will Hunter, Johnne Nobill'. In 1627 its value was 'estimato to 300 merks in stok; in teynd to 40 lb'. In 1643 the lands of Robert Scott of Falnash were valued at £1400. In 1667 Archibald Elliot paid 9,000 merks to Francis Scott to clear the 'reversion' on the lands, and then sold them to his brother Gavin Elliot of Caerlenrig. Walter Scott of Harwood and Falnash is recorded on the 1678 Land Tax Rolls; his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £1550 13s 4d. James Baptie was recorded as resident there in 1678. James Veitch was smith there in 1706 and James Scott was shepherd in at least 1713–14. The lands held by the Laird of Falnash once extended much further than the modern farm; in the 1718 survey of holdings of the Scotts of Buccleuch the lands of Falnash bordered on those of Commonsides. Gideon Scott, the Duchess of Buccleuch's Chamberlain in the late 17th and early 18th centuries lived here and was called 'Old Falnash'. He also acted as the Duke's Bailie in Hawick, and others in his family were also nicknamed 'Falnash'. The Scotts of Langshaw also held lands here along with the mill (so this may be Falnash Mill), inherited by Walter of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690. In 1703 James Stewart was smith there and Robert Riddell was miller. John Scott was recorded there in at least 1703–05 and William Scott was tenant in 1712. Walter Scott paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Falnash to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. By 1788 Falnash and Haregrain were valued together at £684. Robert Laidlaw was the farmer there in the 18th century, followed by Thomas Laidlaw. John Baptie was shepherd in 1797 and Thomas Shortreed was tailor there. Thomas Shortreed and John Turnbull were there in 1801. In 1811 it was valued (along with Haregrain) at £684, part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. William Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and in 1851, when the farm covered 4500 acres and had 17 labourers. Robert L. Turnbull was farmer in the 1860s and 70s. The burial place of the Scotts of Falnash is in Teviothead Cemetery, with a large table-stone once inscribed with most of the names. The area was part of Hawick Parish until Teviothead Parish was formed in 1850. Before the mid-18th century one of the routes from the south towards Selkirk diverted at Teviothead and went over to the Borthwick valley via Falnash, Lairhope and Old Howpasley – '...Falnash, and Commonsides; inform Fenwick, and Goudiland, With Ha'ick, Burnfoot, and Hassindean, to wait on my command' [WSB] (the name first appears in the late 1300s as 'Fallyness'; it is 'Fallinashe' and

'Fallineche' in 1456, 'Fallyn Eche' in 1461, 'Fallinesch' in 1464, 'Fawnesch' in 1511, 'Fawnyche' in 1561/2 and is later spelled 'Fallenash', 'Fallenashe', 'Fallenesche', 'Fallenesh', 'Fallinasch', 'Fallin-asche', 'Fallinashe', 'Fallineche', 'Fallinesch', 'Fallinesche', 'Fallineshe', 'Fallnesg', 'Falnashe', 'Falneesche', 'Falnesche', 'Falnesh', 'Falnesh', 'Falnish', 'Fanash', 'Fanesh', 'Faneash', 'Fawandeshe', 'Fawenesh', 'Fawinesche', 'Fawnesche', 'Fawnyche', etc.; it is transcribed 'Fenneske' in 1644, written 'Fennish' in Hawick Burgh records of 1728 and 'Finesh' in tax records of 1748; it is marked 'Fanessh' on Blaeu's 1654 map; its origin is simply Old English for 'at the fallen ash-tree'; note there is also a 'Fawnys' in Berwickshire, near Mellerstain).

Falnash (fawl-nash) n. Richard (13th C.) described as 'Richard de Fawnys' when his daughter Christian married William of Haliburton. This may well have been Falnash, since the Haliburtons of that ilk were involved in transferring the lands to Thomas Cranston of that ilk in the late 14th century.

Falnash (fawl-nash) n. nickname for Chamberlains of the Duke of Buccleuch in the 18th century, who were Lairds of Falnash. The Chamberlain also acted as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick, with local administrative power, involvement in the kirk session, etc. Previous owners of Falnash, the Elliots, were also given that appellation – 'For Stobs and young Falnash, They followed him up and down In the links of Ousenam Water They found him sleeping soun' [T].

Falnash Burnfit (fawl-nash-burn-fi) n. former name for a farmstead near Dryden. John Elliot died there in 1832. The Helm family lived there in 1841.

Falnash Mill (fawl-nash-mil) n. former farmstead near Falnash, perhaps the same place later called Birkiebrae. William Elliot was tenant there in 1598/9 (while another William was Laird of Falnash). Gilbert Elliot was there in 1618. It may be the lands of 'Falnish de molendino [mill]' inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690. Walter Davidson is recorded there, among the poor of Hawick Parish, in 1694. Robert Riddell was there in 1703 and Thomas Elliot in 1720. James Veitch, blacksmith, lived there in the early 18th century and Robert Elliot in the mid-18th century. Walter Hogg lived there in the early 19th century. Adam Beattie and his family were there on the 1841 census. In about the middle of the 18th century, near Falstone, a boy called Paterson was born without hands or feet, and shortly after his birth his family moved to here, where he was brought up, although not long afterwards the family moved again to the Carlisle area, where he died at the age of 7; at the time many claimed that this fulfilled a prophecy (sometimes ascribed to Alexander Peden, but probably older) which went 'Atween Craig-cross and Eildon Tree A bonny bairn there is to be, That'll neither have hands to feight, nor feet to flee; To be born in England, brought up in Scotland, And to gang hame to England again to dee' (it is 'the Miln of Fallinesche' in 1598/9, 'Fallinasche Mill' in 1618, 'falneshmilne' in 1694, 'falnesh milne' in 1707; 'Falnesh milne' in 1720 and 'Falnashmiln' in the 18th century).

Falnash Parkheid (fawl-nash-park-heed) n. former farmstead near Falnash. The Andison family were there in 1841.

the False Alairm (thu-fawls-a-lārm, -a-lārum) n. perceived French Invasion on the evening of Tuesday 31st January 1804, when warning signals blazed all across the Borders, calling men to arms to repel Napoleon's forces. At 9 p.m. in Hawick a beacon was lighted at the heights of Crumhaughhill, known then as Gotterson's Knowes or the Watchknowe. James Knox spotted it and ran down the Howegate to the Tower Knowe, firing his gun to signal the lighted beacon, and gaining a prize of 20 shillings. Caleb Rutherford then went around town beating his drum. A trumpeter (James Moffat) was dispatched up the Slitrig valley to rouse the men as far as Liddesdale, where several men swam across the Liddel to muster. A piper there mounted his donkey and played the rousing 'I am little Jock Elliot and wha daur meddle wi' me?' Walter Scott of Wauchope was at the head of the company that came from Liddesdale to meet the company of Capt. Corse Scott of Synton at the Tower Knowe. All the local volunteer units were mobilised, and people bid farewell to their loved ones. The Liddesdale volunteers reached Hawick by 8 a.m., travelling on horse and foot. After the muster at Hawick, the mounted men proceeded down the Teviot valley, many reaching Duns before they heard of the mistake. The foot volunteers were arranged on parade at the Haugh by Lord Minto, awaiting marching orders, which fortunately never came. Capt. Pringle of Whytbank was visiting Lord Napier at Wilton Lodge at the time and the butler is supposed to have said 'My Lord, supper is on the table, and the beacon's blazing'; Pringle rode to Selkirk to assemble his troops there. The Selkirk men marched off and reached as far as Dalkeith. Meanwhile the Berwickshire Yeomanry mustered at Duns and marched to Dunbar. A tailor from Denholm, who marched off with the others, but would rather have remained at home was apparently heard to mutter ‘Aw wush aw was a wummin! aw wush aw was a wummin!’ Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto swam across the flooded Teviot on his horse to reach the muster at Jedburgh; there a labourer from Horsleyhill volunteered on the spot to join the company of men. The Roxburghshire Yeomanry also mustered in Jedburgh, marching all the way to Duns, while the Selkirkshire Yeomanry mustered in Selkirk and marched to Dalkeith. In Berwick, the North Durham Cavlary marched into town, and the volunteers were put on guard duty awaiting the French invasion. The Alarm had been raised by a soldier at Home Castle at about 8.30 p.m., probably mistaking the fire from a charcoal burner at Shoreswood Colliery for a warning beacon. It spread via beacons on Caver-ton Edge, Pennielheuch, the Dunion, Crumhaugh Hill, the Tudhope, the Wisp and Black Andrew. Although there were rumours on the following evening that the French were not really coming, the official word did not come until the morning of 2nd February. The readiness and speed with which the troops were mobilised was a source of great local pride, although some suggested it had been a ruse to test the Volunteers (but there is no evidence to support this). Sir Walter Scott describes some of the local events in his note ‘Alarm of invasion’ in ‘The Antiquary’ (he himself is said to have ridden from Gilsland to reach Dalkeith 24 hours later). There were annual commemorations for some time afterwards, e.g. the farmers of Teviotdale would meet at Mount Teviot toll bar, where many had been when they heard of the beacons being lighted. The Hawick Provost lit a centenary beacon at Crumhaughhill in 1904, but the planned speeches were abandoned because of the wind and rain. There was a reenactment in 2004, with ‘Walter Knox’ firing the warning shot and the Honorary Provost and Drums and Fifes leading a procession to Crumhaughhill; unfortunately the weather meant that other celebratory fire could not be seen from the Watch Knowe – ‘They found that the beacons burning Had been but a false alarm; And, to their delight, That e’en without a fight Their country was safe from harm’ [TK], ‘One moment the watcher stood, robbed of his wit, Then he roared to the farmhouse: ‘The beacons are lit! The lightnings

falset (fawl-si) n., arch. falsehood, fraudulent dealing – ‘... ploittit aganis the said Erle of Buccleughe ane manifest falsit, and caussit vitiat the said dispositioun and chairtour ...’ [SB1624].

Falset (faw-, fawl-si) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, near Saughtree. It is probably the ‘Terra de Fawsyde’ in the Ermildon area of upper Liddesdale, on the c.1376 rental roll and valued at 33 shillings. It is recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, value at 48 shillings and tenanted by Henrisons (possibly Hendersons). It is recorded as ‘Cleuchside otherwayes designed Falset’ among the possessions of Hab Henderson in 1632, suggesting it was associated with Cleuchhead. It was marked as ‘Fasetsyde’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, near Saughtree, roughly between Pinglehole and Dawstonburn, perhaps near the modern Spout Sike. It is mentioned as ‘Fallsett’ on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it appears to be confused with Pinglehole.

Falside (fawl-sīd) n. farm in Southdean Parish, between Chesters and Roughlee. This could be the lands held by ‘William de Fausyde’, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It was mentioned in a document of 1502, when Ralph Ker of Primside Loch obtained a charter of appraising of the lands after George Douglas, Master of Angus failed to present one of his tenants who had stolen from the English. 2 towers near here, ‘West Fawsyde and Est Fawsyde with a pele of lyme and stane in it’ were burned by Dacre’s men in late 1513. It was described as 8 steadings valued at £10 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539 (with William Douglas being allowed the ‘fermes’ from there in 1538 and Sir Andrew Kerr of Fernihirst in 1539. Tenants in 1541 were Adam Cowman, Robert Oliver (alias ‘Laird’), Ninian Oliver, Walter Oliver, Roger Oliver (called ‘Little Roger’), Robert Laidlaw, Alexander Laidlaw, John Oliver, and Roger Oliver (called ‘Lang Roger’). The lands were split into 9 separate steadings with a total value of 175 shillings. Ringan, Dandy and Martin Oliver were recorded there in 1544. Jock Common was tenant there in 1571/2. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards from his father John in 1606. In 1669 there were 5 Oliver tenants, namely Stephen, David, Thomas and 2 Patricks, as well as Commons. In 1694 the tenants recorded were Steven Oliver, David Common and John Oliver, Thomas Oliver and his sons, and (another) Steven and Dand Oliver. In the 17th century the lands were split into 'East Fa'side', 'West Fa'side' and 'Fa'side'. The Olivers were tenant farmers there through the 17th century until 1747 and were the ancestors of the Olivers of Langraw. George White and John Armstrong are recorded there in 1797, Andrew Armstrong was shepherd in 1799 and James Mable was a servant in 1801. William Pringle was shepherd there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. J. Ord was farmer in the 1860s. The farm also had a mill, with a mill pond. On the hill on the opposite side of the road there are signs of rig and furrow. There was also a place of the same name in Selkirkshire, owned by the Scotts in the 16th century. There is a restored 16th century L-plan mansion of the same name in East Lothian (also 'Fawside' etc.; the name dates back to at least 1502/3 and the origin is probably Old English 'fah side', meaning 'the speckled slope'; it is 'Fawsyde' in 1538, 'Fawsyd' in 1539, 'Fawsid' and 'Fawside' in 1544, 'the Fawside' in 1571/2, 'Fawsyde' in 1606, and 'Fa'syd' and 'Fasyd' in 1669; it is 'Fasyde' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Fallside' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Falside (fawl-sīd) n. former lands in the Ettrick valley in Selkirkshire, north of Foulshiels. They were once Crown lands from at least 1456 until 1502. James Scott (also of Kirkurd and Hassendean) was recorded as possessor of the lands of 'Myddilstede de Fausyde' 1473-99, being granted the lease for life. James Scott is recorded in 1494/5 having sheep stolen from him there. In 1501 the rentals were assigned to his wife Margaret and son John, and he again had the lease in 1503. Margaret, received the lands 'in liferent' in 1510, with the heirs of the deceased John (probably James' son) being granted hereditary. Adam Scott 'in Falside' is recorded in 1526 and 1531/2. Adam Scott claimed the tenancy in 1541, paying £13 6s 8d yearly. This was probably the 'Fawsyde' where Janet Scott, widow of Robert 'Elwand' received instruments for lands at Appletreehall that she bought from Robert Scott of Howpasley. It was recorded as a 40-merk land in 1653. The 'landis and steading of Falsyd' were listed among the Buccleuch estates in the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and in the marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. The lands were later in the hands of the Scotts of Hassendean. And in 1693 they were still part of the estates of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch (it is 'Falsyid' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it is 'Fausyde' in 1456, 'Fawsyde' in 1473, 'Fawside' in 1480, 'Fausyde' in 1483 and 1491, 'fawsyde' in 1494/5 and 'Fawsyde' in 1541).

Falsyde (fawl-sīd) n. Helen (b.1787) recorded as 'a very old woman' in 1787 when she died in Hawick. Her surname is written 'Falsyth'. James (14th/15th C.) parson of the church of 'Ruiale', probably 'Rule'. He was a witness to the charter from Archibald, Earl of Douglas about 1406, granting the Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Another James 'of Fausyd' of Glasgow Diocese was an imperial notary in the 1450s and may have been related. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. James (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for Walter Martin in Alton Croft, for glover James Scott and for schoolmaster John Purdom, in 1702 for James Robson's illegitimate child, in 1703 for carrier David Minto and for William Wilson in Fenwick, in 1704 for James Irvine, tenant in Hawick Shiel, and for John Rutherford, in 1705 for merchant William Oliver, in 1706 for shoemaker George Allan, in 1707 for wigmaker Richard Miles, in 1708 for gardener William Riddell (along with gardener James Dunn), for Dand Gray in Whitlaw, for glover James Burn, for Robert Tudhope (servant to Falnash), for David Young and for John Rae, in 1709 for merchant James Simpson, for William Scott, tenant in Whitchesters and for William Scott, son-in-law of John Scott, tenant in Branhholme, in 1711 for merchant William Black (whose wife Elizabeth Falsyde was probably related to him), in 1712 for Walter Bryson and for William Turnbull (along with 'Mr' Thomas), in 1716 for shoemaker John Scott (and 2 others on the same day), and in 1719 for William Goodfellow. He is probably the James recorded as an elder of Hawick Kirk in 1718 (but not mentioned as such in a list a year earlier). He married Isobel 'Jerdon' (or Jardine). Their children included: Marion (b.1692), who married Andrew Turnbull; Janet (b.1694); James (b.1701); and William and Bessie (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were glovers James Burn and James Scott. He may have been related with Thomas. John (16th/17th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. John Cuthbert Rutherford (d.1915) son of Rev. J.T., minister of Eskdalemuir. He was training as a lawyer when WWI broke out, and as a member of the 1/5th K.O.S.B., he served as a

Lance Corporal. He was killed by a shrapnel shell in Gallipoli. His 2 older brothers were also killed in the war, and it appears that the surname may have died out with them. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Margaret Armstrong, who was from Castleton Parish. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694, when she paid tax for 2 hearths. It is possible that she is the Margaret who married William Scott, but was widowed and secondly married Robert Thomson in Newmill. Nicholas (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, where his name is given as 'Nicol Fausy' in the county of Roxburgh. He may well be an ancestor of the local Falsides. William (in Roxburghshire) and Robert (in Edinburgh) also signed in 1296. His seal was attached, showing a tree of four branches. In 1298 he is recorded in an English document as a 'rebel with the Scots', when he and his wife Loretta are recorded as former owners of lands at Doddington in Northumberland; his name is there 'de Fauside'. In 1303/4 he is 'de Fausside' when his wife's dower lands in England were restored to him. Philip (14th C.) owner of lands in Liddesdale, listed on a c.1376 rental document of the Douglasses of Morton. His lands are recorded as 'Terra Philippo de Fausyde cum Holdoun', worth 35 shillings. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His name is written 'Faside' and he was probably related to the William who is also listed. He may be the Thomas who witnessed baptisms for William at Woodburn in Robertson Parish in 1686 and for Adam Elliot (resident of Whitchesters) in Hawick Parish in 1704. He may be the Thomas whose son Alexander was baptised in Wilton in 1699. He may be the Thomas in Park who witnessed a baptism for William Allan in Hawick in 1717. Thomas (17th/18th C.) mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1712 as 'doctor of the grammar school at Hawick'. He was also recorded in 1709 as schoolmaster at Hobkirk. So whether he was actually associated with Hawick school (perhaps temporarily), or whether this was an error, is uncertain. In 1712 he was designated 'Mr' when he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull in Hawick; the other witness was James, who was probably a relative. He married Anne, daughter of the late Alexander Robertson in Edinburgh in 1712. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant of Bewlie Mains in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is recorded in 1798 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Later in 1798 he is listed among those who paid £10 in order not to serve. William (13th C.) recorded as being 'de Fausyde' in Roxburghshire when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. He may have been related to 'Nicol Fausy', who also signed. He was also on a jury in 1304 at Dumfries (made up of men from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire) to decide on the privileges claimed by Robert Bruce, Earl of Carrick (later King); he was there 'del Fausyde'. His lands may have been the Falside in Southdean Parish. William (14th C.) recorded in 1335/6 when he was pardoned by Edward III for crimes in Scotland, along with Eustace Lorraine and Richard of Craik. His name is listed as 'Willo de Fawsede' and it is possible he was a descendant of the earlier William. William (16th C.) factor (or similar) for Scott of Branxholme in the Parish of Eckford, recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. William (17th C.) resident of Woodburn in 1686 when his daughter was baptised in Robertson Parish. The witnesses were Thomas (who was surely a relative) and Robert Learmonth. He could be the same William who was later at Winningtonrig. William (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written 'Faside' and Thomas is also listed, and so presumably related. William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Fletcher in 1718, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Kirkton Parishes. John (b.1730) and William (b.1733), baptised in Cavers, may have been his children. Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for tailor James Scott and Janet Falsyde (who was probably related to him) in 1719 (also written 'Faesyde', 'Falsyth', 'Faside', 'Fasyde', 'Fausyde', 'Fawsyde', etc.).

famail (fa-māl) adj., arch. female – '...and the said lardschip of Coklaw to cum to the airis famail of the said James ...' [SB1519].

famous (fā-mis) n. respectable, reputable – '...in respect it was publickly done at the mercatt cross, in presence and in the hearing of divers famous witnesses' [BR1685], 'William Gledstains compeared, and was told by ye minister that he was credibly informed by famous persons of his neighbours ...' [PR1717].

fancy (fan-see) interj. indicating surprise or indignation, 'can you believe it', fancy that, imagine – 'fancy, she's hed a blue rinse'. 'Oh, fancy!'

fand (fand) v., poet., arch. found – ‘‘Alas for wae!’ quo’ William’s Wat, ‘Alack, for thee my heart is sair! I never cam bye the fair Dodhead, That ever I fand thy basket bare’’ [T], ‘... They fand their tree three ells o’er laigh – They fand their stick baith short and sma’. With my fanging, &c.’ [CPM], ‘... in sic a fear that he fand every hair on his head rise like the birses of a hurcheon’ [LHTB], ‘... Some paid the cash, and some fand bail’ [JR], ‘Sae Jean, puir lass, faund oot this truth, Her heart wi’ grief a’ bleedin’ ...’ [JoHa], ‘... An’ faund oor freends an’ cronies gane, oor happy hearthstane cauld’ [JoHa], ‘The wate-men that gaed aboot the citie fand me ...’ [HSR], ‘... the paines o’ hell gat haud on me: I fand truble an’ dool’ [HSR], ‘In freedom’s lap it fand a mother ...’ [JEDM], ‘A fannd the cauld fair awfih’ [ECS], ‘A faand the guid o that denner as suin as A’d gaen wui’d’ [ECS], ‘While mill sounds jar and grate, I’ve fand The secret o’ it a’’ [WL] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation; also written ‘faand’ and ‘faund’; this is the past tense form of finnd, while the past participle is more usually funnd).

fang (fawng) n., arch. plunder, burden, v., poet. to catch, acquire – ‘When guarded by this fourfold fence, Auld Nick can never fang us; Nor Bonapart’ e’er drive us hence, Nor villains mint to wrang us’ [JR], ‘But if the war!’ be like to wrang ye, Its frowns will fear, its smiles will fang ye’ [JR].

Fang (fawng) n. Douglas (??–) son of Kenneth, one of the Fang Brothers who purchased Pringle of Scotland from Dawson International in 2000. He was Hong Kong Industrialist of the Year 2002. He was named C.E.O. of Pringle’s in 2005, replacing Kim Winsor. In 2008 he announced that production would cease in Scotland. Kenneth (??–) born in Shanghai, he is Chairman of Fang Brothers Knitting Limited. His company bought Pringle of Scotland in 2000, with promises of new investment and job security. He was awarded a C.B.E. in 1990 and an O.B.E. in 1997.

fankit (fawng-kee’, -ki’) adj., pp. entangled, in a twisted mess – ‘... Brave Parcy rais’d his fankit sword And fell’d the foremost to the ground’ [LHTB].

Fanna Bog (faw-na-bōg) n. high, boggy area to the west of the Note o the Gate. Singdean Burn rises here.

Fanna Hill (faw-na-hil) n. hill to the west of the Note o the Gate, reaching a height of 514 m (1643 ft) and containing a triangulation pillar. It is one of the highest hills in Hobkirk Parish (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie’s 1770 map; a region to the south is labelled ‘Muckle Fanna’ on the 1718 map).

fanner (faw-nur) n., arch. a machine used to create wind for winnowing chaff – ‘The winnowing machine, or corn fanner, from the best information, made its first appearance in Hawick’ [RRG].

Fanns (fawnz) n. farmstead near the Fanns Burn, north of Langhope and Todrig and west of Ashkirk. It is located just to the west of where the Fanns Burn meets Blindhaugh Burn. Robert Riddell was recorded there in 1661. James Brown was a mealmaker there in 1747. Another Robert Riddell was herd there in 1762. Note that there is a farm of the same name in Yarrow Parish, farmed by Andersons in the 19th century (also spelled ‘Fans’, it is ‘the fans’ in 1661; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

fareweel (fār-weel) n., interj., arch. farewell – ‘Then fareweel to couthie contentment an’ peace ...’ [JoHa], ‘Fareweel to Teviot’s flowery vales, My heart is unco wae tae lea’ thee’ [JS], ‘Fareweel, John Barleycorn, fareweel! Nae mair your scorn I’ll dree’ [JT], ‘Hail guid freends, fareweel an’ thank ye, I’ve been gled to grip your hand’ [WL].

Farnylaw see Fairneylaw

Farquhar (far-kur) n. Alexander (18th C.) married Mary Newlands in Roberton in 1756. Francis (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Collard and their children included: Margaret (b.1803); Jessie (b.1805); Anne (b.1806); Jane (b.1808); Francis (b.1810); and Robert (b.1812). George (b.1776) son of James and brother of Robert. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was still on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Oliver in 1775 and their children included: George (b.1776); Robert (b.1778); James (b.1779); Peter (b.1781); unnamed (b.1784); and James (b.1789). His name was written ‘Fraquar’ in 1789. The witnesses in 1789 were Robert Oliver of Burnflat and baker James Oliver (who was surely related to his wife). James (18th/19th C.) grocer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same as the tobacconist listed living with (presumably) his brother Peter in 1841. He could also be the James on the Cross Wynd, listed as an insurance agent for the United Kingdom company in 1852 (although probably deceased by then). James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Turnbull in 1844, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their son Peter was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1846. Margaret (b.1810) daughter of James and Elizabeth Beck. She was a milliner in Hawick. In 1861 she was described as 'Proprietor of Houses' at 5 Cross Wynd. Peter (b.1781) son of James and Margaret Oliver, he was born in Hawick. He was a stocking needlemaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory, where his surname is listed as 'Fairquhar'. He is also listed on the High Street in 1837. In 1841 he was living at about 39 High Street with his wife Elizabeth, children Margaret (a milliner), Isabella (a teacher) and Catherine (who married Thomas Scott), and (presumably) brother James. His wife was living with their 3 daughters on the Cross Wynd in 1851 and so he was presumably deceased. He married Elizabeth Beck, who was probably a daughter of stockingmaker William Beck. Their children included: Margaret (b.1810); Isobel (b.1812); Elizabeth (b.1814), who married Joshua Colledge; Catherine (b.1816); and James (b.1823). Robert (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was recorded in 1797 among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia, with his surname written 'Forfar'. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish', with his surname given as 'Farquhar' (Forfar). Robert (b.1778) son of James and brother of George. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He was probably related to George, who was listed before him.

Farquharson (far-kur-sin) n. Alexander (18th C.) married Margaret Sanderson in Hawick in 1754. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Jessie Gray and their children included: James (b.1839); Andrew (b.1841); and Alexander (b.1843). Archibald (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary McDonald in 1825 and their daughter Eliza was baptised in 1826. Robert (18th C.) married Ann Tinlin in Hawick in 1757. Rev. William (19th/20th C.) minister of St. Andrew's Church 1908–14. He was one of the members of the committee that formed Hawick's first scout troop in 1909. After Hawick he became minister of St. Philip's Church in Portobello.

farrest (fawr-ist) adj., arch. farthest, most distant – 'The dun and the grey kept fareset away,

But Piaterson's meir she came foremaist' [JP] (cf. the more common ferrest and ferthest).

Farridge (fa-rij) n. Alexander (b.c.1770s) merchant in Newcastleon according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He was 'Farries' and a labourer in Newcastleon on the 1801 ballot list. He was Alexander 'Farries', married to Margaret Mien, whose children, baptised in Castleton Parish, included Mary (b.1799) and William (b.1800).

the Fart (thu-fawr) n. nickname for Peter Elliot.

Farthin Raw (far-thin-raw) n. Farthing Row, formerly a popular name for a group of houses off Wilton Place (the origin is probably the Old English or Norse for a land measure).

Farthin Tom (far-thin-tom) n. nickname for Thomas Young.

fash (fash) v. to worry, trouble, bother, annoy – 'dinni fash is', 'This far, sir, I haue tain the baldnes till fasche zou vith ...' [SB1584], 'Some row thee in among their cash, Some gi'e themsel's a hantla fash' [JR], 'Gear gatherers get aft a fling, I'll never fash my brain wi't' [JoHa], 'Wi' dominie Davie, wha's fash'd wi' the spavie, His helper, sae funny an' friskie' [JoHa], '...his excuse that he would lie long enough in it by-and-by without fashing it in his lifetime' [WNK], 'See the dear comrades, turned to ashes The cursed page that once did fash us' [JH], 'Long fashed wi' a thriftless and drouthy guidman ...' [JT], 'We were fashed wi' the reek ...' [JT], 'For ne'er a ane lookit as tho' they wad fash us, Ne'er the less oo determined tae steer very cautious' [BM1900], '...But little the mavis fashes its heids: Fower een are better than twae!' [DH], 'Says the auld laird – 'We'll be hard fashed For the want o' weet'' [WL], n. trouble, fuss, bother – 'Fit ti gar aa the trauchles an the fashes gang leike the snaw off the deike in a thowe' [ECS], '...Yer yammerin' fash, an feckless prode Can only be a pest in't' [WP] (from French).

fashies (faw-sheez) adj., arch. troublesome, annoying, tricky – 'Fleis an midges ... kittle craiters (mae ways as yin) an fasheez ti middle wui' [ECS] (a variant of fashious; spelling varies).

fashionit (faw-shin-ee', -i') pp., poet. fashioned – '...an' in thy buik a' my membirs were writ, whilk on an' on wer fashanet, whan as yit ther was nane o' thame' [HSR].

fashious (faw-shis) adj., arch. troublesome, peevish, fastidious – ‘...Poets an’ pipers wear the wale O’ seats and lasses, An’ a’ allow they never fail In being fashious’ [JoHa], ‘I mind I was aince at the foot o’ the Kale, And my courage was fashious to smother ...’ [JTe], ‘And there’s mony a less pleasant and mair fashious way o’ spendin’ a caller wunter efternune ...’ [DH], ‘...bit oo was-neh sae fashious then, an it was only yince a eer onyway’ [BW1961] (see also Fashies).

fashrie (fawsh-ree) n., poet. trouble, fuss, annoyance – ‘To yerking and yells frae a loose lither tongue, To fashries an’ flytings, while ye maun sit dumb’ [JoHa].

Faskenn (fas-kin) n. tower house marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map near the Whitrope Burn meets the Hermitage Water. It could be related to Flaskett Sike, which is in the same area, or may be a transcription error.

fassent (faw-sen) pp. fastened – ‘...An’ wi’ a cord he has fassent her To the fit o’ the maister’s chayer’ [WiSp].

Fasson (faw-sin) n. Lieut. Francis Anthony Blair ‘Anthony’ or ‘Tony’ (1913–42) born at Lanton in Bedrule Parish and educated at Jedburgh Grammar School, he joined the Royal Navy. Along with Colin Grazier, he volunteered to swim out naked to a damaged U-Boat in the Mediterranean, after the crew had been captured. They recovered several documents and pieces of equipment, passing them to someone else in a small boat, before the submarine sank, drowning him and Grazier. The recovered items included the ‘M4 Enigma Machine’ and codebook, which were passed to Bletchley Park, where the cipher was cracked, and probably thousands of lives saved as a result. He was posthumously awarded the George Cross ‘for outstanding bravery and steadfast devotion to duty in the face of danger’. There is a plaque honouring his memory in Bedrule Kirk.

Fast (fawst) n. ancient fortification in Bedrule Parish, later indentified with the farm of ‘Fastcastle’.

Fast Castle (fawst-kaw-sul) n. stronghold dramatically perched on the coast between St. Abbs and Cockburnspath. It has existed since the 14th century, long possessed by the Homes, and notorious during the reign of Logan of Restalrig. An old lock from the Castle was presented to the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1856.

Fastcastle (fawst-kaw-sul) n. former farm in the Rule valley, on the west side of the river, near the bridge to Bedrule Mill. It became part of the extensive estate of Wells and was probably adjacent to Doveshaugh. In 1644 John and Thomas Young from there were cited by the minister for not signing the Covenant; at that time it was owned by the Earl of Traquair. Robert Turnbull was there in 1715 and Adam Craig in 1717. John Riddell was there in 1791. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. An ancient fortification at ‘Fast’ was possibly an outwork of Bedrule Castle, which lay about 500 m to the south-east. It is just by the roadside, on a natural rise, built up into a motte-like structure, with a rampart on the summit enclosing an area about 35 m by 25 m. Just to the north-west there are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation in aerial photographs (it is written ‘Falsecastle’ in 1715 and 1717; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

fast days (fawst-dāz) n., pl., arch. an old church custom of fasting on particular Sundays, with preparatory services on the preceeding Saturday and thanksgiving services on the following Monday. This was particularly prevalent before the annual Communion service, before which there would be a Sacramental Fast Day, when all work was suspended and there were 2 (long) church services. This custom died out locally towards the end of the 19th century. Official fast days in Hawick were the 2 Wednesdays before the last Sunday of June and before the second Sunday of December. Earlier than the 19th century the June days were closer to harvest time. Other neighbouring areas had different days, but typically on Wednesdays or Thursdays (although in Castleton it was the Friday before the 2nd Sundays of June and November). There were also other days officially prescribed for fasting, sometimes by Act of the General Assembly, e.g. for prayers ‘for King George and his royal family’ in 1715, with several other examples yearly in the Parish records – ‘...ye durst not crook ye’re mooth tae whistle on a Fast-day, but now ye may whistle or sing or anything ye like on a Sabbath day’ [WiS].

Fasteneven (faws-ten-ee-vin) n. another name for Fastern’s E’en – ‘Of holidays throughout the year, There’s nane that raises sic a steer As Fasteneven ...’ [JoHo].

Fastern’s E’en (faws-turnz-ee-in) n., arch. old name for Shrove Tuesday, or the day before fasting starts at Lent. Festivals of different sorts were held in many Scottish towns, including handball games, sometimes referred to as ‘Fastern’s E’en Baa’. In Hawick the Baa game was held on the previous day, in earlier years on the following Monday, and before about 1780 on Fastern’s Eve itself. In the 2 or 3 weeks leading up to the event there would be fights between gangs of youths from the ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ sides of town – ‘...shall keep the same assurance till Fasternes eve next to come ...’ [CBP1584], ‘At Fasten’s E’en, when ba’s are played, I’ll look for ane that is nae here ...’ [TCh].

Fastheugh (fawst-hewch) n. former lands on the southern side of the Yarrow valley, with Fastheugh Hill rising above. The lands were owned by the Crown in the latter part of the 15th century. William Donaldson was there in 1493 when he had 12 goats stolen by William, son of William Scott of Goldielands. In 1494/5 James Ker was tenant there when sheep were stolen by Adam Howison in Commonsides. John Clerk was also living there at the same time when his goods were plundered. In 1502 John Murray of Falahill’s farm there was raided by Turnbills. And in 1535 a raid on these lands was among the crimes for which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused; at that time they were held by Lancelot Ker. Lands there were granted to James, son of James Pringle of Tynnes in 1540. George Ker was tenant there in 1541, paying £30 yearly; he was probably George of Gateshaw, son and heir of Lancelot Ker, who was ‘now living in Fastheucht’ in 1544. William Scott ‘in Fasthauche’ was one of the men accused in 1618 of the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. The lands were part of the Buccleuch estates in 1663 and when surveyed in 1718 (it appears on Blaeu’s c.1654 map as ‘Fastheuch’; it is ‘Fasthewch’ in 1456).

Fasthill Plantin (fawst-hil-plan-tin) n. plantation near Synton, just to the south of Synton Parkhead (it is already marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

fastit (faws-tee’, -ti’) pp., poet. fasted – ‘An’ whan he had fastet fortie days an’ fortie nichts, he was efterwards ane hungret’ [HSR].

fat (faw’) n., arch. a vat, wooden tub – ‘Two females are convicted of stealing great quantities of ale, sometimes turned, sometimes working in the fatt ...’ [BR1697].

fatefi (fā’-fi) adj. fateful – ‘...But then yin fatefih day, A retail giant came oor way, And it wasni long afore, They’d ta’en owre yon Presto store’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘fatefih’).

Fathill Plantin (faw’-hil-plawn’-in) n. plantation on the Chisholme estate, to the north-west of Parkhill and to the west of Churnton Burn. There is a possible old enclosure there.

fatit (fā-tee’, -ti’) pp. fated – ‘...An’ riggit ribs, where snurk’lt skin is fatit To lanely hing where flesh could stay nae langer’ [JoHa], ‘But thou, my plaid, has ne’er been fatit, ’Mid war’s proud panoply to strut it’ [JoHa].

Fatlips Castle (fa’-lips-kaw-sul) n. tower built in the 16th century, perched on Minto Craggs, and sometimes also called Minto Tower. It is 9m, 3 stories high, with a vaulted basement and parapet walk. Built by the Turnbills, it passed to the Elliots in 1705, and is now the property of the Minto estate. It was restored in 1857 and then renovated in 1897/8 (to designs by Sir Robert Lorimer) as a shooting lodge and private museum. The collection on display included an early, large breech-loading gun (possibly the one taken from Sebastopol by Col. Sir Gilbert Elliot), a muzzle-loading cannon (taken by Adm. Elliot from the French off the Isle of Man in 1760) and a third cannon (that belonged to the mutineers of the Bounty was recovered from deep water off Pitcairn Island by Capt. Russell Elliot). At that time there was a carriage drive approaching it from the west. Since the 1960s it was sadly neglected and became vandalised. However, a grass-roots campaign, supported by the Minto estate, resulted in funds being secured from public and private funds, and a renovation was completed in 2013. A fanciful tradition states that an underground passage led from here to Barnhills Castle. The origin of the name is uncertain, but one idea is that it derives from the look of Turnbull of Barnhills; there are other stories, including that of a goat on the Dunion, which warned of the approaching English, or that gentlemen were traditionally allowed to kiss one of the ladies on entering – ‘...an the gray waas o Fatlips keekeet oot threh atween the treis that skuggeet Barnhill’s staney bed’ [ECS] (it is sometimes stated that it was also known as ‘Catslick’, but that may be an error; note that there is another Fatlips Castle near Symington in South Lanarkshire, and a couple of others elsewhere, marked on old maps).

Fauch Grain (fawch-gr=an) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises on Wetherhorn Hill and joins Chapel Grain.

Fauchwin Sike (fawch-win-sik) n. small stream in the the Hermitage valley. It rises on Guile Hass and joins the Carewoodrig Burn.

faugh (fawch) adj., arch. fallow, n., arch. fallow ground – ‘He plew’d the faugh’ [GW] (also written ‘fauch’).

faughish (faw-gish) adj., arch. palish, having faded colours – ‘...just as it begoud to get faughish derk’ [LHTB].

fauld (fawld) v. to fold – ‘did ee fauld up they claes yit?’, ‘Paid James Wintroppe for falding brods in Bailies’ loft, 1 14 0’ [BR1735], ‘These taitis o’ gowden hair, Aboon thy faulded eye’ [HSR], ‘Aside the sparkling jewels put, thy silken robes gae fauld ...’ [TCh], ‘The bonnie wee flowers fauld their leaves in the gloamin’ ...’ [JT], ‘...And robin faulds his ragged pipes, Reckons his arles and airts awa’ [DH], ‘In owre the Firth a clean wind blows And the fauldin’ plaid is getherth ...’ [WL], n. a fold (also written ‘fald’).

fauld (fawld) n. an enclosure for livestock, sheepfold, pen – ‘When the sheep are in the fauld, and the ky at hame, And a’ the warld to sleep are gane ...’ [CPM], ‘...one year there was a dyke on one side of a fauld, built within the edge of the Common’ [C&L1767], ‘To mark the gloaming’s mantle dun O’erspreiding fauld and lea’ [JTe], ‘...nar he-gaits owt o’ thy falds’ [HSR], ‘I’ve suffered cauld in Auld Nick’s fauld. In nichts o’ drookin’ rain I’ve seen it ...’ [TD], ‘Yon are the hills that my hert kens weel, Hame for the weary, rest for the auld, Braid and high as the Aprile sky, Blue on the tops and green i’ the fauld’ [JBu], ‘The last sheep cryin’ thrae the fauld, The afterglow duist turnin’ cauld ...’ [DH], group of people bound together by common beliefs, congregation – ‘To where the Faither’s fauld at last ...’ [WL] (see also fauldit).

-fauld (fawld) suff. -fold, something occurring in multiple parts, an amount to be multiplied by – ‘...an’ brought furth frut, sume ane hundret-fauld, sume saxty-fauld, sume thretty-fauld’ [HSR].

faulder (fawl-dur) n. a folder, person in the knitwear industry who folds finished garments, usually attaching the hanging tag and placing the garment in its bag for presentation.

Faulds Cottage (fawldz-ko’-eej) n. farmstead to the west of Buccleuch.

Fauldshope (fawldz-hōp) n. farm south-west of Selkirk, over the Ettrick from Oakwood. A ruined keep here was once the home of the Hogg, including Will Hogg called ‘the Wild Boar o’ Fauldshope’ and several wives who were reputed to be witches. One ‘Lucky Hogg’ is supposed to have turned Michael Scot into a hare. The Hogg held Fauldshope under the Scotts of Harden for centuries and are commemorated in James Hogg’s ‘Fray at Elibank’. William Scott was there in 1535. Andrew, son of William Scott ‘in Faldishop’ gained the lands of Broadmeadows in 1624. It was rented by the Earl of Traquair in 1633. Adam Scott was there in 1722 and William Dalgleish in 1797 – ‘Young Wattie o’ Harden has crossed the Yarrow, Wi’ mony a hardy an’ desperate man; The Hogg and the Brydens have brought him to dare you, For the Wild Boar of Fauldshope he strides in the van’ [ES] (note that it is easily confused with ‘Phaup’ near the head of the Ettrick; marked as ‘O. Falshoop’ and ‘N. Falshoop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is probably the ‘Faulishop’ recorded in 1456 and is ‘Feldishoup’ in 1535).

fault (fawl) n., arch. a misdemeanour, offence – ‘...by yr night rambling commit divers and sundrie abominable irregularities, unlawful faults, and enormities and abuses by yr scandalous outrages ...’ [BR1706] (cf. the more common faut).

fause (faws) adj., poet., arch. false – ‘Behold, the setting sun that gilds the skies! O! whan I’m fause, may it nae mair arise!’ [CPM], ‘Itt wasne kinde, thou cruelle manne, To prove sae fause a luve to me ...’ [JTe], ‘...Fed by fause hope, wild fou wi’ airy vision’ [JoHa], ‘The fause and fickle-hearted loon, He hookit wi’ another’ [JoHa], ‘...And the three fause Ha’s o’ Girsonsfield Alang wi’ him he has them ta’en’ [LHTB], ‘Bewaure o’ fause prophets, whilk come til yow in sheep’s claethin’ [HSR], ‘...or what sall be dune untill thee, thou fause tung?’ [HSR], ‘Bestow on the gay a’ the favours o’ fashion, Bestow on the great a’ that money can yiel’ [DA], ‘By thae fause notions the lass had naething To caa her bonny, – but she had ae thing’ [WL].

fautless (faw'-lis) adj., arch. faultless – 'He tells me through the chink wi' care Aboot his fautless, dainty ware ...' [WP].

the Favourite (thu-fäv-ri') n. name of one of the regular stagecoaches operating in Hawick in the 19th century. In Pigot's 1825/6 directory it is listed leaving the Spread Eagle in Jedburgh for Hawick on Tuesdays and Fridays at 5 p.m. and leaving Hawick for Kelso via Jedburgh on Tuesdays and Fridays. In 1837 it is listed leaving from the Tower Inn on Tuesdays and Fridays at 8 a.m., bound for Jedburgh and Kelso. Later in the 19th century it was one of 2 coaches running between Hawick and Carlisle, the other main one being called 'the Engineer'.

favours see in favours o

faw (faw) adj., arch. multi-coloured, variegated (the word survives in several place names, e.g. Faw Hill, Fawhope, Falla and Falside).

Faw see Faa

Fawcett (faw-si') n. Richard owner of Wolfelee when it was run as a hotel.

Faw Hill (faw-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, just to the north-east of Ruletownhead, reaching a height of 331 m (1,086 ft) and containing a triangulation pillar. On the eastern slopes, towards the farm of Ashtrees, there are the remains of an ancient settlement, perhaps of the Iron Age, but now almost levelled by cultivation (the name probably comes from the Scots 'faw', meaning variegated in colour).

Fawhope see Phaup

Fawhope Knowe (fawp-now) n. hill in Liddesdale, just to the south-east of Riccarton Junction, reaching a height of 294 m. Fawhopeknowe Sike rises to the north and passes there to join the Riccarton Burn. John Crozier is listed as shepherd there in at least 1797–1801. There were 4 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census (also sometimes 'Phaup Knowe', it is 'Phaup-know' in 1797 and 1799 and 'Phaupnowe' in 1801;

a farmstead there is marked 'as Fapknow' on Stobie's 1770 map; it could be related to the places listed as 'Folepul' and 'Fopillis' in earlier documents).

Fawhopeknowe Sike (fawp-now-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, which rises on the slopes of Saughtree Fell and runs southwards, to the east of Riccarton Junction, passing Fawhope Knowe and through Catscleuch Culvert, to join Riccarton Burn.

Fawlaw (faw-law) n. George (15th C.) recorded being 'in hawic' at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He had remission for stealing a 'dacre' of (i.e. 10) hides from James Braidfoot out of 'le bog de Selkirk'. His surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. George of Wells (16th C.) surety for John in Littledean in 1502. He is also recorded in an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. He is also listed as 'George Fawlo of Wallis' in 1530 among the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He may have been Laird of Wells east of Jedburgh. James of Spital (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'James Falay' in 1700 among the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Littledean. He was recorded at the Justice-aire in 1502, as surety for his wife Janet Rutherford, and was fined for her non-appearance. Later in 1502 he had remission for being part of the slaughter of David Henrison in Maxton Kirk and for stealing from Muirhouselaw in the company of Thomas Grahamslaw; his surety was George of Wells. Additionally he had remission in 1502 for involvement in the seizing of 3 Henrisons from Muirhouselaw, delivering them to Englishmen, to be held for ransom, for stealing livestock from them and for associating with Herbert Pringle; his surety was Walter Haliburton. Also in 1502, he may be the John of Softlaw who was granted the lands of 'Perislawis' in Oxnam by Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing. Perhaps the same John was granted a charter for 'Ester Fawlaw' in 1510, along with the office of the East Ward of Roxburghshire. In 1512 he had a charter for Softlaw. John (b.c.1780) cooper in Lilliesleaf according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He married Alison Hilson and their son Robert was baptised in 1809. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as 'philippi fawlo' when he and James Liddersdale 'in hawik' were sureties for each other at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, and failing to appear, were to be fined at the next court. He was said to be of the same place as James Liddersdale, i.e. Hawick. Also in 1502 he was 'Philip Faula'

when Alexander ‘Wyndis’ of that ilk was convicted of the ‘forethought felony’ done to him on St. Mary’s Day while riding to Branxholme, with Robert Scott being fined for non-appearance. It is unclear what malice was done to him, whether it was connected with the charges against him at the same court. He is probably the same ‘Philip Faulo’ who had 4 horses stolen from him and his neighbours at ‘Quhitchester-holme’ by associates of John Dalgleish around 1510. He may have been related to the later local priest Thomas. Thomas (16th C.) priest mentioned in the Charter of 1537, with 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street. He is designated both ‘Sir’ and ‘Mr.’, making it unclear whether he held merely a Bachelors or a full Masters degree in the priesthood. Since several other clergymen are also mentioned, it is unclear what his status was within St. Mary’s Kirk of the time. A possibly related William Fawlaw also possessed a particate of land on the north side of the street. William of Kirkton (14th C.) member of the ‘retour of inquest’ if 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. He was certainly a Roxburghshire Laird, but it is unclear whether this was the Kirkton near Hawick. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. William (d.bef. 1560s) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. The land ‘callit Williame Fallawisclois’ to the east of Nether Billerwell is mentioned in 1562 (also spelled ‘Fallaw’, ‘Faula’, ‘Faulaw’, ‘Faulo’, ‘Fawlo’, ‘Fowlaw’, etc.).

the Feast o the Assumption (thu-feest-ō-thu-aw-sum-shin) n. Feast of the Assumption of Mary, a Catholic celebration of the assumption of the body of the mother of Christ into heaven, which supposedly happened several days after she was entombed. This is celebrated on 15th August, and prior to the Reformation would have been an important day in the Hawick calendar, particularly because of the Parish Church being dedicated to St. Mary. The ‘retour’ for the Barony of Hawick in 1450 states that it is held of the superior, the Earl of Douglas, for the payment of an arrow at Hawick Kirk on the day of the Assumption. The Charter of 1511 indicates that the Barons of Hawick are to be paid an arrow 'in blenche-ferme' on this day. Similarly, in the 15th century, Scott was to pay a silver penny to Inglis at St. Mary's on this day for the lands of Branhholme.

Fechtlin Chairlie o Liddesdale (fech-tin-châr-lee-ô-li-diz-dâl) n. nickname for an Armstrong or Elliot from Kirndeane, Castleton Parish, whose exploits are described by Sir Walter Scott in his notes for 'Guy Mannering'. A story is told of how he stopped at 'Mump Ha', an inn at Gilsland, where his pistols were filled with 'tow', which he only just discovered in time to fight off a band of robbers when he was crossing over into Scotland. This is supposed to have taken place in the mid-1700s, with Scott claiming that he got the story from people who had heard it directly from Fighting Charlie.

Felton (fel'-in) n. James (18th C.) footman at Minto Stobs in 1797, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot, Lord Minto. Sir William (d.1358) 1st of Edlingham, known as 'de Feltoun'. He was from a prominent English family and was Sheriff of Northumberland. When Roxburghshire was occupied by the English in 1334 he was appointed Sheriff of Roxburghshire and Constable of Roxburgh Castle by Edward III. His name appears on 4 charters, preserved in the chartulary of Dryburgh. He gave accounts in Roxburghshire in fell (fel) v. to strike down, slaughter, beat, thrash, 'ti fell twae dogs wi yin bane' is literally 'to beat two dogs with one bone' and the same as the English 'to kill two birds with one stone' – 'So ee sei A thocht A nicht fell twae dogs wui yeh bane ...' [ECS].

Fenwick (fen-eeek) n. house and area on the Teviot opposite Branhholme Park and just down from the Muir. Walter Scott of Fenwick was witness to a document for Whitchesters in 1456 and others in 1484/5 and 1488. William Scott of Fenwick was recorded in 1502, was on an inquest panel in 1509 and gave a pledge for another Scott in 1510. The 'ditch of Fenwick' formed part of the northern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter. It is listed as part of the Barony of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, among those lands held by the Baron 'in tenandry'. Later it became part of the Lordship of Whitchesters. In 1627 it was described as a ‘neuer payit ferme’, i.e. a farm that had never been rented to a tenant, and ‘estimate to pay 8 bolls in stok, parsonage 2 bolls, and vicarage 3 lbs’. In 1643 these are probably the lands of Robert Scott of ‘Cloak’ valued at £100 and still held by him in 1678. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is shown that a small part of the farm lay on the northern side of the Teviot. There were Elliot lairds there in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. Robert Grieve was there in 1714. Walter Scott was there in 1722, William Grieve was tenant there in 1723 and John Scott was ‘coater’ there. It was farmed by Scotts until the mid-18th century. Robert Scott of Fenwick and Robert Elliot of Fenwick were both recorded in 1747. Bailie Thomas Turnbull purchased the estate in 1762. William Scott was there in 1771. The farm was still valued at £100 in 1788 (and still in 1811) when owned by Thomas Turnbull; Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick is the largest owner of land within the Burgh of Hawick on Wood’s 1824 map. David Lees was farmer there in 1861, when it was composed of 140 acres. In 1895 the farm was gained by the Scotts of Buccleuch, being exchanged for Fenwick with James Elliot of Flex. The farmhouse dates from the late 17th century, but has been extensively renovated. It is a 2-storey structure of harled rubble. The entrance has a lintel bearing the initials ‘R S’ (presumably ‘Robert Scott’) and ‘M T’ and the date 1687; a shield above has been suggested to be the arms of Myrton of Cambo, ancestors of Kerr of Cavers Carre, although this seems hard to understand. The house is a grade B listed building – ‘...Falnash, and Commonsides; inform Fenwick, and Goudiland, With Ha’ick, Burnfoot, and Hassenidean, to wait on my command’ [WSB] (earlier spelled ‘Fynnik’ and other variants; the origin is probably Old English ‘fen wic’, meaning ‘the dwelling by the fen’; the name appears at least as early as 1456, when it is ‘Fenwyk’, it is ‘Fenwik’ in 1484, ‘Fenwik’ in 1484/5 and 1488, ‘fenuik’ and ‘fynvik’ in 1502, ‘Fenwyk’ in 1509, ‘Fynwik’ and ‘Fennyk’ in 1510, ‘Fennyk’ in 1511, ‘Fynnik’ in 1526, ‘Fenyk’ in 1530, ‘Fenvik’ in 1540, ‘Fynnik’ in 1561, 1572, 1594 and 1615, ‘Fynnyk’ in 1562, ‘Phenik’ in 1627 and ‘Fenik’ in 1729; it is on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Fennik’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Fennick’ and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Fenick’).

Fenwick (fen-eeek) n. Francis P. ‘Frank’ (b.1855) son of John, proprietor of the Tower Inn, he was born in Hawick. He was farmer at Northhouse and was a guest at some Common Riding functions in the 1880s. He became proprietor of the Tower Hotel and was Acting Father in 1893. He was also a starter at the Common Riding Races. In 1901 he was a retired farmer at Barnes. He may have later lived at Harts-garth. His wife was Mary A., and their children included John B. and David B. James (19th C.) landlord of the Tower Hotel in the mid-19th century. He was on the original committee of Hawick Bowling Club, and probably first President. This is probably confusion with John. John (17th C.) son and heir of Randall. In 1652 he gave a lease of lands to his sister Catherine, including ‘Hawicke’ in the parish of Kirkharle (i.e. the one in Northumberland). John (b.c.1808) born at Auchtergaven in Perthshire. He was proprietor of the Tower Hotel in the middle part of the 19th century, with William Crozier as his head hostler. He is recorded providing the dinner for the Magistrates’ party at the Common Riding of 1840. He was there in 1841, with his wife Helen (probably Stewart), 6 female servants and several guests. He was listed as innkeeper at the Tower in Slater’s 1852 directory. His caricature from 1856 appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawick-ianæ’. He helped with the last ceremonial run of the coach from Hawick to the south in 1862. In 1849 he married Janet Crone or Bawden and was listed with her at the Tower Hotel in 1851. Their children included Sophia Agnes and Francis Peter (who became proprietor later) – ‘...Then, Fenwick, bring’s a Hawick gill, An’ here’s to Hawick’s bonnie lasses!’ [GWe]. John (1803/4–74) farmer at Northhouse. His elder brother was Peter. He was recorded at Northhouse in 1868. He married twice, his second wife being Janet Crone, who died in 1888, aged 73. He is probably the same as the coach driver above, and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Randall (d.bef. 1652) recorded as ‘of Hawicke’ in grants of 1624 and 1626 from the Swinburne (Capheaton) Estate Records. His wife was Katharine. He may have been son-in-law of Edward Gray of Howick (by coincidence). His son and heir was John and a daughter was Catherine. This is presumably the ‘Hawick’ in Northumberland. Sir Roger of Wallington (d.1544) commander of part of the English force under Lord Dacre in 1513. He led 300 men who burnt the town of Lanton near Jedburgh.

Fenwick Burn

Fenwick Burn (fen-eeek-burn) n. stream that flows to meet the Teviot near Fenwick.

Fenwick Loan (fen-eeek-lōn) n. former name for the road running from Haysike over to Whitchesters. The name was referred to in the description of the boundaries of the Common in 1767 – ‘The east down that Syke into Weatland Burn and the dykes of Alton Crofts, and so on to Fenwick Loan head, where the march turns south by hillocks up the west side of the head of the Loan ...’ [C&L1767].

Fenwick Park (fen-eeek-pawrk) n. name given in 1890 to an area of large houses, reached from Weensland Road up Manuel’s Brae. Some of the houses had been there perhaps a century before. This included St. John’s, which had been known as Ivybank, St. John’s Manse (previously ‘The Birks’) and Elmbank, or ‘The Elms’. New building occurred in the few years after 1962 to make the modern housing development of Fenwick Park. The name derives from Fenwick on Teviot, specifically referring to Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick who owned land there.

Fenzlehope (fenz-lup) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, where Thomas Elliot is recorded as farmer in 1797. It could be related to the earlier records of ‘Folepul’ and ‘Fopillis’, but note that ‘Phaupknow’ is listed separately on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (it is possible it is the same as Failziehope).

fer (fer) adj. far, distant – ‘si near and yet si fer’, ‘For the kingdoom o’ heäven is as ane man gangin’ intill ane fer countrie ...’ [HSR], ‘... athort the fer seide o Teiot’s flooery vale ...’ [ECS], ‘Hei’s be fer the senior citizen’ [CT], ‘... Ah then, ma gingerbreed men’s a ha’penny, but here ee irr’ [JEDM] (also written ‘fardin’, ‘faerden’, etc.).

Ferguson (fer-gee-sin) n. Agnes (19th C.) one of the 4 operators, at Dicksons & Laings, of the first power looms to arrive in Hawick in 1830. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Stonedge. In 1760 he married Janet Margaret Hope from Blackcleughmouth, the proclamations being recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. Their children included: Alexander (b.1761); Mary (b.1763); Adam (b.1768); Isabel (b.1772); and Betty (b.1773) Their children were all baptised in Wilton Parish. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Middle, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 6 horses. He could be the same Ferguson who farmed at Denholmhill, opening up the first quarry there. His son Andrew was on the ballot lists for the Militia in 1797–1801 and his other son John in 1799–1801. He married Martha Easton in 1762 and their children, baptised in Wilton, included: Thomas (b.1763); William (b.1766); Janet (b.1768); Helen (b.1770); John (b.1774); Andrew (b.1777); James (b.1779); James (again, b.1780); Jean (b.1781); Jean (again, b.1782), who married George Rae; and Alexander (b.1784). Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1787 he married Isobel Hart, who was from Wilton Parish. Alexander (b.1787/8) originally from Cavers Parish, he was a gardener in Hawick. In 1851 he was a widower, living on Silver Street and in 1861 was a 'Jobbing Gardener' at 7 Melgund Place. Alexander (b.1788/9) originally from Cavers Parish, he was a grocer in Bowden in 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Catherine and Margaret. Alexander (b.1785/6) frameworker in Hawick, born in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Turnbull, from Jedburgh, in Wilton Parish in 1821. The family were living on Under Damside in 1841 and 1851. Their children included: John (b.1821/2); Margaret (b.1826/7), who married a Davidson; William (b.1828/9); Alexander (b.1830/1); and Thomas (b.1836/7). Alexander (b.1812) innkeeper in Denholm, son of John. He was born at West Middle, and grandson of Alexander, farmer there. His premises were probably on Eastgate. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living with his widowed mother, Helen, and recorded as an unmarried innkeeper and grocer. He was recorded in Hawick and Jedburgh Jails in 1859. Alexander (b.1831/2) fuller in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on Ladylaw Place. His wife was Susan, from Lilliesleaf, and their children included Helen, Alexander, James and William. He was probably son of Alexander, frameworker on Under Damside. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, living at Hummelknowes in 1781. His children included: Thomas (b.1781); Agnes (b.1783); George (b.1786); Alexander (b.1788); John (b.1794). He could be the Andrew who married Agnes Liddell in Wilton Parish in 1778. Andrew (b.1777) labourer in West Middle, son of Alexander, he was baptised in Wilton. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed as son to Alexander at West Middle among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish' and he was still listed at West Middle on the 1801 Militia ballot. Christina (1844-1939) daughter of mason James, she was born in Denholm. In the 1851 census the family was living near Sunnyside, and her name was listed as 'Catherine'. She emigrated to the Melbourne area with her parents in 1855. In 1879 she married John Band, but they had no children. She named her house on Princess Street in Melbourne 'Roxburgh', after her home county. After her husband's death she lived with her sister Agnes, and she was buried in Melbourne General Cemetery. David (1953-98) born and brought up in Hawick, he studied geography at Edinburgh University and town planning at Heriot-Watt. He worked for Glasgow City Council for 15, in the planning department and later chief executive's office. He was notably involved in the Kelvin Hall redevelopment and in Glasgow's bid to become European Cultural Capital in 1990. He joined the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities in 1990, with a particular interest in arts development, being appointed one of the three heads of policy development in 1996. He was a keen rugby enthusiast and was a qualified coach. As a member of the Club, in 1999 the Hawick Callants' Club David Ferguson Memorial Trust was established, awarding a geography prize at the High School and a Memorial Plate for special achievement. His wife was Shirley and they had 3 children. Helen (b.c.1785) innkeeper and spirit dealer in Denholm. She was born at Linhope. She was probably married to Alexander, farmer at West Middle. In 1837 she was recorded as a widow, and 1841 she was living around Eastgate with her children Alexander, Margaret and Janet. She is recorded as vintner and grocer in 1852. James (b.c.1780s) labourer at Hoscoteshiel, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. James (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. James (b.1800/1) listed as a mason journeyman in Denholm in 1841 and a mason around Sunnyside in 1851. The family emigrated to Australia in 1855. He married Anne Laing in 1828 and she died in Melbourne in 1881. Their children included: Thomas (b.1829); Betty (b.1832), probably died young; an unnamed child (b.1834); Betsy (b.1836); Walter (b.1838); Alexander (b.1841); Christina (b.1844), also perhaps known as Catherine, probably died young; Anne (b.1846); Agnes (b.1849), who married William Laidlaw in Melbourne; and Mary (b.1852). Their children were christened in the Free Kirk of Jedburgh. He died of dysentery in Australia. James 'Jamie' (d.c.1861) character who worked at Mossbail most of his life, first as a 'post-boy', then as a 'strapper'. He worked there for almost 50 years. He was only once allowed to take the reins of the coach, but overturned it near Langholm. He was a widower by the time of the 1861 census and died a few months later. Rev. John (c.1655-1737) ordained as minister of Robertson in 1696, after several years of appeals to the Presbytery for preachers to be supplied. For part of 1697 he helped with vacancies in Angus and Mearns and received calls from Aberbrothock and Montrose, which the Presbytery refused. There then followed some debate in which the Commission for the Assembly blamed the Presbytery for not declaring the parish vacant. He was finally translated to Aberbrothock (i.e. Arbroath) in 1699, despite a petition to the General Assembly from his parishioners. It is said that he had the old Abbey Church there destroyed, in order to build himself a tomb. He married firstly Margaret MacDougall and secondly Bethia Brand. John (17th/18th C.) married Isabel Bruce in Cavers in 1719. John (18th C.) married Mary Easton in Wilton in 1764. Their children included: Alexander (b.1765); and Christian (b.1766). John (18th C.) married Margaret Mein (or 'Mean') in Wilton in 1769. Their children included: William (b.1770); Thomas (b.1772); Janet (b.1776); John (b.1778); and Andrew (b.1781). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Ormiston Mains in 1779, 1780, 1782, 1784, 1786 and 1788 and as farmer at Harwood in 1796. He was tenant at East Mains in Cavers Parish in 1801 when his sons William Thomas and Robert were all listed on the ballot for the Militia. He married Agnes Grierson and their children included: William (b.1779); Margaret (b.1780); twins Robert and Thomas (b.1782); Alexander (b.1784); Nelly (b.1786); Andrew (b.1788); Isabel (b.1790); Mary (b.1792); and John (b.1796). The entries of his children's baptisms appear to have been added later to the Cavers records (perhaps indicating that he belonged to a non-established church). John (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in 1790 and 1791, when he was at Kippielaw. He was also recorded at Greensidehall in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at 'Newharrot' (i.e. New Harwood), listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses. John (b.c.1770s) labourer at Silverbuthall according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. Perhaps the same John married Mary Hamilton in Wilton in 1799 and had a son John (b.1800). John (b.1774) recorded as son of Alexander in West Middle on the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He was also on the 1801 Militia ballot. He married Nelly Jackson in East End Kirk in 1806. Their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: Isobel (b.1806); Martha (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); Alexander (b.1812); James (b.1814); Martha (b.1816); Helen (b.1818); Andrew (b.1820); Andrew (again, b.1824); and Janet (b.1827). In 1841 his widow was an innkeeper and spirit dealer on Eastgate in Denholm, the inn taken over by his son Alexander. John (19th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1839. John Mein (b.1839) son of James and Jean Mein, he was born in Selkirk. He was Cornet in 1861, the first from Wilton after it merged with Hawick. He was a waiter at the Railway Hotel in Princes Street. He was step-son of the hotel-keepers George and Jane Burns, and was half-brother of Cornet Andrew Burns. He can be seen in an early photograph of 1862, as Right-hand Man to Cornet Richardson. Robert (b.1782) son of John and twin of Thomas. He was a servant at East Mains according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He was listed there along with his brothers William and Thomas, all sons of John, tenant in East Mains. Robert (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Helen Easton and their daughter Mary Anne Easton was baptised in 1842. Robert (1953–98) born and educated in Hawick, son of Tom and Jessie Ferguson. He studied geography at Edinburgh University and then town planning at Heriot-Watt. He joined the City of Glasgow Council and was later head of policy development with C.O.S.L.A. Thomas (18th C.) married Helen Smith in Bedrule Parish in 1731. Thomas (18th C.) mason in Denholm in 1786 when his son Alexander was baptised in Cavers Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) groom and house servant at Stirches in 1791, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. He was still at Stirches in 1794 and 1797, when he was servant and gamekeeper. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Stewart, who lived at Stirches. Perhaps the same Thomas married Margaret Graham and had a son George (b.1780) baptised in Wilton. Thomas 'Tam' (b.1772) labourer who brought up a large family in the 'Saut Haa'. He was recorded as a spinner at Pathhead on the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish. He was listed at Pathhead among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He was one of two men chosen in 1842 to point out the old marches of Wilton after the suggestion by Bailie Fraser. In 1841 he is recorded at Wilton Pathhead, with his wife Isobel, daughter Jane and son William. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant at Ashybank according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Thomas (b.1782) son of John and twin of Robert. He was a servant at East Mains according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He was listed there along with his brothers William and Robert, all sons of John, tenant in East Mains. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area.
